21. There were many ceremonies ordained about the observation of the Sabbath: but the observation of the Sabbath was no more made ceremonial by them, then it was judicial or political, because of those judicial Laws, whereby it was then provided that it should be celebrated most religiously. Exod. 31. 14.

22. That accommodation of the fourth Commandment unto the special state of the Jews, which was in the observation of the seventh day from the beginning of the Creation, doth no more make the precept it self ceremonial, then the promise of the Land of Canaan, made to the people of Israel, That thou mayst live long in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee, makes the fifth Commandment ceremonial: or more then that Preface, I am the Lord thy God which brought thee out of the Land of Egypt, makes all the Commandments ceremonial.

23. It may indeed be granted that a more strict observation of the Sabbath was commanded in those days, applied to the time of Pedagogy and bondage, which is not of force in all ages; yet this hinders not, but the observation it self is plainly moral and common to all ages.

24. Yet there can be nothing brought out of the Scriptures, which was at any time commanded about the strict observation of the Sabbath to the Jews, which by the same reason doth not pertain to all Christians, except the kindling of fires, and preparing their ordinary food. Exod. 35. 3. & 16. 14. And those precepts seem to have been special, and given upon particular occasion; for there is nothing said about the kindling of fire, but in the building of the Tabernacle, which God would declare was not so holy a work, but it might and ought to be intermitted on the Sabbath day. Neither is there any mention of the preparing of victuals, but when Manna was by a miracle sent from Heaven, which was also by a miracle preserved on the Sabbath day. And by the History of Christ it appears very likely that he did approve of preparing victuals, done by kindling of a fire, upon the Sabbath day. For being invited by the Jews to a feast which was had on the Sabbath day, he refused not to be present. Luc. 14. 1. &c.

25. Whereas the reason of the Sabbath doth sometime seem to be referred to the delivering of the people of Israel out of the captivity of Egypt, it doth not turn the Sabbath into a ceremony. For 1. All the Commandments are in some sort referred to the same deliverance, as appears by the Preface of the decalogue. 2. It doth not appear that the Sabbath it self had any singular relation to this deliverance, but that there is mention made of the deliverance, out of Egypt, Deut. 5. 15. For that reason only, that seeing the Israelites had been servants before in Egypt, they ought the more readily and willingly grant this time of rest to their servants.

26. Whereas the last day of the week was of old observed; this was anciently ordained by God from the time of the first Creation, because God did that day cease from the works of Creation.

27. Whereas the last day of the week is now changed into the first day, this was not done by human, but Divine authority. For he only can change the day of the Sabbath, who is Lord of the Sabbath, that is, Christ. Marc. 12. 8. Whence also that first day which succeeded, is properly called the Lord's Day.

28. If this Lord's Day be granted to have been of Apostolical institution, yet that authority which it is Built upon, is nevertheless divine; because the Apostles were no less guided by the spirit in holy institutions, then in propounding the doctrine of the Gospel, either in word or writings.

29. Also seeing this institution was grounded upon no special occasion that was to continue for a time only, whereby it might be made temporary, it doth necessarily follow, that the mind of the Ordainers was, that the observation of this day should be of perpetual and unchangeable right.

30. Yet it is more likely that Christ himself was the author of this institution in his own person. 1. Because Christ was no less faithful in ordering his whole house, or the Church of God, as touching all things that are generally necessary and useful then was Moses, Heb. 3. 2. 6. But no Christian can with any reason deny that the observatiō of this day is generally profitable, & in some sort necessary for the Churches of Christ. 2. Because Christ himself did often appear upon this very day to his Disciples gathered together in one place after the resurrection, John 20. 19. 26. 3. Because he poured out the holy Spirit upon them this very day, Acts 2. 4. In the practice of the Churches in the time of the Apostles when there is mention made of this observation of the first day, Acts 20. 7. 1. Cor. 16. 2. It is not remembered as some late Ordinance, but as a thing a good while received among all the Disciples of Christ. 5. The Apostles did in all things deliver those things to the Churches which they had received of Christ, 1. Cor. 11. 23. 6. This institution could not be deferred not one week after the death of Christ, and that law of one day in every week to be sanctified according to the determination of God himself remain firm: which law hath been demonstrated before to be of perpetual right. For the Jewish Sabbath was in respect of the determination which it had to the seventh day abrogate in the death of Christ: For whereas it is read that the Apostles sometime after were present in the assemblies of the Jews that day of the Sabbath, Acts 13. 14. & 16. 13. & 17. 2. & 18. 4. they did that chiefly in that respect, because then was the fittest occasion to preach the Gospel to the Jews; as also afterward the Apostle did greatly desire to be at Jerusalem on the day of Pentecost, Acts 20. 16. because at that time there was the greatest concourse of the Jews to be in that place. 7. If the institution of the Lord's day was deferred so long, till the Apostles had made a separation from the Jews, and had their meetings apart, Acts 18. 6, 7. & 19. 8. as some would have it; then all that space of time which came between the death of Christ and this separation, which was above three years, the fourth Commandment had bound none to that observation of any day: because the Jews day was already abolished, and by this opinion there was no new brought in the room, and so there were only nine precepts in force all that time. 8. The reason it self of this change confirms the same, which is by the consent of all referred to the resurrection of Christ: namely, because this day the creation of the new world or the world to come, Heb. 2. 5. in which all things were made new, 2. Cor. 5. 17. was perfected, so that God did now in Christ rising again from the dead, cease or rest from his greatest work. As therefore in the beginning of the creation, when God rested from his works, he then blessed and sanctified that day wherein he did rest: so also it was meet that that very day wherein Christ did rest from his labors, himself also should sanctify the same day. Neither is that easily to be rejected which is urged by some of the Ancients, out of Ps. 118. 24. This is the day which the Lord hath made; for in that very place is treated of Christ's resurrection, as Christ himself interprets, Mat. 21. 42. 9. It was also most meet that the day of worship in the New Testament should be ordained by him, by whom the worship it self was ordained: and from whom all blessing and grace is to be expected in all worship.

31. They who account the observation of the Lord's day for a tradition not written, they are hereby sufficiently refuted. 1. Because there is no one thing which depends upon tradition not written of such moment, as is the observation of the Lord's day, by common consent, and the consent of all Christians almost. 2. By this means there is a door opened to bring in divers superstitions, and human devices into the Church of God, or at least to prop them up when they are brought in. 3. Many among the Papists are ashamed of this invention: for although all the Papists to cloak their superstitions, are wont to give too much to Ecclesiastical traditions, yet in the observation of the Lord's day that impression of Divine authority appears that it hath compelled not a few of them, to ascribe it not to any human, but to Divine right.

Banns in 2. 2. q. 44. a. 1. Author supplementi adsummam Pisanam verb. Dominica; Abbas in cap. licet defer. n. 3. Aug. ver. feria. n. 3. Silvester. ver. Dominica q. 1. 7. Alexander also the third Pope of Rome in the very Canon law, deferriis cap. licet affirms, that the Scripture as well of the old as New Testament, hath specially deputed the seventh day for man's rest, that is (as Suarez interprets de dieb. fest. cap. 1.) both Testaments have approved the manner of deputing every seventh day of the week for the rest of man, which is to depute the seventh day formally, although materially the same was not always deputed: and in this manner it is true that that seventh day in the old law was the Sabbath, and in the new is the Lord's day.

4. They among themselves who account the Lord's day among traditions do account baptizing of children also, and that with greater show in the same place and number. But all our Divines, who have answered the Papists touching those examples of traditions, do always contend that those institutions and all other which are of the same profit and necessity, are to be found in the Scriptures themselves.

32. Those things which are wont to be brought on the contrary out of the Scriptures, Rom. 14. 5. Gal. 4. 10. Col. 2. 16. do nothing at all hinder this truth. For first, in all those places the observation of some day to religious use by the ordinance of Christ is no more condemned or denied, then the choice of some cerraine meat to a religious use by the ordinance of the same Christ: but no Christian is so void of all reason, that he would conclude out of those places, that the choice of bread and wine in the Lord's Supper for a religious use, is either unlawful, or not ordained by Christ: neither therefore can anything be concluded from them against the observation of the Lord's day by the use and institution of Christ. Secondly, the Apostle Rom. 14. doth expressly speak of that estimation of days, which did at that time breed offense among Christians; but the observation of the Lord's day which the Apostle himself teacheth, hath at that time taken place in all the Churches, 1. Cor. 16. 1. & 2. could not give any occasion of offense. Thirdly, it is most like that the Apostle in that place doth treat of choosing of days to eat or refuse certain meats: for the question of that dispute is propounded verse 2. of meats only: in the 5. and 6. verses, the esteem of a duty is joined with it as pertaining to the same thing, and afterward through all the rest of the Chapter he treats only of meats, making no mention of days. Fourthly, in that place to the Galatians, it is expressly treated of that observation of days, months, and years, which pertained to the bondage of weak and beggarly elements, Chap. 4. 9. but it was far from the Apostle, and altogether strange to Christian religion so to account any precept of the Decalogue, or any ordinance of Christ. Fifthly, in Col. 2. it is specially & expressly treated of those Sabbaths which were of the same kind with new Moons, and were ceremonial shadows of things to come in Christ: but the Sabbath commanded in the Decalogue and our Lord's day are altogether of another nature, as hath been before demonstated.

33. Neither is Christian liberty at all diminished by this opinion, (as some without cause do seem to fear) for it is not a liberty, but a licentiousness not Christian, if any think themselves freed from the observation of any precept of the Decalogue, or from the institutions of Christ: and experience also teacheth that licentiousness, and neglect of holy things doth more and more prevail, where a due respect is not had of the Lord's day.

34. Neither also was Adam subject to any bondage, because he was tied to sanctify the seventh day by a special observation.

35. But as the beginning of the old Sabbath was at the evening; because the Creation also began at the evening, because the common mass was created before the light, and the cessation of the day from the work of Creation began also at the evening; so also the beginning of the Lord's day doth seem to begin from the morning of that day, because the resurrection of Christ was betimes in the morning, Mark. 16. 9. John 20. 1.

36. For the right observation of this day two things are necessary, rest, and the sanctification of this rest.

37. The rest which is required is a cessation from every work which might hinder the exercises of Divine worship: we must therefore abstain that day. 1. From all these works which are properly called servile: for seeing such works were of old by name excluded, in all other solemn feasts, Levite. 23. 7. 8. 25. 32. 36. Numb. 28. 25. much more were they excluded from the Sabbath.

38. But it is ridiculous by servile works to understand sins or mercenary good works, or done (after the manner of servants) for reward (as some do understand them by a certain Allegorical sport:) for sins are not forbidden and unlawful at some certain times, but always and everywhere: neither doth it pertain to the fourth Commandment to deal with all sins to be forbidden; although this may in some sense be granted that divers sins do take some aggravation from thence if they be committed upon so holy a day, Isaiah 28. 4. those evil works also which are done upon fear or hope, that is altogether servile, have in respect of their manner the same nature with other sins.

39. But servile works are properly those, to the performance whereof servants or servile men are wont to be used, such as are mechanick works, and all those to the performance whereof great labor of the body is required, as to plough, to dig, &c. 2. Besides these works there are forbidden also upon that day all works that are ours: as is gathered from the opposite concession which is given in the fourth precept, S... days shalt thou work and do all thy work.

40. Whence we may gather with the words following, on the Sabbath day thou shalt do no work: that all those works are forbidden which are properly called ours, although they be not to speak strictly, servile, or mechanickall.

41. Now those are our works which pertain to the uses of this life, that is, which are exercised in natural and civil things, and do properly pertain to our gain and profit: of which kind are those which of their own nature are not servile but liberal, as studyings, exercises of liberal arts; much more those which are common to free men and servants, as to Journey, to handle civil causes, &c.

42. For so this phrase is explained, Isaiah 58. 3. Ye do that which delighteth you, that ye may exact all your labors, that is, ye do carefully your own matters, Verse 13. doing thine own ways. But because Esayas in that Chapter doth also and chiefly treat of wicked actions, and those works which are unlawful at all times, as appeareth verse 6. Therefore some godly Divines do seem to err, who are wont to gather out of that place, that every word or thought that is human, or pertains to men, used on the Lord's day, is to be accounted sin: for all human words, deeds, or thoughts upon that day whereof that Chapter handleth, (whether it be the Sabbath properly called, or a solemn feast) are not there judged to be impertinent, and in that respect simply reprehended; but those only which are wont to concern our gain, either simply unlawful or repugnant to holy exercises, as appears verse 3. & 6. Concerning such servile and vulgar works there is such a strict law, that upon the Sabbath day men may not go on in their work, no not in time of plowing and harvest simply; that is, at those times which are most opportune and as it were necessary for man's life, Exod. 34. 21. Nor in those things which do mediately and remotely pertain to holy things, as was the building of the Tabernacle, Exod. 31. 13. Much less is it lawful to enter into any ordinary journey, Exod. 16. or to frequent Marts or Fairs, Nehem. 13.

43. Yet here are excepted; 1. All those works which belong to common honesty: for seeing at all other times we ought, so especially upon that day which is specially dedicated to Divine worship, to be have and carry ourselves decently: all those things which do simply partaine thereunto are understood to be permitted. 2. Those things which are imposed on us by some singular necessity, Mat. 12. 11. In which number notwithstanding those things are not to be accounted, which men make or fain to themselves as necessary: but those things which it appears to be necessary and unavoidable, by the providence of God, and which we are not aware of, that is, when such a necessity urgeth as the Scripture itself allows as a sufficient cause to do any ordinary thing. 3. All those works which do directly respect the worship and glory of God, Mat. 12. 5. John 5. 8, 9. For in that case those works which are of their own nature servile, do pass into the nature of holy actions, neither are they properly our works, but God's works.

44. This rest, although in it self absolutely considered, it is not, neither ever was a part of worship; yet as it is commanded of God as a certain necessary thing unto his worship, and is referred also to it, so far it is a part of that obedience which pertains to religion and the worship of God.

45. The sanctification of this rest and day is a special applying of ourselves to worship God, upon that day which is intimated in those phrases, He sanctified that day, and it is a Sabbath to the Lord thy God.

46. Here public worship ought chiefly to be respected, whence also it is that the Sabbath is called an holy Convocation, Levite. 23. 13. Acts 13. 14. & 15. 23. & 16. 13. But that that public convocation of the Church ought to be had both before and after noon upon the Lord's day, it appears sufficiently, by that double burnt-offering of the Sabbath, in the morning and the evening, Num. 28. 9.

47. But the rest of the day ought to be spent in exercises of piety: for although there was of old an offering peculiar to the Sabbath, yet the continual or daily offering with his drink-offering was not to be omitted, Num. 28. 10.

48. Also the public worship it self seeing it is most solemnly to be celebrated, doth necessarily require these exercises of reading the Scripture, meditation, prayer, holy conferences and contemplation of the works of God: whereby we may be both more prepared to public worship, and that worship may be made truly effectual to us.

49. Contrary to his ordinance of the Lord's day are all feast days, ordained by men, they being accounted for holy days, as the Lord's day ought to be accounted.

50. For it is most agreeable with the first institution, and with the writings of the Apostles, that one only day in the week be sanctified.

51. The Jews had no feast days rightly sanctified, but by divine institution.

52. Yet any days may be piously turned into occasion of furthering the worship of God.

53. Also when God by his special judgments calls to more solemn fasting, those days are to be accounted as it were for extraordinary Sabbaths:

54. Contrary also to the observation of this day and all transactions of business, exercises, feasting, sports, and such like, whereby the mind of man is this day drawn away from the exercises of religion.

CHAPTER XVI.

Of Justice and Charity toward our neighbor.

Thus much of Religion: Justice follows, which is contained in the Second Table.

1. Justice is a virtue whereby we are inclined to perform our duty due to our neighbor. So the duty of children towards their parents is said to be just, Ephes. 6. 1. And the duty of masters towards their servants is called right and equal, Col. 4. 1. And all those things which we owe to our neighbor, are performed in living justly.

2. But justice in this place is not taken most generally, as setting forth every duty to another: for so it contains even religion it self: for that justice which is said to be general, is no other thing then virtue in general; as hath been before declared; when we did show that justice was the chief among the general affections of virtue: neither must it be understood most particularly to respect the quantity either of the thing deserved or received, for so it contains only a few duties of the second table, namely those whereby like is returned for like: but it is here used in a certain middle way, whereby it sets forth the mutual duty between those who are bound by the same right; in which sense it contains all the force of the second Table.

3. It hath for the object our neighbor, that is, everyone whether man or Angel also, who is or may be with us partaker of the same end and blessedness, Luke 10. 36, 37.

4. Hence neither holy men, whatsoever they shall be, nor Angels themselves can be a fit object of religion, or of that religious worship which is commanded in the first Table, but only of Justice or of that duty that is due to our neighbor which is contained in the second Table: whence also those arguments taken from the nature of the thing, do exclude all adoration of the Creatures. Acts 10. 26. Rise, for I myself also am a man: Revel. 22. 9. See thou do it nor, for I am thy fellow servant, and of thy brethren the Prophets, and of those that keep the words of this Book, worship God. Rev. 22. 9.

5. Both in this number and name, everyone is by proportion included even in respect of himself; for everyone is first a neighbor to himself, then to others. Whence also it is that there is no singular precept given whereby a man may be ordered toward himself: for whilst he is rightly ordered toward God, and toward his neighbor, he is also ordered toward himself; but with this difference, that that disposition whereby any is made fit to perform his duty to God and his neighbor, pertains to his perfection; but he must also perform the same duties both to his neighbor and himself, (but not to God, and himself.)

6. But because that manner whereby duties are to be exercised toward our neighbor, is with respect and affection to their good; hence this same virtue is called charity toward our neighbor. Matt. 22. 29. Marc. 12. 31.

7. In this charity there is always love of union, of wellpleasement and good will, as in that love which is toward God; but there is also added oft times the consideration of mercy, when the misery of our neighbor is respected, which hath no place in our charity toward God.

8. But this band of Justice and affection of Charity ought always to flow, and be derived from Religion toward God; for seeing Religion gives the chief honor to God, it causeth that obedience be given to his will in those things also which do immediately respect the Creatures; whence all they who neglect their duty towards men, are denied to honor God, but rather do contemn him. 1. Sam. 2. 30. Also charity towards God which is contained in Religion, doth of its own nature produce charity towards men, as they are in some sort partakers of the Image of God: whence also we are said to love God in men, and men in God, which is one reason of that phrase, beloved in the Lord.

9. Hence nothing is properly due to man which is contrary to Religion. Acts 4. 19. & 5. 29. Whether it be right in the sight of God to obey you rather than God, judge ye: we must obey God rather than men.

10. Hence also the truth of Religion cannot consist with the neglect of Justice, and Charity toward our neighbor. James 1. 27. Religious worship, pure and undefiled before God and the Father, is this, to visit the fatherless, and widows in affliction. 1. John 4. 20. 21. If any one say

I love God, and hate his brother, he is a liar. This Commandment have we from God, that he that loveth God, love his brother also.

11. Hence finally religion is best proved, and tried by Justice, according to the frequent use of the Scripture, which argument notwithstanding doth serve much more certainly for negation, then affirmation, if it be understood of the outward works & offices of Justice: because such works of Justice may be sometime present, where true religion is wanting; but if true religion be present, they cannot be wholly absent.

12. By the same reason also unjust works do more argue a man to be ungodly, then those which are just do argue a godly man: whence the works of the flesh are said to be manifest. Gal. 5. 19. Which is not affirmed of the fruits of the spirit, Verse 12.

13. The order of this charity is this, that God is first and chiefly to be loved by charity, and so is as it were the formal reason of this charity toward our neighbor: next after God we are bound to love ourselves, namely with that charity which respects true blessedness; for loving God himself with love of union, we love ourselves immediately with that chief charity which respects our spiritual blessedness: but we ought to love others whom we would have partakers of the same good with us, secondarily as it were; moreover others may be deprived of this blessedness without our fault, but we ourselves cannot; therefore we are more bound to will and seek it for ourselves then for others.

14. Hence it is that the love of ourselves hath the force of a rule or measure unto the love of others: Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself.

15. Hence it is never lawful to commit any sin for another's sake, although our offense may seem small, and to be a chief good, which we should seek to another: for he that wittingly and willingly sinneth hateth his own soul. Prov. 8. 36. & 29. 24. He that sinneth against me, offereth violence to his own soul. He that partaketh with a thief, hateth himself, and he that hearing cursing declareth it not.

16. Among other men none indeed ought wholly to be removed from the embracing of our charity, who is capable of blessedness; for if we love God above all things, no enmities will so far prevail with us, but we may love our very enemies for God. Mat. 5. 39. Rom. 12. 17. 1. Thess. 5. 15. 1. Pet. 3. 9.

17. But among men those are more to be loved then others, that come nearer to God, and in God to ourselves. Galatians 6. 10. Let us do good to all, but especially to the household of Faith.

18. But because they that believe, are more near both to God, and to us also spiritually, then those who do not as yet believe, therefore also are they more to be beloved.

19. Yet this is so to be understood, that it be referred to the time present and the immediate affection; for we may will the same good to some other as much or more in time to come, the grace of God and faith coming between; in which sense that affection of the Apostle concerning the Israelites is to be taken. Rom. 9. 3.

20. If among those that are to be beloved there be no apparent disparity neither in respect of God, nor in respect of us, then they are equally to be beloved.

21. But if any apparent disparity appear, either in their nearness to God or to ourselves, then he who exceeds in any nearness, is more to be beloved, that is, when we cannot exercise the act of our love alike toward all, we are more bound to place our love on those whom God hath by some special nearness or communion commended to us, then on others. Therefore although we ought equally to will the salvation of others; yet the exercise and care of this will is chiefly due to those, that are near joined to us in some special respect; as a Soldier although he ought to wish well to all his fellow Soldiers, yet he is bound to take most care of those who are of the same band, and are next adjoined in the same Rank. This appears in that example of Paul, who did more fervently desire the conversion of the Israelites than of other Nations; of which affection he gives this one reason, because they were his brethren, and kindred according to the flesh. Rom. 9. 3.

22. Yet in this prerogative of charity we must wish to those that are near unto us, rather those good things which pertain to that conjunction, whereby they come near unto us, as spiritual good things to those who are most spiritually joined to us, and natural good things to those with whom we have a natural nearness; not that those kind of good things are in our desires to be separated one from another, but because the very kind of conjunction, is as it were a link from God whereby he stirs us up to bestow our pains chiefly in this or that kind.

23. Hence it follows, first. That kindred in blood, Caeteris paribus other things answerable, are more to be beloved than strangers, in those things which pertain to the good things of this life: and among those that are near in blood, those that are the nearest to be most loved.

24. Secondly, that some special friend is more to be beloved, than an ordinary kinsman in blood, at least in those things, which pertain to the common duties of this life, because friendship may be such that it may make a nearer conjunction than consanguinity itself considered by itself. Prov. 18. 24. For a friend is nearer than a brother.

25. Thirdly, that parents are to be loved more than any friend, because the nearness of parents is greater than of friends as touching the communicating of those things which are most intimate to us. 1. Tim. 5. 4. If any widow have children or nephews, let them learn first to show piety towards their own house, and to recompense their parents: for this is honest and acceptable in the sight of God.

26. Fourthly, that parents are more to be beloved than children, in those good things which ought to redound from the effect to the cause, as Honor, Esteem, Reverence, Thankfulness and the like. But that children are more to be loved than parents in those things which are derived from the cause to the effect; of which kind are, Maintenance, Promotion, Providence and the like.

27. Fifthly, that husbands and wives are to be loved more than parents or children, in those things which pertain to society and union of this life; for that is the greatest nearness, whereof it is said, they shall be one flesh. Gen. 2. 24. Matthew 19. 5. Therefore shall a man leave his Father, and Mother, and shall cleave to his Wife, and they shall be one flesh.

28. Sixthly, that they that have deserved well of us are more to be beloved then others, and among thosesuch as have communicated spiritual good things to us are most to be beloved: let him that is taught in the word communicate to him that taught him, all good things, Gal. 6. 6.

29. Seventhly, that a community or whole society is more to be beloved then any number of it, because the conjunction of a part with the whole is greater then with another part; and therefore, that a prince whose life and safety is necessary or most profitable for the common good, is more to be beloved, then any or divers of the common people, nay more then ourselves in temporal things. 2. Sam. 21. 17. Thou shalt go no more with us to battle, least thou quench the light of Israel. Lament 4. 20.

30. There be two Acts of charity toward our neighbor: Prayer for his good, and working of it. Mat. 5. 44. Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which hurt you and persecute you.

31. This Prayer as it respects the honor of God, pertains to religion in the first Table: but as it respects the good of our neighbor, it pertains to Justice, and Charity toward our neighbor in the second Table.

32. We must pray for all those good things, which religion commands us to wish to him, whether they be spiritual, or corporal.

33. In this praying is included not only petition, but also giving of thanks, whereby we praise God for the good things which he hath bestowed on our neighbors. Romans 1. 8, 9, 10.

34. To his praying is opposed that imprecation which tends to the hurt of our neighbor, which is called cursing. Mat. 5. 44.

35. Working of good toward our neighbor is an endeavor, concerning him, tending to his good; whence also it is called good deed. Matthew 5. 44. And love in deed. 1. John 3. 18.

36. This working is distinguished from praying; because although prayer be also an endeavor tending to the good of our neighbor, yet is not immediately exercised about our neighbor, but is directed unto God.

37. Yet unto this working those endeavors must be referred which are exercised about other Creatures for our neighbors sake: for then there is an efficiency in our actions of the same reason, as if it were exercised immediately about our neighbor himself.

38. Now this endeavor is either, by moral persuading, or real effecting.

39. An endeavor of moral persuasion is in propounding of good to be performed with arguments by which he may be stirred up to it.

40. And this is by admonition, and good example.

41. This admonition is taken generally for any warning, which is used by words, whether it be to procure and perform good to our neighbors, or to drive away and make up any hurt.

42. Therefore it contains in it our duty to teach and admonish. Colos. 3. 16. To observe others that we may whet them to love and good works. Heb. 10. 24. To exhort them also daily. Heb. 3. 13. To comfort them against sorrow and grief. 1. Thess. 4. 18. And to correct them in a brotherly manner, if they be overtaken with some offense. Gal. 6. 1. Rev. 19. 17.

43. But this brotherly correction is then to be used; when we certainly know that the evil to be corrected is committed, when there is hope of some fruit, or good to follow upon our correction, either by the amendment of our brother that is fallen, or by preserving of others from partaking of the same; lastly, when there is fit opportunity in respect of time, or person, and the circumstances.

44. Unto this admonition is opposed consent, or communion with others in their sins. Eph. 5. 7. 11.

45. One is said to be partaker of another's sin nine ways; which are thus set down in Latin.

Iussio, consilium, consensus, palpo, recursus,

Participans, nutans, non obstans, non manifestans.

That is summarily, consent is given to sinners, by counseling, defending, helping, permitting when we can hinder, and by holding our peace when we may profitable speak. Rom. 1. 32.

46. Good example is a representation of a good work, whereby others may be stirred up to perform the like. 1. Tim. 4. 12. Tit. 2. 4. 7. Mat. 5. 16. 1. Pet. 2. 12.

47. To good example scandal is opposed. 1. Cor. 10. 32. 33. Give no offense to the Jews, to the Gentiles, nor the Church of God.

48. A scandal is a representation of an evil work whereby others may either be stirred up to sin (whence it is called 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , or a cause of stumbling) or to be hindered or slackned from doing good, (whence it is called 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 or a cause of weakening) and that is properly called a scandal, 1. Cor. 8, 9, 10. Take heed that your liberty be not an occasion of stumbling to the weak, &c. Rom. 14. 21. Wherein thy brother stumbleth, or is offended, or is made weak.

49. There is in every evil work which is made known to others, the respect of a scandal. Mat. 18. 6, 7, 8. Whosoever shall be an offense. If thy hand, foot, eye cause thee to offend. If thy brother sin against thee.

50. There is also sometime a scandal in a work of it self lawful, if it be not expedient in respect of others. 1. Cor. 8. 13. If my meat offend my brother, I will never eat flesh, least I offend my brother.

51. But an indifferent thing is said to be expedient, or not expedient, when all circumstances considered, it maketh, or maketh not to the glory of God, and edification of our neighbor.

52. There is no human authority that can make that action lawful, whereby a scandal is given to our neighbor.

53. But then a scandal is said to be given: either when some manifest sin is committed, or at least that which hath evident show of sin is committed, so that it becomes known to others; or when that is rashly committed which is not necessary by God's Command, and yet brings spiritual hurt to others: but much more if the perverting or troubling of our neighbor be by that very action directly intended.

54. But if there follow offense, not from the condition of our work, but from the pure malice of others, then it is called an offense taken, as that of the Pharisees, which is not our sin, but of those who are offended. Mat: 15. 12, 13, 14. Knowest thou not that the Pharisees were offended at that saying? Let them alone: they be blind leaders of the blind.

55. But although this offense taken cannot be avoided by us; yet an offense given may and ought. For God never lays upon his a necessity of offending.

56. That scandal whereby one is said (metaphorically) to offend himself, or to give occasion of sinning to himself, is by proportion referred to an offense given.

57. A real effecting or procuring the good of our neighbor, is when we ourselves perform something which of it self tends to the good of our neighbor without his help coming between. Heb. 13. 16. To do good, and to distribute forget not.

58. But although all acts of Justice ought to have charity joined to it, yet there are some wherein Justice doth more shine forth, and others wherein charity doth more rule.

59. Hence that distinction ariseth whereby some offices are said to belong to Justice strictly taken, and some belonging to charity; of which difference and formal distribution we have Christ the author. Luke 11. 42. Ye pass by judgment and the love of God.

60. Those are the acts of Justice which have in them the confideration of a debt and equality in respect of others.

61. Those are the acts of charity whereby the good of another is respected more then our debt.

62. The offices of Justice, are before, and of straighter obligation then they which are of charity.

63. Hence we are more bound to pay our debts, then to give anything of our own; and he that offends another, is more bound to seek reconciliation then he that is offended.

64. There is in many things a double respect of Justice, one whereof respects the next end, and words of the Law, that bindeth, which is called Justice in the most strict sense; and the other, respects the remote end and reason of the Law which is called equity or 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 .

65. The parts of this Justice are two, one whereof gives to everyone his own, and it is called distributive Justice, the other restores to everyone his own, and it may be called emendative Justice.

66. Distributive Justice cannot be rightly performed without a right judging of things and persons, and a meet comparison of things to things, and persons to persons, from whence ariseth that proportion which they call geometricall.

67. Unto distributive Justice is opposed acceptation of persons, whereby one is preferred before another in the distribution of good due, without just cause.

68. Emendative Justice is either Commutative, or Corrective.

69. Commutative Justice is equality of the thing given, and received.

70. Corrective Justice, presupposeth some Injustice, and it is either civil or criminal.

71. Civil doth chiefly correct the injustice of the cause.

72. Criminall doth chiefly correct the injustice of the person.

73. To corrective Justice pertaineth revenge, and restitution.

74. Revenge is an act of corrective Justice, whereby punishment is inflicted on him, who hath violated Justice.

75. The end hereof ought to be the amendment or restraint of the offender, quietness and admonition to others, and so the preserving of Justice, and of the honor of God. Deut. 13. 11. & 17. 13. & 19. 20. & 21. 21. That all Israel may hear, and fear, and do no such iniquity in the midst of thee.

76. Restitution is an act of corrective Justice, whereby another is set again into the possession of that thing of his own whereof he was unjustly deprived.

77. Hence an action binding to restitution must be against Justice strictly taken, and not against charity only.

78. To this injustice injury is opposed.

79. To charity is evil will opposed, whether it be formal by a direct intention or virtual by interpretation.

80. Unto this ill will pertaines unjust discord, which if it break forth into separation, especially in those things which pertain to religion, it is properly called Schism.

CHAPTER XVII.

Of the honor of our Neighbor.

1. Iustice toward our Neighbor doth either immediately affect him or by means of some action.

2. Justice which doth immediately affect our Neighbor, doth either respect the degree of that condition in which our Neighbor is placed, or the condition it self absolutely considered.

3. As it respects the degree of it, it is called honor which is commanded in the fifth Commandment: which is said to be the first Commandment with promise, Eph. 6. 2. Either because it is the first of the second Table, or because it is the first Commandment in all the Law that hath a singular and proper promise joined to it.

4. Here society of men among themselves is supposed and established, private or oeconomick, and public or politick, wherein one ought to serve another being joined together in mutual duties of Justice and charity, that they may exercise and show towards men that religion whereby they worship God.

5. Hence that solitary life which certain Hermites have chosen to themselves as Angelical, and others embrace for other causes, is so far from perfection, that unless it be persuaded by some extraordinary reason (and that for a time only) it is altogether contrary to the law and will of God.

6. But because human society is as a foundation to all other offices of Justice and charity which are commanded in the second table of the law: therefore those transgressions which do directly make to the disturbance, confusion and overthrow of this society, are more grievous sins, then the breaches of the several precepts.

7. But although political society be established of God as well as Oeconomick, yet as there is some certain form of this Oeconomick (as also of Ecclesiastical society) prescribed to all people, it is not so of political; but it is left to their liberty, that (so as they preserve their power whole) they may ordain that society, which makes most for the establishing of religion and justice among themselves.

8. And this is one reason why there is mention only of parents in the fifth precept; because Oeconomick society only (which is plainly natural) should remain one and the same throughout all ages, and nations: unto which that also is added, that this is the first degree, wherein is the fountain and seminary of all society; whence also the authority of all others in superior power is set forth and mitigated by the name of Father, 2. Kings 2. 12. & 13. & 13, 14. Gen. 41. 8. 43. 1. Sam. 24. 12. 1. Tim. 5. 1.

9. Honor is an acknowledgement of that dignity or excellency which is in another with a due testification of it.

10. It is called both an acknowledgement and testifying, because it consists neither in outward observance only, nor in inward only, but in both.

11. It is said to respect excellency or dignity, because we are not affected with reverence, but upon the apprehension of some excellency.

12. Hence that duty which is due to those who are placed above us in some eminency, is commonly and most properly set forth under the name of reverence: but by a synecdoche it sets forth every duty wherein the degree of dignity or excellency of another is respected, whether that degree be inequall in respect of us, or equal, Rom. 12. 10. In honor preferring one another, 1. Pet. 3. 7. Let men likewise dwell according to the knowledge of God, giving honor to the woman as to the weaker vessel; according that 1. Pet. 2. 17. Honor all men.

13. But it hath the first place among those duties which are due to our neighbor; First, because it comes nearest to the nature of religion and piety wherewith we worship God, whence also it is called religion or piety, not only by profane authors, but sometime also in the Scriptures, 1. Tim. 5. 4. Let him learn first to show piety to his own family, &c. Secondly, because it is the bond and foundation of all other justice, which is to be performed to our neighbor: for by virtue of this duty of those degrees which it doth respect, men lead a quiet and peaceable life with all piety and honesty, 1. Tim. 2. 2. which doth also seem to be the proper reason of that promise which is adjoined to this fifth precept, that thou mayest prolong thy days upon earth, because without this mutual observance of superiors and inferiors among themselves, it could not be expected that the life of man should abide in its state.

14. Honor, as it respects the knowledge and opinion of others of him that is to be honored, is called fame, Eccles. 7. 1. or a good name, Phil. 4. 8.

15. Hence honor as it is the external good of a man, doth not really differ from fame, but only in reason.

16. That office of honoring which we owe to all, is to preserve that state of dignity which they have, without being hurt.

17. Unto this office those vices are opposed whereby the fame. of our neighbor is hurt.

18. The good name of our neighbor is hurt when that estimation which ought to be had of him is diminished, 1. Cor. 4. 13. Being defamed we pray. 2. Cor. 6. 8. By honor and dishonor, by evil report and good report.

19. We may diminish it either with ourselves conceiving ill of him without just cause, which is called rash judgment, Mat. 7. 1. 1. Cor. 4. 3. or with others also.

20. The good name of our neighbor is diminished with others, by words, deeds, gestures, or other signs.

21. This also is done sometime directly and formally, with an intention to hurt, and sometime virtually and indirectly, or of the nature of the thing, or by circumstances adjoined.

22. When the fame of another is hurt by imputation of an evil of the fault or of punishment, if it be in his presence, it is called either a reproach, or derision, or a slander; if it be in his absence, it is called detraction.

23. Detraction is directly exercised about the evil of our neighbor four ways. 1. When a fault is falsely laid upon him. 2. When a secret fault is discovered without a just cause. 3. When a true crime is too much beaten upon. 4. When the deed is not disallowed, but the intention is blamed.

24. It is indirectly exercised about the good of our neighbor four ways also. 1. Denying that good which is to be given to our neighbor. 2. Hiding it. 3. Lessening it. 4. By praising it coldly.

25. The former ways are contained in his verse,

Imponens, augens, manifestans, in mala vertens.

26. The latter in this verse,

Qui negat aut minuit, tacuit, lau dat que remiss.

27. The good name of our neighbor is restored by retracting, or desiring pardon, or sometime also by recompensing of it.

28. The duties of h...our, belong some to unequals, some to equals.

29. Among unequals, it belongs to superiors to excel in well deserving, but to inferiors to reverence and give thanks.

30. Inequality is either in some simple quality, or in authority and power.

31. Inequality in a simple quality, is either in respect of age, or in respect of gifts.

32. They that are above others in age, ought to go before them in grave example, Tit. 2. 4. That old women teach the younger women to be sober.

33. They that excel in gifts, ought readily to impart the same to the profit of others, Rom. 1. 14. I am a debtor both to the Grecians and Barbarians; to the wise, and the unwise.

34. They that are above others in power, are those who have right to govern others, whence also power is wont to be called jurisdiction; whose duty it is to administer justice and charity toward others in a certain eminent way, according to that power which they have committed to them, Job 29. 14. 1.... I put on justice, and my judgment covered me as a robe, and as a Diadem. I was as eyes to the blind, and as feet to the lame, Col. 4. 1. Masters, do that which is right and equal to your servants.

35. This justice is administered in charity, by protecting and ruling.

36. Protection is an application of power to defend others from evil, Isaiah 32. 2. And a man shall be as an hiding place from the wind, and a covert from the tempest, &c. Whereunto also pertains that providence whereby they provide necessary things for them, 1. Tim. 5. 8.

37. Ruling is an application of power to further others in good, Romans 13. 4. He is the minister of God for thy good. 1. Tim. 2. 2. That we may lead a peaceable and quiet life in all godliness and honesty.

38. This ruling is exercised in directing and rewarding.

39. Direction is a propounding of that which is right and good, that it may be observed, Ephes. 6. 4. Fathers, bring up your children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord.

40. Unto this direction pertains the making and promulgating of good laws in whatsoever society of men it be.

41. Rewarding is a recompensing of that obedience which is performed or denied to direction, 1. Pet. 2. 14. both to take vengeance on the wicked, and for the praise of them that do well. So Rom. 13.

42. Here distributive and emendative justice doth most shine forth: for although the justice in other men is the same, with that which is exercised in those superior, yet it doth most shine forth if it be administered with a fit power.

43. Hence the right of revenging doth not properly belong to others then those that have super-eminent power, Rom. 13. 4. 1. Pet. 2. 14. by whom when it is rightly exercised, it is not the revenge of men, but of God, 2. Chro. 19. 6. Take heed what you do for ye judge not for men, but for the Lord, who will be with you in the judgment.

44. They that are in higher power, ought to provide for the commodities of them over whom they are set in respect of their souls, that they may have means of salvation, Ephes. 6. 4. In respect of their bodies, that they may have food, raiment, and fit dwelling.

45. And these are either private persons or public.

46. Private, are the husband in respect of the wife, parents in respect of children, and master in respect of servants: where the power of the husband is moderated with a certain equality: the power of the master is merely commanding: but the paternal power is as it were mixed.

47. They that are in public authority, are either ministers or magistrates.

48. But there is this difference between magistrates and ministers of the Church. 1. Magistracy, (of this rather then of the other kind) is an ordinance from man: but the ordinance of ministers is from God, which is declared in the Scriptures, when the power of magistracy although it be ordained by God, Rom. 13. 1. yet it is called an human creature, 1. Pet. 2. 13. which name doth not at all agree to the lawful ministers of the Church. 2. Magistracy is an ordinance of God the Creator, and so belongs to all kind of men: but the Ecclesiastical ministry is a gift and ordinance of Christ the Mediator, and so doth not properly and ordinarily perraine, but only to those who are of the Church of Christ. 3. A magistrate hath jurisdiction joined to his government, and so (if he be the supreme magistrate) upon just cause he may make and abolish laws, and commit jurisdiction to others: but th ministers of the Church (considered in themselves) are merely mandatory, that have nothing of their own, but whatsoever they do lawfully, they do it as in Christ's stead who commands them, and so can neither make laws, nor commit that power which they have received to others. 4. It belongs to magistrates to procure the common good both spiritual and corporal of all those who are committed to their jurisdiction, by politick means, and a coercive power, 1. Tim. 2. 2. but it is ministers duties to procure their spiritual good who are committed to them by Ecclesiastical means, Acts 20. 28. Heb. 13. 17.

49. But they cannot be exactly distinguished, in the things themselves, the persons and causes, about which they are occupied: for there is nothing, person, or cause so Ecclesiastical, but in some respect it may pertain to the jurisdiction of the magistrate; neither is there any action so secular (so it be done by a member of the Church) but, so far as it respects obedience to God, it may pertain to the taking notice of by the Church.

50. Therefore the exempting of Ecclesiastical men (as they are called) from the jurisdiction of the civil magistrate, as also the unloosing then from obedience due to Magistrates, and Parents, brought in by Papists under a pretence of Religion and perfection, is altogether contrary to the perfect Law of GOD.

51. In respect of this ruling which comes from the power of superiors, there is due from inferiors, subjection and obedience. Hebrews 13. 17. Obey your leaders, and submit yourselves.

52. Subjection is an acknowledgment of their authority. 1. Pet. 2. 18. Eph. 5. 22.

53. Obedience is the performance of those things that are prescribed. Eph. 6. 1. 5.

54. This obedience ought always to be limited according to the limits of power, which the superior commander hath.

55. Hence we must not obey men in those things which are against the command of God, for we must obey in the Lord, Eph. 6. 1. And in the fear of God. Col. 3. 22. Or also against the command of those superior persons who have greater authority then they.

56. Hence also that obedience must not be blind, or without examination of the precept: but an inferior ought to enquire so far as is requisite for the matter in hand, whether the precept be lawfull, convenient and binding. Acts 4. 19.

57. But if the precept be not lawful then an enduring of the punishment wrongfully inflicted, hath the place and force of obedience. 1. Pet. 2. 19. 20.

58. In respect of the good that is communicated either by the gifts, or by the power of superiors, inferiors do owe submissive thankfulness.

59. Thankfulness is a desire to recompense benefits received.

60. For it is a certain welwishing affection, having respect and proportion, to the benefit of another, yet so that it must not be contained in the affection it self, but must be manifested in answerable endeavor.

61. Thankfulness indeed is the common duty of all men, who have received any benefit from others, but there is a certain singular way of thankfulness, of inferiors towards superiors, which is declared in that word, when thankfulness is said to be submissive.

62. Hitherto pertains the relieving of their necessity, whether they stand in need of substance, help, or counsel. Gen. 45. 9•...
63. This thankfulness, which respects those by whose benefit we do under God subsist, namely our parents, and country, or those who sustain the same person with them, is called piety. 1. Tim. 5. 4.
64. The duty of equals towards all their equals is, that one prefer another in honor: Rom. 12. 10. Ephes. 5. 21.
65. Friendship is towards some that are joined nearer in love and communion. Prov. 18. 24.
66. The beginning of all honor to be given to our Neighbor, especially of that which is due to superiors and equals, is humility.
67. This humility as a virtue, whereby one doth so moderate his esteem of himself, that he will not in any kind attribute anything to himself above that which is meet for him. Phil. 2. 3. In humility of mind thinking everyone better than himself.
68. Unto humility is opposed pride and envy.
69. Pride is an inordinate affection of a man's own excellency.
70. This affectation of a man's own excellency if it be exercised about good things that we have, it is called boasting: if about those things which we would seem to have, it is called arrogancy: if about the fame and esteem which we seek with others, it is called vain glory: if about dignities, it is called ambition: if about the undertaking of matters, which are beyond our strength, it is called presumption.
71. Envy is a sorrow for the good of our Neighbor, because it seems to diminish our own excellency. Num. 10. 29.
72. For if there be fear of another's good, because we see some evils like to come from thence either to others, or to ourselves, it is not envy, but an honest fear, Prov. 28. 28.
73. If the cause of sadness be not that another hast good, but that we have not, and that good is to be wished for by us, then it is not envy, but emulation. Rom. 11. 14.
74. If the cause of sadness be the unworthiness of him, who enjoys that good, then it is not properly envy, but indignation. Pro. 29. 2.
75. Yet all these affections if they exceed measure, are wont to be noted in the Scriptures under the name of envy. Psal. 37. verse. 1. 7. Pro. 3. 31.

CHAPTER XVIII.

Of humanity toward our Neighbor.

1. Iustice which respects the condition of our Neighbor absolutely considered, doth either respect the person of our Neighbor, or his outward commodities.

2. That which respects his person doth either respect his life, or his purity.
3. That which respects his life is humanity, and it is commanded in the sixth Commandment. For seeing here man's life is properly provided for, or as the Scripture speaks; Gen. 9. 5, 6. The soul of man and the blood of man; all that duty which is here handled is rightly set forth under the man: of humanity.
4. This Commandment doth not properly treat of the life of the brute Creatures, because they are in man's power, Gen. 9. 2. 3. Neither have they common society with man: yet because a fit disposition toward the life of man doth infer some respect to another image of his, which is found in other living Creatures: and cruelty against them is wont to declare a certain inhumane disposition, or by little and little accustom to it: therefore clemency and inclemency towards the brute Creatures, doth, pertain also hitherto as a certain appendix.
5. Humanity is a virtue whereby we are inclined to preserve the life of our Neighbor, and quietness thereof by lawful means.
6. But this is performed two ways, namely by supplying things helpful, and hindering things hurtful.
7. But seeing the life of man which ought to be preserved is twofold, spiritual, and corporal, hence the duties of humanity are some spiritual, and some corporal.
8. The spiritual duty is to do all things according to our power, which may further the edification of our Neighbor.
9. Of this kind are, prayer; good example and admonition, which are required of all.
10. For although these immediately in regard of their next end, be general duties of charity, yet mediately and in respect of the remote end, they pertain to the furtherance of the spiritual life of our Neighbor. James 5. 20.
11. There is the like reason, of ceasing from due offices pertaining to the salvation of our Neighbor, of consenting with other in their sins, and of offense given to them, which are sins opposed to those duties: for these do always hurt the spiritual life of our Neighbor, Ezek. 3. 18. & 13. 19. & 33. 6. 8. Rom. 14. 15. 1. Cor. 8. 11.
12. But although as the soul is more noble then the body, so the spiritual life is of greater price then the corporal; and so those sins which do make against the spiritual life of our Neighbor are greater, (an equal comparison being made) then those which hurt the body: yet they do not so really pertain to the hurting of our Neighbor: because hurting and bodily death it self is wont to be brought on men, by necessity of coercion: but spiritual death cannot be brought upon one by another unless he be in some sort willing and do consent, so that is own action is the immediate cause of it.
13. Also it is required of superiors that have power, and authority, that they study to further the salvation of inferiors by their authority.

14. There be divers degrees of our duty toward the corporal life of our Neighbor, that it may be kept quiet and safe.
15. The first degree hereof is, in those virtues which do keep us far from any hurting of our Neighbor.
16. Of this kind, are Meekness, Patience, Longsuffering, and placableness, or pardoning of wrong.
17. Meekness is a virtue which doth moderate anger. Prov. 17. 1. Cor. 13. 4. Numb. 12. 3. Now the man Moses was very meek; above all men who were on the face of the Earth. Gal. 5. 22. The fruits of the spirit restraining of anger, goodness, gentleness.
18. Unto this is opposed, slowness and wrath.
19. Slownesse is a want of Just anger. 1. Sam. 12. 13.
20. Wrath is an inordinate stirring up of anger. Gen. 49. 7. Cursed be their anger because it was fierce, and their wrath because it was cruel. Eccles. 7. 10. Be not hasty in thy spirit to be angry, for anger resteth in the bosom of fools.
21. The degrees of wrath are, provoking of the mind waxing hot, and hatred.
22. Patience is a virtue which moderates anger that is stirred up by grievous wrongs. Luke 21. 19. Colossians 1. 11. 1. Thess. 5. 14.
23. Long-suffering is a continuance of patience, although it have been long provoked. Proverbs 14. 29. & 15. 18. & 16. 32.
24. Placableness is a virtue whereby we do easily forgive a wrong done to us. Mat. 18. 21. 22. Luc. 17. 3. 4.
25. The second degree of this duty is in those virtues, which do cherish society of life, as, concord, and benevolence which hath joined with it, courtesy, affability, and equanimity.
26. Concord, is a virtue whereby we do easily agree with others in those things that are good. Philippians 1. 27. & 2. 2. & 4. 2.
27. Benevolence is a virtue whereby we wish all things prosperous to others. 1. Cor. 13. 4. Charity is kind.
28. Unto these are opposed discord, dissention and enmity, &c. Gal. 5. 20.
29. A third degree of this duty is in those endeavors whereby the life it self of our Neighbor, is defended, furthered, and cherished.
30. An endeavor to defend, promote, and cherish the life of our Neighbor, doth contain all those duties, whereby we may be conserving causes of the life of man. Prov. 24. 10.
31. Unto these are opposed all those sins, whereby the life of men is hurt, as fierceness, cruelty and the like. Pro. 20. 10.

32. All these are contained under the name of Homicide.

33. Homicide is the unjust killing of a man.

34. Now that killing and hurting also is unjust, which is either not done by a just authority, that is, that that is public, or which is equal to public; or not upon a just cause, or not in due order, or upon an intention that is not just; for those four conditions ought always to concur to a just killing; if one of them be wanting, Homicide is committed.

35. Also rash anger must be referred to Homicide, so far forth as it tends to the hurting of the life of our Neighbor. Mat. 5. 22. Whosoever is angry with his brother unadvisedly.

36. But in those words it is given to understand that all anger is not condemned, for that only is reprov'd which is rash, that is, which hath no just cause, or observes no just measure. Otherwise the force of anger, as zeal of God, is often commended. Gen. 30. 2. Ex. 11. 8. & 16. 20. & 23. 19. Numb. 16. 15. & 31. 14. 2. Kings 13. 19. And hatred it self, Psalms 139. 21. 22.

37. This is for the most part peculiarly belonging to the sixth precept, that those things which are forbidden, may sometime (in another consideration) be not amiss, and sometime well and rightly done in obedience toward God.

38. So he that killeth another upon mere chance, to whom he gave no cause, whilst he is about a lawful work when and where it is lawful, fit diligence being used, doth not sin. Deut. 19. 5.

39. Such also is the reason of a necessary defense, so as desire of revenge be wanting. For this is an unblameable defense granted to everyone.

40. Sometime also God is obeyed by killing. Deut. 13. 9. Namely when it is done by authority, and command from God. 1. Sam. 15. 18. 19.

41. No man hath power from God, by common Law to kill that man of set purpose whose innocence he knoweth of.

42. Neither is there any power of man, which can give sufficient authority to any subject, to slay him, whom he knows to be innocent, and not to deserve death.

43. Therefore a war can never be just on both sides, because there cannot be death on both sides.

44. Neither is it lawful in any war to intend their occasion who are not in some sort partakers of such like cause.

45. But if there be present a lawful cause, together with a just authority and intention, and a just manner be used, the war it self, or warfare, is not against Religion, Justice, or Charity, Num. 31. 3. 1. Sam. 18. 16. & 25. 28. 1. Chron. 5. 22. Luc. 3. 14. Rom. 13. 4. 1. Pet. 2. 14.

46. Also the same conditions observed, it is lawful for those who have skill in weapons. 1. Chron. 5. 18. Psal. 143. 1. To offer and apply their help to lawful Captains; to make war. Luc. 3. 14. 1. Cor. 9. 7.

47. No Law of God permits any one to kill himself.

48. Yet it is lawful and just sometime for one to expose himself to certain danger of death.

39. Nay sometime the case is wherein one may and ought to offer himself to death. Jonah 1. 12.

CHAPTER XIX.

Of Chastity.

1. Iustice which respects the purity of our Neighbor is Chastity.

2. Chastity is a virtue whereby the purity of his person is preserved in respect of those things which pertain to generation. 1. Thess. 4. 3, 4, 5.

3. The parts of Chastity are two, shamefastnes and honesty.

4. Shamefastnesse is a part of chastity drawing back from impurity, which is in the same sense also called bashfulness.

5. Honesty is a part of chastity leading to those things, which become purity.

6. Shamefastnesse and honesty are radically in the inward choice of a man, but significatively in the outward conversation.

7. Hence chastity is chiefly named shamefastness, as it doth take away the outward signs of impurity: and it is called comliness, as it putteth the outward signs of purity.

8. Unto shamefastness, modesty is chiefly referred, and to comeliness gravity.

9. Modesty is a virtue whereby we contain ourselves within the bounds of fleshly desire.

10. Gravity is a virtue whereby the decorum of purity is observed.

11. Chastity is virginall, conjugal, or viduall.

12. But this distribution is not of the Genus into Species, but of the adjunct into his subjects.

13. For chastity is the fame in respect of the essence in all, but it admits some accidental differences, according to the different states of those by whom it is observed.

14. For virginall is that which ought to be kept by a virgin until she contract marriage. 1. Cor. 7. 34.

15. Conjugal is that which ought to be kept in wedlock, Tit. 2. 5.

16. Viduall is that which is to be kept by Widows. 1. Tim. 5. 7.

17. Unto conjugal chastity marriage lawfully contracted and observance is referred. Mat. 19. 6. 1. Tim. 2. 14. Heb. 13. 4. 1. Pet. 3. 1, 2, 4.

18. For this is the difference between single estate and married, that though chastity may and ought to be observed in single estate, yet single estate of it self maketh nothing to chastity: but wedlock hath both of it own nature a certain purity in it self, as it is an ordinance of God, and also by virtue of that institution, it becomes a means, to preserve purity and chastity.

19. Marriage is the individual conjunction of one man and one woman by lawful consent, for a mutual communion of their bodies, and society of life among themselves.

20. It is of one man with one woman, Genes. 2. 22. Malac. 2. 15. Mat. 19. 4, 5. 1. Cor. 7. 2. Levite. 18. 18.

21. For that perfection of friendship, and mutual offices, such as marriage is cannot be had but between one and one.

22. Therefore Polygamy, even that which was in use with the ancient Fathers, was always a violation of the Laws of Marriage, neither was it of old tolerated by God by any other dispensation, then that whereby he is wont to tolerate men's, infirmities, and ignorances, and to turn them to God.

23. To a lawful consent is required first, that the persons to be joined be fit: Secondly, that the consent it self be agreeable to the nature of the thing and the Law of God.

24. That the persons may be fit is required. 1. A just distance of blood, Levite. 18.

25. For nearness of flesh hinders marriage by reason of a certain special reverence due to our own flesh, contrary to which is that conjugal familiarity which is signified in that phrase. Do not uncover her nakedness. Levite. 18. 6. 7. And following.

26. That distance of degrees, either of kindred or affinity, which is propounded, Levite. 18. to be observed, is of common and perpetual right; for the violation of it was among those abominations, wherewith the Gentiles themselves are said to have polluted the Land. Vers 37. 28.

27. Yet it is not in all things of such essential moral right, but it may admit exception, either upon mere necessity urging, as in the beginning of the world, or upon a special command of God. Deut. 25. 5.

28. Spiritual kindred or nearness (as they call it) brought in by the Papists between him that baptizeth, or the God-father, and the God-son or God-daughter, as they call them baptized, as an impediment of lawful matrimony, is an idle, and tyrannical devise of superstition.

29. Secondly, there is also required in the person that is to contract Matrimony, ripeness of age, 1. Cor. 7. 36. Which if it should be wanting, she could not contract other covenants of less moment, much less this so great a covenant.

30. That this consent be conformable to the nature of the things, there is required aforehand. 1. Consent of parents, if they be as yet in their power, 1. Cor. 7. 36, 37, 38.
31. 2. Consent also of the persons contracting ought to proceed from certain & deliberate counsel, without compulsion or deceit.
32. This conjunction is said to be individual, because from the nature of the thing it self, it hath the same ends with the life of man, Rom. 7. 1, 2, 3. 1. Corinth. 7. 39.
33. They therefore that have concubines, who do contract between themselves, for a time, do not marry according to God's ordinance and allowance, but do filthily elude it.
34. Neither doth this perpetually depend upon the will only and covenant of the persons contracting: for then by consent of both parts, a covenant so begun may be unloosed again, as it useth to be between master and servant: but the rule and bond of this covenant is the institution of God, whence also it is in the Scriptures sometime called the covenant of God. Prov. 2. 17.
35. This institution of God whereby he establisheth the individual fellowship of husband and wife, doth respect the good of mankind in a just conservation of it by a certain education, and hereditary succession of children, which cannot be done without an individual conjunction of parents.
36. Therefore lawful marriage cannot be unloosed before death, without most grievous guilt of him who is the cause of it.
37. No not infidelity or heresy in either part doth give a just cause of separation. 1. Cor. 7. 12, 13.
38. But if one party make separation with obstinate pertinency, the other party in that case is freed. 1. Cor. 7. 15.
39. This conjunction is for the communication of bodies, because there is in marriage first sought an holy seed. Malac. 2. 15. And secondarily a remedy against carnal desires which are now since the fall in men, who have not a singular gift of continency, so unbridled, that (unless they be helped by this remedy) they do as it were burn them, that is, make them unfit for pious duties, and make them run headlong to unlawful and foul mixtures, 1. Cor. 7. 2, 9.
40. Hence the body of the husband is said to be in the power of the wife, and the body of the wife in the power of the husband, so that they ought to give due benevolence one to another without defrauding, 1. Cor. 7. 3, 4, 5.
41. Hence also the vow of single life, as it takes place among the Papists, is not a vow of chastity, but of diabolical presumption, a snare of the conscience, and the bond of impurity.
42. Also society of life, and that most intimate, for mutual comfort and help, is among the ends of marriage: for seeing a man must leave his father and mother, and cleave to his wife,

Gen. 3. 24. And seeing the woman is said to be made a meet help unto man. Gen. 2. 18. This helping society doth not only pertain to the propagation of mankind: but it must be extended to all the duties of this life.

43. All these are mutual between the husband and wife, and ought to be observed of equal right, as touching the essence or sum of the matter, yet so as that difference of degree which comes between the husband and the wife (that the husband govern, and the wife obey) be observed in all these things. 1. Pet. 3. 7. 1. Cor. 11. 7. 8. 9. 10. Eph. 5. 33.

44. Unto chastity luxury is opposed in a more strict sense, whereby it sets forth an unlawful use of those things, which pertain to generation, which in the same sense is called, uncleanness inordinate affection, and evil concupiscence. Col. 3. 5. Lasciviousnesse. Rom. 13. 13. The disease of concupiscence 1. Thess. 4. 5.

45. Unto Luxury are reckoned all the helping causes, effects, and signs of it as unchaste looks. Job 3•... 1. Pro. 9. 13. 2. Pet. 2. 14. Mat. 5. 28. Noddings, Kissings, Embracings, Touchings, Dancing, Showes, Songs, Gestures, and the like. Gal. 5. 15.

46. Unto the helping causes of Luxury are referred, Gluttony and Drunkenness. Rom. 13. 13. Ezech. 16. 49. Prov. 23. 31. 33.

47. Unto the effects, and signs of it are referred lasciviousnes, and lacivious habit, Prov. 7. 11. And obscene speech. Eph. 5. 4.

48. The kinds of Luxury are. 1. Scortation, which is the mixture of a single man with a single woman, 1. Cor. 6. 16. Whether it be Stuprum, whoredom, which is the deflouring of a woman otherwise honest: or fornication properly so called, which is the mixture with a dishonest woman, or a whore. 2. Adultery, when at least one of the persons offending is married or betrothed. 3. Incest, when those are mixed together which are near in the flesh. 4. Rape, when force is added to Luxury. 5. Mixture against nature.

49. Adultery is most properly and essentially against marriage, the band and covenant whereof it breaks of it own nature; and so is the proper and just cause of a divorce, which is not to be admitted for many other sins, although they be more grievous.

50. A just devorce doth dissolve the band it self of marriage.

CHAPTER XX.

Of commutative Justice.

1. Iustice which respects the outward benefit of our Neighbor by a certain appropriation is called commutative Justice, because it is chiefly used in changings.

2. This Justice is a virtue whereby every man's own is given to him in external commodities.

3. Now that is said to be every man's own, whereof he hath a lawful dominion.

4. Dominion is a right to dispose perfectly of a matter so far as Laws permit. Matth. 20. 15.

5. There be two parts of a perfect dominion, propriety and the use of it. Luc. 20. 9. & 10. 1. Cor. 9. 7.
6. Now these are sometimes separated, so as the propriety is in one, and the use for a time in the power of another.
7. This Justice is exercised, in the getting and using.
8. The Justice of getting depends upon the cause of the dominion.
9. The cause and reason of a dominion is called a title.
10. A just title is a just occupying, an inheritance, a gift, a reward, or a contract.
11. A just occupation is a lawful taking of things which were belonging to nobody before, yet may become some bodies.
- 12 Those things are said to belong to nobody which are not possessed, neither are in any ones dominion.
13. In this sense all things are said to have been common in the beginning of the world, and also after the flood: because they belonged to no man by possession or peculiar dominion, and so were propounded in common to everyone that did first take or occupy, whereunto also pertains, that blessing of God upon man-kind. Gen. 1. 28. Fill the earth and subdue it, and bear rule over every beast, and over all fowls of the Heaven, and over all the beasts that creep upon the Earth, which is also repeated after the flood; Be fruitful, increase and fill the Earth.
14. Of the same condition also are now those Islands of the Sea, and parts also of the continent which were never inhabited.
15. Of the same right also are all those things which did once belong to somebody, but afterward ceased to belong to any, which are wont to be called things vacant or forsaken.
16. But things that are lost are not to be accounted with these, unless there have been due diligence used to find out the true owner: for otherwise although they be not corporally detained from another, yet in right, with will and mind they are possessed.
17. Hence those wares that to lighten the Ship are cast into the Sea, or are by some Ship wrak brought to shore, are not to be accounted for things vacant or forsaken.
18. Unto this occupying is captivity referred, which is an occupying caused by right of war justly undertaken.
19. An inheritance is a succeeding into the goods of another, by virtue of his just will, Levite. 25. 45. 46. Num. 27. 8. 9. 10. & 11.
20. A gift is a free bestowing of a good thing. 1. King 10. 10. & 13.
21. A reward is the recompensing of a work done.

22. A contract as it pertains to this place, is a communicating of a good thing upon an agreement binding to it: the form of which is, I give, that thou mayest give, or I give that thou mayest do, or I do that thou mayest do, or I do that thou mayest give.

23. Unto possession by contract is to be referred. 1. Buying, when a thing is had upon a certain price, 2. Letting, when the use of a thing is granted for a certain reward. 3. Borrowing, when a thing is taken to be rendered freely again, in the same, generalled mutuum: or to be restored in the same special, called commodatum, to which a pledge or depotum may be reckoned.

24. About these matters a lawful occupation, or course of living, is conversant belonging to all men, except those who enjoy public offices, of whom we have spoken before at the fifth Commandment: for such occupations of life, although they do from the nature of the thing pertain to the common good, and ought to be thither directed by men; yet they do with all belong to the private good of this life in getting, and keeping the goods of this life. Eph. 4. 28. 2. Thess. 3. 11. 12.

25. All are bound who are not exercised in greater, offices, and do not prepare themselves to them, to exercise some such occupation. 1. Tim. 5. 13. Gen. 3. 10. According to that of the Apostle, if any will not labor, let him not eat. 2. Thess. 3. 10.

26. Neither is it enough that one labor, unless he labor that which is good. Eph. 4. 28. That is, do follow that occupation of life, which agrees with the will of God and the profit of men: studying quietness and diligence. 1. Thess. 4. 11. 12. & 2. Thess. 3. 12 Unto which are opposed slothfulness, voluntary beggary, vain, curious, unclean arts: and an unnecessary care of other men's matters, which is called Busibodines.

27. But to what singular kind, of occupation every one ought to apply himself, that depends partly upon the inward endowments & inclinations which he hath. 1. Pet. 4. 10. And partly upon outward circumstances whereby he is carried more to one course of life then to another.

28. But because there is a singular providence of God exercised in directing such matters; therefore everyone is rightly said to be assigned to this or that kind of life, as it were by God's reckoning.

29. But although in respect of this divine providence such a special occupation of life is wont to be by proportion called by Divines a vocation: yet this is not so to be taken, as if that vulgar men were as well separated by God to their occupations, as a believing man is to live well, or a Minister of the word to fulfill the work of the Ministry: for neither is there anywhere in the Scriptures, either any such thing declared, or the title it self of vocation, simply and properly given to any vulgar occupation.

30. For the Apostle, 1. Corinth. 7. 20. When he makes mention of vocation, doth not set forth any certain occupation of this life, (for circumcision, and uncircumcision, service and freedom, are not occupations of life or just callings) but he distributes, as it were, the calling of the faithful, by the subjects, when he shows that some are called being servants, and some being free, as appears Verse 24. Where he unfolds the variety of calling by that divers state and condition, in which the called are found, neither doth he there command that everyone abide in that state in which he was called: for he permits a servant to aspire to freedom, Verse 21. But he teacheth that there is no difference of a free man and a servant, in respect of Christ and Christian calling, Verse 22.

31. In the defect of such possessions poverty consists, and riches in the abundance of them, 1. John 3. 1.

32. Riches lawfully gotten, though in their own nature they be not moral good things, yet they are good gifts of God. Prov. 22. 4.

33. And poverty hath the respect of a punishment or affliction, Prov. 21. 17.

34. Therefore there is no perfection, in casting away or forsaking riches, unless the special will of God require it. Acts 20. 25.

35. But euangelicall poverty which is spiritual, may consist with great riches, as in Abraham, Job, &c.

36. Also propriety and distinction of dominions is the ordinance of God and approved of him. Prov. 22. 2. 2. Thess. 3. 12.

37. In this right of dominion both in getting and using commutative Justice is exercised, the sum whereof is that we possess our own, not another's, and that without the hurt of others.

38. But the foundation of this Justice is placed in the lawful keeping of those things we have.

39. Unto this keeping is required parsimony and frugality, Prov. 21. 15.

40. Parsimony is a virtue whereby we make only honest and necessary expenses.

41. Frugality is a virtue whereby we order our matters, with profit and benefit.

42. The perfection of this Justice properly flowing from Charity is in Liberality.

43. Liberality is a virtue whereby we are inclined to communicate our commodity freely to others, by the Will of God. 2. Cor. 8. 14. Rom. 12. 13. Levite. 25. 35. Ps. 37. 19.

44. Unto liberality pertains not only a free giving, under which is comprehended the forgiving of a debt: but also free lending. Luc. 6. 34. And hospitality, Rom. 12. 12. 1. Pet. 4. 9.

45. Alms properly so called doth consist in this liberality, when it is done upon taking pity on the calamity of our Neighbor.

46. Theft in the larger signification is opposed to a just title of dominion.

47. Theft is an unjust taking away of that which is another man's against the will of the owner. Eph. 4. 28.

48. Taking away comprehends, taking, detaining, and damnifying.

49. A thing is said to be another's, which is another's, either in respect of propriety, power, or possession.

40. In divers causes the owner upon right of humanity is supposed to consent, to the bestowing of some part of his goods, although he hath not actually testified his consent, and then the respect of theft ceaseth. Deut. 23. 24. 25.

51. But seeing that which is another man's is taken away either secretly or by force: hence there are two kinds of this sin, namely theft specially so called, and Rapine or Robbery. Exod. 22. 1. Hos. 6. 8, 9. Luc. 8. 21. 1. Cor. 6. 8, 9.

52. Unto theft is referred all fraud which is used in buyings, or sellings, or in any other unlawful getting.

53. Theft in the common wealth is Peculatus when things that belong to the community are taken away, and Annonae stagellatio, when the buying and selling of corn or other things is made dearer than is fit, by monopolies, or the like arts.

54. Unto rapine are referred oppression: Isaiah 3. 14. and extortion. Luc. 3. 14. 1. Sam. 2. 12.

55. Unto parsimony and frugality is opposed profusion, which is an immoderate bestowing of those things which we have.

56. Unto liberality is opposed covetousness, which is an immoderate keeping of those things which we have, Prov. 11. 24. Or a greedy desire of those things we have not, 1. Tim. 6. 9.

CHAPTER XXI.

Of telling Truth. Veracity.

1. Iustice which doth affect our Neighbor mediately, is Veracity and contentation. For by that our Neighbor is affected, by means of his credit, and by this by means of some work or action of ours belonging to some Commandment going before.

2. Veracity is a virtue, whereby we are inclined to observe truth in giving testimony, Mat. 23. 22. Eph. 4. 25. Psal. 15. 2.

3. Of this telling truth in giving testimony, the ninth precept doth properly handle, and not of those things only or chiefly which pertain to the fame of our Neighbor; For fame pertains to that honor, the consideration whereof is had in the fifth precept: neither is it to be put after riches and the profits of this life, whereof it was handled in the eight Commandment. Pro. 22. 1. Neither doth a testimony true or false pertain to the same of others only, but also to their possessions, and life it self. Pro. 30. 14.

4. It is also manifest that the words themselves of this precept do most directly respect proceeding in judgment, Numb. 35. 30. Deut. 17. 6. & 19. 15. In which places many other things are handled beside fame, although they ought also to be extended to all public, politick, and sacred testimonies. 1. Cor. 15. 15. John 1. 7. 8. 15. 19. 32. 34.

5. Hence actions in places of judgment, have not only approbation, but also direction from this precept; namely that judgments ought always to be grounded on fit testimony, (unless there be that evidence of the matter which needs to witness) or at least strong and violent (as they call them) presumptions, which are equal to testimonies.
6. The words of a testimony must always be used in that sense as they are understood, or are thought to be understood by those to whom the witnesses endeavor to give credence, without equivocation, doubting, or mental reservation.
7. Truth in a testimony is threefold. 1. When that which is said is conformable to the thing which is in hand. 2. When it is conformable. 3. When tis conformable both to the thing and to the mind.
8. The second truth is that which is most properly looked at in a testimony and in veracity: yet the third is required in those things, a certain knowledge of which we are either bound or profess to have.
9. This veracity is in a simple assertion, or in a promise.
10. The truth of an assertion is always thus farnecessary that if we affirm anything, it do consent with the mind and our judgment.
11. Also sometime an assertion it self is necessary when either Justice or Charity requires it of us.
12. Justice requires it in public judgments of the Judge, of the plaintiff, the defendant, of the witness, of the advocate, the notary, and the proctor, and out of judgment when we are bound to bear witness by some special right.
13. Charity requires this when good comes to our Neighbor by it, without equivalent hurt to ourselves or others.
14. Truth of a promise is called fidelity.
15. Fidelity is a virtue, whereby we are inclined to keep constantly our credit given.
16. This Fidelity is the foundation of civil Justice, and all agreements, and contracts: for a reciprocal promise is a contract.
17. To the truth of a testimony is opposed a Lye. Eph. 4. 25.
18. A lie is properly a testimony, whereby one pronounceth otherwise then is in his heart. Act. 5. Whence is that phrase in Scripture of a double heart, of a man that is a liar. Psal. 12. 3.
19. But because a thing pronounced, doth not consist only in outward words, but chiefly in their sense; therefore the same words which are true in one sense, in another sense become a lie. Mat. 26. 61.

20. Ironies, fables, jests, repeatings also of false things, and the like are not lies, because they are not testimonies; and they are not testimonies because they are not confirmed by the credit and authority of the speaker.

21. An intention of deceiving, although it do almost always accompany a false testimony, yet it is not of the essence of it, neither is it necessarily required to a lie; for although one know that he with whom he hath to do cannot be deceived by his lie; yet if he have an intention in speaking to affirm that which is false, he lieth no less then if he had hope of deceiving.

22. An intention of hurting doth indeed increase the mischief of a lie: but it maketh not the nature of it: for if a man out of jesting or a desire to please and be officious, confirm that by his credit which he knows to be false, it is a lie: pernicious of its own nature, if not others, yet to the author himself: as it is in those who are given to flatteries or boastings, or are delighted in confirming monstrous fables or fictions unto others.

23. An intention to speak that which is false, makes a lie, although that which is spoken be most true.

24. The asseveration of a thing incertaine for certain, is accounted with a lie although we think it to be true.

25. Also that secrecy whereby one doth not speak the truth when Justice or Charity requires it, doth partake of the nature of a lie.

26. But when neither Justice nor Charity requires to give testimony, then the truth or part of it may be concealed without sin. Ier. 38. 27.

27. Among lies, those are more heinous, in which the testimony is more solemn, as in public judgments, which are chiefly respected in the words of the ninth precept, in sacred matters, and in the like. Matth. 26. 59. 1. Cor. 15. 15.

28. Hence subscriptions, testimonies, or commendatory letters, given against the known truth are foul lies.

29. That dissembling which consists in deeds or signs, and not in words, is not properly a lie: unless the same either of their own nature, or by some certain appointment, have the force and use of speech: as, 1. Sam. 20. 20. 21. 22. Mat. 26. 49. Because such deeds and signs that are not verbal, have no certain and determinate signification, so as they can have the force of a testimony.

30. Therefore such dissembling is sometime lawful, as in warlike stratagems. Ios 8.

31. But it is made unlawful when in respect of the end or manner, it fights with religion, Justice or Charity.

32. Unto fidelity is opposed perfidy or unfaithfulness.

33. A lie is committed in a promise, if there be not an intention of doing that which is promised, unfaithfulness is committed, if there be not an answerable endeavor to perform the same: therefore a lie and unfaithfulness, may be joined together, and they may be also severed.

34. When a testimony toward our Neighbor is confirmed by an oath, then the oath is an adjunct of that testimony: and although it do in it self respect God only, yet in this use it respects our Neighbor also.

35. Therefore perjury in such a testimony is directly and immediately a sin against reverence due to God: but mediately it violates also that Justice which is due to our Neighbor.

36. Asseveration is the manner of a testimony whereby the sincerity of the witness, and the certitude of knowledge which he hath of the thing witnessed, is declared: whence also it is not unfitly by some called a protestation, because it produceth a witnessing by explication.

37. Therefore in an asseveration there is not a second contestation coming to the former as there is in an oath: but an illustration of one and the same thing.

38. Neither is there any calling upon God in a mere asseveration, which is essential to an oath.

39. Yet an asseveration is not convenient but to the more grave testimonies, for it is as it were a middle degree between a simple testimony and an oath.

40. We must most of all abstain from those asseverations our common speech, which have some show of an oath.

CHAPTER XXII.

Of Contentation.

1. Contentation is a virtue, whereby the mind doth rest in that portion that God hath given him. 1. Tim. 6. 6. Heb. 13. 5. Phil. 4. 11.

2. This contentment is commanded in the tenth Commandment, as appears by the words themselves, neither is it any way meet that this Commandment be referred to that inward and original purity of righteousness, which is the fountain of all obedience; for that is not generally commanded in any one Commandment, but in all: neither doth it more pertain to the second table which is the condition of this precept, then to the first.

3. Yet because of all virtues which are contained in the second table there is none more internal, or more intimate to primitive righteousness then contentment, and we are as it were lead by the hand from this, to contemplate and seek that: therefore that purity is not unfitly by occasion of this precept handled here.

4. Unto this contentment is joined joy for the prosperity of our Neighbor as of our own. Rom. 12. 15.

5. In that contentment and joy consists the top and perfection of all charity toward our Neighbor. In which respect also contentment is in a certain manner the perfection of godliness and a godly man. 1. Tim, 6. 6. For godliness is great gain (〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉) with contentment, or producing the perfection of co•...tenment.

6. Hence it is commanded in the last precept according to that order which proceeds from the more imperfect to the more perfect, and from that which is more known to that which is less known.

7. For this is a duty most perfect, and most unknown to us by nature, that whatsoever we conceive or will, it be joined with the good of our Neighbors.

8. Therefore although this of its own nature hath the first place among duties to our Neighbor, as the foundation of all the rest, yet because it is last in having a being in man corrupted, therefore it is commanded in the last place.

9. Unto Contentation is opposed concupiscence. Heb. 13. 5.

10. But by concupiscence is not understood the power and faculty of lusting, and desiring which is natural: nor the act or operation of that natural faculty which is also natural and lawful, neither the whole inclination of our nature which is corrupt, which is not specially condemned in any one precept, but in the whole Law: nor all those chief actual lusts which are inordinate, a great part whereof is contrary to religion and condemned in the first table; nor lastly, all lusts which tend to the hurt of our Neighbor, for those which have a deliberate consent, and purpose of prosecuting joined with them, are condemned in the several Commandments: But that desire whereby the mind is first instigated, and tickled, with desire of the good things which are our Neighbors, although it be not yet come into the mind to get them by unlawful means, 1. Kings 21. 2. Marc. 10. 19.

11. By reason of that affinity, or near consanguinity which those first motions of injustice have with original corruption, whence they do arise, they are wont by many to be as it were confounded with it. But. 1. Original sin, is as it were an inbred habit, perpetually dwelling in us, having it self in respect of the existence always in the same manner; whilst we live here; but these morions are transient actions proceeding from that habit. 2. That sin dwelling in us, is no more original, then a general principle of all vicious actions, but those acts, which are condemned in this place are manifestly circumscribed, as having respect only to our neighbor.

12. The Apostle himself, Rom. 7. doth plainly open this precept by a Synecdoche of the operations of sin, for concupiscence, Ver. 7. is the same with the affections of sinners, Ver. 5. And with concupiscence effected by sin, Ver. 8. And so must necessarily be distinguished from sin dwelling in him. Ver. 7.

13. Neither is it any marvel that the Pharisees (of whom Paul was one) did not acknowledge the first motions of concupiscence to be sins, seeing the same is yet stiffly denied by their cosen germans, the Papists.

14. They that divide this last precept of concupiscence into two, so as one is of coveting the house, and the other of coveting the wife, with that which follows in this matter. 1. They are forsaken of all reason. 2. They are constrained either to root out altogether the second precept of the first Table, or to turn it at least into a needless appendix of the first, that they may seem to retain in some so... the number of ten words, or rather (which is evident in many or...) 〈◇〉 obs...ring the force of the second precept, they may with some show remove it from themselves, and their superstitions, they are constrained to tear in sunder this tenth precept. 3. They cannot certainly design which is the ninth, and which is the tenth precept, because in the repetition of the Law, Deut. 5. 27. Coveting of the wife is put before the coveting of the house. 4. They can declare no distinct injustice, between these covetings, whence also it comes to pass, that they themselves in explaining the decalogue, do always join or rather confound te ninth and tenth precept. 5. The very words of the decalogue, do expressly note one precept when they forbid one act. Thou shalt not cover, and one common object whatsoever is thy Neighbors.

15. There is referred to concupiscence as a cause, the inordinate love of ourselves, which is called 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 . 2. Tim. 3. 2.

16. This self-love is the foundation and original, in a sort of all sins, not only against our neighbor, but also against God himself. 2. Tim. 3. 4.

17. This concupiscence is that which is distributed by John, into that which is of the flesh, respecting those things which pertain to food and lust, and into that which is of the eyes, respecting those things which pertain to outward delight and profit: and into that which is of the pride of life, respecting those things which pertain to the glory and pomp of this world. 1. John 2. 16.

18. Unto joy and well-pleasnesse in the prosperity of our Neighbor is opposed, envy, or an evil eye, Mat. 20. 15. And 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 or rejoicing in the hurt of our Neighbor. Psal. 17. 3. 4. Obad. 12.

19. In this last precept that perfection of Justice is commanded, which is in some sort explained throughout the whole 〈◇〉 ...e: as in the first precept of the 〈◇〉 ...e, all Religion is in a certain manner commanded, so that in the first precept of the first table i... contained that first and great Commandment, Thou shalt love God with all thy heart: and the second table like to this, thou shalt love thy Neighbor as thyself, is contained in the last of the second Table.

20. From this perfection which shines forth in any one of these precepts it is manifest, that a perfect and accurate fulfilling of the Law, is impossible even to the faithful, by that grace which is bestowed upon them in this life. For seeing (as it is well said) the rule and measure of our obedience is in affirmatives, Thou shalt love with all thy heart: and in negatives, Thou shalt not cover, both of which is impossible in this life, it doth necessarily follow, that none can exactly satisfy the Law.

21. In this life we know only in part, 1. Cor. 13. 9. And therefore we act only in part: we have received only the first fruits of the spirit. Rom. 8. 23. And therefore we cannot exactly observe a Law altogether spiritual. Rom. 7. 14. We carry about us flesh that lusteth against the spirit, Gal. 5. 17. Therefore we cannot obey without concupiscence, inclining and drawing another way. Finally we are not perfect, Phil. 3. Verse 12. We cannot therefore perform perfect obedience: but we have always need to have that petition in the heart, and in the mouth, Forgive us our debts.

22. Yet it is truly and rightly said that the yoke of Christ is easy, and his burden light. Mat. 11. 30. And his Commandments are not grievous. 1. John 5. 3. Because the Law is there considered. 1. As it is observed by the faithful who delight in it. Rom. 7. 22. Psal. 119. 14. 16. Not as it ought to be observed; for that observation brings rest unto the souls of the faithful. Mat. 11. 29. Although imperfection cleaving to them is grievous and troublesome to them. 2. In respect of the spirit, not in respect of the flesh. Matthew 26. 41. 3. Remission of sin & of all imperfection which cleaves to our endeavors being joined with it. 4. In comparison of the Letter of the Law which killeth. 5. A comparison also being had of the reward appointed by God to imperfect obedience begun: in which sense even all afflictions are counted light. 2. Cor. 4. 17. The easiness therefore and lightness of the Law of God is not in the proportion of it to our strength: but in the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God together with the Communication of the Holy Spirit: which is with all those that love the Law God.

Amen.

To the Reader.

Some years are now passed, since it pleased divine providence to put a period to the life of Dr. William Ames, in whose death very many did interest themselves, as no indifferent mourners. Not only those, who either under the notion of Scholars or Friends were become his familiars; but universally all such, who had been sensible of enjoying the fruits of his labors: And who were fervent lovers of sound literature, purity of heavenly Doctrine, and godliness in sincerity of heart. Knowing indeed, that in Ames, the garden of learning had lost one of its choicest flowers, the fortress of truth, one of its stoutest defenders, Piety its most faithful favourite, the School a most able and reverent Doctor, and studious youth their most diligent instructor. That we have $\langle \diamond \rangle$ $\langle \diamond \rangle$ $\langle \diamond \rangle$ $\langle \diamond \rangle$, those, who have derived $\langle \diamond \rangle$ $\langle \diamond \rangle$ of learning from $\langle \diamond \rangle$ $\langle \diamond \rangle$ $\langle \diamond \rangle$; •...und •...able witnesses. In further testimony are those his elaborate $\langle \diamond \rangle$ in opposition to the Idolatrous tyranny of Popery, and the spreading gangrene of Arminianism, especially his Coroni•..., whereby he obtained the Crown in the conflict. As also those things which he Dedicated to both Religion and P•...ty; his Marrow of Divinity▪ his C•...ses of Conscience, Explication of the Psa•...mes, Pe•...er, &c. And these his Catechistical Commentations, which indeed he designed for the private use of his Scholars▪ upon whose entreaty he laid th•...n down: But things so eminently conducing to the public, were not to be confined to the narrower limits of private profit. Amongst those divers ways by which diverse do handle Catechistical Doctrine, this Author thought fit above all to make use of this method: He takes out of the Word of God a Text most apposite, resolves and explains it su•...inctly, then draws out examples containing Doctrinal instructions, and lastly, applies them to their several uses. If this shall be disgusted by some •...cer pa•...at, I entreat him onl•... by little and little to remit that prejudicate opinion, which he can deduce from nothing but a slight perusal; and must upon a more settled introspection confess, that in this Piece Ames hath most prudently chose, and dexterously handled, the most plain and regular method, for the Preachers function, and Christian instruction. But if any should please themselves with any other method, they may with little pains and exceeding profit produce a compliance between it and our Amesian System. The truth of this is sufficiently attested, not only by our own Country men, but also by the Dutch, French, and others, among whose Catechistical Treatises this was and is in no small esteem.

I need not have taken thus much pains to premise a Prefatory Epistle, when indeed I am not ignorant how that the least knowing among us, will conclude me but weak to suppose, that I might induce them to prize this Piece by a second motive, when the Title hath already presented them with the name of Ames: But least a total silence should bring this Work at first sight to be questioned for spurious, I thought it not altogether unnecessary to usher it into the world with this short Preface.

THE SUBSTANCE OF CHRISTIAN RELIGION.

The first Lord's day

Psalm 4. verse. 6, 7, 8.

There be many that say, Who will show us any good? Lord, lift thou up the light of thy countenance upon us. 7. Thou hast put gladness in my heart, more than in the time that their corn and their wine increased. 8. I will both lay me down in peace, and sleep: for, thou Lord, only makest me dwell in safety.

The scope of this Psalm is, to teach us by the example of David how we ought to carry ourselves, when we are compassed about with the greatest dangers. Now, two things are here performed by David, which make up the two parts of this Psalm. First, He prayeth for the turning away of imminent danger, verse 1. Secondly, He setteth out the effect of this his prayer, in the strengthening of his mind, which he attained to by this means: and of that in the rest of the verses.

This confirmation is declared by a double reason, First, By an adhortation, which he useth towards his enemies, verse 2, 3, 4, 5. Secondly, By a profession of his confidence that he had in God, from the sixth verse to the end of the Psalm. In this profession of his confidence, the Royal Prophet showeth, that he places his chief felicity in God's favor towards him. And this profession is, first illustrated from a comparison with a very unlike and vanishing care of worldly men, that they have concerning their own happiness or felicity, verse 6. Secondly, From the effect of God's favor; to wit, that it brings with its self wonderful gladness to the minds and consciences of those that have received it, verse 7. In which words the reason and cause is given of the former confession. And then this gladness is illustrated by a comparison of a less joy or gladness, which yet by the world is taken for a full joy; and that is, the joy that arises from the plenty and abundance of the goods of this life, verse 7. Lastly, this profession of the Prophet is illustrated from another effect, that it brings with it, to wit, security and safety from fear, and all cause of fear; the true cause whereof is placed in God's protection, verse... 8.

That all these things may be the better understood, we must know and observe, for the explication of the words, that by many in this place, all are understood▪ because what is here attributed to many, ⟨ϕ⟩ to all. Secondly, That by the word, ⟨ϕ⟩ ⟨ϕ⟩, is not here understood properly an external and vocal sp...ech, but the inward affections, desire, and endeavor; because this saying is affirmed of such also as abstain from outward speech, and perhaps cannot speak. Thirdly, That by this exclamation [Who will show us any good?] a vehement desire is imported. Fourthly, That by good, all and everything is understood, which appears delectable, whether it seem profitable, pleasant, or any other way desirable. Fifthly, That by lifting up of God's countenance upon us, by a constant phrase of Scripture is understood, the communication and manifestation of God's gracious presence and favor; for it is a metaphor or speech that seems to be borrowed from the Sun arising and spreading abroad the beams of his light, whereby he brings a certain life... and gladness to all creatures here below.

Doctrines from hence arising.

Doct. 1. Our chief felicity and happiness ought above all other things to be regarded and sought after, and that throughout our whole life.

This Doctrine is thus raised and gathered; In that David proposeth this, as his only comfort which he regarded in the time of his affliction, and which he would regard all his life time. Now by the chief good▪ that properly is to be understood, wherein our felicity consists; in which felicity, is contained an affluence or fullness of all desirable good things. And this chief good, as it is imperfectly here attained to, and possessed in this life, is properly called our consolation, or comfort: It is called Comfort, because it is that, which as it were strengthens and comforts the mind, and makes it strong and firm against all oppressing pains, griefs and terrors, for consolation or comfort is properly a mitigation of pain and grief, or a remedy against sorrow and fear.

Reason 1. The first reason of this Doctrine, is; because in this chief good the end of our life doth consist; and the end in all things is chiefly to be looked on; because whosoever doth anything not in order to a fixed end, he doth it but rashly, and without reason. So he also, who lives without having his eye still fixed upon his chief good, lives but rashly and at random, and like unto a brute and unreasonable creature.

Reas. 2. Is, because from the regard we have to this end, all our actions are to be governed; whereof these only can be called right, which, as it were in a right or straight line tend to this end; and all others are wrong, and like crooked lines, or bypaths turning out of the right, and straight way. He therefore that lives without regard to this chief and last end, doth just as he, that intending to shoot at a Butte, would not yet look at the mark, but let his Arrow loose at random; or as he that would commit his Ship to the wind and waves, never looking to the load-star, or having any care of the haven whereunto he would arrive.

Reas. 3. Because the chief good is of chief excellency and worth, and therefore also deserves to have the chief place in our thoughts, studies, and cares. Whoso therefore neglecting this, suffer themselves to be taken up with other things, ▪are like unto children, who misregarding commonly things of ⟨◇⟩ worth, busy themselves altogether with ⟨◇⟩ ▪

⟨◇⟩ The use of this Doctrine is for reproof, against such as seldom or never think of the end and mark▪ whereunto their life should tend; and are not careful about that perfection▪ and chief good, whereunto they ought mainly to contend; and such men's lives are neither Christian nor rational, but rather brutish and bestial.

Doct. 2. Is this, That a man's chief good or happiness cannot be found in the goods of this life.

And this is gathered from verse 6. where this opinion of worldly men, that it may be found in such things, is rejected, as vain. The meaning of the Doctrine is, that a man's happiness consisteth not either in riches, or in honors, or in renown, or in power, or in any goods of the body; nor yet in pleasure, nor in any perfection of the mind, nor in any other the like created good.

Reas. 1. Because such goods do not make the man himself good, and therefore neither can they make him happy; but they are common to the worst of men, as well as to good men.

2. Because such goods are oftentimes the instruments and means of sin and misery.

3. Because there is none of them, which ought not to be referred to a further good: therefore in them cannot consist the last, chief, and perfectest good.

4. Because none of them can perfect the soul and spirit of man.

5. Because most of these goods are common to beasts with men; and yet beasts are not capable of happiness.

6. Because oftentimes it is a man's virtue and perfection to neglect and contemn such goods; so that such are the best and perfectest men, that make least account of these outward and worldly goods.

Use. The use is of reproof against such, who esteem as much of these goods, seek after them as lawfully, keep them with as great care, when acquired, and are as loath to leave them, as if they placed their true and only bliss and happiness in them.

Doct. 3. Is, That our true and chief good consists in our union and communion, that we have with God.

This is gathered from these words; Lift up the light of thy countenance upon us, O Lord. The meaning is, that God himself is our true chief good, as well effectively, as objectively; because he alone makes us happy, as the efficient; and makes us happy in himself, as the object; that is, by communicating himself unto us, according to that model of the Covenant; I will be thy God: I will be thy rich reward: And that our communion with God, is our formal or inherent happiness, which is wont to be called the vision o... seeing of God, and the beatifical vision. Now to see God, in Scripture-phrase, signifies not either the sight of the eyes, or the bare speculation and beholding with the understanding, but the full fruition and enjoyment of God, as far as ⟨◇⟩ makes for our blessedness. And to this fruition and communion we attain by Jesus Christ our Lord; and therefore this consolation must be referred to Christ, as to its cause; and all that belongs to our happiness, must be acknowledged to come by him.

Reas. 1. Because there is nothing else that can bring ⟨◇⟩ & solid quiet & peace to our souls, or satisfy ⟨◇⟩ ⟨◇⟩ of the nature of man; for all other things ⟨◇⟩ well noted by Isa. 35. 2. to be things unsatisfac...; where also on the contrary, the fat and ⟨◇⟩ ⟨◇⟩ of our souls, is said to consist in this 〈◇〉 communion. And this same in like manner is preached unto us in several places of the Psalms, That 〈◇〉 the Lord's House, that is, in the communion that we have with God, our souls are filled as it were with f...t and marrow, Psal. 83 6. and 65. 5. And as any natural body, out of its own place, hath never that kindly and natural rest which it desireth: So also man standing without God, is as it were out of his own place, and so cannot rest with true and solid contentment. Also as nothing which is less can fill up the whole capacity of a vessel that is bigger; so nothing that is worldly can 〈◇〉 up the capacity of our souls, and that because our souls are of an higher and larger capacity, than 〈◇〉 whole world is.

Reas. 2. Because there is no other thing without or besides God, which for its self, is in the last place to be desired; For all things ought always to be referred to God, because he is the first efficient and last end of all things. Therefore as one going a journey, can never perform it, so long as he stays at half the way; but ought to proceed to the end thereof: So they, that stick either at any creature, or at any worldly matter, which are but parts of the way, whereby we ought to be led unto God; can never arrive at the end and perfection of their life.

Reas. 3. Because there is no other independent good; for he that trusts in him, that depends on another is not sure in his trust, because the other is uncertain, in that he depends upon another's pleasure.

Reas. 4. There is no other good, that can be imparted to all, and every man together and at once, that are heirs of happiness: For that which is wholly communicated to all, and everyone at once and together, ought to be infinite.

Reas. 5. Lastly, There is nothing else, which either in itself is free from all mixture of imperfection, or can keep us free from all kind of evil, or make us partakers of all sorts of good.

Use 1. Of Exhortation, to seek God and his face and favor above all things else whatsoever.

Use 2. Of Comfort for the faithful, who have God for their God, in Christ; for they are partakers of that chief good, and so are truly blessed or happy, whatever other ways befall them in this world.

Doct 4. Is; That joy that the faithful have from the commi...ion that they have with God, in its sweetness, surpasses all other human delights and Joyes.

This is gathered from verse. 7. and from 1. Pet. 1. 8. from these places this Doctrine may be illustrated and cleared, as from the place cited, and such like.

Reas. 1. Because this joy is about the true and chief good; and other worldly joys are either about false and counterfeit goods; or about such, as in comparison of the chief, are but light and of no great value. There is a great difference between these joys as is between the fancy and affection of a child, that is moved by the picture, or resemblance of meat or drink, or of some other delightful thing; and that affection▪ that men feel in themselves arising from the use of convenient & 〈ϕ〉 meat & drink, after great thirst & hunger.

〈ϕ〉 ▪ 〈ϕ〉 . Because the conjunction and presence 〈ϕ〉 this good, is •...ost intimate and inward to our 〈ϕ〉 ▪ for it doth not only tickle the senses, whether external, or internal; but it also seizes upon and possesses the soul itself, and spirit of our mind. Hence it is also, that in Scripture, Ps. 103. not only the soul, but all that is in a faithful man, is said to 〈ϕ〉 in God. In this respect, there is as much difference between this spiritual joy, and that worldly gladness that arises from other things, as is between the small besprinkling of the earth, with the Morning or Evening dew, and the through wet•...ing of it with a plentiful and seasonable rain.

Reas. 3. Because all other worldly joys are •...ding, temporary and but for a moment; and do often end in mourning and sorrow: Whereas, that spiritual joy endureth to eternity, as doth the good, from whose possession it ariseth: In this regard also, there is as much difference between this spiritual joy and gladness, and that of this world, as is between the flame of straw, or of thorns burning under a Pot, and the light of the Sun itself.

Reas. 4. Because worldly joy is overcome and interrupted by the travails and afflictions of this life, and much more by terrors and anguishes of Conscience: but this spiritual joy doth so overcome all other afflictions and swallow them up▪ that not only it makes a man to rejoice while he is in them, but also to rejoice of them and for them, Act. 5. 41. I am. 1. 2.

Use 1. Of Admonition, That we suffer not our selves to be deceived by the pleasures and delights of this world, so that they may not in the least take us off from seeking of God; as the Apostle saith, That the afflictions of this world are not worthy that eternal weight of glory, which we expect in heaven: For indeed we ought to think of the pleasures of this world, as not worthy to be compared with that spiritual joy, whereunto we are called in Christ, and in our God through Christ. For such as are led away by the pleasures of this life, from seeking that solid joy in God, do as if they should rest in the smell of meat or drink, and should so think to feed themselves, neglecting the solid food itself, until they perish for •...inger.

Use▪ 2. Of refutation against that carnal imagination of the world, whereby many think that there is no joy nor gladness in the practice of godliness, and so they shun godliness, and the care of it, as that which is full of sadness and melancholy: But the Scriptures teach other ways, that the godly are called to this, that they may always rejoice, Phil. 4. 4. and that they always are as it were, feasting with all gladness, according to that of Solomon, Prov. 15. 15. The proper cause of this error is, ignorance & a depraved sense of their sins, 〈ϕ〉 in this like unto an herd of swine, who make it their greatest pleasure and delight, to wallow in the 〈ϕ〉 .

Use▪ 3. Of Consolation for the godly, in that 〈ϕ〉 their outward condition is, yet they have 〈ϕ〉 of more true joy, than can be either felt, or understood by worldly men.

Use 4. Of Exhortation, that striving with our utmost endeavor, we must labor more and more to receive, and be sensible of this joy. Now the means..., which we ought chiefly to use for attaining and 〈◇〉 thereof, are these; 1. We must in good 〈◇〉 remove all hindrances of this joy; that is, that by repentance & a real amendment of life, we 〈◇〉 cleanse and disburthen ourselves of our sins. 〈◇〉 We ought to have a true care, that we daily make more sure and constant to ourselves our union and communion with God, by diligent examination and confirmation of our faith and hope. 3. That we 〈◇〉 much and often exercised in the religious meditation of God's Promises, which promise all good things to such, as have God for their God. 4. I...duceth much to this purpose, if in ourselves we exercise and excite this joy, in and by the daily praise of God's name; that is, as well in private as public thanksgiving, coming from the bottom of our heart, for all those blessings, with which God hath blessed us in Christ Jesus.

Doct. 5. That this joy... and this comfort brings a certain holy security to the consciences of believers.

This is gathered from the last verse of the Psalm. And this is that security, wherein the Apostle ...oasts and glories, Rom. 8. If God be for 〈◇〉, who 〈◇〉 be against us, &c. For I am persuaded that nothing can separate me, &c. And David everywhere in the 〈◇〉; Why do I fear? God is my rock, &c. This security differs much from carnal security, wherein men of this world lie and sleep. 1. Because true and praiseworthy security is grounded upon true faith, and not upon vain imagination. 2. Because it is bred in us by the Word and Promises, and by the preaching and knowledge of the word of God: It doth not proceed from traditions or men's dreams, and customs in sin, as that doth. 3. Because this security relies always upon God's protection, as it is in the Text, Thou only makest me, &c. it doth not rely on outward means, or on our own strength and wisdom. 4. Because this security is fed, cherished, and advanced by diligent use of calling upon God's name, and of all other means that God hath prescribed and appointed us

Reas 1. Because God's protection secureth believers from all evil, at least from the sting of it, by reason whereof it is only truly evil; for God hath all things, both evil and good in his own power.

Reas 2. Because God's presence brings all other good things with it, for God is so good in himself, that in himself virtually and eminently he contains all things, that can be called good.

Reas 3. Because God's goodness towards believers is unchangeable, so that there can be no danger of the changing of this happiness into misery.

Use, The use of this Doctrine, is for consolation to the faithful, to wit, that from this ground they 〈◇〉 and ought to depend upon God; and lay aside all those anxieties, whereby they may be discouraged from adhering to God with joy and gladness.

Rom. 7. verse. 7.

What shall we say then? Is the Law sin? God forbid. Yea, I had not known sin but by the Law. For I had not, 〈◇〉 that concupiscence or lust was a sin, unless the Law had said, Thou shalt not covet.

The Apostle, that he might stir up the faithful to a new obedience, had proposed to them the difference of their condition that are under the Law, and of them that are under Grace; to wit, that such as are under the law of the flesh and sin, bring forth fruits unto death; but such as are under the grace of the Spirit, bring forth fruits in a new obedience unto life eternal. But because of this opposition between the Law and Grace, some might gather, that there was then a very great agreement between the Law and sin; therefore in this seventh verse, this objection is preoccupied by the Apostle. 1. Then the Objection is proposed; What shall we say? Is the Law sin? 2. It is rejected with a certain kind of detestation; God forbid. 3. The case is plainly set down and resolved in these words; I had not known sin, &c. Where the singular effect and use of the Law is declared; to wit, that by forbidding and reproof, is begotten in man a sense and acknowledgement of sin, as of that which is contrary to its self; and therefore it cannot be the cause of sin.

The Explication. By the Law is understood in common▪ a way and rule of walking. Now this way and rule is imposed upon reasonable creatures by divine authority, and the greatest obligations that can be. And this is the Law, to wit, of God, which the Apostle here understands; especially the moral Law. By sin here is not only understood the transgression of God's will, but also all those things that follow upon such a transgression, which in this Chapter is defined by the name of Death, and is called sometimes misery: Sin is either known confusedly and speculatively only, or more exactly and practically. Now the accurate and practical knowledge of sin is here understood, whereby it is efficaciously concluded in our consciences, that sin is a detestable thing, and by all means to be avoided.

Doct. 1. Men of their own nature are so blinded, that although they be altogether drowned in sin and death, yet of themselves they cannot know it.

This is gathered from these words;

I had not known sin.

Reas. 1. Because the very mind and conscience of man, which is his eye and light, is corrupted after a twofold manner. 1. Privitively, In that it is deprived of that light, whereby it might rightly judge of itself, and of such things as belong unto its spiritual life. a. Positively, In as much as it is possessed with a certain perverse disposition, whence it often calls evil good, and good evil: For as the eye being put quite out feeleth nothing, and as the eye infected with humors, and depraved by the indispositions of the organe, sees all things otherwise than they are presented; so is it with the eye of the soul.

Reas. 2. Because the whole man is possessed with a certain spiritual distemper, and as it were with a drunkenness, and lethargick stupidity, whereby he is sensible of nothing rightly and spiritually.

Reas 3 Because we are so borne in sin, that in a manner it becomes natural to us, nor ever have had we experience of any other condition. As those that are borne with deformed and crooked limbs, and never saw aright and well proportioned disposition of all the members, do not know that their own limbs are deformed and ill proportioned, but esteem their distortion and disproportion to be the right proportion itself; even so is it in this case of sin, and corruption of nature.

Use 1. Of Admonition, that for this cause we might more and more humble ourselves before God, seeing that we are so miserable, that of ourselves we can never know our own misery.

Use 2. Is of Direction, to deny all our natural wisdom; that so we may fly to God, and seek wisdom from him, that we may know ourselves and him aright.

Doctr. 2. The only way to know sin aright, and the cause of our mysery is by the law of God.

It is gathered from these words,

For unless the law had said, &c.

Reas. 1. Because the law of God doth in some way enlighthten the eyes of our mind, Psal. 19.

Reas. 2. Because the law of God is the rule of our life, and is therefore the touchstone, not only of the straightness, but also of all the obliquity and crookedness of it.

Reas. 3. Because the law of God is set before us, as a glass, wherein we may clearly see our faces, 〈1 page duplicate〉 〈1 page duplicate〉 and quality. James 1. 23. Now it performs this use of a glass to us, by a comparison made between the perfection which the Law requires of us, and the manifold defects and deformities that are found in our life.

Questions hence arising.

Quest. 1. Whether did not some wise men, at least among the Heathen, know sin without this Law of God?

I answer; 1. That they were not altogether without this law of God, because in part they had it written and engraven in their hearts. But yet, 2. They knew not many sins, which by the Law might easily have been known. 3. They knew not sin under the first and most proper reason of it; to wit, as it was an offense against God; but only as it was repugnant to reason in man himself. 4. They knew not those spiritual miseries which accompany sin. 5. They did not know sin practically and efficaciously, so as to be by that knowledge driven to a spiritual humbling of themselves before God.

Quest. 2. In what manner doth this Law of God show us our sin?

I answer; 1. It showeth us our duty, or the will of God, that we should do. 2. It shows us our fault in transgressing of this will. 3. It shows us our guilt, whereby for this guiltiness we are bound over unto punishment. 4. It shows also the punishment itself: for the threatenings of the Law, wherein the punishments are contained and denounced, are parts of the Law, and belong unto its sanctification or ratification.

Use 1. Of Direction; that in passing judgment upon our lives, we follow not either our own fancies, nor the tenets and opinions of the vulgar, but the law of God alone.

Use 2. Of Admonition, that we often make trial of our life according to that law; and that as well for time past, for our greater humiliation; as for the time to come, for our caution and better direction in every part of our conversation.

The Third Lord's Day,

Rom. 5. verse. 12.

Wherefore as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin: and so death passed upon all men, in whom all have sinned.

The Apostles purpose in this place is to illustrate that Doctrine, which he had before taught concerning justification by Jesus Christ; for which end he makes a comparison of the likeness between this grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the sin of Adam, our first Father after the flesh. And the comparison runs upon the efficacy and effects of each of them: The Proposition of the Comparison is in •... 12. and the Reddition to that is after explicated by way of Parenthesis. In the Proposition, Adam is set forth, as the cause of a twofold effect; to wit, of the bringing in of sin, and of the bringing in of Death. And the reason of the Connection of these effects with that cause is given in the last words of this verse, to wit, from the conjunction that all had with Adam in that first sin; in these words, In whom all men, &c.

Doct. 1. Sin entered into the world, not by God's creation, but by man's defection.

This is manifest in the Text, by man, not by God, &c.

Reas. 1. Because God made man upright and after his own image; that is, not only free from all sin (which may in some sort also be said of all other Creatures) but also adorned him with all those endowments and faculties, whereby God's nature might, as it were in a portrait be expressed and represented; and by help whereof in keeping of the law, he might have attained unto a certain sort of divine blessedness or felicity. For as there is no fault in a portrait, so it be well drawn or made by a perfect workman, unless the fault be in the Original, from whence the portrait is taken: so also no fault could be in man created according to God's Image, and that by God himself, unless some fault be attributed to God himself, whose Image man is.

Reas. 2. Is, because God did not only prescribe a law unto man in the Creation, but also engraved it upon his heart; by which means it was, that man had in himself a most certain Testimony of his uprightness, in which and to which, he was created, and withal a most sufficient and ready means of living well and unblameably to God: For the law of God perfectly & purely written in the heart of man, is as it were a solemn Testimony registered in a Table or Book, that man was made fit and able to keep that Law. It is as it were the voice of God sent down from Heaven, whereby man was called and stirred up to observe that way of living, which is taught thereby.

Reas. 3. Because God added thereunto a pledge and Sacrament in the Tree of Life, whereby he would have that Covenant of the Law, written in the heart, more clearly confirmed also outwardly; to wit, that he would by the observation of his Law, first perpetuate man's life in this world unto the solemn justification of him, at his appointed time; and then advance him to a further and heavenly Felicity. And on the other side, he threatens Death unto him, in case he should depart from that Will and Law of God: all which had been done to no purpose, if man had been at first made by God himself, in any measure or manner sinful and perverse.

Reas. 4. So far was God from being the cause of sin in the first creation of man, that by no means it can be conceived, how God at any time can be the cause of any sin; because, seeing sin is a defect, it can have no other cause, but a deficient one; and God, seeing he is perfection itself, can no ways, nor ever be deficient.

Use Of Direction; that in all our speeches and thoughts we may keep God's glory untouched and unspotted, and confess that all the good we have comes always from him; but that all the evil that either we do, or suffer, ariseth not from him, but from ourselves.

Doct. 2. Through Adams first disobedience sin passed upon all his Posterity.

Nor did this happen only by way of imitation▪ as the Pelagians teach; but also by way of propagation or natural descent. This is proved by this Argument. If this had only come to pass by imitation, then the Apostle might as properly have said, that Adam with all his Posterity sinned in the Angels, who first fell from God; as to have said, that all men sinned in Adam; because they as much follow the example of the Angels, as of Adam. For it is expressly said, verse. 14. That death (and so also sin) reigned over them, that sinned not after the similitude of Adam: that is, by the imitation of Adam; therefore verse. 19. men are said to be made sinners by Adams disobedience itself.

The manner of this propagation is taken up and understood, 1. To stand in imputation, because that first transgression was held as the transgression of the whole nature of mankind: For as in the receiving of the benefits and endowments that belonged to all mankind, Adam bore the place and person of all men; so also it was but right and reason, that he should maintain their place, either in their conservation by obedience, or loss by disobedience, until they were capable of standing to, or falling from their primitive condition in their own persons. Herein he was as it were the Surety of all mankind, so that what he did in this business, was to be held valid by all, as done in their names. 2. The second degree of this Propagation stands in the derivation, or traduction of that corruption, which by our first transgression seized upon the person of Adam himself. This corruption is usually called the languishing of nature, the seed or tinder of sin, the law of our members, the law of the flesh, lust and sin that dwells in us; but most usually original sin, because it cleaves unto us even from our first original, and is some way natural unto us, to wit, as in our nature corrupted; also it is the original of all other sins: for all actual sins flow from this as from their fountain.

This corruption first and principally consists in the privation of original righteousness, the absence whereof, so far as it is penal, is inflicted by God▪ but as it is a privation, having the nature of a fault, to wit, the loss of that rectitude, or right constitution, which we should have kept and preserved entire, it depends upon that relation, that all men have to Adam, and to his first sin.

Now that such corruption naturally is found in all men, is not only proved from Scriptures, but seems also to be confirmed by experience itself.

Reas. 1. For in all men there appears a manifest perversion of our wills, and inward appetite; as much as spiritual and truly good things are of no good relish to all animal and natural men: but the contrary evils, which of their own nature have no good relish, seem to them most sweet: Now as the perversion of the sensitive appetite doth denote bodily sickness; so the perversion of the inmost & most spiritual appetite, doth point forth unto us sickness that is inward and in the spirit. The same also may be observed of the perversion of the judgment and understanding, from whence come so many and shameful errors, whereby good is esteemed evil, and evil good.

Reas. 2. It is manifest that there is in all men a certain rebellion of the inferior and animal faculties and appetites against the superior and most spiritual faculties of the soul; which shows the fickness of the upper part, as not having strength enough to govern the lower; and again a disorder and confusion of the inferior faculties, whereby they will not be subject to their Superior. For as as every infirmity, debility and perturbation in the body, so also in the soul, hath its cause of sickness, disease, or certain corruption from the depravation of other parts.

Reas. 3. There may be observed in all, a certain natural crouching of ourselves to things that are below us; and a certain aversion and turning away from those, that are above us, and for which we were made; so that there are few amongst men, that live not more like beasts, stooping naturally to their belly-food, and bowing towards the ground, than according to the nature of man whose body was erected to look up to heaven and seek after God. Now as a crouching in the constitution and fashioning of the body, is a sign of a bodily sickness; so also this soul crouching of the spirit doth manifestly declare some foul sickness of the spirit.

Reas. 4. There appears manifestly in all men, a certain insensibleness from nature itself, in discerning of things truly good, and truly evil; howbeit there is a far greater sweetness in true spiritual good things, than in corporal; and a far greater bitterness and sowness in spiritual, than in carnal evils: Now this insensibleness and spiritual blockishness is a manifest defect, and vice cleaving to us from our very original, even as the want of any outward sense is a great defect and fault of the body.

Reas. 5. Experience teacheth with how great difficulty and slowness men are stirred up to things that are truly good; therefore as it is the definition of a good habit, that makes a man ready and quick unto good works; so must it be an evil and corrupt habit, whereby the contrary comes to pass; because slowly and with difficulty men set themselves to any good endeavors.

Reas. 6. It is well enough known to all, that man hath not the power to do so much good, as he knows should be done, and as he desires to do: Wherefore when one hath not the power to move the members of his body, it is a manifest disease that hinders its motion; so where one hath not the power to move himself spiritually, it is a manifest spiritual disease; as when there is difficulty of corporal motion, and one moves his body with great pains, it discovers a great weakness of his body; even as this other doth a weakness of the spirit.

Use 1. For Humiliation, by reason of this misery.

2. Of Exhortation, that we rest not, till we perceive that by the grace of God we are freed from this misery.

3. For Direction, that in our Prayers before God; and in all parts of our care for amendment of our life, we may chiefly go about this, that not only in our outward words and works, as being but the rivulets and branches of our sin, we be reformed; but that in the fountain and root of this sin dwelling in us, we may be cleansed and renewed.

The Fourth Lord's Day.

Ephes. 5. 6.

Let no man deceive you with vain words; for because of these things the wrath of God comes upon the children of disobedience.

IN these words is contained an argument, whereby the Apostle labors to persuade all the faithful, that they may keep themselves from those sins, whereof he had made mention a little before. The Argument is drawn from an adjunct, that follows upon sin, to wit, the wrath of God, of which sins are not only the antecedents, but also meritory causes, certainly procuring it, as is intimated in these words; For these things: The connection of this effect with its cause, is limited and confirmed.

1. It is limited by a description of the subject, wherein God's wrath doth always pursue sin, in these words; upon the children of disobedience.

2. It is confirmed by rejecting of all vain shifts, in these words; Let no man deceive you.

The Explication, by the wrath of God. 1. Is understood God's vindicative justice. 2. His will to inflict punishment according to that justice. 3. The punishment itself, that is so inflicted.

And in this place most properly the punishment is understood, which in other places is often called death, distress, severities, hot anger, and the like. This wrath of God, is said to come against, or upon men, because as it were coming down from Heaven, it suddenly falls upon and overwhelms, and holds as entangled in a net the sinners; so that by no means they can escape it. In the same sense, that not unlike phrase is used, Rom. 1. 18. by the expression of the children of contumacie or stubbornness, upon whom this wrath comes, those sinners are understood, which can by no means be persuaded to leave their sins and seek God by true faith and repentance; where this is to be marked, that 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 may be turned both children of incredulity, and children of disobedience; but it agrees better to this place, to be turned children of disobedience and of rebellion; because we read not this phrase, the children of saith, but of obedience, 1 Pet. 1. 14.

Doct. 1. Such men's condition is most desperate, because they are not only sinners, but also stubborn in their sins.

Its gathered out of these words; Upon the children of disobedience or stubbornness: So they are named here, as men, whose condition is much to be abhorred, and whose example and company is most to be shunned, as appears from verse. 7. be not therefore partakers, &c.

Reas. 1. Because such men serve a most miserable servitude to a very base Master, that is, to sin: for sin exercises a spiritual Kingly power and dominion over them, because they do all that the lusts of sin commands them; and can by no means be persuaded to shake off that slavish yoke; and so much the less, as they perceive that slavery, by so much are they the more fully under its command, because by this means it comes to pass, that their very will it self, and the spirit of their mind is possessed by this slavery and oppressed: For as a brute or a man that comes near to a brute, serving some cruel Master, takes no thought for that his condition, because of his stupidity; neither cares nor wishes for a better; is a more full and perfect slave, than some free-born and free-minded man, who is by force constrained to serve one, but yet under such servitude and force, keeps a free mind▪ even so it fares in this matter.

Reas. 2. Because such men are furthest off from repentance, and so from the kingdom of God, and from salvation: For repentance doth most consist in the turning of the heart from sin to God, by persuasion of the Word and holy Spirit: And to this temper the obstinacy and unrepentableness of such men, is flat opposite; who are not only not persuaded to turn to God, but are persuaded to the contrary; that such persuasion of converting is not to be embraced or regarded; for such are properly called the children of rebellion or disobedience. As therefore those diseases are most mortal, which admit of no cure, and are but the more exasperated, the more they are dealt with; even so also is it with such kind of men.

Reas. 3. Because these men do most grievously increase their guilt in this, that they withstand the means, that God hath sanctified for procuring their salvation: For while they will not suffer themselves to be persuaded to that conversion unto Faith and Repentance, they directly fight against God, and not only so, but in this very thing, that he would, and is some way striving, as it were, to save them.

Use Of Adm•...nition; That most of all we be careful of this stubbornness or rebellion, which is not only to be understood in common of that con•...umacy, whereby men refuse altogether to be converted; but also specially, and in every part of obedience: For if we perceive that God calls us to this or that special duty, tis then our part mainly to take care, that even in that, we present our hearts to God flexible and perswasible whereunto we are invited.

Doct. 2. Upon the children of disobedience, certainly and unavoidably the horrible wrath of God comes. This is clear in the Text without any collection made from it.

That this wrath is horrible, and altogether intolerable, the Scripture every were testifies, as Heb. 10. 27. Apoc. 6. 16, 17. and elsewhere. And the thing itself doth sufficiently show it, if we consider God's anger as to its intensness, extensness and duration; as to its intenseness, it is called in Scripture a consuming fire, Heb. 12. 29. Now this fire of the wrath of God consumes not lightly, or light things only as in the superficies, but as it is said, Deutro. 32. 22. God's wrath set on fire will burn down to the grave, &c. Nah•...m 1. 6. Where there is a most likely & pithy description. By all which descriptions is signified, that the wrath of God doth thoroughly pierce not only into the body, but into the soul and inward part of the spirit, for which reason in many places of Scripture, it is compared unto sharp arrows piercing into the heart its self, and consuming the spirit and life. As to the extension; this wrath of God contains in it all sort of evils, whether corporal or spiritual; whether in this life, or at the end of it, and in death, or at death. •...ither belong those catalogues or inventories of curses, that are found Deutr. 28. and Levite. 26. 3. As to the duration, it remaineth upon impe•...ient sinners, John▪ 3. 36. not for some short space, but unto all eternity, and without end: For as that obligation, whereby we are bound to render God all obedienees without end; so consequently the transgression whereby sinners break that obligation, is in a manner infinite & without end: so also the punishment, which taketh away its measure from the nature of the transgression, will be without end & infinite, and that as well in the privation of an infinite good, as in the endless duration of this privation or loss. Neither ought it to seem strange, that for a sin, which is committed in a short time, an endless punishment should be inflicted; because equity its •...elf requires this, that everyone should be deprived of that good, of which by his own fault he hath turned from. But every •...inner hath turned himself away from an endless good, by a fault he can never come out of by himself, and make an end of; and therefore it is but reason, that he be endlessly deprived of that good. And moreover, because he hath disturbed that order that God set & appointed; it is but ju•...tice if he never be freed from the punishment of this fault, until he have repaired God his honor; which an unrepenting sinner can never do unto eternity.

It ought not therefore to move any, that sin, which is but momentary, should be punished eternally.

Reas. 1. The committing of it, is as it were a spiritual wounding; and yet a wounding, in what •...ort time soever done, doth often leave behind it a wound of long duration, and often endless and eternal death.

Reas. 2. The committing of sin, is as it were a spiritual fall, or sliding; and yet the fall in short time passed, may be such, that thereby for a very long time, or without end, the party may remain in the depth or pit, whereinto he fell.

Reas. 3. The committing of sin, is as it were a •...ying with bands or thongs; whose nature is, that it may quickly be done, and yet forever keep the party bound, as long as the bands themselves remain unloosed, or unbroken.

Reas. 4. Tis as it were a bargain, in which the sinner for the enjoyment or use of some short pleasure, out of a madness sells himself into slavery.

Now from a bargain of buying and selling, though passed in a short time, the right is conveyed to the buyer forever; and the alienation is eternal or endless in its own way.

Reason 1. It is as it were the putting out of a lamp; for a sinner once drowning himself in the •...ilth of sin, puts out as it were the whole light of his mind; and a lamp once put out, though it be done in a moment, yet by virtue of that putting out, remains of its self endlessly extinct and put out.

Use 1. Of Condemnation, against such as remain in their carnal security and please themselves in this condition, over which perpetually hangs the so horrible wrath and anger of God.

Use 2. Is of Admonition, that with all care above all things else we go about this, to show this wrath of God, Matt. 3. 7. where also the way to shun it, is shown to be by repentance, verse 8. And yet this is not so to be taken, as if this shunning lay in our repentance, as it is our action, and as if that had some vircue of freeing from the wrath of God; for Christ alone is our enfranchizer from the wrath to come, 1 Thess. 1. 10. We therefore truly flee from the wrath of God, when we fly to this mercy in Christ Jesus by true faith in him, and repentance unfeigned.

Doct. 3. All such speeches as promise impunity of sin, and indempnity from the wrath of God, are but vain and seducing.

This is also clear in the Text. Now that they are vain, hence it appeareth, because they are against his decree, and his will clearly revealed; and therefore can have no solid truth in them. And that they are seducing, is apparent enough also from the first author of such speeches. For the devil, when he would seduce our first Parents, promised them this impunity in these words; Ye shall not die.

The Fifth Lord's-day.

Rom. 8. 3.

For what the Law could not do, in that it was weak through the flesh, God sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin, condemned sin in the flesh.

The Apostle in this place expounds, why the faithful may be freed from sin and death by Christ: The reason is given as it were from the cause moving God to this giving of Christ. And this moving cause was the neediness of our want, which appears in the defect of power in any other means to produce such an effect, as if the Apostle had said; because it was needful for us, to be delivered from sin and death; and yet this could be effected by no other means, therefore God performed it by Christ. The strength and necessity of this consequence depends upon the will of God, which tacitly supposeth, that God would not have mankind fall, utterly to perish, but to be restored again. The whole syllogism or reason is this. If by no other means fallen men could be restored, but by Christ, then that way was to be taken, because God would that some way it should be done: but the first is true; and therefore also the latter. The assumption is proved, to wit, that man could be restored by no other means; by the most likely instance of the law, which once had been of great power, and of force sufficient to bring man to happiness: For except Christ and the Gospel, never anything was given of God to man, that was more perfect and divine than the Law. That therefore which the Apostle says here of the law, hath the force of such an argument as this: If by virtue of the Law man could not be restored, than by no other means could he be but by Christ; but the first is true, and therefore the latter also. The Apostle both proves and expounds the Assumption at once, from the reason or cause of this defect or weakness of the law, to restore man; that it is not properly inherent in the law itself, but in our flesh or corruption, whereby it is, that we cannot fulfill the law, that so it might save us; much less by the Law rise up again from Death to life.

Doct. 1. It is the will of God, that miserable men may be delivered from their misery, and restored to life eternal.

This is here presupposed by the Apostle, as granted, and is used by him as the ground of his reasoning.

Reas. 1. Is taken partly from God's mercy, partly from his wisdom, partly from his power, and partly from the stability of his decrees: from his mercy God would relieve miserable men, therein to show the glory of his grace and free mercy, as it is called Ephes. 1. 6. the riches of his mercy, his great love, and the supereminent riches or treasures of his grace and bounty, Ephes. 4. 7. for unless God had helped miserable men, that were all drowned in sin and death, he had not accomplished above the half of his goodness and bounty towards mankind. For that bounty that was manifested in the creating of us, was neither fully completed in its last perfection and end, because no man by it arrived to eternal happiness; neither was it in its self the greatest, the highest, the fullest goodness of God; because an higher, fuller, and more surpassing sort of goodness appeared in the preservation of the elect Angels; and that also is far greater, which is now revealed in the Gospel, and brings perfect salvation to mankind that is fallen. Now this was most sitting, that the goodness and mercy of God should as well be perfected towards men, as his justice. From his wisdom God knew the best way, whereby he could conveniently help miserable man, and therefore it was meet that his wisdom should be made manifest in its effect. And this is it, which the Apostle everywhere teacheth, that in this mystery of the Gospel there was a wisdom of God, which was kept up, and hidden from all the Heathen; which therefore by way of excellency, he calls that wisdom of God, into which the Angels themselves with desire and wonder are said to look, 1 Pet. 1. 12. For such was our misery, that not only we could not rise out of it ourselves by our own power; but could not so much as think upon, or devise a way or means, whereby we might be delivered: But this was the proper work of the wisdom of God himself conjoined with his own mercy. From his power also, he had the ability of helping and bringing to perfection therein, what he would. For so our redemption in Scripture is not only usually adscribed to God's grace and mercy, but also to his power. For the highest power and sovereignty was required to dissolve the works of the Devil, and the bonds of death and the grave, for raising of dead men to life again, for guiding and protecting them so, as they might be brought to life eternal, maugre all opposition of their enemy; and most of all for laying that groundstone of the whole, and uniting the second person of the Deity, his own Son, and the nature of man, into one Person. From the immutability also of his decree, it was in some sort necessary for God to procure their deliverance from death, whom from eternity he had chosen, and appointed unto life. Hence a twofold necessity of the restauration and liberation of mankind is rightly by some determined; on our part, the necessity of want; on God's part, the necessity of his immutability.

Use, Of Exhortation, that with all admiration we behold and look into this good will of God, and with all thankfulness as well in our thoughts, as in our speeches, all our life time we publish and praise it.

Doct. 2. The Law cannot deliver miserable men from their misery.

It is clear enough in the Text; and is grounded moreover on the following reasons;

Reas 1. Because the Law promiseth no good to miserable sinners, but only to just persons, and such as keep it.

Reason 2. Because in itself, it hath no force of taking away sin, but only of punishing it.

Reas 3. Because by no sinner can it be fulfilled, and that because of the weakness of the flesh, or the impotency of carnal and fallen mankind, as it is in the Text.

Reas. 4. Because though it might be fulfilled for time to come, yet by-past sins would take away all hope of receiving the reward of Life from the Law. Hence is it that the Law is called a killing l...tter, and the minister of death and of condemnation.

Use, Of Re...utation, against such as put their trust in their own works, and look for salvation from their good intentions and endeavors: which is the error of Papists, Remonstrants or Arminians, and Anabaptists, who cry up always an honest life, and good works.

Doct. 3. No sinner can deliver himself from this misery.

This is thus gathered, because none go above the Law. For if the Law cannot for the weakness of our flesh, then neither can we ourselves, for the same weakness of our flesh.

Reason 1. No debt can duly be blotted out by the debtor; till paid.

Reas. 2. Because, though any one never augmented his first debt, by sinning, yet should he in all this do no more, but pay what he owes, in so doing; and so could not by that means make satisfaction for his former transgression.

Reas. 3. Because, if man could not preserve himself, nor did not do it, in that integrity wherein he was created, it cannot reasonably be thought that now he can recover it again.

Reas. 4. If he could recover his first integrity, he would be as subject and easy to lose it again, as our first Father was at first.

Use, Of Direction, that we put no confidence in ourselves, nor in our own strength, but denying ourselves, we depend altogether on God's grace and mercy in Jesus Christ.

Doct. 4. No mere creature in heaven, or in earth, can deliver miserable men from sin and death.

It followeth from the Text, because no such creature is above the Law.

Reason 1. Because no external thing, that is a mere creature, hath in itself that worth, that it can be a compensation for sin to God's justice and truth, and so a price of redemption from death, Mat. 16. 26. Yea, not all the world. For that is it that is... hinted, 1 Pet. 1. 18. where all corruptible things, amongst the best whereof are gold and silver and the like, are determined to be below the redeeming of man.

Reas. 2. Because whatsoever any mere creature, whether man or Angel, can do, owes all that for its self, and on its own behalf.

Reas. 3. Because if we were redeemed by a mere creature, for this very cause we should become the servants of that mere creature, and that of justice and gratitude; as we are the servants of Christ our Redeemer, because our Redeemer, as is already taught. But this would be an unworthy thing, and would infer a kind of contradiction to itself: For seeing man before his fall was not the servant of any creature, but of God alone; if by redemption he should become the servant of any creature, he should not be redeemed and restored into that perfect liberty, from which he fell; and so though redeemed (as we suppose) yet he should not be properly redeemed, that is, by redemption made free.

Reas. 4. The evils that are to be removed from us, are greater than can be taken away by any mere creature; as the wrath of God infinite and eternal, the guilt of sin confirmed by the force of an eternal law; the command that sin and death hath over us. Of these that is true which we have, Luke 10. 21, 22.

Reas. 5. The good things to be imparted, and before that to be purchased, are of greater worth, than that they can be communicated to us from any mere creature; as namely a righteousness going beyond the righteousness of the Law; and the resurrection as well corporal as spiritual; the communication of the divine nature, life eternal, and a happiness that surmounts that of Adam in his innocence; that is, a Kingdom that cannot be shaken, Heb. 11. last verse.

Use. Of Instruction, that in the business of our salvation we turn away our eyes from all creatures, and lift them up above in manner aforesaid to the fountain of salvation.

The sixth Lord's day

1 Tim. 3. 16.

And without controversy, great is the mystery of godliness▪ God was manifest in the flesh, justified in the Spirit, seen of Angels, preached unto the Gentiles, believed on in the world, received up into glory.

IN these words is contained an argument, whereby the Apostle endeavors to stir up Timothy to procure diligence and care in the Church of God. It is drawn from the object, if we consider Timothy's Ministry, which now ought to be busied about the greatest mysteries, and so to be exercised with greatest reverence, diligence, and care: Or from an adjunct, if the Church herself be considered, that was to be cared for by Timothy, whereof mention was made in the preceding verse; to wit, because a matter of all others, the greatest was concredited to this Church, to wit, the mystery of godliness; and so Timothy's greatest diligence and care ought to be bestowed upon the Church. In these words then properly is expounded the nature of the Gospel, 1. From its Genius, or general notion, that it is a Mystery; 2. From its end, that it is a mystery of godliness. 3. From the degree of its worth and excellency; that it is a great, or noble mystery. 4. From the most certain and undoubted truth of all these, in complexion and communication; without controversy. And all these are demonstrated by induction of the parts or members, that make up this mystery, as the whole. For seeing in every part there is something altogether singular and wonderful, it follows necessarily that the whole mystery is altogether admirable, and to be stood amazed at. These parts are they which are contained in these words; God manifested in the flesh, &c.

Doct. 1. Our Lord Jesus Christ is true God and true man.

This is clear from the Text, God manifested in the flesh; and that he is true God, appears from the following reasons.

Reas. 1. From plain testimonies of this sort, whereby the name of God is simply and absolutely given unto Him in the same manner altogether as unto the Father; as in this place, and so Isa. 9. 6. John. 1. 1. R...m. 9. 5. 1 John. 5. 20.

Reas. 2. From the divine properties that are given unto him, as Eternity, John 1. 1. 7 5. Omnipotency, John. 3. 21. Phil. 4 14 and the like.

Reas 3. From the divine works whereof he is made Author; as of Creatio... Col. 1. 16. the Sustaining of all things, Heb. 〈◇〉 . 2. and of all sorts of miracles.

Reas. 4. From the divine authority that everywhere is given to him in Scriptures, as he gives authority to the W...rd and Sacraments, and other divine Ordinances.

Reas 5. From the divine Worship, Honor, and adoration that is due unto him, He... 1. 8. and in other places.

Reas 6. From that efficacy which by his Ministers, through the power of the Holy Ghost, he puts forth in the Preaching of this his Doctrine, as it is evident in our Text in these words, justified in the spirit, preached unto the Gentiles, and believed on in the world.

That he is true man, from hence is apparent enough, that he was made like unto us in all things except in sin, Heb. 4. 15. Why our Mediator ought to be true God.

Reason 1. Is that he might be able to sustain the weight of God's wrath, and perform the other divine duties, that belong to the perfecting of our Redemption and Salvation.

Reas. 2. That the works of his Mediation, which on our behalf he was to perform, might have divine virtue and worth from his person.

Why he should be also man;

Reas. 1. Is that he might be fit to suffer and do all those things which were necessary for the Redemption of men, and were below the divine nature alone to do or suffer.

Reas. 2 Because without effusion of blood, or death, whereof the divine nature is not capable, there could be no remission nor redemption, Heb. 9. 22.

Reas. 3. That the whole mystery as well of our Redemption, as of the deity itself might be some way made familiar to us, so as to be seen with our eyes, heard with our ears, and handled with our hands, 1 John 1. 1, 2.

Use 1. Of Instruction, That we may always keep a right and pure belief about the divine and human nature of Christ, both in our hearts, and in our mouths or confessions.

Use 2. Of Comfort to all such as are by true faith engrafted into Christ; because in him they are advanced into a state more than human, and are made partakers of the divine nature, 2 Pet. 1. 4.

Use 3. Of Exhortation, That we may more and more exercise ourselves in the religious contemplation, and study of this mystery; so will that love of God in Christ, which shines forth in this dispensation of God, confirm our hearts, that it will powerfully stir us up unto all care of thankfulness for glorifying the name of God and Christ.

Doct. 2. The nature of God and the nature of man were •...onjoynd in Christ into one person.

This is gathered from these words, was made manifest in the flesh, for thereby is signified the conjunction of the divine with the human nature, so that God, because not conspicuous in his divine nature, was made manifest in his human. This communication in respect of the divine nature, is rightly called an Assumption, Incarnation, Manifestation in the flesh, as in this place.

But in respect of both natures together, it is called an union personal, because these two natures are together united in the same person. In respect of the human nature, it cannot be called an Assumption (actively understood, that is an assuming, but passively only, that is a being assumed) nor a Deification, because the divine person existed from eternity, and took unto himself and adjoined the human nature (not the person) in time, because the human nature assumed, did never exist apart, and by itself, and therefore never had in itself the formal reason of a person; and therefore also it cannot be said to have assumed the nature, or person divine, but only to have been assumed by it; Seeing actions are of suppositions or persons, and not of the nature: But the divine person (not the nature properly) is said to have assumed the human nature, not the person. Therefore the human nature cannot so properly and rightly be said to be deified, as either the divine nature or person is said to be incarnate, or made man; for that is equivalent to made flesh, which the Scripture often useth. We read then in this place, and its like that God was made manifest, or visible in the flesh, that is, in the nature of man (for flesh there) by a Synecdoche signifies the whole nature of man, as well the soul as the body, and to the like sense we read that the Word was made flesh, John 1. 14. But we nowhere read that flesh was made God, or that the flesh or human nature was made invisible in God; although these things may be said, but not so properly, nor so freely from danger and abuse. But here we must not think, that for the union of the divine nature with the human, that therefore there was any real change properly produced or made in the divine nature, but relative and of reason, or notional only; all the real mutation being in the human nature only. For whatsoever is mutable is imperfect, but the divine nature is no ways imperfect. Therefore though the divine nature in Christ be under another relation or habitude, than before the incarnation; yet that is for no real change in itself, but in the human nature assumed: As the Sun is called illuminating from his action that he hath on the air, which was not before (let us suppose this) and yet the Sun is not thereby changed in itself, but the air only is changed. In this conjunction, when the flesh or human nature is said to have been assumed, is so to be understood, that not only the essence of human nature is assumed, and all that necessarily follow the essence, but that also were assumed all the weaknesses, qualities, and common or universal defects (which follow not from nature, but from sin) that are in themselves sinless, and as they are sinless only and penal; and these only are excepted that have in them the nature of sin, or tend of themselves to sin.

Reas. 1. Because the mediatory actions of Christ ought to be both human and divine, and all his actions are of the person, as of the principle which acteth; though they be of this or of that nature, as of the principle whereby, or by virtue of which they are extracted from the person Therefore the divine and human nature ought jointly to subsist in one and the same person.

Reas. 2. This union of the divine and human nature ought to have been most intimate, and of all unions the highest, because the perfection of the person assuming, from which the union flowed, was absolutely the greatest, but the inwardest union with him that could be, was personal; Therefore also that union of men with God, that flows from, and depends upon this union, is of very great perfection, though not personal. Therefore next unto the unity of the three persons in one divine nature, there is no other union of more things, more in ward and perfect, than is this of two natures in one person, in Christ.

Reas. 3. The essential worth of the mediatory obedience and passion of Christ, which properly agreed to him, according to the human nature, ought to have been also in some kind divine; but that divinity of worth is derived from the person, or this union; as the esteem of all the actions and passions depends upon the person; and therefore the human nature ought to have subsisted, and been sustained in the nature or person divine.

Use 1. Of Instruction, for directing and establishing our Faith, about the person of Christ, that we may neither here imagine confusion of the natures, nor multiplication of the Persons in any sort; but the union only of two natures into one and a single person, to wit, the second person of the Trinity, which is the primary principle of Christian Faith.

Use 2. Of Direction, that in seeking union and communion with God, wherein our whole happiness doth consist, we wholly adhere to Christ above; because there alone we have the certain and manifest foundation of this union between God and men, so that in this very respect Christ may no less truly be called the way, than the truth, and the life; because as he hath the truest and highest union of man with God; so is he the way because of this union, whereby we may come to the beatifical union, which is our eternal life.

Doct. 3. This of the divine and human nature in Christ, is a mystery most divine.

It is called a mystery, 1. As it contains in itself that divine wisdom of highest and rarest price, or that treasure of wisdom, 1 Cor. 2. 6, 7. 2 Cor. 4. v. 7. 2. Because this wisdom is a thing hidden and remote, not only from human sense, but also from our understanding and comprehension. 1. Cor. 2. 7. 8, 9, 10. it is called a depth for this cause; so also Eph. 3. 8, 9. And it is called hidden or secret, 1. because it was not possible for the wit of man or Angels to have so much as thought upon, or devised such a means of Redemption and Salvation, much less to have gone through with it. 2. Because it was not revealed to the Church herself for many ages, but under a certain veil, and sparingly. 3. Because by ourselves now in the light of greatest revelation, it is not understood but very imperfectly, and in the least part of it. 1 Cor. 13. 12. in part; a little but in comparison of the whole; as in a glass, and like a riddle, do we know here, for the darkening and lessening of our knowledge by sin, which is signified by these phrases.

The Reason why this wisdom is not fuller comprehended, is not in the darkness of Scripture, as some blasphemously will have it: but partly in the depth of the thing itself, and partly in the blindness of our minds; 2 Cor. 4. 4. unto the depth of the thing itself belongs this, that in Christ's person highest power with lowest weakness; greatest glory with greatest humility, highest justice with highest mercy, eternity with novelty of being, agree together, and abide in one subject.

Use Of Admonition, that we suffer not the nature of our Faith to be troubled in any sort with vain speculation of human reason, whereby this mystery is wont to be opposed: For though it hath nothing in it contrary to reason; yet it contains many things above reason, and the capacity of the mind of man: other ways it would not be a great mystery, as here it is called, but the vulgar and common verity.

Use 2. Of Exhortation, that we may seek from God the spirit of wisdom and of revelation in the acknowledging of him, that the eyes of our minds being enlightened, we may perceive so much of this mystery as is needful for us unto salvation, and glorifying of God's name as it requires, Ephes. 1. verse. 17. 18.

Use 3. Is of special Admonition, to the Ministers of the Word chiefly, that with all reverence and religious faithfulness, they behave themselves in their charge, because they are called to this, to be Stewards of this great mystery, 1 Cor. 4. 1. where this reverence and fidelity are pointed out to them.

Doct. 4. All true godliness depends on the belief of this mystery, so that there is no true and solid or sound godliness without this belief: neither can this belief be true and solid▪ unless it have also true godliness joined with it.

This is gathered from that title; the mystery of godliness: because godliness both riseth up to this Faith, and floweth down from it. This most practical doctrine, is the general use of all the rest that went before.

Reas. 1. Because in this mystery appears God's greatest goodness, grace, mercy and love; which if they be rightly taken up, cannot but stir up our minds unto care and zeal of honoring, loving and adhearing to God, and pleasing him in all things, wherein he hath shown us, that true godliness consists.

Reas. 2. In this mystery is contained both the merits and efficacy or power, by virtue whereof men are regenerated, that they may live acceptably to God and Christ; that is, godlily.

Reas. 3. Because in Christ we have the perfectest pattern of all godliness, and with all the perfectest doctrine, which is called the doctrine of godliness, or according to godliness.

Use The use of Reproof, against such as profess the faith of this great mystery, but in the mean time most foully profane it, and make it to be blasphemed through their impiety.

The seventh Lord's day

Acts 16. verse. 31.

And they said, believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved and thine house.

IN this Text is contained Paul and Silas their answer to the question proposed by the Jailor concerning the way how to be saved; wherein these two things are proposed: 1. An act absolutely necessary for attaining of salvation, to wit, that of Faith, believe, say they: and this act is declared by its proper object, our Lord Jesus Christ. 2. The effect, that is certainly to follow upon this act, is set down, and that is the salvation of him, that believeth.

Doct. 1. All are not saved by Christ, but such only as are united or grafted into Christ by Faith.

It is gathered from this Text; in that one careful how to be saved, is sent to Christ, to believe in him, and so to have union with him by this belief, that he may be saved.

Reas. 1. Because although there be sufficiency enough in Christ, and in abundance, to save all, and any man; yet this sufficiency is not reduced to efficiency or into act, unless a due application be $\langle \diamond \rangle$ ▪ as neither meat nourisheth, nor physic cureth, nor cloth covereth, nor silver maketh rich, unless they be rightly applied to the party to be nourished, cured, clothed and made rich: so it is in this business.

Reas.•.... As the first Adam neither received, nor lost his righteousness, and life, but for such, as were some way, that is, virtually in him, and afterwards actually descended from him, or were in union of the same blood with him: so also the second Adam Christ restores not righteousness and life, but unto such as are in him, to wit, engrafted by Faith, and adhere unto him by the union of one and the same spirit. Hence it is, that effectual vocation, whereby this application of Christ, or this conjunction with him, is brought to pass, doth in order go before, not only our glorification and salvation, but also justification and all sound consolation, that we have concerning salvation.

Use Of Admonition, that we may chiefly care for and go about this, that we may both be and remain in Christ, and live in him; because without this union with him, we cannot come to be saved. The sign or mark, whereby we know, that is ordinarily, or according to the order of means appointed, that this or that man is in Christ, is this, if drawing virtue from Christ, as a branch drawing spiritual •...ap from the stock, he hath care to bring forth fruits to him and in him, John 15. verse $\langle \diamond \rangle$, 4.

Doct. 2. Faith is the tie whereby we are first united to Christ, and engrafted into him.

This Doctrine is couched in the Text, in the word believe: for there are three ties of Union, whereof there is need in our conjunction with God, and Christ; the Spirit, Faith and Love. The Spirit is that tie, whereby Christ layeth hold upon us, and tieth us to himself. Faith, is that tie whereby we lay hold upon Christ, and apply him to ourselves, and is always the effect of the spirit in some measure. Love, is the band of perfection, whereby we wholly give over ourselves to Christ, and consecrate ourselves to his will, and is the effect of both the former: Amongst these, Faith is the first bond by which we lay hold on Christ. For though it follow the operation of the Spirit, as its effect, in that respect, it is called the gift of God, and the gift of the Spirit of God; yet it goes before both Love and Hope that are saving.

Reas. 1. Because the proper nature of Faith is, to be a spiritual hand, whereby we lay hold on, and receive that good, that is needful to us for salvation, John 1. 12. where to believe is meant to receive, that the true office and nature of Faith may be se•... forth.

Reas. 2. Because a Faith receiving Christ, doth also receive life in Christ, and Faith is the principle of our spiritual life, according to that of the Apostle, The just shall live by Faith.

3. Because Christ is not proposed unto us to salvation, but in the promise of the Gospel; and the proper and immediate end and fruit of this proposal, is to make Faith, or to gain belief; and so the first receiving as well of the promise, as of the thing where about the promise is, is by Faith.

Use Of Direction, and that such, as upon another occasion the Apostle hath Eph. 6. 16. to wit, that above all things we be careful to acquire, keep, and increase true Faith.

Doct. 3. The adequate object of Faith, as it justifies, is Jesus Christ, as offered in the Gospel for righteousness and life; or the mercy of God in and through Jesus Christ thus offered.

It is evident in the Text. The explication is, that although with our understanding we ought to assent to all things that are contained in the word of God; and especially to those that are contained in the promises of the Gospel; yet the power of justifying us doth proceed from no other object, but from Christ alone: And so Faith, though it look at other objects also, yet it justifies not, nor absolves from guilt of sin and death, but as it looks at Christ alone, as offered us to that end.

Reason 1. Because Christ alone is our Righteousness and Redemption; but our justification consists in the application of this Righteousness and Redemption; Therefore Faith in that respect justifies, as it looks at Christ and applieth him.

Reas. 2. Because if all other things revealed in Scriptures, and to be believed by us, belonged to our justification, as objects of justifying faith; then not only the belief of the creation would justify us, but also the belief of man's falling into sin, and of being dead therein: And so Faith about sin and death should as well justify us, as Faith in Christ.

Reas. 3. Unless Christ be looked upon by Faith, Faith hath nothing in it, why it should more justify us, than any other virtue, or grace and gift of God, as charity, temperance, and the like.

Use 1. Is of Refutation, against such as attribute justification to Faith, as it is an act and part of our obedience, as a condition required of God. For thus the strength and life of justifying Faith is destroyed, and Christ is robbed of his glory, and the consciences of Christians of their solid comfort and tranquility of mind.

Use 2. Is of Direction, that we may always set the the eye of our faith directly upon Christ, or on the grace and mercy of God in him, that so we may from him draw Righteousness and Salvation.

Doct. 4. Justifying & saving faith consists not properly in any knowledge, but in certain, solid or sound affiance or trust.

Justifying Faith is an act and fruit of the experience of Faith; and not the first affiance and trust, that justifies. Our Doctrine is hence gathered, in that the object of Faith in this place, is no intellectual or logical truth, as such; but some good, as the object of the practical mind & of preelection, viz. the means of salvation, which is a single or incomplex term (as Logicians call it) in these words; on the Lord Jesus Christ; where not anything of or about Christ, but Christ himself is the object. Next, because Faith is said to be busied about this object, as about a prop or stay; so that the heart of a man otherwise destitute of all help, and about to run into despair, casts itself upon Christ, as a stay, that by him it may be sustained and upheld; which is intimated by this phrase, believe in our Lord Jesus Christ. By affiance, we understand not any assent or act of the understanding about logical truth, or affirmation, or negation; nor yet properly the confident expectation of the will, which is assigned to our hope, and confidence therein contained, or from thence arising; but that act of the will or heart, which properly is called e...ection or choice: whereby we rely upon Christ, repose and rest on him, and adhere to him, as a fit and sufficient Mediator, by whom we may be saved. By this affiance we are said everywhere in the Old Testament to be united or joined to God, as Isa. 48. 2. & 50. 10. And by this affiance properly we come unto Christ, John. 6. and are said to receive Christ, John. 1. 12. which things cannot be affirmed of any complex knowledge, or assent of the understanding, whether general or special. It is true, that such a knowledge, on the behalf of such as belong to Christ, is a necessary antecedent, and the cause of this faith, and affiance that justifies; and so in that respect, it hath the title of this faith as well in Scriptures, as in commn discourse: But yet when Faith is considered precisely as it justifies and saves, then it is understood either as an act or as a disposition of the will or heart, which follows the foresaid knowledge, and for the begetting whereof that knowledge doth serve. From this affiance if it be lively and vigorous, and joined with fitting knowledge, there follows a certain persuasion of remission of our sins; and therefore true Faith useth often to be described by this persuasion; especially when the controversy is with Papists, who oppose this persuasion, as a vain presumption. Yet this persuasion is not properly justifying faith, but an act of hope and experience (rather a fruit) in him, who already is justified. It is also such an act, that for some time may be wanting, where yet true justifying faith is, though insirm, as experience in the godly teacheth; and therefore it ought not to be proposed in the essence and definition of justifying Faith, least so the weak consciences of some believers should thence be heavily troubled, as if they had not true faith, when they feel themselves to have no such certain persuasion of the remission of their sins. It will appear then to any rightly weighing all things, that justifying Faith, as such, is properly, the affiance of the hear, not any complex knowledge, or judgment of the understanding.

Reason 1. Because nothing in the whole Gospel is promised to any that hath yet no affiance or trust in Christ; before this affiance therefore, nothing can be known, that hath the virtue to justify, until it be trusted on; and therefore no knowledge going before this faith of affiance, can justify.

Reas. 2. We cannot conceive any knowledge before this affiance, which is not found sometimes in such as are not justified: As for example, such as have a spirit of illumination and light, but not of regeneration; and therefore fall away afterwards from that glory, which inseparably follows justification, sinning against the Holy Ghost.

Reas. 3 Because in every part of Religion, and so in Faith also, these two things are distinguished; to wit, to know and to do. To know what is to be believed, and what all ought to believe; and to give assent to truths that are to be believed, is not yet to do that which believing imports, and is the proper obedience of Faith itself, which is the root of all other obedience, and therefore jointly to be understood under this, as both comes from Faith, Rom. 1. 5. And in very truth such is the formal reason of obedience in true Faith, that under this name and nature it ought to be referred unto the will properly, because it is the part of the will, and not of the understanding, to obey.

Reas. 4 Because by this act of the will, we have an inward union with God in Christ, even as amongst men there is a greater conjunction, by a constant inclination, and affection of the will, than by the judgment of the intellect.

Reas. 5. Because the act of faith is such, that by it we cast ourselves wholly upon Christ, or upon the mercy of God in Christ. But the act of the understanding properly and immediately doth not transfer the whole man, but the act of the will, which alone therefore properly is called the act of the whole man: Nor can it be here answered that Faith is an aggregate thing, consisting partly of knowledge, and partly of affiance; because unto such aggregate things, single and distinct operations cannot be attributed, as are attributed unto Faith. For example, the health of the whole body, hath no distinct operation, but is conceived as a single thing, extends itself alike to soundness of all, and of every part; and as holiness, as it is in this, or that virtue, hath no distinct and single operation. Moreover, no more reason can be given why knowledge & affiance should make up one aggregate thing, than knowledge and hope, or knowledge and love, or than knowledge and justice or temperance. Besides all this, however knowledge be aggregated with true Faith, yet because a great part of this knowledge which goes before affiance, is found also in the Devills themselves, neither yet can any knowledge be shewn that goes before affiance, which is not found in some unregenerate persons; no reason admits, that this knowledge should be an essential part of Faith, and of the spiritual life, because it is found in them that have no part of spiritual life.

Use. Is of Exhortation, against Papists, and others, who know nor acknowledge no other faith, but knowledge, and a certain material assent, which yet may consist with greatest diffidence, and most wretched desperation.

Use 2. Is of Direction, that we may enquire of the knowledge of the truth, which is necessary for us unto Faith, and to Salvation; and that we be wary that we rest not on any bare knowledge; but then think we have true Faith only, when according to the knowledge of the truth, we rely upon Christ with our whole heart for salvation, to be obtained by him alone.

Use 3. Is of Consolation, to those who with all their heart strive to rest upon Christ, and yet cannot for a time, or presently and certainly persuade themselves, That God is reconciled unto th...m, for such have true Faith, though weak. For this certainty of persuasion, is the effect of a more strong and perfect Faith, whereunto also in their own time such believers shall be brought.

A Question is here propounded; By what means is such a Faith begotten, and promoted in our hearts?

Answer. This Faith is properly begotten in us by the Holy Ghost, through the Ministry and Preaching of the Gospel, because Faith is above nature, while we believe these things that surmount all reason, and are lifted up above ourselves by Faith, as the Apostle saith, that Abraham hoped above hope, that is, beyond human, natural, and ordinary hope; so also they that truly believe, believe beyond belief, or above belief. It is begotten in us by the Gospel, because in the promises of the Gospel Christ is offered and exhibited to us; and the efficacy or power of the Holy Ghost accompanieth the preaching of the holy Gospel. Now from these things it followeth, that such have not true Faith, who either believe nothing above what is natural, or in a supernatural way, or else have not their Faith from the Gospel and word of God.

Doct. 5. Such as truly believe in Christ, may and ought to be sure of their salvation.

This is gathered from the connection between the antecedent and consequent, in the Text; believe and thou shalt be saved. For as particular men while they remain in their particular sins may be assured, that for that time they are subject to the curse of God; so may some believers be particularly assured, that they are partakers of eternal blessing and salvation. For as that other assurance of the curse, comes from the Law towards impenitent sinners, or breakers of it; so this other assurance of the blessing, comes to repenting and believing sinners, through the promises of the Gospel. The whole order therefore of this consolation, whereby we may be certain of salvation, is as followeth; in such a Syllogism (wherein both will and understanding have their parts) whereof the proposition stands in the assent of the understanding, and makes up a dogmatical Faith. The assumption is not principally in the compounding understanding, but in the single apprehension and will, so as to make it true and of force to infer the certainty in the conclusion; which the heart doth by this act of affiancing, that being the property of justifying Faith, and thus existing in the heart. The conclusion is also principally & ultimately in the single apprehension and will, or in the heart, by the grace of hope; and both it, and the experimental reflection join'd with it (which is in the understanding, and the other also, by this reflection) are the effects of the experimental knowledge and reflection of our understanding, in the assumption upon the true existence of the single term in the heart or will, which bears the whole burden of the assurance.

Use, Is of great Consolation to believers, whereof they are Sacrilegiously robbed by Papists and all such, who impugn this certainty of salvation.

The eighth Lord's day.

Mat. 28. 19.

Go ye therefore, and teach all Nations, baptising them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.

IN this verse is contained that principal command, which Christ left to his Apostles and Ministers; and it consists of two parts; whereof, in the first, the preaching of the Word; and in the other, the administration of the Sacraments is commanded. The chief scope of both parts is shown in the last words; to wit, That men may be taught and confirmed in the true faith and obedience of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. From this place was the Creed taken and framed, which is called the Apostles Creed▪ but as to the foundation of it in these words, not first taught by the Apostles, but to the Apostles by Christ himself, at that very time, when he spake those words: 2. By the Apostles at the command of Christ to all Christians, for a rule of Faith, and a badge, whereby Christians should be discovered▪ as well fro... Heathens, as from Jews and other Sects. Nor was there any other or longer Creed than this, contained in the words of our Lord, in the times of the Apostles, and of the Church that next followed their times. But afterwards diverse Heresies laid a necessity upon the Church of adding diverse articles to this Creed, not that they should be new additions to the old Faith, but needful explications of the same. Hence it is, that all things that are now contained in the Creed, are referred unto these three heads, which are set down in these words; viz. either unto the Father, or the Son, or the Holy Ghost.

Doct. 1. Though God be one in essence only, yet is he three in persons; the Fathe•..., the Son, and the Holy Spirit.

Reas. 1. Because in this place Faith is presupposed, and prered, for baptising one of age, whereby he believeth in the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, and this same Faith, is as it were sealed by Baptism, as with a seal; and the open profession of this Faith is solemnised by this Badge, or Confession, and Creed, that our Lord himself taught, and gave in command. And these things were not done for once, or in a temporary way, but by an unchangeable Institution, and perpetual Covenant, they were delivered to the Church to be observed through all ages, as necessary foundations of salvation. The consequence of this argument hath certainty and confirmation from thence, in that divine Faith and spiritual neither ought•..., nor is anywhere used in Scripture to be directed to any creature, but to God alone.

Reas. 2. Because one and the self-same authority and power is attributed to the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost. For when the Word is preached and Baptism administered, not only in the name of the Father, but likewise also of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; It is manifestly shown, that by the authority and power of this most holy Trinity, Baptism with other the like sacred Institutions, were delivered to the Church; and that for the same authority they are by all men to be received and acknowledged, with religious subjection of souls and consciences thereto. The reason of this consequence is, because however supplication useth to be made in some parties name, without respect had to his authority, and power, and with respect only to the grace of God, to whom we make our supplication, yet when an Institution is published as a Law, and proclaimed in the name of this, or that party, the authority and power of him in whose name this was done, is always declared, and is used as a sanction or means to make inviolable the Institution.

Reas. 3. Because an operation truly divine, and an omnipotency is here attributed to these three, while they are set out and acknowledged as the authors of all the spiritual good things, which are imparted to the faithful, and in Baptism are signified and sealed. For in vain had mention been made of their name and authorities in that solemn promise, unless they had the power and faculties to perform and perfect the things promised.

Reas. 4. Because in this place we are taught to invoke the Father, the Son, & the holy Spirit, that by their grace and power Baptism may have its due effect, in the same manner almost, as the same is done in the Apostles salutation: The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, the love of God the Father, and the communion of the Holy Spirit be with you all. And the reason of the variety or little difference that is between the these forms, seems to be this; that in Baptism, where authority and power are regarded, there the first place is given to the Father; but in the salutation aforesaid, where regard is had to the receiving consolation, whereunto none doth attain, unless he first come to Christ, & lay hold of his grace, that by him he may be reconciled to the Father, and made partaker of the Holy Ghost, there in the first place mention is made of the grace of Christ; and then afterwards of the love of God the Father. The strength of this whole argument hangs on this, that invocation of, or praying to, and the worship of God, belongs to none but to God alone.

Reas. 5. Divine honor and glory are not only here given to the Father, but also to the Son, and to the Holy Ghost, in as much as all baptized in these names, are directly consecrated to these three, that they may always live unto the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit. And hence are these Apostolic phrases, wherein the faithful are said not only barely to live to God, but also to live to Christ the Son, and to the Spirit of God. This reason is confirmed from hence, that neither it is lawful wholly to consecrate ones self to any other, but to God, and this also is the Tenor of the New Covenant, that God be acknowledged for our good, and we be to him forever his people. Hence also hangs the direction of our whole life, that we may always have this proposed to ourselves, to be serviceable to his glory in all things, whereunto we were consecrated from the beginning.

Use Of Instruction, that we may always keep this rule of Christian Faith, safe, pure, and unviolated, against all the gates of hell, as the chief principle and foundation of salvation, on which both our Baptism, and all things that in our Baptism are signified and sealed, do depend.

Doct. 2. The divine essence, and all its essential attributes, and all divine works external, equally agree to the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit. It is gathered from the Text.

Reas. 1. Because the same name, the same honor, the same power and glory is attributed to the three.

Reas. 2. Our Faith is here in like manner directed towards all, as the same in Father, Son, and Holy Spirit.

Reas. 3. All things that belong to the divine essence, are such, as can neither be multiplied, nor divided, nor admit of variety of degrees, for their immensity and perfection. If therefore at all they agree to the Son and Holy Ghost, as that they do is apparent from what hath been said; it must needs be that they agree to them identically, that is, in the greatest equality they are one and the same.

Use, Of Direction, That in exercises of our Faith, Hope, Charity, and in all parts and appurtenances of religious worship, and the practice of godliness, we lift up our minds as much as can be, not only to the name of God in common, but distinctly, to the name of God the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit, as equally in all our addresses to be honored and celebrated.

Doct. 3. Between these three persons there is a certain distinction, as to the form and manner, or order of subsisting.

It is gathered from the Text; because they are disposed or set in a copulative enunciation. For if there were no distinction between them, then would that copulative be impertinent; and it would have no more ground for it, than if one should say, in the name of the righteous God, and the merciful God, and the omnipotent God, &c. Which are not to be taken in propriety and rigor of conjunction, but exegitically. They differ then from the essence, as essential, or substantial concretes do from their abstracts. They differ from themselves as relatives, and some ways as unlike; this unlikeliness or dissimilitude, is in certain as it were, of their individuant and characteristic proprieties, which are not inherent qualities, but relative affections or properties. As to the point of order, the Father is the first, the Son the second, the Holy Ghost the third, not in order of time, or of nature properly so called, but in order of origination. Hence is it, that such works, wherein the beginnings of things are most apparent, are attributed to the Father by appropriation, as the creation. But those things wherein the second, and successive dispensations or procurations are most conspicuous, are attributed to the Son; as redemption: and such, wherein the perfection and last consummation are manifest, are attributed to the Holy Ghost, as our sanctification, and glorification.

Use, Of Direction, That as well in receiving such blessings as are bestowed on us by God, as in performing the duties of Religion and Obedience, we have regard to $\langle\diamond\rangle$ observe this distinction, as much as may be, to the glory of God, and our own consolation. For this is every way a divine meditation, whereby the hearts of the faithful are singularly affected, and lifted up, if they well ponder with themselves, that in the descent or coming down on us of God's benefits, whereof we are made partakers, the beginning is taken from the Father, the progress is by the Son, & the accomplishment is through the Holy Spirit. And moreover the ascent or sending up of our duties to God, which we owe to him; the beginning is taken from or through the Holy Spirit, the progress is made by the Son, and termination or resting is made by the Father. For thus through the Holy Spirit his teaching, and assisting or helping us, we begin to pray; that is, conceive and make our prayers here; and our prayers so conceived or made, ascend, and enter into Heaven by Jesus Christ; and lastly, they are ultimately heard and accepted by the Father.

The ninth Lord's day.

Rev. 4. 11.

Thou art worthy, O Lord, that thou shouldst have glory, and honor, and power; because thou didst create all things, and for thy pleasure they are, and were created.

A Reason is given in these words, why all glory should be given to God; and it is taken from the effects. For that is more praise-worthy, that it be taken from the effects, because the power and virtue of the cause, whereunto the praise is due, exists and is properly seen in its effects. The effect of God is creation, which in this place is illustrated, First, By his effects, which are declared by the universality conjoined with them in these words; because thou didst create all things. Secondly, From his manner of creating; that God out of a wise purpose created all things; and for thy pleasure, &c. Thirdly, From the adjunct of duration or lasting, and for thy pleasure they are, and were created. For one thing is understood by the words, they are, and another by, thou createdst, &c. as might be evident from the tense, thou createdst in the preter-tense; they now are in the present-tense, by which the duration of things is evident.

Doct. 1. All things that now are in the world, were produced and made out of nothing by God.

Reas. 1. Scriptures evidenceth this truth.

Reas. 2. Partly also all nations testify it, because there is no Nation which believeth not, and tells us not something concerning its beginning.

Reas. 3. The world itself witnesseth this of itself, for as much as in all creatures almost there appeareth such imperfection in their power and mutability, whereunto they are subject, that of themselves they could not have their own act and first existence, but of necessity they must depend upon some pure and perfect act, and that is God.

Reas. 4. The world also witnesseth this same, for as much as in its parts a certain perfection appeareth, which is such, as that it cannot be the first, and yet it is such as must needs be from the first perfection. Such are these perfections that use to be observed in this sentence, whereby all things are said to be made in number, weight, and measure: Where, by measure is meant the perfection that each thing hath in itself; and number that which is referred to others, as to defect or excess; and weight, that of motion and inclination that all have to their own ends and uses, as well particular to themselves, as common to others and the whole.

Reas. 5. Lastly, all right reason confirms the same, because in all order of causes, and things existent, common reason brings us to one first cause, and to one first existence. Besides it implies a manifest contradiction, to conceive the world to have been eternal. For if the world was from eternity, then infinite days were before this day, and so these days are not yet ended, and consequently this day exists not, because it cannot exist but after the other days before it were ended, and gone. Also, if the world was from eternity, there was no one day of the world, before there was a thousand years of the same world, because in eternity no point or moment of time can be defined, before which there were not many thousand of years: But this is a manifest contradiction, that one year of the world that is made up of many days, should be together, at once with the first day; or that there is no day of any year before which there was not a thousand years; or lastly, that there were as many thousands of years already, as there were days in the world.

Use 1. Is of Instruction, that in this part of our faith, we study more and more solidity to ground and strengthen ourselves, because this ground being well laid, our faith and affiance doth much more easily & freely make progress about all such things, as God hath revealed in his Word, that either he hath done, or will do about this world, or some parts of it, or other things that require the like might and power to that which was snewed in the creation of the world.

Use 2. Is of Admonition, That we suffer not our minds to cleave to this world, or stick there, but that we lift them up higher, and adhere to him, that made the world. For it were a very great folly and perverseness, if after we know that all these things were made by God, we love the world better than God, and for the love of the world should forsake God.

Doct. 2. God of his wise purpose and good pleasure created all things, not out of any necessity.

It is gathered from these words; and for or by thy pleasure or will, &c. There be some Philosophers that have said, that all created things do come from God by way of emanation, as little rivulets come and flow from their Fountain. But that which doth proceed in this kind, must be part of that River from whence it flows, which cannot properly be affirmed of things created, if we reflect on God the Creator. Others are of opinion that the universe came from the Creator, even as the form or fashion of him that looketh into a glass passeth from him into the glass. Neither is this fitting to be affirmed, because the universe is in no other subject, as the shape is represented in a glass or mirror. Others have said, that the universe went from God, as a shadow from its body. But this is altogether impertinent, because a shadow goes not out of its body, but follows it by a privation of light, and by reason of the interposition of the opacous or gross body between the light and that place. Others have said, that the universe went forth from the Creator, like $\langle \diamond \rangle$ the footstep is made by the print of the foot of one that walks. But God had nothing without himself, upon which by his walking he could imprint such a footstep. All these had a good intention, though they spake not accurately and properly enough. For even as these comparisons are otherwise profitable to raise the mind of man in the contemplation of the eminency and majesty of God the Creator: For they point out the eminency of the Creator to be incomparably greater, than that of the whole universe itself; and the vanity, or at least littleness of all things, even such as seem greatest in the world, if they be compared with God's perfection. For they are in respect of God as little streams, or as little droppings are in respect of an ever and overflowing Fountain, or of the whole Sea; or as a light resemblance of ones feature appearing in a glass, is in respect of the solid substance or party himself, and as dark and vanishing shadows in respect of a most firm body; Lastly, also as the footstep of a man imprinted on the sand, is in respect of the living man himself. These same comparisons show also, that the world and all its parts, or all things in this universe, are certain tokens and way-marks, •...s it were leading us to the Creator, as the streams leads to the fountain, the image in the glass shows the man's face, and the shadow respects the body; or brings one to find it out, as the footstep of the foot doth to the man. But the holy Scripture leaving these comparisons, is wont to make use of a truer and fitter one, when it says, that the world so came from the Creator, as the workmanship from the workman, and every building from its builder, Heb.

11. 10. Now every workman doth what he doth of a determinate reason, purpose and will, in as much as he is a workman. And in this sense it is said both in our Text, and everywhere else i... Scripture, That God made all things by his word, of his determinate purpose of mind and will. Yet there is this difference between other Artists and God, that all other artificers bring to perfection their works by divers motions. For so soon as they have taken up a purpose with themselves to make some work, first, they move their own members; secondly, by their members they move other external instruments; thirdly, by these instruments they move the matter unto the form, or act, which they intend to imprint upon it. But God perfects his work with saying and willing. And this is it that the Scripture everywhere inculcates to us, Psal. 33. 6, 9, &c.

Reas. 1. Because there is nothing in the world, that hath a necessary connection with the divine essence; and so nothing external comes from God by any necessity of his nature, but from his wisdom and free-will.

Reas. 2. Because this is the noblest and perfectest way of working, to work advisedly and with a freewill.

Reas. 3. In the beginning of the Creation there was nothing, that could have the place either of matter or of instrument; nor can we conceive in God any other power really distinct from his understanding and will. This therefore is of necessity to be granted and believed, that God created all things out of his own free wisdom and will alone.

Use 1. Is of Instruction, for by this foundation we may forearm our faith against the curious queries of some men, who are used to ask, or wonder why the world was not created before that time, in which it was indeed created; or why such a part of it was not in such and such a manner? The Scripture answers, that God created all things by his own free choice, wisdom, and will; so that in this work, he was neither subject to any necessity, neither should any other reason be inquired for, beyond or above his free will.

Use 2. Is of Direction, that from this consolation, we establish our Faith about all things that he hath revealed in his Word, that he will do. For howbeit they may seem very improbable or impossible to our staggering reason, yet seeing God doth whatsoever he wills, and he made the whole world only with saying and willing, it is not to be doubted of, but that he will most truly perform all such things as he hath said, that he will do.

Doct. 3. By the same efficiency whereby God created all things, he sustains also, and preserves all things in being.

From these words in the Text; and for thy pleasure, or by thy will they are. Heb. 1. 3. Acts 17. 28. In him we are or have our being. For as in the beginning, when God cherished the world of waters, or the waters, the spirit moved upon them, and so did sustain, conserve and cherish them; even so also perpetually the same spirit sustains, governs, and cherisheth all created things. Now God is said to sustain and conserve created things, not only indirectly, as he removes and hinders from them causes that would corrupt or destroy them; but also directly, as he gives a conserving power for continuance of their existence. Neither doth he this alone by means, as he sustains an infant by its nurse; and a building by its pillars; but also immediately, in as much as being most inwardly present to all things, he furnisheth the means themselves with all their efficacy, when at his will they concur, and doth also many things himself for their conservation, for the doing whereof there is found no virtue at all in any means. This sustaining of all things is rightly by some called maintenance, because thereby God •...olds as it were in his hand the creature, that it fall not back to that nothing from which it was at first brought by that same hand. For as if one with his hand lift up something from the ground, unless he hold it also, after it is lifted up in his hand, of its own accord, it will fall again to the ground: so also after that God by his omnipotent hand, lifted up the creature from nothing, with the same hand he upheld it also, otherwise it would fall back and return to nothing again.

Reas. 1. Because sustentation is a sort of continued creation. For creation brings it to pass, that a thing first is; and sustentation brings this about, that the same thing yet is: So that creation hath almost nothing in it beyond sustentation, but only a newness of being, wherein it is terminated. The same omnipotency therefore and power of God, is required unto sustentation of things, which was required at first to their creation.

Reas. 2. Because to be, or to exist, agreeth so imperfectly to the creature, that if it were removed or separated from the first being, whence the beginning of its being was, it would presently cease to be. For as in the enlightening of the air, the light is so received by the air, that so soon as ever the Sun is removed from it, whence this illumination dependeth, the air presently ceaseth to be illuminated; so is it in this busiess.

Reas. 3. Because God is so universally and inwardly the cause of the creature, that he is not only in place of an external efficient cause, but also of an internal, and doth no whit less communicate to things their being, than matter and form, which are other internal causes, and essential too, which being taken away, the essence and being of such things is taken away itself. Although therefore many effects consist or keep their being, when their efficient causes are removed or cease'd, as a building remains after the death of its builder; yet without the presence and power of God the creature can no more consist and keep its being, than without its matter and form.

Use 1▪ Is of Direction, that we may strive to open the eyes of our mind, and may pray that by the grace of God they may be more and more opened, that we may see both God in ourselves, and in every other thing in some manner. For that is it which the Apostle teacheth, Act. 17 27

Use 2. Is of Admonition, that for this cause we take heed to ourselves, that we sin not against God, because we are held up, in and by the hand of God. If therefore witting and willing we offend God, it is even as if a child out of petulancie should hurt his Fathers face, while he is held by his Father in his arms, and in his bosom.

Doct. 4. All the glory that can be given by a creature to God, is due unto him •...y reason of his only creating and •...ustaining of all things.

It is out of the Text; Thou art worthy, &c. Where this glory is expounded by three words, which design one and the same thing, though in a diverse manner, because no one word can be found, which can sufficiently mark out the duty of a creature to God its Creator.

R...as. 1. The reason in general is, Because the greatest perfection of all divine power appears in the work of Creation, and such things as therefrom depend. Now by how much the more the power of the cause appears in the effect; by so much the more praise and glory is due to the efficient cause. The... First, God's goodness appears, for whose sake chiefly he is ever to be glorified; because what ever good is in the creature, all this is derived from God's goodness; and it is nothing else as it were, but a certain slender scent, that is breathed from the infinite goodness of God, and flows from it. This is some way pointed at in these words; God saw all that $\langle \phi \rangle$ made, and they were very good.

Secondly, His greatest and infinite power appears in the Creation, in that by his word, and his command he made the whole world suddenly, and of nothing, or matter praeexistent.

Thirdly, His highest wisdom also appears, in that he made all things, not confusedly, that there should be and remain a Chaos; but in all perfection of order and proportion; so that to one who attentively considers things, so much wisdom appears, not only in the fabric of the whole, but in the disposition of the parts in one man, or in one flea, as all the wisest men in this world can never be able either to in...itate, or to explicate, or by all the diligence they can use, sound the bottom of it.

Use, Is of Exhortation, that with heart, •...ind, and work, we study always to give this glory unto God, that he deserveth, and which justice requireth from us; to which we are perpetually called and stirred up by all creatures in heaven and in earth.

The tenth Lord's day.

Rom. 11. 36.

For of him, and through him, and to him are all things.

THE Apostle brings an argument here to prove that which he had before put, viz. That God owes no man anything. He proves it from the opposition thus; the cause owes nothing to its effect; but contrarily the effect owes all to the cause. Now God is as the cause, not as the effect, in respect of all things whatsoever, that either are, or are done in this world. But God as a cause comes under a threefold reason or notion; as 1. either of a procreating cause; $\langle \phi \rangle$ \rangle •...im are all things: or 2. of a conserving and directing cause; and through him or by him are all things: or 3. of a final cause, or for which; and to him, or for him are all things. In the first notion, creation is attributed to him; in the second sustentation and gubernation of all things; in which two, the providence of God doth properly consist: in the third notion, perfection and conservation of all things is attributed to God; in which the end and accomplishment of creation, sustentation, and gubernation is seen and consists.

Doct. 1. God 〈ϕ〉 a sure providence, whereby he takes care for all•... things▪ and directs them to his own glory.

It is 〈ϕ〉 from the Text, in as much as all things by him, and for him are 〈ϕ〉 〈ϕ〉 directed.

Reas. 2. Because if God had only made the creatures, and had no care of them afterwards, or did not direct and govern them, the work of creation had been but idle, vain, and as done in jest. For workmen use not to take pains to perfect a work, and then neglect it, unless from too much leisure, and sport, or pastime they do it; which agreeth not to God.

Reas. 3. Unless God directed and governed all things that he created, his work would be imperfect, as not bringing it to its destinate end. It would also be subordinate to the operation or influence of some other upon it, that is not the principal, as we see it is among men. For he that makes a Ship, and directs, and governs her not afterwards in her •...ailing; his work about her, it is but imperfect, and as it were vain, and his art and work is subordinated to the art of sailing, which doth the other and better sort of the work about that Ship.

Reas. 4. Common experience teacheth, that there is some present and powerful wisdom everywhere, that is efficacious in its workings and intentions, whereby creatures are directed in their operations. For without it, the kinds of all things could not have been preserved, and propagated under the same forms and figures, parts and dispositions, through all generations. Without it also, creatures that want reason, could not be directed to tend to some certain end unknown to themselves, and to possess certain places most convenient for them, and to seek the order and preservation of the universe or whole, rather than their own particular. Without this providence it cannot be understood, how some beastshave such instinct, & as it were some beams of a certain wisdom imparted unto them, as they have; as may be seen, in Ants, Bees, Spiders, Swallows, Storks, of which the Scripture itself speaks, and in many other beasts, which are rightly said to be borne, as it were with a Law, a Book and a Lantern; with a Law, which they follow and observe constantly▪ in all their operations, in which Law a certain art and wisdom manifestly appears. With a Book, wherein they have that Law written down to them, because it is ever present with them, and indeed written or engraven on their souls. With a Lantern also, because at all times they so radily read therein, and perceive all such things, as agree to their condition.

Use 1. Of Information, that we may have a care solidly to establish our Faith in this behalf, because providence is amongst the first principles of Religion, whence the glory of God mainly depends, and our affiance, patience, reverence, humility, and all the rest, that belong to the real practice of religion.

Use 2. Of Direction, that we lean not to our own, or to other men's wisdom and providence, but to apply ourselves always to lay hold on the providence of God, that we may rely on it in all things.

Doct. 2. The providence of God includes in itself not only the intention, but also the attainment of its end.

For all things are no less certainly for him, than they are either by him, or from him.

Reas. 1. Because divine providence is most perfect, and therefore always attains what it intends properly. For that is the imperfection of man's providence, that it often attains not its end, but is hindered by some other causes.

Reas. 2. Because if God attained not his purposed end, then would he suffer some change in his blessedness and happiness of condition; because it is a more blessed thing to have all ones desires and purposes fulfilled, than to fall beside some of them.

Reas. 3. Because thence also would follow diminution of God's eternal knowledge. For no wise man proposes that to himself to be attained, which from the beginning he knows, that he shall never attain.

Use 1. Is of Refutation, against such that turn divine providence into a human providence.

Use 2. Of Consolation to all believers, to whom God hath promised, that he will provide and see for them, so as all things at last shall turn to their good and eternal happiness.

Doct. 2. This providence of God extends itself to all things. This is clear in the Text.

Reas. 1. It is as much extended to all in the world as a good and wise master of a family, hath a care (as much as in him lieth) of all things, that are done in his house.

Reas. 2. It is extended to everything that was created of God. For in the same manner providence follows upon creation, as the Apostle teacheth that provision doth upon procreation, and seeing to children and others in the family, 1 Tim. 5. 8. For God in some sort is called the Father of all things that he created.

Reas. 3. He hath a care of all noble and great things, because the direction of such makes evidently for his glory.

Reas. 4. He cares also for the least and vilest things, as the hairs of our head, and the like, Mat. 10. 29. Because his wisdom being infinite, these cannot escape it. As from the greatness of them, his being is not helped, so from the littleness of them, he is not hindered to care for them. Oftentimes also, from least things, very great things depend, and from vile or base things, a noble change followeth, either for the better or for the worse.

Reas^a 5▪ This providence is extended not only to things that of necessity are, or must be, but to contingents also, or things voluntary; because contingents, they are mutable, and subject to many casualties, coming from the course of many causes, & do most of all require the government of a superior power, that they may be rightly ordered, left all should run into confusion. And voluntary things are of a most noble operation, and of a higher nature, than any natural things are, and therefore most of all do depend upon God's care for them and over them. And these things are so cared for of God, that their nature is not thereby overthrown, but established and governed. For it is rightly said of divine providence, that though it attains to its end with strength, yet even in doing so, it disposeth all things sweetly; that is, according to the nature of all and each, that he himself put into them in the Creation, and yet conserves and governs by his providence. For there is nothing in God's providence that brings a necessity upon anything properly so called; but only a certainty which no ways withstand the nature of contingency and liberty.

Reas. 6. This providence is extended not only to things good, but also to evil; nor yet only to evils of punishment, but also to evils of sin; because, though evil was not created of God, and in this respect is not properly and in itself the subject of divine providence; yet because it comes from the creature of God, and of its own nature disorders the work of God, and is contrary to the order that God appointed, and therefore ought of necessity to be ordered and limited of God; otherwise the most noble work of God, if he had no care to the contrary, would run into great disorder: and because there is in sins the greatest confusion and disorder, therefore it is mo...t of all required here, that God exercise the power of his providence; in regard of whom only evil hath some kind of good in it; to wit, as far as it is ordered by him, and turned to good.

Use 1. Is of Exhortation, that we may always have our affiance firm, and immovable, and fixed on God; because, If God be for us, who can be against us? seeing all things are directed and governed of God.

Use 2. Is of Admonition, that we depend upon no creature, but upon God alone; because all things are governed of God. And then that we learn to reverence and fear God in all things, seeing his providence, that is to be revered and feared, hath a hand in all things.

The eleventh Lord's day.

Act. 4. 12.

Neither is there salvation in any other: For there is no other name under heaven given amongst men whereby we must be saved.

IN these words, is contained the reason of the answer, that Peter gave to the multitude being come together, to the question they made, about the good work done to the impotent man, verse 9. The question was, How he was healed, and delivered from his sickness? The answer was, that he was made whole by the name of Jesus Christ; that is, by that divine authority and power whereof Jesus Christ was the author. The reason of this answer and deed is taken from the nature and power of Jesus Christ, which is shown & declared in this verse, from its effect; to wit, that it brings salvation as well spiritual as corporal to men. And this effect is so affirmed of this cause; that is, of Christ, that it is denied of all others: So that there are two assertions contained in these words; whereof the first is, that Jesus Christ offereth salvation to men: The second, that no other can bring salvation. The reason of both assertions is given, because the name, that is the power and authority of saving, signified by the name Jesus, is given to him and to none else. For by name in this place, as it is referred to Christ, Christ himself is understood, as signified by that name of Jesus or Savior; as by the name of God, God himself is oft thus understood in Scripture; but withal the power and authority of Christ to save, is made known in more illustrious persons, titles, and solemn stiles, whereby is declared their quality, and what they import. For the signification of the name Jesus is here taught. Lastly, regard is had to our Faith▪ which properly looks at the name of Jesus Christ, and of God the Father, that is Christ and God the Father as they are proposed to us, and as it were named in the Gospel.

Doct. 1. Jesus Christ saveth us from all our sins.

This is it that is signified by the appellation of his name; and is proper to the name, containing in itself the whole sum of our Redemption, and its application: The end also of his incarnation, humiliation, and exaltation. Now Christ saves us by his satisfaction, merit, and efficacy. By satisfaction, because he removes the guilt of sin and wrath of God, that were the hindrances of our safety, and could not be removed by us. By his merit, because he procures to us the favor and right to all those blessings, that use to be communicated to the sons of God. By his efficacy, because by his Spirit he effects indeed, & works all in us that belongs to our salvation. In this sort therefore doth he save us from all our sins, as to the guilt, to the punishment, and to the andduration, to the defilement.

Reas. 1. Because he was given of God his Father for this end; that is, he was for that end eternally predestinated, from the beginning promised; in the fullness of time exhibited, for this end, I say (as himself professeth) that he might save sinners; in which speech the Apostle Paul glorieth much, as in a ⟨◇⟩ ▪ 1 Tim.•.... 5.

Reas. 2. Because he was fit every way to produce this effect; that is, to procure this salvation; which follows most certainly, even from this, that he was for this end sent of God. For God sends none to perform any duty, whom he instructs not, and makes fit for the accomplishment of it▪ Hither belongs also, all that before was said of the divine and human nature of Christ; and what hereafter shall be said of the spirit resting upon him without measure, and the like.

Reas. 3. Because willingly and of his pleasure he gave himself to the performance of all these things, that were necessary for our salvation.

Use 1. Is of Direction, that we may yield up, and give over ourselves wholly to Christ to be saved.

Use 2. That with all Admiration of the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, we may live to him; that is, as being saved by him, we may yield him all thankfulness, and strive to do him all honor and homage to his glory.

Doct. 2. Beside Jesus Christ, there is no Savior.

This is expressly enough in the Text: Neither is there salvation in any other &c. There are no other Savior's neither in whole, nor in part, nor joint with him. There are no other causes of our salvation, neither subordinate, nor ministrating, properly so called. Not total.

Reas. 1. Because none is like, or equal to Christ, that could do the same that Christ did for our salvation. For he is the only begotten Son of the Father, the only Imm•...new, God with us, God-man in one person, the only Medrator between God and man, 1 Tim. 2. 5.

Reas. 2. Because God gave and proposed none oother Savior to us, as it is in the Text.

Reas. 3. Because if there were any other Savior, then such exclusive assertions could have no place, as everywhere occur in Scripture. Whosoever believeth not in Christ, he shall dy: The wrath of God shall abide upon him: Without him we can do nothing, and the like. Nor yet Mediators in part.

Reas. 1. Because Christ perfectly saveth those that believe in him, so that they need not in any sort to seek salvation in any other, Heb. 7. 25.

Reas. 2. Because our salvation cannot be so divided into parts, that part from one, and part may be sought from another; for so it might come to pass, that one might be partly saved, and partly damned. Neither yet subordinate, and ministering causes. Because properly he saves us by himself, Heb. 1. 3. Now the Savior's that were typical; and the Ministers of the Word, who now also are said to save many, together with the Word and Sacraments, which save also; all these are only said to save, because they are the adjuncts and instruments of this only Savior, serving him in the application of salvation before purchased by himself; not that they are causes together with him of his salvation, and have in themselves power and virtue of saving any, if we speak properly.

Use 1. Of Refutation, against Papists, who many ways join other Savior's to Christ: as, 1. While they thrust Angels and blessed spirits upon us for Savior's, to be religiously invocated. 2. While they teach men to place their trust and hope in satisfactions of men, and pardons or indulgences of Roman Bishops. 3. While they will be saved by themselves by merit of their own works, and place in them some faith and confidence.

Use 2. Of Exhortation, that in every great and less•... part of our salvation we not only fly to Christ, but depend also purely, only, and wholly on him, saying with the Psalmist; Whom have I in heaven but thee, and I delight in none on earth beside thee. Psal. 73. 25.

Doct. 3. All that is made known to us in Scriptures concerning our Lord Jesus Christ, to be done, ought most of all to be done by us, as bringing salvation to our souls.

For in this sense it is said in the Text not simply that Jesus saves us, but that the name of Jesus Christ doth it; that is Jesus Christ, as he is proposed to us in Scriptures to be apprehended by Faith.

Reas. 1. Because such is the nature of our Faith, as it differs from sight, which we are to have in the life to come, that it is not carried simply and absolutely to Christ, but only as he is proposed to us in God's Promises.

Reas. 2. Because in the word of God nothing is taught of Christ, which doth not directly make for our Faith, and for advancing and confirming of our salvation, John. 20. 31.

Reas. 3. Because that charity and thankfulness that we owe to Christ, requires this, that we make high esteem of all things that belong to him; seeing other ways we are not worthy of him.

Use 1. Is of Reproof, against the slowness and sluggishness of our minds, who can hear and read many things concerning Christ, without any affection, or lifting up of our hearts to him.

Use 2. Is of Direction, that we may get unto ourselves that knowledge of the name of Christ, that may be sufficient to us in all our necessities; and that we put this in practice and use it, when we are pressed either with our sins, or our inward corruptions, or the Devils temptations, or the worlds allurements, or with afflictions, or when we are in the midst or danger of death. For thus in the name of Christ we have a Magazine or rich Well, from which at all times, or any occasion we may draw, or take something of salvation, according to that of the Prophet, Isa. 12. 3. When ye have drawn waters with joy out of the Wells of this salvation; ye shall say, &c.

Acts 2. 36.

Therefore let all the house of Israel Know assuredly, that God hath made that same Jesus, whom ye have crucified, both Lord and Christ.

THIS is one of the last parcells of that first Sermon, which the Apostle Peter made to the Jews after Christ's resurrection. It contains the principal conclusion of the whole Sermon, as appears by the illative particle, Therefore; and the necessity of the consequence itself, certainly know, therefore, &c. The conclusion itself is, that Jesus is the Lord himself, and the Messias that was promised. The arguments from which it is deduced, are testimonies of preceding Prophets, and the present effusion of the holy Spirit, which could be the effect of none other, but of Christ the Lord or the Messias.

In the conclusion itself two things are explicated; the function or charge of Christ; and the calling to that charge. The function is included in these titles, Lord and Christ; the calling is declared in this, that he is said to have been made Lord and Christ, and constituted so by God. We have three names here, that are attributes of our Savior, Jesus, Christ, and Lord, which also elsewhere use commonly to be joined in Scripture; and between them this distinction may be observed. Jesus is his proper name; Christ is his name of authority; and Lord his name of power. Jesus points at the end which our Savior had before him; Christ, the means and way how to come to that end; Lord, the perfect execution and attainment of that end: Between Christ and Lord there is no real difference, nor yet so great a notional difference, as is between Christ and Jesus. The Lordship or dominion, is as it were an adjunct following that function, which is designed by the titles of Christ▪ Messias, or Anointed. But between Christ & Jesus this is the difference, that Jesus, as before hath been said, designs the end, and Christ the means and manner of attaining it. Jesus denotates Christ's action on our behalf properly; and Christ, his perfection for it, and reception of that dignity from the Father.

Doct. 1. Our Savior Jesus was ordained and constituted by the Father for the performing of all these things, that were necessary for our salvation.

It is hence gathered, that he is said to be made Lord and Christ; that is to say, that Messias, whom all the Prophets from the beginning of the world foretold and preached that he was to come, for procuring and perfecting the salvation of man; and whom all the faithful with great desire looked for, the only author of their salvation. The things that were necessary for our salvation to be brought about, are contained in these three functions, which are intimated in the name Messias and Christ; to wit, of Prophet, Priest and King.

Our Savior was the anointed Prophet.

Reas. 1. Because by outward Ministry he proclaimed and revealed the whole counsel of God about our salvation, Deut. 18. 8 John. 15. 15. & 17. 8.

Reas. 2. Because inwardly he illuminates the minds, and opens our hearts, that we may be taught of God.

Reas. 3. Because he told us all things to come, that are necessary to be known, and belong to his Church and Kingdom.

Our Savior was also the anointed Priest.

Reas. 1. Because by offering up of himself he reconciled us to God.

Reas. 2. Because he yet effectually intercedes at the hands of the Father for us.

Reas. 3. Because he makes us and our imperfect works acceptable to God, by the virtue of his own oblation and intercession.

Our Savior is also the anointed King.

Reas. 1. Because he overcame and gloriously triumphed over all the enemies of our souls and of our salvation.

Reas. 2. Because as Prince and head of his Church he governs the same, protects and conserves her by his efficacious power.

Reas. 3. Because he shall with the greatest glory perfect the government, protection and salvation of his Church, deservedly shall at last not only be called and acknowledged King, but King of Kings and Lord of Lord's.

Use 1. Is of Information, that by true Faith and distinctly we may see that in Christ, which in all our necessities may supply our wants. If we would have our ignorance and blindness taken away, that we may fly to Christ, as our Prophet, to be taught of him; and to seek wisdom from him; who is himself the wisdom of God. If we be pressed with the guilt of our sins, and be accused by our own consciences, that we may fly to the blood and oblation of Christ our Priest, which he made of himself for us. If we would attain anything from God, that we may use Christ, as our Intercessor. If lastly, our own weakness, and strength of our enemies discourage and terrify us, that we may look to Christ our King, by whose help all the faithful shall become more than Conquerors.

Use 2. Is of Consolation, that we never give place to despair, because God hath provided for us so sufficient and able a Savior.

Use 3. Is of Admonition, that by no means we separate such things, as God hath conjoined in Christ. And they are separated by such, as either seek for knowledge only, but care not to be cleansed from their sins, nor to be subjected themselves under the obedience of Christ, as King; or seek only remission of their sins, in the name of Christ, but neglect knowledge, and other means of this, and refuse flatly to bear Christ's yoke, or to acknowledge his Scepter and Crown.

Doct. 2. Christ was called to perform all the duties of these offices.

It ariseth from these words; God made this man Lord and Christ. This calling contains in it, his election, preordination, mission or sending, and all other things, that belongs to preparation, inauguration, confirmation, and consummation of this anointed one now sent. By virtue of election, and preordination, or predestination, Christ was Mediator from all eternity. By virtue of this purpose revealed, he exercised the office of Mediator, immediately after the fall of Adam. By virtue of his mission or sending, in the fullness of time he was manifested; and after he had manifestly and openly exercised these functions upon earth, the time appointed for that end, he was taken up to the greatest glory and dignity, in which with great glory and majesty he yet exercises these functions that become so divine and exalted a Mediator. Whence also in the Text▪ where Jesus is said to be made Lord and Christ, a singular respect seems to be carried to this exaltation of Christ, after and in which he came as to the consummate possession of this his dominion, in respect whereof he is called Lord and Christ.

Reas. 1. Because none could or ought to usurp or assume to himself this honor, but he that was called of God, Heb. 5. 4, 5, 6.

Reas. 2. Because the whole nature of Christ's mediatory office stood in this, that he should do the will of the Father, Heb. 10. 7, 9.

Reas. 3. Because in Christ an example is set down of that procedure, which God observes in us to be brought into life and glory by him. For our life and glory have their first foundation in God's electing of us, and begins at his effectual calling of us.

Use 1. Is of Information, for the establishing of our Faith; because we may certainly know, that God made Christ every way fit for accomplishing our salvation.

Use 2. Is of Consolation, against all terrors and tumults, whereby either our salvation or the Church of Christ is impugned; because we ought certainly to know, that Christ is made Lord, & hath all power of restraining his enemies at his own pleasure. If therefore nothing at present appear, from which we may be confirmed against such temptations; yet we ought to live by this Faith; according to that, The just shall live by Faith.

Doct. 3. All that by true Faith rely upon Christ, are made partakers according to their measure, of the dignity of Christ.

This is hence collected, that the Apostle so earnestly exhorts to this faith; especially if we compare this conclusion with the occasion of the question, as it is explicated, verses 17, 1•••. For they are some way partakers of the fruition and dignity Prophetical, as they have the Spirit of Christ; as ver. 17 18 is apparent, by which Spirit they are taught all things, 1 John. 2. 27 So that in some sort they may discern all things, 1 Cor. ••• 15. Secondly, they are made partakers also of the function and Priestly dignity, as it is granted to them, to offer unto God Sacrifices and Oblations, while they offer themselves to God, Rom 12. 1. And while all that they can, & have, they dedicated & consecrated to God; & lastly, while they continually cause to ascend unto the presence of God the sacrifice of praise and thanksgiving. Thirdly, they are made partakers of the Kingly dignity, 1 Pet. 2. 9. Apoc. 1. 6. As they have through the grace of God got the dominion over themselves, nor are servants anymore of this world, but rather masters of it; and as lastly, they are heirs of heavenly glory, and receive the right and first fruits of it in this life.

Reas. 1. Because so great is the spiritual and mystical union, that believers have with their head, that they must of necessity some way or other participate of his dignity, as the members of the body partake of the dignity of the head, and as the Wife participates of the dignity of her Husband.

Reas. 2. Because all things that Christ doth as Mediator, he doth them for us, and to our good, in our name, and in a manner in our person; that is, representing, and standing in our stead.

Reas. 3. Because so great is the love of Christ towards his own, that he would have that is his, as far as can be, to be communicated to others.

Use 1. Is of Information, that we may understand the force & reason of this name, whereby we are called Christians. Now believers were rather called Christians, than Jesus•••s, because as hath been said, Jesus properly denotats Christ's action of •••aving us, but Christ the receiving of that offi•••e; so that we are not made saviors of ourselves so much, as fitted receivers of this salvation from him. For what he doth as our Jesus, this he doth not communicate to us, but only the fruit of it; but what he received as our Christ therefore he received it, that to us he might some way communicate it, and make us fit to receive it of him. Such therefore alone are truly Christians, that have spiritual and effectual communion with Christ, or with God in Christ.

Use 2. Is of Admonition, that we make not the divine name of Christian to be dishonored and blasphemed by the filthiness of our life and manners.

The thirteenth Lord's day.

Mat. 16. 16.

Thou art Christ the Son of the living God.

This is Peter's answer to the question propounded by Christ to the Apostles. The question was about their judgment and faith, as to the person of our Savior. In the answer, there is contained the confession of the Disciples concerning Christ, and together with this, a description of Christ. In this description the person of our Savior is described; 1. From his office, Thou art Christ. 2. From his essence, which is pointed out to us by his essential relation to that principle, from whence he came forth. This principle is God, who is illustrated by his attribute of life, the living God. The relation of our Savior to God, is that of a Son to a Father; the Son of the living God. And he is also illustrated by a tacit comparison of that unlikeness, that is between this Son and others that use to get the same name also: And this comparison is illustrated to us in the particle prefixt to Son; the Son, or that Son.

Doct. 1. Jesus Christ is the coeternal or natural Son of God.

He is called the Son of God, because he proceeds from the Father, not by way of creation, but by way of generation. And generation is here used by similitude or proportion, that this emanation of the Son from the Father, hath with that production, which a child hath from its parent; in the comparison of which similitude or analogy, as in all others that are attributed to God, the perfections only of the denomination are to be understood to agree; and all the imperfections and defects are to be removed in our thoughts. Hence, that which is proper to corporal generation, that he who begets, doth it with some transmutation; and that the thing begotten, is something out of the begetter; these are not to be imagined in this divine mystery; nor that which is found in the spiritual generation, in, or by a creature; to wit, that the thing begotten is of another essence from that of the begetter, as in the production of the word of the mind in human understanding. But the perfection that is in the generation of a body; to wit, that the begotten be in essence and nature like unto the begetter, is here to be conoynd with that perfection that is found in spiritual generation of creatures; to wit, that the begotten be in the begetter, by the most inward and inseparable way of being so; and so we come highest to apprehend, that which can be conceived or apprehended of this divine generation of the Son by the Father. For Christ proceeding from God the Father, hath the same common nature and essence with him, and is his substantial image, Heb. 1. 3. Yet he remains still in the Father, and the Father in him, without total separation of either from other, as God understanding himself, is in God understood by himself; and God understood by himself, is in God understanding himself.

Use 1. Is of Consolation, towards all believers▪ because while they have communion with Christ, who is the Son, and heir of all the goods of the Father, they may thence see their felicity; to wit, that they are coheirs with Christ in the heirship of life and eternal glory, Rom. 8. 7.

Use 2. Is of Admonition, to all, that they hear the voice of Christ with all submission, according to that command sent down from heaven, This is my Son in whom I am well pleased, hear him.

Doct. 2. Christ is the Son of God in a far more perfect, and a divine way, than any creature is.

This is from the particle The, or That Son. The reason is, because Christ is the Son of God by nature, not by adoption, or creation. Christ is called the natural Son of God, not because in his first or proper nature he is the Son of God; for so the good Angels may be called the natural Sons of God, if they be compared with men, who now after the fall, are not thus the natural Sons of God, but only in their second nature and generation; that is, their regeneration and adoption: but Christ is the natural Son of God, because the Father begot him, not of free choice, or decree of wisdom and will going before, but of natural necessity, as light engenders light. Moreover Christ hath the same most single and singular nature with the Father; whereof there can be no resemblance found on earth, in any creature, but that which is imperfect. Therefore Christ is also called the only Son of God, and the only begotten. For though as to the general denomination, he hath many, whom he vouchsafes to call brothers; yet as to the special manner▪ and foundation of this filliation of his, he hath no brothers at all, or like unto himself, nor can he have any.

Use 1. Is of Direction, of our Faith and thoughts •...bout Christ. For though we use the same words of Christ, and of ourselves, in relation to God, for the •...overty and want of peculiar, and more proper expressions; because God is called the father of Christ, and our Father; and we together with Christ are called the sons of God; yet we ought always to conceive all divine perfection in these titles and words, that are attributed to Christ; and in the same, as attributed unto us a far inferior dignity, yet which is sufficient enough to our consolation.

Use 2. Is of Information, how we ought to seek all that belong to our adoption, and happiness, only in Christ, and by him. For because Christ is that son of God, in whom is the principality, and all the excellency of divine filliation, or sonship; therefore in him, and by him, we always ought to seek all▪ our participation of this dignity, that we can have, or may crave.

Doct. 3. Christ is the supreme Lord in the Church of God.

Though this be not expressed in our Text, yet because it is in order conjoined with the antecedent words in the Apostles Creed (commonly so called) it will be conveniently in this place joined to the preceding matter. It is thus gathered from our Text; Peter in the words set down had regard to the Messias, whom all the Prophets had preached, that he would be a King, a Lord, and a most glorious vindicator or restorer of his people And hither also the particle the or that looks in part. For such a Messiah the Jews at that time did look for, as appears from John.•.... 10. Thou art that son of God, thou art the King of Israel; as also in the words of the High-priest, Mat. 26. 63▪ And Christ in his answer following, explains the matter, how that his dominion is contained in these words.

Reas. 1. Because Christ is one and the self same God with the Father; and God is the Lord of all that he made, as well in the order of grace, as of nature; so also Christ is Lord of them all by right of creation; for by him all things were made, and by right of sustentation, because he sustains all that he made, with his mighty hand, Heb. 1. 3.

Reas. 2. Christ he is Mediator, is Lord of the Church by right of Redemption. For he that redeemed the whole, bought the whole man to himself; therefore he hath him in whole & in part in his power, and that by a debt of justice; whereunto also accrues another debt of thankfulness: Whence it comes to pass, that a redeemed one wholly yields and gives up himself to his Redeemer.

Reas. 3. As Christ is considered, as the party to whom we subject ourselves, and oblige our truth and fidelity to him by a most holy Sacrament, oath or vow sealed sole•...lie with an outward badge or confession; so he is our Lord by right▪ of contract or bargain, of Covenant, of our religious assurance or truth giving, & of our promise. And for these two last reasons, more peculiarly and specially he is everywhere in the New Testament called our Lord, even when he is together named with the Father and with the Holy Spirit, viz. because he alone is thus our Lord in our nature, he is only our Lord, who thus only redeemed us. Lastly, we in special manner choose him to be our Lord, in our calling to Faith, by our answer of a good conscience, as Peter calls it; whence it is also, that we are called Christians, or subjects of Christ, and his Kingdom and call upon his name, as his name is called upon us, and professed that he is our Lord.

Use 1. Is of Instruction, to establish our Faith, concerning the Godhead of Christ; because none either can or may be called our Lord absolutely, or God of the Church, except God alone. For,

First, God only is the Lord of man's life, and of such things as belong to the goods of nature. For Magistrates and Commonwealths are only by God's institution keepers of the lives of their subjects under them, in order to the public good of all: and every Citizen or Subject is but a tutor and keeper of his own life, and no absolute Lord, or maker of it.

Secondly, God only may use, or apply to his use the whole man according to his own free arbitrement.

Thirdly, The things that belong to the goods of grace, are of a more noble rank, than those of nature. If therefore God alone be Lord of this natural life, than much more must it be granted, that he is only Lord of grace and spiritual life.

Fourthly, He that dischargeth the part of Lord of the Church of God, ought of necessity to be omniscient, omnipotent, and omnipresent, because to him belongs to have the care over the Church, and all its members dispersed over all the earth, and under the whole compass of heaven, and to direct them in all their ways, and defend them against all sorts of evils, and lastly, to heap upon them all sort of good to their happiness. Seeing then this is the sole...e title of Christ, that he is Lord in the Church of God, it follows necessarily that he is also essentially and by nature God, and not by office only.

Use 2. Is of Consolation, to all the faithful, that they have him for their Lord, who gave himself to the death for them.

Use 3. Is of Admonition, that we subject ourselves wholly to this Lord, and his will; and do him all honor in all and every part of our life and conversation.

The fourteenth Lord's day.

Mat. 1. 20.

But while he thought on these things, behold the Angel of the Lord appeared to him in a dream, saying, Joseph, thou son of David, fear not to take unto thee Mary thy wife, for that which is conceived in her, is of the Holy Ghost.

These words contain a reason given by the Angel of the Lord, why Joseph should receive his wife Mary. And the reason is, from removing the cause, for which Joseph might have been induced to put her away. Now the cause was, that she appeared to be with child by another than her own husband. This cause is removed, by putting another unblamable cause in its place; and this cause is determined by the Angel to be the Holy Ghost. The effect then is placed with its causes in this enunciation. The effect then is Jesus Christ, as to his human nature. The causes are two; to wit, the Holy Ghost, and the Virgin Mary. Mary is the efficient cause less principal, and supplier also of the material cause; but the Holy Ghost is the most principal and first cause, which brings the less principal efficient, and the material together into acting, for the production of this effect.

Doct. 1. Christ the Son of God took unto himself into the unity of his person, the nature of man truly such, together with the conditions of human weakness.

This is taught in the Text. When it is said, In time a man born and begotten of a woman▪ it is but the same expressed in these words of the Creed, conceived of the Holy Ghost, and born of the Virgin Mary, &c. He might have assumed the nature of another creature, as of Angels; he might also have assumed man's nature in its greatest perfection, as Adam was made (who was never in propriety of speech) either conceived, or born an infant. But it was his pleasure to assume the nature of man truly such, and in this manner of sinless imperfections, and not of Angels.

Reas. 1. That he might do man's business and work; that is, make satisfaction for them, and save them.

Reas. 2. He would also take this our nature in its weak and low condition;

First, Because he would come down (as far as could be without sin) into the same very place and condition, out of which he intended to lift us up higher.

Secondly, That by this means he might some way sanctify all the states and conditions of human life, least any might imagine that any such low^a estate separateth a man from communion with Christ.

Thirdly, That he might leave this to us in his own experience as a pledge of his knowledge and like sufferings and affections with us, from whence he might look upon our infirmities.

Use 1. Is of Information, for establishing our Faith on this behalf, that we give no place to phantastical imaginations of Heretics, who impugn directly or indirectly, and fight against the human nature of Christ; which sort of errors are some way countenanced by Papists, in their Doctrine of Transubstantiation; and by Ubiquitaries in theirs of Consubstantiation, in as much as they attribute omnipresence and other the like divine attributes to the human nature, which is no way agreeable unto the same.

Use 2. Is of Exhortation, to extol and solemnly to praise the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, with all admiration and thanksgiving, who not only vouchsafes to become man for us, but also in the nature of man disdained not to become an infant, to be conceived, and born after our manner; and to undergo other the like infirmities and humiliations for our sake; it is that the Apostle points at, Heb. 2. 16, 17.

Use 3. Is of Consolation, that we should make no difference between an infant newly conceived, or born, and a perfect man, or one of age; or between any other conditions of the nature and life of man, as to our interest in Christ, as if any sinless condition of nature could make us less regardable by him, \diamond exclude us from him. For Christ descended to the lowest and imperfectest sinless degree and condition of the life of man; in that he was, 1. conceived; and 2. shut up in his mothers womb the ordinary time of other births; and 3. born.

Doct. 2. Christ assumed this human nature from Mary, as from his Mother.

For though he is said in the Text to be begotten in her; yet elsewhere he is said to be made after the flesh of the seed of a woman; and a woman is said to have conceived him, and to have born him as her son; hence also he is called the son of Mary, the son of David, the son of Abraham, and the like; whereby that phrase is expounded, and the truth of it confirmed.

Reas. 1. He should have been born of a woman, as of his mother, to the end that that first Evangelical promise of the seed of the woman, that was to tread down the serpent's head, might be fulfilled.

Reas. 2. It was according to right that he was born of Mary, that so it might be certain, how he descended of the Tribe of Judah^a and of the Family of David, according to the promises, and prophesies that went before of him.

Use 1. Is of Refutation, against Anabaptists, and such like, who phantastically think that the humanity of Christ only passed through Mary, and was not assumed from her nature. Of which imagination the first reason seems to have been, that some simple men could not conceive, how any could without sin be born of a woman after the fall. But the Anabaptists afterwards, though they took away this ground of their error, of denying original sin, yet they adhered to this conclusion of mere willfulness, without any reason.

Use 2. Is of Information, for directing our Faith about Christ's son-ship. For he is the Son of God and the son of man both, yet so, as he is not two sons, but in a certain way twice one son in one person. The first, from eternity; the next, in time; and consequently two ways a son, as both by generation eternal, and by generation in time; yet but one son of God, and of man, because but one person, who according to his divine nature is the Son of God, and according to his human nature is the son of man: So is every man twice a Son, in essence first to father and paternal generation, and then to mother and maternal generation.

Doct. 3. Christ was born of Mary, remaining still a virgin after he was born.

This is gathered from the scope of the words; the question being about this, whether Mary were a virgin or no; and the words of the Angel were to assure him, that she was.

Reas. 1. Is, that this might be a singular and miraculous sign to the whole house of Israel, and this is it that is pointed at, in Isa▪ 1. 14.

Reas. 2. That the prophetesies going before of this thing might be fulfilled.

Reas. 3. That God's omnipotency in this so divine a mystery, and principal a work of God, might be evidently shewn. Now it was not difficult to the power of God, that a son should be born of a virgin. For seeing all second causes act by their virtue which they received from God, it is not to be doubted, but that God can produce all these effects, without this o•... that cause co-operating, which other ways use to exist by them. Yet not only the power of God appeared in that work, but also his wisdom, to which it was most agreeable, that so singular a substance of human nature, should in as singular a manner be brought to pass, that differed from all others. For in three manners all men were made before, 1. Without the concurrence of either man or woman, as in the creation of Adam. 2. Without the concurrence of woman, as in the production of Eve. 3. By the concurrence of man and woman, as in all ordinary generation afterwards. And this only is the proper and peculiar one of Christ, by and of a woman, without concurrence of a man.

Reas. 4. That it might easily appear how the contagion of sin might be removed from the human nature of Christ.

Use, Is of Confirmation, for strengthening of our Faith about the person of Christ; to wit, that he was both the Messiah of old promised, and the promised seed of the woman in that peculiar manner, as that promise seems to have intended; to wit, the son of man; that is, of a woman descending of Adam and other men in ordinary way, but made mother of a son not vulgarly or after the common manner, but miraculously and without the company of a man begotten, and born; so that from his first conception all things were in him supernatural; about which our minds being busied, ought always to be lifted up to supernatural contemplations, laying aside carnal and worldly thoughts.

Doct. 4. The Holy Ghost was the principal efficient cause of this generation.

It is from these words in the Text; is of the holy Ghost; the particle of denotes not any material cause, but the efficient; so that of the Holy Ghost, signifies as much, as if it had been said, by the power of the Holy Ghost, and his operation. Now this is attributed to the Holy Spirit for these reasons.

Reas. 1. Because it was a miracle; and all miracles by appropriation are attributed to the Holy Spirit.

Reas. 2. Because the principal work here was of Sanctification, forasmuch as the lump of the human nature, which was to be assumed by Christ, was in a singular manner sanctified and cleansed from all spot of sin, and all Sanctification peculiarly attributed to the Holy Spirit.

Reas. 3. Because the Holy Spirit was without measure to rest on, & to dwell in Christ. It $\langle \diamond \rangle$ but reason therefore, that the Holy Spirit should prepare and make such a dwelling for himself, as he also prepares his dwelling in the sons of God by adoption.

Quest. It may be th...n questioned, whether Christ may be called the Son of the Holy Ghost?

Ans. It cannot be said; 1. Because it would bring some confusion of relations and proprieties personal in God, and in the persons. 2. Because the Holy Spirit neither produced a new person, when he made Christ to be begotten, or generated; neither produced the nature, which he produced, after his own nature, or of the same essence with his own.

Use 1. Is of Direction, in our Faith, and in all our thoughts, that we have of Christ; that we admit of all that is in him, to be spiritual, holy, and full of mystery; nor that we ever doubt of any part of this mystery; because all this, as it is above common order, so is it above the reach of common nature. Yet we may always receive and conceive this, that none of all these things are above the divine power of the Holy Spirit; nor anything impertinent or unfitting in that thing, which is wholly managed by the Holy Ghost.

Use 2. Is of Direction, in our practice, as to the certainty of our salvation; which depends upon this, if we be sure, that we are conformable to Christ in his nativity, life, death, and resurrection. And from thence is the beginning of this conformity to be taken, if we be spiritually regenerated by the Holy Spirit, as Christ was borne of Mary through the efficiencie and operation of the holy Ghost. And this is the self same thing, which the Apostle Peter admonisheth us to, that we study to make our vocation and election sure.

1 Pet. 3. 18.

For Christ also hath once suffered for sinners; the just for the unjust; that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit.

AN argument is brought in these words, whereby all Christians may be persuaded, that undeserved afflictions are patiently to be born. The argument is taken from the greater to the less, in which also is contained the force and nature of a simily, or example, and also of some dissimilitude. For such Logical assertions are oft joined together in the same thing, as they make to the same purpose. The argumeat is this; If Christ that was just, hath suffered for sins, and for unjust men, then much more ought we to suffer afflictions imposed upon us; but the first is true, and therefore the latter also. Christ considered in himself is the greater, and his sufferings are the greater; and so the argument is from the greater. But considered as our head, and Savior, he hath the place and nature of a simily or example to be imitated by us in tolerating afflictions, so it is an argument from a like, or from an example. Lastly, considered as just, suffering for the sins of others that are unjust, he is altogether unlike unto us; and so also some force and emphaticalness of this argument is from the unlikeness. They are ordered in this enunciation, in which as the assumption of the Syllogism, the cause is contained with the effect; to wit, Christ with his suffering. For though suffering of its own nature be an adjunct of the sufferer; yet as it's voluntarily admitted and undertaken it is an effect. Yet these arguments are so ordered, that they have mixed with them the affection or property of the argument so called, from diversit. For Christ and his passions of their own nature are dissentaneous; When therefore it is said, Christ suffered, it is as if he had said, Though Christ were the Son of God, yet was he not fr...e from ⟨ϕ⟩. That this may be the better understood, it is to be known, that suffering in this place, and in such others, is attributed to Christ by the ⟨ϕ⟩ of Synecdoche▪ of the more general for the special; and that it signifies the special suffering of a grievous evil: Then are these two very dissentaneous between themselves, that Christ should suffer a great evil: Now that he is said to have suffered for sins, and for the unjust; the particle for designs the cause of his suffering, and that is threefold; a meritory or material, a formal cause and a final. The meritory cause, because Christ suffered for the things, which the sins of unjust men had deserved. The formal cause, because for our sins Christ was induced, as the form, as of divine imputation; as of that which by God was imputed; so of the suretyship undertaken by Christ, or that form which by Christ was undertaken, or accepted to be accounted his, when he underwent these sufferings. Lastly, also the final cause, because for this end set before him, or for this very purpose Christ suffered, that he might take away the sins of unjust men, and make unjust men to become just, and so might bring them to salvation.

Doct. 1. Christ the Lord suffered all these evils of punishment, which were due to us for our sins.

This is not so to be understood, as if in kind and particularly he had undergone all the evils, but in value only, and generally; in the sum or upcast of all, and in that which was equivalent and equipollent to all; and so, he is said to have suffered all the evils of punishment.

Reas. 1. Because he suffered generally all sorts of evil; to wit, as well spiritual in the agony and horror of his mind, as corporal in his body; and the extreme, as well positive, as privative, both in a kind of loss, and in kind of sorrow or feeling.

Reas. 2. Because he suffered from all, from whom any evil could be inflicted. He suffered from men, as well Jews, as Gentiles; as well his own domestics, as forrainers; he suffered from the powers of darkness and Hell, which were the murderers from the beginning, and the authors of all these evils, which Christ suffered from them, and their instruments; lastly, he suffered from God himself, whose cup full of wrath he drunk out.

Reas. 3. Because he suffered in every part of himself, every way that he could suffer. For he suffered in his soul horrors and unspeakable sorrows; he suffered in his body hunger, thirst, nakedness, wounds, spitting, stripes, and buffetings, and whatsoever witty malice and cruelty could devise.

Use 1. Of Direction, that continually in meditating on the passion of Christ, we may look upon the singular and incomprehensible goodness, grace, love, mercy, justice and wisdom of God, by which he sent his eternal Son to suffer such things for us, and for our salvation; and together also the abundant grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, who was willing to it, and did suffer so many and so grievous things for us.

Use 2. Of Exhortation, that from the consideration of this suffering of our Lord and Savior, we strive to stir up ourselves powerfully, that we may daily have more faith and hope about grace and our salvation to be perfected by Christ; and that our hearts may be kindled with greater heat of love towards God and Christ, and with greater zeal of the glory of his name; lastly, that with more courage, constancy, and patience, we bear all the troubles of this life, for Christ's sake, who suffered all things for us.

Doct. 2. Christ suffered all these things, neither out of any necessity of nature, neither by constraint, neither by casualty and chance, but of his own free choice of wisdom and will.

This is gathered from the Text, in that it is put amongst Christ's praises, as an example of obedience, that he thus suffered. But there is no place for praise, nor obedience, in such things as one suffers out of necessity, or chance, without the free consent of the will.

Reas. 1. Because this was the will of the Father, whereunto he would conform his will in all things, so far forth as he laid this charge upon him.

Reas. 2. Because this was the very thing, for which Christ came into the world, according to the form of covenant made between the Father and the Son, Isa 53 10.

Reas. 3. Because in this consisted the most perfect obediences, which is the way to the most perfect glory, Phil 2. 9.

Object. Every evil of punishment is against the will of the sufferer; but what Christ suffered for us were very great evils of punishment; They were therefore suffered against his will.

Ans. That evils of punishment are said always to be against the will of the sufferer;

First, Because they are against his natural inclination. For therefore punishment is only evil, because it tends to the destroying of nature, and so is against inclination of nature, whereby everything seeks the conservation of itself.

Secondly, The evil of punishment is against the will of the sufferer, conditionally; to wit, if by no other means the sufferer can attain to his wished end; but it is not always against his will absolutely. The first had place in Christ, because these passions were against the inclinations of nature, since otherwise they had brought him no pain; and they were also against his conditional will, as appears by these words; Father, if it be possible, let this cup pas... from me: But they were not against his deliberate, determinate, and absolute will. The reason is, because he suffered all out of obedience to the Father, and of love to us, and our salvation.

Use.... Of Instruction, how we may from this ground arm our minds against those temptations, that use to come by occasion of Christ's sufferings. For in this respect Christ was a stumbling stone unto the Jews, and foolishness unto the Grecians. But if we will well weigh with ourselves, that Christ suffered all these things not out of coercion, or any necessity, or any external violence, but from the obedience of love towards mankind, and that he might give us a most perfect pattern of obedience in his own person: We shall be so far from finding any stumbling block, or foolishness in these sufferings, that on the contrary, nothing could be found that was, or is more suitable to the Savior of the world.

Use 2. Of Exhortation, that calling seriously to mind this grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, out of thankfulness and mutual love to him, we may be ready with all willingness and cheerfulness of mind to undergo all sufferings, and afflictions for his sake.

Doct. 3. Christ's sufferings were an expiatory Sacrifice for our sins.

This is it, which is said in the Text, That he suffered for sins, for the unjust▪ that is, he had the virtue to take away the punishment from us, the guilt also and the spot, and to acquire to us the favor of God, and righteousness, and life eternal. It is the same that useth to be signified by satisfaction, by merit, by redemption, by restitution, or restauration made by Christ.

Reas. 1. Because this was the covenant between the Father and the Son, that if he would undergo that obedience for us, then we should be freed from our disobedience, and death, and should live thorough him, Isa. 53. 10. For this suffering was the perfecting of all his obedience.

Reas. 2. Because Christ by his suffering made satisfaction to divine justice, and repaid God as much of his honor in our name, as he had suffered in it by our sins. Therefore God's justice is now appeased; the grace of God hath had its free course, that it may derive all good upon us.

Reas. 3. Because that Christ now by virtue of his passion and consummate obedience, as it were of his own right that he acquired, makes intercession with the Father for us, that we may be, and live with him, John. 17. 24.

Use 1. Of Consolation, to the faithful against the guilt of their sin, and terrors of their conscience, that arise from sin. For in Christ, and his sufferings, we have a remedy against these wounds, that are other ways deadly.

Use 2. Of Admonition, that we would detest all sins, as things that brought our Savior to death, and would have brought a thousand deaths upon us, unless he had turned them away from us.

The sixteenth Lord's day.

Joh. 10. 17, 18.

Therefore the Father loveth me, because I lay down my life▪ that I may take it up again: None taketh it from me; but I lay it down of myself. I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it up again. This commandment received I from my Father.

CHRIST in these words expounds what he had said before of the duty, effect, and sign of a good Shepherd; to wit, that he lays down his life for his sheep. This he had applied to himself, verse 15. where two things were propounded; 1. The Object, to which this laying down of the life is referred, or which be those sheep of Christ? 2. The manner of this laying down the life. This is explained in the 16, and these two following verses. The death of Christ, or laying down of his soul or life, is explicated from the efficient cause; which is Christ himself. I lay down my life. 2. From the manner of doing of it, that Christ is a cause voluntary, and doing it from a counsel and deliberation, not of coercion. None taketh it from me, but I lay it down. 3. From the adjunct of this efficiency; that he did it not of weakness, but from power. I have authority to lay it down. This is shewn from another effect that follows this; to wit, from his resuming it again, or his resurrection. I have authority to take it up again; as if he would say, he that so lays down his life, that with power he takes it up again, he lays it not down out of coercion with weakness; but voluntarily of his own accord he doth it: But I so lay down my life; ergo. Which is illustrated here from the impulsive cause; the Fathers commandment. This commandment I received of my Father. 4. From the end, and effect; to wit, the Fathers love and delight, or complacency in this. Therefore my Father loveth me, because &c.

Doct. 1. Christ so far humbled himself for us, that he underwent death itself for us.

I lay down my life, &c. Now he underwent a double death for us; a spiritual, and a corporal death. The spiritual is about Christ's descent into Hell▪ This consisted in the separation of God's favor from the soul of Christ for a time, not really, but as to sense and feeling, and that influence, from which comfort useth to be felt; as also in impressions of divine wrath, which with horror did strike all the faculties of the soul; so that for the time the soul was at so low an ebb and concussion of all its happiness, as any creature could be, that was without sin formally inherent in itself. The death of the body is that which consists in the separation of the soul from the body; the confirmation and continuance was in the burial of Christ. Now such was the separation of the soul from the body in Christ's death, that the conjunction and union of both of them with the divine person, remained the same that it was before; as if one drawing a sword, held the scabbard in the one hand, and the sword in the other▪ there would be there a separation between the scabbard and the sword; but of neither of them from the man, that so held them: So also in this mystery, there is a separation of the soul from the body; but neither of them was separated from the divine nature, nor person, but the person still sustained both in the unity of itself, as one person with him. The reason is, because if there had been any such separation from the di: vine person, then the second person had ceased to be God-man, and so could not for that time have been our Priest or Mediator. Also a new incarnation or assumption had been made again, in the resurrection of Christ. It is most true therefore, which is in the mouths of many Divines, and used proverbially almost; That what the Son of God assumed he never laid aside again.

Reas. 1. Because the perfection and consummation of humiliation is in undergoing death, Phil. 2 8. And this also was the first reason, why he did not only undergo death, but the most vise, contemptible, and contumelious death; that is, the death of the Cross, as in that place is more especially set down.

Reas. 2. Because his charge of redeeming us required this; to wit, that he should pay that price to divine justice, which we did ow, and so be subject to the same punishment, that we were liable to. And this was also the reason, why he chose the death of the Cross, that he might show, that he did not barely sustain death, but that cursed death that was due to us, and that in our place, or for us, Gal. 3. 12.

Reas. 3. That by the most convenient way he might procure the death of sin in us, by assimilation, and making us conform to himself, Rom. 6. from verse 1. to the 8.

Use 1. Is of Information, for directing of our faith; •...o wit, that while we seek remission of our sins, and reconciliation, and salvation in God; we so have our faith in Christ, that we may be specially united to him in his sufferings, blood-shedding, and death, Rom. 3. 25.

Use 2. Is of Consolation, to all those as have such true faith; because they are out of all hazard of death or condemnation, according to that of the Apostle, Rom 8. 34.

Use 3. Is of Direction, 1. In the study of Sanctification, that with Christ we may dy to sin. 2. In the study of all obedience, love, and humility, according to the example of Christ, in whom all the perfections of these virtues we have marvelously shining to us in a most eminent and excellent way.

Doct. 2. Christ ordained his own death from certain wise deliberation and power, to dispose of it as he pleased.

I have power to lay down my li...e. From which words it appears first, that the death of Christ was voluntary. For though it was violent also, as it came from external agents, and was against Christ's internal natural inclinations; and in some sort natural also, as it was wrought by external causes naturally producing such an effect: Yet it was voluntary, not only as to the willing disposition, and choice of it, whereby Christ set himself to suffer it; but also as he suspended his own power of hindering it, and averting death, and so gave way and power to the enemies inflicting it, in which respect also his death may be called miraculous, or wonderful; because he himself, who was dying, ordered his own death, and willingly admitted the same: So that by doing he suffered, and by suffering he acted, and had his own action in it all, without which he could not have suffered by any creature whatsoever.

Reas. 1. Because it became him to dy so, that was God. For since the human nature subsisted in the f...me person with the divine, nothing could befall the human nature either in doing, or suffering, but as the divine willed and ordained it.

Reas. 2. Because otherwise Christ in his death had not been together both Priest, Sacrifice, and Altar. For though it be the part of a Sacrifice to be passive, and to be offered up to the Father; yet it is the part of the Priest by being active about it, and ordering the whole, to offer up the Sacrifice.

Use 1. Is of Information, for arming our faith against temptations and scandals, which use to arise hence, in that Christ, in whom we believe, as our God, was subject to death. For Christ died not of weakness and coercion, but by certain resolution, and of his own proper will and power; so that the divine nature and power of Christ appeared not only in his resurrection, but if the thing be rightly considered, had as great a hand, and was as evident in his death also.

Use 2. Is of Direction, for our preparation to undergo death, in whatsoever way God would have it come to pass. For from these two things that were in Christ, that he both willingly underwent death; and then also ordered it himself; the first of these lies upon us all, out of duty; that we be ready at such time, and such manner to dy, as God is pleased we should. The other, though it cannot be performed by us, because we have not the power of laying down our lives, and ordering our deaths; yet by faith, and holy desire to our comfort, we ought to seek this of God, and look for it, that in Christ, who ordered his own death for us, he would order our death unto our salvation, and unto his own glory.

Doct. 3. Christ underwent this death by his Fathers command.

It is in the Text; This command I received of my Father. And this command was neither any of the law of nature, nor of the moral, ceremonial, or judicial; but it was a peculiar condition of the mediatory office, that was laid upon Christ by the Father, and of his own free consent. It was therefore a command to the Messiah alone, as he was our Mediator.

Reas. 1. Because as by disobedience of the first Adam sin and death entered into the world; so by the obedience of the second Adam, righteousness and salvation should be brought us; and as the disobedience of Adam was the breach of the command given to him; so also the obedience of Christ, was to be in the keeping of that command that was given him with his office of mediatorship, or whereby the office itself was also imposed upon him.

Reas. 2. Because in Christ we were to have such an example of obedience, as was most perfect in keeping the commandments of God.

Use 1. Of Resutation against the superstition & presumption of popish Monks, who have devised a kind of perfection in obedience of councils, beside and beyond that, which stands in keeping of the commandments of God; when yet Christ himself, that hath given us the whole pourtraict and pattern of perfect obedience, confesses, that he went no further than to obey that, which the Father commanded him.

Use 2. Of Admonition, that we may set ourselves to follow Christ in this point, that we may even unto death itself, cleave fast unto the commandments of God.

Doct. 4. God the Father loveth Christ for this obedience.

This is in the Text; Therefore the Father loveth me; that is, is delighted with this obedience, and so delighted, that he commends it to be looked upon by every Christian, and all such as are Christ's.

Reas. 1. Because by Christ's death, God was most glorified by Christ, John. 12. 18. and 17. 4.

Reas. 2. Because by that death of Christ, the counsel of God was fulfilled, whereby he had from eternity appointed in himself to communicate his grace and glorious good will unto men, Ephes. 1. 5, 6, 7, 9.

Use 1. Of Resutation, against such as use to conclude from such phrases, whereby God is said to love men for this, and not for that; that such men's works were the first causes of God's love. For Christ was the Son of God beloved of him from all eternity; and yet the Father is said to have loved him also for his obedience.

Use 2. Of Consolation, to all such as are in Christ by Faith. For as the Father loveth Christ, so will he also love them, that are in Christ.

Use 3. Of Exhortation, that with all cheerfulness we stir up ourselves to obey God; because God loveth such as obey him.

The seventeenth Lord's day.

Joh. 10. 17, 18.

17, I lay down my life, that I may take it up again.

18. None taketh it from me, but I lay it down of myself. I have authority to lay it down, and I have authority or power to take it up again. This commandment received I of my Father.

SEeing the Text is the same, that it was before, the same analysis, that was there, may here also serve, and be made use of.

Doct. 5. Christ rose again from the dead.

For this is it, that is understood in the Text, by taking up his life again. For this taking up again, is a reunion of things that were separated before: And in this reunion of the soul and body, there was a change or motion from an inferior condition to a superior of that, which was before in a better also or superior to this, from which the change is now: And therefore it is properly called a reassumption, or taking again, and not barely a resurrection. The form then from which this change was made, was from his state of humiliation; and the form to which, was the state of exaltation and glory; the subject of this transmutation or motion was Christ's human nature, which had fallen unto the lowest and abjectest condition of his humiliation. Christ's own body arose again from true death, and from the grave: And his soul also is said to have risen again, as it was now restored and reunited unto the body, and so delivered from the state and dominion of death; or as delivered from the privation of its act in the body, wherein there was some diminution in its relative perfection. There were two parts of this resurrection, revivification or a quickening again of the human nature, by the renewed union of soul and body; and its going out of the grave, to make it manifest, that it was restored. This resurrection was confirmed moreover by Angels, by the Scriptures, by Christ himself, and by the assent and eye-witness, or experience of many witnesses, in divers apparitions reiterated from time to time during the space of forty days.

Reas. 1. Because it was unbeseeing and impossible that the Son of God, and author of life, could be long detained by the power of death, Acts 2. 24.

Reas. 2. That by this means Christ himself might be justified in the spirit, or according to the spirit of holiness, that is by the power of his God-head justified to be God as well as man in one person; justly and fully declared and proved to be God, by his raising of himself again from the dead, Rom. 1. 4. 1 Tim. 3. 16. and might show that we were justified by him from our sins, for which he died, and rose also again to show that he had overcome for us, and delivered us from them, Rom. 4. 25.

Reas. 3. That being now alive, he might powerfully apply to us, what before he had purchased by his death, Rom. 5 10.

Reas. 4. That he hereby might be the cause, foundation, and sign of assurance, and earnest to us of our resurrection, as well spiritual, as bodily, Rom. & ▪ 1 Cor. 15. 12, 13, 14.

Use, Is of Information, for the direction of our faith, that believing in Christ unto justification and salvation, we may so lay hold on Christ's death, that we still also look upon his resurrection, wherein his victory for us was shewn, and his power over death, and efficacy to work in us appeared, and which renders his death full of comfort to us, Rom. 5. 34. 1 Pet. 3 2.

Doct. 6. Christ's resurrection came to pass by his own proper virtue and power.

It is clear in the Text; I take it up again; and I have power of taking it up again. For this is the difference between Christ's resurrection, and that of others; that they rise again by the power of another, to wit, of Christ, as many, as are his: But Christ by his own power, as Lord of life and death, and therefore hath the disposing of both, as he sees good. Neither doth it make anything against this truth, that it is often said, that God raised him again from the dead; and the Spirit of God. For the works of the Trinity from without are undivided, common to all the three Persons.

Reas. 1. Because what is thus attributed to God, is therefore also attributed to the Son together with the Father, and Holy Spirit, and is not taken from him, as is clear by our Text.

Reas. 2. When Christ is said to be raised by God, or the Spirit of God, then properly his human nature is considered, as raised by Father, Son and Holy Spirit, though not always all three expressed; but now one, now another: But when he is said to have raised himself, his divine nature and person is spoken of and considered, as raising his assumed human nature, together with the Father, and the Spirit.

Reas. 3. Because by the Spirit and glory of God whereby Christ is said to be raised; no other virtue or power can be understood, than that of the divine nature, which was in Christ.

Use 1. Of Information to confirm our faith about the person of Christ. For he that by his own power •...rose from death, cannot be a bare man only; but must of necessity be acknowledged to have been God also. For the raising of a dead body, is no less divine a work, than the creation of a live body. He that raised himself from the dead, at the same time while he was dead in one of his natures, yet had life, and the fountain of life in his other nature; to wit, the divine, at his command, whereby he did so great a work, as to raise his other nature to life again. As Christ therefore by his death proved himself to be true man; so also in and by his resurrection, he proved himself to be the eternal and natural Son of God, and true God especially; not by office only, and that most manifestly.

Use 2. Of Consolation to all such as are in Christ. For they are in him, who hath virtue and power to raise them again from the dead, and to give them eternal life, John 6. 39, 40

Doct. 7. Christ's resurrection was for us, or to do us good.

This is hence gathered, because in the Text, the common end of laying down his life, and taking it up again for all, is mentioned. For, for such as he laid down his life, for such also he took it up again. Now the resurrection of Christ turns to our good, in another way than his death doth. For his death hath the account of satisfying and deserving for us: But his resurrection not so, but it hath the place and account of a samplar and efficient cause, and some way of an efficacious and powerful applier and perfecter.

Reas. 1. Because Christ in his resurrection represented some way all the elect of God, and by a virtual containing had them all in himself, and brought them all back from death.

Reas. 2. Because the same Spirit, that raised Christ again from the dead, by a certain sort of communicating the same resurrection, quickened as well the souls, as bodies of the faithful, that they may be made conform to the likeness of his resurrection, Rom 8. 11.

Reas. 3. Because that same Spirit quickens us by the power and virtue of the resurrection of Christ.

Reas. 4. Because the whole reparation of our nature will be after the image and pattern of the resurrection of Christ, Rom. 6. 5.

Use 1. Of Consolation, because in the resurrection of Christ, as brought to pass for us, or for our good, we have our victory over Death, Devil, Sin, and Hell, and all our Enemies, ready purchased and prepared for us. It is not therefore left to us to fight, that we may overcome, but only in sincerity that we may mind this, to lay hold on the victory already acquired by Christ for us, and that in the same manner we may strive to keep it, prosecute it, and more and more put ourselves in perfect possession of it by faith in Christ.

Use 2. Of Admonition, that by no means we suffer sin to reign in our mortal bodies, but that we may spiritually imitate such as arise from the dead.

The eighteenth Lord's day.

Mark 16. 19.

So then after the Lord had spoken unto them, he was received up into heaven, and sat on the right hand of God.

HEre is explicated a singular act of Christ, after his resurrection: Where mark, 1. The motion, wherein the act is designed. And 2. The thing brought to pass by that motion. The motion is but the means: The thing done by the motion, was its end. The motion was as it were the way: and the thing done by it, the end of that way, and the rest and perfection, that was to be attained by it. This motion was Christ's ascending into Heaven: The thing brought to pass by it, was Christ's sitting down at the right hand of God. The motion then is described from the term to which it was made, which was heaven; But the term from which it was, is also understood, which was the earth. The thing done by this motion, is also explained by its adjuncts; to wit, Christ's glory and power, and his quiet and settled possession of these; all which are metaphorically signified in these words; He sate down on the right hand of God. For the placing on God's right hand, signifies a communication of divine glory and power; and sitting on his right hand, denotates the quiet and settled possession of this glory and power.

Doct. 1. Christ ceased to be upon earth by his bod...lie presence after the fortieth day after his resurrection.

This is clearly enough signified in the Text; by these words, He was received up into Heaven; that is, ...e ceased to be here upon earth. The time is here but generally intimated, Act. 1. 3. We say, by his bodily presence; because by his spiritual, and divine presence, by his Godhead and his Spirit, he is present with his own in a gracious manner, according to his promise, Even unto the end of the world, Mat. 28. 20. We call it also his bodily presence; rather than his real presence, because real presence is more properly opposite to an imaginary, or feigned presence only, than to a divine and spiritual.

Reas. 1. Because it because not Christ to abide longer upon earth, when now he had left off to be earthly, as he was in the state of his humility: Which leaving off to be earthly, we understand not of the substance of his body, but of the manner, quality, and suit or garb, as it were of his body, which now from earthly or infirm, was turned to be heavenly and glorious.

Reas. 2. Because his bodily presence had not been for our good, but rather to our hurt, for as much as the Spirit, the Comforter, his true Vicegerent here upon earth, could not be poured out, and given, before Christ did ascend into Heaven, Job. 16. 7.

Reas. 3. Because Christ had now done the work, which he had to do upon earth, for glorifying his Father there; and therefore was now to return to that he had before the world was made, and manifest it by exaltation of his human nature, as much as before he had hidden it, by laying it aside as it were, during the days of his weakness, or humility, John. 17. 4.

Use, Is of Refutation, against Papists, Ubiquitaries, and other false Prophets, who designing some definite and determinate places upon earth, dare say, behold, here Christ is bodily, and behold, there Christ is bodily, according to that of Mat. 24. 23.

Doct. 2. Christ, when he left the earth, went up into the highest Heavens.

This is clear enough in the Text, compared with other Scriptures, where the Heaven of glory and of bliss is called the highest Heaven, and the third Heaven, which is all one.

Reas. 1. Because it is most fit, that his human nature, which is now made immortal and glorious, should be seised and possessed of a place, that was convenient for itself, and its condition; and such was only the highest, or third Heavens: the other two being subject to corruption, or to a change.

Reas. 2. As he opened that Heaven for us, which was shut upon us for our sins; so it was expedient, that by his own proper ascension and going thither, he should make this plain unto us.

Reas. 3. He ascended, that he might on our behalves also take possession of the Kingdom of Heaven, and might raise us to certain hope, that thorough him, we should come to the same place and condition.

Reas. 4. He ascended, that he might dispatch such other things, as yet remained to be done for us. Now such were his intercession, and mediation at the right hand of his Father, for us; his giving, and sending, and shedding abroad of his Spirit, to supply his room, and to be the comforter of his; lastly, the universal government of all things for our good; and the like.

Use 1. Of Refutation, against such as fain Christ's human nature so to be in Heaven, as that yet it is together and at the same time bodily upon earth. For that he might ascend to heaven, it is clearly said, that he was received up into Heaven; and therefore that he might ascend into Heaven, he left the earth. For if the consequence be good, where unto the good Angel dictates; He is arisen; therefore, he is not here; to wit, in the grave: Then no more doubt can be made of this consequence; he is ascended into Heanen; therefore is not here on earth.

Use 2. Of Direction in our Faith, and worshipping or adoration of Christ; to wit, that we think not now carnally and in an earthly manner of Christ, but worship him in spirit and in truth, as placed in highest glory, and divine power in the Heavens.

Use 3. Of Admonition, that we may remove our minds and affections from things earthly, and set them upon things heavenly, and that are above, where Christ our treasure, sits at the right hand of the Father, that there, and with him our conversation may be, Mat. 6 21. Col. 3. 1. Phil. 3. 20.

Doct. 3. Christ in Heaven hath the possession of all highest glory that a created nature can be capable of.

This is hence gathered, in that he is said to be seated on the right hand of God; whereby is signified, that unto God himself he hath the next place in dignity, and so not only above all men, and their blessed spirits, but above the glorious Angels themselves.

Reas. 1. Because Christ's human nature, of which we here peculiarly speak, came next up in dignity to God himself, by free grace, and personal union and communion with the God-head; and therefore it was most meet also, that in pr...eminence of glory and dignity, he should be next unto God himself.

Reas. 2. Because Christ is the head of all Saints and blessed ones, both men and Angels; from whom is derived all dignity & glory upon all such as are gathered together in one body under him, as the Angels also are. It was needful therefore, that as he received the Spirit of grace without measure; that so also he should be adorned with glory and majesty above all other creatures.

Reas. 3. Because both the grace and glory of the Church, tends to the glory of Christ; as the glory of Christ tends to the glory of God, 1 Cor. 3. 22, 23.

Use, Is of Consolation, to all the faithful in Christ; because not only the glory of the head redounds to the glory of all its members, but we have also a sure promise concerning this, that as in this life we are partakers of the sufferings and patience of Jesus Christ, so also in the life to come, we shall be made partakers of his glory, Rom. 8. 17.

Doct. 4. Christ together with his highest dignity, bath also highest power.

This the Text evidenceth, in as much as God's right hand signifieth his power; and sitting down on his right hand, signifies the highest communion and society with God in this power, that can be.

Reas. 1. Because dignity and power might so have the same degrees. For dignity separated from power, is no more but a dead title, and therefore seeing Christ hath highest dignity and glory, it follows also that he is endued with highest power.

Reas. 2. Because Christ is constituted Lord, as well to correct & govern, as to preserve & glorify his Church. He must therefore of necessity both have the power of right, and the power of strength, fitting and competent for these ends. For the Lord hath both a power of right, and of might, to exercise and put in execution all this, as well immediately, and by himself, as mediately, and by instruments, or servants. And this is that power that Christ professeth was given unto him, in Heaven, and on earth, Mat. 28. 18. Now it is given to Christ, and agreeth to him most properly, as he is Mediator, or as man assumed to the unity of one person with God, but not so properly as God; and therefore it is said to agree to him, as he is the son of man, John 5. 27.

Use, Is of Consolation. For though this divine power of Christ be terrible to his enemies, yet to believers it brings firm hope, and affiance, and comfort; because as Christ himself saith, John. 1. 9. 24. such an one hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation, but is passed from death unto life. And hither also tendeth, Rom. 8. 34, 35. when there the Apostle proves, that nothing can separate from the love of Christ; because he sits on the right hand of God.

Doct. 5. Christ hath the quiet and unmovable possession of this power

For in this sense it is, that he is said to sit on the right hand of God.

Reas. 1. Because he hath overcome all his enemies virtually; and shall actually in his own appointed time subdue them all fully, and bring them under the yoke.

Reas. 2. Because there is nothing on earth, or under the earth, can in the least trouble or molest this his possession.

Reas. 3. Because this state and condition of Christ is not only immortal and free from all change by virtue of Covenant and divine Promise, but also of its own nature, being now accomplished according to free Covenant; and such will the happiness of the least Saint be.

Use, This also is of Consolation, which though it may strike terror and amazement in the hearts of Christ's enemies, yet it raiseth and rouseth up the dejected and drooping spirits of all such, as put their trust and confidence in him; for he sitteth on the right hand of God in power and majesty, there making intercession for us.

The nineteenth Lord's day.

Mat. 25. from verse 31. to 39.

Vers. 31 When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy Angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory.

32 And before him shall be gathered all Nations, and he shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats.

33 And he shall set the sheep on his right hand, but the goats on the left.

34 Then shall the King say to them on his right hand, Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the Kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world.

35 For I was an hungered, and ye gave me meat: I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink: I was a stranger, and ye took me in:

36 Naked, and ye clothed me: I was sick, and ye visited me: I was in prison, and ye came unto me.

37 Then shall the righteous answer him, saying, Lord, when saw we thee an hungered, and fed thee? or thirsty, and gave thee drink?

38 When saw we thee a stranger, and took thee in? or naked, and clothed thee?

IN this place the acts or procedure of the last day are expounded. The parts are two; Christ's coming, and the end of his coming, which is the last •...udgement. In this last judgment; 1. The preparation thereto is described. 2. The execution of the sentence. In the preparation, Christ's majesty and glory, in which he shall then appear, is c•...iefly here set down; 1. From his train and attendance that shall wait upon him; consisting chiefly of the glorious Angels. 2. From his glorious Throne. 3. From the effect of this coming; to wit, to the gathering of all mankind together, and separating of the good from the bad. The sentence to be pronounced, is twofold; 1. Of salvation to the good. 2. Of condemnation to the evil. The sentence of salvation is declared; 1. From its causes. 2. From its adjuncts. The principal cause is God's good will, which is shewn; 1. From the effect of that grace or favor, that is the cause of our salvation, which is the blessing of God. 2. From the relatiou that thence ariseth; which is that of a Father giving an inheritance, and of a Son's receiving the same. 3. From the adjunct of time, that this salvation was not then first appointed for them, but prepared for them from the beginning of the world. The adjunct signs also, whereby this salvation is declared, are good works; which by the Trope or borrowed manner of speaking, called Syne•...doche of the special put for the general, by the learned, are designed by the works of mercy; and are amplified by that relation, which these works have to Christ himself, whilst they are exercised towards his members. The sentence of condemnation is quite contrary to the former, handled by the comparison and proportion of like things. The execution of the sentence, is briefly set down in the last verse of this Chapter.

Doct. 1. The universal or general judgment is most certainly to come to pass.

This judgment is called universal, that it may be distinguished from that particular one, which in some sort is exercised on the greatest part of men even in this life, upon everyone in particular, when they pass out of this life. For this comprehends all men together, and therefore is called universal. It may be also called universal, or understood so, because in it upon all men's and angels deeds, and matters generally without exception, sentence shall pass. It is also called the last judgment, because after it no new judgment is to be looked for; but the execution of that judgment only shall follow upon it.

Reas. 1. Because before that time the judgment of God towards men is not completed and fully perfected; because in this life through God's forbearance and long patience, evil men in joy many good things; and good men are oppressed with many evils. From this consideration many of the very Heathens themselves collected, that rewards and punishments were more justly and equally to be distributed, where it should be ill with evil men, and not well at all; and should go well with good men, and not ill at all. Which reason seems also to be confirmed by our Lord himself, Luke 26. 15. and the Apostle Paus, 1 Cor. 15. 19. Now after this life, while the Soul remains separate from the body, the judgment of God is not complete, nor fully accomplished, because it is not passed upon the whole man in his full being, as he was in this life, while he committed the things that were to be judged. Therefore another and fuller •...udgement than that on the souls departed only, followeth to be looked for, which is this last judgment, and shall be certainly in its own time.

Reas. 2. It is most convenient & agreeable to God's glory, that God in & by Christ, in a most glorious manner should make manifest before all, as well Angels as men, as well his mercy as his justice; that he might have the public and solemn glory of both mercy and justice; and this is the thing, that at that time is to pass come in that universal and last judgment.

Reas 3. This belongs also to the glory of God, the joy of the faithful, and just confusion of the unfaithful, that before their faces they may see the promises, and threatenings of God almost perfectly and accurately fulfilled, not only particularly on their own persons now in the body, as before death; but universally upon all others, both men and Angels: Which shall then only be, when this last and universal judgment shall be held.

Use 1. Of Information, that we take care to have our faith and hope solidly confirmed and strongly rooted about this article; least we be any ways troubled with profane blasphemies and mockings of Infidels and Heathens, who first cast down and trample upon the profession of this article by their life and manners; and then also by words and speeches fight and dispute against it: Concerning whom we are admonished by the Apostle St. Peter, 2 Pet. 3. 3, 4. &c.

Use 2. Of Admonition, that with all fear and trembling we watch over our ways, as those that certainly mind and look for the day of this judgment, 1 Pet. 1. 17. 2 Pet. 3. 11, 12.

Doct. 2. Our Lord Jesus Christ will be Judge in this judgment.

Reas 1. Because it belongs to his Kingly office and power, whereby he was made Lord and King; and had all judgment committed to him.

Reas. 2. Because Christ is he, from whom, and by whom the faithful have salvation adjudged unto them, even in this life; and from whom also unbelievers have death adjudged unto them. Now it is the same judgment, that in this life both ways is begun, and in the last judgment shall be fully manifested and perfected.

Reas. 3. Because at that time it is, that Christ should fully and actually triumph over all enemies and opposite power, and crown all his own servants, soldiers, and adherents. And this is most conveniently and gloriously done in form of public and solemn judgment.

Use, Is of Consolation, chiefly to the faithful, because they shall have him for their Judge, whom they received for their Redeemer, Justifier, Sanctifier, and Intercessor, or Advocate; from whom therefore they may with all confidence expect all good.

Doct. 3. Christ's glory at that time shall be incomparable.

It hence appears from the Text; that if the Angels so glorious shall then be his Ministers of State and attendants; and his Throne with all the rest of that procedure shall be so glorious, it must needs be, that Christ himself be excellent in glory above all that we can think of.

Reas. 1. Because the exercise of this judgment belongs to the manifestation of Christ's highest exaltation.

Reas. 2. Because the very end of his coming was to give glory to such as sought God in him. It is fit then that Christ appear in greatest glory.

Reas. 3. The majesty of the supreme Judge of the world, and the terror and confusion of his enemies, that they must be put to, require that he should come clothed in the greatest glory.

Use, Of Consolation, to the faithful, against the crosses and contempts, they are liable to in this world together with Christ; because as now they are partakers of the cross of Christ, so then they shall be partakers of his glory.

Doct. 4. In this judgment the condition of the godly and ungodly shall be quite unlike and opposite one to another.

This is taught in the Text; by the separation of the sheep from the goats; by the right hand and the left; by ...ome ye blessed, and go ye cursed.

Reas. 1. Because there is a great unlikeness and opposition in the lives and ways of the godly, and ungodly, while they are in this world.

Reas. 2. Because there is a great dissimilitude or opposition between the promises that belong to the godly, and the threatenings that belong to the ungodly.

Reas. 3. Because there is great disparity and opposition between the manifestation of greatest mercy, and of greatest execution of justice.

Use, Of Admonition, that we separate ourselves from ungodly men, as much, and in such manner, as we can; that is, if we cannot separate in places, yet in internal affections, as well as external conversation, we should be as unlike unto them as can be in that wherein they are ungodly.

Doct. 5. The cause of any blessing to the godly, is the mercy of God; but the cause of any curse to the ungodly, is their own fault.

This is clear in the Text, when the godly are called blessed of the Father, But the ungodly, barely are called ye cursed, not of the Father, nor from the Father, nor from God; because though it is God that curseth them, yet the first cause of this curse is in their sins.

Reas. 1. Because all good is from God, who is the greatest good, and chiefly good in himself. But all evil of punishment ariseth from evil of fault; and this evil of fault is from the creature itself, breaking the Law and Order that God hath set to it.

Reas. 2. Because the blessing of life is the mere free gift of God; but the curse of death is the reward or wages of sin, Rom. 6. 23.

Reas. 3. Preservation from the curse, which is by God's favor, is necessary for our blessing; but to incur the curse, there is nothing more needful, but only to neglect or contemn that way, that leads unto the blessing.

Use, Of Direction, that we may always give God the glory in every good thing, that we either have, or seek, or look for; and always blame ourselves for any evil that befalls us.

Doct. 6. The blessing of the godly consists in the communion that they shall have with God in Christ; and the curse of the ungodly, in the separation of them from such communion:

This is plain in the words, come ye blessed, and go ye cursed.

Reas. 1. Because this is the end, whereunto all the godly look; desiring nothing more, than still to approach nearer, and nearer unto God. The ungodly, on the contrary, shun nothing more than God, and such things wherein God hath appointed to show and impart his gracious and singular presence.

Reas. 2. Because man's happiness not coming of man himself, is therefore to be sought from without himself, and that from his union or conjunction with the greatest good, and that is the cause and fountain of all good. Therefore of necessity it consists in communion with God; and from deprivation of this communion, greatest misery must needs follow.

Reas. 3. Because the perfectest act of our life, is that which is most closely and intimately carried towards God; as all that we do well consists in this, that therein we live unto God; and the privation of such acting, its want and absence all misery must accompany.

Use, Of Direction, that even in this life we may wholly be taken up with this, to seek communion with God, and shun and take heed of all separation from him.

Doct. 7. The certain signs and tokens of this blessing, are good works; and of this curse, are evil works.

This is largely and clearly laid open in the Text.

Reas. 1. Because good works came from the same grace or favor of God, from which the blessing itself comes upon them; and evil works joined with obstinacy and impenitency, comes from that same malice, and malignancy, which God hath cursed and adjudged.

Reas. 2. Because God of his free grace hath promised the blessing unto good works; and of his unspotted justice hath appointed the curse unto evil works.

Reas. 3. Because in good works there is a certain disposal and preparation of the way to obtain the blessing; and in evil works, there is not only the proportion of a way, but of deserving, or a mertitorious cause even unto the curse.

Use, Of Admonition, that we have great care of our actions through every part of our life, because according to them, men are either condemned or saved. For such as the life is, such is the end.

The twentieth Lord's day.

1 Cor. 6. 19.

What, know you not that your body is the Temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you, which ye have of God, and ye are not your own?

IN the words of the Text are contained a most powerful argument against Fornication and the like sins; and it is taken from the contrary end, because the end of Christian's bodies is quite opposite to this sin. And that end is declared from the subject possessed, and possessor and indweller of it, the Holy Ghost; The subject is again explained by a Metaphor of a Temple, because namely our bodies are as it were houses consecrated to him. And that this argument may be made the clearer and stronger, the Apostle adds, that so the holy Ghost is the possessor of this Temple, or house, that he himself also is the indweller of it. And both these relations that we have to the Holy Ghost, are illustrated from their efficient cause; to wit, that they are of God; and from their consequent effect and adjunct; to wit, faith and certain knowledge of these relations between our bodies and the Holy Spirit, in these words; Know ye not brethren, &c.

Doct 1. The Holy Ghost is true and coeternal God with the Father, and eternal Son.

The Text doth give many reasons for this Doctrine.

Reas. 1. Because to have one and the same spirit with God, is all one as to be glued or joined to God, verse. 17.

Reas. 2. Because a Temple is not lawfully consecrated to any but to God; much less could it be lawful that a man instead of, or for a Temple should be consecrated to that which is not God. But here such a Temple which is most sacred is said to be consecrated to the Holy Ghost.

Reas. 3. Because the Holy Ghost is so said to be in us, as that we become his of right; and of duty; that is, God's rightful possession, as the scope of the words clearly demonstrate.

Use 1. Of Information, for directing our faith arightly, not only unto the Father, and Son, but also unto the Holy Ghost, as the same one and true God.

Use 2. Of Admonition, that we diligently take heed to ourselves, that we neither contemn nor neglect any holy thing, that comes or is breathed from the Holy Spirit; as the whole Scripture is said to have come from the inbreathing, or inspiration of the Holy Spirit; and all the motions of godliness are only attributed to the Holy Spirit, as to their Author. Likewise all the gifts of grace are bred in us from and by this Spirit of grace. In these all therefore we must take heed, that in no wise we resist the Holy Ghost, or wittingly, and willingly sin against him.

Doct. 2. The Holy Ghost himself is given unto the faithful. This appears in the Text.

Reas. 1. In that our bodies are called the Temples of the Holy Ghost.

Reas. 2. In that he is said to be in us.

Reas. 3. In that we are said to have him, or to get him from God. Now the Holy Ghost is said to be given unto us, when he hath a singular relation unto us, and that for our good; that is, for our sanctification, & salvation of our souls; & moreover, because he powerfully works these things in us, that are agreeable to his most holy nature, and which can no way be derived to us from flesh and blood. And hence it is also, that the gifts of the Holy Ghost, are called the Holy Ghost also, by that trope or borrowed kind of speech, whereby the cause is put for the effect, which Scholars call a Metonymy.

Use 1. Of Exhortation, as well to thanksgiving to God, that gives so divine a gift; as to religious prayers, and calling upon God's name, that he would keep unto us, and more and more communicate to us this divine gift, Luk 11. 13.

Use 2 Of Admonition, to take heed of all such things, whereby the Holy Spirit is said either to be grieved, or extinguished; that is, from the grievousness of all such sin, as fights against the holiness of this divine Spirit, so that he cannot delight to dwell in us, but wholly, or in great measure withdraws himself from us.

Doct. 3. The Holy Spirit is not communicated to our souls only, but to our bodies also.

It is in the Text, when our bodies are also called the Temples of the Spirit.

Reas. 1. Because as Christ redeemed not our souls only, but the whole man; so also the Holy Spirit ought to bring into subjection and possession the whole man to God, and to Christ.

Reas. 2. Because many duties of a spiritual life must be performed by the body also, and therefore the body ought to be subject to the Holy Spirit, and as a vessel, or instrument, be wholly in his power.

Reas. 3. Because our bodies are made liable to sin, and by sin to death, from which we must be freed by the Holy Spirit dwelling in us, Rom. 8. 11.

Use 1. Of Admonition, that we suffer not sin to reign in our natural bodies; that we offer not our members weapons of unrighteousness to sin, but weapons of righteousness to God, Rom. 6. 12, 13.

Use 2. Of Exhortation, that we glorify God in our body, as it follows in the Text, verse 20. For we ought to have that care of our body in order to things spiritual, that is due to the Temple of God, as in the Text; and to an offering to be offered up in the Temple of God, Rom. 12. 1.

Doct. 4. The indwelling of this Spirit is a flat enemy to the 〈◊〉 of sin in us.

This is the consequence of the argument in the Text; to wit, that the Temple of God cannot be prostituted to whoredom and other such sins, without Sacrilege.

Reas. 1. Because there should be an agreement between the Temple, and him whose temple it is, or to whom it is dedicated, as it is, 2 Cor. 6. 16. what agreement hath the Temple of God with Idols? For by a like reason we may say; What agreement hath the temple of God with reigning sin?

Reas. 2. Because therefore the Holy Spirit dwells in believers, that he might impart holiness to them; and as his nature, and name, so also his indwelling and operation is an enemy to all ungodliness.

Reas. 3. Because if the Kingdom of sin should prevail in the Temple and dwelling of the Holy Spirit, this would turn to the disgrace, and disho... of the Holy Spirit himself. And this is indeed the thing, that is done, when some profane men blaspheme and mock at the name of God, & of the Holy Ghost, because of the unworthy carriage of those, that make profession to be led by this Holy Spirit.

Use 1. Of Reproof, against such as turn the Temple of the Holy Ghost into 〈◇〉 Den of Thieves, or into a Cage of unclean birds.

Use 2. Of Admonition, that we give no place to sin either in our souls or bodies, but as far as is possible, that we imitate Christ, who, as it is written, Mat. 25. did cast out of the Temple of God, even buyers and sellers, and the tables of money changers, and John 2 15. with a wl...ip drave out of the Temple sheep and beeves.

Doct. 5. All the faithful ought: to have both faith and experience about this indwelling of the Holy Spirit in them.

This is intimated in these words; Do ye not know brethren; that is ye ought not to be ignorant of this, but to believe this, and 〈◇〉 know it from your own proper experience, or fe...ling.

Reas. 1. Because this is amongst the greatest benefits that belong to our salvation.

Reas. 2. Because from this benefit depends the knowledge of all the rest that God hath freely given to us, 1 Cor. 2. 12. So that the same may here ...e said, that is said of Christ, 2 Cor. 13. 5. Know ye not that Christ is in you, &c. So here, Know ye not what the Holy Ghost is in you &c.

Use 1. Of Direction, that we try ourselves in this point, and never rest, as if it were well with us, until unto our comfort, we can perceive that the Holy Spirit dwelleth in us.

Use 2. Of Exhortation, that we study to have this knowledge lively and powerfully, according to the intent of the Apostle here, who intimates to us, that this knowledge, if it be such as it should be, cannot consist with whoredom, or any such like impurity of life.

The one and twentieth Lord's day.

Eph. 5. 25, 26, 27.

Vers. 25, Husbands, love your wives, even as Christ also loved the Church, and gave himself for it.

26, That he might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the Word.

27, That he might present it to himself a glorious Church, not having spot or wrinkle, or any such thing: But that it should be holy and without blemish.

IT is the Apostle's purpose in this place to stir up men to the duty of love to their wives. And he illustrates this duty and persuades it from the example of Christ's love to his Church; and in the example, the love of Christ towards his Church is declared from its effects; whereof the first is, that he laid down his life for her. The second is, the end and effect of the former; to wit, that by virtue of his death, he sanctified and purified the Church unto himself. The third is, the effect and end of both the former, that he namely makes her glorious. The fourth is, the conjunction and union that the Church hath with Christ; to wit, that she is his body, and of his flesh and bones, verse 30. The manner of which union and its nature is shewn to consist in a mystery, and not in any carnal or bodily way, but in a most spiritual and hidden way.

Doct. 1. The Church is the whole company and community of the elect.

This is hence gathered, because she is here described and designed by Christ's spiritual love to her, as ought the love of an husband to be to his wife. Now this love includes always in itself a differenceing of her beloved, separating of her from all other, and so it is nothing else but an election or choice made of her before others. This is to be understood of a company chosen unto eternal life. Now this company is considered of, two manner of ways: First, as election lies in the absolute and internal counsel of God. Secondly, as it is described and manifested by its effect of calling, and the blessing that follows on it. They that are chosen the first way they are members of the Church only virtually, and potentially to be such in time; but such a power as is determinate, and certainly to be brought forth into act in due time, by the decrees of God. Therefore the elect not yet called, are not yet actually, and in themselves formal members of the Church. The second way, as the act of vocation and effect of election is there, it makes men actual and formal members of the Church. Now that first effect of election internal, which is proper to the elect, is effectual calling▪ which 〈◇〉 a kind of external election as it were made in time. Therefore the Church hath her name rather from this calling, than from justification, sanctification, or glorification, unto which this accrues moreover, that by this means the company or community of actual believers is fitly designed, seeing that none are ordinarily called effectually, but such, as by actual faith answer that call.

Use, Is of Direction, how we may obtain to ourselves the certainty of our election; to wit, if we can be certain of our effectual calling; that is, be sure by inward feeling and experience of our true faith and unfeigned repentance, of their operations on, and in our hearts, and by the effects, that thence follow.

Doct. 2. This Church is the body of Christ.

Reas. 1. It is called his body by way of proportion or similitude, not unto a body politick, as is found in worldly Cities, or Commonwealths; but unto a natural body, such as is that of man.

Now it is called the body of Christ; for its most near union that it hath with Christ, as being as it were flesh of his flesh, and bone of his bone, as it is in the Text.

Reas. 2. Because of that dependence it hath from Christ, as its head. For as all sense and motion of a sensitive creature is derived from the head into every particular member, so also all spiritual virtue is derived by influence from Christ into his Church.

Reas. 3 Because of the union and communion that the faithful have amongst themselves in Christ, which is the communion of Saints; and the joints, whereby these members are coupled together. The bonds also of this conjunction, are the Spirit, Faith and Charity. By the spirit they are properly conjoin'd with God in Christ, and also amongst themselves: but by Faith they are properly conjoin'd to God in Christ only: and by Charity most properly, they are conjoin'd amongst themselves.

Use 1. Of Consolation to all believers, because they are made partakers of so great dignity, as to be assumed to the body of Christ; on which behalf, they may also certainly expect all good things from Christ.

Use 2 Is of Admonition, that we dishonor not this most holy body of Christ with our life and manners; but with all our care and diligence may go about this, that our conversation may be such, as is worthy of them, that have so near a conjunction with Christ and his most holy servants.

Doct. 3. The Church in that acception of the word, as she is mystically considered, is one only, holy and universally, Catholic.

These things are understood of her mystical estate, because in her visible or external estate, she is neither one, nor Catholic, nor altogether holy. These things are thus gathered from the Text: she is one, because she makes but up one body of Christ: neither hath he more bodies but one: She is holy, because she is said to be sanctified and purified by Christ, to wit, by separation from the world, by pardon of her sins in justification; by renovation of our inherent righteousness in sanctification of this life, and perfecting of it in the life to come. She is lastly Universal or Catholic, because all the elect or faithful of all Nations, and of all times, and places, make up but one and the same mystical body of Christ.

Use 1. Is of Resutation, against Papists, who wrest all, that are proposed to be believed and spiritually understood of Christ's mystical body, unto the Popish state of their Roman visible Church, which is neither one, because not now the same, that she was, when the Apostles wrote to her; neither holy, because by their own confession many Popes, that is, heads of the Roman Church, were most wicked beasts; nor is •...he Catholic, or Universal, because it implies a contradiction, that one particular Church, as the Roman properly is, should be Universal in any propriety of speech.

Use 2. Is of Consolation, to all believers; because in this very thing, that they are actual believers, they are members of this Church, that is proposed to us to be believed; and they are in the same condition, as to the main business, in which the Patriarchs, Prophets, and Apostles, and all the Saints were, that ever lived, or shall live hereafter, in any place, or time of the world.

Doct. 4. Unto th...s Church all those benefits relate and belong, that Christ hath procured for men by his death.

It is gathered from hence; because Christ is said to have done all that he did, out of love to his Church.

Reas. 1. Because it was the wise purpose and intention of God, gloriously by Christ to communicate his grace unto certain men. For else the whole dispensation of Christ's incarnation, life and death, had been of uncertain success or event.

Reas. 2. Because Christ not only promerited this, but also brings it to pass, and that to perfection, by his efficacy or power.

Use, Of Consolation, chiefly to all true believers. For whatsoever is said of the whole Church in common, is extended unto each member of the same; because the Church is nothing else, but a collection of believers, or believers considered as gathered together, or conjoined in one body, or multitude.

The two and twentieth Lord's day.

Phil. 3. 20, 21.

Verse 20 For our conversation is in Heaven, from whence also we look for a Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ.

21 Who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, according to the working whereby he is able even to subdue all things unto himself.

A Reason is given in these words, why believers should rather follow the true Apostles, than false Teachers; and it is taken from the comparison of unlike things. The unlike qualities, are a care for the things of the world, in false Teachers; and a care for things heavenly in the true Apostles. This care of the Apostle is illustrated by a double argument: 1. From the adjunct manner, which is set out to us, by the similitude of Burgesses. 2. From the efficient cause of this care, which is faith, and hope of the glory that is to come. This glory, again is illustrated: 1. From its principal cause, which is Christ Jesus. 2. From the subject of it, which is extended also to the body, and not to the soul alone. 3. From the quality of the body, which is pointed out to us, by a similitude with the body of Christ. 4. From the virtue and power of that efficient cause aforesaid, for producing such an effect; which is no other, than omnipotency; according to that mighty power whereby▪ &c.

Doct. 1. The resurrection of man's body is certainly to be.

This is taught in the Text; 1. In that a transmutation of our bodies is determined on. 2. In that it is said, they shall be made conformable to the body of Christ, which by its resurrection was raised unto glory. The foundations or grounds of that article, are two; The power of God, and the truth of the Scriptures, as Christ himself teacheth in his answer to the Sadducees, Ye err; to wit, about the resurrection, now knowing the Scriptures, and the power of God. By the power of God, the raising of our bodies again, is possible; it being as easy to God to do that, as at first to make all things out of nothing; yea, as to make man out of the clay of the earth. For it is easy to conceive, that the same efficient cause, can again join the same principles, which once before he did conjoin, and moreover made them all out of nothing. As for the Scriptures, the truth and certainty of this resurrection is expressly declared by its testimony.

Reas. 1. Because man was created for eternity, and therefore must be set free from death, which assaults the whole race of man kind against its nature, that so it may again attain to eternity.

Reas. 2. Because the soul cannot come to its perfect and complete glory, by its reunion with the body; because it would be as it were maimed, as to such faculties, the operations whereof it exerciseth by the body; and so in some sort it should remain, as it were blind, deaf, dumb, &c.

Reas. 3. Because the equity of divine dispensation requireth this, that those bodies, which had their own share in the labors and works that belong unto this life; should also have their share in such rewards, as belong unto the end of this life.

Use, Is to establish our faith about this truth, which is one of the principal articles of the Christian faith.

Doct. 2. The same bodies that we had, as to their essences and natures, shall arise again; though not the same, as to their dispositions and qualities.

This is hence gathered, that in the Text our bodies are not only said that they shall be transfigured, by which phrase we are to understand, that the substance of our bodies shall remain the same, and that the outward figure or fashion, or manner of its disposition and complexion shall only be changed: But also that they are said that they shall be transfigured after the manner of Christ's body. For Christ had the same flesh and bones, which he had before, and this he made manifest unto his Disciples.

Reas 1. Because neither reward▪ nor punishment would have any place in the body after its resurrection, unless the very same bodies were restored to men, whereof they made use here upon earth before, either for doing evil, or doing good.

Reas. 2. Because other ways after the resurrection the party should not remain the same man, determinately this man, that man, or that he was before.

Reas. 3. Because it is as easy to God to glorify the same bodily substance that he had before, as any other.

Use, Of Resutation against such Heretics, who having almost blended their own dogmatical fictions and fancies with the true Doctrine, would also have our bodies after the resurrection not to be the same, but new ones, even as to their substance.

Doct. 3. Perfection, glory, and eternal happiness shall be given to believers, after that in the resurrection they shall be clothed with their bodies again.

It is in the Text. This glory is partly in the soul, and partly in the body; but in both there shall be a removal of all imperfection, and a communication of all perfection, which shall be thought fit for everyone to receive. In the soul shall be the fruition of God, whereby all desire of desirable things shall be in a certain eminent way satisfied. There shall be also an abundantly heaped perfection of all gifts and virtues, as is in the blessed Angels. This glory shall also so stream forth unto the bodies, that they shall be like unto heavenly bodies; which is the point chiefly expounded in the Text: Our body shall be made conformable, &c.

Reas. 1. Because it is God's purpose singularly to glorify himself in that supernatural blessedness that is to be given unto us.

Reas. 2. Because Christ already glorified, is not only the efficient cause, but the pattern of our glory. We shall not therefore have only such a likeness to Christ; as is between any effect and its cause, according to that maxim; as the cause is, such is the effect: But also that proportion which is between the pattern and its pourtraict.

Reas. 3. In order of dignity, by the bountiful appointment of God, believers shall next after Christ have their place together with the blessed Angels.

Use, Of Direction, that we may often set before our eyes in our meditation, the greatness of this glory, unto which we are called, that so we may both stir up thankfulness in ourselves to God, and a certain holy contempt and neglect of all things in this world.

Doct. 4. This resurrection of our bodies from the dead, and the glorification of them, shall be by the most powerful operation of Christ.

From these words; According to that mighty power of working, he should transform, &c. And this agrees to Christ, as he is one and the self same God with the Father.

Reas. 1. Because it is the work of that supereminent greatness of power, that is proper unto God, ϕ . 1. 19.

Reas. 2. Because that most wonderful quickening of our bodies, should come from the living, and alive-making God, who is the fountain and source of all life. Therefore in the same manner it is not attributed only to the Father, but also to the Son, and Holy Spirit, Rom. 8. 11.

This agreeth also to Christ, as he is Mediator, but still as united unto God essentially; also as he submits himself together with the human nature in one person, to be mediator, John. 5. 26. and 6. 40.

Reas. 1. Because it belongs to the Mediatory office of Christ, not only that by his merit, he should procure life eternal to us; but also by his powerful working actually bring the same to pass.

Reas. 2. Because Christ as Mediator is the head of his Church, from whom is derived and communicated to us the Spirit of life, whereby as well our souls, as our bodies are quickened; our souls especially in this life, and our bodies in the day of the resurrection.

Reas. 3. Because Christ as Mediator, and as the Son of man (but as united personally in the Godhead, in the Son of God) shall judge the world, John. 5. 27. Now this belongs to the power of the Judge, that he can bring before himself, and make the parties to be judged, to appear.

Use, Of Direction, that by all means we do this, as in our prayers, so in our meditations and other our spiritual exercises; to wit, that we may behold this supereminent power, and greatness of Christ's might, as the Apostle wisheth to the Ephesians, and to us, as one of the greatest gifts of God, Ephes. 1. 17, 18, 19, 20. For by this means, 1. Our faith and confidence in Christ is established. 2. We will be forearmed against all terrors of this world, and of Hell itself. 3. With all cherefulness we shall recommend our souls to Christ in well-doing, because he is able to perform all that he hath promised, all that we seek of him, and above all that can come into our thoughts.

Doct. 5. We should so look for this glory to come, in this present life, as that we lead in some sort an heavenly life •...ven here upon earth.

This is it, which is said in the beginning of the Text; We behave ourselves as Burgesses, or Citizens of Heaven.

Reas. 1. Because where our treasure, or chief good is, there will our hearts be also; and where the •...cart is, there will the whole man be. if therefore we have our treasure and chief good in Heaven, our heart will be in Heaven also; and our conversation will be heavenly.

Reas. 2. Because all these worldly things, whereabout men are busied, and most are drowned in, can never come in competition with the bliss of Heaven, neither as to their worth, nor as to their durance, nor by any love-worthy quality.

Reas. 3. Because to this we are called, that denying ourselves, and leaving the world; we may seek the Kingdom of God, and his righteousness, and glory.

Reas. 4. Because while we believe and hope in Christ, and have the eyes of our mind set upon him, as our Captain and pattern of our salvation, we must be changed into his likeness and image, 1 John. 3. 3. 2 Cor. 3. 18.

Use 1. Of Direction, for discerning of our condition, whether we have any such faith and hope, or no.

Use 2. Of Exhortation, to stir up and rouse our minds to a more earnest and diligent study and care of all godliness.

The three and twentieth Lord's day.

Rom. 3. 24, 25.

Verse 24 Bei...g justified freely by his grace through the r...demption that is in Jesus Christ.

25▪ Whom God •...ath •...et forth to be a propitiation, through faith in his blood▪ to declare his right•...ousnesse for the r•...mission of sins that are past, through the 〈◇〉 of God.

THE Apostle had before proved, that all mankind was unde•... most grievous guilt of sin, a•...d therefore had need of justification, that they might be saved▪ which justification also he had sh•...wn that it could not be had from any 〈◇〉, no•... from the Law; which he had set down as the conclusion of his discourse•... in the 20▪ verse of this Chapter▪ From then•...e he also 〈◇〉 〈◇〉 further, 〈◇〉 justification is of necessity to be 〈◇〉 in that way of the Gospel, which is proposed in Christ Jesus. The whole dispute may be summed up in this Syllogism▪ Men are either justified by Nature, or by Law, or by the Gospel: But neither by Nature, nor by the Law; and therefore of necessity by the Gospel. The Proposition is presupposed and tacitly understood, as manifest in itself. The Assumption is prov•...d in the first part of the Epistle, unto the 21. verse of this Chapter. The Conclusion is proposed and illustrated in that 21. verse to the end of that Chapter, and afterwards. The words in our Text set down, contain a description of this Gospel-justification▪ And it is described, 1. From its principal and highest cause, God; Whom God appointed. 2. From the manner of this cause, which consists not in comm•...tative justice, that gives like for like, or so much for so much; nor yet from distributive justice, which looks at the worth of men, and deals with them in a proportionable manner; but in mere and pure grace, or free favor; in these words, we are justified freely of his free grace, or free favor▪ where a singular emphasis or force of speech is laid on this part of the description, by this doubling or repetition, freely, and of his fr•...e favor. 3. It is is described from its impulsive, or meritorious cause, which becomes also in some sort the formal cause of our •...ustification; to wit, our redemption ma•...e by Jesus Christ. 4. From its instrumental cause; which is faith; by▪ faith in his blood. 5. From its final cause; which is the manifestation of the justice and mercy of God; for showing of his justice, &c.

Doct. 1. It is God that justifieth us.

He is said to justify us, not in that he in•...useth righteousness unto us, or makes us fit to do things that are just; which is the error of Papists, placing justification first in the infusion of the habits of faith, hope, and charity; and next in the good works that comes from those habits; with which they mix a certain sort of remission of sins: But therefore he is said to justify us, because by his judicial sentence he absolves us from the guilt of all sin, and accepts or accounts of us, as fully just and righteous for eternal life, by the righteousness of Christ, which he giveth us. This appears from hence, that this justification is used in Scripture to be opposed unto a charging with crimes, and unto condemnation; Rom. 8. 33. And this is done of God, as it were by these degrees. 1. In his eternal counsel and decree, because from eternity he intended to justify us. 2. In our head Christ rising again from the dead, we were virtually justified, & in some sort actually; as in Adam sinning all his posterity were virtually condemned to death by the Law, and in some sort actually, because in some sort actual sinners. 3. He justifies us fullier actually and formally in ourselves, and not only in our head; when by his Spirit, and our faith the work of his Spirit, he applies Christ unto us, to our justification. 4. And further yet, he justifies us actually and formally to our sense and feeling, when by our own reflex knowledge, and examination of our estate, he gives us to perceive this application of Christ made, and so to have peace and •...oy in him.

Reas. 1. Because ou•... sins from which we ought to be justified, are done against the majesty of God, 1▪ Sam▪ 2. 25. And none can forgive an offense done against another, or an injury done to another, in a proper way of speaking.

Reas. 2. Because the guitt of sin depends on the obligation of the Law, and of divine justice and truth: And therefore cannot be taken away but by him that is above the Law, and knows what is agreeable to his own truth and meaning, in the first making of it.

Reas. 3. Because by justification we are received into the favor of God, and life eternal, and God himself (in some sort) is given unto us: all which can no otherwise be done, but by God himself alone.

Use 1. Of Refutation, against Papists, who set down manners and means of justification, from human tradition, and their own authority, unto •...retched men; as if it were in their power to justi•...ie men after what way they please, when it is God •...lone that justifieth, and that therefore prescribes •...he manner and means of justification only.

Use 2. Of Consolation, as it is set down, Rom. 8. 33. Who shall lay anything to our charge, it is God that justifi•...th? And verse 31. If God be for us, who can be against •...s?

Doct. 2. This justification is mere, pure, and infinite grace, or favor.

So in the Text; freely, his free favor. The grace of God in justification appears as it were by these degrees. 1. In that God pursues not his right against us and our sins, according to that rigor that his Law might have been taken in, and his revenging justice might have extended its self to; but left place for some reconciliation. 2. In that being himself the party offended; yet he himself of his own good-will both invented, appointed or ordered, and revealed both the manner and means of this reconciliation. 3. In that he spared not his only begotten Son, for procuring of this reconciliation. 4. That without any merits or worth of ours, he ingrafts us into his Son and our Lord Jesus Christ, and so makes us partakers of that reconciliation which is in him. This was altogether necessary, that our justification might be of free favor.

Reas. 1. Because it was impossible for the laws and the righteousness thereof to justify sinners, Rom. 8. verse. 1▪

Reas. 2. Because in the justification of a sinner is remission or pardon of •...in; and all pardon is of free •...avour▪

Reas. 3. Because in justification is a free Donation of righteousness, and of life eternal, which to sinners, cannot be done, but with especial grace and favor. The satisfaction made by Christ for us, withstands not the freeness of this favor of justification; because it was of free favor and grace, that Christ himself was given us, and by calling appointed to this satisfaction for us; and of his own free-grace also accepted of that calling.

Use 1. Is of Refutation, against Papists and many others; who will have our justification to depend upon our Works; which yet everywhere, by the Apostle are opposed to this free grace in our justification.

Use 2. Is of Consolation to believers, and repenters against all these shakings of mind, which they feel, or can feel from the unworthiness of themselves, that their own consciences tell them of; because our whole justification hangs on the free favor, or grace of God, and not upon our worth or merits.

Use 3. Is of Exhortation: 1. That we always flee to the Free-grace of God, as to the only garrison of our souls. 2. That from admiration of this grace of God, we always study to be thankful to God.

Doct. 3. The obedience of Jesus Christ imputed unto us, or given us, and so accounted ours, justifies or makes us righte... and is the foundation of all our righteousness.

It is in the Text, By the Redemption made by Jesus Christ. 1. For he that is justified by the Redemption <◊> other, as by paying a ransom: that price is conceived as it were to be paid for him who is redeemed. •... If Christ be the pacification in our justification, when we please God, as it is in the Text, then we please him for something, which Christ hath performed for our good. 3. If Faith justifies, as it hath relation to Christ, and the shedding of his blood, then there is something in his blood thus shed, or in his obedience unto death, by virtue whereof we are justified.

Now the obedience of Christ in respect of our justification, hath 1. the place of a meriting cause, which obtains it for us, because it was the means that God's justice required to be performed to him, before his grace could justify us. 2▪ It hath the place of the formal cause, in as much as it is so accepted and taken for ours, being given us by free-gift, and so made ours indeed, as that we are looked on by God, as truly clothed with it: when he pronounces the sentence of our justification: whence that phrase of the Apostle is, Not having mine own righteousness, but that which is Christ's, Phil. 3. 9.

Reas. 1. Is, because this is most agreeable both to the justice and mercy of God, jointly: For if our justification had stood in the bare remission of sin, without the imputation of a sufficient righteousness, or obedience for satisfaction to justice, then only God's mercy and favor had had place in this business, no regard being had of the justice of God, that satisfaction might be made.

Reas. 2. Because if we had been pronounced just without any imputation of a satisfying righteousness, or obedience performed, then there could have been no just ground of such a sentence; to wit, that he should be pronounced just, which was no way just, neither by his own inherent justice or righteousness; nor yet by another's justification freely given him.

Rea. 3. Because by this means, we have in some manner a divine righteousness, or the righteousness of God himself; to wit, that which Christ, who is God, performed for us (not the essential righteousness of God, as Soliander dreamed) as God-man in one person; on which therefore we may rely, and with the greater confidence appear before God, and for it hope for all divine and good things at the hands of God.

Reas. 4. Because in this manner we the more own our salvation as wrought by Christ.

Use 1. Is of Refutation against Papists, Anabaptists, Remonstrants or Arminians, and almost all Sects and Sectarians, who all agree in this error, that our justification depends upon our works, and is not to be sought by the imputation of Christ's righteousness to us, or accounting his obedience ours.

Use 2. Is of Exhortation, unto due thankfulness towards Christ, by whose Redemption or ransoming of us, we are justified, and set free from sin and death, the wages of sin; and adjudged unto life and glory, above what any mere creatures righteousness could ever have deserved.

Doct. 4. The obedience of Jesus Christ is powerful for justifying of us, by being accepted and laid hold on by our Faith. It is in the Text.

Through Faith in his Blood.

Reas^a 1. The very nature and duty of Faith is to rely on Christ, or on the favor and mercy of God in Christ, for pardon of sins.

Reas. 2. Because by Faith, we are united unto Christ, and engrafted into him, that so we may be partakers of all the blessings, that in him are prepared for men.

Reas. 3. Because Faith receives, lays hold on, and embraces all the promises of God, and the things in them contained, offered, or proposed; amongst which pardon of sins, and justification in Christ hath a chief place.

The Use is of Direction, that it may be our only care in the business of our justification, to direct our Faith and confidence towards Christ, and to stir up and confirm it more and more, that we may thence have firm and abundant comfort.

The twenty fourth Lord's day.

Seest thou how faith wrought with his works, and by works was faith made perfect?

IN these words is contained the conclusion of that disputation, which James had against such as vant of Faith, that is, destitute of good-works: For the Apostle concludes, that such Faith is of no worth unto justification: And this conclusion is often repeated, as verse. 14, 17. and 20. 22. and 24. under sundry forms of words; but to one and the same sense. Now this Conclusion which the Apostle proves, is not that good-works are any part, or cause of our justification before God, as Papists take it; nor yet (as many of our own think) that our works justify us before men, however that contain a truth in it; but this is the conclusion, that justifying faith is such, that it worketh, and puts forth its operation by good-works.

And it is proved 1. from a comparison of likes▪ from verse. 15. to the 18. 2. By another comparison of likes, to wit, of such a fruitless faith in men, and devils, verse. 19. 3. from the example and pattern of that faith that was in Abraham, verse. 21. of all which the conclusion is set down in this 22. verse. In which two things are determined, 1. That true and justifying faith is fruitful of good works. 2. That good works are the end and perfection of faith; for faith is said to co-operate with good works, because together with the command of God, it furnisheth its strength and force of working, for producing of good works: And that works are called the perfection of faith; it is not so to be understood, as if they were the internal and formal perfection of faith; as the form is the formal and essential perfection of everything: But in that they contain and show the external perfection of faith, in as much as they flow from it, and as every effect contains in itself some perfection of its course; to wit, as it partakes of the force and virtue that comes from the internal perfection of the cause.

Doct. 1. Our good works are no ways the cause of our justification, but the effects and fruits of a man justified.

It is gathered from the Text, for as much as works are the effects of faith: And faith and justification according to the nature of relatives, are at once or together in nature. A true believer and a justified man are the same thing. If therefore good works are the effects of a believer, then are they the effects of one justified also. And that works justify us not, is apparent from four reasons.

Reas. 1. Because believers are not now under the Covenant of works, and therefore cannot be justified by works▪ but are all condemned by them; if we stand to them in that point, because none of them come up to what the Law requires, and so are sinful and imperfect.

Reas. 2. Because all our good works are debts▪ and therefore they can never properly merit or deserve pardon.

Reas. 3. Because the good works we do, came not from our own strength, but from the grace of God.

Reas. 4. Because our best good works are in themselves imperfect, and defiled with many uncleannesses.

Object. 1. Our good works are perfect, as they come from the Holy Spirit, whose works are all perfect.

Ans. 1. If in respect of us they be imperfect, they cannot as ours be of force to our justification, though in some other respect they may be perfect.

2. That perfection which they have in reference to the Holy Spirit, doth not redound properly unto our meriting or deserving by them, because the holy Ghost is no ways united unto us, into one person, which is the only ground, why the works of Christ had a divine merit and worth in them; namely, because they were divine works, as being his, that was, as man personally united unto the God-head and person of the Son, so as they made but one person. The Holy Spirit, then though he be the principal cause of our good works, yet this is in its own manner, as an external efficient, as having no personal union with the party working.

Object. 2. Our reward is given according to our works.

Ans. That reward is not of our merit, but of God's free grace and favor. For there is a reward of servants and a reward of sons; the reward of servants looks not to the person, but to the merit, or desert of the work; but the reward of sons look•... at the person chiefly▪ and so is given of grace and good will to the person of the worker, more than to the merit of the work. For the Father in his Son crowns that with reward, which in itself deserves no such thing for the most part: Otherwayes he were unjust not to reward it so in servants likewise.

Use, Of Admonition, that we never glory in ourselves or our own works before God, but always acknowledge, when we have done all that we can; that we are but unprofitable servants, as our Lord himself teacheth us to do; and that we depend wholly on the grace of God▪ putting no trust in our own works.

Doct 2. Good works by a necessary coherence follow true faith.

It is gathered from this, that faith is to work together in and with good works, and by good works to be brought to its end. Now good works are necessary to a believer: 1. By necessity of precept, because God from that right and power he had to do so, was pleased to command us them. 2. By necessity of means without which we cannot attain the end: And that 1. In respect of God, or his glory, as the end, because without them we cannot attain to the enjoyment of God, nor to glorify him, as we should and must for that attainment. 2. In respect of the Church and others without the Church, whose edification without good works we cannot attain: and good men are edified by good works, as by examples, more and more; and to others a hoping light is as it were held out, whereby they may discern their right way. Let your light so shine before men, &c. 3. In respect of our own salvation, because good works are necessary to salvation though not as meritorious causes, yet as dispositions, qualifications, and ways, that must be had and insisted in, because our election and calling is to them, and by them our salvation, and these other are made surer to our consciences. For in them consists that way of a new obedience, and Gospel thankfulness, which only leads unto life; also as holiness not only internal, but also external, is such an inseparable disposition or qualification from such as are to be saved, as that without it, none shall ever see God to his comfort, or happiness. 3. They are necessary by necessity of the end; because election, redemption, vocation, tend and look to this end, that we may live to God, and to Christ, in all holiness and righteousness: And a necessity as well of thankfulness as of covenant lies upon us, that with all our vigor and with all our strength, we endeavor to attain unto this end. 4. Good works are necessary by a certain sort of natural necessity. For just as good fruits come of a good tree, and sweet waters come from a sweet fountain, by a like manner and necessity, good works come from true faith. Or as our vital operations and motions do always accompany natural life; so also spiritual life, which is from faith, whereby the just man liveth, puts forth itself always in good works, as the proper operations and acts of a spiritual life. It may sometimes happen, that as in one in a swoon scarce any matter or operation doth appear, though yet the •...fe itself remain; so also by some extraordinary •...entation, for some time the seed of faith may remain in the heart of this, or that man, the fruits whereof can hardly be discovered. But this is 1. As much against the nature of faith, and of a faithful man, as sickness is against health and life. 2. It is an extraordinary case▪ by which we must not judge of the ordinary operations and fruits of faith, nor of its nature, or the necessity of good works. 3. In such a case both the degree of faith itself is deminished, and the comfort of it ceases for that time. 4. Although in such a case such fruits of faith appears not, as are required to our comfort•... yet it is hardly ever so overwhelmed, but that it hath some operation, at least in that fight, which then the Spirit hath against the flesh.

Use 1. Of Reproof, against such men's most vain presumption, as brag of a sort of faith of their own, that is separated from all care of good works.

Use 2. Of Exhortation, that with such considerations we stir up our minds to greater zeal and cheerfulness in every good work.

The five and twentieth Lord's day.

Rom. 4. 11.

And he received the sign of circumcision, a seal of the righteousness of the faith, which he had yet being uncircumcis...d▪ That he might be th•... father of all them that believe, though they be not circumcised; that righteousness might be imputed unto them also.

THE Apostle in this place treats of the justificatification of Abraham which he so ascribes to him, that in him he sets down a pattern of justification to life▪ as well in respect of uncircumcised Gentiles, as of Jews themselves. For this end the Apostle observes, and proposeth to be observed, that faith was reputed to Abraham unto righteousness, while he was yet uncircumcised, or in the fore-skin. Against which Doctrine, because it might be objected, that then circumcision was of no use to him: The Apostle answers by a probation in this verse, and denies the consequence; and gives a reason of this his denial thence, because there was another end and use of that Sacrament. For he was not therefore circumcised, that by circumcision he might be justified, but that by circumcision, as by a seal and sign he might have his righteousness, that was before imputed to him, the better confirmed. We have then in these words a description of a Sacrament of the Covenant of grace. 1. From its general notion; that it is a sign. 2. From its differencing notion, in which it is described by the use and end of this sign. The end is designed. 1. From its manner of signifying; being not only called a sign, but a seal. 2. From the object, or thing signified, which is the righteousness of faith, & the receiving thereof.

Doct. 1. The proper end and use of a Sacrament is, that it may confirm our faith.

This is hence collected; because Circumcision is here called a seal of faith, or of the righteousness of faith: For a seal, when it is set to Deeds, hath this proper use, that it ratifies and confirms them; that is declares them solemnly to be sealed.

Reas. 1. Because since Sacraments are fitly and conveniently referred to faith and to grace, they ought of necessity to tend either to the first begetting of grace, or to the confirmation of it. And the first is performed by the Holy Spirit in our first calling, by the preaching of the Gospel; and the Sacraments are not instruments of our first call; therefore they tend not to the first breeding of faith in us, but to the confirming and strengthening of it more and more in us, after it is first begotten in us.

Reas. 2. Because often faith is begotten, though Sacraments be wanting, if they be not despised: But in any ordinary way, it is never so confirmed and strengthened, as it is when Sacraments are joined with the Word.

Reas. 3. Because Sacraments properly belong not but to such as have faith already, and so can have no other use, but to confirm such parties faith, and to advance by it all other graces in them.

Use, Of Direction, what we ought to look to properly in the use of Sacraments; to wit, that by such holy Ordinances of God we may be more and more built up in our most holy faith.

Doct. 2. The Sacraments do no other way confirm our faith, or advance our salvation, then by way of sign and seal.

This is hence collected, in that the Apostle gives unto them this only way of operating in this place. Which that we may better understand, it is to be taken notice of, that a sign is either natural, or by institution or appointment; and that Sacraments are signs by appointment. Now in signs by appointment, the author appointing is always to be looked to, and the end of his appointing. For seeing any appointment is as a mean, it hath an essential relation and dependence as well to the efficient, by which it is directed, as to the end whereunto it is directed. The author and appointer of a Sacrament is God alone, because no creature can appoint one, seeing none can perform that which in a Sacrament is signed and sealed, nor •...ind God to perform it for them. The end of a Sacrament in general, is to help our infirmity, and a Sacrament helps it in a threefold manner.

Reas. 1. In respect of our understanding, whereunto they are notifying or knowledge-begetting signs, or as it were clear mirrours, wherein by the intermediate Ministry of our external senses we may behold the mysteries of God.

Reas. 2. In respect of our memory, whereunto they are admonishing signs, and as it were made perpetual remembrances or memorandums, by their orderly reiteration and renovation.

Reas. 3. In respect of our will, faith, and affiance, whereunto they are sealing signs, or most certain seals and pledges.

Use 1. Of Refutation, against Papists, who will have the Sacraments to work righteousness and grace in us, as physical instruments, by the work done.

Use 2. Of Direction, in the use of them, that our chief care may be, by these means to lay hold on, and more and more to apply to ourselves all these spiritual things, which by the Sacraments are signed and sealed unto us.

Doct. 3. The things which in the Sacraments are signified and sealed unto us, are in one word all the blessings of the New Covenant.

This is gathered from hence, in that the righteousness of faith is said to be sealed by the Sacrament of Circumcision. Now that righteousness by the trope Synecdoche, signifies all the blessings of the New Covenant, as appears from verse 9. where the imputation of this righteousness is called the declaration of blessedness. Now the same that is signified in one Sacrament, is also signified in another, as to the substance of the matter; though the manner be diverse; and so some benefits are more expressly signified in one Sacrament than in another.

Reas. 1. Because a Sacrament is after the fall a seal of the New Covenant, not as to this, or that part of it, but of the whole. For no Covenant, or Charter, though sometimes it may have many seals, uses to be confirmed as to one part of it by one seal, and to another part of it by another seal; but by all and every seal the whole is confirmed.

Reas. 2. Because Christ from whom every blessing floweth, is exhibited to us in every Sacrament. For as the Sacraments in the Old Testament, looked at Christ, as shadows do at their bodies; so also, and that much more clearly in the New Testament, we are both baptized into Christ, and have communion with him in his body and blood, in his Supper. And w...en Christ is exhibited, there all the blessings that are prepared for us in Christ, are together with him exhibited to us.

Reas. 3. Because the blessings of life and salvation cannot be separated from one another; as for example, effectual Vocation, Justification, Adoption, Sanctification, Consolation▪ and eternal Glorification. When therefore one of these blessings is directly represented, indirectly also, and by consequence all the rest are signified and sealed.

Use 1. Of Information; 1. That we may learn rightly to distinguish between complete Sacraments, and other Sacramental signs. For other signs and ceremonies, that do not signify and seal the blessings of the New Covenant, as they are such; though they are sacred signs, yet are they not presently Sacraments, to speak properly; that is, they are not of that nature and rank with Baptism and the Supper. That we have in great esteem Christ's most holy Sacraments, because in them we go about no less, than all that belongs to our eternal happiness.

Use 2. Of Admonition, that we never separate what God hath joined together in the use of the Sacraments, which useth to be done by such, as seek only for remission of sins, but not for sanctification and preservation from sin; and that because they have not determined with themselves to amend their lives.

Doct. 4. By the Sacraments these blessings are not only signed generally, but also particularly to all that partake of them with true faith.

This is hence gathered, in that A...raham particular lie is said to have received the seal of his own righteousness in particular.

Reas. 1. Because the Sacraments are not so proposed to us, that they may seal on this condition, that we have faith; but they alwayes presuppose faith al...eady to be in us; and so then they are offered to confirm, and do singularly confirm it.

Reas. 2. Because to everyone in particular, and by name they are exhibited for their confirmation; and not in common only, as the Word is preached publicly.

Reas. 3. Because the manner of administration, and the Sacramental actions that belong unto them, as washing in Baptism, taking, eating, drinking in the Lord's Supper, consist in a particular application of the signs; and therefore also they signify a particular sealing of the things signified, unto particular persons.

Use 1. Is of Comfort, against scruples and doubts wherewith our minds are sometimes troubled. Because in the Sacraments duly administered to such as have right, God as it were from Heaven stretcheth out his own hand, and holds forth in it his grace, and all the spiritual blessings of the Covenant, alike unto everyone of us (thus participating) in our own proper and singular persons particularly.

Use 2. Of Admonition, that we neglect not the Sacraments, but diligently both prepare and fit ourselves for them, and then seek after them, & receive them; because to neglect them, were to neglect our own proper and singular consolation in particular.

Use 3. Of Direction, how we may rightly use the Sacraments; to wit, ...o as in a singular manner, we seek our edification and advancement in this, that we see Christ there offering and giving his grace to us by name, and in particular, and accordingly, thus sealing to us in particular our salvation.

The six and seven and twentieth Lord's day.

Mat. 28. 19.

Go ye therefore and teach all Nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.

HERE is expounded the command of Christ, which being now about to ascend into Heaven, he left unto his Apostles. It contains two principal duties. 1. The preaching and publishing of that Doctrine taught by Christ. 2. The administration of the Sacraments by him appointed. For in this place by Baptism (according to that usual borrowing of speech, called Synecdoche, that puts sometimes one sort for the whole kind, and sometimes contrarily) the other Sacrament of the Supper is understood; but here Baptism is rather named than the other: 1. Because it is the first Sacrament, and that of initiation, and receiving solemnly into the Church, on which the other for this cause doth depend. 2. Because it chiefly belonged unto the Apostles office, by themselves, or by others to see this Sacrament rightly administered, who were rather sent to plant, and gather or build Churches from their first beginnings, than to feed, govern, and further build, or advance them, after they were first planted. And Baptism belongs particularly to the first ingrafting into Christ, and to plan...ation; and the Supper unto feeding, and growth after planting. Now Baptism is expounded in this place... 1. From its object, or parties to be baptized▪ Baptizing them: that is, such as are already trained up▪ in Christ's Doctrine, or •...ade his 〈ϕ〉 or •...lars, as the Greek word signifies, 〈 in non-Latin alphabet 〉 , make them my •...chollars, or Disciples. 2. From the •...orme, or manner of doing it; to wit, in the name of the Father▪ Son, and Holy Ghost. By which form or model are designed: 1. The efficient causes, by whose authority Baptism▪ is exercised, and made effectual; and that is by the name, or authority and power of Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. •.... The union of the baptized, that they are to have with the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, in the participation of all their graces of justification, sanctification, adoption, &c. that from the Father, in the Son, and by the Spirit, are derived unto all the heirs of eternal salvation; and in the profession and practice of all the outward Ordinances and means, that Christ taught them, whereby to attain to those inward gra•...es, and to keep, and advance them, by the same Spirit in the Son and from the Father.

Doct. 1. Baptism is the Sacrament of our ingrafting, and initiation or first reception into Christ.

This is hence gathered, in that all that are already taught Christ's Doctrine, and made his Scholars professedly, are the•... presently to be haptized, that so they may be registered as it were amongst the domestics or householders of Christ.

Reas. 1. This appears in that baptism came in the place of Circumcision; and Circumcision was the Sacrament of first admition amongst the people of God.

Reas. 2. In Baptism is represented the death of fin, and mortifying of the old man; a washing and cleansing from sin; and bringing of a man from death to life: All which do most properly denote our first vocation and therefore also Baptism is called by Scripture itself, the Sacrament of regeneration, or washing of regeneration.

Reas. 3. Because by our Baptism our first solem•... reception into Christ's Family, and Kingdom is represented; and therefore also we are said to be baptized into Christ; by this therefore Baptism is distinguished from the Lord's Supper, because however it seal the same blessings, as to the main business that the other doth, yet it doth it not after the same manner, but Baptism denotates their beginning, and the Supper their progress and advancement.

Use, Of Direction, how we should make constant and perpetual use of our Baptism; to wit, if we take occasion often to meditate on it, and the graces of God sealed in it on God's part, and our return of universal obedience sealed too on our part▪ and of the favor God did us, thus solemnly to receive us into Covenant with him, and into his Church, the true confederates of God, or number of them that are saved by Christ; and if from this faith and belief, thus sealed and continued, we more and more study to take care in all things to walk worthy of this condition, and to glorify God in Christ, as becomes, and as he requireth of us.

Doct. 2. In Baptism by washing of water, our adoption, •...ustification▪ and salvation is sealed to us.

This is hence collected, in that our union in the form of Baptism is designed to be with the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost▪ for sealing our communion in those benefits, which flow from this union. And we are properly adopted by the Father, justified by the Son, and sanctified by the Holy Spirit.

Reas. 1. Because these three are directly necessary for us, that we may have true entrance into the Kingdom of God. For 1. We must be accepted of as God's children, that he may be our Father; which is by adoption. 2. We must be freed from the guilt of sin, by which we are separated from God; and this is done by justification. 3. We must be cleansed and purged from the remainders and corruptions of sin, whereby men are made unfit to enjoy God; and this is done by sanctification.

Reas. 2. Because the washing with water in Baptism designeth and some way respecteth our cleansing as well from the guilt, as corruption of sin, whereby we were made strangers to the estate of the Sons of God, that thence it may appear, that now by grace we are adopted, justified, and sanctified. Neither by any other visible sign could these things so conveniently have been shadowed out, as by the washing of water; because both of its own nature it hath a principal fitness to cleanse, and amongst all Nations it is ea•...ie to be had at hand, and then also it had been before sanctified under the Old Testament for such uses.

Use 1. Of Information, how greatly we ought to esteem our Baptism, wherein so great benefits or blessings spiritual, were first sealed unto us.

Use 2. Of Direction, that upon occasion of seeing Baptism administered at any time, we both with all devo•...t meditation on our own Baptism, lift up our minds unto the lively apprehensions of these blessings, of our adoption, •...ustification, & sanctification, namely; and withal think upon what is due to God from us, for so great benefits, and what we engaged in and by our baptism, to perform in all manner of holy, thankful and Christian obedience.

Doct. 3. Those saving blessings, which are signified in Baptism, do not properly depend on the washing of water, as to their real efficacies; but on the operation of the Father, Son and holy Spirit.

This is hence gathered, because by these words of the institution, our hearts as it were are commanded to be lifted up, that we may look for all the grace and efficacy of this Sacrament out of heaven, from Father, Son and holy Ghost.

Reas. 1. Because the Sacramental signs are no causes of grace, neither principal, nor instrumental, by any virtue or efficacy that is either inherent, or adherent in themselves; that is, are no physical causes (as the phrase is used & received in the Schools about this point) but only moral, and in a moral way put forth any virtue they have; to wit, in as much as they seal only that, which God the Father, in the Son, and by the Spirit worketh in us.

Reas. 2. Because our •...ustification and adoption, which consists in the remission of •...ins, and accepting of us into favor, are moral effects of their own nature, and not physical, and therefore cannot by any means be other ways produced than morally.

Reas. 3. Because it can no way be conceived, how these external elements of the Sacraments should physically work upon the soul to the production of spiritual effects, seeing themselves are but corporal, and therefore can only work physically upon th•... body. Indeed in holy Scriptures such spiritual effects use to be attributed unto such signs, as well in the Old, as in the New Testament; but this is only in the moral sense aforesaid, and by trope or borrowed speech, because of the union, or relation of likeness that is between signs, and things signified by them; from which union, or relation of likeness (grounded partly on the analogy between the things themselves; and partly, but chiefly on the divine institution) there ariseth, in common manner of speaking, almost such a mutual & interchangeable giving or communicating of the attributes, or qualities of each of these to the other, as is found in Christ between his human & divine nature, because of the hypostatical, or personal union between them: Though other ways there be no other union here, but of likeness and proportion between the sign, and things signified, or sealed, when the signs are rightly used; which performance or making present of the graces signified, depend wholly on the truth of God's institution and promise; and that in a moral way, as was said before, not properly physical; though this Sacramental union was devised by School Divines, or mistaken and imagined physical, for maintaining their corporal presence of Christ's body, in propriety of words, or their monster of Transubstantiation. And all forsooth, because the things that are proper to the signs, are sometimes attributed to the things signified; and countrarily, the properties of the things signified, are attributed to the signs: The true reasons, and manner whereof we have sufficiently explained.

Use 1. Of Refutation, against Papists, who in some•... sort turn the Sacraments into Idols, while not by •...rope or borrowed speech (which is usual, as we have declared) but in propriety of words, they give unto the the signs, and external elements, such things as are proper unto God.

Use 2. Of Direction▪ that in the use of the sacraments, we lift up always our hearts, and by faith and devout desires look for and seek from God such divine blessings, as are represented by the outward signs.

Doct. 4. All and only such are to be baptized as are the Disciples or Scholars of Christ; that is, that are of his family before, and as it were his householders, and therefore fit to be solemnly declared and enrolled for such.

This is hence gathered, because the Apostles are here commanded first to gather Disciples or Scholars unto Christ out of all Nations; and then to baptize them, after they were made such.

Reas 1. Because the Sacraments are appendices of the Word, so that they are often understood under it, in Scriptures; to wit, when the Gospel and word of the Kingdom are only mentioned; because they are appendants and connected to it: And hence it is also, that if the Sacraments be separated from the Word, they are of no value. Where therefore the Word is not received, the Sacraments cannot be received.

Reas. 2. Because the Sacraments are both privileges, and marks or badges of the Church; and therefore they belong not but to such as are members of the Church.

Reas. 3 Because a Sacrament cannot be a sealing sign, but unto such as have some grant to be sealed. But who so are no way partakers of Christ, they have no grant, or promise made to them, that can, or ought to be sealed unto them.

A Question here ariseth about Infants; Whether they are to be baptized, or not, seeing they cannot be taught, or instructed about faith?

I Answer, That the Children, or Infants of believers ought to be Baptized, because while they are yet Infants, as to the external privileges of the Covenant with God, they are accounted both persons and parties of, or belonging to their parents; and therefore they are of the family of Christ, or of the number of his Disciples. For if the Covenant made with Abraham be the same for substance; by which we are saved, and belongeth as much to us, and to our children, as it did to Abraham, and his posterity; then not only we, but our children also ought to be partakers of the seal of this Covenant. But the first is true, as appeareth by Rom. 4. and other places; and therefore the latter also is true. Furthermore, it makes to this purpose, that the grace of this Covenant after Christ's coming, is no way more straitened, or made narrow, than it was before his coming; but in many sorts made wider, larger, and more extended. What is objected about faith, which is required of such, as are to be baptized, it is no more the Baptism of Infants, than of old it was the Circumcision of them, which required faith as well as baptism, because it was by its institution a seal of the righteousness of faith, Rom. 4. 11▪ As therefore in Circumcision, distinct knowledge, faith, and profession of it, were not necessary for Infants; but the state of faith, and of its profession where they were born (by means of their parents profession) they were born, did suffice; so it is also in Use 1. Of Confutation, against Anabaptists.

Use 2. Of Comfort, in respect of this great favor done us by God, even from our Infancy, whereby he deems not to receive ourselves, but also our children.

The eight and nine twentieth Lord's days.

1 Cor. 10. 16.

The cup of blessing which we bless, is it not the communion of the blood of Christ? The bread which we break, is it not the communion of the body of Christ?

The Apostle in the beginning of the eighth Chapter exhorted Christians that they would abstain from the unclean feasts of the Gentiles. In these words of the Text, after a digression, whereby he had prevented some objections, he brings an argument from comparison of likes, whereby he proves, that communication or partaking with Gentiles in their Idolatrous feasts, cannot be exercised without communion with the Idols themselves. The comparing argument proposed for illustrating and proving of this, is the Lord's Supper, wherein we have communion with Christ. The argument then comes to this: If in partaking of the Lord's Supper we have communion with Christ, then also in partaking of the feasts of Idols, we have communion with the Idols: But the first is true; and therefore the latter likewise. The Assumption is set down and explained in our Text; and it is explained by the parts of the Lord's Supper, or feast; which are bread and wine. The use of these is shewn, 1. From the things which they serve to signify, as things like unto themselves, and subjects or objects which they signify. 2. From the manner of signifying; that they do not barely signify, or represent only; but also ratify and seal a communion in, or partaking of the things signified. 3. From the reason, or cause whence this relation and connection between the signs and things signified, doth arise; which is the blessing of the signs, or by using of them, according as Christ did appoint.

Doct. 1. The Lord's Supper is a Sacrament of the New Testament, whereby our nourishment and growth in Christ, is sealed unto us.

This is hence gathered, in that bread and wine were the external signs appointed by Christ in this Sacrament, which are the chief means of bodily nourishment, as not only experience, but also the Holy Ghost teacheth us, Psal▪ 10▪ Now, not bread alone, not yet wine alone is used, but both together partly that so the mystery of our spiritual nourishment might be better explained, by such a distribution of the whole into its parts; & partly, that the sufficiency of our nourishment might be thereby declared; to wit, that we need to seek nothing for it one of Christ.

Reas. 1. Because as we have the principle of grace and spiritual life in Christ; so also we ought to look for all progress and advancement in Christ by faith. And as the first is signified in Baptism; so this last is most fitly declared in the Lord's Supper. And this is it properly wherein the Supper differs from Baptism.

Reas. 2. Because for our often infirmities and falls, it was needful to us, that we had some Sacrament, for the frequent renewing of our confirmation, as indeed our faith stands in need of such renovation, and corroboration. But Baptism is not to be renewed, because it is enough once to be born again, as it was once to be born. Most conveniently therefore the Supper was instituted, often by us to celebrated, that in faith and all grace we might glow more and more, and be confirmed and strengthened therein.

Reas. 3. Because we receive from God all the increases of grace, so is it fit, that by public profession we acknowledge this, to the glory of his name, and stirring up of our thankfulness to him; unto which use the holy Supper doth most fitly serve us.

Reas. 4. Because that communion, which is between the members of the Church, as belonging to the same family, and as they eat all of the same spiritual food at the same table of their own and the same Master and Lord, cannot be fi...liar declared, than by such a sacred and solemn spiritual feast, or banquet.

Use 1. Of Comfort, that we may be refreshed because that in this manner, both by Word, and Sacrament or seal, we have this confirmed unto us, that all that is necessary to our nourishment, growth and advancement in grace, for attaining of spiritual perfection, is prepared for us in Christ, and is to be by him derived unto us.

Use 2. Of Exhortation, that we may diligently bestow all care and industry, that we may really and in operation attain this nourishment, growth and advancement in grace, which in this Sacrament rightly used, is exhibited unto us.

Doct. 2. This nourishment, which in Christ we receive, it by the working of fath.

This is hence gathered, in that we are said in the Text to have communion with the flesh and blood of Christ, which yet are not bodily present with us, but are only spiritually partaken of by faith, as is apparent by other places.

Reas. 1. Because by faith it is that we have union with Christ.

Reas. 2. Because by faith in Christ, we draw as it were, and suck unto us all grace and spiritual life.

Reas. 3. Because as the principle of our spiritual life is faith, so from the further intention and extension of this faith, depends our nourishment and growth in the same life. For all spiritual endowments & riches are not only vigorous, & grow cold, according as our faith is vigorous, and grows cold.

Use 1. Of Refutation, against such as will have Christ to be given us in the Sacrament by the outward work only bodily, and by the mouth to be received, whether we have faith, or not.

Use 2. Of Direction, that in the use of the Lord's Supper, we take great care to stir up our faith, because unto nourishment and growth, is not only required the habit and disposition of faith, but also the actual exercise of it, in so much that all, even believers and faithful, are not worthy receivers of this Supper, unless they rouse up the faith that they have, and exercise it according as the exigent of that time and business doth require.

Doct. 3. For this spiritual nourishment in the Supper it is not required, that the bread and wine be substantially changed into the body and blood of Christ; nor that Christ be bodily present, in, with, and under the bread and wine; but only that they be changed ⟨◇⟩ to relation, and application or use; and that Christ be spiritually present only to such as partake in faith.

This is hence gathered, in that bread and wine are said to remain here in the Supper; and our communion with Christ, is in a sort said to be such, as Idolaters have with their Idols; which stands in relation only. Therefore Transubstantiation of Papists and Consubstantiation of Lutherans fight.

Reas. 1. With the nature of Sacraments in general, whose nature consist in a relative union, or likeness, as hath been explained; not in a bodily succession of the one in the others place, or a substantial change of the one into the other; nor yet in a bodily conjunction or presence of the one with, in, and under the other.

Reas. 2. With the analogy of this to the other Sacrament of Baptism, wherein neither Transubstantiation, nor Consustantiation useth to be made, nor is dreamed of to be made.

Reas. 3. With all the Sacramental phrases, or manners of speaking, used through all the Scriptures.

Reas. 4. With the human nature of Christ, which, with its essential properties safely can neither be everywhere, nor yet in so innumerable places, at once, as the Supper of the Lord useth to be given at one time.

Reas. 5. With the state and condition of the glorified body of Christ, which suffers not that the flesh and blood of Christ, should be divided or sundered, broken, devoured and chewed by the teeth, concocted and digested by the stomach, &c. handled in other such manner.

Reas. 6. With the revealed will of God, by which it is certain, that Christ remains bodily in the Heavens, and shall do so, until he come again to judge the ⟨◇⟩ and the dead.

Use.... Of ⟨◇⟩, against the errors and mad ⟨◇⟩ of such, as defend such monstrous Doctrines without any shame, as they were at first hatched and received without any ground.

Use 2. Of Direction, that in the use of this Supper we ⟨◇⟩ of no gross and carnal thoughts into our minds, as if the spiritual eating of, and feeding upon ⟨◇⟩ daily in the Word preached, were not the ⟨◇⟩ altogether as to the substance, with this in the ⟨◇⟩: For they differ only in this, that the ⟨◇⟩ eating differs only in the manner, or external adjunct of sealing, or obsignative exhibition, or ratification, from the others that are merely spiritual, and without this outward obsignation, in the Word preached, though it hath often the inward, and substantial obsignation by the Spirit, for which only the other was instituted.

Doct. 4. The only 〈◇〉 of this operative presence of Christ in the Sacrament, is that blessing, whereby we bless, 〈◇〉, or set apart to such an holy use, the bread and wine, according to Christ's appointment, who cannot but be 〈◇〉 with him own Ordinance, by his Spirit and operation, 〈◇〉 〈◇〉 his promise▪ when it is used, as he appointed

This is taught in the Text; The cup of blessing, which we bless &c. This blessing contains in itself, 1. The Institution recited and explained in celebration of the upper, as the ground of the whole action, and of the benefit and blessing, that is to follow on it. 2. A thanks giving for Christ, and for this his appointment, unto the Father, through him, and by the Spirit, that in this Ordinance we are more and more made partakers of Christ and his benefits. 3. A petition, wherereby the grace of God is sought, for directing and keeping us in the right use of it, and making this Ordinance powerful unto all the ends, for which it was appointed by him: And this is properly the consecrating of the signs, or outward elements.

Reas. 1. Because by this blessing, bodily things are separated from a common use, and are set apart to an holy, and so are consecrated, and sanctified.

Reas. 2. Because by these acts both the will of God by his institution, and our will or consent in this business, sanctified by our prayers, come both together and to one, for procuring spiritual power and operation in the forms or use of these signs.

Reas. 3. Because Christ himself did this, and commanded that we should do the same, that we doing so, may look for the spiritual blessing from him.

Use 1. Of Resutation against those kind of enchantments, or sorceries, that the Papists have put in place of this blessing or consecration.

Use 2. Of Direction▪ that in the celebration of this Supper, we may always have Christ's institution before our eyes with thanksgiving, and seeking of grace or favor, that we may approve ourselves in the right use of it; because from these comes all the blessing, and power of the Sacrament.

The thirtieth Lord's day.

1 Cor. 11. 28, 29.

Verse 28. But let a man examine himself, and so let him eat of that bread, and drink of that cup.

29 For he that eateth and drinketh unworthily, eateth and drinketh damnation to himself, not discerning the Lord's body.

THE Apostle in this part of his Epistle corrects many abuses, which had got some strength in the Church of Corinth; amongst which was the profanation of the Lord's Supper; and of the correction of it, this is the conclusion, wherein he expounds the duty of believers in receiving the Lord's Supper. This duty may be referred to two heads; whereof the 1. Is concerning the action itself, whereby the faithful are made partakers of this mystery by eating and drinking. 2. Is about the manner of this action, which is specified to us in the word ⟨ϕ⟩. And this manner is again contained in three acts, whereof the 1. is that which is set in the last place, that every communicant discern the Lord's body. 2. Is, that he try himself. 3. Is, that he furnish himself with such a disposition, as is worthy of so great a mystery. And these three acts are set down in these three words; discerning the Lord's body; let a man examine himself; and he that eats ⟨ϕ⟩ drinks unworthily.

Doct. 1. All our work, that is ours only in the Lord's Supper, is to eat and to drink the body and blood of Christ.

It is gathered from these words; Let him eat of that bread, and drink of that cup; and not discerning the Lord's body.

Reas. 1. Because this is the Sacrament of our spiritual nourishment in and by Christ.

Reas. 2. Because in the very institution of this Sacrament no other thing is prescribed, but that we should take, eat, and drink; to wit, as the signs with our bodies, so the body and blood of Christ spiritually or by faith, to the nourishment of our souls.

Reas. 3. Because nothing else is represented in the external signs and actions, but this nourishment on Christ, which by the institution of Christ, is in this Sacrament used.

Use, Of Refutation, against Papists, What the difference is between the Supper and the Popish Mass: because Papists have taken away the Sacrament that was instituted by Christ, and have set up in its place the Sacrifice of the Mass, that was devised by men. And this is the difference between a Sacrament and a Sacrifice, that the formal reason of a Sacrifice consists in this, that in it men offer something to God; and God receives something from men: But the formal reason of a Sacrament is in this, that God offers something to men by visible signs, and men receive it from God, on the conditions and manner that he offers it. In this Supper God offers Christ unto us for our spiritual nourishment; and we receive Christ as the food of our souls, by eating and drinking of him by faith. Hence the popish Mass is a mere stranger to Christ's institution, while they make its principal use to be a Sacrifice for the quick and the dead; and while they officiate their private Masses, wherein the people neither eat nor drink; while in the public Masses, they take away the cup from the people, so that though they eat in some sort, yet they drink in no manner; while they hold up the Host, or Sacrifice; that is, the consecrated bread and wine, rather to be adored and worshiped, than to be eaten, or drunk; while lastly, they do all this in an unknown tongue, so that the people cannot understand, either what, or how they should eat, or drink.

Doct. 2. That we may rightly partake in the Lord's Supper, it is chiefly required, that we rightly discern the Lord's body.

By this discerning of the Lord's body, is understood an act of the understanding, whereby we observe the difference between this bread, thus consecrated to be a sign, and exhibitiv seal of the Lord's body (that is of all his benefits and graces) to our faith, and common bread: Or it is that judgment of our mind, whereby we have a right apprehension and pronounce right sentence concerning this whole mystery, or business. The want of this discerning is that which is reproved here by the Apostle.

Reas. 1. Because without judgment and prudence agreeable to the thing undertaken, nothing can be rightly, or perfectly, done or performed.

Reas. 2 Because in the Sacraments, where the external appearances are bodily and gross, and yet a spiritual mystery or secret (as to sense) lies hid in them, there is need of spiritual heed and judgment, that we may rightly pierce and dive into that spiritual secret itself.

Reas. 3. Because the want of this discerning, brings with it a profanation of this holy feast, as appears by the example of the Corinthians. For who so discern not what it is about which they are busied, can never fit themselves so, as to behave themselves arightly in handling of such a business.

Use, Is both of Direction and Exhortation together, that everyone earnestly set his mind and judgment arightly to discern, before he come to the table of the Lord; what it is, that is there done; and what it is that himself should there do. Now the special points, that ought by all communicants to be discerned, are these. 1. The occasion and necessity that there was, that Christ should be broken and given for us, and to us, which was no other but the deepest guilt of our sin, & heaviest punishment due to it; and the misery that to us would thence have followed. 2. The proper cause and reason of this donation, which was the infinite mercy of God towards us. 3. The manner in which Christ was given for us; which was both in body and soul to the sufferance of death [though they were the soul and body of God personally] that by this his obedience we might be both freed from death, and the consequent of its misery; and made partakers of all the blessings of grace, and glory, and happiness, which were in him prepared for us; and he had deserved to us. 4. The means by which Christ is thus applied unto us, and made ours; as in this Sacrament, externally by the signs of eating of bread, and drinking of wine, and internally, by the operation of the Holy Ghost, and our faith stirred up by him, to rely upon Christ for life, and nourishment and growth unto life eternal, and all the blessings aforesaid.

Doct. 3. The second duty required unto a right communicating, or partaking of this Sacrament, is that we seriously examine or try ourselves.

The object of the former duty was the Supper itself, instituted of God. The object of this is ourselves, wherein by a reflex act we behold and consider ourselves, that we may understand how our disposition and condition agrees, or disagrees with the nature and use of this institution. And this inquiry should be made with greatest care and diligence, as the word used for it, doth sufficiently express; wherein is properly expressed the Goldsmiths pains in diligently trying of silver and gold, that he may know true coin from false.

Reas. 1. Because it would be in vain to discern the Lord's body, unless we discern aright also, how ourselves agree with, or disagree from the Lord's body, and whether we have such requisites, as necessarily we must, for the saving participation of his body. For in the Sacrament there is a mutual relation between the gift offered, and our receiving of it; nor doth it bestead us at all, to know of what sort, and how precious the gift is, unless we know also that ourselves are such, as to whom this gift doth belong.

Reas. 2. Because great is the deceit of man's heart, whereby men use to deceive themselves, while they think that all is right, although it be nothing so. It is needful therefore, that we diligently examine our own hearts, lest we be deceived with a false faith, and rest in a phancie and vain imagination instead thereof.

Reas. 3. Because it is not enough to our comfort, that we be sometimes well disposed to partake of these good blessings of God, unless we also discern this disposition to be in us. For our comfort dependeth not only on the presence, or having of grace; but also on our inward feeling, and perceiving that we have it: Which perceiving that we may attain to, it is needful that we seriously examine ourselves, and know what is in us.

Use, Of Exhortation, that we may have a care of this duty, and deal not too gently with ourselves, nor slightly; but bring all to a very punctual and rigorous trial. Now the special points that we ought to examine in ourselves, are these: 1. Whether we have knowledge and understanding of the things that belong to the institution of the Supper; that is, whether we rightly discern the Lord's body, as hath been taught in the precedent Doctrine. 2. Whether we have a true acknowledgement and repentance for our sins, from the guilt whereof we would be disburthened; i. e. the pardon whereof we seek to be sealed unto us in the use of this Sacrament. 3. Whether we have that faith, whereby we flee only to Christ, that we may be freed from 〈◊〉 sins. 4. Whether we be so far in charity, and love with our Neighbor, as that we carry no spite, hatred, malice, or revenge to his person, but can pray heartily for him to God, for his forgiveness (in case he be froward to convenient and fitting means of reconciliation) as for ourselves, though we may not outwardly testify our forgiveness of him in such case, where Ecclesiastical procedure cannot be had for fear of hardening him in his sin, or exposing ourselves and these mysteries to dirision; or because some other hindrance will not suffer us, as remote absence of the parties, and others the like; and can where occasion offereth, yea, are desirous to do him really all the good that we can.

Doct. 4. The third duty for right communicating, is that we have the disposition, that is worthy and fitting for so great a mystery.

It is gathered from these words; He that eats or drinks unworthily. Now the worthiness that is here required, is not the worth of quantity, or of merit; but of quality, or uprightness in the business; and of suitableness, as when St. John Baptist saith, Bring forth fruits worthy of repentance; he understands not fruits that deserve repentance to be given us; but are agreeable to true repentance; that is, true fruits of true repentance, and suitable to the nature of it.

Reas. 1. Because these mysteries cannot be unworthily used, but that the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ must needs withal be unworthily affronted, as it were by contempt. And hence it is, that unworthy partakers are said to eat and drink judgment unto themselves; to wit, from God's wrath, who by this most unworthy ignomony put upon his Son, is provoked.

Reas. 2. Because no noble form is introduced ordinarily into matter, nor fitly disposed and prepared before; so the grace and comfort of this Sacrament, useth not to be received but by such, as are suitably disposed and prepared for it; so that who so comes unworthily, doth of necessity go unfruitful from this Sacrament, as to any solid fruits thereof.

Reas. 3. Because unfitness and unpreparation makes this most holy Ordinance become an occasion unto many of greater hardening in their sins. For as the preaching of the Gospel is to some a savor of death unto death, not of its own nature, but by their perverse dispositions; so also this Sacrament unto unworthy communicants, is not the cup of blessing, but occasion of a curse. Now the specialties that are required unto this disposition, are these: 1. A right and pure intention, whereby we look at all and only such ends in partaking of the Supper, as God looked at, in the appointing of it, and giving of it to us. 2. A good conscience, whereby we have a sure and firm purpose and resolution of obeying God in all things, commanded by him; and of shunning all sins, in obedience unto him. 3. An awful reverence flowing from the right discerning of the Lord's body. 4. Humility, which flows from a right examination of ourselves, whereby we cannot but perceive our own unworthiness. 5. A great desire to the spiritual good things, which are offered us in this Sacrament. 6. Thankfulness to God for the goods bestowed and imparted to us. 7. Charity towards our brethren, who are together with us partakers of these blessings in Christ; as in the former Doctrine were further declared.

Doct. 5. Whoso neglect openly these duties, are not to be admitted unto the Lord's Supper.

The one and thirtieth Lord's day.

Mat. 16. 19.

And I will give unto thee the keys of the Kingdom of Heaven: And whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth, shall be bound in Heaven: whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth, shall be loosed in Heaven.

IN these words is contained an explication of that promise, which Christ in the last preceding verse had made to Peter, of building his Church upon the Rock, and of the strength of that building, which the gates or power of Hell should not overcome. Now the building of his Church is signified by the instrumental cause thereof; that is, the Ministry of the Gospel. The strength or firmness of this building is shewn in the firmness it hath from Heaven, which is its principal cause. And the building of the Church by the Ministry is Metaphorically explained, by the keys of the Kingdom of Heaven, because the giving of the keys to bear, is the sign of power given over that House, or Town unto which they belong; therefore Christ most fitly designed the power of the Ministry, in such things as belong unto the Kingdom of Heaven by this simile. The confirmation or strength of this Heavenly building is explained from things compared in likeness; to wit, between the administration of men about these keys; and the approbation thereof, and ratification by God. This parity or likeness is explained in two parts, according to the two uses that keys use to serve for, of 〈◇〉 and binding; and of opening and loosing.

Doct. 1. Christ appointed in his Church a certain order •...r rank of Ministers, for the building of her up, and keeping •...er in repair or strength.

He appointed a Ministry, not a Magistry, mastership or Lordly power; because he ordained not that any in the Church should do anything from or of his own authority, or according to his own pleasure; but only from and by the authority of Christ himself, who is the only King, Lord, and Lawgiver in his Church. He appointed a certain order.

Reas. 1. Because God is the God of order, and not of confusion, which ought to be far from his House.

Reas. 2. Because no other but the Lord of the Church had power to ordain any such thing; or make it effectual for its ends.

Reas. 3. Because thus it became Christ to show himself faithful in the House of God, as Moses was, Heb 3.

He appointed this order for the building of his Church, or keeping her in repair, or strengthening of her.

Reas. 1. Because he would deal with men in a man-like and moral manner, as was suitable to their nature. And this servanthip or Ministry is a moral means of building up and confirming the faithful.

Reas. 2. Because believers imperfections and diverse temptations, require such means, whereby they may be established and ordained in the faith.

Reas. 3. Because he would so put forth his powerful working by such earthen vessels, and weak means, for the greater praise end illustration of his grace.

Use, Of Information, that we understand how to esteem the Ministry of the Gospel; to wit, as a most holy and saving Ordinance of Christ ought to be esteemed.

Doct. 2. To this Ministry is adjoined a ministerial, or servant-like power, in things that belong to the Kingdom of Heaven.

This is collected from giving of the keys. For although by a key is sometimes designed supreme, or Lordlike power and command, as Rev. 1. 18. yet sometimes also a Ministerial power only, as Isa. 22. 22. And that it is so understood here is clear, in that Christ alone is King of his Church, and commander, endowed with supreme power. And by this he is distinguished from the Apostles themselves, Mat. 18. 19, 20. as also by this, that the Apostles everywhere profess themselves the Ministers of Christ.

Reas. 1. Because every order, rank, or degree instituted of God, hath some suitable power adjoined to it. As therefore a commanding or an imperial power is adjoined unto Empire or the State; so a ministerial power is adjoined unto Ministers.

Reas. 2. Because the building and keeping in repair, and strengthening and advancing the Church, in which the end of this Ministry consists, cannot be procured by men, but by such a power.

Reas. 3. Because the Kingdom of Heaven is of that nature, that it can be sub•...ect to no imperial or commanding power of sinful man, but to him only that is infallible, and imperable, God and man, Christ Jesus; and to a Ministerial or servant-like power of sinful men only.

Use 1. Of Refutation, against Papists, who give an imperial and commanding power to Peter, and to the Popes of Rome: which also they would fain pick out of this place. But the power here spoken of, is equally given, or joined to all the Ministers of the Word, and not to Peter alone, as they would have it. For, 1. Peter here represented the persons of all the Apostles, and of all Ministers of the Word, their successors; and in some kind of the whole Church. For as Christ thus proposed the question to them all, and had the answer given by Peter by the approbation and consent of them all, as that to which they adhered, and allowed as well as he, and therefore might be said to have been made in the name of all, he being the senior, and so often the speaker for all; so also in this promise instead of them all, Christ directs his speech to Peter. 2. This same power is solemnly given unto all the Apostles, and to their successors, John. 20. 23. 3. Unto every true Church this power is in some kind extended.

Use 2. Of Direction as well of Ministers, that they attempt nothing but from the command of Christ, as his Ministers; as of others, that they so look at Ministers, as they keep not still their eye upon their persons, and look no further; but that they lift up their eyes to Christ, whose Ministers they are, and love and honor them for his sake, and the employment he hath laid upon them, wherein, and as far as they carry themselves suitably to both.

Doct. 3. This power is properly exercised in binding and loosing, or in shutting and opening; that is, in retaining, or remitting of sins.

Reas. 1. Because the whole consolation and edification of the Church chiefly consists in the remission of sins given and granted unto believers, which is also set out and illustrated by retaining of sins, or denial of remission, which is denounced to unbelievers in the Church.

Reas. 2. Because all other duties that belong unto the Ministry depend on these, and may conveniently be reduced into them, either as means, effects, adjuncts, and the like.

Reas. 3. Because in these the excellency and worth of the Ministry of the Gospel do singularly appear; because that chief work of forgiving sins, which properly and absolutely agreeth only to God, is in some sort communicated to the Ministers of Christ, or made common to them with God; to wit, because the denunciation, testification, declaration, and certification of forgiveness of sins, belongs unto the Ministers of Christ, by their office; and that in two ways; to wit, either in the preaching of the Word, or in the exercise of Discipline.

Use 1. Of Information, about the excellency and worth of the Ministry of the Gospel, that it may not be disgraced by Ministers themselves, nor condemned, or spoken against by others.

Use 2. Of Comfort to believers, because the whole Ministry of the Gospel labors for this, that believers may be ascertained of the forgiveness of their sins.

The thirty third Lord's day.

Ephes. 4. 20, 21, 22.

Verse 20 But ye have not so learned Christ:

21 If so be that ye have heard him, and have been taught by him, as the truth is in Jesus.

22. That ye put off concerning the former conversation the old man, which is corrupt according to the deceitful lusts:

The Apostle is here taken up in that most weighty exhortation, whereby he began at the entry of this Chapter to stir up Christians to that conversation, which agreeth unto their calling unto Christianity. And this exhortation he began verse 17. to illustrate from a comparison of unlike things. And the parties that are compared, are Christians, and other people: The quality wherein they are compared, is their manner and way of living. The unlikeness in this quality, is either in the principles and causes of living, or in their effects. As to their principles, Heathens are said to have all their faculties corrupted; and as to the faith, all their actions and motions are deformed. On the contrary, all the faculties of a Christian are renewed, and the motions of them holy and honest. The reddition or second part of this comparison, which belongs to Christians, is contained in these five verses, wherein the unlike condition of Christians and unbelievers is explained: 1. From its external cause, which is the Doctrine and Discipline of the Gospel, verses 20, 21. 2. From the internal causes, which is conversion and sanctification. This again consists of two parts: 1. The mortification and laying off of the old man. 2. Its vivification and putting on of the new man; that is, renovation of the whole man, each part is illustrated by its description, which are from their effects. The effects of the old man are corruptions and errors, verse 22. Of the new man, righteousness and holiness, v. 23, 24.

Doct. 1. There is a great unlikenesse of condition and life between men regenerated and unregenerated.

This is gathered from the scope of the Text, and these words; the old man, and the new man, as if a man were not the same man after regeneration, that he was before. Hither belong all these comparisons which through most of the Proverbs of Solomon are made between the godly and ungodly. It is pointed at also everywhere in the New Testament, and also in the Old, by the difference between light and darkness, and between a quick man and a dead, and between one that being defiled with all sort of uncleanness, like the Sow that wallows in the mire, and one that is washed and cleansed.

Reas. 1. Because they have a diverse nature; believers being made partakers of the divine nature, 2 Pet. 1. 4. and unbelievers are scarcely to be said to have a man's nature in a moral consideration. Hither belongs it, that the Apostle everywhere teacheth that believers are led and governed by the Spirit of God, to walk thereafter; and that unbelievers are led by their own flesh.

Reas. 2. Because as the internal principle of operations is quite unlike; so also the outward rule of all their conversation is quite contrary; the regenerate ordering his whole life after the will of God revealed in his Word; the unregenerate after his own suggestions, and corrupt imaginations, or worldly opinions.

Reas. 3. Because the end to which they tend, is unlike and contrary; the regenerate breathing after God and Heaven, as he is called to the hope of eternal life; the unregenerate seeking himself, and this present world. Hither belongs it, that the unregenerate are said to be of this world; but the regenerate Citizens of Heaven itself, Phil. 3. 20. and often elsewhere.

Use 1. Of Reproof. of such as will be thought, and think themselves perhaps true believers and regenerate, when yet in their whole conversation scarce anything can be marked, which is not common to them, and unregenerate persons.

Use 2. Of Comfort, for the godly, that lead a life worthy of Christian profession, but are sometimes from infirmity troubled, because most with whom they live, or have to do, become strange to them; and make it plain that they are offended some way with the strictness of their conversation; which offense ariseth properly from this unlikenesse of conversation, whereby the corrupt walking of others according to the fashions of the world, are tacitly reprov'd, Ephes. 5. Now this unlikenesse ought to be our greatest comfort, as it is a sign of our regeration.

Use 3. Of Exhortation, that by change of our life and conversation, we may more and more study to show unto others, and confirm unto ourselves this grace of our regeneration, whereunto we are called in Christ.

Doct. 2. Th... cause of this unlikenesse of regenerate from unregen...rate, is the Doctrine of the Gospel.

It is in the Text clear enough.

Reas. 1. Because the Doctrine of the Gospel teacheth us to deny all ungodliness, and worldliness, and to live holily, 1 Pet. 2. 12.

Reas. 2. Because the mighty and powerful operation of the Holy Spirit is present with the preaching of the Gospel, for producing this change in man; for which cause it is called the Ministry of the Spirit, and the Law of the Spirit of life, and the Arm of God.

Reas. 3. Because the proper power of faith is to cleanse the hearts of those that it is in, Act... 5. 9. and to make us from our hearts to hearken to the Doctrine unto which we were delivered, R...m 6. 17.

Use, Of Admonition. that we beware least by hearing in vain the preaching of the Gospel, without this fruit of conversion and change of life, we perniciously deceive ourselves.

Doct. 3. One part of this conversion made by the Gospel, is mortification of all our corrupt dispositions and customs.

It is gathered from verse 22. where by the old man, all the corrupt dispositions are understood, because they possessing all the parts and faculties of the man from our birth, and that with dominion and power over us to keep us still under them, do therefore carry the name of the old man justly, and that for these reasons. 1. Because they thus possessed us from the beginning of our conception. 2. Because they ought by Christians to be esteemed as things old, and useless, and to be put off, and laid away: And that,

Reas. 1. Because the end of Christ's death, and the Gospel itself, is to dissolve the works of the Devil, ...oh. 3. 8. And these inordinate dispositions and customs are amongst the first and chief works of the Devil.

Reas. 2. Because by these we were separated from God; and the Gospel calls us and draws us to God again; and therefore to lay these aside.

Reas. 3. Because life and obedience cannot have place in such, as these lusts and customs have power in; and the Gospel calls us to a spiritual life, and a new obedience.

Use 1. Of R...proof of such, as would have themselves thought regenerate, when yet they are the servants of such carnal lusts.

Use 2. Of Exhortation, that we manfully set ourselves not only to repress such lusts, but quite also to root them out. Now the old man is mortified, 1. By that firm and constant purpose of changing our life, which is effectually begun in our first repentance, and daily ought to be renewed, and extended to all new emergencies. 2. By the virtue of Christ's death applied to us by faith, whence our old man is said to be crucified with Christ; and it may be rightly added, with the same nails, that Christ was crucified with. For Christ was fastened unto the Cross, partly because of the guilt of our sins; partly out of the love of the Father to us, that we might be saved: partly out of Christ's own love to us, whereby he was willing to lay down his life for us. And by the earnest meditation of these things, the power of sin is most diminished in us. 3. By the power of the Holy Spirit, to whom we ought... to give up ourselves, in the use of all the means ordained of God, whereby he useth to put forth his powerful working.

Doct. 4. The other part of this conversion, is vivification, or renewing of the inward man.

By the inward, new, or renewed man, are understood the new dispositions, that are agreeable unto the will of God: They are called the man, as these other dispositions were, because they should be diffused over the whole man, as they were. And they are called the new man partly in respect to order, because they follow the other; partly in respect of their excellency, because they are so much better than the other, as new things are to old, out-worn, and decayed things; in which respect, many things of greater excellency than others are called new, in comparison to the other. And this new man is said both to be repaired, and to be put on, because as these inward dispositions in the spirit of our mind are acquired, they are the renewing of the man, and the innerman, verse 23. and the same is said to be put on as a garment, as both outwardly and inwardly it hath full hold of us, and wraps us wholly up in itself, so that it contains not onely imputed righteousness, but together also that of inherence, which consists in the actions of a new obedience.

Reas. 1. This new man must be put on, because it is according to God, or the image of God, as it is in the Text. For it is our duty in our whole life to live unto God, and to aspire to be like to the image of God, according to which we were created, and whereunto we are now again called.

Reas. 2. Because in this new man, or in this image of God our spiritual perfection consisteth, and so are almost the chief parts of our glorification.

Reas. 3. Because as by this image we please God, who delighteth in his own image; so by the same alone we are made fit, and apt to glorify God as we ought.

Reas. 4. Because we cannot be freed from the corruption and perverseness of the old man, but by virtue of this new man, as darkness is not removed out of this or that place but by letting in of light.

Use, That with all care and by all means sanctified of God for this end, we may more and more labor to put on this new man. Now he is put on. 1. By virtue of that effectual desire & purpose we have to please God in our first repentance. 2. By virtue of Christ's resurrection applied to us by faith. 3. By virtue of the Holy Spirit given us in the word of Christ, and in his Sacraments.

Doct. 5. The old man brings us errors and corruptions; and the new man brings forth righteousness and true holiness, verses 22, 23.

The old man corrupts 1. The understanding with all secret errors. 2. The other faculties, by all sorts of lusts and concupiscences. 3. The life and conversation, by all sort of misleadings from the right way. In all these there is corruption properly so called, because there is want of such a life and perfection, as should not be wanting; and a perturbation of that order that belongs to the state of perfection. Now that the new man produceth the works of righteousness and holiness, appears by these reasons.

Reas. 1. Because he observes the rule of righteousness, which is the Law of God.

Reas. 2. Because he belongs to our spiritual perfection, wherein we resemble the divine nature, according to our proportion which is our holiness.

Reas. 3. Because he brings always forth kindly fruits, or like unto himself, seeking both his own conservation and improvement from the common conspiracy of all our inclinations.

Use, Of Exhortation, that with the same care and zeal we may labor for the mortification of the old man and vivification of the new, wherewith we desire to shun corruption and death, and to attain unto an holy and blessed perfection.

The thirty fourth Lord's day.

Exod. 20. 1, 2, 3.

Ver. 1 And God spake all these words, saying,

2 I am the LORD thy God, which brought thee out out of the Land of Egypt, out of the house of bondage.

3 Thou shalt have no other gods before me.

IN these words are contained the preface of the Moral Law, and the first precept thereof. In the preface is contained the definition, division, and confirmation of the Law: The difinition is pointed at by circumstances, which are as it were the specificative or differencing notions of it, whereby this Law is distinguished from all others: Whereof the 1. is, that God himself spoke it, or immediately by himself pronounced the words of this Law. 2. That then he spoke it; that is, after such a singular preparation of the people, as never was used in the giving of any other Law. The division of it is contained in these words; that God is said to have spoken all the words of it; that is, of both the Tables, or all the t...n words; where respect to the whole, and to its parts is plainly pointed at. The confirmation, or persuasion used to confirm it, is verse 2. where a most strong argument is brought to induce to obedience suitable to this Law; and it is twofold, 1. In general from the Covenant; I am thy God. 2. From a special benefit bestowed upon them by virtue of that Covenant. The first precept itself, is verse 3. whereby is enjoined us, that we have Jehovah for our God; or Jehovah alone: So that in it two points are together enjoined us. 1. That we acknowledge Jehovah to be the true God, and none else. 2. That with all religious honor and worship, we worship him, and that with all our heart, &c. For that is to have Jehovah for our God; and not to be understood speculatively only, but practically, effectively, and really.

Doct 1. This Law of God contained in the decalogue, or ten words (that is brief sentences) is the most perfect rule for directing of the life of man.

This is gathered from the definition, which we said; before was pointed out in two circumstances; because it hath not only God for its author, but is also given with singular majesty in the perfectest manner, as after extraordinary preparation: That we may understand all perfection that can be desired in any Law, is to be found in this.

Reas. 1. Because it prescribes all the duties of man, whether they look at God himself directly, as in the first Table; or our neighbor, as in the second.

Reas. 2. Because in all those duties, it not only requires the works themselves, but also the most perfect way of working them; to wit, that they come from the whole heart, and from the bottom of the heart; that is, from the entire strength of the whole man, and with perfect purity and sincerity; and that they be directed to the glory of God.

Reas. 3. Because it contains in itself a delineation or draught of that perfection, whereunto man in his first or innocent nature was created, according to the image of God. And therefore also it is called the Law of Nature, because that rule of life, which was written in the heart of man, according to its primitive and pure nature, is in this Law explained.

Reas. 4. Because it belongs not only to one Nation, as the Judicial Law did; nor unto some certain time only, as the Ceremonial Law did; but it is the Common-Law of all Nations, Times, and Persons.

Use 1. Of Information, that we esteem this Law of God as we ought; that is, that we think no other ways of it, than as of the will of God omnipotent, and as of that will of his, which most intimately belongs to us, as the only rule of our life; and as of such a rule, as hath no defect, but is both perfect in itself, and requires all perfection in us.

Use 2. Of Admoni...ion, that with all reverence we give heed unto this Law, and beware of all neglect and contempt of it, as we would shun death.

Doct. 2. The Moral Law is divided into diverse words, or precepts.

It is gathered from this, in that God is said to have spoken all these words. They are called words, because they are short; and as it were spoken summarily, or in one word. The chief division of them is into two Tables; the next into ten Precepts, or Commands.

Reas. 1. That we might the more easily understand the will of God, by parts delivered; which wholly together, and at once declared as it were in heaps, we could not so well understand. For the parts in a distribution, or division, make much for the declaration and illustration of any whole.

Reas. 2. That by this means our memory may be helped; because naturally our memory is strengthened from the order of the parts amongst themselves.

Reas. 3. That in every part and act of our conversation, we may have light of singular direction, from some part of this Law.

Use, Of Admonition, that we neglect nor contemn no word of this Law; because they are all parts of one and the same Law, and have the same sanction of authority; so that who so stumbles against any one, is guilty of them all, I am. 2. 10.

Doct. 3. Whatsoever is commanded in any part of the Law, we are bound for many causes to perform the same to God.

This is gathered from that confirmation of the Law; I am Jehovah, &c.

Reas. 1. Because God commands us nothing, he may not with very good right require from us, as well by reason of his absolute power and dominion, as of our dependence on him, by which we require to be supplied and upheld by him in all things.

Reas. 2. Because he requires nothing from us, the observance whereof he did not deserve at ⟨◇⟩ hands before, as well by spiritual benefits and blessings, as temporal and bodily, in regard whereof, out of thankfulness we owe him all obedience, as is plain in the Text; I brought thee out of the Land, &c.

Reas. 3. Because God is ready to reward our obedience most abundantly in every point.

Use, Of Direction, that by often meditation of the manifold obligations, whereby we are bound to perform our obedience to God, we may more and more stir up our minds to a care of observing him in all things.

Doct. 4. Every command of the Law, requires the whole obedience of the whole man.

That is, as well inward as outward; of the heart, as of the mouth, and hand or work: Thou shalt have no other, &c. Make not unto •...hy self &c. Are forms of speaking, whereby formally such an universal obedience is required.

Reas. 1. Because God the giver of this Law, ought to be glorified with obedience of the whole man, as well of soul as of body, and of both these parts of man.

Reas. 2. Because this is the excellent perfection of the Law of God, whereby it goes beyond all human Laws, in that it subjects unto itself the heart, and the reins, and the most inward retirement of of men, as God himself alone, who is the author of this Law, knows what is in man.

Reas. 3. Because this Law is the rule of spiritual life, and so ought to pierce even to our spirits themselves.

Use 1. Of Information, that for the right understanding of this Law, we look not only to such things, or think that they only are contained under the Law, as in express words are there contained; but all such things also, as belongs to such an head of obedience, whether they be outward or inward. For in every command, as is certain by the sum of entire and whole obedience, the words are to be taken not according to the bare letter, but in a modification of diverse tropes, or borrowed sorts of speaking, as agree to the perfection of such a Law of nature. The trope of Synecdoche that puts the special for the general to be understood by it, is here frequent; as when abstinence from someone vice by name, is put for the whole obedience, whereby we not only abstain from all faults of that kind; but also are bound to the performance of the contrary affirmative good; and when some action is put for all of its kind and of affinity of nature with it. The trope also of Me...onymie is everywhere in these commands, whereby all the adjuncts are understood under the name of their objects; the effects in their causes, and contrarily; with which is complicated the trope of Metaphor some way; so as all the decalogue is Metaleptick, or to be understood by Transsumption. And these rules must of necessity be understood in the explication of every precept, as our Savior's exposition of them, and other Scriptures make clear.

Use 2. Of Admonition, that we rest not, nor please ourselves in obedience of any sort done to the Law; but that we may aspire to the entire and perfect observance of it, and ever acknowledge just matter of our humbling in this, that we are so far from that perfection, that it requires.

Doct. 5. The first and greatest command is that, which contains our duty to God.

Hence is it that it is both put in the first place, and hath also the express testimony of Christ, Mat. 22. 28.

Reas. 1. Because God himself being the object of this duty, from him a sort of nobleness and dignity is derived unto the duty itself.

Reas. 2. Because more and greater things are contained in our duty to God, than either can or may be used in duties to man; as is clear by that form, With ...he whole mind, and the whole heart, &c.

Reas. 3. Because this duty is the foundation and principle of all others, in as much as in God, and for God only, we ought to perform all other duties; and so the duties of the second Table are thus virtually contained in the first Commandment.

Use Is of Direction, that our first and chief care may be taken up in those duties, that belong to God.

Doct. 6. The principal duty to God is, that we have him only for our God.

And to have God for our God, is in general to give God that honor, which is due unto his excellent Majesty: And to this are required.

1. That we seek the true knowledge of him, with all care, as he hath revealed himself in his word; because we cannot honor him rightly, whose nature and will we are ignorant of: John 4. 12. Rom. 10 14.

2. That from a most humble reverence, we subject ourselves unto him, because the honor that we give to God, as to our God, is the honor of a Creature towards its Creator, of a Son towards his Father; of a Servant towards his Master, and that such a Master as hath power of life and death over us; not of the body only, but of the soul, or that which is eternal.

3. That we believe all, and rest in them, by true faith, which he witnesseth and proposeth unto us; because other ways we cannot give him the glory of his omni•...ience, truth, &c.

4. That with certain hope we look for all that he hath promised; because also we cannot give him the honor of the truth of his promises, unless with belief of them, we be so affected with them, as to desire and hope for the accomplishment of them.

5. That with greatest love we cleave to him, as the chief good; because as the quidditative notion of God, doth its self denotate the Fountain and Author, and so the possessor of all highest and most perfect goodness; so the honor due to God, contains in it that affection, that is raised up by the meditation and apprehension of the chief good; which is pure and perfect love.

6. That we express all these duties, and exercise them by a devout hearing of his Word, and calling upon his name, with the like exercise of divine worship; because we can neither powerfully be affected about the honor of God, without such operations, wherein such affections are put forth: neither is the honor we owe to God, contained within the bounds of individual disposition or affection; Nor lastly, can a lively affection of honoring God be cherished or kept in our minds, without such means, whereby it is as well begotten in us, as preserved and improved.

Use 1. Is of Reproof, against such as think they have God for their God, and keep this command well enough, if they deny not God with their mouths, though they never rouse up themselves to give God this honor before spoken of: Of which sort of men are all such, as 1. deny not themselves, that they may be wholly subject to God and his will. 2. All such as rest in their ignorance. 3. Such as endeavor not to build up themselves in true Faith, Hope, and Love. 4. Such as contemn or neglect the exercise of Piety, public or private; of all these it may truly be affirmed, that while they endeavor not thus to give God his due honor, they have him not really for their God.

Use Is of Exhortation, that by such considerations we stir up ourselves to a greater care of Piety, unless we would be like such, as are without God in this world, and so can look for no other than to be separated from God in the world to come.

Doct. 7. Who so giveth this honor, or any part of it, to any other than God, they set up a false God to themselves, and so are Idolaters.

It is gathered from this; Ye shall have no other God. That is; give not this honor to another, that is not true God by nature or essence: For against this command men sin three manner of ways, 1. If we give not this honor to God 2▪ If we give it to another, that is not God. 3. If we fight or dispute against God, or this honor of his: Who so sin against God in the first way, they are profane; in the second, they are Idolaters; in the third, they are enemies to God.

Use 1. Is of Refutation, against Papists, who give a great part of this honor to creatures

Use 2. Of condemnation against such as have their minds so fastened to worldly things, that it may be truly said of them, that they have their affiance, hope and love chiefly placed in them: concerning whom the Apostle warns us, that they have their belly for their god, and their substance, riches and the like.

The thirty fifth Lord's days.

Exod. 20. 4, 5, 6.

Verse 4. Thou shalt not make to thee any graven image, or the likeness of anything that is in heaven above, or in the earth beneath, or that is in the water under the earth.

5 Thou shalt not bow down thyself to them, nor worship them, nor serve them; for I the Lord am a jealous God, visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children, to the third and fourth generation of them that hate me.

6 And showing mercy unto thousands of them that love me, and keep my commandments.

WE have here the second Command, and the sanctification of it. It concerns the means of worshipping God. It is expressed by Negation and Distribution of means, and description of the use, that is wont to be exercised about such means: The Distribution is taken from the places of the means, Heaven, Earth, Waters. The Description is from the Adjunct of Adoration, or bowing down to them. The Sanction consists in a threatening and promise, the nature and ratifying power whereof is expounded from the nature of God, I am Jehovah, thy strong God. This command is distinguished from the former, in that there essential and natural worship of God was commanded; but here accidental and of free institution. And this instituted worship, as to the Negative part... is declared Synecdochically by an image; because by the abuse of images, this worship of God useth most to be violated.

Doct. 1. In such way, and by such means God is only to be worshipped, as he hath commanded himself to be worshipped by his word.

This is gathered from this Precept, in that by image is to be condemned all will worship, brought in by men; so that no other is approved, but that which himself hath prescribed. This Doctrine seems also to be clear in these words; Thou shalt not make unto thyself: that is, at thine own pleasure, and as thou likest best, thou shalt bring no worship to God. For although this phrase hath sometimes the sense, thou shalt not make anything, so as to have it for thyself alone; yet both the short and comprehensive manner of speech in the Decalogue, and the matter itself that is here handled, persuade us; that it should be here taken in the former sense. This Doctrine is expressed, Exod. 23. 33. Deut. 12. last verse.

Reas. 1. Because God alone knows what is acceptable to him, and suitable to his nature and will.

Reas. 2. Because the whole blessing and fruit of our worship that we owe to God, depends on him: and it is not for us to prescribe to God, by what means he should work on us, or we bless him.

Reas. 3. Because worship not commanded, hath not the nature of obedience in it. But it is God's will and it belongs to his honor, that by obeying we worship him, and by worshipping we obey him.

Reas. 4. Because such is the vanity and futility of men's imaginations in things divine, that if it had been left to us, to choose unto ourselves the means of divine worship, it would have been turned all into traditions and vain observations; as experience witnesseth, that the Devil by this way hath led away men into empty superstitions, almost through all the world.

Use 1. Is of Refutation against Papists, who have defiled all parts of Divine-worship, with their Willworship, traditions of men's devising, and their own ordinance.

Use 2. Is of Direction, that in worshipping God, we have a precise regard of God's own holy Ordinances in the ministry of the Word, Sacraments, and Discipline; and on the other part, that we despise all human devises, with how soever fair color and pretence they may be commended to us.

Doct. 2. God is not to be worshipped, at, or before an Image.

For other ways Images in this place are not absolutely forbidden, because there is a civil, lawful, use of some Images; but only the use of Images in God's worship: Neither are such Images only forbidden in God's worship, as are of counterfeit God's, as Papists will have it; but also of the true God, Deut. 4 1.... Where Moses opposeth the voice of the true God, which the people had heard in the Mount, unto all Images of the same God, and not of other counterfeit gods. This was also said expressly to have been signified in the sin of the Israelites, about the Image that they made, Exod. 22. verse 6. that they would make a Calf for an Image, or representation of Jehovah: The distinction therefore between an Image and an Idol, in which, and by the which Image God is served, hath no ground neither in writing, nor right reason, nor in common use of words. The grievousness of this sin everywhere appeareth, that in scripture it is commonly called Idolatry: For such as worship the true God at or before an Image, they do not altogether and professedly forsake the true God; and therefore do not commit that principal and essential Idolatry; yet are they guilty of secondary Idolatry, and that which is such indirectly, and by participation.

Reas. 1. Because in some sort, they make unto themselves another God besides the true God; to wit, such an one as will be represented by an Image, and worshipped there by us.

Reas. 2. Because they not only diminish that glory which they ought to give unto God, but they also refer a part of it either expressly, or impliedly unto the image, which is due unto God alone.

Reas. 3. Because also they honor in some sort with Divine honor the Authors of Images, while they grant them the power or authority of instituting divine worship, which belongs to God alone: and by that means also they are said to worship the Devil himself, because he is the principal author of Image worship. Hence it is that scripture useth to call this grievous sin by some special phrases; as when in the sanction of this commandment, it is called a hating of God, and in other places, treachery or perfidiousness, adultery and violation of the wedlock-covenant. Hence also it is, that so heavy a punishment is denounced against this sin, as is in the threatening laid down in this commandment, whereby it is said, that God will visit this iniquity on the Sons, Nephews and their Children again unto the the thrid and fourth generation.

Use 1. Is of Refutation against the Idolatry of Papists, who as they commit Idolatry against the first commandment, in praying to Angels and Saints departed, and the like; so here they commit secondary Idolatry, 1. In that they make Images of God the Father, Son and Holy-ghost; which is expressly forbidden. 2. In that they honor with divine worship these and other Images. 3. In that they make the worship itself Idolatrous, which they would offer to God, while by the intervention of an Image they thrust it upon God, against his own revealed will. And this amongst others, gives just and necessary cause to all the godly of making separation from the Church and worship of Papists: Because such a worship is abominable to God, and ought to be in abomination and detestation with all the godly.

Use 2. Is of Exhortation, as well for thanksgiving to God, that he hath delivered us from such Idolatry, as unto care and caution, that we communicate in no manner with such Idolatrous ordinances.

Doct. 3. Such Images are diligently to be shunned of us.

It is gathered from the manner of setting forth the command, whereby with such care and so precisely all and every sort of Images are forbidden: And this is it that thē Apostle John means in 1 Epistle▪ chap. and last verse...

Reas. 1. Because such Images belong to that greatest abomination, to wit, of Idolatry; from which all the godly ought to keep themselves very far.

Reas. 2. Because there is great danger in these human inventions, least they should insensibly allure us unto an apostasy or defection from God; as is evident by the words of this precept, Thou shalt not bow thyself, neither worship, &c.

Reas. 3. Because by this means we should reprove Idolaters, and as much as in us lies, call them back from their Idolatry.

Use Is of Direction, that we always have a care to be precise in this kind, that so we may preserve unto ourselves the worship of God pure and undefiled: Neither then are any Images of God to be admitted, nor any other Images for holy use, nor anything of our devising, that hath analogy or proportion to an Image, as are all symbolike, or signifying ceremonies in divine worship introduced by men: And the instructing of rude and ignorant people hereby, is but of vain pretence, because Images are teachers of lies, Hab. 2. 9. Ier. 10 18.

The thirty six and seventh Lord's day.

On Exod. 20. 7.

Verse 7 Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain: for the Lord will not hold him guiltless that taketh his name in vain.

The third command is here proposed, and its Sanction or Confirmation. The Command is concerning the manner of worshipping God, or the right use of such things, as have a special relation to God and his worship: For by the name of Jehovah, all is understood, whereby God is made known to us, or discernible, as a man is by his name. By taking of God's name into our mouths, is understood then, the use of all such things; because things use to be taken up so commonly, that they may be applied unto use. And by in vain, or vainly, is understood all pravity of this use, by a Synecdoche of the special put for the more general kind; and that because a vain using of sacred and holy▪ things, is a grievous abuse of them, though there may be others that are more grievous, as when not only without their just and true end and fruit, they are used, or for no settled end, that is, rashly, or in vain; but also settledly and purposely, they turn and wrest them about to some wicked and impious uses. So then, by taking God's name in vain, all abuse of sacred things is understood. The Sanction of this precept is by its threatening; which is generally of all misery. This misery is explicated by its proper causes; that is, the prosecution of that guilt, which followeth the breach of this Command, God will not leave him or hold him guiltless, &c. For as the blessedness of a man is declared by the taking away of the guilt of sins, Rom. 4. 6. 7. So also man's misery is declared by prosecution of the same guilt.

Doct. 1▪ We ought with all religion, or devotion to be conversant about such things▪, as belong unto God's worship, both as to the things themselves, and as to the manner of handling them.

It is clear enough in the words themselves; Take not the name of the Lord thy God in vain.

Reas. 1. Because this manner of handling things, belongs some way to the form of the action, and of our duty: and it more inwardly belongs to our duties▪ that we rightly direct our actions, as to the point of their form than of their matter and object; though a care must be had of both, and that with a devotion of the same kind.

Reas. 2. Because in such things the name of God is as it were committed and recommended to our trust, that it may appear with what devotion and respect we will use the same.

Reas. 3. Because that name of God hath so much worth and excellency in it, that it is with little or no less wickedness used with contempt or sight, than when it is altogether neglected. Now the religious manner of using God's name, consists chiefly in these things: First, in the sincerity of our intentions, whereby we are to look at the very end in the use of it, and worship of God, unto which of •...s own nature, and by God's appointment it tends and was ordained. 2. In the reverence wherewith we use it, which is to be such, as thereby we may show, that we are careful to preserve & keep up the honor of God, and of his worship, in good esteem, and save it from all contempt, slight, dishonor, and reproach. 3. In our zeal, whereby we endeavor with all earnestness of mind to glorify God in the use of these things, and so advance our own salvation. These and the like ways are pointed out to us in the very forbidding the using of them vainly.

Reas. 1. Because that is used rashly and vainly, which is not used to its own end; therefore to exclude this vanity, sincerity about our intention must first be used.

Reas. 2. Because that is counted but vain and empty, which is but light and slightly handled, as if it were a thing of no weight or importance, therefore the forbidding to use vainly, commands us by the same means to use it, with reverence, earnestness and gravity.

Reas. 3. Because a thing is used in vain, when it attains not to its end, uses and fruit it was ordained for; therefore for the taking away of this vanity also a diligent endeavor is required, of reaping and receiving the just fruits of such ordinances; thus is done by zeal.

Use 1. Is of Reformation, against Papists, who in many things look only to the work done, and neglect the manner of doing, and disposition of the doer.

Use 2. Is of reproof, of all carnal and irreligious manners of men in the use of God's worship, and sacred things; when as they go about them, either after a wonted fashion of their own, or out of custom rather than from conscience, and a knowing, and feeling resentment of duties; and have in them, for the most part, other ends set down and proposed to themselves, than such as God appointed, and they ought only to intend; or they are lightly touched with them, and therefore but slightly busied in them, as if they were matters of sport, or high-way pastimes; or lastly, these are so old in the good duties they do, though they look not like men in sport, that yet they look as such, that never either looked for, nor had any great care of reaping any great benefit from the things they did.

Use 3. Is of Exhortation, that we may more and more stir up in ourselves, and in our minds and consciences, this religious care.

Doct. 2. This religious care ought singularly to be had in the use of Oaths, and such things as are of the like nature thereto.

It is gathered from hence, because the name of God in a special manner is taken up into our mouths, in Oaths, Vows, Promises, Covenants and the like; and a reverence of God's dreadful name is especially here commended unto us.

Reas. 1. Because in every Oath, there is a certain calling upon the name of God, in a special sort.

Reas. 2. Because God is not barely and only called upon, as in other businesses, to help us; but as a witness, judge and an avenger, if we speak not and think not truth, and do not right.

Reas. 3. Because in an Oath we bind ourselves not only to man, or our party on earth, but also unto God, and for the most part of our own accord; and where otherways we needed not put our souls under the wrath and curse of God, and his fearful •...engeance, if we should deceive.

Reas. 4. Because as it were, we here interpose God and his name for our Surety; all which respects require a singular religious care of the use of God's name in such a behalf.

Use Of Condemnation against such as are given to •...ash Oaths, or to superstitious, blasphemous and profane ones.

Doct. 3. It is a most grievous sin, and such as God will •...n a singular man•...er avenge, to abuse God's name in this manner.

This is gathered from the sanction, adjoin'd to the precept: God will not leave him unpunished, &c. And this sanction is grounded on two Reasons, Reas. 1. Because this sin amongst men is accounted venial, and is daily committed without any punishment.

Reas 2. Because it is our natural corruption, little or nothing to regard the dispositions of our minds in worshipping God; which yet God chiefly looks at.

Now the grievousness of the sin, appeareth in this; 1. That God is in this, as it were, mocked: 2. That God's worship is turned as it were, into a stage-play. 3. That an occasion hereby is given of contemning and blaspheming of God's name: And amongst the punishments, wherewith God follows this sin, that spiritual revenge is most horrid, whereby he so deserts such men, that things which of their own nature are a savor of life unto life, become unto them a savor of death unto death; which also by the very order of nature follows upon this kind of sin.

Use Of Admonition is, that we take heed of such sort of sins; and these are not to play and make a sport with passages of holy Scripture; or to make use of them to charms, or enchantments, and witchcraft: without any reverence or gravity, to toss them to and fro like Tennis-balls, in common discourse, and purposes; lastly, to be exercised in any part of God's worship, merely for a shift, and for the fashion, and for the custom that is in use.

Doct. 4. That for the fear or horror of such a sin, we ought not altogether to abstain from Oaths, as things in themselves and absolutely unlawful.

For in some cases, times and matters, we are bound unto them by the affirmative or commanding part of this Precept.

The thirty eighth Lord's day.

On Exod. 20. 8, 9, 10, 11.

Verse 8. Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy:

9. Six days shalt thou labor, and do all thy work:

10. But the seventh day is the Sabbath of the LORD thy God's in it thou shalt not do any work: thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, thy man-servant, nor thy maidservant, nor thy cattle, nor thy stranger that is within thy gates:

11 For in six days the LORD made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day, Wherefore the LORD blessed the Sabbath day and hallowed it.

This fourth command, which is about the time of more solemn worship, is, explicated 1. generally, verse. 8. Remember, &c. 2. special, verse. 9, 10. that this is the seventh, or one of seven; whereunto is adjoined the duty about keeping this day. This duty consists of two parts, to wit, of rest, and of the Sanctification of that rest: the rest is a ceasing from all our works; and is illustrated from its causes, by a distribution; neither thou, nor thy son, &c. The sanctifying of this rest is consecrating, or holy application of it to God's worship. And this sentence is not only proposed, but also confirmed, and that with a double reason; whereof 1. Is taken from a tacit comparison of the greater. God hath promised us six days for our works; and therefore by very good right and reason, he may challenge the seventh to himself, to be consecrated to his worship. •... Reason is taken from the exemplar cause, because God by his own example of resting on the seventh day, went before us, as it were to give us a copy to follow. 3, Reason is from the efficient, that is, God's institution or appointment which consisteth of two parts; sanctifying of it, and blessing it. The sanctifying of it, was the separating of this day from a worldly use to an holy. The blessing of it, was the promise to bless them, that rightly bless this day.

Doct. 1. Certain times are both privately and publicly to be appointed and set apart for more solemn worship.

This is understood in the command by that Synecdoche, that names the special for the general. Those times in general are due unto public worship which are most agreeable to the societies, in which we live. And to the private exercises of godliness, by night order; some part of the morning, and of the evening time is due; and this is always the practice of the Prophets and Apostles approved in Scripture, and proposed unto us, as an example to be followed.

Reas. 1. Because we ought to have this care, that we orderly and decently worship God; which cannot be without setting apart such a certain time.

2. Because our vanities, and straglingnes of mind and forgetfulness about spiritual duties requires of us the help of such an ordinance, as this.

3. Because these appointed times keep us from many sins, while in our thoughts we are either preparing ourselves for these exercises, or else keep still the fresh remembrance and power of them in our memories.

Use, is of Reproof, against their negligence, who though they profess themselves to be worshippers of God, yet can scarce find any time, to give God the worship that is due to him

Doct. 2. That one day of seven be holily observed, is of moral and perpetual duty; as with us, the Lord's Day.

Reas. 1. Because this is expressly commanded in this moral law, as spoken immediately by God himself, together with the other commands, and written by his own finger on tables of stone, as they were; which things were only proper to the moral law.

Reas. 2. Because it was thus ordained from the beginning of the Creation.

Reas. 3. Because it is never less necessary, that some seventh day be observed, than it was at the first institution. And that the Lord's day, or first of the week, or seventh is now by Divine authority appointed to us, that it be holily kept, appeareth:

1. From the ground and reason of the change, because as God from the beginning, appointed the seventh day of the week, or septenary circuit of days for his rest from Creating of things: So Christ appointed the first of the week, or of the seventh days of ordinary recourse, because on that day he rested from his penal and afflictious labors of his humiliation, or emptying himself, whereby he restored and created the world, as it were new again, unto a better condition than it had lost.

2. By the frequent apparitions of Christ in the convention of his Disciples on this day.

3. From the sending and shedding abroad of the Holy-ghost, on this day.

4. By the practice of the Apostles.

5. By Apostolic constitution, 1 Cor 16.

6 From the very title and name of the Lord's day, that it hath in the New Testament

7. From the rigorous observation of this day in the Primitive Church, by occasion whereof they were accounted worshippers of the sun; because this first day of the week was by Heathens attributed to the Planet of the Sun, as the rest were to the rest of the Planets.

Use Is of Exhortation▪ that out of conscience towards God, and obedience to this command, we have a care of observing the Lord's day.

Doct. 3. One part of our duty is that on the Lord's day, we cease from all our own works.

It is gathered from the Text; In six days shalt thou do all thy work; but on the seventh day thou shalt... do no work. &c. That is, no work that is thme. Now that work is said to be our work, which neither directly belongs to the worship of God, nor yet is otherways imposed upon us by any necessity from God; but is chosen by ourselves for some human, or worldly end. Now such are 1. All our common and mer•...enary works. 2 All things, that call away our mind from that intention that is required unto the worship of God on that day, though otherways they be not servile. Yet such things are not forbidden, as either belong unto common honesty, or are of a very urgent and not of a made necessity of our own. The reason of this rest is, that we may be at convenient leisure for divine worship: For worldly businesses do in divers ways withstand this more solemn worship of God.

Reas. 1. Because the very external acts of both are for the most part such, as that they cannot consist or stand together at one time.

Reas. 2. Because the mind being distracted with such worldly business, cannot compose or settle itself in good order to perform solemn worship to God, as it ought.

Reas. 3. Because the taste, and savor, and power of holy exercises is impaired, and dulled at least, or blunted by mixture of such things with them, which in comparison should be but vile to them.

Use Is of Reproof, of such as easily break the rest of this day, either by their ordinary and vulgar occupations; or with merchandizes, or with sports or plays, or with troublesome and long feasting on it, &c.

Doct. 4. The other part of our duty on the Lord's day, is to sanctify this our rest; that is, to apply the leisure that we have, to God's worship, as well publicly as privately.

Duties of this kind are first, a preparing of our minds to God's solemn worship. Secondly, Hearing of his Word. Thirdly, Solemn prayers. Fourthly, Partaking of the Sacraments. Fifthly, Works of Charity. Sixthly, Meditation and conference about holy things. Seventhly, A religious considering of the works of God, of Creation and Providence, and even of such as occasionally we then hear or see, though they be other ways worldly.

Reas. 1. Because in such duties, we make profession of Religion, and of that honor, that is due unto God; which therefore is to him honorable, and accepted.

Reas. 2. Because by this means, we build up our selves, and advance our communion that we have with God: For seeing that by worldly occupations through the six days of the week, our mind is somewhat pressed towards the earth, it was by a most wise purpose and counsel of God ordained, that every seventh day at least again they should be lifted up to heaven, and sent up thitherwards by all such means, that they might be restored to their former step or degree, from which they had been declining: And seeing we contract also some filthynesse from such worldly businesses, on the Lord's day they should be wiped off, and we cleansed from them by the exercises of sanctification. And seeing many occasions fall on the other days, which bring their own difficulties and temptations with them; on this day we ought to be well furnished and armed, so that it ought to be our day of spiritual mustering or weapon showing; and a day of lustration. A cleansing ourselves from all filthiness before contracted; and a day of our ascending into heaven, in as far as our Faith and Charity, with other heavenly gifts, on this day should be singularly kindled in our hearts.

Reas. 3. Because by this means also we build up one another in the practice of our Religion, so that he who hears the preaching of the word, though he learn nothing himself, yet he teaches others some good thing, even in this, that he hears, and thereby presses that he both should do so and other too: So hereby he teaches others, that God is to be solemnly worshipped, and his word with reverence to be heard.

Use 1. Is of Admonition, that we beware of the neglect of these duties, which cannot consist with any vigor either of religion to God, or of love and care of our own salvation: Or lastly, of love and Christian affection towards the Church, and our neighbors.

Use 2. Is of Direction, that according to this rule we judge of the duties, which on this day we perform about God's worship: For all of them in common should rise up so high as to a sanctifying of this day; and this sanctifying again of the day, depends on our sanctifying of the name of God, and our advancing of our own salvation: Unless therefore we seek such fruits in our consciences, we have therein just cause of great humiliation; but if we feel them in any degree, we have as great reason to give the Lord as great thanks for it.

Doct. 5. It is the duty of every Christian, that not only themselves sanctify that day, but also that they make all such to do it, as far as in them lies, that are under their power.

This is hence collected, because this commandment is in a singular manner directed to such as are over others, Magistrates, Parents, Masters, &c. Neither thou, nor thy son.

Reas. 1. Because such servile works, as are forbidden on that day, are for the most part made to be done by command of Fathers to Children, Masters to Servants, Magistrates to Subjects: So that though they be performed by others, yet the works are theirs, at whose command they are done.

Reas. 2. Because the sanctifying of this day was ordained as well for the cause and use of Sons and Servants, as of Parents and Masters.

Reas. 3. Because it is the duty of all Superiors, to further the salvation, as much as they can, of all that are under them; and to procure by them and from them that honor to God, that is due to him from them.

Use, 1. Is of Reproof, against that most unworthy carelessness of men, who as they are not diligent enough themselves in doing their own duty on this behalf, so they think that they are free from all charge of children and servants about this matter.

Use 2. Is of Direction, to Inferiors, that are under others power. 1. That herein they willingly obey their Superiors, when they call them to serve God. 2. Yea, that they be thankful towards them for this cause. 3. That such as have the liberty should choose out such Superiors to be under, as from whom they may look for this help.

Doct. 6. For keeping of this duty, we must have a special remembrancer, Remember that ye keep holy. &c.

Reas. 1. Because this command is not written naturally on our hearts, as the other; but it was a command of institution rather than of natural light.

Reas. 2. Because the command concerns not all days and hours; but one special time, therefore we may the more easily forget.

Reas. 3. Because the many businesses of this life, do easily turn away our minds from this duty, unless with care and some diligence we set ourselves to the contrary.

Reas. 4. Because that we may rightly and conveniently sanctify this day, we had need beforehand to think of the same, and set our worldly business in such order, that they be no hindrance to us in that day, to sanctify it arightly; and so also on other days be busied about them, that when that day comes we may be disposed and ready with freedom of mind and cheerfulness to lay them aside, and betake ourselves to, and go about the solemn worship of God, with our whole minds.

Use, Is of Reproof, against the laziness and carelessness of many, who are so far from an holy remembering of this day, that they remember it rather to this end, that they may bestow it on their private pleasures, or other businesses of their own; on which they cannot have the leisure to bestow any other day. For if they must run abroad a little, or some sport and easy journey must be made, or some trouble-feast to be held, before any day else, they choose the Lord's-day for these; as if other ways that day should be lost to them, as an idle day, if it were only bestowed on God's solemn worship. Others there be, that do not so much as remember the day of the week, unless by the Bell they be put in remembrance of it.

The thirty ninth Lord's day.

Exod. 20. 12.

Honor thy Father and thy Mother: That thy days may be long upon the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee.

IN the fifth command of the Decalogue that duty is handled, which is due to our Neighbor, in regard of his rank, degree, or quality, that he is of: A...d it is expounded by the Synecdoche, that denominates one special for all the kind; which is honor: For honor is a principal part of this duty, and also an impulsive cause unto other parts of it. For by honor is understood a just and right esteem, and respect of worth (what ever it be) which appeareth in our Neighbor, whether he be our Superior, or our inferior, or our equal. Yet (as we said) it hath its special denomination from that special respect, which we owe unto them, in whom some singular and eminent excellency appears. Whence it is also, that the degree of our Neighbor, in regard whereof, honor is to be given him, is by like Synecdoche signified to us, by the titles of Father, and Mother, in whom nature itself, however very corrupt, yet doth evidently acknowledge, a rank and degree of dignity, whereunto honor is due. The sanction of this command is in a promise of long life, because the continuation of our life, and of all our quietness thereof, depends on the preservation of the societies of mankind; whereof the first, and source of all the rest almost, is between parents and children; and this also is the true reason, why this command hath the first place in the second Table.

Doct. 1. All men whatsoever are in some sort or other to be honored by us.

It is hence gathered, in that all precepts of the second Table regard our Neighbor, whatever he be, according to Mat. 22. where the sum of this Table is made, Thou shalt love th... Neighbor, &c. Though therefore this honor is referred by name to Father and Mother, as its chief objects; yet in some sort it is to be extended unto every Neighbor; that is, unto all mankind.

Reas. 1. Because none is found so base and vile, but that he hath something in him, that ought to be esteemed by us, and much valued. For if nothing else could be remarked in one, yet the very common nature of man hath that worth and dignity in it, as unto it regard should▪ be had, and the party not altogether contemined, or accounted less of than indeed he deserveth; and in such respect some honor is contained.

Reas. 2. Seeing all men are either our Superiors, or Inferiors, or our equals; religion, charity, and natute itself in a sort, leads us thither, that we should honor all Superiors, because they are superior to us, as Parents; as by the very phrase of this command appears, where all Superiors are called Fathers and Mothers, and by a like reason, all Inferiors should be respected by us like sons; and equals, as brothers or sisters.

Reas. 3. Because such honor makes much for advancing of love, and mutual duties of all kinds. For all do the more willingly perform their duties, when they see themselves and what they do, to be had in some respect.

Use, Of Reproof, against that barbarous pride, which so possesses the minds of many, that they can find but very few, that they think worthy of any honor from them. Whether are such to be from hence excepted, as make some such poor show of respect towards others, by their Puppit and Moris-like behaviours, as signs of the honor forsooth, that they do you; but they go no further▪ unto any reality. For the honor here commanded ought to have sound roots in our hearts, and to bring forth some found fruits, and not only colors, and pre•... and lying shows.

Doct. 2. A special honor is due to our Superiors, and that according to the nature and quality wherein they are superior to us.

This is contained in naming of Father and Mother specially to be honored, in the general duty of honor due to all.

Reas. 1. Justice requires that to everyone his due be given; and Superiors have a special worth and excellency, unto which a special esteem, and respect of honor is due.

Reas. 2. Religion commands that we acknowledge that special manner of God's image, which appears in every supereminence of dignity; whence it is also, that all such respect towards Superiors, is called piety, partly because by piety, or religion towards God it is in special manner commanded; partly also, because it hath some likeness of that piety and worship, that is due unto God.

Reas. 3. Charity and thankfulness persuade the same also, as from Superiors to Inferiors some good thing ordinarily useth to descend, if it were but from the rank and order; by reason whereof a special sort of honor is due to them, even from such, as in their own proper persons perhaps receive no particular good from them.

Reas. 4. Because, even for the society of mankind, nature teacheth us to honor them that deserve well of others, though we should receive no profit by them.

Use 1. Of Admonition, that we take heed of such barbarous and uncivil manners, whereby respect towards Superiors is taken away.

Use 2. Of Direction, that we always give reverence to such, as in authority or power are superior, as to the Fathers of the Country, the Fathers of our bodies, the Fathers of families, Fathers in Christ, and the like.

Doct. 3. Superiors owe a kind of honor to their Inferiors, suitable to their place.

This is hence gathered, in that Father and Mother are put here by a Synecdoche. 1. For all Superiors. 2. For all Neighbors, as hath been said. So men are commanded to honor their wives, 1 Pet. 3. 7. The meaning is, that so they ought to behave themselves towards their Inferiors, that their Inferiors may cheerfully acknowledge that degree of dignity they have over them, and show the same.

Reas. 1. Because this is but that general and universal justice, whereby everyone is bound to render to another his due.

Reas. 2. Because humility inclines all godly men, that as far as conveniently may be, they condescend to Inferiors, and as it were lift them up rather to themselves, than stand too much upon their own title, or superiority.

Reas 3. Because that esteem and respect which descends from the superior to the inferior hath much more weight than that which ascends from the inferior to the superior, and therefore makes more for preserving of the safety of mankind in its right order.

Use 1. That Superiors uphold with their dignity, that resemblance of God, which they ought to carry before there inferiors.

2. That they have a care of going before them in a right way and by a good example.

3. That they always use all their wisdom, authority, and power, that they have, to the procuring of the good of them that are under them▪

Doct. 4. This mutual honoring of each other makes much for the prolonging, and making our lives the more pleasant in this world, and improving of our hope about the life eternal.

This is clear from the promise that is subjoined to the precept.

Reas. 1. Because the conformation of human society tends directly to the conservation of the life and livelihood of each one in particular.

Reas. 2. Because sins that are committed against parents, by whom we received this life are most suitably punished by the loss of this life, and of the comforts thereof; and there is a like reason sins against such, as are placed instead of parents.

Use. Is of Exhortation, That by this and the like considerations we stir up ourselves to a general care of the performance of this duty.

The fortieth Lord's day.

Exod. 20. 13.

Thou shalt not kill.

IN this sixth command of the Decalogue Moses treats of the person and life of man, and this is the reason, why this command is placed before the other two following, in which only are •...andled, only the adjuncts of these. For the person and life are of greater importance, than the things that belongs to the person. Therefore care was first •...o be had of this, and then of these. The command is proposed negatively, without the rest that follow, when yet the praecedent were proposed affirmatively. The reason is, because in things belonging to the fifth precept, privation is more used than contrariety; that is, it is more commendable not to give the honor to such as it is due, than to load them with manifest injuries, and reproaches. But in these commands nothing is more usual, than that unto the duties commanded, we run into the quite contrary faults as to hurt our neighbors life or his livelihood in his goods, or to bear a false testimony against him, or to desire anything inordinately, that is his. It was therefore very suitable that in the fifth commandment the perfect duty opposite unto the privation of honor should affirmatively be commanded us; but in the rest it was more necessary that we should be recalled from the contrary faults, and sins by a negative prohibition. Now the life, for which provision is made in this command, is both bodily and spiritual; and both these ought to be considered not only in their esteem and existence, but also in all their accessory qualities, that makes for their comfort and conveniency.

Doct. 1. Out of conscience to God and his law, we ought to abstain from all such things, as tend to the hurt of our neighbors bodily life.

This is gathered from the words of this command; because while murder or killing is forbidden all causes also, and effectual occasions thereof are forbidden.

Reas. 1. Because man is made after the image of God, and so any unjust violence done to the pe•...son or life of man, makes against the honor of God, Gen. 9. 6. &c.

Reas. 2. Because God alone is the father of spirits, and the Lord of our life. He doth therefore an injury to God who unjustly hurts his brothers life, and arrogates to himself that power which belongs properly to no other but to God alone.

Reas. 3. Because this is the greatest wrong that can be done to a man, as to this life, to deprive him of life, in which all other injuries are privatively contained.

Use 1. Is of Admonition That we diligently keep ourselves not only from effusion of blood, in which consists the height of this injury; but also from all cruelty, and from all both words and deeds, whereby man's life, or the comforts and conveniencies of his life, may be hurt, or impaired.

Use 2. Is of Admonition also that by like reason and conscience we keep ourselves from all those inward dispositions and affections, whereby men use to be led and provoked to hurt their neighbor unjustly; as are. 1. Anger. 2. Hatred, which is as it were a vehement anger now strengthened and rooted in the mind, whence it is, that men wish great evils to such as they hate and that constantly; form which affection endeavor follow's; and from endeavor the act itself of hurting. 3. Envy, whereby men so repine at others good estates that they wish them worse, or some evil. 4 Desire of revenge, whereby men use to render evil for evil, and that as it is evil. For although the desire of restitution of what is taken away, or of satisfaction for wrong, or of chastisement, or punishment, against such or such an one, that hath offended, be honest sometimes and laudable; to wit, because and when some evil in these and the like, is wished to the party, not as evil, but as it tends to his good, and so as it may be good for him: Yet desire of revenge, whereby we desire some evil to another, as it is, and may be evil to him only, without any reference to his good, can never be either honest, laudable, nor lawful.

Doct. 2. But most of all we ought to keep ourselves from such things, whereby the life of the soul of our brother is $\langle \diamond \rangle$.

This is gathered from the words of the Text, because of all other this is the deadliest sort of killing a man; of which also the Scripture admonisheth us in the same phrase, whereby bodily killing is forbidden, I will require his blood at thy hands. Ezek. 36. Yet this difference there is between bodily and spiritual killing, that no man can be spiritually killed, or murdered by violence and mere force, as bodily many are.

Reas. 1. Because the spiritual life of a man is his precious possession, far surmounting his bodily life.

Reas 2. Because the hurting of this life, belongs to the hurt of his eternal state and condition.

Reas. 3. Because the depriving of this life draws with it the deprivation of all the true comfort of the bodily life also.

Reas. 4. Because in hurting this life, God's glory is directly wronged, by reason that this life cannot be hurt, but by the sin as well of him that hurts it, as him that is hurt; though bodily life may be taken away without the sin of him whose it is.

Use, Of Admonition, that with great care & conscience we keep ourselves from all things whereby this life of the soul is hurt; as, 1. From Heretical Doctrines. •... From evil and corrupt counsels▪ •... From scandalous and pernicious examples. 4. From all neglect of such duties, as we owe unto our Neighbor, in order to this eternal salvation.

Doct. 3. It is our duty not only •...o abstain from all such things, as the life of our Neighbor bodily or spiritual is hurt by▪ but also carefully to do all such things whereby he may be furnished in either life, and it may be made more lively and comfortable to him.

It is hence gathered, that as no command is altogether negative, but contains always and commands the contrary duties to the sins forbidden, so is it also in this sixth Commandment.

Reas. 1 Because there is a certain communion of nature and life bodily amongst all the posterity of Adam as they do all come of one and the same blood. There is likewise a like communion of spiritual life amongst many, as to the act and exercise itself; and amongst all, as to the hope and possibility.

Reas 2. Because religion sets up a sort of society amongst men, and as it were, a spiritual or City or... Commonwealth; wherein everyone is bound to procure the common good, and advance it as much as he can.

Reas 3 Because God in such duties is glorified, and according to the power and occasion given us, there ariseth to us, a calling, and a divine allowance, whereby we are in special manner to perform this duty.

Use. Of Exhortation to all sorts of duties, whereby the life of our Neighbor may be cherished; as, •... To a care of peace and love. 2. To patience. 3. To courtesy. 4. To pity, mercy, and bounty. 5. To spiritual alms of Instruction, Exhortation, Admonition, Consolation, as occasion shall require. Hither also are such sins to be referred, as we commit against our own lives, as drunkenness, surfeit, the evils of whoredoms, and uncleanness, and the like; and contrarily, those duties, whereby we ought to procure and further our own comfort both of life and health, as also of body and soul▪

The forty first Lord's day.

Thou shalt not commit Adultery.

IN this seventh Commandment are handled such duties as belong to the begetting & propagating of human life. For these have place next after such as belong to preservation of life, which were ranked in the sixth Commandment, which takes care for continuing the life of this and that party in particular; but this seventh Commandment, of all men in general. By name then one special impurity and dishonesty is only forbidden; but by the usual Synecdoche▪ or comprehensive sort of speech, all others of that kind are understood, whether disordered actions like unto this, or whether such as tend either of their own nature, or of the intention of the doer, to the furtherance of such impure acts.

Doct. 1. We ought out of conscience towards God to keep ourselves from all impurity and unchastity.

Reas. 1. Because sins of this kind bring disorder into such things as belong to the propagation of man's life, and so tend some way to the corrupting of mankind.

Reas. 2. Because from such sins a sort of most inward uncleanness followeth in the person or body of man; whence it is, that the Apostle, 1 Cor. 6. 18. distinguisheth this sin from all others, in that others are without the body, this in and against the body itself; though there be some other sins that seem to be in and against the body, as drunkenness, surfeit, &c. yet they neither so inwardly arise from the body, nor so directly affect it, and primarily, as these lustful dishonesties.

Reas. 3. Because from this kind of uncleanness followeth that dishonoring of our own bodies, the contrary whereof is naturally due to them, and to our persons, as appears, •...Thes. 4. 4.

Reas. 4. Because these impurities in a special manner withstand inward holiness, as appears both from that place of the Thessalonians, where holiness is conjoined with the honor of the body in opposition to this uncleanness; and from that to the Corinthians, where our bodies by these faults, are said of temples of the Holy Ghost, and of members of Christ, to become the members of an Harlot.

Use, Of Admonition, that with the greater care and conscience we shun all such uncleannesses, which ought so much the more to be called to mind by us, as the depravedness of man's nature useth most to appear in these kind of sins, because they are most common, most prevalenr; and keep strongest dominion in him, possessing the whole man, in whom they are, and that most deeply, and with a kind of violence and force. Hence it is, that in Scripture they are called a burning, because they burn up all in their way, and by little and little consume the whole man, as fire doth the thing that it burns; more especially we ought to keep ourselves, 1. From that lust which is properly called carnal, that we be not subject to, or obey the affections and dispositions of it. 2. From all outward conversation, whereby such lust is cherished and furthered in ourselves, or in others; as are, 1. Such thoughts, as with pleasure and delight are taken up and used about unchaste matters. 2. Wanton apparel and behavior, or which savor of wantonness, or cherish it. 3. Filthy and unclean communication, either in common discourses, or songs. 4. Unclean company, and wanton representations, as are commonly in Stage-plays and interludes, pictures, and rooms hung with such, &c. 5. All occasions and provocations to lust, as idleness, drunkenness, surfeiting, and the like. 6. Most of all the acts themselves, of unchastnesse in whoredom, adultery, fornication, and the like.

Doct. 2. By virtue of this command we are bound to study all cleanness of soul and body, that belongs unto procreation.

This is commanded in the same words, that the contrary faults are forbidden by, according to the constant use of speech in the decalogue.

Reas. 1. Because this cleannese is a part of our inward sanctification.

Reas 2. Because from this part of our sanctification a special sort of honor ariseth, 1 Thes. 4. 4. While our bodies are not made drudges for the fulfilling the base and vile affections of the flesh, but are applied unto nobler uses.

Reas 3. Because this purity is needful, that we may be fit to worship God, as we should. For carnal impurity where it prevails and gets the dominion, it not only presses down and burdens the mind, so that it cannot raise up itself unto spiritual thoughts and affections, but also it infecteth with contagion, and pollutes those very thoughts and endeavors, whereby we seek after and breath for spiritual life.

Use, Of Admonition, that we indulge not, nor allow the inclinations of our corrupt natures in these things, nor suffer ourselves to be carried away with the evil manners and examples of the vulgar sort, who in this kind, are more beasts often, than Christians; but let us always be thinking, how we may keep ourselves clean, as well from these lusts of the flesh, as from other sins: This cleanness is maintained by modesty and temperance. Modesty is herein kept, if neither by words, nor by gestures, nor by any other such way, we uncover as it were without reverence, what nature tells us should be covered and hid, and be ashamed of the uncovering. Temperance or sobriety consists in the keeping a moderation or measure in the pleasures of the flesh or body, especially in meat and drink. The cleanness or chastity, as to the diversity of manner, is divided into chastity of single life, and chastity of marriage For marriage is appointed now since the fall, by God, to be a means of keeping this cleanness or chastity, in things that belongs to the generation of mankind. We ought therefore to have a care, 1. That we so marry as that it be in such cleanness; that is, with such a person, in such a manner, for such an end, that from a good conscience it may be said, that the contract or bargain was made in the Lord, and in his fear. 2. That it be used and exercised in this cleanness; that is, that neither the end of it may be broken, nor itself be drawn beyond the bounds of modesty and temperance; nor that it be any way from a remedy of sin and lust, turned into a cover for uncleanness and wantonness.

The forty second Lord's day.

Thou shalt not steal.

IN this eighth Commandment men's possessions are handled as things that come under the name of their outward goods, and commodities. For thus God would show what a care he hath of us, in that not only by his Law he hath provided for the safety of our life, and chastity, and honor of our persons, but also for our possessions and external goods. He would also hereby admonish us how confidently we may trust all that is ours to him; where by his eternal Law he would have us secured about these lesser matters. There is in this Commandment ordained and presupposed a propriety to every particular man in his own goods, by reason whereof its truly said, his is mine, and that is ...hine For though at the beginning of the creation all things were in a manner common; yet afterwards by lawful seizure and possession of this, or that, a division of things ensued, the unjust breach of which division is condemned in this commandment, with all such things as make for it, or lead to it. For as in a feast some dish is set down in common and is no more this guests, than thats; yet when any guest hath taken to himself a portion or share of it, then that is more his own, than any others, so that it cannot by any other be taken from him without uncivility; so were all the commodities of this life at the first set out in common to all; but when one took to himself a certain portion of them, another could not by violence take it from him without sin. Now by name theft only is forbidden, because it is one of the grossest and manifestest sins of this kind; because in theft to everyone is apparent the breach of that right which everyone hath to his own commodity, and so the injustice and the wrong is clear: Yet together with it also, according to the perpetual use of speech in all the other Commandments, all the degrees, and causes, principles, and occasions or provocations to it, are forbidden.

Doct. 1. We must keep ourselves out of cons•...ience towards God, from all unjust hurting of our Neighbor, in point of his possession▪ or outward goods.

Reas. 1. Because other ways we sin against God and that after diverse manners: 1. That dispensation of his providence, whereby he hath made division of such things amongst men, is disturbed against his revealed will. 2. The dominion of God himself, which he exercises in the dispensing of such things as seems best to himself, seems this way to be contemned. 3. We invade as it were this sovereignty and dominion of God, while at our pleasure we will make ours whatsoever we list.

Reas. 2. Because we do our neighbor gross and manifest injury, while we take by force to ourselves, what belongs to him, and so take away from his his goods.

Reas. 3. Because in this manner, charity is directly broken, while instead of that good, which we both ought to wish, and procure to our neighbor; we do him real evil, in depriving him of his own goods.

Reas 4. Because from such sins follow strifes, hatred and the disturbance of all society.

Use Is of Admonition, that we not only shun that which is commonly called theft, but also all those sins, which in Scripture are referred to theft; as their common head; As 1. the too great love of riches. 2. The desire of our own profit with our neighbors loss. 3. All injustice of bargains and commerce, how ever it may be done with color of right. 4. All using or appropriating to ourselves that which is another's without its masters consent, whether this be done by force, or by deceit and circumvention.

Doct. 2. With the same religion or conscience that we ought to abstain from theft, we ought to s•...t ou•...selves to this on the contrary, that we may seek our neighbors good, and further it in his outward goods.

It is gathered from the likeness of reason, that is between the sins▪ forbidden, and the duties commanded, that are contrary to the same.

Reas. 1. Because by this means we make ourselves instruments of God's bounty and good providence, whereby it is his pleasure, that all be provided for in things necessary to this life.

Reas. 2. Because it is the exercise of our charity towards our neighbor.

Reas. 3. Because it belongs also some way to justice, in as much as we ought to behave ourselves as members of the same society, and everyone hath right to such duties from others, as far as conveniently they can be by them performed.

Reas. 4. Because our Lord admonisheth us, that we make unto ourselves, friends from the use of this communion; and so further others by our good example, and ourselves by their good desires and prayers for us, in the way to salvation.

Use Is of Direction, that we set ourselves with all care, that according to this duty of humanity, we further the profits of others, as our occasion and power shall require.

Hence 1. we ought to purchase nothing to ourselves, but by honest means, and just titles of right: For whatsoever is otherwise purchased or acquired, turns always to the wronging of another. 2. Everyone should betake himself to some honest exercise of life, which is in its self lawful, suitable to ourselves, and profitable to others, and such as live at ease: For who so live disorderly, as stout beggars, with him in the Gospel, who having full Bags and Barns, sings a requiem to their souls; saying, Soul take thine ease▪ thou hast much laid up; these as in other things, so they sin in this, that they take not upon them such a condition of like, whereby they may do good unto others. 3. Diligence is to be used in our calling, without which we cannot keep the things we have, much less increase them; that we may spare something from them, and lay it out unto the common good of others. 4. Frugality and moderation in our expenses about ourselves ought to be used, least the fountain should be drawn dry, whence such streams should flow, for helping and refreshing others. 5. Bounty and mercy ought to be exercised, in communicating our goods unto others, especially persons that are to be pitied; and of these, chiefly such as are of the household of faith: For in this duty is most of all exercised, and most manifestly that virtue that is most contrary to theft; because as in theft we take unjustly to ourselves, what is not our own; so in liberality and alms, we justly take from ourselves what is our own, and freely bestow it on another.

The forty third Lord's day.

On Exod. 20. 18.

Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor.

IN this Commandment, is handled the testimony of one given on the behalf of another, for getting of belief or trust of them. This then is also amongst the things that belong to our neighbors: For it either tends to his good, or to his hurt, as the belief that is given to this testimony, may either do him good or do him harm. God in this Commandment therefore shows us, that we ought not only, not to hurt our neighbor, in his honor, or life, or chastity▪ or goods; but also that no effectual occasion of harm should be given him, either by words, or by a witnessing, though he should not thereby be immediately hurt, but either by the coming between of his own, or some other bodies credit or endeavour. The general sin that is here forbidden, is called a false witnessing; that is, whensoever by our credit, authority, or testimony, we confirm that as truth, which we know to be false, which is the very nature and definition of a lie.

Doct. 1. Every lie with whatsoever pretence it may be excused, as it is a witnessing of falsehood, it is a sin.

Reas. 1 Because it contains an in▪...ury to our neighbor, who from the very law of nature, hath this right, that he may challenge of us, that we say nothing to him, as true as that is not true; no more than we would thrust upon him a piece of false coin, for true or currant gold or silver, which yet is but a counterfeit.

Reas. 2. Because there is a base and dishonest disorder in the false witness, that lies while his tongue and speech disagree quite from his mind; and it is as if the Interpreter of some Princes should speak things quite contrary to those, that he got in commission from his Prince to declare.

Reas. 3. Because the inconveniences that are brought forth and furthered in the world by lies are very grievous and heavy; because by them all trust, in which lies the very knot and foundation of human society, is troubled in every kind; and there is no evil that in any other sort is done to any, but both may and useth also to be brought about by lies; so as by lies sin is committed against the honor, the life, the chastity, and the outward goods of men, as also against his religion, so that all the foregoing Commandments, by breaking of this Commandment by lies, may also be some way broken.

Reas. 4 Because by a lie the nature of the Devil himself is in a special manner followed, and as it were put on like a garment, John 8. 44. You are of your Father the Devil, and the lusts of... your Father you will do. He was a Murderer from the beginning, and abode not in the truth because there is no truth in him. When he speaketh a lie, he speaketh his own; for he is a liar, and the Father of it.

The Use is of Admonition, that out of conscience towards God, we keep ourselves from all lying, whether it be that of a pernicious lie, or an officious lie, or a merry lie: Whether it be spoken of ourselves, as in our vaunting and dissimulations, or of others, as in calumnies, slanders, backbitings, flatteries, soothings, &c But these lies are chiefly to be shunn'd, as use to be committed in public judgments, and matter of great weight and importance. 1 Because with how much more advisedness a man lies, by so much his sin is the greater. 2. Because by how much the greater the danger is, that another is brought into by the lie, by so much the sin is the heavier. 3 By how much the greater obligations come together, binding us to speak truth: by so much the sin is multiplied.

And that we may abstain from lying, we must abstain from such things as make way for lying; as are rash suspicions, and too great easiness to believe and receive false reports; and a talkative and twatling nature, which by many useth so to be exercised, as without that consideration, whereby they should always put a difference between truth and falseshood, and the like.

Doct. 2. We ought to love truth, and according as occasion serves, further and advance it.

This is gathered from the words of the Commandment, because veracity, whereby we both love truth, and according to occasion, witness the same, is that virtue here commanded; and is contrary to that sin that is here condemned, in bearing falsewitness: So that speculative truth is not properly here treated of, neither that which is true generally; but only moral truth, that is, such as belongs to men's manners and consciences; and that is such a truth of our words, as that they agree with our mind, and our mind also with the thing itself, as far as we are bound to know, or profess that we know. And this veracity is to be followed and highly to be prized for these reasons.

Reas. 1. Because it is not the least part of that Image of God, that we ought to show; because in a special manner God is, and is called the God of truth, Psal. 31. 6. and his word the word of truth, and truth itself: so that truth hath a peculiar agreement with the nature and perfection of God: Whence also it is, that God, though in other commands hath sometimes used a kind of exception, and as it were dispensed with it for a time, as in the matter of Theft, with the Israelites (for he made that to be no theft, by a special explication of that command, which otherwise had been theft) and of some marriages both before and under the Law, which by extraordinary approving of them he made lawful; yet in this command about speaking truth, he never granted any explication or dispensation, because from the very nature of the thing itself, it hath more of God's Image in it, and of divine and immutable justice; yea, which is more, God hath absolutely forbidden us, that we lie not, although for his cause, much less for our own, or for any mortal man's.

Reas. 2. Because this veracity is a special perfection of man, while it excludes these deviations and crookednesses of men's minds, whereby they are perverted unto a custom of lying, and subjected unto the base affections either of fear, or fraud, or the like: Hence also from the very light of nature, it is a singular honor to any, if they be lovers of truth, and stick fast to it, and are constant both in defending and furthering of the same.

Reas. 3. This is also the foundation of all civil society and conversation; so that it being taken away, men would become rather Wolves and Foxes to one another, than men.

Reas. 4 By the exercise hereof and the love of it, our minds are the better disposed for embracing that truth, which leads to our salvation.

The Use is of Direction, that in our conversation with men, we follow after this truth, for though it be not required, either that we know all that is true, nor yet that at all times we speak all, that we know to be true; yet against the truth at no time, in no place, for no party whatsoever, no not for God himself (as hath been said) we ever witness anything: Moreover we are always bound to give witness unto the truth, and to confirm it, when either religion or conscience towards God, or justice and charity towards our neighbor shall require this duty from us.

The forty fourth Lord's day.

Exod. 20. 17.

Thou shalt not covet thy neighbors' $\langle \diamond \rangle$, thou shalt not covet thy neighbors' wife, nor his man-servant, nor his maid-servant, nor his ox, nor his ass, nor anything that is thy neighbors'.

IN this last commandment is handled, the estate and condition of our Neighbor in common, as appeareth by these last words; or $\langle \diamond \rangle$ is $\langle \diamond \rangle$ neighbors: For as in the first Commandment of the first Table, that duty is commanded, whereon all other duties lie and depend; so also in this last Commandment of the last Table, that duty is handled, on which all others, that relate to our neighbor do depend. About this state of our neighbor in common, covetousness is forbidden; by which neither is understood the natural faculty of coveting or desiring, which is of itself good and lawful, and not to be ranked in the place of things forbidden: Nor yet every concupiscence or lust is here to be understood; because such acts of filthy lust, as have the consent of the will joined with them, for the accomplishing the acts of sin, if occasion were given, are prohibited in the other Commandments, according to their kinds, whereunto they belong, as Christ himself teacheth of a man inordinately lusting after a woman: which while he calls adultery, he shows that it is forbidden in the seventh Commandment: Nor yet is understood that innate, and inbred lust in us, which is original sin, and the •...inder to all actual sin; because that is no more forbidden in any one Commandment, than the contrary original righteousness and innocence is commanded in the whole Law, but as this primitive righteousness is commanded us in all the Law throughout; so the contrary original sin, lust or inclination and propensity to evil, in general, is forbidden in the whole Law, and not in any one commandment: Here then is properly understood, that covetousness, which is a disorderly desire or longing after anything, that is our neighbors, though we do not fully consent thereto, and though we never desire to accomplish the same by unlawful means.

Doct. 1. The first motions, wherein we are touched with an inordinate desire, are to be holden •...or sins, that are to be shunn'd.

It is gathered from the words of the Commanment; because that first lusting after anything, that is our neighbors, is expressly condemned; and all other inordinate motions are of the same kind.

Reas. 1 Because such motions are contrary to the perfection of God's Image, which we are everywhere bound to keep entire in ourselves, as much as is possible.

Reas. 2. Because such motions are contrary to charity, whereby we ought to love God with our whole hearts, and our Neighbor as ourselves▪ For if this charity were perfect in us, no place would be left in us for such motions of affections either against God, or against our Neighbor.

Reas. 3. Because in such motions there is a certain beginning of a consent to evil, though it be not full and perfect; which appeareth from that hidden liking and delight, that useth to accompany such motions, until seriously they be repressed.

Use 1. Of Refutation, against Papists, who hold not such first motions for sins, and so do not acknowledge the spiritual depth of sin; and by the same means in great part take away the power of repentance and spiritual humiliation.

Use 2. Of Admonition. that with all diligence we keep our hearts, that however we cannot be altogether free from such motions, yet as much as may be, we may keep ourselves from them; and that for two causes: 1. Because they have something of sinfulness in them, and tend also to the promotion of heavier sins. 2. Because in some sort they defile our mind and make it less fit for exercising and preserving holy motions.

Doct. 2. Everyone ought to be content with that portion and condition that God hath measur•...d out unto him

This is hence gathered; because contentment with our own, is the duty directly contrary to desiring what is another's.

Reas. 1. Because we ought to rest in God's dispensation, as in our Fathers good providence, who knows best what is good for us.

Reas. 2. Because this contentment makes much for the quietness of our mind, and so for the happiness of our life.

Reas. 3. Because the want of this content argues our too great love of the world, and of ourselves; and it comes from a perverse affection, that we are not content with our lot▪

Use 1. Of Reproof, against such, as do, or think nothing else almost, than how they may compass such or such a worldly thing, that they have not; so that their whole life is nothing else but a continual exercise of avarice and ambition.

Use 2 Of Exhortation, that we may more and more strive unto this contentment of mind, which is the companion of true piety, as is said; Godliness is great gain, with a mind contented with its own condition. For we brought nothing with us into this world, nor can we take anything out of it with us; but having fo•...d and raiment, let us there •...ith be content. But such as will be rich fall into temptation, and into a s•...are, and many lusts or covetousnesses, &c. 1 Tim. 6. 6, 7.

Doct. 3. We ought to desire our Neighbors good as well as our own.

This is hence gathered; that here is forbidden the coveting of that, which is our Neighbors; whence follows, that we ought not only to leave to him such things as are his; but also, which is more, desire heartily that he may keep and enjoy his own to his own content, not that we should have them, or desire them. So that as the love of God above all things else is commanded in the first Commandment, so this love of our Neighbor, as of ourselves, seems chiefly to be commanded, and as it were summed up in this last Commandment.

Reas. 1. Because love to our Neighbor ought to follow from our love to God; and God may be as well honored by the things he gives to our Neighbor, as the things that he gives to us.

Reas. 2. Because however it be more natural to wish well to ourselves, yet it is more divine and perfect to wish well to others in such external things.

Reas. 3. Because by wishing well to others, we wish well to ourselves, in as much as by the exercise of this duty, we further our own salvation

Use, Of •...eproof, against the common frailty of us all. For from this, as from the Commandment of a loving God above all things, it follows that none can perfectly keep this moral Law, in this life; to wit, if we understand such perfection as consists in complete obedience. For otherwise in all believers is found such a perfection, or integrity and sincerity, as is opposed unto fainednesse and dissimulation; and such as is opposed unto halting or lameness, by which some duties seem to be looked after, but not all; and such a perfection also as is opposed to lukewarmness. For all believers both worship God sincerely, and desire to keep all his Commandments, and pant after a complete obedience also: Yet the Law is not for this proposed to us in vain, though we be unable to keep it fully. For hence we understand, 1. What is our duty. 2. What are the defects under which we lie. 3. What we may require of God; to wit, that we may be freed from guilt, & renewed to a performance of duties. 4. That we have a mark set us, whereat we may aim in all our endeavors. 5. That we may in part take notice of the perfection of that life which we shall enjoy in another world.

The forty fifth Lord's day.

On Ephes. 6. 18.

Praying always with $\langle\phi\rangle$ prayer and supplication in the Spirit, and watching thereunto with all perseverance, and supplication f...r all Saints.

THE Apostle after explication of our spiritual armor, which every Christian ought to furnish himself with, adds exhortations to prayers, by which this spiritual armor is taken up, put on, strengthened, made sure, and of proof, and is increased. In the Exhortation itself several things are expounded as the Duty of praying▪ which duty is declared, 1. By a distribution, with all prayer and supplication; 2. From the adj...nct of time, always, or at all times. 3. From the ob...ect, unto whose good these prayers are to serve; to wit not only for ourselves, but for all Saints 4. From the efficient cause, by the Holy Ghost. 5. From its singular manner that must accompany it, which consists in watching and in perseverance.

Doct. 1. Prayer is amongst those p...incipal duties, which ought to be had a care of by us.

It is hence gathered from the Text; because the Apostle so carefully urgeth it.

Reas 1 Because it gives very great glory to God; for God in all our prayers is acknowledged the principle and fountain of all our good.

Reas. 2. It contains man's greatest subjection and homage to God. 1. Because it seeks all things of free▪ gift and grace. 2. Because the soul and conscience themselves are prostrated before God, and cast at his feet as it were, when we pray.

Reas. 3. Because by prayer, we receive all the spiritual gifts of God.

Reas. 4 Because by the same, we sanctify to ourselves all the corporal gifts of God.

Reas. 5. Because by Prayer we fly unto God, that in him we may be secured from all evil.

Reas. 6. Because we have most sweet communion and communication of the grace of God in the exercise of Prayer.

Reas. 7. Because in Prayer either expressly, or implied we give up ourselves unto God, so as after and from prayer, we rise more obliged and bound to God than we were before; because all Prayer hath always adjoin'd to it some promise of thankfulness, for hearing our prayer and granting our desires.

Use Is of of Exhortation, that we may more and more give ourselves to this holy exercise of Prayer, as well in public as in private Unto which care many considerations ought to stir us up: As first, That holy Prayer is so acceptable to God, that in Scriptures it useth to be called Incense, or Perfume, and Sacrifice. 2. In that it is so proper to the godly▪ that in Scriptures godly men, and such as call upon the name of God, are without difference put for the same. 3. In that it is so inseparable a fruit of the holy spirit dwelling in the heart of a believing man, that from thence it is called the spirit of Prayer; and Prayer is almost the same to spiritual life, as breathing is to natural or animal life. Moreover that by prayers we best resist all sort of temptations; whence also it is, that we are bid resist the Devil by Praying; and to pray and watch, that we fall not into temptation: Lastly, in that all grace is stirred up, and increased by the exercise of Prayer.

Doct. 2. In prayer we ought to exercise ourselves in all the kinds and sorts of it.

This is hence gathered in that the Apostles exhorts us here, to all prayer, and supplication, and thanksgiving.

Reas. 1. Because our manifold necessities, as well in respect of evils, wherewith we are pressed; as in respect of good things that we want, or for receiving whereof we ow thanks; as also the necessities and occasions of others, unto whom we ow this▪ duty of Prayer, do require manifold sorts of Prayer.

Reas. 2. Because by this means, not one only, or another, but all the graces of God are put forth and exercised in us, according to their proper objects and natures.

Reas 3. Because God by this means is many ways glorified of us.

Use Is of Direction, that we rest not on forms of Prayers, as if the saying over of such were enough, for the fulfilling of our duty in general; because according to divers occasions, we ought to betake ourselves to divers manners or ways of Praying.

Doct. 3. In Godly prayers the holy spirit exercises a special power of his own.

From the words, by the holy spirit.

Reas. 1. Because we of ourselves know not, neither how, nor what to pray for: And although we be taught about such things in the word of God, yet for the practice itself, a special direction of the holy spirit is requisite.

Reas. 2. Because our weaknesses are so many, in the exercise of Prayer, that they must be helped by the holy spirit.

Reas. 3. Because no prayers can be holy and acceptable to God, unless they come from the holy Spirit.

Use, Of Direction, that in making our prayers, we trust not to our own wit, and volubility of gifts, and to our own strength; but that we rely always on the grace and help of the Holy Spirit.

Doct. 4. In some sort or other we ought always, or at all times to be praying.

From the words, Praying always.

Reas. 1. Because we ought always to have a praying disposition of mind, or a mind ready to pray: For in this consists the right disposition and ordering of our mind.

Reas. 2. Because we ought to take all just occasion of this exercise of Prayer.

Reas. 3. Because we ought not to pass over our set and established times of prayer.

Use Is of Reproof against such, as are so far from this exercise, that they cannot only pass over whole days, but weeks also without any serious thoughts of Prayer.

Doct. 5. The manner of Praying, is as much to be taken care of, as prayer itself.

This is here gathered, in that watching unto prayer is commanded in the same manner with prayer. Now watching unto Prayer, belongs unto the manner of Praying, and in some sort it contains all things, that belongs unto it. For,

First, We ought to watch before prayer, that we may so prepare ourselves thereto, as all hindrances may be removed, and we ourselves get a fit disposition of mind and spirit.

Secondly, In prayer we must watch against lukewarmness, want of reverence, wandering thoughts, and the like.

Thirdly, After prayers we must be watchful, against forgetfulness and slothfulness, whereby we come short of the fruit of our prayers; neither indeed for our carelessness ought we to expect any.

Reas. 1. Because in every moral action the manner of doing is of greatest weight, by which it only is, that we not only do that which is good, but do it well.

Reas. 2. Because in prayer, after a special manner we are in God's presence, in whose sight, how we behave ourselves is a matter of no small concernment.

Reas. 3. Because a corrupt manner of praying, sometimes not only blasts the power of our prayers, but also makes them to be turned into sin to us.

Use, Of Direction, that we may have a care of all such things, as make for the right manner of praying; such as are Faith, Humility, Zeal, or Fervour, and Constancy.

The forty sixth Lord's day.

Mat. 6. 9, 10, 11, 12, 13.

Verse 9 After this manner therefore pray ye: Our Father which art in Heaven, Hallowed be thy Name.

10 Thy Kingdom come: Thy will be done in earth as it is in Heaven.

11 Give us this day our daily bread.

12 And forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors.

13 And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil, for thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, forever, Amen.

This prayer was dictated by Christ, and for this reason ought chiefly by all Christians to be had in esteem, as coming from him that was the wisdom of God itself, which therefore both knew well all our necessities, & knew also most perfectly, what the will of God is towards us: And it was dictated, that it might be an example or pattern of all Prayers, that we ought to use; not that we should be bound up to this very frame and form of words; however it may also be freely used by us: For we read not that this very form of words was used by the Apostles, though other ways divers Prayers of theirs are mentioned as well in the Acts as in their Epistles. This Prayer is made up of certain Petitions, whereunto are adjoined a foregoing Preface, and a following Conclusion. The Preface is in these words; Our Father which art in Heaven. And herein is proposed and commended unto us a certain description of God, to whom our prayers are always to be directed. This description suitably to its occasion; that is, unto praying, lays out unto us those perfections of God, which are most needful to be known and considered of us for a devout calling upon his name. And because nothing makes more for this, than that we be assured of God's goodness, and good will towards us, whereby he intends good to us; and of his power, whereby he is able to do all that he pleaseth in Heaven or on earth; Therefore, 1. The goodness of God is declared by that title of, Our Father. And 2. His greatest power and majesty is designed in these other words; Which art in Heaven. He is called Father not only from the benefit of creation and providence, whereby as with a Fatherly care he provides for us in all things; but chiefly also for the benefit of adoption, whereby of his special favor he chooses us to be of the rank and number of his sons. And he is said to be in Heaven because in Heaven, especially the third Heaven, he manifests his majesty, as it were in his royal throne, amongst the blessed and glorious spirits; and from thence he sends out his Word, as a royal declaration of his will, through all parts of the world, for the powerful effectuating of all and everything, that he wills, or pleaseth.

Doct. 1. Some preparation of mind is necessary for right making of our prayers.

This is hence gathered, in that a preface is here used, and that such a one, as directly makes for preparing of our minds, that we may make our prayers the more directly before God.

Reas. 1. Because so great is the majesty of God, that to appear before him, and rashly as it were to rush into conference with him, and so negligently without any care of our fitness, and predisposition to it, would be such an indignity, as it were great incivility, and want of wisdom, to use towards any worldly Prince, or great man.

Reas. 2. Because so great is our weakness, that unless our minds be strengthened by some religious meditation, they will never lift up themselves to God, so as becomes them.

Reas. 3. Because so great is our unworthiness, that hardly can our minds be raised up to consider and believe, how our prayers are heard of God, unless we seriously meditate on the favor or grace of God, and his promises.

U...e, Of Direction how we ought to dispose and settle ourselves to prayer; namely by such a preparation, which chiefly doth consist in two things: 1. In calling away of our mind, and thoughts, and cares, from all other things, not only unlawful, but otherwise lawful, though worldly, during that time, and exercise. 2 In setting of our minds, and thoughts, and affections on heavenly things, and that according to that occasion, which our prayers in general, and in their special and particular natures, give us.

Doct. 2. God alone by religious prayer is to be called upon.

This is hence gathered; because in this most perfect pattern of Christian prayer, we are not taught to call upon any in that kind, but whom we may call, Our Father which art in heaven.

Reas. 1. Because prayer is so divine a worship, and gives so much glory to the party that it is made to, that without idolatry it cannot be offered to any creature; whence also in Scripture everywhere it is called a sacrifice, which the very Papists themselves confess cannot be offered but to God alone.

Reas. 2 Because no creature can sufficiently know our prayers; to wit, as they come from the heart, and not from the mouth only.

R. 3. Because no creature can always & everywhere be present to hear prayers, where they are made.

Reas. 4. We cannot religiously call on such, as we do not religiously believe in, Rom. 10. But we may not religiously believe in a creature, I...r. 17. 5.

Use. Of Resutation, against the perverse superstition of Papists.

Doct. 3. In all our prayers we ought to come unto God with confidence, as unto our Father.

It is gathered from the word, Father.

Reas. 1. Because prayer in its most inward and essential nature, is an action of affiance and trust. For we seek nothing from God, but out of trust and hope grounded on his promises.

Reas. 2. Because we ought to strive unto this, that we ourselves may be accepted of God, as his sons, that so we may know that our prayers will be accepted of him: And this we only attain by faith and affiance placed on God, through Jesus Christ.

Reas. 3. Because we ought to give God this glory, that as a bountiful Father he will liberally give unto us, when we do ask of him, all that is good for us.

Quest. What shall they do then, that have not yet received the spirit of adoption, so that with any certainty they may •...all upon God, as their Father?

Ans. Though such cannot for that time receive that comfort of their prayers, that others do, yet they ought not therefore to cease from the exercise of prayer, because this itself is a most fit means to attain to this confidence; when by lifting up the heart to God, we wish at least, if we cannot with downright confidence and affirmation say of the Word, that yet we could, and might truly call upon God, as our Father.

Use, Of Direction, that we always call upon God in Christ, in whom alone God is our Father by adopting us, and reconciled unto us, and accepts of ourselves and of our prayers.

Doct. 4. In our prayers together with confidence towards God, charity towards our brethren ought always to be joined.

It is gathered from the word, Our For though it be both lawful, and sometimes expedient and profitable, that a believer say in his prayers; O my Father, for manifesting his particular confidence in God; and not for designing any specialler sonship that he hath in God, than others; as Christ the Lord alone might and did use that form of speaking; yet even for designing our particular confidence, it ought never to be joined with excluding thoughts of others, but what ever our own particular feelings be, in respect of charity, & the judgment & desire thereof towards others, we ought always either expressly or impliedly, to call upon God, as the common Father, as of ourselves, so of others also.

Reas. 1. Because it belongs to our comfort, that we so call on God, as being members with others of that mystical body, whereunto God hath prepared and promised all good things.

Reas. 2. Because it belongs to the communion of Saints, that they have a perpetual communication or mutual partaking and benefit of prayers amongst themselves.

Reas. 3. Because charity towards others, is a disposition, which is in a special manner required of us, that our prayers may be acceptable to God, according to that of our Lord; If ye forgive •...hers, y•...u shall be forgiven.

Us Of Reproof, against such, who burning with hatred, and desire of revenge, rush into praying, not that we ought to abstain from praying, because of such perturbations of ours; as neither from the Lord's Supper: But that we ought to lay aside and purge out such perturbations, not only when we come to partake publicly of the Lord's Supper; but also daily, and privately, when ever we set ourselves to make our daily prayers to God.

Doct. 5. The majesty and power of God are to be set before us, when we call upon God.

It is gathered from the words; Which art in Heaven.

Reas. 1. Because this majesty of God rightly set before us, and thought upon, strikes us into an awful reverence and fear of God, which is required unto all humble and rightly conceived prayers.

Reas. 2. Because the consideration of the same majesty lifts up our minds above all earthly and worldly things, to think upon and seek for things heavenly.

Reas. 3. Because the heavenly power of God directly strengthens our confidence, according to that of the Apostle, Rom 4 21. He believed, and doubted not, that •...e who had promised, could also perform.

Use, Of Direction how in our prayers we may resist sundry thoughts and temptations; to wit, by lifting up our minds to behold and think upon the majesty and power of God, in whose presence we are.

The forty seventh Lord's day. On the first petition of the Lord's prayer.

Hallowed be thy Name.

All the petitions of the Lord's Prayer are very short, & yet such, as contain all things that are to be sought for in their own way, and that in an order most convenient. For the four first Petitions concern the obtaining of good; and the two last, the removing of evil. Amongst the former, these have the first place, which nearest concern the glory of God: And first of all the glory of God itself is sought and prayed for in the first petition, where by the name of God, God himself is understood, & such things as most intimately belong unto him, in as much as he hath revealed himself unto the creatures. By sanctifying of this name then is understood, the manifestation of God's glory, as most becomes his most holy majesty.

Doct. 1. All prayers that we offer to God, are to be followed with great zeal and affection.

This is hence gathered; because all these petitions are so short, but yet pithy and comprehensive, that it may from thence appear that the power of prayer consists not so much in multitude of words, and empty or vain repetitions or babblings, as in the servant and well composed desires of the heart.

Reas. 1. Because the abundance of the heart is here chiefly regarded, according to which the mouth ought only to speak: And the abundance of the heart consists in such desires with zeal and fervor, or heat of affections.

Reas. 2. Because God knows what we stand in need of, so that a long and artificial or skillful expounding of things to God, is not needful, nor doth at all profit, further than it proceeds from an overflowing abundance of the heart.

Use, Of Reproof, against such babblings, as being expressly condemned by Christ our Lord himself, are yet willfully and professedly used by Papists; and by others also out of a lukewarm formality, in as much as they use a form of praying, but deny the power of it.

Doct. 2. Such things are in the first place, and with greatest affection to be sought after, as most concern the glory of God's name.

This is gathered from the order of the petitions.

Reas. 1. Because in the order of intention, and of a well ordered desire, the end is first to be desired: And the glory of God is the end of all.

Reas. 2. That which is first in worth, ought to be put before all other things: And the glory of God hath infinite excellency and worth beyond all things else.

Reas. 3. Because this is one the difference between true and sincere prayer, and that which is hypocritical and vain; in that hypocrites then only seek after God, when by their own private and proper necessities they are constrained to it, and seek not to him first, and for himself. But the godly call upon God for the esteem that they have of himself especially, although even then also with him, they seek their own happiness in him, and in him alone; because this is most of all to glorify God in that manner that himself hath prescribed.

Use. Of Exhortation, that by all means we stir up in ourselves this servant desire towards the glory of God's name, not only beyond and above all profits and pleasures of this life, but also above our life itself, both in this world, and in the world to come, if it were possible that we could desire God's glory separately from our own salvation, and glorification in Heaven.

Doct. 3. Our hallowing or sanctifying and glorifying of Go•...s name depends upon his own <◊ > gift and bounty▪

For we are here taught to seek and pray for it from him.

Reas. 1. Because no mortal creature of itself knows the way how God's name is to be sanctified; nor doth any by that illumination which he hath got, so understand it, but that he still stands in need yet more and more from time to time to be taught it of God.

Reas 2. Because when we understand how God's name ought to be sanctified of us, yet the direction, and leading, and grace of the Spirit of God is needful for the performing of that, which we know belongs unto our duty.

Reas 3. Because there be many things without us, that belong to the sanctifying of God's name, that cannot be brought to any effect by us, but by the special and powerful working of God himself.

Use▪ Of Information, that by this we may understand, that all the duties that we perform unto God are God's own gifts. For nothing can be by us offered unto God for sanctifying of his name, unless that first were freely given us of God. And thus God is Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end, in all that spiritual communion, that we have with him. First he forgives us our sins; then he gives us the grace both to will and to do that which is good and well-pleasing in his sight; and lastly, all these his own gifts he crowns in us, both with grace to the end, and glory in the end.

Doct. 4. It is a great benefit of God to us, when we see his name to be hallowed or glorified.

For here we seek this first, as our principal desire and benefit, that the name of God may be hallowed.

Reas. 1. Because this hallowing of God's name, turns always to the profit and building up of the children of God, who in some sort are made partakers of his glory.

Reas. 2. Because all such as love God above all things else, are made possessors of their chief desire, when they see the name of God to be hallowed and glorified.

Reas. 3. Because God often vouchsafes us this honor, to be made some way instruments of hallowing and glorifying his name; and this ought to be acknowledged for a great honor and benefit.

Use▪ Of Reproof, against the base and earthly minds of men, that are more taken with a little profit of the things of this world, than with the glorious hallowing of the name of God.

Doct. 5. It ought to be our greatest grief, if the name of God be profaned or blasphemed.

For this is it, that is directly contrary to this first and great petition, and the greatest hearts desire of all the godly.

Reas. 1. Because God's majesty ought to be most dear unto us.

Reas. 2. Because the actors of such a sin are most wretched, and therefore much to be pitied, for the miserable blindness and perverseness wherein they lie.

Reas. 3. Because great scandal is given to others.

Reas. 4. Because by this means God's judgments are in a singular manner thus provoked and procured, for God will always have his glory, will we, nill we; either from us freely, or upon us fiercely; either the glory of his mercy from us, or the glory of his justice and wrath upon us.

Use, Of Direction▪ how we ought to be affected, when the name of God is profaned or blasphemed; that is, if it be done by others, we ought to grieve at the thing, and as far as in us lies, to mend it; but if it be done by ourselves, or by occasion of us; that is, for a life led altogether unworthy of, and unsuitable to the glorious God, that we profess to serve; then we ought as it were to repair God of his honor, by our humiliation and repentance for such misdoings, and by zeal of glorifying him afterwards, as we had offended and dishonored him before.

The forty eighth Lord's day. On the second petition of the Lord's prayer.

Let thy Kingdom come.

IN the second Petition is handled the principal means, whereby the name of God is hallowed, or glorified amongst men; and that is, the Kingdom of God, and its coming is sought for. And by the Kingdom of God properly is understood that state of the Church, wherein she is made partaker of that happiness, that she hath in her communion with God. For a Kingdom in its general notion, is a kind of polity or public government and state of men, wherein one hath the supreme and chief command, and all others are subject (less or more) for their own good. For unless it be for the good of the Subjects, or people, it is not a Kingdom, but a Tyranny. So the Kingdom of God, is a Politie or State, wherein God hath the Sovereignty or Supreme power and command; and men are sub...ect in such a sort, that from thence they may reap and receive their chief good, that can be desired, or eternal and true happiness. By a (ϕ) also all such means are understood by the Kingdom of God, whereby such a state of the Church is procured. Of this Kingdom there are two most remarkable degrees; one in that administration which belongs unto this present life, in respect whereof it is called the Kingdom of grace: The other unto the life to come, in regard whereof it is called the K...ngdome of glory. By the coming of this Kingdom then, is understood its state or condition; and the giving, or bringing to pass of all such things, together with the advancing and perfection of them, as belong to this state, for its accomplishment.

Doct. 1. The chief mea...s to hallow, or glorify God's name by, is the Kingdom of God, which consists in his Church.

This is gathered from the connection of this petition with the preceding.

Reas. 1. Because the name of God, or the greatest perfections of God, are more manifested in this Kingdom, than in any other of his works, but especially his grace, or mercy, justice, truth, and wisdom.

Reas. 2 Because this Kingdom of God in its perfection comes nighest unto God himself. For there is nothing out of God himself, that can be compared with his Church; yea, in a manner all things else are subject to the Church.

Rea. 3. Because nothing is more contrary to the glory of God's name, than the impairment of this Kingdom, or trenching upon it, or than the troubling and deforming of it.

Use, Of Direction and Exhortation, that first of all we seek the Kingdom of God.

Doct. 2. This Kingdom is not set up, nor brought about by any other, than God himself.

This is hence gathered, in that the coming hereof is sought from God alone, as the author and principal cause and procurer of it.

Reas. 1. Because the adversaries and enemies of this Kingdom are more and mightier, than that they can be overcome by any creature.

Reas. 2. Because the profits and advantages that this Kingdom brings, are greater, than that they can be imparted to any by any creature.

Reas. 3. Because the administration of this Kingdom is more spiritual, than that it can be performed by any creature in chief.

Use, 1. Of Refutation, as well against Pelagians, who go about to rob God of a great part of this Kingdom, and ascribe it to nature; as against Papists, and others, Who will have the external government of the Church at least to depend upon human power and pleasure.

Use 2. Of Direction, that in seeking this Kindome we fly to God by faithful prayers.

Doct. 3. This Kingdom is come to us, but in part, as yet.

This is hence gathered, in that the coming of this Kingdom is by all during this life always to be sought for.

Reas. 1. Because always in this life something cleaves to us, which belongs to the Kingdom of darkness, and must be put off, and laid away.

Reas. 2. Because always something is wanting to us, that belongs to the Kingdom of light, and must be put on.

Reas 3 Because we must always pant and breath after the accomplishment of this Kingdom, which is to be revealed and perfected in the last coming of Christ.

Use, Of Admonition, that we never so set up our rest here, as if we were arrived at the end and last perfection, but strive unto a further perfection, than any we have attained.

Doct. 4. It belongs to our duty, that we use all care and pains to advance this Kingdom of God, by our desires, prayers, and all other lawful means and endeavors within the compass of our power, place, and calling, that God hath set $\langle \diamond \rangle$ in.

This is gathered, because we are here taught to do this by prayer; and what we are bound to pray for, we are bound to use all lawful and expedient means to bring it to pass: else we should but tempt and mock God by such prayers, by dividing the right means from the end, and disjoining of things that God hath conjoined.

Reas. 1. Because the zeal of the House and Kingdom of God (for God's Kingdom and his Family or House, are all one) ought to take up and possess our minds as far as makes for the glory of God.

Reas. 2. Because from it depends our own salvation.

Reas. 3. Because such endeavors, if they be sincere, are never in vain. For though perhaps they profit little with men sometimes, yet they always advance the Kingdom of God in ourselves, and have the promise of the blessing.

Use, Of Reproof, of such as care nothing what the estate of the Church be, how the Word is preached, the Sacraments administered, Discipline exercised, and the like; but it is to be feared that such Gallio's have no part nor portion in this Kingdom, which they entertain with such slight and neglect.

Doct. 5. We ought to wish for the uttermost perfection of this Kingdom, which is to be after the day of judgment.

This is hence gathered, in that believers here on earth are taught still unto the day of judgment to pray for this Kingdom. For further illustration it needs no more, than what hath been said on the former Doctrines.

Doct. 6. The Kingdom of the Devil, and of Darkness, and of Antichrist, and all other such things, as are opposite to the Kingdom of God, and enemies to it, we ought with all our heart to detest, and with all our strength to oppose.

This is gathered from the distinctive particle, thy: Wherein is held out an opposition of this Kingdom to all other Kingdoms and things, that are contrary to it.

The forty ninth Lord's day. On the third petition of the Lord's prayer.

Thy will be done on earth, as it is in Heaven.

IN this Petition is sought the fulfilling of God's will, and in that manner, that it ought to be sought to be fulfilled: which is explicated by a comparison of the like; where the things compared are the fulfilling of God's will by men, and by Angels: The quality or manner, wherein they are compared, is the manner of obedience, that ought to be given to this will: Now by the will of God here properly is understood that which God hath revealed unto us concerning our duty, or that which he hath laid upon us to do, by his revealed will; though the secret will of God also is so far contained under this Petition, as that we ought to rest content with it, when it appears now to us by the event, that it was the will of God, Acts 25. 14. This Petition hath dependence on the first, in as much as it is a m...an te...ding to that end, that is there proposed. It depends also on the second, because it is the effect of that kingdom and administration; and it is also the perfection and accomplishment of the same kingdom: For God is not said to have a perfect kingdom of grace, until he have got all the faithful absolutely subject in all things unto his will: The fulfilling therefore of the will of God, differs from his kingdom, as the government differs from the obedience that is given to it; in the same sort almost, as the kingdom of God and the righteousness thereof differ: Mat. 6. 33. Seek ...e first the kingdom of God, and the righteousness thereof, and all these things shall be added unto you.

Doct. 1. The name of God is hallowed by men, and his kingdom is advanced, when his will is religiously and devoutly done.

This flows from the former connection already shown.

Reas. 1. Because reverence to the name of God, which is the hallowing or glorifying of it, brings with it of necessity obedience to his will.

Reas. 2. In this very thing, that we subject ourselves to the will of God, we give God glory and power, and command over our very souls and lives; and so we highly glorify him.

Reas. 3. By this doing of the will of God, the kingdom of God comes to be within us; and within us is his place of ma...esty and state, and his throne powerfully set up to him, in our hearts.

Use Is of Direction, according to this rule, we judge of our love and care towards the name and kingdom of God.

Doct. 2. The revealed will of God should be the rule of our life.

This follows from the substance of the Petition. Reas. 1. Because the will of God is the law, partly, written in our hearts, and partly revealed in the Scriptures for this very end, that according to it, we should direct our ways.

Reas. 2. Because it contains in itself all perfection, which belongs to the imprinting upon us the image of God, and making of our life divine.

Reas. 3. Because according to this will, and the doing of it, God both in this life, and in the life to come, distributes and disposeth of all rewards and punishments.

Use Is of Admonition, that we deny our own carnal wills and affections or lusts, with all things that disagree from this will of God; and that we conform ourselves altogether to it, which seems here to be insinuated to us in the particle thy, which is put here in opposition to our will, and to the lusts of this world.

Doct. 3. It is God that gives us both to will and to do anything, that is according to his will.

For this is the very thing, that here we seek of God.

Reas. 1. Because of ourselves we can do nothing that is truly good, and pleasing to God, in a spiritual sort.

Reas. 2. Because there are so many things both in us and without us, that fight against this good will of God; that unless God gave us to will and to do what he will's, and kept us in this mind, we should never be able to attain it.

Reas. 3. Because God ought to have all the glory of any good, which yet could not be given him, unless he were the Author and giver of all good.

Use Is of Admonition, that with all humility we think of ourselves, and of our own endeavors, and learn to depend altogether upon God, that from him we may receive both to will and to do that which is good.

Doct. 4. In this doing of God's will, we ought to strive and endeavor unto an Heavenly and Angel-like perfection.

From the words,

On earth, as it is in Heaven.

Reas. 1. Because this is the best way to help our imperfections, if we always aim at the chiefest perfection.

Reas. 2. Because we are called unto the same society and communion with those blessed spirits that are in Heaven, therefore we ought to aspire unto the imitation of them.

Reas. 3. Because we seek the same happiness and glory that they possess; and therefore ought to follow the same holiness.

Use, Is, that we always study to obey God with all cherefulness, sincerity, readiness, and entireness, that in Scriptures are attributed to Angels in their obedience, as special properties and qualifications of the same.

The fiftieth Lord's day. On the fourth petition of the Lord's prayer.

Give us this day, &c.

THE sum of this petition contains things needful for this present life. For by bread is understood by a Synecdoche, all that sustains and comforts bodily life. The act of God that is humbly desired about these necessary things, is that he would give us, by which also, by another Synecdoche, is understood, not only the first free imparting of things to us, that we have not, but also the continuation of them that we have, together with the right use and fruit of them, by the blessing of God: And moreover the removing of all other things, as on the other side are contrary to this present life, or to the comfort, quietness, and contentment of it. This bread then thus understood, is illustrated from its subject, and adjunct. From its subject, in that it is called our bread: And from its adjunct, in that it is called daily bread; that is, fit for us, and our use, day by day, or from day today. The giving of God that we desire, is illustrated also from the adjunct of time, this day; that is, now when we have need: And from its object, to whom; to wit, us m...n of all sorts, or all men, but especially such as are of the household of Faith. This petition depends on the first, in as much as all other comforts of this life, ought no other ways, nor no further to be made use of, than as they are instrumental, or made necessary to the hallowing of God's name, or glorifying of him. It depends also upon the last preceding petition (and by it also on that going before it) because by the necessities of this life we are made the fitter, and ought to be readier for doing the will of God upon earth, as it is done by the holy Angels in Heaven.

Doct. 1. Necessaries of this li...e are on this ground chiefly to be desired and sought for, that by them we may be the better fitted and enabled for the doing of the will of God, and glorifying of his name.

This follows from the connection that we have shown.

Reas. 1 Because thus all things are referred to the glory of God, as their last end, according as they should.

Reas. 2. Because while thus we receive these outward goods, we get all the good that is in them, and at once also keep ourselves free from all the evil, that someway cleaves to them; in regard whereof, they are called snares, thorns, and all designed in Scripture by such like names, that set forth unto us great danger by them, or from them.

Reas. 3 Because thus such bodily goods are turned in some sort into spiritual goods, as they are looked upon, as effects and signs of God's blessing, and are received as pledges of his love, and directed in their use to the increase and furtherance of spiritual good things.

Use, Of Reproof, against worldly men, who in a carnal manner seek the goods of this life, and use them also only carnally.

Doct. 2. All the necessaries of this life, both the greatest of them, and the least, come •...o men's use by the free gift and bounty of God.

This follows from the manner of seeking them; give us &c.

Reas. 1. Because God is absolute Lord of all that is in heaven and in earth; and therefore whatsoever any creature possesses or enjoys, it hath all this from God's free indulgence.

Reas. 2. Because as from God, the thing itself that we possess, depends; so also doth the whole fruit, use, and benefit of it, every way.

Reas. 3. Because this gift of God, is herein singular, and freely bountiful, in that he gives them to such as are unworthy, and such as too too unworthily use them, and abuse his gifts.

Use 1. Is of Refutation, against the doctrine of Papists about men's merits, which have no place so much as in our daily bread, or in one •...crumb of bread, much less in respect of the life to come, or eternal glory.

Use 2. Is of Direction, that we place not our confidence in second causes, but in God alone, even for these outward things; and that we show all thankfulness to God, even for these worldly things; and specially beware, that we abuse not these gifts of God, and make them an occasion and matter of sinning against the Author and donour of them.

Doct. 3. We ought all to live contentedly on that pittance, that God hath measured out unto us, of the conditions of this life.

This follows from hence, in that we are taught to seek only our daily bread: so Proverb 30. 8. Feed me with the food of my daily portion, or pittance, measured •...ut to me.

Reas. 1▪ Because we ought not to be carried towards such things with such a desire, as we should seek the kingdom of God with, and the righteousness thereof, but with greater moderation, and with far lower desires.

Reas. 2 Because we. ought not to bind, and prescribe God the measure of the things, that we desire of him, but for that we ought to rest content with his pleasure.

Reas. 3 Because that as he gives, and we have of him, if we enjoy it with contentment, it brings more true good with it to us, than all the greatest riches bring, or can bring to worldly men.

Use Is of Exhortation, to keep ourselves from all inordinate care and solicitude about worldly things.

Doct. 4. Our confidence or trust in God, and prayer to him, even about the necessaries of this life, is daily to be renewed.

This follows from the word, this day.

Reas. 1▪ Because there is no day wherein we stand not in need of God's favor and blessing, even in such things.

Reas. 2. Because daily the blessings of God are renewed towards us, and therefore also our worship towards him ought daily to be renewed.

Reas. 3 Because every day hath in it as it were a picture which represents the whole life of man; and we are uncertain whether we shall live unto the next day; therefore every day, as it goes over us, we ought to take care of this duty.

Reas. •... Because there is great danger, that we shall find no time, that we may apply to such duties, but that we will forget and over-pass them altogether▪ unless daily we do renew the duty▪ and do it every day in its own day.

Use Is of Reproof against such, as either daily neglect these daily prayers, or very slightly and coldly go about them to perform them.

Doct. 5. We ought not only to pray for, and procure such things to ourselves, but to all others also, as much as in us lie•....

From hence give us, not give me.

Reas. 1. Because this belongs to Charity.

Reas. 2. Because it is the duty of a good steward of the gifts of God.

Use Is of Reproof, not only against such as exercise thefts and robberies, but also against all such as are guilty of too great sparing niggardliness and envy.

The one and fifty Lord's day. On the fifth Petition of the Lord's Prayer:

Forgive us our debts, &c.

THE following Petitions, treats of the removing of spiritual evil, or sin: And sin is two ways removed; either 1. by forgiveness of sin committed; or 2. by preservation from sin, that it be not committed: The first is the substance of the fifth Petition; the last of the sixth and last: In the fifth the Petition is proposed, and then afterwards it is confirmed. In the Petition because sins are chiefly considered, as to their adjoined guilt: therefore 1. they are under that notion by a metaphor, or simily marked out to us, and declared, when they are called debts: The reason of the simily or metaphor is, because by the law and justice, we are bound to God, to give him entire obedience; and for omission of any part, or point of this whole or entire obedience, we were bound to undergo the punishment or penalty of the curse of the law. Sins therefore are called debts. 1▪ Because of the want of that obedience▪ in them, which we owed to God. 2 Because they did bring with them an obligation of undergoing those punishments.

Now of both these debts the forgiveness is sought for; that is, the removing of our guiltiness, that we contracted by our sins; and by consequence justification and adoption. The argument whereby this petition is enforced, is taken partly from the place of like things; because from our forgiveness and mercy to others, we must expect the forgiveness and mercy of God; and partly from the place of unlikenesse, or of that from the less to the more; in this, or such •...Syllogism: If we, who scarce have a drop, or small resemblance of that mercy, that is in God, do yet forgive men their offenses, whereby they have offended us; then much more will God forgive us our offenses out of his infinite mercy, that we have done against him: but the first is true; and therefore the latter also. This argument is thus expounded, Luke 11. 4. This petition hath its dependence from all the foregoing, as a means whereby way is made for the obtaining of them; because God of his mercy forgiving us our sins, by so doing removes the hindrance of his grace and blessing, whereby other things are obtained; and so he gives us all good things that we want, or desire. It is expressly coupled to the next foregoing petition, by the conjunction and, which was not used in the former petitions; because the three former petitions were so nere allied, that of themselves they depended one upon another, by a natural connexion and consequence; and the fourth did upon the last of the cther three, by that kindlinese of connection, that the well-being of the whole, or person, for the better exercising of its duties and actions well, hath on the well-being of a very necessary and essential part of itself. But this petition, and that fourth, are of far different kinds, and have not so direct and immediate a connection in the nature of the things; but that they required to be coupled together by such a grammatical conjunction, and.

Doct. 1. Our sins are the heaviest of all evils.

This is hence gathered, in that we are taught to pray for the removal of this evil absolutely, and of none other.

Reas 1. Because they are most opposite to the chief good; that is, unto the image and holiness of God, as they may be partaken of by us, to our felicity; and so some way to God himself. Whose will, as much as in us lay, we have violated.

Reas. 2. Because they spoil us of our greatest perfection.

Reas. 3. Because they beget unto us the greatest miseries.

Use, Of Direction, that having a right esteem of our sins, we may the more abhor them, and all other evil that comes by them.

Doct. 1. Sin•...s bring with them an obligation of the greatest debt.

It is hence gathered, that they are here called debts.

Reas. 1. Because the Law of God binds sinners to suffer pains, and that no common ones, but of the wrath and curse of God.

Reas. 2. Because this debt is such, that for it, we can never be able to satisfy God. For whatsoever sinners do, it rather augments, than diminisheth the nature, or account of the debt.

Reas. 3 Because the justice of God exacting so rigorous a discharge of this debt for sinners, is still upon them, and is as it were perpetually threatening condemnation to them in their own consciences.

Use. Of Admonition, that neither by a mad kind of secureness, or secure and careless madness, we neglect these so heavy debts; but go about this by all means, that we may be set free from them.

Doct. 3. The mercy of God in Christ is sufficient to forgive and remit all our debts.

This is hence gathered, in that we are here taught to this end to fly to the forgiving mercy of God.

Reas. 1. Because God is not only a just Judge, but also a merciful Father, as is in the preface of this prayer.

Reas. 2. Because God according to his infinite wisdom hath so ordered things in Christ, that he can with safety to his justice, of his free mercy forgive us our sins.

Reas. 3. Because this mercy being infinite, far surpasseth our sins, though in themselves they be horrible.

Use▪ Of Exhortation, that with all our hearts we fly to this mercy, and rest in it, and on it.

Doct. 4. Unto remission of sins, together with •...aith, is required a confession of them, and repentance or a change of mind and amendment.

This follows from the nature of the petition.

Reas. 1▪ Because none can earnestly desire the blotting out of his sins, unless he both confess and also hate and detest them.

Reas. 2. Because otherwise he can by no means rightly magnify the mercy of God, whereunto he flies; but rather goes about to prostitute it, and make it a Pander or Baud to his sins.

Reas. 3. Because without these, none is fitted for receiving comfort from the mercy of God in remission of his sins.

Use, Of Reproof, against such as presume on the mercy of God, though they never thus seriously repent of their sins, nor can be brought to confess or acknowledge their cruel dispositious to men.

Doct. 5. Mercy and love to our brethren, is a sign of the mercy and love of God to ourselves.

From these words; As we forgive our debtors.

Reas. 1. Because the mercy and love of God shed abroad in our hearts, begets mercy in us to our brethren, as heat begets heat.

Reas. 2. Because this mercy and love towards men, is for its conformity thereto, and suitability to it, a special condition of obtaining the mercy of God; and so is declared to be tyed to it, Mat. 6. 14. If ye forgive men their trespasses, your Father also that is in Heaven; will forgive you.

Reas. 3. Because this forgiving of all injuries and wrongs done to us, by others, is taken of the special and free mercy of God communicated unto us; and this grace is the effect of God's mercy forgiving us our sins.

Use▪ Of Admonition, that we deceive not ourselves, and promise to ourselves the mercy of God, whilst we nourish in our own hearts hatred and rancour against our brethren.

The fifty second Lord's day. On the sixth petition of the Lord's prayer.

⟨◇⟩ u... not into temptation, &c.

IN this petition the business is about the evil of sin in respect of its dominion, which it uses to have over men; concerning which, we have first the petition; and secondly, its declaration, or opposition. In the petition we pray against this evil in its twofold cause; whereof the first is, the proper cause of sin, intending it; which is the temptation of the Devil, or the Devil tempting us to sin. Now temptation is nothing else but an argument proposed to us, whereby we are induced to be persuaded, and drawn into sin. The other cause, that is looked at in this petition, is not properly the cause of the sin, nor any efficient or author of it, but a governor and orderer as well of the sin itself, as of the tempting to sin, and of the effects of both; but the true cause of the evil of punishment, that follows sin: And this is God's effectual and powerful way of working about sin, or exercising of his providence, which usually is called God's permission, although it be more than a bare and an idle permitting. The explication of this petition is in praying for the contrary to this evil, that we prayed against in the words going before; which is prayed against from God's gracious acting towards us, contrary to that, which before was called a leading into temptation. For it is called a delivering or plucking of us out of temptation.

Doct. 1. The guilt of former sins committed, deserveth altogether at gods hands, that we should be quite given over to temptations and sins.

This is gathered from the connection; wherein first forgiveness of sins is sought, and then deliverance from temptations, and evil for sin.

Reas. 1. Because sin being an aversion, or turning away from God, therefore it deserves, that he should turn away himself, and his grace from us.

Reas. 2. Because for sin, we both give ourselves up as it were servants to sin, and to him that tempts to sin; We deserve therefore directly, and very rightly, that we should be given to such masters, as we ourselves have chosen.

Reas. 3 When we rush into sin, we neglect that grace of God, by which we might have been preserved from sin; and therefore we deserve to be deserted by him.

Use 1. Of Admonition▪ that we so much the more take care to keep ourselves from sin.

Use 2. Of Direction, that we daily seek from God, the forgiveness of our sins, even for this end, that we be not further given up to sin, and to temptation, but that we may be preserved from both.

Doct. 2. Whosoever have forgiveness of sins, or seriously seek after it, they have a desire, and true purpose to abstain and keep themselves from sinning in time to come.

This is also clear from the connection of these two petitions.

Reas. 1. Because other ways they would not truly abhor sin, and so would show themselves altogether indisposed, and not qualified for remission of sins.

Reas. 2. Because else they would not be thankful to God, that forgave them their sins.

Reas. 3. Because else that forgiveness would be in vain, if they should again purpose to themselves to return to the like condition, wherein they were before.

Use, Of Reproof, of such as seem to wish for forgiveness of sin, but in the mean time have no care to fly from sin.

Doct. 3. Who so desires to keep himself from sin, ought also to keep himself from all temptations and occasions that lead into sin.

It is clear from the petition, which prays against temptations to sins

Reas. 1. Because the end of such temptations is sin, and the misery that follows upon sin.

Reas. 2. Temptations are so many, so subtle, and so powerful, that unless with great care we take heed to ourselves, it cannot be, but they lead us into sin.

Reas. 3. Because of ourselves we are carried that way, and incline unto this, that by giving place to temptations we may betray our own souls to the tempter.

Use, Of Admonition, to such as from too much security and boldness, rashly expose themselves to the danger of diverse temptations and enticements to sin, for temptation is not to be desired and sought after, but as wisely as we can to be shunn'd; and where that cannot be, stoutly and courageously to be repulsed.

Doct. 4. Our Father that is in Heaven, disposeth also of our temptations according to his own good pleasure.

For thus it is here held out to us, that it is he, that either leads us into temptation, or causes us not to be brought into it; but kept from it.

Reas. 1. Because he exercises his providence in guiding and measuring of every temptation.

Reas. 2. From him depends the strengthening of our souls against such temptations, as we are vexed with.

Reas. 3. From him depends the issue of the temptation itself, together with its effects, which follow on it, either of their own nature, or by accident.

Use Of Comfort, because from hence we may have comfort against all temptations, that we be never fully led into them, as 1 Cor. 10. 13. No other temptation hath overtaken you, but as useth to befall men; but God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will with the temptation also make a way to escape, that ye may be able to bear it.

Use 2. Of Exhortation to thanksgiving, that we are not led unto this and that temptation; because this should not be attributed to our own strength and wisdom, but to the grace of God.

Use 3. Of Admonition, that with horror, fear and trembling, we pray chiefly against this judgment of God▪ which he exercises upon many sinners, when he leads them into manifold temptations.

Doct. 5. It is a great benefit of God towards his own, that he thus delivers them from evil, that they be not delivered into temptation.

This is hence gathered, in that this is sought from God by a doubling of the same petition in a man•...lead us not into, but deliver us from.

Reas. 1. Because a mischief to man lies in the prevalence of temptations, when he is not only tempted, and led somewhither unto temptation, but also led into it, so as he is inwrapped in it, and held entangled therein, after the will of the tempter Satan, and so is kept captive in the slavery of sin.

Reas. 2. Because so great is the force of temptations, and such is our nature's slipperiness, and deceitfulness, that from this evil of temptation we cannot be delivered, but by God.

Reas 3. Because God delivers not all, but of his just judgment suffers many to be led into temptation, of whom a great part (for ought we know) were no worse than we ourselves, who yet are delivered from them.

Use, Of Direction, 1. What evil it is, that we should chiefly pray against at God's hands to be delivered from; to wit, not against outward afflictions, which are also temptations; nor yet against all other temptations absolutely, but against that deadly evil of sin in them, that is intended to us by Satan, both by afflictions, and all other his temptations, which in truth are often times no less dangerously couched in prosperity, than in adversity. 2. How we should wholly depend upon God for deliverance from this evil, and so give him the glory.

On the conclusion of the Lord's prayer.

For thine is the Kingdom, power, and glory, &c.

THIS is the conclusion of the Lord's prayer, wherein two things are contained; 1. The confirmation of all the foregoing petitions. 2. The obligation of our affection, that moves us to offer up these petitions to God, and in some sort moves God also to hear the petitions offered. The confirmation is taken from the causes, which concur in God for strengthening of our confidence about the hearing of our petitions at his hands. The efficient cause is, 1. The right and authority of God, by which he can and may dispense and dispose of all, according to his own pleasure; and it is here called the Kingdom of God▪ for thine is the Kingdom; that is, the sovereignty, the supreme dominion, and right. 2. The same efficient is also, that power of God, or his might, whereby he is able to put in execution all to what he hath right; that is, all that he pleases, or whatsoever he will: Thine is the power. 3. The final cause, is his own glory; Thine is the glory. All which are illustrated by their adjunct of duration, not for a time only, and then either to cease, or to pass to another; but forever and ever: but unto ages of ages, or worlds of worlds, as the old English did bear; or world without end▪ as now it goes; that is, to all eternity. The obligation of sealing up of our affection, is in the word of acclamation, Amen; whereby is shown▪ 1. The strength of our desire, wherewith we follow after all these things, that were proposed in these petitions. 2. The strength of our faith, whereby we rest in, and rely on God's mercy, for them all. 3. Of our hope, whereby we look for and wish, that God would ratify and hold firm all our petitions, in the same manner as he doth the promises, whereunto himself hath prefixed this same word of strong asseveration (for it is of both) Amen, Amen, that is, Verily, Verily, a kind of oath; and so hold our acclamation as firm, as his own asseveration: and that is beyond exception.

Doct. 1. No petition, nor p...r ought to be made to God, without some praise of his name at least implied.

This is hence gathered, that in the very brief pattern of petitions, a solemn praise of the name of God is subjoined, how ever it be in order to confirm all the petitions foregoing.

Reas. 1. Because it is not ourselves that we ought either only, or chiefly to look at in the worship of God; but it is the honor of God's name, that we should so much regard.

Reas. 2. Because this is a most powerful motive, to obtain what we seek, if in all things we give God his glory.

Reas. 3. Because it is a chief part of worship.

Use, Of Reprof, against our negligence on this behalf, who are so wholly taken up with the things that belong to our own necessities, that we neglect the giving God his honor by duly praising of his name; when yet it is the sole thing aimed at in this prayer of our Lord's, that the glory of God may have the first and the last place, as the Alpha and Omega of all his worship, the beginning and the end of •...ight serving him. For the first petition is about the hallowing or glorifying of his name; and the last conclusion is the extolling and praising of him to the same glory.

Doct. 2. It makes very much for the strengthening and confirming us in our prayers, if we set before our eyes the infinite sovereignty and right, and the infinite might, and glory of God.

From the words; Thine i... the Kingdom, power, and glory.

Reas. 1. Because hence it appears, that we do rightly, and according as just order doth require, fly unto God in our prayers; and seek all good things from him, because he only hath the absolute right and might, to dispense all these things, according as his own honor and glory requires.

Reas. 2. Because hence it appears, that we may have certain and sure confidence, that he will hear our prayers, because it is as easy to him to do all this, as to will it; and it belongs also to his glory in some sort, to will the same.

Reas. 3. Because from hence we are taught, both in what manner, and for what end, we ought to look for the accomplishment of our desires; to wit, in such manner as shall seem good unto God, according to that wisdom and power of his, whereby he exercises sovereignty of kingdom and command, or dominion in all things, and in such manner, as may make most for the glory of his name.

Use, Of Direction, that we use these and the like titles of God, in our prayers, not for a fashion, but from religious resentment and intention, that our prayers may be the more powerful, from the greater feeling, and abundance of our hearts.

Doct. 3. All things... that uphold our faith and our prayers, are from the everlasting and eternal God.

From these words; For ever and ever. Or thus rather it makes for the same purpose; that we consider, that all things that sustain our faith, and our prayers, are in the eternal God, unto eternity, or forever and ever, &c

Reas. 1 Because from hence it appears, that now God is the same, and such unto us, as he was from the beginning of the world to any other, that called upon his name, Isa 59. 1. & ...1. 17.

Reas. 2. Because from hence we are confirmed in this, that God will unto eternity remain still our God, even then when he will cease by changeable dispensations to do us anymore good, as here he doth, because then we shall be settled in the possession of our last and highest good Use, Of Direction▪ for the right use of this divine attribute of eternity.

Doct. 4. While we pray, and especially towards the end of prayer, we ought to put forth our petitions with all earnestness of desire, and lively strength of faith, and of affections.

From the word Amen.

Reas. 1. Because as at the end our prayer is as it were come to its perfection, so we ought there to exercise the perfection of our faith, affection, conscience, and desire.

Reas. 2 Because every natural and kindly motion grows stronger and faster towards its end; otherwise if it be flashy in the beginning, and flag towards the end, it is a token it was forced, or framed upon some wrong ground, and will not prove durable and kindly unto the end.

Reas. 3 Because our affection in the end of prayer ought then to act from the doubled and recollected force and power of all the affections going before.

Reas. 4▪ Because by this means in a sort we redouble our whole prayer, while first we propose all our petitions one by one in order, with their own measure of desire and affection; and thereafter press vehemently and earnestly for them all together, that they may all be granted us, and so according to our earnestness, •...est as confident that they will.

Use▪ Of Reproof, against the negligence of men on this behalf, which is grown so great, that now it is gone out of use amongst us, to signify such our affections, or strong wishes and desires, by saying, Amen; as the Apostle witnesseth and saith, that all Christians of old were taught, and did use to practice▪ 1 Cor. 14. 16.

To the Christian Reader.

Although we have not fully perused these Sermons, yet being well acquainted with the worth of the Author, we do (not without the desire of many) present these Notes to thy view. He was a man of a choice, humble, meek, and moderate spirit, of good natural endowments, heightened with no small measure of Divine grace; of a sound judgment, yet could bear with those that erred not in the main; of a large affection, yet without affectation; of good Learning; but his Art was in Preaching to conceal his Art. His Teaching was after the manner of God's drawing a soul to Himself, viz. Fortiter & suaviter, strongly and sweetly. His style was even, plain, & full, and (as Anianus spake of Chrysostom) his speech was never elevated to the pomp of speaking, but always accommodated to the profit of hearing. In brief, He was a faithful, experimental, powerful, and succesful Labourer in the Gospel; for the Spirit of God breathed much on his heart and Ministry: His life also held pace with his Doctrine; for as his Doctrine was lively, so his life was doctrinal: He was beloved both of God and man. Our only grief is, we had such a Preacher whom now we have not: But in the midst of our sorrows for the loss of him we have refreshment, by enjoying the issues of his labor; and this book being his Benjamin, which he did not live to finish, we humbly present unto you, in its native innocence, as it was midwived from his mouth by the finger of a ready Penman: Neither could we be so injurious to our departed Brother, or unjust unto you, as to diminish or add anything thereunto; lest, instead of his endeavors, we should give forth our own conceptions. His intention was not to print them in paper, but to imprint them in the hearts of his Auditory. This Writing is like Milk in a Bottle, which though it wanteth the natural warmth of the Breast, yet being well digested, will afford wholesome nourishment and spiritual strength. Those that did hear these Sermons delivered by a lively voice, cannot but rejoice in hearing them echoed over by the rebound of the Press; in which if there be any faults, you are desired, by the sense of the neighbouring words, to correct them. Thus

Several Sermons preached by Mr. Timothy Armitage upon Matth. 15. 21, 22, 23, 24, Verses, &c.

Verse 21. Then Jesus went thence, and departed into the Coasts of Tyre and Sidon:

22. And behold, a woman of Canaan came out of the same coasts, and cried unto him, saying, have mercy on me, O Lord, thou son of David, my daughter is grievously vexed with a Devil.

23. But he answered her not a word: And his Disciples came and besought him, saying, send her away, for she crieth after us.

24. But he answered, and said, I am not sent but to the lost sheep of the house of Israel, &c.

SERMON I.

YOU have a Relation of Christ's departure from the parts of Judea near to Jerusalem; and his coming to the coasts of Tyre and Sidon, the uttermost part of the Land of Canaan.

And here is a Relation of two great Wonders wrought by Christ there: One was a spiritual wonder, a wonderful faith that Jesus Christ wrought in the heart of a poor woman, the woman of Canaan; it was a wonderful faith, therefore it is brought in with admiration in the 22. verse, and BEHOLD, a woman of Canaan came out of the same coasts, and cried unto him, saying, have mercy on me, O Lord, thou son of David, &c. Yea it was such a wonder, as made the Son of God to wonder at it in conclusion, and to say, O woman, great is thy faith, be it unto thee even as thou wilt.

The second Wonder, which was the effect of this wonderful faith, it was a miraculous cure that the Lord Jesus Christ wrought upon the daughter of this woman of Canaan, who was possessed with a Devil, which Devil Christ cast out by speaking one word.

Now concerning the faith of this woman of Canaan; the wonder that was in it appears,

First, In that it was a woman, the weaker vessel, and most subject to fears, yet her heart was raised to believe.

Secondly, Not only a woman, but a Woman of Canaan, a Canaanitish woman, one that was of the seed and posterity of that cursed Nation the Canaanites, that were a cursed Nation, and cast out, that room might be made for the Children of Israel; cast out of the Land, that room might be made for the Children of the Kingdom, and yet Christ meets with mighty faith in the heart of a woman that was a Canaanite, one that had not enjoyed the means of Grace, one that had not enjoyed the privileges of the Jews.

But we shall open the Scripture, and give you a brief Analysis of it, and lay a foundation for future discourse, for I shall but dwell upon the borders at this time.

And in the faith of this woman of Canaan.

First take notice of the Declaration of her faith, ver. 22.

Her faith was declared, first, by the confession she made of Christ, she made a full and excellent confession of Jesus Christ; O Lord, thou son of David, there is the confession of her faith: she doth acknowledge the Lordship of Christ, she doth acknowledge him to be Lord of all, infinite in power, able to do what he pleases, yea to command the Devil out of her daughter, for she came to him for that end; there is a confession of the Divinity of Christ, and of his infinite power.

Secondly, She doth acknowledge him as the Messias, not only as the Lord of all, but as the Messias, Christ the Savior, him that was to come to redeem his people, and to be a light to enlighten the Gentiles, and therefore she calls him the son of David; Oh Lord, thou son of David, have mercy on me, &c. where she doth acknowledge him to be the Messias that was promised to come out of the loins of David.

Thirdly, There is a declaration of her faith by her prayer she pours out before the Lord; her prayer was an effect of her faith, she calls upon him with a great deal of earnestness; and her petition was, that Christ would cast out the unclean spirit that had taken possession of her daughter, therefore she spread it before the Lord, My daughter is grievously vexed with a Devil.

And the Argument she uses to move Christ (besides her own necessity and the misery of her child) it was his own free grace and mercy: Have mercy upon me, O Lord, thou son of David; my daughter is grievously vexed with a Devil.

Have mercy upon me; the affliction of her child was upon her; she does not say, have mercy upon my child, but upon me; and she pleads mercy and free grace, have mercy upon me, not her own worthiness; no, but have mercy upon me.

Secondly, We have the trial of her faith; her faith is tried three several times, and three several ways the Lord Christ doth try her faith, that so it may appear more shining.

First, Christ doth try her faith by keeping silent, giving her no answer; she cries aloud, Lord have mercy on me, but Christ doth not so much as open his lips to give her any encouragement, but he is silent; and that was a mighty trial, that when she should cry so loud, that Christ should say nothing to her, it was a mighty trial to this woman's faith.

Secondly, Christ tries her faith by giving of her a seeming denial, in the 24. verse, He answered and said, I am not sent but to the lost sheep of the house of Israel; as if he should say, it is beside my errand to have anything to do with this woman of Canaan, I am sent to the Jews in the first place; it was a seeming denial of Christ.

And it was the greater trial, because Christ did not only seem to deny her request, but to deny the request of the Disciples, for in the 23. ver. The Disciples of Christ came and besought him: Oh this was a trial of her faith; she might have said, I have cried, and there is no hope, and the Disciples they have besought him for me; but Christ doth not answer, but deny her request, and deny the Disciples request, what hope was left then?

Thirdly, The faith of this woman is tried in the 26. verse, where Christ doth object to her, her own unworthiness and unfitness that he should have anything to do with her; he answered and said, it is not meet that I should cast the children's bread to dogs: And oh! what a trial of faith was this? Christ doth not only deny her, but seems to upbraid her with her unworthiness; she was of the Nation of the Canaanites, and they were of the Jews accounted as Dogs; they were cast out, and were without the Covenant, and without God in the world; it is not meet, said Christ, I cannot do it, to take the children's bread, and give it to dogs; this was a mighty trial.

Now in the third place let us consider the behavior of this woman under these trials, how did her faith bear up under these trials? That is declared unto us,

First of all; when Christ gives her no answer, yet still she continues crying after him; there is the behavior of this woman's faith under that trial. Though Christ give her no answer, she gives not over her request; though Christ was silent and would not open his mouth to give her one word, yet she continues crying, the Disciples say as much, Lord send her away, say they, for she crieth.

Secondly, And for her deportment under her second trial; she came and worshipped, and said, Lord help; and so she continues still in duty, and is found waiting upon the Lord in an humble posture, she falls down and worships, she worships Christ and continues in prayer, Lord help.

Thirdly, The behavior of this woman under the third trial she meets withal is in the 27. verse. and she said, Truth Lord, yet the dogs eat of the crumbs which fall from their Masters table. When Christ tells her, that he must not take the children's bread and cast it to dogs, see how her faith now works, and though this seem the greatest discouragement, yet her faith doth make an excellent improvement of it, and from this discouragement her faith takes •ice and waxeth stronger and stronger; Truth Lord, yet the dogs eat of the crumbs that fall from their Masters table; she grants all that Christ said, she grants the proposition and application of it, she grants that she was no better then a dog, and yet her faith makes an improvement of that which seems to be the greatest discouragement, she fetcheth an argument from thence, if I be a dog let me have the crumbs, if a dog, thy dog, and I will not away from thy feet, but let me have crumbs that fall from the children's table. So you have the carriage of this woman under her several trials.

Fourthly, You have the victory of her faith in the 28. verse; O woman, great is thy faith, be it unto thee as thou wilt; and her daughter was made whole.

The heart of Christ seems to be taken mightily with the faith of this woman; and therefore Christ stands and wonders, that there should be such a faith in a Canaanitish woman: O woman, great is thy faith, be it unto thee even as thou wilt: I do not only grant the mercy thou askest, but even what thou wilt; thou hast overcome me with thy faith, Be it unto thee as thou wilt; and her daughter was made whole that hour: So that you see the history of this woman of Canaan opened to you: I shall not enter into it now, but (as I said before) dwell upon the borders of it.

And at this time I shall consider what is written in the 21. verse; Jesus went thence and departed into the coast of Tyre and Sidon.

1. We shall consider from whence Christ went when he came into these parts.

2. And what was the occasion of Christ's going away.

3. And then consider what this place was that Christ came to, where Christ wrought this wonder, this miracle.

1. He went from thence, from the parts of Judea; which were near to Jerusalem; for in the beginning of the Chapter you read, that Christ was there in some place, where many of the Scribes from Jerusalem came to him, as in the first verse.

2. What was the occasion of Christ's departure from these parts of Judea that were near to Jerusalem? Why did Christ leave these parts, and leave that people? The occasion is intimated; because they opposed Christ, they cavilled against him; against the person of Christ, against the truths of Christ, against the disciples of Christ, and against the way of Christ; the Scribes and Pharisees were filled with enmity against Christ, and the way of Christ, and therefore Christ departs from them, and goes into the coast of Tyre and Sidon.

But more particularly, that which was the cause of Christ's removing from this people; it was because they set up their own traditions; they set up their own inventions, and made them equal with the Command of God, nay, they made their own inventions and traditions above the Commandment of God, which was a mighty provocation to Jesus Christ; if you read the beginning of the Chapter, you shall see how they set up their own rules above God's Rules, which is a provocation to Christ, and he will not bear with such; you may read the second and third verses, and so to the end of the seventh verse.

In vain (says Christ) do you worship me, teaching for doctrine the commandments of men.

So that the occasion of Christ's removing from these parts of Judea which were near to Jerusalem, was the exalting their own traditions, and making them equal with God's Commandments.

It affords something to us for our instruction, which is this,

That when a people, or any soul, shall exalt their own traditions, their own inventions, and make them equal, or set them above the Commandments and Rules that Christ hath given his people to walk by, Christ will not afford his presence to such a people, Christ will certainly depart from such a soul, or people.

For the truth is; there is little hope that there should be any good done by such a people, when they decline the Rule, and set up something of their own, there is little hope that the word of Christ should do good among such a people. Therefore Christ will withdraw from them, as he did from these Scribes and Pharisees; and so will Christ withdraw his special presence from a people that shall set up their own inventions. For it is a mighty provocation to Christ.

First of all, when a people shall exalt their own inventions above the Rule that Christ hath given his people to walk by; the minds of such a people are blinded and darkened, and their hearts are hardened against the Truths of God; therefore there is little hope of such a people: I say; men's own inventions thus exalted and lift up above God's Rule, it blinds the mind, and hardens the heart against Christ and the things of Christ; it is a making to a man's self a graven Image: Whatsoever a man shall bring in of his own, as a rule to walk by, and to worship by, he makes that an image to himself; now they that make graven Images are like to them, says the Psalmist, They have eyes and see not; God gives them up to blindness; declining God's Rule, and Christ's Institution, it will blind them and harden them against the Truths of Christ.

Secondly, When as men shall exalt their own inventions, the heart is so filled with them, that there is no room for Christ, and for the most part there is in such a soul a kind of loathing the Truths of Christ. Wherever you find men's inventions exalted, there you shall find a kind of loathing, in such a soul, of the pure and sincere truths of the Gospel, the bread of life is no longer sweet with them, and the water of life hath no relish with them; and when it comes to this, Christ will not stay, but withdraws his spiritual presence from them, as he did his bodily presence from the Scribes and Pharisees.

Thirdly, Christ will withdraw from such a people, because for the most part they are desperate enemies and persecutors of Christ, and of his People, and of his Truths: So it was with the Scribes and Pharisees, Christ had not such enemies in all the world as they were, because they were most zealous for their own inventions, they declined the Rule, and set up their own rule, and therefore they prove desperate enemies to Christ. Paul makes an acknowledgement of it when Christ came to open his eyes, and doth tell you, that that was the cause of his driving on that trade of persecuting the Saints with so much earnestness, because he was so zealous for the traditions of men; in Phil. 3. 6. You may see there what he says was the cause of his persecuting the Saints: Concerning zeal, persecuting the Church, touching the righteousness which is in the law blameless: And so in Gal. 1. 13, 14. For ye have heard of my conversation in time past, in the Jews Religion, how that beyond measure I persecuted the Church of God and wasted it. Ver. 14. And profited in the Jews religion above many my equals in mine own nation, being more zealous of the traditions of my fathers: The zeal which he had for the traditions of men was that which carried him on to persecute the Christians with so much violence; and many times it is so, that they which do most exalt their own traditions, they become very zealous in persecuting the Saints and Truths of Christ, for it is natural for a man to become zealous for that which is his own; that which is of the flesh, that which is a kin to the flesh, the flesh will be zealous for: Now all traditions they are born of the flesh, they are the offspring of man's own brain, and therefore upon that account men are many times very zealous for them to the persecuting of the Saints of God. Now upon this account the Lord Christ will not afford his presence with such as lay aside his Rule, for they many times prove the greatest persecutors of Christ and his people.

Fourthly, Christ will not continue and afford his presence with such a people, as set up their own inventions and traditions in the place of God's Rule, because they do arrogate that to themselves which is Christ's due; he is the great Prophet, and given to instruct his people, to make known the way of life and salvation, and it belongs to Christ to give a rule for his people to walk by: And therefore when men shall set up their rule in the place of Christ's Rule; what do they but take the place of Christ, the office of Christ, and turn Christ out of his office, and set themselves in Christ's chair. Now this is a great provocation to Christ, and that which Christ will not endure, but depart from such a people.

Fifthly, They that do exalt their own inventions and traditions in the place of Christ's Rule, for the most part they place their righteousness in those very traditions of their own; which is a great provocation unto Christ; for you may observe this in the Pharisees, they that were so zealous for their own inventions, and would not submit to the Rule of Christ, they would not submit to the Righteousness of Christ, but they placed their righteousness in their traditions, in their inventions; a kind of voluntary humility they had, and willingly submitted to their traditions, and by so doing did overturn the righteousness of Christ, placing their righteousness in their own observations; it was that which made them not to submit to the righteousness of God. Let a man do never so much, let him walk never so strictly, let him set up the straitest rule to himself to walk by, though a man do never so much, though he afflict his body never so much, if this tend to draw off the soul from the righteousness of Christ, that a man should look upon this as his commendation before God, and place this in the room of Christ's righteousness, as all do that set up their own traditions, they do greatly provoke the Lord Christ, and loose all they do; though men could walk as exactly as the very Angels, yet if that exactness should draw them to place any trust, any confidence in their observations and humility, they loose all their labor; for Christ tells his Disciples in Matth. 5. 20. That except your righteousness exceed the righteousness of the Scribes and Pharisees, you shall in no wise enter into the kingdom of heaven: Except your righteousness exceed the righteousness of the Scribes and Pharisees: they went a great way in self righteousness, they walked very strictly and very precisely; ah but you must have another kind of righteousness, a righteousness that must be beyond theirs; they placed their righteousness in their doings, in their observations and inventions; but except your righteousness exceed theirs, you shall in no wise enter into the Kingdom of Heaven.

The Devil he will allow men to go a great way in such paths of self-righteousness, to do a great deal, to suffer a great deal, to carry it very humbly, and very strictly, and seem to be the most mortified men living; if the Devil can but draw them off from Christ's righteousness thereby, and place their righteousness in this, he care not how far they go; for the Devil knows that this will never mortify the deeds of the flesh, whatsoever is of man's setting up will never mortify the deeds of the flesh; but as I said before, men may live very strictly, fast and pray, and yet be far from mortifying the deeds of the flesh; it may be so far from mortifying the deeds of the flesh, that it may strengthen the flesh and corruption, get strength while men seem to walk in such a way of seeming mortification; yea the strength of the body may be spent in seeming mortification, and the corruption unmortified.

But to reflect a little by way of Application.

Oh that this might be a warning piece to us to take heed that we do not exalt anything of man in the room of Christ; take heed we do not exalt our rule above Christ's Rule, that we do not form rules to ourselves to walk by, and to worship by, and decline the Rule, and Institutions, and Ordinances of Christ.

There are two sorts of people that are and will be found guilty of this, who shall not enjoy the presence of the Lord, for Christ will depart from such a people.

First, Such as set up outward forms of their own in opposition to Christ's Form; there have been such a generation of men in this Land, and still there are, who hath such Idols in their hearts who set up their form above Christ's Form; Christ hath left a Rule, and Christ hath given his Form, and his Institutions, which must be observed till his coming; but now when men shall bring in their own inventions and traditions, their own superstitious ceremonies into the worship of Christ, which Christ hath not commanded, this is a great provocation to the Lord, and such a people cannot enjoy the spiritual presence of Christ; for •ait• Christ, Go teach, and observe what I have commanded you, and loe I am with you to the end of the world. So long as a people cleave to Christ's Institutions, so long they are under the Promise of Christ, but they that shall go from this are not under the Promise of Christ.

2. And then again there are those that will be found setting up something of their own in the stead of Christ's Rule, while they pretend that they have another rule then the Word to walk by; the other is more gross and carnal, but this more spiritually wicked. I say, when men shall pretend to have another rule to walk by, that they have the Spirit of the Lord to be their rule to teach them, and they shall not look to the rule of the Scripture, not look to any rule without them; truly both these sorts of men will be found to set up their own rule above Christ's Rule: And oh how dangerous is it? and as I said before, so again, and oh that it might be remembered! It is a pulling Christ out of his Throne; for men to decline his Rule, the rule of his Word, which he hath given them to walk by, and decline his Ordinances, and pretend to walk by a rule that is within them, truly they exalt something of their own above Christ; and let it be remembered what the Lord threatens to such as will not hear the great Prophet, Deut. 18. 15. and 19. The Lord thy God will raise up unto thee a Prophet from the midst of thee, of thy brethren, like unto me, unto him ye shall hearken. V. 19. And it shall come to pass, that whosoever will not hearken unto my words which he shall speak in my name, I will require it of him. He that will not take the rule from Christ's mouth, he that will not walk by that rule that Christ hath left in his Word to walk by, but shall take another rule though the pretence be never so high and spiritual, the Lord hath said that such a soul shall be cut off; the Lord will not afford his presence, Christ will not continue his presence with such a people as shall exalt any invention above Christ's Rule, the rule of the Word.

But it may be that they will say, They do not exalt anything of their own, we are mistaken of that no, it is only the Spirit of Christ that they exalt: it is the Spirit of Christ that is their rule to walk by, and they are not bound to attend to any rule whatsoever that is without them; but to walk by the rule of the Spirit of God that is within them.

To whom, I say, it is a great mistake, that the Spirit of the Lord in us should be a rule for us to walk by; the Spirit is not the rule, the Spirit is given to open the rule, the Spirit is given to shine upon the rule, to declare the rule, but the Spirit of the Lord is not the rule. It is true indeed, we cannot know the rule, at least in the spiritual nature of it, till the Spirit of the Lord doth open it▪ as a man cannot see what time of day it is by the Sundial till the Sun shine upon it; ah but the Dial is the rule: And so it is a great mistake▪ while men think that the Spirit is the rule, when as the Word of the Lord is the rule, to the Law and to the testimony, if any man walk not according to this rule. And so Christ tells his Disciples, that the Spirit is not given to manifest and discover any new thing, but what Christ hath laid down in his Word: look into John 16. 13. Howbeit when the Spirit of truth is come, he will guide you into all truth; for he shall not speak of himself▪ but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak, and he will show you things to come. Mark how clear it is, that the Spirit is not given to discover anything that is beside the rule that Christ hath left; he shall guide you into truth; ah but how? he shall lead you to the rule and guide you into truth, for he shall not speak of himself, but what Christ hath spoken, and what is written in the Word of the Lord; and the Spirit is given to speak it with power, and life, and efficacy; He shall take of mine and show it to you, no new thing, but what is mine; my Truth, my Gospel; he shall take of mine and show it to you.

Object. But you will say, If the Spirit of the Lord be in me, surely the Spirit need no rule to walk by; but the Spirit of the Lord is in all the Saints, what need have they of any other rule?

Answ. I answer: The Spirit needs no rule, ah but the Lord saw that we needed a rule to walk by, we were apt to be deceived, to call darkness light, and light darkness; the Lord saw we had need of a rule, and that rule is the Word of the Lord, which is given us as our rule, and no other rule but only the Word of the Lord: And therefore be not deceived upon any pretence whatsoever; take heed you be not drawn off from the Institutions of Christ, from the Word of Christ, the rule that Christ hath left all his people to walk by, for if you be, you will exalt something of your own, something that you will place your Righteousness in; and oh how provoking is that to Christ? for a people that do so, they cannot and shall not enjoy the spiritual presence of Christ; such as forsake Christ's Rule, and set up their own rule that Christ never made a rule, they shall not enjoy the presence of Christ, no more then Christ afforded his presence with the Scribes and Pharisees.

And therefore do but wait upon the Lord, cleave to the Lord, and hold fast his Rule, and you shall see that the Lord will make it evident to all the world, that he hath left them, though they are never so seemingly high and spiritual, yet it will appear, that such as forsake him, Christ will forsake them, they are left of Christ in their judgments already, and wait upon the Lord, and you shall see that the Lord will leave them to corrupt themselves by a corrupt conversation; for what way of Christ will not men only forsake, but blaspheme? and what sins so great will not such a man, as leaves the rule, be drawn to the commission of? For if the Word be not the rule, but a strong impulse of Spirit, what impulses may not a man have? he may have the strongest impulse to the greatest evil whatsoever; if the Lord hath not yet left, yet he will leave such a people to the commission of great evil: As I remember the history of some of the low Countries, they had such a pretence, that the Word was not to be their rule, but they were led by the impulse of the Spirit of God; and I remember in that history it is recorded, that many grievous wickednesses they did commit▪ they came to marry many wives, and one of the chief of them cuts off one of his wives heads. And another upon a time, he calls his kindred together, and he in the presence of them all takes away the life of one of his brethren, and said, now the will of the Lord is done: And what wickedness is it that men may not fall into by a strong impulse?

But so much for that.

I will give you but one hint more in that 21. v. •esus went into the coasts of Tyre and Sidon: You see from whence Christ came, which was from the parts of Judea: and the occasion of Christ's departure, because they rejected his Word. But where came Christ? He departed into the coast of Tyre and Sidon. A word or two of that, and so conclude; The coasts of Tyre and Sidon.

First, They were the uttermost parts of the land of Canaan.

Secondly, It was a very dark place, a place full of darkness and ignorance; a people that were mixed with the heathen, and had learned their sinful customs; and yet the Lord Christ when he goes from Jerusalem, he goes into the parts of Tyre and Sidon.

Briefly observe this: The faithfulness of Christ in his Fathers work, and the love of Christ to the souls of men: Tyre a hundred miles from Jerusalem, and yet Christ undertook this journey. Oh faithfulness of Christ in his Fathers work! he cares no labor, no travel from place to place, from City to City, to the uttermost parts of the land, and all was to do his Fathers work: Oh the faithfulness of Christ!

And take notice of the love of Christ to the souls of men; it was in compassion to a poor woman of Canaan that Christ took this journey, she known to the Lord before, and in compassion to do her soul good, and to release her daughter who was possessed with a Devil, Christ takes this journey. See the love of Christ to the souls of poor creatures. Christ knew the worth of a soul, the preciousness of a soul: what would it advantage a man to gain the whole world and loose his soul? Why in compassion to this woman's soul Christ takes this great journey.

And by way of Application: Oh that we might learn of Christ to be faithful in that work which the Lord hath committed to us; and to express more love to our own souls and the souls of others. What a great way did Christ go to do good to one soul? if there be but one woman $\langle \diamond \rangle$ Canaan, if but one woman of Samaria, for Christ to preach to, he takes that occasion. Whatever work the Lord puts into our hand, in the service $\langle \diamond \rangle$ our generation, and for compassion to souls, look $\langle \diamond \rangle$ Christ, he thought no labor too much to do go•• to the soul of one woman.

Secondly, This was a very dark place, the darkness of ignorance and sin did abound in the•• parts, in the coasts of Tyre and Sidon, and yet $\langle \diamond \rangle$ Christ goes from Jerusalem, he departs into the•• coasts. You see the Lord hath some in every place; no place so dark and sinful, but there $\langle \diamond \rangle$ be some that may belong to the Lord, and whe•• there are any that do belong to the Lord in $\langle \diamond \rangle$ part of the world, though never so dark, yet $\langle \diamond \rangle$ Lord will send from heaven and visit them; if $\langle \diamond \rangle$ one poor Canaanitish woman that belongs to th• Lord, Christ will take care of that woman; $\langle \diamond \rangle$ comes into these dark places, that so he mig•• make known the light of the Gospel, that this $\langle \diamond \rangle$ woman might believe, where there are any $\langle \diamond \rangle$ belong to the Lord, the Lord will find $\langle \diamond \rangle$ way to find them out, he will visit the• with the discoveries of his Grace and Love by the declaration of the Gospel of Christ.

And oh that we might observe the wonderful dispensations of the grace of the Gospel, that he should carry it into the dark corners, that Christ should leave Jerusalem and carry the Word of Grace into the dark places; that the Lord should make choice of most unlikely places, places most destitute of the Gospel; oh the wonderful dispensation of the Lord! nay, that the Lord should there make some poor creatures eminent in grace; this is another wonder, that the Lord should bring in some out of the dark corners, and make them most eminent in Grace, make them patterns of •aith, as this woman of Canaan was; here was faith in this woman that made the soul of Christ to wonder: Now what a wonderful dispensation is •his and discovery of the free Grace of God? That all is of God, nothing in man, nothing in the •eanes without his blessing, that he should make •ome to believe in the dark places, yea not only to •elieve, but with such an admirable faith as this woman; that he should make them that were at •he greatest distance to be most nigh, and the greatest sinners the excellentest Saints: Oh the •eeness of God's Grace in his dispensations!

This should teach us to put on bowels of mer•y towards sinners, towards them that are in the •ark places of the world. All Christians that are $\langle \diamond \rangle$ the world, that hath received the light of Christ, •hold be filled with compassion towards them •hat sit in darkness; if we dwell near Jerusalem, $\langle \diamond \rangle$ should pity them that dwell in the coasts of Tyre and Sidon; and if we can do nothing, pray that •he Lord would send forth laborers into his harvest, to send some into the coasts of Tyre and Sidon. Oh pray that the Lord would send forth laborers into his harvest, that there may be some• called out there that may be strong in faith, an excellent in holiness; nay, they that may be brough• in out of such places, they may go far beyond them that dwell nigh Jerusalem, out-strip them $\langle \diamond \rangle$ faith and holiness; seeing the Lord may have su•• a people in dark places, as he had here a preciou• soul, the woman of Canaan, let us pity them tha• are in darkness, and pray that the Lord would sen• forth his light to them.

Matth. 15. 22.

And behold, a woman of Canaan came out of the same coasts, and cried unto him, saying, have mercy on me, O Lord, thou son of David, my daughter is grievously vexed with a Devil.

SERMON II.

BEhold, a woman came out of the same coasts. The Evangelist Mark does take notice, that when Christ came into these coasts of Tyre and Sidon he entered into a private house, and would have hid himself there, Mark 7. 24, 25. And from thence he arose and went into the borders of Tyre and Sidon, and entered into an house, and would have no man know it; but he could not be hid: For this woman of Canaan comes and finds him out, and falls down and worships him.

So then we may observe this briefly:

That where there is a seed of faith in any soul, where the work of faith is begun, it will find out Christ where ever he is.

This woman had a seed of faith, she hears of Christ, and though Christ goes about to hide himself, he could not be hid. Wherever faith is begun in any soul, it will find out Christ, never rest till it find out Christ, it will come to him where ever he is: Christ cannot always be hid to the eye of faith; Where the body is, there will the Eagles be gathered together, saith Christ: The Eagles will find out the dead body, though it be never so remote, though it lay in a secret cave of the earth, and so where there is faith, the soul will find out Christ, Christ cannot always lie hid from the soul.

For the eye of faith it hath some resemblance like the eye of God: There is nothing can be hid from the eye of God, Psal. 139. 7, 8, 9. Neither shall I go from thy presence; if I go to heaven thou art there, and if I make my bed in hell thou art there, if I take the wings of the morning, and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea, thou art there. And so the eye of faith hath resemblance to the eye of God, though indeed the eye of faith cannot always see God, yet where there is faith the soul will be pursuing after God and Christ: My soul followeth hard after God, says David, Psal. 63. 8. David had faith, and his soul pressed after God, made hard after God: Faith will follow Christ where ever he is, if in heaven, faith will follow him there, if he go down to hell, even in dark dispensations, faith will follow him there, if he fly to the uttermost parts of the earth, and seem to be at a great distance, faith will follow him there: Christ cannot be hid always from the eye of Faith, it will follow him when he hides himself, as the Spouse in the Canticles, when Christ hid himself from her, yet she follows him, and seeks him at home and abroad, and leaves no place unsought, and she never gives over till she finds him, seeks till she finds, and at last she found him whom her soul loveth.

Nay, I may say, faith will see something of Christ where ever he is, not only follow after him, but see some glimpse of him where ever he is, though he go down into hell, the soul will see something of Christ in such a dark dispensation; in the hardest saying of Christ faith will find something of Christ, as the Lord calls this woman a dog, and yet she finds out something of Christ.

And therefore to apply this, briefly.

First, Brethren: O that we might take this woman for our pattern, to follow after Christ, and find him out, when he hides himself: You that walk in darkness and see no light, oh that you would look upon this woman, and make her your pattern: Christ hid himself from her; ah, but she finds him out, and Christ could not be hid: One would have thought it had been a bold part of this woman, when Christ retired himself into a private house, that she should find him out and press in upon him; ah, but the Lord did not reprove her for her boldness, it pleased Christ well enough. And oh that we might seek after Christ, and press in upon Christ, even then when Jesus Christ seems to hide himself that he might not be found!

And for your encouragement, does Christ seem to be hid from you as from this woman of Canaan? never leave till you find him, go where he is, wait upon him in an Ordinance, look to him in a promise, and press in upon him; and let me say for your encouragement, Jesus Christ doth not hide himself from you that you might never find him; no, the end of Christ's hiding himself is, that you might seek him, that you may seek him earnestly, diligently, as the Wise men did: Christ did not hide himself from this woman, with an intent she should not find him; no, if Christ had intended that, Christ would never have come into those coasts, and therefore his intent was not that she might not have found him, he might have gone into the wilderness, and gone where she might never have heard of him; no, that she might seek him, and exercise faith, and press in upon him. And oh that this might give encouragement to you poor souls, who are looking after Christ, who hath hid himself from you: O consider, that if Jesus Christ had intended so to hide himself as you should never find him, Christ would never have come upon your coasts, Christ would have gone some where else, he would never have come so nigh to you as he hath done, he would never have come so nigh to your souls, and never have drawn nigh to you in such a word of grace and promise; no, he hides himself that you might seek him, and not with an intent you might not find him.

Secondly, consider what an engagement this doth lay upon all our souls, this example of the woman of Canaan in finding out Christ, and pressing in upon Christ, when she had no invitation: Oh what an engagement is this for our souls to believe in Christ? What an engagement to come to Christ, to come in faith? seeing Jesus Christ doth not hide himself in a private house as he did then, no, Christ he draws nigh to us, and stands, as it were, upon the house top. Wisdom stands in the open street, and there she cries and makes proclamation, O ye fools, how long will you love folly? ye simple ones, how long will you love simplicity? So then if she came to Christ when Christ hid himself, what an engagement have we to come to Christ when Christ stands upon the house top? If she pressed in to Christ when she had no invitation, O what an engagement lies upon us in the day of grace to come to Christ? We have many a word of encouragement; He says, Look to me and be you saved: And he says, Behold me, to a nation that was not called by his name. O the gracious invitations that we hear from Christ from day today! Christ sets the door of Grace wide open; let him come, and whoever will let him come; and he doth engage, that whosoever comes shall not be shut out, shall not find the door of Grace shut against him; whoever comes to Christ by faith shall find that all their sins and iniquities shall not shut the door against them: And therefore, to conclude this, if this woman came when she had no invitation to come, O what an engagement is it for us to come to Christ, now Christ stands so as he may be seen afar off? O that God would persuade the heart of some poor sinner to come to Christ by faith! But to pass by this.

We shall now consider who this woman was, A woman of Canaan came.

First, Described first, by a woman; a woman is the weaker vessel, more weak ordinarily than men; stronger passions, greater fears, subject to doubts; and yet here is a woman▪ Behold, a woman came.

Secondly, She is described to be a Canaanite, a woman of Canaan, she was of the stock of the Canaanites, a cursed Nation, cast out of the Land for their abominations, and their Land given to Israel for a possession; and yet this woman, though a Canaanite, comes to Christ.

Thirdly, She being a Canaanite, it follows, that before the Lord revealed himself to her, she was a very sinful woman; so the rest of the Canaanites were, not only vile in respect of kindred, but vile in respect of actual transgression; and yet behold, this woman of Canaan here coming to Christ.

So then the Doctrine is this:

That the Lord many times is pleased to make choice of the most weak, and the most unworthy, and the most sinful, and causeth them to come to Jesus Christ. She was a woman, there is her weakness; a Canaanite, there is her unworthiness; sinful in respect of actual transgression, even as the rest of the Canaanites.

We shall clear this Point to you from the Word of God, and give you Instances that the Lord makes choice many times of the weakest and unworthiest, and win upon their hearts, and cause them to believe in Christ,

First of all for God's choosing those that are weak, and bringing home such to Christ, it will appear that God many times chooseth the weakest.

Weak in respect of

- Estate.
- Parts.
- Age.
- Sex.

To clear these, first, Such as are weak in estate, poor, such as are mean in estate, for the most part the Lord makes choice of such: Go and tell John (saith Christ, Matth. 11.) that which you have heard and seen, unto the poor is the Gospel preached, and the poor receive the Gospel: And in James 2. Hearken my beloved brethren, hath not God chosen the poor of this world to be rich in faith, and heirs of the Kingdom? Some rich, some of great estates are chosen; but for the most part the vein of God's election runs thorough the loins of those that are poor.

Secondly, Weak in parts: If you consider such as are weak in parts and gifts, that have no great natural parts and gifts, God many times, nay, for the most part makes choice of such, 1 Cor. 1. 26, 27. For you see your calling brethren, how that not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble are called; but God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise, and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the mighty.

Thirdly, If we consider those that are weak in respect of age; young men, the Lord many times makes choice of young men, bringing them in, and revealing more of himself to them then he doth to old men; youth is weak, young men are weak, though not in natural strength, yet in morral strength; for youth is accompanied with strong passions and lusts that weaken the mind and understanding; young men for the most part are most rash and inconsiderate. Arguments of weakness: Young Rehoboam, his young Counsel, what rash judgment did they give to their King, that cost him his life? And young men are most apt to be lifted up with pride, and therefore saith the Apostle, A Bishop must not be a novice: and yet many times, notwithstanding young men are accompanied with so many weaknesses, yet the Lord is pleased to make choice of them: There are many Instances of it, that the Lord hath made choice of young men, and brought in young men▪ He made choice of Samuel when he was very young, he ministered before the Lord; God spake to him, and gave out visions to him concerning Eli's house; when he was a child: And so if you look upon all the Kings of Judah, you shall find none more zealous for God then Josiah was; Josiah was brought home to God when he was a young man, 2 Chron. 34. In the eight year of his reign he made a great reformation; and then he was but sixteen years old, and yet he expressed more zeal for God then all the Kings.

And so among Job's friends God speaks best of Elihu the young man; and of all the Evangelis•s none like to Timothy, he was trained up, and had known the Scriptures from a child; Nay you shall find, that the very children did follow Christ when Christ came into the Temple, Matth. 21. 15. and cried Hosanna to the Son of David: the Scribes ••d Pharisees they were offended when they heard ••e children cry Hosanna to the son of David; he ••d perfect his praise out of the mouths of babes ••d sucklings, the children cried Hosanna to the •on of God; so that weak in respect of age the •o•d many times makes choice of.

Fourthly, Weak in respect of sex, and that is a •oman, she is called the weaker vessel, and yet he many times reveals himself to women, and unto women sooner then men. This woman of Canaan••the first that comes to Christ in all these coasts; we read of no man that came to Christ: and so •he woman of Samaria, John 4. she was the first of all that City that was converted to Christ; Christ first speaks to her, and draws her heart to •elieve on him, and then she runs to the City and calls all her friends. And so in Luke 8. 2. you •ead of divers women that followed Christ, there were divers weak women followed after Christ, •nd did minister to him. And so in the Acts of the Apostles, when the Apostles came to some Ci•ies, the women came first, and were more forward •hen men to hear the Gospel, Acts 16. 13, 14.

And on the Sabbath day we went out of the city by a rivers side, where prayer was wont to be made, and we sat down and spake unto the women which resorted thither? And a certain woman named Lydia, a seller of purple, of the city of Thyatira, which worshipped God, heard us; whose heart the Lord opened, &c. The women were the first that came to hear; and here is mention made of Lydia, whose heart the Lord opened, and she received the Word of God, and received Christ. And thus you see this particular also cleared, that the Lord many times makes choice of the weakest, and makes them to come to Christ.

But secondly, to speak to the second part of the doctrine, that the Lord doth not only make choice of the weakest, but of the most unworthy; and I shall speak only of unworthiness, in respect of parentage or kindred; this woman she came of the stock of the Canaanites, which were a wicked and cursed generation; you read divers times in Scripture what they were, and what great sinners, how they were a people that were given over to all whoredom, and witchcraft, and cruelty, such as did offer their sons and daughters to Devils, those were the abominations of the Canaanites; yet, behold, here is one of the stock of the Canaanites that lay under a curse, cursed Cain, they were strangers to God and the Covenant, and counted dogs by the Israelites, yet this woman is plucked out, and the Lord works faith in her heart.

But to give you some Instances in Scripture. The Lord pulls out Abraham from an idolatrous people, idolatrous kindred, and makes him to be excellent in faith, and the Father of the faithful. And so you read of Rahab, that was of the Nation that God destroyed, and by faith she was saved and her household. And so you read of Ruth, that was of the stock of Moab, yet the Lord makes choice of her, and brings her to be a Proselyte in Israel, and though she was one that came of Moab, yet she was made a Mother in Israel. So you see the second Particular.

Thirdly, to speak to the third branch of the Doctrine; That the Lord makes choice of those that were most sinful. This woman was not only a Canaanite, but was as sinful as the Canaanites, before the Lord brought her in to himself: The Lord makes choice of those that are most sinful. Manasseh, of all the Kings none like Manasseh, none like him for vileness and wickedness, he did worse then the Canaanites that were cast out of the Land before the children of Israel, yet the Lord makes choice of him, & Manasseh's heart at last was turned to the Lord. And so among all the persecutors of Christ and his Church, except those that sinned against the holy Ghost, none a greater persecutor then Paul, he did it with a great deal of violence and he says, he made the poor Christians to blaspheme the name of Christ; so violent was I, and so mad was I, that I persecuted them to strange cities, and hailed them to prison; and when they were judged to death I gave my consent, and my voice was among those that gave sentence of judgment for their death: And yet the Lord had mercy upon Paul, and he was brought at last to believe in Christ, and of a persecutor he was made a Preacher of the Gospel, and of the faith that once he destroyed. And so divers Instances I might give you of those that were most sinful, which the Lord brought home to Christ.

Yea such as lived in Christ's time, of all the people the Publicans and Harlots were the worst. None like to Zacchaeus a great oppressor, one that had done much wrong, and one that did bea• himself up upon his riches; he was a rich Robber, •ah but the Lord makes choice of Zacchaeus, Christ calls him, and he comes down, and then he turns his hand against his sin that was so dear to him, and makes restitution of the wrong he had done. And so among all the Harlots none worse then Mary Magdalene, who had seven Devils cast out of her, and yet the Lord makes choice of Mary Magdalene, she was brought in to Christ, and made most excellent among women. Thus you see the Lord many times doth make choice both of the weakest and of the unworthiest in respect of kindred and stock, and of the most sinfullest.

To shut up all briefly with a little Application.

First of all, here is an invitation that this Doctrine doth give to divers sorts to come to Christ▪ this Doctrine invites the weakest, and the unworthiest, and the sinfullest, to come to Christ.

Let me speak to the weakest: O you that are weak in estates, weak in parts, that you would persuade your hearts to come to Christ, know th• this weakness shall be no block in your way, Christ will as soon receive you as the strong. And le• me speak to those that are weak in respect of age▪ O that you would persuade your hearts to lo•• after Christ, to seek after Christ betimes, to see after faith in the name of the Son of God. Lo•• upon the example of young men, spoken of 〈◇〉 your imitation, Samuel the Prophet, and Josiah the King, Timothy the Evangelist. Oh that childre• young men, would look to those patterns and examples for their imitation, think upon the children that sung Hosanna; O that children and you•• men would read that place, the very children su•Hosanna to the son of David. Oh what swe•• music was it? What heavenly music to he•• young men and children to be praising the name of Christ? Children in tender years they sung Hosanna: and oh that this might be a pattern for children! Children fear the Lord, look after him in tender years, that while other children are blaspheming and cursing, you may be singing of praise to the Lord: O what heavenly music is it? The Lord Christ will take it well at your hand, if you that are young will begin in tender years to look after Christ, and lift up the name of Christ. Christ took the part of those children; the Pharisees were offended that the Children should cry Hosanna, but Christ he took it well, and he pleaded for them; this is that which is written, saith Christ, Out of the mouth of babes and sucklings wilt thou ordain praise: Christ will take it well at your hands if you that are children will be singing Hosanna to the Son of David; Christ will take it well at your hands, if you will be praising and praying to the Lord, though accompanied with a great deal of weakness, as it is like they sung Hosanna with a great deal of weakness, yet Christ takes it well at their hand, and saith, this is that which is written, Out of the mouth of babes and sucklings thou wilt ordain praise.

And let me speak to women, the weaker sex; the Lord, as you have heard, doth make choice of the weakest, and you have had the example of women set before you that the Lord hath done good to.

O remember the women that ministered to Christ; remember the women that followed the Apostles to the rivers side; remember Lydia, whose heart the Lord opened, and the woman of Samaria, and this woman of Canaan; and oh that this might be an encouragement to women! be not discouraged because of your weakness, and do not say, I know not how to come to Christ: Why the Lord makes choice of the weakest, and they are brought home sooner then the strong: And O that it might be an encouragement for you to come to Christ! And let me say to all women that hear me this day, The woman was first in the transgression; O that that might provoke women to look after Christ; the woman was the first that sinned, and the woman was the first that was deceived; and therefore oh that women would be the first in coming to Christ!

And let me tell you, that if there be any women that hear me this day, and hear the Word of the Lord, and shall despise it, and will not come to Christ, but stay at home and dwell in themselves, in their lusts, take heed that the Lord do not leave you for the refusal of the tender of Christ to be worse then the vilest of men. Wicked women the Lord hath left them many times to be worse then the worst of men. You know what Jezebel was, a mother of witchcraft and whoredom; Ahab was bad enough, but she was $\langle \diamond \rangle$ times worse, drew him on to shed all the blood of the innocent: And you know that Herodias heard John as well as Herod, but she received not the Word, and Herodias was worse then Herod; wh^o would have thought that there had been so much cruelty in her heart towards John a good man And therefore women take heed how you de^spise the word of Grace, least the Lord lea^ve you to greater abominations, and you become^e worse then the vilest of men.

And let me speak also unto those that are unworthy in respect of parentage. If there be any here that with a sad heart look upon their kindred and fathers house, as being such as know not God, but are contrary to God; O let not that be any block in your way, you may be accepted of Christ, though you come of the vilest kindred, your kindred cannot be worse then the kindred of the woman of Canaan was, they were cast out of the Land, a cursed Generation; and therefore all the sins of your parents shall not be any block in your way, the child shall not bear the sin of the parents, if the child be coming to Christ, and taking hold of his Covenant, all the sins of your parents shall not be any block in your way, but you shall be welcome to Christ.

And so for those that are sensible of personal transgression; O let not that be any block in your way to hinder you from coming to Christ! though you have sinned greatly with a high hand, yet do not go on to estrange yourselves from the Lord, by keeping at a distance from Christ, and by adding unbelief to all your sin, which will set home all your sin, and bind them all upon your back: O that those that have committed great offenses might see what a door the Gospel to Christ opens to them to come in to Christ!

And let me say for your encouragement, that the Grace of the Lord shall appear the more towards you: the more sinful you are, the more rich, and glorious, and excellent shall the Grace of the Lord appear to you; and know that Grace is never more glorious, then when it triumphs over great iniquities, when Grace doth triumph over great transgressions: O then the Grace of God is glorious; grace towards you shall be exceeding glorious.

And it shall be for the Lord's honor to receive you, to pass by and to forgive seventy times seven. It is the honor of a man, a man's glory; why it is the glory of the great God to forgive many and great transgressions, and there shall be the more joy in heaven for your return; the greater sinners you have been, the more glad shall the heart of Christ be: When the Prodigal son came home, what joy was there at his return?

And let me say to you, that all your transgressions shall not be mentioned, though he or she hath been never so vile, yet if the Lord doth give any sinner a heart to come to Christ, the Word of the Lord shall be made good; That all their sins shall not be mentioned, Ezek. 18. 21, 22. If the wicked forsake his way all his transgressions shall not be mentioned: Oh that this might encourage unworthy ones to look to Christ!

And truly if unworthy ones shall not be persuaded by this to come to Christ, know that this example of the woman of Canaan will rise up in judgment against you; she was as unworthy and sinful as you; and oh what a cutting thing will it be when sinners shall see Manasseh, and Paul, and Mary Magdalene, and the woman of Samaria, and this woman of Canaan, to sit down with Christ, and they themselves shut out? O that God would help you to embrace the Gospel! and know, that all unworthiness and sinfulness shall be no block in your way, if the Lord now persuade your heart to make a close with Christ.

And to draw to a conclusion, let us labor to help forward God's design: Doth God make choice of such? O then we should help forward God's work, especially where any stand related to us; weakness shall not hinder, they may come to Christ; and therefore be in the use of the means, pray for them, and speak to them, and improve every talent that God hath given you, even for the weakest and unworthiest.

And again, take heed that we do not murmur against any of the dispensations of the Lord; take heed we do not envy this dispensation, and that our hearts do not rise up against it; that we do not murmur when we see such and such profess the name of Christ, and they are very forward, and such as were young children, and such poor weak women; Now what a high profession do they make? The Pharisees they were offended when as the rude people (as they called them that knew not the Law) they followed after Christ. Oh this made the Gospel and Christ a stumbling block to them! And so when as the children did confess Christ, and sung Hosanna to the son of David, the Pharisees were offended, it troubled them at the heart that the children should cry out so, it was a trouble to them. Take heed that we be not offended when the Lord makes choice of young ones, and they are too forward as some think; why this is no more then what the Lord hath promised, to pour out his Spirit upon young men, take heed we be not offended at it; we should rather rejoice in it, when you see young ones, weak ones, and sinful ones come in to Christ, and are high in profession, oh you should rejoice in it.

And let your souls wonder at this dispensation, do not envy it, but do you wonder at it. The Evangelist Matthew he placeth a note of wonder, behold, a woman of Canaan, it was a wonder, and we should stand and wonder at God's secret dispensation: O here is the mystery of the Gospel, that weak ones and sinful ones are brought in to Christ.

And rejoice in it as Christ did, and bless the Lord for it, though they have more then we have, yet do not envy it, but know that this pleaseth the Lord, and the Lord will so have it; I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, for so it seemeth good in thy sight. Christ's soul was taken with it. O here is a wonder indeed, for which God is to be blessed and praised: And so if God be your Father, when you see this, do not envy it, but rejoice in it as Christ did; though I have little, I thank thee that thou art pleased to give out so much of thyself to such and such, that weak ones and unworthy ones are brought in to Christ.

And last of all: You that are weak in respect of parts and gifts; and poor, and unworthy, and weak, in respect of sex, or of vile parentage, and yet the Lord hath plucked you out; and vile and great sinners, and yet the Lord hath brought you home to himself; O bless the Lord for this his dispensation toward you. If the Evangelist look upon the woman and say, Behold, the woman of Canaan, O look upon yourselves with admiration, Behold the Grace of God which is revealed to you though poor wretches. O know that you are engaged to the Lord for this mercy, that God should choose you, the weakest, the unworthiest, and the sinfullest.

And do you labor to walk worthy of this mercy. Oh if the Lord hath chosen you that were the sinfullest, O labor to bring much honor unto God, as you have brought much dishonor, and to hold forth the contrary graces to those great transgressions.

And if the Lord hath brought you in that are weak ones, women; is there ever a weak woman that the Lord hath made choice of? O admire with fear this dispensation of God, and bless him for his Grace to you, and labor to adorn the Doctrine of God and your Savior with a gracious conversation, and study the Graces the Apostle Peter commends to you, that you should be much in the exercise of faith, and adorn themselves with a meek and quiet spirit. O this meek and quiet spirit, this sober and this modest conversation and obedience to Husbands, these Graces Christ by the Apostle doth commend to you, and you are engaged to do all this and more for Christ, because he hath had respect to the weakest.

Matth. 15. 22.

And cried unto him, saying, have mercy on me, O Lord, thou son of David.

SERMON III.

YOU have seen the woman, and now you shall hear her speak: She cried unto him, saying, Have mercy on me, O Lord, thou son of David.

Observe, here is a declaration of her faith, and that we shall first take notice of; her faith is declared by a notable confession that she makes of Christ.

Her confession: O Lord, thou son of David; it is short, but a great deal is in it.

First of all, she doth acknowledge him to be Lord, Lord of all, to be infinite in power, the Lord of Heaven and Earth, one that was able to do whatsoever he pleaseth, one that was able to cast out the Devil by speaking one word; for she comes in the behalf of her Daughter and closeth with Christ as Lord; where she doth acknowledge his divinity, that he was Lord over all, God blessed forever, and had power in his hand, and ability to do whatsoever he pleased. That is the first part of her confession, she confessed that Christ was Lord.

Secondly, She confesses that he was the son of David, O Lord, thou son of David, and therein she doth acknowledge his Humanity; as she acknowledged that he was Lord, so she acknowledged that he was true man.

2. She doth acknowledge that he was the promised Messias, that is comprehended in that title, Thou son of David: She doth acknowledge that he was that Messias that was promised should arise out of the House of David, that should come of the seed of David, the promised Messias that was promised to be the deliverer of his people; so she doth acknowledge, for she calls him the son of David, he that was promised should come of the house of David, whom God had promised to raise up to be a horn of salvation. So you see her confession; she confesses his Divinity, comes to him as God; confesses his Humanity, comes to him as Man, and she comes to him as the Messias, one that was appointed of God to be a Savior, and one of the house of David. Here is as full and as large a confession as any of the Disciples make of Christ.

Quest. But it may be queried, Why she calls him the son of David? she might have expressed him to have been true man, and called him the son of Adam, why not the son of Adam? or the son of Abraham? why does she call him the son of David?

Answ. I answer in general: Christ was expected by that name among the Jews, for so he was promised and prophesied of, that he should be the son of David.

But again, he is called the son of David, because the promise was in a special manner unto David, in a gracious way, God did confirm the promise of the Messias unto David: Notwithstanding David's imperfection, and the sin that was in David, yet the promise of the Messias was to David and his house, though his house was not so with God, yet God confirmed the Covenant with David, that Covenant which was made with Abraham, God confirmed it in a remarkable way unto David; notwithstanding his unworthiness, yet the Messias should spring out of his loins; and therefore in respect of that gracious Promise he was called the son of David.

Secondly, This woman gives him the title of the son of David, because it is the most honorable title; where there is true faith it will put all the honor it can upon Christ. David was an honorable King in Israel: David was the first godly King that ever God set over his own people; so he was honorable, being the first godly King that reigned over the people; and therefore became David was most honorable among the Kings, the first godly King, therefore this woman put honor upon Christ, calls him the son of David.

Thirdly, David was a very remarkable type of Christ, and as he was known by David, so Christ was known by this name, and called by this name; Christ he was very like in many things to David; as Christ came of the seed of David, so in many things Jesus Christ was like to David, and David's Kingdom it was a type of Christ's Kingdom; and therefore it is said of Christ, Luke

1. That God should give him the throne of David his father. But in these particulars I shall instance to you that David was a type of Christ, and Christ like to David.

First, In those manifold victories and conquests that David obtained over his enemies and the enemies of God; why David was a very victorious Prince, he subdued the enemies of Israel; in David's time, many of the Lord's battles were fought by David, and David returned a Conqueror, he smote the great Goliath that defied the Armies of the God of Israel, David went forth and smote him, and he fell, and in those remarkable victories David obtained over the enemies of the Church, he was a type of Christ, and therefore Christ is called, the son of David.

Secondly, And then again, David was a type of Christ, in that he brought back again the Ark of God that was taken captive by the Philistines; David restored the Ark and brought it back again; so Christ restored the Ordinances, and will restore them to their perfect purity, even all the vessels of the Lord's House that hath been taken captive by the Philistines, Christ will restore them, they shall all be brought again into their own place, and restored to their first purity, Christ will fulfill it, there is a promise of it, and he will fulfil it; in this David was a type of Christ.

Thirdly, David was a type of Christ in that he waited long for the Kingdom, after the Promise was given to him, yea, after the Lord by Samuel had anointed David to be King over Israel, after he was anointed he was driven out, and he waited long for the fulfilling of the Promise, a type of Christ in that; and so it is with David's Son, the Lord Jesus, though anointed, though the Spirit was poured out upon him without measure, though anointed to be King, yet we see not all his enemies put under his feet; there is a promise that it shall be so, but we see it not, yet he waits for it; and therefore he compares himself to a man that went into a far country to receive a kingdom for himself; and so Christ is in Heaven, he sits and waits for it, till the time come that his Father shall give him the kingdom, and he is to rule over all, his enemies to be made his footstool.

Nay fourthly, David was a type of Christ in respect of his enemies. David's enemies were many, and great, mighty, and potent, and so are the enemies of Jesus Christ: Saul and all his forces rose up against David; and David he had many enemies in his own house afterwards, and they that did eat bread with him at his table; and his enemies were a type of Christ's enemies; Saul and all his forces against David, the Devil, and all his Angels, and wicked men against Christ. Christ's enemies they were such as were his near companions, one that dipt his hand in the dish with him he betrayed him: And thus you see David was a type of Christ, his Kingdom a type of Christ's Kingdom.

Fifthly, to add no more but this; David's Kingdom you know was very small at first, but it grew great; when David came first to the Kingdom there were but few that took his part; ah, but after there had been war for a while betwixt the house of David and the house of Saul, God ordered it so, that first one of the house of Saul fell off, and then another, and the house of Saul waxed weaker and weaker, and David's house stronger and stronger: So the Kingdom of Christ, his Kingdom was a little Kingdom, the servants that owned him and his cause, they are but a very inconsiderable party at first, a little stone cut out of the mountain without hands, a type and shadow of Christ's Kingdom, but that stone it waxed bigger and bigger, and became a mountain that filled the whole earth.

You see why Christ, both here by this woman, and also in divers other places, is so frequently called the son of David.

I come now to the observation, from the confession which this woman held forth, which is this:

That true faith it comes unto Christ, both as he is Lord, and as he is the son of David; it lays this foundation, and where this confession is not made, there is no true saving faith; true faith it closeth with Christ as he is Lord, and as he is the son of David.

First, I shall show you how true faith comes to Christ, and looks upon Christ, and closeth with Christ as he is Lord; O Lord have mercy on me. This woman here she make the same confession that Peter doth, Matth. 16. 16. and Peter said, Thou art Christ, the Son of the living God: Here is the same confession that the Woman makes the Text, she confesses that he was the Son of $\langle \diamond \rangle$ living God, that he was Christ, that he was anointed as he was man to be the Lord and Saviour. True faith confesseth Christ as he is Lord, and he is the son of David.

I shall show you how true faith closeth with Christ $\langle \diamond \rangle$ as Lord.

It holds forth thus much to us, to confess Christ to be Lord, or to come to Christ Lord.

First of all; that faith doth confess and acknowledge Christ to be eternal God: This woman $\langle \diamond \rangle$ confessing him to be Lord, and so every such confession, doth acknowledge Christ to be eternal God, to have the same being with his Father, that he is Lord, and was Lord from eternity; before there was any world made, yet Jesus Christ $\langle \diamond \rangle$ then Lord, he was the eternal God; see what the Scripture doth hold forth of him, Prov. 8. 2. I was set up from everlasting, from the beginning it is spoken of Christ, it is said of him, that he $\langle \diamond \rangle$ from everlasting, in the beginning, before there $\langle \diamond \rangle$ a world, before any sea, before any earth, before any mountains, Christ was from everlasting; and thus true faith doth acknowledge that he is eternal God.

Secondly, When true faith doth confess Christ to be Lord, it doth not only acknowledge him to $\langle \diamond \rangle$ eternal, but omnipotent, to be Almighty, infinite $\langle \diamond \rangle$ power; if he be Lord of all, then he is infinite $\langle \diamond \rangle$ power, he can do whatsoever he pleaseth; that he can do whatsoever the Father doth, Christ witness of himself, The same works the Father doth, do I $\langle \diamond \rangle$ which doth declare him to be the same God, the same being with his Father, for he had the same power. True faith doth acknowledge, that all the mighty works of Creation and Providence, and that the world was made by him, and upheld by him, and governed by him; according to that place, Heb. 1. 10. And thou Lord in the beginning hast laid the foundations of the earth, and the heavens are the works of thy hands. So that faith that doth confess Christ to be Lord, doth acknowledge him to be infinite in power, and that he by his fingers made the heavens, and by his hands laid the foundation of the earth.

Thirdly, That faith that doth acknowledge Christ to be Lord, doth confess that he is infinite in knowledge, and that he is omnipresent, everywhere; as God he is in all places, though as man he sits in heaven, yet as God he is everywhere, according to that Scripture, the Son of God hath eyes like a flame of fire, he sees all things, a flame of fire discovers all things in the room, so the Son of God he knows all the corners of the heart, and sees all things, and needs not that any should testify of man; and that Christ according to his divine nature fills heaven and earth, and with his gracious presence is with his people always, Loe I am with you to the end of the world.

Fourthly, That faith that confesseth Christ to be Lord, doth confess that he is the object of faith, and of divine worship, and that he is worthy to be believed on, and worthy to be worshipped, and worthy to be praised, worthy that all the redeemed of the Lord should sing unto him; that he is worthy of all divine honor, the same honor that is due to the Father, the Scripture doth witness as much, and therefore the very Angels are called upon to worship him, Heb. 1. 6. When he bringeth in the first begotten into the world, he saith, and let all the Angels of God worship him. Now if Christ had not been eternal God, it had been idolatry to have given divine worship to him; but you see what that faith doth that acknowledges Christ to be Lord, it doth acknowledge him to be eternal God, and acknowledge him to be infinite in power, and in knowledge, and that he is present in all places, and the object of divine honor.

Secondly, Now let me show you in the second place, that it is necessary that every man and woman that doth expect help and salvation by Christ, should come to him as the Lord: Faith should pitch upon him as omnipotent and omniscient: I say, it is necessary that they should thus come to him that believe, for else the foundation of our faith is overthrown: There is no man that doth deny this, can lay a right foundation of faith: no man that doth not believe this, that he is Lord, eternal God, can lay a right foundation, he doth not lay that foundation which God hath laid; the foundation which God hath laid is his Son, the eternal God, he with whom he entered into Covenant, and made a Covenant with from eternity and therefore if there be any other foundation, the foundation will not hold.

And indeed Christ cannot be a foundation to bear up faith, if he be not eternal God, and Lord equal with his Father, he were not fit to be trusted: And cursed is he that trusts in man and make flesh his arm: And if Christ had not been eternal God, he could not be a fit foundation, and it is necessary that every soul that comes to Christ should believe in him as Lord, in respect of that divine worship that is to be given to Christ, else he cannot worship Christ aright, nor give Christ that honor that is due to him, and so all his worship is lost.

Thirdly, It is needful in respect of the benefits of Christ's satisfaction, that men that come to Christ must believe that he is eternal God, and one with the Father, or else he cannot expect the benefit of Christ's satisfaction; for if Christ were not infinite God, he could not have given satisfaction to infinite Justice; if Christ were not God, our sins are not purged away, the righteousness of Christ is not infinite, then no covering for our transgressions, no price then of an infinite value for the saving souls; no virtue in his blood for the taking away of sin; therefore they that do blasphemously deny Christ to be eternal God, they must deny the satisfaction of Christ, and then all men are in their sins, and so like to be lost forever.

Fourthly, True faith must come to Christ as Lord, or else we cannot have any assurance that he can perfect the work of our salvation: The work of our salvation it is put into Christ's hand, but if he be not eternal God, there is little hope that he should perfect the work of his people's salvation, it is not possible he should overcome all the enemies of his people's salvation. Therefore you see that it is necessary, that when any soul comes to Christ, it should come to him as Lord; so this woman did look upon him, and close with him, as Lord over all, as he is eternal God, having the same power and knowledge with his Father, to whom he due the same divine honor, and who is the object of faith.

And therefore I beseech you, Brethren, look to it, that your faith be rightly grounded; if it be not, it will never hold, if it be not grounded upon this foundation, upon Christ as he is Lord, the same eternal God with the Father, if this be not the foundation of faith, it will not hold; you can never make a right confession of Christ, and you will never make such a confession as he will own, if he do not come to close with him as he is Lord over all, infinite and equal with his Father: The Devil hath exceedingly endeavored to overturn this foundation of faith, and through the righteous judgment of God hath prevailed exceedingly abroad in the world; he made use of the Jews of old, and the Socinians of late, who overturned this foundation of faith, though they acknowledged Christ to be higher than man, and greater than Angels, yet they will not acknowledge him equal with his Father, and to have been from eternity; many cavils there are which are made against this truth of the Gospel.

Object. They object, that Jesus Christ says of himself, That his Father is greater than he, and therefore by Christ's own confession, say they, he is not equal with the Father.

Answ. But for answer: You must know that Christ speaks that as he was Mediator, as he was God man; so indeed he put himself under himself as Mediator, as the Savior of his people in respect of his eternal Godhead, he was equal with his Father, and his Father was not greater than he, For he thought it no robbery to be equal with the Father.

Object. And so they object, That Christ was sent, he was his Father's Messenger, his righteous Servant, and my Father sent me, and I came not to do my own will, but the will of my Father.

Answ. Why; Christ having put himself under in respect of the work of Mediator, so he was under; but as eternal Son, so he was always equal with the Father.

Object. And whereas they cavil; it is said at last, Christ shall give up the Kingdom to the Father: there is a time coming that God he shall be the greater, and be all in all: Hence they cavil, that Christ is inferior to his Father, and shall be put under at last, and God shall be all in all.

Answ. But that Scripture speaks only in respect of Christ's dispensatory Kingdom, not in respect of his natural Kingdom, which he had from eternity, being equal with his Father, but in respect of this present dispensation in which Christ rules his Church, and by such a way and means, Christ shall give up the Kingdom to his Father, but then he shall reign with the Father, though not as Mediator, that Kingdom ceaseth; yet he shall reign with his Father.

Quest. But you will say, is this enough for a man to believe that Christ is Lord, and God, equal with the Father? will this faith make a man blessed? if he believe this shall he be saved? Does not the Devil make a confession that Christ is the living God?

Answ. Ah, but where the Lord by his Spirit doth make an inward discovery of this to the soul the Spirit of Christ shining upon the soul, and drawing the heart to close with Christ, I answer, that this faith is the faith of God's Elect. It is true, there may be a notional knowledge of this, in this day of the Gospel, men they do generally confess that Christ is the Son of God: Ah, where it is only notional, and when the heart is not drawn by this knowledge to rest upon him who is mighty to save, this bare historical knowledge will prove ineffectual; but when the Lord doth draw the heart to rest upon Christ revealed in the Gospel, this is true faith.

Secondly, The second thing propounded 〈◇〉 That true faith doth come to Christ as he is the son of David; O Lord, thou son of David,

It holds forth two things.

First, She closeth with the humanity 〈◇〉 Christ.

Secondly, She closeth with Christ in his offices, and looks to him as he is appointed by God to be the Mediator.

Here are these two things in this confession [that he is the son of David] and true faith 〈◇〉 must eye both these: If faith be rightly grounded, it must come to Christ as he is the son of David.

First of all, It confesses that Christ is man 〈◇〉 well as God, it closeth with the humanity as 〈◇〉 as the divinity of Christ, he is God and man in 〈◇〉 person; believes that he is true man, that he 〈◇〉 and that he is true man; without this there 〈◇〉 be no true faith; it comes to him as to one 〈◇〉 took our nature, and died in our nature, and rose again in our nature, and ascended in our nature, and sits in heaven with our nature; True faith must come thus to Christ, or else it will not be found to be true faith: True faith closeth with the humanity of Christ, believes that God took the nature of man into union with the second Person, and so God and man made one Person; it doth not look upon Christ as taking up a body for a time, such a notion many men have in the world, to conceive that Christ did assume a body, even as he did of old, when as he did appear to the Patriarchs; Abraham and Lot; the Angel of the Covenant, as well as other Angels, did assume a body, and so dissolved it again: Now, say they, as Christ did assume a body for a time, and appear in that, and then afterward dissolve it, now Christ is no more in the body, but he is now in the Spirit. This is a gross mistake, a dangerous error, that overthrows the foundation: If Christ did assume a body, then he was not man; but the Scripture saith, He took our nature, he took not the nature of Angels, but he took the nature of man; to take up a body is not to take up the nature of man, but he took our nature, a soul and body together, human soul and body that is the nature of man; he took a body into union with the second Person, for so it was not only a body that Christ took up, but a soul too, My soul is heavy to death, and the soul of Christ was made an offering for sin. So that remember this, how true faith must look upon Christ; first as Lord, and secondly as Man, as one that took our nature, soul and body, into union with himself.

Secondly, I shall show you, that there is a necessity, that every man and woman that expect salvation by Christ, should believe that he took our nature upon him, and then that he died in our nature, and rose in our nature, and sits now in heaven in our nature, it is necessary to be believed to salvation; for

First of all; if this be not believed, you cannot have any assurance that any man or woman shall have the benefit of Christ's satisfaction: Suppose that some confess, that he is eternal God, and did give satisfaction as he was eternal God, ye that body that he took up for a time, if he took not the nature of man, could not satisfy for the sin of man, for justice must be satisfied in the same nature.

Now if Christ did not really take our nature, and suffer in our nature, there is no satisfaction▪ and we can have no benefit thereby, for satisfaction must be done in the same nature it offended.

Secondly, It is necessary that you should believe that Jesus Christ rose again in the same nature; for your justification depends upon it, for if the same person that suffered were not restored, the same that was cast into prison, were not delivered in a legal way, then there was no Justification▪ Now our Justification doth depend upon this; when Christ was delivered out of prison, then did God absolve him, and when Christ rose again, then did Christ virtually justify all his elect; if the same body did not rise again, there is no justification, no man hath any assurance, that he shall be justified: Therefore see how necessary it is, that you hold fast this truth, that as the Lord Jesus took our nature, so he retains our nature.

Yea it is necessary, that you believe Christ retains our nature now in heaven; for if you do not, why then he hath not perfected his office as High Priest, he hath done but part of his work, and so his people be but imperfectly saved: The high Priest he first killed the sacrifice, and the same person that offered sacrifice went into the holy place, to make intercession, and to present the blood of sprinkling: Now if Christ did offer sacrifice, and did not ascend in the same nature in which he offered the sacrifice, he did not perfectly fulfill his work as high Priest.

And know this, that if Christ be not in heaven in our nature, there is no coming for us, there is no way for our coming to God, no way for our converse with God, for it is not possible that creatures in this state should have immediate communion with God, without a middle person, a Mediator: Now if Christ be not in heaven in our nature, and so we might go to God in and by him, there is no way of coming to God, and no way of having communion with God.

Thirdly and lastly, to speak a word to the next particular.

There are two things in that confession, that Christ is the son of David.

First, To close with his humility, and that is an encouragement to come to Christ: So

Secondly, She looks to his office, and closes with his office; when she says, he is the son of David, she acknowledges, that

First of all, that he is the Messias designed and appointed by God the Father, for this work of saving his people: O Lord, thou son of David, thou art he that art designed, and appointed, and set a part by God, as David was, to be a Priest, and to be a Prophet; and thus faith must look upon Christ, him that the Father hath sealed and appointed to be a Mediator, or else he can never close with Christ.

And then she does not only look upon him as one that is appointed by God the Father, and designed of God.

Secondly, But as one that was fitted for this work, he was appointed by the Father to save his people, and as he was appointed, so he was fitted every way for this work; for surely there was something which she heard, and we may read in the son of David, which was an encouragement to her to come to Christ, and to believe in Christ: As

First of all; this is held forth when he is called the son of David, that he is mighty and strong; a mighty Prince, a mighty Savior, able to save the uttermost, that he is even like to David, whom the Lord gave a great deal of strength and courage, he pursued after the Lion and after the Bear, and pulled the Sheep out of the Lions mouth; she eyed the strength of David; if David do so great things, Jesus Christ the son of David he can do greater things, he can slay the Lion, and kill the Bear, and smite the Goliath the Devil, and his instruments.

And then in that name of Christ [thou son of David] there was this that might encourage her, the mercy and compassion of Jesus Christ, she expressed it herself, David was a merciful man, full of compassion towards his enemies, full of patience, full of longsuffering; he spared Shimei when he cursed him; and how did he carry himself towards Saul, when God put him into his hand, and when his servants would have had him taken away his life? God forbid, (saith he) so Christ is full of compassion, surely she saw a great deal of the compassion of Christ. David a merciful man, and so is Jesus Christ.

And then she might see, and so may we, the meekness of Christ, not only mercy, but abundance of meekness in Christ: David was a great Prince, and yet David's heart was not lift up with his condition, though his condition was lift up, yet his heart was not lift up, no, he carried it very lowly and meekly with his people, he dealt with them as gently as a tender shepherd, 1 Chron. 28. 2. Then David the King stood up upon his feet, and said, hear me my brethren, and my people. Now surely this woman could not but see the meekness that was in Christ, David was well known to be a merciful and meek Prince, and if so much meekness in David, O then what meekness in the son of David? Surely he deals gently with his people, this was her encouragement.

First, Now therefore to shut up all, Brethren, let us take notice, how little true faith there is in the world; if true faith comes thus to Christ, as Lord, and as the son of David, looks to the divinity and humanity of Christ, and closeth with both, looks to the offices of Christ, and as one that is appointed of God, and fitted for this work; if this be required to true faith, O how little true faith is in the world? How many are there that do confess Christ to be true Man? Ah, but they deny him to be true God, deny him to be the same Essence with the Father, and Substance with the Father, the same Power with the Father.

Nay truly, such a confession of Christ, it is below the confession of the Devil, whatever such men may pretend to have the name of Christians, it is below the confession of Devils, and will leave men as low as the Devils; the Devils confess Christ to be the Son of God, and therefore where that is denied, such men go not so far as the Devils.

Secondly, Others that say, he is true God, but either deny that he took our nature, or that he doth retain our nature: Now how contrary is that to the Scripture? And how destructive is it to the faith of God's people, and all the comforts of God's people? There is no hope of justification, if Christ be not risen, and no hope of coming to Heaven, if Christ be not there in our nature; and no possibility for poor creatures to go to God; if the Mediator be not now in Heaven, there is no coming there: The Apostle speaking of Christ, 1 Tim. 2. 5. For there is one God, and one Mediator, between God and men, the man Christ Jesus: There is one Mediator, he does not say, there was one Mediator that laid down his life, but there is one Mediator, the man Christ Jesus: He does not say, that was the man, but the man Christ Jesus is now the Mediator; and therefore such as do either deny that Christ did take our nature, or that he doth retain our nature, and rose in our nature, and ascended in our nature, doth mightily help forward the design of the Devil; he always had a design to overthrow this foundation of faith, and such men are the Devils chief Instruments, he knows, that if Christ did not rise in that body again, if he can take away that, he knows that all preaching is in vain, and faith is in vain, and therefore the Pharisees, when put on by the Devil, they gave the Soldiers money to say, that his Disciples stole him away: Surely the Devil he knew that doctrine was of great concernment, and therefore they were put upon to say, his Disciples stole him away; and such men as deny Christ's Resurrection, they take the Devils hire, and their faith will be but the faith of the Sadducees, and will leave them short of life.

Thirdly, And in the third and last place: How may are there that many confess both these? that may confess. Christ is God, that he is Lord, and that he is Man, true man, and yet not look unto Christ, as he is fit every way for that work, as fitted with strength, and meekness, and mercy, for that great work of perfecting his people's salvation?

As you desire to have faith that is of the right stamp; would you have it rightly grounded, and have it laid upon such a foundation as God hath laid, and on such a foundation as will hold? O then look to this woman's confession; look up to the Lord to make such a discovery of Christ to your souls, that Christ may be discovered to you as Lord, and that you may close with him as man; God in our nature, satisfied in our nature, and making intercession in our nature; and look upon him as one appointed by God the Father; for therein lay a great deal of a Christians comfort, when the soul comes to eye this Mediator as one appointed by God, and one fitted every way for it, full of mercy, and full of power; if the Lord shall make such a discovery of Christ to your souls, so as to cause you to lean your souls upon him for life and salvation, this will be found to be faith rightly built, this is the faith of God's Elect.

Matth. 15. 22.

And cried unto him, saying, have mercy on me, &c.

SERMON IV.

First, This woman's faith is declared by the fruits of it, and the first fruit of her faith, it was the applying of herself unto Christ in a way of prayer: She comes to Christ, and she prays unto him, and her prayer is set forth by the fervency of it, for she did not only entreat, but she cries unto him, her prayer was no cold prayer, but she put up fervent supplications, and strong cries.

Secondly, Her prayer is set forth by the Argument she useth in her pleading with Christ for that mercy, the cure of her Daughter, and the Argument she useth is taken only from his free Grace, and that she pleads, Have mercy on me, O Lord, thou son of David: She doth not present any worthiness of her own, but she takes hold of mercy.

So that the truth that I shall commend to yo• is this:

That where ever there is true faith, it will ma• the soul to cry unto Christ, and to plead merc• and free grace in the greatest affliction. He affliction was wonderful great, My daughter is grievously vexed with a devil: She come to Christ, and cries, and takes hold of hi• mercy.

I had thought that I might handle the whole Point, but I shall not be able to go thorough it ⟨◇⟩ once, and therefore shall divide it into three Propositions.

The first is this, That faith will make ⟨◇⟩ soul to come to Christ in a way of prayer, and appli itself to Christ alone in the greatest affliction.

Secondly, The greater the afflictions of ⟨◇⟩ faithful are, the stronger are their cries ⟨◇⟩ Christ.

Thirdly, When a gracious heart cries unto Christ▪ it pleads nothing but mercy; renounces all his ow• worthiness, and takes hold only of mercy and ⟨◇⟩ grace.

I shall speak to the first at this time: That faith will make a soul come to Christ, and cry to Christ▪ pour out his complaints before Christ, when it is ⟨◇⟩ the greatest distress, and under the forest affliction and burden. This woman she applies herself ⟨◇⟩ unto Christ, cries only unto him; she doth ⟨◇⟩ go to the Idol-gods of her own Nation, she se• not unto them, nor trusts in them, though the people were an idolatrous people, and had many gods that▪ they sought after; but she leaves them all, whatever others do, and she goes to Christ, seeks not to the gods of the Nation, but applies herself to Christ.

Secondly, When she comes where Christ is, she cries only to him, she doth not cry to man, she doth not pour out her complaints to man, no, not to the best of men, she doth not cry to the Disciples, she doth not cry to Peter, James, or John, but she pours out her cries to the Lord;

O Lord, thou son of David. Faith makes her in her distress to look to the Lord alone; applies herself only to Christ in a way of prayer: This is the counsel that Eliphaz gives to Job, chap. 5. v. 8. says he, If I were in thy condition I would go to God, I would apply myself to God, I would seek to God, and commit my cause to him; I would not seek to creatures, I would not make my complaint to the creature, because they cannot pity me, nor help me, no, it is lost labor, I would go to God, and seek to God, and I would not keep my burden myself, I would not bear my burden upon my own shoulder, and stand groaning under my burden; 〈◇〉, I would go to God, and commit my cause to him; it is good counsel that he gave Job, and O that we might be enabled to follow it!

And for the confirmation of the Point, you shall find many Instances in Scripture, of the saints applying themselves to God alone in the time of their distress; I might hold forth very many, but I shall only give you one or two: Look upon David as he expresses himself, Psal. 14. 1.

〈◇〉 so on: I cried to the Lord with my voice, to 〈◇〉 Lord did I make my supplication, and poured out my complaints before him, and shown him my trouble: And when was it? It was in a time of great distress: Ver. 3. When my spirit was overwhelmed within me: I went to God, and made my complaints known to him, I went not to the creature, but to God. And Jonah, he was in a sad distressed condition, and yet faith brought him to apply himself to the Lord, when as he was in that sad estate, Jonah 2. 1, 2. Then Jonah prayed to the Lord his God out of the fishes belly, and said, I cried by reason of mine affliction unto the Lord, out of the belly of hell cried I, and thou heardest my voice. He was so low in his own apprehension as was possible for him to be; in the belly of hell: And what did he do? I cried to the Lord; he applied himself to the Lord, and spread his sad condition before the Lord, and he did not loose his labor, Thou Lord heardest me.

Now for the grounds of the Point, That faith will teach a soul to go to Christ, and make his complaint to Christ in all his affliction, for faith discovers to a soul, that all afflictions are from God, the Lord's hand is in all the crosses and troubles, and whatsoever is matter of complaint, the hand of God is in it, Is there any evil in the city and I have not done it? saith the Lord by the Prophet Amos: Is there any evil of affliction that I have not brought upon a people? As to the evil of sin, that is not from God, for that is no being; that is a privation, but as for affliction, all the affliction that doth befall the children of men, it is from the hand of God; and upon this ground Eliphaz persuadeth Job to apply himself to God, Job 5. 6, 8. Affliction cometh not forth of the dust, neither does trouble spring out of the ground; I would speak unto God, and unto God would I commit my cause. Trouble doth not spring from the ground, it is not from second causes, whatsoever trouble the people of God meet withal, any of the sons of men, it springs not from the dust: Whence then? It is from the hand of God, there is a secret wheel, a great wheel of providence, that sets all on work, second causes cannot move if that great wheel does not move; so then when this comes to be realized to the soul, as faith doth discover it, because God hath spoken it, that trouble is from God, whether inward or outward; therefore it will carry the soul unto God, and make the soul apply itself to God and Christ alone.

Secondly, Faith doth discover, that as all afflictions are from God, and makes the soul see the hand of God in every stroke, so it doth discover, that the end of all afflictions is to carry the soul to God; that is the end of all afflictions, to bring God and the soul nigher together; God doth not love to have any of his people at a distance from him, and therefore he sends forth affliction to bring them nigher to himself: And therefore in Hosea 5. 15. I will go and return to my place, till they acknowledge their offense, and seek my face; in their affliction they will seek me early: He brings affliction for this very end, that they may draw nigh to him: And in chap. 6. 1. you may see the fruit of their affliction, Come and let us return to the Lord; for he hath torn, and he will heal us; he hath smitten, and he will bind us up. This is the fruit of their affliction, they were brought nigher to God. God will have his people enjoy more communion with him, dwell with him, and make them more conformable to him, more like to himself; and therefore many times he lays great and sore afflictions upon them: For when the Saints shall be in such a state, and such a condition, as nothing shall come betwixt God and them, when they shall so dwell in God, as never to go out from God, when there shall come no sin, no corruption betwixt God and them, then there shall be no more affliction, then the Lord God shall wipe away tears from the faces of his people, no more sorrow and sighing, now the end is attained, when they are gotten so nigh to God, as nothing can come betwixt God and them: Now when faith discovers this, that it is the end of affliction to bring the soul nigher to God, it puts the soul upon it, in its affliction, to return and apply itself to God alone.

Thirdly, Faith will make a soul come to Christ, and Christ alone, in distress; for faith doth discover, that the help of the creature is in vain in time of distress; it is faith that doth realize to the soul the vanity of the creature, and that the creature cannot help in the day of distress: And therefore the Psalmist cries out, Psal 60. 11. Help Lord, for vain is the help of man. Man cannot help, and therefore he applies himself to God alone; Help Lord, for vain is the help of man. Till the soul sees that vain is the help of the creature, it will not in good earnest cry, Help Lord; faith shows the soul, that in vain is salvation hoped for from the hills, and from the multitude of mountains; in vain is salvation hoped for from creatures, from great men, the highest of all: There is many a poor soul can tell you by sad experience, and say it by sad experience, in vain have I sought help from men, and cried to men, and spread my complaints before men, and therefore it is good for me to draw nigh to God; for if you look upon all the sons of men, you shall see how fruitless a thing it is, for a poor soul in distress to apply itself to man, and to go and pour out his complaints to man; he may speak to such men as are not at all sensible of what he speaks; he may tell a sad relation of his sufferings and burdens, and yet not at all affect the heart of him that he speaks to: There are some such men in the world, nay very many, that regard not the affliction of Joseph, that are altogether insensible of the burden that lay upon other poor creatures, that hath no compassion, and cannot be affected. It is said of Gallio, that he cared for none of those things; when as they made complaints of things of Religion, he cared for none of those things; and so when some come and make complaints of their burdens, they care for none of those things: And thus it was with Lazarus, that lay at the rich man's gate, it is very like he made many complaints, shown him his sorrow and sores, but his heart was not at all affected, the very dogs had more pity upon him, they came and licked his sores: And so it is many times, when we make our complaints to men, they regard not.

Or secondly, Sometimes when we make complaints to men, though there be some pity, and some compassion in them, and they will express it in good words, yet very little help and assistance will many men afford; they will seem to pity and have compassion, but there are some men that will do very little to the relief of a poor creature under distress, that comes and makes complaints of his burdens: The Apostle James speaks of some such, chap. 2. 15, 16. If a brother or sister be naked, and destitute of daily food, and one of you say unto him, depart in peace, be you warmed, and filled; notwithstanding you give him not those things that are needful for the body, what doth it profit? Alas, it is in vain to make complaints to such, what doth it avail? It may be some will pity with good words, be you warmed, and filled, but they give them not those things which are needful for the body; thus many a poor creature loses his labor.

Thirdly, When a poor creature makes complaints to man, and cries to man, it may be he shall make complaints to those that do pity him, and would relieve him with all their heart, but it is beyond their power to relieve; and so if a poor man that wants the things of this life, it may be he goes and makes his complaints to another, he pities him, and would help him, but he that hath a will hath not power many times, and it is not in his hand to do it, and he cannot uphold another's estate but he must break his own; many times it is so. And so when they come and make complaint of the weakness and infirmities of their bodies, it may be they are affected, and they would help; ah, but it is beyond their power: And so when a poor soul comes and complains of distress of mind, and show the wounds of his spirit, and lay them open, it may be godly friends may pity you, and desire to help you, but their hand is too short to carry the plaster to your heart and conscience, and to cause it to stick there, and therefore after all it will go away unsatisfied; in all these causes they that would help you if they could, they may say as the King of Israel, 2 King. 6. 26, 27. the woman there comes and makes a sad complaint in the time of famine, at verse 26. And as the King of Israel was passing by upon the wall, there cried a woman unto him, saying help, my Lord, O King. And what says the King to her? verse 27. And he said, if the Lord do not help thee, whence shall I help thee? Alas, my bowels are towards thee, but if the Lord does not help thee, in vain is the help of man.

Fourthly, When you make your complaints to men, sometimes it falls out so, that instead of ease from under your burdens, your burdens are increased; sometimes men may add to the burdens of the afflicted through unskillfulness, not knowing how to speak to them, and how to carry it towards them; yea sometimes men may aggravate the burdens of the afflicted, when they make their complaints, willfully, through pride, and disdain, and covetousness: And thus it was when David sent to Nabal, he was in a great strait for provision, and he sent to Nabal in his strait for relief, and he sent him a churlish answer; Who is David, and the son of Jesse? I know him not; shall I send my corn and my oxen that I have killed for my shearers, and give it to him, I know him not. And you know what Judas did meet withal, when he went to the Pharisees, and said, I have sinned in betraying the innocent blood: What is that to us? a bargain is a bargain, if you have sinned look you to that: Whereas if he had gone to Christ with that complaint, he might have had comfort, but he went to them, and they spake that which aggravated his sorrow, and he goes and makes away himself. So that, I say, in time of affliction faith causeth a soul to go to Christ, for it doth discover what man is.

Fourthly, There is this ground of the Point, Faith will make a soul go to Christ alone, for it discovers to the soul, that in Christ there is all sufficiency to help it, there is all in Christ that may pity him, and for the helping of him; it is not in the creature, but it is to be found in Christ, for Christ is furnished with compassion, there are bowels of compassion towards his poor creatures in distress; it is an impossible thing that Christ should be insensible as men are; you may spread your complaints before some men, and they never be moved no more than the stones in the street, but the Lord Jesus he is not without compassion, great bowels of compassion towards his people, he cannot be insensible of any burden that lay upon a poor creature that comes to him, In all their afflictions he is afflicted, he bears our sickness, he carries our sorrows; Christ he feels the weight of all affliction, and sorrow, and burdens that do at any time lie upon his people.

Secondly, As Christ hath compassion, so he hath a will; he is always willing to do good to poor creatures that come to him: Men (as you have heard) they are not always willing, they may give you a parcel of good words, but give you not those things that are needful: Now Christ he never puts off his people with good words, though one good word from Christ be more worth than all that men can do for you; but Christ he will not give you good words alone, but as he opens his mouth in grace, so he opens his hand in mercy; he opens his mouth and his hand at the same time, and he is very willing to relieve, and therefore it is, that he calls poor creatures to him; you may see his willingness by the invitation that he gives to all poor creatures that are under any distress; Come to me all ye that are weary and heavy laden, and I will give you rest: Whatever the burden be, whether the burden of sin or sorrow. Christ makes proclamation, you have his invitation; Come to me and I will give you rest; and call upon me in the time of trouble, and I will deliver. How doth this testify the willingness of Christ to relieve his poor creatures?

Thirdly, He hath not only compassion, but he also hath power in his hand, Christ can do it, he is able to do what he pleaseth; Thou hast done whatsoever thou pleasest in heaven, and earth, and in all deep places: The deepest affliction and sorrow that any of his people may sink into, the Lord Jesus is able to stretch forth his hand and help them, he hath all store of provision in his house, there is an infinite treasure of mercy, all mercies are laid up in Christ, it shall not break his estate to uphold your estates, for all the creatures in heaven and earth are the Lord's, the heavens and the earth are the Lord's, and the fullness that are in them, therefore there is power in Christ's hand to relieve his people.

Fourthly, Christ cannot aggravate sorrow and affliction; he will not aggravate the sorrow and affliction of any of his people that come to him; Christ will never say to a poor soul, as the Pharisees to Judas, see thou to that: When a soul comes and says, Lord I have sinned, Christ never gave such an answer, see thou to that; he never did, neither can he, aggravate the sorrows and burdens of poor creatures that come to him. Now when faith discovers this to the soul, and shows that afflictions are from the Lord, and shows, that all afflictions are for that end, to carry the soul higher unto God, and shows, that all the help of the creature is vain, and shows, that there is an infinite supply of grace and mercy, all-sufficiency of grace in God and Christ to relieve at all times, and in all straits; these discoveries that faith makes, will carry the soul to Christ, and make the soul apply itself to Christ, and cry to him, and spread his complaints before him in time of great distress.

A word or two by way of Application.

First of all: If it be so that faith carry the soul to God and Christ alone in time of distress, what shall we think then, when men by their affliction, and in their affliction, are carried further off from God? And yet so it is with many, their afflictions set them at a greater distance from Christ, many a man is hardened by his affliction, and so set at a greater distance from God by that trouble and distress he hath upon him, afflictions drive many a man from God, make him run away from God, run anywhere then unto God; there is many will run to the creature, and their eye is not to the Lord the holy One of Israel, they run to the creature to comfort them, run to the world, and run into the way of their lust, but apply not themselves to the Lord in the day of their distress: You know that Ahaziah ran to the Devil when he was in distress, so far was he from running nigh to God in distress, that he run to the Devil himself, he sends to the gods of the Nations, to know whether he should recover or not; This is a discovery, that there is no seed of faith in such a soul, for where there is faith but in the seed of it, the least seed of faith, it will make a soul at least to be looking to Christ, and crying after Christ in the day of distress, it will at least cry unto Christ, though there may be many workings of corruption and temptations, and many distempers of spirit may be bubbling up in time of affliction, yet faith will carry the soul to look towards Christ, and cry after him, as Jonah did when he was in the belly of hell, I said I am cast out of thy sight, yet will I look toward thy holy temple: He applies himself to Christ: And so a gracious heart will be looking to Christ, and the more faith, the more it will look, and the louder it will cry.

But secondly, Let it be a word of exhortation, O that it might provoke us all to deal more with God and Christ in the time of our affliction and distress!, O that we might cry more to him, and pour out our complaints more to him! as this poor woman did; she comes and cries, O Lord, thou son of David: Poor souls are apt to look to the creature in the day of distress, and think such and such creatures can comfort; Surely my bed shall comfort me, and my couch give me ease, says Job; but he found no such matter; and so we are apt to say of this and that <1 page duplicate> <1 page duplicate> creature, I will go and make my complaint to him, he will give me some refreshment; poor souls are very apt under their burdens to go up & down and scatter their complaints: Ah, but they take not the right course of going to Christ, and crying to him, and pouring out the complaints of their souls before him; and therefore it is, that when they go to men they meet with little satisfaction, and little relief and comfort, and their spirits are filled with discontent and dissatisfaction, when as they meet with such men sometimes as have no compassion at all in them, and sometimes meet with good words and no more, and sometimes meet with such as pity them, but have no power, and sometimes meet with some that will aggravate the affliction; and just it is with God it should be so, when we will not look to the Rock: O that such disappointments might reach us to look to the Lord, we have thought that this creature might ease, but we have met with disappointments; O that these disappointments might teach us to go to Christ! as this woman: And thus the poor man did for his son, that he would cast out the unclean spirit; I went, said he, to thy Disciples, and they tried to cast out the unclean spirit, but could not; and then he comes to Christ, I have been with thy Disciples, and they could not cast out the unclean spirit, but thou canst do it, and Christ did do it: And O that these disappointments might teach us to go more to Christ, and make our complaints more to him in time of distress.

Quest. But you will say, What? may we not go to our friends, is it not lawful to go to men when we are under pressures and burdens, either of the outward or inward man? and to such and such as may relieve us, may we not apply ourselves to them?

Answ. I answer yes; We may apply ourselves to men, but take heed we do it in God's way. I say, under burdens and distresses, either outward or inward, we may apply ourselves to men, but take heed we do it in God's way.

Quest. But you will say, How shall we know we do it in God's way.

Answ. I answer, first of all, when you do it as an Ordinance of God, when we make use of the advice and help of others, and go to others as to an Ordinance of God, then we are not out of God's way, when we do it in obedience to the Will and Commandment of God and Christ; when one that is wounded in spirit shall apply himself to those that are godly, that hath the mind of Christ, in obedience to the command of Christ, Confess your sins one to another, and pray one for another: Now if out of obedience to Christ I go and confess my sins to one that is godly, and desire him to pray for me, when we apply ourselves to men, as an Ordinance of God, then we are in God's way.

Secondly, When we shall keep the eye of our souls upon God alone for help; when we apply ourselves to men for any help, and yet shall keep our eye upon God, and look upon God as the great moving cause, look upon God as the fountain of all relief and comfort, and shall look upon the creature only as God's Instrument, this is but a pipe, and an empty one too, if God do not fill it, when as the eye is thus upon God, and eye God as principal in all that comfort and relief that we expect, and look upon the creature as the means, then we may apply ourselves to the creature, and not out of God's way.

And a man may know whether he keeps his eye upon God, when as he does apply himself to the creature (thus) Are your expectations from the creature or from God? If a man's eye be upon God, then he will not expect much from the creature, and applies himself to the creatures, because they are means, and because it is an Ordinance, but dare not expect much.

Secondly, If a man do meet with disappointments, and he do apply himself to the creature in God's way, disappointments will not add any great trouble or vexation to that man or woman, though he meet with little refreshment; nay, though instead of help and refreshment, he should meet with an addition of his sorrow and trouble, yet if in God's way he will not be troubled, because his eye is upon God, and I see it is not the will of the Lord I should yet have comfort, and why should I fret myself, seeing the Instrument is but an empty pipe, and no creature can refresh me if the Lord do not refresh me? And thus you have seen when we are in God's way, and when out of God's way, in applying ourselves to the creature, and looking to the creature for help, and for relief.

And O that this might teach us to go more to God, and apply ourselves more to Christ.

Object. But it may be some poor soul will say, Well, I have not only gone to the creature, but I have applied myself to God, and yet truly I meet with little refreshment, I have cried to Christ in the time of my affliction, and yet my burden doth continue.

Answ. First, To this I answer: It may be when thou hast come to Christ, thou hast complained of thy burden, and of thy affliction, but thou hast not complained of thy sin, thou hast not complained of that which is the greatest matter of complaint; and if thou hast at any time looked more to thy burden and affliction, and hast not complained of that which is the greatest matter of complaint, no wonder then though thou hast met with no ease.

Secondly, Let me say, it may be thou hast brought thy complaints and spread them before the Lord, yet thou hast not left thy burden with the Lord; many a soul comes with a great burden, ah, but it carries it away, and does not leave it with the Lord; and if the burden be not left with the Lord, no wonder that we have no ease: Christ is willing we should leave our burdens with him, and in so doing we shall find refreshment.

Thirdly, And let me say further, that it may be the Lord hath heard thy cry, and thy complaint, but thou art not aware of it, thou hast not taken notice of it, through unthankfulness thou hast not observed that which the Lord hath done; the Lord at least, he hath thus far heard thee, that he hath supported thy spirit under thy burden, and thou hast been kept up, so that thy soul hath not failed, and thy spirit hath not fainted under thy burden; and truly this is a great mercy and worthy to be taken notice of: And this is the difference between your going to God and the creature. Oh that we might be invited by this to apply ourselves more to Christ in time of distress, and spread our complaints before Christ, for in going to the creature many times the spirit is wounded▪ ah, but in going to God the spirit shall be supported, though Christ do not give out a present answer, yet the heart shall be supported under all its burdens, but now in going to man, many times the heart and the spirit it is wounded, by those disappointments that we meet withal, while we expect that from the creature which it cannot do.

Two things only I shall propound to urge this duty upon you, to make us more in going to Christ, and less to the creature.

It is a great sin and folly, when as we leave Christ and go to the creature in the day of our distress.

First, It is a great sin; for what do we then, but set up the creature in the room of Christ? You know how sensible Jacob was of this evil, he looked upon it as a great evil, when as Rachel came to him, she wanted children, she comes to her Husband, Give me children or I die: O what says he? Am I in God's stead? Can I give thee children? When as she came and made her complaint to Jacob, and murmured because she had not the mercy of children, she goes to Jacob, and sets up Jacob in God's stead; and so when we are under our burdens, and make our complaints to the creature and not to God, why the creature may say as Jacob, am I in God's stead?

Secondly, There is a world of folly in it, in going from God in time of distress to the creature. It is a piece of gre•• folly for a man to go from the fountain to the broken cistern, to leave the fountain and think a broken cistern should supply him: It is a great deal of folly for a man to go to a deaf man, one that cannot hear, pour out his complaints, & expect that he should speak a word of refreshment; so much folly there is when we go to the creature, and do not apply ourselves to God. If a man should go to a beggar, one that hath no food or raiment, and a man should spend a deal of time in asking food and raiment; and if he do not give it go away railing, what a deal of folly were it? And so a great deal of Folly there is, when we do go to the creature, and do not go to God; we go to them that are poor and naked, and forsake God, that hath all store of provision and mercy laid up in himself: O that the consideration of our sin and folly, in going to the creatures, might cause us at all times in our distress to go to God, as this poor woman did, and cry to him that is the Lord.

Matth. 15. 22.

And behold, a woman of Canaan came out of the same coasts, and cried unto him, saying, have mercy on me, O Lord, thou son of David, my daughter is grievously vexed with a Devil.

SERMON V.

HERE is a declaration of this woman's faith, the trial of it, and the conquest of it: The last day we came to consider the declaration of this woman's faith in the fruits of it, it carries her soul to Christ in a way of supplication and prayer; and the Argument she useth in prayer, is only the free Grace of Christ, Have mercy on me, thou son of David.

The Doctrine was this:

That where ever there is ⟨◇⟩ seed of faith in any foul, it will carry it out to Christ, and make the soul cry unto him and take hold of his mercy.

We divided it into three Propositions.

First, That faith will carry the soul to Christ in time of affliction, and make it seek to Christ, and Christ alone.

Secondly, Afflictions when they are great and strong, will raise strong cries.

Thirdly, A gracious heart pleads only mercy and free grace, only takes hold of mercy, and looks not at all to his own worthiness.

I spake to the first of these the last day.

I shall now speak to the second Proposition; this woman was in great afflictions and distress, her daughter was possessed with a devil, and that was a sore burden to her spirit: Now this great affliction makes her cry loud, for the Text doth not say, she came & entreated, and besought him, but the Text says, she came and cried unto him, saying, Have mercy on me, O Lord.

So then observe this: Strong afflictions will raise strong cries, even in God's own people.

In the opening of the Point, I shall show you two things:

First, That there is a cry of the flesh, and a cry of the Spirit.

Secondly, That great and sore afflictions of 〈◇〉 continuance may raise both these cries, it will make both the flesh to cry, and the Spirit to cry.

First, There is a cry of the flesh, and that is twofold.

It is either a natural cry 〈◇〉 sense which Nature hath of the burden and affliction which is upon it: Or,

Secondly, It is a sinful cry, which is accompanied with disorder: I say, the cry of the flesh it is either merely natural, or sinful; the flesh is weak, it is an emblem of weakness, and is weak indeed, and a little affliction will make the flesh to cry, the Lord remembered that man is but as dust before the wind. Now the flesh may cry out, and may complain, and yet may not sin in that complaint, it is true indeed, when a man or woman shall cry out of a little affliction, when the hand of God doth but touch him, and then cry out with great cries & strong cries, when as the affliction is but little, that discovers want of wisdom, and want of strength; but now when the affliction is very great, sore and urgent, and the flesh doth cry out through the frailty, there may be an expression of complaint, and yet not sinful. Job in his great afflictions made many complaints, poured out many strong cries, and yet in many of his complaints he sinned not, Job 6. 1, 2, 3. O that my grief were thoroughly weighed! it would appear heavier then the sand of the sea. Yea you shall find that our Lord Jesus Christ himself, having taken our flesh, and the frailties of our flesh, (for he took our human frailties, but no sinful frailty) and in the days of his flesh he cried, his great affliction made him cry out, he put up his cries with tears and supplications in the days of his flesh; as the Apostle speaks, Heb. 5. 7. And in Psalm 22. (which Psalm is a Prophecy of Christ) he cries out bitter 〈◇〉 My God, my God; why hast thou forsaken me? •hy art thou so far from helping me, and from the words of my roaring? Strong cries, and yet no sin in Jesus Christ; so that the flesh may cry and yet not sin; for grace when it comes into the soul, doth not destroy nature, it doth not make man insensible, and the spirit insensible, but it allows the flesh to be sensible, and to cry out of his burdens, so it be without sin.

Secondly, There is another cry of the flesh that is raised by sore afflictions, and that is a sinful cry; now this sinful cry you shall know it thus:

First of all, It springs from pride, it will make a man cry out through pride of heart, he cannot bear his burden, nor submit to the hand of God through pride of heart: When a creature stands upon it, to justify himself and accuse God, calls God to an account, Why am I thus? And what am I worse then others? And why should God take me out from all others to make me an example to all others? What have I done? And what is my sin more than others? When a creature will not submit to God in his afflictions, but charge God foolishly; and when as he quarrels with his affliction, if any affliction but this I could have born it, but as for this affliction, my spirit cannot bear it. O here is a cry that is raised by affliction, but it is a sinful cry.

Secondly, There is a cry in affliction that doth spring from impatency, and that is a sinful cry, when a man or woman shall cry out with a great cry, and make a great lamentation, and yet their burden but an ordinary bur••• only they make it great through impatency, no• that the affliction is so in itself, if the Lord had given a heart to carry patiently under it; but there is many a poor creature struggles with his affliction, as a young beast unaccustomed to the yoke, the yoke is easy, but by struggling and striving it pinches and makes it cry out; and so a man by striving under the yoke of the Lord, though it be Jobs counsel, that it is good to bear the yoke, yet it through impatience cries out; this is a sinful cry.

Thirdly, That is a sinful cry that springs from unbelief, and is accompanied with unbelief; when as a man or woman in time of affliction shall give way to hard thoughts of God; whatever cry is accompanied with unbelief, is a sinful cry: Yet this is the case of many, they cannot persuade themselves that there is any love in the heart of God towards them, and any love in such an affliction; I cannot believe it, that there should be love in such an affliction, that God should lay such a heavy burden upon me, and have any love to me; when it cries out thus with unbelieving cries, this is a sinful cry: And so when a man cannot be persuaded, that the Lord should make a good end with him in affliction: O sure I shall perish one day, and fall by the hand of this affliction, I shall be broken all to pieces, and never be able to stand under my burden; when as the soul is thus filled with unbelieving despairing thoughts, concerning God and concerning the end of his affliction, and so cry out in unbelief, this is a sinful cry.

First, And again, great and sore afflictions may occasion such cries, even sinful cries, as the cry of unbelief and impatencies, and that upon this ground; there are remainders of corruption in the best heart, there is sinful flesh as well as spirit.

Secondly, Great afflictions do expose God's own people to great temptations; many times they go together, great afflictions and great temptations, for the Devil seeks his opportunity to do mischief, as the Lord waits to be gracious, so Satan waits to do mischief: Many times in great afflictions, when the waters are high, then the Devil will assault; God makes use of affliction to make his people seek him early; but now the Devil he waits to make the soul cry out with a sinful cry, and many times the Lord suffers him to prevail: But this cry of the woman of Canaan was not the cry of pride, impatience, and unbelief, but her cry was the cry of the Spirit.

And therefore let us examine what that cry of the spirit is, which the Lord doth raise in the hearts of his people in he day of great afflictions.

First, It carries the heart to God thorough Christ, and makes its complaint unto him, it doth not cry out against God, but as it cries unto God, so it runs unto the Lord thorough Christ, and pours out his complaints before him: So David, Psal. 142. 1, 2. I cried unto the Lord with my voice, unto the Lord did I make my supplication, I poured out my complaint before him: The flesh cries out of his burden, yea, sinful flesh it complains many times, not only of his burden, but of God himself: Ah, but the spirit that cries unto God, Job 35. 9. By reason of the multitude of oppressions they make the oppressed to cry. They cry out by reason of the arm of the mighty, v. 10. But none saith, where is God that maketh him? he reproves the sons of men. They are appointed to cry, but it is the cry of the flesh, they cry out of the arm of the mighty, but they do not go to God, None say, where is God that giveth songs in the night season? The spirit in the saddest condition goes to God through Christ.

Secondly, The cry of the spirit it doth make a man to cry out as well of sin as of affliction, it will make a man to cry out more of sin than of affliction; the flesh is not sensible of the burden of sin; Ah, but where the spirit of the Lord is, it will make a man cry out most of all of the burden of sin; if God should take away affliction, and not take away corruption, this would be little refreshment to him; O miserable man that I am! as you have the Apostle cry, which was the cry of the spirit, Rom. 7. the latter end, O wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me from the body of this death? I thank God through Jesus Christ our Lord: He was more sensible of the body of sin, than of any affliction that lay upon him.

Thirdly, The cry of the Spirit it will make the soul cry more after God himself, then after any mercy or deliverance, that it may enjoy God, that it may have the presence of God, and communion with God, that it may be made like to God; a gracious heart it cries thus after God, yea, in the day of affliction when the burden is heavy, a gracious heart desires more to enjoy God, then to be free from his affliction: See how the Psalmist doth express himself in Psal. 63. 1. O God, thou art my God, early will I seek thee; my soul thirsteth for thee in a dry and thirsty land, where no water is: David was now in a state of banishment, it is like he met with sore afflictions, ah, but the cry of his soul was after God, my soul thirsteth for thee, and longeth for thee.

Fourthly, The cry of the spirit it is a cry of faith, it cries in faith, and cries in hope; the flesh cries in despair many times, but the spirit cries, and believes when it cries, it takes hold of God, and follows after him, follows God crying, though God go away. See what is said, Psal. 89. 26. the promise is made to David's son, Christ; He shall cry unto me, thou art my father, my God, and the rock of my salvation: He shall cry unto me, <◇> but he shall cry in faith, when he cries he shall say, Thou art my Father, and my rock: And so the Church, Isaiah 26. she cries out with a great cry, and it is in faith, doubtless thou art our Father: And so Psal. 119. when as David cried, he trusted, he took hold of God, and hoped in his mercy, 145, 146, 147. ver. though he was in a great affliction, and there was great cause to cry, yet his cry was the cry of faith, and he hoped in the Word of the Lord, for the accomplishment of the Word of the Lord.

Fifthly, As the cry of the spirit is the cry of faith, so it is a fervent cry; that cry that the Lord doth raise up by his spirit in the day of affliction, it is a fervent cry, it is no cold nor lazy cry, but a strong cry: Jesus Christ in the days of his flesh put up strong cries; and the Apostle James he speaks of the fervent prayer of God's people. I am. 5. The fervent effectual prayer of the righteous prevaleth much: When the Spirit of prayer doth set all the faculties of the soul a work to look after God, and take hold of God▪ •hen it takes hold of God, and will not let him go, and cry out as the Church, Awake thou arm of the Lord, as in the days of old; when it will take no rest itself, and give God no rest, till the Lord comes in a way of grace, that is the prayer that is spoken of Isai. 62. 6, 7, 8. that prayer that is accompanied with holy fervency is the cry of the spirit.

Sixthly and lastly, The cry of the spirit is such a cry as will not easily be silent, though it meet with no answer from the Lord; though it meet with a denial, as this woman of Canaan she meets with many discouragements, he gave her no answer at first, still she goes on to cry, her cry was a cry that was raised by the spirit of the Lord: the flesh may put a man upon it to cry to the Lord for a season, but if the Lord does not come in, the flesh grows weary; now the cry of the spirit is a constant cry, that will not give over, but will wait upon the Lord till such time as he shall send from heaven to save. Thus you see what the cry of the flesh is, and what the cry of the spirit.

Secondly, Now the Saints in all Ages in the days of their affliction, have been stirred up to cry with their spirits unto the Lord, and the greater their afflictions have been, the more they have cried unto the Lord: So it was with Moses, he was in a great strait when as he was before the red Sea, and then Moses cried in spirit, God made use of that strait to stir up the cry of the Spirit in Moses: And so when Jacob was in a great strait, he cried more earnestly then ever he had done, when as his brother came to meet him with an Army of men, he saw nothing but death and destruction, he applied himself to the Lord, and cried mightily: It is said in Hosea. 12. 4. speaking of Jacob, He wept and he made supplication: And so you know David in Psal. 14. cried, and it was when his spirit was over whelmed and no man to pity him; then he cried unto the Lord. And you know our Lord Jesus (to give you no more instances) in the days of his affliction he cried louder then ever: That place Heb. 7. 7. In the days of his flesh he offered up prayers and supplications with strong cries and tears, unto him that was able to save him from death, and was heard in that he feared: And the Evangelist Luke doth take notice, that as Christ's affliction and sorrow did increase, so he cried the louder to his Father, Luke 22. 44. And being in an agony, he prayed more earnestly; he prayed the more when his affliction increased, when he was in the midst of his agony then he cried more earnestly.

To make some short application of the Point.

First of all; Let it be a word of examination, there is none of us but at one time or other are pouring out our cries and complaints, and especially in our affliction we are full of cries: Now let us examine whether it be the cry of the flesh or the cry of the spirit; whether it be accompanied with pride of heart, and with impatiency and unbelief, with murmuring and repining; O that is the cry of the flesh, and the sinful cry of the flesh, which is far from the cry of the spirit.

But to give you two or three things that you may make use of by way of trial.

First of all, would you know whether your cry be the cry of the flesh, or the cry of the spirit▪ why then examine whether or no your cry and your complaint be not above your burden: many a man's cry is greater then his burden that God lays upon him, it may be he makes his burden heavy by his struggling. Jobs burden was not so, it was heavy: Now when a man shall cry out and say, no affliction like to mine, and no burden like to mine, O this is a sinful cry.

Secondly, When our cry is so great as to take us off from our duty either to God or man, that cry is not a gracious, but a sinful cry; the cry of the spirit makes a soul wait upon God in a way of duty; but now if a man in time of affliction is taken off from his duty, surely that cry is a sinful cry.

Thirdly, When a man in the day of affliction cries so loud that he cannot hear what the Lord speaks to him, God comes and speaks graciously, offers comfort, but the cry of the soul is so loud, that it cannot hear what God speaks; that a man shall be taken up with complaints as to refuse all the comfort that God sends him, this is a sinful cry; this was the cry of that afflicted man, Psal. 77. 2. In the day of my trouble I sought the Lord, my sore ran and ceased not, my soul refused to be comforted. Nay, when as a man or woman in the time of affliction, shall not only refuse his comfort, but justify his complaint, as Jonah did, he justified his anger, when God asked him, Dost thou well to be angry? Yea, said he, I do well to be angry: This was a sinful passion: And so when a man shall justify any other passion, his sorrow and complaining, and say, I do well to complain, and in the bitterness of my spirit I complain, this is a sinful cry.

And therefore secondly, Let me desire in the name of the Lord, that we would take heed how we give way to these sinful cries and complainings, these cryings out, which spring from pride, impatency and unbelief. O, I pray, take heed of giving way to these sinful complaints.

For first, I pray, consider a little, that the hand of the Lord is in every affliction that is upon you: O that that were seen, that the hand of the Lord is in it: Thou Lord didst is, (said David) I was dumb, and opened not my mouth, for thou Lord didst it. O that would silence the sinful cries of the flesh, if the heart were sensible that the Lord did it; and if the Lord did it, then infinite wisdom hath done it; and if infinite wisdom order this or that affliction, why should we cry out of our afflictions.

Secondly, Consider whatever your affliction be, though you say none like mine, it might have been seven times heavier, infinite power could have heated the furnace seven times hotter, and made his fiery trials seven times more sharp: O then there is no cause why we should complain, especially in the Third place, If we consider what we have deserved at the Lord's hand; and O that when we pore so much upon our affliction, we would look with one eye upon that which may help to silence our sinful complaints! We have deserved that and a thousand times more at the hand of God. Why should the living man complain, man for the punishment of his sin? O there is sin enough; though it be true, it is not always for that God, afflicts, yet he may see enough, for which he may afflict seven times more. Now let our eye be upon this; this was that which silenced Jeremiah, Jer. 8. 14. Why do we sit still? Assemble yourselves, and let us enter into the defended Cities, and let us be silent there, for the Lord our God hath put us to silence, and hath given us waters of gall to drink, because we have sinned against the Lord. Take heed how we open our mouth in the day of our affliction.

Thirdly and lastly, Let it stir up all our souls to go to God through Christ, and to cry more in the spirit; and the greater our afflictions are, so much the more let our cry be to Christ: The time of affliction is no time to give over praying and crying; but being in an agony he cried more earnestly; and so we in time of affliction, we should cry more earnestly. O that we might learn thus to cry, with this gracious, holy, believing, and servant cry: The Lord Jesus hath given great encouragement to his servants to go and cry thus. O what encouragement doth Christ give in Luke 11. 8, • by a parable there, of a man being in bed? he hath no mind to rise, but through importunity he is overcome: And so by that Christ stirs up his Disciples to go and cry importunately to God their Father. And so in Luke 18. there is another parable of the unjust Judge; who neither feared God nor man, yet because of the Widows importunity, he would judge her cause; And shall not the Judge of all do right? I tell you (saith Christ) he will avenge the elect that cry to him day and night. And therefore Christ gives encouragement to you to go and cry earnestly, and to wait upon the Lord, and not to give over crying, for the Lord hath the bowels of a father, as the father pities the child, so the Lord pities those that fear him. Now the tender hearted parent is filled with compassion to the child, if the child be under a heavy burden, the bowels of a father is filled with compassion, and will not let him lie under that burden; and so the Lord, when the spirit is even gone, and the soul ready to saint, and the Lord see that their strength is gone, then the Lord will come in, and exercise the bowels of a tender hearted father.

And know, that many times the Lord doth hide himself, and withdraw, and seems to be far off from the requests of his people, that so he may stir them up to cry the more earnestly after him; he sees that they begin to flag in their prayers, and do not cry so loud as they have done, the Lord he will withdraw, that so he may stir up a spirit of prayer, bring them into such an affliction, that so they may cry the more earnestly; the storm was raised, when Christ was upon the sea with his Disciples, to make them cry the more earnestly: The Lord seems to sleep many times at the prayers of his people, that so by the prayers of his people he may be awakened.

Quest. But you will say, What need we cry thus earnestly to the Lord? for he is found of them that seek him not; we cannot find God by our seeking him, he must seek us, he is found of them that $\langle \diamond \rangle$ him not.

Ans. I answer, It is true, God is found $\langle \diamond \rangle$ them that seek him not; that is when God comes first into a poor soul, he breaks in upon it, he prevents it with grace and mercy, and he seeks us, and brings home grace and mercy to the soul before the soul sought the Lord.

But now when the Lord hath found a soul, and brought home a soul to the knowledge of himself through Christ, O then he expects that that soul should continually wait upon him, and be seeking of him, in that way which is of the Lord's own appointment: It is true, he is found many times of those that seek him not, but the Lord is not found of those that seek him lazily; he hears not cold prayers, no, it is the cry of the spirit the Lord heareth.

Quest. Ah, but some will say, I cannot cry and pray, I cannot continue in prayer, my spirit is overwhelmed, and I am so shut up, that I know not how to utter a word in the presence of the Lord.

Answ. I answer, Though thy spirit be overwhelmed thou mayest pray and cry aloud to the Lord, David did so, and why mayest not thou▪ Psal. 142. 3. I cried (says he) and it was when my spirit is overwhelmed; and although thou canst not utter a word to the Lord, yet thou mayest pray and cry with the cries of the spirit▪ the Spirit of the Lord stirs up sighings and groanings in the hearts of his people which cannot be uttered: So when thou canst not speak a word to the Lord, yet thou mayest cry. Job could not speak, yet his soul cried to the Lord, and his eye cried to the Lord, Job 16. 20. My friends scorn me, but mine eyes pour out tears unto God. When he knew not how to speak a word, his eye looked to the Lord, if he cannot pour out his prayer, his eye shall speak, and his soul shall speak; this may be an effectual prayer.

Object. Ah, but I am filled with the sense of my unworthiness, I dare not go before the Lord, I dare not beg any mercy, nor stand in his presence, I am filled with the sense of my own unworthiness.

Answ. I tell thee; though thou beest filled with the sense of thy unworthiness, yet thou mayest, and ought to cry to the Lord, and pour out thy soul in supplication: The Publican that went up to the Temple, he durst not draw nigh, he looked upon himself as an unworthy sinner, and yet poured out his prayer to the Lord: the sense of thy unworthiness should not hinder thee in the pouring out of thy prayer to the Lord; the more unworthy, the more need of going to the Lord; and the more sensible of thy unworthiness, the sooner the Lord declares his acceptance. Oh that the Lord would make us all mindful of this our duty! we are apt to cry with the cry of the flesh, but O that in the day of our distress we did cry with the cry of the spirit: Let the cry that springs from pride, impatency, and unbelief be silent, laid low, and let it not open its mouth; but cry with the cry of faith, with the cry of the spirit, this will be a good evidence, that affliction hath wrought the right way, and that the Lord hath done us good by our affliction: Till the flesh be silent, and the spirit raised up to cry in faith, we shall never have any evidence, that we have received benefit by our affliction; but when the soul shall be in affliction, and the spirit up and cry, it will be a good evidence, that the soul hath received good by the affliction.

And to say no more, the Lord will soon draw nigh to that soul that shall thus be found waiting for him; when the flesh shall be silent, and the spirit cry, the Lord will soon hear that cry. You know the Lord is a tender hearted Father, and he will not suffer any of his children to be tempted above what they are able to bear; he will not suffer them to sink under their burden, but will come in with delivering mercy; for the Lord doth sometimes hear the cry of the flesh, so he hath heard the cry of the flesh, though not the sinful cry; yet the cry of nature, the Lord hath heard that cry: He heard the cry of Ishmael, when as he was ready to perish for thirst: The Lad cried, and he heard the cry of the Lad, and the Lord opened the eyes of Hagar, and she saw a well of water: He heard the cry of the flesh, so gracious is the Lord, yea, he hears she cry of the young Ravens, of the young Lions, and the Lord he opens his hand and satisfies them. O that this might be an encouragement to go to God in all times of distress, let it be never so great, the Lord is a God of compassion, and if he does hear the cry of the unreasonable Creatures, and the cry of the flesh, O surely the Lord will much more hear the cry of the spirit; when his people come and apply themselves to him through Christ, such as hope in his mercy, and are found waiting for his salvation. Surely the Lord he will find out the best time, in which he will come in with deliverance to his Servants.

Matth. 15. 22.

Thou son of David, have mercy on me.

SERMON VI.

WE observed the last day, that great and strong afflictions will rail strong cries, make God's people cry loud. It was a sore affliction that was upon this woman, Ms daughter is grievously vexed with a devil; and wh• she comes to Christ, she doth not only pray, ⟨◇⟩ cry to him.

But to pass on, and consider something th• still remains, and that is to look upon the Argument that this woman useth in her cry to Christ her Argument is mercy, she cries mercy, ⟨◇⟩ free grace; she doth not look to any worthiness ⟨◇⟩ herself, neither doth her unworthiness discourage but looks beyond both, and she closeth ⟨◇⟩ mercy and free grace, Thou son of David ⟨◇⟩ mercy on me: She comes to the son of David, ⟨◇⟩ knew David was a merciful Prince and King, ⟨◇⟩ shows mercy to his very enemies; David spared the life of Saul, when he had him at a great advantage, and spared the life of Shimei, though he had provoked David by his curses. Now thus she reasons with herself, the son of David, the Messias, of whom David was but a type, he hath more mercy and compassion than David, surely his bowels are infinite, and therefore though she be a vile sinner, an unworthy wretch, yet she comes and takes hold of his mercy, and there is nothing else that she pleads with Christ, nothing else she rests upon, only upon mercy, no other Argument she useth, only presents her great misery; her daughter is grievously vexed with a devil: She takes hold of mercy.

So then the Observation is this. That where there is true faith, it will teach a soul to deny itself, to look beyond itself, its own worthiness and righteousness, and to take hold of mercy, and of the free grace of God through Jesus Christ.

I shall open the point to you.

And first I shall give you Instances, that the Saints in all Ages in their coming to God, hath looked at nothing in themselves, but hath only pleaded mercy and free grace in all their straits.

You know that Instance of Jacob, when he was in a great strait he applied himself to the Lord, he pleaded only mercy, he doth not look to any worthiness in himself, he doth not present that before the Lord as any motive, Gen. 32. 10. he pleads no worthiness, but looks to his own unworthiness, O Lord, I am less than the least of all thy mercies; he doth not tell God, that he had lived without blame, that he had walked justly, and had not defrauded, but he had been a faithful Steward, that he had walked religiously, and eyed God in his ways, that he had set up a pillar, and vowed a vow, he pleads none of this, but O Lord, I am less than the least of all thy mercies.

And so Moses, though he had done as much as most men that ever lived, Deut. 3. 25. I pray thee let me go and see the good Land. Here is not a tittle of any of the services that he had done for God that he doth mention; he does not say, Lord, I have taken a great deal of pains with this people, I have followed thy Commandments, and suffered a great deal of hardship with them for thy sake; no, he only pleads mercy, Thou hast begun to show thy servant thy greatness and thy mighty hand, I pray thee let me go over and see the good Land.

And so David often in the Psalms, you shall find he is pleading with God, and he makes mercy his refuge, he pleads only mercy and free grace, Psal. 4. 1. he pleads that God would bear him in his mercy: And you shall find, that when the Servants of God hath pleaded for others, they have urged nothing but mercy and free grace in all their supplications. So the Prophet Jeremiah, when he was pleading for the Church, Jer. 14. 7. O Lord, though our iniquities testify against us, do thou it for thy names sake, for our backsliding are many, we have sinned against thee: No mention of any righteousness, no, he mentions their iniquities, Our backslidings are many, but do thou it for thy names sake. And so the Prophet, Daniel, when he was pleading for the Lord's people, he looks beyond all righteousness of their own, and pleads mercy, Dan. 9. 17. Now therefore, O our God, hear the prayer of thy servant, and his supplication, and cause thy face to shine upon thy Sanctuary that is desolate, for the Lord's sake: He had before in verse 8. confessed all their iniquities, and now, O Lord, (says he) do it for the Lord's sake.

And if you look into the New Testament, from the beginning to the end of the History of Christ, you shall never find any that were accepted of Christ that pleaded anything, but mercy and free grace, Matth. 9. 27. And when Jesus departed thence, two blind men followed him, crying, and saying, Thou son of David have mercy on us. And so in Matth. 17. 14, 15. another comes to Christ, and he useth only that Argument, mercy, Lord have mercy on my son, for he is lunatic. And in Matth. 20. 30. there is mention of two blind men sitting by the way side, and they cried out, Have mercy on us. And in verse 13. the multitude rebuked them, but they cried the more, saying, Have mercy on us, O Lord, thou son of David. And so the same Argument the Lepers used, verse 17. Jesus, Master have mercy on us. Indeed we read of some of the Elders of the Jews, that came to Christ in the behalf of the Centurion, and they plead his worthiness, Luke 7. 4. And when they came to Jesus, they besought him instantly, saying, that he was worthy for whom he should do this: But now the good man himself he had no such thought of himself, but he utterly denies it, look into verse 6, 7. Then Jesus went with them, and when he was now not far from the house, the Centurion sent friends to him, saying unto him, Lord trouble not thyself, for I am not worthy thou shouldst enter under my roof; verse 7. Wherefore neither thought I myself worthy to come unto thee, but say in a word, and my servant shall be healed. Neither thought I myself worthy to come unto thee, such a mean and low account had this man of himself.

First, But I shall clear the Doctrine to you, and make it out, that a gracious heart, where there is faith, looks beyond all his own worthiness and righteousness, and comes to Christ.

Secondly, Shew you, that the same gracious soul closes only with mercy and free grace.

First, I say, a gracious soul in its coming to Christ, looks beyond all that is in himself, and that both in its first coming and afterward in any distress, closeth with the Lord, and looks beyond his own worthiness, and pleads only mercy.

In the souls first coming to Christ, a gracious heart doth not not cannot look to any worthiness in itself, for where the Spirit of the Lord is, it doth discover to man what his vileness and misery is; now where there is a saving discovery to a soul of his own vileness, it is not possible that that soul should plead anything of his own before God. For

First of all, The Spirit teacheth a man that he is empty, destitute of all that which is good, the soul is naked of all that which is good, and is as a poor beggar, that hath neither bread to eat, nor clothes to put on, but in a sad condition, utterly bereaved of the Image of God: In my flesh dwells no good thing, says the Apostle, though through grace he had received much from God, yet in me, in my flesh dwells no good things. Now where there is a discovery made to a soul, that he is full of wants, poor and naked, surely such a soul can plead nothing but free grace.

Secondly, The Spirit of the Lord discovers to a soul, that it is not only full of wants, but full of sin, full of all manner of unrighteousness, not only lost the Image of God, but is filled with the image of the Devil, and discovers that all the imaginations of man's heart are evil, and only evil, and that from his youth upward: Now when the Spirit of the Lord comes to make this discovery to a man, that he is thus filled with sin, and lets a man see what a filthy thing sin is, how displeasing to God, how contrary to his Holiness, that soul that hath this discovery can plead nothing of his own when he comes to God, but mercy and free grace.

Thirdly, The Spirit of the Lord doth discover to man, that he is a poor weak creature, that he is one that can do nothing to help himself out of this miserable state, that he can do nothing to procure a better condition for himself, that he can make no satisfaction to God for the least of his transgressions; full of sin, ah, but he cannot make satisfaction for the least transgression, he cannot lay down a price to redeem his own soul, he cannot change his own heart, and he cannot work up his own spirit to believe in Christ, he cannot subdue any lust in his own heart; a poor weak creature that can do nothing, cannot think a good thought, nor move toward God: Now when the Spirit of the Lord discovers this to a man, O then he sees there is nothing to plead but mercy.

Fourthly, The Spirit of the Lord doth discover to a soul, that his natural estate is a state of enmity; the Lord rips open a man's heart at his conversion, and shows him what enmities is in his bosom, how full he is of contrary workings in his heart and spirit to the Lord, he sees that secret enmity that he never saw before: Now when this comes to be discovered to a man or woman, that they are in a stare of enmity to God, and the workings of that enmity cannot cease, if the Lord doth not put forth the mighty power of the death of Christ; I say, that soul that hath all these discoveries made to it, first sees that it hath no worthiness, pleads nothing of his own, especially such a creature, so full of wants, so full of sin, and so full of weakness, and so full of enmity, such a creature can plead nothing of his own when he comes to the great God.

Nay, as it sees that it hath no deserts to plead, so it sees that there are contrary deserts, I say, these discoveries will make a soul sensible of contrary deserts, that it deserves nothing but hell and wrath, and confusion, rejection from the Lord's presence forever and ever: The Prophet Daniel was sensible of these contrary deserts of the people, Dan. 9. 8. To us belongs nothing but shame and confusion: So that you see when the Lord by his Spirit comes to discover to man, what a vile creature he is, such a soul sees that it hath nothing to plead as matter of merit, but mercy.

And as in its first coming, so whenever a gracious heart goes to God, after it is brought home, reconciled, made one with God through Christ, after it hath walked with God, yet even then no gracious heart that can plead any worthiness, any righteousness of his own; when he goes before God, he cannot plead any of his graces, nor any of his own services, nor any of his own sufferings; and if so, then there is nothing to plead.

I say, a gracious heart cannot plead his own graces, it cannot plead his faith, not holiness, it cannot present that to the Lord, that the Lord for such and such graces should bestow mercy; for the very faith of the Saints is imperfect; now that which is imperfect cannot merit anything, abundance of unbelief mixed with the strongest faith, Lord help my unbelief: It is true indeed, that David, in some of his Psalms, desires God to look upon his faith, Psal. 25. 20. Deliver me, for I put my trust in thee: But he doth not look upon his faith as meriting anything at God's hand, but only desires that God would look upon his Covenant, the Lord had promised grace to his people in trusting upon him; so that he doth not desire the Lord to look upon it as any act of his, for faith is little worth as an act of ours, but he puts the Lord in mind of his Covenant, of the Promise that he made with his people.

And the Saints, as they cannot plead faith, so they cannot plead holiness, for as their faith, so their holiness is imperfect; they have many failings, manifold corruptions are found in the most gracious heart, therefore they cannot plead holiness before the Lord.

It is true, Hezekiah in Isai. 38. 3. and so Nehemiah spread before the Lord what they had done, and how they had walked; but that can be no Argument that we should make use of that as an Argument, no Argument that that was the best Argument; but I say, they only did desire the Lord to look upon his own work in them, they were far from pleading any merit, any desert. And therefore you shall find the best of the Saints, when in the best temper, have been found disowning their own righteousness, and their own worthiness. Paul he had as much to plead, and to trust too, as any man living, and yet he looks upon all as dross and dung in comparison of Christ; in respect of pleading righteousness all is dross and dung, though it is good in its place, yet to lay it as a foundation, it is dross and dung. And see what is said Job 9. 20. If I justify myself, mine own mouth shall condemn me, if I say I am perfect, it shall also prove me perverse. O that they would mind this that boast of perfection! Job was as perfect as any, yet if I justify myself, mine own mouth shall condemn me, if I say I am perfect, it shall also prove me perverse. The very saying I am perfect, would condemn me, it would declare that I am lying against the truth, and I should declare my imperfection, while I am pleading perfection: Thus a gracious soul dare not plead faith nor holiness.

Secondly, It dare not plead any services; when it hath done its utmost for God, it dare not plead what it hath done, no work, no services, no tears, no fastings, it dare not plead these before the Lord. Indeed you shall find many unsound hearts, that have pleaded these things, and trusted to them, many unsound hearts and hypocrites, that have looked much to their righteousness, to their prayers and fastings, and their good works and services that they have done for God, they have pleaded these before God, Isai. 58. Wherefore have we fasted, and thou hast not seen, and afflicted our soul, and thou regardest not. And so you know the story of the Pharisee and the Publican that went up to the Temple to pray, the Pharisee he stood upon it to justify himself, Luke 18. 11, 12. he stood much upon his own justification, what he was not, and what he was, I am not as other men are, extortioners, unjust, adulterers, or even as this Publican: I fast twice a week, I give tithes of all I possess: But the Publican he smote upon his breast, saying, God be merciful to me a sinner; and the Publican he went away justified rather than the Pharisee. Though hypocrites look at their services, yet a gracious heart dare not look at anything it hath done: Matth. 25. When Christ takes notice what the Saints hath done, and says, Come ye blessed of my Father; I was hungry, and you gave me meat, thirsty, and you gave me drink, naked, and you clothed me. Why Lord, say they, when saw we thee a hungry, thirsty, and naked, when did we these things to thee?

What did the Saints do good works ignorantly? did good and did not know? No, that which is done out of ignorance is sinful, no, they knew what they did, and that they did but according to the mind of Christ; ah, but when done, they take no notice of it, their right hand shall not know what their left hand doth, for they dare not plead their services and their duties upon this account.

For they know whatever is good is not theirs, but Christ's, whatever in them that is good, and whatever good they have done, is by the Lord's Spirit, and therefore they know there is nothing for them to plead by way of merit; no, the more they are enabled and assisted to do for Christ, the more they are engaged unto Christ, Christ is not engaged to them, but they engaged to Christ.

And besides, whatever they have done in the service of the Lord as theirs, it is accompanied with many weaknesses and frailties, that if it were not for Christ and his righteousness, and Christ's presenting them, God the Father could not accept the best service that ever was done by the best men.

And besides, the Saints know that when they have done all they can, they are unprofitable servants, if they could do a thousand times more for God, yet they have nothing to plead: Christ teacheth us so, Luke 17. 10. So likewise ye, when you shall have done all those things which are commanded you, say, we are unprofitable servants; we have done that which was our duty to do. Mark, if it were possible for any of God's people to do all that the Lord requires, yet there is nothing to plead, you have done but that which was your duty, that which was your debt;

Now the payment of a debt is no engagement, he to whom the debt is paid is not engaged, you have done but your duty. And so the best of all the Saints, if they could do all that is required, they do but pay their debt; there is a debt of thankfulness, not debt of justice, we have done that which is duty, which we owe to mercy and free grace.

Again, the Saints cannot plead their sufferings. Though a man suffer never so much, and suffer never so well, and suffer upon a good ground, and suffer for the name of Christ, yet there is nothing that he can plead by way of merit, for there is no man suffers without sin: there was merit in Christ's sufferings, because he suffered and had no sin of his own, he was the Lamb of God without spot; but now the best of Saints upon earth, who do suffer for the name of Christ, cannot suffer without sin, though it is not punished for sin, yet still there is sin in the person, and so can be no desert.

And then beside, it is that which the Saints owe to Christ as they owe all duties, so they owe all suffering for the name of Christ, and if they should suffer a thousand times more than ever any man suffered, it is but what they owe; and therefore suffering cannot be pleaded no more than services. And so you have the first part of the point.

But of the second part, to speak more briefly to that, as a soul is taken off of itself, so it pleads only mercy, flees to free grace, comes to naked mercy.

First, For a gracious heart it sees and knows, that there is a fullness in mercy to satisfy all its wants, all its desires, there is enough in mercy to make abundant supply to it as it; sees there is that in itself, which may make it run from itself, so there is that in mercy and free grace, which may make it run to it as to a City of refuge. There is a fullness in mercy which may answer the souls desires and wants; for as you heard before, when the Lord doth discover to a man, that he is a poor creature, destitute and naked, why the same spirit doth discover, that there is enough in mercy to supply all wants; mercy hath made great provision for the poor, naked, destitute creature; and as it discovers to a soul, that it is a sinful creature, so the same spirit doth discover, that there is enough in mercy to take away all sin, and pardon all transgressions; and mercy and free grace hath set open a fountain, an infinite fountain, a bottomless fountain of merit in the blood of Christ, for the washing away of sin; and as the soul sees, that it is a poor weak creature, so the same spirit doth discover to it, that mercy is strong, and mercy is able to reach him in every condition, and able to lift him up in the lowest condition, and as it sees that it is an enemy to God, so the same spirit doth discover, that mercy can reconcile it, show what is done for the reconciliation of poor creatures; mercy hath given Jesus Christ for to slay the enmity and to reconcile poor lost creatures. Thus, I say, a gracious soul it will flee to mercy, it sees that there is a fullness in mercy to answer all its wants.

Secondly, And as it sees a fullness, so there is a freeness in the Lord's mercy, and therefore runs to mercy, as this woman did, and pleads mercy, and to cast herself into the arms of mercy, because free; see that the Lord is a tender hearted God, and that mercy flew freely from him, mercy makes free invitations, the soul seeing and hearing that, it is persuaded to apply itself to mercy.

Thirdly, Such a soul will flee to mercy, because it knows, that all that God doth for his people in the business of salvation, it is for the exaltation of mercy and free grace, the great work of the redemption of souls, it is only for the exaltation of mercy and free grace; it was free grace that found out the way of redeeming souls, and free grace that gave sinners to Christ, and free grace that gave Christ for sinners, and free grace gives Christ unto sinners, and all that God doth in sanctifying and saving his people, is upon the account of mercy and free grace, and therefore the Lord he invites souls to himself, and he makes choice of such as may most of all declare the riches of his mercy, when he sends to invite men to come in to him, he sends to the high ways and hedges, goes and compels them to come in, Go and call the blind and the lame: When Christ makes a feast, he sends to the poor; he knows, that the poor hungry souls, when they shall taste of the riches of his grace, they will be thankful, and they will advance mercy and free grace, and therefore he sends to the high-ways and hedges to compel them to come in. Thus you have seen both the parts of the Doctrine opened.

A word or two for improvement, and I shut up all.

First, Let us take heed, brethren and friends, that we be not found looking to any worthiness of our own, when we come to Christ; take heed that we be not found looking to any righteousness of our own; take heed we bring no price in our hand when we come for mercy, that will spoil all: O there is many a poor soul by this is kept from coming to Christ, from closing with Christ, from resting upon Christ, and so from salvation, because it is a hard matter to bring them off from looking to something of their own; men will hardly be persuaded that they do so; but yet it is a very ordinary thing, and thousands more do it, then will be persuaded they do it, who do look upon something of their own, and so are kept from Christ: Whence is it else, that men stand so much upon their own justification? men stand to plead for themselves, and justify themselves and quarrel with God in time of affliction, and entertain hard thoughts of God, it is because, men have too good thoughts of themselves? Whence comes it else, that men are up and down in their spirits, and comforted according to their actings? But from hence, because men are prove to look to something of their own, as a foundation of their acceptance with God: Whence is it else, that men are kept from closing with Christ, because of the sight of their unworthiness? But from hence, because men would have a price in their own hand, to buy grace of him, and mercy of him.

But it may be many a poor soul will say, that he doth not look to his worthiness, God forbid that I should do it, says the soul: Ah, but thy unworthiness does keep thee from Christ; and if so, then thou supposest that some worthiness in thee should make thee close with Christ.

Now I beseech you Brethren, that we do not look to anything in ourselves, think not to bring any price with you when you come to Christ, but know, that we are poor, and naked, and miserable, sinful, and weak, and full of enmity against God and Christ, that there is nothing that we can plead; what is there that we would carry? If you had more grace, you could not plead that; if you had done more service, you could not plead that; and if you had suffered for Christ, you could not plead that: O then why do our souls flag and hang back, and do not make hast to Jesus Christ?

And let me tell you, that souls that have nothing have best acceptance: I said before, that if you carry a price you loose all your labor, Christ deals with the poor, and with none else, and trades with them that have no money; and I say, that souls that come to Christ most empty, most naked, most destitute, most desolate, in the apprehension of their own vileness, sinfulness, enmity; that soul that comes thus to Christ, shall have best acceptance: If a man comes and pleads anything else, pleads, Lord, I have done so and so, I have been so and so, this moves not the Lord, to tell God of your righteousness, and what you have done, it moves not God at all; but to tell God what a poor creature you are, full of sin, and full of weakness, full of enmity, and full of wants, this will move the Lord: Is it not so with yourselves? I pray consider how it is with ourselves, and what it is that moves us; when a poor man comes, what is it that moves us? O when he shall spread his wants, and express the sense of his wants and misery; a poor man comes to you and says, O Sir pity me, help me, I want everything, I have not a rag to put on my back, no bread to put into my belly, I am blind, I am lame, I have no legs to walk with; no hands to work with, O this will make impression upon the hearts of men, though hard; And shall not this move the Father of mercies? O it will prevail much: If a soul shall go and say, Lord, I am miserable, naked no eye to see, no legs to walk, no hands to work, O this speaks loud; when the soul shall cry, Lord help, Lord hear me; I tell you, this will plead very loud in the ears of God, for Christ (as I said before) he will deal with none but the poor, he will heal them that have nothing; you have many Physicians that go up and down and give it out, that they will heal the poor for nothing. So Christ gives it our in the Gospel, that he will heal the poor, and none but the poor; let a poor desolate, naked, empty soul go to Christ, and say, Lord, thou hast invited poor sinners to come that have no money, and I am such an one,) Lord, heal me: Christ will heal such a soul; Christ will not heal the rich, if they be rich and full they have no need of him; The rich he will send away empty, but the poor shall not go away empty. O then, that this might persuade us, that when we go to God we might go poor, in the sense of our own unworthiness, for it is the best thing to move the Lord to mercy.

Lastly, Let us make mercy our refuge, for it is not enough for a man to run from himself, if he does not run to mercy, if he does not run to free grace, if he goes anywhere else there is no healing. Now therefore it calls upon us all, everyone in the Congregation this day, to make mercy and free grace our refuge: O that we might go to God upon that account, at this woman of Canaan did, Have mercy on me. O Lord, thou son of David: She comes to mercy, and pleads mercy, and rests upon mercy and free grace.

Oh that we might make more use of mercy and free grace for all things! Let us come hither for pardon of sin: Do you want pardon of sin? Plead with mercy and free grace, flee to the Promises of mercy, I will be merciful to their sin, and remember their sin no more. And so would you have peace? Go more to free grace, plead more with mercy, there peace is to be had, it is mercy that creates the fruit of the lips peace peace. And so do you want healing? healing of your corruptions, of your distempers of spirit? What is it that you want? O go to free grace, it is to be had in mercy, there is healing for you, I will heal their backslidings, and love them freely. Oh that the Lord would help us all to flee to this refuge. Do you desire anything? Go upon the account of mercy, do not stand upon any worthiness, any justification of yourselves, and if you be kept from Christ by your unworthiness, then you have an eye to your worthiness: O that we might not look upon any worthiness! If a man come to you and plead, that you would take pity upon him, it would move your hearts more, then if a man should come and require of you that you should do so and so for him, because you have done so and so for others? No, but if he falls down at your feet, it prevails more with you; and so, when God sees that a man stands upon it, upon his own justification, O this does not prevail; but when a soul cometh to the footstool of free grace, and pleads nothing but mercy, I am worthy to be cast out, but thou hast given an invitation to sinners, and here I will wait at the footstool of free grace; this will move the bowels of Jesus Christ.

Quest. Ah, but may not a man cry for mercy, and yet go without it?

Answ. True indeed, it is possible a man may cry for mercy, and call for mercy in a dead, cold, formal way, many a poor creature will say, Lord have mercy on me, and he trusts to his Lord have mercy on me, and so thinks that should save him; but that is not to trust in mercy; they trust in their saying so, but they trust not in mercy: It is possible that a poor wretch in time of extremity may cry out, Lord have mercy, and yet not apply himself to mercy; for the soul that applies himself to mercy, he applies himself in God's way: Now God's way in showing mercy, it is in Jesus Christ; if a man cries never so loud for mercy, yet if he does not apply himself in God's way, look thorough the Mediator, he may cry and go without it; but he that doth apply himself rightly to mercy, he seeks it in Christ, for mercy will do no good out of Christ; therefore a gracious heart applies himself only to Christ; and he that applies himself to mercy, he waits the Lord's time for mercy: So that a man may say, Lord have mercy, and cry out for mercy, and yet be far from obtaining mercy.

But now this let me say, that if any poor soul that is sensible of his own misery, that sees it is full of wants, and full of sin and unrighteousness, and full of weakness, unable to help himself, and full of enmity, so that it can do nothing but sin against God, I say, a soul that shall see this, and shall apply itself to mercy in mercies way, look to God through Christ the Messias, come as this woman, to the Messias, O thou son of David have mercy on me; no soul that shall thus apply himself to the mercy of God thorough Christ, being sensible of his own lost condition, and shall there wait, but certainly the Lord will make a good end with that soul, and that soul, as the Apostle speaks, Shall find grace and mercy to help in time of need.

My daughter is grievously vexed with a Devil.

SERMON VII.

YOU have seen this woman's faith in her coming to Christ, and closing with Christ as Lord, and as the son of David.

We shall now see the love of this woman; here is her love as well as her faith; there was a great deal of love and compassion in her towards her daughter, the stroke that was upon her daughters body, fell upon her spirit, and lay heavy there; and therefore she doth not say,

Lord have mercy upon my daughter, but, Lord have mercy upon me: It is my affliction, and my burden, Lord have mercy upon me, for my daughter is grievously vexed with a Devil. Her daughters affliction was heavy upon her spirit.

Quest. But you will say, Whether was this affection natural or spiritual grace? Whether did she speak this from natural affection to her child, or was this a fruit of her faith?

Answ. I answer, Here was both natural affection and spiritual grace; for seeing this woman had a seed of faith in her, as hath been proved, natural affection could not work alone; where there is the grace of faith in the heart, it will not leave nature to work alone, but grace will step in and rectify natural affection, order natural affection, set bounds to natural affection, set natural affection upon a right ground, and make them look to right ends, where there is grace natural affection cannot work alone: Indeed in that heart where grace doth not dwell, there nature works alone, as the natural affections, grief, and sorrow, and anguish, in a natural man, where the spirit is not, nature works alone, he cannot propound any spiritual consideration to himself to quiet his grief and sorrow; he may fetch in some carnal considerations, or he may stay till nature settle of itself, time may wear out his grief, but no work of grace to compose the spirit, time must work it out: But now in a gracious soul, nature cannot work alone, but grace will step in to order and rectify, to set bounds to the affections, and will help to compose the spirit; and so we may conclude of this woman, here was first natural affection in her; nature did teach her to love her child, but natural affection did not work alone, here was also the spiritual grace of faith, faith taught her to love her child aright; nature taught her to love her child, but grace taught her to love her child aright.

So that there was the working both of nature and grace.

Quest. But you will say, Was it not an evil to give way to natural affection?

Answ. I answer, No, natural affection is not the corruption of nature: Indeed there is a great deal of corruption in natural affection, but natural affection is not the corruption of nature; no, natural affection is part of the Image of God, the remnant of the Image of God which was left in man since the fall of Adam, for it is a sin to be without natural affection: The Apostle, speaking of the sins of the last days, he reckons up this as one, without natural affection, Rom. 1. 31. Natural affection is part of the Image of God; and it is that, without which the world could not be continued: The Lord in abundance of mercy and wisdom hath planted natural affection in the hearts of Parents to their Children, for if it were not so, God's name would soon be dishonored, and there would be all manner of cruelty, and the race of mankind would soon be destroyed; so that it is a mercy to have natural affection, but to have spiritual grace to work with natural affection, to have faith to set natural affection right, and to cause it to work aright, that is the greatest mercy: Now this woman had both, she loved her child, and loved her child aright.

And this woman may be a pattern to all parents, to all those that have children, and may teach everyone of us, not only to love our children, but to love them aright.

So then to close with the Doctrine, which is this: That wheresoever there is faith in any man or woman, it will rectify natural affection in them; faith will teach parents to love their children aright.

In the opening of this Point I shall show you two things.

First, That there is a great deal of love in natural affection in the hearts of parents towards their children.

Secondly, Where there is faith, it will rectify those natural affections, and teach to love Relations aright.

First, It will not be unnecessary to show you, that there is a great deal of love in natural affection in the hearts of parents to their children; it will not be altogether unuseful to see how much love there is in the hearts of parents to their children, that children may see the love of their parents to them.

What a great deal of natural affection is there in the hearts of parents towards their children? O Lord, thou son of David, have mercy on me, for my daughter is grievously vexed with a Devil.

And you shall see, that the Lord's hand hath engraven natural affection upon the hearts of parents, and it is engraven in such great letters upon the hearts of parents, that it is almost impossible to wear it out, Isai. 49. 15. Can a woman forget her sucking child, that she should not have compassion on the son of her womb? It is a very hard thing to do it, it is almost impossible that a woman should forget her sucking child: It is true indeed, some have done it, some have forgotten it, some have laid cruel hands upon their sucking child; such are monsters rather than women, but it is not possible that a woman that hath the compassions of a woman should forget her sucking child.

And our Savior tells us, that it is in the worst of men, Matth. 7. 11. If ye then being evil know how to give good gifts unto your children: There is this good thing in the hearts of the worst men living, love in their hearts to their children. And therefore it is, that the Lord doth make use of the compassions that is in the hearts of parents, to set forth his own love and compassion toward his people; that place before, Isai. 49. 15, 16. Can a woman forget her sucking child, that she should not have compassion on the son of her womb? Yea, they may forget, yet will I not forget thee: Behold, I have graven thee upon the palms of my hands. And so Psal. 103. 13. Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him: He maketh use of the bowels, the pity and compassion of Parents, to hold forth what bowels are in his heart towards his children.

Now that you may see what this natural affection is, and that you may see the greatness of the love of parents to their children, consider how it works.

First of all, Love makes them willing to undergo a great deal of pain and sorrow, labor, care and travel; what is it almost that Parents are not willing to undergo for their children? O how much sorrow do poor women meet withal in bearing and bringing forth children? And yet their desire to children doth carry them through all; A woman, though she have a sore travel, saith Christ, when delivered forgets her sorrow, for joy that a man is brought forth into the world. And so when they are brought forth; what great pains are parents willing to take for their children? How long do they hang upon their mothers breasts before they can shift for themselves? And yet that affection that the Lord hath planted in parents, makes them willing to do all this.

Secondly, that natural affection that the Lord hath planted in parents to their children, maketh them to sympathize with their children, in every burden and affliction, every affliction that lieth upon their children to be their own affliction; so this woman in the Text, O thou son of David have mercy upon me: The affliction was upon her daughter, but it was her burden; O Lord have mercy upon me. The parent doth sympathize with the child, and doth account the affliction of the child to be their own affliction; for how are Parents affected when their children are ill, and when the hand of God is upon their children? If the child's head doth but ache, it makes their heart ache, so sensible are parents of their children's troubles: The Noble man that came to Christ, see how he was affected when his child was sick, John 4. 49. Sir, come down ere my child die: At verse 47. he besought Christ, that he would come down and heal his son, for he was at the point of death. Christ delayed the business, verse 48. then said Jesus unto him, Except ye see signs and wonders ye will not believe: But see how abruptly he answered Christ, verse 49. Sir, come down ere my child die. He was not able to attend anything else, all his mind was upon his child, O Sir, come down ere my child die. He could hear nothing till his child was healed, and thus natural affection worketh toward their children.

Yea thirdly, This natural affection will ma•• the parents to pass by many injuries that are done by children to parents, and yet parents ready to pardon them; upon the least submission the heart of a parent relents; it is a very hard matter for a parent to cast off his child, though there be many provocations.

See some Instances in Scripture; that of Abraham is remarkable, Gen. 21. 9, 10, 12. His son Ishmael he was a wicked child, one that sco'fed at the son of the Promise, and Sarah she maketh her complaint, and desires that the bondwoman and her child might be cast out, verse 10. And the thing was very grievous in Abraham's •ight because of his son, verse 11.

Though he was a wicked child, a rebelli••s child, a scoffer at good, yet when it came to casting of him out, it seems very grievous to Abraham, because of his son.

And you know the Prodigal son, that had spent his portion in riotous courses, how willing was his father to forgive him, to pardon all his miscarriages, and to close with him again upon his first return and submission?

And you know that Instance of David, which holds forth a great deal of affection that was in that good man towards a wicked child, 2. Sa. 18. 5. Deal gently for my sake with the young man, even with Absalom. He was a wicked and rebellious son, one that rose up against his father, one that would have turned his father out of his kingdom, one that sought his fathers life, one that had committed great wickedness in the sight of the Sun: But oh! how doth David's heart yearn towards him? And when the Captains went forth to battle, David gave this charge, that they should deal gently with him for my sake. Thus you see how the hearts of parents works towards their children.

Fourthly, That natural affection that God hath planted in the hearts of parents towards their children, doth teach them to accept willingly any service that is done by their children; though it be never so weakly done, yet if the Father sees that the child hath done its good will, in obedience, and in love, O! how acceptable is the least piece of service done by such a child? And therefore the Lord taketh an argument from this to strengthen his people's faith, I will spare them as a man spareth his own son that serveth him, Mal. 3. 17.

Fifthly, Natural affection will teach the parents to supply all the wants of the children. O! what care doth parents take to supply their children's wants, that they may want nothing that is good for them? They shall have that which is suitable to them: Ye that are evil know how to give good gifts to your children: What care do parents take of their children, while young, to supply their wants? And what care do they take to make provision for their children, when they are dead and gone? Nay, do not many a poor parent undo himself to make provision for his children, that he may make them great in this world, and leave them something when he be dead and gone.

Sixthly and lastly, to name no more; The love that is in parents makes them exceeding unwilling to part with their children; it is the greatest affliction in the world, they had rather loose all their estates then loose their children: Nay, though parents many times be so poor as they cannot keep their children, yet how loath are they to part with their children? The poor Widow we read of, 2 King. 4. 1. all her estate was gone; nothing left her but her two sons, the creditor came to take unto him her two sons from her, but how loath was she to part with her two sons? Nay, how hard is it for parents to part with their children when God takes away their children by death? You know that Instance of Job, Job 1. he did bear very well all the afflictions and losses that he met withal, till he came to loose his children, the messengers came and told him, that all his estate was taken away; and you read of nothing that Job said, but when they come and told him, his children were slain, then Job rent his mantle, and fell down upon the ground and worshipped: To loose his estate was nothing, but to hear that all his children were slain, he rent his mantle, and fell down upon the ground; a token of his great sorrow: And you know how David was affected, when they brought him word that Absalom was killed, he went up to the chamber over the gate, and he wept as he went, saying, O my son Absalom, would God I had died for thee: A most pathetic complaint that this poor man makes when his child was taken away, though he was a wicked child, and one that sought his fathers life. Thus you see the first part of the Doctrine, that God hath planted natural affection in the hearts of parents to their children.

But secondly, I shall show you, that where there is faith, natural affection cannot work alone, but faith will rectify natural affection; faith will teach Parents to love their children aright: Natural affection will teach them to love their children, ah, but spiritual love that springs from faith will teach them to love their children aright.

Quest. But you will say to me, when may Parents be said to love their children aright? or how shall we know that the love of Parents to their children, is not only the working of Natural affection?

Answ. First, where there is faith, it will teach Parents to love the souls of their children: Nature will teach to provide for the body, but the Spirit of the Lord that teaches Parents to look after the souls of their children; now when the soul is loved and respected more than the body, then do Parents love their children aright.

In Gen. 17. 18. you may see what a request Abraham doth make for his son Ishmael: Oh! that Ishmael might live before thee. God hath been making many gracious promises to Abraham concerning another Seed, but Abraham did not forget his son Ishmael, neither could he beg that he might have a great estate, but that he might live in the sight of the Lord: When Parents take care of the souls of their children, then Parents love their children aright.

Secondly, Parents love their children aright, when as they do love them in obedience to the Lord; when they love them, and when they take pains, and act for them, and perform all offices of love to them in obedience to the Lord; when Parents do bring up their children, and perform every duty to them, in obedience to the Lord: these are the children that the Lord hath graciously given his servant; and so he love them, and perform duties to them, that he may obey the Lord, and be found working the work of his station and relation, in bringing up these children to the Lord; this is that love that is not only natural, but spiritual.

Thirdly, Again, Parents love their children aright, when as they have an eye to the Covenant of God concerning their children; when they have an eye to the promises of God that he hath made to the children of Believers: He hath said, that they that come of thee, shall build the old waste places. When as Parents thus eye the Covenant of God in looking upon their children as the Lord's, and these are they that the Lord hath said he will own; and so love their children more because they are the Lord's than theirs, because the Lord hath promised that he will own them, and make use of them. And so I conceive Mose's Mother had respect to this in her love to her child, Hebr. 11. 23. By faith Moses when he was born, was hid three Months of his Parents, because they saw he was a proper child, and they not afraid of the Kings commandment. Her love sprung from faith, when she hid her child Moses three months; it was not from Natural affection, but from faith. By faith Moses when he was born, was hid three months, because they saw he was a proper child, and they not afraid of the Kings commandment. The Kings commandment was, that all the Male children should be drowned, and to disobey his commandment, it did endanger their own lives; ah, but by faith, she ventured: she looked upon her child as one that God would make use of, she was persuaded that God would make use of this child Moses, to do something for the future; she knew that there was a promise that God would deliver his people, and she knew not but that this might be the Man, and so was not afraid, but by faith hid him.

Fourthly, Parents love their children aright, when as they are much praying for their children, presenting their children to the Lord, and praying for them, crying to the Lord in their behalf for the blessing of the Lord upon them, when they are very instant with God that he would take away the guilt of original sin that is upon their children, and the guilt of actual transgressions that are found upon their children. Job every day took a sacrifice, and sacrificed for his Sons and Daughters, he prayed for them, he was careful that sin might not lie upon them: Oh, that was spiritual love that was found in Job, it was of a right stamp, he was careful that the guilt of sin might not lie upon them, and therefore he every day offered a sacrifice to the Lord. And the woman of Canaan she cries in the behalf of her child, she comes to Christ, and cries to him for her child. And so when Parents go to Christ for their children; when under bodily Infirmities go to Christ for them, and when under spiritual Infirmities, go to Christ for them, pleading with Christ for them, then do Parents love their children aright.

Fifthly; when Parents are careful to educate their children for God, when they are careful that God may be honored by their children, that their children may be instructed so as to honor God, when they desire and endeavor to prevent all dishonor that may be done to God by their children, to reprove them, and to rebuke them, and not to be so indulgent as old Eli was, which proved to be the ruin of the whole family. I say, when Parents are careful that God may not be dishonored, but labor that their children may be instrumental for God, and they do seek the Lord for this thing, and do deal with them upon this account, and are careful to instruct them, and to lay before them the mind of God, and careful so to dispose of them, as God may be served by them; when this is the care of Parents, this is a discovery that their love is not only natural affection, but spiritual grace, and their natural affection is set right by their faith, which the Lord is pleased to bestow upon them.

For the Application.

First, Take notice what a mercy it is, that God hath planted such Natural affections in the hearts of Parents; it is a great mercy, it is that which is little taken notice of, but it is that which we and all in the world have cause to bless God for, that parents, yea those that are evil can do so much good for their children, give out of the good things which they have to their children; there is much of the wisdom and goodness of God in it, that Parents should do so much for their children, when they do not deserve it, it is long before it can deserve anything; nay when grown up, there are many times contrary deserts, and that yet the hearts of errants should be kept up towards their children, as I said before, there is a great deal of the wisdom and goodness of God in it; for there is a great deal of evil thereby prevented, a great deal of sin and cruelty that is prevented by the Lord's giving of natural affection. Oh admire the wisdom & goodness of God in this!

Secondly, Let Parents know that this is not enough to have natural affection and love to their children, but oh that Parents would labor to love their children aright. It is not enough to love them much, to have great natural affections, but let Parents labor to love their children aright; labor so to love them as to love their souls, to take care of their souls, which is a thousand times more worth then the body; labor to love them in obedience to God; labor to eye the Covenant of God in loving your children; be more in seeking the face of God, in the behalf of your children: Oh that Parents would look upon it as their duty, to pray more for their children. Oh, look upon Abraham, and let him be your pattern; how did he cry to the Lord in the behalf of Ishmael? it lies upon all Parents to go to God for their children, yea for everyone in particular. Oh that such an one might live in thy sight! Look upon the woman of Canaan, how did she cry to Christ for her daughter? oh, Lord have mercy upon me: Now let Parents go to Christ for their children; oh go and cry for the souls of thy children, as this woman did for the body of her daughter; oh Lord, I see such a corruption in such a child, and such a lust in such a child, oh that the Son of David would have mercy on them. We should go to Christ for the souls of our children, that Christ would cast out those corruptions that we see sprouting in our children.

Thirdly, Oh that this might provoke us all to look after faith: what need have Parents to labor for faith in Jesus Christ? if it be but upon this account, that you may love your children aright: oh look to Christ for faith, cry unto Christ to give you faith, that so you may love your children aright: There may be a great deal of natural affection in parents, they may dote upon their children, and undo their children, and yet not love them aright; for it is impossible that a man or woman that hath not faith to love children aright, they cannot love their children aright, till they have faith.

And to provoke all parents to look after faith upon this account of their children, let me say this to you; that faith will teach you to love your children impartially. There is a great deal of partiality in natural affection, and it runs out much to one child, and neglects another; ah, but with spiritual love it is not so. When Parents love their children aright, it will teach to love their children more equally; not to love one more than another, unless they see more of God in one than another.

Again, let me tell you, that faith will make your work to your children easy; there is a great deal of labor, travel, and pains (as you have heard) to bring forth children, and a hard work to bring up children when brought forth, but faith will make your work more easy, when as God is eyed in it, and so you are bringing up children for God, when as you are loving and caring for children in obedience to God. Oh this will make your work more easy.

And further let me tell you, that faith will make your work more acceptable to God. That work you are doing for children, when it is done in faith, is accepted; if you love your children in faith, the Lord will take it well at your hand, and the Lord will reward all the labor, service, travel and pains that Fathers and Mothers do undergo for their children. That instance you find in Scripture of Moses his Mother, when Pharaoh's daughter found Moses by providence, she commits him to his own Mother to be his Nurse, and she pays his own Mother for him: And so the Lord he will deal with you that are parents that act in faith, and perform your duties in faith, the Lord will reward you for your love to your own children, for taking care of your own children, all your labor is taken notice of by the Lord, and you shall be rewarded: Oh! what an encourage is here to all Parents to look after faith in Christ, that so your service may be accepted of the Lord?

One thing more, and so I conclude: and that is a word to children; is it so, that there is so much love in the hearts of Parents to their children? is there so much that Parents do from love to children? oh, that children would labor to know what is their duty that they owe to Parents! it cannot be told, it cannot be expressed, how much it is that children owe unto parents. Children, it is impossible that ever you should requite the love of your parents; oh the pains, the travel, and sorrow of bringing forth, and bringing up! oh, that children might know that there is a great engagement lies upon them to love their parents, to respect their parents, to take heed that they do not grieve their parents, to pass by all in firmities of parents, to show all respect to them, and when grown up, to take care of them!

And this is a duty that Christ lays upon you, though a Moral duty, see what is said in 1 Tim. where children may see what Christ enjoins them, 1 Tim. 5. 4. But if any widow have children or Nephews, let them learn first to show piety at home, and to requite their parents, for that is good and acceptable before God. God lays this duty upon children: you should labor to requite your parents, to remember their love, their care, their sorrow, their pains and travel; and you are bound by the Law of Christ to requite your parents, this is good, this is piety, and this is acceptable to God. And so that place, Levite. 19. 3. Ye shall fear every man his Mother, and his Father, and keep my Sabbaths: I am the Lord your God. Here is a duty that God lays upon children, to fear every man his Mother and Father. Children are most apt to despise their Mothers, therefore the Lord begins there, and lays that duty, first that children should fear every man his Mother.

And take notice of it, that this is a duty that the Lord sets before the keeping of his Sabbath; as if the Lord should say, in vain shall they pretend to be Religious, if they do not fear and reverence every man his Mother and his Father: I will not accept of your service. It was a brand that was set upon Esau to all generations, that he did that which was a grief to his Father and Mother. Now children see your duty, and remember your duty, which the Lord Jesus lays upon you.

And oh that children would labor for faith, that they may perform their duties▪ Parents cannot love their children aright, till they have faith; and truly children cannot reverence their parents, nor perform the duties they owe unto parents, unless they have faith. Oh, then that Parents and children would look up to Christ for faith! and then shall both be able through faith in Christ to perform that mutual duty that God requires from parents and children.

And to shut up all; let this that hath been spoken, strengthen the faith of all God's people in God's love to them: Oh, that by this we might ascend to the love of God! O, that they that think they have not been concerned in what hath been spoken hitherto, would know they are concerned in this. The Lord would have you to ascend by the consideration of the bowels that are in parents to their children, to a consideration of those infinite bowels that are in him towards you that are his children; As the Father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him; what ever workings of love are in the hearts of parents towards their children, oh! know that there is larger workings of love in the heart of God towards his children; there are infinite bowels in the everlasting Father: and if there be so much pity in the hearts of parents, that they are willing and ready to give out good things to their children, and willing to pass by and to pardon the miscarriages of their children; oh! how much more willing is our God to pass by and to pardon the failings of you that are his children? oh! that this might encourage prodigal children to return to the Lord▪ If the father receive his child, that hath been a prodigal, why the Lord is ready to receive you though a prodigal, if the Lord give you an heart to return, though you have spent all, and abused all your mercies, yet the Lord is ready to pardon and to receive you.

And let it strengthen your faith and hope in Christ, you that cleave to Christ for righteousness, you that are the children of that everlasting Father; oh know that Christ will plead for you, Christ will cry to his Father for you: Was the woman of Candan so affected with the misery of her daughter, that she cries, Lord, have mercy on me, my daughter is grievously vexed with a devil? ⟨◇⟩ (I say) this found in this woman towards her daughter? and shall not this be found in Christ towards his children? oh! then let this comfort you, when you scarce dare go to God, and cry yourselves, such and such a corruption doth annoy you, such and such an unclean spirit is in you: Oh! the Lord Jesus pities you under every spiritual burden; when as you are troubled with unclean spirits, he hath bowels of compassion towards you; and know that he will go to his Father, and cry to his Father; and if he cry, he cannot deny the son of his love, but an answer shall be given to all those requests that Christ puts up for you, or for any of his people.

Matth. 15. 23.

But he answered her not a word.

SERMON VIII.

I Come now to speak of the trial of this woman's faith; and here is the first trial of her faith, he answered her not a word. A very great trial, a sore trial, that this poor woman should in her great strait, and under such a burden and pressure of spirit, come to Jesus Christ, and cry so earnestly unto him, and believe so steadfastly upon him, and yet Jesus Christ give her not one word of answer to her prayer, this was a sore trial; for this carriage of Christ, it seems to be contrary to what she had heard of Christ, and to what she believed was in Jesus Christ; for Christ seemed now either to be without compassion to her, he seems to take no notice, not to be affected; she complained and cried out of her great burden, and Christ speaks not a word; the Lord Jesus Christ seems either not to be affected with her misery, or not to regard her misery, not to take notice of such a poor creature as she was; now both these were contrary to what she had heard of Christ, and to that she had believed was in Jesus Christ, without doubt she had heard out of the Prophet Isaiah, that the Lord Jesus Christ when he came, should bind up the broken-hearted, and preach deliverance to the captives; now when she applies herself to Christ, Christ seems not to be that compassionate Savior; certainly she had heard that Zion's King was meek and lowly, and that he would not break the bruised reed, nor quench the smoking flax; but Christ seems to disdain her, and take no notice of her, nor look after such avile worm as she was; nay, she had believed, that Christ was low and meek, as appeareth by that expression of hers in ver. 22. Thou Son of David have mercy on me; now David was a merciful Prince, and was very pitiful and compassionate and very meek, and lowly, and humble, therefore she believed that the Lord Jesus Christ was much more compassionate; and she did believe that he would not disdain her though she was a poor Gentile; but Christ seems to be quite contrary, and answered her not a word; this was a sore trial

The Doctrine then is this. That it is a very sore and great trial unto the Lord's people, when the Lord is silent to their prayers, and gives no answer to their cries.

In the opening of the point I shall show you; that God hath dealt thus with his own people; and that it hath been a very sore trial unto

And then shall show you wherefore the Lord is pleased thus to try his people; which will make way for the Application.

First, God hath dealt thus with his people. I shall point you to some places of Scripture: David often maketh this complaint, Psalm 28. 1. Unto thee will I cry O Lord, my rock, be not silent to me, lest if thou be silent to me, I become like them that go down into the pit. How earnestly doth David beseech the Lord that he would not be silent to his prayer? Lord, Do not turn away thy ear from my prayer, and do not shut thy mouth, be not silent. If thou dost not speak something to me in answer to my prayer, I am not able to hold out, but shall be like them that go down to the pit. And Psalm 69. 3. he maketh a sore complaint, I am weary of my crying, my throat is dried: mine eyes fail, while I wait for my God. The trial was so great to his spirit, that it had an influence upon his Body; when David cried to the Lord, he answered not a word; his throat was dried and parched up, and his eyes began to fail. And so the Prophet Jeremiah, Lam. 3. 44. he expresseth it in the name of the Church. Thou hast covered thyself with a cloud, that our prayer should not pass thorough. God seems to hide himself, and cover himself with a cloud, and did so hide himself as prayer could not find him; he gave him not a word. And the Prophet Habakkuk he complains of it, chap. 1. ver. 2. O Lord how long shall I cry, and thou wilt not hear? even cry unto thee of violence, and thou wilt not save? Nay, that it was a sore trial, you shall see it in those expressions of the Prophet David, spoken of in the person of Christ, Psalm. 22. 2. O my God I cry in the daytime, but thou hearest not; and in the night-season, and am not silent. It was a sore affliction to Christ himself. O my God, I cry in the daytime, and in the night-season; that is, I cry continually, night and day, never silent: But thou art continually silent to me, this was a sore affliction and burden to Christ himself.

Now that this is a sore affliction and trial, for God to be silent to the prayers of his people, it appears,

First, if you consider that relation the Lord stands in to his people, and they to him; he stands in relation of a Father, they his children; he stands in relation of an Husband, they his Spouse; he stands in relation of a friend, they his friend; Abraham, he was the friend of God, and so is every believer; God a friend to him, and he a friend to God; now it is a sore trial, when one friend shall cry to another, or a wife to an Husband, or a child to a father, and these relations not give one word of Answer, if a poor child in great extremity should cry to his father—father help me, and the father not to give one word, this is a sore trial; if a man cry to a stranger, and meet not with one word, it is no great disappointment, but when a child cries to a father, or a wife to an Husband, or a friend to a friend, and they not to speak a word, it is a great trial.

Secondly, it will appear to be a great trial, because there is nothing in all the world, that a gracious soul longs more after then this, that the Lord would be giving a return of prayer, that there may be a converse betwixt God and the soul, to speak to God, and to hear God speaking back again to it; nothing that a gracious soul more longs after; oh it longs to hear a word from God, it knows that the return of prayer, is the way to make a soul rich towards God, and to make it rich in experience, in faith, in thankfulness, in obedience. Oh how doth a Merchant-venturer long for the return of his commodity from a far Country? truly there is no merchant in the world, can long more for the return of his commodity from a far Country, then a gracious soul longs for the return of prayer; oh saith the soul, when wilt thou come unto me? Now if it be that which a gracious soul doth more long after then anything in the world, it is a great trial, when God doth not give a return of prayer.

Thirdly, A gracious heart when it puts up a prayer to God, it looketh for a return, for an answer; Psalm 85. 8. I will hear what God the Lord will speak: And so the Prophet Habakkuk after he had prayed, I will get me upon the watchtower, and I will watch to see what he will say unto me. I will wait to see what God will speak by his spirit, or by his providences; one way or other God will speak. Now to have this expectation disappointed, to wait upon the Lord for an answer, and the Lord not to speak one word, this is a sore trial.

Fourthly, it must needs be a great trial, when God gives never a word of answer; for a believing soul knows assuredly, that if God do not answer, none else can hear prayers, and give a return to prayer; it is God's name, oh thou that hearest prayers, unto thee shall all flesh come. God only can hear prayer, and God only can give an answer; it is God only that can reach out mercy to the soul, and speak a word of comfort and counsel; God only can speak a word of strength, a word of peace, the creature cannot: No, it is God only, I create the fruit of the lips peay, peace. Now when a soul looks up to the Lord, and meets with nothing from him, and knows that there is no answer to be expected from the creature, this must needs be a great and a sore trial.

Fifthly, it will appear to be a great trial, if we consider that the flesh and Devil are exceeding ready to make a great advantage of this providence of God and dispensation towards his people; for they will improve this to the dishonor of God and discomfort of the soul, and therefore a great trial.

In two or three Particulars, I shall show you how ready the Flesh and Devil is to improve this to God's dishonor, and the souls discomfort.

First, the Flesh and Devil will raise up many doubts, and jealousies, and misgiving thought• both concerning God, and concerning a man's own condition, and concerning the duties and services which are offered up to the Lord. They will make the soul to doubt of the goodness of God, to doubt of the free grace of God, to doubt of the faithfulness of God, of the truth of God; Surely saith unbelief, the Lord is not so gracious as thou hast taken him to be; thou hast rested upon the Arm of his mercy, and thou hast believed his grace to be sufficient for thee in every condition; thou hast looked toward him as toward an infinite compassionate God; but where are the compassions of the Lord now? not to speak one word to relieve and comfort thee: Thus will the Devil and the unbelieving heart object, when the Lord doth not give out a present answer; yea unbelief will be accusing the faithfulness of God: Oh! where is his Word and his Promise? He hath said, that they that call upon the Name of the Lord shall be saved. He hath said, Call upon me in the time of trouble, and I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify me: h! where is the faithfulness of God? God is unmindful of his promise. Asaph was under this temptation, Psalm 77. 7, 8. Will the Lord cast off forever? and will he be favorable no more? Is his mercy clean gone forever? doth his promise fail for evermore? And thus he goeth on making many Queries concerning the goodness and faithfulness of God.

Secondly, as the Devil and the Flesh doth raise many doubts and jealousies concerning the faithfulness of God, so there are many doubts cast into the soul concerning the eternal estate and condition of the soul, and that upon this ground; when as the soul hath sought the Lord, and the Lord not answer, presently the soul begins to doubt; oh, surely I am no child of God, no sponse, no friend; God could not deal so with children, not to give one word of comfort, not one word of answer: Oh, surely I am an Hypocrite, for the prayer of the upright is his delight, and if there were any truth of heart in me, the Lord would give out an answer; and thus the Devil and the Flesh raise many jealousies and fears about the souls eternal state. Or Thirdly, if the Devil and the Flesh prevail not so far as to cause the soul to question the goodness of God, and the Truth of God, or to question its own Sonship, yet they will prevail so far as to make the soul question his services and his duties which it hath performed to God: Oh! surely I have not spoken to the Lord as I ought, surely I have not been fervent in Spirit, serving the Lord, my prayer hath been but words of my own, not the teachings of his Spirit, if it had been his own Spirit, the Lord would have heard his own Spirit; but my prayer hath been accompanied with so many infirmities as it hath not reached up to heaven. And thus you see how many a poor soul is led into temptation upon this ground, the Lord's being silent to the prayers of his people.

But you will say, wherefore doth the Lord thus try his people?

I answer, sometimes indeed the fault is in ourselves that we have no answer to our prayers; for it is possible that a man or woman that hath faith in Jesus Christ, may be remiss in their walkings▪ they may neglect some known duty, or they may connive and wink at some evil way, and if so, no wonder though the Lord be silent at their prayers. If I regard iniquity in my heart, the Lord will not hear my prayer: If David regard iniquity, if there be any way of sin that his heart closeth with, the Lord will be silent to his prayers; if any iniquity be regarded, no wonder though the Lord do not hear.

Yea, sometimes God's own people are found remiss in their duty, and though they pray, they pray remissly and coldly; their prayer is accompanied with so much deadness and distraction, there is so little life and so little spirit, the Spirit speaks so low that the Lord cannot hear, and he will not hear; and when it is so that we pray coldly and lazily, we make but a light matter of it, and are not found crying to the Lord with our hearts, no wonder though the Lord be silent to our prayers.

Yea, sometimes God's own people may miss of an answer, because they do not look after an answer, and then the fault is their own; when as we shall put up our petition, and shall not be looking after our prayer, shall not be found looking up, as David speaketh, Psalm. 5. 3. In the morning will I direct my prayer unto thee, and will look up. I will wait for an answer, and hear what God the Lord will speak, Psalm 85. 8. But when we do not regard our prayer, then no wonder there is no answer: I say therefore the Lord is sometimes silent to the prayers of his own people, and the fault is in themselves.

But the Lord is not always silent upon these grounds: A gracious heart may walk close with God, and may regard no iniquity, and desire not to connive at any sin, and it may wait upon the Lord for an answer; and yet the Lord may be silent, and give no present answer to the prayers of his people.

Why so? why, will the Lord deal so with any of his people?

I answer, for gracious ends; as

First, that they may exercise the spirit of prayer which is given out, the Lord he loves to hear the cry of his people, he loves to hear the voice of the children when they speak in prayer; there is nothing on eath that, God delights more in: 〈◇〉 let me see thy face, and let me hear thy voice (saith Christ to his Spouse) for thy voice is sweet. No• because the voice of faith in prayer 〈◇〉 sweet to the Lord, the Lord he seemeth 〈◇〉 to hear or not to take notice for the present, th• so they may pray the more: As a man that delights in music, if the Musicians play, he 〈◇〉 take no notice, but lets them play on, because he delighteth in it; and so the Lord he takes delight in the prayers of his servants, The prayer• the upright is his delight, and he will give no present answer, that so they may go on praying 〈◇〉 crying.

Secondly, the Lord may seem to be silent 〈◇〉 the prayers of his people, that so he may exerc• the faith and patience of his servants. It is great trial of the faith and patience of the Sai• when as the Lord seems to take no notice, 〈◇〉 give no answer to their prayers; it was for 〈◇〉 end, that our Lord Jesus Christ gave not a 〈◇〉 of answer to this woman of Canaan, it was that might try her faith, and her patience, and that might exercise it, and that by the exerci• faith, faith might be increased, and her faith 〈◇〉 arise to a great faith by this exercise, for at 〈◇〉 Christ commends her for her faith; Oh 〈◇〉 great is thy faith, be it unto thee even as 〈◇〉 wait.

Again, the Lord is silent many times at the prayers of his people, to try whether they will continue in prayer, though the Lord doth give them no present answer; oh here is the trial of perseverance; God hath heard my prayer (saith David) therefore will I call upon him as long as I live. Ah but that is no great matter for a man to say, God hath heard my prayer and therefore I will call upon him still: But for a soul to say, I have been crying and calling, and I will still wait upon him, as long as I live, I will wait upon God; Oh here is perseverance in prayer, in which Christ doth delight.

Fourthly, the Lord is silent many times upon this ground; he gives no present answer, that so he may prepare an answer for them, and that he may prepare them for an answer; God gives no present answer, that so he may prepare mercy, and ripen mercy, and make mercy fit for his people, and that he may ripen them, and fit them and their hearts for the mercy; so that it is in abundance of grace, and mercy, and love that the Lord is pleased many times not to give out a present answer to his people, for all the time the Lord is silent, he is preparing of mercy and goodness for them, he is making of the mercy fit for his people, the mercy shall be ripe, and the mercy shall be sweet and wholesome, and do them good at the heart: When the Lord hath thus prepared mercy for them, and fitted them for the mercy, they shall have the mercy; see what is said in Isa. 80. 18. And therefore will the Lord wait that he way be gracious unto you, and therefore will he be exalted; for the Lord is a God of judgment, blessed are all they that wait for him. He waits that he may be gracious, he waits for the best season, the fittest opportunity, he will stay till the soul hath need of help, in the fittest time the Lord will come in mercy, when he may be most exalted for mercy, when his people may see most of the hand of God, when they most prize their mercies, and glorify God for mercy; God waits for such a time. And therefore you see it is for gracious ends that God many times seems to be silent for a season, and gives not one word in answer to prayer, as Christ here to this woman of Canaan.

For the Application of the Point.

First, it speaks sadly of them that never regard whether the Lord give an answer or no, to their prayer, that pray and pray, and look not after an answer: How far are such men and women from the disposition of God's children? a gracious heart cannot but be affected, when it speaks to the Father, and the Father gives no answer: And therefore surely when men and women make many prayers, and look not up for an answer, that regard not whether the Lord answer, or not, either they are none of his children, or else under a sore temptation; for let me say unto you, that though it is not for your prayers that God doth regard prayer, yet if you do not look up for an answer, if you do not regard your prayers, neither will God regard your prayers. And let me say further, that this is a great dishonor to God: Oh what a $\langle \diamond \rangle$ is it? it is a loss to God, and it is a loss also to the soul: for a man to lose all his prayers, it is a loss indeed. When as a soul doth not regard whether God answer or no, God loseth, he loses that glory which would redound to him in the answer of prayer: Call upon me (saith God) in the day of trouble, and I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify me. Now if the soul call upon God, and doth not observe whether God hears or no, it cannot glorify God for the return of prayer, but God loses that honor, that thankfulness, and that love and obedience, and that dependence, which an answer of prayer might engage the soul to.

And as God loseth, so the soul loseth; oh they that look not after the return of prayer, they lose that which would make their souls rich. For a Merchant to lose all his return, it will make him a poor Tradesman in conclusion; that soul that doth not look after the return of prayer, loseth a great deal of faith, and dependence, and experience; for God by giving out an answer to the prayers of his people, he doth encourage them, and engage them to trust in him at all times so long as they live; they that lose the return of prayer, lose the strengthening of faith, and the engaging of their heart to God.

But secondly, let me speak to such poor souls as are in the same condition with this woman of Canaan, that have prayed, and have not met with one word of answer: Poor souls! is this the condition of any of you? I know that it hath been, and may still be the condition of the Lord's dearest servants, they may pray, and the Lord may seem to give no answer: Remember it was so with David, Jeremiah, and Habakkuk, and with Christ himself.

And let me say this unto thee, that if thou regardest any iniquity in thy heart, any known sin that thou regardest or connivest at, or if there be slightness in the performance of thy duty, or contentest thyself with a slothful performance of thy duty, or thou dost not regard thy prayer when thou hast put it up to the Lord; for this we have cause to be humbled, and no wonder the Lord do not answer our prayers.

But now, if thy own spirit and the Spirit of the Lord can testify that thou desirest to regard no iniquity in thy heart, but to walk up to thy duty, and desire to be conformable to Christ, and desire to cry in faith, and to wait upon the Lord for an answer, be of good comfort, though thou dost not meet with one word of answer from the Lord, though thou hast cried nights and days, weeks, months and years, and hast not met with with one word of answer, yet be comforted, this may be the condition of God's own people.

And let me say further by way of encouragement, that the Lord he extends much good to thee in this deferring and delaying to give out an answer; it is for gracious and merciful ends to thy soul that the Lord do not give thee the present mercy thou prayest for; he will exercise the spirit of prayer, he will exercise thy faith and patience, and he will fit thee for mercy, and mercy for thee, and thou shalt have it so at last as thou shalt bless God for it.

Yea let me say further, though an answer be not given out, thy prayer is heard, and thy person <◊> accepted: Thy prayer is heard with the Lord; oh that that might be a stay to poor souls that are in this condition as the woman of Canaan was, that cry, and have cried long: I say thy prayer is heard. Oh says the soul that I knew my prayer were heard, if I did but know that the Lord hath heard my prayer, I would be content to wait all my days for an answer, I have been crying for the light of his countenance, and for the assurance of his love, I have been crying night and day, and if the Lord hath heard my prayer, I should be content to wait for an answer.

But how shall I know that the Lord hath heard my prayer?

I answer thus; First of all, by that secret support, by those secret hints which the Lord is pleased at one time or other to bring to thy spirit, some hint of life, some hint of comfort. Surely if thou hast observed while thou hast waited upon the Lord, there hath been some secrets hints of comfort that after thou hast been before the Lord, thou hast been at ease; and thy trouble is not so great as it was. Hannah when she poured out her soul before the Lord, she was in great distress, but before she went away, the Lord heard her prayer; and this was the sign there was some ease in her spirit, her burden was taken off, a great deal refreshed in her spirit and so though the Lord hath given thee but the least hint of comfort, the Lord hath heard thy prayer, and in due time he will give a full answer▪

Secondly, thou mayst know that the Lord hath heard thy prayer by that strength he hath given thee to go thorough: Thou art under sore afflictions and temptations, such as are ready to break thy very spirit, to make thy soul fade and faint, and yet thou art supported; thou hast cried to the Lord, and thou sayest thou hast no answer; why, doth nor the Lord support thee? if the Lord doth support thee, and bear thee up under thy burden, he doth in some measure answer thee, or else how comes it to pass thou hast not sunk under thy burden? when Paul besought the Lord under his temptation, he prayed thrice, that is, often, that God would take off the Messenger of Satan; the temptation was not taken off, ah but Paul was heard in his prayer, in that the Lord did bear him up under his temptation, My grace is sufficient for thee; though I do not think good to remove the temptation, I have heard thy prayer, my grace is sufficient for thee. So then remember poor soul that if the Lord hath supported thee, the Lord hath heard thy prayer.

Thirdly, doth the Lord carry on thy soul to continue in thy prayer? that although thou hast prayed, and met with no answer, yet thou art resolved still to go on, and sayst, though the Lord hath not spoken one word to me, I will not give over speaking to him, but my soul shall still cry after God. That was the resolution David took up, Psal. 27. 4. One thing have I desired of the Lord, that I will seek after; I have desired it, and though I have not attained it, I will seek after it as long as I live; Is it so that the Lord doth carry up thy spirit still to wait upon him, and still thou art crying and breathing after the Lord in prayer? that very thing is a certain sign that the Lord hath heard thy prayer.

Fourthly, doth the Lord enable thee and make thee willing to wait upon him? thou hast not a present answer, yet thou wilt wait as David when he had been at prayer, he waited for the mercy, Psalm 27. 14. Wait on the Lord, be of good courage, and he shall strengthen thine heart: Wait I say, on the Lord. Oh my heart, wait I say, wait on the Lord: Hast thou through grace so spoken to thine own heart? I have no answer, but I desire to wait, and I check mine own heart that I can wait no more quietly, I speak to mine own heart to wait, I say wait on the Lord; if it be so, the Lord hath heard thy prayer.

Fifthly, observe how thy spirit, and how thy carriage is towards God in that time of God's delay: Is thy heart kept up towards God, and thy conversation in a way of obedience? that thou art desirous still to walk with God, and thou durst not go out from God, though God give thee no answer, but thy heart is made more humble, and thou art more meek, and more obedient, and more watchful and observant of thy heart, and watchful over thy ways; is it so? the Lord hath heard thy prayer, though he gives thee no answer.

And therefore I say, take no care for an answer: I speak to such poor souls as have prayed, and cried, and have not met with one word of answer from the Lord, take no care for an answer, only mind that which is thy duty, and let the Lord alone; he is preparing an answer, he is waiting to be gracious, he waits for a fit season, for such a season as his grace and mercy may be most exalted; be not thou so solicitous about an answer, but mind what is thy work and thy duty.

And do thou hold on thy duty in praying to pray, in crying to cry, yea do thou cry louder than even, and the more Christ seems to stop his ears, and shut his mouth, and give no answer, the louder do thou cry, as this poor woman did, ver. 25. Lord help me.

Secondly, this is thy duty while the Lord thus deals with thee, to justify God, and condemn thyself, clear the Lord, & lay the blame upon thyself; say the Lord is righteous, and the Lord is holy, and though he make wait me longer and longer, yea many years for this mercy, yet the Lord is righteous, and there is no iniquity in him; the Lord cried, and I did not hear, and the Lord is righteous, though he makes me wait long; the Lord is gracious, that he speaks at all to such a poor creature, that there is any promise that he will give out an answer. Oh justify God, and say the Lord is holy; thus did the Psalmist, Psalm 22. 3. But thou art holy, O thou that inhabitest the praises of Israel; though thou dealest thus with me, thou art holy, thou art just, and thou art righteous, and thou art good and faithful, though silent for the present to my prayer; And so let us say, if the Lord be silent to any of our prayers, yet Lord thou art holy, thou art righteous.

Thirdly, this is thy duty labor to maintain good thoughts of God: it is not enough to justify, not to charge God, but to maintain good thoughts of God at that time that God is silent to our prayers, and do thou believe that God is contriving good at that time, now is the Lord waiting to be gracious and preparing an answer. Oh this is a blessed frame of heart, and how pleasing would it be to God, to believe that he is good, and that he is gracious, and this very thing it is for good, for the good of my soul, that he may exercise faith and patience, and try my perseverance, and that he may fit me for mercy, and mercy for me? Oh that we could entertain good thoughts of a gracious God when he defers an answer.

Fourthly, be looking to God through the Mediator, close more with him through the Son, look to the great God through the son of David, look to him through that merciful and compassionate High Priest; look more to God through Christ, and there rest.

Fifthly and lastly, wait patiently for him; oh take up a resolution to wait upon the Lord; charge thy own heart to do it as David did, and though he speaks not today nor tomorrow, though he speaks not this month, this year, not in this opportunity, yet say I will wait for the Lord, I will wait in every season, and get upon the watch-tower, and wait patiently, and see which way Christ will come to thy soul; know it is thy duty to wait, take hold of his promise, he is a God of judgment, and waiteth to be gracious, he waiteth for an opportunity, and therefore it is good thou shouldst wait; it is good that a man should hope and quietly wait for the salvation of the Lord.

Matth. 15. 23.

And his Disciples came, and besought him, saying, send her away, for she crieth after us.

SERMON IX.

CHrist (as you have heard) is silent to the prayer of the woman, he answered her not a word, whereupon the Disciples they step in and perform an office and duty of love for this poor woman they step in, and they plead with Christ for her Lord send her away, for she crieth after us. It is a great question with some, whether the Disciples did pray for this woman here or no; some think that they did not make any request for her, there is no mention of any, they only say, Lord send her away, for she crieth after us; Lord, stop her mouth, send her away, give her an answer, dispatch her, for she crieth after us; and this was done say they, that so the trial of this woman's faith might be the greater.

But I rather conceive, that the Disciples in these words did pray for her, they did perform an office and duty of love, in interceding with Christ for her. For,

First of all, it seems they were very earnest in it, they came and besought him, saying, send her away; Surely, if it had been only to stop her mouth, to dispatch her, the Disciples would not have been so earnest with Christ to beseech him; good nature would have taught them more compassion, and therefore grace teacheth them much more.

And then, they seem to be affected with the cry of the woman, she crieth after us, send her away, it breaks our hearts the cries that she makes; Thou Son of David have mercy on me.

And thirdly, it is clear and evident in the following verse, from the answer that Christ gives upon their seeking of him. I am not sent but to the lost sheep of the house of Israel. Therefore it is evident, that the Disciples did not plead with Christ to send her away, to stop her mouth, but they did plead with Christ though not mentioned, that he would grant her request.

The truth then which the words hold forth to us, is this. That it is the duty of Christ's Disciples to present the conditions of others unto the Lord in prayer as well as their own.

We find that Moses the servant of the Lord was much in this work, much in praying for others, and interceding for Israel; upon every occasion he steps in, and pleadeth with God for the people.

And so David in many of the Psalms, he presents the conditions of others unto the Lord. And our Lord Jesus Christ himself who is our great pattern, was much in the performance of this duty, John 17. you shall find there that the most part of the time that Christ spent in prayer, it was spent in praying for others, there is but one petition that he put for himself, in ver. 1. and repeated again in ver. 5. and all the rest of his time it was spent in praying for others, for the Disciples, for those that were converted, and for those that did belong to God that were not converted: Many requests the Lord Jesus makes in the behalf of others, and but one for himself. And so the Apostle Paul, who was a follower of Christ, he was much in this work of praying for others, Rom. 1. 9. he did appeal to God, that he did not neglect this duty. For God is my witness, whom I serve with my spirit, in the Gospel of his son, that without ceasing I make mention of you always in my prayers. And so 2 Tim. 1. 3. I thank God whom I serve from my forefathers with pure conscience, that without ceasing I have remembrance of thee in my prayers. Paul did remember others before the Lord.

But in the opening of the point, I shall show you, First, who they are that we are bound to pray for, whose conditions God's people are bound to remember before the Lord.

Secondly, what are the special time we are called unto this duty to remember others before the Lord.

If you ask, who they are that we are bound to pray for.

First, we are bound to pray for them that have done us wrong; a hard lesson, but a lesson that Christ's Disciples must learn; we must pray for those that have done us wrong, that have done evil, and spoken evil of us. See what our Savior Christ saith, Mat. 5. 44. But I say unto you, love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them that despitefully use you, and persecute you: See here, out of Christ's own mouth this is our duty, if we be Christ's Disciples we must pray for them that persecute us, and despitefully use us, we should go to the Lord, and beseech the Lord to forgive them; thus did Christ, Father, forgive them, they know not what they do. We should pray that the Lord would open their eyes, that the Lord would turn their hearts to himself first, and then to us: Brethren, such a prayer is very welcome to the Lord, as welcome as most prayers that his people can make, when you shall from the heart pray to the Lord for those that injured you, and done you wrong, such a prayer seldom goes unrequited. Sometimes the Lord gives in the soul of an enemy at the request of his people; and oh what a choice mercy will that be, if thou mayst gain the soul of an enemy, if a soul may be delivered from going down to the pit, why the Lord many times gives in the soul of an enemy; but if the Lord should not give in the soul of an enemy, that prayer shall not go unrewarded; it may be sometimes the Lord will give in the soul of a friend, thou goest to God, and thou prayest for such an enemy, Lord forgive such an enemy, Lord open his eyes, and turn his heart, and forgive his transgression; if the Lord does not grant that request, it may be the Lord will give in the soul of a child or some of thy relations, because thou hast found in thy heart to pray for an enemy, or else the Lord will reward that prayer by giving out more of himself; thou beggest for an enemy, if the Lord do not that, the Lord will give thee more grace, more of his Spirit, the Lord it may be, will cause his face to slain more upon thee, while thou at his commandment, and for his sake canst find in thy heart to pray for them that are thy enemies, and have done thee wrong; thou hast prayed for an enemy, and I will be a friend to thee, saith the Lord, I will show thee more friendship, more of my face; this is the first thing: Oh that the Lord would teach us to practice it, it is our duty to pray for those that have done us wrong.

Secondly, if it be our duty to pray for those that have done us wrong, then it is our duty to pray for such as the Lord hath made instruments to do us good. Creatures they are but instruments, and all the glory is due to God alone; ah, but God is to be sought to for the instrument, hath the Lord done us good by such an instrument, in respect of our souls in a word of counsel and direction, we are to pray for them. When God made use of Abigail in giving a word of counsel to David, how did he bless the Lord and pray to God for her, 1 Sam. 25. 32, 33. And David sad to Abigail, blessed be the Lord God of which sent thee this day to meet me, and blessed be thy advice, and blessed be thou &c. And so hath the Lord made any instrumental any way to do us good in the outward man, to give any refreshment, we are bound to remember them before the Lord; thus did Paul, 2 Tim. 1. 16. The Lord give mercy unto the house of Onesiphorus, for he oft refreshed me, and was not ashamed of my chains. Onesiphorus was a means of refreshing Paul in his bonds, and Paul looked upon it as his duty to remember him before the Lord, he begs a blessing for him and his household; The Lord grant mercy to the house of Onesiphorus; it is our duty to remember those before the Lord, that have been used as instruments to do us good.

Thirdly, it is our duty to remember before the Lord even those that are strangers to us, those that we have not known, if we know their conditions. If the Lord hath brought the condition of strangers to us, if the condition of strangers be a sad condition, we are bound to remember them, and to present their condition before the Lord; and thus did the Disciples here in the Text, this woman she was a stranger to them, they never saw her face before, she was of a strange Nation, one of the Canaanites, and yet when the sad condition of this woman was brought before them, and they heard her cry, their hearts were moved with compassion, and they besought Christ for her. Lord send her away, Lord grant her request•• And the Lord laid a great charge upon his people Israel, that they should remember strangers, and not oppress strangers, but show kindness to them; and this is one part of the duty we owe to them, to remember them, and if in any sad condition, we are bound to present them and their condition before the Lord.

Fourthly, If it be a duty to remember Strangers, then much more to remember our own Relations, and to present them before the Lord. All our Relations what ever they be, as we stand related to others in Political Societies, there is an engagement to remember them before the Lord, a mutual tie betwixt the Magistrate and the people, and they are bound to pray one for another, godly Magistrate• and godly people are bound to remember one another. You know King Solomon he was one that feared the Lord, and he was very much in praying for the people, 1 Kings 8. 22. he spent much time in prayer: And so back again it is the people's duty to remember their Governors; The Apostle lays it upon Christians as their duty, 1 Tim. 2. 1. I exhort therefore that first of all, supplications, prayers, intercessions, and giving of thanks be made for all men, ver. 2. for Kings, and for all, that are in Authority, that we may lead a quiet and peaceable life, in all godliness and honesty: In this relation, there is a mutual tie to remember one another before the Lord.

And if we come to Family-societies, there we shall see relations are bound to remember one another before the Lord; the relation of Husband and Wife, Parents and Children, Masters and Servants, the Scripture holds it forth as a duty incumbent upon all Christians to remember their relations mutually before the Lord. Husbands are bound to remember their wives, to present their condition before the Lord: Isaac prayed for Rebekah, Gen. 25. 21. and at his request the Lord was entreated; and so back again, the wife is bound to remember the husband. And so in the relation of parents, parents are bound often to present their children before the Lord; the example of Job is given for our imitation, Job 1. 5. And it was so, when the days of their feasting were gone about, that Job sent and sanctified them, and rose up early in the morning, and offered burnt-offerings, according to the number of them all: for Job said, it may be that my sons have sinned, and cursed God in their hearts; thus did Job continually. See Job presented them all one by one before the Lord, and begged mercy for them, and that the Lord would take away the guilt of sin which they might contract while they were feasting in one another's house. And so good old Jacob performed this duty for his children, even then when he lay a dying, he called for all his children, Gen. 49. he called them one by one, and prayed for a special blessing to be upon their heads. Parents are bound to remember their children, and children many times miscarry because parents are no more in doing their duty, no more crying to the Lord in the behalf of their children; and so back again children are bound to remember their parents. And so in the relation of Masters and servants, Masters are bound to pray for their servants; you know that instance of the Centurion, he came to Jesus in the behalf of his servant, and was very earnest with Christ, that Christ would be pleased to heal his servant; this is a duty that is little performed by many Masters, they think if they can have their servants to work for them, it is all that they have to look after, but let such Masters know that God will require an account of servants souls; have you instructed them, and have you presented them often in your prayers before the Lord? the Centurion came for the body of his servant, and it is our duty to come often to the Lord for the souls of our servants; and so back again it is the duty of servants to pray for their Masters. And thus you see the fourth particular, That it is our duty to remember all our relations before the Lord. There is one relation more, and that is our Spiritual relation, which I shall touch before I end that particular; such as stand in relation one to another in Church-society, they are bound often to remember one another's conditions before the Lord, James 5. 14, 15, 16. Confess your faults one to another, and pray one for another; yea in Church-societies, it is especially the duty of Pastors and Elders to remember their flock, and it is the duty of the people to remember their Elders, and to pray often to the Lord in their behalf. Faithful Ministers are bound often to pray for their people; remember what is said of Paul, Rom. 1. 9. For God is my witness, whom I serve with my spirit in the Gospel of his son, that without ceasing I make mention of you always in my prayers. When ever he came to God, he was mindful of the Church, I am always mindful of you without ceasing: and indeed the profiting of a people, and the stedfastness of a people in the faith, and in the truth, and in the ways of God, it is the glory, and the crown, and the joy and rejoicing of a faithful Teacher; and therefore surely it is their duty often to remember their people before the Lord, and so it is the people's duty to remember their Pastor and Teacher. The Apostle lays it upon them as their duty, Ephes. 6. 18, 19. Praying always with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit, and watching thereunto with all perseverance and supplication for all Saints, and for me, that utterance may be given unto me, that I may open my mouth boldly, to make known the mystery of the Gospel. It is your duty (saith he) to pray for all Saints, and for me in particular, that I may open my mouth boldly, to make known the mystery of the Gospel; for many times Satan's great design is to overthrow them that the Lord hath set to go before his people. Satan's great design is to hinder the work of God in their hand, to make such to fall, and therefore the Lord's people had need to pray the more earnestly; for even the best of the Teachers and Preachers of the Gospel they are but empty pipes in themselves, and can afford no more then the Lord is pleased to drop in from above; and therefore there is need that the Lord should be dropping in continually, or else they cannot bring forth bread in due season, and make provision for the people, if the Lord do not fill them from heaven; yea the best of Teachers have need of teaching, though they know never so much they have need of more knowledge, they have need of more strength, and therefore it is the duty of the people to remember them before the Lord, that the Lord's Urim and Thummim may be with them. Thus in all relations it is our duty mutually to remember one another before the Lord.

Fifthly, it is our duty to remember those that for the present are strangers to Christ: You will say, what, are we to pray for such as have not the knowledge of God? yea it is our duty to remember them; if the Lord hath been pleased to make us to differ, and called us out from the number of those Gentiles who know not God, oh we are bound to pity them, and to pray for them, whose condition is such as never was rained upon, as the heath in the desert, their condition is sad, and we should remember them before the Lord, that God would send forth his light and truth to them, that they that deny Christ, in word, in profession, and conversation, that they may be brought home to the knowledge of the Son of God, Psal. 67. 1, 2. God be merciful unto us, and bless us, and cause his face to shine upon us. That thy way may be known upon earth, thy saving health among all Nations.

There are many Nations, and great Nations that to this day know not God and Christ, that sit in darkness, and perish for want of vision; and truly they who through free grace do know anything of God, they are bound to pity them that sit in darkness, and to pray that the Nations may know the saving truth, and the way of the Lord.

Sixthly, if it be a duty to pray for those that are strangers to Christ, then it is a duty to pray for those that are Christ's friends; for all that know the Lord, and love the Lord in sincerity, Ephes. 6. 18. Praying always with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit, and watching thereunto with all perseverance and supplication for all Saints: It is our duty to remember all Saints, to remember them that are scattered, to remember them that are gathered: all Saints, we should remember them in our prayer before the Lord, and especially Jerusalem, Zion's Assemblies they should be remembered, Psal. 122. 6, 7. Pray for the peace of Jerusalem: they shall prosper that love thee. Peace be within thy walls, and prosperity within thy palaces. You see Jerusalem, Zion's Assemblies in a special manner should be remembered by us in our addresses to the Lord. And so Psal. 14. you may see how the Psalmist doth express himself in the behalf of Zion: Oh that the salvation of Israel were come out of Zion! oh that the Lord would hasten the time that he will save his people, and Zion be remembered and built up; Oh that the time were come. And in Psal. 51. he doth express, that when he had been praying for himself, yet he did not forget Zion, Psal. 51. 18. Do good in thy good pleasure unto Zion, build thou the walls of Jerusalem. So that you see that hath been spoken to, who they are that we are bound to pray for.

Secondly, what are the special times in which we are bound to remember others, and to present their conditions before the Lord.

I answer first of all, when they have sinned a sin against the Lord: When we see any that have sinned greatly against the Lord, that have provoked the Lord, especially such as have the name of God and Christ upon them, oh then it is time for us to step in and plead hard with God for them. So did Moses when Israel had sinned a great sin in making the Molten calf, then he steps in, and cries hard to the Lord; nay this is commended as a duty, 1 John 5. 16. If any man see his brother sin a sin which is not unto death, he shall ask, and he shall give him life for, them that sin not unto death. If it be not a sinning willfully, a willful persecution of the Truth that he hath professed, why then if a man see his brother sin, he shall ask and give his brother life. It is a gracious promise, and a great encouragement to go to the Lord one for another.

Secondly, in time of great affliction, when the Lord lays his hand heavy upon others either on the outward or inward man, it is our duty then to remember them, and to present their conditions before the Lord; in time of great calamity, public calamity upon a nation, it is a duty of God's people to present the condition of their people before the Lord. Nehemiah did present the condition of the people before the Lord, when the hand of the Lord was sore upon them: And so when God doth lay any great affliction upon others, then it is our duty to remember them, and present their condition before the Lord. David did so for his enemies when they were sick (saith he) I put on sack cloth, and I fasted.

Thirdly, in time of persecution, that is a special time to present the conditions of others before the Lord; when we see any that are persecuted for righteousness sake: When the Church was persecuted in the Acts, and the Disciples cast into prison, then the Church prayed, then God's people did look upon it as their duty to pray, & to pray more earnestly then ever they had done. And so when the Apostle was in bonds, he sent to them that they would earnestly seek God for him, that he might hold close to the truth, that he might not deny the truth nor Christ.

Fourthly, when as the Lord threatens to go away from a people, when a God threatens to withdraw his presence from a people, or from a soul, oh then it is the duty of others to remember them before the Lord. When God threatens to depart from Israel, oh then Moses he steps in, and he is pleading with the Lord. And so when God threatened, and was about to cast off the Jews after they had rejected Christ, oh how doth the Apostle Paul step in, and cry earnestly to God, Rom. 10. 1. Brethren, my hearts desire and prayer to God for Israel, is that they might he saved. When God threatens to go away from a soul or people, oh then it is time for the people of God to step in, and to plead hard with God.

Fifthly and lastly, another time in which we are bound to remember others, is when we see God coming towards any in a way of mercy. When the Lord was coming towards the Jews in a way of mercy, he stirred up Daniel to pray for them, & to cry earnestly to the Lord for them, when he came to understand that the time of deliverance was not far off, but mercy a coming, salvation a coming, then he cried, and cried more earnestly then ever he had done, he set himself to seek the Lord by fasting and prayer: When we see God a coming towards any people in a way of mercy; when God comes towards a friend and relation in a way of mercy, when we see God is beginning to work, and to move upon their spirits, oh it is a duty for those relations that know the Lord, to step in and to cry earnestly to God, yea then to go forth and meet the Lord, and to entreat the Lord that that work may not go back, but that he would help it on. I shall not have time for the Application, only this one use I shall leave with you.

That if it be the duty of God's people to pray for others, a duty to remember one another, then it will follow from hence, that it is our duty to acquaint others with our conditions. If it be a duty for others to pray for us, then it is our duty for us to acquaint them with our conditions, or else how can they seek God in our behalf; if it be their duty to pray, it is our duty to beg their prayers, and there are sometimes in which it doth lie more especially upon us to beg prayers of others, that they would step in and plead with God. I shall in a few words show you what those times are that we are bound more especially to call others into our help to seek the Lord for us.

First, when the Lord doth lay the guilt of sin heavy upon the spirit, when the guilt of sin lieth so heavy upon a man's conscience that it cannot be removed, he hath tried all private means, and still his spirit is so oppressed as he knows not how to stand under it, then it is a duty to call in the help of others; Confess your sins one to another, and pray one for another, James 5. and he maketh a gracious promise that in such a case he will hear.

Secondly, we are especially bound to ask the prayers of those whom we have offended. Sometimes the Lord will not be appeased till we have begged the prayers of those whom we have wronged; this was the case of Abimelech, when he had wronged Abraham in taking away his wife Sarah. The Lord smote Abimelech, and God doth advise Abimelech to go to Abraham to pray for him, Gen. 20. 6, 7. And Abraham did pray for Abimelech, and God did hear the prayer of Abraham for Abimelech, Gen. 20. 17. And so the children of Israel they come to Moses when as they had sinned against the Lord, and murmured against Moses, yet they desired that Moses would pray for them, and Moses did pray for them, Numbers 21. 7. and the Lord was entreated for them.

And so it was the case of Jobs friends, God directs them to go to Job, and he shall pray for you, and saith God, I will hear him, Job 42. 8. you have sinned against me, and have had hard thoughts of Job, and have been sad comforters to Job, but go to Job, and Job shall pray for you, and I will hear Job. Oh! when we have wronged others, in such a case it is our duty to acknowledge our offenses, and to entreat that they would seek the Lord for us.

Thirdly, when as the Lord lays any heavy stroke upon us, our affliction is so heavy as we know not how to bear it ourselves; truly it is wisdom then, and a duty to call in help, in great afflictions we are to request the prayers of others: The Apostle gives this direction, that such as were members of Churches that when they were afflicted, they should send for the Elders of the Church, and that they should pray for them, James 5. 14, 15. And the Lord he promiseth that he would give out healing; in great afflictions we are to call in the help of others, members of the Churches they ought to send for the Elders of the Church that in time of affliction they may pray for them.

Fourthly, when we are nigh some great danger, liable to danger either in the outward or inward man, or to walk in some dangerous ways, or when we are by providence put upon such ways as we may meet with shares and temptations, where there is any danger, then it lies upon us to call in the help of others. So Esther 4. 16, 17. she was in great danger, there was a Law that whosoever went into the King, and was not called, must be put to death, and the cause was so, that she must go in to speak with the King though it should cost her her life, and therefore she sendeth to Mordecai to gather the Jews that are present in Shushan, and fast ye for me, pray for me, for it may cost me my life, therefore I desire you to fast and pray for me.

Fifthly, when the Lord calls his people to some great service, some work that may be for his honor and glory: So Esther when she was about some great work, fast for me, fast and pray, and I will speak to the King.

Sixthly, when the Lord doth seem to shut us up that we cannot pray ourselves, our condition may be so: Sometimes through weakness we are not able, and sometimes when the Lord withdraws his Spirit, we are not able to pray ourselves, that our prayers are but like Hezekiah's, like the chattering of a Crane or Swallow, then in such cases it is a duty to send to others, and call upon others; when we cannot pray ourselves.

Seventhly and lastly, when the Lord seems to be angry with any people, when the displeasure of the Lord waxes hot and heavy, and we do not know how to bear it, it is hard then to go to God as to a Father, ourselves, and therefore then we had need call in others to our help. When the wrath of the Lord was kindled against the children of Israel, then Moses stepped in, then he cried to God for them, for they could not look to the Lord as to their Father, the wrath of the Lord was hot; and at that time it is our wisdom and a duty for poor souls to call in others that they may cry to the Lord in their behalf.

Matth. 15. 24.

But he answered and said, I am not sent. but unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel.

SERMON X.

YOU have heard of this woman's faith, and the first trial of it: Christ tries her faith by being silent, and giving no answer unto her request; it was a sore temptation that the son of David, the merciful King should not open his mouth, nor speak one word for the refreshment of a poor distressed creature: When she poured out her complaint, he answered her not a word; that is a great temptation. You have heard also how the Disciples stepped in, and besought Christ in her behalf, they came and besought him that he would send her away with an answer, with an answer of peace, certainly that was their request.

But behold here is a second temptation, here is a second trial of this woman's faith: Christ first tries her by being silent, and now he tries her by speaking a hard word as it seems, I am not sent, but to the lost sheep of the house of Israel.

I am not sent, Christ intimates that he had nothing to do with this woman, it was besides his Commission, I cannot do it saith Christ, I must walk by rule, I must observe my Fathers Commission, I must do that work, and that work only which I was sent for, but now I was not sent, but to the lost sheep of the house of Israel, my work is to do good to a certain number of persons, to show mercy to a certain number of persons, that are given me of my Father. He calls them here sheep, Christ's sheep, I am sent for their sakes, and to do good to them, though termed sheep: Now the Scripture holds them forth to be such as were given him of his Father from Eternity, all that are given to Christ, are Christ's sheep, though they may not for the present have Christ's mark upon them, though Christ does not own them before the world, yet he owns them before his Father; all that belong to the election of grace they are Christ's sheep, and Christ saith, he was sent to such, I am not sent, but to the lost sheep, they are in a lost condition, even that number of persons that are given to Christ, they are lost in Adam, and they have lost themselves by going on in the ways of actual transgression, they are in a miserable lost condition, Christ's sheep; but Christ was sent to do good to them, Christ was sent to save them; The Son of man came to seek and to save them which were lost.

The lost sheep of the house of Israel.

The house of Israel may here be taken literally, for the people of the Jews which are called the house of Israel. Christ tells the Disciples and this woman, that his Commission was to do good only to them, I am not sent to others, I am only sent to the lost sheep of the house of Israel, my work is with the Jews, I have nothing to do with the Gentiles; No, my work is to gather in the lost sheep of the house of Israel.

Quest. But you will say, how doth this agree with other Scriptures, with those prophesies that concern the Messias, our Lord Jesus Christ, that when he came he should preach to the Gentiles, and that God would give him to be a Covenant to the Gentiles, Isaiah 42. 1, 2, 6. And in divers places there are prophesies that concern the Gentiles, that when Christ came God would give him to be a light to the Gentiles as well as to the Jews? why then doth Christ say, he was not sent but to the lost sheep of the house of Israel?

Answ. Christ spake first of all, of his personal Ministry; as he preached himself in person, and wrought miracles himself, so he was sent unto the Jews, his word was to them, he was their Apostle, their Minister; so the Apostle to the Romans speaks, Rom. 15. 8. Now I say that Jesus Christ was a Minister of the Circumcision for the truth of God, to confirm the promise made unto the Fathers. Christ was to preach in his own person to the Jews, he was their Minister; and so in that respect, he was not sent, but to the lost sheep of the house of Israel.

Secondly, it may be said that Christ was not sent to the Gentiles, but to the lost sheep of the house of Israel, in respect of that order that God the Father had appointed for the dispensation of his light, and of his grace and Spirit among the sons of men. God had appointed that first of all Christ should come to the Jews, and mercy first should be tendered to them, and grace be first brought to that people; so Christ's first work was to the Jews, I am not sent but to them, that is, I am first sent to them, and chiefly sent to them; my first work is here in Judea: The Apostle Paul saith, Christ did not send him to baptize, but to preach, 1 Cor. 1. 17. Christ sent me not to baptize, but to preach the Gospel; that is, I was first sent about this work, for he was sent to baptize, for he did baptize, but my first work was to preach. And so here, saith Christ, I was not sent to the Gentiles, but to the Jews, that is firstly and chiefly.

Thirdly, or in respect of time: It is true, Christ was not sent, that is, he was not then sent; his present work was not to preach to the Gentiles, and show mercy to the Gentiles, no, but afterward: There was a time, when Christ did not go himself to the Gentiles, and did not show mercy to the Gentiles; nay he forbad his Apostles and his Disciples: Go not into the way of the Gentiles, but go ye rather to the lost sheep of the house of Israel. So that there was a time when it pleased the Lord not to send the Gospel, but to restrain it from the Gentiles.

But there was a time also when Christ did send forth his glorious Gospel to the Gentiles; so that you see in what respect Christ speaks here, He was not sent, but to the lost sheep of the house of Israel,

I am not sent, but to the lost sheep of the house of Israel.

Here is a seeming denial that Christ gives to this woman; he seems to tell her plainly, that he cannot do it for her, it was besides his present work and commission, he was not sent to do it; there is the denial. Nay the trial was the greater, in that Christ answers thus not only to the woman's request, but to the Disciples request; this heightens the temptation and trial, and maketh it the greater: So long as this woman saw that the Disciples were pleading for her she might have hope, though there was no ground of hope as to her request, Christ being silent thereunto, yet it might revive her spirit to see his Disciples step in, and they to improve their interest in Christ: But when Christ shall not only give a denial to the woman, but to the Disciples, this was a sore trial: if the Lord had not mightily strengthened her faith, she could never have held up her head, she would have concluded, oh alas, my estate and condition it is sad, it is in vain for me to expect any salvation, any mercy, he is silent at my request, and he gives a denial, when his Disciples pray for me; and if God will not hear his own people, why then surely my condition is sad, thus lay the temptation, and yet the Lord supported this woman's spirit.

So that we may observe this; That God sometimes doth seem not only to be silent at the prayers of his people when they cry themselves, but he giveth a denial when others step in and pray for them.

Nay observe, That after a soul hath waited upon God in the use of the means, when it hath prayed and hath believed, and when it hath called in the help of others prayers, yet the Lord may seem to give a denial, and the condition may seem to be worse, and the temptation seem to rise higher even after a soul hath waited upon God in the use of means, and yet the Lord may have a gracious design towards the soul.

For mark it, this woman's condition was worse now then ever it was; the Disciples had prayed for her, and yet even after this Christ seems to give a flat denial, and tells them that he cannot do it for her, it was besides his commission, he was not sent to do it. So that after the use of means, after her own prayer, and the Disciples prayer, this woman meets with a flat denial, and yet the Lord Jesus had a design of mercy to this poor woman.

Yea, it is God's ordinary way to his people after they have used the means to remove such a burden, such a temptation, such a corruption, they have gone to the Lord, they have waited, they have believed, and called in the help of others, and yet temptations grow high, and yet notwithstanding that, the Lord may have a design of mercy. The children of Israel when they were in the land of Egypt under bondage and slavery, they cried to the Lord, and the Lo•• ◊

› Moses to deliver them, and no doubt but ⟨◇⟩ cried to the Lord as well as they, as they pray•••• so Moses prayed, he prayed for them, and yet after Moses was come, the people were not delivered, but their burdens and oppressions grew heavier and heavier, never so oppressed, as when Moses came to deliver them, when they cried themselves, and Moses cried, and waited upon God in the use of means, yet their bondage grew greater and greater; so it was with them, and yet God had a design of mercy towards them.

And so in Mark 1. 23, 24, 25, 26. At ver. 23. you read of one that had an unclean Spirit: And there was in their Synagogue a man with an unclean Spirit, and he cried out, Ver. 24. Saying, let us alone, what have we to do with thee, thou Jesus of Nazareth? art thou come to destroy us? I know thee who thou art, the holy one of God.

Ver. 25. And Jesus rebuked him, saying, hold thy peace and come out of him.

Ver. 26. And when the unclean Spirit had torn him, and cried with a loud voice, he came out of him.

Mark, when he applied himself to Christ for deliverance, while Christ was speaking the word, commanding the unclean spirit to go out, yet immediately the affliction begin to wax greater and greater, and the devil he rageth the more; and yet notwithstanding mercy is not far off, Christ had a design of mercy: And so doth God deal many times with his own people upon the use of means; it is possible their afflictions may increase, their temptations may increase, and corruptions wax stronger and stronger, and yet God have a gracious design towards them, and deliverance may not be far off.

It is true, that Satan he hath a design, and hath a hand in it; ah but God also hath a design, and God's design is a gracious design.

Quest. But you will say what is Satan's design, and what doth Satan intend?

Answ. Why, Satan's design is first of all, to take off the soul from the use of the means, to make the soul undervalue the means, and to cast off the means. Thus he tempts poor creatures that have prayed, and have met with no answer, but they are worse; others have prayed for them, and yet they grow worse and worse, why then he persuades to undervalue the means; for while a soul is thus waiting upon God in God's way, mercy is not far off; therefore the Devils great design is to drive the soul out of God's way. What is prayer? and why will ye pray any longer? you are never the better for your own prayers, nor the better for others prayers; and thus the Devil discourageth the soul from waiting upon God in the use of the means.

Secondly, Satan's design is, to drive the soul upon the rock of despair, to make a soul to cast away his confidence: Why will you hope any longer, and pray any longer? you see all is in vain, God heareth not your prayers, God heareth not others for you; others have prayed and cried in your behalf, and there is no answer, and your misery is greater then before, and therefore why should you wait any longer? Satan's great design is to make a soul cast away all his hope and confidence, and to dash and break it in pieces upon tha• rock.

But now, God hath a design of mercy in it, though it be so that the affliction grow greater and greater after the use of means, yet God hath a design of mercy. For by that.

First of all, God will teach the soul not to rest upon the means, but upon himself. Satan's design is to draw the creature from the use of means, and God's design is to draw the creature more to the use of means. And truly we are ready to drive ourselves upon this work, either to cast off prayer, or else to rest upon the means; and therefore it is that a poor soul is so cast down when as it hath been waiting upon God in the use of means, hath been praying, looking to the promise, and hath been calling in the help of others. I say, we are apt in this case to show forth the frowardness of our spirits, which doth evidence that we look too much to the means: We think prayer should save us, and upon the use of means if the Lord doth not come in, we are murmuring; Now the Lord will teach us this, to use the means, but not to rest upon the means, but to rest upon himself, upon his arm for salvation, and upon his free grace, and not upon any means.

Secondly, God hath this design, when the condition of the creature seems to grow worse and worse after the use of the means, why the Lord doth not presently help it, is because that he will appear at such a time when his work of deliverance will be most glorious. He will come in the most seasonable time, when as deliverance shall be most welcome, and that is, at such a time when all means fail, when the creature hath tried all means whatsoever: As the woman that had the issue of blood, she went from Physician to Physician, and yet the worse. Oh the cure from the hand of Christ was welcome. And so when the poor man brought his son to the Disciples, he tried all means, and the Disciples could not cast the Devil out: Oh when all means failed, that was the time for Christ to step in. The Lord will then appear at such a season, when poor creatures are brought to the lowest state, when a poor soul saith, Lord we have used such and such means, but still worse and worse; oh Lord we know not what to do, but our eyes are towards thee. Oh this is a time that the Lord will draw nigh to his people.

And therefore to reflect a little upon this; doth God make this to be the condition of any of you? have we been under some great affliction and burden, and some great temptation, and have been using all means, and still we find it grow worse and worse according to our own apprehension, worse after prayer then before, more temptations after prayer then before, more temptations after looking to the promise then before? if this be thy condition, be not discouraged, for this hath been the condition of many of God's people. This was the condition of the woman of Canaan here before thee, she was worse after prayer then before, she was worse after the Disciples had prayed for her, then she meets with a flat denial, and Christ saith to her, that he was not sent, but to the lost sheep of the house of Israel. This was the condition of the woman of Canaan, and yet the Lord Jesus he loveth this woman, and he had an intent to show mercy to this woman, and to grant her request. And therefore if this be your condition, oh take heed of the Devils design; the Devils design (as you heard before) is to make you undervalue the means, and to drive you to despair; take heed of the Devils design. And though this should be your condition, do not think the worse of the Ordinance of God, do not think the worse of prayer, the worse of your duties, and do not think the worse of the prayers of others, do not think the worse of searching the Scripture, and of applying yourselves to the promises, do not think the worse of these things, it is the Devils design to make you undervalue the means. And take heed that you do not now cast away all hope, Satan will tell you that there is no hope concerning you; the servants of God have prayed for you, and now no hope: Oh know that that temptation will drive you upon the rock of despair; but oh that you would look to God, and know that he hath a design of mercy towards you, nay in this very thing that it is worse and worse with you, he hath a design of mercy in it, he will draw you off from resting upon the creature, and resting upon means, and the Lord will now teach you to rest upon himself, and God will come in when it shall be most welcome. Oh therefore in such a condition we should set faith a work, though to sense we seem to be worse and worse, and deliverance further off then ever, worse after prayer then before prayer, oh yet we should set faith a work, for faith will see that deliverance is near, and conclude it, because it is God's way in which he walks towards his people. When the people of Israel were most grievously oppressed by the Egyptians, then the Lord handed out deliverance; O soul, though the clouds do seem to gather, and it be darker with thee then ever, yet say, I will wait upon the Lord in his way, and I will be found praying still, and calling in the help of others still. Oh that we might set faith a work, and we should see that God's salvation were near. But I shall pass from this.

I am not sent, but to the lost sheep of the house of Israel.

Christ tells this woman that he cannot do it for her, because it did not lie in his Commission, to which he must be faithful, he could not go beyond his Commission: What may we learn from hence?

We may take notice of this Historical Proposition. That our Lord Jesus Christ in all he did, he acted by commission, and kept his eye upon his commission which he was faithful unto.

The Scripture holds forth, that he was sent of his Father, the Father sent him, and gave him a commandment what he should do, and what he should speak. And Jesus Christ he was very faithful in observing his commission, he kept his eye upon the work that his Father had given him to do, and in that work he was faithful. In everything that Jesus Christ acted, he looked to his Fathers rule, the commission that his Father had given him, See John 5. 30. I can of my own self do nothing: as I hear I judge, and my Judgment in just, because I seek not mine own will, but the will of the Father which hath sent me. And as in the matter of judging, so in all other dispensations Christ was pleased to look to the will of his Father that sent him. I came not to do my own will in that thing, but the will of my Father. And so in John 6. 38, 39. For I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me, and this is the Fathers will which hath sent me, that of all which he hath given me, I should lose nothing, but should raise it up again at the last day. As in his works of judging, so in his works of mercy, Christ kept his eye upon his Fathers will, he looked to his commission, this is the Fathers will that I should lose none of them, but that I should give life to them all, and raise them up at the last day.

Yea, in his very words, in all Christ spake, he kept his eye upon the rule, and spake according to his Fathers will and commandment. I speak not of myself, but what I have heard of my Father, John 8. 26. I spake to the world those things which I have heard of him, John 12. 50. Even as the Father said unto me, so I speak. In all that Christ spake, he kept his eye upon his Commission.

And as in all that Christ spake, he kept his eye upon his commission, so in all Christ did: As the Father gave me commandment, even so I do, John 14. 31. still his eye was upon the commandment of his Father, upon his commission; And in obedience to that commission, he lays down his life, John 10. 15. And I lay down my life for the sheep, Ver. 18. No man taketh it from me, but I lay it down of myself: I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again: this commandment have I received of my Father.

Yea in Christ's motions this way and that way, his going to one place, and not to another, his preaching in one place and not in another, still he kept his eye upon the commission of his Father. See Luke 4. 43. I must preach the Kingdom of God to other Cities also; for therefore am I sent. They would have kept Christ with them, no, saith he, I must preach the Kingdom of God in other Cities; in all that Christ did, he kept his eye upon his Fathers commission, he looked to his Fathers will, and that was his rule to walk by.

And the ground of it is this, because Christ was found in the form of a servant; though he thought it no robbery to be equal with God, yet he took upon him the form of a servant; though the Son of God, yet he was content to be a servant, that he might bring about the great work of Redemption: Therefore God calls him the righteous servant, By his knowledge shall my righteous servant justify many, Isaiah 53. 11. And as Christ was a righteous servant, a faithful servant, so he kept his eye upon his commission. Now if Christ had not done so, if he had not acted all things according to the will of his Father, he had not been a righteous servant, but he was his Fathers righteous servant, and therefore he evermore looked upon his commission, what was his Fathers will, and so he applied himself to it.

And as in all other things, so in this particular in the Text, of preaching the Gospel, and showing mercy first to the Jews and not to the Gentiles, I am not sent, but to the lost sheep of the house of Israel, I am sent to show mercy to the house of Israel, still he eyed that work that was committed to him, because the promise was made to them, the promise of the Messias it was first made to Abraham and his seed, to that Nation that came out of the loins of Abraham: And Christ came to confirm the promise that was made to Abraham and his Seed, therefore in this thing he observed his Fathers order and his Fathers time; though his Father had a design of mercy to the Gentiles, yet he will show mercy first to the Jews, and then to the Gentiles: So that the Jews first of all must have the offer, and then the Gentiles shall have their time; Christ eyed his Fathers will and time, & therefore he applies himself to that work.

But by way of Application.

First, what cause have we who are of the stock of the Gentiles, who live in this time and in this Generation, to bless the Lord that we do live in that time when the partition-wall is taken down? there was a time when the Jews only were the people of God, and when God's design was to show mercy to them; and there was a time when mercy seemed to be restrained from the Gentiles; there was a time when Christ must not preach to the Gentiles, so it was his commission then not to show mercy to the Gentiles at that time: Go not into any of the ways of the Gentiles, and into any of the Cities of Samaria enter not. There was a time when the Gentiles were shut out from mercy, when the word of life and salvation was restrained from them, when the Lord gave this commission, go not into the way of the Gentiles, oh how are we beholden to free grace that hath broken down this wall of partition? that now since the resurrection of the Lord Jesus Christ there is no difference, but now mercy is freely offered to the Gentiles as well as to the Jews, for the wall of partition is now broken down; and of how should we admire the grace of God in it? we that were outcasts of the Gentiles, sinners of the Gentiles, that the Lord should ever send to persuade us to dwell in the Tents of Shem; we we might have dwelt in the barren wilderness every day, and never have been called, and that God should invite us to dwell in the Tents of Shem, oh the free grace of God to poor sinners, that we live in such a time that there is not a restraint upon the word of the Lord, nor upon his servants in bringing his word to us Gentiles! oh we are engaged to the Lord that it is our lot to stand here!

And this may teach us to admire the unspeakable and wonderful love of God that is let out to the Gentiles. I say, we should with holy fear admire it, the Jews were the Lord's first born, Christ was sent first to them, chiefly to them, they must have the first tender and the first offer of mercy, the kingdom of God came first to them, and yet behold now that word of Christ is verified, the first shall be last, and the last first; they were the first, and the Gentiles were the last: We were shut out, and a restraint laid upon the Apostles, go not into their Cities; ah, but now the first is last, and now God saith, go not into the Cities of the Jews, go not to the house of Israel, but to the Cities of the Gentiles. Oh the wonderful love of God, that the last should be first, and the first last.

And oh how should this teach us to fear before the Lord, and to take heed that we do not provoke the Lord to deal with us as he dealt with the Jews? I say, take heed of provoking the Lord, take heed that we do not reject Christ, take heed we do not reject the tender of mercy, that we do not neglect the great salvation held forth to us, that we do not trample under our feet the blood of the Covenant, take heed that we do not refuse to hear and to receive the things of our peace: Oh this was that which provoked the Lord to cast off the Jews, when they cast off Christ and would none of him, when they cast out the Lord of the Vineyard, when they would not accept of the glad tidings held forth to them, then the Lord takes away the Word of Life from them, and sent it to us, that the first is last, and the last first.

And let us take heed that we do not rest upon our privileges. We have the Word and the Ordinances, God deals not so with every people; ah but let us take heed that we do not rest upon our privileges as they did, because they were the seed of Abraham, they had the Law, & they had the Covenant, the Oracles of God, and therefore they rested upon them, & did not walk worthy of them, and therefor • ⟨◇⟩ Lord took it from them. Now take heed that we do not rest upon our privileges, we have the Gospel and fellowship with Saints, take heed we do not rest in them, but • ⟨◇⟩ let us labor to walk up to them, receive Christ in the Gospel, and walk up to our enjoyments or else we may provoke the Lord to take away the kingdom of God from us, lest the Lord should • ⟨1 page missing⟩ and that is dangerous, every man that is lost, he is lost in a dark way, the way of sin, it is a way of darkness: The Wiseman saith of the sinner, he knows, not whither he goes: his way is the way of darkness, he is lost in a way of darkness, and $\langle \diamond \rangle$ he knows not whither he goes.

And as it is a dark way, so it is a filthy way, it is a miry way, that a poor sinner is lost in; a way where there is nothing but dirt, that when a poor creature falls, he defiles himself, is woefully defiled with sin which is the greatest defilement.

And it is a slippery way, and that maketh it more dangerous; the way that we are lost in, it is a slippery way, and so slippery, that it is not possible for a poor creature to keep his feet, he falleth every day, yea he falls and falls, and bruiseh himself by his falls.

And as the way itself is dangerous, so there are many dangers in the way, there is a Lion in the way, and there are fiery Serpents in the way. The way of Israel in the wilderness, was a dangerous way; truly this is the way that all, Adams sons and daughters are lost in, where the Serpent lieth, the Lion also, the old Serpent that watcheth to fright, and destroy, and devour: And oh the pits that are in the way, and the snares that are in the way, and the enemies that are in the way!

And further, the way is sad in respect of the end of it. The way that we are lost in, it is a way that doth lead to destruction, the end of the way is death, and it is not possible for a man to miss the pit, and to miss destruction and death, if the Lord doth not help him out of the way. Every sinner that is lost, he will go further and further in this way, till he comes to the end which is death, unless the Lord help him out of the way, unless the Lord order it so, that he cannot find his way, he ceases not till he comes to the end of his way, which is death.

And it is the more sad and dangerous, because that a poor creature hath none to help him, none to stand by him, so long as a man is out of Christ, till Christ comes and finds a soul, none comes to take care of him, and help him out of this dark way, none to protect him, none to guide him, none to go before him, none to discover the pit and snare to him, none to uphold him and keep him from falling, none to stand by him in this sad and dangerous way.

You see the Point opened, a little by way of Application, and so conclude.

First of all, it lets us see that there are many that may be Christ's sheep, though for the present they be lost, yet many that we look upon as lost, may be Christ's sheep. For although it is true, we cannot own them, till they have the mark of Christ's sheep upon them; Saints cannot own them, for God himself doth not own them visibly before the world, till they hear the voice of Christ, ah, but yet they may belong to Christ, and may be his sheep, though for the present they may be lost; I have other sheep saith Christ, I have other sheep that I will bring in; they are my sheep now though poor wandering sheep, though lost in a wilderness, yet they are my sheep, and they shall hear my voice, and I will bring them into my fold.

Therefore this should teach us not to mourn as men without hope (as the Apostle speaketh in another case) not mourn as men without hope for the dead; so when we look upon Friends and Relations, and cannot but judge them for the present in a lost condition; we may mourn, and we ought to mourn, but not mourn as men without hope; for they may belong to Christ, and Christ may bring them in, though they be not yet brought in; therefore we should not give them up for desperate, though they may be gone very far from God; though they have gone a great way from God, yet give them not up for desperate: Christ hath other sheep then these that he will bring in; and know, that the Lord is able to bring them in, though they be gone far from God, and far from his way, yet God is able to bring them in; the great Shepherd is able to find them, and to lay them on his shoulder, and able to bring them into his Fold: and therefore we should not be hopeless, but still be found waiting upon God in the use of the means; if we say there is no hope, then we give over the use of the means: Hope still, and wait upon God in the use of the means, cry to God in their behalf, wait upon the great Shepherd, that he would go forth to seek and to save.

And we should labor to carry so towards all friends, and neighbors, and relations that are for the present opposite to God and his ways, that we may gain them; they may be such as Christ may bring in; Christ's sheep were lost, so were we, and so were they; and therefore take heed that we do not set them off from Christ, do nothing to make them out of love with Christ; but oh look upon them as those that Christ may bring in, and therefore let us do what we can for them.

Secondly, It lets us see the sad condition for the present of those that do not believe in Christ O! that all sinners would consider their sad condition: Truly it is a lost estate that every sinner is in, and that is a sad estate, for a man to be lost; lost to God, and lost to himself, and lost to others; yea so lost, that he is altogether useless and unserviceable, neither profitable unto God nor man; yea so lost, as he is in a hopeless condition, to have no hope: Truly there is not any sinner that goes on in a way of sin, that hath any true ground of hope; and that is a sad condition which is a helpless condition; helpless in respect of the creature, helpless in respect of himself, helpless in respect of all men; and oh! it is a dangerous way, O that sinners would think of it; for a man to be lost in a dark slippery dirty way, for a man to be lost in a wilderness, to have none to guide him, no friend to comfort him, none to help him out, in a vast howling wilderness, compassed about with dismal darkness, it is a sad condition, especially when there are wild beasts in the wilderness, and every step that he sets he treadeth on a Serpent, and a Lion in the way. O that God would persuade sinners of this their lost condition! to be lost, and thus lost, is a sad estate! yet this is their misery, and men are not sensible of it.

And it is more sad, because it is the soul that is lost: and O! what would it advantage a man or woman to gain the whole world, and to lose their own souls? What ever slight thoughts men or women have of their precious souls that lodgeth in their bosoms, it is of more worth then ten thousand worlds; now for a soul to be in the wilderness, a soul to be in the dark, a soul to be in the midst of Serpents and Lions, O it is a sad estate and condition: the Lord open the eyes of men and women to see into this their sad condition.

Thirdly, Are poor creatures by nature in a lost estate and condition? O that they that are lost would hear the voice of Christ the great Shepherd: Every man is lost before brought home to Christ; and O that poor lost souls might hear the voice of Christ this day; here is glad tidings, O that men would receive it: The Son of man came to seek and to save tha• which was lost. Here is glad tidings to you that are in a lost condition; O that God would bore the ear of the soul to hear this voice of Christ; it is the Shepherd that crieth after you, O my sheep return to me, I am come out of heaven to seek you, and to save you, and I am now gone forth in the ministration of the Gospel for this purpose: O that poor lost sheep would hear the voice of the Shepherd, and would receive the glad tidings that he brings! either men are sensible of their lost estate, or they are not: there are some that are lost, yea many, and they know it not; but it is more sad for a man that is lost, and will not be persuaded that he is lost, but he hath a good opinion of his way; such a man goes the faster, and rideth the faster, and he will the sooner be at his journeys end.

Now to those that are lost and know it not, let me say unto you? that the Lord Jesus doth at once hold forth both your danger, and the remedy against that danger; Christ doth by one word hold forth to you, that you are lost; and he doth hold forth to you the way by which you may be saved from that lost estate; you heard that he was sent to the lost sheep of the House of Israel, and to the lost sheep of the Gentiles too, though Christ's present work was not among them; but now Christ sends to the lost sheep of the house of the Gentiles as to the house of Israel; and by his word he would convince you that you are lost, and doth discover to you the way to come out of that lost condition by believing; O that you would hear the voice of the great Shepherd that comes forth this day, and gives you an invitation to return.

But there are some that are sensible of their lost estate; O they see it, and they know that they are lost, and therefore they look upon themselves as the most miserable creatures; well, here is glad tidings for you this day, The Son of man is come to seek and to save what is lost: You see your condition to be a sad condition, and you say it is lost▪ and what ever it is it can be but lost; why the Lord Jesus he was sent on purpose to save that which was lost, it was the work that Jesus Christ was sent about, the great thing that was put into Christ's Commission, the great work that his Father put into his hand, to save what was lost: Now therefore look to the promises of God, yea that gracious promise in Ezek. 34. v. 16. I will see that which was lost, and bring again that which wa^r driven away, and will bind up that which was broken, and will strengthen that which was sick. Thi^r promise it concerns the poor lost sheep, how he will seek them, and save them, and bind them up; O behold there the readiness that is in Christ to find them; and indeed, Christ hath the greatest care of such poor lost sheep. If a man hath a hundred sheep, and one of them be gone astray, doth he not leave the ninety and nine, and goeth into the mountains, and seeketh that which is gone astray? He goeth forth to seek the one sheep that is lost; you being that one lost sheep, and you looking upon your own condition to be lost, and you are sensible that none is so lost as you, he will leave the ninety and nine to seek you: And therefore hear the glad tidings of your Shepherd, he cometh forth to seek you, be you willing to come to Christ, and O! what joy will there be in heaven at your return?

Fourthly and lastly, It lets us see, and O that we might see! the infinite riches of the grace of God in Christ to poor sinners; O! here is grace indeed: What rich mercy was that, that sent out Jesus Christ to seek lost sheep? O! that we might consider a little of the greatness of this grace of God, the exceeding riches of it, that the Lord should send forth his Son Jesus Christ to seek lost sheep. O! consider what worthless creatures we were, how unuseful and unprofitable both to God and man; nay, the Lord saw how little useful we should be afterward, how little we are able to return to the Lord for this his great mercy; yet the Lord sent forth his Son to seek you.

And consider, that this was at such a time when we could never have returned to the Lord, when we could never have found God; though we had sought him, we could not have found him; if we had had any disposition to have sought after the Shepherd, we could not have found him; no, by all our searching we could never have found him. And then when it was so with us that we could not find the way to go home again, that he should send Jesus Christ to show us the way that he makes, by the Shepherd to lead the wandering sheep home; O free grace! If the Lord had sent forth the least Angel of heaven to have sought poor lost sinners, it had been mercy; but that God should not commit this work to his servants, but give a Commission to his Son, and make it his great work to seek poor lost sheep, O great love! nay, when we could not find God, and when Angels could not have found us if they had sought us; herein is the exceeding riches of grace. Nay, it was at such a time as the Lord might have sent his Justice to have found us out, God might have sent the Avenger of blood after us; the Lord might have set all our sins upon us to have found us out, they might have followed us as so many Avengers of blood; O that at such a time God should send Christ to find us out, after all our sinful wanderings from God! that he should make his Son to come and seek, O infinite love!

And therefore let me speak to those that have received this grace: Hath the Lord found out your souls? Hath Jesus Christ found you out in your wanderings, and through mercy brought you home to God? Hath he brought home any poor soul to believe in Christ, and to give up itself fully and forever to Christ? O! be thankful for this mercy, and labor to walk worthy of it, and study to know what is your duty now; you that are Christ's sheep, and were lost, O! what is your duty? Christ hath found you, surely some duty you owe to Christ.

Why, this is our duty; It is our duty now to seek Christ, to seek much faith in Christ; if Christ hath sought us, and took so much pains in seeking us, that were not worth the seeking after, O! how should we lay forth ourselves to seek Christ? Seek him every day, seek much of Christ, seek his face evermore, seek more of Christ every day: Christ sought us when we were not worthy, and shall not we seek him who is infinitely worthy, who is the desire of all Nations?

Again, It is our duty to seek others. Christ hath found us, it is our duty to seek others, to pity the sheep that are lost, that for the present are in a lost estate and condition; take some pains to seek them according to your Talent and opportunity: O take pains to seek others: As soon as ever Christ found Andrew, Andrew he finds Simon Peter; O! Come (saith he) and see Christ: I say, if Christ hath found us, let us labor to find others, labor to bring them to the knowledge of Jesus Christ, the great Shepherd: The Lord gave a Commandment, Deut. 22. 1. That if any man saw his neighbors Ox or Sheep go astray, he should pity them, he should not hide himself from them, but he should pity the poor lost sheep, and the lost Ox: Doth God take care for Oxen? Doth God take care for Sheep? That a poor lost Sheep be brought home to his Owner? And that a poor lost Ox be brought home to his Owner? And doth not God take more care for poor lost souls?

And is it not a more acceptable work to bring home lost souls? O pity poor lost souls, tell them of Christ, show them the way to Christ, and know that if you shall be an instrument in the Lord's hand to bring home a lost soul to Jesus Christ the Owner, O it will be service very acceptable to God your Father.

Thirdly, If Christ hath found us, then we should lose no opportunity of honoring him; Let us know that we are the Lord's, we are not our own any longer, but engaged to be the Lord's, sought out by Christ, and saved by Christ, and brought from a wandering condition, and lost in a wilderness, and yet found by Christ in this wilderness condition; O let us know that we are engaged forever to be the Lord's: therefore let not Christ's sheep lose any opportunity of doing service to Christ, take heed that we do not lose any opportunity of being profitable to Christ, bringing honor to Christ in our generation, for that is expected by Christ the Shepherd: So Paul did engage for Onesimus in the Epistle of Philemon; Onesimus he was a poor runaway sheep, Paul he finds Onesimus, and he brings him home to Christ, he was instrumental in his conversion, and he sendeth him to his Master, and he tells him, that now he will be profitable; before he was unprofitable, but now he will be profitable to thee and to me, and to Christ before unprofitable: A sheep is of no use when lost, but when its found, then it is profitable; and so if the Lord hath found our souls, O that we might do all we can to bring honor to Christ, and lift up his name in this our generation, for Christ hath sound us for that end.

Fourthly, If Christ hath found us, we should be content to lose all we have for him; Let all go for Christ, it matters not what we lose for Christ, if Christ hath found us: If God calls for our estates, let that go; if Christ hath found us, we have that which is better then a great estate: it had been more sad if God had taken away our estates from us before he had found us, but if the Lord hath found us, though we lose the world, there is good cause we should be content; what God calls for, let it go, we should be willing to lose our estates, our credit, our name, for Christ hath found us; if we cannot walk with Christ, and do the service Christ calls us to, but we must lose estate, and credit, and name, why let all go, Christ found us, and we should be willing to lose our lives for Christ; and know, that it shall not be lost, but what a man loses for Christ, it shall be restored him again.

And fifthly and lastly, Let us take heed that we do not go out from Christ anymore; O! what an engagement lieth upon us to keep close to Christ? O! What pains did Christ take to seek us, when wandering? And what pains did Christ take to bring us home? O! Take heed of wandering in the ways of sin, for it is a dangerous way, and therefore take heed that we be not found wandering; let us labor to cleave to God, and keep close to Christ; let the sheep hear the voice of Christ, and follow him where ever he goeth; keep close to Christ in every Ordinance, in every Truth; take heed that we go not out from Christ, for that will be sadder then all that hath gone before; that lost sheep whom Christ hath found, should go into the wilderness again, dark ways again, and defile your elves again, O! this will go to the heart of Christ; and therefore Brethren, what need have we to watch? O! let us watch over our own hearts, if Christ hath found us, and brought us home to God, O let us watch over our hearts and ways, that we go not out from Christ; O let us watch, and let us cry to the Lord, that he would watch over us, that we may not go out from him: O! let us beg of him that he would put his holy fear into our hearts, that is his promise; O beg of the Lord that he would make good his Covenant, that we may have that holy fear in our hearts, that may keep us forever from wandering and going out from Christ.

Matth. 15. 24.

I am not sent, but unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel.

SERMON XII.

HERE is a second Trial of this woman's Faith, as I told you when I opened the words. Christ had tried her faith by his silence, and now by his speaking a sad word, I am not sent but to the lost Sheep, &c. Wherein he holds forth, that there a certain number that he is sent unto, a certain company that are given to him to be his sheep, and that he can show mercy only to such; they only are in his Commission, and he cannot go beyond his Commission; they whose names are written in the book of life, their names are written in Christ's Commission; I am not sent but to the lost sheep. Here is a great trial of this woman's faith, and she is put upon it to make out her Election; here is a trial concerning her Election, whether she did belong to God or no.

So then the Doctrine is this:

That the Lord is pleased sometimes to exercise his people with many temptations about their Election.

That was the great trial that this woman was now put upon. In the opening of the point it will be needful to show you,

First, That there is an Election of God.

Secondly, That this Election may be known, it may be known who are elected.

Thirdly, I shall show you that this Doctrine itself, it is full of sweetness, and unspeakable comfort to God's people.

Fourthly, I shall show you, that God's own people may meet with many Temptations both about the doctrine of Election, and concerning their own election in particular.

First then, That there is an election of God, which is a glorious truth of the Gospel, and it is needful that it should be known: Let us enquire what election is.

It is an Act of God's good pleasure from eternity, whereby he made choice of certain persons, that he might make them holy and happy through Christ Jesus unto the glory of his own grace. Take this as a description of Election; where you have

First, The efficient cause, that is God, it is an act of God; and you have the nature of this Act. 1. It was an act of his good pleasure. 2. It was from eternity. 1. It was an Act of his good pleasure; there was no moving cause at all in the creature why God did love it and choose it; no impulsive cause was found out of God's own bowels, nothing in the creature, nothing out of himself, it was an Act of good pleasure.

2. And this was from eternity; what ever was done in time, it was purposed from eternity; they are chosen before the foundation of the world, blessed of my Father before the foundation of the world; it was from eternity that God did thus choose and set his love upon poor creatures. You see the nature of it.

Thirdly, In the description you have the Subjects of it, who they were that God did choose from eternity: Why, they were certain persons, a certain number of persons that God set his love upon freely; and amongst those sometimes in Scripture, Christ is said to be the first that was chosen; he was the head of them, he was the foundation of the building, therefore he is called chosen of God: Disallowed indeed of men, but chosen of God, and precious, 1 Pet. 2. 4. the Apostle saith of Christ, he was a chosen precious foundation stone.

And as Christ was chosen to be Head, so there was a certain number that were chosen to be his members; a certain number known unto God, that should fill up the body of Christ; for God's Decree is not an uncertain number, or conditional proposition (as some conceive) that whosoever believes shall be saved; some make no other decree of God but this, that whosoever believes should be saved, but he did not purpose any particular person, but whosoever believe shall be saved: Truly that decree is no decree, if there were no other decree but so, that whosoever believe should be saved, and not decreed certain persons, then it were possible that no man nor woman at all should be saved, if God did not determine such and such persons, but only such as believe should be saved, then I say, there is a possibility that none at all should be saved; it is true, that is the way of the declaration of God's grace, that whosoever believes is saved.

But fourthly, We have further to consider, what is the end of Election; wherefore did God choose certain persons?

There is a twofold end, First, In respect of the creature. Secondly in respect of God.

In respect of the creature; this was God's end, that such creatures should be made holy and happy, that they should attain to eternal life, which eternal life begins here in holiness; and that is eternal life, to know the Father and the Son; that is the end for which God doth predestinate, that they might be holy through the sanctification of the Spirit, and that they might be blessed and happy forever.

But in respect of God, the great end of Election, it is the praise of his own grace, that so they that shall be saved, they may forever admire and advance that rich and free grace of God towards them, that chose them so freely, when as they were so vile; this is the end of Election.

Fifthly, We may consider the means by which God doth fulfil and execute his Decree of Election: The means of executing his Decree, it is Christ Jesus as Mediator; he chose such and such, to bring them to such and such an end by such means, by Christ Jesus, and by Faith in him; Christ as Mediator he is the cause of the means of God's executing and fulfilling his Decree, though not the cause of Election, but the cause of the means of God's executing and fulfilling his Decree, for God would save them no other way but by Jesus Christ; in Ephes. 1. 4. you have these all together. According as he hath chosen us in him, before the foundation of the world; that we should be holy and without blame before him in love: Here you see it is an Act of God from eternity, before the foundation of the world; and at v. 5. you may see it is an Act of his Free Grace; According to the good pleasure of his Will, v. 5. He was not moved thereunto by anything in the creature; no, it was according to the good pleasure of his Will: And you see also the several ends for which God hath chosen, v. 4. in respect of the creature, the end is, that we should be holy; and at v. 5. that we should be happy, and attain the inheritance of children; and the great end of all is in v. 6. That this may be the praise and glory of his grace: And then there is the means by which God doth execute this Decree, v. 4. He hath chosen us in him, before the foundation of the world: So that you see something of this great and wonderful mystery of Election in this place.

But there are two things further which I shall insist upon for the clearing of the Truth to you; in the opening of which, I shall meet with those things that are most of all objected against this Truth.

This Act of God from eternity, it was

- 1. Absolute.
- 2. Immutable and Unchangeable.

There are these two general heads, which will clear up much of the mind and will of God in this Truth; 1. God's Decree is absolute and free: 2. It is unchangeable.

First, It is absolute and free, it doth not depend upon anything in the creature; God did not choose, because he foresaw men would be such and such; he did not choose any, because he foresaw they would believe, (as some imagine) he did not choose any because he foresaw they would be holy; his decree, and choice, and love, it was not grounded upon anything in the creature, for the Lord he hath no such respect in his choice; you may see what is said of Esau and Jacob in Rom. 9. 11. The Apostle is there treating of this mystery, and he doth there, let us know, that it is free and absolute, and doth not depend upon the work or worthiness of the creature; For the children being not yet born, neither having done any good or evil, that the purpose of God according to election might stand; not of works, but of him that calleth: v. 12. It was said unto her, the elder shall serve the younger. v. 13. As it is written, Jacob have I loved, but Esau have I hated. Before they had either done good or evil, God made choice of Jacob; God did not choose him because he foresaw he would be better then his brother Esau; no, Esau and Jacob were all alike unto God; nay, if there were any preeminence, Esau had it; he was the first born: and was not Esau Jacob's brother? saith God, yet I loved Jacob, Mal. 1. 2, 3. and I hated Esau: I have bestowed special love upon Jacob, less upon Esau: Not that God hates the creature without some consideration; but hating here is to show a less love: Christ saith, a man shall hate his Father and Mother for Christ's sake; that is, love them less than Christ; and Jacob had two wives, one was hated, the other loved; Rachel beloved, and Leah hated, that is, less loved; and so God here, he bestows special love upon Jacob, and not upon Esau.

And it is evident from Scripture, that God could not choose for foreseen faith and holiness; for the Scripture holds forth, that both faith and holiness they are the fruits of Election, and therefore not the cause of Election; men therefore believe and are made holy, because God hath chosen them from eternity, Acts 13. 48. As many as were ordained to eternal life believed; see here, faith is made the fruit of Election, and of God's love from eternity; the words cannot be read thus, That as many as believed were ordained to eternal life; but as many as were ordained to eternal life, believed; and so holiness or sanctification cannot be the cause of Election, no, it is the fruit of Election: see Ephes. 1. 4. According as he hath chosen us in him, before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy, and without blame before him in love: He hath chosen us, that we should be holy, not chosen us because we were holy, but that we might be holy; holiness then proceeds from God's special love.

And I shall make it further evident to you from some Arguments from Scripture, that it is not possible God's choice should be grounded upon anything in the creature, but merely an Act of his own good pleasure; for

First of all, that which maketh the Will of God to depend upon the creature, that cannot be a true doctrine: but now if God doth choose upon foreseen faith and works, because he foresaw the creature to be such, then the Will of God doth depend upon the creature, which destroys the divine nature of God, and the freedom of God's Will; it is not possible that God's Will should be determined but by its self; now if God chose upon foreseen faith, and works, then God's Will is determined by something in the creature.

Secondly, It doth derogate much from the freeness of God's grace, as also from the greatness of the mystery, and of the wonder of the Gospel: I say, If God did choose men because he foresaw that they would be holy, it derogates much from the freeness of his grace: If it be of works, then it is not of grace; If God's choice were grounded upon such a foresight of faith and holiness, then it is not an election of grace.

And it derogates much from the great mystery of the Gospel; God will save creatures in a wonderful mysterious way, in such a mysterious way as men and Angels shall stand and wonder at to eternity; now if God did choose upon such a foresight, or for faith, or for holiness in the creature, why there is no such great mystery or wonder; but for God to choose freely, when there was nothing to draw him to such an act, yet then to choose such poor creatures to everlasting salvation, O! this is the wonder of the Gospel.

Yea thirdly, God's choice cannot be upon any foresight of faith or works, for the Scripture holds forth that God's choice is before our choice; he chose us first, and he loved us first; see what Christ says John 15. 16. You have not chosen me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you that you should go and bring forth fruit. You have not chosen me, that is, you have not chosen me first; and so in 1 John 4. 19. We love him, because he first loved us: Now if God did choose upon any foresight of faith or works, then God did not love us first; for if God did consider men as believers when he chose them, why then if the soul believed before God chose, it chose God first, which is contrary to the Scripture.

Fourthly, The Scripture holdeth forth that there is some that are Christ's sheep, that are known to the Lord, though not known to themselves; and therefore it is God's free love to them to make them sheep; but when they believe they shall know that they are sheep; but they are sheep before they believe, but when they believe, they shall be known to be sheep, John 10. 16. And other sheep I have which are not of this fold; them also I must bring, and they shall hear my voice, and there shall be one fold, and one Shepherd. My Fathers love hath made them sheep; and because they are sheep, they shall hear my voice, and shall believe in me.

Fifthly, there is one argument more to confirm the truth; If so be that God did choose upon foreseen faith or works, or because he saw that there was an ability in the creature to perform or not; I say, if God's decree were a conditional decree, then God saw that the creature were able or not able to perform the condition; If the creature were not able to believe, or to be holy, then it were a vain Decree; but if God saw that the creature were able to perform the condition, this ability to believe, and to be holy, it must be either from the creature, or from God; if it were from the creature, then it destroys the Doctrine of Grace, and brings in the Doctrine of Works, and that sets up the Idol of Free-will, which the Scripture beateth down, and it lays the stress of the creatures salvation and happiness upon itself; If God did choose because he foresaw that the creature would be such, and had a power in itself to believe, and to obey, this lays the stress of the creatures salvation upon itself.

But if it be said, That God did intend to give the condition, the creature is not able to believe of itself, and be holy of itself; ah, but God did determine and decree to make such and such believe, and to be holy, and so he chose them upon that.

Now to that I say, this comes to nothing, to say God did decree to make such and such believers, and to make them holy, and upon that foreseeing they would be such, chose them to life and salvation: Why this is as much as to say,

God did first of all choose them, and then he gave them faith and holiness that he might choose them; for what is God's Decreeing to give faith and holiness, but his choosing and setting apart the creature for his self? for that is a part of the end for which God chose, that it might be holy as well as happy: and besides, I shown you before, that faith is made to come after election, therefore cannot go before election.

But it may be objected against this, Doth not David say in Psal. 4. 3. But know that the Lord hath set apart him that is godly for himself? and may we not object from thence against the absoluteness of God's Decree?

Answer, Some indeed urge from hence, that God considered men as godly when he set them apart; but there is no such thing in the words; for the Psalmist doth not speak of God's choosing, but he speaketh of the manifestation of God's decree and purpose to save; now it is manifested by holiness whom God hath chosen, and it comes to be known to others; God doth not choose them because they are holy, but such as are holy, they are evidenced to be such as God hath chosen; and therefore he speaketh to others in v. 2. O ye sons of men! How long will ye turn my glory into shame? How long will ye love vanity, and seek after leasing? and then it follows v. 3. But know that the Lord hath set apart him that is godly for himself: Though a godly man be in affliction, and you may think that God doth not love him, because he is afflicted; but know, that if he be godly, though in affliction, God hath set him apart for himself; so that this place doth not speak of God's decree, but of the manifestation of God's decree.

Another objection is raised out of Ephes. 1. 4. According as he hath chosen us in him. In him, Some argue from hence, That we are chosen in Christ, and there is no man in Christ but a believer; no man is in Christ but he that hath faith; and therefore God chooseth no man till he be a believer, for we are chosen in him.

To this I answer, first of all in him; it may be understood, he hath chosen us together with him, as head and members are chosen together; as foundation and other stones may be chosen together; when a man is to build a house, he may at once choose the foundation stones, and also divers other stones that he lays upon the building; he doth not lay stones upon the foundation, and then make choice of them; no, that they are laid upon the foundation, doth argue he hath made choice of them.

Secondly, In him, that is, Jesus Christ is the way and means of executing his Fathers Decree: Jesus Christ he is the way by which God doth execute his purpose and his decree of bringing such and such souls unto blessedness; God the Father will bring them by Christ, he will bring them this way to life and salvation, and no other way but by Christ Jesus; he is the cause of the execution of God's Decree, but not the cause why God will choose such and such; for Christ saith himself, that there is a love that the Father himself hath toward his people; the Father himself loveth his people from everlasting, he loveth them the better for Christ's Intercession, but (saith Christ) the Father himself loveth you: so that there was love in the heart of the Father to his people from eternity. And that first love of God it is held forth as the cause of giving Christ; Christ was not the cause of that first love, but God loved from eternity, and therefore he gave Christ; God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son; and love gave that Son Jesus Christ to be the Savior.

Thirdly, I answer, we are said to be chosen in him, not as being believers, not that God did consider men as believing in Christ actually, but they may after a sort be said to be in Christ, even from eternity, not actually, but virtually. Some do explain it thus, as the corn that is sown, and begins to bud, why as soon as it begins to bud, there is the blade, and the ear, and the corn virtually, but not actually; and so we were in him from eternity virtually, as chosen together with him, and given unto him; but not actually in Jesus Christ, till such time as men do believe in Jesus Christ.

There is a third Objection, which I shall but touch.

But you will say, Why, then God makes choice of sinners, and how can that be? If God did not choose men upon foreseen faith and holiness, and not consider them in Christ, then he considered them as sinners; but now how can God choose men as sinners? When the Scripture saith, He is a God of purer eyes than to behold the least iniquity: If a man be not in Christ, he is a sinner; and can God love a vile creature from eternity?

I answer, There is a love of good will, and a love of delight; there was a love of good will that God had to his people from everlasting, yea, although that God saw they were in themselves vile, sinful creatures; but God doth not love them with the love of delight, till they are washed and cleansed in the blood of Christ.

But you will say, It is not possible that God should do so: A good man he may not take a vile person to be his bosom friend or companion, and he may not take one that is wicked, into the relation of a wife or husband; and how shall God do it, who is a God of purer eyes?

I answer, Though we may not make such a choice, God may make such a choice; why? Because God is able to make them gracious and holy: If we were able to make them holy, then we might choose the worst in the world: But now there is power in God to do it; if he choose the unrighteous, he can make them righteous; and if he choose unbelievers, he can give them faith; and if he choose unholy ones, he can make them holy: Nay, he chooseth for that very end, that he might make them holy and blameless. So that you have seen that God's Decree it is absolute, that it is not grounded upon any consideration or worth in the creature, but absolute, in respect of the means.

And secondly, As it is free and absolute, so it is unchangeable; God cannot, he will not cast off any that he hath chosen; no, see what the Apostle saith, 2 Tim. 2. 19. Nevertheless the foundation of God standeth sure, having this Seal, the Lord knoweth them that are his. This Decree of God is unchangeable; for it is as a sure foundation: The foundation is the beginning of the building, and so this Decree, it is the beginning of all that good, and those spiritual blessings that God doth bestow upon his children; and the foundation is sure and immovable, if it be laid by a skilful and powerful hand; foundations are laid sure: why, this foundation is laid by God's own hand, it is laid by his wise and mighty hand, and who shall remove the foundation that God hath laid? All the men and Angels in the world cannot overturn the purpose and decree of God for the saving of one poor soul; all the devils in hell cannot overturn this foundation; and there is nothing in the creature can hinder it, no sinfulness, no unworthiness, before conversion, and after conversion, for it is sure.

And it must needs be sure, because God in his Essence is unchangeable, and therefore his purpose unchangeable; for the Will of God is God himself, and therefore the purpose of God can be no more unchangeable than God himself, So that you see there is an Election, and this Election is of grace: That's the first particular.

The second particular, which I shall but touch, is, That this Election may be known by the sons of men, though it be transacted in heaven; though their names be written in heaven, yet it is possible for men to know this secret of God's Decree; this great mystery it is possible that it may be known to others, and it is possible that it may be known to ourselves.

Our Election may be known to others, see Phil. 4. 3. And I entreat thee also, true yoke-fellow, help those women which labored with me in the Gospel, with Clement also, and with other my fellow laborers, whose names are in the Book of Life: The Apostle here speaking of such and such persons, he concludes, that their names are in the book of life, and in 1 Thess. 1. 3, 4. Remembering without ceasing your work of faith, and labor of love, and patience, of hope in our Lord Jesus Christ, in the sight of God, and our Father; Knowing, brethren beloved, your Election of God.

But you will say, How can this be known?

Why, it may be known by the fruits of Election; when the Gospel comes with power, when the Gospel doth overpower the heart, when men and women are overcome to believe in the name of Christ, when they make a resignation of themselves to Christ, and when the Image of Christ is stamped upon them, and they in some measure made conformable to Christ, who is the head of the Church; then others may conclude in the judgment of charity, such and such are elected of God: so far as we may know the truth of others faith, so far we may in the judgment of charity know the election of others.

But secondly, This may not only be known to others, but to a man's own self; that he is chosen of God before the foundation of the world; for we are put upon it to make it sure, 2 Pet. 1. 10. Brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure; strive to put it out of doubt, be not content to be at uncertainties in this business; it may not only be known, but make it sure: he doth not exhort them to make it sure in its self, by doing this or that, for it is sure in itself; but make it sure as to yourselves, wait upon the Lord that your hearts may be confirmed in it, that you are called and elected of God; for it is possible for a man to know that he is elected.

Yea, Christ puts his Disciples upon it, to rejoice in the consideration of this, that they were elected, Luke 10. 20. But rather rejoice, because your names are written in heaven. Rejoice in this, that God hath chosen you, and loved you, that he hath loved you with an everlasting love, and that he hath given you to his Son, and will bring you to life and happiness, to the praise of his grace; in this rejoice.

And therefore it is that the Spirit of the Lord is given out to believers, that they might know their election; it is one end of Christ's sending the Comforter, the Spirit of the Lord, who searcheth the deep things of God, and so reveals them unto believers; Now this is among the deep things of God, God's eternal love, this is one of the depths that made the Apostle cry out when he considered God's way from eternity to poor creatures, The Spirit searcheth the deep things of God, and reveals them to his people; the Spirit of the Lord stood by when he did write the names of his children in the book of life, the Son was present, and the Spirit was present even from eternity before the world was made, when God writ the names of his people in the book of life; and therefore the Spirit it is one of God's Witnesses, and is given to testify this to his people, he is sent by Christ to testify what he saw from eternity, that the names of such and such were written in the book of life; God hath given us of his Spirit, that we might know the things that are given us freely of God, 1 Cor. 2. 12. Now this is one of the things that are freely given us of God, this absolute choice, this love of God that was from everlasting; if ever anything were free, this is free; now the Spirit of the Lord is sent to cause us to know the things that are freely given us of God; Now when the Spirit of the Lord doth make known to a soul that it is elected, sometimes it makes use of the testimony of the blood of Christ, and of the testimony of Water; and sometimes he declares this to the soul by his own immediate witness; the Spirit of the Lord doth sometimes make it known mediately, and sometimes immediately: Mediately, There are three that bear record in earth, the Spirit, the Water, and the blood, and these three agree in one, 1 John 5. 8. Now the Spirit that •••keth the blood of Christ, an• sprinkles it up• the soul, and causeth faith to be wrought in the soul, to lay hold upon the blood of Christ; and then there is the witness of the Blood. And so all the Spirit of the Lord doth change the heart, and renew the heart; there is the witness of the Water; now when the Spirit of the Lord doth shine upon these, the soul can thorough these draw comfortable conclusions concerning its own election.

And sometimes there is a more immediate witness; The Spirit itself bearing witness that we are the children of God, Rom. 8. 16. Add his own. Testimony, beside all others, that a soul is loved of God; so that you see the second general head, which is this, that this great mystery of election may be known, it may be known unto others, and to ourselves.

And therefore, O that we might wait upon God for the discovery of it! Men are found negligent in this great business, because they think it is too high for them; who can ascend into heaven? say they, they think it is presumption for them to ascend into heaven; and who can know (say they) that they are loved from everlasting? But O! know souls, that there is an absolute Election of grace, and this Election may be known; it may be known to others, and it may be known to ourselves; O therefore that we might give the Lord no rest, and our souls no rest, till this great mystery be made out to us; though it be a secret, a wonderful secret, Yet there is a God in heaven that revealeth secrets, saith Daniel to King Nebu•••dnezzar, Dan. 2. 28.

Though it was a secret, 〈◇〉 past my reach (saith he) yet there is a God in •aeven that revealeth secrets; and so I say, though 〈◇〉 be a secret, yet there is a God in heaven that •ealeth secrets; and therefore wait upon the •rd, that we may know that we are elected.

I am not sent, but unto the lost sh• of the house of Israel.

SERMON XIII.

BUT to come to the third part of 〈◇〉 Doctrine, which is this,

That the Doctrine of Election is a comfortable Doctrine.

It holds forth solid ground of comfort, and gre• refreshment to the people of God: Although ••ny spurn at it, and carnal reason ready to rise 〈◇〉 against it, yet it is a doctrine of sweet and sol• comfort to God's people. And I shall show yo• how it is such a comfortable doctrine.

First, This is a ground of comfort to poor soul• that God's love doth not depend upon anything 〈◇〉 the creature; a ground of unspeakable comfort that God he fetcheth all his arguments of lov• out of his own bowels, not from any desert in th• creature; Alas, if God's love had gone by desert in us, there had been but little hope; And I do not know what solid ground of comfort they can lay, that contend so for a conditional Decree, grounded upon the creatures acting; for if the Lord had not loved and chosen till he had seen some worthiness in the creature, till he had seen some better improvement in us then in others, if the Lord had suspended to love and to choose till then, O! what little hope might any creature have had, that know the contrary workings of his own heart? What little hope of being saved? But now, when all is of Free grace, and the Lord overlooks all unworthiness, and chooseth freely, and loves freely; O this is a ground of hope and great consolation.

Secondly, There is another ground of comfort and refreshment from this Doctrine; It doth assure us that the Lord is very ready to be entreated, that the Lord is not hardly brought off to show mercy to poor sinners, that there is not an unwillingness in God to this work; as unbelief, and the Tempter would suggest; why? It was that which was the purpose of God from everlasting, I say, God from all eternity hath purposed it: It was the counsel of God, the great work of God, that which God spent his thoughts upon from all eternity; they were (as I may say) the first thoughts of the heart of God, to love, and pity, and to save, and to bring about that great work of saving sinners by the blood of Christ; this was the great contrivance of God; and it is a great ground of comfort and refreshment: A poor soul may doubt whether God be willing to save, and willing to be reconciled to him that hath sinned so and so: O! This Doctrine doth comfort exceedingly; for certainly, if it were the great work of God from eternity, the Lord is not unwilling now to do it. Christ tells his Disciples, That the Father himself loveth you: That is a ground of comfort; there was a love in the Father towards you, before I made a request for you; though the Father now love you more, and better, yet the Father himself loved you, before I made any request for you.

Thirdly, This is another ground of great refreshment from this Doctrine, That the love of God towards his people, it is an ancient Love, a love that did not begin yesterday, a love that is not of a few years standing, but an ancient love, it is as ancient as eternity; it is as ancient as the Ancient of days; as ancient as God himself; no beginning but from eternity: O! That commends love exceedingly, when as love is an ancient love, when as one hath born love to such a Family through many generations, and hath provided love for such a family for many generations to come; that exceedingly commends the love of a friend, when a friend shall take care that there shall be an Estate entailed to such a family for many generations to come, that he should provide a portion for them before they had a being, O! that is ancient love, and that doth commend the love of a friend; and truly it commends the love of the Creator, and it is full of sweetness and Refreshment that God hath loved his people from eternity; love hath run down that long Tract of eternity, and he hath provided a portion from eternity, an inheritance from eternity; oh! that the Lord should make such provision for poor creatures, before they had any being, not only thousands of years but even from eternity before they had any being, when there was no world, no creature, no being, but only in the mind of God; that God then should choose them, and provide an inheritance for them; truly this commends the love of God, and makes it very sweet.

Fourthly, There is this ground of refreshment that the Doctrine holds forth; that this love of God to his people it is a distinguishing love; oh! that commends love exceedingly, when it is distinguishing, when it puts a difference where there was no difference; that love that makes a difference and so vast a difference when no difference, that love is very precious. See what is said in Hos. 1. 6, 7. For I will no more have mercy upon the house of Israel; but I will utterly take them away. But I will have mercy upon the house of Judah, and will save them by the Lord their God, &c. See here at the very time that God said he would not have mercy upon Israel, he would have mercy upon Judah, and would save them; oh, how sweet was the discovery of that love? And truly, this is the love of God that this Doctrine holds forth, a distinguishing love, that when there was no difference in the creature, and one not better than another, and yet that God should take those, and choose those, that were as bad as those that were left; oh! this distinguishing love, it is very sweet and hath a great deal of refreshment.

Fifthly, This Doctrine holds forth a ground of joy, there is a great deal of true grounded joy, lasting joy, that may arise and doth arise unto the people of God, from the knowledge of this, that God hath chosen them and loved them from eternity with an everlasting love, it doth administer the best ground of comfort that can be found in all the World. See that place Luke 10. 20. But rather rejoice because your names are written in Heaven. The knowledge of this special love, that God hath written the names of poor creatures in Heaven, it is a ground of unspeakable joy; rejoice not that the unclean spirits are subject to you, why? they might rejoice more in that than in any outward mercy whatsoever, that the unclean spirits were subject to them, for it is more than if all the men of the world were subject to them: ah, but yet, in this rejoice not, rejoice not so much in this, for here is a more lasting ground for your joy, that your names are written in Heaven; it will afford such joy, and will kindle such a flame of joy, as all the waters of affliction cannot quench. When a soul comes to know this, and can make out this, that his name is written in heaven, a soul may then rejoice in every condition, rejoice in Tribulation, rejoice in Persecution, rejoice in Poverty and distress, yea, though they may loose all the comforts of life, yet when God reveals to them, that their names are written in Heaven, they may rejoice, for they have a portion that can never be lost, an inheritance that can never be taken away from them, though they meet with never so much scorn and reproach from the World, though men should cast out their names as vile, yet if their names are written in Heaven they may rejoice, for their names are precious before God when vile before men, and it is written there where it can never be blotted out; so that it doth administer matter of sound and solid joy, such joy as will hold out and cannot be quenched with many waters.

Sixthly, Another ground of comfort that doth arise from the knowledge of our election is this, that we have and shall enjoy that great privilege and benefit of the ministry and service of the holy Angels. When God comes to make out his love to the soul, why, it may conclude that the Lord hath given his Angels charge over them, that the Angels shall defend, and the Angels shall protect, and the Angels shall deliver from many dangers. See what the Apostle saith in Heb. 1. 14. speaking of the Angels: Are they not all ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them, who shall be heirs of salvation. They that are chosen by God to an inheritance reserved in Heaven, they have the ministry of all the holy Angels while on earth; though we see it not with this bodily eye, though we see not the Angels how they ascend and descend, how they go to Heaven and come from Heaven, yet it is matter of faith, the word of the Lord hath said they are all ministering spirits, for the good of the Saints; many a kindness the Angels doth us, and we are kept from many a danger by the Angels; He shall give his Angels charge, and they shall bear thee up that thou dash not thy foot against a stone: That is another ground of sweet comfort.

Seventhly, It doth administer this ground of comfort, that all that God's people do meet withal here in the world shall work for their good. God will make an advantage of whatsoever his people doth meet withal. See what the Apostle saith in Rom. 8. 28. And we know that all things work together for good, to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose. All things shall work together for good to those who are called according to his purpose; according to that ancient love in the bosom of God; all afflictions, all crosses, all opposition, all persecution, the worst that God's people can meet withal in the world, nay their very sins and failings and infirmities shall work together for good; the infinite wise God will make advantage of all, that all that they meet withal shall tend to the furtherance of his work, to the bringing about his purpose. All shall work together for good, yea for the best good, though they see it not for the present, but wait to the end, and by that time God hath done with his people, put all together and you shall see that all things shall work together for good; nay, we know it by experience, we have found that God hath brought good out of the greatest evil, and out of the greatest affliction. And this is to those who are called according to his purpose.

Eighthly, There is another ground of comfort which ariseth from the Doctrine of election, which is this, that The Lord will shorten all the days of tribulation which they meet withal here in the world; the days of affliction, and days of tribulation shall be shortened for the Elects sake ▪ and it is a great refreshment and comfort, that God will shorten all the days of darkness, days of tribulation, they shall be shortened for the Elects sake; all their winter days shall be shor days, dark days short days, there is an eternity of light a coming, a day that shall have no end, the Sun shall never set; but as for the days of darkness, of sorrow, affliction and tribulation, the Lord in mercy will shorten them: See what is said Matth. 24. 21, 22. For then shall be great Tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time, no, nor ever shall be: and except those days should be shortened, there should no flesh be saved; but for the Elects sake those days shall be shortened. But for the Elects sake all the days of public calamity shall be shortened, dark days, sad days, such a sad day as the Jews saw when Jerusalem was taken by Titus; it is spoken first of that dark and sad day to the Jews, when so many millions of them perished, such tribulation as never was, and if the Lord should not shorten those days, no flesh should be saved, that is, not one of them would have been left alive upon the earth, those days were so dark and so sore, but for the Elects sake those days of tribulation were shortened. And so all the days of calamity that God's people meet withal, those days of distress, yea days of public calamity, and the days of their particular afflictions, yea every dark day the Lord will shorten; the Lord in mercy will shorten the days of their affliction; and that is a great comfort to them, that though their days of affliction be very grievous, the Lord in mercy will make their affliction days to be but short.

In the ninth place, there is this comfort that doth flow from the knowledge of our election, that the Lord will certainly avenge the cause of his people. The Lord doth take notice, and he will avenge all the wrongs that any of his elect people doth meet withal in the World. See Luke 18. 6, 7. And the Lord said, hear what the unjust Judge saith, and shall not God avenge his own elect which cry day and night unto him, though he bear long with them, I tell you that he will avenge them speedily. I tell you, saith Christ, that he will avenge their cause and all their wrongs and injuries that they meet withal in the World.

In the tenth and last place, there is this ground of comfort, that the Lord's people, those whom he loves from eternity, they shall never fall away from him, never be plucked out of his hand, it is an impossible thing that they should perish. This is a mighty ground of strong consolation which they rob poor souls of that do plead for conditional election; the condition to be performed by the creature, it is always at uncertainties to the end of a man's life, whether he shall continue and persevere or no. But now the Doctrine of free and absolute and immutable election doth afford this ground of comfort, and the knowledge of our being in God's election doth assure us of this, that not any of Christ's Sheep shall perish, they shall never be drawn off from Christ, never be drawn off from following Christ their Shepherd, from laying him as the foundation of their life and happiness. Oh! what need have we to get such a ground of comfort in these backsliding times? when so many that make a profession do swerve from their profession, and make shipwreck of their profession of faith; But notwithstanding (saith the Apostle) the foundation of God standeth sure, having this seal the Lord knoweth those that are his. Though never so many that make a profession fall away, yet the foundation of the Lord stand sure; and therefore in Math. 24. 24. See what Christ saith, for there shall arise false Christ's, and false Prophets, and shall show great signs and wonders, insomuch that (if it were possible) they shall deceive the very elect. Christ speaketh of the latter days, a prophesy of our times, that there should arise some that should do great wonders, and be false Christ's, that shall endeavor to take men off from looking to the true Christ that was crucified at Jerusalem, and is risen again, false Christ's that shall put you upon it to look to a Christ within you, and they shall come in such a way, if it were possible that they should deceive the very Elect, but is it not possible that the people of the Lord's Election should fall finally; they may fall for a time, we know not what sinful practices God's people may fall into if the Lord leaves them, and what error in judgment if the Lord leaves them; but it is not possible that they should be drawn away forever; for the Lord will bring them back again to the right Christ, it is not possible that they should fall away totally and finally, for the mighty power of God is engaged for their security, You are kept by the mighty power of God through faith unto salvation. If it were in our own hand it were not possible that we should be kept, we meet with so much from within, from an unbelieving heart, and so much from without, but you are kept by the mighty power of God through faith to salvation. My Father holds you, saith Christ, and I hold you, and no man can pluck them out of my Fathers hand. And so you see the third particular that this doctrine of election doth administer many grounds of strong consolation, and great refreshment to the people of God.

I come now to the fourth particular propounded, and that is this.

That notwithstanding this Doctrine doth administer so much ground of comfort, yet, The Lord's people may meet with many temptations about the Doctrine of Election.

They may meet with many temptations, both about the election of others, and their own election.

First, They may meet with many temptations about the election of others.

And first of all, this may be a temptation, a soul may be prying by the eye of carnal reason into this great Mystery of God's eternal purpose and counsel, it is possible that the people of God may suffer much this way, and by this may be brought into great temptations and snares, by giving way to carnal reason and setting carnal reason on work to look into this great mystery, and to desire and covet that their reason may be satisfied; this proves a great snare and a great temptation to men when they shall go about to satisfy their carnal reason, and shall be unsatisfied in that they cannot apprehend to be according to reason; if their reason be not satisfied they cannot rest in the purpose and decree of God; oh! this leads many a poor soul into great snares and great temptations.

And as a remedy against this temptation know this, let us know, that God is no bound to give an account to our reason, of any of his actings. He giveth no account of his matters, saith Job. God is not bound to give an account to the creature, he is absolute and free, and is not bound to give an account to our carnal reason.

Besides, Let us know this, that our reason is a corrupted and a crooked rule; and shall we go about to measure the counsel of God's purpose and his acting from eternity by our crooked rule, and not subscribe to them unless we make them out by our crooked rule? Oh! let us know, that when this temptation presents itself, our reason is a crooked rule, and God's rule strait; and our rule being crooked we must not go about to measure God's actings and purpose by our reason.

Thirdly, As a Remedy against this, know that though our reason were never so strait, yet there are many things in God that are too deep for us to find out. Though our reason be not crooked, though it be spiritualized, there are many of the wonderful mysteries of God that we cannot comprehend; though they are not against spiritual reason, yet they are above our reason, that it is not possible, and so long as in this state we cannot comprehend them; it cannot be made out to our reason those wonderful mysteries of God; therefore we must not go about to search them out by our reason, and be disconted because our reason is not satisfied; but we must rest satisfied in the will of God, & admire that which we cannot comprehend; know that God is not unrighteous, if he choose one and leave another, he is not unrighteous though we cannot make it out to our carnal reason; but oh let us stand and wonder and admire as the Apostle did, he could not satisfy his reason, but he stands and admires and cries out, oh the depth of the wisdom and counsel of God! how are his ways past finding out?

Secondly, carnal reason may put us upon some other temptations; a soul may be tempted exceedingly about that way of God, his choosing some and not taking all; a gracious heart may meet with this temptation, and be much disquieted with this; oh! why will not God save all the World? he saves some men, but oh! why will not God save all? we think it had been better if God had saved all, there is mercy enough in God to save all, and there is enough in the death of Christ to save all, his blood hath price enough and virtue enough to satisfy for a thousand worlds; why then would not God save all?

To silence this temptation, that it is infinite grace that God saves any; when we consider what the lost condition was that man brought himself into, what strangers and enemies how desperately bent and set against God: Oh! the indignity that hath been done to God by the sons of men! oh! what free grace is it that God will save any? we should rather stand and wonder that God will save so many thousands yea millions, when as he might have left all in condemnation. Oh! let us not wonder that God hath not saved all, but wonder that God hath saved so many; and that any of us are in the number of those that are saved.

And further, to silence this temptation; why? say that the fault is not in God, the fault is in the creature; thy destruction is of thyself; God's purpose is not the cause of any man's destruction; no, man brought destruction upon himself, and man bringing destruction upon himself, God may choose whether he will save him or no.

And we may say further for the clearing of God, that God doth lay blocks in men's way to keep them from running to hell; he lays many commandments and many promises to keep men from sinning; God put many moral bars in men's way, though the Lord is not pleased to work powerfully and overcomingly, yet there are many bars that God doth lay in men's way to keep them from sinning, so that men's own consciences shall witness that their destruction is of themselves.

Yea I may say further for the clearing of God; that God doth afford means of life, and means of salvation; there is sufficient means afforded to a great part of the World, if not to all; I say there is sufficient means afforded for bringing men to life and salvation, to those that sit under the Gospel. Though it is true, the Lord doth not always nor to all men make them effectual infallibly, yet I say there is a sufficiency in the means, if there were no lett in the creature, but that the Lord doth not make those means afforded to us effectual, infallibly to bring men to life and salvation; therein we must rest in the good pleasure of the Lord.

Again, this is another temptation; why doth God choose this man and not that man? why Peter and not Judas? Judas sin it was no greater then Peters sin. Judas betrayed Christ, Peter denied Christ and is forsworn; now that God should choose one man and not another; why this man and not that man?

To silence this temptation, we must know that the Lord is free, and mercy it belongs to him, and he may show it where he pleaseth. As for this God will give no account to the creature, why one man and not another, why the Lord will show mercy to one man not to another. You know what Christ saith, There shall be two men in one bed, the one shall be taken and the other left; two women shall be grinding together, the one shall be taken and the other left; two men shall be in the field, the one shall be taken and the other left. Two in the same condition, the one taken and the other left. And for this we must rest in the good pleasure of God, and nothing else will quiet our spirits, if we do not rest in the good pleasure of God, for God doth no wrong to the creature, if he doth love one and not another.

And it is a strange thing, that we in our carnal reason will abridge God of that, which we will take to ourselves, and that is to love where he please; if you love one more then another, you are not bound to give any account of it; and men take a liberty to bestow gifts upon one and not upon another. And let not us bind the Lord from that which we will take to ourselves, to love one and not another. And truly if we do not rest in the good pleasure of God in this, we shall but disquiet our spirits, and meet with no satisfaction.

Again, God's people may be tempted concerning their Relations, their children. Oh many Parents have many thoughts, whether God loves their children or no, and whether their children be chosen of God from eternity; and especially at sometimes. As when God comes to take away children by death, then the temptation sets upon but especially when children go on in the ways of sin, Parents they pray and wait, and they see no fruit, but still they go on in the ways of sin. It may be the Parents die and leave their children going on in sin, and see not the fruit of God's electing love, nor the fruit of Covenant mercy, then this proves a sore temptation to them.

Now to silence this temptation, know that there is no believing Parent, but he may have hope of his children, even of all his children while they are young, before grown up to renounce the Covenant: If God take away any of your children young, no Parent but may have hope concerning his children in the Covenant made to believing Parents, I say they may have hope, the Covenant of God will relieve in such a case.

Ah, but when children do grow up, and Parents see that they walk in ways that are evil, and are contrary to God, and are far from God, yet believing parents may believe that notwithstanding that, they may belong to God; I say notwithstanding for the present they are far from God, and walk contrary to the Lord, yet they may be known to the Lord, and in his due time he may bring them in. And Parents should not give over the use of the means, and though Parents should wait all their days, and pray and plead the Covenant, and desire to see the fruit of God's Covenant, and should not see it, believers they may die in hope, the Lord he may bring in Prodigal children; the Lord he may do them good afterward, when you are dead and gone, he may bring some of your good counsels and exhortations to their remembrance; he may afterward when you lie in the dust, bring to remembrance some of your words, and may make them work powerfully upon their hearts. Believing Parents may still die in hope, though they see not the fruit of the Covenant, though their children may be at a great distance from God, the Lord may bring them in, and you meet with them with comfort at the last day.

There is one Temptation more concerning others which I shall but touch, and that is this: Is not the Gospel Preached to all? and are not all commanded to believe? and is it not declared that whosoever doth believe shall be saved? whatsoever man or woman in the World doth believe shall be saved; yea, doth not the Scripture say, that God would have all men to be saved, and come to the knowledge of the truth?—The soul may thus reason with it self, how can this stand with God's purpose and decree and election? If there be an absolute immutable unchangeable election, how can it be declared that whosoever believe in Christ shall be saved; whereas if men be not elected, they cannot be saved, and if elected, they shall be saved, though they do not believe. Thus the temptation may work.

I Answer, notwithstanding God's secret purpose, the Gospel may and must so be preached; and yet there is no deceivableness in God, nothing but truth and sincerity in God: for you must know that we are to walk by the revealed Will of God. And all men shall be judged by the revealed Will of God. Now what is the revealed Will of God, why, that we believe in the name of his Son Jesus Christ, declaring that whosoever believeth shall be saved. And God will certainly make good that word; whosoever doth believe shall be saved. Never any in the World that came into Christ and believed on his name, but was saved. Notwithstanding the secret decree and purpose of God, and there is no man but may claim life and salvation, upon those terms on which the Scripture doth hold forth life and salvation, and that is believing in Jesus Christ.

Objection. But, God would have all men to be saved, and come to the knowledge of the truth; why then sure there is no election.

I Answer, That Scripture doth but hold forth, what the thing is which is well pleasing to God, that men return to the Lord, and that they believe in the name of Christ, which is the way to salvation, this is a thing that is pleasing to the Lord; not that God wills it with an effectual operative will, for then it must needs be: But it only holds forth what is pleasing to God, not that God will bring all men to repentance, not that God will work faith in all men, therein God will be left free to his good pleasure; he wills it not with an absolute will, for then it must needs be.

Question. But you will say, what are the Wills of God contrary one to another? hath God a will and a will? hath God a revealed will, that he will have all men to be saved, and is his secret will contrary to his revealed will?

I Answer, no, God's wills are not contrary to one another. To say God doth delight, and it is a thing pleasing to him, that men do believe and return to the Lord, and take hold of Christ; and to say that God is not pleased to work this in the heart, is no contradiction.

The Gospel declares that this is well pleasing to God, that men do return to him, and believe in Christ; and the Gospel doth declare, that whosoever doth believe shall be saved. Now if God should condemn any man that doth believe in Christ, then God should walk contrary to his will.

But to say, God doth approve of these things, they are excellent, and so he wills them, that is he delights in them; and yet to say, God is not pleased to work this in every man's heart, there is no contradiction. And thus we should labor to silence those temptations which our carnal reason may make concerning this great mystery of God's election; you see what temptations God's people may meet withal concerning the election of others.

Matth. 15. 24.

I am not sent, but unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel.

SERMON XIII.

There are more sore temptations that God's people may meet withal concerning their own Election.

First, A poor soul may be thus tempted, that it is an impossible thing for it to attain to the knowledge of God's love; this is a secret, this is that which was transacted in Heaven, and therefore sure it is not possible for me to attain to the knowledge of this, that the Lord hath loved me, and hath written my name in the book of life. Men may have some good hopes of it, but surely, saith the temptation, it is presumption for any man to think or say, he may come to assurance, that the Lord hath written his name in the Book of life; for there are these two things against it.

First, Secret things belongeth to God.

Secondly, No eye hath seen what is done in Heaven, and if eye hath not seen it, how shall I attain to the knowledge of it?

In Answer to this temptation, know and consider that many of the Saints of God hath attained to the knowledge of God's eternal love, and hath risen to this assurance, that the Lord hath loved and will love with an everlasting love. The Apostle Paul did attain to it, and he glories in it; yea then, when he speaketh in the person of all the Elect of God. Rom. 8. 33. Who shall lay anything to the charge of God's elect; it is God that justifieth: Vers. 34. Who is he that condemneth; it is Christ that died, yea rather that is risen again, who is even at the right hand of God, who also maketh intercession for us. Vers. 35. Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? He stands up to challenge all the world, and the powers of darkness, who dare lay anything to the charge of God's Elect? And in the 38. verse see what he further saith, For I am persuaded that neither death, nor life, nor Angels, nor Principalities, nor Powers, nor things present, nor things to come: Vers. 39. Nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature shall be able to separate us from the Love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord. So then you see, it is a thing not impossible to attain to the knowledge of God's eternal electing love.

Nay, it is laid upon all the Saints as a duty to seek after the knowledge of it, 2 Pet. 1. 10. Wherefore the rather brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure, for if you do these things, ye shall never fall. So then election may be made sure, and it is a duty which lieth upon all believers to strive after, that they may make their calling and election sure. Now if it be so, that this is a thing that may be attained unto, and that the Saints hath attained unto, and a duty which all the children of God are put upon, then certainly this is a temptation; and know it is a temptation, that it is an impossible thing for any to attain to the knowledge of God's electing love.

But Secondly, The second temptation concerning our election may be this, a poor soul may be thus tempted; it is true, there may be the knowledge of God's love, and many of the Saints have attained to this knowledge, but as for me I have no certainty; I have striven, and I have waited upon God, and sought for assurance, but I have not attained it; and therefore I am ready to conclude, surely the Lord hath not loved me, others sought and they have attained, and have assurance; I have sought and I cannot meet with assurance of the love of God, and therefore certainly the Lord hath not loved me.

I Answer to this temptation, know, that thou canst not conclude that God hath not called thee effectually because thou hast not assurance, and if thou canst not conclude that God hath not called thee effectually, because thou hast not assurance, much less canst thou conclude, that God hath not chosen thee from eternity, because thou hast not assurance.

But Secondly, In answer to this temptation, hath not the Lord given thee a heart to close with Christ, as held forth in the Gospel to poor lost sinners? hath not God made thee willing to accept of Christ? hath not the Lord in some measure enabled thee to cleave to Christ? and dost now resolve to cast thyself upon Christ, to venture all upon Christ, even thy eternity? why then know, here is that which gives the essence the being of faith? this accepting of Christ held forth in the Gospel with thy resting upon him, it is the being of faith, and this faith is no other, but the faith of God's elect, the fruit of God's electing love, it springs from that eternal love which chose his people unto salvation through faith; and therefore though there be not the comfort of faith, (assurance is the comfort of faith, the flower that grows upon the fruit of faith) yet if there be that which gives the being of faith, thou mayst not conclude, that the Lord hath not loved thee, because thou hast not assurance.

Thirdly, In answer to this temptation, thou sayst thou hast no assurance of God's electing love, and therefore thou concludest that God doth not love thee. As thou hast no assurance that God hath chosen thee, so thou hast no knowledge of the contrary, and mayest not conclude the contrary, that God hath not chosen thee; for if thou shouldst so conclude, thou mayest lie against the truth; and therefore cease to draw any conclusions of that which is not known to thee; and give up thyself to do the revealed will of God; and what is that? but that thou take hold of the offer of salvation and receive Christ, that you believe in the name of his Son, for this is his commandment, 1. Joh. 3. 18.

But Thirdly, this temptation may arise in the soul, namely, a desire that God would give it a sign, an extraordinary sign, it resolves it cannot believe, and will not believe unless God give it a sign. This is a temptation that some of God's people hath met withal.

To answer this temptation, know that it is not God's ordinary way to give satisfaction to the soul concerning his love, by giving an extraordinary sign; it is true the Lord may sometimes, in some cases condescend to his people, and may give an extraordinary sign; yea the Lord may and hath prevented his people sometimes with an extraordinary sign to prevent their unbelief when they have not asked a sign: You have heard of that woman that sometime lived in Cambridge, that was many years in a tempted condition, and being sorely afflicted one day, she took up a glass in her hand and cast it against the ground with this expression, I am as surely damned as this glass is broken, and it pleased God so to order it that the glass was not broke, which was to the conviction of her unbelief. I say the Lord may give a sign, yea when it is not asked, but it is not God's ordinary way; but now for a soul to stand it out with God, that it cannot believe unless God do give it some extraordinary sign; oh this is a tempting of God, and the Lord may leave such a soul forever in its unbelief, when it shall take up such a resolution that it will not believe though it hath the promise unless it hath a sign; the Lord I say may leave such a soul in its unbelief.

And further in answer, It is true, this was God's way formerly to satisfy his people by a sign, by some extraordinary sign and vision; but now since the coming of Christ, God hath chosen to speak to us by his son, see Heb. 1. 2. God who at sundry times, and in divers manners spake in times past unto the fathers by the Prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son. God formerly did reveal himself in an extraordinary way, he did appear sometimes and spake mouth to mouth to Abraham and Moses, that was God's way then; but now God hath chose to speak to us by his Son, God speaks by Christ, and Christ speaketh by the Scripture, hear him, faith the Father. Now Christ hath laid down a rule for our faith and for our obedience; and know this, that Jesus Christ by his Spirit can so make use of the word, that it shall give as clear and evident satisfaction to a soul concerning the love of God, as if God should give a sign, as if God should speak immediately from Heaven. When the Spirit of the Lord will make use of the word of grace, it shall satisfy the soul as fully of his love, as if the Lord did appear from Heaven, and speak to the soul mouth to mouth.

Further, One thing more I shall speak to this Temptation; you that desire a sign, and would have an extraordinary sign that God loveth you; why, know that God hath given you a sign; we have signs as well as our forefathers had, what is the water in Baptism, but a sign to us? and the bread and wine in the Sacrament, but a sign to us? that Ordinance of the Supper which we are partakers of this day; the Lord hath condescended to us to give us a sign, the bread is a sign, and the wine is a sign, and the sitting at the Lord Table a sign, it is a sign unto faith, to every believing soul; these are signs that God hath loved it from everlasting, and set it apart for communion with himself, that he hath loved us and given his Son for us, that Christ hath loved us and given his blood for us, that he is reconciled and hath set us at his Table, and we shall sit with him in his Kingdom; here is a sign though not unto sense, yet here is a sign unto faith. We think that Abraham and the Prophets they were happy, in that God did appear to them from Heaven, and spake to them immediately. When God appeared to Abraham, and he called to him out of Heaven, Now I know that thou lovest me, and I have sworn by myself, in blessing I will bless thee: You think that Abraham and the Prophets were happy, that he should tell them, that he knew they loved him, and that he would love them, and would bless them. But know it of a certain that he hath dealt more graciously with us under the Gospel, then with them, in this very particular in which we desire a sign; in giving us these gracious signs; for it was but seldom that God gave them a sign, very seldom, and it was but to some of them, Abraham and the Prophets and Patriarchs; but now it is God's ordinary way to give us a sign, that which was very rare to them, God hath made to us a standing ordinance, so that we have a sign continually before us; as often as we brake the bread and drink the wine, the Lord gives a sign to faith, and speaks to faith his everlasting love. And therefore take heed that we do not tempt God to seek another sign. What saith Christ, Math. 12. 39. The Scribes and Pharisees desired to see a sign from Christ, verse. 38. An evil and adulterous generation seeketh after a sign, and there shall be no sign given to it, but the sign of the Prophet Jonas. They would not accept of the sign that Christ gave them, no, they would have other signs; They are an adulterous Generation, saith Christ, and they shall have no other sign, but the sign of the Prophet Jonas. So when we are seeking for other signs, and oh that God would work extraordinary signs! why, saith God, they shall have no other signs then the sign of the bread and wine and water, these shall be sealing signs. And know, whereas we think some extraordinary sign should convince us and overcome our hearts, such is the unbelief of our hearts, that if we do not believe when God gives us his word, and these signs, neither would we believe if God should speak in some extraordinary way from Heaven. They have Moses and the Prophets, saith Christ, if they will not hear them, neither will they hear if one rose from the dead. Dives he was desirous that one should go from the dead to his Brethren; oh no, they have Moses and the Prophets, if they will not believe them, neither will they believe though one rose from the dead.

Fourthly, Another temptation may be this; 〈◇〉 desire to be out of the World, that so a man may know what that state is which God hath ordained him unto; there may be such a temptation as this, a hasting to die, and to go out of the world, that so men might know what their state in another world is, what it is that God hath decreed and purposed concerning them.

I answer, There is abundance of folly in this; for let me say to such a soul under such a temptation, 1. Either thou hast assurance of God's eternal love, or else thou hast it not; 2. Thou knowest not but that thou mayest have it; or 3. Thou despairest of ever having it.

Now to the first, If the Lord hath given thee any evidence of his love, and any hopes of blessedness in the World to come, thou dost very ill thus to make hast to be possessed of that which the Lord hath given thee, thou shouldst rather wait the Lord's time. Remember, what the Scripture saith, He that believeth maketh not hast. If thou hast faith, if thou hast any hope of a blessed state in the world to come, take heed that thou dost not make hast, thou shouldst rather covet and desire to do that which is thy work before thou goest hence, thou shouldst desire an opportunity of lifting up the name of the Lord before the Sons of men; now there is no such opportunity of making the name of the Lord glorious in the grave; and therefore thou shouldst rather desire to know thy work and to do thy work before thou goest hence.

Secondly, If it be so that thou hast no evidence of God's love, not any knowledge of it for the present, yet thou art not without all hope; why then, what a folly is it to desire to be out of this world, that thou mayest know thy state. Surely thou goest out of thy way, that is not God's way to come to the knowledge of what God hath purposed concerning thee, thy way is to give all diligence while here, not to desire to go into another world to know what it is; but it is thy duty to give all diligence before thou goest, to make thy calling and election sure, to wait upon God with all thy might.

Thirdly, If it be so that thou hast no hope, but thou despairest concerning the love of God; Oh I shall never attain to the knowledge of God's love; why then it is despairing madness, it is beastly and unreasonable madness in thee to hasten thy end, to desire to remove out of this world before the Lord's time, that so thou mayest know thy worst, I say, that is madness and folly, for so long as thou art in the Land of the living, thou art in a state of possibility; no poor sinners how vile soever, but while in the Land of the Living, they are in a state of possibility, for as I said before, so again, that even reason and a man's conscience will tell him, that it is not possible that he should know that the Lord hath rejected him; and therefore for any man to say it is impossible that he should be saved, and have no hope, that man lies against conscience and against truth, to conclude that which the Lord hath not revealed; and therefore while in the state of life, you are in a state of possibility, and oh! what madness is it for a man to put himself into such a state where there is no hope, no possibility?

Fifthly, There is another temptation concerning our own election, which is this; If God hath decreed all things, his purpose must stand, why then his purpose cannot be resisted, God hath purposed whatever falls out in the world, he hath decreed it; and therefore we cannot withstand it, if we do sin against God we cannot help it, God hath purposed it, he hath purposed all things: and therefore why doth God find fault, why doth God punish the sons of men, we cannot help our sinning against God. That cavil is raised in Rom. 9. 19. Why doth he yet find fault? for who hath resisted his will?

I answer, God's decree doth not necessitate any man, doth not compel the will; no, when he decrees to save his people and bestow faith upon them, he doth not compel the will, but sweetly inclines the heart. And so God doth not compel the will of men to sin, God's decree is not the product of man's sinning; it is true, God suffers it so to be, but man's will it is voluntary in the commission of sin, and it is that which he chooseth, that which he delights in and loves; and this is the condemnation, God's decree is not the cause of man's sinning, no, man's own perverse will is the cause of all sinning. And therefore let no man say, he is tempted of God, for no charge no blame can be laid upon God. It is true, God's secret absolute will cannot be resisted; but God's revealed will (which is man's rule) may be resisted, and is resisted, and that shall be their condemnation. God's secret will is not known, but it is evident men may resist God's revealed will. Ye stiff necked and uncircumcised in heart, and ears, ye do always resist the Holy Ghost; as your Fathers did, so do ye, Acts 7. 51. So that the Spirit may be resisted, and God's will may be resisted, that will which is our rule may be resisted, and is resisted, and that freely and voluntarily by men's own will, and they are not ordained to it by any of God's decrees: And therefore cease to lay the blame on God, for man shall one day see that his sin is his own, and his condemnation his own.

Sixthly, There is another temptation that may arise from God's decree, and it is a temptation to this hour. A man may thus reason, if God hath decreed that I shall be saved, then I shall be saved, I shall be saved without my striving, what need I make such a stir; if God hath decreed that I shall be saved, then I shall be saved though I go on in sin, God's decree and purpose cannot be hindered; and therefore if I be chosen to life and salvation, I shall be saved without my own striving, without taking pains, and I shall be saved whatever I do.

This is a desperate temptation, and I shall speak something to it. Thou sayest if God hath decreed thy salvation then thou shalt be saved and must be saved without thy pains, though thou takest no pains to look after Christ, and believe and repent as others do.

To this I answer: First, though God hath purposed thy salvation, and though thou beest in the number of his chosen, yet without thy striving and waiting upon God in his own way, thou canst not attain to the knowledge and comfort of it; and is this nothing for a man to go all his days (though he be chosen) without the knowledge of God's love, and go under fears, and be in bondage all his days? is this nothing, though chosen, so long as thou fittest still thou canst not know it, and so not have the comfort of it? But,

Secondly, God hath joined the means and the end together, know that; so that one cannot be without the other. Thou sayest if thou beest elected then thou shalt be saved, thou concludest concerning the end; and I say, if thou beest elected then thou shalt certainly be brought to believe in Christ and become a new creature. The means it is purposed by God as well as the end, God hath decreed to bring his people to life and salvation this way, by believing; in the way of faith, and in the way of repentance, and in the way of holiness, you shall be saved; and truly it is as impossible for them to go without faith, to be in an unrenewed condition all their days, as it is impossible for those to be saved that are not elected; yea I may say notwithstanding God's decree, notwithstanding God's election, yet if thou dost not believe in Christ, and be not a new creature thou canst not be saved, if thou dost not get faith and holiness thou canst not be saved. The Apostle he reasons so in Acts 27. God tells the Apostle there, that the lives of them all should be saved, and at verse 30. 31. When the Shipmen were about to flee out of the Ship. Paul said to the Centurion and to the soldiers, except these abide in the Ship ye cannot be saved. Because as God purposed the end, as that they should be saved, so he purposed that they should be saved that way, by staying in the Ship. And so notwithstanding God's decree, if thou gettest not faith in Christ, and beest not a new creature, thou canst not be saved.

And to that which thou sayest, it is not of him that willeth nor runneth, but God that showeth mercy; and therefore why should I strive for life and salvation?

I deny that, that God will save thee without thy striving: It is true, it is not for thy faith and repentance that God will save, but without these God will not save; this is the way by which God saves. You would think he were an unreasonable man that should argue thus, God hath decreed how long I shall live, whether twenty, thirty, forty, or sixty years, the period is appointed by God, and therefore it matters not that I eat. Now if God hath appointed a man should live so long, he hath also appointed that you should use the means. Hezekiah he knew how long he should live, I will add unto thy days fifteen years, 2 Kings 20. 6. It had been strange reasoning for Hezekiah to say, I will neither eat nor drink for God's purpose must stand; as God hath purposed the end, so he purposed the means; so that the means and the end are joined together.

But thou reasonest further; that if God doth decree that I shall be saved, why then I shall be saved though I go on in a way of sin.

First of all, here is a gross mistake of God's decree; God doth not decree to save any man whatever he doth, though he all his days go on to destroy himself; God never made such a decree, no, God's decree is to save men from sin as well as from wrath. If God decrees to save any man from wrath, he decrees to save that man from sin: As it is impossible that that man should go to hell that God decrees to save, so it is impossible that that man should wallow in sin.

And oh what great ingratitude? to say, though I go on in sin I shall be saved, if God hath decreed it. Oh great ingratitude! As if a child should say, my father hath entailed a great estate upon me, and I cannot go without it though I do all that I can against him; oh! is this the part of a child? sure of a bastard and not a child! oh horrible ingratitude!

Nay, let me say there is madness in it; there is this madness, as if a man should say, God hath purposed how long I shall live, and it matters not though I stab myself, and though I run into the Sea, I shall live so long as God hath purposed; oh! such desperate madness is in many men when they reason about God's decree.

The seventh and last temptation, is a temptation of despair, which some of God's people may be exercised withal; and thus they may reason, if the Lord hath not purposed my salvation, if he hath not decreed my salvation, then I cannot be saved whatever I do, though I take never so much pains, and strive never so much; though I seek faith and repentance, yea though I do believe, and though I do repent, yet if God hath not decreed my salvation I cannot be saved.

To this I answer; that God's decree and purpose shall never infringe the truth of any promises that he hath made; now he hath made a promise, that whosoever believe in Christ shall be saved: Now God's decree shall not infringe the truth of this promise; and there is no man upon earth that shall believe in the name of Jesus Christ, but he may claim life and salvation upon God's promise, and it shall be made out to him.

And let me say further, that thou dost not take the right course to begin at God's decree: Oh! this is a discouragement, this will keep thee off from the use of the means; if I be not elected I cannot be saved, thou takest the wrong course to begin at they election, who taught thee this way? God never taught thee so; it is from Satan who endeavors to puzzle thee in thy way. Though there be such an election, and the Saints have much comfort when they do know their election, yet you must not begin with election, but know that you must walk by God's revealed will, and look to God's revealed will; if thou art called to faith and to believe, thou art not amongst the lost ones, and art called to life and salvation; and therefore look to the revealed will of God, so long as a man is in the state of unbelief it is not possible that he should know what God hath decreed concerning him. Therefore do not begin at election; this is for a man to covet to set his foot upon the highest step of the Ladder before he sets it upon lowest. When a man is in his youth he doth not know whether God hath purposed old age for him, and because he does not know it, he is not discouraged from the use of the means; and so I say, in a state of unbelief thou canst not know that God hath loved thee, but this should not discourage thee to wait upon God in the use of the means, giving up thyself to his revealed will, which commands thee, and all the Sons of men, to believe in Christ. And as I said, so I say again, that there is no man that ever believed in Jesus Christ but he was saved; and therefore it is madness and folly for a man to say, though I believe in Christ, I shall not be saved if God hath not purposed it, I tell you there is none that ever did believe in Christ but was saved, and any that do believe to the end of the world, may go to God and challenge him upon his word: Nay, I may say, if Judas had believed and repented and turned to the Lord, Judas had been saved.

Question. But you will say, If I be not elected, I cannot believe, it is in vain for me to take pains; if the Lord hath not purposed to give me faith, I shall never be able to work it in my own heart, and therefore in vain for me to temper with my own heart.

I Answer. That thou dost not know that God hath not purposed to give thee faith, and therefore thou art bound to wait upon the Lord in the use of the means. And that thou hast not faith, do not lay it upon God, though it be true; Faith is his gift, yet God doth hinder no man from believing, God lays no Blocks in any man's way: Nay, there is a great deal that God doth to bring men unto Faith, what means doth God use? What workings are there? What strivings of the Spirit? What Invitations? What Exhortations? the Word of the Lord is full of them.

And let me say further, that if the Lord hath given thee a heart in good earnest to desire the gift of faith, the Lord will certainly give it out to thee; I say, if the Lord hath set a man's Heart and Will to the Lord, that a man doth from the heart desire Christ, that great gift of God, the Lord will certainly give the gift of Faith; If thou knewest the gift of God, and did ask of him, he would have given thee living water: John 4. 10. If there had been a Will in thee to have desired it, he would have given thee Water of Life; But if there be not a Will in man to have Faith; Nay, the heart of man doth secretly oppose it; why, then let not man lay the fault upon God; But if the Lord hath given a Will, and a man's Will be not against the Lord, then there is a beginning of God's work, and the Lord will certainly give out the gift of Faith, and Christ, to a poor Soul, that shall be found waiting upon him.

And thus you have seen the several Temptations that may arise from the Doctrine of Election.

Now followeth something by way of Answer and Direction, for the preventing and silencing of all Temptations of this Nature.

Matth. 15. 24.

But he answered and said, I am not sent, but unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel.

SERMON XV.

I Come now to lay down some general Rules for the silencing and overcoming of all Temptations of this Nature concerning Election.

And the first Rule is this; Take heed that we do not give way to carnal reason: that we do not set carnal Reason on work to find out this great and wonderful Mystery; take heed of the very beginnings of carnal reason; when you begin to reason concerning Election, as to the causer of it, why God should choose one, and refuse another; Seek not to satisfy Carnal Reason in this; for know, that there is an infinite distance between God and the creature.

And therefore for the silencing of Carnal Reason;

Consider first of all, That he is God, and thou art man; therefore do not quarrel and contend with God, and seek to bring down God to satisfy thy reason in this; Rom. 9. 20. Nay but, O man, Who art thou that repliest against God? Shall the thing formed, say to him that formed it, why hast thou made me thus? The Apostle he brings in this for the silencing of carnal reason, that is too busy in prying into God's Election, and will not be satisfied unless he hath a reason; Man, Who art thou? consider that thou art man, that thou art but a child of Adam; and remember that as thou art man, so he is God, he is Jehovah; he is an infinite incomprehensible Being, he is absolute, he is Independent, he doth not depend upon any creature; his will it is the rule of all goodness and righteousness, he is God; it is not the will of man, nor the reason of man that must be righteous; that must not be good which we will, and which we comprehend; no, that is not the rule of goodness, but the will of God; and therefore remember that he is God, and not man.

Secondly, To silence carnal reason, Remember that He is thy Maker. Shall the thing formed say to him that formed it, Why hast thou made me thus? Why, he made thee, he fashioned thee, and is it fit for the creature to contend with his Maker? Should the Potsherd go and strive with his Maker? There is as great a distance betwixt God and the creature, as between the Potter and the clay, nay, a greater distance between God and us; Of the same lump he maketh one a vessel of honor, another of dishonor; were this remembered, we would not be so bold to call God to accompt.

Thirdly, For to silence carnal reason, consider, That the more a man wades into this mystery with his own reason, the further he is and shall be from satisfaction: for it is just as if a man should attempt to go and wade over the Sea on foot, when a man sets the first step into the Sea, it may be he is up to the knees, the next step up to the loins, next step up to the neck, and the next step over head and ears, and can feel no bottom.

It is true, by faith we may go down into this great deep, and see the wonders of God; by faith a man may go upon this great depth of the love of God, and wonder at it, and cry out, O! the depth of the love of God! But if we go with carnal reason, we shall be over head and ears; and the more reason, the further from satisfaction, and he will confound his reason; If a man gaze upon the Sun to know the nature of the Sun, and think to comprehend the Sun, the more he gazeth upon the Sun, the more will the Sun confound the eye, that he will not be able to comprehend the Sun; and so when the dim eye of carnal reason shall gaze upon this glorious mystery of God, the eye will soon be confounded, and we shall be further from satisfaction.

Fourthly, Consider for the silencing of carnal reason, That it is not possible that a man should go about to satisfy his reason, but he shall dash against many dangerous Rocks that will split him all to pieces: Many a man of learning have thought to comprehend this mystery by reason, and so they have split against many dangerous rocks of error, and made shipwreck of Faith; many have come to reason against Rom. 9. and have wished that it had been torn out of the Book of God: O dangerous Rocks that men split themselves against, that will have their reason satisfied in this deep mystery! I have known some (I hope gracious) that have been miserably shattered this way, that would needs call God to account, why God let Adam fall, and why God did not save all the world, and why God should take one, and not another; and they have reasoned thus, until they have reasoned themselves out of good thoughts of God, and out of acts of Faith and Hope; and have reasoned themselves out of their duty to God, and have been as poor creatures in the midst of an Ocean, and have found no ground to set their foot upon.

And again consider, That the Devil will make use of carnal Reason in this Mystery of God, to keep a poor soul in a dark and perplexed condition; there is many a poor soul is kept in the dark, and led into a labyrinth that they can find no path; they are kept in a fruitless condition many days and years, an useless condition; they are kept from their present work and duty, by giving way to their carnal reason in this great mystery.

And consider last of all, for the silencing of carnal reason, That it is an impossible thing to attain to satisfy it, and therefore it is a vain attempt, time is spent in vain, and thou layest out thyself in vain; while a soul seeks that which cannot be, to know their Election in the first place, before they come to Christ, and be found believing and obeying, and walking with God, I say, it is an impossible thing for you to know your Election, before you believe in Christ, and be a new creature: It is true, you are put upon it to make your Election sure, ay but he does not say, find it out by reason, have an account of it in the first place; no, make it sure by getting faith in Christ, believing in Christ, fetch grace and strength from Christ, more grace from Christ, adding grace to grace, and that is the way to make your Election sure; that is the first general Rule that I shall lay down for the silencing of this Temptation, Take heed that you do not so much as desire that your carnal reason should be satisfied in this great mystery; no, you must rest in the Will, in the good pleasure of God, or else you will never have rest.

Secondly, a second Rule for the silencing of Temptations concerning Election is this, When ever you are troubled in Spirit about your own Election, then flee to the Covenant of Grace, flee to the Promises, the free, gracious, absolute promises of the new Covenant; and do not say, well, here I will stand, and go no further, till I make out my Election; truly that is the way to perish, to stand there, and to go no further; no, when you are in the dark concerning Election, and doubt of the love of God, then immediately flee to the Promises, run to Christ, run to the free grace of the Father, run to the righteousness of the Son, run to the gracious Promises held forth in the word of Reconciliation; look to that which is nigh thee, to the Word, to the tender of grace and reconciliation, look to those things in which you may agree with God, if unbelief do not give him the lie, and if unbelief do not make you to lie against the Truth, you may agree with God in those tenders of Grace and Mercy which are before you; and therefore flee to them, look to the Scripture, the Word of God holds forth gracious tenders and invitations for the relief of poor souls; Isa. 45. 22. Look to me all ye ends of the earth, and be saved, for I am God, and there is none besides me: There is a gracious word to flee unto, when you are doubting concerning Election; and so, Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts, and let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him, and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon, Isa. 55. 7. and so, The Son of man came to seek and to save that which was lost, Matth. 18. 11. Another gracious word, and Come unto me ye that are weary, and heavy laden, and I will give you rest, Matth. 11. 18. and God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son; that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life, John 3. 16. and so in John 6. 37. All that the Father giveth me, shall come to me; and him that cometh to me, I will in no wise cast out: Here is another gracious word for poor souls to flee unto. And so again in 1 Tim. 1. 15. This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, That Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners, of whom I am chief. O! How many gracious tenders and invitations are there in the Word of God for poor souls to flee unto? And O that God would teach his people who are tempted about their Election, and cannot make out their Election, presently to flee to some free promise of the Lord held forth that is before you; and in that you and God may agree, if unbelief hinder not.

There have been some Parliaments in England in which many good things have been propounded for the welfare of the people; but all the Members have not been satisfied in some things propounded; Now had they laid aside those things in which all were not satisfied, and fallen upon those things in which all might have agreed, a good work might have been carried on by them, and in due time all might have been satisfied, but standing upon those things concerning which all were not satisfied, it broke all to pieces; and so I may say of this business of Election; it may be the Lord he is satisfied concerning thy Election, it is clear to him, The foundation of the Lord standeth sure, having this seal, the Lord knoweth them that are his, 2 Tim. 2. 19. But thou art not satisfied, & thou resolvest to meddle with nothing till God satisfy thee concerning thy Election; why that's the way to break all to pieces: Look to that in w^{ch} thou mayest agree with God, the word of grace that is before thee, those Promises in which God and thy soul may meet, O fall upon them, and close with God in them, and afterwards in God's due time he will clear up thy Election, and satisfy thee that thou art one that he hath loved and chosen. Only remember that is the second Rule, when we are stumbled about Election, Run presently to the free Grace of God in Christ, and to the gracious promises held forth in the Gospel.

A third Rule for the silencing of these Temptations, whenever thou art in the dark concerning Election, pusled either about the Doctrine of Election, or thine own Election in particular, Resolve to justify God, to clear the Lord however it be, and say he is righteous: Lay that down for a certain conclusion, Lord, thou art righteous, and thou hast no iniquity in thee, and canst do no wrong, whether I understand thy way or not; the Apostle in Rom. 9. 13. speaketh of God's taking one, and leaving another; As it is written, Jacob have I loved, but Esau have I hated: and at verse. 14. What shall we say then? Is there unrighteousness with God? God forbid. Is there unrighteousness with God? It seems so, that God should deal thus unequally with persons that are equal, that are in the same condition, Is this righteous? That God should take one, and leave another, when both in the same condition, is not this unrighteousness? It seems so, but it is not so, God forbid, saith he, that we should have the least thought that God should be unrighteous; no, that cannot be; for God to take one, and leave another, it is no injustice; and it is no act of God's Justice to take and leave, but an act of his Sovereignty: For a Prince to pardon one Malefactor, and leave another to the righteous censure of the Law, there is no injustice in it: for a man, when two persons stand before him, and both in the same condition, to make one his bosom friend and nor another, it's no injustice; this is the case with God; God will choose bosom friends, choose one, and not another, it is the act of his Sovereignty, and no injustice.

Indeed if God should condemn the innocent, there would be some color to charge God with unrighteousness; if God should condemn a man or woman merely because they are not elected, although that man or woman should believe and repent, there were unfaithfulness in God; but God never did so, God never condemned the believer, he never condemned the soul that returned to him by Christ, therefore God cannot be charged with unfaithfulness: Therefore let us resolve upon it, God is righteous: Justify God, though thou art in the dark, and perplexed and troubled in Spirit about thine own Election, or the Election of friends, yet do thou resolve and say, I will justify God, though God hath not chosen me, and my children, & though God hath not chosen my friends, yet no unrighteousness in him. Truly this is the way to overcome the Temptation; and till a soul be brought to this, a soul that is troubled about his Election, will never find rest, till he come to justify God, and lie at the feet of the Lord, and say, Lord, though thou condemnest me, and all my children and friends, thou art righteous; till we justify God, we shall have no peace in ourselves: What a restless condition was Job in when he stood quarrelling with God's Decree? He never had peace till he came to Justify God, Job 42. 2. I know that thou canst do everything, I will contend no more: When Job came thus to justify God, then Job's Temptation vanished, and then the Lord turned unto Job, and Turned again his Captivity, and doubled the mercies he had taken away. That's the third Rule.

Fourthly, For the Overcoming and Silencing of these Temptations about Election; Remember this, that whenever we are tempted about Election, that we presently fall to worship the Lord Jesus: so it was with this woman in the Text, when she met with this Temptation about Election; Christ said, I am not sent but to the lost sheep of the House of Israel. What follows? She came and worshipped him: She spake not a word of Discontent, but falls down, and worshipped him. This is the way to overcome the Temptation, when you are doubting concerning the love of God, perplexed about Election, presently fall to worship the Lord, worship him. Worship him, How?

Worship him, First, With the Inward Worship of the Spirit. Fear before him, that is part of his Worship: Reverence the Lord greatly in your hearts notwithstanding all, that's part of his worship. Love the Lord, let your souls be breathing in love towards him, cleave unto him, pursue after him with your Spirit, that is part of the Inward worship; Commit your souls unto him, trust in him, cast yourselves upon the Lord, and the word of his grace, that is the Inward Worship; Acknowledge your dependence upon him, resolve there to hang; say, Lord, my whole dependence is upon thee, my blessedness is in thy hand, all that I expect for eternity doth depend upon thee; Go, and cleave, and clasp about the feet of Christ, and by faith depend upon Christ, and say, Lord, here I will hold and stay, and will not away, unless I be pulled away by violence from the feet of Christ. This is Internal Worship, and this is that worship that gives so much glory to God. Abraham believed above hope, and against hope, and gave glory to God. When you are tempted about Election, thus worship him.

And secondly, Worship him with External Worship; There are two principal parts of this Worship that will tend to the silencing of all temptations about Election.

The first is Prayer. The second is Thanksgiving.

When you are tempted about Election, or doubt of the love of God, fall to prayer; go and pour out a cry before the Lord, go and lament after him; and say, though I do not know whether thou wilt accept of me, O Lord, yet I will cry after thee, I will lament after thee; cry after himself, his presence, his face, his favor, his loving kindness, go and cry after him; this is the way to be rid of the temptation: And truly, this will be a discovery that God hath Elected thee: In Luke 18. you have Christ speaking there of the unrighteous Judge, who neither feared God or man, but at verse. 7. you have him speaking of the righteous Judge, and saith he, Shall not God avenge his own Elect, which cry day and night unto him? This is a good discovery that God hath chosen that soul, though the soul knows it not, when as it is crying after the Lord, and resolves to cry, and not give over; They are his Elect that cry day and night, and he will certainly hear their cry;

God will come in and manifest himself to the soul, and therefore when tempted about Election, go to Prayer.

Another part of External Worship is Thanksgiving; an excellent Remedy against this Temptation about Election: O! desire that thy heart may be put into a thankful frame, look up to God for it, and plead with the Lord, that thy heart may be put into a thankful posture; Consider what thou hast to be thankful for: Is there nothing? O certainly, if thou art not exceeding ungrateful, thou mayst see something to be thankful for in the worst condition; O! the years of patience and goodness of the Lord toward thee, think upon the bounty of the Lord toward thee; Hath not the Lord tendered his Christ to thee? And hath he not held forth his promises to thee? Hath he not been working upon thy heart, to overcome thy heart? Is not this worthy of Thankfulness? Those supports that thou hast met withal under affliction, have not everlasting Arms been under thee? Surely thou must say it, that everlasting Arms have been under me, and why dost thou not bless the Lord that he hath put underneath everlasting Arms? Yea, hath there not been some secret intimations of love, though thou hast not received so much as another? Yet, hath there not been some secret hints of grace and love? O! that is worthy of thankfulness. Yea, look to all the outward salvations that thou hast met withal; look to all the years of goodness, and all the years of mercy; Hath not God come to thee, and to thy Family, with many sweet refreshments? What? None of these worthy of Thankfulness? O that thou wouldest learn to creep, if thou canst not go! and every night when thou lookest back, O say, here is another day of goodness; the Lord might have cut me off, here is another day of patience; and in the morning when thou wakest, think of it, the Lord might have cut me off this night; Here is another night of patience; and see if this cannot draw forth thy soul in thankfulness.

I have heard of a young man very lately in the Town of Yarmouth, that being very weak, and nigh to the grave, and under the apprehensions of the wrath of God, and supposing that he was presently going down to the pit, he cries out, O that God would spare me but two days! He would have accounted it a mercy to be kept out of hell but two days: O! God hath given thee more then two days, many months, many years, in which the Lord hath exercised his patience; O! may not all this provoke thee to thankfulness? Well, if thou canst not see anything to be thankful for, of that which God hath done for thee, why then bless God for what is in himself; O! Think upon the gracious Nature of God, think upon the glorious Majesty of God, think upon all the Attributes of God, are they not worthy of praise? His name it is glorious, and worthy to be exalted, bless God for what is in himself.

Or Bless God for what he hath done for others, if not for what God hath done for thee; see if thou canst not get up thy heart to bless God for what God hath done for others; and look upon the grace that God hath bestowed upon others; and say, though I can see little in myself for which I should bless God, yet blessed be God that God hath given out of his Spirit to others, and manifested his love to others, and hath made others fruitful and serviceable, and that there are so many to lift up the name of Christ in the world; and if by any means the Lord will put thy heart into a thankful frame, the temptation will soon vanish. Endeavour it all thou canst, wait upon God, and look upon that which is matter of Thankfulness, that thy heart may be put into a thankful posture to bless God for something bestowed on thee, or something in himself, or others, and the Temptation will soon vanish.

Fifthly, When thou art tempted about Election, Resolve still to hold on in God's way; though thou art in the dark, and perplexed in thy spirit for want of the knowledge of God's love, yet resolve in the strength of the Lord to hold on the Lord's way, to keep in his way, and to depart from iniquity; take heed of turning out into crooked ways, desire to keep the way of the Lord, which is a straight way; Say, well, though I do not know my Election, I do not know whether I shall come into heaven, yet by the Lord's strength I will be found looking toward Christ, I will be found looking to him, who is able to save to the uttermost; This is to keep the Lord's way.

And so also, Resolve to be found walking in ways of Holiness; though I do not know that I shall be saved; saved, or not saved, I will resolve to walk in ways of holiness, and to depart from iniquity, take heed of every sinful way, every crooked way. The Apostle in 2 Tim. 2. 19. speaking about Election, The foundation of the Lord standeth sure, having this Seal, the Lord knoweth them that are his: Why then saith he, Let everyone that nameth the name of Christ, depart from iniquity. And so I say, though Election be not sure to thee, be sure to depart from iniquity, resolve to walk with God in his way; All this is come upon us, yet have not we forgotten thee, Psal. 44. 17. and so do thou say, though all this darkness be upon my spirit, I resolve in the strength of the Lord not to forsake him; though I do not know that the Lord will be for me, I resolve to be for none else, my soul shall be for no other Savior, and I will not be for any other way but the way of holiness, I desire to depart from every way of iniquity: And as I said before, so I say again, if God shall bring up the heart to this, Surely the Lord will not always suffer that soul to go on doubting, but he will come and manifest his eternal love; if the soul shall resolve thus in the strength of the Lord, to be found in the Lord's way, saved or not saved, I will be looking to the Father through the Son, and walk in every way of the Lord, and depart from iniquity, the Lord will not always suffer that soul to go on doubting, John 14. 21. He that hath my Commandments and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me; and he that loveth me, shall be loved of my Father, and I will love him, and will manifest myself to him. My Father shall love him; that is, my Father shall manifest love to him; not that God begins then to love, but my Father will come to that soul, though that soul may walk in darkness, though that soul may for the present be in a sad condition, and not see the face of God, and not know that God hath loved him from everlasting, yet my Father will manifest love to him, my Father will manifest that he doth love that soul: and saith Christ, I will love him, and manifest myself to him: Christ will come to that soul, and say to it, I see that thou lovest me, and I know thou lovest me, thou hast walked in the dark night, yet thou hast not turned out from me, thou hast resolved to cleave to me as to thy Savior, and hast resolved to keep my way, and to depart from iniquity, and now I see that thou lovest me, and I will let thee know that I love thee, that is, that I love thee first, that I have loved thee from everlasting. And thus you have the five general Rules to silence all Temptations which may arise concerning Election.

Matth. 15. 24.

But he answered and said, I am not sent, but unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel.

SERMON XVI.

FOR the Use of the point, and I shall speak but two words by way of Application, because what I have spoken already, hath been practical, if the Lord make it to be so.

First, To those that have not attained to the knowledge of God's love.

Secondly, To those that through grace have attained to the discoveries of God's love.

First, To those that have not attained to the knowledge of God's eternal love towards them, and I shall speak the words of the Apostle, 2 Pet. 1. 10. Wherefore the rather Brethren give diligence to make your Calling and Election sure: for if ye do these things, ye shall never fall: That's the word of the Lord to you; give all diligence to make your Election sure, rest not till your hearts be established through grace in the knowledge of God's love. For

Let me tell you first, That it is a matter of great concernment. That which this Apostle doth exhort us to, to give all diligence to make our Election sure, it is that which doth concern your whole state; you had need give diligence to make it sure, it doth not concern your temporal estate, but it concerns your estate in another world, all that you have to live upon in another world doth depend upon it, you had need give diligence to make that sure: What pains do men take to make that sure that concerns their outward Estates? Men will make their Bonds and Bills sure, their Evidences sure, their Titles to Lands and Houses sure; if there be anything amiss in them, what pains will men take to make them sure? O that God would help us to give diligence in this great business that doth concern another manner of estate then that which you possess here! even all that you have to live upon in the world to come.

Secondly, Let me say to you to stir you up to be diligent in making your Calling and Election sure; why, You have an Adversary that taketh a great deal of pains, useth diligence to hinder you in this work; the Devils great design is to keep you in the dark, to keep you in a puzzled and perplexed condition, to find some flaw or other in your evidences, to cast some blot upon them, that you shall not be able to read them; doubtless you will put God to it to leave you to be tried in this at one time or other; God for the most part leaves his people to be tempted concerning their Election, and therefore you had need give diligence.

Thirdly, Let me say, That your comfort doth depend upon making your Election sure. All your comfort in this world doth depend upon it, the comfort of every condition doth depend upon it, the sweetness of every mercy depends upon it. Alas, if a man had a thousand times more then he hath, what is all he hath without the love of God? Your comfort depends upon it; Although your names be written in heaven, yet you cannot have the comfort of it, till it be made sure to you; though it be sure before God, yet you cannot be comforted, but you are as if there were no thoughts of love in the heart of God toward you. Your comfort depends upon it.

Fourthly, Your Holiness doth depend upon it, your usefulness, your fruitfulness, your serviceableness in your generations doth depend upon your knowledge of the love of God; it is that which will make a Christian useful & serviceable, when as his Election is made sure, when he comes to be established in the knowledge of God's Election; Put on therefore (as the Elect of God, holy, and beloved) bowels of mercies, kindness, humbleness of mind, meekness, long suffering; Col. 3. 12. Your holiness doth depend upon it, and your usefulness in your generation.

And truly, till that be put out of question to a soul, til the Lord gives some degrees of satisfaction to a soul concerning his love, the soul is wholly taken up, always taken up about that which concerns itself: O Lord! Dost thou love me? That's the great question: And when it goes to God in prayer, Lord! Dost thou love me? And O that thou wouldest make out thy love to me! The soul is wholly taken up about that, and well it may; but when God comes to give some satisfaction, O then the soul hath a great deal of freedom to mind the things of Christ, to put up many a Petition for others, and many a request for Christ and his Kingdom, and the Interest of Christ, then his thoughts they run that way; so that if you desire to be useful and serviceable in your generation, it doth engage you to look after this, to give all diligence to make your Election sure.

Quest. But you will say, How shall we do that? O there is nothing in the world that I would sooner do then that, but I know not how to make my Election sure.

I Answer, It is the work of God, it is the work of grace to make it out to you; it is the work of free grace to give a soul assurance of that free and everlasting love. But be found waiting upon God in this way.

First, Look up to the Lord to clear up unto you the mystery of the Gospel; if you desire to make your Election, look up to the Lord, to clear up to your souls the great mystery of Christ, that thou mayest know the Lord Jesus as he was the gift of the Father, the gift of love, the gift of free grace; O that the Lord would clear up to thee the great end of his giving that gift of Christ! Wherefore was it that God sent his Son out of his bosom? Wherefore was it that he gave Christ? And wherefore was it that Christ gave himself to die? What was the end of the Father's sending Christ, and the end of the laying down his life? It was to save lost sinners; God so loved the World, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believes in him, should not perish, but have everlasting life, John 3. 16. O! Look up to God, to clear up this great Gospel mystery to you, the design of God the Father, in sending Christ; and the great design of the Son, in laying down his life: It is through ignorance of this Mystery, that many a poor soul is kept from establishment, and from assurance of God's electing love.

But secondly, Wait upon the Lord to draw thy soul to accept of Christ; it is not enough to have a discovery of the mystery, this will not save thee, though a man know the design of God, and know the end of it, that will not save thee; no, but wait upon the Lord to draw thy heart to rest upon Jesus Christ, as he is held forth in the Gospel; see that there is a necessity that God the Father should draw thee; No man comes to me (saith Christ) except the Father which hath sent me draw him, John 6. 44. till he be drawn by the Father, he cannot come to Christ, therefore that man is mistaken that thinks it is an easy matter for him to come to Christ. O! Many a man doth mistake faith of their own working, for that faith which is of the operation of God. When God hath beaten many a soul out of his Breastworks, and the soul sees he can no longer defend himself there, good works will not do it; then he taketh up a resolution in his own strength; well, I will go to Christ, I will believe in Christ, if I cannot have it by obedience, I will have it by believing: Ah! But he never saw that there was an impossibility for him to believe, but he goes to Christ in his own strength, and the faith is of his own working, and it is such a faith as Christ will not own; no, when God deals with a soul in a saving way, he discovers to it that it is no more able to believe in Christ, then it can obey the whole Law, and that there is a necessity that he should be drawn of God; and in his spirit he breaths after God, and saith, Lord, draw me, for if thou dost not draw me, I shall never come to Christ; see a necessity of being drawn to Christ; And when thou art drawn, give up thyself to those breathings and workings of the Spirit of God; after thou hast seen thyself in a lost condition, and no possibility to help thyself, either by thy works, or by believing; why then if the Lord open the word of Reconciliation to thee, and is breathing sweetly upon thy heart, and moving upon thy spirit, while thou hearest the word of grace opened, and the tender of Christ urged, O then give up thyself to those drawings of the Spirit of Christ, and do not hinder those drawings by thy unbelief, but give up thyself to the Lord, and say, Lord, I see thy hand only is able and powerful to draw souls to thyself, and I will stand out no longer. That's the second.

Thirdly, Be diligent to make the best improvement of Jesus Christ; when God hath discovered the mystery of Christ to thee, and in some measure hath drawn thy heart, and made thee to lie at the feet of Christ for life and salvation, and for faith to believe in him; be diligent to make the best improvement of Christ. Improve Christ for holiness and sanctification, if thou desirest to have Election made out to thee, improve Christ for holiness. The Apostle 2 Pet. 1. 5. exhorteth them to this, Giving all diligence, add to your faith virtue, and to virtue knowledge, and to knowledge temperance, and to temperance patience, and to patience godliness; and so he goes on, and then follows at verse. 10. Give all diligence to make your calling and election sure; for if you do these things, you shall never fall. In this way give diligence to make your Election sure, improve Christ for holiness, for grace, for strength, for more strength; be diligent in waiting upon the Lord for the carrying on the work of holiness; let Christians endeavor to be continually in the exercise of grace, and in the performance of every duty that the Lord calls them to; add grace to grace, and wait upon Christ, that one degree of grace may be added to another; knowledge to knowledge, faith to faith, temperance to temperance; truly it is in this way that God comes in with discoveries of electing love; I do not say it is for your diligence, and for your improvement of Christ, and adding grace to grace; but this is the way: when the Lord doth enable his people to be thus faithful and diligent in the improvement of Christ, and in the exercise of grace, and performance of duty to God and man, God comes in that way, and giveth a soul a more clear discovery of his electing love.

Fourthly, Desire the Lord to set a heavenly Bias upon your spirits, if you desire to have your Election cleared and made sure; take heed of an earthly heart; and O! Look up to God earnestly, that he would set a heavenly Bias upon your spirits, that you may be able to say, Our conversation is in heaven, our heart is there, from whence we look for a Savior; we groan to be clothed upon with our house which is from heaven. Truly Brethren, if we look too much downward, if we be grumbling below, and be writing upon the dust, we shall hardly see what is written in heaven: Though your names may be written in heaven. O! the looking too much upon this world, keepeth many a Christian from seeing his name written in heaven. What pains will Astrologers and Stargazers (as the Scripture calls them) take to see into the second heaven, the starry heaven? How often will they look up? And how long will they look up to see (as they pretend) what is written there, what is the language of the Stars! And O! What a shame is it to Christians that we should look up no oftener, and no longer into the third heaven, that we may see our names written there? Truly Brethren, it is no easy matter for a Christian to see his name written in heaven, though his name may be written there; we shall hardly see it, if our hearts be not much there, and our conversations much there; we use to say, if children look off their Books, they will never learn their Lessons well; Truly, if we look so much on the world, and so little into heaven, we shall hardly learn to read our names written in heaven. But when as the Lord sees that his people are desirous to have their thoughts in heaven, and their conversations in heaven, the Lord will come and say to that soul, well, I see that thine eye is in heaven, and thy heart in heaven, know for thy comfort, that thy name also is in heaven, thy God is in heaven, thy Christ is in heaven, and thy portion is in heaven. O! Beg of God that he would clap a heavenly bias upon your spirits.

Fifthly, Take heed of sinning against the Lord, take heed of giving way to any sin; as you desire to have your election cleared up to you, take heed of turning out into any crooked way. Let not Christians give way to themselves, nor allow themselves in any way of evil. You know what the Apostle saith in 2 Tim. 2. 19. Nevertheless, the foundation of God standeth sure, having this Seal, the Lord knoweth them that are his: And let everyone that nameth the name of Christ, depart from iniquity. The Lord knoweth them that are his; Ah! but would you know yourselves to be in that number? Take heed that you do not give way to any sin, do not allow yourselves in any way of sin, be not found in any way of iniquity; every sin that is allowed, it will cast a blot upon your Evidence, and you shall not be able to read it. This is the first Use unto those that have not God's electing love cleared up to them; there is a necessity that every soul should give all diligence to have their Election made sure, it is matter of infinite concernment, and you have been taught in what way to wait upon God to make your Election sure.

The second Use is to those that have attained to the knowledge of God's electing love: And it calls upon them,

First, To be Thankful.

Secondly, To labor to walk worthy of so great a mercy.

First, To be Thankful. O consider that it is the free love and the free grace of God that did make the difference between you and others, Is there not cause then of Thankfulness? You were no better then the worst in the world, no better then those that are cast out of God's sight into utter darkness; there is as much evil in our hearts as in Judas his heart that betrayed Christ. O! It is free grace that hath put a difference; if God hath made known to you that he hath chosen you, know that it is free grace that hath put the difference; O! Rich grace, free grace, that God should take you, and leave another as deserving as you; O it is free grace!

And that we may be stirred up to Thankfulness, consider that all the mercies that ever you do enjoy or hope for, spring from this Electing love! O! What cause have you to admire this love? Electing love it was a fruitful womb, all your mercies lay in it, your comforts they all spring from it; if the Lord had not given you his love from eternity, he had never given you Christ as he did, he had not given you the knowledge of Christ. All the mercies and comforts that you do enjoy, do spring from this love; if it had not been for this love, you had never known what pardon of sin had been, you had never known what peace with God had been, what a mercy it is to be reconciled to God; your present mercies they all lie in this womb of God's Electing love; O! what an engagement is this to Thankfulness?

Secondly, Walk worthy of this love; Christians you that see your Interest in Electing love, walk worthy of it, improve this your mercy, that great mercy, the knowledge which God hath given you of his love in Christ, improve it, let it be an engagement upon you to duty.

To what duty doth this Love of God engage unto.

First, Let this love of God to you engage you to a holy confidence, to a holy trust in the Lord, and a steadfast reliance upon Christ and his grace in every state and condition; the Lord would have you make this improvement, his love is discovered for this end, that your faith may be strengthened, and your hope strengthened, and made more firm and lively; Who shall lay anything to the charge of God's Elect, it is God that justifieth, &c. Rom. 8. 33. Thus doth the Apostle improve it, If God be for us, who shall be against us? I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor Angels, nor Principalities, nor Powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord. Nay (saith he) in all these things we are more then Conquerors. Christ would have his people improve this love, for the casting out of fear, perfect love casteth out fear, it is casting out fear, though it hath not cast out fear; Fear not little flock, it is your Fathers good pleasure to give you a Kingdom; he would strengthen them against fear by setting before them the Father's Electing love; it is the Fathers good pleasure to give you a Kingdom. O that we might improve this for the strengthening of our confidence!

Secondly, If the Lord hath discovered his love, know, that it is an engagement, as to Confidence, so to Holiness; a holy and unblameable walking before God. The adversaries of this Truth pretend that this is a Doctrine of Liberty: Ah! but there is no such tendency; Put on, as the Elect of God, bowels of mercy. If you be the Elect of God, put on bowels of mercy, and so be you like to Christ; I say, know that this is the end of God's Electing love: God hath chosen you, wherefore hath he chosen you? Eph. 1. 4. According as he hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy, and without blame before him in love: This is the great end of God's love, and the discovery of it, that you may be holy; O! Know that if God hath loved you, you should be holy.

Thirdly, Know that you are engaged to walk humbly. Who put the difference? What was it that made the difference? This Doctrine of free Electing love hath taught you, that it is grace that hath made the difference, not your free will and improvement, but it is free grace that made the difference: The Lord saw us so far from improving of that which he gave us, as any other; and therefore this may silence all flesh before the Lord, let not flesh glory; Why? what hast thou to glory in? If thou be better then others, whence was it? It was from free love, and therefore it engageth thee to walk humbly with thy God.

Fourthly, It is an engagement to Love. O! love the Lord dearly; if the Lord hath made out his Electing love, you are engaged to love him again; show forth much love, love to Christ, and love to the Image of Christ, love to the way of Christ, love to the Truth of Christ, love to the Ordinances of Christ, love to the Saints of Christ, As I have loved you, (saith Christ) so ought you to love one another, John 13. 34. As I have loved you; as much as if Christ should say, this is the greatest argument that I can propound to you to move you to love one another, I have loved you: If the Lord have loved you with this electing love, and hath discovered that his love to you, you are engaged to love him, and his people, and whatever hath the Image of God and of Christ upon it. And so I have done this point, this great mystery, this Doctrine of Election.

I desire not to read this Verse again; there is one thing more which I shall but touch, and so conclude.

I am not sent but to the lost Sheep of the House of Israel.

The House of Israel.

What is the House of Israel? Why, the seed of Abraham, the posterity of Jacob, whose name was Israel; the twelve Tribes they are the House of Israel, they were the peculiar people that God chose out of all the Nations; he left other Nations, and he chose them for his peculiar people, he chose them to be his House, when he took them into Covenant with himself, and they took hold of his Covenant, they became a Church of Christ, and this Church of Christ is the House of God.

Israel is God's House: That's the Point that I shall but touch, and so shut up all.

Every true Church of Christ is the House of God. They are a House, and they are the House of God. What was spoken of that Church, may be said of every true Gospel Church; they are a House, and God's house, they are God's Household, they are called the Household of Faith, Gal. 6. 10. And so again in Ephes. 2. 19. Now therefore, ye are no more Strangers, and Foreigners, but Fellow Citizens with the Saints, and of the Household of God; And this is prophesied of by the Prophet Micah, chap. 4. verse. 2. And many Nations shall come and say, Come, Let us go up to the Mountain of the Lord, and to the House of the God of Jacob; speaking of Gospel-times; the Churches of the Lord are called the House of God. Christ as a Son over his own House, whose House we are, &c. Heb. 3. 6.

Now in a house there is a Master of the Family; why the Master of this Household is Christ; every household hath a Head, a Master, the Lord of the Family; Christ is the Master of this Family, he is the Lord, the Head of the Church: If they call the Master of the house Beelzebub, saith Christ, how much more shall they call them of his household, Matth. 10. 25. Christ is the Head, and the Lord, and he is the Master of his House, of his Church, the Master of the great Family.

Secondly, The Members of this house they are fellow Brethren, fellow Servants, sometimes they are called Children: Members of a Family, they are either Children, Servants, or Friends that dwell in the Family; The Lord calleth his people his children, his servants, sometimes his friends, still he owns them, the members of his house, are fellow brethren, and fellow servants.

Thirdly, In a great Household you have Officers and Stewards; Great Families they have their Stewards, they are under their Lord to oversee the house, and to look to the ways of the house, and to make provision for the house, and to give them their meat in due season: In this House of Christ, and in every Gospel Church, Christ hath appointed his Stewards, 1 Cor. 4. 1. Let a man so account of us, as of the Ministers of Christ, and Stewards of the Mysteries of God: Christ hath appointed Officers, as his Stewards, to dispense his good things to his Servants.

Fourthly, In a House you have the Laws and Customs of the House; In Christ's House there are Laws and Customs, he hath left it on Record, the Laws of his House are written, how he will have his House governed; all the Laws of his House are written in his Word; it is not left to men to make Laws for Christ's House, (No) but Christ himself as Head and Lord of his Church he hath made Laws for the Government of his House.

Fifthly, In a house or household, there is employment for them in the house; so Christ in his house hath employment for all the members of his House, some work that he hath appointed for every child and servant in his House, for everyone that is a Member of any visible Church or Congregation, which is the House of Christ, there is work that is common to all that are in the House, Psal. 134. Bless ye the Lord, all ye servants of the Lord, which by night stand in the House of the Lord: And again in Psal. 135. 1, 2. Praise ye the Lord, praise ye the Name of the Lord, praise him O ye servants of the Lord, ye that stand in the House of the Lord, in the Courts of the House of our God. The duty lay upon all in the House of God, to bless the Name of Christ; and there are some particular works that Christ cuts out for every member: Christ would have none in his house idle, there is some work that everyone may do, that may be for the good of the whole house.

And as this House hath his Work, so this house hath its Privileges. O! there are special Privileges; the Lord he is engaged to teach all in his house; it lies upon the Master of the house to teach those that are in his Family; why the Lord Jesus the Head of the Family hath engaged to teach all that are in the Family, Isa. 54. 13. And all thy children shall be taught of the Lord: Zion's children, they that are of the household of God, God doth engage for it that they shall all be taught.

And this is another Privilege, That as the Lord will teach them, so he will defend and protect them, He hath promised special protection to his children in his House, Isa. 4. 5. And the Lord will create upon every dwelling place of Mount Zion, and upon her Assemblies, a Cloud, and smoke by day, and the shining of a flaming fire by night; for upon all the glory shall be a defense: The particular Churches of Christ under the Gospel, upon all their glory shall be a defense.

And this is another Privilege, That the Master of the House will do the servants work: You know what the Church saith, Isa. 26. 12. Lord, thou wilt ordain peace for us, for thou also hast wrought all our works in us: Whatever he calls for from any of his people in his house, he will do it himself, he will strengthen them to do it, his own Arm shall be at work. This is a choice privilege that belongs to the house of God.

Another privilege is, That they shall eat of the best, and drink of the best; they shall have a feast of fat things, and Wine on thee Lees well refined: He will make such a Feast in the day of the Gospel, upon every dwelling place of Mount Zion, upon every house of the Lord; the Lord engageth to make them a Feast of Fat things, his own flesh shall be set before them, which is meat indeed; and his blood, which is drink indeed.

Another privilege is this, The servants shall sit down with the Lord and Master at Table: Servants have seldom such a privilege in any house, to sit down with their master; but in Christ's house all the servants shall sit down at Table with their Lord. O! What a choice privilege is this, to sit at their Lord's Table?

Nay, while they sit at Table, their Lord will serve them. Such a privilege the Lord promiseth to his people, Luke 12. 37. He shall gird himself, and make them sit down to meat, and will come forth and serve them. He will cut out their portion for them; he will see to it, that they want nothing that he seeth good for them.

And he will bless their provision to them; that is another privilege, Psal. 132. 13, 14, 15. For the Lord hath chosen Zion, he hath desired it for his habitation; this is my rest forever, here will I dwell. I will abundantly bless her provision: I will satisfy her poor with bread. See the Lord will bless Zion's provision, and make his people fat and flourishing, for so is the Promise, Psal. 92. 13, 14. Those that be planted in the House of the Lord, shall flourish in the Courts of our God, they shall still bring forth fruit in old age, they shall be fat and flourishing. These are the privileges of the Lord's house.

To shut up all with a word or two of Application.

If every true Church of Christ be the Lord's house, Why then, Let not men take it ill if any Church of Christ, in obedience to the Rule of Christ, and to the Commandment of Christ, shall be watchful and cautelous who they receive into the House of Christ: Let it be no offense, it is a Churches duty, and it should not be any Offence, they must walk by the Rule that Christ hath left: Christ's house hath a rule given them, and they must not for a house full of gold and silver, go from the rule of the Lord; Christ hath left a rule how he will have those qualified, that shall be admitted into his house, Psal. 15. and Psal. 24. 3, 4. Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord? And who shall stand in his holy place? He that hath clean hands, and a pure heart; who hath not lift up his soul unto vanity, nor sworn deceitfully. These places speak of Gospel times, men and women must be visibly holy: And therefore let it be no offense to any that the Church walketh by the Rule of the Master of the Family; they must receive none but such as they can judge to be those that are qualified according to the rule that Christ hath left; such as Christ hath received, and no more; you yourselves will be choice whom you receive into your houses, and I pray let Christ have that liberty you challenge to yourselves.

Secondly, From hence it lets us see, that the sins of Professors, especially the sins and scandals of Church-members, must needs be a great dishonor to Christ. O that we could think upon it seriously, there is much sadness in it, that they that have a profession of Christ upon them, the Livery of Christ upon them, that they that are admitted into the house of Christ, accounted as children there, and servants there, and friends there, that they should walk so as Christ should be dishonored; Professors, look to it, and ye especially that are Church members; your scandals, your open sins, bring more dishonor to Christ, then the sins of the whole world; your sins are a shame to Christ, they reflect to the dishonor of Christ, and shame to Christ: It is a sad thing, that men should look upon Professors, and say, they are like the world; they make a profession, Ah! but they are as greedy after the world as wicked men, and they are as proud as the Devil himself; O that Professors might not give occasion for wicked men thus to speak! for this will be a dishonor to Christ. When you see a child rude and deboist, you will say, who is his father? Or, who is his Master? What? Hath he no Father? Or no Master? O! What a shame is it to the Master of the House? And so for Professors, when men shall look upon those of corrupt conversation, and they shall say, Who is their Master? What? Christ their Master! And they speak so and so! And walk so and so! O that the Lord would make them that have the profession of Christ upon them watchful in this; Take heed that you give no occasion to the world to speak evilly of Christ, who is the Lord and Master of his House.

Thirdly, It lets us see what a Privilege it is to be a Member of the Church of Christ, and to have Right thereunto; Take that along. O! What a privilege is it? What a desirable mercy is it? How will everyone strive to get their children into great men's houses? If they can but get their sons to be one of a Noble-man's house, you think it to be a great privilege; O what a mercy and privilege is it to be one of Christ's Family? How many are the privileges that they enjoy that are in Christ's House? You had a taste of them before, and O that the taste might draw all Christians to the performance of their duty! O! How did David long and thirst after it? Psal. 27. 4. One thing have I desired of the Lord, and but one thing; What is that? That I may dwell in the house of the Lord all the days of my life, to behold the beauty of the Lord, and to enquire in his Temple: O how desirous was David to dwell in the House of the Lord? And he counts them blessed, Psal. 84. 4. Blessed are they that dwell in thy House. Now if it be such a mercy and privilege, take heed that we do not contemn it, and take heed that you do not slight it, and say, it is no great matter whether I be in the house of God or no, so long as I am a Believer: O! Take heed that you do not despise such a privilege.

Fourthly and Lastly, What an engagement doth lie upon all in Christ's house to be holy? This is an engagement to duty.

First, It engages the Saints in Church-fellowship, unto the exercise of the grace of Love; why they are all of one house, and of one household, and and they are engaged to love one another, they are engaged to seek the good of one another: you take it ill if a servant or child should not regard what becomes of their fellow servants, and fellow brethren, everyone must seek the good of the other. If one House, we are engaged to a great deal of love and tenderness that we should express towards one another; not to mind our own things, but to mind the good of others; but especially in the same house; we are bound to do good to all the household of Faith, but especially in the same house; we have the strongest tie to love, and to help one another, if in Christ's house.

And if this be Christ's house, O! What duty do we owe to Christ, that are received into Christ's house? If in Christ's house, we should keep Christ's Laws, the Rules of his house: O! what Rules hath Christ given us to walk by? Faith and Love, the great Commandment of the Gospel: O! if in Christ's house, know that you are engaged to walk by Christ's Laws.

And it engages you to do the work of Christ? what is the work that is in Christ's house? Surely there is some work for everyone, Christ will not have an idle person in his house, some work Christ lays before every member; O that we might be helpful; there is something in which the meanest member may be serviceable to the house of Christ; wait upon the Lord to know your work, and wait for strength to do it.

And we should bless Christ for the provision of his house. O! how engaged are we to wait upon the Lord for the blessing the provision of his house? what a mercy it is for the Lord to take us into his house, and send us the best things, making us a feast of fat things, wine on the Lees well refined, a feast here, and a feast in other Ordinance, the Supper? O! what an engagement to thrive and grow in grace? It will be a shame to Christ, if his people that enjoy so much, if they shall be still lean and ill-thriving: As the Lord hath taken us into his house, so let us look up to the Lord for his blessing, and for the fulfilling of his Promise, he hath said, That those that are in his house shall be fat and flourishing, and well-liking; and shall have strength to perform their duty. O that they that are in the Lord's house, would wait upon the Lord for his blessing.

Matth. 15. 25.

Then came she and worshipped him, saying, Lord help me.

SERMON XVII.

I Come now in this 25th verse to consider the behavior of this Woman's spirit under her temptations; she doth not stand to reason about her Election, but she presently comes and worshippeth him; She came and worshipped him, saying, Lord, help. This woman she was under great afflictions at this time, such afflictions as made her come and cry to Christ, Have mercy on me O Lord, thou Son of David, my daughter is grievously vexed with a Devil: And this her affliction was accompanied with Temptation; and by a second Temptation Christ would make trial of her faith: And though she was under affliction, and this affliction accompanied with temptation, yet she falls down and worshipped him, She came and worshipped him, saying, Lord, Help. So that I shall close with this Truth.

That it is the duty of Saints to worship Christ, yea even then when they are in the midst of the greatest afflictions and temptations.

It is clear from the words, and in the opening of the Point I shall First, show you, What it is to worship the Lord, what is that worship which the Lord doth expect from his people, when in affliction and temptation.

Secondly, I shall give you Scripture instances for the Proof of the Point.

And then Thirdly, Consider the Grounds of the Point.

And then Fourthly, Make some Improvement.

First, To consider, What is that Worship which the Lord requires of his people when afflicted and tempted.

1. This Worship it is either the Worship of the Spirit, Internal: Or
2. It is the waiting upon God in those Institutions of his own, which he hath appointed for his people to wait upon him in; which is External Worship.

This Worship first, is that of the Spirit. You will say wherein doth it consist?

Why it consists First of all, In that holy fear and Reverence which we owe unto the Lord, and should be acting towards God, when God brings into such a condition. Fear and Reverence it is a part of Internal Worship: Fathers of our flesh corrected us, and we gave them reverence, shall we not much rather be in subjection unto the Father of Spirits? Heb. 12. 9. When as the soul is filled with a holy fear, fearful to sin against God, and to dishonor him in affliction and temptation, when the spirit is fearful to grieve the Spirit of God in affliction, when it is fearful to take the name of God in vain in the time of affliction, by unprofitable and unfruitful bearing of affliction; when the spirit is thus composed to a reverend childlike fear before the Lord in the time of affliction, this is part of that Internal Worship the soul owes to God.

Secondly, This Worship consists in Love, as well as in fear; when the soul is acting in love toward God in time of affliction or temptation, as that it dares not conclude that God loves him the less, though he be afflicted, though he be in temptation, so also he desires not to love God one jot the less, notwithstanding all afflictions and temptations; when the desire of the heart is towards God in time of affliction or temptation; O! when wilt thou come unto me? saith David, Psal. 101. 2. And saith the gracious heart, let me have God's presence in affliction, rather than deliverance from affliction; when as the soul is carried out to delight in God in the time of affliction, to rejoice in God, and to glory in God, and to comfort itself in God, as David did when he was sorely distressed at Ziklag, yet he encouraged himself in the Lord his God, 1 Sam. 30. 6. Though God taketh away many comforts, yet if he give himself, the soul is looking towards his portion as a blessed portion; one God is better then all the comforts that I have lost, I have lost friends and relations, but one God and Christ is more excellent then all the creatures in the world; when the heart is thus breathing in love towards God in time of affliction or temptation, this is a part of that Internal worship it owes to God.

Thirdly, This Internal Worship is that Trust and Affiance the soul hath, which it placeth in God alone; when the soul is acting of faith in the Lord, The Lord is my portion, my soul hath said it, and therefore I will hope in him; I will look toward him, I will rest upon his Arm, doubtless thou art our Father, though all this hath befallen us, doubtless God's intentions are gracious, it is for my good that he doth thus afflict me; doubtless the Lord can and will make a good end of these afflictions, for that is his promise: Now when the soul is thus rolling upon God, and resting upon his promise, cleaving to the faithfulness of God for the fulfilling of his Promise in time of affliction or temptation, this is a great part of that inward worship which God doth require of the soul, when it shall thus believe in hope, above hope, and against hope; as Abraham the Father of the faithful did, this is Inward Worship.

Fourthly, It consists in the submission of the soul to God. That Inward Worship that God doth require of his people in time of affliction or temptation, I say it consists in the submission of the spirit unto God; when a man desires to make a resignation of his Will unto God; If this cup may not pass from me, thy will be done; when a soul is content to be at the dispose of God, for the kind of affliction, and measure of affliction, and the time of affliction; well, if God increase my burden, let him increase my strength, and my soul shall glory in him; if the Lord will continue my affliction longer, and I must drink of this cup again and again, yea the third time, if the Lord will afford his presence in affliction, my soul desires to submit to the Lord; when thus the heart is affected toward God, submitting, falling down before the Lord, and making a resignation of his Will to the Lord's Will. This is that special Worship of the Spirit, that Internal Worship that the Father of Spirits calleth for from his children in time of affliction.

But secondly, This Worship must be External as well as Internal, and it consists in the giving honor to God in those ways that are of his own appointment, especially in these two.

First, In the pouring out of the soul in supplication before the Lord.

Secondly, In speaking good words of God.

These are two great parts of that external worship that God calls his children to in time of affliction; to speak gracious words unto God, and to speak good words of God to his praise and honor.

First It is the pouring out the Supplication of the Soul before the Lord in prayer; it is a special exercise that God calleth his people to in time of affliction and temptation, to be much in supplication pouring out their souls before the Lord. Now this Supplication, this Prayer which the Lord doth require and doth delight in, it is accompanied

First, With Humility; As you shall find in the example of this woman, her prayer in the day of her distress, it was a humble prayer, a humble supplication; one of the Evangelists observes, (the Evangelist Mark, chap. 7. ve?s. 25.) that she came and fell at his feet; this woman came and fell at the feet of Christ, and cried to him, Lord help me; It is a humble prayer that the Lord doth delight in, when the spirit lieth low before the Lord, when the creature is sensible of his own vileness, and shall acknowledge with Jacob, That he is less then the least of all those mercies which he doth desire and expect at the hand of God, that if ever the Lord be gracious, it must be free grace, something in himself that must move him; when the soul is enabled by the Spirit of the Lord to put up such a prayer, this is a part of that external worship that the Lord requires.

Secondly, You shall find that this woman's prayer was accompanied with Fervency; her very expression doth hold forth and declare the ardency of her spirit; she cried before, O Lord, thou Son of David have mercy on me; and now again she breaks forth into this expression, Lord, Help: Why, it is such a prayer that God taketh delight in, such a supplication as is sent up with a holy fervency unto God; and indeed the Lord brings his people into the furnace of affliction and temptation, that so he may kindle this holy fire of zeal and fervency in their bosoms; the Lord doth raise the storms, that so he may make the Disciples to cry the louder. Now therefore when the spirit is thus carried out to God, this is such worship as he requires and expects.

Again thirdly, We shall find that this woman supplication it was accompanied with Faith; Fervency without faith could not avail; but there is an expression of her faith, that Title which she gave to Christ, Lord; Lord help: she looked upon him as the Lord of heaven and earth, so she applies herself to him in her distress; infinite $\langle \diamond \rangle$ power, he was the Lord, and had infinite power, he was able to help; so she resteth upon his all sufficiency: sure he that is the Lord, the Lord of all, he hath power enough in his hand, and grace enough in his heart, he can do what he please, why such a prayer the Lord accepts of as is accompanied with faith; the promise is made to faith; Whatever you ask in my Name believing, you shall receive; and the prayer of Faith shall save the sick: the prayer of faith can do great things.

Fourthly, This woman's prayer was accompanied with Constancy; she held on notwithstanding the discouragements she met withal, they were very many and great, the Lord (as you heard before) was silent to her a long time, when he speaks he speaks a sad word, that he was not sent to such as she was, yet she holds on; this discouragement might have beaten her off, and made her to have said, well, I see that there is no hope, I shall lose my labor; but notwithstanding all discouragements, she doth continue in supplication, she worships, and she cries, Lord help: It is constancy in Prayer that the heart of God is taken with, Christ you know spake a parable to this end, Luke 18. 1. That men should pray always. The soul should continue with God, and abide with God: Resolve not to go away from his feet, but there to sit, and there to wait, and there to cry, till the Lord be gracious; this part of that external worship the Lord requires of his people in time of affliction and temptation.

Secondly, The other part of external worship is in speaking well of God in affliction and temptation. So doth this woman, she spake well of Christ when she worshipped him, she calleth him Lord; by which word she doth First of all, Exalt and honor Christ. Secondly, She Justifieth him.

Both these are good words, which God takes well from his people in the time of affliction or temptation.

First, She doth Exalt him, she spake to his honor; thou art the Lord whatever I be, though I be a poor vile creature, as she acknowledged afterward when Christ converted her, yet thou art the Lord; nay, though Christ should debase her, yet she would exalt him: O this is an excellent frame of spirit, an excellent part of that worship we owe to God. And as she doth honor God, So Secondly, She Justifieth him; (O Lord) that very word doth justify Christ in all his dealings towards her: Thou art the Lord, thou art Jehovah, infinite, free and absolute, and may do what thou pleasest, and in all this thou hast done me no wrong, neither canst thou do wrong, for thou art the Lord, I am thy poor creature, thy vassal, but thou art the Lord; thus she justifieth Christ. Now when the soul is thus carried out in time of affliction and temptation, to speak such words as may be to the honor of Christ, and so to speak, as to justify Christ in all that hath befallen it, Lord thou hast done me no wrong, thou art righteous, though my affliction be very great, though my temptation be very prevalent, yet the Lord is righteous in all that hath befallen me; if he should afflict me seven times more, and heat the Furnace seven times hotter, I could not say thou wert unrighteous: When the soul is thus carried out (I say) to speak well of God, to speak honourably of God, and to speak to the justifying of God in his dealings, this is a great part of that worship which we owe to God in time of affliction. And so you have seen the first particular, What it is to worship the Lord, or what is that worship which the Lord doth expect from his people in time of affliction and temptation.

Secondly, I shall give you two or three Instances for the proof of the Point; That it is the duty of the Saints thus to worship, whatever the affliction or the temptation be, and that both with Internal worship of the spirit, and with External worship, speaking good words unto God, and of God.

Thus it was with Job, look into Job 1. 20, 21. Then Job arose, and rent his Mantle, and shaved his head, and fell down upon the ground, and worshipped, and said, Naked came I out of my mothers womb, and naked shall I return thither: the Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away, blessed be the Name of the Lord. Job he was under great afflictions at this time, all his substance was taken away, a sad and unparalleled affliction, and no doubt but it was a day of great temptation to Job, for that was the Devil's design to make Job blaspheme God to his face, and therefore without doubt Satan did suggest horrible temptations, or else he had not well prosecuted his design; and yet notwithstanding it was a day of affliction, and a day of temptation, Job worshipped the Lord, expressed holy fear and reverence, expressed love, and expressed his trust, his confidence, and his submission; and he prays, and he praiseth, he spake to God, and he spake well of God, all parts of worship, he fell down and worshipped, and said, The Lord hath given, and the Lord hath taken, blessed be the Name of the Lord: And so David often met with afflictions and temptations, and yet you shall find him worshipping in divers of his Psalms. Yea look upon Jonah, and take Jonah for an instance, and O that God would make these his Saints patterns to us; Jonah 2. 2, 3, 4. He was in a sad affliction, and his affliction was accompanied with temptation, he was as low in his own imagination, as if he had been in the belly of hell, and yet even then, when in the Whales belly, in the depth of affliction, and compassed round about with sore temptations, Then Jonah worshipped the Lord, verse 4. Then I said, I am cast out of thy sight, yet I will look again toward thy holy Temple. I said I was cast out of thy sight; there is a temptation of distrust, when in that sad condition, in the bottom of the Sea, yet will I look towards thy holy Temple; and at verse. 7. When my soul fainted within me, I remembered the Lord, and my prayer came in unto thee, into thy holy Temple: When he was in this condition, he prayed, and he poured out his soul before the Lord.

I shall only give you one instance more, and that is of Christ himself, when as he was in a sore affliction, and his affliction accompanied with temptations, then he prayed, Luke 22. 39, 40, 41, 42. And he came out, and went as he was wont, to the Mount of Olives, and his Disciples also followed him, And when he was at the place, he said unto them, Pray, that ye enter not into temptation. And he was withdrawn from them about a stones cast, and kneeled down, and prayed, saying, Father, if thou be willing, remove this cup from me: Nevertheless, not my Will, but thine be done: and at verse. 44. it is said, being in an Agony, he prayed more earnestly. His affliction doth increase, and his temptations do increase, and as they increase, so he cries the more earnestly to his Father: Afflictions do not make Christ cease to worship; no, he worships the more, and he crieth the louder, and prayeth the more earnestly.

Thirdly, We shall consider the Grounds of the Point; Why it is the duty of God's people, to worship God in time of affliction and temptation.

First, Because there is no affliction or temptation, but it is from the Lord, it is his Messenger, it is of his sending; we have to deal with God in it and it is fit that we should fall down and worship him, when God sends affliction, Isa. 45. 7. I form the light, and create darkness; I make peace, and create evil; I the Lord do all these things: It is not spoken of Natural darkness, the darkness that is of the Air, that was not created by God, there is no creating cause, withdrawing of light causeth darkness; but God (saith he) creates darkness, he creates Metaphorical darkness, that darkness which he sends as an affliction to his own people, I create it; there is no darkness but that which is of the Lord's forming and creating: In the Creation of the world, God said, let there be light; but God never said, let there be darkness: but now, when God will afflict any of his people, he creates darkness, and there is no darkness, till God say, let there be darkness; when God says, let there be darkness in such a man's estate, all his comforts shall wither; when God says, let there be darkness in such a man's family, there shall be darkness; for he can turn the Sun, or Moon, or Stars into darkness; he can take away the head of the Family, the children that are as the Stars of the Family; if God speak the word, though there be never so many in the family, he can turn light into darkness: and so, when God says, let there be darkness in such a man's spirit, O then, though it was comfortable before, it will be as sad and as dark in the inward man, even as it is with the Air at midnight; darkness is of God's creating: and therefore whenever the Lord brings us into a state of darkness, affliction and temptation, either outward or inward, it is time then to worship the Lord.

Secondly, We should then worship the Lord in time of affliction and temptation, for it is the Lord only that can enable a man to bear temptation or affliction: there is need (I say) that we should apply ourselves to the Lord, for he only can enable a poor creature to grapple with his affliction and temptation; If the Lord help not, the proudest helper in the world shall stoop, and not be able to bear up a man under the least affliction, especially when the affliction is accompanied with temptation, and is wounding; A wounded spirit who can bear? It is only everlasting Arms that can support under such a condition; surely therefore it is our duty in affliction and temptation to fall down and worship.

Thirdly, The Lord only can give a sanctified (⊕) of affliction; he only can do us good by our manifold temptations; affliction itself cannot profit, sad experience shows it, a man may have stroke after stroke, and yet receive no profit, no spiritual advantage, I am the Lord thy God that teacheth thee to profit, Isa. 48. 17. God only can teach to profit; Blessed is the man whom thou correctest and teachest, Job 5. 17. When God's instruction and teaching go along with his correction, that man is blessed, that affliction shall be blessed: Affliction itself cannot do it, and therefore there is need that we should apply ourselves to God.

Fourthly, God only can remove the affliction, and he only can rebuke the distemper, and silence the temptation; for certainly both affliction and temptation (as I said before) they are the Lord's messengers, they are the Armies of the Lord of Hosts, they go, and they come at his command, he gives out the word, and he bids affliction to charge, and it chargeth; and if he bids it to retreat, it shall retreat; God only can deliver from affliction, and from temptation; therefore surely it is our duty to worship in affliction and temptation.

Fifthly, It is the end of all afflictions and temptations to bring the soul nearer to God, to drive the soul nigher God: We are very prone to content ourselves to live at a distance from God; before I was afflicted, I went astray, saith David, Psal. 119. 67. Now the end of affliction and temptation is to fetch home the straggling sheep, to bring God and the spirit nigher together; therefore it is fit that we should fall down and worship, for therein do we draw nigh to God, when the soul falls down and worships God with Internal worship, fear him, love him, trust him, and submit to him, and when it is pouring out its soul, and lifting up the name of God, speaking good words of the Almighty; surely herein the soul draws nigh to God, and so affliction attains its end.

Sixthly and lastly, This is the way to ease and rest in our afflictions; we cry out for ease and rest, that is the thing we seek after; the way to have ease and rest, is to fall down and worship; for by so doing, the soul doth cast its burden upon the Lord. When it doth thus fall down, and worship with the worship of the Spirit, fear, and love, and trust, now the soul casteth its burden upon the Lord, and his burden being left there, it bringeth in unspeakable rest. I say, when the soul by inward worship hath gone to God, and left his burden upon the Lord, O! it bringeth in ease to the spirit, whatever the affliction or temptation be.

Well then, to Apply this in a word.

First, What cause have we to be ashamed that we have come so far short of this Duty in the time of affliction or temptation? We have been afflicted at one time or other, who hath been free? many of your souls have been exercised with temptations, but O! What hath been the carriage of our spirits under them? Have we fallen down and worshipped with the worship of the Spirit? Have we been putting forth acts of holy fear and reverence? Have we been putting forth acts of love towards God? Have we been exercising trust and affiance in the name of the Lord? which is a strong Tower, the righteous flee into it, and are safe: Have we made it our work to be submitting to the Lord, to have our wills cast into the will of God, to submit to God for kind, and for measure, and for time? O! How far do we come short of this our duty? Have we been pouring forth our souls to God in afflicted conditions, and tempted conditions? Have we made it our work to cry the more earnestly being in an Agony, as Christ did? Have we spoken well of God at that time? Have we not charged God foolishly, and spoken unadvisedly with our lips? Truly we have cause to be humbled everyone, either we have not known our duty, or not minded our duty in the time of affliction and temptation.

Nay, Instead of worshipping, Have not we been dishonoring God in the time of affliction and temptation? Have not we been distrusting, murmuring, repining, entertaining hard thoughts of God, speaking hard words against God? Have we not neglected our duty, and said, what profit is there if I pray unto the Almighty? Have we not thought that we have had to excuse from worship, when the afflicting hand of God hath been upon us? We have thought that affliction had been our excuse from our duty; truly we may take up a sad complaint against ourselves, we are all guilty before the Lord, and O that he would help us to see the evil of our hearts, that hath past in the time of affliction and temptation!

But you will say, when some afflictions are upon us, alas we cannot pour out supplications to the Lord; surely in time of affliction he doth not require it; he will have mercy, and not sacrifice.

But can our afflictions be worse then Jobs were? Can it be greater then Jonahs? he was in the belly of hell; Can our afflictions and agonies be greater then Christ's were? yet he prayed, and prayed the more earnestly; the more his afflictions and temptations increased, the more he prayed: I know the Lord doth sometimes exercise his people with such conditions, such weaknesses, as they cannot be much in the performance of this external part of Worship; they cannot be much in speaking unto God, nor speaking well of God, because of that weakness that is upon the outward man; and if that be the only hindrance, if the spirit be not in fault, the Lord Jesus will make an excuse; Christ doth tender his poor servants and children in such a condition, when he sees the spirit is willing, and the flesh weak; they shall not need to excuse themselves, Christ will. But even then we are called upon to be much in giving to the Lord that inward worship of the spirit, which may be given when we are in the weakest condition; and the more we are hindered from the external part of worship, the more should we be in the internal part of worship, the more should the spirit be reverencing, and loving, and exercising acts of Faith and Affiance, and the more submitting to the Lord, and lying low; this the Lord calls for from his people in the worst condition: and we have cause to be humbled that we are not found in the performance of this duty in time of affliction or temptation.

Secondly, If it be a duty to worship in time of affliction, it is much more our duty to worship when the Lord is pleased to free us from affliction and from temptation; if God looks for Worship from his people when under affliction and temptation, then much more he looks for worship from his people when free from affliction and temptation: This is a duty that lies upon all Saints, to be worshipping the Lord, not only with Internal, but External worship, to take all opportunities of worshipping the Lord in public, and in our families in private, to be pouring out supplications, and to be speaking well of God is our duty: if in sickness, then much more in health; and if in adversity, much more in prosperity; and if under temptation, much more in the day of freedom, when the hand of the Lord is not upon us; it is our duty to take all opportunities, and the best opportunities, and the fittest opportunities, both in our families, and in public. Take heed that our incumbrances of the world doth not shut out our worship of God: Pour out thine indignation upon the Heathen, and the Families that call not upon thy name: O that that Scripture were remembered! Truly we are apt to complain when God lays his hand upon us, and exercises us with affliction and temptation, our complaint is, that we cannot worship; that is the grief and the burden, that we cannot worship the Lord, we are taken off from our duty; if so, we had more need to take those fairer advantages and opportunities of worshipping, while the Lord is pleased to continue his course of mercy and goodness towards us: Seek the Lord while he is near, and call upon him while he may be found; when afflictions come, we cry out, God is far from us, and at a great distance, and we know not how to apply ourselves to him; but examine and see whether this may not be the cause, because we have not taken our opportunity while he was near, we have neglected to worship him while we had strength and ability of body, of pouring out our souls to God, and speaking to God; and no wonder the Lord doth take those opportunities from us: and truly that proves a great burden to many of God's own people in the day of adversity, when God brings them into affliction, and exerciseth them with temptation, and they see they cannot worship him in that external way; O! that is their grief, that they have not laid forth themselves in the worship of the Lord, both public and private, while the Lord gave them space and opportunity; and therefore as we desire not to lie under that pressure, which will be exceeding heavy to God's own people, take heed how we neglect worship, either in our families, or in public, or in both; for if it be our duty to worship under affliction, much more in health, peace, and strength.

To draw to a conclusion, one word of Exhortation, and so I end.

Brethren, Let us look up to the Lord to teach us this lesson, to make Impression of this Divine Truth upon our hearts; there is a time a coming that everyone of us may be put to the exercise of it; and therefore look up to the Lord now to teach you, that when affliction and temptation come, we may through the Lord's strength be made able to fall down and worship, both with Internal and External worship; O! that God would make those examples of the Saints that were set before us, prevalent with us, to draw us on to our duty; you heard how Job worshipped, and how Jonah worshipped, and Christ worshipped in an Agony, in the midst of affliction, accompanied with great temptations; O that we might look up to God to teach us this duty! that we may be ready to fall down and worship, as Job was, when the evil tidings came that all was taken from him, he falls down and worshipped, and blesses the Name of God. O! Know, that we have need then to be pouring out our souls before the Lord, and to be crying, as this woman did, Lord help, if ever we had need to cry, then Lord help; when affliction is upon us, especially accompanied with temptations, men and Angels cannot help, we had need to cry, Lord help.

But you will say, what is it that we should cry for to the Lord at such a time? It is our duty to worship, and to be pouring out supplications, but what is it that God expects that his people should cry for in time of affliction and temptation?

Briefly thus, We should cry, That the Lord would discover the cause of that affliction, and that trial which the Lord doth exercise his people with: Truly, it is not without cause, and therefore it is not without cause that God doth afflict us, if need be you are in temptation, it is not without cause, and therefore it is our wisdom and duty to cry to the Lord that he would discover to us why it is thus with us, to know what is his mind and will towards us, what God aims at, whether for correction or trial, or for exercise; wait upon the Lord to know what is his end; it is an addition to our affliction, when as our way is hid, and God's way towards us is hid, and we know not what God intends; therefore we should be much in this request, fall down and worship him, and desire the Lord to show us the cause, what is his end in this affliction, this trial and temptation.

Secondly, Fall down, and worship, and pray that the Lord would take away the sting of affliction; the sting is sin, the sting of death is sin, and the sting of all lesser deaths, affliction, is sin; therefore pray that the Lord would take away the sting; pray that he would not correct us in wrath, and that he would not chasten us in his sore displeasure; that was David's request (Psal. 6. 1.) that the affliction might not be accompanied with the Lord's displeasure, but that the face of the Lord may be towards us, and the comforting presence of the Lord with us in affliction;

we should cry that the Lord would take away the sting, and that his presence may be with us in affliction, that he would not leave us in the fiery furnace alone, but according to his promise, would be with us, when we go thorough the fire and water.

Thirdly, We should cry, That the Lord would make us willing to bear our affliction, whatever it be; that he would make our spirits submissive to him: that should be the great request of a gracious heart, that the Lord would make our spirits submissive unto him. O! What a gracious frame of spirit was David in, when he was driven out from Jerusalem by his son Absalom? 2 Sam. 15. 25. The Priests would have brought the Ark after him; No (saith he) Carry back the Ark of God into the City; If I shall find favor in the eyes of the Lord, he will bring me again, and show me both it, and his habitation; But if he thus say, I have no delight in thee, behold, here am I, let him do to me as seemeth good unto him: Here was a gracious submissive frame of spirit under a great affliction; if the Lord will use me no longer as an instrument, and I must Reign no longer, let the Lord choose what instrument he pleaseth, and do with me what seemeth good unto him. O! Beg that God would give us a submissive frame of heart, that when the Lord leads us into any affliction, we may be found submitting to the Will of God.

Fourthly, We should beg of the Lord, That He would strengthen us to bear our affliction; that he would enable us to grapple with our Temptations, and so to bear our affliction, that we may be no dishonor to his Name; so to bear our affliction, as we may be to his praise. Surely the least affliction will crush us, if we have no other strength then our own, we shall be soon crushed, when under temptation: O! We had need cry, Lord help, we had need cry that the Lord would put under everlasting Arms to bear up the spirit, and to enable us so to carry it, as we may be an honor to Christ.

Fifthly, When we fall down and worship, Beg that the Lord would give a sanctified use of the affliction or temptation, whatsoever it be: Our spirits should be breathing after a holy improvement of all God's dispensations, especially these dispensations of great afflictions or temptations; truly (as you heard before) it is not in affliction itself to do this, we cannot profit by it if the Lord doth not teach; and therefore we had need go to him, and cry to him, that he would give a sanctified use, that he would make affliction attain its end, that he would bore our ear to instruction and correction; that we may hear the rod, and him that hath appointed it, that he would carry on his own work, and would make use of this affliction for the subduing of our corrupt nature, making us partakers of his Divine Nature. Thus we should fall down and worship, and beg that God would give us a sanctified use of all afflictions.

And know Brethren, that we shall never have ease nor rest in our spirits till we be brought into this posture, we shall be in a woeful turmoil and perplexity, as Noah's Dove, that found no rest till it came into the Ark; so we shall find no rest till God brings us into this frame, bow the spirit, and cause it to fall down and worship in time of affliction, there will be no sanctified use of affliction; never expect any good by affliction, till God bring the spirit into this posture, to fall down and worship, as Job, and Jonah, and Christ did; that is an argument that the affliction is working the right way, when as the spirit is thus subdued to God: now it is working for good, certainly God will make a good end with that soul, when it is brought thus to fall down and worship the Lord, to fear, and love, and trust, and submit to him, and to pray, and praise, to speak to God, and to speak well of God in time of affliction: Now the Physic works kindly, and the Lord is engaged by his word, that this shall work together for good, even all afflictions; when it thus works, you may have assurance of it, that all shall work together for good, God will make a good end, as he did with Job, and you may be sure that God will make a good end with you when as the affliction does thus work. And till this be done, never expect deliverance in mercy, if the spirit be not thus brought off in time of affliction or temptation, 'tis no mercy to be delivered; and this is a sure Argument that mercy is at hand, deliverance not far off, when as the Lord shall enable the soul thus to fall down and worship. When Jonah shall be looking towards the holy Temple, though in the belly of hell, yet when he looks to God thorough the Mediator, worshipping, praying, and praising, deliverance is not far off: O that God would help us to be looking upon his, and other examples! Yea, the example of this woman, when she was tempted and afflicted, she falls down and worshipped, saying, Lord Help.

Matth. 15. 26.

But he answered and said, It is not meet to take the children's bread, and to cast it to Dogs.

SERMON XVIII.

HEre is the third Temptation that this woman met withal for the trial of her faith.

Christ first of all gave her no Answer, that was one trial.

Secondly, He gave her a denial; he tells her, that he was not sent to such as she was: that was a greater trial.

But now in the third place, he gave her a repulse; he does not only seem to deny her, but seems to beat her back, and that with shame and reproach; a very sore temptation. Christ seems now to do his utmost to drive her away out of his presence, by presenting unto her hervileness, her unworthiness, It is not meet to cast the children's bread unto dogs. The Jews are called the children, they were the household of God, chosen and separated from all the world, and the Gentiles, they were called Dogs, they were without, and without are dogs; they were without the Covenant, and so were visibly unholy and unclean, and therefore counted dogs, and called dogs. And the mercies that Christ the Mediator was sent to dispence, are called children's bread. It is not meet to take the children's bread.

It is not meet,] It is not good, it is not fair dealing, it is not honest, it is not right; no, not in the sight of men, to take that which is provided for children, and give it to dogs, it were a sin and a shame so to do; therefore the Lord Jesus seems here to beat her back with a strong repulse; as if he should say, I wonder at this woman's boldness, she being without the Covenant, among the dogs, should desire the children's bread; no, it is not fair dealing, meet, right, nor honest, to take the children's bread and cast it to dogs: and thus she is beaten back, by presenting her vileness and unworthiness.

The truth that I shall close with, is this. The consideration of unworthiness and vileness, proveth many times a sore temptation to Christ's people.

God many times suffers his people to be tempted, and to meet with many sore temptations about their own vileness and unworthiness. That is the temptation that is now applied to this woman, that she was an unworthy creature, called a dog.

Now to make it plain to you from Scripture, that this many times doth prove a sore temptation to God's people, when their eye hath been kept intent upon their own vileness; this was a great temptation to Moses, and laid as a block in Moses his way, Exod. 3. 11. And Moses said unto God, who am I, that I should go unto Pharaoh, and that I should bring forth the children of Israel out of Egypt? He looked upon his own unworthiness, he was of a stammering tongue, and uncircumcised lips, when God would send him about that great work of bringing the people of Israel out of Egypt; this was a hindrance to Moses when he looked upon his unworthiness: O Lord, Who am I that I should go to Pharaoh?

And so the Prophet Isaiah, he met with the same temptation, and it was a great discouragement to him, and made him cry out bitterly, Isa. 6. 5. Woe is me, for I am undone, because I am a man of unclean lips: He looked upon his own unworthiness, and the unworthiness of the people, and then he cries out that he was undone, I am undone: It was a mighty weight upon his spirit, till the Lord sent his Angel to help him over this temptation, by declaring to him that his iniquity was taken away, and his sin purged, as you may see in the 6 and 7 verses.

And so this was a temptation to the Prophet Jeremiah, his own unworthiness, when God would send him about some special service, chap. 1. v. 6. Then said I, Ah Lord God, behold I cannot speak, for I am a child: He looked upon his own weakness, I am a child, I cannot speak, altogether unfit for the service, and he would have declined it, and therefore God thrust him upon it, v. 7. his unworthiness was a temptation to him.

And it was this that made the woman that had the issue of blood to come behind Christ, Matth. 9. 20. and to touch the hem of his garment, she would have stolen a cure, and gone away, and not have been seen, and so Christ should have lost the honor; she was under a temptation, and it was from the sense of her unworthiness.

And so the Centurion, Luke 7. 7. what was it that kept him from Christ? It was the sense of his unworthiness; Wherefore neither thought I myself worthy to come unto thee: I sent to thee indeed: but I thought not myself worthy to come to thee; the sense of his unworthiness kept him from coming in person to Christ: And so the sense of unworthiness and vileness, doth keep many a poor soul from closing with Christ, it keeps many a soul from accepting the tender of grace and reconciliation; it keeps many a soul from submitting to the righteousness of God, which is the righteousness of faith.

But in the opening of the Point, I shall show you what are those particular discoveries of unworthiness that do many times prove matter of temptation unto God's people.

First of all, when as a poor soul doth look upon his own sinfulness, and its unworthiness by reason of sin; when as a man or woman come to see what sin is, what a vile thing sin is, what an unclean and polluted thing sin is, such a pollution, such a defiled thing, that there is no Sink, no pit foul enough to receive it, but the pit of hell; so unclean is sin, such an uncleanness as will turn all in conclusion into the pit of hell. Now when a soul comes to see what a vile thing sin is, and look upon himself, and see that he is the man; I am the man, and I am the woman thus polluted and thus defiled, defiled all over, within and without, heart defiled, and life defiled, and when the soul comes to pore upon this, it proves many times matter of sore temptation; and especially this sinfulness is matter of temptation in these two or three branches.

First of all, in the vileness and sinfulness of our hearts and natures; when as men or women come to be acquainted with the vileness of their nature, and see what rebellion is in the heart, and find that there is a by as upon the spirit, that doth carry it off continually from God, the heart inclined toward vanity evermore; O! How do vain thoughts and sinful imaginations crowd in continually? And they do defile the most holy Service that is taken in hand: O! This proves matter of temptation: This body of sin and death, it made the Apostle cry out, O miserable man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death▪ Rom. 7. 24. It had been a pressing temptation, if the Lord had not made a discovery of the way of deliverance and salvation to him; for a poor soul is apt to fear, surely there is nothing of God in me, if there were any seed of God in me, my heart would never be so vain, and the bias of my spirit would never carry me out from God so, O! I fear I am not made partaker yet of the Divine Nature. The sight of that woeful evil that is in the heart, proves many times a sad temptation, that it is hard for a poor soul to get over it. And Secondly, When the Lord doth leave a poor creature to sin after mercy, and against mercy, it hath been saved by the Lord, delivered by his right hand, pressed with such and such a mercy, and yet overtaken in the snare of sin; sinning against mercy many times proves a sore temptation: O! I am afraid that I am none of the Lord's children, mercy hath not its kind work upon me, it doth not bring forth those fruits which the Lord may look for when he gives out such mercies: sinning against mercy, many times proves a sore temptation.

Thirdly, When the Lord leaves a poor creature to fall again and again into the same sin; O! this proves matter of temptation, when as the soul hath seen the evil of sin, and hath bewailed it, hath run to the Lord for strength against it, yet hath been overtaken again and again in the same sin; that I say proves matter of sore temptation: Surely may the poor soul say, my spot is not the spot of children, I have been overtaken once and again; whereupon the poor soul may be tempted to cast away his hope and confidence, and not only tempted to cast away its confidence, but tempted to depart from God, and to go out from the ways of obedience; There is no hope (say they in Jer. 18. 12.) but we will walk after our own devices, and we will everyone do the imagination of his evil heart: We have back-slidden again and again, and there is no hope for us, we had as good go on, and take our fill in sin: This temptation is set on many times by falling into sin. That is the first, That unworthiness by reason of sin.

Secondly, Unworthiness by reason of that miserable, weak, and frail condition that the children of men are in; the great distance that man is at from God, this proves matter of temptation to many a poor soul, when he considers that he is a poor piece of dust and ashes, and that there is an infinite distance between God and the creature; he is from everlasting to everlasting, he is Jehovah, and changeth not: But we are poor creatures, that are of yesterday, and are going down to the grave today, and shall be in the place of silence tomorrow: O this proves matter of temptation and discouragement. Will the Lord look down upon such a poor creature, and upon such a piece of dust and ashes? Is it possible that the Lord should humble himself to take notice of me? And besides that common condition of frailty which all men are in, the Lord is pleased to bring some of his people into a lower condition then that which is the ordinary state of man, and yet he is as low as dust: Yet (I say) the Lord is pleased to bring some of his people into a lower condition then ordinary; By affliction God makes man's state to be low, when he brings him into an afflicted state; and when God maketh man's comforts to be low, taketh away those comforts, and those relations which have been his refreshments, I say, when a man is brought thus into a low and afflicted condition, this added to that common condition of frailty, it setteth at a great distance from God, and it proves many times matter of discouragement and temptation to a poor soul: So it was with Job, chap. 14. v. 1, 2, 3. Man that is born of a woman, is of few days, and full of trouble; he cometh forth like a flower, and is cut down; he fleeth also as a shadow, and continueth not. And dost thou open thine eyes upon such a one? Lord, (saith he) Is it possible that thou shouldest humble thyself so far to look down upon such a one? That God should look down with the eye of pity upon such a one frail man is, one that is brought so low, one that sitteth upon the dunghill! Unworthiness by reason of frailness, proves a temptation many times to God's own people.

Thirdly, Unworthiness by reason of coldness and deadness in affection: When a poor soul finds how dead his heart is towards God; O! I have a heart for the world, and I have affections to friends and relations, there is love to creatures, nay there is affection enough to vanity, but little or no heart for God, there are not those breathings, those thirstings, those pantings after God, not that first love which sometimes it hath found to the Lord, and to the things of Christ: O! This proves matter of discouragement and temptation: O! I fear that the love of God dwelleth not in me, saith a poor soul, I find my heart so dead, and so strait towards God, open to the world, but strait to God: O! I fear that the love of God dwelleth not in me; How can it be that God should set his love upon such a one? Surely if the love of God were in me, I should love the Lord more then I do. Deadness and coldness in affection toward the Lord, it proves many times a sore temptation.

Fourthly and lastly, Unworthiness by reason of unusefulness and unserviceableness to God, that is matter of temptation; when as a poor creature sees that it can do little or nothing for the Lord, O! I am a barren tree, I am a dry branch, I see that others are fruitful, I see that others have the promise fulfilled to them, they bring forth much fruit, they are serviceable in their generation, they are an honor to God, and do good to men; but as for me, I know not wherein I can honor him, I know not wherein I can be useful or serviceable, O I bring forth no fruit unto God, and therefore am afraid that I am the Tree the Apostle Jude (verse. 12.) speaketh of, without fruit, twice dead, plucked up by the roots, whose end is to be burnt; This is matter of sore temptation, and therefore hereupon there is many a poor soul that desires to be out of the world; O Lord, I can do no good, it is best for me to be put into the place of silence, I hinder some goodly Tree that would grow in my place, and would bring forth more fruit; upon this many a poor soul hastens to the grave. This is matter of temptation, and it is grounded upon this, a man's own unworthiness and unusefulness, and unserviceableness to Christ in his generation.

Quest. But you will say, Wherefore doth the Lord suffer his people to be tempted thus about their unworthiness?

Answ. Why, the Lord he hath gracious ends. Satan who helps on this temptation many times, he hath destructive ends; but God in suffering of it, he hath gracious ends.

What are God's ends?

First, God would teach us to learn this lesson, That the love of God goes not by the worthiness of the creature; therefore God he suffers us many times to be bowed down by looking upon our unworthiness even to temptation, because we would not learn this lesson, that the love of God goeth not by the creatures worthiness, but that it is altogether free, and not for anything in the creature, it is only in the Breast of God; there is the ground of his love, no reason for it in the creature: Go and take a woman of Whoredom, one that hath played the Adulteress, and yet beloved, that was to show forth and hold forth his love to the children of Israel; What was there in such a woman that was lovely or desireable? The woman of whoredoms; no more worthiness in the children of Israel: Neither is there in any soul, and God would have us learn this; and if we will not learn it, he will suffer us to be carried into the School of Temptation, to learn us this lesson, That God loves not for any worthiness in the creature.

Secondly, God would teach us to learn this lesson, That the worthiness of the creature is out of itself; therefore he suffers the soul to be brought into this School of Temptation, and to be bowed down with the apprehensions of our unworthiness, that we may know that the worthiness of man is out of himself; a lesson hard to learn, for a man is apt to seek his worthiness in himself, and is loath to be beholden unto any, no, not unto God, and not to Christ for his worthiness: We have all learned this of Adam, it was the first sin, he would have his worthiness in himself, he would not have depended upon God for it, but he would stand by himself, and have no dependence upon his Creator, and so by seeking to stand on his own legs, he fell down below the condition of a creature. And truly, ever since the sons of Adam have imitated their Father in this, Man desires and seeks to have his worthiness at home in himself, and he is loath to go out for it; and therefore it is one of the hardest matters in the world, to bring men to submit to the righteousness of Christ. Corrupt Nature, and Carnal Reason (as it is corrupted) teacheth men to look to their own righteousness; Philosophers taught men, That men needed not to go out of themselves to make themselves happy; for a man had all blessings in himself, and he needed not to go out of himself: But Christ teacheth another lesson; if ever man will be happy he must go out of himself, and he must seek his worthiness elsewhere, he must have it in the Son of God. Now that we may learn this lesson, God suffers us to be brought into the School of Temptation.

Thirdly, God hath this gracious end, Thereby he doth make his people more humble, and lowly in Spirit, which is a gracious and Christlike disposition; though the Devil he hath no such end when he presents our unworthiness, to make us humble, yet God will make that advantage of it: You may see how humble and how meek this woman was when she was under this Temptation, in the next words, Truth Lord, (saith she) yet the dogs eat of the crumbs; all that thou hast said is true; thou hast said I am a dog, truth Lord, so I am. Thus she doth lie very low at the feet of Christ, he calls her dog, and she lies the lower, she lies at the feet of Christ. This is a gracious effect that God works by this Temptation.

Fourthly, By this God doth make his people really to prize, and to live upon, and to exalt the Fathers free grace, and the Sons worthiness and righteousness. I say, in this school of temptation, God teacheth his people to exalt really, and to prize really, and to live upon the free grace of God the Father, and the infinite worthiness and righteousness of Jesus Christ. O saith a poor soul, if I be so vile, so unworthy, O! what need is there of fleeing to the free grace of God? What need is there of looking after the infinite righteousness of Jesus Christ? O! This will make the soul desirous to live upon God, and to live upon Christ, to build upon free grace, and to build upon the worthiness and righteousness of Christ; and this will make the soul to exalt, and to lift up this glorious name of God, and of his Son. O! What had become of me, if it had not been for free grace? If free grace had not overlooked all my vileness, all my sinfulness, all my distance from God, all my coldness of affection, all my unusefulness, what had become of me if it had not been for the righteousness of Christ? If Christ had not brought in everlasting righteousness, to cover all this unrighteousness, O I had been miserable and undone. You see wherefore God suffers these temptations.

Briefly, a word or two by way of Application.

First, It may teach us to take heed that we do not help forward this temptation upon the spirit of those that are weak Christians: I say, Take heed that we do not help forward this temptation, there is no greater temptation then when the soul is kept and bowed down to look upon the vileness and unworthiness of the creature; many a poor soul cries out (as David did) concerning his sin, O, my sin is ever before me; so many a poor soul says, my unworthiness an vileness is ever before me, my deadness is ever before me, my distance from God, my sin of Nature, my sin of Heart, my relapses: Now take heed that we do not help forward the temptation, by despising and undervaluing those that are weak, by despising Christians for their weakness; O! it may be, as I said before, their eye is upon it, they look upon it themselves, and therefore we should not so look upon it as to discourage them, and not to cast off such as have any seed of God in them because they are weak, but to cherish that which is of God, though we may apprehend there is coldness, and deadness, and unusefulness; and it may be the Lord hath made them deeply sensible of it; but if there be but a little wheat, though covered with chaff, do not cast it away; a little wheat is precious: though there be but a little gold, and a great deal of dross, yet if we can discern any of Christ's gold, we should help forward the work of Christ, and not help forward the work of Satan.

But secondly, Take heed that we do not give way to this temptation, let Christians (especially weak Christians) take heed that they do not give way to this temptation, poring upon their unworthiness, as to be discouraged and to be beaten off from Christ, and staved off from their duty. We may look upon our unworthiness, and we ought to look upon our unworthiness, and O that we could look upon our unworthiness more then we do, in God's way to look upon it, when God doth show us our unworthiness in God's glass, then we may look upon it without danger; but now it is dangerous to look upon it when Satan presents unworthiness, to behold it in the Devil's glass, it is dangerous, and proves a very sore temptation.

Quest. But you will say, How shall we know when God presents unworthiness, and when Satan presents unworthiness? How shall we know when it is duty to look upon unworthiness, and when it is sin to look upon unworthiness?

Answ. First of all, When God doth present unworthiness and vileness to us, he doth also present himself to us; he doth not present the unworthiness of the creature, and leave it there, but when God shows his people their unworthiness, he also shows himself; that you may look with one eye upon the Lord, as you look with the other eye upon your unworthiness; so did the Church in Micah 7. 18. Who is a God like unto thee, that pardoneth iniquity, and passeth by the transgression of the remnant of his heritage? Vers. 19. He will subdue our iniquities, and thou will cast all our sins into the depth of the Sea. She had looked upon her unworthiness, and upon her vileness, and had seen her iniquity; but she also looked unto God, who is a God like unto thee? And truly when we look upon our unworthiness, we may say, and we ought to say, O Lord! Who are such vile, sinful, and unworthy creatures in the whole world as we are? But take heed that we stay not there, and rob God of his grace, but even then look up to the Lord, and say, Who is like unto thee? Who is like unto me for unworthiness? But who is like unto thy Son Christ for worthiness and righteousness? No God like unto thee; No Savior like unto Christ.

Secondly, When God presents our unworthiness and vileness, it is to make us run nearer to himself; and it hath that effect and that operation upon the heart, when God shows a man or woman their vileness, it makes them run nearer to God: But now when Satan shows sinfulness and vileness, it is to draw the soul away from God, and so forsake its own mercy; when God made a discovery to the Prodigal of his own unworthiness, it made him hasten to his father; that discovery was from God, it made him hasten home; I will arise (saith he) and go to my Father, and I will say, Father, I have sinned against thee, and am not worthy to be called thy son: When as the soul shall thus look upon its unworthiness, and make the more haste to God, make the more haste to Christ, flee the faster to the City of Refuge, that discovery is of God.

Thirdly, When God doth discover a souls unworthiness, he doth make the soul (notwithstanding) thankful; he keeps the soul in a thankful posture, notwithstanding the discovery of its unworthiness. So David, the Lord helped him to see his own unworthiness, and the unworthiness of his people, yet David in the midst of that discovery was kept in a thankful frame, 1 Chron. 29. 14. But who am I, and what is my people, that we should be able to offer so willingly after this sort? Lord, we are poor unworthy creatures, I and my people, King and people; Ah but still his heart was kept thankful, and he is the more thankful to God, that God should employ such in any service that is done for him. But when as the sight of our unworthiness doth make us to repine against God, and put the spirit into a murmuring and discontented frame, that discovery is not from God, but from Satan. When God leadeth a soul into the discovery of unworthiness, yet he makes the soul thankful.

Fourthly, When God discovers unworthiness, it shall be no hindrance to the soul in waiting upon God in his Ordinances; when Satan discovers unworthiness, he doth thereby endeavor to discourage and to beat off the soul from waiting upon the Lord in the way of his Ordinances; This woman of Canaan she is not discouraged, she goeth on crying and praying; and Hezekiah and his people they went on to wait upon the Lord, notwithstanding they were made sensible of their unworthiness, and their want of preparation, according to the preparation of the Sanctuary; but when a soul is discouraged, beaten off from prayer; it is not for me to go to God, it is not for me to pray, and to wait upon God in his Ordinances, one so unworthy; Surely this is from Satan, this is not the discovery of God.

Fifthly and lastly, When as God discovers a man's unworthiness, it shall not take him off from any service that God calleth him to; when as Satan doth discover unworthiness, it taketh a man off from that work which God layeth before him. Moses was taken off from the work of the Lord by the sight of his own unfitness and unworthiness, he goes on to make many excuses one after another, it was a great stumbling block in his way, and it did hinder him from following God in that service that God called him out unto in his generation: Moses, he looked upon his unworthiness, and he was under a temptation; therefore thus you see and may know when God discovers unworthiness, and when it is duty to look upon unworthiness; and on the contrary, when it is of Satan, and when it is your duty to look away from your unworthiness; we may see it, and must see it in God's glass, but not in Satan's, And O that God would fasten this upon the spirit; let us take heed that we do not give way to this temptation. Weak Christians, you that are apt to be discouraged with the thoughts of your unworthiness, take heed of giving way to this temptation, for you will exceedingly hinder your own comfort by poring upon your unworthiness when Satan presents it; and you will enslave your own spirits, it will hinder you from that freedom which Jesus Christ hath purchased, and which Jesus Christ tenders to you, it will hinder your souls from establishment, it will keep you always in a weak condition, to be continually poring upon unworthiness, to look upon yourselves continually, and not to look back again to God, to look upon your sinfulness, and not look upon free grace, to look upon your unworthiness, and not to look upon the worthiness and righteousness of Christ: This will keep your souls from establishment, and keep you always in a weak condition.

But now, when God doth present unworthiness, we may look upon it; only let us remember what are God's ends, when as God doth present unworthiness; God's ends are gracious, and O that we might have God's ends in our eye when we look upon our unworthiness! It is to teach us to know that God loveth us not for our worthiness, to teach us to know that we must have worthiness out of ourselves, to make us more low, more humble, meek in spirit, to make us to prize the Father's free grace, and the Son's worthiness, and his righteousness. These are God's ends, O that when ever we look upon our unworthiness, we might have God's ends before us!

Quest. But what shall I do when tempted about my unworthiness? Briefly thus.

Answ. If it be the portion of any soul to be under these temptations, under these discouragements before-mentioned; if it be a temptation grounded upon the discovery of the sinfulness of our Nature, heart, and life; O flee to the fountain, know that God hath declared that there is a fountain opened, Zach. 13. 1. In that day there shall be a fountain opened to the House of David, and to the Inhabitants of Jerusalem, for sin, and for uncleanness: Therefore when you are bowed down with the sense of your own unworthiness by reason of sin, look to the fountain, there is a fountain opened, and there is virtue in that fountain to cleanse and take away all your sin and unworthiness.

And if your temptation be grounded upon the discovery of your weakness and frailty, your distance from God, and this is helped on by your low and afflicted condition, besides the common frailty of man; O know! That though the distance be infinite, yet God hath overlooked it, free grace hath overlooked it, and free grace can overlook, and free grace will overlook that infinite distance that is between God any you: and know, that God doth not judge of any man by his outward low estate, by his outward afflicted condition; you are apt to draw sad conclusions from thence, that God loveth you not, and Satan he tempts to conclude so, if God loved you, he would not deal so with you: Ah, but know, that God doth not judge so, neither can you judge of the love of God by affliction.

And if the temptation be grounded upon the deadness of your heart, and coldness of your spirit, look to Christ to warm you, look to the Son of God to enflame your affections; but know, that you are not able to judge of God's love by your love, you must not measure God's love by your love; not to conclude that God hath no love, because you have little love; you cannot measure God by yourselves, you should rather accept of his love, entertain his love, and look to that love of God, to beget more love in your hearts, and to draw forth more love in your hearts; we have cause to be humbled exceedingly that our love to God is so little, but yet we must not measure the love of God by our love.

And if your temptation be grounded upon your unusefulness; O, you say, I am an unuseful creature, more fitter for the dunghill then for anything else; know that God hath some use of you, there is never a Christian living but God hath some use of it, though it may be you see it not; thou lookest upon thyself as a poor unuseful creature, but God hath some use of you: if God had not some use of you, he would not continue you here, no, not a moment; God hath appointed several members in the body, and all are useful, not the least member but it is useful in the body; I say, surely the Lord sees that you are of use to him, although you are apt to say you are altogether unuseful. In a word, when tempted about unworthiness, do as this woman did in the Text.

First of all, she doth acknowledge all that Christ spake, It is not meet to take the children's bread and cast it to dogs, saith Christ in v. 27. Truth Lord, saith she. Let us learn to do so, when bowed down with the thoughts of unworthiness and vileness; let us subscribe to it, that it is a truth, all that can be said, and all that can be presented by Satan himself concerning our vileness, we may grant that it is truth, I am unworthy, vile, and wretched.

Secondly, Take heed that this do not hinder the acting of faith; acknowledge that it is so, and that we are as vile as it is objected; but let not the sight of this hinder the acting of faith; this woman she acted faith gloriously notwithstanding; Truth Lord, yet the dogs do eat the crumbs that fall from their master's table; she makes this to be a ground of faith, even this very discouragement, this very temptation, the sight of her unworthiness, this doth not discourage her; It is Truth Lord, but yet the dogs eat of the crumbs; and so be you still in the acting of faith, and let not the fight of unworthiness be any hindrance.

Thirdly, It is our duty still to wait upon the Lord in the midst of the discovery of our unworthiness: Wait upon the Lord, and keep his way, and let no discovery of unworthiness beat us off from waiting upon the Lord, and keeping his way: this woman held on her way, held on to wait notwithstanding all her unworthiness; she believes, and waits, prays, and waits, and her expectations they are from the Lord. And so in the midst of the sense of our unworthiness, let us do as she did, acknowledge God notwithstanding, be acting faith in Christ, in the Lord's free grace, in those gracious promises which he holds forth, and which he hath given us in Christ, and be waiting upon God in the way of our duty, keeping his way; and the Lord he will certainly make that soul more then a conqueror of these temptations.

Matth. 15. 26.

But he answered and said, It is not meet to take the children's bread, and to cast it to Dogs.

SERMON XIX.

I Shall now consider this temptation in particular. In general it was her unworthiness that was presented, more particularly, that she was one of those Nations that did not belong to the Covenant of God. She was a Canaanite, she was one that was a stranger to the visible Covenant of the Commonwealth of Israel; she was none of the children of the visible Kingdom, she was a dog, one without, and therefore Christ tells her, that she had nothing to do with the children's bread. This was the temptation.

We shall consider the Proposition as it is laid down by Christ, which is an excellent truth, and worth the consideration.

That children's bread must not be given to dogs.

That is the proposition laid down by Christ. Or, The holy things of God, they must not be profaned by giving them unto those that have no right unto them.

First, In the opening of this Proposition, I shall show you, Who they are that are here called children.

Secondly, And then, Who are called Dogs.

Thirdly, What is that children's bread that must not be given to dogs.

First then, Let us enquire who they are that are called children, who are the children that have right to the bread?

I answer first, All they that are true Believers in Christ, they are called children; I say, such as are really and truly believers, such as are the seed of Christ, the travel of his soul, such as are begotten again unto God by the immortal seed of the word, and born again of the Spirit, new creatures; these are children indeed, they are called the children of the Promise, the children of the Covenant, the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus, Gal. 3. 26. To as many as believed gave he this dignity to be called the children, the sons of God: To as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name, John 1. 12. primarily and chiefly they are called children of God, and these have right to the children's bread.

But secondly, There are others that are called children, that is, Such as are under visible and outward dispensations of the Covenant; I say, such as do outwardly belong to the Covenant of God, such as are under the visible dispensations of the Covenant of God; though possibly many of them may not be under the efficacy, life, and power of that Covenant, yet if they be under the visible dispensations, the outward dispensations, God owns them, and they must be owned for children, Rom. 9. 6. For they are not all Israel which are of Israel; though they may be of Israel, the seed of Abraham, that the Apostle speaketh of there, and such as were under the outward dispensations of the Covenant, the Covenant of their father did belong to them, yet saith he, all are not Israel that are of Israel; they are not Israel indeed, children of the Promise, as Isaac was; they are not all the elect of God, though they may be, and must be owned for children, because under the outward dispensation of the Covenant: And in Mat. 8. 12. But the children of the Kingdom shall be cast out into utter darkness; called children of the Kingdom, because under an outward administration of the Covenant of grace, and yet possibly they may fall off and apostatize; and such children of the Kingdom may be cast out.

Now persons are under an outward administration of the Covenant two ways, or by two rights, as I conceive.

First of all, by a visible profession of Christ, by a profession of faith in Christ, that may give men right to a visible being in the Covenant of God, and so upon that visible profession that is held forth, they may have right to the Ordinances of God, and yet not belong to the invisible Covenant of God. For Brethren, if a visible profession cannot give right to an Ordinance, there is no man can have any ground for the administration of an Ordinance to others, if not upon a visible profession, for there is no man can be certainly assured who are the true Israel of God, and who belongs to the Election of God; no man can have certain assurance of another man's condition, but as he judgeth in charity upon his profession; so that an outward profession gives right to a visible being in Covenant, and so to a partaking of the Ordinances of Christ.

Secondly, There is another way of right (as I conceive) held forth in the Scripture, by which some persons have right to this visible Covenant of God, and so to some Ordinances of Christ, (such as they are capable of,) and that is, God's gracious owning of them; I say, God's gracious Declaration in the Word, that he will own such and such, and will account them for his people, set apart for himself; and so I conceive that the Lord owns and esteems of Believers, and the children of believing parents: And as some by profession have right unto the visible Covenant, so others upon God's declaration of owning in a visible way the seed of Believers; for so the Lord declared when he made that everlasting Covenant with Abraham, that he would take in him and his seed, and they should be visibly under the dispensation of the Covenant, which promise seems again to be renewed even in the New Testament, Acts 2, 39. For the Promise is unto you and to your children; and saith the Apostle 1 Cor. 7. 14. Else were your children unclean, but now are they holy. God's visible owning of them, gives them a right to the visible Covenant, and so to some Ordinances, such as they are capable of.

But you will say, it seemeth strange that any should be the subjects of an Ordinance who are not capable of understanding what is done: Alas, children have not the use of reason, and are not capable of understanding what is done, and therefore sure ineffectual, and of no use, it is but setting the seal to a blank.

I answer, That God always hath instituted some Ordinances both in the Old and New Testament, the subjects whereof have been merely passive. God to declare his grace, will prevent poor creatures before they are able to know him, hath instituted some Ordinances, the subjects whereof have been merely passive.

What did the children of old understand of Circumcision? They were merely passive, and yet that Ordinance I hope was not in vain, and seemeth to be more suitable to God's grace now under the Gospel, to have an Ordinance the subjects whereof should be merely passive, it declareth the grace of God, that he speaketh so to them before they have any knowledge.

And whereas it is said, It is the setting of a Seal to a Blank.

I answer, If God hath put in the names of the children of Believers into the same Covenant with their parents, if their names shall be found written in the Covenant,, why then to set to the Seal, will be no setting a Seal to a Blank; but their names were written and put into the Covenant when made with Abraham, I will be thy God, and the God of thy seed; and we nowhere read that their names were blotted out; nay, we rather find them renewed, Acts 2. 39. For the promise is to you, and to your seed: and therefore let none say, that it is setting a Seal to a Blank, if God hath written the names of children in the Covenant. Indeed I know it is very dangerous to misapply an Ordinance of Christ to wrong subjects, it is a giving holy things to dogs; but take heed that we do not call dogs where the Lord doth not call so; and take heed that we do not blot out those names that the Lord hath put into the Covenant.

But it may be you will say further by way of Objection.

If children belong to the Covenant of God, and the Covenant that the children of believing Parents is under is a Covenant of grace; of necessity they must be saved: Shall they be under a Covenant of grace, and not be saved?

I answer, Some may be under a Covenant of grace, and not saved; I say visibly, in respect of the outward dispensation, they may be under the Covenant of grace, and yet never attain to life and salvation; for when as we do Baptize those who do make a profession of their faith, surely we look upon them as Believers, and such as are in Covenant with God, and therefore we Baptize them, because believers, and so in Covenant with God.

But now, is it not possible, nay is it not ordinary for many who make such a profession of Christ, and are baptized upon that profession, to fall off, and to come short of life and salvation? And yet I hope you will say the Ordinance was not disorderly administered, though they that did make a profession do fall off; so though all children of believing parents do not attain to eternal life, yet the Ordinance is no more unduly administered to them then to others, for both Professors and children may be under the outward administration of the Covenant, which being may give right to an outward Ordinance, and yet not be saved.

Object. But you will say, How shall we judge of any but by their profession that they make of Christ; we cannot own any but such as make a profession, and children cannot make a Profession.

I answer, We must judge as God judgeth, and own as God owns; take heed that we do not disown what God owns; and if God will own the children of believing parents visibly, and put them under an outward administration of the Covenant, surely there is no danger of owning where God owns; God's owning is a surer ground for us to go upon, then any man's profession: Now God seems to own the seed of believers by his gracious promise: Nay, let it be considered, those Prophecies that speak of the latter days, and of the Kingdom of Christ, and the glory that shall be in those days, they speak of this, that God will then more abundantly and visibly own the seed of his people; God will own them, and God will bless them, Isa. 65. 23. They shall not labor in vain, nor bring forth for trouble; for they are the seed of the blessed of the Lord, and their offspring with them. When the Jews shall come in, they shall be called the blessed of the Lord, and their offspring with them; their seed shall be blessed according to Abraham's Covenant, when they shall come in again.

I know there are many gracious hearts that cannot believe this truth, and will not, till Christ comes to reveal it; but if the Lord hath handed in any beam of light, shut it not out; This have I spoken, because it is in my way to show you who are children.

But in the second place, Who are Dogs? You see who are to be accounted children: who are Dogs? That must be opened too, and let it not be offensive, because it is in the Text.

First, Dogs in Scripture are taken sometimes for all the Nations of the Gentiles, all the people of the world (except the seed of Abraham) were called Dogs, they were without the Covenant, strangers to the Commonwealth of Israel; all, we and our fathers, all the Nations of the Gentiles; time was that the Jews only were the children, and we and all Nations were called Dogs.

But secondly, All wicked men in Scripture phrase they are called Dogs; The Scripture doth brand some sort of wicked men, and some degrees of wicked persons by this name; In especial manner the Lord looks upon some wicked men as dogs.

Who are they?

First, Such as give up themselves to gross and notorious wickedness, such as are openly scandalous, vile, and profane, Rev. 22. 15. For without are dogs, sorcerers, and whoremongers, and murderers, and Idolaters, and whosoever loveth and maketh a lie. Without are dogs, and he showeth who those dogs are that are without, that shall be shut out of the City, when the new Jerusalem shall come down from heaven; these are they that shall not have a name in that City: vile sinners, they are called dogs.

But secondly, such as do oppose the Gospel of Christ, such as do reject the Gospel, and oppose the Truths of the Gospel; such as come to hear for that end, that they may snarl against the word; the Spirit of the Lord calls them dogs; Phil. 3. 2. Beware of dogs, beware of evil workers, beware of the concision: the Apostle bids the Christians beware of them, beware of dogs, they that bite and snarl, and set themselves to oppose the Truths of the Gospel, the Spirit of the Lord calls them dogs.

Thirdly, They who do reject those wholesome reproofs, and counsels, and exhortations that the Lord sends them by any of his servants; such as scorn reproof, and hate reproof, that are ready to fly in the face of him that shall reprove them when they do wickedly; What have you to do with me, meddle with your own matters, and I will not be reprov'd by such a one as you are; the word of the Lord calls such persons dogs, they are vile creatures, Matth. 7. 6. Give not that which is holy unto the dogs, neither cast ye your pearls before swine, lest they trample them under their feet, and turn again, and rent you. See here what Christ speaks; Exhortations and reproofs they are not to be cast before some men, such as have often rejected reproofs, and will not hear, the Lord looketh upon them as dogs, and they shall die in their wickedness.

Fourthly, The Scripture calls those dogs, that sometime have made a profession of Christ, and have turned away from their profession, such $\langle \diamond \rangle$ have seemed sometimes to be very forward, and very zealous, hot it may be in their youth, after ward they fall off, and have lost their fruit, and have lost their profession, and it may be not $\langle \diamond \rangle$ much as Leaves upon them, but are turned again to their old ways, 2 Pet. 2. 22. But it is hapn unto them according to the true Proverb, the dog turned to his own vomit again, and the Sow that was washed, to her wallowing in the mire; they have turned to their old course again, they seem sometimes to cast out sin; Ah! But they have returned to it again: Such persons are vile, and the holy Ghost calls them dogs.

Fifthly, Persecutors of Christ, of his Truth and people, they are called dogs; such as do not only bark against Christ, but even bite and rend his people: Why, the Lord looks upon them as vile creatures, they are dogs in God's account, whatever they are in the worlds; and so Christ calls them by David his type, Psal. 22. 16. for dogs have compassed me, the assembly of the wicked have enclosed me, they pierced my hands and my feet. Those bloody persecutors of Christ, that would not be satisfied but with the blood of the Lamb of God, nothing but the shedding of his blood would serve their turn; even as the Bloodhound that hunts the Hind upon the mountain; the Lord calls them dogs, barking dogs, biting dogs have compassed me round about.

But thirdly, What is the children's bread that must not be given to dogs?

First, The gracious Promises of the Gospel; those sweet comforts that God hath laid up in the Promises, they are not the portion of wicked men; Comfort ye, comfort ye my people, saith your God, speak ye comfortably to Jerusalem, and cry unto her, that her warfare is accomplished, that her iniquity is pardoned; Isa. 40. 1, 2. God doth not send comfort to wicked men while they remain such; for all the promises of the Gospel, they are Christ's right, and Christ's inheritance, they are Christ's portion; the Apostle saith, They are all yea and amen in him; now therefore they cannot be applied to any but to those that have Interest in Christ; if promises be yea and amen in Christ, they cannot go without Christ; he must be thy husband, or else thou hast no right in them.

Quest. But you will say then, How shall men come to believe in the promises, if they must not be applied to wicked men? How shall they come to have faith in the promise?

I Answer, When the Spirit of the Lord doth persuade the heart of any sinner to accept of Jesus Christ, to rest upon Jesus Christ by a particular application: as he is freely tendered in the everlasting Gospel: when this is done, I conceive that soul hath an Interest in Christ, and then right to all the promises, for every mercy promised is to those that are in Christ, and children's bread is not to be cast to dogs.

Secondly, A place in the House of God is children's bread; a name in God's house, fellowship with the Saints, this is children's bread that be longs only to those that are Christ's, at least visibly so, Isa. 56. 4, 5. see what God promiseth $\langle \diamond \rangle$ the Eunuchs, For thus saith the Lord unto the Eunuchs that keep my Sabbaths, and choose the thing that please me, and take hold of my covenant; even unto them will I give in mine house, and within $\langle \diamond \rangle$ walls, a place, and a name, better than of sons $\langle \diamond \rangle$ of daughters; I will give them an everlasting $\langle \diamond \rangle$ that shall not be cut off. This is made to him that feareth the Lord, and desires to worship $\langle \diamond \rangle$ Lord aright, and desires to sanctify the Sabbath of the Lord, he hath right to this part of children's bread, he hath right to the fellowship $\langle \diamond \rangle$ Saints, and Church of Christ, and God in due time will bring him in, though he may be out. will give him a name in my house, and his name shall be written there; the time is a coming that there shall be never a Saint, but the Lord $\langle \diamond \rangle$ bring him in, Behold how good and how pleasant it $\langle \diamond \rangle$ for Brethren to dwell together in unity, Psal. 133. 1 there is a large report of Brethren's dwelling together in Unity; now they must be Brethren, $\langle \diamond \rangle$ else they cannot dwell together in unity; It is good and pleasant for brethren dwell together Sons and daughters of the everlasting Father, $\langle \diamond \rangle$ that not only by Creation, but by Regeneration ▪ If

Sons and Daughters of the everlasting Father O! Then, How good to dwell in the House of God? This is children's bread. <◇>

Thirdly, Sealing Ordinances, The seals of the Covenant, they are children's bread, Baptism, and the Supper of the Lord are children's bread, and they are not to be dispensed to any that are visibly unclean, and unholy; To instance only in the Supper of the Lord, to show you a little that what is children's bread, and must not be given to any but children: For first, It is a Seal of the Covenant; if the other Ordinance be a Seal, then what is a Seal of the Covenant of Grace; and therefore they must be in the Covenant of grace, they must not be strangers to the Covenant, that come to this Ordinance, that have right to this Ordinance: They that are visibly strangers, and enemies unto God, strangers to this Covenant, they cannot have a right to that Ordinance of Jesus Christ.

Again, That Ordinance is a Love-Feast, and the Lord he makes it, to declare that he is reconciled to all those his friends whom he invites: There was a falling out between God and man, but when it is taken up by Christ, God the Father declares that he is a friend, and therefore he invites believers to sup with him, which declares and makes it out to them that he is reconciled, he makes a feast for this end, and therefore called the Lord's Supper; they shall come and sit at Table with him, that he may declare that he is really reconciled, and bears no old grudge, but hath forgotten all. Now therefore, they that are enemies, that will not be reconciled, but profess enmity against the Lord, they cannot have right to this Ordinance.

Again, It is a seal of our Communion with Christ and with the Saints. The Bread which we break, is it not the Communion of the Body of Christ? And so the Wine, it is the Communion of the blood of Christ, the sign of it, the seal of it, a seal of our Communion with Christ; and it is a seal of our communion with the Saints; all that do partake of it, they profess they are one bread therefore it is an Ordinance that cannot and may not be dispensed to wicked men.

Besides, The Supper of the Lord is an Ordinance that is appointed for the increase of grace ▪ it is appointed for a Christians growth, therefore of necessity there must be life before there can be growth, there must be a principle of grace, before there can be increase of grace; It is true, it is for the weak as well as the strong; and if there be any part of spiritual life in the soul, that soul may receive it in Christ's way; but of necessity there must be life, or else no right to the Ordinance; for it is appointed for growth in grace, to make a weak faith strong, and so for the increase of every grace.

I might add, wicked men cannot perform the actions of the living that God calls for in that Ordinance, they cannot eat and drink spiritually, they may eat the bread, and drink the wine, but they cannot eat the flesh of Christ, and drink the blood of Christ; if a wicked man, he cannot eat spiritually, and so he profaneth the Ordinance, the Body of Christ and the Blood of Christ he becomes guilty of it, and the Apostle saith, He eateth his own damnation, if he cannot discern the Lord's body, (1 Cor. 11. 29.) and eat spiritual by faith; sad in the conclusion, he eats and drinks damnation of himself. That's the third piece of children's bread, Sealing Ordinances.

I should have added a fourth, but shall pass it by because of the time, it should have been this, Holy counsels and reproofs, they are children's bread, and I should have shewn you in what cases we ought not to cast them before dogs; When we have no call to speak, or when we have spoken often, again and again, and they turn again, and tread it underfoot, when it appears that they sin obstinately, do not sin for want of light, but sin against light; when you have born a sufficient testimony unto the Truth, or unto the ways of God, in such cases and the like; that part of children's bread must not be cast to dogs.

To shut up all with a word or two of Application.

First of all, It lets us see Brethren, that way of the Churches of Christ is justifiable by Christ; that way of making distinction and separation betwixt person and person, betwixt the precious and the vile, it is justifiable by the word of the Lord, it is one of the hard things for the world to digest, this separation, this putting a difference between man and man: but I pray know, that if any Church do act according to the rule, to the word of Christ which they may not transgress, no not for a house full of gold and silver, they must not give that which is holy to dogs, cast not pearls before swine, (saith Christ) Matth. 7. 6. And it is to take the children's bread, and cast it to dogs. The Church do but walk according to rule, let not men condemn it.

I know what is objected; Ah! They are a censorious people, they would be Judges, they would judge all the world but themselves; they only are children, and all the world are dogs.

No, we say not so, God forbid, We say there are seven thousand souls, besides those we know, that have not bowed their knee to Baal; Ye• surely, there are many thousands (I am persuaded) of the people of God, that are children who are not for the present in any visible House of God: But this I say, that so long as they are so, they are not in the right place, they are where the dogs should be, till they be in some visible House of Christ, they are not in the children place, they set themselves among the dogs; the Lord would have them among children, and there is a time a coming, when all that are children shall come in, and without shall be none but dogs.

And let me say to such as are the children of the Lord, and not in some visible House of God; they cannot have their portion, they cannot enjoy children's bread, while out of Christ's house, they deprive themselves of that bread which is their right, Christ will not have bread given, but in his House; some Ordinances of Christ cannot be dispensed but in a Communion of Saints, and if children will not come into a communion of Saints, they must not, they cannot enjoy those Ordinances; and let it be no offense, if the Church (according to their duty) do labor to keep the Ordinances of God from pollution.

Quest. But you will say, What can it hurt me? Or, What can it hurt another, though there be many wicked men in a Communion of Saints, that come and partake of the Lord's Supper? What is that to me if I be prepared to wait upon the Lord? What detriment shall I receive?

Answ. It is to thee; A little leaven leaveneth the whole lump: If a wicked person be in the Church, it is to thee, and to the whole company, and if thou dost not that which is thy duty, thou art defiled by that wicked man. It is true, if thou hast done thy duty, brought it to the Church, then thou art not defiled; but if thou hast not done thy duty, thou art defiled, and it is to thee.

I know what is urged, Did not Judas receive the Supper? And were there not many wicked men in the Church of Corinth? And doth not Christ say, the Tares and the wheat must grow together? But these may easily be answered.

As for Judas, it is hardly made out that he received the Supper of the Lord; but if he did, he was a close hypocrite not known to the Church. Hypocrites there may be, but that is no plea for the admitting of those that are openly scandalous.

As for those wicked persons in the Church of Corinth, it was defective, but of right it should not have been so; Possibly the best Church may be corrupt, and may tolerate wicked persons; but by rule it ought not to be so: When ye are met together, and there be a wicked person amongst you, deliver such a one unto Satan, for the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus. Know ye not that a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump? 1 Cor. 5. 4, 5, 6. But to pass by that.

Secondly, In a word, What matter of comfort is here to you that are the Lord's people? The Lord looks upon you as children; all you that fear the Lord, and believe in the name of his Son, you are the Lord's children, cared for and provided for by the Lord. Provision is made by God himself, he will take care that you shall have bread; Christ takes care for his children: O! This is children's bread, and I must not give the children's bread unto dogs. O! That this might refresh your souls, that Christ looketh upon you as children, and that he takes care to provide bread for you; He will not suffer the soul of the righteous to famish, Prov. 10. 3. Children, you shall have bread; you shall have Ordinances, Promises, they belong to you, they are your bread, the Lord will in due time give out that which your souls wait for; for the children shall have their bread. O that the Lord would raise up our hearts to expect this when we come before him in the Lord's Supper: Let children look for their bread, wait for bread from heaven to be given out, there is never an hired servant in Christ's House but shall have bread enough; so the Prodigal did acknowledge: and if the hired servants shall have bread, the children shall not famish. O! Wait upon the Lord, who will give his children bread, and give it in due season.

Again thirdly, What cause have you to admire at the goodness of the Lord thus to you that are his children? Children so provided for; O! The free grace of God to us poor outcasts of the Gentiles: Time was when we were dogs; and that the Lord should make them to be children that were dogs, set them at his Table that were cast out, and give them children's bread, that had not right, no not to the crumbs! O the free grace of God, let us admire it, and let us debase ourselves, and lie low before the Lord, and say, O! What am I poor dead dog, that I should sit at Table with the King, and that the King should own me? No cause of being lifted up, but cause of lying low; for who are we poor dead dogs, that the Lord should make us children, and bestow the portion of children upon us, giving unto us children's bread!

And to shut up all;

Let us look upon the Ordinances of the Lord as our Bread; look upon the Word, and look upon the Promises, you that are children, take hold of them, improve them, they are children's bread, they are provided on purpose for you; And so that other Ordinance of the Supper, look upon it as bread, and make use of it as bread. O that we might fetch out the sweetness of it; for there is no piece of children's bread but hath a great deal of sweetness in it; sweetness in the Word, and sweetness in the Supper; and O that we might chew it, and fetch out the sweetness: What sweetness might we find in the Supper of the Lord, if we did set faith on work? O! what abundance of the love of God is held forth, and of the great mystery of godliness, God manifested in the flesh? How much held forth of the sufferings of Christ, and the benefits of the suffering of Christ? O that we might chew the Ordinance, and (as bread) make use of it for our refreshment and strength!

Matth. 15. 27.

And she said, Truth, Lord; yet the Dogs eat of the Crumbs which fall from their Masters Table.

SERMON XX.

IN these words that I have read, we have the carriage and the behavior of this woman under those Trials or Temptations which she met withal; her carriage is very gracious, it is such as doth discover

First, A depth of Humility.

Secondly, A height of Faith.

She discovers first of all, A depth of Humility. Jesus Christ he had called her dog; he had prefer'd others before her; he had told her, it was not meet to take the children's bread and give it to such as she was: Now she doth acknowledge all this, nay she doth not only acknowledge it, but she submitted unto it, nay she confirms it: Truth Lord; Christ had said, It was not meet to take the children's bread and cast it to dogs: Truth Lord; Whatever thou hast spoken, Lord, is true: Thou hast said that I am a dog, Truth Lord; Thou hast said the Jews are children, Truth Lord; Thou hast said it is not meet to bestow children's bread upon dogs, Truth Lord; yet the dogs eat of the crumbs.

And as we have a discovery of her Humility, so of her Faith; her condition was low, but her faith was high; strong, and glorious.

First of all, By Faith she doth answer the temptation, she finds out the strength of the temptation, the scope of it where it lay, and the Spirit of the Lord doth unfold and resolve the difficulty. Christ had said the Jews were the children, and 'twas not meet to give the children's bread to dogs; there is the temptation: She answers, Truth Lord, yet the dogs eat of the crumbs. It discovers thus much, Although the Jews are the children, and they must be served first, it is fit that they should have the first offer of mercy, it is fit that they should have whole loaves set upon the Table, and full dishes, yet the Jews are not so the children, that all others are excluded, the Gentiles are not altogether excluded from mercy, the Gentiles may have the crumbs, especially when the children grow wanton, and cast away their bread, the Gentiles (though dogs) may have that which fall from their Table. Thus by faith she doth find out the force of the temptation, and is enabled to make an answer to it.

Secondly, The strength of her faith doth appear in this, that she doth not only answer the temptation, but she gains advantage by it, her faith is strengthened, and riseth higher, and waxeth stronger; and that which was matter of discouragement in itself, it is matter of encouragement and strength unto her; Christ had said she was a dog, this is an encouragement to her, Lord, thou hast said that I am a dog, and if I be a dog, I am thy dog, thou art my master, and therefore surely the crumbs that fall from my masters table do belong to me; in all Nations, among all people the dogs eat the crumbs that fall from their masters table; Lord, thou hast said that I am a dog, but I will lie at thy feet, and wait upon thee for crumbs of mercy that fall from thee. Thus her faith is strengthened by that temptation, which in itself did tend to drive her from Christ; that temptation that would have driven her from Christ, makes her run to Christ; she is called dog, and she waits under the Master's table for crumbs of mercy. Thus you see the carriage of this woman under the temptation, she carries it very humbly, and with a great deal of faith and holy confidence in the midst of these discouragements.

There are divers useful truths in these words, I shall now close with one.

Truth Lord, (saith she.)

From whence Observe, That the soul that is graciously and truly humbled before the Lord, will justify the Lord in all that he speaks and doth against it.

Whatever the Lord shall say, whether it be in a way of discovery of sin, vileness, and corruption: Or secondly, whether it be a word of threatening: In both these, that heart that is truly humbled, it will justify the Lord. When God speaks himself, and gives rebukes from himself, or when God makes use of men to be instruments in his hand, still a gracious heart that is truly humbled, in all it meeteth withal it will justify the Lord, and say, Truth Lord; the Lord is true, and the Lord is righteous in what he speaks and doth.

First, When God comes and speaks in a way of discovery of sin, when the Lord by his Spirit in his Word doth come and rip open a man's heart as it were, discovers its vileness to him, shows him what a wretched, sinful, polluted creature he is; or when the Lord shall come and charge any particular sin upon a man that he hath committed, set his actual sin in order before him; when God shall bind with the cords of affliction, as Job speaks, and then discover a man's transgression; if the soul be truly humbled, it will say, truth Lord; I am indeed as vile and as wretched, and as sinful, nay worse then I can be charged with. When God came to make a discovery to Job of his own heart, in the 38, 39, and 40 chapters, God took much pains to discover Job to himself, Job had stood too much upon his integrity, upon his righteousness, he had not all along justified the Lord in his proceedings; but when God came to make a discovery to him, and show him what a poor, vile, frail worm he was, and ripped open his heart, and shown him his corruption, Job then falls down, and cries, truth Lord, Job 40. 3, 4.

*Then Job answered the Lord, and said, Behold, I am vile, what shall I answer thee? I will lay my hand upon my mouth. verse. 5. Once have I spoken, but I will not answer: yea twice, but I will proceed no further. Behold I am vile, as vile as thou hast discovered to me, Lord, I see it, and therefore I will stand no more upon my own justification, but I will justify thee; and truly so it is with every soul that is truly humbled, when God comes and makes a discovery of its corrupt nature and life, and chargeth sin upon him, it is so and so aggravated, thou hast sinned against light, against knowledge, against mercy and goodness; truth Lord, all is true, saith the gracious heart; yea, not only when God speaks in the way of discovery of sin, the soul that is humble will cry truth Lord, and justify the Lord.*

But secondly, Even then when the Lord speaks very sharply in a way of threatening, the soul that is truly humble, it will justify the Lord; Psal. 51. 4. Against thee only have I sinned, and done this evil in thy sight; that thou mightest be justified when thou speakest, and be clear when thou judgest. Here David he will justify the Lord in all that he spake against him; as much as if David should say, I have made this public confession, and have penned this Psalm, that I might clear thee before all the world, that I might justify God, what ever God should do against David, or speak against David. I will say, Lord, thou art righteous: He would justify God in all that God had spoken against him; and yet God spake terrible things against David by Nathan the Prophet, 2 Sam. 12. 10, 11, 12.

Verse 10. Now therefore the sword shall never depart from thine house, because thou hast despised me, and hast taken the wife of sriah the Hittite to be thy wife. Verse 11. Thus saith the Lord, Behold I will raise up evil against thee out of thine own house, and I will take thy wives before thine eyes, and give them unto thy Neighbor, and he shall lie with thy wives in the sight of this Sun. Verse 12. For thou didst it secretly, but I will do this thing before all Israel, and before the Sun.

See here what terrible things God threatens he threatens that the sword should never depart from his house; That he would raise up evil against him out of his own house, a terrible threatening: Nay, God threatens that he would give his wives to his Neighbors, that should defile them before his face; a terrible threatening: Nay, God tells him that this should be done before all Israel, and in the face of the Sun: And yet Lord, I will clear thee when thou judgest, and justify thee when thou speakest.

Take another instance in old Eli, and you shall see how he justified the Lord when the Lord spake against him; 1 Sam. 3. 18. at verse 11. Behold I will do a thing in Israel, at which both the ears of everyone that heareth it, shall tingle; and at verse 14. I have sworn unto the house of Eli, that the iniquity of Eli's house shall not be purged with Sacrifice nor Offering forever: Now all this was told Eli at verse 18. And Samuel told him every whit, and hid nothing from him: And he said, It is the Lord, let him do what seemeth him good. And so Hezekiah, take that instance, and see how he justified the Lord, when the Lord spake terribly against him, 2 Kings 20. 19. at verse. 17, 18. God threatens Hezekiah because he boasted of his treasure, and shows it to the Ambassadors of the King of Babylon, verse 17. Behold the days come, that all that is in thine house, and that which thy fathers have laid up in store to this day, shall be carried unto Babylon, nothing shall be left, saith the Lord. Verse 18. And of thy sons that shall issue from thee, which thou shalt beget, shall they take away, and they shall be Eunuchs in the Palace of the King of Babylon. A hard lesson, and yet he justifies the Lord; Verse 19. Then said Hezekiah unto Isaiah, Good is the word of the Lord which thou hast spoken. So that you see that a gracious heart that is truly humbled before the Lord, it will justify the Lord in all that he speaks against it; when he discovers sin, or threatens punishment, still he will justify the Lord; and not only justify the Lord in what he hath spoken, but he will justify the Lord in what he shall speak; if God should speak seven times worse, still a gracious heart that is truly humble, resolves to justify the Lord, 2 Sam. 15. 26. saith David, But if he thus say, I have no delight in thee; Behold, here am I; let him do to me as seemeth good unto him. He did not only justify the Lord in what he had spoken; but in what the Lord should say; if the Lord should say, I will use David no more, nor bring David back no more to his Throne, David in that justifieth God, and submits to the Lord.

But secondly, A gracious heart that is truly humbled, desires to justify God in his Actings; when God shall act against him, as well as speak against him, it will justify the Lord; if the Lord shall prefer others before him, in this he will justify the Lord. Instance in this woman of Canaan, the Jews (the children) they must have whole loaves, and full dishes, and they must be prefer'd before her, yet she justifies the Lord, and says, Truth Lord. But I shall make it out to you in divers particulars, that you may see how a gracious heart that is truly humbled, will justify the Lord in his actings.

First of all, If the Lord shall manifest more love, more grace, more favor unto others, then to itself, though there be nothing in all the world that it longeth more after then after the enjoyment of the presence of God, yet if the Lord shall be pleased to discover more of himself, and give out more clear, full intimations of his love and grace to others then to itself, it desires to justify the Lord. Christ (as I said) he will deal with the Jews as with children, give them whole loaves, and full dishes, this woman she justifies the Lord; and if the Lord will give more tokens of acceptance to others then to itself, still it desires to justify the Lord: The heart that is unsound cannot do this, nothing is more hard to bear, that the Lord should show more favor to others then to them; so it was with Cain, the Lord shown more favor to Abel his brother, then to him, God gave him a token of his acceptance, Cain could not bear it; and so the Prodigal's eldest brother; the father shows a great deal of love to the returning Prodigal, and the eldest brother could not bear it; I have served thee all my days, and thou hast not dealt so with me; thou hast not killed the fatted calf for me. But the soul that is truly humble, it will justify the Lord in this, if the Lord gives our clearer manifestations of his love to others then to him, it will say the Lord is righteous, and doth me no wrong; the Lord is a free Agent; free grace, it is his commodity, and he may bestow it where he pleaseth; and I have received more from the Lord then I have improved, I have had more then I have been thankful for, more then I have used for the Lord's honor; I have sinned so and so after mercy, and it is a wonder that I have not sinned away all my comforts. Thus a soul that is truly humbled, will justify the Lord.

Secondly, If the Lord gives out a greater measure of spiritual gifts to others, the soul that is truly humbled it will justify the Lord in this dispensation, it desires to say, as John the Baptist, John 3. 30. He must increase, but I must decrease; herein is my joy fulfilled; it desires to rejoice in this, that the Lord may have any honor by others, though it look upon himself, and see it is a barren wilderness; others, green trees, see others flourishing like the Palm tree, and bring forth much fruit; although a gracious heart sees cause to be humbled, and judge itself for not following on to know the Lord, for its not following on to wait upon the Lord for such enjoyments, yet it also desires to justify the Lord; not to complain if the Lord shall give out more to others then to him; it knows in this also the Lord is a free Agent, and he may dispose of his gifts, where, and to whom he please.

Thirdly, If the Lord should give out a greater share of temporal mercies to others then to him, a greater estate, more riches, more honor, more friends and relations, still a soul that is truly humbled, it will justify the Lord in this dispensation: it will say, I have received more then I am worthy of, I am less then the least of all thy mercies; I have more then I have used for God's honor, this is the portion that the Lord sees good for me; the Lord sees what a naughty heart I have, I am ensnared with that little that I have, it is a snare to me; therefore surely the Lord in mercy hath denied much to me, lest my heart should be ensnared, and therefore in this dispensation it will also justify the Lord.

Fourthly, If the Lord should lay greater afflictions upon him then upon others; in this dispensation, the soul that is truly humbled will justify the Lord. So it was with Job; Job he was greatly afflicted, not any man living met with so much as Job did, yet in Job 1. 20, 21. He falls down and justifies the Lord; Then Job arose, and rent his mantle, and shaved his head, and fell down on the ground, and worshipped; and said, Naked came I out of my mothers womb, and naked shall I return thither: the Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away, blessed be the name of the Lord: See here what arguments he finds to clear the Lord in this dispensation; though his affliction was very great, he falls down and blesseth the Lord, and at v. 22. it is said, In all this Job sinned not, nor charged God foolishly. And so Aaron the High Priest, when the Lord smote his two sons that they died, it is said, Aaron held his peace, Lev. 10. 1, 2, 3. And Nada and Abi'u the sons of Aaron, took eight of them his Censer, and put fire therein, and put Incense thereon, and offered strange fire before the Lord, which he commanded them not.

Verse 2. And there went out fire from the Lord, and devoured them, that they died before the Lord.

Verse 3. Then Moses said unto Aaron, This is that the Lord spake, saying, I will be sanctified in them that come nigh me, and before all the people I will be glorified; And Aaron held his peace.

He spake not one word against the Lord, but was silent, and justified the Lord. And so David in Psal. 39. when there was some sore hand of God upon him, so that he cried out, I am consumed by thy rebukes, some affliction that did even eat him up and consume him, yet he justified the Lord, verse. 9. I was dumb, I opened not my mouth, because thou didst it. And so in Micah 7. 9. I will bear the indignation of the Lord, because I have sinned against him. A soul truly humbled will justify the Lord, even then when he lays greater strokes of affliction upon him then upon others.

Fifthly, The soul that is truly humbled, it will justify the Lord when the Lord seems to shut out his prayer; it calls, and cries, and waits, and yet the Lord gives out no answer. O! how hard a matter is it for an unhumbled heart to bear this? Wherefore have we fasted, say they, and thou seest not? Wherefore have we afflicted our soul, and thou takest no knowledge? Isa. 58. 3. An hypocrite cannot bear this; if God give not a present answer, it will wait no longer: But now a gracious heart, that is truly humbled, it will wait upon the Lord, though the Lord gives not out a present answer; yea, it will study answers to clear the Lord; the Lord is righteous, and it is for gracious ends that the Lord defers to hear; or, the mercy is not ripe, or I am not fit for the mercy, it is mercy that I may wait upon God, mercy that I have such a God to wait upon; the Lord might have cut off my life, and my hopes, and my waiting; and therefore still the Lord is gracious, in that I have opportunity to wait upon him. Thus a soul truly humbled, will justify the Lord, when the Lord seems to shut out his prayer.

Sixthly and lastly, The soul that is truly humbled, will justify the Lord, when the Lord shall lay him aside as one that is useless, when the Lord shall make no more use of him in his work and service, but shall take him off from the work of the Lord. God sometimes deals so with his own people; yet if the soul be truly humbled, it will justify the Lord in this also; it is a hard matter to submit unto it, but when the heart is put into a right humble frame, it will submit and justify the Lord: And so did Moses and Aaron the servants of the Lord, God told them that he would lay them aside, God calls to Moses and Aaron, and tells Aaron that he must be high Priest no longer, commanded Moses to strip Aaron of his Garments, and to put them upon another before his face, and bids him go to such a place and die; and Aaron was obedient to the word of the Lord, Numb. 20. 23, 25, 26, 27, 28. And so Moses, when his work was at an end, God tells him that he must not carry the children of Israel into the land of Canaan, but he must go up to the Mountain and die: He submits to the Lord, Deut. 32. 49, 50. and Deut. 34. 5. And thus you see, a heart that is truly humbled, it will justify the Lord both in his sayings and doings; when God shall speak against him, and discover his vileness and sin, it will say, Truth Lord; or when God shall threaten most severely, nay when God shall walk in those ways that are hard to bear, yet a soul that is truly humbled, desires to submit to the Lord, and to justify the Lord.

And secondly, When God shall not only speak himself, but when God shall make use of men, yea wicked men, and shall set them to speak against it; when God shall set them to revile, and set them to act against it, to persecute it; the soul that is truly humbled, it will justify the Lord in that dispensation; so did David, 2 Sam. 16. 7, 8. And thus said Shimei wheu he cursed, Come out, come out, thou bloody man, and thou man of Belial; the Lord hath returned upon thee all the blood of the house of Saul, in whose stead thou hast reigned, and the Lord hath delivered the Kingdom into the hand of Absalom thy son; and behold thou art taken to thy mischief, because thou art a bloody man.

Shimei he came and railed against David, it was a great indignity that was done against David by that railing wretch, and he took up stones, and cast at the King, at verse 6. and it was, when David was in distress, he was driven out by Absalom from Jerusalem; he takes that advantage, he comes and rails, and calls him the bloody man, and saith he, the Lord hath now avenged the blood of thy masters house upon thee; yet David at this time justifies the Lord, verse 10. So let him curse, because the Lord hath said unto him, Curse David; who shall then say, Wherefore hast thou done so? See here how David justifies the Lord; though that which this raising man did object against David was false, he calls him a bloody man in respect of Saul's house; David was clear in that, and innocent: yet David he lays it to heart, and concludes that God had some design in it; though in respect of Saul's house I am not a bloody man, yet I shed the blood of Uriah. David he is silent; the Lord hath bid him curse David; and therefore David useth many arguments for to justify the Lord, and to quiet his own spirit, and the spirit of others, as you may see verse. 11, 12. And David said to Abishai, and to all his servants; Behold, my Son which came forth of my bowels, seeketh my life; how much more now may this Btnj amite do it? Let him alone, and let him curse, for the Lord hath bidden him.

Verse 12. It may be the Lord will look on mine affliction, and that the Lord will requite good for his cursing this day: And so David in patience doth possess his soul, and justify the Lord in that dispensation.

A word or two of Application, and so I shall conclude.

First of all, This calls upon us to be more in the practice of this duty; O that the Lord would help all his people to learn this lesson! It is a hard lesson, we had need look up to the Lord, that he would teach us to justify the Lord when he speaks and acts against us; when he speaks himself, or when he suffers men to speak against us: It is our duty (as you have heard) to justify the Lord, as this woman of Canaan did, and as those in Micah 7. did, I will bear the indignation of the Lord, because I have sinned against him: O that we could make those holy men our pattern that we heard spoken of before! Look upon Moses, upon Aaron, upon David, upon Hezekiah, upon Job, upon good old Eli, upon this Woman of Canaan, O! How did they justify the Lord, when the Lord spake hard things, and stretched out his hand in a way of sore affliction? Still we find them justifying the Lord, and O that we could look upon them as our pattern!

To persuade us to this Duty, First of all, Consider, That it is the Lord; It is the Lord that speaks, it is the Lord that acts; whenever there is any affliction upon us, it is of the Lord; and if it be of the Lord, and from the Lord, why should we not justify him? That was a prevailing argument with good old Eli, when as those terrible threatenings came to his ear, That God would do that against his House, at which both the Ears of everyone that heard it, should tingle; and that the iniquity of Eli's House, should not be purged away with sacrifice, nor offering forever: It is the Lord (saith he) let him do what seemeth him good. He hath power over all creatures, as the Potter hath power over the clay; and saith David, I was dumb, I opened not my mouth, because thou didst it.

Secondly Consider, That all that God speaks and doth is God; and if so, Why should we not justify the Lord? You know what Hezekiah said, 2 Kings 20. 19. Good is the Word of the Lord: A hard word it was, that all his Treasure should be carried unto Babylon, and his Sons also, and made servants there, and yet he saith, good is the Word of the Lord. Whatever God doth, is good; though it may seem to be never so hard, yet there is some good in all that he speaks and doth; and the Lord doth it for good, Doth not thy Word do good? Every word of the Lord is good, and doth good to them that are his children, though it be a hard word; yet all God's words, and all God's ways shall work together for good; he will bring good out of them, if the heart be submitting to God, and justifying the Lord in that dispensation.

Thirdly, Consider, That there is mercy in every dispensation; and that God doth afflict less then the sin deserveth: Though the affliction may seem to be hard, truly if we look into our own hearts and ways, we might see that there is that which might provoke the Lord to afflict seven times more. The Church in the Lamentations, when she came to consider how she had provoked the Lord, though before she had cried out bitterly of her Wormwood and Gall, yet in Lam. 3. 22. It is of the Lord's mercies that we are not consumed, because his compassions fail not. We have provoked the Lord greatly, and it is mercy that we are not consumed, mercy that we are out of hell, and therefore good cause that we should justify the Lord.

Yea, and let us justify the Lord when he suffers men to speak against us: O! This is a hard lesson to flesh and blood; but know it is a duty that God calls for, when men do revile, and speak evil, and do accuse us so and so, still it is our work to justify the Lord; Look back to that pattern of David in the case of Shimei, and let us make it our pattern, whenever we meet with revilings and hard sayings from men; he justified the Lord, though it was false that which Shimei did accuse him of; That he was a bloody man in respect of Saul's House, yet he justified the Lord; the Lord sees that I am a bloody man, though not in that particular; and therefore saith he, The Lord hath bidden him. Either thou art guilty or not guilty, when God suffers men to revile, and speak evil, and to fasten such accusations upon thee; if thou art guilty, it is thy duty to make use of it by whomsoever God shall discover it; make use of that which comes out of the enemies mouth, to find out the evil that is in our own hearts: But if thou art clear, and not guilty of that which thou art accused of, yet in respect of the Lord, there is cause of justifying the Lord: So David, though he was not guilty in that respect that Shimei said he was guilty, yet saith he, it is just with the Lord, and it is a righteous thing that I should be thus accused by Shimei. And for the quieting of thy spirit, use those Arguments that David did, Behold, the Son out of my Bowels riseth up against me, and therefore shall I think it a great matter for a stranger to do it? So let us say, behold, here is that which riseth up in mine own heart, the corruptions in mine own bosom, that doth me many an ill turn, shall I think much that strangers do accuse me? And consider also that which David said, The Lord doth hear the curses of Shimei, and will do me good by it: And so, if thou canst approve thy heart to God, and art not guilty of what men do accuse thee of, and that thou canst say, it is false in respect of man, but in respect of God, thou sayest, Truth Lord, Know that the Lord he can do thee good by it, and that he will turn those very curses of men to thy good.

Again, One word of Use more, and so I shall conclude.

Look up to the Lord for this grace of Humility; O! What cause have we to give up our hearts into God's hand, that he may make us truly humble? Surely we shall never be able to justify the Lord, if the heart be not laid low, and made truly humble. The Lord Jesus he had humbled this woman, he had laid her very low, he had sanctified her affliction to humble her, she had met with great afflictions, her daughter was vexed with a dwil, the Lord sanctified that affliction to humble her: And she also met with great temptations, three sore Temptations we read of; and the Lord also sanctified those temptations to humble her: And she had also met with discoveries of grace and love, the Lord revealed himself very gloriously to her faith, or else she could never have held out, the Lord also sanctified those discoveries to humble her, and lay her low. Truly if this woman had not had a humble heart, she could never have carried it so in the time of affliction, and in the time of this temptation, but she would have flown in the face of Christ: Christ calls her dog, and tells her, That it is not meet to take the children's bread, and give it to dogs: if her heart had not been humble, she would have discovered herself to have been a dog, she would have barked against him; but she carried it very graciously, and in all that Christ spake, justified him, Truth Lord. O that we might go to the Lord, and beg of God, that he would give out more of this grace of humility to us! A proud heart will never justify God when he speaks himself, or when he suffers men to speak; a proud heart will never take a repulse from God, nor reproofs from men: O! There is need of the grace of humility that will enable a soul to justify the Lord in whatever he shall speak, and in whatever he shall do. The Apostle saith, God resisteth the proud, but he giveth grace to the humble: He gives this grace to the humble, that they shall carry it graciously when the Lord speaks against them, when the Lord shall make a discovery of their hearts to them, of their Corruptions to them, of the deserving of their Transgressions to them, they shall justify the Lord, and say, Truth Lord, all is true. And when God shall suffer men to speak against them, the Lord gives grace to the humble; they shall have this grace, made able to justify the Lord.

And truly, When the soul is brought into this posture, when the soul is thus truly humbled before the Lord, and can justify the Lord when the Lord speaks, it is not far from deliverance: Salvation is nigh, Deliverance is at hand, the time of God's Controversy is at an end. When God hath thus humbled the soul under his mighty hand, and made it willing to lie low, and to justify the Lord in all that he speaks and doth; surely the time of refreshment from the presence of the Lord is not far off.

The Prophet Ezekiel he lay low before the Lord; there were discoveries of the glorious Majesty of the Lord made to him, at the latter end of the first Chapter; As, the appearance of the Bove that is in the Cloud in the day of Rain, so was the appearance of the brightness round about, this was the appearance of the likeness of the Glory of the Lord: and when I saw it, I fell upon my face: See here, he lay low before the Lord; and in Chap. 2. and Verse 2. What is said? And the Spirit entered into me when he spake unto me, and set me upon my feet.

And truly Brethren, When the Lord giveth out such a frame of spirit, that the heart is made so humble as to lie low before the Lord, and to justify the Lord in what he speaks and doth, the Spirit of the Lord is not far, Salvation is not far off. As the Spirit did enter into Ezekiel, and set him upon his feet, so the Spirit of the Lord will come into that soul, and fill it with joy and refreshment from the Lord's presence.

Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth, while the evil days come not, nor the years draw nigh, when thou shalt say I have no pleasure in them.

Solomon having spent a great part of his life in following after vanity, and being brought by the Spirit of God to a serious consideration of his ways, he doth write this Book of Ecclesiastes as the Book of his Repentance; and like a true penitent, he takes care of the souls of others, and gives warning to all men that they should take heed that they do not split against those Rocks against which he cast himself. He is exceeding careful of the souls of men; and in a special manner, he takes care of the souls of young men; he speaks once and again to them, that they might be warned by him, and not spend their youth in vanity, that they might not lose the comfort that they might enjoy by enjoying God, and that they might not lose their opportunities of doing God service in their youth.

Now because it is hard to make impression upon young men, they being very apt to put the evil day far from them, and to put the good day far from them too, the day of conversion and returning to God being the first of all good days, the daybreak of Eternity; he therefore doubles his Exhortation to them: And he begins in chap. 11. verse 9. there he gives one warning piece to young men, Rejoice O young man in thy youth, and let thy heart cheer thee in the days of thy youth and walk in the ways of thine heart, and in the sight of thine eyes: But know thou, that for all these things, God will bring thee into judgment. Youth is very sinful, and it is very hard for young men to bear reproofs. That Solomon speaks in an Ironical way, that it might make impression upon their hearts; as if he should give them leave $\langle \diamond \rangle$ do what they will, Let thy heart cheer thee in the days of thy youth, and walk in the ways of thine heart, and in the sight of thine eyes: Take you pleasure, and run after vanity, and scorn reproof and satisfy your lust as much as you will: do (saith he) But take this also with you; Know, that for all these things, God will bring thee to judgment.

But how shall a young man be delivered from his folly? What remedy is there against this evil in youth? By what means may a young man be cleansed?

He sets down a remedy in the Text, Remember thy Creator: If thou wouldest be turned from sinful vanity in thy youth; Remember God in thy youth. And he presseth the Exhortation with many Arguments; Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth. Remember him! So I will (saith the young man) I have health, and strength, and time beforehand, I am but in the beginning of my youth, and I may remember my Creator, though I do it hereafter. O! Take heed (young man) saith he, Remember now thy Creator; Take heed of delaying, take heed of putting it off till another time, do it now, the future time is not in thy power, thou knowest not what tomorrow will bring forth, and therefore if thou wouldest remember God, do it now.

And good reason that thou shouldest do it now, for he is thy Creator, thy being and thy soul is from him, thy life is from him, and thy comforts are from him; He is thy Creator, therefore remember him now.

And he presseth this Duty, by the advantages which a man may have in youth of seeking after God; and the disadvantages that will come by putting off seeking after God in early years; There are evil days a coming (saith he) and therefore Remember now thy Creator, before the evil day come. There is the evil day of old age a coming, and that Solomon describes by an excellent Allegory or Metaphor from verse. 2. to ver. 7. In verse 2. he sets forth the evil day of Old Age, While the Sun, or the Light, or the Moon, or the Stars be not darkened, nor the Clouds return after the rain; The Sun, and the Moon, and the Stars will be darkened, saith he; that is, all the powers, the faculties of thy soul, thy understanding, thy affections, thy internal and external senses, thy memory, thy hearing, and thy seeing, and all other helps, which he calls the Sun, Moon, Stars, and Light, they will be darkened, there will be a decay in all the faculties of Nature. The clouds return after the rain; The body will be full of infirmities, a cloudy day it will be; the clouds return after the rain, after the day when it hath rained, insomuch as you think it would rain no more, the clouds return again; and so in old Age, the clouds will return again and again upon thee, there is a cloudy day a coming, and a dark day in old age, when thou canst not see to do thy work, and therefore Now Remember thy Creator.

And there is another evil day that he speaks of in verse 7. and that is, the day of death. Then shall the dust return to the earth, as it was; and the spirit shall return unto God, who gave it. Therefore considering all this, I counsel thee to remember thy Creator in the days of thy youth.

The Proposition or Doctrine then is this: That it is the duty of all the children of men, to seek after God in the day of youth.

Therefore the Scripture takes notice of some of the servants of God, and sets them forth as patterns and examples, that every man should remember God in the days of his youth. The Scripture takes notice of some good thing that was found in Jeroboam's child, 1 Kings 14. 12, 13. Arise thou therefore, get thee to thine own house, and when thy feet enter into the City, the child shall die; And all Israel shall mourn for him, and bury him; for he only of Jeroboam shall come to the grave, because in him there is found some good thing toward the Lord God of Israel, in the house of Jeroboam: In all the Family there was but one good child, and there is notice taken of him, and the Lord thought of him in mercy, that he did not see the evil that came upon his fathers house: The Scripture takes notice also of Josiah, in 2 Chron. 34. 3. For in the eighth year of his Reign, while he was yet young, he began to seek after the God of David, his father: He was but sixteen year old, and yet then did he seek after the God of David his father: And David he tells us, He trusted in God from his youth, Psal. 71. 5. For thou art my hope O Lord God, thou art my trust from my youth. And O that young men would look upon these patterns; wherefore doth God take notice of them, and wherefore are they recorded in Scripture, but that young men might make them patterns, and tread in their steps, to Remember their Creator •in the days of their youth.

But in the opening of the Point, I shall first show you what it is to remember God.

Secondly, Shew you what cause all men have to Remember God.

Thirdly, What advantage it is to Remember God in youth.

Fourthly, Make some Improvement.

First, What is it to Remember God.

First, To Remember God is to know God; knowledge is the beginning of remembrance; there is no man can remember that which he doth not know; therefore that man that is ignorant of God he doth not remember God, neither can he, because he doth not know God. So then, when Solomon saith, Remember thy Creator in the days 〈〉 thy youth, it is as much as if he should say, betimes seek after the knowledge of God, to know him as he is in himself, and as he is in his Son; to know him for your God, and your portion, and your Inheritance, and your Savior; where there is no knowledge of God, there is no Remembrin• of God. Therefore the Prophet Isaiah dot• press men to seek after the knowledge of God and in the Name of God, threaten all those people that seek not after the knowledge of God, th• though God made them, yet he will not save the• if they do not know him, Isa. 27. 11. For it is •people of no understanding, therefore he that ma• them will not have mercy on them. If thou do• not know God, though thou hadst outward lif• from him, yet thou canst not expect eternal lif• from him; for if thou dost not know him, he wi• not have mercy on thee: And therefore, To Remember thy Creator, is to know God.

Secondly, To Remember God, is to Trust 〈〉 God, to lay the confidence of the soul upon God, and upon God only; Psal. 20. 7. Some trust 〈〉 chariots, and some in horses; but we will remember the name of the Lord our God: So much faith in God, so much remembrance of God, when God is not believed on, and when God is distrusted, when anything beside God is trusted, then God is forgotten; And therefore when Solomon saith▪ Young man, Remember God; that is, seek after faith in God; let them trust in God, let them not trust in their strength, trust in their parts, let them not trust in their wealth, let them not trust in their friends, their fathers to provide for them, no, let them Remember God, let them put their trust in God, for that is a remembering of God.

Thirdly, To Remember God, is to Love God, to prize him, to have a high account of God, to love him dearly above all things; for when God is not loved above all things whatsoever, God is forgotten; We will remember thy love more then wine: The upright love thee. Cant. 1. 4. We will remember thy love more then wine; that is, our heart is affected with thy love, our heart is taken with thy love; we find more sweetness in the love of Christ, then in the sweetest of creature comforts; so that when Solomon saith, Young man Remember thy Creator in the days of thy youth, that is, set thy affections upon God betimes, prize him above all thy comforts and enjoyments: if the heart be not set upon God, the Lord is forgotten.

Fourthly, To Remember God, is to Serve God, and to obey God, to walk with him, and to worship him, to honor him, this is a Remembering of God, Deut. 8. 11. Beware that thou for get not the Lord thy God, in not keeping his commandments, and his judgments, and his statutes, which I command thee this day: If thou dost not yield obedience to the will of God, thou forgettest God; but to yield obedience to the Will of God, is to Remember God: So when Solomon saith, Young man, Remember God in the days of thy youth, that is, Walk with God, and take heed of disobeying God, sinning against God; for if thou sin against God, thou forgettest God; and therefore be found walking with him, and worship the Lord in truth, for that is a remembering of him.

Fifthly, To Remember God, is to spend the thoughts of the heart upon God; When a man spends many thoughts upon a person, or upon such an object, he then remembers it; and so when the thoughts of the heart are spent upon God, then God is remembered: But when God is not thought upon, but vain thoughts thrust out the thoughts of God, there is no remembrance of God; the wicked they are said to forget God; God is not in all his thoughts, Psal. 10. 4. And therefore when Solomon saith, Young man, Remember God; that is, young man, spend thy thoughts upon God; thou hast many thoughts in youth, do not let them run out to base objects, to soul-destroying objects, but Remember God, let God be often in thy mind, and let the thoughts of thy heart be spent on him, thy many thoughts, and thy best thoughts, thy choice thoughts, let them be spent on God, for that is a Remembering of God.

Sixthly and lastly, To Remember God, is to Endeavour after communion with God; Seek to see the face of God, and to have the presence of God in and thorough Christ, to walk with God, this is a remembering of God; when a man neglects his friend, and hath no communion with him, he is said to forget his friend; and so that soul that seeks not after communion with God, that soul forgets God: And therefore when Solomon saith, Young man, Remember God; that is, let the strongest endeavor and pursuit of thy soul be after God, that thou mayest enjoy God, and act for God, and serve him. That's the first particular, you see what it is to Remember God.

But secondly, The second thing is to show you what cause there is that all the sons of men should Remember their Creator.

First of all, God is worthy, yea only worthy to be remembered: What is in any creature, in any object, that does make it worthy of the thoughts of your heart? Look unto God, and you shall find it infinitely more in him; Is it Goodness, Kindness, bounty, Liberality, Wisdom, Power, and Greatness, Beauty and Loveliness? Go all the world over, and find out all the excellencies that you can name, and you shall find them all to meet and center in God; all divine perfections are in him originally; there is Love and Bounty, Goodness and Meekness, yea infinite grace in God; He is good, and he doth good; and he doth good to the worst of creatures, even to those that forget him, while they run away from him: Yea, the most forgetful of God, they have showers of mercy poured down every day upon their heads. Now because of those excellent glorious perfections that are in God, God is worthy to be remembered of the sons of men.

Secondly, He is worthy to be remembered, because he hath Done so much to be remembered; God hath taken more care of this one thing, then he hath done of anything else, besides the great work of the salvation of his people, that the sons of men might remember him; when man went out from God in Adam, God saw that man would soon forget him, man would have forgotten that there was a God; now what a great deal hath God done, that the sons of men might remember him! He hath written the remembrance of himself upon every creature, that wheresoever man looks, either upward or downward, he shall see some footsteps of God, something that God hath done to remember him, he hath engraven some remembrance of himself upon every creature, Psal. 8. 3, 4. verse 9. When I consider thy heavens, the work of thy fingers, the moon, and the stars, which thou hast ordained.

Verse 4. What is man that thou art mindful of him, and the son of man that thou visitest him? When I saw (saith he) the remembrance of God that was graven upon the Sun, Moon, and Stars, and so upon every creature on the face of the earth, why then at Verse 9. he cries out, O Lord, our Lord, how excellent is thy Name in all the Earth.

Nay, The Lord hath engraven the remembrance of himself upon all his Providences; there is some remembrance of God upon every mercy, all those mercies that have been made thy portion, which thou hast enjoyed since thou hadst a being; wherefore are they but that thy soul might remember God?

Nay, God hath written his name upon his judgments in the earth, that he might be remembered▪ wherefore God he doth work wonderfully, that as his mercies are wonderful, so his judgments are wonderful, wherefore doth God do such great things in the earth? Doubtless that he might be remembered, that men may say, Verily there is a reward for the righteous, and a God that judgeth the earth.

Nay, God hath set up Conscience in every man's soul, and wherefore hath God set up Conscience in every man, but that Conscience might put us in mind of God? That every man's Conscience might speak for God, that it might stand up and cry for God, Remember God; and Conscience doth cry, and doth speak, and men may hear the cries of Conscience if they will not stop their ears: When men sin, Remember (saith Conscience) that for all these things God will bring thee to judgment.

Nay further, God hath engraven his Name upon his Ordinances, and the great end is, that he might be remembered; This is the great end of the Ordinance of the Lord's Supper, Do it in remembrance of me, saith Christ; and so every Ordinance, the Word that is preached to you, it is that you might remember God; wherefore is Prayer, and every Ordinance, but that the sons of men might remember God? He hath engraven some remembrance of himself upon all his Ordinances. See then what cause there is that you should remember God, seeing God hath done so much that he might be remembered.

Thirdly, There is cause that the sons of men should remember God; for God is their Creator▪ Remember thy Creator. Now God being our Creator, it is but a just and equitable thing that thou shouldest remember God thy Creator; thy being is from him, thy life is from him, thy soul is from him, thy comforts are from him, all thy enjoyments are from him, thou hast not the least comfort in the world but what comes from God; he being thy Creator, it is but a just thing that thou shouldest remember him; yea, thy dependence is upon him, as he is thy Creator; thy life is not only from him, but thy life is in his hand; and thy soul is not only from him, but thy soul is in his hand; it is in his power to kill and to save; to destroy both body and soul: And if there be so great a dependence that man hath upon his Creator, that not only thy comforts, but thy breathing, thy soul, and thy eternity is in his hand, there is good cause that thou shouldest remember thy Creator.

Fourthly, There is good cause that we should remember God, for while you remember God, you remember yourselves; for all good comes to the creature by remembering God, thy peace, and thy rest, thy comforts, thy satisfaction, and thy contentments, thy establishment of heart, thy hope for life, for heaven, for glory; there is not any good thing that a creature can enjoy, or hope to enjoy, but it must come in by remembrance of God: And while you remember God, you remember yourselves; remembering God, thou enjoyest God, and enjoying God, thou enjoyest all good whatsoever: good reason then that thou shouldst remember him. That's the second particular.

Thirdly, I shall show you what advantage it is to man to remember God in youth.

First, There is this great advantage; for the most part that soul that remembers God betimes, in its coming unto God he finds the easy and the ready way to God; the longer a man forgets God, the further he goes from God, every day he is going from God, and therefore it will be the harder task to come back again; it is a harder task to cast over a great Account, then to cast it up while lesser; though in respect of God all things are alike, and God can as easily forgive many transgressions as few, he can wash away great sins as well as small; but yet when poor creatures come to look towards God through their unskillfulness, they make it a difficult thing to find God, and to return to God, when they go a great way from him, the greater account they have to cast up, it proves so to man because of his unskillfulness, though to God all things are alike; So that the sooner men begin to look after God, they find an easier way to come to Christ, they have some helps in nature, that when a man is once turned to the Lord, his natural abilities being sanctified, become great helps; so that young men have more advantage, in respect that natural parts are more strong, the Understanding, and Memory, and Reason, the Senses Internal and External, they are all more vigorous; and these prove helps to a man, when once the heart is sanctified, and the sooner a man turns to God, the more he hath of these helps.

Yea, Christ is very ready to go out to meet such children and young men: Are the hearts of young ones towards the Lord? The heart of Christ is towards them, and he is mightily taken with such, and will go forth and meet them. The young Prodigal in the Gospel, no sooner did he think of returning to his fathers house, but his father ran out to meet him.

But you will say, for ought we see, young men meet with as much trouble as others, and when they come to remember God, they are afflicted as much as others, and it proves hard to them as to others.

I answer, If it be so hard when they do return to God in youth, it would have been much more hard if they had stayed till old age; and if they do meet with difficulties and temptations, and it prove a hard way, it is because that the Lord see• it is good for a man to bear the yoke in his youth; and I might add, that the Lord will recompense all with abundance of grace, and with the discoveries of himself. That is the first advantage that young men have many times, for the most part, they find the ready way to Christ.

Secondly, They have this advantage, The Lord for the most part doth discover more of himself to them that begin betimes to remember God, then to those that begin more later;

Joel 2. 28. And it shall come to pass that I will pour out of my Spirit upon all flesh, and your Sons and your Daughters shall Prophecy, your old men shall dream dreams, your young men shall see visions. Let not old men grudge at God's dispensation, it is mercy to them that they shall dream Dreams, but the young men shall see Visions; they shall have clearer discoveries of God, and that is a great advantage.

Thirdly, There is this advantage, They that remember God betimes, they have an opportunity of doing more for God then other men have; for when men begin late, it is work enough to get the heart established in the knowledge of the love and free grace of God; it is a great work, and a long time before the heart be established upon Christ and the Promises; and till that be done, little work or service is done for God. But when men begin betimes, they have time to get their hearts established upon Christ and the Promises, and upon the free grace and righteousness of Christ, and then they have time also to act for God, and the Lord makes use of them to do him much service in their generation: And O what a great advantage is that. So that you have seen the Point handled: First, What it is to Remember God. Secondly, What Cause the Sons of men have to Remember God. Thirdly, What Advantage it is for the Sons of men to Remember God in youth.

Now by way of Application.

First of all, It discovers and reproveth the folly and madness that is bound up in the heart of the children of men. If this be the duty of all the sons of men, and a point of great wisdom to remember God betimes, then this discovers the folly and madness that is in men's hearts to forget God: How many in this Congregation (I fear) may fall under this reproof, that have not yet remembered God? How many in their youth, and how many past youth, that have not yet remembered God, that have all their days forgotten the Holy One of Israel? O that the Lord would convince poor creatures of this evil, not Remembering God. Shall I show you the evil of it, and O that God would show you the evil of forgetting God.

First of all, It is the Mother and cause of all other sins whatsoever; for it were not possible that many should sin against God as they do, if they did not forget God; all sin grows upon this root of Forgetting God. The Psalmist maketh it the cause of all evil that is committed, because men do forget God, Psal. 50. 19, 20, 21, 22.

Verse 18. When thou sawest a thief, then thou consentedst with him, and hast been partaker with Adulterers.

Verse 19. Thou givest thy mouth to evil, and thy tongue frameth deceit.

Verse 20. Thou sittest and speakest against thy brother, thou slanderest thine own mothers son.

Verse 21. These things hast thou done, and I kept silence; thou thoughtest that I was altogether such an one as thyself: but I will reprove thee, and set them in order before thine eyes.

Verse 22. Now consider this, YE THAT FORGET GOD, lest I tear you in pieces, and there be none to deliver you.

As much as if he should say, here is the cause of this evil that is committed by you, your Forgetting God; It were not possible that men should dare to sin in the face of God, if they did not forget God. And it were not possible that men should sin in secret against God, if they did not forget God; they forget that God is an all-seeing God, and that for all these things he will bring them to judgment; It is not possible that children and servants should lie, and steal, and be unfaithful, if they did not forget God; if they did but remember that he would bring them to judgment, and that no liar shall come into the New Jerusalem; if men did remember God, they would not sin against God: But this is the cause of all the sin in the world, Men's forgetting God.

Secondly, There is this Evil; It makes a man spend all his time in vanity, he comes up and goes down to the grave in a moment, and hath lost all the time that he hath lived. The truth is, he hath not yet begun to live, that hath not remembered God, he hath not lived to the end of his life, what is the end of his life, but that he may remember God? But man forgetting God, his life is a fruitless life, a vain life, he comes up, and sins, and lives in vanity, and goes down to the pit, and never lives to the end of life, because man remembers not God.

Thirdly, There is this evil in it; It makes men altogether unwilling and unable to die; as it makes their lives unprofitable, so it makes their deaths dreadful; what is the cause that men fear death? Because they did not remember God in life; if they had remembered God, if they had known God, and trusted in God, and walked with God, they would not have been so fearful of death; but when men come to be made sensible that they have spent no thoughts upon God, but upon their lusts, and sin, and so brought their days to an end, they must needs fear to go to God; see then how much evil there is in this great sin of not remembering God.

But you will say, We hope that we do remember God, God forbid that we should forget him. What? Forget God? We hope we shall never do that while we live.

O my friends, It is a harder matter to remember God, then the world dream of; how many thousands in the world are there that forget God, that would be loath to be told that they are forgetters of God? And yet I fear will be found so another day; They that walk contrary in ways of sin, they are forgetters of God, let them say what they will; though they may have a way of worship and prayer to God, and hear of God, and read of God, yet if they be found walking contrary to God, such men will be interpreted by God to be forgetters of him. Consider this all ye that forget God; Psal. 50. 22. speaking of the Hypocrites • Why, they had many prayers, and did many good works, are they forgetters of God? Yes, their hearts were never upright with God, they never trusted in the Name of God, they were never found serving of God, so as they might please him; and therefore the Lord calls them Forgetters of God; O that the Lord would convince you of this great evil of forgetting God.

Secondly, By way of Exhortation, I beseech you in the Name of the Lord to Remember God▪ This day Remember God. Remember him, and Remember him in youth. I shall speak a little to each of these.

First, I beseech you Remember God, to know God, to trust in him, to love him, to obey him, and to spend your thoughts upon him; let the endeavors of your heart be after the Lord; This is to Remember God. And O that God would call upon you all, and call you up to such a remembrance of him. O remember how worthy God is to be remembered, and remember what God hath done, that so the sons of men might remember him; and if after all this that God hath done, after all the remembrance that God hath written of himself in his Word, and upon his Works, and upon his Ordinances and Providences, men shall be found Forgetters of God, as all sinners are; how sad will their condition be another day? You have a memory for the world, and what, No remembrance of God! God only worthy to be remembered, and of all things God only shut out! O my friends, Take heed of this great sin, this Mother sin, Forgetting God.

But secondly, I beseech you to Remember thy Creator in the days of thy youth; Young man do not put off your remembrance of God; it may be you will say to me, you will remember God hereafter; that is folly: The Wise man teacheth you better, & giveth you better counsel; Remember thy Creator in the days of thy youth; As much as if he should say, Remember now thy Creator, in what part of your youth soever you be; Remember Now thy Creator; Now seek after the knowledge of Christ, if ten years old, Now Remember God, if fifteen years old, if twenty years old, Now Remember thy Creator; yea, if thirty years old, and so to every Age to which the word of the Lord comes, Even Now, Now remember thy Creator.

And O that young men and young women would think upon the advantages that many have by remembering God in youth; they were spoken of before. And let me further tell you, for your encouragement young men, that to remember God betimes, it is a great prerogative, and a great dignity to be the first in Christ; the Apostle speaks of some that were first in Christ, and he speaks honourably of them, Eph. 1. 12. That we should be to the praise of his glory, who first trusted in Christ: And it was the honor of that people, that were first in bringing back David; great honor was put upon them that went out first to meet David their King. And so to be the first▪ that go out to meet with Christ, the first that honor him, the first that close with him, and believe in him; this is a prerogative, and it is kindness that God will never forget, Jer. 2. 2. Thus saith the Lord, I remember thee, the kindness of thy youth, the love of thy espousals, when thou wentest after me in the Wilderness, in a Land that was not sown, the kindness of thy youth I will not forget, saith God. And the Lord will say so to young men and young women that are looking after Christ, and remember him betimes; thou rememberedst me in thy youth, and I will remember the kindness of thy youth, when thou leftest all to follow me, thy vanity, thy comforts, thy contentments, that other young men closed with, and followed after, though they lead to destruction; this kindness of thy youth Christ will remember to the very last day.

And let none that hear me this day, think that they are too young, and 'tis not for them to trouble themselves with such matters, to remember God, and to look after God; as young as you have remembered God; Jeroboams child remembered God; Josiah at sixteen years of age set himself to seek after the Lord: And I pray consider, youth go the grave as well as others; nay, more die in their youth than in their old age: O that young men would remember God betimes! And there is none so young but must be accountable to God; there is sin enough to condemn the youngest, if not actual sin, thou hast a sinful Nature, and that is enough to condemn the youngest that hears me this day. And therefore, O that the Lord would persuade young men to remember betimes their Creator; and know that it will be your comfort in the latter end: As the neglect of God in youth will be a great deal of sorrow, when God smites, and comes to lay you upon the bed of sickness, and ready to give out your breath, then it may be you will cry out, Lord, Remember me; but how sad will it be to reflect upon yourselves, and to think that you have not remembered God? When as it hath been the comfort of many a poor soul that their work hath been done, and when they have lain upon their sick bed, they have given up themselves willingly to God, having gotten the knowledge of God, and gotten faith in Christ, they are blessing God that their work is done for them by Christ. O how sweet and comfortable will it be to you young men, when you come to die, to see that your great work is done, and that you have believed, and have nothing to do but to die? Solomon was very pitiful to your souls young men, and therefore he calls upon you to Remember your Creator in the days of your youth; And in the bowels of Christ I speak to you this day, to study this lesson of lessons, To Remember Now thy Creator in the days of thy youth.

And let me say to old men, if young men had need to remember God. Oh what cause have old men to remember God? They that have lived many years, and not remembered God, O it is high time that thou shouldst make haste, thou art going to the grave, the land of forgetfulness, where there is nothing can be done for eternity, when once in the grave. O that God would persuade the Ancient! Such as have neglected to remember God, that they would now remember their Creator: and do not say I have misspent my youth, and I fear my time is over, and there is no hope for me, I had as good go on in my ways of sin; O say not so; The thoughts of the Lord are not as your thoughts, nor his ways as your ways, but as the Heavens are higher than the earth, so are his thoughts above yours, and his ways above yours. You have spent many years in sin and vanity, and forgotten God, and your thoughts have been upon vanity it may be many years; but the thoughts of the Lord to do good to his people, are from eternity. O that Now you would at last in your old age remember God! Old men, I beseech you to remember your Creator, there is hope; wherefore hath God spared you so long? Reason so with yourselves to encourage you to look to Christ, when through Unbelief you say there is no hope, you have walked in sin, and God might have cut you off, and it is infinite mercy that God hath not cut you off; but seeing the Lord hath spared me, surely I may hope, though I have forgotten God in the days of my youth, yet say, I will now remember my Creator, and seek after faith in him. And know for thy comfort and encouragement, that there is infinite thoughts of mercy in the Lord; Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts, and let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him; and turn to our God, for he will abundantly pardon, Isa. 55. 7. O stay no longer, venture no longer, for there is one evil day upon you, the evil day of old age is upon you, and there is another a coming: O Remember God, and make haste to do it quickly, before the Sun, and

Moon, and Stars be darkened, before the body return to the earth, and the spirit to stand before God that made it.

But I shall now come to press this duty upon God's own people; for there are many things that may evidence that this Duty is neglected by God's own people. What is the Cause of all the dark and sad apprehensions of God to many of God's own people? Why, Because they have not remembered God: What is the cause of all those distrustful thoughts that do arise in the hearts of God's own people? That our hearts are ready to saint within us? That God is no more trusted for the things of this life, and for the things of Eternity? Why all these distrustful thoughts, they spring from this root, not remembering God: when the Disciples did distrust Christ, Matth. 16. 8, 9, 10. Why saith Christ, O ye of little faith, Why reason ye among yourselves, because ye have brought no bread? Verse 9. Do ye not yet understand, neither remember the five loaves of the five thousand, and how many baskets ye took up? Verse 10. Neither the seven loaves of the four thousand, and how many baskets ye took up. As if Christ had said to them, if ye had remembered me, and my power, my works of providence, my former goodness, it were not possible that ye should have distrusted, but in that ye have so little faith, it is evident that ye do not remember me, and what I have done. Truly if at any time we distrust God for the fulfilling of any promise, it is because we do not remember God, we do not remember the faithfulness of God in fulfilling Promises, we do not remember the former experiences we have had of the goodness of God, and of the power of God; O how much distrust is to be found in God's own people? And because there is so much distrust, it is evident that there is little remembrance of God.

Nay further, it appears that God's own people are guilty of this sin, of Forgetting God; Because there is so much coldness and deadness in our hearts to God. O how much deadness in heart and affection in the things of God? What little Love? What poor, weak Breathings after God? What little delight in the Lord? Whence comes all this coldness of heart, this forsaking of our first love? It comes from this root, because we do not Remember God; we do not remember that he is altogether lovely and desireable, we do not remember that his ways are beautiful; there is much deadness and coldness even in God's own people, and therefore there is little remembrance of God.

Nay further, It appears that God's own people are guilty of this sin, because there is so little done for God by them, and so much done against God; so many failings, so many breaches of Covenant, so much scantness, so many haltings and swervings in our walkings with God: Whence is all this? but because we do not remember God, we do not remember what a God he is, we do not remember the Rule that he hath given us to walk by, we do not remember that he will be worshipped in Spirit and in Truth; little is done for God, and that discovers that God is little remembered.

Nay further, How many vain thoughts lodge in the hearts of God's own people? O! How do the current of their thoughts run out to vanity? How many crooked thoughts? How many fruitless, unprofitable, sinful thoughts? How few of the precious thoughts of the heart are spent upon God? And whence is this? But because God is not remembered.

Nay further, How little is God pursued after? How little do we prize Communion with God? How little delight in the presence of God? How little do we seek after the Image of God, and conformity to Christ? Whence is all this? but because we do not remember that the enjoying of God is the souls happiness, and that the enjoying of Christ is the souls perfection: so that by all this it appears, that there is little remembrance of God even among God's own people.

And O what cause have we to take up a sad complaint against ourselves, and everyone to smite upon his own breast, that we should be so negligent of this Duty of remembering God? O what hath God done for many of his people? How many, how dear, how precious are the thoughts of God to his people? Psal. 40. 5. Many, O Lord my God, are thy wonderful works which thou hast done, and thy thoughts which are to us-ward, they cannot be reckoned up in order unto thee: If I would declare and speak of them, they are more then can be numbered. Now that God should spend his precious thoughts upon us, and we spend so few of our choice thoughts upon God, O what an ill requital is this? O what hath God done that he might remember us? He hath graven the names of his people upon the palms of his hands, Isa. 49. 16. Behold, I have graven thee upon the palms of my hands: For a man to be so careful to remember his friend, as to cut his name upon his own flesh, that is love indeed; why God hath graven the names of his people upon the palms of his hands, that so he might remember them: Yea, he hath taken upon him the relation of a Father, and hath the bowels of a Mother; Can a woman forget her sucking child, that she should not have compassion on the son of her womb? Yea, they may forget, yet will I not forget thee. Now Brethren and Christian friends, the consideration of God's remembering us, should make us to be ashamed that we should think no more of him.

But you will say to me, what is there in God that we should remember him?

The Spouse in her description of Christ, saith of him, that he is altogether lovely; so I may say of God, he is altogether worthy to be remembered, in his Nature, in his Essence, in his glorious Eternal Being; He is worthy to be remembered in all his Attributes, his Wisdom, his Power, his Goodness, and Loving Kindness, his Faithfulness, and his Truth, his Omniscency and Omnipresence; He is worthy to be remembered in all his Works, for God he hath done them for that end, that he might be remembered; both the works of Creation, and works of Providence; He is worthy to be remembered in his Word, every word of the Lord is precious as gold that is purified seven times. He is worthy to be remembered especially in his Son; and O that we might spend more of the thoughts of our heart upon God, as he hath revealed himself in his Son; His Name is Glorious, and worthy to be remembered, (Jehovah, our Righteousness.) He is worthy to be remembered in his Love and Free grace, in his Promises, in his everlasting Covenant made with poor creatures in Christ; we need not ask what is in God that we should remember him, look where you will, and there is not anything in God but is worthy of remembrance; and therefore, O that the Lord would stir us up to this duty, to remember the Lord, to spend the precious thoughts of our hearts more upon him. David is a pattern to all you that fear the Lord, he was continually in the remembrance of God, when he looked upon the works of God, he remembered God; and when he looked upon the Providences of God, he remembered God, yea he remembered God in the night season, Psal. 63. 5, 6. My soul shall be satisfied as with marrow and fatness, and my mouth shall praise thee with joyful lips: When I remember thee upon my bed, and meditate on thee in the night watches. David was night and day spending the thoughts of his heart upon God. And let me add something that may provoke and stir us up to the practice of this duty, to Remember God.

First of all, This is the beginning of all good whatsoever; as the Forgetting of God is the mother of all sin, so the Remembering of God is the mother of all good; it is that which will make a man gracious, and act graciously in every condition; if he receive mercy, his heart is carried out in thankfulness; if he be in affliction, he is able to glorify God, and to honor God in the lowest condition.

Secondly, The more we Remember God, the more shall we keep out base lusts and vain thoughts; if the heart be not filled with the thoughts of God, it will be filled with vain thoughts; the memory it is the storehouse of the soul, and if God be not laid up there, that which is evil will be laid up; and therefore when the soul straggles from God, then vain thoughts possess it: The more that you remember God, the less troubled with vain thoughts.

Thirdly, Let me tell you, that there is no comfort nor sweetness like to that comfort that comes into the soul by the Remembrance of God, Psal. 63. 5, 6. My soul shall be satisfied as with marrow and fatness, and my mouth shall praise thee with joyful lips; when I remember thee upon my bed, and meditate on thee in the night watches: It is as high an expression as can be of content and sweet refreshment which David met with in the Remembrance of God. O the sweet comfort and refreshment that comes into a gracious heart in the Remembrance of God.

But you will say, It is not so always, the good man Asaph, he Remembered God, and was troubled, Psal. 77. 3. and therefore this doth discourage many a poor soul to turn to the Remembrance of God: for Asaph he was troubled, perplexed, and terrified with the Remembrance of God.

But I answer, It was the good man's distemper, that he Remembered God and was troubled, and he afterward saw his own mistake, and doth acknowledge it; verse 10. And I said, this is my infirmity, but I will remember the years of the right hand of the most High. What? Did I say that I Remembered God and was troubled? This is my Infirmity: It was not his Remembrance, but his Forgetting of God that did trouble him; he did not Remember God so as he should have done; He did not Remember God in his free grace, in his promises, in his Son; had he thus Remembered God, it would not have been trouble to him; it may be many a poor soul thinks it is trouble to Remember God, but this is a gross mistake, for if we did Remember God as he is held forth in the Gospel, and in his Son, it would be as David saith, marrow and fatness.

Fourthly, The heart being much in the Remembrance of God, it doth ennoble and put a high price upon the thoughts; till then men's thoughts are poor and vain, and no good comes of them; the thoughts of the world perish, the thousand thousand thoughts that are in the heart, if not spent on God, they are all perishing thoughts; Psal. 146. 4. His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth: in that very day his thoughts perish. But now those thoughts that are spent upon God, they are excellent, living, and noble thoughts, thoughts that shall be established forever, thoughts that shall run out into the great Ocean, and never be buried, but you shall meet with them all again. O excellent satisfying thoughts when spent on God!

Fifthly, You that are God's people had need Remember God more, for it is the great difference between the righteous and the wicked; the wicked may do the same works that the righteous man doth, hear, and read, and pray; but all this is without Remembering of God: he knows not God, he trusts not God, he loves not God, he is disobedient to God: it is said of the wicked, God is not in all his thoughts, Psal. 10. 4. The great work of the Gospel is to deal with the thoughts of men, and bring them to a right order, to bring the thoughts of the heart to a subjection to Christ; 2 Cor 10. 45. For the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God, to the pulling down of strong holds, casting down imaginations, and every high thing, that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God, and bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ.

Nay further let me tell you, that this will be the glory, and excellency, and happiness of the Saints in heaven, that they shall remember God continually, and the thoughts of their heart shall be established in the remembrance of it; they shall not turn aside from thinking upon God, they shall have no more vain thoughts, no more idle thoughts, but the thoughts of the heart shall run out to eternity in the remembrance of him, and never forget him more.

Sixthly, The more we Remember God, the more of God shall we meet with in every duty, in every providence, and in every way; there is such a gracious promise in Isa. 64. 5. Thou meetest him that rejoiceth and worketh righteousness, those that remember thee in thy ways: See here the promise is, That he will meet those that remember him in his ways; not to a man that walking outwardly in God's ways, but to him that walketh with God, and that hath the thoughts of his heart spent upon God, it is God that he eyeth, and it is God that he seeks communion with, it is such a soul that God will meet, as doth thus remember him in his ways.

But it may be some poor soul is afraid to look toward God, it cries out. O I am so troubled with vain thoughts, and sinful thoughts, with a dead heart, and a loose heart, and I cannot remember the Lord.

Why if thy soul be turned to the Lord in truth, the Lord will fulfil this his promise; if thou settest about the work, and give up thyself to wain upon God in the Ordinance, thou shalt have communion with him, God will meet thee, and if God meet thee, then thy vain thoughts will vanish.

But may some soul say, my thoughts are worse then vain thoughts, my thoughts are sinful thoughts blasphemous thoughts, which are suggested into my mind even at that time when I should have communion with God, that I dare scarce look toward God, I dare scarce remember him.

Why, yet do not give over thy duty, whatever thoughts should be suggested into thy mind, but know for thy comfort, that those sinful thoughts, and blasphemous thoughts which are cast in by Satan, they shall not be laid to thy charge, if thy soul abhor them; it is true, if the heart did close with them, and nourish them, then they become the souls; but when the soul abhors them, and casts them out, and cries to Christ against them, it is not the souls sin; therefore do not neglect thy duty because of these vain thoughts, but set thy face to seek the Lord, and remember and know that the Lord will make good his word, he will meet thee, and when God meets thee, all these sinful and cursed thoughts shall be cast out. And thus you have heard Brethren, what encouragement there is to remember God.

But you will say, It is a great Duty, and much depends upon it, how shall I be helped to remember God aright?

First, Be often looking upon the Book of the Creature, upon the works of Creation; and look upon them for this very end, that thou mayest Remember God; for there is a Remembrance of God upon all creatures, and if we be wise, we may make a spiritual improvement, and be led to the Remembrance of God, by looking into the Book of the Creature.

Secondly, Look into the Scripture, and consult with that, for there hath God declared his Name, his glorious Name is written in his Word; there are Letters that God hath written with his own hand, God hath subscribed, I Jesus testify these things. There is the hand of God and of Christ in the Book of the Scripture; and therefore if thou wouldest Remember God, converse with the Word of God.

Thirdly, Wait upon God in every Ordinance, for all Ordinances are given for this end, to Remember God; the Word, the Supper, every Ordinance of God is given, that so the soul might see God, and Remember him; and therefore when thou waitest upon God in any Ordinance, let this be the end that thou propoundest to thy soul, to Remember God.

Fourthly, Lay up all the Love-tokens of God; Whatever Experience thou hast met with from God in making supply to thy wants, comforting of thee, supporting of thee, these are tokens that come from God; and the mercy that he showeth thee, it is for this end, that thou mayest Remember him; and therefore lay up all the experiences that thou hast met withal, for they will help thee to Remember God.

Fifthly, Labor to get your hearts established and assured in the Knowledge of God's love to thee, that thou mayest come to the knowledge of this, that God is thy Friend, thy Father, thy nearest and dearest relation; for the more the soul knows this, the more it will Remember God. It is not possible that a child should forget a loving Father, that a Wife should forget a loving and tender Husband. O when a soul comes to know this, that God is my Father, my Husband, this will help the soul to a sweet Remembrance of God.

Sixthly, Look up to the Lord to increase thy love to him; for the more love to God, the more thou wilt Remember God; but where there is little love to God, there is little Remembrance of God; and the reason that men Remember God no more, is, because there is so little love in their hearts towards God; If a man loved his friend, he would Remember him, and not forget him; O therefore be ashamed that no more love should be sparkling in thy heart to God, when so much love is flaming in the heart of Christ towards thee. And therefore Brethren beg it of the Lord that he would shed abroad more of his love in your hearts, and blow up thy spark to a flame, that thy soul may be filled with a constant Remembrance of him.

Seventhly, Ure thy soul to holy meditation, and thinking upon God last at night, and first in the morning, it will be a great help to keep up a constant Remembrance of God in the soul: O let thy waking thoughts be toward the Lord; Think of his Works of his Attributes, of his Son:

there is enough for men to spend millions of thoughts upon, and therefore let some be spent upon God: as soon as man wakes in the morning, there are a multitude of thoughts strive who shall get in first, there stands God, and Christ, and the World, and they which get in first, have a great advantage to keep in the soul all the day long; if the world gets in first, the heart is made worldly; but when God and Christ is let in first, the heart is kept in a gracious frame all the day long; and the more that your meditations are spent upon God, the more Remembrance will you have of God.

And now Brethren you have seen your duty, and your neglect of duty, for which you have cause to be humbled; and we have seen what cause we have to Remember God, and what a great benefit comes in by Remembering God; and we have seen what may be helpful to our souls in this duty. Now let us look to the Spirit of the Lord to make them helps; for we have need of all helps, till we shall come where the soul shall Remember God perpetually, and never forget him.

Heb. 6. 19.

Which hope we have as an Anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast, and which entereth into that within the Vail.

THE Apostle in the eighteenth verse speaking of the hope that is set before Believers, and of their fleeing for refuge to lay hold upon the hope set before them; He takes occasion to speak of that hope that is begotten and raised in the hearts of all Believers by the hope of Christ.

In verse 18. He speaks of the Object of Hope. Christ, he is the hope set before believers; but in this 19th verse, he speaks of the grace of hope, which hope we have as an Anchor to the soul, both sure and steadfast; this is spoken of the grace of Hope, which is the sister of Faith: And this Hope it differs from Faith thus; Faith looks unto God and Christ in the Promises, it looks unto the word of the Lord that is given for its security, and it is the work of Faith to close with the Word, and to hold fast the word of promise, which the Lord Jesus doth hand out to poor souls. But Hope, that looks to the good things promised, and it waits for the good things that are laid up in the promises, Hope eyes them, and waits for the full possession and fruition of that which is laid up in the promise, and when the soul shall enjoy all those good things laid up in the promises, then Hope shall cease.

Now that we may understand the nature of saving Hope, and the use of it, he sets it forth to us by a Metaphor of an Anchor; which hope we have as an Anchor to the soul, both sure and steadfast: Hope it is of that use to the soul, that an Anchor is to a Ship; as an Anchor is to stay the Ship at Sea, that it may arrive safe in the midst of all storms, and not be carried upon the sands, and so broken to pieces; of that use is Hope to the believing soul, as an Anchor is to the Ship: And therefore the Apostle doth intimate to us these two things.

First, That the soul of a Believer is compared to a ship at sea.

Secondly, The hope of a Believer is compared to an: Anchor. Which hope we have as an Anchor &c.

The soul is the Ship, and Hope, that is the Anchor of the Ship; yea, it is a most excellent Anchor; and he sets forth the excellency of it by divers expressions, it is an Anchor of the soul, and it is sure and steadfast, and which entereth into that <1 page missing> eye of God; the Lord hath a hand in ruling them, the sea, though boisterous, yet it is before the Throne.

And further, it is a Sea of glass like unto crystal; there is held forth what this world is before the Lord, it is glass, and it is transparent, even as crystal; to the eye of God the world lies open, and he sees everything that is done in it: In a crystal glass the least more and spot is seen by the eye of man; so the world before the Lord, and to the eye of the Lord, 'tis like to a crystal glass, though the world in itself be never so muddy, and never so filthy, yet the Lord sees all, he sees that which is at the bottom of the sea; he sees into the bottom of men's hearts, he sees into the bottom of every man's actions and intentions, there is not anything in any man's spirit and conversation but it is clear before the Lord, he sees it as thorough crystal.

Thus you see it confirmed by Scripture, that this world it is as the Sea, and a believing soul that is in the world, he is upon a sea, as a ship upon the sea.

But I shall show you first, In what respect the world is as a Sea to a believing soul.

Secondly, That every Believer is as a ship upon this sea.

First of all, In what respect the world is as the Sea. Why,

First of all, The sea is no place to dwell upon; no man builds upon the sea: the sea is only for passage to pass over unto another land, it is for transportation from one country to another, but no man dwells upon the sea. Truly so is this world the world is not to be continued in, it is not for you to abide long in, you are not to dwell here, it were the fondest thing in the world to think of building a house upon the sea; truly so fond a thing is it to imagine to continue here long, yet how deeply is this rooted in the heart of man, and how little do they think that they are passing over the sea into another world, how little is this thought upon and remembered? The Saints of old they have confessed, that they were Pilgrims and strangers here, and that they had here no abiding City, but they looked for one to come, whose Builder and Maker is God, Heb. 11. 10, 13.

God's people are not at home here, this is no place to dwell in; here are Tents, but no abiding City, there is no Mansion here upon the sea of this world, the mansions are in heaven, In my fathers house are many Mansions, saith Christ, John 14. 2. And it is made as a discovery of an unsound Heart, the description of a wicked man, that he dreams of continuance here, and doth not look upon the world as a Sea, Psal. 49. 11. Their inward thought is, that their houses shall continue forever, and their dwelling places to all generations; they call their lands after their own names.

Verse 12. Nevertheless, man being in honor, abideth not, he is like the Beasts that perish.

Verse 13. This their way is their folly.

It is folly to think of continuing here, the sea is no place to dwell in, neither is this world any place to dwell in.

Secondly, The Sea is a most inconstant place, the waves of the Sea are full of inconstancy, full of Instability; a great deal of instability is also in the things of this world: The sea it is never constant, it is always in some troubled motion, there is no rest in the Sea, the waters they are rising and falling, ebbing and flowing, it is continually in an unsettled condition: Truly thus is the world, and all the things of the world, they are full of instability, there is nothing here that continueth: He that had experience of all these things, cries out, Vanity of vanity; that was the best he found in the world, and in the comforts of the world; it is an unsettled condition that God's own people are in while upon earth, there is nothing that doth continue long, all things vanish, and are gone in a moment, there is as much instability in all things here below, as in the waves of the Sea; See what the Wiseman saith, Eccles. 1. 4. and so on, One generation passeth away, and another cometh.

Verse 5. The Sun also ariseth, and the Sun goeth down, and hasteth to the place where he arose.

Verse 6. The wind goeth toward the South, and turneth about unto the North, it whirlleth about continually, and the wind returneth again according to his circuits.

Verse 7. All the Rivers run into the Sea, yet the Sea is not full.

And so it may be said of all the comforts of this world, they are very unstable; yea man himself he is full of instability, he never continues in one stay, even the best of men; sometimes he is up, and sometimes down; abundance of instability in their spirits and conversations, in their comforts and enjoyments; in everything like to the wave of the Sea.

Thirdly, The Sea is a Raging enemy, it is full of rage; they that are upon the sea, they meet with nothing but tossing up and down: What a mighty combustion is there in the waves of the Sea, especially when the four winds do rise upon it? O how troublesome is the Sea then? Psal. 107. 26, 27.

Verse 26. They mount up to the heaven, they go down again to the depths, their soul is melted because of trouble.

Verse 27. They reel to and fro, and stagger like a drunken man, and are at their wits end.

Truly thus it is with the state of God's people while in the earth, it is their portion to be tossed up and down, even as upon the waves of the Sea. Joh cries out of his tossings to and fro, Job 7. 4. When I lie down, I say, When shall I arise, and the night be gone? And I am full of tossings to and fro unto the dawning of the day: O what perplexities do God's people meet withal both in their outward and inward man, sometimes lifted up, and sometimes cast down? Thou hast lifted me up (saith David) and cast me down, Psal. 102. 10. So Jonah, he was lifted up, he had communion with God, and by and by cast down into the bottom of the Sea. O what a raging enemy is the Sea, when the four winds strive upon it? Truly there are dangerous winds that do stir up the rage of this Sea, and make this world so boisterous to God's own people: The devil raiseth a wind, yea sometimes all the four winds strive together; temptations of all sorts, as Christ was exercised with, so are the people of God: The devil raiseth many a cross wind to drive them back again, that if possible, they might not look toward God and Christ: And there are winds that do arise out of their own bowels, many times the wind of manifold corruptions disturb, the wind of passion, the wind of pride, the wind of vanity, the wind of unbelief; and O what disturbances do these winds make that do arise out of their own bowels? There is such a combustion, that the poor soul is forced to run to Christ, and cry out, O Lord, rebuke these disturbers: And if Christ should not arise to rebuke them, the soul would be over-set by them; such is the rage of this Sea when the winds strive upon it.

Fourthly, The Sea is full of sands, and dangerous splitting Rocks. Truly so is this world, there is the rock of persecution, and many a goodly ship is split upon that rock; there is the rock of offenses, many are offended at the ways of Christ, and offended at the people of Christ, and so split upon that rock.

This world is full of rocks, and full of Sands; it is true, if Christ be in the ship, the passengers shall not be lost, though the ship may be split, and all the burden of the ship may be loft. The Saints that have been split upon the rock of persecution, they have lost all their comforts, and their lives too (for the Name of Christ) in the Sea of this world; but though they have lost their ship, the body, and all their loading, yet their souls have been saved, and are arrived safe in heaven.

Fifthly, The Sea is full of Pirates and Robbers: The world is not without these dangers to God's own people; there are many robbers that lie in wait to rob and take away all their loading; the devil lies in wait to take away from the people of God all their precious loading that they have been trading for, but they shall carry it home to heaven in spite of all the devils in hell; yea, their own hearts are robbers and pirates, & a man's own heart will do him more hurt than all his enemies beside, a vain heart, a worldly heart, a frothy heart, an unbelieving heart, these would rob us of all our comforts whatsoever, and take away all the loading that is precious; but the Lord Jesus he is Commander of the Sea, and he is nigh with a Convoy, and he will guard every believing soul through all these robbers, and carry them safe to heaven.

Sixthly, The waters of the Sea are very salt and brackish, no man can drink the Sea water without prejudice: Even so is this world, and the comforts of it, they are all salt and bitter, and it is not possible that they should satisfy and quench the thirst of any poor soul. How many men do deceive themselves, they think that the world should satisfy their desire, and therefore their desires are so eager after the world, but they shall find another day that they are in an error; the waters of the Sea cannot quench their thirst; a gracious heart will say so, and he knows it by experience, that it is better for him to drink of the waters of life; and therefore he cries out, Lord, these are all sour waters, yea the best comforts have some mixture of salt and bitterness; Lord, give me evermore to drink of those waters of life that run at thy right hand for evermore: It is true the men of this world that know no better, they drink freely of this salt water, because they know not what sweet waters are; but that soul that hath tasted of the sweetness of Christ, and how good the Lord is, that soul cannot be satisfied with all the comforts of this life, but looks only to Christ, that he may satisfy his desire. And so you have seen in these six particulars, that this world to a believing soul is as the Sea. That's the first.

But secondly, Every Believer is as a ship upon this Sea, they are making of a Voyage over the Sea of this world to the Land of Promise, they are set forth from the world, and from sin, and they are bound to the Land of Promise; that's the state of every Believer, he is as a ship upon the Sea. Indeed Christ is the Builder of this ship, Christ is the Owner of this ship, it is Christ that launcheth the ship, and that loads the ship, all the precious Commodities that a believing soul is carrying home with him, it is Christ's; he hath the great Venture in every believing soul, and if it should miscarry, Christ should have the greatest loss, for he hath the greatest Venture in the ship; and because the Venture is Christ's, therefore Christ will go Master in the ship; his presence shall be with his people all the time of their continuance upon the face of this earth, he will not leave them till he hath brought them into the Haven of rest.

But I shall follow the Metaphor in two particulars, briefly thus. First, The Ship at Sea cannot move without a Wind. Secondly, It cannot rest without an Anchor.

First, A ship at sea cannot move without a wind. Many times it lies a long time for a wind, and when the wind blows, then the ship moves, but it cannot move without a wind; and truly so it is with the souls of God's people, they cannot move without a wind, they are bound for heaven, but they cannot move the least without the spirit of Christ, though they have never so many opportunities, and never so many Ordinances and Promises, yet if the Spirit of Christ doth not help the soul forward, the soul is becalmed, and cannot move: It is true, the ship at sea may be ready, they may turn the Sails to the Windward, but not move till the wind blow; and so a believing soul may do something when once the Spirit of Christ is in it, the soul may stand waiting for Christ, and be breathing after Christ, but till the Spirit of Christ shall breath upon the soul, and fill the sails of the soul, it is not possible that it should rid any way: And therefore the people of God have found, that it hath been for their advantage to cry out for the breathings of the Spirit of Christ; so the Spouse in Cant 4. 16. Awake, O North wind, and come thou South, Blow upon my Garden, that the Spices thereof may flow out. But

Secondly, The ship cannot rest without an Anchor; no more can any poor soul rest without this Anchor of Hope; this anchor of hope is that which stays the soul upon God, and keeps up the soul that it faint not, and sink not; It is true indeed (as the Apostle saith) If our hopes were only in this life, we were of all men most miserable; If we had not a better hope and anchor then the men of this world have, that have only hope for the things of this life. But this saving Hope, which is the sister of Faith, that looks to the good things laid up in the Promise, it is that which stays the soul, and keeps it safe and steadfast in the midst of all storms whatsoever: If a ship lie at Anchor, it may ride safe at midnight, though never so dark; And truly that soul that hath cast anchor upon Christ, it may ride safe in the darkest time, in the saddest condition that can befall it, while upon the face of the earth, this great Sea; If a ship hath a good anchor, she rideth safe in the midst of the greatest raging sea, though the winds rise, though the waves be never so high: This anchor of hope it causeth a soul to ride safe in the midst of all temptations; Hope keeps the heart up, Rom. 5. 2. By whom also we have access by faith into this grace wherein we stand, and rejoice in the hope of the glory of God.

Verse 3. And not only so, but we glory in tribulations also, knowing that tribulation worketh patience.

Verse 4. And patience, experience; and experience, hope.

Because we have this hope, therefore we rejoice in tribulation, in the midst of all storms we rejoice; we can sing for joy, as Paul and Silas did at midnight, because we have Hope for our anchor, our ship shall ride safe in the midst of this Sea.

But for Application, briefly.

First of all, It lets us see the misery of all men out of Christ; they that are without Christ, are without hope; the Apostle puts them together, Eph. 2. 12. That at that time ye were without Christ, being aliens from the Commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the Covenants of Promise; having no hope, and without God in the world. They that have no Interest in Christ, have no hopes to do their souls good another day; they may have the hope of the hypocrite, that is like the spiders web that will perish; but they have no true, solid, well-grounded hope.

It is a sad condition for a ship to be at sea, and have no Anchor; wicked men are at sea as well as God's people, and if you have no anchor of hope to stay your souls when storms shall arise, and the wrath of God arise against you, how sad will your conditions be? And truly thus it is with the greatest part of the men of the world, their condition is sad, though they do not lay it to heart; their ship is at sea, tossed up and down, and have no anchor: Every man out of Christ, either he hath no hope, no anchor; or secondly, if he hath hope, his hope is not sure and steadfast, it is no firm hope; or thirdly, his hope is not cast upon a good ground; and if so, it is not possible that the ship should be safe when the storms arise; for it is a very rotten place that most men out of Christ do cast the anchor of their hopes upon; most men cast their anchor downward, but this anchor of hope must be cast upward; it never takes place when it is cast downward, it hath no ground to fasten upon.

But when it is cast within the Vail, it takes hold upon the rock, upon God, and Christ, and the Promise, that is more sure then heaven and earth; but most men cast their anchor downward, their hopes is for the things of this life, and that hope will not hold.

And some cast the anchor of their hope upon themselves, and that is a poor ground to cast this anchor upon; the anchor of most men that live under the Gospel, that are not brought home to Christ, their Anchor is cast upon themselves, upon some works, some duties, some performances, upon something that they have done; truly this is a rotten ground, and this hope will not stand you instead: there is no anchor will hold but that which is cast upward within the Vail, therefore dear friends, I beseech you examine whether you have that anchor that will hold, have you this hope that is cast within the Vail? O! that God would cause you to look after this hope, you will not trust your bodies at Sea in a ship that hath no anchor, you will say it is as much as your lives are worth if a storm should arise: Will you not trust your bodies where there is no anchor, and will you trust your souls where there is no anchor? Yet this is the folly of thousands, those that are called Professors, they will trust their souls at sea without an anchor. Alas! What will they do when the storms shall arise, when, when the wrath of God shall arise, what will you do? O! that God would cause you to come to Christ, that you may have this anchor that is sure and steadfast. That's the first.

Secondly, Let not God's people wonder that they meet with storms, temptations, trials, and afflictions, and at the rage of men against you: Why, you are like a Ship at Sea, and a ship at Sea hath prepared for a storm, if the waves do beat upon them, they are prepared for it, they are tossed up and down the sea, and yet they hope they shall come to land: And therefore you that fear the Lord, do not wonder at your temptations and trials, and that the wrath of men is against you, this is the place for storms, heaven is the place of rest; the Lord by this would embitter the world to you, he will make you know that the world is bitter, and that heaven is sweet; O! How sweet will heaven be when the soul shall come out of the midst of great storms, and dark nights, and many perplexities of spirits, many tossings in their conditions, both outward and inward; the Lord by these storms will make heaven very sweet unto you; heaven is the place of rest, though this be the place of trouble, and therefore do not wonder at it. That's the second.

Thirdly, What a mercy is it that God's people are kept and preserved any moment; It is a mercy to be kept at sea, every man will say so; but especially to be kept and preserved when the sea rages, there is no heart almost so hard, but will be affected with such a mercy, to be kept in the midst of a storm, when they expect to make their grave in the deeps, this is a wonder; and O what a mercy is it that God's people are kept in this tempestuous world; it is a wonder that your bodies are not broken, and that your spirits are not broken, and that your comforts are not broken, when so many winds strive upon the face of the earth, this sea; it is a great mercy to be kept, and therefore acknowledge it to the praise of God; it doth appear, and the Lord doth make it evident, that the sea is before the Throne. If the sea were not before the Throne of God; God's people should be swallowed up every moment, the rage of men and of devils would swallow them up; but the sea is before the Throne, before the eye of God; and therefore wonder that you are safe in this raging sea.

Fourthly, It calls upon you that are the Lord's people to watch and pray, for you are at sea; he that will not pray in a storm, he will never pray, the worst of men will pray hard in a storm: The heathen Mariners, Jonah 1. 5. Then the Mariners were afraid, and cried every man unto his god: therefore there is a Proverb, That men go to Sea to learn to pray: Truly, the Lord sends his people to sea for this end, that he might learn you to pray and cry mightily to him; the Saints shall not need to pray when they come in heaven, there all their desires shall be satisfied, and they shall want nothing, and therefore no need to pray: But the Lord he sends you into the sea of this world, that he might learn you to pray, and he raises many storms for this end, that so you might cry mightily to the Lord: The Disciples when in a storm, they cried, Lord, save us, we perish: Brethren, you are at sea, in the midst of storms, and therefore you had need watch, and pray, and cry mightily, that you may be delivered from temptations, and saved in the midst of your fears, and be delivered from the Rocks, and the Sands, and from Pirates, & enemies, many dangers you are in, & therefore remember what Christ saith unto his Disciples, Watch, and pray, that you enter not into temptation.

Fifthly, Engage the presence of Christ with you: If Christ be in the ship, all is safe; you had need engage the presence of Christ with you every moment, for it is a dangerous sea you are in, and if Christ be not with you, you will be split upon some sand or other; and therefore, O beg the presence of Christ, do not set forward in any duty, without the presence of Christ, Do not sail one League without the presence of Christ, but urge it before the Lord that you are upon a troublesome sea where there are so many dangers, and desire of God that the presence of Christ may be with you; for if Christ be with you, all will be safe.

Sixthly, You that are the Lord's people, do you open the sails of your souls to the breathings of the Spirit of Christ; If you would make a Voyage to heaven, know that you can do nothing till the Spirit of Christ breaths in you; indeed, you may turn the sails of your souls that way, and be waiting for the Spirit of Christ, but till the Spirit breathe in you, you cannot sail one League: but O what a comfortable Voyage shall you make, when the Spirit of Christ shall fill your hearts with holy motions, and carry you Godward, and heavenward, therefore wait for those breathings of the Spirit; as the Spouse in Cant. 4. 16. Awake O North wind, and come thou South, blow upon my Garden, that the Spices thereof may flow out. And so do you, beg of God that the Spirit of Christ may breathe upon you, and fill the sails of your souls, that you may be carried heavenward: Open your souls to the breathings of the Spirit of Christ, and that is the way to make a comfortable Voyage.

Seventhly, You that are the Lord's people, if you be Christ's ship at Sea, look for good Loading, be not content to go home empty; Christians should labor to be filled with the Spirit, to be loaden with the fruits of Righteousness; this the Lord calls for; truly it is a dangerous Voyage that you make, and therefore you had need be loaden with rich Commodities, you had need seek after much of that durable riches that abides forever; the Lord does not love that the ship should come home empty: O that you that fear the Lord would remember that you have but once to pass over the sea of this world, and then there is an end forever, and therefore do not return empty, but O go and beg of the Lord, that he would fill you with the fruits of righteousness, that you may go home loaden with Faith and Righteousness, so shall you be an honor to God, and there will be much joy in heaven when you come home.

Eighthly, It is a word of much comfort to those that fear the Lord, and have an Interest in Christ; know, though you be at sea, and meet with many storms, yet you need not fear, you have an Anchor that will hold, it being cast upon a sure ground, your Anchor it is entered, it is fastened upon the Father's free grace, and the Son's everlasting Righteousness, which is sure and steadfast; and if so, do not fear though storms arise, it shall go well with you, for Christ is the owner of the ship, and he will go Master in the ship, and so long as the presence of Christ is with you, you may be comforted, whatever you meet with. If Christ be in the ship, he will rebuke the wind and the waves, yea he will tread upon the proud boisterous waves that his people meet with; yea, and he will make his people also to tread upon them too; and therefore fear not, for Christ is the Master of the ship, he is with you, the Loading also is Christ's and (as I said before) you need not fear splitting, and losing your Loading, for then Christ should lose more then you: If thy soul should be lost at Sea, then Christ should lose his honor, and his honor is more to him, then thy soul to thee; and therefore let all God's people be comforted in the midst of all storms, and trials, persecutions, afflictions, and sufferings; though this world be a Sea, and an evil sea, a troublesome sea, yet be comforted; for though the ship of the body may be split, and all your outward Loading may be lost, yet so long as Christ is the Owner of the ship, so long as Christ is in the ship, so long as the Anchor of the ship is cast in heaven, there is not one passenger shall be lost; for though the outward man be lost, yet the soul shall be saved in the day of Christ.

I now come to consider what is the Use and the Excellency of this Grace of Hope. It is an Anchor sure and steadfast, though it is not always sure to sense, not always sure in apprehension. The hope of the Saints may have its shakings, and it may seem sometimes to be cut off in their apprehensions, but it is sure and steadfast in respect of the ground of it, in respect of that sure hold it hath upon God and Christ, it hath sure hold upon that which is within the Vail. And it is sure in respect of the event of it; The Event and Issue of a Believers hope is always sure, it can no more be disappointed of his hope, then the foundation of his hope (which is Christ) can be overturned; but that which a believing soul hath in hope, it is as sure as if he had it in hand already. Lo, This is our God, we have waited for him, and he will save us, saith the Church.

The Doctrine then is this, That the believing soul hath Hope for a sure and steadfast Anchor.

Or thus, This Grace of Hope it is a sure and steadfast Anchor to every believing heart.

It is plain in the Text, Which hope we have as an Anchor both sure and steadfast.

In the handling of this Point, I shall show you, First, What this Hope is.

Secondly, Make it out to you, That this Hope is the souls Anchor.

Thirdly, That this Anchor of the soul is sure and steadfast. And that will make way for Application.

First of all, Our work is to enquire, What this Hope is. You may take this description of it.

It is the work of the spirit of Christ upon the heart, whereby it is raised in expectation of those good things that faith believes, and which God hath promised.

We shall open the parts of it, that we may come to know what this saving Hope is, that is the Anchor of a believing soul.

And first of all you have the efficient cause of this hope, and that is the Spirit of Christ, it is not all the world that can raise a poor dejected heart to hope in God, it is not all the comforts of the world, nor comforters in the world, that can make any poor drooping heart to cast this Anchor of Hope in heaven; and therefore when the Apostle doth describe the condition of Natural men, he saith of them, That they are without God, without Christ, and without Hope. This is the state of every man by Nature, he hath not the least dram of saving hope, till the Spirit of Christ come to work upon the heart. And therefore God is called the God of Hope, Rom. 15. 13. Now the God of hope fill you with all joy and peace in believing, that you may abound in hope, through the power of the holy Ghost. Here you see the efficient cause, it is the work of God to raise up the heart to hope in himself, and it is the Spirit of Christ that must cause the soul to abound in hope; That you may abound in hope, through the power of the holy Ghost. And in Psal. 22. speaking there in the person of Christ, he confesseth that it was his Father that did cause him to hope, Psal. 22. 9. But thou art he that took me out of the womb, thou didst make me hope when I was upon my mothers breasts. It was thou Lord that didst cause me to hope. God only is the efficient cause.

Secondly, For the Formal Cause of this Hope, we said it is an Expectation of the soul, it takes its rise from faith, what faith believeth, that hope expects, and waits upon God for the fulfilling of; It is an Expectation of the heart.

Now this Expectation it is, First, A patient Expectation.

Secondly, An ardent Expectation.

Thirdly, A confident Expectation. All which do express the Nature of saving Hope.

First of all, It is a Patient Expectation, it causeth the soul to wait patiently for the fulfilling of the Promise, to sit down at the feet of Christ, and wait, even all its days, for the fulfilling of the Promise; and therefore saith the Apostle, Heb. 10. 36. For you have need of patience, that after you have done the Will of God, you may inherit the Promise. As if he should say, your hope will not hold out, if you have not patience, God hath given you a promise, but God doth not presently fulfil the promise; and therefore that you may hope till the Promise be fulfilled, you have need of patience; and truly, Hope is nothing else but Patience lengthened out. It is a patient Expectation. Secondly, It is an Ardent Expectation; What the believing soul doth hope for, it is earnestly carried out after; it is such an expectation as doth make the soul exceedingly Intent, and cause it to look every way, round about, for the fulfilling of that which it hopes for; it is an earnest expectation: The Apostle speaks in Rom. 8. 19, 20, 21.

Verse 19. For the earnest expectation of the creature, waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God.

Verse 20. For the creature was made subject to vanity, not willingly, but by reason of him who hath subjected the same in hope.

Verse 21. Because the creature also shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption, into the glorious liberty of the children of God.

The whole creation hath a hope to be delivered from that bondage which the sin of man brought upon it; and because there is a hope, there is an earnest expectation, and the earnest expectation waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God. And truly where there is saving hope, it will cause the soul to look after the fulfilling of the Promise, it waits earnestly, and groans earnestly for the fulfilling of those Promises that it waits for: It is an ardent expectation.

Thirdly, It is a Confident Expectation; though indeed it is true, the hope of the best Saints may flag, yet when hope doth work like itself, and act like itself, it acts confidently; it is accompanied with holy confidence and boldness toward God; when hope is strengthened, then it acts confidently, and confidence is nothing else then hope strengthened; That is the second particular. You have seen the efficient and formal cause of this hope.

Thirdly, What is the Object of this Hope? I told you that it was an expectation of those good things that God hath promised; what God hath promised, that hope looks for the fulfilling of, all outward comforts that are needful refreshments in their way; (Protection, Deliverance, Assistance, the Increase of Grace, and the Carrying on of the work of God in the heart) whatever is laid up in the Promise, that hope waits for the fulfilling of; but more especially, the Object of a Believers hope it is Eternal Life, Tit. 1. 2. In hope of Eternal Life, which God that cannot lie, promised before the world began. And in Tit. 3. 7. That being justified by his grace, we should be made Heirs, according to the hope of Eternal Life. So that Eternal life is the Object of a Believers hope.

Fourthly, We have the concomitant of Hope, and that is Faith; It is an expectation of those good things which faith believes that God hath promised; so you see how Hope stands towards Faith, they are twins, as it were, they are born and brought forth together; Faith is the Elder sister, faith believes that the promise is true, and hope looks for the fulfilling of the Promise, because faith believes it; They grow up together, they are nourished together, and they flourish together, and they languish together; when faith is sick, hope is infirm, and when faith is lively, hope is active; yea, they will expire together: when a believing soul shall come into the bosom of Christ, no need of faith and hope. Faith that looks to the truth of the promise, and hope looks to the good of the promise, that is the difference between faith and hope; Faith closes with the Promise because it is true, and Hope that cleaves to it, and expects the fulfilling of it, because it is a suitable good which God hath promised; so that by the opening of this description of hope, you may in part see what that hope is which will be as an Anchor to a man's soul; That's the first particular.

But secondly, I shall make it out unto you, that this hope is the Anchor of the soul; and I shall show you that it is of the same use to the soul that the Anchor is to the ship.

First of all, The Anchor is useful in time of storms, the Anchor doth keep the ship from being driven up and down with various winds; if it were not for the Anchor, the ship would sometimes be carried back again after it hath gone a great way in its Voyage: of the same use is Hope to a believing soul, it is exceeding useful in time of temptation, when contrary winds blow, even such winds as would drive the soul back again, if it were not for the Anchor of Hope: It is said of Christ, That for the joy that was set before him, he endured the Cross, despised the shame; and that we bear up against the strong winds of temptation, and against all the discouragements that we meet with, it is by this Anchor of Hope; if it were not for the hope of joy and glory in heaven, it were not possible that a soul should bear up against so many winds of temptation.

Secondly, The Anchor keeps the ship from tossing: When the waves roar, the Anchor is then exceeding useful, it keeps the ship from being removed; for though it may be moved, yet not removed, because the Anchor is sure; though the waves rise never so high, and be never so boisterous, yet if they cast Anchor, the Mariners lay them down to sleep, they are secure, because they have cast Anchor. And of that use is this Grace of hope to a believing soul, the waves many times rise high, afflictions, persecutions, David complains of it, Psal. 38. 12. They also that seek after my life, lay snares for me; and they that seek my hurt, speak mischievous things, and imagine deceit all the day long.

Verse 13. But I, as a deaf man, heard not; and I was as a dumb man that openeth not his mouth.

Verse 15. For in thee, O Lord, do I hope, Thou wilt hear, O Lord my God. I was not moved by this (saith he) I cast anchor in thee, O Lord In thee O Lord, do I hope, thou wilt hear me, O Lord my God: He cast Anchor in God, and then he lies down and rests: And so in Psal. 42. There were many waves that did rise very high in his own spirit, and what doth he do? Why, he casts anchor in God, as in verse 11. Why art thou cast down, O my soul? And why art thou disquieted within me? Hope thou in God, for I shall yet praise him, who is the health of my countenance, and my God▪ Hope still in God, cast thy Anchor there, and then rest, for I shall yet see the time to praise him, I shall overcome all storms, and shall live to see a c•lm and therefore O my soul cast anchor in God, hope thou in God.

Thirdly, The Anchor keeps the ship from splitting many times upon the sands and rocks; when they are very near danger, almost running upon a rock, the casting out of an Anchor sometimes doth deliver them. Hope is of the same use to a believing soul, it keeps the poor soul from splitting upon many discouraging rocks that are in the way to heaven, Psal. 27. 13. I had fainted, unless I had believed to see the goodness of the Lord in the Land of the living: If it had not been for the Anchor of hope, I had split, I had fainted, and my soul had been split, but I believed to see the goodness of the Lord in the land of the living; the anchor of hope, it is that which keeps the soul from splitting upon the rocks.

Fourthly, The anchor keeps the ship close to the place where the Anchor is cast, that it shall not be removed far from that place; so the grace of hope in this respect is also useful, it keeps the heart close to God and Christ, that is the benefit of this anchor of hope: the men of the world that have not hope in Christ, they live at a great distance from God and Christ, they dwell at a great distance from heaven, they are far from God; God is not in all their thoughts, because they have not this Anchor of hope; if the anchor of their hope were cast in heaven, it were not possible that their souls should be at a distance from God; the more there is hope, the more nigher God; it is want of this lively hope that men are so far from God. That's the fourth.

Fifthly, The Anchor is made sure by a Cable that is fastened to it; and so the hope of a believing soul will do no good without a Cable, now this Cable it is the word of Promise, it is the sure word of the Lord that keeps the soul fast. If a Ship have a hundred anchors at Sea, if they be not fastened to a Cable, they will do no good: and truly so is hope if it hath not a Cable; if men pretend to have hope, and that hope not fastened upon the word of the Lord, so fast as it is cast, it will be lost. But the hope of a believing soul is fastened upon the word of the Lord, the promise of the Lord, and therefore it will hold.

Sixthly, The Seaman casts his Anchor at a venture, he doth not know whether his anchor will reach the bottom or no, he doth not know whether his Cable be long enough, or whether his anchor will take hold or no, and he doth not know whether his anchor will hold when it hath taken hold, yet notwithstanding all, he makes a venture when he hath need to cast his anchor: and so it is with a believing soul, when a soul comes first to God, he makes a desperate venture, he sees his faith is weak, and his hope weak, and he doth not know whether it will take hold of the rock or no, will not my expectation fail? All this is objected, but the believing soul makes a venture, faith is given, and it makes a venture, he sees that there lies a necessity upon it, if I do not cast anchor, I perish, the winds blow hard, and I see a rock before me, a gulf, and if I do not cast anchor, I perish, and if I cast anchor, it may be my anchor will hold, I have an invitation to it; Who is among you that walketh in darkness, and sees no light, let him trust in the Lord, and stay upon his God, Isa. 50. 10. though it be in a storm at midnight; let him cast anchor upon me (saith God) let him trust in the Name of the Lord, and stay upon his God; this the poor soul hears, and being encouraged by the Word of the Lord, it cast anchor, and makes a desperate venture. That's the sixth.

Seventhly, The anchor is useful, not only in a storm, but the anchor is useful in a calm, when the ship at Sea is be calmed, and cannot sail, they cast anchor; and so this anchor of hope it is needful in a calm, for if it were not for this anchor of hope, a believing soul could not have any settlement in a calm, though a man hath never so much for the present, if he hath not hopes that his goods shall be increased, his heart will be disquieted; and so hope is useful in the greatest calm, to hope that the present good that they have shall not be lost, that that measure of grace and spirit that the Lord hath given them, shall be carried on from one degree to another, till he hath perfected it; if it were not for this, the heart could not have any peace in the greatest of his enjoyments. And thus you have seen the second particular.

First, I have shewn you what saving hope is.

Secondly, That this saving hope is the Anchor of the soul.

The third and last particular is, To show you that this anchor of a believing soul is sure and steadfast: And it will appear in these few particulars.

First, It is made of good mettle, it is that which will not bow nor break, it is not as the hope of an hypocrite; the hope of an hypocrite is compared to a spiders web, that breaks presently; the spiders web it is a poor thing to hold a ship fast in a storm; but this saving Hope that the Spirit of Christ doth work in the heart of believers, it is made of good mettle, it was not digged out of their own bowels, but fetched from Christ, it is Christ that is the storehouse of all grace, it is made of gold, of tried gold, Their faith is more precious then gold, saith the Apostle, and so their hope is more precious then gold, and more firm and solid then gold, the matter of it is sure and steadfast.

Secondly, It is well wrought, and therefore it must needs be sure and steadfast, for it is an anchor of Christ's own working; The God of hope sill you with all joy and peace in believing, that you may abound in hope, through the power of the holy Ghost, Rom. 15. 13. and saith the Apostle Peter, 1 Pet. 1. 3. Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which according to his abundant mercy hath begotten us again to a lively hope, by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead: The hope of the Saints it is a grace that is of God's own begetting, it is an anchor of Christ's own making, and that which comes out of the hand of Christ, must needs be sure and steadfast.

Thirdly, It is sure and steadfast, for the Cable that holds it is sure and steadfast, and that is the Word of the Lord; now the Word of the Lord, which is the Cable that a believers hope is fastened unto, it is twisted of many precious promises, all being twisted together, must needs be strong, the least of them is stronger then heaven and earth; Heaven and earth shall pass, but not one jot or tittle of the word of the Lord shall fail, till all be fulfilled. The promises they are the cable which a believing souls anchor is fastened unto, and therefore it is sure and steadfast.

Fourthly, It is cast upon a sure ground. What is the ground that a believers hope is cast upon. I answer,

First, It is fastened upon Jesus Christ; first, upon Christ crucified, upon the death of Christ, upon the sufferings of Christ, by which Christ hath made satisfaction for sin, and brought in everlasting righteousness, to cover the nakedness of poor creatures, their love is fastened upon the wounds of Christ, the sufferings of Christ. That's the first ground for a believers hope to fasten upon.

Secondly, The Anchor of a believers hope it fastens upon the Resurrection of Christ, 1 Pet. 1. 3. Blessed be God that hath begotten us again to a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ; that is a main ground for hope to fasten upon, the resurrection of Jesus Christ, the poor soul looks to Christ, Christ dead and risen, and in that Christ rose from the grave, he hath given full satisfaction to his Father, he hath paid the debt, and is a common person for his people, that come to him by faith; so that the resurrection of Christ doth strengthen the faith of the soul exceedingly, it gives the soul assurance that it shall be accepted with God the Father, because Christ is risen again.

Thirdly, It fastens also upon the Intercession of Jesus Christ. He is able to save to the utmost all that come to God by him, for he ever liveth to make Intercession for them. Now this gives great encouragement to a poor soul that is made sensible of his own lost condition, of being far off from God, it would fain draw nigh, and know not which way to come; when this is discovered, that Christ sits in heaven to plead for poor souls, and to make Intercession for all that come to God by him, this causes the soul to give a venture to fasten upon Christ.

Secondly, As the soul fastens upon Christ, so also it fastens upon God the Father by Christ, it goes to the Fathers, and takes hold of him. First, It fastens upon the free Grace of the Father, that infinite everlasting love which did find out the way of Redemption for poor creatures, that love which gave Christ at first, and which gives poor creatures to Christ, and which tenders Christ in the everlasting Gospel, there the anchor of hope takes hold. Secondly, Hope takes hold of the strength of God: He is a God mighty in strength, he can overcome all difficulties, all enemies that are betwixt him and my soul, he can overcome all my unworthiness, all my provocations, yea he can overcome himself, his own wrath and displeasure, that which no creature can do; this being presented to a poor soul that is in a sad doubting condition, this helps (through grace) to draw the soul to Christ, and to fasten it upon God. Thirdly, It fastens also upon the unchangeableness of God, and this gives a sure hold to the anchor of hope: He is not as man that he should lie; Who is it that hath spoken? Who is it that tenders Christ to poor creatures? It is not the word of him that is the true and faithful witness? Is it not the strength of Israel that cannot lie, nor as the sons of men, that he should repent: Now when the Lord doth thus present his Son and Himself to a poor soul, Christ in his death, his resurrection, ascension, his intercession, and his own free grace and love, his strength, his faithfulness, this becomes a sure ground for hope to fasten upon, and so you have seen the third thing handled.

A word of Application and I have done.

First of all, It lets us see the sad condition of all men that are without Hope, you will say they are in a sad condition that are at sea without an anchor, and truly this is the condition of many men, they are in a sad condition, for they are without hope; and O that men would now lay it to heart to see what a sad condition they are in without this anchor of saving Hope, you that are without hope, it is not possible you should stand in a storm, however you may be quiet in a calm, it is not possible that you should bear up in time of storm, and therefore though men may seem to look towards God, and seem to make a progress in God's ways, if there be not an anchor of Hope, they will be driven back again, cross winds will arise at sea, and if you have not this anchor of hope in Christ, and in the Father's free grace, they will be driven back again, without hope it is not possible you should be near unto God, and keep nigh unto God; and what a miserable condition is it to be without God in the world? Truly, so long as you are without true saving hope, you are without God in the world; so long as $\langle \diamond \rangle$ are without hope, they are in a heartless and listless condition, where there is no hope, there is no endeavor; What is the reason that men are so slothful in looking after God? It is because that their hearts are not established by hope in Christ, and in the Fathers free grace; where there is no hope, there can be no right endeavor; if hope fail, all endeavors fail.

Nay further, while men are without hope, they must needs be in a sinful polluted condition, for it is hope that purgeth the soul, and purifieth the heart; Having this hope, let us cleanse ourselves, and he that hath this hope, he is pure, even as he is pure; he looks after purity, as God is pure: that men go on to defile themselves, and to work all manner of iniquity, it is because that they have no true hope toward God: Truly this doth discover that many men have no hope in God, because they live at such a distance from God, and are not kept close to God; nay, they are contented to live at a distance from God, and will not endeavor seeking after Christ: Wherefore I beseech you think upon it, what a sad condition it is to be at Sea without an anchor, your hearts would melt within you to see a ship driven with storms upon the rocks, and no anchor to cast out; yet this is the condition of many thousands in the world, they are at sea, and ready to split upon the rocks, and no anchor of hope; O that the Lord would make many a heart sensible of it.

Secondly, As it is sad to be without hope, so it is more sad to have a deceitful hope; for the disappointment of hope is the greatest torment that can befall a poor creature; better never to have hope, then to have hope frustrated, to be disappointed; the disappointment of hope proves shame and confusion of face to men, Job 6. 20. they were confounded because they had hoped, they came thither, and were ashamed, they were deceived of their expectation, and were confounded. Better never to have hope, then to be disappointed of your hope: and in Job 11. 20. the hope of a wicked man shall be as the giving up of the Ghost, it shall be gone in a moment; as a man in one moment he breaths forth his spirit, and gives up the ghost, so the hope of a wicked man soon perisheth. Now look to your hope, that you may not have such hope as will be like the giving up of the ghost, examine your hope, see whether it be such hope as the Apostle speaketh of, that will be as an anchor to the soul, both sure and steadfast; whence did your hope arise, I pray examine that, whether it was from yourselves, or from Christ; if your hope be from anything in yourselves, it is hope that will not hold, it is not sure and steadfast; examine what was the efficient cause of your hope, how was this hope begotten in you? Did you see that it was out of the hand of Christ, and that it was begotten in you by the mighty power of God? Did the Lord cause you to see that it was not possible that you should create hope in yourselves, til Christ come & beget hope in you? Know certainly, if it were not a hope of Christ's begetting, it is an anchor that will not hold. Again, examine what it was that fastened your hope, Was it the word of the Lord that made you to hope, the sure word of promise? Was it the word of man, or the word of the Lord, if it were anything but the word of the Lord that made you to hope, your hope will not hold. Examine also upon what ground your hope is cast, Is it cast upon the arm of flesh, or upon the arm of the Lord; whatever hope is cast upon the arm of flesh will not hold. Examine also whether your hope be cast upon the free grace of God, or upon the things of the world, your prosperity in the world, there are thousands in the world that cast the anchor of their hope upon the mammon of this world, because God hath prospered them in the world, and given them abundance of these outward good things, therefore they hope that God loveth them, and will give them another world; but if your anchor of hope be cast upon your gold, or your great estate, and not upon the free grace of God, it will deceive you. Upon whatsoever it be cast beside God and Christ, it will not hold; if it be cast upon your duties, your desires, and good meanings, and endeavors, your prayers, and tears, your charity, if the anchor of your hope be cast upon these, it will not hold; yea, if it be cast upon your graces, your hope will not hold: for whatsoever is made the ground of hope beside Christ, is the arm of flesh, even grace, and the actings of grace in the soul, they become flesh, if made the ground of our hope. Now I beseech you look to your hope, for certainly the hope of most men is not of the right stamp, whatever they pretend: How do many deceive themselves, God is not in all their thoughts, nor in any of their ways, and yet have hope toward God. You say you have hope in God, and yet your hope doth not purify your hearts, but as wicked as ever, walking in the ways of your own heart, and satisfying your own lusts, whatever these men pretend, they have not hope of the right stamp, their hope is but as the spiders web, or as the giving up of the ghost.

Thirdly, Let me exhort you all to look after this saving lively hope, for it is that which will keep your hearts from breaking in the evil time, at one time or other the heart will break, if men have not this saving hope; therefore seek after this saving hope, for it will keep you up in the midst of storms, in the midst of evils, and establish you in the midst of good, it will do you good in a storm, and it will be useful to you in a calm; you can never take comfort in the good things you enjoy, and your hearts cannot be established in peace, if not grounded in hope; therefore look after this lively hope, this anchor of the soul; yea soul, wouldst thou dwell with God, and live near God, and live upon him continually? O then cast the anchor of your hope in God, true hope will hold your souls close to him, that you shall not depart from him. Yea, would you have your hearts made more holy, purified, and sanctified, and get victory over your corruptions? O then seek after this saving hope; for that man that hath his hope cast on God, and Christ, that man is most free from corruption, and most active for God; true hope it will make you able to suffer, it will make you able to rejoice in tribulation; why now, dost thou desire all this? why then seek after this lively hope.

But it may be you will say unto me, how shall we obtain this hope? I see it is exceeding useful, and of absolute necessity, how shall we come by it? where shall we have this anchor to stay our souls?

For answer. First, Look to the free grace of God in Christ for it, 'tis he that doth beget this grace of hope in his people; look to those tenders that free grace makes▪ God holds forth his self, and Son, and pardon, and life to poor creatures; Free grace makes a render of all this unto you, and therefore look to this free grace, that so you may have that hope which shall not be confounded and ashamed.

Secondly, Look to Christ for it especially, look to the resurrection of Christ; that place 1 Pet. 1. 3. Blessed be God, and the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which according to his abundant mercy, hath begotten us again unto a lively hope, by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead. Christ is risen from the dead, he hath paid the debt, and brought in everlasting righteousness, and therefore look to the resurrection of Christ, for by eying that, this lively hope may be begotten in you.

Thirdly, Look to the promise, to the word of the Lord; the word of the Lord is written that you might have hope, Rom. 15. 4. For whatsoever things were written aforetime, were written for our learning, that we through patience and comfort of the Scriptures might have hope. The Scripture is written that we might believe, and in believing might have eternal life, and therefore consult with the word of the Lord. You that desire to have hope strengthened, look to the word and promises, and behold the freeness of them, and the unchangeableness of God in them. O study the Scripture much, and beg that the Spirit of the Lord may shine in them, and give you a sight in them, and so this hope may be begotten in you.

Fourthly, Look to those patterns and examples of free grace that the Lord set forth for you to look upon; the Apostle Paul, 1 Tim. 1. 16. saith, He was a pattern to them which should hereafter believe on him to life everlasting: That the Lord should reconcile such an enemy, and set his love upon him that was injurious to the Saints, one that thought he had sinned so much as that he had outsinned mercy, yet saith he, I obtained grace, that might be a pattern of mercy; and therefore look to those patterns of grace and mercy that the Lord hath set forth before you, that so you may be encouraged to come and hope in his mercy.

And to conclude all, do not go on desperately any longer, and do not say as they said, Jer. 2. 25. But thou saidst there is no hope; No, for I have loved strangers, and after them will I go. They resolved to go on in the imaginations of their own heart, they said there was no hope, and they would do evil as they had done. O let not this be the resolution of any poor soul, for though you have no hope for the present, you are invited to come to Christ that you may have hope; The word of the Lord is come to you that you might have hope, and those patterns of free grace are set before you, that you might have hope. O that the Lord would make you more intent in your spirits, in looking after this anchor of hope; What will you do another day, when storms arise, and to have no anchor? It will be a most sad condition for a poor soul, to see itself ready to split, and to have no hope, no anchor to stay upon. O! who would venture to Sea without an anchor? If you have no anchor when storms arise, you will be at your wits end. O that God betimes (before it be too late) would make you as wise for your souls, as you would be for your bodies.

P-TA2-2. Sermons preached upon several occasions by Timothy Armitage. - Armitage, Timothy, d. 1655.

SERMONS Preached upon several Occasions.

BY That Able and Faithful Servant of JESUS CHRIST, Mr Timothy Armitage, late Pastor of a Church in the CITY of Norwich.

London, Printed 1678.

TO THE READER.

Reader,

These Sermons, Preached divers years since by the Godly and Reverend Author, who is now with the Lord, reaping the fruit of his Holy Labors, which do still follow him; having by the care and pains of a Christian Brother, been preserved, and now brought to Light by the good Hand of Providence, for thy good and benefit, as some other of his Works formerly published, which (if they have come to thy hand) may have been through the Lord's blessing: Be pleased therefore to understand, that they were preached and delivered by that Eminent Servant of God, Mr. Timothy Armitage, sometimes Pastor of the Church of Christ gathered at Norwich; as may easily appear unto thee (if thou hast been acquainted with any of his Labors in Print) by that gracious Spirit which breaths and runs through all the Veins, and almost every Line of the same. 'Tis needless to hang out before these Sermons a Bush, to commend the same to thy perusal; do but taste a little, and if thou hast a savoury palate, thou wilt be ready to say as the Samaritans to the Woman, that enticed them to go to see and hear Christ speak, Joh. 4. 42. Now we believe not because of thy saying, for we have heard him ourselves. The Subjects herein handled we doubt not but thou wilt find to be very momentous, and very spiritually treated of: We shall not need to add anymore in this kind, but commending them, and thy perusal of them, to the Grace and Blessing of Jesus Christ, in whom we shall desire to remain

Thy Well-willers,

SERMON I.

CANT. 2. 3. As the Apple-tree among the Trees of the Wood so is my Beloved among the Sons: I sat down under His Shadow with great delight, and His Fruit was sweet to my Taste.

AS the Apple-tree among the Trees of the Wood, so is my Beloved among the Sons, &c. Here are two things considerable in the Words; viz. the Matter, and the Form of them: For the Form, it is a Similitude; the Matter in it is the Person, and a Thing: The Person is Christ, the Thing to which this Person is resembled, and that is an Apple-tree; it's titled by its plantation; Among the Trees of the Wood: Then we have the Application of this Similitude, in that word, So is my Beloved among the Sons.

Here is also an Illustration of this similitude in two particulars, which discovers wherein Christ is resembled to the Apple-tree: First, For the shadow of it; I sat under his shadow with great delight. And then,

Secondly, for the Fruit of it; His Fruit was sweet to my Taste. There is something observable held forth in the dependence that these words have upon the former: If you look into the second verse, As the Lily among the Thorns, so is my Beloved among the Daughters. In that verse Christ sets forth the excellency of his Spouse, declaring the high estimation he hath of her; She is a Lily among the Thorns, so is my Love among the Daughters. By how much the Lily is to be preferred before the Thorns and Thistles, so much is the Spouse before all other Children, before all other Men, before all other Congregations. Now see how the Spouse doth admire Christ, As the Apple-tree among the Trees of the Wood, so is my Beloved among the Sons; and how the Love of Christ doth beget Love; what Improvement a gracious Heart makes of the manifestation of Christ's Love; He declared that he loved her, he loved her dearly above all the World; and presently she breaths love again. There was a Fire of Love, that was kindled in her bosom, which flamed towards Christ; the more love Christ manifested, the more a gracious Heart loves Christ again: You know the Woman in the Gospel, what abundance of love she expressed to Christ; she sat at Christ's Feet weeping, and washing Christ's Feet with her Tears, and wiping them with the Hair of her Head; she had much forgiven, many manifestations of Love, in the forgiving her many sins; and therefore she loved much. But again observe, the Spouse doth not rest in that Commendation that Christ had given her; he had highly commended her as a Lily among Thorns: But she carries the commendation back again to him; what ever she hath from Christ, she carries back again to Christ, she 'I make him the Alpha and the Omega, the Beginning and the End of all, and therefore she presently falls upon admiration, admiring his Beauty and Excellency. A gracious Heart is more taken with that which is in Christ, than with that which he gives out to it: It doth not rest in Grace that is received, or in Love that is manifested, but it goes back again to Christ, pitches upon Christ in whom are all Divine perfections: She doth not repeat the words of Christ again, as if Christ had said, My Love is a Lily among the Thorns; she doth not say, Oh, now I am a Lily, I am more beloved than all the World: she looks from that presently, she looks to Christ, how shall she make him glorious. The Lord Jesus, he had set a Crown, or at least a Garland upon her Head, and she speedily put off her Garland, and set it upon Christ's Head, she thinks it fit that all should be swallowed up in the Glory of Christ. Let him be lifted up and magnified, let his Name and Excellency and Goodness be magnified and remembered, though I be forgotten forever. Oh that you would be more practical, turn this into practice, make it practical, do as the Spouse did here; let all the manifestations of Love kindle love in your Hearts to Christ, and look not so much what is given to you, as what is laid up in Christ for you: Look upon Christ, and carry it to him, as he is the Alpha, so let him be the Omega, carry it all back to him again.

But let us look more strictly upon the words, As the Apple-tree among the Trees of the Wood, so is my Beloved among the Sons.

The words are clear enough; only it would be known what is meant by Son, So is my Beloved among the Sons.

It may be either the Sons of God, or the Sons of Men: The Sons of God, so the Angels, and so the Saints are called by Jo Now there was a day when the Sons of God came to present themselves before the Lord; The Angels are his Sons, he useth them like Sons, and they serve him like Sons. And so believers are called the Sons of God. Now we are Sons, but it doth not appear what we shall be, saith the Apostle. If we take it in this sense, still it's true of Christ, that he is the chief among the Sons, among all these Sons of God; he is far above the Angels; he is made the Head of Principalities and Powers they are all ministering Spirits unto him.

But we may rather understand it of the Sons of Men, because he speaks of such Sons as are Trees of the Forest, Trees of the Wood: At the Apple-tree among the Trees of the Wood, so is my Beloved among the Sons. Among all the Sons of men Christ is the chief that ever lived, that ever was planted in the Forest of the World; God the Father hath given him the preeminence, he hath given him a Name above every Name, He is the Prince of the Kings of the Earth: He is more excellent than the chiefest of the Sons of Men. Take the best of Men which may be, and they are held forth by the names of Sons. Daughter in Scripture phrase is a name of Weakness: Daughter of Zion, Daughter of Jerusalem: God would show what poor weak Creatures his people are without him: Son, is a name of strength, and honor, and dignity; Among all the Sons of all the Honorable Men in the World, among all the Princes and Potentates in the World, Jesus Christ he is the most desirable, he is more excellent than they: He is more excellent than the tallest Cedars, than the greatest Oaks in the Wood; As the Apple-tree amongst the Trees of the Wood: Here seems to be a double comparison.

First of all, the Sons of men are compared to the Trees of the Wood.

And then Secondly, The Son of God is compared to the Apple-tree among those Trees, in the midst of those Trees.

First, The Sons of men are compared to the Trees of the Wood, Trees of the Forest: And this holds forth the state and condition of men by Nature; Every man by nature is a wild Tree, he is not in God's Garden, but is cast out into the open Field, it's a Tree of the Forest, not a Tree of the Orchard. We speak of the corrupted nature of man, what man is since the fall of Adam: For when God made him at first, he planted him in Paradise, and he was the chiefest Tree there, brought forth most excellent and delightful fruit unto God, but you know how Adam degenerated, he turned a wild Tree, and brought forth sour Fruit; and therefore God plucked him up by the Roots, and threw him out of Paradise; so that he and all his posterity after him were forever after Trees of the Wood, and Trees of the Forest; he brings forth nothing but wild Fruit, till such time as the Lord is pleased to take poor creatures and ingraft them again upon Jesus Christ, who is the Root of Jesse, that they may bring forth better fruit unto him.

Now I shall show wherein this comparison holds: Every man by Nature is a wild Tree, a Tree of the Wood, a Tree of the Forest.

1. First of all, He either brings forth no fruit, or else he brings forth sour fruit; he is an unfruitful creature; Israel is an empty Vine, God complains: And so it's true of every man by Nature, he is an empty Vine; he is an unfruitful Tree; if he brings forth any fruit, it's wild fruit, it's sour fruit; as is spoken of in Deut. 32. 32. which doth well resemble the condition of all men by Nature. Their Vine is a Vine of Sodom, they are of the field of Gomorrhah. Here's the fruit that every man's Nature brings forth; It's a Vine of Sodom, and a field of Gomorrhah; sour fruit, and bitter fruit, and cursed fruit. This is the fruit that man by Nature brings forth.

2. Again, Secondly, The Trees of the Wood or Forest, so long as they remain there, they are unprofitable; they are not of that use which the Trees of the Orchard, or the Trees of the Garden are, they are not only useful for their fruit, but they are a great Ornament to a man's ground or house; and they are also a defense to a man's house. A Tree nigh at home, at the house side keeps off many a Blast, and many a Storm; and such are the Trees that are of Christ's planting: Oh they are a Beauty, they are an Ornament. The Godly man is an Ornament to the place where he grows; The Godly man is a defense to the place where he grows; he keeps off many a storm and Judgment from the place where he lives; and others fare the better for his sake. But now the Trees of the Wood, they are altogether unuseful, they serve for nothing but to shelter the Serpents, and to shelter the wild Beasts, and this is the condition of every natural man. Oh what Serpents, and what wild Beasts, what base lusts, and what hideous Monsters are sheltered in the heart of a Natural man, that is a stranger to Christ?

3. Again, Thirdly, The Trees that are in the Wood or Forest, they grow in Wildernesses, and have none to look after them, there's none prune them, there's none to hedge them, they lie open to all dangers, to the Horns and to the Teeth of the wild Beasts, that will easily knock off all their Budds and Springs, break and eat off their bark, and keep them from growing, and the like: And truly this is the condition of every Natural man; he is as a Tree in the Forest, as a Tree in the Wilderness; there is none to look after him, there is none to prune him, and to take away unfruitful branches, that he may bring forth fruit to God, God doth not look after the Trees in the Forest: It's true, Christ is the Fathers Husbandman, and he doth cut off unfruitful Branches; he cuts off unfruitful Trees that bring forth untimely fruit. But he doth this to such as are in his Garden, to such as are in his Christ. Thus the Father takes a special care of his. The Lord makes a round hedge about his people; he will keep all hurtful things from them. See what is said to Job: The Devil confesses the goodness of God unto his people in this respect, Job 1. 10. Hast not thou made a hedge about him, and about his house, and about all that he hath on every side? It's a most certain truth, that God hath made a hedge about his people, a hedge about him, a hedge about his person, a hedge about his house; that is, a hedge about his family, a hedge about his Friends and Relations, a hedge about his people. There is a three-fold hedge that God makes about his, that are of his planting: But now it's not so of the Trees in the Forest, of the Trees in the Wilderness, there's no hedge made about them, they lie open to a thousand dangers; they lie open to the furious assaults of Satan, and to the prevalency of all Temptations, lie open to dangers from all the Creatures, there's no hedge about them: God hath not made a League with the Beasts in the Field for them. Here is the misery of a man out of Christ, it is set forth by a Tree that is in the Wilderness, a Tree that grows in the Wood: And therefore a word of Application to this particular.

Use. Beloved, This lets us see the necessity of being planted into Christ by faith. We are all of the wild Olive, and the wild Vine; and therefore there is a necessity, that every man should seek after his transplanting into Christ. Oh that the Lord would make you willing to be plucked up by the Roots! You that are out of Christ, be willing to be plucked up by the Roots, that you may be planted into Christ. There is some rooting that every natural man hath which he is loath to be plucked from: One man is rooted into the World, and another is rooted in his lusts, and another is rooted in himself, in his own righteousness, in his own works, in his own strength, in his own performances. Oh that the Lord would make you willing to be plucked up from all that Root, that in which you have anything besides Christ: Here is the great difficulty, to bring off the wills of men. Men cry out many times, Oh it is a hard matter, Oh it's an impossible thing, that ever they should be plucked up from such Rooting: That they have such lusts, Trees which are of twenty, thirty, forty years growth; and all that time rooting deeper and deeper: Is it possible that such should be plucked up by the Roots, and planted into Christ?

My Brethren, it's possible if men were willing to be plucked up, the Lord would soon accomplish it. You know what Christ said to his Disciples; that if they had Faith as a grain of Mustard-seed, they should say to this Cedar, be removed into the Sea, and it should be so. Why, the Lord can make poor Creatures to do that which is impossible for sense and reason to think may be done: Oh what is it that the Lord canit do! There is no Oak, there is no Cedar, so strong and so tall, and so deeply rooted, but the Lord can say, Be thou removed, be thou plucked up by the Roots: There is no Tree so barren, there is no Soul grows in such a barren Soyl, but the Lord can say, Be thou plucked up, and be thou rooted in that fruitful Soyl. Oh that the Lord would make the hearts of men willing to be plucked up by the Roots, from that rooting which they have in sin, or which they have in themselves, that so they may be planted in a better soil, and rooted in the Lord Jesus. Do but remember this, that you may see what a necessity there is that every man should seek after their planting in Christ. Why, so long as you are out of Christ, you are wild Trees, so long as you are out of Christ, you bring forth no fruit; you bring forth no good fruit. Our Savior makes it an impossible thing, in Mat. 7. 17. Even so every good Tree bringeth forth good fruit, but a corrupt Tree bringeth forth evil fruit: It's impossible that ever the fruit should be good so long as the Tree is evil. Now so long as a Man is out of Christ, he is an evil Tree, he is a wild Tree, a Tree of the Wood, a Tree of the Forest, not a Tree of the Garden. Oh that men would be made good, that their Trees might bring forth good fruit. Truly it's in vain to teach men to bring forth good fruit, until such time as the Tree be made good. If the Tree were made good, and engrafted into Christ, it's impossible that that good Tree should bring forth evil fruit. Oh know you that have Interest in Christ, that all the fruit that you bring forth out of Christ is lost; I say, Men and Women, they lose all their fruit; It's such as the Lord canit accept of, such as the Lord doth not delight in. The Lord could not endure that fruit that Israel brought forth, in the first of Isaiah, they were a burden to him, their fruit he was weary of; they and all the fruit that they brought forth to God were cast out. What a pitiful thing is it that a man should lose all his fruit, all his Labor, and all his pains? Yea truly, till a man be in Christ all is lost. You know the young man in the Gospel, that came to Christ, he had a great deal of good Moral fruit, he had kept all the Commandments, he said, from his youth, and yet all that fruit was lost, it withered and fell off before it was ripe, it rotted and perished, it was never gathered by Christ, his Soul did never eat of it, it was no delight to him; And why? because though the Tree had a great deal of seeming good fruit on it, yet it was an evil Tree, it was a wild Tree.

Nay, Let men consider further, what a fearful word was spoken against such wild Trees, as bring forth no fruit to God, or such fruit as is sour, as his Soul can have no pleasure nor delight in; it was a dreadful Word spoken by Daniel, which was spoken concerning the great Tree; see Dan. 4. 14. Hew down the Tree, and cut off the Branches, and scatter the Leaves, and the fruit. Why, this was spoken of the mighty Tree, which reached up to Heaven, a Tree that did fill the whole Earth with its outward Glory; and yet of this very Tree, God said, Hew it down, and it was hewn down. Oh that men would remember, there is no outward privilege, that can exempt a man from the stroke of the Lord. He can breath upon the tallest Cedars, and the greatest Oaks; if the Lord blow upon them, they shall wither as the Grass in the Field: Now is the Ax laid to the root of the Tree, saith John the Baptist, in Mat. 3. 10. Therefore every Tree which bringeth not forth good fruit, is hewn down and cast into the Fire. Now that the Gospel is preached, now that Christ himself is come to offer terms of peace unto him, now that God from Heaven hath declared his willingness to pluck men out of the cursed Soyl of Nature, and to implant them into his Son; now, now, if men submit not unto Christ, if they continue obstinate, hew them down and make them fuel for unquenchable Fire. Oh now see then how it concerns every man to seek to be implanted into Christ. It's not a leaning upon Christ that will serve men's turns, but there must be a planting into Christ, a rooting in Christ: the Apricock doth lean upon the wall, but it's not rooted into the wall, it hath not its life from the wall, but it's rooted in the Ground. And so many a poor creature may pretend, he is leaning upon Christ, and in the mean time he is rooted in the World, in his filthiness, in his base lusts and corruptions, this man is not rooted into Christ: So much to that first Similitude. Thus you see that the Sons of men are compared to the Trees in the Wood, to the Trees in the Forest; As the Apple-tree among the Trees of the Wood, so is my Beloved among the Sons.

The Son of God (I shall speak but a Word to that) he is compared unto the Apple-tree in the midst of the Trees in the Wood, or of the Forest.

But why is the Son of God set forth here by the Apple-tree? There are many Trees that are of more worth than the Apple-tree; why not the Cedar? and why not the Oak? Why set forth here by the Apple tree?

First of all, Christ is set forth by the Apple-tree for the fruitfulness of this Tree. It's a fruit-bearing Tree; it brings forth abundance of useful fruit; and therefore Christ is usually set forth by this Tree rather than others. It's a very fit Simile to set forth Christ by the Appletree; Christ was a fruit-bearing Tree. Oh what abundance of pleasant delightful fruit did Jesus Christ bring forth! Such as did rejoice the Soul of God his Father, and of men and Angels. He was fruitful all his days; he continually brought forth fruit, all the time of his being upon Earth, all the time that he was planted by the Father, in the Nursery here in this world. He was fruitful even upon his first planting here, he made it his meat and his drink to do the will of his Father. He was never well but when he was bearing some fruit. The fruit that Christ bare when he was upon Earth, it shall last to Eternity; It's that which the Saints shall feed upon forever and ever. The fruit that the Apple-tree bears, it's both an Ornament to itself, and it's exceeding beautiful, and beneficial unto others; and therefore still fit is it to set forth this Simile, for it's a fruit-bearing Tree, a beautiful sight, a delightful sight: The Lord Jesus he was laden with fruit, every Branch and every Bough full of fruit. It's said, We saw his Glory as the Glory of the only begotten Son, full of Grace and truth. So Christ he is full of Grace and Truth; and this is the Glory of the only begotten Son, being full of Grace and full of Truth. And then he is of benefit to others. The fruit of this Tree is exceeding beneficial to others. How many are fed, and nourished and refreshed by the fruit of the Apple tree? It's a Tree that man could not spare of all the Trees that God hath planted. The fruit this Tree brings forth, it serves both for Meat and Drink; it will both satisfy the Appetite, and quench the thirst also, which many other fruits will not do. Thus still this holds forth Christ, who is complete nourishment to his people, he is meat indeed, and he is drink indeed; he satisfies the hungry Soul with good things, he quenches the thirst of the poor, dry and parched Soul. There is a drink that is made of Apples, which is very useful (we know) for the quenching of thirst, for the allaying of heat: Such is that refreshment that Christ gives out unto his people; he is content that his very heart blood should be squeezed out, that so his people might drink of it, that they might be refreshed, cooled and revived, that all the heat of his Fathers wrath might be allayed in them. This is the will of Christ, this is a Similitude that Christ is held forth by, like unto an Apple-Tree.

2. Then Secondly, For the shadow that this Tree casts, that also is held forth in the Text, I sat under his shadow with great delight, and his fruit was sweet to my taste. There are some Trees that bear fruit, but cast no great shadow; other Trees cast a shadow, that bear no fruit that is desirable. Ay, but both these meet in Christ; he is as the Apple-tree that brings forth fruit, and also casts a comfortable shadow. This makes the fruit more delightful, when a man can stand under the shadow and gather the fruit of the Tree; it makes the fruit exceeding pleasant to him, he is not scorched with the Sun whilst he gathers it. Oh there is a sweet shadow, a sweet comfortable and refreshing shadow, which the Lord Jesus doth cast over his people, whilst they pluck that fruit, and eat of that fruit which grows upon him. But then,

3. Again, Thirdly, His fruit is commended for the Smell of it, in Cant. 7. 8. Now also thy Breasts shall be as a cluster of the Vine, and the smell of thy Nose like Apples. That is, that very breath that comes from thee, all thy breathings they are sweet and comfortable, they have a sweet savor in them; thy breathings after God and Christ they are full of Grace; and they are full of holiness. The Smell it's like the smell of Apples: There are some Apples that are of a very fragrant smell, as your Pomecitrons and others, and some have thought them to be the Apples here meant in the Text; and this doth well set forth the Lord Jesus, for that sweet and fragrant smell that he sends forth. Oh what a sweet savor was he unto God! And what a sweet savor is he unto man! It's said, he offered himself a sacrifice of a sweet smelling savor unto God: He carried his sacrifice as his fruit, and it was a sweet smelling savor unto God. And so Christ is a sweet smelling savor unto man also; where there is anything of Christ in a Creature, it makes that Creature sweet; where there is anything of Christ in an Ordinance, it makes that Ordinance smell sweet; where there is anything of Christ in a duty, it makes that duty smell sweet. Because of the sweet savor of thine Ointment, it's therefore the Virgins follow thee. It's Christ that makes the Gospel of a sweet savor; Christ in a person, or Christ in an Ordinance, or Christ in any condition makes that thing sweet.

4. And again, Fourthly, This Tree it's a Common Tree, and therefore Christ would rather be resembled by this Tree than by any others, which are not so common, and are not so useful. There is almost no part in the World but hath some kind of Apple trees. It's a fruit more common than many others, that even the poorest may eat of it. And therefore the Lord Jesus he may be resembled by this Tree, to hold forth, that he is a common savior, that he is free for all poor creatures to come unto, he is the Apple-tree in all parts of the World, that men in all places might come in and feed upon him and be satisfied. And therefore he is said to be A Fountain set open, in Zech. 13. A Fountain set open; it shall not be sealed up, but a Fountain set open. The Gospel tenders Christ freely; and in that respect is Christ compared to A fountain set open. He is also compared here to an Apple-tree for the commonness as well as for the usefulness of that fruit, that none might plead Ignorance, that they might not plead excuse, that none might say he was such a fruit as none could buy, that they could not come at. No, Christ would be resembled unto that which is common, that he might be held forth freely unto poor lost sinners under the Gospel.

5. And then fifthly and lastly, He is set forth by the Apple-tree for the variety of fruits which it does bring forth, and do grow upon this Tree. There is no Tree that brings forth such variety of fruit. How many sorts, several kinds of Apples? they are almost innumerable. And truly in this respect Christ is the Apple-tree, because of those innumerable precious Gifts and Graces which do grow upon him. The fullness of the Spirit was poured out upon him; it made him to bring forth fruits of all kinds. He is the only begotten Son of God full of Grace and Truth: There can be no excellency, nor no perfection named, which is not to be found in the Son of God, they all do concenter and meet in him. I shall say no more at this time, but leave the Metaphor unto your consideration; think of it. The Lord Jesus was pleased to be resembled to an Apple-tree. And what great condescension of Love is this, that he should stoop down so low to set forth himself under such a mean comparison, that we might know what goodness and sweetness are in him: Abundance of the love of Christ is held forth in this, that he should choose to be set forth by such a Tree as this is, by the Apple-tree; you see the Lord Jesus Christ would rather choose a Fruitful Tree, than a Great Tree, than a Strong Tree, he having such a delight in being Useful, in being Serviceable, in Bringing forth Fruit unto his Father; Fruit that should be for the good of the Sons of men. And therefore let us look to Christ, and labor to imitate Christ; the Lord he delights in a fruitful Tree, rather than in a Tall Tree, or in a Strong Tree; it's the Greatest Commendation that can be, to be Fruitful, and Serviceable, to bring forth Fruit to God and our Generation; Christ chose this, and let us choose it too; and let us look to God who is the Husbandman, who makes all this Trees to be fruitful Trees in his due time. So much for this time.

SERMON II.

CANT. 2. 3. At the Apple-tree among the Trees of the Wood, so is my Beloved among the Sons: I sat down under His Shadow with great delight, and His Fruit was sweet to my Taste.

I Have made entrance the last day: Here is a double comparison, the Sons of men are compared to the Trees of the Wood; The Son of God is compared to the Apple-tree among those Trees.

I shall add a fifth particular wherein the resemblance holds.

5. Christ here is set forth as the Apple-tree: It seems to relate to the fruit of that Tree that Man did eat in Paradise, which in all probability was a kind of Apples: And herein we call to mind how man lost his happiness, where it was that man undid himself, how sin came into the World by eating of the forbidden fruit; as also it holds forth that Christ hath taken away that Curse all the bitterness and wrath for his people, which was the fruit of Adams transgression. There was man undone at first, under the Apple-tree, there he lost himself, and God, and Happiness: And therefore Christ will be an Apple-tree as shall bring forth better Fruit, the Fruits of Peace, Joy, Life and Salvation for his people: See what is said, Cant. 8. 5. Who is this that cometh up from the Wilderness leaning upon her Beloved? I raised thee up under the Apple-tree: There thy Mother brought thee forth, there she brought forth that bare thee. Some make it to be the words of the Spouse to Christ, I raised thee up under the Apple-tree; She looks up to Christ, and saith, Lord I took hold of thy Boughs, I took hold of thy Covenant, I took hold of thy Promise by Faith and Prayer, there I raised thee up: He rose up to be a help and deliverer of his people. But others make them to be the Words of Christ▪ Christ speaks unto his Spouse▪ Under the Apple-tree there I raised thee up. It should seem to have a reference to the Tree which was the Occasion of Mans fall▪ Thou lost thyself under the Apple-tree, there was thy fall; there did the Devil thrust down Man, Adam, and all his posterity. Well says Christ, I will be an Apple-tree, and under this Apple-tree i'll raise thee up again: under this Apple-tree thou shalt be comforted, thou shalt be saved, i'll raise thee up again. The Lord Jesus he came to undo the works of Satan, because Satan had undone the Works of his Father, and spoiled the whole creation with sin; and therefore thus will Christ be avenged of him: Christ will be such an Apple-tree, that will bring forth that fruit which shall be the destruction of Satan; the destruction of Death and Hell, which were brought into the World by the disobedience of Man under the Tree. So then I say this may be held forth,

1. First, That the Lord would have his people remember what they lost in Adam by their disobedience, and then the Lord would have them remember the Lord Jesus, he hath taken away all that curse, and all that wrath which was the desert of man's disobedience; so that it shall not be poured upon believers. And so much for the comparison betwixt Christ and the Apple-tree.

2. It's said further, That he is as the Apple-tree among the Trees of the Wood. The next work then is to enquire after that comparison; Why is Christ said to be the Apple-tree among the Trees of the Wood? Why not among the Trees of the Garden? There is much in this comparison; receive it with Attention, for I shall be but short in this work.

1. First of all, It holds forth, That the Lord Jesus took the same Nature that we have, he became man; he took upon him the Nature of man. It's true, he was not a wild Tree, but he was a Tree as well as the rest of the Trees in the Wood; he was of the same Substance with them; he had the same Body, the same Bark, the same Rind, the same outside, that other Trees had; he was in all things made like unto us, we read in Heb. 2. 14, 17. For as much then as the Children are partakers of Flesh and Blood, he also himself likewise took part of the same, that though death he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the Devil; wherefore in all things, it behooved him to be made like unto his Brethren, that he might be a merciful and faithful high Priest in things pertaining to God, to make reconciliation for the sins of the People, &c. It was needful that he should be made partaker of Flesh and Blood, there was a Necessity of it. For first of all,

1. The Lord Jesus was that stock or that root, upon which God the Father had determined to graft all the Sons and Daughters of men, that he had appointed to be Trees of Righteousness in his Paradise. I say all that were to be made Trees of Righteousness, were to be engrafted into that stock, and therefore there was a necessity that the stock should be like unto the Cyons, it was necessary that the branch and the root should be of one nature.

Again, The Lord Jesus was to fill all his Branches with Life and Spirit, the Sap and Juice must run from the root to the Branches, and therefore it was necessary they should be Homogeneal, of one Nature; that they should be incorporated, and made one, that so Christ might fill our Nature, that human Nature which he took into the second person, with all the fullness of God, and from that, and through that, fill all his Members. That's the First, That Christ is compared to an Apple-tree among the Trees of the Wood.

2. But again Secondly, This comparison does hold forth the unspotted Nature, and that holiness which was in Jesus Christ; It holds it forth in the excellency of it: He was an Apple-tree among the Trees of the Wood: He was not a wild Tree as they were, though he grew amongst the wild Trees; though he grew in the World, yet he did not partake of the sin of the World; there was no corruption in him, he brought forth no wild fruit: And herein is the excellency of Christ held forth. To see an Apple tree, a sweet Apple in the midst of an Orchard, is no great wonder; but to find an Apple-tree laden with goodly and pleasant fruit, where there is nothing but a Wood and a Forest, and wild Trees, and Briars, and Thorns, and Brambles round about, this is a wonder; and even thus was the Lord Jesus, the Trees round about him were wild Trees; they are all gone out of the way (it's spoken of the wild Trees) and become altogether unprofitable, there is none that doth good no not one. This is the natural Estate of all men; and that Christ should be planted in the midst of these, and yet be an Apple-tree, and bring forth sweet and blessed fruit, this was his great commendation; and the Spouse does here admire him for it. Before he was admiring the Spouse, as a Lily among Thorns, the tender Lily among the Thorns; and here the Spouse doth admire that the Lord Jesus should be a green Apple-tree among the Trees of the Wood: That none of the corruption of man's Nature should cleave unto him, that he should bring forth nothing but pleasant fruit; he was the Lamb of God without spot, and there was no guile found in his mouth: Here is the great Commendation of Christ; still a pleasant Apple-tree, though in the midst of the Trees of the Wood.

3. Again, Thirdly, The comparison holds forth the High and Honorable esteem that the Spouse had of Christ, As the Apple-tree amongst the Trees of the Wood; as the Apple-tree is to be preferred before the Trees of the Wood, so is my Beloved to be preferred before all the Sons of men: He had preferred the Spouse as much as the Lily is to be preferred before the Thorns: And here she returns his love back again, saith she, He is to be preferred before the Sons of men; as the Apple-tree is to be preferred before and beyond the Trees of the Wood. What saith the Apostle in Phil. 3. speaking of all things in comparison of Christ to be but Dung and Dross: Yea verily, saith he, I count all things but Dross and Dung in comparison of Christ; how precious is Christ to a gracious soul▪ all is but Dross and Dung in comparison of him; to you that believe, (saith the Apostle Peter) he is precious; you that have tasted of the comforts of this Tree, you will say, Oh Lord, give me evermore to eat of this Tree: That's a third particular wherein the comparison holds.

4. Fourthly, It holds forth that mean and low Estimation that the men in the world have of Christ. They look upon him as a Common tree; he is among the trees in the wood; and he is of no better account than the trees of the wood, Cant. 5. 9. what is thy beloved (say they) more than another's beloved▪ They could not believe, that there should be anything of worth more in Christ than was in other persons and other things; what is thy beloved? they could not believe that he was anymore than another tree, because he grew among them; and truly it's because men know not the worth of Christ and have no Esteem of him; they have not tasted and seen how good and gracious the Lord is, and therefore they have no high account of the precious fruit that grows on this tree. The carnal heart closeth with the world and closeth with his lusts; they are his Dalilahs, his Beloved: and when he looks upon a child of God, sees a gracious heart go lamenting after Christ; another that hath found Christ rejoices in him▪ and solaceth himself in the fruit of this tree; Why, this is the wonder unto a carnal heart; why? What's thy Beloved more than my Beloved? what do you find more in Christ, than I find in the world, than I find in my lusts? Oh it's a dreadful deceit of a man's heart. Can a man gather grapes of thorns, and figs of thistles? Is it possible that the wild tree can bring forth as good fruit as the Apple-tree? No, it's the ignorance of men that they know not Christ; that Christ is not precious to them. But again,

5. Fifthly, This comparison holds forth the great sufferings of Christ: he is said to be the Apple-tree in the forest, or in the wood; because of the sufferings that Christ was exposed to when he was on earth. You know the trees in the forest, they lie open to the Storms, there's no fence about them, they lie open to the teeth and horns of the wild beasts; and thus did Christ suffer when he was upon earth: he laid open to most grievous Storms, to blow upon him: the very wrath of God his Father went over his head; it blow exceeding sore upon him, that it even brake his tree to pieces. It pleased the Father to bruise him, Isaiah 53. 10. It pleased the father to bruise him and to put him to grief▪ yea it pleased the father to break him in pieces. Moreover he met with a world of sufferings from men: Oh how was he persecuted from first to last? How many Psalms are there in which David doth complain in the person of Christ? He complains of the wild beasts in the forest, the Dogs, the Lions, the Unicorns, and the wild Bulls of Bashan encompassed him round about, Psalm 22. 20, 21. Deliver my soul from the sword: my darling from the power of the dog. Save me from the Lions mouth: for thou hast heard me from the horns of the unicorns. And in divers other Psalms which he made of Christ, and in divers other respects, Christ is compared to a tree, a tree of the forest. Again,

6. Sixthly, He is a tree in the forest, an Apple-tree in the forest, for that unexpected comfort and relief that the Lord Jesus doth afford for poor souls: unexpected comfort and relief; when a man hath been travelling all the day long in a forest or wood, hungry and dry and thirsty, he casts his eye upon a well laden Apple tree full of goodly fruit, Oh how welcome is it, and so much the more welcome, because he did not expect to find such a tree there: and so it is with poor creatures: how many are there wandering up and down in the world, hungry and thirsty and ready to faint, then doth Christ step in seasonably, then doth Christ present himself unto poor souls as an Apple-tree laden with delightful fruit; he says, Poor soul, thou shalt not famish, I will not suffer thee to famish; come take and eat of my fruit, and let thy soul forever be satisfied in me. Now the unexpectedness of the mercy doth heighten the mercy. I had thought I should never have seen thy face, says Jacob to Joseph, and now God hath shown it to me. Surely. Hagar was mightily taken with that fountain or well that was shown to her in the wilderness, when she was ready to perish, when she had given over her child for lost, and there was no water to give; then for the well to be shown her, surely this was a very welcome thing to her: and so when the soul is ready to faint, how often doth Christ present himself, as a well in the wilderness, and as an Apple-tree in the midst of the wood or forest; and how pleasant and comfortable is that? But again,

7. Seventhly, In the next place, He is said to be an Apple-tree among the Trees of the wood, because of the freeness of Christ: it holds forth much of the freeness of Christ in bestowing of himself upon poor creatures; an Apple-tree among the Trees of the wood, that's free for every man, for every man to take of, and eat of: If an Apple-tree be in a garden or an Orchard, a man may see it a great way off, and canit taste of it; he may desire it, and his stomach may be for it, but he despairs of it, because it's none of his: but an Apple-tree in a wood, that's free for all, for all that pass by; there's none excluded; but he that wants may go and take and eat of the fruit of it. It holds forth much of the fruit of Christ's love, he is not only an Apple-tree in the wood, but he is an Apple-tree in the forest: and therefore those tenders of grace that are held forth, Isaiah 55. 1, 2, 3. See there what invitation is made; Ho everyone that thirsteth come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money; come ye, buy and eat, yea, come buy wine and milk without money, and without price, &c. yea though a man has no money, yet he may come and drink of this water, and eat of the fruit of this Tree. That's a seventh particular.

8. Eighthly▪ But again, in the Eighth place, Christ is said to be a Tree among the Trees of the wood, Because there are very few that go forth to seek Christ, and few there are that find him, and seed upon him by faith. An Apple-tree that is in the midst of the forest, how few are there that feed on that Tree? It may be God by a special providence directs a poor, weary, hungry traveler, a weary man to that Tree; but how few are there that go to seek it! Men that have an Orchard at home, will hardly go to the wood. Men that have Orchards of their own, Trees growing at home, they will not go abroad: they which were invited to the feast, you know they would not come, they had enough, they had no need of Christ as they thought; and therefore they would take no pains. The Lord by his special grace must direct the poor soul to Christ, or else it's impossible they should come to him: indeed men will not come to Christ; ye will not come to me, says Christ, that I may give you life. In all these respects Christ is said here to be an Apple-tree, among the Trees of the wood: And therefore to conclude with one word of Application▪

Use. This lets us see the usefulness and desirableness of Jesus Christ: What's more useful and desirable in your Orchard, than the Apple-tree? If a man hath never so many Trees in his Orchard, he never thinks his Orchard complete, except he hath some Apple trees. Oh that the Lord would persuade your hearts, to look unto the Apple-tree, look to get the Apple-tree into your Orchard; get Christ into your hearts. Oh he is an useful and desirable Tree. Let me tell you the benefit of it in a word or two.

It will be a comfortable shelter to you. The Apple tree that is Planted in your Orchard, it will keep off a storm from your house. Christ in the heart is a comfortable shelter to the poor soul. Oh how many a storm of wrath and indignation, which blows from Heaven, and Christ keeps it off from the poor Soul!

Nay again, Let me tell you that this Apple-tree it's a Tree of Life; and therefore worth the seeking after, that you may get him planted in your garden. I say it's a Tree of Life, whosoever eats of this Tree lives forever. Your fathers they did eat Manna in the wilderness, says Christ, and they are dead, John 6. 58. but he that eats of the bread that I shall give him, shall never die, says he, he shall live forever: it must needs be so, for Christ he is a Tree of Life.

Again, He is not only a Tree of Life, but he is a Tree of knowledge: and therefore worth the seeking after. You read in Genesis 3. of the Tree of knowledge that was in the midst of the garden, which the woman looked upon: and it was very desirable for three things▪ 6. verse. The woman saw, that the Tree was good for food, and that it was pleasant to the eye, and a Tree to be desired to make one wise; she took of the fruit thereof, and did eat, and gave also to her husband. Truly all this is to be found in Christ; he is good for food ye heard before, they that eat of him, shall live forever. He is pleasant to the eye▪ Oh how beautiful is he in his Nature, and in his person! thou art fairer than the Children of men: and he is desirable to make one wise; he that feeds upon Christ is made wise indeed; he that knows Christ, is the wisest man in the world; it's Christ that opens the eye: the eating of Christ, this Tree, opens the eyes and makes men wise, wise to salvation, wise to know and understand the great mysteries of God in Christ, even those mysteries hid from ages and generations. Again, I might tell you, This Tree, it brings forth fruit at all times, and therefore desirable; the Apple trees in your gardens and Orchards, they woe'nt bring forth fruit in winter; but this Apple-tree, Christ, every Month in the year, every Summer and winter, every day of the Month: look upon Christ with an eye of Faith, and you shall find him full laden with fruit. Oh how useful a tree is Christ! Again.

I might tell you also, here you might have a staff to lean on, upon this Tree you might have a staff to lean on▪ I am thy God to old age. The waters that the Children of Israel drank of, were bitter till such time as Moses cut down boughs, and they made the waters sweet; such boughs grow upon this Apple-tree; it will make your bitter waters sweet. Oh there is love in Christ, there is goodness in Christ, and precious Promises, which if cast into those bitter waters, afflictions, the sorest bitterest afflictions, these boughs will make them sweet. Get into this Apple-tree. Why do you endeavor to get Briars and Thorns, and Oaks and wild Trees and Crab-trees, and in the mean time neglect this Apple-tree? there is a Curse upon the ground and on every soul, even the curse of the ground, thorns and thistles, and these here will grow, till such time as Christ be planted: Nay, if Christ be not planted in the garden, God the Father canit walk there; If the Tree of Life be not there, if the Tree of Knowledge be not there. God takes no delight to walk in the garden. The soul out of Christ, where Christ is not planted, that soul can have no gracious and sweet communion with him? Well then,

What an Invitation is here for poor souls to come in to Christ? Christ is the Apple-tree, an Apple-tree in the midst of the trees of the wood: Oh! why will men reject Christ? Poor sinners, why are you fearful through unbelief, to come to Christ? If Christ were a briar or thorn or thistle, you might be afraid of him; but he is as the Apple-tree among the Trees of the wood; he is laden with fruitful branches; if Christ were a Tree hemmed in, walled in, you might despair of having any fruit, but he is open to you: whoever thirsts let him come, whoever hungers let him come, take and eat of this fruit. Poor souls you have the leave of God, nay, you have not only leave, but you have command to come and eat of this Tree of life: it's the commandment, that you come and believe in Jesus Christ. Oh what stragglings and perverse hearts lodge in our bosoms! There was a time when God said of the Tree of knowledge of good and evil, Thou shalt not eat of it, and then man would eat; and now the Lord hath set up another tree of life, and the Lord says, Thou shall eat of this tree of Life, and now they will not, though the eating then, and the not eating now is like to cost many thousand souls lives. The Lord help you to consider of it!

SERMON III.

CANT. 2. 3. At the Apple-tree among the Trees of the Wood, so is my Beloved among the Sons: I sat down under His Shadow with great delight, and His Fruit was sweet to my Taste.

I Told you before, here is a twofold comparison, the sons of men are compared to the Trees of the wood, the Trees of the forest, which are wild Trees, which hold forth the state of all men by Nature; we have done with that.

The second is, The son of God is compared to the Apple-tree among those Trees. I shown you in what respect Christ is compared to the Apple-tree; and the last day I shown why Christ is said to be as the Apple tree among the Trees of the wood: why not an Apple tree among the Trees of the Garden, but as the Apple tree among the Trees of the wood.

Use 1. First, let such as profess the name of Christ, be like unto Christ. That's the use of the point I shall make at this time. They that profess Christ must be like Christ. Labor to be fruitful Trees, fruitbearing trees; and look that your fruit be of this Apple-tree, and bring forth much of this fruit, as Christ did: yea be like unto Christ in being Appletrees in the midst of the wood. To this head I shall reduce all that I shall press upon you at this time.

First of all, Christians should labor to be fruitbearing trees: the Lord Jesus Christ would rather be set forth by a fruit-bearing tree, than by a tree of strength, or a tree of tallness; not the Oak or the Cedar, but the Apple-tree, and that because it's a fruitbearing tree. Oh how should Christians labor to be fruitful in their place! it's better to be serviceable to God and man, in your place and Generation, and relation, than to have places, titles, honors and dignities amongst the great ones of the world: and Christians should rather choose to be serviceable to God and man, than to seek great things for themselves in the world: there's a notable parable in Judges 9. 8. The trees went forth on a time to anoint a King over them, and they said unto the Olive-tree, Reign thou over us. But the Olive-tree said unto them, Should I leave my fatness wherewith by me they honor God and man, and go to be promoted over the trees? There was a particular application of the parable: the Sons of Gideon chose rather to be useful in Israel, than to be honorable in Israel: it holds forth thus much in general, a gracious heart will rather choose a place of service than a place of honor; I will not leave my goodness, my sweetness and my fatness, says the Olive-tree, fig-tree and the vine: no though to be promoted over and beyond other trees: consider that it is the greatest Commendation of a Christian to be a serviceable and fruit-bearing tree; I say it is the greatest commendation unto men that they are serviceable unto God in their place and generation: look unto David, in Act. 13. see what a special commendation God gives of him, v. 36. after he had served his own generation, by the will of God he then fell asleep: it was the greatest commendation that God could give David, when he would speak honourably of David; when David is gone, this was his commendation, he served his generation, he was a fruit-bearing tree, he served his generation according to the will of God; He sought the glory of God, he labored to do good to the sons of men whilst he was here upon earth; and so David served his generation: Brethren, it's no commendation for a man to live long, if he do not serve his generation; It's no commendation for a tree to stand a hundred years, if it be not a fruitful Tree: Let us see,

1. First of all wherein God begins to commend David; he begins at the service of his Generation: as if God did not take notice of other time that men spend, in which there is no service done to him; he doth not say after he had lived so long, or after he had served so long, but after he had served his generation according to the will of God; A man may live a hundred years upon earth, and may stand so long, and yet be an accursed tree all the time of his standing, if he be not a fruitful tree, and a tree doing some good for his generation wherein he lives: you may see the prophecy of the Prophet Isaiah, 65. 20. But the sinner being an hundred years old, shall be accursed: so that it is not simply a blessing to live long, to stand long, if a man be not a fruitful Tree; for a man may stand a hundred years, says the Scripture, and yet all that time be under a curse. Again,

2. Secondly, I beseech you remember that you have the example of Christ: you have the example of Christ and of his people before you, who are all trees of righteousness, fruit-bearing trees: What abundance of fruit did Christ bring forth to his Father, when he was upon earth? Every bough and every branch be full of precious fruit. To see the Glory of the only begotten Son, full of grace and truth. See Rev. 22. what is spoken there of this fruitful tree; and it's Christ that is this tree, the tree of life. Blessed are they that do his Commandments, that they may have right to the tree of Life. Oh what a fruitful tree is this tree of Life! He brings forth fruit every Month; continually full of fruit, and all that was in Christ was useful; the very leaves are good▪ the very leaves of this tree of Life were good. Oh the precious balm that dropt from the leaves of this tree of life, into poor afflicted and wounded Souls! The very leaves of it were good for the healing of the Nations: And it was Jobs commendation, and it was also his comfort, when the hand of the Lord was upon him, that he brought forth fruit, that he was a fruit-bearing tree, Job 29. 11. When the ear heard me, then it blessed me, and when the eye saw me, it gave witness to me: and as the ear and eye blessed him, so the loins blessed him, Job 31. 20. the loins of the Poor blessed him, that he warmed and that he refreshed: So that this was a great comfort unto Job, in the day of his distress, when all his friends upbraided him with hypocrisy, he knew that grace would uphold him, he was not an unfruitful tree, but was still serviceable in the place and relation God had set him.

3. Thirdly, Nay let me further tell you, that if Christians be not fruit-bearing trees, they are a dishonor to Christ; it's a dishonor to the very root they profess they are engrafted upon. When you come to a tree whose branches are dead and withered, and you see there is no fruit upon it, you will complain presently, and say there is some fault in the root; the fruit is dry and withered, the unfruitful branches are a dishonor to the root. Unfruitful Christians are a dishonor to Christ. Oh! What will the world say, when they come to look upon Christians, when they see they are dry, withered, and fruitless, and there is no more to be seen in them than in others? What says the world? why, the blame is cast upon their head, the root: these are the Christians, these are the professors. Oh wherein do men take occasion? Oh give no just occasion for men to speak dishonourably of Christ whom you profess.

4. Fourthly, Again it's the dishonor of the husbandman to have an unfruitful tree, Joh. 15. 1. I am the vine, and my Father is the Husbandman: every branch in me that beareth no fruit, he taketh away, and every branch that beareth fruit he purgeth it that it may bring forth more fruit: and so when the Gardener, the Husbandman, shall let a tree stand forty years, and be unfruitful, this man will be accounted unskillful in his Vineyard: Why, so if the Lord should let such trees to stand forty, fifty or a hundred years, and no fruit brought to him, it's a great dishonor to the husbandman.

2. Secondly, Therefore again secondly, Christians should look that their fruit be the fruit of the Apple tree, be like to Christ: in this, he was as the Apple tree among the trees of the wood: You know the Apple-tree is known by the smoothness of the branches; it's not full of pricks and Thorns, as many other trees are; It will not scratch, it will not tear or rend, as others will, though men break the branches, and spoil them, yet it doth not tear or rend them: and truly thus was Christ, and thus it becomes Christians to be; He was no thorn, he was beset with thorns, Isaiah 53. 7. he was oppressed, he was dumb, he opened not his mouth: as a Sheep that is dumb before his shearer: he did not revile, he did not render reviling for reviling, he did not reproach, and the smoking flax he did not quench, nor break the bruised reed, he did not strive, he did not cry, his voice was not heard in the streets; and thus was Christ, and thus it becomes Christians. Christians should not tear and rend; they should not bear pricking thorns; they should not render evil for evil, they should not pour forth expressions of hatred, envy and wrath. This is for the briar and the thorn; this is not for the Apple-tree. If you be Apple trees, be like to Christ in this. But,

3. Thirdly, Again the Apple-tree is known by the fruit. There's a great deal of fruit that is like the fruit of the Apple-tree, that is not known till such time as men come to taste it. It's possible that a wild tree may be as fair and as beautiful as the Apple-tree; but when you come to taste it, you will distinguish the fruit of the wild tree; the Crab tree, it's sour, it's bitter; the fruit of the Apple-tree is sweet and pleasant. Brethren, know, God doth examine all your fruit and all the Apples, and God doth taste every fruit,

First of all, by the Principle, and secondly, by men's End.

1. First of all, The Lord doth taste men's fruit by their principle; he examines from whence men brought forth their fruit, whence came their fruitfulness: he examines whether they were grafted upon a good stock or no; the Lord knows it I say by the taste: when you take a twig, or cyon and graft it on an Elder, or some other tree that hath an ill taste, the fruit will taste as the tree is: If it be engrafted upon a good stock, the fruit will be good; the Lord will examine every man's stock, whether he be engrafted on Christ or on himself. See Hosea 14. 8. I am like a green firr tree (the words of Christ) and from me is all thy fruit found. That's good fruit that grows upon Christ, that comes from Christ, that tastes of Christ.

Object. But you will say, When doth a man's fruit taste of Christ?

Answ. 1. First of all; When the Soul is still laboring to get out of itself, is still emptying itself, getting out of himself: when a man doth all that he can do; and yet looks upon himself as vile, and wretched, abhorring himself in dust and ashes; when he continually says, there is nothing at all in him that is good. The Apostle Paul says it: that is his expression, and it was the expression of a gracious heart, Rom. 7. 18. For I know that in me (that is in my flesh) dwelleth no good thing. When the Soul is thus taken up (with Paul) emptying itself, and looking upon itself as a poor vile, weak, wretched creature, utterly unable to do anything in his own strength for God, and lying at the footstool of Christ, breathing and waiting; this fruit is not of himself, but it tastes of Christ. But again,

Answ. 2. Secondly, the fruit tastes of Christ, when as the soul doth all out of a principle of Faith. It works from a principle of faith: It hath seen the tenders of grace in the Gospel, how the Lord doth freely and graciously hold forth himself to poor lost sinners; and hath through the power of God made a close with his tender of grace, received it by faith, so that now this faith it works by love; and all that ever the Soul doth, it desires to do it out of love to God; when it comes thus from a principle of faith, it doth always act by love, then the Soul tastes and feeds upon Christ. But again,

3. Thirdly, the Soul tastes of Christ, when it lives from a continual dependence on Christ; when the Soul goes only out to Christ for righteousness and strength and Salvation; when it goes out to Christ for all grace, strength and Holiness; for strength to perform every duty, and to bear every burden; and to walk wisely and graciously in every relation; when the Soul lies breathing and waiting upon Christ (as the Poor man in the Gospel, who laid at the pool of Bethesda,) when the soul lies waiting for the movings of Christ, and is continually opening its savory affections to Christ; looks upon itself as a Ship at sea in a Calm, and is not able to stir, unless the wind move, unless the wind blow; I say when the soul doth thus act, this fruit tastes of Christ; and thus doth Paul profess that he lived in a continual dependence upon Christ, and that all that he did, it was not from himself or anything of his own, but it was from Christ: See that place in the Galatians from which a gracious Spirit doth breath, Gal. 2. 20. I am Crucified with Christ; nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me, and the Life which I live in the flesh, I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me and gave himself for me. Here's a gracious expression, I live, says he, and yet not I, it's Christ that lives in me. When the soul can thus refer all to Christ, and, says, I believe, and it's not I but Christ that helps me, and so I obey, yet not I, but it's the Spirit of Christ in me; and I suffer, yet not I, but Christ strengthening me; I pray and I perform duties, and yet not I, but it's the Spirit of Christ in me, that breaths in me; when the soul thus goes out of itself, and depends upon Christ for all grace and strength, and all Holiness, as well as for life and Salvation, now doth the fruit of this Soul taste of Christ, God knows it, he tastes of Christ in it. But then again,

2. Secondly, As God doth taste of the principles of the Soul as by the Stock from whence it comes, so also by the ends of it. What's the end of a man's action, what is the end of that he doth for God, what is the end of his affections, of his forwardness, of his duties? the Lord judgeth of all the fruit by the ends of it; why, if the Glory of God be a man's end in all that he doth, this tastes of the fruit of Christ, of the fruit of the Apple-tree; but if a man aim at his own ends, if a man seek himself in all that he doth, it tastes strong of Self, and the Lord hath no delight in it; see what is said in Hosea 10. 1. Israel is an empty Vine, and yet he brings forth fruit; how can these two stand together? he brings forth fruit, but he brings forth no good fruit, he is empty because he is empty to God, he brings forth fruit and that fruit is empty, it's to himself, and so empty: and so God looks upon him as an empty Vine; if a man bring forth never so much fruit, (it being to himself) it can't be called good, but seamless fruit, and all that fruit is lost, the Lord takes no delight in that fruit, it's not for God's taste, when as it's not brought forth unto him.

Object. But you will say, when doth a man bring forth fruit to God? What are the ends that a man should propound to himself in all his actions to God, that makes his fruit to be good?

Answ. When the Soul doth all that it doth, that it may testify its thankfulness that it owes to God for the great and wonderful salvation that comes in by Christ; when a man says, I will take the Cup of Salvation, and call upon the Name of God; When a man does all that he doth to testify his Subjection to God, and only does all his works that he may honor and lift up God's name in the world; that he may be serviceable and instrumental to do God service in his generation, when he makes this his end: when a man shall do all for this end, that God may reap the Glory, that God may eat of the fruit he hath planted, that God may not lose all his labor, and all his pains, and all his cost; that so he that hath planted the tree in his Orchard, may eat the fruit of it; so that when a man makes not himself the end, but God the sole end, this God tastes of as savory, as a fruit savoury to himself. But again,

2. Secondly, Christians should labor to bring forth much of this fruit; a good tree brings forth much fruit: Oh how full was Christ! every bough was full of fruit: Therefore the people of God, they are compared unto trees that are planted by the rivers side, it's said, they shall be as trees planted by the rivers of waters: they are fruitful trees that are well watered, and so bring forth abundance of fruit; Oh Christians, remember this was the end of Christ's coming, that you may bring forth fruit, and bring forth abundance of fruit; you should not only be trees, but bring forth abundance of fruit. I came that you might have life; and that you might have it more abundantly: See that promise and make much of it, Psalm 92. it's a gracious promise, and may tend through the blessing of God to quicken dead unfruitful hearts, v. 12, 13. the righteous shall flourish like a Palm tree: he shall grow like a Cedar in Lebanon; those that be planted in the house of the Lord, shall flourish in the Courts of our God, they shall bring forth fruit in old age: they shall be fat and flourishing: it's a large promise, they shall be fat and flourishing, and they shall bring forth fruit in old age; therefore you that complain of the deadness, and unfruitfulness of your hearts, look to the promise, and say, Oh Lord I have a dead heart, my branches are withered, I even despair of bringing forth fruit to God; why, do not look to thy own deadness, look to the promise of God: It's said of Abraham, he had a dead body, or as good as dead in respect of begetting Children, Rom. 4. yet he looked to the promise, v. 19, 20. And being not weak in faith he considered not his own body now dead when he was about an hundred years old, neither the deadness of Sarah's womb: he staggered not at the promise of God through unbelief; but was strong in Faith giving glory to God, he had a dead body, and yet his faith was revived: when he looked to the promise of God, he was confident that God who had promised was able to perform: and thou that complainest of the deadness of thy heart, do not look upon thine own heart, but upon the promise, God will declare his faithfulness and whatsoever he hath promised he will fulfill it.

Object. But you will say, how should we believe it? we see the contrary: how is this promise made good that the righteous shall bring forth fruit in old age? do not we see many times how the best Christians decay in old age? which makes us even afraid to live to old age▪

Answ. Certainly the promise of God is made good, they do flourish, and bring forth fruit in old age: an old Christian, though he may not bring forth so much of some fruit, yet he brings forth more of other fruit, than young Christians do; it may be there is not so much Zeal, nor so much activity for God, ay, but there may be more rootedness, more stedfastness, more establishment of heart; the heart may be more rooted, more grounded upon him: this makes the fruit the more savoury: the less of Self, and the more of Christ is in him, the more well pleasing is it to God's taste. Now I say that old Christians (it's true) may decay in parts and gifts, in utterance and expression, and the like, and yet may not decay in grace: the inward man, the hidden man in the heart, that may wax strong, and be more fresh, green and fruitful.

2. Secondly, Again I say to this that young Christians may have more activity, but old Christians may have more Skill, and therefore though they may not act as formerly, yet there may be abundance of Skill in holy things; as the wise man says, remember thy creator before old age comes, before the daughters of music fall low, before the voice is gone; he was able it may be to sing clear before, yet now he may have as much skill, and it may be more than ever though old; and so of an old Christian, this may be said, that young Christians may bring forth more fruit, but old Christians may bring forth sweeter fruit; it's so of older trees, they bring forth sweeter fruit, though not so much indeed as young trees: why, so, old Christians that hold fast in their Integrity, if they do not bring forth so much as the young tree, yet they bring forth sweeter and pleasanter fruit; and still the Lord is faithful in his promise, the righteous bring forth fruit in old age; and therefore look to the promise of the Lord, and let this promise strengthen your faith.

3. Thirdly, Again, Labor to grow up in grace: the Lord loves to walk in his Orchard, when there are fruitful trees he loves to bestow his pains upon them, he will hedge them, he will prune them, he will spare no cost on his fruitful trees; nay the Lord will not cut down his fruitful trees, here's great encouragement for Christians to bring forth much fruit in their Generation: God doth spare those who bring forth much fruit: God gave command in the book of Deuteronomy when as they went out to war, Deut. 20. 19 When thou shalt besiege a City a long time, in making war against it, to take it, thou shalt not destroy the trees thereof, by forcing an ax against them, for thou mayest eat of them. For the trees of the Field might be employed in the siege, the trees that brought forth no fruit, those trees should be cut down; but those that bear fruit shall not (by God's command) be cut down: you that are fruitbearing trees, the Lord takes special care of you, the Lord will not cut down those trees: the husbandman he comes and looks on a branch, and sees no fruit, he is ready to cut it down; ay, but if there comes one and spies a cluster on it, if it be but one cluster, do not cut it down, surely it is not dead, here is a cluster on it. Oh the grace and goodness of God towards his people, there is something of Christ found in such, and therefore Lord cut them not down; thus mercy pleads: Well then, you that belong to Christ, bring forth much fruit. If you ask me how? I answer, look to God the great husbandman, he is such a husbandman as he knows how to make you fruitful: Paul plants, and Apollo waters, but God gives the increase; look to the Lord, be willing to submit unto God in whatsoever way God shall deal with you, be willing that the Husbandman should prune you, launce you, that he should cut off your unsound branches; Submit unto God's ways of affliction, though they be never so hard, the Lord he can by them make you fruitful. The rain it makes ways dirtie, but in time it makes grounds fruitful. The Lord he can make thy trees fruitful, and the herbs that he hath sown and planted in thy heart fruitful: therefore submit unto God's ways, and get nigher to Christ as ever thou desirest to be fruitful; the branches that are nearest the root, those branches bring forth most fruit: Christ is the root, and you that are in Christ cleave more to him, and let your dependence be on him. The nigher you are to him, the more fruit you shall bring forth.

4. Fourthly, The fourth and last thing and I have done, Let Christians be like unto Christ in this, that they be Apple trees in the midst of the wood. Christ he was an Apple-tree among briars and thorns in the world, Oh that Christians would be like unto Christ in this: It was the great commendation of Lot, Enoch, Moses, Josiah, David, and others that lived in an evil age, yet their hearts were upright for God; and truly though their services be hard service, and though God's people be in an evil world, yet in heaven they shall lift up God without opposition (and thought it be here with opposition, yet: still it makes the Name of God Glorious; to bring forth fruit when all the world is unfruitful, or hath nothing but wild fruit, this is their commendation. There are some professors, they will be Apple trees among the Apple trees, but when they are among the trees of the wood, then they'll be crab-trees; Christ though in the midst of the wood he was sweet and delightful fruit, though compassed about with sinners; well, look unto Christ to keep up your savoury fruit, that God may taste it, that you may still bring forth sweet and pleasant fruit, though compassed about with Wild trees. And so much for this time.

SERMON IV.

CANT. 2. 3. I sat down under His Shadow with great delight, and His Fruit was sweet to my Taste.

YOU heard in the former part of the verse, that the Lord Jesus is compared to an Apple tree in the midst of the trees of the wood; and I pressed it upon you the last day, that you should be like unto Christ: Choose to be fruit-bearing trees; it's better to be a fruitful tree than to be a tall Cedar or a mighty Oak; I proceed to what remains.

You have heard of the tree: Now consider the two resemblances in which Christ is compared unto the Apple-tree. Here is a Specification, or an Illustration of the Simile. First, Here is an Apple-tree for the nature; And secondly, for the fruit: so that these words hold forth,

1. First, How Beneficial Christ was, and how Beneficial he is as he is a tree. And
2. Secondly, What use the believing soul makes of him.

First, He is beneficial for his shadow, that's delightful, a pleasant delightful shadow. Secondly, Then he is beneficial for his fruit, his fruit that is sweet also: now the use that the believing Soul makes of Christ is,

First, It sits down under his shadow: I sat down under his shadow with great delight. Secondly, It eats of his fruit; His fruit was sweet to my taste: So that both his shadow and his fruit is exceeding pleasant and delightful to the believing Soul.

The words have two several readings: Some read them thus. In his shadow I delight and sit down; I desired and sat down in his shadow: Or in his shadow I desired to sit; I desired that I might sit down, for the word signifies both desire and delight, now I take it so. I desired that I might sit down. It holds forth,

1. First, the Vehemence of affection which is in the believers heart to Christ, the mighty strong desire, the breathings and pantings, the desires of a gracious heart are carried out strongly after Christ; Ps. 42. 1, 2. they are the expressions of mighty strong desires, vehement desires after God: as the heart panteth after the water brooks, so doth my Soul after thee, O God; my soul thirsts after God, for the living God; when shall I come and appear before God! so, Isa. 64. 1. the Church expresses her strong desires after God; Oh that thou wouldst rent the heavens and that thou wouldst come down, that the mountains might flow down at thy presence: the expressions of vehement desires after Christ, it's like the desire of a Servant, or laboring Man after the shadow, so Job expresses it, Job 7. 2. he sets down what desire the laboring man hath: as a servant earnestly desireth the shadow, and as a hireling looketh for the reward of his work, he thirsts after it, he breaths after it, when a man desires and breaths after a thing he draws in the air, he sucks and pants after it, such is the desire of a poor Soul.

2. It doth not hold forth only vehemence of desire, but it holds forth constancy of desire, I desire that I may sit down: she was sat, but she desired to sit still, I desire to sit longer and to continue under the shadow, as a man that sits under a shadowy place at ease, he is loath to be disturbed: One thing have I desired of the Lord, says David, Psal. 27. his desires were like unto the desires of the Spouse here; v. 4. one thing have I desired of the Lord, and that will I seek after all the days of Life, to behold the beauty of the Lord, and to enquire in his temple: David desired all his days to sit under the Ordinance, that he might behold the beauty of God.

I shall look towards the other reading, which is more known: I sat down under his shadow with delight: Or I delighted and sat down under his shadow, and his fruit was sweet to my taste. She had a great delight; as her desires were strong, so her delight was good. When a Soul finds Christ, it always finds a Sweetness in him, which is proportionable to all its desires: It's not so in the things of the world: a man may have strong desires after vanities and creature comforts, but when he enjoys them, he can take no delight in them; but it is not so in the enjoyment of Christ, the delight is proportionable to the desire of the Soul; nay, it's more in Christ than it expected: it's able to say as the Queen of Sheba did of Solomon, I heard a great deal of thy wisdom, said she, but the half was not told me. I shall clear up two things in the words.

1. First, show you what this shadow is that the spouse sat under.

2. Secondly, What is it to sit under this shadow?

1. First, What is the shadow the Spouse sat under with so much delight? they are either natural or metaphorical; you know what a natural shadow is, it's a darker or obscurer light which is caused by the Interposition of your body betwixt the eye and the sun, when the Trees or the Mountains stand betwixt you and the Sun, they cast a shadow towards you; now there are shadows of the night, and shadows of the day: indeed night is nothing else but a shadow, a great shadow, nothing but the shadow of the earth, the earth coming betwixt the Sun and us, therefore the shadow: the night, it's a privation of light, and therefore it's terrible, the shadows of the night are dreadful to nature because it's a privation of light: but the shadow of Christ is not the shadow of the night, for his shadow is no dreadful shadow, indeed it's like the shadow of the night for the largeness of it, because the shadow that Christ casts it reaches the whole earth over, it's a mighty large shadow, that thousands and ten thousands of poor weary souls may sit under, and so indeed it resembles the shadow of the night: but it's not the shadow of the night, it's a comfortable shadow, a delightful shadow, it's the shadow of the day, it's as the shadow of the trees, or as the shadow of a Rock in the midst of Summer: as you know they are exceeding pleasant and delightful. So then we shall enquire what is the use of these shadows, that we may see how useful Christ is to the Soul.

1. First of all, The use of the natural shadow it serves for Secrecy: If a man will hide himself, or retire himself, he will go among the shadows. A man that walks amongst the woods and shadows, he is not so easily found, as when he walks in the open field, and no trees, and so nothing to shadow him; and therefore the Lord is said to shadow his people, Isa. 51. 16. I have put my word into thy mouth, and covered thee in the shadow of my hand, there I have hid thee, that thou mayst be safe: and thus Beloved is Christ a shadow: Christ is a shadow to his people in that he is their hiding-place, they are hid in Christ, their life is hid in Christ, and their comforts are all hid in Christ, they are hid from wrath, they are hid from displeasure, they are hid from enemies, they are hid from the power of temptation: and therefore God puts Moses into the Rock, when he would hide him, which rock was a type of Christ: the Soul that is in Christ it lies in the rock, it lies in the clefts of the Rock, it's in Christ that the soul enjoys sweet Communion with God, it retires itself and hides itself in Christ, and converses sweetly with the Almighty.

2. Secondly, As the shadow is a place for secrecy, so a place for rest; I say it's a place for rest: When a man, a laboring man in the field, desires to sit down, he will sit down under a shadow; the expression of Job before, as the servant earnestly desires the shadow; why wherefore does he desire the shadow, but that he might sit down and rest? there is nothing so welcome to him as a shadow, a shadowy place where he may sit down and rest: In this respect Christ is a shadow to his people, he is a sweet resting-place: it's not possible the soul should rest but in Christ, it never finds rest till it come to Christ: therefore he calls, Math. 11. 28. poor laden Souls, such as are weary and tired, and have spent their labor and strength in vain; Come to me, says he, you that are weary and heavy laden, and I will give you rest: the Soul does never rest sweetly till it come down and rest sweetly under Christ.

3. Thirdly, Again, a shadow it's a place of coolness and of refreshment, it's a defense against the heat: if a man desire to walk in the height of Summer, he will walk in the shadow; thus is Christ to his people. You shall see what is said in that Isa. 32. 2. And a man shall be as a hiding-place from the wind, as a covert from the tempest, as a river of water in a dry place, as the shadow of a great rock in a weary Land: as the shadow of a great rock▪ which keeps off the heat and the scorching of the Sun; and thus is Christ to a poor Soul, a poor fainting Soul, that is scorched with the heat and displeasure of the Lord, why there is no sitting down but under Christ. When the Soul sits down under wrath and displeasure, he makes every place too hot, and every condition too hot, and there is no sitting down under any creature comfort; a man can't sit down under the shadow of any creature, or under the shadow of himself, or under the shadow of his own righteousness, the Sun of wrath will be too hot for him, he will soon set all the straw and stubble on fire, there is no rest there, and it can't sit down until it come to Christ.

4. Fourthly, Again, To sit down with Christ there is Contemplation and Meditation; for a man to exercise his thoughts and meditation he will choose a shadowy place: the Lord Christ he is thus a shadow. When the Soul sits under Christ, it may contemplate the glory of God that is in Christ. God reveals precious things, excellent things to his people, such as eye hath not seen nor ear heard, nor the heart of man can conceive; the soul sits down under Christ, and it gains more of the knowledge of God in one day, than in many years: all the knowledge that God gives of himself, it's in, and through Christ. God gives knowledge, says the Apostle, but it's in the Face of Jesus Christ. I say whilst the Soul sits under Christ, it's under a shadow, and it may contemplate on the great things of the Kingdom of God, and is learnt to know that which is hid from the wise and prudent of the world. Again,

5. Fifthly, We are wont to use the shadow for a place of refreshing ourselves, eating and drinking under it. It was usual among the Patriarchs in those hot contries: the Angels when they came to Abraham, he desired them to sit under a tree, and made provision ready, and there they did eat; and thus is Christ useful unto his people, whilst they sit under Christ, they feed upon precious fruit; I sat under his shadow, and his fruit was sweet to my taste, under God in Christ. God doth make a sweet Banquet for the Soul, and the soul, though it enjoys many promises, and never so many precious ordinances, yet unless the soul sits under the shadow of Christ, it can't feed upon them, it can take no delight in them. If a man have never so good meat, in the height of Summer, if he hath no shadow to keep off the Scorching beams of the Sun, he can't eat his meat with delight. So the soul if it looks not upon God in Christ, as he is a shadow to him, it can't partake of any of that dainty with delight.

6. Sixthly, Again, You know a man can't look upon the beauty and light of the Sun with ease, it is so Glorious as it spoils the sense: but if a man look through the trees, or the shade he may see the sun: and thus the Lord he doth cause the Soul to see Christ, and thus the soul it beholds his Glory; Thou canst not see my face and live. But thus I will do, I will put thee in the Rock, and so thou shalt see some glimpse of Glory. It's in and through Christ that the Soul sees something of God, for he could not else behold his Glory, for our God is a consuming fire; thus you see what the natural shadow is, so is Christ.

2. Secondly, There are Metaphorical shadows: shadow in Scripture is taken in a Metaphorical sense: the shadow is taken for a defense; as they that sit under protection, are said to sit under a shadow. So Isa. 30. 1, 2, 3. Woe to the rebellious Children, saith the Lord, that take counsel but not of me; and that cover with a covering, but not of my Spirit, that they may add sin to sin: that walk to go down into Egypt, and have not asked at my mouth, to strengthen themselves in the strength of Pharaoh, and to trust in the shadow of Egypt. Therefore shall the strength of Pharaoh be your shame; and the trust in the shadow of Egypt your confusion. God pronounceth woe to them that run down to Egypt; you see there that strength and shadow is all one, they trust in the strength of Egypt: under the shadow of Egypt, that is the strength of Egypt. They thought that Egypt should have been their protection: so Psa. 17. when David prays that the Lord would protect him, he prays that the Lord would be a shadow to him; there protection and shadow is all one. Verse 8. keep me as the Apple of thine eye, hide me under the shadow of thy Wings: Now if you take shadow in this Metaphorical sense, for defense and protection, it's very evident that Christ is thus a shadow unto his people, he is their defense and protection: It's he that defends them from the wrath of God, and it's he that defends them from the wrath of man. It's said of some trees, the Laurel tree and some other, they are a defense unto men in a tempest of thunder and Lightening. However it's true of Christ. He that sits under Christ, he is a defense from thunder and lightening, from the wrath of God, and that Soul that stands under him he is safe and well protected.

And as he is a defense to man from the wrath of God, so he is a defense from the wrath of man; Isa. 4. 6. And there shall be a Tabernacle for a shadow in the daytime from the heat; and for a place of refuge, and for a covert from storm and from rain. The Lord Christ promiseth protection unto his people in the day time, when it's never so hot, when the wrath of man is fierce and cruel: and there is a like promise in the 25. of the same prophecy, 4. verse, For thou hast been a strength to the poor, a strength to the needy in his distress, a refuge from the storm, a shadow from the heat, when the blast of the terrible ones is as a storm against the wall, &c. the Lord Christ he is such a shadow, such a protection to his people against the heat and tempest of all wrathful ones.

2. Secondly, Again, A shadow in the Metaphorical sense, it signifies afflictions and sorrows, and sometimes Death itself, because they are privations of comfort, even as the shadow is a privation of light, and these may be called Christ's shadows: the sufferings of Christ are Christ's shadows: It was the sufferings of Christ that did eclipse his glory when he was here upon earth: now all these shadows these sufferings of Christ, though they were dreadful shadows to him, yet they are comfortable shadows to his people from first to last; all the sufferings of Christ are comfortable shadows to his people. He sat under them with abundance of grief and dolour, that so his people might sit under him with abundance of joy and peace and comfort; his temptations were all sore griefs. Oh what a day of temptation was it to him? And yet how comfortable were these sufferings unto his people? Afflictions, even Death itself, was a shadow to Christ, and what a comfortable refreshing was it to his people! When Christ was upon the Cross he cast a great shadow, and what comfortable refreshment is it for poor weary Souls to sit under it?

3. Again, Thirdly, The shadow in a Metaphorical sense in Scripture is a dark representation of a thing; that which doth represent a thing, it's called the shadow of it; as you know the types and Ceremonies and the whole Levitical Law, they did hold forth something of Christ, and therefore all those ceremonies and types they were shadows of things to come, and so the Apostle speaks of all those ceremonial things, they were the shadow, but the body is Christ. So then whatever it is that holds forth Christ, whatsoever it is that represents Christ to the soul, that may be called a shadow, the shadow of Christ under which the Soul sits down, which the Soul takes delight in. As all the Ordinances of Christ they hold forth something of Christ; as a man's picture is called a shadow; the ordinances, they hold forth Christ, there's the shadow of Christ in them. The word holds forth something of Christ, and so the Sacrament, and so the fellowship of the saints, there's something of Christ to be found in all these, to be seen and enjoyed in all these: this also is one of the shadows of Christ that a gracious heart desires to sit under; where ever it sees anything of Christ, in any word, any Ordinance, in any Communion of saints, there it takes delight, it blesses God for such communications of himself, and there it sits down, desiring with all faithfulness to wait upon God in them, that it may see more of Christ until such time as the day shall break and the shadows may fly away. Thus you may see what this shadow is that the believing soul desires to sit under, and how Christ is likened and set forth by the Natural and Metaphorical shadow.

Quest. But you will say in the next place, What is it to sit down under this shadow?

Answ. First of all, It's a Posture of rest, as walking is a moving posture, so sitting is a posture of rest; It holds forth, the soul is in a restless condition, till such time as it comes to Christ, there is no rest till such time as it pitches upon Christ: what says David, in that Psalm, he speaks unto his Soul there, when he desired that he might return to his rest, Psalm 116. 7. Now Oh my soul return unto thy rest, for the Lord he hath dealt bountifully with me: he had been wandering abroad in the world, and he found no rest there, he returns to God as to his resting-place, and now Oh my soul return unto thy rest.

2. Again, Secondly, it's a rest with Confidence; as it's a resting Posture, so it's a Confident Posture. A man will not sit down in a place of danger, if he sees danger he will not sit down: If a man be in such a place as he fears wild beasts or thieves, he will not sit down: why, when a man sits it's a confident Posture; to sit down with Christ, it's a confident Posture, it's to trust in Christ, when the soul lays all its weight upon Christ, when it looks to the power, goodness and faithfulness of the Lord Jesus, held forth in the promise, there it sits and ventures itself upon him, and saith with the Apostle, I know in whom I have trusted, and believed, and he is able to keep what I have committed to his trust.

3. Thirdly, Again, sitting it's a posture of steadfastness: when a man leans or rests upon another he is ready to fall down, but this holds forth the steadfastness of the souls condition in Christ. Oh then it's not possible the Soul should fall; he may be moved, but he shall not be greatly moved; he may be moved so as not to be removed; I have prayed for thee that thy faith fail not, nay twice he hath made this promise, that the gates of Hell shall not prevail against his people.

4. Again, Fourthly and lastly, This posture doth relate to continuance and abiding; and therefore that eternity of enjoyment of Christ is set down with that eternity of rest with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, in the Kingdom of God. If a man sit down, he will make some stay, it holds forth a continuance, or abiding of the soul with Christ, there it resolves to stay, there it resolves to take up; as the Lord says unto his people, here shall be my rest forever; so says the soul, Lord here I will rest, here I will abide and continue forever. Well then, to conclude all with a word of Application.

1. Use. First of all, it lets us see, whatsoever is in Christ is useful and delightful. Every passage of the life of Christ, yea all the sufferings of Christ, from first to last, how useful are they to the Saints, and how comfortable when they are improved by faith? Not only the fruit of the Tree is good, but the shadow of the Tree is good, the very shadow of Christ is good, the sufferings of Christ, the very death of Christ is exceeding useful and delightful, when the Soul delights in it: Oh how delightful is the Glory of Christ!

2. Use. But in a word I beseech you sit down under Christ's shadow, let not any Poor creature sit down under any other shadow but the shadow of Christ. Make haste, poor weary Souls, you that have toiled yourselves, and labored in vain, have sought for righteousness and consolation in yourselves, Oh that you would not think of sitting down under these shadows: But make haste to Christ, get out of yourselves and sit under his shadow. Let me tell you if you be not under this shadow of Christ, you are under the shadow of death; It's said of Christ before he came into the Land of Naphtali, they sat down under the region and shadow of Death: so Poor Souls, if you sit not under Christ's shadow, you sit under the very region of the shadow of death.

Nay, let me tell you further that it's not possible you should find rest, but only under this shadow; there is no creature can shadow you: the shadow of your own righteousness and your own works is too short to comfort you, and the shadow of all the works that men do enjoy they are too short. A man may solace himself under the shadow of the creature for a time, these shadows are too short when the Sun gets up to the height of it's beauty, and you have most need of shadow you can't have it. Poor Souls, when you have most need of cool refreshing shadows, these shadows go quite away; so that I say it's not possible that you should rest sweetly and securely under any other shadows but the shadow of Christ, it's not possible ye should hold out in the time of trial: you read of the stony ground in Math. 13. the corn that was sown upon it, when it came up, the Sun did arise, and though it did spring up, yet anon it withered, there was no root, and so it died: if Christ had been their shadow he could have helped it, but when the wrath of man was furious he could not stand long, but withered, because he had not depth of root: Oh what a sweet refreshing shadow is Christ! if he do overshadow the Soul, it may stand in any place, in any condition, though times of Persecution be never so hot. You know Christ was a shadow in the fiery furnace, a sweet refreshing shadow to the three Children, there he kept off the heat.

Nay, Consider further, all the shadows besides Christ are perishing, they are vanishing shadows; they are truly compared unto shadows; man walks in a vain shadow; whatever any man sits down under, he sits under a vain shadow, it flies away presently: you know the Prophet says, all flesh is grass, and the glory of it as the flower in the field, and what man would sit down under the shadow of grass? it's soon withered, and then the shadow is gone. What man will sit down under withering comforts? they are cut down in a moment: and what are these shadows? All creature comforts are like the shadow of Jonah's Gourd, it was a good refreshing shadow while he had it, but the Lord prepared a worm, and it did eat the Gourd before the Morning, and when the Sun did arise it did scorch the head of Jonah, and made him faint and sick: why, so the Lord he doth serve Poor creatures like Jonah, when the creature is gone and the shadow is gone, when a man apprehends the wrath of the Lord, and the displeasure of God, he hath nothing to shadow it; Oh what a hard affliction is this! what dangerous shadows are creature comfort to sit down under, which are prickling thorns and brambles? A man to sit down under thorns when he might as well sit down under the Apple tree: all creature comforts when a man sits down under them, if trusted in, they will prove tearing thorns, prickling thorns, and nothing but sorrow in them; now Christ he is a shadow wherein you may rest, you may rest upon Christ and lean upon Christ, and he is of Infinite sweet refreshing and support unto his people: take heed I say that you sit not down under the shadow of any creature comfort, but under Christ, and then this will follow, you shall sit down under him with sweet delight, and shall eat of his fruit, and this fruit will be sweet to your taste. But so much for this time.

SERMON V.

CANT. 2. 3. I sat under his shadow with great delight, and his fruit was sweet to my taste.

I Gave you the several readings of the verse: In his shadow I desired and sa^e, so some say; in his shadow I desired that I might sit: others thus, In his shadow I delighted and sat down; I have delighted. I come to the Application.

A word of Instruction. You see that everything that is in Christ is very useful; not so much as the shadow of Christ is useless: and if the shadow be so useful and desirable, what is the tree itself, and what is the fruit that this tree brings forth? And if so, then by way of caution, I say, take heed of sitting under the shadow of any one creature comfort. He that is not under the shadow of Christ, he is under the shadow of Death. It's a poor shadow that all creature comforts afford, it's a shadow that will not continue when the Sun shall break forth at noon day. You know the natural shadow it goes up when the Son is at the highest, and when men have most need of the shadow, the shadow goes up, and thus is the shadow of all creature comforts: in times of affliction, in times of distress when men have most need of them, then the shadow of creature comforts leaves them; but now Christ's shadow it's always refreshing, it continues even at noon day, he makes his flock to rest at noon day. It's not possible for the Soul to hold out in time of persecution, if it sits not under Christ's shadow: the stony ground is soon withered, why, because Christ did not overshadow it. Well then, I shall proceed to an use of Exhortation, and that is

Use. First, To speak to such as are strangers to Christ, to such as for the present sit under the shadow of Death, and under the shadow of Hell and destruction. Oh that the Lord would persuade your hearts to come and sit under the shadow of Christ! Poor sinners, you that are working the works of the Devil, you that are drudges to Satan, and your lusts, the base lusts of your own hearts, you that have a long time wearied yourselves in the service of sin, and spent your labor as the Prophet speaks, for that which cannot satisfy; Oh that you would not be content to be perpetual drudges to Satan. The Devil hath been willing to make you drudges, be not you willing to make yourselves everlasting drudges; Oh bethink of some resting-place where you may sit down and rest from this labor, from this bondage of Satan; it may be whilst you are under the pursuit of sin, you are not sensible of it, you are not sensible of those labors, pains and travails of the Soul. It fares with the poor sinner as it fares with a laboring man or a servant that is over-wrought; it may be (especially if he be used to it) he feels it not whilst he is in it, he feels not the ach, nor the evil of it; but when the evening comes, when he lies down for rest, he feels then the fruit of his former labor and travail in his bones; and truly so it is with many a sinner, whilst they are in the pursuit of sin, they feel not the pain, they feel not the ach, ay but the time is coming, the evening is coming, the night is coming, when they must lie down, when they can no longer go on, when they must whether they will or no rest from that Labor; then certainly they will find and feel the smart of their former drudgery and bondage in their Spirit: Our Lord Jesus made that an argument, John 9. 4. I must work the works of him that sent me whilst it's day: The night cometh when no man can work; but let me say the contrary to you, Oh do not work the works of Satan whilst it's day, do not work the works of sin all the day long, the night comes when you must cease the labor of sin, and then of a certain you will feel the smart of your pains and former services in sin; Oh then that the Lord would help you to consider when you shall have a resting place, when you shall sit down and rest your Souls, before the strength of your Spirits be spent in the labor of sin: Let me speak this word in your ear and tell you, the Lord Jesus is willing that you should sit down under his shadow, here's a sweet cool refreshing resting-place for you to take up in: And let me say further for your encouragement to come under this shadow,

That the Lord Jesus, he will keep you for the future; he will be a defense to you, that your old Master shall not take you away again, and the Soul whom Christ hath taken to himself is free from the bondage of sin, and if the Son make you free you shall be free indeed: if you sit under any shadow but Christ, the Devil, your lusts and your own hearts will fetch you back again: it may be you have sat down under your good works, vows, resolutions, humiliations and repentances, and the like, yet notwithstanding all this, the Devil and the corruption of your own hearts have fetched you back again to the old slavery, and to the old bondage. Oh that you would trust this shadow of Christ, this is such a shadow as Satan dare not come nigh; it's the shadow of the day, it's not the shadow of the night, it's such a shadow as is dreadful unto the powers of darkness. What have we to do with thee, saith the unclean Spirit, thou art the son of the living God; of a certain Christ will be a defense unto you, and a protection, and you shall not sit under your former slavery and bondage, if once you sit under his shadow; Oh then that you would not toil your Spirits in the service of sin and Satan: Oh what a racking of the conscience and soul have poor sinners in the Service of Satan! They are ready to sweat drops of water and blood, and they are not aware of it. Oh why will you tire yourselves in the heat, and weary and tire yourselves, when as you might sit down under such a pleasant shadow as the shadow of Jesus Christ is?

2. Use. Secondly, Let me speak a word to Poor Souls that are sensible of their bondage and misery by reason of sin, to such as cry out with David in Psam 38. 4. for mine iniquities are gone over mine head; as an heavy burden they are too heavy for me. Oh you say, you have travailed in the wilderness, and have set many a weary step in a dry and barren wilderness where no water is, and never a tree for a shadow to shelter you; you dare sit down under the shadow of your own comforts and the creatures righteousness, you see there is no shelter but under the shadow of the Almighty. Well, let me tell you here's a tree of life that springs up in this your wilderness, that casts a shadow over your Souls, here you may rest in a cool shadow, here will be a defense and a protection from the wrath of the Almighty. And let me say (for your encouragement) unto you,

First of all, That Christ is willing you should sit under his shadow, you have his own word for it, see what he speaks in Math. 11. 28. Come to me all you that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest: Why do you stick so long in that condition, why do you say you are not laden enough? you know not whether your spirits be laden aright or no, or whether you be made sensible enough of sin, or whether you may be so bold, as to come to Christ, and sit under this his shadow.

Christ doth not offer himself upon any conditions, upon the condition of your weariness, It's not a conditional promise, but it's an absolute promise, it's a sweet encouraging promise, come unto me you that are weary, says Christ, and I will give you rest. The Lord Jesus foresaw that they were most apt to be discouraged, poor laboring Souls, such as were pressed with the guilt and burden of sin, and he knew that they were such as were fearful in coming in unto him, but says he, come ye that are laden and weary, and I will give you rest, but then,

2. Secondly, Again, The Lord Jesus he is not only willing that you should sit under his shadow, but he will be a defense unto you under this shadow; you say you are hunted and pursued by Satan, you are hunted with wrath, Oh then that you would flee unto Christ, go now and sit under his shadow, there is no other shadow can defend you but this shadow of Christ. Adam you know he ran away from God when he was guilty, he goes and runs his head into the bushes, but the Lord found him out; there is no creature can be your defense. What says the Psalmist, Psal. 139. 7. Thou hast beset me behind and before, &c whither shall I go from thy Spirit, or whither shall I flee from thy presence?* there's no place of safety but only in this shadow of Christ; and he is a sure defense; If it should rain Storms of fire and Brimstone, if once in Christ, this shadow will keep off all the heat of wrath, for he is a safe and sure defense. Nay let me say,

3. Thirdly, Further for your encouragement, The Lord Jesus he will not deal Treacherously with you when you turn in unto him: If you take under his shadow, he will not deal treacherously with you; when you flee from the pursuit of your enemy, he will rescue, save and deliver: The Lord Jesus he will not deal treacherously with those that come under his shadow, there is no drop of wrath shall fall from this tree to those that are under his shadow; the Lord Jesus he never made any prey upon Poor creatures that turn in to him for shadow and rest.

Ay but will he not betray me into the hands of others, of those that seek my soul to destroy it?

No certainly, Christ will not deal so with you, his honor is engaged to the contrary. You know what Lot said concerning those two strangers that came in to him, when they came to him for shadow, he would not deliver them, he would let go his life first, Gen. 19. 8. for therefore came they under the shadow of^a my roof. When they came under his shadow for protection, Lot would not be so base as to betray them. He tells them he hath two Daughters that are undefiled, and he will rather deliver them into their hands than he will deliver those strangers, who took shelter under his roof: why, so says Christ, if wrath should demand you or justice should demand you, I will not let you go, he will rather say, let my Daughters go for it, my body or Soul go for it, rather than they shall go myself shall go for it: thus Poor disconsolate Souls, you see Christ he will not betray you unto those who seek your Souls to destroy them. But

3. Use. Again, Thirdly, a word to those that have interest in Christ: Oh that you would make more use of this shadow of Jesus Christ: That Christians would sit more under Christ's shadow, make use of it.

1. First of all, Work all your works under this shadow: Whatever you have to do for God, or for your Souls, or for eternity; whatsoever your hand finds to do, be sure you do it under this shadow: it's hard working in the open Sun in the heat of summer, it makes men's labors very uncomfortable, it adds to their toil; but if they work under a shadow, it's a sweet refreshment to him, and it's a great ease to his work, he toiles and sweats less and with less pains: so Christians if you set yourselves directly under Christ when ever you have any work to do for God, or concerning your souls, or when ever you have any burden that is too heavy, set yourselves under Christ, through Christ you may do all things, and you may bear your burdens with a great deal of more ease and comfort; the Soul under Christ feels not the weight, nor burden which would sink another that is not under this shadow.

2. And then again, Secondly, as you should work all your works under this shadow, so be sure to Walk under this shadow: I say walk under this shadow in the whole course of your walking with God: Walk in the shadow, and it will be a great deal more comfortable unto you: Why, the Lord Jesus himself delights to walk with the Soul when it's under the shadow of this sun. God came and walked in the Garden, Gen. 3. in the cool of the day, God delights to walk with the Soul when it's under the shadow of Christ, he delights there to manifest himself much to the Soul. Oh it's hot walking with God when the poor creature is not under the shadow of Christ; why, the presence of God, the very presence of God will be very hot and uncomfortable, if the Soul be not under the shadow of Christ: Ye canit see my face and live: then be sure you set yourselves under the shadow of Christ in all your walkings with God: When you pray, pray under this shadow, set yourselves under this shadow; and so when you hear, read, and meditate, in the whole course and way of your walking, be sure you set yourselves under this shadow of Christ.

Quest. But you will say, what shadows of Christ should you sit under, walk under and work under?

Answ. 1. I Answer, First of all, look to the Humane nature of Christ, that is a sweet comfortable shadow through which you may see the face of God; I say the human Nature of Christ it's a shadow, a veil through which you may behold the face of God: God out of Christ is a great way off, and you cannot see the face of God he is so glorious, he is too glorious for your eye, you canit behold him: Ay but God in our nature, look upon God as he hath taken our nature up unto himself, and there you may see God nigh unto the poor creature; it's very comfortable to look up unto God through Christ, upon or through the shadow of the flesh of Christ.

2. Secondly, And then Secondly, make use of the sufferings of Christ: those are shadows that Christians should always walk under, and work under, and contemplate under; as I said before, they were terrible shadows to Christ, they were shadows of the night unto Christ: Ay but they are comfortable shadows; all that Christ suffered, and every passage of his sufferings, even the very shadow of Death that went over his head, it's a sweet and comfortable shadow unto his people that sit under him in it: Now poor souls sitting under these shadows there is a great deal to be seen, and the Soul by faith sits under these shadows: and under these shadows of the sufferings of Christ, Oh the glorious sight that it may have by faith; here it may see Justice and mercy meeting, and kiss each other, here it may see Justice reconciled and sin carried out and everlasting righteousness brought in: here it may see reconciliation purchased, and a way made for those that were afar off to come nigh unto God: here it may see deliverance from that wrath which is to come; it may see Death, Hell, sin and Satan and all trodden underfoot; here it may see all grace, and all strength purchased by Christ; here it may see a door of grace, and a door of Life set open, and Oh what a glorious sight may the Soul see there!

3. Again, Thirdly, sit under the Ordinances of Christ, take heed you neglect not these shadows of Christ, and look at all the ordinances as shadows of Christ: this is the way to use ordinances aright: men and women never use ordinances aright until such time as they look upon ordinances under this notion and consideration, as they are shadows of Christ, as they represent Christ and hold forth something of Christ. Take an Ordinance as it's out of Christ, and it's a shadow indeed, a mere shadow, a shadow of shadows, but take the shadow as it's in Christ, and then it's a glorious shadow, and holds forth abundance of sweetness and grace and comfort and refreshment; and then be sure you keep under Christ in the ordinance; when the Soul thus looks upon ordinances, as shadows of Christ, then ordinances are sweet and refreshing, and the Soul may see cause forever to bless the Lord that he hath provided shadows for poor Souls to sit under; that's a Third particular.

Again, Fourthly, you that have Interest in Christ know it's not enough to sit under his shadow, but delight yourselves in sitting under his shadow: be like to the spouse in this; she sits and sits with delight under this shadow of Christ.

Quest. But you will say, what is it to sit under the shadow of Christ with delight? when may a Soul be said to sit under the shadow of Christ with delight, under the ordinances?

Answ. Delight, it's a complacency and rest which the soul takes of a suitable good: so that then the soul may be said to delight in Christ, or under the shadow of Christ, whenas it rests and takes up in Christ, as in the most suitable good; Oh what is so refreshing, and so suitable to a poor weary traveler as a comfortable refreshing shadow is to sit under? And Oh so, what so suitable to a poor weary soul as the comfortable shadow of Christ to sit under? When the soul doth thus apprehend this suitableness of Christ to it, Oh here's a suitable shadow, here's a great shadow, it's long and large, it's able to cover multitudes of transgressions; here's a might shadow, that can fence off abundance of wrath and displeasure. My sin hath reached up to heaven, but here's a shadow that is higher than the Heavens; here's the shadow of the day, a refreshing shadow, and how suitable is that to a Poor soul, that hath sat long under the shadows of the night, the shadows of darkness, or the shadow of death? When the Soul doth thus look upon Christ as the most suitable good, and so to take up in him, then may the soul be said to sit down with delight under Christ's shadow. But then again,

2. Secondly, What a man delights in, that he is continually taken up withal; his thoughts they run out much upon it: So the soul that delights in Christ, sits under Christ's shadow with delight, it's much in the meditation of Christ, continually taken up with Christ. What says the Psalmist, Psal. 1. His delight is in the Law of the Lord, and in his law doth he meditate day and night: His delight is in the Law of the Lord, and how is that known? by his continual meditation of it: I know a gracious heart it may be weighed down by the prevalency of corruption, ay but it looks upon it as a burden, it cries out, Oh Lord how long shall my spirit cleave to the dust! or with Paul in Rom. 7. Who shall deliver me from this body of sin and death? from this carnal heart, and this sensual frame of spirit? He is never well but when with Christ, he is then in his Element, Oh then how doth he rejoice when he sees Christ lifted up and transfigured on the mount? Oh then it's good to be here always, let me never go down, but let me always live with God: here's a soul lifted up with delight in Christ.

3. Again, Thirdly, what the soul delights in, that it desires, and desires more of: a soul that delights in Christ, it desires more of Christ, more communion with Christ, more acquaintance with Christ, it's never satisfied: See what David says, Psalms 119. 174. I have longed for thy salvation O Lord, and thy Law is my delight: when the Law was his delight, he longed for the salvation of God; how did his soul long for God and after Christ? he expresses it in Psalms 42. 1. As the heart panteth after the water-brooks, so doth my soul after thee O God: as the heart panteth and breatheth after the water-brooks, so his soul panted after God, and when shall he get nigher God; When shall I come and appear before thee? The desires of the Soul prepare the soul for delight, and stretch the soul wide for delight, when it shall enjoy that which it doth desire.

4. Again, Fourthly, delight in the soul doth beget strong desires in the soul, that it may enjoy more of God; and the soul that is thus carried out after Christ, desires to see him more, and to enjoy him more, desires to do all in Christ, to work under his shadow, and to delight under his shadow, to contemplate under his shadow, and walk under his shadow, then may the soul be said to delight in Christ.

Well then poor souls, what care should you take to sit under the shadow of Christ, to sit and to sit under his shadow with great delight: with the more delight you sit under the shadow of Christ, the more do you express the power of grace, and the power of Godliness; for certainly it's the excellency of a Christian, and the excellency of grace, that the soul can be taken up with delight in Christ: as it is with the sinfulness of sin, it's the height of wickedness and sin, when the sinner delights in sin, when he doth not only act in sin, but delight in sin, and in doing evil; even so when the Soul doth not think enough to do that which is good, but desires to do it with delight, and can delight in God and delight in Christ, and delight in grace and holiness, delight in doing for God, and delight in suffering for God, the more you delight in Christ, the more shall you express the power of grace.

5. But again, consider what cause you have to express your delight in Christ: remember what delight the Lord Jesus took in sitting under these shadows (which were most uncomfortable to him) for your sakes; lo I come to do thy will, O my God, in the 40. Psalm 8. I delight to do thy will O my God, yea thy Law is within my heart. It was hard work to Christ, and yet he delighted in it, because it was his fathers work, and because your souls were concerned in it; it was the work of your redemption, and though it was a bitter cup, yet the Lord Jesus took delight in it: If Christ delighted in these uncomfortable shadows, in the shadow of Death for your sakes, Oh why should not you express the comfort and Joy of your hearts, in taking delight in being under his shadow? Again, Christ, he is the delight of God the Father: in Isa. 42. 1. It's the father that speaks of his son, he speaks of Christ, Behold my Servant whom I uphold, mine Elect in whom my soul delights; he would have you not only behold him as a servant, but as his Elect in whom he delights: now if he be the delight of his father, what cause have you then to make him the delight of your Souls?

Nay further, It's the way to have all the desires of your hearts to be satisfied, to be filled; there's an express place for that, in Psa. 37. 4. Delight thyself also in the Lord, and he shall give thee the desires of thine heart: He was speaking before that he should not fret because of the wicked, yea think that they have all that heart can wish, but you are mistaken, their desires are not satisfied, the more they drink, the more they thirst, they are not satisfied in the enjoyment of any creature comfort; but I will show you the way of satisfaction, delight in the Lord, and he shall give thee the desires of thine heart; it's the way to more grace and more strength, it's the way to be more able to do for God, and more able to suffer for God, and abundance comes in, in this way in delighting in Christ: when the Lord hath brought the soul into this frame once, to take delight in Christ, under some shadows of Christ, Christ he is not far off from that Soul, but will satisfy and reveal himself to that Soul in a most glorious manner: see Mal. 3. 1. Behold I will send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me; and the Lord whom ye seek shall suddenly come to his temple, even the messenger of the Covenant whom ye delight in; and he shall come suddenly, he is not far off; and this is an evidence of this his coming, that he stirs you up to seek him and to delight in himself, to sit under the shadow of Christ with delight. Oh then Christ he will come, and will come suddenly, and to manifest himself in a more glorious manner to that Soul that doth thus delight in him.

Well then, to conclude, I beseech you Brethren that you would look up to the Lord to have this frame of Spirit wrought in your hearts. Do not think it enough to have these shadows, but delight your souls under these shadows. Christ calls for a great deal of delight from you to himself: he is a most comfortable shadow, a most pleasant shadow, he is as the shadow of a tree, and as the shadow of a great rock in a weary Land: and as he is of great benefit to you, so he calls for much delight from you; Behold I bring you tidings of great joy, says the Angel to the shepherds; where Christ is, there's tidings of great joy: and so when Christ draws nigh to your souls in his shadows, he expects there should be great joy and delight in him, that you should solace yourselves under these shadow of Christ, sit down and meditate under these shadows: whilst you look under the Sufferings of Christ and ordinances of Christ, see what a glorious prospect the Lord hath set before your eyes, that you may take great delight: delight in every shadow of Christ, delight in his ordinances, set yourselves under these shadows▪ It's said those that were sick and diseased, they laid them in the high way that the shadow of Peter might go over them; shall the shadow of Peter heal diseased bodies? why it's Christ under whose shadow whoever comes will heal diseased Souls, and he is greatly to be delighted in, he is a sweet refreshing shadow.

SERMON VI.

CANT. 2. 3. I sat down under His Shadow with great delight, and His Fruit was sweet to my Taste.

I Showed you what is this shadow of Christ, and what it is for a soul to sit under this shadow: I made Application the last day: But I shall proceed to the last clause of the verse, and his fruit was swee to my taste.

I have considered the shadow, now for the tree itself, and his fruit was sweet to my taste. Here is another benefit comes in by Christ! It's a mercy to sit under a shadow: a Poor weary man in a wilderness rejoices that he finds the shadow of a fruitful tree to sit under, where he may not only sit and rest him, but sit and eat with delight, he will account this a double mercy: and truly thus beneficial is Christ to his servants, he is willing they should sit under his shadow, and he is willing they should eat of his fruit, and it's the sweetest and the most delectable and delightful fruit that ever poor creature tasted: The taste is one of the external senses, the Object of it is meat and drink, here it's applied to the inward man, to that taste the soul hath of Christ by faith, because the soul it doth taste Christ, and it doth taste the sweet fruit of Christ, and it finds pleasure in them, in feeding upon Christ: even as the palate doth find delight in savorie meats and delightful drinks: I shown Christ yields both shadow and fruit: you see the mercies that Christ gives to his people, they are complete mercies, for he is a complete and a perfect savior: he is not only a shadow, he is not only a defense unto them, he doth not only keep off evil, he doth not only keep off the scorching beams of the sun, he doth not only keep off the wrath and displeasure of the Father, but he is a pleasant shadow and yields pleasant fruit, under whom they may sit, and eat with delight and pleasure. So he is a perfect savior: he is not only a privative but a positive Salvation; this is that which the Lord holds forth to Abraham, says he, I am thy buckler, and thy exceeding great reward: I am thy buckler, there's the shadow, and I am thy exceeding great reward, there's the fruit which the Lord gives him to feed upon. Christ doth not only deliver from wrath, but he brings in Life, glory and salvation, in Dan. 9. 24. Seventy weeks are determined upon thy people, and upon thy holy City, to finish the transgression, and to make an end of sins; and to make reconciliation for iniquity, and to bring in everlasting righteousness, &c. he shall carry out sin, and bring in righteousness; to take off sin that's not enough, but to brings in righteousness, an everlasting righteousness, far more glorious and excellent than the righteousness of men, or Angels; he shall deliver his people from the fear of death, this is a mercy: but that's not all, Christ, he brings in a glorious hope, hope of life, hope of glory; who hath begotten us again unto a lively hope, says the Apostle. He doth not think it enough to deliver his people from the Slavery of sin, but he translates them into the freedom and liberty of the Sons of God, he delivers them from the power of sin, and he puts them under the power of grace, he brings them out of the Kingdom of darkness, and he brings them into the Kingdom of his own glorious light: it was not enough, to free them from wrath, to save them from hell, but he will put them into the possession of glory, and therefore he prays his Father in John 17. that he would let them be where he is: he hath been a shadow to them, but that's not enough, they shall eat of his fruit, let them be with me where I am that they may behold the glory thou hast given me, which is and which was before the foundations of the world were laid. And

1. First, therefore brethren let your expectations and faith be according to the largeness of the heart of Christ, do not think it enough that you sit under his shadow, that the Lord Christ is one that can free you from wrath, do not think that enough; but look further to taste of his fruit, look up for those joys and consolations of his Spirit, which he is willing to pour into your souls, as well as to free your souls from the apprehension of wrath; and so do not think it enough that you are delivered from the slavery and bondage of sin, that sin hath not dominion over you, do not think that enough, but look out further for the life of Christ to be revealed in you, to be manifested unto you, for life and righteousness to reign gloriously in your hearts, let your expectations be according to the largeness of the heart of Christ. And then

2. Secondly, you should deal with the Lord Christ as he deals with you. He did not think privative salvation enough; it was not enough to make a shadow for you, but he prepares fruit for you: and therefore do not think it enough that you have bare negative holiness, that what you do is not against Christ, but that you do what you do for Christ; for he that is not with me (says Christ) is against me. Donit think it enough, that you pass your time and spend your days, without being conscious of any willful Sinning, but what you do from day today, deal with Christ as he deals with you, that you may lift up his name, and honor him who will in due time honor and lift up you. That's the first particular. Again,

2. Secondly, Christ brings you first unto the shadow, and then he gives of his fruit to eat, and then he causes you to taste of his fruit. Because she was brought under his shadow, therefore she shall eat of his fruit: see how the Lord doth make one mercy to be the beginning of another mercy unto his people: it's God's ordinary way of dealing with his Servants, because he hath shown them mercy, therefore he will show them mercy, because he hath brought them under his shadow, he will have them to eat of his fruit. See Gen. 18. 17, 18. Shall I hide from Abraham that thing which I do, says God, seeing Abraham shall surely become a great and mighty nation, and all the nations of the earth shall be blessed in him? in his seed, in the Messiah that shall come out of his loins; yea and because I have given out this mercy, I wonit hide what I will do: God makes one mercy to be the beginning of another. And so when he promised to bring his people unto the mount a in in Isa. 56. 7. it was a mercy to be brought to the mountain of God, yea but God does not leave his people there, but that mercy shall be a step to many a mercy, which he intends to give out: when I have brought them thither, when I have got them thither, then will I make them joyful in my house of prayer I will make a feast to them, a feast of fat things; I will cheer, hearts their and accept of their sacrifices and services: and thus God makes one mercy, the beginning of another. And therefore Brethren do but see what a large testimony this gives unto the infinite goodness, and riches of free grace, which is in our God; well might the Apostle say, God who is rich in mercy, for the great love wherewith he hath loved us, what riches of mercy is here? what fullness of grace and mercy in Christ is here? that he should make mercy the way to mercy, and mercy the beginning of mercy. Oh what fullness of grace and mercy is there in Christ? he is never well but when he is giving out: we see the glory, the glory of the only begotten son of God, full of grace and truth; there's a fullness indeed, all infinite fullness, and this fullness doth delight to empty itself and to communicate itself unto poor empty creatures; the riches of grace is mightily held forth in this. And then what encouragement is here to poor souls, that are conscious of their own unworthiness? They want such and such mercies, and such and such graces and strength, and I have received more mercy, than ever I can be thankful for, and how can I, or dare I be so bold with God, to ask more mercy than I am able to express thankfulness unto him for what I have received? Why, if thou hast no argument to plead with God, he will make this an Argument, because he hath done thee good already; this is not the manner of men, but it's the way of God: it's no argument with men; you shown me such and such kindness, and therefore do me another such kindness; but the Lord he doth thus, he will make this an argument, his doing of thee good, from thence he will do thee good again. But then again,

3. Here is a third particular observable, First the shadow, and then the fruit. See how the Lord doth proceed gradually in a way of mercy in doing good to poor creatures; the longer they are with him, and the more they know him, the greater mercy he gives out: it's a greater mercy to eat of the fruit, than to sit under the shadow: well, after Christ hath caused thee to sit under his shadow, then he will give thee to eat of the fruit: the Lord deals with his servants as you deal with your servants; it may be you are not so friendly to them at first when they come to be apprentices, but afterward when they have served you long, and you have learnt them more of the mystery of their trade, you will use them more friendly and communicate yet more of the mystery of your trade, and secrets, and the like: and so the Lord deals with his servants, though he may hide his face for a time, yet at last he will shine graciously upon them, he will deal friendly with them, he will use them as friends and not as Servants, he will communicate of his secrets to them; I call you not Servants, but I call you friends, as Christ did to his disciples at last, for he reveals the whole will of his father unto them; and therefore what encouragement is here to all you who are Christ's? although it may be for the present, you have not such comings in from Christ, you may say, blessed be God, I sit under the shadow, and the Lord Christ is a safety to me: but you have not found of that sweetness which is spoken of him; yet let me tell you, you shall eat of his dainties, the longer you are his servants the more gently will he deal with you, and learn you, and show you great things; the Lord Christ will show greater and greater things to his people, the longer they are in his house, the longer they serve him, the more they shall know of his Fathers mind and will, and the more friendly will he deal with them; and therefore do not fear things to come, or conditions to come, and do not think that things to come may separate from his love, for certainly the longer you are with him, the better he will use you; and as it may be said of wicked men, the worst is still to come, so of the righteous man, the best is still to come, the best is still behind; so long as they are on this side the grave, on this side of Heaven, the best is still behind, for Christ reserves better and better for his people: These are the particular observations that do offer themselves▪ I shall make entrance into the main general proposition or observation which the words hold forth, and that is this.

Obser. That the fruit that grows upon Christ it exceeding pleasant to the believing Soul: the fruit that grows upon Christ is exceeding pleasant and sweet; he is a generous Vine of God's own planting, the choicest tree that ever the hand of God planted, and therefore the best fruit; the sweetest fruit that ever grew upon tree, it grows upon Christ: It was fruit that the great King of Heaven intended for his own spending; it must needs be sweet fruit, excellent fruit; God intended that all the fruit that he would feast his servants and his friends and children with, should grow upon this tree; and therefore it must needs be pleasant fruit, he intends to make a feast unto his people, a feast of fat things, as is promised in Isa. 25. 6. and in this mountain shall the Lord of Hoses make unto all people a feast of fat things, a feast of wines on the lees, of fat things full of marrow, of wines on the lees well refined: now all the fat things that are at the feast with which God doth refresh the souls of his people upon this mountain, grow upon this tree, all the fatness I say it comes from this Olive-tree, and all those cups of sweet consolations which the Lord doth stay poor fainting and bleeding Souls with, it's the fruit of this tree; nay the great feast that God shall make in Heaven, at the great supper of the Lamb, with which God shall feast all his people forever and ever, and sit and rise no more, and all the dainties that shall be at the supper of the Lamb, it shall be the fruit of this tree, they shall ever feed upon Christ, and forever feed upon that fruit which grew upon Christ, they shall feed forever upon this one dish, and shall never be weary of this fruit; and therefore certainly the fruit that grows upon Christ, it must needs be exceeding sweet and delightful fruit.

Quest. But you will say, what is the fruit that grow upon this tree? What is this fruit that is so sweet and delightful?

Answ. Why, there are innumerable kinds, more than can be reckoned. I shall give you a taste of some.

1. First of all, there's the fruit of Christ's heart, the fruit that grows upon Christ's heart. Oh! the abundance of precious fruit; all those gracious thoughts which are in the heart of Christ to his people, are one kind of precious fruit that grows upon this tree: in Isa. 10. 12. I will punish the fruit of the stout heart of the King of Assyria: God speaks of the fruit of the stout heart of the King of Assyria, but the fruit that grows upon the heart of Christ it's other kind of fruit: it's not the fruit of a stout heart, but it's the fruit of a gracious heart: many are thy wonderful works, O Lord, says the Psalmist, Psal. 40. 5. and thy thoughts which are to us ward; the gracious thoughts of the heart of Christ towards his people, they are many, they are more than can be numbered. But more particularly, to consider the fruit that grows upon the heart of Christ.

1. First of all, there's abundance of meekness and lowliness of mind, and tenderness towards poor creatures which grows upon the heart of Christ; in Mat. 11. when he calls poor creatures to him, v. 28, 29, I am meek and lowly in heart; it's an argument by which Christ doth invite poor heavy laden sinners to come to him: why, but they may be discouraged from coming, by looking upon Christ as full of wrath, anger and implacable, saying, Christ will not be reconciled: you are mistaken of me, says Christ, there is no such sour fruit grows upon my heart, though this be your disposition, yet it's not mine, I am meek. But I am a poor worm, saith the soul, and will the Lord ever look down on such a poor worm? he is ascended and sits in glory, and will he look upon a poor worm? I am meek and lowly, says Christ, though I be never so high, I can look upon poor creatures, I am meek and lowly in heart.

2. Secondly, there are in Christ's heart very earnest desires of reconciliation with poor creatures, this is another gracious fruit that grows upon Christ's heart: I say vast desires and large desires, if poor creatures will come in and accept of those tenders of grace and salvation which he is pleased to make in his Gospel, let them come, says he, let them come, he that is a thirst let him come, and whosoever will let them come, and let them drink of the water of life freely; I desire you should come, says Christ, let no man hinder, let him not lay blocks in his own way, I am willing he should come: and thus doth Christ hold forth his golden Scepter, as Ahasuerus did his golden scepter to Hester, come in Hester, says he; so says Christ, Poor Soul, come, let him come, in and drink of the water of life freely. And so, as though God did beseech you by us, we pray you in Christ's stead, that you would be reconciled unto him. That's a second fruit that grows on Christ's heart. Again,

3. Thirdly, there are affections, that grow upon Christ's heart, sympathizing affections: Oh! how tender is he of his people, he suffers when they suffer, he bears the leaviest end of the burden; in all their afflictions he was afflicted: and therefore he is called a merciful High Priest, and he is one that knows how to have compassion, and how to be tender, see Heb. 5. 1, 2. for every High Priest taken from among men is ordained for men in things pertaining to God, that he may offer both gifts and sacrifices for sin, who can have compassion on the ignorant, and on them that are out of the way, for that he himself also is compassed with infirmity. He can have compassion, he is able to have compassion, he hath a compassionate disposition within him, he knows how to pity them when ignorant, and when they are out of the way, he knows how to portion out grace to every of his people's conditions, he knows how to sympathize with them in their burdens, for he was compassed about with our Infirmities, he knows well what afflictions are, and what temptations to sin are, and he best knows how to compassionate his people; these compassions are a gracious fruit growing in Christ's heart.

4. Fourthly, But then again, there are thoughts of delight in Christ's heart. Oh how doth he rejoice over his people with joy, with great joy! He doth solace himself in their communion: I am the rose of Sharon, and the lily of the valleys, as the lily among thorns, so is my love among the daughters; she is unto him as the lily among thorns, let me hear thy voice, for sweet is thy voice and thy countenance is comely: the expressions of the great delight, that Christ takes in his people, this is the fruit of Christ's heart.

2. Secondly, There is the fruit of his lips; not only the fruit of his heart is exceeding delightful, but the fruit of his lips is exceeding sweet: see Isa. 57. 19 I create the fruit of the lips Peace, peace to him that is afar off and to him that is nigh, saith the Lord, and I will heal him: peace it's a fruit of Christ's lips; as there are thoughts of peace in his heart, so there are words of peace in his mouth, for out of the abundance of the heart the mouth will speak; therefore it's said, that the tongue of the learned is given to him, the Lord hath given to him the tongue of the learned, and he knows how to speak a word in season; there is none in all the world can speak a word in season to the wounded Soul but Christ, his lips are like unto the lilies dropping sweet-smelling myrrh: every promise in the Gospel is a fruit of the lips of Christ, and Oh! how sweet and refreshing is this fruit, how delightful is the least promise of Christ! if he be pleased to bring it home to the soul, it stays it as with flagons of wine, when Christ shall bring home a promise to the Soul; else a promise will do us no good, will be of no use to us, for all the promises of God, they are in him yea, and in him Amen; all the promises they grow upon this tree, and it's most precious fruit: if you will take David's commendation of it, he eat and commended it, Psal. 19. 10. more to be desired are they than gold, yea than much fine gold▪ he speaks of the word of the Lord, the promises of the Lord, they are sweeter than the honey; nay take it when it is at the sweetest, when it is in the Comb, the word of the Lord goes beyond it, Sweeter than the Honey, and the honey Comb: Oh! how gracious and acceptable is the least word that drops from Christ's Mouth, out of Christ's lips to the poor wounded bleeding Soul? A word in season, says Solomon, is like Apples of gold in Pictures of Silver; pleasant and exceeding acceptable fruit unto a poor soul. Again,

3. Thirdly, There's not only the fruit of Christ's lips, but the fruit of Christ's loins. Oh the fruit of his womb! he hath a seed which he brings forth unto God, which are pleasant and much be to delighted in; all that are brought in to God by the preaching of the Gospel, they are called the fruit of Christ, they are his seed, he shall see the travail of his Soul and be satisfied; this fruit is mighty delightful to Christ, and therefore should be delightful and is delightful to the Saints. Christ had a mighty delight in children, he cared not what he suffered, what pains, what travails; let the travail of the Soul be never so great, so he might bring forth children he cared not, nay though he knew he should die in travail, yet he cared not, and though he knew he should die of it, and also live again and rise again, he asked no other reward but only that he might have children, and it was the great promise in Isaiah 53. 10, 11. He shall see his seed, he shall prolong his days, and the good pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in his hand; he shall see the travail of his Soul and shall be satisfied: he shall have a multitudinous offspring, because he was such a lover of children. And therefore when the promise was made to Abraham, I will bless thee, and thy seed shall be as the Stars of heaven that could not be numbered: and therefore you read in the Revelations of a great number which no man can number, and he brought them all unto the Father and presented them, Here am I and the Children thou hast given me. They are exceeding delightful to him; and as Christ takes delight in them, so

The saints canit but take delight when they see souls brought in to God and brought forth for heaven, they cannot but rejoice in it, and take great delight in this fruit of Christ: To name no more,

4. A fourth sort of fruit, and that's the fruit of Christ's life. Take him as he was here upon earth in the days of his flesh, when he was planted in the Orchard of the world, he brought forth exceeding much fruit unto God, he was the most fruitful tree that ever the Father planted, he brought forth a world of precious desirable fruit; there was never any part of Christ's life that was not fruitful, he went up and down doing good. He sought all opportunities to do good: I must work the works of him that sent me while the day lasts, for the night cometh when I shall not work; he took all opportunities for the doing good to the souls of men, and the bodies of men, and glad was he that he had an opportunity. There is never a part of Christ's life, if you look into the history of it, as it lies before us by the Evangelists, but was altogether fruitful, and all that fruit was exceeding pleasant and desirable, and affords an abundance of matter of refreshment: there is matter of much contemplation when you look into the life of Christ. And these are some of the kinds of fruit which grow upon this Apple-tree, upon Christ the tree of life; they are the fruit of his heart, the fruit of his lips, the fruit of his womb, the fruit of his loins, the fruit of his life. There are divers other kinds of fruit, but I shall speak no more at this time, the Lord help you to feed upon this fruit.

SERMON VII.

CANT. 2. 3. —And his fruit was sweet to my taste.

AFTER many particular observations, we came the last day to the main general proposition that these words hold forth, viz. The fruit that grows upon Christ the tree of life is sweet to the believing soul: it must needs be so, for it's the fruit that God doth feast his friends withal; the feasts that he makes to his servants upon his holy Mountain they are nothing else but the fruit that grows upon this tree: Nay in the great supper of the Lamb, that everlasting feast that God shall make in heaven, wherein his people shall sit down with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob in the Kingdom of God, and shall rise no more, they shall have no other dainties but the fruit that grows upon this tree. But what's the fruit that grows upon Christ, that is so pleasant and sweet? I told you of the fruit of his heart, the fruit of his lips, the fruit of his loins, the fruit of his life: and I came in the last place to speak of the fruit of his Death, and this is a precious bough full of fruit. Well, what is the fruit that grows upon Christ's Death?

First of all, Satisfaction of his Fathers Justice: That satisfaction which is given to Justice is a fruit of Christ's death; He hath paid the debt, he hath cancelled the bond, he hath given to Justice what Justice could demand, he hath satisfied it to the utmost farthing, so that now Justice and mercy are met together, they now do embrace and kiss each other; Justice is satisfied and mercy is satisfied; Justice is glorified and mercy is glorified: the believing soul may look Justice in the face as well as mercy in the face, because Justice hath fully as much from Christ, as it can demand; now this satisfaction which is given to Justice it's a fruit of Christ's death; But again,

2. Secondly, By the death of Christ, Christ is made a fit Object for poor sinners to pitch upon; He is an Object for the guilty sinner that durst not look Christ in the face, he is a suitable object to a poor bleeding sinner; there's abundance of precious fruit that grows upon Christ the tree of life, but this tree it was too high for a poor wretch, and could not have been enjoyed if Christ had not been willing to have his fruit cut down, he was cut down to the earth, laid upon the earth, humbled to the death of the cross; so that now the poor guilty sinner that is humbled through the sense of his sin, may look upon Christ in and through his death, and is become a suitable object for the poor soul to pitch upon: what more suitable to a wounded bleeding conscience than a wounded bleeding dying savior? Now that Christ is so suitable an Object for a poor guilty sinner to pitch upon, this is a fruit of Christ's death.

3. Again, Thirdly, Christ by his death hath carried out sin, and brought in righteousness; this is another fruit that grows upon the death of Christ, the volume of sin in respect of the guilt, in respect of the condemning power of it, he hath carried out, and made an end of it, in Dan. 9. 24. Seventy weeks are determined upon thy people, and upon thy holy city, to finish the transgression, and to make an end of sin, and to make reconciliation for iniquity, and to bring in everlasting righteousness, and to seal up the vision and prophecy, and to anoint the most holy. Sin, like a monster, seised upon it, sucked the very heart blood of Christ; well, the Lord Jesus he will be avenged of him, and therefore his blood, it was the bane of sin. I remember Pliny in his natural History, reports of the enmity that is betwixt the Dragon and Elephant, the Dragon gets under the Elephant, and sucks his blood, and by his fall oftentimes is the death of the Dragon; and this may be fitly compared to Christ, sin is the Dragon that seized upon Christ; and the Lord Jesus by his death fell upon sin, he hath crushed it all to pieces, he hath taken away the killing power of sin, so that sin, by this deed, he hath carried it out, as an abominable thing, and in the room of it he hath brought in a glorious righteousness, a perfect righteousness, and put it upon his people, a far more glorious righteousness than the righteousness of the Angels; so that the believing Soul may stand in the presence of God, with much more boldness than formerly. This is a third fruit that is brought in by the death of Christ.

4. Again, Fourthly, Reconciliation is brought in as another fruit by the death of Christ: perfect reconciliation, and sweet communion and fellowship with God, all this is the fruit of Christ's death; he by his death hath taken in the wall of partitions, and by his death hath made those that were enemies friends; those that were a far off, nigh unto him; so that the heart of God is now nigh unto a believing Soul, and the believing soul may say now▪ with the Apostle, truly our fellowship is with the father, and with his son Jesus Christ. Before, it might be said of every man in the world, his fellowship was with sin, with hell, and the devil, and enemies to God; but now by the death of Jesus Christ peace is made, and reconciliation is made, and believing souls may say truly, our fellowship is with the father and with the son Jesus Christ: that's a fourth fruit that grows upon the death of Christ.

5. Fifthly, The death of Christ, it hath crushed the head of the old serpent, he hath bound the strong man and cast him out, and delivered poor captive souls out of the mouth and paw of the Lyon; it was promised long before Christ came, thousands of years, that the seed of the woman should break the serpents head: and Christ by his death made good that promise, he did crush the serpents head: by death he overcame him that had the power of death. But then,

6. Sixthly, Here is another fruit of Christ's death, and that is by subduing the power of sin and corruption in the hearts of God's people. This is a very sweet and desirable fruit that grows upon this bough, the death of Christ; I say the subduing and conquering of the power of sin in the heart: see what the Apostle says of it in Rom. 6. 11. Likewise, ye also reckon yourselves dead unto sin, but alive unto God: he said before in v. 10. In that he died, he died unto sin once, but in that he liveth he liveth unto God, so likewise reckon ye yourselves dead unto sin; that is, in that he died he died to sin to the crucifying of sin, to the violating and mortifying of the power and strength of sin; and therefore brethren, account and reckon yourselves dead unto sin: fetch arguments from the death of Christ to kill sin; and truly brethren there are no such Powerful arguments in the world to the subduing of the Power of sin, as those which are to be fetched from the Power of the death of Christ. Oh, says the believing soul, shall that be sweet to me which was so bitter to Christ? shall I look upon that as a friend, which was an enemy to Christ? Shall I love that which was a nail and a spear to pierce Christ? Shall I take delight in that cup, to drink of that cup which was such poison to Christ? No, God forbid, says the believing soul, did not I die with Christ? did not he stand as a common person, and therefore ought not I to have reckoned myself dead, dead unto sin, even as Christ died for sin? And how then shall we that are dead unto sin, live any longer unto it? This is another fruit that grows upon the death of Christ.

7. Seventhly, there is a holy and sanctified use that believers have of all ordinances and of all creatures; and this comes in as another fruit of the death of Christ; to unbelievers (says the Apostle) all is defiled, and all is polluted; his conscience is defiled, he defiles the best things, and the holiest ordinances, he hath no sanctified use of creature comforts: but by the death of Christ all ordinances are sanctified and blessed, and all creatures are blessed and sanctified to such as have faith in Christ; the blood of Christ sprinkled upon a man hath a smell exceeding sweet, and makes the soul to be thankful for every crumb; Oh, this morsel is sanctified through Christ's blood; and thus every mercy being sanctified is sweetened by the death of Christ: and that is most comfortable.

8. Eighthly, Christ hath changed temporal death, and taken away the evil of it for his people; this is a most sweet and desirable fruit of the death of Christ; that temporal death is changed, sweetened, sanctified, that the sting of death is taken out for all his people: Christ hath sent a challenge to death, Oh death, I will be thy death, long before he came into the world, and he made good his word when he came, he fought a duel and overcame death, as in 1 Cor. 15. 55. O Death where is thy Sting? O grave where is thy victory? this is a most precious fruit. Nay death that was a curse, is turned into a blessing; and this makes it a greater mercy, death that was a curse and the worst of curses is turned into a blessing to the believer, it doth them a very good turn, it's the fathers Servant, and it helps to bring them home, and although it be terrible to look upon its hard vizege, yet still he doth a good office for all that are in Christ, he helps to carry them home unto their fathers house, and this is another fruit of Christ's death.

9. Again, Ninthly, Christ hath swallowed up eternal death, he hath vanquished hell, by letting forth the stream of his blood, so that that now there is no condemnation to them that are in Christ, there's no hell, there's no wrath, no displeasure in the Almighty: he hath opened a door wide to life, grace, and salvation; and this is another fruit of Christ's death.

10. Again, in the Tenth place, Another fruit of Christ's death is this, The confirmation and ratification of all the promises of the whole Covenant that he hath made with his people: and this is a most precious and desirable fruit; I say by the Death of Christ all the promises are confirmed and ratified: he hath confirmed his testament, his last will and testament, with all the Legacies that Christ gave to his people, he bequeathed grace, life and salvation, and all these were ratified, when Christ died. When a man dies, his will is sure, then there's no man can alter the will of him that is dead, for by death the will is ratified: As the Covenant is unalterable being ratified by the death of Christ, so every promise is ratified by the death of Christ: it's as sure, that heaven and earth shall pass, but not one jot or tittle of the word shall fall to the ground, they shall as certainly be fulfilled as God is in heaven; now that the promises are so sure, this establishment and confirmation it's a blessed fruit of the Death of Christ. So much for the fruit of Christ's death.

6. Sixthly, Again in the sixth place, let us consider the fruit of Christ's resurrection; and that hath a great deal of fruit; the resurrection of Christ, what fruit grows upon this bough! Three sorts of fruit grow upon this bough. But briefly of these.

1. First of all, the believing soul is fully and completely justified: The full and complete justifying of the Soul depends upon the Resurrection of Christ: For when Christ arose from the dead, he is said to be justified of the Spirit: That is, he was fully acquitted, he was fully absolved; God the father declared to all the world that he was satisfied, the debt was paid, he was fully satisfied: I say, it was declared to men and Angels at that time when Christ did arise, the judge himself acquitted him, he did not break prison, but the father himself justified him; and it's said, the Angel came and rolled away the stone, which makes it evident to all the world that he was justified; and so he being justified, all his people are justified virtually in him, so that he left all his chains behind him: He did not come forth, when he came forth, bound hand and foot, as Lazarus did, but the Napkins and all bonds were left behind; so that the complete justification of a Sinner comes in by virtue of Christ's complete Resurrection. The Apostle speaks of the Answer of a good conscience by the Resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead. A good conscience may now answer, if justice come to demand anything, the good conscience it may answer and say, Lord didst thou acquit thy son by his Resurrection? didst not thou roll away the stone, or cause the Angel to do it? and why dost thou come to me? That's a sweet fruit that grows upon the Resurrection of Christ.

2. Secondly, the Quickening of the new man, and the raising of a dead heart to life, is another fruit that grows upon the resurrection of Christ; now Christ is he that quickens whom he will: by the mighty power of his resurrection is a poor soul raised up to live unto God; I say all the life and strength of grace comes from the resurrection of Christ; see what the Apostle says in Rom. 6. 4. mark, that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, that is, by the glorious power of the father, by that almighty power in which he was so glorious, I say Christ was raised from the dead, even so, saith he, we should walk in newness of life; it's a mighty argument unto a gracious heart to walk with God, and to live unto God, and to walk in the newness of the Spirit; why, Christ he is risen, he is risen from the dead, and therefore when this word comes to the soul that is grovelling here below, and seeks Christ in dead works and duties, he is not there, he sees not the death nor the resurrection of Christ, but the power of Christ doth raise souls to live unto this newness of life, and that is the fruit of the resurrection of Christ. But,

3. Again, Thirdly, there is another fruit of the resurrection of Christ, and that is the Resurrection of the body at the last day, this is a most sweet fruit that grows upon Christ, the resurrection of the bodies of all his Saints at the last day: he is said to be the first-fruits of them that slept, in 1 Cor. 15. 20. He is become the first-fruits of them that slept; the first-fruits sanctify the whole crop, they were to bring the first-fruits, the first-fruits they were brought forth, the first-fruits sanctify the crop, that as they should reap that for the glory of God, so their whole harvest: now Christ he is the first-fruits of them that slept, his resurrection it gives assurance unto the saints that as he is risen from the dead, so the Lord he shall also raise them up, he shall raise them up by the mighty power of his resurrection: see there in the Gospel by Matthew 27. 52. And many bodies of the saints which slept, arose, and came out of the graves after his resurrection, and went into the holy city, and appeared unto many; a pledge given of our resurrection, that all the saints shall be raised at the last, many of the Saints that slept in the dust they arose, and were seen of many in Jersalem, there were witnesses of it; this is a pledge I say that the bodies of all the Saints shall be raised up at the last day; and these are the fruits that grow upon Christ's Resurrection.

7. Seventhly, There are also many fruits that grow upon Christ's Ascension, his Ascension unto Heaven; to tell you what fruits are there.

1. First of all, this is the fruit of Christ's Ascension, viz. The glorious triumph over all enemies, and powers of darkness, both in his own person, and in his people, I say a glorious triumph over all enemies, for the day of Christ's Ascension was the day of his triumph; it's said in Ephes. 4. 8. when he ascended on high he led captivity captive; alluding to a great conquest that when they have taken captives they will have a day of triumph to show them openly: and so Jesus Christ he led captivity captive, Sin and Satan and all the powers of darkness that had led poor souls captive, even them hath he led captive, and looks upon all these as bound by Christ, and they shall do no great harm: that's the first fruit of Christ's ascension.

2. Secondly, the donation of the spirit, and all the gifts of the Spirit, is another fruit of Christ's Ascension; it's said before in that place of the Ephesians, That when he ascended on high, he led Captivity Captive, and he gave gifts to men: all the gifts that are given to Churches, to men for the use of the Churches, they are the fruit of Christ's Ascension: Nay, all the gifts and graces that are given to any particular Soul, they are fruits of Christ's Ascension; he gave gifts to men, yea, to the Rebellious: yea, The Spirit of grace and consolation is given to the Saints to comfort them, and to lead them into truth. See what Christ hath promised in John 16. 7. Nevertheless I tell you the truth, it is expedient for you that I go away: for if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you, but if I depart I will send him unto you: see how the sending of the Spirit did depend upon Christ's going, If I do not ascend, the Spirit will not come; but if I go, I will send him.

3. But again Thirdly, There is another fruit of Christ's Ascension, and that is, The carrying up of the hearts of his people into Heaven: the holy conversation, and those heavenly affections and dispositions, which are (or should be) in all the Saints, they are the fruits of Christ's Ascension, for he ascended for this very end that he might lift up their hearts: If I be lifted up, I will draw all men after me: he was lifted up into heaven, that he might draw eyes and souls after him: and therefore it's observable how Christ ascended, he ascended openly, he ascended in the view of all that were present: he ascended whilst he was in the midst of his Disciples, talking of things concerning the Churches, he presently ascended; this was one end why Christ would not ascend in secret, but openly, that they may know he is in Heaven, and that by the sight of his Ascension he might draw them after him in Spirit, though they could not follow him in body for the present: as the Eagle, when she teaches her young ones, she goes before and flieth aloft, that they may follow after her; and thus doth the Lord Jesus, he soars aloft, that he might make his Saints to give holy attempts, at least in their Spirits, whilst their bodies are here on earth; Oh, he canit endure that they should be creeping here below; a low spirit and a low conversation is not fit for Saints: he would not have his people to have rooting in the earth, he would have his people be like Aaron's Rod: Aaron's Rod it was not like other Trees, it had no rooting in the earth, and yet it blossomed; such would the Lord have his people to be, he canit away that they should have low conversations, that their affections should be creeping here upon the earth and not soaring aloft, and living in heaven where he is. Under the Levitical Law, the things that did creep upon the earth, they were abominable, and they were unclean; God gave a Commandment in Levite. 11. 41. And every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth shall be an abomination, it shall not be eaten; it doth typify what the Lord would have his people to be, he would not have his people to live below on the earth: the earth is but dust, and that's Serpents meat; the Lord would have them to live above as Christ did, that his Ascension might be a means to draw their hearts above, that their affections, meditations and desires, and whole conversation might be in heaven: as for us, says the Apostle, Our Conversation is in heaven; now when this conversation is given out to any of the Saints, let them be thankful to Christ for it, it's not in themselves, it's the fruit of this bough that proceeds from Christ the Tree of Life. But then

4. Fourthly, Again, all those boughs and branches that are above, they with all the Mansions are the fruit of Christ's Ascension, in John 14. 2. In my Fathers house are many mansions, if it were not so I would have told you; I go to prepare a place for you; this is one end of Christ's going to heaven that he might prepare a place for all his people, that he might furnish a Table with great glory, that he might prepare a great supper against their coming, that he might bespeak a great welcome for them against they come there; I say there are glorious preparations that Christ is making to entertain his people with, when they are come into heaven, such as eye hath not seen, nor ear hath heard, nor the heart of man canit conceive: all these are fruits of Christ's Ascension. Besides, their Ascension in body and soul at the last day, is a fruit or consequent of Christ's Ascension, he ascended that they might ascend after him, Father I will that they which thou hast given me, may be with me, that they which thou hast given me, may come and behold my glory: The Lord Jesus he hath set the doors wide open to his people, having unlocked them, and taken the Keys; he hath not only the Keys of heaven, but of hell; and the Lord he hath set a flaming Sword by the way of Paradise, that after Adam had sinned he should not come there: but Christ by his Ascension, he hath taken away that Sword and opened the door, and set forth that glory, that they shall all be put into the possession of that glory which he hath prepared for them; and this Ascension which they shall partake of at the last day, is a blessed consequent of Christ's Ascension into heaven. I thought to have spoken of the fruit of Christ's Mediation or Intercession, and so have come to the Use, but I shall reserve it for another time.

SERMON VIII.

CANT. 2. 3. —And his fruit was sweet to my taste.

I Showed you what this fruit is, that is sweet: there are several kinds of fruit that grow upon Christ: you have heard of the fruit of his heart, the fruit of his lips, the fruit of his loins, the fruit of his life: I speak the last day of the fruit of his death: and I shown you ten several fruits that grow upon this bough: I speak also of the fruit of his Resurrection, and the fruit of his Ascension; I shall repeat nothing, because I must be short. Here's but one bough more, and that is his Intercession, or his sitting at the right hand of his Father. Now, what's the fruit that grows upon this bough, the fruit of Christ's Intercession?

1. First of all, The actual Application of all that he hath purchased unto his people; this is the fruit of Christ's Intercession, he hath purchased by his death, and applies by his Intercession: the Lord Jesus he intercedes for them in particular, he hath all their names in particular upon his breast, and he doth not only intercede for them in the lump, but for every particular soul that his Father hath given him: so he tells Simon Peter, I have prayed for thee Simon, that thy faith fail not; Christ hath purchased pardon of sin by his blood, but the Application of pardon to this and that soul, it's the fruit of Christ's Intercession; and so he hath purchased grace, and he hath purchased glory by his blood; but the giving out of grace, and putting the soul into actual possession of glory, this is a fruit of Christ's Intercession.

2. Again Secondly, There is another precious fruit grows upon this bough, and that is, The large way, or door that is made and set open for poor sinners to come to God the Father by. There is a large door for poor sinners to come to God by, and that this door is open, and held open, we are beholden to Christ's Intercession; in Heb. 7. 25. He lives forever to make Intercession for all that come to God by him, and therefore, says the Text, He is able to save to the uttermost all that come to God by him: so that now the poor sinner that durst not come to God, that stood afar off trembling, that looked up like the poor Prodigal, and said, Father I have sinned before thee in thy sight, and am not worthy to come under thy roof: even for such poor souls hath Christ set open a door by his Intercession to come to God.

Will ever Christ plead for such a one as I am? Yes, says the Text, He lives to do it; he lives forever for that end, to make Intercession for them that come to God by him.

But is it possible that ever Christ should prevail for such a one? though Christ be willing to intercede, is it possible that he should prevail for such a sinner?

Yea, it's possible with Christ, for He is able to save to the uttermost: if he could not prevail, he were not able to save to the uttermost, but, says the Text, He is able to save to the uttermost all that come to God by him.

3. Again, Thirdly, There is another precious fruit that grows upon the Intercession, and that is, The presentation of the persons, and of the Sacrifices of all his people in his own name and righteousness unto God his Father; this is the fruit of Christ's Intercession: He takes all his Children by the hand and leads them to his Father, Lo, says he, here am I, and the Children thou hast given me. Father, these are my friends, these are my beloveds, let them find welcome in heaven for my sake; he presents also their sacrifices, all their services, their prayers, their praises, and their works, and washes them in his blood; it is said in the Revelation, there was an Angel stood by the Altar with a Censer in his hand, and he offered much sweet Incense, which he mixed with the prayers of the Saints: the Lord Jesus is that Angel, he mixes all their sacrifices with his Incense, that their prayers and praises may ascend before the Lord as Incense, that all their liftings up of hands and hearts may be acceptable.

4. Again, Fourthly, There's another fruit upon the bough of Christ's Intercession, and that is, The casting out of all those Indictments which are brought into the Court by malicious Adversaries against any of his people: the Lord Jesus sits at the right hand of the Father to cast them out; the Devil brings many a black bill of Indictment, but the Lord Jesus sits there to rebuke him; in Zach. 3. 2. The Lord rebuke thee Satan, says the Angel, the Lord rebuke thee: he pleads for them, he is their Advocate, he lets his Father know that all the accusations that Satan brings in are out of malice and envy: he is a malicious wrathful wretch, a Murderer from the beginning, he hath always sought the destruction of my servants, and therefore Father hear him not, says he, for he accuses out of malice, he hath always been a false accuser, he was cast out of heaven for a common Barreter, and therefore Lord let him not plead at thy Bar; there are many Bills brought in, but the Lord Jesus he shows the Cross that is made over them, they are all crossed with the cross of his own blood, all is discharged, all is paid; that Christ by his blood makes a mighty noise in heaven: sin cries loud many times, but the blood of Christ cries louder, it fills all the Throne with outcries, and it will be heard, it will be heard when it speaks for poor sinners: this is a precious fruit of Christ's Intercession.

5. Fifthly, The preservation of the Saints in a state of grace, is a fruit of Christ's Intercession, they can't fall, it's not possible they should be plucked out of his hand, for he holds them sure, he is continually Interceding for them, it's not possible they should be forgotten in heaven, for he always bears their names, and presents them unto his Father; he Intercedes continually for more grace, for new grace and for new strength, and new supplies to be given out every moment for his people, and therefore it's not possible their faith should fail: I have prayed for thee that thy faith fail not; it's not possible that their faith should fail; and this is a fruit of Christ's Intercession. Christ intercedes for his people, and therefore they are kept, and shall be kept by his mighty power through faith to salvation. I might add, The protection of Churches, and the destruction of enemies, as a fruit of Christ's Intercession; he sits to protect his people, and he sits there to destroy his enemies: Sit thou at my right hand till I make thine enemies thy footstool; the Lord in that day shall make Kings submit unto him; He shall strike through Kings in the day of his power: Intimating that the subjection of all enemies is a fruit of Christ's Intercession. These are the fruits that grow upon this bough. Now you have in part seen what fruit this Tree bears, let us make Application.

Use. First of all, If the fruit that grows upon Christ be so sweet to a believing soul, Then,

1. Use of Conviction, First, This may serve for Conviction unto such as taste no sweetness in Christ's fruit, that have no longings, no desires to eat of the fruit of this Tree; why certainly it's an evidence against such, they never were yet espoused to Christ. It's said of young women in their breeding condition, their desires are after fruit, rather to feed on fruit than other meat: I am sure it is so with such as are the Spouses of Christ, their desires are always after fruit, they would by their good will eat nothing else, their souls are always longing after it, they can't make a good meal, though they have never so much of creature comforts, if they have not a dish of this fruit, of this fruit that grows upon this Tree of Life: Oh poor creatures (they know not, such as find no sweetness) surely they know not what this fruit is, If thou knewest the gift of God, says Christ to the woman of Samaria in John 4. 10. and who it is that saith unto thee, Give me to drink, thou wouldest have asked of him, and he would have given thee living water; poor soul, thou knowest not what this Tree of Life is: Oh my friends, if you knew this Tree, the sweetness of it, you would say, Lord give us ever to eat of the fruit of this Tree; what pity is it that such fruit should be lost, because poor souls know not the goodness and sweetness of it! It's very strange that poor sinners should take so much delight in the world, so much delight in the fruit that grows upon their own stock, so much pleasure in the fruit of iniquity, and should find no sweetness, nor savor in the fruit that grows upon Christ: I say there is no fruit so sweet as this, yea there is nothing sweet but what grows upon this Tree, no mercy sweet if it grows not on this Tree, if it comes not from this Tree of Life; and yet to a carnal heart everything but Christ is sweet: Oh such men and women they have lost their taste: when a man's appetite is gone, that's a sign of a great distemper: give him wholesome meats, and pleasant drinks, and he tells you they are bitter and unsavory, it's a sign of a great distemper of the body, yea many times it's a great fore-runner of death: and truly it's thus with men's souls that taste not of the sweetness of Christ, they have lost their appetite, why? it's wonderful strange they should find no sweetness in Christ: What! sweetness in your profits and pleasures, sweetness in your lusts and harlotry, and what, no sweetness in Christ? Poor creatures, they have lost their taste, and the Lord grant it be not a fore-runner of eternal death; you have a woe denounced against such men in Isa. 5. 20. Woe unto them that call evil good, and good evil, that put darkness for light, and light for darkness, and put bitter for sweet, and sweet for bitter: Woe to them that call the Tree of Life bitter fruit, unsavory fruit, whose souls find no sweetness in the feeding upon it, and in the mean time find sweetness and delight in those things which are indeed bitter, for the fruit of sin is bitter fruit: Oh that such men would consider these two things:

1. First of all, What will you do when your desirable fruit is taken from you? There was a threatening against Babylon in Rev. 18. 14. And the fruits that thy soul lusted after, are departed from thee, and all things which were goodly and dainty are departed from thee, and thou shalt find them no more at all: The time will come when this will be spoken to Contemners of Christ, the despisers of that fruit which grows upon this Tree of Life: all thy desirable fruit is departed from thee, that which thou tookest most delight in it's departed from thee; the Lord he can easily blast your fruit, and cause it to wither: if the Spirit of the Lord do but blow upon your comforts they are gone, they are gone in a moment, they wither and they fall off immediately, and what will such men do when their fruit is departed from them, if they have not better fruit to live upon?

2. Secondly, Again, Oh that such men would consider that fearful threatening against despisers of the fruit of the Tree of Life, in Prov. 1. 31. Therefore shall they eat of the fruit of their own way, and be filled with their own devices: They shall eat the fruit of their own doings, when they will not listen to Wisdoms call; oh my friends it will be very sour fruit for a man to eat the fruit of his own ways: the fruit that grows in the Highway side it's but sour fruit, take heed that you despise not the Tree of Life, lest the Lord say you shall not eat thereof. That's the first Use of Conviction.

2. Again, Secondly, Here is a word of Invitation, and I shall propound it in the words of the Psalmist, in Psal. 31. 8. a gracious Invitation, O taste and see that the Lord is good, blessed is the man that trusteth in him: You have heard of the fruit that grows upon Christ, and now oh my friends come taste, and see how good the Lord is; the Psalmist speaks as a man that had found a good morsel, found some dainty food, he was eating of it alone, he found a great deal of sweetness in it, and he calls his friends, Oh friends come and taste, and see how good it is; if you did but taste of this meat, you would say, Oh taste and see how good the Lord is, there is pleasure and sweetness, there's enough to take up all your affections, and all your senses, here you may see and taste, you may see beauty and taste sweetness: the Tree of Life is not only beautiful, good to look upon, beautiful to the eye, but it's good for food; let me tell you, it's not enough to see the beauty of the Tree of Life, it's not enough to look upon it, it's not enough to see, but your souls must taste, you will never be the better for the fruit that grows upon Christ unless you taste it, unless you come and feed experimentally upon Christ: it's not enough to hear that the Lord is good, it's not enough that you have heard that there is so much pleasant fruit grows upon Christ, but as ever you desire to be nourished, comforted, revived, strengthened and quickened, why then come here and taste and see how good the Lord is: it's mercy that you have an Invitation; it was a direful threatening in Luk. 14. 24. For I say unto you, that none of these men which were bidden shall taste of my Supper: That they which were bidden as Guests should never taste of my fruit; the Lord doth▪ not speak this to you this day, he doth not say, You shall never taste of his fruit, but he gives you an Invitation, Oh then come and taste and see the goodness of God. Let me tell you by way of motive, That there is nothing in the world will do away the cursed and bitter taste of sin, but only the taste of the fruit of this Tree. Poor sinners you know not what the taste of the fruit of sin is: oh what bitterness many times doth sin leave behind! It's sweet in the commission, whilst men are committing sin, whilst men are in the midst of their lusts, in the midst of their vanities, in the midst of their cups, sin is sweet, but oh the bitterness, the poison of Asps that sin leaves behind in the Conscience; you have tried it may be to put out the taste of sin, to do away the bitterness that sin hath left behind, and you swallow many a good Ordinance after it, many a good duty, as you have supposed, you have washed with your own tears, and yet the taste of sin is left behind: and truly Brethren no wonder; there is nothing in the world will do away the taste, the bitter taste of sin, but only the taste of the fruit of Christ: O come and taste of this fruit, it will leave a sweet relish behind, it will leave a taste in your souls and consciences, that shall always be above and prevail against the bitter taste of sin.

Nay further, let me tell you, there is nothing else can sweeten your affliction, there is nothing else can sweeten your temptations, and your trials, but only a taste of the fruit of Christ, this will take away all the bitterness: and therefore I beseech you make good provision for yourselves against you take those bitter Pills; you will have something that is sweet by you, to sweeten your mouths against you take bitter Pills: Oh that men would make such provision in and against evil days; death is bitter in itself, and life is sweet: Oh that the Lord would revive you in giving to you a taste of the Tree of Life, and this will sweeten all afflictions, and it will take away the bitterness of the taste of death: the Martyrs they felt not the heat of the flames, for they had the juice of the Tree of Life in their mouths and souls, and the fruit of the Tree of Life preserved them.

Quest. But how may you know that you have tasted of this fruit of the Tree of Life?

Answ. You may know it by your desires after Christ: when the soul hath tasted of the fruit of Christ, it desires to taste more of that fruit, and it will see an averseness to sin: so did the Spouse of Christ, she sat down and desired to eat (as I told you it was rendered) she sat down and desired to eat, and still to eat, her desires were carried out still after further and further enjoyments and tastes of Christ; when the woman of Samaria had tasted of the sweetness of the water of Life, in John 14. 15. Give me to drink of this water that I thirst not: Give me evermore to drink of this water, she tasted but a drop and this gave her to cry out, O Lord give me evermore to drink of this water: so the soul having once tasted but a taste of this fruit of the Tree of Life, Lord give me evermore to eat of this Tree, of this fruit.

Again, It's known by the contentment, delight and satisfaction, that the soul doth find in Christ, by the tasting of him it hath satisfaction in Christ, a high esteem, and honorable esteem, such an esteem as David had: he desired to be a door-keeper in the Courts and House of the Lord: And so the soul that hath tasted of Christ, Oh Lord let me eat of thy fruit, though my condition be never so low, let me sit under thy Tree, though I sit like Job on the Dunghil, let me sit down and eat of thy fruit, and it's enough, it satisfies; when it hath Christ, whatever it hath it's satisfied: if it be but the fruit of Christ's love, it's satisfied: if it be but a piece of bread, if it hath the love of Christ with it, I shall say, Lord my lot is fallen on a goodly ground: and thus saith our Savior, Noman that hath drank old Wine and tastes of new, desires the old again, because it's bitter to him: so no man that is once in Christ desires to taste of the fruit of sin, because this fruit is better; Oh that many might be convinced of sin, such as wallow in their lusts, and take more delight in their lusts than in Christ, that have not yet tasted of the fruit of this Tree of Life, the Invitation is even to them, unto such that they might come in and taste, and see how good the Lord is. So much for the first Use.

2. Use. Secondly, A word of Exhortation to those that have interest in Christ. O that you would come and sit under this Tree and eat: That Christians would sit more under Christ, and eat more of his fruit. It's not enough to give a pluck and away, a snatch and away: but the Spouse she sat and plucked and eat. Christ doth not love a hasting gesture, he doth not love souls hast in plucking of his fruit: he doth not love they should post over Communion with him, but that they should sit down and eat. Oh chew well upon the Tree of Life, that you may find that sweetness, that infinite sweetness that is in it: Oh that you would pluck much of the fruit of this Tree; you that have interest in Christ, pluck much of this fruit, and eat much of this fruit; let me tell you, there is more fruit grows upon one bough than you can pluck all your days, and make no spare; there is more fruit grows upon one bough than you can pluck throughout all Eternity; Oh that you would every day be plucking a little; continually plucking and eating some of the fruit that grows upon this Tree of Life, it's but a taste that you can have, and therefore you had need be often, and always tasting of that fruit which is in him.

Besides, you can have but a taste of this sweetness, yet this taste is exceeding comfortable, reviving and strengthening; I say that very taste it's exceeding comfortable and reviving, there is no fruit so full of spirit as this fruit that grows upon the Lord Jesus; and it's full of strength, it will strengthen your souls abundantly; you may know it's very nourishing by the sweetness of it: Physicians say, That which tastes well, it nourishes well, and if so, I am sure this fruit is nourishing fruit, for it hath the sweetest taste, it hath the most delightful taste. O the sudden strength that the taste of this fruit hath conveyed unto poor weak and weary souls, to such as have been spent almost in their combats, and ready to faint and give up the Ghost, their spirits have been ready to fail within them, and the Lord hath given but one taste of this fruit, some fruit or other, the fruit of his death, or the fruit of his Resurrection, Ascension or Mediation, and it hath given new strength, and new Life to the poor soul, and it hath made it stand up and leap for joy: it crept upon the earth before, and now it mounts up like the Eagle. Oh this excellent fruit that is in Christ, it's worth the plucking, and it's worth the eating.

Besides, you may well pluck much of this fruit (you that have interest in Christ) you have all the advantage that can be; you have the shadow over you whilst you pluck it, and whilst you eat it, you need not labor much, and toil much, for the Lord (with this Tree) will be a shadow to you, you may pluck with delight, and eat with delight under his shadow, he will keep off his fathers displeasure, you may eat and pluck, and eat with delight, and need not fear surfeit, all the fruit is fully ripe, here Christ hath bidden you eat without fear. It's the sin of some, as the Apostle speaks, that they eat without fear: but here's the commendation of this fruit, you may eat without fear. Men may eat too much of the fruit of this world, and get a surfeit, it may cost many a Life and Soul, but here God's people may still pluck and eat, and eat and pluck, and eat abundantly.

3. Use. Thirdly, This Doctrine calls the Saints to thankfulness: Oh bless the Lord that he hath made such provision for you, that he hath provided such a Tree as this, that you may eat here, and eat in heaven, and forever feed upon it, and be comforted, and satisfied; What do you owe to the Lord, you that are the people of the Lord? What do you owe to the Lord for his mercy? I say, what shall you render unto the Lord for all his loving kindness, when you pluck, and when you eat; look upward, I say eat and look upward. Do not eat as the Swine eat under the Tree and never look up from whence it comes; it's a sin to receive any mercy, so to take them as not to look up; but when you eat of the fruit of this Tree, Oh lift up your hearts and look up unto Christ and be thankful; do but consider what poor creatures you are, what need you have of this fruit, you had starved, your souls had starved and famished forever, if Christ had not been a fruitful Tree, all the creatures could not have given you fruit for your souls to feed on. I tell you the fruit that is upon the creature, is vanity, it's perishing, they could not have nourished you up to eternal life; Oh you had famished, you had fainted, you had perished; and when you were in this fainting perishing condition, he sprang up as a Tree in the Wilderness, as a Tree in the Forest; he sprang up in your fainting and wildred conditions, he sprang up and became a fruitful Tree unto your nourishment. And do you but consider what unfruitful Trees you were to Christ, when Christ became a fruitful Tree unto you; Oh the cursed fruit that you brought forth to him, you brought forth nothing but sin and death, there's all the fruit that you brought to him, you brought forth sin to him, and brought forth death to yourselves* Oh that ever the Lord Christ should be a Tree of Life unto you, you that were Trees of death unto yourselves, and Trees of Death unto him: your sins put him to death: That ever he should be a Tree of Life unto you, and be a Tree to bring forth such fruit, such peace, such pardon, such joy, such strength, oh the infinite love of Christ to you! Why certainly Christ deserves a great rent for his fruit; it's said in Cant. 8. 11, 12. That Solomon had a Vineyard, and he let it out for a thousand pieces of Silver; if Solomon had so much for his fruit, what deserves Christ for his fruit? Oh the thousand pieces of Silver, the thousand Hosannahs, the thousand Halleluja's, and thousand praises that are due to Christ for his fruit!

Well, I beseech you, give Christ of his own fruit, I say give him of his own fruit: he requires nothing from you, but what you may pluck from his own Tree; give him his own fruit: as it's said of Cain, as wicked as he was, when the Lord blessed the ground, he brought of the fruit of the ground and presented it as an offering unto the Lord; and now if Cain brought the fruit of the ground, should not you bring the fruit of the Tree? The Lord hath given you all the fruit of the Tree to eat of; Oh bring of the fruit of the Tree as a Sacrifice that the Lord hath given you so freely to eat of; know that all your mercies come from this Tree, and therefore look that all your mercies, liberties and comforts grow upon this Tree: Oh then acknowledge Christ in all, and say with David, O Lord all things come of thee, and of thine own have I given thee: So go and return all these mercies to Christ; if thou hast anything that is good, say, Lord this grew upon thy Tree, and I am beholding to Christ for it: if thou hast any grace, any strength, any ability, any opportunity to do for God, to serve thy Generation, say, Blessed be Christ for it, it's none of my fruit, but it's Christ's fruit, this strength and that grace, it grew upon that Tree, I bless the Lord for it; Oh be taken up with admiration, with holy admiration; there is a world of precious fruit that grows upon Christ: you have heard but a little of it, oh be taken up with admiration, continually be taken up with thanksgiving and acknowledgement, give all back again to Christ, and by that little, that little sight of the goodness, and the little taste of the sweetness that the Lord now gives you of the Tree of life, rise higher, do not rest here, but be rising higher and higher, and say, Oh Lord if the fruit be so sweet, what's the Tree itself? How excellent and glorious is the Lord Jesus Christ the Tree of life, from whence such precious fruit doth grow? Rest not upon anything but Christ, and be still ascending higher and higher, and say, Lord if this fruit, the fruit that I now taste be so sweet, what is the fruit that I shall taste of in heaven! If I taste of the fruit of the lowest boughs, and they be so sweet, what is the fruit that grows upon the top branches, which is reserved for the Saints to pluck, and to eat of when they shall come unto heaven? And thus I have given you in part to see the meaning of these words, and how usefully they may be enlarged in your own Meditation, and remember the Text, it's worthy you should spend many thoughts upon it: As the Apple-tree among the Trees of the Wood, so is my beloved among the sons; I sat down under his shadow with great delight, and his fruit was sweet to my taste▪

SERMON I.

MATT. 18. 21, 22.

Then Peter came to him and said, Lord, how oft shall my Brother sin against me, and I forgive him? till seven times?

Jesus saith unto him, I say not unto thee until seven times: but until seventy times seven.

HERE is Peter's Question unto Christ about the Forgiving of Offences, and Christ's Answer unto Peter's Question; you must know that the Question, and so the Answer relates unto particular offenses, personal offenses, such wrongs and injuries as are done by one man unto another. As for those which are more immediately against God, and more public, Christ doth give another rule in this Chapter: but this, I say, is concerning personal offenses or wrongs which are done by one man unto another. How often shall my Brother sin against me, and I forgive? It is true, every such offense is a sin against God, and so far as it is a sin against God, there is no man can forgive: the Lord only can forgive sin, he against whom the sin is committed: but now there is an offense or wrong which is done against man, and so far as the offense is against man, man may forgive; man cannot forgive God's part, but so far as the offense is against man, man may forgive it: nay Christians ought to forgive it, so far to forgive it as not to seek any revenge for the wrong done. How often shall my Brother sin or offend against me? By Brother here we are to understand any relation, any friend, any neighbor, any man that we have to do with; if that he hath done any wrong or any offense, he's comprehended under this relation of a Brother: any man, for we are all Brethren. How often shall my Brother sin against me, and I forgive him? till seven times? there is Peter's Limitation: he seems to give an answer to himself, for it comes short of the answer of Christ: Shall I forgive him so often, says Peter? Lord! what shall I forgive him seven times? It seems to be hard to forgive a brother seven times: but see how Christ's answer doth exceed Peter's, Christ will have no such bounds set as seven times, I say not unto thee, till seven times, but until seventy times seven: As if Christ should say, Wherefore dost thou say seven times, to set the bounds of thy forgiveness seven times to thy brother? I will have no such bounds given: you think it a great matter to forgive seven times, I say unto you, That it is the Will of my Father that you forgive until seventy times seven: a certain number for an uncertain; seventy times seven, that is, I will have you to multiply forgiveness: not that Christ himself doth set bounds to seventy times seven, that they should proceed so far and no further: but I will have you to forgive very often, nay, as often as thy brother doth offend, not seven times, but I say seventy times seven. That which I shall observe at this time is this:

Doct. How far the thoughts of the Lord and the ways of the Lord are beyond our ways and our thoughts in this matter of forgiveness; Peter thought seven times for a man to forgive an offending brother, was a great matter, but seventy times seven was not enough; and know that what the Lord Christ doth here give in as a duty unto Peter, and to all the Disciples, that the Lord Jesus himself doth assert as his prerogative in the matters of forgiveness, in the matter of forgiving offenses and transgressions. The Lord's thoughts and the Lord's ways are infinitely above ours. This truth I shall handle at this time, to make way for that main Doctrine of the Text, which is the Doctrine of Forgiveness, forgiving Offences. Now that the Lord's thoughts, and the Lord's ways, are so far above ours, it is clear from Scripture, Isa. 55. 7, 8, 9. see it was in the matter of forgiveness this is spoken: Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts, and let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy, and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon: For my thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the Lord: for as the Heavens are higher than the Earth, so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts. Though you cannot think that I should multiply pardon, you think seven times hard, but the Lord can multiply unto seventy times seven; the Lord's ways are not as your ways, nor his thoughts as yours, for his thoughts are above your thoughts, as the heavens are above the earth; now this shows us how far short we do imitate the Lord in forgiving others: For

1. First of all, The Lord when he forgives, he forgives those that are enemies; this will advance the exceeding riches of the Lord's grace; I say the Lord when he forgives, he forgives enemies, for so is every man by nature; neither can any man lay down that enmity that is in the heart, till such time as the Lord Christ brings home a pardon, that is the first work and the ground of all that the Lord doth for a soul, and of what it doth for him: I will be merciful to their unrighteousnesses, and their sins and iniquities will I remember no more. Now how far are the thoughts and ways of the Lord above our thoughts and ways in this matter of forgiveness! Christ he forgives enemies, he brings home forgiving mercy unto enemies, and reconciles the enmity that is in their hearts; But oh how far come we short? we are so far from forgiving enemies, as we can scarce forgive friends, hard to forgive a brother, a dear and near relation: Oh how far do we come short of Christ in that?

Secondly, The Lord when he forgives offenses and transgressions to a poor soul, he forgives freely: and the freeness of the Lord's forgiveness, will appear in these particulars▪

1. First, In that the Lord is always ready to forgive, there is a propensity in the heart of the Lord to pardon poor sinners that come in to him, he is ready to it, God is never unready; it discovers the freeness of the Lord in this work: the Psalmist speaks of the Lord in Psal. 86. 5. For thou Lord art good, and ready to forgive, and plenteous in mercy to all them that call upon him. Of tender mercies, God is never unready for this work, always ready, ready to forgive, the heart of God is never out of tune, never out of frame for this work, never unready for this work, always ready to forgive: but oh, how far are the ways of the Lord above our ways, for this, and his thoughts above our thoughts? Where is the man, or where is the woman whose heart is ready to forgive, whose heart is never out of tune, never out of frame for this work of forgiving wrongs, injuries and offenses unto them that they do commit them? The Lord he is ready to forgive. It may be at last a man may be drawn off to forgive a man when friends have dealt with him, when he hath been urging it on his own heart to be his duty, when he hath taken pains with his own soul, and brought the Word home to his soul, and hath smarted for this unreadiness to forgive: but oh, where is the man or woman that looks unto God, whose heart is never out of tune, but always ready to forgive?

2. Secondly, The freeness of the Lord's forgiveness appears thus, In that he is not only ready to forgive, but he forgives at the desire of the poor creature; no sooner doth a poor creature express his desire, but the Lord is ready to express his willingness, set forth in the Parable of the wicked Servant in Mat. 18. 32. I forgave thee because thou desiredst me; not that this his desire was the cause of forgiveness, but it expressed the readiness of the Lord at his desire to come in, and to manifest pardon unto him. Now I pray let us consider how far the thoughts of the Lord, and the ways of the Lord in this particular are above ours: for the Lord forgives that which is desired; but oh, where is the man almost that can so easily forgive at the desire of him that offends? hardly brought off, although the party offending doth desire it, although friends have desired him, and relations have desired him, and God hath desired him, and Christ hath desired him, yet how hardly are they brought off to this work?

3. Again, Thirdly, The Lord forgives freely: it appears thus, He doth forgive upon the confession of his people, he is ready to manifest his pardoning and forgiving love, 1 Joh. 1. 9. If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins: And hereby I say it appears that he forgives freely, in that he forgives upon the very confession of his people, though not for confession, and not for desire, as I said before; but yet in this way the Lord is pleased to manifest forgiveness; no sooner doth the poor soul confess, but he presently forgives: I have sinned, says David: The Lord hath done away thy sin, says the Prophet presently, that is the next word. Now how far is the way of the Lord above ours? Where is the man that is ready to forgive upon a confession? Yea, although there be an acknowledgement of the wrong done, yet how hard a matter is it for a poor creature to pass by that wrong? Thus, how much are we unlike to God?

4. Fourthly, Nay further, the freeness of God's forgiving mercy appears in this, He doth forgive presently, as soon as his people look towards him; he doth not make long delay about the business, he doth not stand to consider whether he shall forgive such offenses or no, but presently gives out pardon: I have sinned, says David, and in the next words, The Lord hath done away thine iniquity: Now how far is the way of the Lord above us in this? Where is the man or woman that can find in their heart to forgive presently the wrong or injury done? Oh there must be a great deal of do to bring off the heart to this work to forgive. It may be in length of time men's hearts may be persuaded, through a long time they may forgive and forget: but oh where is the working of grace, to bring off the hearts of men to forgive presently? truly in this we come far short of God, and the way and thoughts of God.

5. Fifthly, Nay further, The freeness of God in forgiving a poor sinner, appears in this, He doth prevent poor sinful creatures with pardoning mercy, Even before they do desire, he prevents their desire, their supplication for mercy, he brings in a pardon to a poor soul, before it hath made any real acknowledgement of its offense: I said I will confess my sin unto the Lord, Psal. 32. 5. And thou forgavest me the iniquity of my sin; David did but say it in his heart, he had but such a thought, such a purpose in his soul; well, I will return unto the Lord, and I will confess: And before David could do it, the Lord he prevents him, he prevents him with mercy. And so another Instance you have of the Prodigal in Luk. 15. He said he would go to his Father and make his confession; at the 18 Verse, I will arise and go to my Father, and say, Father I have sinned against Heaven and before thee, &c. and then at the 20 Verse it is said, He arose and came to his Father. But when he was yet a great way off, his Father saw him, and had compassion, and ran, and fell on his neck, and kissed him. Mark how the compassion of the Father did prevent the confession of the Son, I will go to my Father, and say, Father I have sinned so and so, but before he could utter one word, the Father falls upon his neck and kisseth him, and forgives his many and great transgressions, and then indeed afterward he doth make an humble acknowledgement: And thus the Lord doth deal with poor sinners, he doth prevent them with pardon, before they can acknowledge their transgression; and how far is the way of the Lord above the way of man in this? Where is the man or woman that will deal thus with an offending brother, with one that hath done him wrong and injury, that will prevent their desire, and prevent their confession? but men will rather stand upon it, and think they have rather warrant so to do: If my brother confess and acknowledge his offense, then it may be we think it our duty to forgive, though hardly to bring off our hearts to that: but where there is no confession and acknowledgement, where is the man like the Prodigals Father, to run and meet his son, and seal up forgiveness before confession, or an acknowledgement? This shows that the way of the Lord in matters of forgiveness is far above man, the Lord forgives enemies, and the Lord forgives freely. But,

3. Thirdly, The Lord's ways are above ours, it appears in that the Lord forgives fully: He doth not only forgive freely those whom he doth forgive, but the Lord forgives poor sinners fully: I shall make it out in these particulars. As

1. First, The Lord he doth forgive all the debts When God doth forgive a soul, he doth forgive all offenses, all transgressions and sins whatsoever: I forgave thee all the debt; he doth not forgive one sin to the soul, and leave the other to reckon with him for, and to condemn him for; but where the Lord forgives one, he forgives all, else the forgiveness of the Lord were not full. There are some that think indeed that God may forgive a soul one sin, and yet reckon with him for other sins: as the Arminians say, That God forgives Original sin to all the World, and yet condemns for actual sin; but this is contrary unto the fullness of that grace of forgiveness: As Jesus Christ died for sins against the Law, so he died for the sin of Unbelief; and when God forgives the sin of the Law, he forgives Unbelief, and overcomes Unbelief, else it were in vain for God to forgive transgression: though God could forgive all transgressions against the Law, yet if God did not forgive transgression against the Gospel, we had been shut up eternally for that sin; but when God forgives one sin, he forgives all sins, and herein is the fullness of his pardon; But oh how short is our way of God's way in this particular! A man can find in his heart to forgive some wrong, but to forgive all the wrong that a man hath done, this is a hard work: how hardly is the heart of man brought off to this work?

2. Secondly, Nay again, The fullness of God's forgiving mercy, it appears in this, He doth not only forgive all the offenses, where the offenses are few, but he forgives them all where they are many. If the soul be brought home to Christ the great Mediator, the great Sacrifice, the Lord forgives for all sins though never so many, Luk. 7. 47. She loved much, because much was forgiven her; though her sins were very many, yet they were forgiven her fully: we can forgive a brother, a Neighbor, or a friend if they have done us but a few wrongs, but now when offenses come to be multiplied, suppose they were many, Oh how hard a matter is it to us to forgive them, though easy with a Almighty God? But

3. Thirdly, Again, The fullness of God's forgiving mercy doth appear, in that he doth forgive the greatest wrong. He doth not only forgive many when they are small, but he forgives many when they are great: and herein I say is the greatness of the grace and of the love of God towards poor sinners, that although offenses be never so great, he pardons and forgives them all, Though your sins be as scarlet, yet they shall be made as white as snow, Isa. 1. 18. This is it that aggravates the offenses of his people, in Isa. 43. 24. Thou hast made me to serve with thy sins, thou hast wearied me with thine iniquities; yet this follows at the 25 Verse, I, even I am he that blotteth out thy transgressions for my Name sake, and will not remember thy sins; this was it that did aggravate the offenses of his people, thou hast made me to serve with thy sins. God he forgives their sins though they were so great, that God was oppressed under them as a servant under a heavy burden, and yet saith the Lord, I, even I am he that blotteth them out: Oh how short is our way of the way of God? It may be a man may forgive offenses when they be small, but when they come to apprehend them great, they are great wrongs done unto him, and never was any wronged as I am, by such a one, and such a friend: Oh how hard a matter then is it to imitate God in forgiving such great wrongs?

4. Fourthly, But again further, The fullness of God's forgiving mercy appears in this, He so forgives his people as He retains no grudge in his heart against his people, nothing but clearness in the heart of God toward his people; Joseph was one that forgave his Brethren so freely as he never retained any grudge: he takes off their aggravation; it was not you, but God that sent me hither, therefore be not offended: Joseph herein was a Type of Christ, he forgave his Brethren so fully as he bore no grudge against them, we never read that he upbraided his brethren so much as once, for all the wrong they had done to him, there was no grudge in the heart of Joseph against his brethren, there was nothing but clearness in his heart, and so nothing but clearness in the heart of God: But oh how do we fall short of God? Men may profess forgiveness, O they forgive their Neighbor such a wrong: but oh is there not still some old grudge at the bottom that is ready to break out upon all occasions? How short do we come of God in this respect? Nay

5. Fifthly, Further, The fullness of God's forgiveness doth appear in this, That he doth not bear any grudge, he will not only not upbraid, but He doth receive those whom he forgives into nearest friendship and fellowship with himself. Though man did greatly sin against God in Adam, and brake his first Covenant, the Lord he enters into another Covenant, a second Covenant, and in that Covenant he gives his people a nearer admittance unto himself than formerly in his first Covenant, nearer in Christ in the second Adam than in the first; and truly when ever the Lord doth forgive a poor soul, and pass by the failings and infirmities of his people, the wrongs and injuries which they do commit against him daily, yet he carries it as fairly and as friendly with them, as if they had never broke Covenant with him; so did Christ to Peter, though he did wrong and injury to Christ, yet the Lord Jesus he doth admit him as near as formerly, he doth not only not upbraid him, but look upon him as his dear friend. Now how far is this way of God above our ways and thoughts? It may be you will forgive a man that hath done you wrong, yea, but you will not trust him; he was once your friend, but you will never trust him with your secrets again, you will have an eye upon him, and watch over him as long as ever he lives: Oh! how far short are we in our forgiveness, of the forgiveness of God? But

Again, The Lord he doth not only forgive freely and fully, but he forgives sincerely, with all his heart: I will do you good with all my heart and soul: so the Lord doth not only profess with his lips, he doth not only speak it in word, but the heart of God goes along with it, with every word of pardon: I know my thoughts towards you, in Jer. 29. 11. they are thoughts of peace, and not of evil, to give you an expected end; he doth not only speak peace, but his heart is full of peace. Oh how sincerely doth God forgive! there is no hypocrisy, no dissimulation, no deceit in God's forgiveness: but oh how unlike are we in our thoughts and ways to God in this? There is many a man professes, ay, he doth forgive, he doth forgive another that hath done him wrong, but his heart doth not go along with his word, though he cannot but for shame profess, yet a man's heart doth check him, and tell him, he doth not really forgive even as God forgives, Psal. 55. 21. Their words are smoother than Oil, peaceable words, but war is in their heart: when a man is put upon it by being urged to it to forgive, it's a shame not to confess forgiveness, but it is not from the heart. But

Again, When God forgives he forgives unchangeably: When God pardons, he doth not pardon today, and call it in tomorrow again: he doth not pardon today and recall it tomorrow: I will be merciful to their sins, and their iniquities will I remember no more, I will blot them out as a Cloud, as a thick Cloud; A Cloud that is blown away and scattered that it never come again, so doth the Lord give out pardon, he forgives unchangeably. Indeed the Papists, and some that follow them in that way, God he may forgive, say they, and yet visit for transgressions, and afterward such may fall away, and God may call to account and visit for all sins: but this is contrary to sound Doctrine. That which is urged by them for the proof of this their Assertion is that Parable in Matth. 18. that was spoken upon this occasion of forgiving: some plead (upon this Parable) that God may forgive a man all his sins, and yet afterwards calling him to account may reckon with him for those very sins: It speaks of a certain man who ought his Lord ten thousand Talents, but his Lord forgave him all the debt, and immediately he went forth and fell upon his fellow servant which ought him an hundred pence, and took him by the throat and cast him into prison, till he should pay all the debt; whereupon it is said, When his Lord heard thereof, he was wroth, and delivered him to the Tormentors, till he should pay all that was due unto him. Now from this Parable some plead, That a man may be pardoned, and afterwards God may reckon with him for those very sins. But by way of Answer,

1. First, Know it is dangerous to strain every Parable: we are in Parables to look to that which is the main scope; it is not that God forgives sins, and then calls to account afterward for them again; the scope of the Parable is, That no man can know he is pardoned of God, but that man that is ready to forgive wrongs and injuries done unto him: But yet they will urge particularly this Parable, that the debt was forgiven, and yet he called to an account.

2. Secondly, I answer to that, That the Lord may forgive some temporal punishment; when God removes a man or a people from temporal punishment, then God is said to deliver from sin, and so far this servant was forgiven, and any a person may be forgiven so far, God may give out a promise of the removal of some temporal punishment, as he did upon Ahab his outward confession; a man may be so far forgiven, that temporal punishment for a while may be repealed and held back, and a man by his own folly may pull down some greater wrath. And then

3. Thirdly, Again, He was never made partaker of that pardoning mercy which the Covenant holds forth, which appears by the frame of his Spirit after he was pardoned, Verse 26. Lord have patience with me, and I will pay thee all; it was no more than the forgiving of some temporal punishment: he knew not what did belong to the Covenant of Grace, he was ignorant of God's way in forgiving sin, he was a Legalist; certainly this man was never acquainted with the Covenant of Grace, he did not know that he was a poor weak man, and altogether unable to make satisfaction to his Lord. And then Again, He was never made partaker of that pardoning mercy which the Covenant of Grace holds forth, as appears by the frame of his Spirit after he was pardoned. It was no more than the forgiving of some temporal punishment, his sin was not pardoned by the Covenant of Grace, for if it had, he would have acted more mildly, and not so irregularly, and dealt so harshly with his fellow servant.

And it appears in that other word, in the 32 Verse, O thou wicked servant; so that he was never made righteous with the righteousness of Christ, for there he is called the wicked servant: so that you see notwithstanding what was objected, that the Lord whenever he doth forgive a soul, he doth forgive unchangeably, he doth not cross the score today, and then call to an account for the same another day, but whom he pardons, he pardons forever: how far short is our way of forgiveness unto God's? How hard a matter is it to forgive unchangeably? David did forgive for a time, when Shimei cursed him, then he made an humble acknowledgement, but upon another occasion he commands his son Solomon to fall upon him, that Shimei's head might not go in peace to the Grave: You see then that the point is made good, that the thoughts of the Lord, and the ways of the Lord in the matter of forgiveness, are far above the thoughts and the ways of man; Peter thinks seven times to be a great matter, but Christ says, not seven times, but seventy times seven. A word for Application in brief to shut up all.

1. Use. Here is encouragement for poor sinners to come in to Christ, there is mercy and forgiveness with him that he may be feared, and the thoughts and ways of the Lord in this particular, they are as far above your thoughts and ways as the heavens are above the earth; and oh what a wide open door is here! That the Lord would persuade some poor guilty soul to come in to Christ by this door of mercy, forgiveness and plenteous redemption: though you have been enemies, and though your hearts be still filled with enmity against God, yet know that the Lord is able to forgive enemies, and though you have nothing in the world to procure your acceptance, you can do nothing that should commend you to God; yet know that the Lord he forgives freely, and though your transgressions have been multiplied, though very many, though very great, though you have made the Lord to serve with your sins, and wearied him with your iniquities, yet he is able to blot them out freely for his own name sake: Oh then that the Lord would persuade your hearts to come, and to submit to Christ, and not to go on in the way of rebellion, and take hold of that great propitiatory sacrifice, and then you shall know that the Lord forgives, for he forgives you cordially and sincerely; he doth so forgive your transgressions, as he will never remember them more.

2. Use. And it speaks a word of comfort and refreshment unto such poor souls as are in dark and sad conditions: some poor souls that have looked to Christ for righteousness, and yet are found sitting in darkness and oppressed with the weight of sin; and because (it may be) when you look into your own hearts, you find they are very narrow, when you are put upon this work of forgiving another, you are hardly brought off to it, and certainly the Lord may for this withdraw himself; Oh know you have sinned after profession, and you have sinned much, yea you have sinned much against light, and that is that which cuts and makes great gashes: but yet know that the Lord gave Commandment to Peter and his Disciples to forgive seventy times seven; certainly that command which the Lord gave to man to forgive seventy times seven, he will certainly forgive poor creatures though their sins be numberless. This is not to spur on to sin, this is no word to invite to sin: but this word of forgiveness is to the end the Lord may be feared and admired for his great grace; and take heed poor creatures you wrong not God of that which is his greatest glory: It is the glory of a man to forgive seventy times seven, and the oftener the more like unto God; now do not rob God of his glory, that infinite mercy which put him upon it to forgive seventy times seven; say therefore as the Church did in Mic. 7. 18, 19. Who is a God like unto thee that pardoneth iniquity, and passeth by the transgression of the remnant of his heritage? he retaineth not his anger forever, because he delighteth in mercy: he will turn again, he will have compassion upon us, he will subdue our iniquities, and thou wilt cast all our sins into the depth of the Sea. You may look upon your transgressions, nay you ought to look upon your sins, nay and to lie low because of your provocations, and abhor yourselves in dust and ashes, you can never lie too low in the consideration of your own vileness, none have sinned against so many aggravations, and sinned against so much light and conviction; when you have thus aggravated your sin, do not rob God of his glory, but say with the Prophet, Who is a God like unto thee that pardoneth iniquity, that forgiveth great iniquities, and many iniquities, who forgives seventy times seven.

3. Use. Lastly, This should be matter of great humiliation, that our thoughts and our ways are so beneath the thoughts and ways of God in the matter of forgiveness; Peter thought it a great matter, What to forgive seven times? Peter's number is very short of Christ's number. Yet where is the man or woman that is come to Peter's number? and yet Peter's number was short of Christ's number: Oh what cause have we to be humbled? One of the Evangelists hath it, If thy brother offend thee seven times in a day, and say, I repent, thou shalt forgive him; Oh how far are we from forgiving seven times in a day? We are so far from forgiving seven offenses in one day, as we many times remember one offense seven days, nay seven years together; Oh how unlike is this to Christ? Oh let us therefore labor to walk up to the rule, or else never profess ourselves to be Christ's Disciples. And so much for this time.

SERMON II.

MATT. 18. 21, 22.

Then Peter came to him and said, Lord, how oft shall my Brother sin against me, and I forgive him? till seven times?

Jesus saith unto him, I say not unto thee until seven times: but until seventy times seven.

I Made entrance before into these words: Here is Peter's Question and Christ's Answer concerning the forgiving of offenses, particular wrongs and personal injuries which are done to any man or woman. Peter propounds the Question, and seems to forestall Christ's Answer, by giving an Answer to it himself, which Christ did not approve of. But I proceed to the main Doctrine, which is this:

Doct. That the often forgiving of wrongs and injuries, is a duty which Christ commends unto, and commands all his Disciples to follow: I say until seventy times seven.

1. First, I shall clear this Point to you from Scripture, and show you from the word of the Lord, That this is a duty that is incumbent upon all that profess themselves to be Christ's Disciples.
2. Secondly, I shall hold forth unto you divers Examples of worthy and gracious men, who have practiced this Duty.
3. Thirdly, And then show you upon what ground Christ doth commend and command this Duty.

1. First, Look into the Proverbs of Solomon, where Wisdom speaks, which is Christ, Prov. 24. 29. Say not I will do so to him, as he hath done unto me, I will render unto a man according unto his works. Mark, here is the Counsel Wisdom gives unto all her Children, Say not I will do so to him as he hath done unto me: Do not say, I will be revenged of him for the wrong he hath done to me: do not say, I will give to him as good as he brings, I will recompense him according to his work; say not so, no, Christ will tell you, and Wisdom will teach all her scholars to unsay this Lesson, you must learn to forget this Lesson, I will do unto him as he hath done unto me, say not so; if you will be Wisdoms Scholars, you must learn to unsay this Lesson; indeed flesh and blood says so, and corrupt nature will bid you say so, I will do to him as he hath done to me, I will never put up these wrongs: Flesh and Blood will not put up these wrongs: and the Devil will put you on to do as you say, but Christ would not have you. If you would be Wisdoms Scholars fear to purpose this in your hearts, much less to act; Why? what then must we do?

See but what Wisdom invites us unto in Matth. 5. 39, 44. I say unto you resist not evil, but whosoever shall smite thee on the one cheek, turn to him the other also; and again, Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, and pray for them which despitefully use you and persecute you. Here Christ tells you what you should say, and what you should do in case of wrongs and injuries, namely, to render good for evil, it is the best way: look into Luk. 17. Christ would teach you your lesson if you would be his Disciples; Take heed to yourselves, says Christ, take heed: Ay but what should we take heed of? He doth not bid them take heed of the wrongs and injuries that others do unto them, that's not the matter Christ bids them take heed to; no, but take heed to yourselves, look to your hearts, watch over your affections, and over your passions; when any wrong and injury is done unto you, then you have need to take heed to yourselves, you do not resist evil, take heed you do not meditate revenge: you are in great danger of sinning against God when wrong is done unto you, and therefore of all other Counsel, now take heed to yourselves: see the Epistle to the Romans 12. 17, 19, 21. Recompence no man evil for evil. Avenge not yourselves, but rather give place unto wrath, for it is written, Vengeance is mine, I will repay, saith the Lord. Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good. Mark what counsel Christ gives here by the Apostle to all his Disciples. Be not overcome of evil: When is a man overcome of evil (we are speaking of wrongs) When is a man overcome with evil? Why, when his spirit is put out of frame by the wrongs and injuries he meets withal, when he strives to resist and meditate revenge, then this man is overcome with evil. When as a man can pass by the wrongs, pass by an injury that is done, and his soul is drawn forth in pity and compassion towards that man that doth him the wrong: Alas poor man, he hath wronged his own soul more than me, I have cause to pity him more than to seek revenge of him: but now when as a man's passion is heightened, to give him as good as he brings, this man is overcome with evil. As it is with Fire and Water: cast water upon the fire, if the fire be quenched with water, and so kept from burning, then we say the fire is overcome: but when the fire doth gather together its force, and doth continue its heat and burning, is as hot after as before, then the fire overcomes the water: wrongs and injuries are as water, now wrongs and injuries being cast upon a man, quench his love, and that duty which he owes unto any man or woman; when as a man is taken off from his duty, hindered in the performance of his duty, his love is quenched, he cannot perform it: there is duty of love which he may owe to his Neighbor and brother; but now when this shall continue, and he is found doing his duty, though he meet with wrongs and injuries, yet passes them by, and love overcomes them, then doth he overcome evil with good: Take one place more in Col. 3. 13. Forbearing one another, and forgiving one another. If any man hath a quarrel against any, even as Christ forgave you, so also do ye. Forbearing and forgiving one another, which is spoken to every man, If any man hath a quarrel, and if it be against any man whatsoever, Yet, says Christ, it's your duty to forbear, and not only to forbear but also to forgive. A man may forbear, yet not forgive: forbearing one another, and forgiving one another, is the pattern that is set before us, which is Christ himself; even as Christ gave himself as a pattern, even so do ye, not only forbear but also forgive.

2. Secondly, But the second work is to show you the example of many blessed servants of God that have been very eminent in this very duty, very ready to forgive wrongs and injuries which were done by others unto them; and oh that by their example we might be drawn unto a holy imitation of them!

1. Examp. And the first Example that I shall mention is Joseph: Joseph was a man that had much of the Spirit of God, he was a man that received many wrongs and injuries from his Brethren, they could not endure him, they hated him, they conspired against him, they sought to take away his life: when they were prevented in that, then they sold him, sold him as a slave, and if the Lord had not been the more merciful to him, he had ended his days in slavery and bondage; and this was from his Brethren, and yet we find in Joseph a great readiness of forgiving all those wrongs and injuries which were done unto him by his Brethren: in Gen. 45. 5, 7, 8. Be not grieved (says he) nor angry with yourselves, that ye sold me hither, for God did send me before you to preserve life. And God sent me before you, to preserve you a posterity in the earth, and to save your lives by a great deliverance; so it was not you that sent me hither but God, &c. See how this good man doth not only forgive the wrongs and injuries, but endeavors to comfort his brethren, to take off their fears and to take off their grief: and therefore tells them, these three times together, it was not you but God, God sent me hither, and God sent me hither, and God sent me for gracious ends; not a word that savors of any grudge, or any spirit of Revenge: Nay, afterward whenas old Jacob their Father was dead, they might think now Joseph would remember their old unkindnesses now their Father is dead; in Gen. 50. 19. But as for you, ye thought evil against me, but God meant it unto good; they besought him that he would not remember their old unkindness: Fear not, am I in the place of God? Do you think I will take upon me to revenge the wrong, to revenge an injury? that were to set myself in the place of God, Vengeance is mine, says God, and I will repay it: God forbid that I should set myself in the place of God, you need not fear that I will do you wrong, that I will revenge me of you, God hath turned it for good, God hath turned it for good to you and me and more people, and therefore God forbid that I should take upon me, to turn that into evil which God hath made for good.

2. Examp. A second Example for our imitation: And that is Moses, a man full of the Spirit of God, a man that had great acquaintance and familiarity with God, God spake with him face to face; now Moses he was very ready to forgive all personal wrongs and injuries. Many times when the Children of Israel murmured against him, they laid all upon him: Thou hast brought us from out of Egypt to slay us here in this place, and thou hast done this wrong unto us; Moses even at that time intercedes for this people in Numb. 14. 2. Moses is so far from avenging the wrong, that he is the first man that steps in for pleading for this people at the 17, 18, 19 Verses: and therefore he beseeches God, that God would be pleased to pass by this their transgression! And there is one remarkable Instance of Moses his meekness and readiness to forgive wrongs and injuries done unto him, in the twelfth of Numbers in the beginning of the Chapter, it is said, Moses was very meek, he was the meekest man on the face of the Earth, he doth not reply one word. 'Tis said that Miriam and Aaron spake against him because of the Ethiopian woman that he had married, and said, Hath the Lord spoken only by Moses? hath he not spoken by us also? He doth not reply one word to them; they reproached his Wife, that he had married an Ethiopian; and that he was a man that had taken too much upon him: but Moses doth not reply again, but God takes Moses part, and calls Aaron and Miriam to stand before him, and God smites Miriam with a Leprosy, because she carried it so before him; and yet look into the 13 Verse, Moses cried unto the Lord, saying, Heal her now I beseech thee; Moses was the man that was wronged by Miriam, and Miriam was cast into a Leprosy, and now Moses is the first man that steps unto God to plead for her: Oh his great love and readiness that was in him to forgive and pass by injuries, which made him to forget his duty to God, limiting him for the time, Heal her now, O God, I beseech thee, let it be done now I beseech thee; Oh here's a pattern, here is an Example for the imitation of all!

3. Examp. A third Example that I shall mention, is that of David: David a man full of the Spirit of God, and we find him a man ready to pass by personal wrongs and injuries: Because that Shimei had cursed him, some of David's Worthies would have smote off his head, and David would not suffer them, It may be, saith David, God hath bidden him to go and say, Curse David: This was a foul aspersion cast upon David, Come out thou bloody man, come out thou bloody man, see the 2 Sam. 16. 6, 7, 8. and 2 Sam. 19. 21, 22, 23. Whenas one of David's Captains would have had him put Shimei to death, No, says he, I will not Revenge, but says, What have I to do with you, ye sons of Zerviah? He pardons Shimei, and swears unto him, That he should not be put to death for this his Conspiracy. And so in the matter of Saul, David was greatly oppressed and persecuted by Saul, though Saul seemed to be put into his hand, when he took him asleep in the Cave, and had an opportunity to avenge his cause upon his enemy, yet David would not do it. It is true indeed David's foot had almost slipped in the matter concerning Nabal, when he sware he would be avenged upon Nabal for the affront done to him: but when Abigail comes and pleads with David, he doth accept of her counsel and bless God, Oh blessed be the Lord that hath sent thee to withhold my hand from shedding blood, and from avenging mine own cause this day; and thus you see David was a man ready to forgive and to put up wrongs and injuries.

4. Examp. One Example more from the Old Testament, and that is of Elisha in 2 Kings 6. 12, 13, 14. The King of Syria took an Army to apprehend Elisha, now they came to the City where Elisha was, to take it, and there God smites them with blindness, and Elisha he comes and takes them and carries them into the City of Samaria; at the 22 Verse, when Elisha had brought the Army into the midst of the City of Samaria, and the King of Israel would have been smiting of them, says he, My Father, shall I smite them? shall I smite them? Saies the Prophet unto the King, Thou shalt not smite them; Set bread and water before them, that they may eat and drink, and go to their Master. Though they came on purpose to apprehend him, and carry him to their Master and so to take his life, yet the Prophet seeks not to avenge himself of them; but on the contrary, requites them good for the evil they intended towards him.

5. Examp. And so if we look into the New Testament, there is some worth the taking notice of: As Stephen the Martyr, they did not only wrong Stephen in his name, but in his estate, and in his very life, yea, they put him to death: he was so far from seeking revenge, that the last words he breathed forth with his soul, I say the last words were, Lord, lay not this sin to their charge; and when he had said it, he fell asleep.

6. Examp. And so the Apostle Paul in the Galatians, take his Example, it is worthy our imitation, in Gal. 4. the Galatians had done him a great deal of wrong, they had under valued his Ministry, and set up false Teachers in opposition to him, and the Apostle he was very free to forgive the wrong, so far as it was personal; declaring that he did acknowledge it not to be any wrong, 12 Verse, Brethren, I beseech you be as I am, for I am as ye are, ye have not injured me at all; here is a gracious spirit: I do not look upon it as any injury as it concerns me, I do freely pass it by. Nay,

7. Examp. We have not only the Example of man, but the Example of Christ himself: Oh the wrongs and injuries that were done unto Christ! What meekness! What scourgings? what buffetings? what revilings, what reproaches? insomuch as the Governor wondered, What nothing to speak for thyself? And when he was to die, and giving up the Ghost, Father forgive them, they know not what they do. And then,

8. Examp. That Instance of the Prodigals Father; The son had greatly offended him, done him great wrong, yet the Father runs out to meet him, and before he could speak one word of confession or acknowledgement, the Father declares a readiness of forgiveness, he seals up his love and forgiveness, Falls upon his neck and kisses him. Thus you have seen the Examples of holy men, and of Christ himself for a pattern of passing by of wrongs and injuries. But now for the grounds of the Point: Upon what ground doth Jesus Christ Commend and Command his Disciples to this work and duty of forgiveness? Why first,

1. Reason, The first ground is, Because he hath forgiven them much, and therefore he requires that we should forgive others, that so they that are forgiven of Christ, may testify their love, and also their likeness unto Christ: and that is held forth in the Parable that follows the Text; the Lord there had forgiven the Servant that ought him ten thousand Talents, and therefore he expected that he should have forgiven his fellow Servant a few pence. I say all that are Christ's Disciples, all that are Believers, that do believe in the name of Christ, they have very much forgiven them of the Lord. There is no man but the Lord doth forgive a great deal of that temporal punishment which he might inflict upon them: now there is no Believer but the Lord doth forgive not only temporal but eternal punishment, and therefore there is an engagement to us unto forgiveness: Alas, what are the debts and trespasses done to us, or owing unto us in comparison of what we have done, or what we owe unto the Lord? Our sins are set forth by Talents, the offenses and wrongs done unto us are set forth by pence: our sins are set forth to be ten thousand Talents, and the offenses that are done unto us are but a hundred pence; when the Lord doth forgive so many transgressions, so freely, fully, so sincerely, so unchangeably, the Lord doth expect that there should be a readiness in them to forgive others from a sense of that forgiveness unto them of his, that so they may testify themselves to be the Children of their Father which is in Heaven. But the second ground is this,

2. Reas. Because those that we are called upon to forgive are our Brethren: How oft shall my brother sin against me, and I forgive him? Christ Answers, Till seventy times seven. Now there is a great deal in the very name of Brother that may challenge forgiveness, and call us upon this duty; though many, though never so many, yet still often and ever called a brother; for still in one sense or other; every man is a brother: some nearer than other, though not born of the same Parents, though not of Kindred, yet he may be a Brother in the same faith; though not a Brother in the family, yet a Brother in the same Town, City, Country, or Nation; however in the same common nature of Adam, in respect of the poor, dark, frail nature every man and woman is a Brother: but some relations more near than others. This spiritual relation, the same Profession, the same Faith, the same God, the same Inheritance: this is a great engagement to pass by and to forgive wrongs whilst he is a Brother. The Lord when he forgives, he forgives inferiors; there is an infinite distance between God and the creature; when the Lord forgives a poor creature, there is an infinite distance betwixt God and man, but not betwixt man and man, and therefore upon this account Christ requires it. But then,

3. Reas. Thirdly, Another ground is this, If there be neglect of this Duty unto any of their Brethren, it will be a grief unto their fellow-servants, and they will make their complaint unto their Lord. It cannot but be a great grief of heart unto those that are fellow-servants, when any that do profess the name of God, shall be so far from performing this Duty, that they shall express a spirit of Revenge, and a spirit of Enmity: it will sadden the hearts of many Saints, when they shall see one that is called a Brother, a Professor, when they shall see him so unready to forgive, as he shall study wrongs and injuries, and study revenge; it will grieve them, and cause them many times to go to the Lord and make their complaint, There is such a man that makes profession of thy Name, and yet walks very unworthy of that profession, very unsuitable. But,

4. Reas. Fourthly, Again, Neglect of this Duty will hinder and keep back a great deal of good, and pull down a great deal of evil: Christ knew this very well, and therefore he did command this Duty, Christ knew that the neglect of this Duty would hinder men of a great deal of good: It may deprive a man of many temporal mercies, of many temporal salvations; the Lord may call in the grant of temporal mercies, whenas he shall see such a spirit in any that profess his Name, as to retain the sense of wrongs and injuries, and not to pass them by, it puts the Lord upon it many times to recall the grant of temporal mercies, as in the Parable following. Nay not only so, but it may deprive the soul of many special spiritual choice mercies: It may hinder the soul from beholding the light of God's countenance. It is true, the soul being once pardoned by Faith in Christ, God will never recall that pardon: Ay but if that man or woman that is pardoned, and they have the pardon sealed and witnessed, yet shall walk unworthy of pardoning love, and shall not come up to this Duty of forgiving, pardoning, and passing by wrongs and injuries, the Lord will recall the manifestation of his pardoning Love, and the sense of it, though not the pardon itself. It doth not only deprive the soul of much good, but it also pulls down much evil, and not only outward evils, but sometimes the Lord manifests a great deal of wrath and displeasure upon such a one as is of an implacable spirit to retain wrongs and injuries; as it was with that servant that would not forgive his fellow-servant, the Lord commands that he should be delivered up unto the Tormentor, and cast into prison until he had paid the uttermost Farthing: Why, a man though he hath but a profession, the Lord lets him alone with that formal profession till such time as he comes forth with such a waspish peevish spirit against God's people, and seeks to wrong and injure them; Why, then the Lord he takes the advantage upon him, and gives him up unto the Tormentor because of such a waspish spirit, whenas he will not forgive a Brother a wrong or injury, but retain anger, he cannot find in his heart to forgive: the Lord sometimes comes upon such a man (though a Christian) the Lord comes and takes him, and delivers him up to the Tormentor, delivers him up to his own Conscience, though not to deliver him up out of his hand, but the Lord will deliver him up unto his own Conscience, unto the manifestation of wrath, till he shall have made satisfaction, till he shall have cried out unto Christ for more strength to carry it more like unto him.

5. Reason, But lastly, Christ Commands and Commends the forgiving of wrongs and injuries, that so his Disciples they may have room to act their Graces, and do some singular thing for the Lord; in the fifth of Matthew, when Christ put them upon this Duty, there says Christ, What singular thing do you, if you love them that love you, what great matter is that? The Publicans do the same, the very Heathen do the same: Ye wish good, and do good to them that do the like to you, that is no great matter, But what singular thing do you? Christ would have all his Disciples to do something more than the World doth, and he is a Monster amongst men that will not do good when he can, when good is done unto him: But Christ he would have his Disciples, his people, do some singular good thing for him: The Lord hath ordered it, that they shall meet with wrongs and injuries more than any people in the World, for the trial of their Graces. Offences must come, there is need of them, great necessity there should be offenses in this sense, that wrongs and injuries should be done, that the Lord by this might try and exercise the Graces of his people, there would be else no room for the trial and exercise, or at least not so much for the trial and exercise of love, meekness, patience, forbearance, longsuffering, forgiving, and forbearing one another. If there were not wrongs and injuries, there would be no room for the exercise of these Graces, Christ would have his people put upon it to do some singular thing. As many a man or woman will say, Well, let me alone as I am, and I am as quiet as any man living, do not disturb me, or do not wrong me, and you shall live as peaceably and as quiet as any people in the World: Ay, here's good Neighbourhood, but this savors not of Grace; Christ would teach his people to do something singular; the World says, Ye shall have blow for blow, and wrong for wrong, and injury for injury, but let them alone and you shall be quiet; here's no more than the wild beasts in the Wilderness will here do, is no trial of Grace: where is your love, your meekness, your patience, your longsuffering? The Lord would have his people in the exercise of Grace, to do something more than the World.

Object. But you will say, May not a natural man do this, that hath mere nature, quiet nature, pass by wrongs and injuries, and not render reviling for reviling, and wrong for wrong?

Answ. I Answer, Yes, There is many a man will go a great way in this, that hath but good nature: But oh! what a shame is this to them that profess to have more than nature? Will not this be a shame and condemnation to those that profess more than good nature, that they who have but good nature may exceed them? And truly, that we may be ashamed of our neglect, and provoked unto our Duty, I shall give you but two or three Instances of what men have done by good nature: And oh that the Lord would fasten something upon us, either by what good men or bad men have done!

Amongst the Heathen Writers, it is written of that Sect of Philosophers that were called Pythagoras his Scholars, there was this Rule amongst them, That when any offense was given by one to the other, the Parties offending and offended should agree together and make up the breach before the Sun set, whatever the injury and wrong was: and now we let many a Sun set and not shake hands and close hearts.

There is another Instance amongst the Heathens, which is very remarkable, of a Governor, and an excellent Governor: Upon a time, there was one of the chief Ring-leaders that struck at this Governor, and struck out his eye, and he though but a Heathen, was so far from being revenged of him, as he takes this offender and receives him into his Family: And oh that this Heathenish man should thus forgive him that had put out his eye, and yet we cannot forgive one that gives a blemish to our Name!

There is another Instance you have in Scripture, and that is Esau, Jacob's Brother: Jacob supplanted him, took him at an advantage, and got away the birth-right, and stole the blessing from him; and although his offenses were very great and did stir up his passion against his brother, insomuch as Jacob was forced to flee from his presence; yet afterward, how freely doth Esau put up all the wrongs and injuries done unto him, and how friendly doth he carry it towards him? Oh! how will Esau condemn many that profess to be the seed of Jacob? Shall Esau forgive such wrongs and injuries as to have his Birth-right and the blessing taken from him, and yet we that are the seed of Jacob, cannot put up the least petty wrong and injury! But I should show you the difference betwixt the natural man's forgiveness and the spiritual man's; and several cases of Conscience, which I shall reserve for a further opportunity.

SERMON III.

MATT. 18. 21, 22.

Then Peter came to him and said, Lord, how oft shall my Brother sin against me, and I forgive him? till seven times?

Jesus saith unto him, I say not unto thee until seven times: but until seventy times seven.

There were two Doctrines raised from the Words, the first was this,

1. Doct. That the thoughts of the Lord and the ways of the Lord, in this matter of Forgiving Offences, are far above the thoughts and the ways of man, as far above ours as the Heavens are above the Earth. The second was this,

2. Doct. That the often Forgiving Offences is a Duty which Christ Commends unto, and Commands all his Disciples to follow. I made it clear from Scripture, both by Precept and Example of holy men of old, who have desired to walk up to this Command of the Lord. But to proceed to the Answering some Objections concerning this point. It may be Queried, Quest. First of all, How comes it to pass that mere natural men may go so far as to out-strip many Christians in this particular, in the passing by of wrongs and injuries?

Answ. I Answer, First of all, There are some natural men walk up to their principles; though there are no natural men (in all things) walk up to their light, yet there are some natural men walk up to their principles; and it is true, a Christian hath a more excellent principle than the natural man, which would carry him out (if well improved) far beyond all the actings of natural men; Ay, but when a Christian doth not improve his principle; when he doth not walk up according to what the Lord hath given him, and the natural man doth improve his principle, and walk up unto it, the natural man, the mere natural man, may be a shame unto some Christians. A man that hath a principle of reason, he hath a more noble principle than a principle of sense, yet if the principle of reason lie hid, and be clouded, it is possible that he may then act beneath a beast, and a natural man that hath but a natural principle, he may excel the Christian that hath the more noble principle, by walking up to his principle. But,

2. Secondly, A mere natural man, that hath but a natural principle, may out-strip some Christians in this work of forgiving wrongs and injuries, because there is many a natural man places his life and righteousness in this, he hath nothing else to commend him to God, nothing else to trust to for salvation, nothing else: He is quiet, peaceable, loving, and one that will do no wrong, rather put up wrongs and injuries, than do wrongs unto any: Now, whenas a man doth trust to any of his works for life, it is a wonder to see what a great deal such a man will do, whenas a man works for life; there is such a desire in such men to work for life, and to work for righteousness, and work for Heaven: It is very admirable to see what a natural man will do upon such an account; Oh what a shame is it to Christians? yet there is no true Believer but is bound to do as much for God, and as much for Christ as if he were to earn Life and Salvation by doing: Christ having laid down his life for him, he accounts himself as much engaged to do for Christ, as if he were to gain life by doing, it is a shame to Christians to consider what a natural man will do for life and salvation. But

3. Thirdly, There is many a natural man will outstrip a Christian in this, because some natural men have the advantage of a natural disposition; there are some that are more mild, and more peaceable, and more loving and gentle: some men are so, and do exceed others in natural qualifications: now such a man hath a great advantage, whenas he is put upon such a work as of passing by wrongs and injuries. The Lord many times, and for the most part, makes choice of, and brings in to himself the worst of Natures, the most crooked, the most rugged, the most knotty pieces, the Lord is pleased to make choice of such; and this is for the glory of the great Master Builder, for the glory of his Wisdom, and the glory of his Power, and the glory of his Grace: I say this doth appear, in that he is pleased to make choice of the most crooked pieces of Timber for his Building; his Wisdom doth appear the more in making these crooked things straight, taking away the knottiness, and unevenness that is in the natures of poor creatures. But now a man that is of a mild nature, a soft disposition, he hath a great advantage, it is no hard matter for him to pass by wrongs and injuries; but now there are many of God's people that have crooked natures, when God takes them to work them for his Building: Oh they cannot come up to their Duty without much striving, struggling, wrestling, praying and crying unto the Lord: That is another cause why some natural men may exceed a Christian in that work of passing by wrongs and injuries. And then

4. Fourthly, A natural man may not meet with such opposition from without, a natural man may not be so much hindered in this work when the Lord calls him thereunto: for the Devil suits his temptations according to the qualification and disposition of the creature, where he sees them mild, he will not put them upon such rugged temptations; the Devil will let a natural man alone and will not seek to hinder him, no, when he is in the practice of such a good as this, for the Devil knows that these his works are nothing, and he knows that such a man when he hath done never so much, forgiven seventy times seven, his best works are nothing without Faith, if he hath no interest in Christ; yet such a one, I say, will out-strip many a Christian, which should be our shame, and a provocation unto us. But

Quest. 2. Again, A Christian may forgive, and a natural man may forgive, the one may forgive as often as the other: But what is the difference? Oh a great deal of difference betwixt a gracious heart and a mere natural man; and I pray take notice of it, for it may be for the discovery of the great deceitfulness of man's heart in this particular. There is many a man may look upon himself as forgiven, and he may think he forgives a great deal, and yet God and Christ look upon him, and see he hath forgiven nothing at all! Well, the difference betwixt a natural man, and a gracious heart, in the forgiving of wrongs and injuries, lies in these particulars.

Answ. 1. First of all, A natural man may forgive wrongs and injuries, but it is not from a principle of love unto God in Christ, it is merely from reasons that are taken from himself; I say, the natural man's arguments are from himself, they are out of the shop of reason, and not from the apprehension of the love of God, nor from any persuasion of his Duty, or any desire that he hath to express his likeness and conformity unto God in Christ: I say, his reasons are from himself; He may reason thus, Alas, this is unworthy of a man to express wrath, to take revenge, or this will but disturb mine own peace, this will but lay me open to others, it will but discover my nakedness, and frowardness, my passion which is my nakedness: He reasons thus, Why should I meddle with one that is so much beneath me, it will be no great conquest if I do overcome him? And thus his Arguments are from himself. But now a gracious heart, when God comes and puts him upon the work of forgiveness, his arguments are taken all from God: By this I shall express my love unto God, and my obedience unto Christ; by this I shall show myself like unto God, more conformable unto Christ who is the Image of the invisible God; upon this account, I say, a gracious man is brought off to forgive wrongs and injuries. But

Answ. 2. Again, A natural man when he forgives, it is in his own strength that he doth it: when he sets upon this Duty, it is in his own strength; he is never sensible of the contrary workings of his own heart, which do lie in the way to hinder him; he is not sensible of his own contrary motions that are in his own spirit against this Duty, he is not sensible of the need he stands of the Lord Jesus Christ to help him herein: and therefore he doth not make use of Christ, he doth not run unto the Lord and cry to him for strength, and rest upon him for strength to perform his duty: but now a gracious heart doth not move upon his own hinges, but is made sensible of the contrary motions and workings of his own heart and spirit unto this duty, he sees how hard his spirit and heart is brought off to this duty, he sees what need he hath of a better principle, and of further strength than that he hath in himself, and therefore he runs to Christ, and cries unto him, Oh Lord, says he, here is an opportunity for me to express my love to thee in the forgiving such and such wrongs and injuries, here is an opportunity for me to do some singular good thing for thee: but I have no strength of my own, and therefore he cries unto the Lord, and waits upon the Lord for strength; but as for the natural man, he is as the Ship upon the Sands, and beats and staves himself there. But Answ. 3. Again, A natural man when he forgives wrongs and injuries, he aims at himself; as self is the beginning, so self is the end: he forgives indeed, but it is not for Christ's sake, but for his own sake, and oh it is a great deal that a man will do for himself, for his own credit, for his own reputation, that he may be taken for a good man, for a loving man, for a peaceable man, that he may not discover his nakedness: for his own credit and name a man will do a great deal, and so for his own ease, and for his own peace, that he may not be disturbed in his own spirit, and he says, to render evil for evil will be an occasion of disturbance to his own spirit, if he retains wrongs and injuries it will prejudice his health, and bring down his strength; and so for such ends a mere natural man may be brought to forgive: But now a gracious heart when he forgives, he eyes the Lord, and does forgive for the Lord's sake: he eyes the honor of God, and the glory of God, that so he may do something for the lifting up of the name of God, that truth may be well spoken of, that God and his ways and Christ may be well spoken of, that he may be lifted up in the world.

Answ. 4. Again, A natural man when he hath forgiven wrongs and injuries, commonly he presently reflects upon himself, and is lifted up because of what he hath done, and this tends to the nourishing of pride in his heart, and ruin of himself; as Jehu said in another case, Come and see my zeal for the Lord: And so in this case of a natural man, when he hath forgiven wrongs, Come and see my meekness, come and see my patience, come and see my longsuffering, there is no man would have passed by such a wrong as I have done, and taken no revenge: you shall have it oft repeated by himself, and that's an aggravation after he hath done it, because he makes it his work to lift up himself: But now a gracious heart acts contrary to this, he reflects upon the Lord when he hath been enabled to forgive any wrong or injury, he desires to give God the glory, he is sensible that if the Lord had left him, he had done as evilly as others: at such a time my heart was boiling, and rolling up and down and meditating revenge, and the Lord was pleased to bring off my heart to this duty of forgiving wrongs, and then gives glory unto the Lord; and thus did David, in 1 Sam. 25. whenas the Lord had sent Abigail, and took off David from his purpose of revenging himself upon Nabal, at the 32, 33 Verses; Oh how doth David give all the glory to God! and so he doth not take anything to himself, but acknowledge that the free Grace of God was in it, and it was the hand of God that did keep him, his heart was as prone as any other; Oh blessed be God, and blessed be the instrument that God sent to prevent me from revenging of myself.

Answ. 5. Another difference is, That a natural man many times may forgive, but it is through length of time that he wears out the Impression of the wrong and injury that is done unto him: But now a gracious heart doth not let nature alone to wear it out by length of time, but it is desirous to set grace at work for the present silencing of that corruption which is boiling and stirring in the heart; you know Esau's heart was filled with a great deal of revenge against Jacob, yet when Jacob fled and kept out of his presence twenty years and more, at last Esau begins to fall from that passion of anger, and when he comes to his brother he falls upon his neck and kisses him: There is many a natural man, may through continuance and length of time forget: But a gracious heart (though corruption may be boiling up) yet Grace will take hold of its heel, and will presently be fetching in arguments, such arguments as have been spoken of before, fetched from God, from Christ, from the love of God, from the command of God, from conformity unto Christ, and by these arguments laid before the soul, it is desirous to come up unto its duty.

Ans. 6. Again, There is this difference, A natural man may forgive; Ay, but it is a hard thing for him to render good for evil, and to overcome evil with good: It is possible he may not revenge the wrong that is done unto him; Ay, but it is a hard matter to overcome evil with good. Now a gracious heart looks to the Commandment of Christ, of overcoming evil with good, and looks to the example of Christ, who overcame evil with good; and to the examples of the Saints, Joseph did good for evil, and Moses did good for evil, and Elisha did good for evil, and David did good for evil; and he desires herein to be a Follower of Christ, and to come up to his duty: Now, I say, it is a very hard thing for a natural man to come up to this duty; though he may forgive and pass by wrongs and injuries, yet to requite evil with good, and to love them that hate him, and to pray for them that persecute him and despitefully use him, this is a hard lesson for a natural man. But then Quest. 3. A third Question is, Whether is a man bound to forgive wrongs and injuries, when as a man doth not confess, when they are not confessed and acknowledged? The place that some make use of to uphold their corruption, is Luk. 17. 4. And if he trespass seven times in a day, and seven times in a day turn again to thee, saying, I repent, thou shalt forgive him. Therefore some think from hence, that they are not bound to forgive a man the wrong and injury that is done unto him, when that they be not confessed. But to this

Ans. I Answer, That a Christian ought to forgive wrongs and injuries, though not confessed. The ground of my assertion is this, Because we are bound to forgive as God forgives, and the Lord brings forth a pardon before one word of acknowledgement can be made: As in that Instance, Before the son spake one word of confession, the Father gave him a pardon, and sealed up his pardon unto him, and fell upon his neck and kisses him, and then he makes confession. Our rule and practice must be from God himself, that we are bound to pardon and forgive, though there be not an acknowledgement and confession of the wrong.

Object. But you will say, How can I forgive him the wrong, that will not come at me, and hearken unto me?

Ans. Thou mayest forgive in thine own spirit, there ought to be a readiness in thy heart to forgive; as the Lord was ready to forgive, so thy heart should be prepared, and ready at all times for forgiving and passing by wrongs and injuries. Nay, it is not only required that thou shouldst be in a readiness to forgive: but the Lord requires that thou shouldst pass by wrongs and injuries, so far as not to meditate upon them, and so far as not to be hindered in holding forth love unto thy brother. And to say further in answer to this Objection, Whereas thou sayest, thou canst not; Why? Because he will not come to thee. I answer, Thou art bound to go to him, if he will not come to thee: thou art bound to go to that man, or that woman that hath done thee wrong, if they will not come to thee; in Matth. 18. 15. If thy Brother shall trespass against thee, go to him, and tell him first privately betwixt thee and him, and if he shall hear thee, thou hast gained a Brother.

Object. This is strange you will say, He hath done me the wrong, it is he that hath heaped injuries upon me, and what, should I seek him first?

Answ. Yes, If he will not seek thee, then thou must seek him: It is true, it's his duty to come to thee, but if he will not come unto thee, then Christ hath imposed the duty upon thee to go unto him, and this is the pattern of God himself. Poor creatures, we had offended the Divine Majesty, and we are far from coming to God, nay the louder God calls, the further are we from God, he pursues after them, they will not come to him, now he will come to them, by his Word and by his Spirit, and bring his pardon, and make them sensible of their fault and transgression; so that what the Lord doth unto the sons of men in this particular, it is for our imitation.

Quest. Again, There is another Query, or case of Conscience, Whether may not a man, in case of wrongs and injuries, endeavor to right his wrongs; as, Whether may he not use lawful means to right himself? Whether may he not go to use the Magistrate, or to the Church?

Answ. A man may upon these cautions,

1. First to deal with him in a private way, and so to labor to convince him of his fault, so far as it is a sin against God; now if a man cannot prevail in a private way, then he may proceed further, he may take two or three witnesses, and seek unto the Church. But
2. Secondly, Take this caution, That before a man doth this, he must be sure to forgive it in his own heart as to himself, to pass by the wrong and injury as to him, and to retain no grudge in his heart as to himself. And then further,
3. Thirdly, Take this caution, In such a case a man may not make himself the last end, and the great end for which he doth these things, for he is bound to seek the glory of God in the first place, and to do this, that God may have honor; and in the next place, he is to eye the good of his brother, that his brother may be reclaimed, that his brother may be convinced, that his Brother may see the sin that he hath committed against God: a man ought to seek opportunity to right himself, but not for himself, but he ought to eye the glory of God and the good of his brother, and then he may use such lawful means as God lays before him.

Quest. There is another Query, as a Case of Conscience, Whether may not a man that is wronged by another, go and spread his wrong before God, and complain unto God of the wrong and injury that is done unto him by another?

Answ. I answer unto this, That a man may go unto the Lord and make his complaint whenas others have done him wrong, but take heed it be not for this end, that thou mayest be avenged of thy brother; if there be any desire of revenge, nay, if there be any desire that the Lord should revenge▪ this is not that forgiveness that the Lord calls his people unto.

Object. But you will say then, Why, upon what account may we spread our wrongs and injuries before the Lord? If we may not desire that God would revenge them, and requite them according to what they have done unto us, to what end should we make our complaints before the Lord?

Answ. I Answer, We may complain for this end, That the Lord might consider us, that the Lord may pity us, that the Lord may deliver us, from the wrongs, and from the pressures and grievances which are happened to us, but there ought not to be a desire of revenge; see Prov. 20. 22. Say not thou, I will recompense evil; but wait on the Lord and he shall save thee: What then, may I not go unto the Lord? Yes, for this end that the Lord may save thee, but not that the Lord may take vengeance for thee upon another: he doth not say, Go and wait upon the Lord that he may take vengeance; no, but wait upon the Lord and he shall save thee, he shall clear up thy good name, and make thine innocence to appear. But there ought not to be a waiting upon the Lord that he may take vengeance for thee; this is far from that forgiveness which Christ calls for in the Text.

Nay further, The Lord would have his people to be so far from desiring revenge, that he would have them to pray that the Lord would forgive others the wrong which they have done unto them: mark those Examples of Christ and Stephen, Father forgive them, they know not what they do; and saith Stephen in the like case, Lord lay not this sin unto their charge; so that I say the Lord would have his people so far from spreading the wrongs and injuries that others have done unto them, that he would rather have them with Christ to pray, Father forgive them; and with Stephen, Lord lay not this sin to their charge; and to pray for them that persecute you, and that speak all manner of evil of you: The Lord would have his people so far from spreading their wrongs before him upon this account, that the Lord would avenge them. The deceit of man's heart is such that man will forgive, that the Lord may reward it, and revenge it; no, this is not the forgiveness; but that forgiveness which Christ here calls for, ought to be a thorough forgiveness, to forgive so far as to pray for them, that the Lord would forgive their sin unto them; that the Lord would not lay their sin unto their charge.

SERMON IV.

MATT. 18. 21, 22.

Then Peter came to him and said, Lord, how oft shall my Brother sin against me, and I forgive him? till seven times?

Jesus saith unto him, I say not unto thee until seven times: but until seventy times seven.

YOU may remember the Doctrine which we are insisting upon is, That the often forgiving of offenses and injuries is a duty which Christ commends unto, and commands all his Disciples to follow. Not till seven times, but until seventy times seven. I proved the Doctrine by Scripture, and held forth unto you the examples of godly men, who had much of the Spirit of the Lord; and the more of God's Spirit was in them, the more ready were they to pass by wrongs and injuries which were done unto them by their Brethren. I gave you the grounds of the Point, the last day I came to answer some Objections, and Cases of Conscience. But I come now to the Application and Uses of the Point.

1. Use. It is a word of reproof in the first place. Oh what a sad complaint may we take up, that this duty which Jesus Christ commands, is so little practiced in our Generation! that there is such an unreadiness in the spirits of most men, if not in all men, to come up to this duty, a Gospel duty, a hard duty; and oh what unreadiness is there in men's spirits to come up unto the practice of it! Oh! how many are there in the World that do not only come short of walking up unto this Rule, but do walk quite contrary unto it? And I shall show you who they are: and oh that God would speak convincingly unto men's hearts.

1. First, They walk contrary unto this Rule of Christ, Who are easily provoked unto wrath, who are soon displeased, who are soon put out of the way, take up every small wrong, every petty offense, nay, are many times provoked unto wrath upon a conceited injury, for a poor trivial business, that will make a man an offender for a word: Nay, it may be, displeased for want of a look, or for want of a Complement: Oh how contrary is this unto the Rule of Christ? Oh! how far are such spirits from that forbearance, and that longsuffering that the Gospel calls unto? Where is the grace of longsuffering? Nay, such spirits, they are far from the exercise of the grace of Love, Love believeth all things, and hopeth all things, makes the best interpretation of all things: Such spirits as are easily provoked with every petty wrong and offense, they are far from the duty of the exercise of this grace of Long-suffering, and come far short of walking up to this Rule that Jesus Christ hath left for his Disciples to walk in. But,

2. Secondly, They walk contrary unto this Rule of Christ, Who are retentive of those wrongs and injuries, that are hardly appeased when once provoked, that will remember one wrong seven days, nay, seventy times seven: when Christ says, Let not the Sun go down upon your wrath, let it not once go down upon your wrath, there are many that let the Sun set seven times, nay, seventy times seven on their wrath. Let me say to such, I must needs say that such actings are beneath the actings of a man; there is a heavy Judgment upon such a man; or such a woman, a heavy Judgment is upon them, and they know not of it; I say such as can retain wrongs or injuries, think of them seventy times seven days, speak of them seventy times seven, a Judgment will belong unto them, such a Judgment as was upon Nebuchadnezzar, Dan. 4 32. Truly I may say of such men and women, this Judgment is upon them in a spiritual sense: He was turned out from among men to dwell with the Beasts, his reason was taken from him, and he was cast out seven times, yea seven years among the beasts. I say it of such men and women that have this spirit reigning upon them, whenas anger lodgeth in their hearts, they are turned out as among the beasts; what a Judgment is it to be turned out among the Beasts days and years together? and so is everyone judged of God, till they shall come to know that the most high ruleth over all, and that he hath taught them this lesson, To forget, and to forgive. But let me say again of such, Whilst passion so reigns, they give entertainment unto Satan that foul and unclean spirit: when ever anger and wrath lodgeth in any man's heart, the Devil lodgeth there too; see it in Ephes 4. 26, 27. Be angry and sin not; let not the Sun go down in your wrath, neither give place to the Devil. That man that lets anger lodge in his bosom all night, gives entertainment that night to the Devil. There is many a man, and many a woman in the world in word will bid defiance to the Devil or Satan, and yet they open their bosom, their breast, and their doors, and give entertainment unto Satan; for where anger and wrath lodgeth in any man's bosom, the Devil will certainly creep in, they cannot be parted; these two will go together: If there be anger one night, that night the Devil will be there too; And oh! that we may not be found to give entertainment unto such a Guest as Satan is: But they do give entertainment unto him, that are retentive of wrongs and injuries. But,

3. Thirdly, How contrary do they walk unto the Rule of Christ, That do aggravate all offenses which are done unto them: aggravate all wrongs and all injuries, and do improve them to the uttermost, and make the worst of them? So did Laban whenas he pursued after Jacob when he returned to his own Country, Gen. 31. Laban pursues after him, 26, 27, 30 Verses, What hast thou done, that thou hast stolen away unawares to me, and carried away my daughters, as Captives taken with the Sword? Wherefore didst thou flee away secretly, and steal away from me, and didst not tell me? &c. Yea thou hast stolen away my God's. See here's a man that aggravates all to the utmost; twice, thrice, Thou hast stolen away, and stolen away, and carried away my Daughters as Captives, and thou hast stolen away my God's: Oh, such a Spirit is far unlike unto the Spirit of God. The Lord Jesus calls offenses against men, Trespases, and so Christ would have us to look upon them as Trespases, as errors, and not to aggravate them, nor to look upon them as sins of presumption; Oh! that such hearts were but as ready to aggravate their own offenses against God! We aggravate all wrongs and all injuries which are done against us, but we are but little in aggravating our sins and our transgressions against the Lord; Oh that men could but aggravate both their own sins and the Lord's mercies, as they are ready to aggravate the offenses of their Brother. We commit many sins against the Lord, and do not aggravate them, we receive many mercies from the Lord, and do not aggravate them: we do not compass our mercies, and tell the Towers of them, and behold the goodness of the Lord in them; and yet oh how ready are we to aggravate our wrongs, and compass them round again and again, and aggravate them to the uttermost? Oh! how far do such come short of walking up to the rule of Christ? And let it be considered, what should become of poor creatures. If the Lord should aggravate thy offenses as thou dost thy Brothers, and set them before thee withal the aggravation of them, how sad would it be unto thee? Oh! that we might not improve and aggravate all to the height, for that spirit is very unlike unto Jesus Christ. Again,

4. Fourthly, They are far from this rule That are hardly brought off unto reconciliation; that although there be confession, and although there be acknowledgement sometimes, though they that have offended be ready to acknowledge the offense, and do seek reconciliation; nay, although friends intercede, and friends plead that they would be reconciled; nay, although God steps in, and Christ pleads, and Christ beseeches, and Christ commands, and God sets a man's Conscience upon him, and that speaks unto him, and lets him know he is out of the way, yet how hard is it for a man to bring off his heart into a reconciliation with his Brother, after some wrongs and injuries which are done unto him; and oh, how unlike is this to God, and how contrary is this unto the rule which Christ here commends unto, and commands his Disciples to follow? But,

5. Fifthly, Again, They are far from this Lesson, that instead of being reconciled or satisfied, Will not be pacified, till they do avenge the wrong which is done unto them with their own hand; they will render one evil word for another, reviling for reviling, and one evil turn for another, an eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth: Nay, are there not some men, that are not ashamed to profess this before all the World, that they will put up no wrongs, no injuries, but they will give as good as they bring, and if you provoke me I can be as hot as you: is not this the language of the World? Oh Sirs! this is cursed speaking, and cursed acting, altogether contrary to Christ's rule, for a man to avenge with his own tongue, and his own hand; Oh cursed be the wrath of Simeon and Levi, whenas they would avenge (that wrong that was done unto their Sister) with their own hands. Nay, let such men and women consider that they do but profess before all the World their likeness unto the Devil, while they do speak and while they do act; I can be as hot as you, and I can give as good as you can bring; what is that but in plain English to say, I can be as like the Devil as you? How far is this from a gracious heart, I can put up as many wrongs as you, and can commit my Cause unto the Lord? This makes you like to God, and the other like to the Devil himself. Nay, let such men and women consider, He that gets the best of it in such contests when men's wrath is stirred up, why truly always he that gets the best of it, hath the worst of it; that man that got the victory, he is overcome: It may be he gains his lust, he may gain his will and satisfy his lust, but he may lose his peace, he may not satisfy his own heart, nor his conscience; but always he that hath the best of it, goes with the worst of it. Now such as will pass by wrongs and injuries, till they do requite them word for word, and wrong for wrong, they do walk contrary unto this rule which Jesus Christ hath given unto his Disciples. Again,

6. Sixthly and lastly, They come short of Christ's rule, That cannot come up to Christ's number. We are willing to forgive one or two wrongs it may be, but oh, how hard it is to come up to Christ's number, to forgive seventy times seven, four hundred fourscore and ten wrongs unto one man! Oh where is the heart that can come up to this number of Christ's? Nay, there is such an averseness unto the practice of this duty which Christ doth command, as it is a very hard matter for Christ's people to believe it is their duty; see what the Disciple said when Christ had told him his duty, in Luk. 17. 4, 5. And if he trespass against thee seven times in a day, and seven times in a day turn again unto thee, saying, I repent: thou shalt forgive him. And the Apostles said unto the Lord, Increase our Faith. When he said, Forgive seven times in a day, it's a hard matter to bethink it a duty, now Lord increase our Faith; Now, if it be so hard to believe it a duty, oh how hard is it to come up to the practice of it? Surely, if the best men in the World had been put upon it, to have given Answer to Peter's Question, they would never have answered as Jesus Christ hath answered; there is never a man upon earth would have said, Thou must forgive seventy times seven: But the thoughts of the Lord, and the ways of the Lord, are infinitely above our thoughts and our ways: it is a hard matter for us to forgive seven times, and if hard to forgive seven times, then how hard to forgive seventy times seven? Oh, that the Lord would make us sensible of our great coming short of this duty, and that the Lord would humble us, lay us low, that we have come so far short of this rule which our Lord Jesus hath left us and all his Disciples to follow and practice in passing by wrongs and injuries.

2. Use. But the next Use is an Use of Exhortation. First, I shall speak to those that have done wrong unto their brother. And Secondly, To them that have received wrongs from their brother.

1. First, To them that have done wrong unto others, that have injured their brother, or brethren, either by word or action, done them wrong in their Name or Estate, or any other way; Know that it lies upon you, and is your duty to go and seek reconciliation: It lies upon you that have done wrong, to go and tender satisfaction for the wrong which you have done unto your brother, at least to make acknowledgement of the wrong and injury which you have done: And to press you unto this duty which is hard,

1. First, Consider you that have done wrong to others, It may be thou hast put the spirit of thy brother or Neighbor out of frame, and thou hast unfitted him for all duty, either unto God or man; thou by thy injury hast stirred up his passion, and his passion hath opened a door unto the Devil, and the poor soul is exposed unto manifold temptations and snares: and oh! how is he filled with hard thoughts, with hard thoughts it may be not only of thee but of the way of God, and of the truth of God, filled with hard thoughts against Christ himself? And although it will be very sad, and a woe unto that man that shall be so offended; woe to him that shall be offended at Christ for the miscarriages of men; woe to him that shall be offended at the truth, or any of the ways of truth from the miscarriages of men: but yet know thou that hast done the wrong, and art the occasion of this, thou art under a woe; and Woe also unto him, saith Christ, by whom the offense cometh. And therefore know, that it lies upon thee as thy duty to go and seek to deliver thy brother out of the snare, thy going and tendering satisfaction unto him may break the snare of the Devil for him: thou mayest prevent a multitude of sins, and therefore oh that God would persuade such to come up to their duty. In a word, either he that thou hast offended or wronged, carries it impatiently, or bears it patiently a while: now if he bears it impatiently, and his spirit be put out of frame, and he begin to fret and fume in his spirit, and be thereby indisposed unto his duty, then by thy going thou mayest break the snare of the Devil for him; but if he carry it patiently, and his spirit be silent before the Lord under those wrongs and those injuries which thou hast done him, thou hast the more need then to go and make acknowledgement of the wrongs thou hast done, for certainly God himself will step in on his part that is wronged, that bears the wrong patiently, and is quiet in his spirit before the Lord, the Lord will engage against thee; though he be silent, yet the wrong which thou hast done to others, unto such a man, or such a woman, it will cry very loud before the Lord; and woe be unto thee if God shall step in and engage against thee; if God be for a man, who can be against him? if God be for him, better to have all the world engaged against him, than God to engage against him; therefore go and acknowledge thy error before thy brother: for if not, the Lord will engage against thee.

2. Secondly, And then again, Consider the patterns and examples of holy men in Scripture that have given satisfaction, and acknowledged their error to the full when they have done wrong: as Jacob, he had done indeed a great deal of wrong, sinned against God, as well as against his Brother, in getting, or cheating his brother of the blessing: well, the good man returneth again to his brother, and oh how submissive is he unto his brother? He sends many a Present before him to appease his wrath, and how many soft words does he give him, in Gen. 3. 3. 5, 8. This is to find favor in the sight of my Lord; and these are the Children which the Lord hath graciously given thy servant; and how many soft words doth he give unto his brother Esau? By which the wrath of Esau was appeased. And so you see Joseph's brethren, when they sinned against their brother Joseph, oh how free were they to make an acknowledgement of their wrong which they had done him, in Gen. 50. 17, 18, 19, 20. they came and made an humble acknowledgement of all the wrongs they had done unto him: For give, I pray, the trespass of thy Brethren, and their sin, &c. And at the 18 Verse it's said his Brethren wept, and fell down before his face, and said, Behold we be thy Servants; and thus they make supplication that he would forgive the wrong. And so did Job's friends, they had done him great wrongs, they had judged of his eternal estate, they concluded he was a hypocrite, they told him so to his face, they added grief to his sorrow, great was his affliction, they had done him a great deal of wrong: Well, but in conclusion, when God doth convince them of it, they make acknowledgement of their evil unto Job, as in Job 42. 8. So then you see it lies upon you that have done wrong unto your Brother, to go and make acknowledgement of the wrong that you have done.

3. Thirdly, And let me say this further to you, to stir you up to this your duty, That all the Works which you perform in the service of the Lord, they are lost till such time as you submit unto this duty, to go and seek reconciliation; see Matth. 5. 23, 24. If thou bring thy gift to the Altar, and there rememberest that thy brother hath ought against thee, leave thy gift before the Altar, and go thy way, first be reconciled to thy Brother, and then come and offer thy gift. Mark, wouldst thou bring thy gift, leave thy gift before the Altar, the Lord will not accept it, till thou beest reconciled to whom thou hast done the wrong; leave thy injury there, I will have none of it till thou hast done so: The Lord doth not say, go and carry away thy gift, but leave it there. There is many a man is taken off from his duty to God, because he cannot bring off his heart to this duty to man, and instead of leaving his gift, he carries away his gift. Go and be reconciled to thy brother, and then come again: the Lord would have you do it, and have it done instantly, go and do it speedily, do it quickly before the time of offering be past; the Lord will not receive gifts and offerings from that hand, or from that tongue that hath done wrong unto his brother, until such time as there be an acknowledgement, till such time as there be a reconciliation. So much for that duty which concerns those that have done wrong unto others, you see what necessity doth lie upon them, that they should go and acknowledge the wrong and seek reconciliation.

But a second Exhortation is to them that are wronged, and have received injury from others. The Lord by this Doctrine calls upon you to express your readiness to forgive and pass by wrongs and injuries: he would have you to forgive, and to forgive often; for Christ's sake be you willing to pass by all wrongs and injuries which are done unto you. And I pray consider,

That you have an opportunity here to express your Love unto Christ: I say, you that are Christ's people, when ever any wrong or injury is done unto you by Neighbor or Brother, Oh! then remember you have an opportunity of expressing your love to Christ, of showing your obedience unto the Lord Jesus Christ in a Gospel truth, you have an opportunity of doing some singular thing for Christ, and therefore take heed you do not lose the opportunity.

But you will say, Here will be some Objections (for a great deal will be objected by corrupt nature) but I shall endeavor to take them off all.

Object. 1. But you will say, He hath done me the wrong, it is a hard matter for me to go to him, or to forgive the wrong or injury which he hath done to me, flesh and blood will not submit unto it.

Answ. 1. To which I say, Though flesh and blood will not submit unto it, yet Christ's Disciples must submit unto it; if thou beest one that dost profess nothing but flesh and blood, I shall need to press this no further to you, for you will never come up unto it: but if thou beest one that dost profess submission to Christ, Then are ye my friends, says Christ, and my Disciples, if you do whatever I command you: Then, when you yield obedience unto the command of my Gospel.

Answ. 2. And let me say further, If he hath done thee wrong, and thou seekest him first, thy acting it shall be most like unto God, for so God acts towards the sons of men: the sons of men had wronged God, God stoops first, he seeks reconciliation first, 2 Cor. 5. 20. As though God did beseech you by us, we pray you in Christ's stead to be reconciled unto him: though he be the wronged, yet he acts first.

Answ. 3. And let me tell thee further, That the more thou stoopest to him that hath wronged thee, the more peace will redound to thine own spirit another day; it is a hard duty when thou lookest upon it at a distance, but when the Lord helps thee to come up to it, thou shalt have most peace in it: and when ever it be over, it will never repent thee that thou didst seek that man that hath done thee the wrong.

Object. 2. Ay, But it will be Objected further: He hath done me that wrong that cannot be repaired, he hath wronged me in my good name; oh his words have been as sharp Arrows, and they have wounded secretly: If he had broken my head, I could have born it, that would have been healed again, but he hath wounded my good name, taken away my good name, and therefore herein it is hard for a man to come up to this duty of forgiving of such wrongs.

Answ. 1. But to this I Answer, Thou speakest of Arrows that shall wound thee in thy name: Oh but they are not worse than those which wounded Christ: they wounded him in his name, in his good name, they reproached him, and reviled him, yet he cried out, Father forgive them: they are not sharper than those Arrows that David met with all over, when his good name was wounded; when Shimei cursed him, he calls him a bloody man; Come out thou bloody man, here is a sharp Arrow: Ay, but David passeth by that wrong and injury in obedience to God.

Answ. 2. And I desire thee in the second place, to Consider that those Arrows are not shot without God's hand, the Lord hath a hand in it, and therefore eye the hand of God: If God's hand had not been in it, he could not have opened his mouth against him. David considered that when Shimei cursed him, says he, It may be God hath said unto him, Go and curse David; and so his spirit submits unto it: Ay, David considered, it is a righteous thing with God, for I have sinned against, I have wounded the name of that Lord by my transgressions: And therefore it is a righteous thing with the Lord that my name should be wounded with these Arrows.

Answ. 3. And let me say further, That as God hath a hand in it, so the Lord might have shot worse Arrows against thee; the Lord might have shot the arrows of his displeasure against thee: the Lord hath shot with man's arrows upon thy name; but what if the Lord doth shoot off his arrows upon thy spirit, a wounded spirit who can bear? And know if thy spirit be not brought off to pass by those wrongs and injuries which are done unto thy brother, the Lord may wound thy spirit, even as he suffers men to wound thy good name.

Object. 3. But thirdly, It will be objected further, (for it is a very hard thing to come up to this duty, and there are many cavils) and some will say, The wrong which he hath done me, it is known unto others: If it were private I could pass it by: But what will others think of me if I pass it by? they will say I am guilty, and I should be counted a Child, or a Fool to pass by so many wrongs, and such open wrongs and injuries.

Answ. 1. I Answer, Thou sayest thou shalt be counted a Child, when Christ saith thou must be counted a Child, Matth. 18. 3. If ever you will get to Heaven, you must be converted and become as little Children; do not stand upon that, that you must be as a Child; no, thou must become a Child in these things, or no entrance into Heaven: as the Apostle said in 1 Cor. 14. 20. Brethren, be not Children in understanding; howbeit, in malice be Children: Be not Children in understanding unto God, but unto men in malice be Children; the Lord would have his people be as far from seeking revenge, as a young Child: In malice be as Children.

Answ. 2. And whereas thou sayest, Thou shalt be accounted a fool, to put up every wrong and injury, men will account thee a fool for thy labor; I tell thee, thou shalt be accounted a fool by none but those that are so themselves: for the Lord doth account it a point of Wisdom, high Wisdom; see what the Proverbs of Solomon say, Prov. 14. 29. He that is slow to wrath is of great understanding, but he that is hasty in spirit exalteth folly. See now who is a fool, he that puts up wrong, or he that is hasty in spirit to avenge himself. The Word of the Lord says, He that is hasty in spirit, he is the fool; he that will prevent anger, he that is slow to wrath, he is of great understanding whatever men account of him: in Prov. 19. 11. The discretion of a man deferreth his anger, and it is his glory to pass over a transgression; whereas thou sayest it will be thy disgrace, the Lord says it shall be a man's glory to pass by wrongs and injuries. Many a man whilst he seeks to shun the name of a fool, he becomes a fool by giving way to wrath, and being drawn on to wrath and revenge he becomes a fool; think of it, is it not better to be accounted a fool than to become a fool, when anger lodgeth in the bosom of fools?

Object. 4. Ay, but it is further Objected, Some will say I never did him wrong in my life, he hath abused me so and so, and I never did him the least wrong in all my days: here is a hard task. Well, in Answer to this,

Answ. 1. First of all, The Lord may say the same of thee, if thou beest one that the Lord hath forgiven: the Lord may say, Oh, I have done such a man good so and so, and he hath rebelled and sinned so against me; I say, may not the Lord urge this against everyone of us? I have done this and that for him, and I have never done him wrong, yet he hath done thus to me: notwithstanding which, the Lord forgives those transgressions. And let me say, Answ. 2. Further, That this will be more praiseworthy, and more acceptable unto God; in 1 Pet. 3. 17. It is better if the will of God be so, that you suffer for well doing, than for evil doing: If you suffer as evil doers, you will have little comfort in it; but if suffering in well doing, take it patiently, and the more patiently you take it, the more acceptable it will be unto the Lord.

Object. Ay, but I have been a friend unto him (thus will men stand to plead for their passions, a hard matter it is to forgive) I have been a friend unto this man, I have done him good all my days, and yet he hath wronged me so and so nevertheless; To which I say, Answ. 1. Thou hast the more cause to pity him, if he be one that doth return evil unto thee for thy good, thou hast the better end of the staff; see what Solomon says in Prov. 17. 13. Whoso rewardeth evil for good, evil shall not depart from his house: Mark, here's a sad threatening; if thou rememberest this, thou hast cause to pity thy brother that hath done wrong unto thee, the Lord hath said it, and thou hast cause to pity him; Evil shall not depart from his house.

Again, The Lord may Object against thee, the Lord may say, I have been a friend to thee and done thee good all thy days, and thou yet sinnest against me; and if this be not any bar unto the Lord to show forgiveness unto thee, let not it be a bar to show thy forgiveness unto thy brother.

Object. Ay, but he hath done me much wrong, spoken evil of me in every company he comes in: he hath wronged me after reconciliation and peacemaking, he hath done me much wrong: this is a hard task.

Answ. But let me say unto thee, notwithstanding all this thou comest short of the rule of Christ: thou hast forgiven often, thou sayest, hast thou forgiven one Brother seven times? why truly there are many that cannot say they have exceeded that: But if thou hast forgiven seven times, that is no great matter, thou thinkest it much, but Christ thinks it little: Alas! what is seven times to seventy times seven, four hundred threescore and two times? Which when done thou art but come up to the Letter of the Word! Thou hast wronged the Lord in his Name, thou hast sinned against God again and again, thou hast wronged him in his Name and in his Glory many thousand times, and yet that is no obstacle of the Lord's mercy towards thee, notwithstanding thine often renewed provocations. Oh let not the often renewed provocations of thy brother hinder thee from thy forgiving him.

SERMON I.

GEN. 5. ⟨◊⟩ And Enoch walked with God, and he was not, for God took him.

YOU have an History in this Chapter of the ten first Patriarchs, from Adam unto Noah: In every Age God had some to bear up his Name in the World; and amongst those, these ten Fathers were choice Pillars: But here is something remarkably spoken of Enoch, here was accounted more of him than all the rest: Enoch walked with God, and he was not. He saith of all the rest, they lived so long, so many years, and then they died, but Enoch walked with God, and he was not; therefore we should consider who this Enoch was: the New Testament bears witness of him, and speaks of this Enoch as one that was a choice piece in his Generation; the Apostle Jude tells you that he was a Prophet, as you may read in that Epistle, the 14 Verse, Enoch also the seventh from Adam, prophesieth of thee, saying, Behold, the Lord cometh with ten thousand of his Saints to execute Judgment upon all, &c. Enoch the seventh from Adam, so Jude describes him. Some put a great deal in this mystery; The seventh from Adam; and I think there was something in it as he was a Type of Christ: he was a Type of that Christ that was to be the Rest of his people, that was to give perpetual Rest, everlasting rest unto his Sains: his name Enoch signifies one that was dedicated or separated unto the Lord; and so he was a Type of Christ that was chosen out among his Brethren, and he was separated and dedicated unto the Lord, He walked with God; and so did Christ, and therein he was a Type of him: he was well pleasing unto God, He had this Testimony, saith the Apostle to the Hebrews, he pleased God, Heb. 11. 5▪ Christ was the object of the Fathers good pleasure in a special manner, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased. But I rather think the Apostle intended no more than Enoch: but only to distinguish him from another Enoch that was in that Generation, as you may read of him in Gen. 4. 17. And Cain knew his wife, and she conceived and bare Enoch; and he built a City, and called the City after the Name of his son Enoch: So this Enoch, in Gen. 5. was a third from Adam, for he was not the son of Cain, but the son of Jared, and of Adam's posterity by Seth and Rubin Cain; he came of that seed that was given instead of Abel; when Abel was slain, God gave another seed instead of Abel, and Enoch came of that seed.

The Church of Christ shall lose nothing by persecution: if Abel be taken away by bloody hands, the Lord will raise up another seed; and Enoch a choice man is of that seed to hold up the name of God in the World. When John Baptist was put in Prison, Christ himself goes forth to Preach the Gospel; the Church of Christ shall not lose by Persecution, out of the very ashes of the Saints that are slain shall arise new ones, men upon whom a double measure of the Spirit shall be given; as it was to Elisha when Elias was taken away. And this by the way, Let us now more strictly consider what it is that is spoken of this Enoch: There are two remarkable things, the one is concerning his Life, and the other concerning his Death: Touching his Life it's said that Enoch walked with God, he walked with God; nay, through his whole life he walked with God: so many years as he lived after he begat his first son, three hundred years and upwards, the Apostle to the Hebrews saith, That he pleased God, that is his walking with God; in Heb. 11. 5. By Faith Enoch was translated that he should not see death; before his translation it's said, He had this testimony, that he pleased God; at the latter end of the Verse, He walked with God: it was his constant aim to please God, in all things he aimed at God in the whole course of his life: He had this testimony, that he pleased God; he lived in Faith and Obedience, and by Faith he pleased God, For without Faith, it's said, it's impossible to please God. He continually exercised Faith upon the promised Messiah that was to come, he lived in expectation to see his day: and he saw it beforehand (as Abraham did by Faith) and rejoiced: and so he walked with God, and by Faith he pleased God. And here is something spoken of his death, or of his change: It's said, that after he walked with God, He was not: He walked with God, and he was not, for God took him.

Some conceive that all this is spoken of his walking with God: He walked with God, and he was not, he was not in himself, he walked in God and not in himself, he denied himself and followed God, he made a resignation of himself up to God, God took him up to himself, but this is something strange! I rather think the latter part doth consider the change of Enoch, his translation out of this life, He was not, for God took him; and we have good ground for this Interpretation, because the Apostle gives it thus in that place before▪ in Heb. 11. 5. it's said, By Faith Enoch was translated that he should not see death, and was not found, because God had translated him: so he was not, that is, he was not of the World, he was not found anymore amongst men. He is said to walk with God here upon earth, after he had walked with God three hundred years, and he was not, for God took him. It implies a special way and manner of Enoch's change, which was not ordinary: he died not as the rest did, but only he was changed, as those shall be, that shall be found alive when Christ shall come to be Judge of the World, they shall not die, but they shall be changed: so Enoch died not, but he was changed, his body did put on Incorruption, it did not cease to be, but it was changed and translated, so saith the Apostle, He was translated, that he should not see death. God took him up in some extraordinary way as he did Elias; Elias was translated that he should not see death, he was taken up in the sight of all his friends, Chariots and Horses of Fire took him up, and carried him into Heaven, and so 'tis very likely, that Enoch was carried up some such way to Heaven: He was taken away from his friends, and they knew not what was become of him, God took him, they knew not where he was; He was not found, says the Apostle, which doth intimate, that his friends sought him, as the friends of Elias, they went to seek him when he was taken up to Heaven, so it's like he was sought for, when he was taken up to heaven, but he was not found, God took him up; the manner of his translation was extraordinary, even as that of Elias▪ Enoch before the Law, and Elias under the Law, were taken up into heaven. But more of that hereafter. I shall only for the present make some entrance, and look upon this Enoch as a man that was a choice piece in his Age, in his Generation: special notice is taken of him more than of all the rest, Enoch walked with God.

You may observe, That in all Ages God hath some of his Servants that are more eminent than others; God hath some in all Ages, that walk more close with him, that are in a very remarkable manner holy, and gracious, and hold forth a great deal of God to the World; all the ten Patriarchs that were spoken of in the Text, they were gracious men, and they all walked with God: but it's said of Enoch as if he was alone; Enoch walked with God, which doth intimate, that he walked with God in a remarkable manner, he walked more close with God than all the rest of his Brethren, than all the rest of his Generation: Enoch walked with God; God hath some choice servants in all Ages: he loves all his Children dearly, as a father loves all his Children dearly, but some are nearer him than others, some are set upon the knee, and laid in the bosom when others stand by: choice affections are in the Lord to some, and made known to some. A Prince shall carry it respectively to all his Favorites, he will show favor to all: but yet some come nearer him than others, they know more of his mind, and are more intimate with him, they are taken into his privy Chamber, into his secret Galleries there to walk with him. And thus the Lord deals with some of his Saints: Enoch was a favorite in his Generation: Afterward comes Noah, and Noah was a favorite in his Generation; see Gen. 6. 9. These are the Generations of Noah: Noah was a just man, and perfect in his Generation, and Noah walked with God. Noah was a just man, and perfect in his Generation, Noah walked with God in a remarkable manner, he kept more close to God than all the World beside: But Noah found favor in the eyes of the Lord, it's said, when all the World was drowned. Abraham was such a man in his Generation, he was a friend of God, God revealed more to him than to all the World besides: I will hide nothing from Abraham, says God in Gen. 18. 17, 18, 19. Shall I hide from Abraham that thing which I do, says God, he will teach his Children and Servants, I will not hide from Abraham; he was God's choice favourite, and therefore he will not hide from Abraham the thing that he will do. After Abraham comes Job, he was a favourite in his Generation: it was thought upon good ground, that he lived betwixt Abraham and Moses; when ever it was, he was a favourite in his Generation, Hast thou considered my Servant Job, that he is a perfect and upright man, one that fears God and eschews evil, and there is none like him on the earth: Here is a high commendation, he is a man worthy to be considered, God himself considers him, a perfect and upright man, one that walked up close with God, as there was none nigher him in his Generation, there was none like Job, he was the choicest Scholar that God had in the World, and God taught him more than all the World besides, he was the greatest proficient in all the School of God, God gives him high commendations. And then comes Moses, he is a favourite in his Generation, He saw God face to face: there was none like unto Moses, none had such communion with God as Moses had in his Generation, Come thou up into the Mount, he was God's favourite, he walked with God as Enoch did, and there was none like him. And so when Moses was gone, Joshua in his Generation was one that Followed God fully, none but Caleb and Joshua followed God fully, they were the choice in their Generation. And so afterward David he was a man after God's heart, a choice man in his Generation. And so Hezekiah, and then Josiah, of them both there was none like them in their Generation, there was none like Hezekiah in his Generation, and none like Josiah in his Generation, they were choice favorites in their Generation. Our Lord Jesus loved all his Disciples dearly, and took care of them: but there was one of them lay in his bosom, there was one that was always next him, and that was John the beloved Disciple; Joh. 21. 20, 21. Peter saw the Disciple whom Christ loved, who leaned on his Breast at the Supper; he was nearer Christ than all the rest; and so he instructed all the Disciples, and revealed great mysteries to them all, but the greatest of mysteries he revealed unto James, Peter, and John, in the Mount; and none saw Christ's transfiguration but they three: they were choice Pillars in their Generation. As it is in the natural body, so it is in the body of Christ, there are some members that are nearer the head than others: all do partake of the same life, and of the same spirit, which runs through the whole body; Ay, but some are nearer the head than others, there's a greater dignity put upon some than others; some are more useful than others; some are of greater growth than others, and some have more strength than others: So 'tis in the body of Christ; there are some of Christ's members that he looks upon, and holds forth to the World as choice pieces, such as Enoch, Noah, Abraham, Job, Moses, Joshua and Caleb, David, Hezekiah and Josiah were; all have not the same helps, and therefore all come not to the same growth, all have not the same means of knowledge, the same means of getting nearer God, and growing up in spiritual strength and stature, there are some that are beloved of God that are but seldom rained upon, upon others showers of Heaven do distill every day.

Again, All have not the same Impediments, the same hindrances that some have, and therefore some out-strip others. Grace in some of God's people meets with an abundance of opposition, through the abundance of corruption; they meet with more temptations than others, there's more blocks cast in the way of some: the World is a great impediment, and proves a great snare to some, and they are kept back from getting so nigh unto God as others. There are some that God doth enable to follow the Lamb where ever he goes; Oh, they get nigh God, they are choice men in their Generation, such as are enabled to follow the Lamb where ever he goes. There are some that God makes very attentive unto his Word, their souls are continually bent towards God, and towards his Word, and they are listening continually to hear what God will speak, and when God will speak, they are nigher God than others; there are some that lay up the Word of God in their hearts, ponder the words of Christ, as Mary did, she pondered the sayings of Christ in her heart, and hid them in her heart, she pondered them; why, these get nearer God than others. There are some that God makes wise to know their time, and to take their season, to improve the opportunity that God puts into their hands, when God calls them to follow him, when the Lord breaths and stirs them up, then to stir up themselves, and to take hold of his name; they are taught of God to know the opportunity and season in which they may get nighest to God by following him. When God draws a soul after himself, when some cord of love is cast about it, oh it breaths towards God in its spirit, when the spirit of God is breathing in their hearts; now those whom God thus calls to improve their opportunity, and to do the work of the Lord with all their might, and with all faithfulness as Christ did when he was upon earth, these are the men and women, who get near God, of whom it may be said as of Enoch, that they walked with God above all their Generation. And for the ground of this you must know,

That God hath several works to put his people upon, he hath several works, several services, and several sufferings, and so accordingly he gives out strength, and accordingly he draws into nigher communion with himself. There are some that God hath appointed for great services in the world, such as these had need be exceedingly strengthened by sweet communion with God, that their spirits may be upheld; and some God brings forth to great sufferings, and therefore they had need have a great deal of strength from God that they may be carried through. Job was a choice man, and God had great sufferings for him, and there was none like him, nor no sufferings like to his in his Generation, the Lord fitted him with abundance of grace to go through his sufferings. Our Lord Jesus Christ before he was tempted had abundance of his Father, to his comfort there came a Voice from Heaven, saying, This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased; a voice from heaven doth evince and declare that he was the Son of God. The Lord Jesus had great sufferings, great conflicts, great temptations to grapple with, therefore his Father doth strengthen him exceedingly: there were some that were set upon a hill, lights set upon a hill canit be hid, the eyes of many are upon them, the endeavors of all the powers of darkness are to blow out such lights, the name of God is greatly interested, and greatly concerned in them, and therefore they had need have a great deal of clear light from Heaven, they had need be exceedingly comforted, and strengthened in their spirits by the presence of God, and by most near and intimate fellowship and communion with him; therefore the Lord disposes that some of his servants shall be choice and excellent in their Generation, to be near to him as Enoch was who walked with God. Now therefore to apply things.

1. Use. I beseech you Brethren, That you would seek after this high measure of Grace and Holiness, that you would labor to get nigh unto God, get as close unto God as may be, that you may walk with God in an eminent manner in your Generation, as Enoch did: you have God himself for your pattern before you; Oh how the Saints should strive to be thus minded, Be ye perfect, for your heavenly Father is perfect; you have God before you, you have Christ before you for your pattern. I do not say, be as holy and perfect as the rest of your friends and neighbors, and measure your holiness by theirs; but you should strive to go beyond all, beyond all creatures, look at none as your pattern but God and Christ: labor to get up to the height of eminency, the life of God in Christ; you can never get too nigh God, you can never have too much of him, there is no danger in following hard after God, there is certainty in the things of God. A man may have too much of the things of the world, there's danger in it, but a man cannot have too much of the knowledge of God, and of communion with God; a man may have more, and too much of the World, as he cannot use it to the glory of God; Oh there is danger in the World in striving to be the greatest, to be the richest in the World, there is great danger; but there is no danger in striving to be eminent in grace, in striving to get nearer to God, and to walk close with God: this is the very glory of Heaven, it's worth the seeking after. My Brethren, press hard to get more nigh to God, to stick close to God; it's the glory of heaven: heaven differs only in degrees from that which is given out to the Saints here; it's the same in essence; it's the glory of heaven to know God, to enjoy God, to walk with God, To follow the Lamb wheresoever he goes; it's the glory of heaven: and therefore I beseech you, that you would now look upon it as your glory to follow God fully, as your glory to follow the Lamb wheresoever he goes.

2. Use. In the second place, It may be a word of encouragement unto poor Christians, weak Christians, you that are sensible you are not the Enochs of your Generation: Oh the distance that is in your spirits (you see) betwixt God and you! Are you pressing on after God, why then let me say to you, That you have the same for essence, that the best of the Saints have, though you have not the same in degree; I say, you that have the least interest in Christ, you have the same for essence which the best Saints on earth have, and the same which the spirits of just men made perfect in heaven have, the difference is only in degrees, it's not in kind, and therefore press on hard that you may have more of it. It's not impossible that you should come to the same height with them, because the difference is only in degrees, it's not in kind. It's true, where there is nothing but gifts and parts, there the difference is in kind. If a man hath the most excellent parts in the world, he can never attain unto that which a Christian hath; parts can never attain unto grace, but the least measure of grace may grow up to the greatest in time, for the difference is only in degree. The Kingdom of Heaven is like unto a grain of Mustard seed: why, a grain of Mustard seed when it's sown, you know how little it is, but it grows up to a great height: where there is rooting in Christ, where there is a principle of grace in any soul, there shall be a growth, and that soul shall never leave growing till it grow higher and higher, as tall as heaven itself, and there it hath its full growth and its full perfection. But let me tell you that say, you shall never be eminent in your Generation; let me say thus to you, You have the same Mediator, that the chiefest of the Saints have, even you that are weakest; all they have, comes through his hand, and it's for his sake: you have the same Mediator that they have, Oh why do you not improve this Mediator more, that more may be given out through him? If you were more in improving and more in waiting upon him, seeing you have the same Mediator, you shall have the same welcome in heaven with the most choice of Saints: you have the same Fountain to go unto, and therefore do not say, you shall never be eminent in your Generation, you have the same fountain, All we from his fullness receive grace for grace; the choicest have nothing but what they receive from Christ and his fullness, and the same fountain is as full for you as for them; nay, there is the same freedom of access for you as for them, there's the same freeness in Christ to be given out to you; it's a fountain set open, set open for Judas and for Jerusalem, it's set open for the weakest, that they may come and drink and be cheered in their spirits; nay, let me tell you that the heart of Christ is more careful of you than of others, the heart of Christ is most careful of his weak ones. Oh, what provision doth he make for them? Simon Peter, dost thou love me? why then keep my Lambs: if thou lovest me, Peter, by all the love thou bearest to me, then take care of my weak ones, Feed my Lambs: and he takes care himself, great care; in Isa. 40. 11, 12. it's said there what Christ the good Shepherd shall do, that He shall gather the Lambs with his arms, and carry them in his bosom, and shall gently lead those that are with young: there is the special care that Christ takes of you that are weak.

Nay, Further for your encouragement, let me tell you, that there is the same blessing upon you that is upon the strongest of those Saints that God hath upon the earth: therefore there is way made for your growth and increase; when God makes the new creature, when ever he brings forth the new creature he blesses it: as when he created the World, he gave it his blessing, Increase and Multiply, and so to the Trees, Be fruitful: and so where ever the new creature is, there is the special blessing of the Creator goes along with it: he saith to them all, Be fruitful and multiply, be fruitful in old age, and in Rev. 22. 11. Let him that is holy, be holy still: there's a blessing upon every righteous holy man though never so weak, let him be holy still, oh let him be more holy, let him increase in holiness and righteousness; there's the blessing of Christ in the New Testament, oh wait and look for this blessing, and know that the blessing of Christ is prevalent: the Curse of Christ is heavy, it made the Fig-tree die to the very root, wither to the very roots: but the blessing of Christ can make roots that are withered to spring up and flourish.

But again (to say no more) for your encouragement, Consider what promises the Lord hath made to the weak, to those that are weak of strength, which promises are in a special manner to be accomplished in the latter days, as in Zach. 12. 8. In that day shall the Lord defend the Inhabitants of Jerusalem, and he that is feeble among them at that day, shall be as David, and the house of David shall be as God, as the Angel of the Lord before them. Zachariah saith that there's a time a coming, that the weak and feeble shall be as David, and they who are as David, shall be as the Angel of the Lord. David I told you was a choice man in his Generation, he was a man after God's own heart, that walked with God most part of his life, he was strong to do great things for God; now he that is weak shall be as David, and he that is as David shall be made strong as the Angel of the Lord. When you are in the midst of the sense of your weakness, look upon these promises, and desire the Lord, that he would hasten the accomplishment of them. Well, then I beseech you suffer me to press this upon you, that you would labor to get as nigh God as possible you may, get as nigh God as may be; do not think it enough that you have an interest in Christ, that you have that which will carry you to heaven; Oh, let the spirit of a Child, of a son, this day be set upon you: seek not enough only to carry you to heaven, but seek more than so, seek that that will make you eminent unto God in your Generation, that which will make you exceeding serviceable unto God, and to your Generation in your Age, even this strife should there be to get into the very heart of God, Oh that God would reveal this to you, that you are one of his choice favorites. The nigher you are to Christ, the more you shall see of heaven, the more you shall know of his Mind, of his Will, and of his Word: you think that Disciple was a happy man that leaned on Christ's bosom, the Disciple whom Christ loved, sat next him, leaned on his breast; Oh how should you press after this in spirit, to get as nigh Christ as may be, to lean on the bosom or breast of Christ as that beloved Disciple did! I tell you, you that do so, you shall hear more from Christ than others do. Christ sometimes speaks softly, and there's none hear what Christ speaks but those that sit next him; the soul that sits next him and cleaves closest unto him, as Enoch did, hears many a word that other Christians cannot hear: Enoch had choice things revealed unto him, God did reveal things to come unto him, because he was the choice of God, and sat close to God. Oh, that you would labor after this, to get near unto God, there's many sweet refreshments that you may meet with, there's many a good bit that you shall get of him, which others of his Children do not taste of, by reason they follow him not close. Oh do not lose the sweetness of this! How sweet is it to hear a word from Christ, and how refreshing is that portion that Christ carves out. Strive in your Generation that you may be like Enoch, who in his Generation stuck close to God, and walked with God.

SERMON II.

GEN. 5. 24. And Enoch walked with God, and he was not, for God took him.

I Made entrance the last day, where I opened the words to you, we considered that commendation that was given to Enoch, He walked with God; so did the rest of the ten Patriarchs spoken of, but notice is taken only of Enoch, Enoch walked with God, he walked with God in a special manner, he walked more close with God than the rest of the men in that Generation, and therefore it's spoken of him as if he alone had walked with God, And Enoch walked with God.

Two things I propounded to be discust, before▪ I come to the main general Proposition:

First of all, That the Lord hath some special Servants that walk more close with him in their Generation than others. And then,

Secondly, That the Lord takes special notice of such; here is a special character upon them, some special honor that God puts upon such. I spake of the former the last day; and we reflected upon it in way of Application.

I desire that all God's people would labor to get as nigh God as may be: do not content yourselves that you have interest in Christ, that you have that which will carry you to heaven; it's a poor low spirit to take up here: but seek after that which may make you an honor unto God, and serviceable in your Generation, that you may walk with God in special, as sometimes Enoch did. We spake also by way of encouragement unto those that are weak, as if that you should never get so nigh God, that you should never be able to walk with God as Enoch. You have the same principle that have interest in Christ as the strongest; though you be weak and never so weak, Christ is the same principle of life in you, and therefore you do not differ from them; you look upon Saints that are remarkable, and you are discouraged when you view the distance between you and them: but know, the difference is not in kind but degree; if the difference were in kind, there were no hopes of attaining to that measure, all the gifts and parts in the World canit grow up to grace; but where there is a principle of grace, though never so small, though it be but as a grain of Mustard seed, it shall grow, and never leave growing, till it grow as high as heaven. You have also the same Mediator (though weak) in whose name you may come and plead acceptance, as well as the strongest; you have the same Fountain to go unto, infinite fullness that is ever running over, willing to communicate; there's the same freeness of access for you, this Fountain is set open for you as much as for the strongest; it's the blessing of the new creature, Be strong, let him that is holy, be holy still, and him that is righteous, be righteous still, in Rev. 22. 11. The blessing is upon him that hath Christ and Righteousness, let him be more righteous, and more holy, let him go from strength to strength, until he appear before God in Zion; this is the blessing upon him: therefore your weakness should be no cause of discouragement. You have also the Promises, that the time shall come, That those that be weak shall be as David (a Prophecy concerning the latter times) he that is weak shall be as David, and he that is as strong as David shall be as the Angel of the Lord: So that you that are weak in your own apprehensions should be strengthened, even as David, who was one that walked with God in a remarkable manner in his Generation. Therefore get as nigh God and Christ as may be: sit at his Footstool; the nearer you are to Christ, the more you sit under the dropping of his lips, the more sweetness of Christ will fall into your spirits; the more his eye is over you, the better you are in his thoughts, and you shall have many a good bit, if you follow him closer than others. To proceed to the second Proposition,

2. Prop. That the Lord takes special notice of such as do walk with him in a remarkable manner. The Lord takes special notice of such, there is some special character of honor which the Lord will put upon such as walk with him so as Enoch did: it's written twice in this Chapter, that Enoch walked with God. God will have special notice taken of him; they all walked with God, the rest of the Patriarchs, but notice is taken only of Enoch's walking. The New Testament takes notice of Enoch's walking with God: The Apostle Jude speaks of Enoch the seventh from Adam, which I had occasion to speak of the last day. And the Apostle to the Hebrews takes notice of Enoch, as one that lived by Faith, and by Faith was translated; and before he was translated he had this Testimony, That he pleased God.

But I shall show you how the Lord takes notice, special notice of such of his Servants as do walk closely with him, in divers particulars.

1. First of all, The Lord bears witness to them, and he bears witness of them in a special manner, I say the Lord bears witness to them, and bears witness of them. He bears witness to them; he spake evidently, clearly unto them; he clears up their evidences for heaven; he speaks by his spirit unto theirs, and they are his witnesses in the World; they bear witness to the name of God, and the truth of God, to the Word of the Lord, the Lives of such of his Saints bear witness to the Word, they are a Comment, an Exposition of the Word of the Lord, and therefore the Lord bears witness to their spirits, they have special work to do for God in the World, and therefore God comes in with a special witness and testimony of his spirit with theirs, that he might strengthen them, and carry them through all their undertakings which are for God. Paul was a chosen vessel, and was to bear up the name of God before the Gentiles, and therefore the Lord comes and speaks unto his spirit in a special manner in strengthening of Paul, Paul fear not, I am with thee. The Prophet Jeremiah was to bear witness for God, to do great things for God, and therefore God bears witness to his Spirit in Jer. 1. 18. he sends him forth and tells him, He had made him a Brazen Wall, and an Iron Pillar, and he would carry him through all the work, and all his enemies should not be able to harm him: they wait for the witness of God, for the witness of the Spirit of God, their souls are always hearkening, and they are listening what God shall speak: they won't be put off with any other Testimony till God speaks, their soul is not satisfied, God therefore comes in, and by his spirit witnesses it himself, he writes their evidence fair, and writes it with the blood of his Son, and casts it into their bosom, and they are careful to keep their evidence clear when God hath once given it out to them, they are careful to keep it from blots and blurs, and to read over their evidences in Christ, and put it into their bosom: there's nothing they delight in, but in reading it again and again, and therefore the Lord doth witness unto such. And he doth not only bear witness to them, but he bears witness of them; a high honor for God to bear witness of poor creatures: to bear witness of them, Hast thou considered my Servant Job? Job 1. 1. God gave witness of him, That Job is a perfect and upright man, one that feared God; he was one that eschewed evil: God bears witness of him: and so in Job 2. 3. the Lord saith, Hast thou considered my servant Job, that he is a perfect and upright man, none like him in the earth? Mark, what a high Testimony God gives of him: Job durst not say so of himself, he durst not stand upon his own perfection, he durst not say he was perfect, but God said so: his friends would not say so of him, but they accused him, and said he was an Hypocrite, because they saw the hand of God went out remarkably against him; Ay, but God bears witness of him, whatsoever his friends say, God will convince them, that they judged with unrighteous judgment: therefore see what God says to Eliphaz the Temanite, Job 42. 7. My wrath is kindled against thee and against thy two friends: for you have not spoken of me the thing that is right, like my servant Job. Job was a perfect and upright man. Their walking with God is hid from the World, it's in secret, their spirits are in secret carried after God, which are the choicest, and most curious ways of their walking with him in the World, they see not, and can't eye their walking with God, but God will take notice of what they have done for him in secret, and it shall be published upon the house top; God will bear witness of such of his Servants as walk closely with him in their Generation, he will bear witness of them before men; will bear witness of them either in their lives, or at their death, or else after death; in their lives, as he did of Job; at their deaths, he will give such a testimony of them at death as shall make even their very enemies wish with Balaam, Oh that I might die the death of the righteous, and that my latter end may be like unto his; and then he will bear witness of them after death, when they are gone, I say, many Ages and Generations after they are dead and gone, God will bear witness of them, as in Heb. 11. where you have it recorded of all the Patriarchs, that by Faith they pleased God: and thus God will bear witness of such of his servants as will close with him in their Generation. And this is the first thing that God takes notice of in them, so as to bear witness of them, and to them.

2. But again, Secondly, God sets up such of his servants as Patterns to others for them to imitate: He sets them up as patterns; this is a high honor to them for others to look unto: they are the very Images of God, they are the very Images of Christ, and therefore God sets them to be patterns to be imitated. Abraham that walked with God, is made a pattern to all in his Generation; and Moses a pattern of meekness, and Job a pattern of patience, You have heard of the patience of Job; and therefore saith the Apostle, James 5. 7. And therefore be ye also patient unto the coming of our Lord. Be ye also patient; you have heard of the patience of Job: It's true, God himself is the first and highest pattern, Be ye holy as your heavenly Father is holy, be ye perfect as he is perfect; there's a suitableness in the spirits and affections of the Saints in their desires unto this pattern of God himself which is set before them; for as the perfection of God is infinite, as the holiness of God is infinite, so there is a kind of infiniteness in their desires and affections in their pursuits after God; but when they look upon their actings and attainments, they see they come infinitely short of God, and are apt to be discouraged, and therefore now the Lord hath set up other patterns for his weak Saints to look unto, and therefore they are such as themselves, to see how much they have attained to in their Generation. You have heard of the patience of Job: and so in the same Chapter, the Apostle tells them of Elias, a pattern which God hath set before them: he calls them to wait upon God by prayer; Elias, though a man subject to passion as we are, yet He prayed and it rained not, and he prayed again and it did rain: A man subject to the like passion as you are, and yet he prayed and it rained not, and he prayed, and it rained; therefore look you to be as patterns; this is another honor that God is pleased to put upon his servants, he makes them patterns to others. But again,

3. Thirdly, The Lord doth boast of such of his servants as do thus: he boasts and makes it his glory, he sets them before, for all the world to look upon and behold his glory in them, in Rev. 14. 4. These are they which follow the Lamb wheresoever he goes, let all the world look upon them, and behold the glory of God shining in them: these are they that follow the Lamb where ever he goes; you know what God said to Satan concerning Job, Job 1. 8. and 2. 3. Hast thou considered my servant Job? I have one servant that is worth the considering, saith God, Hast thou considered my servant Job? Hast thou set thine heart upon my servant Job, saith he? Thou hast been compassing the earth, but hast thou seen such a one as my servant Job? Thou hast many slaves to boast on, and many drudges, but I will compare with thee above all: my servant Job, hast thou considered him? he is a perfect and upright man, one that feareth God and escheweth evil. And so David, God seems to glory in him, that he had such a servant as David, in Acts 13. 22. I have found David, the son of Jesse, a man after mine own heart, that shall execute all my Will: as good a servant as I desire to have, he will fulfill all my Will, and he is according to mine own heart, he will do all my Will: God glories in it that he had such a servant as David.

4. Fourthly, As God glories in such, so he delights exceedingly in such, as walk closely with him, they are the Object of his delight: it's said in Cant. 7. 5. that the King is held in his Galleries: he sees such an excellent piece, he is held by his affections, and he cannot get out, Oh thou hast ravished my heart, my Sister, my Spouse, thou hast ravished mine heart with one of thine eyes, with one chain of thy neck: Behold the beauty of thine eye, that eye of Faith, that eye of thine ravishes my heart, it wounds the heart of Christ, it made him love-sick, there was such a dart from the eye that ravished his heart, great delight the Lord takes in such; Oh, saith the Father, here's the very Image of my son in such and such a Saint, here's the very likeness of my son, I canit but look upon this picture with delight, here's the very countenance of my son, the very eye of my son, Doves eyes, the very cast of his eye, and it's always looking heavenward, the very cast of the eye of thee my son: here's the very lip of my son that dropt sweet smelling Myrrh; here is the very gate of my son, his very carriage, every footstep is like the foot-steps of my son, I canit but delight; the Father saw the Image of the son in such, and the son sees the Image of the Father in such, and therefore canit but rejoice and delight in them with exceeding great joy. That's a fourth. But again,

5. Fifthly, The Lord doth manifest much love unto such: there's another special favor that such as walk close with God meet withal: Oh that all this which is spoken might refresh your hearts. The Lord manifests special love and favor to such; he communicates more of his love, they shall have the very heart of God, God unfolds, he will unbowel himself unto them; the Lord canit contain it, he falls upon them, falls upon their neck and kisses them, as Joseph did upon his Brethren's necks, in Gen. 45. 14, 15. he could contain no longer, fell upon their necks, discovered himself unto them, I am your brother, saith he, I am Joseph: there's abundance of love, precious love that the Lord doth reveal unto such; he will satiate and satisfy their soul with kindness; there is a promise that is made in the Psalms 36. 8. He will satisfy their souls with his loving kindness, they shall drink abundantly, and be satisfied with the fatness of thy house: they shall taste abundance, not only so but be satisfied, taste and be satisfied, with the goodness, and love of the Lord; there's none drinks so much, nor none meet with such soul-satisfaction, as those that walk close with God.

6. Sixthly, The Lord reveals his secrets unto them, he will with-hold nothing; Shall I hide from Abraham? The Lord will reveal it unto such of his Servants, Shall I hide from Abraham? Gen. 18. 17, 18. seeing Abraham shall become a great Nation, and he will teach his Children: The Lord knows to whom he gives out, such as will give out to others and be communicative to others, and therefore the Lord reveals himself unto them: they stand nigher God than others, therefore they see more than others, understand more than others, and standing upon the hill top they see further than others: God reveals special things to them: Enoch the seventh from Adam Prophesied of these, saying, Behold the Lord cometh with ten thousands of his Saints, to execute judgment upon all, and to convince all that are ungodly among them of all their ungodly deeds which they have ungodly committed, and of all their hard speeches, which ungodly sinners have spoken against him. Again,

7. Seventhly, The Lord employs such upon special Services: such as walk more closely with him, shall do the great works of God in the world; great things are spoken of to come to pass in the latter days, and who shall be God's Instruments to bring his great works to pass? Why, the Lord will make wise such as walk closely with him, in Rev. 17. 14. The Army of the Lamb, such as he will do great things by, they were such as are called faithful and chosen; there's that commendation given of them, And they that are with him are called faithful and chosen: These shall be his Instruments of the great work to bring down Babylon by, to do his great work by, these shall be men of choice spirits, called, chosen and faithful, God will make use of them to bear up his name in the world, and he will use them as Instruments to bring to pass the great things he hath spoken of: they are Instruments that will give all to God, and therefore God will make them Instruments of great work to him; and it's their study that the Lord alone may be exalted, and therefore the Lord will make use of such for special service. But again in the eighth place,

8. Eighthly, The Lord takes special notice of them, for he puts such a luster upon them as shall make them to shine in the eye of the world; this is another honor that God is careful to put upon them, as that they shall shine in the eye of the world; that they shall either be respected or feared. Sometimes the Lord makes the very wicked in the world to respect them. John that was a burning and shining light, John the Baptist, how did God make even Herod himself to respect him? Even the wicked of the world are convinced by them, and God doth enforce the world to approve of them, to approve of the way they walk in, and to approve of their Integrity. There's a promise in Rev. 2. to the Church of Philadelphia, that God would make their very enemies to come and worship before them, and to acknowledge that God hath loved them; there is such a luster upon them, upon their spirits, and lives, and carriages, when they walk close with God, that the men of the world are forced to confess as of Christ, Never man spake as this man, and certainly these men are gracious men, what ever the world thinks of them, and oh that there were no worse, and that I might die the righteous man's death, that my latter end may be as his; they are thus convinced by that luster that is upon them, or at least, God makes the world to fear them; they are a dread unto the world: Abraham was mightily feared by Abimelech, and Abimelech feared him, and sent to make a Covenant with him in Gen. 1. 22. he sent his great Captain to make a Covenant with Abraham, and why? Because they perceived that God was with him, and God prospered him, and therefore they are afraid that Abraham should be their enemy; though they were strangers to God, yet the fear of his people, the fear of Abraham fell upon them: what a dread is many a godly man unto the wicked, their very conversations do convince them, the stirrings of God, the appearances of God in them do convince them: and therefore they cry out many times of them as the Devils did of Jesus of Nazareth, Why art thou come to torment us: So a man that walks close with God is even a torment upon them: the fear and dread of them fall upon their enemies; that's another honor that God puts upon those that walk closely with him.

9. Ninthly, Again, To such as walk closely with God, there's an abundant entrance for them into the Kingdom of God, I say, such shall meet with an abundance of entrance into the Kingdom of God; so says the Apostle in 2 Pet. 1. 11. He bids them there Give all diligence to make their calling and election sure, be not idle, do not stand at a stay, press on, For so there shall be an entrance made, an abundant entrance shall be ministered unto you, into the Kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ: All God's people do not meet with this abundant entrance, there are some that creep in at the narrow gate, some sail to Heaven with quarter wind, others go with full sails of Assurance. Now this seems to be promised to those that walk most closely with God, that give all diligence to wait upon God, and all diligence to increase in knowledge, and grace, full sails of Assurance and an abundant entrance shall be ministered unto them into the Kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. But again,

10 Tenthly, In the last place, Such as walk with God, God makes their memorial to be sweet, the memory of the just shall be sweet when they are dead and gone, their names shall not rot, they shall be Embalmed, God will have them to be remembered unto many Generations; Abel, though dead, he is yet remembered, God will take care that his Saints shall be remembered. Enoch walked with God, and though he was cut off, yet Enoch must be remembered, though it were many hundred years before Moses, yet God would have Moses to write it twice, Enoch walked with God. Now God will have the very men in the world to honor their Names when they are dead and gone; the Prophets many of them were cut off by the wicked Jews, but God caused their names to be precious when they were gone: and the Scribes and Pharisees (as wicked as they were) yet, notwithstanding, they honored the name of a Prophet; and your Fathers killed the Prophets (though odious whilst they lived, though cut off, as Christ himself was, and thought not worthy to live on the face of the Earth) yet their Names are precious and in memory: and thus you see that the Lord takes special notice of such of his Servants as walk most closely with him; he knows that the Devil takes special notice of them, and therefore he will take notice of them; he knows that the world takes special notice of them to envy them, the spite of the world is against them, and therefore God will take them into special favor with himself: there are none so hated, none so maligned as those that walk most close with God; there is no such eye-sore to a carnal man, as one that walks close with God: Oh, the light and glory of God that doth appear in such a Saint doth convince the men of the world, and upbraids them, shames them, sets their Consciences on work, convinces them at what distance they are from God, and therefore it is that the world hates them, there's none that meets with more spite from the world than they, and therefore the Lord takes special notice of such, and there's none that the Devil strikes more at, than those that walk closest with God: for they are like a light set upon a Hill, and the Prince of the Air will endeavor to blow it out; they are as Beacons set upon a Hill, and the Devil knows that if he can throw them down, there will fall many with them. Hast thou considered my Servant Job? hast thou set thy heart upon him? I doubt not but thou hast considered him, thou hast maligned him, sought to cast him down from his station. Simon, Simon, Satan has a desire to have you, that he may winnow you, but I have prayed for thee that thy Faith fail not; of all others, Satan desires to have Peter, that he might winnow him. Such as are most eminent, the more eminent, the more doth Satan desire to winnow them, and therefore the Lord steps in, I have prayed for them; Christ steps in to plead for them in a special manner, he takes care of them: As the darts of the Devil are thrown principally at such, so the Lord himself will be their Buckler, and their defense.

Now Brethren, from all that hath been spoken, reflect upon it; And oh that it may stir you up to endeavor to walk more close with God; not only to walk with God, but to walk with God as Enoch did; it's not enough to be gracious, but what singular thing do you for God? I know that this will make you vile in the eyes of the world, but be you resolute in the ways of God: It will be a blot to you in the eyes of the world, but it will be an honor to you in the eyes of God, who judges in truth and righteousness; and therefore if the world spite you for this, for walking more close with God, for embracing the truth of the times, say, If this be to be vile, I will yet be more vile, and know that it shall not be labor lost, I say, it shall not be labor lost, to endeavor to walk thus closely with God as Enoch did, you shall meet with that refreshment in God, which will abundantly answer what you shall lose in the world, what you shall part withal in the world: the sweetness that you shall meet withal in Communion with God, it shall abundantly satisfy for the loss of all creature comforts whatsoever, if you shall lose anything for walking thus closely with him.

I shall say no more, Your memories shall be precious in God's sight, when rich men, and great men, and men of parts shall rot and perish, die, and come to nothing, and their names shall perish with them and rot; Why, the names of the righteous, such as walk close with God in their Generation, their names shall be as a Box of Ointment poured forth, and they shall be sweet and precious to God and to his Saints throughout all Generations. And thus I have shown you these two particulars, That God hath some of his Servants in all Generations, that walk more close with him than others; and secondly, That the Lord takes special notice of such, and sets some special badge of Honor upon them; the main Point in hand is still behind.

SERMON III.

GEN. 5. 24. And Enoch walked with God, and he was not, for God took him.

I Have already considered two Propositions that did arise from some particular consideration, before I came to the main; First, In that Enoch is taken notice of above the rest; here are ten Patriarchs spoken of in this Chapter, but it's said of Enoch only, that he walked with God: they all walked with God, but he in a special manner. God hath some of his Servants in all Ages that walk more close with him than others; that was the first Proposition. And then Secondly, That the Lord takes special notice of such: here's more notice taken of Enoch than of all the rest, Enoch walked with God. And there is one particular more before I come to the main Observation,

And that is, The consideration of the Time in which Enoch lived: It was in evil times; men began exceedingly to degenerate, the world began to grow exceeding wicked, and was filled with violence, and therefore it was that Enoch did breath out threatenings against them: he breathed out threatenings of Judgment against the men of his Generation, which the Apostle Jude doth apply to the men of that Age in which he lived, in Jude 14, 15. it's said there (speaking of the wickedness of his Generation) And Enoch the seventh from Adam, Prophetied of these, saying, Behold the Lord cometh with ten thousand of his Saints, to execute Judgment upon all, and to convince all that are ungodly among them of all their ungodly deeds which they have ungodly committed, and of all their hard speeches which ungodly sinners have spoken against him: the Prophet it's very probable did Prophesy this against the men of his Generation, they being exceedingly corrupt; and the Apostle doth apply it unto the Age in which he lived, because it was like unto the Age in which Enoch lived, which was very corrupt; so that you see (and it's very observable) that in the time in which Enoch lived, that Generation was very corrupt, yet he walked with God. It affords us this Proposition to pitch upon, That

The Lord takes it exceeding kindly, when his people walk closely with him in evil times, it's the great commendation of the Saints then to walk closely with God: it was the commendation of the Church of Pergamos in Rev. 2. 13. I know thy works, and where thou dwellest, even where Satan's seat is, and thou holdest fast my name, and hast not denied my Faith, even in those days wherein Antipas my faithful Martyr was slain, who was slain among you, where Satan dwelleth. This was the great commendation of that Church, that though she dwelt where Satan's seat was, in the midst of wicked men where the Devil rules, where the Devil hath his Throne, yet there thou hast not denied my Faith, but there thou holdest fast my truth: this Christ took exceeding kindly. It was the great commendation of Job, that he was a perfect man, he was a perfect and upright man, though he dwelt in the Land of Uz; he was a man that dwelt in the Land of Uz, a perfect and upright man, he was upright in the midst of a sinful people: they were of the posterity of Esau that inhabited that place, a crooked Generation, and yet Job was an upright man amongst them; that was his great commendation. It was the great commendation of Noah that he was a just man in an unjust world; it's said, the whole earth was filled with violence in Noah's days, and then Noah was a just and perfect man. It was the great commendation of Joseph, that he feared the Lord amongst the Egyptians, he dwelt amongst those that had not the fear of the Lord amongst them, and yet he retained the fear of the Lord. And so it was the great commendation of David, that his spirit was carried after God, not only when he was in Jerusalem, but when he was among the Heathen, when he was amongst the Inhabitants of Meshek, when he was in the Tents of Kedar, Woe is me, that I am to dwell with the Inhabitants of Meshek, &c. and yet even then David's heart was carried after God, and that was David's great commendation. It was one of the glories and beauties of Christ himself, That he was holy and righteous in a sinful world, As the Apple-tree in the midst of the Trees in the Forest, so is my Beloved among the Sons, Cant. 2. 3. He was an Apple-tree in the midst of wild Trees, when he was compassed about with Briars, Thorns and Thistles, and Crab-trees, yet he continued a pleasant Apple-tree, and brought forth delightful fruit to God and man. Now for the clearing of this Point, That the Lord takes it exceeding kindly, when his people walk close with him in evil times,

I shall show you, First, What the evil times are; And then Secondly, What it is to walk with God in evil times. And Thirdly, Make it evident, that this is exceeding acceptable unto God, which will make way for the Application.

First, If you enquire what those evil times are in which close walking with God is so exceeding acceptable?

1. First, Times of General Apostasy: times of great corruption, and of General Apostasy from God, from the truth, and from the ways of God, and from the worship of God; when men shall lose not only the power, but the very form of Godliness; when such as seem to be like Stars, shall be swept down; and when most men are carried away with the stream of looseness, it's an evil time, and then to walk with God is exceeding precious: Such was the time of Noah; in the time in which Noah lived the whole world was corrupt, and the whole earth was filled with violence; Ay, but then Noah walked with God in his Generation, and that was exceeding acceptable. And so again, we have other Instances of the like in Hos. 11. 12. It was the great commendation of Judah, that when the people of Israel had corrupted themselves, when Israel had gone astray from God, from his worship, and from his truth, then Judah was found faithful with God, Ephraim has compassed me about with lies, and the house of Israel with deceit, but Judah yet ruleth with God, and is faithful with the Saints; Judah still holds fast, or Judah leaves a witness to his God, bears witness to the truth of God, and is faithful to the Saints, faithful to the Prophets, and that was the great commendation of Judah, to be faithful at that time; in a time of general corruption: And so again in Mal. 3. 14. It was a very evil, a very corrupt time, and God took it exceeding kindly that his people did hold up for him: Ye have said, it is in vain to serve the Lord, and what profit is it that we have kept his Ordinances, and that we have walked mournfully before the Lord? and now we call the proud happy, yea they that work wickedness are set up, and they that tempt God are even delivered: but what follows? mark the 16 Verse, Then they that feared the Lord spake often one to another, &c. The people were woefully corrupt, God had a few names there that he kept faithful to himself, they that feared the Lord even then, when the time was so evil, they spake often one to another, and a Book of remembrance was written.

2. Secondly, Times of sore persecution; times of persecution are evil times, and then to walk with God is exceeding acceptable; such was the time in which Elijah lived; it was a time of great persecution, Jezebel had slain all the Lord's Prophets, there was none in all the Land durst appear for God, and therefore (he thought) he had been left alone, Lord they have slain thy Prophets, and left me alone: and yet Elijah stands up for God; there was none in all the Land durst appear for God, and therefore Elijah thought he had been left alone, 1 King. 19. 14. And yet Elijah stood up for God, and with an undaunted spirit bare witness and stood up for God: this the Lord took exceeding kindly at Elijah's hand. What a gracious promise is made to the Church of Philadelphia, because she stood it out in evil times, Because thou hast kept the Word of my patience: Thou hast kept my Word with patience, thou hast kept my truth, notwithstanding all the opposition thou hast met with, that truth which was most opposed, that truth which was most persecuted, that which was the truth of the times thou hast kept, and thou hast kept it with patience, notwithstanding all thy suffering, notwithstanding all opposition, Therefore I will keep thee in the hour of temptation that is coming upon the World.

3. Thirdly, Times of Temptation are evil times, and then to walk closely with God is acceptable: when Satan himself, or by his Instruments shall endeavor to beat souls from their standing, when he shall endeavor to turn them aside from God, then to hold fast, is taken exceeding well. It is the great design of the Devil by himself, or wicked men, thus to strike at God's people; what do you get by your close walking with God? Why, you get nothing but blows, nothing but stripes, and you are afflicted more than any; it was never worse with you, than since you began to follow hard after God; this is Satan's temptation, and now to hold fast is very acceptable: thus it was with Job, Job 2. 9. the Devil tempted him by his wife, says she to him, Dost thou still retain thine Integrity? Curse God and die. Dost thou still retain thy Integrity; what, wilt thou still walk with God? What hast thou got by walking with him? Thou seest how sad a condition thou art brought into, I would never follow that God any longer, I would curse him and die: it's a sore temptation, but Job still stands in his Integrity, Thou speakest like one of the foolish women, shall we receive good at the hand of the Lord, and shall not we receive evil? Thou speakest like one of the foolish women. But again,

4. Fourthly, Times of Affliction are times of trial, and then it's most acceptable for Saints to walk with God: Times of Affliction, when God seems to frown, and God stretches his hand out against his own people, for them yet to pursue after God in their spirits, this is very acceptable; to run to God when God seems to smite them, to run into his arms, when they see he is angry, to run under his shadow, when God seems to beat them sore; Why, this is very pleasing unto God: Thus it was with Job, though God stretched out his hand against him, yet he would not stretch out his hand to iniquity, but still he kept his integrity: he was in a sad condition, he was stripped naked of all he had in the world, as you read in Job 1. 21. and though God make him naked, he will walk with God; though God lay him naked, destitute of all comforts, he blesses the name of God when all was taken from him, and it's said, in all this Job sinned not, nor charged God foolishly. That's the fourth evil time, in which walking with God is acceptable. But I shall speak most to the first of these, because that concerns Enoch most, viz. Times of General corruption, times of declining, times of Apostasy, then to walk with God is exceeding acceptable.

Quest. Then what is it to walk with God in corrupt times, or when do the servants of God walk with him in corrupt times?

Answ. 1. I Answer, First of all, when they embrace the truth of the times, those truths that are most opposed, when they shall countenance those truths that are most discountenanced, when they will not shut out the light, the truth that God holds forth in their Generation, though the truth cost them dear, though they must buy it, though they suffer the loss of all for the truth, though it cost them the loss of their comforts, the loss of their good names, the loss of their Friends, the loss of Estate, yet it's the truth of Christ, and it's the truth of the times: When God shall thus cause his servants to embrace those scorned, persecuted, and opposed truths of the times in which they live (as every Age hath its special truth) wherein they are to walk with God in a corrupt Generation. But again▪

2. Secondly, To walk with God in a corrupt Generation, is to practice those ways of holiness, and righteousness, and to show forth those graces which are most contrary to the wickedness of the times; this is walking with God in a corrupt time: I say, to practice those ways of holiness and righteousness, and hold forth those graces, which are contrary to the wickedness of the times: and therefore it was Job's great commendation, that he was upright, that he was an upright man in a crooked Generation, he lived amongst a crooked people. And it was the great commendation of Noah that he practiced righteousness; it's said, he was a just man when the world was most unjust, it's said, The earth was filled with violence; there was no righteousness in Noah's days, and then Noah was a just man, he was a lover of justice and righteousness, he was a follower of it, a pattern at that time when there was nothing but unjustness and violence in those times: and thus to walk with God in a corrupt time is very pleasing and acceptable. But again,

3. Thirdly, To walk with God in a corrupt time, is then, when the Servants of God shall stir up others to cleave close to God at that time: this is part of their service at such time to endeavor to strengthen, and to hold up the hands and the hearts of one another, in declining and sinful times; you may remember the place before, Mal. 3. 16. Then they that feared the Lord spake often one to another; when the time was woefully corrupt, this was the service of that Generation, then they that feared the Lord spake often one to another, they spake words of encouragement, to strengthen one another, that they might not be dismayed, that they might go on with boldness, in professing the name and truth of Jesus Christ, notwithstanding all opposition.

4. Again, Fourthly, When the Saints shall Rest upon the promises of God, which seem to be far off, this is part of their walking with God in an evil time: I say, then to act faith in the promises, which seem to be far off; when you see nothing but corruption nothing but darkness, yet even then to look to the promises of life, and holiness, and grace, which shall be given out, and shall be fulfilled: when there is little or no knowledge of God, then to close with the promise, that the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the Sea; so the promise that God hath made to roll away the reproach of his servants, when they meet with nothing but reproaches from men, then to look upon the promise, that he will roll away their reproach, and cause their righteousness to break forth as the Sun at noon-day. That's another. Again,

5. Fifthly, When they shall Vindicate the Providences of God, though never so seemingly cross unto promises, and so clear all dispensations of God, both to the righteous and the wicked; and though he suffer the righteous to be trodden under-foot, yet they shall then vindicate God in his dispensations, and say, That the Lord is good and righteous, and just, and there's no iniquity in him; there's a time a coming when he shall clear up this truth, and they shall discern between the righteous and the wicked; there's a time a coming when it shall be said, Verily there is a reward for the righteous; there's a reward for the just of the earth: they shall vindicate the Providences of God in the face of the wicked, Behold the Lord cometh with ten thousands of his Saints to execute Judgment upon all; there's a day of reckoning coming when the wicked shall pay for all; this he resolves on; and this is a second part of that service, viz. what it is to walk with God in evil times, But,

3. Thirdly, It's exceeding pleasing to God that his Servants (thus) should walk and stick close to him in evil times. I shall look no further than that of the Prophet Malachi, Mal. 4. 16. which we before spake of, Then they that feared the Lord spake often one to another, and the Lord hearkened and heard, and then a Book of remembrance is set before them, for them that feared the Lord, and thought upon his Name; You may see the Lord is exceeding intent upon his servants that walk close with him in evil times, he doth eye them, and his ear is towards them, he listens to every word they speak, They that feared the Lord spake often one to another; and it's said there, The Lord hearkened and heard: the Lord hearkened: he did as if a man should listen to hear what his servants should say one unto another; they had other listners it's like in that evil time, the wicked hearkened and listned, that they might trap them; Ay, but God listens for another end, he hearkened, and heard, and a book of remembrance was written before them. There's another particular, which doth declare how acceptable it is to God that they walk before him in evil times, a book of remembrance is set before them while they speak, God writes and takes notice of what they say, A book of remembrance, he writes a book of Chronicles that it may not be forgotten what they spake of God, and one to another: An allusion to the custom of Princes, that they had their books, in which they writ what any man did for them, what good service they had done for the State; as Mordecai's good service was written in a Book, the King calls for the book in which the services of Mordecai were writ: so the Lord looks in his Book; a Book of remembrance was written. But again,

Further, A Book was written for them that feared the Lord, and thought upon his name; nothing that they did for God, and spake of God, and thought of God, there's nothing shall be lost: it was an evil time; and it may be they durst not speak all their thoughts; yet, all their good thoughts were taken notice of by the Lord, they were not let go, but set down in his book, even their thoughts were written down: God will write them that they shall not be forgotten, Oh, I remember the kindness of thy youth, Jer. 2. 2. and the love of thy espousal when thou followedst me in the Wilderness: to follow God alone in a Wilderness, when there's little or no company, God takes this as a special respect and kindness.

But why does God take notice of his people in special, who walk most close with him in evil times?

1. First of all, I Answer briefly, It discovers that the very Life of God and Christ is in that soul, God rejoices in the Image of his Life, which he beholds in his Children: it's an argument that the Fish hath life when it swims against the stream; the dead Fish, that's carried down the stream, it cannot make any resistance: It's an Argument the life of Christ is in that soul that is enabled to walk with God in evil times, to go against the stream of corruption and looseness.

2. Secondly, Again, As it is an Argument of Life, so it's an Argument of Strength; that soul hath got much strength from God, that walks thus with God in evil times: It requires much strength to swim against the stream, a great stream; there are times of great opposition; the servants of God meet with much opposition from Satan and the World, then, then to walk with God when all the world almost goes contrary, to bear up with God then, doth discover the strength of the soul which God is exceedingly delighted with.

3. Thirdly, Again, To walk with God in evil times, is an Argument of Sincerity: to do for God out of sincerity; Job was sincere, and still retained his Integrity, notwithstanding all the opposition that he met with; it doth discover that the soul hath a better principle; that soul that bears up with God in evil times▪ it hath a better principle than the men of the world; that he doth not walk by the Examples and Commands of men: it's not multitudes of men; this carries on false hearts, which oft fall in evil times; and therefore when God (notwithstanding general corruptions) carries on the hearts of God's people to stick close to him, it's an Argument of much sincerity, and sincerity is that which God is exceedingly delighted in.

And therefore I shall conclude with a word or two of Application.

1. Use. First of all, It lets us see how contrary the wicked are to the righteous: It's not a good time will make the wicked man good, as it's not wicked time that will make the righteous man evil; it's neither the time, place nor company that can change the nature of the wicked man: Saul retains his evil heart when he is in the midst of the Prophets; though he be amongst the Prophets, and Prophecy amongst them, his heart is as evil as ever; but on the contrary, David retains a sweet enjoyment and breathings after God, when his soul was amongst the Heathen in the Tents of Kedar; the wicked man will not learn righteousness in a Land of uprightness, let favor be shown to him: though he be in a Land of uprightness, he will not learn righteousness; on the contrary, a gracious heart will not learn perverseness, though he be in a Land of wickedness: For why? there's the seed of God in them, the seed of God shall preserve them; and therefore, Oh what cause have wicked men to see and bewail their condition! it's not time, place, nor company can make them better: in a Land of uprightness they'll be evil. Oh that the Lord would cause them to bewail their sinful natures, and so come unto Jesus Christ, that so he may make their crooked natures straight. And let the Saints be thankful unto God, for that principle of God that is in them, Oh what cause have you to rejoice in it, and to be thankful for it, that God hath put such a seed of himself into you! that he hath made you partakers of his own divine nature, which all the corruption that is in the world cannot alter! All the salt water that is in the Sea canit make the live Fish salt, still it retains its freshness; and all the wickedness that is in wicked men, canit make the gracious heart wicked. I say, improve this that is of God in you, take heed that you be not carried down with the stream of corrupt times; but know the worse that the times are, so much the better should you (that are the people of God) be; you are set up as Lights in the night, you are as the stars in the Firmament (so shall the righteous shine one day) and you (as the stars) should •ine brightest in the darkest night; God hath set you up for this very end, that so you may be as witnesses in the world, that you may bear up his name in the world, that you may witness against the general corruption of the times, in which you live: God doth therefore set you up as Pillars of Brass, on which he hath set his name, and his sons name, and you are to bear it in the world; he hath set you to bear up his name, and he hath set you to bear up the earth, if it were not for the few that did walk with God in corrupt times, the earth would fall; remember then that God hath set you up for this very end; therefore do not suffer the name of God to fall through your loose walking with God, and through your giving way to the evil of the times; it's special service God hath for you to do, you are set here for this very end to bear up his name, it's the work, the service in your Generation; and therefore know that God calls for it at your hands, Oh know, he expects that you should embrace the truth of the times that are most opposed, persecuted and cast out, that you should practice the contrary graces unto the wickedness of the times, that you should strengthen and encourage one another in the way and work of the Lord, that you should rest upon the Promises, that seem to bear up and clear the Providences of God, against the blasphemies of the wicked, this God expects from you in evil times: and know, that if you do not walk closely with God it goes to his very heart, I say (you that are his people) it grieves the very heart of God when you go astray from him; says Christ of the twelve Disciples in Joh. 6. 67. Will ye also go away from me? It's said, that there were many at that time that left Christ; well, he turns unto his Disciples, and says to them, Will ye also go away from me? But Peter said, To whom should we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life; What, will you? if you should go away, that would be a greater grief than all the rest; you that have walked with me so long, what, will you turn aside? It was the great commendation of Judah that she was faithful with God, and he bids her so continue; Oh let not Judah turn aside, in Hos. 4. 15. Though Israel play the Harlot, yet let not Judah offend: Though they play the Harlot, yet you that are my people, that have so long walked with me, and that have kept in my truth, Oh, have you a care, that you walk not with the multitude to do evil, and that you be not extravagant; it goes to the heart of God your Father, if you should walk loose and keep ill orders, this goes to the heart of God, it's more than if twenty strangers should do it, if you in the least should turn aside; this is a wound from a Child, and the wound of such goes to the heart of the Father: But on the contrary, know that the Lord is exceedingly delighted with your close walking with him; you heard before in Mal. 3. 16. how God is delighted with the close walking of the Saints, it's kindness that God will never forget, he will remember it to the last; in Luk. 22. 28. (to name no more) says Christ, You are they that have continued with me in my temptations, Behold, I appoint unto you a Kingdom: this was kindly taken: they did not only follow Christ, but they continued with him when under temptation, and when he was persecuted, you that continued with me in my temptation and tribulation, I appoint to you a Kingdom. The Lord says of you, that are followers of him in evil times, that bear up against the stream, These are they that have continued with me faithful, and I will not forget them, thou hast kept to me in the hour of my patience, and I will keep thee in the hour of temptation that is coming upon the World.

SERMON IV.

GEN. 5. 24. And Enoch walked with God, and he was not, for God took him.

I Have already dispatched three Points, which were needful to be considered, before we come to the main; the last time, we considered what an evil time it was that Enoch lived in, the earth being so corrupt, as it appears (by that Prophecy of Jude) that the time of Enoch was an evil time: but notwithstanding the corruption of the time, Enoch walked with God. The Lord takes it exceeding kindly when his people walk close with him in evil times. But I shall further Consider what lies in the Text, Enoch walked with God. Here is nothing taken notice of but his walking with God; he was an excellent Prophet, as the Apostle Jude doth witness, Enoch the seventh from Adam Prophesied, he was one that did a great deal for God, he preached faithfully unto the men of his Generation: but there's nothing said of him but this, He walked with God; he lived so long and he walked with God.

Observation. Observe then, That it's the highest excellency of a Creature to walk with God: For this is the greatest commendation that can be given of a man or woman, that they are such as walk with God in their Generation. Here I shall show you, First, What it is to walk with God. And Secondly, That this is the excellency of any man or woman. And Thirdly, Wherein this excellency lies, which will make way for the Application.

Our first work is to Consider, What it is to walk with God; the way of a Christians walking with God, is either Internal or External; Internal is the way of his spirit, the way of his heart, which is hid from the world: External is the way of his Conversation. We shall now consider the former only.

What is this Internal way, the way of the spirit, the way of the heart in walking with God?

First of all, Faith is the beginning of this way, I say, Faith in God and Christ, and the Promises is the beginning of this way, for the Apostle says, We walk by Faith, 2 Cor. 5. 7. And the Apostle to the Hebrews tells us expressly, That Enoch walked with God by Faith, Heb. 11. 5, 6. it's said, By Faith Enoch was translated, and was not, yet before he was translated he pleased God: where he holds forth to us, that Enoch lived and died in faith, and this was his first step, and this is the beginning of a Christians way in walking with God, he begins in Faith: 'Tis not possible that two should walk together unless they be agreed, so says the Prophet Amos, Amos 3. 3. Can two walk together except they be agreed? It's not possible till Faith close with Christ, there's no Agreement: it's faith that makes our reconciliation, and makes over this agreement to the soul, and therefore no walking with God before this agreement; it's not possible for an Unbeliever to walk with God, Faith is the beginning of this way, for the soul is filled with slavish fear, and it dares not come to God, it dares not walk with him, it dares not come nigh him, till such time as faith doth discover the grace, love and bowels of compassion that are in the heart of God; it runs away from God, the creature runs from God as Adam did, God walked in the Garden, and he called for Adam to walk with him, but he durst not, the guilt of his transgression was upon him, and he hid himself among the Bushes in the Garden; Poor creatures! they run not only into the bushes of the Garden, but into the bushes of the Wilderness, they would hide themselves in the Thickets of their own righteousness, in Briars and Thorns, rather than come in and submit to God again: There's not only pride of heart, but there's enmity, enmity against God, The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God; he wishes there were no God, that he might still be without control, and give no account of his actions, there's enmity in the heart, and this slavish fear and enmity remains till such time as God discovers it, and roots it out by faith, and faith discovers the tender bowels, love, and compassions that are in God towards it through Jesus Christ, so that as the soul goes on in believing, so it goes on in walking with God: A Christians Exercise of faith is the acting of faith, and exercising of faith every day on the promises, is a great part of his daily walking with God, for he that walks with God acts faith, in all conditions he runs to the Promise; when the guilt of sin revives, he runs to the Fountain set open for Judah and Jerusalem to wash in, and he rous upon the Promise, Lord, thou hast promised to blot out my transgressions like a thick Cloud; and so when he wants holiness, when corruption prevails he runs to the promise, Lord, thou hast said, sin shall not have Dominion over me; thou hast said, If Christ be in you, the body is dead because of sin, dead to sin; and so in time of temptation he runs to the Promise, Lord thou hast said that such of thy servants as walk in darkness, and see no light, should trust in the name of the Lord, and stay upon their God; and thou hast said, No temptation shall be a burden beyond their strength: And so in all straits and afflictions, it runs to the Promise, Lord thou hast said, That all things shall work together for good to them who love and fear thee. In a word, This is to walk with God, when the soul shall rest upon the Promise for all supplies both for this life, and that which is to come; when he shall trust the Lord for provision in the way, and trust him for an Inheritance in the end of the way, he shall say, Lord, thou hast given me the Word of thy grace, and I will venture my soul upon it, though it be for eternity I will venture upon thy Word, if I perish I perish; if God can deceive me, I am willing to be deceived. Thus doth faith put the soul into a capacity and posture of walking with God, it puts the soul in a posture of walking hand in hand with God, as a man with his friend, it puts the soul into the best posture of walking with God, and that is, into a posture of leaning and staying upon him as it walks with him. It's said that the Spouse, as she came out of the Wilderness, She came leaning upon her Beloved; The Lord knows, his poor servants are not able to walk with him in the Wilderness, unless they lean upon him, and they canit set one step forward unless they lean upon him, and therefore he hath given them himself, his son, and his sons name, his Word, to stay and lean upon in the Wilderness; and this is the beginning of all their walking with God. That's the first particular▪ Again,

2. Secondly, To walk with God is to Bow the spirit unto God; this is another part of the Internal walking with God; I say, when the spirit bows unto God, when the powers of the soul are over-powered by the Spirit of Christ to submit unto him, for the very powers of the soul are resigned up to Christ; when the soul gives him the chief place in the heart, and desires that God may be set up in the very excellencies of the spirit; it canit be content unless God have that strong hold, unless he gain the inward-most Tower and Castle, the very heart and spirit which he desires may bow to God; when it is not content to give him the service of the outward man, but desires to serve him in spirit also, and therefore does cry out of those inward lusts that defile the soul, and do hinder it from acting towards God: though others, though standers by look upon such a soul, and see that God hath done a great deal for it, yet he canit be satisfied so long as there are any risings in the inward man, any rebellious lusts in the heart that do rise up against God, it desires that the Word of the Lord may bring down every Towery imagination, and that it might lead every thought into Captivity unto Jesus Christ: when the soul makes it his work, thus to bow the spirit, the inward man unto Christ, to serve him in spirit, to give him the choice, the excellency of the affections, and the highest place in the soul, and is never quiet till every base lust be cast out of that inward Castle and Tower; this is another part of that Internal walking with God.

3. Thirdly, when the soul is carried out with strong desires after the enjoyment of the presence of God; when the soul delights in the presence of God, and is carried out with strong desires after further and further enjoyment of God, this is a part of the souls walking with him; when it can't take up in anything short of God; Creatures and Ordinances can't satisfy, if it do not meet with God in them, and therefore it desires to use all creatures for that end that he may see God in them, and glorify God for them, and be led unto God by them, that still he may come nearer unto God, whom to enjoy is his happiness; and so for Ordinances, he uses them all for that end that he may get nigher God, and enjoy more of the presence of God, and therefore he will wait upon the dispensation of the Word, because God hath promised to be there, and therefore he will walk with the Saints of God, because Christ hath promised to walk in the midst of the golden Candlesticks, for there he expects to meet him, and desires to enjoy much of God and Christ; I say, when the soul thus enjoys much of God, it's a great part of its walking with him; and therefore when God stands at a distance and hides his face, it goes up and down lamenting; Oh, this is the greatest perplexity in the world, for God to turn away and hide his face, and to lead him into a poor dark condition, Oh, Lord turn again, says he, let me see thy face; though he chide him, better than not to see his face or hear his voice at all; and therefore its desires are vehement when God seems to exempt himself. Therefore David breaths after God, in Psal. 42. 1, 2. As the Hart panteth after the water brooks, so panteth my soul after thee O God. My soul thirsteth for God, for the living God, when shall I come and appear before God? As the Hart breaths after the water brooks; Oh, it is a mighty desire that the poor, chased, hunted, bleeding Hart has after the water brooks, and such is David's desire after God, Oh when shall I come and appear before God? It's also expressed in Isa. 26. 9. My soul sought after God in the night season (says the Church there) with my spirit within me will I seek thee early; it's a very Emphatical expression, with my spirit within me will I seek thee early. Well, this is another part, a third step of the souls walking with God.

4. Fourthly, Again, When the soul is filled with mighty desires of being made like unto God; his desires are continually extended this way, in being made like unto God; it looks upon it as his glory, as his happiness: It's the greatest part of the glory of heaven to be made like unto God, and therefore the Apostle cries out so much of the old man, and of the body of sin and death, and desires so much to be satisfied and filled with the likeness of God; he looks upon Christ for this end, and beholds the glory of God in Christ, and he looks wistly, and would always be looking upon Christ, that so he might be changed from glory to glory, even by the Spirit of the Lord. His desires are mightily carried out, in being made like unto Christ, and he looks upon the promises for this end, that they may purge, sanctify and cleanse from all pollution both of flesh and spirit; the spirit of God shining in them and through them, it might convey more of the divine nature to them: That's another part of his walking with God. Again,

5. Fifthly, When the soul is desirous to embrace all the motions of the Spirit of Christ: I say, it's desirous to embrace all the motions of the Spirit of Christ, and to walk up to them, and to improve them. Oh that sentence is writ upon the soul, He that hath an ear to hear, let him hear what the Spirit speaks; and therefore the soul is attentive, and is intent upon God for this very end, That he may know the mind of God, and not lose its opportunity, that it may hear when the Spirit calls, and says, Come away: There's a great deal in this; this is that which conduces unto a Christians peace exceeding much: the knowing and improving such opportunities of Christ's speaking in his heart, conduces to his peace and growth, and to his usefulness and serviceableness in those seasons and opportunities; when the Spirit of Christ (as I may say with holy reverence) whispers in the soul, when the Spirit of Christ says, Here's an opportunity of doing good to the soul, or to the body of a poor creature; Oh, how is then the heart drawn out amain to lay out himself for God, his strength for God, and to lay forth his Estate for God? And he says as Christ said, Loe I come: Here's an opportunity for service; why, then, Loe I come to do thy Will, O God; the embracing, I say, and cherishing those motions of the Spirit of God, which he is pleased to hint in the souls of his people, is another part of their walking with him. Again,

6. Sixthly, In the next place, That soul walks with God when it sets itself in the eye of God; when it eyes God continually, and sets itself in the eye of God, in the presence of God, this is a main part of his walking with God; when a man shall do all that he doth as in the presence of God, every action, that though it concerns man and his outward calling, yet he desires to do all as in the presence of God: And therefore he doth not only look to a duty, but he looks to the manner of the performance of every duty, because the holy, pure and piercing eye of God is upon him; he looks to the manner, how it's carried on and forth, what spirit is in it, because he knows that the eye of God is piercing, it's a flame of fire, and he doth all as in the presence of God, and unto God, in his serving of man, he doth it as unto the Lord: he hath a higher end than the men in the world have, who know no other end than to gain riches and honor, or the like; but there's a further and higher end, that he may lift up the name of God, and serve God in serving of man, that he may serve his Generation according to the Will of God; I say, when the soul is thus always under the eye of God, and therefore is faithful whether man see or no, though there is no eye to witness, no eye to overlook, yet it knows that it's in the presence of God, for though he do not so see the transgression of his people as to cast them off, yet he may see that which may be matter of sore displeasure and grief; and therefore this is that which is as a bridle and a bit over all his ways, that it is in the presence of God. Again,

7. Seventhly, In the next place, The soul walks with God when he is desirous to embrace every truth that God shall impart; when it opens to truth; this is another part of the souls internal walking with God: when it opens to truth, to every truth which the embracing and professing of may cost him dear, being opposed in the world; it matters not, if you be persuaded it's the truth of Christ it's enough, it trusts God for the rest; oh it's greedy after truth; that soul that walks with God, oh how fearful is it, lest it should not embrace truth? Oh how fearful is it lest it should be left behind when God advances his truth in the world; and when truth is advanced, Oh, how fearful is it to be left behind? Though it would not set a step, until God goes before, and it would not hear the voice of a stranger, yet it would not be shut up from the voice of Christ, therefore it's fear is to be left behind, and desires that God would take it along: when he discovers truths unto a Saint, even the truth of the age, and the truth of the Generation in which he lives; that's another part of the souls walking with God. Again,

8. In the Eighth place, The Soul walks with God when it can justify the Word of God; justify the Word of God, though the Word condemn him in his practices, yet he will justify the Word of God; though the Word be high, holy, and spiritual, and he sees he is a poor creature and canit come up to it, yet he wonit despise nor hate the Word, but loves, justifies and blesses God for it; so the Apostle in Rom. 7. 12. Wherefore the Law is holy, says he, and the Commandment is holy, just and good. Again in the 13 Verse, Was then that which was good made death to me? God forbid. But sin that it might appear sin, working death in me by that which is good: that sin by the Commandment might become exceeding sinful. And again in the 16 Verse, If then I do that which I would not, I consent unto the Law that it is good. Though I do the things that I would not, yet, says he, I love the Law and delight in it in the inward man; this is a main part of the spirits and souls walking with God, when it can thus justify and clear the Word; and though the Word of the Lord cross him, yet it gets to the Word of the Lord, and though he canit come up to it, yet it blesses the Word, that's holy and good, though I be carnal, though I be sold under sin, it justifies the Word.

9. Again, In the Ninth place, He will Justify God; that's another part of his walking, he will justify God, and clear God in all his proceedings, though God go against his comforts, and smite them as he did Job, yet still he will walk and go along with God, and clear and justify God: In all this Job sinned not, nor charged God foolishly, the Lord gives, and the Lord takes, and blessed be his name. Still he will justify God though he canit see a reason of God's proceedings, yet still he will justify God; though he do him wrong, yet God is holy, righteous, and merciful; and this is another part of the souls internal walking with God. Again,

10. In the Tenth and last place, to name no more, The soul then walks with God, When it is taken up with higher things than the things of this World. It desires to look up to higher things than the things of the world, and greater things than the world is able to present, and therefore would not have the world for its portion at no rate, he canit take up there, no, he hath higher things to fix his heart upon: the worldlings spend their time and meditations upon their Silver and Gold, upon their Houses and Land, but a gracious heart will not spend many of his thoughts upon these, it will not spend the best of his thoughts upon these, but says to his soul as Solomon's Mother said to him, Prov. 31. 2. Oh my son give not thy strength to women, &c. and so says he, Oh my soul give not thy strength to the things of this world, give not the strength of thy heart and affections, to these poor low things, thou hast better things to spend thy strength upon, there's God and Christ, there's a Kingdom, there's the Pearl of great price, there's an Inheritance, there's an Eternity, there's an everlasting enjoyment of God, these things art thou to be taken up with; these things doth he desire to spend the best of his strength and thoughts upon. You see my Brethren in part, what it is to walk with God, this is the internal way, the way of the spirit, the way of the heart in walking with God; this the Lord will have laid before you as your duty, and although you see you come infinitely short of it (as all Christians may see how they come short of it) yet the Lord will have this truth discovered, and this way laid before us, though we come infinitely short, and turn aside in our walkings with God, yet be justifying of him, and vindicating of his Word, and say, Blessed be thy name and the word of thy grace which thou hast made known unto us, and see that ye walk humbly wherein you come short, and get out of yourselves more unto Christ, that he may give you strength to walk with him. So much for this time.

SERMON V.

GEN. 5. 24. And Enoch walked with God, and he was not, for God took him.

I Have handled divers Propositions, we are now come to the main, It's the greatest commendation that can be given to a man or woman, that they are such as walk with God in their Generation: it is the excellency of the creature upon earth to walk with God. I shall come to the Second Part,

And that is, the Christians External walking with God. To show what is this external walking with God; It is either in its general or particular calling. Or he walks with God,

First, In those things that do more nearly concern God himself. And Secondly, He walks with God in the ways of his Calling and Employment in the World. And Thirdly, He walks with God in the several Relations that God hath placed him in. To speak to the first of these: And a Christian then walks with God,

1. First of all, When he walks by rule; this is the first step of his acceptable walking with God, I say, when he walks by rule: he knows that his heart is ready to go aside, to decline from truth and righteousness, and therefore he continually looks back for a rule to walk by, lest he turn aside; he knows that he is a creature, and his dependence is on God, and that the creature must walk by rule that the Creator gives forth, he knows that whatsoever is without rule, is an abomination unto the Lord, though it may seem never so good, never so specious to the eye, yet if there be not a rule for it, it's an abomination unto the Lord, and God says, Who hath required this at your hand, as in Hos. 8. 14. For Israel hath forgotten his maker, and built Temples, and Judah hath multiplied fenced Cities, but I will send a Fire upon his Cities, and it shall devour the places thereof: One would have thought this had been no forgetting of God, to build Temples unto God, and yet see how the spirit of God doth Interpret it, Israel hath built Temples, and therefore hath forgotten his maker; they did it in remembrance of God, but God bid him not do it, and therefore he had no rule, no command from God; nay, God commands that there should be but one Temple, and for them to multiply Temples for their own devotion, this was besides God's rule, and therefore God did not approve of it. Now he that walks with God walks by rule, and he that walks by rule hath this only rule as that which is revealed in his Word, as the Sun when it shines upon the Dial, it directs a rule for you to walk by. There are corrupt rules; in times past ye walked according to the common course of the world; they walked by rule, but it was a wicked rule, not of God's making; they walked according to the common course of the world; some men walk by the Example of others, they make that their rule, the example of the multitude, great men, and such as are counted wise, learned, judicious and prudent men, and the like, but this is a walking according to the course of the world; some make their own wills and lusts their rule, whatsoever seems good in their own eyes, a rule to walk by: but he that walks with God, walks by no other rule than the rule of the Word, and therefore he stands in the way and enquires: he enquires for the way, as God commanded the Prophet Jeremiah, Jer. 6. 16. saying, Stand ye in the ways and see, and ask for the old Paths, where is the good way, and walk therein, and ye shall find rest for your souls: he bids them stand in the way, and enquire for the good old way, and he inquired at the mouth of God. So did David: in all his Enterprises he takes God along with him, in 2 Sam. 1. 1. Shall I go up and fight against this people? Shall I go up? he enquires of the Lord, his recourse is to God continually; Shall I go up or not? Lord shall I take such a course? Shall I take upon me such an Employment? Shall I enter into such a relation? What is the mind of God? shall I go? or shall I not go up? And when the Will of God is cleared up to him, he rests satisfied, he cares for no more; he knows it's good to take God along with him, he would not go without God, nor take anything in hand without God, and therefore he continually looks up to him for grace: That's the first part, or first step, he walks by rule. Again,

2. Secondly, No opposition, no difficulty in his way, no sad event can turn him aside from doing his duty; this is another part of the Character of him that walks with God; I say, when his duty is revealed to him, and made known by the Word, there's no difficulty, no discouragement can turn him aside, or cause him to desist from that which is his duty: though he meet with discouragements from within and from without, even his own bowels rise up against him, the corruptions that are within him do oppose the work of the Lord in the performance of his duty; his unbelieving heart tells him, he had as good desist and give over, he shall never prevail nor do good on it, nor be a proficient in the way of God; notwithstanding his discouragements, he looks upon the strength of Christ and goes on. Sometimes the Devil sets upon him, temptation doth back corruption, and he meets with many a storm to blow him back again from following after God: but he looks to the promise and goes on, The God of Peace shall tread down Satan shortly; he looks to Jesus who was tempted, and is able to succor those that are tempted, and therefore still he goes on. Sometimes he meets with discouragements from the world, there are reproaches cast in the way, slanders cast in the way, Persecutions many times lie in the way; Ay, but still he goes on, and remembers that the Lord Jesus himself went through this way, and remembers that all that will live godly in Christ Jesus, must walk through this way, believes that there is a time when God will roll away all the reproaches of his servants, and therefore notwithstanding all opposition, goes on, not looking to the event; such a duty may cost him his liberty and life, but he looks whether it be his duty, and considers not the event, he will trust God for it: So did the three Children in Dan. 3. when the King threatens to cast them into the Fiery Furnace, the 15, 16, 17 Verses, say they, Oh King we are not careful to answer thee in this matter, our God whom we serve is able to deliver us; however we will not worship thine Image: he looks, I say, to his duty, that walks with God, and trusts him for the event; nay, though friends be against him, which is very sad, sometimes by their persuasions, sometimes by their frowns and threatenings, it's a great temptation; Ay, but still he goes on: So did Paul in Acts 21. 13. you shall see there when they would have dissuaded him from his duty, because of danger that was in his way; Why, (says he there) why, what do you mean to weep, and to break my heart? I am ready not only to be bound, but also to die at Jerusalem, for the name of the Lord Jesus: What do you mean, to weep and break my heart? there's no sad event can discourage me from that which is revealed to me to be my duty; nay, God himself when he seems to break him, and to turn against him, to smite him in his body and estate and Children, though the hand of the Lord seems to be gone out against him, yet he will not desist from walking with God. Psal. 44. 17. see what they say there, All this is come upon us, yet have not we forsaken thee, nor dealt falsely in thy Covenant; and therefore he follows God in the Wilderness, when he is left destitute of all creature comforts; so did Israel in Jer. 2. 2. I remember the kindness of thy youth, when thou didst follow me in the Wilderness, in a Land that was not sown; David was still carried after God, though he was in a Land where no water is, My soul breaths after thee, O Lord, in a dry and thirsty Land where no water is; when God and the creature stand in competition, he falls on God's side, and when he and the creature must part, he chooses to follow God, though he follows him naked, though naked of all outward comforts, yea, and God shall not have the less of him though he takes away all his comforts: he shall not have the less love, nor the less service, nor the less praise, though God strips him naked of all, this shall be no discouragement; and thus it was with Job, Job 1. the latter end, when all was taken from him he blesses the name of the Lord, The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away, and blessed be the name of the Lord; in all this Job sinned not. This is another part of his walking with God, there is no opposition, no discouragement that he meets withal, can turn him back to decline his duty. Again,

3. Thirdly, He that walks with God labors to do some singular thing for God, his desire is to hold forth much of him, much of God in his conversation, to do some singular thing for God: he knows that he hath set him in the world for this end, To bear up the name and honor of God in the world; that God hath poured his Spirit upon him for this end, that so in the light of God he might shine, and shine gloriously in a dark world, and therefore he desires to do something singular for God, because he hath done singular things for him; as thus, his desires, his endeavors are to promote the cause of God in the world, to help forward the service of his Generation, to be instrumental to the Lord (if the Lord please to employ him) for the helping forward of the great work in his Generation, wherein God hath cast him; he is willing also to lay down himself and his comforts, at the footstool of God, this is a singular thing, I say, to give up all to God whatsoever he hath; he is willing that the Lord should take him, his comforts, his gifts, his riches, and whatsoever he hath, and improve it for his own honor, that if the Lord should say it's mine, if God should call for it, if it shall be said the Lord has need of it, he resigns it, he is presently willing to let it go, though it be a comfort never so dear to him, he counts it an honor if God will take him and his, and whatsoever he is and hath, that God may improve him and his, for his honor; he desires to lie low before him, even in the dust. Yea, to follow Gospel Precepts is another thing which is required, as to love enemies, this also he desires to do; these are singular things, to pray for them that persecute, to requite evil with good, to forgive wrongs and injuries, though thy brother offend seventy times seven in a day, yet if he comes and says, it repents me that I have done thee wrong; these are Gospel Precepts that are hard to flesh and blood, but he that walks with God, desires to follow him even in this command also; That's the third part of this character of him that walks with God.

4. Fourthly, He desires to yield obedience unto every Commandment, I say, he desires to yield obedience to every Commandment of the Lord, there's no jot, no tittle of the Word of the Lord but is precious to him, and therefore he hath no reservation to himself: he doth not say, I will do any other but this, I will obey any Commandment but such a Precept; I canit walk in such a way with God, though it be cleared up to be a duty: but he that walks with God, yields Universal obedience, he will not indent with God, no reservation to himself, no exemption from any Word or Law of God, he says not as Nahaman, God be merciful to me in this; no, he desires to yield universal obedience, though he sees he comes short of his desires, and his obedience is scant, so that he dares not rely upon his obedience, he dares not trust to his obedience, to be justified by it, yet it is his desire to come off in all things, and he hath no reservation to himself, to say, if I embrace such a truth, and walk in such a way with God, it wonit stand with my credit, I shall lose my friends, my name, my esteem in the world, my custom or trade, and the like; I say, he that walks with God hath no such reservation; That's a fourth. Again,

5. Fifthly, He that walk with God will hold fast his profession, though all the world forsake him, though he be left alone, or though there be a very few that walk with him: so did Elijah, Lord, they have killed thy Prophets, said he, and I am left alone, and they seek my life, and yet Elijah did not forsake the truth, nor let go his profession, for he knows that there's a Promise that God will be with him; God hath promised to be with him, and the presence of God is instead of all creatures, and he shall have no cause to complain that he is alone so long as the Lord is with him: he also considers that there's a time when multitudes shall be given in to Christ, and therefore he is not discouraged, though there be but few for the present; he looks to the promise, and there he sees much cheerfulness, there is a promise that they shall flow as Doves to the windows; it's said that a little one shall become a thousand, and a small one shall become a great Nation; the Lord hath said there shall be thousands where there is but one, and a little flock shall become a multitude: the Lord hath spoken it, and he will hasten it in his time; and therefore though for the present he sees but few that walk with him whilst he walks with God, yet he is not discouraged. But again in the

6. Sixth place, He that walks with God is gracious and conscientious in his duty in private as well as public; this is another part of his character, I say, he is kept in his duty in private as well as in public; he dare not be remiss, though no eye see him, though there's none in the world to take notice of it, he knows he is in the eye of the Lord, and what he doth is unto the Lord, and therefore he doth it even with all his might. There are some in the world that make a fair show before men, and in the mean time they care not what they are in secret: zealous before the world, Jehulike, Come and see my zeal, but cold and remiss in secret: and so will give fair words before men, good words when there are witnesses, but when they are in secret and in private, in their Families, and the like, they care not what rage they go in, and how they play the Tyrants. But now he that walks with God is as careful of his duty in private as in public: If it be his duty to give Alms, he will give as much where there is no witness to take notice, as if there were a thousand eyes before him, as before God and his own soul; he dare not be remiss there, if remissness steal in upon him, it is his burden, and he is never satisfied till his soul be brought into such a frame, to be as conscientious of that duty which he owes to God in secret and private, as of those duties which the world takes notice of.

7. But again, Seventhly, He that walks with God is careful to use all means by which he may get nigher God, and to shun all occasions of sin which set the soul at a distance from God; I say, it desires to use all means that are of God's appointment for getting nigher unto God; he will wait upon God in every Ordinance, and Administration of the Word, and seals, in reading and prayer, in communion and fellowship, he willingly neglects no duty, they are the Institutions of Jesus Christ, he looks upon them all as so many Conduit Pipes by which the Lord conveys himself unto his people: they are golden pipes through which the Lord pours abundance of golden oil into the souls of those that wait for him; he looks upon the Promise that is annexed to them, that God has promised to be there and to make them blessings to his people, he therefore will wait upon God in them, though it may be for the present he do not find those In-comes of grace and strength which his soul longs after, though it may be he canit (sometimes) relish the Ordinance and taste sweetness in it, yet still he looks upon it as the Institution of Jesus Christ, and dares not turn his back on it; he will rather accuse himself, his own deadness, and unbelieving heart, and straitness, he will not accuse Christ and the Ordinance of emptiness, for he knows Christ hath blessed it, and his people have found sweetness in it, it's the way in which Christ hath promised to walk, and therefore he will go and lie in the way, he will go and climb upon the Sycamore Tree, as Zacchaeus did, he will climb up on every ordinance, if at any time he may see the face of God, if he may see Christ passing by, for his satisfaction he uses all means and Ordinances that are of Christ's Institution, which may be helps to him in his way to Christ, and shuns all occasions to sin, all provocations unto lust, he dare not meddle with sin, no not with the least sin; he knows that sin is a most woeful deceiver, if he have but the least countenance he soon winds himself into the soul, and it's hard to wind him out when he hath got himself in: he knows that there's a woeful corrupt heart within, and that its natural disposition is like to dry Tinder, and is ready to receive every spark of temptation that the Devil is like to strike in, and if a spark falls in, how soon it arises to a flame, and how hard it is to quench it; and therefore how doth he rise against sin, and the occasions of sin! he is afraid of those things which other men count niceties and punctilio's, and the like, or they may go under the color of lawfulness; Ay, but he is fearful of it, he knows that the least sin cost blood, the blood of the Son of God, and the guilt of the least transgression canit be washed away without the blood of the Son of God, it will cost blood to wash away the least sin as well as the greatest, and therefore he dare not be bold to meddle with the least sin, but he shuns the very occasions and provocations unto sin: That's the seventh.

8. Eighthly, He approves of, and desires to walk in the strictest way: This is another part of his Character; he that walks with God approves of and desires to walk in the strictest way; he knows it's a great journey, and he had need take the straightest line, he is willing to engage himself in the strictest way; if any way hold forth more of God and Christ, if any way be more opposite to flesh and blood, if any way be a further engagement to him to keep close to God, and bind up his heart that it may not so start aside, he is willing to walk with God even in that way, there he knows that that's the rule, Be ye perfect as your heavenly Father is perfect; perfection is in his eye, and therefore he knows he can never be too strict, too holy, walk too close with God, get too nigh God, nor do too much for God: this he lays down as a principle. Some measure of holiness, and of strictness many of the world will approve of, but to be so strict is to be too imprudent, in their account; but I say, he that walks with God, knows that his engagements are such as he can never do too much for God, when he hath done his utmost, if he could do ten thousand times more, he might say he is an unprofitable servant: That's the Eighth. But again,

9. Ninthly, He that walks with God will use no unlawful means to deliver himself: this is another part of his Character; he uses no unlawful means to free himself, though his liberty be at stake, though his life be at stake, he will not deliver himself by any unlawful course: thus it was with Paul, Paul might have delivered himself if he would have taken an unlawful course: in Acts 24. it's said there, that Festus did expect to have received money from him, in the latter end of the Chapter, and if he would have given a Bribe, he might have been delivered; but he would not use such unlawful means for his deliverance, to open a door for such an escape, he would not give a Bribe to the corrupt Judge, I say, he would rather wait upon God for the opening a door that he may escape: in every estate and low condition he remembers, he that believes makes not too much hast, he remembers it's good not to make too much hast, he won't break Prison till God set him free, till God shall open a door for his escape, out of any afflicted or tempted condition that he is brought into: That's the Ninth.

10. In the tenth and last place, It is his desire to gain time, to redeem time from the world, and from his employments in the world, that he may converse more with God, and with his own heart: I say, it is his great desire, his care to redeem time from the world, that he may converse with God, and converse with his own heart, and therefore he is a good husband with time, he husbands his time well, that the great things of God may not be shut out; he knows that they are of great concernment, the things of God, and the things of the world to come are of greatest concernment, he is hastening to Eternity, here's no stay here, here he is upon the bridge and going over to another world, to Eternity, and therefore it concerns him above all to look after the things of that Eternity; he is always best when he is with God, he hath found sweetness with God, he knows what it is to enjoy communion with God, and because he hath been with Christ upon the Mount, therefore he desires to go often thither, sets the world apart, that so he may converse with God, that he may behold the face of Jesus Christ: he knows how deceitful his own heart is, that he had need search continually, make a diligent search; Oh, there's a depth of iniquity, a depth of deceit that can hardly be found out: Oh, it will harbor some lust or other, if diligent search be not made, it's to comply with an enemy, and to harbor such an enemy that will seek the very destruction of the soul: I say, these things he hath known in part through grace of the great concernments and things of the world to come, and the sweetness, preciousness of that communion which the soul hath with Jesus Christ, and therefore it is his daily care to husband his time as well as he may, that he may gain time from the world, and from the secular employments thereof; and this is the last Character that I shall name of him that walks with God: And so much shall serve for this time.

SERMON VI.

GEN. 5. 24. And Enoch walked with God, and he was not, for God took him.

I Have given you part of the Character of one that walks with God. Now I shall show you what he is in his calling, in his ordinary employment that God hath set him in, for he walks with God in his calling, as well as in those duties that do more immediately concern God.

1. And first of all, He looks upon his Calling that God hath set him in as an Ordinance of God: I say, he looks upon it as an Ordinance of God, and therefore he submits unto it, and endeavors to be faithful in it: He knows it's laid upon all men, in Gen. 3. 19. In the sweat of thy brows thou shalt eat thy bread; there are some bad drones that fortify themselves against this Scripture, and say, this is only the Curse, In the sweat of thy brows thou shalt eat thy bread: but now the Curse is taken away by Christ for his people, and therefore they ought to work no longer; as the Lilies in the Field, they neither sow nor reap, but yet are clothed: but now he that walks with God looks upon that Scripture not only as a Curse, but as a Commandment, In the sweat of thy brows thou shalt eat thy bread; it's the Commandment of God, and the Commandment holds though the Curse be taken away: Man was enjoined to labor in the state of Innocency, when there was no Curse; God made him, and it's said, he put him into the Garden to dress it: yea the very Angels, Heb. 1. 14. Are they not all ministering spirits sent forth for the good of his Saints? They all work, they have all their employment, there's not one Angel in Heaven that is idle; God himself is a pure Actor, he is an active Spirit, he is always working, so says our Savior, My Father worketh hitherto, and I work: though he ceased from the works of Creation, yet God hath been working ever since, he worketh hitherto every day, and I work: So that he that walks with God looks upon his Calling as an Ordinance of God, and sees the wisdom and goodness of God in it, in appointing such a way for man, there's abundance of wisdom in it; by this means wicked men are kept from being desperately wicked; if there were no work, no employment for them, there would be a studying of wickedness, a plotting and contriving of wickedness, sin would become out of measure sinful, it would break from all banks and bounds, the whole earth would commit violence; nay, it's good for God's own people, whilst they are in the world, to have employment, for by this means they are kept from many a snare, and many a temptation they are freed from: an idle man tempts the Devil; the Devil tempts man, and an idle man tempts the Devil unto those woeful snares which others (being employed) are freed from; a man that walks with God looks upon his Calling God hath set him in, as an Ordinance of God. But then again,

2. Secondly, He desires to do all the works of his Calling as unto God: that's another part of his walking with God in his Calling; he desires to do all the works of his Calling as unto the Lord: he knows that he hath to do with God, yea even then when he is serving of man, that he hath not only to do with God in the things of his worship, not only when he comes before God in Ordinances, and in duties, when he reads and when he prays, and when he hears; most men confess then they have to do with God; but he that walks with God knows he hath to do with God, when he is in his Calling, and therefore he takes that Counsel which is given him by the Apostle, in 1 Cor. 7. 31. And they that use this world as not abusing it, for the fashion of the world passes away: He uses the world as if he used it not, because he knows he hath to do with God in the things of the world. Now he hath to do for God, and doth all for the Lord,

First, As he sees there's a trust committed to him from God, and this is an engagement to faithfulness; his Calling is a Talent, it's one of the Talents that God hath given him, and therefore it's a trust that lies upon him, and therefore this is an engagement to faithfulness; yea, and he looks upon himself as one that is to be accountable to God how he hath carried himself, not only in the ways of God's worship, but how he hath carried himself in his Calling, with what faithfulness he hath performed the works of it; thus he eyes God in it, and he doth it as unto the Lord, as he makes God the great end of all that he doth; thus he performs the work of his Calling, as in it he makes God the great and last end. It's true, there are other subordinate ends which he looks at, and he may, even when he is industrious in his Calling, as to gain a comfortable subsistence for himself and his family, and that he may give to others as need be, and the like, but the main end is for the glory of God, that God may serve himself of him, that God may improve him, and that he may be an Instrument of much good in his place and Generation; and truly where men do not propound this, and make God the great end, there must needs be woeful miscarriages in all that they take in hand; when men know no other end but to gain the world and heap up riches, and to build their Nests on high, and the like; when this is the only end that they propound in the work of their Calling, it's the way to all injustice, violence, fraud and deceit, and forgetfulness of God, and a whole flood of iniquity comes in: but he that walks with God, his aim is that God may have glory, and that he may be the great and last end, and therefore though he doth not gain much in the obtaining of those subordinate ends, yet he is faithful in his Calling, he goes on in obedience to God's command, and to be faithful to his Generation. That's a second particular, he that walks with God in his Calling, doth all as unto the Lord, he is the last end he looks at.

3. But again, Thirdly, He desires to be holy and spiritually minded whilst he is in his outward employment; that's another part of his walking with God; he desires to be holy in the midst of the world, and therefore it is that he takes that Counsel that the Apostle gives in 1 Cor. 7. 31. To use the world as not abusing it, because the time is short, and the fashion of the world passeth away; he bewails nothing more than a carnal heart whilst he is in the world, it's death to him, it's worse than death: To be spiritually minded is life and peace, but to be carnally minded is death; therefore he looks upon that Scripture with joy, that doth prophesy of holiness, abundance of holiness that shall be given out in that day, in Zach. 14. 20. In that day there shall be holiness unto the Lord upon the Bells of Horses; he looks upon that Scripture, and his heart doth close with it as a gracious promise; he prays for the accomplishment of it, his heart leaps within him to think that there is a time coming when there shall be holiness to the Lord in the conversations of all his people in their employments: that though their hands be put to the things of the world, yet their hearts shall be up, their hearts shall be breathing after God, the heart shall be conversing with Christ; he knows that his Calling was made for him, and not he for his Calling, it was made to be subservient to his best good, to be a servant to him, not to be his Master, and therefore still he desires to keep his heart free for God; he knows that if he make a God of the world, the world will make a slave of him, and therefore he desires to walk as one that Christ hath made free, and still his heart is breathing and thirsting after God, whilst he is in the midst of worldly Employments. That's a Third.

4. Again, Fourthly, He that walks with God in his Calling, is careful to sanctify all by the Word and Prayer, so says the Apostle in 1 Tim. 4. 5. All things are sanctified by the Word of God and Prayer: he knows that there's a Curse upon the whole Creation, sin hath brought a curse upon every creature, there's a curse upon every way of man, there's a curse and a snare in every Calling, in every Employment that man sets his hand unto, and therefore it is his desire that all may be sanctified unto him; he knows that the creature is not comfortable, no condition comfortable, unless God be kept close to the creature, and therefore he looks up continually to God for his blessing, that all may be sanctified to him; he knows that the earth can bring forth nothing but Briars and Thorns, it's the curse of the world, and so it's the curse of every condition, that though he plough and sow, and though he labor with never so much industry, his Calling brings forth nothing but Briars and Thorns, he meets with nothing but vanity and vexation, crosses and molestations, and that which is worst of all, he is not able to bear them, therefore he desires that all may be sanctified unto him by Word and Prayer; he knows that it's not the industry of man that makes rich, it's not the blessing of the hand unless the Word of God goes along with it: in all his ways to take God along, that so he may have the blessing of the Lord upon the works and labors of his hand. That's a fourth. Again,

5. Fifthly, He is careful that the world and his outward employments do not justle out the things of God: This is another part of his walking with God in his Calling; he knows the things of God are of greatest concernment: his Calling and the things of this world are but for a time, for this moment, whilst he is travelling over the bridge to Eternity, and therefore he knows he shall wrong his own soul, if the cares of the world, and the things of the world, and over-eager pursuit after the world, should hinder him in his pursuit after God and Christ: He looks upon that as good counsel which Christ gives in Matth. 5. says he there, Seek the Kingdom of God and the righteousness thereof in the first place, and all things shall be added: Let the things of God have the preeminence, he gives them the precedency in his heart and affections, in his practice and pursuit, still the Kingdom of God and the righteousness of it is sought in the first place: therefore he desires to set up God above the world, and says, Lord, sit thou here, sit thou here in the highest place, sit thou in my heart, in the excellency of my spirit, let the things of God have the precedency; and as for the world, Thou world sit thou at my footstool; he says to the world as Abraham said to his Servants, in Gen. 22. 5. when he went to sacrifice his son Isaac, he says to the young men, Stand you here, and I and the Lad will go up to the Mount and worship: and thus says the heart to the world, World stand thou here, Calling, Employment, stand thou here till I go up yonder and worship, till I go and converse with God, and behold the face of Christ, stay thou here in the Valley till I go up to the Mount and worship: for he gives the things of God and Christ the precedency, because he knows they abide forever, the Word of the Lord that abides forever, and so the love of God and Christ abide forever, and communion with God and Christ endures forever, the Image of Christ upon his soul endures forever, he therefore gives these the precedency in his affections, and in his pursuit; therefore it is, that he is not willing to grasp too much of the world, he is fearful to grasp too much of the world, to have more of the world than he knows how to manage with the performance of his duty to God, he is fearful, I say, that the world should jumble out his betters, and therefore will not grasp too much of the world, and is careful so to order the things of the world, as that he may gain time to seek after the great things of God and Christ. That's a Fifth particular. Again,

6. Sixthly, He that walks with God in his Calling lives by Faith: he lives by faith whilst he works in his Calling; he doth not only live by faith for the things of heaven, he doth not only exercise faith, for the blessings of the world to come, but he lives by faith in his Calling, and therefore he goes on cheerfully, he knows his person and his works are accepted, whatsoever his work is though never so mean it's accepted, and all his labors, and faithfulness in his Calling are accepted: he exercises his faith for the covering of his infirmities, he knows that he is subject to dishonor God continually, there's much weakness doth escape from him whilst he is in the world, and therefore he exercises his faith for the covering of those infirmities; he lives by faith for the protection of God in his Calling, thus he lives by faith: he knows there's a promise, and he lives upon it, He shall give his Angels charge over thee, to keep thee in all thy ways, that thou dash not thy foot against a stone: In all thy ways, in every good and lawful way in thy Calling there is a promise of protection, and he lives by faith upon this promise: And there is a promise of blessing also, Blessed art thou coming in, and blessed art thou going out, and he exercises faith in that promise also. That's another part of his walking with God. But again,

7. Seventhly, He is careful to avoid those stumbling blocks and snares that might endanger him in his walking with God; that's another part of his walking with God: It's commendable for men to be industrious in their Calling, but how many stumbling-blocks on the right-hand and on the left, that men dash against, and so lose all their industry and diligence by dashing against those stumbling blocks! One stumbles at self-end, self-seeking, he propounds himself only, and his own good, and therefore he loses all; others meet with other snares and fall into them, deceit, cozenage and falsehood; some are over-eager in their pursuit after the world; and others stumble at the stone of Slothfulness and Idleness; it's hard to walk in a middle way; but he that walks with God knows that there's a snare in every condition, and therefore he is watchful against those snares: Every Calling, every Employment hath some special snares and stumblingblocks; men that are employed about high things, great matters, they meet with one kind of snare, men in low conditions meet with another kind of snare, every high condition, and every low condition hath its snares, and therefore he is careful to observe what estate, and what the calling and condition in that estate that he is in doth most expose him unto, and he is careful in watching against those snares therein.

8. Eighthly, Again, In the last place, He abides with God in his Calling; that's another part of those that walk with God, he abides with God in his Calling: the Apostle gives that counsel in 1 Cor. 7. about the 15, or 16 Verses, That everyone should abide in the Calling that God hath set them in: and this counsel he labors to walk up unto, he is content in the place God hath set him, or submits unto it with contentation, and therefore he abides in the way that God hath set him in. The Apostle doth not mean, that it is not lawful for a man to change his Calling, for certainly that may be done upon occasion; the Merchant may turn Husbandman, or the Husbandman may turn Merchant, if he sees occasion for it: but God would have his people to abide in their Callings, not rashly to change them, but to see God in them, and submit thereunto with content. Thus you see what that man is that walks with God; if you follow him in his ordinary works and employments, you shall find him such in the ways of his Calling, and therefore oh that you would look up to the Lord to make this truth practical to you. Truly these are high lessons, but they are such as every gracious heart is breathing after, and following hard unto, and bewails wherein it comes short; I say, this is or should be found in every gracious heart, therefore look unto God that he may make you such whilst you walk in your Callings. Oh it were a blessed time Brethren if all your hearts were brought up to this, thus to walk with God (as you have heard) in your Callings, we should soon see the new heavens that is spoken of, God hath promised to create new heavens and new earth, if men's hearts were once set to walk thus with God in his ways, and in their employments, we should soon see new earth, men must be new, new hearts, new conversations, first new men and then a new world, look up to the Lord to make you thus faithful in your Callings; it's the main thing that God looks after, faithfulness, walking with him whilst we are performing the works of our Calling; it's not so much the Calling that God regards, but your faithfulness in it let the Calling be what it will: if a man have a Calling never so honorable, yet if he be not faithful in it, he is no way pleasing to God; and on the other side, if a man have a Calling never so mean, and never so low, yet if he be faithful in it, it's well pleasing to God: oh it's that which will stick by you, yea, it's that which will follow you when you leave the world: your Callings can't follow you, they must leave you, they must be left behind below, but thy faithfulness, that faithfulness that hath been exercised in thy employment, and in thy work, that will never leave thy soul, that will follow it even unto heaven: and now you that fear the Lord, though others be unfaithful, yet you are engaged to faithfulness, you are engaged to walk with God in the works of your Calling, for you have the promise of protection, you have the promise of blessing, this is engagement to you, you have a promise that the Lord will be with you, that his Angels shall be with you, that they shall keep you continually when you are in your way, and in the works of your Calling, and therefore this is an engagement unto you, and you have the promise of blessing: the Lord if he bless you in your way, what an engagement is this unto you to be faithful! he will not only be with you when you are in those duties that do more nearly concern his worship, but he hath promised to be with you by his protection, and by his blessing even whilst you are in the works of your Calling, and therefore walk up to God there in your Calling; it's a Talent left to you by God, and it doth engage an ingenious man to be faithful, therein you are betruſted, and herein an instrument to do good to souls and bodies, and therefore you are engaged herein as it is your duty; therefore be faithful in all; Oh what encouragement is here, for Christians to consider this, whatsoever their Calling is, though never so mean, they are accepted in it, the Lord accepts it, while they study faithfulness to carry it faithfully in a man's Calling, in the meanest work that ever they took in hand they are accepted, as if their work were the most honorable work in the world, and therefore if you have acceptance, not only when you come before God in his worship, but when you are in your own ways, in your Callings and Employments your person and works are accepted, it's a great engagement unto you to be found faithful in the works of your Calling. And so much for this time.

SERMON VII.

GEN. 5. 24. And Enoch walked with God, and he was not, for God took him.

I Have given you part of the Character of one that walked with God, and shown you what he is in those duties that do more immediately concern God himself: I shown you (the last time I spake) what his carriage is in his Calling, in his ordinary employment: he looks upon his Calling as an Ordinance of God. God who is an active Spirit can't endure that any of his creatures should be idle; the very Angels have their employment, there's never an Angel in heaven idle; Are they not all ministering spirits, says the Apostle in Heb. 1. they are all ministering spirits, sent forth for the good of them that shall be saved: And therefore out of this Consideration he submits unto the way of his Calling, and desires to be faithful in it; he also desires to do all that he doth to the Lord, even the very works of his calling he doth them to the Lord; he looks upon it as a trust from God, and by that trust he is engaged to faithfulness; and he desires to make God his last end: there's a further end, besides the gain of riches and living in the world, there's a further end which he eyes, which is more honorable, more noble, and that is to serve God in his Generation, that he may be an instrument in the hand of God to do some good in his Generation, that God may have the glory of it; this is the last end, and so he doth all as to the Lord: he desires also to be holy and spiritual in the midst of his Calling, though his hand be to the earth, he desires that his heart may be upright, he groans under the burden of a carnal heart, it's worse than death to him to be carnally minded: he rejoices in the promise of holiness, and in that Prophecy in Zachariah, In that day holiness shall be written to the Lord upon the Bells of Horses; there's a promise that God's people shall be holy when they are in the world, in the midst of their Callings and Employments, holiness shall be written to the Lord upon them; he rejoices to think that that time is a coming, he prays and waits to see the accomplishment of it in his own spirit: he desires to sanctify all by the Word and Prayer; he knows it's the blessing of the Lord, and not his own endeavors that can make him prosperous in his Calling; he desires also that the things of the world do not shut out the things of God; that's another part of his walking with God. Oh how fearful is he to grasp too much of the world, how fearful is he that the things of the world should deprive him of those opportunities of waiting upon God, of communion with the Lord, and with his own spirit! He doth not live upon his own endeavors, but he lives by faith, whilst he works with his hand; he exercises faith in the promise for protection, blessing and acceptance. He desires also to shun all those snares and temptations that are in the way of his Calling; as every Calling hath its special snare and temptation, he desires there to be most watchful where there is most likelihood he should slip and fall, and be snared and broken; he prays and watches against the temptations that are in his way, and is willing to abide with God in his Calling. I shall now come to show you what this person is in his Relations: One that walks with God you shall find active, gracious, carry it graciously in his Relations: And I shall only speak now of Family Relations, and there's some need we should speak of that: It seems to be hinted in the Text,

That Enoch was faithful with God in his Family; and this was mentioned, That Enoch walked with God after he begat Methuselah three hundred years, and begat sons and daughters; and as he begat them so he brought them up to God, and was found faithful in his family Relations. There are three sorts, there's that of Husband and Wife, Parent and Child, and Servant and Master: I shall not speak largely of all these, it would be too large a Subject. I shall only now give you some hints what that gracious person is that walks with God as Enoch did, and how he carries it in those several Relations.

To begin with the Relation of the Wife and Husband; hath God set such a person in the Relation of a Wife; you shall behold her gracious carriage.

First of all, She looks upon her Husband as her head, and submits unto him as one that is set over her in the Lord; she knows that there is a priority and a dignity that God hath put upon her husband: the man was first, and then the woman, and therefore she submits unto him in all lawful things, though in some respects he may seem to be inferior to her, though she brought more wealth, though her birth be more honorable, though her parts be more ripe, yet she submits unto him, as one that God hath set over her; nay, though he may seem unworthy to rule, and unworthy of the dignity, yet she submits for the Lord's sake, because it is the Ordinance and Command of God. There are divers things in this submission which are seen in a gracious woman that walks with God. As,

1. First, She thinks and speaks honourably of her Husband, and speaks honourably unto him: you know what was Mary's carriage to Joseph, though she might seem to be above him, she says, Thy Father and I have sought thee: She doth not say, My Father and I, but Thy Father and I have sought thee; and so the Apostle Peter speaks graciously of such gracious women that speak honourably to their Husbands, in 1 Pet. 3. 6. he doth exhort women to imitate Sarah, Sarah obeyed her husband, and called him Lord.

Again, As she speaks honourably to him, and of him, so she labors to please him in all lawful things, to conform herself as much as may be unto her husbands disposition, to win him with her love and gracious carriage; she also receives his counsels, and is willing to submit to his reproofs in all things lawful, because she looks upon him as one that the Lord hath set over her to be head. Again,

2. Secondly, She looks upon herself as one that the Lord hath given unto her, that she might be a meet help unto him; this is another part of the gracious carriage in a woman; she looks upon herself as one that is given to be a meet help unto her husband, and therefore she desires to do him good all his days: so says Solomon when he speaks of this virtuous woman, in Prov. 21. 12. She will do him good and not evil all the days of his life; she endeavors to help him, and to do him good in his soul, body and estate, she'll do him good in every condition, in affliction, in low conditions when the hand of the Lord is upon him, if the hand of the Lord be stretched out against his estate, and bring him low, she submits unto it, and will not upbraid but comfort him, and be content to take part with him in his affliction and low condition, and all this she doth as unto the Lord, because of the Ordinance of the Lord; and thus you see how such a person as walks with God carries it in the Relation of a wife. Well, if

God set such a person in the relation of a Husband, you shall find him also walking with God in that relation: he loves his wife dearly, and he loves her especially for that of God he sees in her; though he dare not love the creature immediately, nor rejoice nor delight in the creature, because he knows that's Idolatry, yet he loves that which he sees of God in her, and under God, he loves her next to God with the dearest love: That, that is the most near relation, it's nearer than the Relation of Father and Mother, Sons and Daughters; this is not only a natural but supernatural relation, it is a Mystical relation, and there's a great deal of God in making two to become one, and therefore, I say, of that love which is due to, and which he may give unto the creature, he gives unto her the greatest share, as being the nearest relation: and because he loves her, you shall see how he carries himself towards her.

1. First, He loves her soul in the first place, and therefore it is that he mostly desires to do her good in her spirit: therefore it is that he instructs and prays with her, and for her, that so the Lord may do her good in the inward man: his dearest love is toward her best part, and therefore he rejoices most in that when he sees the work of God upon her heart: when they can live together as heirs, co-heirs of the grace of life, as the Apostle speaks, that is it that he takes the most contentment in. Again,

2. Secondly, Also because he loves her, he won't be bitter to her, he will remember that rule in Col. 3. 19. Husbands love your Wives and be not bitter against them: he will not be bitter in word nor action; he considers her weakness, looks upon her as the weaker vessel, and therefore he will not break her; if he must chide and fight, it shall be with himself, and with those lusts that are within him and war against his soul, and not with that relation that the Lord hath given to be such a wife and such a comfort unto him in this his Pilgrimage.

3. Again, Because he loves her, he will defend her; this is another part of his gracious carriage; he will be a veil for a covering to her: so Abimelech told Sarah, Lo, thy husband is a covering to thee where ever thou goest: he will right her cause against all wrongs and injuries in a lawful way, so far as he is able,

4. Again, He covers her weaknesses; that's another part of his carriage; he remembers that rule that is given unto husbands, Husbands love your Wives, in Ephes. 5. 25. as Christ loved his Church; Why, Christ covered the infirmities of the Church: though there be a great deal amiss, yet he puts his raiment upon her; when ever he presents his people unto his Father, he presents them as if there were no spot in them, as if they were holy and perfect, Thou art all fair my love, says he, and there is no spot in thee: Why, so this man that walks with God won't blaze abroad the infirmities of his Wife, but is willing to cover them, for he knows what the Lord Jesus hath covered in respect to him.

5. Again, Fifthly, Because he loves her he will maintain her, that she may want no conveniencies according to his rank and the condition that God hath set him in: he won't keep her short of necessaries, but provide both for her necessity and dignity; he won't spend all her portion, and then turn her out of doors to provide for herself: he won't keep her short, that she shall have no opportunity to do good, but he gives her allowance to share with him, and to take comfort together of that which God hath given him.

6. Again, Sixthly and lastly, He will maintain her honor in the Family, and therefore he commands that she be respected: he will not suffer servants nor children to usurp authority over her, but commands that reverence be shown, and submission given to her over all the Family; he looks upon her as one that God hath set (next himself) to be the next light of the Family, and therefore desires that she might share and be respected; he knows that God hath given her to be a help, and (so under him) to look to the ways of her Family, Children and Maidens, and therefore in this he doth countenance her, lest the Family be disordered, and God be dishonored in it, this he doth as unto the Lord and for his sake (though there may be unworthiness on her part) because it's the Ordinance and appointment of God: Thus you see what is the work of the first Relation of Husband and Wife.

2. But Secondly, The second Relation in the Family is of Children and Parents: Now if a gracious heart, as one that walks with God, be such in either of these relations, you shall see his gracious carriage.

1. First, to speak in relation to Children: If God hath set him as a Child, he desires to obey his Parents in all things in the Lord; he desires to give willing submission and obedience unto them, •ay, and that from the very heart, he obeys them as Christ obeyed his Father, in Psal. 40. 7, 8. Lo, I come to do thy Will, I delight to do thy Will, O God, thy Law is in my heart; and this is the carriage of a gracious Child, one that walks with God, to his Parents, he obeys them from the heart.

2. Secondly, He also submits unto all their Instructions, he embraces the wholesome counsel of his Parents, He will not despise the counsel of his Father, nor depart from the Law of his Mother, but he wears them as an Ornament of Grace to his head, and as a Chain, as Solomon speaks.

3. He also doth submit unto all their reproofs and chastenings, because he looks upon them as the reproofs and chastenings of a Father, and so proceed from love, and they are for his good. He also

4. In the fourth place, Is content that they should dispose of him for Calling, for Employment: he is willing that they should dispose of him in Marriage, he knows that they have a great share of him, and therefore he will not dispose of himself without their consent. He also in

5. The Fifth and last place, Looks upon himself as always bound, even all his days, to love and honor, and to respect his Parents; though God hath given him a Family of his own, and though he be set free from their Government, yet he looks upon himself all his days bound to honor and respect them, and to maintain them, if the hand of the Lord be upon them to shorten their comforts, and if his be lengthened out, he looks upon himself as bound to relieve their wants, and to be a comfort and stay unto them in their old age: this is the carriage of one that walks with God, if he be found in the relation of a Child. But for the relation of a Father.

If he stand in the relation of a Parent, you shall also see his gracious carriage:

1. First of all, He looks upon his Children as given him of God, to be brought up for God; he knows that they are but only sent out to Nurse (as it were) to him: God hath given him such and such Children to train up in his fear, and therefore it is his great desire to see the Image of God upon them; he is more desirous that they should be made rich in grace than in gold, therefore he prays for them, counsels them, instructs them, gives them good examples, and all that so the knowledge of God and Jesus Christ may be communicated unto them; if the Lord have pleased (at any time) to work upon the hearts of his Children, Oh how thankful is he unto the Lord for it! And he rejoices a thousand times more, even in this, that he knows that they are the Lord's, than that they are his.

2. Secondly, Again, He will not bear with that which is evil in them, though they be never so nigh to him, though they be of his flesh, yet he will not bear with that which is a dishonor to God: he will not suffer that in a Child which he abhors in another, which he will reprove, nay (it may be punish in a servant: but he is impartial in the matters of God, when God's honor is concerned in it, he wonit connive at any wickedness in them.

3. Thirdly, And on the other side, He is careful not to provoke them to wrath; for that's another extreme; he remembers that that is a Precept, Fathers, provoke not your Children to wrath, but bring them up in the fear and nurture of the Lord; he desires rather, if it be possible, to rule them by love than by fear, he knows that slavish fear is the seed of a great deal of evil, and many times it destroys Ingenuity itself; he wonit provoke them by cutting words, as Saul did his son Jonathan, in the first of Samuel, you shall see what cutting words he gave to Jonathan, a good and gracious son, 1 Sam. 20. 30. Then Saul's anger was kindled against Jonathan, and he said unto him, Thou son of the perverse rebellious woman, &c.

4. Fourthly, He will not deny them conveniencies, and that education that is fit for them, but he is careful to dispose of them in the way of a lawful Calling, he sets them in a good way that they may be serviceable to the Lord and their Generation, according to the Will of the Lord, when he is dead and gone.

5. Fifthly, He wonit fall upon them with violence before he knows the matter and examines the cause, lest he should smite them without cause; he will not cast them off for every offense, but he seeks the Lord for them, and waits long for their return: he prays and prays again that the Lord would bring them home unto himself; and if at any time the Lord gives repentance, he looks upon it as a great mercy, and his heart is drawn forth in thankfulness; and this is the carriage of one that walks with God in the relation of a Parent.

There is a third relation in which I shall be more short, and that is, That of Servant and Master. Now if God set a gracious soul in this relation, ye shall see his carriage.

1. First of all, If he be a Servant, he is content with his condition, he remembers that the Lord Jesus himself was found in the form of a Servant, and therefore well may he, a poor worm, submit unto that condition if the Lord set him in it, he remembers he is accepted of God in that condition: it is not the work and employment that God looks at, but the faithfulness, the faithful carriage of the heart and spirit, and the work, though it be never so mean, and never such drudgery, if done to the Lord in faithfulness, God accepts of it; and thus he is Christ's freeborn of the freewoman, free in the inward man, and doth more willingly and contentedly submit himself unto the condition of a Servant, if the Lord be pleased to place him in it.

2. Secondly, Again, As he is a Servant, he yields all due honor, respect and obedience unto his Master, or to such as God hath set over him; he yields obedience in all things in the Lord: He is also careful of the good name and estate of his Master, whatsoever he is instructed in, or trusted with, as Joseph and Jacob were; he is careful of all the estate that his Master puts into his hand, he will not wrong his Master in his estate, but he labors by all lawful means to increase the estate of his Master, though he knows he ought not to sin and deceive for his Master, but in all lawful ways he will labor to preserve and increase the estate of his Master; nay, this he doth in all faithfulness, whatsoever his hand finds to do in the Employment that God hath set him in, he doth it in all faithfulness, whether the eye of his Master be upon him or no, he knows the eye of the Lord is upon him; he wonit only work when his Master looks on him, but when there is no eye upon him, when his Master is gone into a far Country; he doth all to the Lord with all singleness of heart, and therefore he is faithful in the doing of that work and employment which is put into his hand.

3. Thirdly, Again, He submits unto all reproofs and corrections of his Master; he wonit Answer, murmur, repine, nor turn again when he is smitten, but submits unto his Master: he looks upon him as one that God hath set over him in the Lord; yea, though he meet with much hardship, he is not willing to defame his Master, nor that it should be known, but if he be used most cruelly, in such cruelty as he must complain, he will complain in an orderly way, as to the Magistrate with all meekness, that it may be remedied. There is one particular more and I have done, and that is,

2. Secondly, The relation of the Master, you shall see a gracious heart walking with God in this relation also that God hath set him in as a Master. Why,

1. First, He seeks after the good of the souls of his Servants: he doth not only look to their bodies and no further; he does not use his Servant, as he doth his Cattle, only to work and toil them, and seek no further, but he looks upon them as committed by God and man unto his trust, and therefore he is bound to be faithful to them, in seeking the good of their souls in the first place: therefore it is that he counsels, instructs and prays for them, and above all, he labors to give them good examples in the Family, for he knows all the rest is nothing, his instruction will do no good, his counsels are of no efficacy, if his examples do not go along with them; and so Servants may see his gracious behavior and carriage, which will be exceeding convincing unto them.

2. Secondly, Again, He also takes care of their outward man; he remembers it's written, that He that provides not for his Family is worse than an Infidel, and therefore he endeavors to provide food and raiment for them, lest he should put them upon temptations and provoke them to sin, and put them upon temptation to lie and steal, and be extravagant; and this is occasioned many times through the unfaithfulness of the Master in this particular; he is careful not to express cruelty, one that walks with God wonit be cruel to his Servant in laying too much upon him, he knows the groans of his servant in this case will reach up to heaven; the Israelites were servants to the Egyptians, and you know when they laid heavy burdens upon them, then their cry was heard, and reached up to heaven; and it was the destruction of the Egyptians: A good Master won't be cruel in his work.

3. Thirdly, Neither will he be cruel in his correction: If he doth correct he will do it in measure, he knows he is called the Father of the Family, therefore he ought to carry it as a Father unto his Family, and therefore if he will correct them, he will correct them as his own Children, he will hate to be cruel to them: And therefore he will in the

4. Fourth place, Take good counsel from him: a gracious heart, if he shall speak to him of God and Christ in humility of any disorders he meets withal in a Family, a gracious heart will receive counsel from an inferior; you know how Naaman carried it, in 2 Kings 5. 23. now Naaman did not reject their counsel though he was a great and mighty Warrior; he doth not say, What have you to do to teach me? to instruct me? Why, says he, it's good counsel, and it's from God, and he had cause afterward to bless God, that he did through them give him that counsel, for if he had not been, he had ever been Leprous. But,

5. Again, He takes care of his Servants: a gracious man pities them in their need, as the Centurion, My Servant, says he, lies (at home) sick of a Palsy, and desires that Christ would speak a word for his healing: he does not turn him out of doors, and send him to provide for himself, but he tenders him, and goes to the Physician Christ himself, and desires that he would please to heal his Servant. And then

6. Sixthly and lastly, He will not send his Servant away empty; that's another part of his carriage: when they have served him many years, and he hath found their faithfulness, and the blessing of the Lord hath been upon him whilst they have been with him in the Family, he won't send them empty away: God hath laid it as an injunction upon the Israelites, that when their Servants had served them so many years, they should not send them empty away, but that they should give them something, something of all that they had got: It was the sin of Laban, Jacob had served him fourteen years night and day, and for Jacob' sake the Lord blessed Laban, now it was his sin, The Lord hath seen thy cruelty, and the Lord hath rebuked thee; This is part of the carriage of a gracious heart that walks with God; you have seen what he is in all these Family Relations that God hath set him in, in relation of a Husband and Wife, of Parents and Children, of Masters and Servants. And so much for this time.

SERMON VIII.

GEN. 5. 24. And Enoch walked with God, and he was not, for God took him.

I Am drawing towards a conclusion. I have given you the Character of one that walks with God; I shall therefore proceed:

Having thus given you the Character of one that walks with God, I shall show you, that this is a dignity, the excellency of any man or woman upon earth, that they thus walk with God as you have heard. To declare unto you therefore wherein the dignity lies; What is the excellency of a man or woman that doth thus walk with God, will appear in divers particulars.

1. First of all, This man that thus walks with God, is nearer God than others; he comes into the presence of God, he is nigh as a special friend and favourite: that puts dignity upon him; it's the dignity of a man to stand in the presence of a Prince, it's an honor, a privilege: What is it then to stand in the presence of God! it is an Angelical dignity; it's said of the Angels, Christ says of them, that they always behold the face of God the Father, in Matth. 18. 10. Do not offend my little ones, for their Angels always behold the face of their Father; it's the glory of the Angels that they ever stand in the presence of God, and behold his face: this is the dignity of one that walks with God, he is nigher God than others. But,

2. Again, Secondly, He sees more of God than other men; I say, that soul that walks with God as Enoch did, sees more of God than other men; God deals friendly with him, he looks upon him as a fellow-traveler, he will impart his mind to him freely, he will reveal his secrets, the mysteries of his Kingdom unto them: he that is nigh God is nigh the light, therefore he shall not walk in darkness; the Lord goes before him continually, he guides and leads him with his counsel: the light shall discover the way unto him that he shall walk in, Thou shalt hear a voice behind thee, saying, This is the way, walk in it; if any man walks with God, it's he that walks thus with God as Enoch did. That's a second.

3. But Thirdly, God entertains that soul all along his Journey with profitable and delightful discourse. God is ever and anon speaking to him that walks with him, as a man speaks to his friend when he walks with him in his way: and this takes off from the tediousness of the way; though the way be tedious, though it be deep dirty way, yet if a man have a good companion, if he have one to call often to, to discourse pleasantly, it takes off from the tediousness of the way, it's forgotten: and thus doth the Lord carry it towards the soul that walks with him, he so speaks to the soul that it takes from the tediousness of their Pilgrimage, that they forget the tediousness of it whilst the Lord speaks sweetly of his love and goodness to them; he often calls upon them as a man doth to his friend that he walks with: he enquires into their states, and bids them be of good cheer; sometimes he tells them, that the worst is past, and there's better way behind; he tells them of the rest they shall have at night, or of the good entertainment they shall have when they come home; or of the glorious provision that is making ready, and though the way be tedious their rest is long: and this takes off from the tediousness of the way.

4. Again in the fourth place, He supplies their wants; this is another privilege that that soul hath that walks with God: the Lord will bear all their charges, and take care of them in their Journey, they shall not want anything that is good for them, either for the outward or inward man: this will comfort a man upon his Journey though he have never a penny in his purse, yet if there be a friend with him, he will say, I have good store, thou shalt not want so long as I have a penny, I will take care, make provision, and pay all; and thus the Lord doth take care of all, he gives them himself▪ Walk before me, says he to Abraham in Gen. 17. 1. and be thou perfect, and I will make a Covenant with thee: And what is that? in Vers. 2. I will be a God unto thee: Walk with me and I will be a God unto thee, take care for nothing, I will bear thy charges all the way; I will be a God unto thee, I will supply thy wants; the presence of the Lord shall be instead of all comforts, if thou want anything I will make it up of myself: I will be a God unto thee, what wouldst thou have more? And so he takes care to supply all the wants of the inward man, he will make provision all the way, he hath laid up store of provision in Jesus Christ for them, there is store of righteousness, grace and strength, that his people might want nothing, no not while they are in their Pilgrimage: and therefore he says unto such a soul, as sometimes the Father said to the eldest son that was brother to the Prodigal in Luk. 15. the latter end of the Chapter, when he was ready to murmur because his Prodigal brother had so much kindness shown unto him; Why, says his Father unto him, Son, says he, thou art ever with me, and all that I have is thine, therefore why shouldest thou murmur, why shouldest thou repine? thou wantest nothing, thou art ever with me, thou enjoyest and hast interest in all that I have, it's thine; so says the Lord to every soul that walks with him, Thou art ever with me, and all that I have is thine, I will take care to supply all thy wants. This is another special privilege to all those that walk with God.

5. Again, Fifthly, He supports them; that's another dignity and privilege that the Lord will support them under all their burdens; when they are ready to faint, and ready to give up the Ghost many times in their own apprehension, he will support their spirits, he will take care that they shall not fall: if there lie never such pressures upon them, the Lord will ease them, he will bear with them, he gives them leave (all the way) to lean upon him; this is a most sweet and excellent privilege that the soul hath that walks with God, I say, all the way of their Journey, all the way of the Wilderness, the Lord gives them leave to lean upon him; when they are weak and fainting, and ready to be discouraged, he gives them leave to lean upon him, his righteousness and strength, Let him take hold on my righteousness, and make peace with me, and he shall make peace with me; He gives them leave to cast all burdens upon him, and to venture for Eternity upon him, to lay all the weight of all their cares and fears upon the Lord, that he may support them, and bear their burdens; yea, he doth not only give them leave to lean upon him, but he takes them up in his Arms if they faint at any time, if they fall into a swoond that they can go no farther, the Lord won't go away and leave his fellow-travellers, but he will take them up in their fainting and swoounding fits, he brings forth his Spirits and Cordials, and will not leave them until he hath set them up again, and made them able to follow him: a gracious promise in Isa. 40. 11. the Lord makes there unto his people, He shall feed his flock like a Shepherd, and shall carry his Lambs in his arms▪ &c. he will deal with them as a mother doth with her Child, or as a Shepherd doth with his Lambs, he won't leave them when they'll go no further, but he will pity and tender them, they have his arm and his bosom when they can't go: he will help them in all their pressures of spirit, yea, and in all their pressures of the outward man too; he will support and put his arm under them in every affliction, he will take off the weight of it, and bear the heaviest end, that end that hath the curse, the bitterest, the Lord Jesus bears that end; he will not break them in their afflictions, In all their afflictions he was afflicted, he felt every burden: This is the gracious carriage of the Lord towards those that walk with him; and this is a mighty privilege. That's a Sixth.

7. Seventhly, The Lord will knock off their bolts and fetters; this is another privilege, and a mighty one too; the Lord will knock off their Chains and Fetters, and he will cause them to walk in Liberty: he will deliver them from bondage, he came and died for this very end, That through death he might destroy him that had the power of death, and deliver them, who through fear of death, were all their lives long subject to bondage; he will knock off their Fetters, I say, even the Chains of their unbelief; the further they go with God, the more close they walk with God, the more liberty they meet with, the more liberty from the chains of lusts: the more nigh they come to God, the more doth unbelief vanish, it can't stand in the presence of God, and the more they walk with God, the more acquaintance, and the more friendly God deals with them as fellow-travellers; though there were a great distance between man and man before, yet when they travel together, they will have friendly carriage; so a man before he walks with God, there is a great distance between God and him, till he condescend to the poor low condition of his servants, and speak more friendly to them, that they may have more acquaintance with God; and the more acquaintance they have with God, the more shall the Chains of their unbelief, and the other fetters in their hearts fall off. That's another privilege.

8. Again in the eighth place, The Lord will keep them from falling, He upholds the feet of his servants, he preserves their goings, he is round about their path, and preserves them, Prov. 2. 8. He keepeth the paths of Judgment, and preserves the way of his Saints. He'll discover many a snare unto them, and teach them how to break those snares that others are taken in; and are broken by them; and if the Lord doth suffer such a soul to fall, it shall not lie long, he won't go away and leave him when he is fallen; the Lord takes care of him as his Fellow-traveler, and he will help him up again: when Peter fell most grievously; Christ did not leave him so; Christ turned again, did not go away but looked upon Peter, and helped him up again; yea, the Lord will not only help that soul again when he is fallen, but he will make an advantage of his falls; every slip, much more every fall shall tend to the good of that soul that walks with God, God will bring a great deal of good out of the greatest evil: the Lord will teach him to walk humbly when he arises, he will teach him to walk more fearfully, more circumspectly, more dependently, to take hold on Christ every step he goes, and to take heed that he slide not; nay, he will cause him to gain ground by his falls, he will make him run so much the faster, when he shall recover himself, and see what he hath lost, and how God hath gone a good step from him; Oh, it shall be a spur unto the soul, and it shall cause him to run so much the more earnestly after God, and to cleave so much the more closely unto him. Again,

9. In the Ninth place, The Lord leads the soul the safest and nighest way to heaven; I say, that soul that walks with God as Enoch did, is led the safest and nighest way to glory; the safest way, the Lord will discover those pits and snares that lie in the way, he will deliver him from those enemies, those robbers, those murderers that lie in his way, and he won't lead him about, but bring him the nighest way to glory. Many a poor creature that walks not with God, may set many a step (as they conceive) towards heaven, but they go about, because they begin not at first to walk with God, and therefore come back, they must come back again and lose their labor; yea, many times God's own people go about because they do not follow God close; sometimes they think to save themselves, and provide for themselves, to shun sufferings and reproaches, and go about many times to shun them, so that often they lose a great deal of way, and come home benighted: but when the soul cleaves to God, God leads him the nighest way, the direct way to glory, that he shall not come home be-nighted, he shall come home in good season because he cleaveth to the Lord, the Lord was his Counselor and he follows him.

10. Tenthly, Again, In the last place, to name no more; this is another dignity and privilege, that soul that walks with God, shall sit down with God; There remains a rest, says the Apostle, for the people of God: there remains a rest after their long Journey, their tedious Pilgrimage, they shall sit down with God, they shall lie in the bosom of God; after they have walked a while with him on earth, they shall sit down with him forever, and with his Son at his Table in his Kingdom. You see the dignity and privilege of that soul that walks with God: Therefore I shall make some Application of this. And,

Use 1. First, Let me speak to those that are strangers to God; to such as yet are found walking in the way of sinners, a way that God takes no delight in; why, you that are walking in the way of sinners, are walking in the way that leads to your own destruction; Oh, that the Lord would pluck you (with a mighty hand) out of that destroying way; why, you are invited, this day the Lord invites you to come and walk with him, all the privileges that you have heard, do belong to those that walk with God, they are laid open before you to win upon you, and to invite your souls to come in and walk with this God; why will you walk with your worst enemy? Is he not a mad man that will walk with him that seeks to destroy him? And yet this is the folly that is in the heart of sinners: whilst you walk in the ways of sin, you walk with your worst enemy, and walk with a roaring Lion seeking whom he may devour; who would make choice of a roaring Lion to devour him? sinners walk with one that would devour them; Oh, that the Lord would persuade your hearts to turn in and walk with him, he knocks at your doors today, he stays for you: if there be ever a sinner that hath any desires cast in to walk with God, know that the Lord stays for you, he is willing to have your company, and therefore he sends you this invitation: and therefore I beseech you, and the Lord persuade your hearts to come up to a resolution, to give up yourselves to the Lord; this doth undo men, this want of coming up to a resolution is the destruction of many poor souls, that have many a good motion cast in; when they hear this of God, and the excellency of those that walk with God, they canit but see that there is something of God that is desirable. But alas, the misery is, men come not up to a resolution, to a fixed resolution, to make choice of God, and to walk with him, there's something in God that is desirable; Ay, but there's another object that the heart is fixed upon, there's something of the world, there's something in lust; oh, my friends know it, you canit serve God and Mammon, you canit serve God and your lusts, Faith canit endure this divided heart, and therefore I beseech you, look up to the Lord to bring off your hearts to a resolution, that you may say, Well, I will make choice of the Lord, I will make choice of the Lord for my portion, let all the world go, so I may have God; come up to a resolution to part with all, though you lose all, though you lose your friends, though you lose your relations and comforts, know that whatever you lose for the Lord's sake, shall be made up abundantly in him: oh, therefore I beseech you that you would eye that fullness that is in God, this may help to bring off the heart, to bring up the soul to close in a resolution, to come up and walk with him: when the soul looks and eyes the fullness that there is in God, there's whatsoever may answer all losses, whatsoever may supply all wants, and satisfy all desires, there's a fullness in God, a fullness of Grace, and a fullness of truth is in Christ, there's fullness of satisfaction and contentment, and therefore the Lord being yours, you shall not need to go from him, you shall not need to go out to seek satisfaction elsewhere: though all the world should forsake, and your comforts leave you, yet there's that in God may answer all; and though you part with all your lusts, yea, though you should lose all the world for the Lord's sake, that you may give up yourselves to walk with him, know assuredly that it will never repent you, you will not repent you: the very first day that you walk with God, the very first hour of your walking with God, will bring you such contentment and satisfaction into your spirits that you will not repent you that you have left all your old ways and lusts, all sin, and all your Companions for the Lord's sake, that so you may walk with him. And moreover I beseech you, that you would make use of Jesus Christ in your coming to God: if God shall persuade your hearts, to give up yourselves to walk with God, make use of Christ at your first coming; there's no man can walk with God at his first coming, till the son of God makes way for him, Two cannot walk together except they be agreed; God and man were fallen out in Adam, now these must be agreed; now, oh let your souls breath after Christ, you that desire to walk with God, begin first with Christ, let your hearts breath after him, look to him as your peacemaker, to be your reconciler, to make God and you one, to bring you into more nigh acquaintance and fellowship with the Father, that God and you may be one in Christ: Oh, look up unto the righteousness of Jesus Christ every soul of you, you canit walk with God, if you be naked you canit abide his presence; you know Adam ran out from the presence of God when God walked in the Garden, he could not walk because God was there, he runs and hides himself; a naked creature canit endure the presence of God: look up to the righteousness of Jesus Christ, throw yourselves as poor naked creatures upon the righteousness of Jesus Christ, that so coming in the righteousness of the Son unto the Father, you may have friendly acceptance, that you may walk with God for the future.

Use 2. One word also to those that have interest in God and Jesus Christ: Oh, that I might stir you up also to walk with God, to walk with God as Enoch did. Brethren, consider I pray you, Did not Christ bring you into acquaintance with the Father for this end? Were not you at a distance? ye were strangers, ye were enemies, you were far off from God! what pains did Jesus take to bring you acquainted with God, that so you might walk with him as a man with his friend? It cost Christ dear, it was a hard work to make up the breach, it was a mighty work to bring you into acquaintance with God; do not neglect therefore your communion with God in your daily walk, seeing it cost Christ so dear.

Consider also that God hath made you all for this very end, he hath given you legs that you might walk with him, he hath given some strength to those that were lame, that could not stand; I say, when he brought you home to himself, he gave you some strength; it was then that he came to open the eyes of the blind, and to strengthen the feet of the lame; and he strengthens their feet that so they may walk with God his Father: Is not the Lord your best friend? Is he not the sweetest companion you can choose? and if so, I beseech you take heed that you do not neglect your walking with him: what, will you leave your friend? will you leave your friend upon the way? Oh do not give the Lord occasion to accuse you of this Ingratitude; had you not need to keep close to God, do not you need his presence, do not you need him to comfort you, to quicken you, to revive you, to strengthen you, to supply your wants, to bear your charges, to keep off the blasts, to rebuke temptations, and to vanquish enemies, to help you up when you are fallen, to make advantage of your falls, to lead you the highest and the safest way to glory? Oh, that the sense of your weakness and infirmities might cause you to cleave close to the Lord, and take heed that you do not depart and go out from walking with him: And in your walking with God, I shall but give you a few Directions and conclude.

Direct. 1. In your walking with God be sure that you follow him in every step, go you where God goes, walk you where God walks, if you mean to keep the presence of God look to this; Oh, go to the Lord and desire that he would teach your souls where he walks, as the Spouse, Tell me (O thou whom my soul loveth) where thou feedest, where thou makest thy flocks to rest at noon: that she may go there; Why, the Lord walks in his Ordinances, he walks amongst his people: the Son of God walks in the midst of his Golden Candlesticks, there's his walk; would you know where to find him, come in his walks, in the midst of his Golden Candlesticks, in the midst of his people, in the fellowship of his Saints, those that worship him in the beauties of holiness, in Gospel order, there the Lord walks; you that expect the presence of the Lord, that would not lose that comfortable presence of his which you might enjoy, take heed you do not turn away, where God hath said he walks.

Direct. 2. Again, I beseech you, that you would be always careful to give God the upper hand in every walking, in every passage of your life give God the upper hand; do not ascribe to yourselves, lift up the name of God, be content that he should be exalted, and you debased, Not to us Lord, not to us Lord; put away with both hands, give us nothing, nothing belongs to us, but all belongs to God, glory belongs to God; why, if you be enabled to do for God, if you be enabled to suffer for God, give nothing to yourselves, give him the glory, put it away from you, desire him to take it all, and ascribe nothing to yourselves, but what he is pleased to give in freely unto you, oh give him the preeminence in all, and his Son the preeminence in all things; be content that the day of the Lord should be upon whatsoever is high and lifted up; upon all the Cedars of Lebanon, and upon all the Oaks of Bashan; upon whatsoever is in your hearts and spirits: desire him to pull down all high thoughts, and to lay you low at his footstool; be content that you and all creatures may be debased, and the Lord alone may be exalted through his son Jesus Christ; it should be a Christians care in all things, I say, to give God the upper-hand.

Direct. 3. Again, Thirdly, Take heed you do not take up where God doth not take up; do not you sit down where God sits not down, for you may haply lose him, God may go out of sight, and you may run hard before you can find God again; do not take up in yourselves, do not take up in creatures, do not say here I will rest, here I will take up, do not set up here, and say, here I will rest and take up in this creature; if you will take up in creatures, and rest in them, where God doth not rest, why God rests in himself, and wholly in himself forever: he rests in himself, and he rests in his son, This is my Beloved Son in whom I am well pleased; all the delight and complacency of the soul of the Father is in the person of the son, This is my Beloved Son; Oh, take heed of creatures that your comforts be not snares to you, do not take up in them, follow on after the Lord, let your spirits take up nowhere but in God himself, and in Christ, whom he hath given to be the center of your souls, and a foundation for you to build upon forever.

Direct. 4. Again, Fourthly, Entertain sweet intercourse between God and your souls, I say, this I desire, that sweet intercourse with God may be entertained by you, let God be often thought of by you; will you go with a friend and travel with him, and speak not to him? Oh, you will speak often to him: you that walk with God, speak often to God, keep up that intercourse betwixt God and your souls listen to what God speaks to you; a great deal is lost because we do not hearken to him, the soul is not intent, the ear is not bored to hear what God speaks, therefore many a sweet word, and many a comfortable word is lost, because the soul do not listen after God; therefore I beseech you Brethren, know it is your duty all the time you are walking with God, it is your duty to hear what God speaks; let your soul be attentive unto the Lord, that so you may hear every word, whether it be a word of counsel or a word of direction, or a word of consolation: be ye always either speaking to the Lord, or else hearkening to hear what the Lord shall speak unto you; this becomes those that have given up themselves to walk with God.

Direct. 5. Fifthly, And to say no more, Take heed of those rubs and lets that are in the way: take heed of that which may hinder, of that which may take you off from walking with God; there's many a snare, there's many a rub in the way.

1. First, Take heed of this present evil world; it's a snare, it's a bait that draws many off from walking with God, Demas hath forsaken me, saith Paul, he hath forsaken me for this present evil world, the Devil caught him with this bait: Oh, take heed of the snares of the world, the cares of the world, the honors of the world, the riches of the world, the pleasures of the world, these are snares, I say, in which many are taken.

2. Secondly, Take heed ye turn not out into any way of sin whatsoever, give no countenance to any evil way in your spirits or in your courses; the God that you walk with, he is a God of pure eyes, he canit endure to walk in the defiled ways; if you will walk in the dirt, you shall not have God to go along with you, God canit endure to walk in ways of impurity, and therefore, oh, desire the Lord to make you watchful over the ways of your spirit, and over the ways of your conversation, that so you may not turn aside to those defiled ways in which God takes no pleasure to abide in. And,

3. Thirdly, Take heed of an unbelieving heart, which is another snare, and is the cause of many departings from God, An evil heart of unbelief; and therefore do not give way unto it, do not close with it, do not take part with unbelief against the work of God in your own spirits, for if you take part with Satan against the Lord, what a grief will it be unto the Lord, to whom you have given up yourselves to walk with him? Oh, that the Lord would make you that are his people, watchful over your souls! you have given up yourselves, and therefore take heed you do not turn aside; maintain this communion, desire that it may be upheld betwixt God and your souls: and remember this,

That it's your greatest privilege whilst you are upon earth, that you may thus walk with God, a mighty privilege that poor dust and ashes, poor worms should be taken to walk with the great God; that God should make choice to have such for his Companions, his Fellow-travellers; Oh, it is infinite rich and Free-grace, therefore do not slight it, do not contemn it, but labor to walk up to such relation; it's your dignity, and your privilege to walk with God. So much for this time, and for this part of the Text.

SERMON IX.

GEN. 5. 24. And Enoch walked with God, and he was not, for God took him.

YOU have heard of Enoch's walking, here's Enoch's Rest: here's recorded what befell him at the end of his Journey, he went a step out of sight, He walked with God, and he was not, God took him: He was not, the phrase is sometimes applied unto those whom God takes away by ordinary death; so says Jacob of his sons, whom he supposed to be dead, in Gen. 42. 36. Joseph is not, and Simeon is not: and so in Jer. 31. 15. you shall see this phrase applied to those that God takes away by ordinary death, Thus saith the Lord, a voice was heard in Ramah, lamentation and bitter weeping, Rachel weeping for her Children, and refused to be comforted, because her Children they were not: and so some do conceive that Enoch was taken away, as other men are, because it's appointed for all men once to die; but the Apostle must be our Interpreter: he tells us the meaning of that phrase, as applied to Enoch, He was not, for God took him; in Heb 11. 5. By Faith Enoch was translated, that he should not see death, and was not found, because God had translated him: he was not found, saith the Apostle, for God had translated him, he was not found amongst men, he was no longer of this world, nor in this world, he was taken into another world, into another place, for God had translated him, and he was not found, and it was not in an ordinary way as other men: he was translated, God took him. And so it may be said, God takes and receives all the spirits of his servants: but Enoch's departure, his farewell to the world, was in an extraordinary way, God did not take him as he takes others of his servants by death, but God took him from death, he was translated that he should not see death, says the Apostle. There are many particulars that may be useful to us before we come to the main, concerning Enoch, which we shall hardly reach at this time.

But to Consider that phrase, He was not. He was not in the world, of the world; you must not think that Enoch ceased to be, he did not lose his Being: the Text says, He was not, neither do any of the servants of God lose their Being when they are translated, when taken away by death, but he had no being as to the things of this world, he had a being as to God and Heaven, and as to an invisible world, so he was; and so it may be said of all God's people that leave this world, They are not, they are not as to the world; they have no being as to their comforts, relations, friends, employments, and callings; so they are not; but as to God, Christ, and Heaven, and to the things of an invisible world, their being is not lost but perfected; they have no being as to their relations, death cuts that asunder. You shall see what Job says, Job 7. he complains there, that all relations cease there, and the Servant is free from the Master; as this relation, so all other relations when death comes, so that a man he is not, he is no longer as to his friends and relations. And so he is as to the comforts of this world, see Job 7. 9. As the Cloud is consumed and vanisheth away, so he that goeth down to the grave shall come up no more: he shall return no more to see his house, neither shall his place know him more, he is consumed like a Cloud, and gone down to the Grave; and what, hath he no being? No, he speaks only in relation to the things here, and to the comforts and enjoyments, as to his house, and so to all other comforts of his, he shall not return to his house, neither shall his comforts know him anymore. Take notice of this, it will hold forth something that is useful to us: It will teach you three things.

1. First of all, It will teach Christians to mind the things of God and Heaven more, to be more taken up with the things of the world that is to come; why, as to all the things of this life, as to all your friends, comforts, relations, house and land, and other accommodations, you shall not be e're long, and therefore seek more after the things of God and Christ, where you shall have a being to eternity. Think upon this, Christians, when you are ready to lose God in the World, when you sleep over head and ears in your worldly employments; Oh, think of this, the time is a coming, the time is at hand when it shall be said, That you are no more of the world, and you shall have no being at all as to the things of the world, your friends shall know you no more, and your relations, your comforts, your house shall know you no more, you shall be to all these things as if you had not been, as if you had no being, or as if you had no relation to them; Oh, then whilst you are in the world do not live as those that are of the world, but say as Christ did, Now, Father, I am no more of this world; live more there where your being shall be to eternity: Live more upon God and Christ, and be more exercised in the contemplation of the things of the invisible world, there your being shall be to eternity; and do not live so much upon those poor low outward things, where you shall have no being e're long; but when the world shall speak of you, they shall say, You are not, even as it was of Enoch here, Enoch was not, as to this world he was not.

2. Secondly, This may also instruct you how to carry it towards the loss of friends and relations: when God shall take away any of your friends and relations, take heed you do not let out natural affections towards them when God hath taken them, for they are not, as to you they are not, they are none of yours, you have no relation to them, death hath broken it, they were given you for a time, your Husband, your Wife, your Children, they were given you for a time, to be comforts to you for a time, till the Lord should call for them; but when the Lord hath taken them, they are no longer yours, they are not, as to you: It's sinful then to let out natural affections towards them, as to look upon them as yours, your Husband, your Wife, your Children, they are not as to you, but they are as to the Lord, complete in him, and as to you they are not: and therefore it's sinful unto you, to let out natural affections, when God hath broken your relations. And,

3. Thirdly, This may give some comfort in the loss of friends, when they die in the Lord; they are not lost, they do not cease to be: If they were annihilated and destroyed, and if they had no being anywhere, there's cause to mourn, there's a loss indeed; they only disappear unto you, and unto this visible world, but they are not lost, they appear in the presence of God, though you see them not, and they have no being as to you, yet as to God in heaven, in another world, they have a being, a glorious being, a perfect being, and therefore there is no cause why we should mourn for them as if they were utterly lost. That's the first consideration, Enoch was not, as to this world, and as to the relations of this life he was not. But again,

2. Secondly, Observe how easily Enoch was translated, how easy God makes Enoch's passage to another world; he walks with God, and God took him, and we hear no more of him: he walked all his life with God, and at the end of his course God took him along with him; it's spoken of him as if he went but a step further, and he was not here, he went but a step further, and he went along with God, God took him to himself. We may observe that God can make the passage of his servants easy to another world: such as walk with God on earth, God makes their passage easy to another world, so it was with Enoch.

Quest. But is it so to others, Enoch's translation was easy, for Enoch, he was not dissolved, soul and body did not part, but both were taken up to live with God, but is it so to others?

Answ. Yea, God can and doth make it so unto his people that walk with him: though death may seem a strait passage, and a dark entry, yet the Lord can make it lightsome, he can make it easy unto his servants: what an easy matter was it for Moses to die, when he had walked with God all his life? It was spoken of him as an ordinary thing, Go up and die, God bid him go up upon the Mount and die there, go and die there, and Moses went up and God made that death easy to him: And so it was spoken of all the Patriarchs, and those that walked with God in those old Ages, God made this strait passage easy to them, therefore it's called a falling asleep, after they had served their Generation they fell asleep; or they were gathered up to their Fathers; it's set forth by such expressions; Jacob leaned upon his staff and raised up himself and blessed his Children, and speaking of the things of God and Heaven, and so he fell asleep; God makes it easy unto them that walk with him, for they that walk with God gain experiences of him, I say, they that walk with God treasure up experiences of God's gracious dealings, they shall see how God hath been with them many a time: he hath been with them in many deaths, he hath been with them in the fire, he hath been with them in the water, he hath been with them in many Jeopardies and dark conditions, he hath delivered them: they have gained many experiences of God, therefore they will trust in God, they'll trust in him when they walk through the Valley of the shadow of death, he is a sure friend, he is a tried friend, and therefore they canit but rest in him. But,

Again, They that walk with God walk by Faith, now it's faith makes death easy: all those Worthies spoken of in Heb. 11. died willingly, for they died in Faith, Faith makes the strait passage easy, For,

1. First, Faith discovers the Victory of Christ, I say, it makes discovery of the victory of Christ over death and the Grave, presents the Savior that is the Conqueror, that hath disarmed the strong man, that hath taken away the sting of the Serpent: now when the soul by Faith sees that death is disarmed, and the sting is taken out, it's easy then to grapple with him.

2. Secondly, Again, Faith takes hold of the promises which are grounded upon the faithfulness and truth of God for its security, I say, it takes hold of those promises which are made in faithfulness and truth: why, the Lord hath said that he will be with his people in all their straits, yea, when they walk through the valley and shadow of death, that he will never leave them, he will never forsake them; now the discovery of this to the soul makes death easy.

3. Thirdly, Again, Faith looks beyond death, it's higher, it's taller than death, it can look over the shoulders of death, it hath a piercing eye, it can see through the darkness of the Grave, and it can behold the tops of the Towers of the heavenly Jerusalem, it can see the Land that lies beyond the Land of death, it sees the dark entry and the low valley that doth overshadow it, it doth lead unto that Land, that Land of blessedness that the Lord hath prepared for his people, and therefore whilst faith is thus exercised, death is made easy, and they that walk with God walk and live by faith, and therefore to them is death made easy. Yea,

4. Fourthly, Again, Death is made easy to them, for by walking with God they have gained acquaintance with God, and it's acquaintance with God that makes death easy: when a soul hath walked with God as with his friend all his life, it's not afraid to go to God at last, because he is his friend; he knows God thoroughly, and therefore can trust him, he knows his gracious disposition, and the love that is in his heart, He that comes to God must believe that he is, says the Apostle, and that He is the rewarder of them that diligently seek him: till this grace of the love of God be discovered, the soul can't come to him on earth, it can't draw nigh to him by faith, much less can he come freely to him in heaven. Why this is the cause why death is so terrible, because his acquaintance is no more with God; but when the soul hath lived as in heaven, and conversed with God, and beheld his face, and follows him continually with this acquaintance he hath gained with God, it doth make the passage of death (though strait in itself, yet) easy: And therefore to apply this.

Use 1. I beseech you, you that walk with God, that you would not be discouraged through the apprehension of the straitness of this passage: you know not how easy God can make it, why should you distrust him? do not fear the greatness of the pains, God can make them easy, God can allay them, God can take away the sense of them, God can give in that which can sweeten them; remember who went before you, hath not the Lord Jesus gone before you? He set himself in the fore-front of the Battle, the passage was a great deal straiter when Christ went through it, he hath widened it and made it far more easy: Believers, you have seen the worst that death can do to you, you have seen it in Christ, if it had overcome Christ you might have feared it, but Christ would try the experiment first upon himself, and you have seen the worst that it can do; Jesus Christ is engaged with you, if you should perish, Christ himself had as good have perished; it's all one whether he be overcome in his person, or in his members; Oh, therefore, I say, be not discouraged at the apprehension of the straitness of the passage, and darkness of the entry, but look to Christ that hath gone before you, and only let it be your care whilst you live, to live by Faith, and to live in constant communion with God, God will take care of the rest: And,

Use 2. Again, How should you bless the Lord Christ! What cause have you to bless the Lord, and to admire the riches of wisdom, and the riches of power, and the riches of goodness that hath made death to be thus easy? I tell you, it is not so in itself: Christians, you are beholding to Christ for this, death is not easy in itself, it is most terrible in itself, it hath brought down mighty spirits of wicked men; Oh! whither shall I go, said Nero? when death was at hand: It was not so easy with Christ; oh, it was exceeding strait when he ventured to pass through, it was for your sakes that he entered the passage first: Oh! admire his wisdom, goodness and power, and bless his name for this both in life and death. That's a second thing we considered, Enoch was not, God took him: his translation is spoken of him as a very easy thing, he walked a step further, and returned no more, and God took him. There is one Particular more which I shall give but a hint on, and that is, He was not found.

So says the Apostle to the Hebrews, Heb. 11. 5. He was not found, for God had translated him; He was not found, and that implies, he was sought for when God had taken him, They sought for him, but he was not found, says the Apostle: And so it was with Elijah, in 2 Kings 2. latter end of the Chapter, the Prophet sends out fifty men to seek after him; and it's very like they did so for Enoch, but he was not found, for God took him.

Observe, It is usual to undervalue mercies whilst we have them, which are prized dearly when once they are gone; I say, it is usual with the sons of men to undervalue mercies whilst they have them, which they would seek for when once they are gone: thus we deal with persons, and thus we deal with other mercies; With Persons, you know how Samuel was undervalued by Saul whilst he lived, and the Word of the Lord that he brought to Saul was rejected; but when Samuel was gone, then Saul seeks for him; nay, he was so violent that he seeks him in an unlawful way, even to raise him up from the dead, that he might acquaint him with the Will of the Lord. And so John Baptist was persecuted and banished, and Herod cut off his head, but when he was gone, then Herod prized him; and so when Herod heard of the fame of Jesus, that he did great things, Surely it is John the Baptist that is risen up again: here's mighty works indeed: And thus we deal not only with Persons,

But thus we deal with other Mercies, whilst we have them, we undervalue them, that God is forced to take them away, to let us know what the worth of them is: Israel did not prize her mercies, outward Mercies, Corn, Wine and Oil, Flax and Wool, and therefore God was forced to take them away, to let them know the worth of them, I will take away my Corn, my Wine and my Oil, my Flax and my Wool, Hos. 4. Yea, thus we deal with God himself, thus we deal with God and Christ, and with the great and precious things of God; how did Esau despise his birth-right, how contemptibly did he speak of it, whilst he had it? What will my birth-right do me good, says he, seeing I am ready to die? And yet afterward, when it was gone he sought it with tears, when Jacob had got the blessing he sought it with tears, and he could not obtain it. Yea, this is not only in the hearts of the wicked; if it were only in the wicked it were the less: but it is in the hearts of God's own people to undervalue the things of God, whilst they enjoy them, and so give the Lord cause to strip them of them. Israel had the presence of God amongst them, but they did not prize God, and therefore says God, I will go and return to my first place; in their affliction they will seek me early. Thus we deal with other of God's precious ones, many times they are undervalued, and we know not the worth of them, till such time as they are removed, till God takes them away: As it is said concerning the Jews in Matth. 23. that Christ was amongst them, and Preached the everlasting Gospel to them, and they received it not: But when the Gospel was removed from them, then they prized it, Behold your house is left unto you desolate: Why? in Matth. 21. there you have the same words, when the Children cried, saying, Hosanna, Hosanna to the Highest, the Jews were offended; when the people said of Christ, Hosanna, and blessed is he that comes in the Name of the Lord; they were offended in the 15 Verse, and Christ doth rebuke them for this, Well, says he, (when they cried, Hosanna, blessed is he that cometh in the Name of the Lord) you are displeased, the time is a coming, that you would give all that you enjoy, to see such a man as you have seen, but I will teach you by the absence of this mercy, of which you shall say, Welcom indeed, and blessed is he that cometh in the Name of the Lord: I say, what base hearts and spirits are within us, that we should put God unto this labor, that we should cause God to walk in this way towards us, to take away our mercies, that we may know how to prize them! Oh, it is an unworthy heart, there is a great deal of the spirit of Esau, to despise the blessing whilst we had it, and then afterwards weep for it, and sought it with tears, but found it not. And therefore I shall conclude with this word of Exhortation.

Use 3. Let us learn to prize our mercies, I say, whilst we enjoy our mercies, let us learn to prize them, because the time is coming when they shall not be to us, they shall not be found, we shall seek them, and shall not find them: God hath given you friends and relations; Oh, my Brethren, prize them, use them for God's glory, do all the good you can to them whilst you have them, receive all the good that may be from them whilst you have them, for the time is a coming when they shall not be to you. It was Job's argument with God, you shall see in Job 7. the last Verse, and it is a very strong argument, and Why dost thou not pardon my transgression, and take away my iniquity, and pardon it quickly? Speak a good word quickly to thy Servant, I cannot hold out long, Lord, says he, I cannot hold out long, now I shall sleep in the dust, and thou shalt seek me in the morning, and I shall not be: Lord pardon, pardon thy servant Job, whilst thou hast a Job to pardon, Lord, do good to me whilst thou hast an occasion to do good to me, e're I sleep in the dust: you shall seek me then, and I shall not be: that you shall say, oh that I had such a friend to do good to, or that I had such a friend to receive good from: Oh, take the present opportunity therefore of doing and receiving good; and this is spoken not only of all Persons but of all Things, prize them whilst you have them, prize them whilst you enjoy them, for time is coming when they shall not be.

And Consider this, Let me say this to you, The Lord is this day tendering grace to you, he stands, he knocks, he invites you, he beseeches you, he desires you to open, he is willing to pardon multitudes of transgressions, to wash away thousands, and ten thousands of transgressions and sins, and to subdue them also; Oh, that the Lord would give you hearts to seek after this present mercy, you will seek them hereafter when they shall not be; Oh, take heed lest Christ speak to you as he spake to the Jews, which was a fearful sentence, because of their mistaking their time, and neglecting their opportunity, Joh. 7. 34. You shall seek me, says Christ, and shall not find me, and where I am, you cannot come: he had said a little before, And I am with you, and am coming to them that seek me; and afterward, You shall seek me, and shall not find me; Christ was with them a little while preaching and holding forth, and urging mercy and grace, beseeching of them to come in, they refuse and reject life, Well, says Christ, I have sought you, and you would not be found; you would not follow me; the time is coming when you shall seek me, and shall not find me, and where I am you cannot come; and you that fear the Lord,

I beseech you, be you warned also, take heed you do not slight your mercies, your present enjoyments of God, lest the Lord also teach you to know the worth by the want; I say, take heed that you do not abuse your mercies, take heed that you do not grow cold, and dead, and loose, and formal, under the enjoyment of the means of getting nigher God, which you enjoy more than formerly, for what pity is it that we should grow worse when God is better? That we should be further off from drawing nigh to God, when God is drawing nigh to us? What pity is it that the Sun-shine and fair weather should do harm? Doth not sad experience teach us that many Christians are further off from God now than when the means were lesser, in their getting near to God; take heed God do not let you know by sad experience what the loss of his presence is, and that he do not let you know by sad experience what the loss of Ordinances are, what the want of mercies are; it shows abundance of corruption that is in the heart, but it is mercy if God will teach his people any way; it is the saddest way of teaching that God will make use of, to recount what once we had, and what once we enjoyed, and now are stripped of, for want of improvement: we had the Sabbaths, the teachings of God, we had the Ordinances, but now stripped of all; and therefore may (as they) sit down by the waters of Babylon, and weep most bitterly; it is a sad way of teaching, yet it is mercy if God will choose any way of teaching and drawing these sad and drowsy hearts of ours more to himself. Thus you have had some hints of what Enoch was, He was not found, for God had translated him, God took him; the main Point is yet behind, viz. to consider whither Enoch was translated, and wherefore he was translated, and the year in which he was translated, which was three hundred sixty five years, and was the shortest life of all the Patriarchs. But so much shall serve for this time.

SERMON X.

GEN. 5. 24. And Enoch walked with God, and he was not, for God took him.

WE have done with Enoch's walk, we are come to Enoch's Rest, He was not, for God took him; I have opened the phrase to you the last time I spake. But I shall proceed to what is still behind in the Text.

He was not, for God took him, And God took him: there is a great dispute amongst many, to what place Enoch was taken. There are many both of the Papists and others that place Enoch in earthly Paradise: they say Enoch was not taken into Heaven but into Paradise, and that this Enoch and Elijah are those two Witnesses that shall come again at the end of the world to discover and destroy Antichrist; there is such a Tradition generally amongst them, and others have received it from them; but there is not the least ground for it in the Word of God, that Enoch and Elijah should be those Witnesses spoken of in Rev. 11. for certainly those Witnesses are no other but the servants of God spoken of, that have stood up in all Ages since Christ, to bear witness to the name and truth of Jesus; and therefore I see nothing why we may not assert, that Enoch was taken up into Heaven, that he ascended in body into Heaven. You shall see in 2 Kings 2. 11. it is spoken there of Elijah who was translated even as Enoch, And it came to pass as they still went on, and talked, that behold (there appeared) a Chariot of fire, and Horses of fire, and parted them both asunder, and Elijah went up by a whirlwind into Heaven: if Elijah went into Heaven, why not Enoch?

Object. But it may be Objected, Is not Jesus Christ the first-fruits of them that ascend? Did not Christ open the door by his blood? How then could Enoch or Elijah ascend into Heaven before Christ came and opened the door?

Answ. To which I Answer, It is true that Christ is the first-fruits of them that ascend, and the way to Heaven is set open by the blood of Christ, and there was none ever ascended but by virtue of the blood of Christ, that sets open the door to them; but the efficacy of the blood of Christ did reach to them that lived before him; and therefore in Rev. 13. 8. he is called The Lamb slain from the foundations of the World, in the purpose of God; yea, it was accepted of God as if done already; God the Father took the Word of his Son for the payment of the Debt, he knew that he was able to make good his word, and would be faithful to him, wherefore he trusted him before he discharged the Debt, before the price was actually paid, so that the virtue of Christ's blood did even reach to them, even many thousand years before he came in the flesh to suffer: for the Father took his word, and the son took the Fathers word for the salvation of those that should be brought in many hundred years after the debt was paid; the salvation of all that belong to God, who should live from Christ's time to the end of the world: the son gave the full price into the fathers hand, and he relies upon him, upon his word for the discharge of the debt, and for the receiving of poor sinners to life and favor, as they shall be brought in in all Ages; and therefore, Dear Brethren, I beseech you, take notice of the mighty virtue of the death of Christ, mighty virtue was in it, that he should be accepted beforehand, that it should reach as far as Enoch, as far as Adam, that it should be accepted for those that lived many thousand years before Christ, before the debt was paid, it holds forth the mighty efficacy of the blood of Christ; if it had been only available for those that had lived after him, after Christ was come in the flesh, and dead and risen, and had discharged the debt, if it had reached only to those, it had not been so much: it is not so much, says Hezekiah, for the shadow to go forward in the Dial, but for the shadow to go backward so many degrees, that holds forth a deal of the mighty power of God to his conviction; and so the blood of Christ goes backward so many years to them that lived in the beginning of the world, before the price was actually paid: O the infinite virtue and efficacy that is in this blood of Christ! Oh, know what strong ground of consolation there is in this, to you that are Believers now under the Gospel: if it reached so far, if it went backward, if it went as far as Enoch, to open the gate of Heaven to him, how much more shall this reach you that are believers under the Gospel, that live directly under the efficacy of the blood of Jesus Christ. God bad Enoch welcome for this blood that was to be shed; if he set the door open to him, when the price was not actually paid, oh how much more shall God bid the Saints welcome, to come in the name of such a Savior that was dead, is risen and ascended, now to sit at the right-hand of God, and present the efficacy of his blood forever? Oh! how may this be improved, and what sweet lives might Christians lead, and with what a full wind might they fail, and launch forth into the Ocean of Eternity, when they live directly under the efficacy of such a blood as this is, that reached so far backward, even as far as Enoch? for it was by virtue of this blood that Enoch was saved.

But further, It's said, God took him: That phrase implies three things.

1. First of all, That Enoch was taken up into a state of Communion with God, of near Communion with God, God took him; God took him to himself. He had walked with God whilst he was upon earth, but he was not taken up into nearest Communion until now; the Saints in heaven are taken into highest Communion; their Communion here upon earth is interrupted many times, God comes now and then and gives a poor soul a visit, but they are not taken in into God till such time as God removes the Mount of this visible world: they are here put out to School, God will give them good education, he will bring them up for heaven; and therefore it is not always that they have their Fathers presence, now and then God comes and visits them: but there is another life in which God shall take his people to himself, he shall send for his Children home, and then they shall be forever with the Lord, I say, forever with the Lord; Whilst we are here, says the Apostle, we are absent from the Lord; Whilst we are in the body, we are absent from the Lord and therefore no wonder why the Saints are breathing so much after that other life, •ooking for, and hastening after the appearance of Christ, because they are not taken in till then, here they are strangers, and here they are absent from the Lord in a great measure, though they walk with God as Enoch did, yet he will not take them into that nearest Communion, till they come to end this life.

2. But again, Secondly, As it doth denote a state of near Communion which the Saints enjoy in heaven, so it doth hold forth that fullness of light, life and glory that the Saints shall there enjoy: God took him, he was taken into God, taken up to the enjoyment of the fullness that is in God; here they are narrow vessels, and are not capable of receiving much, but there the souls of his Saints shall be taken into God, and so shall be filled with his fullness. Believers here walk with God, and God doth dwell in them, but so long as they dwell below, they do not dwell so much in God: but there is a time a coming when they shall dwell wholly in God, they shall be taken up into that fullness; they shall be as so many vessels that are cast into the Ocean that shall be filled; everyone shall be filled full to the brim: I say, this holds forth that phrase of fullness of glory that the Saints do enjoy in Heaven, God took him, and he was taken into God.

3. Again, Thirdly, It holds forth an act of free grace which was put forth towards Enoch as well as others: God took him, or received him, and to receive, it holds forth the free grace of God; Enoch walked with God, but he was not taken for his walking, not because he had walked so and so with God in his Generation, he was not therefore taken, but he was received; it was free grace received him: My Brethren, I beseech you then know, what you can only plead before God, though you have walked with God never so long in your Generation, yet you canit at last plead to be taken up because you have walked with God; Alas! the Lord sees so many slips, so many stumblings, so many falls, there's so much crookedness in the way of the heart, in the way of the conversation, even in the best of Saints, that if the Lord should judge them according to their walkings, they were undone: those Hypocrites plead a great deal, when they cried, Lord, Lord, have we not Prophesied in thy Name, and in thy Name have cast out Devils, and done many wonders, and yet Christ bids them depart for he knew them not; there is no pleading of works, there is no pleading of worthiness, and of the creatures righteousness, when the creature comes to stand before Christ; if you could walk with God as many years as Enoch did, yet at the end of your walk, at the end of your course, you must lay down all, and be willing to enter in as sinners, that is, at the door of free grace, not through any door of your own works or righteousness.

And again, How does this call upon the people of God to be exceeding careful to receive Christ? Oh! receive him freely, he receives you freely here, and he will receive you freely hereafter: how are you engaged to receive him freely, to close fully with him, and with the tenders of life and grace, of righteousness and holiness, which are held forth in and through him? Receive Christ freely, and receive the Word of Christ freely, though it be never so contrary to flesh and blood, though it crosses your beloved lusts, though it cross your profits, though it cross your delights, though it be the Word and Truth for which you must suffer; yet, oh why should not you receive Christ and his Word freely, seeing he will receive you so freely another day? He won't be ashamed to take his people and to own them before all the world, these are mine, my Jewels: and if Christ won't be ashamed of you, oh what a shame is it that you should either be ashamed or afraid to receive him and his Word, and his Truth, and to hold it forth in a time of opposition and suffering The free grace of God in receiving his people at last, is a mighty engagement unto them, now to receive Christ, and every word of Christ, whilst they are in this Pilgrimage, where God hath set them to bear up his name in the world. But,

Further, God took Enoch: When was Enoch taken? When he had lived three hundred sixty and five years, that you find in the Chapter to be the term of his life, three hundred sixty and five years: if you compare the years of Enoch with the years of others, of the holy men that lived in that Generation, you shall find his life exceeding short; his father lived above nine hundred and sixty years, and his son Mathusalem lived longer; yea, all the time of all the Patriarchs (there) in this Chapter, even amongst them all, Enoch was the shortest liver: a holy man, a gracious man, and one that was most eminent in his Generation, and none there was that walked with God in his Generation as Enoch did, and yet Enoch's days are shortened; I say, sometimes the Lord shortens the days of his Children, that have walked and lived with him in an abundance of love and mercy.

You will say, What time is that? and when is it a mercy? When does God shorten the days of his servants in love?

1. First of all, God hath some of his servants that lie under great pressures, their combatings are extraordinary, and sometimes he shortens the term of their life in mercy and love. We shall consider those particular combats which some of the Lord's people are in an extraordinary manner exercised with, and sometimes in pity, mercy and love the Lord shortens their days on earth. As,

1. First, There is some of God's servants that have extraordinary warrings with corruptions within them, I say, with corruptions within them, and this proves a most heavy burden to them, and makes their very lives uncomfortable, a continual burden to them: Oh, these daughters of Heth were a continual vexation unto Rebecca; the Apostle Paul was a man able to bear much, and he bore a great deal of affliction which he met withal in his Pilgrim•ge, that he could rejoice in afflictions, and glory in tribulations, they were nothing to him: but when he comes to combat with sin, lust and corruption that was within him, he was forced to cry out, to cry out for help; he could rejoice in other affliction, but herein he could not rejoice, O miserable man that I am, who shall deliver me from this body of death? I say, some have extraordinary combatings with corruption more than others; Oh these Monsters! as soon as one head is cut off another springs up in the room, never at peace, the war is never at an end: the Lord shortens their warfare in that.

2. Again, Secondly, God hath some of his servants that are extraordinarily employed with temptation; oh they are hunted up and down, and continually baited, baited with Satan's most horrible temptations: winds and storms are ever beating, fiery darts are ever thrown in; before one wound is healed another is given: Well, the Lord looks out from Heaven, he looks down, he sees the combat, and many times he makes this the way of deliverance, he puts out his hand, he takes his poor servants to himself, and so delivers them from the baitings of Satan's temptations.

3. Again, Thirdly, Some of God's servants are in extraordinary afflictions all their days, above all the men in the world they are most afflicted; I say, the way that God leads some of his servants to heaven, is a very dark and narrow lane, and they see more affliction than all their Neighbors: in •am. 3 1. well says the Prophet there, I am the man that have seen affliction; I am the man that have seen affliction, that's no great matter, who hath not seen affliction? Is that such a matter for the Prophet to complain of, that he had seen affliction? Ay, but his portion was extraordinary, he had seen more than all others in his time, and therefore complains as if he alone had been the man that had seen affliction; Well, when afflictions are very great and of long continuance, God hath trained up some of his servants in this way in this School; yea, he many times shortens their journey in love. But you will say, Object. Could not God deliver them some other way? Could not God rescue them out of the hands of affliction, and deliver them from temptation, and make them conquerors over their lusts and corruptions? But must he shorten their lives by it, and no other way?

Answ. Why Beloved, we must know this, the Lord sees it best, and he knows it is needful for them to come to him in this narrow way, and they could not be without those afflictions and warrings of lusts, and without those temptations, and it's the best way, infinite wisdom sees it the best way to lead them to himself, and to glory: And therefore when the case is thus, that the Lord sees it so needful, that so long as they are in the body, they should be in these conflicts, afflictions, and temptations, then the Lord (sometimes) sees it best to shorten some of their days to bring them unto himself. But you must take this caution: Take heed you do not limit the Lord to this way, for though God doth take many of his servants this way by death, yet, I say, they ought not to limit the holy one of Israel. Let not them say as Job, Wherefore is life given to a man that is in affliction? Wherefore is life given to a man whose way is hid? For if God continues life in afflicted conditions, he sees good reason for it: and therefore, I say, you may not absolutely desire death because of your affliction, because of your temptations, because of your buffetings; not absolutely to limit God in this way of deliverance, for though God doth use this way many times, yet he will not be confined to it.

And though the Lord doth keep you in affliction, he sees it is for his honor, it is for his own glory; that he may show his power and goodness, his wisdom in directing you, his power in supporting you, in strengthening you, in delivering you, and in making you able to hold out in such difficult afflicted conditions: the Lord can find many ways of deliverance; therefore do not say you, Lord, take away my life, my affliction is great, I see no way how I shall come out of it; this is sinful: for God hath many ways, I say, God chooses this way sometimes to free his people from all their corruption and temptations, he shortens their lives, and that in abundance of love.

2. Again, Secondly, God sometimes doth shorten the days of his servants in love, when they live in evil times, times in which iniquity doth abound, then God fetches home many of his servants in love: It was a very corrupt time that Enoch lived in, The world was corrupt and filled with violence, and therefore it was in love to Enoch that God shortened his course: the Lord knows how afflictive it is, for his servants to live in an evil world, Woe is me, says the Psalmist, that I am constrained to sojourn in Mesech, and to dwell in the Tents of Kedar, Psal. 120. 5. That righteous soul was vexed, Woe is me, &c. Nay, the Lord considers that possibly his own people may be carried down the stream through the strength and violence of the corruption of the times, that they may be drawn aside from their stedfastness, it's possible that even they may be corrupted, even God's own people may be corrupted, in a corrupt Generation: the Lord considers this, and therefore many times he takes them away in an abundance of love and mercy. When the Thistles and Nettles do so inclose the Lilies, that they hinder their growth, and communicate of their ill favor unto them, then the Lord sees it's high time to remove, to transplant his Lilies into a better soil. And that's a second Particular why the Lord doth shorten the days of his servants, it is when they live in a very corrupt and sinful Generation, that doth both afflict them and endanger them.

3. Again, Thirdly, Sometimes God shortens the days of his servants in love; that they may not see when great desolations are coming, either upon their friends, their relations, their families, or upon the Kingdom they live in: the Lord in mercy calls home those that do walk faithfully with him: and thus it was with Jeroboam's child in 1 Kings 14. 13. Jeroboam's child was taken away, you have the reason given there, because great desolation is coming upon the Family, God threatens there by the Prophet, that he would not leave one person alive, and this child shall go to his Grave in peace, Because some good thing was found in him towards the Lord God of Israel; some good thing was found in him when the family was corrupt, and therefore God would not have him to see what desolation he would bring upon the family:

And so when God brings desolation upon Kingdoms and Nations, he sometimes calls home his own people. Good King Josiah, a gracious man, was cut off betimes, because the Lord was about to bring desolation upon Judah: a great and fearful Captivity which came presently after, when he was gone; but he feared the Lord, and was fearful when the Word of the Lord came to him, and therefore God took him that he might not see that desolation with his eyes, that sad desolation, that God would bring upon Judah. And so says the Prophet, Isa. 57. 1. he gives this as a reason why God takes away some of his servants betimes, The righteous perisheth, and no man layeth it to heart, and the merciful man is taken away, none considering that the righteous are taken away from the evil to come: When evil and desolation is about to come upon a place or a Kingdom, why then God takes away many righteous and merciful men. The Husbandman, when he sees a storm is a coming, he makes haste to gather in his Corn, especially, that which is most ready to shake, that which is most like to take harm by the wet, that he will in withal: And thus the Lord doth with his, when he sees great desolation, that may even shake those that are his own.

4. Fourthly, God takes way some of his servants that he may prevent their uneven walking, and their declining and turning aside from him: the Lord loves to take his servants when they are at the best, he pulls the Rose when it's most sweet: sometimes the Lord sees many of his servants, that if they should stand longer they would decline and grow worse; sad experience doth teach it; now therefore it is that the Lord takes them at the fit time, that he may prevent that dishonor, that otherwise might be brought to his name, if he should suffer them to stand longer in the world, they might happily blurr their profession, they might dishonor God, they might harden their own hearts; and therefore the Lord loves to take them when they are fully ripe: and when he sees such a one ready to decline and grow worse, and to lose of his sweetness, and of his savor, it may blurr the name of God, dishonor him in the world; why, the Lord to prevent all this, takes away sometimes such a servant of his in abundance of love and mercy: and so he took away Asa, and so Jehoshaphat, they were good men, but they began to decline in their old days; Asa was a good man, his heart was perfect, it is the Testimony that God gives of him, all his days; but he went and declined, he went and relied on the arm of flesh: when the Prophet tells him of it, he was angry with the Prophet, he imprisons the Prophet, and he began to smite the people, and God smites Asa with a disease in his feet, and so took him away; and it was best for Asa that he was taken away before a further declining: and so Jehosaphat did take part with a wicked King, and the Lord did shorten his days in abundance of love.

5. Again▪ Fifthly, God will shorten the days of his servants, when they are enabled to do much in a little time; when he hath caused them to run amain after himself, to follow him hard, and so through his grace have done the work of their Generation in a little time, then the Lord shortens the days of their dwelling in the body in abundance of love: when their work is done, the sooner their work is done, the sooner they are at rest; the Lord will not keep his people longer from their rest than needs must, he knows that their days are as the days of an Hireling, as Job speaks, full of labor, full of toil, and full of trouble, full of disquietness and hurryings, no rest; therefore so soon as ever they have done their work, God takes them; he loves to have his children bettered, he wonit put them to School longer than needs must, when he hath trained them up for heaven, he presently sends for them home, he hath longing desires to see them: Christ would have all his children round about him, and therefore when he hath caused them to do his work in a little time, he will then send for them, That where I am, you may be also; I am gone to prepare a place for you, and I will come again and receive you to glory. It shows how the Lord Christ doth hasten, he hath longing desires to see them, I am gone away, and I come again as soon as ever the work is done, he will not stay a minute when he hath fitted glory for them, and fitted them for glory, I will come; I will come again and take you to myself, he longs for them, and causes their hearts also to be breathing mightily after him; and therefore they shall not be absent from the Lord longer than needs must, but when he hath caused them to do the work of their Generation, he will take them away in abundance of love and mercy. There are some Objections to Answer, as concerning long life as a blessing, but so much for this time.

SERMON XI.

GEN. 5. 24. And Enoch walked with God, and he was not, for God took him.

HE was not, for God took him. I opened the phrase to you the last day, God took him to Communion with himself, to near Communion; the Saints whilst in the body are at a distance from God, Whilst we are present in the body, we are absent from the Lord, saith the Apostle; though God do now and then visit them, yet for the most part they are absent from God: they are put out to School, and here God will have his people trained up for Heaven, but when that change comes which is spoken of, why then, God is said to take them, he takes them home, he takes them into nighest fellowship and communion with himself: For God took him; the phrase holds forth that fullness of glory which the Saints are translated out of this world into; God dwells here in them, but they dwell in God; they here are depressed in their spirits through the weight of corruption; it is but a little they are able to hold of God; Ay, but in Heaven there God takes them, he takes them in to himself, Well done good and faithful servant, enter into the joy of thy Master, enter into it; they shall be as so many vessels that are cast into fullness of love, life and glory, they shall be filled full to the brim: God took him. It holds forth also the freeness of grace in receiving in any; even the best must enter in at this door of free grace, and no otherwise: though Enoch had walked with God so many years, three hundred sixty and five, yet it's free grace if God will receive Enoch at last; there are so many slips, so many failings, there are so many declinings, so many turnings aside, there is so much crookedness in the walks of the best of the Saints, that if God should deal with them in the rigor of his Justice, he might refuse them; and therefore it's grace, it's free grace that they are received, there's no other door they are to enter in at. I also considered (the last time) when it was that Enoch was taken, when did God take him? After he had lived three hundred sixty and five years, which was a short time, a very short time in that Age, when the Patriarchs lived seven hundred, eight hundred, nine hundred, almost a thousand years; Enoch a gracious man, one that walked with God, and yet he lived not half the years of those Generations, and of his son that came after him: God many times shortens the days of his servants in love. I told you what are those times in which he shortens the days of his servants in love and mercy.

1. First, When their lives are full of extraordinary warrings, when more than ordinary burdens are laid upon them: some have fiercer combatings with Satan's temptations than others, and some have heavier burdens both of corruptions, and of afflictions than others, I am a man that have seen affliction, says Jeremiah; as if none besides him had seen affliction; now many times God shortens the days of his servants in love, when their combatings have been extraordinary with corruptions and temptations, and the burden of their affliction heavy; it's true, the Lord could deliver them some other way, open some other way besides the door of the Grave, he could make them conquerors: but the Lord in wisdom sees it best for some of his servants, so long as they are in the body; in this condition it's needful for them so long as they are in the body to be grappling with their corruptions and temptations, fightings and buffetings; and therefore you ought not to call for death because of your afflictions, and because of your temptations, for the Lord is pleased many times in wisdom, to take this way to bring in full deliverance to his servants. And,

2. Secondly, When his servants live in a very evil time, in a corrupt Generation, then the Lord is pleased to shorten the days of his servants in love: It was a corrupt time that Enoch lived in; before the Flood the earth was degenerated, and violence covered the face of the earth before the Flood came, and then it was mercy for Enoch to be taken away betimes; the Lord knows what a burden it is for his servants to live at such a time when wickedness abounds, and so the Lord delivers many of his servants by shortening of their course. Again,

3. Thirdly, When great Judgments are coming upon them, either upon their Families, or upon the Kingdom and place that they live in, God hath then (sometimes) shortened the days of his servants: as God when he intended to bring destruction upon Jeroboam's Family, then cut short the days of one of his Children, Because some good thing was found in him towards the Lord God of Israel; God cut them off every man, but he went to his grave in peace, that he might not see that desolation: and so good Josiah, when he was young, the Lord was pleased to take away him, because of that Captivity which presently came upon the Jews after his being taken away. And,

4. Again, Fourthly, The Lord doth shorten the days of his servants, not because the seed of Faith should perish, that doth abide forever: I have prayed for thee, that thy Faith fail not; Ay, but the actings of their Faith may decline, and Christians may grow dead, and lose their first love, may fall off▪ and they may fall into Scandals, and a blurr to their Conscience and profession; now many times, the Lord to prevent this doth shorten the days of some of his servants: As I gave Instances of King Jehoshaphat; and Asa began to imprison and to oppose, and he might have done a great deal of evil, but God smites him with a disease in his feet, and he died, and it was in love to his soul. But again,

5. Fifthly, God loves his servants, and therefore when they have done much in a little time, and long for his appearance, O! when shall I come and appear before thee? So he calls alike for them, he hath longing desires to see them; when they have done the work of their Generation, he will take them to himself in abundance of love and mercy.

Object. But you will say, Is not long life a blessing? Hath not God promised to give long life to his servants, in Prov. 10. 27. The fear of the Lord prolongeth days; and so see what Job says, Job 5. 27. Thou shalt come to thy Grave in a full age, like to a Shock of Corn brought in in good season: Now how is this promise made good, that God takes away some of his servants in the midst of their days? How then do they come to the fullness of their days as in age, as a Shock of Corn in its full season? To this I may answer in divers things, which you may lay up for your satisfaction.

1. First of all, This may seem to be an Old Testament Promise, the Promise of the Old Testament or Old Covenant; for before the coming of Jesus Christ, God walked more in this way of temporal promises, and temporal blessings; and happily though there may come a time again when God shall walk in this way, and give out both temporal and spiritual, yet now God's present dispensation since the coming of Jesus Christ in the flesh, it's more spiritual, he gives out more spirituals and less of temporals, he gives out more of his own glory which he hath pleased to reveal in and through Jesus Christ, and that which he gives out now unto his servants in spirituals, may abundantly recompense the absence of all temporal mercies whatsoever. But,

2. Again, Secondly, That these Promises are conditional; all outward promises, promises of riches and honor, of health and children, and promises of long life, these are all conditional, God hath not promised them absolutely, but with this limitation, so far as he in infinite wisdom and fatherly love and care, shall see to be good for them; so far the Lord will fulfill any, yea all those temporal promises which are given out, so far as the Lord shall see to be good for them; and therefore if the Lord doth take away his servants, any of his servants betimes in the midst of their days, and do not give out these blessings of long life, it's because the Lord's sees it's best for them: they are strangers here, and it's not good for them that they should be long from home; he sees it in his wisdom, I say, to be best for them, because their days are evil, it's mercy that their days are few: God in wisdom put both these together, few and evil; says old Jacob in Gen. 47. 9. Few and evil have the days of the years of my life been, and I have not attained unto the days of the years of the life of my Fathers, in the days of their Pilgrimage: few and evil; the Lord sees it's good that they should be few, because they are evil. In Job 14. 1. Man that is born of a woman, is of few days and full of trouble; what a mercy is it that God hath put these together, few days and full of trouble! he is full of trouble, trouble from within, and trouble from without; he is troubled with corruption, temptation, affliction, with the sin of others, with the dishonor that is brought to God in the world: now when he is full of trouble, it's mercy that his days are few. That's a second Answer.

3. But again, Thirdly, I must say to that Objection concerning the promise of long life to the Saints, that this promise is made good to a gracious man or woman; when God takes them away they are full of days, he shall die in a full age, says Job, Full of days; why, a gracious man is full of days, because he is full of grace: he is full of holiness, and goodness, and therefore he hath filled up his days. A wicked man when God cuts him off, he is never full of days, in this respect his days are empty, his days are full of vanity, full of sin, they are spent as a shadow; but a gracious man is full of goodness, he is fully ripe, he is ripe for heaven, he is ripe for the grave at that time when God cuts him down, for he is God's Husbandry, God won't cut down his Corn before it be ripe, if he cut off betimes, he ripens betimes, he will cause them to fulfill their days, God will fill their days full of grace and holiness.

4. Again, Fourthly, We may see that this promise is made good, for a gracious man hath enough of life, when God calls him to die he hath enough of life; so that he is not taken away before his time, why, because he hath enough of life: It is enough, says the Prophet, Lord it is enough, therefore take me away; I am no better than my Fathers; even so God causeth his people to say, though he takes them away betimes, yet they shall say, Lord it is enough, I have enough of life, I have enough of the world, I see nothing desirable here, nothing that may provoke me to live longer here, and therefore if the Lord say, It is enough, he will say it's enough too. But this won't the wicked man, he will never say he hath enough: let him live an hundred years, twice, thrice told, yet he will never have enough: the righteous come to the Grave, but the wicked is dragged and haled to his Grave, he is not a Volunteer to his Grave. And therefore here is the promise made good, if God satisfy the hearts of his people, and enable them to say, Lord I have enough, enough of the world here, and if thou pleasest to expire my days, I can say, I have enough, I have enough.

5. Fifthly, Again, The time of the full accomplishment of this promise of long life to be given out is not yet come; there's a day when it shall be given out, when it shall be mercy to live long, when God shall give out long life: there seems to be such a thing spoken of; it is Prophesied by the Prophet Isaiah, Isa. 65. 22. this Prophecy relates to the end of the world, the latter days when there shall be a great restauration of the world, and of all things, they shall not be cut off in the midst of their days as formerly; says God, They shall not build, and another inhabit▪ they shall not build houses, and be cut off before they can build; they shall not plant, and another eat, for as the days of a tree, are the days of my people, and mine elect shall long enjoy the works of their hands: they shall be as the long-lived Oaks; this promise God will fulfil before the end, and it shall be a mercy then to live long; when the new Jerusalem shall come down from heaven, and when the Lamb shall be the light of the new Jerusalem, when Satan shall be bound, and shall not seduce the Nations, and tempt them, and when all enemies shall be put under the soles of their feet, when Jerusalem shall be a peaceable habitation, and a quiet resting place, when there shall be peace upon Israel, then long life shall be a blessing.

6. Sixthly and lastly, When God will fulfil this, it shall be a time of the accomplishment of the promises, in that God gives life and length of days, even forever and ever; there is the accomplishment of the promise, and therefore God is not behind-hand concerning this promise, if he promise long life on earth, and give an eternity of life in heaven, the creature is no loser; if a man shall promise you a shilling, and when he comes to pay, he shall give you a thousand pounds, will not you say this man is as good as his word? The Lord hath promised a long time on earth, and an eternity in heaven, you may well say it of him who is truth itself, that he will fulfil and make good his word: and therefore notwithstanding what may be objected, yet still it's true, it's not against the promise; but God may in love and mercy shorten the days of his people.

What shall we learn from this, God shortens the days of his servants in love? It will be useful to us divers ways. Why, Use 1. First of all, It lets us see that life and death is in the hand of God; God shortens, God took him, I say, life and death is in the hand of God, it's not in the hand of any creature whatsoever, My times are in thy hand, says David, and He that is our God is the God of Salvation, and to him belong the issues of Death: Enemies think that it is in their power to harm or to cut off; Laban thought it in his power to cut off Jacob; but he was deceived, it's in the hand of no creature to cut off the time of God's servants, but at the appointment of the Lord; and God doth it in love, when he cuts short the time of his servants, it's in love; if any wicked man shall attempt anything against the lives of his servants, that's from the malice of Hell, which God will avenge; and if any man shall attempt against his own life, that is not without horrible sin, for though God can cut short in love, yet if thou dost cut short thine own life, it's not without horrible sin; though indeed when God shortens, it's always in love: for what's the creature? Ah poor creature, a worm, that he should step up in the seat of God, and should pluck the issues of life and death out of the hand of God, which God doth challenge in a peculiar manner as his right. That's the first.

Use 2. Secondly, It may teach us, that though God cut short the time of his servants in love, yet he may cut short the time of many in wrath, in abundance of wrath: when his own people are ripe for heaven, he reaps them; and when wicked men are ripe for destruction, the Lord also cuts them down. In Psal. 55. 23. it's said there of wicked men, That blood-thirsty and deceitful men shall not live out half their days; God will cut them off in wrath: they shall live out those days that God hath determined, yet they shall not live out half their days in the course of nature that they might have done: and therefore see what Solomon says in Eccles. 7. 17. Be not thou over-much wicked, neither be thou foolish, why shouldst thou die before thy time: wickedness brings men to end their time before the course of nature be extinct; Oh, that wicked men would think of this; it would be very sad if their own hands should be upon themselves to bring them down: though it is mercy to the Saints at sometimes to be taken away early, yet when wicked men are cut off in the midst of their days, it is not without a great deal of displeasure and wrath of God. That's a second.

Use 3. Thirdly, This may teach us this Instruction, If God deal thus with his own people, what shall be the portion of the wicked? If this be done to the green tree, what shall become of the dry? If God cut off young Saints, what shall become of old sinners? Oh! that the hear-say of this dispensation might convince some, and move them to awake, and say, Come let us eat and drink, and tomorrow shall be as this day, and more abundant: Why do you put off the thoughts of God and Eternity to old age, and speak of returning to God another time? when thou knowest not what a day may bring forth, thou knowest not what may lie in the womb of tomorrow; God cuts off sometimes some of his people in the midst of their days, and what shall become of you? I shall speak only to you in the words of the Apostle James, Jam. 4. 13. and the Lord set them home to your hearts, Go to now, ye that say To day or tomorrow we will go into such a City, and continue there a year, and buy and sell and get gain: whereas you know not what shall be on the morrow: for what is your life? He shows the vanity of the cares of this life, and of wicked worldly men; they dream of a long time, of a continuance, and we will stay there a year; A year, says he? thou knowest not what tomorrow may bring forth; thou sayest, Stay, we will heap goods up, and what knowest thou, O fool, but this night thy soul may be taken away? Oh! that men, wicked men, and worldly men would look to themselves, and not promise to themselves time for hereafter; and if this be done to the green tree, what will be done to the dry? But again,

Use 4. Fourthly, This may be a ground of patience unto the servants of God in the midst of all their affliction; in the midst of all temptations and afflictions whatsoever; possess your souls in patience; Why? because the time is short, and if it be good for you, the Lord will make your days few, because they are evil; therefore possess your souls in patience: you complain of your afflictions; Why? they are not for an Eternity, a few days, those days are shortened, if you should live as long as they did before the Flood, seven, eight or nine hundred years, and all the time be tempted and afflicted; but now for the Elects sake, those days are shortened: your burden is but for a little time, your rest is long, therefore possess your souls with patience; O the wisdom and goodness of God in walking in this way, to and with his people! if your afflictions had been heavy and long too, that had been sad. It is the misery of Hell, heavy burdens to Eternity is the misery of Hell; Ay, but God's dispensation to you is quite contrary, and otherwise; when your days are evil they shall be few, and but for a little while, but when joy comes, that shall be for Eternity; O the goodness of God's dispensation! few days when they are evil, and an Eternity of days when entering into the possession of Joy: possess your souls with patience.

*5. Fifthly, Again, Will God cut off the times of his best servants? See and take that Counsel in Isa. 2. 22. Cease ye from man whose breath is in his nostrils, for wherein is he to be accounted of? Cease ye from man, from the best of men, for their breath is in their nostrils: Cease from affecting them over much, do not let the stream of your affections be any way inordinate, for wherein are they to be accounted? Remember what the Apostle says, The time is short, the fashion of this world passeth away: when he goes about to other things concerning this world, The time is short, says he, cease ye from man, and cease from trusting in him, his breath is in his nostrils; do not lay too much weight upon any man, the Lord cuts short the days of the best of his servants; therefore trust not in, do not lay too much weight upon them, do not say the comfort of your lives is bound up in them, and you can't live comfortably without them: oh, cease ye from trusting in man, it's much better to trust in the Lord, than to put confidence in man: by laying weight upon the creature you may break the creature; therefore take heed, though God may take away them that you trust in, in love and mercy, he may shorten their days in love, yet cease ye from trusting in man. That's a fifth. Again,*

Use 6. Sixthly, This may teach you to take heed of murmuring and repining when God takes away any of your relations in the midst of their years and days; Oh, how full of carnal reasonings are they? Oh, you conceive it much better if they had lived longer, if they had lived to man's age; what an honor might they have been to God, and a comfort to you if they had lived longer? These are carnal reasonings that arise from the flesh; know assuredly that if God shortened their days it was in love, it was best for them that they were so taken away, taken away at that time: why will you teach God? Will you teach God to gather in his Corn, in what season he shall do it? Know assuredly he will take them at the best, he will crop them at the best season, he loves his servants well, and he will put them off at the best advantage, both in life and death: and therefore know assuredly that whatsoever carnal reason may say on the contrary, it was according to the dispensation of God's love, though he takes them away in the midst of their days. That's a sixth.

Use 7. Seventhly, It may be a word of conviction to such as have lived long, and have lost of their former forwardness and zeal for God, such as have lived to grow worse; lived to be scandalous to the name of God, and to a holy profession; Oh, my friends, what shall we say? But that God orders things in infinite wisdom, you might say, poor creature, how much better had it been if God had taken you away before! Oh! to live to be a dishonor to God, to live to lose thy first love, and thy first zeal and forwardness for God, to be a scandal to profession, oh better that you had been taken away at the first, better that you had been hid in the Grave many years ago, that now your corruption should be discovered to the dishonor of your profession! and yet do not you say, there is no hope, and therefore we will wait no longer; the Lord invites you to return; return; oh that you would seek after your first love, and first zeal: strengthen the feeble hands and knees; if the Lord should come and take you away whilst you are in this condition, oh how uncomfortable will it be unto you, very uncomfortable! you lose your Crown; though I know (if you have interest in Christ) the Crown of glory is safe, yet there is a Crown which you will lose, if you return not speedily to the Lord; the Crown of a Christian is to flourish green, and be fruitful in old age, fat and flourishing in the Courts of the Lord; to be fresh and sweet, and to send forth an excellent savor, this is the Crown of a Christian, and this Crown you may lose, if death comes upon you whilst you are in that declining condition. Oh, therefore make hast to the Lord, pour out your cry continually that the Lord would be pleased to restore you again, and to establish you with his free spirit, that you may be fresh, fruitful and sweet, and may not be withered in time of gathering, when God shall come to pull and gather you; if you be dead and withered, you lose all your sweet scent. Oh, beg of the Lord that you may not be in that condition at that time when he shall come to gather you into his Barn. That's a seventh.

Use 8. Eighthly, Let us pray and wait for that time which before was spoken of, when there shall be no danger in long life, when long life shall be a mercy unto all the Saints, when the days of the Lord's people shall be as the days of a tree, and the Elect shall long enjoy the works of their hands; Oh, pray for the accomplishment of that promise, it will be very sweet: how much shall the Saints gain at that time, how much knowledge? yea, how much shall they do for God? Alas! we are of yesterday, and know nothing; oh get large experience, renewed experience: they shall grow in that day like an Oak tree, or a Cedar; there shall be no hindrances of growth; pray and wait for the accomplishment of that.

Use 9. Ninthly, This may support against the extreme of a short life, and a long uncomfortable; Oh, says the soul, I am pressing after the Lord, and breathing after him, and this is my fear, I shall be cut off before his work be done in me.

Fear it not, the Lord will not cut off the days of his servants but in love; if it be not for thy good, it shall not come unto thee: Old Simeon waited for the consolations of Israel, he might have many discouragements, what hopes had he to see Christ when he had one foot in the Grave? And yet at last he saw Christ the hope of his Salvation. But they may think if they should live, they should live to decay in profession, and to go backward; Oh fear not, I am persuaded, neither things present, nor things to come, even old age, shall separate you from the love of God in Christ Jesus: Though God do send for some of his servants, it's no argument that he do not love you though you live long; Mathusalem lived nine hundred years, the rest of the Patriarchs were holy men as well as others. That's a Ninth.

Use 10. Tenthly, This may teach to covet to desire to live much, rather than to live long: Oh, labor to do much for God while ye live, to do much for God in the service of your Generation; What ever your hand finds to do, do it with all your might; labor to redeem time, and take all seasons, and all opportunities of getting nigher God; Oh, lose no opportunity, lose no part of precious time: A Heathen could say, There's no time past, but there's something is worth the writing; let no part of your precious time be waste and nothing done; time is short, and therefore you had need live every part of time, live every hour, and live every moment; rather covet to live much than long: Oh, labor for an eternal life, this life is short, in a moment God shortens the time of the best of his servants; and therefore if this time be short, oh labor for an eternal life; and do what you do for God, with all your might, and with all your strength. He is an unwise man that will protract time, that will do that in a year which he might do in a day; Oh, covet much, you have a pattern of the Lord Jesus Christ, he lived not long on earth, but he did much in a little time, he wrought whilst it was day, he knew the night was coming; Christ did so, and Satan doth so, he knows his time is short, and he bestirs himself, he knows it must be now or never: if Satan be thus wise for his Kingdom, shall not we that profess ourselves to be Christ's, be thus wise in the matters of his Kingdom? Here is all the time you have to work in, oh you have no more working days, work apace for God, for in the end of the six days of this life there's a rest a coming; there's no work beyond the Grave, either in heaven or in hell; you that are Christ's, you shall not work after this life is at an end, your rest comes then; yea, that's the time of your sitting down, this is the time of your walking, not the time of your rest; and seeing you have no more time to eternity to work in, there's no more working days, be content to work now, be earnestly desirous to do all you can to lift up God and Christ, and his Kingdom, whilst you are on earth; for what know you, your time is short, and what know you, but that you may live even as Enoch, whose life was but half the days of the rest of the Patriarchs? Thus I have shewn you at what time Enoch was taken, at three hundred sixty and five years: It remains further to enquire, Wherefore did God take Enoch away, and why he did take him away at that time? and wherefore Enoch was taken in that extraordinary way, both soul and body to Heaven?

SERMON XII.

GEN. 5. the latter end of the 24 Verse. —And he was not, for God took him.

I Showed you the last day at what time God took Enoch, it was when he had not attained to half the years of the rest of that Generation. God sometimes shortens the days of his own servants in Love. I answered an Objection the last day.

Object. Is not long life promised as a blessing to the Saints? Thou shalt come to thy Grave in a full age, as a Shock of Corn in its season; How is this promise made good, when God takes away some of his people before they have attained to half their days, that they might have lived unto in the course of nature? I answered in many things.

Answ. 1. First, That this is an Old Testament promise: God walked then in a way of temporal promises more than now in this dispensation under the Gospel in which he gives out less temporals, and more spirituals. Besides, I told you it was a conditional promise; as in all the promises of outward good things that are made to God's people, the promises of health, strength, riches, and honor, and of long life: they must be taken with this limitation; so far as God in infinite wisdom shall see to be best for them, so far shall he give out to them; and therefore if God do take away any of his people at any time, it is because God sees it best for them to be taken home to himself, it is best for them to have a short time, because that their days are evil, Man that is born of a woman, says Job, is one of few days, and full of trouble; and there is a mercy that both these go together, few of days and full of trouble. Besides I answered, That the promise is made good, though God do take away some of his people whilst young, yet the promise is made good; they come to the Grave in full age, because they come to the Grave full of grace, he is not cut down before he is ripe, they are not like the Corn on the house top that is burnt up before it is ripe, but God can make them full of grace, which is a full age; and herein his promise is made good. Besides, his promise is made good, because God makes them willing to leave the world when he calls for them: the righteous man when God calls for him, he says as Elias said, Lord it is enough, if thou sayest it is enough that I have lived so long upon earth, I will say so too, Lord I have enough of living here, I have enough of this world, here's nothing that is desirable, or that may draw forth my affection to live longer, if this be the determined time of God. A wicked man hath never life enough, though he liveth a hundred years, twice told, yet he is as greedy to live longer, as at first; but God satisfies the hearts of his servants, in that they have lived long enough, and their time is come, and that satisfies them; and thus they have length of days continued. And besides, God doth promise to his people a great restauration that is to be before the end of the world: as the days of a tree, so shall the days of my servants be, and mine Elect they shall long enjoy the work of their hands; it shall then be a mercy to live long, when the new Jerusalem shall come down from heaven, and when the Lamb shall be the light of it, when Satan shall be bound, and the Accuser of the Brethren cast out, and wicked men put under, when corruption shall be subdued, then long life shall be a mercy. But however I answer, That if God do shorten our days here and give us an Eternity in heaven, we are no losers, but God is as good as his word. If a man promise you a Shilling, and shall at that day give you a hundred or a thousand pounds, he is not unfaithful, but he is as good as his word; and thus the Lord promised long life, which is an eternity, better than life here, and wherein he fulfils his word. It should and ought to be the desire of all to live much, rather than to live long, to live much in a little time; thus did Christ, he lived much, he glorified the name of his Father in the time he lived, he did much in a little time; and thus it should be our care, to do much for God in a little time, and to lay hold of eternal life betimes; because this life is momentary and vanishing; the Devil takes his opportunity, he works much, knowing he hath but a little time, because he knows his time is short, therefore he works with all his might, and plies his work to deceive the Nations.

If he be so subtle for his Kingdom, how wise ought we to be to promote the Kingdom of Christ? Oh! whatsoever we find to do for God, let us do it with all our might, and with all our strength; for thus hath Christ given us his Example. I shall proceed to that which remains, God took him.

I shown you before, Whither Enoch was taken: He was taken up into Heaven, he was not dissolved, he died not as other men; I proved it from the Epistle to the Hebrews, that he was translated that he should not see death.

Quest. But you will say, Wherefore was Enoch thus translated? Why was he not dissolved? Why died he not as others? Why translated that he should not see death?

Answ. I answer, First, Because he was a remarkable Type of Jesus Christ; I say, he was a remarkable Type of Christ. For,

1. First, He was matchless in his Generation, There was none like him, above all the men in the world Enoch walked most close with God in his time, he was matchless and none like him, and herein he was a Type of Jesus Christ, who was matchless in the world; whilst he was in the world, he was as the Apple-tree in the midst of the Trees in the Forest, there was no guile found in his mouth; he walked exactly with God when he was here upon earth, there was no stumbling blocks, no slips in the whole course of Jesus Christ. But,

2. Secondly, Enoch was a Type of Christ, in that God was so exceedingly well pleased with him; He received this Testimony, says the Apostle in Heb. 11. 5. that he pleased God; God was pleased with him, and herein he was a notable Type of Christ: the Father is pleased only in him, Behold my servant whom I uphold, says he in Isa. 42. 1. mine Elect in whom my soul delighteth: he was infinitely well pleased with Christ; the good pleasure of God towards Enoch, it was but a drop of that love, and that good pleasure which was poured out upon the head of Jesus Christ; the Father was pleased with his Person, infinitely pleased in his righteousness, pleased in all that he did, and pleased in his sufferings, Isa. 53. 10. It pleased the Father to bruise him; he was pleased with all those that Christ represented, he is pleased with the whole Family of Christ, even with all that belong unto him in Heaven and Earth, and that only for his sake; it is said of him in Matth. 3. the latter end, This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased. So then my Brethren, is there ever a soul that is seeking after the good pleasure of God? the manifestation of the love of God unto it? that is looking and waiting for some token of acceptance from heaven? Would you be in the ready way unto it? Then look unto the Lord, even Jesus Christ, of whom Enoch was a Type, look unto him in his love, all the love and all the good pleasure that is in the heart of God, runs down through Jesus Christ unto poor creatures: Oh, run to Christ, make hast to Christ, throw down yourselves at the Foot-stool of Christ, and clasp about him by Faith, and know that there is a plentiful Box of good pleasure and love broken upon the head of Christ by the Father, that will run down unto every soul that sits under the skirt and shadow of Christ. That's a Second thing, wherein Enoch was a Type of Christ.

3. Thirdly, Enoch was a Type of Christ, as Christ was a Conqueror over Death; and this was held forth in Enoch's translation, He did not see Death; Enoch did not see corruption as the bodies of others do, and he was in this a Type of Jesus Christ, that was the holy One of God, that he should not see corruption; he did not see corruption; Enoch's conquest was but a Type of this conquest and victory of Jesus Christ, that he got for his people over Death and the Grave: and therefore you that desire not to be dismayed when Death comes, when this enemy shall set upon you; Oh, that you would beforehand look unto the conquest and victory of Christ. There is a time when this your enemy will meet you all in the Field: Would you not be dismayed? Would you be able to look Death in the face? Then I beseech you, beforehand, live upon Faith in Christ, upon the conquest of Christ, upon the victory of Christ, he hath broken the force of death, taken away the sting of it, he hath dismayed it. Oh, live upon the conquest that Christ hath made over death, that so your hearts may not fail when you come to grapple with this last enemy, which is Death, Christ hath overcome Death gloriously; and Enoch was but a Type of Christ, and a shadow of it in his translation. That's the first, wherefore Enoch was translated in an extraordinary way, because he was an extraordinary Type of Christ.

2. But Secondly, Enoch was thus translated, because Enoch whilst he lived, exercised a special faith; I say, Enoch had a special Faith, a most remarkable faith, in some good and great deliverance that God would work for him either in Death or from Death: He trusted God whilst he lived in victory over Death, that Death should be conquered for him, and Death if it came should do him no harm; I say, he had a special faith in this respect; It appears by two Demonstrations.

1. First, In respect of that bold, that holy bold profession that Enoch makes of God in his Generation, which was a most corrupt time, and dangerous to make any profession of God in: righteous Abel was killed for his profession, for his walking with God, his Brother arose up and slew him, and yet Enoch is not dismayed, he will not turn aside from God, he will not balk his profession for fear of death, for fear of the sons of violence; the posterity of Cain was multiplied, and the earth was filled with violence at that time, and there was enmity in that seed of Cain, against the seed of Seth, which God raised up instead of Abel, so that it was dangerous for Enoch to make any profession of God in his Generation; and yet Enoch was not dismayed, he feared not the hand of violence what it could do to him, but he trusted that God would deliver him either from Death or in Death. And,

2. Secondly, It appears that Enoch had such a remarkable faith, if we consider what was the name that he gave unto his Son, as in this Chapter, He begat a Son, and called his name Methuselah, that is, Mortis gladium, the sword of Death, or the dart of Death, he believed there was one a coming that should be the death of Death; one that should overcome death for him, and for all the people of God, and therefore called his son after that name, The Sword of Death: He knew there was a Messiah a coming that should send a challenge to death, as in Hos. 13. 14. O death, I will be thy Plague; O Grave, I will be thy destruction; Christ sent a challenge and performed this; Enoch saw this by faith, and all his days he lived in the contemplation of it, and sucked sweetness in the thoughts of it, and when e're death came, he believed it should do him no harm. This will teach us three or four Lessons.

1. First, There is nothing lost by making a bold profession of Christ in evil times, in the midst of dangers: Abel was slain because he walked with God, and yet Enoch will not go back, and Enoch lost nothing in conclusion; Oh, how often doth our Savior call upon Christians, his Disciples and others, Fear not them that can kill the body, and can do no more; the fear of man brings a snare; how many poor creatures are ensnared through this fear, the fear of man? That when God convinces of the truth, and of the way of God, the soul submits unto it, and yet dares not hold it forth, because of the fear of man, because it's a way that may be persecuted, that the Powers of the world will persecute it, and oppose it; O this fear of man brings a snare; what says our Savior in Matth. 10. 39. He that will save his life shall lose it, but he that will lose his life, shall find it; it is made good many times in this world: He that will save his life shall lose it; when a man will turn aside from God, when he will balk any way of God to save his life, or to save some comforts of his life, Oh, it will befall that poor creature as with the Prophet, Some Lion comes in the way, he meets him and slays him: But he that will lose his life shall save it; he remembers the three Children spoken of in Daniel, they lost nothing by their bold profession, they were willing to lose their lives, and so they saved their lives: and thus did they, and so did Enoch.

2. Secondly, It doth teach us how much God is delighted with the faith of his people: Enoch lived by Faith in a special manner, and how was the heart of God taken with Enoch? He was well pleasing unto God, so well pleasing that God could not long be without him; puts forth his hand and takes him up to himself; Oh, how greatly is the heart of God and Christ taken with Faith! We never read that Jesus Christ wondered at anything but at Faith: twice he wondered at the Faith that was given out to some of his servants; as in Matth. 8. Christ wondered at it, O, says he, at the 10 Verse, when Jesus Christ heard it, he marvelled and said to them that followed him, Verily I say unto you, I have not found so great a Faith, no, not in Israel; When Jesus Christ heard it, he marvelled; and so the heart of Christ was taken with the Faith that was given out to the woman of Canaan, in Matth. 15. O woman, great is thy Faith, be it unto thee even as thou wilt: Faith gains the will of Christ; what a great deal hath God done to encourage his people to believe? Faith finds not what it expecteth, but it finds more than ever it expected; certainly Methuselah believed death should do him no harm, and therefore he feared not death, and thought not of such a way as this is, but God was better to him than his Faith. You have a strong God, what encouragement is here? You have a strong Savior; O let not your faith be weak, especially seeing the Lord is so delighted with it; he gives faith whatsoever it expects; nay, even beyond it's expectation. Again,

3. Thirdly, This teaches us, That to live much by faith is the way to make our translation easy; thus it was with Enoch, he lived all his days by faith, and see how easy his translation was to him: there's nothing honors God in the world so much as faith doth; now therefore God delights to honor Faith, because it honors him, it hath the promise, They that honor me, I will honor; I beseech you then, you that would have an easy change (and who would not have an easy change, an easy translation? when death comes who would not have a large door set open to them, and go with full sails for heaven?) If this be the desire of your hearts, then labor to live much by faith; it is faith that will set the door wide open, it will minister abundance of entrance into the everlasting Kingdom of our Lord; the spirit of faith will fill the soul with full sails, it shall go to Heaven with full sails; thus it was with Enoch, who lived by faith.

4. But again, Fourthly, A fourth thing that we may learn is this, that when God doth give out a special faith, he doth give out some special mercy; when God gives out a special faith, a particular faith, he that persuades the heart to believe it, it shall be easy to him. Enoch was persuaded in a special faith to believe something concerning death that God would do for Enoch, and he did believe; it is rare and extraordinary; this special faith that doth concern such and such as a special mercy that God doth put the soul to seek after it, if the heart be persuaded by God to believe such a particular mercy to be given out, certainly if God do persuade the heart to wait for that mercy, that mercy shall be given out: see David in Psal. 27. 4. One thing have I desired of the Lord: that will I seek after; that I may dwell in the house of the Lord all the days of my life, to behold the beauty of the Lord, and to enquire in his holy Temple. There he had a desire to come back again to Jerusalem to see the Lord in his Temple, and his heart was carried out strongly to believe it; he was banished by Saul a mighty King, and he durst not come into the Land, and how then could he come to the Temple? yet he would not fear, for that one thing that God had put in his heart to seek after, for that his heart was upheld in it. And thus God may deal with some of his servants, when he doth raise up his people's hearts to believe some special mercy, that mercy shall be given out according to their faith. That's a second mercy why Enoch was thus translated, he was one that had a special remarkable saith, that something God should do for him in or about Death.

There's a third Question follows, Wherefore Enoch was thus translated?

The Answer is, That so his translation might preach unto the men of that Generation, yea, to all succeeding Generations, that there shall be a Resurrection of the Body: I say, therefore did God thus translate Enoch, that his translation in body to heaven might witness to them, and so to all other Generations, that there is a time when that the bodies of the Saints shall be co-partners with their souls in Glory: Here God Preached the Doctrine of the Resurrection of the Body, by Enoch's translation; in all Ages God hath not left himself without witness, concerning this great truth, the Resurrection of the Body; and certainly the Lord saw that there was need that he should bear witness of this truth: there was need then, and there is need now, even in this Generation, that we should be informed, persuaded, and rooted in this Doctrine of the Resurrection of the Body; there's great need that Christians should be confirmed in it, in the knowledge and in the full persuasion of it. For,

1. First of all, It is the Doctrine that the Devil hath always sought to over-throw, the powers of Hell have bandied against it, and how hath the Devil by his Instruments, by Atheistical men opposed this Doctrine in every Age? It hath been opposed, and it is still opposed. I shall show you what opposition is made against it, that so you may be confirmed in it. It's sad to think that some that have formerly made a profession, should fall so far as to deny a Resurrection; and yet such a seducing spirit is gone forth in the world: I shall show you what the Atheist hath against it, that your hearts may be confirmed in this Doctrine.

Quest. Why, First, Say they, it's against reason: How is it possible that the bodies of men should be raised up again, whenas their bodies are devoured & consumed in the heart of the earth, they are turned into the very elements again, into their first principles, and how is it possible that the same bodies should be raised up again?

Answ. To this, I will answer in the words of our Savior Christ, O, says he, you err, not knowing the Scripture, nor the power of God; for that was the answer that Christ gave unto the Sadducees, that denied the Resurrection, in Matth. 22. 29. Ye err, not knowing the Scriptures; he tells them, they were not acquainted with that which God had spoken in his Word, he brings one Scripture that they did not know, and therefore they erred because they did not know it: Have not you read, says he, that which was spoken unto you by God, saying, I am the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob; they said there was no Resurrection; says Christ, Poor creatures, you say so, because you do not know the Scriptures, ye err therefore because you know not the Scriptures: God says, I am the God of Abraham; God says this after Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob are dead and gone, that he is the God of Abraham, therefore there is something of Abraham yet remains, and Abraham shall live again, for God says he owns them, and says, ye know not the power of God, Ye err not knowing the Scriptures, and the power of God: you measure God by the arm of flesh, because it's impossible to you, you think it's impossible to God, whenas God is infinite, and can do whatsoever he please; if you did but consider the power of God, says he, you would not err on this manner, even to deny the Resurrection as a thing impossible: Why, who made the world? Who made all things out of nothing? Who brought light out of darkness? Certainly to raise up the dead is not a greater matter than to make the World of nothing; certainly if you had known the Scriptures, you would not have denied the power of God in raising from the dead. But the Devil is subtle, and therefore when reason won't do, he flees to Scripture, he will bring you Scripture to deny the Resurrection; that Scripture is urged by some Atheistical spirits, 1 Cor. 15. 50. Now this I say Brethren, that flesh and blood cannot inherit the Kingdom of God; therefore, say they, the Scripture is against the Resurrection, there shall be no resurrection, because flesh and blood cannot inherit the Kingdom of God.

To this I answer,

1. First, That sinful flesh and blood cannot inherit the Kingdom of God, corrupt man cannot inherit the Kingdom of God; but the bodies of the Saints shall be raised without sin, there shall be no defilement when they come out of the Grave, they shall be purified sufficiently; and therefore then they may inherit the Kingdom of God. And,

2. Secondly, It's true, that weak, frail, corruptible flesh and blood cannot inherit the Kingdom of God, but when the bodies of the Saints be raised up, they shall not be weak, frail and corruptible as their bodies are now; no, they shall leave all their weaknesses, all their frailties shall be left behind them, all these shall be left in the Grave; therefore the Apostle answers sufficiently in the 53 verse of that Chapter, For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on Immortality; frail corruptible flesh and blood cannot inherit the Kingdom of God: but it shall not be so at the Resurrection, but this corruptible shall put on incorruption, and this poor mortal body shall put on Immortality, it shall no more be clothed with frail flesh and blood, but it shall put on new robes, new robes that shall not be changed, and that are not subject to change, that shall not wear away, but shall abide forever in the Heavens, and therefore there is nothing in this against the Resurrection of the body, but it shall be partner with the soul in the blessedness of Heaven.

But there's another place that the Atheist doth allege from Scripture, and that is from Solomon, what he says in Eccles. 3. 19. For that which befalleth the sons of men, befalleth Beasts, even one thing befalleth them: as the one dieth, so dieth the other; yea, they have all one breath, so that a man hath no preeminence above a beast: for all is vanity. Hence the Atheist concludes that there's no Resurrection, for when death comes, it's with man as a beast; who knoweth the spirit of man that goeth upward, and the spirit of the beast that goeth downward?

To this I answer, That Solomon doth not speak in his own person, he speaks in the person of the Atheist, he tells you what is the Atheists conclusion, what he says in his heart because of those oppressions that he saw under the Sun, I said in my heart concerning the estate of the sons of men, that God might manifest them, and that they might see that they themselves are beasts. There you have the thoughts of Solomon, there he speaks his own, it was a conclusion of his from the observation that he saw under the Sun, to see how one man oppressed another, even like beasts; and there he brings in the conclusion of the flesh, and the conclusion of the spirit: the conclusion of the spirit is, God shall judge betwixt the righteous and the wicked, and so he brings them in scoffingly, Who knows the spirit of a man that goeth upward, &c. you see it was not Solomon's, it was far from Solomon's thoughts that there should be no Resurrection, in Eccles. 11. 9. Rejoice, O young man, in thy youth, and let thine heart cheer thee in the days of thy youth, and walk in the light of thine eyes: But know thou, for all these things God will bring thee into Judgment. Solomon concludes with the Resurreon, and it was the conclusion of his Book, in his last Chapter, 13, 14 verses, Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter: Fear God and keep his Commandments, for this is the whole duty of man. For God shall bring every work into Judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil. You see how the Devil by his Agents doth strike at this Doctrine of the Resurrection, he destroys all Godliness, all the power of Godliness, he destroys the Kingdom of God at once, and he builds up his own Kingdom forever; If there be no Resurrection, then says the Atheist, Let us eat and drink, and tomorrow shall be as this day, and more abundant: If our hopes were only in this life, we were of all men most miserable; it destroys the whole mystery of Godliness, then all should be in vain, Preaching and Hearing in vain, and your faith in vain, if there be no Resurrection: Now therefore, I beseech you, get your hearts established in this Resurrection. The Devil plays not at small game, but he strikes at the fullness of the root, at the Scriptures, he strikes at the Resurrection. O get your hearts established. Some that have been as stars in the Firmament, have been swept down so low as to deny the Resurrection of the body: know therefore that it is the Will of the Father, that Jesus Christ should raise up; all his people at the last day; so he tells them, and so he would have all his people believe it, it is the Will of the Father, that of all that he hath given me, I should lose none, but he will raise them up at the last day: and know that your bodies shall as certainly be raised up again, as the body of Jesus Christ was raised up, there was a seminal virtue in Christ, but it was not so in others, they did rise, but Christ arose as a common person, and his Resurrection is as the seed of the Resurrection of their bodies in the conclusion; even as certainly as Christ's body was raised from the Grave, so shall thine; and know if it were not so, Christ should not be complete, the body of Christ should not be complete; for all his people are a part of his body, if the head be risen, the members also shall rise, for Christ without them is not complete: and the body shall arise, because without the body the man is not complete; I say, man is not complete without the body; the soul waits for the Resurrection of the body, it is not complete, it hath not its fullness of joy until the Resurrection: and therefore it's said in Rev. 6. 10. the souls under the Altar cry out, How long Lord holy and true, dost not thou judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth? The soul thinks long when it shall meet with its old friend again, the body: Oh Lord how long, say they, shall we be in this condition? Now seeing it is so, there shall certainly be a Resurrection of the body at last: and if there shall be a Resurrection of the body, then I beseech you, consider what manner of persons we ought to be, how should you endeavor after holiness in the body, seeing there shall be a Resurrection of the body; whilst you are in the body, how should you demean yourselves in all holiness? O what need is there that you should get faith in Christ, to cover, and to wash away all those sins and defilements of the body? And how careful should you be to keep your bodies holy, as the Temples of the holy Ghost? That so when your souls and bodies are parted, there may be a longing for a Resurrection, that your soul may say, Lord how long, how long, when shall that poor body that sleeps in the dust be raised up? It will not be so with wicked men, they won't call for a Resurrection; the souls of the wicked had rather their bodies should sleep perpetually, that there should be no morning, that there should be no Gaol delivery, rather be in Prison than come forth to the Assizes; but it shall not be so with the Saints in their state of separation of soul from the body, they think long that their bodies may be raised from the Grave, that their souls may be copartners with them in the glory that Christ shall give out. And to say no more, in the Last place, I beseech you (with the Apostle) comfort one another with these sayings. Do but consider how comfortable this Doctrine of the Resurrection is in itself; O the Resurrection of the body, a great deal of a Christians comfort is laid up in it: The Resurrection of the body may be comfort to you in all your afflictions that you meet withal whilst you are in the body; in the midst of all your infirmities and weaknesses and troubles whilst you are in the body: When this corruptible shall put on incorruption; Oh! how willingly should we spend and be spent for Christ, because he will give it all back at the Resurrection again? How willingly should we lay down our bodies, our lives for Christ, if Christ call for them, because there is a Resurrection of the body: All that the Father hath given him, it is the Will of the Father that he should raise them up at the last day. It will be comfort to you when you come to lay your heads in the Grave at rest, you shall not be in Prison forever, your bodies shall not lie in the dark Dungeon forever; No, Christ hath taken away the horror of the Grave, and he would not have you meditate horror there; the Covenant of God, (you that are his people) holds with your bodies, where ever you are, the Covenant of God lays hold upon your scattered bones, the Covenant of God holds with their very bones, and Christ will come to open those Prison doors: the Apostle says, the whole Creation groans, Rom. 8. 22. For we know that the whole Creation groaneth, and travelleth in pain together until now, waiting for that deliverance in that great day, the day of Resurrection, the very earth shall travel, and it groans to bring forth, even all those sons and daughters that have lain so long in the bowels of the earth, even all that have been buried in the Earth and Sea, it groans to be delivered of them; and therefore what matter of comfort is this? The Lord would have you assured of this, That there shall be a Resurrection of your bodies, he hath taught it in the Type, whilst you have seen Enoch, Enoch translated in the body; and he hath given you a greater confirmation by Jesus Christ, who is risen and sits at the right-hand of the Father: he is the seminal Comforter, therefore O ye Saints, be ye comforted waiting for that day of Resurrection. And so much for this time.

SERMON XIII.

GEN. 5. the latter end of the 24 Verse. —For God took him.

I Desire you with patience one hour longer, then I hope through God's assistance to finish that which I have been so long insisting upon, from this Text. The last day we inquired wherefore God took Enoch in that extraordinary manner, why was he translated that he should not see death: I gave three Answers then. I shall proceed to a further Answer to this Question.

Quest. Wherefore Enoch was thus Translated that he should not see Death?

Answ. It was, That so the Lord might be a defense to that great Mystery, even in that Generation, that he might give them a taste, and so see of that wonderful good that God should work towards the end of the world, when Christ shall come in his glory, when the bodies of all the Saints that are alive shall be changed, when they shall not see Death (as Enoch was translated that he saw not death) I say, here God gave some first-fruits of that wonderful work that he should do for his people at his next coming, when the Saints that are alive shall not die, but shall all have their living upon the face of the Earth, and be taken up as Enoch was, and as Elias was, even so shall they be taken up, and lifted up to meet the Lord in the Air: and here is a Mystery which is more fully made known to us by our Lord Jesus, since the coming of Christ in the flesh; see what the Apostle speaks concerning this great mystery of the change of those at Christ's coming, in 1 Cor. 15. 51. Behold, I show you a mystery, we shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last Trump (for the Trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed:) Again the same Apostle doth plainly declare this mystery to the Thessalonians, 1 Thes. 4. 15, 16. For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive, and remain unto the coming of the Lord, shall not prevent them which are asleep. For the Lord himself shall descend from Heaven with a shout, with the voice of the Arch-Angel, and with the Trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first: then we which are alive and remain, shall be caught up together with them in the Clouds, to meet the Lord in the Air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord. He doth reveal this mystery in all the parts of it; we that are alive shall not prevent them that sleep: Christ shall first descend, and the Trumpet shall blow, and they shall be raised, and then shall we be changed.

But you will say, Doth not this cross other Scriptures? Is it not said, that it is appointed for all men once to die? Why then doth the Apostle say, We shall not all die, we shall not all sleep?

I Answer, First of all, That this Word of the Lord is not crossed, though the Lord is pleased to mitigate the sentence: there shall be a kind of death to the Saints that are then alive when Christ shall come, they shall not die properly, there shall not be a separation of body and soul: yet there shall be a metaphorical death, there shall be a change, and so great a change, even as death is (the change of the Resurrection meeting together) which certainly is very great: and this cannot be without some fear, and some horror, which shall be even as the horror of death unto the Saints: for though there shall be no harm, they shall not be harmed when the first Trumpet shall blow, no harm to the Saints, all the woe shall be past; but yet I say, there may be a great deal of cause of fear of death, for Christ shall first descend before they be changed; and therefore there is room left for fear and horror, the Text says Christ shall first come with thousands, and ten thousands of Angels, and the Trump shall blow, and the dead shall be raised, and all this before those that are alive shall be changed; and then, says he, we that are alive shall be changed, and be caught up even with them. Now Brethren, seeing God hath seen this needful, that this mystery should be revealed in all Ages, therefore a glimpse of it must be given out to those Generations in which Enoch lived when he was taken up: and so afterward the same was thought of Elias when he was taken up into Heaven; The Lord hath seen it needful, I say, that this mystery should be known, and if it were needful for them, then it is much more needful for us; it is needful for us upon whom the ends of the earth are come, that we should know this mystery, and that being in a continual expectation of the fulfilling of it; it is needful both for the consolation, and for the instruction of the Saints that this mystery should be made known.

For their consolation, Why, the time is coming, when Death shall be swallowed up, when the Saints shall not die, but they shall be changed: this change is more desirable than death; God's people in all Ages have longed after it, and therefore God hath revealed that there is such a change to be, and that all his people might take in the comfort of it beforehand: God hath in all Ages given warning, as if it might be in that very Age; that his people might beforehand take in the comfort of it: the Apostle Paul declares that he and the rest of the Saints were more desirous to live to this time than to be dissolved by death, 2 Cor. 5. 2. We groan earnestly, desiring to be clothed upon with our house which is from Heaven: we would not be unclothed, says he, there is a kind of reluctancy in Nature to be unclothed, to put off from the body, we had rather be clothed upon with our house which is from Heaven: we had rather, if the Lord please, that a change of raiment might be given out that shall endure forever, that Mortality might be swallowed up of life, and that this corruptible body might put on incorruption; Now, I say, it being so desirable, and the Saints had rather, and are very desirous to see this change, God therefore in all Ages will not conceal it but make it known (as not impossible it might come in that very Age in which they live) that so possibly they may take in the comfort of it beforehand: at least the Saints, though they do not see to this day, you shall not be any losers, you may die in the Faith of it, and take in the sweetness of this promise, you shall be no losers, you shall not be prevented, they shall not be in Heaven before you, with Christ before you, but even you that lie in the Grave shall be first raised, and then those that are alive shall be changed.

The Lord would also have you be instructed by this mystery; he sees it needful to be declared, that his people, his Saints might live in a continual expectation of this change, this great change that shall be when Christ shall come again, and therefore the time was concealed that the Saints might live in a continual expectation of it, and the Apostle speaks it as to his age, Even we that are alive shall be changed; because the Lord would have his people in every Age to live as those that do expect the coming of Jesus Christ, when this great and wonderful change shall be: you had need always stand upon your watch, you know not when your Lord will come, at what hour he will return from the Wedding, and therefore we had need be always prepared, and stand with our loins girt, and Lamps trimmed, for there is some dread (for a moment at least) to the Saints when Christ shall come, it will be worse if you shall be found slumbering and sleeping in carnal security, it will be a great amazement when Christ shall come, and thousand of thousands of Angels shall come with him and proclaim his glory, when there shall be a great cry at midnight, The Bridegroom is come, certainly it will be a great amazement even to the Saints themselves that shall be in carnal security; therefore it concerns us every moment to be upon our Watch-Tower. You see wherefore it was that God took Enoch away in an extraordinary way that he should not see death: there is one Question yet behind.

Quest. Why did God take Enoch away at this time?

The main Answer which I shall give, is this,

Answ. The Lord when he takes his people away doth thereby give warning; by taking Enoch away, That there was a deluge of wrath coming upon the old World: the Lord would put them upon it to consider what his event should be in this providence, that so if possible they might prevent that deluge of wrath, that Flood of water that came and swept them away. When the Lord doth suddenly take away those that are found faithful in their Generation, it is a warning of wrath to come: I say, when God doth suddenly snatch away those that are found faithful in their Generation, it doth often presage some great wrath to come; you have an express Scripture for it, in Isa. 57. 1. The righteous perisheth, and no man layeth it to heart, and merciful men are taken away, none considering that the righteous are taken from the evil to come: When God takes away righteous and merciful men, and those that are left behind, do not lay it to heart, if they do not consider it, and make use of it, it is a certain sign of evil that is to come upon them. God took away Enoch in his Generation, and he took away all the rest of the Patriarchs that are spoken of in this Chapter, they were all taken away before the Flood of waters came upon the world; Methusalah (he that was Enoch's son) lived the longest, and it is thought he was taken away either that very year, or the year before the Flood came upon the old World, God swept away them all, even those that were remarkable in their Generation, and then wrath comes upon the world: O that thou wouldst hide me in the Grave, says Job, in Job 14. 13. O that thou wouldst hide me in the Grave, and keep me secret until thy wrath be past; God hath some hiding places or other for his people, and sometimes the Grave is a hiding place: though sometimes Job doth not bespeak the Grave, yet here sometimes God hideth in the Grave till such time as wrath be over. Such as walk with God in their Generation, they are Christ's Flock, though they be Pilgrims and Strangers upon the earth, Sojourners, Travelers, yet they are Christ's Flock, here they rest, and many times Christ will Fold his Flock; before a Storm comes the Shepherd gathers his Flock together: When a great Storm of Hail and Fire came upon the Egyptians, the Israelites that were in Goshen gathered all their Flocks together, and then they were safe; Christ shrouds the most of his Flock, the chief of his Flock from some approaching wrath that draws near.

2. Secondly, They are the Lord's Household-stuff; I say, his people are his choice Household-stuff, they are my Jewels, In the day that I make up my Jewels. When a man removes away all his best Household-stuff, and carries away his Jewels, you may guess that man doth not intend to be robbed: and so when the Lord doth remove his Jewels, his choice Household-stuff, it is a sure sign of his departure, at least God gives warning to that people, and if they wonit take warning, and cry unto the Lord as they did, O why goest thou away and stayest for a night? And if God depart from a place, what follows, your place is left to you desolate, and woe be to you: What a woe doth he threaten by the Prophet Hosea, Hos. 9. 12. Woe also to them when I depart from them: Woe, desolation, and ruin certainly comes upon a people when God departs from them.

3. Thirdly, Again, The righteous they are the Pillars of the place: such as walk with God in their Generation, they are the Pillars of Families, the Pillars of Cities, and the Pillars of Kingdoms, nay, they are the Pillars of the whole World: so says the Psalmist, The earth shook, O Lord, and I will bear up the Pillars of it; If the Pillars of the House be plucked down, how can the House stand? If you see one Pillar after another fall, you will conclude certainly that House wonit hold long; Why, the Saints are the Pillars of the World, and if it were not for their sakes, the earth would mingle together presently; but you must know this is not from any merit, worth, or righteousness of theirs, though they are thus called Pillars, I say, it is not for any worth or righteousness of the Saints, or the best on earth: but they are called Pillars, and they bear up Kingdoms, and they bear up the Earth,

1. First, Because God is entreated by their supplications; I say, they prevail, they stand at the gap, they prevail with God to keep out wrath and Judgment, that it may not break in: and so you know Moses pleads with God, and so long as Moses pleaded with God, God could do nothing against Israel, Let me alone that I may destroy them: and so Abraham pleads for Sodom that God would spare that City for ten righteous men's sakes, and God grants that request: and it is very observable that Abraham gave over first, God did not give over first, it is like if he had gone lower he might have prevailed; but there was a holy ingenuity and faithfulness in him, when he considered, that in so many Cities there should not be ten righteous men there, why, he could not in ingenuity ask any less: and so by their supplication they bear up Kingdoms and Nations.

2. Secondly, And then again, The Lord doth spare places and people many times, from the care that God hath of them, for the care that the Lord hath of his own people, Wilt thou destroy the righteous with the wicked? Rather spare the wicked for the righteous sake: and God doth choose this way, this is God's way, he will rather spare the wicked for the righteous sake, because God is exceeding careful of his own people, he fears lest they should suffer, he will rather have the tares grow with the Corn together, than the good Corn should be in danger of being plucked up; and therefore he tells Lot of making haste, in Gen. 19. when God was about to destroy Sodom, Haste thee, escape thither: for I cannot do anything till thou be come thither; I am so careful of my Lot, that I can do nothing in way of Judgment till Lot be out of fear and danger; this was not for desert of Lot's righteousness, but the free grace of God towards him, for it is said in that Chapter, When the Lord delivered him, he was merciful to him.

3. Thirdly, The Lord spares (many times) evil wicked men, for the love that he bears to his own: he gives to his people the lives of others, because he loves them so dear; so God gave Paul, in Acts 27. 24. he gave him the lives of a great many, the lives of all that were in the Ship, which were two hundred threescore and sixteen souls, because the Lord loved him dearly: O how good is it to be with the righteous? It is good to be in their very company; one righteous man, one Paul saves a Ship-full: ten righteous men may save Sodom, and four Cities more; and a considerable number of righteous men may save a Kingdom; for a few righteous men's sakes the whole world is preserved, that fire and wrath is not mingled in a moment, heaven and earth mingled in a moment, it is for their sakes. And therefore I beseech you, consider and take notice of the infinite goodness and patience of God even to the worst of sinners, that he should be pleased thus to give warning before he strikes, to give warning to a sinful Generation, by his own people before he destroy the world; O the abundance of the good patience of God! God seldom smites by a remarkable Judgment till he gives warning, it is sad warning, and of all warnings this is a warning when God is a taking away his own people, to take them away from the evil to come: it is a sad warning unto a people in that condition, that takes not this warning, when God is at so much pains and cost with them. Therefore in the second place,

I beseech you, when God gives this warning, O let us be careful to take it; it is the greatest provocation to God when he gives warning, and we take it not: in this regard Christ upbraids the Scribes and Pharisees, and says to them, Can you discern the face of the Skies, and cannot you see these signs? Do you see the signs there, and cannot you discern the signs of the times? Cannot you discern when full wrath is coming, when Judgment is a coming? Cannot you discern it by God's signs? O how many signs hath God shewn, what abundance of his Noah's hath he Shipt? How many Enochs have been translated by death? How much blood hath been spilled, precious blood? O that God would make it to be a warning to this Generation, that the Lord would stir us up too, to revive and run after him; that God should give us warning, O that we could say, Thou hope of Israel, why shouldst thou be as a stranger, and as a wayfaring man, that stays but for a night, and is gone in the morning? But,

Again, This upbraids the World for their former Ingratitude to the Saints, it is for their sakes that you wicked have your lives continued, and all your comforts continued, and how is the enmity of the world let forth against those for whose sakes they are preserved? What folly is it that men should go about to pull down the Pillars of that house in which they dwell? It was an extreme desperate action that Sampson did, when that he should pull down the Pillars of the House, and it cost him his own life? O this is the folly of the wicked in the world that rage against the Saints, that pull down the Pillars; well, know of a truth, when those Pillars are down, the House will fall upon your head, and to pull down these Pillars, will be to pull down the house to your own destruction.

Again, This may teach the people of God to submit willingly, to lie down willingly in the dust, when God shall call them: it is possible they may be taken away from a great deal of evil to come, it should make them willing to lie down in the dust when God calls; God may take you away from many an evil day that is coming, many an evil day of persecution, and many an evil day of old age; Remember thy Creator in the days of thy youth; through the infirmities that do accompany old age, it becomes an evil day.

Again, There's danger then of declining: O David prayed, and prayed heartily, that God would not leave him to his own will, and that he would take him from the evil to come.

Object. But you will say, There may be hopes of good days, and that might make us unwilling to die, in hopes of good days.

Answ. Why, God may make you willing as Moses was; though at the Borders of Canaan, yet God would have him die, and he goes up to the Mountain and dies very willingly: there may be a great deal of evil before the good come, a great deal of shakings, sore shakings before the good day come; the passage to the Land may be very strait, yet Christ will bring thee along with him when he comes; I say, when ever Christ comes he will bring the Saints along with him, We that are alive, shall not prevent those that are dead; No, they shall rise first, and then shall we be changed. Therefore God took away Enoch at this time, that he may give warning to the World that wrath was a coming.

2. Secondly, Again, God took away Enoch at this time, that he might declare, that he had respect unto his people, though the World was never so wicked, though they are never so cruel, yet they shall not be forgotten, but the Lord remembers, the Lord takes notice of them, If I find ten righteous men in Sodom, says God, I will not destroy that City for tens sake; God seeks his own people, and if he finds but ten righteous souls in a City, for their sakes it shall not be destroyed, not an Enoch shall be forgotten: Men may cast away much chaff, and though there be two or three Corns or more of Wheat, they won't look for them; but God won't do so; if a heap of chaff be never so great God will look over it, and he will not lose one Corn though in abundance of Chaff; his people do glorify him much in an evil time, and grace is remarkable then, when it shines bright in the midst of a dark night, the Lord will remember you: and therefore if the Lord will find you out, and remember you in an evil

World, Oh! how should you remember him? He will do the more for you, and deal the more remarkably with you, because you are found faithful in an evil time, in an evil World, even as Enoch: therefore be ye careful to walk with God. Again,

3. Thirdly and lastly, God will declare hereby that the perfection and happiness of his people is not here below, and therefore he would have them, and all the world to know that the perfection and happiness of the Saints is not below: Enoch enjoyed as much of God as ever man did, and yet Enoch must be translated before he comes to perfection; God witnesses to this in the lives of the best of the Saints in that Generation: there is none that lived a thousand years, though there came many nigh to a thousand years, which is the perfect number, the perfect account. The Lord would teach that perfection is not here, but he would have us to know where we shall enjoy it: therefore let us see what necessity there is to live upon Jesus Christ by Faith in the worst of our days; if perfection be not here, O what need then have you to live in Christ? You are perfect in him, says the Apostle, complete in him, and therefore in the sense and greatness of your Imperfections, you had need live upon that fullness, and breath after that fullness of time and perfection whither Enoch was translated unto. So much shall serve for this time.

SERMON I.

PHILIP. 1. 21. For me to live is Christ, and to die is gain▪

THE Apostle was now in Bonds for the Gospel of Jesus Christ: he takes care that the Philippians might not be offended at it, that his sufferings might not be any stumbling-block to them, in Verse 12. he tells them that whatsoever befell him it was for the furtherance of the Gospel, I would have you understand, says he, the things which happened unto me, have fallen out rather to the furtherance of the Gospel: he gives two particular Instances how the Gospel of Christ was furthered by his sufferings, the one is in Verse 13. My Bonds in Christ are manifest in all the Palace. By his sufferings many in Nero's Court came to enquire after the Gospel of Jesus Christ, for which Paul suffered; and by enquiring into it, were convinced of it. Another benefit of these his sufferings, is in Verse 14. Many of the Brethren in the Lord waxed confident by my Bonds: They were more bold to speak the Word of the Lord, they feared not sufferings, because they saw how God carried Paul through his sufferings, They waxed more bold through my Bonds. You see what improvement the Lord makes of the sufferings of his people. Truth never thrives better than when it is most trodden upon; the more the wind blows upon this fire, the more it kindles, the hotter it burns, and the clearer it shines: when the stream is dammed up, it rises higher, so it is with Truth; this was the advantage that God makes of the sufferings of his people, for though the Truth was upon trial, yet Paul may suffer, and Paul may lose by it, Paul was in danger of his life: Well, take no care for me, says he in Verse 19. For I know that this shall turn to my salvation through your Prayers, and the supply of the Spirit of Jesus Christ; according to my earnest expectation and hope, that in nothing I shall be ashamed: but with all boldness, as always, so now also Christ shall be magnified in my body, whether it be by life or by death. Take no care for me, says he, I desire nothing but your Prayers, for I am confident that God will carry on his Work, it shall turn to my good, and what ever befall me, the Lord shall be glorified in it; I am confident of it, says he, that Christ shall be magnified in my body, whether it be by life or by death. You see the breathings of a gracious heart, it cares not what becomes of itself, so God may have his honor, Take no thought, says Paul, whether I live or die, it is all one to me, so the Lord Jesus may be magnified in my bonds, by my life, or by my death, if Christ be glorified it is enough, it matters not what becomes of Paul, so Christ be magnified in my life, or in my death, For to me to live is Christ, and to die is gain. Christ is gain to me both in life and death; so some read the words, For Christ is gain to me both in life and death: Others make two Propositions of it, Christ is life to me, or, to me to live is Christ; Christ is my life, and death is my gain: Why, if I live, says he, Christ shall be magnified, for Christ is my life; if I live, I shall gain, and if I die, I shall gain: If I live I shall gain more of Christ, I shall gain more knowledge of him, and more communion with him here in the way; Ay, but what if Paul die? If I die, says he, I shall be no loser: death is looked upon as a loss, therefore as Paul should have said, For me to live is Christ, or, to die is Christ; but he rather says, It is gain, it is Christ that makes it gain to him, or else it is a loss to me, but Christ who is my life shall make death gain; So take no thought of me, says he, whatsoever befalls me I shall do well, if I live, or if I die. And because you are more solicitous concerning my death, says he, know that death is my gain; if I lose my friends and my comforts, if I lose life itself, it shall be no loss, it shall not undo me, for I shall find all in Jesus Christ, and so death shall be my gain.

DOCT. Christ is the Believers Life.

That's the Proposition that lies before us. For me to live is Christ, or, Christ is my Life; it is all one: Christ is the life of every believing soul. By Life sometimes it is understood whatsoever is excellent, whatsoever is excellent in its kind, it is set forth by life, because life is the most excellent thing in nature, Skin for Skin, and all that a man hath will he give for his life; and therefore the Bread which Christ gives, is called, Living Bread, Bread of Life, and so Water of Life, for the excellency of the spiritual things that the Lord gives out to his people; and truly Christ is instead of all excellencies to a believing soul, he is the life of all their comforts; the comforts of the World are dead until such time as Christ shines in them, there is no life until such time as Christ shines through them, for riches are dead, and honor is dead, and friends are dead, all comforts are dead till the life of Christ be in them. But more particularly,

1. First, Christ is the Life of Righteousness to the believing soul: every child of Adam is dead, condemned, and so he is dead in Law: there is no life but by the righteousness of Christ, that righteousness which Christ brought in by his blood: He gave life by making satisfaction to Justice, by paying the debt unto death; therefore the Apostle says, that Righteousness reigns by Christ, in Rom. 5. sin entered into the world by Adam, speaking there at Verse 17. For if by one man's offense death reigned by one, much more they which receive abundance of grace, and of the gift of righteousness, shall reign in life by one, Jesus Christ: Righteousness reigns in a believing soul by Jesus Christ, it hath the preeminence of all, all is dross and dung in comparison of this righteousness of Jesus Christ, it reigns gloriously in a believing soul; it is Christ that procures this righteousness, and it is Christ that applies this righteousness by his Spirit, I say the Application of this life of righteousness, is from Christ, it is he that reveals this righteousness, it is he that discovers it to the soul, it is Christ by his eternal Spirit that causeth the soul to know this life and righteousness which is given to it: now as Christ doth discover this righteousness, so he causeth the soul to close with this righteousness, it is he by his Spirit that overcomes the heart to rest upon this righteousness, and to look upon this righteousness as its life; for there is a principle in the creature to seek after life in itself; man would seek righteousness in himself; and it is a hard matter to bring the soul off of this rotten sandy foundation; Christ only by his eternal Spirit when he hath revealed this righteousness, persuades the soul to rest upon it, and to look upon him as its life.

2. Secondly, Again, As the life of righteousness is from Christ, so the life of holiness is from Christ: all those gracious dispositions, and all those holy actings that do at any time shine forth in the hearts and lives of God's people, they have no other foundation but Christ, the holiness of Christ: From his fullness have all we received grace for grace; if there be the life of any grace in the soul, it is from Jesus Christ, from the fullness of Christ: there is no man lives the life of holiness, till Christ becomes a principle of life to him; there is no breathings in the heart after Christ, there is no holy motion in pursuit after Christ, till Christ first breaths upon the soul: The hour is come, and now is, that they that are in their Graves shall hear the voice of the Son of God, and they that hear it shall live. There is no man lives the life of holiness until such time as he hears the voice of the Son of God: there may be Carkasses of grace, out-sides of grace, and there may be Carkasses of duties and performances, but no living graces, there are no living performances until such time as Christ be a principle of life unto the soul; the beginning of the life of holiness, and so the increase of the life of holiness is from Christ: I came that you might have life, and that you might have it more abundantly; Christ decreed that you might have life, and that you might have abundance of life, that you might be filled with the Spirit of Christ, that you might have abundance of the life of Christ, that his people might be ready in his strength to every good word and work; this was the end of Christ's coming that they might have life more abundantly; he is the life of holiness. But again,

3. Thirdly, Christ is the Life of Consolation unto his people: He is the life of all their comforts, and the comforts that Christ gives they are living comforts: my peace I give unto you, not as the world gives, give I unto you; for no man shall take away your peace, the world shall not take it away, my Spirit shall be an everlasting living principle of consolation in you, which shall not be taken away: Christ is the life of all a Christians comforts, he is the life of friends, the life of all refreshments that a Christian hath, and they are all dead to him when Christ doth not shine through them, he is the life of comforts, and the life of Ordinances; there is no life, there is no refreshment, if Christ be not in them; if the soul meets not with Christ in Ordinances, they are but dead Ordinances, truly Christ is the life of all. He is also,

4. Fourthly, The Life of Glory, Christ is the life of glory to his people: It is he that hath purchased glory for them by his blood, it is he that hath made the way plain, it is he that hath made a new way to glory, when the old way was shut: you read in Heb. 10. 19, 20. Having therefore, Brethren, boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus, by a new and living way which he hath consecrated for us, through the veil, that is to say, his flesh: A new and living way to God, a new and living way to the bosom of the Father, it is Christ that is this living way: For he lives forever to make Intercession for them that come to God by him: He it is that removes all the blocks out of the way of his people to glory, that helps them over all rubs they meet with, it is he that hath born down all oppositions, when he travelled in the greatness of his strength, he hath set Heaven door open to his people, he hath removed the Cherubims that kept the way with a flaming sword, and kept the Tree of Life, yea, Christ is the subject matter of their Glory; it is the presence of Christ that makes Heaven to be Heaven, it is the glory of Heaven to know God in Christ, and it is the glory of Heaven to enjoy God in Christ, Joh. 17. 3. And this is life eternal to know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent: Thus you see how Christ is the life of Believers, what life he is to them; he is the life of righteousness, the life of holiness, and the life of their comforts; yea, and he is the life of Glory. And it will appear that Christ is the life of the believing soul, if you consider,

1. First, That there is none lives but Christ, He hath life in himself; as the Father hath life in himself, so it is given to the Son to have in himself: There is none lives but God: and therefore when God will confirm a thing, he swears by his life; you have often that Oath, As I live, saith the Lord; As I live, saith the Lord: there is none can say, I live, but only God, he that is Jehovah, that hath life in himself. Now therefore, if any creature have life, if there be any spark of life in any soul, it must be from this life in Christ, there is no principle of spiritual life in a soul, but it must be from Christ, if there be any life, it is from the life of Christ, from the Resurrection of Christ, and from the discoveries of Christ.

2. Secondly, It was the end of Christ's coming in the flesh, That he might give life to his people, as you heard before, I came, says Christ, that you might have life; Christ came in the flesh for this end, he had nor lived in this world, if it had not been to give life to his people, it was the end of his life, and so it was the end of his death also; he tells us in Joh. 6. 51. If any man eat of this Bread, he shall live forever: and the Bread which I will give, is my flesh which I will give for the life of the world; I will give my flesh, my body to be crucified, that so my death may be the life of the world; and it was the end of Christ's living again, it was the end of his rising again, that he might give life to his people, Joh. 14 19. Because I live, says he, ye shall live also; my life is the cause of your living, I live for this end, and arose for this end, I am he that was dead and am alive, and live forever, and because I live, ye shall live also.

Quest. But you will say, When may it be said that Christ is the Life of any soul?

Answ. 1. First of all, When the soul prizes Communion with Christ as life: And mark all the way, so much as the life of Christ is in any soul, so far will these effects and operations of life be found in him; Christ is life, when communion with Christ is prized as life; when the soul shall prefer communion with Christ above all other comforts whatsoever, when he seeks after it as life, and when he hath found it he prizes it as life, and is as fearful to lose it as he is to part with his life; and he cannot be satisfied without it, though he enjoys never so much of the world, though he hath never so many friends, and they shine upon him, and they speak comfortably to him, yet if Christ speak not, it doth not satisfy: though he hath never so good trading in the world, and prosper in his Estate, yet if he hath not trading with Christ, if he hath not his mercies come in through Christ, he looks upon himself as a loser; so far as the life of Christ prevails with a soul, so far will the soul prize communion with Christ. Again,

2. Secondly, When the life of Christ is in a soul, the Soul doth judge of itself, not by what it is in itself, but by what it is in Christ, by what it is in another; the life of Christ was Paul, and how did Paul judge of himself, by what? By what he was in Christ, and by what Christ was in him, and to him; I live, says he, and yet not I, but Christ lives in me, in Gal. 2. 20. how doth he judge of his life, not by any principle of self that was in him, but by Christ that was in him, I live, yet not I, but Christ lives in me; Surely, shall one say, In the Lord have I righteousness and strength, Isa. 45. 24. When he shall see that he hath no righteousness in himself, no strength in himself, he shall not judge of his present state or future happiness by what righteousness, or what strength he hath in himself, but by what Christ hath promised him, he shall judge by the Word of the Lord, and by what life of Christ is made over to him; and he shall say, Surely, I have righteousness and strength, I have all in another, at that time when I have nothing but vileness and deadness in myself; so that the soul judges of itself and its condition, not according to what it finds in itself, but according to what the Lord hath promised to be unto him. Again,

3. Thirdly, Where Christ is the life of a soul, there is Christ the principle of all holy actings in that soul: The soul when ever it sets upon any duty, or upon any holy work, presently it looks up for the power and spirit of Christ, it gives up itself to be acted by Christ, to be carried on by the spirit of Christ; Christ opens the sails of the soul to the gales of the spirit, for it knows that if the spirit of Christ do not breath, the soul is calmed, it can do nothing, it desires that Christ may have the glory of all that it doth, that Christ may be the principle of all its workings for God; all the fruit that a gracious heart brings forth to God, it desires that Christ may have the honor of it; and therefore it bears as it were upon Christ's knee, as the women of old took their Hand-maids when they were barren, and they bare upon their knees, and the Children were called theirs, not the Hand-maids: And truly so the believing soul always bears and brings forth fruit upon the knee of Christ, and it calls them all the Offspring of Christ; whatsoever it doth for God, whatever it brings forth to God, it looks upon it as the fruit of the Spirit of Jesus Christ; it desires that Christ may have the name, that Christ may have the glory of it, that Christ may be continually lifted up in all that it doth: and therefore when it is assisted to do for God, or to suffer for God, it doth not reflect upon itself, but upon Christ; these are the breathings of the spirit of Christ, and this is the strength that comes from Christ: and therefore it is said of David, Lord what am I? when he was enabled to offer willingly, Lord what am I, and what are my people, that we should offer in this wise? When ever it meets with any assistance, it says, Lord what am I, that I should do anything for God? It looks upon all as coming from Christ, and desires that Christ may have the glory of all; and so far as the life of Christ prevails upon the soul, so far the soul is acted by the spirit of Christ. But again,

4. Fourthly, Where Christ is the life of the soul, the Soul desires that Christ may be magnified, whether by death or by life; so it was with the Apostle, This is all my care, says he, that Christ may be magnified, take you no care for me, for Christ shall be magnified, and I will rejoice in it, Whether I live or die, Christ shall be magnified in my body: He desires that Christ may be magnified in his life, a gracious heart doth not desire to live to satisfy its own lust, it would not live long in the world to enjoy the pleasure of the world; no, if it lives, it desires to live that Christ may be magnified, and therefore if I may be useful, if I may be serviceable to do good in any place or relation the Lord is pleased to cast me in, I am content to live: and so for death, he desires that Christ may be magnified there too, a gracious heart do not desire death to be rid of the troubles of life, to be freed from those troubles and vexations that it meets withal in the world, that's: no good desire, but if it desires death, it desires that Christ may be magnified, that the Lord may be magnified in my death, that Christ may be magnified, that I may get nigher Christ, that I may not dishonor Christ, that that corruption may be subdued, which is a grief to the spirit of Christ, that I may magnify Christ eternally without ceasing: that Christ may be magnified, this is the desire of a gracious heart; and so far as the life of Christ doth prevail in any soul, so far doth that soul live unto Christ, and is willing to die for Christ, and cares not what becomes of it, so the Lord, and his son Christ may be exalted. Again,

5. Fifthly, When the life of Christ is in a soul, It makes a man to die; to die to sin, and to die to the world, and to die to self. Where the life of Christ comes in, it makes the soul to die to sin; that still as the life of Christ prevails in the soul, so sin dies in the soul: Knowing this that our old man is crucified with Christ; the old man is Crucified with Christ, and the life of Christ will be the death of the old man: He makes a man to die to sin* where the life of Christ is in a soul, the heart is dead to sin, it carries to sin, as to a dead man, it is cold at the very heart, no desire to satisfy the lusts of the flesh, but to live unto Christ; it makes the soul desirous to cast out all those lusts which it hath rejoiced in, and been the very life of the soul before Christ came. See what is said in the Prophecy of the Prophet Hosea, Hos. 14. 8. Ephraim shall say, What have I to do anymore with Idols? And so shall the soul say, where the life of Christ prevails, What have I to do anymore with Idols? It looks upon all base lusts as so many dead Carcasses, they lie in his House and he knows not how to be rid of them, but the life of Christ is in him, and what hath the living to do with the dead? What have I anymore to do with dead Carkasses? O Lord bury them, bury them out of my sight; the life of Christ will dead the heart to sin.

2. Secondly, Again, This life of Christ will deaden the heart to the world; see what the Apostle says in the Epistle to the Galatians, Gal. 6. 14. God forbid that I should glory in anything, save in the Cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world: The world looks upon me as dead, and I look upon the world as dead; the world doth not at all esteem of a gracious man, and a gracious heart doth esteem the world as little, the vanities of the world as little; the world looks upon me, and I look upon the world as dead: Paul looked upon it as dead, and therefore Paul was willing to part with it, in Phil. 4. 12, 13. men are willing to part with their dead friends, and Paul was willing to part with the world, it was dead to him; I know how to be abased, and I know how to abound; I know how to want, if God calls for it; I know how to spare, and I am content to be without it; thus doth the life of Christ make the heart dead to the world, deadens the affections, and makes a man to use the world as if he used it not.

3. Again, Thirdly and lastly, The life of Christ doth make a man to die to self: it makes a man to die to self-principles, and self-ends, and self-seeking, to self-righteousness and self-strength, it makes a man die to all these; where the life of Christ prevails, the creature is nothing, self is nothing, it makes a man debase himself, and lie low at the footstool of the Lord, it makes him lie low in a way of humiliation: Paul was less than the least of all Saints, so he calls himself; Less than the least of all Saints; and he was the greatest of sinners, so he calls himself; the life of Christ made him lie low, he had no life in himself. I will speak no more, says Job, I abhor myself in dust and ashes; let God have all for the future, it desires to exalt him, to admire that which he can't find out: I desire to lie at his footstool, and to exalt his name; it makes a man lie low in a way of submission to God as well as in a way of humiliation, the life of Christ makes the heart submissive to Christ, self is nothing, self is laid aside, content that God should rule, that the creature should be disposed by him, makes him willing to drink of every cup that his father puts into his hand, to stoop down to every yoke, and every burden that the Lord will put upon his neck, and lay upon his shoulder, it makes a soul submissive unto Christ, submissive to the Will of God in all things.

And then the life of Christ it empties of Self, for it makes a man to condescend to those of low degree; though never so high, yet if the life of Christ be in them, it makes them to look down unto the lowest degree, and the life of Christ in the meanest and lowest Christian is very high and honorable in his esteem: and as the life of Christ doth prevail in any heart, so there will be all these operations, as the life of Christ doth increase, so the life of sin doth decrease, and self will decrease, and the soul is content with it, and it rejoices abundantly that it should be so; it says of itself as John Baptist did, when they told him that all men ran after Christ, and he would have no Followers, I am glad of it, says he, that he may increase though I decrease; and truly where the life of Christ is in a soul, it will break forth into these Expressions, Let Christ be all, let me be nothing, let me lie low at his footstool, let me not be thought of when that day of Christ's Exaltation shall be, let him be exalted in the riches of his grace which he hath manifested unto poor creatures. And thus you see what the life of Christ is in a soul, so far as the life of Christ is in the heart, so far will there be special operations in the soul towards Christ again. But so much for this time.

SERMON II.

PHILIP. 1. 21. For to me to live is Christ, and to die is gain.

JESUS Christ is the Life of every Believer; that's the Point in hand: He is the life of righteousness; he it is that gave life unto all those that were dead, dead under the Law, though reprieved for a time. He is also the life of Holiness to his people, the beginnings of all grace, and the increase of all grace is from Christ; there are shadows and carcasses of grace, but there is no life until such time as Christ be found in the soul. He is also the life of all the Believers Comforts, they are no comforts till Christ be in them, the best of his comforts, even the very Ordinances of God are but a dead letter if the Spirit of Christ be not in them, it is he that makes them to be life, to come with power and efficacy. He is also the life of Glory to a Believer. He hath purchased Glory, he hath made the way plain, a new and living way, he hath set the door wide open, it's he that takes all rubs out of the way: It's he that is the very Subject matter of Glory; for it's the presence of Jesus Christ in Heaven that is the greatest glory and comfort of Heaven. I shown how it may be known that Christ is the life of Believers in five Particulars.

6. A Sixth Particular is, Where the life of Christ is in any soul, it makes that soul in some measure conformable to the life of Christ; so far as the life of Christ doth prevail in a soul, so far it makes the soul conformable to that life of Christ which he lived when he was upon earth, it makes the soul desirous and willing to live to God: it looks upon it as the great work and great end of Christ's coming, to lift up his Fathers Name, to make God glorious before the eyes of the sons of men, that's the work that his servants have to do for him whilst they are here upon earth. But more particularly,

1. First, If you look upon the life, you shall find that the life of Christ is an active life, it's said of him, That he went up and down doing good; he was never well but when he was doing good; he took opportunities, and he sought opportunities, he sought occasions of doing good to the bodies of men, and to the souls of men, I have meat to eat that you know not of; it is my meat to do the will of my Father; he was never well but when he was doing something by which he might glorify God and edify in love.

2. Again, Secondly, If you look upon the life of Christ, it was not only an active life, but it was a passive submissive life, it was a self-denying life. He left all his glory in Heaven when he came to live here upon earth, that he might live and die for the good of the sons of men; though he was the son of the most high God, yet he was pleased to condescend to the lowest of men, he emptied himself and became of no reputation, he was in the form of man, but yet came in the form of a servant, he emptied himself and became of no reputation, that so he might glorify his <1 page duplicate> <1 page duplicate> Father; I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do; it was a self-denying work. Again,

3. Thirdly, It was a holy gracious life; he conversed with sinners, but he was the Lamb of God without spot; he was numbered amongst the Transgressors, but there was no guile found in his mouth, he was gracious in the midst of a sinful world, and therefore the Spouse stiles and resembles him to the Apple-tree in the midst of the Trees in the Forest, in Cant. 2. 3. he was full of sweet gracious fruit, even then when he was in the Forest, when he was compassed about with wild Trees, as Crab-trees, Pricklingthorns, Prickling-brambles, even so was the Lord Jesus amongst such: But the Lord was found in integrity, he was not leavened with corruption, though he conversed with sinners, yet he was no sinner, the life of Christ was a gracious life, even then when he was in the midst of sinners. But again,

4. Fourthly, The life of Christ was full of patience, and full of meekness; he was very admirable in that patience and meekness which he exercised and expressed in his whole life; he was not easily provoked, for he endured alone all the contradictions of sinners, and he was dumb even before the shearer, he opened not his mouth; he did not render evil for evil, He came to his own, and his own received him not; What a provocation was there that his own should not receive him? And Christ could not easily be provoked, he bare with that people, and though they would not receive him, yet he spent his whole Ministry among them, and he sent forth his Disciples to pluck them in if possible, and gives them a charge that they should go to none else; in *Matth. 10. 5. Go not into the way of the Gentiles, and into the City of the Samaritans enter ye not, but rather go unto the lost Sheep of the house of Israel: Though they sought to destroy him, yet he endeavors to save them, he bears with them; But rather go to the lost Sheep of the house of Israel: What forbearance was there in him! In their ignorance he opened unto them those things which he spake in Parables to the world; what abundance of patience and meekness did he show to Thomas, notwithstanding all that unbelief? Saies he, (in his unbelief) I will not believe, says he, except it be so and so, except I put my hand into the hole of his side; and yet this did not provoke the Lord Jesus Christ to leave him, but he condescends to his weakness, heals his weakness, and plucks him out of that mire in which he stuck: And if you look upon his carriage towards his enemies, and see what a spirit of meekness there was in Christ, even towards his enemies; the Samaritans in one place, would not receive him; and see the Disciples they were for fire from Heaven to consume them, in *Luk. 9. 53, 54. And he sent Messengers before his face, and they went and entered into a Village of the Samaritans to make ready for him, and they did not receive him, &c. And when his Disciples James and John saw this, they said, Lord wilt thou, that we command Fire to come down from Heaven, and consume them, even as Elias did? You think it is the spirit of Elias, but you are deceived, You know not your own hearts; there is a great deal of the wild Fire of revenge in this your motion, it's not well grounded zeal for God, therefore Christ says, the son of man came not to destroy but to save them: and you know when they came to take him, in *Luk. 22. 50, 51. They came with Swords and Staves against him: and one of them smote the servant of the High Priest, and cut off his right ear. And Jesus answered and said, Suffer thus far, and he touched his ear and healed him. But see how Christ bare not only with his Disciples, but even with his very enemies. But again,

5. Fifthly, You shall find that Christ in his life was exceeding compassionate, he was not only meek and patient, but he was exceeding compassionate: Oh! how often did the bowels of Christ yearn towards poor creatures? He never saw an object of pity, but his heart was drawn out to relieve, in *Matth. 9. 36, 37. But when he saw the multitude, he was moved with compassion on them, because they fainted, and were scattered abroad as Sheep without a Shepherd: The very bowels of Christ were moved, he was filled with compassion towards their souls, nay, he was filled with compassion to the very bodies of men, in *Matth. 14. 14, 15, 16. he takes care that they should not be sent away fasting, but makes provision for them, Let them eat lest they should faint in the way. When he beheld a poor obstinate sinner, his heart was drawn out in pity: the woman of Samaria, when she came first, she was a very jolly sinner, she laugh'd, but Christ pitied her, his bowels were towards her, and would not give her over till he made her to know that he was the true Messiah the Savior of the World. When he saw a desolate soul, his bowels were drawn forth with abundance of tenderness and compassion; as in that woman that was accused, those that did there present her unto Christ laid a heavy accusation upon her, in *Joh. 8. 10. Jesus lifted up himself, and said unto the woman, where are those thine accusers? The poor creature sat trembling at the feet of Christ, and she expected a fearful sentence of condemnation, but the bowels of Christ were drawn forth to pity and compassion: Is there no man accuses thee? What are they all gone that accuse thee? Well, Neither do I accuse thee, go thy way and sin no more. Now you see what the life of Christ was; now I say, where the life of Christ is in any soul, it makes that soul some way answerable to the life of Christ in these particulars. It is true, the best of Saints come short, infinitely short of that which is their duty; but yet I say withal, that so far as the life of Christ prevails in his people, so far doth the life of Christ produce these operations, and it will bewail itself for its unlikeness to Christ in these particulars.

Object. But you will say, If the life of Christ produce these operations, where shall we find the life of Christ? If we look upon ourselves we shall see sin, and if we look upon other Christians, where ever we look, there is so little of this to be found, that it is hard to say the life of Christ is in them.

Answ. 1. To this I answer, First of all, I do confess that Christians do mightily come short of that which is their duty, and therefore may take up a sad complaint and lamentation, they may lament over their own hearts, and lament over one another, and bewail their case; but yet let not them be disquiet, for I shall show you, that the life of Christ may be in a soul, that is not so conspicuous in all these particulars. In way of answer, if you say that this is the life of Christ, the life of Christ is scarce to be sound in any man in the world.

1. First of all, Let me tell you, the life of Christ is a hidden life. It is hid from themselves that it is not discerned; and as it is hid from themselves, so it is hid from others, that they cannot see the life of Christ in them; and especially it's hid from the men of the world, from a carnal man: there's the life of Christ, and the world cannot see it, the world cannot see the in-side of a Christian, he sees the outside, but he cannot see the in-side, The Kings Daughters are all glorious within: There are special times in which the life of Christ is hid in a Believer, that there may be life, though it may be others may not discern this life. As,

1. First of all, When God begins his work in a soul, the work of the Lord goes on gradually in the heart, step after step. You say Rome was not built in a day; even so the new Jerusalem, the beginnings of the life of Christ in a Christian, they are very small, sometimes they are scarce discerned; and therefore the Kingdom of Heaven is compared to a grain of Mustard seed, which is the least of all seeds; Ay, but afterward it springs up (and you must not judge of the beginnings but of the latter end) the latter end will be glorious: it is with a young Christian as it is with an Infant in the womb, when it begins first to live there is but a little, and but a very weak motion, that it can scarce be discerned whether it move or no, so is the life of Christ: it is like the tender plants and herbs that put forth in the spring, they are hardly discerned, hardly discerned from weeds, though you look upon them, though you pluck them, though you smell them, yet when they first put forth they do so smell of the earth, smell of the soil, as you cannot discern them: why, truly, so it is with the work of God upon the spirits of his people; look upon young Beginners, it's hard to be discerned, they smell so much of the soil, so much of corrupt nature that is not yet subdued, that it is hardly discerned, but yet there is the life of Christ in them. And so

2. Secondly, Again, In a time of temptation, in them (in whom the life of Christ is hid) it's hardly discerned; and you must not judge of a Christian in that time; I say, in time of temptation, for it's a time of Winter; now you know in time of Winter the life of the Tree is not discerned, there is no appearance of life in the Tree, but yet without doubt, there is life, there's life in the Tree, the life is still in the root, and it will put forth. Again,

3. Thirdly, A time of temptation is a time of swooning: it's as a man in a swoond, the operation of life ceases, it's out of view, ye can hardly discern that there is life, when a man is in a swoond, if you look upon him you see no symptoms of life, his countenance is changed, his lips are pale, death sits upon him; Ay, but let a skilful Physician come, and he shall feel some motion of the pulse, or some breathings of the nostrils, though it be very weak, that it will scarce move a Feather, yet there is some hope: why so take a poor soul that is under temptation, he is as in a swoond, you say there is no life in him, but yet let Christ the Physician come, and he will discern the pulse, and he will discern some motion, some movings of spirit, some breathings of heart, though it be not obvious to the view of others. Thus you see that the life of Christ is a hidden life, and therefore do not you say that there is not the life of Christ in such and such as profess themselves to be Christians, because you see not those operations, it may be Spring-time, or it may be Winter-time with them, or it may be a time of swooning; well, notwithstanding there is life, though thou discern'st it not.

2. But again, Secondly, to give another Answer, If this be the life of Christ, if the life of Christ doth produce such operation in the soul, when shall we find life?

Take this Answer, That though the life of Christ doth produce such operations in the soul where it is yet the life of Christ is communicative to everyone according to the place that every member is set in; you know the soul being in the body, doth inform every part of the body, and it grows, but yet every member doth not grow alike, and one member hath more strength than another. Will you say, that the soul is not in the finger, because the finger hath not so much strength as the arm? Will you say, the soul is not in the foot, because it hath not the strength of the leg? Why thus, Brethren, it is with the body of Christ, all have not the same parts, and therefore all have not the same strength; though the same spirit of life that was in Jesus Christ doth inform the meanest of his members, though it doth not grow so big and so strong as in other members, yet the Lord hath provided (by this dispensation) to make up a sweet harmony in this body, that every member shall have its strength, and every member shall have its proportion, its growth and increase, according to the place it's set in: that it shall not be shrunk up in the body, nor extended above what is meet, but every member in the body of Christ shall have its strength, and its growth in proportion. But then,

3. Again, Thirdly, If you say that the life of Christ is such, where shall we find the life of Christ in any if it works so?

I Answer, The life of Christ doth not work eminently in every operation that is put forth in every Saint, but one Saint excels in one particular, and another in another, and herein is abundance of the wisdom of God; I say, the life of Christ runs in several veins; in one Christian it is more eminent in the vein or channel of Faith, in another Christian there is the same life in the vein or channel of humiliation, and self-denial; and in another it runs in the vein of prudence, holy wisdom and activity, so that you cannot say, there is not the life of Christ in such and such because you do not see an eminency in some particulars which it may be you fasten upon; why, though the life of Christ be not eminent in that, it runs in another; in such a vein as is (as it were) under ground, as is not obvious to thy eye, which thou seest not; nor takest no notice of.

Quest. But you will say, Why is not every grace in its operation eminent, in every Saint, and in every Believer?

Answ. I Answer, First, Because the Lord will maintain in this way, a sweet communion with his Saints: the Lord intends to maintain sweet communion with his Saints, he therefore gives out to one, one grace more eminent, and to another, another, that so the eye may not say to the head, I have no need of thee, nor the hand to the foot say, I have no need of thee: So that every member shall have its proportion, but if you look upon the best Saints, you will see how they come short of the life of Christ, how defective they are in this and that particular; what need then have we to live upon imputed righteousness? And what need have we to keep in a continual dependence upon Christ, that so he may supply all our wants out of his fullness?

2. Secondly, Again, The Lord doth with-hold his hand in abundance of wisdom and goodness: if he should give too much, he knows what poor weak creatures we are, and what poor weak vessels we are, and if he should pour in too much, he knows we were not able to bear it; If you pour new Wine into old Bottles, the Bottle will break; and the Lord considers that we are old Bottles, and his new Wine would break our old Bottles, we are not able to contain much, if the Lord should give out much of himself, the visions of the Lord would break these old Bottles that we were not able to bear up. Christ tenders his people in this, that when they come to Heaven, he will fill them full; then there is no fear of breaking their old bottles, he will fill them to the brim, and no fear of breaking: but now there's fear of the best of Saints; Paul had great raptures, and was exalted above measure, therefore 'tis to be marked, he had a check; but the life of Christ, and the strength of Christ doth not thus appear in eminency in every Saint.

Object. But some poor soul will say, Whatsoever there is in others, I will not judge others, the life of Christ may be in them, and I am persuaded the life of Christ is in such and such; I see the very Image of Christ in them, and these operations of life spoken of, I discern the life of Christ in others: But alas, I see nothing but deadness in my own soul, nothing but a body of sin and death; I say it's the burden of my soul every day I rise, O miserable man that I am, who shall deliver me from this body of sin and death, I fear the life of Christ is not in me?

Answ. Is not the life of Christ in you, Whence then are those complaints that thou makest? Did you ever hear a dead man complain, did you ever hear him cry out of his burden? Surely there is some life of Christ, or else whence are these complaints▪ of that body of sin, that body of death which is more heavy to the soul than the burden of the Mountains? If the life of Christ be not in thee, whence are those desires? Thou breathest after Christ, ay, with all thy soul, thou couldst even expire, that the life of Christ might be more manifest, more evident in thee; why whence are those desires? Did you ever know a dead man breath? or the Pulse of a dead man beat? Surely these motions of the soul after Christ, these breathings of the heart after Christ do testify there is something of the life of Christ; but if thou canst not find the life of Christ, and seest nothing but deadness▪ yet look towards him as a living Savior, let thine eye be towards him as one that is set up to give life; he is a Tree of life for this end that is in the midst of the Garden, and it's the Will of the Father that thou shouldst come to Christ: thou that art sensible that there is nothing but deadness in thee; come to Christ for life. Christ complains that you will not come to me, that I may give you life; you that complain of your deadness, give not Christ cause to complain that you will not come to him that he may give you life; therefore seeing the way of the Tree of life is not shut up, but it's set open, it's left open, there is no Cherubim set before thee, but come and eat, eat of the Tree of life and live; Christ presents himself to thy soul, that thou mightest put forth thy hand and eat of the Tree of Life, and though thou sayest thou hast not the life of Christ, yet look up to Christ that so thy soul may have life: and know for thy encouragement, that the time is coming, and is at hand, that more of the life of Christ shall be given out than ever it was unto the Saints; I say, it shall be as life from the dead when the Jews shall come in again, there shall be a new Resurrection▪ the people of God shall differ most exceedingly from what they were before; the time is hastening, and abundance of the life of Christ shall be communicated unto every member of Jesus Christ, and all the Saints, they shall die more to sin, die more to the world, and die more unto self, and shall live more unto God, and lift up the Son of God, for the day of the Lord is high, and shall be lifted up, for in that day the Lord alone shall be exalted. But so much for this time.

SERMON III.

PHILIP. 1. 21. For to me to live is Christ, and to die is gain.

CHrist is the life of every Believer: I shown you how the life of Christ works in every soul where it is, I come to the Application.

Use 1. First of all, Let it be a word of Examination. Know it's not enough to have a name to live if Christ be not the principle of life; it's possible (as I have shown you heretofore) that the children of the Kingdom may be cast out into utter darkness, to have a name and only a name to live, it will do men little good: therefore I beseech you, examine whether the life of Christ be in you or no; whence came your life first? What way came into your soul that life which you have? Did it come by hearing the voice of Christ? That life which is from Christ comes into the soul by hearing the voice of Christ, in Joh. 5. 25. The hour is coming, and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God, and they that hear shall live: There is no man that lives, but he shall hear the voice of the Son of God; can you say that the life that was in you, it was thus brought into your souls▪ it was by the voice of the Son of God, it was Christ spake, Christ spake in your souls, and you were revived; it was Christ in a Promise, or Christ in an Ordinance, or Christ in the breathings of his spirit; Ay, you know it was Christ that spake, for you were so sensibly, deeply sunk in unbelief, you were so dead, that if an Angel from Heaven should have sounded a Trumpet, you could not have heard, nor have believed the Gospel. Ay, you know it was the voice of Christ, for you heard the same word many a time, the same promise was given in; you read it, you heard it, it was urged upon you, and yet you found no life in it, but when Christ spake, then your spirit was revived. Nay, you are persuaded it was the voice of Christ, for it was at such a time when you were farthest off from light, then was your spirit revived; when your condition was, those dead and dry bones which the Prophet Ezekiel speaks of in Ezek. 37. you were furthest from life, when not only the flesh was consumed, but the bones were dry, scattered and consumed, even in such a spiritual sense were you broken, and when the Word of Christ came to your soul you were revived from this Word of the Lord, and therefore certainly it was Christ that spake, I cannot but assent unto it: the life of Christ that thus comes in by the voice of the Son of God, it's Christ in the soul.

2. Secondly, Again, Did not this life come in in a way of dying? I say, did it not come in in a way of dying? For so is the life of Christ; where the life of Christ is, it kills the creature, it strikes him stark dead, the creature is nothing, it dies to self, it dies to his own righteousness, it dies to his own strength, to his own wisdom, have you thus found it? Thus it was with Christ, the life that he purchased for his people, he purchased it by his death, it was made evident in a way of dying: when he arose from the Grave, then it was evident, and he is declared with power that he was the Son of God; life came in by death in a way of dying: and truly, thus it is with a soul where the life of Christ is, when Christ comes the soul dies, it says as Christ said, when he was ready to give up the Ghost, in Luk. 23. 46. Father into thy hands I commend my Spirit; so that soul where the life of Christ comes in, expires into God, the soul expires into God, into the hands of God, the creature becomes nothing, it desires to be nothing, nothing in itself, content that the creature should be dead, looked upon as dead, that God alone should be exalted, that he should be all unto it, and that it should be all in all unto him; thus the life of Christ, where it comes into the soul in this way.

3. Thirdly, But again, Examine how your life is maintained; if the life of Christ be in you, How is that life of Christ in you, that spiritual life maintained? the life that is from Christ is maintained by Christ, it came in at first by the voice of the Son of God, and so it's maintained by the voice of God, and every time that Christ speaks, it's further into life, every time that Christ speaks in a promise, every time that Christ speaks in an Ordinance, it runs further into life, and every day it's dying, the life of Christ is increasing, and triumphs in the victory, by killing and slaying the creature to itself in its own apprehension, and it's maintained by the voice of Christ, or by a sight of Christ, so that where this life of Christ is, the soul in all its deadness runs to Christ; when it wants life at any time, it looks to Christ for it, it runs to Christ for this life, Lord maintain this life. A soul hath its life from the Father originally, instrumentally from God, and it depends upon the Father for life, and where the soul is begotten by God, its life being in Christ, it's maintained by Christ, and it never lives so well as when it sees most of Christ, it's a sight of the glory and beauty of Christ, of the grace of Christ, and love of Christ that doth mightily affect the heart, and raise the spirits of the soul, it is mightily stirred up, the operations of the soul are stirred up, and it looks upon Christ and it's revived, it looks upon Christ and is strengthened, and is beholding the glory and strength of Christ, is most ready to act for Christ, and to work for Christ, whenas the soul hath much of Christ in his eye. Well, is your life thus maintained? certainly this is the life of Christ.

Use 2. But if I would speak in a way of discovery unto poor creatures that are without the life of Christ: It will be an easy Test unto the discovery of many that they are without the life of Christ.

How many poor creatures in the world death sits on their sore-heads, upon their faces! Christ is not their life, but the world is their life, and their lusts is their life, and the creature is their life, for they live upon these, the life of many a poor soul is bound up in these, his life is bound up in the world, and bound up in his lusts, and if the world be taken from him, or his lusts taken from him, he cries out, O he is undone, what hath he more? And what will God do him good, or Christ do him good, or communion with the spirit do him good? his lusts are his life, and his life is taken away when he is robbed of his lusts. When a man doth live to the satisfaction of his lusts, and makes them the whole end of his living, not to lift up God and Christ, but to live to the satisfaction of the lusts of his heart, I say, here it is an easy matter to say without breach of the law of love, the Lord be merciful to such poor creatures, for the life of Christ is not in them, they lay rotting in their Graves of sin, their throat is an open Sepulcher, there's no appearance of the life of Christ in such. And therefore I shall desire the Lord would convince such poor creatures, how miserable their condition is without the life of Christ: they are like so many dead Carcasses, and what a sad object is that, to look upon so many men as dead carcasses though they be never so lively, never so full of strength, activity, and of beauty here before the eye of the World, yet in relation to the invisible World, which is many thousand times more considerable, such men are as dead carcasses, I say, in the eye of God and of his Angels, and the rest of the Inhabitants of the invisible World, such poor creatures are as dead carcasses, as dreadful an object to them, as a walking Ghost is to you: a carcass that lies rotting in the Grave where there is nothing but putrefaction, it is a noisesome, an offensive object, everyone turns away from it; and truly everyone is such, who is a sinner, an obstinate sinner, the Lord cannot away with them, that if they continue in trespasses and sins, being dead in sins and trespasses, the Lord will bury them out of his sight, there wants nothing but a burying them out of the sight of God to make their misery complete; rejection from the presence of God, to be cast out of the sight of God, and his presence forever, never to behold his face in glory, and communion with him, it shall be the completion of the misery of such poor wretches: And therefore I shall desire you in the fear of God to look after the life of Christ; O that the Lord would persuade you to look after the life of Christ, He that hath the Son, hath life; and he that hath not the Son, hath not life; Look after Christ for life; O that you would consider the excellency of the life of Christ, is it not worth the seeking after? Shall I set it out to you, by comparing the life of Christ with natural life, which is accounted most excellent in this lower world, and you shall see how infinitely excellent the life of Christ is? What is the most excellent thing in the World, the best thing in nature? Why life, natural life is the best thing in nature; Skin for skin, and all that a man hath, will he give for his life: the least worm is more excellent than the Sun in that respect, because it hath life, life is most excellent in its nature: But now compare the life of nature with the life of Christ, and you shall see how far it goes beyond it, and therefore infinitely more desirable than the life of nature. For,

1. First of all, The life of Nature is a vain life, a life full of vanity: Eve was convinced thereof by that time she brought forth a second Son, she called his name Abel, that is vanity; she now knew that was the condition and case of the sons and daughters of fallen man, of all she brought forth, with all the world that followed her, their lives shall be vanity, Man walks in a vain shadow, in a vain show, Psal. 39. 5, 6. Surely every man walks in a vain show, surely they are disquieted in vain: the life of Nature is full of vanity, it appears in that it satisfieth not; it is empty and vain, for it proves many times a burden, even vanity: life itself, which is the most excellent thing in nature, it proves a burden if you declare the vanity of it: and so many times it is so to the wicked, and to the Godly. Life is a burden to the wicked: there is a principle in nature in a man to live, to desire to live, to live always, and yet man many times is weary to live; the wicked man would live long, and yet his life is a burden, he would live longer, he never dies willingly, though sometimes he be the instrument of his own destruction, he dies not willingly; It is said of the wicked man, That he shall not live out half his days; Why, though they may live longer than the righteous, though he live a hundred years, yet he may not live out half his days, he desires to live long, and yet life is a burden to him, here is a vanity: especially when the Lord shall break in upon his soul with apprehensions of wrath, and when he meets with vexations and disquietments from the world, many times he speaks against his life, and acts against his life, which is a great sin: here's a vanity.

Nay, natural life is a burden many times to God's own people; you may see how it comes short of the life of Christ, though it is the most excellent thing in nature, yet it is a burden to the Saints; the corruption that is within their own hearts, which doth follow them all the time of life, makes life a burden: O miserable man that I am, who shall deliver me from this body of sin and death? The workings of corruption have made his very life a burden to him, who shall deliver him from it? And so through the temptation of Satan the life is made burdensome, through the evil of the times, through the dishonor that is brought to God in the world, whilst they look upon it their life is made a burden to them; Lot's righteous soul was vexed, his life was a burden to him: though they dare not think against their lives, and act against their lives, yet many times life is a burden to God's own people, not but that they are willing to bear their burden whilst God is pleased to let them live here. But now,

Turn your eye to Christ's life, and you shall see the life of Christ is full of satisfaction, full of contentment: It's full of satisfaction, you do not say of that as sometimes Job said of his life, you may see in Job 7. 15, 16. he was under sore temptation, and in great affliction, I loath it, I would not live always; why Job never said so of the life of Christ, he never said of that, I loath it, I would not live always; No, on the contrary, a gracious heart says thus, I love it, I delight in it, I would live always, let me live to Eternity, to lift up the name of God, to behold his Glory, to wait at his footstool, to extol his glorious name forever and ever; thus you see how contrary the life of Christ is unto the life of nature, in respect of the vanity of it.

2. But again, Secondly, The life of Nature is a sinful life, and that makes it worse than vanity; sin doth accompany it all along, yea in its first rise, in its first being, In sin was I conceived, says David. A man that hath nothing but the life of nature lives to nothing but to sin: he lives to dishonor God, he lives to wound and to destroy himself, he lives to do hurt in the world, in injury to others; and these are the fruits that nature brings forth: but the life of Christ is pure and holy, it's without sin, there is no principle of corruption in it; and therefore it never dies, it never expires, it hath no principle of corruption in itself, but it is pure as the life of God is pure. But again,

3. Thirdly, The life of Nature is a miserable life; it's full of misery; see how Job speaks of it, speaking of the life of Nature, he says, That man is born to misery as the sparks fly upward, that is, Naturally: the sparks naturally fly upward, and so there is all the portion that a man is born unto by nature; if he hath any besides his misery, it's besides his portion, he hath more than he was born to, for he was born to misery: But the life of Christ hath no sorrow in it, for he that is born again to God, is born to happiness, he is born to joy, he is born to glory, even as the sparks fly upward; this is the portion that he is born to, and if he comes short of this, it's accidental, because he comes short of the life of Christ, if he comes short of this glory and joy in the Holy Ghost, it's because he comes short of the life of Christ, for the life of Christ shall be completed in Heaven, where it shall not be interrupted in its actings, then there shall be nothing but peace and joy in the Holy Ghost; there shall be then no sorrow, for all tears shall be wiped away: this is the excellency of the life of Christ. Again,

4. Fourthly, The life of Nature is a decreasing life: it decreases as soon as ever it comes into the world, as soon as ever a man begins to live, He comes up, and is cut down like a flower: The Candle consumes as soon as it is lighted: and even thus is the life of Nature; and it's like a Garment that is eaten with the Moths; it's continually decreasing and waxing worse and worse. There are so many worms at the root of the Tree, gnawing at the root of our Tree, that as soon as ever we spring above ground, our natures decrease continually: but the life of Christ is an increasing life, there is a period beyond which a Christian shall not grow, he doth not come to his height, and then go downward, there is no period in his growth so long as he is on this side Heaven, there is no old age in which his life decreaseth; it's true, the operations of life may be destroyed in a Christian, but the principle of life increases continually: and therefore the promises are made that they shall be as Trees which bring forth fruit in old age; and that they shall grow from strength to strength, until they come to appear before him in Zion; and thus in the strength of Christ they shall go from strength to strength, which is far more excellent than the life of Nature.

5. But again Fifthly, The life of nature is an uncertain life: there is no man hath any lease of life, but our times are in the Lord's hand, and there is no man living hath certainty of life for a moment: It's true, the Fool in the Gospel makes large promises, and makes a large lease to himself of that which was not his own, he would lease our life for years, for many years, but he reckoned without his Land-lord, and you know that that night his soul was taken from him. Of all things in the world, life is the most uncertain thing, but the life of Christ that Christ gives is most certain, it is a life that cannot be taken away: it is as sure to a Christian as the life of Christ in Heaven is sure, a Christian can no more die than Christ can die, Because I live, says he, ye shall live also; as sure as I live, ye shall live also; as my life is certain, so your life also is certain; for your life shall no man take from you. Though there be many that seek to take away a Christians life, yet none shall be able to do it. 1. The World shall not rob them of life, Be of good comfort I have overcome the world, says Christ. 2. Sin is another enemy to the life of Christ, but yet it shall not prevail. Sin shall not have dominion over you, for you are not under the Law but under grace; there's the bond of the Lord's faithfulness. Again, 3. Satan is another enemy to the life of Christ, but he shall not prevail neither, Christ hath spoiled Principalities and Powers, and hath triumphed over them; for it is said, the Lord Jesus shall tread down Satan under your feet shortly, that the life of Christ shall not be taken from you; here is the excellency of it. Again,

6. Sixthly, The life of nature is a deceitful life, both for time and continuance, and also for the comforts of it; it promises a great deal but performs little or nothing; riches, and honor, and pleasures, and the rest of the good things of natural life; it promiseth much but performs little: but when the creature comes to experience, as Solomon did, why, he is deceived, deceived in his expectation, for he finds nothing but vanity and vexation of spirit: let a man try, if he will, he shall never find so much comfort as it promiseth him; but the life of Christ is no whit deceitful, it doth not promise more than it performs, there is always more found in the enjoyment of the life of Christ than was promised, and more than the soul did ever expect; how often doth the poor soul cry out (with the Queen of Sheba) that is taken up into the Mount and sees Christ transfigured; Do but behold a little of his glory, she cries; behold there was no spirit left in her when she saw Solomon's house, for she did not believe what was told to the half of what she saw; Why, so when the life of Christ is given out to the soul, you shall find more than ever was told; God will be more and better in the performance than he was in the promise; and truly, the life and glory of Christ is Incomprehensible in respect of the creature, the largest capacity and understanding, though enlightened and sanctified, is not able to take in the least part of the glory of the life of Christ, it's not able to comprehend the notion of it, much less the life itself, the great discoveries of it shall be reserved for heaven, and then it shall be found of all Saints that the life of Christ was not like the life of man, there was no deceitfulness in it. But to say no more:

7. Seventhly, The life of Nature is a momentary life; therefore often compared in Scripture to things that are not, or are gone in a moment; the breath, the shadow, the wind that passeth away, there's no continuance, it comes up and is cut down: there is no continuance compared with Eternity, it's but a moment, the longest life is but a passage, there's no stay, it's but a Bridge to go over, it's but a Bridge to Eternity; life is but a moment, but now the life of Christ is an eternal life, the life that Christ gives to the soul is eternal, he that lives in Christ, and with Christ, shall live forever, it shall never be taken away, it shall never be blown out, but the soul that hath the life of Christ, shall live as long as Christ lives, it can no more die, than Christ can die; now he died but once, and being risen from the dead, he can die no more, but he lives forever and ever; and thus is the life of Christ when ever it is communicated to a soul, that soul can die no more, it hath died when Christ died, and therefore shall die no more, but it shall live, it shall live even to Eternity, and to Eternity it shall lift up the name of God and Christ. You see how excellent the life of Christ is, how far it surpasses the life of nature; every man desires to live, and to live long, because the life of nature is apprehended to be excellent; but you have seen what a poor life it is without the life of Christ: it's a poor, vain, sinful, miserable, wretched, decreasing, uncertain, deceitful, momentary life: O that that which hath been spoken of the life of Christ, might stir up all your hearts to enquire the way of life, that you may sit and wait at the footstool, and wait for the givings out of his life, for he came to this end that you might have life, and that you might have it more abundantly.

SERMON IV.

PHILIP. 1. 21. For to me to live is Christ, and to die is gain.

DOCT. Christ is a Believers Life.

THat's the Proposition in hand: I have concluded the Doctrinal part the last day, and I made Application. I put you upon examination, to see whether the life of Christ be in you or no: It is not enough to have a name to live, for many shall come from the East and West, and shall sit down with Abraham, when the children of the Kingdom shall be cast out into utter darkness; and therefore you that have a name to live, examine whether is Christ your life or no. But to proceed by way of Instruction,

Use 3. Let us take notice, in the third place, of the excellent state of every Believer; I say, take notice of the excellent state of every Believer that is made partaker of the life of Jesus Christ. If the life of nature be so excellent, and makes the creature so excellent in its kind, why then how excellent is this life of Christ, which is communicated and made over unto his people? I say, the life of nature is so excellent, as that the least worm that creeps upon the earth, is of more noble account than the Sun in the Firmament; the most inanimate creature in all the world is worth the Sun, in respect of its life; truly, the meanest of Saints, he that is least in his own eye, and it may be, in the eye of the world, he is most excellent in the eye of God, in the eye of Saints and Angels; I say, in the eye of the invisible world, he is more excellent than the greatest man on earth, that shines with the greatest worldly glory that can be, for why? this little worm hath life, this worm Jacob hath life; whereas a natural man is dead, and without life; in Eccles. 9. 4. A live Dog is better than a dead Lion; Why, Brethren, it is true in this sense also; the woman of Canaan knew she was called Dog, and so she was in respect of her outward condition, for she was one of the outcast Gentiles, a stranger to the children, not worthy to eat of the crumbs of the Table; but though she was a Dog, she was a living Dog, and though a Dog, yet she was accounted by Christ far better than the great Rabbies of the World, she was a living Dog, though they were but dead Lions, and she shall shine in the Firmament, whenas the dead Lions of the World shall rot and their carcasses; the living Shrub that shall grow and flourish, when the dead Oak shall be cut down and made fuel for the fire. And therefore, I beseech you Brethren, that you would learn by this how to judge of yourselves, and how to judge of others, and not according to that mean condition that (happily) God hath cast you in, in the World; but by that principle of life which is within you: if Christ be your life, if Christ be in you the hope of Glory, why, though in respect of your natural life and outward accommodations, your life is but as the life of a worm, yet your spiritual life being in you, is a life better than the life of Angels, which is a spark of the life of Christ himself, of God himself; which though their life be hid, it's hid with God in Christ, And when Christ who is your life shall appear, then shall you also appear with him in Glory; and therefore notwithstanding all those hindrances of Clouds in the World that are cast upon you, yet know that this your life is hid with Christ in God. So much by way of Instruction.

Use 4. A word of Exhortation, And first of all I shall speak unto such as are strangers unto the life of Christ. And Secondly, To those in whom Christ is a principle of life.

1. First of all, To those that are strangers to the life of Christ. My desire and request is, That the Lord would cause you to come to Christ for life, the Father hath made him the principle of life unto all that shall live in his sight; you that are dead in sins and trespasses, that it may be easily seen and said of you, that the World is your life, and that your lusts are your life, that your life is bound up in creatures, and not in Christ; I beseech you, that you would this day come to Christ that he may give you life; know it, that the Lord doth this day tender life to you, the Lord Christ stands weeping over you in this Ordinance, as sometimes he wept over Lazarus, in John 11. 35. Jesus wept. And truly I may say, Christ stands weeping over you; poor sinners that are standing with your trespasses and sins, the Lord Christ stands weeping over you, he sounds forth this Word, Awake thou that sleepest, and stand up from the dead, and Christ shall give thee life: know that you are in a dead sleep; such as are strangers to the life of Christ▪ they are like men in a sleep; they are filled with fancies and dreams, and conceits, that they have life and strength, righteousness and glory, they dream of a Feast, but when they awake they are hungry; thou conceitest thou art Rich, and stand'st in need of nothing, and knowest not that thou art poor, miserable, blind and naked: now it is to you that the Lord says, Arise, awake thou that sleepest; it is high time we should awake, the Apostle says, The night is past, the day is at hand, and therefore it is high time that men should awake; there is a glorious day that the Gospel shall now shine, in which the Lord makes gracious discoveries of himself; light shines round about you, and therefore awake thou that sleepest: It is a shame for men to lie a bed Sleeping and Snorting when the Sun shines on their faces, and calls them to labor: what a shame is it for men to lie asleep in the day of the Gospel, when the Sun hath risen and visited our coasts? O know! the Lord bids thee to awake, and stand up from the dead thou that sleepest; I beseech you, be not found amongst the dead; when God shall find you amongst the dead, for him then to cast you among the dead, and bury you out of his sight, cast you forever out of his sight to Eternity; O let this awaken your souls, when God calls you to awake.

Object. But you will say, If we be dead men, why do you speak to us? Can the dead arise? Can the dead hear the voice? Why do you bid us stand up and awake, if we be as dead men?

Answ. I Answer, It is true there is no principle of life in a natural man: the Lord doth not speak to you, because you have a principle of life in you, he doth not speak to you, because you have life in you, but he speaks that so you may live, he speaks that so he may convey life to you, for you must know that the Lord Jesus is the Prince of life, he is the Lord of life, he can command life, he gives life by his Word, he gives life by the breath of his mouth; and therefore know it is not an empty word, when the Lord calls upon you to live and to stand up, for he that speaks to you is the Lord of life. When Christ spake to Lazarus, Come forth, he knew Lazarus had no power of himself to come forth, but when he speaks, he gives life to Lazarus and enables him to live, and to arise, and so he comes out of his Grave; Why, so it is, the Lord Jesus speaks and call upon you to live, and he will give you life: it is the prerogative of God, he calls things that are not, as if they were; he speaks to dead men as if they were alive; and when the Lord speaks he acts upon the soul; there is an effectual operation in the Spirit of Christ that goes along to the giving of life to every soul that belongs unto God by the Word of the Lord. If a man go to a heap of Wood, and he commands the Wood to burn, he may command long enough before he shall see any such effect upon it; but if this man take fire in his hand, fire in one hand, and bellows in the other, and lay fire to the wood, and blow upon the fire, he shall presently see it arise up to a flame: And thus the Lord soeaks, his Word is not an empty Word, but he carries fire along with it: when he says, O soul live! O soul be inflamed with desire after it! this is not an empty word, but there is efficacy goes along with it, the Lord pours out (going along with it) pours out a spirit of burning, and breaths upon the same Word, with command that sparks be blown up to a mighty flame; so that the Lord speaks, and when he speaks, his words are not in vain; when he speaks that he would have you to live, do not you make objections against the life of Christ, do not say we are dead creatures, how should we live? Consider what Abraham did; it is said, He considered not his own body, when it was dead, neither the deadness of Sarah's womb; he did not look upon it, in Rom. 4. 19. Not being weak in Faith; it is said he considered not his own body now dead, dead as to generation, nor the deadness of Sarah's womb, but he eyed the Word of the Lord, the faithfulness and truth of God in his Word, he looked to the all-sufficiency of that God which had promised, he knew that he was able to perform what he had spoken, though it seemed never so unlikely unto sense, therefore he staggered not at the promise through unbelief, but he was strong in faith giving glory to God: and so also you poor creatures, do not look so much upon your own deadness, but know that God can out of very stones raise up children unto Abraham, he can quicken thee by the Word of his mouth, and the breath of his nostrils: though thou liest before him as Adam did, who was as a lump of clay, lifeless and useless, but the Lord made a body thereof, and made it to become a living body; though thou art dead, the Lord can breath life in thee by the Word of his Spirit, and so it shall burn unto Eternity; all the life and breathings, and motions of the Spirit after the Lord, these are kindled by the Spirit of the Lord: therefore look not so much after thine own deadness, but look to the faithfulness of him that hath promised, that thou mayest not stagger at the Promise through unbelief.

Object. But I am not only without the life of Christ, saith some poor guilty sinner, but I have been an enemy to the life of Christ, I have opposed the life of Christ both in my own soul and others; I have smothered those motions of the Spirit, that he hath often cast in, I have persecuted the appearances of the life of Christ in others, and the Lord cause me to lie under the apprehension of the guilt of it, and now I am ready to think and conclude that I am cast out of sight, the time of life is past, and the Lord hath forever excluded me, and shut me under death, darkness and horror; I shall not see the life of Christ.

Answ. Why even to thee let me say that eternal life is the free gift of God, I say, this life is the free gift of God, there is no gift more free than this life which God doth impart unto poor sinners: It was said when Christ ascended up on high, he led Captivity Captive, and he received gifts for men, even for the rebellious also, that God might dwell amongst them: Christ received life for Rebels, he received gifts for Rebels, and this was not the least of gifts, this was the greatest of gifts that Christ received for Rebels, this gift of life: and therefore you shall see how Christ gave life unto that evil generation that did so persecute him even to the very death; though they cut him off from the Land of the living, as not being worthy to live among them, yet to many of those that were the chief actors, the chief instruments of the Crucifying of the Lord of life, there was life given them; as we may see by those that were converted at Peter's Sermon, and made partakers of the death of Christ and life of Christ; the Apostle tells them in Acts 2. 23. He was delivered by the determinate counsel and fore-knowledge of God▪ him ye have taken, and by wicked hands have Crucified and slain: And afterwards in that Chapter you shall read that even those he speaks to here, at Verse 37. were converted, life was dispensed to them, pardon to them, mercy to them, grace to them, even to them that had with wicked and cruel hands slain and crucified the Lord of life and glory; and therefore also Christ says in John 6. That he came to give his life for the World; he gave his flesh for the life of the world; the world that lay in wickedness, that was in darkness, that was filled with enmity against Christ, and against his people whilst they were here in the world; Christ gave his flesh to be life unto the world, therefore see that eternal life is the gift of God: he gives it so freely to Rebels, to such who had their hands embrewed in his blood, that had with wicked hands crucified and slain him. See what a door of Hope is set open for poor guilty sinners that they may come in and be made partakers of this life of Christ.

Object. But it may be that soul will further Object and say; I have not only been an enemy to the life of Christ, but I have continued so long dead in sins and trespasses, that when I look upon my condition, it seems unto me like unto the state of dead and dry bones, and I am ready to say, Is it possible that such dead and dry bones should live, that have lain so long in the Grave of sin, so long rotting and stinking in their lusts, is it possible that such should live?

Answ. Let me tell you That the Lord carries on his work, though under great disadvantages; that Parable or Vision that was represented to the Prophet Ezekiel, concerning the Jews, is very remarkable, in Ezek. 37. 3. And he said unto me, Son of man can these bones live? And I answered, O Lord, thou knowest; Go Prophecy upon them, and the Lord says then he would give life unto them: I know no way how they shall live, it is beyond the reach of the creature to know, thou art infinite in wisdom and power, O Lord thou knowest the way how to give life and being to them; Well, says God, they shall live; the Lord often gives life to such poor creatures in such a condition when they are like unto dead and dry bones, when furthest from life: the skin was not only broken, and the flesh consumed, and the bones loosened and disjointed, but they were scattered abroad, broken and dry, and so they were in such an estate as was farthest off from life, but even then the Lord delights to communicate life. When Lazarus had lain four days in the Grave, then the Lord Christ raised him up, he could have raised him as soon as his breath had gone out, but the Lord Christ let him go four days, when he seemed to be farthest off from life, when his sister had said, Lord by this time he stinketh; says Christ unto her, Did not I tell thee, if thou wouldest believe, thou shouldst see the glory of God? What says Christ to the poor soul, when the soul saith, Lord I have lain so long stinking in my lusts, and how is it possible I should believe? Have not I told thee (as he said to Martha) that if thou wouldst believe, thou shalt see the glory of God, the glory of his Power and the glory of his Grace, to give life to these dry bones? So say I to you, notwithstanding all these discouragements, go and wait upon the Lord, and sit at the footstool of Christ and wait for the giving out of life, and know that Christ said, The hour is come when they that are in their Graves shall hear the voice of the son of God and live: Sit down at Christ's foot, and wait to hear his voice, hearken diligently when Christ will speak, and what Christ will speak to thy soul, for certainly the hour is come when such as are in their Graves shall live: wait for the voice of Christ, and wait for the pourings out of the Spirit of Christ, the Spirit of life, and the Spirit of faith that may carry up thy soul to believe in Jesus Christ, and know that he is the Resurrection and the Life, and though thou beest never so dead in thyself, yet by faith in Christ thou shalt live. Thus much to those that are strangers to the life of Christ.

Let me speak a word to those that have interest in Christ.

Use 5. If Christ be your life, then I beseech you, that you would live upon Christ, fetch life from Christ, let it appear to all the world that Christ is your life; let it appear in all your actings, in your conversings with God, and in your conversations in the world. O that you would make Christ your life! What a shame is it that Christians should live no more upon Christ? see that you look unto him as your life, as your life of Righteousness, as your life of Holiness, as the life of all your Comforts, as the life of all Ordinances; live upon Christ, upon the strength of Christ in all your works, and in all your duties: it's a blessed frame of spirit when the soul can say as the Apostle did, in Gal. 2. 20. I live, says he, and yet not I, but Christ lives in me. When a man can say it is I, and yet not I, it's Christ that lives in me, it's the Spirit of Christ that speaks in me, and it's the strength of Christ that acts in me, it's the arm of Christ that supports me, and it's the wisdom of Christ that guides me: it's no more I that live, it's not I that work, but it's the Spirit of Christ that doth all this in me, and for me: why then I fear we are debtors to this exhortation, and what a shame is it that we should live so little upon Christ, that we should live so much upon the creature, and so much upon self? Truly, the Lord may take up a complaint against most of this Generation, as sometimes he did against his people Israel; These people had committed two great evils, they had forsaken me the fountain of living water, and digged to themselves broken Cisterns: To go for the living amongst the dead, to live so much upon creatures, to live so much upon outward things, for a Christian to have his life bound up in them, so as he knows not how to live without them; and says, if I lose such a comfort, and am deprived of such a relation, O I am undone forever; what a dishonor is this to Christ, and to that principle of life that is in you? That your life should be bound up in any creature whatsoever: know that a Christian cannot be undone; so long as Christ lives he lives, Christ can die no more, and therefore his life cannot be put out; the life of his righteousness, and the life of his comforts shall not die, they shall be put out no more than the life of Christ is. Therefore let me desire that you would look to Christ for an abundance of life, I say, look to Christ for abundance of life: it is not enough that Christ be a principle of life in you, but a Believer should look to Christ for abundance of life, it was the end of his coming, I came that they might have life, says he, and that they might have it more abundantly: Christ came that his people might have abundance of life, and therefore do not straiten yourselves, be not straitened in your own bowels, when you are not straitened in Christ, you are not straitened in your principle, With thee is the fountain of life, saith the Psalmist, and therefore in thy life we shall see life: The fountain of life is in Christ, and therefore there is abundance of life for all Believers; there is no man need to make spare of the fountain head, if a man be owner of a fountain, surely he need not make spare, he may drink abundantly, hearty draughts, and not to sip when he hath a fountain to go to: with Christ is a fountain of life, he is a fountain, and a fountain set open; therefore I beseech you go to Christ for abundance of life, let all your actings be proportionable to that principle of life that is in you: What a shame is it that we should have a living head in Heaven, I say, a living head, and that we should be such dead members? O that the Lord would cause all our souls to look unto this Fountain, that so we may be filled and satisfied. What do you more than others? says Christ unto his people. There is some singular thing that Christ expects his people should do, they have a principle above others, and therefore their actings should be above others; the life of a Christian or a Believer, is as much above the life of the natural man, as the life of man is above the life of beasts, or the life of a Tree or a Plant; and therefore the operation of their life is far more excellent: what a shame is it that it should be said of a Christian, such as profess the life of Christ, what do they more than others? Wherein do they differ from the World? What difference betwixt them, and those that have their portion in this life? O my Brethren, if Christ be your life, then let all the breathings, and motions of your spirits be high, noble, and lifted up, let them be carried after God, and let all the actings of your spirits be in a proportion to that principle of life that is in you to Christ, who is your hope of glory.

But again, I beseech you, take heed that you do nothing against the life of Christ that is in you: It is a sin for a man to act against his life, against his natural life, to do that which may shorten his life, to do that which may hinder the comfort of life; and if so, then what an evil is it to act against the life of Christ, seeing the life of Christ is far more excellent than the life of Nature, as you heard before; it cost Christ dear, that life which he communicates to his people, it cost him his blood, it was not purchased without the laying down of his life, and therefore take heed that you do not act against him: Let Christians take heed that they do not neglect communion with God; neglecting of communion, and slighting of communion, is an acting against the life of Christ in them; for why, the life of Christ comes in that way, it is maintained by the souls conversing with God, and therefore when a man turns his eye so from God, when he is looking downward, continually poring upon the things of this World, neglecting the things of Eternity, and does not eye God, and does not converse with God in all Ordinances and Duties, why this is an obstructing of the life of Christ in you.

Again, Take heed of giving way to any vanity, take heed of making bonds with sin, that you do not step out from God in the least, it is destructive to the operation of the life of Christ, sin weakens the inward man, as sicknesses and diseases do the body; take away the natural strength, that a man cannot act with that strength as before: so it is with sin, when the soul gives way to lusts and corruptions whatever they be, he weakens his own strength, he entertains fellowship with that which is an enemy to the life of Christ in him.

And then take heed of giving way to sinful passions and unbelief, and dejection of spirit, for these also are great enemies to the life of Christ; I say, dejection of spirit is an enemy to the life of Christ, as well as to the life of Nature: therefore reason with your passions, as sometimes David did, Why art thou cast down, O my soul, and why art thou so disquieted within me? Know that he hath made you Kings, he hath set you upon the Throne that you may judge your own hearts: that holy and sanctified reason may call all your inordinate lusts and passions to account in thy soul, and say as David did, Why art thou cast down, O my soul, and why art thou disquieted within me? Take heed of neglecting Ordinances, of slighting Ordinances, it is by them that the life of Christ is maintained and cherished, they are the Pipes, they are the Golden Pipes, though empty in themselves, yet they are the Pipes through which the Lord is pleased to convey life; and therefore the slighting of Ordinances, and casting of them off, must needs make way for the hindrance of the life of Christ: Christians should take heed, I say, in any case, that they do not that which may be an obstruction to the life of Christ, to the actings, and to the motion of the life of Christ in them.

Again, To say no more, Let all Believers consider what matter of consolation the Lord hath laid up for them in this, in that he hath made Christ to be their life; I say, what matter of strong consolation is it in the midst of all their deaths and dangers, in the midst of all their miseries, in the midst of all their corruptions and enemies, that they are compassed about with here in the World? Here is a hidden ground of consolation: There is a principle of life in them, Christ is their principle of Life, and such a principle as shall never decay in them, they have such a life as endures forever; Why, it is comfort in the midst of all the want of outward necessities; if Christians want, they have a more excellent life than creatures, and if creatures say natural life is better than raiment, then how much more may it be said of spiritual life that it is better than food and raiment, and all outward things below? And so in the midst of all afflictions that do lie upon God's people at any time, they may comfort themselves with that hidden life that is within them, though the World see not, the world takes no notice of it, the Lord looks upon them as excellent because of that life that is within them: yea, even death itself, the people of God may comfort themselves as Job did in the thoughts of death, in the apprehension of death, though it seem never so terrible, they have a living Savior; they who have interest in Christ, he is a principle of life unto them: I know that my Redeemer lives, and I shall see him again at the last day, says Job, he lives, and he will be life to me, I shall stand up with him, and I shall live in his sight, this was that which Job did solace his soul in, in the midst of all those afflictions, in the thoughts of death itself, when it was presented to him as the King of terrors, yet let the Saints rejoice in this life, for it is such a life as shall never be put out, though it be compassed about: it is a life that is compassed about with enemies; and all that is in a man, and all that is without him, are enemies to the life of Christ; O how many temptations, and how many lusts and corruptions do beset it round about every day? Well, here is comfort to everyone to whom Christ is a principle of life, that this life of Christ shall prevail, and it shall continue to see all its enemies put under its feet, thou shalt live to see them all put under thy feet; Christ indeed when he came in the flesh, was persecuted in his very infancy, he was driven into a strange Country, but he lived to see his enemies put under, in Matth. 2. 19. the Angel comes and tells Joseph, he may return with safety, for they are dead which sought the young Child's life, to destroy him: it shall one day be said so unto every Believer, to every soul that hath interest in the life of Christ, though for a time they may be persecuted, and hurried and driven up and down with the lusts and corruptions of their hearts and this wicked world, yet it shall be said one day, Lo, they are dead which sought the Childs life. But so much for this time.

SERMON V.

PHILIP. 1. 21. For to me to live is Christ, and to die is gain.

I Have concluded the first of these Propositions, That Jesus Christ is a Believers life. But I shall proceed to a second Proposition in the Text.

For to me to live is Christ, and to die is gain. I shall propound it as exemplary unto all the Saints.

DOCT. That it is worthy your imitation to converse with Death at a distance; to prepare for Death before Death comes.

You shall find it the practice of the Saints in Scripture: so did Moses, and so did David; Moses as you have it recorded in Psal. 90. 12. which is a Psalm of Moses, So teach us to number our days, that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom. Teach us so to number them as we may know our own frailty; so as we may have the impressions upon our hearts that we are but Grass, and as the Flower in the Field that withers in a moment; and David puts up the like Petition, in Psal. 39. 4. Lord make me to know my end, and the measure of my days, what it is, that I may know how frail I am: Teach me to know my end, that I may know how frail I am: He doth not desire to know how many days he shall live, or when his end shall be, but to know how frail a creature he was, that it may take impression on his heart. And truly these teachings are such as none but God can teach, to teach a man to know how frail he is, and every day to look upon himself as a Spire of Grass, or as a Flower in the Field, that is in a withering and decaying condition every moment. The Apostle Paul also tells what his practice was, in 1 Cor. 15. 31. I protest by your rejoicing, which I have in Christ Jesus our Lord, I die daily. He died in affection to the World: I fit loose to the World, I die to it in affection, but I also die daily, I put myself into a dying condition, I know that I walk in the midst of Jeopardies, and therefore I fit loose from all, yea from life itself, I protest I die daily. The Prophet speaks of some that put the evil day far from them, it is a sign that the day of Death is an evil day when men put it far from them; it is a good day to the soul that hath interest in Christ, it is the best day that ever came to him, Eccles. 7. 1. you shall see what the wise man says there, A good name is better than a precious Ointment: and the day of death than the day of ones birth: It is not so to everyone, but to the righteous it is, to him that hath a good name, a name that is better than precious ointment; to him that hath the new name better than that of sons and daughters, to him the day of death is better than the day of his birth; therefore saith the Apostle, For to me to die is gain; and therefore it is good for Christians to look upon death at a distance, for death in itself is an enemy: The last enemy that shall be destroyed, said the Apostle, is Death; it is an enemy, such an enemy as hath a terrible visage; and therefore let's look death in the face often, that so we may be acquainted with the visage of death, that the terror of this enemy may be taken away: it is an enemy, and such an enemy as is armed, such an enemy as hath a sting with him, The sting of death is sin; and therefore it is a great deal of wisdom to combat with this enemy at a distance, to disarm him, to take away the sting before he comes upon you, that you may be the better able to grapple with him when he draws nigh; it is good therefore for men to consider whether they be able to grapple with and meet this enemy or no, whether they be able to look him in the face, to put themselves in a posture of combating, and how you may meet with him without fear, how you may overcome him by the blood of the Lamb, to exercise faith and to eye the conquest that Christ hath gotten over death, to see how he hath taken away the sting and horror, and to sanctify the Grave, this is a great mercy.

1. First, And therefore let me speak to you one word, you whose life is thus to die, do it daily with the Apostle: it is exceeding beneficial to the Saints this kind of exercise; the Lord himself doth commend it as a point of high wisdom by Moses, O how doth he wish his people, that all his people were thus wise, in Deut. 32. 29. O that they were wise, that they understood this, that they would consider their latter end: it is a point of high wisdom for men to consider their latter end, and through grace it proves a great help, even unto the people of God, it proves a spur to them; I say it is a spur to the works and services of their Generation, when they consider their latter end: I must work the work of him that sent me, says Christ, the night comes when no man can work; and so again says Solomon, Whatsoever thy hand finds to do, do it with all thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor counsel, nor knowledge in the Grave whither thou art going: If therefore it lieth before thee, neglect not the work of thy Generation; if he say, This is the way, walk in it; if he say, By this or by that thou shalt be for my Glory in the World, take heed you neglect it not, no, not a minute, for how soon mayest thou go to thy home, thy long-home! and there is no work in the Grave; this, through grace I say, proves a spur to God's people, the consideration of their latter end; I have but a little time in which I can gain glory to God's name, O take it, O soul improve it for God's glory; this I say puts a man to consider his latter end.

2. Secondly, Again, It is that which will make the soul truly Magnanimous, truly valiant for God, it will beget a mighty Heroic spirit, this conversing with death at a distance, this considering of a man's latter end; see what God says in that pathetic wish I before spake of in Deut. 32. 29, 30. If they did but consider their latter end, how should one chase a thousand, and two put ten thousand to flight: the consideration of this would make a man Magnanimous for God, it would make a man to carry his life in his hand, and venture it freely if God should call him forth: such a righteous man hath conversed with death at a distance, and hath seen and knows that it will be gain; he fears not a thousand, he is truly Magnanimous, he only looks at the cause, and goes forth willingly; for though there be a thousand to one, he fears not, for he hath considered his latter end. Whereas on the contrary, the neglect of this, the neglect of conversing with death daily, makes men liable to the snares and temptations of the world; I say, the neglect of this doth expose men to a thousand snares in the world: how doth this world keep many from seeking after the life of Christ? House, Land, Friends, Riches, Honors and Pleasure, what snares are these to thousands? What's the cause of this? It is because men do not consider their latter end, it is because that men have a kind of fancy, or dream that they shall always possess these things below: men dream of an Eternity here, and they are not indeed persuaded of parting, that they are a parting from them, and so prove woeful snares: they are neglecting the great things of God, and the great things of Eternity, because they do not look upon all as Grass, as withering Grass, themselves also as fading Flowers, therefore they are exposed to these temptations; yea, therefore it is that many a poor creature is brought down wonderfully, because they do not converse with death at a distance, they do not consider their latter end, in Lam. 1. 9. She remembered not her latter end, therefore she came down wonderfully; because men do not converse with death at a distance, they do not consider their latter end: the rich Fool in the Gospel remembered not his latter end, & therefore he came down wonderfully; men are brought down wonderfully, suddenly they are cut off e're they are aware of it, and all because they do not converse with death at a distance; and therefore when it comes, it is wonderful strange to them, because they do not die daily, they do not consider their latter end.

Object. But you will say, there are many that converse with death, and look death in the face every day, and yet we see they are not the better for it: as many that carry their lives in their hands when they go upon the Sea, and see the wonders of God in the deeps; and when they go into the high places in the Field, to engage and venture their lives, such men look death in the face, yet we see not that they are the better for it.

Answ. I Answer, It is true, there is a conversing with death, which makes not men the better but the worse: for there are many men, as Solomon says, It is better to go into the house of mourning than into the house of feasting, for in the house of mourning the living they will lay it to heart; but it is possible for men to go so long in the house of mourning, to be hardened so as they cannot lay death to heart, that they look upon it as a matter of custom to die, and to be buried, and there is an end: it is possible for such, the Prophet speaks of, who have made a league with Hell and Death; but Paul's conversing with death at a distance, was of another stamp, for his conversing with death was from an impression that God had made upon his spirit of the frailty of the creature, it was the Lord that taught him for to number his days: till God teach this lesson, no man can converse with death daily from an inward real apprehension of the vanity of the creature, with the perishing condition of this Tabernacle of Clay, this was Paul's conversing. The wicked man converseth with death, when he is bold to die (as it is possible he may) his familiarity with death, it ariseth it may be from some ignorance or hardness, he takes his leap, as a blind man may do, when he skips down a Hill; he knows not how far it is to the bottom; through ignorance men know not what death is, know not what the condition is that death leads to, they do not consider of the consequence of it, and of that Eternity that follows death, and therefore it is ignorance of this that makes the wicked man desperate: but when the righteous man is bold as a Lion, and death is familiar to him, it is from a principle of knowledge, and not from ignorance; he knows what death is, he knows that in itself it is an enemy, it is an enemy to nature, and it is destructive to all outward comforts, but he knows also that death hath lost his sting, he knows it is conquered, it is an enemy, but it is a conquered enemy, he knows that Christ was the death of it: O Death, I will be thy death, it is Christ that hath fulfilled and made good that challenge, he knows there is an Eternity beyond the Grave, and can look upon it as gainful, he knows it is gain that is laid up in Heaven, and it is death that makes him so gainful, and it is this that makes him so bold as a Lion. This leads me more particularly to consider the Proposition as it is in itself.

To die is gain. It is a strange Paradox, that none can reveal but Christ, and such as have Christ for their life, that death should be gain to: that that should be gain that seems to be the greatest loss, that strips a man naked of all his comforts, that doth at once take away the desire of the eye, and the delight of the heart, this is that which a natural man cannot understand, or he cannot believe it at least: but it is made good unto all the Saints, and therefore I shall lay down this as the Position which I shall insist upon.

That where Christ is Life, there Death is gain. You see there is a connection betwixt this and the former part of the Text: and therefore Solomon says (as I told you before) That the day of Death to the righteous, is better than the day of ones birth; and says the Apostle, We groan to be clothed upon with our house which is from Heaven, 2 Cor. 5. 4. There is a groaning in all the Saints to be clothed upon with that House which is from Heaven, that so mortality may be swallowed up in life. Now death is gain to every Believer, whether by Death you understand lesser Death, afflictions, losses, crosses, bonds and imprisonments, persecution; bonds for the Gospel as the Apostle was in; here I say, if you understand by Death these lesser deaths, it is true, that all these deaths are gain, the Lord makes his people gainers by all their losses: they gain by every condition that they are brought into; though the outward man lose, the inward man gains. The Prophet Habakkuk, if you look upon him in his great distress, you shall see what a gainer he was by it: he was in sore affliction, he says, his very belly trembled, his very bowels trembled within him, but he was a gainer by this, he gains in faith, his faith broke out gloriously, Hab. 3. 17, 18. he gained faith, and faith is precious, The trial of your faith is more precious than that of Gold; so did David, he was in great distress, in Psal. 46. 2. but he was a gainer by it, he gained in faith and confidence, Though the earth be removed, says he, and though the Mountains be thrown into the Sea, though the Waves thereof roar, yet there be professes that he will hold fast his confidence in God. If you look upon Job, you shall see what a gainer he was by all his losses, and those sore afflictions and trials that he met withal, he gained abundance of experience of God, experience of his wisdom, experience of his power, and experience of his faithfulness, experience of his goodness and kindness: he gained the knowledge of God, and he gained the knowledge of himself, that when he came out of his affliction, he throws himself at the footstool of God, in Job 42. 6. Now, says he, I abhor myself in dust and ashes. The Apostle Paul was a man of great affliction, there were bonds that did attend him in every place almost where he came, yet he was a gainer by all; he gained in confidence, in holy boldness, The Lord hath delivered, and he doth deliver, and he will deliver; he gained abundance of submission to the Will of God, by contemplation on his condition, and by this he knew how to want as well as how to abound, and he could do all things through Christ that strengthened him, and it was his obedience to the Will of Christ which strengthened him; and I believe there is none of God's people that will bring in their experiences, if they will truly and impartially cast up their accounts, but they will and shall find that God hath made them gainers by their losses, and by their several afflictions that God hath laid upon them, they have gained at least this, to know that they are nothing, they see themselves what fruitless unprofitable creatures they are, and they have known what the creature is when God is at a distance, they have seen something of themselves, and something of God, and if there be no more than this, this is a great deal of gain; and that it is true of all these Deaths, the Lord makes his people gainers by them, and he leads them through these conditions, because he intends to make them gainers by them; every affliction that he sends, is a servant of Christ, every afflicted condition is a servant of Christ, and is sent with a good message, is sent to communicate some good thing to the soul of every Believer: God stands up and says, as in another case, Who will go and persuade Ahab? And the Spirit answers, I; God says, Who will go and carry tidings of love from Heaven to such a soul, something of himself, something of the Divine nature? God hath store of Messengers; That will I, says one mercy: and that will I, says another; afflictions are all ready to communicate some good thing to those that love the Lord Christ; and indeed they are narrow Pipes, all these conditions that the Saints are brought into, they are narrow Pipes, they can convey but a little, a very little of God by them; now God is an infinite fountain, and he can convey much of himself, one condition is too little, too narrow for God to work in, too narrow a Pipe for God to pour in all that good which he intends for his servants, therefore he chooseth variety of works, great mercies and variety of afflictions, they are all the servants of God, and they have commission to go and work for such a man, to work for such a man's good, the promise is given to the Believer, That all shall work together for good, so that all are his servants, all deaths, afflictions, persecutions, whatsoever distresses his people shall meet withal, shall work together for good, they must needs gain: a man that hath a multitude of servants that work for him, it's all for their good as well as his; why, Believers have a multitude of servants, all is yours; all, Christ is yours, every condition that God hath brought you into, shall work for your good, for they are Christ's servants, and you must needs be gainers; and truly, God knows that their gain is his gain, he will gain by their gain, and therefore will make their deaths to be gain to them, for it comes back again to his Treasury, he knows that his people will not purse his glory, will not put up that which is God's: if God doth come in and make them gainers by their afflictions; if God doth enlarge their hearts, and set them free, they won't say, By my own hand have I made myself rich, by my own industry I have gotten this wealth, this strength, this peace, this liberty; for what are we, that we should be able to walk answerably to any measure that God gives out unto us? But,

Again, God will make Death itself gain unto us, not only lesser deaths but the greater death, it shall be gain, even that separation of soul from body, which to the wicked man is the worst of deaths, Christ becomes gain to that soul whose life Christ is. I will tell you in one particular (and leave the rest) wherein death is gain to that soul, whose life Christ is, and that is this:

He shall gain Rest: Blessed are those that die in the Lord, in Rev. 14. 13. Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord, from henceforth, yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors, and their works do follow them: that's their nature; he speaks in a time of persecution, when the Beast came out of the bottomless pit, to make war against the Saints, the Lord gives encouragement from hence, they are blessed though Anti-Christ curse them as Heretics, but from henceforth they are blessed that die in the Lord, especially that die in the Lord as these did: but wherein are they blessed? In this, That they rest from their labors, there's a part of their blessedness: see what the Prophet Isaiah says of the righteous man; he speaks of this blessedness, they shall gain rest, in Isa. 57. 1, 2. He shall enter into peace: they shall rest in their Beds, each one walking in his uprightness; they shall rest as a man rests in his bed, so shall the righteous man rest in his Grave: the Grave shall be as a bed to them, upon which, they that die in the Lord, shall rest sweetly from these their labors; this World is a troublesome World, a very turmoiling World, full of troubles and labors both to flesh and spirit, and they that die in the Lord rest from their labors. This World is a place to work in, When the Sun arises, man goes forth to his labor till the evening comes. But you will say,

This is no great matter, what gain is here? The gain of Rest, rest to the flesh, is this any great gain? Job says, in Job 3. 13. For now should I have lien still and been quiet, I should have slept; then had I been at rest. Wicked men rest in their Graves, they that could never rest well but in wickedness, they rest in their Graves; but what then, where is the gain that the righteous man rests in? For they both rest in their Graves.

1. First, There is a difference in their rest, the wicked man's rest is partial, it is but the rest of the body, the flesh only, it is not the rest of the spirit. It is an imperfect rest, they do not lie down to rest sweetly on their beds with those peaceful thoughts that the righteous man hath in his going to bed, to the Grave, O their rest is a troublesome rest; It is said in Psal. 16. there in the person of Christ, My flesh rests in hope, and shall not see corruption; his very flesh should rest in hope, the very flesh of the righteous man, when it is in the Grave rests in hope; his very bones when dry and scattered, still they rest in hope, hope of a Resurrection: But now we may say on the contrary, that the very flesh of the wicked man rests in fear, his very flesh rests in fear, he fears the Resurrection, that which is the righteous man's hope, is the wicked man's fear, he fears to see the morning; he was loath to go to bed, but will be more loath to rise, for his flesh rests in fear; he rather says, Lord let me lie here always, let me never go out of this Dungeon, better lying here always than going to Execution.

2. But again, Besides, the rest of the righteous man is not only the rest of the flesh, but the rest of the Spirit; he ceases from all the assaults of Satan, from his own crooked nature, burdens of sin and corruption, whilst he was in the Land of the living, and those out-cries, O wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me from this body of sin and death; the burden of death and sin is taken away, it shall be put under his feet forever; he shall not see anymore any of the motions of sin, any of those lusts and corruptions that formerly did war in any of his members, he shall no more cry, O Lord deliver me from a hard heart, a corrupt spirit, a passionate heart; O, says he, my life is a burden to me, to see these daughters of Heth, these Canaanites, because of these corruptions of mine, my life is a burden to me. Well, there shall be no such complaints beyond the Grave, and therefore, says he, death shall make the Saints gainers.

But again, They shall gain freedom from all the temptations of Satan; this is great gain, if well considered, they shall no more be assaulted, no more fiery darts thrown at them: Here they
