1. Mythology. a. (Now usually with capital.) One of nine sister-goddesses, the offspring of Zeus and Mnemosyne (Memory), regarded as the inspirers of learning and the arts, esp. of poetry and music.

In Greek antiquity there were other accounts as to the number of the Muses and of their parentage. The names of the nine Muses appear first in Hesiod, who says that Calliope is the chief of them. Later mythologists assigned to each of the Muses a particular class of functions, which, however, are less definitely limited than they appear in modern allusive use, where Clio is the Muse of history, Thalia of comedy, Melpomene of tragedy, Euterpe of music, and Terpsichore of dancing. The other names, Erato, Polyhymnia, Urania, and Calliope, are rarely mentioned in modern literature, as they have no well-known association with any particular branch of art or knowledge.

Urania (lit. 'the heavenly'; in formal lists the Muse of astronomy) is invoked by Milton (P.L. vii.), who explains that he means not the fabled goddess of mythology, but the true celestial source of inspiration.

b. In classical poetry the Muse is often invoked or referred to as if only one Muse were recognized. Hence often in modern poetic use (cf. 2 a).

1629 MILTON Christ's Nativ. iii, Say Heav'nly Muse, shall not thy sacred vein Afford a present to the Infant God? 1714 TICKELL Spect. No. 620 Whom shall the Muse from out the shining Throng Select to heighten and adorn her Song? 1842 TENNYSON Will Waterproof 9 No vain libation to the Muse, But may she still be kind.

1. That one of the fine arts which is concerned with the combination of sounds with a view to beauty of form and the expression of emotion; also, the science of the laws or principles (of melody, harmony, rhythm, etc.) by which this art is regulated.

Considered as an art, music has two distinct branches, the art of the composer and that of the executant. The word is often used with special reference to the executive branch, and to instrumental execution rather than vocal; thus, the designation of 'a teacher of music' is usually apprehended to mean one who teaches the art of playing on some instrument.

|| musica ('mju:zɪkə). [L., = music.] Used in special collocations to designate different kinds of music or musical techniques, as musica ficta, in contrapuntal music of the 10th to 16th centuries, the introduction by the singer of conventional chromatically altered tones to avoid unacceptable intervals; musica figurata, (a) contrapuntal music in which the different melodic strands move more or less independently; (b) plainsong with decorated melody; musica plana = cantus firmus; plainsong; musica reservata (see quot. 1972).

APEL *Harvard Dict. HUGHES in New Oxf. Hist. Music II. xi. 370 The position which called for such a system as musica ficta is as simple as the processes of its working out are complex. It is the problem of the tritone. 1954 G. REESE Music in Renaissance ix. 512 The expression 'musica reservata' has become one of the problems of music history. 1963 R. DONINGTON Interpretation of Early Music iv. 67 D minor, which we notate with a signature of one flat, grew out of the Dorian mode when its leading note, C, became habitually sharpened by the workings of musica ficta. 1968 Listener 23 May 676/2 His [sc. Palestrina's] Mass saves music, convinces the Pope that a regression to musica plana, plainsong, at the indiscriminate expense of musica figurata (the later, florid polyphonic style of the early Flemish composers) would be wrong—wrong metaphysically. 1972 Composer & Conductor Aug. 1/1 'Musica reservata' lends itself to diametrically opposite definitions. Some musicologists describe it as music made suitable for popular use, while others regard 'musica reservata' as literally 'reserved for connoisseurs'.

1. A hand-gun of the kind with which infantry soldiers are armed.

Originally applied to the matchlock, and in the 18th c. still sometimes distinguished from the 'firelock' or 'fusee'. (From early examples it appears that arrows as well as bullets were discharged from muskets.) Subsequently it became the general name for the infantry gun, whatever its construction. This use still survives, but as the modern gun is commonly (and in the Army Regulations) called by the specific term rifle, there is a tendency to restrict musket to the obsolete forms of the weapon.

II. Used as a pres. tense, and hence (under certain conditions) as a past tense corresponding to this.

The use as a present arose from the practice of employing the past subj. as a moderate, cautious, or polite substitute for the present indicative. The modern use as a past tense coincides with sense 2, but app. does not historically descend from it, exc. that the preterital use in must needs (see NEED, NEEDS adv.) may perhaps represent a continuous survival.

3. a. Equivalent to the older MOTE v. 2, expressing necessity: Am (is, are) obliged or required to; have (has) to; it is necessary that (I, you, he, it, etc.) should. In the second person, must now chiefly expresses a command or an insistent request or counsel; in the third person it tends to be restricted to the expression of a necessity which is either imposed by the will of the speaker, or relative to some specified end, or enunciated as a general proposition.

a 1300 Cursor M. 5018 Yee most [Gött. must] yow hast on your fare. a 1300 K. b. Used to express a fixed or certain futurity. I must = I am fated or certain to . . . , I shall certainly or inevitably . . .

c. In expressions like I must say = I cannot help saying. Also in explanatory clauses, as you must know or understand = you ought to be informed, I would have you know. if you must know: used to introduce information provided against the judgement or inclination of the speaker.

d. As a past tense: Was obliged, had to; it was necessary that (I, he, it, etc.) should.

In modern use confined to instances of oblique narration, and of the virtual oblique narration in which the speaker has in his mind what might have been said or thought at the time. To say 'I must go to London yesterday' would now be a ludicrous blunder.

1691 SHADWELL Scowlers I. i. 3 In those days a man could not go from the Rose Tavern to the Piazza once, but he must venture his life twice. 1720 WELTON Suffer. Son of God I. viii. 204 Thou wast but just come into the World, when, presently, Thou must Away, and take thy Flight into Egypt. 1781 C. JOHNSTON *Hist. FOWLER Adamnan Intro. 74 He could not bear to be idle . . . he must always be doing something.

e. As a past or historical present tense, must is sometimes used satirically or indignantly with reference to some foolish or annoying action or some untoward event. Now colloq.

1390 GOWER Conf. II. 145 Whan that the lord comth hom ayein, The jangler moste somewhat sein. 1605 SHAKS. Macb. iv. iii. 212 And I must be from thence? My wife kil'd too? Mod. Colloq. The fool must needs go and quarrel with his only friend. Just when I was busiest, that bore C. must come in and waste three hours. As soon as I had recovered from my illness, what must I do but break my leg?

4. In the first person, must often expresses an insistent demand or a firm resolve on the part of the speaker. Hence also in the second and third persons, rendering sentiments imputed to others.

a 1425 Cursor M. 6569 (Trin.) Who made þis calf I most [other texts I wald] him ken. 1509 BARCLAY Shyp of Folyes

Crit.* (1905) 258 He is not content with a ring and a bracelet, but he must have rings in the ears, rings on the nose—rings everywhere.

5. As must has no pa. pple., the need of a past conditional has been supplied by placing the principal verb in the perfect infinitive. Thus I must have seen it = I should (in the case supposed) necessarily have seen it; I must have done it = I should have had to do it, or have been obliged to do it.

S. BDAS Shaks. & Predec. 384 note, Had it [Hamlet] been in existence . . . before 1598, it must have been mentioned by Meres.

6. a. Expressing the inferred or presumed certainty of a fact; either (with present inf.) relating to the present time, as in you must be aware of this = I cannot doubt that you are aware of this; or (with perfect inf.) relating to the past, as in he must have done it = it is to be concluded that he did it.

Sometimes expressing an inference which will be rendered necessary if some particular assumption is made, as in if he says so, it must be true; if he really did it, he must have been mad.

1652 EVELYN Ess. 1st Bk. Lucretius (1656) 164 The continent must be incorporeal, the contained corporeal. 1673 DRYDEN Marr. à-la-Mode I. i. 8 Your friend? then he must needs be of much merit. 1762 GOLDSM. *Cit. 7. In must not (whether present or pa. t.) the negative, though formally belonging to the auxiliary, has the same effect as if it belonged to the following infinitive. I must not = I am not allowed to, I am obliged not to, etc. (sometimes, I will not permit myself to).

The coincidence with the negative use of sense 1 and of MOTE v. 1 is merely accidental.

Albanian mustakes, Rumanian mustate moustache), a derivative of Gr. μυστακ-, μύσταξ masc. (also βύσταξ) moustache, a Doric word, commonly believed (notwithstanding the difference both in meaning and in gender) to be a dialectal variant of μάστραξ fem., mouth, jaws.

In the 16-17th c. the word appears in a multitude of corrupt forms due to imperfect apprehension or recollection of the sound. Some of them suggest a pseudo-etymological association with Sp. muchacho boy.

In the sing. the word is almost or entirely obsolete, being superseded by MOUSTACHE; but the plural mustachios has considerable currency, sometimes occurring in books that have moustache in the singular. With regard to the pronunciation of the first syllable cf. MOUSTACHE.]

M.Du., Du. monsteren, MHG., mod.G. mustern to muster.

The β type is doubtful for the 15th c., as u and n are usually indistinguishable in MSS. of that date. For the 16th c., though some instances might be due to misprints, the existence of the type is proved by the spelling mounster. In military use the form with n may have been due to the influence of Du. monsteren.]

mutarotation (mju:tə'reiʃən). Chem. [f. L. mūtā-re to change + ROTATION.] The change of optical activity with time exhibited by the solutions of some compounds (esp. sugars) after being made up. (Orig. called multirotation (MULTI- 2).)

1899 T. M. LOWRY in Jrnl. Chem. Soc. LXXV. 213 The essential feature of the phenomenon, however, is the change of rotatory power which takes place in the freshly prepared solution, and the term 'mutarotation' may, therefore, be used with advantage to include all those cases in which such a change occurs without reference either to the sign or to the relative magnitude of the initial and final rotations. 1937 Chem. Zool. XXVIII. 381 In our opinion, the attempted distinctions between 'saltations', 'mutations', and 'variations of slight degree' have led rather to confusion of thought than to clearer thinking. To us these are all a single class, 'mutations', and the term carries no restrictions of degree, covering the most extreme as well as the slightest detectable inherited variation. 1925 Genetics X. 117 If one thinks of mutations as being simply inherited changes, it becomes necessary to distinguish changes that involve whole chromosomes... changes that involve several adjacent genes... and what have been called 'point-mutations' or 'gene-mutations'. 1928, 1930 [see gene mutation s.v. That's our big concern, the unexpected mutation. 1965 A. H. STURTEVANT Hist. Genetics x. 62 It is ironic that few of the original mutations observed by de Vries in Oenothera would now be called mutations. 1971 J. Z. YOUNG Introd. Study Man xxviii. 392 The cause of mutation is some faulty copying during replication of the DNA. This... will be inherited only if it occurs in the line of the germ cells. Mutations elsewhere in the body are called somatic mutations... The accumulation of somatic mutations may produce some of the diseases of old age. 1972 [see MENDELIAN sb.]. 1974 *Sci. MERRELL Evol. & Genetics xxi. 213 In the very early days of genetics de Vries (1902) proposed the mutation theory of evolution as an alternative to the theory of natural selection.

b. Qualifying a personal designation expressive of a relation.

Commonly censured as incorrect, but still often used in the collocations mutual friend, mutual acquaintance, on account of the ambiguity of common, which is the only adj. correctly expressing the intended meaning. mutualism ('mju:tju:əlɪz(ə)m). [f. MUTUAL a. + -ISM. Cf. F. mutuellisme (see I b).]

1. a. The doctrine that individual and collective well-being is attainable only by mutual dependence. Esp. in connection with the theory of non-profit credit and voluntary association for the exchange of services advocated by P. J. Proudhon (1809-65). b. [after F. mutuellisme.] The system of the association of 'mutualists' at Lyons.

2. Biol. A condition of symbiosis in which two associated organisms contribute mutually to the well-being of each other. W. H. CAMERON Parasites & Parasitism 231 Commensalism, in turn, grades into mutualism, which implies a certain benefit by the host from the presence of the invader, but the association is not an essential one. 1962 J. By usage, however, it has come to be restricted to associations. . . in which the participating species are dependent on each other for existence. . . . In cases of mutualism, on the other hand, the association is not obligatory to existence. 1962 K. F. 2. Used vocatively. a. Prefixed affectionately to terms of relationship or endearment; also, affectionately or compassionately, or in a jocular or merely familiar tone, to certain designations which are otherwise rarely used vocatively, as in my man, my boy, my good fellow, my poor man. (See also DEAR *a.*¹ 2 b, c, for the use as prefixed to that adj.)

In modern English it is not (as in some languages) the rule of ordinary speech to prefix my to terms of relationship (father, mother, brother, etc.) used vocatively; the use belongs to impassioned literary language. Son and daughter, however, are exceptions; and the omission of my before the vocative friend is somewhat arch. or rhetorical.

MYASTHENIA + L. gravis severe, grave.] A rare chronic disease, occurring chiefly in young adults, that is characterized by muscular weakness unaccompanied by atrophy, with temporary paresis following exertion, and is caused by a defect in the mechanism which converts a nervous impulse into a muscular contraction.

1900 Campbell & Bramwell in Brain XXIII. 278 The disease has received various names. The earlier cases were published as 'cases of bulbar paralysis without discoverable anatomical changes'. . . Strümpell introduced the term 'Asthenic bulbar palsy'. . . Other names which have been employed are 'general profound myasthenia', 'Erb's disease', the 'Erb Goldflam' and the 'Hoppe-Goldflam-symptom-complex'. Gr. μυελός, μυελόν (see MYELON), used in many medical and chemical terms, of which the following are typical examples: 'myelocone [Gr. κονίς dust]: see quot. 1872. myeloidic, myeloidin: see quot. 1872. myelo'margarin, a fatty substance obtained by Köhler from the tissue of the central nervous system. myelomono'cytic a., designating that form of leukæmia which is characterized by the presence in the circulating blood of myeloid cells of both the monocytic and the myelocytic series. myelopathy, disease of the spinal cord; hence myelo'pathic a. 'myeloplaque, 'myeloplax [Gr. πλάξ anything flat and broad] = OSTEOCLAST (a.) 'myeloplast [-PLAST] = prec.; hence myelo'plastic a., connected with myeloplasts. myelopro'liferative a., characterized by or pertaining to the proliferation of cells of or derived from the bone marrow; esp. in myeloproliferative syndrome (see quot. 1974).

1878 KINGZETT Anim. Chem. 267 Kühn gave to one of the principles of the brain the name of cerebrine, and to another that of *myelokon. 1891 *Syd. Soc. myeloblast ('maɪələʊblɑːst, -æ-). Anat. [a. G. myeloblast (O. Naegeli 1900, in Deutsche med. Wochenschr. 3 May 289/1): see MYELO- and -BLAST.] Any of the immature cells (approximately 15 microns in diameter, with large nuclei and a small amount of densely staining cytoplasm) which are confined to the bone marrow, appearing in the circulating blood only in pathological states, and which, according to the so-called monophyletic (unitary) theory of hæmopoiesis, are the precursors of all other myeloid cells of the blood and bone marrow, or, according to the diphyletic (dualistic) or polyphyletic theories, are the precursors only of the myelocytes and of cells derived from them.

1904 F. P. FOSTER Appleton's Med. Dict. 1395/1 Myeloblast. 1909 R. J. M. BUCHANAN Blood in Health & Dis. viii. 143 Nägeli termed them 'myeloblasts'. 1911 W. K. HUNTER Rec. Adv. Hæmatol. 30 Both the neutrophile and the eosinophile myelocyte are, according to Ehrlich, originally derived from a cell to which the name myeloblast has been given. 1961 Lancet 19 Aug. 434/2 The leucoerythroblastosis persisted, although granulocyte precursors, occasionally including myeloblasts, became more numerous than the nucleated red cells in the peripheral blood. 1968 PASSMORE & ROBSON Compan. Med. Studies I. xxvi. 11/2 After birth, the production of the granulocytic white cells takes place only in the red marrow. . . The first stage of development is the myeloblast.

So myelo'blastic a., of, pertaining to, or involving myeloblasts; myelobla'stosis [-OSIS], the condition of having large numbers of myeloblasts in the bone marrow and circulating blood.

DOWNEY Handbk. Hematol. III. xxv. 2014 They [sc. the cells] are clearly of the myeloblastic type. 1965 New Scientist 17 June 800/2 The three main leukaemias of poultry—lymphomatosis, erythroblastosis and myeloblastosis—are caused by filterable transmissible agents. 1974 PASSMORE & ROBSON *Compan. myelocoele ('maɪləʊsi:l). Also (erron.) -CŒLE. [f. MYELO- + Gr. κήλη tumour, esp. rupture, hernia.] 1. Path. a. = MYELOMENINGOCELE. b. Spina bifida in which tissue of the spinal cord lies exposed over part of its length, without protrusion as a swelling; an area of neural tissue so exposed.

1875 JONES & SIEVEKING Path. Anat. (ed. 2) xii. 290 The protruded sac contains some portion of the spinal cord itself, forming the so-called myelocoele. 1922 Brain XLV. 44 Myelocoele. . . Here. . . segments of the medullary folds have remained open and the neural ectoderm lies exposed on the surface of the body as a ribbon of delicate tissue down the mid-dorsal line. 1924 J. A. FOOTE Dis. New-Born x. 140 Myelocoele, or meningo-myelocoele, is the name given to the tumor when the spinal cord itself is concerned in the embryonic fissure. 1952 J. E. MORISON Fœtal & Neonatal Path. xiv. 247 Especially when the tissues are infected a myelocoele may be incorrectly described as a myelomeningocoele. 1963 [see MYELOMENINGOCELE]. 1974 PASSMORE & ROBSON Compan. Med. Stud. III. xxxvi. 9/2 The [spinal] cord may be fully exposed, usually for a length of several segments without any covering from the dura mater, forming a myelocoele.

2. Anat. Var. of MYELOCELE.

2. A cell generally confined to the bone marrow (appearing in the circulating blood only in pathological states) which is smaller than the myeloblast from which it derives, which when mature has neutrophil, eosinophil, and basophil cytoplasmic granules, and which is the precursor of the polymorphonuclear leucocyte of the circulating blood.

1891 Johns Hopkins Hosp. Bull. II. 87/1 These elements seem never to acquire the power of amoeboid movement which the polynuclear cells possess. They appear to arise in the marrow and have been called by Ehrlich 'myelocytes'. 1911 [see MYELOBLAST]. 1962 Gray's Anat. (ed. 33) 65 Myeloblasts divide and give rise to smaller cells, the myelocytes. 1968 PASSMORE & ROBSON Compan. Med. Studies I. xxvi. 12/1 The myelocyte is a smaller cell with a round nucleus.

So myelo'cytic a., of, pertaining to, or involving myelocytes.

1896 Boston Med. & Surg. Jnl. 2 Jan. 6/1 The shape of the myelocytic nucleus. . . is generally to be contrasted with that of the 'polynuclear' cell. 1972 Science 20 Oct. 304/1 Tumor cells derived from patients with both acute lymphocytic and acute myelocytic leukemia.

1937 Arch. Neurol. & Psychiatry (Chicago) XXXVIII. 1126 This report is based on 10 cases of lesions of the spinal canal in which the level of the block was found by air myelography. 1943 Amer. Jrnl. Med. Sci. CCVI. 691 If. . . a protruded intervertebral disk in the lumbar region is suspected air myelography should be used. 1969 N. A. LEWTAS in D. Sutton *Textbk. EWING Neoplastic Dis. (ed. 2) xviii. 256 Giant-cell sarcoma of tendon sheaths and aponeuroses.—The specific structure and benign clinical course of a group of giant-cell sarcomas of tendon sheaths of the hand and feet have long been recognized. They have been fully described, especially by French observers, under the terms 'myeloma' or 'xanthosarcoma' (Gross, Paquet, Reverdin, Heurteaux, Spiess, Lit.). 1948 R. A. WILLIS Path. Tumours lxiii. 680 The changing views regarding the nature of this tumour [sc.

osteoclastoma or giant-cell tumour of bone] have resulted in a diverse and confusing terminology—'myeloma', 'myeloid sarcoma', 'tumeur à myélopaxes', 'benign giant-cell tumour', 'osteoclastoma', and 'chronic (non-suppurative) hemorrhagic osteomyelitis', being only some of the names applied to it. 'Myeloma' and 'myeloid' should be discarded, for the tumours are unrelated to the haemopoietic tumours of bone marrow, and in particular are quite distinct from the lesions of myelomatosis. 1966 WRIGHT & SYMMERS Systemic Path. I. iv. 185/2 Sometimes myelomas produce extramedullary masses in the viscera. 1967 New Scientist 4 May 276/3 The other source of information...about antibody structure has been the discovery of diseases, called myelomas, in which molecules, chemically similar to the immune globulins but without known antibody activity, are produced in the blood of patients suffering from a cancer-like proliferation of cells in the bone marrow and bloodstream. 1970 PASSMORE & ROBSON Compan. Med. Stud. II. xxviii. 4/2 An important tumour affecting the bone marrow is the plasma cell myeloma (myelomatosis or multiple myeloma). In this disease the bone marrow becomes packed with plasma cells.

myelomatosis (ˌmaɪələʊməˈtəʊsɪs). Path. [f. myelomat- (taken as stem of MYELOMA) + -OSIS.] A malignant proliferation of plasma cells causing numerous accumulations of them to form in the bone marrow and abnormal proteins to be present in the blood and urine.

1904 Jrnl. Path. & Bacteriol. IX. 173 At the necropsy the bone marrow of all the bones examined was found to be more or less affected by a diffuse sarcoma-like growth of rounded or polyhedral mononuclear cells—a form of 'multiple myeloma' or 'myelomatosis'. 1906 Jrnl. Amer. Med. Assoc. 16 June 1893/2 Hoffmann defines myelomatosis as the multiple development of malignant tumors in the bone marrow, originating in hyperplasia of one of the cellular elements of the mother soil [sic: ? read cell] (lymphocyte, myelocyte, plasma cell). 1961 Lancet 16 Sept. 639/2 Neither in myelomatosis in man nor in any of the plasmacytomas of mice...do we ever regularly observe a direct Coombs test or signs of hæmolytic anæmia. 1966 WRIGHT & SYMMERS Systemic Path. II. xxxix. 1419/2 Myelomatosis or multiple myeloma is a neoplastic condition originating from the bone marrow.

MENINGO-] Spina bifida in which tissue of the spinal cord and its investing membranes (the meninges) protrudes through the cleft, forming a rounded swelling of the skin usu. slightly above the base of the spine; the tissue so protruding. Also called meningomyelocele; cf. MYELOCELE.

1889 Buck's Handbk. Med. Sci. VIII. 471/2 In myelomeningocele the external wall of the sac consists not of dura mater but of pia mater turned inside out. 1924, 1952 [see MYELOCELE 1]. 1963 Cecil-Loeb Textbk. Med. (ed. 11) 1581/1 Myelocele involves a lesser defect of the meninges [than meningocele] with exposure of the spinal cord, but without cystic protrusion. Myelomeningocele is characterized by an incorporation of the spinal nerve roots and cord in the sac of a meningocele. 1974 PASSMORE & ROBSON Compan. Med. Stud. III. xxxvii. 9/2 There may be a developmental failure of the spinal cord and then the flat neural plate with its exposed central canal is liable to be involved with the sac and form a myelomeningocele.

|| myelon ('maɪəlɒn). Anat. [a. Gr. μυελόν, late var. of μυελός marrow.] Owen's name for the spinal cord. Hence 'myelonal, mye'lonic adjs. 1846 OWEN Lect. Anat. Vertebrate Anim. 1. Fishes 172 This part is called the 'brain' or encephalon: the rest of the axis I term the 'myelon'. Ibid. 174 At the bottom of the ventricle the myelonal canal is exposed. 1883 E. ELLERMANN Leucosis Fowls i. 9 Schnidde's shorter and correcter words, myelosis and lymphadenosis, are now used in several text-books. 1952 Blood VII. 767 The term erythremic myelosis is used to indicate the parallelism with the leukemic myeloses. 1974 PASSMORE & ROBSON Compan. Med. Stud. III. xxi. 72/2 Pure erythraemic myelosis, di Guglielmo's syndrome, is rare, and is characterized by intense and bizarre proliferation of red cell precursors, which escape into the peripheral blood. Ibid. 73/1 Megakaryocytic myelosis is probably a variant of chronic myeloid leukaemia, as the clinical picture, course and prognosis are similar, and it usually terminates with definite evidence of myeloid leukaemia.

Our conclusion is not likely to be affected by any solution of such...questions of *myophysics as the pre-existence of muscular currents. 1907 Alienist & Neurologist XXVIII. 58 The author [sc. PICKEN Organization of Cells vii. 295 By the fourth day of incubation, the multinucleate coenocytic cells (derived from the spindle-shaped, uninucleate myoblasts) have developed a peripheral layer of myofibrils, embedded in sarcoplasm, and a linear series of nuclei occupying the cell axis. These cylindrical cells are conveniently distinguished as a particular stage in the development of the muscle fibres, namely as 'myotubes'. From the seventh day after their appearance, the myotubes begin to multiply by longitudinal fission... The formation of a secondary is prepared by nuclear fission, leading to the formation of a second linear series of nuclei; round which new myofibrils form. 1972 D. A. FISCHMAN in G. H. Bourne Structure & Function Muscle (ed. 2) I. iii. 107 The myotube is here defined as the multinucleated syncytium which results from the cytoplasmic fusion of myoblasts. The term is purely descriptive, for it only implies an immature muscle fiber in which the myofibrils are, in general, circumferentially distributed within the cell, and the nuclei occupy the core or central zone of the syncytium. 1973 Nature 3 Aug. 253/3 From the fourth to the sixth day of incubation, motor nerve fibres invade the limb-bud muscles [of the chick embryo], and the first myotubes appear.

Microdissection of fresh muscle fibers as a means of demonstrating myofibrils is exceedingly difficult. 1968 New Scientist 11 Jan. 70/1 Normal skeletal muscle...is composed of parallel fibres averaging 70 micrometres in diameter. These are in turn made up from hundreds of fine myofibrils, one to two micrometres thick, running the whole length of the fibre. 1970 AMBROSE & EASTY Cell Biol. xi. 370 The myofibril is itself composed of fine filaments.

myotonia (maɪə'təʊniə). Path. [mod.L., f. MYO- + Gr. τόν-ος TONE sb. + -ΙΑ¹.]

1. The inability to relax voluntary muscle for a period following its use; any condition characterized by this.

1898 Jnrl. Nerv. & Mental Dis. XXV. 509, I think it proper to assign all such cases to the one clinical category of myotonia. Ibid. 510 Cases which show symptoms of organic disease... can at once be excluded from the group of myotonias. 1905 Ibid. XXIX. 416 Myotonia appears to have been used also in the collective sense. Hochsinger describes as myotonia of infancy the persistent hypertonicity of the flexors, and diagnosticates it from tetany, but if myotonia is used as an inclusive term it is a question if it should not cover tetany itself, while if it is used in the narrow sense it has been preëmpted by Thomsen's disease. 1948 F. B. CARLSEN tr. Thomasen's Myotonia ii. 15 There is a definite difference in the ages at which the myotonia in Thomsen's disease... on the one hand, and dystrophia myotonica on the other, manifests itself. 1963 CAUGHEY & MYRIANTHOPOULOS Dystrophia Myotonica p. x, Her father was a London professional man who had myotonia of the grip. 1970 MASTERS & JOHNSON Human Sexual Inadequacy viii. 220 Specific evidence has been accumulated of the incidence of both myotonia and vasocongestion in the female's pelvis as she responds physiologically to sex-tension elevation.

2. In the (usu. mod.L.) names of specific diseases in which myotonia is a prominent feature, as: a. myotonia congenita [A. Strümpell 1881, in Berliner klin. Wochenschr. 28 Feb. 121/2], congenital myotonia (rare), a rare hereditary disease manifested soon after birth and characterized by myotonia but without muscular wasting or other symptoms. Also called THOMSEN'S DISEASE.

1886 Brain IX. 113 The eighth article... makes confusion worse confounded by using another term, viz. dysmyotonie congénitale, almost adopting Strümpell's term, congenital myotonia. 1887 *Jnrl. T. HUGHES Path. Muscle iv. 76 In contrast to myotonia congenita and paramyotonia congenita, dystrophia myotonica is frequently diagnosed.

b. myotonia atrophica [tr. F. myotonie atrophique (G. Rossolimo 1902, in Nouvelle Iconographie de la Salpêtrière XV. 63)], a hereditary condition characterized esp. by myotonia, muscular wasting, cataracts, frontal baldness, and gonadal atrophy. Also called dystrophia myotonica.

1908 Jnrl. Nerv. & Mental Dis. XXXV. 269 Myotonia atrophica is an extremely rare affection. 1963 CAUGHEY & MYRIANTHOPOULOS Dystrophia Myotonica p. viii, Dystrophia myotonica has been known as myotonia atrophica, Steinert's disease, dystrophia myotonica or myotonic dystrophy. 1974 J. N. WALTON Disorders Voluntary Muscle (ed. 3) xv. 595 Dystrophia myotonica (myotonia atrophica) was described by Steinert (1909) and Batten and Gibb (1909).

AF. misterie* (OF. mistere, mod.F. mystère masc.), = It. misterio, mistero, Sp. mistério, Pg. mysterio, ad. L. mystērĭum, a. Gr. μυστήριον, f. *mús-, root of μύειν to close (the lips or eyes): cf. μύσσης MYSTES.
In classical Greek μυστήριον occurs chiefly in plural, denoting certain secret religious ceremonies (the most famous being those of Demeter at Eleusis) which were allowed to be witnessed only by the initiated, who were sworn never to disclose their nature. (See sense 9 below.) In the LXX the word occurs only in Daniel and the Apocrypha, where it has the sense of 'secret purpose or counsel' (esp. of a king or of God). This sense is found in the N.T., where the word also means sometimes a religious truth long kept secret, but now revealed through Christ to his Church, and sometimes anything that has a symbolic significance. In later Christian Greek μυστήριον became equivalent to SACRAMENT (in several passages the Vulgate renders it by sacramentum, even when it means only 'secret'; in other passages mysterium is retained). In OF. and English the Christian senses of the word naturally appear earliest.]

N

N (ɛn), the fourteenth letter of the modern, and thirteenth of the ancient Roman alphabet, represents historically the Greek nū and the Semitic nun. The earlier Greek forms were ν and ⲛ, corresponding to the Phœnician 𐤍. The sound usually denoted by the letter is a voiced nasal consonant with front closure (the point of the tongue touching the teeth or the fore part of the palate). It is, however, also capable of being used as a sonant or vowel, here denoted by ((ə)n), as in bidden ('bid(ə)n), bitten ('bit(ə)n), slacken ('slæk(ə)n). With one or other of these values the letter is very frequent in English, and is silent only in a few cases at the end of syllables after l and m, as kiln, damn, condemn, contemn, limn, hymn, solemn, column.

Before the sounds (g) and (k) the letter n is also employed in English to denote a nasal with back tongue-closure, in this dictionary distinguished as (ŋ), as in finger ('fɪŋgə(r)), think (θɪŋk). When not followed by these sounds, this back-nasal is expressed by the digraph ng, as in hang (hæŋ), sing, song. (On the difference in pronunciation between finger and singer, etc., see the note to the letter G.)

In Scottish texts of the 15–16th centuries the change of Latin and French gn to ng is frequently represented in the spelling of such words as sing sign, ring, reng reign, and ngn is common between vowels, as resingnit resigned, mangnitude, etc.

2. In OE. n is very frequent as the terminal letter of inflectional syllables, as in the -an of the infinitive and the oblique cases of weak nouns. In southern texts this n is always retained, but in the north it appears to have been generally dropped by the middle of the 10th century. In ME. the retention or dropping of the letter varied in the different midland and southern dialects. On the other hand, the -en of strong past pples., which became -ē in southern dialects, was retained in the north as in modern English.

In inflectional syllables (as in reading, writing, etc.) -ng has in many dialects been reduced to n, and this pronunciation (usually called 'dropping one's g's') may sometimes be heard even from educated speakers.

3. In ME. the n of the indefinite article an is frequently transferred to a following word beginning with a vowel (while a converse process has given such forms as adder, apron, and auger). The forms thus produced occasionally alliterate with words properly beginning with n, and in one or two cases (as newt and nickname) have finally established themselves in the language. The following are examples of the practice from ME. and early modern texts.

b. In Physics and Chem. n represents the principal quantum number of an electronic orbit in an atom, which determines the energy of the orbit (to the first order) and can take the values 1, 2, 3, . . . (corresponding to increasing energy). In molecular spectroscopy n was introduced to denote the vibrational quantum number of a diatomic molecule (now usu. replaced by v), and later (as N) the total angular momentum, apart from spin, of diatomic and polyatomic molecules (see also quot. 1962¹).

1914 N. BOHR in Phil. Mag. XXVII. [507 According to Balmer, Rydberg, and Ritz the frequency of the lines in the line-spectrum of an element can be expressed by the formula $v = f_1(n_1) - f_2(n_2)$, where n_1 and n_2 are whole numbers and f_1, f_2, \dots a series of functions of n, which can be expressed by $f_i(n) = (K/n^2)\phi_i(n)$, where K is a universal constant and ϕ a function which for large values of n approaches the value unity.] Ibid. 508 We shall assume that this spectrum is emitted by a system possessing a series of stationary states in which, corresponding to the *n*th state, the energy, omitting the arbitrary constant, is given by $A_n = -hK/n^2$. Ibid. 509 For $n = 1$, corresponding to the normal state of the atom, we get [etc.]. 1920 Sci. Abstr. A. XXIII. 423 If the nuclei are related in a quasi-elastic manner to the equilibrium positions, then the energy values for a diatomic non-rotating molecule are the same as for a Planck oscillator, namely: $E = nh\nu$, where n denotes the quantum number for the atomic oscillation. 1922 A. D. UDDEN tr. Bohr's Theory of Spectra III. i. 67 This quantum number which will always be denoted by n will therefore be called the 'principal quantum number'. 1926 E. C. KEMBLE et al. in *Bull. 5. n-declension, the 'weak' declension of Teutonic nouns and adjectives, in which the stem ends in n; so n-stem, n-plural.

1843 Proc. Philol. Soc. I. 73 The n-declension . . . makes its appearance in many of the Indo-European languages, besides the Gothic. 1866 MORRIS Ayenb. Intuyt p. xxxv, They are remnants of the n-declension. 1886 T. M. DOUSE Introd. Gothic p. x, Consonant Declensions; n-stems. 1894 V. HENRY *Comp. Gram. 6. N-rays (originally n-rays), a form of radiation app. identified in 1903 by R. Blondlot of the University of Nancy, from the initial letter of which the name is derived. N¹-rays (originally n₁-rays), another form of radiation, having, in some respects, the opposite effects. [Soon after their alleged discovery it was concluded that such rays do not exist and Blondlot's work was in error.]

1903 Nature LXVIII. 119/2 The name n-rays is suggested for these radiations. Ibid. 578/1 Several papers on the so-called N rays discovered by M. Blondlot are printed in the Journal de Physique for August. 1904 — LXIX. 455/2 The n₁-rays, described in the previous note, have exactly the opposite effect. 1906 Nature 1 Mar. 413/1 It would be interesting to know whether anyone has obtained success in repeating the latest experiment designed to show the objective reality of the n-rays. 1925 A. HUXLEY Lett. 25 Jan. (1969) 241 You remember the unanimously favourable verdict in favour of N rays? 1941 W. SEABROOK Doctor Wood: Mod. Wizard of Laboratory xvii. 234 According to Blondlot, the rays were given off spontaneously by many metals. A piece of paper, very feebly illuminated, could be used as a detector, for, wonder of wonders, when the N rays fell upon the eye they increased its ability to see objects in a nearly dark room. 1973 Nature 12 Oct. 344/2 The protracted error immortalised in scores of publications can be due only to psychological (self-deception), not to chemical causes. The 'anomalous' water belongs to the category exemplified by the N rays of Blondlot.

1942 AEBERSOLD & LAWRENCE in Ann. Rev. Physiol. IV. 36 In this laboratory, a standard Victoreen r-meter with a 100r condenser-chamber is used. The unit of fast neutron exposure is arbitrarily taken as that amount which produces the same reading with this meter as a roentgen of x-ray. Thus an n of fast neutrons produces inside this 100r Victoreen thimble chamber the same amount of ionization as produced by an r of x-rays. 1948 E. PATERSON in R. PATERSON Treatment of Malignant Dis. by Radium & X-Rays xxxiii. 593 The n unit has fulfilled a useful function, however, in demonstrating differences in effect between X- or gamma-radiation and neutrons when ratios of the dosage required to produce effects are compared.

2. Art. A member of a group of late 19th-century French post-impressionists, including Bonnard, Vuillard, Denis, and Sérusier, who followed the artistic theories of Gauguin.

1931 C'TESS DE LAUZANNE tr. Basler & Kunstler's Post-Impressionists xi. 52 All the 'Nabis', all the 'enflammés' who left the Jullian Academy, were attracted by the theories of... Paul Gauguin. 1945 GOLDWATER & TREVES Artists on Art (1947) 379 Sérusier gathered about him a group known as the Nabis which included... BULLOCK tr. Chassé's Nabis & their Period i. 14 The Nabis soon became known as devotees of 'beautiful greys' and broken colours... nabla ('næblə). Math. [a. Gr. νάβλα: see NABLE (and cf. quot. 1879 s.v. NEBEL).] = DEL.

The operator was introduced by Sir William Hamilton, who represented it by the symbol \triangleleft . (In quot. 1837 he uses ∇ as a symbol for any arbitrary function.)

[1837 W. R. HAMILTON in Trans. R. Irish Acad. XVII. 236 Considering x as a function ψ of a new variable o' and performing any operation ∇' with reference to the latter variable, $\nabla' f(\psi(o')) = \nabla' f(1 + \Delta)(\psi(o'))^p$. 1846 Proc. R. Irish Acad. III. 291 The following... general characteristic of operation $\frac{d}{dx} + \frac{d}{dy} + k\frac{d}{dz} = \triangleleft$, in which x, y, z are ordinary rectangular coordinates, while i, j, k are his [sc. Hamilton's] own coordinate imaginary units, appears to him to be one of great importance in many researches. 1847 W. R. HAMILTON in Phil. Mag. XXXI. 291 In the paper designed for Southampton... the characteristic was written ∇ ; but this more common sign has been so often used with other meanings, that it seems desirable to abstain from appropriating it to the new signification here proposed. 1853 — Lect. Quaternions vii. 610 Introducing, for abridgment, as a new characteristic of operation, a symbol defined by the formula $\triangleleft = [\text{etc.}]$.] 1884 W. THOMSON Notes Lect. Molecular Dynamics & Wave Theory of Light at Johns Hopkins Univ. x. 112 (MS.), I took the liberty of asking Professor Bell... whether he had a name for this symbol ∇ ; and he has mentioned to me nabla, a humorous suggestion of Maxwell's. It is the name of an Egyptian harp, which was of that shape. 1892 Phil. Trans. R. Soc. CLXXXIII. 431 Physical mathematics is very largely the mathematics of ∇ . The name Nabla seems, therefore, ludicrously inefficient. 1939 D. E. RUTHERFORD Vector Methods iv. 50 A convenient method of writing grad ϕ is $\nabla\phi$, where ∇ (pronounced 'nabla') is defined as the vector operator $\nabla \equiv \frac{\partial}{\partial x} + j\frac{\partial}{\partial y} + k\frac{\partial}{\partial z}$. 1964 [see DEL]. 1969 L. nalorphine ('næləfɪn). Pharm. [f. N-allylnormorphine, another name for the compound (see quot. 1953²).] A heterocyclic base, C₁₉H₂₁NO₃ (or its hydrobromide salt), which is very similar to morphine in chemical structure and is used as an antagonist for that drug and for other narcotics with a similar action.

1953 Jnl. Pharmacol. & Exper. Therap. CIX. 157 N-allylnormorphine (nalorphine) has been shown to have a specific respiratory stimulating effect against the depression caused by morphine, ...codeine, methadone. 1953 Proc. R. Soc. Med. XLVI. 927 N-allylnormorphine is now officially called nalorphine... A methyl group is removed from the nitrogen [of morphine], hence the term NOR from the German 'Nitrogen ohne radicale'. An allyl group is substituted. 1967 Martindale's Extra Pharmacopoeia (ed. 25) 838 Given apart from narcotics, nalorphine may itself cause respiratory depression and disturbing psychotic effects. 1968 J. H. JAFFE in D. H. Efron Psychopharmacol. viii. 854/1 Nalorphine has virtually no abuse potential; its subjective effects are not 'liked' by post-addicts; it does not relieve morphine withdrawal symptoms, but instead precipitates them, and when given over long periods in high doses it produces an atypical physical dependence in which withdrawal symptoms are not associated with craving. 1971 H. W. ELLIOTT in D. H. Clouet Narcotic Drugs xxvi. 484 The pharmacological basis for the nalorphine test is an antagonism between nalorphine and the morphine-like drugs, which can be detected by examining the pupil.

naloxone (næ'lɒksəʊn). Pharm. [f. N-allylnoroxymorphone, an alternative name for the compound.] A heterocyclic base, C₂₀H₂₃NO₄ (or one of its salts), which resembles nalorphine in its chemical structure and antagonism to narcotics (see quot. 1968).

1964 Amer. Jnl. Med. Sci. CCXLVII. 412 The n-allyl derivative of oxymorphone (Numorphan) has recently been synthesized and found to be a potent narcotic antagonist... It has also been suggested that this preparation (Naloxone), differs from other narcotic antagonists in that its administration simultaneously with a narcotic results in antagonism of the respiratory depression but not of the analgesia induced by the narcotic. 1968 Clin. Pharmacol. & Therapeutics IX. 215/1 Unlike nalorphine and cyclazocine, naloxone does not produce miosis, subjective effects, tolerance, or physical dependence. 1973 Nature 23 Mar. 228/3 Binding was demonstrated by incubating tissue homogenates with tritium-labelled naloxone, a potent antagonist which precipitates withdrawal in humans addicted to opiates.

napalm (næ-, 'neipɑ:m), sb. orig. U.S. [f. NAPHTHENATE + PALM(ITATE (see quot. 1946).]

1. a. A thickening agent consisting essentially of aluminium salts of naphthenic acids and of the fatty acids of coconut oil. b. A thixotropic gel consisting of petrol and napalm (or some similar agent), used in flame-throwers and incendiary bombs; jellied petrol.

1942 in L. F. FIESER Sci. Method (1964) iv. 47 Novello and Harris will arrive... on Monday morning and deliver 7 small bombs and 7 large ones, each loaded with 100 grams of white phosphorus and with Napalm Polymer Gum prepared in gasoline. 1942 H. C. HOTTEL Stud. Fuel Projection from Nozzles (U.S. Govt. Res. Rep. PB 23769, 8 June) Summary, Very striking and extremely promising, however, is the enormous increase in range obtainable by the use of special materials, specifically a starch-water suspension and an incendiary gasoline gel known as Napalm. The latter can be projected three times as far in a one-eighth inch jet as can a conventional hydrocarbon fuel. 1946 L. F. FIESER et al. in Industr. & Engin. Chem. Aug. 769/1 It was next found (January 29, 1942) that a combination of aluminium naphthenate with the same 'aluminum palmitate' could be easily incorporated into gasoline to form a promising gel, and we termed this naphthenate-'palmitate' combination a Napalm gel. Subsequently it developed that the supposed 'aluminum palmitate' was actually the aluminum soap of the total fatty acids of coconut oil, and that the specific gelling quality is due to a high content of lauric, not palmitic, acid. 1951 KIRK & OTHMER Encycl. Chem. Technol. VI. 580 The U.S. uses a mixture of aluminum soaps, generally referred to as Napalm, as a thickening agent. A fuel of any desired consistency may be prepared by mixing the proper amount of Napalm with gasoline. 1952 R. CUTFORTH Korean Reporter xix. 174 He was no longer covered with a skin, but with a crust like crackling which broke easily. 'That's napalm,' said the doctor. 1953 Armed Forces Chem. Jnl. (U.S.) July 8/2 The thickening agent, known popularly as napalm, gelled the gasoline to a honey-like consistency. 1964 L. F. FIESER Sci. Method ii. 27 On Feb. 14 [1942], we reported to NDRC development of two lines of gels that could be prepared by stirring with gasoline at room temperature. To one, made from aluminum naphthenate and 'aluminum palmitate', I gave the name Napalm. Ibid. 32 The most interesting sample, Napalm X-104, arrived on April 13, 1942... The material is a brownish, dry, nonsticky powder. When an amount of Napalm powder sufficient to produce a 12% solution is poured into gasoline and given one stir, solvation occurs rapidly and the swollen solvated particles soon fill the container with material of applesauce consistency... After aging for a few hours without attention, the gel reaches its final form, in which it is tough, strong, and sticky. 1966 Chem. & Engin. News 14 Mar. 24/3 An Air Force contract to supply 100 million pounds of the new napalm, which contains 50% polystyrene. Ibid., Napalm-B, besides the 50% polystyrene, contains 25% benzene and 25% gasoline. It is replacing the soap-jelled gasoline napalm formulations of World War II and the Korean action. 1966 Daily Tel. 16 Aug. 17/3 Mrs. Anne Kerr, Labour M.P. for Rochester and Chatham, said in Tokyo today that the United States should withdraw from South Vietnam 'rather than drop napalm on innocent peasants'. 1967 Freedonways VII. 121 We saw a man who was a victim of napalm, and two women who had been tortured in Diem's prisons. 1968 [see INCENDIJEL]. 1968 V.
