ulalu, var. ULULU

ulama, ulan, variants of ULEMA, UHLAN.

-ular, suffix, representing L. ulāris (whence also F. ulaire, Sp. and Pg. -ular, It. -ulare, -olare), formed by the addition of -āris *in-AR*¹ to the diminutive suffix -ul-, and employed in adjs. derived from nouns ending in -ulus, -ula, -ulum, as populāris, regulāris, sēculāris, f. populus, regula, sēculum. A considerable number of these are recorded from classical or post-classical Latin, as angulāris, annulāris, canicularis, circularis, fistularis, etc., and many of these have at various dates been adopted in English in the forms angular, annular, etc. Many others are derived either from mediæval or modern Latin formations, or have been directly formed on Latin sbs., as auricular, capsular, cellular, corpuscular, funicular, globular, jugular, etc., the use of the suffix having steadily become more frequent (especially in scientific use) since the 17th century. When the primitive noun as well as the diminutive exists in English, and is in common use, the adj. in -ular is usually associated with it; thus glandular and globular commonly correspond to gland, globe, rather than to glandule, globule. This, however, has not given rise to much independent use of the suffix, which is normally confined to the above types.

ule, var. HULE.

-ule, suffix, representing the Latin diminutive ending -ulus, -ula, -ulum (whence also F. -ule, Sp. and Pg. -ulo, -ula, It. -ulo, -ula, -olo, -ola), as in globulus globule, glandula glandule, grānulum granule. Among words now current with this ending a certain number correspond to actual Latin forms, as capsule, cellule, ferule, macule, nodule, pustule, spherule, valvule; others are of modern formation, as anguillule. Only a few of these were in use before the 17th century. Some examples, as angule, circule, scrupule, failed to establish themselves against the earlier forms of French origin in -le; others, as formule, have given way to the purely Latin form. In some cases both forms exist in scientific use, as ligule and ligula, macule and macula, valvule and valvula; in some the Latin form is commonly or exclusively employed, as lingula, tabula.

ulmic (ˈʌlmɪk), a. Chem. [f. L. ulm-us elm, after ULMIN. Cf. F. ulmique, Pg. ulmico.] ulmic acid:

a. = ULMIN 1.

A distinction between ulmic acid and ulmin or ulmine has been made by various chemists, but without agreement in the precise application of the terms.

1831 T. THOMSON Chem. Inorg. Bodies II. 105 Ulmic acid appears to be a vegetable substance of very great importance . . . obtained from the exudation of the elm by dissolving the exudation in water and precipitating the ulmic acid. 1836 BRANDE Man. Chem. 923 As it [sc. ulmin] combines with bases, Boullay terms it ulmic acid. . . He represents ulmin, or ulmic acid, as a compound [etc.]. 1868 WATTS Dict. Chem. V. 936 The name 'ulmic acid', or 'ulmin', was given by Klaproth to a gummy substance contained in the black alkaline excrescences on the stems of unhealthy trees, especially of elms.

b. = ULMIN 2.

1843 Penny Cycl. XXV. 491/1 Ulmic acid plays an important part in manures and soils, and what is called moss-water owes its peculiar properties to its presence. 1868 WATTS Dict. Chem. V. 936 The ammoniacal solution . . . deposits brown or black gelatinous flocks of ulmic acid.

ulmin (ˈʌlmɪn). Chem. Also ulmine. [f. L. ulm-us elm + -IN: named by Thomson. Cf. F. ulmine, Pg. ulmina.]

1. A substance which exudes spontaneously from the inner bark of the elm and some other trees; spec. the final stage of this as a distinct chemical principle.

a. 1813 T. THOMSON Syst. Chem. (1817) IV. 48 Ulmin . . . was first noticed in 1804, by Klaproth, who found it in a spontaneous exudation from the elm. 1819 BRANDE Chem. 366 Ulmin is of a dark brown colour, with scarcely any taste or smell. . . The exudation from the elm is generally combined with carbonate of potassa, and is therefore readily soluble in water. 1842 Penny Cycl. XXII. 26/1 Simaruba is the bark of the root of the Simaruba amara. . . Its chief constituents are . . . ulmin, mucilage, and some salts.

β. 1838 TUPPER Proverb. Philos. Notes 219 With reference to the elm, I would remark, that no use has yet been discovered in the principle called 'ulmine'. 1853 ROYLE Mat. Med. (ed. 2) 632 It [the bark of Elm] contains Tannin . . . and a peculiar mucilaginous or gummy principle, called Ulmine.

2. A dark-brown or black product resulting from the decay of wood or vegetable matter, or artificially obtained by the action of powerful chemical agents on sugar and some other substances.

a. 1843 Penny Cycl. XXV. 491/1 Ulmin, or ulmic acid, may be artificially obtained . . . by the following process. 1857 MILLER Elem. Chem., Org. 54 If the solution [of sugar] be kept boiling for some hours, . . . a certain quantity of formic acid, and of a brown sparingly soluble substance termed ulmin, are produced. 1868 WATTS Dict. Chem. V. 936 Ulmin is also the name of a brown pigment, produced by the action of strong acids or alkalis on various organic bodies.

β. 1848 FOWNES Chem. (ed. 2) 371 note, This [substance] is generally called ulmic or humic acid, and its origin ascribed to the reaction of the alkali on the ulmine or humus of the soil. 1861 GESNER Coal, Petrol., etc. (1865) 128 The decay of wood is produced by oxidation, and ulmine is the result.

'ulmous, a. Chem. [f. as prec. + -OUS.] Partaking of the character of ulmin.

1868 WATTS Dict. Chem. V. 936 Ulmous or Humous Substances.

†ulm-tree. Obs. rare. [f. L. ulm-us elm + TREE sb. Cf. ULME and MHG. ulmboum, Du. olmboom.] An elm-tree.

-ulose, suffix¹. A compound adjectival suffix representing L. -ulōsus, formed by the addition of -ōsus (see -OSE) to stems in -ul-us, -a, -um, as angulōsus from angulus, fābulōsus from fābula, periculōsus from periculum. Such formations are rare in earlier Latin, but a considerable number are employed by post-Augustan writers, as Pliny, Columella, etc. Among the English examples which have their source in classical or post-classical forms are angulose, calculose, fabulose, fistulose, glandulose, nebulose, pustulose, ramulose, sabulose, vermiculose. On the analogy of these, various others have been introduced, as flosculose, globulose, granulose, scrofulose, siliculose, tubulose, tumulose. These forms are parallel to a certain number of those in -ULOUS, being as a rule either obsolete variants of these, or introduced later in order to convey the distinction commonly observed between the endings -OSE and -OUS.

-ulose (-juləʊz), suffix². Biochem. [f. LÆV]ULOSE.] Used (in place of -OSE²) to form the systematic names of ketoses from the names of the corresponding aldoses, esp. ketoses having the carbonyl group at the second carbon atom; as hexulose, RIBULOSE, SEDOHEPTULOSE.

ulotrichan (ju:'lɒtrɪkən). [Cf. next.] A person belonging to the 'crisp-haired' division of mankind (see next).

1888 Cassell's Encycl. Dict.

ulotrichous (ju:'lɒtrɪkəs), a. Also oulo-. [f. mod.L. Ulotrichi (see def.), f. Gr. οὔλος crisp, curly + -τριχος -haired, f. τριχ-, θρίξ hair. Cf. F. ulotrique, Pg. ulotrico.] Of or belonging to the Ulotrichi, the division of mankind (in Bory de St. Vincent's classification) defined as having crisp or woolly hair. HADDON Races of Man (ed. 2) i. 5 Ulotrichy, or woolly hair. 1936 [see CYMOTRICHY].

-ulous, a compound adjectival suffix representing the two Latin endings -ulōsus and -ulus. In the former case there are frequently variants in -ulose, which in modern use are as a rule more specific in meaning. To this class belong angulus, calculous, fabulous, fistulous, etc. (see -ULOSE); also crapulous, meticulous, populous, scrupulous, etc. The number of purely modern formations is not large. To the group which corresponds to Latin forms in -ulus belong bibulous, credulous, emulous, garrulous, pendulous, sedulous, stridulous, tremulous. In a very few instances both forms occur in Latin, as querulus, rarely querulōsus, querulous; ridiculus, rarely ridiculōsus, ridiculous.

ultra-crepi'darian, a. and sb. [f. the Latin phrase ultrā crepidam 'beyond the sole' in allusion to the reply of Apelles to the cobbler.

The form in which the reply is given by Pliny (Nat. Hist. xxxv. x. §36) is ne supra crepidam iudicaret. Valerius Maximus (VIII. xii. 3) expresses it by supra plantam ascendere vetuit.]

A. adj. Going beyond one's proper province; giving opinions on matters beyond one's knowledge.

1819 HAZLITT Letter to W. Gifford Wks. 1902 I. 368 You have been well called an Ultra-Crepidarian critic. 1822—Table-T. II. vi. 143 The last sort I shall mention are verbal critics—mere word-catchers. [Note] The title of Ultra-Crepidarian critics has been given to a variety of this species. 1832 Examiner 662/1 He takes a fancy to teach that 'Ultra-crepidarian Critic' his own theory. 1872 F. HALL Rec. Exemplif. False Philol. 112 His assumption of judicial assessorship, as a critic of English, is, therefore, to borrow a word from Hazlitt, altogether ultra-crepidarian.

B. sb. One who ventures beyond his scope; an ignorant or presumptuous critic.

1825 BEDDOES Let. in Poems (1851) p. xxxviii, The 'Fatal Downy' has been cobbled, I see, by some purblind ultra-crepidarian. 1831 Q. Rev. XLIV. 77 Two of these ultra-crepidarians are included in Mr. Southey's present chapter of chronicles.

Hence ultracrepidarianism. †ultra-crepidast, = B. above. Obs. rare—1. ultra-crepidate v. intr., to venture beyond one's scope. ultracrepidation, -crepidizing, the action or fact of criticizing ignorantly.

Limnol.* I. xv. 811 Two determinations of the copper content of ultra filtrates indicate that about 80 per cent of the so-called organic copper is associated with colloidal material. 1977 Lancet 18 June 1294/1 Ultrafiltrates of pepsin digests of the mucosa.

ultrafiltration. Biol. [f. ULTRA- 2 c + FILTRATION.] The action or process of filtration through a medium sufficiently fine to retain colloidal particles, certain viruses, or large molecules.

1908 Chem. Abstr. II. 1155 Ultrafiltration. . . Filtration of this type is accomplished by forcing under pressure the solutions through colloid membranes such as collodium, glacial acetic acid-collodium and hardened gelatin. 1946 Nature 9 Nov. 665/2 The blood pressure reduction cannot have augmented the osmotic pressure by more than . . . about 3.2/1000 of the total osmotic pressure. This change is so small that ultra-filtration cannot play any considerable part in the formation of aqueous humor. 1959 New Scientist 15 Jan. 135/3 Most marine animals possess some type of ampullary excretory organ. . . It is probable . . . that these organs produce an excretory fluid by a process of ultrafiltration. 1964 [see GRADOCOL]. 1978 Sci. Amer. July 88/2 The pores of an ultrafiltration membrane are on the scale of 10⁻⁹ meter, or one nanometer; average pore diameters range from less than a nanometer to about 10 nanometers.

ultrastable (Altrə'steɪb(ə)l), a. [f. ULTRA- 3 + STABLE a.] Stable against all subsequent disturbances, even those not taken into account in the design of the system. Hence ultra-sta'bility.

1952 W. R. ASHBY Design for Brain viii. 91 This process is most clearly shown in what I shall call an ultra-stable system: one that is absolute and contains step-functions in a sufficiently large number for us to be able to ignore the finiteness of the number. Ibid., The principle of ultrastability will be stated formally: an ultra-stable system acts selectively towards the fields of the main variables, rejecting those that lead the representative point to a critical state but retaining those that do not. 1967 R. WHITEHEAD in Wills & Yearsley Handbk. Management Technol. 66 Cybernetics seeks to produce an ultra-stable solution between an organism and its environment. Ibid., If self-regulation and ultra-stability are desirable things... then we must be prepared to learn from the systems that exhibit them. 1970 G. ORDISH tr. R. Chauvin's World of Ants 203 What do we mean here by the word 'adaptation'? It should mean a series of successive changes of tactics which only stop, as Ashby says, when the system reaches an 'ultrastable' state within the limits set by the physiology of the individuals in question. 1976 Listener 24 June 821/4 Such thought... would itself become an historical system—in the modern jargon, an 'ultra-stable' system, one which could take its own corrective action when things went wrong.

'ultra,structure. [f. ULTRA- 2 + STRUCTURE sb.] Structure of biological material that is visible only under greater magnification than can be obtained with optical microscopy.

1939 F. O. SCHMITT in Physiol. Rev. XIX. 270 The term ultrastructure as used in this review denotes the sub-microscopic organization of cellular and tissue components. 1948 New Biol. V. 34 Experiments with the centrifuge and micromanipulator show... that organised development can be interfered with by breaking up this ultrastructure, but as we have seen, it often reforms itself after such a breakdown. 1970 Jrnl. Neurosurg. XXXII. 142/2 The ultrastructure of the capillaries in human malignant brain tumors has been studied. 1977 J. L. HARPER Population Biol. Plants v. 131 A seed that is going to germinate may begin to show marked changes in the ultrastructure of its cells within 30 min of wetting.

Hence ultra'structural a., of or pertaining to ultrastructure; ultra'structurally adv., with regard to ultrastructure.

1939 Physiol. Rev. XIX. 270 To learn the details of the ultrastructural organization of such systems it is necessary to know the chemical composition and the physical and chemical properties of the molecules which compose the system. 1971 Nature 2 Apr. 334/2 Ultrastructurally, as well as by light microscopy, the human parafollicular cells were similar to those of other mammals. 1975 Ibid. 7 Aug. 459/3 Ultrastructurally, the size (diameter 600 ± 150 Å), but not the number, of nuclear pores is remarkably constant in all eukaryotic cells. 1977 *Proc. 2. a. Involving, producing, or pertaining to ultraviolet radiation or its use; ultraviolet catastrophe, an indefinite increase that the Rayleigh-Jeans law predicts should occur in the radiation emitted by a black body at successively shorter wavelengths (where the law in fact becomes invalid).

1922 [see LAVENDER a. 2]. 1934 Discovery May 138/1 In the detection of forgery, the deciphering of illegible or faded documents, over-writing and the like, ultra-violet photography is the most useful process to employ. 1935 J. umb, variant of UMBE prep. Obs.

†umb-, prefix, app. ad. ON. umb- (earlier form of um- UM-), corresponding to MLG. and MHG. umb-, OE. ymb-, emb- (see UMBE-). In ME. this form of the prefix is much rarer than the reduced um- or the extended UMBE-, and occurs only in the following verbs:—umbcast, to surround; umbclose, to enclose; umbfold, to embrace; umblay, to wrap round; umblook, to look round; umbset, -stead, to surround; umbthink, to bethink (oneself of something).

The OE. ymb- was extensively employed in compound verbs, as ymbclippan, -lōcian, -settan, -snīdan, -standan, -pencan, etc., and although not the phonetic antecedent of ME. umb- may have had some influence on its use.

[Partly (1) OE. ymbe (with equivalent forms in the other Germanic languages; see below), whence southern ME. ümbe (see also EMBE prep.); partly (2) an adoption of ON. umb (earlier form of um; cf. UM- and UMB-), whence the midland and northern forms. The form ummbe in the Ormulum is disyllabic (cf. inne, onne, offe, etc.), and so presumably are the ME. examples of the adv.

†umbe-, prefix (also 3 ummbe-, 4-5 vmbe-, 5 vnbe-, unbe-, 6 Sc. vmbe-, ombe-, 4 vnbi-, 4-5 vmbi-, 5 vmby-, unby-, 6 Sc. onby-), partly (in southern ME. texts) representing OE. ymbe- (see prec.), but chiefly either an extended form of UMB- (cf. prec.) or a combination of UM- with BE-. Forms with the double prefix (ommebe- or ombe-) are very common in Middle Dutch, not infrequent in older Danish (ommebe-), and occur occasionally in MLG.; it is possible that their prevalence in MDu. may have contributed to the extensive use of such forms in ME. Originally the um- was probably added to verbs which already had the prefix be- (as beclip, belap, etc.), and in most cases the two forms (with be- and umbe-) coexist with the same signification. In addition to those treated as main words (viz. UMBECAS, -CLIP, -GO, -LAP, -LAY, -SET, -THINK) the following examples occur in ME. texts chiefly of the 14th and 15th centuries: umbebraid, to turn round; umbecarve, to circumscribe; umbeclap, to embrace, to enclose; umbeclad, to clothe, wrap up; umbeclose, to enclose, enwrap; umbedelve, to dig round; umbedraw, to withdraw; umbefold, to surround, to embrace; umbegang, to go round, to surround; umbegild, to gild about; umbegive, to surround; umbegrip, to grasp; umbegrow, to grow round, overgrow; umbelie, to surround; umbelook, to look about; umbelouk, to include, comprehend; umbepitch, umbereach, to surround; umberow, to row about; umberun, to surround; umbeshadow, to shade about; umbeshear, to circumscribe; umbeshine, to shine about; umbesiege, to besiege, environ; umbespread, to spread about; umbestand, to stand round, surround; umbeswey, to encircle; umbethonre, to encompass, surround; umbetigh, to encircle, surround; umbevion, to environ; umbewalt, to surround; umbeweave, to enwrap; umbewend, to imbed, enclose; umbewet, to wet about.

Of these the following have parallels with the compound prefix (um-be-) in the cognate languages: umbeclad, MDu. ommebecleden (p.p. -cleet); umbegrip, older Da. ombegripe (cf. MDu. ombegrijp sb.); umbelie, MLG. ummebeligen; umbelook, NFr. ombeluke; umbelouk, MDu. omme-, ombelucken (p.p. -beloken); umbeshine, MDu. ombeschijnen; umbestand, NFr. ombistunn, MDu. omme-, ombestaen (p.p.); umbetigh, NFr. ombititi. Several of these, and many of the others, also correspond in sense to OE. formations with ymb- (less commonly ymbe-) or to equivalent forms in the other languages, e.g. umbecarve, OE. ymbceorfan; umbedelve, (OE. ymbgedelf sb.), MDu. and Du. omdelven; umbegang, OE. ymbgangan, OFris. ummegunga, OHG. umbigangan, etc.: cf. the examples given under UM-.

umlaut ('umlaut). Philol. [G., f. um- about + laut sound.]

a. A change in the sound of a vowel produced by partial assimilation to an adjacent sound (usually that of a vowel or semivowel in the following syllable); = MUTATION 4b.

[1844 T. H. KEY Alphabet 169 The Influence of Assimilation. Footnote, Sometimes called by Germans 'umlaut']. 1852 Trans. Philol. Soc. 25 June V. 200 The cognate languages clearly exhibit the fact, that the umlaut in these words has been produced by the weak vowel of a lost suffix. 1873 EARLE Philol. Eng. Tongue (ed. 2) §127 The Umlaut of the Indo-European languages is a phenomenon of a different order. Here the vowel of the after-member of the word influences that which has gone before.

Tongue* (ed. 2) §128 Nowhere is any structural signification attached now to an Umlaut form, except [etc.]. 1879 Ibid. (ed. 3) §381 The modern s being imposed upon the old umlaut plural. 1879 Encycl. Brit. X. 519/2 In most [German] Midland manuscripts no special signs for the Umlaut vowels are used, except e.

b. The diacritical sign (¨) placed over a vowel to indicate that such a change has taken place.

PEI Story of Lang. i. ix. 93 English makes use of no subsidiary characters, save for the apostrophe. Many other languages use accent-marks, umlauts, cedillas. 1970 [see COMPUTER 2b].

un-, *prefix*¹, expressing negation, representing OE. un-, = OFris. un-, on-, oen- (WFr. ûn-, on-, EFr. ûn-, NFr. ûn-), MDu. (and Du.) on-, OS. (MLG., LG.), OHG. (MLG., G.), and Goth. un-, ON. ú-, ó- (Icel. ó-, Sw. o-, Norw. and Da. u-), corresponding to Olfr. in-, an-, L. in- (im-, il-, ir-, i-), Gr. av-, â-, Arm. an-, Skr. an-, a-, *Indo-Eur. n-, an ablaut-variant of ne not: see NE adv. The prefix has been very extensively employed in English, as in the other Germanic languages, and is now the one which can be used with the greatest freedom in new formations.

2. In OE. the number of recorded forms in un- is very large, the prefix being freely applied with a purely negative force to several parts of speech, which may be classified as follows: (a) simple adjectives, as unbeald, unbliðe, unbrád, unclæne, uncúp, undéop, etc., derivative adjs., as unbealoful, unblóðig, ungyltig, unmeahtig, unclænlic, uncúðlic, uncynlic, etc., and composite forms, as uncamprof, undeoppacol, unfæstræd, etc.; (b) simple adverbs, as unéaðe, unefne, unfægere, unfeorr, etc., and derivative forms, as unclænlice, uncúðlice, unéaðelice, unfæstlice, etc.; (c) past participles of strong and weak verbs, as unbeden, unbegunnen, unboren, undrifen, ungeboden, ungecnáwen, etc., unbyrged, undæled, ungedered, unclænsod, ungeendod, ungehælgod, unboht, etc.; (d) present participles, as unberende, unbirnende, uncwaciende, uncweðende, unfélende, etc.; (e) simple nouns, as unár, unbealu, uncyst, unfrip, unlagu, unþanc, etc., and derivative forms, as unclænness, unfægerness, uncáfscipe, unwisdom, etc. A prominent feature of the OE. examples is the prevalence of long derivative or compound formations, usually based upon, or corresponding to, Latin formations with in-, im-, il-, as unaberendlic intolerable, unaberendlice intolerably, unbegripendlic incomprehensible, unbescéawodlice inconsiderately, unforhæfedness incontinence. The greater number of such forms were no doubt artificial, and had little or no currency in ordinary language. In a small number of nouns un- appears with a pejorative in place of a negative sense, as unæt excessive eating, uncoðu an evil disease, uncraft an evil art, and similarly undæd, undóm, unlagu, unræd, unsip, untima, unweder. Altogether the number of un- words recorded in OE. is about 1250, of which barely an eighth part survived beyond the OE. period.

3. The disappearance of so many of the OE. formations left early ME. with a very limited supply of un- words, even when new (or apparently new) examples are added to those inherited from the older language. A fair proportion even of this reduced stock proved unable to survive for more than half a century, and had passed out of use by 1250. A few of these, especially such as obviously had some general currency, are entered in their alphabetical places, but the greater number are given here (together with a few of somewhat later date) as properly belonging to the older period and having no direct influence upon the later development of the prefix. Most of these are composed of purely native elements, but a few show the beginnings of Scandinavian and French influence, as ungrith, unhazerli3, unskatheful; unbispused, uncoverlich.

In ME. transcripts of OE. homilies a few additional words are found, as unafillendlic, unasecgliche, uniredliche, unisewenlich, untodele(n)dlich, unzearu.

4. a. When the words included in the previous section are eliminated, the early ME. instances of the prefix resolve themselves into the following classes: (a) survivals of OE. forms, chiefly adjectives, as unclene, uncouth, unfele, unfere, unhole, unmilde, unorne, unsely, and nouns, as unhele, unlaze, unmizt, unrede, unrizt, unsele, unthank, unclenenes, unwisdom, and a few past participles, as unbegun, unborn, unbo3t, unheled, unwemmed, unwounded; (b) new formations from native elements, as unbu3som, uncomely, unhende, unsiker, untidy adjs., unhope, unstrength, unwinne sbs., unbeten, undone, unshriven, undemed, unsoyst pa. pples.; (c) adoptions of Scandinavian forms, or new formations on Scandinavian bases, as unmeek, unnait, unsau3t, unsle3e adjs.; unhap, unsau3t, unskill sbs., unbigged pa. pple.; (d) new formations on French bases, as ungracious, unsavoury, untrussed.

Down to 1300 these additions were comparatively few, and barely compensated for the disuse of obsolescent forms. About that date a southern writer like Robert of Gloucester uses only a small number of un- words, and most of these belong to the traditional stock. On the other hand, the northern Cursor Mundi has a rich variety of both old and new forms, and indicates clearly the beginning of a fresh period of development. The features which are most notable in this are: (a) the increased proportion of past pples. in comparison with adjs. and nouns; (b) the reappearance of pres. pples. (as undeand, unfeland, unseand), which are wanting in earlier ME. texts; (c) the increase in the French element, as uncertain, undevote, undispened, unfulun, unfruitand, unlele, unleute, unmesure, unpais, unponist, unpurvaud, unquit, unresun, unresunable, unvised, unwily. With this revival of the past and pres. pples., and the introduction of -able, the way was opened for some of the commonest uses of un- in the later language. The tendency thus indicated is clearly marked before the middle of the 14th century; Dan Michel uses pres. pples., as onconnynde, onspekynde, onwytynde, while Hampole has unconable, uncurable, unsufferable, and even unfillable, unstirrabile. Before 1400 the period of free employment of the prefix had fully begun, as shown by the number of new formations appearing in the works of Chaucer, Wyclif, Trevisa, and others.

b. As in OE., the usual force of un- in ME. is purely negative. The pejorative sense however survived in a few words, as unrede, unsithe, unthrew, unwether, unwine, unwrench, and appears also in unlede, unlude, unthede, unwitz; in unbeast it is employed with a French base.

c. The usual form of the prefix in ME. is un-, but on- appears in some English texts (as the later version of Layamon, the Ayenbite, and the Prompt. Parv.), and is common in older Scottish, esp. in the 16th century; this form is still current in midland and south-western dialects and in Scotland. In Sir Ferumbras (c 1380) the form oun- is employed, and a pronunciation corresponding to this (u:n-) is still heard in Aberdeenshire. In detached use (see 5d) the form (o:n), sometimes written ohn, is also employed in the same locality.

5. Some peculiarities in the use of un-, arising in the ME. period but surviving beyond it, require special notice.

a. It is sometimes redundantly prefixed to adjs. ending in -less. Early instances are unrecheleas reckless, unroless restless, unwittles insensible (see 3 above), and ungiltles guiltless (Sir Tristr. 2144). The type, however, chiefly belongs to the later 16th and the 17th cent.; among the instances from that period are unboundless, uncomfotless, undauntless, uneffectless, unfathomless, unhelpless, unmatchedless, unmerciless, unnumberless, unrecomptless, unremorseless, unrespectless, unshameless, unshapeless, untimeless; as late as 1786 unquestionless is found, and unrestless exists in modern dialect.

b. From the 14th century onwards there was considerable variation, when the base was of Latin origin, between the Latin in-, im-, etc., and the native un-. Early examples of forms with un-, which either then or a little later have variants with in-, im-, are unability, uncorrigible, uncorrupt, uncurable, undign, undiscreet, unmeasurable, unmovable, unnumberable, unperfect, unperfection, unportable, unpossible. Similar formations continued to multiply during the following centuries, so that a large proportion of the words beginning with il-, im-, in-, ir- had corresponding forms in un-, as unadequate, unadverence, unarticulate, unartificial, unattentive, unaudible, unauspicious, uncapable, etc. The culminating period of the double forms lies in the 17th century; since that time the tendency has been to differentiate, and to discard one or other of the doublets, the forms with in-, etc., being very commonly preferred when the whole word has a distinctively Latin character, as inadequate, inadvertence, inarticulate, etc. Even with such forms there is no absolute rule, and doublets are still numerous, as in- or un-advisable, in- or un-alienable, etc. (See IN-2.)

By inadvertence, or simple errors in printing, un- or vn- sometimes appears in works of the 16-17th cent. for im-, in-, or em-, en-, as unencoraged encouraged, unlarge enlarge, unploied employed, unpoysonyng empoisoning, unflam'd inflamed, unpostumed imposthumped.

c. When two or more negative terms occurred in the same clause and were coupled by and or or, the prefix was sometimes employed only with the first. The following are examples of this practice, which is especially common in Scottish of the 16th century.

c1380 WYCLIF Wks. (1880) 129 To kepe hym self vnblekkid or defouleid fro þis world. c1460 J. RUSSELL Bk. Nurture 944 Lett neuer wollyn cloth... passe a seuenyght to be vn-broschen & shakyn. a1500 in Ratis Raving 3 The synis that he has done wncconfessyt of or rapentyt. 1506 in Charters, &c., Edinb. (1871) 180 Throw selling of clayth... vnsene or customit be yow. 1565 Rec. Earld. Orkney 274 Uncoackit, compellit, or seducit be ony way. 1603 KNOLLES Hist. Turks (1621) 83 The insolent souldiers... nothing dedicated to the seruice of God, left vnpolluted and defaced. Ibid. 91 Which companies... came neere vnto the towne vnseene or discouered. 1707 MORTIMER Husb. 608 Eggs, unbroken or crack'd.

d. When un- is prefixed to present or past participles, these are rarely employed in a true participial function, but become adjectival in character. Examples of the present participle, however, occasionally occur with a following object, or with a prepositional construction; and in Scottish use, from at least the 15th century, un- in such cases has acquired the sense of 'without'. More rarely, in the older language, it has the same sense with passive participles. Both constructions are still retained in north-eastern Scottish dialect, with the prefix in the form on or ohn, frequently written separate from the participle. (The spelling ohn is due to, or has led to, a false association with G. ohne without.) Examples of these uses are:—

(a) 1456 SIR G. HAYE Law Arms (S.T.S.) 155 All that I may gett apoun him, unslaund him. Ibid. 163 How may than a man do till othir sik dissait, ungreuand God? 1573 *Reg. 6. a. During the 15th, 16th, and 17th centuries the use of un- steadily increased, a large number of words being thus formed which have permanently established themselves in the language, besides many more which occur only incidentally or rarely. The freedom with which the prefix could be used in new formations appears clearly in the dictionaries of Florio and Cotgrave, who constantly employ it in rendering Italian and French negative terms in in-, etc. As the use of un- or in- (see 5b) was still largely a matter of choice, and many of the older formations were still current, the vocabulary of the 17th century exhibits many types in common use which are now rare or obsolete, and in general is extremely rich in words beginning with un-. During the 18th century many of the older forms disappeared, and new formations became more limited in number and variety, but the sense of freedom in the use of the prefix when desired is clearly shown by a large number of the examples given by Ash in his dictionary in 1775. These were obviously manufactured for the purpose, and when added to the genuine words which he has included, make up a total of about 5,000 entries. In this way Ash frequently anticipates the actual introduction of new formations. In the 19th century the use of the prefix became still more common, it being freely applied to almost any adjectival or participial form, until its employment has become almost unrestricted, within certain limits indicated below. On this account it is impossible to make a complete enumeration even of forms which have actually been used, still less of those which may be created at any time.

b. The form of the prefix indicates that it was originally unstressed (although in OE. poetry it may have stress and carry the alliterative letter), and normally it still bears this relationship to the main part of the word. There is, however, considerable tendency to give stress to it in rare or casual formations, and whenever the negation or contrast which it implies is at all emphatic. In such cases the compound may either have two equal stresses, or the prefix may have the stronger stress; the latter degree of emphasis is usually indicated by underlining or italicizing, and the use of the hyphen; e.g. 'he is distinctly un-literary'.

c. The following sections illustrate the usual types of current formations, with illustrations drawn from unimportant modern examples, which might be indefinitely increased. All older examples in actual use, and all words important either in themselves or on account of their source, are given in their alphabetical place in the main series. As a large number of these are purely negative and self-explanatory, the place of a definition is supplied by a reference to the section of this article under which the precise type of formation is explained and illustrated.

The entries in Ash (see above) have been regarded as worthy of note only when they anticipate the appearance of a word in actual use. In these cases a reference to Ash is given within parentheses.

A purely artificial formation (suggested by Euphuistic diction) is un-to-be-imitated (Scott Monast. xx).

7. a. Un- is freely prefixed to adjectives of all kinds, except where a Latin form in in-, etc., has definitely established itself in common use. Both forms, however, may co-exist, and in some cases a new formation with un- has been introduced when that with in- has acquired a connotation which it is desirable to avoid. The form with un- is then purely negative, while the other may have almost a positive sense, e.g. unmoral in contrast with immoral. (When the form with un- has similarly acquired a positive implication, the simple negative or neutral sense is expressed by the use of non- or not-.) There is also considerable restriction in the use of un- with short simple adjectives of native origin, the negative of these being naturally supplied by another simple word of an opposite signification. There is thus little or no tendency now to employ such forms as unbroad, undeeep, unwide, unbold, unglad, ungood, unstrong, unwhole, unfew, etc., which freely occur in the older language. On the other hand, derivative forms in -al, -ant, -ar, -ary, -ent, -ful, -ic, -ical, -ile, -ish, -ive, -ly, -ory, -ous, -y, etc., are too numerous to be completely recorded. The general character of the less usual or permanent of these and other adjectival forms is illustrated by the following examples, which are a severely restricted selection, and could be indefinitely increased by the addition of less noteworthy material.

In dictionaries of various dates many formations are given of which no real instance has been found. Levins (1570) has unhateful, unprecious. Florio (1598 and 1611) renders equivalent Italian words in in- by such forms as unavailful, unbrittile, uncontinual, uncoy, unempty, unfraile, unnice, unfensible, unopen, unplenteous, unshrill, unvalorous. Ash (1775) gives unalphabetical, unattendant, uncohesive, uncompatible, uncompressible, uncompulsive, etc. (about 80 in all). Later dictionaries (Webster, Worcester, etc.), with or without indication of source, have the entries unabundant, unbiographical, uncogent, uncollectible, uncooperative, undeberative, etc.

Recent formations include: unadult, un-African, unairworthy, unambivalent, unarcadian, unarchæological, un-Australian, unbitchy, unblameworthy, unblase, unbureaucratic, un-Byronic, uncebrebral, uncharismatic, unchic (also absol.), un-Chinese, unchipper, unchoosy, un-Christmassy, uncomfy, uncomposite, uncomradely, unconscient, uncool [esp. cool a. 4c] (also absol.), uncooperative, uncusy, uncranky, uncreditworthy, uncuddlesome, uncuddly, un-Darwinian, uneducible, un-Dickensian, undimensional, undisastrous, undoctrinaire, undynamic, uneocological, uneconomic, unecstatic, unecumenical, unegoistic, unegotistic, unegotistical, unerotic, unetymological, unexotic, unfaery (poet.), unfeline, unfeminist, unflamboyant, unflashy, unfond, unfresh, unfurtive, un-Gaelic, ungay, ungimmicky, unglamorous, ungroovy, unhep (also absol.), unhip (also absol.), unhors(e)y, unideological, unintrospective, unirksome, unironic, unironical, un-Islamic, un-Italian, un-Jamesian, un-Japanese, unjingoistic, unkeen (also absol.), unkosher, unlegendary, unlocal, unmarital, un-Marxist, unmaukish, unmeritocratic, unneurotic, unodoriferous, unopen, unpacifist, unphonemic, unphon(e)y (also absol.), unphotogenic, unplatonic, unpolemical, unpolicemanly, unpositive, unprestigious, unpriggish, unprivate, un-Proustian, unpugnacious, unradiogenic, unresilient, unrevolutionary, unrisky, unroadworthy, un-Russian, unscenic, unseductive, unselective, unsemantic, unsexy, un-Shelleyan, unsnobbish, unsorry, un-Spanish, unspecial, unspectacular, unstarchy, unsterile, unstiff, unstuffy, unsycophantic, unsymmetric, untendentious, untense, untherapeutic, unthistly, unticklish, untogther, untouristy (also absol.), untraditional, untrendy, unurgent, unutilitarian, unviable, un-Victorian, unviolent, unvisual, un-Western, un-with-it, unworthwhile, unyoung.

b. The use of un- with adjs. in -able, beginning in the 14th cent. (see 4 above), soon became common, and gave rise to a large number of formations in the 16th and subsequent centuries. In the modern period the examples become too numerous for illustration; in addition to those entered as main words, those given below will serve as specimens of the freedom with which new formations are created. These are sometimes due to an antithesis of the form 'not only... but', as 'not only unpainted but unpaintable'. The unusual types uncome-at-able (1694-), unget-at-able (1862-) are later in date than the corresponding positive terms; for illustrations of similar forms see (b).

Cotgrave (1611) has unaboardable, unaccompanable, unaccostable, unaccountable, undisplayable, undenable, unexceedable, unexpressable, unexterrable, etc. Florio (1611) has unaccommodable, uncolourable, uncompassionable, unsuccourable, untrafficable, unwadeable, and Hexham (1648) unbestedable, unbindable, unlabourable. Ash (1775) introduces about twenty-five new forms, as unadmittable, unappropriate, uncreditable, unexhalable, unexterrable. An extreme instance is un-in-one-breath-utterable (B. Jonson Ev. Man in Hum. I. v.).

c. The use of un- with adjectives in -like is found from at least the close of the 16th cent., when ungentlemanlike appears. Others occur in the following century, as unbodylike, ungodlike, unwarlike. The free use of such forms, however, is characteristic of the 19th cent., and especially of the latter part of it. The following are examples of casual formations.

Recent formations include: unbridegroomlike, unbutlerlike, uncatlike, unpolicemanlike.

8. The prefixing of un- to past participles, common in OE. and revived in ME., was subsequently extended until it became the commonest of all uses of the prefix. The following varieties may be distinguished in the usual formations:

a. Simple past pples. in -ed. These form an inexhaustible class, largely represented among the main words, and including many more similar to those in the following list.

A few casual forms are employed by Florio (1611), as uncomperted, unnotted, and various others by Hexham (1648), as unbalsamed, unbedabbled, unbled, uncalumniated, uncheated, etc. Ash (1775) carries this type of formation to great lengths, and enters about 800 words which are either not recorded, or are of rare occurrence, in actual use, as unabatted, unaccited, unacquitted, unadjudged, unalured, unamplified, unappraised, etc.

As subdivisions of this type, forms in -ated and -ized may be specially noted on account of their frequency. These are also largely represented in Ash's dictionary, which contains about 150 unused or rare forms in -ated, as unaccomulated, unamphorated, uncircumstantiated, etc., and a score or so in -ized, as unapostrophized, unaromatized, uncanonized, etc.

On the double meaning of forms like undressed, unhoused, unshathed, etc., see UN-² 8.

Recent formations include: (a) unacclaimed, unadded, unaffrayed (arch.), unassessed, unattributed, unbeglamoured, unbobbied [BOBBED a. b.], unbombed, unbothered, unbuffered, unbugged, unbypassed, uncaked, uncatalysed, uncloned, uncluttered, uncobbled, uncoded, uncopyrighted, uncouponed, undeafened, undepicted, undiffused, undisbursed, undistanced, unearmarked, unenanced, unenthused, uneroded, unexploded, unfaked, unfattened, unfazed, unfilmed, unflustered, unfocus(s)ed, unformatted, unfused, ungrazed, ungritted, unhipped [HIP v.], unhousetrained, uniced, uninjected, unkeeped, unladdered [LADDER v. 2], unlaundered, unlenited, unmonitored, unneutered, unoriented, unpacked, unpadded, unphotographed, unplanned, unposed, unpowered, unprogrammed, unprovenanced, unrationed, unrattled, unseeded, unshingled [SHINGLED ppl. a.], unsignposted, unslanted, unslided, unslipped [SLIPPED ppl. a.], unsourced,

b. Past pples. with other endings, from strong or weak verbs. These form a much smaller class, but include a considerable number in common use, as unbegun, unblown, unborn, unbought, etc. A few are found with -ate for -ated, as unevaporate, -exaggerate, but these and others not permanently established in the language are of rare occurrence.

Examples in Ash are unbeset, uncast, uninterwoven, unshotten, unshown, unslung, etc.

c. Participial formations with un- frequently have a suffixed adverb or preposition (usually with a hyphen when the formation is used attributively). An early example of this is unborne-away (Caxton, 1483); others make their appearance in the 16th and 17th centuries, as uncalled-for, uncared-for, unheard-of, unlooked-for, unthought-of, etc. A number of these have become permanent and are in general use; the following are examples of more casual formations.

1884 H. SPENCER in Contemp. Mag. 613 Exceptional communities unaggressive and from special causes *unaggressed upon. 1858 FROUOE Hist. Eng. IV. 496 Unvouched for, *unaligned to by any contemporary authority as yet discovered. 1887 Daily News 3 Nov. 2/5 You have... allowed your conduct to remain unexplained and *unapologised for. 1855 BROWNING Bp. Reb. xvi. §17 After he had lived some years in Paris *untaken notice of, indeed unknown.

d. A type of formation which is not very frequent is that in which the participle is preceded by a noun, usually with instrumental sense, as in the following examples.

1595 Polimanteia (1881) 36 For not... aged censoring Cato might challenge greater privilege of truth, then your free toognd and *vn-aw-bound skill. 1765 [E. THOMPSON] Meretriciad 26 She never vended goods *unduty paid. 1829 BENTHAM Justice & Cod. Petit. 104 Because by the judges, *unfee-fed as they be, nothing would be to be got by it. 1895 L. A. 9. a. Adjectival forms in -ed, from substantives, of the type unbearded, unbodied, unfeathered, etc. These are anticipated in OE. by such rare formations as unsefepered, ungewintred, unwæded, but otherwise belong to the 16th and subsequent centuries. The usual sense is 'not provided or furnished with', but sometimes 'not affected by', 'not treated with', etc.; in the latter case the use is not clearly distinguishable from the purely participial.

Ash gives such instances as unaproned, unbrooched, unbuskined, unchevroned, uncliented, uncoded, etc.

Recent formations include: unautumned, unaveraged, unbanked (also absol.), unbra-ed, unbrassiered, undentisted, ungated, ungoggled, unillusioned, unjacketed, unmooned, unpupilled, unrectored, unscripted, unspeched.

b. Instances in which the noun is preceded by a qualifying word are not numerous, and such formations are usually individual or casual.

[1650 TRAPP Comm. Lev. xxi. 18 Lest his Ministerie bee sleighted for... unheavenlie mindedness.] 1870 *Routledge's Ev. Boy's Ann. 10. The use of un- with present participles, revived about 1300 (see 4 above), subsequently became common, and has given rise to a large number of permanent words, such as unbecoming, unbending, unchanging, undoubting, etc. (On the participial use of such forms see 5 d.) Examples of casual formations are given below.

Others occurring in Ash's dictionary are unbeguiling, unbiasing, unblinding, unbuilding, unenticing, unflowing, etc. Recent formations include: unallowing, unarresting, uncompelling, unconflicting, unendearing, unenticing, unexhilarating, unexpanding, unfascinating, unflowering, unforfeending, unforthcoming, unmatching, unminding (cf. UNMINDING vbl. sb.), unmourning, unselfpitying, unselfregarding, unselfseeking, unswinging [SWINGING ppl. a. 3 b, c], unthreatening.

11. a. In OE. adverbial formations in -lice formed a large portion of the words in un-. Very few of these survived in ME., but additions were gradually made which maintained the existence of the type (ending in -liche in southern dialects and -ly in the northern). Subsequently the use of un- with -ly again became common, independent of the form of the central element, which may be an adjective, present or past pple., etc. There are however two ways in which such formations may arise. Either the suffix -ly is added to a form already beginning with un-, or un- is prefixed to an adverb already formed with -ly. In most cases the difference in sense is slight or immaterial, but at times the distinction becomes important. If unprofessionally is formed from unprofessional it means 'at variance with, contrary to, professional rules or etiquette', if from professionally it means 'not in a professional manner or capacity'.

The following are miscellaneous examples of recent formations: unarguably, unassessably, unboringly, unbridgeably, unconsciously, unhungrily, unidentifiably, unignorably, unprotestingly, unselectively, unurgently.

b. Un- is seldom prefixed to simple adverbs. Even in OE. such formations are rare, though a few do occur, as unéade, unefne, unfægere, unfeorr, unseldan, unsofte. ME. retained most of these, but the number has at no time been greatly added to, and the later tendency is to discard such forms altogether.

12. a. The OE. use of un- with substantives (see 2e above) survived very fully in ME., not only by the retention of old forms but by the introduction of many new, which continue to multiply in the later periods of the language. From the beginning the nouns have been almost entirely restricted to those of an abstract nature, so that forms with suffixes are numerous. In OE. and ME. the commonest of these is -ness (occasionally -dom and -ship); subsequently

-ation, -ity, and -ment are frequent, as in the following selection of miscellaneous examples.

Florio (1611) has a certain number of casual formations, as unacknowledgement, unartness, unbrittleness, undwellingness, uneloquence, unfrailness, etc. Ash gives unadequateness, uncommensurability, -ableness, unfrugality, unliableness, unorganicalness, and various others.

Recent formations include: unaccentuation, unamaze, unamazement, unbook, unclarity, unconfiness, uncountry, uncrackability, uncreditworthiness, undeath, undeathliness, undecrease, undeviation, uneducation, unenlightenment, unfreshness, unfulfilment, unglamorousness, unimportance, unintelligentsia, uninterruptability, uninvolvement, unlight, unmeritocracy, unpriggishness, unrepose, unsurprise, unwettability.

b. The prefixing of un- to nouns used attributively is rare and usually not intended seriously.

Other examples are uncurrency-style (1852), undining-room (1845), unhousehold-name (1894), unsociety-people (1898).

13. In OE. there are a few instances of un- with verbal substantives in -ung, as unbletsung, -brotsung, unmeltung, etc. None of these survive in ME., and new forms in -ing are rare; untiming occurs c 1250, uncunning c 1300, unknowing, unpunishing c 1340. In the later language the usage also remains rare, and in nearly all verbal sbs. the prefix un- is UN-²; a few exceptions are recorded here.

14. In OE. the use of un- with verbs is limited to formations from negative adjectives, as unclænian, unrôtsian, untrumian from unclæne, unrôt, untrum. (More commonly ge- is prefixed, as in geunclænian, geunrôtian, etc.) This type barely survived in ME., but un- began to be sparingly prefixed to ordinary verbs, as untrouwen (a 1200) to disbelieve, untrusten (a 1225) to distrust, unbetide not to happen, unbe not to be, and similar formations are fairly common in the 16-17th c., as unbecome, unbefit, unbelieve, unbeseem, uncomprehend, unconcern, etc. Many of these are obviously suggested by the participial adjectives (unbecoming, etc.), which are quite regular in formation (see 10 above). The type is now rare, but occasional examples occur.

Recent formations include: (nonce-wds.) unbloom, undie, unfulfil, untouch, unvision. a 1175 Twelfth Cent. Hom. 118 Swa mucele swiðor him biteriæð & unswetiæp alle pas eorðlice ping. c 1205 LAY. 11547 Vnhæle & ælde hæueð pene king vnbaldeð [c 1275 onbaldeð]. Ibid. 15037 þa þat folc was icumen, þa was þe king swiðe untrumed [c 1275 ontrumed]. a 1300 Maximian 65 (MS. 15. By confusion of thought, un- is sometimes used redundantly, especially in the 16th and 17th centuries, where a positive term is really intended. For examples see undated (1637), undifference (1654), undifferency (1583).

16. In telegrams un- is sometimes used in nonce formations with any part of speech to avoid a separate negative.

1936 E. WAUGH Waugh in Abyssinia 161 Cables were soon arriving... 'Require earliest name life story photograph American nurse upblown [sc. bombed] Adowa.' un-, prefix², expressing reversal or deprivation, representing OE. un-, on-, = OFris. und-, unt-, un-, ond-, ont-, on-, MDu. and Du. ont-, OS. ant-, OHG. ant-, int- (MHG. and G. ent-), Goth. and-, originally identical with AND- prefix.

2. a. From OE. more than a score of reversible verbs formed with un- (or its variant on-) are recorded, as unbindan, uncnyttan, undón, unfealdan, ungyrdan, unhelian, unlúcian, etc. Some of these were in common use; others occur rarely or in single instances. About half of the number (including all those mentioned above) survived in ME., and various new formations appear in texts from the first half of the 13th century, as unbenden, undyttan, unfast(n)en, unhaspen, unhillen, unlimen, unmensken, unsteken; even at that date the prefix is used with verbs which are not of native origin. Similar formations from later ME. are unbuckle, uncatch, unclench, uncover, unfetter, unkevel, unsew, unshut, unwrap, unyoke. The following are examples of obsolete ME. forms: — un'hadien [OE. unhādian], to deprive of ecclesiastical orders; un'mensken [f. MENSKE v.], to dishonour; un'rone [f. RONE v.], to make desolate; hence un'roningness; un'teon [f. teon TEE v. 1 6b], to fall apart.

b. In the 16th century new formations with un- become very numerous and varied, and in the 17th the prefix is used with much greater freedom than is now possible. The lexicographers Florio and Cotgrave constantly employ it in rendering Italian words in dis- and s- and French words in de-, des-. By this time the prefix had developed several variations of sense which are still current, and are illustrated by modern examples in the following sections.

3. In OE. most of the forms with un- have for their second part a simple verb, either strong (as unbindan, unfealdan, unlúcian, etc.) or weak (as uncnyttan, undón, ungierwan, ungyrdan, etc.). In either case the prefix denotes a simple reversal of the action of the verb. Many of the new formations in ME. are of the same type, as unbend, unclench, uncover, unfasten, unhasp, unhide, unshut, etc., and additions to this class continue to be freely made at all subsequent periods. In addition to the numerous examples entered as main words, many others have been casually employed, similar to those here illustrated.

Florio and Cotgrave make extensive use of this type, e.g. unastony, unbrand, uncancel, unclume, unclutter, uncompass, uncurd, unfester, unflow, etc. Ash gives unbaste, unmoble, unsolder, unsort, etc.

Recent formations include: unbake, unban, unbatten, unbore, unclutter, undip [DIP v. 6d], unendear, uninvent, unjumble, untape, untease.

4. a. A small number of OE. verbs in un- imply removal or deprivation; these end in -ian, as unhadian to deprive of orders, unhlidian to remove the lid from, uninseglan to unseal, unscogian to unshoe. In ME. the type remains rare, but occurs in unclead, unclothe, unhair. At a later date it becomes more frequent, and is common in modern use.

Florio is especially lavish in new formations which have not obtained subsequent currency, as unblossom, unbrain, unbridge, uncheek, uncheese, uncorn, uncorner, unflank, unfringe, ungarland, etc.

Recent formations include: unblouse, undogcollar (nonce), unpearl (nonce).

b. A modification of this sense is that of freeing or releasing from something. This appears in ME. in unfetter, unkevel, unyoke, although in origin these may be simply reversive. In the later period the type has also become common, and is very largely represented from the close of the 16th century.

Florio and Cotgrave afford numerous examples, as unbarb, unbit, unbunch, unchaff, uncrupper, ungravel, unhunger, etc.

5. a. The use of un- to denote the removal or extraction (forcibly or otherwise) of a person or thing from a place or receptacle occurs in the 14th cent. in unhouse, and later in unbody, unearth, but does not become prominent till the beginning of the 17th, when Florio and Cotgrave afford many examples. In a few instances the sense passes into that of releasing or setting free from confinement, as in uncage, or of revealing to others, as in unbosom.

Among the instances occurring in Florio and Cotgrave are unaeie, unbench, unbarough, unbrake, unbranch, unchamber, unchest, unfurnace, etc.

b. In some formations belonging to this type un- is prefixed to a word either denoting the thing removed or the action of removal; in the latter case the sense of the prefix passes into that of out. Examples of these uses are:—

1598 FLORIO, Sbacciellare, ... to vngraine, or take out of the cods. 1611 COTGR., Escerner, to vnkernel; to take or cut a thing cleane out of the round place wherein it was. 1877 TALMAGE Serm. 316 He it is who undirks the lightning from the storm cloud.

6. In OE. the fact or process of depriving a person or thing of a certain quality or property was not expressed by the reversive un-, but by verbal formations based on adjectives already having the negative prefix (see UN- 14). Unable, appearing towards the end of the 14th cent., may still belong to this type, but from the middle of the 16th century forms become frequent in which the prefix is clearly the reversive un-, employed both with adjs. and sbs. Both types are largely represented in Florio, and to a less extent in Cotgrave. a. When the formation has an adjectival base, the adjective may be used in its simple form, or with the suffix -en.

Examples from Florio and Cotgr. of the simple adj. form are unbald, unbig, uncorrect, undizzy, ungiddy, unhoar, etc.; and of forms in -en, unfatten, ungreaten, unmoisten, unsharpen, unthicken, unweaken.

1888 RUSKIN in Pall Mall G. 27 Oct. 5/2 Rosalind is extremely glad to get her face *unbrowned again. 1893 COLUMBUS (Ohio) Dispatch 10 Sept., They found... the shops ill-regulated and the Frenchmen *un-Frenched. 1827 HARE Guesses (1859) 488 You may abuse and misuse: you cannot *ungood. 1747 E. b. Substantives are similarly employed without ending.

Florio has a number of examples, as unbride, uncitizen, uncoward, undoctor, undwarf, etc. Casual formations are frequently employed by Fuller, as uncardinal, unchaplain, uncity, unmartyr, etc.

c. From sbs. (rarely from adjs.) there are numerous formations in -(i)fy, and from both sbs. and adjs. in -ize. Other endings, as -ate, are less usual.

7. With rare exceptions, the OE. verbs in un- are transitive, and this has always remained the prevailing use. In ME., however, intransitive uses of some common words are found, as unbend, unclose, unlounk, and in casual formations as unbody. In the later language the usage increases to some extent (as in unfold, etc.), but is chiefly confined to words having some currency.

Florio employs unday, undebt, undroop, unsicken, unswell. The following are rare modern instances.

1816 COLMAN Br. Grins, Champernouse ii, His courtiers swore... They'd broil a pope to keep a place, So all unpalapized apace. 1831 TRELAWNY Adv. Younger Son II. 113 Look at him, he is unbarbaning! 1862 HELPS Org. Daily Life 108 The organization grinds on, ... and it is very difficult to make the thing ungrind. 1922 JOYCE Ulysses 461 The Timepiece (Unportalling.) Cuckoo, Cuckoo, Cuckoo.

8. Verbal substantives, participial adjectives, and agent-nouns are naturally formed from verbs in un- as from simple verbs. These forms begin to appear in the 14th century, and become common in the later language.

Many of the past pples. and ppl. adjs., as unbent, unbound, undressed, unfastened, etc., coincide with formations in which the prefix is UN-, and the distinction in meaning is not always sufficiently clear to admit of an absolute separation between the forms. Either prefix is normally unstressed in all participial formations used predicatively, but commonly receives the main stress when employed attributively, as an 'unbent bow, an 'unbound back.

9. The redundant use of un- is rare, but occurs in OE. unliesan, and ME. unloose, which has succeeded in maintaining itself. Later instances are unbare, unsolve, unstrip (16-17th cent.), and the modern dialect forms unempt(y), unrid, unthaw (also locally uneave). Another redundant or extended use (= 'peel off') exists in UNPEEL v.

For occasional misuses of un- see unladen, unranked.

4. Econ. (The quality of) a business risk which cannot be measured and whose outcome cannot be predicted or insured against (see quots. 1921 and 1964). Cf. RISK sb. 2 a.

1921 F. H. KNIGHT (title) Risk, uncertainty and profit. Ibid. i. 20 A measurable uncertainty, or 'risk' proper, as we shall use the term, is so far different from an unmeasurable one that it is not in effect an uncertainty at all. We shall accordingly restrict the term 'uncertainty' to cases of the non-quantitative type. It is this 'true' uncertainty . . . which forms the basis of a valid theory of profit. 1929 G. O'BRIEN Notes on Theory of Profit II. 17 The assumption of uncertainty is therefore a disutility and must be rewarded. Is uncertainty bearing on this account, entitled to rank as a separate factor of production. 1964 GOULD & KOLB Dict. Social Sci. 606/1 In its broadest definition the term uncertainty is used by economists to refer to any situation in which a set of alternative outcomes is not fully predictable. 1969 D. C. HAGUE Managerial Economics vii. 137 To conform to established terminology we shall, from now on, use the word uncertainty to mean the same thing as non-insurable risk.

5. (Heisenberg's) uncertainty principle (Physics), a principle of quantum mechanics implying that certain pairs of observables (e.g. the momentum and position of a particle, the energy and lifetime of a quantum level) cannot both be precisely and simultaneously known, and that as one of any pair is more exactly defined, the other becomes more uncertain. Also transf. Cf. HEISENBERG, principle of indeterminacy s.v. INDETERMINACY b.

The principle is usually stated as an inequality such that the product of the uncertainties of the pair of observables cannot be less than a quantity of the order of Planck's constant.

[1928 Physical Rev. XXXII. 570 The principle of uncertainty is particularly clear in this [sc. Weyl's] system.] 1929 CONDON & MORSE Quantum Mech. i. 21 (heading) The quantum uncertainty principle. 1931 Times Lit. Suppl. 5 Nov. 852/4 Perhaps the most remarkable discovery that has been made in connexion with atomic theory is the so-called Uncertainty Principle. 1955 W. HEISENBERG in W. Pauli Niels Bohr 15 It was now [sc. in 1927] assumed in quantum mechanics that real states can always be represented as vectors in Hilbert space (or as 'mixtures' of such vectors). The uncertainty principle was the simple expression for this assumption. 1977 Time 14 Mar. 74/1 Even in the age of the Uncertainty Principle and culture fracture, Warren has not lost his sense of life as a sustained drama. 1982 A. M. LESK Introd. Physical Chem. x. 309 What Heisenberg's uncertainty principle asserts is that for no state of any system can all dynamical variables be arbitrarily well-determined.

2. Of letters or writing: Having the large rounded forms (not joined to each other) characteristic of early Greek and Latin manuscripts; also (in looser use), of large size, capital.

The term is also applied to letters having the form of the uncial, irrespective of size. When used in its strict sense, uncial is distinguished from capital, which denotes the more original, unrounded forms of the letters.

Jerome's unciales litteræ (Prol. Job) is commonly explained as meaning 'letters of an inch long'; his use of the word is accompanied by the phrase ut vulgo aiunt, and the literal sense was perhaps not seriously intended. The emendations initiales 'initial' and uncinales 'hooked, hent', have been suggested.

My unscientific sampling of English speakers in Britain a few years ago indicated that cry uncle is not familiar in England or Scotland.

† 2. To cheat or swindle (of something). Obs.

Perhaps originally implying a pretence of being uncle to the person victimized; but the association with COZEN v. and sb., which appears in the quotes, makes it also possible that uncle is merely a punning variation of causin.

-uncle, suffix, representing OF. -uncle (-oncle) and ultimately L. -unculus, -uncula, in a few words, in most of which it retains its diminutive force. The earliest of these is carbuncle from the 13-14th cent.; †portuncle appears in the 15th, caruncle, furuncle, homuncle in the 17th, peduncle in the 18th, and oratiuncle in the 19th. New formations without Latin originals are rare, and the suffix has little independent existence though occasionally employed as in the following examples.
