 With dependent infinitive (as in I. and II.).

As with should, the notion of past time is usually expressed by the pf. inf.: see note s.v. SHALL v. B. II.

40. The past subj. used with potential or conditional force as a softening of the pres. ind. in sense 5, and hence virtually equivalent to it: Could or should wish to; should like to; wish, desire, or 'want' to (sometimes implying 'intend'). arch. or dial. exc. in would have (with obj. and inf. or compl.) = 'should like, wish (a person or thing) to be or to do something': see HAVE v. 18 b.

The notion of desire (in later use often passing into that of consent or willingness) is often emphasized by fain, gladly, willingly, or the like. The use then becomes scarcely distinguishable from the strictly conditional use in 41.

The form-history is obscure, partly from the fact that examples of the word are not forthcoming for the period between late OE. and the 14th century, when the immediate precursor of the present form, viz. wilwe, is already established, instead of the normal representative of OE. welig, which would be welly*. The change in the root-syllable may be due to WILLY sb. 1 (OE. wilige), or an OE. wiliz* may have existed; for the terminal syllable cf. bellows beside belly (OE. beliz), fellow beside felly (OE. feliz). The type willy survives dial.

wind (wind, poet. also waund), *sb.*¹ Forms: 1-wind, 3-6 wynd, (4 wint, wynt, whynde, wend, Sc. vend), 4-6 wynde, Sc. vynd, 4-7 winde, (5 wende, wyind, wijnd, wyynd; Sc. 6-7 wound, 6-8 win, 9 win', wun). [OE. wind = OFris., OS., (M)LG., (M)Du. wind, OHG., MHG. wint, wind (G. wind), ON. vindr (Sw., Da. vind), Goth. winds:—OTeut. windaz*:—pre-Teut. wentos*, cognate with L. ventus, W. gwynt, Breton guent; orig. a pres. ppl. formation (wēnto*)-f. root wē- of OE. wāwan (see WOVE), OHG. wājan (G. wehen), Goth. waian to blow, waft, Lith. vėjās wind, OSl. vējati blows, větrū wind, OIr. feth air, Gr. ἀῆρ (—āfēros*) blows, ἀήρης wind, Skr. vāti blows, vāta wind.

The normal pronunciation would be (waund), as in behind, bind, find, grind, hind, mind, rind, etc., and this pronunciation remains dialectally and in ordinary poetical usage. The pronunciation (wind) became current in polite speech during the 18th c.; it has been used occas. by poets, but the paucity of appropriate rhyming words (such as sinned, thinned, dinned) and the 'thinness' of the sound have been against its general use in verse. The short vowel of (wind) is presumably due to the influence of the derivatives windmill, windy, in which (i) is normal.

1747 JOHNSON Plan of Engl. Dict. 12 To fix the pronunciation of monosyllables, by placing with them words of correspondent sound... so that the words wound and wind, as they are now frequently pronounced, will not rhyme to sound, and mind.

The following quotes. contain examples of the pronunciation (wind) in modern poets:—

1855 LYNCH Rivulet LXXXI. (Jerusalem) iii, She hath sinned; Like ashes now her scattered sons Fly on the wind. 1866 SWINBURNE Poems, A Litany 17 As the tresses and wings of the wind Are scattered and shaken, I will scatter all them that have sinned. 1885 TENNYSON Wreck vii, When her orphan wail came borne in the shriek of a growing wind, And a voice rang out in the thunders of Ocean and Heaven 'Thou hast sinn' d'. 1913 BRIDGES La Gloire de Voltaire 94 When sickening France adulterously sinned With Virtue, and went mad conceiving wind.]

windmill ('windmɪl, 'winmɪl), sb. (Formerly also as two words.) [f. WIND sb.¹ + MILL sb.¹; cf. MHG. wintmül, G. windmühle, LG., Du. windmolen, and F. moulin à vent (from 13th c.).]

1. A mill the machinery of which is driven by the wind acting upon sails, used (chiefly in flat districts) for grinding corn, pumping water, etc. The older and most characteristic European form consists of a conical mill-house with a dome or 'cap' carrying (usually) four sails; the modern American type consists of a disk of sails mounted on a framework of girders, and is used chiefly for pumping or sawing.

The sails (SAIL sb.¹ 5) are turned by the force of the wind around an axis or wind-shaft, usually nearly horizontal and having some contrivance (now often automatic) for turning it in any direction to enable the sails to catch the wind.

1. a. Each of the organs of flight of any flying animal, as a bird, bat, or insect.

In birds the wings are specially modified fore-limbs; in bats (and the extinct pterodactyls, etc.), extensions of the skin attached to modified parts of the fore-limbs (see BAT *sb.*¹ 1); in insects, membranous expansions attached to the thorax in addition to the limbs. In a few birds the wings are rudimentary, and either functionless (as in the Apteryx) or used only to assist in swimming or walking (as in Penguins). Occas. loosely applied to the enlarged fins of flying-fishes and to the appendages of flying squirrels, etc. which serve for movements resembling flight.

II. OE. wise manner, fashion, like the cognate forms in other Germanic languages (see the respective sections below), was used in various kinds of advb. expressions meaning 'in such-and-such a manner, way, or respect', in which it was qualified by an adj. or a sb. with or without a governing preposition. Several of these expressions, with others formed on their pattern in later periods, have survived as simple words, e.g. anywise, crosswise, leaswise, likewise, nowise, otherwise, slantwise, in which -wise has the appearance of a suffix, and, in so far as it could or can still be freely combined with an adj. or a sb. (as in 1 b, 3 b), it has actually performed the function of a suffix. The free use of the various forms, i.e. apart from the established simple words, is now only archaic exc. in sense 3 b.

1. a. With demonstrative, interrogative, or indefinite adj. in an oblique case. (†rarely pl.)

In OE. ōðre wisan varies with on ððre wisan (see OTHERWISE), but most later expressions of this form, e.g. likewise, thiswise, what-wise, resulted from ellipses of the prep. in expressions of the type in 2 a. THUSWISE is an analogical combination with an adv.

OHG. wisi (MHG. wise, G. weise) is from a parallel formation with j-suffix.

The standard pronunciation with voiced s (z) is presumably derived from the oblique cases. The normal representative of OE. wis with (s), as in ice (OE. is), survives in some northern dialects; the regular Sc. pronunciation is (weis).]

The OE. preterite-pres. wát, wást, witon, and their equivalents in the other Germanic langs. (= properly, I have seen, hence, I know), correspond to Skr. véda, véttha, vidmá, Gr. oída, oída, oíde, ídeu (ídeu), OSl. vědě, věsi, etc., OPruss. 2nd sing. waizei, 1st pl. waidimai, and are based on Indo-Eur. woid-, wid-. OE. 2nd pers. sing. wást (see A. 2 b below) is an altered form of wás* by analogy with meaht (2nd sing. pres. of *MAY v.*¹). Similarly OE. wiste is an altered form of earlier wisse after regular weak forms in -te.

Indo-Eur. woid-, weid-, wid- is represented also by Skr. veda knowledge (see VEDA), vitta-known, vittá-found, Gr. εἶδος appearance, shape, ἰδέα form, εἶδον (:-εἶδον*) I saw, αἰδεῖσθαι invisible, εἰδέναι to know, αἰδώς unseen, unknown, L. videre to see, OIr. fiad 'coram', fiadu witness, adfiadat they relate, rofetar I know, fiss knowledge, W. gwydd presence, gwyddom we know, OSl. viděti to see, viděti to know, Lith. veidas face, Arm. gitem I know, egit he found; and (with nasal infix) Skr. vindāti finds, Gr. ἰνδάλισθαι to appear, OIr. finnaim I find out.

The original conjugation, typically represented by to wit or wete, pres. I and he wot, thou wost, we, ye, and they wite, pa. t. wist, pa. pple. witen, presented many apparent anomalies, and various attempts at normalization were made by means of analogical formations and irregular extension of the use of certain forms, with the result that new infinitive and present-stem forms came into existence which it is necessary to treat separately: see *WIS v.*¹, WIST v., WOT v., and the archaistic *WEET v.*¹ (For forms combined with prefixed negative ne see NETE, NIST, NITEN, NOST, *NOT v.*², NUTE.)

Teut. wider-* (see s.v. WITHER a. and adv. and WITHER-1), perh. taking place orig. in compounds (cf. WITH- and the parallelism of OE. wipcēosan and wipercēosan to reject, wipstandan and wiperstandan to withstand, etc.).

As an adv., with occurs as the second element in composition with other advs. denoting direction, motion, or extension: FORWITH (FOROUTH, FORROW), FORTHWITH, INWITH, OUTWITH (UTOUTH), DOWNWITH, UPWITH.]

A. prep. The prevailing senses of this prep. in the earliest periods are those of opposition ('against') and of motion or rest in proximity ('towards', 'alongside'), which are now current only in certain traditional collocations or specific applications. These notions readily pass into fig. uses denoting various kinds of relations, among which those implying reciprocity are at first prominent. The most remarkable development in the signification of with consists in its having taken over in the ME. period the chief senses belonging properly to OE. mid *MID prep.*¹ (cognate with Gr. μετά with). These senses are mainly those denoting association, combination or union, instrumentality or means, and attendant circumstance. These are all important senses of ON. við, to which fact their currency and ultimate predominance in the English word are partly due. The last important stage was the extension of with from the instrument to the agent, in which use it was current for different periods along with of and through, and later with by, which finally superseded the other three. The range of meanings in general has no doubt been enlarged by association with L. cum. The interaction of senses and sense-groups has been such that the position of a particular sense in the order of development is often difficult to determine.

In common with other preps. with can be postponed to the end of an interrogative or relative clause introduced by its regimen; but in ME. it was freq. placed immediately after the verb in relative clauses, e.g. þes rentis þat þe fend hæp dowed wip clerkis = these revenues with which the Devil has endowed clerics. In postposition it was for a long period extensively replaced by WITHAL (q.v. B).
