3. The action of converting any substance or constituent of a substance into vapour by means of heat, and of again condensing this by refrigeration into the liquid form, by means of an alembic, retort and receiver, or a still and refrigeratory; the extraction of the spirit, essence, or essential oil of any substance by the evaporation and condensation of its liquid solution; and, in a more generalized sense, the operation of separating by means of fire, and in closed vessels, the volatile parts of any substance from the fixed parts, in order to the collection of the products.

As shown by the etymology, the original application is to substances of which the distillates are condensed drop by drop into the liquid form; whether for the purpose of extracting the more volatile part of a substance, or of concentrating or purifying a volatile substance such as water by freeing it from matter held in suspension or solution. When no more heat is applied than just suffices to cause the liquid to pass over in drops, the process is called cold distillation. Dry or destructive distillation, the decomposition of a substance by strong heat in a retort, and the collection of the volatile matters evolved, as in the destructive distillation of coal in gas-making. fractional distillation, the separation of two or more volatile liquids having different boiling-points, so that they pass over at different temperatures and can be collected separately, the more volatile first, and the less volatile in order afterwards. distillation by descent (per descensum), in Old Chem., the name given to a method in which the fire was applied above, and the distillate drawn off beneath (see DESCENT 1 d). In opposition to this, the ordinary method was called distillation by ascent (per ascensum).

H. DARWIN in Fortn. Rev. Feb. 266 Earthquake waves consist... of waves or vibrations of compression, and of distortion.

b. Math. and Optics. Any change of shape not involving breach of continuity, as the distortion of a circle into an oval, or that of a rectangle into a rhombus or rhomboid by alteration of the angles, lengthening or curving of certain lines, etc.

1879 Cassell's Techn. Educ. IV. 333/1 Refractive aberration, or in other words 'distortion', is common to many lenses, producing images wherein straight lines are represented as bulged inwards or outwards. 1885 OSBORNE REYNOLDS in Proc. Brit. Assoc. 898 The susceptibility of such a medium for a state in which the two sets of grains are in conditions of opposite distortions.

c. concr. A distorted form or image.

1820 SHELLEY Witch of Atlas lxii. 3 But other troubled forms of sleep she saw... Distortions foul of supernatural awe. 1851 NICHOL Archit. Heav. 59 Instead of an image of the object, will yield only a distortion. 1867 A. BARRY Sir C. Barry vii. 244 Some remains of the objectionable distortion at the entrance from S. Stephen's Hall.

2. A temporary twist awry, a twisting or writhing movement; a contortion.

1718 Prior Power 65 By his distortions he reveals his pains. 1752 JOHNSON Ramblor No. 188 ¶4 What the Latins call, the Sardinian Laughter, a distortion of the face without gladness of heart.

3. a. fig. The twisting or perversion of words so as to give to them a different sense; perversion of opinions, facts, history, so as to misapply them.

1650 R. HOLLINGWORTH Exerc. Usurped Powers 51 Having vindicated this passage... from this authors distortion. 1745 WESLEY Answe. Ch. 37 What a frightful Distortion of my Words is this? 1849 MACAULAY Hist. Eng. II. 317 To bring together... by fraudulent distortions of law, an assembly which might call itself a parliament. 1874 L. STEPHEN Hours in Library (1892) I. vii. 246 He will be amused at the distortion of history.

b. Psychol. The alteration of repressed or unconscious elements before they appear in the conscious mind.

1910 Amer. Jnl. Psychol. XXI. 304 The distortion in the dream-making is thus a means of evading the censor. 1925 A. & J. STRACHEY tr. Freud's Coll. Papers III. 361 Obsessional thoughts have undergone a distortion similar to that undergone by dream thoughts before they become the manifest content of a dream. 1957 R. L. MUNROE Schools of Psychoanalytic Thought III. xi. 482 The child whose personal experience was especially unfortunate... is especially prone to... distortion.

4. Electr. A change in the wave-form of a signal by an electronic device such as an amplifier or during transmission from one point to another, usually impairing the quality of its reproduction.

1887 O. HEAVISIDE in Electrician 3 June 80/1 The attenuation... increases so fast with the frequency, thus leading to a most prodigious distortion in the shape of irregular waves... Now the distortion and the attenuation, though different things, are intimately connected. Ibid. 24 June 143/2 'Distortion'... I chose myself as preferable to 'mutilation' and similar words. Its meaning is obvious. Make current-variations in a certain way at one place. If the current-variations at another place are similar, no matter how much attenuated they may be, there is no distortion. 1914 A. B. ROFFE-MARTIN Wireless Telegr. 117 It is found that, owing chiefly to dielectric losses in the condenser, the distortion has a still greater weakening effect on radiating power. 1962 SIMPSON & RICHARDS Function Transistors xii. 276 Class B amplifiers must be used in push-pull arrangements if distortion-free amplification is to be obtained.

Hence di'stortional a., of or pertaining to distortion; di'stortionist, one who practises or professes distortion: (a) a caricaturist; (b) one who professionally distorts his body; di'stortionless a. Electr., not producing any distortion; also, not affected by distortion.

1864 Sat. Rev. 5 Nov. 563 Bunbury... was a mere caricaturist, or distortionist. 1885 OSBORNE REYNOLDS in Proc. Brit. Assoc. 898 The transmission of distortionless waves becomes possible if the medium be composed of small grains with large grains interspersed. 1886 Pall Mall G. 6 Aug. 13/2 They play the rôle of distortionists... Their object is to draw money from the public by their piteous and excruciating positions. 1892 O. HEAVISIDE Electr. Papers II. 129 The distortionless system... brings the speed of the current into full view. 1921 Jnl. Inst. Electr. Engineers Apr. 397/2 For satisfactory transmission of speech the circuit should also be practically 'distortionless'. 1937 Proc. Inst. Radio Engineers XXV. 321 It is possible to obtain distortionless reception of considerably higher levels of modulation if two side-band frequencies... are transmitted. 1962 SIMPSON & RICHARDS Function Transistors xiii. 298 This is readily seen by considering any such distortion voltage as being produced by a fictitious generator added within the closed loop of a distortionless amplifier.

di'stortive a. [f. L. distort-ppl. stem + -IVE: cf. L. tortivus.] Having the quality of distorting; producing or tending to distortion.

1823 SCORESBY Whale Fishery 166 The ships in the north-west... were... subject to a distortive influence; these appeared... elevated by refraction, like oblong black streaks, lengthened out. Ibid. 168 In its distortive effect.

4. Logic. †a. In the earlier English writers used for what is now called DIVISION, i.e. the logical division of a genus (a logical whole) into the several species included under it; less properly, the partition of a whole into the integral or constituent parts contained in it. Obs.

1588 FRAUNCE Lawiers Log. i. xiii. 56 b, A distribution is when the whole is distributed into his partes. 1628 T. SPENCER Logick 143 When we say, a man hath two parts, soule and bodie: Living Creatures are reasonable, and vnreasonable, then we make a distribution. 1698 NORRIS Pract. Disc. (1707) IV. 194 Then he would have given us a full distribution of Immortality, to which all the instances of it might be reduced. 1725 WATTS Logic i. vi. §10 The word distribution is most properly used, when we distinguish an universal whole into several kinds of species.

b. More recently, after Scholastic usage of Latin distribuere, distributio: The application of a term to each and all of the several individual instances included in its denotation or extension; the acceptance of a term in a general sense including every individual to which it is applicable.

Said of a term qualified explicitly or implicitly by such marks of universality (signa universalitatis) as all, each, every, any, etc.; the one simple common term being treated as 'distributed' over all its significates; e.g. in every man, the term man is spread out over, or dispersed among, this, that, and every other individual man.

This use of distributio (which turns on the question discussed in Plato, Parm. 130 seqq.), first appears in the Schoolmen of the 13th cent., as Shyreswood, and especially Petrus Hispanus (1226-1277), of whose Summulae the 7th chapter deals with the properties of terms, including Distribution, as an appendix to the exposition of the Organon, and with special reference to the solution of sophisms. The term apparently came into English logic through the medium of Aldrich: see DISTRIBUTE v. 6.

(The speculation in Latham's Johnson s.v. Distributed is wholly gratuitous, and ignores the history of the word.)

[c. 1250] PETRUS HISP. Summulae vii. 5. 1 Distributio est multiplicatio termini communis per signum universale facta, ut cum dicitur 'omnis homo' iste terminus 'homo' distributorius sive confunderius pro quolibet suo inferiori.] 1827 WHATELY Logic i. §5 'All food', or every kind of food, are expressions which imply the distribution of the term 'food'; 'some food' would imply its non-distribution. 1849 MANSELL Aldrich's Logica iii. §3. 4 note, Distribution is not an Aristotelian term. It forms part of what the Schoolmen call parva logica; a kind of appendix to analyses of the Organon; containing matters, some evolved from... Aristotle, others complete innovations... The syllogistic rules concerning distribution are of course implied in Aristotle's account of each figure, though not enumerated separately, as common to all. 1864 BOWEN Logic v. 126 The distribution of the Subject depends upon the Quantity of the Judgment. 1887 FOWLER Elem. Deduct. Logic (ed. 9) iv. 34 The distribution or non-distribution of an attributive, as 'human', 'red', etc., follows that of the corresponding common term, 'human being', 'red thing', etc.

5. Rhet. (See quots.)

1553 T. WILSON Rhet. (1567) 95a. It is also called a distribution, when we deuide the whole into seuerall partes, and saie we haue fewer pointes, wherof we purpose to speake, comprehending our whole talke within compasse of the same. 1727-51 CHAMBERS Cycl., Distribution, in rhetoric, is a kind of description; or a figure whereby an orderly division and enumeration is made of the principal qualities of a subject.

6. Arch. The arrangement of the several parts of a building, esp. of the interior divisions or apartments. (Cf. DISPOSITION 1 d.)

1624 WOTTON Archit. 120 Distributio is that vsefull Casting of all Roomes for Office, Entertainment, or Pleasure, which I haue handled before.] 1727-51 CHAMBERS Cycl., Distribution of the plan, denotes the dividing, and dispensing the several parts, and members, which compose the plan of a building. 1876 GWILT Encycl. Archit. §2489 Distribution and disposition are the first objects that should engage the architect's attention, even of him whose great aim is to strike the attention by ornament, which can never please unless its source can be traced to the most convenient and economical distribution of the leading parts.

7. Printing. The action or process of distributing type: see DISTRIBUTE v. 5.

1727-51 CHAMBERS Cycl., Distribution, in printing, the taking a form asunder, separating the letters, and disposing them in the cases again, each in its proper cell. 1875 Ure's Dict. Arts III. 651 Distribution is performed four times faster than composition.

8. Steam-engine. The steps or operations by which steam is supplied to and withdrawn from the cylinder at each stroke of the piston; viz., admission, suppression or cutting off, release or exhaust, and compression of exhaust steam prior to the next admission' (Webster 1864).

9. attrib., as distribution board Electr., an insulated panel carrying terminals, fuses, etc., for controlling a number of subsidiary electrical circuits; distribution map (see quot. 1951).

4. A salt of disulphuric acid, a pyrosulphate.

1877 ROSCOE & SCHORL Chem. I. 345 The name disulphuric acid H₂S₂O₇ has been given to this substance, as it forms a series of very stable salts; thus sodium disulphate Na₂S₂O₇ is obtained by heating the acid sodium sulphate HNaSO₄, so long as water is given off.

disulphide (dar'salfaid). Chem. [f. DI-² + SULPHIDE.] A compound in which two atoms of sulphur are united with another element or a radical, as carbon disulphide, CS₂. †Formerly, a compound having one atom of sulphur united to two of another element, as disulphide of copper = cuprous sulphide, Cu₂S.

1863-72 WATTS Dict. Chem. II. 74 Hemisulphide of copper, or Cuprous Sulphide, Cu₂S, also called Disulphide of copper. Found native as Copper-glance. 1869 ROSCOE Elem. Chem. 128 When deposited from solution in carbon disulphide, sulphur crystallizes in the ordinary natural or octahedral form. 1895 Edin. Rev. Oct. 409 Carbon disulphide took it up more freely.

disulpho- (dar'salfəu). Chem. [See DI-² 2 and SULPHO-.] In composition, denominating acids derived from two molecules of sulphurous acid.

Hence disulphonic a.

1868 WATTS Dict. Chem. V. 551 There is a group of acid ethers, (SO)₂R'H₂O₄, derived from a double molecule of sulphurous acid, H₂S₂O₆, by substitution of a diatomic alcohol-radicle for half the hydrogen. These are the so-called disulpho-acids, which may also be formulated as compounds of hydrocarbon with 2 at(oms) of SO₂. 1869 ROSCOE Elem. Chem. 423 When disulpho-anthraquinic acid is formed. 1881 WATTS Dict. Chem. VIII. 1857 Anthracene treated with sulphuric acid yields two disulphonic acids.

dis'sulphuret. Chem. [See DI-² 2 and SULPHURET.] = DISULPHIDE (in obs. and current senses).

1854 J. SCOFFERN in Orr's Circ. Sc., Chem. 491 The application of heat drives off one equivalent of its sulphur and converts it into the disulphuret. Ibid. 500 Sub- or Disulphuret of Mercury.

disulphuric (daisal'fjuərɪk), a. Chem. In disulphuric acid, the same as pyrosulphuric or Nordhausen sulphuric acid, H₂S₂O₇ = 2(SO₂OH) + O. Its salts are pyro- or disulphates. (So called because the molecule represents two molecules of sulphuric acid deprived of one of water.)

1875 WATTS Dict. Chem. VII. 1140.

†disu'nanimous, a. Obs. rare. [DIS- 10.] Not unanimous; divided in mind.

ditch (ditʃ), *sb.*¹ Forms: 1-3 dic, 2-7 dich(e, 4-6 dyche (4 dicche), 5-7 ditche (6 deche, dytch), 6-ditch. [OE. dic, which has also given DIKE *sb.*¹, q.v.

The analogy of other words, e.g. ME. like, liche, (dead) body, like, liche, adj., -rik, -riche, suffix in kinrik, kyneriche, etc., ik, ich, i, pik, piche, pitch, stike, stiche, stitch, leads us to expect dike as the northern, dic as the southern repr. of OE. dic. The ME. evidence favours this; but in modern use, both forms occur in nearly all parts of the country, with various differentiation of meaning. Generally, ditch is a hollow channel or deep furrow, wet or dry, but in some parts (see sense 4) it is an embankment or raised fence; usually dike or dyke is a bank or wall, but in many parts it is a wide and deep channel for running water. The existence of dic or deek in this sense in Kent, Sussex, and other southern counties, is remarkable. The use of dike, dyke, for a sea-wall or embankment in the eastern counties, may possibly have been introduced from Holland: cf. the title DICE-GRABE.]

ditheism ('daɪθi:z(ə)m). [f. DI-² + THEISM.] Belief in two supreme gods; religious dualism; esp. the belief in two independent antagonistic principles of good and evil, as in Zoroastrianism and Manicheism. Also applied (controversially) to forms of belief in which it is asserted or implied that Jesus Christ is not of one substance with God the Father, as in Arianism and Socinianism.

1678 CUDWORTH Intell. Syst. i. iv. §13. 213 That fore-mentioned Dithieism, or opinion of two gods, a good and an evil one. 1719 WATERLAND Vind. Christ's Divinity 84 The common Answer to the Charge of Tritheism, or Dithieism, as well of the Post-Nicene, as Ante-Nicene Fathers, was, that there is but one Head, Root, Fountain, Father of all; not in respect of Authority only, but of Substance also. 1854 MILMAN Lat. Chr. I. 45 Callistus... hoped to elude the charge on one side of Patripassianism, on the other of Dithieism. 1895 A. C. HEADLAM in Expository Times Mar. 266 The Father and the Son are... one in their action, one in their purpose... If we are to realize... the Atonement, we must put aside all idea of dithieism or tritheism.

ditheist ('daɪθi:st). [f. DI-² + THEIST.] One who holds the doctrine of DITHIEISM.

1678 CUDWORTH Intell. Syst. i. iv. §13. 213 These Dithieists... had it not been for this business of evil... would never have asserted any more principles or gods than one. 1720 WATERLAND Eight Serm. Pref. 36 They do by... Implication, tho' not in Intention, make two supreme Gods; and consequently are practical Dithieists.

ditheistic (daɪθi:'istɪk), a. [f. prec. + -IC¹.] Of or pertaining to dithieism. So dithieistical a.

1678 CUDWORTH Intell. Syst. i. iv. §13. 213 The chiefest... Assertors of which Dithieistical Doctrine of... a Good God and an Evil Dæmon, were the Marcionites and the Manicheans. 1750 BOLINGBROKE Authority in Relig. iv. xxvii. I have spoken somewhere of the dithieistical doctrine. 1890 HATCH Influence Grk. Ideas Chr. Ch. viii. 228 The dithieistic hypothesis was more difficult than the difficulties which it explained.

dithematic (daɪθi:'mætɪk), a. [f. DI-² + THEMATIC.] Of a word: containing two significant themes or stems. Also as sb.

1916 E. WEEKLEY Surnames 26 These Teutonic names were originally all dithematic [sic]. 1922 — in N. & Q. 12th Ser. XI. 52/2 Some old Teutonic dithematic. 1927 Englische Studien 10 Nov. 76 In the course of the tenth century dithematic names, such as Wulfstan, Æthelstan and Ælfred, are used almost exclusively among the higher classes of society.

dither ('dɪðə(r)), v. [A phonetic variation of DIDER, q.v.; cf. father, mother, feather, hither, gather, in which -ther represents earlier -der.]

1. intr. Orig. chiefly dial., to tremble, quake, quiver, thrill. Now also in gen. colloq. use: to vacillate, to act indecisively, to waver between different opinions or courses of action.

ditto ('dɪtəʊ), sb. [a. It. ditto (Florio), detto said, spoken, aforesaid (:—L. dictus, -um). Used in It. with a sb. like 'said' in Eng.: (if) detto libro 'the said book'; also, absolutely, to avoid repetition of the name of a month, thus (Vocab. Della Crusca) 'Sotto li 22 di dicembre mi fu significato... che per li 26 detto... io dovessi' etc. (on the 22nd December it was signified to me... that by the 26th aforesaid (ditto)... I should have, etc.). This was the original sense in which the word was adopted in English, where it has been transferred to other uses, quite unknown to Italian.]

†1. In or of the month already named; said month. Obs.

1625 PURCHAS Pilgrims x. ix. §4 The eight and twentieth ditto, I went... to the Generals Tent. 1677 HENCHMAN in W. Hubbard Narrative (1865) I. 237 They, 27 ditto, brought in two Squaws, a Boy and a Girl. [By ditto is meant June, the date June 30 having just been mentioned.]

2. By extension: The aforesaid, the same; used, in accounts and lists (where also abbreviated d^o, do., or expressed by two dots or commas, or a dash) to avoid repetition of a word or phrase appearing above; hence in commercial, office, and colloquial language.

1678 PHILLIPS, Ditto (Italian, said) [1706 adds the aforesaid or the same] a word used much in Merchants Accounts, and relation of Foreign news; and signifieth the same place [ed. 1696 the same Commodity or Place] with that immediately beforementioned. 1712 ARBUTHNOT John Bull iv. ii. dive (daiv), sb. [f. DIVE v.]

1. a. The act of diving; a darting plunge into or through water or the like. lit. and fig.

The Amateur Swimming Association distinguishes between a dive and a plunge. The latter is defined as a standing dive made head-first from a firm take-off, free from spring. The plunger does not add any further impetus, but allows himself to progress till all forward motion ceases, when he raises his face above water. A dive may be running, from a spring-board, and with propulsion added on reaching the water.

b. transf. and fig. To take different courses; to turn off from a track or course; to differ in opinion or character; to deviate from a typical form or normal state.

1856 E. A. BOND Russia at close 16th C. (Hakl. Soc.) Introd. 27 Brought up to the practice of medicine, he diverged to the profession of astrology. 1856 DOVE Logic Chr. Faith v. i. §2. 264 We may diverge, either into the region of morals... or into the region of matter. 1860 TYNDALL Glac. I. iii. 31, I diverged from the track. 1867 J. MARTINEAU Ess. II. 377 This is the point... at which Aristotle diverges from Plato.

c. Math. Said of an infinite series the sum of which increases indefinitely as the number of terms is increased. Opp. to CONVERGE 1 c.

1796 HUTTON Math. Dict. II. 436 When the terms grow larger and larger, the Series is called a diverging one, because that by collecting the terms continually, the successive sums diverge, or go always farther and farther from the true value or radix of the Series.

2. trans. To cause (lines or rays) to branch off in different directions; to make divergent, deflect.

1748 Phil. Trans. XLV. 187 The electrified Jet or Stream... is diverged into several divergent Rays. 1758 J. DOLLOND in Phil. Trans. L. 740 In general the crown glass seems to diverge the light rather the least. c. 1865 J. WYLDE in Circ. Sc. I. 260/1 An electric current diverges a magnetic needle. 1879 H. GRUBB in *Proc. divergence (diˈvɜːdʒəns, daɪ-), [ad. mod.L. divergentia (f. divergere) or a. F. divergence (17th c. in Hatz.-Darm.): see DIVERGENT and -ENCE.]

1. The action of diverging; moving off in different directions from the same point (called the point of divergence), so that the intervening distance continually increases. The opposite of convergence.

1656 HOBBS Six Less. III. Wks. 1845 VII. 252 That angle which is generated by the divergence of two straight lines. 1657 WALLIS Corr. of Hobbes ix. 81 Doth it remain the same angle, the same quantity of divergence? 1713 DERHAM Phys. Theol. IV. ii. (Seager) The convergences and divergences of the rays. 1870 R. M. FERGUSON Electr. 34 This divergence from the true north.

b. ellipt. For amount or degree of divergence. 1880 GRAY Struct. Bot. IV. §1. 121 This angular divergence (i.e. the angular distance of any two successive leaves). 1882 VINES Sachs' Bot. 608 The stamens stand in one or two turns with the divergence $\frac{1}{2}$ or $\frac{1}{4}$.

2. transf. and fig. The departure from each other of two paths, courses, modes of action, or processes; continuous departure or deviation from a standard or norm.

1839 ALISON Hist. Europe (1849-50) VII. xlv. §84. 370 Augereau's divergence had been occasioned by something more than the snow-storm. 1858 GLADSTONE Homer II. 140 The natural divergence of the two traditions. 1871 L. II. xl. 88 note, An illustration of the divergences between countries both highly democratic.

3. Math. a. Of a series: the action of diverging (DIVERGE v. 1 c), or fact of being divergent. b. In fluid motion, the decrement of density at any point. In quaternions, the negative of the scalar part of the result of operating with the Hamiltonian operator upon a vector function (which serves to measure such decrement).

1858 TODHUNTER Algebra xl. heading, Convergence and Divergence of Series.

di'vergency. [f. as prec.: see -ENCY.]

1. The quality or state of being divergent; the amount or degree of divergence.

1709 BERKELEY Th. Vision §6 The apparent distance still increasing, as the divergency of the rays decreases. c. 1790 IMISON Sch. Art. I. 86, I... present it to the balls in their diverging state... if it increase their divergency... it shows their electricity to be... negative. 1831 BREWSTER Optics I. §16. 7 The rays will have the same divergency after reflexion as they had before it.

b. transf. and fig. 1860 WESTCOTT Introd. Study Gosp. vii. (ed. 5) 350 General agreement will be diversified by characteristic divergencies. 1879 PROCTOR Pleas. Ways Sc. xiii. 327 That divergency which... characterizes the relationship between man and the anthropoid ape.

2. Math. Divergent character or quality (of a series).

1837 PENNY Cycl. VII. 486/1 Of series of positive terms which diminish without limit, a test of convergency or divergency may frequently be given as follows. 1887 HALL & KNIGHT Higher Algebra §279. 230 Rules by which we can test the convergency or divergency of a given series without effecting its summation.

3. = DIVERGENCE 1.

1727-51 CHAMBERS Cycl. s.v. Virtual Focus, Also called point of dispersion, or divergency. 1833 CHALMERS Const. Man (1835) I. iii. 156 The point of departure or divergency.

divergent (diˈvɜːdʒənt, daɪ-), a. [ad. mod.L. divergent-em, pr. pp. of divergere to DIVERGE: cf. F. divergent (17th c. in Hatz.-Darm.)]

1. Proceeding in different directions from each other or from a common point; departing more widely from each other; diverging.

1696 PHILLIPS, Divergent, a Term in Opticks, said of the Beams, which having suffered the Refraction, separate one from the other. 1796 MORSE Amer. Geog. I. 590 Lines... so combined as to meet at certain given points, with the divergent avenues. 1829 SOUTHEY Sir T. More Ded. x. Central plains, Whence rivers flow divergent. 1869 TYNDALL Notes Lect. Light §92 If these divergent rays be produced backwards, they will intersect behind the mirror. 1871 DARWIN Desc. Man II. xix. 345 The Siamese have small noses, with divergent nostrils.

2. transf. and fig. a. Following different routes, lines of action, or of thought; deviating from each other or from a standard or normal course or type.

1801 W. DUPRÉ Neolog. Fr. Diet. 93 Questions divergent (or which diverge) from themselves. 1832 SOUTHEY in Q. Rev. XLVIII. 240 Thence arise divergent opinions. 1875 GLADSTONE Glean. (1879) VI. iii. 144 Were the question between historical Christianity and systems opposed to or divergent from it.

b. Psychol. Of thinking, reasoning, etc.: of a kind that produces a wide variety of possible answers to a problem. So di'verger, one who thinks in this way.

1956 J. P. GUILFORD in Psychol. Bull. LIII. iv. 274 Production factors fall into two groups—convergent-thinking factors and divergent-thinking factors. Such a distinction seems not to have been emphasized in prior literature on thinking. 1966 L. HUDSON Contrary Imaginations iii. 38 With new tests, it seems vital that we should avoid question-begging if we possibly can. For this reason, I propose to name them technically. The 'High IQ' I shall call a converger; the 'High Creative', a diverger, and the two styles of reasoning, convergent and divergent, respectively. 1970 Nature 25 July 420/4 If you are better at conventional IQ tests than at 'open-ended' tests... you are a converger; if not, you are a diverger.

3. Of, pertaining to, characterized or produced by, divergence.

(divergent squint: strabismus in which the axes of the eyes diverge.)

1831 BREWSTER Optics iv. 34 The divergent point of diverging rays. 1870 T. HOLMES Surg. (ed. 2) III. 248 Strabismus may be either convergent or divergent. 1879 [see DIVERGE v. 2].

4. Math. Applied to an infinite series of terms, the sum of which becomes indefinitely greater as more and more terms are taken. (Opp. to CONVERGENT a. 2.)

Sometimes used to include oscillatory series, or such as oscillate from one value to another, as the series of $1 - 1 + 1 - 1 + 1 - 1 + \dots$, the sum of which oscillates between 0 and 1.

1837 PENNY Cycl. VII. 486/1 Series of increasing terms are certainly divergent. 1858 TODHUNTER Algebra xl. §557 An infinite series in which all the terms are of the same sign is divergent if each term is greater than some assigned finite quantity however small.

2. Math. = DIVERGENT 4.

1795 HUTTON Math. Diet. II. 439/1 Diverging Series, is one whose terms continually increase, or that has the successive sums of its terms diverging, or going off always the farther, from the sum or value of the Series. 1807 — Course Math. II. 300 The series produced may be a converging one, rather than diverging.

Hence di'vergingly adv., in a diverging manner; with divergence; divergently.

'turned different ways', pa. pp. of divertere to DIVERTE. The spelling was in ME. indifferently divers and diverse. The stress was orig. as in OF. on the last syllable, but in conformity with English habits, was at a very early date shifted to the first, though, as with other words from French, both pronunciations long co-existed, esp. in verse. After 'divers' became the established prose form, esp. in sense 3, in which the word is always plural, the final s came, as in plural nouns, to be pronounced as z, and the word to be identical in pronunciation with the plural of diver.]

1822 BESANT All Sorts xviii, Pauperdom, Divesdom, taxes, and all kinds of things.

2. Law. dives costs: costs on the higher scale. Under an old practice of the Court of Chancery, a plaintiff who sued in forma pauperis (and who therefore if he failed in his action could not be condemned to pay the defendant's costs) was sometimes, in case the action was successful, allowed to recover from the defendant only 'pauper costs', which were costs taxed on a low scale; while in other cases he was allowed to recover what by way of contrast were called 'dives costs', taxed on the ordinary scale.

1849 CONOL. Orders in Chancery xl. 5 Such costs shall be taxed as dives costs unless the Court shall otherwise direct. 1885 SIR C. S. C. BOWEN in Law Rep. 14 Q. Bench Div. 870 In 1701 Lord Somers allowed a pauper 'dives costs', that is, costs like other suitors. Ibid. 871.

divest (di'vest, dai-), v. [A refashioning, after L. analogies, of earlier DEVEST from French. OF. devestir, through its later form devestir, gave devest immediately, while its mediæval latinization divestire, rectified to divestire (after ancient L. divellere, divertere, etc.) has given divest, and this, through the general preference for the Latin over the French forms of the prefixes has supplanted devest, except in legal use, where both are found.]

1. Legal dissolution of marriage by a court or other competent body, or according to forms recognized in the country, nation, or tribe.

Formerly and still often (e.g. historically or anthropologically) used in the widest sense; hence, including the formal putting away of, or separation from, a spouse by a heathen or barbarian; the pronouncing a marriage to have been invalid from the beginning owing to fraud, or to legal, canonical, or physical incapacity of the parties, as in the 'divorce' of Henry VIII from Catherine (now called in English Law decree of nullity), and the 'divorce a mensa et thoro' (from bed and board), long the only 'divorce' recognized by English law, but now, since 1857, called 'judicial separation'. But, in strict legal use, now applied in English-speaking countries only to the dissolution by decree of court of what was in itself a legal marriage, upon grounds sanctioned by the law, and upon evidence accepted by the court.

dj- is not an English combination, but is sometimes put to represent the Arabic letter jim, = English j (d3), in Arabic, Turkish, or Berber words, which have come to us through a French channel, or are spelt in imitation of French orthography; e.g. djebel, a mountain or hill, djerid or djereed, a javelin, djin, genii or familiar spirits, djubbah, an outer garment. So far as these come under the scope of this Dictionary, they will be found under J; for djowr, an infidel, see GIAOUR.

(ge)tān, Ger. gethan, getan; OTeut. types dōn, deda, dāno:- dōno:-, from verbal stem dā:- dō:- (appearing also in DEED, DOOM, -DOM), the Germanic representative of the Aryan verb stem dhē:- dhō:-, to place, put, set, lay, in Skr. dhā-, OPers. dā-, Gr. θη- (pres. τίθημι, deriv. sb. θωή a penalty imposed), L. -dēre in abdere to put away, condere to put together, dēdere to lay down, OSlav. děte, děyati, Lith. dėti, Lett. dēt to put, lay.

The vocalization of the Germanic vb., esp. the present stem dō:- beside the Gr. θη- and Slav.-Lith. dē:-, has been variously explained (see e.g. Streitberg Urgerm. Gramm. 329). The pret. deda is generally held to be a reduplicated form corresponding to Skr. dadhāu:- orig. dhedhō*. The 1st p. sing. pres. indic. had originally the m of primitive verbs in -mi, Skr. -mi, Gr. -μι, L. -m: viz. OE. dōm (later dō), OS. dōm (dōn), OHG. tōm, tuom (later tuon). This verb is considered by many philologists to be the source of the formative suffix of the pa. t. of weak verbs in the Germanic languages, including Norse and Gothic; in the latter the plural endings -dēdum, -dēdub, -dēdun, are the forms which the pl. of the pret. deda would have in Gothic.

OE. deviates from the other WGer. langs. in the past dyde, for OS. deda, OHG. teta; the y is now generally explained as a special OE. representation of an Indo-germanic weak vowel. Thence the pl. dydon; the plural corresp. to OS. dādun, modG. thaten, was Anglian dēdon (also dēdon, in Cædmon, etc.). In ME. dyde, dydon were represented by dude, -en (ū), midl. & north. diden, dide, now did, but dēden (with a sing. dēde derived from it like modG. that from pl. thaten) came down in some dialects to 15th c. In the pres. ind., the 2nd and 3rd pers. sing. in OE. had *u*mlaut, dūst, dāst, dēst, dēst, and these forms survived in s.w. till the 15th c.; but ONorthumbrian had, without *u*mlaut, dōas, dōād, dōas, and in ME. the forms dūst, dōih (dōn) are found in north. & midl. from the 12th c. The pa. pple. in OE. is known only with the prefix ge:-, which in ME. remained in the south as ge:-, i:- (Forms with ge:- are found also in the pa. t., and occasionally other parts, which, however, are more properly referred to a derivative vb. OE. gedōn, ME. ido, ydo). The final -n of the pple. was generally dropped in the south in ME., esp. in the forms ydo, ido, whence the ado (s.du:) of modern s.w. dialects.]

•• To bestow, impart, grant, render, give (a thing to a person); to cause to befall or come.

Orig. with dative of the recipient or person affected, and accusative of that which is imparted or caused: e.g. 'it did him credit'. But in later use the dative is largely replaced by to and prepositional object, and then changes places with the verbal object: 'it did credit to his good sense'.

(The primary notion here appears to have been that of putting (or bestowing) something to a person, being closely related to prec. section, in which a person is put to or into something.)

4. To impart to, bring upon (a person, etc.) some affecting quality or condition; to bestow, confer, inflict; to cause by one's action (a person) to have (something). In later use, associated more closely with the notion of performance, as in 6, e.g. to do any one a service = to perform some action that is of service to him.

 To put forth (action or effort of any kind); to perform, accomplish, effect. (Now the leading trans. use.)

Since every kind of action may be viewed as a particular form of doing, the uses of the verb are as numerous as the classes of objects which it may govern. Only the general senses can here be exhibited; the phrases formed by the verb with special substantive objects, are treated under the words concerned; e.g. to do honour, the honours of: see HONOUR.

6. To perform, execute, achieve, carry out, effect, bring to pass. (With an object denoting action.) e.g. to do work, a thing, that, it, what? etc.

 As a Periphrastic Auxiliary of the present and past Indicative, and Imperative. (Formerly sometimes of the Infinitive.)

(For a detailed treatment of this, see 'Das Umschreibende Do in der Neuenglischen Prosa' by Hugo Dietze, Jena, 1895.) As auxiliary of the Indicative (present and past).

Examples of this are found already in OE. (as in MDu., O. & MLG., mod. Ger. dialects). It is more frequent in ME., but became especially frequent after 1500, first as a simple periphrastic form without perceptible difference of sense, in which use it has in the s.w. dialects practically taken the place of the simple form of the verb (e.g. I dú zay for I say, he dú zim for he seems). But in standard English it is now regularly used only where, for the sake of emphasis, or of word position, it is advantageous to have the verb in two words, so that the auxiliary may receive the stress or be separated from the main verb, like the auxiliaries of the perfect and future tenses, to which the periphrastic present and past is exactly parallel in use. Thus Simple Affirmative after certain conjunctive adverbs: 'So quietly did he come that...' (like 'So quietly has he come'). Emphatic: 'He did drink', and 'drink he did (like 'I will go', and go 'I will')'. Interrogative: 'Do you hear?' (like 'Will you hear?'). Negative: 'They do not speak' (like 'They will not speak', 'They have not spoken').

25. In Affirmative sentences.

a. Originally, simply periphrastic, and equivalent to the simple tense. Found in OE., frequent in ME., very frequent 1500-1700, dying out in normal prose in 18th c.; but still retained in s.w. dialects; also as an archaism in liturgical and legal use, and as a metrical resource in verse.

26. In Interrogative sentences.

The periphrastic form with do, did, is now the normal form. Its use allows the pronoun to be placed between the auxiliary and main verb, instead of coming after the latter: e.g. 'Did he recognize her?' instead of 'Recognized he her?'

In monosyllabic verbs, the simple form may still be used; it is always used in be and usually in have, though very recently (esp. in U.S.) we find do you have? did you have?

c.1386 CHAUCER Monk's T. 442 Fader why do ye wepe? c.1450 Cov. Myst. 196 Dude ce hym se? 1549 LATIMER 3rd Serm. bef. Edw. VI (Arb.) 84 Did ye se any grete man? 1557 N.T. What d'y'e call it? 1852 MRS. STOWE Uncle Tom's C. viii. 'Why, Sam, what do you mean?' said Mrs. Shelby, breathless.

27. In Negative sentences.

The periphrasis with do, did, is now the normal form with not. Its use allows the negative to come after the auxiliary, instead of following the principal verb: e.g. 'We did not recognize him' instead of 'We recognized him not'.

The introduction of the periphrastic do not, did not, was connected with the obsolescence of the earlier usage which placed the negative particle first, 'we ne sungen'.

The simple form is still retained with be, have ('do', 'did not have', is colloquial and recent, chiefly in U.S.), and is frequent with monosyllabic words as dare, need, and other verbs it is always possible, and not being the ordinary form has an impressive rhetorical effect.

c.1489 CAXTON Sonnes of Aymon xxii. 472 It is to late to repente me that I dyde not doe. c.1489 — Blanchardyn xlii. 153 Whan ye dyde not knowe hym. 1564 REINALD Rem. (1843) 22. 29. In colloquial speech do not (senses 27, 28), is usually contracted to don't (dɒnt), does not to doesn't (vulgar don't from do not 3rd sing.: see A 2 c. γ.), did not to didn't. The dialectal forms are numerous: Sc. dinna, dinsa, didna, north. Eng. dunno, dunnot.

30. As auxiliary of the Imperative.

a. In the Imperative positive, adding force to entreaty, exhortation, or command (this usually with the pronoun inserted as 'do you go at once!'); in early times, down to c.1600, it was sometimes merely periphrastic.

The main verb is in OE. found both in the Infinitive (a) and the Imperative (β); the Imperative is usual in early ME.; in later use (γ) the forms are indistinguishable, but it is usually viewed as Infinitive, as in 25.

a. c.1000 Aeg. Pr. (Th.) cxviii[5]. 25 Do me æfter pinum wordum wel gecwician [L. vivifica me].

†31. As auxiliary of other parts of the verb. The 16th c. Scottish poets extended the periphrastic use to the infinitive and pples.: thus, to do increas = to increase, done discus = discussed, doand proclame = proclaiming. Traces of this occur elsewhere.

1508 DUNBAR Lament for Makaris 49 He hes done petuously deuour The noble Chaucer, of makaris flour. a.1520 — Thistle & Rose 24 The lark hes done the mirry day proclame. 1513 DOUGLAS Æneis xiii. x. 103 Onto his ceptre thou sall do succed. 1556 LAUDER Tractate 23 No geir sulde do the faultour bye. Ibid. 340 As I afore haue done discus. 1578 *Scot. 1. Fr. Hist. One of a political party which arose in France soon after 1815, 'having for their object and doctrine the establishment and preservation of constitutional government, and the reconciliation of authority and liberty, royalty and national representation.' (Townsend Manual of Dates.)

They were looked upon by members of the two extreme parties as speculative politicians holding a 'doctrine' not within the range of practical politics.

1820 Edin. Rev. XXXIV. 38 (Stanf.) There is at Paris a small set of speculative politicians called doctrinaires. 1834 Spectator 15 Nov. 1086/2 Do not be cajoled by any stupid stories... about the Doctrinaires going out of office on any question of principle. 1848 W. H. KELLY tr. L. Blanc's Hist. Ten Y. II. 296 M. Guizot... was a doctrinaire. But though that political had no political meaning; though it expressed a manner of being, rather than a manner of thinking, still there adhered to it some indescribable tincture of unpopularity which was totally indelible.

2. Hence, One who holds some doctrine or theory which he tries to apply without sufficient regard to practical considerations; a pedantic theorist. (Often applied as a term of reproach by 'practical' men, to those whom they consider talking or writing theorists.)

1831 Edin. Rev. LII. 454 (Stanf.) A system may be the truest possible whilst argued on in vacuo, in the cabinet of a Doctrinaire. 1859 HELPS Friends in C. Ser. II. c. Monroe doctrine (U.S. politics): the name applied (since about 1848) to a principle or series of principles of policy put forward in, or deduced from, the Message of President Monroe to Congress, 2 Dec. 1823.

In this it was declared that 'we should consider any attempt' on the part of the Allied European Powers 'to extend their system to any portion of this hemisphere as dangerous to our peace and safety'; that 'any interposition, for the purpose of oppressing' the recently revolted Spanish-American colonies, 'or controlling in any other manner their destiny, by any European Power' would be viewed 'as the manifestation of an unfriendly disposition towards the United States'; and that 'the American continents should no longer be subjects for any new European colonial settlement'.

1848 I. E. HOLMES in Congress. Globe 29 Apr. 711 The President [Polk] had taken the opportunity of reiterating a doctrine which was said to be the doctrine of Mr. Monroe. 1858 Sun (Balt.) 30 Oct. doddered ('dɒdəd), ppl. a. [app. originally a deriv. of DOD v.¹ to poll or take the top off (a tree).]

It is not clear whether it was a contaminated form of DODDED 'polled', or a mistaken spelling of DODDARD sb., 'doddered oak' for 'doddard oak' (cf. pollard willow); while the matter is complicated by the earlier use of dottard or dottard (see DOTTARD 2) in the same sense. In later use there has been unintelligent association with DODDER sb., and perhaps with DODDER v., and its cognates. It is doubtful whether senses 2 and 3 belong originally to this word.]

1. A word conventionally used (after Dryden) as an attribute of old oaks (rarely other trees); app. originally meaning: Having lost the top or branches, esp. through age and decay; hence, remaining as a decayed stump. Johnson explained it as 'Overgrown with dodder: covered with supercrescent plants'; and this explanation, which was manifestly erroneous, since neither dodder nor any plant like it grows upon trees, has been repeated in the dictionaries, and has influenced literary usage, in which there is often a vague notion of some kind of parasitical accretion accompanying or causing decay.

1. The days about the time of the heliacal rising of the Dog-star; noted from ancient times as the hottest and most unwholesome period of the year.

They have been variously calculated, as depending on the greater dog-star (Sirius) or the lesser dog-star (Procyon); on the heliacal, or (by some in modern times) the cosmical rising of either of these (both of which also differ in different latitudes); and as preceding, following, or both preceding and following, one of these epochs; and their duration has been variously reckoned at from 30 to 54 days. In the latitude of Greenwich, the cosmical rising of Procyon now takes place about July 27, that of Sirius about Aug. 11; in Mediterranean latitudes, the former is somewhat later, the latter earlier. The heliacal rising is some days later than the cosmical; and all the phenomena now take place later in the year than in ancient times, owing to the precession of the equinoxes. Thus very different dates have been assigned for the dog-days, their beginning ranging from July 3 to Aug. 15. In current almanacs they are said to begin July 3 and end Aug. 11 (i.e. to be the 40 days preceding the cosmical rising of Sirius).

The name (Gr. ῥῆγας κυνίδες, Lat. dies caniculares) arose from the pernicious qualities of the season being attributed to the 'influence' of the Dog-star; but it has long been popularly associated with the belief that at this season dogs are most apt to run mad; see CANICULAR 1, quot. 1601.

dogger¹ ('dɒgə(r)). [Anglo-Fr. and ME. doggere; also in Du. and LG. from 15th c. Origin uncertain.

The Du. word is evidently related to the obscure MDu. dogge, in phr. ten dogge varen to go to the cod-fishing; cf. also Kilian, 'dogge-boot cymba major'; Hexham, 'Dogge-boot, Great-bark'. Akin to dogge or dogger is the Icel. dugga in same sense; with the statement cited by Vigfusson that thirty English fiski-duggur came fishing about Iceland in 1413, cf. our quot. 1491 and the reference there given. The Dogger-bank is generally supposed to be named either from this word or MDu. dogger trawler; cf. Kilian, 'dogger funda, sacculus, reticulum'; Hexham, 'Dogger, Fisher's Boat'; also 'Sling or casting net, also Satchell.')

1. A two-masted fishing vessel with bluff bows, somewhat resembling a ketch, used in the North Sea deep sea fisheries: formerly applied to English craft as well as those of other nations, but now practically restricted to Dutch fishing vessels (though out of use in Holland itself).

The dōl, dole form survived in English till the 16th c., and its normal representative in modern English is dool; but the word became to a great extent obsolete by 1600, and some of its modern revivers have preferred the ME. spelling dole. It has always been retained in Sc., where it is now regularly (dɔ:l, dyl:l), variously spelt dool, duil, dule; dole also occurred in English from 14th to 16th c., and is used in preference to dole or dool by some modern poets. In addition to these derivatives from OF., the forms duyel, dueyl, deuel, deuil, imitating later French types, occur from Caxton onwards.]

2. The uniform jacket of a hussar, worn like a cape with the sleeves hanging loose.

1883 Standard 7 Mar. 5 (Stanf.) His Royal Highness has presented the whole of the Blücher Hussars with dolmans, which had hitherto only been worn by the Royal and Guard Regiments of Hussars.

3. A kind of mantle with cape-like appendages instead of sleeves, worn by women.

1872 Punch 26 Oct. 171/2 The 'dolman' is a loose jacket, with large hanging sleeves, that can be assumed or left loose at pleasure. 1876 OUIDA Winter City iii. 38 Perhaps it lurked in the black sable fur of her dolman.

1934 C. M. BROWN et al. Clothing Constr. (ed. 2) xxxvi. 278 The dolman sleeve is usually set into a very low armseye. 1939 M. B. PICKEN Lang. Fashion 43/2 Cap-like wrap or coat with the dolman sleeve. 1941 Amer. Speech XVI. 68/1 Summer sleeves show that Dolmans — the very draped and opulent sleeves — are back.

Hence dolma'nette, a small or short dolman. 1883 Glasgow Weekly Her. 21 Apr. 8/4 French Pattern Dolmans, New Dolmanettes, Jackets, etc.

dolmen ('dɒlmən). [a. mod.F. dolmen (dolmin Latour d'Auvergne, 1796, dolmine Le Grand d'Aussy 1798, dolmen, Mémoires de l'Académie Celtique 1807).

Given by Legonidec 1821 as Breton = 'monument in form of an altar or table'; and usually explained as f. Breton taol = taol, la tabula, table + mean, men stone. But the Breton compound of these words would be taolten or tolten, and the d and m of dolmen are not thus satisfactorily accounted for. Borlase, Antiq. Cornwall (1754) called these structures cromlechs, but gave tolmen, lit. 'hole of stone', as the current Cornish name for those enormous blocks found in Cornwall and Scilly naturally poised upon two supporting points, so as to leave a 'hole' or aperture beneath, through which a man or beast may pass. There is reason to think that this is the word inaccurately reproduced by Latour d'Auvergne as dolmin, and misapplied by him and succeeding French archaeologists to the cromlechs.]

The French name, used by some English authors, for a CROMLECH, a prehistoric structure, consisting of a large flattish stone supported upon two or more smaller upright stones.

1859 JEPHSON Brittany viii. 108 The dolmen appeared to me to consist of a chamber formed by gigantic unhewn granite blocks placed upon smaller ones. 1865 LUBBOCK Preh. Times v. (1869) 104 All over Europe... we find relics of prehistoric times... dolmens or stone chambers. 1871 TYLOR Prim. Cult. I. 55 Megalithic structures, menhirs, cromlechs, dolmens. 1880 JEFFERIES Gr. Ferne F. 150 He crawled right under the table-stone of the dolmen.

Hence dol'menic a. (nonce-wd.), of or belonging to dolmens, or to the race who constructed them.

1882 tr. N. Joly's Man bef. Metals I. vi. 158 The ethnological character... of the supposed dolmenic people.

|| dolmuş, dolmush ('dɒlmʃ(j)uːʃ). [Turkish dolmuş a vehicle or boat which departs only when all the seats are taken, f. dolmuş filled.] A shared form of public transport (in Turkey), esp. a taxi. Also attrib.

1957 I. ORGA You Traveller in Turkey ii. 24 Dolmuş means shared taxi... It's cheaper to travel dolmuş. 1962 J. FLEMING When I grew Rich iii. 44 Driving about all over Istanbul... in a packed dolmuş (or shared taxi). Ibid. v. 87 They embarked in a dolmuş rowing-boat, with two other people waiting to be rowed across. 1967 J. THARBONE Diamonds Bid xii. 108 We caught a dolmush, a shared taxi, outside the New Mosque.

dolomite ('dɒləmaɪt), sb. Min. [In F. dolomie, dolomite, named 1794 after M. Dolomieu, a French geologist and mineralogist: see -ITE.] A native double carbonate of lime and magnesia, occurring crystalline, and in granular masses, white or coloured, called dolomite marble; a rock consisting essentially of this mineral.

1794 KIRWAN Min. I. 111 Common Dolomite. 1799 TENNANT in Phil. Trans. LXXXIX. 309 The kind of marble which had been called Dolomite, from M. Dolomieu, who first remarked its peculiarity in dissolving slowly. 1862 Chamberl' Encycl. s.v. Dolomite, The new houses of Parliament are built of dolomite. 1876 PAGE *Adv. Text-b. dom, obs. f. DOOM, DUMB; var. f. DOUM.

-dom, suffix. [OE. -dōm = OS. -dōm, MDu. -doem, Du. -dom, OHG., MHG. -tuom, G. -tum.] Abstract suffix of state, which has grown out of an independent sb., orig. putting, setting, position, statute, OHG. tuom, position, condition, dignity, in OE. dōm, statute, judgement, jurisdiction, f. stem dō- of do v. + abstract suffix -moz, OE. -m, as in hel-m, sea-m, strea-m, etc. Frequent already in OE. as a suffix to sbs. and adjs., as biscopdōm the dignity of a bishop, cyningdōm, cynedōm, royal or kingly dominion, kingdom, ealdordōm the position or jurisdiction of an elder or lord; peowdōm, the condition of a peow or slave; fréodōm, háligdōm, wisdōm the condition or fact of being free, holy, or wise. The number of these derivatives has increased in later times, and -dom is now a living suffix, freely employed to form nonce-derivatives, not only with the sense of 'condition, state, dignity', but also with that of 'domain, realm' (fig.). See in their alphabetical places alderdom, Anglo-Saxondom, boredom, Christendom, cuckoldom, dukedom, earldom, freedom, kingdom, martyrdom, papedom, sheriffdom, thraldom, wisdome, etc. Examples of nonce-words appear in the quotations.

domage, -eable, -eous, obs. ff. DAMAGE, etc.

1502 Ord. Crysten Men (W. de W. 1506) iv. xxi. 269 The maner of restytucyon ought to haue conformyte to the maner of the domager.

domain (də'mein, dəu-), sb. Also 5 domayne, 7 -aine. [a. mod.F. domaine (1611 in Cotgr.), for earlier F. demeine, OF. demeine; — L. dominium, in med.L. = 'proprietas, quod ad dominum spectat', subst. use of dominicus of or belonging to a lord, of the nature of private property, proper, own. See DEMESNE, which is another form of this word.

OF. domeine, demeine, did not come down from cl. L. dominium lordship, ownership, property, for that could have given only an OF. domein, demein; it is supposed that cl. L. dominium passed in Rom. and OF. through the stages domenio*, domeniē, domeine; cf. canonicum, canonio*, canoniē, canoine, chanoine. But, in the intermediate stage, the form of the word naturally suggested its identity with cl. L. dominium, which consequently appears, beside the original dominium, as the Latin equivalent in mediaeval documents; the latter have also domanium formed on the vernacular. The o was in OF. regularly weakened to e, demeine, whence late Afr. & Eng. demesne; in domaine the e is restored after L.; in French, domaine is now (since c 1610) used in all senses; but in Eng., demesne has been traditionally retained in the legal use, and in senses immediately derived from it, though the two forms overlap.]

2. a. eminent domain: ultimate or supreme lordship; the superiority or lordship of the sovereign power over all the property in the state, in accordance with which it is entitled to appropriate by constitutional methods any part required for the public advantage, compensation being given to the owner. A term chiefly used in International Law, and in the Law of the United States of America.

[1625 GROTIUS De Jure B. et P. i. iii. §6 Dominium eminens, quod civitas habet in cives et res civium, ad usum publicum.] 1850 LONGF. Ladder St. Augustine vi. If we would gain In the bright fields of fair renown The right of eminent domain. 1894 Harvard Law Rev. VIII. 237 The name Eminent Domain comes from Grotius, and the subject is a prominent one with European writers on public law; but treaties on it do not exist outside of the United States. The topic develops here because it is a branch of our system of Constitutional Law. The first treatise was by H. E. Mills of St. Louis in 1879. (See also EMINENT 5.)

b. direct domain, domain of use, translation of the French law-phrases domaine direct the ownership or right of the lord, and domain utile the right of use on the part of a lessee, as used in the law of Lower Canada.

3. a. A heritable property; estate or territory held in possession; lands; dominions; = DEMESNE 3–5.

1601 HOLLAND Pliny xiii. iii. (R.). These are in the nature of a domain and inheritance, and fall to the next heir in succession. 1782 PRIESTLEY *Corrupt. b. Logic. The breadth, extension, circuit, or sphere of a notion.

c. Math. 'In the theory of Functions, the portion of the z -plane within a circle which just does not include a singular point is called the domain of its centre' (H. T. Gerrans).

1893 FORSYTH The Functions 55 If the whole of the domain of b be not included in that of a .

d. Math. An algebraic system with two binary operations defined by postulates stronger than those for a ring but weaker than those for a field; esp. (more fully integral domain), a commutative ring in which the cancellation law holds for multiplication of non-zero elements and (with most writers) which has a unit element for multiplication.

1896 BULL. Amer. Math. Soc. III. 102 The idea of the adjunction of its root[s]... to the totality of numbers heretofore in use, viz., the rational numbers, is now developed, and the properties of rational functions of the elements of this new 'domain'... are taken up. 1904 F. CAJORY Theory of Equations xiii. 134 A set of numbers is called a domain of rationality or simply a domain, when the sums, differences, products, and quotients of any numbers in the set (excluding only the quotients obtained through division by 0) always yield as results numbers belonging to the set. All rational numbers... constitute such a domain. 1937 A. A. ALBERT Mod. Higher Algebra ii. 27 The most important type of integral domain is the field. 1941 BIRKHOFF & MACLANE Surv. Mod. Algebra iv. 97 By a unique factorization domain (sometimes called a 'Gaussian domain') is meant an integral domain in which (i) any element not a unit can be factored into primes, (ii) this factorization is unique to within order and unit factors. 1958 ZARISKI & SAMUEL Commutative Algebra I. i. 22 An important class of unique factorization domains is given by the so-called euclidean domains or rings admitting a division algorithm. 1965 J. J. ROTHMAN Theory of Groups iv. 66 A domain is a commutative ring with unit that has no divisors of zero.

e. Math. The set of values that an independent variable of a function can take; the graphical representation of this set; the set comprising all the first elements of the ordered pairs constituting some given set.

1902 ENCYCL. BRIT. XXVIII. 545/2 The idea of a 'variable' is that of a number to which we may assign at pleasure any of the values which constitute a definite aggregate, called the 'domain' of the variable. 1914 A. R. FORSYTH Theory of Functions of Two Complex Variables iii. 57 A restricted portion of a field of variation is called a domain, the range of a domain being usually indicated by analytical relations. 1937 MITCHELL & BELZ Elem. Math. Analysis I. i. 60 The parts of the plane in which N can lie are commonly called the domain of N and the same word is used for the corresponding aggregate of pairs of values of x, y which correspond to N . 1955 D. A. QUADLING Math. Analysis iii. 14 A function which is defined by means of a formula may have its domain restricted by the character of the formula itself... The domain of the function $1/x$ cannot include the number 0. 1967 M. R. KINSOLVING Set Theory & Number Systems ii. 21 One might say that the domain of R is the set of all first elements appearing in the pairs (a, b) constituting R .

f. Logic. The class of all terms that bear a given relation to any term (see quot. 1903).

1903 B. RUSSELL Princ. Math. I. ix. 97 All referents with respect to a given relation form a class. It follows... that all relate also form a class. These two classes I shall call respectively the domain and the converse domain of the relation; the logical sum of the two I shall call the field of the relation. Ibid. 98 If paternity be the relation, fathers form its domain, children its converse domain, and fathers and children together its field. 1955 A. N. PRIOR Formal Logic iii. iii. 277 Both the domain and the converse domain of the null relation are the null class.

g. Math. An open connected set of at least one point.

1906 W. H. & G. C. YOUNG Theory of Sets of Points ix. 178 The set of all the points inside a triangle is called a triangular domain, or the interior of the triangle, and is a simple case of a region. Ibid. The points of a domain always form an open set. 1957 E. T. COPSON Introd. Theory of Functions of Complex Variable (rev. ed.) ii. 15 If we add to a domain its limiting points, the resulting set is called a closed region.

h. Physics. In ferromagnetic materials, a region which behaves as an elementary magnet, all the atoms or ions in a region having the axes of their permanent magnetic moments aligned in the same direction. Also attrib.

1926 E. C. STONER Magnetism & Atomic Structure xiii. 295 The size of the domains may be much smaller than the size of the actual crystalline 'grains'. 1944 Electronic Engin. XVII. 144/3 The assumption of a molecular field, and the sub-division of a ferromagnetic into spontaneously saturated domains, form the foundation of the modern domain theory of ferromagnetism. 1945 Rev. Mod. Physics XVII. 15 In a demagnetized specimen... the directions of magnetization of the individual domains are distributed at random among various possible directions. 1966 PHILLIPS & WILLIAMS Inorg. Chem. II. xix. 26 Ferromagnetic substances commonly exhibit a domain structure, in which each domain is permanently magnetized. 1966 CAREY & ISAAC Magnetic Domains i. 13 In such a case regions now exist in the crystal where the direction of the magnetization changes from one domain to the next; these regions are called domain boundaries or domain walls.

i. Linguistics. (See quot.)

1933 BLOOMFIELD Lang. xv. 247 The substitute replaces only forms of a certain class, which we may call the domain of the substitute. 1942 Language XVIII. 14 A suprasegmental phone has a Domain, defined as the type of sequence of segmental phones which it covers. 1968 P. M. POSTAL Aspects Phonol. Theory iii. 41 Each rule 'realizing' morphophonemic structures as phonemic ones must be defined exclusively on a domain consisting of strings of morphons.

Domesday ('dɒmzdeɪ, 'dʊmzdeɪ). [f. dómes genitive of dóm DOOM + DAY.] A Middle English spelling of DOOMSDAY, day of judgement, now commonly used as a historical term, in the following:

Domesday Book, colloquially Domesday: the name applied, from the 12th c., to the record of the Great Inquisition or Survey of the lands of England, their extent, value, ownership, and liabilities, made by order of William the Conqueror in 1086. Extended to abstracts based upon that record, such as the Exon Domesday.

[The name appears to have been derived directly from Domesday the Day of the Last Judgement, and Domesday Book the Book by which all men would be judged. It originated as a popular appellation (see Dial. de Scacc.), given to the Book as being a final and conclusive authority on all matters on which it had to be referred to.]

1178 Dial. de Scaccario I. xvi. 7. Biol. [tr. G. dominierend (Mendel 1866, Versuche über Pflanzenhybriden in Verh. d. Naturforsch. Ver., Brünn 1865 IV. 10).] Of a hereditary character: appearing to the exclusion of another character in a heterozygous organism containing alleles for them both. Hence of an allele or gene: expressed to the exclusion of another allelic gene. Const. to, over.

1900 W. BATESON in Jrnl. R. Hort. Soc. XXV. 58 In the case of each pair of characters there is thus one which in the first cross prevails to the exclusion of the other. This prevailing character Mendel calls the dominant character, the other being the recessive character. 1925 C. C. HURST Exper. in Genetics 246 In each pair, when crossed, Mendel found the first-named character dominant over the other. 1925 T. H. MORGAN Evol. & Genetics 151 The genes that arise by mutation have been found to be largely recessive to the genes already present in the original type which are said, therefore, to be dominant to the new genes. 1953 W. BRAUN Bacterial Genetics i. 9 When a gene derived from one parent differs from the corresponding gene contributed by the other parent, the effect of only one of the two genes may dominate, covering up the detectable effects of the other. Such genes are called dominant. 1965 BELL & COOMBE tr. Strasburger's Textbk. Bot. (new ed.) II. ii. 332 It is also possible for one gene to suppress the functioning of the other, i.e. one is dominant while its allele is recessive.

8. Ecology. Designating or pertaining to the predominant species in a plant community.

1923 [see DOMINANCE 3]. 1950 Jrnl. Ecol. XXXVIII. 108 Plant associations have been classified according to the 'dominant' species of the vegetation; that is, those which occur in a high proportion of quadrats.

9. dominant wavelength, the wavelength or hue of a colour that determines the other colours with which it will match.

1913 W. DE W. ABNEY Res. Colour Vision 415/2 Dominant wave-lengths. 1957 R. W. G. HUNT Reproduction of Colour viii. 79 Subjective Term: Hue. Objective Term: Dominant Wave-length. Ibid. 193 Where θ is a correlate of the hue (in terms of dominant wavelength, for instance).

3. Biol. A dominant allele or character; an individual in which a particular dominant allele is expressed.

1900 W. BATESON in Jrnl. R. Hort. Soc. XXV. 58 In this generation the numerical proportion of dominants to recessives is . . . as three to one. 1905 R. C. PUNNETT Mendelism 10 There are dominants which breed to the dominant character, and are therefore pure. 1913 Oxf. Univ. Gaz. 4 June 948/2 Hypopolimnas . . . dubius, Beauv., proved to be a Mendelian dominant, and H. anthedon, Boisd., recessive. 1930 R. A. FISHER Genet. Theory Nat. Selection iii. 50 If . . . the mutant genes are dominant just as often as they are recessive, selection will be far more severe in eliminating the disadvantageous dominants than in eliminating the disadvantageous recessives. 1965 H. E. SUTTON Introd. Human Genetics xvii. 213 Dominants that cannot be transmitted therefore cannot be distinguished from environmentally induced traits. 1967 Listener 6 Apr. 450/2 A predisposition towards depression is probably an inherited characteristic—biologically inherited, that is, as a Mendelian dominant, and not just acquired from the family environment.

4. Ecology. The chief constituent of a plant community.

1913 TANSLEY & ADAMSON in Jrnl. Ecology I. 83 It is difficult to resist the conclusion that beech is the natural dominant in the magnificent series of woods. 1916 [see ASSOCIATION 12]. 1933 Forestry VII. 122 There is little difference between the various stem-classes—dominants, co-dominants, and sub-dominants—as regards the distribution of form-classes. 1938 WEAVER & CLEMENTS Plant Ecol. (ed. 2) iv. 91 The visible unity of the climax is due primarily to the dominants or controlling species.

Hence 'dominantly adv.', in a dominating way; so as to dominate or sway.

Donatist ('dɒnəɪst, 'dɒn-). Ecll. Hist. [ad. med.L. Dōnātista, f. Dōnātus: see below.] One of a sect of Christians which arose in North Africa in the year 311, out of a dispute about the election of Cæcilian as bishop of Carthage, in place of whom they elected Majorinus; they maintained that their own party was the only true and pure church, and that the baptisms and ordinations of others were invalid.

It is uncertain whether the name was derived from Donatus of Casæ Nigræ, a leading supporter of Majorinus, or from Donatus the Great, who succeeded Majorinus as bishop of Carthage.

1460 Medulla in Cath. Angl. 104 note, Donatista, a donatiste [printed donatrice]: quedam heresis. 1549 LATIMER 4th Serm. bef. Edu. VI. (Arb.) 116 An other kynde of poysoned heretikes, that were called Donatistes. 1645 PAGITT Heresiogr. (1661) 68 The Separatists or Brownists agree in many things with the Donatists, who confined the holy Catholick Church to a corner of Africa, as the Brownists do confine the Church of God to their conventicles. 1873 ROBERTSON Hist. Chr. Ch. (1874) I. 176 Note, At a later time, rebaptism of proselytes was practised by the Donatists.

FITZGERALD Midsummer Malice ii. 32, I expect he made a pass at you. He still thinks it is the done thing in the theatre.

†2. There was in ME. a curious use of done, in which it was nearly synonymous with kin = 'kind of': thus many done, many kinds of, what done, 'what-kin', what sort of. At length, it took, like kin, a genitival s: thus, what-dones, what dons = 'whatkins', cujus generis, of what kind of. Obs.

[There is a certain parallelism between this and the MDu. use of the inf. doen (as of MLG. dōn, dōnt, MHG. tuon), which has the sense-development 'doing, action, manner of doing, way of acting or being, manner, nature, wise, kind'. But in Eng. the stages by which the sense 'kind' was reached are less clear.]

donk, dial. form of DANK.

donkey ('dɒŋki). Also 8–9 donky. [A recent word, app. of dialect or slang origin.]

As the original pronunciation apparently rimed with monkey (whence the spelling), suggestions have been made that the word is a deriv. of dun adj. (cf. duncock hedge-sparrow), or, more probably, a familiar form of Duncan (cf. the other colloquial appellations, Dicky, Neddy).]

1. a. A familiar name for the ass. (Now in general use, exc. in scriptural or solemn language, and in Natural History.)

1785 GROSE Dict. Vulg. Tongue, Donkey or Donkey Dick, a he or Jack-ass. 1793 Gentl. Mag. II. 1083 A Donky, or a Dicky, An ass. Essex and Suffolk. 1804 MRS. BARBAULD Wks. (1825) II. 113, I cannot tell whether my orthography is right, but a donky is the monture in high fashion here [Tunbridge Wells]. 1819 WOLCOTT (P. Pindar) Wks. (1830) 116 Phae, thou art mounted on a Neddy; Or in the London phrase, thou Devonshire monkey, Thy Pegasus is nothing but a donkey. 1838 J. L. STEPHENS Trav. Greece, etc. (1839) 37/1 Seven camels and the donkey were stowed in the bottom of the boat. 1859 SALA Tw. round Clock (1861) 45 Costermongers' 'shallows', drawn by woe-begone donkies.

b. Colloq. phrases: (a penny, etc., more and) up goes the donkey, used with allusion to the cry of a travelling showman (see quot. 1889); to talk the hind leg(s) off a donkey (see TALK v.).

1841 Punch I. 41/2 The report of Sir John Pullon, 'as to the possibility of elevating an ass to the head of the poll by bribery and corruption' is perfectly correct, provided there is no abatement in the price. Let him canvass again, and . . . if he will only stand 'one penny more, up goes the donkey!' 1889 BARRÈRE & LELAND Dict. Slang (1897) 304/2 'Three more and up goes the donkey', that is, three pennies more and the donkey will go up the ladder. This phrase, used by mountebanks to denote that the performance will begin when the sum required is complete, is often said mockingly to a braggart to imply disbelief. 1913 M. BEEROHM Let. 11 Mar. (1964) 222 They earnestly hope to raise the sum of £500; after which 'up goes the donkey', I suppose. 1970 Brewer's Dict. Phr. & Fable 336/2 Two more and up goes the donkey, an old cry at fairs, the showman having promised his credulous hearers that as soon as enough pennies are collected his donkey will balance himself on the top of a pole or ladder.

2. transf. a. A stupid or silly person.

1840 THACKERAY Shabby Genteel Story ix, 'What a blubbering, arthurdonkey' said Cinqbars. 1862 MISS YONGE C'est Kate xii. (1864) 212 You little donkey, you'll be off. 1878 Mrs. H. Wood Pomeroy Abb. I. 254 What a donkey he must be.

door (dɔə(r)). Forms: 1 duru, 2-5 (Sc. 4-9) dure, 4-6 durr(e, 4-7 dur, (5 duyrr), 6 Sc. duir(e, dwr, dourre; also 1-5 dor, 3-7 dore, (4 doer, 5 doyre, 6 dower), 6-7 doore, 7- door; also 1 dyr, 2-3 dyre. [OE. duru, fem. u-stem, not found elsewhere in Teut., but from the same base dur-, as the equivalent words in the other langs.: cf. OHG. turi, an orig. plural, which became a fem. sing., MHG. tur, Ger. thür(e, ODU. duri pl. (MDU. döre, dore, Du. deur fem. sing.), OS. duri, ON. dyrr fem. pl. (and n.), Sw. dörr f., Da. dör; also Goth. daurōns pl. weak fem. OE. had also dor neut., pl. doru, large door, gate = Goth. daur, OS. dor, OHG. tor, Ger. thor gate. The same stem dhur-, dhwār- appears in Skr. dūr, dwār, Gr. θύρα, L. fores. The two OE. types duru, and dor appear to have been mixed in ME., where, beside dure and dor, are also found dur and dore. Dore prevailed in 16th c., and is found as late as 1684; door appeared in 16th c., and at length supplanted dore in writing, though now pronounced like the latter.

The spelling door points to an earlier pronunciation with ū or ü from ME. clōse, which is further attested by Sc. dure (also in Cath. Angl. 1483), and is considered by Luick as a northern lengthening of OE. u. The current pronunciation may be a retention of that evidenced for 16th c. dore by quot. 1593 in 1 f; but it may also be a more recent modification of (dus(r)), as in the case of floor, and vulgar pronunciations of moor, poor, as more, pore.]

dopa ('dɒpə). Chem. and Biochem. Also DOPA. [a. G. dopa (B. Bloch 1917, in Arch. f. Dermatol. und Syphilis CXXIV. 132), f. the initial letters of the formative elements of dioxyphenylalanine, a former name of the compound.]

3,4-Dihydroxyphenylalanine, C₉H₁₁NO₄, a crystalline amino-acid which occurs naturally (not as a constituent of proteins) and is used in the treatment of Parkinsonism; in man it is a precursor of noradrenaline and of melanin, being formed by the oxidation of tyrosine in the nerves and adrenal medulla.

1917 Jnl. Chem. Soc. CXII. i. 675 When a frozen section of... skin is treated with a 1% solution of 3,4-dihydroxyphenylalanine (termed 'dopa'), oxidation and condensation occur with the formation of a pigment (dopamelanin) owing to the action of an enzyme, dopaoxydase. 1923 Nature 3 Nov. 675/1 The presence of 'dopa' (3,4-dihydroxyphenylalanine) in the cocoons of night-butterflies and sawflies causes spontaneous formation of melanin when water is admitted. 1956 Ibid. 3 Mar. 430/2 The mechanism of formation of melanin pigments in insects may be as follows: Phenylalanine → tyrosine → dopa → dopaquinone... → dopachrome, [etc.]. 1962 H. BURN Drugs, Med. & Man xi. 115 There are... substances which can pass through the blood-brain barrier... easily. One of these is the substance out of which noradrenaline is made. It is called dihydroxyphenylalanine, and is known as dopa for short. 1968 J. W. T. DICKERSON in Davison & Dobbing Appl. Neurochem. ii. 61 The conversion of tyrosine to DOPA is probably mainly a non-enzymic one. 1970 Nature 4 Apr. 21/1 During the past decade a new approach to Parkinsonism has evolved, culminating in the introduction of L-dopa. 1970 Daily Tel. 8 Sept. 3/3 General practitioners in the London postal area can now prescribe L-Dopa for patients with Parkinson's disease.

dopamine ('dɒpəmi:n). Biochem. [f. DOPA + AMINE.] The immediate precursor of noradrenaline in the body, found esp. in nervous and peripheral tissue and formed by decarboxylation of dopa; 3,4-dihydroxy phenylethylamine, C₈H₁₁NO₂.

1959 SENOH & WITKOP in Jnl. Amer. Chem. Soc. LXXXI. 6222/1 This investigation concerns itself with related hydroxylation mechanisms of 3,4-dihydroxyphenethylamine ('dopamine'), a biogenic amine of key importance in metabolism. 1962 H. BURN Drugs, Med. & Man xi. 115 When dopa enters the brain the substance dopamine is... formed. 1965 New Scientist 18 Mar. 719/1 Three of the key monoamines are noradrenaline, dopamine and 5-hydroxytryptamine. 1969 New Scientist 30 Oct. 234/2 It is thought that if dopamine is absent, there is no way of checking the excitatory action of the ACh in the caudate nucleus, and that this... results in tremor and rigidity of the muscles. 1971 Nature 7 May 54/1 The principal biochemical defect associated with Parkinsonism is a marked decrease in the dopamine and serotonin content of the brain.

dopant ('dɒpənt). [f. DOP(E v. + -ANT¹.)] The substance used in doping a semiconductor.

1963 SEIDMAN & MARSHALL Semiconductor Fund. vi. 86 The melt consists of intrinsic polycrystalline germanium or silicon mixed with suitable dopants such as phosphorus, which produces an n-type melt, or gallium, which produces a p-type melt. 1969 New Scientist 13 Mar. 569/2 The concentrations... of dopants used during the fabrication of the circuit. 1970 Physics Bull. Apr. 146/2 The electrical role of implanted dopants in semiconductors.

dopchick, -en, obs. or dial. = DABCHICK.

dope (dɒp), sb. [app. a. Du. doop dipping, sauce, etc., f. doopen to dip.]

Woman's Guide Socialism* I. 218 Boycotting the Churches as mere contrivances for doping the workers into submission to Capitalism.

b. intr. To take or be addicted to drugs.

1909 in Cent. Dict. Suppl. 1926 N. LUCAS London & its Criminals xvii. 253 Doping is so prevalent in the East that the traffic in drugs appeals naturally to the Eastern crook. 1933 D. L. SAYERS Murder must Advertise v. 85 Did he dope?

2. To treat with an adulterant, etc.; to 'doctor'.

1898 Let. in Congress. Rec. App. 223/1 They will run their flutter mills and mixers, and dope the flour to suit themselves. 1906 in Asher & Heal Send no Money (1942) 95 You would like to know just where you are at before you 'dope' that kind of stock with a strange mixture. 1913 Sunday Times (Trenton, N.J.) 2 Mar. 1 Alternative offered to the water drinkers of Trenton: Typhoid if the water isn't 'doped' with hypochlorite of lime; an itch if it is.

b. Electr. To add an impurity to (a semiconductor) to produce a desired electrical characteristic.

1955 F. E. TERMAN Electronic & Radio Engin. (ed. 4) xxi. 753 The degree of doping is commonly expressed in terms of the conductivity (or resistivity) of the resulting material. 1956 L. P. HUNTER Handbk. Semiconductor Electronics vii. 7 The melt is doped with a donor (arsenic) so as to produce a low-resistivity N-type emitter. Ibid. vi. 26 A uniformly doped crystal will be grown. 1962 SIMPSON & RICHARDS Junction Transistors iii. 43 The distance that the barrier extends into the semiconductor is also smaller in the case of a heavily doped semiconductor. 1970 Sci. Amer. Feb. 22/3 By suitable masking and 'doping' techniques, which selectively altered the electrical behavior of small regions, several score transistors could be created on each wafer.

3. To smear, daub; spec. to apply 'dope' to (the outer fabric of an aeroplane or the like).

1868 Putnam's Mag. II. 363 With their snow-shoes thoroughly 'doped', the crowd resort to some suitable place for the contest, which begins with a grand dash. 1902 Dialect Notes II. 233 Dope, v. tr. 1. Doppler ('dɒplə(r)). Also doppler. The name of C. J. Doppler (1803–53), Austrian mathematician and physicist, used attrib. or in the possessive to designate an effect first explained by him in 1842 (in Abh. d. k. böhm. Ges. d. Wiss. (1843) 5th ser. II. 465–82) and other phenomena related to it or caused by it, as Doppler broadening (of spectral lines), Doppler's principle; Doppler effect, the effect on sound, light, or other waves of relative motion between the source of the waves and the observer: the observed frequency of the waves is higher or lower than the emitted frequency according as the source (or the observer) is moving towards or away from the observer (or the source); Doppler shift, the change of the frequency resulting from the Doppler effect. Also in equipment or procedures utilizing the Doppler effect, as Doppler navigation, radar.

1871 E. ATKINSON tr. Gaol's Physics (ed. 5) v. i. 165 When a sounding body approaches the ear, the tone perceived is somewhat higher than the true one; but if the source of sound recedes...the tone perceived is lower. The truth of this, which is known as Doppler's principle, will be apparent from the following considerations. 1905 E. C. C. BALY Spectroscopy xii. 382 In order to see if the rapidly moving particles in the streamers caused any displacement in the position of the lines in the spectrum on what is known as the Doppler effect. 1926 H.
