Isotopes are often indicated by a superior number, indicating the atomic mass, to the right of the symbol for the element; as in: U^{235}, meaning the uranium isotope of atomic mass 235.

COMPOUNDS

Compounds are represented by combinations of the symbols of their constituent elements, with an inferior number to the right of each symbol indicating the number of atoms of the element entering into the compound (number 1 is, however, omitted). Thus, in some simple cases, NaCl (sodium chloride, or common salt) is a compound containing one atom of sodium and one of chlorine, H_2O (water) contains two atoms of hydrogen and one of oxygen, H_2O_2 (hydrogen peroxide, or common peroxide) contains two atoms each of hydrogen and oxygen. A molecule may also consist entirely of atoms of a single element, as O_3 (ozone), which consists of three atoms of oxygen. Other symbols used in the formulas of molecules and compounds are:

- 1. denoting free radicals; as in: CH_3· (methyl); C_6H_5· (phenyl). 2. denoting water of crystallization (or hydration); as in: $Na_2CO_3 \cdot 10H_2O$ (washing soda).

( ) denoting a radical within a compound; as in: $(C_2H_5)_2O$ (ether).

[ ] denoting a complex grouping in a coordination formula; as in: $[Co(NH_3)_6]Cl_3$, indicating a complex molecule containing a complex cation, made up of one atom of cobalt and six molecules of ammonia, which as a unit does not possess properties characteristic of either constituent, and three chlorine atoms which maintain their characteristic properties.

1, 2, 3, etc. (before a symbol or formula) denoting a multiplication of the symbol or formula; as in: 3H, indicating three atoms of hydrogen; $6H_2O$, indicating six molecules of water.

1-, 2-, 3-, etc. (in names of compounds) denoting one of several possible positions of substituted atoms or groups; as in: 1-propanol.

α, β, etc. (in names of compounds) denoting one of several possible positions of substituted atoms or groups.

− denoting levorotation; as in: −120°.

R (in structural formulas) denoting a hydrogen atom or a saturated hydrocarbon radical.

R' (in structural formulas) denoting a hydrocarbon radical.

X (in structural formulas) denoting a halogen.

Other symbols are used in the names of organic compounds which are really abbreviations; as: d-, meaning dextro-; dl-, meaning racemic; l-, meaning levo-; m-, meaning meta-; o-, meaning ortho-; p-, meaning para-; vic-, meaning vicinal.

< denoting a bivalent element or radical; as in: Se<, bivalent selenium; $>C_2O_4$ the bivalent radical oxalate. In formulas, the symbol is used to denote a bivalent element or radical that is joined to two different elements or radicals.

GEOLOGY

Letter symbols used on geologic maps consist of a capital letter, indicating the system, followed by one or more lower-case letters designating the formation and member where used. The letter symbols for systems are as follows:

Q Quaternary
T Tertiary
K Cretaceous
J Jurassic
Ŧ Triassic
P Permian
ℙ Pennsylvanian
M Mississippian
D Devonian
S Silurian
O Ordovician
C Cambrian
ꝑC Precambrian

The symbol C is used to indicate the Carboniferous systems in regions where the Pennsylvanian and Mississippian systems are not differentiated. The second letter of the symbol is usually the initial letter of the formation name. Where members are mapped, the first letter of the member name is generally added after the letter indicating the formation.

MUSIC

staff: the five lines and associated spaces on which music is written. The lines and spaces, called staff degrees, represent different pitches; they are named as the first seven letters of the alphabet. Pitches out of the range of the staff are represented by short lines above or below, and parallel to, the staff, called ledger lines.

Clefs are used to indicate the names and pitches of the notes corresponding to the lines and spaces of the staff:

G clef; treble clef: indicates that the second line of the staff corresponds to the G next above middle C.

F clef; bass clef: indicates that the fourth line of the staff corresponds to the F next below middle C.

C clef: indicates that any line on which it is placed corresponds to middle C. Ordinarily, the C clef is found in one of three positions:

C clef on the first line: called soprano clef.

C clef on the third line: called alto clef.

C clef on the fourth line: called tenor clef.

sharp: indicates that the note it precedes is raised one half step.

flat: indicates that the note it precedes is lowered one half step.

natural: indicates the natural note, canceling the effect of a previous sharp or flat.

Note: Sharps, flats and naturals used for single notes are called accidentals. A sharp, flat, or natural affects only the note indicated and only in the measure in which it appears, unless a note so marked is tied to a note in the following measure. The set of sharps or flats at the beginning of a composition and at the beginning of each staff is called the key signature. The sharps or flats indicated by the key signature affect all octaves in all measures unless altered by an accidental or until changed by a new key signature. A particular key signature may indicate one of two keys, a major key (indicated by a capital letter) or its relative minor key (indicated by a lower-case letter).

double sharp: indicates that the note it precedes is raised two half steps.

double flat: indicates that the note it precedes is lowered two half steps.

indicates a single sharp when used after a double sharp.

Note: This notation is useful to clarify the single sharp when it appears in the same measure as the double sharp. When the single sharp appears in a different measure, this notation is frequent but unnecessary as the simple sign ♯ serves the same purpose. In modern notation, when the single sharp is indicated by the key signature, and the note appears in a different measure than the double sharp, the compound sign is often placed in brackets over the note merely as a clarification.

indicates a single flat when used after a double flat. See Note under ♯♯ above.

8va·····, 8····· all'ottava; at the octave. 1. (appearing above the notes) indicates that the notes are to be played one octave higher than written. 2. (appearing below the notes) indicates that the notes are to be played one octave lower than written. 8va bassa····· is also used.

15va····· 1. (appearing above the notes) indicates that the notes are to be played two octaves higher than written. 2. (appearing below the notes) indicates that the notes are to be played two octaves lower than written.

col 8va·····, col 8····· coll'ottava; with the octave. 1. (appearing above the notes) indicates that the notes one octave above are to be played simultaneously with the notes written. 2. (appearing below the notes) indicates that the notes one octave below are to be played simultaneously with the notes written.

bar; bar line: a vertical line across the staff marking the division between two measures.

double bar: a double vertical line across the staff marking the conclusion of a piece of music or a section of it.

double bar: a light and a heavy vertical line across the staff marking the conclusion of a piece of music.

brace: used to join several staves, indicating that the staves so joined are to be read simultaneously.

Following the key signature at the beginning of a piece of music will be found a fraction indicating the time (meter) in which the piece is to be played.

$\frac{4}{4}$ $\frac{3}{4}$ $\frac{2}{4}$ $\frac{2}{2}$ $\frac{6}{8}$ etc. time signatures; the lower figure indicates the selected unit of measurement, i.e., the kind of note representing a beat (quarter note, half note, eighth note, etc.); the upper figure indicates the number of such units in a measure. Thus, $\frac{3}{4}$ (three-quarter time) means that each quarter note gets a beat and there are three quarter notes in each measure.

common time: the same as $\frac{4}{4}$.

alla breve; cut time: the same as $\frac{2}{2}$.

♩=60 ♩=80 etc. tempo marks: placed above the staff at the beginning of a composition, or of a section of a composition, to indicate the tempo at which it is to be played. The examples shown indicate that 60 half notes, or 80 quarter notes, respectively, are to be played in one minute. Note: Many older pieces of music show the tempo mark preceded by the abbreviation M.M. The letters stand for Mälzel metronome, a reference to the measuring instrument generally used to indicate the tempo.

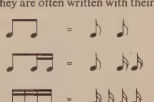
Notes are used to indicate, by their position on the staff, the pitch of the tone played, and also, by their form, the duration of the tone. The duration of the tone is called its value; note values are:

breve; double whole note: an old note value, rarely seen in modern notation.

whole note; semibreve.

half note; minim.

quarter note; crochet.



eighth note; quaver.

sixteenth note; semiquaver.

thirty-second note; demisemiquaver.

sixty-fourth note; hemidemisemiquaver.

In instrumental music, when two or more notes, each of eighth note value or less, occur in succession, they are often written with their stems joined. Thus,

Other values may be indicated by means of tied notes or dotted notes.

tie: a short curved line connecting two successive notes of the same pitch, indicating a tone duration of their combined values. Thus,

Dots placed after notes add additional value to them:

etc. dotted half note, dotted quarter note, dotted eighth note, etc. The single dot placed after the note adds to it one-half of its value. Thus, etc. double-dotted half note, double-dotted quarter note, double-dotted eighth note, etc. The double dot adds one-half plus one-quarter of the note's value. Thus, etc. triple-dotted half note, triple-dotted quarter note, triple-dotted eighth note, etc. The triple dot adds one-half plus one-quarter plus one-eighth of the note's value. Thus,

In modern notation dotted notes are used only if their value does not extend over a bar line, otherwise tied notes are used. Thus, double whole rest.

Rests indicate intervals of silence between tones. Rest values are:

whole rest.

half rest.

quarter rest.

eighth rest.

sixteenth rest.

thirty-second rest.

sixty-fourth rest.

Dots placed after rests have the same meaning as dots placed after notes, adding additional value to them; for example:

A rest of two or more full measures may be indicated as:

3 triplet: a symbol placed over or under a group of three notes of equal value indicating that the three notes are to be played in the time of two of the same value. Thus,

Note: Similar indications are often used for five notes to be played in the time of four, seven notes to be played in the time of six, etc. Thus,

2 duplet: a symbol used with a group of two notes of equal value indicating that they are to be played in the time of three, the value to be determined by the context. 1. Generally, the two notes are played in the time of three of the same value. Thus, the duplet having the value of  2. In some contexts the two notes are played in the time of three of lesser value. Thus, the duplet having the value of 4 a form related to the duplet, indicating four notes to be played in the time of three of the same value. Thus, and is played .

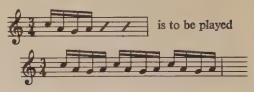
fermata; hold; pause. 1. (appearing above or below a note or rest) indicates that the note or rest is to be prolonged, the duration to be at the discretion of the performer. 2. (appearing simultaneously above the treble clef and below the bass clef, especially in the Bach chorale preludes) indicates the end of a phrase. 3. (appearing over the double bar at the end of a composition) indicates the conclusion.

breath. 1. (in vocal music) indicates where the performer is to take a breath. 2. (in instrumental music) indicates a short pause in performance.

grand pause: indicates a complete stop in performance, the duration to be at the discretion of the performer.

Certain abbreviations indicating the repetition and duration of notes to be played are used for convenience in musical notation; for example:



segno; sign: indicates the beginning or end of a passage which is to be repeated.

repeat sign: indicates the repetition of: 1. a complete measure. Thus,

2. a group of notes within a measure. Thus, coda mark: placed above the line at some point in the music and at the beginning of the coda, indicating an optional deletion of the section between the two marks.

repeat signs: (1) placed at the beginning of a composition or of a section of a composition; (2) placed at the end of a composition or of a section of a composition: indicate the repetition of the composition or of the section enclosed by the signs. Sign (2) appearing without sign (1) indicates that the repetition starts at the beginning of the composition.

first and second endings: indicates the repetition of a section of a composition in which the final measure or measures are to be played differently the second time. Occasionally a third ending will also be indicated.

chord: a group of three or more notes to be sounded simultaneously.

arpeggio: indicates that the notes of a chord are to be played in rapid succession rather than simultaneously. Unless otherwise indicated, the lowest tone is sounded first; all tones are sustained until the full value is achieved.

Where necessary for distinction or clarification, ascending and descending arpeggiated chords may be indicated as:

ascending arpeggiated chord: indicates that the notes are to be played in rapid succession, beginning with the lowest note. The latter symbol is generally reserved for harp music.

descending arpeggiated chord: indicates that the notes are to be played in rapid succession, beginning with the highest note. The latter symbol is generally reserved for harp music.

glissando: indicates a rapid sliding movement from one specified tone to the other, passing over the intervening tones without articulating them. On the piano it is performed by drawing the fingernail over the white keys or the black keys, on the harp by sliding the finger across the strings.

1. portamento: used in vocal music to indicate the voice gliding from one specified tone to the other. 2. glissando; slide: used to indicate a glissando played on an instrument such as the violin or trombone, on which the sequence of playable pitches is not discontinuous, thus permitting the performance of an effect similar to that of the portamento. On the violin it is played by sliding the finger up or down a string, on the trombone by moving the slide.

long appoggiatura: an ornamental note, usually that next above the main note. The appoggiatura is played on the beat and is sustained, according to specific rules, for at least as long as the main note. Thus, short appoggiatura; grace note: an ornamental note played as a short note regardless of the value of the main note. The short appoggiatura anticipates the beat of the main note. Thus, double appoggiatura: a two-note ornament begun on the beat and generally played as short notes. Two types of double appoggiatura are: (1) conjunct double appoggiatura; slide: to be played

(2) disjunct double appoggiatura: to be played mordent: an ornament consisting of the alternation of the written note with the note next below it. The mordent is begun on the beat and played as short notes. It may be played as a single or double alternation, at the discretion of the performer. Thus,

may be played or or double mordent. See above.

pralltriller; inverted mordent: an ornament consisting of the alternation of the written note with the note next above it. See above.

turn: an ornament consisting of four notes: the note next above the main note, the main note, the note next below, and the main note again. Thus,

is to be played inverted turn: an ornament consisting of four notes, like the turn, but beginning on the note next below the main note rather than on that above the main note.

trill; shake: an ornament consisting of the rapid alternation of the main note with the diatonic second above it, generally beginning on the main note.

presa: used in a canon to indicate where the successive voice parts enter.

slur: a curved line connecting two or more successive notes, usually of different pitches, used as: 1. a phrase mark. 2. an indication that the notes so connected are to be played or sung legato.

nonlegato: indicating that the tone is to be held for its full duration, but articulated so as to detach it from the other tones.

portato; mezzo staccato: indicating that the tone is to be held a bit short of its written duration to detach it from the other tones. The notes are played more distinctly separated than in nonlegato but less than in staccato.

staccato: indicating that the tone is to be held for only a fraction of its written duration, completely detached from the other tones.

the same as but indicating a more pronounced staccato.

A one octave below the A next below middle C D next below middle C
G next below middle C
B next below middle C

The horizontal lines represent the frets in chromatic progression. A small circle placed above a string line indicates the string is to be played unstopped. For example:

DIRECTORY OF COLLEGES AND UNIVERSITIES

The following listing of more than 2,000 institutions provides basic information concerning each institution. Branches of large universities are listed under the institution's main heading. In cases where branch campuses or affiliated institutions have popularly enjoyed independent status and reputation, they appear in the regular alphabetical listing and are referred to the parent institution.

The data following each college or university is given in this order: accreditation (institutions accredited by the appropriate regional association are followed by an asterisk); name and location; agency of control or religious affiliation; date of founding; kind of student body (men, women, coed); level of instruction; and size. Major Foreign Universities

Information about colleges and universities abroad is often scattered, fragmentary, or simply not available. This is due, in part, to the decentralized administration of higher education institutions in many parts of the world. It is due also to the rapidly changing education scene in a number of countries, which makes the collection of current data most difficult.

The following listing makes no attempt to include all institutions of higher learning throughout the world. Rather, it includes the major institutions in each of 132 countries. Because of the wide variation in educational development among nations, so-called colleges and universities range from internationally famous centers of learning to institutions that are still seeking to achieve true collegiate rank. This listing includes the leading institutions in each country, even when, as in a few cases, no institution has yet achieved full collegiate status.

Basic information about individual institutions is given in the following order: name and location; date of founding; kind of student body (men, women, coed); size; and approximate number of American students enrolled in recent years. When no location is given for an affiliated college, it is located in the same community as the parent institution. For those desiring further information on these and other institutions abroad, the following sources are recommended:

Canadian Universities and Colleges, Edward F. Sheffield, editor. Ottawa, The Canadian Universities Foundation, 1964.

Commonwealth Universities Yearbook, J. F. Foster, editor. Published annually. London, Association of Commonwealth Universities. (Available in the U.S. from the American Council on Education.)

Handbook on International Study: for U.S. Nationals. Fourth edition. New York, Institute of International Education, 1965. (Together with the I.I.E.'s companion publication, OPEN DOORS, this handbook provides the most extensive information available on where American students study abroad, as well as data on foreign universities and colleges.)

International Handbook of Universities, H. M. R. Keyes, editor. Second edition. Paris, International Association of Universities, 1962. (Available in the U.S. from the American Council on Education.)

The World of Learning 1964-65. Directory of the World's Universities, Colleges, Learned Societies, Libraries, Museums, Art Galleries, and Research Institutes. Fifteenth edition. London, Europa Publications Ltd., 1964.

SPANISH ACCENTUATION

In a number of words spoken stress is marked by an accent (´): nación, país, médico, día.

Words which are not so marked are, generally speaking, stressed on the next-to-the-last syllable if they end in a vowel, n, or s; and on the last syllable if they end in a consonant other than n or s.

Note: An accent is placed over some words to distinguish them from others having the same spelling and pronunciation but differing in meaning.

CONSONANT LENGTH

All Italian consonants occur both single (short) and double (long); in the latter instance, the time of their pronunciation lasts from one-and-a-half to two times that of the single consonants.

ITALIAN ACCENTUATION

In most conventional writing and printing, spoken stress is marked by a grave accent (`), but only when it falls on the last syllable of a word: città, vendè, lunedì, cantò, tribù. An accent is placed over the vowel letter of some words to distinguish them from others having the same spelling and pronunciation but differing in meaning: è "is" versus e "and." In other instances, stress is usually left unmarked, although it may fall on any syllable up to the sixth from the end.

However, Italians are very sensitive to misplaced stress, even though accent marks are not customarily used in Italian spelling. In this dictionary, therefore, as in most Italian dictionaries, the occurrence of stress is indicated with an accent mark whenever it does not fall on the next-to-the-last syllable, and also in all words ending in -ia, -io. In addition, the presence of the open varieties of e and o, to which Italians are also sensitive, is marked by a grave accent (`) in all its occurrences, even in the next-to-the-last syllable.

Noun and Adjective Plurals

Virtually all Italian nouns form their plurals by changing the final vowel. The following are the principal patterns of noun plural formation:

FINAL VOWEL		EXAMPLES
SINGULAR	PLURAL	SINGULAR	PLURAL
-a (f.)	-e	ròsa	ròse
-a (m.)	-i	dramma	drammi
-o (m.)	-i	libro	libri
-o (m., f.)	-i (m., f.)	bràccio	bràccia
		fiume	fiumi
		parte	parti

Nouns ending in unstressed -i, in stressed vowels, or in consonants; family names; and abbreviations are normally unchanged in the plural: crisi, città, tram; Scaglione; auto, ràdio.

Adjectives ending in -o follow the pattern of libro for the masculine and that of rosa for the feminine; those ending in -e follow the pattern of fiume, parte for both masculine and feminine.
