Preface

LANGUAGE is an indispensable instrument of human society. It is the means by which individuals understand each other and are enabled to function together as a community. Indeed, it is unlikely that any human organization could either be formed or long maintained without language. Certainly, in the absence of communication, the complex structure of modern society would be utterly impossible.

The effectiveness of human society, therefore, is largely dependent upon the clarity, accuracy, and efficiency with which language is used or understood. As man's voice reaches now with ease—by radio, by cable, by television—across continents and oceans, the importance of what he says becomes paramount.

But language, unlike such phenomena as breathing and eating, is not biologically inherent; it is not instinctively present. The infant must learn the power and uses of language; he must gain it by conscious effort and by discipline. Sound by sound, word by word, the child acquires this wondrous vehicle for making his wants known, for expressing his feelings and thoughts, for understanding what others wish him to know or do. And, constantly expanding and improving his command of language as he becomes an adult, he develops the capacity for thought and communication on the most abstract and sophisticated planes. Language, as a social convention, thus becomes one of the prime characteristics of man rising above a simple animal existence.

In man's language is to be found the true mirror of man himself. His lexicon is an index to his ideas and passions, his inventions and achievements, his history and hopes. As man extends the horizon of his knowledge, he extends simultaneously the range of his language—devising new words, new meanings, new symbols.

Thus, the remarkable explosion of knowledge in the middle of the twentieth century—the invention of computers and other cybernetic machines, the great new areas of medical discovery, the total revision and expansion of the physical sciences, the exploration of outer space by manned flight and by transmitted signal, and innumerable other developments—has been extensively reflected in our language. Large areas of vocabulary that did not exist until recently—in nuclear physics, in biochemistry, in mathematics, in psychology and sociology, and in dozens of other fields—now press insistently upon the student, the businessman, and the general reader. In every aspect of daily life the necessity for ready access to clear and authoritative information is steadily increasing.

If modern man is to function well in his society, one of his necessities, surely, is to keep pace with the dynamic growth of his language. To meet such a need The Random House Dictionary of the English Language has been prepared. It is an entirely new dictionary, written in midcentury for twentieth-century users. Because it is fully up to date and thoroughly reliable, the RHD will provide the user with all the information he is likely to need about meaning, spelling, pronunciation, usage, etymology, and other language matters. As a general-purpose reference book, the RHD meets the requirements of students and laymen and satisfies the quality standards of leading scholars and authorities. The broad sweep of the English language is fully covered here, including foreign words and phrases, biographical terms, geographical terms, abbreviations, titles of major literary works, and many other types of information frequently sought.

In the planning and preparation of this dictionary, we have endeavored to preserve all that is worthy in the great lexicographic traditions of Samuel Johnson, Noah Webster, James A. H. Murray, William Craigie, William Dwight Whitney, and others. We have resisted the temptation to introduce novelty in the guise of innovation, but we have carefully employed those new ideas and methods that represent genuine advances in modern lexicography. This viewpoint has governed us during the twenty years since publication of The American College Dictionary, which has been widely praised for its balanced application of linguistics, its lucid use of scholarship, and its unflagging awareness of the importance of communicating with the reader. The ACD established a new standard for desk dictionaries, and it is our hope that the RHD will set a new high standard for larger dictionaries.

Throughout our work we have had the advantage of working closely with hundreds upon hundreds of scholars and experts who helped us frame our basic principles, guided us in the myriad decisions that had to be made, and worked directly with us on the manuscript itself. At one stage of our progress, we were also able to confirm the acceptability of our policies by a long questionnaire submitted under unrevealed origin to more than ten thousand teachers, librarians, and writers. In addition, many hundreds of other authorities were consulted on specific questions, and all gave most generously and enthusiastically of their special knowledge and judgment. The comprehensive range represented by our consultants was matched by their wide distribution throughout the United States, England, and other parts around the world.

In the preparation of the RHD, our permanent lexicographic staff made full use of its departmental resources—our large file of citations from newspapers, magazines, and books; glossaries and indexes; special dictionaries and lists; textbooks and concordances; reference books and learned studies, and so on. This was supplemented by extensive use of many major public and university libraries, plus the facilities of many governments, private institutions, and professional organizations.

Our central concern throughout the editing of the RHD has been communication with the user. In the writing of definitions, for example, we have tried to avoid ingeniously concise wordings that are meaningful only to the writer. We have been guided by the premise that a dictionary editor must not only record; he must also teach. We have tried to express ourselves clearly and simply, using normal English and normal punctuation and capitalization. We have often added illustrative examples after definitions in order to give the reader as much help in understanding the meaning and use of the word as reasonably possible. Particularly useful too, we believe, is the coverage given in the RHD to idiomatic expressions, a coverage that enhances the informative value of this book, especially to those who are not native speakers of English.

The pronunciation system used in the RHD has, we believe, the twofold merit of simplicity and accuracy. We have used a minimum of symbols—and those used are, in the main, the traditional ones. As a result, the reader will have little difficulty in reading our phonetic transcriptions; he will only rarely need to check a symbol in the key and, when he does, he will find a condensed key conveniently at the bottom of every odd-numbered page. Whenever common variant pronunciations exist, our transcriptions show them, generally in the order of frequency of occurrence. When the variants represent national differences, a geographic label is used to guide the user in his choice. In the transcriptions, our pronunciation editors have drawn upon every source of information available to them, including scholarly reports, tape recordings, polls of informants, etc. Throughout their work, our pronunciation staff has had the benefit of advice and guidance by Professor Arthur J. Bronstein. Every pronunciation in this dictionary, unless specifically restricted, is an acceptable one among cultivated speakers in what has aptly been described as "the language of well-bred ease."

The etymologies in the RHD, prepared by a group of internationally recognized authorities under the senior direction of Professor Kemp Malone, provide the user with an accurate account of the origin and history of the English vocabulary. All significant published research in this field has been utilized and, in addition, members of the etymological staff have frequently incorporated new findings of their own. As a general rule, the etymologies in this dictionary trace words back to their earliest attested forms; hypothetical forms and dubious conjectures have been excluded.

Numerous other features of the RHD—synonym lists and studies, antonym lists, usage notes, pictures and diagrams, spot maps, special charts and tables, to mention some—carry further the central principles of accuracy and clarity that guided us throughout.

And finally, that lexicographer's Scylla and Charybdis: Should the dictionary be an authoritarian guide to "correct" English or should it be so antiseptically free of comment that it may defeat the user by providing him with no guidance at all? There is, we believe, a linguistically sound middle course. Language, most people agree, is never static—except when dead. It has a capacity for constant change and growth that enables it to serve effectively the requirements of the society in which it exists. It is, therefore, the function of a dictionary to provide the user with an exact record of the language he sees and hears. That record must be fully descriptive. Since language is a social institution, the lexicographer must give the user an adequate indication of the attitudes of society toward particular words or expressions, whether he regards those attitudes as linguistically sound or not. The lexicographer who does not recognize the existence of long-established strictures in usage has not discharged his full responsibility. He has not been objective and factual; he has reported selectively, omitting references to a social attitude relevant to many words and expressions. He does not need to express approval or disapproval of a disputed usage, but he does need to report the milieu of words as well as their meanings. In this dictionary, on the basis of extensive research and thoughtful consideration, we have used usage labels to guide the reader to effective and appropriate use of words. A special panel of linguists under Professor Raven I. McDavid, Jr., has reviewed and, where necessary, amended the usage labels throughout the RHD.

In addition, to answer some of the frequently troublesome questions of usage, we have often appended to an entry a brief usage note. These usage notes are not arbitrary personal judgments; they are reports on the do's and don'ts urged by many users of English. The notes were prepared under the skilled direction of Mr. Theodore M. Bernstein of The New York Times and then reviewed by a group of editors and teachers.

This preface has given me the valued privilege of presenting The Random House Dictionary to its users on behalf of the many hundreds of scholars and editors who worked so devotedly to create this dictionary. It could not have been possible without them. Nor could it have been possible without the encouraging faith and remarkable patience of the officers and directors of Random House, whose sole instruction to us was to produce the best dictionary we possibly could.

Table of Common English Spellings

This table may be used to find the spelling of a word when only its pronunciation is known. For example, using the boldface, italicized equivalents in the Spellings column, the word pronounced (bit) would most likely be spelled bit. At the left, the first two columns show the relationships between the symbols used in this dictionary and those in the International Phonetic Alphabet (IPA). Under the Examples column are listed words that have in at least one of their pronunciations the symbol listed under the Dictionary Symbol column. For a complete table of IPA symbols, see page 1083.

Historical Sketch of the English Language

KEMP MALONE

We know the English speech of today at first hand: we speak it ourselves and hear others speaking it. But our knowledge of the speech of the past comes to us at second hand only: from recordings of one kind or another. For recent times we have an abundance of these, mostly printed matter but also matter written by hand and on the typewriter and (best of all) a good many phonograph records and tapes that enable us to hear speakers long dead. But the farther back we go in time the less of this second-hand material we have. The phonograph as a practical device has been with us hardly one hundred years and printing did not come our way till the fifteenth century. The English of the Middle Ages is known to us almost wholly from manuscripts: writings done by hand, with pen and ink, on parchment or paper. And the making of manuscripts written wholly or partly in English did not begin till the conversion of the English people to Christianity in the seventh century, when English clerics who had learned Church Latin from Irish missionaries started writing English with Latin letters. Runic writing (on wood, bone, stone, and metal) is older still as a way of recording English speech and the English knew and practiced this art long before they left the continent for Britannia in the fifth and sixth centuries. But the runic inscriptions that have survived are too few and too short to help us much. Nearly all such inscriptions were cut on wood and perished long ago by fire or rot. Parchment holds out better but most of the old manuscripts have been lost to us nevertheless. We could not reasonably have expected anything else, and indeed we are lucky to have what has come down to us. But the fact remains that for the older periods of the language our records are not as full as we should like and for the oldest historical period they are scanty.

We speak of "periods" because English, like all other living tongues, is constantly changing. Taken generation by generation the changes, other than those in vocabulary, seem slight indeed but in the course of the centuries they pile up and make the English of, say, 1965 very different from that of 965, so much so that we cannot read the language of 1000 years ago without special study. Yet we still call our speech "English," and with good reason. Much has changed but the basic structure and the basic wordstock have been kept. Before discussing this basis and what has happened to it over the years, we will have a look at the forebears of our tongue.

In general, a language begins as a dialect and English is no exception to the rule: it began as a dialect of Germanic, the speech of the ancient Germans. And Germanic began as a dialect of Indo-European, a tongue spoken thousands of years ago but known to us only through the many languages that go back to it. Of these languages or language groups the most important are Indic (with Sanskrit for its ancient language, Hindi, Urdu, etc., for tongues now current), Iranian, Anatolian, Armenian, Slavic, Baltic, Albanian, Greek, Italic (represented chiefly by Latin and its offspring the Romance languages), Celtic, and Germanic. The Anatolian group is known only from ancient records; its chief language was Hittite. The other groups still have living representatives, and languages that go back to Indo-European are now spoken by upwards of a billion people spread over most of the earth.

Germanic had split up into dialects before the written records of the group begin and we know it only through the languages that have come from it. The modern Scandinavian tongues come from a dialect called North Germanic in learned parlance. During the Viking period (eighth to eleventh centuries) this underwent great changes and gave rise to Danish, Swedish, Norwegian, Faroese, and Icelandic. This last is the classical speech of Scandinavia in virtue of its extensive medieval literature. Gothic comes from a dialect spoken by migrants who left Scandinavia to settle in the Vistula valley, whence in time they extended their settlements to the Black Sea and the Danube. Their speech was the first Germanic tongue to be given manuscript record; it was spoken in the Crimea as late as the sixteenth century but is now known from records only.

The dialect spoken in the western part of ancient Germania is known to scholars as West Germanic. It early fell into two sub-dialects: one spoken by tribes of the interior, whence modern German, Dutch, and Flemish; the other spoken by tribes living along the coast (from Rhine to Elbe) and on the Jutland peninsula, whence Frisian and English. Our concern here is with the Angles, Saxons, and Jutes who left the continent in the fifth and sixth centuries to settle in Britannia. In early times the Angles had lived in Schleswig, the Jutes to their north, and the Saxons to their south (in Holstein); that is, all three tribes lived on the Jutland peninsula. When the Jutes left their old seats they seem first to have found new ones near the Frisians and only later to have crossed over to Britain, where they settled in Kent, Hampshire, and the Isle of Wight. Most of the Saxons stayed at home, but the migrants colonized Essex, much of the Thames valley, and parts of the southern coast not taken by the Jutes. The Angles settled on the eastern coast from Suffolk to the Firth of Forth and thence spread deep into the interior. The Britons put up a stout defense but most of what we call England had been overrun by the end of the sixth century and nearly all the rest was in English hands by the middle of the ninth. Land, people, and speech took name from the Angles, the biggest and most widespread of the three tribes.

The Germanic settlers in Britain, no matter what tribe they belonged to, called their speech "English" from the earliest times of which we have evidence, and "English" has been its name ever since. In virtue of changes that took place as time went on, the language falls into three historical periods: Old English (before 1100), Middle English (1100 to 1500), and Modern English (after 1500). These period names are commonly abbreviated to OE, ME, and ModE. The dates 1100 and 1500 are not exact, since the changes they mark the limits of began locally at different times, spread at different rates of speed, and sometimes did not extend to all parts of the country, but as a rough and ready means of dividing the stream of time into stretches they serve well enough if only we keep in mind that the course of events is continuous and any segmentation of it artificial. Our speech in prehistoric times (i.e., the period before our records of it) may be called proto-English. It was the speech brought to Britannia by the first Germanic settlers and doubtless differed little from settlement to settlement.

Regional differences became greater in the course of OE times (though not great enough to hinder mutual understanding) and scholars recognize three main OE dialects, which they have dubbed Anglian, West Saxon, and Kentish. Other dialects existed but we cannot define them for want of records. We know most about West Saxon, the English of Wessex and especially of its capital Winchester, which became the capital of all England when King Alfred's offspring united the country under their rule. This dialect had come to be the standard literary language of England by the end of the tenth century and speakers of other dialects learned to use the King's English for writing, though they kept the mother dialect for talking. Of the nations that arose in western Europe after the fall of Rome, England was the first to have a written standard of speech. Unhappily this tremendous cultural flowering did not hold its own against the blighting effects of the Norman Conquest in the eleventh century, and the writings of ME times are marked by a welter of dialects, a reversion to primitive ways.

Though little has come down to us from the seventh and eighth centuries, when English emerged from prehistory into the light of history, the writings of OE times make a body of texts full enough to serve us well in describing the language as it was in the ninth, tenth, and eleventh centuries, and what we say about OE is based on these texts. We take up first the sound-system or phonology.

The phonemes or minimal distinctive sound-effects of OE are represented in writing by single letters and digraphs taken from Latin and by the two runic characters wynn and thorn; instead of thorn, crossed d was often used, a symbol known as eth. In printing OE texts it is customary to substitute w for wynn but to keep thorn (þ) and eth (ð). In the present dictionary th replaces these two symbols. Our description of the OE sound-system begins with the vowels, of which there were eight, symbolized thus:

	Back	Front
High	u	i	y
Mid	o	e	œ
Low	a	æ

Unmarked, these symbols stand for short vowels; marked with the macron, which symbolizes a phoneme of length, they stand for the corresponding long vowels. But in OE as in Latin writing there was no systematic indication of vowel length and the macron in printed texts is an editorial addition. The shorts did not differ from the longs in quality and the qualitative values were roughly as follows: u as in ModE rude, i as in ModE machine, y as French u; o as French ô, e as French é, æ as in French œil; a as in ModE bar, æ like the a of ModE that. Of the eight vowels, four (i, e, a, æ) were made with spread, four (u, o, y, œ) with rounded articulation of tongue and lips. The low-back was made between tongue and tergum (back wall of mouth) and may be called a tergal vowel; the other seven were made between tongue and tectum (roof of mouth) and may be called tectal vowels. Before a nasal phoneme OE also had a short vowel written now a now o, as in mann or monn man, but this is best taken as an allophone of the tergal.

As early as the ninth century a tendency set in for the rounded front vowels to lose their rounding. In Alfred's English this change had almost run its course with the mid-front vowel, which accordingly was nearly always written e, and by 900 the high-front too was so written in much if not most of southeastern England, where it had undergone both unrounding and lowering. Elsewhere no lowering of this vowel occurred and the unrounding, which proceeded from east to west, did not embrace the whole country till the fourteenth century. With this change, y came to have the same value as i, a state of things still with us. The westerners who clung to the rounded articulation changed their symbol for the vowel from y to u, aping French orthography.

In weak syllables only short vowels occurred, the longs having early undergone shortening, and in the ninth century (if not before) a tendency set in for these shorts to be leveled, all becoming an open palatal sound written e. Alfred's English already shows leveling of the front vowels, except in certain suffixes which had kept more or less stress: -ig (later -i, modern -y), -lng, and -isc (modern -ish). In the tenth century the back vowels of weak syllables (except -um, -ung, -uc) were leveled under the low-back and in the late tenth or early eleventh this was fronted and merged with the open palatal. The resulting uniformity of the vocalism in late OE weak syllables makes a striking contrast with its variety in strong syllables, and a like contrast, if not so marked, has obtained in English ever since.

Two-vowel sequences technically known as diphthongs also occurred in OE. Those first recorded appear in early texts as iu, eo, and æo; in later texts, as io, eo, and ea. They may be distinguished as high, mid, and low, in terms of their first members, the high, mid, and low front vowels. They were reduced to two in the OE literary standard, eo for the old high and mid, no longer kept apart south of the Humber, and ea for the low, an inaccurate spelling that replaced the accurate but clumsy æa. Peculiar to West Saxon was yet another diphthong, written ie; as early as Alfred's day it was becoming i by loss of the weak member. In the same way ea had become æ by the year 1000. At about the same time the first member of eo underwent rounding by anticipation of the rounded articulation of the second member, whereupon the o was dropped in speech though long kept in writing; thence our spelling people for French peuple (compare German Pöbel). The rounded mid-front vowel so written lost its rounding in the course of the ME period, thus becoming identical in sound, and eventually in symbol, with the corresponding spread vowel e.

The diphthongs taken up above are alike in pattern: the first member or sonant (i.e., the main sound of the syllable) a long or short stressed front vowel, the second member or consonant (i.e., a subordinate sound in the syllable) a short unstressed mid or low vowel. But OE also had diphthongs of another pattern, with a long or short vowel for sonant, a high short for consonant. Here the consonantal member was written g for the high front, wynn (w) for the high back, but spellings with i and u also occur from an early date, as in wei or weg way, stōu or stōw place. This diphthongal pattern persisted into ME, where it had a rich development. Consonantal high short vowels are also frequent in non-diphthongal sequences, as in gē ye, hergan or herian praise, wer man, twā two (earlier uer, tuā), writtan write. In ModE a like variation in spelling is found; thus we write Swede but suede, coy but coin. However written, these OE consonantal sounds are commonly called semivowels and reckoned phonemes, though perhaps better taken as allophones of the high vowels. Unlike the other consonants of OE, the semivowels were always short. With them are grouped the liquids (written l, r) and nasals (written n, m) to make a class of phonemes called sonorants.

Vowels and sonorants alike were made with vibration of the vocal cords and may therefore be called vibrants. The other two classes of OE phonemes to be taken up, stops and fricatives, differ in this matter of vibrancy. The eight stops fall into pairs, one member of each pair being vibrant, the other surd (i.e., made without vibration). They are symbolized in OE as follows:

	Vibrants	Surds
Tectals	g	c or k
Affricates	cg or g	c
Labials	b	p

In ModE these phonemes remain but the symbols for some of them have changed: k, a rare letter in OE, has replaced tectal c before e, i, y and in some other positions, as in keep, kin, kye, knife, milk for OE cēpan, cinn (earlier cynn), cȳ, cnif, milc, and the OE sequence cw is now written qu, as in queen for OE cwēn; the symbols for the affricates have been changed to dg, g, or j (vibrant), and ch or tch (surd), as in edge, singe, chin, stretch for OE ecg, sengan, cinn, streccan. Note that the stop in words like lamb, gnaw, knife, kept in ME, is now gone, though still symbolized in writing.

Of the five OE fricatives, the palatalized dental, written sc, was always surd. Originally a sequence (fricative plus stop; compare ModE sc in scale, etc.), by Alfred's time it had become a single phoneme, the one we symbolize with sh, as in scamu shame; in ME the spelling sch came into vogue, whence sh by dropping the middle letter (compare German sch). The other four fricatives had surd and vibrant allophones, distributed as follows: a long fricative was surd; a short was vibrant if flanked by vibrants but otherwise it too was surd. The vibrant allophones of the tectal fricative were distinguished in writing from the surd ones, but no such distinction was made in writing the other fricatives.

The surd allophones of the tectal were written h. At the head of a morpheme, as in hāt hot, godhād Godhead, the h represented the rough breathing (aspirate); elsewhere, as in miht might, it represented a sound like that written j in Spanish, ch in German, a sound which in ME came to be written gh. This gh has been kept in ModE writing, though the sound it represented is gone (as in might) or has become a labial (as in laugh). The aspirate before a liquid or nasal, as in OE hlēapan leap, hnutu nut, hring ring, began to drop in the eleventh century, and OE hw, as in hwȳ why, became ME wh, a change in written form best taken to mean that the old sequence had become a single phoneme, giving the surd-vibrant contrast wh vs. w. Most speakers of English still make this contrast. The vibrant allophones of the tectal were written g, whether velar, as in maga maw, or palatal, as in fægе fey, representing a sound like that symbolized by g in Spanish águila eagle, lago lake. In ME times these allophones underwent vocalization and came to be written accordingly, i or y for the palatal, u or w for the velar.

The rough dental fricative, written s, was surd in sōn sound, missan miss, græs grass and the like, vibrant in bisig busy, etc. The smooth dental, written thorn or eth in the texts but th here (see above), was surd in thistel thistle, moththe moth, bæth bath and the like, vibrant in brōthor brother, etc. The labial, written f, was surd in folc folk, offrian offer, healf half and the like, vibrant in ofer over, etc. The doubled letters in the examples above mark long consonants. So also in ME, but in ModE the old longs became short and doubling now serves other purposes; thus, in holly (contrast holy) it marks the value of the o before the ll.

In general, an OE word took the stress on the first syllable, but certain prefixes, notably ge-, for-, and be-, were without stress, as was the first syllable of words like aweg away, todæg today, originally prepositional phrases, and verb prefixes as a rule did not take the stress. In verbs derived from nouns the stress-pattern of the noun was kept in the verb; thus, andswarian to answer had initial stress like its noun andswaru answer. But OE also had noun-verb pairs the verb of which was akin to the noun but not derived from it, and here we find a contrastive stress-pattern, the noun taking the stress on the prefix, the verb on the root. This pattern has come down to our own day and is found in many noun-verb pairs of ModE, as conduct behavior vs. conduct lead. By and large, the stress-patterns characteristic of OE persist to this day and have given an English shape to many words taken from foreign tongues.

It is now needful to go back to the OE vowels. These underwent changes in quantity in certain settings; thus, the ī of fīftig fifty became short whereas the ī of wilde wild became long. But such changes, though they made a difference in the distribution of the OE vowels, did not add to their number, since shorts and longs were the same in quality. More serious was the effect on the vowel system of changes in quantity made after shorts and longs became differentiated in quality. This differentiation had come about by the end of the eleventh century, when the high and mid shorts came to be spoken with more room between tongue and tectum (i.e., when they became mid and low respectively) and the low-front and low-back shorts merged, giving a short vowel (written a) made further back than OE æ, further forward than OE ā. About 100 years later the low shorts (o, a, e) that ended a stressed penult underwent lengthening; thus, throte throat, name name, mede mead became thrōte, nāme, mēde. The new ō, ā, ē did not agree in quality with the ō, ā, ē inherited from OE but new ē differed little from old æ and the two soon merged, giving the ME open ē. The old ā, which had undergone rounding, finally merged with the new ō, whence the ME open ō. (North of the Humber no rounding took place and old and new ā merged.)

After these changes the ME vowel system took shape thus (the symbols are those of ME orthography, except for the macron marking vowel length; the dialect represented is Chaucer's):

	Back	Central	Front
High	ou(ow)		i(y)
Mid	ō, u(o)	e	ē, i(y)
Low	ō, o	ā, a	ē, e

Here the parenthetical letters are spelling variants and ou for earlier ū marks a change in writing (under French influence), not in speech. The mid-central short vowel occurred only at the end of an unstressed final syllable and was on its way out in the fourteenth century but Chaucer and his fellows still had it after a stressed syllable, as in sonne sun, cynamome cinnamon. In ME writing mid and low ō had the same symbol, as had mid and low ē (compare Italian), and doubling marked length, not quality.

The ME system of diphthongs had its beginnings in OE, as we saw above. It took shape as two series: ey, ay, uy, oy and iw, ew, aw, ow. (The consonantal members might also be written i and u.) Of these, uy and oy were of French origin (but note the native broiden braided). The first member of uy was usually written o, as in poyson for earlier puisun poison. By dissimilation ey soon became ay, though the old spelling long held; hence ME hay for earlier hey, OE hēg. Both iw and ew came to be written ew; hence ME steward for OE stīweard, earlier stigweard. Here the spelling e for i, like the familiar o for u (as in son, OE sunu), was probably graphic, not phonetic. With shift of length to the second member, ew became a rising diphthong in ModE, as in few, pronounced fyū. No such shift took place in the other native diphthongs (ay, aw, ow), where the first member remained long and the second was dropped in ModE (earlier in the north), though the old spelling was kept. The ā of ay underwent fronting, that of aw rounding and retraction before the loss of the consonant. But see below.

French u was a vowel foreign to Londoners and east midlanders generally and in words taken from French they imitated it with their mid-back u, as in ME punisschen punish, or, if lengthened, with the diphthong ew, as in ME glew glue. These values were also given to Latin u in ME schoolrooms, where French was long the language of communication; hence our name for the letter, and its value in a multitude of ModE words of Latin origin, witness acute, granule, etc.

The ME consonant system differed from that of OE in having both surd and vibrant fricative phonemes, as the following contrasts show: fain vs. vain, thy thigh vs. thy thy, seel seal vs. zeel zeal. In OE the distinction between surd and vibrant here was allophonic only. In the labial the change was systematically marked by the spelling, f symbolizing the surd, v the vibrant. It was ignored in the smooth dental, written th whether surd or vibrant, as still. In the rough dental z symbolized the vibrant initially but elsewhere s remained the usual symbol for both, as it still does in many words. On the other hand, the OE vibrant tectal fricative was lost in the course of ME times by vocalization, as we saw above, leaving only the surd (written gh), which itself was lost in early ModE, though kept in Scottish speech (written ch) to this day. For wh see above.

The loss of mid-central e, complete by 1400, and the great vowel shift, an event of the fifteenth century, mark between them the transition from medieval to modern English. The latter change began with the two ME high vowels, each of which developed an on-glide. This grew longer and longer at the expense of its vowel, which finally became a mere point, the stopping-point of the glide. The more time the glide took, the farther from its stopping-point it started, and the starting-point of both glides came to be the low-central region of the mouth. The phoneticians mark the limits of the glides by writing them [au] and [ai], but in ordinary ModE writing they are still symbolized as if they were the ME high vowels from which they grew. Thus, the modern spellings how and high are Chaucer's too.

With the old high vowels turned into glides, the high slots in the English vowel system became empty and there was a general shift which brought into being a pattern for longs exemplified in the following words:

	Back	Front
High	cool, shoe	meet, see
Mid	coal, show	meat, sea
Low	call, shaw	mate, say

Here the spellings oo and ee marked not only quantity (as in ME) but also quality: the vowels so symbolized were high longs, going back to ME mids. In the same way, oa and ea marked mid longs, normally going back to ME lows but in words like board and hear, where an r-sound follows, simply continuing ME mids. Of the low slots, the back one was taken by a long going back in part to ME āw, in part to fifteenth century au and ou before a rounded (labialized) consonant, as in smaul small, doughter daughter (OE smæl, dohtor). The front low slot was taken by a long going back to ME ā and āy, which underwent fronting and coalesced when the y was dropped.

The corresponding pattern for shorts comes out thus:

	Back	Front
High	put	pit
Mid	putt	pet
Low	pot	pat

This three-level pattern differs markedly from the two-level one of ME, where only mid and low shorts occurred. (ME u and i were correlated with the mid-longs ō and ē, witness the lengthenings in dōre door, wēke week, OE duru, wicu.) The ModE high shorts go back to the ME mid shorts, with little or no change in quality, but they are correlated with the ModE high longs, as shown by shortenings like those in foot and breeches. The three-level pattern of ModE arose in the front-vowel system, by the fronting of the ME low-central short, a shift that gave us the vowel still heard in hat, catch, bag, etc., and formerly heard also in words like star (ME starre, earlier sterre), where an r-sound followed in the same syllable. Since this vowel was lower than the one in pet, etc., its fronting brought a three-level front pattern into being. Instead of being fronted, the ME low-central short underwent rounding and retraction in words like swap, wad, what, was, watch, war, where the vowel came between w or wh and a labial or dental consonant, but this shift did not change the back pattern, since the new vowel was identified with the one in pot, etc. A three-level back pattern did come about by the unrounding and lowering of the ME short mid-back, a change that made two phonemes of one. The old rounding was kept here in a small group of words, where the vowel stands between labials or between a labial and a labialized consonant, as in woman, push, bull, full. Shortenings of the long high-back before stops added considerably to the number of words having the rounded phoneme (examples are book, foot, put, stood) but occurrences remain few, whereas the unrounded phoneme, as in cut, occurs in many words.

The early ModE long back-vowel pattern proved stable but the front pattern tended to become a two-level one through further raising, whereby the mids became high, the lows mid. But in some settings ME āw had become a low-front long vowel in certain speech areas, presumably by simple loss of the second member, followed by fronting of the first. This value for the traditional spellings au and al is attested before labials, as in laugh, half, calm, and before n-combinations, as in aunt, da(u)nce, bra(u)nch, dema(u)nd. The lengthening of low shorts before surd fricatives and before an r-sound of the same syllable, as in off, chaff, lost, last, broth, bath, for, far, gave more words with long lows, both back and front. This the eighteenth-century state of things still obtains widely in American speech, apart from the types represented by calm and far, where low-front has become low-back in English speech generally. Most Americans now distinguish two long low-back vowel phonemes, as in for (rounded) and far (spread), but they still have the long low-front in a number of words. Contrast southern British speech, where all allophones of the long low-front have become low-back and their old slot stands empty.

Of the ME diphthongs, the two foreign ones, uy and oy (both written oy or oi), remained relatively unchanged in early ModE but the first member of uy was unrounded and lowered along with the ME short mid-back u in general. The diphthong thus became not unlike the forward-moving glide into which the ME long high-front vowel ī had changed and in time it was leveled under this glide; hence such forms as jine for join, pizen for poison, etc. But because these forms did not agree with the conventional spelling they came to be thought incorrect and forms based on this spelling eventually replaced them in polite speech. ME ew, whether native or standing for French u, became a rising diphthong, as we have seen, and its first member tended to combine with a preceding consonant, as in sure (ME seur), or to be lost, as in rule (ME reule). In either case the second member became an allophone of the high-back vowel heard in cool, etc. But both members were kept in many if not most words, as in ewe, pewter, view, dew, due, etc. The other ME diphthongs, as we saw above, became vowels by loss of the second member.

But diphthongization before an r-sound brought into being a new set of diphthongs highly characteristic of ModE. In a two-member sequence made up of glide or long vowel and r-sound, a semivocalic phoneme developed between the members and combined with the first member to make a diphthong. Phoneticians write this semivowel with a turned e, the so-called schwa; in ordinary writing the phoneme, if not ignored, is symbolized with e, sometimes with a or o. Examples for the glides are flour or flower and brier (ME flour, OE brēr); for the high vowels, sure and fear (ME seur, OE fēran); for the mids, floor and mayor (OE flōr, ME mair); for the lows, car, abhor, care (ME carre, abhorren, OE caru n., carian vb.). Examples with r plus consonant are flowers, briers; boors, beard; force, mayors; cart, storm, bairn. In derivatives diphthong and r-sound may stand in different syllables, as in flowering, fiery, surest, dreary, flooring, mayoress, warrior, barring, fairish. The pattern was early extended to words in which the semivowel goes back to a weak vowel, as in prayer supplication, drawer boxlike sliding part, layer stratum, sewer drain. The first member of such a diphthong, if a high or mid vowel, was subject to lowering; hence such forms as shore for sure.

Of the short vowels before an r-sound of the same syllable, the lows underwent lengthening, as we have seen. The highs and mids were leveled under a vowel made in the middle of the mouth, not fully low but lower than mid. This vowel occurs in words like fir, fur, cur, her, myrrh; hurt, scourge, word, herd, early, hearse, bird, church, myrtle; also in derivatives like currish, furry. At first it was always rhotacized; that is, the front end of the tongue was making an r-sound at the same time that the body of the tongue made the vowel. Most Americans still speak thus, but in the east and south many millions have allophones of the vowel without this feature and the unrhotacized vowel is regular in eastern England and elsewhere. It is perhaps the most distinctive of English sounds and seems not to occur in other languages.

The change from ME to ModE in the consonant system is marked by the loss of the tectal fricative, written gh, and by the rise from allophonic to phonemic status of the tectal nasal, written ng. The tectal fricative occurred in ME in two allophonic types: a palatal after front vowels, a labialized velar otherwise. The palatal had become semivocalic by the fifteenth century, combining with the preceding vowel to make a long vowel, as in sight, or a diphthong, as in straight. The velar became a w-sound in some dialects, whence ModE taught, etc., an f-sound in others, whence ModE draught, etc. The tectal nasal was allophonic in ME, as in OE; it became a phoneme by virtue of contrasts like thin vs. thing, in which g no longer has a value of its own and serves only as a marker for the tectal value of the n it follows. The loss of the vibrant tectal stop in words like thing seems to have taken place by the fifteenth century. The vibrant counterpart of the sh-sound, familiar in words like vision and represented by (zh) in dictionary respellings for pronunciation, may have arisen as early as the fifteenth century but not until the seventeenth did writers on English speech bear witness to its existence. In distribution it is restricted to medial position except in a few French words like genre and rouge, where the French value of the g has been kept in English use.

In many weak syllables the change from ME to ModE is marked by a pattern new at the time but now a highly distinctive feature of English. With apocope or syncope of weak e in words like ME botel, bitter, maiden, widwe, harye (earlier herye, OE hergian lay waste), the sonorant of the weak syllable, hitherto consonantal, became sonantal. The modern spellings bottle, widow (earlier widw, widu), harry bring out this pattern. In maiden and the like the pattern is equally clear even though the spelling has remained medieval. In bitter a spelling bitr, with sonantal r, would show the early ModE form of the word, a form still widely current in America and elsewhere, but many speakers now have, instead, a sonantal allophone of the semivowel schwa (see above). This phoneme, besides its consonantal function as second member of diphthongs, early came to have a sonantal function in a multitude of weak syllables, where it goes back to a variety of weak vowels. See schwa in this dictionary.

Much more might be said about English phonology but it is time to take up morphology. A morpheme or minimal unit of meaning is made up of one or more phonemes. A word may be one morpheme, as in OE ā ay (ever), nū now, blind blind, or a sequence of morphemes, as in OE mislǣdan mislead, scipmann shipman, sēocnes sickness. The morphemes of such sequences fall into three classes: base or root, affix (prefix and suffix), and ending. Thus, mislǣdan has mis- for prefix, -lǣd- for base, and -an for ending. Our chief concern will be the endings, which, taken together, make a system of inflection, but first we will look at the affixes.

Old English had some forty prefixes, many of which are still formative (i.e., used in making new words). See the entries a-[1], a-[2], a-[3], after, arch-, be-, by-, even[1], for-, fore-, full, half, in-[1], mid-, mis-[1], off, out-, over-, to, to-, twi-, un-[1], un-[2], under-, up-, and with- of this dictionary. Of the prefixes listed, for- and with- are familiar but no longer formative, to- asunder occurs only in obsolete words, and twi- two survives only in twibill and twilight; in OE all four were in extensive use. OE thurh- has come down to us in two forms, through-, as in throughout (OE thurhūt), and thorough-, as in thoroughfare (ME thurghfare); the latter is no longer formative but new words are still made with through-, witness through-way. We no longer make verbs on the model of OE forthcuman come forth and onlōcian look on, but we say forthcoming and onlooker and new formations of this kind are possible enough. The old prefix ge- survives as a- in alike, as e- in enough, as -i- in handiwork, and as y- in the obsolete yclad, yclept. For further survivals see the entries along, answer, eddy, ember[2], midwife, ordeal, sandblind, twit, and wanton of this dictionary.

The suffixes of OE are conveniently grouped by word-classes (parts of speech). The ones here listed are those entered (in their modern forms) in the body of this dictionary: the noun suffixes -dom, -en[5], -er[1], -hood, -ing[1], -ling[1], -ness, -red, -ship, -ster, -teen, -th[1], -ty[1]; the adjective suffixes -ed[2], -en[2], -ern, -eth[2], -fold, -ful, -ish[1], -less, -ly, -th[2], -some[1], -ward, -y[1]; and the verb suffixes -le, -en[1], and -er[3]. Of these, -en[5] and -red are no longer formative and -th[1] and -en[2] are barely so. Old noun suffixes survive in bridle, drouth, herring, thicket, thimble, vixen, wedlock, weight; old adjective ones in fickle, steadfast; and old verb ones in cleanse, grunt. The following OE words exemplify suffixes now lost: eorlcund noble, hungerlǣwe starving, hunticge huntress, nēalǣcan draw nigh, lufwende lovable, lustbǣre cheerful, menniscu humanness (from mennisc human), metend meter (one who metes, measurer), sandīht sandy, scipincel little ship, stedewist steadiness, wǣpenbora soldier (weapon-bearer), warnung warning.

Most OE adverbs were made by adding -e to the corresponding adjective; thus, bealde boldly from beald bold and ǣrlīce early (adv.) from ǣrlic early (adj.). But -lice soon came to be thought of, without analysis, as an adverbial suffix, whence OE bealdlice boldly and the like, and many other adverbs came to be so made in ME times. In late ME adverbial -e was lost by apocope, along with all the other final weak e's of the language, leaving the field open to the alternative suffix, which by then had been reduced to -lī in the mouths of most speakers. But many of the old adverbs in -e kept their adverbial function after the loss of its outward sign, and we still say stand fast (OE stand fæste), not stand fastly. The OE adverbial suffix -mælum, as in dropmælum drop by drop, survives in piecemeal. See also the entries -ling[2], -s[1], soon, and whilom of this dictionary.

We come now to the endings of OE words, beginning with those of nouns. In Germanic the nouns fell into five major declensions (called a-, ō-, i-, u-, n-) and five minor ones (called root-, th-, r-, nd-, s-), each with its own set of endings (though the sets had many correspondences). This multiplicity was greatly reduced in OE with its three major declensions (a-, ō-, n-), alongside which stood a few relics of the past, some kept to this day. Again, the five-case system of Germanic nouns (nominative, accusative, genitive, dative, instrumental: N, A, G, D, I for short) survived in OE in a highly simplified form. We take up first the a-declension, made up of masculine and neuter nouns. The inflection of fox fox (masc.), hūs house (neut.), and col coal (neut.) shows the pattern found in Alfred's English:

	Singular				Plural
NA	fox	hūs	col	NA	foxas	hūs	colu
G	foxes	hūses	coles	G	foxa	hūsa	cola
DI	foxe	hūse	cole	DI	foxum	hūsum	colum

In Germanic the NA sg. forms had endings (more precisely, the thematic vowel -a-, whence the name of the declension, plus -z or -n), but in OE these had been lost. In proto-English all neuter nouns of this declension had -u (from Germanic -ō) for NA pl. ending, but the -u after a long syllable was early lost. In the tenth century, northern speakers began to extend the masculine NA pl. ending to the neuters and in ME this extension was carried through, with a further extension of the ending (-es in ME) to the other pl. forms of the declension; but the G pl. -es may have come from the G sg. In ModE the G sg. is written -'s, the G pl. -s' to distinguish each from the other and both from the non-G pl. form but this is a recent refinement of writing; in speech all three are identical. With the ME apocope of the DI sg. ending -e the declension was reduced from a three-form to a two-form pattern in the sg.: a form ending in -s for the G, one without ending for the other cases. A few OE neuter plurals without ending survived and in ModE this form has flourished, many words now having such a plural, some with, some without an alternative one in -s. Thus, we have for plural only sheep but both fish and fishes (OE fiscas).

The other two major declensions, the ō- and the n-, had a two-form pattern, nominative vs. oblique, in the singular but a three-form one in the plural. The ō-declension nouns were all feminine; the n-declension ones, nearly all masculine or feminine but at least two, ēage eye and ēare ear, were neuter and their singulars had a two-form pattern of their own: NA vs. GDI. The paradigms of the ō-declension nouns rōd rood and caru care and of the n-declension nouns apa ape (masc.) and ūle owl (fem.) follow:

	Singular				Plural
N	rōd	caru	apa	ūle	NA	rōde	care	apan	ūlan
O	rōde	care	apan	ūlan	G	rōda	cara	apena	ūlena
					DI	rōdum	carum	apum	ūlum

In proto-English all ō-declension nouns had -u (from Germanic -ō) for N sg. ending but this was lost after a long syllable. The N pl. of these nouns originally had -a, the A pl. -e for ending, but each came to mark both cases, -a being favored in some dialects, -e in others; with the general leveling of the vowels of weak syllables in late OE these distinctions became meaningless. At this time, too, the G sg. -es of the a-declension often replaced the G sg. -e of nouns which, like rōd, had no N sg. ending. In ME such replacements were carried further, and ended in the loss of the ō-declension, the nouns of which came to take the inflections of the a-declension.

The n-declension held its own and even gained ground for a time, thanks perhaps to the tenth-century innovation whereby the DI plural ending -um became -an in all declensions. But the loss of -n in weak words and weak final syllables, a sound-change that started in the north in the tenth century if not earlier, eventually proved ruinous to the n-declension. Most ME speakers kept the -n if the next word began with a vowel but dropped it otherwise, as we do still in the indefinite article (we say an oar but a boat), and this difference gave rise to hundreds of doublets, as maid and maiden, my and mine (OE mægden, mīn). When both members of such pairs survived, they commonly underwent some kind of differentiation; thus, my now serves as adjective, mine as pronoun. In the n-declension the form without -n came to be used as the singular, the one with -n as the plural; hence Chaucer's oxe vs. oxen. At this stage the declension distinguished number but not case and we know only from the context that the oxe of in an oxe stalle (Clerk 398) is genitive. But Chaucer also has in an oxes stalle (Clerk 291), with a genitive ending taken from the a-declension, which in such constructions, and eventually throughout, replaced the n-declension forms, and these survive as relics only: oxen, brethren, children, and kine; in the last three the ending was added to a form already plural (ME brethre, childre, ky). The Lady of Lady Day too is an n-declension genitive form.

Passing over the remnants of i- and u-declension forms left in OE, we reach the root-declension, numbering about 25 nouns, seven of which (eight if we count dialectal kye cows) still have forms with mutation of the root vowel. In OE the mutated vowel did not mark plurality; it occurred or might occur in both DI sg. and NA pl. and feminines might have it in the G sg. too. The mutation arose by anticipating the front articulation of an ending -i that was later lost after a long syllable; thus, the NA pl. of OE mūs mouse was mȳs mice (proto-English mūsi). Here the mutated vowel has come to mark plurality, as also in lice, geese, feet, teeth, and men (with women, OE wīfmenn). But breech (OE brēc, GDI sg. and NA pl. of brōc) might be either sg. or pl. in ME, whence the pl. form breeches. Vowel mutation also appears in ME brethre, an irregular form (OE brōthor, brōthru brothers). ME childre (OE cildru, NA pl. of cild child) is a relic of the s-declension. For the -n of brethren and children see above.

The noun inflections underwent great simplification in OE and even greater in ME times but nouns are still inflected to mark plurality and subordination. Adjective inflection, however, has been given up altogether and the only endings an adjective now takes are comparative -er (OE -ra) and superlative -est (OE -ost). In OE an adjective agreed with its noun in number, gender, and case. This agreement was marked by inflection according to the a-, ō-, or n-declension of nouns, altered by use of the following special endings: in the a-declension, D sg. -um, G pl. -ra, A sg. masc. -ne, NA pl. masc. -e; in the ō-declension, GDI sg. -re, G pl. -ra; in the n-declension, G pl. -ra. The a- or ō-declension was the one used unless a demonstrative or possessive preceded; thus, tamu hors tame horses but tha taman hors the tame horses. But ordinal numbers (except ōther other) and comparatives regularly took the n-declension endings. The simplification of the noun declensions carried with it that of the adjective ones and by Chaucer's time only one adjective ending was left: -e. This represented the n-declension in both sg. and pl., the other two declensions in the pl. If an adjective ended in -e (e.g. ME and OE swēte sweet), it took no inflection. A relic of adjective inflection was the prefix alder- (OE ealra of all), still in use as late as Shakespeare, witness his alderliefest dearest of all.

The special endings used in adjective inflection were pronominal in origin and it will be convenient to take up the pronouns next. Of the OE demonstratives, this by virtue of its frequent function as an adjective came to be inflected like other adjectives in the course of ME times, having this for sg. (in OE the neut. NA sg.), thise for pl. (so usually in Chaucer). The variant these (sometimes in Chaucer) had its vowel from the OE NA pl. thǣs, a mutated variant of thās. The history of that and the is more complicated. The inflection in late OE goes thus:

	Singular				Plural
	Masc.	Neut.		Fem.
N	the	thæt	N	thēo	NA	thā
A	thone	thæt	A	thā	G	thāra
G	thæs		GDI	thære	DI	thæm
D	thæm
I	thȳ, thē

Here the and thēo replaced standard OE se and sēo, making the initial consonant the same throughout. ModE the in phrases like "the more the merrier" goes back to OE thȳ, thē. As definite article the forms were regularly without stress and thus subject to reduction, and by 1150 all forms in this function had been leveled or reduced to the in east-midland speech. As demonstrative pronoun and adjective ME came to have that (OE thæt) for sg., tho (OE thā) for pl. The fourteenth-century variant those seems to be an alteration of tho made on the model of these.

The demonstratives this and that now have plural forms but no forms showing case or gender. The personal pronouns, however, still behave much as they did in OE, marking gender in the third person sg., case and number in all persons, though the dual number that OE had in the first and second persons has been lost. Here are the sg. and pl. forms of the first and second personal pronouns in OE:

	First	Second
N	ic, ih	thū
DIA	mē	thē
G	mīn	thīn
N	wē	gē
DIA	ūs	ēow
G	ūre	ēower

OE also had distinctive A forms (mec, ūsic, thec, ēowic) but these had gone out of use in the standard literary language, though still found in more or less dialectal texts and in poetry. Chaucer's ik and ich continue OE ic; his I continues OE ih, by loss of h and lengthening of i.

Greater changes have taken place in the forms of the third personal pronoun, as the OE paradigm shows:

	Singular				Plural
	Masc.	Neut.		Fem.
N	hē	hit	N	hīo, hēo	NA	hī(e), hēo
A	hine	hit	A	hīe, hȳ	D	him, heom
D	hīm		DG	hi(e)re	G	hi(e)ra
G	his

Here A and D are kept apart throughout, but as early as the tenth century the D forms began to serve as A forms too, except that hit not only held its own but in late ME began to serve also as a D form. In the end distinctive A forms were lost to the paradigm, and in ModE him came to be thought of as a strictly masc. form, its old neut. function being taken over by hit, which had become it by loss of h. In the same way his became restricted to masc. use, its old neut. function being taken over first by it, later by its, a sixteenth-century coinage that slowly made its way into speech.

The tale of how OE hīo, hēo became ME she is too long to tell here; it must suffice to say that the change can be explained. A two-case pattern emerged for the fem. with the loss of the A form: N she, O her (ME hire). The neut. also came to have a two-case pattern: NAD it, G its. Compare the three-case pattern of the masc., already found in OE: N he, DA him, G his. This diversity in the paradigm is made the greater by the loss of the OE pl. forms, replaced by ME they (N), theim or them (DA), their or ther (G), northernisms taken from the Scandinavian; the forms taken are cognate with OE thā, thǣm, thāra, the pl. inflection of thæt that. Chaucer has they but kept the native oblique forms hem (OE heom) and hire (OE hiera). His hem survives as 'em, so written because taken as a shortening of them.

The genitive forms of the personal pronouns were also used as possessive adjectives in OE, as still. The third personal forms were not declined but those of the first and second persons took the usual a- or ō-declension adjectival endings (see above). The special ending -es marking possessive pronouns (whence ModE ours, yours, hers, theirs) was a northernism that made its way south and was established in London speech by Chaucer's day; it is the familiar genitive sg. ending. The distinction between adjective and pronoun is made otherwise in the first and second persons sg.: my vs. mine and thy vs. thine. This distinction is not in Chaucer but its beginnings can be traced back to the fourteenth century in northern speech.

The interrogative pronoun was thus declined in OE:

	Masc.	Neut.
N	hwā	hwæt
A	hwone	hwæt
D	hwǣm
G	hwæs

The neut. also had instrumental forms: hwȳ why and hū how. The D had a variant hwām which in time drove hwǣm out of use. In ME it also replaced hwone and its vowel replaced that of the G form, giving early ME hwās. Chaucer has who, what, whom, whos, with the usual rounding of the long vowel. He also has variants with mid ō for the low ō, as in other words beginning with w, whence the ModE value of the o; compare the entries ooze[2], two, womb of this dictionary. Another OE interrogative was hwilc, ME whilk, which; it served as adjective and pronoun, as still. The interrogatives were not used as relatives in OE but in combination with swā so they were used as indefinites, whence ME whoso, whomso, whatso, whichso, to which ever might be added. The forms without ever are now archaic or obsolete and whichsoever in spite of its ever has also gone out of use. The forms without so (whoever, etc.) arose in ME times. Other OE indefinites were ǣnig any, fēawe few, genōg enough, manig many, nān none, no, sum some, auht aught, nauht naught, ǣgther either, ǣlc each, eall all, and the phrase ǣfre ǣlc ever each, whence ME everich every. OE fela many survived to the end of the sixteenth century. OE ān one could serve as an indefinite adjective (ān mann some man or other) and even as the indefinite article (ān mann a man), but the latter use did not flourish till ME times.

For relative pronoun OE had the uninflected particle the, used also in ME but not found after the fifteenth century. The demonstrative se, sēo, thæt also served as a relative in OE, either alone or combined with the particle, as in thætte for thæt the. In ME that became the chief relative pronoun and in this capacity it was not inflected. The interrogatives also came into use as relatives in ME: which and what in the twelfth, who in the thirteenth century. The current restrictions on the use of the various relatives are modern.

The changes in inflection outlined above brought about the loss of so-called grammatical gender. The gender of an OE noun was marked both by its own inflection and that of its modifiers. Thus, we know that OE wīf was neut. because it belonged to the a-declension and had wif for NA pl. Had it been fem. it would have had wife (instead of wifes) for G sg. and wife or wifa for NA pl. Moreover, wīf took neut. forms of the definite article. When the forms of adj. and noun came to be the same, whatever the gender of the noun, the feeling for grammatical gender was left without formal support and was soon lost. Gender-marking forms survive in the sg. of the third personal pronoun and the corresponding possessives; these serve to indicate the "natural" gender of the nouns they refer to, but feminines like ship show that gender in ModE need not be based strictly on sex.

The Germanic verb was inflected for voice, number, person, mode, and tense, but most of these inflections appear in OE either not at all or much reduced. Thus, the only survival of the old passive (originally middle) inflection was the form hātte is called, and passive voice was expressed in OE, as today, with the help of an auxiliary verb. Again, the OE verb had no dual number, and the three persons were distinguished in the indicative sg. only. The tenses of Indo-European had been reduced in Germanic to two, present and past, the present serving also as a future, and verb inflection in OE (as in ModE) falls into a present and a past system. The present system comprised an infinitive, a participle, and three present-tense modes: indicative, subjunctive (originally optative), and imperative. The past system comprised a participle and two past-tense modes: indicative and subjunctive.

Nearly all Germanic verbs distinguished past from present in one of two ways, traditionally called strong and weak. We illustrate with the conjugation of OE singan sing (strong) and ūtian oust (weak):

Present System		Past System
Inf.	singan, ūtian	Part.	sungen, ūtod
Part.	singende, ūtiende	Indic.
Indic.		Sg. 1	sang, ūtode
Sg. 1	singe, ūtie	2	sunge, ūtodes
2	singes, ūtas	3	sang, ūtode
3	singeth, ūtath	Pl.	sungon, ūtodon
Pl.	singath, ūtiath	Subj.
Subj.		Sg.	sunge, ūtode
Sg.	singe, ūtie	Pl.	sungen, ūtoden
Pl.	singen, ūtien
Impv.
Sg.	2 sing, ūta
Pl.	2 singath, ūtiath

Here the present and past systems are distinguished in two different ways: in the strong verb by gradation (i.e., distinctive root vowels); in the weak verb by suffixes, -i- or -a- for the present, -od- for the past. Present and past indic. are further marked by distinctive endings. Strong and weak endings are wholly different in the past indic. sg. but otherwise the two kinds of verbs differ little in their endings. The strong past participle has -en for distinctive suffix, whereas in weak verbs the past-system suffix serves for the past participle.

Strong conjugation is one of the oldest features of our speech, going back as it does to Indo-European times. The strong verbs of OE fell into seven classes, in the first five of which the verbs had a distinctive vowel (or diphthong) for the two past forms without ending, the indic. sg. 1 and 3. In Classes VI and VII, however, this feature was lacking, and these classes were also exceptional in that the root vowel of the past participle agreed with that of the present system. Examples are: for VI, scacan, scōc, scacen shake, shook, shaken; for VII, grōwan, grēow, grōwen grow, grew, grown. In ME in the other five classes we still find a distinction in root vowel between past forms with and without endings, witness Chaucer's he fond he found but they founde they found and he rood he rode but we riden we rode, but with the loss of the endings the tendency to simplify things proved irresistible except in was and were, which go back to the past tense of OE wesan be, a strong verb of class V. The losing vowel in the competition may survive in substandard speech or in conservative circles, as in riz rose and sung sang.

A few strong verbs of classes V and VI had a present system originally marked by a consonantal i-suffix in infinitive, participle, and most of the finite forms. This -i- had been lost, after lengthening a preceding consonant, but after r it had no lengthening effect and survived into OE times. We illustrate with the finite present forms of OE sittan sit and swerian swear:

Indic.
Sg.	1	sitte, swerie
	2	sites, sweres
	3	siteth, swereth
Pl.		sittath, sweriath
Subj.
Sg.		sitte, swerie
Pl.		sitten, swerien
Impv.
Sg.	2	site, swere
Pl.	2	sittath, sweriath

Weak conjugation is a feature peculiar to the Germanic languages. The weak verbs of OE fell into three classes; the conjugation of ūtian given above is typical of Class II, to which most weak verbs (most verbs, indeed) belonged and into which newly coined verbs and verbs from foreign tongues were commonly taken. Class I had a present system inflected like that of strong verbs; thus, OE dēman deem, ferian carry (whence ModE ferry), and trymman make firm, array (ModE trim) agreed in the present with singan, swerian, and sittan respectively. The past system of Class I had -ed, -d, or -t for suffix; the endings were the same as those of Class II. A few verbs of Class I were irregular in that the vocalism of present and past differed, as in tellan, tealde tell, told. In other cases the difference extended to the consonantism, as in bringan, brōhte bring, brought. Class III was a relic of what in Germanic had been an important conjugation. Three of its verbs, habban have, libban live, and secgan say, are still in constant use. Both strong and weak past participles might (and usually did) take a prefixed ge-.

We come now to the changes that took place in the verb inflections given above. The 2d sg. ending -s early became -st in the south, and in many verbs a preceding vowel underwent syncope, whence OE forms like thencst thinkest and wēpst weepest. Such verbs also underwent syncope in the 3d sg., whence OE thencth thinketh, wēpth weepeth, etc. The late OE leveling of vowels in unstressed syllables, however, added greatly to the number of verbs with -est and -eth in the 2d and 3d sg. and in time the forms without syncope became generalized. Chaucer still has a good many syncopated forms but in ModE only a few survive, as hast and hath from OE hæfst and hæfth. In northern speech -s held its own and more, spreading to the indic. and impv. pl., the 3d sg., and finally (in ME) to the 1st sg. The present indic. thus came to end in -s throughout, no formal distinctions of person or number surviving, and this inflection made its way south and came into widespread use. It may still be heard in substandard speech, but in standard English it established itself in the 3d sg. only. Its rival -eth is still familiar but only as an archaic ending, found in the Bible and the older literature. The 2d sg. -est also gives an archaic effect but for another reason, namely, the disuse of the 2d sg., the 2d pl. having taken its place in ordinary speech and writing.

Suffixal -i-, whether vocalic as in ūtian or consonantal as in swerian, was kept to the end of ME times in some dialects but survived into ModE only in ferry and the obsolete hery praise. The OE present indic. pl. -ath was kept in ME only in the south, in the form -eth; northern speakers, as we have seen, had -es instead, and midland speakers had -en, an ending identical with that of the past indic. and present and past subj. pl. ME unstressed -en thus came to mark infinitive, past participle (in strong verbs), and the pl. of present and past indic. and subj. This -en varied with -e (we had -en if the next word began with h or a vowel, otherwise we had -e) and after the general loss of -e by 1400 the variation became one between a form without ending and a form ending in -en, e.g. between drunk and drunken. In ModE such doublets were normally simplified by letting the one in -en die out, but the -en variant was the one kept in many past participles: thus, the ptp. of drive is driven, not driv. In other cases it was the one without ending that survived; the ptp. of sing is sung, not sungen. In yet other cases both forms survived, with differentiation. Thus, the ptp. of break is broken and the variant broke has become an adj. meaning "penniless." The prefixed ge- of the ptp. became y- in ME; it survives today only in archaic forms like yclad. The OE suffix -ende of the present participle was replaced by -inge in the greater part of the ME speech area, whence ModE -ing. Abstract nouns like OE handlung handling seem to have become more closely associated with their verbs after the suffix was changed to -ing in ME times; in any case, they came to be verbal nouns, otherwise known as gerunds, in ModE and their numbers multiplied. Thenceforth English had four verbids: two nouns (infinitive and gerund) and two adjectives (present and past participle).

The changes noted above reduced conjugation proper to very small proportions. Present and past were still systematically marked but the three persons, which even in OE and ME were not distinguished by inflection except in the indic. sg., kept this distinction in archaic style only; in other styles the ending -s marked the 3d sg. of the present indic. but number, person, and mode were otherwise left unmarked. The infinitive might be marked by setting to before it, the construction determining (as in OE) whether the marker was used or not. Throughout the history of the language strong verbs have tended to become weak, but what is left of the strong conjugation holds its own and bids fair to do so indefinitely. Indeed, now and then a weak verb becomes strong, as dig, dug and dive, dove.

The simple verb-forms were supplemented, in OE as now, with periphrastic forms made up of an auxiliary verb and the infinitive or a participle of the main verb. The verb bēon be, besides its other functions, served as passive auxiliary in OE much as it does today. Its forms go back to three Indo-European roots and make complications that cannot be gone into here; see the entry be of this dictionary. Other auxiliaries were drawn from a small but important class of Germanic verbs with a present tense answering in form to the strong past and a past tense having weak inflection. In these verbs the present indic. 2 sg. had a distinctive ending -t (in some verbs -st) and its root vowel agreed with that of the 1st and 3d sg. We illustrate with the finite forms of sculan have to, owe:

Indic.	Present	Past
Sg.	1 sceal	scolde
	2 scealt	scoldes(t)
	3 sceal	scolde
Pl.	sculon	scoldon
Subj.
Sg.	scyle	scolde
Pl.	scylen	scolden

In ME this inflection was little changed but in ModE only shall (present) and should (past) remain, besides shalt and shouldst in archaic style. Similarly can (OE) and could (ME coude, OE cūthe), may and might (OE mæg, mihte), dare and durst (OE dearr, dorste), and owe and ought (OE āgan, āhte). In the sixteenth century dare came to have a new past dared but it has kept durst besides, though this is now little used. Things went otherwise with owe: its new past owed (fifteenth century) led to a differentiation whereby ought became simply an auxiliary of predication, its one form serving for both present and past. The auxiliary must (OE, ME mōste), once only a past, came to have a present sense too in ME; the old present (OE, ME mōt) went out of use (except for archaizers) in the sixteenth century. Such verbs, now reduced to two forms or even to one, are commonly called defective. OE willan was also reduced to will and would in ModE and now goes with the defective verbs.

Futurity might be expressed in OE not only by the simple present tense (e.g. Mine englas thec lǣdath My angels will lead thee) but also by the present or past tense of sculan or willan with the infinitive of the main verb; the modern distinctions between shall and will in this function were not observed as late as Shakespeare's day. More commonly these and other such verbs served as modal auxiliaries, with the infinitive of the main verb. Other verbs that served as auxiliaries were weorthan become, wesan be, habban have, and dōn do. The first was an alternative to bēon as passive auxiliary. The present and past tenses of bēon with the present participle of the main verb made imperfect tenses, as in Ic eom flēonde fram hym I am fleeing from them and Hī thǣr stondende wǣron They were standing there. The modern so-called progressive tenses go back to these imperfects.

The usual OE auxiliary for the perfect and pluperfect tenses was habban, as in hæbbe ic ēac geāhsod I have also learned (perfect) and hæfde thā gefrūnen he had then found out (pluperfect). For intransitive verbs bēon was the usual auxiliary, as in Nū is sē dæg cumen That day now has come, but now and then habban served instead, and as time went on it came to be used more and more until in the nineteenth century the sphere of be had been reduced to a few intransitive verbs of motion like come and go. Even these now commonly take have. OE also had a periphrastic present tense, with dōn for auxiliary, that differed little if at all in meaning from the simple present: e.g. Swā dōth nū tha thēostro thinre gedrēfednesse withstandan mīnum lēothum lārum So do now the glooms of thy disturbed state of mind withstand my enlightening precepts. This periphrasis, seldom found in OE, became frequent in ME. Here is an example from Chaucer: When Phebus doth his bryghte bemes sprede. In early ModE its use hardly differed from that of Alfred and Chaucer, but today it is limited to questions, negations, and emphatic statements.

In syntax the changes outlined above brought about an increased use of prepositional phrases and fixities of word order to make the structure clear. But since English was already poor in inflections when our records of it begin and had become much more so by the end of OE times, word order was significant and prepositional phrases abounded in its earliest period; their growth in importance has been continuous from the first. Thus, if ModE "William slew Harold" and "Harold slew William" do not mean the same thing, OE "Willelm slōg Harold" and "Harold slōg Willelm" do not mean the same thing either. In both periods want of inflection forced the use of word order to distinguish subject from object. Contrast Old French, where the nominative and accusative cases are distinguished by inflection.

In the foregoing it was pointed out that the standard literary language of the tenth and eleventh centuries perished from the effects of the Norman Conquest and that ME times were marked by a reversion to primitive conditions, each man writing in his own local dialect. This state of things lasted for hundreds of years, and in the fourteenth century, when English literature once more began to flourish, the writers had no common literary vehicle at their disposal and were forced to make do with local or regional speech. England's unhappy fate had deprived them of the national audience which otherwise might have been theirs. Luckily the greatest of them happened to be a Londoner, and his native dialect was destined to become the basis for the literary standard which took shape in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries and which we have inherited. The speech of the capital would in any case have become the standard for written English, but Chaucer's poetry gave it literary distinction at the outset of the new era and smoothed its way to national use.

It remains to take up the foreign influences upon English. Like all other languages, ours throughout its history has had outside contacts and been affected by them. The most familiar and obvious effect has been that on the vocabulary. Leaving out of account the West Germanic heritage, though this included many words (e.g. cook and Friday) taken or translated from Latin before the migration to Britannia, we begin with the conversion to Christianity in the seventh century. The missionaries brought with them Mediterranean civilization in its Christianized form and the converts took it to their hearts and minds with surprising speed and warmth. The new religion made new men of them and set going a cultural revolution, the greatest that the English people have ever known. Here we can deal only with the linguistic side of this prodigious advance, which brought the English into the main stream of European life. The native wordstock, well enough for the days of heathendom, underwent a Latinization that made of it a vehicle suited to the needs of the new culture, "a fit tool even for the subtleties of philosophical and theological thought" (O. Vocadlo). Some of the needed words were simply taken from Latin, as offrian offer, sacrifice (the heathenism of OE blōtan kept it from use in the Christian sense). But many native words got new meanings, or new shades of meaning, by serving to translate Latin terms, as hūsl sacrifice, which rendered Latin hostia and thus came to mean 'host, eucharistic wafer.' Again, there were many coinages, as hēahhād holy orders (literally, high rank or state). In general, the clerics who did the Latinizing used native words and word-parts to make things easier for the less learned, priest and layman. Latin was an all-pervading influence but kept behind the scenes.

Very different was the course of events after the Norman Conquest. With the collapse of standard literary English the learned words fell into disuse. The work of the Latinizers was not wholly lost, since some of their terms had got into everyday speech, but English, once the name of a national vehicle of culture, became little more than a generic term for a congeries of kindred dialects. And when literary English was revived in the fourteenth century the writers did not fill out its cultural vocabulary as the men of old had done; instead, they took over bodily the Latin words that expressed what they had in mind, swayed, no doubt, by French example. This way of enlarging the word-stock proved especially congenial to the men of the Renaissance, who outdid by far the men of the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries in raiding Latin for words. They took words from Greek too, now and then, but the great vogue of Greek as a source of supply for learned words belongs to our own day.

The pattern of the English vocabulary had become fixed by the eighteenth century. On the one hand we have learned words, most of them taken, ultimately or directly, from Latin or Greek, the Greek words commonly in Latinized form and often old members of the Latin vocabulary, which from an early period included many words of Greek origin. On the other hand we have ordinary words, with a native English nucleus to which have been added many thousands of words from other tongues. The words added in medieval times came chiefly from Latin, French, and Scandinavian; those added later, from a great variety of sources. The reader is invited to look at the etymologies of all the words entered on four or five pages, taken at random, of this dictionary. Doing this will give him a better idea of the diverse origins of English words than anything we can say here. Yet in this respect our language differs less from others than is commonly thought. Nearly all languages swarm with words of foreign origin, and some go far beyond English in their hospitality to the stranger. And if English in its wordstock is polyglot, in its structure it is native enough.

By way of exception, ModE (as against OE and ME) has many affixes of foreign origin that are used in making new words and therefore have a structural function. We end with a list of the more important of these. The reader will find them all entered in this dictionary, and to these entries he is referred for more information about them.

Usage, Dialects, and Functional Varieties

RAVEN I. McDAVID, JR.

SINCE LANGUAGE is the most habitual form of human behavior, the details of usage often become class markers. Social anthropologists have noted that the more ostensibly "open" a society happens to be, the more tolerant it is of the rise of its members to higher class status and the more subtle are the values used for setting one group above another. In the United States, where it is accepted that the grandsons of immigrants and laborers may fill the highest offices in the land, concern with acquiring certain forms of usage as indications of social status is likely to replace the slow acculturation to upper-class mores that has characterized older and more traditionally oriented societies.

Although actually there are subtle distinctions in usage which will determine the appropriateness of a given form on a particular occasion, and which can be appreciated only by long observation and intuitive experience, the prevailing public attitude is that certain forms of usage are "correct" and others are "incorrect." Teachers, especially of English, are supposed to know the difference between "right" and "wrong" in language. And entrepreneurs who make fortunes out of public anxieties stand ready to provide what the schools haven't given, by warning against "common mistakes" in the language of even the best educated. Furthermore, "right" usage is supposed to be stable, as opposed to "wrong" usage which is changing, while in fact some widely spread forms, favored by authoritarians, are clearly innovations and are still regarded by many cultivated speakers as pretentious affectations of the half-educated.

The cold fact about usage in natural languages is that it is diverse and is subject to change. Essentially, in the usage of native speakers, whatever is, is right; but some usages may be more appropriate than others, at least socially. It is not merely the number of speakers and writers that determines the appropriateness, but their age, education, sophistication, and social position. Within any living language there will be varieties of usage associated with geographical origin (regional dialects or simply dialects), social status (social dialects or social levels), and relationships (styles or functional varieties), as well as such special varieties as slang, argot, and technical language. All of these arise out of the normal interactions of human beings in a complex society.

Regional dialects originate in a variety of ways. Most commonly they come about from settlement, whether old, as of the Germanic tribes between the Rhine and the Elbe, or recent, as of Southern Englishmen in eastern Virginia and Ulster Scots (more commonly called Scotch-Irish) west of the Blue Ridge. Dialects spread along routes of migration and communication. For example, words and pronunciations characteristic of western New England mark the progress of Yankees across New York State and the Great Lakes Basin. In this Northern dialect area we find such grammatical forms as dove for the past tense of dive, "sick to the stomach" for "nauseated," and darning needle as the popular name of the dragonfly. Settlements by speakers of other languages may leave their mark. In the Hudson Valley, which was settled by the Dutch, stoop, derived from stoep, is commonly used for "porch." In Pennsylvania and settlements elsewhere by Pennsylvania Germans, smearcase, modified from Schmierkäse, denotes "cottage cheese" or any soft cheese suitable for spreading. The Scandinavian loan translation, to cook coffee, is used in place of to make, brew, or fix it in the Upper Midwest. The Spanish frijoles, plural of frijol, is used to denote the kidney beans widely used in Texas and other parts of the Southwest.

A dialect area with an important cultural center, whose characteristic speech forms tend to spread, is a focal area. Older focal areas in the United States are southeastern New England (Boston), the Delaware Valley (Philadelphia), the Upper Ohio Valley (Pittsburgh), the Virginia Piedmont (Richmond and its neighboring cities), and the South Carolina Low-Country (Charleston). Among newer focal areas that have been identified are the Carolina-Georgia Piedmont (Atlanta-Charlotte), Metropolitan Chicago, New Orleans, Salt Lake City, and the San Francisco Bay area. Others are in process of developing, even as older areas like Richmond and Charleston have lost their preeminence.

An area lacking an important center, whose characteristic speech forms are preserved mainly by the older and less educated, is a relic area. Among the more noticeable relic areas are northeastern New England (Maine and New Hampshire), Delmarva (the eastern shore of Chesapeake Bay), the North Carolina Coast, and the Southern Appalachians. Similar regional dialects are found in other parts of the English-speaking world. They are much more sharply defined in the British Isles, much less sharply in Australia. In Canada, as in the United States, regional and local differences are sharpest in the older coastal settlements (New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, and especially in Newfoundland), least sharp in the prairie and Rocky Mountain areas where there was almost no permanent settlement before the building of the transcontinental railroads. But no geographic region is without its local subtypes, and in the United States there is nothing that qualifies as a mythically uniform General American Speech.

Cutting across regional distinctions are social ones. In every linguistic community there are certain people whose speech and writing is admired as a model of cultivated usage, because of their wealth, education, family connections, or social position. In sharp contrast is the usage of those with little formal education, experience acquired from travel, or other marks of sophistication, and this we would call folk usage. In between is common usage. How distant from each other the three types are depends, essentially, on the social structure of a particular community.

What is standard usage may sometimes be determined by an official body charged with setting the standard. In England in the 17th and 18th centuries there was a movement toward setting up an academy for the English language, a manifestation of the appeal of the idea of linguistic legislation to the neoclassical era. The movement drew its strength in part from the classical model of Plato's Academy, but more from the example of the extant academies on the Continent, the Italian Academia della Crusca (1592) and especially the Académie Française (1635), founded by Richelieu. Other academies developed in Europe, notably in Spain and Russia, but no English academy ever arose. Although Dryden, Defoe, Pope, Swift, and Addison and Steele, among others, viewed with alarm the "decay" of the English language and agreed that only an academy could set things right, they could not agree on who was to head it, and the Royal Society, the one learned body that might have assumed the role, confined its interest to the physical sciences. Samuel Johnson originally proposed to set himself up as the arbiter of the English language through his dictionary, but the result of his labors was to convince him that such a role was impracticable.

Nevertheless, the learned of Johnson's day vested in his dictionary the authority of the academy that Johnson had eschewed, and established the Anglo-American tradition of dictionary worship, which assumes that a dictionary must and does include within its covers more accurate information on any word than any layman could possibly have. The yearning for an academy is not a thing of the past; laymen are far less likely to criticize a dictionary or a grammar for unwarranted assumptions of authority than for abdicating its responsibility to make decisions the public are bound to obey.

Academies usually select one local variety of educated speech to impose as an official standard: Roman-Florentine in Italy, Parisian in France, Castilian in Spain, and Moscovian in Russia. Their legislative power induces a conservatism that prevents their decisions from accurately representing cultivated usage. If the Académie Française overlooks or rejects a word or meaning at its weekly meeting, no reconsideration is possible for several decades, until the rest of the dictionary has been revised and the same part of the alphabet comes up again. As a result, there is a growing split between academic usage, subservient to the Academy, and popular educated usage, defiant of it.

Inasmuch as the academy-sponsored prestige dialects of Italy, France, Spain and Russia had achieved their positions before the academies were set up, essentially the academies merely recognized accomplished facts. In Great Britain the grammar and pronunciation used by educated men from the south of England, called Received Standard, have informally achieved highest status without an academy. Fostered by the "public schools," Winchester, Eton, and the like, and by the two great universities, Oxford and Cambridge, Received Standard has long been a badge of office for those who handle the affairs of church and state. Used normally by upper-class families, Received Standard as taught in the public schools to children of the newly rich has been one of the ways for the established order to accommodate the new wealth. A merchant or manufacturer who has risen in society cannot acquire the accent or forms of usage of his new class, but his children can—and the status that goes with it. Yet even in its heyday Received Standard was never uniform or unchanging. Observers have commented on many changes over the past two generations. Today, with the expansion of education under the welfare state, it is no longer possible to bestow Received Standard on every recruit to the intellectual elite, and it has consequently lost much of its glamour.

Until the 1920's, Received Standard was the usual model for teaching English to native speakers of other languages. It is the basis for the local varieties of English that have arisen in the new nations developing out of the Commonwealth in Asia and Africa. The educational systems of these countries have been modeled on British practice, and some of their institutions of higher education are still affiliated with British universities. In Europe there is still a notion in some quarters that Received Standard is "better" or "more elegant" than any variety of American English. However, as overseas students come to the United States in increasing numbers, and as American commercial and educational operations develop overseas, the prestige of Received Standard is no longer unquestioned.

The American criteria for separating standard from nonstandard usage are of yet another sort. On the one hand, a predominantly middle-class society, believing in the importance of formal education, is likely to accept authoritarian judgments; on the other, Americans have inherited traditions of democratic individualism, and are likely to resent the proscription of habitual pronunciations, words, and even grammatical forms. But contributing most to the American multivalued standard is the history of strong local cultural traditions. Before the American Revolution and for some time thereafter, communication between the colonies, or the new states, was difficult. In Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Richmond, and Charleston, indigenous cultivated English developed in different ways. In the new cities to the west similar developments took place. In some rural areas and in a few cities, notably New York, the rapid assimilation of large numbers of immigrants with languages other than English has almost swamped traditional local educated usage and pronunciation.

Throughout the English-speaking world and particularly in America, the grammar of the educated is much more uniform than their pronunciation. In fact, grammar is the surest linguistic index of a speaker's education and general culture. There are almost no structural differences from region to region. The familiar use of such verb phrases as might could and used to could by educated Southerners stands almost alone. Even in matters of incidence there are few regional differences in the grammar of educated people. One of these is the Northern use of dove (dōv) for the past tense of dived.

As we might expect, grammatical variations are greater in folk and common usage than among the cultivated. Alongside the standard past tense saw we find see, seed, and seen. The last is common everywhere but in New England, the two others are restricted regionally. Beside the standard climbed, we have clam, clim, clom, clome, cloom, and clum, with fairly clear regional patterns, though the last is the most common.

In vocabulary, the sharpest regional distinctions concern matters of humble and rustic life before the mechanization of agriculture. Many such words are only faintly remembered as supermarkets and mass advertising substitute national terms for local ones. But at the same time, new local and regional terms are developing. A dry cleaning establishment is a cleanser in Boston; a rubber band is a rubber binder in Minnesota. The grass strip between sidewalk and street is a boulevard in Minneapolis, a devil strip in Akron, a tree lawn in Cleveland, and a tree belt in Springfield, Massachusetts; a sandwich of many ingredients, in a small loaf of bread, is a poor boy in New Orleans, a submarine in Boston, a hoagy in Philadelphia, a hero in New York City, and a grinder in upstate New York.

Regional and social differences are not to be confused with style. Both educated and uneducated usage, wherever encountered, have formal and informal modes though the educated speaker has more gradations at his command. Informal usage is neither better nor worse than the formal usage of the same speaker. What really matters is that each usage should be appropriate for the situation. An educated speaker will transfer from informal haven't to formal have not. The uneducated speaker who informally uses I seen or I done gone may adjust to the formal mode with I have saw and I have went.

Slang is usually but not inevitably associated with the informal style. Characterized by novelty and impermanence, it is used to indicate that one is up to date, but it often merely indicates that one is dated. Within a few years hot as a general adjective of approbation gave way to cool, and cool in turn to boss. Recently, however, old slang terms have been temporarily revivified by the rerunning of old movies on television.

Slang was once a synonym for argot, the ingroup language used by those who participate in a particular activity, especially a criminal one. In fact, much slang still derives from small, specialized groups, some of it nursed along tenderly by press agents. Popular musicians have originated many slang expressions now in general use. The word jazz itself is a good example: a Southern term meaning to copulate, it was used by the musicians who entertained in New Orleans brothels to describe their kinds of musical improvisations and soon came into general use despite the horror of Southerners who had previously known the word as a taboo verb. Today much slang originates with narcotic addicts, spreads to popular musicians, and then gains vogue among the young, while falling into disuse among its inventors. Other argot, however, is restricted to the practitioners of a particular field: boff, meaning variously "a humorous line," "a belly laugh," or "a box office hit," seems restricted in its use to theatrical circles; snow, as it means "cocaine or heroin," is a common term only among drug addicts.

The fate of slang and argot terms is unpredictable. Most of them disappear rapidly, some win their way into standard use, and still others remain what they were to begin with. Mob, deplored by Swift and other purists of 1700, would never be questioned today, but moll, meaning "a prostitute" or "the mistress of a gangster," has been in use since the early 1600's, and is still slang.

Technical terms arise because it is necessary for those who share a scientific or technical interest to have a basis for discussion. The difference between scientific and popular usage may be seen most strikingly in the biological sciences. A Latin term like Panthera Leo (lion) has a specific reference, while cougar may refer to any large wild American feline predator, or partridge may designate the bob-white quail, a kind of grouse, or some other game bird, according to local usage. Common words may be used with specific reference in a given field: fusion denotes one thing in politics, another in nuclear physics. As a field of inquiry becomes a matter of general interest, its technical terms will be picked up and used with less precision. Because of popular interest in Freudian psychology, such terms as complex, fixation, and transference are bandied about in senses Freud would never have sanctioned.

Despite some yearnings for authorities who would prescribe how people should use their language, the tendency in the English-speaking world is toward teaching based on objective description of the language. This does not mean an abandonment of standards. Indeed, in some situations this approach may call for rigorous drill so as to make habitual the features which everywhere set off standard usage from other varieties. It may also lead to systematic and rigorous drill to impart a fuller command of the rhetorical possibilities of standard English. At the same time, it should provide a more flexible attitude, an acceptance of varieties of cultivated speech other than one's own, and an understanding of the ways in which varieties of a language arose.

The Pronunciation of English

ARTHUR J. BRONSTEIN

PEOPLE do not speak "language" but a language. Each language, in turn, is usually made up of a variety of dialects. To the linguist, a dialect is not a provincial deviation from the standard language, but simply a group of characteristics peculiar to a language in a specific locality or social group. No one dialect may properly be singled out as "better than" or "preferable to" any other, except as it manages to communicate meaning with effectiveness, ease, and appropriateness to the situation in which it is used.

Despite an apparent conformity to group or regional usage, each individual still retains certain speech patterns—subtle variations of pronunciation, vocabulary, and syntax—that are uniquely his own. The sum of these individual characteristics is described as an idiolect.

In determining which speech patterns are socially acceptable, the terms standard and nonstandard have been widely adopted. Standard is used to describe the varieties of speech used by the educated people of any community, nonstandard to describe the deviations therefrom.

In England, standard pronunciation is often referred to as Received Pronunciation, or simply RP. Formerly the dialect of the upper class of London, it became the speech fostered by the most prestigious English universities and schools. It is now the speech of most of England's political, commercial, cultural, and social leaders. The reason for the wide acceptance of RP in England was one of practical necessity: the dialects of England are numerous and differ markedly from one region to the next. By adopting a variety or pattern of speech generally recognized as desirable, a twofold purpose was served of facilitating communication throughout the country and establishing a criterion of social acceptability. To a greater or lesser extent RP has been an influence on all English-speaking nations of the British Commonwealth.

In the United States there has been much less need for a single prestigious pronunciation standard. Although American English is made up of a large number of local and regional types of speech, the differences among them are relatively minor and constitute no appreciable barrier to communication. No one regional dialect has gained ascendency here as more desirable than any other. It is accepted here that cultivated speech can and does exist in all regions, with many regional differences quite readily noticeable to the sophisticated listener.

Within any geographical area will be found a variety of socially defined dialects reflecting different levels of educational and sometimes social attainment. Urban dwellers—especially those of greatest influence—who have a college education and enjoy many cultural advantages are generally characterized as having cultivated speech. Contrasted with this is folk speech, usually characteristic of inhabitants of remote or isolated rural areas who have had little education and cultural contact. Between the two extremes and constituting the great majority of speakers in any region are those with common speech, who may or may not hold important positions and usually have less formal education than speakers of the cultivated variety of speech. Needless to say, these three varieties are not mutually exclusive compartments.*

Every person uses different styles or varieties of speech. The most commonly identified are the formal and informal styles. In the case of speakers of cultivated English, cultivated formal is the language style reserved for the more formal occasions, for public speeches, scholarly reports, and the like. Its tone most nearly approaches writing in its careful structure of sentences, its avoidance of contractions, etc. Cultivated informal is the language style of the same speakers in most other situations. It may range from the near-formal constructions to the more casual if not intimate expressions and forms that may even include slang and folk forms. It is this language style that most nearly reflects everyday living. There is a good deal of overlapping, of course, between what we consider cultivated standard speech and common or even folk speech.

Available evidence identifies a number of major regional speech areas. In the eastern part of the United States and Canada, where the greatest amount of investigation has been undertaken, three large regional areas have been separately identified, each quite distinctive from the other. These are known as the Northern, Middle Atlantic or Midland, and Southern areas. In turn, these larger areas possess reasonably distinct subareas, thus separating eastern New England from western New England; New York City from the Hudson Valley, upstate New York, Vermont, and eastern Canada; the more northern Midland regions (eastern Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and the Delaware Valley south to the Delmarva peninsula) from the southern Midland regions (the upper Potomac and Ohio Valleys, western North and South Carolina, West Virginia and eastern Tennessee and eastern Kentucky); and the Piedmont section of Virginia from North Carolina, the low country of South Carolina and Georgia, the Florida peninsula, and the Gulf States of Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana and Texas. As the listener travels west, the lines separating speech areas from each other are less distinct, yet sufficient evidence is available to identify such larger regional areas as the Central Midland area (perhaps the largest regional speech area, since it seems to extend from Ohio and the Southern Mountain regions west to the Rocky Mountain areas of Colorado, Utah, and Wyoming and south to the northwest tip of Texas and to New Mexico, with many regional subareas); the North Central area (spreading from east of the Great Lakes to the Dakotas); the Pacific and Southwestern areas (California, Nevada, Arizona); and the Northwest (Washington, Oregon, Idaho, and Montana). Detailed studies have not been completed in most of these areas, but there seems to be little doubt that many subareas exist within each of the larger speech areas mentioned.

Geographical divisions are most clearly defined along the Atlantic coast, the earliest area of settlement; but to the west, the boundaries between speech areas are harder to determine because the westward migrations of the 19th century often crossed and intermingled, and the areas never knew the relative isolation of the 17th and 18th centuries in the Atlantic colonies.

The speech patterns of present-day American English have their origin in the language of the colonies along the eastern seaboard during the 17th century. Since there was relatively little communication between the colonies for nearly a century, the diverse speech patterns of the colonial settlers had a chance to develop their own distinctive forms prior to the time of increased contacts between the seaboard settlements and the beginnings of the inland expansion to the West.

The regional dialects of the interior correspond closely to the waves of settlers during the 18th century. Large migrations moved westward from western New England into the Great Lakes basin, and from Pennsylvania southward into the Carolinas and Georgia, and later into Kentucky, Tennessee, and the southern parts of Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois. Other Pennsylvanians and New Jerseyites settled in the Ohio Valley and West Virginia. Another large migration from the southern colonies settled in the Gulf States and eastern Texas. The westward settlement into the interior of the country stemmed mostly from the former inhabitants of the south Midland areas and the more northern inland sections (western New England, upper New York State, etc.), with very few settlers from the South Atlantic, the northern Midland, or eastern New England joining the large westward migrations of the 18th century. Later, these streams of migrations continued, crossing a number of times, as people moved into the Great Plains, the Rocky Mountain States, and the west coast areas.

By the 19th century, many sections of the country had developed distinctive speech patterns, but, since the differences were more of flavor than of substance, communication between speakers of different dialects never became a problem and the need for a single, accepted standard pronunciation never developed here as it did in England.

Systems for pronunciation transcription vary in detail according to the purposes for which they are used. Such pronunciation systems must contain symbols for the representation of each of the distinctive sounds in a language. The most widely known and used phonetic system is the International Phonetic Alphabet (IPA), a system used for the transcription of many of the languages of the world. This system contains symbols not only for the transcription of significant or distinctive sounds of languages, but also for the indication or transcription of many phonetic variations of these sounds. The detail available in this system makes it suitable for the representation of both the significant and nonsignificant spoken features of many languages.

A different type of pronunciation representation uses symbols only for what is known as phonemic or broad transcription. In this system, each symbol represents a sound that is significantly different from all other sounds in a given language. In English we recognize the initial sounds of bat and pat as completely different because they serve to change the meaning of a word and to distinguish one word from another. If, however, we compare the p-sound in peak with the p-sound in speak, we may notice that they are not phonetically identical: the first p is pronounced with aspiration, the second without. Thus, while the English speaker recognizes b and p as separate sounds that can distinguish similar words from each other, the presence and absence of aspiration in the p's of peak and speak constitute only phonetic variations, or allophones, of the same sound in English. The speaker of the language does not recognize them as significantly different. They are, to him, simply (p).

A broad transcription presents the sounds of a language as a pattern of phonemic oppositions characteristic of that language, each language having its own pattern of phonemes, each with its allophonic variants. A narrow transcription provides a stock of symbols attempting to cover other identifiable sound features of the language, thus allowing for greater phonetic accuracy when needed. In order to present a simple yet comprehensive pronunciation key, this dictionary utilizes a type of broad transcription modified when necessary by additional phonetic detail.

In this dictionary, the basic principle has been that each distinctive sound in our language should be represented by only one symbol. The initial sound of fine and the final sound of enough are both transcribed as (f). In addition to these easily distinguishable phonemic units, there are certain nonphonemic features which the reader can hear and distinguish. These nondistinctive but phonically important features are shown in order to provide the speaker with a smooth and realistic guide to pronunciation. Thus, for example, the symbol ᵊ is used before syllabic consonants in words like button (butᐟᵊn) and channel (cℏanᐟᵊl) to indicate that the vocalic quality is transferred to the final consonant. The same symbol is used to indicate the gliding, diphthongal quality of the vowel sounds of fire (fīᵊr) and tire (tīᵊr).

In using an essentially broad transcription, the symbols chosen must be those most likely to lead the user to a phonetically accurate pronunciation. Thus, this dictionary uses the symbol (ē) rather than the traditional (i) in the less stressed syllables of city (sitᐟē) and funny (funᐟē). Many phoneticians in the United States agree that the vowel of this less stressed syllable varies from (ē) to (i), with perhaps greater use of (ē) by most speakers. The use of (ē) gives the reader a close phonetic approximation of the sound and allows him to make his own adjustment in pronunciation more accurately than he can with the (i) as a guide.

Among educated speakers of American English—and indeed in the English-speaking world—there are few differences in the system of phonemes. Among them are the following:

In eastern New England and western Pennsylvania there is general homophony of the vowel sounds in such words as tot and taught, collar and caller, resulting in (o)—IPA [ɒ]—for most speakers in those areas. In other areas a distinction is made between cot (kät) or (kot) and caught (kôt), etc.

In words like sister, dinner, and milk, many speakers use a high, central vowel, IPA [ɨ], where others retain (i). For many speakers, [ɨ] and (i) are in free variation; for others, the use of [ɨ] is of such consistency that some linguists believe it should be accorded phonemic status. Whether it is considered a separate phoneme or an allophone of (i), there can be no question about its use by many educated speakers.

The loss of final (r) is common in the eastern United States at every level of speech. Bostonians, New Yorkers, and Southern coastal speakers either replace the dropped (r) with a (ə), as in pair, for (pāᐟə, fôᐟə), or drop it completely, as in car (kä), with simultaneous vowel lengthening. A phenomenon that often occurs along with "r-dropping" is the addition of a "linking-r." Certain speakers who drop postvocalic (r) in such expressions as He's not here (. . . hēᐟər . . .) reinsert the (r) when it becomes intervocalic. This change occurs, for example, in He's not here anymore (. . . hēᐟər enᐟē . . .). Linking-r is not commonly used by r-dropping speakers of the South.

An added, unhistorical (r) may appear in the speech of many people. This (r), which usually intrudes intervocalically, is common to those people, especially Bostonians, New Yorkers, and others in the Northeast, who lose final (r) sounds. Thus we may hear Whose idea is that? (. . . ī dēᐟər iz . . .), I saw a star (. . . sôrᐟə . . .). The phenomenon is uncommon among Southern coastal speakers who also lose final (r), and is, of course, uncommon to speakers in the rest of the country, who typically do not lose final (r). Attitudes toward the use of this (r) range from disdain through indifference to acceptance. It is not uncommon in casual, educated speech, and will probably remain in those regions in which it is heard.

Since each speaker is usually consistent in his use of (o) or (ô), in his dropping of (r), etc., the pronunciation key of a dictionary will automatically guide him to his own, consistent pronunciation of each sound. Similarly, differences in the actual sounds of the phonemes do not need to be shown in pronunciation keys, although they do exist; the a as in date is not pronounced identically in Boston, Charleston, Chicago, and Pittsburgh.

In some instances, however, it seems important to indicate those major dialect differences which cannot be accommodated automatically in a pronunciation key. These variations are either regional, as in the pronunciation of dance (dans, dăns), or a result of language change, as in tune (tōōn, tyōōn), and are in common use among educated speakers.

Many speakers pronounce such pairs as weather-whether and wear-where quite differently as (weℏᐟər, hweℏᐟər) and (wâr, hwâr). Other speakers pronounce the pairs as homonyms with an initial (w). The loss of initial (h) and a merger of (hw) and (w) is found in at least three regions of the United States: the coastal Middle Atlantic, coastal New England, and the coast of South Carolina and Georgia. Among speakers from these areas an initial (hw) does not occur. Among others, a phonemic contrast (hw)-(w) is present, as in wear (wâr) and where (hwâr). Both types of speech may be heard throughout the country at all social levels, although the use of (w) for these wh- words is growing, especially in urban areas.

The use of initial (hy) and (y) may be described in much the same way as that of (hw) and (w). In words like huge and humor, we may hear two possible forms: (hyōōj, yōōj) and (hyōōᐟmər, yōōᐟmər). Although speakers throughout the country use initial (hy) in human, hue, and huge, and distinguish between hue (hyōō) and you (yōō), the number of speakers who omit (h) in hue is sufficiently large to warrant showing both varieties in a dictionary. The use of (hy), like that of (hw), is regional only to a certain extent: the merger of (hy) and (y) is increasing at all social and educational levels, although it is not as commonly heard among educated speakers as the merger of (hw) and (w).

Another example of common phonetic variation is heard in the pronunciations of tune (tōōn, tyōōn), dune (dōōn, dyōōn), and news (nōōz, nyōōz). The (y) after (t, d, and n) survives to some extent in New England and in the New York City area and is the common pronunciation in the South. In all other areas (y) drops out after these consonants, although individual speakers may retain it to a greater or lesser degree. The pronunciations (tōōn), (dōōn), and (nōōz), with (ōō) or a somewhat centralized (o͝o)—IPA [ü]—are normal for most Americans.

In words like hurry, worry, and courage, central and western speakers and some speakers in the southern Midlands have the pronunciations (hûrᐟē), (wûrᐟē), and (kûrᐟij). They use the same vowel in fur (fûr). In the East and South, most speakers distinguish between the vowels of fur (fûr) and hurry, worry, and courage (hurᐟē), (wurᐟē), and (kurᐟij). To accommodate both widely heard pronunciations, the RHD shows both the (hûrᐟē) and the (hurᐟē) varieties.

The distribution of the vowels (ō), (ô), and (o) is an important part of American dialect division. The distinction between horse (hôrs) and hoarse (hōrs) has been lost by most speakers in the north central and southwestern areas of the country, in western New England and upstate New York, and in metropolitan New York. The resulting vowel is (ô) in both words and in such pairs as for-four and morning-mourning. The rest of the country generally maintains the distinction in these words. The pronunciation of territory (terᐟi tōrᐟē, -tôrᐟē) also reflects this regional division. Before intersyllabic (r), as in orange and tomorrow, variants ranging from (ä) to (ô) appear in all areas of the country; (o) and (ä) occur regularly in the Northeast and in the eastern coastal areas, with (o) predominating in eastern New England. The most common form in the South is (ä). In the rest of the country (ô) is heard regularly, although (o) is also frequent. In words like hog, mock, and prong, (ä) predominates in western New England and in upstate and metropolitan New York, (o) in eastern New England and western Pennsylvania, and (ô) in the rest of the country. Lastly, the word dog and words like song, long, and strong are said with either (ô) or (o) in all areas of the country.

The words glass, dance, and aunt are pronounced with the vowel (ä) by many in eastern New England, in eastern Virginia, and along the Georgia and South Carolina coast. In the rest of the country the vowel is (a), or in the South, the diphthongal variant (aᵉ). Certain individuals imitate the "broad a" (ä) for its supposed prestige value, a value which is totally lacking in New England and the noted sections in the South. In fact, the pronunciation with (a) is becoming more frequent in the areas where (ä) has predominated.

The obscuring of vowels as they lose stress is an extremely common phenomenon in English and results in the presence of weak vowels, most often the schwa (ə). Vowel obscuration occurs both within the word, as in above (əbuvᐟ), circus (sûrᐟkəs), and within the phrase. Thus many function words have two levels of pronunciation, a stressed and an unstressed one. The forms her (hûr) and them (ℏem) become (hər or ər), (ℏəm or əm) when unstressed, as her in Did' you see' her? Other words affected by weak stress are prepositions, such as from (frum, from; unstressed frəm) and at (at; unstressed ət, it); conjunctions, such as and (and; unstressed ənd, ən) and but (but; unstressed bət); and auxiliaries, such as have (hav; unstressed həv, əv), has (haz; unstressed həz, əz), and was (wuz, woz; unstressed wəz). The use of unstressed vowels is normal and expected in English, and both stressed and unstressed forms are recorded in the dictionary.

A final important feature of this dictionary is the large body of foreign words and phrases that form an active part of the English lexicon. Each borrowed term occupies a place on a continuum stretching from the point where it is still considered foreign to the point where it has been completely assimilated into English. The foreign word is recognized as such by speakers of English but is used frequently enough to warrant inclusion in an English dictionary. For these words and phrases, such as the phrases of greeting in French, Spanish, German, etc., only a foreign pronunciation is given. At the other extreme is the loan word. Although etymologically from another language, it is almost always thought of as English, and given an English pronunciation by speakers. Words such as ski and sauerkraut are typical loan words.

Between these two extremes fall words which have been assimilated into English to different extents. Their degree of "Englishness" is determined by how most speakers pronounce them. The more foreign a word is, the more we tend to mark its difference by putting it in italics or, in a less formal situation, quotation marks, and by giving it a foreign or at least a hybrid pronunciation. When a word is thought of as English, we write it normally, sometimes with an Anglicized spelling, omitting accents, and give it an Anglicized pronunciation.

The dictionary entry reflects the current general status of the foreign word in English. If a word is considered foreign, only a foreign pronunciation is shown. If it is completely English, it receives only an English pronunciation. If it is at an in-between point on the continuum, the more common pronunciation—English or foreign—is shown first.

The pronunciation key on the inside of the front of the dictionary (repeated on page xxxii) is the central point of departure for those who wish to make maximum use of the pronunciations given in the entries. Each symbol described is followed by common sample words. The user of the dictionary who is unfamiliar with the sound represented by a certain symbol should find the symbol in the key and pronounce the sample words aloud in order to hear the sound itself. That sound will be the one appropriate in the speaker's own dialect for the word he is looking up.

A GUIDE TO THE DICTIONARY

I. ENTRY WORD OR WORDS

A. Typeface

1. The main entry word appears in large boldface type, usually roman, flush left to the margin of the column.

bake·ware (bāk′wâr′), n. heat-resistant dishes, as of glass, pottery, etc., in which food may be baked. [BAKE bas-so-ri-lie-vo (bäs′sō rē lyĕ′vō), n., pl. bas-si-ri-lie-vi (bäs′sē rē lyĕ′vē). Italian. bas-relief.

2. Foreign words and phrases, book titles, and other entries that are usually italicized in printing and underlined in typewriting are shown in large boldface italic type.

hô-tel de ville (ō tel′ də vēl′), pl. hô-tels de ville (ō tel′ də vēl′). French. a city hall. [lit., mansion of Mad′ame Bo′vary, a novel (1857) by Gustave Flaubert.

B. Syllabification

[For syllabification of pronunciation, see below II, C and G.]

Words are syllabified in this dictionary according to the usual American principles of word division, as observed, with certain modifications, in printing and typing.

1. Single-word entries of more than one syllable are shown with syllables set off by a boldface centered dot.

ac·claim (ə klām′), v.t. 1. to salute with shouts or ac·com·plish (ə kom′plish), v.t. 1. to bring to its goal

2. Since syllable divisions for the spelled entry word and syllable divisions in the pronunciation parentheses are determined by entirely different sets of rules, they will not necessarily correspond in number or placement.

a. Most words contain the same number of syllables in the spelled form as in the pronunciation. Certain words, in which a single consonant represents an entire spoken syllable, are conventionally shown with one syllable less in the boldface spelling than in the pronunciation.

A·mer·i·can·ism (ə mer′i kə niz′əm), n. 1. devotion rhythm (rith′əm), n. 1. movement or procedure with

b. The American system of syllabifying is primarily a phonetic one. The division usually occurs after the vowel for a long syllable or for an unstressed syllable and after the consonant for a short syllable. Certain affixes, however, as -cious, -gion, and -tion, are never divided.

pre·var·i·cate (pri var′ə kāt′), v.t., -cat·ed, -cat·ing.

na·tion·al (nash′ə nᵊl), adj. 1. of, pertaining to, or

3. With the exception of some loan words, entries are syllabified according to the first pronunciation given, since only one division may be shown in the boldface spelling.

sta·tus (stā′təs, stat′əs), n. 1. the position of an individual in relation to another or others of the same re·cord (v. ri kôrd′; n., adj. rek′ərd), v.t. 1. to set

When pronounced according to the second pronunciation shown, the word status would logically be syllabified as stat·us. Similarly, when used as a noun or adjective, the word record would appropriately be syllabified as rec·ord.

4. In all hyphenated entries the hyphen replaces a centered dot as a syllable divider. Syllables that are not separated by a hyphen are separated by a centered dot.

in-law (in′lô′), n. a relative by marriage, esp. a moth·er-in-law (muth′ər in lô′), n., pl. moth·ers-in-law. the mother of one's husband or wife. [late

5. With the exception of foreign words, certain loan words, and some homograph entries (see below, I, D), words are completely syllabified only once, usually the first time they appear.

Bar·ba·ry (bär′bə rē), n. a region in N Africa, ex-

lap·sus lin·guae (läp′sŏŏs liŋ′gwī; Eng. lap′səs lap·sus me·mo·ri·ae (läp′sŏŏs me mō′rē ī′; Eng.

C. Stress

[For stress in the pronunciation, see below II, D and H.]

Entries consisting of two or more words are shown with a pattern of stress in the boldface that reveals the prosodic relationship of each word to the others in the entry. This pattern is not meant to show the relationship of one syllable to another within an individual word.

elemen′tary school′, the lowest school giving

A primary stress mark (′) follows the syllable or syllables that normally have greater stress than those marked with a secondary stress (′). The absence of a stress mark indicates that the syllable or word receives less stress than those marked (′) or (′).

1. In two-word entries, for example, the pattern —′ —′ is used to show relationships of approximately equal stress.

good′ will′, 1. friendly disposition; benevolence;

Babylo′nian captiv′ity, 1. the period of the exile

2. Some people may hear, in their own speech, slightly less stress on the first words of the preceding phrases. This dictionary, however, has reserved the pattern —′ —′ for entries where the first words have considerably less stress than the second, but more than would an article, preposition, auxiliary verb, etc.

New′ Lon′don, 1. a seaport in SE Connecticut, on Mount′ Gil′ead, a town in central Ohio. 2788

Ad′miral of the Fleet′, an officer of the highest

3. The pattern —′ —′, rather than —′ —′ is shown for walk′ing pa′pers and char′ley horse′. This is to distinguish them from walk′ing pa′pers and char′ley horse′, which might be construed to mean "papers that are walking" and "a man whose first name is Charley and whose last name is Horse."

4. The stress pattern shown in the boldface indicates how the entry phrase is usually stressed in a simple, declarative sentence like "I'd like a blue house′ coat′," not a contrastive sentence like "I said house′ coat′, not house′ boat′."

5. The stress for a word in a phrase is shown as part of the prosodic pattern of that phrase, and may be different from the stress the word would have in isolation.

Mon·te·rey (mon′tə rā′), n. 1. a city in W California,

Mon′terey Bay′, an inlet of the Pacific in W Calicon·ti·nen·tal (kon′tᵊnen′tᵊl), adj. 1. of or of the con′tinen′tal break′fast, a breakfast consisting

6. Entries with stress patterns that vary from region to region or person to person are given the stress considered to be in most frequent use. Other stress patterns, although not shown, may also be widely used.

cot′tage cheese′, an extremely soft, or loose.

cream′ so′da, a soft drink made with vanilla-hot′ rod′, U.S. Slang. a car, esp. an old one whose

7. Entries with stress patterns that vary with individual definitions, as party line, show their various stress patterns in the pronunciation parentheses.

par·ty line (pär′tē līn′ for 1, 2; pär′tē līn′ for 3, 4). 1. a telephone line connecting the telephones of a number of subscribers by one circuit to a central office. 2. the boundary line separating adjoining properties. 3. the authoritatively announced policies and practices of a group, esp. of the Communist party, usually followed by the members without deviation. 4. the guiding policy, tenets, or practices of a political party: The judge was chosen on party lines.

8. Relative stress is not shown in the spelled main entry when the entry is pronounced in its entirety or when it contains Roman numerals, abbreviations, or letters of the alphabet.

dum spi·ro, spe·ro (dŏŏm spē′rō, spā′rō; Eng. dum spī′rō, spĕr′ō). Latin. while I breathe, I hope: a second motto of South Carolina.

Henry V, 1. 1387–1422, king of England 1413–22 (son

St. George's Channel, a channel between Wales

K ration, U.S. Army. one of the emergency field

D. Homographs

1. Separate main entries are made for all words in the general language that are spelled identically but are of different derivation. When these words appear in boldface roman type, when they are spelled with lower-case rather than capital letters, and when they have no distinguishing diacritical markings, each one is followed by a small superscript number.

pat[1] (pat), v., pat·ted, pat·ting, n. —v.t. 1. to strike lightly or gently with something flat, as with a paddle pat[2] (pat), adj. 1. exactly to the point or purpose; apt; opportune; ready: a pat answer; a pat solution to a prob- bow[1] (bou), v.t. 1. to bend the knee or body or incline the head in reverence, submission, salutation, recognibow[2] (bō), n. 1. a flexible strip of wood or other material, bent by a string stretched between its ends, for bow[3] (bou), n. 1. Naut., Aeron. a. the forward end of a vessel or airship. b. either side of this forward end, esp.

2. No entry that is capitalized, spelled with a diacritical mark, or shown in italic type is given a homograph number.

Dra·co (drā′kō), n., gen. Dra·co·nis (drā kō′nis). Astron. the Dragon, a northern circumpolar constella-Dra·co (drā′kō), n. a late 7th-century B.C. Athenian statesman noted for the severity of his code of laws.

thorn (thôrn), n. 1. a sharp excrescence on a plant, esp. a sharp-pointed aborted branch; spine; prickle

pique[1] (pēk), v., piqued, piqu·ing, n. —v.t. 1. to affect with sharp irritation and resentment, esp. by pique[2] (pēk), n. Piquet. pic.

pi·qué (pi kā′, pē-; Fr. pē kā′), n., pl. -qués (-kāz′; Fr. -kā′) for 2, adj. —n. 1. a fabric of cotton, spun rayon, or silk, woven lengthwise with raised cords. 2.

coupe[1] (kōōp), n. 1. Also, coupé. a closed, two-door automobile with a body shorter than that of a sedan of coupe[2] (kōō′pē), n. 1. ice cream or ice mixed or topped with fruit, liqueur, whipped cream, etc. 2. a glass concou·pé (kōō pā′ or, for 1, 5, kōō′pē), n. 1. a short, four-wheeled, closed carriage, usually with a single seat for beg (beg), v., begged, beg·ging. —v.t. 1. to ask for as a gift, as charity, or as a favor: to beg alms; to beg forgive- beg (bāg; Eng. beg), n. Turkish. bey.

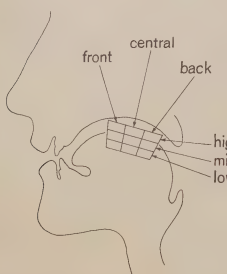
II. PRONUNCIATION

Pronunciations are shown in this dictionary in parentheses immediately following the entry word. The first pronunciation shown is generally the one considered to be in most frequent use, although there may be very little difference in usage between any two consecutive pronunciations. Occasionally, when there is some disagreement about how widespread a certain pronunciation is among educated speakers, that pronunciation may be preceded by a qualifying label, as "often" or "sometimes." Other more specific labels, as those restricting a pronunciation to a certain part of speech, to certain definitions of a word, or to particular areas, are self-explanatory.

While assuming that any pronunciation shown is common to many educated speakers of the language, the reader should be aware that no dictionary, whatever its size, can possibly record every pronunciation used among educated speakers for each word it lists. An omitted pronunciation does not necessarily imply its absence in the educated community.



A. The Pronunciation of English

The system of pronunciation symbols used in this dictionary has been devised to represent major sound divisions in English. Just as, on a color wheel, the shadings that we conventionally name red and orange have between them and around them infinite gradations of color, so certain sounds in the English language have between and around them infinite gradations of sound coloration. We may well regard certain sounds, then, not as points but as areas in a continuum. It will be seen from the description of individual sounds below that many of the varied ways of pronouncing a given sound, although not made explicit by the use of a cumbersome number of symbols, are to be considered implicit in the symbols that are shown. The Pronunciation Key is so constructed that the user of the dictionary, by pronouncing the key words given for each symbol, will automatically produce the variety or varieties of each sound appropriate to his own dialect.

B. A Guide to the Symbols for the Sounds of English

NOTE: In the following descriptions the terms front, central, back, high, mid, and low refer to the approximate area of the mouth in which a portion of the tongue is raised during the pronunciation of a given vowel. The blade of the tongue is raised for front vowels, the central portion for central vowels, and the dorsum for back vowels.

Explanations of the terms used to describe consonants may be found in the vocabulary.

a This symbol represents a sound commonly known as the "short" or "flat" a, as in act, nap, and bat. The sound is typically a low, front vowel, made with relatively lax tongue muscles and with the lips and mouth more open than for (e), but less open than for (ā). In the speech of many the sound may be raised toward (ā), esp. in certain words, as marry, dance, ham, hag, and others. When shown in variation with the sound (ā), as in the pronunciations of ask (ask, āsk) or half (haf, hāf), the two symbols represent a range of pronunciations, any one of which may be heard in educated speech. The IPA symbol is [æ].

ā This symbol represents a sound commonly known as the "long" a, as in aid, cape, and way. The sound is typically a mid, front vowel, formed with relatively tense tongue muscles, and with the lips slightly more open and less spread than for (ē) or (i), but less open and more spread than for (e) or (a). The sound may have a range of pronunciations from monophthongal to diphthongal, with the latter more likely in a stressed syllable, as in the first syllable of vacation (vā kā′shən). Before l the (ā) may be raised toward (ä) by some speakers, or may be followed by a faint schwa. The IPA symbol is [e] for the monophthongal variant, [eɪ] for the diphthongal one.

â This symbol, shown with an r in the pronunciation key, represents the sound most commonly heard before r in air, dare, and Mary. Typically, it is a mid, front vowel with a range extending from (ā) through (e) to (a). When the (âr) is final, it is commonly diphthongal, pronounced with a faint schwa intervening before the r, as in care and spare. When not final, as in Mary or careful, it is usually monophthongal. In dialects where the r is dropped, the sound is normally followed by a schwa. The usual IPA symbol for (â) is [ɛə].

ä This symbol represents the relatively long sound of a in alms, art, and calm, a low, back vowel formed with the tongue muscles quite lax and with the lips more open than for any other vowel. In certain words it appears in variation with the sound (a) (see above). For words like hot and watch, spelled with o or an initial wa-, see the discussion below for the symbol (o). The IPA symbol for (ä) is [ɑ].

b This symbol represents the voiced, bilabial, plosive consonant sound heard in back, cabin, and cab. Its voiceless counterpart is (p), and its IPA symbol [b].

ch This symbol represents the voiceless affricate consonant sound heard in chief, butcher, and beach. It is a combination of the plosive (t) and the fricative (sh), blended to form a single sound, and is formed with the tip and blade of the tongue behind the alveolar ridge. Its voiced counterpart is (j), and its IPA symbol [tʃ].

d This symbol represents the voiced, alveolar, plosive consonant sound heard in do, rudder, and bed. Intervocalically, before a relatively unstressed vowel, as in rudder, daddy, or leader, the sound is often flapped. The voiceless counterpart of (d) is (t), and its IPA symbol [d]. e This symbol represents a sound commonly known as the "short" e, as in ebb, set, and merry. The sound is typically a mid, front vowel, formed with relatively lax tongue muscles, and with the lips slightly more open and less spread than for (ā), but less open and more spread than for (a). Before r, in some dialects, the sound may resemble the (â). The IPA symbol is [ɛ].

ē This symbol represents a sound commonly known as the "long" e, as in equal, seat, bee, and mighty. The sound is a high, front vowel, formed, in stressed syllables, with relatively tense tongue muscles, and with the lips quite spread and less open than for any other vowel. In unstressed syllables, as for the y in pretty or the ie in candied, this symbol represents a sound that varies from (i) to (ē), but is acoustically closer to (ē) in most parts of the United States, in contrast with the less variable (i) heard in candid. The sound may have a range of pronunciations from monophthongal to diphthongal, with the latter more likely in a stressed syllable, as in bee, and the former more usual in a less stressed syllable, as in radio (rā′dē ō′). The IPA symbol for (ē) is [i].

ēr This symbol represents the sounds heard in ear, mere, here, etc., in contrast with the sounds usually heard in mirror, though the vowel may in fact range in quality from (ē) to (i). The vowel is commonly diphthongal, accompanied by a faint schwa, as (ēᵊr) or (iᵊr). In dialects where the r is dropped, the vowel is normally followed by a schwa.

f This symbol represents the voiceless, labiodental, fricative consonant sound heard in fit, differ, and puff. Its voiced counterpart is (v), and its IPA symbol [f].

g This symbol represents the voiced, velar, plosive consonant sound commonly known as the "hard" g and heard in give, trigger, and beg. Its voiceless counterpart is (k) and its IPA symbol [g].

h This symbol represents the usually voiceless, glottal, fricative consonant heard in hit, behave, and hear. In combination with y, as in huge (hyōōj), it may represent either a genuine combination of the two sounds or a voiceless y, a palatal fricative sound. The combination (hl) represents the voiceless l used in Welsh. The IPA symbol for (h) is [h].

hw This symbol represents either the sound combination (h + w), usually symbolized in IPA as [hw], or a voiceless w, usually symbolized in IPA as [ʍ]. Either sound may be heard in which, when, where, etc., when spoken by those who do not pronounce these words with the w of witch, wen, and wear.

i This symbol represents a sound known as the "short" i, as heard in if, big, and mirror. The sound is a high, front vowel, formed with relatively lax tongue muscles, and with the lips slightly more open and less spread than for (ē). In initial, unstressed syllables, as in event, the (i) represents a sound that may vary from (i) to (ē). Its IPA symbol is [ɪ].

In this dictionary the (i) also represents the unstressed vowel heard in the second syllables of furniture, citizen, and other words, where the sound may be considered to vary between (i) and (ə).

ī This symbol represents a sound commonly known as the "long" i, as heard in ice, bite, pirate, and deny. The sound is a diphthong, with the first element in the position of (ä) or, more usually, a sound between (ä) and (a), and the second element varying between (i) and (ē), but usually closer to (i). The IPA symbol is [aɪ].

j This symbol represents the voiced affricate consonant sound heard in just, badger, and fudge. It is a combination of the plosive (d) and the fricative (zh), blended to form a single sound, and is formed with the tip and blade of the tongue behind the alveolar ridge. Its voiceless counterpart is (ch), and its IPA symbol [dʒ].

k This symbol represents the voiceless, velar, plosive consonant sound heard in kept, keep, coop, scoop, token, and make. Its voiced counterpart is (g), and its IPA symbol [k].

l This symbol represents the voiced, alveolar, lateral consonant sound heard in low, mellow, and all. The sound ranges in quality from the "light" or "clear" l heard usually when (l) is in initial position, preceding a front vowel, as in leaf and list, or followed by (y), as in value, to the "dark" l heard usually when (l) is in final or preconsonantal position or precedes a back vowel, as in call, silk, or low. When preceded by the homorganic sounds (t), (d), or (n), the (l) may constitute a syllable, as in battle (batᵊl), ladle (lādᵊl), and funnel (funᵊl). Its IPA symbol is [l].

m This symbol represents the voiced, bilabial, nasal consonant sound heard in my, simmer, and him. The (m) may constitute a syllable when it is preceded by a homorganic sound, as in cap'n (kapᵊn), or in some pronunciations of words in which the (m) is preceded by (z), as in chasm and schism. More frequently the latter class of words, as shown in this dictionary, would be pronounced with a full schwa between the (z) and the (m). The (m) is homorganic with the plosives (p) and (b), and its IPA symbol is [m].

n This symbol represents the voiced, alveolar, nasal consonant sound heard in now, sinner, and on. When preceded by the homorganic sounds (t) and (d), the (n) may constitute a syllable, as in button (butᵊn) and Sweden (swēdᵊn). Its IPA symbol is [n].

ng This symbol represents the voiced, velar, nasal consonant sound heard in sing and Washington. The sound is pronounced without an accompanying homorganic (g) or (k) in ring (riṅg), ringing (riṅg′iṅg), Springfield (spriṅg′fēld′) and gingham (giṅg′əm). It is followed by a (g) in wrangle (raṅg′gəl), finger (fiṅg′gər), youngest (yuṅg′gist), and elongate (i-lôṅg′gāt, -lôṅg′-), and by a (k) in sink (siṅgk), anchor (aṅg′kər), and one pronunciation of lengthen (leṅgk′thən). The (ṅg) is homorganic with the plosives (k) and (g), and its IPA symbol is [ŋ].

o This symbol represents a sound commonly known as the "short" o, as in ox, box, and wasp. Found only in words spelled with o or with an initial wa-, this variable symbol reflects differences between regional dialects. For many speakers in the United States the normal vowel in bomb, ox, and hot is the same as the vowel in balm, alms, and father. The traditional use of (o) in words like hot allows a dictionary to accommodate with a single symbol the pronunciations of different dialect areas. These pronunciations range from the sound of (ä) to a sound almost like that of the (ô) in paw. As found, for example, in eastern New England, where the pronunciations of bomb and balm are not identical, the sound is typically a low, back vowel, made with relatively lax tongue muscles and with the lips slightly less open and more rounded than for (ä), but more open and less rounded than for (ô). In this dialect its IPA symbol is [ɒ].

ō This symbol represents a sound commonly known as the "long" o, as in over, boat, and no. The sound is typically a mid, back vowel, made with relatively tense tongue muscles and lips more rounded and less open than for (ô), and less rounded and more open than for (ōō). The sound may have a range of pronunciations from monophthongal to diphthongal, with the latter more likely in a stressed syllable, as in toe, and the former more usual in a less stressed syllable, as in obey (ō bā′). The IPA symbol is [o] for the monophthongal variant, [oʊ] for the diphthongal one. Before r, in the speech of those who distinguish between the (-ôr-) of borne and the (-ōr-) of born, the (ô) is often followed by a faint schwa, as (bôəʳn).

ô This symbol represents the relatively long sound heard in ought, ball, and raw. It is typically a low, back vowel, formed with slightly tense tongue muscles and the lips less rounded and more open than for (ō). Before r this symbol may be shown in variation with (ōr) to represent the sound used by those who do not distinguish between the sounds of borne and born. The IPA symbol for (ô) is [ɔ].

oi This symbol represents the vowel sound heard in oil, point, and joy. The sound is a diphthong, with the first element in the position of (ô) or, sometimes, a similar sound closer to (o), and the second element approaching (ē), but normally closer to (i). The IPA symbol is [ɔɪ].

oo This symbol represents the high, back vowel heard in book and foot. The sound is formed with relatively lax tongue muscles and with lips less rounded and more open than for (o͞o). Before r, this symbol represents the sound between (o͞o) and (o͝o) heard in pure and touring. Its IPA symbol is [u].

oo This symbol represents the high, back vowel heard in ooze, fool, and too. The sound is formed with relatively tense tongue muscles and with lips more rounded and less open than for (o͞o). Its IPA symbol is [u].

ou This symbol represents the vowel sound heard in out, loud, and prow. The sound is a diphthong, with the first element in the position of (ä) or, more usually, a sound between (ä) and (a), and the second element approaching (o͝o), but normally closer to (o͞o). Before r this sound may become triphthongal, pronounced with either a faint or full schwa. The IPA symbol is [au].

p This symbol represents the voiceless, bilabial, plosive consonant sound heard in pool, spool, supper, and stop. Its voiced counterpart is (b) and its IPA symbol [p].

r This symbol represents a major sound division that includes a multiplicity of r-sounds, ranging from a vowellike r, as often heard in American English, to a more consonantal sound, as often heard in British English. The vowellike, sounded, frictionless or retroflex r is heard in American pronunciations of red and rich. Similar to it is the postvocalic r heard as an r-colored vowel in one American pronunciation of fair and bird. A consonantal fricative, voiced or voiceless, may be heard in dress and try respectively, while a consonantal flapped r is often heard intervocalically in the British pronunciations of very and worry. In some loan words or in certain biographical and geographical entries in which all the sounds would be recorded identically for the English and foreign pronunciations, either an English or non-English r may be assumed when (r) is shown.

In some dialects a final, postvocalic r or a preconsonantal r may be omitted entirely, being replaced with either a lengthened vowel or a faint schwa, as in car (kär) or (käᵊ), carp (kärp) or (käᵊp), or dear (dēᵊ). The dropped r may be reinserted when a final r becomes intervocalic, as in the phrase dear Anne. Among the IPA symbols that may be used to represent various r-sounds are: [ɾ] flapped r; [ɹ] fricative and vowellike r; [ʀ] trilled r.

s This symbol represents the voiceless, sibilant, fricative consonant sound heard in see, passing, and miss. The sound is formed usually with the blade of the tongue held close to the alveolar ridge. The breath stream is forced through a groove formed by the tongue, striking the teeth to produce a hissing sound. The voiced equivalent of (s) is (z), and its IPA symbol [s].

sh This symbol represents the voiceless, sibilant, fricative consonant sound heard in shoe, fashion, and push. It is formed with the blade of the tongue held farther back than for (s) and with the breath stream forced through a broader groove formed by the tongue, striking the teeth to produce a hushing sound. Its voiced equivalent is (zh) and its IPA symbol [ʃ].

t This symbol represents the voiceless, alveolar, plosive consonant sound heard in team, steam, butter, and bit. Intervocalically, before a relatively unstressed vowel, as in matter and lettuce, or before syllabic l, as in settle, the sound may vary from a voiced quality almost identical to that of the intervocalic d of rudder to a voiceless flapped sound that distinguishes between butter and budder, matter and madder. The voiced equivalent of (t) is (d), and its IPA symbol [t].

th This symbol represents the voiceless, dental or interdental, fricative consonant sound heard in thin, ether, and path. Its voiced equivalent is (ŦH) and its IPA symbol [θ].

ŦH This symbol represents the voiced, dental or interdental, fricative consonant sound heard in that, either, and smooth. Its voiceless equivalent is (th) and its IPA symbol [ð].

u This symbol represents a sound commonly known as the "short" u, as in up and love. It is typically a low, central vowel formed with relatively lax tongue muscles and with unrounded lips. The IPA symbol is [ʌ].

û This symbol is shown with an r in the pronunciation key to represent the stressed, r-colored vowel heard in urge, burn, and cur. It is typically a mid, central vowel, formed with relatively tense tongue muscles and, except in r-dropping dialects, some degree of retroflexion of the tongue tip toward the hard palate. It is often symbolized in American phonetic transcription as [ɝ] or, in r-dropping dialects, [ɜ].

v This symbol represents the voiced, labiodental, fricative consonant sound heard in voice, river, and live. Its voiceless counterpart is (f), and its IPA symbol [v].

w This symbol represents the voiced, bilabial-velar semivowel heard in west and away. It is produced as the lips and tongue move from the position of an (o͞o) to the position of a following vowel. Its IPA symbol is [w].

y This symbol represents the voiced, palatal semivowel heard in yes and beyond. It is produced as the tongue moves from the position of an (ē) to the position of a following vowel. Its IPA symbol is [j].

z This symbol represents the voiced, sibilant, fricative consonant sound heard in zeal, lazy, and those. The sound is formed usually with the blade of the tongue held close to the alveolar ridge. The breath stream is forced through a groove formed by the tongue, striking the teeth to produce a vibrating, hissing sound. The voiceless equivalent of (z) is (s), and its IPA symbol [z].

zh This symbol represents the voiced, sibilant, fricative consonant sound heard in vision and mirage. It is formed with the blade of the tongue held farther back than for (z) and with the breath stream forced through a broader groove formed by the tongue, striking the teeth to produce a vibrating, hushing sound. Its voiceless equivalent is (sh) and its IPA symbol [ʒ].

ə This symbol, the schwa, represents the unstressed vowel commonly heard as the sound of a in alone, e in system, i in easily, o in gallop, and u in circus. It is typically a mid, central vowel, formed with lax tongue muscles and with the lips open, but neither spread nor rounded. The sound of schwa is variable to the extent that it may, while remaining unstressed, move in the direction of any one of the surrounding vowels. Its IPA symbol is [ə].

ə The superscript schwa is used in unaccented syllables to represent the syllabic quality of an l or n that is preceded by a homorganic sound, as t or d. The symbol is shown in circumstances where the l or n most frequently constitutes a syllable, as in cradle (krād′ᵊl), metal (metˈᵊl), and redden (redˈᵊn).

In such words as competence (komˈpi tᵊns), president (prezˈi dənt), and distance (disˈtᵊns), the pronunciation is indicated by either a full or superscript schwa, but rarely both. The choice has been made on the basis of frequency and does not imply that the alternative pronunciation is not used by educated speakers.

In accented syllables the (ᵊ) is used between the diphthong (ī) and an (r) in the same syllable to show triphthongal quality, as in lyre (līᵊr), fire (fīᵊr), and tiring (tīˈᵊriŋ), in contrast with the sounds in liar (līˈər) and irate (īrātˈ).

In certain loan words, as Mbutu (ᵐmbo͞oˈtō͞o), (ᵑ) before the nasals (m), (n), or (ŋ) may represent pronunciations ranging from those in which the nasal consonant initiates the first syllable to those in which the consonant is preceded by a vowel ranging from (ə) or (ŭ) to (e) or (i).

C. Syllabification

[For syllabification of main entry words, see above, I, B; for syllabification of foreign pronunciations, see below, II, G.]

Pronunciations are divided into syllables within the parentheses as a visual aid in sounding out a word as well as an aid in producing the appropriate phonetic variant of a given sound. Although it is customary in dictionaries to show most short syllables, which contain checked vowels, closed by the following consonants and most syllables containing free vowels left open, certain modifications are made in this dictionary, among them the following:

1. Words like mistake are recorded as (mi stākˈ) so as to avoid the aspiration of the voiceless plosive that might be indicated by the pronunciation (mis tākˈ), a pronunciation that might sound as if the word were mis-take, "take badly."
2. Words like atrophy, in which the stressed, checked vowel would normally be closed by the following (t), are shown in this dictionary with (t) and (r) kept together, as in (aˈtrə fē). Showing this syllabification rather than (atˈrə fē) in words of this type aids the user to produce the phonetic variants of the adjacent (t) and (r) usually heard in educated speech. It does so by helping him to avoid the possibility of a pronunciation in which the (t), as the final consonant in a syllable, might not be exploded, or might even be said as a glottal stop. The difference in question may best be illustrated by comparing the pronunciation of the word citric with that of the sentence Sit, Rick.

   Since words with the analogous combinations of (k) plus (r) and (p) plus (r) do not present the same problems, all stressed, checked syllables followed by these combinations are closed in the usual way, as acrid (akˈrid) and reciprocate (ri sipˈrə kātˈ).
3. Lengthened consonants, which are single sounds, are recorded as double symbols, one ending one syllable and one beginning the next, as in roommate (rōōmˈmātˈ, rōōmˈ-), sackcloth (sakˈklôthˈ, -klothˈ), and misspell (mis spelˈ).

None of these syllable divisions necessarily reflects those shown in the spelled main entry word.

D. Stress

[For stress of main entry words, see above, I, C; for stress in foreign pronunciations, see below, II, H.]

Relative differences in stress between syllables in a word may be indicated in the pronunciations.

1. In words of two or more syllables a primary stress mark (ˈ) follows the syllable having greatest stress.

   ex·act·ly (ig zaktˈlē), adv. 1. in an exact manner; pre-

2. A secondary stress mark (ˌ) follows a syllable having slightly less stress, particularly in a word of three or more syllables in which marked, stressed syllables alternate with unmarked, weaker ones.

   pat·a·cake (patˌə kākˈ), n. a form of amusement

3. An unmarked syllable, when adjacent to a stressed syllable, may sometimes be spoken with secondary stress if shown with a full vowel.

   va·cate (vāˈkāt), v., -cat·ed, -cat·ing. —v.t. 1. to

4. Relatively weak stress in a word is always unmarked.

   an·i·mal (anˈə məl), n. 1. any living thing typically in·tu·i·tion (inˈtōō iĕˈən, -tyōō-), n. 1. direct per-

5. Monosyllables are unmarked and are considered to have primary stress unless a pronunciation specifically labeled "unstressed" is shown.

   bread (bred), n. 1. a kind of food made of flour or meal but and (and; unstressed ənd, ən), conj. 1. (used to connect her (hûr; unstressed hər, ər), pron. 1. the objective case

E. The Pronunciation of Foreign Sounds

Foreign sounds are represented, for the most part, by the symbols shown above (II, B), although it must be understood that the quality of these sounds varies from language to language. Symbols that will most help a native speaker of English to produce appropriate sounds are shown. Thus initial d in Spanish is shown as (d), as in Diego (dyeˈgō), and intervocalic d as (ŦH), as in cada (käˈŦHä), although in Spanish the two sounds are part of a larger sound unit, or phoneme. Since English intervocalic d may, when flapped, sound like Spanish intervocalic r, cada (käˈdä), meaning "each" or "every," might easily be heard as cara (käˈrä), meaning "dear" or "face."

In rare instances it has proved useful to record a sound in one language with one symbol and a phonetically similar sound in a second language with another. Thus the Spanish bilabial fricative is shown as (v), to contrast with the (b) of bueno (bweˈnō), and a similar sound in Hebrew that may be pronounced, depending on the dialect, as (b), (v), or a bilabial fricative, is shown as (b), as in Habdalah (häb dä läˈ; Eng. häv dôˈlə), Veadar (vēˈə därˈ; Heb. vē ä därˈ).

Additional symbols, shown below (II, F), are used only for those sounds that cannot be approximated by symbols in the English key.

F. A Guide to the Symbols for Foreign Sounds

A This symbol represents the low vowel heard in French ami. It is slightly to the front of (ä) in the French vowel system and is made with the lips open and somewhat spread. The sound may be thought of by the English speaker as roughly intermediate in quality between the (a) of cat and the (ä) of calm. Its IPA symbol is [a].

KH This symbol represents a range of voiceless fricative consonants heard in Arabic, German, Scottish, Hebrew, Russian, etc. When produced with back articulation, as in German ach and Scottish loch, it is usually described as a velar fricative. This consonant and similar varieties of it or similar consonants, as in Arabic, may have uvular vibration or pharyngeal constriction. When produced with articulation that is farther forward, as heard in German ich, it is described as a palatal fricative. The former sound may be articulated by bringing the tongue almost into the position of (k), as in coo, while pronouncing a strong, rasping (h); the latter sound may be articulated by bringing the tongue almost into the position of (k), as in key, while pronouncing a strong, rasping (h) similar to the initial sound in human when it is pronounced with a greater than usual degree of friction. Among the IPA symbols used for the various sounds symbolized in this dictionary by (kɣ) are [x] for the voiceless velar fricative and [ç] for the voiceless palatal fricative.

N This symbol, as in French bon (bôn), is used to indicate that the preceding vowel is nasalized; it does not stand for a type of n-sound. There are four nasalized vowels in French, found in the phrase un bon vin blanc (œn bôn van blän). In Portuguese both vowels and diphthongs may be nasalized. The usual IPA symbol is a tilde (˜) over the nasalized vowel.

Œ This symbol represents either the vowel sound heard in German schön (shœn) and French feu (fœ), usually transcribed in IPA as [ø], or the vowel sound heard in the initial syllables of German öffnen (œfᵊnən) and French neuvième (nœ vyem′), usually transcribed in IPA as [œ]. They are both rounded, front vowels.

The former sound is made with relatively tense tongue muscles and with the lips rounded in the position for (ō), as in over, while trying to say (ā), as in able. The latter sound is made with relatively lax tongue muscles and with the lips rounded in the position for (ô), as in ought, while trying to say (e), as in get.

An approximation for the English speaker may be achieved by pronouncing the vowel in the word fir (fûr) without any r-color.

R This symbol represents any non-English r, and therefore does not stand for a sound with any one specific point of articulation. Since the r varies from language to language to a greater extent than any other consonant, the symbol (R) has been introduced to obviate the tendency of an American speaker of English to substitute his own r in an otherwise foreign pronunciation. An (R), therefore, should be interpreted as an instruction to use whatever sound is appropriate in a given foreign language. Someone who is not familiar with the language in question, or who feels more comfortable with the sound qualities of English, will of course use his own r.

Among the sounds the (R) may represent are a flap, as in Spanish pero (pe′rō), a uvular sound, as in the Parisian French pronunciation of rouge (rōōzh), and a trill, as in Italian mare (mä′re) and Scottish hurst (hûrst, hůrst). [Note that the (R) has been used in Scottish pronunciations, where the sound is always consonantal, but not in British-English pronunciations, where the r may sometimes be vocalic or dropped entirely.] Where the (R) appears in Chinese pronunciations, it represents a sound similar to a uvular, (Parisian) French r, used in Chinese for the sound usually transliterated as j. Various IPA symbols for the variant sounds of (R) may be seen above under English sounds.

Y This symbol represents either the vowel sound heard in the initial syllable of German fühle (fʏˡlə) and French lumière (lʏ myer′), usually transcribed in IPA as [y], or the one heard in the initial syllable of German Fülle (fʏˡlə), usually transcribed in IPA as [ʏ]. They are both rounded, front vowels.

The former sound is made with relatively tense tongue muscles and with the lips rounded in the position for (ōō), as in boot, while trying to say (ē), as in meet. The latter sound is made with relatively lax tongue muscles and with the lips rounded in the position for (ŏŏ), as in book, while trying to say (i), as in sit.

ə A superscript schwa has been used in foreign pronunciations to represent a sound ranging from a short, faint schwa immediately following a consonant or glide to a faint prolongation of the preceding consonant or glide, voiced or unvoiced, as in French Bastogne (ba stôn′yᵊ) or boulevard (bōōlᵊᵛ vaʀ′).

G. Syllabification of Foreign Pronunciations

Rules for syllabifying the pronunciations of foreign words often differ from the rules applicable to English. Pronunciations are divided into syllables according to the specific requirements of each individual language. While English contains some free vowels (vowels that may occur in both open and closed syllables) and some checked vowels (vowels that may occur only in closed syllables) certain languages, as Italian and Spanish, contain only free vowels. Certain other languages, as the Slavic languages, contain consonant clusters not encountered in English. Some languages, as German, contain familiar clusters in unfamiliar places. The syllable divisions shown for a pronunciation in a given language are those that will most help the reader to produce sound combinations appropriate to that language.

bo·de·ga (bō dhe′gä; Eng. bō dē′gə), n., pl. -gas (-gäs; Eng. -gəz). Spanish. 1. (esp. among Spanish-speaking Americans) a grocery store. 2. a wineshop.

Dvo·řák (Eng. dvôr′zhäk, -zhak; Czech, dvô′rzhäk), n. An·ton (Eng. an′tən, -tōn; Czech än′tōn), 1841–1904, Czech composer.

Schutz·staf·fel (shŏōts′shtäf′fəl), n. German. an elite military unit of the Nazi party which served as

H. Stress in Foreign Pronunciations

Different languages have different patterns of stress. In some languages the major stress is fixed on a certain syllable in words; in others stress is variable; in still others, at least to the native speaker, stress appears to be level. The stress patterns shown in this dictionary are those that are likely to aid the speaker of English in approximating appropriate patterns of speech.

1. In the Modern Greek pronunciation of antidoron (än dē′dhô nôn), for example, where an English speaker might expect a stress pattern alternating between weak and strong syllables, no stress is shown on the final syllable. The native speaker of Greek would be more likely to give secondary stress to (-dhô-) than to (-nôn).
2. In French pronunciations, although stress is relatively level, a stress mark on the final syllable of an entry word or phrase shown in isolation indicates where a slight rise or fall in pitch or a slight increase in force is possible. In French speech individual words are not stressed. Instead there is probably a rise in pitch at the end of each phrase and a fall in pitch at the end of each declarative sentence.

The user of a dictionary compiled for English speakers should be aware that no series of stress marks or other visual symbols can adequately substitute for first-hand knowledge of a foreign language, encounters with a native speaker, or even for a recording. The less like English a given language is—with regard to its patterns of intonation, with regard to the interrelationships within it among force, duration, and pitch, or with regard to the function in the language of any of these—the more likelihood there is that a written transcription of its pronunciation, with or without stress marks, will be somewhat deceptive.

III. PARTS OF SPEECH

A. A part of speech label for each main entry that consists of a single word is given as an italicized abbreviation preceding the definition or definitions for that part of speech.

big·ot (big′ət), n. a person who is utterly intolerant of any creed, belief, or opinion that differs from his

B. If the entry word is used in more than one grammatical form, the appropriate italicized part-of-speech label precedes each set of definitions given for that part of speech. Part-of-speech labels subsequent to the first are preceded by a boldface dash.

in·tro·vert (n., adj. in′trō vûrt′; v. in′trō vûrt′), n. 1. Psychol. a person characterized by concern primarily with his own thoughts and feelings (opposed to extravert). 2. Informal. a shy person. 3. Zool. a part that is or can be introverted. —adj. 4. Psychol. marked by introversion. —v.t. 5. to turn inward: to introvert one's anger. 6. Psychol. to direct (the mind, one's interest,

C. If the entry word shows irregularly spelled inflected forms (see below, IV, A), a summary of all the parts of speech for the entry is given with the inflected forms following the pronunciation. The part-of-speech labels are listed in the same order as they appear in the definition text, where they are all preceded by a boldface dash.

brave (brāv), adj., brav·er, brav·est, n., v., braved, brav·ing. —adj. 1. possessing or exhibiting courage or courageous endurance. 2. making a fine appearance. 3. Archaic. excellent; fine; admirable. —n. 4. a brave person. 5. a warrior, esp. among North American Indian tribes. 6. Obs. a bully. b. a boast or challenge. —v.t. 7. to meet or face courageously: to brave misfortunes. 8. to defy; challenge; dare. 9. Obs. to make splendid. —v.i. 10. Obs. to boast; brag. [late ME <

D. If an entry word with more than one grammatical form is given a usage, area, subject, or other label that applies to all parts of speech (see below, V, A, B), a boldface dash precedes the first part-of-speech label as well as the others.

Pa·le·o·zo·ic (pā′lē ə zō′ik, pal′ē-), Geol. —adj. 1. noting or pertaining to an era occurring between 220,000,000 and 600,000,000 years ago, characterized by the appearance of fish, insects, and reptiles. See table under era. —n. 2. the Paleozoic era or group of systems.

IV. INFLECTED FORMS

Inflected forms are shown primarily for those entry words that form inflections in some way other than by the simple addition of appropriate inflectional endings. Certain additional plurals are shown to avoid possible confusion, although they are formed by the simple addition of -s or -es.

A. Inflected forms generally shown include those for:

1. nouns, adjectives, and verbs ending in a consonant plus a y, where the y changes to i before an inflectional ending is added.

stead·y (sted′ē), adj., stead·i·er, stead·i·est, interj., n., pl. stead·ies, v., stead·ied, stead·y·ing. —adj. 1.

2. adjectives and verbs ending in e, where the e is dropped before the inflectional ending is added.

fine[1] (fīn), adj., fin·er, fin·est, adv., v., fined, fin·ing, n. —adj. 1. of superior or best quality; of high or highest

3. adjectives and verbs doubling the consonant before adding inflectional endings.

big[1] (big), adj., big·ger, big·gest, adv. —adj. 1. large, ad·mit (ad mit′), v., -mit·ted, -mit·ting. —v.t. 1. to

4. nouns and verbs changing an internal spelling to form inflections.

steal (stēl), v., stole, sto·len, steal·ing, n. —v.t. 1. to

5. adjectives changing their roots to form the comparative and superlative.

good (gŏŏd), adj., bet·ter, best, n., interj., adv. —adj.

6. nouns having plurals that are not native English formations.

phe·nom·e·non (fi nom′ə non′), n., pl. -na (-nə) for 1, 3, -nons for 2. 1. a fact, occurrence, or circumstance a·lum·na (ə lum′nə), n., pl. -nae (-nē). a girl or woman who is a graduate or former student of a specific school, a·lum·nus (ə lum′nəs), n., pl. -ni (-nī). a graduate or former student of a specific school, college, or university.

7. nouns having the plural and singular spelled identically.

Chi·nese (chī nēz′, -nēs′), n., pl. -nese, adj. —n. 1. the standard language of China, based on the speech of

8. Latin names of constellations, which show the genitive form, as used in naming stars.

O·ri·on (ō rī′ən, ô rī′-), n., gen. O·ri·o·nis (ōr′ē ō′nis, or′-, ə rī′ə nis) for 2. 1. Class. Myth. a giant-sized hunter who pursued the Pleiades, was eventually slain by Artemis, and was then placed in the sky as a constellation. 2. Astron. the Hunter, a constellation lying on the celestial equator between Canis Major and Taurus.

The star Betelgeuse, for instance, the brightest star in the constellation Orion, is also known as Alpha Orionis.

9. nominative pronouns, which show their declensions.

I (ī), pron., nom. I, poss. my or mine, obj. me; pl. nom. we, poss. our or ours, obj. us; n., pl. I's. —pron. 1. the nominative singular pronoun, used by a speaker in referring to himself. —n. 2. (used to denote the narrator of a literary work written in the first person singular.)

B. To avoid possible confusion as to their spellings, certain plural forms are also shown, including those for:

1. nouns ending in -o, -ful, -ey, or -us.

po·ta·to (pə tā′tō), n., pl. -toes. 1. Also called Irish potato, white potato. the edible tuber of a cultivated plant, Solanum tuberosum. 2. the plant itself. 3. See bra·vo (brä′vō, brä vō′), interj., n., pl. -vos for 2, 3, -voes for 3, v., -voed, -vo·ing. —interj. 1. well done!

cup·ful (kup′fo͝ol′), n., pl. -fuls. 1. the amount held by a cup. 2. Cookery. a half pint; eight fluid ounces. [ME cuppefulle. See CUP, -FUL] mon·key (muŋ′kē), n., pl. -keys, v., -keyed, -key·ing. —n. 1. any mammal of the order Primates, including pro·spec·tus (prə spek′təs), n., pl. -tus·es. a report

2. nouns ending in elements resembling words that form their plurals in a different way.

mon·goose (mоŋ′gōōs′, mon′-), n., pl. -goos·es. 1. a slender, ferretlike carnivore, Herpestes edwardsii, of

3. nouns about which there might be confusion as to the pronunciation of the plural.

house (n., adj. hous; v. houz), n., pl. hous·es (hou′ziz), v., housed, hous·ing, adj. —n. 1. a building in which path (path, päth), n., pl. paths (paᵺz, päᵺz, pathz, päthz). 1. a way beaten or trodden by the feet of men pet·it four (pet′ē fōr′, fôr′; Fr. pə tē fōōr′), pl. pet·its fours (pet′ē fôrz′, fôrz′; Fr. pə tē fōōr′). a small teacake, variously frosted and decorated. [< F:

pe·so (pā′sō; Sp. pe′sō), n., pl. -sos (-sōz; Sp. -sōs). 1. a silver and copper coin and monetary unit of Mexi-

4. entries of two or more words about which there might be confusion as to which element is pluralized.

ad′jutant gen′eral, pl. adjutants general. 1. U.S. Army. a. the Adjutant General, the chief administrative officer of the Army. b. an adjutant of a unit having a general staff, usually an officer of the Adjutant General's Corps. 2. a high, often the highest, officer of the la·bel (lā′bəl), n., v., -beled, -bel·ing or (esp. Brit.) -belled, -bel·ling. —n. 1. a slip of paper or other ma-break (brāk), v., broke or (Archaic) brake; bro·ken or (Archaic) broke; break·ing; n. —v.i. 1. to smash, bass[2] (bas), n., pl. (esp. collectively) bass, (esp. referring to two or more kinds or species), bass·es. 1. any of

C. Where variant inflected forms occur, all forms are shown, with labels when appropriate.

D. Where two inflected forms are given for a verb, the first is the past tense and the past participle and the second is the present participle.

love (luv), n., v., loved, lov·ing. —n. 1. the profoundly

E. Where three inflected forms are given for a verb, the first is the past tense, the second is the past participle, and the third is the present participle.

run (run), v., ran, run, run·ning, n., adj. —v.i. 1. to

F. Inflected forms are not generally shown for:

1. nouns whose plural is formed by the addition of -s (dog, dogs) or -es (class, classes).
2. verbs whose past tense is formed by the addition of -ed with no alteration of the spelling, whose past participle is formed by the addition of -ed with no alteration of the spelling, and whose present participle is formed by the addition of -ing with no alteration of the spelling (talk, talked, talking).
3. the third person singular, present tense of verbs, with the exception of auxiliary verbs.

V. DEFINITIONS

A. Definitions within an entry are individually numbered in a single sequence, regardless of any division according to part of speech. The most common part of speech is listed first, and the most frequently encountered meaning appears as the first definition for each part of speech. Specialized senses follow, and rare, archaic, and obsolete senses are usually listed at the end of their part of speech group. This order is changed in those cases where it is desirable to group related meanings together.

B. Idioms appear in boldface type under the main entry word whose use in the idiom is least clear or denotative, unless that word is a preposition or an adverbial particle. When more than one such word is used, the idiom is usually listed under the entry for the first word, with a cross reference under the other or others.

pat[1] (pat), v., pat·ted, pat·ting, n. —v.t. 1. to strike lightly or gently with something flat, as with a paddle or the palm of the hand, usually in order to flatten, smooth, or shape: to pat dough into pastry forms. 2. to stroke or tap gently with the palm or fingers as an expression of affection, approbation, etc. 3. to strike (the floor, ground, etc.) with light footsteps. —v.i. 4. to strike lightly or gently. 5. to walk or run with light footsteps. 6. pat on the back, Informal. to encourage, congratulate, or praise: He has been patting himself on the back for the deal he made yesterday. —n. 7. a light stroke, tap, or blow with the palm, fingers, or a flat object. 8. the sound of a light stroke or of light footsteps. 9. a small piece or mass, usually flat and square, formed by patting, cutting, etc.: a pat of butter. 10. a pat on the back, Informal. a word of encouragement or praise: Everyone needs a pat on the back now and then. [ME; perh. var. of PUTT] back[1] . . . 28. pat on the back. See pat[1] (defs. 6, 10).

C. The part of speech under which an idiom appears depends on the grammatical function of the idiom entry word in the idiom, and not on the grammatical function of the idiom in a sentence. Idioms are listed in alphabetical order after the definitions for the part of speech under which they appear. However, no distinction is made between transitive and intransitive verbs, and verbal idioms are listed after the last verb definition. Idiom definitions may be given the same types of restrictive labels as any other definitions.

sack[1] (sak), n. 1. a large bag of strong, coarsely woven material, as for containing potatoes, coal, etc., or the amount a sack holds. 3. U.S. any bag: a sack of candy. 4. Also, sacque. a. a loose-fitting dress, as a gown with a Watteau back, esp. one fashionable in the late 17th century and much of the 18th century. b. a loose-fitting coat, jacket, or cape. 5. U.S. Slang. bed: I bet he's still in the sack. 6. Slang. dismissal or discharge, as from a job. 7. Baseball Slang. a base. 8. hit the sack, Slang. to go to bed; go to sleep: He never hits the sack before midnight. 9. hold the sack. See bag (def. 12). —v.t. 10. to put into a sack or sacks. 11. Slang. to dismiss or discharge, as from a job. 12. sack out, Slang. to go to bed; fall asleep: even too tired to sack out. [ME sak < OE sacc < L sacc(us) bag, sackcloth < Gk sákkos < Sem (Heb saq); cf. Goth sakkus < Gk] —sack′like′, adj. —Syn. 1. See bag.

D. Where two or more definitions belong to the same labeled subject field, they may be marked with boldface letters under the same definition number.

Pal·las (pal′əs), n. 1. Class. Myth. a. a name given to or used with the name of Athena. b. a daughter of Triton who was killed while playing with the youthful Athena. The goddess adopted her name and made an effigy of her. 2. Astron. the second largest and one of the four brightest asteroids. 3. a walled plain in the second quadrant of the face of the moon: about 30 miles in diameter.

E. Where an idiomatic phrase has two or more meanings, each meaning is marked with a boldface letter and the idiom itself is listed only once.

break . . . 75. break in, a. to enter by force or craft: Someone broke in and made off with all the furniture. b. to train; accustom; initiate: The boss is breaking in a new assistant. c. to begin to wear or use: These shoes haven't been broken in. d. to interrupt: She broke in with a non sequitur. e. to run (new machinery) initially under reduced load and speed, until any

F. For meanings using the entry word in a form slightly different from that shown at the main entry, as with a capital letter or a lower case letter or in italic type, the changed form is indicated at the beginning of the definition.

pa·cif·ic (pə sif′ik), adj. 1. tending to make peace; conciliatory: pacific overtures. 2. not warlike; peaceable; mild: a pacific disposition. 3. at peace; peaceful: a pacific era in history. 4. calm; tranquil: The Wabash is a pacific river. 5. (cap.) of or pertaining to the Pacific Ocean. (cap.) of or pertaining to the region bordering on the Pacific Ocean: the Pacific States. —n. (cap.) 7. See Pacific Ocean. 8. a steam locomotive having a four-wheeled front truck, six driving wheels, and a ten·pin (ten′pin′), n. 1. one of the pins used in tenpins. 2. tenpins, (construed as sing.) a form of bowling, played with ten wooden pins at which a ball is

G. For meanings using a singular entry in the plural form or a plural entry in the singular form, the changed form is spelled out at the beginning of the definition.

H. When there is some question as to whether an entry that is plural in form is used with a singular verb or a plural verb, an appropriate statement, in parentheses and italics, follows the entry. A similar statement may follow the changed form of an entry that appears at the beginning of a specific definition. (See above, V, G.)

pros·tho·don·tics (pros′thə don′tiks), n. (construed as sing.) the branch of dentistry that deals with the restoration and maintenance of oral function by the

VI. RESTRICTIVE LABELS

Entries that are limited, in whole or in part, to a particular region, time, subject, or level of usage, are marked with appropriate labels, as U.S., Brit., Australian, Canadian; Archaic, Obs.; Physics, Chem.; Slang, Informal. Sometimes labels are combined: Railroads Slang.

A. If the label applies to the entire entry, it appears before the first part-of-speech label if there is more than one part of speech and after it if there is only one part of speech.

la·bi·o·ve·lar (lā′bē ō vē′lər). Phonet. —adj. 1. pronounced with simultaneous bilabial and velar articulations, as w. —n. 2. a labiovelar speech sound. [LABIO-fi·ne[3] (fē′nā), n. Music. 1. the end of a repeated section, whether da capo or dal segno. 2. the end of a composition that is comprised of several movements. [< It trump[1] (trump), n. 1. Cards. a. any playing card of a suit that for the time outranks the other suits, such a card being able to take any card of another suit. b. Often, trumps. (construed as sing.) the suit itself. 2. Informal. a fine person; brick. —v.t. 3. Cards. to take with a trump. 4. to excel; surpass; outdo. —v.i. 5. Cards. a. to play a trump. b. to take a trick with a trump.

B. If the label applies to a certain part of speech only, it follows the part-of-speech label and precedes the subsequent definition numbers.

C. If the label applies to a certain definition, it follows the definition number and precedes the text of the definition.

a·vun·cu·lar (ə vuŋ′kyə lər), adj. 1. of, pertaining to, or characteristic of an uncle: avuncular affection. 2. Obs. of or pertaining to a pawnbroker. [< L avuncu-

D. If a definition has two or more lettered parts and the label applies to both, it precedes the first letter.

hi·lum (hī′ləm), n. 1. Bot. a. the mark or scar on a seed produced by separation from its funicle or placenta. b. the nucleus of a granule of starch. 2. Anat. the region at which the vessels, nerves, etc., enter or emerge from high′ sea′, 1. the sea or ocean beyond the three-mile limit or territorial waters of a country. 2. Usually high seas. a. the open, unenclosed waters of any sea or ocean; common highway. b. Law. the area within which transactions are subject to court of admiralty jurisdic-

E. If the label applies to only one of the lettered parts, it follows that letter.

F. If the label applies to a definition that consists of two or more lettered parts, and one of them has an additional label, the subject label precedes the number and the additional label follows the letter.

beard (bērd), n. 1. the growth of hair on the face of an adult man, often including the mustache. 2. Zool. a tuft, growth, or part resembling or suggesting a human beard, as the tuft of bristles on the lower jaw of a goat, the cluster of fine, hairlike feathers at the base of the bill of certain birds, etc. 3. Bot. a tuft or growth of awns or the like, as in wheat, barley, etc. 4. a barb or catch on an arrow, fishhook, knitting needle, crochet needle, etc. 5. Also called neck. Print. a. U.S. the sloping part of a type which connects the face with the shoulder of the body. b. Brit. the space on a type between the bottom of the face of an x-high character and the edge of the body, comprising both beard and shoulder. c. the cross stroke on the stem of a capital G. See diag. under type.

VII. CROSS REFERENCES

Main entries are defined under the form most commonly encountered in contemporary English, and therefore most likely to be looked up by the user of the dictionary. Other forms, as less common terms, other names for an entry, or shortened forms, may be listed in their own alphabetical places and may also be shown at the entry that is defined. Various kinds of relationships between entries may also be indicated.

A. Variants

1. Common variant spellings are usually shown, in boldface type, at the form of the entry that is defined. They are preceded by "Also," and followed by a period. Variant names for an entry may be similarly shown, preceded by "Also called." Either kind of variant may be shown with an appropriate restrictive label.

pre·em·i·nence (prē em′ə nəns), n. state or character of being preeminent. Also, pre·em′i·nence, pre·ēm′i·nence. [ME < LL praeēminentia. See PREEMINENT Ched·dar (ched′ər), n. a hard, smooth-textured, processed cheese, made usually from the whole milk of cows and varying in color from white to deep yellow. Also called Ched′dar cheese′. [named after Cheddar, village val·or (val′ər), n. boldness or determination in facing great danger, esp. in battle; heroic courage; bravery: He received a medal for valor. Also, esp. Brit., val′our.

2. If a variant applies to all the definitions in an entry or to two or more specifically numbered definitions that do not constitute one entire part-of-speech group, it is shown after the last definition and before the etymology if there is one.

cab·a·la (kab′ə lə, ko bä′-), n. 1. a system of esoteric theosophy and mysticism developed by rabbis between the 7th to the 18th centuries, reaching its peak about the 12th and 13th centuries, and influencing certain medieval and Renaissance Christian thinkers. It was based on a mystical method of interpreting Scripture by which initiates claimed to penetrate sacred mysteries and foretell the future. Among its central doctrines are, all creation is an emanation from the Deity and the soul exists from eternity. 2. any occult or secret doctrine or science. Also, cabbala, kabala, kabbala. [< ML cab(b)ala < Heb qabbālāh tradition; lit., something received, i.e., handed down]

Bern (bûrn; for 1, 2 also Fr. bern), n. 1. a city in and the capital of Switzerland, in the W part: capital of Bern canton. 163,172 (est. 1960). 2. a canton in W Switzerland. 889,523 (1960); 2658 sq. mi. Cap.: Bern. 3. a boy's given name. Also, Berne (for defs. 1, 2).

3. If a variant applies to a certain part of speech only, it follows the part-of-speech label and precedes the subsequent definition numbers.

eaves·drop (ēvz′drop′), v., -dropped, -drop·ping, n. —v.i. 1. to listen secretly to a private conversation (usually followed by on). —v.t. 2. to eavesdrop on. —n. Also, eaves·drip (ēvz′drip′). 3. water that drips from the eaves. 4. the ground on which such water

4. If a variant applies to a certain definition only, it follows the definition number and precedes the text of the definition.

Brah·man (brä′mən), n., pl. -mans. Hinduism. 1. Also, Brahmin. a member of the highest, or priestly, caste among the Hindus. 2. Also, Brahma. the impersonal supreme being, the primal source and ultimate goal of all beings, with which Atman, when enlightened, knows itself to be identical. [< Skt brāhmaṇa, deriv.

5. When a less common form of an entry, as a spelling or other type of variant, appears as a main entry, it is not defined. Instead it is followed by a cross reference guiding the user to the entry where the definition appears. Single-word cross references are usually shown in regular body type and cross references of two or more words in boldface preceded by "See."

beach′ wag′on, U.S. See station wagon.

B. Alternative Names

1. Alternative names may be shown at the main entry that is defined. In geographical entries, they appear in boldface specifically labeled and placed in the entry as if they were variants. In biographical entries, such alternative names are most often shown in italic type, enclosed in parentheses, following the given name.

Czech·o·slo·va·ki·a (chek′ə slō vä′kē ə, -vak′ē ə), n. a republic in central Europe: formed after World War I; comprises the former countries of Bohemia, Moravia, Silesia, and Slovakia. 13,951,473 (est. 1963); 49,379 sq. mi. Cap.: Prague. Also, Czech′o·Slo·va′ki·a. Official name, Czech′o·slo′vak So′cialist Repub′lic. —Czech′·o·slo·va′ki·an, Czech′o·Slo·va′ki·an, adj., n.

Clem·ens (klem′ənz), Samuel Lang·horne (laŋg′-hôrn, -ərn), (Mark Twain), 1835–1910, U.S. author and humorist.

Len·in·grad (len′in grad′; Russ. le′nin grät′), n. a seaport in the NW RSFSR, in the NW Soviet Union in Europe, on the Gulf of Finland, off the Baltic Sea: founded 1703 by Peter the Great: capital of the Russian Empire 1712–1917. 3,636,000 (1965). Formerly, St. Petersburg (1703–1914); Petrograd (1914–24).

2. Cross references with specific designations may be given, particularly following certain biographical and geographical main entries, to guide the user to the name by which a person or place is most commonly known. A cross reference of this type appears in boldface only when it duplicates exactly the form under which it is elsewhere defined. Otherwise it appears in regular body type.

Lu·te′tia Pa·ri·si·o′rum (lōō tē′shə pə riz′ē ôr′-əm, -ōr′-), an ancient name of Paris.

Nya·sa·land (nyä′sə land′, nī as′ə-), n. former name of Malawi.

Fi·ren·ze (fē ren′dze), n. Italian name of Florence.

Stone′wall Jack′son (stōn′wôl′), nickname of Thomas Jonathan Jackson.

Twain (twān), n. Mark, pen name of Samuel Langhorne Clemens.

C. Inflected Forms

When an inflected form (see above, IV), is given its own main entry, it is cross-referred to the defined entry of which it is a part.

o·per·a² (ŏ′pər ə, op′ər ə), n. Chiefly Music. a pl. of opus.

D. Abbreviations, Symbols

1. Certain definitions, as those in the sciences, may show an abbreviated form, symbol, atomic number, etc., at the end of a definition.

avoirdupois′ weight′, the system of weights in British and U.S. use for goods other than gems, precious metals, and drugs: 27¹¹/₃₂ grains = 1 dram; 16 drams = 1 ounce; 16 ounces = 1 pound; 112 pounds (Brit.) or 100 pounds (U.S.) = 1 hundredweight; 20 hundredweight = 1 ton. The pound contains 7000 grains. Abbr.: av.; avdp.; avoir.

2. When abbreviations, symbols, etc., have their own main entries, they are followed by their full, expanded forms, which are shown in alphabetical order, unless the abbreviation given is that of the etymology of the full form.

N.Y.C., 1. New York Central. 2. New York City.

ca., 1. cathode. 2. centiare. 3. about: ca. 476 B.C. [< L circā]

E. Hidden entries

1. A hidden entry may be implicitly or explicitly defined or named within the text of a related boldface definition in the same field. It is shown in boldface, enclosed in parentheses.

stand′ard time′, the civil time officially adopted for a country or region, usually the civil time of some specific meridian lying within the region. The standard time zones in the U.S. (Eastern time, Central time, Mountain time, Pacific time, Yukon time, Alaska time, and Bering time) use the civil times of the 75th, 90th, 105th, 120th, 135th, 150th, and 165th meridians respectively, the difference of time between

2. When a hidden entry is given its own main entry, it is followed by a cross reference to the broad definition in which it is contained. This cross reference, shown in boldface, is preceded by the words "See under."

Moun′tain time′. See under standard time.

F. Comparisons

1. Cross-reference information preceded by "Cf." may be shown in boldface following a definition to guide the user to related material in another definition.

ni·dic·o·lous (nī dik′ə ləs), adj. Ornith. remaining in the nest for a period after hatching. Cf. nidifugous.

ni·dif·u·gous (nī dif′yə gəs), adj. Ornith. leaving the nest shortly after hatching. Cf. nidicolous. [< L

2. Similar cross references are used to pinpoint specific relationships between definitions. The words expressing the relationship, in regular body type, and the cross reference to another entry, in italic type, are enclosed in parentheses following a definition.

brach·y·ur·ous (brak′ē yŏŏr′əs), adj. Zool. shorttailed, as a crab (opposed to macrurous). [< NL ma·cru·rous (mə krŏŏr′əs), adj. Zool. long-tailed, as a lobster (opposed to brachyurous). [< NL macrūra (see cir′cumstan′tial ev′idence, proof of facts offered as evidence from which other facts are to be inferred (contrasted with direct evidence).

direct′ ev′idence, evidence of a witness who testifies to the truth of the fact to be proved (contrasted with circumstantial evidence).

cook·ing (kŏŏk′iŋg), n. 1. the act of one who or that which cooks. 2. the art or practice of preparing food; cookery. —adj. 3. used in preparing foods: a cooking utensil. 4. fit to eat when cooked (distinguished from eating): cooking apples. [COOK¹ + -ING¹, -ING²] eat·ing (ēt′iŋg), n. 1. the act of one who or that which eats. 2. food with reference to the quality it displays when eaten: This fish is delicious eating. —adj. 3. good or fit to eat, esp. raw (distinguished from cooking): eating apples. [ME; see EAT, -ING¹, -ING²]

G. Illustrations

When additional useful information is given in an illustration, map, diagram, or table, a definition may be followed by an instruction guiding the user to the main entry under which the information may be found.

North·um·bri·a (nôr thum′brē ə), n. an early English kingdom extending N from the Humber to the Firth of Forth. See map under Mercia.

VIII. ETYMOLOGIES

Etymologies in this dictionary appear in square brackets after the definitions or, when they occur, after the variant spellings of the entry word. A full key to the etymologies appears inside the front cover of the dictionary and on page xxxii, and a concise key is given at the bottom of every left-hand page.

A. Symbols and Abbreviations

The following symbols and abbreviations occur with great frequency in the etymologies and have a more important function than the others.

< This symbol, meaning "from," is used to show descent from one language or group of languages to another. It is placed before a language label (e.g., < OF, < L, < Gk) in order to indicate from what source and in what form a word enters English and to trace, in turn, the line of descent from one pre-English source to another.

negative . . . [< L negātīve(us) denying (see NEGATE, -IVE), r. ME negatif < MF]

This symbol is not used between words that belong merely to different historical stages of the same language. It is omitted, for example, between ME and OE forms, AF and OF forms, and LL and L forms.

madder¹ . . . [ME mad(d)er, OE mædr(e)re; c. Icel madhra . . .]

It is also omitted before the analysis of a word—that is, before the breaking down of a word into its constituent morphemes. See equiv. to below.

<< This symbol is used to show descent from one language to another but with an intermediate stage omitted. It may be read as "goes back to."

tick³ . . . [ME tikke, teke, tyke (c. D tijk, G Zeiche < < L tēca, thēca . . .]

oroide . . . [< F, equiv. to or gold (< < L aur(um) + -oïde -OID]

> This symbol, meaning "whence," is used to indicate that the word following it is descended from the word preceding it. It serves the general purpose of citing a modern foreign language word that is akin to the entry word.

yet . . . [ME yet(e), OE giēta; c. MHG iezе yet, now > G jetzt now] equiv. to This abbreviation, meaning "equivalent to," precedes the analysis of a word. It is used to show that a word is made up of the words or morphemes that follow it.

ferreous . . . [< L ferreus, equiv. to ferr(um) iron + -eus -EOUS] organize . . . [ME organyse(n) < ML organiz(āre), equiv. to L organ(um) ORGAN + -izāre -IZE]

+ This symbol is used between morphemes, the members of a compound or a blend, etc., in order to indicate that these are the immediate constituents of the word being analyzed.

distinctly . . . [DISTINCT + -LY] boron . . . [BOR(AX) + (CARB)ON] iniquity . . . [ME < L inīquitās unevenness, unfairness, equiv. to inīqu(us) uneven, unfair (in- IN-³ + -īquus, var. of aequus EQUI-) + -itās -ITY] deriv. of This abbreviation indicates that the form preceding it—for example, a particular part of speech—is a derivative of the form that follows.

bleed . . . [ME blede(n), OE blēdan, deriv. of blōd BLOOD]

B. Parentheses

Parentheses are used in the etymologies to set off the analysis of a preceding word which is itself part of a larger analysis (as orbiculus in the following example).

orbicular . . . [ME < LL orbiculār(is) circular, equiv. to L orbicul(us) small disk (orbi(s) ORB + -culus -CULE) + -āris -AR¹] inherent . . . [< L inhaerent- (s. of inhaerēns) . . .]

Parentheses frequently are used to enclose grammatical or other comments on a preceding form.

divan . . . [< Turk < Pers dīwān, orig. dēvan booklet (whence account book, office, council, bench)]

Parentheses are used to set off parts of the etymons that are felt not to require analysis or that do not have any bearing on the entry word. They are also used to show various kinds of ellipsis or omission, as in blends and acronyms (see below), variant spellings, etc.

inoculate . . . [ME < L inoculātus . . .]

bathe . . . [ME bath(i)e(n), OE bathian, equiv. to bæth BATH¹ + -ian inf. suffix]

C. Language Labels

Language labels, as given in the Etymology Key, precede the italicized etymons. Before an English form, the language label is omitted when the form is "obs." (obsolete), "dial." (dialect), or "earlier," or when it has some other special relationship to the entry word.

harewood . . . [var. of obs. airewood, equiv. to obs. aire harewood . . .]

A language label is shown before the initial form in a given language but is not repeated before subsequent forms in the same language if the series is continuous.

bomb . . . [earlier bom(b)e < Sp bomba (de fuega) ball (of fire), akin to bombo drum . . .]

A language label is shown alone without an accompanying italicized form when there is no significant difference in form or meaning between the word in the given language and the preceding word. In some cases an italicized word is not shown after a language label when the word is identical to one immediately following.

inland . . . [ME, OE; see IN-[1], LAND] base[1] . . . [ME < MF < L basis . . .]
dart . . . [ME < MF < Gmc] wintertime . . . [ME; r. ME, OE wintertīd . . .]

A language label is followed by a colon and a translation when there is a difference in meaning but none in form between a word in a given language and the preceding word.

incentive . . . [ME < LL incentīv(us) provocative, L: setting the tune, equiv. to incent(us) . . .]

D. Typeface

Three styles of type are used in the etymologies. Roman type is used for translations, definitions, comments on grammar, and other explanatory matter.

Italic type is used for all words or parts of words (usually not entries in the dictionary) from which the entry words are formed by derivation or composition. Foreign words, those labeled ME, OE, "obs.," "earlier," "dial.," and those, including proper names, that are not otherwise entries in the dictionary are italicized.

Small capitals indicate a cross reference to another entry in the dictionary where further information may be obtained. Especially frequent reference is made to numerous affixes or combining forms which correspond to common elements in pre-English words, as -ATE[1], -ION, -IVE, etc., for L -ātus, -iōn-, -īvus, etc.

E. Special Types of Etymologies

In addition to the etymologies concerned with tracing words to their pre-English sources, there are those that require only simple cross references to their parts. These are chiefly compounds composed in English.

developer . . . [DEVELOP + -ER[1]] singer[1] . . . [ME; see SING, -ER[1]] batfowl . . . [late ME batfowlyn. See BAT[2], FOWL(V.)]

Acronyms are shown in italics with parentheses enclosing all parts but those composing the entry word.

NATO . . . [N(orth) A(tlantic) T(reaty) O(rganization)] scuba . . . [s(elf)-c(ontained) u(nderwater) b(reathing) a(pparatus)]

flurry . . . [b. FLUTTER and HURRY] smog . . . [SM(OKE + F)OG[1]]

Biographical and other explanatory matter is included in the etymologies when the entry word contains a proper name, an allusion or metaphor, etc., that requires elucidation.

Briggsian logarithm . . . [named after H. BRIGGS; see -IAN] Flathead . . . [so called from their supposed practice of flattening their children's heads] willemite . . . [named after WILLEM I; see -ITE[1]] magnolia . . . [< NL, named after Pierre Magnol (1638–1715), French botanist; see -IA]

Literal translations are given, without analysis, for some entries set in boldface italics when there is a difference between the definition and the literal meaning.

haute école . . . [lit., high school] maftir . . . [lit., dismisser]

In uncertain and unknown etymologies, the symbol [?] is used to mean either "perhaps" or "unknown," depending on the context.

bird . . . [ME bvrd, bryd, OE brid(d) young bird, chick < ?]
dickens . . . [prob. substitute for devil; ? special use of Dicken, earlier form of Dick, proper name]

The following examples show several other obvious formula etymologies that occur occasionally.

swish . . . [imit.] Note: The abbreviation "imit." (imitative) is used in a large sense and frequently implies conventional symbolism rather than merely the reproduction of a sound. See the etymology for bobwhite.
boom[1] . . . [late ME bombon, bummyn to buzz; c. D bommen, G bummen, orig. imit.] hearsay . . . [n. use of v. phrase hear say] mag[2] . . . [shortened form of MAGPIE] back[5] . . . [aph. var. of ABACK] headquarter . . . [back formation from HEADQUARTERS]

IX. RUN-ON ENTRIES

Derivatives of the main entry word may be formed by adding a suffix to the root of the main entry. When their meanings are manifestly clear from the combined senses of the root word and the suffix, these derivatives can be run on at the end of the entry.

A. The run-on entry appears in boldface type at the end of the entry as part of a sequential order that includes, in a complete entry, the last definition, any variant spellings, the etymology, run-on entries, and synonym, antonym, or usage studies. The run-on entry is usually preceded by a lightface dash and is followed by an italicized, abbreviated part-of-speech label or labels.

Mon·tan·a (mon tan′ə), n. a State in the NW United States. 674,767 (1960); 147,138 sq. mi. Cap.: Helena. Abbr.: Mont. —Mon·tan′an, adj., n.

In the entry for bearable the first run-on entry is implicitly defined as "n. the quality or state of being bearable," and the second as "adv. in a bearable manner."

In the entry for Montana the run-on entry is implicitly defined first as "adj. of, pertaining to, or characteristic of Montana," and second as "n. a native or inhabitant of Montana."

B. Run-on entries are usually shown in alphabetical order. However, if two or more are variant spellings of one another, they are shown in sets within which the most commonly used form is given first. Each set is preceded by a lightface dash and followed by a part-of-speech label indicating the shared grammatical function of the run-on entries in the set.

de·lec·ta·ble (di lek′tə bəl), adj. delightful; highly pleasing; enjoyable: a delectable dinner; a delectable witticism. [ME < L dēlectābil(is) delightful, equiv. to dēlectāre to delight (dēlic(ere) + -t- freq. suffix) + -ābilis -ABLE] —de·lec′ta·ble·ness, de·lec′ta·bil′i·ty, n. —de·lec′ta·bly, adv.

C. If the pronunciation of a one-word run-on entry is clearly derivable from that of the main entry, a preceding variant of the main entry, or a preceding run-on entry, the run-on entry is syllabified with centered dots and appropriately stressed in the boldface spelling.

bi·o·met·rics (bī′ə me′triks), n. (construed as sing.) 1. Biol. the application of mathematical-statistical theory to biology. 2. biometry (def. 1). [BIOMETR(Y) + -ICS] —bi′o·met′ric, bi′o·met′ri·cal, adj. —bi′o·met′ri·cal·ly, adv.

D. If the pronunciation of a run-on entry is not clearly derivable from that of the main entry, a preceding variant of the main entry, or a preceding run-on entry, the run-on entry is syllabified with centered dots in the boldface spelling, with the pronunciation and stress shown in parentheses following.

de·clared (di klârd′), adj. avowed; professed: a declared liberal. [DECLARE + -ED[2]] —de·clar·ed·ly (di klâr′id lē), adv.

E. When two or more variant run-on entries requiring pronunciation are pronounced similarly but not identically, the first is syllabified in the boldface and followed by a pronunciation while subsequent ones are syllabified and given stress in the boldface spelling.

ba·rom·e·ter (bə rom′i tər), n. 1. Meteorol. any instrument that measures atmospheric pressure, esp. an aneroid or mercury barometer. Cf. hypsometer. 2. anything that indicates changes. [BARO- + -METER] —bar·o·met·ric (bar′ə me′trik), bar′o·met′ri·cal, adj. —bar′o·met′ri·cal·ly, adv.

F. When two or more variant run-on entries requiring pronunciation are pronounced identically, they are syllabified with centered dots in the boldface spelling and followed by the shared pronunciation.

pre·empt (prē empt′), v.t. 1. to occupy (land) in order to establish a prior right to buy. 2. to acquire or appropriate before someone else: to preempt the choicest cut of meat. —v.i. 3. Bridge. to make a preemptive bid. —n. 4. Bridge. a preemptive bid. Also, pre·empt′, pre·empt′. [back formation from PREEMPTION] —pre·emp·tor, pre·emp·tor, pre·ëmp·tor (prē emp′tôr), n.

G. When a run-on entry consists of two or more words, it is preceded by a lightface dash and followed by a period. Such an entry is given relative stress in the boldface spelling (see above, I, C.)

toe-dance (tō′dans′, -dăns′), v.i., -danced, -danc·ing. to perform a toe dance. [v. use of n. phrase TOE DANCE] —toe′ danc′er.

X. SYNONYMS

A. At the ends of many entries synonym lists appear, set flush left to the margin and preceded by —Syn. They are keyed to the entry definitions to which they relate. These lists are general in nature, with semicolons separating clusters of words that are somewhat more closely connected in denotation and connotation.

B. At the ends of many entries synonym studies appear, set flush left to the margin and preceded by —Syn. Keyed to the definitions to which they relate and often accompanied by a list of synonyms, the studies describe meaning discriminations of a more detailed nature than is possible either in synonym lists or in the definitions themselves.

C. At the ends of some entries, either set off alone or following a synonym list, cross references are shown to entries where synonym studies appear.

XI. ANTONYMS

At the ends of many entries, lists of antonyms appear, preceded by —Ant. These are generally brief and the user is guided to the entries of the antonyms themselves where their synonym lists and studies, in turn, will provide full coverage of antonyms of the original word.

XII. USAGE NOTES

At the ends of a number of entries notes and comments appear, set flush left to the margin and preceded by —Usage. These describe many of the problems that arise in matters of grammar and of usage, and they are intended to reflect the opinions of educated users of English, particularly editors and teachers.

In cases where the note contrasts or compares the usage of two or more words, the note appears under only one of them, with appropriate cross references under the others.

PRONUNCIATION KEY

The symbol (ˊ), as in moth•er (muᵺˊər), blueˊ devˊils, is used to mark primary stress; the syllable preceding it is pronounced with greater prominence than the other syllables in the word or phrase. The symbol (ˏ), as in grand•moth•er (grandˊmuᵺˏər), buzzˊ bombˊ, is used to mark secondary stress; a syllable marked for secondary stress is pronounced with less prominence than one marked (ˊ) but with more prominence than those bearing no stress mark at all.

DEVELOPMENT OF MINUSCULE
ROMAN CURSIVE	ROMAN UNCIAL	CAROL. MIN.	MODERN GOTHIC	ITALIC	ROMAN

The first letter of the English alphabet developed from Greek alpha (α, A) through Etruscan and Latin. The capital (A) goes back to North Semitic aleph, which acquired its modern form in Greek and was retained in the Latin monumental script. The minuscule (a) derives from Latin cursive a, a variant form of A, through Carolingian and Florentine influence to yield both italic and roman forms.

A, a (ā), n., pl. A's or As, a's or as. 1. the first letter of the English alphabet, a vowel. 2. any spoken sound represented by the letter A or a, as in ate, tall, animal, etc. 3. something having the shape of an A. 4. a written or printed representation of the letter A or a. 5. a device, as a printer's type, for reproducing the letter A or a. 6. from A to Z, from beginning to end; completely: He knows the Bible from A to Z. 7. not know from A to B, to know nothing; be ignorant.

a[1] (ə; when stressed ā), indefinite article. 1. not any particular or certain one of a class or group: a man; a chemical; a house. 2. another; typically representing: a Cicero in eloquence; a Jonah. 3. one; a certain; a particular: one at a time; two of a kind; a Miss Johnson. 4. (used before plural nouns that are preceded by a quantifier singular in form): a hundred men (compare hundreds of men); a dozen times (compare dozens of times). 5. indefinitely or nonspecifically (used with adjectives expressing number): a great many years; a few stars. 6. any; a single: not a one. [ME; phonetic var. of AN[1]] a[2] (ə; when stressed ā), prep. each; every; per: ten cents a dance; three times a day. [orig. a, prep. var. of ON (see A-[1]); confused with A[1]] a[3] (ə), prep. Informal or Eye Dialect. of (often written as an unhyphenated element): cloth a gold; time a day; kinda; sorta. [var. of OF[1]] a' (ä, ô), adj. Scot. all: for a' that. Also, a.

A, 1. Elect. ampere. 2. Physics. angstrom. 3. answer.

A, 1. the first in order or in a series. 2. (sometimes l.c.) (in some grading systems) a grade or mark, as in school or college, indicating the quality of a student's work as excellent or superior. 3. (sometimes l.c.) (in some school systems) a symbol designating the first semester of a school year. 4. a major blood group or type usually enabling a person whose blood is of this group to donate blood to persons of group A or AB and to receive blood from persons of O or A. 5. Music. a. the sixth tone in the scale of C major or the first tone in the relative minor scale, A minor. b. a string, key, or pipe tuned to this tone. c. a written or printed note representing this tone. d. (in the fixed system of solmization) the sixth tone of the scale of C major, called la. e. the tonality having A as the tonic note. 6. (sometimes l.c.) the medieval Roman numeral for 50 or 500. Cf. Roman numerals. 7. Chem. argon. 8. Logic. See universal affirmative. 9. Brit. a. (on public telephones) a designation on a button that must be pushed to permit the caller to hear and talk to the person being called. b. a designation for a film recommended for adults only. 10. a proportional shoe width size, narrower than B and wider than AA. 11. a proportional brassiere cup size, smaller than B and larger than AA. 12. (in men's pajama sizes) small.

Å, Physics. angstrom unit.

a-[1], a reduced form of Old English prep. on, meaning "on," "in," "at," "up," "towards," preserved before a noun in a prepositional phrase, forming a predicate adjective or an adverbial element (afoot; abed; ashore; aside) and in archaic and dialectal use before a present participle in -ing (set the bells aringing). [ME, late OE] a-[2], a reduced form of Old English prep. of: akin; afresh; anew. [ME] a-[3], an old point-action prefix, not referring to an act as a whole but only to the beginning or end: She awoke (became awake). They abided by these conclusions (remained faithful to the end). [ME; OE ā-; in some cases confused with A-[4], as in ABRIDGE] a-[4], var. of ad-, used: (1) before sc, sp, st (ascend) and (2) in words of French derivation (often with the sense of increase, addition): amass. [ME, in some words < MF a- < L ad- prefix or ad prep. (see AD-), as in ABUT; in others < L a- (var. of ad- AD-), as in ASCEND] ab-so-lute (ab′sə lōōt′), adj., n. 1. free from imperfection; complete; perfect: absolute happiness. 2. unmixed or adulterated; pure. 3. complete; outright: an absolute lie; an absolute denial; an absolute loss. 4. free from restriction or limitation; not limited in any way: absolute command; absolute freedom. 5. unrestricted in the exercise of governmental power, esp. when arbitrary or despotic: An absolute monarch rules with an iron hand. 6. viewed independently of circumstances; not comparative; ultimate; intrinsic: absolute knowledge. 7. positive; certain: absolute in opinion; absolute evidence. 8. Gram. a. relatively independent syntactically: The participle in "I being Sunday in It being Sunday, the family went to church is an absolute construction. b. (of a usually transitive verb) used without an object, as the verb give in The solicitors for the community did not give to him. c. (of an adjective) having its noun understood, not expressed, as poor in The poor are always with us. d. characterizing the phonological form of a word when spoken in isolation, free of, not influenced by surrounding forms (distinguished from sandhi), as not in is not (as opposed to isn't), or will in they will to they'll. 9. Physics. a. independent of arbitrary standards or of particular properties of substances or systems: absolute humidity. b. pertaining to a system of units, as the centimeter-gram-second system, based on the concepts of mass, time, units of length, mass, and time. c. pertaining to a measurement based on an absolute zero or unit: absolute temperature. 10. Math. noting or pertaining to the single-valued system based solely on an individual's performance considered as representing his personal knowledge of a given subject irrespective of the performance of others in a group: The math department always marks on an absolute scale. Cf. curve (def. 9). 11. Climatology. noting or pertaining to the highest or lowest value of a meteorological quantity recorded during a given, usually long, period of time: absolute maximum temperature. 12. Math. (of an inequality) indicating that the expression is true for all values of the variables. 13. Chem. (of a chemical numbers z; unconditional. Cf. conditional (def. 4). 13. Computer Science. relating to machine language: absolute coding; absolute address. —n. 14. something that is not dependent upon external conditions for existence or for its specific nature, size, etc. (opposed to relative). 15. the absolute, a. something that is free from any restriction or condition. b. something that is independent of some or all relations. c. something that is perfect or complete. d. (in Hegelianism) the world process operating in accordance with the absolute idea. [< L absolūt(us) free, unrestricted, unconditioned (ptp. of absolvere to ABSOLVE) + -us ptp. suffix] —ab'so-lute'ness, n.

—Syn. 2. unadulterated, sheer, unqualified. 4. total, unconditional. ABSOLUTE, UNQUALIFIED, UTTER all mean unconditioned. ABSOLUTE implies an unquestionable finality: an absolute coward. UNQUALIFIED means without reservations or conditions: an unqualified success. UTTER expresses totality or completeness: an utter failure. 5. autocratic, dictatorial, totalitarian. 6. categorical. 7. unequivocal, definite, sure. —Ant. 1. imperfect. 2. mixed. 4. qualified. 6. relative.

ab'solute al'titude, Aeron. the vertical distance between a flying aircraft, rocket, etc., and the point on the earth's surface directly below it.

ab'solute ceil'ing, Aeron. the maximum height above sea level at which an aircraft can maintain horizontal flight.

ab'solute com'plement, Math. complement (def. 8).

ab'solute conver'gence, Math. 1. the property of an infinite series in which the series formed by replacing each term with its absolute value is also convergent. Cf. conditional convergence. 2. the property of a sequence of functions in which the series whose terms are the successive differences of the elements of the sequence exhibits absolute convergence. 3. the property of an improper integral in which the integral formed by replacing the integrand by its absolute value converges. Also called unconditional convergence.

ab'solute e'go, (in the philosophy of Fichte) a transcendental and impersonal ego dividing itself into the personal ego and the nonego in order to attain self-knowledge.

ab'solute humid'ity, the ratio of the mass of water vapor to the volume of moist air within which it is contained. Cf. relative humidity.

ab'solute ide'a, Hegelianism. the spiritual principle, independent of all historical necessity, of which the world process is the progressive expression and fulfillment.

ab'solute ide'alism, Philos. a doctrine asserting the existence of an absolute having the form of an idea, experience, or principle. —ab'solute ide'alist.

ab'solute imped'iment, Law. a fact or circumstance which disqualifies a person from lawful marriage.

ab'solute in'dex of refrac'tion, Optics. See under index of refraction.

ab'so-lute-ly (ab'sə lo͞ot'lē, ab'sə lo͞ot'-), adv. 1. completely; wholly; fully: He is absolutely wrong. 2. positively; really. 3. (of a transitive verb) without an object. —interj. 4. (used to express complete agreement or unqualified assent): Do you think it will work? Absolutely! [ABSOLUTE + -LY] —Syn. 1. entirely, totally, unqualifiedly. 2. unquestionably, unequivocally, definitely.

ab'solute mag'nitude, Astron. the magnitude of a star as it would appear to a hypothetical observer a distance of 10 parsecs or 32.6 light years. Cf. apparent magnitude.

ab'solute ma'jor'ity, 1. a number of votes constituting more than half of the number cast. 2. a number of votes constituting more than half of the number registered. Cf. simple majority.

ab'solute max'imum, Math. the largest value a given function assumes on a specified set. Cf. maximum (def. 2).

ab'solute min'imum, Math. the smallest value a given function assumes on a specified set. Cf. minimum (def. 4).

ab'solute mon'archy, a monarchy that is not limited by laws or a constitution.

ab'solute mu'sic, music whose patterns in sound are not illustrative of or dependent on a text or program.

ab'solute pitch', Music. 1. the exact pitch of a tone in terms of vibrations per second. 2. Also called perfect pitch. the ability to sing or recognize the pitch of a tone by ear.

ab'solute scale', Physics. any temperature scale in which measurements are to absolute zero. Cf. Kelvin (def. 2), Rankine (def. 2).

ab'solute spir'it, Hegelianism. spirit in a state of identity with the absolute idea through attainment of perfect consciousness of its true nature.

ab'solute tem'perature, Physics. temperature measured on an absolute scale.

ab'solute val'ue, Math. 1. the magnitude of a quantity, irrespective of sign; the distance of a quantity from zero. Absolute value is usually written as a quantity by two parallel lines, as |3| or |−3| is 3. 2. the square root of the sum of the squares of the real and imaginary parts of a given complex number, as $|a + bi|$ is equal to $\sqrt{a^2 + b^2}$. Also called modulus.

ab'solute ze'ro, Physical Chem. the lowest possible temperature that the nature of matter admits; the temperature at which the particles whose motion constitutes heat would be at rest, being the empirical point 273° below the zero of the Celsius scale. Cf. absolute (def. 9c).

ab-so-lu-tion (ab'sə lo͞o'shən), n. 1. act of absolving; release from consequences, obligations, or penalties. 2. state of being absolved. 3. Rom. Cath. Theol. a. a remission of sin or of the punishment due to sin, which the priest, on the ground of authority received from Christ, makes in the sacrament of penance. b. the formula declaring such remission. 4. Prot. Theol. a declaration or assurance of divine forgiveness to penitent believers, made after confession of sins. [ME absolucion < L absolūtiōn- (s. of absolūtiō) acquittal. See ABSOLUTE, -ION] ab-so-lut-ism (ab'sə lo͞o tiz'əm), n. 1. the principle or the exercise of complete and unrestricted power in government. 2. Philos. the doctrine of an absolute or nonrelative being. [ABSOLUTE + -ISM] —ab'so-lu'tist, n. —ab'so-lu-tis'tic, adj. —ab'so-lu-tis'ti-cal-ly, adv.

—Syn. 1. totalitarianism.

ab-sol-u-to-ry (ab sol'yə tôr'ē, -tōr'ē), adv. giving absolution. [< L absolūtōri(us). See ABSOLUTE, -ORY] ab-sorb (ab sôrb', -zôrb', -sōrb', -zōrb'), v.t. 1. to free from the consequences or penalties resulting from actions (usually fol. by from): to absolve a person from blame. 2. to set free or release, as from some duty, obligation, or responsibility (usually fol. by from): to be absolved from one's oath. 3. to grant pardon for. 4. Eccles. a. to grant or pronounce remission of sins to. b. to free (a person) by declaration of ecclesiastical authority (even when the act is admitted), or to justify him for having done it: to exonerate one for a crime committed in self-defense. 5. liberate, exempt. 3. excuse, forgive. —Ant. 1. blame.

ab-so-nant (ab'sə nənt), adj. dissonant; discordant (usually fol. by from or to): behavior that is absonant to nature. [AB- + -sonant, as in consonant] ab-sorb (ab sôrb', -zôrb', -sōrb', -zōrb'), v.t. 1. to suck up or drink in (liquid): A sponge absorbs water. 2. to swallow up the identity or individuality of; incorporate: The empire absorbed the small states. 3. to occupy the attention of wholly: so absorbed in a book that he did not hear the bell. 4. to occupy or fill: This job absorbs all of my time. 5. to take up or receive by chemical or molecular action: Carbon absorbs oxygen and combines with it to form carbon dioxide. 6. to take in without echo, recoil, or reflection: to absorb sound and light; to absorb shock. 7. to take in or utilize: The navy absorbed many aeronautical engineers. 8. to pay for: The company will absorb all the research costs. 9. Archaic. to swallow up. [< L absorb(ēre), equiv. to ab- AB- + -sorbēre to swallow] —ab-sorb'a-ble, adj. —ab-sorb'a-bil'i-ty, n.

—Syn. 2. assimilate, consume, devour, engulf; destroy.

ab-sorbed (ab sôrbd', -zôrbd'), adj. deeply engrossed; preoccupied: absorbed in his book. [ABSORB + -ED²] —ab-sorb'ed-ly (ab sôr'bid lē, -zôr'-), adv. —ab-sorb'ed-ness, n.

ab-sor-be-fa-cient (ab sôr'bə fā'shənt, -zôr'-), adj. causing absorption. [ABSORB + -E- (as in liquefy, vaporefacient) + -I- + -ENT] ab-sorb-ent (ab sôr'bənt, -zôr'-), adj. 1. capable of absorbing; tending to absorb: absorbent material. —n. 2. a thing, material, etc., that absorbs. [< L absorbent- (s. of absorbēns) ptp. of absorbēre). See ABSORB, -ENT] —ab-sorb'en-cy, n.

absorb'ent cot'ton, cotton for surgical dressings, cosmetic purposes, etc., made absorbent by removing the natural oil.

ab-sorb-er (ab sôr'bər, -zôr'), n. 1. one who or that which absorbs. 2. See shock absorber. 3. Physics. a material in a nuclear reactor which absorbs, but does not fission, neutrons. [ABSORB + -ER¹] ab-sorb-ing (ab sôr'bing, -zôr'-), adj. extremely interesting; deeply engrossing: an absorbing drama. [ABSORB + -ING²] —ab-sorb'ing-ly, adv.

absorb'ing well', a device for draining off surface water and conducting it to absorbent earth underground. Also called dry well, waste well.

ab-sorp-tance (ab sôrp'təns, -zôrp'-), n. Physics, Optics. the ratio of the amount of radiation absorbed by a surface to the amount of radiation incident upon it. Cf. reflectance, transmittance (def. 2). [trans. of G Absorptionsvermögen. See ABSORPTION, -ANCE] ab-sorp-tion (ab sôrp'shən, -zôrp'-), n. Physics, Optics. the ratio of the amount of radiation absorbed by a surface to the amount of radiation incident upon it. Cf. reflectance, transmittance (def. 2). [trans. of G Absorptionsvermögen. See ABSORPTION, -ANCE] ab-sorp-tion-om-e-ter (ab sôrp'shə om'i tər, -zôrp'-), n. a photoelectric instrument measuring the concentration of a substance, as a transparent solution, by its absorption of monochromatic light. [ABSORPTIO(N) + -METER] —ab-sorp-ti-o-met-ric (ab sôrp'shē ə met'rik, -zôrp'-), adj.

ab-sorp-tion (ab sôrp'shən, -zôrp'-), n. 1. the act of absorbing. 2. the state or process of being absorbed. 3. assimilation. Absorption of the countryside by city farms into one big one. 4. passage of substances to the blood, lymph, and cells, as from the alimentary canal or from the skin. 5. a taking in or reception by molecular or chemical action, as of gases or liquids. 6. Physics. the reduction of energy in the form of electromagnetic radiation by a medium or by a reflecting surface. 7. complete attention; deep preoccupation. [< L absorptiōn- (s. of absorptiō), equiv. to absorpt(us) (ptp. of absorbēre; see ABSORB + -tus ptp. suffix) + -iōn- -ION] —ab-sorp'tive, adj. —ab-sorp'tive-ness, n.

absorp'tion band', Physics. a dark band in the absorption spectrum of a substance, corresponding to a range of wavelengths for which the substance absorbs more strongly than at adjacent wavelengths.

absorp'tion coeffi'cient, Physics, Optics. a measure of the rate of decrease in the intensity of electromagnetic radiation, as light, as it passes through a given substance.

absorp'tion dynamom'eter, Elect. a device for measuring the torque or power of an engine in a process in which the energy supplied to the device by the engine is absorbed.

absorp'tion edge', Physics, a discontinuity in the graph of the absorption coefficient of a substance plotted against the wavelength of x-rays being absorbed, representing the ionization energy necessary to free electrons from particular shells of the atoms of the substance. Also called absorp'tion discontinu'ity, absorp'tion lim'it.

absorp'tion spec'trum, Physics. the spectrum formed by electromagnetic radiation that has passed through a medium in which radiation of certain frequencies was absorbed.

ab-sorp-tiv-i-ty (ab'sôrp tiv'i tē, -zôrp-), n. Physics. the property of a body that determines the fraction of incident radiation absorbed or absorbable by the body. [< L absorptō- (s. of absorptus absorbed; see ABSORPTION) + -IVE + -ITY] abs. re., Law. See absente reo.

ab-stain (ab stān'), v.i. to refrain or hold (oneself) back voluntarily, esp. from doing or enjoying something (usually fol. by from): to abstain from eating meat; a referendum in which two delegates abstained. [late ME *abste(i)n*e < MF abstenir < L abstinēre, equiv. to abs- ABS- + tinēre, comb. form of tenēre to hold, keep] —ab-stain'er, n.

ab-ste-mi-ous (ab stē'mē əs), adj. 1. sparing or moderate in eating and drinking; temperate in diet. 2. characterized by abstinence: an abstemious life. 3. sparing: an abstemious diet. [< L abstēmius, equiv. to abs- ABS- + tēm- (root of temētum intoxicating drink) + -ius -IOUS] —ab-ste'mi-ous-ly, adv. —ab-ste'mi-ous-ness, n.

ab-sten-tion (ab sten'shən), n. 1. holding off or refraining; abstinence from action. 2. withholding of one's vote. [< L abstention- (s. of abstentiō), equiv. to L abstent(us) (ptp.) (see ABSTAIN) + -iōn- ION] —ab-sten'tious, adj.

ab-ster-gent (ab stûr'jənt), n.t., adj. -sterged, -sterg-ing. —n. 1. a cleansing or detergent medium. —adj. 2. cleansing. [< L abstergent- (s. of abstergēns (prp.) wiping off). See ABSTERGE, -ENT]

ab-sti-nence (ab'stə nəns), n. 1. forbearance from any indulgence of appetite, esp. from the use of alcoholic liquors. 2. self-denial; self-restraint; self-denial; forbearance. 3. Eccles. the refraining from certain kinds of food on certain days, as from flesh on Fridays. 4. Econ. the conserving of current income in order to build up capital for the future. [ME < MF < L abstinentia. See ABSTAIN, -ENCE] —ab'sti-nent, adj. —ab'sti-nent-ly, adv.

—Syn. 1. abstemiousness, sobriety, teetotalism.

ab-stract (adj. ab'strakt; v. ab strakt'; n. ab'strakt; v. also strak'), adj. 1. considered apart from concrete qualities, specific objects, or actual instances: an abstract idea. 2. expressing a quality or characteristic apart from any object: Truth is abstract, as justice, poverty, and speed. 3. theoretical; not applied or practical: abstract science. 4. difficult to understand; obscure: abstract reasoning. 5. Art. a. designating or pertaining to the formal aspect of art, emphasizing lines, colors, generalized or geometrical forms, etc., esp. with reference to their relationship to one another. Often (cap.) pertaining to a nonrepresentational art style of the 20th century. —n. 6. a summary of a statement, document, speech, etc.; epitome. 7. something that concentrates in itself the essential qualities of anything more extensive or more general, or of several things; essence. 8. an idea or term considered apart from some material basis or object. 9. abstract work of art. 10. in the abstract, without reference to practical considerations or applications; in theory: beauty in the abstract. 11. the abstract, something that exists only as an idea; matter in the abstract. —v.t. 12. to draw or take away; remove. 13. to divert or draw away the attention of. 14. to steal. 15. to consider as a general quality or characteristic apart from specific objects or instances: to abstract the notions of time, space, and matter. 16. to make an abstract, summary, or epitome of; summarize. [< L abstractus drawn off (ptp. of abstrahere). See ABS-, TRACT¹] —ab-stract'er, n. —ab-stract'ly, adv. —ab'stract-ness, n.

ab'stract ai'gebra, the branch of mathematics that deals with the investigation of algebraic systems axiomatically associated with the real number system to other, more general systems.

—Syn. See absent-minded.

Ab'stract Expres'sionism, (sometimes l.c.) Fine Arts. a style of painting in which paint is applied in an apparently random manner producing images that may or may not have reference to forms exterior to the picture; thought to be derived from Surrealism and Expressionism.

ab-strac-tion (ab strak'shən), n. 1. an abstract or general idea or term. 2. an impracticable or visionary and unrealistic idea. 3. the act of considering something as a general quality or characteristic, apart from concrete realities, specific objects, or actual instances. 4. the act of withdrawing or taking withdrawal: The sensation of cold is due to the abstraction of heat from our bodies. 5. absent-mindedness; inattention; mental absorption. 6. Art. the state of the abstract qualities or characteristics of a work of art. b. a work of art, esp. nonrepresentational, stressing formal relationships. [< L abstractiōn- (s. of abstractiō) separation. See ABSTRACT, -ION] —ab-strac'tion-al, adj.

ab-strac-tion-ism (ab strak'shə niz'əm), n. Fine Arts. the practice and theory of abstract art. [ABSTRACTION + -ISM] ab-strac-tion-ist (ab strak'shə nist), n. 1. a person who produces abstract paintings. —adj. 2. tending toward or showing abstract characteristics in art. [ABSTRACTION + -IST] ab-strac-tive (ab strak'tiv), adj. 1. having the power of abstracting. 2. pertaining to an abstract or summary. [< ML abstractīv(us). See ABSTRACT, -IVE] —ab-strac'tive-ly, adv. —ab-strac'tive-ness, n.

ab'stract noun', Gram. 1. a noun having an abstract meaning as opposed to a concrete meaning, or grammatical coverage associated with such a meaning, as dread. 2. a noun formed with a suffix whose grammatical role imparts such a meaning, as witness. Cf. concrete noun.

ab'stract of ti'tle, Law. an outline history of the title to a parcel of real estate, showing the original grant, subsequent conveyances, mortgages, etc.

ab'stract space', Math. a space whose elements are not geometric points, esp. a function space.

ab·stric·tion (ab strik'shən), n. Bot. a method of spore formation in fungi in which successive portions of the spore are cut off through the growth of septa; abjunction. [AB- + STRICTION] ab·struse (ab strōōs'), adj. 1. hard to understand; recondite; esoteric: abstruse theories. 2. Obs. secret; hidden. 3. ac-cul-ture (ə kulʹchə rər), v.t., -ized, -iz-ing. to cause to adopt the ideas, or other ethnic group) to adopt the culture of another people: A series of invasions from the North had slowly acculturized his people. [ACCULTURATION]

ac-cum-bent (ə kumʹbənt), adj. 1. reclining: accumbent posture. 2. Bot. lying against something. [< L accumbent- (s. of accumbēns, prp. of accumbere), equiv. to ac- AC- + -cumb- (akin to incumbere to recline; see COVEY) + -ent- -ENT] —ac-cum'ben-cy, n.

ac-cu-mu-late (ə kyōōʹmyə lāt), v., -lat-ed, -lat-ing. —v.t. 1. to heap up; gather, as into a mass; collect: to accumulate wealth. —v.i. 2. to grow into a heap or mass; form an increasing quantity: Public evils accumulate. [< L accumulāt(us) heaped up (ptp. of accumulāre), equiv. to ac- AC- + cumul(us) heap + -ātus -ATE¹] —ac-cu'mu-la-ble, adj.

ac-cu-mu-la-tion (ə kyōōʹmyə lāʹshən), n. 1. act or state of accumulating; state of being accumulated. 2. that which is accumulated; an accumulated amount, number, or mass. 3. growth by continuous additions, as of interest to principal. [< L accumulātiōn- (s. of accumulātiō). See ACCUMULATE, -ION] accumula'tion point', Math. a point such that every neighborhood of the point contains at least one point in a given set other than the given point. Also called cluster point, limit point, point of accumulation point. Cf. derived set, strong accumulation point.

ac-cu-mu-la-tive (ə kyōōʹmyə lāʹtiv, -lə tiv), adj. 1. tending to grow from successive additions. [ACCUMULATE + -IVE] —ac-cu'mu-la'tive-ly, adv. —ac-cu'mu-la'tive-ness, n.

ac-cu-mu-la-tor (ə kyōōʹmyə lāʹtər), n. 1. one who or that which accumulates; a register or electric device on an arithmetic machine, as an adding machine, cash register, digital computer, etc., that receives a succession of numbers and performs certain arithmetic operations of the given number with other numbers. 3. Brit., a storage battery or storage cell. 4. an apparatus which stores fluid at approximately the working pressure of a hydraulic transmission system in which it will be employed, so that a supply of fluid is always immediately available to the system. 5. Mach. a. (in a boiler) a reservoir for storing hot fluid, ready to flash into steam. b. (in a hydraulic system) a vessel in which air is trapped and compressed by the liquid, thus storing energy to supply liquid under pressure when the demand of the system is greater than the pump can momentarily supply. [< L accumulātor. See ACCUMULATE, -OR²] ac-cu-ra-cy (akʹyər ə sē), n., pl. -cies. 1. condition or quality of being true, correct, or exact; freedom from error or defect; precision or exactness; correctness. 2. Chem., Physics, the extent to which a given measurement agrees with the standard value for that measurement. 3. Statistics. See precision. 4. Math. the degree of correctness of a quantity, expression, etc. Cf. precision (def. 5). [ACCUR(ATE) + -ACY] ac-cu-rate (akʹyər it), adj. 1. conforming to truth; consistent with a standard, rule, or model; free from error or defect; precise; exact; correct. 2. careful or meticulous; not making mistakes: an accurate typist. [< L accūrāt(us) carefully prepared (ptp. of accūrāre), equiv. to ac- AC- + cūr(a) care + -ātus -ATE¹] —ac'cu-rate-ly, adv. —ac'cu-rate-ness, n.

—Syn. 1. true, unerring. See correct.

ac-curs-ed (ə kûrʹsid, ə kûrstʹ), adj. 1. subject to a curse; ruined. 2. worthy of curses; detestable. Also, esp. Brit., accurst (ə kûrstʹ). [ME acursed, ptp. of ācursian. See A-³, CURSE] —ac-curs-ed-ly (ə kûrʹsid lē), adv. —ac-curs'ed-ness, n.

ac-cu-sa-tion (akʹyōō zāʹshən), n. 1. a charge of wrongdoing; imputation of guilt or blame. 2. the specific offense charged: the accusation is murder. 3. the act of accusing or charging. Also, ac-cus-al (ə kyōōʹzəl). [ME accusacioun < OF accusation < L accūsātiōn-, equiv. to accūsāt(us) (ptp.) called to account (see AC-CUSE, -ATE¹) + -iōn- -ION] ac-cu-sa-ti-val (ə kyōōʹzə tīʹvəl), adj. pertaining to the accusative case. [ACCUSATIVE + -AL¹]

ac-cu-sa-tive (ə kyōōʹzə tiv), Gram. —adj. 1. (in certain inflected languages, as Latin, Greek, Russian) noting a case whose distinctive function is to indicate the direct object of a verb. 2. similar to such a case form in function or meaning. 3. accusatory. —n. 4. the accusative case. 5. a word in the accusative case. 6. a form or construction of similar meaning. [< L accūsātīv(us), equiv. to ac- AC- + cūsātīvus, var. of causātīvus; see CAUSATIVE (accūsātīvus is a loan-translation of Gk aitiatikḗ, in the sense of causing, effecting)] —ac-cu'sa-tive-ly, adv.

ac-cu-sa-to-ry (ə kyōōʹzə tôrʹē, -tōrʹē), adj. containing an accusation; accusing: He looked at the jury with an accusatory expression. Also, accusative. [< L accūsātōri(us), equiv. to accūsāt(us) (ptp. of accūsāre to AC-CUSE) + -ōrius -ORY¹] ac-cuse (ə kyōōzʹ), v., -cused, -cus-ing. —v.t. 1. to bring a charge against; charge with the fault, offense, or crime (usually fol. by of): He accused him of murder. 2. to blame; censure. —v.i. 3. to make accusation. [< ac(c)use < OF acuse(r) < L accūsāre (ac- AC- + cūs-, var. of caus-; see CAUSE)] —ac-cus'er, n. —ac-cus'ing-ly, adv.

ac-cused (ə kyōōzdʹ), adj. 1. charged with a crime, fault, etc.: the accused boy. —n. 2. the defendant or defendants in a court of law; the person or persons charged with a crime, offense, etc. [ACCUSE + -ED²] ac-cus-tom (ə kusʹtəm), v.t. to familiarize by custom or use; habituate: to accustom oneself to cold weather. [late ME < MF acoustume(r). See AC-, CUSTOM] ac-cus-tomed (ə kusʹtəmd), adj. 1. customary; habitual: their accustomed walk. 2. used (fol. by to): He is accustomed to staying up late. [ME; see ACCUSTOM, -ED²] —ac-cus'tomed-ly, adv. —ac-cus'tomed-ness, n.

AC/DC (āʹsēʹ dēʹsēʹ), adj. Slang. tending to respond sexually to both men and women; bisexual.

AC/DC, Elect. alternating current or direct current. Also, A.C./D.C., a.c./d.c., a-c/d-c.

ace (ās), n., v., aced, ac-ing, adj. —n. 1. a single spot or mark on a card or die. 2. (in tennis, badminton, handball, etc.) a. Also called service ace. a placement made on a service. b. a service which the receiver fails the opponent fails to touch. d. the point thus scored. 3. a playing card or die marked with a single spot: He dealt me four aces. 4. Informal. a. a very skilled person; expert; adept: an ace at tap dancing. 5. a fighter pilot credited with destroying a prescribed number or more of enemy aircraft. 6. Golf. a hole-in-one. 7. a shot which the ball is driven from the tee into the hole in one stroke: He hit a 385-yard ace on the first hole. b. a score of one point for such a shot: to card an ace. 8. Rare. a very small quantity, amount, or degree; a particle: not worth an ace. 9. easy aces, Auction Bridge. aces divided between opponents. 10. have or keep an ace up one's sleeve, to be in possession of the most important information, argument, etc. 11. within an ace of, within a narrow margin of; close to: He came within an ace of winning. —v.t. 12. (in tennis, badminton, handball, etc.) to win a point against (one's opponent) by an ace. 13. Golf. to make an ace on (a hole). —adj. 14. Informal. first in quality; outstanding. [ME as, aas < OF as < L as the whole, a unit, perh. < dial. Gk as one (Gk heîs)]

ace-a, pl. -ae. a bryozoan, proving from Latin, used in the formation of names of classes and orders: Crustacea. [< L, neut. pl. of -āceus. See -ACEOUS]

-aceae, Bot. a learned borrowing from Latin, used in the formation of names of families: Rosaceae. [< L, fem. pl. of -āceus. See -ACEOUS] a-ce-di-a (ə sēʹdē ə), n. 1. sloth. Cf. deadly sins. 2. laziness or indifference in religious matters. [< LL < Gk akēdeia, equiv. to akēd(ḗs) (a- A-⁵ + -kēdēs, var. s. of kēdos care, anxiety) + -eia -Y³] ace' in the hole', an advantage or a resource kept back until the proper opportunity presents itself: His strength in a crisis is an ace in the hole. [from the knowledge advantage of having an ace as a hole card in five-card stud] a-cel-da-ma (ə selʹdə mə), n. 1. the place near Jerusalem purchased with the bribe Judas took for betraying Jesus. Acts 1:18, 19. 2. any place of slaughter and bloodshed. Also, Akeldama. [< L < Gk Akeldamá < Aram hāqēl damā field of blood] a-ce-nes-the-sia (ā′sə nis thēʹzhə), n. not psychiatry. loss of the physical awareness of one's body. Also, acoenaesthesia. [A-⁵ + CENESTHESIA] a-cen-tric (ā senʹtrik), adj. not centered; having no center. [A-⁵ + CENTRIC]

-aceous, a suffix of adjectives, used in scientific terminology and in the formation of adjectives to terms in -acea and -aceae: cretaceous; herbaceous. [< L -āceus of the nature of] a-ceph-a-lous (ā sefʹə ləs), adj. 1. headless; lacking a distinct head. 2. without a leader or ruler. [A-⁵ + -CEPHALOUS] ace' point', the first point in backgammon.

a-ce-quia (ə sēʹkyə; Sp. ä seʹkyä), n., pl. -quias (-kyəz; Sp. -kyäs). Southwestern U.S. an irrigation ditch. [< Sp < Ar as-sāqiyah the irrigating stream]

ac·er·ate (as′ə rāt′, -ər ĭt), adj. acerose¹. [< L ācer sharp + -ATE¹] ac·er·bic (ə sûr′bĭk), adj. 1. sour or astringent in taste. 2. harsh or severe in temper, expression, etc. Also, a·cer·bi·cal (ə sûr′bĭ kəl). [< L acerb(us) bitter, morose]

A·cer·bas (ə sûr′bəs), n. (in the Aeneid) Sychaeus.

ac·er·bate (ə. as′ər bāt′; adj. ə sûr′bĭt), v., -bat·ed, -bat·ing, adj. —v.t. 1. to make sour or bitter. 2. to exasperate. —adj. 3. embittered. [< L acerbāt(us) (ptp. of acerbāre). See ACERB, -ATE¹] ac·er·bi·ty (ə sûr′bĭ tē), n. 1. sourness, with roughness or astringency of taste. 2. harshness or severity, as of temper or expression. [< L acerbitās. See ACERB, -ITY] ac·er·dol (as′ər dōl′, -dŏl′, -dol′), n. Chem. See calcium permanganate. [acerd(ese), earlier name of manganite + L -ōl oil; acerdēs irritable, equiv. to a- A-⁵ + kērd(os) profit, value) + -OL¹] ac·er·ose¹ (as′ə rōs′), adj. Bot. needle-shaped, as the leaves of the pine. Also, acerate, acerous. [special sense of ACEROSE², by confusion of acer- with L acus needle] ac·er·ose² (as′ə rōs′), adj. 1. resembling chaff. 2. mixed with chaff. [< L acerōs(us), equiv. to acer- (s. of acus) chaff + -ōsus -OSE¹] ac·er·ous¹ (as′ər əs), adj. Bot. acerose¹.

a·ce·rous² (ā sēr′əs), adj. Zool. 1. having no antennae. 2. having no horns. [< Gk akerōs, equiv. to a- A-⁵ + kēr (var. of kéras) horn + -OUS] a·cer·vate (ə sûr′vĭt, -vāt), adj. Bot. heaped; growing in heaps, or in closely compacted clusters. [< L acervāt(us) heaped up (ptp. of acervāre), equiv. to acerv(us) heap + -ātus -ATE¹]

a·cer·vu·lus (ə sûr′vyə ləs), n., pl. -li (-lī′). Bot. (in certain fungi) an asexual fructification consisting of a mat of hyphae that give rise to short-stalked conidiophores. [< L: heap + -ulus -ULE, suffix]

A·ces·i·us (ə ses′ē əs), n. Class. Myth. an epithet of Apollo, meaning "healer."

a·ces·o·dyne (ə ses′ə dīn′), adj. mitigating pain; anodyne. [< Gk akesódyn(os), equiv. to akes- (var. s. of ákeîsthai to heal) + odýnē pain (s. of odýnasthai to suffer pain) + -os adj. suffix] —a·ce·sod·y·nous (as′ĭ sod′ə nəs), adj.

A·ces·sa·me·nus (ə ses′ə mē′nəs), n. (in the Iliad) a Thracian king.

a·ce·sis (ə sē′sĭs), n. the granulated tissue that forms over a wound and later contracts into scar tissue. [< NL < Gk akes- (see ACESODYNE) + tomḗ -TOME] acet-, var. of aceto-, esp. before a vowel.

ac·e·tab·u·li·form (as′ĭ tab′yə lə fôrm′), adj. Bot. saucer-shaped, as the fruit of certain lichens. [< NL; see ACETABULUM, -I-, -FORM] ac·e·tab·u·lum (as′ĭ tab′yə ləm), n., pl. -la (-lə). Anat. the socket in the hipbone which receives the head of the thighbone. Also, acetabulum vesiculae. [< L: vinegar cup, equiv. to acēt(um) vinegar + -abulum suffix denoting instrument or vessel] —ac′e·tab′u·lar, adj.

ac·e·tal (as′ĭ tal′), n. Chem. 1. Also called ethylidene diethyl ether, ethylacetal, a colorless, volatile, sparingly water-soluble liquid, $CH_3CH(OC_2H_5)_2$, having a nutlike aftertaste, obtained by the partial oxidation of ethyl alcohol: chiefly as a solvent, in perfumery, in organic synthesis, and in medicine as a hypnotic. 2. any of a class of compounds of aldehydes or ketones with alcohols. [ACET- + -AL²] ac·e·tal·de·hyde (as′ĭ tal′də hīd′), n. Chem. a volatile, colorless, water-soluble liquid, CH_3CHO, having a pungent, fruitlike odor: used chiefly in the silvering of mirrors and in organic synthesis. [ACET- + ALDEHYDE] ac·e·tal·dol (as′ĭ tal′dôl, -dŏl, -dol), n. Chem. aldol (def. 1). [ACETAL(DEHYDE) + -OL¹] ac′etal phos′phatide, Biochem. plasmalogen.

ac·et·am·ide (as′ĭt am′īd, -id; ə set′ə mīd′, -mid), n. Chem. a white, water-soluble, crystalline solid, CH_3CONH_2, the amide of acetic acid: used chiefly in organic synthesis. Also, ac·et-am·id (as′ĭ tam′id, ə set′ə mid). Also called acetic acid amide, ethanamide. [ACET- + AMIDE] ac·et·an·i·line (as′ĭ tan′ə lĭn, -līn), n. Chem. 1. Pharm. a white, crystalline, odorless, organic powder, CH_3CO-NHC_6H_5, produced by the action of glacial acetic acid on aniline: used in organic synthesis and in medicine in the treatment of fever, headache, and rheumatism. Also, ac·et·an·i·lid (as′ĭ tan′ə lĭd). Also called acetanilide, antifebrin, acetylaminobenzene. [ACET- + ANIL(INE) + -IDE, -INE²] ac·et·a·nis·i·dine (as′ĭ tə nis′ĭ dēn′, -din), n. Pharm. methacetin. [ACET- + ANISE + -IDE + -INE²] ac·e·tate (as′ĭ tāt′), n. 1. Chem. a salt or ester of acetic acid. 2. Textiles. a. a synthetic fabric composed of a derivative of the acetic ester of cellulose, differing from viscose rayon in having greater strength when wet and greater resistance to high temperatures. b. Print. a sheet of clear plastic film fastened over the front of artwork for protection, as an overlay, or the like. [ACET- + -ATE²] —ac′e·tat′ed, adj.

ac·et·a·zol·a·mide (as′ĭ tə zŏl′ə mīd′, -mid), n. Pharm. a white or yellowish, crystalline, slightly watersoluble powder, $C_4H_8N_4O_3S_2$: used as a diuretic chiefly in edematous or heart conditions. [ACET- + AZOLE + AMIDE]

A·ce·tes (ə sē′tēz), n. Class. Myth. a Lydian helmsman who, realizing that a youth captured by his crew was actually Dionysus in disguise, persuaded the god from the crew and eventually became his follower.

a·ce·tic (ə sē′tĭk, ə set′ĭk), adj. pertaining to, derived from, or producing vinegar or acetic acid. [ACET- + -IC] ac′etic ac′id, Chem. a colorless, pungent, watermiscible liquid, CH_3COOH, the essential constituent of vinegar, produced by oxidation of acetaldehyde, bacterial action on ethyl alcohol, the reaction of methyl alcohol with carbon monoxide, or other processes: used chiefly in the manufacture of acetate fibers and in the production of numerous esters that are solvents and flavoring agents. Cf. glacial acetic acid.

ac′etic anhy′dride, Chem. a colorless, pungent liquid, $(CH_3CO)_2O$, the anhydride of acetic acid: used chiefly as a reagent and in the production of plastics, film, and fabrics derived from cellulose.

a·cet·i·fy (ə set′ə fī′), v.t., v.i., -fied, -fy·ing. to turn into vinegar; make or become acetous. [ACET- + -IFY] —a·cet′i·fi·ca′tion, ac·e·ta·tion (as′ĭ tā′shən), n.

ac·e·tim·e·ter (as′ĭ tim′ĭ tər), n. Chem. acetometer. —ac·e·ti·met·ric (as′ĭ tə met′rĭk), adj. —ac′e·tim′e·try, n.

ac·e·tin (as′ĭ tin), n. Chem. a colorless, thick, hygroscopic liquid, $CH_3COOC_3H_5(OH)_2$: used chiefly in bulk manufacturing processes. Also called glyceryl monoacetate, monacetin, monoacetin. [ACET- + -IN²] aceto-, a combining form indicating the presence of acetic acid or the acetyl group (acetophenetidin), used esp. before a consonant. Also, esp. before a vowel, acet-. [< L acēt(um) vinegar + -o-] a·ce·to·bac·ter (ə sē′tō bak′tər, as′ĭ tō-, ə sē′tō bak′tər), n. Bacteriol. any of several ellipsoidal or rodshaped bacteria of the genus Acetobacter, certain species of which are used in making vinegar. [ACETO- + -bacter, comb. form of BACTERIUM] ac·e·to·bu·tyr·ic (as′ĭ tō byōō tir′ĭk), adj. Chem. a yellowish, pleasant-smelling liquid, $CH_3CH(OH)CO_2H$, obtained from various carbohydrates, as glucose, by fermentation: used chiefly in the manufacture of flavors and essences. Also called acetylmethylcarbinol, dimethyliketol. [ACETO- + -IN²] a·ce·to·em·e·ter (as′ĭ tō em′ĭ tər), n. Chem. an instrument for measuring the amount of acetic acid present in a solution. Also, a·ce·tom·e·ter (ə′sē tom′ĭ tər). —a·ce·to·met·ri·cal (as′ĭ tə met′rĭ kəl), a·ce·to·met·ric (as′ĭ tə met′rĭk), adj. —a·ce·to·met′ri·cal·ly, adv.

a·ce·to·ne (as′ĭ tōn′), n. Chem. a colorless, volatile, water-soluble, flammable liquid, $(CH_3)_2CO$, usually derived by oxidation of isopropyl alcohol or by bacterial fermentation of carbohydrates: used chiefly in paints and varnishes, as a general solvent, and in organic synthesis. Also called dimethylketone. [ACET- + -ONE] —a·ce·ton·ic (as′ĭ ton′ĭk), adj.

ac′etone bod′y, Biochem. See ketone body.

a·ce·to·ni·trile (as′ĭ tō nī′trĭl, -trēl, -trīl, ə sē′tō-, ə set′ō-), n. Chem. a colorless, poisonous, water-soluble liquid, CH_3CN, having an etherlike odor: used chiefly in organic synthesis and as a solvent. Also called methyl cyanide. [ACETO- + NITRILE] a·ce·to·phe·net·i·din (as′ĭ tō fə net′ə dĭn, ə sē′tō-), n. Chem. a white, microcrystalline solid, $CH_3(CH_2)_1COHCO_2HCH_2OOCCH_3$: used chiefly as a food preservative and as a plasticizer. [ACETO- + STEARIN] a·ce·to·sol·u·ble (ə set′ə sol′yə bəl), adj. soluble in acetic acid. [ACETO- + SOLUBLE]

a·ce·tous (ə sē′təs), adj. 1. containing or producing acetic acid. 2. sour or resembling vinegar; vinegary. Also, a·ce·tose (as′ĭ tōs′). [< LL acētōs(us), equiv. to acēt(um) vinegar + -ōsus -OSE¹] a·cet·yl (ə sē′tl, -tīl, as′ĭ tl, -tīl), n. Chem. containing the acetyl group. [ACET- + -YL]

a·ce·tyl·am·i·no·ben·zene (ə sē′tl ə mē′nō ben′zēn, -ə mē′nō ben′zēn, -ə mē′nō ben′zēn), n. Chem. acetanilide. [ACETYL + AMINO- + BENZENE]

a·ce·tyl·an·i·line (ə sē′tl an′ə lĭn, -līn′, ə set′-, as′ĭ tl-), n. Chem. acetanilide. [ACETYL + ANILINE] a·ce·tyl·ate (ə sē′tl āt′), v., -lat·ed, -lat·ing. Chem. —v.t. 1. to introduce the acetyl group into (a compound). —v.i. 2. to become acetylated. Also, acetylize. [ACETYL + -ATE¹] —a·ce′tyl·a′tion, n.

a·ce·tyl·ben·zene (ə sē′tl ben′zēn, -ben zēn′, ə set′-, as′ĭ tl-), n. Chem. See acetophenone. [ACETYL + BENZENE] a·ce·tyl·cho·line (ə sē′tl kō′lēn, -lin, -kol′ēn, -in, as′ĭ tl-), n. 1. Biochem. the acetic acid ester of choline, $(CH_3)_3N(CH_2)_2OCOCH_3$, released and hydrolyzed during nerve impulse synthesis and in reaction by transmitting nerve impulses across synapses. 2. Pharm. a commercial form of this compound, obtained from liver or pancreas, that is unstable in acetic anhydride, used chiefly as its hydrochloride or hydrobromide to decrease blood pressure or initiate peristalsis. [ACETYL + CHOLINE]

a·ce·tyl·ene (ə set′ə lēn′, -ə lin), n. Chem. a colorless gas, HC–CH, having an etherlike odor, produced usually by the action of water on calcium carbide or the partial combustion of natural gas: used esp. in metal cutting and welding, as an illuminant, and in organic synthesis. Also called ethine, ethyne. [ACETYL + -ENE] —a·ce·tyl·en·ic (ə set′ə lē′nĭk, -len′ĭk), adj.

ace′tyl·ene se′ries, Chem. See alkyne series.

a·ce·tyl·e·no·gen (ə set′ə lē′nō jən, -ə lin′ə-), n. Chem. See calcium carbide. [ACETYLENE + -O- + -GEN]

a·ce·tyl·for′mic ac′id (ə sē′tl fôr′mĭk, ə set′-, as′ĭ tl-), Chem. See pyruvic acid. [ACETYL + FORMIC ACID] a·ce·tyl·group′ (ə sē′tl-, ə set′-, as′ĭ tl-), Chem. the univalent group, CH_3CO–, derived from acetic acid. Also called acetyl radical.

a·ce·tyl·ic (as′ĭ til′ĭk), adj. of, pertaining to, or characteristic of the acetyl group. [ACETYL + -IC] a·cet·y·lide (ə set′ə līd′, -lid), n. Chem. 1. any compound derived from acetylene by the replacement of one or both of its hydrogen atoms by a metal, as silver acetylide, Ag_2C_2, or any of a class of compounds having the general formula RC–CM, where R is an organic group and M is a metal. [ACETYL + -IDE] a·cet·y·lize (ə set′ə līz′), v.t., v.i., -lized, -liz·ing. acetylate. [ACETYL + -IZE] —a·cet′y·li·za′tion, n.

a·ce·tyl·meth·yl·car·bi·nol (ə sē′tl meth′ĭl kär′bənōl′, -nŏl′, -nol′, ə set′-, as′ĭ tl-), n. Chem. acetoin. [ACETYL + METHYL + CARBINOL] a·ce′tyl·sal·i·cyl′ic ac′id (ə sē′tl sal′ĭ sil′ĭk, ə set′-, as′ĭ tl-), Pharm. aspirin. [ACETYL + SALICYLIC ACID] ace·y-deuc·y (ā′sē dōō′sē, -dyōō′-), n. a form of backgammon. [ACE + -Y² + DEUCE¹ + -Y²]

a-chlor-hy-dri-a (ā′klôr hī′drē ə, ā′klōr-), n. Med. absence of hydrochloric acid in the gastric juice. [< NL; see A-[6], CHLOR-[2], HYDR-[2], -IA] —a-chlor-hy′dric, adj.

a-chlor-hy′dra (ā′klôr hī′drə, ā′klōr-), n. Med. achlorhydria.

a-chlam-y-date (ā klam′ə dāt′, -dit), adj. Zool. not chlamydate; having no mantle or pallium. [A-[6] + CHLAMYDATE] a-cho-li-a (ā kō′lē ə), n. Pathol. lack of a secretion of bile. [< Gk acholí(a) (a- A-[6] + cholí CHOL- + -ia adj. suffix) + -IA] —a-chol-ic (ā kol′ik), a-cho-lous (ā kō′ləs, -kol′əs, ak′ə ləs) adj.

ach-o-lu-ri-a (ak′ō lo͝or′ē ə), n. Med. the absence of bile pigments in the urine. [< NL < Gk áchol(os) (see ACHOLIA) + NL -uria -URIA] —ach′o-lu′ric, adj.

a-chon-drite (ā kon′drīt), n. a meteorite containing no chondrules. [A-[6] + CHONDRITE] —a-chon-drit-ic (ā′kon drit′ik), adj.

a-chon-dro-pla-sia (ā kon′drō plā′zhə, -zhē ə, -zē ə), n. Pathol. defective conversion of cartilage into bone, producing dwarfism. [back formation from ACHONDROPLASTIC] —a-chon-dro-plas-tic (ā kon′drō plas′tik), adj.

ach-ro-ite (ak′rō īt′), n. the colorless or white variety of tourmaline, often used as a gem. [< Gk achro(os) colorless + -ITE[1]] —ach-roi-tic (ak′rō it′ik), adj.

ach-ro-mat (ak′rə mat′), n. See achromatic lens. [by shortening] ach-ro-mat-ic (ak′rə mat′ik), adj. 1. Optics. a. free from color. b. able to emit, transmit, or receive light without separating it into its colors. 2. Biol. a. containing or consisting of achromatin. b. (of a cell structure) difficult to stain. 3. Music. without accidentals or changes in key. [A-[6] + CHROMATIC] —ach′ro-mat′i-cal-ly, adv.

ach-ro-ma-tic-i-ty (ak′rō mə tis′i tē), n. [A-[6] + CHROMATICITY] ach′romat′ic lens′, Optics. a system of two or more lenses designed to substantially reduce chromatic aberration and in which the lenses are made of different substances so that the focal length of the system is the same for two or more wavelengths of light. Also called achromat. Cf. crown lens, flint glass.

ach′romat′ic prism′, Optics. a system of two or more prisms made from different substances, which deviates the rays in the middle of light.

a-chro-ma-tin (ā krō′mə tin), n. Biol. the nonstainable portion of the nucleus of a cell. [A-[6] + CHROMATIN] a-chro-ma-tise (ā krō′mə tīz′), v.t., -tised, -tis-ing. Chiefly Brit. achromatize. —a-chro-ma-ti-sa′tion, n.

a-chro-ma-tism (ā krō′mə tiz′əm), n. Optics. 1. freedom from color. 2. freedom from chromatic aberration, as in an achromatic lens. Also, achromaticity. [ACHROMATIC + -ISM] a-chro-ma-tize (ā krō′mə tīz′), v.t., -tized, -tiz-ing. to make achromatic; deprive or free of color. Also, esp. Brit., achromatise. [ACHROMAT(IC) + -IZE] —a-chro′ma-ti-za′tion, n.

a-chro-mat-o-phil (ā′krō mat′ə fil, ak′rō-, ā krō′mat ə-), Biol. —adj. 1. Also, a-chro-mat-o-phil-ic (ā′krō mat′ə fil′ik, ak′rō-, ā krō′mat ə-). having little or no affinity for stains. —n. 2. an achromatophil cell or tissue. [ACHROMAT(IC) + -O- + -PHIL] a-chro-mat-o-phil-i-a (ā′krō mat′ə fil′ē ə, -fēl′yə, ak′rō-, ā krō′mat ə-), n. Biol. the property of having little or no affinity for stains. [ACHROMATOPHIL + -IA] a-chro-ma-tous (ā krō′mə təs), adj. 1. without color. 2. having little or inadequate color; lighter in color than normal. [ACHROMAT(IC) + -OUS] a-chro-mic (ā krō′mik), adj. colorless; without coloring matter. Also, a-chro′mous. [A-[6] + CHROMIC] a-chro-mo-bac-ter (ā krō′mō bak′tər), n. Bacteriol. any of several rod-shaped bacteria of the genus Achromobacter, found in soil and water. [< NL < Gk áchrō-mos(s) colorless (a- A-[6] + chrṓmos color) + NL -bacter BACTER-] a-chron-y-chous (ə kron′ə kəs), adj. Rare. acronychous.

Ach-sah (ak′sə), n. the daughter of Caleb who was promised in marriage to the conqueror of the city of Debir. Josh. 15:16–19; Judges 1:12–15. Also, Douay Bible, Axa.

a-cic-u-lar (ə sik′yə lər), adj. 1. needle-shaped. 2. Metall. a. (of cast iron) containing ferrite in a needlelike form. b. (of an alloy) having a microstructure of needlelike components. [ACICUL(A) + -AR[1]] —a-cic-u-lar-i-ty, n. —a-cic′u-lar-ly, adv.

a-cic-u-late (ə sik′yə lit, -lāt′), adj. 1. having aciculae. 2. marked as with needle scratches. 3. needle-shaped; acicular. Also, a-cic′u-lat′ed. [ACICUL(A) + -ATE[1]] a-cic-u-lum (ə sik′yə ləm), n., pl. -lums, -la (-lə). 1. an acicula. 2. Zool. one of the slender, sharp stylets embedded in the parapodia of certain annelids, as the polychaetes. [alter. of ACICULA]

ac-id (as′id), n. 1. Chem. a compound usually having a sour taste, capable of neutralizing alkalis and reddening blue litmus paper, containing hydrogen that can be replaced by a metal or an electropositive group to form a salt, or containing a ion that can accept a pair of electrons from a base. Acids are proton donors that yield hydronium ions in water solution, or electron-pair acceptors that combine with electron pair donors or bases. 2. substance with a sour taste. 3. something, as a remark, piece of writing, etc., that is sharp, sour, or ill-natured: He has nothing but acid to offer as criticism. —adj. 4. Chem. belonging or pertaining to acids or the anhydrides of acids. b. having only a part of the hydrogen of an acid replaced by a metal or its equivalent: an acid phosphate. 5. sharp or sour to the taste, as vinegar or like vinegar; sour: acid fruits. 6. sharp, biting, or illnatured in mood, manner, etc.: an acid remark; an acid wit. 7. Geol. (of igneous rocks) containing much silica. 8. Metall. noting, pertaining to, or made by a process in which the lining of the furnace, or the slag that is present, functions as an acid in high-temperature reactions in taking up basic matter from oxide ions: usually a siliceous material, as sand or sandstone. Cf. basic (def. 3). 9. put on the acid, Australian Slang. to pilfer for one's own use. [< L acid(us) sour, akin to acer sharp, acētum vinegar, ācicula] —ac′id-ly, adv. —ac′id-ness, n.

—Syn. 6. tart. ACID, ASTRINGENT are terms used figuratively of wit or humor. ACID suggests a sharp, biting, even ill-natured quality: an acid but witty opponent. ASTRINGENT connotes severity but usually also a bracing quality, as of something applied with curative intent: an astringent but kindly criticism.

ac-i-dal-i-um (as′i dal′ē əm), n. Mare. See Mare Acidalium.

ac′id anhy′dride, Chem. See under anhydride (def. 1).

ac-i-dan-the-ra (as′i dan′thər ə), n. a genus of bulbous, African herbs having sword-shaped leaves and long-tubed flowers. [< NL < Gk akid- (s. of akís) needle + NL -anthera; see ANTHER] ac′id bath′, Elect. a cell using an acid electrolyte. 2. See parietal cell.

ac′id drop′, Brit. a tart candy, as a sourball or the like.

ac′id dye′, Chem. any of a class of dyes containing one or more acidic groups, as the sulfo group: used in acid solution chiefly for dyeing wool and silk.

ac-i-de-mi-a (as′i dē′mē ə), n. Pathol. an abnormal acidity of the blood; acidosis. [ACID + -EMIA] ac-id-fast (as′id fast′), adj. resistant to decolorizing by acidified alcohol after staining. —ac′id-fast′ness, n.

ac-id-form-ing (as′id fôr′miŋ), adj. 1. yielding acid in metabolism: acid-forming foods. 2. containing a large amount of acid ash after complete oxidation.

a-cid-ic (ə sid′ik), adj. 1. Geol. acid (def. 7). 2. acidforming (def. 1). [ACID + -IC] a-cid-i-fy (ə sid′ə fī′), v.t., v.i., -fied, -fy-ing. to make or become acid; convert into an acid. [ACID + -IFY] —a-cid′i-fi′a-ble, adj. —a-cid′i-fi-ca′tion, n. —a-cid′i-fi′er, n.

ac-i-dim-e-ter (as′i dim′i tər), n. Chem. an instrument for measuring the amount of acid in a solution. [ACID + -I- + -METER] ac-i-dim-e-try (as′i dim′i trē), n. Chem. the process of measuring the amount of acid in a solution, as with an acidimeter or by titration. [ACID + -I- + -METRY] —ac-i-di-met-ric (as′i də me′trik), ac′i-di-met′ri-cal, adj. —ac′i-di-met′ri-cal-ly, adv.

a-cid-i-ty (ə sid′i tē), n., pl. -ties. the quality or state of being acid. 2. sourness; tartness. 3. excessive acid quality, as of the gastric juice. [< LL aciditās. See ACID, -ITY] ac-id-ize (as′i dīz′), v., -ized, -iz-ing. —v.t. 1. to impregnate with acid; acidify. —v.i. 2. to become acidified. [ACID + -IZE] ac′id metapro′tein, Biochem. a metaprotein derived by means of a hydrolytic acid.

ac′id num′ber, Chem. a number expressing the acidity of a substance, equal to the number of milligrams of potassium hydroxide needed to neutralize the free fatty acids present in one gram of the substance.

ac-i-do-ge-nic (as′i dō jen′ik), adj. (of a substance) producing acid, as bacteria, or causing acidity, as of the urine. [ACID + -O- + -GENIC] ac-i-doi-y-sis (as′i doi′ə sis), n. Chem. decomposition resulting from the formation of a compound and an acid. [< NL; see ACID, -O-, -LYSIS] ac-i-do-phil (as′i dō fil′, ə sid′ə-), Biol. —adj. 1. acidophilic. —n. 2. an acidophilic cell, tissue, organism, or substance. Also, ac-i-do-phile (as′i dō fil′, ə sid′ō-). [ACID + -O- + -PHIL] ac-i-do-phil-ic (as′i dō fil′ik, ə sid′ə-), adj. 1. Biol. having an affinity for acid stains. 2. (of bacteria) thriving in or having an affinity for an acid environment; aciduric. Also, ac-i-doph-i-lus (as′i dof′ə ləs). [ACIDOPHIL + -IC] acidoph′ilus milk′, a fermented milk produced by growing the bacterium Lactobacillus acidophilus in milk, used in medicine to alter the microbial flora of the intestinal tract under certain conditions. [< NL; see ACID, -O-, -PHILOUS] ac-i-do-sis (as′i dō′sis), n. Pathol. a blood condition in which the bicarbonate concentration is below normal; acidemia. [< NL; see ACID, -OSIS] —ac-i-dot-ic (as′i dot′ik), adj.

ac′id phos′phate, superphosphate (def. 1).

ac′id soil′, a soil of acid reaction or having a predominance of hydrogen ions, including peat soils.

ac′id test′, a severe and conclusive test to establish genuineness, worth, etc.

ac′id test′ ra′tio, a ratio of cash, receivables, and marketable securities to current liabilities, used by banks and other lending agencies in determining credit risks.

a-cid-u-lant (ə sij′ə lənt, ə sid′yə-), n. Chem. an acidulating substance. Also, acidulent. [< F, n. use of prp. of aciduler < L acidulāre, see ACIDULATE, -ULOUS]

a-cid-u-lent (ə sij′ə lənt, ə sid′yə-), n. 1. Chem. acidulant. —adj. 2. acidulous.

a-cid-u-lous (ə sij′ə ləs, ə sid′yə-), adj. 1. slightly sour. 2. sharp; caustic. 3. moderately acid or tart; subacid. Also, acidulent. [< L acidulus, equiv. to acid(us) sour + -ulus -ULOUS] a-ci-du-ric (ə′si dōōr′ik, -dyōōr′-), adj. (of bacteria) capable of growth in an acid environment. [ACID + L dur(e) (to) last + -IC] ac-id-y (as′i dē), adj. of the nature of or resembling acid; sharp; sour: an acidy taste. [ACID + -Y[1]] a-ci-er-ate (as′ē ə rāt′), v.t., -at-ed, -at-ing. to convert (iron) into steel. [< F aciér steel (< VL aciār(ium)*, equiv. to L aci(ēs) sharpness + -ārium -ARY) + -ATE[1] + -ER[1]] —a′ci-er-a′tion, n.

ac-i-form (as′ə fôrm′), adj. needle-shaped; acicular. [< L ac- (s. of acus needle) + -I- + -FORM] ac-i-na-ceous (as′ə nā′shəs), adj. Bot. having many small seeds, as a berry. [< NL acinace(us) (see ACINACIFORM) + -OUS] a-cin-a-ci-fo-li-o-us (ə sin′ə sə fō′lē əs), adj. Bot. having scimitar-shaped leaves. Also, a-cin-a-ci-fo-li-ate (ə sin′ə sə fō′lē it, -āt′). [< L acinace- (s. of acinaces) scimitar + -I- + -FOLIOUS] ac-i-nac-i-form (as′ə nas′ə fôrm′), adj. Bot. scimitar-shaped, as a leaf. [< L acinace- (see ACINACIFORM) + -I- + -FORM] ac-i-nar-i-ous (as′ə nâr′ē əs), adj. Bot. covered with globose vesicles resembling grape seeds, as certain algae. [prob. < F acinarire < L acin(us) ACINUS + F -aire -ARIOUS] a-cin-i-form (ə sin′ə fôrm′), adj. 1. clustered like grapes. 2. acinous. [ACIN(US) + -I- + -FORM] a-ci-nous (as′ə nəs), adj. Bot. consisting of acini. Also, ac-i-nose (as′ə nōs′). [< L acinōs(us). See ACINUS, -OUS] ac-i-nus (as′ə nəs), n., pl. -ni (-nī′). 1. Bot. one of the small drupaceous parts of an aggregate, baselet fruit, as the blackberry. 2. a berry, as a grape, currant, etc. 3. Anat. a. a minute rounded lobule. b. the smallest secreting portion of a gland. [< L: grape, berry, seed of a berry] —ac-i-nal (as′ə nəl), adj.

ac·ro·me·gal·ic (ak′rō mə gal′ik), adj. 1. pertaining to or suffering from acromegaly. —n. 2. a person suffering from acromegaly. [ACROMEGAL(Y) + -IC] ac·ro·meg·a·ly (ak′rō meg′ə lē), n. Pathol. a chronic disease characterized by enlargement of the bones of the head, the soft parts of the feet and hands, and sometimes other structures, due to dysfunction of the pituitary gland. [< NL acromegalia. See ACRO-, -MEGALY] a·cro·mi·cri·a (ak′rō mik′rē ə, -mī′krē ə), n. abnormal smallness of the head and extremities. [< NL; see ACRO-, MICRO-, -IA] a·cro·mi·on (ə krō′mē ən), n., pl. -mi·a (-mē ə). Anat. the outward end of the spine of the scapula or shoulder blade. See diag. under shoulder. [< NL < Gk akrómion, equiv. to akro- ACRO- + ómi(os) shoulder + -ion dim. suffix] —a·cro′mi·al, adv.

ac·ron (ak′ron, -rən), n. the unsegmented, preoral portion of the body of an arthropod. [< NL < Gk akron, neut. sing. of ákros; see ACRO-] —ac·ro·nal (ak′rə nəl), adj.

a·cron·i·cal (ə kron′i kal), adj. Rare. occurring at sunset, as the rising or setting of a star. Also, a·cron′y·cal. [latter, of acronychal (< Gk akrónychos) + -ical; acronychal (akro- ACRO- + nych-, var. s. of núx night + -os adj. suffix) + *-AL*¹] —a·cron′i·cal·ly, a·cron′y·cal·ly, adv.

a·cron·y·chous (ə kron′ə kəs), adj. Rare. having nails or hoofs of horny consistency. [ACR- + Gk onych- (s. of ónyx) fingernail, claw + -OUS] ac·ro·nym (ak′rə nim), n. 1. a word formed from the initial letters or groups of letters of words in a set phrase, as WAC from Women's Army Corps or loran from long-range navigation. 2. an acrostic. [ACR- + -ONYM] —ac′ro·nym′ic, a·cron·y·mous (ə kron′ə məs), adj.

a·cron·y·mize (ə kron′ə mīz′), v.t., -mized, -mizing. to form into an acronym. [ACRONYM + -IZE] a·crop·a·thy (ə krop′ə thē), n. Pathol. any disease of the extremities. [ACRO- + -PATHY]

a·crop·e·tal (ə krop′ə təl), adj. Bot. (of an inflorescence) developing from the base towards the apex. [ACRO- + -PETAL] —a·crop′e·tal·ly, adv.

ac·ro·pho·bi·a (ak′rə fō′bē ə), n. Psychiatry. a pathological dread of high places. [< NL; see ACRO-, -PHOBIA] a·crop·o·lis (ə krop′ə lis), n., pl. -ses. 1. the use of what was originally a logographic or phonetic symbol for the initial sound of the word the logogram represented, as, in Semitic writing, the use of a picture of a shepherd's crook to represent the sound l, the first sound of lamed, the Hebrew word for a shepherd's crook. 2. the use of a word as the name of the alphabetical symbol representing the initial sound of that word. Also, acrology. [ACRO- + -PHONY] —ac·ro·phon·ic (ak′rə fon′ik), ac·ro·pho·net·ic (ak′rə fə net′ik), adj. —ac′ro·phon′i·cal·ly, adv.

a·crop·o·lis (ə krop′ə lis), n. 1. the citadel of an ancient Greek city, esp. that of Athens, the site of Athens on which the Parthenon was built. [< Gk akrópolis. See ACRO-, -POLIS] —ac·ro·pol·i·tan (ak′rə pol′i tən), adj.

ac·ro·spire (ak′rə spīr′), n. Bot. the first sprout appearing in the germination of grain; the developed plumule of the seed. [ACRO- + SPIRE¹; r. akerspire, equiv. to aker ACRE + spire SPIRE¹] ac·ro·spore (ak′rə spōr′, -spôr′), n. Bot. a spore borne at the tip of a sporophore, as a basidiospore. [< F; see ACRO-, SPORE] —ac·ro·spo·rous (ak′rə spôr′əs, -spōr′-) ə krōr′pər əs), adj.

a·cross (ə krôs′, ə kros′), prep. 1. from one side to the other of: a bridge across a river. 2. on or to the other side of: across the sea. 3. into contact with; into the presence of, usually by accident: to come across an old friend; to run across a first edition of Byron. 4. crosswise of or transversely to the length of something; athwart: coats across the bed; standing across the boundary line. —adv. 5. from one side to another. 6. on the other side: We'll soon be across. 7. crosswise; transversely: with arms across. 8. so as to be understood or learned: He couldn't get the idea across to the class. 9. into a desired or successful state: to put a business deal across. [A-¹ + CROSS] a·cross-the-board (ə krôs′thə bôrd′, -bōrd′, ə kros′-), adj. 1. applying to each of several categories; general: an across-the-board pay increase. 2. noting or pertaining to a radio or television program scheduled for broadcasting each broadcasting day.

3. (of a bet) covering all possibilities of winning on a given result, as a combination of a number, a color, or an odd-or-even wager in roulette.

a·cros·tic (ə krôs′tik, ə kros′tik), n. 1. a series of lines or verses in which the first, last, or other particular letters form a word, phrase, the alphabet, etc. —adj. 2. also, a·cros′ti·cal. of, like, or forming an acrostic. [< Gk akrostich(os), equiv. to ákro(s) ACRO- + stích(os) STICH + -is dim. suffix] —a·cros′ti·cal·ly, adv.

ac·ro·sto·li·um (ak′rə stō′lē əm), n., pl. -li·a (-lē ə). acroterium.

ac·ro·ter (ak′rə tər), n. acroterium.

ac·ro·te·ri·on (ak′rə tēr′ē on′, -ē ən), n., pl. -te·ri·a (-tēr′ē ə). acroterium. [< Gk akrōtḗrion topmost part, extremity, equiv. to akrō- ACRO- + -tḗrion suffix designating a place for] ac·ro·te·ri·um (ak′rə tēr′ē əm), n., pl. -te·ri·a (-tēr′ē ə). acroterium.

ac·ro·ter·y (ak′rə tər ē), n. acroterium.

ac·ro·tic (ə krō′tik), adj. Physiol. (of a pulse) characterized by a slow rise of various ancient Mediterranean vessels. Cf. aplustre. Also, acroterion. [Latinization of ACROTERION] —ac′ro·te′ral, ac′ro·te′ri·al, adj.

ac·ro·tism (ak′rə tiz′əm), n. Pathol. absence or weakness of the pulse. [< Gk akrótēs (akro- ACRO- + -tēs -TY²) beating or rhythmical sound + -ISM] —a·crot·ic (ə krot′ik), adj.

a·crux (ā′krəks), n. Astron. a star of the first magnitude in the constellation Southern Cross.

acryl- a combining form of acrylic acid. Also, acr- acryl·al·de·hyde (ak′rəl al′də hīd′), n. Chem. acrolein. Also called acryl′ic al′dehyde. [ACRYL(IC) + ALDEHYDE] ac·ry·late (ak′rə lāt′, -lit), n. Chem. a salt or ester of an acrylic acid. [ACRYL(IC) + -ATE²] a·cryl·ic (ə kril′ik), adj. 1. of, pertaining to, or characteristic of the acryl group. —n. 2. See acrylic resin. [ACR(OLEIN) + -YL + -IC] acryl′ic ac′id, Chem. a colorless, corrosive liquid, H_2CHCO_2H, having an acrid odor, usually derived from acrolein by oxidation: used esp. in the synthesis of acrylic resins.

acryl′ic fi′ber, any of a series of esters derived from the acrylic acids.

acryl′ic fi′ber, Chem. any of the group of synthetic textile fibers, as Orlon, made by the polymerization of acrylonitrile as the principal component with one or more other monomers.

acryl′ic res′in, Chem. any of a group of thermoplastic resins formed by polymerizing the esters of amides of acrylic or methacrylic acid: used chiefly where transparency is desired, as in the methacrylate resins Lucite and Plexiglas. Also called acr′ylate res′in.

ac·ry·lo·ni·trile (ak′rə lō nī′trīl, -trēl, -tril), n. Chem. a colorless, flammable, poisonous liquid, $H_2C=CHCN$, used chiefly in the polymerization or copolymerization of rubber, textile fibers, and plastics. [ACRYL(IC) + -O- + NITRILE] acryl·yl (ak′rə lil), adj. Chem. containing the acryl group. [ACRYL(IC) + -YL]

ac′ryloyl group′, Chem. the univalent group, $CH_2=CHCO-$, derived from acrylic acid. Also called acr′ylyl rad′ical.

A.C.S., 1. American Cancer Society. 2. American Chemical Society. 3. Associate in Commercial Science.

A/cs pay., accounts payable. Also, a/cs pay.

A/cs rec., accounts receivable. Also, a/cs rec.

act (akt), n. 1. anything done, being done, or to be done; deed; performance: a kind act; caught in the act of doing something. 2. a formal decision, law, or the like, by a legislature, ruler, court, or other authority; decree or edict; the Volstead Act; the Sherman Act. 3. Law. a main performance by one or more entertainers, usually part of a variety show, radio program, etc. 7. the personnel of such a group: The act broke up after 10 years. 8. a piece of theatrical conduct, manner, or mannerism: the like: Her tearful farewell was all an act. 9. (in British universities) a degree candidate's formal defense of his thesis before the faculty; commencement. 10. to do something; exert energy or force; be employed or operative: His mind acts sluggishly. 11. to reach, make, or cause a change in a character: I expect Hamlet to act before tomorrow noon. 12. to operate or function in a particular way; perform specific duties or functions: to act as chairman. 13. to produce an effect; perform a function: The medicine failed to act. 14. to behave or conduct oneself in a particular fashion: to act well under all conditions. 15. to pretend; feign: Act interested. 16. to perform on the stage as an actor: He acted in three plays by Molière. 17. to be capable of being performed on the stage: His plays don't act well. 18. to serve or substitute for another: In my illness my assistant manager will act for me. 19. to perform on stage: They will act in Oedipus Rex. —v.t. 20. to represent (a fictitious or historical character) with one's person: to act Macbeth. 21. to feign; counterfeit: to act outraged virtue. 22. to behave as: He acted the fool. 23. Obs. to actuate. 24. act on or upon, a. to act in accordance with; follow: He acted on my advice. b. to bring about a change in; affect: The stirring music acted on the emotions of the audience. 25. act one's age, to behave in a manner appropriate to one's maturity: Elderly women who dress as young girls are not acting their age. 26. act out, to demonstrate or illustrate by pantomime or by words and gestures: Everyone roared when George acted out the episode with the prisoner. 27. act up, Informal. a. to exhibit unusual or unexpected behavior: Every time she used the vacuum cleaner the television would act up. b. to behave willfully: The children always act up on school the day before a holiday. [< L āct(a) (pl.) things done, and āct(us) a doing, n. use of ptp. of agere to do (ag- ptp. s. + -tus ptp. suffix); see AGENT, ACT]

—Syn. 1. feat, exploit; achievement; transaction; accomplishment. See action. 2. deed. 4. record. 6. turn, routine. 10–14. perform, function, work. 16, 17. play. ac·ta (ak′tə), n.pl. official records, as of acts, deeds, proceedings, transactions, or the like. [< L, neut. pl. of āctus, ptp. of agere to do] act-a-ble (ak′tə bəl), adj. 1. capable of being acted on the stage. 2. (of a play or parts of a play) providing roles of effectiveness and substance. [ACT + -ABLE] —act′a·bil′i·ty, n.

act·ae·on (ak tē′ən), n. Class. Myth. a hunter who, for having seen Diana bathing, was changed by her into a stag and was torn to pieces by his own hounds.

Ac·ta Sanc·to·rum (äk′tä säŋk′tôr′o͝om, -sôŋk′-), the collection of the biographies of the Christian saints and martyrs, edited by the Bollandists and arranged according to the ecclesiastical calendar.

act′ ca′ll', Theat. a call announcing the curtain.

act′ drop′, Theat. curtain.

ACTH, 1. Biochem. a polypeptide hormone, produced by the anterior lobe of the pituitary gland, which stimulates the cortical substance of human adrenal glands. 2. Pharm. this substance, extracted from the pituitary glands of hogs and other species, in the form of its white, water-soluble powder, used in the treatment of rheumatic fever, rheumatoid arthritis, and various allergic disorders. Also called adrenocorticotropic hormone. [a(dreno)c(ortico)t(ropic) h(ormone)] ac·tin (ak′tin), n. Biochem. a globulin that is present in muscle plasma and that in connection with myosin plays an important role in muscle contraction. [ACT + -IN²]

act·i·nal (ak′tə nəl, ak tī′nəl), adj. Zool. having tentacles or rays. [ACTIN- + -AL¹] —ac′ti·nal·ly, adv.

act·ing (ak′ting), adj. 1. serving temporarily, esp. as a substitute during absence: the acting manager; not permanent: the acting mayor. 2. that acts; functioning. 3. designed, adapted, or suitable for stage performance. 4. provided with stage directions: an acting version of a play. —n. 5. the art, profession, or work of an actor or actress; form on stage plays, motion pictures, etc. [ACT + -ING², -ING¹] act′ing ar′ea, Theat. the part of the stage used for acting: Confine the acting area for this scene to downstage left.

act·in·i·a (ak tin′ē ə), n., pl. -tin·i·ae (-tin′ē ē′). a sea anemone, esp. of the genus Actinia. [< NL; see ACTIN-, -IA] act·in·i·an (ak tin′ē ən), adj. 1. belonging or pertaining to the order or suborder Actiniaria, comprising the sea anemones. —n. 2. any sea anemone. [< NL Actini(a) (ACTIN- + -AN] ac·tin·ic (ak tin′ik), adj. pertaining to actinism. [ACTIN- + -IC] —ac·tin′i·cal·ly, adv.

actin′ic ray′, Physics. a ray of light of short wavelengths, as ultraviolet or violet, which produces photochemical effects.

ac′ti·nide se′ries (ak′tə nīd′), Chem. the series of radioactive elements that starts with actinium and ends with lawrencium. Also, ac′tin·ide′ se′ries.

ac·tin·i·form (ak tin′ə fôrm′), adj. Zool. having a radiate form. [ACTIN- + -I- + -FORM] ac·tin·ism (ak′tə niz′əm), n. the property of radiation by which chemical changes are induced. [ACTIN- + -ISM] ac·tin·i·um (ak tin′ē əm), n. Chem. a radioactive chemical element, an isotope of mesothorium occurring in pitchblende, resembling the rare earths in chemical behavior and valence. Symbol: Ac; at. no.: 89; at. wt.: 227; half life: 13.5 years. [ACTIN- + -IUM] actin′ium emana′tion, Chem. actinon.

actin′ium se′ries, Chem. the radioactive series that starts with actinouranium and ends with a stable isotope of lead of mass number 207. Also called actinouranium series.

actino-, 1. Physical Chem. a combining form indicating actinic radiation: esp., used as a prefix to consonant: actinotherapy. 2. Zool. a word element used in the formation of compounds relating to chambered structures: actinozoan. Also, esp. before a vowel, actin-. [< Gk aktín-, aktís ray, beam, spoke; akin to ákros] act·i·no·bac·il·o·sis (ak′tə nō bas′ə lō′sis), n. Vet. Pathol. an infectious disease of cattle, domestic animals, and occasionally man, resembling actinomycosis and caused by the bacterium Actinobacillus lignieresi. Also called wooden tongue. [< NL actinobacilli(us) (see ACTINOBACILLUS) + -osis] —ac·ti·no·bac·il·ot·ic (ak′tə nō bas′ə lot′ik), adj.

act·i·no·ba·cil·lus (ak′tə nō bə sil′əs), n., pl. -cil·li (-sil′ī). Bacteriol. any of several spherical or rod-shaped, aerobic, parasitic bacteria of the genus Actinobacillus, certain species of which are pathogenic for animals. [< NL; see ACTINO-, BACILLUS] act·i·no·chem·is·try (ak′tə nō kem′ə strē), n. the branch of chemistry dealing with actinism; photochemistry. [ACTINO- + CHEMISTRY] —ac·ti·no·chem·i·cal (ak′tə nō kem′i kəl), adj.

act·i·no·der·ma·ti·tis (ak′tə nō dûr′mə tī′tis), n. Pathol. inflammation of the skin caused by sunlight or other radiation. [ACTINO- + DERMATITIS] act·in·o·drome (ak tin′ə drōm′), adj. (of a leaf) palmately veined. Also, ac·ti·nod·ro·mous (ak′tə nod′rə məs). [ACTINO- + -DROME] act·in·o·gram (ak tin′ə gram′), n. the record produced by the action of an actinograph. [ACTINO- + -GRAM¹]

ac·tin·o·graph (ak·tin′ə graf′, -gräf′), n. a recording actinometer. [ACTINO- + -GRAPH] —ac·tin·o·graph·ic (ak·tin′ə graf′ik), adj. —ac·ti·nog·ra·phy (ak′tə nog′ rə fē), n.

ac·ti·noid (ak′tə noid′), adj. raylike; radiate. [ACTIN- + -OID] ac·tin·o·lite (ak·tin′ə līt′), n. Mineral. a variety of amphibole, occurring in greenish bladed crystals and in masses. [ACTINO- + -LITE] —ac·tin·o·lit·ic (ak′tə nə lit′ik), adj.

ac·ti·nol·o·gy (ak′tə nol′ə jē), n. the science that deals with actinism. [ACTINO- + -LOGY] ac·ti·nom·e·ter (ak′tə nom′i tər), n. a device for measuring intensity of radiation, usually by the photochemical effect. Cf. actinograph. [ACTINO- + -METER] —ac·ti·no·met·ric (ak′tə nō met′rik), ac·ti·no·met′ri·cal, adj. —ac′ti·nom′e·try, n.

ac·ti·no·mor·phic (ak′tə nō môr′fik), adj. 1. Biol. having radial symmetry. 2. Bot. (of certain flowers, as the buttercup) divisible vertically into similar halves by each of a number of planes. Also, ac′ti·no·mor′phous. [ACTINO- + -MORPHIC] —ac′ti·no·mor′phy, n.

ac·ti·no·my·ces (ak′tə nō mī′sēz), n., pl. -ces (-sēz). Bacteriol. any of several saprophytic, filamentous, anaerobic bacteria of the genus Actinomyces, certain species of which are pathogenic for man and animals. [< NL, equiv. to actino- ACTINO- + myces < Gk: fungus] —ac·ti·no·my·cete (ak′tə nō mī sēt′), n. Bacteriol. any of several rod-shaped or filamentous, aerobic or anaerobic bacteria of the order Actinomycetales, as the genus Actinomycetales, certain species of which are pathogenic for man and animals. [prob. back formation from NL actinomycetes; pl. of ACTINOMYCES] —ac′ti·no·my·cet′ous, adj.

ac·ti·no·my·co·sis (ak′tə nō mī kō′sis), n. Vet. Pathol., Pathol. an infectious, inflammatory disease of cattle and other animals and of man, due to certain parasites and causing lumpy, often suppurating tumors, esp., about the jaws. Also called lumpy jaw. [ACTINOMYCES(IS) + -OSIS] —ac·ti·no·my·cot·ic (ak′tə nō mi kot′ik), adj.

ac·ti·non (ak′tə non′), n. Chem. a chemically inert, gaseous, radioactive element isotopic with radon. It is a member of the actinium series. Symbol: An; at. no.: 86; at. wt.: 219. Also called actinium emanation. [< NL; see ACTINIUM, -ON²] ac·tin·o·pod (ak·tin′ə pod′), n. any protozoan of the subclass Actinopoda, comprising the heliozoans and radiolarians, having stiff, rodlike, radiating pseudopodia. [ACTINO- + -POD]

ac·tin·o·pte·ryg·i·an (ak′tə nop′tə rij′ē ən), adj. 1. belonging or pertaining to the Actinopterygii, a group of bony fishes. —n. 2. an actinopterygian fish. [< NL actinopterygi(i) (pl.) (actino- ACTINO- + Gk pterygi(on) fin, equiv. to pterygē (s. of pterux wing) + -ion dim. suffix) + -AN] ac·ti·no·ther·a·py (ak′tə nō ther′ə pē), n. Med. radiotherapy. [ACTINO- + THERAPY]

ac·ti·no·ur·a·nium (ak′tə nō yŏŏ rā′nē əm), n. Chem. a radioactive isotope of uranium having an atomic mass of 235. [ACTINO- + URANIUM]

ac·ti·no·zo·an (ak′tə nə zō′ən), n., adj. Zool. anthozoan. [ACTINO- + -ZO(A) + -AN] ac·tion (ak′shən), n. 1. the process or state of acting or of being active: The machine is not now in action. 2. something performed; act: a kind action. 3. an act or one consciously wills and which may be characterized by physical or mental activity (contrasted with passion): a crime is the result of premeditated action; hoping for constructive action by the landlord. 4. actions, habitual or usual acts; conduct: He is responsible for his actions. 5. energetic activity: a man of action. 6. an exertion opposing another: the wind spent upon a ship's sails. 7. effect or influence: the action of morphine. 8. Physiol. a change in organs, tissues, or cells leading to performance of a particular function or contraction. 9. way or manner of moving: the action of a machine or of a horse. 10. the mechanism by which something is operated, as that of a breechloading rifle or a piano. 11. a military movement or engagement. 12. actual engagement in fighting an enemy. 13. military and naval combat: He saw action in the South Pacific. 14. Colloq. an active or exciting game: Where can I find some action? 15. profits, esp. quick profits: Cut me in for a piece of the action. 16. Poetry, Theater. the main subject matter; story; distinguished, if certain, incidents; episode. 16. Theater. a. an event or series of events that form part of a dramatic plot: the action of a scene. b. one of the three unities. 17. unity (def. 9). 17. the gestures or deportment of an actor or speaker. 18. Fine Arts. the appearance of animation, movement, or emotion given to figures by their attitude, position, or expression. 19. Law. a lawsuit instituted by one party against another. b. the right of bringing it. 20. Eccles. a. a religious ceremony, esp. a Eucharistic service. b. the Eucharist. c. the Mass. d. the parts of a service of worship in which the congregation participates. aer-i-al-ist (ār'ē əlist, ā ēr'ē ə-), n. a trapeze artist. Also, aër'i-al-ist. [AERIAL + -IST] aer-i-al-i-ty (ār'ē al'i tē, ā ēr'-), n. unsubstantiality. Also, aër'i-al-ity. [AERIAL + -ITY] aer'ial ladder, an extensible ladder used for reaching heights, esp. from a hook and ladder truck.

aer'ial mine', Mil. a mine designed to be dropped from the air, esp. into water. 2. Also called land mine, a bomb designed to be dropped by parachute, used in World War II.

aer'ial mosa'ic, Survey. mosaic (def. 4).

aer'ial perspec'tive, a technique of rendering depth or distance in painting by modifying the tone or hue of objects in accordance with their effect in picture plane, esp. by reducing distinctive local colors and contrasts of light and dark to a uniform light, bluish-gray color, the farther away objects appear.

aer'ial pho'tograph, a photograph taken from an aircraft or other vehicle in flight. Also called aerophotograph, air photograph. —aer'ial photog'raphy.

aer'ial ray, an apparatus consisting of cars suspended from cables, used for the transportation over canyons, between mountain peaks, etc. Also called aerial tramway.

aer'ial sur'vey, 1. a survey made from above, as from an aircraft, a high point, etc. 2. a survey which maps an area by means of aerial photography, photogrammetry, and the like.

aer·ie (ār'ē, ēr'ē), n. 1. the nest of a bird of prey, as an eagle or a hawk. 2. a lofty nest of any large bird. 3. an isolated habitation. 4. Obs. a brood. Also, eyry, eyrie. [< L āeria < OF aire < L ātrium ATRIUM] aer'if-er-ous (ā rif'ər əs), adj. conveying air, as the windpipe. [< L āēr AËR- + -I- + -FEROUS] aer-i-fi-ca-tion (ār'ə fə kā'shən, ā ēr'-), n. 1. act of combining with air. 2. state of being filled with air. Also, aër-i-fi-ca'tion. [AERI- + -FICATION] aer-i-form (ār'ə fôrm', ā ēr'-), adj. 1. having the form or nature of air; gaseous. 2. unsubstantial; unreal. Also, aër'i-form'. [AERI- + -FORM] aer-i-fy (ār'ə fī', ā ēr'-), v.t., -fied, -fy-ing. 1. to aerate. 2. to make aeriform; convert into vapor. Also, aër'i-fy'. [AERI- + -FY] aer-o (ār'ō), adj. 1. of or for aircraft. 2. of or pertaining to aeronautics. [AERO- used as free form] aero-, a learned borrowing from Greek meaning "air," used in the formation of compound words: aerodrome. Also, aer-, aeri-. [comb. form < Gk, equiv. to āēr- (s. of āḗr AIR[1]) + -o- -O-] aer-o-bac-te-ri-o-lo-gy (ār'ō bak tēr'ē ə lo j'ē), n. the branch of bacteriology dealing with bacteria that live in air. [AERO- + BACTERIOLOGY] —aer-o-bac-te-ri-o-log-i-cal (ār'ō bak tēr'ē ə loj'i kəl), adj. —aer'o-bac-te'ri-o-log'i-cal-ly, adv. —aer'o-bac-te'ri-o-log'ist, n.

aer-o-ba-lis-tics (ār'ō bə lis'tiks), n. (construed as sing.) the science of ballistics combined with that of aerodynamics and dealing primarily with the motion through the atmosphere of rockets, guided missiles, and other projectiles. [AERO- + BALLISTICS] —aer'o-ba-lis'tic, adj.

aer-o-bat-ics (ār'ō bat'iks), n. 1. (construed as pl.) stunts performed in flight by an airplane, glider, or the like. 2. (construed as sing.) the art or technique of performing such stunts. [AERO- + (ACRO)BATICS] —aer'o-bat'ic, adj.

aer-o-be (ār'ōb), n. an organism, esp. a bacterium, that requires air or free oxygen for life (opposed to anaerobe). [AERO- + -be (< Gk bíos life) as in MICROBE] aer-o-bee (ār'ə bē'), n. the first of a series of rockets for research in the upper atmosphere, launched at altitudes of from less than 100 to several hundred miles, attained speeds of from 2500 to over 4000 miles per hour, and carried payloads of scientific instruments and often small experimental animals, as monkeys and mice. [AERO- + BEE[1]] aer-o-bic (ā rō'bik), adj. 1. (of an organism or tissue) requiring the presence of air or free oxygen for life. 2. pertaining to or caused by the presence of oxygen. [AEROBE + -IC] —aer-o'bi-cal-ly, adv.

aer-o-bi-o-lo-gy (ār'ō bī ol'ə jē), n. the branch of biology dealing with airborne particles and organisms, as bacteria, dust, pollen, and spores. [AERO- + BIOLOGY] —aer-o-bi-o-log-ic (ār'ō bī'ə loj'ik), aer'o-bi-o-log'i-cal, adj. —aer'o-bi-o-log'i-cal-ly, adv. —aer'o-bi-ol'o-gist, n.

aer-o-bi-o-sis (ār'ō bī ō'sis), n. Biol. life in an environment containing oxygen or air. [< NL; see AERO-, -BIOSIS] —aer-o-bi-ot-ic (ār'ō bī ot'ik), adj. —aer'o-bi-ot'i-cal-ly, adv.

aer-o-bi-um (ā rō'bē əm), n., pl. -bi-a (-bē ə). Biol. an aerobe. [AERO- + NL -bium as in MICROBIUM, modeled after microbium] aer-o-car (ār'ō kär'), n. a vehicle that can be converted for use as an automobile or airplane. [AERO- + CAR[1]] aer-o-do-net-ics (ār'ō də net'iks), n. (construed as sing.) Rare. the study and practice of gliding flight. [< Gk derodónēt(os) air-tossed (dēro- AERO- + donē- (s. of donéin to shake) + -tos adj. suffix) + -ICS] —aer'o-do-net'ic, adj.

aer-o-don-tal-gia (ār'ō don tal'jə, -jē ə), n. Dentistry. a toothache caused by a lowered barometric pressure, as in high-altitude flight. [AER- + ODONTALGIA] aer-o-don-tia (ār'ō don'shə, -shē ə), n. the branch of dentistry dealing with dental problems that result from flying. [AER- + ODONT- + -IA] aer-o-drome (ār'ə drōm'), n. Chiefly Brit. airdrome.

aer-o-dy-nam-i-cist (ār'ō dī nam'i sist), n. an expert in aerodynamics. [AERO- + -I- + -IST] aer-o-dy-nam-ics (ār'ō dī nam'iks), n. (construed as sing.) the branch of mechanics that deals with the motion of air and other gases and with the effects of such motion on bodies in the medium. Cf. aerostatics (def. 1). [AERO- + DYNAMICS] —aer-o-dy-nam'ic, aer'o-dy-nam'i-cal, adj. —aer'o-dy-nam'i-cal-ly, adv.

aer'odynam'ic trajec'tory, Rocketry. the path of an object in rocket flight through the air in dense enough to modify the course of flight significantly.

aer'odynam'ic wave' drag', Aeron. the retraining force on a supersonic aircraft, caused by shock waves. Also called wave drag.

aer-o-dyne (ār'ə dīn'), n. any heavier-than-air craft. [back formation from AERODYNAMIC; see DYNE] aer-o-e-las-tic (ār'ō i las'tik), adj. Aeron. (of an airframe) deformable by aerodynamic forces. [AERO- + ELASTIC] —aer-o-e-las-tic-i-ty (ār'ō ĭ la stis'i tē, -ē'-, las-), n.

aer-o-e-las-tics (ār'ō i las'tiks), n. (construed as sing.) Aeron. the study of aeroelastic phenomena. [see AEROELASTIC] aer-o-em-bo-lism (ār'ō em'bə liz'əm), n. Pathol. a condition caused by substantial decrease in atmospheric pressure, as in high-altitude flying, and characterized by the formation of nitrogen bubbles in the blood, pains in the lungs, etc. Cf. caisson disease. [AERO- + EMBOLISM] aer-o-gen-ic (ār'ō jen'ik), adj. producing gas, as certain bacteria. Also, aer-o-ge-nous (ā ro j'ə nəs). [AERO- + -GENIC] —aer'o-gen'i-cal-ly, adv.

aer-o-gram (ār'ə gram'), n. 1. a radiogram. 2. a message carried by aircraft; an air-mail letter. 3. Meteorol. a diagram for analyzing thermodynamic processes in the atmosphere. b. the record of an aerograph. 4. aerogramme. [AERO- + -GRAM[1]] aer-o-gramme (ār'ə gram'), n. (cap. or ə-), a sheet of lightweight paper, bearing an official postal stamp imprint that is folded to form its own envelope and can be sent via air mail at a special, low rate because of its standard size, light weight and limited contents. Also, aerogram, aer'o-grамme'. Cf. air letter. [< F] aer-o-graph (ār'ə graf', -gräf'), n. Meteorol. any automatic recording instrument that is airborne. [AERO- + -GRAPH]

aer-og-ra-phy (ā rog'rə fē), n. description of the air or atmosphere. [AERO- + -GRAPHY] —aer-og'ra-pher, n. —aer-o-graph-ic (ār'ə graf'ik), aer'o-graph'i-cal, adj.

Aer-ol (ār'ōl, -ōl), n. a boy's given name.

aer-o-lite (ār'ə līt'), n. a meteorite consisting mainly of stony matter. Also, aer-o-lith (ār'ə lith). [AERO- + -LITE] —aer-o-lit-ic (ār'ə lit'ik), adj.

aer-o-lit-ics (ār'ə lit'iks), n. (construed as sing.) the study of aerolites. [AEROLITE + -ICS] aer-ol-o-gy (ā rol'ə jē), n. 1. Obsolesc. the branch of meteorology involving the observation of the atmosphere by means of balloons, airplanes, etc. 2. (in former use by the U.S. Navy) meteorology. [AERO- + -LOGY] —aer-o-log-ic (ār'ə loj'ik), aer'o-log'i-cal, adj. —aer'o-log'i-cal-ly, adv. —aer-ol'o-gist, n.

aer-o-man-cy (ār'ə man'sē), n. the prediction of future events from observation of weather conditions. [AERO- + -MANCY] —aer'o-man'cer, n. —aer'o-man'tic, adj.

aer-o-ma-rine (ār'ō mə rēn'), adj. Aeron. relating to navigation of aircraft above the ocean. [AERO- + MARINE] aer-o-me-chan-ic (ār'ō mə kan'ik), n. 1. an aviation mechanic. —adj. 2. of or pertaining to aeromechanics. [AERO- + MECHANIC] aer-o-me-chan-ics (ār'ō mə kan'iks), n. (construed as sing.) the mechanics of air or gases. [AERO- + MECHANICS] —aer'o-me-chan'i-cal, adj.

aer-o-med-i-cal (ār'ō med'i kəl), adj. of or pertaining to the science or practice of aviation medicine. [AERO- + MEDICAL] aer-o-med-i-cine (ār'ō med'i sən), n. See aviation medicine. [AERO- + MEDICINE]

aer-o-me-te-or-o-graph (ār'ō mē'tē ər ə graf', -gräf', -mē'tē ôr'ə-, -or'ə-), n. a meteorograph for use in aircraft. [AERO- + METEOROGRAPH]

aer-o-naut (ār'ə nôt', -not'), n. 1. the pilot of a balloon or other lighter-than-air craft. 2. a traveler in an airship. [AERO- + (ARGO)NAUT; cf. F aéronaute] aer-o-nau-tic (ār'ə nô'tik, -not'ik), adj. of aeronautics or aeronauts. Also, aer'o-nau'ti-cal. [AERONAUT + -IC] —aer'o-nau'ti-cal-ly, adv.

aer-o-nau-tics (ār'ə nô'tiks, -not'iks), n. (construed as sing.) the science of navigation in aircraft or other craft. [AERONAUTIC + -ICS] aer-o-neu-ro-sis (ār'ō nōō rō'sis, -nyōō-), n. Psychiatry. a psychoneurotic condition that occurs in aviators and airmen and is characterized by worry, loss of self-confidence, mild depression, and usually various physica symptoms. [AERO- + NEUROSIS] aer-on-o-my (ā ron'ə mē), n. the study of chemical and physical phenomena in the upper stratosphere. [AERO- + -NOMY] aer'o-o-ti'tis me'dia (ār'ō ō tī'tis, ār'-), Med. inflammation of the middle ear due to trauma occurring in a difference between the atmospheric pressure and the pressure in the tympanic cavity. Also, aerotitis media.

aer-o-pause (ār'ə pôz'), n. Aeron. (not used scientifically) the region beyond the earth's atmosphere marking the present limit of manned flight. [AERO- + PAUSE]

A-ër-o-pe (ā ĕr'ə pē), n. Class. Myth. the wife of Atreus, seduced by her brother-in-law Thyestes.

aer-o-pha-gia (ār'ə fā'jə, -jē ə), n. Psychiatry. swallowing of air due to neurotic gastric disturbances. [AERO- + -PHAGIA] —aer-oph-a-gist (ā ro f'ə jist), n.

aer-o-phil-lat-e-ly (ār'ō fi lat'ə lē), n. the study or collection of air-mail stamps, cancellations, etc. [AERO- + PHILATELY] —aer-o-phil-a-tel-ic (ār'ō fil'ə tel'ik), adj. —aer'o-phi-lat'e-list, n.

aer-o-pho-bi-a (ār'ə fō'bē ə), n. Psychiatry. an abnormal fear of drafts of air, gases, and airborne noxious substances. [AERO- + -PHOBIA] —aer-o-pho-bic (ār'ə fō'bik, -fob'ik), adj.

aer-o-phone (ār'ə fōn'), n. any musical wind instrument. [AERO- + -PHONE] aer-o-plane (ār'ə plān', -plən), n. a portable device filled with compressed air and used in cases of asphyxia or the like. [AERO- + -PHORE] aer-o-pho-to (ār'ō fō'tō), n., pl. -tos. See aerial photograph. [AERO- + PHOTO] —aer-o-pho-tog-ra-phy (ār'ō fə tog'rə fē), n.

aer-o-phyte (ār'ə fīt'), n. Bot. epiphyte. [AERO- + -PHYTE] aer-o-plane (ār'ə plān'), n. Chiefly Brit. airplane.

aer-o-plank-ton (ār'ō plaŋk'tən), n. minute living organisms collectively, that are carried in the air. [AERO- + PLANKTON] aer-o-pulse (ār'ə puls'), n. See pulsejet engine. [AERO- + PULSE] aer-o-scep-sy (ār'ə skep'sē), n. (in insects and other invertebrate animals) sensitivity to atmospheric conditions, as the perception of odors by the antennae of insects. Also, aer-o-scop-sis (ār'ō skop'sis). [AERO- + -scopsy < Gk sképsis observation, from skep- (s. of sképtesthai to observe, examine) + -sis -SIS] aer-o-scope (ār'ə skōp'), n. an apparatus for collecting microscopic objects in the air. [AERO- + -SCOPE] —aer-o-scop-ic (ār'ə skop'ik), adj. —aer'o-scop'i-cal-ly, adv.

aer-o-si-nus-i-tis (ār'ō sī'nə sī'tis), n. Med. inflammation of the nasal sinuses caused by the effect on the sinuses of changes in atmospheric pressure. Also called barosinusitus. [AERO- + SINUSITIS] aer-o-sol (ār'ə sōl', -sŏl', -sol'), n. 1. Physical Chem. a system of colloidal particles dispersed in a gas; smoke or fog. 2. a liquid substance, as a disinfectant, deodorant, etc., sealed in a metal container under pressure with an inert gas or other activating agent and released through a push-button nozzle or valve: new type of aerosol for coating silverware. 3. the container for such a substance. 4. See aerosol bomb. [AERO- + SOL[4]]

aer-o-space (ār'ə spās'), n. 1. the atmosphere and the space beyond considered as a whole. —adj. 2. of, pertaining to, or designed for flight, research and manufacture of vehicles, missiles, and the like that operate in aerospace. [AERO- + SPACE] aer-o-sphere (ār'ə sfēr'), n. Aeron. (not used scientifically) the region above the earth's atmosphere where manned flight is possible at present. [AERO- + -SPHERE]

aer-o-stat (ār'ə stat'), n. any lighter-than-air craft, as a balloon or dirigible. [AERO- + -STAT] aer-o-stat-ic (ār'ə stat'ik), adj. 1. of or pertaining to aerostats. 2. of or capable of supporting, aerostats. Also, aer'o-stat'i-cal. [AERO- + -STATIC] aer-o-stat-ics (ār'ə stat'iks), n. (construed as sing.) 1. the branch of statics that deals with gases in equilibrium and with gases and bodies in the gases in equilibrium with each other. Cf. aerodynamics, 2. the science of lighter-than-air craft. [see AEROSTATIC, -ICS] aer-o-sta-tion (ār'ə stā'shən), n. Aeron. the science or art of operating aerostats. [AEROSTAT + -ION] aer-o-ther-a-peu-tics (ār'ō ther'ə pyōō'tiks), n. (construed as sing.) the branch of therapeutics that deals with the curative use of air or of artificially prepared atmospheres. Also, aer-o-ther-a-py (ār'ō ther'ə pē). [AERO- + THERAPEUTICS] aer-o-ther-mo-dy-nam-ics (ār'ō thûr'mō dī nam'iks), n. (construed as sing.) aerodynamics dealing with conditions where there are significant heat exchanges in gases or significant heat exchanges between gases and solid surfaces, as in very high-speed, generally supersonic flight. [AERO- + THERMODYNAMICS] —aer'o-ther'mo-dy-nam'ic, adj.

aer-o-ti-tis me-dia (ār'ə tī'tis, ār'-). See aero-otitis media.

aer-o-tow (ār'ə tō'), v.t. 1. to tow (an aircraft) through the air. —n. 2. act of aerotowing. [AERO- + TOW[1]] aer-o-trop-ic (ār'ə trop'ik), adj. Biol. taking a particular direction under the influence of air. [AERO- + -TROPIC] aer-ot-ro-pism (ā ro'trə piz'əm), n. Biol. aerotropic tendency or growth. [AEROT(IC) + -TROPISM] aer-ru-gi-nous (ā rōō'jə nəs, ā rōō'-), adj. bluish-green; like verdigris. [< L aerūginōs(us), equiv. to aerūgin- (s. of aerūgō) AERUGO + -ōsus -OUS] aer-ru-go (ā rōō'gō, ī rōō'-), n. verdigris. [< L, equiv. to aer- (s. of aes copper, bronze) + -ūgō suffix used in forming names of rusts and surface growths; see PERRUGINOUS, LANUGO] aer-y[1] (ār′ē, ā′ə rē), adj. ethereal; aerial. Also, a·ër′y. [< L āerius(us) < Gk āérios, equiv. to āēr- AER- + -ios adj. suffix] aer-y[2] (ār′ē, ēr′ē), n., pl. aer·ies. aerie.

aes-, for words with initial aes-, see also es-.

Ae·sa·cus (ē′sə kəs), n. Class. Myth. one of the 50 sons of Priam.

Aes·chi·nes (es′kə nēz′ or, esp. Brit., ēs′-), n. 389–314 B.C., Athenian orator: rival of Demosthenes.

Aes·chy·lus (es′kə ləs or, esp. Brit., ē′skə-), n. 525–456 B.C., Greek poet and dramatist. —Aes·chy·le·an (es′kə lē′ən or, esp. Brit., ē′skə-), adj.

Aes·cu·la·pi·an (es′kyə lā′pē ən or, esp. Brit., ēs′-), adj. 1. pertaining to Aesculapius. 2. medical; medicinal. —n. 3. a physician; doctor. Also, Esculapian. [AESCULAPIUS + -AN] aes·cu·lin (es′kyə lin), n. Chem. esculin.

Ae·se·pus (ī sē′pəs), n. (in the Iliad) a son of Abarbarea who, with his twin brother Pedasus, fought in the Trojan War and was slain by Ajax.

Ae·sir (e′sir), n. (often l.c.) (construed as pl.) Scand. Myth. a superior race of gods, led by Odin and living at Asgard. Also, Asar. Cf. Vanir. [< Icel, pl. of áss god; c. OE ōs, OHG ans (see Oswald), OHG Ansi in proper names (as Anselm); akin to Skt asura lord, etc.]

Ae·sop (ē′səp, ē′sop), n. c620–c560 B.C., Greek writer of fables. —Ae·so·pi·an (ē sō′pē ən), Ae·sop·ic (ē sop′ik), adj.

Ae·sta·tis (ē stā′tis), n. Mare. See Mare Aestatis.

aes·the·sia (es thē′zhə, -zhē ə, -zē ə), n. esthesia. Also, aes·the·sis (es thē′sis).

aes·thete (es′thēt, ēs′-), esp. Brit., ēs′-), n. 1. one who has or professes to have a high degree of sensitivity toward the beauties of art or nature. 2. one who affects great love of art, music, poetry, etc., and indifference to practical matters. Also, esthete. [< Gk aisthētḗs one who perceives, equiv. to aisthē- (var. s. of aisthánesthai to perceive) + -tēs n. suffix denoting agent]

aes·thet·ic (es thet′ik or, esp. Brit., ēs-), adj. 1. pertaining to a sense of the beautiful or to the science of aesthetics. 2. having a sense of the beautiful; characterized by a love of beauty. 3. pertaining to, involving, or concerned with pure emotion and sensation as opposed to pure intellectuality. —n. 4. aesthetics. 5. a philosophy, principle, or standard that is aesthetically valid at a given time and place: the clean lines, bare surfaces, and sense of space that bespeak the machine-age aesthetic. 6. aesthetics, the structure of sensation. Also, esthetic. [< NL aesthetic(us) < Gk aisthētik-ós, equiv. to aisthē- (var. s. of aisthánesthai to perceive) + -ikos -IC] aes·thet·i·cal (es thet′i kəl or, esp. Brit., ēs-), adj. of or relating to aesthetics. Also, esthetical. [AESTHETIC + -AL[1]] aes·thet·i·cal·ly (es thet′i kə lē or, esp. Brit., ēs-), adv. 1. according to aesthetics or its principles. 2. in an aesthetic manner. Also, esthetically. [AESTHETICAL + -LY]

aes·the·ti·cian (es′thi tish′ən or, esp. Brit., ēs′-), n. one versed in aesthetics. Also, esthetician. [AESTHETIC + -IAN; see -ICIAN] aes·the·ti·cism (es thet′i siz′əm or, esp. Brit., ēs-), n. 1. the acceptance of artistic beauty and taste as a fundamental principle rather than one of standards being secondary. 2. an exaggerated or excessive devotion to art, music, or poetry, with indifference to practical matters. Also, esthet′i·cism. [AESTHETIC + -ISM] aes·thet·ics (es thet′iks or, esp. Brit., ēs-), n. (construed as sing.) 1. Philos. the branch of philosophy dealing with such notions as the beautiful, the ugly, the sublime, the comic, etc., as they are exhibited in the fine arts, with a view to establishing the meaning and validity of critical judgments concerning works of art, and the principles underlying artistic production and appreciation. 2. the study of the mind and emotions in relation to the sense of beauty. Also, esthetics. [see AESTHETIC, -ICS]

aes·ti·vate (es′tə vāt′, e stī′-, esp. Brit., ē′-), v.i., -vat·ed, -vat·ing. estivate. —aes′ti·va′tion, n. —aes′ti·va′tor, n.

A.-E. Sud., Anglo-Egyptian Sudan.

Ae·sy·e·tes (ē′sē ē′tēz), n. (in the Iliad) the father of Antenor.

aet., at the age of. [< L aetātis]

al'ternating group', Math. the subgroup consisting of all even permutations, of the group of all permutations of a finite set. Cf. symmetric group.

al'ternating light', Navig. a beacon showing different colors in succession.

al'ternating personal'ity, Psychol. a type of multiple personality in which two or more distinct personalities appear consecutively within the same individual.

al'ternating se'ries, Math. a series, usually infinite, in which successive terms have opposite signs, as $1 - \frac{1}{2} + \frac{1}{3} - \frac{1}{4} + \ldots$.

al·ter·na·tion (ôl'tər nā'shən, al'-), n. 1. the act or state of alternating or the state of being alternated. 2. alternate succession; repeated rotation: the alternation of the seasons. 3. Elect. a fluctuation from the absolute value of an alternating current or voltage from zero to a maximum and back to zero, being equal to one half cycle. 4. Ling. [LL alternātiōn- (s. of alternātiō). See ALTERNATE, -ION] alterna'tion of genera'tions, Biol. the alternation in the life cycle of an organism of forms produced in a different manner, esp. the alternation of sexual with asexual generations.

al·ter·na·tive (ôl tûr'nə tiv, al-), n. 1. a choice limited to one of two or more possibilities, as of things, courses of action, propositions, etc., the adoption of which precludes any other possibility: You have the alternative of riding or walking. 2. one of the things, propositions, or courses which can be chosen: The alternative to riding is walking. 3. a necessary or remaining course or choice: There was no alternative but to walk. —*adj. 4. affording a choice of two or more things, propositions, or courses. 5. of two things, propositions, or courses, mutually exclusive so that if one is chosen the other must be rejected: The alternative possibilities are neutrality or war. 6. Logic. (of a proposition) containing two or more terms, a least one of which is true. Also, alternate (for defs. 1–4). [ALTERNATE + -IVE] —al·ter'na·tive·ly, adv. —al·ter'na·tive·ness, n.

al·ter·na·tor (ôl'tər nā'tər, al'-), n. Elect. a generator of alternating current. [ALTERNATE + -OR²] al·tes (al'tēz), n. (in the Iliad) a king of the Leleges and father of Lamedon.

Alt·geld (ôlt'geld), n. John Peter, 1847–1902, governor of Illinois 1892–96.

al·thae·a (al thē'ə), n. Class. Myth. wife of Oeneus and mother of Toxeus, Tydeus, Meleager and Deïanira.

al·though (ôl thō'), conj. in spite of the fact that; even though; though. Also, al·tho'. [ME al thogh ALL (adv.) even + THOUGH] —Syn. though, notwithstanding (that), even if, albeit (that).

alti-, a prefix occurring in loan words from Latin with the meaning "high" (altitude); used in the formation of compound words: altigram. Also, esp. before a vowel, alt-. [< L, equiv. to altu(s) high + -i-]

al·ti·graph (al'tə graf', -grāf'), n. an altimeter equipped with a device for recording its measurements on a graph. [ALTI- + -GRAPH] al·tim·e·ter (al tim'i tər, al'tə mē'tər), n. 1. a sensitive aneroid barometer that is graduated and calibrated, used chiefly in aircraft for finding distance above sea level, terrain, or some other reference point by comparison of the pressure of the device and of the same purpose which operates by some other means, as by radio waves. [ALTI- + -METER]

al·ti·si·mo (al tis′ə mō′; It. äl tē′zē mô′), Music. —adj. 1. very high. —n. 2. in altissimo, the second octave above the highest staff. [< It: lit., highest, equiv. to alt(o) high + -issimo superl. suffix] al·ti·tude (al′ti tōōd′, -työōd′), n. 1. the height above sea level of any object or point on the surface or in the atmosphere. 2. extent or distance upward; height: The buildings of Paris are not of great altitude. 3. Astron. the angular distance of a heavenly body above the horizon. 4. Geom. the particular distance from the vertex of a figure to the side opposite the vertex. b. the line through the vertex of a figure perpendicular to the base. 5. Usually, altitudes. a high point or region: mountain altitudes. 6. high or exalted position, rank, etc. [< L altitūd(o), equiv. to alt(us) high + -i- + -tūdō -TUDE] —Syn. 2. height. 3. altern, pinnacle, zenith.

al′titude di′al, an adjustable sundial utilizing the altitude of the sun, at a given latitude and time of year, as a means of telling the time. Cf. direction dial.

al·ti·tu·di·nal (al′ti tōōd′ən əl, -työōd′-), adj. relating to altitude or height. [< L altitūdin- (s. of altitūdō) ALTITUDE + -AL1] al·to (al′tō), n., pl. -tos, adj. Music. —n. 1. the lowest female voice; counter-tenor. 3. a singer with such a voice. 4. a musical part for such a voice. 5. the second highest of the four parts in standard harmony, or the voices or persons singing this part. 6. the second highest instrument in a family of musical instruments, as the viola in the violin family or the alto horn in the saxhorn family. —adj. 7. of, noting, pertaining to, or having the tonal range of the alto. 8. (of a musical instrument) second highest in a family of musical instruments: alto saxophone. [< It alto < L altus high]

al′to cle′f, Music. a sign locating middle C on the third line of the staff. Also called viola clef. See illus. under CLEF.

al·to·cu·mu·lus (al′tō kyōō′myə ləs), n., pl. -lus. Meteorol. a cloud of a class characterized by globular masses or rolls in layers or patches, individual elements being larger and darker than those of cirrocumulus and smaller than those of stratocumulus: of medium altitude, about 8000–20,000 feet. [ALTO- + CUMULUS]

al′tocu′mulus undu′latus, pl. altocumulus undulatus. Meteorol. an altocumulus cloud consisting chiefly of one or more horizontal layers.

al·to·geth·er (ôl′tə geth′ər), adv. 1. wholly; entirely; completely: altogether a different person. 2. everything included: The debt amounted altogether to twenty dollars. 3. with all or everything considered; on the whole: Altogether, I'm glad it's over. 4. in the altogether, Informal. nude: When the phone rung she had just stepped out of the bathtub and was in the altogether. [var. of ME altogeder. See ALL, TOGETHER] —al·to·geth′er·ness, n.

—Usage. ALTOGETHER and ALL TOGETHER are sometimes confused. As an adverb, ALTOGETHER means "wholly, completely, entirely": an altogether confused report. While as an adjective followed by adverbial phrases, means "in a group": They were all together in the kitchen.

Al·to·na (äl′tō nä), n. a metropolitan district of Hamburg, West Germany: formerly an independent city.

Al·too·na (al tōō′nə), n. a city in central Pennsylvania. 69,407 (1960).

Al′to Park′, a town in NW Georgia. 2526 (1960).

al·to-re·lie·vo (al′tō ri lē′vō), n., pl. -vos. See high relief. Italian, alto-rilievo.

al·to-ri·lie·vo (äl′tō rē lye′vō), n., pl. al·ti-ri·lie·vi (äl′tē rē lye′vē). Italian. high relief.

al·to·stra·tus (al′tō strā′təs), n., pl. -tus. Meteorol. a cloud of a class characterized by a generally uniform gray sheet or layer, lighter in color than nimbostratus and darker than cirrostratus: of medium altitude, about 8000–20,000 feet. [ALTO- + STRATUS] al·tri·cial (al trish′əl), adj. Ornith. helpless at hatching and requiring parental care for a period of time. Cf. precocial. [< L altric- (s. of altrix nourisher, equiv. to al- feed (see ALIMENT) + -trix fem. suffix of agency + *-āl-*s -AL1] al·tru·ism (al′trōō iz′əm), n. the principle or practice of unselfish concern for or devotion to the welfare of others (opposed to egoism). [< F altruisme < It altrui others (alter. of L alterī) + F -isme -ISM] al·tru·ist (al′trōō ist), n. a person unselfishly concerned for or devoted to the welfare of others (opposed to egoist). [back formation from ALTRUISTIC] al·tru·is·tic (al′trōō is′tik), adj. unselfishly concerned for or devoted to the welfare of others (opposed to egoistic). [ALTRU(ISM) + -ISTIC] —al′tru·is′ti·cal·ly, adv. —Syn. charitable, generous, philanthropic; disinterested, unselfish.

Al·tu·ras (al tōōr′əs), n. a town in NE California. 2819 (1960).

al·tus (al′təs), n. a city in SW Oklahoma. 21,225 (1960).

al·u·del (al′yə dəl′), n. Chem. one of a series of pear-shaped vessels of earthenware or glass, open at both ends and fitted one above the other, for recovering the sublimates produced during sublimation. [< MF < Sp < Ar al the + uthāl, var. of ithāl, pl. of athla piece of apparatus] al·u·la (al′yə lə), n., pl. -lae (-lē′). 1. Also called bastard wing, spurious wing. the group of three to six small, rather stiff feathers growing on the first digit, pollex, or thumb of a bird's wing. 2. a membranous lobe at the base of each wing of a dipterous insect. [< NL, equiv. to L āl(a) wing + -ula -ULE] —al′u·lar, adj.

al·um (al′əm), n. Chem. 1. Also called aluminum potassium sulfate, common alum, potash alum, potassium alum. a colorless, odorless, crystalline, water-soluble solid, $K_2SO_4·Al_2(SO_4)_3·24H_2O$, a double sulfate of aluminum and potassium, used in medicine as an astringent and styptic, in dyeing and tanning, and in many technical processes. 2. one of a class of double sulfates analogous to the potassium alum, having the general formula $R_2SO_4·X_2(SO_4)_3·24H_2O$, where R is a univalent alkali metal or ammonium, and X one of a number of trivalent metals. 3. (not in technical use) aluminum oxide, $Al_2(SO_4)_3$. [ME < MF < L alūmen(-inis), r. OE ælfne for ælfmne* < L alūmini- (s. of alūmen)]

alumin-, var. of alumino-, esp. before a vowel.

a·lu·mi·na (ə lōō′mə nə), n. 1. the natural or synthetic oxide of aluminum, occurring in white or pure crystal form as corundum. Also called aluminum oxide. [pl. of L alūmen alum] a·lu·mi·nate (ə lōō′mə nāt′), n. a quick-setting cement with a large bauxite content.

a·lu·mi·nate (ə lōō′mə nāt′), n. 1. Chem. a salt of the acid form of aluminum hydroxide, containing the group AlO_2 or $Al(OH)_4^-$. 2. Mineral. a metallic oxide combined with alumina. [ALUMIN + -ATE2] alu′mina trihy′drate, Chem. a white, crystalline, water-insoluble solid, $Al_2O_3·3H_2O$, used chiefly in the manufacture of aluminum salts.

a·lu·mi·nif·er·ous (ə lōō′mə nif′ər əs), adj. containing or yielding aluminum. [ALUMIN- + -I- + -FEROUS] a·lu·mi·nise (ə lōō′mə nīz′), v.t., -nised, -nis·ing. Brit. aluminize.

a·lu·mi·nog·ra·phy (ə lōō′mə nog′rə fē), n. Print. lithography. [ALUMIN- + -O- + -GRAPHY] —a·lu·mi·no·graph·ic (ə lōō′mə nə graf′ik), adj.

a·lu·mi·no·sil·i·cate (ə lōō′mə nō sil′ə kit, -kāt′), n. any naturally occurring or synthetically produced aluminum silicate, sometimes containing alkali or alkaline-earth metal ions, as a feldspar, zeolite, or ultramarine. [ALUMINO- + SILICATE] a·lu·mi·no·ther·my (ə lōō′mə nō thûr′mē), n. Metall. a process for producing high temperatures by combining finely divided aluminum with heat to the oxygen from another metallic oxide. Also, a·lu′mi·no·ther′mics. [ALUMINO- + -THERMY]

a·lu·mi·num (ə lōō′mə nəm), n. 1. Chem. a silver-white metallic element, light in weight, ductile, malleable, and not readily oxidized or tarnished, occurring combined in nature in rock, shale, clay, and most soil: used in alloys and for lightweight utensils, castings, airplane parts, etc. Symbol: Al; at. wt.: 26.98; at. no.: 13; sp. gr.: 2.70 at 20°C. 2. Obs. alum. —adj. 3. of, pertaining to, made of, or containing aluminum: aluminum frying pan. Also, Brit., aluminium. [< NL, alter. of alumine. See ALUMINA, -IUM] —a·lu·mi·nic (ə lōō′mə nik), adj.

alu′minum ac′etate, Chem. a compound which in the form of its normal salt, $Al(C_2H_3O_2)_3$, obtained as a white, water-soluble, amorphous powder, is used chiefly in medicine as an astringent and as an antiseptic, and which in the form of its basic salt, $Al(C_2H_3O_2)_2OH$, obtained as a white, crystalline, water-insoluble powder, is used chiefly in the textile industry as a waterproofing agent, as a fireproofing agent, and as a mordant.

alu′minum ammo′nium sul′fate, Chem. a colorless, crystalline, water-insoluble solid, $AlNH_4(SO_4)_2·12H_2O$, used chiefly in the manufacture of paper; also called ammonium alum, ammonia alum.

alu′minum bo′rate, Chem. a white, granular, water-insoluble powder, $2Al_2O_3·B_2O_3·3H_2O$, used chiefly in the manufacture of crown glass.

alu′minum borohy′dride, Chem. a volatile liquid, $Al(BH_4)_3$, that ignites spontaneously in air and reacts vigorously with water to form hydrogen, used chiefly in organic synthesis.

alu′minum bronze′, any of several alloys containing a high percentage of copper with from 5 to 11 percent aluminum and varying amounts of iron, nickel, manganese, and other elements. Also called aluminum.

alu′minum car′bide, Chem. a yellow, crystalline solid, Al_4C_3, that reacts with water to form methane.

alu′minum chlo′ride, Chem. a yellow-white, crystalline, water-soluble solid in its white hydrated form, $AlCl_3·6H_2O$, is used chiefly as a wood preservative and in its yellow-white anhydrous form, $AlCl_3$, chiefly as a catalyst.

alu′minum hy′droxide, Chem. a white, crystalline, tasteless, water-insoluble powder, $Al(OH)_3$ or $Al_2O_3·H_2O$, obtained chiefly from bauxite: used in the manufacture of glass, ceramics, and printing inks, in dyeing, and in medicine as an antacid and in the treatment of ulcers. Also called alu′minum hy′drate, hydrated alumina.

alu′minum monoste′arate, Chem. a white, water-insoluble powder, $Al(OH)_2[OCO(CH_2)_{16}CH_3]$, used as a drier in paints and as a thickener in lubricating oils.

alu′minum ni′trate, Chem. a white, crystalline, water-soluble solid, $Al(NO_3)_3·9H_2O$, used chiefly as a mordant in dyeing cotton.

alu′minum potas′sium sul′fate, Chem. alum alu′minum sil′icate, any of a group of naturally occurring, water-insoluble substances, obtained from clay or synthesized, containing varying amounts of oxides of aluminum and silicon, Al_2O_3 and Si_2O_3, and used in the manufacture of glass, ceramics, paints, printing inks, rubber, and plastics. Cf. mullite.

alu′minum sulfate, Chem. a white, crystalline, water-soluble solid, $Al_2(SO_4)_3$, used chiefly as a waterpurifying agent, as a mordant, and as a size in the manufacture of paper.

a·lum·na (ə lum′nə), n., pl. -nae (-nē). a girl or woman who is a graduate or former student of a specific school, college, or university. [< L: foster daughter, pupil; fem. of ALUMNUS] —Usage. See alumnus.

a·lum·nus (ə lum′nəs), n., pl. -ni (-nī). a graduate or former student of a specific school, college, or university. [< L: foster son, pupil, orphan < alō to feed, support) + -u- + -mnus, orig. passive participial suffix, akin to Gk -menos; see PHENOMENON] —Usage. A male graduate is an ALUMNUS (plural ALUMNI) and a female graduate is an ALUMNA (plural ALUMNAE). When referring to male and female graduates together, the masculine form ALUMNI is used.

alu′num root′ (al′əm rōōt′), n. any of several North American, saxifragaceous herbs of the genus Heuchera, esp. H. americana. 2. the root of any of these plants, used as an astringent. 3. the cranesbill, Geranium maculatum, of the eastern U.S., having rose-purple flowers. [ALUM + ROOT1] alu·min (ə lun′dəm), n. Trademark. a substance consisting of fused alumina, used chiefly as an abrasive and as a refractory.

al·u·nite (al′yə nīt′), n. a mineral, a hydrous sulfate of potassium and aluminum, $KAl_3(SO_4)_2(OH)_6$, commonly occurring in fine-grained masses. [< F alun (< L alūmen ALUM) + -ITE1] al·u·no·gen (ə lōō′nə jən), n. a mineral, hydrous sulfate of aluminum, $Al_2(SO_4)_3·18H_2O$, occurring as a white, fibrous crust on quarry or mine walls. [< F alun (see ALUNITE) + -O- + -GEN] a·lure (ə lōōr′), n. a passageway, as the walk along one side of a cloister. Also, allure. [ME al(o)ur < OF aleor passage, equiv. to ale walk (see ALLEY1) + -or -URE] al·va·ca·ceous (al′və tā′shəs), adj. 1. Zool. covered with minute cracks or wrinkles and having a pale, leathery-brown color. 2. having the color of soft brown leather. [< L alvācius, equiv. to alvāt(us) leather softened with alum + -ācius -ACIOUS (altered to -ACEOUS)] al·va·da (al ōōz′zə), n. a pre-Islamic Arabian goddess identifying the planet Venus and considered to be a daughter of Allah.

Al·va (al′və; Sp. äl′vä), n. 1. Also, Alba. Fer·nan·do Al·va·rez de To·le·do (fer nän′dō äl′vä reth′ de tō-le′dō), Duke of, 1508–82, Spanish general who suppressed a Protestant rebellion in the Netherlands in 1567. 2. a town in NW Oklahoma. 6258 (1960). 3. a boy's or girl's given name.

al·vah (al′və), n. a boy's given name.

Al·van (al′vən), n. a boy's given name.

Al·var (äl′vär), n. (sometimes l.c.) Hinduism. (in southern India) a holy person of the Vaishnava sect. [< Tamil Āṟvār, deriv. of āṟ- to be deep in contemplation]

Al·va·ra·do (äl′vä rä′thō), n. 1. A·lon·so de (ä lōn′sō de), c1490–1554, Spanish soldier in the conquests of Mexico and Peru; governor of Guatemala 1527–32. 2. Pe·dro de (pe′ᵺrō de), 1495–1541, Spanish soldier; chief aide of Cortez in conquest of Mexico; governor of Guatemala 1530–34.

Al·va·ro (äl′vä rō), n. Cor·ra·do (kô rä′ᵺō), c1890–1956, Italian journalist and novelist.

al·ve·at·ed (al′vē ā′tid), adj. having the vaulted shape of a beehive. [< L alveāt(us) (alve(us) concave vessel, trough, equiv. to alv- + -eus adj. suffix + -ātus -ATE1) + -ED2] alveol-, var. of alveolo- before a vowel.

al·ve·o·la (al vē′ə lə), n., pl. -lae (-lē′). Bot., Zool. 1. a small cavity, cell, or pit on the surface of an organ. 2. an alveolus. [< NL, dim. of L alveus trough] al·ve·o·lar (al vē′ə lər), adj. 1. Anat., Zool. of or pertaining to an alveolus or to alveoli. 2. Phonet. articulated with the tongue touching or close to the alveolar ridge, as t, d, n; or pertaining to a sound so articulated. [ALVEOL- + -AR1] —al·ve′o·lar·ly, adv.

alve′olar arch′, the part of the upper or lower jawbone in which the teeth are set.

alve′olar ridge′, the ridge on the border of the upper and lower jaws containing the sockets of the teeth. Also called alve′olar proc′ess.

al·ve·o·lus (al vē′ə ləs), n., pl. -li (-lī′). Anat., Zool. 1. a little cavity, pit, or cell, as a cell of a honeycomb. 2. an air cell of the lungs, formed by the terminal dilation of tiny air passageways. 3. one of the terminal secretory units of a racemose gland. 4. the socket within the jawbone in which the root or roots of a tooth are set. [< L, equiv. to alve(us) concave vessel + -olus, var. of -ulus -ULE]

Al·vi·na (al vī′nə), n. a girl's given name.

al·vine (al′vin, -vīn), adj. Med. Obs. of or pertaining to the belly; intestinal. [< L alvīn(us), equiv. to alv(us) belly + -īnus -INE1]

Al·vi·no (al vē′nō), n. a boy's given name, form of Alvin.

Al·vi·ra (al vī′rə, -vēr′ə), n. a girl's given name, form of Elvira. Also, Alvera.

Al·vis (al′vis), n. a boy's given name.

al·way (ôl′wā), adv. Archaic. always. [ME; OE ealneweg, equiv. to ealne (acc. sing. masc. of eal ALL) + weg WAY] al·ways (ôl′wāz, -wēz), adv. 1. every time; on every occasion; without exception: He always works on Saturday. 2. forever: Will you love me always? 3. in any event; if necessary: She can always move back with her parents. 4. all the time; constantly; uninterruptedly: Never, always, never, he came. [ME alles weis, gen. of all ALL + weis WAY]

—Syn. 2, 4. perpetually, everlastingly, forever, continually. Both ALWAYS and EVER refer to uniform or perpetual continuance. ALWAYS often expresses or implies repetition as producing the uniformity or continuance: The sun always rises in the east. EVER implies an unchanging sameness throughout: Natural law is ever to be reckoned with.

Al·win (al′win), n. a boy's given name. Also, Alvin, Al'wyn.

al·wite (ôl′wīt), adj. Armor. white (def. 14).

Al·y·at·tes (al′ē at′ēz), n. king of Lydia c617–560 B.C.

Al·yce (al′is), n. a girl's given name. Also, Alice, Al's.

Al·yn (al′in), n. a girl's given name. Also, Alison, Allison.

ammo/nia liq/uor, Chem. a concentrated solution of ammonia, ammonium compounds, and sulfur compounds, obtained as a by-product in the destructive distillation of coal. Also, ammoni/acal liq/uor. Also called gas liquor.

am·mo·ni·ate (ə mō/nē āt/), v., -at·ed, -at·ing, n. Chem. —v.t. 1. to treat or cause to unite with ammonia. 2. Also, ammonize, to combine or form (a compound) with ammonia in stoichiometric proportions to another compound, as $CaCl_2{\cdot}8NH_3$ or $CuSO_4{\cdot}4NH_3$. [AMMONI(A) + -ATE1] —am·mo/ni·a/tion, n.

ammo/nia wa/ter, Chem. ammonia (def. 2).

am·mon·ic (ə mon/ik, ə mō/nik), adj. of or pertaining to ammonia or ammonium. Also, am·mon/i·cal. [AMMON(IA) + -IC] am·mon·i·fi·ca·tion (ə mon/ə fə kā/shən, ə mō/nə-), n. 1. the act of impregnating with ammonia, as in the manufacture of fertilizer. 2. the state of being so impregnated. 3. the formation of ammonia or its compounds, as in soil by soil organisms. [AMMONI(A) + -FICATION] am·mon·i·fy (ə mon/ə fī/, ə mō/nə-), v.t., -fied, -fy·ing. 1. to form into ammonia or impregnate with ammonia. 2. to form into ammonia or ammonium compounds. —v.i. 3. to become ammonified; produce ammonification. [AMMONI(A) + -FY]

am·mo·ni·o·fer·ric ox·alate (ə mō/nē ō fer/ik, ə mō/-). Chem. See ferric ammonium oxalate. [AMMONIO- + FERRIC] am·mo·nite1 (am/ə nīt/), n. one of the coiled, chambered fossil shells of a cephalopod mollusk of the extinct order Ammonoidea. [< NL Ammonītes < ML (cornū) Ammōnis (lit., horn of Ammon) + -ītes -ITE1; fossil so called from resemblance to horn of Jupiter AMMON] —am·mo·nit·ic (am/ə nit/ik), adj. —am·mon·i·toid (ə mon/i toid/), adj.

Ammonite

am·mo·nite2 (am/ə nīt/), n. a nitrogenous mixture consisting chiefly of dried animal fats, usually obtained from livestock carcasses, and used as a fertilizer. [AMMON(IUM) + NIT(RATE)2]

Am·mon·ite (am′ə nīt′), n. 1. an inhabitant of Ammon. —adj. 2. of or pertaining to the Ammonites. [AMMON + -ITE¹] —Am′mon·it′ish, adj.

am·mo·ni·um (ə mō′nē əm), n. Chem. the univalent ion, NH_4^+, or group, NH_4, which plays the part of a metal in the salt formed when ammonia reacts with an acid. [< NL; see AMMONIA, -IUM] ammo′nium ac′etate, Chem. a white, crystalline, deliquescent, water-soluble solid, $NH_4(C_2H_3O_2)$, used chiefly in the manufacture of dyes and meat preservatives.

ammo′nium al′um, Chem. See alum, ammonium sulfate.

ammo′nium bicar′bonate, Chem. a white, crystalline, water-soluble solid, NH_4HCO_3, used chiefly in the manufacture of baking powder.

ammo′nium chlo′ride, Chem. a white, crystalline, water-soluble, extremely volatile powder, $H_2NCOONH_4$, used as a fertilizer.

ammo′nium car′bonate, Chem. a water-soluble mixture of ammonium bicarbonate and ammonium carbamate, forming white, translucent, fibrous or lustrous, hard, crystalline masses: used chiefly in the manufacture of smelling salts and baking powder.

ammo′nium chlo′ride, Chem. See sal ammoniac.

ammo′nium lac′tate, Chem. a colorless to yellow, water-soluble, syrupy liquid, $CH_3CHOHCOONH_4$, used chiefly in medicine.

ammo′nium ni′trate, Chem. a white, crystalline, water-soluble powder, NH_4NO_3, usually produced by reacting nitric acid with vaporous ammonia: used chiefly in explosives, fertilizers, freezing mixtures, and in the manufacture of nitrous oxide.

ammo′nium pur′pu·rate (pûr′pyo͝o rāt′), Chem. murexide. [PURPUR(IC) + -ATE²]

ammo′nium ste′arate, Chem. a tan, waxlike, water-insoluble solid, $CH_3(CH_2)_{16}COONH_4$, used chiefly in the manufacture of cosmetics.

ammo′nium sul′fate, Chem. a white, crystalline, water-soluble solid, $(NH_4)_2SO_4$, used chiefly as a fertilizer.

ammo′nium thiocy′anate, Chem. a colorless, crystalline, deliquescent, water-soluble solid, NH_4SCN, used chiefly as a reducing agent, and as a fixative in textile printing.

am·mo·no (am′ə nō′), adj. Chem. of, containing, or derived from ammonia. [independent use of AMMONO-] ammono-, a combining form of ammonia: ammonolysis.

am·mo·noid (am′ə noid′), n. any cephalopod mollusk of the extinct order Ammonoidea, from the Devonian to the Cretaceous periods, having a coiled, chambered shell. [< NL Ammonoid(ea), equiv. to Ammon(ites) name of the order + -oidea -OIDEA; see AMMONITE²] am·mo·nol·y·sis (am′ə nol′ə sis), n., pl. -ses (-sēz′). Chem. decomposition in which ammonia is resolved into other compounds by the action of H and NH_2. [AMMONO- + -LYSIS] —am·mo·no·lit·ic (a mō′nə·lit′ik, am′ə nə·lit′-), adj.

am·mo·no·lyze (ə mō′nə·līz′), v., -lyzed, -lyz·ing. Chem. —v.t. 1. to subject to ammonolysis. —v.i. 2. to undergo ammonolysis. [AMMONOL(YSIS) + -IZE] am·moph·i·lous (am ofʹə ləs), adj. Biol. living or growing in sand. [< Gk ámmo(s) sand + -PHILOUS] amp² (amp), n. Informal. amplifier. [by shortening]

AMP, Biochem. See adenylic acid. [A(DENOSINE) + M(ONO)- + P(HOSPHATE)]

AMPAS, Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences.

am·pe·lite (amʹpə līt′), n. Mineral. any black carbonaceous shale. [< F < L ampelīt(is) < Gk ampelítis (gê) (earth) of the vine < ámpel(os) vine + -ītis -ITIS] —am·pe·lit·ic (am′pə litʹik), adj.

am·pe·lop·sis (am′pə lopʹsis), n. any climbing, woody vine or shrub of the genus Ampelopsis. [< NL < Gk ámpel(os) vine + ópsis -OPSIS] am·per·age (amʹpər ij, am pērʹ-), n. Elect. the strength of an electric current measured in amperes. [AMPERE + -AGE] am·pere (amʹpēr, am pērʹ), n. Elect. the meter-kilogram-second unit of electric current, equal to the current produced by an electromotive force of one volt acting through a resistance of one ohm, equivalent to one coulomb per second. Abbr.: A, amp Also, am′père. [named after A. M. AMPÈRE] am·père (amʹpēr; Fr. äN pe rāʹ), n. An·dré Ma·rie (äN drā′ ma rēʹ), 1775–1836, French physicist. —Am·per·i·an (am pērʹē ən, -perʹē-), adj.

am·pere-hour (amʹpēr our′, -ou′ər), n. Elect. a unit of electric charge noting the amount of electricity transferred by a current of one ampere in one hour, equal to 3600 coulombs. Abbr.: Ah, amp-hr

Am'père's law', Physics, the law that a magnetic field induced by an electric current is, at any point, directly proportional to the product of the current intensity and the length of the current conductor, inversely proportional to the square of the distance between the point and the conductor, and perpendicular to the plane joining the point and the conductor: [named after A. M. AMPÈRE] am·pere-turn (am'pĕr turn'), n., Elect. 1. one complete convolution of a conducting coil, through which one ampere of current passes. 2. the magnetomotive force produced by one ampere passing through one complete turn or convolution of a coil. Abbr.: At.

am·per·o·met·ric (am'pĕr ə met'rĭk), adj., Elect. pertaining to or involving the measurement of an electric current. [AMPERE + -O- + METRIC] amperometric titration, Chem., titration in which the end point is determined by measuring the amperage of an electric current given voltage that is passed through the solution.

am·per·sand (am'pər sand', am'pər sənd'), n. a character or symbol (& or &c) for and. [contr. of and per se and, lit., (the symbol) & by itself (stands for) and; see PER SE] am·phet·a·mine (am fĕt'ə mēn', -mĭn), n., Pharm. a racemic drug, $C_6H_5CH_2CH(NH_2)CH_3$, which stimulates the central nervous system: used in medicine, usually in the form of its sulfate, chiefly to relieve mild depressive states and to control the appetite in cases of obesity. [A(LPHA) + M(ETHYL) + PH(ENYL) + ET(HYL) + AMINE] amphi-, a prefix occurring in loan words from Greek (amphibious); on this model, used with the meaning "two," "both," "on both sides," in the formation of compound words: amphiprostyle. [< Gk amphi on both sides; akin to Skt abhitas, G -um, OE ymb(e)- around. Cf. AMBI-]

am·phi·as·tral (am'fĭ as'trəl), n. Biol. the achromatic spindle with two asters that forms during mitosis. [AMPHI- + -ASTRAL]²

Am·phib·i·a (am fĭb'ē ə), n. the class comprising the amphibians. [< NL < Gk amphíbi(os) (adj.) (animals) living a double life, neut. pl. of amphíbios. See AMPHIBIOUS] am·phib·i·an (am fĭb'ē ən), n. 1. an cold-blooded vertebrate of the class Amphibia, comprising the frogs, salamanders, and caecilians, the larva of which are typically aquatic, breathing by gills, and the adult of which are terrestrial, breathing by means of lungs through the moist, nodular skin. 2. an amphibious plant. 3. an airplane designed for taking off from and landing on both land and water. 4. a person or thing having a twofold nature. 5. Also called amphibian tractor, armored military vehicle equipped to move on land or water on tracks equipped with fins, used chiefly for landing assault troops. 6. belonging or pertaining to the class Amphibia. 7. amphibious (def. 2). [< L amphíbi(a), neut. pl. of amphíbius (adj.) (see AMPHIBIOUS) + -AN]

am·phib·i·ous (am fĭb'ē əs), adj. 1. living or able to live both on land and in water; belonging to both land and water. 2. Also, amphibian, capable of operating on both land and water: amphibious vehicles. 3. of a twofold nature. 4. of or pertaining to military operations by land and naval forces against the same object, esp. to a military attack by troops landed by naval ships. 5. trained or organized to fight, or fighting, on both land and sea. [< amphíbius < Gk amphíbios living a double life. See AMPHI-, BIO-, -OUS] —am·phib'i·ous·ly, adv. —am·phib'i·ous·ness, n.

am·phi·bole (am'fə bōl'), n. Mineral. any of a complex group of hydrous silicate minerals, containing chiefly calcium, magnesium, sodium, iron, and aluminum, and including hornblende, tremolite, asbestos, etc., occurring as important constituents of many rocks. [< F < Gk amphíbolos ambiguous] am·phi·bol·ic (am'fə bol'ĭk), adj. equivocal; uncertain; changing; ambiguous. [AMPHIBOL(Y) + -IC]

am·phi·bol·o·gy (am'fə bol'ə jē), n., pl. -gies. ambiguity of expression, esp. from faulty grammatical construction rather than of the meaning of the words, as in The Duke yet lives that Henry shall depose. Also called amphiboly. [< LL amphibologia < Gk. See AMPHIBOL, -LOGY] —am·phib·o·log·i·cal (am fĭb'ə loj'ĭ kəl), adj. —am·phib'o·log'i·cal·ly, adv.

am·phib·o·lous (am fĭb'ə ləs), adj. Logic. ambiguous; equivocal; capable of misinterpretation. [< L amphibolus < Gk amphíbolos thrown on both sides ambiguous, equiv. to amphi- AMPHI- + -bol- (var. s. of bállein throw) + -os -OUS] am·phib·o·ly (am fĭb'ə lē), n., pl. -lies. amphibology. [< L amphibolia < Gk. See AMPHIBOLOUS, -Y³] am·phi·brach (am'fə brak'), n. Pros. a trisyllabic foot, the arrangement of the syllables of which is short, long, short, occasionally a meter, or line, composed, stressed, unstressed in accentual meter. Thus, together is an accentual amphibrach. [< L amphibrachus (us) < Gk amphíbrachys short before and after long; amphi- AMPHI- + brachýs short] —am'phi·brach'ic, adj.

am·phi·car·pous (am'fə kär'pəs), adj. Bot. producing two kinds of fruit that differ either in form or in time of ripening. Also, am'phi·car'pic. [AMPHI- + -CARP + -OUS] am·phi·chro·ic (am'fə krō'ĭk), adj. Chem. giving either of two colors, one with acids and one with alkalis. Also, am·phi·chro·mat·ic (am'fĭ krō mat'ĭk, -krə-). [AMPHI- + -CHROIC] am·phi·coe·lous (am'fĭ sē'ləs), adj. Anat., Zool. concave on both sides, as the bodies of the vertebrae of fishes. [< Gk amphikoílos hollow at both ends. See AMPHI-, -COELE, -OUS] as1 (unstressed əz), adv. 1. to such a degree or extent; similarly; equally: I didn't think the temperature was as high today as it was yesterday. 2. for example; for instance: Some flowers, as the rose, require special care. 3. (used correlatively with as preceding) to: the square as distinct from the rectangle; the church as separate from the state. 4. in the manner (directed, agreed, promised, etc.): She did it as promised. 5. when; while; during the time that: *See well*1 (def. 9). 6. as well as. See well1 (def. 10). —conj. 7. (used correlatively after an adjective or adverb prec. by an adverbial phrase, the adverbial as, or another as) to the degree or extent that: He worked as hard, came out the same way as it did before. You are as good as you think you are. 8. (without antecedent) in the degree, manner, or case that: She'd as gold. I'll do it as you do. 9. at the same time that; while; when: as you look away. 10. since; because: As you are leaving last, please turn out the lights. 11. though: Attainable as it may be, we still proceed. 12. Informal. (in independent clauses) that: I don't know as I do. 13. Brit. Dial. than. 14. as . . . as, similar or equal to: as rich as Croesus. 15. as for, with reference to; concerning: As for staying away, I wouldn't think of it. 16. as good as, a. equivalent to; in effect; practically; as good as new. b. true to; characteristic of: as good as his word. c. such as it would be if: It was as if the world had come to an end. 18. as is, Informal. in whatever condition something happens to be: We bought the table as is. 19. as it were, in a way; so to speak: He became, as it were, a ruler without a country. 20. as long as, provided that; since: As long as you feel that way about it, we'll forget it. 21. as regards, with regard or reference to; concerning: As regards the expense involved, it is of no concern to him. 22. as such, a. as being what is indicated; in that capacity: The officer of the day, as such, is entitled to respect. b. in itself or in themselves: The position, as such, does not appeal to him, but the salary is a lure. 23. as yet, up to the present time; until now: As yet, no man has set foot on Mars. —pron. 24. (used relatively) that; who; which (usually prec. by such or the same): I have the same trouble as you have. 25. a fact that: She had her way, as is usually the case. 26. Archaic. that which; the thing that. 27. Archaic. who; which; that. 28. in the role, function, or status of: to act as chairman. [ME as, als, alse, also < OE alswā, ealswā ALL so (see ALSO), quite so, quite as, as] —Syn. 10. See because.

—Usage. As is usually considered less desirable than SINCE or BECAUSE because it seems weaker and less explicit: Because (not As) the train was late, we missed the parade.

Although educated usage now accepts as . . . as in both positive and negative comparisons, formerly it was used to restrict as . . . as to positive comparisons and so . . . as to negative comparisons: He is as fat as I am. She is not so young as her sister.

As TO is generally less acceptable than ABOUT, OF, ON, OR UPON: They argued about (not as to) the price. When followed by whether, it is redundant to use as TO: I will modify him whether or not as to price. There is no objection to as TO at the beginning of a sentence when it introduces an element that would otherwise have less emphasis: As to his salary, there is no room for improvement.

a·thirst (ə thûrst′), adj. 1. having a keen desire; eager (often fol. by for): She has long been athirst for European travel. 2. thirsty. [ME athurst, ofthurst, OE ofthyrst, ptp. of ofthyrstan. See A-5, THIRST] ath·lete (ath′lēt), n. 1. one trained to compete in contests involving physical agility, stamina, or strength; a trained competitor in a sport, exercise, or game requiring physical skill. 2. Brit. traditionally, one trained to excel competing in track-and-field events. [< L athlēt(a) < Gk athlētḗs), equiv. to áthlē- (var. s. of áthlein to contend for a prize, deriv. of áthlos a contest) + -tēs -TE]

ath·let·ic (ath let′ik), adj. 1. physically active and strong: an athletic child. 2. of, like, or befitting an athlete. 3. of or pertaining to sports involving the use of physical skills or capabilities, as strength, agility, or stamina: athletic sports; athletic training. 4. Psychol. (of a person) having a sturdy build or well-proportioned body structure. Cf. asthenic (def. 2), pyknic (def. 1). [< L athlēticus(us) < Gk athlētikós. See ATHLETE, -IC] —ath·let′i·cal·ly, adv. —ath·let·i·cism (ath let′ə siz′əm), n.

at-home (at hōm′), n. a reception of visitors at certain hours during which a host or hostess has announced he or she will be home. Also, at home'.

ath·o·nite (ath′ə nīt′), adj. of or relating to Mount Athos. [< L Athōn (var. of Athō, Athōs < Gk Áthōs ATHOS) + -ITE1]

Ath·os (ath′os, -ōs; Gk. ä′thōs), n. Mount, the easternmost of three prongs of the peninsula of Chalcidice, in NE Greece: site of an independent republic constituted of 20 monasteries. 2687 (1961). 131 sq. mi., ab. 42 mi. long. 2. a headland on this peninsula. 6350 ft. long.

a·thrill (ə thril′), adj. affected with a sudden wave of keen emotion or excitement; tingling (usually used predicatively): After reading the book, I found himself athrill with a sense of discovery. [A-5 + THRILL] ath·ro·cyte (ath′rə sīt′), n. Biol. a cell that ingests foreign particles and retains them in suspension in the cytoplasm. [< Gk (h)athróos) gathered together + -CYTE] —ath′ro·cy·to′sis, n.

a·thwart (ə thwôrt′), adv. 1. from side to side; crosswise, or perversely; awry; wrongly. 3. Naut. a. at right angles to the line of the ship's keel. b. broadside to the wind because of equal and opposite pressures of wind and tide: a ship riding athwart. —prep. 4. from side to side across. 5. in opposition to; contrary to. 6. Naut. across the direction or course of. [A-1 + THWART] a·thwart-ships (ə thwôrt′ships′), adv. Naut. from one side of a ship to the other. [ATHWART + SHIP + -S1]

a·tilt (ə tilt′), adj., adv. 1. a tilt or inclination; tilted: Hold the bottle slightly atilt. 2. in a tilting encounter. [A-1 + TILT1]

a·tin·gle (ə ting′gəl), adj. tingling; stimulated. [A-1 + TINGLE]

-ation, a combination of -ate1 and -ion, used to form nouns from stems in *-ate*1 (separation); on this model, used independently to form nouns from stems of other origin: flirtation. [< L -ātiōn- (s. of -ātiō), equiv. to -āt(us) -ATE1 + -iōn- -ION; identical with G -ation, F -ation, etc.]

a·tip·toe (ə tip′tō′), adv., adj. 1. standing or walking on tiptoe (usually used predicatively). 2. eagerly expectant; as anticipating a desired event or arrival: waiting atiptoe for the mail. 3. moving with caution or stealth, as avoiding calling attention to one's presence: She walked atiptoe through the sleeping house. [A-1 + TIPTOE]

-ative, a combination of -ate1 and -ive, used to form adjectives from stems in -ate1 (regulative); on this model, used independently to form adjectives from stems of other origin: explanative. [< L -ātīv(us), equiv. to -āt(us) -ATE1 + -īvus -IVE]

At'ka mack'erel (at′kə), an edible fish, Pleurogrammus monopterygius, found in the North Pacific, marked with vertical black bars. [named after Atka an island in SW Alaska near the fishing grounds]

At·kins (at′kinz), n., pl. -kins. See Tommy Atkins.

At·kin·son (at′kin sən), n. Henry Richard Sherbert, 1831–92, New Zealand statesman, born in England: prime minister 1876–77, 1883–84, 1887–91. 2. (Justin) Brooks, born 1894, U.S. drama critic, journalist, and author.

at·lan·ta (at lan′tə), n. 1. a city in and the capital of Georgia, in the N part. 487,455 (1960). 2. a town in NE Texas. 4076 (1960). 3. a girl's given name, form of Atalanta.

at·lan·tad (at lan′tad), adv. Anat. toward the atlas. [< NL atlant- (s. of atlas; see ATLAS) + -ad (< L ad toward)] at·lan·tal (at lan′tl), adj. Anat. of or pertaining to the atlas. [< NL atlant- (see ATLANTAD) + -AL1]

At·lan·te·an (at′lan tē′ən, -lən-), adj. 1. pertaining to the demigod Atlas. 2. having the strength of Atlas: He was a Hercules, an Atlantean power. 3. of or pertaining to Atlantis. [< L Atlantē(us), (< Gk Atlánteios of ATLAS, equiv. to Atlant-, s. of Átlās, + -eios adj. suffix) + -AN] at·lan·tes (at lan′tēz), n. pl. of atlas (def. 9).

At·lan·tic (at lan′tik), adj. 1. of or pertaining to the Atlantic Ocean. 2. of or pertaining to the Titan Atlas. —n. 3. a town in SW Iowa, 6890 (1960). 4. See Atlantic Ocean. [< L Atlanticus (mare) the Atlantic (ocean), sea, or < Gk Atlantikós of (Mount) ATLAS, equiv. to Atlant- (s. of Átlās) + -ikos -IC] Atlan'tic Char'ter, the joint declaration of President Roosevelt and Prime Minister Churchill (August 14, 1941) at their conference at sea, setting forth the peace aims of their governments for the period following World War II. The declaration was later endorsed by a number of countries.

Atlan'tic Cit'y, a city in SE New Jersey: seashore resort. 59,544 (1960).

Atlan'tic croak'er. See under croaker (def. 2).

Atlan'tic Intracoast'al Wa'terway. See under Intracoastal Waterway.

Atlan'tic O'cean, an ocean bounded by North America and South America in the Western Hemisphere and by Europe and Africa in the Eastern Hemisphere, ab. 31,530,000 sq. mi., with connecting seas ab. 41,000,000 sq. mi.; greatest known depth, 30,246 ft.

Atlan'tic Pact'. See North Atlantic Pact.

Atlan'tic Pro'vinces, the Canadian provinces bordering the Atlantic Ocean, comprising New Brunswick, Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, and Prince Edward Island.

Atlan'tic puf'fin. See under puffin.

At·lan·tis (at lan′tis), n. a mythical island, first mentioned by Plato, said to have existed in the Atlantic Ocean west of Gibraltar and to have sunk finally into the sea.

At·las (at′ləs), n., pl. at·las·es for 1–3, 5, 7, at·lan·tes (at lan′tēz) for 9. 1. a bound collection of maps. 2. a bound volume of charts, plates, or tables illustrating any subject. 3. Anat. the first cervical vertebra, which supports the head. 4. (cap.) Class. Myth. a Titan, son of Iapetus and brother of Prometheus and Epimetheus, condemned to support the sky on his shoulders: identified by the ancients with the Atlas Mountains. 5. a heavy cloth used to support a heavy burden; a mainstay. 6. a size of drawing or writing paper, 26 × 34 or 33 inches. 7. (cap.) a large, liquid-propelled intercontinental ballistic missile over 80 feet long and 10 feet in diameter, powered by two booster engines that fire in unison and by one sustainer engine that fires after the first quadrant of the face of the moon: about 55 miles in diameter. 9. Also called telamon. Archit. a figure of a man used as a column. [< L < Gk; akin to tlênai to suffer, endure, bear]

At'las ce'dar, a tree, Cedrus atlantica, of northern Africa, having rigid, bluish-green leaves and light-brown cones.

At'las Moun'tains, a mountain range in NW Africa, extending through Morocco, Algeria, and Tunisia. Highest peak, Mt. Tizi, 14,764 ft.

At·li (ät′lē), n. Scand. Legend. Attila, king of the Huns: represented in the Volsunga Saga as the brother of Brynhild and the second husband of Gudrun, whose brothers he kills in order to get the Nibelung treasure. With his sons, he is killed by Gudrun. Cf. Etzel.

at·ma (ät′mə), n. (in Hindu philosophy) atmosphere. 2. atmospheric.

at. m. See atomic mass.

at·man (ät′mən), n. Hinduism. 1. the breath. 2. the principle of life. 3. the individual self, known after enlightenment to be identical with Brahman. 4. (cap.) the World Soul, from which all individual souls derive, and to which they return as the supreme goal of existence. Also, at·ma (ät′mə). [< Skt ātman breath; akin to ME athem, OS ōthmōdi, etc.]

atmo-, a learned borrowing from Greek meaning "air," used in the formation of compound words: atmosphere. [< Gk atmó(s) vapor, smoke; c. Skt átman breath, soul, OE ǣthm breath] at·mol·y·sis (at mol′i sis), n., pl. -ses (-sēz′). a process for separating gases or vapors of different molecular weights by transmission through a porous substance. [ATMO- + -LYSIS] at·mom·e·ter (at mom′i tər), n. an instrument for measuring the rate at which water evaporates. Also called at·mi·dom·e·ter (at′mi dom′i tər), evaporation gauge, evaporimeter, evaporometer. [ATMO- + -METER] at·mom·e·try (at mom′i trē), n. the science of measuring the rate at which water evaporates. [ATMO- + -METRY] at·mo·phile (at′mə fīl′), Geol. —adj. 1. (of a chemical element in the earth) having an affinity for the atmosphere, as neon, helium, etc. —n. 2. an atmophile element. [ATMO(SPHERE) + -PHILE]

At·more (at′môr, -mōr), n. a town in SW Alabama. 8173 (1960).

At'mos clock' (at′məs), a self-winding clock utilizing variations of temperature acting on a mercury thermometer to create an imbalance within the winding drum.

at·mos·phere (at′məs fēr′), n. 1. the gaseous envelope surrounding the earth; air. 2. this medium as in a given place. 3. Astron. the gaseous envelope surrounding a heavenly body. 4. Chem. any gaseous envelope or medium. 5. a conventional unit of pressure, the normal pressure of the air at sea level, about 14.7 pounds per square inch. Abbr.: atm. 6. a pervading influence; environment: an atmosphere of peace. 7. the dominant mood or emotional tone of a piece of art, as of a play or novel. 8. a distinctive quality, as of a place; character: The old part of town has lots of atmosphere. [< NL atmosphaer(a). See ATMO-, -SPHERE] —at·mos′phere·less, adj.

at·mos·pher·ic (at′məs fer′ik), adj. 1. pertaining to, existing in, or consisting of the atmosphere: atmospheric vapors. 2. caused, produced, or operated on by the atmosphere: atmospheric erosion. 3. suggestive or evocative of the atmosphere; having muted tones and softened or indistinct outlines; hazy: atmospheric effects. 4. having or producing an emotional atmosphere: atmospheric quality; atmospheric music. Also, at·mos′pher·i·cal. [ATMOSPHERE + -IC] —at′mos·pher′i·cal·ly, adv.

at'mospher'ic boun'dary lay'er. See surface boundary layer.

at'mospher'ic brak'ing, Rocketry. a technique of reentry in which the vehicle maneuvers itself in the upper atmosphere so as to lose velocity by utilizing drag, without overheating.

atmospher'ic electric'ity, static electricity produced by charged particles in the atmosphere.

atmospher'ic engine, a piston engine of single-acting engine in which the power stroke is provided by atmospheric pressure acting upon a piston in an exhausted cylinder.

at'mospher'ic pres'sure, Meteorol. 1. the pressure exerted by the earth's atmosphere at any given point, being the product of the mass of the atmospheric column of the unit area above the given point and of the gravitational acceleration at the given point. 2. a value of standard or normal atmospheric pressure, equivalent to the pressure exerted by a column of mercury 760 millimeters (29.12 inches) high, or 1013.2 millibars. Also called barometric pressure. Cf. sea-level pressure.

at·mos·pher·ics (at′məs fer′iks), n. (construed as pl.) Radio. 1. noise caused in a radio receiver by natural electromagnetic disturbances in the atmosphere. 2. natural phenomena causing such interference. Also called spherics. [see ATMOSPHERIC, -ICS] at. no. See atomic number.

A·to·ka (ə tō′kə), n. a town in SE Oklahoma. 2877 (1960).

at·oll (at′ôl, -ol, -ōl, ə tôl′, ə tol′, ə tōl′), n. a ring-shaped coral reef or a string of closely spaced small coral islands, enclosing or nearly enclosing a shallow lagoon. [< atolon, Malayalam name of the Maldive Islands] at·om (at′əm), n. 1. Physics. the smallest component of an element having all the properties of the element, consisting of an aggregate of protons, neutrons, and electrons such that the number of protons determines the element. 2. a hypothetical particle of matter so minute as to admit of no division. 3. anything extremely small; a minute quantity. [< L atomus < Gk átomos, n. use of átomos undivided, equiv. to a- A-6 + tomós divided, verbid of témnein to cut]

a·tom·ic (ə tom′ik), adj. 1. of, pertaining to, resulting from, or using atomic energy or atomic bombs: an atomic explosion. 2. propelled or driven by atomic energy: an atomic submarine. 3. Chem. existing as free, uncombined atoms. 4. extremely minute. Also, a·tom′i·cal. [ATOM + -IC] —a·tom′i·cal·ly, adv.

atom'ic age', the period in history initiated by the first use of the atomic bomb and characterized by atomic energy as a military, political, and industrial factor.

atom'ic bomb', a bomb whose explosive force is derived from nuclear fission of atoms of fissionable material with the consequent conversion of part of their mass into energy. In a bomb whose explosive force comes from a chain reaction based on nuclear fission in U-235 or in plutonium. It was first used militarily on Hiroshima, Japan, August 6, 1945. The explosion of such a bomb is extremely violent and is accompanied by a great heat, intense light, and strong gamma-ray radiation. Also, atom bomb. Also called A-bomb, fission bomb.

atom'ic cock'tail, Slang. an oral dose of a radioactive substance used in the treatment or diagnosis of cancer.

atom'ic en'ergy, energy released by rearrangements of atomic nuclei, as in nuclear fission or fusion. Also called nuclear energy.

Atom'ic En'ergy Commis'sion, U.S. Govt. the board, consisting of five members, charged with instituting and administering all federal programs dealing with nonmilitary uses of atomic energy. Abbr.: AEC at·o·mic·i·ty (at'ə mis'i tē), n. Chem. 1. the number of atoms in the molecule of a gas. 2. valence. [ATOMIC + -ITY] atom'ic mass', Chem. the mass of an isotope of an element measured in units formerly based on the weight of one hydrogen atom (now on one sixteenth of the weight of one oxygen atom, but after 1961 based on $^1/_{12}$ the weight of the carbon-12 atom. Abbr.: at. m. atom'ic mass' u'nit, Physics. 1. a unit of mass, equal to $^1/_{12}$ the mass of a carbon (isotope 12) atom and used to express the mass of atomic and subatomic particles. 2. (formerly) a unit of mass, equal to $^1/_{16}$ the mass of an oxygen atom, now replaced by amu atom'ic num'ber, the number of positive charges or protons in the nucleus of an atom of a given element, and therefore also the number of electrons normally surrounding the atom. Symbol: Z

atom'ic pow'er, power derived from atomic energy.

a·tom·ics (ə tom'iks), n. (construed as sing.) Informal. the branch of physics that deals with atoms, esp. atomic energy. [see ATOMIC, -ICS] atom'ic struc'ture, Physics. the structure of an atom, theoretically consisting of a positively charged nucleus surrounded by negatively charged electrons revolving in orbits at varying distances from the nucleus, the constitution of the nucleus and the arrangement of the electrons differing with various chemical elements.

atom'ic the'ory, 1. Physics, Chem. any of several theories describing the structure, behavior, and other properties of the atom and its component parts. 2. Philos. atomism (def. 2).

atom'ic vol'ume, Chem. the atomic weight of an element divided by its density. Abbr.: at. vol.

atom'ic war'fare, warfare employing nuclear weapons.

atom'ic weight', Chem. the average weight of an atom of an element, usually as a ratio to the weight of one hydrogen atom taken as a unit or on $^1/_{16}$ the weight of an oxygen atom, but after 1961 based on $^1/_{12}$ the weight of the carbon-12 atom. Abbr.: at. wt.

at·om·ize (at'ə mīz'), v.t., -ized, -iz·ing. Chiefly Brit. atomize. —at'om·i·sa'tion, n.

at·om·ism (at'ə miz'əm), n. 1. Also called atomic theory. Philos. the theory that minute, discrete, finite, and indivisible elements are the basic constituents of all matter. 2. Psychol. a method or theory that reduces all psychological phenomena to simple elements. [ATOM + -ISM] —at·om·is'tic, adj. —at·om·is'ti·cal·ly, adv.

at·om·ize (at'ə mīz'), v.t., -ized, -iz·ing. 1. to reduce to atoms. 2. to reduce to fine particles or spray. 3. to destroy (a target) by exploding an atomic or nuclear bomb. Also, esp. Brit., atomise. [ATOM + -IZE] —at'om·i·za'tion, n.

at·om·iz·er (at'ə mī'zər), n. an apparatus for reducing liquids to a fine spray, as for medicinal application. [ATOMIZE + -ER1]

at·o·my1 (at'ə mē), n., pl. -mies. Archaic. 1. an atom; mote. 2. a person of extreme pygmy. [< L atomi, pl. of atomus ATOM used as sing.]

at·o·my2 (at'ə mē), n., pl. -mies. Obs. a skeleton. [var. of ANATOMY (taken as an atomy)]

A·ton (ä'tən) Egyptian Religion. a solar deity declared by Amenhotep IV to be the only god, represented as a solar disk with rays ending in human hands. Also, Aten.

a·tone (ə tōn'), v.i., a·toned, a·ton·ing. —v.t. 1. to make amends or reparation, as for an offense or a crime, or for an offender (usually fol. by for): to atone for one's sins. 2. to make up, as for errors or deficiencies (usually fol. by for): to atone for one's failings. 3. Obs. to become reconciled; agree. —v.t. 4. to make amends for; expiate. 5. Obs. to bring into unity, harmony, concord, etc. [back formation from ATONEMENT] —a·ton'a·ble, a·tone'a·ble, adj. —a·ton'er, n. —a·ton'ing·ly, adv.

a·tone·ment (ə tōn'mənt), n. 1. satisfaction or reparation for wrong or injury; amends. 2. (sometimes cap.) Theol. the doctrine concerning the reconciliation of God and man, esp. as accomplished through the life, suffering, and death of Christ. 3. Christian Science. the state of union with God in which man exemplifies the attributes of God. 4. Archaic. reconciliation; agreement. [from phrase at onement in unity (AT1 + ME onement, now obs.); see ONE, -MENT] a·ton·ic (ə ton'ik, ā ton'-), adj. 1. Phonet. a. unaccented. b. Obs. voiceless. 2. Pathol. characterized by atony. —n. 3. Gram. an unaccented word, syllable, or sound. [< medical L atonic(us), equiv. to aton(ia) ATONY + -icus -IC. See A-6, TONIC] at·o·nic·i·ty (at'ō nis'i tē, ā'tō nis'-), n. Pathol. lack of tone; atony. [ATONIC + -ITY] at·o·ny (at'ə nē), n. 1. Pathol. lack of tone or energy; muscular weakness. esp. in a contractile organ. 2. Phonet. lack of stress accent. Also, a·to·ni·a (ə tō'nē ə, ā tō'-). [< medical L atonia < Gk: lack, of atonoi unaccented, languid, lit., toneless. See A-6, TONE] a·top (ə top'), adj., adv. 1. on or at the top. —prep. 2. on the top of: atop the flagpole. [A-1 + TOP1]

-ator, a combinative suffix used to form agent nouns from stems in -ate1 (separator); on this model, used independently to form agent nouns from stems of other origin: significator. Cf. -atrix. [< L, equiv. to -āt(us) -ATE1 + -or -OR2]

-atory, a combination of -ate1 and -ory, used to form nouns or adjectives from stems in -ate1 (oratory; migratory); on this model, used independently to form nouns or adjectives from stems of other origin: reformatory; explanatory. [< L -ātōri(us), equiv. to -ātor- (s. of -ātor -ATOR) + -ius adj. suffix]

ATP, Biochem. an ester of adenosine and triphosphoric acid, $C_{10}H_{16}N_5O_{13}P_3S_2O_3$, formed esp. aerobically by the reaction of ADP and inorganic triphosphate during oxidation, or by the interaction of ADP and phosphocreatine or certain other substrates, and serving as a source of energy for physiological reactions, esp. muscle contraction. Also called adenosine triphosphate, adenosinetriphosphoric acid, adenylpyrophosphate, adenylpyrophosphoric acid.

at·ra·bil·ious (a'trə bil'yəs), adj. 1. sad; gloomy; melancholy; morbid. 2. irritable; bad-tempered; spiteful. Also, at'ra·bil'iar. [< L ātra bīl(is) black bile + -OUS]

A·tra·ha·sis (ä'trə hä'sis), n. a legendary Akkadian sage who built a boat in which he and his family, servants, and chattels escaped the Deluge. Cf. Ziusudra.

A·trax (ā'traks), n. Class. Myth. a son of Peneus.

a·trem·ble (ə trem'bəl), adv. in a trembling state. [A-1 + TREMBLE] a·tre·sia (ə trē'zhə, -zhē ə, -zē ə, -shə, -sē ə), n. Med. the congenital absence, or the pathological closure, of an opening, passage, or cavity. [< NL < Gk a- A-6 + trḗs(is) perforation + -ia -IA] —a·tre·sic (ə trē'zik, -shik, -sik), adj.

A·tri (ä'trē), n. Class. Myth. the father of Pisthenes, Agamemnon, Menelaus, and Anaxibia upon whose house Thyestes pronounced a curse.

a·trich·i·a (ā trik'ē ə, ə trik'-), n. Med. congenital absence of hair. —a·tri·chos·is (a'trə kō'sis), [< NL; see A-6, TRICH-, -IA]

A·tri·dae (a tri'dē), n. Class. Myth. a patronymic for Agamemnon and Menelaus, the sons of Atreus. —A·tri'dan, adj.

a·tri·o·ven·tric·u·lar (ā'trē ō ven trik'yə lər), adj. Anat. of or pertaining to the atria and ventricles of the heart. —n. 2. Anat. short form of atrium heart chamber; see ATRIUM (def. 2), VENTRICULAR]

a·trip (ə trip'), adj., Naut. 1. aweigh. 2. (of a sail) in position and ready for trimming. 3. (of a yard) hoisted and ready to be fastened in position. 4. (of an upper topsail) hoisted and ready for lowering. [A-1 + TRIP] a·tri·um (ā'trē əm), n., pl. a·tri·a (ā'trē ə). 1. Archit. a. Also called cavaedium. the main or central room of an ancient Roman house, open to the sky at the center and usually having a compluvium. b. a court of this type. c. a courtyard, flanked or surrounded by porticoes, in front of an early or medieval Christian church. 2. Anat. either of the two upper chambers of the heart that receive blood from the veins and in turn force it into the ventricles. See diag. under heart. [< L (anatomical sense in NL)] —a'tri·al, adj.
