Reckon not your Chickens before they are hatched.

This Proverb took its Rise from the Vanity of anticipating our Enjoyments before we come at them; we are always brooding in our Desire, and hatching in our Minds what we would have to come to pass, before Things are ripe for it; and this Hastiness, oftentimes makes us overshoot our Reason, and forfeit our Prudence, in reckoning that our own, that is not so much as in Being. But this Proverb deports us from speaking confidently of our having, or as good as having Things in our Power or Possession, which are far off still, only in Expectancy, and depend wholly upon Providence; and not as the Latins say, Antevictoriam conere triumphum: And the Greeks, Πρό τῆ φωνῆς ἀρχαίαν του λοπαδα.

[This Robin Hood was a famous Robber, and storied to be an expert Archer in the Time of Richard the First, about the Year 1200; his principal Haunt was about Sherwood Forest in Nottinghamshire.] This Proverb is applicable to all ignorant Pretenders, and Braggadocio's whatsoever, either in Knowledge or Business. It intimates, that Bragging and Boasting are common Imperinences in Conversation, equally among Travellers and Soldiers, as well as Poets and Painters, who never out-did Nature yet, but only in the Lye. But they who pretend themselves to be what they are not, will always be prating of what they do not know. So, Non omnes qui Citbaram tenent, Citbarædæ sunt, say the Latins; Πολλοὶ μὲν ναυδουλοῦσι, παυροὶ δὲ τε βανχοὶ, the Greeks; and Molli par an di Orlando, cbi non videro, mai suo brando, the Italians.

Robin Hood's Penny worth.

This Proverb is usually applied to such as having gotten any Thing dishonestly, sell it at a Price much below the Value, according to the Proverb, Lightly come, lightly go; and Robin Hood is alluded to, because, being an expert Archer, and so coming easily by it, he could afford to sell Venison as cheap as Neck-Beef; according to the Latins, Aurea pro Æreis, and the Greeks, χρυσα χαλκίον. But others, on the contrary, apply it to such as would buy lumping Pennyworths, still alluding to Robin, but upon another Consideration, viz. his being a Robber; who, though, as Cambden calls him, Prædonem mitissimum, the most gentle and generous of Thieves, when Cash ran low, would have what he wanted at his own Rate, which his Chapmen were forced to take, or else he would have it for nothing.

This Proverb is usually applied to such Persons who, for Want of Penetration into the Consequences of Things, and of the Qualification of knowing Men, are often prevailed on, by the Artifices of designing Persons, to do those Things, which will in the Consequence sensibly affect themselves, while they design them only for others, deeming themselves secure: As also such revengeful Spirits, who prosecute their private Resentments against others with such an unwary Precipitateness, that the heaviest Part of the Punishment frequently falls to their Share. 'Tis too late to spare, when all is spent.

Some Persons are so much for Enjoyment, in the Present Tense, that they cannot think of being thrifty, but in futuro; and by that Means, often from an opulent Fortune, precipitate themselves into a Condition of Indigence. To such this Proverb is a good Admonition to Frugality and Providence, and not by Excess and Luxury to out-run the Constable; and not to forget Parsimony, while we have something left to spare. It likewise holds good in a Thriftiness of our Time, not to be continually procrastinating and putting off necessary Duties, till we have no Time left us to perform them in. Scro in fundo parsimonia, says Seneca: Δεινὸν δὲ ἐν ποδῶν φεῖδω, says Hesiod.

This Proverb is not only levelled at a careless Groom, but has a more extended Aim; and intimates, that 'tis a mighty Imprudence to neglect the weighing of all the Circumstances of an Action, both as to Time and Place, before we venture upon doing what perhaps we may repent of in the Event, to our great Shame and Damage. This is generally the Wisdom of the World, when the Thing is over, we are as wise as Experience can make us. Almost all the Miscarriages of Mankind are for want of Thinking: After-Wit is commonly dear bought, and we pay for it either with Misfortune, Anxiety, or Sorrow; for there is no unthinking a Misfortune, after it has befallen us for want of Precaution and Foresight; an After-thought may inance our Trouble, but can't relieve our Distress; it may prevent like Inconvenience for the future, but cannot make any Satisfaction for what is past. Serrar la Stalla quando s'han perduti buovi, say the Italians. Il est temps de fermer l'estable quand les Chevaux en sont allez, the French. Quando quidem accepto claudenda est janua damns, the Latins. One Man had better steal a Horse, than another look over the Hedge.

This Proverb does not justify stealing at all; it means very honestly, and is only a smart Turn upon all partial Proceedings, as well in private Judgments as publick Trials. It intimates, that when great Rogues are in Authority, and have the Laws against Oppression and Robbery in their own Hands; little Thieves only go to pot for it; and that inferior Pirates are punished with Death at the Gallows, while great Offenders live safe and secure under the Helm of Government.

This Proverb is for doing all People justice alike, from the highest to the lowest, and in all Cases whatsoever, either of Desert or Demerit. We live indeed in a thieving, cheating, and plundering Age; Cozening is become a topping Trade, only we have got a genteeler Way of stealing now than only to take a Man's Horse from under him on the Highway, and a little loose Money out of his Pocket; our Rapparees are Men of better Breeding and Fashion, and scorn to play at such small Game; they sweep away a noble Estate with one slight Brush, and bid both the Gallows and Horse-Pond defiance; and the Mob is not always just in this Point, for one Pick-pocket deserves a Horse-pond as well as another, without any regard to Quality or fine Cloaths. But, Dat veniam Corvis, vexat Censura Columbas, say the Latins.

We treats a Goose, and gives the Subjects in Aims.

This Proverb points at such Persons, who by Acts of Injustice, Oppression, and Fraud, amass to themselves large Estates, and think to atone for their Rapine by doing some charitable Acts while they are alive; or when they can no longer possess them, by leaving their Lands in Mortmain to pious and charitable Uses, as building and endowing Hospitals, Alms-houses, and other Acts of Beneficence (commendable indeed, when done from a truly Christian Charity) but they who think, by thus paying Paul, to atone for their robbing Peter, entertain an Opinion highly disparaging the Justice of the Almighty. Parallel to this is the Hebrew Adage, לבישא וטחלקא בהורדין נפא.

Well begun is half ended.

All the Actions and Enterprises of Mankind labour under the Reflection of this quaint moral Sentence, whether they be prudent or imprudent in the Undertaking, and good or bad in the Accomplishment. It intimates, that Persons should be very deliberate and advised in the Beginning of an Undertaking; for that to begin well is the only Way to quicken and dispatch the End, let it be what it will. It intimates, that there is a great deal of Difficulty in beginning well, and that a false Step at first Start is hardly to be recovered afterwards: That the Work does not cost half so much Trouble as the Design of it; that it is an easy Matter to make way when the Ice is broke. It reflects upon false Foundations and foolish Projects, and it holds good from Morality and worldly Affairs to Religion, That a good Beginning is a fair Step to a good Ending. Dimidium facti, qui bene cepit, habet, say the Latins; and ἀρχὴ ἡμισυ πάντος. Arist.

All is well that ends well.

It is plain Matter of Fact, that the End crowns all Things, and that every Thing is not to be judged amiss that may appear so for the present. A worldly Misfortune, if it quickens our Diligence and Industry; a severe Fit of Sickness, if it promotes our Piety, and makes us amend our Lives, is well; though for the present no Affliction seems joyous, but grievous: For a happy Death is the never-failing Portion of a well spent Life, which always ends in eternal Bliss and Glory. The best way of judging of Things beyond Mistake, is by the Issue or Event of them. Finis coronat Opus, say the Latins: Ende wohl, alles wohl, say the Germans; and ἀλευονιδας ἡμερα? ἀγει, the Greeks.

 Gentleman.

Tho' this Proverb contradicts their Notions, who think such Persons only the best Gentlemen, who have the largest Estates, and it being the Custom of England for the eldest Brother to go away with the whole Patrimony, it may to them seem a Paradox: but as it is grounded on a different Notion, so there have been, and are plentiful Instances to confirm the Truth of it; for while the elder Brother of a House, depending upon his Estate, is either indulged by Parents, or gives up himself to an indolent Humour, so that his Soul in his Body, like a Sword in the Scabbard, rusts for want of Use, thinking it sufficient, if he have only the Accomplishments of a Fox Hunter, or a Country Justice; the younger Brother being put to his Shifts, having no Inheritance to depend upon, by plying to his Studies hard at home, and accomplishing himself by Travels abroad, oftentimes, either by Arts or Arms, raises himself to a conspicuous Pitch of Honour, and so becomes much the better Gentleman; for 'tis Manners make the Man, which was the usual Motto of William of Wickman, Bishop of Winchester, Founder of the College there, and New-College at Oxford, inscribed on the Places of his Founding.

who lived about 400 Years before our Savior, who brought Painting, but then in its Infancy, to a great Perfection. He growing very rich, would at last sell none of his Works, but gave them away, saying, He did not know how to set a Price upon them equal to their Value. He painted a Bunch of Grapes so to the Life, that the Birds came and pecked them; and afterwards having painted a Boy holding a Bunch of Grapes, and the Birds also flew to and pecked, he was angry, and ingeniously confessed that his Work was not complete, in that if he had drawn the Boy as well as he had done the Grapes, the Birds would have been afraid of him. And having disputed with Parrhasius, which was the best Painter, Parrhasius painted a Curtain so ingeniously, that Zeuxis taking it for a real one which hid the Antagonist's Work, desired it might be drawn, that he might see what he had done; but coming to know his Mistake, he acknowledged he was outdone, since himself had deceived none but Birds, but Parrhasius had deceived even the Master of the Art itself.

The Sun goes about this Circle once every Year, and the Moon once a Month, and in the Middle of it is the Ecliptick Line, from which the Sun never departs; but the Moon and Planets wander up and down for the Space of eight Degrees, and sometimes more on both.

The Frigid or Frozen ZONES [so called of Frigidus, L. i. e. exceeding cold; because, being extremely remote from the Sun's Course in the Ecliptick, they partake of but little of its Heat] are those comprehended between the Pole and the Polar Circle; therefore one must be towards the North, and the other towards the South: The Frozen or Frigid Zone towards the North, lying between the North Polar Circle and the North Pole, contains Part of Iceland and Norway, Lapland, Finnmark, Samoseda, Nova-Zembla, Greenland, and some other Parts of North America; the Frigid Zone towards the South, lying between the South Polar Circle and the South Pole, is not yet known, whether it be Land or Water.

The Temperate ZONES owe their Name and Advantage to their Situation between the Torrid and the two Frigid Zones; the one on the North-side of the Equator, between the Arctick Polar Circle, and the Tropick of Cancer, in which we live, is called the Northern; and the other between the Antarctick Polar Circle, and the Tropick of Capricorn, is called the Southern; each of them taking up 42 Degrees, or about 2580 Miles in Breadth.

The torrid ZONE [so called of Torridus, L. i. e. parching or burning; because under the Sun's Road, the Beams fall directly on it, and continually cause so excessive an Heat, that the Ancients thought it uninhabitable] is bounded by the Tropicks of Cancer and Capricorn, lies in the Middle of the two Temperate Zones, and is divided by the Equator into two equal Parts, the one Northern, and the other Southern; its Breadth being 47 Degrees, or about 2820 Miles.
