He is one of the most respected leaders in South America, and his birthday is also celebrated in Bolivia. Bolívar had helped liberate Bolivia from Spain and briefly served as its president. On this day in Venezuela, civil and military ceremonies take place in Bolívar's honor, and people share stories of the valor of this great South American hero with the younger generation. This is also the national holiday of Venezuela.

❁ COLUMBUS DAY

Observed by: General Public

Observed on: October 12

Venezuela instituted this holiday in 1921. This day commemorates the arrival of Christopher Columbus in South America on October 12, 1498. Beginning in the late decades of the 20th century, it came to be celebrated as Día de la Raza (“Day of the Race”) in most Latin American countries, rather than Columbus Day, because Columbus opened the door for European colonization that resulted in the enslavement and brutal killings of the indigenous people by the Europeans. In 2002 the Venezuelan government renamed the holiday as Día de la Resistencia Indígena (“Day of Indigenous Resistance”). In 2004 on Columbus Day, activists toppled the statue of Columbus in the capital city of Caracas to express their anger at him.

As Día de la Raza the holiday commemorates the rise of a new race of people—the Mestizos. The Spanish, who followed Columbus and entered South America, intermixed with the indigenous people of the continent and their offspring are known as Mestizo (people of mixed race).

Religious Holidays

❁ EPIPHANY

Observed by: Christians

Observed on: January 6

The Feast of Epiphany, also known as Three King's Day or La Paradura del Niño (“The Parade of Baby Jesus”), is a Christian feast that celebrates the arrival of the Magi (the Three Wise Men of ancient Persia—Caspar, Balthazar, and Melchior) in Bethlehem to see the infant Jesus, as well as the life of Jesus until his baptism in the Jordan River by John the Baptist.

On this day a lavish family feast is prepared with special food and beverages. The entire family prays in front of the portrait of the Infant Jesus and sings Christmas carols. Also gifts are exchanged among friends and family members.

See also Volume III: CHRISTIANITY; EPIPHANY

❁ CARNIVAL

Observed by: General Public

Observed on: Early February

Carnival celebrations start two weeks before the beginning of Lent, the 40-day period of fasting that precedes Easter. Carnival ends on Shrove Tuesday, a day before Ash Wednesday, the first day of Lent. The word shrove means “to shrive,” and in ancient times people were absolved of their sins by confessing them to a priest, who was also known as a shriver (absolver of sins).

Carnival is celebrated with great joy and enthusiasm throughout Venezuela. The festivities are marked by dances, colorful costumes, songs, bullfights, and pageants as well the staging of plays such as “La Quemada de Judas” (“The Burning of Judas”) at the end of which an effigy of Judas, the disciple of Jesus who betrayed him, is thrown on a pyre and burned to ashes.

The biggest Carnival celebration takes place in the region of El Callao, where people dress in colorful costumes and march to the tune of calypso music. During these festivities, people wear masks and costumes of cartoon characters and superheroes. However, many people stick to traditional attire, most notably that of the Madamas, costumes depicting women from Guadeloupe and Martinique, complete with traditional headscarves. Devil's costumes are also extremely popular, and many people are seen wearing red and black costumes with horns. Mediopinto devils are the most dangerous people since they paint themselves black and threaten to do the same to anyone who comes near them.

See also Volume III: CARNIVAL; CHRISTIANITY; LENT

❁ ST. JOSEPH'S DAY

Observed by: Roman Catholics

Observed on: March 19

On March 19 Roman Catholics observe the Feast of St. Joseph, the earthly father of Jesus and the patron saint of workers around the world. There is a separate feast of St. Joseph the Worker on May 1, although many feel that this later feast day was instituted in the 1950s to compete with socialist celebrations of Labor Day. On the Feast of St. Joseph, a wide variety of events take place in Venezuela, including bullfights, agricultural and handicrafts

Fun Fact

The word epiphany means “to reveal” or “to make known,” and the day is so named because it was the Magi who revealed Jesus to the world.

exhibitions, musical concerts, and traditional cultural events such as folk dances and music.

See also Volume III: CHRISTIANITY

❁ MAUNDY THURSDAY

Observed by: Roman Catholics

Observed on: Thursday before Easter

Maundy or Holy Thursday is an important Catholic celebration: It commemorates the day on which Jesus celebrated the Last Supper and washed the feet of all 12 Apostles. It falls on the Thursday before Easter. It is called Maundy Thursday, because the Latin word mandatum was the first word that was spoken by Jesus before he began to wash his disciples' feet. (Mandatum is a Latin word meaning "commandment.") Jesus said, "Mandatum novum do vobis," which means "a new commandment I give to you."

See also Volume III: CHRISTIANITY; EASTER; HOLY WEEK; LENT; MAUNDY THURSDAY

❁ GOOD FRIDAY

Observed by: Christians

Observed on: Friday day before Easter

Good Friday falls on the Friday before Easter and is the last Friday of Lent. It is observed in most parts of the world to remember the Crucifixion of Jesus. Most Venezuelans observe a fast from Ash Wednesday (first day of Lent) for 40 days up to Good Friday and a partial fast until Easter. Some fast only on Ash Wednesday and Good Friday. In

A man dressed as a devil dances while churchgoers observe him outside the church in San Francisco de Yare, about 28 miles south of Caracas, Thursday, June 19, 2003. This Roman Catholic holiday of Corpus Christi celebrates the transformation of the body and blood of Christ into the bread and wine, which the faithful receive at Communion. It is an event townspeople spend the entire year preparing for. The ritual here is followed by two days of drunken revelry. (AP Photo/Fernando Llano)

Venezuela huge processions are conducted, in which the lifeless body of Jesus is symbolically carried in a procession. People mourn over his Crucifixion, and special prayers are offered. The annual Good Friday procession from Iglesia de San Francisco in the capital city of Caracas attracts thousands of mourners every year as people express their sorrow by joining the procession.

See also Volume III: CHRISTIANITY; EASTER; GOOD FRIDAY; HOLY WEEK; LENT

❁ EASTER

Observed by: Christians

Observed on: First Sunday after Lent

Easter is a Christian feast that celebrates the belief that Jesus was resurrected from the dead three days following his Crucifixion. It is sometimes known as Resurrection Day. This is a day of utmost importance because the fundamental teaching of Christianity is that Jesus, through his death, freed all his believers from the penalty of sin. The holiday falls on the first Sunday after Lent and is celebrated by Christians the world over. They often buy new clothes for this special day. Catholics attend Mass and offer prayers. The word Easter is derived from the name of the Germanic mother goddess Eostre, revered by the Saxon people of northern Europe. In addition to the name of the holiday, Easter eggs and rabbits, once associated with fertility rituals, are now part of the activities.

Throughout Venezuela, Easter is celebrated by burning the effigy of Judas, who betrayed Jesus' trust. In every town and city of Venezuela, after the priest announces Jesus' Resurrection during the midnight prayer service on Easter, people greet each other joyously and the effigy of Judas is burned.

See also Volume III: CHRISTIANITY; EASTER; HOLY WEEK; LENT

❁ ASCENSION DAY

Observed by: Christians

Observed on: Forty days after Easter

Ascension Day is a day of special celebration for Christians all over the world. It commemorates Jesus' ascension to heaven 40 days after his Resurrection on Easter. The Eastern Orthodox Church regards Ascension Day as one of its 12 Great Feasts. On this day devout Catholics in Venezuela offer prayers in their local churches. Then they participate in a wide variety of activities such as cultural events, bullfights, competitions, and agricultural and handicrafts exhibitions. Many people also enjoy a day out with their family. In the province of Tachira, an annual fair known as the Fair of Our Lady of Consolation takes place on this day.

See also Volume III: ASCENSION, THE; CHRISTIANITY; EASTER

✿ CORPUS CHRISTI

Observed by: Roman Catholics
Observed on: Sixty days after Easter

The Feast of Corpus Christi is a religious feast celebrated by Catholics all over the world to commemorate the institution of the Eucharist. It is celebrated 60 days after Easter and falls on the Thursday after Trinity Sunday, the first Sunday after Pentecost. On the eve and day of Corpus Christi, performances of the devil dance, los diablos danzantes, takes place throughout Venezuela.

At San Francisco de Yare devil dancers dress themselves in yellow and red costumes and sport ferocious, devilish moustaches. On the eve of Corpus Christi, the devil dancers hold a candlelit Mass, which is called Velorio de los Diablos Danzantes. In the early hours of Corpus Christi, these dancers visit the graves of their predecessors in the local cemetery and then head to the local church where the Corpus Christi Mass is held. They beat drums and ring bells violently, creating a ferocious sound. Then they run through the streets to drive the evil forces away from the region.

In the area of Naiguata the costumes of the devil dancers are adorned with circles, crosses, and stripes and wear the masks representing ferocious sea creatures. Also, unlike other devil dances, women are allowed to participate in this dance. People summon the devils on Wednesday before Corpus Christi by beating three times on a caja (metal drum) and by ringing bells. They run through the streets of the town before kneeling down in prayer in front of the local church. During the Mass on Corpus Christi, the devil dancers run through the church; later they visit homes to drive evil forces away, for which they receive gifts from the people who live there.

See also Volume III: CHRISTIANITY; CORPUS CHRISTI

✿ THE FEAST OF SAINTS PETER AND PAUL

Observed by: Roman Catholics
Observed on: June 29

The Feast of St. Peter is observed on June 29 to commemorate this saint's death on June 29, 67 C.E. He was one of the 12 Apostles of Jesus. St. Peter is also considered the first pope. According to Christian belief, he holds the keys to heaven, and devout Catholics who have not sinned believe that they will meet St. Peter at the heaven's gate.

The Feast of St. Paul is also celebrated on June 29. St. Paul is considered by some theologians to be the most important disciple of Jesus and the best interpreter of his teachings.

See also Volume III: CHRISTIANITY

✿ ASSUMPTION

Observed by: Roman Catholics
Observed on: August 15

Assumption Day commemorates the Virgin Mary's Assumption into heaven. According to legend, when Mary was dying at the age of 73, all the Apostles visited her before her death, except St. Thomas, who arrived too late to speak with her. Moreover when he did arrive, her body could not be found because she had been raised up to heaven. Catholics believe that her soul and body were united at Jehoshaphat (Mary's tomb), and that St. Gabriel took her to heaven. On this day devout Venezuelan Catholics attend prayer services in local churches in honor of Mary and seek her blessings.

See also Volume III: ASSUMPTION; CHRISTIANITY

✿ ALL SAINTS' DAY

Observed by: Roman Catholics
Observed on: November 1

All Saints' Day is a Christian feast that honors all the saints (known and unknown). It is believed that All Saints' Day celebrations began after Pope Boniface IV (r. 608–15) consecrated the Roman Pantheon to the Virgin Mary. The Feast of All Saints' has been celebrated on November 1 since the time of Charlemagne (742–814).

See also Volume III: ALL SAINTS' DAY; CHRISTIANITY

✿ IMMACULATE CONCEPTION

Observed by: Roman Catholics
Observed on: December 8

The Immaculate Conception is a Roman Catholic doctrine that holds that, at the time of her birth, God protected Mary from all the sins of humanity and filled her with his grace. It is believed that, since God wanted Mary to be the mother of his son Jesus, she had to be totally free of any kind of sin. On this day Catholics throughout Venezuela attend a Mass held in honor of Mary in their local churches and pray for her blessing. It is one of the Holy Days of Obligation, mandated by the Catholic Church, and devout Catholics must attend a Mass on this day.

See also Volume III: CHRISTIANITY; IMMACULATE CONCEPTION

✿ CHRISTMAS

Observed by: Christians
Observed on: December 25

Christmas is a day of great joy for Christians all over the world because it celebrates the birth of Jesus, whom they believe was the Messiah promised in the Old Testament. In Venezuela Catholics attend Mass

Fun Fact

The world's highest waterfall, Angel Falls, is in one of the tepuis in Gran Sabana.

every morning starting on December 16 until the Midnight Mass on Christmas Eve (December 24). On Christmas Eve, known as Noche Buena in Spanish, people prepare a traditional Christmas meal that consists of pan de jamón (a long bread filled with raisins, olives, and cooked ham), ballacas (meat, vegetables, and olive stuffing in corn dough, steamed in plantain leaves), and dulce de lechoza (a dessert made from green papaya and brown sugar). Also Christmas trees are decorated and scenes from the Nativity (nacimiento) are displayed.

On Christmas Day, children find presents near the Christmas tree or nacimiento. They believe these gifts are brought by the infant Jesus, not Santa Claus. Aguinaldos are traditional songs that are sung during Christmas. In ancient times aguinalderos (singers) visited every home in the village and sang aguinaldos to the accompaniment of their musical instruments including maracas (rattles), the cuatro (a small four-stringed guitar), and the furruco (a small, elongated drum with a wooden stick in the middle).

See also Volume III: CHRISTIANITY; CHRISTMAS

Regional Holidays

☼ DEVILS OF YARE

Observed in: San Francisco de Yare (Miranda state)

Observed by: General Public

Observed on: February

The Devils of Yare, also known as Los Diabolos de Yare, is an annual Carnival celebrated over a period of four days in February in San Francisco de Yare in Miranda state. This is an annual spectacle that attracts natives and tourists alike. During the festival, devil dancers, attired in red costumes, ferocious, multicolored masks, and beautiful jewelry, dance only to the beat of drums—no other instruments are used—through the streets of Yare. Eventually they reach the church and kneel at its steps in a symbolic submission of evil forces to the good. When the priest blesses them, they believe God has forgiven them. Then they resume their dancing and visit cemeteries, homes, and town squares. They continue celebrating until the procession officially ends with the ringing of the church bells.

☼ FESTIVAL INTERNACIONAL DE TEATRO

Observed in: Caracas

Observed by: General Public

Observed on: April

Festival Internacional de Teatro, the International Theater Festival, is an annual theatrical festival that takes place in the month of April in theaters throughout the capital city of Caracas. The festival began in 1976. Since then, its popularity has increased immensely. During the festival, Venezuelans are treated to performances of the best theatrical groups from Venezuela and other nations in Latin America. This is a perfect opportunity for theater enthusiasts to enjoy great plays and superb performances. It has become one of the most awaited theater festivals in South America.

Rites of Passage

☼ MARRIAGE

In Venezuela dating is allowed, and parents are hopeful that their children will find mates who are their equals in terms of social status. Also it is traditional for a Venezuelan man to seek the permission of the prospective bride's father before proposing to her. According to Venezuelan law, legal status is granted only to civil marriages. Hence many couples first have a civil ceremony and then formalize their marriage with a church union. Civil weddings generally take place in the bride's house two weeks before the church ceremonies.

Only close family friends and relatives are invited to the civil ceremony, where they are served refreshments and traditional food. After the civil wedding, although the couple is legally husband and wife, they live separately until the day of their church wedding. Bride and groom adorn themselves in wedding attire, and while exchanging vows the couple sings the promise of mutual love, understanding, and care in a traditional manner. Also 13 gold coins, known as arras, are exchanged between families of the couple as a token of prosperity and good fortune. In many parts of Venezuela, the arras are exchanged between the bride and groom.

After the wedding, a lavish reception is thrown in honor of the newlyweds, and singing, dancing, and feasting goes on until the early hours of the next morning. In accordance with tradition, if the bride and groom can sneak out of the reception without being noticed by the guests, it is considered good luck.

Further Reading

Benjamin Keith Belton, Orinoco Flow: Culture, Narrative, and the Political Economy of Information (Lanham, Md.: Scarecrow Press, 2003); Steve Ellner and Daniel Hellinger, eds., Venezuelan Politics in the Chávez Era: Class, Polarization, and Conflict (Boulder, Colo.: Lynne Rienner, 2003); Richard Gott, In the Shadow of the Liberator: The Impact of Hugo Chávez on Venezuela and Latin America (New York: Verso, 2001); David M. Guss, The Festive State: Race, Ethnicity, and Nationalism as Cultural Performance (Berkeley, Calif.: University of California Press, 2000).

Vietnam

COUNTRY FACT FILE
Location	Southeastern Asia, bounded by the Gulf of Thailand, the South China Sea, and the Gulf of Tonkin; bordering China, Laos, and Cambodia
Size	127,244 sq. mi.
Capital City	Hanoi
Flag Description	The flag of Vietnam is red with a large yellow five-pointed star in the center.
Independence	September 2, 1945 (from France)
Population	83,535,576 (2005 est.)
Government	Communist
Nationality	Vietnamese
Major Ethnic Group(s)	Kinh (Viet, 86%)
Major Language(s)	Vietnamese (official); English (increasingly favored as a second language); some French, Chinese, and Khmer; mountain area languages (Mon-Khmer and Malayo-Polynesian)
Major Religion(s)	Buddhist (9%); Roman Catholic (7%); none (81%)
National Holiday(s)	New Year's Day, January 1; Vietnam Day, January 27; Foundation of the Vietnamese Communist Party, February 3; Liberation Day, April 30; Labor Day, May 1; Ho Chi Minh's Birthday, May 19; Memorial Day for War Martyrs, June 27; Revolution of 1945, August 19; Independence Day, September 2

Introduction

❁ HISTORY

Vietnamese culture originated in the rich and fertile deltas of the Red River in northern Vietnam between the first and sixth centuries C.E. The people slowly migrated southward to the narrow plains of the Indochina peninsula until they finally settled by the Mekong River (a major river of southern Vietnam).

The first known attack on the indigenous Vietnamese came when the Chinese annexed and occupied the Red River Delta under the mighty Han dynasty (206 B.C.E.–220 C.E.) in the first century B.C.E. For the next 800 years various Chinese leaders ruled Vietnam and other bordering areas, both politically and culturally; this continued until the 10th century. Being more in touch with the rulers, the Vietnamese elite were more strongly influenced by Chinese culture than the commoners were. It was during this period that Buddhism found its way into the Vietnamese Red River Delta, a common stopover point for the traders of that region.

However, in 938 the Vietnamese overthrew the Chinese. For the next 900 years, Chinese attempts to control Vietnam politically were thwarted at every turn. For their part, the Vietnamese began a bid to spread southward until they reached the Mekong River Delta.

From the eighth to the 12th centuries, the Vietnamese fought off the forces of Cham (from the Indian kingdom of Champa) and Khmer (neighboring Cambodia). The Cham were finally forced to withdraw in 1471, while the Khmer were to be pushed out of the Mekong Delta in 1749.

Ruling such a vast country that stretched between the north (Red River Delta) and south (Mekong River Delta) was a great task for the Vietnamese monarchy, and in the 16th century the ruling Le Dynasty divided Vietnam into north and south to make ruling it easier. This decision, however, initiated 200 years of wrestling for power among the Vietnamese nobility.

By the mid-19th century a huge gap had opened up between the rich ruling elite and the commoners. This period coincided with the European drive for expansion into Asia and the non-Western world. Between 1858 and 1873 the French conquered Vietnam and divided it into Cochinchina (Nam Bo, or southern Vietnam), Tonkin (Bac Bo, or north Vietnam), and Annam (Trung Bo, or central Vietnam). These were considered merely geographical divisions by patriotic Vietnamese, and French rule was met with resistance from the very beginning. Two main groups of nationalists emerged, one led by Phan Boi Chau (1867–1940), who favored restoring the Vietnamese monarchy as a means to throw out the French, and the other by Phan Chu Trinh, who favored abolition of monarchy and establishing a democratic regime post-independence. These two groups gradually lost their standing because they ignored the peasantry during a struggle in which there were countless demonstrations, acts of terrorism, and distribution of anti-colonial literature.

After World War I ended in 1918 Ho Chi Minh (1890–1969), a follower of Confucius, a nationalist, and a believer in Lenin's and Marx's theories of power resting in the hands of workers, started organizing the Vietnamese peasantry under the Communist ideals of the Chinese ruler Mao Zedong (1893–1976). The Japanese occupied Vietnam during World War II (1939–45). After Japan lost the war France tried reoccupying Vietnam but failed in this attempt. By 1954 Ho Chi Minh was firmly in power in Vietnam.

The Geneva Accord led to the splitting of the region into North and South Vietnam. Fighting broke out in November 1946 between Vietnamese and French troops in Haiphong, and French ships shelled the city, killing over 6,000 civilians. The following month the Viet Minh (a coalition of Communist and nationalist groups) attacked the French at Hanoi, ushering in the prolonged and bloody guerrilla conflict that became known as the French Indochina War (1946–54). The French finally withdrew after their defeat at the battle for Dienbienphu. During the Cold War years (1945 until the downfall of the Soviet Union in 1991), the northern part of the country was supported by China and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics (USSR), while the southern part was influenced by the United States. Domestic and international political struggles resulted in the Vietnam War between northern and southern Vietnam.

It went on until January 1973, followed by the withdrawal of U.S. troops from Vietnam in March 1973, following the Paris Peace Accords on January 27, 1973. Though the war started again in 1974, by 1976 Vietnam was unified under the North Vietnamese government and was renamed the Socialist Republic of Vietnam. Refugees fled Vietnam for the next few decades. Though the nation is peaceful today, economically it made slow progress due to conservative government policies. Since 2001 the Vietnamese have opened up the economy and followed more competitive, export-motivated policies.

❁ GEOGRAPHY AND CLIMATE

Surrounded by Cambodia, Laos (to the west), and China (in the north), Vietnam is a mountainous country with dense forests. It is situated along the coastline of the Indo-Chinese peninsula (a landmass projecting out into the sea) with the South China Sea and the Gulf of Tonkin surrounding its southern and eastern sides, respectively. The highest mountain peak in Vietnam is Fansipan (10,312 feet), located in the northwest mountains.

The Red River Delta and highlands constitute Vietnam's northern region while the southern part

The Tet Offensive

The Tet Offensive, launched by the North Vietnamese Army and Viet Cong (pro-Communist South Vietnamese) against South Vietnam, is generally acknowledged to be the significant turning point of the Vietnam War. Before 1965 the National Liberation Front (NLF) believed that it could foment a social revolution in the south that would start among the rural population and gradually become a nationalist urban rebellion, resulting in a quick victory. The involvement of U.S. ground forces, however, thwarted this strategy, and in 1967 the NLF realized it needed a different strategy in order to win. Ho Chi Minh, the North Vietnamese leader was dying, and the Democratic Republic of Vietnam (DRVN) wanted to score a significant victory before he died.

So the North Vietnamese Politburo planned a nationwide offensive hoping to start an urban revolution in the south, because they thought that southern Buddhists and student dissidents would support a Communist takeover.

The original plan for the Tet Offensive was formulated in 1967 and involved simultaneous military assaults on most of the major cities in South Vietnam as well as attacks on major U.S. bases, the Presidential Palace of South Vietnam, and the U. S. Embassy. Concurrently, a major assault was launched against the U.S. firebase at Khe Sanh, although this is usually considered a separate, contemporaneous operation. The success of the operations is widely understood to have turned the political tides of war in favor of the Viet Cong.

comprises coastal lowlands, central mountains (the Dai Truong Son), and the Mekong River Delta. In fact these two rivers are the main rivers of the country and most farming activities are carried out on the riverbanks. The humidity averages around 84 percent throughout the country though actual rainfall can vary from 47 to 118 inches annually. The temperature fluctuates between 41°F and 99°F, depending on the distance from the sea and the height above sea level.

Vietnam possesses assorted wildlife, though the number of animals is declining due to pollution, excessive hunting, and deforestation. Rhinoceroses, tigers, lions, black bears, crocodiles, and turtles are some of the animals found in Vietnam, but there are many endangered species in this part of the world.

❁ ECONOMY

A policy called Doi Moi, or “Renovation,” initiated in 1986, transformed the market structure of Vietnam from a socialist model into a capitalist market economy. This policy was similar to one that China had adopted for economic development. It was especially difficult to implement because of internal conflicts within Vietnam. To make things worse the Soviet Bloc eventually withdrew its financial assistance after Vietnam was unified in 1976. From 1986 until the mid-1990s Vietnam made a lot of progress, only to be crippled by the Asian financial crisis that affected growth in most Asian countries in 1997.

The major industries of Vietnam are rice, food processing, rubber, sugar, textiles, and chemicals.

Since 2001 the Vietnamese government has tried to implement economic reforms for liberalizing trade and making it more export oriented. In a bid to cooperate, internationally and regionally, Vietnam has also become a member of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) Free Trade Area (AFTA), and entered into the U.S.-Vietnam bilateral trade pact. These steps have put Vietnam on the path to recovery and modernization. It also joined the WTO (World Trade Organization) in 2005.

The government of Vietnam is making significant efforts to stop such illegal trafficking. In 2004, the government issued a national action plan to combat trafficking for commercial sexual exploitation, as well as a five-year national program for addressing all aspects of Vietnam’s antitrafficking efforts including prevention, prosecution, and protection. In addition to implementing strategies to address trafficking for sexual exploitation, the government took steps to provide greater protection for Vietnamese workers sent abroad by labor export companies.

❁ CULTURE AND LIFESTYLE

The lifestyle in Vietnam can be said to be more community-based than individualistic. For example, up to six generations (linked by marriage or blood) of a family often live in a single dwelling. If there is insufficient room for everyone, relatives find suitable living places close by. In most Vietnamese homes there is a lot of bonding and emotional attachment between family members.

The central part of rural homes is devoted to the ancestor’s altar. Names of ancestors of up to four generations are inscribed on the tablets, preserved, and worshipped so as to ensure guidance and blessings for future generations. Rural homes are a part of a communal household with lots of gardens, a temple, and a common meeting place. Today these spaces can also be used for modern needs such as clinics or public information centers. Urban homes, in contrast, are self-contained.

According to Confucian belief the father in a family is the teacher and commander of the household. The mother is seen to have similar qualities, but she is also expected to demonstrate a spirit of self-denial, love, and sacrifice while bringing up children. Vietnamese parents not only bring up their children, they also get them married, and still continue to look after them. The children, on the other hand, follow the principle of filial piety, which is taking care of their parents, to the extent of sacrificing their own good for them.

The spiritual life of the Vietnamese is shaped by four systems of belief: Confucianism, Buddhism, Christianity, and Taoism. Over the centuries Confucianism, Buddhism, and Taoism have been merged into a Triple Religion, or Tam Giou, combining Chinese spiritual beliefs and ancient Vietnamese animism.

Vietnam is famous for traditional paintings on silk, puppetry, religious sculptures, and ceramics.

Many languages are spoken here, including Russian, French, Chinese, and English.

❁ CUISINE

Vietnamese meals usually involve plain rice topped with fish (most commonly), meat, vegetables, spices, and sauces, much like Chinese cuisine. The sauce is a pungent fish sauce (nuoc mam), however, not the soy sauce favored by the Chinese. There are about 500 traditional dishes in the Vietnamese cuisine including unusual meats such as bat or cobra. Noodles, spring rolls, and rice dumplings (fried stuffed rice balls) are common snacks. Eel and vermicelli soups, shredded chicken, and bitter soups are also enjoyed in any Vietnamese meal. Being influenced by the French colonialists, the Vietnamese have several dishes such as banh mi, a sandwich made with a baguette (French bread) and Vietnamese meats. Many Buddhist dishes are vegetarian.

Fun Fact

Vietnam’s name comes from the Vietnamese Viet Nam, a reordering of Nam Viet, the name of an ancient kingdom that covered much of what is now northern Vietnam.

Fun Fact

Mangosteen fruit takes from eight to fifteen years to mature.

Cooking in Vietnam includes a lot of lemon grass (which tastes a lot like lemon peel), lime, and kaffir lime (its pungent leaves are used to flavor various recipes). The Vietnamese also have developed their own style of cooking. Coffee (called ca phe phin) is served very strong and sweet.

The country is rich with many kinds of fruit. The unusual fruits include the green dragon fruit (which is usually red and grows on trees), mangosteen (called “Queen of Fruits,” it is a fleshy fruit resembling tomato), longan (which has a sweet pinkish-white flesh said to banish fatigue), rambutan (or “hairy” cherry), water apple (a brilliant red, sour, bell-shaped fruit used mostly for offerings at temples), and pomelo (a sweet and tangy green citrus fruit). These fruits are often served on special occasions such as the Vietnamese New Year.

Public/Legal Holidays

❁ NEW YEAR'S EVE/DAY

Observed by: General Public
Observed on: December 31–January 1

New Year's Day is one of the most popular holidays celebrated all over the world. In Vietnam this day is very special. People begin preparing about a month before January 1. They select gifts, foods, and decorations for the coming year. They wash, clean, and decorate their homes. Before the clock strikes midnight on New Year's Eve, the dining table is ready with special foods and drinks such as fresh fruits, jams, hot tea, and wine. The family gets together and prays for each other's prosperity. Gifts are exchanged. The next morning, people visit the elderly and siblings (in case they live elsewhere) to seek their blessings. They also visit the houses of teachers and friends.

❁ VIETNAM DAY

Observed by: General Public
Observed on: January 27

On this day in 1973 a treaty was signed between the United States and Vietnam declaring the end of U.S. military interference in Vietnam. People take time off from their daily routine to remember all those who have sacrificed their lives during wartime.

❁ FOUNDATION OF THE VIETNAMESE COMMUNIST PARTY

Observed by: General Public
Observed on: February 3

This day is celebrated as the day when the Vietnamese Communist Party was founded in 1930. The roads are dotted with red flags (national flags) and banners. Party members and enthusiasts hold meetings to commemorate this day.

❁ LIBERATION DAY

Observed by: General Public
Observed on: April 30

On April 30, 1975, North and South Vietnam were unified as a single nation under the leadership of the North Vietnamese. The United States had agreed to withdraw its troops from Vietnam in 1973 while signing the Paris Peace Accord. The process was completed in April 1975, and Saigon (now called Ho Chi Minh City) became completely Communist. The Central Committee of the Vietnam Fatherland Front (VFF) usually organizes meetings in Ho Chi Minh City to mark the day. Ho Chi Minh City People's Committee also organizes fireworks displays in various parts of the city to mark this day of Communist victory.

❁ LABOR DAY

Observed by: General Public
Observed on: May 1

May 1 is celebrated as Labor Day, also known as May Day or Workers' Day, in many parts of the world to commemorate the important role played by workers in building nations and societies. While the earliest celebrations of May Day can be ascribed to the pagan festivals held by farmers, peasants, and villagers in Europe well before the Middle Ages, the roots of its political associations undoubtedly sprang from a consortium of socialist organizations. In 1889 the Second International declared May 1 a day to recognize the importance of workers around the world and scheduled the first demonstrations and celebrations for the following year, 1890. They coordinated this observance with the strike called by the U.S. labor union, the American Federation of Labor (AFL), demanding an eight-hour workday. On this day in Vietnam banks and public offices are closed.

See also Volume III: LABOR DAY

❁ HO CHI MINH'S BIRTHDAY

Observed by: General Public
Observed on: May 19

This day is celebrated in Ho Chi Minh Square. President Ho Chi Minh spent his life trying to unite northern and southern Vietnam under communist rule. On this day the government organizes events such as fund-raising for the poor, building houses for them, and undertaking other developmental activities.

MEMORIAL DAY FOR WAR MARTYRS

Observed by: General Public
Observed on: June 27

The Vietnamese people have witnessed more wars than peace during the 20th century. This day has been set aside in memory of all the war victims who sacrificed their lives for their country. The government chose June 27 as the Memorial Day for war martyrs of 1947. Celebrations begin a week before this day. Meetings are held to reward the families of the victims, especially their mothers. Houses are built for war veterans or concerned families in gratitude for their services. TV programs made especially in memory of the victims are aired on this day. Leaders make visits to some families of the martyrs.

REVOLUTION OF 1945

Observed by: General Public
Observed on: August 19

The most memorable event in Vietnam's history after 1939 was indisputably the uprising in Hanoi (former capital city of North Vietnam) under the leadership of Ho Chi Minh in 1945. A short-term Vietnamese republic was established on August 19, 1945. The city was dotted with red national flags on that day while loud cries hailing independence could be heard. The French colonialists had to submit to the people's demand for freedom, so August 19 is regarded as one of the proudest moments in the history of Vietnam. Even today there are songs and stories aired about the 1945 uprisings on radio. The city is festooned with banners and flags.

INDEPENDENCE DAY

Observed by: General Public
Observed on: September 2

Ho Chi Minh declared independence from the French on September 2, 1945. Although the French did not leave Vietnam until the 1950s, a feeling of patriotism and pride envelops the city on the anniversary of this day as it prepares to celebrate its freedom.

Religious Holidays

TET NGUYEN DAN

Observed by: General Public
Observed on: First of the first month of the Chinese lunisolar calendar

Tet Nguyen Dan, which means "the festival of the first day," more commonly known as Tet, is the most important holiday in Vietnam. It is the Vietnamese New Year, which is based on the Chinese lunisolar calendar, although they do not always coincide. Tet is generally (but not always) celebrated on the same day as the Chinese New Year and shares many of the same customs including fireworks and lion and dragon dances, which ward off evil spirits. Beginning with Giao Thua, New Year's Eve, the celebrations last for a week, beginning with the first new Moon after January 20. The Giao Thua is the holiest time because it marks the transition from the old to the new year. In Vietnam it is popularly believed that there are 12 sacred beings in heaven who are in charge of monitoring and controlling affairs on

"Eating" Tet

In Vietnam food has a central place in the festivities; celebrating the Tet holiday is to an Tet, which means "eat Tet." While some of the foods prepared are eaten throughout the year, others are very special dishes eaten only during Tet. Prior to Tet each family cooks special holiday recipes; most important is the traditional banh chung and banh giay, which are symbolically related to Tet. Banh chung (rectangular in shape) and banh giay (round in shape, much like a hockey puck) consist of rice tightly packed with pork and mung bean fillings wrapped in banana leaves. Because these can take several days to prepare and must cook overnight (for 10 hours), sometimes family members take turns keeping the fire going through the night and pass the time sharing stories about earlier Tet celebrations. Other foods prepared for the Tet celebrations include dua hau (roasted watermelon seeds), kieu (pickled vegetables), and mut (sweetened dried fruits), such as coconut, melon rind, and lotus seed, that are rarely eaten at any time besides Tet.

According to some Vietnamese kho (pronounced "kaw") is one of their "comfort foods." Kho is not a difficult dish to prepare. It is a stew in which the delicate sweetness of a light caramel offsets the vibrant saltiness of fish sauce. Traditionally kho dishes were made by simmering meat, seafood, or tofu in fish sauce, sugar, and water in clay pots. Now, however, most people use metal pots to prepare their kho recipes and use nuoc mau, which means "colored water" (pronounced "nook mao"), a prepared caramel sauce that deepens the overall color and flavor. In the north this sauce is called nuoc hang (pronounced "nook hahng"), which means "merchandising water," perhaps because food hawkers used it to improve the look of their wares.

Fun Fact

The Vietnamese do not celebrate the actual day on which they were born. Instead everyone becomes a year older on New Year's Day.

Earth, and each of them is in charge of one year. So the Giao Thua is also the moment when the old chieftain relinquishes control at the end of his term, and the new one assumes his high office. Every home makes offerings in the open air to pray for a good new year and to honor the new custodian.

As in China and other Asian countries, elaborate preparations for the Tet holiday begin months before the actual holidays. In Vietnam people attempt to pay all their debts off so that they are debt free when Tet starts, and they buy new clothes for their children. In Vietnam there are three kitchen gods (ong tao) for each house, not one, who leave for heaven on the 23rd day of the last month of the Chinese calendar to make their annual report to the Jade Emperor concerning the lives of the family in that house during the past year. A modest ceremony in which the family offers sacrifices for them to use on their journey celebrates their departure.

It is a public holiday in Vietnam, and even shops and restaurants are closed. It may well be compared with the Western celebrations of Christmas, New Year's, and Thanksgiving. People generally go on picnics with their families, and children are given money in red packets, called mung tuoi.

See also Volume III: CHINESE NEW YEAR; SPRING FESTIVALS

❁ VESAK

Observed by: Buddhists

Observed on: Eighth day of the fourth month of the Chinese lunisolar calendar

This date is the eighth day of the fourth lunar month of the Vietnamese calendar, which is based on the Chinese calendar. Vesak is marked by visits to the temples and pagodas to celebrate Gautama Buddha's birth, his enlightenment, and his death, all of which occurred on this one day, although at different times. People illuminate their homes and places of worship with lanterns and participate in processions during the evening.

See also Volume III: BUDDHISM; VESAK

Regional Holidays

❁ BA CHUA KHO TEMPLE FESTIVAL

Observed in: Bac Ninh Province

Observed on: From the 15th to the 16th day of the first month of the Chinese lunisolar calendar

According to legend Lady Chua Kho, who married the king of the Ly Dynasty, was said to be a very hardworking woman. After their marriage, she asked the king to let her go to the Vu Ninh area to establish a functioning village there. With the help of locals, she reclaimed and expanded the wasteland, organized activities in 72 villages, took care of the food stock, and kept an eye on military capabilities of the people well before and after the 1076 victory of the Song invaders (who had arrived in Ngu Nguyet River). After the queen's death people built a temple in her memory. This is the Ba Chua Kho Temple where people throng to pay their respects and pray for good fortune and prosperity for the coming year.

❁ LIM FESTIVAL

Observed in: Bac Ninh Province

Observed by: General Public

Observed on: Thirteenth day of the first month of the Chinese lunisolar calendar

Lim is the name of a village (11 miles from Hanoi) in the Bac Ninh Province of Vietnam. The Lim Festival is held every year on the 13th day of the first lunisolar month. The festival is held on Lim hill where the Lim Pagoda is located. Hieu Trung Hau, the man who invented Quan Ho (a folk song of the Bac Ninh Province) is worshipped here every year. Visitors come to see lien anh (males) and lien chi (females) sing different folk songs on the hills, within the pagodas, and in boats. They even sing these songs at home.

Rites of Passage

❁ BIRTH

Because the number of babies born in Vietnam has increased dramatically in the early 21st century, the government has begun penalizing people if they have more than two children. Thus the birth of a child is a low-key affair. The fathers are expected to be in the hospital during and after childbirth. Visiting the mother during her pregnancy or visiting the newborn child for at least 30 days after the child's birth is said to bring bad luck to her. This is the time when the mother is taken care of by other family members. There is no celebration or gift-giving after the child is born. When the baby is three months old, there is a naming ceremony to mark that occasion, along with a small celebration. The baby's birth is registered in the city records.

❁ MARRIAGE

Weddings can be completed by just signing a form declaring them official, or they can be performed following traditional rituals. The betrothal period (the time between engagement and wedding without conjugal rights) is very short and almost nonexistent for the Vietnamese. All decisions are up to the two concerned families. Even though arranged marriages are on the decline, couples usually do not go against the wishes of their parents, and the parents' approval is sought before getting married. An astrologer is consulted for the most auspicious day, and the exchange of gifts occurs once both the families have approved of each other. This is followed by the day of the wedding. A banquet is arranged, and family and friends bring gifts (usually envelopes containing money). The family and guests sit separately (sometimes in separate rooms), while the bride and groom go around thanking them and seeking their blessings.

❁ DEATH

When a person dies in Vietnam, the body is kept at an altar (with a photograph of the deceased in the center), and three musicians play traditional music for two days. Buddhist monks are invited to chant ritualistic prayers. Friends and relatives come to grieve and offer condolences and money to the immediate family. Daughters of the deceased person wear white veils and robes that cover the entire body. Members of the immediate family wear white headbands. A funeral procession usually follows the two days of mourning. The daughters and daughters-in-law walk behind the coffin. The son walks backward and barefoot in front of the procession. The tomb remains open for seven days after the coffin is interred. Mourning continues for two years with rituals at specific time periods. After that there is a final ceremony. For instance, in the north the remains of the deceased are dug out and reburied at the same place. The position of the grave is determined by geomancy—selecting a particular position as divine by throwing some mud into the air and seeing where it lands.

Further Reading

Nguyen Ngoc Bich, Tet!: The Vietnamese New Year (Arlington, Va.: East Coast U.S.A. Vietnamese Publishing Consortium, 2004); Young Yang Chung, Silken Threads: A History of Embroidery in China, Korea, Japan, and Vietnam (New York: Harry N. Abrams, 2005); Frederick Downs, The Killing Zone: My Life in the Vietnam War (New York: W. W. Norton, 1993); Andrew Hunt, The Turning: A History of Vietnam Veterans Against the War (New York: New York University Press, 1999); Stanley Karnow, Vietnam: A History, 2nd ed. (New York: Penguin USA, 1997); Sidney Lens, The Forging of the American Empire: From the Revolution to Vietnam, A History of U.S. Imperialism (Chicago: Haymarket Books, 2003); Huu Ngoc and Lady Borton, eds., Mid-Autumn Festival (Hanoi: Gioi Publishers, 2004); Do Phuong Quynh, Traditional Festivals in Vietnam (Hanoi: Gioi Publishers, 1995).

Yemen

COUNTRY FACT FILE

Location	Middle East, bordering the Arabian Sea, Gulf of Aden, and Red Sea, between Oman and Saudi Arabia
Size	203,850 sq. mi.
Capital City	Sanaa
Flag Description	Yemen's flag has three horizontal bands of red, white, and black.
Independence	May 22, 1990 (Republic of Yemen established with the merger of the Yemen Arab Republic and the Marxist-dominated People's Democratic Republic of Yemen)
Population	20,727,063 (2005 est.)
Government	Republic
Nationality	Yemeni
Major Ethnic Group(s)	Arabs
Major Language(s)	Arabic
Major Religion(s)	Islam (Sunni and Shia); Jewish; Christian; Hindu
National Holiday(s)	Labor Day, May 1; National Unity Day, May 22; The September Revolution, September 26

Introduction

❁ HISTORY

The history of Yemen can be traced back to 3000 B.C.E., when a number of ancient kingdoms thrived in the area. From around 1000 B.C.E., three kingdoms—Minaean, Sabaean, and Himyarite—successively ruled it. These kingdoms depended on the spice trade of Yemen and became quite wealthy because of it. Aromatic fragrances like myrrh and frankincense were largely traded with the European countries. In the 11th century B.C.E., the land routes in Arabia improved and this facilitated additional trade in frankincense.

By the first century C.E. the Romans had invaded the region. Christianity was introduced and was made the state religion. But Persia invaded and conquered Yemen 40 years later. By this time the spice trade had declined and aromatics, too, were no longer popular. In 630 Islam was introduced into the region, and a series of Arab caliphs ruled over Yemen. A number of dynasties also came to power in the late seventh century. In 1517 the region became a part of the Ottoman Empire; in 1636 the Turks were overthrown by the Zaydi Dynasty. Of the many dynasties that ruled over Yemen for short periods, the most prominent was a Shiite Dynasty, called Zaydi. Their control lasted until the 20th century.

In 1839 the British established control over the southern port of Aden, located near the Red Sea, and colonized it. They expanded the territory and signed some treaties and agreements to consolidate their rule over the region. This area was called the Aden Protectorate. The Turks made a comeback in 1849 and extended their control over a large part of the region unoccupied by the British. However, the Zaydis forced the Turks to retreat, and in 1919 Imam Yayha (1869–1948), a Zaydi imam, ruled Yemen until 1948. He was succeeded by his son Ahmad (1895–1962).

In the 1960s Yemen's National Liberation Front (NLF) revolted against the British, and the People's Republic of Southern Yemen was formed in November 1967. The country was very weak and relied on economic support from many Communist countries. In 1970 the republic's name was changed to The People's Democratic Republic of Yemen. In 1979 the country became the only Marxist state in all of Arabia.

The Republic of Yemen was recognized in May 1990, when both the Marxist Yemen Republic and the pro-Western northern Yemeni region united to form a new country. Ali Abdullah Saleh (b. 1942) was elected president. In 1991 the constitution was ratified to provide for free elections. Tensions between the north and the south factions led to a civil war in 1994, which was largely fought in the southern area. The northerners emerged victorious and eventually President Saleh resolved the matter and reunified the country. In the second multiparty elections in 1997, President Abi Abdullah Saleh was reelected to the presidency.

❁ GEOGRAPHY AND CLIMATE

The Republic of Yemen shares boundaries with Saudi Arabia and the Sultanate of Oman. Yemen has a coastline of 280 miles along the Red Sea and the Gulf of Aden. The coastal strip of Yemen is a fertile flatland known as Tihama. Flat-topped hills and rugged mountains follow these plains. The highest peak in Yemen is Hadur Shuayb at 12,336 feet. This area is known to have volcanic activity, with hot water springs strewn across the hills. Two-third of Yemen's total land is uninhabited and is located in the deserts of the Arabian Peninsula.

Climatic conditions in Yemen are harsh. The summer extends from April to September. The temperature is extremely high with high humidity during these months. The winter months are extremely cold, especially in the higher altitudes of the country. The region is prone to sandstorms.

Flora and fauna are sparse in Yemen. Overcultivation, deforestation, and desertification have been serious ecological issues in this country. Date palms, acacias, vegetables, grasses, and shrubs are found in different areas of Yemen. In the fertile coastal regions, crops such as coffee, cotton, sorghum, corn, oats, barley, dates, almonds, grapes, and qat (a shrub with mildly narcotic leaves that people chew, a very popular activity with Yemenis) are cultivated.

❁ ECONOMY

Yemen is one of the poorest countries in the Arab world, even though the economy heavily depends on the oil produced in the region. Political instability and a high population growth rate have adversely affected the economic development of this republic. The major industries of this country are oil, cotton, leather, and food processing. The natural resources include petroleum, rock salt, marble, coal, gold, lead, nickel, and copper.

Yemen cultivates grains, fruits, vegetables, pulses (the edible seeds of certain pod-bearing plants, such as peas and beans) qat, coffee, and cotton. Dairy products, livestock, poultry, and fishing are other related activities engaged in by the people of Yemen.

Yemen shares good trade relations with India, Thailand, South Korea, China, Malaysia, the United States, Singapore, Saudi Arabia, the United Arab Emirates, Russia, and France.

❁ CULTURE AND LIFESTYLE

Yemen is one of the world's most ancient countries. This nation was known for supplying frankincense, myrrh, spices, condiments, and other luxury items to the rest of the world. The country had strong trade relations with different civilizations throughout history. Traces of Greek, Roman, Indian, and Asian influences can still be seen in Yemeni culture.

Yemeni architecture is probably the main feature that stands out in the culture of this region. Buildings used to be made out of stone blocks and were raised to six stories and more. The windows were of a decorative nature and tinted to protect the inhabitants from the sweltering heat outside. The ground floor was meant for keeping livestock. The first floor functioned as the reception area for receiving guests and entertaining them, while the kitchen and bedrooms occupied the top floors. The topmost floor contained a large room (mafrai), where the head of the family entertained his friends in the afternoons.

Yemeni music is well known and is said to have evolved during the socializing sessions that took place in the mafrais of Yemeni homes. The people sang lines of poetry (hodayni) to the tune of Yemeni musical instruments. This musical form is still popular within the country. Two famous Yemeni musicians today are Ahmed Fathey and Osama al Attar.

Qat Chews

Qat chews are spontaneous afternoon house parties, where Yemeni men gather to chew the leaves of the qat plant and gossip. If someone wants to join in, he will have to be invited. (This is not very difficult for men—Yemeni men will often stop passersby and ask “do you chew?”) One should bring his own leaves. Qat is a mild stimulant, chemically unlike any other drug, and it makes the partaker mellow and contemplative. It is non-addictive and has no major side effects, although long-term use can lead to chronic constipation. It is believed that in ancient times these leaves served as an alternative to alcohol, which is forbidden for Muslims, and the practice has continued.

Much Yemeni business is conducted while chewing qat, a leaf grown locally and much enjoyed by the Yemeni people as an aid to thought and decision-making. Westerners in business meetings are not expected to participate in the qat-chewing ritual unless they wish to do so.

Fun Fact

Because there is a large Yemeni–Welsh community in the large cities of Wales, Yemeni folk music has become extremely popular in that country.

❁ CUISINE

Yemeni cuisine is unique in many ways in spite of the Arab influence. Lamb, fish, and chicken are the main meat items consumed. The Yemenis prefer their meat grilled or barbecued. The meat is always accompanied with thin, flat Yemeni bread. Many varieties of bread are found in this region, some of them being ruti, khubz tawwa, and labub.

The national dish of Yemen is called saltab, a spicy stew made of chicken or lamb, lentils, chickpeas, beans, and coriander. This stew is served hot, accompanied by rice. Yemenis are also fond of sweets. Bint al sabn (sweet bread dipped in honey and butter) is a popular dessert prepared here, especially on special occasions.

Alcohol is banned in Yemen. The people here love to drink sweet tea (shai). This type of Arab tea is spiced with cardamom and mint and is served without milk. Arab coffee (kahwa) is also a popular drink.

Public/Legal Holidays

❁ LABOR DAY

Observed by: General Public
Observed on: May 1

May 1 is celebrated as Labor Day, also known as May Day or Workers' Day, in many parts of the world to commemorate the important role played by workers in building nations and societies. While the earliest origins of May celebrations are ascribed to the pagan festivals that were held by farmers, peasants, and villagers in Europe well before the Middle Ages, conflicting opinions exist about the origins of the occasion. The modern observance, however, was established in 1889 when the Second International, a consortium of socialist organizations, declared May 1 a day to recognize the importance of workers around the world and scheduled the first demonstrations and celebrations for the following year, 1890. They coordinated this observance with the strike called by the U.S. labor union, the American Federation of Labor (AFL), demanding an eight-hour workday. In Yemen workers hold marches and rallies in the streets. Most organizations also honor their outstanding workers on this day.

See also Volume III: LABOR DAY

❁ NATIONAL UNITY DAY

Observed by: General Public
Observed on: May 22

On this day in 1990 Yemen was reunified and proclaimed a republic. The Republic of Yemen was established by merging North Yemen (Yemen Arab Republic) and South Yemen (People's Democratic Republic of Yemen). North Yemen had become independent in November 1918 from the Ottoman Empire, while South Yemen became independent much later, on November 30, 1967, from the United Kingdom. On this day Yemen also decided to adopt democracy and political plurality, marking the start of a new age of prosperity, stability, security, and peace. The new Yemeni constitution that was implemented on May 22 stressed the protection of human rights and freedoms, such as freedom of the press and expression. On this day the Yemeni national flag is unfurled and a patriotic fervor grips the entire nation.

❁ THE SEPTEMBER REVOLUTION

Observed by: General Public
Observed on: September 26

This day remembers the commencement of the September Revolution in North Yemen in 1962. The monarchy of Imam Muhammad al-Badr, the last king of Northern Yemen, was overthrown on this day by revolutionary forces who took control of Sanaa. The Yemen Arab Republic came into being after this revolution. On this day Yemenis watch parades and attend rallies.

Religious Holidays

❁ EL AM HEJIR

Observed by: Muslims
Observed on: First of Muharram, the first month of the Islamic calendar

El am Hejir marks the first day of the first month of the Islamic calendar, which began in 622 C.E., when Muhammad fled from Mecca to Medina with his family and followers, an event known as the Hegira, and formed the first Islamic state. Muslims celebrate this day as New Year's Day.

In Yemen, special prayers are held in mosques all over the country. A special feast is prepared and relished by Yemeni families on this day.

See also Volume III: EL AM HEJIR

❁ MOULOU

Observed by: Muslims
Observed on: Twelfth of Rabbi al-Awwal, the third month of the Islamic calendar

The birthday of Muhammad, the holy prophet of the Muslims, falls in the third month of the Islamic year. For Muslims all over the world, Mouloud, also called Mawlid al-Nabi, is a day of great joy and celebration since Muhammad is the most revered prophet. In Yemen this event is a two-day celebration. Special prayers are held in mosques all over the country. A special feast is prepared and enjoyed by Yemeni families on this day. Women make cakes and sweets. They wear new garments and decorate their hands with henna designs.

See also Volume III: ISLAM, MOULOUUD

❁ EID AL-FITR

Observed by: Muslims

Observed on: First of Shawwal, the 10th month of the Islamic calendar

Eid al-Fitr, the Feast of Fast-Breaking, occurs on the first day of Shawwal, the 10th month in the Islamic calendar. It marks the end of the holy month of Ramadan, the holiest month in the Islamic calendar, during which Muslims must observe a daily dawn-to-dusk fast. This day is celebrated for four days in Yemen. Special prayers and feasting mark this occasion. The Koran forbids fasting on this day.

Eid al-Fitr is celebrated with sumptuous meals, cakes, cookies, and other sweet dishes. Most families slaughter a sheep or at least buy meat for the occasion. People dress in new and colorful clothes. A festive mood grips the entire nation as people travel around the country visiting relatives and friends. Some also go hunting. There is a lot of merriment, music, and dancing.

The celebration extends for three days, but many times it is stretched to a week. All businesses—government and private—are closed.

See also Volume III: EID AL-FITR; ISLAM; RAMADAN

❁ EID AL-ADHA

Observed by: Muslims

Observed on: Tenth of Dhu al-Hijjah, the 12th month of the Islamic calendar

Eid al-Adha, also called the Feast of Sacrifice, is an important festival for Muslims all over the world. It was on this auspicious day that Ibrahim (Abraham) agreed to sacrifice his young son in order to obey God's command. Muslims honor Ibrahim for his willingness to do God's will. In Yemen, this festival is celebrated for a period of four days. On this day Muslim families slaughter a fattened sheep and prepare an elaborate feast for friends and family members. The meat is distributed for consumption to family and friends as well as the poor and the needy. Special prayer services are conducted in mosques all across the country.

Yemenis wear their best clothes and attend Salat-ul-Eid, or eid prayer, in the morning, followed by a short sermon. People also visit each other's homes and partake in festive meals with special dishes, beverages, and desserts. Children receive gifts and sweets on this happy occasion.

During the month this holiday is celebrated, many Muslims also undertake a pilgrimage or hajj to Mecca. It is required of all Muslims who are physically and financially able to go to the sacred city once during their lifetime.

See also Volume III: EID AL-ADHA; HAJJ; ISLAM

Rites of Passage

❁ BIRTH

After childbirth Yemeni women rest and recover in isolation for the next 40 days. During this period, women relatives and friends tend to the new mother and assist her in the daily chores. Fresh bread, butter, honey, and porridges made with fenugreek are given to the mother. Visitors who have come to see the new baby often present the child with money and gifts.

❁ COMING OF AGE

Male circumcision is a part of Yemen's tradition and is carried out at puberty. The Muslims in Yemen believe that, by undergoing this ritual, a boy becomes a man. Trained elders use knives, razors, and other sharp instruments to perform the circumcision without administering any anesthetic. This practice enjoys social backing and families take great pride in it. Huge celebrations follow this coming-of-age ritual.

❁ MARRIAGE

Most marriages in the Yemen are arranged. Yemeni weddings are elaborate affairs that last for three days. The bride devotes a considerable amount of time to her wedding preparation and beauty care. She is lavished with all sorts of oils and perfumes to prepare for her big day. The groom provides plenty of silver and gold jewelry to the bride's family, as well as cash as part of an agreed-upon bride price (mebr). The couple signs a marriage contract called milka. After signing the contract, the couple is legally married, even though they may not consummate the marriage until the night of the wedding party.

Laylat az-Zaffa, when butchers come to prepare the meat for the wedding feast, is the most important part of Yemeni wedding celebrations. Several guests are invited for lunch on this day. The men go to the mosque for midday prayers and, while returning, the groom, dressed in traditional Yemeni attire and carrying a golden sword, is accompanied by dancing men. After the singing and dancing, the guests sit down to enjoy the feast.

Laylat al-Henna, or the night of the henna, which takes place a couple of days before the wedding, is a very special women-only night. On this night the bride's hands and feet are decorated with henna. She also applies the traditional Arabian kohl or eyeliner. The groom also has a separate henna night.

On the wedding day the bride dyes her hair with henna and wears a white wedding gown. All the women who have come for the wedding are dressed in finery and gather inside the bride's house or a tent erected outside the house. The bride is brought inside the tent and is seated on a large chair. A traditional dance, accompanied by singing and clapping, is performed for her.

The groom, along with his family members, gathers inside a tent erected near the groom's house. They make a procession to the bride's tent to pick her up. The night is spent at the groom's house. The celebrations continue throughout the following week.

❁ DEATH

On the occasion of death in a Yemeni family, the deceased is washed, shrouded in white cloth, and buried immediately. The following three days are meant for mourning. Friends, family, and well-wishers come and offer their condolences, and help the family in their time of grief. Snacks are prepared by neighbors and served to visitors. The mourning period for the widow is four months and ten days, during which period her family and friends visit her often.

Further Reading

Paul Dresch, A History of Modern Yemen (Cambridge, U.K.: Cambridge University Press, 2000); Tim MacIntosh-Smith and Martin Yeoman, Yemen: The Unknown Arabia (New York: Overlook Press, 2001); Sarah Searight, Yemen: Land and People (London: Pallas Athene, 2002).

~ Zambia ~

COUNTRY FACT FILE
Location	Southern Africa, east of Angola and bounded by Democratic Republic of the Congo (Kinshasa), Malawi, Mozambique, Tanzania, Zimbabwe, and Namibia
Size	290,586 sq. mi.
Capital City	Lusaka
Flag Description	Zambia's flag is green with a panel of three vertical bands of red (hoist side), black, and orange below a soaring orange eagle located on the outer edge of the flag.
Independence	October 24, 1964 (from United Kingdom)
Population	11,261,795 (2005 est.)
Government	Republic
Nationality	Zambian(s)
Major Ethnic Group(s)	Black (99%)
Major Language(s)	English (official); major vernaculars: Bemba, Kaonda, Lozi, Lunda, Luvale, Nyanja, Tonga, and about 70 other indigenous languages
Major Religion(s)	Christian (50–75%); Muslim; and Hindu (24–49%)
National Holiday(s)	New Year's Day, January 1; Youth Day, March; Labor Day, May 1; Africa Day, May 25; Heroes' Day, July; Unity Day, July; Farmers' Day, August; Independence Day, October 24

Introduction

✿ HISTORY

Not much is known about the early inhabitants of the region. However, archaeological evidence shows that tribes who were primarily hunters and gatherers inhabited the region earlier than was once believed. Southern Africa is intimately connected to the early history of modern humans, and now new evidence, found in a cave near Lusaka, Zambia, indicates that our early ancestors may have been painting for purely aesthetic and symbolic purposes far earlier than was previously thought. Archaeologists have found Stone Age equipment used to grind pigment and more than 300 pieces of pigment that may be as old as 400,000 years, considerably before the appearance of Homo sapiens. Before this, the oldest pigments were 120,000 years old, while the earliest paintings are only 35,000 years old.

The discovery adds to the evidence that developing technologies, art, and rituals combined were crucial to the evolution of modern people. The fragments of pigment and grinding implements indicate that these Stone Age people were using symbols much earlier than had been predicted, evidence that also suggests the use of language, which implies the existence of associated behaviors. The researchers think that the pigments, which range from yellow to purple, were used by hunters to paint their bodies during hunting rituals and, perhaps, other community events.

Bantu-speaking immigrants, who belonged to the Lunda and Luba tribes of southern Zaire and northern Angola, began migrating to the region around the 15th century, forcibly displacing the indigenous people. Around the 19th century the Nguni people, who came from the southern parts of Africa, joined the immigrant population. The region was not unknown to the Europeans as Portuguese explorers occasionally passed by the region. In 1855 Dr. David Livingstone (1813–73) became the first Englishman to enter Zambia. He

Dr. David Livingstone

Dr. David Livingstone (1813–73) was a Scottish doctor and missionary. He is considered one of the most important European explorers of Africa, as well as a pioneer in the fight for the abolition of the slave trade. After completing his course in medicine in 1840, Livingstone was ordained and sent as a medical missionary to South Africa. In 1841 he reached Kuruman, a settlement founded by Scottish missionary Robert Moffat (1795–1883) in Bechuanaland (now Botswana). In 1849 Livingstone successfully traversed the Kalahari Desert and became the first European ever to discover Lake Ngami. On another expedition (1852–56) he followed the Zambezi River to its mouth in the Indian Ocean, thereby becoming the first European to discover the awesome grandeur of the Victoria Falls.

was mesmerized by the waterfalls on the Zambezi River and named them Victoria Falls after the then-ruling monarch of England Queen Victoria (1819–1901). Until then the waterfalls had been known as Mosi-oa-Tunya, which means “smoke that thunders.” The town near the falls was renamed after David Livingstone.

For many, Dr. Livingstone is best remembered as the person whom Henry M. Stanley (1841–1904), a reporter sent by James Gordon Bennett (1795–1872), proprietor of the New York Herald, “found” after he had not been heard from for several years and was presumed dead. After two years of searching, during which Stanley’s vivid reports—printed in the Herald—served to energize public interest in the exploration of Africa, he came upon Dr. Livingstone in the village of Ujiji, and uttered the world famous line, “Dr. Livingstone, I presume?”

In 1888 Sir Cecil Rhodes (1853–1902) obtained mining rights on behalf of the British government from local chiefs in northern (present-day Zambia) and southern (present-day Zimbabwe) Rhodesia, the beginning of British commercial and political interests in the region. From 1891 the British South Africa Company administered Northern Rhodesia; it was only in 1923 that the British government took control of the region and declared it a British protectorate. On the other hand, southern Rhodesia was annexed and granted self-governance in 1923.

The discovery of copper in the late 1920s made control over this region potentially quite lucrative. After World War II in 1953, northern and southern Rhodesia were merged with Nyasaland (present-day Malawi) to form the Federation of Rhodesia and Nyasaland. However, Northern Rhodesia’s demand for more African representation in the government and the ruling Europeans’ fear of losing power caused political unrest in the federation.

In 1960 the United National Independence Party (UNIP) was formed by Kenneth Kaunda (a Northern Rhodesian; b. 1924) to campaign for independence and dissolution of the federation dominated by European-ruled Southern Rhodesia. In 1962, after the victory of African parties in the elections, the demand for complete independence from the federation began gaining public support in Northern Rhodesia. As a result the Federation was officially dissolved on December 31, 1963, and the independent Republic of Zambia came into existence on October 24, 1964.

The Republic of Zambia adopted its own constitution on August 24, 1991. This constitution is based primarily on English common law and customary law. Independent Zambia had Kenneth Kaunda as its first president, who, immediately after assuming power, nationalized key enterprises and several large privately owned estates. However, he was unsuccessful in improving agriculture. From 1972 to 1991 Zambia remained a one-party state with UNIP the only legal party. The economy suffered immensely as the result of mismanagement and external pressures. Due to the import and export restrictions imposed by Rhodesia after Zambia’s interference in its domestic matters (Zambia was supporting the black African political parties in their fight against the white government of Rhodesia), the economy took a nose-dive, since Rhodesia was the main export and import partner of Zambia. With inflation skyrocketing, there were widespread protests and demonstrations against the Kaunda government, resulting in riots that killed thousands of Zambians.

In 1991 under pressure from his own people, Kaunda amended the constitution and declared the first multiparty elections in the country since independence. Frederick Chiluba (b. 1943), a labor leader, won a landslide victory and was sworn in as the new president in 1991. Chiluba survived an attempted coup in 1997, but his government was plagued by charges of corruption. In 1999 Chiluba’s government was accused by Angola of sheltering the rebels belonging to the National Union for Total Independence of Angola (UNITA). In January 2002 Chiluba stepped down as the president of Zambia after mounting pressure from members within his party. The labor party won the elections in 2002, and Levy Mwanawasa (b. 1948) was sworn in as the new president. Despite opposition charges of election fraud, Mwanawasa continues to rule. Zambia remains a very poor country, beset by problems of disease (particularly HIV/AIDS but also malaria, hepatitis, typhoid, and even plague). Zambians’ life expectancy at birth is less than 40 years.

GEOGRAPHY AND CLIMATE

Situated in the southern part of Africa, Zambia is a landlocked country sharing its boundaries with Angola, Democratic Republic of the Congo (Kinshasa), Malawi, Mozambique, Tanzania, Zimbabwe, and Namibia. Currently it is divided into nine provinces: Central, Copper Belt, Eastern, Luapula, Lusaka, Northern, North-Western, Southern, and Western. Zambia sits on an undulated plateau and a major part of the region is situated at 3,500–4,500 feet above sea level. While in the northeast, the Muchinga Mountains exceed 7,000 feet in height, elevations below 2,000 feet exist in the valleys of the major river systems. The main waterway is the Zambezi River. Its main tributaries are the Luangwa River and the Kafue River. Rapids and waterfalls obstruct these waterways throughout their course, which makes navigation difficult. The northern region of Zambia is the home of the Lakes Bangweulu, Tanganyika, and Mweru. In the southern part Lake Bangweulu and swamps cover an area of 3,800 square miles. The Luapula River drains Lake Bangweulu and the swamps.

The Copper Belt was the region responsible for the wealth of Zambia in earlier days. This belt adjoins the mineral-rich Katanga province of the Democratic Republic of Congo. Despite being a tropical country, the climate is pleasant thanks to the high altitude. Temperatures and rainfall both are moderate. Tropical storms are, however, known to occur during the rainy season, which falls between November and April. The regions experiencing the highest temperatures are in the valleys of the Zambezi, Luangwa, and Kafue Rivers and by the shores of Lake Mweru and Bangweulu.

The temperatures vary from season to season. The hottest period, accompanied by high humidity, is October to mid-November, just before the rainy season. This period also experiences thunderstorms caused by moist air from the east. The months from May to mid-August are cool, after which temperatures rise rapidly. September usually is very dry. Most of Zambia experiences extreme temperatures at various times of the year. For example, Lusaka, at 4,100 feet, has a high of 102°F and a low of 41°F, with an average annual rainfall of 45 inches, while Livingstone has a high of 105°F and a freezing low of 27°F, with an annual rainfall of almost 30 inches.

❁ ECONOMY

Zambia's economy is in utter disarray. Despite natural resources such as copper, cobalt, zinc, lead, coal, emeralds, gold, silver, uranium, and hydropower in abundance, the majority of its population continues to live below the poverty line. In addition natural hazards and calamities have contributed to the chaos, in the form of periodic droughts and tropical storms. Copper exports, the mainstay of the economy during the colonial regime, suffered a setback due to a sharp decline in the international market in the 1970s, resulting in heavy losses for the government. Things seem to be looking brighter in the early 21st century. Government-owned copper mines have been privatized, thus relieving the government of mammoth losses generated by the industry. Moreover electronics manufacturers have also increased the demand for copper, a good sign for Zambia's economy.

The main agricultural products are corn, sorghum, rice, peanuts, sunflower seed, vegetables, flowers, tobacco, cotton, sugarcane, cassava (tapioca), and coffee. This sector also produces cattle and poultry products like meat, milk, eggs, and hides. The industrial sector consists of copper mining and processing, construction, foodstuffs, beverages, chemicals, textiles, fertilizer, and horticulture.

❁ CULTURE AND LIFESTYLE

In Zambia indigenous beliefs and Christianity have been merged. When Zambians converted to Christianity, rather than give up their indigenous beliefs, they molded Christianity to fit their local practices. While most of the population is tribal, it also has a small but economically strong Asian population, most of whom are Indians. British and South African expatriates live mostly in Lusaka and in the Copper Belt in northern Zambia. Although most Zambians are subsistence farmers, there is a significant urban population constituting approximately 42 percent of the population. The British impact on Zambia endures. The official language of Zambia has remained English even after independence. However, more than 70–80 dialects, such as Bemba, Kaonda, Lozi, Lunda, Luvale, Nyanja, and Tonga, are spoken.

Music and dance are in the Zambian bloodstream. Singing, music, and dancing are part of tribal rituals and celebrations. Rhythmic drumbeats and thumb pianos accompany the dancing. The rumba is popular here, having originated in the nearby Democratic Republic of the Congo. The main musical instruments used in Zambia are stringed bows, flutes, horns and pipes, xylophones, bells, rattles, and the kalimba, the “African thumb piano.” The kalimba has a set of flat metal “tongues,” or notes, which are attached to a resonator. The player flicks the tongues with his thumb, and sound is produced.

❁ CUISINE

The staple diet of Zambia is nshima, a dish cooked with cornmeal or plain maize or maize flour, which is called mealie-meal. In affluent families nshima is eaten for lunch as well as dinner, while in the homes of the poor and the unemployed; nshima is cooked for either lunch or dinner. The importance of nshima in the everyday life of Zambians is evident from the fact that, when the Zambian government attempted to raise the price of cornmeal in 1990s, it led to riots in the capital city of Lusaka.

Nshima is always served hot with vegetables, beans, fish and meat dishes, and with ndiwo. Ndiwo is

Fun Fact

A Zambian host who offers nshima to a guest is considered benevolent, while the one who denies it to the guest is looked upon as cruel.

a dish made from different kinds of meat such as beef, mutton, chicken, or eggs. It could also be made from the meat of animals such as crocodile, warthog, turtle, alligator, or monkey. This is served as a side dish with nshima. For vegetables Zambians feast on homegrown collard greens, called repu (a loose-leafed vegetable that resembles a cabbage; its taste, depending on its age, could be mild, sweet, or mustardlike, and it is often served with bacon), as well as pumpkin, cabbage, cassava (tapioca) leaves, pea leaves, squash leaves, and bean leaves.

In regions along the rivers and lakeshores, Zambians also eat fish. Popular freshwater fish include bream, lake salmon, and Nile perch.

Public/Legal Holidays

❁ NEW YEAR'S EVE/DAY

Observed by: General Public

Observed on: December 31–January 1

January 1 marks the beginning of the Western, or Gregorian, calendar and is celebrated as New Year's Day. In Zambia, the new year is welcomed with much enthusiasm. In places like Lusaka, not only do the local people party all night, but there are several events at various hotels and restaurants for the visiting public who wish to celebrate the New Year. True to Zambian culture, drumbeats and dancing add to the excitement of the evening.

❁ YOUTH DAY

Observed by: General Public

Observed on: Second Monday in March

The youth in Zambia constitute 68 percent of the population so it is appropriate that the Zambian government should make this a public holiday. On this day the government announces various programs aimed at empowering youth. In 2005, for example, while addressing a public gathering at the Freedom Statue, President Levy Mwanawasa (b. 1948) announced the year's Youth Day theme, which was "Youth empowerment through sport, tourism, and agriculture." He said that the combination of tourism, agriculture, and sport would prove to be an unbeatable package for national develop-

Fun Fact

Since vegetables are available in abundance and there is a scarcity of meat in the region, ndiwo often is the topic of daily conversation among the rural people. People discuss how they have been eating vegetables for three straight days and are yearning for meat. Thus, the Zambians have coined a special term called nkhuli, which refers to the irresistible desire or yearning for meat.

ment and prosperity. On this occasion there is a colorful ceremony every year when various youth groups come together, present musical and dance performances, and participate in pageants.

❁ LABOR DAY

Observed by: General Public

Observed on: May 1

May 1 is celebrated as Labor Day, also known as May Day or Workers' Day, in many parts of the world and commemorates the important role played by workers. In 1889 the Second International, a consortium of socialist organizations, declared May 1 a day to recognize the importance of workers around the world and scheduled the first demonstrations and celebrations for the following year, 1890. They coordinated this observance with the strike called by the U.S. labor union, the American Federation of Labor (AFL), demanding an eight-hour workday. In Zambia Labor Day is a public holiday and is celebrated at public functions addressed by the president and other dignitaries. Banks, as well as all public offices, are closed on this day.

See also Volume III: LABOR DAY

❁ AFRICA DAY

Observed by: General Public

Observed on: May 25

The anniversary of the establishment of the Organization of African Unity (renamed the African Union in 2002), May 25, is celebrated in all African countries as Africa Day. Established in 1963 this Union has been formed to promote unity, solidarity, and international cooperation among the newly independent African states. Committed to promoting self-government, respect for territorial boundaries, and social progress throughout the African Continent, OAU/AU members celebrate the date of its establishment as a national holiday in their respective countries. In Zambia defense chiefs and members of the diplomatic corps lay wreaths at the Freedom Statue to mark Africa Freedom Day. In addition to a colorful ceremony, the Zambian Army fires a gun salute in memory of the heroes who died in the freedom struggle.

❁ HEROES' DAY

Observed by: General Public

Observed on: First Monday in July

For the Zambian people and their government, obtaining independence from colonial rule is so great and meaningful an achievement that it needs to be celebrated in different ways on separate occasions. On this day every year Zambians spend the day remembering those who died in the independence movement.

✿ UNITY DAY

Observed by: General Public

Observed on: First Tuesday in July

Unity Day, celebrated on the first Tuesday in July every year, is similar in spirit to Heroes' Day. Here the focus shifts slightly to the thought that these heroes died fighting for an independent and united Zambia. On this day, Zambians renew their pledge to keep the country united.

✿ FARMER'S DAY

Observed by: General Public

Observed on: First Monday of August

A public holiday observed on the first Monday of August, Farmer's Day marks the culmination of eight weeks of provincial and district shows and five days of the annual agricultural show held in Lusaka. It is an important day for Zambians, since the economy is agriculture based.

✿ INDEPENDENCE DAY

Observed by: General Public

Observed on: October 24

The Republic of Zambia came into existence on October 24, 1964, bringing an end to British colonial rule. On Independence Day people gather in the capital city of Lusaka and witness the unfurling of the national flag by the president while the national anthem plays in the background. After the customary official speeches and military parades, the president honors those Zambians who have made significant contributions to the development of the nation's economy, growth, and national security in the preceding year. The President's Insignia of Honor, President's Insignia of Recognition, and the Order of Distinguished Service, 1st, 2nd, 3rd, and 4th Division, are given to the honorees. The function at the State House is marked by musical entertainment and dancing, which form part of the rich cultural heritage of Zambia. A huge cake is also cut by the president to commemorate this special day.

Religious Holidays

✿ GOOD FRIDAY

Observed by: Christians

Observed on: Friday before Easter

The Christian holiday of Good Friday falls on the Friday before Easter and is the last Friday of the austere 40-day fast of Lent. Good Friday commemorates the Crucifixion of Jesus. On Good Friday, Zambians attend services in church and continue their fast. The services include readings from the Women dance and sing freedom songs during Zambia's Independence Day at State House in Lusaka. (AP Photo/Salim Henry)

Psalms and Gospel accounts of Jesus' Crucifixion.

See also Volume III: CHRISTIANITY; EASTER. GOOD FRIDAY; HOLY WEEK; LENT

✿ EASTER

Observed by: Christians

Observed on: First Sunday after Lent

The Christian festival of Easter, also called Pascha, is celebrated to mark Jesus' Resurrection three days after his death on the Cross. It celebrates the victory of life over death and redemption for Christians. It falls on the first Sunday after Lent and is celebrated by Christians the world over. Zambian Roman Catholics attend a special Easter Sunday Mass. A lavish feast is prepared consisting of nshima (porridge) and meat dishes while children enjoy sweets and cakes.

See also Volume III: CHRISTIANITY; EASTER; HOLY WEEK; LENT

✿ EASTER MONDAY

Observed by: Christians

Observed on: First Monday after Easter

The first Monday after Easter is celebrated as Easter Monday. Zambians celebrate Easter Monday with great fervor. Children make multicolored Easter eggs and have egg-rolling contests on this day. Eggs and rabbits are ancient symbols of fertility, life, and birth, going back to pagan spring festivals in Europe and have been associated with Easter since its first observances.

See also Volume III: CHRISTIANITY; EASTER; SPRING FESTIVALS

❁ CHRISTMAS

Observed by: Christians

Observed on: December 25

Christmas is a day of celebration for Christians all over the world, marking the birth of Jesus, regarded by Christians as the Messiah. In Zambian churches Nativity plays are staged, and crèches are set up. Two days before Christmas, children sing carols in the streets to collect money for charity. On Christmas children are encouraged to give presents to poor and sick children who would otherwise not be receiving presents.

See also Volume III: CHRISTIANITY; CHRISTMAS

Regional Holidays

❁ ZAMBIA AGRICULTURAL SHOW

Observed in: Lusaka

Observed by: General Public

Observed on: July–August

This show is extremely important for Zambians because the majority of the population is dependent on subsistence agriculture. It showcases not only the farmers' products, but also those of manufacturers who produce agricultural equipment and machinery. Even small-scale farmers get an opportunity to showcase their produce at this international event. This show attracts investors and businessmen looking for opportunities as well as farmers. It is attended not only by the African countries, but is truly international in character. Some of the participating countries are: Botswana, Burundi, Zimbabwe, Tanzania, Malawi, Kenya, South Africa, Namibia, Sweden, Holland, Norway, Egypt, England, Pakistan, India, China, France, and Germany. A music festival accompanies the agricultural show.

❁ LUSAKA MUSIC FESTIVAL

Observed in: Lusaka

Observed by: General Public

Observed on: October

At this popular and unique festival, Zambia can be seen at its cultural best. Different tribes come together with their varied musical heritages and dancing styles to enthrall the public. The performances are accompanied by some community activity such as hunting or fishing. On average around 20,000 people attend this festival.

Rites of Passage

❁ COMING OF AGE

The attitudes of the various tribes on sexual initiation differ across Zambia. The Bemba tribes expect teenage girls to be chaste before marriage, while the Chewa permit discreet sexual relationships among the young. Education through initiation ceremonies nevertheless remains the most common traditional method of sex education. In Zambia it is taboo for a girl's parents to discuss sex with her. The Bemba tribes seclude teenage girls as soon as they begin to menstruate, for a few days to a month, and instruct them about familial and personal matters, such as sexual hygiene and childbirth. Surprisingly, except for western Zambia, where male circumcision takes place, there is little evidence of initiation rites for boys elsewhere in Zambia.

Further Reading

Jorge F. Balat and Guido G. Porto, Globalization and Complementary Policies: Poverty Impacts in Rural Zambia (Cambridge, Mass.: National Bureau of Economic Research, 2005); Michael Barrett, Paths to Adulthood: Freedom, Belonging, and Temporalities in Mbunda Biographies from Western Zambia (Uppsala, Sweden: Uppsala University Library, distributor, 2004); Karen Tranberg Hansen, Salaula: The World of Secondhand Clothing and Zambia (Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 2000); Hugo F. Hinfelaar, History of the Catholic Church in Zambia (Lusaka, Zambia: Bookworld Publishers, 2004); Stuart A. Marks, Large Mammals and a Brave People: Subsistence Hunters in Zambia (New Brunswick, N.J.: Transaction Publishers, 2005); Shadrack Wanjala Nasongo, Contending Political Paradigms in Africa: Rationality and the Politics of Democratization in Kenya and Zambia (New York: Routledge, 2005).

❧ Zimbabwe ❧

COUNTRY FACT FILE
Location	Southern Africa bordered by South Africa to the south, Mozambique to the east, Zambia to the north, and Botswana to the west
Size	150,804 sq. mi.
Capital City	Harare
Flag Description	Zimbabwe's flag has horizontal bands in seven colors: Green (top), yellow, red, black (center), red, yellow, and green (bottom) with a white triangle edged in black on the hoist side. A yellow bird native to Zimbabwe, which represents the long history of the country, is superimposed on a red five-pointed star in the center of the triangle.
Independence	April 18, 1980 (from United Kingdom)
Population	12,746,990 (2005 est.)
Government	Parliamentary democracy
Nationality	Zimbabwean
Major Ethnic Group(s)	Black (98%, of which Shona are 82%)
Major Language(s)	English (official); Shona; Sindebele (language of the Ndebele); and numerous minor tribal dialects
Major Religion(s)	Syncretic (50%: part Christian, part indigenous beliefs); Christian (25%); Indigenous beliefs (24%)
National Holiday(s)	New Year's Day, January 1; Independence Day, April 18; Africa Day, May 25; Unity Day, December 22

Introduction

❧ HISTORY

The Limpopo River in Zimbabwe has figured importantly in the history and development of this part of Africa. Around the beginning of the Christian era, villagers living along the Limpopo developed a thriving trade with people who worked their way south along Africa's Indian Ocean coastline. These villagers exchanged animal skins, ivory, and other valuable items for glass beads. Eventually some villages became wealthier than others, and more people moved to the city from the countryside. In the villages some people amassed more wealth than others, through which they gained power in their communities. This elite group proclaimed its superior status through architecture, using the topography to best advantage, and some settlements became more important than others did. Among them was Mapungubwe.

To date, the Iron Age city of Mapungubwe is the earliest known site in southern Africa where a class-based society had evolved. Mapungubwe, located where the Limpopo and Shashe Rivers meet, was a wealthy trading center from 1220 to around 1300. Settled during the 11th century, the city grew because of its access to the Limpopo River, which provided access to the ports of Kilwa and other sites along the Indian Ocean. This new trade route was connected to existing regional networks along which salt, cattle, fish, metals, chert, ostrich-eggshell beads, and other items had been flowing for centuries. Twenty-three graves have been excavated from an elite graveyard at the top of the hill; three of these graves held bodies that had been buried seated upright, a position that indicates wealth and power, with a variety of gold and copper items, exotic glass beads, and other prestigious objects.

Mapungubwe's life as a capital did not last long, flourishing only between 1290 and 1300. Instead, the distinctive stone wall architecture, which symbolized differential social status, reached its peak at Great Zimbabwe, a city that grew in importance as Mapungubwe's declined.

No detailed information is known about the people who lived in the ancient city of Great Zimbabwe. They had no written language and their oral traditions did not survive to tell their story. Around 500, the Shona people began moving into this area; in the 1100s they began to build the stone walls.

Great Zimbabwe is but one among many similar settlements built with dry stone walls with distinctive designs at their center. These were not the walls of houses. They symbolized, through their position and design, that an elite class lived near them, utilizing the same logic found in the graves on Mapungubwe's hilltop. These stone buildings, which stretched from the Kalahari Desert in the west to the Indian Ocean in the east, were probably regional centers in a complex social and economic network. Great Zimbabwe was apparently the greatest, undoubtedly the capital of a state founded on the gold trade.

Great Zimbabwe was built as a religious center to worship Mwari, the creator of life. The elliptically shaped building made of stone remains the most remarkable of all their works. The outer wall is 80 feet high and up to 17 feet thick, spanning more than 800 feet. At the height of this great civilization, more than 20,000 people lived near the elliptical building in mud huts. The civilization disappeared with its extraordinary walls, and is considered one of the great lost civilizations of the world. It is now a UN World Heritage Site.

By the mid-15th century the Mwene Mutaoa Empire ruled Zimbabwe and most of what is now Mozambique. Though agriculture was their main source of livelihood, they also exchanged ivory and gold with the Arabs for clothes, glass, and porcelain from Asia. The Rozwi Empire overthrew the Portuguese, who during the 16th and 17th centuries had controlled a fair amount of the territory after sending in troops to avenge the killing of Catholic missionaries. The Rozwi Empire ruled for almost 200 years until the Ngoni tribes overthrew it.

In 1888 British financier and colonizer Cecil Rhodes (1852–1902) acquired exclusive mining rights from King Lobengula (d. 1894), the last king of the Ndebele (or Matabele). Realizing the immense mining potential of the region, Rhodes sought to bypass the king entirely and obtained a charter from Queen Victoria in 1889 and authorization for the British South Africa Company (BSAC) to conquer the Ndebele region. In 1895 the region was named Rhodesia, in honor of Cecil Rhodes.

Soon the region swarmed with Europeans. Pressed to the wall, the Shona and Ndebele tribes staged violent revolts against BSAC. By 1897, however, the leaders of the tribe had been caught and hanged by BSAC, ending the revolt brutally. In 1922 Southern Rhodesia became an independent British colony.

In 1953 a federation of Rhodesia and Nyasaland was formed, which included Northern and Southern Rhodesia. However, the federation lasted only for 10 years and was dissolved in 1963. Around this time the Europeans in Southern Rhodesia demanded independence from the British, who did not show much interest in their demands. Without waiting for British sanction, the white majority, led by Ian Smith (b. 1919), declared independence on November 11, 1965. The region ignored UN sanctions and declared itself a republic in 1970.

During this period there were widespread conflicts between the minority whites and majority blacks in the region. Guerilla warfare activities had transformed the country into a war zone. The Smith government decided to negotiate a peace with the warring factions as his government was under immense pressure to bring stability to the region. Robert Mugabe (b. 1924), the leader of Zimbabwe African National Union (ZANU), entered into negotiations with the Smith government. Also party to the negotiations was Joshua Nkomo (? 1918–99) of the Zimbabwe African People's Union (ZAPU).

The first free and open elections in Zimbabwe were held in 1980, and Robert Mugabe was declared the winner. However, internal conflicts between ZANU and ZAPU unleashed an ethnic war in Zimbabwe. In 1987 Mugabe signed a peace accord with ZAPU to put an end to violence in the region, and ZANU-PF (Zimbabwe African National Union-Patriotic Front) was formed. Unfortunately the peace lasted only five years. After the drought of 1992, the problem of the white minority owning the majority of Zimbabwe's land again sparked racial violence. In 1999 Mugabe's regime began the redistribution of land by forcing whites to relinquish their ownership rights to the government. This move by the government, along with its inability to curb violence against the whites, received widespread international attention.

The Commonwealth of Nations suspended Zimbabwe's membership in the wake of reports on human rights abuses in the region. Later Zimbabwe itself withdrew from the Commonwealth.

Fun Fact

Both Ndebele and Matabele mean "the people of the long shields," referring to the Matabele warriors' use of the Zulu shield and spear.

❁ GEOGRAPHY AND CLIMATE

A landlocked country with Mozambique, Zambia, South Africa, and Botswana as its neighbors, Zimbabwe was known during its colonial era first as Southern Rhodesia and subsequently as Rhodesia. It is a beautiful country high on a plateau with the Zambezi River adorning its northeastern border. The incomparable spectacles of Victoria Falls and Lake Kariba are world-famous natural sites.

Most of Zimbabwe is covered with low msasa trees and savanna grasslands. In drier regions, aloe vera is plentiful. The area surrounding the Okowango, Kwando, and Zambezi Rivers is known as the Eden of Africa. It extends to the Thirstland of the Kalahari Desert, the Okowango Swamps, and to the tropical paradise around Victoria Falls. The area had not been completely explored until fairly recently. There are approximately 500 native species of birds, sable antelopes, roan antelopes, elephants, buffaloes, hippopotamus, and crocodiles.

Zimbabwe lies south of the equator. October through April are the summer months here. It is hot throughout the day, with thunderstorms in the afternoon. In areas such as the Kariba Falls, Victoria Falls, and the Zambezi Valley, it is warm throughout the year. The rainy season begins in November and lasts until March. Summer is at its peak at Christmastime.

❁ ECONOMY

The major industries of the country include mining, clothing, agriculture, and tourism. Zimbabwe's major trading partners are South Africa, the United Kingdom, the United States, Argentina, and Japan. The majority of Zimbabwe's population is engaged in farming and raising poultry and cattle. Agriculture is the main sector in the Zimbabwean economy, and corn is the country's largest crop. The main crops that are exported are cotton and tobacco. The country has a reasonable quantity of metallurgical-grade chromites. Coal, copper, nickel, gold, and iron are also available here, as is considerable hydroelectric power. But the long-term political turmoil and the AIDS epidemic have seriously affected the nation's development. The economy had started off well in the 1970s, but due to internal politics, bloodshed, guerilla warfare, and increasing white emigration, efforts toward economic growth have failed. In recent times President Robert Mugabe's land reform policies have worsened the situation.

❁ CULTURE AND LIFESTYLE

Zimbabwean society is a fusion of African and European cultures. Its architecture stands out from the rest of Africa. The central granite plateau was home to many Shona people who constructed elaborate stone structures. In Zimbabwe many stone ruins survive, such as the Great Zimbabwe (after which the country is named), Dhlodhlo, and Khami. Some small villages date back to the 11th century C.E.

Artists occupy a prominent position in Zimbabwe. Traditional arts like pottery, jewelry, carving, and textiles are encouraged. Symmetrically woven baskets and stools carved out of a single piece of

Victoria Falls

One of the major tourist attractions of Zimbabwe is Victoria Falls, also known as the "Smoke that Thunders." It is twice as high as Niagara Falls and one and a half times as wide. In 1855 David Livingstone (of "Dr. Livingstone, I presume?" fame) was the first European to see these falls.

wood have won worldwide appreciation for their craftsmanship.

Zimbabwean songs are usually sung at weddings and parties. The marimba, a wooden xylophone, and mbira, a thumb piano, are the traditional musical instruments. The mujenjeje, or "stone bells," are percussion instruments unique to Zimbabwe.

The natives of Zimbabwe follow Christianity as well as their traditional beliefs. A monotheistic animist belief system called the Mwari Cult worships animals and spirits. English is the official language of Zimbabwe although it is only spoken by 1 percent of the population. The natives use Shona and Sendebele, both Bantu languages. Christian missionaries promoted education in Zimbabwe, and many schools are still run by religious orders. Education was traditionally a privilege reserved for men, though women do now have access to education. Until 1965 the country had only two government schools. Since 1987 compulsory education in schools has resulted in an impressive growth in literacy levels.

❁ CUISINE

Born out of a fusion of British and African influences, Zimbabwean cuisine is a combination of bland and spicy tastes. The dietary staple is sadza—a white maize porridge—upon which most local meals are built. Nyama, or "meat," is usually beef or chicken. However, the more indigenous recipes use crocodile, kudu ("antelope"), and impala meat. Zimbabweans do

Parks and Wildlife

In Zimbabwe more than 11 percent of the land is set aside for parks and wildlife. There are as many as 10 national parks and more than 10 recreational parks around the country. Botanical gardens, hunting areas, and sanctuaries also figure in the "must see" list in Zimbabwe. Hwange National Park is the country's largest wildlife park. Regarded as one of the last elephant sanctuaries in Africa, Hwange Park also protects different species of birds and a variety of other animals. The Mana Pools National Park has many varieties of antelopes, buffaloes, and elephants.

Hidden Treasure

The early Europeans who followed the Portuguese into southern Africa spent large parts of their lives seeking hidden treasure, especially gold, and the lost kingdoms of the Bible. When they found the real treasure of the region, the valuable items buried with the royalty of Great Zimbabwe in the 1930s, they hid the find for decades because its beauty contradicted the racist histories they promulgated. Perhaps one of the finest objects illustrating the greatness of Zimbabwe's heritage is a rhinoceros intricately crafted in gold leaf more than a century before the renaissance began in Europe.

not favor fruits and vegetables, but gem squash (a type of marrow) is a delicacy. Chibuku, a local beer resembling cocoa, is the alcohol of the masses.

Public/Legal Holidays

NEW YEAR'S EVE/DAY

Observed by: General Public
Observed on: December 31–January 1

Zimbabwe follows the Western, or Gregorian, calendar in observing January 1 as the first day of a new year. It is the height of summer in Zimbabwe, and the celebrations with family and friends are often held outdoors.

INDEPENDENCE DAY

Observed by: General Public
Observed on: April 18

British explorers and missionaries arrived as early as 1850 in the region that was to become British-controlled Rhodesia. In 1923 the European settlers in Southern Rhodesia voted to become a self-governing British colony. The white supremacist government excluded blacks from voting, from ownership of the best farmland, and from most professions and skilled trades. Around 1965 Rhodesia, under the leadership of Prime Minister Ian Smith, expressed its desire for freedom from British control, which Britain would agree to only with a string of conditions unacceptable to the government.

In 1968 Rhodesia proclaimed itself a republic. In the wake of this unilateral declaration by Smith, Britain complained to the United Nations, which imposed sanctions against Zimbabwe. Meanwhile worsening race relations and guerilla attacks led many European farmers to abandon their lands. In March 1978, an agreement was signed to transfer power to the blacks with Smith retaining the post of prime minister. The European minority was forced to hold free and open elections in 1980. As a result of the first multiracial elections, Robert Mugabe was elected prime minister, then executive president, and finally president (in 1990). Bob Marley and the Wailers were the main attractions at the Independence Day celebrations. The song "Zimbabwe" by Bob Marley had inspired the country's National Liberation Army.

On this day all government offices, commercial establishments, and educational institutions remain closed in Zimbabwe. The national flag is unfurled at official Independence Day functions followed by parades.

AFRICA DAY

Observed by: Africans
Observed on: May 25

Africa Day, or African Liberation Day, commemorates the establishment of the OAU (Organization of African Unity) in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, in 1963. It honors the independence struggles of the African nations and promotes unity and solidarity among the African states. Many of the African countries suffered under colonial rule. The indigenous peoples were denied their basic rights and it was only after years of struggle, courage, and strength that freedom was restored. Zimbabweans use this opportunity to reflect on their history, achievements, and to learn about the culture and heritage of other African countries.

UNITY DAY

Observed by: General Public
Observed on: December 22

This day celebrates the signing of the Unity Accord by Robert Mugabe, the leader of Zimbabwe African National Union (ZANU), and Joshua Nkomo, leader of the Zimbabwe African People's Union (ZAPU). It put an end to five years of continuous civil war in western Zimbabwe between the two major parties, the ZAPU and ZANU-PF. Unity Day seeks to educate people about their responsibilities as citizens of Zimbabwe. On this day they come together to express their commitment to their nation in public lectures and seminars.

Religious Holidays

GOOD FRIDAY

Observed by: Christians
Observed on: Friday before Easter

Among Christians Good Friday, also known as Mourning Friday, Holy Friday, or Great Friday (in the Eastern Orthodox Churches) is observed as the day when Jesus was crucified. They believe that he rose from the dead three days later, and this event is celebrated on Easter Sunday. On Good Friday, Christian Zimbabweans mourn Jesus' death and attend special services and prayers during the day, where priests explain the significance of Good Friday. They remember the ultimate sacrifice Jesus made to atone for the sins of people on Earth, and look forward to Easter Sunday.

See also Volume III: CHRISTIANITY; EASTER; GOOD FRIDAY; HOLY WEEK; LENT

❁ HOLY SATURDAY

Observed by: Christians

Observed on: Saturday before Easter

Holy Saturday is a day of reflection and prayer leading up to the celebration of Jesus' Resurrection on Easter. In the evening, just before midnight, the Easter Vigil is celebrated. This ceremony celebrates Jesus' Resurrection from the dead and the redemption of humanity. In churches, people light the Easter fire to begin the service, and parishioners carry lit candles in a procession.

See also Volume III: CHRISTIANITY; EASTER; HOLY WEEK; LENT

❁ EASTER

Observed by: Christians

Observed on: First Sunday after Lent

Easter, which celebrates the Resurrection of Jesus following his Crucifixion, is the most important Christian festival of the liturgical year. This occasion is widely celebrated in Zimbabwe, where priests wear special ceremonial white vestments for the occasion. Hymns are accompanied by the beating of drums. Musical competitions and concerts are held throughout the country, including the Easter Jazz Concert in the capital Harare.

See also Volume III: CHRISTIANITY; EASTER; HOLY WEEK; LENT

❁ CHRISTMAS

Observed by: Christians

Observed on: December 25

Christmas, also called Kisimusi in Zimbabwe, the celebration of the birth of Jesus, marks the onset of a season of gift-giving in Zimbabwe. Fellowship is an important part of Kisimusi in Zimbabwe. Fathers give their children and wives clothes and candy. At the early morning church service, children sing special songs. Christmas celebrations start early, with the collection of bread, jams, tea, and sugar for the Christmas Day feast for the members of the church. This meal is usually hosted at a parishioner's home. Women belonging to a particular church take turns preparing the meal so that no one has to miss the church service. Freshly roasted ox and goat meat, cornmeal porridge, bread, jam, and sugar are the main foods served at the feast. After the meal, everybody gathers in the church common hall to sing carols. The minister then gives an informal sermon. When the Sun sets children play around the fire. At sundown the day is officially considered over.

Zimbabwe president Robert Mugabe lights the independence flame during the country's annual Independence Day celebrations on April 18 in the National Sports Stadium outside Harare. (AP Photo/Rob Cooper)

See also Volume III: CHRISTIANITY; CHRISTMAS

❁ BOXING DAY

Observed by: Christians

Observed on: December 26

Boxing Day falls on the day after Christmas; it is also the feast day of St. Stephen, the first Christian martyr. The name Boxing Day is thought to have originated with the opening of church charity boxes on that day. For British Commonwealth countries, including Zimbabwe, this extension of the Christmas holiday is a legacy of their British colonial past. Traditionally business owners present gifts in the form of money to their employees on that day. In Zimbabwe gifts and money are donated to the poor on this day.

See also Volume III: BOXING DAY; CHRISTIANITY; CHRISTMAS

Rites of Passage

❁ BIRTH

In Zimbabwe the birth of a child is an auspicious occasion for the whole family. Women gain more status at home after becoming mothers. During the seventh month of pregnancy, the expectant father's relatives escort the woman to her parent's home after a joyous celebration. Before the child is born, the family usually appoints one or two elderly women who will take care of the mother and the baby. One woman will be the traditional midwife; she will handle any problems pertaining to pregnancy such as labor pains. Okra, which is highly recommended during pregnancy, is included in the expectant mother's diet.

Soon after the birth, the mother and the baby lead a secluded life for a week until the umbilical cord drops off. During this period of seclusion, the cord is loosely wrapped around the infant. At the end of seclusion, the naming ceremony takes place, and the mother returns with the baby to the husband's home. The father gives a goat to the midwife as a thank-you gift. The infant also receives gifts from relatives. The mother is welcomed back to her husband's home with gifts and food.

❁ MARRIAGE

There are certain protocols that must be followed before a couple can marry. First the woman introduces the man to her aunt, who in turn introduces him to the rest of her family members. A date is arranged for lobola, the dowry the groom's family has to give before the marriage ceremony. At this huge gathering the girl's family has the prerogative to decide whether they want the lobola in money, cattle, or clothes. On this day the groom may request the bride's father's permission to have a Christian wedding. Both families share the wedding expenses.

After marriage the women dress more elaborately. Among the Ndebele tribes of the Zimbabwean region, women adorn themselves with spectacular ornaments. Each ornament is symbolic of the woman's status in society. Once a family owns a house, the women wear copper and brass rings around their necks, arms, and legs, expressing their bond with and faith in their husbands. The rings, known as idzila, are removed only after the husband's death. The more rings a woman wears, the richer she and her husband are. After the first child is born, women wear a five-fingered apron, announcing the consummation of their marriage. Women wear a head covering in one form or another as a mark of respect for their husbands. During wedding ceremonies or important social gatherings, men wear ornaments made for them by their wives.

❁ DEATH

In Zimbabwe it is not uncommon for male relatives of a deceased person to shave their heads in mourning. The Shona tribe in Zimbabwe believes that the good virtues of the dead are taken to heaven by the person's soul, and the accumulated evils decompose with the mortal body. Kufu is the Shona word for "death." The Shona believe that certain omens foretell death. It is common to weep over the dead, and mourning lasts a week. It is feared that mourning for a longer period will persuade the dead to linger. The flowers kept on the grave symbolize fertility. Meat and beer are also offered to the dead.

Further Reading

Catholic Commission for Justice and Peace in Zimbabwe, Crisis of Governance: A Report on Political Violence in Zimbabwe (Harare: Author, 2001); Patrick Chiroro, Alexio Mashu, and William Muhwava, The Zimbabwean Male Psyche with Respect to Reproductive Health, HIV, AIDS, and Gender Issues (Harare: Centre for Applied Psychology, University of Zimbabwe, 2002); Alexandra Fuller, Don't Let's Go to the Dogs Tonight: An African Childhood (New York: Random House, 2003); Allison Goebel, Gender and Land Reform: The Zimbabwe Experience (Montreal: McGill-Queen's University Press, 2005); Ane M. Ørbø Kirkegaard, A Matter of Difference?: Family Planning and Gendered Discourses on Sexuality and Reproductive Decision-Making among Black and White Zimbabweans (Göteborg, Sweden: Department of Peace and Development Research, Göteborg University, 2004); Donald S. Moore, Suffering for Territory: Race, Place, and Power in Zimbabwe (Durham, N.C.: Duke University Press, 2005); Jerome Rono Nyathi, Challenges to Fatherhood: Fatherlessness in Africa with Special Reference to Zimbabwe (Zimbabwe: Ilizwi Centre, 2004); Celia Winter-Irving, Pieces of Time: An Anthology of Articles on Zimbabwean Stone Sculpture (Gweru, Zimbabwe: Mambo Press, 2004).

Fun Fact

Zimbabwe is a Shona word that means "house of rocks."

 Overview Entries
A to Z

~ All Saints' Day ~

FACT FILE

Observed in	Countries with Christian populations
Observed on	November 1 or Sunday after Pentecost (Orthodox Christians)
Observed by	Roman Catholics, Orthodox Christians, Lutherans, and Anglicans

Introduction

All Saints' Day is a widely celebrated Christian feast that pays tribute to all Christian saints, both renowned and obscure. According to Pope Urban IV (r. 1261–64), observing this day also makes up for any inadequacies in an individual's observance of saints' feast days during the previous year. In the Western churches (especially Lutheran, Anglican, and Roman Catholic) this festival is celebrated on November 1, while the Eastern Orthodox Churches observe it on the first Sunday following Pentecost. Due to their differing perceptions of the individuality and purpose of the saints, the Christian denominations vary widely in their celebrations of All Saints' Day.

For Orthodox Christians, Roman Catholics, and to some extent Anglicans, the event is a day to remember the saints and to thank God. It is also a day to honor and give thanks to the saints for fulfilling the believer's prayers. It is a common practice among Christians to honor and pay homage to the better known saints on certain days designated as their feast days, but there are many unsung or lesser known saints who have almost passed into oblivion or are given little recognition today. On All Saints' Day, Christians remember such nearly forgotten saints and request their intercession in mundane matters. An "intercessory prayer" is the act of praying on behalf of other people, and it goes beyond the typical requests of routine prayers offered for others. The person making an intercessory prayer acts as an intermediary between God and the person or people being prayed for, thereby bridging the gap between them. The intention of these earnest prayers is not merely to request that God grant the wishes of the intermediary, but to express the expectation that God will bring to pass whatever is prayed for.

This is a unique festival for Christians, one that enlightens and inspires them by examples and incidents from the lives of the saints. The nearly 2,000 years of Church history is replete with anecdotes of faithful, devout Christians, some famous (such as Augustine, Francis of Assisi, or Joan of Arc), others innocuous and known only to God. On All Saints' Day Christians venerate not only popular saints but lesser known holy men and women as well.

Origins and History

During the very early days of Christianity, only John the Baptist and the martyrs were given the privilege of having a special day for themselves. The rest of the saints were gradually added, and they increased in number after the pope instituted a process of canonization in the fourth century.

The practice of honoring saints and martyrs of the Christian faith may have begun as early as the second century C.E. The "Martyrdom of Polycarp," an encyclical epistle of the Church at Smyrna, writ-

Fun Fact

Samhain means "November" in the Celtic language. The same word was used for the first month of the ancient Celtic calendar and, in particular, the first three nights of this month, the festival marking the beginning of the winter season.

Patron Saints

The various areas and situations of life are watched over by a vast number of patron saints, custodians, and protectors. For example, St. Vitus (c. third century) is the patron saint who keeps people from oversleeping; St. Joseph of Cupertino (1603–63) protects air travelers. Many of these saints have the privilege of their own feast days. For example, St. Hilary of Poitiers (c. 300–68), the patron saint of developmentally challenged children, has his feast day on January 13; the others are all remembered on All Saints' Day.

Fun Fact

The Pantheon in Rome was originally built as a temple to all the gods of the Roman religion, but it has been a Christian church since the seventh century C.E. The Church of Santa Maria ad Martyres is the only building remaining from the ancient world that is still intact and has been used throughout its history.

ten around the middle of the second century, confirms this. In the fourth century, dioceses began to exchange feasts, to transfer relics, and to partake in a common feast. Often, groups of martyrs had been persecuted on the same day; so a joint tribute seemed quite logical. From the persecution of Diocletian (245–313), there were so many martyrs that there were not enough days in the calendar to give each one his or her own feast day. The church, upholding the sentiment that all martyrs deserved to be honored, gradually evolved the practical idea of a common day for all.

The first All Saints' Day has an interesting history behind it. Flavius Phocas Augustus (r. 602–10) ruled Rome and Byzantium as Eastern Roman emperor. During his reign, the Byzantines controlled the city of Rome although the pope enjoyed considerable power. Since he tended to side with the popes in many of the contemporary theological controversies, Phocas was on good terms with the papacy. During the last year of his reign, Phocas gave the Pantheon (a magnificent edifice in Rome that housed statues of Roman gods and goddesses such as Jupiter, Venus, and Mars) to Pope Boniface IV (r. 608–15) to convert into a church; on May 13, 609, the temple was consecrated by the pope to the Virgin Mary and all the Christian martyrs. Twenty-eight cartloads of sacred bones of various martyrs and saints were believed to have been removed from the catacombs (underground burial places) and placed in a basin made of porphyry (a red Egyptian stone like granite) beneath the main altar of the Pantheon. Boniface renamed the edifice the Church of Santa Maria ad Martyres. This church is believed to be the first pagan temple to be transformed into a Christian shrine, and its consecration, the very first observance of All Saints' Day.

The present observance (November 1) possibly began during the reign of Pope Gregory III (r. 731–41). During his reign All Saints' Day began to embrace all the saints in its observances. In 835 Pope Gregory IV (r. 827–44) fixed the date of the festival on November 1 and christened the festival the “Feast of All Saints.”

A French baker's wife shows an All Saints' Day cake that comes with cards detailing the lives of different saints at her bakery in Paris, France. All Saints' Day, which falls on November 1, is a Christian holiday set aside to remember the saints. From left to right, images of St. Thomas, St. Francis of Assisi, and St. Theresese decorate the bakery. (AP Photo/Francois Mori)

Around the time of its establishment, the Roman Catholic Church earnestly endeavored to mold pagan local celebrations in order to transform them into Christian holidays. For centuries the church has designated All Saints' Day as a day to exalt the saints. But because the Celts were reluctant to give up their end-of-summer celebration, which is called Samhain (October 31), the Church blended and fused Samhain with All Saints' Day (traditionally celebrated in May) to evolve what is known as the Eve of All Saints, or Eve of All Hallowes, or Hallow Even. The name eventually became Halloween. That is why All Saints' Day has the ancillary festival of Halloween, the underlying purpose of which is to honor and remember everything that is past and gone and to begin life again.

The communion of saints is the focal point of All Saints' Day celebrations. All of God's people, on earth, in heaven, and in the state of cleansing (generally referred to as purgatory) are believed to be inextricably linked in a communion. Orthodox Christians and Catholics alike are steadfast in their belief that the saints are as full of life as those living in this world; what is more, the saints are continually praying for ordinary mortals.

The purpose of all such feasts is to remember each and every one of those noble souls and holy men and women who have departed from this world, whether they are officially recognized by the church as saints or not. It is a celebration of the communion of saints. According to the Catechism of the Catholic Church, the communion of saints provides “a perennial link of charity . . . between the faithful who have already reached their heavenly home, those who are atoning for their sins in purgatory and those who are still pilgrims on Earth. Between them there is, too, an abundant exchange of all good things.”

See also Volume I: ANDORRA; ANGOLA; ANTIGUA AND BARBUDA; ARGENTINA; ARMENIA; AUSTRALIA; AUSTRIA; BELARUS; BELGIUM; BELIZE; BOLIVIA; BOSNIA AND HERZEGOVINA; BRAZIL; BULGARIA; BURUNDI; CANADA; CAPE VERDE; CHILE; COLOMBIA; CONGO, DEMOCRATIC REPUBLIC OF THE; COSTA RICA; CROATIA; CYPRUS; CZECH

An All Saints' Day Prayer

Father, all-powerful and ever-living God, today we rejoice in the holy men and women of every time and place.

May their prayers bring us your forgiveness and love.

We ask this in the name of Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

—From Christian Prayer: Liturgy of the Hours

REPUBLIC; DENMARK; DOMINICA; DOMINICAN REPUBLIC; ECUADOR; EL SALVADOR; EQUATORIAL GUINEA; ESTONIA; FINLAND; FRANCE; GEORGIA; GERMANY; GREECE; GRENADA; GUATEMALA; HAITI; HONDURAS; HUNGARY; ICELAND; IRELAND; ITALY; KIRIBATI

See also Volume II: LATVIA; LIECHTENSTEIN; LITHUANIA; LUXEMBOURG; MACEDONIA; MALTA; MEXICO; MICRONESIA, FEDERATED STATES OF; MOLDOVA; MONACO; NAMIBIA; NEW ZEALAND; NICARAGUA; NORWAY; PALAU; PANAMA; PARAGUAY; PERU; PHILIPPINES; POLAND; PORTUGAL; ROMANIA; RUSSIA; RWANDA; ST. LUCIA; SAN MARINO; SERBIA AND MONTENEGRO; SEYCHELLES; SLOVAKIA; SLOVENIA; SPAIN; SWEDEN; SWITZERLAND; TRINIDAD AND TOBAGO; UGANDA; UKRAINE; UNITED KINGDOM; URUGUAY; VATICAN CITY; VENEZUELA

See also Volume III: ALL SOULS' DAY; CHRISTIANITY; PENTECOST

Further Reading

Joseph Bathanti, The Feast of All Saints (La Plume, Pa.: Nightshade Press, 1994); Brent Benoit, All Saints' Day (New York: Overlook Press, 2002); Catherine Chambers, All Saints, All Souls, and Halloween (Chicago: Raintree Publishing, 2000); Ohio Sisters of Notre Dame of Chardon, Saints and Feast Days: Lives of the Saints (Chicago: Loyola Press, 1985); Anne Rice, The Feast of All Saints (New York: Ballantine Books, 1986); N. T. Wright, For All the Saints?: Remembering the Christian Departed (Harrisburg, Pa.: Morehouse Publishing, 2004).

~ All Souls' Day ~

FACT FILE

Observed in	Countries with Roman Catholic populations
Observed on	November 2
Observed by	Roman Catholics

Introduction

In the Catholic faith All Souls' Day is a day of remembrance for one's deceased loved ones. This festival originated as the early pagan celebration of the dead. These pre-Christian people believed that their deceased loved ones would come back for a meal with their families. Candles were placed near the windows to guide the souls back home, and there were special places set at the table for them. Young children went from house to house asking for food for the returned deceased and gave what they had received to the poor.

On All Souls' Day the living pray for those who are in purgatory. All Souls' Day deliberately follows the celebration of All Saints' Day in order to shift the focus from those in heaven to those in purgatory (where souls are cleansed before going on to heaven). It is observed with festivities and a Mass. The Feast of All Souls is a reminder of the necessity of living a pure life. According to Catholic belief, it is imperative for souls in purgatory to suffer in order to be purged of their sins. All Souls' Day is a time to pray for those souls so that they can enter heaven.

Soulcakes

Soulcakes are flat or round buns made from oatmeal or flour and flavored with saffron and spices. They are eaten on November 1 to celebrate All Hallows' Day, the pagan Feast of the Dead. Plays were once performed on this day to mark the onset of winter. In Cheshire, the actors were called Soul Cakers or Soulers because they visited every house in the neighborhood asking for soulcakes in return for a blessing or a song. This was a tradition in the Middle Ages, when soulcakes were regarded as payment for souls afflicted in purgatory. It was the Protestant Reformation that eventually brought this practice to an end.

Origins and History

Certain beliefs linked with the festival are of pagan origin, a blending of beliefs from the Old and New Worlds. Before it was turned into a church festival in 998, All Souls' Day in Europe was marked with observances from the festival of Odin or Woden, the supreme god of wisdom and war in Norse (Viking) mythology. Odin was believed to welcome the spirits of brave warriors (Einherjar) into his grand hall Valhalla. The souls of these warriors were gathered to aid the gods in Ragnarok (the final battle of the world). In order to get the very best warriors into Valhalla, Odin was believed to start wars and then send his Valkyries (female divinities who served him) to make the battles go the way he wanted them to go and to choose the dead who would reside in Valhalla.

In South America the Spanish conquest in 1521 resulted in a blending of Catholic and Amerindian beliefs. The Aztec calendar had two months dedicated to observances for the dead, including a grand feast for dead adults in the 10th month. The ninth month was dedicated to dead children. The Aztecs believed that the souls of dead people had to go through nine stages before reaching Mictlan, the place of the dead, and that their destiny was set at the time of birth. They also believed that the fate of peoples' souls depended on how they died (which also determined the region to which their soul would go), rather than the quality of the lives they had led. After arriving at their specific destination, the souls either awaited transformation or lingered, waiting for their next destiny. It is possible that some of the practices and beliefs surrounding All Souls' Day (or Day of the Dead) can be traced back to that cultural fusion as well.

All Souls' Day is the day reserved in the Roman Catholic Church to honor the souls waiting in purgatory to enter heaven. Souls that have not been cleansed of venial sins, or those who have not repented for past transgressions, cannot enter heaven. Catholics believe, however, that the Masses and prayers of living members of the church will help their deceased friends and families get into heaven. To that end the clergy perform three requiem Masses to help the souls proceed from purgatory to heaven: one Mass for the departed, one Mass for the celebrant, and one Mass for the pope.

The custom of celebrating this day started separately from that of the Feast of All Saints on November 1. The Feast of All Souls can be traced back to the seventh-century monks, who offered Mass on the day following Pentecost for their departed community members. In the late 10th century, the Benedictine monastery in Cluny, France, decided to schedule the Mass for their deceased on November 2, the day following the

A woman cleans a tomb in preparation for All Souls' Day (Day of the Dead) at the Metropolitan Cemetery in San Jose, Costa Rica. Throughout the world it is customary to clean and decorate the tombs of loved ones in observance of All Souls' Day. (AP Photo/Kent Gilbert)

Halloween

The festival of Halloween originated in the Celtic Samhain celebration of summer's end and the beginning of winter, also known as the reign of the "lord of death" over 2,000 years ago. The Celts believed that, on their New Year's Eve, the last day of the month of October, dead souls arose and searched for the passage to the netherworld, because the veil between the two worlds was very fragile. Lord Samhain, lord of the darkness, also roamed the Earth on this night, searching for these wandering souls so he could take them back to his world. The practice of putting lights in windows to help the dead elude the clutches of Lord Samhain originated in those days. It was believed that, on the festival's eve, he would also collect the evil spirits that had been dwelling in animals for the previous 12 months.

Feast of All Saints. This tradition broadened, and in the 13th century Rome officially added the feast to the church calendar.

There are many customs connected with All Souls' Day celebrations. In many Catholic homes, an altar is built for offerings of food. It is said that the dead consume the offering in spirit, while the living eat it later. The offerings, are often decorated with marigolds, the flower of the dead. A candle is lit for each departed soul. Incense is widely used, and photos, mementos, and other objects connected with the deceased adorn the altar.

During the Reformation, the observance of All Souls' Day was eradicated in the Anglican Church, although it has been reinstated in some churches in England, in association with the "Catholic revival." Among Protestants in Europe, the custom has been more stubbornly maintained. Even Martin Luther's authority was not adequate to eradicate its observance in Saxony (in Germany) during the great Protestant leader's lifetime, and the festival's memory survives in popular customs among Lutherans. In France, it is customary for people, regardless of rank or creed, to adorn the graves of their departed; in Germany people go to the cemeteries to offer flowers.

It is a long-standing belief in many countries that on one night of the year the souls of the dead return to their worldly homes, where they must be given food. If shelter or food is not given, the spirits cast spells on the house. In Tirol, Austria, cakes are left for the deceased on the table and rooms are kept warm for their comfort. The people of Brittany (in northwestern France) gather in cemeteries at nightfall to kneel bareheaded at the graves of their loved ones, and then sprinkle the tombstones with holy water or milk. Before bedtime, supper is left on the table for the souls.

Venial Sins and Mortal Sins

In Catholicism a distinction is made between venial (lesser) sins and mortal (grave) sins. A mortal sin must meet three criteria:

1. The sin must be a serious moral error.
2. The sin must be committed with total knowledge and consciousness.
3. The sin must be committed with total consent.

A venial sin is one that does not meet all three conditions.

The trio of celebrations comprising All Saints' Day Eve, All Saints' Day, and All Souls' Day came to be known as Hallowmas.

See also Volume I: ANDORRA; ANGOLA; ARGENTINA; AUSTRIA; BELGIUM; BELIZE; BOLIVIA; BRAZIL; BURUNDI; CAPE VERDE; CHILE; COLOMBIA; CONGO, DEMOCRATIC REPUBLIC OF THE; COSTA

RICA; CROATIA; CZECH REPUBLIC; DOMINICA; DOMINICAN REPUBLIC; ECUADOR; EL SALVADOR; EQUATORIAL GUINEA; FRANCE; GERMANY; GRENADA; GUATEMALA; HAITI; HONDURAS; HUNGARY; IRELAND; ITALY; KIRIBATI

See also Volume II: LIECHTENSTEIN; LITHUANIA; LUXEMBOURG; MALTA; MEXICO; MICRONESIA, FEDERATED STATES OF; MONACO; NICARAGUA; PALAU; PANAMA; PARAGUAY; PERU; PHILIPPINES; POLAND; PORTUGAL; RWANDA; ST. LUCIA; SAN MARINO; SEYCHELLES; SLOVAKIA; SLOVENIA; SPAIN; SWITZERLAND; TRINIDAD AND TOBAGO; UGANDA; URUGUAY; VATICAN CITY; VENEZUELA

See also Volume III: ALL SAINTS' DAY; CHRISTIANITY; PENTECOST

Further Reading

Mary J. Andrade, Day of the Dead in Mexico/Día de Muertos en México (San Jose, Calif.: La Oferta Review Newspaper, 2003); Catherine Chambers, All Saints, All Souls, and Halloween (Portsmouth, N.H.: Heinemann Library, 2000); John Greenleigh and Rosalind Rosoff Beimler, The Days of the Dead: Mexico's Festival of Communion with the Departed (Rohnert Park, Calif.: Pomegranate Communications, 1998).

Amish

FACT FILE

Located in	United States and Canada
World Population	About 180,000 (only adults are considered Amish)
Place of Origin	Switzerland

Introduction

The Amish are a Christian group with roots in the European Reformation that has become well known for its efforts to maintain its separatist agricultural life, resisting involvement with the state and modern technology. Although the Amish give the impression of living like 19th-century villagers, they have been changing. The Amish scrutinize change and will accept modern gadgetry into their lives, provided doing so does not change their simple lifestyle, which is based on a literal interpretation of the Bible. They live by a set of written and unwritten rules called the Ordnung. They prefer horses and buggies to cars, do not have electricity in their homes, and send their children to small private schoolhouses. The Amish pay school taxes but do not allow their children to continue their education past the eighth grade. Indeed in 1972 the U.S. Supreme Court issued a major decision excusing the Old Order Amish and connected groups from state compulsory attendance laws beyond the eighth grade. However, progressive Amish, along with many Mennonites, attend high school, and some go on to college.

Another point of controversy has been military service, because the Amish are pacifists. During World War II the Amish were given permission to serve their military obligation in civilian public service jobs. This period of public service was awkward for them. After exposure to the conveniences of secular society, they found it difficult to readjust to the Amish way of life once they had completed their service.

Over time the scarcity and rising price of farmland has forced the Amish beyond their historical boundaries in order to find work, making contact with modernity and technology unavoidable and inevitable. As a result of having to abandon farming, some Amish have started their own businesses, while others have accepted “luxuries” such as telephones and, in some cases, even cell phones. A good number of the Amish work in nonagricultural jobs.

The Ordnung (or Order)

The Ordnung comprises the written and unwritten rules and regulations of the Amish church community. It reflects the divine order as opposed to the order of the world and provides laws that give both form and meaning to the daily lives of the Amish. The Ordnung’s purpose is not only to provide a list of individually acceptable or forbidden behaviors, but also to structure a way of life, lived according to God’s will, as expressed in the Gospels. The Ordnung determines broad principles of faith as well as rules for everyday living.

The Amish way of dressing, however, has remained untouched by modern influence. To the Amish, their clothing is an expression of their faith. Their clothing is made from solid colors. Women have the responsibility of making clothes for the family. They wear simple dresses with long sleeves and full skirts. Capes and aprons generally cover their dresses and are fastened with snaps or pins. Amish women do not cut their hair because they believe the Bible discourages the practice.

A man’s good clothing requires a three-piece suit, with hooks and eyes fastening the vest and jacket. The Amish refuse to wear buttons; they believe buttons make their suits resemble military uniforms.

As a rule the Amish avoid anything military because of their pacifism and their persecution by the military in Europe. Men do not shave after marriage, save for the portion above their upper lips, because moustaches also remind them of military harassment.

Choosing a bride is the most important decision of an Amish man’s life. Boys and girls begin to look for partners at the age of 16. By the time a young woman turns 20 and a young man is in his early 20s, their wedding day is imminent; so it is imperative for the prospective couple to become members of the church. They are baptized into the Amish faith and take on the responsibility of following the Ordnung. When he proposes the man may give the woman a clock or a piece of china, not a diamond ring. It is customary for the couple to keep their engagement secret until July or August, when the girl tells her parents about her intentions.

October 11 is Fast Day in Amish communities. It is also the signal for hectic activity to begin. Fall communion occurs the following Sunday, and the second Sunday after the Fast is a big day for the church, because all the couples who want to get married are “published.” This means that after the service the deacon announces the names of the girls to be married and their partners. The fathers then announce the wedding dates. Weddings are set on a Tuesday or Thursday in November or December. The bride wears a blue dress covered by an apron and a cape. Her wedding outfit will become her Sunday church attire, and she will be buried in the same dress when she dies. After the wedding, the couple visits friends’ and relatives’ houses, where gifts await them. The gifts are generally practical items intended for everyday use.

The Amish community is a tightly knit group. They are opposed to buying insurance, and the only indemnity is the fund supported by the church. In case of a disaster, the whole community helps the victim. If an Amish man is sick, and his work needs to be completed, his neighbors get together to do it for him, before they complete their own tasks.

While the Amish keep a distance from the outside world, the commercialization of their culture has no doubt benefited them. Tourism is one major factor. Initially it was resented, and people started moving away from heavily populated areas. But tourism has brought the Amish great economic benefits. The public’s growing interest in them has earned the Amish some sympathy, and as a consequence the government has been discouraged from infringing on their rights.

Ultimately, commercialization has not done much to change the simple Amish way of life. They continue to adhere to their beliefs, and their communities are still growing.

Origins and History

The Amish movement was started in Europe in 1693 by a Swiss named Jacob Amman (b. 1644), from whom the group gets its name. The movement was in many ways an attempt to restore the early practices of the Mennonites. Menno Simons (1496–1561),

Three young Amish woman sing for dinner guests at an Amish home near Baltic, Ohio. (AP Photo/Mark Duncan)

Amish Sugar Cookies

Ingredients:

- 1 c. sugar
- 1 c. powdered sugar
- 1 c. butter
- 1 c. oil
- 2 eggs
- 1 tsp. vanilla
- 1 tsp. salt
- 1 tsp. cream of tartar
- 1 tsp. baking soda
- 4 ½ c. flour

Preparation:

Blend all ingredients together and chill for at least one-half hour. Using floured hands, shape the mixture into balls and place them on a cookie sheet; flatten the balls with the bottom of a chilled glass dipped in sugar. Sprinkle with colored sugar. Bake at 350°F until the edges are golden.

Dutch Anabaptist leader, began the Mennonite movement because he believed that the Catholic Church had lost touch with the New Testament message and was concentrating too much on legends and fables. The Anabaptists (also called Rebaptizers) opposed baptizing children. They believed that only those who were old enough to confess their faith should be eligible for baptism and that they must be isolated from the greater society. This was a declaration that aroused the ire of both Catholics and Protestants, who put them to death for heresy, causing many Anabaptists to flee to the mountains of Switzerland and southern Germany. That was when their tradition of holding church services at home and taking up farming began.

Jacob Amman established the Amish religion because he believed that the Mennonites were drifting away from their original beliefs and practices and paying less heed to the writings of Menno Simons. The Amish faith was created when his group split from the Mennonite movement. Amish practice differed from that of the Mennonites in three ways: Amman wanted the rite of Communion to be performed twice instead of once a year (as was the practice in his time), because he believed that it would help the Amish become more diligent Christians if they received Communion every six months. He also reintroduced the practice of washing the feet of others that Jesus had inspired by washing the feet of his disciples. Third, Amman advocated a tougher, more consistent stance in shunning non-conforming members, those who had strayed from the laws of the Bible.

After a few years as a distinct breakaway group, Amman and his followers unsuccessfully tried to reconcile with the Mennonites. In the early 18th century, some of the Amish started immigrating to the North American British colonies, which would soon become the United States. However, most of them remained in Europe and rejoined the Mennonites. In 1937, when the last Amish stronghold merged with the parent organization in Germany, the Amish ceased to exist in Europe as an organized movement.

The Amish who immigrated to America went to Pennsylvania, a colony that had become a refuge for persecuted religions. Most Amish groups settled in Lancaster County, which is still home to one of the more prominent Amish communities. Now, however, the Amish live in settlements in 22 states across the United States and in Ontario, Canada.

The Amish advocate humility, community spirit, and separation from the world. Notwithstanding their numerous disagreements, they still share a lot with the Mennonites, particularly in matters of baptism, pacifism, and adherence to biblical doctrine. Their differences concern beliefs regarding how to dress, the proper form of worship, the use of technology, their relationship with the world, and the interpretation of the Bible (the Amish interpret the Bible literally). The Amish are arguably the more old-fashioned and rigid of the two, while the Mennonites have been more open to embracing a modern way of life.

Amish Quilts

The Amish women of Pennsylvania Dutch country have been creating dramatic quilts for the last 200 years. Quilt-making serves more than just a functional purpose; it is a source of entertainment as well. When groups of women gather for quilting bees, they use the time to catch up on familial as well as community news after the completion of their household duties. Today it has become something of a business, with a number of quilt cottage industries cropping up.

Holidays and Religious Observances

The Amish celebrate traditional Christian holy days—Easter and Christmas, for example—but their observations are very simple because they do not use electricity or any of the other technological

Fun Fact

The Amish are trilingual: They speak a dialect of German called Pennsylvania Dutch at home; High German is the language of their church services; and they learn English at school. When they deal with people who are not Amish, they speak English, and they also refer to anyone outside their community as “English.”

conveniences many people now take for granted. They also observe a Fast Day on October 11. The Amish do not hold their religious services in a special church building. Instead, they usually meet in each other’s homes every other week. These services include singing, two prayers, Bible reading, a short opening sermon, and a main sermon, after which each baptized male is expected to comment on the sermons’ biblical correctness.

Each congregation is autonomous; there is no centralized “authority” that makes rules or enforces beliefs and observances.

Instead, each community follows its own Ordnung, an oral tradition of rules regarding the proper way to live an Amish life. These Ordnung are periodically reviewed and revised when the community comes to an agreement about a change. Communion services are held twice a year, in the spring and fall. Before the service, a meeting is held in which the participants resolve any disagreements that they have with each other and discuss matters pertaining to proper lifestyle and conduct.

The Amish do not baptize their children when they are born because they believe that making a commitment to the church community is something to be done only after one has become an adult and is capable of making an informed decision. Instead, some Amish communities have a tradition called rumspringa (“running around”). Because they have not been baptized and have not committed to the extremely strict behavioral restrictions and community rules imposed by the religion, they can explore various aspects of the outside world. It is a period of several years when teenagers of 16 years and older are given some freedom and allowed to make their own choices. They continue to live at home, but are no longer under the complete control of their parents. They can date, hang out with their friends, go out into the non-Amish world, attend parties, drink alcohol, wear jeans, and so on. Rumspringa ensures that young people are giving their informed consent should they decide to be baptized and accept the strictures of living within an Amish community.

Like other aspects of Amish religious life, funerals are held in the home without a eulogy, flower decorations, or other display. The casket is plain and unadorned. When she dies, an Amish woman is usually buried in her bridal dress. A simple tombstone marks the grave following burial.

See also Volume I: CANADA

See also Volume II: UNITED STATES

Further Reading

Bill Coleman, The Gift to Be Simple: Life in the Amish Country (San Francisco: Chronicle Books, 2001); John Hostetler, Amish Society (Baltimore: Johns Hopkins University Press, 1993); Brad Igou, The Amish in Their Own Words: Amish Writings from 25 Years of Family Life Magazine (Scottsdale, Pa.: Herald Press, 1999); Donald B. Kraybill and George F. Thompson, The Riddle of Amish Culture (Baltimore: Johns Hopkins University Press, 2001); Kimberly D. Schmidt, Diane Zimmerman Umble, and Steven D. Reschly, eds, Amish and Mennonite Women in History (Baltimore: Johns Hopkins University Press, 2002); Louise Stoltzfus, Traces of Wisdom: Amish Women and the Pursuit of Life’s Simple Pleasures (New York: Hyperion, 1998)

Ascension, The

FACT FILE

Observed in	Countries with Christian populations
Observed on	Fortieth day after Easter; it always falls on a Thursday
Observed by	Christians, primarily Roman Catholics, Eastern Orthodox Christians, and Anglicans

Introduction

The Feast of the Ascension celebrates the Christian belief that Jesus rose to heaven 40 days after his Resurrection from the dead on Easter Sunday. According to the Bible, during the time between Jesus' Resurrection and his Ascension into heaven he appeared to his disciples numerous times, eating, drinking, and conversing with them about the kingdom of God. Christians also believe that Ascension Day was the last time Jesus was seen on Earth, and that his second coming will coincide with the end of days or Armageddon. Doctrinally, the Ascension of Jesus is important to Christians. Along with his Resurrection, it is one more proof of Jesus' legitimacy as a prophet and the Son of God. According to Christian belief, the Ascension was his ultimate triumph over Satan's powers.

Both Roman Catholics and Anglicans celebrate the Ascension on the 40th day after Easter Sunday. In these traditions, it always falls on a Thursday and is usually celebrated on the actual day. However, there are some places, including the United States, Australia, and Poland, where the feast is observed on the following Sunday. This is also true in places that do not have regular church services on weekdays. Orthodox Christians also observe the Ascension as a feast day, but it falls six days later, because they follow the Julian calendar.

Until recently, it was traditional in Rome to put out the Paschal candle (the candle lit on Easter Day) after the reading of the Gospel on the Feast of the Ascension to symbolize Jesus' departure from the apostles. Flowers, images, and relics embellish the altar. In the Anglican Church, Ascension Day is the only weekday, barring Christmas, for which there is a special preface to the Communion.

Christian art and iconography of former eras frequently depicted Jesus' defeat of evil. The lion (Jesus) vanquishing the dragon (Satan) was a common symbol of the Ascension.

Origins and History

Though the origins of this religious observance are not clear, St. Augustine identified it as an apostolic tradition. By the fourth century, the feast was usually marked by a procession, signifying Jesus' journey to the Mount of Olives, the place of the Ascension.

English history records that during the procession there were banners depicting Jesus at the head and banners depicting Satan at the foot. These represented Jesus' defeat of Satan while ascending into heaven. In some churches the Ascension was symbolized by elevating the figure of Jesus above the altar through a hole made in the roof of the church. In others, while the figure of Jesus was made to ascend, Satan's was made to descend.

Not all customs associated with this day have stood the test of time. One such loss was the tradition of Rogation Days, a community festival that used to be held on the three days preceding the Ascension. During the festival, various saints were asked for

Fun Fact

First celebrated in 68 C.E., the Ascension is one of the earliest Christian festivals, and it is one of the 12 Great Feasts of the Eastern Orthodox Church.

Ascension Island

Ascension Island lies in the South Atlantic Ocean, about 750 miles northwest of the Island of St. Helena. In 1501 Joao da Nova Castelia, a Portuguese seafarer, discovered the island, which covers an area of 35 square miles. His visit, however, went unrecorded, and it was rediscovered two years later on the Ascension by Alphonse d'Albuquerque (1453–1515), who named the island.

Fun Fact

Analepsis (“the taking up”) and episozomene (“the salvation”) are Eastern Orthodox names for the Feast of the Ascension; both signify the belief that Jesus completed the salvation of humanity by ascending into heaven.

favors. The popularity of Rogation Days declined with the Reformation and had utterly faded by the end of the 19th century.

There is a plethora of superstitions attached to Ascension Day. Eggs placed on the roof were thought to bring good luck and to protect the home from lightning and fire. At midnight on the Ascension, if people suffering from goiter bit the bark of a peach tree, the disease was supposed to be transferred to the tree, and their goiters would be cured. It was also believed that gifts to the blind or the lame were sure to be rewarded with riches during the next 12 months. Rain collected on the Ascension was said to heal diseased eyes.

The mystique around Ascension Day has different connotations in different countries and different regions within those countries. In Devon, a county in southwest England, it was believed that clouds looked like lambs on this day. Sunny weather signified a long, hot summer; rains meant that crops would fail, and livestock would suffer diseases.

At Tissington in the county of Derby, the residents unfailingly decorate their wells with biblical verses laid out in letters made of flowers. They do this because wells used to be a symbol of purity, and May was considered the best month to visit healing springs.

A Welsh superstition says that it is unlucky to work on Ascension Day. In 1888, quarrymen at the extensive slate quarries near Bangor, Wales, refused to work on Ascension because they believed that an accident was bound to occur during the day if work continued. The management had, a few years prior, convinced the quarrymen to work on Ascension Day, but each year there was a serious accident, and with each death the superstition gained credence.

In Armenia stream water is supposed to have healing powers at midnight on this day. For that matter, any water that falls from the sky would have the same power. In Sweden a person who fishes from dawn until nightfall on this day would know the exact hour when the fish bite best, thus ensuring luck in his efforts all year. In Greece it is the start of the swimming season. In Venice, the doge (as the chief magistrate was formerly known) marries the sea by throwing holy water in along with a wedding ring. In Armenia it is said that on Ascension Eve inanimate and soulless objects receive the gift of speech and share each others' secrets. In Poland the Sun is said to dance when it rises on this day.

See also Volume I: ANDORRA; ANGOLA; ANTIGUA AND BARBUDA; ARGENTINA; ARMENIA; AUSTRALIA; AUSTRIA; BELARUS; BELGIUM; BELIZE; BOLIVIA; BOSNIA AND HERZEGOVINA; BRAZIL; BULGARIA; BURUNDI; CANADA; CAPE VERDE; CHILE; COLOMBIA; CONGO, DEMOCRATIC REPUBLIC OF THE; COSTA RICA; CROATIA; CYPRUS; CZECH REPUBLIC; DOMINICA; DOMINICAN REPUBLIC; ECUADOR; EL SALVADOR; EQUATORIAL GUINEA; FRANCE; GEORGIA; GERMANY; GREECE; GRENADA; GUATEMALA; HAITI; HONDURAS; HUNGARY; IRELAND; ITALY; KIRIBATI

See also Volume II: LIECHTENSTEIN; LITHUANIA; LUXEMBOURG; MACEDONIA; MALTA; MEXICO; MICRONESIA, FEDERATED STATES OF; MOLDOVA; MONACO; NEW ZEALAND; NICARAGUA; PALAU; PANAMA; PARAGUAY; PERU; PHILIPPINES; POLAND; PORTUGAL; ROMANIA; RUSSIA; RWANDA; ST. LUCIA; SAN MARINO; SERBIA AND MONTENEGRO; SEYCHELLES; SLOVAKIA; SLOVENIA; SPAIN; SWITZERLAND; TRINIDAD AND TOBAGO; UGANDA; UKRAINE; UNITED KINGDOM; URUGUAY; VATICAN CITY; VENEZUELA

See also Volume III: CHRISTIANITY; EASTER

Further Reading

Chris Dolan, Ascension Day (London: Review, 1999); Timothy Mason, Ascension Day (New York: Dramatist's Play Service, 1991); W. A. Poovey, Celebrate with Drama: Dramas and Meditations for Six Special Days, Easter, Ascension Day, Pentecost, Mission Sunday, Fellowship Sunday, Thanksgiving (Minneapolis: Augsburg Publishing House, 1974); P. Post et al., eds., Christian Feast and Festival: The Dynamics of Western Liturgy and Culture (Sterling, Va.: Peeters, 2001); David Self, The Roots of Christian Festivals (London: Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, 2004).

∞ Ashura ∞

FACT FILE

Observed in	Countries with Shia Muslim populations
Observed on	First 10 days of Muharram, the first month in the Islamic calendar
Observed by	Primarily Shia Muslims

Introduction

After the two Eids—Eid al-Fitr and Eid al-Adha—Ashura is the third most important Islamic festival. The word ashura means “ten” in Arabic; the festival’s name means “the tenth day.” Ashura falls on the 10th day of Muharram, the first month of the Islamic lunar calendar. The day marks the martyrdom of Hussein bin Ali, Muhammad’s grandson and the third Shia imam, at the Battle of Karbala in 680. The Battle of Karbala was a watershed in the history of Islam, because it was fought between Sunni and Shia Muslims over who was Muhammad’s legitimate heir to the leadership of Islam.

An Iranian Shiite man weeps as he listens to the story of Imam Hussein bin Ali’s death in Karbala, Iraq. Shiite Muslims observe Ashura each year to commemorate the death of the Shiite saint Imam Hussein. (AP Photo/Hussein Malla)

For Sunni Muslims Ashura has been observed as a single day of austerity and fasting since the early days of Islam. It commemorates two biblical events: the day Nuh (Noah) left the Ark, and the day that Musa (Moses) was rescued from the Egyptians by God. The Shia, who consider Hussein the true successor to Muhammad, treat Ashura as a somber 10-day event, and every evening for 10 days imams whip devotees into frenzies of guilt and breast-beating. Plays depicting the death of Hussein bin Ali are also often enacted with as much elaboration as can be managed. On the first day of Muharram, people put on their mourning clothes and do not shave or bathe. The culminating events of the 10-day observance are processions of Shia men in which some of the more devout practice self-mortification and express their grief by beating their chests, flagellating themselves with iron chains, and cutting themselves with swords. In this way participants show their willingness to sacrifice themselves and atone for being too much like the Kufans, who failed to support their would-be leader, allowing him to be butchered by the Umayyad caliph Yazid (c. 645–83). In Karbala, Iraq, Ashura concludes on the 10th day with a procession that ends at the Mashhad al-Hussein, a shrine traditionally recognized as Hussein’s tomb.

People throughout the Muslim world fast on Ashura (either in memory of the martyrs or following Muhammad’s example), maintain a somber mood, and prepare several special dishes to be consumed by families, communities, friends, and acquaintances. Eating food from the same pot creates and maintains harmony, peace, and cordial interpersonal relationships among the individuals.

Fun Fact

Many aging Shia move to Karbala or request that their bodies be taken to the holy city for burial. So many Shia dead have been sent to Karbala that the town has become one huge cemetery.

Aabis Ibn Abi Shabib al-Shakiry

Aabis Ibn Abi Shabib al-Shakiry was one of the most courageous and devoted men in Hussein's army during the Battle of Karbala. It is said that he was so old that he had to bind a piece of cloth on his forehead in order to keep his eyebrows from covering his eyes. When Aabis realized that no one from the enemy camp dared to fight him, he took off all his armor. Someone noticed this and cried out that Aabis had gone crazy. His rejoinder was that his love for Hussein had made him go mad.

Origins and History

Karbala, which means "anguish and vexation," is situated 50 miles southwest of Baghdad and about 6 miles west of the Euphrates River. On the 10th day of the month of Muharram in 680 the political ambitions and thirst for power of Yazid, the Sunni caliph of Damascus, led to the massacre of the Shia imam Hussein bin Ali and his sons, along with 18 relatives, 54 friends, and all the women and children with him. After the death of Muhammad in 632, this battle is considered the second most important event in the history of Islam.

During the pre-Islamic period on the Arabian Peninsula, fighting was prohibited for four months of the year. These months, including what became the first month of the Islamic calendar, were considered sacred. The tradition was maintained even after the advent of Islam, though there were provisions to wage war in special situations. The gory Battle of Karbala was a flagrant violation of this law. The inhabitants on the banks of the rivers Tigris and Euphrates were traditional rivals. Their

Ashura and Ramadan

The practice of fasting on the day of Ashura was compulsory in the early days of Islam. However, Muslims believe that in 624 Allah commanded Muhammad to require all Muslims to observe a dawn-to-dusk fast during the entire month of Ramadan. Fasting on Ashura therefore became a voluntary exercise. Anyone who wants to fast on Ashura may do so, but there is no penalty for not fasting on that day.

animosity was controlled to a certain extent by Muhammad. But when his son-in-law Hazrat Ali was made caliph, the old enmity between the groups resurfaced. Hazrat Ali had two descendants, Hazrat Imam Hussein and Hazrat Imam Hassan. The former was the ruler of a kingdom, part of which is now Iran. The other half of the kingdom was made up of the area of modern-day Iraq, which was ruled by the Umayyads.

Hussein was called upon by the Shia of Kufa, a small town in the Umayyad kingdom, to accept their allegiance and claim his place as the leader of the Islamic community. This was vehemently opposed by the Umayyad caliph, Yazid, who instructed his governor Ibn-e-Ziad to take appropriate action. Meanwhile in response to the request of the Shia, Hussein, accompanied by his family, set out for Kufa. When they reached Karbala, en route to Kufa, the forces of the governor ambushed them. Abandoned by the Shia of Kufa, Hussein, his family, including his two sons, and his troops were tortured and brutally killed; Hussein was decapitated, his head was impaled on a spear, and it was carried back to Damascus. His body, however, was buried at Karbala.

Hussein's death is generally viewed in Shia circles as a heroic fight against tyranny, injustice, and oppression. Among the Shia, "Every day is Ashura, and every land is Karbala." In Iran, Ashura—including its doctrine of martyrdom and messianic redemption—became a key political symbol of the Islamic revolution (1978–79), and banners proclaimed, "We are not the people of Kufa." The same was the case in Lebanon during the civil war (1975–76) that raged there.

In the early days of Islam, Muhammad decreed that the date in the Muslim lunar calendar of the Jewish observance Yom Kippur be observed by the devout with a 24-hour fast. Even though, in due course, it was superseded by the more popular Ramadan fast, Muhammad continued to fast on Ashura and suggested that others do so as well; he believed that people who fasted on that day would have their sins of the previous year pardoned by God.

See also Volume I: BAHRAIN; IRAN; IRAQ

See also Volume III: EID AL-ADHA; EID AL-FITR; ISLAM; RAMADAN

Further Reading

Ibrahim Ayati, Probe into the History of Ashura (Jamaica, N.Y.: Imam Al Khoei Islamic Center, 1985); Mahmoud Ayoub, Redemptive Suffering in Islam: A Study of the Devotional Aspects of Ashura in Twelve Shiism (The Hague: Mouton, 1978); Augustus R. Norton, Shiism and the Ashura Ritual in Lebanon (London: Saqi Books, 2004).

Assumption

FACT FILE

Observed in	Countries with Roman Catholic and Eastern Orthodox Christian populations
Observed on	August 15 by Roman Catholics and Orthodox Christians but continued until August 23 in the Orthodox Church
Observed by	Roman Catholics and Eastern Orthodox Christians

Introduction

According to the beliefs of the Roman Catholic Church, and the Eastern and Oriental Orthodox churches, as well as stipulated in Catholic theology, the soul and body of Mary, the mother of Jesus, revered as the Blessed Virgin Mary (Roman Catholic) or Theotokos (Eastern Orthodox), was taken into heaven when she died. Drawing on apostolic tradition, the doctrine of Mary's Assumption was dogmatically defined—a statement of “infallibility” on it was issued—by Pope Pius XII (r. 1939–58) on November 1, 1950. Since Eastern Churches acknowledge neither the pope's claim to authority over all Christians nor the doctrine of papal infallibility, the authorities of these churches do not view it as dogma as Roman Catholics do. Nevertheless, this feast ranks as one of the 12 Great Feasts of the Orthodox Church calendar.

The Feast of the Assumption is Mary's most important feast. The Assumption is significant to Christians because it is celebrated as Mary's heavenly birthday (the day that Mary was taken into heaven). The belief that heaven received her is seen as proof of the promise Jesus made to all Christians that they, too, will be received into heaven. Both churches commemorate it on August 15. In the Eastern Orthodox Church this event is known as the Feast of the Dormition (literally, “falling asleep,” from Latin dormire, meaning “to sleep”), stressing the belief that the mother of Jesus did die a physical death before her Assumption.

The Feast of the Assumption is an official holiday in many countries, including Italy, France, Greece, and Spain, and many places hold festivals and parades in observance of the event. In the Lutheran and Anglican churches, the feast is also kept although without specific reference to the words assumption or dormition.

St. Mary's Feast of Harvest

In Scotland, a special bannock (pan-fried bread) is prepared on the Assumption. New corn is dried in the sunlight, husked by hand, ground with stones, kneaded on a sheepskin, molded into a cake, and baked on a fire of rowan (mountain ash) wood. All the members of the family in turn (according to their ages) take a piece of the bannock and circle the fire.

Origins and History

Like many holiday observances now thought of as Christian, the Feast of the Assumption probably originated in a European pagan festival. Its origins are probably in a rite dedicated to Artemis, the Greek goddess of transitions. Although considered a virgin, she was one of the goddesses associated with childbirth. She was also an avid hunter and protected her chastity fiercely, dealing mercilessly with anyone who threatened to compromise even the modesty of her attendants. Traces of this early ritual observance remain in some areas of Europe, where the Assumption is still called the Feast of Our Lady of the Harvest. Using the fortuitously shared attribute of virginity, the early church seized on the similarity between Artemis and Mary to draw pagans into Christianity.

The story of Mary's Assumption into heaven following her death was initially related in narratives during the sixth and seventh centuries. Mary's Assumption into heaven is not mentioned in the New Testament. The first person to write about the event in 594 was St. Gregory of Tours (538 or 539–593 or 594). Other early sermons on the feast include those of St. Modestus of Jerusalem, around 700.

Ascension of Jesus and Assumption of Mary

In order to make clear to children the difference between the Ascension of Jesus and the Assumption of Mary, his mother, a minister asked one child to walk from one side of the room to the other; he carried the other child across the room. The first child, who did what was asked of him without help, represented Jesus. The second child symbolized Mary, taken into heaven with God's help.

On May 1, 1946, Pope Pius XII asked the archbishops of the world whether this belief should be defined as an article of faith and whether the bishops, along with their clergy, desired the definition. Nearly every bishop replied in the affirmative. On November 1, 1950, on the day of the Feast of All Saints, Pope Pius XII declared the dogma that Mary's body was taken up to heaven and reunited with her soul following her death.

Though there is no authentic knowledge of the day, date, and manner of Mary's death, estimates normally range between three and fifteen years after the Ascension of Jesus. Both Ephesus (in Turkey) and Jerusalem claim to be the place where Mary died. Though according to tradition Mary lived at Ephesus following Jesus' death, her tomb was apparently found in Jerusalem. Following Pentecost, it is said that Mary remained in Jerusalem, looking after the fledgling Christian community. She was staying with the Apostle John, who later became known as the Evangelist. When she died (in her early 50s according to some) many of Christ's Apostles were already scattered around the world, preaching the Gospel. According to tradition, all except Thomas were brought to the Blessed Virgin, carried on clouds. The disciples sang interment hymns and carried her to a tomb in a place called Cedron, which is near Gethsemane. A man tried to hinder their somber procession, but an angel appeared and cut off his hands, which were later restored. The Apostle Thomas arrived on the third day after Mary's death and asked to see her one more time. When they opened the tomb to satisfy his request, the tomb was empty, and the Apostles concluded that her body had been assumed or taken up into heaven.

There is a significant difference between Jesus' Ascension into heaven following the Resurrection and Mary's Assumption. To "ascend" means to rise under one's own power; while to be "assumed" is something that is done to one. The first action requires agency; the second is passive. Jesus, as the second element of the Christian Trinity, did not need any help; Mary did not have the same authority.

According to tradition, Mary was forewarned of her death by the Archangel Michael, who is believed to conduct souls to heaven. On her deathbed, she was surrounded by the Apostles, who had been transported miraculously to her bedside from their respective mission fields. It was believed that Jesus appeared, took away her soul, and came back three days following her burial, when angels took her body to paradise, where it was reunited with her soul.

The Feast of the Dormition celebrates the death, Assumption, and veneration of Mary, mother of Jesus. The feast is preceded by a two-week fast. Like the Nativity of the Virgin (September 8–September 21) and the Feast of Mary's Entrance into the Temple (November 21–December 4), this feast also comes from the apostolic tradition of the Catholic Church.

According to the church, Mary died a normal human death and was affected by the corruption in the world like everyone else. Mary needed to be saved by Jesus like the rest of the world from the suffering, trials, and mortality to which humans submit. When she died, she was raised by her son as the Mother of Life and now exists in the everlasting life of paradise, which is promised to everyone who imitates her life of modesty, obedience, and love.

The icon of the Dormition of the Theotokos (the mother of God in the Orthodox tradition) depicts Mary upon a funeral bier. Jesus, who is standing beside her, has come to take her soul to heaven. In his left arm he holds a child in white, representing Mary's soul reborn in heaven. Jesus is robed in white and is seen in an aureole (an elongated halo) that portrays his divinity. The Apostles are portrayed on either side of the funeral bier. St. Peter stands at the head of the funeral bier and leads the group on the left; St. Paul is at the foot of the bier and leads the group on the right. Below the bier is a figure of Antonius the Jew, the man who tried to hinder the funeral procession and was castigated, but who later atoned for his sins and was baptized into the Christian faith.

In Catholic countries, the Virgin Mary's Assumption is one of the more popular festivals of the year. The theme of the heavenly crowning of Mary as the queen of heaven, which is often depicted in sculpture and paintings, is related to her Assumption into heaven, where she sits next to her son.

The title Mother of God was formally bestowed on Mary at the Council of Ephesus in 431.

See also Volume I: ANDORRA; ANGOLA; ARGENTINA; ARMENIA; AUSTRIA; BELARUS; BELGIUM; BELIZE; BOLIVIA; BOSNIA AND HERZEGOVINA; BRAZIL; BULGARIA; BURUNDI; CAPE VERDE; CHILE; COLOMBIA; CONGO, DEMOCRATIC REPUB-

LIC OF THE; COSTA RICA; CROATIA; CYPRUS; CZECH REPUBLIC; DOMINICA; DOMINICAN REPUBLIC; ECUADOR; EL SALVADOR; EQUATORIAL GUINEA; FRANCE; GEORGIA; GERMANY; GREECE; GRENADA; GUATEMALA; HAITI; HONDURAS; HUNGARY; IRELAND; ITALY; KIRIBATI

See also Volume II: LIECHTENSTEIN; LITHUANIA; LUXEMBOURG; MACEDONIA; MALTA; MEXICO; MICRONESIA, FEDERATED STATES OF; MOLDOVA; MONACO; NEW ZEALAND; NICARAGUA; PALAU; PANAMA; PARAGUAY; PERU; PHILIPPINES; POLAND; PORTUGAL; ROMANIA; RUSSIA; RWANDA; ST. LUCIA; SAN MARINO; SERBIA AND MONTENEGRO; SEYCHELLES; SLOVAKIA; SLOVENIA; SPAIN; SWITZERLAND; TRINIDAD AND TOBAGO; UGANDA; UKRAINE; URUGUAY; VATICAN CITY; VENEZUELA

See also Volume III: ASCENSION, THE; CHRISTIANITY; PENTECOST

Further Reading

Anna Katharina Emmerich, The Life of the Blessed Virgin Mary: From the Visions of Anna Katharina Emmerich, Sir Michael Palaiet, Trans. (Rockford, Ill.: Tan Books and Publishers, 1970); Corinne Heline, The Life and Mission of the Blessed Virgin (La Canada, Calif.: New Age Press, 1971); John Henry Newman, Mary: The Virgin Mary in the Life and Writings of John Henry Newman (Grand Rapids, Mich.: Eerdmans, 2001); Stephen J. Shoemaker, The Ancient Traditions of the Virgin Mary's Dormition and Assumption (New York: Oxford University Press, 2002).

~ Bahá'í Faith ~

FACT FILE

Observed in	Primarily India and Iran
World Population	About 6 million
Place of Origin	Persia (now Iran)

Introduction

The Bahá'í Faith, an offshoot of the Shiite branch of Islam, began to take its present form in Iran in 1844. The faith was originated by a young Iranian named Siyyid Ali-Muhammad (1819–50), who called himself the Bab, which means “the gate.” He alerted people to the coming of a messenger from God, who would be next in the line of great prophets that included Moses, Jesus, and Muhammad. The Muslim hierarchy persecuted the Bab and his followers because the Bab’s teachings clashed with the Islamic faith, particularly concerning one point of primary importance to Islam: the Muslim belief that Muhammad was the final messenger of God.

The Bab was subsequently executed for his heresy. Twenty thousand Babís, as the Bab’s followers were known, were martyred for the cause. In 1863 one of the Bab’s followers had a revelation while in prison that he was the messenger of God of whom his deceased leader had prophesied. He called himself Baháullah (1817–92), meaning “the glory of God.” He was the founder of the Bahá'í religion.

Born Mirza Husayn, Baháullah was a man endowed with great wealth, who lost much of it during the persecution that resulted from his open endorsement of the teachings of the Bab. Nevertheless, Baháullah was a man known for his generosity and greatly respected by his comrades.

The Number Nine

The number nine is significant in the Bahá'í Faith. The Local Spiritual Assemblies, the National Assemblies, and the Universal House of Worship are all run by nine-member boards. Nine also signifies the number of current religions in the world, according to the Bahá'í; and, as the highest single digit, nine symbolizes the faith that transcends all human boundaries.

Baháullah’s death was not the end of the Bahá'í religion. Abdul-Baha (1844–1921), the eldest son of Baháullah, spent much of his time spreading Bahá'í teachings around the world and was responsible for taking Bahá'í teachings to the West. Through a series of letters he developed the Bahá'í ideas of social reform and international justice, illuminating the faith with these ideas.

After Abdul-Baha’s death, his eldest grandson, Shoghi Effendi (1897–1957), succeeded him; Effendi continued his grandfather’s missionary work and further developed the Bahá'í philosophy. When Shoghi Effendi died, the leadership passed to a group of believers instead of to a single individual. This led to the present leadership, called the Universal House of Justice.

Although the Bahá'í Faith is the youngest of the world’s independent religions, it ranks as one of the most widely practiced. Its adherents cover a broad spectrum of the world community, encompassing nations, races, and myriad cultures.

The central idea of the Bahá'í religion is unity. The Bahá'í Faith is based on three principles: the oneness of God, the oneness of religion, and the oneness of humanity. Followers believe that the time has come for the world to shed its diversity and become one people, ignoring the superficial differences created by the variety of races, cultures, and religions. While the origin of the Bahá'í Faith was Islam, and many of its teachings have their roots in the Koran, it is primarily different from its parent religion in its acceptance of the legitimacy of other great faiths.

The Bahá'í year follows the Badi calendar (see Appendix III).

Origins and History

The Bahá'í Faith first appeared in Persia and spread to the neighboring Muslim regions of Russia, the Ottoman Empire, and the northern part of India.

Although some early followers were of Jewish, Christian, or Zoroastrian backgrounds, the vast majority were followers of Islam.

The Bahai community worldwide can lay claim to being the most widespread body of people on earth. The Bahai Faith is practiced by people from vastly different religious backgrounds who study a common set of writings, observe one code of religious laws, and look to a single international body for guidance.

Given their emphasis on unity, it is not surprising that the Bahai community has constructed one of the world's most unified religious organizations. The Bahai have a range of institutions to preside over the administrative affairs of their faith. In each region, nine-member boards known as Local Spiritual Assemblies are elected annually. There are also National Spiritual Assemblies, which are also nine-member boards, that govern the affairs of the Bahai community in individual countries. The highest administrative unit is the Universal House of Justice, a nine-member board elected every five years by the members of the National Spiritual Assemblies. The Universal House of Justice is now based in Haifa, Israel. Bahai believe that there is no need for a clergy because each individual is capable of exploring the revelations of God.

Bahai has certain tenets at the heart of the faith, and the oneness of humanity is the fulcrum of its teachings. The Bahai believe that all women and men are equal in God's eyes and that people must have the same educational and economic opportunities, regardless of their origin or race. In the Bahai view there is no superior race or religion. They also believe that the current state of the world is one phase in a transition that will ultimately and inevitably lead to the unification of the human race.

The Bahai believe that there is only one God and that all the world's religions have come from God. They argue that the followers of each prophet or messenger should be able to honor the prophets of other religions. Abdul-Baha taught the harmony between science and religion, referring to them as two wings with which the human soul can progress; one cannot work without the other. Religion without science would lead to superstition, he taught, and science without religion paves the way for materialism.

The Bahai believe that the foundation of all great religions is one, that they are divine in origin, and that their basic principles do not differ. Bahauallah once explained that the fundamental spiritual role of religion was to enable human beings to achieve two things: a true understanding of their own nature and God's will and purpose for them. He explained that God transmitted spiritual teachings through messengers or manifestations.

The Fasting Period

The followers of the Bahai Faith observe a 19-day fast from March 2 to March 20. They neither eat nor drink between sunrise and sunset during this period, and people ages 15 to 70 must observe this fast if at all possible. Those who are sick, traveling, engaged in hard labor, nursing mothers, and menstruating women are, however, exempt. At the end of the 19-day period, on March 20, the Bahai celebrate Navruz, a New Year's celebration that is neither religious nor national in nature, nor is it associated with a single ethnic group. Jewish, Zoroastrian, Armenian, and Turkish Iranians and Central Asians celebrate Navruz with equal enthusiasm. Perhaps the universal nature of the message of Navruz makes it particularly attractive to the Bahai.

The Bahai believe in Muhammad, Jesus, Zoroaster, Krishna, and Buddha, among others, as messengers of God. Each of these men foretold a great messenger who would come to this earth and bring peace. The Bahai believe that that messenger was Bahauallah and that the time for peace is now.

The primary goals of the Bahai Faith are to abolish the extremes between poverty and wealth, to eradicate racism, and to promote love among all people. According to the writings of Bahauallah, the time has come for the great leaders of the world to resolve their differences and come together.

Bahauallah did not want anyone to accept his teachings without thinking about the ideas, but to use his or her faculty of reason to make up his or her own mind. According to Abdul-Baha, God has given each of us the ability to reason; all people have the capability of searching and finding the truth for themselves. There is no reason for anyone to follow his or her ancestors because of ignorance, laziness, or indifference.

The Bahai Faith continues to spread, especially in the developing world, where its messages have really taken hold, and its holy scriptures have been translated into more than 800 languages. Yet it has had its fair share of problems. The governments of Islamic countries, especially that of Iran, the land where it began, continue to persecute the Bahai. Iran has banned them from enrolling in the country's universities and holding government jobs since 1979. Many were imprisoned there during the early 1980s, and it is estimated that more than 200 believers were executed between 1978 and 1998. Bahai property has also been demolished, including the house of the Bab in Shiraz, one of three Bahai pilgrimage sites.

Holidays and Religious Observances

There are nine holy days on which Bahai are not allowed to work. These are

Holy Day	Gregorian Date
Navruz	March 21
First day of Ridvan	April 20
Ninth day of Ridvan	April 29
Twelfth day of Ridvan	May 2
Declaration of the Bab	May 23
Ascension of Bahaulah	May 29
Bab's Martyrdom	July 9
Bab's Birth	October 20
Bahaulah's Birth	November 12

Ridvan (Paradise) is a 12-day festival that commemorates Bahaullah's announcement of his status as a prophet and his departure from Baghdad in 1863. This period is also when Bahai elections are normally held. The observance begins at sunset on April 20 and lasts until sunset on May 2. Devout Bahais do not work on the first, ninth, and 12th days of Ridvan because they are major Bahai holy days. The name of the holiday was the name Bahaullah gave to the Najibiyyih Garden in Baghdad where he stayed before leaving Baghdad. There are, in addition, two other Bahai holy days: the Day of the Covenant (November 26) and the Ascension of Abdul-Baha (November 28).

Lotus Temple, India

The Lotus Temple, completed in 1986, was designed by Iranian-born Canadian architect Fariburz Sahba (b. 1948). It is shaped like a lotus flower, a symbol of purity across India. When seen up close, the temple resembles a piece of origami. The interior, particularly the Hall of Worship, conforms to that of all Bahai temples. The inside is so quiet that even a low whisper echoes loudly. There are no religious icons within the Lotus Temple, only copies of the Holy Scriptures and wooden pews.

The naming of a newborn baby in a Bahai community, according to the Universal House of Justice, is strictly the responsibility of the family. The teachings of the Bahai do not provide for any ceremony on this occasion.

The marriage ceremony of the Bahai is remarkably simple. All the wedding ceremony requires is that there are two respectable witnesses and that the couple takes the following vow, as the Bahai teachings ordain: "We will all, verily, abide by the will of God." That vow concludes the ceremony. The wedding does not require a priest; it can be led by anyone belonging to the community. There is also no dowry system, although the bridegroom presents prescribed gifts to the bride.

The Bahai law for the burial of the dead forbids carrying the body for more than an hour's journey from the place of death. It is also necessary to wrap the body in a cloak of cotton or silk. The coffin should be made of crystal, stone, or fine hardwood, and the deceased should wear a ring carrying the inscription, "I came forth from God and return unto Him, detached from all save Him, holding fast to His Name, the Merciful, and the Compassionate."

See also Volume II: INDIA; IRAN

See also Volume III: DECLARATION OF THE BAB; ISLAM; NAVRUZ

Further Reading

Abdul-Baha, Laura Clifford Barney, and Leslie A. Loveless, Some Answered Questions (Rutland, U.K.: Bahai Publishing, 1984); Bahaullah, The Hidden Words, Shoghi Effendi, Trans. (Rutland, U.K.: Bahai Publishing, 2002); Kenneth E. Bowers, God Speaks Again: An Introduction to the Bahai Faith (Rutland, U.K.: Bahai Publishing, 2004); Pamela Brode, Refresh and Gladden My Spirit: Prayers and Meditations from Bahai Scripture (Rutland, U.K.: Bahai Publishing, 2002); Paula Hartz, Bahai Faith (New York: Facts On File, 2002); William S. Hatcher and J. Douglas Martin, The Bahai Faith: The Emerging Global Religion (Rutland, U.K.: Bahai Publishing, 2003); Nathan Rutstein, Seeking Faith: Is Religion Really What You Think It Is? (Rutland, U.K.: Bahai Publishing, 2002); Peter Smith, A Concise Encyclopedia of the Bahai Faith (Oxford: Oneworld Publications, 1999).

~ Bastille Day ~

FACT FILE

Observed in	France, its overseas territories, Canada, French Guyana, and most former French colonies
Observed on	July 14
Observed by	French nationals, French subjects (in French Guyana), French-speaking residents of Quebec, and other former French colonies

Introduction

Bastille Day, which falls on July 14, marks the origins of the French Republic and celebrates French nationhood. It is observed as a national holiday in

Fireworks illuminate the sky at the Eiffel Tower on July 14 in Paris. Bastille Day, France's national holiday, marks the anniversary of the storming of the Bastille prison and the beginning of the French Revolution. (AP Photo/Michel Euler)

France and its overseas territories (departments) as well as former French colonies. The festival commemorates the day in 1789 when the people of Paris stormed the infamous Bastille Prison and armory, an event popularly understood to be the beginning of the French Revolution. On this day French citizens celebrate liberty, equality, and fraternity, the fundamental principles and rallying cry of their revolution. The day invokes patriotic feelings not unlike those felt by Americans on the Fourth of July, Independence Day in the United States.

The French Revolution was a complex event that stirred controversy within France itself and worldwide. It created the French Republic, divested the king and aristocracy of power, and promised liberty, equality, and fraternity to the French people. And it attracted imitators beyond France who also hoped to liberate themselves from tyranny. Critics of the revolution, however, argued that it went too far, creating chaos and terror, and there is some truth to that. In the wake of the revolution France, experienced a tumultuous history that included a series of wars, internal conflicts, and experiments in government that ranged from the imperial rule of Napoleon, to restoration of the monarchy, to radical democratic regimes.

With the uneasy rise of the Third Republic in the 1870s, born in French military defeat and scarred by internal violence (some 25,000 died in the suppression of the Paris Commune, a short-lived socialist regime), the government sought to identify a national holiday that could unify the country and encourage its identification with the best features of the French Revolution. Bastille Day, marking one potent event among many during the revolution, was thus elevated to supreme significance as France's celebration of liberation from the

Fun Fact

The man who led the siege of the Bastille, Pierre Augustin, was in charge of the queen's laundry. With help from a man named Elie, he provided supplies to arm the mobs.

Fun Fact

Ironically, despite the importance of Bastille Day in French history, it was not formally proclaimed a French national holiday until 1880, almost 90 years after the fall of the Bastille.

monarchy. Bastille Day has largely transcended its controversial beginnings, been depoliticized, and is now widely embraced in France, its foreign possessions, and former colonies.

Origins and History

In the late 1780s, France suffered under an absolute, corrupt monarchy headed by King Louis XVI (1754–93) and his queen, Marie Antoinette (1755–93). In those days, France had the largest population in Europe and could not feed its people. The nobility and the clergy enjoyed royal patronage and privilege in return for their loyalty to the monarch, while the rest of the country starved. The king and the aristocracy also levied exorbitant taxes, impoverishing the peasants.

During the two years that preceded the French Revolution, the urban working class and rural peasants suffered greatly because of an unusually harsh winter followed by the abysmal harvest of 1788–89. These events led to a mass geographical displacement. France was on the verge of bankruptcy and social anarchy; abnormally high prices of food items, notably bread, reduced the lowest strata of society to starvation, the middle class was rendered powerless, and civil society was crumbling under the oppressive and unresponsive regime.

A segment of the upper social strata, composed of high nobility and the clergy, some sincere and others opportunistic, responded to the public insecurity and doubt that resulted. Personalities such as Mirabeau (1749–91), an aristocrat who chose to identify with the peasants, Abbé Sieyès (1748–1836), a clergyman before the revolution, and Talleyrand (1754–1838), a bishop and astute statesman, instigated protests, and the mobs followed them.

Caught between the monarch and the peasants was a growing middle class, the French bourgeoisie.

Their loyalty was divided, but even those who sided with the monarchy eventually became disillusioned with the regime, as few reforms emerged, and liberties, such as free speech, were imperiled. The outbreak of the French Revolution can, thus, be partly attributed to the nobility and clergy behind the scenes who supported the masses. In the vanguard of these protests were the burgeoning bourgeoisie and lesser nobility.

The attack on the Bastille was not spontaneous. A series of events preceded the assault and precipitated the prison's fall. On May 5, 1789, when the discontent in civil society had swelled into a huge public outcry, the king convened the Estates-General, which had not met since 1614, to hear the complaints of a country racked by hunger, poor harvests, and political strife. The Estates-General was a representative body, composed of the First Estate (members of the clergy), the Second Estate (the nobility), and the Third Estate (commoners). Dissatisfied with the inconclusive outcome of the debates, an assembly of the Third Estate broke away and formed the Constituent National Assembly. Locked out of their chamber as a result of their rebellious move, on June 20, 1789, the deputies of the Third Estate took an oath, known as the Tennis Court Oath (or Oath of the Jeu de Paume) and resolved to remain united until a constitution had been established.

For several months, rumors had circulated that the king was gathering troops near Paris in preparation to suppress the growing dissatisfaction. On July 12, when the news broke out that the king had removed the director-general of finance from his position as minister, street orators railed against the king. The director-general Jacques Necker (1732–1804) was popular with the people for his policy of raising funds by borrowing rather than levying taxes. Outraged, a covert group of Parisian revolutionaries and mutinous troops came together on July 14, 1789, to storm the Bastille and release all seven of its prisoners, four of whom were being held for minor offenses such as forgery.

The state prison, the Bastille, epitomized the despotism of the French monarchy: People guilty of nothing more than disagreeing with the king were sent there to be tortured, while rumors about what occurred there served to silence dissent. It was a massive fortification. Originally a 14th-century castle located at the east end of Paris, it had been converted into a prison. Not only was it infamous for unimaginable cruelties and brutal persecution, but the Bastille also held a stockpile of royal arms and ammunition. Gaining access to it meant a lethal showdown with its ferocious governor, Marquis de Launay (d. 1789), and his troops. Compounding the challenge was a 10-foot-thick wall and eight soaring towers, each 90 feet high. Ultimately, it was the commoners who paved the way for the rebels' victory. Infuriated when one of the fortress's cannons on the rampart was aimed at the street of St. Antoine—a public pathway—the general population assumed that the monarch had aimed a gun at them. In retaliation, the people gathered in the streets, joined the rebels, and attacked.

The Debate over Bastille Day Celebrations

Although Bastille Day is France's most important national holiday, the country is divided on the question of whether it should be celebrated at all. Some believe that the French people should celebrate the storming of the Bastille as the moment when France became a republic. Those opposed to celebrating Bastille Day argue that the French people should not celebrate an event that led to the bloody Reign of Terror that followed.

When the guards realized that their defenses could be breached, they urged Commander de Launay to surrender. Instead he threatened to blow up the fortress if his men did not follow orders. Nonplussed, the soldiers seized the opportunity to surrender to the rebel forces, assured that none of them would be harmed. As the drawbridge was lowered, a mob descended on the prison. De Launay and some of his men were taken to the town hall and murdered, along with the hated officer Flesselles. The mob slit De Launay's and Flesselles's throats, impaled their decapitated heads on poles, and paraded them through the streets of Paris. Nearly a hundred of the Bastille's attackers died in the assault, but the once-impregnable fortress of the Bastille was razed to the ground following an order from the National Assembly.

Alarmed, King Louis XVI and Marie Antoinette recognized the anger and power of the revolutionaries, and the king agreed to dismiss the troops camped near the capital, reinstate Necker, and don the red-white-and-blue cocard, the symbol of the new France. The storming of the Bastille acquired great symbolic significance as the revolution's baptism in blood and came to represent the French Revolution and the French Republic itself.

The King's appeal to foreign forces to intervene eventually led to the downfall of the constitutional monarchy. After a subsequent attack on the Tuilleries Palace on August 10, 1792, Louis XVI was taken prisoner, and, following a trial, executed on January 21, 1793. Marie Antoinette was also tried and executed shortly thereafter.

The French Revolution introduced the tricolore (tricolor) as France's national flag. Blue was the royal color of loyalty; it was the color of the flag flown at Charlemagne's coronation. Red signified the kingdom, from the red banner of St. Denis, France's patron saint, and white was the distinctive mark of command. White was the uniform color of the French Guard, while red and blue were worn by the Parisian militia; together they symbolized the new civic army of France. The tricolor ultimately represented, not civil war, but the restored unity of a new order. Indeed, some have argued that the three colors represent the three orders: blue (Third Estate), red (nobility), and white (clergy). The revolution also established the rooster, or traditional Gallic cock, to symbolize the nation's identity, following its use as an alternative symbol for the French people as opposed to the royal fleur-de-lis, and it is featured on French stamps and coins.

The fall of the Bastille became a symbol of a turning point in France's and, indeed, the world's history. France asserted its identity as a new nation with the Revolution of 1789. On July 14, 1790, a year after the fall of the Bastille, delegates from all parts of the country came to Paris to celebrate and proclaim their allegiance to their new national community.

The Bastille's Prisoners

Much has been written about the horrors of the Bastille, but the prison held only seven prisoners at the time of the assault, none of whom were political prisoners. At one time, however, the prison had had a sizable number of political prisoners including the great writer Voltaire and the famous literary character the Man in the Iron Mask, who served his prison sentence from 1698 to 1703.

French jurists, inspired both by the philosophy of the Enlightenment and a long-standing French legalistic tradition, dominated the Estates-General. This body, which became the National Constituent Assembly after the Tennis Court Oath of June 20, 1789, gave France its first constitution in 1791. Meanwhile the nation was forced to defend its border as well as its revolution. Following victory against its enemies at the Battle of Valmy, the Republic was proclaimed on September 22, 1792. Yet in the years that followed France would endure the Terror, a conservative reaction, the rise of Napoleon Bonaparte (1769–1821), and a complicated history of political triumph and tumult. Fifteen other constitutions and four more republics were to follow the Constitution of 1791, leading to the 1958 Constitution and the Fifth Republic that governs France today.

The ideas generated by the French Revolution—the rights of all people, liberty, equality, fraternity—proved inspiring to French citizens and others worldwide, and Bastille Day continues to represent these ideals and the French nation founded on them.

See also Volume I: FRANCE, FRENCH GUYANA, GUADELOUPE

See also Volume II: MARTINIQUE, RÉUNION

Further Reading

Christian Amalvi, "Bastille Day: From Dies Irae to Holiday," Vol. 3. In Pierre Nora, ed., Realms of Memory: The Construction of the French Past, 3 vols., pp. 117–59 (New York: Columbia University Press, 1998); Leo Gershoy, The French Revolution (New York: Harry Holt, 1932); W. Higgins, ed., The French Revolution: Told by Contemporaries (Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard University Press, 1939); Steven L. Kaplan, Farewell, Revolution; Disputed Legacies: France, 1789–1989 (Ithaca, N.Y.: Cornell University Press, 1995).

Fun Fact

King Louis XVI wrote in his diary, "14 Juillet (July): Rien (nothing)." He was at the Palace at Versailles at the time. Little did he know that the events taking place in Paris would forever be associated with the downfall of the French monarchy.

Boxing Day

FACT FILE

Observed in	Countries that are members of the British Commonwealth
Observed on	December 26, or the first weekday after Christmas
Observed by	Christians

Introduction

Boxing Day occurs the day after Christmas and is often treated as an extension of Christmas. It is, indeed, a holiday steeped in mystery. When and how it started is not clear, and more widely disputed is how it got its name. The purpose of Boxing Day, however, could not be clearer. Regardless of other local customs, it is a day for giving gifts of money to those who provide services.

Because it falls on the feast day of St. Stephen—the first martyr canonized by the Catholic Church—Boxing Day is closely associated with St. Stephen's Day.

Origins and History

The most credible and persistent theories about how Boxing Day started are rooted in the feudal traditions of medieval England. During that period (400–1500 C.E.), a small number of estate owners managed large tracts of land with the help of numerous servants. Christmas was a particularly busy time for the servants, who had to work hard to prepare the households for the festivities. So on December 26 the owners gave them time off to rest and spend time with their own families.

This was also a good time for employers to show their appreciation by giving their servants tips and practical gifts. These gifts usually took the form of clothing, leather goods, salt and spices, home-grown grains for making bread, and dried foods such as meat, fish, fruits, and vegetables. The size of the servant's family and his or her position in the master's household determined what and how much was given.

The name of the holiday is believed to have come from the earthenware boxes the masters used to package these gifts, which they left for their servants on Christmas night. The employees broke their boxes open on December 26.

Because the incomes of those who performed services outside the home were very low, the upper class also gave something to snow shovelers, sweepers, and others they considered among the “deserving poor” on Boxing Day. Merchants, too, gave boxes of food and clothing to their employees as end-of-year gifts. By presenting gifts in cash or kind, the more fortunate were offering practical help in the Christmas spirit.

From these beginnings, it eventually became a tradition for apprentices and servants to carry earthenware boxes to their employers' premises, knowing they would receive something after Christmas. In addition the very poor went house-to-house carrying donation boxes for food and clothing. Structuring the distribution of gifts this way reflected a social order based on class. Gifts were exchanged between people of equal rank before or on Christmas Day while charity for the poor was reserved for the day after. Moreover this form of gift-giving was always a one-way transaction: reciprocity on the part of the less fortunate was not possible.

Boxing Day became associated with religion in the ninth century when the Catholic Church adopted the practice of giving to the poor the day after Christmas. Donations were collected in large, locked

“An Irish Measure— The Song of the Wren”

The wren, the wren, the king of all birds,
On St. Stephen's Day was caught in the furze;
Though his body is small, his family is great,
So, if you please, your honor, give us a treat.
On Christmas Day I turned a spit;
I burned my finger, I feel it yet,
Up with the kettle, and down with the pan:
Give us some money to bury the wren.

donation boxes, the contents of which were distributed by the clergy to the poor on December 26. The practice allowed the church to tap parishioners who were not part of the feudal system for donations.

Another story recounts how Boxing Day was adapted to the needs of ships undertaking hazardous journeys. Each ship carried a donation box. On most ships priests would offer Masses for their safe return in exchange for well-filled donation boxes. Those interested in a ship's safe return—whether sailors or passengers—begged money from the wealthy in order to contribute to the fund. Opening the boxes before the ships had docked safely was strictly forbidden. These boxes were known as Christ-Mass (Christmas) boxes.

Boxing Day is also the feast day of St. Stephen, the first Christian martyr. He was stoned to death shortly after Jesus' Crucifixion and prayed for his tormentors as he died. There is a possible historical link between St. Stephen and Boxing Day, aside from coincidence. In the very early days of Christianity there was some dissatisfaction about how alms from the community's fund were being distributed to the poor. In an effort to resolve the problem, the Apostles chose seven men to oversee how the poorer members of the congregation were taken care of. Of the seven men selected for this duty, St.

Stephen was the first mentioned and best known. In the years following his death the faithful honored his memory by collecting money in small clay containers throughout the year. These containers were broken open on the saint's feast day, and the money therein was distributed among the poor. The modern practice of saving money in piggy banks stems from this custom.

The popular Christmas carol, "Good King Wenceslas," also has its origins in St. Stephen's Day. Wenceslas (907–35) assumed power in Bohemia in 922 but continued to be governed by Germany's Emperor Henry I, the Fowler (876–936). The subject of the carol is the generosity of Wenceslas, who took a meal of minced pie to a peasant on St. Stephen's Day. When the king, accompanied by his page, carried the food and pine logs to the peasant, the page became cold and fearful in the dark; so Wenceslas told the page to step into his footprints. The page did this, and his feet were warmed.

Fun Fact

Organizing monetary help for the needy can be traced back to the sixth century B.C.E. rule of Servius Tullius (r. 579–35) in Rome. A ceramic altar or container was set up in every village at the beginning of the year and people gave generously.

Boxing Day originated in England as an occasion for the upper classes to show appreciation to workers the day after Christmas. Today it is generally embraced as an additional day of leisure following Christmas. Here, members of the Pendale and Craven Hunt ride out from Gargrave, North Yorkshire, England, on their traditional Boxing Day fox hunt on December 26. (AP Photo/Alastair Grant)

St. Stephen and Horses

St. Stephen is the patron saint of horses. In Europe, it used to be a practice to bless horses in front of churches, along with their water, salt, and oats on the feast day of St. Stephen. These blessed food items were stored safely and fed to the horses if they became sick. The practice of blessing horses continues in rural Europe, and in England horse racing is a popular activity on St. Stephen's Day. Throwing coins or bits of silver into horse troughs for luck is a Finnish tradition.

In Ireland and Wales December 26 is also celebrated as La Fheile Stiofan, the Day of the Wren. These festivities originated with the ancient Druids, who studied the flight of wrens to predict the future. Because the birds were considered special, they were offered to the gods as sacrifices. Later, however, they came to be seen as symbols of treachery. It was reported that a chattering wren gave away St. Stephen's hiding place when he hid in a bush to escape his enemies. In the 700s accounts circulated that a wren betrayed the Irish soldiers who were fighting the Vikings by eating the breadcrumbs off a Viking drum just as the Irish mounted a night attack on a Viking camp. The sound of the wren pecking at the breadcrumbs awakened the drummer, who in turn alerted the Vikings. These stories were used to justify continued sacrifices of the wren.

On the Day of the Wren (pronounced "wran"), groups of boys would go from house to house singing and dancing, accompanied by bands of musicians. These Wren Boys (also known as Straw Boys or Mummers, depending on the region) wore straw masks and colorful outfits, and the leader of each group carried a dead wren hanging from a pole. (The bird would have been either hunted down or chased, until it died or collapsed from sheer exhaustion.)

See also Volume I: AUSTRALIA; AUSTRIA; BAHAMAS; CANADA; CZECH REPUBLIC; GREAT BRITAIN; HUNGARY; IRELAND; JAMAICA

See also Volume II: LESOTHO; NEW ZEALAND; POLAND; SOUTH AFRICA

Further Reading

Henry Bettenson and Chris Maunder, Documents of the Christian Church, 3d ed. (New York: Oxford University Press, 1999); Mike Cronin and Daryl Adair, The Wearing of the Green: A History of St. Patrick's Day (New York: Routledge, 2002); Aileen M. Hartney, Gruesome Deaths and Celibate Lives : Christian Martyrs and Ascetics (Bristol U.K.: Bristol Phoenix Press, 2005); C. W. Leadbeater, The Hidden Side of Christian Festivals (Los Angeles: St. Alban's Press, 1920); Anneli S. Rufus, Magnificent Corpses: Searching through Europe for St. Peter's Head, St. Claire's Heart, St. Stephen's Hand, and other Saint' Relics (New York: Marlowe & Company, 1999); Shirley Toulson, The Celtic Year: A Celebration of Celtic Christian Saints, Sites, and Festivals (Rockport, Mass.: Element, 1993.); Alan Watson, The Trial of Stephen: The First Christian Martyr (Athens, Ga.: University of Georgia Press, 1996).

~ Buddhism ~

FACT FILE

Observed in	Primarily countries in Central Southeast Asia
World Population	About 350 million
Place of Origin	India

Introduction

Siddhartha Gautama (563–483 B.C.E.), the warrior son of noble parents, formulated the philosophy known as Buddhism in the late sixth century B.C.E. According to legend a soothsayer once predicted that Siddhartha would become a renouncer (someone who withdraws from worldly life). His father, in an attempt to prevent the prediction from coming true, provided him with every pleasure life offers.

Siddhartha had gone on a series of four chariot rides, where he first came into contact with the darker sides of life: old age, illness, death, and an abstemious renouncer. Subsequently he left his wife and son, Rahula (c. 534), and tried severe renunciation in the forest to such an extent that he nearly starved. Realizing the futility of the exercise, he ate food and meditated under a tree instead. By morning the next day (or after six months according to some sources), he had attained Nirvana, or enlightenment. He believed that, through meditation, he had found the answers to suffering and how to achieve a permanent release from it. Siddhartha then proclaimed himself the Buddha (“The Enlightened One”) and began to spread his knowledge so that others could also free themselves from life’s burdens and suffering.

In a vision he saw the human race as a bed of lotus flowers. Some flowers were submerged in the mud; some were just sprouting; and others were ready to bloom. In other words, he saw that all people have the potential to become enlightened, but some need help to do it. His most important doctrines included the Four Noble Truths and the Noble Eightfold Path.

After his death, the Buddha’s celibate disciples gradually settled down in monasteries provided by married laymen in exchange for their teaching of the Buddha’s principles, and a variety of monastic schools developed among the Buddha’s followers. This was at least partly a consequence of the enigmatic nature of his teachings; he refused, for instance, to give a clear answer on whether a human being has a soul. Furthermore, he did not name anyone to succeed him as the leader of the philosophy. Instead, he instructed his followers to be lamps unto themselves.

Since Buddhism does not have the idea of a creator divinity in its teachings, some do not see it as a religion in the conventional sense. Buddhist teachings are simple and practical guidelines. The basic doctrines observe that everything of this world is temporary, that every action has its consequences, and that change is possible. Buddhism attracts people all over the world, regardless of race, gender, or nationality. There are around 350 million Buddhists, with a growing number in the Western world. Though they may follow different forms of Buddhism, they all adhere to the same core Buddhist principles: nonviolence, lack of dogma, tolerance, and the importance of meditation. Buddhism is the fourth most widely accepted spiritual practice in the world, preceded only by Christianity, Islam, and Hinduism.

Origins and History

When the Buddha started to preach after his enlightenment, the most important doctrines he taught were the Four Noble Truths and the Eightfold Path. The first of his Noble Truths states that dukkha (“bad location” or “wrong position”) exists and that suffering is inevitable and almost universal. The various reasons for it include loss, failure, pain, and the temporary nature of pleasure. His second Noble Truth deals with samudaya, or the causes of suffering. According to the Buddha, it comes primarily from attachment to the things of this world and the desire to possess them. It can take many forms, such as the desire for fame, anger, jealousy, or fear. The third of the Buddha’s Four Noble Truths gives hope. It teaches about nirodha, or the end to all suffering. This can be obtained through Nirvana, a state of consciousness reached when the mind achieves complete liberation and detachment from desire or any kind of craving. The final Noble Truth is marga, which teaches that, in order to end suffering, practitioners have to follow the Noble Eightfold Path.

An eight-spoked wheel, also called the Wheel of Dharma, symbolizes the Noble Eightfold Path. Separately the individual spokes represent right views, right intention, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right endeavor, right mindfulness, and right concentration. The right views are the understanding of the Four Noble Truths. Right intention refers to following the right path in life. Right speech means not to condemn, lie, criticize, gossip, or use insensitive language. Right action involves following the Five Precepts, which are similar to the biblical Ten Commandments. The first of the Five Precepts enjoins one not to kill; sometimes this is translated as a prescription against all forms of violence. The second precept discourages stealing, which is also generally taken as an injunction to avoid any kind of economic exploitation as well. The third teaches one not to misuse sex. For nuns and monks this means complete celibacy. For laypeople, it entails avoiding adultery, sexual harassment, and exploitation, including that within marriage. The last precept entails avoiding drugs and alcohol, since intoxicants confuse the mind. Nowadays television, the Internet, and other sources of entertainment are included as things that distract one from reality.

Right livelihood means supporting oneself without harming others. It is followed by right endeavor, which requires making an effort to promote good thoughts and dispel evil ones. The seventh path is right mindfulness, or becoming aware of one's body, mind, and feelings. The last element of the Noble Eightfold Path is right concentration, or meditation, a mental state in which one can achieve the highest level of consciousness.

A major split occurred among Buddhists in the first century C.E., when Buddhism divided into the Mahayana branch (the greater vehicle) and the Hinayana branch (the lesser vehicle). Of the latter branch, only the Theravada school remains. Founded in the fourth century B.C.E., it is now practiced in Sri Lanka and other Southeast Asian countries. This school emphasizes the historical figure of Gautama Buddha. In addition, Theravada monks believe that the Buddha taught a doctrine of amata, or "no soul." They also believe that human beings continue to be reformed and reborn, collecting karma until they achieve Nirvana.

The later Mahayana branch is today found in Korea, Japan, China, and Tibet. The most prominent of its schools are Pure Land, Zen, and Tantra. These schools stress that even laypeople have it in them to become good Buddhists and that there are other paths to Nirvana in addition to meditation.

A Buddhist monk folds his hands in prayer as he arrives at a ceremony of initiation into Buddhism in Bangalore, India. (AP Photos/Gautam Singh)

One of these methods is the chanting and good works utilized in Pure Land (the dominant form of Buddhism practiced in China and Japan). Pure Land emphasizes faith in, and love of, the Buddha.

The Buddha advised his followers that it was important to meet regularly and in large numbers if they were to thrive. Thus festivals are an integral part of Buddhism. They are occasions that provide followers with opportunities to celebrate as well to express their thanks to the Buddha for his teachings.

Holidays and Religious Observances

The Buddha advised his followers that it was important to meet regularly and in large numbers if they were to thrive. Thus, festivals are frequent, joyous events in Buddhist communities as well as an integral part of Buddhism. They are occasions that provide followers with an opportunity to celebrate as well to express their thanks to the Buddha for his teachings. There are four religious observances that are central to all Buddhist sects: Vesak or Visakah Puja (“Buddha Day”); Magha Puja Day (Fourfold Assembly or “Sangha Day”); Bodhi Day (“Enlightenment Day”); Asalha Puja Day (“Dhamma Day”). There are also numerous Buddhist celebrations of particular bodhisattvas (embodiments of virtues) as well as observances of special significance in various countries with large Buddhist communities. Also, because Buddhists follow the lunar calendar, and all observances are scheduled according to the phases of the moon, the dates on which celebrations are held, for example, the Buddhist New Year, will differ from country to country.

The most significant religious observance of the Buddhist calendar occurs in May (on the Gregorian calendar) and in the month of Vesak on the Hindu lunar calendar on the night of the full moon, when the birth, enlightenment, and death of the Buddha are celebrated. By a strange coincidence, the birth, enlightenment (moksha or nirvana), and death of Lord Buddha took place on the same date, although, necessarily, in different years, making it the most sacred day of the year for his followers. For Buddhists, this three-in-one festival is a day for rejoicing and contemplation. Celebrations can be elaborate affairs, with lots of festivities and feasting. Silent walks or evening meditations end the Vesak celebration.

Magha Puja Day takes place on the full moon day of the third lunar month (March), and commemorates an important event that happened early on in the Buddha’s life. Soon after the first Rains Retreat (Vassa), the Buddha went to Rajagaha city where 1,250 Arahats (“enlightened saints”), disciples of the Buddha, had returned from their wanderings to pay respect to the Buddha. This celebration is also called the Fourfold Assembly because there were four significant factors: (1) all 1,250 of those assembled were Arahats; (2) all of them had been ordained by the Buddha himself; (3) they had come together without prior arrangement; (4) it was the full moon day of the month of Magha month.

Asalha Puja Day, also called Dhamma Day, is observed on the full moon day of the eighth lunar month (approximately July on the Gregorian calendar). It commemorates the Buddha’s first teaching: the turning of the wheel of the Dhamma to the five ascetics at the Deer Park (Sarnath) in India.

Bodhi Day observes the enlightenment of Siddhartha Gautama, the Buddha. It is usually celebrated on December 8 (on the Gregorian calendar) with prayer, meditation, and readings from the Buddha’s teachings.

Other important Buddhist observances include the Buddhist New Year, which varies from country to country; Loy Krathong, the Festival of Floating Bowls, one of several “light festivals” of the Buddhist religious calendar; the Plowing Festival, which celebrates the Buddha’s first moment of enlightenment,

Paranirvana Day (The Death of the Buddha)

This day, which falls on the full Moon in February, is revered by Buddhists as the day of Buddha’s death. The Buddha lived until he was 80; the 40 years following his enlightenment were spent teaching. The Parinibbana Sutta gives a touching account of his last days, and passages from it are often read on this day. This is also a day used to reflect on one’s own inevitable death and on those who have recently died.

when he went with his father, at the age of seven, to watch the plowing of the fields; and the Festival of the Tooth, an observance held on the night of the full moon in August (on the Gregorian calendar), when what is said to be the Buddha’s tooth is carried through the streets of Kandy in Sri Lanka.

Buddhist festivals are happy occasions. On a typical festival day, Buddhists go to their local temple or monastery and offer food to the monks and perhaps listen to a discussion of dharma. In the afternoon, they may distribute food to the poor and in the evening perhaps join in a ceremony of walking around a stupa three times as a sign of respect to the Buddha. The day ends with chanting teachings of the Buddha’s and meditation.

Although Buddhist marriages are secular in nature, the couple is blessed by monks at the local temple after the civil formalities have been completed. Before a specially erected shrine, replete with flowers, candles, and an image of the Buddha, the couple recites certain verses. The couple then proceeds to light candles and incense sticks and present flowers, placing them on and around the table on which the image of the Buddha stands. The bride and groom then recite more verses. Finally, the assembly, or sometimes only the parents, recites verses as a blessing to the newlyweds.

According to the Buddhist faith, an individual passes through a series of reincarnations until he or she is liberated from worldly passions. Death, Bud-

The Festival of the Tooth

Kandy, a beautiful city in Sri Lanka, is home to a small but historical Buddhist object. On a low hill stands a Buddhist temple that was especially built to house a relic of the Buddha—his tooth. The tooth can never be seen because it is kept hidden in a casket. But once a year in August, on the night of the full Moon, the Buddhists have a special procession for it.

Dalai Lama

His Holiness the 14th Dalai Lama Tenzin Gyatso is the spiritual head of the Tibetan people. Born Lhamo Dhondrub on July 6, 1935, in a remote village called Taktser in northeastern Tibet, his holiness was recognized at the age of two as the reincarnation of his predecessor, the 13th Dalai Lama. In accordance with Tibetan tradition, he was an incarnation of Avalokitesvara, the Buddha of Compassion. The dalai lamas are believed to be the manifestation of the Bodhisattva (Buddha) of Compassion, who chose reincarnation to serve the people.

dhists maintain, is only a vehicle to move to the next reincarnation and move closer to nirvana. Thus, a Buddhist funeral is something of a celebration. The first service is held within two days of death at the home of the deceased. A second service is held two to five days following the death, and this service is conducted by monks at a funeral home. The last service is held seven days after the burial or cremation. It is meant to generate positive energy for the departed as he or she moves to the next stage of rebirth.

See also Volume I: BHUTAN; CAMBODIA; CHINA; JAPAN; KOREA, SOUTH

See also Volume II: INDIA; LAOS; MONGOLIA; MYANMAR; SINGAPORE; SRI LANKA; THAILAND; VIETNAM

See also Volume III: VESAK

Further Reading

Thupten Chodron, Buddhism for Beginners (Ithaca, N.Y.: Snow Lion Publications, 2001); Dalai Lama, An Open Heart: Practicing Compassion in Everyday Life (Boston: Little, Brown, 2001); Dalai Lama and Howard C. Cutler, The Art of Happiness: A Handbook for Living (New York: Penguin, 1998); Dalai Lama and Jeffrey Hopkins, How to Practice: The Way to a Meaningful Life. (New York: Simon & Schuster, 2002); Steve Hagen, Buddhism Is Not What You Think: Finding Freedom beyond Beliefs (San Francisco: HarperSanFrancisco, 2003); Thich Nhat Hanh, Heart of Buddha's Teaching (New York: Broadway Books, 1999). Peter Harvey, An Introduction to Buddhism: Teachings, History, and Practices (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press. 1990);

∞ Carnival ∞

FACT FILE

Observed in	Primarily Caribbean and Latin American countries, as well as Germany, Italy, Belgium, the Netherlands, Spain, Mexico, and Brazil
Observed on	During the two weeks before Lent
Observed by	Christians, general public

Introduction

Carnival is a public celebration, which combines elements of a street party and a circus. It is usually observed during a carnival season that begins two weeks before Lent, the traditional Christian fast before Easter. This festival is primarily a Roman Catholic tradition and, to a lesser degree, it is observed in Christian Orthodox communities as well. Protestants and non-Christians who avoid unrestrained festivities generally ignore these observances. Carnival is known for its exuberance, color, creativity, and culture. Usually there are street dances and parades leading up to a grand finale. The processions feature colorful floats, and people in masks and outlandish costumes participate in the street dances and parades during Carnival.

The basic idea of Carnival is probably to enjoy one last bout of festivities, gaiety, and mirth before the onset of the somber 40-day period of Lent, which exhorts all faithful Christians to spend their days in austerity, abstinence, fasting, prayers, and penance. The official beginning of Lent is Ash Wednesday, the Wednesday immediately following Fat Tuesday (also called Shrove Tuesday or Mardi Gras in French). On this day the faithful have their foreheads marked with ashes in the shape of a cross in church, signifying that they belong to Christ, who died on a Cross. The name Fat Tuesday evolved from the custom of parading a fat ox through the streets of Paris on this day. The name Shrove Tuesday is derived from the practice of confessing one's sins to a priest (also known as a shriver) and receiving absolution in preparation for the Lenten season.

Places particularly noted for elaborate Carnival celebrations include Maastricht and Hertogenbosch in the Netherlands; Cologne, Mainz, and Düsseldorf in Germany; Venice in Italy; Nice in France; Hasselt in Belgium; Santa Cruz de Tenerife in Spain; Rio de Janeiro, Salvador, São Paulo, Olinda, and Recife in Brazil; Pasto and Barranquilla in Colombia; Port-of-Spain in Trinidad; Santiago in Cuba; and New Orleans in the United States. In Mexico there are huge annual Carnival celebrations in Veracruz and Mazatlán, with street parades and the election of a Carnival queen. The Quebec City Carnival in Canada is a highly celebrated winter Carnival, which depends substantially on the amount of snowfall and intensity of the cold so that the ski trails are in good condition, and the numerous ice sculptures intact. For this reason, the festival does not commemorate the lunar-based celebration but is, instead, established on the final days of January and first few days of February in the solar calendar. The Caribana of Toronto is Canada's summer version of the Carnival. The La Ceiba Carnival in Honduras is celebrated annually on the third Saturday of May and is the largest in Central America.

Origins and History

Carnival dates back to the old Greek spring celebration held in honor of the god of wine, Dionysus. Later the Romans took up the festival as Bacchanalia, a feast held in honor of Bacchus, the Roman

Saturnalia

In Rome, where winters were not as harsh as those in the far north, Saturnalia—honoring Saturn, the god of agriculture—was celebrated. Beginning in the week leading up to the winter solstice (around December 16) and continuing for a full month, Saturnalia was a hedonistic event (based on a philosophy that the greatest good lies in the pursuit of pleasure), when food and drink were in abundance and the normal Roman social order was turned upside-down. For a month slaves were masters and peasants controlled the city.

Lupercalia

Lupercalia was a pagan tradition that goes back to pre-Roman times. Roman shepherds kept their flocks outside the city in nearby fields where packs of wolves attacked the sheep. Lupercus was a deity who guarded the shepherds and their flocks, protecting them from the wolves. In February the Romans honored Lupercus with a feast called the Lupercalia. Sacrifices and offerings were made to Lupercus; in return the god was expected to protect the flocks for the coming year. During the feast of Lupercalia, offerings were also made to the goddess Juno, the goddess of women and marriage. The names of all the young women were put into a box and drawn by the young men. Each boy was matched to the girl whose name he drew out, and they were regarded as partners for the rest of the year.

counterpart of Dionysus. It is sometimes claimed that the festival began with the Saturnalia (Saturn's festival) and Lupercalia (a festival held on February 15 in honor of Faunus, the Roman god of fertility and forests). In the late Roman period, the celebrations of these festivals were characterized by unbridled freedom, mad revelry, and reckless fun; in one way they were a subversion of civil order and discipline. Historians believe that this wild exuberance was carried over to the Carnival of today. Saturnalia was later transformed by the Roman Catholic Church into a festival that occurred in the period leading up to Ash Wednesday. As time passed, the Carnivals grew famous and spread rapidly across the Catholic countries in Europe. As the Spanish,

Notting Hill Carnival

When the first large numbers of Caribbean immigrants arrived in the United Kingdom in the 1950s, they brought with them their musical traditions. In 1959 Carnival first took place on English soil in St. Pancras Town Hall. The festivities were organized by Claudia Jones, the editor of the West Indian Gazette. After being held in various halls for the first few years, the celebrations were established in Notting Hill in 1964, mainly due to the vision of Rhaune Laslett, a local social worker. Gradually other West Indian immigrants and white locals joined in the celebrations, and the festivities grew. It was even approved by royalty when Notting Hill Carnival performers started the parade on the mall during the final stages of the Queen's Golden Jubilee festivities. It is now one of the largest celebrations in the world.

French, and Portuguese began to move into the Americas, as well as other parts of the world, they took with them the celebration of Carnival.

Another source, particularly linked to Switzerland, also predates Christianity. In this instance Carnival has been linked to the onset of spring, and the primary purpose of the festival was driving away evil spirits. This was generally done by means of processions, in which the people wore grotesque, hideous-looking masks, made loud noises, and made "music" with whatever happened to be handy. Much later, the processions became observances dedicated to patron saints, the most prominent among them being the Virgin Mary and the local saints of each particular area, after which the local church was named.

In earlier times, Carnival generally began on January 6 and continued until Shrove Tuesday. Some believe that this period represents some sort of compromise that the Catholic Church had made with pagan celebrations and that Carnival was, in reality, a refurbished Roman Saturnalia. Rome has been the recognized headquarters of Carnival, and though many popes were not particularly fond of it, others are known to have been great patrons of Carnival.

Over the years, the meaning of Carnival has become as varied as its history. Once a religious observance, the festival has evolved into an annual celebration of life in many places. The most popular celebrations are the ones in Barbados (Crop Over), in the United States (Mardi Gras), in Trinidad (Trinidad Carnival), Toronto (Caribana), and in Brazil (Rio Carnival).

There are numerous theories pertaining to the origins of the name Carnival. The most widely accepted theory states that the name is derived from the Italian carnevale or carnovale, which literally translates as "to remove meat." The name might also have originated from the Latin words carne, meaning "meat," and vale, meaning "farewell," thus "farewell to meat." Yet another theory derives the name from the Latin phrase carrus navalis, some sort of cart in which the sacred images were carried during an annual procession organized in honor of the Greek god Apollo. Most commonly, the season started on Septuagesima, the third Sunday before Lent and the 70th day before Easter. This phase of festivities had its roots in the need to finish all remaining products of animal origin, like cheese, butter, and eggs, before the onset of the fasting season. The Carnival celebration ends on Mardi Gras.

See also Volume I: ARGENTINA; AUSTRIA; BELGIUM; BELIZE; BOLIVIA; BRAZIL; CAPE VERDE; CHILE; COLOMBIA; COSTA RICA; DOMINICAN REPUBLIC; ECUADOR; EL SALVADOR; FRANCE; GERMANY; GRENADA; GUATEMALA; HAITI; HONDURAS; ITALY

See also Volume II: MEXICO; MONACO; NETHERLANDS; NICARAGUA; PALAU; PANAMA; PARAGUAY; PERU; PORTUGAL; ST. LUCIA; SEYCHELLES; SPAIN; TRINIDAD AND TOBAGO; UNITED STATES; VENEZUELA

See also Volume III: CHRISTIANITY; LENT

A Carnival parade participant celebrates the start of Carnival in front of the City Palace in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil. The five-day pre-Lenten bash in Brazil is the biggest Carnival celebration in the world. (AP Photo/Victor R. Caivano)

Carnival de Ponce

Many costumes and masks come from the celebrations in Ponce, a small town in Puerto Rico, where Carnival, with all its music, masks, and costumes, dates back to the 1700s. The masks are made from papier-mâché in devilish and scary shapes, with radiant colors, horns, and artistic designs. Costumes, typically one-piece coveralls done in red and yellow, the colors of the Spanish flag, or in red and black (the symbolic colors of Ponce), dominate the festivities. A person in full ceremonial dress is known as a vejigante. His role is to frighten people, especially children, by swatting them with veggies, the dried and inflated bladder of a cow.

Further Reading

Perikl Boutos, Venice: Carnival Unmasked (Milan: Charta, 1998); Max Harris, Carnival and Other Christian Festivals: Folk Theology and Folk Performance (Austin, Tex.: University of Texas Press, 2003); Stefan Falke, Moko Jumbies: The Dancing Spirits of Trinidad (New York: Pointed Leaf, 2004); Barbara Mauldin, ed., Carnival! (Seattle: University of Washington Press, 2004); Reid Mitchell, All on a Mardi Gras Day: Episodes in the History of New Orleans Carnival (Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard University Press, 1995); Helmut Teissl, Carnival in Rio (New York: Abbeville Press, 2000); Shirley Rowen and David Rowen, Carnival in Venice (New York: Abrams, 1989).

Chinese New Year

FACT FILE

Observed in	China and countries with ethnic Chinese populations, such as Korea, Vietnam, and Tibet
Observed on	The second new moon after the winter solstice
Observed by	Chinese

Introduction

The Chinese New Year, also called the Lunar New Year, is a traditional Chinese holiday and the one that lasts the longest. The festivities start on the second new Moon following the winter solstice and end 15 days later on a full Moon. The date of the New Year is established by the Chinese lunisolar calendar, which is used in places where the Buddhist and Confucian traditions have been adopted, as well as in various cultures with a Chinese influence, such as Korea, Vietnam, and Tibet. The celebration is also known as the Spring Festival (Zhun Jie), because it falls between the winter solstice and vernal equinox. Observed wherever people of Chinese heritage live, the New Year is their most significant holiday. The first week of the New Year festivities is the most important, because people travel great distances to visit family and friends and share the all-important New Year's Eve dinner with them.

Superstitions

The first words one hears and the first person one meets on New Year's Day indicate how the new year will shape up. It is auspicious to hear songbirds, swallows, or birds with red plumage. It is considered ominous to greet anyone in his or her bedroom, so everyone (even the sick) makes it a point to sit in the living room on this day. People refrain from using knives and scissors since they believe doing so would "cut off" good fortune.

Preparations begin a month before the celebrations start. During this time people purchase presents, food, clothing, and materials for decorations. Houses are thoroughly cleaned to rid them of bad luck. Windowpanes and doors are usually painted red and adorned with poetic couplets and paper cutouts on themes such as wealth, happiness, and longevity.

New Year's Eve is one of the most exciting phases of the Chinese New Year, because rituals and traditions are meticulously observed in everything from clothing to food. Specific types of meals are associated with different days during the celebration, and most of the dishes prepared are eaten because their names make some connection with what everyone hopes for in the new year. Dinner generally consists of dumplings and seafood, signifying good wishes. Fagao (which translates as "prosperity cake," since the syllable fa can mean "to raise or generate" or "be prosperous") is made with wheat flour, water, and sugar, and leavened with yeast or baking powder. Then the batter is steamed until it rises and splits open at the top. A whole steamed fish is a symbol of long life and good fortune. You, which means "fish," is pronounced just like the word for "surplus"—the good fortune of having money left after expenses are covered, and one of the greetings for the New Year, "Annyian you you," can also mean "to enjoy a surplus" year after year. This sentiment is echoed in the wall decorations with fish images.

On New Year's Eve (Je-sok or Je-ya) in Korea, the church bells in the capital of Seoul are rung 33 times, and everyone enjoys a bowl of duggook, a hearty soup made with rice, chicken, pheasant, other meats, pine nuts, and chestnuts. Other foods used in New Year's feasts also promote the theme of future prosperity. These include prawns for happiness and liveliness; dried oysters (bo xiyi) for all good things; and fayi-zhai, or “angel hair,” a hairlike weed, which also represents prosperity. Sweet mandarin oranges symbolize wealth and good fortune, because in the Cantonese dialect, their name also means “gold.” Baked goods with seeds and jiaozy (boiled dumplings) represent good wishes for the family. (Jiaozyi means “sleep together and have sons,” so the good wishes express hope for fertility.)

It is traditional to wear red because the color keeps evil spirits away, whereas white and black are unlucky because they are associated with mourning. After-dinner activities include board games or cards and watching television programs. Ancestors are honored by burning incense and offerings of food. Firecrackers are set off to scare away bad spirits, and for days after New Year’s people visit each other and exchange presents.

The Chinese believe that the third day is inappropriate for visiting friends and family, calling it zhec hao, which means “easy to get into arguments.” On the fourth day, a host of deities who made a trip to heaven to report the activities of individual families return to take up their vigil once more. Most people go back to work after celebrating for four or five days. On the 13th and 14th days shopkeepers hang lanterns out for the Lantern Festival (Yuan Xyiao), and the celebrations culminate with the colorful and highly significant Lantern Festival on the evening of the 15th day of the New Year.

Origins and History

China’s festivals have evolved through the ages. In ancient times when people had a plentiful harvest, they celebrated their good fortune with major festivities. After natural disasters the Chinese offered sacrifices to their deities and ancestors, seeking stability and peace. Over a period of time creative activities accompanied these events, and those activities gradually evolved into festivals.

The origins of the Chinese New Year are lost in the mists of antiquity, and consensus places its beginnings in prehistory. In the past when China was primarily an agricultural society, people rested only during the period following the harvest and prior to the planting of seeds. This also happened to coincide with the start of the lunar New Year. As a result, of all the traditional Chinese festivals, the New Year was perhaps the most elaborate, colorful, and important because people had time to rest and prepare for a long holiday. Around the time when the winter receded, and spring was about to begin, people from the clans assembled together. They brought forth their bounty obtained from fishing, hunting, and the fields. They shared the rewards of their efforts, danced, ate, and sang heartily. This activity had no fixed date initially, but it was usually observed at the end of each winter.

Zao Run, the Kitchen God

In China, this deity was traditionally the guardian of the family hearth as well as its morals. It is thought that he has been a household god since the second century B.C.E. Many Chinese homes had paper figures of Zao Run and his wife hung on the wall above the stove or hearth. His wife was responsible for writing down everything said in that home during the year so that Zao Run’s report to the Jade Emperor You Huang would be accurate. On the 23rd of the 12th lunar month, it was Zao Run’s duty to ascend to heaven and report the quality of each household during the past year to the Jade Emperor; each household was rewarded or punished accordingly.

This was a time when the Chinese congratulated each other and themselves on having survived another year; it was a time to put the old one behind, and to welcome what the new year offered. The Chinese New Year was a time to begin anew. Socially, it was a time for family reunions, and this remains true. This holiday also stressed the importance of family ties. The dinner get-together on New Year’s Eve was among the most important family occasions of the year.

The 20th of the 12th Moon of each year was set aside for the annual housecleaning, or the “sweeping of the grounds.” Every corner of the house was thoroughly swept and cleaned. Spring couplets, written in black ink on large vertical scrolls of red paper, were put up on the walls or beside the gates. These couplets, short poems written in classical Chinese expressed good wishes for the family in the coming year. In addition, symbolic flowers and fruits were used to decorate the house, and colorful New Year’s pictures (an hua) were placed on the walls.

The new year was also the time to send the Kitchen God, Zao Run (literally, “stove master”), one of many Chinese household deities, on his way to heaven. On the 23rd of the 12th lunar month, Zao Run was supposed to rise to heaven and report the quality of each household during the past year to the Jade Emperor.

To ensure that Zao Run’s report to the Jade Emperor was favorable, each family did everything possible to stay on his good side. To ensure that his report was good (or, perhaps, to keep his mouth shut), on the evening of the 23rd a tasty farewell dinner with lots of sweets and honey was prepared, including niangao (sticky cakes), so that the Kitchen God would speak sweetly of them when the time came. Sometimes the family lit firecrackers to speed his ascent.

Fun Fact

The Chinese prefer food items such as fruits and tea as gifts rather than other objects.

Fun Fact

The ninth day of New Year's is the birthday of the Jade Emperor, the most important Taoist deity, and fire-works displays honor him.

Nowadays in Taiwan, for New Year's horses and small single-person litters made of yellow paper are burned to ensure that the Kitchen God has transportation for his trip to heaven.

Now freed from the vigilance of Zao Run and his wife, who would not return until the first day of the new year, the family began its serious preparations for the coming celebrations. Because shops used to close during the last two or three days of the old year and did not reopen until after the first week of the new year, families were busy stocking up on gifts and food, preparing delicacies, and visiting barbers and hairdressers to make themselves look good.

Tradition required that all food be prepared before New Year's Day, and all sharp instruments and tools, such as knives and scissors, be stowed away to avoid "cutting" the luck of the new year. The kitchen and the well could not be disturbed on the first day of the new year.

The Chinese New Year was traditionally celebrated on the first day of the first Moon of the lunar calendar. (The corresponding date in the solar calendar varies from as early as January 21 to as late as February 19.)

The New Year's Eve and New Year's Day celebrations were strictly family affairs. All members of the family gathered for the important family meal on New Year's Eve. If a family member could not attend, an empty seat would be kept to represent that person during the banquet. At midnight the younger members of each family would bow and pay their respects to their parents and elders.

Celebrating the beginning of the Year of the Monkey, children dressed as monkeys pose for photos at a temple fair in Beijing on Chinese New Year's Day. Thousands flock to temple fairs across the city to mark the beginning of the new year. (AP Photo/str)

On New Year's Day the children were given ang bows (gifts of money) or lai see (little red envelopes) that contained good luck money. Everyone wore new clothes and was on his or her best behavior. It was considered improper to tell a lie, raise one's voice, use indecent language, or break anything on the first day of the year. On the second day, people began visiting friends and relatives, taking with them gifts and lai see for the children. Visitors were greeted with traditional New Year's delicacies, such as melon seeds, flowers, fruits, and niangao, sticky New Year's cakes.

The entire first week of the new year was a time for socializing and having fun. There were numerous lion and dragon dances, acrobats, theatrical shows, and other diversions on the streets of cities and towns. Firecrackers, thought to drive away evil spirits, were set off continuously during the first two weeks of the new year.

One dish called yousheng was originally served for the Chinese New Year in Singapore and Malaysia, and it is now commonly served as part of the celebration in other Chinese communities. Yusheng is a colorful salad made with raw fish, mixed with shredded, crunchy vegetables such as carrots, jicama, pickled ginger, and pomelo, and dressed with a plum sauce. Originally, it was served only on the seventh day of the new year, but it is often served in China throughout the year and can be eaten on any day of the New Year festivities.

The New Year celebrations came to an end on the 15th day of the first new Moon with the Lantern Festival. On that evening people carried lanterns into the streets and participated in parades that included a dragon dance by the youth. The dragon (made of bamboo, silk, and paper) was commonly more than 100 feet in length. The haphazard movement of the dragon was an impressive sight and made a grand end for the New Year festivities.

Between 1966 and 1980 there were no New Year's celebrations of any length in China because they were banned at the beginning of the Cultural Revolution. Today popularly known as the Spring Festival, Chinese New Year's celebrations last for 15 days.

There is a famous legend connected to this holiday. It says that in ancient times, there was an ugly dragonlike monster known as Nian. On the first and the 15th day of every lunar month, the monster would come down from the mountains to devour people. This terrified everyone, and so they locked their doors before dusk. There was an old and wise man in the village who realized that it was the people's fear that was making the monster so strong. Therefore the old man collected the people together and exhorted them to fight the beast by beating drums, burning bamboo, and using fireworks, thinking the noises would scare the beast away. And this worked temporarily. But on one cold winter's night Nian appeared again. This time, however, the people were ready; the noises the people were making terrified Nian. While running away, the monster collapsed with fatigue, and the people managed to kill it. So the people have continued the custom of beating gongs and drums and lighting fireworks to drive away monsters.

On this day, Chinese people greet each other by saying “Guo an,” meaning “Long live the festival,” and “Xin nian hao,” meaning “Happy New Year.”

See also Volume I: CHINA; HONG KONG; KOREA, NORTH; KOREA, SOUTH; MALAYSIA

See also Volume II: SINGAPORE; TIBET; VIETNAM

See also Volume III: BUDDHISM; CONFUCIANISM

Further Reading

Goran Aijmer, New Year Celebrations in Central China in Late Imperial Times (Hong Kong: Chinese University Press, 2003); Juliet Bredon, Chinese New

Year Festivals: A Picturesque Monograph of the Rites, Ceremonies, and Observances in Relation Thereto (Singapore: Graham Brash, 1989); Marshall Cavendish, A New Beginning: Customs of the Lunar New Year (Times Editions, 2005); Alice K. Flanagan, Chinese New Year (Minneapolis: Compass Point Books, 2004); Diane Hoyt-Goldsmith, Celebrating Chinese New Year (New York: Holiday House, 1998); Dianne MacMillan, Chinese New Year (Springfield, N.J.: Enslow Publishers, 1994); Patricia Bjaaland Welch, Chinese New Year (New York: Oxford University Press, 1997).

Fun Fact

According to tradition, human beings were created on the seventh day of the new year. Thus, everyone's birthday falls on the seventh day of the New Year's celebration in China, and everyone adds a year to his or her age on that day.

Christianity

FACT FILE

Observed in	Countries with Christian populations
World Population	About 2 billion
Place of Origin	Jerusalem and environs

Introduction

Like Islam, Judaism, and Zoroastrianism, Christianity is a monotheistic religion. It is based on the life and teachings of Jesus of Nazareth as recorded by his apostles. It is the world's largest religion, with approximately 2 billion followers. Most Christians, but not all, believe in one all-encompassing, universal God. The one God is considered to exist in three persons: the Holy Trinity of Father, Son, and Holy Spirit. The past 2,000 years have given birth to a variety of beliefs and sects, of which Roman Catholicism, Protestantism, and the Eastern Orthodox Church are the primary branches.

The Roman Catholic Church is the largest Christian church in the world, with over a billion members. The Catholic Church claims to be, doctrinally, the original church, and it is the oldest continually operating Christian institution in existence. The Catholic Church is hierarchical and is separated into the order of bishops, priests, and deacons. The world is divided into over 1,000 bishoprics, each with a presiding bishop responsible for the spiritual welfare of one geographic area. The primary bishopric is that of Rome, whose occupant is called the pope, believed by Catholics to be the direct successor of the original leader of the church St. Peter (the first of Jesus' 12 Apostles). The pope and the Curia (his ecclesiastical administrators) in Vatican City are the final authorities of the church.

Protestantism is a broad grouping of denominations within the Christian faith. They originated with groups that separated from the Catholic Church during the Reformation of the 16th century and include their offshoots and others sharing similar principles. In the broader sense of the word, Protestantism is the collective name for various denominations that severed ties with the Roman Catholic Church in a theological revolution propelled by the rebellions of Martin Luther, founder of the Lutheran Church, and John Calvin, founder of the Calvinist movement. There are also some Western and non-Catholic groups that are labeled Protestant, even if they acknowledge no historical connection to Luther or Calvin. The major denominations of the Protestant faith worldwide are: Pentecostal, Calvinist or Presbyterian, Reformed and Congregational, United Churches, Anglican Communion, Baptist, Methodist, and Lutheran. There are other minor sects in addition to these dominant groups, such as the Mormons (also called the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints), Copics, Jehovah's Witnesses, Mennonite, and others.

Most Protestants are considered to be "people of the book" in that they adhere to the teachings of biblical texts. Their beliefs are more abstracted than ritualized, and they multiplied after the translation of the Bible from the original Hebrew, Greek, and Latin texts. They are also less fond of hierarchy.

Eastern Orthodoxy is in general "Christocentric"; that is, in Orthodox churches Jesus is the head of the church. This branch of Christianity has an extensive oral tradition that predates the actual texts of the New Testament. This, however, does not dilute its devotion to the scriptures. Orthodox Christians treat the Old Testament of the Bible as less important, with the exception of the Psalms and the prophecies foretelling the coming of Jesus. The Eastern Orthodox Christian Church teaches that what is sin for one may not necessarily be a sin for another; neither does it see all sin as being the same. The traditional practice of the Orthodox is to have a spiritual father or mother to whom one confesses. He or she will have the authority to treat sin on an individual basis and will know when to enforce strictness when dealing with sin.

Christian traditions are well known around the world. Weddings are especially characterized by delightful customs. Christian weddings are usually conducted in a church (though there are some who prefer outdoor ceremonies). The bride is generally accompanied to the church by her father, and the two of them are the last to enter the church, where they proceed down a large central aisle to the altar with grand ceremonial music played in the background. Depending on the branch of Christianity, there may be an elaborate nuptial Mass or just a plain ceremony with an exchange of vows and rings. In the presence of witnesses from both the bride's and the groom's side, the couple declares their intention to marry. The priest or minister blesses the rings, and the couple proceeds to put them on each other's ring fingers (the third finger of the left hand). The presiding pastor then declares the couple man and wife.

Christian funerals differ slightly according to the sect, though it is customary for a Protestant funeral to be a simplified version of the Roman Catholic funeral. In the Catholic funeral, a priest is summoned to hear the dying person's confession and to pardon him or her, eventually anointing the individual with oil previously blessed by a bishop. Prayers are followed by burial, and the corpse is sprinkled with holy water and blessed with incense. A Protestant funeral is a far simpler affair. A dying person may have a pastor attend his or her deathbed and say prayers. A church service is held for the deceased and is presided over by a minister. It can be conducted in many ways; at some, friends and relatives get up and relate their personal relationship with and memories of the deceased. During this phase of the funeral, they may also sing one of the deceased's favorite songs or read a favorite poem or author.

Three things fundamental to most types of Christianity are Communion, baptism, and the confession of sin. Holy Communion, also called the Eucharist or Lord's Supper, is the central practice of many sects of Christianity. Bread and wine are sanctified by an ordained minister or priest and consumed by the minister and members of the congregation in compliance with Jesus' command at the Last Supper: "Do this in remembrance of me." In the Orthodox and Roman Catholic Churches, as well as the Anglican, Lutheran, and many other Protestant churches, it is regarded as a sacrament that symbolizes the union of Jesus with the faithful. In Baptist churches and some other Protestant sects, communion is an "institution," rather than a sacrament, emphasizing their observance of a commandment.

Baptism symbolizes the cleansing of sins and the union of the believer with Jesus in his death, burial, and Resurrection. The Christian tradition of baptism goes back to John the Baptist, who, according to the Bible, baptized Jesus in the river Jordan. Baptism in the Christian faith takes various forms including sprinkling water, pouring water, or full immersion (practiced in the Baptist church). The choice to be baptized is made by a believer as a confession of faith (this is called "believer baptism" or "Credobaptism"); for a child the choice is made by his or her parents according to the parents' faith (this is called "Paedobaptism"). Differences of opinion exist regarding the nature and practice of baptism. Some denominations, such as the Baptist, practice Credobaptism. They also believe that baptism not only saves but is also a public declaration that one has been saved through accepting Jesus.

The Catholic sacrament of confession, now renamed reconciliation, involves admitting one's sins to God and receiving penance (a specific task to complete after having achieved absolution from God; the task is intended to repair one's relationship with God and any others harmed by the sin). Catholics believe that a priest, being a man himself, is not holy enough to forgive sins, but God can and does exercise that power through the ministrations of men.

Origins and History

Jesus Christ was born in approximately 6–4 B.C.E., although the exact date will probably never be known. He is called Jesus, because it is Greek for the Hebrew term messiah. It is commonly thought that Jesus preached for a period of three years. However, though a specific period of time is not mentioned in any of the Gospels (the four accounts of the life and teachings of Jesus that begin the New Testament part of the Bible).

The Christian faith is based on the acts and words attributed to Jesus in the writings of his apostles, and, for many Christians, especially Catholics, the teachings and traditions of the Roman Catholic Church. There are things common to the four Gospels in the New Testament (the books of Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John). They all agree that Jesus preached in Galilee and Judea, that his message was one of repentance and forgiveness by faith through him, that Jesus was sentenced to death by a reluctant Roman prefect named Pontius Pilate (d. after 36 C.E.), and that he was executed by crucifixion. According to at least one interpretation, Jesus declared to the Jews that he was their long-awaited

Vatican City

Vatican City is doubtless the most celebrated city among Roman Catholics. Officially called the State of the Vatican City, it is an enclave within the city of Rome, Italy. In terms of area and population, it is the smallest independent state in the world. The Vatican is the home of the pope, the highest cleric in the Roman Catholic Church. It forms the territory of the Holy See, the central authority of the Roman Catholic Church. Vatican City includes Vatican Hill (Mons Vaticanus), whose name predates Christianity, and the Vatican Fields north of the hill, on which the Sistine Chapel and other Vatican museums stand.

Messiah, but the Hebrew church authorities rejected him and accused him of blasphemy in the year 30. Christians believe that Jesus was dead and entombed but rose again on the third day after his death. His followers, usually called his Apostles (the 12 closest to him) and disciples, carried his teachings forward.

Though Jesus doubtless remains the most influential figure in Christianity, the man responsible for spreading his message more than any other was Paul of Tarsus (from the town in Turkey). He was not one of the original 12 Apostles of Jesus; still, Paul is considered by many to be Jesus' most important disciple, and is sometimes referred to as St. Paul the Apostle. He took Jesus' teachings to the Gentiles (non-Israelites) and is believed to be the primary source of early Christian doctrine (most of the 27 books in the New Testament are attributed to him). Paul is also responsible for establishing the church as we know it today. It was at Antioch, in Syria, that he founded the first church. Many argue that he was largely responsible for establishing Christianity as a distinct religion rather than a sect of Judaism. Originally known as Saul of Tarsus, Paul was a self-confessed persecutor of Christians. His change of opinion regarding the faith came about on the road to Damascus, where a blinding light struck him down; the vision Paul had of Jesus at that moment reversed his outlook on Christians.

After Jesus' death, Paul's message, as the apostles understood it, spread rapidly during the next three centuries with the help of the Roman Empire, which supplied relative peace and excellent roads. Within a mere generation following Paul's death, there were already three distinct movements within Christianity: the Jewish Christians, the Hellenistic Christians, and the Gnostic Christians. As the scriptural canon was developed, primarily by early church councils, Christianity's diversity began to harden into dogmas, especially around theological central issues such as the divinity of Jesus and the existence of a triune god.

During this initial period of development, Christians suffered sporadic persecution by Roman emperors including Nero, Valerian, and Diocletian, and martyrdom became an ambition that many achieved. Their lives, deaths, and deeds were eventually immortalized by the Roman Catholic and Orthodox churches in the perpetual cycle of saints' feast days. This occurred more slowly in some cases than in others. For instance, although Joan of Arc (1412–31) was convicted of heresy and burned at the stake on May 30, 1431, it was 1909 before she was finally beatified, and it was not until 1920 that she was declared a saint.

The Virgin Mary, had to wait even longer on the councils of men. The actual date of Mary's death is unknown, but in the fifth century St. Juvenal, then bishop of Jerusalem, asserted that Mary died in the presence of all the apostles and that her tomb, when opened, was empty; from this fact, the apostles concluded that her body had been taken up to heaven. As is true of other Christian holidays, no one knows when the first Feast of the Assumption (of Mary) was observed, but this, too, seems to have occurred during the fifth century. On one thing the Catholic and Orthodox Churches agree, and that is that it was Mary's physical body that was assumed into heaven. It was not however, until November 1950 that Pope Pius XII (r. 1939–58) declared (infallibly) that the Assumption of the Virgin Mary was an article of the Catholic faith.

By the 11th century, Christianity had spread throughout most of the Western world as well as some way into the Far East. In 1054, however, the Great Schism occurred, splitting the church into the Roman Catholic Church, with its allegiance to the pope in Rome, and the Eastern Orthodox Churches, which recognized the patriarch of Constantinople as the "first among equals." The Eastern Churches adopted the word "orthodox" in order to make clear their commitment to the early traditions of Christianity, as well as their resistance to change.

The European Reformation of the 16th century, started by objections to the abuses of papal authority and doctrinal error, spawned the Protestant and other similar churches, not to mention persecution of the dissenters in some countries as well as numerous, and interminable wars.

In the 19th and 20th centuries, groups calling themselves Fundamentalist Christians, aroused by the perceived threat of scientific research—in particular Darwin's theory of evolution and the new science of geology, which pushed the planet's age further and further back from Bishop James Ussher's first year of 4004 B.C.E., and eager for the dawn of Armageddon and the second coming of Jesus—created still further schisms, splitting even large Protestant congregations like the Baptists and Methodists.

The central emphasis of the Christian faith is that, though doctrines and beliefs are important, by

Statue of Jesus the Redeemer

Standing nearly 100 feet tall and 92 feet from fingertip to fingertip, and overlooking the beautiful city of Rio de Janeiro, the Statue of Jesus the Redeemer (Christo Redentor) is one of the tallest statues in the world. The monument represents Jesus standing with his arms outstretched, a welcoming symbol of warmth. Originally conceived in 1921, construction started in mid-1926 and was completed in 1931. The statue is nestled on top of Corcovado Mountain (also called Hunchback Mountain) and is located in Tijuca National Park, a favorite place for picnics and strolls. Visitors have access to the base of the statue, which, at 2,300 feet high, provides a breathtaking view of Sugarloaf Mountain and the world-famous beaches of Rio.

Pope John Paul II baptizes a Brazilian girl held by her parents in the Sistine Chapel at the Vatican during a special Mass. Baptism is a fundamental ritual of the Christian faith. (AP Photo/Claudio Onorati, Pool)

faith in the sacrificial death and the subsequent resurrection of Jesus, one is saved from death—spiritual and physical—and redeemed from sin. Christians believe that, through God’s grace, by faith and repentance, one will enter the kingdom of heaven.

Holidays and Religious Observances

For Christians, Easter is considered the most important Christian festival, and its numerous celebrations and observances form the core of the liturgical year, which begins around the time of the vernal equinox in the Northern Hemisphere (the autumnal equinox in the Southern Hemisphere) and stretches out into summer in the Northern Hemisphere (winter in the Southern Hemisphere). This occasion celebrates the resurrection of Jesus three days following his crucifixion. Christians believe Jesus was the son of God, and died on the cross to redeem humanity from sin. Apart from its religious aspect, the resurrection symbolizes the resurgence of hope and a fresh lease on life for all human beings. The actual dates for Easter and its associated religious observances are different for the Roman Catholic and Protestant churches of the West, which follow the Gregorian calendar, and the several churches affiliated with the Eastern Orthodox Church, which continues to follow the Julian calendar.

Because of its importance in the early Church, as well as the appropriation of numerous dates and symbols from early European pagan festivals, what can be called the Easter season begins with Carnival in Spanish-speaking countries and Mardi Gras (Fat Tuesday) in French-speaking countries. Both Carnival and Mardi Gras are week-long celebrations that end the day before Ash Wednesday. Ash Wednesday is the first day of Lent, a 40-day period of abstinence and fasting observed primarily by Roman Catholic and Eastern Orthodox devout Christians, although the actual dates differ. On Ash Wednesday, the devout go to a special Mass, where the priest makes the sign of the cross on each person’s forehead with ashes.

Palm Sunday is the sixth Sunday of Lent and the first day of Holy Week, marking the last week of Jesus’ mortal life. The day is as much about his triumphal entry into Jerusalem as it is about the beginning of his journey to the cross. His arrival in Jerusalem was indeed the way to the cross. Palm Sunday was originally known as the Second Sunday of the Passion, the fifth Sunday of Lent being Passion Sunday/First Sunday of the Passion. It is called Palm Sunday because the people of Jerusalem welcomed him with palm and olive branches and the laying of garments in his path.

The rituals observed on Maundy Thursday are based on a sequence of events supposed to have occurred during the last meal Jesus shared with his disciples, now called the Last Supper. First, Jesus washed the feet of his disciples, then announced that he had been betrayed by one of them. At this point, Judas, the traitor, is believed to have left the gathering to meet the Roman soldiers and collect his payment for the betrayal. Finally, Jesus instituted the Eucharist: a ritual of consuming bread and wine as symbols of his body and blood, also referred to as communion. In the Roman Catholic Church, Maundy Thursday celebrates the institution of the Eucharist, the oldest of the observances peculiar to Holy Week, and gives priests an opportunity to prepare for the many rites associated with Good Friday, Holy Saturday, and Easter.

Good Friday, also called Sorrowful Friday, Mourning Friday, and Holy Friday (also Great Friday in the Orthodox Churches) observes the day on which Jesus was crucified by the Romans at Golgotha or Mt. Calvary. Catholic and Eastern Orthodox Churches hold special services called Tenebrae because the churches are darkened until three o’clock in the afternoon, the length of time it is believed it took Jesus to die. Both Good Friday and Holy Saturday are “alitur-gical” days because no communion can be celebrated.

Easter Sunday is the most joyous of the Christian celebrations because it is the day on which Jesus is believed to have arisen from the dead.

Much of the remaining Christian liturgical calendar is dated from this day forward, with the exception of Christmas, the day chosen to celebrate Jesus' birth. Ascension Day celebrates the Christian belief that Jesus rose to heaven 40 days after his resurrection from the dead on Easter Sunday. Pentecost is a two-day observance also called Whitsunday and Whitmonday, the Christian holiday that observes the descent of the Holy Spirit upon Jesus' apostles and the early Christians, about 50 days (seven weeks) after Easter and 10 days following Ascension Thursday.

The Feast of the Assumption is Mary's most important feast. According to the customs of the Roman Catholic Church, the Eastern and Orthodox Churches, as well as Catholic theology, the soul and body of Mary, the mother of Jesus, revered as the Blessed Virgin Mary (Roman Catholic) or Theotokos (Eastern Orthodox), was taken into heaven when she died. Although this feast ranks as one of the 12 Great Feasts of the Orthodox Church calendar, church authorities do not view it as dogma as Roman Catholics do. Both churches commemorate the Feast of the Assumption on August 15; in the Eastern Orthodox Church this event is known as the Feast of the Dormition, stressing the belief that the mother of Jesus did die a physical death before her assumption. The Assumption is significant to Christians because it is celebrated as Mary's heavenly birthday (the day that Mary was taken into heaven).

The last significant celebration of the Christian calendar is Christmas, which commemorates the birth of Jesus. The New Testament gospels say that Mary gave birth to Jesus in the town of Bethlehem. The birth of Jesus (the Nativity) was taken to be the fulfillment of a Jewish prophesy, according to which a messiah would come from King David's lineage to save the Jewish people. The earliest Christians probably celebrated Epiphany (the visit of the Magi to the baby Jesus) on January 6. It was only much later that attempts were made to determine the specific date of Jesus' birth. Roman Catholics and Protestant sects observe Jesus' birth on December 24–25, while Eastern Orthodox and related churches celebrate Epiphany, the visit of the Three Wise Men to Jesus' manger, on January 6–7, following the Julian calendar. Epiphany is regarded as the last day of the Christmas observances.

See also Volume I: ANDORRA; ANGOLA; ANTIGUA AND BARBUDA; ARGENTINA; ARMENIA; AUSTRALIA; AUSTRIA; BELARUS; BELGIUM; BELIZE; BOLIVIA; BOSNIA AND HERZEGOVINA; BRAZIL; BULGARIA; BURUNDI; CANADA; CAPE VERDE; CHILE; COLOMBIA; CONGO, DEMOCRATIC REPUBLIC OF THE; COSTA RICA; CROATIA; CYPRUS; CZECH REPUBLIC; DENMARK; DOMINICA; DOMINICAN REPUBLIC; ECUADOR; EL SALVADOR; EQUATORIAL GUINEA; ESTONIA; FINLAND; FRANCE; GEORGIA; GERMANY; GREECE; GRENADA; GUATEMALA; HAITI; HONDURAS; HUNGARY; ICELAND; IRELAND; ITALY; KIRIBATI

See also Volume II: LATVIA; LIECHTENSTEIN; LITHUANIA; LUXEMBOURG; MACEDONIA; MALTA; MEXICO; MICRONESIA, FEDERATED STATES OF; MOLDOVA; MONACO; NAMIBIA; NEW ZEALAND; NICARAGUA; NORWAY; PALAU; PANAMA; PARAGUAY; PERU; PHILIPPINES; POLAND; PORTUGAL; ROMANIA; RUSSIA; RWANDA; ST. LUCIA; SAN MARINO; SERBIA AND MONTENEGRO; SEYCHELLES; SLOVAKIA; SLOVENIA; SPAIN; SWEDEN; SWITZERLAND; TRINIDAD AND TOBAGO; UGANDA; UKRAINE; UNITED KINGDOM; UNITED STATES; URUGUAY; VATICAN CITY; VENEZUELA

See also Volume III: ALL SAINTS' DAY; ALL SOULS' DAY; ASCENSION, THE; ASSUMPTION; CHRISTMAS; CORPUS CHRISTI; EASTER; EPIPHANY; GOOD FRIDAY; HOLY SATURDAY; HOLY WEEK; IMMACULATE CONCEPTION

Further Reading

Marcus J. Borg, The Heart of Christianity: Rediscovering a Life of Faith (San Francisco: HarperSanFrancisco, 2004); Justo L. Gonzalez, The Changing Shape of Church History (St. Louis: Chalice Press, 2002); Paul Johnson, A History of Christianity (New York: Atheneum, 1977); C. S. Lewis, Mere Christianity (New York: Macmillan, 1981); John Riches and David Sim, The Gospel of Matthew in Its Roman Imperial Context (New York: Continuum, 2005); Richard J. Wagner, Christianity for Dummies. (Hoboken: John Wiley & Sons, 2004); Michael White, From Jesus to Christianity: How Four Generations of Visionaries & Storytellers Created the New Testament and Christian Faith (San Francisco: HarperSanFrancisco, 2004); Brian Wilson, Christianity (Upper Saddle River, N.J.: Prentice-Hall, 1999)

Christmas

FACT FILE

Observed in	Worldwide
Observed on	December 25, or January 7 in some Orthodox Churches
Observed by	Christians

Introduction

Christmas commemorates the birth of Jesus (the founder of Christianity) whom Christians believe to be the Son of God. The New Testament Gospels say that Mary gave birth to Jesus in the town of Bethlehem. The birth of Jesus (known as the Nativity) was taken to be the fulfillment of a Jewish prophesy, according to which a Messiah would come from King David's lineage to save the Jewish people. Moreover soon after Jesus' death, his message was taken as well to the Gentiles (one who is not of the Jewish faith or is of a non-Jewish nation). The earliest Christians probably celebrated some events surrounding the birth of Jesus but it was not until much later that attempts were made to determine the specific date.

The date for Christmas on December 25 has long been part of the Christian calendar, however, and it is widely recognized as a religious holiday in most countries where Christians live. December 24, or Christmas Eve, is also an important part of the celebrations. Devout Christians usually begin Christmas by attending Mass or a Eucharistic or midnight prayer service and exchanging gifts on Christmas Eve. The Anglican Church has candlelight services that are characteristically held in the early evening on December 24, and these services often include dramas based on the Nativity.

St. Nicholas or Santa Claus who is associated with the delivering gifts to young children on this night has long been associated with the Christmas season. Christmas Eve also used to be the day when a Christmas tree was set up. In recent years, however, because the holiday season starts on a different schedule in some countries, Christmas trees are set up much earlier in the season. Lavish meals, with ham or turkey as featured items, are an integral part of the celebrations.

Origins and History

Christianity began and spread across the Old World by promising a new life in the hereafter and by promoting Jesus as the Messiah. By the fourth century the Roman Emperor Constantine reformed the Julian calendar and introduced the seven-day week, thereby changing the way the months were subdivided. (It is possible that the idea of the seven-day week was modeled on the Christian sabbatical cycle.) Also during that century a calendar was established that emphasized Christian festivals, and these began to take over the dates and seasons of pagan celebrations and rituals.

The latter part of December was one such period. Previous to this time, according to the

Christmas Pudding

The earliest recipes for preparing this pudding can be traced back to the Middle Ages. The ingredients of the pudding (then called "mince pie") included minced poultry, pheasant, partridge, and rabbit. Later, sugar, apples, raisins, candied oranges, and lemons were added. Another version of Christmas pudding (porridge or frumenty) appeared in the 14th century; its ingredients included beef, mutton, raisins, currents, prunes, wine, and mixed spices. It was a souplike dish consumed prior to the beginning of the celebrations. During the 1600s, spirits, dried fruit, eggs, and breadcrumbs began to be added to the recipe, and it finally became plum pudding. In 1664, the Puritans banned it, considering it a custom unworthy of people who followed the ways of God.

December 25

Since 354 in the Western world, Jesus' birthday has been celebrated on December 25. This date was significant in the ancient world for many reasons. In Phrygia (former Asia Minor, modern Turkey), the sun god Attis's birth was commemorated on December 25. The same was the case for Mithra, the Persian sun god. Saturnalia, a Roman festival honoring the god Saturn, was celebrated from December 17 to December 24. It is believed that the popes selected December 25 to attract converts by changing the object of the observances but not the substance of these pagan festivals. Only their reference was different; the symbols and activities remained the same.

Julian calendar, the Saturnalia, a seven-day festival honoring the Roman deity Saturn, the god of agriculture, was observed on December 17. This festival included the winter solstice, which usually occurred around December 25. During the Saturnalia, the Romans feasted well, put aside all business and matters of war, exchanged gifts, and freed their slaves for the festival's duration. The Romans also celebrated December 25 as the date honoring the birth of the Unconquered Sun (Natalis Solis Invicti), and the Persians performed rituals to honor Mithra, the god of light. All these celebrations welcomed the return of the light and the lengthening days. Over time, the winter festivities stretched to include January 1, the festival of Kalends, the day of the new Moon and the first day of the month and year of the Julian calendar.

The story of the birth of Jesus is based mainly on the Gospels of St. Luke and St. Matthew, with traditionally accepted folkloric additions. The Gospels of St. John and St. Mark do not mention Jesus' birth or childhood and, to add to the uncertainty, the accounts of St. Matthew and St. Luke are quite different. According to the Gospel of St. Luke, the most popular version of the story and the one usually featured in Christmas Eve religious services, Mary (who was betrothed to Joseph) was told by the Archangel Gabriel that she was carrying God's child, even though she was a virgin. Mary and Joseph were married soon after. Some time later Joseph, who was a Nazareth carpenter, (the son of Jacob and the adopted or legal son of Heli, both of the family of David), traveled with Mary to Bethlehem of Judea, to enroll in the census that Augustus, the Roman emperor, had ordered. Since the inns in the town were all full, they could only find a stable in which to sleep. It was there that Jesus was born. Jesus' birth in Bethlehem, which was the home of King David, to whose lineage Joseph belonged, fulfilled Isaiah's prophecy about the birth of a savior. The magi (three wise men, named Balthazar, Caspar, and Melchior) arrived in Jerusalem and reported to Herod, the local king, that they had witnessed a star signifying the birth of a king. (We are not told whether they were riding camels. They might have walked.) They eventually arrived at the stable where Mary and Joseph had taken shelter and offered Jesus "frankincense, gold, and myrrh." During the night, each wise man dreamed that Herod wanted to murder the newborn, so they returned home without telling him they had found the child. The gospel of Matthew narrates that Jesus' family then fled to Egypt to escape Herod, who was having all the newborn children of Jerusalem under the age of two killed in order to eradicate any threat to his position. The Magi, it should be noted, are mentioned only in St. Matthew's Gospel and appear after he has reported Jesus' genealogy and virgin birth. Jesus' family finally returned to Israel after Herod's death and settled in Nazareth.

Residents of Nazareth playing the roles of Mary, holding Jesus, center, and Joseph, right, reenact the Nativity, the birth of Jesus. Christians throughout the world celebrate Jesus' birth on the Christmas holiday. (AP Photo/Lefteris Pitarakis)

Fun Fact

The Coptic Church is the indigenous form of Christianity established by the Apostle Mark in Egypt in the middle of the first century C.E. It is the national church of Egypt.

Christmas Trees and Decorations

According to one of the legends about the origin of the Christmas tree, St. Boniface (an English monk who organized the Christian Church in France and Germany), during one of his journeys, came upon a group of pagans gathered around a giant oak tree preparing to sacrifice a child to the god Thor. To stop the sacrifice and save the child's life, Boniface felled the tree with one mighty blow of his fist. In its place grew a small fir tree. The saint told the pagan worshipers that the tiny fir was the Tree of Life and stood for the eternal life of Jesus.

The symbols associated with this holiday are many. The decorations on the Christmas trees are highly significant. Through the centuries the Christmas star, placed at the top of the tree, has been associated with joyous celebrations. It symbolizes high hopes for a bright future and good fortune. The red-and-white striped candy canes represent the humble shepherds who were first to worship the baby Jesus. Their "J" shape also represents his name. The white stripes symbolize the virgin birth of Jesus and his sinless life, while the red stripes represent the Trinity and the blood shed by Jesus on the cross. The hardness of the candy symbolizes the foundation of churches and the strength of the promises made by God.

Bells symbolize the joys of life. A crystal ball maybe added to symbolize redemption, and lights or candles stand for the triumph of spring over the darkness of winter. They also symbolize the light that Jesus brought into the world. The Doves represent the Holy Ghost or Holy Spirit, when descending to Earth.

Since holly remained green even in winter, the pagan Druids (priests of ancient Celtic Britain, Ireland, and Gaul) considered it a sacred plant, meant to keep Earth beautiful even in the middle of a cold, harsh winter. The Romans offered holly to their god Saturn and used it widely during the Saturnalia. Besides decorating images of Saturn with it, Romans gave one another wreaths of holly. After the advent of Christianity, while Romans continued their pagan worship, Christians celebrated the birth of Jesus at the same time. To avoid persecution, they decked their homes with holly leaves. As the number of Christians increased, holly eventually lost its pagan connotation and became a symbol of Christmas. Holly has sharp edges, symbolic of the crown of thorns worn by Jesus before his Crucifixion, while the red berries represent his blood.

The Druids believed that mistletoe (a hemiparasite that grows most commonly on oak trees; it has leathery evergreen leaves and waxy white berries) fell from heaven and grew onto a tree that sprang from Earth. Mistletoe thus signifies the connection between heaven and Earth, as well as God's reconciliation with humanity. A kiss exchanged under mistletoe symbolizes acceptance and reconciliation.

Santa Claus

Giving gifts is an integral part of Christmas festivities. The notion of a jolly fat man in a red suit trimmed with fur giving children gifts originated with St. Nicholas, a kindhearted bishop who lived in Asia Minor during the fourth century. The Dutch people celebrated his feast day around December 6. The English colonists in North America adopted some features of this tradition into their Christmas celebrations; thus Sinterklaas (Saint Nick) became Santa Claus. In England, however, Father Christmas is a more common name for the jovial, pot-bellied figure who delivers presents all over the world in one night.

The narratives credited to Matthew and Luke, both written decades after Jesus' death, do not agree and focus on different parts of the story altogether. Furthermore, there were no eyewitnesses who could confirm or deny the stories as they were presented, and the other two gospels fail to mention Jesus' birth and childhood, leaving doubt regarding the accuracy of Matthew's and Luke's stories. It is not clear, for example, that the Romans would have taken a census during the worst time of the year, nor can authorities agree on whether shepherds would have been watching their sheep outdoors and at night, as reported, during the rainy season. What remain are questions that, two millennia later, remain unanswered and are probably unanswerable.

Christmas was not among the first festivals of the Christian religion, and attempts to fix a date for Jesus' birth date did not begin until approximately two hundred years after his death, when the Catholic Church decided to establish its traditions. Neither Irenaeus (130–202) nor Tertullian (155–230) mentions such an observance in his lists of feasts, Origen asserted in 495 that only sinners, not saints, celebrate their birthday, and Arnobius, writing in the 13th century, boldly mocked the “birthdays” attributed to the gods.

The pagan festival observing the Natalis Solis Invicti, which reached the peak of its popularity in 274, is the most logical source for the date of December 25, and the use of solar symbolism and language to refer to the Judeo-Christian God and Jesus has such a long history that relating its development would quickly become repetitious. The connections are numerous and incontrovertible. Thus Jesus' birth is celebrated on December 25 in Protestant, Catholic, and some Orthodox churches. The Coptic, Russian, Jerusalem, Georgian, and Serbian Orthodox Churches observe the holiday on January 7 because they rejected both the reforms of the revised Julian calendar and its successor, the Gregorian calendar.

Dates for Christmas holiday celebrations vary around the world. The festive season conventionally runs for the 12 days following Christmas in the United Kingdom. This period, signified by merry-making and feasting, ends on the 12th night after Christmas, the Feast of the Epiphany, which matches the liturgical season. Swedish medieval laws proclaimed julefrid (Christmas peace) to be 20 days and doubled the fines for manslaughter and robbery during that period. King Knut (r. 1080–86) is considered a saint because of his virtues and generosity. It was he who declared that Christmas should be celebrated for 20 days, officially ending the season on January 13. Until Saint Knut's Day, the time is filled with numerous parties and great rejoicing. After this period, Christmas trees are taken down to mark the official close of the season. Swedish children celebrate a party, and throw out the julgransplundring (Christmas tree) on January 13 (King Knut's day).

The Armenian Church emphasizes the Epiphany (the magi's visit to the baby Jesus), not Christmas. The period between Christmas Eve (December 24) and Epiphany (January 6) is commonly known as Yuletide. According to one of the prevalent theories, the root for “Yule” came from the aboriginal Scandinavians and denoted their winter solstice festival. Some scholars say that Yule probably means “feast,” while Yuletide meant the “season of feasting.”

Christmas is, by any computation, the most widely celebrated festival in the world. In many Christian and non-Christian countries, it is a time to be with the family, a period filled with gifts and extravagant feasts of foods served only on this occasion. This day also signifies a time of peace and harmony. Children particularly look forward to this day because Santa Claus (also known as Father Christmas) will bring them the things they hope for.

See also Volume I: ANDORRA; ANGOLA; ANTIGUA AND BARBUDA; ARGENTINA; ARMENIA; AUSTRALIA; AUSTRIA; BARBADOS; BELARUS; BELGIUM; BELIZE; BOLIVIA; BOSNIA AND HERZEGOVINA; BRAZIL; BULGARIA; BURUNDI; CANADA; CAPE VERDE; CHILE; COLOMBIA; CONGO, DEMOCRATIC REPUBLIC OF THE; COSTA RICA; CROATIA; CYPRUS; CZECH REPUBLIC; DENMARK; DOMINICA; DOMINICAN REPUBLIC; ECUADOR; EL SALVADOR; EQUATORIAL GUINEA; ESTONIA; FIJI; FINLAND; FRANCE; GABON; GEORGIA; GERMANY; GREECE; GRENADA;

Fun Fact

The name of the holiday first appears in Late Old English, Cristes Maesse, the Mass of Christ. In Latin, it was Dies Natalis, the Day of Birth, from which the French name Noël, the Italian, Il Natale, and the Spanish, La Navidad derive. Among the Dutch the celebration is called Kerstmisse (also the Mass of Christ), while the German name, Weihnachtsfest, refers to the sacred vigil of Christmas Eve.

GUATEMALA; GUYANA; HAITI; HONDURAS; HUNGARY; ICELAND; IRELAND; ITALY; JAMAICA; KENYA; KIRIBATI; KOREA, SOUTH

See also Volume II: LATVIA; LESOTHO; LIECHTENSTEIN; LITHUANIA; LUXEMBOURG; MACEDONIA; MADAGASCAR; MALAWI; MALTA; MARSHALL ISLANDS; MEXICO; MICRONESIA, FEDERATED STATES OF; MOLDOVA; MONACO; NAMIBIA; NAURU; NETHERLANDS; NEW ZEALAND; NICARAGUA; NIGERIA; NORWAY; PALAU; PANAMA; PARAGUAY; PERU; PHILIPPINES; POLAND; PORTUGAL; ROMANIA; RUSSIA; RWANDA; ST. KITTS AND NEVIS; ST. LUCIA; ST. VINCENT AND THE GRENADINES; SAMOA; SAN MARINO; SERBIA AND MONTENEGRO; SEYCHELLES; SLOVAKIA; SLOVENIA; SOUTH AFRICA; SPAIN; SURINAME; SWAZILAND; SWEDEN; SWITZERLAND; TANZANIA; TOGO; TRINIDAD AND TOBAGO; TUVALU; UGANDA; UKRAINE; UNITED KINGDOM; UNITED STATES; URUGUAY; VANUATU; VATICAN CITY; VENEZUELA; ZAMBIA

See also Volume III: CHRISTIANITY; EPIPHANY

Further Reading

Raymond E. Brown, The Virginal Conception and Bodily Resurrection of Jesus (Mahwah, N.J.: Paulist Press, 1973); W. F. Dawson, Christmas: Its Origin and Associations (Whitefish, Mont.: Kessinger Publishing, 2003); Anne Geddes, Twelve Days of Christmas (Kansas City, Mo.: Andrews McMeel Publishing, 2003); Joseph F. Kelly, The Origins of Christmas (Collegeville, Minn.: Liturgical Press, 2004); Paul William Roberts, In Search of the Birth of Jesus: The Real Journey of the Magi (New York: Putnam, 1995); R. L. Stine, Silent Night (New York: Pocket Books, 1997).

Fun Fact

There is not a month in either the Julian or Gregorian calendars that has not been suggested as the time of Jesus' birth.

Confucianism

FACT FILE

Observed in	China, Korea, Japan, and Vietnam
World Population	About 350 million
Place of Origin	China

Introduction

Confucianism (ru-jia, the School of the Scholars) is a major system of thought in China, not really a religion. It was developed from the teachings of Confucius (Kung fu-tze) and his disciples. Confucius (551–479 B.C.E.) was born poor in the Shandong Province of China. In spite of his birth, he nevertheless managed to get a good education. A remarkable thinker and educator, he became a teacher in his later life and attracted about 3,000 followers, of whom 72 became famous, or so the legend goes. His teachings have had a tremendous influence on China's civilization, the people's lives, their patterns of living, social values, standards for training government officials, and the development of Chinese political theories and institutions.

It is difficult to categorize Confucianism, since it is neither a philosophy nor a religion. It is more of a collection of values, precepts, and adages designed to lead practitioners toward the "middle way" (tao) of living. Confucianism does not have the elements that religions, like Christianity and Islam, require. Rather, rituals have been added to what is primarily an ethical system that provides guidelines for right living and right ruling.

Confucius stressed the ways people can live together cordially and develop a just and systematic society. According to Confucius, the "higher good" does not come from the privileges of birth but from the practice of moderate, beneficial, and generous behavior and of service to others. Attainment comes through education and formal behavior. Confucianism does not favor military solutions, but rather spiritual patience. It does not require religious edifices or clergy, and the only sin is a breach of the rule of goodness toward one's parents, one's superior, one's homeland, one's chief of state, or one's sons and daughters.

Confucius not only stressed social rituals (li), but also humaneness (ren). Ren, sometimes translated as "love" or "kindness," is not a single virtue but the source of all virtues. Ren keeps ritual forms from becoming hollow: A ritual performed with ren has ethical content apart from form; it nurtures the inner character of the person and furthers his or her ethical maturation. If Confucianism's exterior is conformity and acceptance of social roles, its interior is cultivation of conscience and character. Cultivation concerns extensive education and reflection on one's actions. It is a lifetime commitment to character-building.

The heart of Confucianism is reformist, idealistic, and spiritual. It stresses family interaction: Members are expected to treat each other with love, respect, and attention to the needs of all. It also prescribes the highest ideal for the state: The ruler is supposed to be a father to his people and look after their basic needs. It requires officials to be critical of their rulers and to refuse to serve the corrupt.

Origins and History

Confucius did not set out to found a religion, nor did he consider himself an original thinker. Instead, he saw his work as that of restoring a utopian period of Chinese history based on ancient wisdom, an unnamed core of social values at the heart of Chinese society. This undertaking, he believed, would bring order to his world. Confucius pulled together the common moral ideals of his culture. In its fledgling form the philosophy was principally a system of moral precepts for the proper management of society. To Confucius the old Chou religion framed the activities and events of everyday life.

For Confucius rituals were much more than religious acts of piety seeking the beneficence of the gods. They were everyday manifestations of the humane, cultured behaviors that had developed over centuries of human social activity. These rituals, he believed, were the ethical core of Chinese society, its "social mores." He was not a philosophical pioneer striking out into a wilderness of abstraction. Rather Confucius's task was restorative and conservative, mining China's past for small nuggets of wisdom, and his teachings affirmed the need for adhering to accepted social values and customs necessary to the social infrastructure and the bonds of human relationships. If each person understood his or her role and performed it, starting from the individual and the family, a society would evolve.

Li and ren provide the foundation of Confucianism. According to Confucianism, li (or social propriety) is the greatest rule of living. A society that lives by li functions smoothly. Confucius viewed people as social creatures who are bound within society by ren, or human kindness. Ren is expressed through five relationships: sovereign and subject, parent and child, elder and younger brother, husband and wife, and friend and friend. The filial equation is often most stressed among these.

Confucius lived in a tumultuous era in China's history, during the second half of the Zhou dynasty. The Zhou had conquered the Shangs and ruled China for close to 800 years (1050–256 B.C.E.). It was a time of social and moral chaos, when values were often disregarded or cast aside. In the culture of fear created by the warlords, the philosophy of Confucianism flourished, ultimately transforming Chinese society and dominating it for centuries. The reason for its dominance was that Confucianism conformed to the needs of the ruling classes. It stressed five constant virtues: ren (benevolence), yi (righteousness), li (propriety), zhi (wisdom), and xin (fidelity) as the foundation of a basic ethical code necessary for an ordered society. It presented a utopian world for both the ruling class and the common people. According to Confucianism, the ruler should be like a father to his people and cater to their essential needs. It encouraged officials to be loyal to their rulers and shun corruption, and promoted the absolute authority of a king over his subjects, a husband over his wife, and a father over his son.

Confucius's method of presenting information was indirect, and he frequently used allusions, innuendo, and even tautology to make his points. Had it not been for his disciples, Confucius's ideas would still be unknown. The great social thinker never wrote anything down himself, but his disciples preserved all of his sayings and conversations in a collection of books called the Analects. The Analects contain all that the world knows today of the man whose teachings are largely responsible for shaping the culture of China.

Two of the most important Confucian philosophers viewed Confucianism in totally different ways: Mencius (390–305 B.C.E.) and Xunzyi (mid-200s B.C.E.). Both held beliefs similar to those of Confucius, yet, at the same time, they were quite opposite. Mencius believed that people are born good and that they have to "preserve the natural compassion of the heart." Xunzyi (or Hsün-tzu) argued that people are innately evil but can be changed through moral edu-

Confucius's Name

Confucius was born into the family of Gong and given the personal name of Zhui; thus, his real name was Gong Zhui. Later after earning recognition as a teacher and attaining political power, he was called Master Gong or Gong Fu-Zi. From this name came the Latin translation that is used today.

cation. Xunzyi was also the major exponent of ritualism in Confucianism. He believed that desires should be guided and controlled by the rules of propriety and that character should be shaped by an orderly observance of rites and by the practice of music. This code was to serve as a commanding influence on character by properly directing emotions and providing inner harmony.

Confucianism focused on the needs of society and, in contrast to Buddhism and Taoism, not on the individual's ability to live in harmony with nature. In the 200s B.C.E., however, these two religions began to affect and reshape the standards of Confucianism, and elements like nature began to be incorporated. Between 200 B.C.E. and 600 C.E., there was a rapid decline in interest in Confucianism in China. This was in part because Confucianism now had to contend with Buddhism and Taoism, which were developed around this time. These religions and Confucianism were at the extreme ends of the spectrum. Buddhism and Taoism were largely concerned with the significance of death and suffering, while Confucianism largely ignored those aspects of life.

A revival of Confucianism began around the 600s but had ended by the 700s. In the 1100s, Zhu Xi (1130–1200 C.E.) was a Song Dynasty (960–1279 C.E.) Confucian scholar who led the movement called Neo-Confucianism. He developed a branch of Confucianism known as the rational wing, which dealt with the study of li, the relationship between humans and nature. Another branch was called the intuitional wing; it dealt mainly with enlightenment through a blend of meditation and moral action. Zhu Xi and his students are largely responsible for what is considered the Confucian canon: the four

Confucius: Observations of His Own Life

"At fifteen, I set my heart on learning. At thirty, I was firmly established. At forty, I had no more doubts. At fifty, I knew the will of heaven. At sixty, I was ready to listen to it. At seventy, I could follow my heart's desire without transgressing what was right." (Analects, 2:4).

Confucianism and Birth

Confucianism teaches that the spirit of the fetus (dai-shen) protects the expectant woman and deals severely with anyone who disturbs her. A special practice is followed in the disposal of the placenta. After delivery the mother is given a special diet and is allowed to rest for a month. While she recovers her family of origin provides whatever the infant needs on the first, fourth, and 12th monthly anniversaries of its birth.

books (sisbu), which consist of the Analects of Confucius, the Mencius, the Great Learning, and the Doctrine of the Mean; and the five scriptures, which include the Book of Changes (I Ching), perhaps the single best-known Chinese work in the West. Zhu Xi also wrote extensive commentaries for all of these classics. The writings were considered unorthodox in Zhu Xi's time, but they were accepted as standard commentaries on the Confucian classics at a later date.

From the 11th through the 19th centuries, Neo-Confucianism produced reformers, philanthropists, dedicated teachers, officials, and social philosophers.

In the early 20th century, Confucianism came into conflict with Communism. For many years after the Communist revolution in China the government outlawed Confucianism, because it tends to look to the past rather than the future. However, official government opposition ended in 1977.

Holidays and Religious Observances

Because Confucianism is not a religion in the most commonly understood sense of the term, it is more appropriate to talk about ceremonial observances, of which there are six: capping, marriage, mourning rites, sacrifices, feasts, and interviews. The first four are the most important, and they have changed very little over the centuries. Capping is a joyous celebration, held when a son turns 20. Relatives and invited guests gather to witness the father give his son a special name and a square-cornered cap as symbols of his having reached manhood. The ceremony is followed by a feast.

The marriage ceremony is very important because sons are expected to reproduce in order to sustain the patriarchal line and to ensure the continuance of ancestral worship. Young men are supposed to be married by the time they reach 30, whereas the age for young women is 20. Marriage in Confucianism is an elaborate process performed in six stages. During the proposal phase, the couple exchanges the year, month, day, and hour of their respective births. If any unfavorable event takes place in the bride-to-be's family in the subsequent three days, then the bride is believed to have rejected the proposal. After the wedding day is chosen, the bride announces it with invitations and gifts of moon-shaped cookies. Next, the bride's dowry is delivered to the groom's house in a formal procession, and the groom's parents reciprocate by sending the bride-price to the bride. The groom must then send gifts to the bride, which should be equal in value to her dowry. Then the groom goes to the bride's home and brings her to his house amid much celebration. During the actual wedding ceremony, the two recite their vows, toast each other with wine, and then host a banquet. Melon halves are hollowed out to serve as cups and filled with sweet spirits; these are handed to the bride and groom. The morning after the wedding, the bride serves breakfast to the groom's parents, who then reciprocate.

Performers dressed in replicas of ancient costumes bow in front of a statue of the ancient Chinese philosopher Confucius in a ceremony marking his birthday in northeast China. The ceremony marked the 2,556th anniversary of the birth of Confucius. (AP Photo)

Mourning rituals are also very important because of the connection with the worship of ancestors. They are extremely elaborate, and both their details and the length of mourning are based on the rank and relationship of the deceased. Confucian practice requires that, during a funeral, the family of the deceased put on clothes made of a coarse material. The corpse is washed and placed in a coffin. Mourners bring incense and money to make up for the cost of the funeral. Food and noteworthy objects of the deceased are placed inside the coffin. Because there are no religious "officials" in Confucian groups, the funeral is nondenominational in nature, insofar as a Buddhist or Taoist priest (or even a Christian minister) may perform the burial rites. Friends and family follow the coffin to the cemetery, carrying a willow branch, which represents the soul of the dead person. The branch is brought back to the family altar, where it is used to "install" the spirit of the deceased. Liturgies are performed on the seventh, ninth, and 49th days after the burial and on the first and third death anniversaries.

The importance of sacrifices is repeatedly emphasized in Confucian texts, where instructions are provided for their proper performance. "Sacrifice," however, does not entail blood-letting or death, as the word may suggest to Westerners. It is merely an offering of food to spirit guests, intended to express homage and reverence. There is always a lot of food and drink available for all at these observances, as well as music and singing, and it is believed that the spirits enjoy the feasting and entertainment as much as the living celebrants.

Finally, the worship of one's ancestors remains of great importance to followers of Confucius, although, like sacrifice, it is not "worship" as Westerners conceive of it. It consists of feasts held to honor one's dead kin. Every home, from the emperor's palace to the smallest peasant cottage, had a space set aside for an ancestral shrine where wooden tablets bearing the names of relatives, including even remote ancestors, were kept. At specific times, offerings of fruit, wine, and cooked meats were placed before these tablets, where the people believed the spirits of their relations temporarily rested. More impressive, public rituals were also performed by local clans, where their common ancestors were honored twice a year, in the spring and, again, in the fall. These observances involved great banquets, including music and formal dances, to which the dead were invited. Although these periodic feasts are largely restricted to those actually related by kinship ties, some public figures also earned the allegiance of the people and were also recognized with gifts of food. Confucius, regarded as one of the greatest social benefactors, is still honored in this way in China.

See also Volume I: CHINA; JAPAN; KOREA, SOUTH

See also Volume II: VIETNAM

Further Reading

Daniel A. Bell and Hahm Chaibong, eds., Confucianism for the Modern World. (New York: Cambridge University Press, 2003); John H. Berthrong and Evelyn Nagai Berthrong, Confucianism: A Short Introduction (Oxford U.K: Oneworld Publications, 2000); Benjamin A. Elman, John B. Duncan, and Herman Ooms, eds., Rethinking Confucianism: Past and Present in China, Japan, Korea, and Vietnam (Los Angeles: University of California, Asia Institute, 2002); Thomas W. Selover, Hsieh Liang-tso and the Analects of Confucius: Humane Learning as a Religious Quest (New York: Oxford University Press, 2005); C. Alexander Simpkins and Annellen M. Simpkins, Simple Confucianism: A Guide to Living Virtuously. (Boston: Tuttle, 2000); Walter H. Slote and George A. De Vos, eds., Confucianism and the Family (Albany, N.Y.: State University of New York Press, 1999); Xinzhong Yao, An Introduction to Confucianism (New York: Cambridge University Press, 2000)

Corpus Christi

FACT FILE

Observed in	Countries with Roman Catholic and Episcopal populations, as well as members of the Church of England
Observed on	Sixty days after Easter, on the Thursday after Trinity Sunday, and in some countries three days later, on Sunday
Observed by	Christians, primarily Roman Catholic, Episcopal, and Church of England

Introduction

During the Last Supper, Jesus offered bread and a cup of wine to his disciples, proclaiming these to be a sacred transformation of with his body and his blood. Jesus' act is the basis of the festival of Corpus Christi. Corpus Christi means "the body of Christ" in Latin. Corpus Christi is a religious feast, observed in May or June on the eighth Thursday (or 60 days) after Easter. It commemorates the institution of the Holy Eucharist (the practice of consuming of bread and wine representing the body and blood of Jesus by the congregation during the rite of Communion). Roman Catholics, some sections of the Church of England, and the Episcopal Church celebrate this festival. Its date is not fixed to a particular day of the year, but moves according to the date of Easter, which also varies from year to year.

In the early days of the Christian Church, Corpus Christi was celebrated during Holy Week. This was a somber time for Christians who meditated on the Passion and suffering of Jesus. Since many other functions were also organized during this festival, the significance of the actual event tended to be lost. To safeguard the sanctimony of the main festival Pope Urban IV (r. 1261–64 C.E.) decided to introduce a new feast in 1264. He decreed that the festival be celebrated on the Thursday after Trinity Sunday (the first Sunday after Pentecost, which marks the descent of the Holy Spirit to Earth). St. Thomas Aquinas (1225/27–74) was asked to write the office (the prescribed form of worship) for the festival. The feast has been celebrated in many parts of the world for the 750 years since.

A cardinal blesses worshippers during a Corpus Christi celebration at the Zocalo Square in Mexico City. This Roman Catholic holiday celebrates the miraculous transformation of the body and blood of Christ into the bread and wine that the faithful receive at Communion. (AP Photo/Eduardo Verdugo)

After it was introduced in Belgium, the feast came to be accepted at Cologne in Germany in 1306 and in England between 1320 and 1325. In 1970 the day was changed to the Sunday after Trinity Sunday in the United States and in many other parts of the world.

Corpus Christi is not among the great feasts of Eastern Orthodoxy, but in the Greek Church, the Syrians, Armenians, Coptics, Melchites, and the Ruthenians of Galicia, Calabria, and Sicily observe the feast of Corpus Christi.

Origins and History

The origins of the festival can be traced to St. Juliana, an Augustinian nun. She was born in 1193 at Retines near Liège in Belgium. She had been orphaned early in life and was cared for and educated by the Augustinian nuns. Later she became the superior (head) of the convent. From an early age she displayed a deep devotion to the Eucharist, and this feeling was strengthened when the Lord appeared to her at the age of 16 and told her that there should be a feast to celebrate the Eucharist or Blessed Sacrament. The reasons for the feast given by the Lord were threefold: He wanted to strengthen Catholic faith in the Eucharist. He wanted people to derive strength from it and, thus, lead virtuous lives; and honoring the Eucharist would make up for any sacrilegious acts committed against the Eucharist. Another story that connects her decision to request a feast celebrating the Eucharist describes her vision as one of the Catholic Church, under a full Moon, with a single dark spot. This dark spot represented the lack of such an observance.

Twenty years after receiving this vision, Juliana became the superior of her order, and she decided that this was the time to create the feast. She spoke to the bishop of Liège Robert de Thorte, to the learned Dominican Hugh, later cardinal legate in the Netherlands, to Jacques Pantaleon, archdeacon of Liège, who later became bishop of Verdun, to the patriarch of Jerusalem, and finally to Pope Urban IV. The bishops of those times had the power to order feasts in their dioceses. In 1246 Bishop Robert ordered the feast to be observed, starting the next year, in his diocese.

Corpus Christi Play

The York Corpus Christi Cycle is actually a collection of religious plays performed outdoors in the town of York, England, during the Feast of Corpus Christi. The plays date back to the period in history before England separated from the Roman Catholic Church and emphasize Catholic beliefs and rituals. From the 14th to the 16th centuries, they were performed despite Protestant censorship. Community leaders—religious heads, town officials, and other important locals—would perform a predawn torchlight procession in which the Eucharist would be carried in front, followed by the “play” wagons. Today, the plays are performed in York as a daylong festival.

When Juliana passed away in 1258, the feast had not yet spread to all parts of the world. After she was canonized as a saint, there arose some controversy over celebrating it. It was felt by certain sections of the Catholic Church that there was no need to have a separate feast to mark the Eucharist and that it was being given sufficient importance in daily church rituals. This controversy was, however, resolved by a miracle that took place in the town of Bolsena in Italy in 1263.

A German priest, Father Peter of Prague, was on his way to Rome, when he stopped in the town of Bolsena in Orvieto, Italy, to hold a Mass. He did not fully believe that Jesus was present in the Eucharist, but, as he was speaking the words of the Consecration, blood began to drip from the blessed

Italian infiorata

The word infiorata refers to carpets of flower petals that have been arranged in myriad patterns on the streets. This custom can be traced back to ancient Greek festivals. The Italian infiorata is a combination of the showers of flowers thrown in front of processions and the laying of palm mats for Jesus when he entered Jerusalem. The carpets of flowers usually depict religious and social traditions and customs.

The connection between Corpus Christi and infiorata can be traced back to June 16, 1462, when Pope Pius II (r. 1464–71) was celebrating the festival in the Italian town of Viterbo and asked the townspeople to decorate the path of the procession in a way that would be “fitting for the gods.” The people responded by decorating the route with plants, putting up archways of flowers, hanging tapestries from walls, and creating carpets of flower petals for the pope to walk on.

The Year of the Eucharist

The late Pope John Paul II (r. 1978–2005) declared October 2004 to October 2005 to be the Year of the Eucharist. The International Eucharistic Congress, in Guadalajara, Mexico, was held from October 10–17 and ended with the assembly of bishops in the Vatican.

bread onto the altar cloth below. He ceased to doubt that the bread and wine offered during the Mass were actually the body and blood of Jesus. Amazed by this incident he went to see Pope Urban IV and described what had happened to him. After conducting his own investigation, the pope declared it a miracle and decreed the Feast of Corpus Christi to be celebrated on September 8, 1264.

In 1264 Pope Urban IV died, and this prevented the feast from spreading farther. However, in 1311 at the Council of Vienne, Pope Clement V (r. 1305–14) declared that the feast be adopted throughout the world and published a decree to this effect. Its spread was further encouraged by his successor Pope John XXII (r. 1316–34.)

The procession that is a part of the feast today was not referred to in either of their decrees, though it was being done in some places. This was made a regular part of the celebration by Popes Martin V (r. 1417–31) and Eugene IV (r. 1431–47.)

See also Volume I: ANDORRA; ANGOLA; ANTIGUA AND BARBUDA; ARGENTINA; AUSTRALIA; AUSTRIA; BELGIUM; BELIZE; BOLIVIA; BRAZIL; BURUNDI;

CANADA; CAPE VERDE; CHILE; COLOMBIA; CONGO, DEMOCRATIC REPUBLIC OF THE; COSTA RICA; CROATIA; CZECH REPUBLIC; DOMINICA; DOMINICAN REPUBLIC; ECUADOR; EL SALVADOR; EQUATORIAL GUINEA; FRANCE; GERMANY; GRENADA; GUATEMALA; HAITI; HONDURAS; HUNGARY; IRELAND; ITALY; KIRIBATI

See also Volume II: LIECHTENSTEIN; LITHUANIA; LUXEMBOURG; MEXICO; MICRONESIA, FEDERATED STATES OF; MONACO; NEW ZEALAND; NICARAGUA; PALAU; PANAMA; PARAGUAY; PERU; PHILIPPINES; POLAND; PORTUGAL; RWANDA; ST. LUCIA; SAN MARINO; SEYCHELLES; SLOVAKIA; SLOVENIA; SPAIN; SWITZERLAND; TRINIDAD AND TOBAGO; UGANDA; UNITED KINGDOM; URUGUAY; VATICAN CITY; VENEZUELA

See also Volume III: CHRISTIANITY

Further Reading

Catholic Church, United States Conference of Catholic Bishops, The Real Presence of Jesus Christ in the Sacrament of the Eucharist: Basic Questions and Answers (Washington, D.C.: Author, 2001); Carolyn Dean, Inka Bodies and the Body of Christ: Corpus Christi in Colonial Cuzco, Peru (Durham, N.C.: Duke University Press, 1999); Bruce E. Ford, Notes on the Celebration of the Eucharist: A Supplement to the Ceremonial Directions of the Book of Common Prayer (Missoula, Mont.: Hymnary Press, 1986); Theodore K. Lerud, The Social and Political Dimensions of the English Corpus Christi Drama (New York: Garland, 1988); Alan H. Nelson, The Medieval English Stage: Corpus Christi Pageants and Plays (Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1974).

Declaration of the Bab

FACT FILE

Observed in	Countries with Bahai populations, primarily India
Observed on	Fifth and sixth of Azamat, the fourth month of the Bahai calendar
Observed by	Bahai

Introduction

On May 22, Bahai throughout the world celebrate the Declaration of the Bab, which originally took place in Shiraz, Persia, in 1844 C.E. on the Gregorian calendar. On that day, two hours after dusk, Siyyid Ali Muhammad first referred to himself as the Bab (which means “the gate”), and announced his mission to inform the masses about the impending arrival of another prophet. Reckoned by the Bahai 19-month calendar, the Bab declared his sacred mission on Azamat (“Grandeur”) 5, and the event is observed on Azamat 5–6.

This event opened the Bahai era in 1260 A.H. on the Islamic lunar calendar. The declaration marked the beginning of six turbulent years in Persia. Thousands of the Bab’s followers were killed and the Bab himself was executed in 1850 by a firing squad.

The Declaration of the Bab is one of Bahai’s eleven holy days. Work is forbidden on nine of those days, including the Declaration of the Bab. Bahai refrain from work after sunset on May 22 until dusk on May 23. Greeting cards are sent out on this occasion.

Origins and History

In 1783, a wise man named Shaykh Ahmad-i-Ashai traveled through Persia, teaching that a great day was imminent. That day would see the advent of the promised one of Islam. While spreading the message, he managed to gather a group of students from among the secular leaders and clergy of that time, all of whom were eager to learn from him. Among his students was a man by the name of

Letters of the Living

Mulla Husayn was the first disciple of the Bab. Seventeen more disciples of Siyyid Kazim recognized the Bab as God’s manifestation. One of them was a poet who later earned the name Tahirih (the Pure). These 18 disciples were known as Letters of the Living.

Anis: Anis (or Mulla Muhammad Ali), offered himself to be killed along with the Bab. It is said that he was unharmed when the Armenian firing squad fired at him and the Bab the first time.

Siyyid Kazim-i-Rashti, who became his favorite pupil and successor.

After Shaykh Ahmad’s death in 1826, Siyyid Kazim-i-Rashti continued to spread his predecessor’s message, but opposition to the movement kept growing stronger. In an effort to garner the support of some higher authorities, he sent one of his students Mulla Husayn-i-Bushrui to relate his master’s teachings to the authorities and answer their queries. Mulla Husayn was successful in this task. Still, the opposition to Siyyid Kazim’s message did not abate, and he had to bear great hardship as his foes did everything possible to discredit him, at times even putting his life in jeopardy. Siyyid Kazim continued to proclaim the coming revelation, although he refused to reveal the identity of the promised one, saying that no one would accept it if he did so. Before his death in 1843 C.E., he instructed his followers to go out and look for the Promised One, saying that the time of his discovery had come.

Mulla Husayn-i-Bushrui, his brother, and a nephew went to Shiraz on this quest, on May

Shrine of the Bab

The Shrine of the Bab, in Haifa, Israel, is the place where the Bab's mortal remains are deemed to have been interred. Bahauallah himself designated the location in 1891. It was built by Abdul Baha; years later Shoghi Effendi Rabbani completed the superstructure in the 1950s.

22,1844 C.E. While strolling outside the city gates a few hours before dusk, Mulla Husayn-i-Bushrui was suddenly greeted by a youth wearing a green turban (an indication that he was of prophet Muhammad's lineage). Mulla Husayn-i-Bushrui initially thought he was a follower of Siyyid Kazim who had known of Husayn's coming to Shiraz and was there to welcome him. Even so, the manner of the greeting was astonishing. He took Mulla Husayn-i-Bushrui to his house, where he was kind and extremely welcoming. On being asked by Siyyid Ali Muhammad (the young man) about the purpose of his visit, Mulla Husayn revealed that he was searching for the Promised One of Islam. The youth then asked how the Promised One would be recognized, to which Husayn said that he would be of a pure lineage (of Muhammad), of illustrious descent, blessed with innate wisdom, and free from physical problems. To Mulla Husayn's astonishment, the young man declared that all those signs were manifest in him.

But, in order to be absolutely sure, Husayn proposed two tests for Siyyid Ali Muhammad. The first was a discourse Mulla Husayn had composed himself, which contained the profound teachings of Siyyid Kazim and Shaykh Ahmad. Siyyid Ali Muhammad duly unraveled the intricacies of the composition. Then, without being asked, Siyyid Ali Muhammad proceeded to write a commentary spontaneously (as Siyyid Kazim had told him the promised one would do) on the Surih of Joseph (the 12th sura in the Koran that tells the story of Joseph). Thus, Siyyid Ali Muhammad revealed himself to be the Bab.

Thenceforth, Siyyid Ali Muhammad called himself the Bab, or "the gate," and Mulla Husayn became his first disciple. Although the Bab was the promised one of Islam, he taught the people that he was simply a precursor to another messenger (as John the Baptist was to Jesus) who would follow him and whose powers and revelations would exceed that of any other messiah or prophet previously sent down by God. Siyyid Ali Muhammad's astonishing claim showed his tremendous courage, because he would face vicious opposition from Persia's fanatical clerics, who would be readily backed by an inept monarchy.

The Bab was well aware that his followers would be persecuted in the most horrendous manner and that he himself would be vilified, flogged, and openly executed. The Bahai believe that the moment of Siyyid Ali Muhammad's declaration identifying himself as the Bab marked the end of humanity's spiritual adolescence and the start of its spiritual maturity. Such a huge transition could not have been accomplished without great turmoil, and the Bab foretold of yet another (and a greater) revelation to come. This ultimately led in 1863 C.E. to the Declaration of Bahauallah, the father of the Bahai faith, as the manifestation of God for that period.

The Bab's main work was the Bayan, which altered some Muslim laws. It stressed a high ethical standard and cleanliness of motive and heart. It elevated the status of women and the deprived people unnoticed in Islamic life. It also endorsed education and the sciences. In addition, the Bayan foretold the coming of Bahauallah that would usher in an age of prosperity and peace as promised in Christianity, Islam, Judaism, and all other world religions. Due to his boldness and the nature of his beliefs, which sometimes contradicted the religious beliefs of Islam, the Bab was branded a rebel and a heretic and was ultimately executed.

On July 9, 1850 C.E. the Bab and a youthful follower were brought out of their cell to be executed. The Bab had previously sought permission to finish what he had been working on, but his request was denied. He was led out to a courtyard where three lines of 250 Armenian soldiers fired at him and his companion. It is said that when the smoke cleared the Bab was not seen and his friend was uninjured. The guards found the Bab in his cell offering final instructions to a follower. Earlier, the Bab had warned that no earthly power could stop him until he had said everything he had to say. His work accomplished, the Bab calmly surrendered himself to the guards. It is said that the Armenian troops refused to fire again. A Muslim firing squad took their place and successfully completed the execution.

See also Volume I: INDIA

Further Reading

Kenneth E. Bowers, God Speaks Again: An Introduction to the Bahai Faith (Willamette, Ill.: Bahai Publications, 2004); Juan Ricardo Cole, Modernity and the Millennium: The Genesis of the Bahai Faith in the Nineteenth-Century Middle East (New York: Columbia University Press, 1998); J. Douglas Martin, The Persecution of the Bahais of Iran, 1844–1984 (Ottawa: Association for Bahai Studies, 1984); Michael McMullen, The Bahai: The Religious Construction of a Global Identity (New Brunswick, N.J.: Rutgers University Press, 2000); Mary Perkins, Hour of the Dawn: The Life of the Bab (Oxford: Ronald Press, 1987); Peter Smith, The Bahai Faith: A Short History (Oxford: Oneworld Publications, 1999).

Diwali

FACT FILE

Observed in	Countries with Hindu populations, especially India
Observed on	Five days from the 13th day of the waning half (Krishna Paksha) of Asvina, the seventh month in the Hindu calendar, to the second day of the waxing half (Shukla Paksha) of Karttika, the eighth month in the Hindu calendar
Observed by	Hindus

Introduction

Diwali, or Deepavali (Sanskrit for “row of lights”) is the Hindu Festival of Lights. It is the most important and the most famous of all Hindu festivals and an occasion of tremendous excitement, hectic activities, and rejoicing. Like Dussehra (which precedes it), it commemorates the triumph of good over evil.

The exact event or deity and the date of the observance celebrated by Diwali depend on one’s location. In Northern India, Diwali falls on the last day of the Vikram (lunar) calendar, during the waning (dark phase) of the Moon, and it is the time when businesses start their fiscal year. The following day, called Annakut, begins a new year. In Southern India, where the Shalivahana (solar) calendar is used, Diwali begins in the seventh month (Asvina). (The Shalivahana calendar begins in the year 78 C.E. when King Shalivahana was crowned after defeating the Sakas, an invading Central Asian tribe.)

Throughout the year numerous festivals are celebrated in India, a country renowned for celebrations. Though the Festival of Lights is meant to be celebrated for one day, local customs, traditions, and religious aspirations of the people have transformed it into a four- or five-day festival, starting with Dhanteras—the “day of wealth,” when shoppers return home and light the first Diwali lamps—and culminating with Bhaiya dooj, Brothers’ Day.

During this festive season, all things come to a standstill in India, except happy family activities, shopping, and feasting. Everyone is filled with excitement and enthusiasm (especially children) starting a month before Diwali. During this period people perform a thorough cleaning of their homes and arrange for their houses to be whitewashed and painted. They buy jewelry and new clothes for this festival and exchange gifts and sweets with their families and friends. Hence, during the countdown to Diwali, there is a flurry of activity: shopping sprees, placing orders for jewelry and ornaments, preparation and packing of dry fruits and sweets (major gift items), and the like. For quite a few days prior to the main day of the festival there are crowds of people on the streets, all in a frenzy to finish distributing their gifts; this frequently causes traffic jams in all the larger towns and cities of India.

The first day of the festival is called Dhanteras or Dhanatrayodashi. Marigolds and mango leaves are hung on the doorways and archways of all buildings and homes. Rangolis (colorful designs drawn on the floor using various materials such as colored powders, sawdust or sand, flower petals, paints, or even grains) are created both inside and outside the houses. The conventional motifs are often connected with favorable symbols of luck. Diyas, small earthen lamps, are set in and around homes. These flickering lamps give the festival its name. On this particular day people purchase goods for the house or jewelry for the women in every family. Also on this day it is propitious to buy something metallic, especially silver, since it is believed to bring prosperity.

The following day is called Kali Chaudas, Chhoti Diwali, or Bhoot Chaturdashi. Only 14

Fireworks

Fireworks are an important part of Diwali celebrations, with millions of rupees literally going up in smoke during the celebrations. In recent times though, there has been a prohibition against firecrackers since they create a lot of noise, in addition to atmospheric contamination. Every year there are a number of injuries and accidental deaths caused by firecrackers.

Fun Fact

Diyas are earthen lamps lit at Diwali. Oil or ghee (a form of clarified butter) is used for fuel, and the wick is usually made of cotton-wool. Diyas can also be made by partially filling a glass with colored water, with ghee floating on top. Children can make their own diyas using dried clay or dough.

lamps are lit. It is believed that on this night Lord Shiva, the Destroyer, and the third deity of the Hindu trinity, romps around with his band of ghouls, goblins, and wicked spirits. Evil is afoot on this eerie night.

On the new Moon night—the third and actual day of Diwali—the entryways and surroundings of all homes and dwellings are brightly illuminated with rangoli to accord a warm welcome to Lakshmi, the goddess of wealth and the consort of Vishnu. Lakshmi Puja (worship of the goddess) is held on the evening of this day. The day ends with a lavish family meal, displays of fireworks, and the noise of bursting firecrackers. This day is a public holiday, though most shops and businesses stay open in the morning. Diwali is considered a favorable day for opening new homes, shopping, finalizing business deals, or beginning a new project or venture.

On the following day, Hindu families commemorate the New Year (in northern India) by wearing new clothes and jewelry, as well as by paying visits to business colleagues and family members to give gifts. In the business societies in the states of Gujarat, Madhya Pradesh, Maharashtra, and Rajasthan, Diwali is the occasion when the commercial year begins. All business families and organizations perform mubarat puja, or worship, of their books of accounts. This is also the day when Annakut takes place. Annakut, which literally means “mountain of food,” is a grand, sacred religious feast in which food is offered to God. Thereafter the consecrated food items are distributed among the devotees. The underlying idea of this grand feast is to thank God for the bounty and abundance that he has bestowed on the people.

The fifth and the last day of this holiday is Bhaiyya Dooj, or Brothers’ Day. On this day sisters

Diwali and Other Religions

Diwali is also important to the Sikhs of India. It was during Diwali in 1620 that Hargobind Singh, the sixth of the Sikh Gurus, achieved the liberation of 52 Hindu princes, wrongly imprisoned by the Mughals in Gwallior Fort. The Golden Temple was set ablaze with lights to mark the occasion, and the Sikhs have upheld the tradition. The Jain community also observes this occasion to commemorate Lord Mahavira’s establishment of dharma (divine law).

A girl lights lamps for Diwali celebrations in Ahmadabad, India. Diwali, the festival of lights, celebrates the return of the Hindu god Rama from exile and marks the beginning of the Hindu New Year. (AP Photo/Siddharth Darshan Kumar) apply tilak (a sacred red mark) on their brothers’ foreheads so that they will have long lives and well-being. Although the day is meant to honor brothers, it is the sisters who get all the attention and gifts. Brothers go to a great deal of trouble to meet their sisters on this day, showering them with presents and money, and pampering them a good deal. It is not a public holiday, but educational institutions are closed; and nonessential government offices are closed.

Diwali is commemorated on an impressive scale in all regions of India, chiefly as the beginning of the New Year in northern areas of the country. Diwali is also observed outside India, mainly in Guyana, Malaysia, Fiji, Mauritius, Nepal, Myanmar, Sri Lanka, Singapore, Trinidad and Tobago, Indonesia, Britain, Thailand, Japan, Australia, Suriname in South America, and several countries in Africa.

Origins and History

The stories connected with Diwali and why it evolved into such a widely celebrated festival are different in various regions and states of India. In the north, particularly in Uttar Pradesh, Punjab, Haryana, and Bihar, the first Diwali was celebrated to commemorate the triumphant return of King Rama of Ayodhya (the seventh manifestation of Vishnu, the Protector), Sita (his wife), and his brother Lakshmana to the capital city Ayodhya after 14 years of exile. During the exile, Lord Rama had vanquished the demon Ravana, the king of Sri Lanka. As night had already fallen before the arrival of the royal trio, the people, delighted to have their king back in their midst, lit clay lamps along the way to dispel the darkness and light up their path.

Any discussion of the origins of Diwali would be incomplete without a mention of the generous, but ambitious (ancient, mythical) king named Bali. Some gods had appealed to Vishnu (the Creator and the second deity of the Hindu trinity) to curb Bali's growing powers. Vishnu came down to Earth in the shape of a dwarf and dressed as a Brahmin priest. The dwarf approached King Bali and asked the latter to grant him the land that he could cover in three steps. Being a generous ruler, Bali granted the dwarf his request. At this point, the dwarf revealed himself as Vishnu, and in three massive strides covered the earth, sky, and the netherworld (hell). King Bali was subsequently banished to the netherworld. The Hindus (especially in Kerala) remember this big-hearted king on the occasion of Diwali.

Another legend tells of Narakasura, a monster, who ruled the kingdom of Pradyoshapuram. He was a troublemaker and frequently disturbed the peaceful existence of the gods and the pious sages or created havoc during rituals. To prove his might Narakasura usurped the territories of Aditi, the king of Suraloka and a relative of Satyabhama, Lord Krishna's wife. Extremely vexed, Indra and other gods approached Lord Krishna and sought his help. Satyabhama requested Krishna to give her this chance to slay Narakasura. The demon was under a curse that dictated he could be killed only by a woman. With Krishna as the charioteer, Satyabhama entered the battlefield and killed Narakasura. The act symbolized the victory of good over evil. Later, Bhudevi, the mother of the slain demon, declared that his death should not be a day of mourning, but an occasion to celebrate. Since then, Diwali has been happily celebrated by people every year.

Also on this day Lakshmi is believed to have emerged from the ocean of milk (ksbeer sagar) in the wake of the churning of the ocean (samudra man-

Gifts

Like the Western tradition of Christmas, Diwali is a time for buying gifts for family and friends. Conventionally, dried fruits and sweets have been common items of exchange, but the event has given rise to serious shopping, and increasing commercialization is taking the place of spirituality. Shopkeepers expect to profit significantly in the weeks leading up to the festival.

than), bringing with her wealth and prosperity for humanity. On that day a ceremonial prayer (puja) was performed in her honor. This significant event is celebrated every year by Hindus.

Yet another legend concerns Lord Krishna. The people of the village where he had grown up always prayed to the god Indra, since they thought that he sent rain to make the crops grow. Lord Krishna convinced them to venerate the mountain Govardhan instead, because it was fertile and provided rich grass for the village cows to graze on, causing them to yield abundant milk. Indra was most displeased. One night, when the villagers were sleeping, he sent torrential rain upon the village. The villagers cried to Krishna for help, who rescued them by lifting the mountain and holding it aloft on the tip of his finger. Under it, the villagers collected until the storm ceased. To Hindus the food offered to God on Diwali is a reminder of the significance of food; it is a time to be grateful to God for all of nature's bounty.

See also Volume I: BHUTAN; FIJI; GUYANA; INDIA

See also Volume II: MALAYSIA; MAURITIUS; NEPAL; SURINAME

See also Volume III: HINDUISM

Further Reading

Denise M. Jordan, Diwali (Chicago: Heinemann Library, 2002); Dilip Kadodwala, Diwali (Austin, Tex.: Raintree Steck-Vaughn, 1998); Kerena Merchant, Diwali (Hove, East Sussex, U.K.: Wayland, 1996).

❧ Dussehra ❧

FACT FILE

Observed in	Countries with Hindu populations, especially various states of India
Observed on	First through 10th of Asvina, the seventh month of the Hindu calendar
Observed by	Hindus

Introduction

Dussehra, or Vijay Dashmi, is a popular Hindu holiday, observed with great fervor by Hindus throughout the world and second only to Diwali, the Festival of Lights, which it precedes. Dussehra marks the event of the killing of the evil demon Ravana by Lord Rama, one of the most revered deities in Hinduism and the main character of the epic Ramayana (a Sanskrit classic traditionally attributed to Valmiki).

Dussehra is celebrated on the day after the nine-day festival of Navratri. During the combined 10-day festival, Ramleela (the story of Rama) is performed by professional dance groups and amateur troupes. On the final day of the festival men, young and old, dressed as Rama, Lakshmana (Rama's brother), Ravana, and other actors in the drama, walk through the main roads and streets of the cities and towns. Ravana and Rama engage in a fight, and Ravana is defeated.

The festival is celebrated throughout India. In areas of northern India, people believe Dussehra to be a propitious day for new beginnings, so children start their education, their music, or dance and sports classes this day. Grown-ups also begin new projects and journeys.

Ramleela

The Ramleela is a folk play that retells the story of Rama. It is performed for the entire duration (nine days) of Navratri, culminating on Dussehra, the day Rama destroys Ravana. There are songs sung in Rama's praise, and thousands of people witness this traditional theater with its dazzling costumes, makeup, jewelry, and drama. Ravana's effigies are burned, symbolizing the triumph of good over evil.

Dussehra is also the day on which Saraswati, the goddess of knowledge, is celebrated. In the state of West Bengal, where the goddess Durga is venerated, it is observed as Durga Puja. The entire season from Navratri to Diwali is a festive period when people visit relatives and friends to exchange gifts, food, and sweets.

Origins and History

Dussehra is one of the major Hindu festivals, observed with great enthusiasm by Hindus everywhere. The event marks the victory of Lord Rama over Ravana, the demon king. The battle between good and evil and the eventual triumph of good is the fundamental theme of Ramayana, which is one of the two most celebrated epics (the other being the Mahabharata) of the Hindu religion. Lord Rama, the central character of the Ramayana, represents the best of the human race, and Ravana is the evil force.

Dussehra means "taking away ten sins" in Sanskrit. The 10 heads of the demon Ravana signify these 10 sins, and Lord Rama is the one who destroys them. According to the Ramayana, Ravana kidnapped Sita (Lord Rama's wife) with the help of the demon Maricha. According to Hindu mythology Ravana was a great scholar and a fervent follower of Lord Shiva, but the same powers that were conferred on him for his unwavering devotion proved to be his downfall, due to his crass misuse of that power.

The demon kept Sita in the Ashoka Grove and insisted on making her his wife. Sita firmly refused to pay any heed to Ravana's advances, entreaties, and threats, while Rama sent messengers to the demon, urging him to return his wife. Ravana, however, refused to do so. Lord Rama went to Sri Lanka with Hanuman, Angada, Sugriva, Jambvan, and hundreds of other powerful monkeys. Vibhishana, Ravana's younger brother, was a devotee of God, and he took shelter with Rama. Rama built a walkway in the sea to take him and his army across the water.

Artists carry the heads of 10-headed demon king Ravana for the Hindu festival Dussehra, in Allahabad, India. The festival culminates with the burning of the Ravana effigy, to symbolize the victory of good over evil. (AP Photo/Rajesh Kumar Singh)

On the 10th day of the festival, also called the Vijayadashmi day, huge effigies of Ravana, his brother Kumbhkarna, and his son Meghnad, made of various kinds of inflammable and explosive material, are put up in open spaces. A figure of Lord Rama, escorted by his wife, Sita, and brother Lakshmana, appear and shoot arrows of fire at the effigies, which burst into flames. The result is a loud blast, augmented by shouts of triumph from the audience.

This holiday is also observed with passion, particularly in West Bengal and by the Bengalis in India, as Durga Puja. During this celebration, dedicated to the veneration of the goddess Durga, who has a special position among Hindu divinities, the puja or worshipping takes place from the fifth day of Navratri on. Durga is Shakti, the cosmic energy that gives life to all beings. Beautifully crafted idols of the goddess Durga and her four children, the elephant-headed Ganesha (the remover of difficulties), Kartik (provider of offspring), Lakshmi (goddess of wealth), and Saraswati (goddess of learning) are worshiped in pandals (“stalls”) for five days. Popular Bengali tradition visualizes the five days of the puja as Goddess Durga’s annual visit to her maternal home on Earth, accompanied by her children. On the 10th day the idols are carried out in a procession ending in immersion (visarjan) in a pond or river. This signifies Durga’s return to her abode in heaven, Mount Kailash.

Durga Puja celebrations can be traced far back in Indian history. Today, Durga Puja is primarily a community festival. It was once the most luxurious of all festivals held under the patronage of the rich and powerful like the feudal lords, important businessmen, and rajas (kings). Even then, it stirred up great fervor and popular support.

Navratri

Navratri is a celebration of worship, music, and dance observed over nine nights (nav means “nine” and ratri means “nights”). It is observed from the first to the ninth days of the month of Ashwin in the Shukla Paksha (the fortnight of the waxing Moon), according to the Hindu calendar. This period is dedicated to the veneration of the goddess Durga, who is thought to exist in various forms like the goddesses Jagdamba, Bhavani, Mahakali, and others. The nine days of Navratri are separated and dedicated to the trinity of goddesses revered in the female form—three days each for the goddesses Durga, Lakshmi (Hindu goddess of wealth), and Saraswati (Hindu goddess of learning). On Lalita Panchami, or the fifth day of the Navratri celebrations, it is customary to assemble all books, light lamps, and call upon Saraswati. During the eighth (aatham) and ninth (nom) days of the festivities, it is customary to carry out yagna (a fire sacrifice) as a final tribute to the goddess Durga.

According to a legend connected with this day, Mahishasur, the buffalo demon, became indestructible and began to ravage the world. Ultimately, however, killing human beings lost its appeal, and the buffalo demon turned his attention to the gods. The gods used their collective powers to create Durga, who, riding a lion and holding a different weapon in each of her 10 hands, overpowered Mahishasur and saved the world.

See also Volume I: INDIA

See also Volume III: HINDUISM

Further Reading

Sudeshna Banerjee, Durga Puja (New Delhi: Rupa & Co., 2004); Pratapacandra Ghosha, Durga Puja (Calcutta: Hindoo Patriot, 1871); Hillary Rodrigues, Ritual Worship of the Great Goddess: The Liturgy of the Durga Puja with Interpretations (Albany, N.Y.: SUNY Press, 2003); Swami Satyananda Saraswati, Swami Vittalanda Saraswati, and Mata Parvatinanda Saraswati, Lakshmi Puja (Fairfield, Ia.: Sunstar Publishing, 2001).

∞ Easter ∞

FACT FILE

Observed in	Countries with Christian populations
Observed on	First Sunday after Lent
Observed by	Christians

Introduction

For Christians, Easter is considered the most important Christian festival, and its numerous celebrations and observances form the core of the liturgical year, which begins around the time of the vernal equinox in the Northern Hemisphere (the autumnal equinox in the Southern Hemisphere) and stretches out into summer in the Northern Hemisphere (winter in the Southern Hemisphere). This occasion celebrates the Resurrection of Jesus three days after his Crucifixion. Christians believe Jesus was the Son of God, and died on the Cross to redeem humanity from sin. Apart from its religious aspect, the Resurrection symbolizes the resurgence of hope and a fresh lease on life for all human beings. The actual dates for Easter and its associated religious observances are different for the Roman Catholic and Protestant Churches of the West, which follow the Gregorian calendar, and the several churches affiliated with the Eastern Orthodox Church, which still follows the Julian calendar.

Because of its importance in the early church, as well as the appropriation of numerous dates and symbols from early European pagan festivals, what can be called the Easter season begins with Carnival in Spanish-speaking countries and Mardi Gras (“Fat Tuesday”) in French-speaking countries.

Origins and History

The English name for this celebration, Easter, was almost certainly taken from the name of the pagan deity Eostre. According to the Venerable Bede (672–735), a renowned Christian scholar, Easter was named after Eostre (or Eastre), the Mother Goddess of the Saxon tribes of Northern Europe; she was also the goddess of fertility. The Germans knew her as Ostara. After the harsh dreary winters of Northern Europe, she brought the warmth of spring, fertility, and abundance. The ancient deities

A three-year-old girl reaches for an egg during an Easter Egg Hunt in Danville, Kentucky. Eggs, ancient pagan symbols of fertility and rebirth, were adopted by early Christians to symbolize the Resurrection of Jesus, which is celebrated on Easter. (AP Photo/The Advocate-Messenger, Clay Jackson) in all civilizations had patron animals, and the rabbit, an obvious symbol of fertility, is the companion animal of Eostre. The deity was believed to preside over conception and birth in animals and human beings and pollination, flowering, and the ripening of fruit in the plant kingdom.

The Teutonic dawn goddess of fertility was also known by various names, such as Ostare, Ostern, Austron, and Ausos. According to another version, the name given by the Frankish church to Jesus' Resurrection festival included the Latin word alba, which means "white," referring to the white robes worn during the ceremonies. Alba also means "sunrise." When the name of the festival was translated into German, an error crept into the meaning of the word and it became ostern in German. Ostern is another possible source of the word "Easter."

Although the name of this holiday in English and German is Easter, in most of the languages spoken in Christian societies the concept of the holiday is based on the Hebrew Pesach (Passover), a Jewish holiday with which the Christian observance is closely associated. Easter takes many of its symbols and activities from Passover as well as the season in which it is celebrated.

The date of the Christian celebration of Easter is linked to the ancient Jewish celebration of Pesach or Passover. The Jewish people followed the Persian (Babylonian) calendar and their new year commenced with the spring equinox. Most of the pagan societies settled in the Mediterranean region also had a major religious celebration at or following shortly after the spring equinox. A common point of these spring religious festivals was a god whose own death and rebirth symbolized the death and regeneration of life during this time of the year. There are stories of a few gods in pagan religions who were believed to have died only to be reborn.

There are two popular explanations about the origin of the English word, "Sunday," appended to the name Easter. According to one version, "Sunday" is derived from the name of the Scandinavian Sun goddess Sunna. The origin of the word can also be traced to Sol, the Roman god of the Sun. The Latin phrase, dies solis means "day of the Sun."

Cybele, the Phrygian fertility goddess, had a consort named Attis. (Phrygia was located within the triangle formed by the modern cities of Afyon, Eskisehir, and Ankara, the capital of modern Turkey.) Attis was believed to have been born of a virgin, and several religious historians believe that the Christian legends of death and resurrection were first associated with him. The ancient Christians, on the other hand, claimed that Satan had created counterfeit deities to preempt the debut of Jesus and to confuse humanity. Modern-day Christians, those who know of it, regard the Attis legend as merely a pagan myth. They believe the account of Jesus' death and Resurrection and do not accept the idea that it might be related to the earlier tradition.

Hare Pie Scramble and Bottle Kicking

Two of England's ancient March traditions are the Hare Pie Scramble and the Bottle-Kicking Match. The hare pie, which usually contains beef, not rabbit or hare, is carried in a procession through the village of Hallaton, Leicestershire, from the Fox Inn to the gate of St. Michael's Church. Immediately behind the pie in the procession are the three "bottles" used for the Bottle-Kicking Match. These are actually small barrels (14 inches high, 9 inches in diameter, and 20 pounds in weight), bound with iron hoops. Two of these are brown in color and filled with about a gallon of ale each. The remaining "bottle" is red and white and is left empty.

Half of the pie is distributed to the surging crowd by the rector of St. Michael's Church. Some portions of the pie are carried away in sacks (with other processions) through the village, finally winding up at the Hare Pie bank. This is where the Bottle-Kicking Match between Hallaton and the neighboring village of Medbourne will take place.

The competitors arrange themselves in a circle at the top of the bank. The chairman of the Bottle-Kicking Match throws the first full "bottle" into the air and allows it to fall on the ground, repeating the action two more times. When the "bottle" lands on the ground the third time, it is "in play." What follows is a mad scramble between the two teams to move the "bottle" toward their respective villages over their respective touchlines, going past several obstacles between the two touchlines like hedges, lanes, and ditches. Once the first score has been made, the players repeat the process with the empty bottle. In case of a tie, the process is repeated with the final bottle. At the end of the match, both teams walk back to Hallaton, where the winning team drinks the contents of both bottles.

The Origin of Passover

Passover is the most important feast of the Jewish calendar, celebrated at the first full Moon after the vernal equinox (roughly March 21–22 on the Gregorian calendar). The name Passover was derived from the actions of the angel of death as described in the book of Exodus. The story of the exodus of the Jews from Egypt is believed to have taken place around 1445 B.C.E. The Israelites had been captured and enslaved by pharaoh, who feared the strength of their growing numbers. Moses, a foundling, though actually a Jew, had been raised in pharaoh's court and was living as a shepherd in the desert. God exhorted Moses by means of the burning bush to take the Israelites out of Egypt to the Promised Land. In spite of repeated pleading, pharaoh refused to liberate the Israelites. In order to punish pharaoh for his misdeeds, God told Moses that he would take the firstborn of all the Egyptians as well as the firstborn of all their animals. Led by Moses, who acted on God's command, the Israelite families sacrificed a lamb each, prepared a special meal, and marked their doors with the blood of the lamb. As revealed by God, one of his angels "passed over" the homes of the Jews, which bore the marks of the blood of the slaughtered lamb, leaving their firstborn unharmed. But all the firstborn sons, as well as the firstborn domestic animals of the Egyptians, whose doorways were not marked, were exterminated.

The agonizing and gory Crucifixion of Jesus took place on what is now called Good Friday. In the early morning of the third day after his Crucifixion, which happened to be Sunday, some women disciples of Jesus went to the cave (tomb) where his body had been laid. They were astonished to find that the heavy rock that had covered the mouth of the tomb had been moved, and the body had vanished. They learned that Jesus had been resurrected, or raised from his tomb. Grief turned into celebration following this amazing occurrence.

Easter is not however, a festival confined to a single day. It is spread over a considerable length of time, starting with Lent, a period of spiritual preparation for Easter that traditionally involves fasting, penance, and prayer. In some countries, those in which Roman Catholicism is the dominant religion, in particular, Easter celebrations begin with Carnival called Mardi Gras in French-speaking countries, generally a two-week festival of carousing, eating, and drinking, characterized by noisy masked processions through the streets of cities and towns. The festivities end on Shrove Tuesday (in English) or Fat Tuesday (in French Mardi Gras), the day before Ash Wednesday, the first day of Lent. On Ash Wednesday, devout Roman Catholics attend a Mass and get a spot of ash in the shape of a cross placed in the middle of their foreheads.

Lent commences on Ash Wednesday and concludes on Holy Saturday, the day before Easter Sunday. Originally, various Christian groups established the observance as an interval ranging from a few days to several weeks. Eventually it was fixed in the eighth century at 40 days. (The number 40 has a religious significance in the Bible. For instance Jesus, Moses, and Elijah had each spent 40 days in the desert.) Among Roman Catholics, Lent lasts for six-and-a-half weeks before Easter, excluding Sundays. According to the Eastern Orthodox Churches, it comprises a full eight weeks since Saturdays and Sundays are both excluded.

On Palm Sunday (the first day of Holy Week), Jesus and his disciples entered the city of Jerusalem, where people were gathering for the Jewish festival of Passover. As word of Jesus' arrival spread through the city, it aroused great excitement among those who were convinced that he was the long-awaited Messiah of the Jews, foretold by Isaiah. People welcomed his arrival by waving palm fronds and spreading palm branches as a carpet across his path. Palm Sunday commemorates the event, and Roman Catholics receive twisted pieces of palm fronds to take home.

Maundy Thursday, the fifth day of Holy Week, and the day before Good Friday, derives its name from the French mandé (from Latin mandatum), referring to the command given by Jesus to the disciples during the Last Supper: "Love one another as I have loved you." He uttered the commandment after washing the Apostles' feet, another of his last actions that has become increasingly popular in Christian churches on this day. In the Roman Catholic Church the day is called Holy Thursday. Maundy Thursday as part of the Holy Week celebrations reminds all human beings of their basic duties: establishing a firm relationship with God and loving their fellow human beings and all living creatures.

Good Friday is a solemn day for Christians because it is the day on which they believe Jesus was

Fun Fact

The important Jewish holiday, Shavuot, the Feast of Harvest or First Fruits, is commonly translated as Pentecost because it is celebrated 50 days after Passover.

Fun Fact

Although Australia is overrun with rabbits, there have been reasonably successful efforts to popularize the bilby, an almost extinct, rabbitlike marsupial native to Australia, as an alternative to the Easter Bunny by selling chocolate Easter Bilbies. Sometimes a portion of the profits is committed to protecting the remaining bilbies.

crucified, suffered, and died. In Early Modern English, good meant “holy.” Christmas, for example, was spoken of as a “good tide”; in an elided form, good in this sense also turns up in the word gospel, which means “good news.” For devout Roman Catholics and Orthodox Christians, Good Friday is a fast day. Orthodox Christians spend the day abstaining from all food, to the extent that their health permits. Roman Catholics also refrain from more than one normal meal, though they may add up to two small meals, as required, for good health. Good Friday is the only day that the divine liturgy, or Mass, is not celebrated in those churches, but Catholics can receive the Eucharist (Communion) on Holy Thursday. Members of the Eastern Orthodox Churches meet as many as three times on Good Friday to pray.

In spite of regional variations, the festival of Easter Sunday is marked by early morning Masses for Catholics and special services in Protestant Churches. This day may well be considered the climax, or turning point, of the festivities that take place before and during Holy Week. Easter Sunday celebrates the day that Jesus is believed to have risen from the grave, and his Resurrection became a symbol of resurgence of life and renewed hopes.

Easter Monday is a Christian holiday celebrated on the day after Easter Sunday. Formerly, it was celebrated as a part of the Easter Week but was reduced to a one-day celebration during the 19th century. The events that take place on this day are essentially fun-filled and include egg-rolling competitions and drenching other people with water. Originally, holy water, which was used to bless homes and food, was also used for these playful pranks.

Pentecost, the Christian festival that commemorates the visitation of the Holy Spirit to Jesus’ Apostles, begins 50 days following Easter, and 10 days after the celebration of his Ascension into heaven. In English-speaking countries, especially in Britain, Pentecost is also called Whitsun (Whitsunday), from Old English Hwita Sunnandæg. The week beginning on Whitsunday (especially the first three days) is called Whitsuntide. Many Christians observe this time as the beginnings of the church.

There are many activities and beliefs associated with the Easter holiday including eggs, Easter baskets, in which eggs and various candies are placed, the Easter Bunny (who delivers the eggs), and the special Easter hats worn by women. Before the egg became closely linked with the Christian festival of Easter, it was closely associated with various spring festivals. The Romans, Gauls, Chinese, Egyptians, and Persians all regarded the egg as a symbol of the universe. In pagan times the egg represented fertility and the rebirth of the Earth. After the long, harsh winter, the Earth burst forth with signs of new life just as life emerges from eggs. With the advent of Christianity the symbolism of the egg changed to represent the rebirth of all humankind, and Christians adopted the symbol of the egg and linked it to Jesus’ tomb from which he was resurrected.

Eggs have been a part of many activities commonly attached to Easter observances. Egg rolling, perhaps one of the most popular, is a traditional Easter custom still practiced in Europe and northern England on Easter Sunday or Monday. Scores of eggs are rolled downhill or along slopes by the people to commemorate the rolling away of the rock from the mouth of the cave where Jesus was buried. The gaily colored and decorated hard-boiled eggs that survive the arduous journey are cracked and then eaten. In France egg-rolling contests consist of rolling raw eggs (marked to identify the owner) down a gentle slope. The egg that survives the bumpy journey and attacks by other eggs in the race is declared the “victory egg.”

The basic rule of these egg-rolling contests is to see who can roll an egg the farthest without breaking it. The individual whose egg survives the journey without getting damaged is declared the winner. In Yugoslavia, the Ukraine, and Russia, eggs are rolled down a tilted board. If a player rolls an egg down the board so that it collides with an egg on the ground at the end of the board, then that player gets both eggs.

This entertaining activity has also spread to countries like St. Lucia, Martinique, Grenada, the Cayman Islands, and Guadeloupe, among many others, where egg rolling on Easter Monday has become popular.

Easter baskets originated with the Catholic custom of taking the food prepared for Easter dinner to Mass to be blessed, a custom copied from the ancient ritual of bringing the first crops and seedlings to the temple to ensure a good growing season. This practice, combined with the “rabbit’s nest” awaited by the Pennsylvania Dutch children, has evolved into brightly colored containers filled with sweets, toys, and the like believed to be left for children on Easter morning by the hare.

The Easter lily is associated with purity because of its whiteness and delicacy of form. It also symbolizes innocence and the radiance of the new life promised by Jesus. Lilies are associated with Easter because they bloom in early spring, during the Easter season.

The Easter bonnet and the wearing of new clothes on Easter Sunday are recent additions to Easter traditions, probably based on the ancient

Fun Fact

In the high-tech 21st century, women in many countries continue the tradition of spring housecleaning, a time for opening all the windows to let in the fresh air of spring.

idea that new clothes and colors symbolized the end of winter, new life, and renewal.

See also Volume I: ANDORRA; ANGOLA; ANTIGUA AND BARBUDA; ARGENTINA; ARMENIA; AUSTRALIA; AUSTRIA; BELARUS; BELGIUM; BELIZE; BOLIVIA; BOSNIA AND HERZEGOVINA; BRAZIL; BULGARIA; BURUNDI; CANADA; CAPE VERDE; CHILE; COLOMBIA; CONGO, DEMOCRATIC REPUBLIC OF THE; COSTA RICA; CROATIA; CYPRUS; CZECH REPUBLIC; DENMARK; DOMINICA; DOMINICAN REPUBLIC; ECUADOR; EL SALVADOR; EQUATORIAL GUINEA; ESTONIA; FINLAND; FRANCE; GEORGIA; GERMANY; GREECE; GRENADA; GUATEMALA; HAITI; HONDURAS; HUNGARY; ICELAND; IRELAND; ITALY; KIRIBATI

See also Volume II: LATVIA; LIECHTENSTEIN; LITHUANIA; LUXEMBOURG; MACEDONIA; MALTA; MEXICO; MICRONESIA, FEDERATED STATES OF; MOLDOVA; MONACO; NAMIBIA; NEW ZEALAND; NICARAGUA; NORWAY; PALAU; PANAMA; PARAGUAY; PERU; PHILIPPINES; POLAND; PORTUGAL; ROMANIA; RUSSIA; RWANDA; ST. LUCIA; SAN MARINO; SERBIA AND MONTENEGRO; SEYCHELLES; SLOVAKIA; SLOVENIA; SPAIN; SWEDEN; SWITZERLAND; TRINIDAD AND TOBAGO; UGANDA; UKRAINE; UNITED KINGDOM; UNITED STATES; URUGUAY; VATICAN CITY; VENEZUELA

See also Volume III: CHRISTIANITY; GOOD FRIDAY; HOLY SATURDAY; HOLY WEEK; IMMACULATE CONCEPTION; PENTECOST; PESACH

Further Reading

Paul Bradshaw and Lawrence A. Hoffman, eds., Passover and Easter: Origin and History to Modern Times (Notre Dame, Ind.: University of Notre Dame Press, 2000); Paul Bradshaw and Lawrence

The Easter Bunny

The Easter Bunny originated in pagan legends connected with fertility. Celtic traditions viewed the hare and the rabbit as symbols of fertility and the spring-time emergence of new life; the Germanic tribes believed that the hare brought new life each spring. The rabbit was also associated with the goddess Eostre. The bunny as an Easter symbol probably originated in Germany, where it was first mentioned in the 1500s. The first edible Easter Bunnies, made of pastry and sugar, were made in Germany during the early 1800s. The Easter Bunny was introduced to North America by the German immigrants who settled in what is now known as the Pennsylvania Dutch region. The arrival of the Oschter Haws (“Easter Bunny” in German) was one of the most exciting events for children. Children believed that if they were good, the Oschter Haws would lay a nest of colored eggs.

A. Hoffman, eds., Passover and Easter: The Symbolic Structuring of Sacred Seasons (Notre Dame, Ind.: University of Notre Dame Press, 1999); Pat Floyd, Come to Easter: The Customs of the Lenten & Easter Seasons (Nashville, Tenn.: Abingdon Press, 1999); Paul L. Maier, In the Fullness of Time: A Historian Looks at Christmas, Easter, and the Early Church (San Francisco: HarperSanFrancisco, 1991); Philip Sauvain, Easter (London: Hodder Wayland, 1997); Lee Strobel, The Case for Easter (Grand Rapids, Mich.: Zondervan Publishing, 2004).

❧ Eid al-Adha ❧

FACT FILE

Observed in	Countries with Muslim populations
Observed on	Tenth through 12th of Dhu al-Hijjah, the 12th month of the Islamic calendar
Observed by	Muslims

Introduction

Eid al-Adha is the most important festival celebrated by Muslims and one of two Eid festivals in their calendar. Eid al-Adha is celebrated for three days while Eid al-Fitr lasts only one day. Eid al-Adha commemorates the Muslim belief that Abraham's (Ibrahim's) faith was so great that he was willing to sacrifice his young son Ishmael because God had commanded him to do so. (Ishmael was born of Hagar [Hajira]. In contrast to Muslims, Jews and Christians believe that it was Isaac, Ibrahim's son from his wife Sarah, who was chosen for the sacrifice.)

The festival of Eid al-Adha reminds Muslims of their morals, ethics, and the lofty ideals of peace and harmony. It is observed on the 10th day of Dhu al-Hijjah, the 12th month of the Islamic lunar calendar. During this month devout Muslims, who are physically and financially able, must undertake a pilgrimage to Mecca at least once in their lifetime (required by the Fifth Pillar of Islam). Every year several million Muslims make the trip to Mecca and observe Eid al-Adha at the end of the pilgrimage.

Fun Fact

Indonesia has the largest population of Muslims in the world.

On Eid al-Adha Muslims sacrifice animals that are considered halaal (pure, fit for sacrifice, and acceptable to God). Muslims consume one-third of the sacred meat themselves, distribute another third to their relatives and neighbors, and give the last third to the poor, doing their best to ensure that no one goes without sacrificial food on this occasion.

History and Origin

The history of Eid al-Adha begins with Ibrahim, who was commanded by God to set up the foundations of Kaaba, the holiest Muslim shrine in the world, located in Mecca (Saudi Arabia). Muslims turn their faces toward the Kaaba during their salat ("prayers"). Responding to Allah's call, Ibrahim at once set off for Mecca, a deserted and unproductive desert, with his family. Ibrahim encountered numerous adversities, but he obeyed all of Allah's commands.

Much later in a dream Allah commanded Ibrahim to sacrifice his son Ishmael. Ibrahim and his son left for the village of Mina, where the sacrifice was to take place. Along the way, the Devil tried

Halaal Meat

Animals slaughtered according to the laws of the Koran are considered halaal. First, the animal itself has to be halaal (clean and pure); pork for example is considered to be unclean and impure. Second, the food that the animal eats should not contain meat or blood; the animal should be herbivorous. Also, according to Islamic law, Muslims cannot consume blood, so they ritually slaughter an animal with three strokes, a method that causes all the blood to drain from its body by the time the animal dies. Determining halaal meat can be extremely tricky, however. According to experts, animals killed by electric shock are not halaal, since electric shocks affect the central nervous system, and the blood does not drain completely from the animal's body.

Stoning the Devil

This ritual reenacts Ibrahim's pilgrimage to Mecca. When Ibrahim left Mina, the Devil appeared to him at Jamrat al-Aqaba (Stone-Heap of the Defile). The Angel Gabriel said to Ibrahim, "Pelt him." So Ibrahim threw seven stones at the Devil, and the Devil fled. Again the Devil appeared to him at the Middle Stone-Heap, and Gabriel repeated his command to pelt the Devil. For a second time Ibrahim hit him with seven stones and made the Devil run away. For a third time the Devil appeared before Ibrahim at the Little Stone-Heap. Again, as commanded by Gabriel, Ibrahim showered the Devil with stones. Finally, the Devil withdrew.

The rite of stoning the Devil is performed by pilgrims in Mina, a town located near Mecca. Pilgrims gather a number of pebbles on the plains of Muzdalifah (the number of pebbles varies between 49 and 70) and hurl them at three pillars, which symbolize the Devil. The first pillar, the largest of the three, marks the Devil's effort to tempt Ibrahim not to sacrifice his son; the second pillar marks the spot where he tempted Hajira (Hagar), Ibrahim's wife, to stop her husband; the third pillar signifies how the Devil tempted Ishmael to protest against being sacrificed. All the efforts of the Devil, however, proved futile.

to convince Ibrahim to disobey Allah and refuse to sacrifice his beloved son. The Devil failed, but, just as Ibrahim was about to sacrifice his son, a divine voice ordered him to stop. When Ibrahim (who had covered his eyes so as not to waver while performing the act) removed his blindfold, he found a ram, not his son, on the sacrificial altar.

Ibrahim's acceptance of Allah's will is celebrated annually by Muslims. On this occasion a Muslim reminds himself of his own spirit of submission and readiness to commit any sacrifice for Allah. To honor this unprecedented act of qurbani ("sacrifice") by Ibrahim, Muslims everywhere sacrifice a goat, ram, lamb, or any animal on Eid al-Adha and share the sacrificial meat with their family and friends as well as with the poor. This observance is also known the Day of Sacrifice or the Feast of Sacrifice.

The highlight of the worldwide observations of Eid al-Adha takes place in the tiny village of Mina, only a few miles from Mecca. Here stand three pillars symbolizing the Devil that are ritually stoned by Muslims during the Hajj. According to Muslim belief, the Devil tried unsuccessfully to persuade Ibrahim not to sacrifice Ishmael. Mina is also a site where scores of butchers arrange the balaal slaughter of the animals for the pilgrims.

Eid al-Adha is known by different names in various parts of the world. For example, the observance is called Hari Raya Aidiladha in Southeast Asia; in Singapore the name for the festival is Hari Raya Haji. In Malaysia, where it is a national holiday, it is known as Id al-Adha. People in India call it Id al-Adha or Idu'z Zuha. Eid al-Adha is celebrated as Tabaski in Senegal, Gambia, and Mali, all located in Africa. In Bangladesh, the festival is known as Id al-Adha or Eid-ul-Azha. In Ethiopia, the festival is called Arafat or Eid ul-Adhia. In European Turkey, Eid al-Adha is known as Kurban Bayrami. Muslims in central Asian countries such as Afghanistan, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, and Uzbekistan have similar ways of celebrating the feast day. The variance in its name notwithstanding, the festive spirit of Eid al-Adha prevails in all countries of the world.

A Pakistani woman prays while holding her child during worship to celebrate the holy festival of Eid al-Adha, the Muslim Feast of the Sacrifice, in Lahore, Pakistan. (AP Photo/K. M. Chaudary)

See also Volume I: AFGHANISTAN; ALBANIA; ALGERIA; AZERBAIJAN; BAHRAIN; BANGLADESH; BOSNIA AND HERZEGOVINA; BRUNEI; BURKINA FASO; CHAD; COMOROS; CÔTE D'IVOIRE; DJIBOUTI; EGYPT; ERITREA; ETHIOPIA; GAMBIA, THE; GHANA; GUINEA; GUINEA-BISSEAU; INDIA; INDONESIA; IRAN; IRAQ; JORDAN; KAZAKHSTAN; KUWAIT; KYRGYZSTAN

See also Volume II: LEBANON; LIBERIA; LIBYA; MACEDONIA; MALAYSIA; MALDIVES; MALI; MAURITANIA; MOROCCO; NIGER; NIGERIA; OMAN; PAKISTAN; QATAR; SAUDI ARABIA; SENEGAL; SIERRA

LEONE; SOMALIA; SUDAN; SYRIA; TAJIKISTAN; TANZANIA; TUNISIA; TURKEY; TURKMENISTAN; UNITED ARAB EMIRATES; UZBEKISTAN; YEMEN

See also Volume III: EID AL-FITR; HAJJ; ISLAM

Further Reading

Tanya Gulevich, Understanding Islam and Muslim Practices: An Introduction to the Religious Practices, Celebrations, Festivals, Observances, Beliefs, Folklore, Customs, and Calendar System of the World's Muslim Communities (Detroit: Omnigraphics, 2004); Zaheer Uddin, A Handbook of Halaal & Haraam Products, Vol. 1 (New York: Center for American Muslim Research & Information, 1998).

∞ Eid al-Fitr ∞

FACT FILE

Observed in	Countries with Muslim populations
Observed on	First of Shawwal, the 10th month of the Islamic calendar
Observed by	Muslims

Introduction

Eid al-Fitr is an Islamic holiday that takes place at the end of the holy, but austere, month of Ramadan. This is the month when people of the Islamic faith fast and abstain from drink and sexual intercourse from dawn to dusk, eating only before sunrise and at night. Fasting is the fourth “pillar,” or religious duty, of Muslims. Ramadan is also a time of intense worship, of reading the Koran, of purifying oneself, of giving donations, and of performing honorable deeds.

The festival of Eid al-Fitr is celebrated on the first of Shawwal, the 10th month of the Islamic calendar. Al-Fitr means “breaking the fast.” It is one of the two major Eid festivals of the Islamic year (Eid al-Adha is the other). It is also called the Little or Small Bayram (bayram means “feast”). Shawwal, like every month in the Islamic lunar calendar, starts with the official sighting of the new Moon by astronomers in Saudi Arabia, but most people rely on reports of the official date. Because the new Moon is seen at different times in different parts of the world, there are regional differences regarding the precise date on which the festival begins. Depending on where they live, some Muslims may have fasted for 29 days, while others fasted for 30.

Eid al-Fitr, a day of celebration and thanksgiving, begins as soon as the new Moon has been sighted. Muslims, on this day, demonstrate their joy for their physical well-being, strength, and life’s opportunities, which have been given to them by Allah. On this day, apart from celebrating the end of their fast, Muslims thank Allah for the strength he gave them to practice self-discipline during the austere month of Ramadan. Eid is also a time for making amends and forgiveness, a day to overlook old bitterness and forgive others.

On the morning of Eid al-Fitr, men generally begin their day at the mosque, participating in a special Eid prayer. As the priest says “Allah is Great,”

Two Afghan men embrace each other after prayers in a mosque in Kabul, Afghanistan, as they celebrate the three-day Muslim holiday of Eid al-Fitr. (AP Photo/Amir Shah)

An Eid al-Fitr Tradition

In Indonesia, there is a tradition called mudik that generally applies to people who came to the capital, Jakarta, from Java or other islands in Indonesia. Before Eid al-Fitr, people head back to their hometowns to celebrate the festival with parents and relatives, which leads to crowding in seaports, airports, and bus stations. For small children, asking for forgiveness as well as money from relatives, is common.

Fun Fact

The initials A.H. before a date in the Islamic calendar stand for Anno Hegirae, “the year of the Hegira.” According to the Gregorian calendar, the Islamic calendar officially started on July 16, 622.

they kneel on their prayer mats, lift their hands, and touch their heads against the ground. Subsequently, they greet everyone with an “Eid Mubarak” (“happiness to everyone”). After the men return from the mosque, families get together for their first daytime meal in a month. The feast includes goat, lamb, spicy vegetables, and sewvia, a special dish of thin noodles prepared with coconut, milk, and sugar. There is also candy made from ground nuts, grated cheese, honey, and sesame seeds.

This Muslim holiday is one of celebration and family get-togethers. Muslims are expected to wear their best clothes, and children get new clothes as presents. Girls sport bangles and apply henna to make red designs on their hands. There are special services in and around mosques, processions in streets, and a celebratory meal eaten during the daytime—the first in a month.

Origins and History

The first Eid is believed to have been celebrated in 624 by Muhammad with his relatives and friends following their triumph in the battle of Jang-e-Badar, when they defeated a much larger army of Arabs. Thus, Eid began as an appropriate reward for hardship and discipline but developed into a social occasion. Feasts, prayers, and family gatherings are the highlights of the festival. Greetings of “Eid-Mubarak” are exchanged on this day.

See also Volume I: AFGHANISTAN; ALBANIA; ALGERIA; AZERBAIJAN; BAHRAIN; BANGLADESH; BOSNIA AND HERZEGOVINA; BRUNEI; BURKINA FASO; CHAD; COMOROS; CÔTE D’IVOIRE; DJIBOUTI; EGYPT; ERITREA; ETHIOPIA; GAMBIA, THE; GHANA; GUINEA; GUINEA-BISSEAU; INDIA; INDONESIA; IRAN; IRAQ; JORDAN; KAZAKHSTAN; KUWAIT; KYRGYZSTAN

See also Volume II: LEBANON; LIBERIA; LIBYA; MACEDONIA; MALAYSIA; MALDIVES; MALI; MAURITANIA; MOROCCO; NIGER; NIGERIA; OMAN; PAKISTAN; QATAR; SAUDI ARABIA; SENEGAL; SIERRA LEONE; SOMALIA; SUDAN; SYRIA; TAJIKISTAN; TANZANIA; TUNISIA; TURKEY; TURKMENISTAN; UNITED ARAB EMIRATES; UZBEKISTAN; YEMEN

See also Volume III: EID AL-ADHA; ISLAM; RAMADAN

Further Reading

Ahmad Hussein Sakr, Feasts, Festivities, and Holidays (Lombard, Ill.: Foundation for Islamic Knowledge, 1999).

El am Hejir

FACT FILE

Observed in	Countries with Muslim populations
Observed on	First of Muharram, the first month of the Islamic calendar
Observed by	Muslims

Introduction

The Hegira, or Hijrah (“withdrawal”), refers to the flight of Muhammad (c. 570–632) and his followers to Medina in 622. In the Koran, the word hijrah means “moving from a sordid state of affairs to a better one.”

Muhammad continuously preached the doctrines of one God (Allah) and the impending Day of Judgment, but he had very little success in Mecca even though his tribe the Quraysh was one of the wealthiest and most powerful tribes in Mecca. The Quraysh were powerful because they controlled the Kaaba, the house of Allah, said to be older than history. According to tradition Allah commanded Adam to build it in the shape of Baitul Maamoor, the house in heaven, and so it is called Baitullah. When Muhammad began to preach the true religion of Allah, his own tribe violently attacked him, and his followers and committed numerous atrocities against them.

Muhammad and his followers migrated to Yathrib, 199 miles north of the city of Mecca, in September 622. Yathrib was later renamed Madinat un-Nabi (Medina) or the City of the Prophet. The year in which the Hegira took place was chosen as the first year of the Islamic Era in 638 by Umar ibn al-Khattab (c. 581–644). The Islamic New Year, El am Hejir, commemorates Muhammad’s flight to Medina. It is important to know, however, that the Hegira did not occur on the first day of Muharram (the first month of the Islamic calendar), but in the third month, Rabbi-al-Awwal, about 66 days after the New Year.

Origins and History

The Islamic lunar calendar starts from 622, the year of Muhammad’s flight to Medina. El am Hejir, the Islamic New Year, commemorates this event. After Muhammad had preached openly for a decade, the opposition to his preaching reached such a point that, fearing for his own well-being and that of his followers, he sent some of them to Ethiopia, where the Christian ruler gave them asylum. Meanwhile in Mecca the situation deteriorated. Muhammad’s followers were abused, harassed, and tormented. Even-

Battle of the Trench

The Battle of the Trench (also known as the Battle of the Ditch and the Battle of the Confederates) was precipitated by an attack by the troops of Mecca on the city of Medina in 627. Although Mecca possessed a large army, the attack failed. In addition to its pagan and Jewish inhabitants, the city of Mecca was also home to the Quraysh tribe, led by Abu Sufyan ibn Harb, who wanted to eradicate Islam. The army of Mecca was a confederation of tribes including Quraysh, Kiawah, Bane Salami, Ghanaian, Bain Murray, Bazaar, and Ashja. Medina was defended by 3,000 Muslims led by Muhammad. It is called the Battle of the Trench because the Muslims dug a trench north of Medina to protect the city. When the Quraysh arrived to fight, their cavalry tried unsuccessfully for three days to cross the trench. On the third day, a strong hurricane forced them to retreat and admit defeat.

Battle of Badr

When the Muslims established themselves in Medina and grew stronger, the Quraysh of Mecca were visibly enraged with their success. Apprehensive lest Islam be accepted by the tribes in the immediate neighborhood of Medina, the Quraysh bribed them heavily not to be swayed or moved by any overtures on the part of the Muslims, and some of Muhammad's missionaries to these tribes were murdered.

The Jews of Medina had expected that the prophet they were looking forward to would promote Judaism, but when Muhammad began preaching Islam, they became hostile. The Quraysh community of Mecca incited the Jews of Medina to create obstacles for the Muslims. In Medina the people who accepted Islam and came to be known as ansar were farmers. All trade in Medina was controlled by Jews, so when the Muslims tried to take up trade there, they encountered competition and hostility from the Jews. Muhammad realized that, in such a situation, Muslims would have to wage a war against the combined forces of Quraysh and the Jews.

The caravan route from Mecca to Syria ran close to Medina. There were some vulnerable points on the route where the caravans could be ambushed by a small force. Muhammad decided that, in order to break the trade monopoly of the Quraysh, their caravans should be ambushed at strategic points. In the winter of 623, Abu Sufyan (b. c. 570), Muhammad's cousin and the Quraysh leader, led a trading caravan to Syria. When Muhammad's spies informed him that the caravan was nearing Badr, he furtively dispatched a force of 313 persons to Badr.

Abu Sufyan suspected that the Muslims would try to ambush the caravan. Accordingly he sent a message to the Quraysh of Mecca that they should send forces to escort the caravan. The Quraysh raised a force 1,000 strong and sent it to Sufyan. When the Muslims reached Badr, they found that the caravan of the Quraysh had already crossed the danger point and could no longer be ambushed. The Muslims were dejected and downcast. God, however, assured Muhammad that a better prize awaited them.

Once the danger was over, Abu Sufyan decided that the force should accompany the caravan back to Mecca. On their return journey, they planned to attack the Muslims and annihilate them. When the Muslim forces learned that the Quraysh forces were approaching Badr, they occupied the wells and encamped in the rocky part of the valley. But the Quraysh reached Badr, and occupied the plains. Although a fierce battle ensued, the Muslims emerged victorious. In its physical dimensions the Battle of Badr was rather trivial, but it was a turning point in the history of Islam.

Fun Fact

The Kaaba is a square building in the center of Mecca, 60 feet wide, 60 feet long, and 60 feet high.

tually Muhammad sent 70 of them to Medina. In the autumn of 622 Muhammad discovered a plot to kill him and with his closest friend, Abu Bakr al-Siddiq (c. 573–634), he too set off for Medina.

When the conspirators arrived at Muhammad's place in Mecca to capture him, they found that Ali, his cousin, had taken his place in bed. Infuriated, they put a price on Muhammad's head and set out in hot pursuit. Muhammad and his friend, however, had actually taken shelter in a cave where a spider spun its web right across the cave's mouth. When the pursuers saw that the web was unbroken, they continued on without stopping. Muhammad and his friend reached Medina safely. They were cheerfully welcomed by a crowd of Medinans, as well as Meccans who had gone beforehand to prepare the way.

This was the Hegira, a carefully planned migration that not only marked the beginning of the Islamic Era but also, for Muhammad and all Muslims, a fresh start. From that time on, the principle of the community, rather than just blood connections, became the bigger brotherhood of all Muslims. Muhammad's companions on the Hegira were known as the mubajirun, "those who made the Hijrah." The people in Medina who converted to Islam were called the ansar, or "helpers."

Muhammad was well aware of the situation in Medina. Before the Hegira in 622, Medina had sent representatives to Muhammad asking him to intercede in a dispute between two dominant tribes. The interaction of the envoys with him had so impressed them that they invited Muhammad to settle there. Following the Hegira, Muhammad's brilliant qualities so astounded the Medinans that the warring tribes and their partners momentarily closed ranks.

Shia Mourning

The New Year starts a 10-day mourning period for Shia Muslims. The 10th day of Muharram is marked by processions displaying banners and models of the tomb of Imam Hussein and his followers who died at the Battle of Karbala. Generally, an elaborately decorated white horse is featured in the procession to symbolize the vacant mount of Imam Hussein after his death. Historically the participants have demonstrated their grief by inflicting bloody wounds on themselves, using sharp metal pieces tied on chains with which they whip themselves. This self-flagellation was done to represent and experience the pain of the martyrs. However, this extremely brutal custom has been banned in countries with large Shia populations, including Iran.

During the lull on March 15, 624, Muhammad and his followers moved against the pagans who had settled in Mecca.

The first battle took place near Badr, which is today a little town southwest of Medina. It had several significant effects. The Muslims, who were fewer in number, thoroughly routed the infidels. Also the discipline exhibited by the Muslims showed the pagans the abilities of Muhammad.

The pagans of Mecca struck back a year later. With 3,000 men they fought the Muslims at Uhud, near Medina. They succeeded in driving back the Muslims and managed to wound Muhammad. The Meccans attacked Medina again two years later, but this time luck favored the Muslims. At the Battle of the Trench, Muhammad and his people defeated the Meccans again. Subsequently the Muslims controlled Medina.

Muhammad was so successful in building a series of coalitions among the tribes of Medina that, by the year 628, he had 1,500 followers. This enabled him to gain access to the Kaaba during talks with the Meccans, a milestone in the history of Islam. In 629 he reentered Mecca after a seven-year absence and won over the city without violence and in a spirit of forbearance, which set a precedent for future conquests. He destroyed the idols filling the Kaaba and eliminated the pagan practices permanently. Also he gained the support of Amr ibn al-As (d. 663), Egypt's future conqueror, and Khalid ibn al-Walid (584–642). Although both men had initially been Muhammad's bitterest rivals, they converted to Islam and joined him.

El am Hejir, the Islamic New Year, is not a spectacular observance in the Muslim world and lacks the significance of Eid al-Fitr and Eid al-Adha, the two most important feasts of the Islamic calendar. Though there is no definite religious ritual necessary on the New Year, Muslims think about the general meaning of the Hegira, and regard the moment as a good time for making New Year's resolutions.

For the Shia sect of the religion, though, the first 10 days of the New Year are reserved for mourning the events of the year 680, when Imam Hussein (c. 626–80), Muhammad's grandson, was killed at the Battle of Karbala. This event is also called Muharram, after the month in which the tragedy took place. In the first nine days of the month, scenes from the Battle of Karbala are reenacted. These scenes are known as majlish and take place in Shia mosques.

Since a lunar month varies in length from 29 to 30 days, the Muslim year is 11 days shorter than the Gregorian calendar year and has only 354 days. El am Hejir, therefore, is observed 11 days earlier each year according to the Gregorian calendar than it was the previous year.

See also Volume I: AFGHANISTAN; ALBANIA; ALGERIA; AZERBAIJAN; BAHRAIN; BANGLADESH; BOSNIA AND HERZEGOVINA; BRUNEI; BURKINA FASO; CHAD; COMOROS; CÔTE D'IVOIRE; DJIBOUTI; EGYPT; ERITREA; ETHIOPIA; GAMBIA, THE; GHANA; GUINEA; GUINEA-BISSEAU; INDIA; INDONESIA; IRAN; IRAQ; JORDAN; KAZAKHSTAN; KUWAIT; KYRGYZSTAN

See also Volume II: LEBANON; LIBERIA; LIBYA; MACEDONIA; MALAYSIA; MALDIVES; MALI; MAURITANIA; MOROCCO; NIGER; NIGERIA; OMAN; PAKISTAN; QATAR; SAUDI ARABIA; SENEGAL; SIERRA LEONE; SOMALIA; SUDAN; SYRIA; TAJIKISTAN; TANZANIA; TUNISIA; TURKEY; TURKMENISTAN; UNITED ARAB EMIRATES; UZBEKISTAN; YEMEN

See also Volume III: ASHURA, ISLAM

Further Reading

W. Montgomery Watt, Muhammad at Medina (New York: Oxford University Press, 1981).

Fun Fact

The initials A.H. before a date in the Islamic calendar stand for Anno Hegirae, "the year of the Hegira." According to the Gregorian calendar, the Islamic calendar officially started on July 16, 622.

Epiphany

FACT FILE

Observed in	Countries with Christian populations
Observed on	January 6
Observed by	Christians

Introduction

The word epiphany, which means “the appearance; miraculous phenomenon” in Greek, is a Christian feast that commemorates the revelation or “shining forth” of God to humanity in the person of Jesus. The word epiphany is also translated as “(divine) manifestation.”

The roots of this observance can be traced back to the Eastern Christian Churches. According to the Bible, the three Magi (wise men)—Melchior, Caspar, and Balthazar—spotted a bright star in the skies on the night Jesus was born. They followed the star to Bethlehem, found the infant Jesus there, and presented the divine child with gold, frankincense, and myrrh. The Feast of the Epiphany celebrates Jesus’ childhood events leading up to his baptism by John the Baptist in the River Jordan. The feast was initially celebrated as the Jewish Feast of Lights (Hanukkah in Hebrew), which usually takes place toward the end of December. Just as the Festival of Lights dispels darkness and gloom, separating the past from the future, so also the Nativity (Christmas), or the birth of the Messiah, symbolizes new life and hope for the future.

Star Singers

The tradition of the Star Singers, evocative of the Magis’ journey, is very much alive in Austria and Bavaria. Beginning on New Year’s Day and continuing right up to January 6, children dressed as kings and holding a large star in their hands, go from house to house singing a three kings song. In return, they are given sweets or money. In the past, the donations were given to veterans and craftsmen; in the 21st century they go to the church or Third World countries.

January 6 is considered the last day of the Christmas season and has its distinct customs, symbols, and rituals. On this day carol singers traditionally go from one house to the next in some countries. In many cultures, the Christmas tree is also taken down; in some areas, the old Christmas trees are piled up and burned in a bonfire. This is a particularly merry occasion for children. In several parts of Germany, along with taking down the tree, the tradition of plündern, or “raiding” the tree is a custom that involves grabbing cookies and sugarplums off the tree, an entertaining event eagerly anticipated by children. This custom probably began when Christmas trees stood on tables and the decorative items placed on them were customarily foodstuffs: gilded nuts, cookies and candies, fresh apples, and wafers shaped like stars. In addition to the sugarplums, chocolate ornaments wrapped in foil, candies, or cookies were given as rewards to the “raiders.”

Epiphany is a more ancient celebration than Christmas because Jesus’ birthday was not fixed on December 25 until 354. In terms of religious significance, this holiday is more important than Christmas but less important than Easter and Pentecost. In Eastern Orthodox Churches, bodies of water are blessed on this day.

Origins and History

The history of the Nativity is closely bound up with the feast of the Epiphany, which was also called the Second Nativity because it was seen as Jesus’ second manifestation to the world. While the Western Christian Churches celebrate December 25 as the date of Jesus’ birth, the Eastern Christian Churches, which adhere to the Julian calendar, regard January 6 as the birthday of Jesus. January 6 was considered Jesus’ physical birthday in the town of Bethlehem as well.

In the Western church, Christmas was established before Epiphany; in the fourth century C.E., December 25 was eventually adopted by the Roman

Ark of the Covenant

The Ark of the Covenant (in Hebrew, aron habrit), as described in the Hebrew Bible, is a sacred container, built at the command of Yahweh (God), in which the stone tablets containing the Ten Commandments were housed. The Ark and its sanctuary were called “the beauty of Israel.” The true Ark, however, was stolen when Menelik I, the first ruler of Ethiopia and the son of King Solomon and Queen Makeda (the Queen of Sheba), was forced to leave King Solomon’s court and return to Ethiopia. King Solomon is said to have had a replica of the Ark made for Menelik to take with him, but the son of the high priest replaced the true Ark with the replica, and so it came to Ethiopia. Ethiopian Christians say that the Ark of the Covenant is still there and is kept in the Church of St. Mary of Zion, at Aksum, Ethiopia.

Timqat (also Timkat) or Epiphany is celebrated on Tir 11, according to the lithiopian (Ethiopian) calendar, or January 19 on the Gregorian calendar, which is 12 days after Orthodox Christmas. (This date can change in Leap Years.) It is the greatest of the Orthodox Christian festivals and celebrates the baptism of Iyesu (Jesus) by John the Baptist. The festival begins the day before Timqat, which is called Ketera, and lasts for three days. Everyone dresses in their best clothes, new if possible, the white robes of the people contrasting with the bright colors of the priests’ garb. The true Ark of the Covenant is carefully wrapped by its guardian, who is the only person allowed to see it, to protect the common people from its power, and carried in the annual Epiphany procession.

In every Ethiopian Orthodox Church there is a Tabot, which symbolizes the Ark of the Covenant, and it is the Tabot that is consecrated, not the church, because the church is considered to be nothing more than an empty husk without the Tabot, its living spirit.

Catholic Church as the Feast of Jesus’ birth. The practice of holding a 12-day festival in the West, starting December 25 and ending January 6, was probably an attempt to reconcile the differences in the dates and their meaning. This period is often called the Twelve Days of Christmas. However, some Christian cultures, especially those in South America, stretch the period to 40 days, concluding the festivities on February 2, or Candlemas.

In the Germanic West (the northern European stock that includes the German, Dutch, Scandinavian, British, and related peoples), the feast of the Epiphany was celebrated as the Festival of the Three Kings (or Magi), or simply as Twelfth Night.

Before 1970, the Roman Catholic Church observed Epiphany as an eight-day feast starting on January 6 and ending on the 13th of the same month; hence, it was also called the Octave of Epiphany. Recently, however, Roman Catholics in the United States have started commemorating Epiphany on the Sunday that follows the first Saturday of the New Year, while most Anglicans and Catholics officially end the holiday season on the Sunday following January 6.

For the present Eastern Orthodox Churches, January 6 is also treated as the day of Jesus’ baptism. For them, the importance of Epiphany lies in the revelation and the “shining forth” of Jesus as a savior and the second person of the Holy Trinity, when he was baptized by St. John the Baptist. According to the Bible, Jesus’ baptism in the River Jordan is the only time when each individual of the Christian Holy Trinity simultaneously manifested itself before humanity: God the Father spoke from the skies; God the Son was baptized in the River Jordan; and God the Holy Spirit descended in the shape of a dove. This feast is also called the Feast of Theophany. (Theophany means “God shining forth” in Greek.)

The Eastern Orthodox Churches perform a ritual called the “Blessing of the Waters” on this day. Following a Mass, clerics go to the nearest body of water, be it a harbor, a river, a quay, a lake, or even a swimming pool, and, following a brief ceremony, throw a cross into the water. If swimming is possible and the water is not too cold, many people jump in, trying to retrieve the cross. The person who recovers the cross hands it back to the cleric, who then specially blesses the swimmer and his or her family. Such rituals have become quite popular.

Certain interesting and special traditions were observed in various countries on the eve of Epiphany. In some countries, herbs would be burned in a fire, and their smell filled the entire house. Holy water would be sprinkled on door-

Fun Fact

Shakespeare’s play Twelfth Night was written to be presented as entertainment on the Twelfth Night of Christmas. The play was first performed at Middle Temple Hall in London, during the Twelfth Night festivities of 1602.

Fun Fact

The three kings, not Santa Claus, are believed to be the ones who leave gifts for Filipino children the night before Araw ng Tatlong Hari (Epiphany), which is celebrated on the first Sunday in January. Children polish their shoes and leave them on the window sills along with their cleanest socks. The children know that the three kings, on their way to Bethlehem, will pass by their homes and fill their shoes and socks with gifts.

ways, and the head of the house would write C + M + B with a piece of chalk and say, “Caspar, Melchior, Balthasar, behütet uns auch für dieses Jahr, vor Feuer und vor Wassergefahr” (“Caspar, Melchior, Balthazar, shelter us this year again from the perils of fire and water”). The letters have traditionally been associated with Caspar, Melchior, and Balthazar; however, the Church opines that the letters stand for Christus Mansionem Benedictat, or “Christ, bless this home.”

See also Volume I: ANDORRA; ANGOLA; ANTIGUA AND BARBUDA; ARGENTINA; ARMENIA; AUSTRALIA; AUSTRIA;

BELARUS; BELGIUM; BELIZE; BOLIVIA; BOSNIA AND HERZEGOVINA; BRAZIL; BULGARIA; BURUNDI; CANADA; CAPE VERDE; CHILE; COLOMBIA; CONGO, DEMOCRATIC REPUBLIC OF THE; COSTA RICA; CROATIA; CYPRUS; CZECH REPUBLIC; DOMINICA; DOMINICAN REPUBLIC; ECUADOR; EL SALVADOR;

EQUATORIAL GUINEA; FRANCE; GEORGIA; GERMANY; GREECE; GRENADA; GUATEMALA; HAITI; HONDURAS; HUNGARY; IRELAND; ITALY; KIRIBATI

See also Volume II: LIECHTENSTEIN; LITHUANIA; LUXEMBOURG; MACEDONIA; MALTA; MEXICO; MICRONESIA, FEDERATED STATES OF; MOLDOVA; MONACO; NEW ZEALAND; NICARAGUA; PALAU; PANAMA; PARAGUAY; PERU; PHILIPPINES; POLAND; PORTUGAL; ROMANIA; RUSSIA; RWANDA; ST. LUCIA; SAN MARINO; SERBIA AND MONTENEGRO; SEYCHELLES; SLOVAKIA; SLOVENIA; SPAIN; SWITZERLAND; TRINIDAD AND TOBAGO; UGANDA; UKRAINE; UNITED KINGDOM; URUGUAY; VATICAN CITY; VENEZUELA

See also Volume III: CHRISTIANITY; CHRISTMAS

Further Reading

Ann Finch, ed., A Star over Bethlehem: From Advent to the Epiphany (New York: New City Press, 2001); Merja Merras, The Origins of the Celebration of the Christian Feast of Epiphany: An Ideological, Cultural, and Historical Study (Joensuu, Finland: Joensuu University Press, 1995); Harold W. Rast, Susan K. Hedahl, et al., eds., New Proclamation: Year C, 2003–2004, Advent through Holy Week (Minneapolis, Minn.: Fortress Press, 2003); Max Rieser, Messianism and Epiphany: An Essay on the Origins of Christianity (Amsterdam: Grüner, 1973).

Three men dressed as the Three Wise Men in Lima, Peru, participate in the celebration of Epiphany. The men are wrapped in the brocaded robes and capes of Melchior, Balthazar, and Caspar in the biblical tradition. (AP Photo/Silvia Izquierdo)

Good Friday

FACT FILE

Observed in	Countries with Christian populations
Observed on	Friday before Easter
Observed by	Christians

Introduction

Good Friday observes the day on which Jesus, believed by Christians to have been the Messiah, was crucified by the Romans. Christians also believe he was the Son of God, embodying the second person of the Holy Trinity (which is made up of Father, Son, and Holy Spirit). The day is a part of Holy Week, or Passion Week, the last week of Jesus' mortal life. His death is believed to have redeemed the world, and the name Good Friday expresses the Christian belief that even death cannot overshadow God's love for humanity.

The original name of this holiday may well have been God's Friday because, in Early Modern English, good meant "holy." Also, the two words were often interchangeable as in, "God be with you," now elided and spelled "good-bye."

Origins and History

According to the calculations of the times, Friday began at sundown on Thursday. The changed calculations in 1582, when the Julian calendar was again revised, provided the dividing factor, and Good Friday thus begins at the time of Jesus' arrest in the garden of Gethsemane, sometime between 1:00 and 1:30 A.M., which was followed by his imprisonment, Pontius Pilate's words, "I find no guilt in this man," his attempts to release Jesus, Jesus' imprisonment and torture, and finally Jesus' being crowned with thorns and crucified. His Crucifixion occurred at the same time that the paschal lambs (for the Jewish feast of Passover) were being slaughtered (between 12:00 noon and 3:00 P.M.). He died after three hours on the Cross. Out of this synchrony came the symbolism of Jesus as the sacrificed lamb, the true paschal lamb. Scripture says that Joseph of Arimathea begged Pilate for Jesus' body, and wrapped it in linen in accordance with Jewish custom. The body was then placed in the sepulcher (tomb) that Joseph had had prepared for himself.

It is worth mentioning that crucifixions were a common means of execution in those times and were undoubtedly chosen for their shock value. The purpose lay not so much in punishing the offender as in warning others.

Four centuries later a period of relative safety for Christians began when the Roman Emperor Constantine protected them from persecution. As a result, the fourth century saw the first celebrations of Holy Week, including Good Friday. (Previously, Easter and Epiphany had been the important Christian holidays.) The fourth century was also a good time to search for the holy sites of Christianity that had been partially desecrated, lost, or forgotten. In 327 Macarius (d. 333), Bishop of Jerusalem, ordered excavations, and his workers found not only the holy sepulcher and the site of Calvary, but also the original wooden Cross. A special chapel was built for it between the Basilica of Anastasis (Resurrection) and the Church of Martyrion in Jerusalem.

The "Pilgrimage of Aetheria" is a nun's account of her pilgrimage to the Holy Land in the fourth century. It includes a description of how the different days of Holy Week were observed. One of the accounts Aetheria (or Egeria, or Sylvia, as she is variously called) gives is of the Good Friday ceremony in Jerusalem toward the end of the fourth century.

The Curse on the Dogwood Tree

The dogwood tree is believed to have once been as tall and mighty as the oak. It was thought strong enough to be fashioned into the Cross for Jesus. However, after the Crucifixion, according to legend, God cursed the tree, and so it has since been thin and bent, with flowers in the shape of a cross (two long petals and two short ones). What's more, the outer edges of the petals resemble stained nail marks, and the center of each flower recalls the crown of thorns that it was reported Jesus wore at his death.

The Julian and Gregorian Calendars

Some Orthodox Christians in both Europe and America celebrate the immovable feasts of the Orthodox Church on different civil calendar and church calendar dates: for example: Jesus' birth on December 25 or January 7; the Annunciation on March 25 or April 7; the Dormition (the Virgin's Mary's Assumption into heaven) on August 15 or 28; and the Feast of St. Nicholas on December 6 or 19. The 13 days' difference is a technical problem caused by the fact that most calendars currently in use do not accurately divide the year into days that match the length of the year required for the Earth to orbit the Sun. Thus, for example, the birth of Jesus, which for some parishes falls on January 7 of the civil calendar, is actually shown on the church's old-style Julian calendar as December 25.

For the original Julian calendar, introduced by Julius Caesar in 44 B.C.E., the length of the natural solar year, the time it takes for the Earth to make one orbit of the Sun, was estimated to be 365 days and 6 hours. This error was corrected by "collecting" the extra six hours and adding an extra day to the month of February every fourth year, creating a leap year of 366 days. The original Julian calendar was adopted by the church without correction of its technical errors. As a consequence, the original Julian calendar was revised twice: once by the church in the West and once by the church in the East. The basic civil calendar, however, remained the same.

There are four versions of the Julian calendar. The three relevant to Good Friday observances are as follows:

1. The original Julian calendar: This estimated civil calendar year is 11 minutes and 14 seconds longer than the natural solar year (longer in time means faster in speed), an error that caused the calendar problems. For instance, a regular phenomenon like the spring equinox (when day and night are both about 12 hours long) happens every year at a measurable time in the orbit of the Earth. Over a period of time the extra minutes and seconds added up to a full day and the spring equinox arrived faster, or earlier, every year in the civil calendar. The spring equinox fell on March 25 in the original Julian calendar.
2. What is called the old-style Julian calendar dates from 325. By the fourth century the spring equinox was on March 21 on the original Julian calendar. When the First Ecumenical Council met in Nicea in 325 to settle the date for celebrating Pascha (Easter), the church adopted the original Julian calendar and ruled that Pascha would be observed on the first Sunday after the first full Moon following the spring equinox on March 21, and independently of the Jewish Passover (Pesach). The council did not correct the calendar error, nor did it set the spring equinox date back to March 25 where it had been originally. By fixing a faulty civil calendar date to a fixed phenomenon in nature, the church created the calendar problem. The old-style Julian calendar dates from 325, not from 44 B.C.E. as is commonly believed. The calendar adopted in 325 C.E. had nothing to do with determining the date on which Jesus had been born.
3. The new-style Julian calendar dates from the year 1582. By the 16th century the spring equinox was occurring 10 days earlier on the old-style Julian calendar date of March 11 instead of March 21, because of the uncorrected error in the original Julian calendar. With updated astronomical information, Pope Gregory XIII (r. 1572–85) revised the original Julian calendar so that the average length of the civil calendar more closely approximated the natural length of the solar year. In a 400-year cycle, three leap years were dropped, thereby reducing the error from 11 minutes and 14 seconds a year to 26 seconds a year. Under this revised calendar it takes many years more for 26 seconds of error to accumulate into a full day.

In 1582, 10 days were dropped from the civil calendar so that the spring equinox again fell on March 21 as the church had ruled in 325. This version of the new-style Julian calendar is popularly called the Gregorian calendar and is used by the church in the West to determine the dates for fixed and movable feasts.

Although the first Mass is believed to have been the celebration of the Eucharist (along with the set order of worship) around 150, there was no formal Mass in those early years. All services followed the Jewish synagogue pattern of lessons, chants, and prayers. According to Aetheria, monks and believers would assemble at 8:00 A.M. in the Chapel of the Cross on Good Friday. The Bishop of Golgotha sat behind a table, and the silver-gilt casket holding the sacred wood of the original Cross was placed thereon. The wood was placed on the table, and the bishop held it firmly at both ends. Worshippers came up to the table, bowed, and kissed the cross. People were allowed to kiss it and touch it with their foreheads and eyes, but not with their hands. However, the wish to own a piece of the sacred wood still proved overwhelming for some: At least one worshipper pretended to kiss the Cross and bit off a “relic” for himself.

The Roman Ordines of 800 contain the order of the prayers for Good Friday. The traditional Roman Catholic service is a variation of the original service held in Jerusalem. A veiled crucifix is gradually unveiled while the hymn “Ecce Lignum Crucis” is sung three times. The worshippers respond with “Venite Adoremus,” and everyone in the church, with the exception of the celebrant, singing the hymn, kneels in adoration. (A celebrant is a church official leading a religious ceremony.) The cross is then carried to the altar and placed on a cushion near it. First the celebrant and then the deacon and others remove their shoes, bow to the cross, and kiss it. After this, the clergy hold up other crosses for the congregation to kiss. The cross is placed on the altar, surrounded by lit candles. The choir sings the “Improperia” during this ceremony. This is believed to be based on Jesus’ words to the Jews but is not found in the early Roman Ordines. (The “Improperia” appears in a 14th-century Roman Ordo and is believed to have originated in the Gallican church, the church of France.) A procession moves toward the spot where the consecrated host (also referred to as the “bread of the sacrament” or “communion”), prepared on Thursday, is kept in an urn. The urn represents Jesus’ tomb. The Mass of the Pre-sanctified, which is not actually a Mass, is sung by the celebrant and others. The host is placed on the altar and then consumed by the celebrant. There is no Communion prepared on Good Friday (and many churches do not offer Communion this day) because the day is not a celebration. Together with Holy Saturday, it is considered a nonliturgical day, since these were the days when Jesus was separated from his followers.

This veneration of the Cross has been the subject of much criticism by believers and nonbelievers alike, many of whom were critical of the Cross (not the dying Jesus) becoming the object of devotion. Even so, the Cross became quite visible in the early days of Christianity and was used by rulers and their subjects alike. It was supported by many who were opposed to icons of any kind. Even iconoclastic

Other Names for Good Friday

In the Roman Missal (the book containing all the prayers said by priests at the altar and said or sung throughout the ecclesiastical year in the Catholic Church), Good Friday is called Feria VI in Parasceve. Parasceve means “preparation,” as in preparation for the Sabbath.

The German word for this day is Charfreitag, which means “Mourning Friday.” Char is cognate with the English word care, as in “problem.”

The Greek phrase is he hagia kai megale paraskeue, which means “holy and great Friday.”

emperors like Leo the Isaurian (r. 716–41), Constantine Copronymus (r. 741–75), and Michael II (r. 820–29) had the Cross stamped on their coins, and people undertook pilgrimages simply to adore it. The Saurolaters and the Chazingarii were sects distinguished by their adoration of the Cross. Eventually, the Second Council of Nicaea (787) laid down certain norms and distinguished between proskynesis (veneration) and aspasmos (salutation) due a cross or other symbols of Jesus, the Virgin Mary, or the saints, and the alethine latreia (true adoration) that was owed to divinity alone.

Good Friday is a day of mourning in memory of Jesus’ Crucifixion, even though it contains within it the miracle of the Resurrection. Often, Good Friday services are three hours long in memory of Jesus’ three hours on the Cross, and may be held between 12:00 noon and 3:00 P.M. These afternoon services recall Jesus’ hours on the Cross but have been shifted to the evening at some churches so that more people can attend.

Two observances are an integral part of Good Friday services in most Catholic and Protestant Churches. Tenebrae, which means “darkness,” is called the Service of Darkness or Service of Shadows and can be traced back to the earliest traditions of church services held on Thursday, Friday, and Saturday of Holy Week, comprising prayers and readings pertaining to the Passion (suffering) of Jesus. The Lamentations of Jeremiah are always chanted during this service, and the Passion is sung by three deacons as specified in the early manuscripts of the Gospels. Readings of the Passion are traditionally taken from the Gospel of St. John. The final prayer is the “Bidding Prayer,” which dates back to the fifth century in its present form, although the roots are to be found in Jewish worship. As the service progresses, lights are gradually dimmed, and the 15 candles in the candle stand (called the Tenebrae Hearse) are extinguished one at a time until only one remains. The darkened atmosphere symbolizes a world without God, and the one lit candle represents Jesus. It is taken from the holder and placed behind the altar, followed almost immediately by a loud noise like the closing of a tomb. This concludes the service and worshippers leave in silence. The Jesus candle is replaced in the holder.

A 16-year-old Mexican Catholic faithful cries as she represents the Virgin Mary during the Crucifixion re-enactment marking Good Friday in Mexico City, Mexico. The annual event draws millions of local spectators and outside tourists. (AP Photo/Elizabeth Dalziel)

The Service of the Last Seven Words of Christ actually refers to the last seven sentences Jesus is believed to have spoken while dying on the Cross:

“Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do.” (Luke)

“Today thou shalt be with me in paradise.” (Luke)

“Woman, behold your son.” (John)

“My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?” (Matthew)

“I thirst.” (John)

“It is finished.” (John)

“Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit.” (Luke)

Since the beginning of Good Friday observances, these have been the focus of church services. Worshippers are expected to meditate on related events from Jesus’ life and also about related problems faced by people the world over, such as starvation, domestic and other kinds of violence, homelessness, child abuse, and poverty. Prayers are offered for peace and prosperity, happiness, and health.

The Stations of the Cross refers to a traditional Catholic ritual that is usually observed as part of the morning Mass. It is performed monthly but assumes special significance during the Good Friday observance. Typically, the “stations” refer to 14 banners or paintings mounted on wooden crosses illustrating scenes from Jesus’ trial and Crucifixion. These are erected in a path in or around the church so that believers can move from one to the other, to reflect, pray, or sing hymns. Some Christian denominations have adapted tradition to create an equally meaningful custom: Worshippers visit places of suffering and people with problems, pondering all the while on Jesus’ last utterances and praying.

In Eastern Orthodox Churches, Holy Week and its special days are celebrated 13 days after the Easter observances in Western churches (including the Roman Catholic and affiliated Eastern churches, as well as Protestant sects) have been held. In Orthodox Churches, Good Friday is referred to as Great Friday, emphasizing Jesus’ victory over death (as symbolized by Easter) rather than his death on this Friday. There are three services: The first one is held before noon and is called Royal Hours; the afternoon service is known as the Vespers of Good Friday; and the evening service is called the Matins of Holy Saturday. In the morning a two-dimensional figure of Jesus is placed on a cross and moved to the center of the church in front of the nave (where the congregation sits). The figure is removed from the cross during the afternoon prayer service and taken to the altar where the epitaphion (a cloth icon of Jesus) is placed on a low table already laid out with flowers. During the evening service, the epitaphion is carried in a procession by young men and returned to the low table.

The Apokathelosis (“taking down from the Cross”) of the Greek Orthodox Church is a grand procession that simulates a funeral during which the image of Jesus is laid on a bier and carried through the town. Worshippers line the streets to adore the image, and they may pray and kiss the image if they wish. In the Anglican Church, some Roman Catholic traditions are followed but with modifications. After the congregation has kissed the Cross, it is placed in a recess symbolizing the sepulcher. Monks mount a vigil, chanting Psalms day and night, until Easter morning when the Mass of the Presanctified is held.

See also Volume I: ANDORRA; ANGOLA; ANTIGUA AND BARBUDA; ARGENTINA; ARMENIA; AUSTRALIA; AUSTRIA; BELARUS; BELGIUM; BELIZE; BOLIVIA; BOSNIA AND HERZEGOVINA; BRAZIL; BULGARIA; BURUNDI; CANADA; CAPE VERDE; CHILE; COLOMBIA; CONGO, DEMOCRATIC REPUBLIC OF THE; COSTA RICA; CROATIA; CYPRUS; CZECH REPUBLIC; DENMARK; DOMINICA; DOMINICAN REPUBLIC; ECUADOR;

EL SALVADOR; EQUATORIAL GUINEA; ESTONIA; FINLAND; FRANCE; GEORGIA; GERMANY; GREECE; GRENADA; GUATEMALA; HAITI; HONDURAS; HUNGARY; ICELAND; IRELAND; ITALY; KIRIBATI

See also Volume II: LATVIA; LIECHTENSTEIN; LITHUANIA; LUXEMBOURG; MACEDONIA; MALTA; MEXICO; MICRONESIA, FEDERATED STATES OF; MOLDOVA; MONACO; NAMIBIA; NEW ZEALAND; NICARAGUA; NORWAY; PALAU; PANAMA; PARAGUAY; PERU; PHILIPPINES; POLAND; PORTUGAL; ROMANIA; RUSSIA; RWANDA; ST. LUCIA; SAN MARINO; SERBIA AND MONTENEGRO; SEYCHELLES; SLOVAKIA; SLOVENIA; SPAIN; SWEDEN; SWITZERLAND; TRINIDAD AND TOBAGO; UGANDA; UKRAINE; UNITED KINGDOM; UNITED STATES; URUGUAY; VATICAN CITY; VENEZUELA

See also Volume III: CHRISTIANITY; EASTER; HOLY SATURDAY; HOLY WEEK; LENT; MAUNDY THURSDAY; PALM SUNDAY

Further Reading

James B. Hofrenning, Easter People in a Good Friday World: Making Wise Moral Decisions (Minneapolis: Kirk House Publishers, 2005); Larry W. Hurtado, At the Origins of Christian Worship: The Context and Character of Earliest Christian Devotion (Grand Rapids, Mich.: Wm. Eerdmans Publishing, 2000); Richard John Neuhaus, Death on a Friday Afternoon: Meditations on the Last Words of Jesus from the Cross. (New York: Basic Books, 2000); Leigh Eric Schmidt, Consumer Rites: The Buying and Selling of American Holidays (Princeton, N.J.: Princeton University Press, 1995); Rosamond B. Spicer and N. Ross Crumrine, eds., Performing the Renewal of Community: Indigenous Easter Rituals in North Mexico and Southwest United States (Lanham, Md.: University Press of America, 1997).

~ Gurpurab ~

FACT FILE

Observed in	Countries with Sikh populations, especially India, Pakistan, Afghanistan, Iran, United Kingdom, Canada, United States, Malaysia, Kenya, and Thailand
Observed on	Full Moon day of Karttika, the eighth month of the Hindu calendar
Observed by	Sikhs

Introduction

The word gurpurab means “festival of the guru.” The Sikhs celebrate many gurpurabs at each gurpurab the particular guru to whom the day is dedicated is honored. The devotees organize akhand path (marathon readings of the Granth Sahib that go on for 24 hours), langars (community lunches and dinners), kar seva (social service performed by physical labor), and religious processions to celebrate the occasion.

The most important festival of the year for Sikhs is the Gurpurab celebrating the birth of Guru Nanak Dev (1469–1539), the founder of Sikhism and the first of its 10 human gurus. Because Guru

Nanak is thought to have brought illumination to the world and into the darkened lives of ordinary mortals, the festival is also called Prakash Utsav, the Festival of Light.

Celebrations begin nearly two weeks before the birth anniversary of Guru Nanak. Every day, religious processions (which also function as choruses), known as prabhat pheris, go around the streets in the early hours of the morning. A day before the festival, a massive parade (nagar kirtan) starts from the gurdwaras (“temples”) in the afternoon. Old and young alike join in this march of goodwill and peace. Leading the crowd are the panj pyaras (the five best disciples of the guru). Behind them, a profusely decorated palki (palanquin) rolls along, on which is placed the Sri Guru Granth Sahib. This is the Sikh’s holy book, which is also regarded as head of the Sikh religion and the 11th and last guru. A band of musicians and singers chanting shabads in honor of the guru follow the palanquin. As they wend their way through the lanes and alleys of the city or town, people come forward to seek the blessings of the panj pyaras, and bow in reverence before them. Musical bands of schoolchildren, eminent citizens, and gatka parties (acting out mock battles with traditional weapons) take part in the processions.

The route of the nagar kirtan (“parade”) is gaily decorated with flags, flowers, religious posters, ornamental arches, and banners depicting various aspects of Sikhism. The procession offers an opportunity to the old and frail to pay homage to the Guru Sri Granth Sahib before it is returned to the Sikh temple (gurdwara). This sacred volume is believed to sanctify the ground over which it travels.

On this special day, akhand path (marathon readings of the holy book) are organized in gurdwaras across the country. The divan (“assembly”) commences in the gurdwaras almost at the crack of dawn. A special shabad (“devotional song”), known as “Asa-di-Var,” is sung, followed by kirtans (“devotional group singing”) and kathas (“lectures and talks on various aspects of Sikhism”).

Shabad

Shabads are similar in style to bhajans. These songs are popular among the Sikhs, while the bhajans are sung by Hindus. The term shabad means “word,” and it represents the verbal description of the nature of God. This is generally from the Guru Granth Sahib, the holy book of the Sikhs. A shabad is also referred to as gurbani, which means “message of the teacher.” The philosophy of the shabad and its relationship to spiritual growth is extremely sophisticated. It is said that it takes a tremendous amount of study, devotion, and meditation to truly understand the significance of the shabad because, by its very nature, it embraces the infinite qualities of God. The shabad has historically been performed in very traditional styles. The Guru Granth Sahib is very specific about the ragas (a type of melody in Indian classical music) for singing the various shabads. These are typical of the more classical ragas of north Indian music. The traditional shabads are also in the more classical talas (rhythms), such as tintal and ektaal.

Devotees pour into the gurdwara from morning on, where they participate in all these programs until noon. After the head priest offers ardas (“formal prayers”), the entire congregation recites shabads based on the teachings of Guru Nanak. The special prayers end at midday with the bhog, the concluding ceremony. Food, which has been cooked in the community kitchen by volunteers, is then offered to the guru in an elaborate ceremony and his blessings are sought. Karah prasad (“sacred food,” a viscous sweetmeat prepared with flour or semolina, ghee, and sugar) is also distributed to everyone present.

Thereafter, men, women, and children, regardless of their ages, faiths, beliefs, and social position, sit down to share the food in the guru ka langar (“community kitchen”). At night, people light their homes with oil lamps and candles. Some set off fire-crackers to celebrate the occasion. The Sikhs who cannot join the celebrations for some reason, or who live in places where there are no gurdwaras, hold the ceremony in their own homes by privately preparing kirtan, akhand path, ardas, karah prasad, and langar.

The birth anniversaries of the other nine gurus of the Khalsa Panth (the theocracy that governs the Khalsa made up of the panj pyaras) are also celebrated as gurpurabs, though not on the same scale as that of Guru Nanak. All 10 of the gurpurabs commemorate the virtuous lives and pious deeds of the Gurus.

The second major Gurpurab is the birthday of Sri Guru Gobind Singh. He was the 10th guru, who was born at Patna Sahib in the eastern Indian state of Bihar on December 22, 1666. His birthday generally falls in December–January and sometimes occurs twice in a year, according to the computations of the Hindu Bikram (lunar) calendar. The elements of the celebrations are similar to those of Guru Nanak’s birthday, including akhand path, processions and kirtans, kathas, and langar.

The Sikh diaspora living in various countries celebrate gurpurabs with traditional devotion, zeal, and fervor. Provided the conditions are congenial, the members of the Sikh community participate in peaceful, colorful processions wherever they live. The Sikh expatriates and nonresident Indians through the nearest gurdwaras (there are a few in every country) with their families and kinsfolk, where they participate in kirtans, chanting, and readings from the Guru Granth Sahib; karah prasad and langars are also organized on such occasions. Very often a number of local dignitaries, including royal personages, presidents, and prime ministers, participate in such festivals, thereby setting examples of communal harmony and secularism.

Origins and History

During the medieval period, the northern part of India was perpetually in turmoil, with ceaseless Muslim invasions from beyond its northwestern borders. By the 15th century, constant feuds and factions between the Hindus and Muslims gave rise to a movement of saints, drawn from both communities. They tried their utmost to foster harmony, brotherhood, and peace between the two warring communities and, in the process, attempted to make members of both religions realize that there was only one God. One such noble soul who manifested himself in this world at that crucial juncture was Guru Nanak, the founder of Sikhism.

Sri Guru Nanak Dev was born at Rai-Bhoi-di Talwandi in the Shekhupura district of western Punjab in what is now Pakistan, on Karttika Puranmashi, the full Moon day of the month of Karttika (October–November). The area has come to be known as Nanakana Sahib, and his home is now a shrine (gurdwara) known as Gurdwara Janam Asthan, where devout Sikhs from all over the world come together to celebrate the Gurpurab of Guru Nanak every year.

Born in a Hindu family to Kalu Rai Mehta (father) and Tripta Devi (mother), he refused to observe Hindu rituals and preached that there was only one God and that God was the only truth. He chose two persons, one each from the two communities, and undertook several journeys within India, as well as four to Ceylon, Tibet, Saudi Arabia, and Iraq. Nanak constantly preached that he was neither a Hindu nor a Muslim, but a follower of the truth and that his knowledge came from the word, meaning that God could only be realized by meditation and self-improvement. He criticized and disparaged the Hindu customs and practices of fasting, pilgrimages, penance, and other austerities as well as the dominance of priests. He denounced the Muslims for their persecution of the Hindus and their practice of forcible conversions. Nanak asked his disciples to earn their living by honest means and insisted that they marry and raise families. He preached that

Fun Fact

The panj pyaras are called the “five beloved ones.” The first five men to be admitted into the Khalsa brotherhood—the original panj pyaras—founded by Guru Gobind Singh in 1699 were: Bhai Daya Singh Ji, Bhai Dharam Singh Ji, Bhai Himmat Singh Ji, Bhai Mohkam Singh Ji, and Bhai Sahib Singh Ji.

Asa-di-Var

Asa-di-var refers to the morning prayer, consists of slokas and 24 pauris. Guru Ramdas added 24 chhands (quatrain). A var, or ode, is a heroic measure popular in the Punjab. In all Sikh temples, this particular var is sung rather early in the morning. Here Guru Nanak sings of the glory of God and the Name, and describes how an ordinary person can become a perfect servant of God.

Ardas

Ardas are the common Sikh prayers that are invoked at the start and conclusion of every Sikh event. The word ardas means “supplication” or “petition to higher authority.” The prayers are ritualized and Sikhs may offer them individually or in congregations. These prayers are always offered after morning and evening services, or to demonstrate gratitude to the Almighty for favors granted.

a man could live a householder’s life, yet could also be a true follower of God by clinging to the truth. No priests were required, nor was a particular place or time necessary for one to communicate with God. Nanak’s followers came to be known as Sikhs, a derivation of a Sanskrit word shishya, which means “student.” Both Hindus and Muslims in large numbers became his followers.

Nanak became the first guru or master of the Sikhs and was followed by three others before the Mughal rulers at Delhi took notice of the fast-growing sect. A few of the Sikh gurus fell to assassins’ swords while defending their faith. Their days of martyrdom are also celebrated as gurpurabs, though they are tinged with solemnity and sadness. Martyrdom observances consist of kirtan, kathas, lectures, karab prasad, and langars in gurdwaras across the length and breadth of the country.

The fifth guru, Arjun Dev (1581–1606), was tortured and executed at Lahore in May 1606 on the instructions of Mughal Emperor Jahangir (1569–1627). This resulted in the members of the sect taking up arms to protect themselves.

Guru Tegh Bahadur (1621–75), the ninth guru, was arrested under the orders of Mughal Emperor Aurangzeb (1618–1707). When he refused to give up his faith and accept Islam, he was beheaded on November 11, 1675, at the city square (Chandni Chowk) in Delhi. Usually one-day celebrations of his martyrdom are organized in the gurdwaras. These occasions are also marked by special prayers and chanting from the Guru Granth Sahib. Religious discourses and free community meals (langar) are an integral part of the celebrations. Since it is the peak of summer, a chilled, refreshing drink made with milk, sugar, essence, and water (chhabeel) is freely distributed in gurdwaras and along the roads to all passers-by and bystanders.

The constant friction between the royal court in Delhi and the fledgling community led to the 10th master Gobind Singh (1666–1708), converting the members to a warrior class and calling them Khalsa, meaning the “Pure Ones” (those who are pure at heart and in their actions). Sikh men began adding the word singh (“lion”), and women, the word kaurs (“princess” or “lioness”) to their names. Since the 18th century the community has been in the forefront of battles against any kind of oppression or injustice. Three days before he passed away on October 3, 1708, Guru Gobind Singh conferred the mantle of guru of the Sikhs on the Guru Granth Sahib, also called the Adi Granth, the Sikh’s holy book. Ever since, this sacred book has been venerated as the 11th guru of the Sikh community, its supreme spiritual authority, and the leader of the Sikh religion. There have been no more human gurus.

See also Volume I: INDIA

See also Volume III: SIKHISM

Fun Fact

The number five has special meaning in the Sikh religion. There have been 10 human gurus (a multiple of five), and there were five panj pyaras for example. The last guru, Guru Gobind Singh, ordered Sikh men to observe the five k’s so they would stand out from other groups: These are kesh (uncut beard and hair); kangh (a comb in one’s hair); kara (a steel bangle on the right wrist); kachcha (short drawers); and kirpan (a steel dagger).

Further Reading

Charanjit K. Ajit Singh, The Wisdom of Sikhism (Oxford: Oneworld Publications, 2001); John Stratton Hawley and Gurinder Singh Mann, eds., Studying the Sikhs: Issues for North America (Albany, N.Y.: SUNY Press, 1993); Gurinder Singh Mann, The Making of Sikh Scripture (New York: Oxford University Press, 2001); Gurinder Singh Mann, Sikhism (Upper Saddle River, N.J.: Prentice-Hall, 2003); Khushwant Singh, A History of the Sikhs (Princeton, N.J.: Princeton University Press, 1963–66); Khushwant Singh, The Sikhs Today, Rahul Singh, ed. (New Delhi: Orient Longman, 1985); Pashaura Singh, The Bhagats of the Guru Granth Sahib: Sikh Self-Definition and the Bhagat Bani (New Delhi: Oxford University Press, 2003).

Hajj

FACT FILE

Observed in	Saudi Arabia by Muslim pilgrims from all over the world
Observed on	Sixth to 13th of Dhu al-Hijjah, the 12th month of the Islamic calendar
Observed by	Muslims

Introduction

The hajj is an annual pilgrimage to Mecca, Saudi Arabia, that every Muslim must make at least once in his or her life if it is physically and financially feasible. The requirement to make it is set forth as the fifth of the Five Pillars of Islam, which are the most basic aspects of Sunni Islam. In Shia Islam the hajj is one of the Furu al-Din (“fundamentals of faith”).

Hajj activities take place for six days during Dhu al-Hijjah. The journey can be considered a form of worship involving the complete being—mind, body, and soul. The Saudi Arabian government provides special visas to people from other countries who want to make the pilgrimage. Only Muslims can enter Mecca itself; non-Muslims are forbidden entrance to the city. Muslim women, however, cannot make the hajj alone; they must be accompanied by a man—a husband, brother, or father.

There are two parts to the hajj: the greater hajj (Al Hajjul-Akbar) and the lesser hajj (Umrah). The lesser hajj can be accomplished at any time of the year, but the greater hajj must be completed during Dhu al-Hijjah. Most pilgrims perform both parts of the hajj at the same time because it is more economical. The rituals of the Lesser Hajj are spiritual acts that symbolize both the acts of Muhammad and one’s sense of community with all Muslims.

After completing their journey the pilgrims participate in a week of rituals associated with the “greater hajj.” The first day they leave Mecca for the uninhabited town of Mina, where they spend the day meditating. On the ninth of Dhu al-Hijjah, the second day of the hajj, the pilgrims leave Mina and go to the Plain of Arafat for wuquf, “the standing,” which is the central ritual of the greater hajj and is intended to remind them of the Day of Judgment. Right after sunset the pilgrims leave for the Plain of Muzdalifah, which lies halfway between Mina and Arafat. After praying, they gather their pebbles for the stoning of the Devil.

Before dawn on the 10th of Dhu al-Hijjah, the third day, the pilgrims leave Muzdalifah and return to Mina where they cast their stones at three pillars that symbolize Satan’s endeavors to thwart Allah’s will. The largest pillar symbolizes the Devil’s attempt to dissuade Ibrahim from killing his son; the second largest represents his attempt to enlist Hagar in his effort to keep Ibrahim from killing Ishmael; the smallest pillar stands for the Devil’s attempt to persuade Ishmael to beg for his life. Throwing the stones represents the Devil’s three failures. After stoning the Devil, many of the men shave their heads (women cut off a lock of their hair) as a symbol of rebirth, to show that their sins have been cleansed.

Having now completed a large part of the greater hajj, the pilgrims can take off their ibram (the pilgrimage outfit) and wear regular clothes until they take up the final elements of the greater hajj. At this stage, all restrictions of the hajj, which include bans on cutting one’s hair and nails, are put aside, with the exception of the ban on sexual intercourse.

Also on this day Eid al-Adha, the Feast of Sacrifice, begins and continues until the 13th of Dhu al-Hijjah. The pilgrims sacrifice a sheep or a goat (or some other animal) to celebrate Ibrahim’s unquestioning devotion to God and his willingness to sacrifice Ishmael, his son. Most of the meat is given to the poor, but the celebrants can, if they wish, keep a

Hajj Pilgrims

The number of people who visit Mecca seems to increase every year. Muslims from all over the world converge on Mecca to experience the hajj, something physically fit Muslims must do at least once in their lifetime. During the pilgrimage in 2004, two million people undertook the pilgrimage to Mecca.

A Muslim man prays on Mt. Arafat in Saudi Arabia during the hajj. The annual hajj pilgrimage peaks with prayers at Mt. Arafat, a gentle hill 12 miles southwest of Mecca. The time spent at Mt. Arafat is believed to symbolize Judgment Day when Islam says every person will stand before God and answer for his or her deeds. Every able-bodied Muslim, who can afford it, is required at least once to perform the hajj, a centuries-old pilgrimage to Mecca, the birthplace of Islam and its seventh-century prophet Muhammad. (AP Photo/Amel Emric) small portion for themselves. They are joined in this celebration by Muslims around the world who perform their own sacrifices for Eid al-Adha.

The pilgrims then usually visit Medina and the mosque where Muhammad is buried. After one or more nights in Medina, they put on the ihram again and resume the hajj. There are three remaining acts that they must perform in order to complete the Greater Hajj successfully: spend an afternoon at the hill of Arafat, where Adam and Eve were forgiven by Allah for their disobedience; walk counterclockwise seven times (tawaf) around the Kaaba (the holiest place in Islam), reciting a prayer during each circuit; and finally perform the say (or “running”), walking seven times, forward and backward, between the rocky hills of Marwa and Safa, reenacting the frantic search of Abraham’s wife Hagar for water before Allah showed her the Zamzam Spring. The spring is now enclosed in a marble chamber beneath the Kaaba and, though not a custom, most pilgrims drink water from the Zamzam well after completing the lesser hajj. The visit to the hill of Arafat does not require any specific rituals or prayers, so pilgrims usually spend the afternoon reflecting on the course of their lives.

Having fulfilled all of their spiritual obligations, the pilgrims are cleansed and can return to their daily lives. Female pilgrims who have completed the hajj are called hajjah; males are called hajji.

Origins and History

Four millennia ago Mecca was an arid and unoccupied place. Muslims believe that Abraham (Ibrahim) brought his wife Hagar (Hajira) and their child Ishmael to Mecca in order to protect them from Sarah, Ibrahim’s first wife. Allah instructed Ibrahim to let mother and son be on their own, which he duly did, leaving them with a reasonable supply of water and food. The supplies, however, ran out quickly and Ibrahim’s wife and son were left suffering from dehydration and hunger. Hajira sprinted up and down the hills of Marwa and Safa looking for help, before she collapsed beside Ishmael and prayed for deliverance. Muslims believe that, when Ishmael struck the ground with his foot, a spring of water gushed from the earth, and he and his mother were saved. When Ibrahim returned from Palestine, he was astonished to see his wife and son running a profitable well.

As God commanded Ibrahim, he built a shrine dedicated to Allah at the spot. Ibrahim, and Ishmael also built a stone structure called the Kaaba, which was later the rallying point for those who wanted their belief in Allah to be strengthened. The Kaaba, which symbolizes God's oneness, means that every life must have Allah at its center. With the passing of years, Ishmael came to be regarded as a prophet and preached to the desert nomads the importance of submitting to Allah.

Mecca subsequently became a flourishing city because of its dependable water resource, the Zamzam well. Slowly but surely, the people started adopting polytheistic notions and worshipping spirits and various gods. Ibrahim's shrine became a storehouse for idols. Ultimately Allah instructed Muhammad to restore the Kaaba. In 628, Muhammad took a trip with 1,400 of his followers. This was Islam's first recorded pilgrimage, and it resurrected Ibrahim's sacred traditions.

With about 1.3 billion Islam adherents worldwide, pilgrimages of the recent past have crowded into the city of Mecca. During hajj, Mecca has been the destination of as many as four million pilgrims. Such an influx of people has stretched the city's resources, and it has had problems preventing overcrowding and providing accommodations for those who want to be present during Dhu al-Hijjah. This situation has caused a number of pilgrims' deaths, due primarily to the crowded conditions. Organizations dedicated to managing the hajj, such as the Hajj Commission of Saudi Arabia, have reluctantly established a system of passports, travel visas, and registrations to control the influx of pilgrims. This system is purported to accommodate first-time visitors to the holy city, while establishing restrictions for pilgrims who have already been to Mecca numerous times. The Hajj Commission has, however, openly admitted that they have yet to find a way to prevent tragedies and accidents. Moreover, those who can afford to undertake the pilgrimage several times have objected strenuously.

Notwithstanding the stress of the physical challenge, pilgrims who experience the hajj see it as one of the greatest spiritual experiences of their lives.

See also Volume I: AFGHANISTAN; ALBANIA; ALGERIA; AZERBAIJAN; BAHRAIN; BANGLADESH;

Ihram

When undertaking the hajj, Muslims do away with all class distinctions and wear plain white garments called ihram. Men are required to wear two white unhemmed cloths—one below the waist, the other collected around their shoulders—and a pair of sandals. Women wear a headscarf and a plain white dress, or their native dress. The ihram represents cleanliness and purity, and shows the pilgrim to be devoted. While clothed in ihram, pilgrims are forbidden to harm a living being, fight, or use vulgar language. Vanity is not allowed, and pilgrims approach the hajj in their most natural state. Marriage proposals are also suspended during the hajj.

BOSNIA AND HERZEGOVINA; BRUNEI; BURKINA FASO; CHAD; COMOROS; CÔTE D'IVOIRE; DJIBOUTI; EGYPT; ERITREA; ETHIOPIA; GAMBIA, THE; GHANA; GUINEA; GUINEA-BISSEAU; INDIA; INDONESIA; IRAN; JORDAN; KAZAKHSTAN; KUWAIT; KYRGYZSTAN

See also Volume II: LEBANON; LIBERIA; LIBYA; MACEDONIA; MALAYSIA; MALDIVES; MALI; MAURITANIA; MOROCCO; NIGER; NIGERIA; OMAN; PAKISTAN; QATAR; SAUDI ARABIA; SENEGAL; SIERRA LEONE; SOMALIA; SUDAN; SYRIA; TAJIKISTAN; TANZANIA; TUNISIA; TURKEY; TURKMENISTAN; UNITED ARAB EMIRATES; UZBEKISTAN; YEMEN

See also Volume III: EID AL-ADHA; ISLAM

Further Reading

Ahmad Kamal, The Sacred Journey: The Pilgrimage to Mecca (Lincoln, Neb.: iUniverse, 2000); M. R. Bawa Muhaiyaddeen and Larry Didona, Hajj: The Inner Pilgrimage (Philadelphia: Fellowship Press, 1998); Seyyed Hossein Nasr (text) and Ali Kazuyoshi Nomachi (photographs), Mecca the Blessed, Medina the Radiant: The Holiest Cities of Islam (New York: Aperture, 1997); F. E. Peters, The Hajj (Princeton, N.J.: Princeton University Press, 1995); Michael Wolfe, The Hadj: An American's Pilgrimage to Mecca (New York: Grove Press, 1998).

❧ Hanukkah ❧

FACT FILE

Observed in	Countries with Jewish populations, especially Israel, United States, and Canada
Observed on	Twenty-fifth of Kislev, the ninth month of the Jewish calendar, to the second of Tevet, the 10th month of the Jewish calendar
Observed by	Jews

Introduction

Hanukkah, which means “dedication,” is celebrated for eight days, usually beginning around mid to late December. Also known as the Festival of Lights, the observance recalls the Jews’ struggle for religious freedom and celebrates their triumph against the Hellenistic Syrians in 165 B.C.E. (The observance has more than 10 spellings in English, three more than the seven candles of the ancient menorah.)

On the festival’s first night, one light of a nine-branched hanukiah (“candlestick”) is lit. Each night after that, another light is lit until the eighth and final night, when all of them are lit. The gradual addition of lights reminds the Jews of the miracle’s magnitude and growth. The candles are placed in the hanukiah from right to left, but are lit from left to right. The main candle is called the shamash, or “servant,” and is used to light the rest of the candles. There are recitations of blessings every night prior to the lighting of the candles: as they burn the eight lights of the hanukiah, Jews all over the world narrate stories about the triumph of their ancestors over depravity, the rededication of the Temple in Jerusalem, as well as the miracle of one day’s supply of oil that burned for eight days.

For unexplained reasons, the real story of the festival and the rebellion never became a part of the Torah. Rather, it was scripted in four works, in Greek and Hebrew, called The Books of the Maccabees. These works survived after Christians translated them. The Mishnah, where everything related to religious life was documented, has only a few mentions of the festival and its story.

Hanukkah found renewed import in the years that led to the establishment of the modern state of Israel. Post-Holocaust Jews became aware of the profound questions raised by Hanukkah: identity, oppression, religious autonomy and expression, and the fight for independence. Although in a religious context Hanukkah remains a minor Jewish holiday, it has turned into a holiday of historical significance, for the repetition of the miracle narratives both confirm and strengthen a persecuted people.

Origins and History

After Alexander the Great’s death (356–23 B.C.E.), his kingdom was divided among his generals Seleucus (358/54–281), Antigonos (382–01 B.C.E.), and Ptolemy (367–283 B.C.E.). Seleucus reigned over Babylonia, Syria, and Persia; Antigonos over Macedonia and Greece; and Ptolemy ruled Israel and Egypt. Like his legendary predecessor, Ptolemy championed Hellenism (Greek nationalism). The

The Hanukiah

For Hanukkah, a nine-branched candlestick (hanukiah) holds the candles to be lit. It is an adaptation of the menorah, one of the most ancient Jewish symbols; which has seven branches and symbolizes the burning bush that Moses saw on Mount Sinai. Jews see in the nine-branched Hanukkah hanukiah the menorah used by the Maccabees in the Holy Temple in 165 B.C.E. The Holy Temple’s menorah was created from one solid piece of gold, and had seven branches symbolizing the seven days of the week and an oil container. The menorah was lit daily by a priestly Jew named Kohen. The hanukiah has nine branches for nine candles; eight of them stand in a straight row, four on either side of the taller, ninth holder. All nine candles should be of equal height. The candle placed in the ninth space is elevated above the other eight.

The Dreidel

The dreidel is a top with four sides, used to play a game usually associated with Hanukkah celebrations. Each side has a Hebrew letter on it: The four letters are nun, gimel, hey, and shin. With their vowel marks, the letters mean, “A great miracle happened there,” in English, and they make sense in the United States, Canada, and other English-speaking countries. Without their vowel marks (nikkud), in Hebrew they are translated, “A miracle happened here,” which makes sense in Israel. Each dreidel player starts with 10 or 15 coins, pieces of candy, or chocolate coins (gelt). Before the dreidel is spun, he or she puts one piece in the kitty, or kupah. Then the dreidel is spun, and the next action depends on which of the four letters is facing up when it stops.

Nun: Nothing special happens and the next player spins.

Gimel: The player takes the entire kitty.

Hey: The player takes half the pot.

Shin: The player must put one or two pieces in the kitty.

The game can continue until one player has won all the pieces.

empire Ptolemy established ruled Israel for nearly a century. Under his reign a great number of Jews began to take up features of Greek culture, and they became known as Hellenists. For these Jews, Greek culture symbolized the future and the quickest way to be successful in Greek society.

The Seleucid Empire that ruled Syria seized control of Israel from the Ptolemies in 199 B.C.E. During this period the practice of Judaism went through a torturous phase. The observance of the Sabbath, the learning of Torah, and circumcisions were prohibited, and the Holy Temple housed images of Greek gods and other artifacts of Greek culture.

In 168 B.C.E., the Holy Temple of the Jews was seized and offered to the Greek god Zeus. While some Jews feared the Greek soldiers and avoided angering them, many had had enough and decided to fight back. The struggle began in Modiin, near Jerusalem. One Greek officer, along with his soldiers, gathered the villagers and ordered them to bow down before an idol and eat pig’s flesh—both activities forbidden by Jewish law. When Mattathias, a high priest, was ordered to participate in the proceedings, he refused, but another villager offered to do it in his place. An outraged Mattathias took out his sword and killed both the villager and the officer. His sons and the rest of the villagers then assaulted and slaughtered the soldiers. Mattathias’ family hid in the nearby mountains after this incident, where they were joined by many other Jews who were ready to oppose the Greeks. Mattathias died about a year after the rebellion began, but, before he died, he declared his courageous son Judah Maccabee as the leader of the growing Jewish army. After about three years of struggle, the Jews overcame the much stronger and better armed Greek forces.

When Judah Maccabee and his forces entered the Holy Temple, they were dismayed by the sight of missing and broken items. They cleaned and revamped the Temple and, when finished, decided to rededicate it. They sought to light the menorah for the celebrations. After searching thoroughly for oil, they found a flask containing only enough oil to last a day. Extraordinarily, the oil sustained itself for eight days, allowing the Maccabees enough time to procure new oil.

Hanukkah achieved new significance with the rise of Zionism. Israel’s pioneers had to defend themselves against attacks, and they started to connect with the old Jewish warriors who had fought for their freedom in the same place. Hanukkah, with its encouraging depiction of the Jewish fighter, touched the early Zionists, who were fighting for their own liberty and freedom.

Over the last two or three decades, many evangelical Christians have reexamined the roots of their religion and have progressively become conscious

Latkes

The most fashionable themes in a Hanukkah menu are oil-based. The oil reminds a Jew of the oil that burned in the Holy Temple. Latkes, a typical Hanukkah dish, are pancakes made of grated potatoes, eggs, flour, and onions. The pancake is fried in vegetable oil. The surface is crispy on the outside and soft inside. They are served hot, generally accompanied by sour cream or applesauce. The Maccabee soldiers ate latkes frequently, but theirs were made from vegetables, cheese, or fruits. There were no potato latkes in those times, because potatoes were not native to the Old World, so they were not available until the 16th century.

A two-year-old boy prepares to light the first candle on his family's menorah for the first night of Hanukkah at their home in Brooklyn, New York. (AP Photo/Bebeto Matthews)

of, and accepted, a number of celebrations and feasts of Judaism. This inclination is particularly apparent among messianic believers, although it is not restricted to them. Many Christians observe the lighting of the Hanukkah hanukiab and other Hanukkah rituals. Apart from this, some claim a correlation between the miracle of the Temple's light and Jesus' birth. They maintain that Hanukkah (celebrated on the 25th of the Jewish month of Kislev), not December 25, is the correct date to observe Jesus' birth. Some combine the two celebrations (Hanukkah and Christmas), whereas others treat them as unrelated holidays. In recent years, a fusion of Christmas and Hanukkah called Chrismukkah has evolved.

See also Volume I: CANADA; ISRAEL

See also Volume II: UNITED STATES

See also Volume III: JUDAISM

Further Reading

Susan L. Brownstein, Luminous Art: Hanukkah Menorahs of the Jewish Museum (New Haven, Conn.: Yale University Press, 2004); Karen Hesse, Stone Lamp: The Eight Stories of Hanukkah through History (New York: Hyperion, 2003); Lewis Jacobs, The Jewish Festivals: New Year, the Day of Atonement, Tabernacles, Passover, Pentecost, Hanukkah, Purim (Worcester, Mass.: Achille J. St. Onge, 1961); Jon Koons, A Confused Hanukkah: An Original Story of Chelm (New York: Dutton, 2004); Susan L. Roth, Hanukkah, Oh Hanukkah (New York: Dial Books, 2004).

Harvest Festivals

FACT FILE

Observed in	Worldwide
Observed on	Exact dates vary but are usually in autumn
Observed by	General Public

Introduction

Agriculture is one of the oldest occupations of human civilization. Ever since people learned that they could grow food rather than having to go out and look for it, they have cultivated the soil and reaped the rewards for their labors. Its adaptation led to the development of cities, writing, and, eventually, books. Surplus food had to be stored somehow, so towns grew up around the storage sites. Ancient people had to keep track of their stored food, which led them to create cuneiform and clay tablets, which led to alphabets and papyrus. The ancients wisely thought it worthwhile to express their thanks to the natural elements that helped or hindered the growth of their crops. Having seen years of drought, famine, and pestilence, there was always a lurking fear that the harvest might not be so bountiful in the season that followed. This concern led them to try propitiating supernatural powers, so as to avoid incurring their wrath or displeasure and, thereby, to ensure a good harvest. What had originated in fear or apprehension gradually evolved into a socioreligious occasion for feasting and the enjoyment of good food and companionship.

Origins and History

Since time immemorial, human beings have been celebrating harvests of fruits, grains, and vegetables yielded by the Earth. Over millennia cultures in different parts of the world developed rituals and ceremonies to acknowledge the generosity of Mother Earth and to thank her for the crops that ensured the well-being of each community.

Prior to the establishment of formal religions ancient farmers believed that their crops were inhabited by spirits who caused the crops to grow and to die. It was also believed that these spirits would be released when the crops were harvested and wreak their vengeance upon the farmers. Therefore, those spirits had to be destroyed. Some of the ancient rituals were thus meant to neutralize such spirits and celebrate their destruction.

With the passage of time people realized that the crops harvested in autumn must see them through the winter. Hence whatever spirit or power provided the bounty deserved praise as well as gratitude. Their perspective shifted from rituals to defeat potentially harmful spirits to ceremonies formulated to thank the deities for a good harvest and to pray for similar good fortune in the next season.

Harvest festivals have been celebrated for thousands of years in every culture—the Chinese, the Greek, Egyptian, Sumerian, Amerindian, and Hebrew—and they continue to be important events in modern societies. One of the earliest recorded harvest rituals took place in ancient Greece. It honored the generosity of the goddess Demeter, who taught people to tend the soil, and took place during a month called Pyanopsion (Puanepsion), according to the lunisolar calendar of the Atheni-

Taille

The goddess of autumn in ancient Ireland, Tailte, was thought to be the foster mother of Lugh, the god of light. One of the prominent Irish Earth goddesses, Tailte lived on the Hill of Tara (Temair) and directed the clearing of an immense forest (the wood of Cuan) from that vantage point. It took a month to create the Plain of Oenach Tailten, where Tailte then built her palace; this place can still be found on regional maps as Telltown, near Kells. Commercial fairs and sporting events were integral parts of this festival. In 433 St. Patrick is said to have come to Tara to confront the pagans at their most powerful site.

Origin of Popcorn

Popcorn is probably the oldest snack food. It originated in Mexico but had already spread to India and China before the first Europeans arrived in the Americas. One of six kinds of maize, it had small kernels with extremely hard seed coats, which made it difficult to chew or grind into flour. Although each ear of corn had lots of kernels, they were very small, and so using it in cooking was more labor-intensive than for other varieties. Small popcorn ears found in the Bat Cave in New Mexico in the mid-20th century are 5,600 years old.

By the 1820s, seed companies began to feature popcorn varieties in their catalogs. By the 1840s, popping corn entertained many Americans, mainly in New England. Popcorn companies began marketing the seeds for consumption in the 1860s, and a decade later it was a “much relished food” among the middle and upper classes. After the Civil War, Americans made it a practice to consume popcorn while visiting fairs, circuses, and exhibitions. In those days they ate it plain, simply as a snack. By the 1890s, due to developments in technology, mobile commercial popcorn poppers became commonplace. The general public could buy freshly made popcorn from street vendors.

ans. Pyanopsion falls in October–November on the Gregorian calendar. The story about Demeter and her daughter Persephone illustrates how both good and bad harvest years were accounted for.

It seems that Hades, the god of the underworld, was quite taken with Persephone’s beauty and abducted her, taking her with him into the underworld to be his wife. So intense was Demeter’s grieving for her daughter that she withheld her powers, refusing to feed herself or to provide food for mortals. So the other gods, disturbed by the situation, determined to resolve the conflict between Hades and Demeter. Because Persephone had eaten pomegranate seeds that Hades had given her, the gods decided that she could spend half the year on Earth with her mother, but she had to spend the other half in the underworld. It is winter on Earth during the half of the year that Persephone is in the underworld; the half of the year she spends with Demeter brings us spring and summer.

The Algonquian peoples had thought out the entire agricultural process and celebrated six different harvest festivals in the course of a year. Each one was intended to protect a phase in the growing season. The first thanked the Creator for the maple tree and its syrup. The second was the planting feast, when the seeds to be sown were blessed. The strawberry festival followed, celebrating the first fruits of the season. The green corn festival was held in the summer to give thanks for the ripening corn and in late fall the harvest festival gave thanks for the food they had harvested. The midwinter festival was the Algonquians' last ceremony of the old year.

Girls from the Paiwan tribe play together as they wear traditional Paiwan costumes and crowns made of millet and leaves during an aborigine harvest festival in Taiwan. (AP Photo/Jerome Favre)

In several Asian countries—China, Taiwan, and Vietnam—the Moon Festival is held on the fifteenth day of the eighth month of the Chinese lunar calendar, which occurs in mid-autumn. The full moon represents abundance, harmony, and good luck; people celebrate with picnics or special dinners, which are sure to have mooncakes as one of the sweets provided.

The ancient Romans celebrated Cerelia, a harvest festival dedicated to the goddess Ceres (Demeter in Greek). Daughter of Saturn and Ops and the wife of Jupiter, Ceres was their goddess of corn; the word “cereal” is derived from her name. In May Malaysians celebrate a festival to give thanks to their rice god. In addition to agricultural shows there are buffalo races. In some parts of Africa good grain harvests are celebrated, while in West Africa the Festival of Yams goes on for several days, and the people offer yams to their ancestors and the gods.

When the subject is religion, early peoples in Europe are collectively called “pagans,” regardless of the content of their cultural beliefs and religious observances, because that is what the Romans called them, and the Roman Catholic Church followed suit. In Latin, paganus means “country dweller,” from the word for “country,” pagus. Certainly the various Indo-European groups had their own gods that had to be propitiated, such as Celts and the Teutons. In its very early, formative years, before its holidays and feasts had been established, the church aggressively appropriated not only pagan holidays and festivals but their symbols as well in its quest for converts to Christianity.

While scraps and rumors of those centuries are mostly what remain, some elements from the pagan religion, mostly Celtic in origin, can still be found, and Neo-Paganism has done much to preserve the rituals and festivals. There are three pagan harvest festivals: Lammas, Mabon, and Samhain. Lammas (also called Lughnasadh) occurs in early August and celebrates the harvest of grain. Mabon, which falls on the autumnal equinox on September 21, celebrates the harvest of fruit. Samhain, on November 1, is the time for the harvest of meat, among other things, and it is celebrated with huge bonfires. It is believed to have also been the Celtic New Year. Some of its symbols and activities can be found in

Squash

Squash is native to North America and was one of the “three sisters” planted by Native Americans; the other two were maize (corn) and beans. All three could be planted together (companion planting): The cornstalk provided support for the climbing beans, and its large leaves shaded the squash. Not only the fruit, but also the seeds, blossoms, and tendrils are edible. The blossoms remain an important part of Native American cooking and are used in the cuisines of many countries as well.

the Catholic feasts of All Saints' Day (November 1), All Souls' Day (November 2), as well as in Halloween (October 31).

The Hebrews celebrate a harvest festival they call Sukkoth. Held in autumn Sukkoth has been observed for over 3,000 years, and Jewish families continue to honor this tradition. Known as Hag ha Succot (“Feast of the Tabernacles”) as well as Hag ha Asif (“Feast of Ingathering”), Sukkoth begins on the 15th day of the Hebrew month of Tishri, five days after Yom Kippur.

While most harvest celebrations used to, and still, take place in the autumn, the ancient Egyptians held theirs in the spring. The Egyptian harvest season coincided with the festival held in honor of Min, god of vegetation and fertility. It featured a parade in which even pharaoh took part. After the parade a lavish feast was held, accompanied by music, dancing, and sports. When Egyptian farmers harvested their corn, they wept and pretended to be grief-stricken in order to deceive the spirit, which they believed dwelt within the corn. If this was not done, they feared that the spirit would become angry when they cut down the corn in which it lived.

See also Volume I: CAMBODIA; CHINA; GREECE; HAITI; HONG KONG; HUNGARY; INDIA; INDONESIA; ISRAEL; ITALY; JAPAN

See also Volume II: LAOS; PERU; RUSSIA

See also Volume III: JUDAISM; THANKSGIVING

Further Reading

Ellen Jackson, The Autumn Equinox: Celebrating the Harvest (Minneapolis: Millbrook Press, 2003); Kwanza (New York: Studio Museum in Harlem, 1972); Maire MacNeill, The Festival of Lughnasa: A Study of the Survival of the Celtic Festival of the Beginning of Harvest (Dublin: Comhairle Bhealoideas Eireann, University College, 1982).

Fun Fact

Amerindians popped their popcorn by throwing the kernels onto sizzling hot stones placed in a fire.

∞ Hinduism ∞

FACT FILE

Observed in	Countries with Hindu populations, primarily India, Nepal, Bangladesh, and Sri Lanka
World Population	One billion
Place of Origin	Near River Indus (in modern-day Pakistan)

Introduction

Hinduism is both a religion and a way of life. The rules for good, or dharmic, living provided by the ancestors of present-day Indians are the basis for the Hindu religion. The religion is also known as Sanatana Dharma or Vaidika-Dharma in Sanskrit. Sanatana means “everlasting” and dharma can be roughly translated as “divine law.” (Sanskrit is an Indo-European language that is the classical literary language of India, as well as the language of Hinduism and the Vedas, the holy books of Hinduism.) Vaidika-Dharma means “the divine law of the Vedas.” Hinduism, called the everlasting religion, began and flourishes in India.

Unlike the other major religions in the world, Hinduism does not have a founder, a single teacher, or prophets in its history. It developed from the religious observances of people who lived near the Indus River in modern-day Pakistan. The religion, however, has been, and continues to be, influenced by the traditions and practices of people in other parts of India and beyond.

Superficially, Hinduism appears to be polytheistic (a religion having many gods). That, however, is not entirely true. The religion recognizes one God but also acknowledges its countless manifestations around us and in us, eternally. Because Hinduism believes it is impossible for humans to visualize the Infinite, its many forms help us visualize it. This aspect of Hinduism is often confused with polytheism. Hinduism gives form and shape to the endless cycle of birth, death, and existence through the Hindu trinity.

Karma is central to the Hindu faith. Hindus believe that the soul passes through a cycle of successive lives, and one’s subsequent incarnation depends on one’s actions and deeds in the previous life. In short, we reap what we sow. The three most important paths are the path of knowledge (jnana), the path of work and religious deeds (karma), and the path of devotion (bhakti).

Hinduism is a religion rich in literature. The Vedas (“knowledge” in Sanskrit) represent the earliest collection of Hinduism’s sacred writings. This body of literature primarily consists of four collections of hymns, detached poetical portions, and ceremonial formulas. The collection is made up of four parts called the Rig-Veda, the Sama-Veda, the Yajur-Veda, and the Atharva-Veda. They are also known as the Samhitas, or “collection.”

The Vedic view of God perhaps best illustrates the essence of the Hindu belief in a supreme being. The Vedas tell us this about God: “Om Poornamadab Poornamidam Poornaad Poornamudachyate; Poornasya Poornamaadaaya Poornamevaavashisyate,” or: “What is Whole—This is Whole—What has come out of the Whole is also Whole; when the Whole is taken out of the Whole, the Whole still remains Whole.” The real meaning of this verse is that the infinite cannot be measured in human terms; God is infinite, and the infinite can only be represented in immeasurable ways and manifests himself in infinite ways. Hindus believe that God is everywhere, around us and within us.

Origins and History

Hinduism, as a religion, is at least 3,500 years old; the fundamentals of the faith, however, are purportedly much older. The classical theory of the origins of Hinduism traces the religion’s roots to the Indus valley civilization between 4000 and 2200 B.C.E. The development of Hinduism was influenced by countless invasions over thousands of years. The great influence happened when nomadic Indo-European tribes invaded northern India around 1500 from the plains of Russia and Central Asia. They brought with them their religion of Vedism. These beliefs combined with the more advanced, indigenous native Indian beliefs, often called the Indus Valley culture. The classical theory, however, is being rejected by increasing numbers of archaeologists and religious historians. The Indo-European invasion account of ancient Indian history has been challenged in recent years by new conclusions founded on more recent discoveries in archaeology and cultural and literary analysis.

One of the most ancient aspects of Hinduism, which is as much social as religious, is the caste system. In order to understand Hindu religious beliefs, it is important to comprehend the caste system. According to the religion's teachings, there are four basic social classes. Each caste has its own rules and obligations for dharmic living. The elite caste is the Brahman, or priest caste. Below them are the Kshatriyas, or warriors and rulers. Vaisyas, the merchants and farmers, belong to the third caste. Finally, the fourth caste is the Shudras, or laborers. Beyond these four are the Panchamas, or untouchables (literally, Fifth Division), who constitute 15–20 percent of Indian society. The untouchables are the outcasts of Hindu society: sweepers, washers of clothes, leather workers, and those who kill animals for a living. Although originally called untouchables or pariahs, they were given the name Harijans by the Indian political and religious leader Mahatma Gandhi, who worked for many years to improve their lives. Though the term “untouchable” was outlawed in India by the 1949 constitution, the Harijans remain a very real part of Indian culture. Many have sought to escape the stigma of their birth by converting to Buddhism, Christianity, or Islam.

Hinduism is a henotheistic religion, a religion that identifies with a single deity but also recognizes other gods and goddesses as facets, forms, and manifestations of that supreme God. The Hindu's three-in-one God is referred to as Brahman. Hindus also venerate the “wives” of Shiva, such as Kali, or one of Vishnu's 10 incarnations. Most urban Hindus follow one of two primary divisions within Hinduism: Vaishnavism, which normally regards Vishnu as the main deity, or Shivaism, which regards Shiva as the primary deity.

The Hindus believe in reincarnation, the transmigration of souls, or samsara, a journey on the “circle of life.” In this journey, every person experiences a series of physical births, deaths, and rebirths. Better karma produces higher rewards. A person with good karma can be reborn into a higher caste, or even achieve divinity. Bad karma can relegate one to a lower caste or birth into the animal world in one's next life. Nirvana, the release of the soul from the seemingly infinite cycle of rebirths, is thought to be the goal of life.

Fun Fact

By some counts, it is said that there are as many as 330 million Hindu deities.

Hindu Sacred Writings

Several holy books provide the foundations of Hinduism, primarily the Ramayana, the Mahabharata, and the Bhagavad Gita. The Ramayana consists of about 24,000 verses describing the life of Prince Rama, an incarnation of Vishnu. According to legend, the author Valmiki belonged to the lowest caste and made his living by robbing travelers. After an encounter with the sage Narada, however, Valmiki reformed and became a poet and scholar. Classical Hinduism recognizes him as a Brahman as well as India's first poet. Rama and his wife, Sita, embody virtue and righteousness, and their lives demonstrate the operation of dharma, divine law, in various areas of activity. Their stories in the Ramayana contain lessons for Hindus on ideal behavior in a range of roles, such as son, brother, wife, king, and married couple.

The Mahabharata, an epic story of 100,000 verses, is attributed to a sage named Vyasa. It is thought to be the longest poem in the world. It traces the descendants of two sets of cousins, the Kauravas and the Pandavas, whose disputes eventually led to the Mahabharata War. Krishna, an avatar of Vishnu the Preserver, is central to the story. Like the Ramayana, the Mahabharata message is centered around questions related to dharma and the actions of individuals and society. These discourses have provided inspiration for Hindus in many spheres of life.

One part of the Mahabharata, the Bhagavad Gita functions as a text on its own in Hinduism. On the eve of the Mahabharata War, the hero Arjuna suddenly develops a reluctance to fight. His decision leads to a prolonged dialogue with Krishna during which Krishna attempts to resolve Arjuna's moral and intellectual dilemmas in 700 verses. Krishna's method of guiding Arjuna has endeared the text to the Hindus as a guide to their faith. It is in the Bhagavad Gita that Hinduism comes closest to possessing a universal scripture. Since the Gupta period (320–550 C.E.), it has stimulated a stream of translations, interpretations, and summaries, all of which demonstrate its wide popularity.

Hindu Architecture

Several Hindu temples are considered to be among the architectural wonders of the world, among them the many temple of Khajuraho and the Sun Temple at Konark. Khajuraho was the capital city of the Chandelas (or Chandels), a Rajput clan that ruled from the 10th to the 16th centuries in Bundelkhand, once a region in central India. Khajuraho is situated in the Chhatarpur district of Madhya Pradesh, located about 385 miles southeast of Delhi, the capital city of India. The Chandelas built 85 temples between 950 and 1050, but only 25 remain. The temples at Khajuraho are dazzling examples of the temple architecture of medieval India. The earliest temples of Khajuraho were built in coarse granite, while the later temples were mostly fine-grained buff, pink, and pale yellow sandstone found in neighboring areas. The ornate temples belong to religious sects such as the Shaiva, Vaishnava, and Jain and mark the peak of the northern Indian, or Nagara, style of temple architecture. The Khajuraho temples are on the UNESCO list of World Heritage Sites.

The Sun Temple at Konark (or Arkakshetra), also a World Heritage site, is located in the northeastern part of Puri, or the Chakrakshetra. It is also known as Konaditya. Konark is derived from the words kona, “corner” and arka, “Sun.” The temple was built in 1278 by the Ganga king Narasimha Deva. According to folklore, Samba, the King of Jambavati, entered the bathing chamber of Krishna’s wives and was cursed by Krishna with leprosy. It was ruled that he would be relieved of the curse provided he worshipped the Sun god Surya on the seacoast northeast of Puri. King Samba reached Konaditya Kshetra and saw the figure of Surya (the chief solar deity) seated on the lotus. He worshipped him and was relieved of his curse, as promised. The temple represents the chariot of Surya as having 24 wheels, each about 10 feet in diameter, with a set of spokes and sophisticated carvings, pulled by seven horses. Two lions, seen crushing elephants, guard the entrance. There are sculptures of animals, flowers, warriors, and a number of interesting patterns. There are three images of the Sun god, positioned to catch the rays of the Sun at dawn, noon, and sunset. The Sun Temple is widely admired for its architectural grandeur and for the intricacy and profusion of its sculptural work.

Hinduism teaches that all living things have God in their hearts. All living things are Brahman, or God. Enlightenment is only possible by tuning in to the Brahman within. Only then, according to the Hindu faith, can one reach Nirvana. The release from the wheel of life that allows entrance to Nirvana is known as Moksha (Sanskrit for “liberation,” and implying the concept of salvation).

Hinduism recognizes three possible paths (yogas or spiritual practices) to Moksha. The first is through the way of works or Karma Yoga (selfless service). This is an accepted way of salvation and emphasizes the notion that liberation may be gained by fulfilling one’s familial and social duties, thereby overcoming the weight of bad karma one has accumulated. The second path to Moksha is through knowledge, or Jnana Yoga. According to this view, we are bound to the cycle of rebirths because of our ignorant insistence that we are individual selves and not one with Brahman. This gives rise to bad actions and, ultimately, bad karma. Salvation, therefore, is achieved through attaining a state of consciousness in which we appreciate our identity with Brahman.

This is only accomplished through profound meditation, often as a part of the discipline of yoga.

The third path to Moksha is the way of devotion, Bhakti Yoga. This is the way that is mostly accepted and followed by laypeople in India. It is a way of salvation by surrendering oneself to one of the various personal gods and goddesses of the Hindu faith. Such devotion is expressed through acts of worship, temple rituals, and pilgrimages.

Devout Hindus organize their lives around certain activities or Purusarthas, also called the “four aims of Hinduism” or “the doctrine of the fourfold end of life.” The first and the most important is dharma, or righteousness, in religious life. The second is artha, or success in economic life. The third is kama, the gratification of the senses—sexual pleasure and intellectual enjoyment. The three come under Pravritti (social action).

The fourth aim and primary goal of Nivritti (inward contemplation) is Moksha. This is considered the supreme goal of humanity. Meditation is often practiced, with yoga being the most universal method chosen. Other activities of this path include daily devotions, public rituals, and puja (pooja), a ceremonial dinner for a god.

According to Sri Shankaracharya (788–820 C.E.), one of the greatest philosophers of India, “The Vedic dharma is verily twofold, characterized by Pravritti (social action) and Nivritti (inward contemplation), designed to promote order in the world; this twofold dharma has in view the true social welfare and spiritual emancipation of all beings.”

Holidays and Religious Observances

Throughout the year numerous festivals are celebrated in India, a country renowned for its exciting and colorful observances. Among the most popular Hindu religious festivals are Diwali, Dussehra (Durga Puja), Holi, Janamashtami, Maha Shivrati, Makar Sankranti, and Ram Naumi. Diwali, also Divali or Deepavali (in Sanskrit, “row of lights”), is the Hindu Festival of Lights. The festivities can begin on the 13th day of the waning half (Krishna Paksha) of the lunar month Asvina to the second day of the waxing half (Shukla Paksha) of Kartika (October or November in the Gregorian calendar). Like Dussehra (which precedes it in the lunar calendar), it commemorates the triumph of good over evil. The exact event or deity, and the date of the observance, celebrated by Diwali depends on one’s location. In northern India, Diwali falls on the last day of the Vikram (lunar) calendar, during the waning (dark phase) of the moon, so businesses start their fiscal year and open new accounts books. The following day, called Annakut, begins a new year. In southern India, where the Shalivahana (solar) calendar is used, Diwali begins in the seventh month (Kartika). The Shalivahana calendar begins in the year 78 C.E. when King Shalivahana was crowned after defeating the Sakas, an invading Central Asian tribe.

Diwali is the most important and the most famous of all Hindu festivals, an occasion of tremendous excitement, hectic activities, and a grand time for rejoicing. Though the Festival of Lights is meant to be celebrated for one day, local customs, traditions, and religious aspirations of the people have transformed it into a four- or five-day festival, beginning with Dhanteras—the “day of wealth,” when shoppers return home and light the first Diwali lamps—and ending with Bhaiya dooj, Brothers’ Day.

The stories connected with Diwali, and why it evolved into such a widely celebrated festival, are different in various regions and states of India. According to the most familiar account, the first Diwali was celebrated to commemorate the triumphant return of King Rama of Ayodhya, (the seventh manifestation of Vishnu, the Protector), Sita (his wife), and his brother Lakshmana to the capital city Ayodhya, after 14 years of exile. During the exile, Lord Rama had vanquished the demon Ravana, the king of Sri Lanka. As night had already fallen before the arrival of the royal trio, the people, delighted to have their king back in their midst, lit clay lamps along the way to dispel the darkness and light up their path, hence one of its alternative names, the Festival of Lights.

Shiva, shown here as Nataraja, Lord of Dance, one of the three manifestations of the Hindu god. (AP Photo/Sackler Gallery)

Dussehra, also called Durga Puja or Vijay Dashmi, is another popular Hindu festival, observed with great fervor by Hindus throughout the world and second only to Diwali, the Festival of Lights, which it precedes. Dussehra, a 10-day festival celebrated from the first through the tenth day of the month of Asvina (September/ October in the Gregorian calendar), marks the event of the killing of the evil demon Ravana by Lord Rama, one of the most revered deities in Hinduism and the main character of the epic Ramayana (a Sanskrit classic traditionally attributed to Valmiki).

Holi, the Festival of Colors, also called Phagu and Phagwah, is another much anticipated Hindu observance and, like Dussehra and Diwali, it celebrates the triumph of good over evil. Falling on the full-moon day of the Hindu month of Falgun (or Phalgun), Holi is observed with great passion throughout India and marks the end of winter and the beginning of spring as well as the flaming end of

Fun Fact

Much like Christians, Hindus believe in one God with three manifestations:

Brahma, who creates, Vishnu, who sustains or preserves, and Shiva, who destroys, or consumes, everything in the universe.

the demoness Holika; it is a celebration of happiness and hope. Traditionally a two-day festival, Dhulendi, the second day of Holi, is the actual day that gives Holi one of its names—the Festival of Colors. On Dhulendi the old and the young alike gather in the streets to smear each other with colored powder or throw colored powder and water on each other.

The Hindu festival of Janmashtami (sometimes Krishna Janmashtami) celebrates the birth of Lord Krishna, arguably the most venerated god in Hinduism. Janamashtami, also known as Krishna Ashtami, Sri Jayanthi, or Gokula Ashtami, is celebrated in the Hindu month of Sravana. Hindus believe Krishna to be an avatar (incarnation) of Lord Vishnu, the creator of the universe and the second deity, as the Preserver, of the Hindu trinity; the first deity is Lord Brahma, the creator, and the third is Lord Shiva, the destroyer. Hindus believe that it was Krishna who delivered the deeply philosophical message of the Bhagavad Gita (“The Divine Song”), one of the world’s religious classics.

The Maha Shivrati Festival honors Lord Shiva, the Destroyer of the universe and the third deity of the Hindu trinity. Maha Shivratri, also called Shiv Chaturdashi, falls on the 13th or 14th day in the dark half of the month of Falgun (February–March in the Western calendar). The name Maha Shivratri means “the great night of Shiva,” and the celebrations of this festival take place mostly at night. A fast is observed during the day and a vigil is kept throughout the night. The Shiva lingam (the phallic symbol of Shiva, which depicts the creative force) is worshipped all through the night by bathing it with curd, milk, rosewater, and honey, and by ceremonially chanting Om Namah Shivaya (“glory be to Shiva”).

The Festival of Makar Sankranti, also called Pongal or Paush, Sankranti traditionally corresponds with the start of the sun’s northward journey, when it appears to move from the astrological sign of Sagittarius to Makar, Capricorn, changing its direction from one zodiacal constellation to the next. Sankranti means “to move from one place to another.” Every time the sun transits from one zodiac constellation to the next, is a sankranti. There are 12 signs of the zodiac, so there are also 12 sankrantis in a year. Each sankranti is named on the basis of where the sun is in relation to the zodiacal signs, and each one has its own significance. However, two of the sankranti are extremely important: Mesh (Aries) Sankranti and Makar (Capricorn) Sankranti. Mesh Sankranti is important because the solar year begins when the sun moves into the sign of Aries, the Ram, at the vernal equinox, one of the two times in a year when the day and night are equal in length. Makar Sankranti is the Hindu celebration of the Winter Solstice, the time when the days start to become longer and the nights shorter. This festival has been observed since the Aryans came to the Indian subcontinent, and it is still considered a favorable day by Hindus because it marks the end of winter. Makar Sankranti is possibly the only Hindu festival celebrated on the same day every year because, unlike other Hindu festivals, its celebration is scheduled according to the solar calendar.

Ninth day of Shukla Paksh (the bright fortnight) in Chaitra, the first month of the Hindu lunar calendar

According to legends and myths connected with Hinduism, Vishnu (who is the second deity of the sacred Hindu trinity—with Brahma and Shiva—and the preserver of the universe) made his appearance on Earth at various times, in diverse forms and manifestations (avatars), to restore righteousness, noble virtues, and peace to the world. The legends further narrate that during the second age of the Earth (calculated at around 3000 B.C.E.), Ravana, the demon king of Lanka (modern Sri Lanka), had been creating havoc on Earth. Because of a boon that Brahma had given him, Ravana could not be killed by any god or goddess. So Vishnu assumed a human form in order to redeem humanity and was born into this world as the son of King Dasharatha and his first queen, Kaushalya, who ruled over the kingdom of Ayodhya. Lord Rama, the epitome of all noble virtues and lofty ideals, is regarded as the seventh incarnation of Vishnu. As was preordained, Rama annihilated Ravana. His birth is commemorated annually with great joy on the ninth day following the new moon in the shukla paksh (the bright fortnight) of the Indian lunar month of Chaitra (in April on the Gregorian calendar).

See also Volume I: BANGLADESH; BHUTAN; FIJI; GUYANA; INDIA

See also Volume II: MALAYSIA; MAURITIUS; NEPAL; SRI LANKA; SURINAME

See also Volume III: DIWALI; DUSSEHRA; HOLI; JANMASHTAMI; MAHA SHIVRATRI; MAKAR SANKRANTI

Further Reading

A. L. Basham, The Origins and Development of Classical Hinduism, Kenneth G. Zysk, ed. (New York: Oxford University Press, 1991); Eknath Easwaran, The Bhagavad-Gita (Petaluma, Calif.: Nilgiri Press, 1985); Eknath Easwaran, The Upanishads (Petaluma, Calif.: Nilgiri Press, 1987); Gavin D. Flood, An Introduction to Hinduism (New York: Cambridge University Press, 1996); Kim Knott, Hinduism: A Very Short Introduction (New York: Oxford University Press, 2000); V. Krishnamurthy, Essentials of Hinduism (New Delhi: Narosa Publishing, 1989); Bruce M. Sullivan, The A to Z of Hinduism (Lanham, Md.: Scarecrow Press, 2001); Bruce M. Sullivan, Historical Dictionary of Hinduism (Lanham, Md.: Scarecrow Press, 1997).

Holi

FACT FILE

Observed in	Countries with Hindu populations, especially India, Mauritius, Nepal, Bangladesh, and Sri Lanka
Observed on	Full Moon day of Phalguna, the 12th month of the Hindu calendar
Observed by	Hindus

Introduction

Among India's numerous religious festivals Holi is easily the most colorful and exciting, and children keenly await it. Falling on the full Moon day of the Hindu month of Phalguna, Holi is observed with great passion throughout India and is one of the most popular festivals there. Many Indian films have portrayed the vibrant colors of Holi on the silver screen. It marks the end of winter and the beginning of spring, as well as the flaming end of the demoness Holika; it is a celebration of happiness and hope.

In some places in northern India Holi can last up to a week. In the state of Manipur in northeast India, it is a six-day festival. However, traditionally it is a two-day festival; Dhulendi, the second day of Holi, is a holiday celebrated all over India as the Festival of Colors.

During Holi old and the young alike gather in the streets to smear each other with colored powder or throw colored powder and water on each other. It is possibly the most joyous of all Hindu festivals, one that delights people of all ages and classes.

Origins and History

The festival of Holi originated in the ancient Hindu legend of Hiranyakashipu. It celebrates the triumph of good over evil. According to Hindu mythology there was a demon king in India named Hiranyakashipu, who wanted to avenge the death of his younger brother, also a demon, who had been slain by Vishnu (one of the trinity of gods in Hinduism). In order to fight Vishnu, Hiranyakashipu sought to become the ruler of Earth, heaven, and the underworld, performing harsh penance and prayers for numerous years to please Brahma (the all-powerful creator) in order to obtain this power from him. Finally the king was given a boon by Brahma.

Empowered by the boon Hiranyakashipu felt he was invincible.

The arrogant king ordered everyone in his kingdom to worship him instead of God. But the king's young son Prahalad was a devotee of Vishnu. Going against his father's wishes, Prahalad constantly prayed to Vishnu. Unable to make Prahalad change his ways, the demon king decided to kill him. He asked his sister Holika (from whom the name of the festival is derived) to help him because she was supposedly impervious to fire. They planned to burn Prahalad to death. So Holika sat on a burning pyre with Prahalad on her lap. Yet Prahalad emerged unharmed by the flames and Holika, the demoness, was burned to death. The bonfire on the eve of the festival celebrates that event.

According to Hindu belief, Krishna, an avatar (reincarnation) of Vishnu, is believed to have popularized the colorful tradition of Holi. The origin lies in Krishna's boyhood. Krishna used to indulge in pranks—his mischievous nature is legendary—by dousing the village girls with colors and water. Initially the girls were upset, but they were so fond of the boy that his popularity overcame their anger.

Fun Fact

Hindus in Suriname, Guyana, and Trinidad and Tobago call this festival Holi Phagwa.

The Holi Bonfire

The Eve of Holi, also called Choti Holi ("Small Holi") is the time when bonfires are lit on street corners. It is believed that bonfires drive away evil spirits; they also symbolize the death of the demoness Holika. The bonfires are generally made from cowdung cakes, logs of wood, honey, ghee (semiclarified butter), and harvest offerings. Music, dances, and traditional stories are performed around the bonfires.

Holi Origin Stories

1. When Krishna was young he often complained to his mother Yashoda about his consort Radha's fair complexion and his own dark skin. Yashoda told him to put color on Radha's face and watch how the color of her skin changed. This seems one of the more pertinent legends about the beginning of Holi celebrations.
2. Another origin story, one that explains the practice of throwing water on other people, claims that the monkey god Hanuman succeeded in swallowing the Sun. Because the people disliked living in darkness, the other gods suggested that they smear color on each other and laugh. When the people squirted each other with colored water, Hanuman laughed because he thought it was such a funny sight. When he laughed, however, the Sun flew out of his mouth and light was restored.
3. Yet another tale attributes the origin of Holi to the Mongol emperor Akbar (r. 1556–1605), who started the holiday because he thought that people would look like equals if they were covered with color.

Although he was a powerful emperor, Akbar never learned to read because he had dyslexia, the inability to acquire and process language.

Other boys joined in and made it a popular sport in that village. With time the tradition stretched to all regions of the country, and, having survived through the ages, it has become a community festival for everyone. The Holi play of Krishna is documented in numerous ancient paintings, sculptures, murals, scriptures, and literary works found throughout the subcontinent.

The best part about the festival is that anger and offenses seem to dissolve with one energetic shout of "Bura na mano, holi hai," or "Do not be angry, it is Holi." This boisterous shout is part of the festival's long tradition. In accordance with the custom of the festival, people collect around bonfires on the evening before the festival day. These bonfires are burned to send away the cold dark winter nights and usher in spring. People sing and dance around the fire to celebrate Prahalad's miraculous survival and the death of Holika, his wicked aunt. People take cinders from this fire to rekindle their own house fires.

School students, smeared with colored powder, laugh during celebrations of Holi in Allahabad, India. This exuberant festival, originally held to celebrate the fertility of the land, is also associated with the immortal love of Hindu god Krishna and his consort, Radha. (AP Photo/Rajesh Kumar Singh)

In some places, barley seeds are roasted in the fire, and it is thought that the yield of the coming harvest season can be foretold by reading the future in the roasted seeds or noting the direction the flames take. The remnants of the fire are considered to have curative properties. The morning after the bonfire is Dhulendi, the real Festival of Colors, when children and adults splash each other with colored powder and water. In earlier times, only herbal products and natural colors made from flowers were used; although artificial colors are now cheap and available, old practices seem to be making a comeback.

See also Volume I: BANGLADESH, BHUTAN; FIJI; GUYANA; INDIA

See also Volume II: MALAYSIA; MAURITIUS; NEPAL; SRI LANKA; SURINAME

See also Volume III: HINDUISM

Further Reading

S. M. Natesa Sastri, Hindu Feasts, Fasts, and Ceremonies (New Delhi: Asian Educational Services, 1988); Chand S. Seewoosurn, Hindu Festivals in Mauritius (Quatre Bornes, Mauritius: Editions Capucines, 1995); Muriel Marion Underhill, The Hindu Religious Year (New Delhi: Asian Educational Services, 1991).

Fun Fact

In Bangladesh Holi is called Dol-Jatra, the Swing Festival, because a doll representing the god Krishna is kept in a swinging cradle (dol).

Holy Saturday

FACT FILE

Observed in	Saturday before Easter
Observed on	Countries with Christian populations
Observed by	Christians

Fun Fact

Easter Matins and Easter Mass were both brief services out of consideration for the fatigue of those who had maintained the Vigil.

Introduction

Since the Jewish day of rest is Saturday, Holy Saturday is regarded as the second Sabbath after Creation. It is the day Jesus lay in the tomb before rising from the dead on Easter Sunday. This is considered the final day of Holy Week, which begins with Palm Sunday and includes Maundy Thursday and Good Friday. Because it marks the threshold between death and resurrection, it is a day of silence and contemplation for devout Christians.

Jesus of Nazareth was the teacher whose life and words provided the foundation for Christianity. The promised miracle of his Resurrection is amplified by this sacred day of waiting. The church waits as the Virgin Mary once did, in faith. She is both Theotokos (Mother of God) and the symbol of the church.

Origins and History

As Jesus lay in the tomb, the Pharisees and others asked Pontius Pilate to seal it, fearing that his disciples would remove the body and claim a “Resurrection.” The tomb was, indeed, sealed, and guards posted. As the scriptures tell us, Jesus went to the world of the dead and redeemed them with his own death.

Holy Saturday is part of the Easter Triduum that begins on the evening of Maundy Thursday and concludes with the evening service on Easter. The Easter Triduum is a fifth- and sixth-century practice preceded by the Easter Biduum—a two-day period of fasting that included the Easter Vigil. These are “the days of silence” or the “still days,” and Good Friday and Holy Saturday are aliturgical days: The clergy cannot receive Communion, and there is no Mass because these are the days that Jesus was taken away from humanity. Holy Saturday (together with Good Friday) are the only times on the Christian calendar that have no Mass in the liturgy.

Four Kinds of Holy Water

1. Plain Holy Water: A little salt is added to this water, which is always to be found in the font at the entrance to the church. It is also used for aspersions (sprinkling on the congregation).
2. Baptismal Holy Water: A little chrism (holy oil consecrated by the bishop) and the oil of catechumens (holy oil used to baptize new Christians) have been added to water. It is used only for church baptisms.
3. Gregorian Water: This is water with a little wine, salt, and ashes added. It is used by bishops to consecrate churches.
4. Easter Water: This is the holy water given to churchgoers for use at home. Believers use it to bless their homes, food, and family members. This is also the water they sprinkle on one another during the festivities of Easter Monday.

The fourth century saw the earliest celebrations of Holy Week, the last week of Jesus' earthly life. Originally, all church services were suspended during the day. This was a day of meditation, of remembering the Christian martyrs as well as dead relatives and dear ones, of awaiting the Resurrection. In the early years of the church, this was the only Saturday marked out for fasting. The fast was strict, lasting 40 hours before Easter. Different countries observed different schedules to break the fast, but, traditionally, it was broken at dawn.

From the first to the sixth or seventh centuries, the Easter Vigil, or Easter Watch, began soon after sundown and continued through the night so that the Alleluia (or Hallelujah) could be said at the moment of Resurrection. (According to one estimated calculation, this took place on April 17, 30 C.E.) The Vigil began with the blessing of the new fire (which symbolized the church), and the lighting of the Paschal candle of pure beeswax (representing Jesus) that would remain lit until his Ascension 40 days after Easter. The beauty of the night can be gauged by St. Cyril of Jerusalem's remark that the night became as bright as day. Toward the end of the fourth century and onward, the Roman Emperor Constantine (d. 337) made the twilight hours even more majestic by ordering lamps and torches to illumine not only the basilicas but also the houses and streets. Within the church, the congregation sat in silence, breaking it only to join in the chanting and the singing of psalms. New adherents—catechumens—were baptized. This day, and the Vigil of the Pentecost, were the only days when converts could be baptized. It was not until the Middle Ages that Holy Saturday was established worldwide as a holy day.

The practice of lighting the lamps at twilight was introduced into the Gallican Church (Church of France) in the eighth century. This was also the period when the ceremonies were shifted to the afternoon and, soon enough, to the morning. Consequently, the day that had hitherto been without any special service, apart from the Vigil, was accorded other religious observances, depending on whether it is an Eastern Orthodox or Western Church.

Holy Saturday recalls the silence of the tomb at the same time that it looks ahead to the promise of life. This aspect is reflected in the practices of contemplation and prayer and in the preparations for the Easter feast.

In Roman Catholic churches, the altar is bare and Holy Communion and Penance are provided only to those on the verge of death. The proximity to Easter notwithstanding, this is not a day of joy. The church stands watch over Jesus' tomb just as the Virgin Mary did, waiting for the Resurrection. The Easter Vigil will begin at 10 P.M., and a Mass will be held at midnight.

Basilicas

The word basilica is derived from the Greek basilike stoa, which denoted a Roman-style public building. Basilicas became prominent in the second century. Ecclesiastical basilicas are those that have been given special rights by a pope, and these, too, can be categorized either as major (assigned to the patriarchs) or minor (assigned to bishops).

Major basilica

St. Peter's in the Vatican
St. John Lateran
St. Paul Outside the Walls
St. Mary Major
St. Lawrence Outside the Walls

Assigned to:

Patriarch of Constantinople
Papacy
Patriarch of Alexandria
Patriarch of Antioch
Patriarch of Jerusalem

Water is blessed during the Vigil, and this holy water will be used for baptisms and other purposes of the church. Participants will also be given some to take home for their own use.

In Greek Orthodox Churches the service recalls the act of Joseph of Arimathea wrapping Jesus' body, and the stress is, as always, on the joy of the Resurrection rather than on Jesus' death. For example, the Kontakion (a part of the liturgy of the Orthodox Church) states that, "This Sabbath is blessed above all others, for Christ, having fallen asleep, will rise on the third day."

The service also recalls Jesus' descent into Hades, a prison for the souls of all who died, not to be confused with hell. Inevitably, the divine nature of Jesus overwhelmed the place, the gates broke, as did the chains that held the souls, and the dead were also resurrected.

See also Volume I: ANDORRA; ANGOLA; ANTIGUA AND BARBUDA; ARGENTINA; ARMENIA; AUSTRALIA; AUSTRIA; BELARUS; BELGIUM; BELIZE; BOLIVIA; BOSNIA AND HERZEGOVINA; BRAZIL; BULGARIA; BURUNDI; CANADA; CAPE VERDE; CHILE; COLOMBIA; CONGO, DEMOCRATIC REPUBLIC OF THE; COSTA RICA; CROATIA; CYPRUS; CZECH REPUBLIC; DENMARK; DOMINICA; DOMINICAN REPUBLIC; ECUADOR; EL SALVADOR; EQUATORIAL GUINEA; ESTONIA; FINLAND; FRANCE; GEORGIA; GERMANY; GREECE; GRENADA; GUATEMALA; HAITI; HONDURAS; HUNGARY; ICELAND; IRELAND; ITALY; KIRIBATI

Fun Fact

The liturgical name of Holy Saturday is Sabbatum Sanctum, but it has other names as well: Angelic Night, Vigil of Easter, Grand Saturday, Great Saturday, Easter Even, and Black Saturday.

See also Volume II: LATVIA; LIECHTENSTEIN; LITHUANIA; LUXEMBOURG; MACEDONIA; MALTA; MEXICO; MICRONESIA, FEDERATED STATES OF; MOLDOVA; MONACO; NAMIBIA; NEW ZEALAND; NICARAGUA; NORWAY; PALAU; PANAMA; PARAGUAY; PERU; PHILIPPINES; POLAND; PORTUGAL; ROMANIA; RUSSIA; RWANDA; ST. LUCIA; SAN MARINO; SERBIA AND MONTENEGRO; SEYCHELLES; SLOVAKIA; SLOVENIA; SPAIN; SWEDEN; SWITZERLAND; TRINIDAD AND TOBAGO; UGANDA; UKRAINE; UNITED KINGDOM; UNITED STATES; URUGUAY; VATICAN CITY; VENEZUELA

See also Volume III: CHRISTIANITY; EASTER; GOOD FRIDAY; HOLY WEEK; LENT; MAUNDY THURSDAY; PALM SUNDAY

Further Reading

Michael Baigent, Richard Leigh, and Henry Lincoln, Holy Blood, Holy Grail (New York: Dell, 1983); Alan E. Lewis, Between Cross and Resurrection: A Theology of Holy Saturday (Grand Rapids, Mich.: Eerdmans, 2003); Carlo Maria Martini, Our Lady of Holy Saturday: Awaiting the Resurrection with Mary and the Disciples (Liguori, Mo.: Liguori Publications, 2002); William E. Wallace, The Sistine Chapel (New York: Garland, 1995).

Holy Week

FACT FILE

Observed in	Mainly countries with Roman Catholic populations
Observed on	Last week of Lent
Observed by	Roman Catholics

Introduction

The last week of Lent, which is a 40-day period of fasting and abstinence that precedes Easter, is traditionally known as Holy Week. It commemorates the last week of Jesus' mortal life and includes Palm Sunday, Maundy (or Holy) Thursday, Good Friday, and Holy Saturday. Easter Sunday—the day of Jesus' Resurrection—is not a part of Holy Week. Rather, the week anticipates the Easter celebration.

According to Christian theology, Jesus is the savior of humanity, the Son of God and second member in the Holy Trinity of the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, and the teacher whose life and words provide the foundation for the religion. It is his life and death that Christians remember during this week.

Origins and History

Holy Week has been a period of intensified religious devotion since the time of the Apostles, but official status was accorded it in the fourth century when every day of the week preceding Easter was considered holy. Until the fourth century Easter was the earliest Christian holy day observed and considered the most important, together with Epiphany.

This new perception was reflected in the opinion of St. Athanasius of Alexandria (c. 296–373 C.E), when he referred to this week in 329 as a symbol of Creation and mentioned the practice of fasting during these six days. (The fast was usually broken on Thursday for Communion in church.)

“Peregrinatio Artheriae” (“The Pilgrimage of Aetheria”), the nun Aetheria's account of her pilgrimage to the Holy Land in the years 381 to 385, describes the observances of Holy Week. She relates the reenactment of events, first at Bethany, where Jesus' feet were anointed, and then at Jerusalem, recalling Jesus' triumphant entrance into the city on Palm Sunday. People gathered at the

The Pilgrimage of Aetheria

Aetheria, a nun living in the fourth century, went on a three-year pilgrimage to the Holy Land. Her letter to the other nuns in her convent described events she witnessed there. Most parts of Aetheria's account were lost, and only a three-month fragment remains. In the 12th century, however, the monk Valerius provided a brief reconstruction of what had been lost. This is the document known as “The Pilgrimage of Aetheria.”

Mount of Olives to pray, and then all returned to Jerusalem with the bishop, carrying palms and olive branches. The pilgrims who visited Jerusalem returned home with these customs. Holy Week practices reached Spain in the fifth century and England and France in the seventh century. The Wednesday and Friday fasts also became popular, obeying Jesus' command to fast on Wednesday in memory of his betrayal and on Friday to commemorate his suffering on the Cross.

The Thursday evening, Friday, and Saturday of Holy Week form the Easter Triduum. A triduum is the three days before a Roman Catholic festival, a time of special prayers and observances. Here it begins on the evening of Maundy Thursday with the sharing of the Eucharist and concludes with the evening prayers on Easter Sunday.

The days that make up Holy Week possess a significance far beyond that of the individual events associated with each day. No one day or event can be seen in isolation because each contains within itself the past, present, and the future. For example the welcome Jesus received on his arrival in Jerusalem on Palm Sunday represents the triumph of his teachings, his past miracles, and the beginning of the end as humanity understands it (because Jesus

Fun Fact

Some opinions hold Lent to be over on Thursday evening, but the traditional and prevalent view regards Holy Week as part of Lent.

Jerusalem

Jerusalem, the city described as “the place where heaven and Earth meet,” was originally a village built on a hill. The first people to live there were the Canaanites, perhaps better known as the Phoenicians or alternatively the Amorites. The name Urushalim is first found on Egyptian statues circa 2500 B.C.E. Urushalim, in fact, is a word of Canaanite-Amorite derivation. The name Urushalim is made up of the prefix uru, which means “founded by,” and the suffix salem or shalem, which is the name of a Canaanite-Amorite deity Shalem, the god of twilight. This evidence is reinforced by tablets found in Elba, Syria, dating back to 3000 B.C.E., where the worship of a god named Shalem in a city called Uruksalem is mentioned. The old name of the city

Urushalim figures also in the Egyptian texts called Texts of Proscription of XII dynasty (1991–1786 B.C.E.).

The city has had many names and a long history in several religions. In 1400 B.C.E. it was referred to as Beth-Shalem and as Salem in Genesis; it has also been called Zion, Mount Moriah, City of David, and Jebus. Jebus is the city that King David won in 1004 from the Jebusites, who lived in the area beginning around 2000 B.C.E. It is also the city where King Solomon built the First Temple (Jewish) and the place from which Muhammad ascended to heaven. Another name for Israel, Canaan, is mentioned in what are known as the prophetic documents of Mari, the ancient city (2400) of the Sumerians, rediscovered in 1933 C.E.

would die in Jerusalem only five days later), and the true finality of the Resurrection. Similarly the Crucifixion on Good Friday represents the culmination of Jesus’ Incarnation, his mortal death, and the promise of his Resurrection on Easter Sunday.

This is a special observance in many countries, and processions are held throughout Holy Week. In countries that have a strong Catholic presence, the events of Jesus’ last few days are reenacted, and there are more than a few mock crucifixions. The color purple is the color of the church and therefore the color of the first part of Holy Week. On the days between the Crucifixion and the Resurrection, black predominates.

See also Volume I: ANDORRA; ANGOLA; ARGENTINA; AUSTRIA; BELGIUM; BELIZE; BOLIVIA; BRAZIL; BURUNDI; CAPE VERDE; CHILE; COLOMBIA; CONGO, DEMOCRATIC REPUBLIC OF THE; COSTA RICA; CROATIA; CZECH REPUBLIC; DOMINICA; DOMINICAN REPUBLIC; ECUADOR; EL SALVADOR; EQUATORIAL GUINEA; FRANCE; GERMANY; GRENADA; GUATEMALA; HAITI; HONDURAS; HUNGARY; IRELAND; ITALY; KIRIBATI

See also Volume II: LIECHTENSTEIN; LITHUANIA; LUXEMBOURG; MALTA; MEXICO; MICRONESIA, FEDERATED STATES OF; MONACO; NICARAGUA; PALAU; PANAMA; PARAGUAY; PERU; PHILIPPINES; POLAND; PORTUGAL; RWANDA; ST. LUCIA; SAN MARINO; SEYCHELLES; SLOVAKIA; SLOVENIA; SPAIN; SWITZERLAND; TRINIDAD AND TOBAGO; UGANDA; URUGUAY; VATICAN CITY; VENEZUELA

See also Volume III: CHRISTIANITY; EASTER; GOOD FRIDAY; HOLY SATURDAY; LENT; MAUNDY THURSDAY; PALM SUNDAY

Two girls dressed as angels wait to participate in the Good Friday procession in a small village south of Quito, Ecuador. Holy Week, the last week of Lent, leads up to the celebration of Easter. (AP Photo/Dolores Ochoa R.)

Further Reading

Geoffrey Duncan, Let Justice Roll Down: A Worship Resource for Lent, Holy Week, and Easter (Cleveland: Pilgrim Press, 2003); George Wells Ferguson, Signs & Symbols in Christian Art (New York: Oxford University Press, 1989); Hans W. Frei, The Identity of Jesus Christ (Eugene, Ore.: Wipf & Stock Publishers, 1997); Eric James, Who Is This?: Holy Week Meditations and Other Sermons, 1998–2000 (New York: Mowbray, 2001); Harold W. Rast, Susan K. Hedahl, et al., eds., New Proclamation: Year C, 2003–2004, Advent through Holy Week (Minneapolis: Fortress Press, 2003).

Immaculate Conception

FACT FILE

Observed in	Countries with significant Roman Catholic populations
Observed on	December 8
Observed by	Roman Catholics

Introduction

The doctrine of the Immaculate Conception is a Roman Catholic dogma affirming that, from the time of its creation, the Virgin Mary's soul was free from original sin, because she had to be pure in order to give birth to Jesus. Despite conflicting scholarly beliefs, the Roman Catholic Church has, time after time, reaffirmed the principle of the Immaculate Conception. The festival was observed in the Eastern Orthodox Church as early as the fifth century; in the Western church the feast was observed from the seventh century on. St. Bernard of Clairvaux (1090–1153 C.E.), the French monastic reformer, and the celebrated Italian theologian and philosopher St. Thomas Aquinas (born, Thomas D'Aquino, 1225/27–1274), opposed this doctrine in the 12th and 13th centuries, respectively. But the doctrine found support from many quarters, including the Scottish theologian John Duns Scotus (?1270–1308), in the 13th century. When the controversy over the doctrine of the Immaculate Conception gained impetus in the 19th century in 1854 Pope Pius IX (r. 1846–78) issued a decree proclaiming the Immaculate Conception as an “infallible” dogma crucial for the belief of the worldwide church. Under this doctrine—the Feast of the Immaculate Conception—the Blessed Virgin Mary is revered as the patron saint of the United States, Corsica, and Portugal. It is celebrated on December 8.

Origins and History

The Roman Catholic doctrine of the Immaculate Conception asserts that Mary, the mother of Jesus, was protected by God from original sin at the time of her conception. Original sin is that doctrine, shared

Immaculate Conception and Incarnation of Jesus

There is a common misunderstanding regarding the denotation of the term Immaculate Conception. Generally, people (Catholics included) consider this to be the conception of Jesus by Mary. Jesus' conception by Mary is more appropriately called the Incarnation.

by most Christian churches, which claims that the sin of Adam and Eve (the first humans) in the Garden of Eden permanently tainted the nature of the human race, in such a way that all human beings since then are inherently predisposed to sin, and they have no power to overcome this without God's help.

The doctrine goes on to state that God wanted the birth of Jesus to be free of sin. Thus he made Mary utterly devoid of original sin so that she could conceive Jesus. The doctrine of the Immaculate Conception asserts that Mary also lived a life totally free from sin. Mary's parents Anne and Joachim were married 20 years without having a child. Joachim felt humiliated because of this situation, although he could empathize with his wife, who longed for a child. Their relationship was under great strain. One evening he did not come home. Anne overheard some women whispering that Joachim was in the temple, praying. She, too, decided to pray to God to help them. For a long time she cried and prayed to God to grant that, in spite of her infertility, she should still have a good relationship with her husband.

As Anne was weeping, an angel named Emmerich appeared before her and told her that God

Cathedral of the Immaculate Conception

Cathedral of the Immaculate Conception is the collective and shared name of numerous Catholic cathedrals, especially in the United States. Many of these churches have received the honor of being sanctified as basilicas (a large church that has been accorded some special rights by the pope).

had heard her prayers. He told her to go to the temple the next day to meet her husband under the Golden Gate. Anne felt happy and terrified at the same time. She went home and told the servants to arrange a trip to the temple the following morning. While Anne was asleep, Emmerich appeared again in the figure of a shining youth. Stretching his hands over her, he wrote in big letters on the wall “M-A-R-Y,” before disappearing. About the same time, an angel met Joachim, anointed him on the forehead, and told him to meet his wife at the Golden Gate. When Joachim and Anne met, they embraced and were overjoyed about their good fortune. This is how the doctrine maintains Mary was conceived without original sin. This belief did not become Catholic dogma until 1854.

The Feast of the Immaculate Conception of Mary has been observed in the United Kingdom since the ninth century. Eadmer (?1064–?1124), an English Benedictine monk and historian, played a key role in its propagation. The Normans curbed the celebration, after their victory at Hastings in 1066, but it lived on in the public’s mind. It was discarded by St. Bonaventure (1221–74) who, while teaching in Paris, called the doctrine of the Immaculate Conception a “foreign doctrine,” because of its association with England. Alexander of Hales (d. 1245), a prominent British scholar and philosopher, and Bernard of Clairvaux also opposed this doctrine. The Oxford Franciscans (13th century), William of Ware and John Duns Scotus, in particular, defended the doctrine notwithstanding the opposition of other scholars.

Pope Sixtus IV (r. 1471–84) stood by it and established the feast in 1477, with an appropriate Mass and office, to be observed on December 8. In 1483, Pope Sixtus IV gave Roman Catholics the choice to believe whether Mary was subject to original sin or not; this liberty was further enforced by the Council of Trent (a council intermittently held between 1545 and 1563 as a response to the Protestant Reformation). The Catholic public was staunchly behind giving Mary this characteristic, but the issue was so touchy that it was not until 1854 that Pope Pius IX, with almost unanimous backing from Catholic bishops, felt confident enough to declare the doctrine as infallible. Before proclaiming the doctrine Pope Pius IX took steps to ascertain whether the church agreed with his opinion and questioned 603 bishops about whether he should declare the Immaculate Conception infallible; 546 (90%) answered in the affirmative.

The Roman Catholic Church believes that the dogma of Immaculate Conception is supported by the scriptures and also by the writings of many of the church fathers, either directly or indirectly. Catholic theology maintains that, because Jesus was born to the Virgin Mary, she had to be wholly free of sin to bear Jesus, whom Christians believe to be the Son of God.

The Feast of the Immaculate Conception on December 8 is considered a Holy Day of Obligation in the Roman Catholic Church, and it is an official holiday in countries with predominantly Catholic populations. Before this doctrine became popular, December 8 was observed as the Conception of Mary, since September 8 (nine months later) is the Feast of Mary’s birth.

The doctrine is not totally accepted in either Protestant or Orthodox Churches. Protestants reject the doctrine and do not consider this dogmatic theology to be authentic, since it is not explicitly mentioned in the Bible. Protestant thinkers of earlier eras were more devoted to Mary than their successors. The pioneer of the Protestant school, Martin Luther, for example, was a believer in the theory of Immaculate Conception.

Protestants and members of the Eastern Orthodox Churches opine that this doctrine contradicts the belief of the redemption of humanity by Jesus, which is the basis of the Christian faith. If the Virgin Mary was cleansed before Jesus’ birth, it would make his reason for being born—redeeming humanity since all are born sinners—redundant. Orthodox believers are of the opinion that the doctrine that the Virgin Mary needed cleansing prior to the Incarnation is superfluous. Theologians of the Eastern Orthodox Churches believe that the references to Mary’s purity do not refer to a condition preceding her birth but rather to her conduct after that.

See also Volume I: ANDORRA; ANGOLA; ARGENTINA; AUSTRIA; BELGIUM; BELIZE; BOLIVIA; BRAZIL; BURUNDI; CAPE VERDE; CHILE; COLOMBIA; CONGO, DEMOCRATIC REPUBLIC OF THE; COSTA RICA; CROATIA; CZECH REPUBLIC; DOMINICA; DOMINICAN REPUBLIC; ECUADOR; EL SALVADOR; EQUATORIAL GUINEA; FRANCE; GERMANY; GRENADA; GUATEMALA; HAITI; HONDURAS; HUNGARY; IRELAND; ITALY; KIRIBATI

See also Volume II: LIECHTENSTEIN; LITHUANIA; LUXEMBOURG; MALTA; MEXICO; MICRONESIA, FEDERATED STATES OF; MONACO; NICARAGUA; PALAU; PANAMA; PARAGUAY; PERU; PHILIPPINES; POLAND; PORTUGAL; RWANDA; ST. LUCIA; SAN MARINO; SEYCHELLES; SLOVAKIA; SLOVENIA; SPAIN; SWITZERLAND; TRINIDAD AND TOBAGO; UGANDA; URUGUAY; VATICAN CITY; VENEZUELA

See also Volume III: CHRISTIANITY

Further Reading

Paul Elouard and André Breton, The Immaculate Conception (London: Atlas, 1990); Edward D. O'Connor, ed., The Dogma of the Immaculate Conception: History and Significance (Notre Dame, Ind.: University of Notre Dame Press, 1958); Wilfred P. Schoenberg,

The Immaculate Conception of the Mother of God: An Exposition (Washington, D.C.: Pastoral Press, 1988); Berard Vogt, Duns Scotus, Defender of the Immaculate Conception: A Historical Dogmatic Study (Paterson, N.J.: St. Anthony Guild Press, 1955).

Islam

FACT FILE

Observed in	Countries with Muslim populations
World Population	About 1.3 billion (2005 est.)
Place of Origin	Saudi Arabia

Introduction

Founded in the seventh century C.E., the religion of Islam (from Arabic al-islam, meaning “submission to God”) has gradually spread around the world, becoming the second most popular religious faith in the world and the fastest growing. A Muslim is a follower of Islam. Muslim is an Arabic word that refers to anyone who submits him- or herself to the will of God. A Muslim is, therefore, any person, anywhere in the world, who gives obedience, allegiance, and loyalty to God and strives to live in accordance with God’s laws. Islam is also called Muhammadanism, taken directly from the name of the founder of the Islamic faith, the prophet Muhammad (570–632). Considered the messenger and the final prophet of Allah (“God”), he is the central human figure of this religion.

Religious historians believe Islam was established in 622 by Muhammad. Muhammad was orphaned when he was six years old and brought up by his uncle. He was a shepherd in his childhood. Muhammad’s uncle took him to Syria in a caravan before his teenage years. In his youth he served as a camel driver on the trade routes between Arabia and Syria. Muhammad later managed caravans on the merchants’ behalf. He came into contact with people of diverse religious beliefs on his travels and scrutinized and learned about Christianity, Judaism, and other religious groups, including the animistic religion of the Bedouin.

Islam started in Mecca (in present-day Saudi Arabia), when, according to Islamic beliefs, the angel Jibril (Gabriel) visited Muhammad so that he would know and declare the will of Allah. The sacred book of the Muslims, the Koran, is the foundation of Islam and the final authority in dogma and belief, in jurisprudence, worship, ethics, and in social, family, and individual conduct. The Hadith records the reflective statements of Muhammad, compiled by his followers after his death in 632. Muhammad never claimed divinity, and Muslims do not worship him as a divine being. In fact, the strict monotheism (belief in one God) of Islam will not allow for the worship of any other being but Allah. This monotheistic outlook stems from Abraham, the great patriarch of Israel, who is widely considered the first Muslim.

Followers of Islam do not regard their religion as completely detached from Christianity or Judaism. They hold fast to the authority of the prophets of Judaism and Christianity. In fact they claim to worship the God of the Bible but profess Islam to be God’s ultimate revelation.

There are two branches of Islam: Shia and Sunni, and an independent branch, Sufism, which may predate Islam.

The division between the Shia and Sunni sects of Islam emerged out of a difference of opinion over who was the legitimate temporal and spiritual successor to Muhammad after his death in 632. Known as caliphs, the successors were both religious and political heads of a theocracy set up by Muhammad. After the fourth caliph Ali (the prophet’s cousin) was assassinated in 661, Ali’s supporters argued that it had been his right to succeed Muhammad and that the preceding three caliphs (Abu Bakr, 632–634; Umar, 634–644; Uthman, 644–656) had been usurpers. They upheld that by divine right the caliphate belonged exclusively to those directly descended from the prophet, and therefore only the descendants of Ali and Fatima (Muhammad’s daughter and Ali’s wife) were entitled to rule the Muslim community. This disagreement led to the famous Battle of Karbala in 680, where Hussein, the son of the recently assassinated Ali, was decapitated, and his head carried to Damascus impaled on a spear. This battle is remembered by Shia Muslims on the holiday called Ashura.

Ali’s followers were called Shiites (the party of Ali, or shiatu Ali, later simply Shia), and often refer to themselves as abl al bayt (“people of the house” [of the prophet]). Although there are specific theological differences between the Shia and the Sunni, they agree on the core fundamentals of Islam—the five pillars—and recognize each other as Muslims. The great majority of the Muslim community followed the sunna (way), rejecting the Shia doctrine about the succession.

The Sunni are a 90 percent majority of the Islam population and are regarded as the mainstream traditionalists. Their comfort in pursuing their faith within secular societies has allowed them to adjust to a variety of cultures, at the same time following their three sources of law: the Koran, Hadith, and consensus of Muslims (their belief that Muslims should be democratically governed by ijma [consensus] through the caliph, their elected head of state). Sunnis call themselves najiyah, “those who are being saved.”

Origins and History

The early Muslim traders tended to prefer land-based commerce as opposed to maritime trade. As a consequence Islam spread initially west into Syria, Egypt, north along the eastern shore of the Mediterranean Sea, and northeast into Iraq, Iran, and parts of central Asia. By 750 C.E., however, Islam had covered the whole of North Africa from Egypt to Morocco, most of the Iberian Peninsula, all of the Middle East, and much of central Asia. By the 10th century Islam was the major religion of much of the civilized world. It had spread over three continents, from the Pyrenees and Siberia in north and western Europe to China and New Guinea in the east. By 1550 Islam had reached Vienna in Europe. By the 18th century there were three Muslim empires: the Ottoman in Turkey, the Middle East, and the Mediterranean; the Safavid in Iran; and the Mogul in India.

Christendom’s resistance against Muslim incursions was a long struggle. The reconquista (“recon-

Imam

Imam means “leader” in Arabic. The term, however, has vital connotations in Islam, especially for the Shia tradition. To the Shias, an imam is capable of leading people in all of life’s aspects. The Shia claim that an imam, as the Koran says, can be appointed only by God. In the 12-imam Shia doctrine, an imam’s status is seen as being greater than a prophet’s. The Sunni use the term for a teacher or a recognized religious leader in Islam.

quest”)—to drive the Moors (Arabs and Berbers who had conquered Spain) from the Iberian Peninsula—began in the ninth century but fully succeeded only in 1492, when the last Muslim-held province Granada was retaken by the Spanish monarchs. The Ottomans’ spread into Europe was stalled when they failed to take Vienna in 1529; they continued to expand elsewhere in Europe for another century but were again repelled in another assault on Vienna in 1683, which marked the end of Ottoman expansion.

Islam does not believe in the notion of a church or priesthood and rejects any kind of religious hierarchy. The foundation of the Islamic faith is the practice of the five pillars of Islam: the testimony of faith, prayer, support of the needy (zakat), fasting during the month of Ramadan, and, for those who are able, making a pilgrimage to Mecca once in their lifetime. The first pillar, the testimony of faith, is the most important pillar of Islam. The profession of faith states that there is just one God (Allah) and his prophet is Muhammad. The second pillar concerns participating in the public prayers that occur five times a day: at dawn, noon, mid-afternoon, at sunset, and at night. In Islam, prayer is a direct link between Allah and his worshippers, and

Sufism

The word sufi comes from tasawwuf (the Islamic science of self-improvement and spirituality), of which the root is the Arabic term saaf, which means “pure, clean, or blank.” Alternative theories suggest that sufi may also be derived from the Arabic word for “wool,” suf, referring to the simple cloaks worn by the original Sufis, or relate the term to the Greek sophos (or sophia), “wisdom” or “enlightenment.”

Although Sufism is usually associated with Islam, there is also a major branch of non-Islamic Sufism thought to predate

Islam and to be independent of the Koran and the teachings of Muhammad. In contemporary Muslim thought, Sufism represents the core of Islam because it provides insight to Allah and his creation, and its primary concept is love. Some believe that love is a projection of God’s true meaning in the universe. Sufism strives to see the potential beauty inside the outwardly ugly, and Sufis open their arms to even the most evil people.

There are 19 Islamic orders of Sufism in addition to seven non-Islamic orders and one located in Iran (Nimatullahi).

The Islamic Calendar

Umar ibn al-Khattab (c.581–644), a member of a clan of the Quraish tribe and the second caliph of Islam (634–44), created the lunar calendar used in Islam in order to organize the new Muslim chronology in 638. He is regarded by Sunnis as one of the first four khulfa-e-rashidun, or rightly guided caliphs. (Shi'a Muslims, however, believe that Umar was a usurper.) After consulting with his advisors, it was decided that the most logical starting point for Islam's chronology and observances was the Hegira, Muhammad's journey from Mecca to Medina at sunset, on Thursday, July 15, 622, the central historical event of Islam. Islam's chronology is reckoned from this event, so the Muslim calendar begins on Muharram 1, A.H. (Anno Hegirae) 1.

The Islamic year is made up of 12 lunar months; each month begins at the first sighting of the new Moon. Some Muslims use the sighting calculated in Mecca, Saudi Arabia, while others use a local sighting. The Hegira year has 354 11/30 days, so it can be said to "migrate" through the solar year of the Western Gregorian calendar, which has 365 days. When converting the dates of Islamic observances to Gregorian dates, it should be remembered that the Hegira lunar year begins about 11 days earlier each solar year.

ISLAMIC CALENDAR	GREGORIAN CALENDAR
Muharram ("forbidden"; fighting is forbidden during this month)	January–February
Safar ("empty" or "yellow")	March
Rabbi al-Awwal ("first spring")	March–April
Rabi al-Thani ("second spring")	April– May
Jumada al-Awal ("first freeze")	May–June
Jumada al-Thani ("second freeze")	June–July
Rajab ("to respect"; fighting is forbidden during this month)	July–August
Shaban ("to spread and distribute")	August–September
Ramadan ("parched thirst"; month of fasting)	September– October
Shawwal ("to be light and vigorous")	October–November
Dhul al-Qidah ("month of rest"; fighting forbidden)	November– December
Dhu al-Hijjah ("month of hajj")	December–January

each prayer requires only a few minutes to perform. The third pillar requires payment of the zakat, a specific percentage of one's wealth given to specific classes of needy people. Zakat is a way of purifying one's possessions by setting aside a small sum for those in need. The fourth pillar involves fasting from dawn to dusk during the month of Ramadan (the ninth month of the Islamic calendar), as well as abstaining from food, drink, and sexual relations. Fasting is a method of purifying oneself spiritually. The fifth pillar requires a pilgrimage to the holy city of Mecca once in a lifetime; this journey is called a hajj, and it is performed during the 12th month of the Islamic calendar (Dhu al-Hijjah). Unlike the other four pillars of Islam, the hajj is only required of those who are physically and financially capable of making the pilgrimage.

Muslims have certain beliefs around which their religious lives revolve. They believe in one, indivisible God as the creator, who is just, all-powerful, and compassionate. They also believe in the existence of angels. Although they honor most of the scriptures of the Abrahamic faiths (Judaism and Old Testament Christianity), including the Torah, the Psalms, and the rest of the Bible, they believe that only the Koran is the actual spoken word of God (Allah) revealed by the Archangel Gabriel to Muhammad, whereas the Bible and Torah were divinely inspired but were written by men. They respect and revere the messengers of God, including Abraham, Moses, Jesus, and Muhammad.

Muslims also believe in the Day of Judgment, when people will be evaluated on the basis of their actions while on Earth, thus attaining either the reward of heaven or the damnation of hell. Hell, they believe, is a place where sinners and nonbelievers spend eternity. Paradise is deemed to be a place of spiritual and physical gratification where the redeemed (or the blameless) go after death. Finally Muslims believe in the supremacy of the will of God.

Many do not look at Islam as a new religion. Instead, they see it as the same faith taught by the Old Testament prophets of the Abrahamic faith; Muhammad's role was to sanctify and clarify the faith and also purify it by eliminating any foreign notions that might have crept in.

For lay Muslims, public worship is performed in a mosque (masjid), where congregational prayers are led by a local imam after the public call to prayer, which is generally chanted from the top of a minaret at the mosque. Generally after leaving their footwear at the entrance to the mosque, men and women separate; men usually sit in front, and women in the back, which may either be inside the mosque or in the courtyard. While women may attend prayers in the mosque, it is not required of them. The prayer leader presents a sermon in the regional native language, perhaps combined with Farsi (sometimes called Parsi or Persian) or Arabic quotations, depending on the prayer leader's education and the erudition of his audience. Announcements of interest, sometimes including political commentary, are often made. These are followed by common prayers involving responses from the congregation, who stand, kneel, and bow in unison during devotion time.

Holidays and Religious Observances

All Islamic holidays are observed according to the Islamic lunar calendar (hijri), not the solar Gregorian calendar. Because it is a lunar calendar, the hijri year has 354 days. There are 12 lunar months. Six months have 30 days while five have 29 days; the 12th month, Dhu al-Hijja, can have 29 or 30 days. Islam has only two major religious observances that are universally observed, Ramadan and Hajj, and the related holidays associated with each. Ramadan, the ninth Islamic month, is a month of fasting from dawn (sahar) to dusk (iftaar). At sunset, Muslims enjoy a meal with family and friends. There are two observances related to Ramadan, Laylat al-Qadr, the Night of Destiny (or Power), when the first verses of the Koran were revealed to Muhammad. It occurs toward the end of Ramadan. The second, Eid al-Fitr, occurs on Shawaal 1, the beginning of the 10th lunar month.

Hajj is the annual pilgrimage to Mecca, Saudi Arabia, made by those who are physically and financially able to do so, during Dhu al-Hijja, the 12th month. Two related observances take place, the Day of Arafat and Eid al-Adha, in memory of the sacrifice of the prophet Abraham. On the Day of Arafat pilgrims gather on the Plain of Arafat seeking God's mercy; elsewhere Muslims observe a day of fasting.

A devoted Muslim prays during the last Friday prayers of Ramadan at the Faisal Mosque in Islamabad, Pakistan. The month of Ramadan, during which Muslims observe a dawn-to-dusk fast, is the most holy period in the Islamic calendar. (AP Photo/K. M. Chaudary)

Eid al-Adha comes at the end of the annual pilgrimage and can last up to four days. (It is known as Kurban Bayram in Turkey, Hari Raya Hajj in Southeast Asia, and Tabaski in parts of Africa.)

There are also several holidays based on the history of Islam, but not all Muslims observe them: Muharram, Ashura, Mouloud (or Mawlid an-Nabi), and Shab-e-Miraj. Muharram, also known as Navruz (or El am Hejir), is the Islamic New Year and falls on Muharram 1. On this day Muslims remember the migration of Muhammad from Mecca to Medina in 622 C.E. Ashura, the Shia observance of the martyrdom of Imam Hussein, falls on Muharram 10. The birthday of Muhammad, Mouloud, is celebrated on Rabiul awwal 12 (the third month of the Islamic calendar). Shab-e-Miraj is observed in some parts of the Muslim world. Shab refers to Muhammad's miraculous journey from Mecca to Jerusalem, and the Miraj, his ascension to heaven, is believed to have followed. On Layla tul Qadr, ("Night of Destiny"), observant Muslims pray throughout the night, seeking Allah's glory.

See also Volume I: AFGHANISTAN; ALBANIA; ALGERIA; AZERBAIJAN; BAHRAIN; BANGLADESH; CAMEROON; CENTRAL AFRICAN REPUBLIC; CHAD; CÔTE D'IVOIRE; EGYPT; ETHIOPIA; GAMBIA, THE; GUINEA; GUINEA-BISSEAU; INDIA; INDONESIA; IRAN; IRAQ; JORDAN; KUWAIT; LEBANON; LIBYA

See also Volume II: MALAYSIA; MALDIVES; MALI; MAURITANIA; MOROCCO; NIGER; NIGERIA; OMAN; PAKISTAN; QATAR; SAUDI ARABIA; SENEGAL; SIERRA LEONE; SOMALIA; SUDAN; SYRIA; TANZANIA; TOGO; TUNISIA; TURKEY; UNITED ARAB EMIRATES; YEMEN

See also Volume III: ASHURA; EID AL-ADHA; EID AL-FITR; EL AM HEJIR; HAJJ; MOULOD; RAMADAN.

Further Reading

Karen Armstrong, Islam: A Short History (New York: Modern Library, 2002); Ergun Mehmet Caner and Emir Fethi Caner, Unveiling Islam: An Insider's Look at Muslim Life and Beliefs (Grand Rapids, Mich.: Kregel, 2002); Malcolm Clark, Islam for Dummies (Hoboken, N.J.: John Wiley & Sons, 2003); John L. Esposito, ed., The Oxford History of Islam (Oxford, U.K.: Oxford University Press, 1999); John L. Esposito, What Everyone Needs to Know about Islam (Oxford, U.K.: Oxford University Press, 2002); Seyyed Hossein Nasr, The Heart of Islam: Enduring Values for Humanity (New York: HarperCollins, 2002); Seyyed Hossein Nasr, Islam: Religion, History, and Civilization (New York: HarperCollins, 2003).

~ Jainism ~

FACT FILE

Observed in	Primarily India
World Population	About 4 million
Place of Origin	India

Introduction

Jainism, or the Jain Dharma (Divine Law), is an ancient ascetic religion seen as an autonomous philosophy and faith. The faith traces its roots to 24 tirthankaras, humans who achieved enlightenment and became Jinas in primordial eastern India. Tirthankaras (“Crossing Makers”) were the founders of tirtha, communities of Jainists who act as a “ford across the river of human misery.” The last Jina was Vardhamana (599–27 B.C.E.), also known as Mahavir, “the great hero.” While pregnant with him, Mahavir’s mother is believed to have dreamed a succession of 14 dreams, each one an omen of her son’s virtues. Later on, Mahavir married and had a daughter but, despite his family’s affluence, Mahavir was not content. His parents died when he was 30, so he left his kin, turned his back on luxury, and joined a band of ascetics.

When he failed to find what he was searching for in the ascetics’ company, he went on his own way to create his a more severe asceticism. He gained much valuable experience during those times. He cleaned the path where he walked and strained water before drinking it. He determined that the way to enlightenment was through torment, so he stripped naked and looked for the coldest and the hottest places in winters and summers, respectively. He begged for his meals, stopped resisting violence, and never rested at the same place for more than a night. Finally, he began to perceive everything in the world indifferently. In the 13th year of such severe practices he accomplished release (or liberation) and realized Nirvana. In 527 he achieved liberation by committing salekhabana; he fasted to death, an accepted practice among Jainists. He became a siddha, pure consciousness, living forever in a state of bliss. On the night of his liberation people celebrated the Festival of Lights (Dipavali) in his honor.

The critical objective of Mahavir’s teachings is the attainment of total freedom from the cycle of birth, pain, misery, life, and death, and, in addition, the accomplishment of the lasting bliss of one’s self. This state is known as Nirvana or Moksha. Mahavir explained that every living soul is bound by karma accumulated by good or bad actions in one’s cycle of rebirth, and the soul will seek pleasures in worldly possessions under the sway of this karma. One’s karma causes violent thoughts, such as hatred, anger, and greed. Violence is a manifestation of karma. The only way to escape violence and achieve Nirvana is to live according to the “three jewels,” the three principles of Jainism: right faith (samyak-darshana), right conduct (samyak-charitra), and right knowledge (samyak-jnana). The three principles would together help attain Moksha.

The core of Jainism is concern for the well-being of every organism in the universe (ahimsa), from the tiniest to the largest. Jainism teaches that all human beings, plants, and animals have a soul, and that each soul is of commensurate importance and merits respect and empathy. Jains are firm vegetarians, and one can say that their lifestyle is structured to reduce their use of the planet’s resources. A way of life in Jainism, vegetarianism is based on the

Mahavir Jayanti

Mahavir Jayanti, Mahavir’s birthday, is the most important Jain festival of the year. To the Digambaras, Mahavir was born in 615 B.C.E.; the Svetambaras believe his birthday was in 599. They both agree, however, that he was the offspring of Trisala and Siddhartha. According to folklore Mahavir was conceived by Devananda, who was the wife of a Brahmin called Rishabhdeva. The gods cleverly transported the embryo to Trisala’s womb. The Jains observe this religious occasion by visiting holy sites and revering the tirthankaras.

Jainism and God

Jainism does not believe in the existence of a universal God. The followers of the faith, however, do believe in the existence of heavenly beings called arhats. They also believe in the presence of gods who are like us, embodied souls, except that they possess more freedom and, of course, more knowledge and intelligence. The arhats, Jains believe, are completely indifferent to the affairs of the world. Jains worship arhats, not to gain favor from them, but because their reverence amounts to good karma.

idea of compassion for all living beings, or jiva daya. It is seen as a lifestyle that enables nonviolence and peaceful coexistence. While their food habits do involve harm to the plant kingdom, eating plants is seen as a way of survival, one that involves a minimum of violence toward other beings. But Jains go beyond what is commonly called vegetarianism in that their diet also excludes most root vegetables and certain other foods believed to be unnecessarily injurious. Furthermore, observant Jains do not eat, drink, or travel after sunset and always get out of bed before dawn.

The Jain religion is exceptional in that during its current five millennia of existence there has been no compromise with regard to the theory of nonviolence in practice or principle. It has always espoused nonviolence as the ultimate religion. Jainism teaches the absolute equality of souls, notwithstanding the difference in physical form, a continuum that contains human beings as well as the tiniest organisms. Because humans are more endowed than other beings, we are responsible for acting compassionately toward all forms of life.

The lives of a Jain monk and a Jain layperson differ greatly. The monks practice extreme asceticism and endeavor to make this lifetime their final one. The laity pursue less burdensome practices and attempt to perform good deeds in this life. The laity, however, must choose a livelihood that has nothing to do with inflicting violence to oneself or any other being. In their attempts to reach the most exalted state of beatification (or siddhatva)—the total release of the jiva (“living being”) from every form of involvement in this existence—the Jains believe that no divine being can aid them in any way. Jainism may be termed a godless religion from this point of view. Moksha, the Jains believe, can only be achieved by individuals through their own hard work. Instead of appealing to an external superior being, Jains believe that human life is the highest good and must be cherished. Jainism holds that not even angels can gain their own release until they experience birth as a human and live the arduous life of a monk.

The moral code of Jainism is summed up in the Five Vows, which are followed by both monastics and lay people. The Five Vows are: Nonviolence (Ahimsa), Truth (Satya), Nonstealing (Achaurya or Asteya), Celibacy (Brahmacharya), and Nonattachment or Nonpossession (Aparigraha). Mahavir also designed a fourfold order for his followers: monk (sadhu), nun (sadbvi), layman (shravak), and laywoman (shravika).

Jains feel that reality consists of two everlasting principles: jiva and ajiva. Jiva is made up of an endless number of identical spiritual components; ajiva (or nonjiva) is matter in all of its shapes, forms, and states—time, movement, and space. Both jiva and ajiva are everlasting; they always existed and will never stop existing. The world is made up of jivas that are trapped in ajiva; in other words, there are jivas in inanimate objects like rocks in addition to those in animate objects like plants, insects, animals, and human beings, and even spirits.

Contact of any kind of the jiva with the ajiva causes the jiva to suffer. Thus Jains believe that living in this world invariably means suffering. No reform whatsoever can stop that suffering. Even in human beings the jiva is trapped, and it suffers as a consequence of being in contact with ajiva. The only way to escape from this suffering is for the jiva to escape completely from the human condition or existence.

Origins and History

If one follows Jain beliefs, statements about origins or history will be true and not-true, because reality is so complex that no single human mind is capable of knowing everything there is to know about reality. Our perceptions are always partial, subjective, and necessarily limited by our perspective. Jains believe that the universe was never created and that it will never cease to exist. What we know as the universe is eternal and infinite but not unchangeable. In fact it is always changing and never static because, as the universe moves through time, it passes through an endless series of phases, or swings. Each of these upward or downward phases has six world ages called aras, as in Pehelo Ara (“First Age”), Beejo Ara (“Second Age”), and so on. The last age is the Chhatho Ara, or Sixth Age. All these ages have fixed time durations of thousands of years.

In the current ara, Jainism began before 3000 B.C.E., prior to the beginning of Indo-Aryan culture. Though Jainism can be said to have been founded by Mahavir, the statement is not entirely true. Jainism existed before Mahavir, and his teachings were based on those of his predecessors. Unlike Buddha, Mahavir was more of a reformer of an existing religious order than the founder or prophet of a new faith. He followed the well-established creed of his predecessor Tirthankara Parshvanath, the 23rd tirthankara of this cycle, who lived in the era immediately prior to this one. However, whereas Lord Parshva preached four great vows for his era, Mahavir preached five great vows for this one.

It is probable that Buddhism may have developed as a result of the pervasive influence of Jain culture and philosophy in India; Buddhists maintain that Jainism is an ancient faith and culture that predates Buddhism. Buddhist scriptures record philosophical dialogues between the Buddha (Siddhartha Gautama, 563–483B.C.E.) and his teacher, Udaka Ramaputta, a Jain who taught that there are eight types of karma. Early Buddhists also thought that there had already been 24 buddhas before Siddhartha Gautama, and many of their names are identical to those of the 24 Jain tirthankaras.

There are two major sects of Jainism that developed as a result of events that took place two centuries after Mahavir's death. The issue that divided the Jainists was nudity. Bhadrabahu, who was the leader of the Jain monks, anticipated a phase of drought and took his followers to southern India. There were about 12,000 people. A little more than a decade later they returned, only to find a new sect, the Svetambara. Because they had been living in southern India, where it is warm most of the year, they were accustomed to not wearing clothes. The followers of Bhadrabahu became known as the

Fasting to Death

Salekhana, or santhara, is a practice in which a Jain stops eating as preparation for death. This is unlike suicide because there are no traces of anger or passionate moods in this undertaking. It is done when death becomes inevitable. The purpose is to purify the physical being and to erase all thoughts of physical things from the mind. Apart from renouncing food or water, the dying person discards all dislikes and desires in an effort to focus solely on the spiritual as death draws near.

Digambaras, which means “sky-clad” or “naked.” These monks rejected clothing, even in public places. The Svetambara, or “white-clad” monks, wear simple white robes. The laypeople of the sect are allowed to wear clothes of any color.

The Digambara sect is concentrated largely in southern India. They stick to the age-old principles that require their monks to walk about unclothed. They also differ with the Svetambara sect on certain features of Mahavir's life. According to the beliefs of the Digambara sect, women cannot achieve salvation until they become men in their rebirths, nor are they allowed to enter temples and monasteries.

Young Svetambar (white-clad) Jains participate in a religious procession celebrating Mahavira Jain's birth anniversary in the old section of New Delhi, India. Both the Digambar (sky-clad) and Svetambar sects of the Jain religion celebrate Mahavira's birthday on this day although they disagree as to the year of birth. At the back is a painting of Mahavira. (AP Photo/Manish Swarup)

The Svetambara are primarily found in northern India. They are easily the more liberal of the two sects when it comes to interpreting Mahavir's teachings regarding nudity. Women have access to religion and monasteries, and the Svetambara accept the possibility that women can save themselves.

The infinity of time is divided into time cycles, called kalchakras, and every time cycle consists of two equal halves: a progressive cycle (utsarpini) and a descending, or regressive, cycle (avasarpini). Within both cycles are six unequal periods (aras), so there are 12 aras within an entire time cycle. In an utsarpini half cycle, everything—happiness, strength, age, body, religious trends—develops in an ascending order, from the worst conditions to the best. When the utsarpini cycle has ended, the avasarpini half-cycle begins, and development, happiness, strength, age, body, religious trends, and so on gradually deteriorate, going from the best conditions to the worst. Presently we are in the fifth ara, Dukham Kal (“bad”), of an avasarpini phase, which started about 2,500 years ago. Although things may seem pretty bad now, they will become worse in the next era, called Dukham Dukham Kal (“very bad”), which will end the current half cycle. Then a new utsarpini phase will begin with a Sukum Sukum Kal (“very good”) era, the kalchakra will repeat again and go on forever. When a cycle reaches its lowest level, even Jainism itself is lost, but it will be rediscovered and reintroduced by new tirthankaras, only to be lost again at the end of the next downswing, and so on, ad infinitum.

Holidays and Religious Observances

Jainism, another world religion that has its roots in India, has close ties to Hinduism and Buddhism and shares holidays as well as core beliefs with both. Like Hinduism, Jainism uses the lunar calendar and has many religious observances in the course of a year, including the birthdays of several tirthankaras. Lord Rishabha, whose birthday is celebrated in the middle of Chaitra (early April in the Gregorian calendar) was the first tirthankara of our time, so he is also known as Adi-nath, the First Lord. In Jain tradition, he is more than a tirthankara. He was also a king, and gave the people important social innovations, such as the professions, to smooth their transition from a simple to a more complex society.

Another important birthday is that of the tirthankara called Mahavira, the 24th, and the last, tirthankara of the Jain religion. Mahavira was born a prince in Bihar in 599 B.C.E., and his birthday is observed toward the end of the month of Chaitra (late April in the Gregorian calendar). Lord Mahavira taught people about the principle of universal love and compassion, and achieved enlightenment (nirvana) after 13 years of a severely ascetic life. Because he achieved nirvana on the night of Diwali, the Festival of Lights is celebrated in his honor.

Paryushana and Diwali are both significant religious observances among the Jains. Paryushana has its origins in the rainy season, when Jain monks remain in one place for its duration, about four months. The two-day observance itself, however, is not extended for that long (although its minimum length is thought to be 70 days). Jains actually limit the observance to two days during the waxing half of Bhadrapada (early September in the Gregorian calendar). During this time Jains listen to the monks recite the Dharma, meditate, and practice self-discipline. It is a time when they renew their faith.

The Daslakshan observance, which begins on the second day of Paryushana (early September) focuses on the way to enlightenment, and is intended for meditation on the soul's attributes, spiritual reflection, prayers, and fasting. The devout are expected to spend the day in self-study and discussion of the nature of spiritual principles. Because its purpose emphasizes spirituality and removing oneself from worldly desires, it is also known as the Dashlakshan Parva, the Great Festival of Ten Virtues. The 10 Jainist virtues are: supreme patience, supreme modesty, supreme honesty, supreme contentment, supreme truth, supreme self-restraint, supreme austerity, supreme renunciation, supreme possessionlessness, and supreme celibacy.

See also Volume I: INDIA

See also Volume III: BUDDHISM; HINDUISM

Further Reading

Christopher Key Chapple (ed.), Jainism and Ecology: Nonviolence in the Web of Life (Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard University Press, 2002); John E. Cort, Jains in the World: Religious Values and Ideology in India (New York: Oxford University Press, 2001); Paul Dundas, The Jains (Oxford, U.K.: Routledge, 2002.); K. V. Mardia, The Scientific Foundations of Jainism (Columbia, Mo.: South Asia Books, 2002); Natubhai Shah, Jainism: The World of Conquerors (Brighton, East Sussex, U.K.: Sussex Academic Press, 1998); Michael Tobias, Life Force: The World of Jainism (Fremont, Calif.: Jain Publishing, 2000).

Janmashtami

FACT FILE

Observed in	Countries with Hindu populations, primarily India, Nepal, Bangladesh, and Sri Lanka
Observed on	Eighth day of the dark fortnight of Sravana, the fifth month of the Hindu calendar
Observed by	Hindus

Introduction

The Hindu festival of Janmashtami (sometimes called Krishna Janmashtami) celebrates the birth of Lord Krishna, arguably the most venerated god in Hinduism. Hindus believe Krishna to be an avatar (incarnation) of Lord Vishnu, the creator of the universe and the second deity, as the preserver, of the Hindu trinity; the first deity is Lord Brahma, the creator, and the third is Lord Shiva, the destroyer. Krishna is a hero, teacher, warrior, and philosopher in Hinduism. He is also regarded as the eternal platonic lover, devoid of carnal lust. Hindus believe that it was Krishna who delivered the deeply philosophical message of the Bhagavad Gita (“The Divine Song”), one of the world’s religious classics.

Janmashtami is also known as Krishna Ashtami, Sri Jayanthi, and Gokula Ashtami. It begins on the eighth day of the dark fortnight of Sravana, the fifth month of the Hindu calendar (August–September in the Gregorian calendar). The festivities are spread over two consecutive days. The first day is known as Gokulashtami; the second day is Janmashtami.

The festival is observed with great pomp and splendor in the temples and homes of devotees. During this period, the devotees forgo sleep, opting instead to sing bhajans (Hindu devotional songs). Hindus believe that Krishna’s birth took place at midnight; so celebrations usually begin at that time. A number of delicious dishes are made with curd and milk as their base—both these ingredients are believed to be Krishna’s favorites. Some devotees fast during the first day of the celebrations, opting to eat only after midnight. Singing and dancing are ways to venerate the deity. In addition, plays based on stories about Krishna’s childhood are performed. In all the temples devoted to Krishna, his likenesses are bathed and placed in cradles. Hymns and chants are recited with great fervor to praise and glorify him. In this context, Krishna is known by names

Raas Leela

Raas Leela is a captivating play (leela) about Krishna. It portrays the deep attraction between the milkmaids (gopis) of Vrindavan and the deity. Krishna used to drive his herd of cattle to the forest. Leaving the cows to graze freely, Krishna would play mellifluous tunes on his flute. Hearing the music, the enchanted milkmaids would rush to meet him. Among the maidens was Radha (his eternal beloved), who would go into sheer ecstasy at the mere sight of her Lord. Surrounded by the gopis, Radha and Krishna would perform a divine dance all night long, utterly oblivious to the rest of the world.

such as Bal Gopala (“Baby Boy”) or Naadoo Gopal (“the Kid Who Is Fond of Sweet Tidbits”). Incidentally, Krishna’s nickname, Gopala, means “the boy who tends cows.”

Origins and History

Krishna is believed to be the most magnificent incarnation of Lord Vishnu. Hindus believe that merely uttering his name or remembering him will bring untold joy and bliss. They consider Krishna their redeemer since he quelled all evil forces to bring peace and virtues into the world. No other god in Hinduism is linked with romantic tales and radiates all the divine qualities that Krishna does.

Prior to Krishna’s birth his maternal uncle, the wicked King Kansa (who ruled over Mathura), had been told that his sister Devaki’s eighth child (a boy) would slay him. Because of this prophecy, King Kansa locked Devaki and her husband, Vasudev, in the palace dungeon. The first seven of their children were also brutally killed by Kansa. After the birth of the eighth child a series of miracles took place. The gates of the prison were magically unlocked, and the guards miraculously fell asleep. Then a divine voice ordered Vasudev to take the newborn child to Gokul (a tiny village near Mathura, India) where his friends, a couple named Nanda and Yashoda, lived and exchange Krishna with their newborn daughter. Though there were torrential rains that night, and the river Yamuna was flooding, when Vasudeva entered the river to cross to the other side (en route to Gokul), the waters receded and made way for the wonder child who had to be taken to safer environs. Thus, Kansa's plans to kill the eighth child were foiled.

Krishna and the Color Blue

Any Hindu deity who has the traits of manliness, bravery, determination, and the aptitude to deal with hard situations is symbolized by the blue color. Since the Hindus believe that Krishna spent his entire life shielding the innocent and fighting against evil, blue is the appropriate color for him.

A Hindu devotee of Lord Krishna prays at Krishna temple in Patan, near Kathmandu, Nepal. Tens of thousands of devotees converge on the temple each year to mark Janmashtami, Krishna's birthday. (AP Photo/John McConico)

Krishna grew up to be a notoriously mischievous child. His penchant for butter—and all dairy products—is legendary. He is familiarly called makhan chor (“butter stealer”). Krishna's favorite pastime was playing his flute. As he grew up, Krishna performed many miraculous and astonishing feats for the people around him. He vanquished the python Kaliya, who tormented people and devoured their livestock. When another Hindu deity, an angry Indra (the king of heaven), unleashed a severe thunderstorm upon his people, Krishna raised the peak of the Govardhan Hill on his little finger to provide shelter for them.

Hearing of his courageous deeds, the evil Kansa called Krishna to Mathura, challenging him to fight with the mighty wrestler Chanura. As Krishna approached the wrestling arena, Kansa unleashed a mad elephant to crush his nephew. Krishna simply picked up the animal by its trunk, threw it into the air, and killed it. Then he wrestled with the mighty Chanura and killed him, too. Finally, he rushed toward Kansa, Chanura's uncle, and killed him, thereby fulfilling the prophecy.

As a youth, Krishna became the bosom friend and close associate of Arjuna (the third of the five Pandava brothers, who figure in the epic Mahabharata). Krishna chose the modest position of chariot driver and remained at his friend's side during the Mahabharata War. Before the commencement of the battle, Krishna inspired Arjuna (as recorded in the Bhagavad Gita) and led the brothers to victory.

During Janmashtami Hindu homes are cleaned and elaborately decorated. In the afternoon, prasad (food that is to be offered to the deity for blessings) is prepared and then distributed after the evening prayers are finished. Offerings of sweets, water, flowers, and a variety of fruits are placed before the image of Krishna in a cradle. With the approach of darkness, lamps are lit. At midnight, tika (a red sacred mark) is drawn on the face of the idol, and devotees shower it with flower petals, water, and rice. Bhajans are sung in praise of Krishna. Thereafter, prasad is distributed, and everyone consumes lavish, delicious vegetarian meals. The following day, in the Indian state of Maharashtra, in order to reenact Krishna's favorite childhood pastime of stealing butter, people form pyramids on the streets to break pots suspended from overhead wires and ropes.

See also Volume I: BANGLADESH; BHUTAN; FIJI; GUYANA; INDIA

See also Volume II: MALAYSIA; MAURITIUS;
NEPAL; SRI LANKA; SURINAME

See also Volume II: HINDUISM

Further Reading

Pandurang Vaijnath Athavale, Glimpses of the Life of Lord Krishna, from the Discourses of Rev. His Holiness Shastri Sbri Pandurang V. Athavale (Mumbai: Associated Advertisers & Printers, 1976); Freda Matchett, Krishna, Lord or Avatara: The Relationship between Krishna and Vishnu (Surrey, U.K.: Curzon Press, 2000); Swami Sivananda, Lord Krishna: His Lila & Teachings (Shivanandanagar, Distt. Tehri-Garhwal, U.P., India: Divine Life Society, 1981).

Fun Fact

The Bhagavad Gita summarizes the four primary Hindu philosophies: Vedic, Yogic, Vedantic, and Tantric. Bhagavad Gita means “Song of the Lord.”

❧ Judaism ❧

FACT FILE

Observed in	Israel, and as a minority faith in the Diaspora (throughout the world where Jews have migrated after their exile from the Holy Land), particularly the United States, Canada, parts of the old Soviet Union, some European countries, Australia, Argentina, and South Africa
World Population	About 15 million
Place of Origin	Canaan (modern-day Israel and Lebanon)

Introduction

Of the three Abrahamic religions—religions that consider Abraham to be a founder and central prophet (Judaism, Christianity, and Islam)—Judaism is the oldest. Although its followers comprise less than one quarter of one percent of the world's population, their influence the world over has been anything but minimal. The faith that began in the Middle East some 4,000 years ago has reached all parts of the world, as a result of forced expulsion as well as deliberate migrations. The Jewish world population is roughly about 15 million; the majority are concentrated in Israel, the United States, and the former Soviet Union, though there are significant communities in other countries including France, Britain, Brazil, Argentina, Australia, and Canada.

Judaism is a monotheistic religion; it supports a single, all-knowing God who created the universe and functions as its ongoing overseer. The “Shma,” the short, most familiar Jewish prayer, makes this basic statement of faith: “Hear, O Israel, Adonai is our God, Adonai is One.” This is a rejection of polytheism (belief in many gods) and an affirmation of Adonai (a name for God) as the single God of Abraham and all Jews and the universe. Central to Judaism is the concept of the covenant between God and his people that began with Abraham, in which God has chosen Jews to be a light to the nations, and they have accepted the greater responsibilities and obligations that God's law entails. According to Judaic tradition, God's 10 commandments, or rules for human conduct, were given to Moses and the Israelites on Mount Sinai. Orthodox Jews believe that the Torah, their religious text (and an important part of the Christian Bible and Muslim Koran as well), is the word of God and a guide for all behavior; other movements within Judaism place equal weight on the Torah but interpret it less literally than Orthodox Jews. Unlike Christians, who regard Jesus as the messiah (savior), Jews believe that the messiah has yet to appear. Ultimately, they believe that a messiah, or a messianic age, will emerge to repair and redeem the broken, imperfect world.

Judaism is both a religion and a civilization, based on its sacred texts, laws, and customs. It is fundamentally rooted in the Hebrew Bible, which is often thought to have begun as an oral narrative in ancient times and was later written down and canonized. Judaism emerged before construction of the First Temple (completed in 957 B.C.E.) in Jerusalem and flowered during the period of the First and Second Temples (957 B.C.E.–70 C.E.) under the direction of a hereditary priesthood.

Following the destruction of the Second Temple (70 C.E.), which made the Temple-centered priesthood obsolete, it was shaped into Torah Judaism by the rabbis (teachers, who would become, increasingly, clerics as well) in the first few centuries of the Christian era.

From the early third through the sixth centuries C.E., the rabbinic sages devised the Talmud (first the Mishnah and later the Gemara), a collection of oral law and commentary. The Talmud constitutes the legal case studies and interpretations derived from Torah (technically, the first five books of the Hebrew Bible—Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, and Deuteronomy—but more generically all 24 books of the Hebrew Bible or, even more broadly, all Jewish teaching or law). The Talmud is ingeniously arranged, with central texts surrounded by significant commentaries by great historic interpreters of the Torah and Talmud (not all of whom agree).

It is impossible to summarize as complex a subject as Judaism, but the famous Roman-era rabbi Hillel, responding to a challenge, once reduced the teachings of the Torah to one simple lesson that could be delivered while standing on one foot. Hillel said, “What is hateful to you, do not do to your neighbor. The rest is commentary; now go and study.”

The Jewish Sabbath begins at sunset Friday and continues until sunset on Saturday. (Observant Jews hold synagogue services twice a day every day.) The Jewish house of worship is called a synagogue. Besides being used for religious services, it is used for the purpose of community affairs and education. The synagogue liturgy of today continues to follow patterns established centuries ago, making it recognizable to Jews worldwide, though variations (sometimes significant) occur according to regional, ethnic, and doctrinal differences

Jews have suffered centuries of anti-Semitism (a particularly virulent form of racism that stereotypes and demonizes Jews). Anti-Semitism was expressed most horrifically during World War II (1939–1945 C.E.), when Adolf Hitler’s Nazi regime in Germany sought to exterminate, with systematic, industrial precision, the entire European Jewish population. The Holocaust (or Shoah in Hebrew) killed six million Jewish people in one of the most devastating crimes against humanity ever committed. (An additional six million non-Jews were exterminated as well; these included homosexuals, gypsies, the mentally or physically disabled, Communists, and other political dissidents.) In response, a new term was coined, “genocide” (the killing of an entire people), and new efforts were undertaken to prevent such inhuman atrocities in the future (unfortunately, with limited success). The Holocaust and its memory significantly shaped the experience of Jews and non-Jews in the second half of the 20th century and will continue to do so well into the future.

Two major divisions of Jewish culture are based on geography: the Ashkenazim and the Sephardim.

Ashkenazi, an old Hebrew word for Germany, originally denoted Jews who spoke Yiddish, a German dialect, but it has come to include Jews from northern and eastern Europe and their descendants from the Americas. The Sephardim (a designation derived from the old Hebrew word for Spain) were once those Jews who settled in Spain and Portugal, but the denotation of the word has expanded to include the Eastern Jews of Mediterranean, Balkan, Aegean, and Middle Eastern lands and their descendants living in the Americas. Originally, an Ashkenazi Jew was a Yiddish speaker and a Sephardic Jew referred to one who spoke a dialect of Castilian Spanish called Ladino. Some Jews still adhere to this narrow understanding of Sephardim, but, in Israeli colloquial usage, Sephardim have come to include Jews who speak (or whose fathers or grandfathers spoke) dialects of Arabic, Berber, or Persian as well. Sephardim are also called the Edot Mizrah, or Oriental Jews. Although the Ashkenazi and Sephardic differ in their rituals and liturgies, both groups recognize the authority of the other’s rabbinical courts and rulings.

Fun Fact

In 37 B.C.E. the Romans made Herod king of Judea, and he began construction of the Second Temple. Its construction took nearly 20 years and more than 10,000 workers.

Origins and History

According to Jewish tradition, around 2000 B.C.E. the God of the Israelites made a covenant with Abraham. The book of Genesis (present in the

Jewish Funerals

Traditionally, Jewish funerals are organized by the Chevra Kadisha (sacred burial society) and held in a funeral home; at times they take place in a cemetery chapel or the synagogue of the one who has passed away. Burial occurs as soon as possible after death. The body is never left alone, nor is it embalmed. It is ritually washed and dressed in a simple white shroud. Jews, regardless of social status or wealth, are buried in the same simple dress, as all are equal before God. Traditionally, the casket is plain and wooden, to allow its natural disintegration. Flowers are understood to cover death’s reality and are usually avoided. The funeral involves readings from the book of Psalms. More prayers are offered before the casket is lowered. It is traditional for the family of the deceased and others to shovel dirt on top of the coffin. At times, mourners use the back of the shovel, to distinguish between ordinary shoveling and that employed, reluctantly, for burial of the dead. Jewish mourning proceeds in stages. Jews observe a seven-day period of grieving when they sit shiva (seven) at home, surrounded by friends and family. For thirty days, certain other mourning restrictions apply, and for a year Jewish mourners continue to recite the “Kaddish,” a brief prayer that does not mention death but affirms life and the justice of God.

Fun Fact

King Solomon, the son of David, inaugurated the First Temple on Mount Moriah in Jerusalem in 960 B.C.E.

In it was housed the Ark of the Covenant.

Christian Bible as well as the Torah) chronicles the lives of the first three patriarchs, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. The next great leader of the Israelites was Moses, who freed the Jews from slavery in Egypt and was given the law by God while the Israelites wandered in the desert. Ultimately, according to Hebrew scripture, Moses' successor, Joshua, led the Israelites into Canaan, defeated the Canaanites, and took possession of the Promised Land.

According to biblical accounts, God and the prophet Samuel reluctantly acceded to the people's desire to have a king like other nations, and at God's direction, Samuel designated Saul king of Israel. Israel's second and most famous king was David, who established Jerusalem as the hub of the Jews' political and religious life. The third and reputedly wisest of all kings, Solomon (David's son), constructed the First Temple there.

Between 734 B.C.E. and 581 B.C.E., Israel came under Babylonian control, and six deportations of Israelites followed. Many fled voluntarily. The Babylonian empire was conquered by an alliance of Medes and Persians who, under Cyrus the Great, allowed the Jews to return to their homeland. But from that time to today, a majority of Jews have lived outside of Israel. After the Macedonian conqueror Alexander the Great drove out the Persians and occupied Israel in 332 B.C.E., Jewish culture was increasingly Hellenized, or influenced by Greek civilization. Then, in 63 B.C.E., the Roman Empire seized control of Israel.

Various Jewish sects emerged in the first century C.E., one of which ultimately developed into the Christian religion. One adherent, later known as Saint Paul, deviated from Jewish traditional practice and took his prophetic message to the Gentiles, non-Jewish people.

Roman oppression and subsequent Jewish revolts resulted in the devastation of Jerusalem in 70 C.E., including the destruction of the Second Temple (which had been rebuilt in 515 B.C.E.). With this disaster, Jews were driven out of their ancient homeland, and Jews and Judaism spread further throughout the world. Since the Temple could no longer serve as the sacred site of Jewish religious practice, individual synagogues developed into new centers of Judaism, and power swung from a hereditary priesthood to diverse teachers and scholars—rabbis. Rabbinic Judaism was thus born.

Jews believe in one, unique God, whose shape and appearance are unknowable. There are no subordinate deities in this monotheistic religion. Orthodox Jews deem the words of their biblical Prophets (indeed, the entire Torah) to be authentic and God-inspired. The Jews view Moses as the greatest of their prophets and the recipient of the Torah (in both written and oral form) from God. Judaism teaches that there can be only one Torah.

Presently, there are several different main sects of Judaism. The more traditional forms, however, do not necessarily consider the most liberal as a part of the faith. The largest, oldest, and most conservative form is Orthodox Judaism. Though they vary in the rigor of their observance, ultra-Orthodox, modern-Orthodox, and Hasidim have a common belief in the origin and sanctity of halacha (Jewish law that supplements scriptural law) as established in the Torah and Talmud. They seek to practice Judaism in the most original form possible and revere every word in their religious texts as being inspired by God.

Kabbalah

The Kabbalah (meaning, in Hebrew, “the received”) is the Jewish oral tradition of mysticism and esoteric knowledge handed down through generations. Some of the Kabbalah's mysteries are conveyed in a late 13th-century book called the Zohar (illumination), a difficult Aramaic text sometimes called the Bible of Kabbalists. It deals with esoteric subjects not fully explored in other Jewish texts—spirituality, the mysteries of God and the universe, prophecies, angels, and the afterlife—and is judged by devotees to be too complex for ordinary practitioners of Judaism. Indeed, engaging in study of the Kabbalah can be dangerous, some have maintained, and requires considerable maturity and worthiness of its students. Kabbalists stress the significance of supernatural symbols, formulas, and codes that they believe exist in the Bible. Studying Torah in light of such symbols and codes, kabbalists find meaning in the cosmos and even predict the future. In complex ways, kabbalists believe, people's impulses and actions can affect God's actions. The Kabbalah is not universally accepted, however. It has been regarded with indifference or even hostility by some of the greatest Jewish teachers, and for some its mysticism is little more than superstition. Recent revivals and “pop” Kabbalah fads have been viewed with suspicion by Jewish kabbalists and non-kabbalists alike.

Reform Judaism first emerged as a liberal movement among Jews in Germany in the 1790s, as they and other European Jews struggled to accommodate to a rapidly changing, modern world following emancipation (lifting of government restrictions on Jews, first in Revolutionary France in 1791 C.E.). They redefined Judaism and biblical law, seeking to realign it with their new circumstances and opportunities, and to diminish the distance between Jews and non-Jews, particularly by abandoning traditional rituals and laws, such as those governing food preparation and consumption (kasbrus, or kosher dietary restrictions). Reform Jews remain heirs to the Torah but believe that their sacred heritage should evolve and adapt. Reform Jews, for example, embrace pluralism and accept women as rabbis. Reform Judaism is well established today among North American Jews (some 38 percent of Jews in the United States).

Conservative Judaism started in the middle of the 19th century in response to the Reform movement. It is regarded as a major movement that is somewhere between Reform and Orthodox. Like Orthodox Judaism, Conservative Judaism is bound by Torah rituals and laws, but, like Reform Judaism, it is open to innovation and adjustment to the modern world, as long as doing so affirms essential Jewish values. Conservative Jews allow congregants to drive to synagogue on Sabbath. Modern Orthodox only reluctantly permit disabled worshippers or those who live at a distance to drive or discreetly ignore their cars. More stringent Orthodox are

The Torah

The name Torah has numerous meanings. In its most restricted sense, the Torah refers to the first five books of the Hebrew Bible, all attributed to Moses. At times, however, the word expands to embrace the full Jewish Bible (Old Testament to non-Jews; Tanakh or written Torah to the Jews), and, in the broadest sense, the entire body of Judaism's laws and teachings. There is considerable similarity with the Christian Bible, though the two differ somewhat with respect to verse numbering, as to which books are included, and in matters of translation.

careful to live within walking distance of their synagogues and hold services in their homes if they are not able to walk to synagogue. Similarly, Conservative Jews allow mixed seating of men and women in synagogue, while Orthodox Jews separate the sexes. Conservative Judaism, adheres exclusively to matrilineal descent as a definition of a Jew, unlike Reform Judaism's definition of a Jew as a child who has either a Jewish mother or father, who is raised in a Jewish home, and who is given a Jewish education.

Finally, Reconstructionist Judaism, perhaps the newest of all Judaic forms, is a small movement started in the early 20th century in an effort to unite and rejuvenate Judaism. Reconstructionism regards Judaism as an "evolving religious civilization." It is

As tradition dictates, a pointer, called yad (Hebrew, "hand"), is used to follow the Hebrew written passages in the Torah, the holy text of Judaism, in order not to handle and thus damage the document. (AP Photo/Rogelio Solis)

Jewish Baby-Naming Ceremony

Baby-naming ceremonies can take place at home or in the synagogue. The birth-naming ceremony for a boy child differs from that of a girl child. For Orthodox Jews the birth of girls is handled without great fanfare. The celebration for all sects on the occasion of the birth of female children is less formalized. For the naming of a boy child, friends and relatives are welcome to witness the occasion. Traditionally, one chair is kept empty so that the prophet Elijah can observe the event. The child's godmother (kvaterin) and godfather (kvater) are characteristically involved in the occasion. Names are generally chosen to pay tribute to departed members of the family (Ashkenazi Jews generally avoid naming children after living relatives, but Sephardic Jews customarily do name children for living relatives). The child is often given a secular name as well as a Hebrew name. The naming ceremony for the male child (called a bris or brit milah) occurs on the eighth day after his birth. Prayers and blessings are a part of the naming ceremony; circumcision of the male child follows the event. The ceremony involves blessings and prayers. A celebratory meal follows the naming ceremonies.

committed both to tradition and to the search for contemporary meaning. According to Reconstructionist Judaism, each generation of Jews must reshape its faith and traditions. This form differs from Orthodox Judaism in its emphasis on the evolution (as opposed to immutability) of Judaism itself, and it diverges from Conservative Judaism in terms of its priorities, particularly with regard to the degree of continuity or change appropriate in ritual observance and law. Reconstructionist Judaism differs from Reform Judaism in its greater commitment to the preservation of tradition.

Holidays and Religious Observances

The rituals of Judaism are observed according to a calendar based on a combination of the lunar and solar cycles. It includes festivals required by the Pentateuch (the first five books of the Torah), others prescribed in later biblical books, and commemorating post-biblical or even modern events. The Hebrew year begins (in the seventh month, Tishri) with Rosh Hashanah in the fall (Jewish New Year), followed directly by Yom Kippur (Day of Atonement), Sukkoth (a harvest festival), and Simchat Torah (completion and recommencement of the Torah reading cycle), all in the month of Tishri. Hanukkah (Festival of Lights) is observed in Kislev, near the Winter Solstice. Tu Bshvat, the Festival of Trees, follows in late winter, while Purim (a springtime, topsy-turvy festival) is celebrated in the month of Adar. Passover (Pesach) in the month of Nisan—the first Jewish month—is a seven-day festival that marks the beginning of the agricultural calendar and celebrates the Hebrews' liberation from bondage in Egypt. Beginning on Passover, 50 days are counted until the celebration of Shavuot, a first fruits festival in Sivan (on the cusp of spring and summer). In between, Jews commemorate two modern events—Yom ha-Shoah (Holocaust Remembrance Day) and Yom ha-Atzmaut (Israeli Independence Day). Tisha Bav (the ninth of the month of Av) is a fast observed in midsummer in memory of the destruction of the First and Second Temples. The cycle continues through the month of Elul, beginning again with Rosh Hashanah (literally the “head of the year”) on the first of Tishri, in the new year.

The Jewish New Year, Rosh Hashanah, is a two-day festival observed during Tishri (“beginning” in Babylonian), the seventh month of the Jewish ecclesiastical calendar (September–October on the Gregorian calendar). Rosh Hashanah, the “head of the year” in Hebrew, is so named because Tishri is also the first month of the Hebrew civil calendar. In the Torah, Rosh Hashanah is referred to by many names: Yom Teruah (“the day of sounding the shofar,” Feast of the Trumpets); and Yom Hazikaron (“the day of remembering”). Rosh Hashanah marks the beginning of the 10-day period called Yamim Noraim (Days of Awe), a time for repentance that ends with Yom Kippur, the Day of Atonement. This period is also called Ben Kesseh LeAssor; Kesseh and Assor refer to Rosh Hashanah and Yom Kippur, respectively. Thus, it refers to the period between the two festivals. While this observance is a time for deep introspection, it is also a time for friends and family to come together and for people to forgive each other. Most significantly, Rosh Hashanah is the time to recognize God as the supreme judge of all living creatures.

Yom Kippur (“Day of Atonement”) is one of the most important holidays of the year for both Ashkenazi and Sephardic Jews. Even Jews who are not otherwise strict in their observances make it a point to refrain from work, attend synagogue, and fast on this day. It is one of the Days of Awe (Yamim Noraim), which includes Rosh Hashanah, the first two days of the Ten Days of Repentance, and Yom Kippur, the last of the 10 days. It falls on the 10th day of Tishri, the seventh month of the Hebrew calendar (September–October), and ends the 10-day period of penitence that Rosh Hashanah (the New Year) begins. Yom Kippur is a total Sabbath (day of rest), when work of any kind is prohibited, and the devout abstain from eating and drinking water. Yom Kippur is the last chance to show regret and make amends so as to ameliorate God's judgment relating to those sins. One atones only for the sins between oneself and the Creator, not for sins committed against another human being. To seek forgiveness for the sins against another person, a compromise with that person must be arrived at and, if possible, the trespass forgiven; this harmonious conclusion must be accomplished before Yom Kippur begins because this is the day when God closes the books and one's fate, for better or worse, is sealed.

Hanukkah, "dedication" in Hebrew, is celebrated for eight days, usually beginning around mid to late December. Also known as the Festival of Lights, the observance recalls the Jews' struggle for religious freedom and celebrates their triumph against the Hellenistic Syrians. In 165 B.C.E., after the Temple had been taken back and the Syrians repulsed, Judah Maccabee and his forces entered the Holy Temple and found it a shambles. When they had finished cleaning it up, they decided to rededicate it. But, when they searched for oil to light the hanukkiab for the celebrations, all they could find was a flask with only enough oil to last a day. The oil, however, lasted for eight days, giving the Maccabees time to procure new oil. On the festival's first night, one light of the nine-branched hanukkiab is lit. Each night after that, another light is lit until the eighth and final night, when all of them are lit. The gradual addition of lights reminds the Jews of the miracle's magnitude and growth. There are recitations of blessings every night prior to the lighting of the candles: As they burn the eight lights of the hanukkiab, Jews narrate the triumph of their ancestors over depravity, the rededication of the Temple in Jerusalem, as well as the miracle of one day's supply of oil that burned for eight days.

Pesach, or Passover, from Hebrew Peh-Samech-Chet, which means "to pass over, pass through, to exempt, or to spare," is an eight-day festival that commemorates the departure of the nation of Israel from Egypt and the origin of a Jewish state led by Moses (or Moshe) about 3,000 years ago. Though it is mainly celebrated to remember the exodus of the Jews from Egypt after centuries of slavery, the festival also marks the beginning of the harvest season in Israel. Pesach signifies both the physical as well as the spiritual freedom earned by the Jews. The tale of the Jews' mass exodus is told in chapters 1–15 of Exodus in the Bible. The pharaoh, concerned about the Hebrews' population growth, decided to kill the first-born son in every Jewish family. Moses' mother, however, hid him in reeds along the Nile, where the pharaoh's daughter found him and saved his life. Sometime later, to free the enslaved Hebrews, God determined to send plagues. After each plague, Moses would remind the pharaoh of his promise to allow the Hebrews to leave, but every time the pharaoh reneged on his promise. Finally, after the 10th plague (and losing his own son), the pharaoh agreed to let the Israelites leave Egypt. The Jews believe that God, while slaying the firstborns in Egypt during the plague, spared their houses, hence the notion of "passing over." Jews consider the removal of chametz from their homes as the most important aspect of Pesach. Chametz refers to leaven and this act recalls that, during the exodus, the Jews were in such a hurry to leave Egypt that they did not have time to let their bread rise. Thus, they ate unleavened, or flat, bread. It is also symbolic of the removal of egotism and pride, the "puffiness," from our souls.

See also Volume I: ISRAEL

See also Volume II: UNITED STATES

See also Volume III: HANUKKAH; PESACH; PURIM; ROSH HASHANAH; YOM KIPPUR

Fun Fact

The Ark of the Covenant, which contains the clay tablets on which the Ten Commandments are inscribed, is believed by some researchers to rest in a small Ethiopian church, St. Mary's of Zion, in the town of Axum.

Further Reading

Eli Barnavi, ed., A Historical Atlas of the Jewish People (New York: Schocken Books, 1992); Ted Falcon and David Blatner, Judaism for Dummies (New York: Hungry Minds, 2001); Steven Fine, Art and Judaism in the Greco-Roman World: Toward a New Jewish Archaeology (New York: Cambridge University Press, 2005); Simcha Kling and Carl M. Perkins, Embracing Judaism (New York: Rabbinical Assembly, 1999); Melvin Konner, Unsettled: An Anthropology of the Jews (New York: Viking Compass, 2003); Judith Plaskow, with Donna Berman, eds., The Coming of Lilith: Essays on Feminism, Judaism, and Sexual Ethics, 1972–2003 (Boston: Beacon Press, 2005); George Robinson, Essential Judaism: A Complete Guide to Beliefs, Customs, & Rituals (New York: Simon & Schuster, 2001); Edward S. Shapiro, We Are Many: Reflections on American Jewish History and Identity (Syracuse, N.Y.: Syracuse University Press, 2005).

❧ Labor Day ❧

FACT FILE

Observed in	Worldwide
Observed on	First Monday in September (United States and Canada); May 1 elsewhere
Observed by	General Public

Introduction

Labor Day is an internationally observed holiday that honors the workers of the world, collectively and individually, for their invaluable contributions to their societies and the well-being of others. Labor Day is celebrated in most parts of the world on May 1, but the United States and Australia celebrate it on different dates. (In Australia, the date of the holiday is set by the state or territory.) International Labor Day is alternatively known as Workers' Day or May Day. The American Labor Day, observed in early September, has always been politically more conservative than May Day, which can be quite radical. Both, however, are occasions not merely to honor labor but to build solidarity among workers and to campaign for workers' rights, better working conditions, and better wages.

Origins and History

If Labor Day is usually held around the world on May 1 and known as May Day, it is important to note that the original May Day observances had no connection with workers or labor activism. May Day festivities can be traced back to prehistoric pagan agricultural festivals that celebrated the vernal equinox. The beginning of May (Maius) was a popular feast time for the Romans, when they worshipped Flora, the goddess of flowers. In her honor a five-day celebration, the Floralia, was held from April 28 to May 1 every year.

The Romans brought the customs and celebration of Floralia to the British Isles when they invaded and finally conquered the region. Gradually, the rituals of the Floralia were merged with those of the Celtic Beltane ("bright fire") festival, the second most important holiday of the year for the Druids, the early inhabitants of the British Isles. It is a cross-quarter day, the halfway point of the sun's progress between the vernal equinox and summer solstice.

The festival of Beltane was held on May 1. The Druids believed that this day divided the year into two exact halves. The half-year that began on May Day ended with the festival of Samhain, the precursor of Halloween, on November 1. In those days the priests lit a new fire to symbolize the vibrant spring, and herds of cattle were driven through the fire to purify them. Young men and their sweethearts passed through the smoke to invite good luck.

At the symbolic and physical center of May Day rites was the maypole, a Germanic custom. Some see the Maypole as a phallic symbol and associate it with fertility. Others trace its origin to the Saxon Irminsul (an oak) said to connect heaven and earth. Trees have been worshipped as symbols of life since ancient times, and they played a major part in pagan rites to ensure the fertility of women, cattle, and crops. During the Middle Ages every English village held maypole dances. Fetching the maypole from the woods was an important occasion marked by rejoicing and gaiety. In earlier times it was erected in the center of the village; later it was usually placed in a cleared area, or wherever the celebration was to be held. Customarily the tree, after being stripped of its branches, was decorated with garlands of flowers and long ribbons attached to its crown. The ends of the ribbons were held by young men and women who would dance around the tree in opposite directions, braiding the ribbons over and under, singing all the while, until the tree was wrapped in ribbons. In the 16th century May Day celebrations in England were condemned by the Calvinists; the holiday was revived after the Restoration, but it lacked its original significance and vitality. Gradually, it became a secular day of joy and fun, particularly for children, rather than a religious occasion.

Opinions differ on the true origins of Labor Day, and the specifics cited depend on the country involved. Generally Labor Day as it is known today originated in the late 19th-century with demonstrations demanding better working conditions, including an eight-hour workday. In a 24-hour day, according to labor activists of the time, workers should have “eight hours for work, eight hours for play, and eight hours for what you will.”

On April 21, 1856, stonemasons and building workers from construction sites around Melbourne, Australia, stopped working and marched from the University of Melbourne to the Parliament House to press their claims for an eight-hour workday. They are universally recognized as the first organized workers in the world to demand, and get, a fixed eight-hour work-schedule. Their heroic attempt was a source of inspiration for the American Labor Movement.

By the 1880s, labor struggles in the United States were escalating sharply, as was business and government repression of organized workers, particularly in the wake of the Great Strike of 1877. Union activism in America was at least 50 years old by then. In the increasingly antagonistic confrontations between capital and labor, in September of 1882 a new umbrella organization of trade unions, with the backing of the Knights of Labor (founded in 1869), organized a massive one-day general strike in New York City, which they conceived as a festive as well as activist Labor Day. It consisted of a huge parade through the city complete with placards and colorful banners, and a mammoth picnic, punctuated with speeches, and seasoned with music and dancing as well as vast quantities of food and drink. The organizers repeated the affair in 1883 and 1884, which established a precedent for observing Labor Day on the first Monday in September in the United States. The Knights of Labor and the Federation of Organized Trades and Labor Unions (the predecessor of the American Federation of Labor [AFL]) concurred, and soon state governments and then the federal government responded to their lobbying and recognized Labor Day as an official national public holiday in 1894. In part, this concession stemmed from efforts to respond to increasing violence in labor relations and to undermine the most radical elements in the U.S. labor movement, while supporting its most moderate or conservative elements.

In the midst of these turbulent years the Haymarket Massacre occurred. On May 1, 1886, nearly 300,000 strikers nationwide and 40,000 in the city of Chicago took part in demonstrations for the eight-hour working day. These May Day demon-

Dancers perform a traditional Maypole dance in Livingston, Montana, as part of a May Day celebration. Over the past 100 years, much of the world has come to celebrate May 1 as Labor Day. May Day celebrations of the vernal equinox on this day, however, date back to prehistoric pagan festivals. (AP Photo/The Livingston Enterprise, Erik Petersen)

strations contrasted with the more festive September Labor Day exercises. They were more militant and purposeful, an integral part of an ongoing international struggle for workers' rights. The hub of activities was Chicago, where socialists and anarchists of the International Working Peoples' Association (IWPA) played a key role in organizing the May Day strikes, which resulted in several clashes with the police.

On May 4 members of the IWPA organized a rally at Haymarket Square to protest police atrocities committed against striking workers on Chicago's South Side. As police attempted to break up the rally, a bomb exploded in the crowd, police opened fire, and a riot erupted. In the end, seven police officers and two protesters were killed, and several others were wounded. Police arrested eight anarchists on charges of conspiracy to commit murder. The trial and subsequent execution of four of the men (Albert Parsons, August Spies, Adolf Fischer, and George Engel) based on flimsy evidence has since become a cause célèbre in labor's continued struggle for justice.

The Pioneer Aid and Support Association, a group organized to support the families of the accused in the Haymarket case, inaugurated the Haymarket Martyrs' Monument on June 23, 1893. The monument is a 16-foot-high granite shaft atop a two-stepped base, on which are placed two bronze figures representing Justice placing a wreath on the head of a fallen worker. The monument embodies the ideals for which the victims died, a visible symbol of their works and deeds and an icon of the International Labor Movement.

There is an interesting story behind the origin of the Labor Day holiday in the United States, which still falls on the first Monday of September. Peter J. McGuire (the son of an Irish immigrant who had enlisted as a soldier in the Civil War) earned a meager sum of money as a shoeshine boy and a newspaper vendor, as well as an errand boy to support his mother and six siblings. His family, like those of other European immigrants, lived in nightmarish and appalling conditions in New York City. Often six families were crowded into a house made for just one. Thousands of immigrant men, women, and children worked 10 to 12 hours a day in unhealthy conditions in factories, with only a short break for lunch. They came to work in spite of fatigue and ill health, fearing that they might be fired otherwise.

At 17, Peter still worked long hours for low pay. He became a working carpenter, and at night he went to meetings and classes dealing with economics and social issues of the day. The main issues pertained to labor conditions. Tired of long hours, low pay, and lack of job security, in the spring of 1872 Peter McGuire and 100,000 workers went on strike. They marched through the streets, demanding a shorter workday. Convinced that an organized labor movement was the only way of ensuring a fair deal for the workers, Peter devoted the next few years to creating and spreading awareness in the American workforce.

The idea of organizing and classifying the workers according to their trades quickly spread around the country. Factory workers, dockworkers, and toolmakers all began vociferously demanding their rights to an eight-hour workday, job security, and good future prospects in their respective trades. The same idea was endorsed by the Federation of Organized Trades and Labor Unions and the Knights of Labor, a labor organization founded in secrecy in December 1869 by a group of Philadelphia tailors led by Uriah S. Stephens. Originally known as the Noble and Holy Order of the Knights of Labor, it aimed to protect all those who worked for a living.

Thus to a great extent, Labor Day celebrations in the United States can be traced to the workers' parades in New York City in 1882 and 1884, during which they vehemently demanded the amelioration of their working conditions. On September 5, 1882, the epoch-making first Labor Day parade was held in New York City. Twenty thousand workers marched down Broadway, carrying banners that read "Labor creates all wealth" and "Eight hours for work, eight hours for rest, and eight hours for recreation!" After the parade, picnics were organized all around the city; the workers ate Irish stew, homemade bread, and apple pie. At night there was a grand display of fireworks. Within the next few years, the idea of a national Labor Day holiday caught on rapidly across the United States. Finally the date of Labor Day in the United States was established as September 5.

America's Labor Day is, in a sense, a monument to the Haymarket Massacre. In the wake of Chicago's Haymarket riots, the general strikes that followed, and the American Federation of Labor's campaign for an eight-hour workday, a September Labor Day became an acceptable, virtually apolitical alternative to discourage more radical labor holidays or demonstrations. President Grover Cleveland believed that a May 1 holiday would become an opportunity to commemorate the Haymarket incident, for example, lending strength to socialist labor activists who continued to agitate on May Day. Over the years the United States made efforts to discourage the May 1 commemorations, going so far as to substitute other holidays—the conservative and nationalistic Loyalty Day, for example—for the radical May Day. In fact, if one visits the Web site of the U.S. Department of Labor, and reads the "official" history of Labor Day, there is no mention of the international workers' movement in the 19th century, nothing about the Second International, or the IWP, or socialism in general.

Although Labor Day was made an official national holiday in 1894, the eight-hour workday did not become a reality in the United States until March 15, 1917, when the Supreme Court finally ruled that the Eight-Hour Act was constitutionally legal, under the threat of a national railway strike. In Canada the Labor Day holiday was adopted in 1894 by then Prime Minister John Thompson, although the concept had originated with marches held in Toronto and Ottawa as far back as 1872. While in the United States and Canada Labor Day continues to be observed on the first Monday in September, the rest of the world observes it on May 1 or on other dates.

The first international May Day/Labor Day occurred in 1890, set for May 1 by the Second Socialist International in 1889 (a worldwide consortium of socialist and labor parties founded in 1880) to coincide with an AFL general strike in the United States demanding an eight-hour workday. As the day approached the AFL limited its participation to a few American cities, but the international labor organization staged hugely successful festive demonstrations in cities throughout Europe as well as in Cuba, Peru, and Chile. As U.S. aversion to May Day grew, and as the United States promoted its Labor Day as a “classless” holiday, International Labor Day spread and entrenched itself worldwide as an occasion to celebrate the working class and promote its liberation.

Socialist countries are the most enthusiastic celebrants of May Day or Labor Day, staging massive rallies and parades of workers and peasants. In the Soviet Union, for example, May Day was a major holiday, featuring a huge parade in Moscow’s Red Square, and Russians continue to observe the occasion after the Soviet Union’s demise. But the holiday is much more widely celebrated, even by many nations (France and Germany, for example) considered to be moderate and well integrated into the global economy. Interestingly enough, Great Britain, where one of its two major political parties is called the Labor Party, does not observe the day.

See also Volume I: AFGHANISTAN; ALBANIA; ALGERIA; ANTIGUA AND BARBUDA; ARGENTINA; ARMENIA; ARUBA; AUSTRALIA; AUSTRIA; AZERBAIJAN; BAHAMAS; BAHRAIN; BANGLADESH; BARBADOS; BELARUS; BELGIUM; BELIZE; BENIN; BERMUDA; BHUTAN; BOLIVIA; BOSNIA AND HERZEGOVINA; BRAZIL; BRUNEI; BULGARIA; BURKINA FASO; BURUNDI; CAMBODIA; CAMEROON; CANADA; CAPE VERDE; CAYMAN ISLANDS; CENTRAL AFRICAN REPUBLIC; CHAD; CHILE; CHINA; COLOMBIA; COMOROS; CONGO, DEMOCRATIC REPUBLIC OF THE; COSTA RICA; CÔTE D’IVOIRE; CROATIA; CUBA; CYPRUS; CZECH REPUBLIC; DENMARK; DJIBOUTI; DOMINICAN REPUBLIC; EAST TIMOR; ECUADOR; EGYPT; EL SALVADOR; EQUATORIAL GUINEA; ERITREA; ESTONIA; ETHIOPIA; FIJI; FINLAND;

FRANCE; FRENCH GUIANA; GABON; GAMBIA, THE; GEORGIA; GERMANY; GHANA; GREECE; GREENLAND; GUADELOUPE; GUATEMALA; GUYANA; HAITI; HONDURAS; HONG KONG; HUNGARY; ICELAND; INDIA; INDONESIA; IRAN; IRAQ; IRELAND; ISRAEL; ITALY; JAMAICA; JAPAN; JORDAN; KAZAKHSTAN; KENYA; KIRIBATI; KOREA, NORTH; KOREA, SOUTH; KUWAIT; KYRGYZSTAN

See also Volume II: LAOS; LATVIA; LEBANON; LESOTHO; LIBERIA; LIBYA; LIECHTENSTEIN; LITHUANIA; LUXEMBOURG; MACAU; MACEDONIA; MADAGASCAR; MALAWI; MALAYSIA; MALDIVES; MALI; MALTA; MARTINIQUE; MAURITANIA; MAURITIUS; MEXICO; MICRONESIA, FEDERATED STATES OF; MOLDOVA; MONACO; MONGOLIA; MOROCCO; MOZAMBIQUE; MYANMAR; NAMIBIA; NAURU; NEPAL; NETHERLANDS ANTILLES; NETHERLANDS; NEW ZEALAND; NICARAGUA; NIGER; NIGERIA; NORWAY; OMAN; PAKISTAN; PALAU; PANAMA; PAPUA NEW GUINEA; PARAGUAY; PERU; PHILIPPINES; POLAND; PORTUGAL; QATAR; RÉUNION; ROMANIA; RUSSIA; RWANDA; ST. KITTS AND NEVIS; ST. LUCIA; ST. VINCENT AND THE GRENADINES; SAN MARINO; SÃO TOMÉ AND PRÍNCIPE; SAUDI ARABIA; SENEGAL; SERBIA AND MONTENEGRO; SEYCHELLES; SINGAPORE; SLOVAKIA; SLOVENIA; SOLOMON ISLANDS; SOMALIA; SOUTH AFRICA; SPAIN; SRI LANKA; SUDAN; SURINAME; SWAZILAND; SWEDEN; SWITZERLAND; SYRIA; TAIWAN; TRINIDAD AND TOBAGO; TURKEY; UKRAINE; UNITED KINGDOM; UNITED STATES; URUGUAY; VENEZUELA; ZAMBIA; ZIMBABWE

Further Reading

Matthew Dennis, Red, White, and Blue Letter Days: An American Calendar (Ithaca, N.Y.: Cornell University Press, 2002); Philip S. Foner, May Day: A Short History of the International Workers’ Holiday, 1886–1986 (New York: International Publishers, 1986); Craig Heron and Steve Penfold, The Workers’ Festival: A History of Labour Day in Canada (Toronto: University of Toronto Press, 2005); Olive M. Johnson, May Day vs. Labor Day: A Comparison of the Social Significance of the Two Days of Labor Celebration (New York: New York Labor News Co., 1936); Alexander Khramtsov, May Day Traditions, Galina Glagoleva, Trans. (Moscow, Russia: Progress Publishers, 1988); Priceless Children: American Photographs 1890–1925, Child Labor and the Pictorialist Ideal: Lewis F. Hine, F. Holland Day, Gertrude Käsebier, Clarence H. White, Alfred Stieglitz, Edward Steichen, Edward Weston (Greensboro, S.C.: Weatherspoon Art Museum, The University of North Carolina at Greensboro; distributed by: Seattle: University of Washington Press, 2001).

∞ Lent ∞

FACT FILE

Observed in	Countries with Christian populations
Observed on	Forty days before Easter (Sundays excluded)
Observed by	Most Christians

Fun Fact

Eastern Orthodox Churches celebrate Great Lent, which begins for them on Clean Monday.

Introduction

In Western Christianity Lent refers to the 40-day period before Easter, excluding Sundays. Eastern Orthodox Christianity calls this period “Great Lent” to differentiate it from the Advent, or Winter Lent that precedes Christmas. The German meaning of the word lent actually meant “spring renewal.” It particularly symbolized the lengthening of days as seen in the Saxon term for the month of March, Lenctenmonat. The modern Dutch word for the spring season is lente; the Old Saxon and Middle Dutch term is lentin.

Whereas Easter commemorates the Resurrection of Jesus after his Crucifixion, Lent is regarded as preparation for Holy Week (also known as Passion Week), which observes the events that led up to his Crucifixion by the Romans. Historically this took place around 29 C.E. in Roman-occupied Jerusalem, in Judea (Palestine).

Origins and History

Traditionally, the 40 days of Lent are spent abstaining from certain types of food and festivities, as well

The Color Purple during Lent

The altar in Catholic and Anglican churches during Lent is covered by a purple cloth. Traditionally, purple is regarded as a royal color and a purple cloth on the altar acts as a reminder that Jesus is king and that he was resurrected on Easter. There are no other decorations in the church.

as indulging in different forms of penance (acts of self-mortification or devotion performed voluntarily to show sorrow for sins or wrongdoing). Traditionally, people forgo something they really enjoy and/or give the money or the time they usually spend in that activity to charities or organizations. Lent is a period of sad reflection that breaks the fast on Sundays (the day of Jesus’ Resurrection). Sundays are not included while counting the 40 days of Lent. Since Lent is a season of grief that ends with the celebration of Easter, the season is referred to in Eastern Orthodox Churches with an oxymoronic phrase, “Bright Sadness.”

Though actually belonging to a ritual tradition that predated the Christian era, the Carnival celebrations that precede the Lent season in various cultures have become linked with this season of fasting because they offset the last opportunity to indulge in excess before abstinence begins. The most celebrated of the pre-Lenten Carnivals is Fat Tuesday (or, in French, Mardi Gras).

In ancient times fasting during Lent was a good deal stricter than it is today. Fish, eggs, meat, and milk products were forbidden, and there was provision for only one meal each day. Today the practice is much less strict in the West, though in Eastern churches abstinence from those food products is still practiced. Lenten practices have also come to be more frequently observed in Protestant circles than previously.

The present fasting practice of the Catholic Church covers everyone over 17 and under 60. On Good Friday and Ash Wednesday Catholics generally eat only a single full meal but may resort to two smaller meals as a means of keeping up their strength. The combination of the two small meals should be of lesser quantity than the one full meal. There are also the laws governing abstinence, which pertain to those over 12 years of age. On abstinence days Catholics must not consume poultry or meat. According to Catholic dogma Ash Wednesday and all Fridays in the year are days of abstinence, though in many countries the rather strict abstinence law has been limited by bishops to Lenten Fridays and Ash Wednesday. On the remaining abstinence days the faithful are invited to perform acts of penance.

A girl prays after receiving ashes during the Ash Wednesday Mass. Ash Wednesday commemorates the start of the Lenten season with a ritual sign of one's own mortality. Lent is a period of penitence, sacrifice, and reflection that leads up to Easter and is observed by many Christian Churches. (AP Photo/Daily News, Joe Imel)

Christians consider fasting during Lent a way to identify with Jesus in his suffering. Jesus spent 40 days fasting in the wilderness in preparation for his ministry.

There are numerous holy days within the Lenten season. The first day of Lent is Ash Wednesday, when ashes are placed on the foreheads of the faithful. It is common among Roman Catholics, Anglicans, Episcopalians, and many Lutherans; the practice was also adopted by some Methodists and Presbyterians in the 1990s. Ash is an old symbol of mourning that can be found mentioned throughout the Bible; ash also represents the dust God used to create humans and to which humanity must return. The fourth Sunday of the Lenten season is sometimes referred to as Laetare Sunday, predominantly, though not exclusively, by Catholics. That day was initially called Passion Sunday, but that term has been restricted officially to the last (sixth) Sunday of Lent (also Palm Sunday), which was the day Jesus entered Jerusalem as the "King of the Jews." His coming generated celebrations among his followers and the citizens of Jerusalem, but it signified a big threat to the religious leaders as well as the civil authorities reporting to Rome. Jesus' method of entry, however, was symbolic of the real purpose of his time on Earth. He entered on a donkey, indicating that he would accomplish his mission through sacrifice rather than violence. Palm Sunday marks the start of Holy Week (the week of the suffering of Jesus).

This is the last week of the Lenten season, which ends on the evening of Maundy Thursday. The day of the Last Supper that Jesus shared with his disciples is called Maundy Thursday. It was there that Jesus gave his disciples the new commandment, to "love one another" as he loved them. Good Friday is the day of Jesus' death by crucifixion.

See also Volume III: CARNIVAL; CHRISTIANITY; EASTER; GOOD FRIDAY; HOLY SATURDAY; HOLY WEEK; MAUNDY THURSDAY; PALM SUNDAY

Fun Fact

In medieval Europe, Christians found numerous ways to make their obligatory fasting easier to bear, including "fake fish," a fish-shaped pastry stuffed with a mixture of apples, sugar, ginger, cinnamon, saffron, and gingerbread.

Fun Fact

Lent is the Old English word for "spring," the season of the year during which the observance falls, but this is true only in Germanic languages. In almost all other languages the name is derived from the Latin term quadragesima, or "the 40 days."

Mothering Sunday

Mothering Sunday is observed on the fourth Sunday of Lent. During the Mothering Sunday service, wildflowers like primroses and daffodils are blessed in church and then presented by children to their mothers. It is also a day for making simnel cakes. Simnel cakes derive their name from the Latin word simila, which refers to the flour used in the cake's preparation. Traditionally, the French and the English baked simnel cakes on Sundays during Lent.

Further Reading

Gabriel Bertonière, The Sundays of Lent in the Tridion: The Sundays without a Commemoration (Rome: Pontificio Istituto Orientale, 1997); Bread and Wine: Readings for Lent and Easter (Maryknoll, N.Y.: Orbis Books, 2005); The Church's Year: Propers and Seasonal Rites (Minneapolis: Augsburg Fortress Press, 2004);

Robert Heyer, ed., Celebrating Lent (New York: Paulist Press, 1974); Peter Hinchcliffe, The Lent Papers (Bristol: Cerberus, 2003); William J. O'Malley, Lenten Prayers for Busy People: A Forty-Day "Retreat" Wherever You Happen to Be (Maryknoll, N.Y.: Orbis Books, 2004).

❧ Maha Shivratri ❧

FACT FILE

Observed in	Countries with Hindu populations, especially India, Nepal, Bangladesh, and Sri Lanka
Observed on	Thirteenth or 14th of the dark half of Phalguna, the 12th month of the Hindu calendar
Place of Origin	New Zealand

Introduction

The Maha Shivratri Festival honors Lord Shiva (the “Auspicious One”) and the third form of God as the Destroyer. Maha Shivratri falls on the 13th or 14th day of the month of Phalguna (February–March). The name Maha Shivratri means “the great night of Shiva,” and the celebrations of this festival occur mainly at night. Devotees observe a fast during the day and keep a vigil throughout the night. The Shiva lingam (the phallic symbol of Shiva, which depicts the creative force) is worshipped all through the night by bathing it with curd, milk, rosewater, and honey, and by ceremonially chanting “Om Namah Shivaya” (“Glory be to Shiva”). Bilva (“wood apple”) leaves are offered to the lingam. The leaves are considered sacred because it is believed that the goddess Lakshmi resides in them.

Hymns in honor of Lord Shiva are sung with great passion and dedication. It is said that people who utter the name of Shiva during the festival day with real dedication and fervor are liberated from all sins. It is believed that after death they will reach the heavenly dwelling of Shiva and live in bliss. Also they are freed from the otherwise endless cycle of births and deaths. Many pilgrims gather at places where there are temples dedicated to Lord Shiva.

Origins and History

There are numerous legends and folklore regarding the origins of Maha Shivratri. According to one, during the samudra mathana (“churning of the ocean”) by the demons and gods, a poison came out from the ocean. The poison was so deadly that it had the power to wipe out the entire world. After being entreated by the gods to save them, out of sympathy for living beings, Shiva consumed the poison and kept it in his throat by binding it with a snake. His throat turned blue as the poison took effect; thus Lord Shiva came to be known as Neelakantha (“Blue-throated”). So that he might live the gods kept Shiva awake throughout the night by entertaining him with songs and dances, and this is why devotees keep a vigil.

Another legend connects Shivratri with the Hindu trinity. Once Lord Brahma and Lord Vishnu (the two other gods of the trinity) had an argument over the extent of each other’s powers. Lord Shiva, however, challenged both of them. Shiva appeared as a blazing lingam and challenged the other two gods to measure the same. Both Lord Vishnu and Lord Brahma were unable to measure the lingam. Lord Shiva came out of the lingam and proclaimed himself the most dominant.

According to yet another legend, King Daksha fervently opposed his daughter Sati’s marriage with Lord Shiva and did not even invite them to a yagnya (“holy sacrifice”) that he had organized at his palace. On the day of the yagnya King Daksha openly insulted his daughter, who had gone there uninvited. What is more he hurled indignities on her husband (Shiva), who was not present. Unable to bear the tirades a distraught Sati jumped into the sacrificial fire and killed herself. Lord Shiva unleashed his fury and grief at the death of Sati by performing Taandav, a violent dance. He obliterated Daksha’s kingdom, observed austere penance, and left for the Himalayas. The other gods, fearing that Shiva’s penance might end the world, brought back Sati in the incarnation of Parvati. Shiva and Parvati subsequently married, and their celestial union is commemorated on Maha Shivratri.

Shivratri for Women

Shivratri is deemed particularly favorable for women. Married women pray to Lord Shiva for the welfare of their sons and husbands, while young unmarried girls pray for a model husband like Shiva, who happens to be the spouse of Parvati and the goddesses Kali and Durga.

Om Namah Shivaya

Throughout the festival day of Maha Shivratri the devotees fast and chant the holy Panchakshara mantra, “Om Namah Shivaya.” They offer flowers and incense to Lord Shiva while the temple bells ring. They keep long night vigils, listening to stories, songs, and hymns. The fast can be broken only the following morning, after a night of worship.

The legends also tell of a hunter who ventured into a thick forest while chasing a deer and found himself by the river Kolidum. There he heard a tiger’s growl. To save himself he climbed a nearby tree. Showing no intentions of leaving, the tiger waited on the ground. The hunter stayed up in the tree all night and to keep from falling asleep he plucked one leaf after the other, throwing them down. Under the tree was a Shiva lingam, and the tree was in fact a bilva tree. Thus unwittingly the man had propitiated Shiva with bilva leaves. At dawn the hunter looked down from the tree hoping to find the tiger gone. Instead he had a vision of Lord Shiva there. He prostrated himself before the deity and achieved salvation from the endless cycle of birth and death.

On the day of Maha Shivratri, a three-tiered podium is erected around a fire. The highest plank symbolizes swargaloka (“heaven”) the middle plank stands for antarikshaloka (“space”), and the bottom plank represents bhuloka (“Earth”). Eleven urns (kalash) are placed on the swargaloka plank representing the 11 appearances of the Rudra Shiva. These are adorned with wood apple (“bilva”) and mango leaves on top of a coconut symbolizing Shiva’s head. The shank of the coconut is not cut; that represents his hair. The three spots of the coconut symbolize his three eyes.

See also Volume I: BANGLADESH; BHUTAN; FIJI; GUYANA; INDIA

See also Volume II: MALAYSIA; MAURITIUS; NEPAL; SRI LANKA; SURINAME

See also Volume III: HINDUISM

Further Reading

C. M. Agrawal, Jageshwar, Abode of Lord Shiva (New Delhi: Kaveri Books, 2000); Swami Lakshmanjoo, Shiva Sutras: The Supreme Awakening (Bloomington, Ind.: Authorhouse, 2002); Devdutt Pattanaik, Shiva: An Introduction (Mombai: Vakils, Feffer & Simons, 1997); Suzanne Fisher Staples, Shiva’s Fire (New York: Harper Trophy, 2001); Wolf-Dieter Storl, Shiva: The Wild God of Power and Ecstasy (Rochester, Vt.: Inner Traditions, 2004).

Children dressed up as the Hindu gods Shiva and Parvati participate in a procession on the eve of the Hindu festival of Shivratri, or night of Shiva, in Jammu, India. (AP Photo/Channi Anand)

❧ Makar Sankranti ❧

FACT FILE

Observed in	Countries with Hindu populations, especially India, Nepal, Bangladesh, and Sri Lanka
Observed on	January 14
Observed by	Hindus

Introduction

The Festival of Makar Sankranti traditionally refers to the start of the Sun's northward journey, when it moves from Sagittarius to Capricorn, changing its direction from one zodiacal constellation to the next. Sankranti means "to move from one place to another." Every time the Sun's direction moves from one zodiac constellation to the next is a sankranti. There are 12 signs of the zodiac, so there are also 12 sankrantis in a year. Each sankranti is named on the basis of where the Sun is in relation to the zodiacal signs, and each one has its own significance. However, two sankranti are extremely important: Mesh (Aries) Sankranti and Makar (Capricorn) Sankranti. Mesh Sankranti is important because the solar year begins when the Sun moves into the sign of Aries, the Ram, at the vernal equinox, one of the two times in a year when day and night are equal in length. (The other is the autumnal equinox on September 21.)

Makar Sankranti is the Hindu celebration of the winter solstice, the time when the days start to become longer and the nights shorter. This festival has been observed since the Aryans came to the Indian subcontinent, and it is still considered a favorable day by Hindus because it marks the end of winter. In Sanskrit the Sun's change is known as Uttarayana ("north-coming" or "northward journey").

Makar Sankranti is possibly the only Indian festival celebrated on the same day every year because, unlike other Hindu festivals, its celebration is determined by the solar calendar. The other festivals in India are scheduled according to the Hindu lunar calendar.

A Hindu woman with her young son performs cleansing rituals in the Ganges River in observance of the annual festival of Makar Sankranti. Millions of Hindu pilgrims take a holy dip in the Ganges River on the occasion of the Hindu festival of Makar Sankranti. (AP Photo/Bikas Das)

Origins and History

During Makar Sankranti the Sun appears to enter the Northern Hemisphere. The Sun in Hindu

A Rice-centric Festival

Rice and til ("sesame seeds"), which are harvested during this season, are two essential ingredients of this festival. In the rice-eating belts of eastern Uttar Pradesh and Bihar, as well as West Bengal, people enjoy a large variety of rice-based dishes on this festival day.

Fun Fact

Hindus believe that Makar Sankranti is the best day on which to die because the individual who does will go straight to heaven and escape the cycle of birth, death, and rebirth.

mythology is Pratyaksha Brahman, the manifest, all-perceiving God who symbolizes the singular, brilliant, glorious divinity that blesses one and all constantly. The Sun transcends the parameters of time and also moves the wheel of time. The Sun not only symbolizes divinity but is also considered a personification of wisdom and knowledge. The sacred Gayatri Mantra, which is recited by Hindu devotees everyday, asks the Sun god to grant wisdom and intelligence.

The Puranas say that on this day the Sun enters the house of Shani, who is his son and the swami (“lord”) of Makar Rashi (“Capricorn”). Father and son do not actually get along, but in spite of their differences, they make it a point to meet each other on this day. It is the father who visits the son for a month. This day emphasizes the significance of the father-son relationship.

Hindus believe that it was on Makar Sankranti that Lord Vishnu put an end to the growing menace of the Asuras (“Demons”) by destroying them and burying their heads under the Mandarin Parvat (a mountain located near Bhagalpur in Bihar, India). Thus, this occasion also symbolizes the end of evil and the start of an era of virtuous living.

According to Hindu mythology, in ancient times there lived a king named Sagar. When he was about to perform the Ashwamedh Yagna (horse sacrifice), the sacrificial horse got lost. The king’s 60,000 sons traveled to many places trying to find it. They finally spotted the missing horse at the ashram dwelling of a great sage named Kapil, and they accused him of theft. The furious sage reduced the princes to ashes.

When he heard what had happened to his sons, King Sagar begged the sage for mercy. The sage, after much coaxing, said that the dead souls would be allowed to attain salvation, only if their sins were washed away by the waters of the sacred Ganga (or Ganges). Things finally began to move when Bhagirath performed penance and managed to please the gods. With Lord Shiva’s aid Bhagirath, the grandson of King Sagar, managed to bring the goddess Ganga down to Earth incarnated as the river Ganges, and his ancestors were finally redeemed.

To commemorate this mythological event, a massive Ganga Sagar Mela, or fair, is organized where the river Ganges enters the Bay of Bengal, completing its long journey from its source high in the mountains. Thousands of devotees take a dip in the waters at this spot and perform tarpan (a ritual offering of water symbolizing peace) for their ancestors.

In India, where the festival is a major event, kites are traditionally flown. A contest is held in which the aim is to slash the threads of and capture as many kites as possible, thereby emerging as the winner. The windy weather at this time of year is ideal for flying kites.

See also Volume I: BANGLADESH; BHUTAN; FIJI; GUYANA; INDIA

See also Volume II: MALAYSIA; MAURITIUS; NEPAL; SRI LANKA; SURINAME

See also Volume III: HINDUISM

Further Reading

Swami Bhaskarananda, The Essentials of Hinduism: A Comprehensive Overview of the World’s Oldest Religion (Seattle: Viveka Press, 2002); K. S. Charak, Surya, the Sun God (Delhi: Uma Publications, 1999); Sumitra Nandan Pant, Sankranti (Allahabad, India: Lokbhati Prakashan, 1977).

Maori

FACT FILE

Located in	New Zealand
World Population	About 500,000 (2001 est.)
Place of Origin	New Zealand

Introduction

It was only around the middle of the 14th century that the Maoris of New Zealand emerged as a distinct race. Their traditional religion was polytheistic (worshipping many gods), and the deities worshipped by the Maori are also found among other Polynesian cultures. The social organization of the Maoris was based on the belief that they had descended from “those who came in a great fleet.” Membership in the Maori tribe is, by tradition, based on a common ancestry. The significance of being able to identify one’s ancestors is reflected in the Maori worldview, which connects everything to the deeds and lives of their ancestors.

Origins and History

The Maori, which means the “original” or “local people,” believe that their ancestors reached New Zealand from islands in the central Pacific Ocean in huge, oceangoing sailing canoes, approximately 1,000 years ago. Led by great explorers and seafarers, they named the country Aotearoa (“Land of the Long White Cloud”). (Both the method of their arrival and the dates are now topics being debated by researchers.) Archaeological evidence suggests that the first band of Maoris initially settled in the South Island and gradually inhabited the North Island. Here the Maori developed a culture of fishing, hunting, and gathering supplemented by settled agriculture, the main crop being kumara (“sweet potato”), which they had brought from their former home. (The sweet potato, however, originated in Central America, not Polynesia.) Elements of their culture, including oral traditions, religious faith, and customs, waiata (songs), crafts, and social systems are found nowhere else in the world.

Unlike other civilizations, the Maori had no basic concept or set of beliefs as far as the creation of the universe is concerned. The great mysterious cause of all things existing in the cosmos was, as they conceived it, the generative power. Starting with emptiness, followed by a primitive state of darkness, they conceived Po (“night”) as a person capable of begetting a race of beings resembling itself. After a succession of several generations of the race of Po, Te Ata (“morning”) was born. Afterward came Ranginui (“sky”), Papatuanuku (“Earth”), the winds, and other sky powers.

There is an interesting Maori legend about the origins of heaven and Earth: Heaven and Earth were once joined as Ranginui, the Sky Father, and Papatuanuku, the Earth Mother. They remained locked tightly together in a passionate embrace. They had many children who all lived in the dark because the togetherness of their parents effectively blocked out the Sun. When these children grew up, they discussed among themselves what it would be like to live in the light. Tu-matauenga, the fiercest of them all, said: “Let us kill our parents and then we can live always in light.” But his brother Tane Mahuta disagreed: “No, there is no need to kill them, we can just push them apart, then our Father the Sky can be above us to watch over us and our Mother can remain below to nurture us.” The other children agreed to this except for Tawhiri-matea, (the deity of storm and wind); he was sad at the prospect of his parents being parted.

The plan was put into action: Rongo-ma-tane, the god of cultivated crops and food, tried to wrench the duo apart, then Tangaroa, the god of the sea, and Haumia-tikitiki, the god of food (which grows without being cultivated), joined him. In spite of their joint efforts, Ranginui and Papatuanuku remained close together. Finally, it was the turn of Tane Mahuta, the god of forests and insects. Instead of using his hands to separate them, he lay on his back and pushed with his strong legs. Tane pushed and pushed until, with cries of grief and surprise, Ranginui and Papatuanuku were torn apart. Tawhiri-matea was overwhelmed by the anguished cries of his parents and the tears of the

Ringatu and Ratana

The Maori religious movements that have survived longer than others and managed to attract the largest membership are Ringatu and Ratana, both of which are now regarded as Maori Christian churches.

Ringatu, which means “raised hand” (a gesture of protection used during warfare), was founded by the prophet Te Kooti Rikirangi Te Turuki (c. 1830–93) after he received divine revelations. From his reading of the Bible, Te Kooti saw himself as a Hebrew-style prophet and, like Moses, he wanted to lead his followers to liberation under the guidance of Jehovah.

While this movement originated as a protest against European colonialism, its theology has greatly changed, and the Ringatu Church is now an indigenous Christian denomination.

Ratana, named after its founder, Tahupotiki Wiremu Ratana (1873–1939), combined spiritual as well as political elements in a bid to unite the people under God. The main difference between this and other Christian sects is the substitution of a quintet of Father, Son, Holy Spirit, Faithful Angels, and the Mouthpiece of God, Ratana himself, for the traditional Christian Trinity.

Sky Father at the forceful separation; therefore he created violent storms and winds and warned his siblings that, henceforth, they would have to face his wrath. He joined his father in the sky from where he still periodically punishes earthlings by creating violent storms. Legends say that Ranginui and Papatuanku continue to grieve for each other to this day. When dew drops fall, these are the tears of Ranginui; when the mist rises from forests and the sea, Papatuanku is sighing (for her consort), while the warmth of her body continues to nurture humanity.

The traditional religion of the Maoris includes gods and goddesses for different spheres of life. These include Tane (trees, birds, and insects), Rongo (peace and agriculture), Tu (war), and Tangaroa (sea and fish). Maori gods were sometimes represented by carved godsticks bound with cord. A godstick was frequently used in the ritual acts sanctifying the planting, tending, and harvesting of sweet potatoes.

The Maori practices of worshipping images or gods are similar to those found in other civilizations and cultures of the ancient world. The major deities resembled real-life mortal human beings with extraordinary qualities and powers. The concept of tapu (“holy” or “forbidden” or “sacred”) is the most powerful force in Maori life, and permeates the religious lives of the Maoris, although it is not as absolute as it seems to have been earlier. The two primary kinds of tapu were public, having to do with the entire community, or private, touching only the individual. Objects and people could become tapu once they came in contact with supernatural beings or aspects of the supernatural. Anything tapu was to be totally segregated from any vessel or place where food was kept. This law was absolutely inviolable. (Hara means “violation of tapu.”) Those who broke this law invited the displeasure of the atua (deities) of their family.

Everything not categorized as tapu was noa, meaning “free” or “common.” Things and persons tapu could be made noa by certain ceremonies, the object of which was to extract the tapu essence and restore it to its original source. Every tribe and each family had (or still has) its own especial atua (a medium of the local gods). Maori priests were known to have very strong tapu, which also gave them mana, power over fate. (Mana roughly translates as an individual’s or group’s influence, prestige, pride, and dignity.) Mana is a concept that merges power and sacredness. The tobunga (“priest”) was a specialist in art, knowledge, magic, and healing who could identify the sources of adverse events (which were due to either witchcraft or violation of a tapu). In his capacity as a healer, he often became an atua and relayed messages from these deities to the common people.

After Christianity intruded into Maori religious life, several syncretic (an attempted blending of irreconcilable principles, as in religion or philosophy) cults have arisen. Nevertheless, kinship and the concept of tapu remain central as forces in Maori religious life.

For the early Maori the scarcity of food sources, brought about by various environmental factors, led to a need to define greater land areas for growing crops. This led to feuds and wars, which necessitated the fortification of principal villages into pa (“hill forts with ditches and ramparts”). Within a pa was the wharenui (“meeting house”) and marae (“the courtyard” of the meeting house, which provides the forum for community life). Wharenui, symbols of tribal ancestors, reflect the tradition, spirit, and history of iwi (“tribes”) and hapu (“subtribes”); they are usually intricately carved with the images and figures of legendary tupuna (“ancestors”), spirits, and gods.

Taniwha were the Maori version of dragons (their real-life inspiration were probably the saltwater crocodiles of the Pacific). Taniwha were known to range from a few feet to several hundred feet in size and vary in temperament from friendly playmates to terrible monsters. The body parts of the large taniwha, when dismembered, would take on their own lives as eels, fish, river plants, and lizards. No tobunga was ever really successful in taming a taniwha, and sections of rivers believed to be a taniwha's hideout were either avoided or sacrificial offerings of food were sent ahead of the waka ("canoes") that would pass that way.

Before the arrival of the Europeans in the early 1800s, there were two distinct schools of understanding in the country. The majority of people deified, idolized, worshipped, or prayed to their dead ancestors. The other group was more aware of a supreme being or creator.

Christianity became the predominant religion of many Maoris during the 19th century; some became members of the Maori-founded Ratana or Ringatu Churches. Karakia ("prayers") are an important part of Maori ceremonies, including the welcoming of guests and visitors to the local marae. The traditional welcome involves dance, song, speeches, and a formal challenge; after it is over the manuhiri ("visitors") and tangata whenua ("host tribe") hongi ("greet" with traditional pressing of noses) and move in to the whareniui.

Maori Childbirth Rituals

In the old days, Maori women enjoyed full control over the birth process. With the help of the Tobunga and midwives, they controlled conception, abortion, birth, and parenting. Female attendants, appointed to care for the mother during her lying-in period after the birth, also assisted the other female relatives present during the birth; her parents and her husband were also usually present. Maori women went through labor in a squatting or standing position, often held in front by an assistant who would help with bearing down by exerting pressure on the mother's abdomen with her knees. Karakia to Hineteiwaiwa, goddess of childbirth, were recited to ease the birth. There was generally no interference on the part of the people around, but, in case any problems arose, the most competent tobunga who specialized in that particular situation was called upon to resolve the problem. The placenta was buried, and when the pito (umbilical cord) had fallen off the infant, it, too, was appropriately buried or planted in a rock crevice or tree. It was a tapu process; hence childbirth could not take place within the ordinary dwelling house. Instead, women gave birth either in the open or in a temporary shelter that was erected for the purpose and later burnt. This was called the whare kohanga, the “nest house.”

A Maori warrior calls across Auckland, New Zealand's misty bay with a traditional Maori trumpet as the Sun rises. (AP Photo/David Guttenfelder)

Maori Marriage Rituals

By and large marriage and betrothal arrangements were carried out by elders in the family rather than the parents of the couple to be married. In some tribes young men and women were allowed to express their choices regarding spouses, and in many tribes courtship was allowed. If a woman spurned the advances of a male, he often resorted to use of white magic, known as atabu, to make her change her mind. Another way of convincing a potential bride that accepting the marriage proposal was a good thing was to attack her clan and capture her. Adultery in the Maori culture was always severely punished. Polygamy, however, was (and still is) common and considered a prestigious act, especially in the upper classes of Maori tribes. Divorce is also acceptable in the Maori culture.

Tangihanga: Death and Burial Rituals

In the Maori culture the mourning period lasts for three days, when the body, or tupapaku, is laid in the marae, the meeting place of the Maori people. There it will remain until burial, and it is believed that the body should never be left alone. Because the marae is used for both marriage and death rituals, it often happens that a wedding party will be going on while a body lies in the marae. The Maori have no problem with this situation, because they believe that life and death are inextricably linked. The burial place, or urupa, is generally located quite close to the marae; this makes it convenient for the deceased individual's family members to care for the place of the burial. Plots for other members of the family are reserved within range of the dead person so that the family can be buried together, just as they were together in life. When families visit the urupa, it is mandatory for them to wash their hands while leaving, and there are water containers at the gates for the purpose; however, in the absence of water, people can use breadcrumbs (rewena) to remove the tapu from their hands.

See also Volume II: NEW ZEALAND

Further Reading

Tania M. Ka'ai, Ki Te Whaiao: An Introduction to Maori Culture and Society (Auckland: Pearson Longman, 2004); Michael King, Nga iwi o te motu (One Thousand Years of Maori History) (Birkenhead, Auckland: Reed Books, 1997); Eva Rask Knudsen, The Circle and the Spiral: A Study of Australian Aboriginal and New Zealand Maori Literature (New York: Rodopi, 2004); Margaret Rose Orbell, Hawaiki: A New Approach to Maori Tradition (Christchurch, N.Z.: Canterbury University Press, 1991); John Patterson, Exploring Maori Values (Palmerston North, N.Z.: Dunmore Press, 1992); Nigel Prickett, Maori Origins: From Asia to Aotearoa (Auckland: David Bateman, in association with Auckland Museum, 2001); D. R. Simmons, Iconography of New Zealand Maori Religion (Leiden, Netherlands: Brill, 1986); D. R. Simmons, The Great New Zealand Myth: A Study of the Discovery and Origin Traditions of the Maori (Wellington, N.Z.: A. H. & A. W. Reed, 1976); M. P. K. Sorrenson, Maori Origins and Migrations: The Genesis of Some Pakeha Myths and Legends (Auckland: Auckland University Press, 1990); Agathe Thornton, The Birth of the Universe (Te whanautanga o te ao tukupu): Maori Oral Cosmogony from the Wairarapa (Auckland/Aotearoa: Reed Books, 2004); Steven Webster, Patrons of Maori Culture: Power, Theory, and Ideology in the Maori Renaissance (Dunedin, N.Z.: University of Otago Press, 1998).

Maundy Thursday

FACT FILE

Observed in	Countries with Christian populations
Observed on	Thursday before Easter
Observed by	Christians

Introduction

Maundy Thursday is a Christian observance and part of the religious calendar that is variously referred to as Holy Week, Passion Week, or Great Week. This was the last week of the mortal life of Jesus. Christians believe that Jesus is the Son of God, the embodiment of the second person in a Holy Trinity comprising the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit.

Christians also believe that Thursday was the day Jesus had his last meal with his Apostles, the “Last Supper.” The Last Supper that Jesus and his Apostles shared is thought to have been a ritual meal called a Seder, a ritual meal that is part of the Jewish feast of Passover (Pesach).

The rituals observed on Maundy Thursday are based on a sequence of events that are supposed to have occurred during this meal. First, Jesus washed the feet of his Apostles; then he announced that he had been betrayed by one of them. The traitor

Judas left the table. Finally Jesus instituted the Eucharist—a ritual of consuming bread and wine as symbols of his body and blood, also referred to as Communion in Christian Churches. In the Roman Catholic Church, Maundy Thursday celebrates the institution of the Eucharist, the oldest of the observances peculiar to Holy Week, and gives priests an opportunity to prepare for the many rites associated with Good Friday, Holy Saturday, and Easter.

Fun Fact

On Maundy Thursday the bells of Catholic churches stop ringing.

Origins and History

Maundy Thursday became part of the Easter Biduum that began in the second century. The word biduum refers to the two days before a Christian holiday that are observed with prayers and specific services. The Easter Biduum was expanded to an

A German Maundy Thursday Soup

Gründonnerstagsuppe
(Maundy Thursday Soup)

Ingredients:

- 1/2-c. spinach leaves, fresh or frozen
- 1 c. sprouts (bean or another sweet sprout)
- 1 c. parsley
- 1/2 c. white wine or grape juice
- 1 spring onion (use green portion)
- 1 c. peeled, chopped cucumber
- 1 Tbs. butter
- 3 c. chicken or veal stock

fresh dill, chopped
salt and pepper to taste

Preparation:

Process spinach, sprouts, parsley, and wine (or grape juice) in blender until a smooth paste. Set aside. In a skillet, melt butter. Sauté the spring onion and cucumber together. Set aside. Bring the stock to a simmer. Add the paste and sautéed mixture to the stock, heating for 2 or 3 minutes. Do not allow stock to boil. Season with salt and pepper. Garnish with sour cream and a sprinkling of chopped fresh dill. Serve immediately

A cardinal kisses the feet of a priest during the Roman Catholic Holy Thursday Mass of the Lord's supper known as the rite of the washing of the feet, in St. Peter's basilica at the Vatican. The rite evokes Jesus' washing of the apostles' feet the day before his Crucifixion, and is observed by the Catholic Church as a symbol of humility. (AP Photo/Osservatore Romano)

Easter Triduum (three days) in the fifth and sixth centuries. The Easter Triduum officially begins after the Communion at the Maundy Thursday evening service and concludes with the evening service on Easter Sunday, the day on which Jesus is believed to have risen from the dead.

Maundy Thursday has also been known as Shere Thursday, although its origin is uncertain. One theory suggests that, because men shaved and cut their hair in preparation for Easter day in the Middle Ages, shere ("pure" or "guilt-free") came to be associated with Holy Week. Shere is also related to shearing, and monks used to shave their heads at this time. The day is also known as In Coena Domini ("upon the Lord's supper") because a papal bull listing censures of excommunication against those guilty of various offenses was read on this day in Rome.

The traditional Maundy Thursday rituals involve both mourning and celebration: Observants mourn the betrayal, abandonment, and subsequent death of Jesus but celebrate the opportunity to share with him in the Eucharist. In early Christianity the day began with a predawn service (also held on the Friday and Saturday of Holy Week) called Tenebrae (meaning "darkness"). This service was later shifted to the evening so that more people could attend. It consists of a collection of prayers and readings specific to the last week of Jesus' life, his suffering, and death, which are referred to collectively as the Passion of Christ. As the readings continue lights are gradually dimmed and candles extinguished until only one candle remains. The darkness symbolizes a world without God and the one lit candle represents Jesus, also called the "light of the world." This candle is removed from its holder and placed behind the altar, while a loud sound resembling the closing of a tomb can be heard. Worshippers leave in silence, and the candle is replaced in the holder.

The Church of the Apostles

The house where Jesus had his last meal is believed to have belonged to one of the disciples, either Nicodemus, or Joseph of Arimathea, or possibly even the mother of James and John. After Jesus' death, the house came to be known as the Church of the Apostles. It was taken care of by many religious orders, finally coming into the care of the Franciscans. They were forced to leave in 1561, and it is presently used as a mosque.

The other four rites practiced in Catholic churches on Maundy Thursday are: pedilavium, or washing of feet; the olei exorcizati, the consecration of oils (done during a special morning Mass); the exomologesis, the reconciliation of penitents (their confession and absolution), and redditi Symboli, recital of the creed by new converts prior to baptism.

The 40-day fast Christians observe during Lent is broken on Maundy Thursday. This is because, in ancient times, it was customary to bathe before receiving Communion, and fasting was considered incompatible with bathing and receiving the Holy Sacrament. But there was a problem: In Rome, people broke the fast in the morning so that they could receive Communion then, while in Africa people chose to conform to the timing of the Last Supper and receive Communion in the evening. In addition, they engaged in nighttime celebrations. Church officials frowned on the practice of a double Communion and the nocturnal revelry, and finally in 692 the Council of Trullo prohibited them. After that the Eucharist would be celebrated only in the morning.

Originally, the Communion cup was not always offered to members of the congregation. This practice drew the censure of popes Leo I (r. 440–61) and Gelasius (r. 492–96) and was reversed in the 12th century. In 1415, however, the Catholic Council of Constance once again approved the withholding of the cup.

As Christianity diversified, the Maundy Thursday practices were modified. In Catholic churches: holy oils are consecrated, including the chrism (oils consecrated by a bishop) for the baptism of new converts, and the sacrament for Communion is prepared at the special Mass held in the morning. Neophytes (new converts) are required to recite the creed from memory before being baptized. (The baptism may also take place during Mass on the Easter Vigil.) Penitents listen to the Missa pro reconciliatione and are given absolution, sometimes receiving a traditional green branch.

In Protestant churches, the service focuses on the events of the Last Supper, and there is often a biblical session later in the day when the story of the Passion is retold. Altar and other coverings are usually removed after Communion and replaced, either on Friday with black covers or with white covers before sunrise on Easter morning. Pedilavium is not necessarily observed.

In some denominations of the Eastern Orthodox Church, Holy Week begins after Easter has been observed in the Western churches and those Eastern churches affiliated with the Roman Catholic Church. In a ritual unique to the Orthodox Church, the clergy prepare the Amnos—the Communion items to be given to the sick throughout the year—on Maundy Thursday.

See also Volume I: ANGOLA; ANTIGUA AND BARBUDA; ARGENTINA; ARMENIA; AUSTRALIA; AUSTRIA; BELARUS; BELGIUM; BELIZE; BOLIVIA; BOSNIA AND HERZEGOVINA; BRAZIL; BULGARIA; BURUNDI; CANADA; CAPE VERDE; CHILE; COLOMBIA; CONGO, DEMOCRATIC REPUBLIC OF THE; COSTA RICA; CROATIA; CYPRUS; CZECH REPUBLIC; DOMINICA; DOMINICAN REPUBLIC; ECUADOR; EL SALVADOR; EQUATORIAL GUINEA; FRANCE; GEORGIA; GERMANY; GREECE; GRENADA; GUATEMALA; HAITI; HONDURAS; HUNGARY; IRELAND; ITALY

See also Volume II: LIECHTENSTEIN; LITHUANIA; LUXEMBOURG; MACEDONIA; MALTA; MEXICO; MICRONESIA, FEDERATED STATES OF; MOLDOVA; MONACO; NEW ZEALAND; NICARAGUA; PALAU; PANAMA; PARAGUAY; PERU; PHILIPPINES; POLAND; PORTUGAL; ROMANIA; RUSSIA; RWANDA; ST. LUCIA; SAN MARINO; SERBIA AND MONTENEGRO; SEYCHELLES; SLOVAKIA; SLOVENIA; SPAIN; SWITZERLAND; TRINIDAD AND TOBAGO; UGANDA; UKRAINE; UNITED KINGDOM; URUGUAY; VATICAN CITY; VENEZUELA

See also Volume III: CHRISTIANITY; EASTER; GOOD FRIDAY; HOLY SATURDAY; HOLY WEEK; LENT; PALM SUNDAY; PENTECOST

Further Reading

Mesrob Ashjian, The Great Week in the Armenian Tradition (New York: Armenian Apostolic Church of America, 1992); Elizabeth Bell, Lent and Easter Week in Antigua (La Antigua, Guatemala: Antigua Tours Publications, 1995); Carthusian, From Advent to Pentecost, Carmel Brett, Trans. (Kalamazoo, Mich.: Cistercian Publications, 1999); Church of England, Lent, Holy Week, Easter: Services and Prayers (New Rochelle, N.Y.: Cambridge University Press, 1986); James D. Crichton, The Liturgy of Holy Week (Still River, Mass.: Veritas Publications, 1983); Eric James, Who Is This?: Holy Week Meditations and Other Sermons, 1998–2000 (New York: Mowbray, 2001); Peter Jeffery, A New Commandment: Toward a Renewed Rite for the Washing of Feet (Collegeville, Minn.: Liturgical Press, 1992); Rosalind Miles, The Women's History of the World. New York: Crown, 2001.

Fun Fact

The name Maundy Thursday may be linked to the Latin word mandatum, “command,” via the French mandé, because Jesus commanded his Apostles to observe the ritual now called the Eucharist.

Fun Fact

The color associated with Maundy Thursday—royal purple—is the color of Lent. Some churches, however, prefer red, which is symbolic of the blood of Jesus.

~ Mouloud ~

FACT FILE

Observed in	Most but not all countries with Muslim populations
Observed on	Twelfth of Rabbi al-Awwal, the third month of the Islamic calendar
Observed by	Muslims

Introduction

Mouloud is celebrated by most Muslims to mark the birth of Muhammad in 570. The actual date of his birth, however, is disputed. Sunni Muslims celebrate it on the 12th day of Rabbi al-Awwal, whereas the Shia Muslims celebrate it on the 17th. But this day also marks the death anniversary of Muhammad—Barah Wafat, which means “12 days before death”—referring to the 12 days of Muhammad’s illness. This dual observance causes the celebrations to be somewhat somber.

Throughout the month of Rabbi al-Awwal, and especially on this day, Muslims organize Milad-al-Nabi (“Birth of Muhammad”) functions and Mehfil-e-Milad (“gatherings”). The main purpose of these gatherings is to celebrate Muhammad’s birth and teachings, and learned men deliver sermons on his life and noble teachings. Stories are told about different aspects of Muhammad’s life—his birth, childhood, youth, and adulthood.

Milad is derived from the word mawlid, which means “the time, date, or place of birth,” or “the celebration of an individual’s birthday,” especially that of Muhammad. A typical Mehfil-e-Milad consists of the following events:

- Recitation of the Koran
- Hamd-e-Allah Taala
- Naat-e-Rasul
- Speeches on the life of Muhammad
- Salat (darood)-o-Salam
- Dua
- Distribution of sweets or dinner

The gathering begins with recitations from the Koran. Hamd-e-Allah Taala refers to praising Allah or God, who, according to the Koran, resides in the heart of every momīn, or believer. Naat-e-Rasul is the way to praise Allah, using poems or rhymes. The Koran says, “Allah did confer a great favor on the believers when he sent among them an apostle from among themselves, rehearsing unto them the signs of Allah, sanctifying them, and instructing them in scripture and wisdom, while, before that, they had been in manifest error” (verse 164).

Thus Muhammad is an intrinsic part of the worship of Allah, and no one can ignore him. Remembering his teachings and his eventful life constitutes the main part of Mehfil-e-Milad. Muslims believe that if Muhammad had not come into this world, there would have been no Islam, no namaz (required daily prayers), no hajj, and no Ramadan. Salat (darood)-o-Salam refers to crying out to Muhammad while standing. Dua is offering prayers to Muhammad. The prayers and readings are often followed by sweets or dinner, but food is not required.

In some countries, streets and mosques are decorated for Muhammad’s birthday and illuminated at night. Muslims also donate to charity to show their respect for Muhammad. Families gather, large meals are arranged, and food is served to the poor as well as guests and family. Apart from these gatherings, there are other aspects of this day. One of them is a representation of Buraq, the horse on which Muhammad is believed to have ascended to heaven, which is anointed with sandalwood paste and scented powder and beautifully decorated. The essence of celebrating Muhammad's birthday is remembering the favors bestowed on one's ummah, or community, by Muhammad, the most important of which was the revelation of the Koran with its instructions.

Sufi Muslims utter the name of Allah while celebrating Prophet Muhammad’s birthday outside the Tamim Ansar shrine in Kabul, Afghanistan. The birthday of the prophet Muhammad is celebrated annually throughout the Islamic world. (AP Photo/Tomas Munita)

Origins and History

Muhammad belonged to the Quraysh tribe, one of the richest and most powerful tribes in Mecca. He was born in 570, 53 years before the Hijrah (Hegira). Controversy about the exact date of his birth continues, but most scholars agree that he was born on a Monday. This fact is mentioned in an authentic Hadith—the narration of events in Muhammad's life—approved by Muhammad himself. Muhammad served a wealthy widow named Khadijah whom he eventually married. This union proved to be happy, and they remained together for 26 years. After Khadijah's death Muhammad took other wives.

It is said that from about 610, Muhammad began to receive divine revelations through the angel Gabriel (Jibril). After he began to spread the word of Islam he gathered a few followers around him, but the Meccans became hostile and persecuted Muhammad and his followers. To escape the violence of the Meccans Muhammad and his followers fled to the city of Medina in 622. From being the leader of a religious minority, Muhammad went on to rule Medina.

Muhammad's flight from Mecca to Medina is known as the Hegira and marks the beginning of the Islamic era. The religion started spreading, and more and more Arabian tribes accepted Islam as their faith and Muhammad as their leader. So powerful was Muhammad's influence that even the Meccans relented and embraced Islam in 630. In 632 Muhammad led a pilgrimage to Mecca, where he preached his farewell sermon. Soon after, he fell ill and died at the age of 63.

Not all Muslims believe that Muhammad's birthday should be celebrated or recognized in any way. It is generally believed that the celebration of Milad al-Nabi was first observed around the 13th century, but some conservative sects, such as the Wahhabi, centered in Saudi Arabia, consider the celebration to be idolatrous. Neither Muhammad nor his companions or early followers celebrated or observed his birthday. In fact, Muhammad warned his followers against mimicking other faiths, whose adherents believe their prophets are divine and, by so doing, drift away from the original teachings and values of the religion. The Sunnah does not say anything about the celebration of Muhammad's "assumed" birthday, and conservative

Sarajevo Mosque

The Ghasi Husrev Begova Madrassa in Sarajevo, Bosnia and Herzegovina, named after the famous Bosnian leader Ghazi Husrev-Beg (1480–1541), played an important part in the Islamic and Sufi resurgence of the late 1980s. The mosque organized a chorus that became very popular for its Mouloud (Mevlud) performances and created mass appeal for the festival in Bosnia. Beg stipulated in the registers of his Waqf trusts that 300 dirhams (about US$34.00) be kept aside every year for Mevlud celebrations in the Sarajevo mosque that bears his name. Although heavily damaged during the Serbian attacks on Sarajevo, the mosque was renovated in 1996. Critics of the renovation observe that the rebuilt mosque is now more Wahhabist than it is Sufist.

Muslims denounce the celebration of Mouloud as an imitation of Christianity and, therefore, idolatry. Muhammad himself commanded all his people to live differently from Jews and Christians, warning them that whoever imitates them will become one of them. Those opposed to the celebration of Mouloud say that the Mehfil-e-Milad functions involve evils like mixing the sexes and using music and musical instruments.

Muslims who support celebrating Mouloud, however, disagree with this and argue that, even though Muhammad's birthday was not observed before the 13th century, celebrating it is a "good innovation." They argue that it is a perfect day to remember his life and teachings and read the Koran. So most Muslims celebrate Mouloud with great enthusiasm.

See also Volume I: ALGERIA; BENIN; BOSNIA AND HERZEGOVINA; BURKINA FASO; CAMEROON; CHAD; COMOROS; CÔTE D'IVOIRE; DJIBOUTI; EGYPT; ETHIOPIA; GAMBIA, THE; GUINEA; INDIA; INDONESIA; IRAQ; KUWAIT

See also Volume II: LEBANON; LIBYA; MALAYSIA; MALI; MAURITANIA; MOROCCO; NIGER; NIGERIA; OMAN; PAKISTAN; SAUDI ARABIA; SENEGAL; SIERRA LEONE; SOMALIA; SUDAN; SYRIA; TUNISIA; UNITED ARAB EMIRATES; UZBEKISTAN; YEMEN

See also Volume III: ISLAM

Further Reading

Abd ar-Rahman Azzam, The Life of the Prophet Muhammad (Leicester, U.K.: Islamic Foundation, 1979); M. Fethullah Gulen, Prophet Muhammad: Aspects of His Life (Fairfax, Va.: Fountain, 2000); Akhtar Rizvi, The Life of the Holy Prophet (Westbury, N.Y.: Dar ul-Tabligh North America, 1999); M. A. Salahi, Muhammad, Man and Prophet: A Complete Study of the Life of the Prophet of Islam (Rockport, Mass.: Element, 1995).

Navruz

FACT FILE

Observed in	Central Asian countries, especially Azerbaijan, Afghanistan, Uzbekistan, Tajikistan, Kazakhstan, Turkmenistan, Kyrgyzstan, Iran, Turkey, and parts of Russia
Observed on	March 21
Observed by	General Public

Introduction

Navruz is a celebration of the spring or vernal equinox and the most treasured of all Iranian festivals. For nearly 3,000 years Navruz has been celebrated in one form or another—by Sumerians (the people who inhabited the southern parts of Mesopotamia, or modern-day Iraq), Elamites (who belonged to the ancient Elamite Empire east of Sumer and Akkad, in what is now southwestern Iran), Babylonians (who lived in the ancient Mesopotamian state of Babylon in what is now modern Iraq, combining the territories of Sumer and Akkad, and whose capital was Babylon), Akaddians (a Semitic people living on the Arabic peninsula during the period of the great Sumerian city-states), Chaldeans, and Persians. The observance of Navruz originated in Zoroastrianism, the oldest of all monotheistic religions. Zoroastrians consider Navruz the last of the seven days of Creation. Throughout the history of the world, however, many cultures have observed the advent of the spring equinox because agriculture and a good harvest were critical to their survival. Muslims and Christians in Egypt observe this occasion on the Monday following Coptic Easter. This holiday, called Sham el Nessim, is believed to have its roots in ancient Egypt. Ancient Slavs, the Aztecs in Latin America, most Native American tribes, and the Japanese have also had celebrations related to the vernal equinox. Since antiquity, the first day of spring was celebrated by early European pagan groups, and by the American pilgrims of the early 18th century as the “common” New Year. The long-held tradition of Navruz and the number of cultures with similar celebrations indicates the importance that people attach to the end of winter and the beginning of the new agricultural year.

Sea Buckthorn: A Navruz Tradition

Common sea buckthorn (Hippophae rhamnoides) ranges from the Atlantic coasts of Europe to the mountainous regions of China and Russia. In Europe the plant is found along seacoasts because the salt spray discourages the growth of larger plants that would compete with it. In Central Asia, however, sea buckthorn grows equally well in semi-arid desert regions and at altitudes from 3,900 to 14,800 feet in cold climates, though it can be cultivated at lower altitudes and in temperate zones. Aside from its usefulness for controlling soil erosion, the plant is valued for its golden-orange fruit, which provides vitamins C and E, as well as flavonoid and oils rich in essential fatty acids. Although it has a bitter taste, it is a popular ingredient in jams, jellies, and preserves when mixed with sweeter juices, such as grape and apple.

Origins and History

Originating in the ancient land of Persia and long connected with the old Zoroastrian religion, Navruz means “new day” in Farsi (the language of the Persians). Originally on this day, kings would wear crowns with icons of the annual solar cycle on their heads and take part in the divine ceremony that was held in the Temple of Fire. They also made it a point to give their subjects gifts.

Notwithstanding the differences in calendars, people in antiquity closely studied the course of the Moon and the Sun and could calculate the exact day on which the season would change. As Turks and other wandering peoples ventured into Central Asia and areas around old Persia, they took up the Navruz celebration. Navruz traditions became deeply rooted in the lives of Eurasian farmers and other people, and it survived the arrival of Islam in the area some 1,400 years ago.

This holiday continues to be widely celebrated in Muslim countries such as Azerbaijan, Afghanistan, Iran, Uzbekistan, Tajikistan, Kazakhstan, Turkmenistan, and Kyrgyzstan as well as the western parts of China. It is also celebrated among the Kurds in Syria, Turkey, and Iraq, and by the Bashkirs and Tatars in the southern parts of Russia. During the late 20th century, many central Asian republics made Navruz an official holiday.

Today Navruz is celebrated each year on March 21 in the Northern Hemisphere, when the Sun enters the astrological sign of Aries. This date regularly corresponds with the spring equinox. In the Gregorian calendar, the spring equinox fluctuates between March 19 and 21.

In most countries located along the legendary Silk Road, Navruz is seen as the harbinger of nature's joyful awakening after the cold winter months and the start of planting, cultivating, and harvesting of crops. Navruz traditions are more or less similar in all parts of the region and have changed little over the ages.

Navruz is observed during the daytime, and celebrations are kept within the family. Navruz is traditionally a time to "clean up" lives. People clean their homes, wash draperies and rugs, adorn the house with flowers, and purchase new clothes. On Navruz day all housekeeping duties, including meal preparation and the cleaning of the house, should be complete before the morning star Venus appears in the sky (Venus is visible early in the morning during certain periods of the year). Children particularly look forward to Navruz because they get gifts, money, and blessings from their elders.

On Navruz people congratulate each other, saying "Nowruz-e-tan Mubarak" ("Happy Navruz") or "Sal-e-Now-e-tan Mubarak" ("Happy New Year"), shake hands, and embrace each other. The religious ceremonies begin in the morning with a "Jashan," or prayer of thanksgiving to God, and the sacred fire is lit, while sandalwood and incense are burned. Wearing the padam (the cloth covering the mouth and the nose to prevent contamination of the fire), the priest recites excerpts from the Avesta (the sacred book of the Parsee) while making symbolic offerings of fruit, water, and flowers.

This festival is consecrated to the seventh creation—fire—and its guardian angel is Amesha Spenta (holy immortal spirit) Asha, the personification of truth. Tokens represent all the natural elements that are cared for by Amesha Spenta: ritual implements (the sky), the vessel with the water (water), fruits and flowers (plants), milk (animals), the priests themselves (human beings), and, of course, fire.

Zoroastrian customs require that the celebratory table (also known as Haft Sheen) be displayed during Navruz. It must have seven essential items whose names begin with the letter s (sheen in Persian). These include seeb (apples), which represent beauty and aesthetic appeal; seer (garlic), which is used to ward off ill-health; sabzeh (wheat sprouts), which symbolize the rebirth of nature; sekkeh (coins), which represent wealth; serkeh (vinegar),

Uzbek women puppeteers perform during a celebration of Navruz in the Uzbek capital of Tashkent. Navruz, known also as the Persian New Year, which comes on March 21, the vernal equinox, is observed across Central Asia and in Iran on the first day of spring as a celebration of harvest and rebirth. (AP Photo/Anvar Ilyasov)

Happy Foot

Whatever occurs during the first 13 days of Navruz is considered to be filled with omens and portents for the remainder of the year. Consequently it has become something of a tradition to end quarrels, clear debts, and put aside insults and enmity. Like some of the traditions associated with the Chinese New Year, there are Navruz customs concerning the first visitor to one's house. To guarantee good luck for the year to come, the first guest should have a "happy foot." Put simply, the visitor should be gentle, kind, pious, witty, and have a good reputation.

Navruz and Marriage

In some Central Asian nations before Navruz, young men will secretly try to empty the cattle shed of a rich man who has a daughter of marriageable age. If they succeed the owner must be generous and give his daughters' hand to one of the men. Should the young men fail, however, they must treat the owner extravagantly.

which signifies old age, maturity, and patience; senjed (fruit of the lotus plant), a token of love; and sonbol (hyacinth), which stands for general well-being. A mirror, which reflects the past and reveals the future for individuals, and painted eggs, tokens of fertility and the sprouting of life, should also be placed on the table. Because fire is sacred to Zoroastrians, and characteristic of the energy and strength of a virtuous life, there should be lighted candles, whose flames symbolize fire. The table must also have burning incense (the fumes are meant to ward off evil spirits), a bowl of rosewater, known for its magical cleansing powers, and a sacred book of scripture beside a vessel filled with water in which a live goldfish swims. The water and the fish represent a contented life full of action and development. The other items commonly present include sea buckthorn berries, sugar, wine, honey, syrup, sweets, rice, and milk. Over the celebratory table a portrait or image of Zarathustra, the founder of Zoroastrianism, must be displayed.

Around Navruz, families pay homage to their deceased relatives and pray for them. They also go to shrines of saints and holy men and place lighted candles in niches dug in the walls in their honor. It is a common practice to visit relatives and friends for the 13 days following Navruz, plant seedlings of fruit trees, and have joyful gatherings.

During ancient times in Central Asia, the holiday was observed in agricultural oases with bazaars, horse racing, festivals, and cockfights. The Uzbeks zealously adhere to the custom of consuming the traditional dish sumalyak. It tastes like molasses-flavored cream of wheat and is prepared with flour and sprouted wheat grains. Sumalyak is cooked rather slowly on a wood fire; sometimes spices are added gradually. Sprouted grain is the symbol of life, abundance, and health.

Tajiks, who are closer to Persians than Turks in their lifestyle and habits, have a unique custom. In a Tajik home, the head of the household or the eldest son must prepare a sweet pilaf and fried shish kebab that consists of chunks of lamb or chicken grilled on a skewer. It is usually served with Persian polo (long-grained rice). These savory dishes symbolize the aspirations of the people who pray and hope that the rest of the year will be happy and fulfilling.

See also Volume I: AFGHANISTAN; AZERBAIJAN; IRAN; KAZAKHSTAN; KYRGYZSTAN

See also Volume II: TAJIKISTAN; TURKEY; TURKMENISTAN; UZBEKISTAN

See also Volume III: ZOROASTRIANISM

Further Reading

Mary Boyce, Zoroastrians: Their Religious Beliefs and Practices (New York: Routledge, 2001); Richard Foltz, Spirituality in the Land of the Noble: How Iran Shaped the World's Religions (Oxford, U.K., Oneworld, 2004).

~ Palm Sunday ~

FACT FILE

Observed in	Countries with Christian populations
Observed on	Last Sunday of Lent
Observed by	Christians

Introduction

Palm Sunday is the sixth Sunday of Lent and the first day of Holy Week, commemorating the last week of Jesus' mortal life. Jesus was the prophet of Christianity, and Christians believe he was the Son of God incarnate and the second personage of the Holy Trinity, which is made up of the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit. The day is as much about Jesus' triumphal entry into Jerusalem as it is about the beginning of his journey to the Cross. His arrival in Jerusalem was indeed the way to the Cross.

Origins and History

In Western churches (the Roman Catholic Church, Protestant Churches, and the Eastern churches affiliated with the Roman Catholic Church) Palm Sunday was originally known as the Second Sunday of the Passion, since the fifth Sunday of Lent is Passion Sunday (or the First Sunday of the Passion). The Armenian churches observe another Palm Sunday on the seventh Sunday after Easter to celebrate Jesus' Ascension into heaven. The Armenian Church is an Eastern Orthodox Church, and it follows a different schedule, one based on the Julian calendar, while Western churches follow the Gregorian calendar. There the Ascension is celebrated on the 40th day after Easter Sunday.

Jesus had already foretold his betrayal and Resurrection to his disciples on the way to Jerusalem from Judea. The day was April 10, 30 C.E., according to some calculations. They stopped at the Mount of Olives near Bethany, and Jesus sent two disciples to the village of Bethphage to bring him the donkey and its foal tied at the crossway of two roads. They did so and placed their clothes on the foal to provide a comfortable seat. The disciples then cut branches to cover the path Jesus took, and Jesus rode into Jerusalem, fulfilling the words of the Old Testament prophet Zechariah. People welcomed him by waving palm and olive branches, and strewing garments and branches on the road. There were different perceptions at work: Jesus rode in on a donkey, a humble entry of a peaceful nature for a spiritual king; but the people of Jerusalem welcomed him with palm and olive branches and the laying of garments in his path, because they wanted a worldly king to defeat the Romans.

Palm Sunday was first celebrated in Jerusalem, and the practice spread to Egypt, Syria, and Asia Minor, reaching Constantinople in the fifth century.

A man shares a moment with his granddaughter during the traditional Palm Sunday Mass in Caracas, Venezuela. Palm Sunday marks the beginning of Holy Week, leading up to Good Friday, which for Christians recalls the Crucifixion of Jesus, and Easter Sunday, celebrating the Resurrection. (AP Photo/Fernando Llano)

Fun Fact

Popularly the day was also called Willow Sunday (Verbna Nedilja) because pussy willows were blessed in Europe instead of palms. It is also known as Flower Sunday (Cvitna Nedilja), since in and near Constantinople the churches used to distribute early spring flowers, such as branches of lilac or elder, to the faithful.

The emperor took part in the Palm Sunday procession and gave palm and lilac branches to his nobles and staff. The processions were accompanied by the singing of the stycheras, hymns composed by Saints Andrew of Crete, John Damascene, Theodore Studite, and Joseph. Gradually, the holiday reached the West and received its present name Palm Sunday.

The day was observed in the Holy Land as early as the fourth century, as is evident from the “Peregrinato Artheriae” (“Pilgrimage of Aetheria”), the nun Aetheria’s letter recording her pilgrimage to the Holy Land during Holy Week celebrations. Church services originally took place in the evening at 5 P.M. but were shifted to the morning in the sixth and seventh centuries.

The reconciliation of sinners was restricted to Holy Saturday in the first few centuries of the church but was later administered on Palm Sunday and Maundy Thursday as well. New converts were baptized on Easter but began preparing on the Sunday before. People washed and shaved their hair—this practice was known as capitalavium (“shampoo”)—as a prerequisite to baptism. All these customs were observed with great piety, particularly in Spain, Gaul (France), and Milan (Italy).

In Jerusalem, the whole day was spent in observance of rites: Worshippers would assemble at the Martyrion Church (behind the Cross at Golgotha). After the service, all would proceed at 1 P.M. to the Mount of Olives, to the cave where Jesus taught.

After two hours of prayers and hymns, the worshippers went to Imbomon (the place of Jesus’ Ascension to heaven). There they would gather for readings from the Bible. The passage about the children of Jerusalem carrying palm and olive branches and greeting Jesus with the words, “Blessed is He that Cometh in the Name of the Lord,” was the signal for all to begin the journey back to Jerusalem, repeating the words all the while. The children would carry palm or olive branches. Vespers (evening prayers) at the Anastasis (the Church of the Resurrection) and prayers at the Church of the Holy Cross were the finale of Palm Sunday observances.

The blessing of the palms was not originally part of Palm Sunday observances. The ritual originated in Jerusalem, and in 397 Peter, Bishop of Edessa, ordered the benediction of palms in all Mesopotamian churches. It was not until the eighth and ninth centuries that it became a widely observed practice in Roman churches.

In the Middle Ages, people assembled at the cross in the churchyard and would then proceed into church carrying palm branches to be blessed. Their path through the churchyard would be strewn with flowers and branches of willow and yew trees. In Germany and France, the gathering would decorate the cross in the churchyard with flowers and green branches and carry it into the church. This cross was known as the Palm Cross. Another popular custom was to carry a wooden figure of Jesus riding a donkey in a Palm Sunday procession, which often entered the church itself. Such pieces can be seen at the Museums of Zurich, Munich, Basel, and Nurnberg. Occasionally the Blessed Sacrament (in a covered box), uncovered crucifixes, or holy books would be carried in the procession. Whatever the practice, the blessing of the palms and the entry into church was followed by the Mass

Palm Sunday by Any Other Name

The Lenten observance that English speakers call Palm Sunday has many other names, depending on the country in which it is celebrated. In Greece, for example, it is known as Kyriake, Heorte ton baion, or Lazarus Sunday. In Latin liturgical books written to instruct the priesthood, it is called Dominica in Palmis or Dies Palmarum. Because every Christian celebration is a remembrance of Easter, Palm Sunday becomes Pascha floridum in Latin, Paques fleuries in French, Pascua florida in Spanish, and Flower Sunday in England.

Other names used among English speakers include Olive or Branch Sunday, Sunday of the Willow Boughs, and Fig Sunday. In German Palm Sunday is referred to as Blumensonntag or Blumentag, and in Welsh, it is called Sul y Blodau. Because the reconciliation of sinners came to be conferred on Palm Sunday, the Roman Catholic Church also calls it Dominica indulgentioe. In 1985 after meeting with 250,000 young people in Rome on Palm Sunday, Pope John Paul II announced in his annual Easter message his wish that the experience be repeated every year. On Palm Sunday in 1986 the first official World Youth Day was celebrated.

and the singing of the Passion. The hymn “Gloria Laus” was always sung before Mass; it is believed to have been composed by Theodolphus of Orleans (d. 821) around 810.

Palm Sunday is one of the 12 major festivals of the Byzantine Church, where it is also known as Vaj Sunday. In the sixth and seventh centuries there were morning processions, and the palms were blessed after readings from the Gospels. The two prayers used to bless palms in the Byzantine Rite church are most probably the original prayers for the occasion because they are found in the oldest book of rituals, the Euchologion of Barberini dating from the ninth century. The first of these two prayers focuses on Jesus’ entry into Jerusalem, and the second is about the olive branch brought to Noah by a dove after the great flood. That branch symbolized peace and God’s protection, and the prayer calls for God’s peace for the households that will keep the palms respectfully. Holy water is sprinkled on the palms, after which they are distributed among the faithful. Present-day prayers speak of branches in general (palm branches are the only ones mentioned by name), but in the 10th century palm, olive, myrtle, and laurel branches were all mentioned by name, along with seasonal flowers.

In Lower Bavaria boys would roam the streets singing hymns or carols, particularly the “Pueri Hebraeorum.” The boys were soon named the Pueribuben. In the regions of the Lower Rhine, the blessed branches were placed on graves, but in most other regions these were stored safely, and burned to provide ash for the next year’s Ash Wednesday rite.

Palms are an ancient symbol of peace and victory, and their symbolism probably originated in the Jewish custom of carrying palm branches on special occasions. The word for date palms, loinix, was easily conflated with the phoenix, the bird that rose from its ashes time and again, and palms became a symbol of resurrection and even immortality. Christian martyrs are usually depicted holding palm branches, and ancient art has Jesus in a heaven verdant with palms.

In a world increasingly concerned about ecological balance, the use of palm fronds has raised concerns about the viability of their continued use in Palm Sunday observances worldwide. The demand can often exceed a million fronds in a single country where Palm Sunday is observed, and worldwide the figure is staggering. Sustainable cultivation is clearly the only means to a continued supply and a healthy environment, and the identification of such cultivators and suppliers has become a necessity. Collecting palm fronds is an important means of livelihood in some countries. In Guatemala, for instance, over 25 percent of the population relies on this for a living.

See also Volume I: ANTIGUA AND BARBUDA; ARGENTINA; ARMENIA; AUSTRALIA; AUSTRIA; BELARUS; BELGIUM; BELIZE; BOLIVIA; BOSNIA AND HERZEGOVINA; BRAZIL; BULGARIA; BURUNDI; CANADA; CAPE VERDE; CHILE; COLOMBIA; CONGO; DEMOCRATIC REPUBLIC OF THE; COSTA RICA; CROATIA; CYPRUS; CZECH REPUBLIC; DOMINICA; DOMINICAN REPUBLIC; ECUADOR; EL SALVADOR; EQUATORIAL GUINEA; FRANCE; GEORGIA; GERMANY; GREECE; GRENADA; GUATEMALA; HAITI; HONDURAS; HUNGARY; IRELAND; ITALY; KIRIBATI

See also Volume II: LIECHTENSTEIN; LITHUANIA; LUXEMBOURG; MACEDONIA; MEXICO; MICRONESIA, FEDERATED STATES OF; MOLDOVA; MONACO; NEW ZEALAND; NICARAGUA; PANAMA; PARAGUAY; PERU; PHILIPPINES; POLAND; PORTUGAL; ROMANIA; RUSSIA; RWANDA; ST. LUCIA; SLOVAKIA; SLOVENIA; SPAIN; SWITZERLAND; TRINIDAD AND TOBAGO; UGANDA; UKRAINE; UNITED KINGDOM; URUGUAY; VATICAN CITY; VENEZUELA

See also Volume III: CHRISTIANITY; EASTER; GOOD FRIDAY; HOLY SATURDAY; HOLY WEEK; LENT; MAUNDY THURSDAY

Further Reading

Thich Nhat Hanh, Living Buddha, Living Christ. (New York: Riverhead Books, 1997); Brent Kinman, Jesus’ Entry into Jerusalem: In the Context of Lukan Theology and the Politics of His Day (Leiden, The Netherlands: Brill Academic Publishers, 1995); William C. Placher, The Domestication of Transcendence: How Modern Thinking about God Went Wrong (Louisville, Ky.: Westminster John Knox Press, 1996); Torquato Tasso, Jerusalem Delivered: Gerusalemme Liberata, Anthony M. Esolen, Trans. and ed. (Baltimore: Johns Hopkins University Press, 2000).

~ Pentecost ~

FACT FILE

Observed in	Countries with Christian populations
Observed on	Fiftieth day after Easter
Observed by	Christians

Introduction

Pentecost is the Christian holiday that observes the descent of the Holy Spirit (of the Christian Trinity—the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit) upon Jesus’ Apostles and the early Christians about 50 days (seven weeks) after Easter and 10 days following Ascension Thursday (the day Christians believe Jesus rose into heaven). Pentecost is derived from the Greek word pentekoste, which means “fiftieth,” and actually referred to the Jewish festival of Shavuot, observed on the 50th day after Passover (Pesach). This Hebrew festival celebrated the first fruits of the harvest reaped in spring; but the festival assumed a new significance after the incident involving the Holy Spirit.

Some Christians regard this event as the beginning of the Christian Church and the starting point in the spread of Christianity. Christian Pentecostal churches are so named because they emphasize the Holy Spirit within each individual.

In England this festival is known as Whitsun because of the traditional white robes worn by those who have been baptized the previous Easter. The week starting on Whitsunday (particularly the first three days) is referred to as Whitsuntide or Whit Week. In Old English it was called Hwita Sunnandæg.

Whitsuntide in Old England

Whitsuntide (the week starting from Pentecost) was the period for May games, primarily for the youth who, after the traditional dance around the maypole, would test their skills and strength in archery and wrestling contests. There were other games, including foot races, mimicking and caricature, and climbing a greased pole, to name but a few.

Origins and History

Pentecost is a joyful festival. Among the symbols of the festival are wind and flames. These refer to the fact that the Spirit’s arrival in a room in which the Apostles were gathered was marked by strong gusts of wind and quivering tongues of fire. Those present at the spot unconsciously began speaking in different languages (evidently stirred by the Holy Spirit). Onlookers felt as if they were intoxicated, but Peter (Jesus’ first Apostle) explained to them that they were filled with the Holy Spirit. Imbued with the Holy Spirit, the Apostles took it upon themselves to spread Jesus’ teachings far and wide.

The Feast of Pentecost has also been represented for almost two millennia by the figure of a dove (representing the Holy Spirit) hovering in the air. Church services re-create the moment of the Holy Spirit, through a round window, called Heiliggeistloch, in the church’s center. During the ceremony of veni creator spiritus (“inviting the Holy Spirit”), a fake dove, tied to a golden wheel, is lowered through the hole and is brought down on a slowly rotating wheel until it is hovering just above the heads of the praying assembly.

In many churches ministers wear red robes to symbolize the flames in which the Holy Spirit descended to Earth. The hymns sung at Pentecost services have the Holy Spirit as the main theme. However, Pentecost has been observed in many different ways around the world.

In Italy, for instance, it was a custom to shower rose petals from church ceilings to remember the miracle of the tongues of fire; therefore in Sicily and some other places in Italy, Whitsunday is referred to as Pascha rosatum. The Italian name, Pascha rosatum or Pascha rossa, is derived from the red colors of the vestments of Pentecost. In France it used to be a tradition to blow trumpets during the service to symbolize the wind that accompanied the Holy Spirit.

Pentecost is also a holiday in Austria, Germany, Switzerland, and various Scandinavian countries. There are many local customs and traditions attached to this day. For most pastoral regions in Europe, for example, Pentecost was the day to take the livestock out to pasture for the first time in the year. The first or the final animal would be decorated with a garland of flowers and was called the Pfingstochse or “the Whitsunday Ox.” In Tyrol (Austria), young men of the village, or Goalschnalzer would use their whips in an exhibition of strength and skill, all done in a particular rhythm, without tangling the whips.

In Silesia (a region in Central Europe, bordered by Poland, Germany, and the Czech Republic), the spring maypole was not put up until the day of Pentecost. As the greenery was brought in from wooded areas to decorate buildings and streets, a creature from the woods, dressed in the most fantastic fashion (usually it would be a young man, with green branches and reeds covering his body and tree bark covering his face) was brought into the village amidst much jubilation and fanfare. Once in the village, the creature would be customarily cleansed. It was also customary to guess the identity of the person in disguise. In southern Germany this individual is called Pfingstl; in Thuringia province he is known as the “wild man.” The water, the green leaves, and flowers in this tradition symbolize renewal and fruitfulness, the gifts of spring.

In Thuringia, young girls enjoyed the day with a game known as Topfschlagen, or “strike the pot.” A girl with her eyes covered had to locate and hit a pot

Patriarch Maxim, left, the head of the Bulgarian Orthodox Church holds walnut leaves as he leaves St. Alexander Nevsky Church in Sofia, after a solemn liturgy marking the Orthodox Pentecost (Descent of the Holy Spirit). (AP Photo/Srdjan Ilic)

Stilton Cheese Rolling, Stilton, and Cambridgeshire

During the annual Whitmonday Fair, teams divided into four and wearing strange costumes roll cheese along a 50-yard course. Kicking or throwing the cheese is prohibited. The winner's prize is a whole 16-pound Stilton cheese and port, the wine traditionally drunk with this pungent cheese. In Ide Hill, Kent, women run after a lump of cheese thrown down the undulating village green.

(turned upside down) with a long-handled wooden spoon or stick. The prize was a pfingsthabn (a rooster). This game, now popular in Germany, is no longer restricted to Pentecost. It is enjoyed by children, and a small gift such as candy is generally kept under the pot.

See also Volume I: ANDORRA; ANGOLA; ARGENTINA; AUSTRALIA; AUSTRIA; BELGIUM; BELIZE; BOLIVIA; BRAZIL; BURUNDI; CANADA; CAPE VERDE; CHILE; COLOMBIA; CONGO, DEMOCRATIC REPUBLIC OF THE; COSTA RICA; CROATIA; CZECH REPUBLIC; DOMINICA; DOMINICAN REPUBLIC; ECUADOR; EL SALVADOR; EQUATORIAL GUINEA; FRANCE; GERMANY; GRENADA; GUATEMALA; HAITI; HONDURAS; HUNGARY; IRELAND; ITALY; KIRIBATI

See also Volume II: LIECHTENSTEIN; LITHUANIA; LUXEMBOURG; MALTA; MEXICO; MICRONESIA, FEDERATED STATES OF; MONACO; NICARAGUA; PALAU; PANAMA; PARAGUAY; PERU; PHILIPPINES; POLAND; PORTUGAL; RWANDA; ST. LUCIA; SAN MARINO; SEYCHELLES; SLOVAKIA; SLOVENIA; SPAIN; SWITZERLAND; TRINIDAD AND TOBAGO; UGANDA; URUGUAY; UNITED KINGDOM; UNITED STATES; VATICAN CITY; VENEZUELA

See also Volume III: CHRISTIANITY; EASTER; GOOD FRIDAY; HOLY SATURDAY; HOLY WEEK; LENT; PALM SUNDAY

Further Reading

Paul Bosch, The Paschal Cycle: Lent, Easter, Pentecost Worship Resources (St. Louis: Concordia, 1980); Carthusian, From Advent to Pentecost, Carmel Brett, Trans. (Kalamazoo, Mich.: Cistercian Publications, 1999); Gerald Dawe, The Rest Is History (Newry, Northern Ireland: Abbey Press, 1998); John T. A. Gunstone, The Feast of Pentecost: The Great Fifty Days in the Liturgy (London: Faith Press, 1967); Paul L. Maier, In the Fullness of Time: A Historian Looks at Christmas, Easter, and the Early Church (San Francisco: HarperSanFrancisco, 1991); J. Dwight Pentecost, Things to Come: A Study in Biblical Eschatology (Grand Rapids, Mich.: Zondervan, 1964); Andrew D. Urshan, Pentecost as It Was in the Early 1900s (Portland, Ore.: Apostolic Book Publishers, 1987); Valentine Zander, Pentecost in the Orthodox Church (Wirral, U.K.: Anargyroi Press for the Monastery of St. Seraphim of Sarov, 1994).

~ Pesach ~

FACT FILE

Observed in	Countries with Jewish populations
Observed on	Begins on the 15th of Nisan, the first month in the Jewish calendar, and continues for eight days
Observed by	Jews

Introduction

Pesach, or Passover, commemorates the departure of the nation of Israel from Egypt and the origin of a Jewish state led by Moses (or Moshe) about 3,000 years ago. Pesach signifies both the physical as well as the spiritual freedom earned by the Jews. The tale of the Jews' mass exodus is told in Chapters 1–15 of the book of Exodus in the Bible. Many of the Pesach customs are provided in Chapters 12–15. Though it is mainly celebrated to remember the exodus of the Jews from Egypt after centuries of slavery, the festival also marks the beginning of the harvest season in Israel.

The name Pesach is derived from the Hebrew peh-samech-chet, which means “to pass over,” “pass through,” “exempt,” or “spare.” Jews believe that God, while slaying the firstborn children in Egypt during the plague, spared their houses. Jews consider the removal of chametz from their homes as the most important aspect of Pesach. Chametz refers to leavened bread, and this act recalls that, during the exodus, the Jews were in such a hurry to leave Egypt that they did not have time to let their bread rise.

Thus, they ate unleavened or flat bread. It is also symbolic of the removal of egotism and pride, or “puffiness,” from our souls.

Chametz is any food that is made of grains like wheat, barley, oats, rye, and spelt (a subspecies of common wheat, a hardy wheat grown mostly in Europe for livestock feed) that has not been completely cooked within 18 minutes of being mixed with water, or food that has been allowed to rise or become fermented with yeast. This includes food items like bread, cake, cereals, cookies, pizza, pasta, and beer. Jews believe that any food that contains grain or its derivatives can be called chametz.

Jews eat matzo (or matzah) during Passover. This is an unleavened bread symbolic of the strong faith that enabled them to gain their freedom. Matzo is the very essence of the exodus, the main ingredient of seder rituals, and an inseparable component of Passover, or the Festival of Matzah, as it is called in the Torah. It is believed that, by eating matzo, one can get rid of the egotism that emanates from eating chametz.

Mah Nishtanah

It is said that, in obedience to the biblical injunction, “And thou shalt tell thy son,” children are an important part of the seder celebration. It is the youngest member who asks the four questions, or Mah Nishtanah. These read as follows:

- Why do we eat only matzo during Pesach?
- Why do we eat bitter herbs, maror, at our seder?
- Why do we dip our foods twice tonight?
- Why do we lean on a pillow tonight?

Origins and History

The Jewish people were originally known as Hebrews or Israelites. Generally the term Hebrew refers to someone who has passed to the other side, but in the rabbinic sense it refers to the first Hebrew patriarch Abraham. The term Israelites and the phrase Children of Israel collectively refer to the descendants of Jacob, who was the third Hebrew patriarch and was also known as Israel. The word Jew is derived from the region of Judea, which today lies in southern Israel. Judea, in turn, is derived from the name of the tribe of Judah, named after one of Jacob's 12 sons.

Pesach celebrates the mass departure and subsequent freedom of the Jews from Egypt almost 3,300 years ago to escape from centuries of

Keeping Kosher

Kosher food is food prepared in accordance with Jewish dietary guidelines or kashruth, which means “proper.” Almost any food can be called kosher if it follows the proper guidelines. According to the Torah cloven-hoofed, cud-chewing mammals are kosher. Deer, sheep, and goats are all considered kosher meats. Only certain birds are considered kosher, however. These include chicken, duck, goose, and turkey (in the United States). Fish and meat cannot be served together, nor can milk and meat. For a fish to be kosher, it must have fins and easily removable scales. In most cases, scales must still be on the fish when it is bought.

If it is to be considered kosher, food must be prepared with kosher equipment. For example, a fishmonger’s cutting implements and machines must be kosher. Poultry and meat must be slaughtered under strict guidelines called shechita; that is, the animals must be killed without pain. The lungs, in particular, must be pure. In addition, all blood and most fat must be removed. Only those who are trained and qualified are allowed to slaughter kosher animals.

Families must use two separate sets of utensils, pots, pans, and dishes. One set is reserved for poultry or meat, and the other is used for everything else. In addition these dishes and utensils cannot be washed together. Dishes and utensils must be dried using separate racks or dishtowels.

bondage. It is said that the Hebrews entered Egypt as a group of tribes and left as one nation. The exodus population has been estimated at 600,000 men above the age of 20; their wives and children constituted the rest of the three million people.

This story was told in the first 15 chapters of the biblical book of Exodus. According to this account, Jacob, with his 70 family members, traveled to Egypt to live a better life and escape a massive famine in Canaan (today’s Palestine). Jacob’s son Joseph also lived in Egypt, where he had won the heart of the pharaoh of Egypt with his wisdom and had been appointed the viceroy of the kingdom. Over the next 430 years the Hebrews prospered in Egypt, and their strength increased to three million. Their growing numbers and power became a cause of worry for pharaoh, who thought that the Hebrews might side with his enemies to dethrone him. So he commanded that the Hebrews should work as slaves, engaged in building roads and cities for him. He thought that this hardship would make the Hebrews so exhausted at the end of the day that they would have no time or energy to beget children. The Israelites were also confined to an area known as Goshen (the fertile land lying east of the Nile Delta and west of the Palestinian border).

When even this step did not help to slow the population growth of the Israelites, pharaoh ordered that all Israeli male babies be killed at birth. However, the Hebrew midwives Shifra and Puah, who were appointed by pharaoh to kill the male babies, feared the wrath of God and did not follow pharaoh’s orders. Moses, who would become the leader of the Hebrews, was born around the time when this decree was issued. To save her son from being murdered, Moses’ mother Jochebed placed the infant in a basket in the Nile as Moses’ sister Miriam watched from a distance to see who would spot the child. The infant was ultimately found by pharaoh’s daughter, who decided to raise him like any other royal child. She named the child Moses and also unknowingly appointed Jochebed as his

A father helps his seven-year-old son recite from the Haggadah, a special Pesach text recounting the Jews’ exodus from Egypt and explaining the holiday’s rituals, during a seder in Queens, New York. (AP Photo/Stuart Ramson)

Charoset Recipe

Ingredients:

- 4 medium apples, 2 tart and 2 sweet
- 1/2 c. almonds, finely chopped
- 1/4 c. sweet wine
- 1/4 c. dry wine
- 1 Tbs. cinnamon

Preparation:

Shred the apples and mix with all the remaining ingredients. Leave it for three to six hours, until the wine is absorbed by the other ingredients. Serve on matzo.

nurse. Thus, Moses' real mother was able to make certain he knew his Hebrew heritage.

Once on a visit to his fellow Israelites, Moses saw a Hebrew slave being mercilessly flogged by his Egyptian master. Infuriated, Moses killed the Egyptian. However, fearing prosecution from the Egyptian authorities, Moses fled Egypt. He took the desert route and finally reached Midian, an area situated in present-day Saudi Arabia along the eastern shores of the Red Sea. There he met a local priest named Jethro and married his daughter Zipporah. Moses lived in Midian for the next few years as a shepherd.

Sometime later Moses had a vision from God (the incident of the burning bush), who told him that he and his brother Aaron were the chosen ones to lead the Hebrews out of Egypt into the Promised Land. Hesitating initially, Moses and Aaron eventually returned to Egypt.

Finally during the reign of Pharaoh Thutmose III (1500–1426) in 1476, Moses, under the guidance of God, led his people out of Egypt after God had sent a series of 10 plagues. These plagues were meant to warn pharaoh that if he did not let the Hebrews go then various diseases would kill the Egyptians. But, for the first two plagues the court magicians devised antidotes so the plagues could not harm the Egyptians. This made pharaoh consider himself greater than God. However, his magicians failed to work their magic on the third plague. But the smug pharaoh still did not change his mind about letting the Hebrews go. On being reminded by Moses after each plague about the imminent devastation of the Egyptians, pharaoh would agree to let them go but would again take back his word. It was only after the 10th plague (and losing his own son) that pharaoh finally agreed to let the Hebrews go.

Since the Hebrews left in haste, they had no time to bake their daily bread in the usual way for their trip to Canaan; therefore, they baked unleavened bread called matzo. By the time the Hebrews reached the shores of the Red Sea, pharaoh changed his mind again and sent the Egyptian army to bring them back. When the Hebrews saw pharaoh's army approaching, they panicked. God then commanded Moses to use his staff to strike the waters, which then parted, making a path for the Hebrews to pass through. When all the Hebrews had left the water, God commanded Moses to touch the sea with his staff again. This done, the waters closed again, drowning the pursuing Egyptian army.

It took the Hebrews 42 days to reach Mount Sinai, where Moses received the Ten Commandments from God. This event is celebrated by the Jews as Shavuot or Feast of Weeks, referring to the timing of the festival, which occurs exactly seven weeks after Passover. The Hebrews wandered for 40 years before they finally reached the land of Canaan, the "Promised Land."

See also Volume I: ISRAEL

See also Volume II: UNITED STATES

See also Volume III: JUDAISM; SPRING FESTIVALS

Fun Fact

At a seder, participants are supposed to lean on pillows or recline in their chairs. In the ancient world reclining while eating was a sign of freedom.

Further Reading

Sharon Cohen Anisfeld, Tara Mohr, and Catherine Spector, eds., The Women's Seder Sourcebook: Rituals and Readings for Use at the Seder (Woodstock, Vt.: Jewish Lights Publisher, 2003); Baruch M. Bokser, The Origins of the Seder: The Passover Rite and Early Rabbinic Judaism (Berkeley, Calif.: University of California Press, 1984); Ruth Fredman Cernea, The Passover Seder: An Anthropological Perspective on Jewish Culture (Lanham, Md.: University Press of America, 1995); Rabbi Leon Klenicki and Myra Cohen Klenicki, The Passover Celebration: A Haggadah for the Seder (Chicago: The Anti-Defamation League and The Liturgy Training Publications, 2001).

~ Purim ~

FACT FILE

Observed in	Countries with Jewish populations
Observed on	Fourteenth of Adar, the 12th month of the Jewish calendar
Observed by	Jews

Introduction

The Jewish festival of Purim commemorates the deliverance of Persian Jews from the cruel schemes and plotting of the evil Persian noble Haman (sixth century B.C.E.), who wished to exterminate them. It is a joyous festival marked with singing, dancing, feasting, and dressing in costumes. The story behind this festival is written in the Megillah, a scroll that recounts the biblical story of Esther, the Persian king's brave Jewish queen. The word purim means "lots" and is a reference to a lottery that Haman used to select the date on which to kill all the Jews.

The 13th day of Adar was chosen by Haman for the massacre of the Jews. This was a crucial day for the Jewish community, because it was a matter of life and death for them. In cities that were walled during the reign of Joshua, Purim is celebrated on the 15th of the month because, according to the book of Esther, in Shushan (an ancient city of the Elamite, Persian, and Parthian Empires of Iran and today called Shush), the fierce encounters between the Jews and Haman's forces ended on the 14th of Adar. Hence, the celebration of Purim on the 15th day is known as Shushan Purim. As with almost all Jewish festivals, Purim starts at sundown on the previous day

Esther made sure that Haman and his 10 sons were hanged on the gallows he had built to hang Mordechai and all the Jews.

Fun Fact

A special noise-maker called a grogger is used on Purim to show scorn for Haman

Origins and History

The festival of Purim is the celebration of Jewish deliverance from extermination as recounted in the book of Esther, which dates back to the third or fourth century B.C.E. Though these dates are sometimes disputed, they are largely accepted by modern scholars.

Amalek

Amalek was supposedly the grandson of Esau (Amalek is only known from the Bible). The names Amalek and Amalekite are used interchangeably; both refer to a people rather than an individual. Each of their kings was called Agag, a hereditary name. The Amalekites and the Hebrews were bitter enemies. The Amaleks were nomads who, like all groups living marginally, threatened the well-being and political stability of the people living inside the borders. If they actually existed they were probably exterminated by the time of King

David. By the time of the rabbis in the first century C.E., Amalek had come to represent pure evil. The struggle between Israel and Amalek, therefore, was a struggle between good and evil.

In the book of Esther, the vile Haman is called the Agagite, which is interpreted as accusing him of being a descendant of the Amalek king Agag, which may sound to modern ears like name-calling. The reference might also be metaphorical, not literal. Indeed, the reference to Amalek has been used symbolically to refer to enemies of Judaism throughout history, for example, Hitler and the Nazis.

Fun Fact

The phrase to “hang higher than Haman” is used of someone who has committed an act so evil that he or she is going to be punished in a terrible manner.

During the rule of King Nebuchadnezzar II of Babylon (605–562), the Jews belonging to the kingdom of Judah were forced to leave their land and deported to Babylon. This epoch of Jewish history is known as the Babylonian Captivity or Babylonian Exile. Nebuchadnezzar II is known to have conquered Judah and Jerusalem; he also destroyed the First Temple of Jerusalem. Eventually the Persians took over the kingdom of Babylon.

According to the book of Esther, King Ahasuerus was the ruler of Persia at that time (this was probably a reference to Xerxes I, r. 485–65.) The other central characters in this tale of intrigue and reversal of fortune are: Esther, Ahasuerus’s beautiful Jewish queen; her cousin Mordechai, who raised her; and the king’s scheming Persian advisor Haman. King Ahasuerus did not know that Esther was a Jew; Mordechai had told her to conceal this fact. Haman hated Mordechai because Mordechai had refused to bow down to him, so Haman convinced the king to let him to decide the fate of the Jewish people. When he plotted to massacre them Mordechai asked Esther to beg the king to spare the Jewish people. In those times no one could approach the king unless summoned by him and risked death if they did so without permission. Esther fasted for three days and then visited the king, who welcomed her. She told the king about Haman’s plans to exterminate the Jews and pleaded with him to save them. As a result the king withdrew the decree against the Jews, Haman was sentenced to death on the gallows, and the Jews became the king’s favored people.

Esther’s brave act prevented the massacre of the Jewish people, so this event is celebrated by Jews all over the world.

While some scholars believe the book of Esther to be a historical work, many others dismiss it as fiction. The criticism stems from the fact that there are descriptions given in the book of Esther that contradict the accounts of Persian history recorded by Greek historians. For example, King Ahasuerus has been identified with different Persian rulers, and there are conflicting views about his identity.

Fun Fact

Pastries called hamantaschen are traditionally eaten on Purim.

Further Reading

Miriam Chaikin, Make Noise, Make Merry: The Story and Meaning of Purim (New York: Clarion Books, 1983); Philip Goodman, ed., The Purim Anthology (Philadelphia: Jewish Publication Society, 1988); Isaac Sender, The Commentators’ Al hanissim: Insights of the Sages on Purim and Chanukah (Nanuet, N.Y.: Feldheim Publishers, 2000); Maida Silverman, Festival of Esther: The True Story of Purim (New York: Simon & Schuster, 1988); Norman Simms, The Story of Purim: A Waikato Jewish Association Version of the Purim Story (Hamilton, N.Z.: Author, 1998).

Young Israelis dance in the street in the Tel Aviv suburb of Holon during the annual Purim parade. The Jewish holiday of Purim commemorates the rescue of the Jews from genocide in Persia. (AP Photo/Pier Paolo Cito)

❧ Ramadan ❧

FACT FILE

Observed in	Countries with Muslim populations
Observed on	Ramadan, the ninth month of the Islamic calendar
Observed by	Muslims

Introduction

Ramadan, the most sacred month of the year for more than one billion Muslims, is the ninth month of the Islamic lunar calendar. Muslims believe that Allah began to reveal the Koran (their sacred book) to Muhammad on the 27th day of Ramadan many centuries ago. This process continued for 23 years, until Muhammad's death in 632 C.E. The much awaited commencement of the month is based on sightings of the new Moon as well as astronomical calculations. Ramadan is frequently used as a synonym for Sawm, the sacred fasting festival that runs throughout the month.

During Ramadan Muslims observe a stringent, dawn-to-dusk fast. The consumption of food and water during the day is strictly forbidden. This period is a time for introspection, devotion to God, and self-control. Muslims consider it as a necessary period for revitalizing their spiritual lives.

Fasting did not originate with Islam; it is perhaps as old as Adam, who was the first Muslim to submit to Allah. It is not quite clear when fasting began among Adam's descendants, but all the prophets practiced it and considered it to be a good discipline for others.

The Koran mentions that Musa (Moses) fasted for 40 days; Dawud (David, the legendary king of Israel) used to fast for half of the year (fasting every other day); Issa (Jesus) was also known to have fasted for 40 days (during what is now called Lent, usually observed before Easter by Christian churches). Modern-day Muslims firmly believe that Allah intends to draw the attention of ordinary mortals to the deeds and practices of those noble souls who attained piety through fasting.

The third religious obligation, or pillar, of Islam's Five Pillars, fasting has many other benefits. Among these, the most important is that it is a means of learning self-restraint. Because fasting draws attention away from satisfying bodily appetites during the daylight hours, one's spiritual nature achieves a measure of ascendancy, bringing one closer to God. Ramadan is thus a time of intense worship, reading of the Koran, practicing charity, purifying one's behavior, and performing good deeds.

As a secondary goal, fasting is a way of experiencing hunger and developing empathy with the less fortunate (who often are underfed and may even starve), in addition to expressing gratitude and appreciation for all of God's gifts. From a medical point of view, fasting is also beneficial to health and provides a suitable break in the cycle of overindulgence.

Throughout the Islamic world all restaurants are closed during the day during Ramadan. Families

Indonesian Muslim girls read the Koran, the Muslim holy book, on the second day of Ramadan at a mosque in Jakarta, Indonesia. Ramadan, a month-long period of fasting and purification, celebrates God's revelation of the Koran to the prophet Muhammad. During Ramadan Muslims are forbidden to eat, drink, smoke, or have sexual relations during daylight hours. (AP Photo/Dita Alangkara)

Suhoor and Iftar

Suhoor is a small meal usually eaten before sunrise during the month of Ramadan; it is the last meal before the commencement of the fast. Iftar is a meal offered at the end of each day during Ramadan to break the fast. It literally means “breakfast.”

usually wake up early for the suhoor, a predawn meal. After sunset, the fast is broken by a small meal known as the iftar (which generally comprises dates and beverages that boost energy quickly). Evening prayers and dinner follow. Since Ramadan stresses communal harmony (with everyone dining at almost the same time), it is a common practice among Muslims to invite others to share the evening meal, giving rise to iftar parties.

Origins and History

Muhammad, though only an illiterate trader from Arabia, was unlike other people of his time. He had a reflective bent of mind and routinely spent his nights in a cave (near Mecca, his home), in meditation and introspection. Around the year 610 on the 27th of Ramadan, while meditating, Muhammad had a vision of the archangel Gabriel (Jibril) and heard a voice saying to him: “Read in the name of your Lord the Creator. He created man from something which clings.” Gabriel went on to tell Muhammad that he had been chosen to receive the word of Allah. In subsequent days Muhammad uttered the first verses that would be recorded as the Koran. (In Arabic, Quran, from quran meaning “to read” or “to utter.”)

What is now a compulsory annual event to be observed by all able-bodied Muslims started in the early years of Muhammad’s stay in Medina. Prior to his flight to Medina, he was in the habit of fasting three times a month, and he ordered his companions to fast along with him. The fast and its accompanying restrictions were meant to teach Muslims the virtues of self-control, patience, and serenity, as well as charity and compassion for the less fortunate. Observance of the fast is believed to make up for personal misdeeds and faults and to secure a place in paradise for the devout. It is a time for devotion, meditation, and reaffirmation of one’s faith in Allah and in Islam.

Ramadan also became a period of abstention and of practicing different types of austerities. During this month, feasting, drinking, smoking, gambling, and sexual relationships are forbidden. Devotees are also expected to abstain from emotional vices like anger, violence, greed, envy, backbiting, and lust. These prohibitions are to be practiced only during the daylight hours. Customarily, they start at dawn, from the time a white line is visible on the horizon, and end at dusk, when the Sun sinks below the horizon. These hours are called fajr and maghrib, respectively.

When the fast ends (on the first day of Shawwal, the following month), Eid al-Fitr is observed for three days. Gifts are exchanged, and Muslims rejoice for having endured the fast, thus having come closer to Allah. Eid al-Fitr is a time for friends and families to worship and enjoy being together. In some places, fairs are organized to celebrate the end of Ramadan.

During Ramadan, it is customary for Muslims to visit the masjid (“mosque”) and spend many hours there praying, meditating, and studying the Koran. Apart from the habitual five daily prayers, Muslims chant a special prayer known as the “Taraweeh” (“Night Prayer”) during Ramadan. The prayer’s length is generally twice or three times the length of the daily prayers. In fact, devout Muslims routinely spend the whole night in prayer.

See also Volume I: AFGHANISTAN; ALBANIA; ALGERIA; AZERBAIJAN; BAHRAIN; BANGLADESH; BOSNIA AND HERZEGOVINA; BRUNEI; BURKINA FASO; CHAD; COMOROS; CÔTE D’IVOIRE; DJIBOUTI; EGYPT; ERITREA; ETHIOPIA; GAMBIA, THE; GHANA; GUINEA; GUINEA-BISSEAU; INDIA; INDONESIA; IRAN; IRAQ; JORDAN; KAZAKHSTAN; KUWAIT; KYRGYZSTAN

See also Volume II: LEBANON; LIBERIA; LIBYA; MACEDONIA; MALAYSIA; MALDIVES; MALI; MAURITANIA; MOROCCO; NIGER; NIGERIA; OMAN; PAKISTAN; QATAR; SAUDI ARABIA; SENEGAL; SIERRA LEONE; SOMALIA; SUDAN; SYRIA; TAJIKISTAN; TANZANIA; TUNISIA; TURKEY; TURKMENISTAN; UNITED ARAB EMIRATES; UZBEKISTAN; YEMEN

See also Volume III: ISLAM

Further Reading

Marjo Buitelaar, Fasting and Feasting in Morocco: Women’s Participation in Ramadan (Providence, R.I.: Berg, 1993); M. Sultan Baig, ed., Ramadan: Obligations and Practices (Chicago: Muslim Community Center, 1988); Muhammad Hasanayn Haykal, The Road to Ramadan (New York: Ballantine, 1976); Muslim Holidays: Teacher’s Guide and Student Resources (Fountain Valley, Calif.: Council on Islamic Education, 1997).

❧ Ram Navami ❧

FACT FILE

Observed in	Countries with Hindu populations, especially India, Nepal, Bangladesh, and Sri Lanka
Observed on	Ninth of Shukla Paksh (the bright fortnight) in Chaitra, the first month of the Hindu calendar
Observed by	Hindus

Introduction

According to legends and myths connected with Hinduism, Vishnu (who is the second deity of the sacred Hindu trinity—with Brahma and Shiva—and the Preserver of the universe) made his appearance on Earth at various times, in diverse forms and manifestations (avatars), to restore righteousness, noble virtues, and peace to the world. The legends further narrate that during the Tretayuga (the second subperiod in a caturyuga and the second age of the Earth, calculated at around 3000 B.C.E.) Ravana, the demon king of Lanka (modern Sri Lanka), had been creating havoc on Earth. Because of a boon that Brahma had given him Ravana could not be killed by any god or goddess. So Vishnu assumed a human form in order to redeem humanity and was born into this world as the son of King Dasharatha and his first queen Kaushalya, who ruled over the kingdom of Ayodhya. Lord Rama is regarded as the seventh incarnation of Vishnu. As was preordained, Rama annihilated Ravana.

All Indians, regardless of creed, caste, or religion are well versed in the legend of Lord Rama, the hero of the great Sanskrit epic the Ramayana. Lord Rama is a celebrated figure, the epitome of all noble virtues and lofty ideals. He is also known as Maryada Purushottam, and his life exemplifies the ideal Hindu man: a dutiful son, perfect husband, and compassionate though idealistic ruler. Because of his excellence in all spheres, Lord Rama's birth is commemorated annually with great pomp and splendor. It is observed on the ninth day following the new Moon in the shukla paksh (the bright fortnight) of the Indian lunar month of Chaitra, which falls sometime in the month of April on the Gregorian calendar. The festival of Ram Navami serves as a reminder of the noble principles for which Lord Rama, the principal character of the Ramayana, stood.

On the day of Ram Navami thousands of pilgrims congregate in two locations: the temples of Rameshwaram on the eastern coast of India (where Rama and his army of monkeys built a bridge of rocks so they could reach Lanka) and Ayodhya (his birthplace). Here they participate in colorful and elaborate ceremonies that include processions, with dazzling floats depicting the royal trio (Rama, Sita, and Lakshmana), as well as the faithful and loyal Hanuman, Lord Rama's monkey-general.

In India the eight days preceding the festival of Ram Navami is observed as Nava Ratri (nine nights). During these days the mother goddess (Durga, or Shakti, who epitomizes the creative power of the divine female) is worshipped. As representatives of the deity prepubescent girls are clothed in finery and ornaments and worshipped in the temples. Many devout Hindus observe a fast for the nine consecutive days (though some do it for a fewer), consuming frugal meals of milk and fruit.

Ram Navami Puja

This ceremony begins when the youngest female member in the family applies a tika (a large red sacred mark) to each male member in the family. A red bindi (dot or round spot) is marked on the forehead of every female member. Everyone takes part in the puja by chanting sacred Sanskrit verses. All then stand while the Aarti ("worshipping with lamps") is performed, after which Ganga jal ("holy water of the river Ganges") is sprinkled over all those who are present. Bhajans ("devotional songs") accompany the rites and rituals. Finally, prasadam ("blessed food") is distributed to everyone.

Rama and the Sun

There may be a connection between Sun worship and Lord Rama. The Sun is believed to be the progenitor of his dynasty, which is known as the Raghuvamsa, or Raghukula: raghu means “Sun” and vamsa (or kula) means “family line.” The stipulated hour for the celebration of Rama’s birth is when the Sun is directly overhead and at the acme of its brilliance. Rama is variously called Raghupati, Raghunatha, or Raghavendra.

For at least a week before the festival, temples dedicated to Rama are adorned with lights and flowers. The images of Rama and his family members are also richly decorated. Usually the worship starts with the reciting of Vedic mantras devoted to Vishnu, followed by offerings of fruit and flowers to the deity. Satsangs, or public gatherings, are organized to celebrate the occasion. Excerpts from the Ramacharitamanas (The Lake That Is the Story of Rama), written by the well-loved Hindi poet Goswami Tulsidas (1532–1623), in which Lord Rama’s many virtues are extolled, are recited. People of all creeds and castes eagerly participate in all such events and functions. In Ayodhya a huge fair goes on for two days. Rath yatras, or chariot processions, of Rama, his wife, brother, and Hanuman are taken out from various temples. Hanuman, who is revered for his unflinching loyalty to Lord Rama, enjoys a position of esteem and prestige in the celebrations.

Origins and History

According to the Ramayana Lord Vishnu was born as Rama in the seventh of his 10 incarnations, the son of King Dasharatha and his first queen Kaushalya. Dasharatha had three other sons—Lakshmana, Bharata, and Shatrughna—from his two other wives, Kaikeyi and Sumitra. Rama married Sita.

Dasharatha decided to crown Rama (his eldest son) as the king of Ayodhya, but his second queen Kaikeyi (egged on by her handmaid Manthara) asked King Dasharatha for the two boons that he had promised her because they were long overdue. As a result of the first one she persuaded Dasharatha to send Rama into exile for 14 years; with the second one she claimed the throne for her son Bharata.

An actress in Allahabad, India, performs during Ram Navami, the festival that celebrates the birth of the Hindu god Ram. (AP Photo/Rajesh Kumar Singh)

In obedience to his father's command Rama gave up his claim to the throne and went into exile. Sita and Rama's third brother Lakshmana accompanied him into exile. The grief-stricken King Dasharatha died shortly afterward.

During their sojourn in the forest Sita was kidnapped by Ravana. This resulted in a fierce battle between Ravana and Rama. Helped by a band of monkeys led by Hanuman, Rama slew Ravana. When his 14-year exile ended Rama returned to Ayodhya, claimed his throne, and ruled the kingdom.

To Hindus Rama's life, as portrayed in the Ramayana, provides an example of an obedient and honorable life for an Indian. Lord Rama's story is often mentioned to prove how he lived a life of virtue (dharma). He is seen as the true personification of ideal human values. The celebration of his birthday Ram Navami reminds Hindus of the noble principles that Lord Rama stood for.

See also Volume I: BANGLADESH; BHUTAN; FIJI; GUYANA; INDIA

See also Volume II: MALAYSIA; MAURITIUS; NEPAL; SRI LANKA; SURINAME

See also Volume III: HINDUISM

Further Reading

Rajendra Arun, Rama: The Lord of Decorum (New Delhi: Ocean Books, 2000); Mandakranta Bose, ed., The Ramayana Culture: Text, Performance, and Iconography (New Delhi: D. K. Printworld, 2003); V. Krishnamurthy, Essentials of Hinduism (New Delhi: Narosa Publishing House, 1989); Swami Siddhi-nathananda, Rama: The Ideal Man (Calcutta: Ramakrishna Sevashrama, 1988); Valmiki, Ramayana (New York: New York University Press, 2005).

❧ Rosh Hashanah ❧

FACT FILE

Observed in	Countries with Jewish populations, especially Israel, United States, and Canada
Observed on	First two days of Tishri, the seventh month of the Jewish calendar
Observed by	Jews

Introduction

The Jewish New Year is called Rosh Hashanah. It falls on the first and second days of the month of Tishri (which means “beginning” in Babylonian), the seventh month of the Jewish ecclesiastical calendar (September–October on the Gregorian calendar). Meaning the “head of the year” in Hebrew, Rosh Hashanah is so named because Tishri is also the first month of the Hebrew civil calendar; in ancient times this date also coincided with the start of the economic year. In the widely followed Gregorian calendar, the festival generally occurs between September 5 and October 5.

In the Torah, Rosh Hashanah is referred to by many names. It is called Yom Tervah (“Day of Blasting”) or Feast of the Trumpets. This refers to the practice of blowing a shofar to announce this day. A shofar (usually a ram’s horn) was used as a trumpet in ancient times to declare the sighting of the new Moon as well as to announce a time for war. The observance is also known as Yom HaZikaron (“Day of Remembering”), a reference to Abraham, who was willing to sacrifice Isaac, his only son, because God ordered him to. When God saw Abraham’s unquestioning obedience, he told Abraham not to sacrifice Isaac. The Jews believe this occurred on the first of Tishri and remember the occasion reverentially.

Rosh Hashanah marks the beginning of the 10-day period called Yamim Noraim (“Days of Awe”), a time for repentance that ends with Yom Kippur, the Day of Atonement. This period is also called Ben Kesseh Le’Assor; kesseh and assor refer to Rosh Hashanah and Yom Kippur, respectively. Thus, the name describes the period between the two festivals.

The Shofar

Originally, the shofar was used for military purposes, but in the biblical era it was an instrument of the priests. There were two kinds of shofar—one made of a ram’s horn, used to signal days of fasting, and one made of ibex (or kudu) horn, used to announce Rosh Hashanah and the Yovel Days. In order to be suitable for ritual use, a shofar must be three handbreadths in length. It is the only ancient Hebrew “musical” instrument that remains, and its sound is not musical.

The primary use of the shofar is to announce something about to happen: to assemble people, especially as a call to worship; to assemble troops in preparation for battle; to alert people to danger; to announce the presence of God; to proclaim an oath sworn before God; to announce the beginning of a festival; or to signal the arrival of the Messiah.

The shofar announces the movements of history. There are four shofar calls: The tekiah, a long clear blast that calls the people to community; the shevarim, a broken, despondent sound of three short calls that reminds the people that the world is a broken place of hurt and pain; the teruah, a rapid series of nine short notes that tells the people it is time to move forward; the tekiah gedolah, or great tekiah, one long, unbroken blast, held as long as possible, that calls the people to the future, hope, and triumph of goodness.

A man blows his shofar, a ram's horn, from his backyard in Jackson Hole, Wyoming, as part of his religious observance of the beginning of Rosh Hashanah, the Jewish New Year. A blown horn originally signified alarm but now represents a call to spiritual renewal. (AP Photo/Jackson Hole News, Jim Evans)

The festival is widely celebrated by Jews around the world. While it is a time for deep introspection, it is also a time for friends and family to come together and for people to forgive each other. Most significantly Rosh Hashanah is the time to recognize God as the supreme judge of all living creatures.

Origins and History

There is no mention of Rosh Hashanah as a two-day holiday in the Torah. In fact, the first two days of the month of Tishri were not recognized as Rosh Hashanah until Talmudic times. The leaders of the day were perhaps unwilling to encourage large celebrations around the time of the year when there were numerous pagan harvest festivals. However, in ancient times witnesses who observed the skies in Jerusalem set the date by determining when the new Moon first appeared. This system made it difficult for people living far from Jerusalem; they were unable to learn the precise date of the festival falling on the first day of the year. Even the people living relatively close to the city missed the festival at times. It all depended on whether the witnesses arrived in time. So, to give everyone a chance to join in the observances, two days were set aside for the festival. Today Reform Jews observe Rosh Hashanah for only one day.

Jews associate Rosh Hashanah with many incidents in their religious history. It is believed that on Rosh Hashanah God created humanity. On Rosh Hashanah Isaac was born to Abraham, as promised by God, when Sarah was 90, and Abraham was well over 100 years old. In another story from the

The Samaritans

The origins of the Samaritans are disputed to this day. Some historians claim that the Samaritans are descendants of mixed ancestry, both of Israelite lineage and of deportees brought into the region of Samaria by the Assyrians from other lands they had conquered, including Cuthah. On the other hand the Samaritans consider themselves the descendants of Israelites of the Northern Kingdom who remained behind during the Babylonian Captivity and so introduced none of the religious changes brought about among the Jews during this time.

Challah Bread

Challah bread, served on the Sabbath and all Hebrew holidays except Passover (Pesach), is a rich, leavened bread made with several eggs (which gives it its deep yellow color). Challah is actually not the bread itself, but a small piece of the dough torn off before the bread is baked. The small piece, the challah, is burned to symbolize the destruction of the Temple, and then it is thrown away after saying a special prayer. There are many recipes for making challah, depending on the cook's ethnic tradition. Between the first and second risings, the dough is divided and braided to make the characteristic "ladder," symbolizing life's ladder, which everyone must climb.

Ingredients:

2 c. milk
 1/3 c. butter
 1/4 c. water
 6–7 1/2 c. unsifted flour
 2 packages dry yeast
 1/4 c. sugar
 1 Tbs. salt
 4–6 large eggs
 1 Tbs. cold water (optional)
 1/2 tsp. poppy seeds (optional)

Preparation:

Heat the milk, butter, and water in a saucepan until blended. In a large bowl, combine 3 1/2 cups of the flour with the yeast, sugar, salt, and blended milk mixture and beat for 2 minutes with an electric mixer at medium speed. Separate 1 egg, reserving the yolk, and blend the white with four or five remaining eggs into the batter. Add enough flour to make a soft dough. Turn the dough out onto a floured surface and knead until the texture is satiny. Place the kneaded dough in a greased bowl; turn it over once to grease the top. Cover and allow to rise until the dough has doubled in bulk.

Punch the dough down and turn it out onto a floured surface. Divide the dough into two pieces, one twice the size of the other. Divide the larger piece again, into three pieces of equal size, then roll them into 15-inch ropes. Braid them tightly, and seal each end by pinching. Divide the smaller piece into three pieces, and roll them into 13-inch ropes. Braid them tightly. Place the smaller braids on top of the larger and pinch to seal the ends. Place the dough diagonally on a greased baking sheet.

If desired, beat the reserved egg yolk with the cold water and brush the mixture on top of the challah. Let rise until doubled. Preheat oven to 375°. Before baking, sprinkle the poppy seeds on top of the challah.

Bake at 375° for 25–30 minutes.

Torah—that of Joseph, who was made captive by the Egyptians—the Jews believe that he regained his freedom on this day. Rosh Hashanah is also the day on which the events that would lead to the Israelites' exodus from Egypt under Moses began; and it was also on this day that God stopped Abraham from sacrificing his son.

The signal that Rosh Hashanah has begun is the sound of the shofar being blown. The shofar is mentioned in many famous stories in the Torah. The blowing of trumpets symbolized the return of the Israelites to their homeland. Joshua, the man who succeeded Moses as the leader of the Israelites, brought down the walls of Jericho by the force of blowing trumpets. Isaiah and Zechariah, two of the great prophets in Judaism and Christianity, prophesied the time when the Jews will gather under the Messiah, who will be announced by the blast of trumpets.

According to Jewish beliefs, this festival represents the most important judgment day, when all people still living on Earth, as well as those who have already died, are judged by God. It is written in the Talmud (another Jewish holy scripture) that this day will see the opening of three books in which the deeds of the wicked, the righteous, and those not belonging to either category are recorded. The righteous will be extolled in the book of life, while the wicked will be erased from it. Those occupying the middle ground are granted 10 days until Yom Kippur

Fun Fact

The Yovel days mark a 50-year agricultural cycle. The Torah commanded that the land of Israel lie fallow every seventh (shemita) year. After seven shemita years comes the 50th "jubilee" year, called yovel.

(“the Day of Atonement”) to repent their sins so their names will be inscribed in the book of life

The festival’s observances vary among the different Jewish sects. Whereas Orthodox and Conservative Jews observe Rosh Hashanah for two days, some communities celebrate only the first day. The Samaritans, in keeping with their version of the Torah, celebrate Rosh Hashanah on the first day of the month of Nisan (the first month of the Jewish ecclesiastical calendar, which falls in the March–April period of the Western calendar) in the springtime.

No work at all can be done on Rosh Hashanah. The day is generally spent in a synagogue, where the everyday liturgy is somewhat altered. A prayer book called a machzor is used on this day. The machzor is used by Jews exclusively during the High Holy Days (Yamim Noraim, “the Days of Awe”), which include Rosh Hashanah, Yom Kippur, Passover, Shavuot, and Sukkoth. It is a specific version of the siddur, the prayer book commonly used by Jews worldwide.

All Jewish religious traditions are inextricably linked with their dietary customs, and Rosh Hashanah is no exception. During Rosh Hashanah apples dipped in honey, representing the wish for a sweet year ahead, are traditionally eaten. It is also the custom to recite a blessing over two loaves of bread called challah. The round shape of challah signifies a crown, a reminder of God’s power. Challah also represents life’s full circle, the hope for the people that their lives will endure without end. The challah is made with a ladder on top to acknowledge that only God can determine who goes up or comes down life’s ladder. Sometimes the challah loaf is shaped like a bird because according to the Torah God will defend Jerusalem just as a bird hovers in the sky and looks down on Earth.

Many people visit the graves of their loved ones during Rosh Hashanah because they believe that the dead can intercede with God on behalf of those still alive on Earth. Another popular tradition associated with the festival is tashlich, which involves throwing either stones or bread crumbs into a flowing body of water, like a creek or a river, to rid oneself of sin. It is a custom of long standing that is still practiced.

Another important tradition of this holiday is the tzedakah. In rural eastern Europe it was customary for a messenger to visit houses carrying a sack. People who could afford to put money into the sack did so, while the poor took money out of the sack. Nobody could be embarrassed since it was impossible to know who gave and who took out money. Giving tzedakah is seen as a significant mitzvah (good deed) among Jews.

While Tishri 1 (Rosh Hashanah) is recognized as the spiritual new year, and the one most widely celebrated by Jews, Judaism is unique in that it has numerous other new years. Shevat 15, which falls in the Gregorian month of February, is the new year for trees, a time when new fruits can be consumed.

Elul 1, which falls in the Gregorian month of August, is the new year for the tithing of animals. Nisan 1 is the new year for the months of the calendar. The new “school year” starts sometime in the Gregorian month of September, while the fiscal new year may take place at different times in the Gregorian calendar.

See also Volume I: ISRAEL

See also Volume II: UNITED STATES

See also Volume III: JUDAISM; YOM KIPPUR

Further Reading

Malka Drucker, Rosh Hashanah and Yom Kippur: Sweet Beginnings (New York: Holiday House, 1981); Martin Gilbert, Letters to Auntie Fori: The 5,000-Year History of the Jewish People and Their Faith (New York: Schocken Books, 2002); Philip Goodman, ed., Rosh Hashanah Anthology (Philadelphia: Jewish Publication Society of America, 1970); Eric A. Kimmel, Days of Awe: Stories for Rosh Hashanah and Yom Kippur; Adapted from Traditional Sources (New York: Viking, 1991); Gail T. Reimer and Judith A. Kates, eds., Beginning Anew: A Woman’s Companion to the High Holy Days (New York: Simon & Schuster, 1997).

Fun Fact

Nuts are not consumed during Rosh Hashanah. There are some good reasons for this custom. First, eating nuts generates extra phlegm in the throat, something that can hinder one’s ability to recite prayers. Second, the gematria (numeric value) of the Hebrew word for “nut,” egoz, is the same as that for the Hebrew word for “sin,” chet.

Fun Fact

Sephardic Jews (Jews of Middle Eastern or Mediterranean origin) serve a whole, uncut fish, to symbolize fertility, prosperity, and good luck for the new year.

Shinto

FACT FILE

Observed in	Japan
World Population	About 3 million
Place of Origin	Siberia

Introduction

Shinto, like Confucianism, is not a “religion” in the usual sense. Rather, it is an ancient and sophisticated form of animism closely linked to the worship of nature in the form of kamis, the spirits of nature, and the agricultural cycles of the year. Its beliefs and ways of thinking are deeply embedded in the subconscious of the Japanese people. There is no binding dogma to which everyone must adhere, nor are there defined prayers that must be repeated verbatim, as in Catholicism. There is no “holiest” place for worshippers, as there is in Islam (Mecca) and Judaism (Jerusalem). No person or kami is deemed holiest, as are Jesus in Christianity and Muhammad in Islam. There are no established services at all. Instead, there are festival rites (matsuri), open to everyone—not only confirmed members—that differ from shrine to shrine, with only a few exceptions like Shogatsu (or Shogetsu, New Year’s Day).

Unlike Buddhism, Japan’s other major religion, the afterlife is not a primary concern in Shinto. The emphasis is on living well in this world, not preparing for the next. While Shinto has thousands of fascinating rituals, they have one thing in common: Their purpose is to purify and make the participants prosperous in the here and now, not in some heavenly hereafter. The rituals of Shinto are methods of mediating the relations of human beings to kami, people and things of the world that inspire awe.

During festivals, there are public rituals that are performed with great enthusiasm. Before New Year’s Day in Tokyo, for example, the Hie Jinja shrine has a public cleansing ritual in which the kami—represented in shrines by stylized folded paper or metal treelike images—are brought out to bless everyone present. Small paper dolls are handed out and, after prayers and long periods of “shrine music,” all the bad spiritual impurities accumulated by each person during the year are rubbed into the dolls, which are collected and then burned.

Origins and History

The origin of the Shinto faith goes back to ancient times and is probably connected to the animist religions of early Siberia. It is likely that, when the earliest ancestors of the Japanese reached the island, each tribe brought with it its own gods and rituals. Whatever its initial impetus, Shinto seems to have established itself by the late Jomon period, between 10,000 and 300 B.C.E. Wherever or whenever it began, it is the primary faith of this nation of more than 100 million inhabitants, most of whom practice both Shinto and Buddhism.

Shinto’s approach to the world is to be found in ancient Japanese mythology and history. This history was orally transmitted between generations of Japanese people prior to the introduction of Buddhism in the sixth century C.E. For this reason it does not make sense to seek Shinto’s “founding” in a specific year or era. For much of its history it was a loose collection of local rituals and customs practiced in Japan during prehistoric times. However, the introduction of both Buddhism and Confucianism to Japan in 552 prompted the adoption of the term Shinto as an umbrella to encompass the religious history of Japan.

From a religious or philosophic perspective, the religion is complex. Shinto is unique in the way that it gives commensurate spiritual status to forces of nature, animals, and celebrated human beings. These are known as kamis in Japanese. Some can be thought of as “gods,” the spirits of nature, or spiritual presences, but others clearly represent natural processes and objects. The word Shinto combines two kanji (characters in a Japanese writing system adapted from Chinese writing): shin means “god” in Chinese and to means “way” or “method” (Tao). Thus, the word shinto means “the way of the gods.”

Shinto philosophy does not include belief in a single all-knowing god or the notion of heaven as a place inhabited by the souls of the dead. The kamis

Amaterasu

Amaterasu (which means “she who shines in the heavens”) is the Shinto Sun goddess. The Japanese imperial family claims to be her descendants. According to Shinto belief the goddess was so sparkling that her parents transported her to heaven. When the storm-god Susanowo, her brother, ravaged the earth, Amaterasu ran away to a cave because of the noise he was making. She subsequently closed the cave with a massive boulder. The world was thus deprived of light, and demons ruled the Earth. When the other gods failed in their attempts to lure her out, it was Uzume who succeeded. (Uzume is the goddess of joy and happiness; she is called the Daughter of Heaven and Heaven’s Forthright Female. Her name means “whirling.”)

When Amaterasu emerged from the cave, a band of light escaped (that streak of light is called dawn). Amaterasu then saw her own sparkling manifestation in a mirror that Uzume had placed in a tree nearby. As she approached the mirror for a closer look, the gods grabbed her. After her return to the sky she brought light back to Earth. She later created rice fields (inada) and cultivated rice. Also Amaterasu is believed to have invented weaving and taught the people how to farm silkworms and wheat.

are deemed to be essentially good, but there are some exceptions. Prayers are offered to the kamis for different purposes and occasions, like rain, crops, and the emperor’s coronation. In fact, the Shinto religion has no dogma, no credo, and no “sins” that must be punished in prescribed ways. Rather, its practice involves a mixture of rituals and beliefs that initially differed significantly from one village to the next.

The primary kami in the Shinto religion is the Sun goddess Amaterasu. This perhaps explains the Sun symbol on the Japanese flag. Japan’s other name “Nippon” is written in the kanji letters ni, which means “Sun,” and pan, which means “root,” resulting in the name commonly given to the country, land of the rising Sun. The modern name is a derivative of the Chinese intonation of the letters je-ben. Yet, the Sun does not command a loftier place among Shinto divinities; each kami has its place. Kamis do, however, command respectful fear and awe. Among other kamis are the mountains; animals like the tiger, snake, and wolf; and the emperor himself. One imperial minister of the ninth century is regarded as the kami of calligraphy. With over 800 million kamis in the Shinto faith, Japan earned the nickname shinkoku, or “country of the gods.” The shrines managed by the Shinto priesthood in Japan number 100,000.

According to Japanese folklore, the country’s islands were formed by Izanagi and Izanami, brother and sister gods in the Japanese creation myth, and their sexual union of Izanami and Izanagi created the Japanese race. In giving birth to the fire god Izanami was burned to death and went to the land of darkness. Izanagi tried to rescue her, but she had eaten the food of the place and could not leave; in disgust he left her rotting corpse and divorced her. As he bathed to purify himself afterward, other deities were born from him, including the Sun goddess Amaterasu, the Moon god Tsukiyomi, and the storm god Susanoo (impetuous male), the younger brother of the Sun goddess. Izanagi’s cleansing is the basis for Shinto purification rites.

The notion of evil does not exist in the faith. The religion does have the concept of immortality, which can be achieved by pacifying the gods. To free oneself from the evils of the world requires following the different physical and social rituals of the Shinto faith. The most significant way in which other religions have influenced Shinto is the presence of a moral system based on Confucianism.

Presently there are about 150 or more sects of Shinto. Many of them have developed an aggressive outlook in an attempt to spread the faith beyond Japanese shores. Shinto can be found outside Japan, especially in places where big Japanese communities are present, as in South America and the United States. The more modern sects see brotherhood and world peace as being part of their values.

Until the fifth century C.E. when Japan first came into contact with Chinese culture, Shinto was merely a mixture of beliefs, practices, and myths. During this phase, Japan had no scripts, painting, or cultures, possibly explaining the complete lack of idols. The arrival of Buddhism and the introduction of a writing system a bit earlier combined to make the development of a systematic compilation of Shinto beliefs a practical necessity. For one thing the Japanese were intimidated by the superior culture of the Chinese. By incorporating themes from Buddhism, Confucianism, and Taoism, the Japanese hoped to show the Chinese that the culture of Japan was on a footing with theirs. It was also hoped that, by tracing the lineage of Japan’s imperial house to the Sun goddess, Amaterasu, the divinity of the emperor would be unquestionable. Thus within a very short span of time, in the early Nara period (710–84), two accounts regarding Shinto appeared: the Kojiki (The Record of Ancient Things) in 712 and the Nihonshoki (The Chronicles of Japan) in 720. These mythological collections were intended to demonstrate the worth of the imperial family and its divine right to rule Japan. The compilation of Japan's ancient traditions and mythology had a third effect as well: the number of priests, rituals, and temples proliferated.

Fun Fact

As they approach shrines, the conscientious walk on the left- or right-hand sides of the sando, the center, leaving it clear, because that is where the kami walk. During New Year's festivities, the sando may be roped off in some shrines.

From that time on the history of Japan has seen a spate of opposing movements, sometimes favoring Buddhism, sometimes Shinto. There was a concerted effort to mix the two religions, which produced clear defensive reactions on Shinto's part, around the 13th and 18th centuries. In the last phase, the state religion was Buddhism, and Shinto was there as the opposition against the central authority.

In 1868 during the Meiji period (1868–1912), when Japan was opening its doors to Western civilization, the government compelled Buddhism and Shinto to separate. It was then that Shinto took on four different shapes. These four different varieties of the religion are intermixed in accordance with the cultural universe of every Japanese individual. They comprise the foundation of Japan's value system.

The first form, a result of the end of the shogun era and the return of the Meiji Dynasty, was the Shinto of the imperial house, which emphasized the worship of Amaterasu, the Sun goddess and the emperor's divinity. When Japan lost World War II, this type of Shinto was banished, and the emperor was, once again, shorn of his divinity. Once of a public nature, this religious cult is now strictly private.

The second form was the Shinto of the temples, the oldest and the most familiar. These are the rites performed in scores of Japanese temples that are members of an association called jinja boncho.

Shinto of the sects is the third of the Shinto groups. This movement is the sum of the 13 diverse movements that came into being in the 19th century. The most celebrated of these movements Tenrikyo was started by a woman in 1838 Miki Nakayama (1789–1887), who wrote the holy scripture called Ofudesaki between 1869 and 1882; it is made up of almost 12,000 verses. It is the revelation of God the Parent and teaches the positive way of salvation; its adherents number more than three million. Other sects include the Confucian sects, the revival sects, and the faith-healing communities.

Popular Shinto, the fourth type, is based on the ancient folk traditions, but it also contains elements borrowed from Confucianism, Buddhism, and Taoism. Its adherents engage in a variety of magic practices including divination and spirit possession.

Unlike most religions Shintoism has no specific commandments for its followers, apart from wanting its adherents to live a simple life in harmony with each other and nature. There are four affirmations of the spirit of Shinto. The first affirmation is that of the Shinto tradition and the family. The family is deemed to be the most important factor in preserving traditions. A family's chief celebrations concern those relating to marriage and birth. The second Shinto declaration is the love of nature. Nature is sacred; to be in touch with nature is to be in close contact with the kami. Shintoists worship natural objects, since they believe the objects have sacred spirits. The third Shinto affirmation is phys-

Shinto Wedding

The traditional Japanese wedding ceremony is generally held in a Shinto shrine. The wedding ceremonies are private, with only family, close relatives, and friends in attendance. The woman wears the customary white wedding kimono known as shiro-maku (shiro means “white” and maku means “pure”). The hair of the bride is fashioned in the traditional wedding manner called bunkin-takashimada decked with striking kanzashi (“hair pins”). Ornaments, and other accessories. The wedding hood, called a tsuno kakushi, is white. The bridegroom wears a montsuki kimono with a haori jacket and pleated hakama pants. Classical Japanese court music is performed by artists known as gagaku. A Shinto priest performs the ceremony. He starts by cleansing the couple. After the cleansing and the vows are finished, the very old wedding ritual of sharing sake (“rice wine”), called san kudo (“three sets of three sips equals nine”), is performed; it symbolizes a formal bond between the bride and groom. As the wedding ceremony comes to an end, the kami is offered small tree twigs called sakaki. In some ceremonies, the wedding rings are exchanged at this point.

ical hygiene. Followers of the Shinto faith wash their hands, take regular baths, and rinse out their mouths frequently. The last Shinto affirmation is matsuri. It is any festival set aside for the kamis; there are many of these festivals each year.

The influence of Shinto on Japanese culture can never be overstated. It is practically impossible for Shinto to free itself from the influence of Buddhism; however, it is obvious that the notion of being one with nature gave rise to Japanese arts like ikebana (flower arranging), as well as traditional Japanese garden designing and the country's unique architecture. An even clearer connection to Shinto is seen in the national sport of sumo wrestling. The cleansing of the wrestling area before the bout, which is performed by sprinkling salt, is doubtless Shinto in origin. Japanese people generally say, "Itadakimasu," which means "I humbly partake," before consuming food, and the Japanese citizen's stress on proper greetings can be linked to the Shinto belief in kotodama ("words that magically affect the world"). Japanese customs like eating with wooden chopsticks and removing footwear before entering a house or a building are Shinto in origin. Also various other minor Japanese religions, including Tenrikyo, have been greatly influenced by Shinto.

Holidays and Religious Observances

Although Shinto has numerous festivals throughout the year, many of them connected to the seasonal cycle, among the largest and most enthusiastically celebrated ones are Shogatsu (Shogetsu), New Year's Day; Setsubin, Welcoming Spring; Shichi-Go-San, Children's Coming of Age; Hina Matsuri, Girls' Day; Hana Matsuri and Ohanami, Celebrating Buddha and Blossom Viewing; Tango-no-sekku, Boys' Day; Tanabata, the Star Festival; Obon, Festival of the Dead; Tsukimi, Autumn Moon; and Omisoka, Ringing Out the Old.

Shogatsu, the Japanese New Year festival is probably the most important, and popular, festival of the year. The holiday runs from December 31 to January 7, with New Year's Eve and New Year's Day the most important celebrations. Although it is true that many of the traditions and customs associated with Shogatsu are Chinese in origin, many more are uniquely Japanese. As in other cultures, the beginning of a new year also means a new beginning in one's life.

Although it falls at the end of the old year (December 31), Omisoka, which involves all the preparations for Shogatsu, the New Year's festival, is an equally important celebration in Japan. Purification of oneself and home and getting rid of evil influences are crucial during this period. Before January 1, houses and businesses are thoroughly cleaned: the old is thrown out and debts, obligations, and relationship problems must be resolved.

A Japanese couple under a red umbrella is led by a Shinto priest and a maiden as their relatives follow during a traditional Shinto wedding procession. (AP Photo/Koji Sasahara)

Kadomatsu (boughs of pine, bamboo, and plum) are found at the door of most homes and businesses, and beautiful arrangements are also placed inside to bless the dwelling.

As New Year's Day approaches, an amazing assortment of special foods is prepared. These are called osechi and require great time and effort to make. Special balls of kanami mochi, a kind of rice paste, are placed on the family shrine or in a prominent place in the house. (On the 7th day of January, the dried mochi is broken into pieces, fried, and then eaten.) Before January 1, all the nengajou, New Year's Day cards, must also be sent so that they will arrive on time. On New Year's Eve, families often eat a special soba (buckwheat noodles) on their best dinnerware. Other people may spend the last hours of the old year in a bath or with thousands of other people, mobbing a shrine or temple. A special sake, full of flecks of gold-leaf, is often served.

One ancient Omisoka tradition that originated in China is the ritual performed at the moment that ends the old year, destroys all "sins," and announces

Fun Fact

The ringing of the bell to signal the end of an old year and the start of a new one is over a thousand years old in Japan, and even older in China, where the ritual was performed on the Chinese New Year. Because of differences between calendars, the bells ring in the new year in China about a month after they do in Japan.

the renewal of the world: the midnight ringing of temple bells. At midnight on December 31, temples and shrines herald the new year with the joyanokane, the ringing of a bell 108 times.

The source of the ritual of ringing the New Year bell exactly 108 times goes back to the origins of Japanese Buddhism, as well as other cultural traditions. Buddhism, various pagan gods, mathematics, and a number of other things originally came to China from India. One of these was the goddess Benten-sama, originally the Hindu goddess Sarasvati, a consort of Brahma and the goddess of the river waters and of fertility and wealth. Sarasvati is the patron of speech, writing, and learning, and of the arts and sciences as well. Buddhist sutras and the so-called magical language used on memorials is a variant form of Sanskrit, and the prayer beads (juzu) that Japanese Buddhists use are also from India where they are called mala (“circle”). Juzus, which symbolize the world and the circle of the heavens, always have 108 beads.

In Indian astrology, the circle of the heavens was divided into twelve areas with specific meanings. Each area was ruled by a constellation of the Zodiac. The passage of time was conceived of as a journey through the influence of the twelve powers, each represented by an animal. This system was used to determine the exact moment when such things as the new year would occur. Each zodiac sign was further divided into nine “digits,” just as a circle is divided into 360 degrees. This last division brought the numerical total of the heavenly circle to 108, and this number became sacred and symbolized the cycles of life and time in India, China, and Japan.

It is traditional to stay up all night to see the sunrise of the first morning of the new year. In earlier days, people went to the top of a mountain to watch the sunrise, but any skyscraper will do.

New Year’s Day, Shogatsu, is the big festival day. Almost everyone dresses in their finest clothes and visits a temple or shrine to pray for good luck in the coming year (hatsumode). Many leave their old omamori (charms) at the shrine to be destroyed and buy new ones. The most important is the hamaya, a charm in the shape of an arrow hung somewhere in the house to protect it and the family for the coming year. Families then visit relatives and children are given otoshidama, small envelopes of gift-money.

After this, the children play any of several traditional games such as is hayoeta, a badmintonlike game, karutatori, an ancient card game once played only among the nobility, or sugoroku, a game played with dice. Traditional Shogatsu toys are the koma (top) and takoage (kite).

The Obon festival season, celebrated in the last half of August, is a “twilight time” in Japan, when the veil separating the worlds of the living and the dead is temporarily parted and one’s ancestors return to Earth to commune with their living relatives. Obon originated so long ago that it is impossible to know just how old the festival is. In this it is similar to the ancient Western festival of Samhain, the pagan festival still celebrated as Halloween. But, while Halloween observances have lost virtually all of their original meaning and force, the modern Japanese celebration of Obon still welcomes the return of the spirits of the dead with elaborate dances and rituals.

The most famous is the circular dance called Bon Odori, a lively dance that conceals an ancient and spooky ritual. Originally, the purpose of Bon Odori was to summon the spirits of departed relatives so the living could dance with them, so in practice, everyone dances alone. During Obon families visit their ancestral baka (“grave”) to clean it and leave the ancestors’ favorite sake, cigarettes, or food along with common flowers, incense, and mochi (“rice”) sweets. Families that continue to honor older traditions also make a small horse doll out of eggplants and leave this on the grave as well. The spirits of the dead can use the “horse” to return again to the world of the living for a visit.

Although the Japanese enjoy their visit with their long-gone relatives—keeping them up-to-date on family affairs and, perhaps, getting some help—they don’t want them to stay too long. Japanese culture is full of stories of spirits that decided they would rather stay than go back to the land of the dead. To make this a less likely outcome of Obon, people build huge bonfires to help their ghostly ancestors return whence they came.

Regional Influences

Hokkaido: Hokkaido, situated in the northeast corner of the country, is the second largest of Japan’s four islands. The island is about the size of Denmark and Switzerland combined. In contrast with the rest of Japan, Hokkaido’s culture is not tied to a conservative history, and it is receptive to Western influence. It is the Hokkaido shrine, however, where the enormous influence of the nationalistic tenet of Shinto is felt. In addition, the renewal of Shinto traditions can be witnessed across the island.

Honshu: Shinto’s most holy shrine is at Ise, in the southeastern part of the island of Honshu. In the temple of the Sun goddess is the mirror that the goddess is supposed to have given to the celebrated first emperor, Jimmu (r. 660–585 B.C.E.), in the seventh century. The oldest shrine (perhaps from about the fourth century C.E.) and next in order of significance is Izumo Taisha Jinja near Izumo, in western Honshu. The kamis are believed to gather there every October.

Kyushu: Kyushu is the southernmost island and claims to have some of the most ancient historical sites in Japan. Kyushu is famous for being the geographical base of the Shinto-inspired rise of imperial might during the mid-19th century, when the military hold in Edo (now known as Tokyo) ended about 250 years of uninterrupted rule.

Shikoku: Shikoku is famous for being the island where the well-known Pilgrimage of the 88 Temples takes place. In the northeastern region of the island of Shikoku lies Kawaga. Out of the 88 temples in the famed pilgrimage of Shikoku, 22 are situated in Kagawa. Though the pilgrimage is mainly Buddhist in inspiration, there are some exceptions. In the Kotohiragu shrine, we see a stark example of the coming together of Buddhism and Shinto. Here Kompira, a god with origins from Indian Buddhism, is revered as the guarding divinity of seafarers.

See also Volume I: JAPAN

See also Volume III: BUDDHISM; CONFUCIANISM; TAOISM

Further Reading

Thomas P. Kasulis, Shinto: The Way Home (Honolulu: University of Hawaii Press, 2004); C. Scott Littleton, Shinto: Origins, Rituals, Festivals, Spirits, Sacred Places (Oxford, U.K.: Oxford University Press, 2002); John K. Nelson, A Year in the Life of a Shinto Shrine (Seattle: University of Washington Press, 1996); Ono Sokyo, in collaboration with William P. Woodard, Shinto: The Kami Way (North Clarendon, Vt.: Tuttle Publishing, 2004); George J. Tanabe, Jr., ed., Religions of Japan in Practice (Princeton, N.J.: Princeton University Press, 1999).

~ Sikhism ~

FACT FILE

Observed in	Northern India (Punjab), as well as parts of North America, the United Kingdom, and East Africa
World Population	About 20 million
Place of Origin	Pakistan

Introduction

Guru Nanak Dev Ji (1469–1539) is the founder of Sikhism. His teachings, as well as those of the subsequent nine gurus, form the base of the faith. Sri Guru Nanak Dev was born in the Punjab area of present-day Pakistan, in a small village named Talwandi Sabo, near Lahore. At Sultanpur he had a revelation that it was his mission to preach the path to God and enlightenment. Guru Nanak Dev taught that there was only one God and preached the equality of all people. He discarded the concept of worshipping idols and the notion of caste that was fundamental to the cultures of India and Pakistan. In one of his more famous remarks, he said that there was no Muslim or Hindu. This comment became one of the foundations of Sikhism.

At Kartarpur, Guru Nanak Dev and his panth (“followers”) constructed the first Sikh temple (gurdwara). His followers came to be known as Sikhs, meaning “students or “disciples.” Currently there are over 20 million adherents of this faith scattered around the world; about 18 million live in India. The male members of the faith can be identified by their turbans and their beards. These are both external signs of their religious devotion, even though Sikhism considers one’s internal being to be more important than external appearances. Sikhism teaches that religion should be carried out by experiencing the real world and its problems. Thus, the notion of being a monk or a hermit has no place in Sikhism. Sikhs avoid any kind of mysticism. Also, they tend to avoid religious statues, pilgrimages, and abstract rituals.

Baptized Sikhs lead a religious procession in Anandpur Sahib, India. (AP Photo/Aman Sharma)

Sikhism emphasizes performing honorable actions rather than rote rituals. Sikhs believe that keeping God in one's mind and heart at all times is the way to live a better life. The faith instructs its adherents to work hard and live honestly. Sikhism also teaches people to treat everyone equally and to be generous to the less fortunate.

Sikhism's place of devotion is called a gurdwara (temple), a Punjabi word that means "gateway to the guru." The Sikh holy scripture is called the Guru Granth Sahib (or Adi Granth). It is Sikhism's most important holy text. The 10th and the last of the Sikh human gurus ruled that the teachings of the book would be the spiritual guide for the Sikh people after his death. Guru Granth Sahib has the status of a human guru and is treated as such by the Sikhs.

Located in the beautiful city of Amritsar in Punjab, the Harmandir Sahib, or Hari Mandir, (also known as the Golden Temple) is the holiest temple for the people of the Sikh faith. The Harimandir Sahib is a sign of the splendor and might of the Sikh people, who are scattered all over the planet. It must be noted that the architecture of the temple is inclusive of symbols linked with other religions. That is an illustration of the spirit of forbearance and approval of other faiths propounded by Sikhism.

The third guru, Guru, Amar Das Ji (1479–1574), began building the temple by enlarging a pool of sacred water. This pool was referred to as the "pool of nectar," and it is from this name that the name amritsar is derived. Guru Amar Das Ji's son-in-law Guru Ram Das Ji (1534–81) built the city of Amritsar around the pool. Guru Ram Das Ji's son Guru Arjan Dev Ji (1563–1606) then constructed the temple right in the middle of the pool. The temple originally had four entrances—west, east, north, and south—symbolizing that people were welcome to come to the temple from any direction. Many come to the temple to immerse themselves in the pool, and people volunteer to clean the pool when needed.

Origins and History

Authorities and historians of Eastern religions regard Sikhism as connected to the Sufi sect of Islam and the Bhakti movement in Hinduism, although it is supplemented by numerous unique practices and beliefs. There are those Sikhs who believe that Sikhism is Hinduism repurified, viewing their own faith as part of the religious tradition of the Hindus. A good number of Sikhs disagree with the notion, however, claiming that Sikhism is a direct revelation from God and a unique religion unto itself.

Sikh Funerals

Sikhs believe that the soul of the dead person goes on to meet God. Sikh prayers recognize that death is God's will. Sikh scripture instructs the family of the deceased to refrain from crying or wailing in sorrow. Hymns are sung as preparation for the cremation. The family of the deceased either recites the holy book incessantly for 48 hours, or in phases that must be finished on the day of the funeral. The latter should not take more than one week. After the body is cleaned with water and dressed in new clothes, including the five k's, hymns that give a feeling of detachment are at times sung while going to the cremation ground. There, "Kirtan Sohila," a special prayer, is recited. General prayers are also said before the cremation. These prayers seek blessings for the deceased soul. A member of the family then lights the pyre with an uncovered flame. The mourning phase continues for two to five weeks.

After the death of Guru Nanak Dev, a series of nine gurus, all regarded as reincarnations of the first guru, led the movement until 1708. After that the role of guru went to the followers and the sacred text, which is considered the 11th guru.

Beginning in the 16th century Mughal rulers occupied a vast portion of South Asia for more than 200 years. In India their attempts at converting the Sikhs to Islam were met with resistance and were generally unsuccessful. During those times the Sikhs came forward to save Hindus from persecution and forced conversions by the Muslim Mughals. They became the defenders of faith, any faith, so to speak. It is often said that, without the presence of Guru Gobind Singh (1666–1708, considered by many to be the final human guru), the entire nation would have been forced to convert to Islam.

In 1801 Maharaja Ranjit Singh (1780–39) founded the Sikh state of Punjab in northern India. Later, the invasion of the British set off the Sikh Wars (1845–49). In the 20th century this region of India was divided into Hindu India and Muslim Pakistan. When the territory became independent in 1947, Sikhs migrated to India from Pakistan and, conversely, Muslims moved to Pakistan from India. During this upheaval there was an enormous loss of human life.

The primary goal of the follower of Sikhism is to build a loving relationship with God. Sikhs believe that there is only one God with many names and that meditation is the best way to get to know God. Also Sikhs believe in samsara (the recurring

Fun Fact

The dome and sides of the Golden Temple are covered with 200 pounds of gold plate donated by Maharaja Ranjit Singh.

Fun Fact

The Golden Temple has four entrances, signifying the importance of acceptance and openness. Anyone who wants to enter temple may do so, regardless of religion, color, creed, or sex. All Sikh temples in the world follow this tradition.

Fun Fact

Every Sikh temple has a kitchen where food is served. The kitchen of the Golden Temple serves cooked food to all visitors 24 hours a day.

Fun Fact

The gurmukhi script, modeled on the Landa alphabet, was devised in the 16th century by Guru Nanak Dev, the first Sikh guru. The name means “from the mouth of the guru.” Gurmukhi is used to write Punjabi, an Indo-Aryan language.

phase of birth, life, and death), reincarnation (the rebirth of the soul), and karma (the collected sum of a human being’s good and bad actions in his or her time on Earth). These ideas are the same as in Hinduism. Sikhism has no room for the Hindu caste system, however. It maintains that everyone has equal status in God’s eyes, including women. This is a vital principle that pervades Sikh behaviors, beliefs, and rituals. The Sikhs rejected specific manifestations of women’s treatment within Hinduism and Islam, for example, female infanticide and sati, the Hindu custom of a wife throwing herself on her husband’s funeral pyre, were forbidden by Guru Nanak Dev. Women share both privileges and responsibilities in Sikhism and participate in every social endeavor with men, including warfare, with one exception: Their primary “function” is still defined as reproduction.

Sikhs pray several times each day. The lay Sikh is forbidden to worship idols and icons. There is also a stricter element within the Sikh community called the khalsa saints, who believe in the clothing practice of the five k’s: kes (uncut hair); kanga (the comb that holds up the hair); kachcha (short pants); kara (metal bracelet); and kirpan (a dagger). The five k’s together demonstrate that the person wearing them has devoted himself to a life of loyalty to the guru. That it is the guru’s instruction to observe this clothing practice is reason enough for a Sikh to do so. The significance of the symbols has steadily grown. Every Sikh knows that warriors, martyrs, and saints of the faith since 1699, as well as the present members of the khalsa, have adhered to the same clothing rules. Khalsa men generally take the surname of Singh, which means “lion,” whereas khalsa women take the surname of kaur, which means “princess” or “lioness.” Women also take the khalsa baptism, and the five K’s apply to their appearance.

The Guru Granth Sahib is more than just a holy book in Sikhism. Adherents of the religion see Granth as a living, humanlike guru. The text contains 1,430 pages and holds the original words spoken by the creators of Sikhism (the ten gurus of Sikhism) and by a variety of saints from other religions, including Islam and Hinduism. The Guru Granth Sahib was developed from the Adi Granth, which was written in 1604. Adi Granth known as “the first book” is seen by many to be similar to the Guru Granth Sahib. It was the last of the Sikh gurus Guru Gobind Singh, who instructed the Sikhs to view the Guru Granth Sahib as the next Guru.

If one visits a gurdwara, or a Sikh temple, the Guru Granth Sahib forms the chief part of the main hall (the darbar sahib). The holy book is positioned on the foremost platform and is covered in a vibrantly colored, high-quality cloth. The platform is perpetually sheltered by a canopy, which is also decked in costly and strikingly colored materials. The text used in the gurdwara is written in gurmukhi, the standard script of Sikhism.

Holidays and Religious Observances

Because of its original geographical proximity to India and Pakistan, some of the religious observances of Sikhism are closely related to those of Hinduism and Islam. For example, Sikhs observe Diwali, the Hindu Festival of Lights, the 12 Sangrand (Hindu Sankranti), the days that signal the beginning of each month, and the day following Holi, which they call Hola Mohalla, celebrated every year around March 17. Thousands gather to watch mock battles and displays of military skills such as swordsmanship and horseback riding, followed by poetry and musical competitions. Hola Mohalla ends with a huge parade led by the flags of each temple.

Other significant Sikh festivals celebrate anniversaries connected with the lives of the Gurpurbs (the birthdays of the gurus), which are Sikh festivals that commemorate the lives of the 10 human gurus. Sikhs celebrate gurpurbs with the akband path, a ceaseless recitation of the sacred text, the Guru Granth Sahib, from start to finish. The reading is done by a group of men and women. Each person reads from two to three hours for 48 hours, commencing two days prior to and concluding early on the morning of the guru’s birthday. The gurdwaras are decorated with vibrant flowers and posters portraying various features of the Sikh religion. Adherents pray, sing, and eat together. On the day of the gurpurb, celebrations begin early in the morning with musical recitals of hymns in the holy book. Singing devotional hymns from the Granth Sahib is called kirtan (or bhajan), and it is a practice Sikhs are required to perform often. Then there are lectures on the faith called katha. These celebrations go on until early afternoon.

There are also specific rituals performed to celebrate rites of passage including birth, naming, puberty, baptism (Baisakhi), marriage, and death. When a child is born, Sikhs read a special prayer

The Sikh Wedding Ritual

Anand karaj or “blissful union” is the approved type of Sikh marriage. It is an informal marriage in which the eventual choice of life partners lies with the couple getting married in consultation with both sets of parents. The official code of conduct in Sikhism (the Reht Maryada) states that the notion of any form of discrimination must be banished. If a couple professes the Sikh faith, then they can be legally married using the anand karaj ritual, regardless of their caste or creed. Horoscopes and dowries are forbidden. Although it is not wholly necessary an engagement ritual called the kurmai may be performed a week before the wedding. If the wedding is to take place at home the bride’s family makes a trip to the groom’s house a short time beforehand.

At the beginning of a Sikh wedding, the baraat (people from the groom’s side) go to the bride’s home in the evening. After being thoroughly entertained, they spend the night at the bride’s house. The marriage ceremony takes place the next day at the local gurdwara or in the bride’s home. It involves ardas (the standard Sikh prayers); kirtan (“hymns,” found in the Guru Granth Sahib), and a common meal called langars, if it takes place in the gurdwara.

Anand karaj consists of the couple walking around Guru Granth Sahib four times as the lavans (“marriage hymns”) are being recited. Walking in a circle symbolizes the couple’s commitment, with the Guru as their witness. In addition, it also signifies that Granth Sahib is the center of the couple’s life. In the marriage ceremony, Guru Granth Sahib represents the heart of the marriage, while the congregation (sadh sangat), the community, is the support.

Dancing and singing follow the religious ritual and continue all night. The groom and the bride leave the next day.

and place a drop of amrit (holy water) on the baby’s tongue. When the mother and child are able to travel, they go to the local temple for the naming of the baby. The baby’s name is selected by opening the Guru Granth Sahib to any page, and the name has to begin with the first letter of the first word of the hymn found on the left-hand side of the page. Singh (“lion”) is added to boys’ names to emphasize that they must be brave, and Kaur (“princess”) is added to girls’ names to emphasize dignity. After the baby’s name has been decided, it is announced to those gathered in the temple.

When a male child reaches puberty, between 14 and 16, he is initiated in a ceremony called the Das-taar Bandi (wearing of the first turban). Amrit, a mixture of sugar and water, is prepared in an iron bowl as the five Banis (special prayers) are recited by five Sikhs in the presence of the Guru Granth Sahib, the holy book. During the ceremony the amrit is blessed and sprinkled on the hair and eyes of the youths, a prayer is said, followed by a shared meal. Baisakhi is the day on which young Sikhs can join the Khalsa brotherhood, which requires that they observe the Five k’s; April 13 is regarded as the birth of the order and many Sikhs choose to be baptized into the Khalsa brotherhood on this day. The ceremony itself is called Amrit Sanskar.

See also Volume I: INDIA

See also Volume II: PAKISTAN

See also Volume III: HINDUISM; ISLAM

Further Reading

W. Owen Cole, The Guru in Sikhism (London: Darton, Longman and Todd, 1984); W. Owen Cole and Piara Singh Sambhi, Sikhs: Their Religious Beliefs and Practices (Brighton, U.K.: Sussex Academic Press, 1995); Constance Waeber Elsberg, Graceful Women: Gender and Identity in an American Sikh Community (Knoxville, Tenn.: University of Tennessee Press, 2003); Gurinder Singh Mann, Sikhism. (Upper Saddle River, N.J.: Prentice-Hall, 2004); W. H. McLeod, Sikhism (New York: Penguin, 1997); Charanjit Ajit Singh, The Wisdom of Sikhism (Oxford, U.K., Oneworld Publications, 2002); Khushwant Singh, The Sikhs Today: Their Religion, History, Culture, Customs, and Way of Life, 3rd rev. ed., Rahul Singh, ed. (Mumbai: Orient Longman, 1985); Pashaura Singh and N. Gerald Barrier, eds., Sikhism and History (New York: Oxford University Press, 2004).

Spring Festivals

FACT FILE

Observed in	Worldwide
Observed on	Between February and April, often around the spring equinox (March 20–22 in the Northern Hemisphere, September 20–22 in the Southern Hemisphere)
Observed by	General Public

Introduction

From the beginning, human survival and sustenance were strongly and directly dependent on the pattern of the seasons and the elements that played such a vital role in their definition. It is amply evident that the earliest festivals originated in response to the changes in seasons and from the desire to propitiate the deities thought to control the elements. Around the world a variety of festivities mark the seasons of the year, bringing pleasure and excitement to everyday life. Festivals are joyous occasions meant to be celebrated with the community at large. The origins of many of these festivals are lost in the unrecorded histories of antiquity, but the observances marking the spring (or vernal) equinox are still very much a part of our lives.

In order to ensure that the seasons would be favorable and allow humans to survive whatever they brought, they devised rites and ceremonies dedicated to different gods. Vestiges of these celebrations remain in modern cultural festivities. For example Zoroastrians and numerous societies in Asia and the Near East still celebrate Navruz, the new day or New Year, arguably the oldest celebration in the world.

In early times these events almost always coincided with the beginning of a new year, and the earliest calendars were lists of festivals celebrating the natural changes of seasons. According to this natural cycle of events, the year began with spring.

Origins and History

The earliest spring festivals were celebrations of natural wonders, many of which puzzled early humans. In every community, age, and country, the spring equinox ensures the coming end of the long, cold, harsh winter. Occurring every year on March 20, 21, or 22 in the Northern Hemisphere, spring brings fertility, the throb of life, the resurgence of hope, and the long days of summer sunshine. Spring holiday customs express this exuberance with singing and dancing, a profusion of flowers, gift-giving, and general playfulness. Spring festivals are joyous occasions that welcome the return of green to the earth.

Spring festivals were rituals performed to guarantee the fecundity of the land, animals, and people. The earliest societies were agricultural, and survival was largely dependent on the fertility of the soil and the benevolence of the weather. So spring rituals were taken very seriously. The people feared that if the deities believed to control these factors were not suitably propitiated, then the Sun would not shine, or there might be excessive rain or no rain, and then plants would not grow.

The vernal equinox is probably one of the oldest seasonal observances in civilization. The earliest reference to a spring holiday is from Babylon, around 2400 B.C.E., where we learn of a celebration during the modern months of March or April in the city of Ur dedicated to the Moon and the spring equinox. The Babylonians were among the first, if not the first, civilization to institutionalize both equinoxes as the pivotal points in their year. Ultimately the Jewish spring equinox celebrations, the Feast of Weeks and Passover, may be derived to some extent from the Babylonian celebration (in spite of biblical stories offering other explanations), acquired between 597 and 538 during the Babylonian Captivity.

In fact most of the cultures found around the Mediterranean probably had their own spring festivals, although their focus would have been slightly different. Whereas in the north the vernal equinox is a time to begin planting, for societies farther south the summer crops have already begun to sprout. Whether celebrating the time for sowing or the sprouting of new life, spring celebrations have always welcomed the arrival or promise of new life.

Fun Fact

Modern pagans celebrate eight religious festivals marking phases of the changing seasons during the year.

Some of the earliest records of celebrations of the rites of spring are found in ancient Rome. Every year in March the ancient Romans celebrated a festival in honor of Mars, the god of agriculture and war, after whom the month of March is named. Priests of Mars, called salii, or leapers, marched around the city dancing and clanging their swords and shields. This dancing was believed to help the newly planted grain grow. High leaps would make the grain grow taller, it was believed. Moreover Ceres, the goddess of grain, was offered cakes and a sacrificial sow, so that she would protect the newly planted seeds.

The beginning of May was also a popular festival time in Roman communities. In honor of Flora, the goddess of flowers, the Romans held a five-day celebration every year called the Floralia, which began around April 28 and lasted until May 2. During the festival children wound garlands of spring flowers around columns in the temple of Flora as offerings to her.

The Lupercalia, which involved purification rituals in addition to fertility rites, is another Roman spring festival. Celebrated on February 15 the dies februatus, meaning “day of atonement,” honored the god Lupercus, a fertility god. It was one of the most ancient Roman festivals; its crude, bizarre rites and traditions belong to the early days when Romans were still a half-savage group of shepherds. The festival was named for the naked male priests called luperci, but no one, including the Roman celebrants, seems to have known much about the deity worshipped. (Faunus, the Roman pastoral god, was also worshipped during this festival.) The luperci traditionally sacrificed two goats and a dog on this day. At a subsequent time the luperci clothed themselves in goatskins and ran through the streets of Rome, symbolically swatting at people with strips of goat hide so they would be fertile. At a much later date, Pope Gelasius I (d. 496 C.E.) converted the Lupercalia purification festival into the festival of the Purification of the Virgin Mary.

Spring festivals are found in other ancient civilizations as well. Ancient Greece celebrated the Olympieia in the spring, a festival that honored Zeus (the king of Gods) and combined religious festivities with athletic events. In ancient Mesopotamia in Babylon, where the king was considered god’s agent on Earth, Akitu, the New Year’s festival, was held during spring, in the month of Nisan.

Most spring religious festivals, regardless of the culture, were centered on a god whose own death and subsequent rebirth symbolized the death and rebirth of life. In some societies the king (sometimes called the Corn King, or Corn God) represented the god and was sacrificed to ensure fertility and a good harvest. Whether the sacrifice was the king, another individual, or an animal (typically a bull), it was important that the sacrifice go willingly to its death, without a struggle. In some stories the god, for example Osiris (Egyptian), Orpheus and Dionysus (Greek), Attis (Phrygian), Adonis (originally Syrian), or Tammuz (Babylonian), descended into the underworld, often to bring a goddess back. Certainly the Christian savior Jesus belongs in this company: He was sacrificed to redeem humanity (although maybe not on the vernal equinox); he went willingly, and he was reborn.

Originally Cybele was the Phrygian great mother goddess, and Attis was her consort. By 200 B.C.E., worship of Cybele had reached Rome, and a temple dedicated to her was located on what is now known as Vatican Hill. Apparently when early Christians moved into pagan territories, both groups worshipped their respective deities at the same time—the pagans worshipping Attis (or Orpheus or Osiris), and the Christians, Jesus. Of course both groups were equally convinced that their god was the true god.

Vietnamese take part in a traditional spring festival procession in Tan Trieu village near Hanoi, Vietnam. Celebration of the advent of spring and the end of the dreary winter months is an ancient tradition common across cultures. (AP Photo/Richard Vogel)

An Ancient Springtime Celebration

The name Pesach (Passover) goes back to the actions (or nonactions) of the angel of death as described in the book of Exodus. The Jews' exodus from Egypt is believed to have occurred around 1445 B.C.E. The Israelites were living in slavery in Egypt, and pharaoh had begun to fear the strength of their growing numbers. Moses (a foundling, though actually a Jew), who had been raised in pharaoh's court, was living as a shepherd in the desert. God visited Moses in a burning bush and exhorted him to take the Israelites out of Egypt to the Promised Land. In spite of repeated pleadings, pharaoh refused to liberate the Israelites. To punish pharaoh for his misdeeds, God told Moses that he would take the firstborn of all Egyptians as well as the firstborn of all their animals. Led by Moses, who acted at God's behest, every Israelite family sacrificed a lamb, prepared a special meal, and marked the doorpost with the lamb's blood. As promised by God, his angel "passed over" the homes of the Jews, marked with the blood of the slaughtered lamb, leaving them unaffected. Conversely, the firstborn sons, as well as the firstborn offspring of the Egyptians' domestic animals, whose doorways were not marked, were all exterminated. The meal prepared that night became the seder meal of Passover.

With the advent of Christianity radical changes took place in these ancient spring rites and ceremonies, especially with respect to how their purposes were understood. In order to eradicate religious competition for the people's allegiance, the early church fathers outlawed all pagan rites and ceremonies. But the people would not entirely give them up because these rituals and their attendant festivities had been a way of life for thousands of years—as long as anyone could remember. Consequently the Christian Church changed its strategy; instead of forbidding the performance of pagan rituals where it had encroached, it grafted Christian purposes and meanings onto the old pagan rituals and festivals. Many of the most popular and enduring observances, thought of as being Christian, are really the reinterpreted rituals and ceremonies of a pagan past.

The pagan origins of contemporary Christian celebrations of Easter provide a good example of how aggressively the early church used pagan ceremonies, symbols, and their sacred religious sites. The name of the Christian festival Easter, for example, was taken from the name of the German goddess of fertility Eostre. Her feast day occurred on the first full Moon following the vernal equinox, and a similar calculation for scheduling Easter observations is used by Western Christians. On that first full Moon Eostre is believed to mate with the solar god. She will conceive a child who will be born nine months later on Yule (December 21, the winter solstice) around the time when Christmas festivities are on many people's calendars.

Two of the symbols most frequently chosen by Christians for Easter are the hare, or rabbit, and the egg, both important symbols associated with Eostre's fertility rituals. And these symbols figure prominently in Easter celebrations.

In their present form spring celebrations include water and fire festivals, feasts and pageants, complete with traditional foods, costumes, and music. Flowers are to be found decorating everything, and gifts and good wishes are exchanged during this time of merrymaking. People wear new clothes as if imitating Mother Earth, who is also adorned with fresh leaves, flowers, and grass. And the worship of Eostre goes on. Modern Wiccans and neo-pagans celebrate Ostara, which has a different spelling of Eostre's name, with a lesser Sabbath on the vernal equinox. Some believe that this name is ultimately a variation on the names of other prominent goddesses, like Ishtar, Astarte, and Isis.

See also Volume I: AUSTRIA; AZERBAIJAN; BURKINA FASO; BURUNDI; CAMBODIA; CAMEROON; CHINA; CZECH REPUBLIC; DENMARK; ESTONIA; FINLAND; FRANCE; FRENCH GUIANA; GABON; GAMBIA, THE; GEORGIA; GERMANY; GHANA; GREECE; HAITI; HONG KONG; HUNGARY; INDIA; INDONESIA; IRAN; IRAQ; ISRAEL; ITALY; JAPAN; JORDAN; KAZAKHSTAN; KENYA; KIRIBATI; KOREA, NORTH; KOREA, SOUTH; KYRGYZSTAN

See also Volume II: LAOS; LATVIA; LITHUANIA; LUXEMBOURG; MALAYSIA; MALDIVES; MALI; MALTA; MONGOLIA; MOROCCO; PERU; RUSSIA; SINGAPORE; SLOVAKIA; SLOVENIA; SWEDEN; TAIWAN; TURKEY; UKRAINE; UNITED STATES

Fun Fact

Goddesses, as well as gods, descended into the underworld to rescue loved ones. The Greek Goddess Demeter went down every year to rescue her daughter Persephone from Hades, the God of the underworld. For the six months Persephone was allowed to spend on Earth, the world was warm and fertile.

See also Volume III: EASTER; LABOR DAY; NAVRUZ; PESACH

Further Reading

Valerie A. Abrahamson, Goddess and God: A Holy Tension in the First Christian Centuries (Warren Center, Pa.: Shangri-La Publications, 2004); Leona Anderson, Vasantotsava: The Spring Festivals of India, Texts and Traditions (New Delhi: D. K. Printworld, 1993); Trevor Barnes, ed., The Kingfisher Book of Religions: Festivals, Ceremonies, and Beliefs from around the World (New York: Kingfisher Books, 1999); Philippe Borgeaud, Mother of the Gods: From Cybele to the Virgin Mary, Lisa Hochroth, Trans. (Baltimore: Johns Hopkins University Press, 2004); Carol P. Christ, She Who Changes: Reimagining the Divine in the World (New York: Palgrave/St. Martin's Press, 2003); Ian Firla and Grevel Lindop, eds., Graves and the Goddess: Essays on Robert Graves's The White Goddess (Selinsgrove, Pa.: Susquehanna University Press, 2003); Rosemary R. Ruether, Goddesses and the Divine Feminine: A Western Religious History (Berkeley, Calif.: University of California Press, 2005).

∞ Taoism ∞

FACT FILE

Observed in	China, Japan, Korea, Taiwan, and Vietnam
World Population	About 20 million
Place of Origin	China

Introduction

Tao (which is pronounced “dow”) means “the path” or “the way,” roughly translated. It is essentially indescribable but something that is to be experienced. Taoism’s founder is thought by a majority to be Lao Tzu, who is believed to have lived around the same time as Confucius, the founder of Confucianism, in the sixth century C.E. Modern scholars posit that he lived during the fourth century, producing the Tao Te Ching during the Warring States and Hundred Schools of Thought eras. Others, however, believe him to be a mythical character, although he is a favorite deity of the Taoist pantheon.

Lao Tzu was looking for a path that would steer clear of the continual feudal conflicts and other clashes that typified Chinese society at the time. The result of his search was the Tao Te Ching (also called Daodejing), which means “the book of the way” or “the way of power.” It is the most documented text of Taoism. Though the book is widely believed to be Lao Tzu’s work, there is some controversy surrounding its authorship. Modern scholars contend that the Tao Te Ching was not written until sometime between 300 and 250 B.C.E. Recent research even hints that the text could have been written by a group of learned men. The Tao Te Ching describes the state and nature of life, the path to peace, and the way a ruler should live his life. The book is rather short, with about 1,000 words spread over 81 chapters and divided into two sections, the Te Ching and the Tao Ching.

Since the Tao tradition is so old and is strongly connected with Confucianism, it is hard to distinguish among individual beliefs. Many consider themselves both Taoists and Confucians. The only clear principle of Taoism is belief in the tao. Depending on the individual, however, this word can have different meanings. Scholars use the word tao in widely divergent contexts. It is also difficult to explain the word tao in English. The result is difficulty identifying precisely the beliefs of Taoists.

Generally, tao is interpreted as “the way” or “the path,” the course that one should take in life, suggesting that it is primarily a code of behavior. The tao is also said to be the natural arrangement of everything; central to this conceptualization are the values of yin and yang.

Above all Taoism is seen as the fundamental nature or the universal life force of everything in the world. Yin and yang are considered to be complementary features of the tao, always in flux, never static. Westerners might be tempted to treat these elements as absolutes, but one cannot exist without the other. Yin and yang create the world’s natural order. Yin means “shady,” and corresponds to the night and less active functions. It is said to be the breath that created the Earth. Yang is thought of as the more masculine, “sunny” functions. It is believed to be the breath that created the heavens. Yang is characterized by warmth, light, good, and positive values. Everything in nature has, and is, both yin and yang.

Yin and yang can be characterized as a process of transformation, expressions of the changes between the phases of a cycle. In order to understand how yin and yang are complementary functions,

Tai Chi

Taoists are famous for exercise and movement techniques. Tai chi is one such system that works on every part of the body. It stimulates the central nervous system, lowers blood pressure, tones muscles without straining them, and relieves stress. It also aids digestion and blood circulation. Conventional Chinese medicine teaches that illnesses result from obstructions or imbalance in the human body’s chi (or intrinsic energy), and tai chi is believed to balance this flow of energy.

each is always in the process of becoming the other without being it at any point. Consider the movement of time. Noon is momentarily all yang but moving toward sunset, which is yang becoming yin; midnight is at one moment all yin but then already becoming yang, and sunrise is yin becoming yang. At another level, time's motion can be seen in seasonal changes. Summer is full yang; autumn is yang becoming yin; winter is full yin, and spring is yin becoming yang.

That opposites are always becoming the other is the philosophical base of Lao Tzu's methods. It is also an aspect of wu wei (nonaction). The notion of nonaction as the natural course of life is a basic belief of Taoism. Nonaction does not mean that Taoists believe in passivity. Nonaction is not inaction. The highest moral of Taoism states that one should not ever act but leave nothing undone. Wu wei is one of the major precepts of Taoism. It means to do things in a way that makes it look as though accomplishing one's goal involves no expended effort. By sticking to the code of wu wei, the individual is seen as ardently following "the way." People living by the concept of wu wei are deemed to be in their original nature, before they were spoiled by knowledge. This state is compared to an uncarved block and is called pu. Lao Tzu believed that wu wei could lead to a society that is harmonious and peaceful. People, according to Taoism, are a microcosm of the universe. Taoists believe that the human body corresponds to the universe's plan. The human body's five organs correspond to the five holy mountains, the five directions, the seasons, the sections of the sky, and the elements of nature. Taoists think that through an understanding of what humanity is, one can appreciate the definitive structure of this universe. Also, Taoists believe in the necessity of having the three jewels in their lives. The Tao Te Ching defines the three jewels as kindness, moderation, and humility. Kindness eventually leads to bravery, moderation leads to munificence, and humility to leadership.

Taoists strive to be one with the tao, which means living a simple and natural life. Thoughts from outside obstruct a person's ability to perceive the tao. If people live in harmony with the tao, they can return to their original state and become the tao. Taoism's cycle is that of being born, then maturing, and then decaying and eventually returning to the tao. Everything passes through this cycle. Taoism teaches that all things have their own destiny, or te. When there is no opposition to this te, it manifests itself naturally in life. The Tao Te Ching says that the major problem that a human being faces is not knowing who he or she truly is. Taoism teaches that each one of us is a part of a cosmic course called the tao. One's basic choice lies in accepting this reality and becoming one with the tao or trying to oppose one's true being and setting up one's individual identity outside the tao, which is clearly impossible.

Yin-Yang Symbol

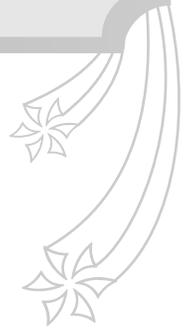

The yin-yang symbol—a circle divided into two equal swirls, one black, the other white—is Taoism's most familiar symbol. Some say that it was derived from astronomical studies. The two swirls symbolize the constancy of change, the only stable feature of our world. According to one tradition, yin (the black side) symbolizes the breath that created the Earth, and yang (the white side) represents the breath that created the heavens. Since there is no such thing in nature as anything wholly black or wholly white, the symbol has a small black spot inside the white swirl and a small white spot inside the black swirl. The black seed enclosed within the white will regenerate the white, and the white seed enclosed within the black will regenerate it. Taoists think that humans interfere in nature and disturb the balance between yin and yang.

Taoism is polytheistic in nature; its followers believe in the existence of multiple gods. Each god is held to be a manifestation of a feature of the tao. Taoists do not pray to these gods, nor do they do think any god can solve their problems. In fact, Taoists look for solutions to life's challenges in individual meditation and observation. Most major Taoist religious festivals commemorate the birth of gods or the solstices.

The Chinese New Year is the first significant festival in the Taoist year, celebrated on the first day of the first lunar month, corresponding to February in the Gregorian calendar. Rituals in temples and in homes worship the Three Pure Ones with sweet offerings, a feast, and exchanging gifts with friends and family. On the festival's first day, the Dragon (Lion) Dance is carried out to celebrate immortality, long life, and union with spirits. Firecrackers are set off to scare evil forces away.

For followers of Taoism Lao Tzu's birthday is the most important festival. It is observed on the 15th day of the second lunar month. Other festival days celebrate the birth of the Three Officials: the Water Official (Xia Yuan), the Earth Official (Zhong Yuan), and the Heavenly Official (the mortal Shang Yuan). Of these festivals, Zhong Yuan is probably the most popular and is celebrated as Ghost Day. On this day the Earth Official is believed to pardon the transgressions of the dead. Departed souls can gain redemption through the kind and charitable actions of the living.

Before the beginning of a new year, the Kitchen God, Zao Jun (literally, "stove master"), symbolized by paper hung on the wall of the kitchen, is speedily sent to heaven to report on the behavior of the household to the jade emperor. At the start of the New Year, the Kitchen God is welcomed back into the home.

Deities of Taoism

Jade Emperor Yu Huang, known formally as the Pure August Jade Emperor (Yu Huang Shangdi) or August Personage of Jade (Yu Huang Dadi), is the ruler of heaven and Earth according to Chinese mythology, as mortal emperors used to rule China. Yu Huang is one of the most important gods of the Taoist pantheon, and he was the patron deity of the imperial family from the ninth century on. And like the Chinese imperial court Yu Huang and his retinue are conceived of as a large heavenly bureaucracy that controls every aspect of life on Earth. He is the leading god of popular Taoism, and all of the other gods report to him. Yu Huang's main purpose is managing the administration of heaven. He watches the performance of every god and rewards, promotes, or demotes them based on his observations.

Yuan-shih Tien-tsun existed long before the universe was created and will exist long after the universe has ended. Unlike the world in which humans live, one that is forever being destroyed and created, he is everlasting and enduring. When something new is created, Yuan-shih Tien-tsun comes down to Earth to tell humankind the Tao's secrets.

San-ching, the Three Pure Ones—Yü-ching (the Jade Pure), Shang-ching (the Higher Pure), and Tai-ching (the Grand Pure), are Taoism's most revered deities. Pure refers to the three heavens where they reside. The Three Pure Ones are thought to be unique manifestations of Lao Tzu, and their main objective is saving humankind by teaching compassion.

Taoism does have monks and nuns who prefer to live their lives in seclusion rather than in the open. They are well known for bringing the martial arts culture to China, tai chi, perhaps, being the most famous.

Origins and History

The religious and philosophical origins can be found deep in China's past, in pantheism, shamanism, and observation of the regularity of seasonal cycles. Early Taoism, like Confucianism, developed during the Warring States and Hundred Schools of Thought periods, when Chinese civil society went through one of its extremely turbulent periods, and it developed as a workable response to the bitter philosophical debates that raged.

Taoism began as a combination of philosophy and psychology, but over time it developed into a religion. During the Han dynasty (202 B.C.E.–220 C.E.) Taoism gained a wider audience among the Chinese people, finding converts as well as defenders, and from the general ferment many sects arose, with hierarchies of gods and established rituals. By the fifth century Taoism had become a successful and popular religious system, including elements it had incorporated from Mahayana Buddhism. It established an extensive pantheon of deities, many of them probably local gods from various regions of China, diverse monastic orders, and lay masters. In 440 C.E. it became a state religion. During that period Lao Tzu (the founder of Taoism) was popularly recognized as a divinity. Taoism, together with Confucianism and Buddhism, became one of China's three chief spiritual practices. Following the Han dynasty Confucianism became the official doctrine of the state. Some rulers of the Tang dynasty (618–907), a period thought by many to be the “golden age” of Chinese art and literature, declared Taoism the state religion, while others preferred Buddhism.

The Chuang-tzu (named after its author), after the Tao Te Ching, is the next most documented text in Taoism. The Chuang-tzu contains additional teachings relevant to Taoism. In addition to passing on stories of Taoism's masters and followers, its 33 chapters describe the mystical philosophy of Taoism in greater detail and provides information crucial to right living such as a proper diet, efficient breathing, meditation, and sexual activity. It has three separate sections. Though it is not clear when the text was produced—it was written after the Tao Te Ching—it is thought to have been somewhere around the middle of the fourth century B.C.E. The Pao Pu Tzu (or Master Embracing Simplicity) and the Tai-Ping Ching (Classic of the Great Peace) are two other texts closely associated with Taoist philosophy: The Pao Pu Tzu was written by Ko Hung (288–343 C.E.), while Tai-Ping Ching was probably written sometime during the Han dynasty.

Taoist priests in ceremonial robes pray for world peace and prosperity at a ceremony celebrating the Chinese lunar New Year. (AP Photo/Lee Chuan-hsien)

When the Ching dynasty collapsed in 1911 government support for Taoism also ceased. A lot of Taoism's legacy was destroyed in the subsequent period of the warlords. After the Communists came to power in 1949 religious freedom was strictly limited. It is said that by 1960 monks were forced to perform manual labor, temples were seized, and the population of monks drastically reduced. In the period of the Cultural Revolution between 1966 and 1976, a great portion of the surviving Taoist heritage in China was destroyed. There has been some religious forbearance since 1982, however.

Taoism adherents number about 20 million, most of whom live in Taiwan. There has been some Tao influence in the West, and a small number of Taoists are to be found in North America and Canada.

Holidays and Religious Observances

The Taoist religious pantheon has so many gods that some have likened it to a hierarchical “bureaucracy” that consists of numerous gods, immortals, and ancestors. For every occasion and every purpose there are probably several gods or ancestors to be called on for help. The jiao, making an offering for a specific reason, is central to Taoist ritual. Early in its history, the jiao required a priest, or “libationer,” who decided which deities should be summoned to accomplish the petitioner's purpose. After the priest had made the offering, the community shared a meal. Although Taoist temples and shrines are still available for such rituals, nowadays, many Taoists have shrines in their homes and perform their own rituals seeking the help of ancestors and deities.

Most major Taoist religious festivals commemorate the birth of gods or the solstices. The Chinese New Year, celebrated on the first day of the first lunar month (February in the Gregorian calendar), is the earliest festival of the Taoist year. Before the beginning of the new year, the Kitchen God, Zao Jun (literally, “stove master”), symbolized by paper hung on the wall of the kitchen, is speedily sent to heaven to report on the behavior of the household to the Jade Emperor. When the New Year begins, the Kitchen God is welcomed back into the home. Rituals in temples and in homes worship the Three Pure Ones with sweet offerings, a feast, and exchanging gifts with friends and family. On the festival's first day, the Dragon (Lion) Dance is performed to celebrate immortality, long life, and union with spirits, and fireworks are set off to drive evil away.

For followers of Taoism Lao Tzu's birthday is the most important festival. It is observed on the 15th day of the second lunar month. Other festival days celebrate the birth of the Three Officials: the Water Official (Xia Yuan), the Earth Official (Zhong Yuan), and the Heavenly Official (the mortal Shang Yuan). Of these festivals, Zhong Yuan is probably the most popular and is celebrated as Ghost Day. On this day, the Earth Official is believed to pardon the transgressions of the dead. Departed souls can gain redemption through the kind and charitable actions of the living.

See also Volume I: CHINA; JAPAN; KOREA, SOUTH

See also Volume II: TAIWAN; VIETNAM

See also Volume III: CONFUCIANISM

Further Reading

Thomas Cleary, Practical Taoism (Boston: Shambhala, 1996); Max Kaltenmark, Lao Tzu and Taoism, Roger Greaves, Trans. (Palo Alto, Calif.: Stanford University Press, 1969); Russell Kirkland, Taoism: The Enduring Tradition (New York: Routledge, 2004); Isabelle Robinet, Taoism: Growth of a Religion, Phyllis Brooks, Trans. (Palo Alto, Calif.: Stanford University Press, 1997); C. Alexander Simpkins and Annellen Simpkins, Simple Taoism: A Guide to Living in the Balance (North Clarendon, Vt.: Tuttle, 1999); Brandon Toropov and Chad Hansen, The Complete Idiot's Guide to Taoism (Royersford, Pa.: Alpha Publishing House, 2002); Lao Tzu, Tao Te Ching: A Literal Translation with an Introduction, Notes, and Commentary (Fremont, Calif.: Asian Humanities Press, 2003); Eva Wong, The Shambhala Guide to Taoism (Boston: Shambhala, 1997).

Thanksgiving

FACT FILE

Observed in	United States and Canada, as well as some island countries in the Pacific
Observed on	Fourth Thursday in November (United States); second Monday in October (Canada)
Observed by	General Public

Introduction

Thanksgiving, with its roots in the pagan celebrations of the autumn harvest, is a holiday observed throughout North America. In the United States Thanksgiving is commemorated on the fourth Thursday of November. In Canada, since the harvest takes place a little earlier, the holiday is observed on the second Monday of October.

The celebration of Thanksgiving in the United States was possibly a derivative of England's harvest-home rituals. These were days set aside to thank God for healthy crops and an abundant harvest. This holiday accordingly takes place in late autumn, after the crops have been harvested. In the recent past Thanksgiving has become a family affair in the United States, complete with elaborate dinners and joyful reunions; however, it is also conventionally a time for church services, religious contemplation, and prayer.

Origins and History

Thanksgiving traditions draw on ancient pagan harvest festivals. These were already European traditions before Europeans stumbled into the Western Hemisphere. So it is perhaps natural that they brought the festivities with them as remembered "good times." The first Thanksgiving in North America was not, however, celebrated by Pilgrims; rather it was held in Newfoundland, Canada, in 1578 by the Frobisher Expedition. The first "thanksgiving" observance in the territory that would become the United States was held in Florida, not Massachusetts, as is commonly believed, and the people who sat down to dine with their new friends, the Amerindians, were Spanish, not English. The feast was held on September 8, 1565, in St. Augustine, Florida, when Pedro Menéndez and his men shared a sumptuous meal with the indigenous people.

Yet another "thanksgiving" was wholly religious in nature but did not involve feasting at all, and was in fact not even voluntary. In 1619, 38 English settlers arrived at Berkeley Plantation on the James River, at a place now known as Charles City, Virginia. The contract of the group made it mandatory that the day of arrival be observed as a day of giving thanks to God. As far as anyone knows, no food was served.

However, most people are inappropriately taught and believe that the real "first" Thanksgiving was held on a date that no one thought to record in 1621, sometime in the fall, when the Pilgrims held a three-day feast to celebrate their first harvest in North America. Joining them in the three-day festivities was Massasoit and 90 of his men, who contributed five deer to the meal. The Pilgrims had come from Plymouth, England, on a ship named the Mayflower; a small ship packed with men, women, and children, in addition to the sailors. Aboard the ship were passengers consisting of the separatists, who preferred to call themselves the Saints, and the rest, whom they called the Strangers. All had come seeking the riches of the "new" world.

The Pilgrims were ill-prepared for the starvation and illnesses of a cruel New England winter, and nearly half of them died before spring arrived.

Other Thanksgiving Traditions

Apart from the traditions of European harvest festivals brought by settlers to North America, some link the U.S. Thanksgiving with Sukkot, an early Jewish observance, which gives thanks to God for the Earth's bounty. In fact all the foremost world religions—including Buddhism, Hinduism, Judaism, Islam, and Christianity—have rituals and observances that express gratitude to a higher power for the blessings of life.

Also the Pilgrims' biggest concern was the possibility of aggression by local Indians. The Patuxets (the name of the tribe) were, however, a gentle group and were not a threat. Then on March 16, 1621, something significant happened. A Native American brave marched into the Pilgrims' settlement. The visitors were initially frightened, until he greeted them by saying "Welcome" (in English). His name was Samoset, and he had learned the English language from captains of fishing boats that used to sail off the coast. He was to return to the Pilgrims with Squanto, who happened to be more fluent in English because he had already visited Spain and England.

Squanto's value to the Pilgrims was incalculable, and the Pilgrims would probably not have survived without his knowledge and help. He taught them to tap maple trees for sap. He taught them about plants that had medicinal qualities and those that were poisonous. He taught them the trick of planting Indian corn by piling the earth into several low mounds with fish and seeds in each one so that the decaying fish would fertilize the corn. Squanto also taught them to plant different crops with the corn, with the result that the Pilgrims reaped an abundant harvest in the fall.

The Pilgrims announced a three-day feast, beginning on December 13, 1621, to offer their thanks to God and to enjoy the fruits of their labors with their Indian friends. This may not have been

A reenactment of the Thanksgiving feast held in Plymouth, Massachusetts, in 1621. (AP Photo/Plimoth Plantation, Ted Curtin)

Thanksgiving Turkey

There is no concrete evidence that turkey was a part of the Pilgrims' first Thanksgiving. Over time, however, it has become a vital part of the Thanksgiving custom. The tradition of turkey has its roots in William Bradford's History of Plymouth Plantation, written some 22 years after the first celebration in 1621. The Bradford document was lost during the United States' War of Independence, but it was rediscovered in 1854. Since then the turkey has become the most popular symbol of the Thanksgiving holiday.

the first Thanksgiving in the country—thanksgiving services were routine in the state of Virginia as early as 1607—but it was certainly the most splendid festival. Immediately after their first harvest, the Pilgrims set aside a day for Thanksgiving. In the Massachusetts Bay Colony, Thanksgiving was first celebrated in 1631 and often thereafter, until around 1680, when it was made an annual festival. In Connecticut Thanksgiving was celebrated as early as 1639 and annually after 1647, with the exception of the year 1675. The Dutch of New Netherlands were more dilatory, first establishing a day for giving thanks in 1644, and only sporadically after that.

The Continental Congress assigned one or more Thanksgiving Days during the American Revolutionary War, with the exception of 1777, each time suggesting to the governors of the various states the dates on which these holidays should be observed. George Washington declared a Thanksgiving in December 1777 to celebrate the defeat of the British by his troops at Saratoga, New York, and the Continental Congress followed his lead, proclaiming annual December Thanksgiving day from 1778 to 1783, except for the year 1782.

After the American Revolution the first national Thanksgiving, proclaimed by President George Washington, was November 26, 1789. He declared November 26 as a day to give "humble and sincere" thanks to God. There was, however, no national concurrence on a day for the holiday. After a five-year sabbatical with no celebration, George Washington's announcement thus rejuvenated the holiday and moved it to November, a month earlier. Some of the subsequent presidents declared different days of Thanksgiving, with James Madison actually proclaiming two in 1815, but none of these occasions fell in autumn.

Fun Fact

The date for Canada's Thanksgiving holiday, the second Monday in October, was not established until 1957. Prior to that year Parliament had to decide on a date every year.

Fun Fact

Since 1970 Native Americans and supporters have held a National Day of Mourning at Plymouth Rock in Plymouth, Massachusetts, to protest the nearly successful attempt at genocide carried out by the U.S. government and military.

Fun Fact

There may not have been turkeys at the 1621 Thanksgiving feast, but in 2003, of the 269 million turkeys raised in the United States, 45 million were killed and cooked as part of the Thanksgiving festivities.

The notion of a national day of Thanksgiving did not come up again until 1863, when Abraham Lincoln revived the custom, fixing the date as the last Thursday of November. Lincoln, following crucial wins by the Union forces at Vicksburg and Gettysburg during that year's summer, issued a statement that made the fourth Thursday of November a national Thanksgiving Day. Even then the holiday was not commonly accepted, mainly in the South, on the ground that it was a relic of Puritanical bigotry. The year 1863 was also the year that the Pilgrims got their capital P.

The Separatists who founded the Plymouth colony were one among several predecessors, and they had on occasion called themselves "pilgrims" as a means of connecting their colonizing experience with that of the Hebrews and managing in the process to identify themselves as God's "chosen people." Until the late 18th century they were called either "Old Comers" or "First Comers"; later they acquired the epithet "forefathers," an idea that appealed to men's organizations like the Old Colony Club, whose members were determined that Landing Day or Forefathers' Day, observances intended to memorialize and masculinize the day of the Mayflower's landing, might replace or, at least, compete with the Thanksgiving holiday.

From 1939 to 1941 Franklin D. Roosevelt designated the third Thursday in November as Thanksgiving to give merchants additional time to profit from the approach of the December season of gift exchanges. Some of the states approved, some did not, and others, like Texas, could not make a decision and so took both weeks as holidays. In the end the two houses of the U.S. Congress passed a joint resolution in 1941, decreeing that Thanksgiving should fall on the fourth Thursday of November.

Today Thanksgiving is a feast celebrated with family and friends. In the United States it is a major family holiday, and people often travel the breadth of the country to be with their loved ones. The Thanksgiving holiday is usually a four-day weekend, with both Thursday and Friday set aside as holidays. In Canada Thanksgiving is a three-day holiday; otherwise it is very similar to the U.S. version. Thanksgiving is celebrated almost exclusively at home, unlike the Independence Day (Fourth of July) or Christmas, which are connected with a spectrum of festivities (fireworks, caroling, and so on).

See also Volume I: CANADA

See also Volume II: UNITED STATES

See also Volume III: HARVEST FESTIVALS

Further Reading

Naomi Black, ed., Macy's Thanksgiving Book (Philadelphia: Running Press, 1986); Kathryn K. Blue and Anthony Dias Blue, Thanksgiving Dinner (New York: Harper & Row, 1990); J. Bruchac, The Circle of Thanks: Native American Poems and Songs of Thanksgiving (Bergenfield, N.J.: BridgeWater Books, 1996); J. Bruchac, Squanto's Journey: The Story of the First Thanksgiving (San Diego: Silver Whistle, 2000); James Deetz and Jay Anderson, Partakers of Plenty: A Study of the First Thanksgiving (Plymouth, Mass.: Plimouth Plantation, 1972); Jason Shulman, Jerome Agel, and Melinda Corey, eds., The Thanksgiving Book: An Illustrated Treasury of Lore, Tales, Poems, Prayers, and the Best in Holiday Feasting (New York: Smithmark Publishers, 1995); Roland G. Usher, The Pilgrims and Their History (New York: Macmillan, 1920).

∞ Vesak ∞

FACT FILE

Observed in	Countries with Buddhist populations, especially India, Tibet, Malaysia, Myanmar, and Sri Lanka
Observed on	Full Moon day of fifth or sixth month of the Buddhist calendar
Observed by	Buddhists

Introduction

Vesak is the most important festival for Buddhists around the world. Buddhism enjoys a significant following in Southeast Asia, as well as other parts of Asia. By a strange coincidence, the birth, enlightenment (Moksha, or Nirvana), and death of Lord Buddha all took place on the same date, although necessarily in different years, making this date the most sacred day of the year for his followers.

This three-in-one festival takes place in the month of Vesak on the Buddhist lunar calendar and during the second half of May on the Gregorian calendar. For Buddhists, it is a day for rejoicing and contemplation. Celebrations can be elaborate affairs, with lots of festivities and feasting. Silent walks or evening meditations end the Vesak celebration.

Buddhists venerate the Buddha because he understood how to free his mind from the crass realities of the world and practiced the sim-

Fun Fact

A Buddha is anyone who understands the nature of reality, the sadness of the human condition, and the path to liberation by enlightenment, achieved after good karma (action) is maintained and desire for the material things of this world has been abandoned.

Buddhist monks participate in a ceremony commemorating Vesak in Magelang, Indonesia. The Buddhist holiday of Vesak celebrates the birth, enlightenment, and death of Lord Buddha.

(AP Photo/Purwowiyoto)

Buddha's Birthplace

Gautama Buddha was born in Lumbini, now in the southern part of Nepal, one of the four sacred places of Buddhism. It is said that the place should be visited by all Buddhist practitioners. In the Parinibbana Sutta, it is written that the Buddha himself recognized four places of pilgrimage: the place of his birth (Lumbini, Nepal); the site where he delivered his first discourse (Sar-nath, Uttarpradesh, India); the place where he achieved enlightenment (Bodhgaya, Bihar, India); and the place where he died (Kushinagara, India). Each of these epoch-making incidents occurred in natural surroundings and under shady trees. While there may not be any need to speculate on what may be coincidences, they may explain why Buddhists have always valued the environment and natural law.

ple methods that would bring tranquility, equanimity, and peace of mind. Vesak for the Buddhists is a day to remember his life and teachings and to contemplate what is achievable and what is worth attempting. It is an occasion to focus one's mind on the Buddha's pious life, his remarkable deeds, the Four Noble Truths, the doctrine of the Middle Path, and the Eight Precepts that he taught would lead human beings away from their sorrows and sufferings.

The association with Vesak is particularly strong in the countries that adhere to the Theravada school, namely Malaysia, Burma, Sri Lanka, and Thailand, where the temples are adorned with lanterns representing the Buddha's achievement of Nirvana. In Thailand, where the festival is called Visakha Bucha, multitudes of caged birds are released, and the devout spend the festival chanting, fasting, and joining in other religious observances. At the Sakya Muni Buddha Gaya Temple in Singapore, in exchange for donating money Buddhists receive a small piece of gold leaf that they can attach to the Buddha's statue. By the end of the day, the statue has a new covering of gold leaf. At the Borobudur Temple in Indonesia, where the celebration is called Waisak, elaborate festivities are planned. Around the world devout Buddhists spend the entire day in contemplation, meditation, and piety, and perform acts of charity and compassion toward the less fortunate, thereby actively following the lofty ideals of Buddhism.

Origins and History

Vesak commemorates the birth of an extraordinary being who propounded the practice of Buddhism. The Buddha, whose the birth name was Gautama Siddhartha (c. 563–c. 483 B.C.E.) was a member of the Shakya dynasty—a warrior clan that ruled Kapilavastu (modern Nepal). He was born into a life of luxury and privilege, surrounded by unlimited material wealth. His mother died soon after his birth, but he was brought up lovingly by his family. His father wanted Gautama to succeed him as the head of the clan, but something was always bothering the boy in spite of his sheltered existence: He was curious to know about the end of human life. Gradually he was exposed to, and became aware of, the harsh realities of life—sickness, old age, and death. He was so shaken by these revelations and so disillusioned that he left his wife and newborn son behind and, renouncing his easy life, became an ascetic.

Following six years of adversity, extreme penance, and endless endeavor the Buddha eventually attained enlightenment. (Vesak also commemorates the Buddha's enlightenment.) The depth of his experience made him certain that he had found the ultimate knowledge and that there was hope beyond the seemingly eternal cycle of sickness, old age, and death. The Buddha understood that this suffering could be ended. While he was meditating beneath the Bodhi tree, the Buddha had a revelation, and it became clear to him that he had been through many births; he understood that all living beings were reborn in circumstances, good or bad, depending on their actions in their previous life (or lives). The Buddha realized that suffering was a result of desire and attachment to the things of this world, and that there was a sure way of escaping suffering. Buddhist scriptures offer ample proof of the fact of Buddha's ultimate understanding and that he knew how others could gain the same. The Buddha's experience holds out hope for humanity: anyone can achieve enlightenment.

Theravada Buddhism

In Pali, thera means “elders” and vada means “word” or “doctrine,” so Theravada, the doctrine of the elders, is the name of the school of Buddhism that draws its scriptural inspiration from the Tipitaka (the Buddhist canon written in Pali), which scholars generally accept as the oldest record of the Buddha's teachings. For many centuries Theravada Buddhism has been the predominant religion of South Asian countries like Sri Lanka, Burma, and Thailand. Theravada Buddhists number over 100 million worldwide.

Thirdly, Vesak commemorates the Buddha's achievement of Nirvana (also called his parinibbana). As the Buddha lay dying, no miraculous transformation took place; there was no supernatural ascent into heaven, no implausible escape. The Buddha's death was normal. (He had consumed soft pork, or sukaramaddava, which probably led to food poisoning.) It was like that of any ordinary human being. In many ways, his was an extraordinary death, because he was liberated from the cycle of life, death, and suffering, and got total release, or Nirvana. His last words were plain and clear: "All things are impermanent," he said, "strive on with diligence."

On Vesak, devout Buddhists assemble in temples to pray and offer alms to the monks. A number of people spend the entire day at the temple, listening to recitations of Buddha's precepts and anecdotes about his life. Others invite monks to their homes to share their discourses. On this sacred day the followers reaffirm their pledge to live an ethical and virtuous life.

See also Volume I: BHUTAN; CAMBODIA; JAPAN; INDIA; KOREA, SOUTH

See also Volume II: LAOS; MALAYSIA; MONGOLIA; MYANMAR; SINGAPORE; SRI LANKA; THAILAND; TIBET; VIETNAM

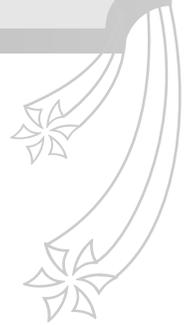

See also Volume III: BUDDHISM

Buddha's Birth

Legend has it that the Buddha was born fully awake, that he could actually talk, and that he told his mother he had come to liberate humanity from all suffering. It is also believed that he could stand and managed to walk short distances in all four directions. They called him Siddhartha, meaning "he who has attained his goals." Unfortunately, Mahamaya (his mother) died just seven days after Gautama was born. Buddha was brought up by Mahaprajapati (also known as Gautami), his mother's sister.

Further Reading

Sallie B. King, Buddha Nature (Albany, N.Y.: SUNY Press, 1991); Y. Krishnan, The Buddha Image: Its Origin and Development (New Delhi: Munshiram Manoharlal Publishers, 1996); Walter H. Nelson, Gautama Buddha: His Life and His Teaching (London: Luzac Oriental, 1996); Ryuho Okawa, The Essence of Buddha: The Path to Enlightenment (New York: Time Warner, 2003); Walpola Rahula, What the Buddha Taught, Rev. Ed. (New York: Grove Press, 1974).

Yom Kippur

FACT FILE

Observed in	Countries with Jewish populations, especially Israel, United States, and Canada
Observed on	Tenth of Tishri, the seventh month of the Jewish calendar
Observed by	Jews

Introduction

Yom Kippur is one of the most important holidays of the year for Ashkenazi and Sephardic Jews. Even those Jews who do not adhere to most traditions and customs make it a point to refrain from work, attend synagogue, and fast on this day. It is one of the Days of Awe (Yamim Noraim), which includes Rosh Hashanah, the first two days of the ten days of repentance, and Yom Kippur, the last of the ten days. It falls on the tenth day of Tishri, the seventh month of the Hebrew calendar (September–October). It closes the 10-day period of penitence that Rosh Hashanah (the New Year) began. Yom Kippur is a total Sabbath (day of rest), when work of any kind is prohibited, and the devout abstain from eating; they do not even drink water on this day. According to research, about 75 percent of the Jews in Israel fast on Yom Kippur, including those who do not think of themselves as being religious.

Yom Kippur means “day of atonement,” a day set aside at the end of Rosh Hashanah to repent for one’s sins of the past year. This day is basically the last chance to show regret and make amends so as to ameliorate God’s judgment relating to those sins.

The Yom Kippur War

The Yom Kippur War is also called the October War, the Ramadan War, or the 1973 Arab-Israeli War. It had far-reaching consequences for the political climate of the Middle East. This war, which pitted Israel against a Syrian and Egyptian coalition, took place between October 6 (the date of Yom Kippur that year) and October 24. It began when Syria and Egypt attacked the Golan Heights and Sinai, both of which Israel had controlled since the Six-Day War in 1967.

On Yom Kippur one atones only for the sins committed against oneself and the Creator, not for sins committed against another human being. To seek forgiveness for the sins against another person, a compromise with that person must be arrived at, and if possible the trespass, forgiven. This return to harmony must be accomplished before Yom Kippur begins, because this is the day when God closes the books, and one’s fate, for better or worse, is sealed. Even the deceased are included in the category of those forgiven on the Day of Atonement. Children must make a public mention of their deceased parents at the synagogue and donate to various charities on behalf of their departed souls.

Before sunset on Yom Kippur, the Kol Nidre is recited. This prayer is well known for its beautiful melody; Kol Nidre (meaning “All Vows”) annuls all vows that the individual may make to God in the year to come before they are uttered; the annulment voids only those vows made between oneself and God, especially the frivolous vows one makes to God when seeking help or religious vows made under duress (for example, coerced conversion to another religion). The recitation of the Kol Nidre does not change the fact that obligations toward other people must be upheld. In fact the eve of Yom Kippur is considered one of the best times to seek and grant forgiveness. God will forgive sins committed against him; but if one has wronged another person, then he or she must seek forgiveness from that person and try to make amends.

The viddui, or confession, is recited as part of the afternoon prayers the day before the holiday begins. Even though viddui is repeated throughout Yom Kippur, it is repeated because, were someone to die later in the day, he or she would at least have already chanted the confessional and sought forgiveness.

Most of Yom Kippur is spent praying in synagogue. Services begin early in the morning in Orthodox synagogues and continue until the afternoon. People then go home, returning soon afterward for the evening service that continues until nightfall. The services conclude with the blowing of tekiah gedolah, an extended blast on the shofar (a Jewish musical instrument originally carved out of a ram's horn).

There are numerous traditions concerning how the fast of Yom Kippur is to be broken. Some break it with a potato, some with an egg (symbolizing the renewal of life in the new year). While there is no correct menu to serve, it is certainly desirable to invite friends, relatives, and family members to share it. Traditionally people are supposed to eat only enough to revive their strength and then proceed to the next mitzvah (holy action or festival).

Origins and History

Yom Kippur was first set forth in the Bible, chapter 16 of Leviticus, where the rituals are described. Yom Kippur is called Shabbat Shabbaton (Sabbath of Sabbaths), because it is on Yom Kippur that abstinence from work and the solemnity that characterize the Sabbath are most important. The fast of Yom Kippur is strict: Taking a bath, using cosmetics, perfumes, or deodorant, engaging in sexual intercourse, wearing leather (including shoes), eating or drinking, and working are forbidden. Yom Kippur is a full, 25-hour fast starting before sunset on the evening

Memorial Lights

In memory of parents who have died, special candles are lit that burn throughout Yom Kippur. Then two holiday candles are lit and blessed. These candles signal the start of Yom Kippur, and a 25-hour fast must be observed from that point on.

preceding the festival day, and culminating after nightfall on Yom Kippur. These restrictions may be waived in case of any ailment, health hazard, or terminal disease. Children under nine years of age and pregnant women are exempted from fasting. Older children, as well as new mothers (defined as those who have given birth between three and seven days following previous), are expected to fast but are permitted to break the fast if they need to do so.

During the days of the Second Temple in Jerusalem (516 B.C.E.–70 C.E.), the high priest conducted an elaborate sacrificial ceremony on Yom Kippur. Clad in white linen, he successively confessed his own sins, the sins of the other priests, and lastly the sins of the people; then he entered the Sanctum Sanctorum (Holy of Holies) to sprinkle

A rabbi reads from the Torah at Temple B'Nai Israel in Hattiesburg, Mississippi. Yom Kippur, Judaism's Day of Atonement, is the most solemn event on the Jewish calendar. (AP Photo/Hattiesburg American, Joe Lovett)

The Hebrew Bible

The name Hebrew Bible refers to the common portions of the Jewish and Christian canons, the Tanakh. It does not include the deuterocanonical books, added to the Old Testament by the Roman Catholic and Eastern Orthodox Churches. Tanakh is an acronym (TNK) for the Hebrew Bible, from the names of its three major divisions: Torah (also called the Pentateuch, or the Five Books of Moses), Neviim (Prophets), and Kethuvim (Writings).

The word “deuterocanonical” comes from Greek and means second canon. Canonization is the official acceptance of authority and standardization of a text. In Catholicism deuterocanonical means that the canonicity of the books was definitively settled at a later date than the rest of the canon. Like the Tanakh, most Protestant Bible versions exclude these books, although they were initially included in the King James Version.

The large majority of Old Testament references in the New Testament are taken from the Greek Septuagint, which includes the deuterocanonical books. The Septuagint (LXX) is the name commonly given to the Greek translation of the Hebrew Bible, produced in the third century B.C.E. The Septuagint Bible includes additional books beyond those used in today’s Jewish Tanakh. The additional books were composed in Greek, Hebrew, or Aramaic, but in most cases only the Greek version has survived. It is the oldest and most important complete translation of the Hebrew Bible.

the blood of the sacrifice and offer incense. The priest would then send a goat (the scapegoat) into the wilderness, where it was driven to its death, symbolically carrying away the sins of the people of Israel. Some commentators believe that the killing of the goat was a misinterpretation and that the goat was set free.

The old custom of kapparot, or atonement, was formerly practiced on the afternoon before the holiday. The custom involved swinging a live chicken around one’s head and saying a specific prayer. Later the chicken was killed, and its meat given to the poor. Nowadays, money is tied up in a handkerchief and used instead of the chicken. It is eventually donated to charity.

See also Volume I: ISRAEL

See also Volume II: UNITED STATES

See also Volume III: JUDAISM; ROSH HASHANAH

Further Reading

Shmuel Yosef Agnon, Days of Awe: Being a Treasury of Traditions, Legends, and Learned Commentaries concerning Rosh ha-Shanah, Yom Kippur, and the Days between, Culled from Three Hundred Volumes, Ancient and New (New York: Schocken Books, 1965); Philip Goodman, The Yom Kippur Anthology (Philadelphia: Jewish Publication Society of America, 1992); Howard Greenfield, Rosh Hashanah and Yom Kippur (New York: Holt, Rinehart and Winston, 1979).

Yoruba

FACT FILE

Located in	Countries with Yoruba populations, especially Nigeria, Cuba, Brazil, Sierra Leone, and Benin
World Population	About 10 million
Place of Origin	Sub-Saharan Africa

Introduction

There are nearly 50 million people spread across West Africa. The Yoruba, the second largest ethnic group in Nigeria after the Hausa-Fulani, account for nearly 21 percent of the total population of that part of the continent. While most Yoruba are settled in southwestern Nigeria, some communities exist outside the West African country, in countries like Sierra Leone, Brazil, and Cuba.

The Yoruba are the chief ethnic group in the Nigerian states of Kwara, Ekiti, Lagos, Ondo, Ogun, Kogi, Osun, and Oyo, and they also comprise a significant portion of the population of the Republic of Benin. The people of the Yoruba tribe practice numerous religions. Presently, the majority of Yoruba people say they are Christian. They belong primarily to the Church of Nigeria (Anglican), Catholic, Methodist, and Pentecostal Churches. Muslims make up about a quarter of the Yoruba population, and the rest practice their native Yoruba religion.

Yoruba mythology is possibly one of the oldest in the world, and various religions of the Western Hemisphere such as Candomblé in Brazil and Santería in Cuba have sprung from it. The Yoruba's own native deities are called orishas. The primary orishas are Obatala, his sister Oduduwa, and their father Olorun. The Yoruba say that Obatala created humanity, and Olorun breathed life into the hollow shells made by Obatala.

The Yoruban religion has an extensive pantheon of orishas. There is an all-knowing deity, some primeval divinities, and some deified spirits. Olodumare (the one with the completeness of all things) and Olorun (the lord whose dwelling is in the heavens) are the names given to the all-knowing God. The Yoruba believe that Olorun not only created the heavens and the earth, but he also created a number of divinities and spirits (Eborá and Orisa, or Imole). Many celebrated figures of history, including kings and heroes, have also been given divine status by the Yoruba, and they are summoned along with the forces of nature such as Earth, trees, river, mountains, storms, and so on during rituals. The religion also believes that deceased ancestors continue to exist.

Some Yorubans believe in only two major divinities, Obatala and his sister Oduduwa. Both are worshipped independently of their father Olorun and, in some city-states, even precede him. According to one Yoruba legend Olorun created the world and left Obatala and Oduduwa to complete the details. A different interpretation avers that Obatala and Olorun are the same god, with different names. Obatala is regarded as a sculptor god, assigned the task of shaping human bodies. The Yoruba believe that the physically handicapped have been the victims of wrath, but it is Olorun who decides whether or not to infuse these bodies with life. Although he is still secondary to almighty Olorun, Obatala has power over the minor orishas, all 401 of them. There are also numerous other deities in the Yoruban pantheon: Oya, the river goddess; Ifa, the god of divination; Eleda, the goddess of destiny; Ibeji, the twins; Osanyin, Ifa's companion; and Osun, the goddess of fertility.

Some deities existed deep in the past, before Oduduwa created Earth, while others were mortals,

Fun Fact

The Oyo-Yoruba trace the source of their political power back to Shango.

The Engungun

The 24-day engungun festival honors the ancestors. Each day an engungun, manifested as a masked dancer, goes through the town dancing, possessed by an ancestor. There is a different dancer for each day of the festival. On the final day of the festivities, a priest sacrifices animals in the ancestors' shrine and pours the sacrificial blood all over the shrine.

Shokpona, the God of Smallpox

Shokpona, it appears, became a significant god during the time when there was a smallpox epidemic in West Africa. The native Yoruba blamed Shokpona's wrath for carbuncles, high temperatures, boils, or anything that looked like it might be smallpox. The Yoruba were so terrified by Shokpona that at times they were afraid to say his name aloud. Because of this fear Shokpona's priests exercised enormous power; the people believed that they could bring a plague on their enemies. In fact the priests sometimes concocted a potion from the dry skin and powdered scabs of deceased smallpox victims. They would place the potion on the desired target to spread the disease. Smallpox has been more or less wiped out, the Shokpona priests have lost credibility, and the cult no longer exists.

heroes, or heroines who performed some act that impressed the people around them. One minor orisha Shango, the god of thunder, occupies a lofty position in the pantheon of Yoruba deities. Shango, according to Yoruban belief, fashioned thunder and lightning by throwing "thunderstones" to Earth; so anywhere that lightning strikes, Yoruba priests search the nearby areas for stones. This deity's popularity was probably a direct result of efforts to ward off the numerous tornadoes that perpetually plague western Africa.

Ogun is another of the minor orishas who is widely revered. The god of war, ironworking, and hunting, Ogun is considered the benefactor of warriors, blacksmiths, and those who use metal in some way in their occupation. The Yoruba believe Ogun can be terrifying in his revenge; if someone dishonors a contract made in his name, they believe swift vengeance will follow.

The Yoruba do not worship Olorun with the kind of reverence normally reserved for a deity of his status. Unlike Shango, who has numerous shrines erected in his honor, Olorun does not have any. Furthermore neither do the Yoruba offer sacrifices to him, nor does he have a priest in his name. Olorun has the same dimensions as the supreme powers of Judaism, Christianity, and Islam, as the Creator of everything. Still, the Yoruba appear to ignore him in their daily lives. One plausible theory is that Olorun, as a divine persona, developed out of the influences of early Christian or Islamic missionaries. So it may be that the Yoruba find the notion of venerating him as an omnipotent god too overwhelming.

Ifa, the oracle of divination, figures prominently in Yoruban cosmology and functions as a mediator between gods and humans. When a child is born, for example, the parents will call in a babalawo (priest) to identify the spiritual forces that will influence the child and to find out which orisha the child should follow. Cowrie shells and palm nuts are frequently the instruments for the babalawo's reading. The babalawo gets Ifa's attention with a cone-shaped "tapper" and uses a carved cup to toss the 16 shells onto a powdered board used for divination (opon Ifa). Eshu (or Elegba) is the messenger of the gods; he is also known as the trickster, much like Hermes of the Greeks and the Roman's Mercury.

Eshu is the youngest, fastest, and most quick-witted of all the gods, and he finds ways to punish those who neglect the other gods. Eshu brings the sacrifices called for by the Ifa priest to Olorun, the high god, so Ifa and Eshu work together to control humanity's affairs. Eshu is also the only Yoruba deity whose face is seen in Yoruba art, and his figure is usually decorated with cowrie shells and beads.

The Yoruba treat their ancestors with deference. Some groups think that ancestors become demi-gods after death, assuming the character of deities. This resembles another aspect of the traditional Yoruban faith, a belief that gods can manifest themselves by taking possession of mediums.

Yams are significant thanksgiving symbols to the Yoruba, whose main vocation is farming. As a consequence, even communities that rely principally on fishing present freshly gathered yams to the deities before eating any themselves. The Eje Festival, for example, is a yearly event in Itebu-Manuwa, where the Yoruba leader offers yams to their god of the sea, Malokum, to the ancestors, and to local spirits and divinities believed to control the harvest and the productivity of the land.

Origins and History

The Yoruba tribe was known to be the most developed sub-Saharan African community before the era of British dominance began. The tribe had become affluent because they controlled major trade routes. The Yoruba were, however, not a strong confederacy, with differences often leading to wars between the city-states. The territory was subdivided into 25 centralized, more or less autonomous states ruled by hereditary kings. In theory the Yoruba consider the old city of Ife-Ife as the oldest city with primary authority in religious mat-

Fun Fact

The Ikwerre, Kalabari, and Okrika festivals honor the water spirits of the Niger Delta. The masqueraders wear carved headdresses that imitate the heads of fish or water birds. The festivals begin with a divination by the priest of the deity being addressed, then ritual sacrifices are performed, followed by singing and dancing portraying various characteristics of the deity. The climax of the festival is the appearance of a masquerader who embodies the deity.

ters; at the same time they also acknowledge the political authority of the rulers of the rival city of Oyo. Oyo's ruler once held sway over the leaders of other cities, though this privilege could not always be exercised. The Oni of Ife-Ife and the Alafin of Oyo remain the most respected rulers in Nigeria.

The majority of the states were in the hands of hereditary monarchs and councils made up of guild leaders, nobles, and merchants. The power exercised by the two civil authorities was different from one city-state to the next. Some had a monarch with more or less total sovereignty, while in others the councils were dominant, and the king was simply a nominal head. Each city-state has its own version of history, religious observances, and artistic style; still, all agree that Ife-Ife retains ritual authority, all worship the Yoruba gods, and all look for solutions to problems in their lives to the god Ifa. All the major Yoruba kingdoms trace descent from a single ancestor, the first king of Ife-Ife, usually called Oduduwa. While Oduduwa was still alive, his sons and grandsons spread out from the city to establish their own kingdoms.

It is no surprise that the cultural influence of the Yoruba extended beyond the African continent to the Americas. Europeans in search of slaves captured millions of Africans, stuffed them into crowded ships, and brought them across the Atlantic Ocean. It was not a pleasant journey, and many people died during the crossing. Yoruba slaves were transported to French, British, Portuguese, and Spanish colonies. In most of these places Yoruba traditions endured in spite of the Catholic Church's aggressive, often cruel, techniques for making converts. In Brazil, Haiti, Trinidad, and Cuba, Yoruba rites and rituals, dance, music, and myths are popular. In Haiti the people of the Yoruba tribe were called Anagos. In Afro-Haitian spiritual activities Yoruba rites enjoy a high place, and numerous deities that originated in Yoruba are still worshipped. In South America's biggest country Brazil, Yoruba spiritual activities are called Shango or Anago. In Cuba, these practices are called Lucumi.

Holidays and Religious Observances

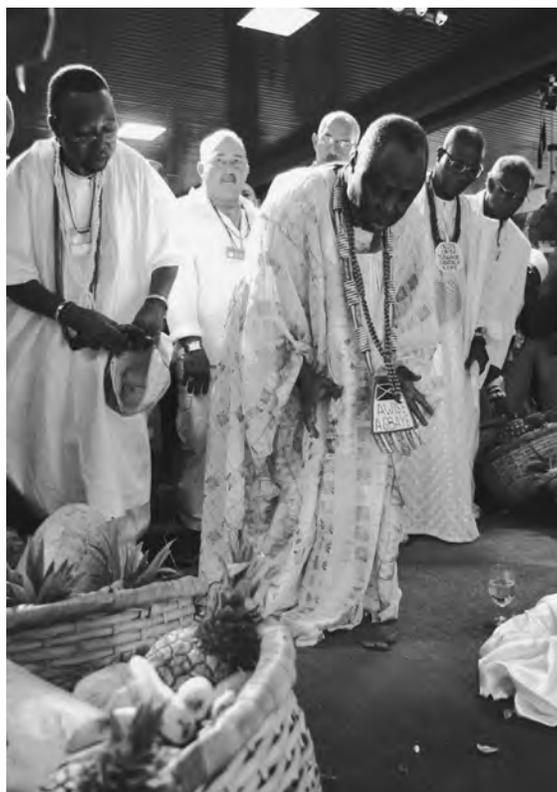

Although most of the peoples who trace their heritage to the Yoruban past have since nominally, at least, become Muslims or Christians, their ancestral spiritual roots remain strong and viable, and they continue to observe ancient festivals with dancing, drumming, and elaborately carved masks. The masks, rituals, and mythologies may differ from one tribe or nation to another, but the focus and purposes of contemporary observances reflect those of ancient Yoruban spiritual beliefs. Among the most important of these are the Shango Festival, the New

A Legend of the Deity Shango

According to native Yoruba belief the deity Shango has four wives. Each one is represented by a well-known Nigerian river: His main wife, Oya, is personified by the River Niger. According to Yoruba legend, Shango was once a mortal and the fourth king of Oyo, the old Yoruba capital. His charm could cause lightning, and one day Shango was so charming that he unintentionally killed his whole family. In remorse he killed himself and became a deity.

Yam Festival, Egungun observances, and a variety of initiation and harvest festivals. The Yoruba spiritual system reflects a practical approach to relations between those who inhabit the spirit world and the world of mortals.

The Shango festival honors the orisha of thunder and lightning (energy), an ancestor who hanged himself, according to legend. The festival, celebrated

The president of the Yoruba Congress, center, presides over the religious closing ceremony of the Yoruba Global Congress, celebrated in the Conventions Palace in Havana, Cuba. The Yoruba religion has roots in Africa, but it has spread throughout the world. (AP Photo/Cristobal Herrera) toward the end of July on the Gregorian calendar, generally goes on for 20 days, with a hereditary priest offering numerous sacrifices at Shango's shrine. The last day of the festival Shango takes possession of the priest, who acquires magical powers as a consequence. After he has eaten fire and gunpowder, the ritual procession heads to the Oba's palace where a great feast is held, accompanied by palm wine, roast meat, and more dancing. Because many people have abandoned traditional spiritual practices, Shango's priests are no longer as rich or powerful as they were in the past.

Fun Fact

Ife-Ife is thought to have been established around 850 C.E., Oyo around 1350.

The ancestral spirits of the Yoruba peoples, called egungun (which translates as something like "powers concealed"), are invoked during annual or biennial festivals. According to legend, the egungun ritual originated because the dead body of an Ologbin father, of the lineage of King Oyo's griots ("praise-singers"), had just been left atop an ant hill. To appease his anger at such careless neglect, the egungun ritual, with its complex dance and elaborate costume, was first performed.

During these observances, dancers don multicolored, layered costumes. The object of both dance and dancer is to enliven the costume and enable the mask he wears to change his mortal flesh so that he sheds his identity and becomes ethereal, taking on the qualities of the ancestral spirit he celebrates in the dance. Only the spirits, however, can imbue the costume with power.

With the exception of a few titled women, egungun is an exclusively male cult. Not only are women generally forbidden to appear when an egungun such as Oro performs, it is also believed that a woman who sees the ceremony will die soon.

The New Yam Festival (called Iri-ji), certainly one of the largest and most important Yoruba observances, is a New Year's celebration that takes place in August of the Gregorian calendar, although the specific day is locally determined. The Yam Festival marks the end of one agricultural cycle and the start of a new one. On the eve of the festival, the yams left over from the previous harvest are disposed of because only fresh yams can welcome the new year. Before the festivities begin, either the eldest male of the community or the king offers the new yams to gods and ancestors to show appreciation to them for the yam harvest. Then the prepared yams can be given out to the gathered villagers.

Among the Yoruba people elderly women, addressed as "our mothers," are respected and feared because they possess spiritual powers that can be used to help or harm the community. The purpose of the annual Gelede festival is celebration of the creative powers of women elders, female ancestors, and goddesses. The Gelede festival resolves the distress caused by drought or not having enough children by paying tribute to women's power and asking that they use their extraordinary powers to ensure the fertility of the people and the land.

See also Volume I: BENIN; BRAZIL; CUBA

See also Volume II: NIGERIA; SIERRA LEONE

Fun Fact

The Yoruban religion has 401 minor orishas; Shango, the god of thunder, is the most popular.

Further Reading

J. Omosade Awolalu, Yoruba Beliefs and Sacrificial Rites (New York: Athelia Henrietta Press, 1996); Kayode J. Fakinlede, Beginner's Yoruba (New York: Hippocrene Books, 2005); Awo Falokun Fatunmbi, Inner Peace: The Yoruba Concept of Ori (New York: Athelia Henrietta Press, 2005); Oshomha Imoagene, The Yoruba of Southwestern Nigeria (Ibadan, Nigeria: New-Era Publishers, 1990); Baba Ifa Karade, The Handbook of Yoruba Religious Concepts (York Beach, Me.: S. Weiser Books, 1994); Nike S. Lawal, Matthew N. O. Sadiku, and Ade Dopamu, eds., Understanding Yoruba Life and Culture (Trenton, N.J.: Africa World Press, 2004); J. Olumide Lucas, The Religion of the Yorubas (New York: Athelia Henrietta Press, 1996).

∞ Zoroastrianism ∞

FACT FILE

Observed in	Mainly India and Iran
World Population	About 250,000
Place of Origin	Persia

Introduction

Zoroaster (the Greek spelling of his name) lived in Persia, the name then used for the territory that is modern-day Iran. According to legend, the prophet's birth was foretold, and the forces of evil tried to kill him when he was still a child. He preached monotheism (belief in one God) in a land with a history of aboriginal polytheism. Initially ridiculed and targeted for his teachings, Zoroaster eventually won over the king of Persia, and Zoroastrianism was the state religion of many Persian empires until the seventh century C.E.

Members of the faith are devoted to a threefold path: "good thoughts, good words, good deeds." The Zoroastrian sacred text is the Zend Avesta. The Avesta includes the original teachings of Zoroaster; the Zend is the commentaries on his words. Zoroaster's thought is preserved in a sequence of five hymns known as the "Gathas," the core of the religion's text. Written in what is called the Gathic dialect of Farsi, they are abstract poetry regarding the worship of one god, morality, social justice, and the choice between good and evil. Today, the religious community is divided into those who adhere (generally or exclusively) to the teachings of the original "Gathas" and those who accept later traditions as also divinely inspired.

The remaining sections of the Avesta were added long after the "Gathas" were written. These portions deal with ritual and practice and the customs of the faith. Although Zoroastrianism is monotheistic, it is a dualist religion. Ahura-Mazda was the ultimate force for good (in old Persian the word was Aura-Mazda, since aura meant "lord," and mazda, "wisdom"; in modern Persian, it is called Ormazd), and Angra Mainyu (or Ahriman), the evil force, who are forever locked in struggle for supremacy. Ahura-Mazda was the supreme deity of both the Zoroastrian and Mazdean religions. (The Mazdeans were ancient Persian nobles who worshipped Ahura-Mazda and believed that the deity should never be concretely represented since he is forever unknowable. It is possible that the Mazdeans inspired the Jews with the same horror for attempts to represent Yahweh concretely.) He communicates with humans through a number of aspects, called Amesha Spentas (Bounteous Immortals); in the "Gathas" these Immortals are sometimes described as ideas; at other times they are spoken of as though they are embodied individuals.

The cosmic conflict between Ahura-Mazda and Angra Mainyu engages the entire universe, humanity included, who are required to choose whether to follow good or evil. Zoroastrians believe that in the end dualism will be destroyed, and goodness will reign once again. Another strain of Zoroastrianism believes that the war between good and evil is an abstract moral dualism to be fought within the human mind.

Zoroastrians segment time into three ages: creation, the present age of good and evil, and the future. During the third and last era Ahura-Mazda will prevail, sinners will be punished, and the good will enter heaven. This view is similar to that favored by Christianity, except for the concept of hell. Among Zoroastrians, hell is a momentary, not a permanent, eternal abode, where evildoers are purified by fire.

Zoroastrianism and Fire

Fire is important in Zoroastrian belief, because it is the symbol of the one supreme, all-knowing Zoroastrian God, Ahura-Mazda. Though it is only the symbol of Ahura-Mazda, some Zoroastrians worship the element itself. According to Zoroastrianism, fire purifies everything it touches: The universe was fashioned by fire, is preserved by fire, and will be destroyed by fire.

Fun Fact

Zoroastrians have three different calendars, each with a different start for the new year: the Qadimi (ancient) calendar, used in Iran; the Shahanshahi, or Shenshai, (imperial) calendar, used by the Parsis in India, which is exactly 30 days behind the Qadimi calendar; and the newer Fasli (seasonal) solar calendar, which always starts the new year at the vernal equinox (March 21). Because the Parsis neglected to add an extra month to the year every 120 years, their new year now falls in August.

Following death Zoroastrians believe that the urvan (“soul”) is allowed three days to contemplate on its just-terminated life. The soul is then evaluated by the trinity of Sraosha, Mithra, and Rashnu. If there are more good thoughts and actions than bad thoughts and actions, the soul will be taken into heaven. If, however, the bad predominates, the soul is sent to hell to be purified by fire. The four elements—water, fire, air, and earth—are regarded as pure elements that must be preserved. For this reason Zoroastrians do not burn or bury the deceased but leave their bodies on high ground, built to serve this purpose, to be eaten by crows and hawks.

The coming of the sayoshant (“savior”) is expected to coincide with humanity’s final judgment, where the faithful will be resurrected, and evil defeated for eternity. This savior, who is expected to be of Zoroaster’s lineage, would be born of a virgin, just as Jesus was said to have been born.

Zoroastrian worship includes symbolic ceremonies and prayers. Ahura-Mazda is revered through consecrated fire, which is believed to contain the prophet’s presence. This is not to say that Zoroastrians worship fire. Rather, fire is their God’s symbol.

Funeral Ceremony

In Zoroastrianism belief, death symbolizes the worst form of pollution and impurity. They have special rites before death, as preparation for the next life. According to Zoroastrianism beliefs, the spirit of decay enters the body about three hours after death. There are particular purification rituals for the corpse bearers, the only people permitted to touch the dead body. For the funeral ceremony, some special clothes are put on the corpse. A fire circles around the dead body to keep the bad spirits at bay, and the fire is given sandalwood and frankincense. After certain prayers from the priests, relatives can look at the body without touching it. After that, the body is brought outside, and a dog looks at it. In Zoroastrianism, a dog can verify death and drives away bad spirits.

Origins and History

The precise date Zoroastrianism was founded is uncertain, and speculations range wildly between 10,000 and 600. Some scholars suggest the religion was founded in Persia (now Iran) sometime between 1500–1200 by the prophet Zoroaster, while others date the religion’s beginnings earlier, around the sixth century. Any dates suggested for the beginnings of Zoroastrianism depend on when it is thought Zoroaster (in modern Farsi, Zartosht) lived, which is much disputed. Plato placed him back in the sixth century, a time close to the claims of the Zoroastrian conservatives. Using his style of writing as a basis for speculation, religious scholars and historians generally date Zoroaster’s life as contemporary with the Sanskrit Rig Veda, between 1500 and 1000. In spite of this lack of agreement, some claim that Zoroastrianism is the world’s oldest monotheistic religion, and that its central concepts—heaven and hell, the eternal struggle between good and evil, and a messiah who will save humanity—profoundly influenced the better known faiths Judaism and Christianity.

The “Gathas,” the poetic heart of the Zend Avesta, were written in Gathic, a dialect of Persian belonging to the Indo-Iranian branch of the Indo-European languages, which is similar to the language of the Rig Veda, (in Sanskrit rig means “praise” and veda, “knowledge”). The Rig Veda is the earliest of the four Hindu scriptures the Vedas.

Scholars date the Rig Veda to the second millennium based primarily on its references to late Bronze Age culture (for example, horse-drawn chariots), so it is commonly held to have been completed between 1500 and 1200.

When he was 15, Zoroaster decided to devote his life to religious pursuits and, when he was 20, he withdrew to a cave where he meditated for seven years. When he was 30, during a ritual purification rite Zoroaster had a vision of God. The vision drastically changed his view on the world, and he set out to teach the same perspective to others. Zoroaster taught that there was only one creator God and only he was worthy of being revered. Of the deities worshipped by ancient religions, especially those that appeared to enjoy war and discord, Zoroaster declared them to be evil spirits and the servants of Angra Mainyu, one of God’s adversaries.

In 549 Cyrus the Great (c. 585–c. 529) of the Archaemenian family led the Persians to overthrow the Median Court in western Iran. Cyrus was thus responsible for creating the first Persian Empire. The Archaemenian kings were devout Zoroastrians and attempted to rule the land justly and in accord with Asha, the virtuous, all-inclusive law of nature. When Alexander the Great of Macedonia (356–23) overcame Darius III (c. 380–30), the last king of the Achaemenid Dynasty, in 331 the faith suffered greatly. In a span of merely five years, Alexander conquered most of the Persian territory, many Zoroastrian priests died, and the sacred texts were destroyed. Most of Zoroastrian literature was lost forever, but the heart of the doctrine—contained in the “Gathas”—was untouched.

When the Arabs attacked Persia in 650 a number of Zoroastrians escaped to India. Those who remained were subjected to centuries of harassment, slaughter, forced conversion, unbearable taxes, and other persecutions. By the beginning of the 21st century, they numbered fewer than 20,000 and resided primarily in Tehran, Yazd, and Kernan.

Holidays and Religious Observances

Zoroastrianism has a well-earned reputation as a joyous religion, and its calendars (there are three in use) are full of holy days and festivals. Many of the festivals associated with the religion are connected with the cycle of the seasons, while the origin of others, like the six gabanbars, which go back to pre-Zoroastrian times, are unknown; some festivals, Navruz, for example, the Iranian New Year, have found their way into other cultures. In addition to special rituals, such as marriage and funerals, there is the daily ritual of Kusti, which must be performed each time an individual washes his or her hands, there are seven obligatory festival observances: the six gabanbars and Navruz.

The gabanbars, the six major seasonal festivals, originated among the farmers of the Iranian Plateau: Maidyozarem is the mid-spring festival; Maidyoshahem is the mid-summer observance; Paitishahem is a harvest festival, celebrating the bringing in of the corn; Ayathrem is the time when cattle are brought back to the homestead; Maidyarem is the mid-winter festival; and Hamaspath-maidyem celebrates the gathering of all the farobars. (Farobars are guardian angels who look after the living and the dead.) These religious observances are happy festivals celebrated with much feasting and merriment. Navruz, or Noruz, the seventh required feast, is observed on the vernal equinox. Although not a required religious observance, Zoroaster's birthday, called the “Greater Navruz” because it is celebrated six days after that holiday, is still an important holiday. Zoroastrians go to their temple for prayer and then gather for huge feasts. (Like December 25, celebrated in Western Christian churches as Jesus' birthday, Zoroaster was probably not born at this time.)

Mihragan (Jashan-e Mihragan), among the most ancient festivals known, goes back at least to the earliest Indo-Europeans, was connected with the worship of one of the oldest Aryan deities (Baga-Mithra, the Sun god), and traces related to this deity have been found as far back as the 14th century B.C.E. Mihragan may be the survival of an earlier Iranian New Year's festival from some pre-

Zoroaster and the Greeks

Zoroaster was the name given by the Greeks to Zarathustra (Zartosht), and it is the one most familiar to non-Zoroastrians. The Greeks respected the Persian prophet so much that his doctrines were mentioned by celebrated Greek philosophers like Plato, Aristotle, and Socrates. During the Archaemenian period (549–331 B.C.E.), a large number of books and texts spread through the Greek world in Zoroaster's name, which gave authority to his ideas.

historic phase of the Indo-Iranian calendar, when the year began at the autumnal equinox. The month was called Bagayadi or Bagayadish, probably the first month of the Old Persian year, and has its parallel in the seventh Babylonian month, Tishritu, the patron of which was also Shamash, the Babylonian Sun god. Nowadays Mihragan retains its place in the Zoroastrian calendar, and is observed on the 16th day of the seventh month, the name day of Mithra, October 1 in the Gregorian calendar.

With Navruz and Mihragan, the festival of Tiragan (Jashan-e Tiragan) is one of the most widely observed feasts of ancient Iran (Persia). Tiragan is celebrated on July 1 and is primarily a rain festival. Tir, or more properly Teshtar (Avestan Tishtrya), is the Yazad (“spiritual being”) who governs the Star Sirius, the brightest star in the night sky, and controls the rain. Teshtar Yazad is invoked to guarantee a bountiful harvest and to protect the crops against drought.

A Parsi woman smiles as she greets others at a fire temple on the occasion of the Parsi New Year, in Bombay, India, on August 20. Zoroastrians celebrate the New Year by offering prayers at fire temples. (AP Photo/Rajesh Nirgude)

Fun Fact

Mithra, or Mitra, an important deity in both Zoroastrianism and Hinduism, was probably a proto-Indo-Iranian deity whose name is reconstructed as Mitra. As Mitra, he appears in the Vedas as one of the Adityas, a solar deity and the god of honesty, friendship, and contracts. In Persian civilization where his name was rendered as Mithra, he came into increased prominence as a major deity of Zoroastrianism, one of the trinity that judges the soul after death.

their closest relatives.

The bridegroom is the first to take his seat in the room where the marriage is to be celebrated, while the bride comes in after him. The bridegroom sits on the right hand of the bride, a place of respect. On each side of the couple two trays of rice sit on two stands. The stand by the bride has a small metal pot containing ghee (clarified butter) and molasses. Two candles also burn on the stands near the bride and the bridegroom. An attendant holds a censer with a burning fire in one hand and a little frankincense in the other.

The ceremony starts when the bride and the groom are seated opposite each other, separated by a piece of cloth between them held up by two people, so that they are unable to see each other. Their

Among Zoroastrians, marriage is an event that must be celebrated publicly before an assembly (Anjoman), which can bear witness to the event. The bridegroom's ceremonial dress is the Jama-pichori, or sayah, a loose, flowing dress that is always white. The bride's sari is also white. The groom's forehead has a long vertical mark in red, and the bride has a circle of red pigment on hers. Both wear garlands of flowers around their necks. The bridegroom is called var-rajā, "husband king," and the bride is called kanya. The bride and the bridegroom each have a marriage witness, usually

Fun Fact

The Rig Veda is historically important because it records an early phase in the development of Hinduism (the Vedic, or Aryan, stage), which is closely related to what is thought to have been a pre-Zoroastrian Persian religion. The linguistic evidence indicates that both Zoroastrianism and Vedic Hinduism developed from the same, earlier, cultural source, hands are joined and the cloth is held over the hands. It is dropped after the hand-fastening ceremony, which means that they are no longer separate and have become one in matrimony. As long as the cloth is held up between them, they sit opposite each other; once it has been removed, they are made to sit side by side, which also signifies that they are now united.

After the senior officiating priest has fastened their right hands together, both are given a few grains of rice in their left hands, and the attendant places some frankincense on the fire in the censer, a sign for the couple to throw their rice over one another. This process is often watched with great interest by the couple's friends because the one who throws rice first over the other "wins." "Who won, the bridegroom or the bride?" is a question often asked at this point. The one who throws rice first indicates that he or she will be foremost in loving and respecting the other. Throwing the rice is followed by applause from the gathered friends, expressing their approval and goodwill for the union. Then follows the marriage ceremony proper (Asirvad), when each is asked whether he or she has consented to the marriage. To be certain, the question (and answers) must be repeated three times. The priests then offer practical advice about life, ask God to give the couple moral and social virtues, and call upon renowned spirits of the dead of ancient Iran to bless them. The ceremony ends with a benediction.

Although there is no mention of rites or ceremonies to be performed during pregnancy, allusions to women's prayers for an easy delivery and a good supply of milk for breast-feeding her child, suggest that there may once have been such rituals that have since been lost. After a woman becomes pregnant, a small fire can be kept inside the house to ward off evil spirits, and she must be carefully attended to. She must not touch anything dead or decomposing, lest she catch a disease, and her husband is forbidden to have intercourse with her after the fourth month.

While the woman is pregnant, two days are celebrated, Panch masiun and Agharni, the days of the fifth and seventh months, respectively, when both the woman and her husband are given new clothes by both families and the husband's relatives send sweets to the bride's parents and other friends and relations.

After the child is born, a lamp is lit and kept burning for at least three days to protect the child from harm and evil influences. In some cases, the lamp remains lit for 10, or even 40 days; the latter is the length of time a woman must remain in isolation after giving birth. First deliveries often take place in the home of the woman's parents.

During her required 40 days of confinement, the woman is forbidden to leave her place of confinement, and she cannot come into contact with other people, fire, water, or the furnishings in the home, especially wood and linens. Others must bring her her food. Also, looking at a hill is supposed to be bad for the menstrual cycle.

Zoroastrianism does not accept converts; to be a member of the religion, one must be born into it. Navjote is the initiation of a child into the Zoroastrian religion. Children are deemed to be old enough for initiation and the responsibility of offering prayers when they turn seven. During Navjote, "new one who offers prayers," the child is given two symbols of the religion, the sudre, a sacred shirt, and the kusti, the sacred thread-girdle, a string long enough to pass three times around the waist, to be tied twice in a double knot, and to leave the short ends hanging behind. It is made of 72 fine, white, woollen threads.

See also Volume I: INDIA; IRAN

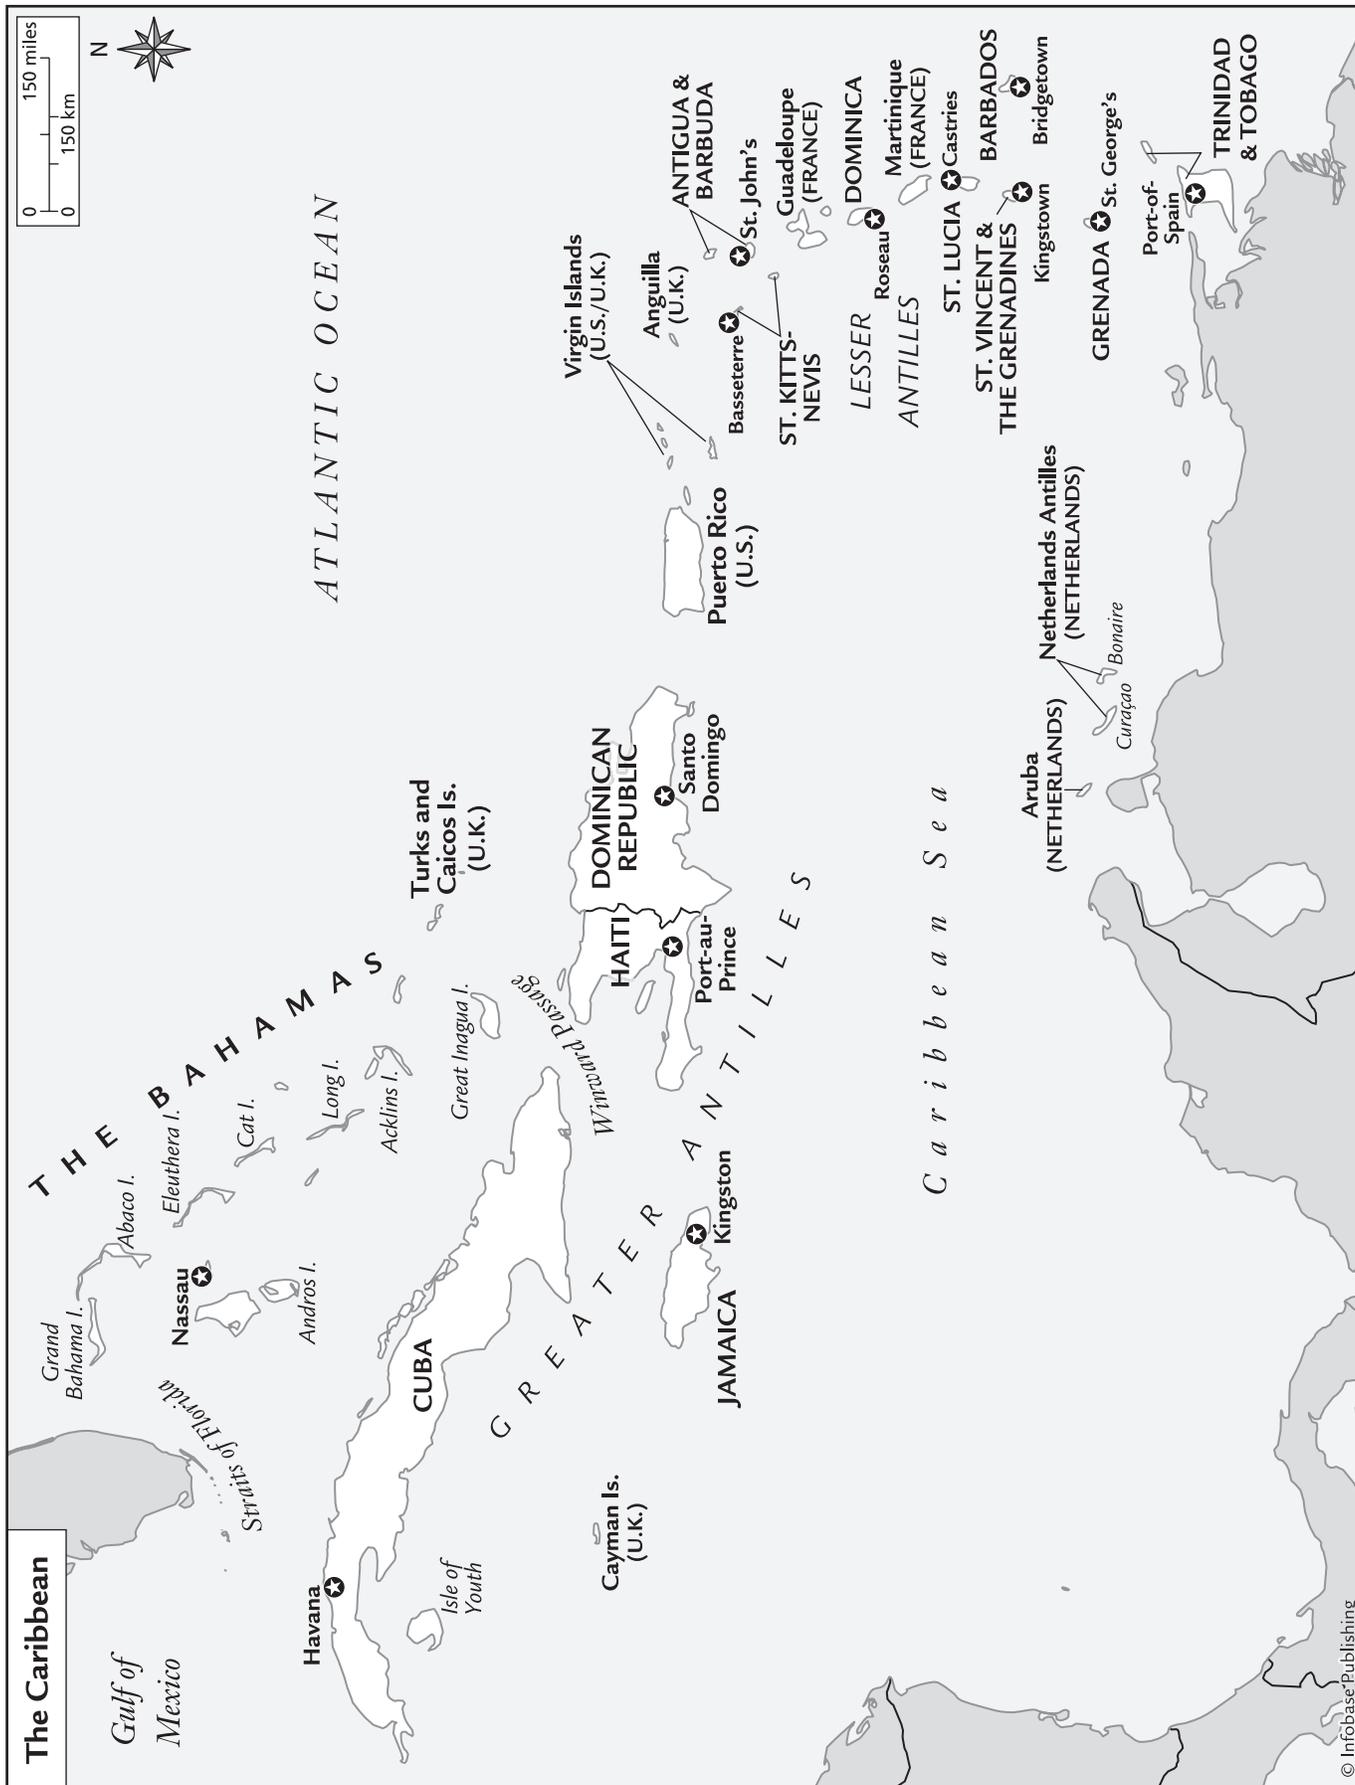

Further Reading

Mary Boyce, Textual Sources for the Study of Zoroastrianism (Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1990); Mary Boyce, Zoroastrians: Their Religious Beliefs and Practices (Oxford, U.K.: Routledge, 2001); Peter Clark, Zoroastrianism: An Introduction to an Ancient Faith (Brighton, East Sussex, U.K.: Sussex Academic Press, 1998); Paul Kriwaczek, In Search of Zarathustra: Across Iran and Central Asia to Find the World's First Prophet (New York: Vintage, 2004); S. A. Nigosian, The Zoroastrian Faith: Tradition and Modern Research (Montreal: McGill-Queen's University Press, 1993); R. C. Zaehner, The Dawn and Twilight of Zoroastrianism (London: Phoenix Press, 2003).

 Appendix I
Regional Maps of the World

 Appendix II
*Overview of World
Calendar Systems*

Introduction

Humanity's fascination with celestial events goes far back into prehistoric eras, and it is thought that people first constructed calendars in order to determine the dates on which religious observances were to be held. A calendar is a method used more or less consistently to mark the passage of time. There are three basic types of calendars—solar, lunar, and lunisolar—as well numerous variations of them. The relative importance of the Sun or Moon in the culture of ancient civilizations determined the type of calendar they chose. There are more than 40 calendars currently in use around the world, and some groups use more than one kind of calendar. Of the current calendars, however, only five or six are extensively used by major socioreligious communities.

Calendars are based on systems used to demarcate and track the passage of time. Most calendars are structured according to three principal astronomical cycles: the day (the length of time required for the Earth to rotate on its axis), the year (the length of time it takes the Earth to complete an orbit around the Sun), and the month (the length of time required for the Moon to complete its orbit around the Earth). Subdivisions of the day (hours, minutes, seconds) are used for timekeeping. Although this may seem straightforward enough, calendrical computations can become quite complex, and calendars inaccurate, because these cycles of revolution do not comprise an integral number of days and astronomical cycles are not constant.

The word calendar is derived from the Latin calendarium, meaning “account book;” it is related to calendae, “the calends,” the first day of all months of the old Roman calendar.

Origins and History

In earlier days, although the number of days in a week was arbitrary, the duration of a month was based on the cycles of the Moon. The number of days and months in a year was determined by the length of time between the two solar equinoxes and solstices, respectively. Since people were ignorant about the Earth's revolution, there were no parameters for fixing the length of a year; so the major predictable factor was the change of seasons. During those times the only celestial constant was probably the waxing and waning phases of the Moon, so the number of days and months in a year varied from culture to culture.

Some cultures built monuments to detect and study the natural occurrences. In Britain the famous Stonehenge sarsens (sandstone blocks) were used to detect the zenith positions of both the Sun and the Moon. Vestiges of similar structures are found throughout the world. The origins of Stonehenge may be traced back to 10,000 B.C.E. With the passage of years, these massive sundials were modified to detect the changes (if any) in the paths of the Sun and the Moon.

History reveals that all the ancient civilizations of the world developed around a productive agricultural base. In those areas where plenty of food was available or could be produced, commerce began with the trading of food for other services or commodities. As the agricultural societies developed, great importance was attached to the solar equinoxes as a means of determining the ideal time for planting and harvesting crops. As the societies grew, rituals, political events, and holidays needed to be set at specific times in a calendar that was in tune with the seasons. As trade developed between different cultures, a more universal reckoning of time became essential. All of these influences mandated the need to make the solar cycles (the equinoxes) the foundation of all calendar systems.

Around the third millennium B.C.E., Egyptian astronomers calculated the solar cycle exactly enough to devise a yearly calendar of 365 days (12 months of 30 days each, plus five extra days added as festival days at the end of the year).

Advancements in commerce and politics in early Roman civilization required the seasons to coincide with specific months of the year. Eventually the Romans adopted the frame of the Greek calendar, which, by 100 B.C.E., was based on a 12-month, 365-day year.

The Mayans are believed to have been the first to accurately account for the duration of a year as it is understood today. The year began when the Sun crossed the zenith on July 16 and consisted of 365 days. Three hundred sixty-four of the days were divided into 28 weeks of 13 days each, and the new year began on the 365th day. In addi-

Fun Fact

Lunar calendars were probably the first method devised for marking the passage of time. The Cro-Magnons are said to have devised such a calendar around 32,000 B.C.E.

Fun Fact

Scholars have found calendars that are apparently luni-stellar: the Egyptian calendar, one used by the Loango, a West African tribe (Sirius), and another used by tribes along the Mexican coast in the early 16th century (the Pleiades).

Fun Fact

The early Roman calendar did not distinguish the days during the winter months. Because they were all lumped together as winter, the Roman calendar was what is called an incomplete calendar.

tion 360 days of the year were divided into 18 months of 20 days each. The series of weeks and the series of months both ran consecutively and independently of each other. The Mayan calendar, although highly complex, was the most accurate one known until the introduction of the Gregorian calendar in 1582.

The ancient Egyptians used water clocks to keep track of periods of time during the day. Most of these clocks measured the subdivisions of a 24-hour period. Others ran for around 30 hours. These water clocks were probably used to calculate the length of a year based on the changing length of a day.

The Sumerians were probably the first people to make a calendar. Ancient Sumerian astronomers recognized and cataloged the brightest stars, outlined a rudimentary set of zodiacal constellations, and noted the movements of the five visible planets (Mercury, Venus, Mars, Jupiter, and Saturn), as well as those of the Sun and Moon.

The Sumerians also developed a rudimentary system of astrological divination to forecast the future of city-states and battles. The month in their lunar calendar began at sunset, with the first glimpse of the crescent of the new Moon. They used the phases of the Moon, counting 12 lunar months as a year. To make up for the difference between this year and the year of the seasons, they inserted an extra month in the calendar about every four years.

The first pages of the Bible explain how God created the world in six days and rested on the seventh. This seventh day became the Jewish day of rest, the Sabbath (Saturday). The seven-day week was established as the imperial calendar in the late Roman Empire and perpetuated by the early Christian church. The British Empire used the seven-day week and spread it worldwide during their period of colonialism. Most Latin-based languages connect each day of the week with one of the so-called seven planets of ancient times: Mercury, Venus, Mars, Jupiter, Saturn, and the Sun and Moon. The days of the week were named after the planets according to either their approximate distance from Earth (assuming Earth to be the center of the universe) or their period of revolution around the Earth. The English language has retained the original planetary names for Saturday, Sunday, and Monday (named after Saturn, the Sun, and the Moon, respectively). For the rest of the days, the names of Anglo-Saxon or Nordic gods replaced the names of the Roman gods. Tuesday is named after Tiw (a god of war), Wednesday is named after Woden (the god of wisdom and war), Thursday is named after Thor (god of thunder and lightning), and Friday is named after Freya (goddess of love and fertility).

There are several categories of calendars in use in the world, but three types predominate: the solar, lunar, and lunisolar. There are also solilunar calendars—solar-count lunar calendars—others that use neither the Sun nor Moon cycles as the basis of their calculations, and some based on other astronomical cycles, such as the one linked to the planet Venus.

Further Reading

Helen Benigni, Barbara Carter, and Eadhmonn Ua Cuinn, The Myth of the Year: Returning to the Origin of the Druid Calendar (Lanham, Md.: University Press of America, 2003); Ahmad Birashk, A Comparative Calendar of the Iranian, Muslim Lunar, and Christian Eras for Three Thousand Years (Costa Mesa, Calif.: Mazda Publishers, 1993); Ormond Edwards, When Was Anno Domini?: Dating the Millennium (Edinburgh, Scotland: Floris Books, 1999); Sherif El-Sabban, Temple Festival Calendars of Ancient Egypt (Liverpool, U.K.: Liverpool University Press, 2000); G. S. P. Freeman-Grenville, The Islamic and Christian Calendars, AD 622–2222 (AH 1–1650): A Complete Guide for Converting Christian Islamic Dates and Dates of Festivals (Reading, Pa: Garnet Publishing, 1995); Robert Hannah, Greek and Roman Calendars: Constructions of Time in the Classical World (London: Duckworth, 2005); Lance Latham, Standard C Date/Time Library: Programming the World's Calendars and Clocks (Lawrence, Kans.: R&D Books, 1998); O. Neugebauer and Richard A. Parker, Egyptian Astronomical Texts (Providence, R.I.: Brown University Press, 1960); Edward M. Reingold and Nachum Dershowitz, Calendrical Calculations (Cambridge, U.K.: Cambridge University Press, 2001); Lynn E. Rose, Sun, Moon, and Sothis (Deerfield Beach, Fla.: Kronos Press, 1999).

Fun Fact

Calends was the day on which accounts were due and on which the Roman priests called the people together to proclaim (calare) that the new Moon had been sighted.

COMPARISON OF MAJOR WORLD CALENDARS
	Gregorian	Islamic	Chinese	Jewish	Hindu
Months in a year	12	12	12	12	12
Names of the months (Months are given in order of their calendars; calendars begin at different times)	January, February, March, April, May, June, July, August, September, October, November, December	Muharram, Safar, Rabbi al-Awwal, Rabi al-Thani, Jumada al-Awwal, Jumada al-Thani, Rajab, Shaban, Ramadan, Shawwal, Dhul al-Qidah, Dhu al-Hijjah	The months are numbered.	Nisan, Iyyar, Sivan, Tammuz, Av, Elul, Tishri, Cheshvan, Kislev, Tevet, Shevat, Adar	Chaitra, Vaisakha, Jyaishta, Asadha, Sravana, Bhadrapada, Asvina, Kartika, Margasirsa, Pausa, Magha, Phalgun
Number of days in a month	30–31 (28 days in February, with 29 days in leap years)	Alternately 29 and 30 days. A month with 29 days will be followed by one with 30 days, which will be followed by one with 29 days, and so forth.	Longer months have 30 days; shorter months have 29 days.	29–30 days	30–31 days
Number of days in a year	365, with one extra day every leap year (every 4th year) in February	354 (11 days fewer than the Gregorian Calendar)	353, 354, or 355 days; leap years have 383, 384, or 385 days	354–384 days, depending on the addition of extra days to various months	360 days, with a leap month every 60 months (five years)
Day starts at	Midnight	Sunset	11:00 p.m.	Sundown/dusk	Sunrise/dawn/morning
Special features/highlights	There are exactly 365 days each year, except for leap years	The festival dates are determined by the sighting of the new Moon. An Islamic calendar cannot be printed in advance because of the high chance of error.	The years are named after animals: dragon, sheep, rooster, pig, rat, ox, tiger, hare, horse, monkey, dog, and snake. A leap year has 13 months.	The new year commences in Tishri, the 7th month	A day has a number of smaller subdivisions. Sometimes there is an extra month in the calendar, which is considered inauspicious. No ceremonies or new ventures are to be performed or started during this month.

Note: All of these calendars have seven-day weeks.

 Appendix III
Solar Calendar Systems

Introduction

A solar calendar's dates are derived from the position of the Earth during its annual revolution around the Sun. The solar year consists of approximately 365.2564 mean solar days, with an extra day added every fourth or leap year to make up for the fractional portion. Solar calendars assign a date to each solar day. A day may be taken to be the time between sunrise and sunset and the night immediately following, or the period between two sunsets, or, as in the case of the Gregorian calendar, be calculated from one midnight to the next. The length of months in solar calendars is arbitrary. There are numerous solar calendars currently in use including the Gregorian, Julian, Badi (Bahai), Thai, Zoroastrian, and the Persian (or Jalali).

There are two types of solar calendars: the tropical and the sidereal. A tropical solar calendar takes into account the position of the Earth (or the Sun) in relation to the equinox. The dates in such a calendar indicate the seasons. A tropical year is calculated using the movement of the Sun from south to north and back again. The Tropics of Cancer and Capricorn mark the extreme north and south latitudes the Sun reaches during this cycle; the word tropical is derived from the Greek tropikos, which means "turn."

The calculation of dates in a sidereal solar calendar, on the other hand, is based on the position of the Earth according to the fixed stars, thereby indicating where the Sun can be found on a particular date, that is, near which zodiacal constellation. A sidereal year is the time required for the Sun to return to the same position relative to the fixed stars.

In ancient times the civilizations evolving in various regions of the Earth were heavily dependent on the heavenly bodies for the calculation of the various denominations of time, from a moment to an entire year. Back then the scholars and astronomers calculated the year based on the movement of the Sun (as they viewed it from their part of the globe), with the help of instruments they had devised and also based on their concepts of the units of time, from the smallest to the largest. Hence, though all these were based on the movements of the Sun, the calculation of time varied a great deal, as it continues to do among contemporary cultures. That is why there are so many solar calendars that differ so strikingly from each other.

Gregorian Calendar

In modern times, the most popular, globally accepted solar calendar, the Gregorian, was first introduced by Aloysius Lilius (c.1510–76), an Italian doctor, philosopher, and chronologist as an improvement on the Julian calendar. Following his death, his brother gave the calendar to Pope Gregory XIII (r. 1572–85), who passed it on to

JULIAN CALENDAR

Julian Month	Days	Gregorian Start Date	Gregorian Equivalent
January	31	January 14	January–February
February	28/29	February 14	February–March
March	31	March 14	March–April
April	30	April 14	April–May
May	31	May 14	May–June
June	30	June 14	June–July
July	31	July 14	July–August
August	31	August 14	August–September
September	30	September 14	September–October
October	31	October 14	October–November
November	30	November 14	November–December
December	31	December 14	December–January

the calendar reform commission. In 1582 Pope Gregory decreed that it was the official calendar in the West. This is the calendar in common use throughout the West today. The Gregorian calendar is remarkably versatile and accurate with a periodic one-day correction known as leap year in which the month of February has 29 days instead of the usual 28. This additional day is designed to keep the calendar aligned with the Earth's orbit around the Sun. The Gregorian calendar completes its cycle every 400 years. There are 97 leap years in every 400-year cycle.

Julian Calendar

The Julian calendar was introduced by Julius Caesar (100–44 B.C.E.) in 45 B.C.E. Julius Caesar had planned to start the new year on the spring equinox or winter solstice, but the Senate, which traditionally took office on January 1, the start of the Roman civil calendar year, wanted January 1 to remain the beginning of the year. Caesar finally yielded to the Senate's wishes. The calendar he introduced has 365 days, divided into 12 months, beginning on January 1. A leap day, February 29, is added every four years, so that the years average 365.25 days each, a figure very close to the true value of 365.242 days for the time it takes the Earth to complete an orbit around the Sun. It was used until 1582, when it was discovered that the little error of .008 days every year had added up to 10 full days, so that the first day of spring on this calendar was getting too close to being in the summer. The Julian calendar eventually settled on March 21 as the date of the vernal equinox. In spite of its problems, the Julian calendar and variations of it are still used by the Eastern Orthodox Churches to set the dates for liturgical events.

The 12 months of the Julian calendar and their Gregorian equivalents are on the previous page.

BADI (BAHAI) CALENDAR

Badi Month	Days	Gregorian Start Date	Gregorian Equivalent
Baha	19	March 21	March–April
Jalal	19	April 9	April
Jamal	19	April 28	April–May
Azamat	19	May 17	May–June
Nur	19	June 5	June
Rahmat	19	June 24	June–July
Kalimat	19	July 13	July–August
Kamal	19	August 1	August
Asma	19	August 20	August–September
Izzat	19	September 8	September
Mashiyat	19	September 27	September–October
Ilm	19	October 16	October–November
Qudrat	19	November 4	November
Qawl	19	November 23	November–December
Masail	19	December 12	December
Sharaf	19	December 31	December–January
Sultan	19	January 19	January–February
Mulk	19	February 7	February
Ala	19	March 2	March

Badi Calendar

The Bahai follow the Badi calendar, which has 19 months, each of which are 19 days. In order to adjust this calendar to the Gregorian year, days must be added between the 18th and 19th months, four in a regular year and five in a leap year. The influence of Islam can be seen in the Bahai manner of reckoning time. The Bahai era began when the Bab declared his mission to Mulla Husayn in 1844 C.E. (1260 A.H. in the Muslim calendar). The Bahai day, like the Muslim day, begins and ends at sunset, and New Years, or Navruz, like the Persian, is celebrated on the vernal equinox, March 21.

Using the Arabic alphabet, the Bab named the Bahai months for attributes of God. Those attributes and the Gregorian equivalents of the Bahai months are above.

Thai Solar Calendar

Thailand has two calendars, one solar, the other lunisolar. The lunisolar calendar is used by Buddhist countries throughout mainland Southeast Asia, including Cambodia, Laos, Myanmar, and Thailand. The Thai solar calendar (or Suriyakati), however, is unique to Thailand. It has largely replaced the lunisolar calendar and is used in traditional and official contexts in Thailand, although the Western calendar is sometimes used in business. The lunisolar calendar (Chantarakati) is still used, however, to schedule most Buddhist feasts and holy days, as well as the day of the Loy Krathong Festival. The months and days of the week of the Thai solar calendar are the same as those used in the Western Gregorian calendar, only their names differ. The year, however, is counted from the Buddhist Era (B.E.), which begins 543 years earlier than the Common Era (C.E.). The Thai era begins in the year Gautama Buddha (c. 563–c. 483) achieved Nirvana (Parinibbana).

Zoroastrian (Fasli) Calendar

The Zoroastrian calendar has a year that is 365 days long, composed of 12 months of 30 days each, plus an additional period of 5 days at the end of the year. There are three versions of this calendar with different starting dates for the year. The Qadimi (ancient) calendar is used in Iran. The Shahanshahi (or Shenshai, imperial) calendar, also known as Yazdgirdi, is used by the Parsees in India, and dates from the year 641 C.E., when the last Sassanid king, Yazdegerd III (d. 651) of Persia, ascended the throne. It was based on an older religious calendar that was supposed to be kept seasonally accurate by adding a month every 120 years. Unfortunately, this was not consistently done, with the result that Navruz, the Persian New Year, ended up being celebrated on August 23 in 1995 instead of March 21.

The newer Fasli (seasonal) calendar has leap years that are 366 days long, and the new year (Navruz) always begins at the vernal equinox, and some effort is being made to convince Zoroastrians to follow the same calendar. The leap years in the Fasli calendar occur in the same years as they do in the Gregorian calendar. The Fasli months and their Gregorian equivalents are on the next page.

Persian Calendar

The Persian, or Jalali, calendar is the official calendar used in Iran and some surrounding nations, including Afghanistan and other Central Asian countries. Like the Gregorian and Julian calendars, the Persian calendar is solar; that is, it is based on the Earth's rotation around the Sun. It corresponds to the seasons, better, in fact, than its Gregorian and Julian solar counterparts although, like them, it has 12 months per year. The months in this calendar, whose names are

THAI SOLAR CALENDAR

Thai Solar Month	Days	Gregorian Start Date	Gregorian Equivalent
Mogga-raa-khom	31	January 1	January
Goomphaaphan	28/29	February 1	February
Meenaa-khom	31	March 1	March
May-saa-yon	30	April 1	April
Prues-saphaa-khom	31	May 1	May
Mithu-naa-yon	30	June 1	June
Garagadaa-khom	31	July 1	July
Singhaa-khom	31	August 1	August
Gan-yaa-yon	30	September 1	September
Tulaa-khom	31	October 1	October
Prues-sajigaa-yon	30	November 1	November
Thanwaa-khom	31	December 1	December

quite similar to those used in the Persian calendar, are on the next page.

The year begins on the spring equinox, around March 20–22 of the Gregorian calendar. If that instant is before midday, Teheran time, then that day is Farvardin 1; otherwise, the next day is Farvardin 1. This can result in either 365 or 366 days per year. In the former (usual) case, the last month of Esfand has 29 days; otherwise, it has 30 days.

Note that the first six months have 31 days; these summer and autumn months also correspond to the half of the year when the Earth is farthest from the Sun and moves most slowly. Spring and summer have close to 93 days each, and fall and winter have close to 90 days each. So Tir 1 will be close to the date of the summer solstice, Mehr 1 will be close to the autumnal equinox, and Dey 1 will be close to the winter solstice. It should also be noted that the current situation is only temporary; in 2,000 years, spring and autumn will both be about 91.5 days long.

Further Reading

Karen Bellenir, ed., Religious Holidays and Calendars: An Encyclopedic Handbook (Detroit: Omnigraphics, 2004); Chris Humphrey and W. M. Ormrod, Time in the Medieval World (Rochester, N.Y.: York Medieval Press, 2001); Betsy Maestro, The Story of Clocks and Calendars: Marking a Millennium (New York: Lothrop, Lee & Shepard, 1999).

ZOROASTRIAN (FASLI) CALENDAR

Zoroastrian Month	Days	Gregorian Start Date	Gregorian Equivalent
Farvadin	30	March 21	March–April
Ardibehest	30	April 21	April–May
Khordad	30	May 22	May–June
Tir	30	June 22	June–July
Amardad	30	July 23	July–August
Shehrevar	30	August 23	August–September
Meher	30	September 23	September–October
Avan	30	October 23	October–November
Adar	30	November 22	November–December
Dae	30	December 22	December–January
Bahman	30	January 21	January–February
Aspandard	30	February 20	February–March

PERSIAN CALENDAR

Persian Month	Days	Gregorian Start Date	Gregorian Equivalent
Farvardin	31	March 21	March–April
Ordibehesht	31	April 21	April–May
Khordad	31	May 22	May–June
Tir	31	June 22	June–July
Mordad	31	July 23	July–August
Shahrivar	31	August 23	August–September
Mehr	30	September 23	September–October
Aban	30	October 23	October–November
Azar	30	November 22	November–December
Dey	30	December 22	December–January
Bahman	30	January 21	January–February
Esfand	29/30	February 20	February–March

❁ Appendix IV ❁
*Lunar and Lunisolar
Calendar Systems*

Introduction

Lunar and lunisolar calendars differ markedly from those based on solar calendars. The Western (Gregorian) calendar is a solar calendar and is based on the length of time required for the Earth to complete one orbit around the Sun. In contrast, a lunar calendar is based on the phases of the Moon. The length of a month usually corresponds to a lunation (the time between two new Moons) so that the day of the month indicates the Moon phase. The Islamic calendar is an example of a purely lunar calendar.

Lunisolar calendars are basically lunar calendars that incorporate solar data, with years that correspond to the seasonal cycles created by the Earth's rotation around the Sun and months that correspond to natural lunar cycles. The calendars of several cultures and religions are lunisolar, including the Hindu, Hebrew, and Chinese. As with lunar calendars, most lunisolar calendars have important differences. Lunisolar calendars may well be considered the most ideal among all the calendar systems because they indicate seasons as well as Moon phases, a feature that makes them particularly useful for tracking festivals and celebrations.

Islamic Calendar

The Islamic (Hijri) calendar abbreviated as A.H. (Latin Anno Hegirae), or After Hegira, in English, has 12 lunar months in a year of about 354 days. It is used to date events in predominantly Islamic countries and used by Muslims everywhere to determine the proper days on which to celebrate Muslim holy days. Since the lunar year is 11 days shorter than the solar year, Muslim holy days, although celebrated on fixed dates of the Islamic calendar, usually occur 11 days earlier according to the Gregorian calendar for the same year. The number of days each month is adjusted according to the lunar cycle, beginning about two days after the new Moon. The months drift backward over the seasons, beginning again on the same day every 32 years.

The seasons and months have no connection, and there are about 33 Islamic years to every 32 Gregorian years. The Islamic lunar calendar starts from the Gregorian year 622

Fun Fact

The Coligny Calendar, found in a temple of Apollo near Lyons, France in 1897, is thought to be fragments of a pagan Celtic lunar calendar. Engraved on a bronze tablet it is speculated that Druids, in an effort to preserve their tradition of time-keeping, created it when the Julian calendar had been imposed throughout the Roman Empire.

ISLAMIC (HIJRI) CALENDAR

Islamic Month	Days	Gregorian Start Date	Gregorian Equivalent
Muharram	30 days	January 31, 2006	January–February
Safar	29 days	March 2, 2006	March
Rabbi al-Awwal	30 days	March 31, 2006	March–April
Rabi al-Thani	29 days	April 30, 2006	April–May
Jumada al-Awwal	30 days	May 29, 2006	May–June
Jumada al-Thani	29 days	June 28, 2006	June–July
Rajab	30 days	July 27, 2006	July–August
Shaban	29 days	August 26, 2006	August–September
Ramadan	30 days	September 24, 2006	September–October
Shawwal	29 days	October 24, 2006	October–November
Dhul al-Qidah	30 days	November 22, 2006	November–December
Dhu al-Hijjah	29/30 days	December 22, 2006	December–January

BUDDHIST CALENDAR

Buddhist Month	Days	Gregorian Equivalent
1st Month/Moon	29	December–January
2nd Month/Moon	30	January–February
3rd Month/Moon	29	February–March
4th Month/Moon	30	March–April
5th Month/Moon	29	April–May
6th Month/Moon	30	May–June
7th Month/Moon	29	June–July
8th Month/Moon	30	July–August
9th Month/Moon	29	August–September
10th Month/Moon	30	September–October
11th Month/Moon	29	October–November
12th Month/Moon	30	November–December

C.E., the year in which the Hegira (Muhammad's flight from Mecca to Medina) took place. This was chosen as the first year of the Islamic Era in 638 C.E. by Umar ibn al-Khattab (the second caliph of Islam, 581–644). It is important to know, however, that Hegira did not occur on the first day of Muharram (the first month of the Islamic calendar), but during the third month of the Islamic calendar, Rabbi al-Awwal.

Fun Fact

Other lunar calendars include the Sumerian, Babylonian, Balinese, Lufkan, Japanese, Thai, and Indonesian. In Nepal religious festivals are scheduled according to a lunar calendar.

To Muslims, the Hijri calendar is not just a sentimental system of time reckoning and dating important religious events, such as siyaam (fasting) and hajj (pilgrimage to Mecca). It has a much deeper religious and historical significance. The earliest date of the Islamic calendar that coincides with a date on the Julian calendar is 9th Dhu al-Hijjah, 10 A.H., which corresponds to March 6, 632 C.E. (Friday), when the prophet Muhammad performed his last and farewell pilgrimage to Mecca.

The lunar calendar, based as it is on the phases or appearances of the Moon as seen from the Earth, depends on the relative positions of the Earth, the Moon, and the Sun and their visibility to the human eye. Hence the percentage of error in computations of the year is slightly higher compared to other types of calendars. Much of that potential error, however, is reduced because the official sighting of the new Moon is determined by astronomers located in Saudi Arabia, although the accurate time for religious observances must still be corrected for the time zone in which a Muslim lives.

Buddhist Calendar

The Buddhist calendar, similar to the Hindu calendar, is used primarily in Southeast Asia in the countries of Cambodia, Laos, Thailand, and Myanmar. It has 12 months per year and three four-month-long seasons (hot, rainy, and wintry). The length of months alternates between 29 and 30 days. The Buddhist calendar begins counting at year one with the death of Buddha in 543 B.C.E. Years in the Buddhist calendar are referred to as BE, or Buddhist Era. There are numerous national variations in the Buddhist calendar, however, in recent years several of these countries have adopted the Gregorian calendar for civic use as well as to designate some Buddhist holidays as fixed dates.

Chinese Calendar

The Chinese calendar can be traced back to the legendary Yellow Emperor Huangdi, who it is thought invented the calendar in 2637 B.C.E. Astronomical calculations involving the longitude of the Sun and the phases of the Moon form the basis of the Chinese calendar. It is a true lunisolar calendar as it combines a pure solar calendar with a pure lunar calendar. The Chinese calendar with variations, is used in Korea and Tibet, as well as China itself.

While most other calendars count years in terms of infinity, the Chinese calendar uses a set of names for a 12-year cycle of years that is repeated for a fixed period of 60 years. (Traditionally the computation of the years relating to the Chinese Calendar used to begin with the accession of an emperor, but this practice was abolished after the 1911 revolution.)

The name of each year is composed of two components. The first component is one of 10 celestial (heavenly) stems, namely, jia, yi, bing, ding, wu, ji, geng, xyin, ren, and gui. To this is added one of 12 terrestrial (earthly) branches, which correspond to names of animals in the zodiac cycle. These are zi (rat), chou (ox), yin (tiger), mao (rabbit), chen (dragon), si (snake), wu (horse), wei (sheep), shen (monkey), you (rooster), xu (dog) and bai (pig).

CHINESE CALENDAR
Lunar Month	Longitude of the Sun	Names for jieqi (Weather Nodes)	Translation	Days	Gregorian Start Date	Gregorian Equivalent
	315°	lizhun	spring begins		February 5
1	330°	youshui	rain water	29	February 19	February–March
	345°	qyizhe (jingzhe)	insects awake		March 5
2	0°	zhunfen	vernal equinox	30	March 20	March–April
	15°	yingming	clear and bright		April 5
3	30°	guyou	grain rains	29	April 20	April–May
	45°	lixia	summer begins		May 5
4	60°	xyiaman	grain full	30	May 21	May–June
	75°	mangzheng	grain in ear		June 6
5	90°	xyiazhi	summer solstice	29	June 21	June–July
	105°	xyiaoshu	minor heat		July 7
6	120°	dashu	major heat	30	July 23	July–August
	135°	liqiyu	autumn begins		August 7
7	150°	zhushu	limit of heat	29	August 23	August–September
	165°	bailu	white dew		September 8
8	180°	qiyufen	autumnal equinox	30	September 23	September–October
	195°	hanlu	cold dew		October 8
9	210°	shuangjiang	frost descends	29	October 24	October–November
	225°	lidong	winter begins		November 8
10	240°	xyiaoxue	minor snow	30	November 22	November–December
	255°	daxue	major snow		December 7
11	270°	dongzhi	winter solstice	29	December 22	December–January
	285°	xyiaohan	minor cold		January 6
12	300°	dahan	major cold	30	January 20	January–February

The two elements from the celestial stem and terrestrial branch are combined sequentially. The two lists are not congruent, and when conjoined, they produce unique combinations. In a 12-year cycle, the 1st year is jie-zyi, the 2nd year is yi-zhou, and the 3rd year is bing-zyi, and so it continues. When the end of a component is reached, the name of the next year comes from the beginning of the list: The 10th year is guyi-you, the 11th is jia-xu (restarting the celestial stem), the 12th is yi-hai, and the 13th is bing-zyi (restarting the terrestrial branch). Finally the 60th year would be guyi-hai. This method of naming of years within a 60-year cycle goes back approximately 2,000 years.

Since the Chinese calendar combines a lunar and a solar calendar, the year is divided in two ways. The solar calendar used by farmers to know when to plant and when to harvest is based on the longitudinal position of the Sun and is divided into 24 units called jieqi, or “weather nodes.” The Chinese lunar year consists of 12 months; leap years, however, have 13. As in other calendars, such as the Jewish calendar, the months are commonly referred to by numbers. The lunar and solar monthly divisions in the Chinese calendar and their approximate Gregorian start dates are on the previous page

Hindu Calendar

The Hindu lunisolar calendar is similar to the Buddhist calendar although unlike the Buddhist calendar, it adds or subtracts days or months each year in order to correct for astronomical deviations. The structure of the Hindu lunisolar calendar is composed of days and nights made up of prabars. Four prabars make a night and eight prabars an entire day. Each prabara is further subdivided into six danda. Each danda is about half an hour in duration. Dandas are further divided into 25 laghu; each laghu has 10 kastha; each kastha has 5 ksana; each ksana has 3 nimesa; each nimesa has 3 lava; each lava has 3 vedha, and each vedha has 100 truti (a truti is equal to a 300th of a second).

According to the Hindu calendar a day has five properties (panchanga):

1. Tithi: The angular distance measured anticlockwise between the Sun and Moon as measured from the Earth; tithi can vary between 0° and 360°;
2. A name: The 7 days of the week are named after planets, the Sun, and the Moon;
3. The elliptic: The ecliptic is the geometric plane that contains the orbit of Earth. The orbits of most planets in the solar system lie very close to it. The elliptic is divided into 27 nakshatras (stars and other heavenly bodies), which are known as lunar houses or asterisms (constellationlike groups);
4. Yoga: Yoga are the longitudes of the Sun and the Moon;
5. Karana: A karana is half of a tithi.

The Hindu calendar has 12 months with varying lengths of 29 to 32 days. This variation in length is due to the fact that the path of the Earth around the Sun is elliptical in shape. The 12 rashis or zodiac signs of the Hindu calendar are identical with the Western zodiac system. The New Year's Day of the Hindu calendar is the first day of the month of Vaishakha, which roughly corresponds to mid-April on the Gregorian calendar.

HINDU CALENDAR
Hindu Month	Days	Gregorian Start Date	Gregorian Equivalent
Chaitra	30	March 21	March–April
Vaisakha	31	April 21	April–May
Jyaishtha	31	May 22	May–June
Asadha	31	June 22	June–July
Sravana	31	July 23	July–August
Bhadrapada	31	August 23	August–September
Asvina	30	September 23	September–October
Karttika	30	October 23	October–November
Margasirsa	30	November 22	November–December
Pausa	30	December 22	December–January
Magha	30	January 21	January–February
Phalguna	30	February 20	February–March

Jewish Calendar

Jews have used a lunisolar calendar since biblical times, but they referred to the months by number rather than name. The Torah mentions only four names for months, and they are not Hebrew but Canaanite words for numbers: Abib (first), Ziv (second), Ethanin (seventh), and Bul (eighth). It is possible that all of the months were identifiable using either native Hebrew numbers or (foreign) Canaanite/Phoenician names, but the names for the remaining months of the year were not mentioned in the Bible. Jews began to use Babylonian names for the months after 586 B.C.E., during the Babylonian exile.

Judaism is organized by a complex ritual calendar based on two yearly cycles—one solar, the other lunar—that are blended together. It includes festivals mandated by the Pentateuch (the first five books of the Tanakh) as well as those prescribed in later biblical books or commemorating post-biblical or even modern events. The year begins with Rosh Hashanah (Jewish New Year), followed directly by Yom Kippur (Day of Atonement), Sukkoth (a harvest festival), and Simchat Torah (completion and recommencement of the Torah reading cycle), all in the month of Tishri, the seventh month of the Jewish calendar, mid-September to mid-October in the Gregorian calendar. Hanukkah (Festival of Lights) occurs in Kislev, near the winter solstice. Tu B

Shvat, the Festival of Trees, follows in late winter; when nature begins to reawaken, and the sap starts to run in trees. Purim (a springtime, topsy-turvy festival) is celebrated in the month of Adar. Passover (Pesach) in the month of Nisan—the first Jewish month—is a seven-day festival that marks the beginning of the agricultural calendar and celebrates the Hebrews' liberation from bondage in Egypt. Beginning on Passover, 50 days are counted until the celebration of Shavuot, a first fruits festival in Sivan (on the cusp of spring and summer). In between Jews commemorate two modern events—Yom ha-Shoah (Holocaust Remembrance Day) and Yom ha-Atzmaut (Israeli Independence Day). Tisha B Av (the ninth of the month of Av) is a fast observed in midsummer in memory of the destruction of the First and Second Temples. The cycle continues through the month of Elul, beginning again with Rosh Hashanah (literally the “head of the year”) on the first of Tishri, in the new year.

Jews employ a lunar calendar of 12 months. A lunar year, however, is only 354 days, while a solar year contains 365 days (and an additional day each leap year). In order to adjust—and to align the seasons and holidays of the Jewish lunar months with the solar year—the Jewish calendar adds an additional lunar month, a second month of Adar, every two or three years during each 19-year cycle

Fun Fact

During the last two centuries B.C.E., the Essenes, a Jewish sect, used a solar calendar.

JEWISH CALENDAR

Jewish Month	Days	Gregorian Start Date	Gregorian Equivalent
Nisan	30	March 30, 2006	March–April
Iyyar	29	April 29, 2006	April–May
Sivan	30	May 28, 2006	May–June
Tammuz	29	June 27, 2006	June–July
Av	30	July 26, 2006	July–August
Elul	29	August 25, 2006	August–September
Tishri	30	September 23, 2006	September–October
Cheshvan	29/30	October 23, 2006	October–November
Kislev	30/29	November 22, 2006	November–December
Tevet	29	December 22, 2006	December–January
Shevat	30	January 30, 2006	January–February
Adar	29/30	March 1, 2006	February–March

Fun Fact

The Babylonian calendar can be traced back to the Sumerian lunar calendar (3000–2500 B.C.E.). The Sumerian year began following the harvest, in September–October, but the Babylonians moved the beginning of the year to spring.

of 235 lunar months. Note that the Islamic lunar calendar makes no such correction—it does not stay in alignment with the Western solar calendar—thus Muslim festivals move, over the years, through each season. Eid al-Fitr (the end of Ramadan), for example, can occur, depending on the year, in fall, winter, spring, or summer, whereas Passover can occur only in the spring. A significant Jewish holiday (holy day) occurs every week: Shabbat (or the Sabbath), on Saturday. It is a day of rest and worship.

Mayan Calendars

The Maya, known as the “keepers of time” to other Mesoamerican peoples, used several different calendars in a complex system by extending and fine-tuning an earlier system used by other peoples, including the Zapotec, Olmec, and Mixtec cultures and, after the sixth century B.C.E., by the Aztecs. Some of these calendars were capable of tracking the solar year, the lunar year, and the phases of the planet Venus, while others were used for divinatory or ritualistic purposes apparently not associated with natural cycles. In various combinations these calendars could be synchronized and combined in complex ways to measure longer cycles.

The most important calendar in Mesoamerican societies was the Tzolkin, which measured a period of 260 days; it is also probably the oldest. The calendar round, which combined the Tzolkin and 365-day Haab calendars, measured a synchronized cycle of 52 haabs. Thirteen-day cycles, called trecena, were important smaller cycles in the Tzolkin, and 20-day cycles (called veintena) figured prominently in the Haab cycle. The Haab cycle correlates to the 365 days it takes the Earth to revolve around the Sun.

For measuring extended periods of time and figuring out when an event had taken place relative to others, the Maya used a calendar known as the Long Count. Like the Islamic and Gregorian calendars, the Long Count measured time by the number of days that had passed since an arbitrary, if culturally significant, starting point, and could measure any date, however far in the future. The Mayan counting system was based on the number 20, not 10, and the Long Count calendar used a positional notation system, in which each position signified an increasing multiple of the number of days; each unit of a given position represented 20 times the unit of the position that preceded it. In addition Long Count inscriptions could be supplemented by the Lunar Series, a half-year calendar that measured time in terms of lunar phases and positions of the Moon.

The Maya also calculated the motions and conjunctions of the planet Venus, a 584-day cycle. Because events in the Venusian cycle could be interpreted as dire or catastrophic, the best or worst times for waging war were sometimes determined on the basis of this cycle.

Fun Fact

According to the Mayan calendrical system the current Great Cycle will end on December 12, 2012, when a new cycle is supposed to start.

Further Reading

Ahmad Birashk, A Comparative Calendar of the Iranian, Muslim Lunar, and Christian Eras for Three Thousand Years: 1260 B.H., 2000 A.H./639 B.C., 2621 A.D. (Costa Mesa, Calif.: Mazda Publishers, 1993); Michael Chyutin, The Role of the Solar and Lunar Calendars in the Redaction of the Psalms (Lewiston, N.Y.: Edwin Mellen Press, 2002); Leo Depuydt, Civil Calendar and Lunar Calendar in Ancient Egypt (Leuven, Belgium: Peters Department Oosterse Studies, 1997); Robert Hannah, Greek and Roman Calendars: Constructions of Time in the Classical World (London: Duckworth, 2005); Michael Judge, The Dance of Time, The Origins of the Calendar: A Miscellany of History and Myth, Religion and Astronomy, Festivals and Feast Days (New York: Arcade Publishers, 2004).

 Appendix V
Holidays by Country

❁ AFGHANISTAN

Public/Legal Holidays

Navruz	March 21
Remembrance Day for Martyrs and Disabled	May 4
Independence Day	August 19
Pashtunistan	August 30

Religious Holidays

Eid al-Adha	Early January	Tenth of Dhu al-Hijjah, the 12th month of the Islamic calendar
Mouloud	Early April	Twelfth of Rabbi al-Awwal, the third month of the Islamic calendar
Ramadan	Late September–early October	First Friday of Ramadan, the ninth month of the Islamic calendar
Eid al-Fitr	Late October calendar	First of Shawwal, the 10th month of the Islamic calendar

Regional Holidays

Red Flower Festival	March 21
Takht-e-Safar Festival	July–August

❁ ALBANIA

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Republic Day	January 11
Navruz	March 21
May Day	May 1
Mother Teresa Day	October 19
Independence Day	November 28
Liberation Day	November 29

Religious Holidays

Orthodox Christmas	January 7
Eid al-Adha	Early January	Tenth of Dhu al-Hijjah, the 12th month of the Islamic calendar
Orthodox Easter	Late April–early May	Sunday and Monday after Easter
Mouloud	Early April	Twelfth of Rabbi al-Awwal, the third month of the Islamic calendar
Eid al-Fitr	Late October calendar	First of Shawwal, the 10th month of the Islamic calendar

❁ ALGERIA

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
--------------------	-----------------------

Labor Day	May 1
Commemoration Day	June 19
Independence Day	July 5
Revolution Day	November 1

Religious Holidays

Eid al-Adha	Early January	Tenth of Dhu al-Hijjah, the 12th month of the Islamic calendar
Ashura	Early February	Tenth of Muharram, the first month of the Islamic calendar
Mouloud	Early April	Twelfth of Rabbi al-Awwal, the third month of the Islamic calendar
Eid al-Fitr	Late October	First of Shawwal, the 10th month of the Islamic calendar

Regional Holidays

Tafsit	April
Sbiba	May

ANDORRA

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Constitution Day	March 14
Labor Day	May 1
National Day or Our Lady of Meritxell Day	September 8

Religious Holidays

Epiphany	January 6
Maundy Thursday	March–April	Thursday before Easter
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Holy Saturday	March–April	Saturday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Easter Monday	March–April	First Monday after Easter
Ascension Day	May–June	Forty days after Easter
Pentecost	May–June	Fifty days after Easter
St. John's Day	June 24
Assumption	August 15
All Saints' Day	November 1
Immaculate Conception	December 8
Christmas	December 25

Regional Holidays

Sant Julià de Lòria	July
---------------------	------

✿ ANGOLA

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Memorial Day	January 4
Liberation Day	February 4
International Women's Day	March 8
Peace Day	April 4
Labor Day	May 1
Organization of African Unity Day	May 25
World Children's Day	June 5
National Heroes' Day	September 17
Independence Day	November 11

Religious Holidays

Carnival	February–March	Last Tuesday before Lent
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
All Souls' Day	November 2
Christmas	December 25

Regional Holidays

Luanda City Day	January 25
-----------------	------------

✿ ANTIGUA AND BARBUDA

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Labor Day	May 1
CARICOM Day	First Monday of July
Carnival	First Week of August
Heritage Day	October 29
Independence Day	November 1

Religious Holidays

Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Easter Monday	March–April	First Monday after Easter
Pentecost	May–June	Fifty days after Easter
Christmas Eve/Day	December 24–25
Boxing Day	December 26

Regional Holidays

International Sailing Week	Late April or early May
Caribana	August	Month of Carnival

❁ ARGENTINA

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Malvinas Day	April 1
Revolution Day	May 25
Flag Day	June 20
Independence Day	July 9
Anniversary of the Death of General San Martín	August 12
August 12
Columbus Day	October 12

Religious Holidays

Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Christmas Eve/Day	December 24–25

Regional Holidays

Carnival	February–March	First Sunday Before Lent
La Fiesta de la Vendimia	March–April
Festival of Pachamama	July
Batalia de Tucumán	September 24

❁ ARMENIA

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
International Women's Day	March 8
Motherhood and Beauty Day	April 7
Armenian Genocide Memorial Day	April 24
Peace Day	May 9
Restoration of Armenia's Statehood Day	May 28
Constitution Day	July 5
Independence Day	September 21
Earthquake Victims' Memorial Day	December 7

Religious Holidays

Christmas	January 6
Palm Sunday	March–April	Sunday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Vardavar Festival	April–May	Fourteen weeks after Easter
Holiday of St. Mary	Sunday between August 12 and 18

Holy Cross	Sunday nearest September 14
Holy Translators Day	September 14

Regional Holidays

Tiarndaraj	February 13
------------	-------------

✿ ARUBA

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Day	January 1
Birthday of G. B. Croes	January 25
National Anthem and Flag Day	March 18
Queen's Day	April 30
Labor Day	May 1

Religious Holidays

Carnival	February–March	Last three days before Lent
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday and Monday after Lent
Ascension Day	May–June	Forty days after Easter
St. John's Day	June 24
St. Nicholas's Day	December 5
Christmas Eve/Day	December 24–25
Boxing Day	December 26

✿ AUSTRALIA

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Australia Day	January 26
ANZAC Day	April 25
Queen's Birthday	Second Monday in June, except in Western Australia, where it is celebrated in September or early October
Labor Day	Different dates in different states and territories

Religious Holidays

Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Christmas	December 25
Boxing Day	December 26

Regional Holidays

Sydney Festival	January
-----------------	---------

Brisbane Medieval Fayre	Mid-May
National Celtic Festival	June 10–13

❁ AUSTRIA

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Labor Day	May 1
National Day	October 26

Religious Holidays

Epiphany	January 6
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday and Monday after Lent
Ascension Day	May–June	Forty days after Easter
Pentecost	May–June	Fifty and fifty-one days after Easter
Corpus Christi	May–June	Sixty days after Easter
Assumption	August 15
All Saints' Day	November 1
All Souls' Day	November 2
Immaculate Conception	December 8
Christmas	December 25
St. Stephen's Day	December 26

Regional Holidays

Bregenz Festival	July 21–August 22
Austrian Harvest Festivals	September
Salzburger Jazz Herbst	November

❁ AZERBAIJAN

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Martyrs' Day	January 20
International Women's Day	March 8
Navruz	March 21
Labor Day	May 1
Victory Day	May 9
Republic Day	May 28
Salvation Day	June 15
Army and Navy Day	October 9
Independence Day	October 18
Constitution Day	November 12
Revival Day	November 17
Day of Azeri Solidarity	December 31

Religious Holidays

Eid al-Adha	Early January	Tenth of Dhu al-Hijjah, the 12th month of the Islamic calendar
Eid al-Fitr	Late October	First of Shawwal, the 10th month of the Islamic calendar

✿ BAHAMAS, THE

The Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Junkanoo	January 1
Martin Luther King Day	Third Monday in January
Labor Day	First Friday in June
Caricom Day	July 4
National Day	July 10
Emancipation Day	First Monday in August
Discovery Day	Second Monday in October
Veterans' Day	November 11

Religious Holidays

Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Pentecost	May–June	Fifty days after Easter
Christmas	December 25
Boxing Day	December 26

Regional Holidays

Kadooment	August 2
Mini-Junkanoo Parade	August 2
Fox Hill Day	August	One week after Emancipation Day

✿ BAHRAIN

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Day	January 1
Labor Day	May 1
Independence Day	August 15
National Day	December 16–17

Religious Holidays

Eid al-Adha	Early January	Tenth of Dhu al-Hijjah, the 12th month of the Islamic calendar
Ashura	Early February	Tenth of Muharram, the first month of the Islamic calendar
Eid al-Fitr	Late October	First of Shawwal, the 10th month of the Islamic calendar

❁ BANGLADESH

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
International Mother Tongue Day	February 21
Birthday of Bangabandhu	March 17
Independence Day and National Day	March 26
Bengali Solar New Year	Mid-April
Labor Day	May 1
Victory Day	December 16

Religious Holidays

Eid al-Adha	Early January	Tenth of Dhu al-Hijjah, the 12th month of the Islamic calendar
El am Hejir	Late January–early February	First of Muharram, the first month of the Islamic calendar
Mouloud	Early April	Twelfth of Rabbi al-Awwal, the third month of the Islamic calendar
Shab-e-Barat	Early September	Fifteenth of Shaban, the eighth month of the Islamic calendar
Shab-e-Qadr	October	Twenty-seventh of Ramadan, the ninth month of the Islamic calendar
Eid al-Fitr	Late October	First of Shawwal, the 10th month of the Islamic calendar

Regional Holidays

Nabanno	October–November
Lalon Utsab	October
Chiyachot	December–January

❁ BARBADOS

Public/Legal Holidays

Errol Barrow Day	January 21
National Heroes Day	April 28
Emancipation Day	August 1
Independence Day	November 30

Religious Holidays

Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Pentecost	May–June	Fifty days after Easter
Christmas	December 25
Boxing Day	December 26

Regional Holidays

Holetown Festival	Mid-February
Oistins Fish Festival	March–April	Easter weekend
De Congaline Street Festival	Late April
Kadooment Day	First Monday in August

❁ BELARUS*Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
International Women's Day	March 8
Constitution Day	March 15
Labor Day	May 1
Victory Day	May 9
Independence Day	August 25
October Revolution Day	November 7

Religious Holidays

Christmas	January 7
Holy Week	March–April	Last week of Lent
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Radounitsa	April	Nine days after Easter
Remembrance Day	November 2

Regional Holidays

Navahrudak	June
International Youth Singing Festival	October

❁ BELGIUM*Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Labor Day	May 1
National Day	July 21
French Community Holiday	September 27
Armistice Day	November 11
King's Feast/Dynasty Day	November 15

Religious Holidays

Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
St. Nicholas Day	December 6
Christmas	December 25
Boxing Day	December 26

Regional Holidays

Carnival of Binche	February–March	Three days before Lent
Ommegang Pageant	July 7

 BELIZE*Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Baron Bliss Day	March 9
Commonwealth Day	Second Monday in March
Labor Day	May 1
St. George's Caye Day	September 10
Independence Day	September 21
Pan-American Day	October 13
Garifuna Day	November 19

Religious Holidays

Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Holy Saturday	March–April	Last Saturday in Lent
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Las Posadas	December 16–24
Christmas Eve/Day	December 24–25
Boxing Day	December 26

Regional Holidays

San Pedro Carnival	February
Deer Dance Festival	August

 BENIN*Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Traditional Day	January 10
Martyrs' Day	January 16
Labor Day	May 1
Independence Day	August 1
National Day	November 30

Religious Holidays

Eid al-Adha	Early January	Tenth of Dhu al Hijjah, the 12th month of the Islamic calendar
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday and Monday after Lent
Mouloud	Early April	Twelfth of Rabbi al-Awwal, the third month of the Islamic calendar

Ascension Day	May–June	Forty days after Easter
Pentecost	May–June	Fifty days after Easter
Assumption	August 15
All Saints' Day	November 1
Christmas	December 25

Regional Holidays

National Voodoo Day	January 10
The Yam Festival	Mid-August
Igue Festival	December	Thirteenth month in Edo calendar

✿ BERMUDA

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Bermuda Day	May 24
Queen's Birthday	June 14
Emancipation Day	Last Thursday in July
Labor Day	First Monday in September
Armistice Day	November 11

Religious Holidays

Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Christmas	December 25
Boxing Day	December 26

Regional Holidays

Bermuda Kite Festival	March
Peppercorn Ceremony	April

✿ BHUTAN

Public/Legal Holidays

Losar	February
Birthday of the Third King	May 2
Coronation of the Fourth King	June 2
Death of the Third King	July 16
Birthday of the Fourth King	November 11
National Day	December 17
Winter Solstice	December 21

Religious Holidays

Shabdrung Kuchoe	April–May
Vesak	Full Moon day in May

Guru Rinpoche Birthday	July	Tenth of the fifth month of the Buddhist calendar
First Sermon of Lord Buddha	Full Moon day in July
Blessed Rainy Day	Late September
Dashain	October
Descent of Lord Buddha from Heaven	October–November

Regional Holidays

Thimpu Drupchen	September 9
Thimpu Tsechu	September 13–15

BOLIVIA

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Labor Day	May 1
Independence Day	August 6

Religious Holidays

Carnival	February–March	Last Thursday before Lent
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
All Saints' Day	November 1
Christmas Eve/Day	December 24–25

Regional Holidays

Alasitas Festival	January
Festival of the First Equinox	September 21
San Miguel Festival	September 29

BOSNIA AND HERZEGOVINA

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
National Independence Day	March 1
Labor Day	May 1
National Day	November 25

Religious Holidays

Eid al-Adha	Early January	Tenth of Dhu al-Hijjah, the 12th month of the Islamic calendar
New Year's Eve/Day	January 13–14
El am Hejir	Late January–early February	First of Muharram, the first month of the Islamic calendar
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent

Mouloud	Early April	Twelfth of Rabbi al-Awwal, the third month of the Islamic calendar
Vidovdan	June 28
Petrovdan	July 12
St. Elijah's Day	August 2
Eid al-Fitr	Late October	First of Shawwal, the 10th month of the Islamic calendar

Regional Holidays

Sarajevo Film Festival	August
------------------------	--------	--

🌸 BOTSWANA

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Labor Day	May 1
Sir Seretse Khama Day	July 1
President's Day	July 19
Botswana Day	September 30

Religious Holidays

Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Christmas	December 25
Boxing Day	December 26

Regional Holidays

Kuru Traditional and Music Festival	First week of August
Maun Carnival	August–September

🌸 BRAZIL

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Tiradentes Day	April 12
Labor Day	May 1
Independence Day	September 7
Republic Day	November 15

Religious Holidays

Carnival	February–March
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Corpus Christi	May–June	Eighth Sunday after Easter

Our Lady of Aparecida	October 12
All Souls' Day	November 2
Christmas	December 25

Regional Holidays

Yemanjá Festival	January 1
Lavagem do Bonfim	Second Thursday in January
Festa de São Lazaro	January 25–28

BRUNEI

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
National Day	February 23
Armed Forces Day	May 31
Birthday of the Sultan	July 15

Religious Holidays

Chinese New Year	January–February
El am Hejir	Late January–early February	First of Muharram, the first month of the Islamic calendar
Mouloud	Early April	Twelfth of Rabbi al-Awwal, the third month of the Islamic calendar
Shab-e-Miraj	August	Twenty-seventh of Rajab, the seventh month of the Islamic calendar
Shab-e-Qadr	October	Twenty-seventh of Ramadan, the ninth month of the Islamic calendar
Eid al-Fitr	Late October	First of Shawwal, the 10th month of the Islamic calendar
Christmas	December 25

BULGARIA

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Martenitsa	March 1
Liberation Day	March 3
Labor Day	May 1
Snake's Day	May 1
Bulgarian Army Day	May 6
Education and Culture Day	May 24
Botev Day	June 2
Unification Day	September 6
Independence Day	September 22
Revival Leaders' Day	November 1

Religious Holidays

St. Basil's Day	January 1
Epiphany	January 6
St. Jordan's Day	January 6
St. John's Day	January 7
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	Sunday after Lent
St. Peter's Day	June 29
St. Paul's Day	June 29
St. Elijah's Day	July 20
The Transfiguration	August 6
Assumption	August 15
St. Demetrius Day	October 26
St. Michael's Day	November 8
St. Nicholas Day	December 6
Christmas	December 25

Regional Holidays

Festival of Roses	First week in June
-------------------	--------------------	--

 BURKINA FASO

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
International Women's Day	March 8
Labor Day	May 1
Independence Day	August 5
Republic Day	December 11

Religious Holidays

Eid al-Adha	Early January	Tenth of Dhu al-Hijjah, the 12th month of the Islamic calendar
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Mouloud	Early April	Twelfth of Rabbi al-Awwal, the third month of the Islamic calendar
Ascension Day	May–June	Forty days after Easter
Assumption	August 15
Eid al-Fitr	Late October	First of Shawwal, the 10th month of the Islamic calendar
Christmas Eve/Day	December 24–25

 BURUNDI

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Day of Unity	February 5

Labor Day	May 1
Independence Day/National Day	July 1
Victory of the UPRONA Party	September 18
Anniversary of Prince Rwagasore's Assassination	October 13
Ndadaye Day	October 21
Republic Day	November 28

Religious Holidays

Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Ascension Day	May–June	Forty days after Easter
Assumption	August 15
All Saints' Day	November 1
Christmas Eve/Day	December 24–25

CAMBODIA

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
National Day	January 7
International Women's Day	March 8
Chaul Chnam	Mid-April
Labor Day	May 1
Chrat Preah Nengkal	Early May
International Children's Day	June 1
Queen's Birthday	June 18
Paris Peace Agreement	October 23
Birthday of King Norodom Sihanouk	October 30–November 1
Independence Day	November 9
Bon Om Tuk	Early November
UN Human Rights Day	December 10

Religious Holidays

Makka Bucha	February
Vesak	Last two weeks in May
Bonn Dak Ben	September–October

Regional Holidays

Angkor Wat Festival	November–December
---------------------	-------------------

CAMEROON

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Youth Day	February 11

Labor Day	May 1
Republic Day/National Day	May 20

Religious Holidays

Eid al-Adha	Early January	Tenth of Dhu al-Hijjah, the 12th month of the Islamic calendar
Easter and Easter Monday	March–April	First Sunday and Monday following the month of Lent
Mouloud	Early April	Twelfth of Rabbi al-Awwal, the third month of the Islamic calendar
Ascension Day	May–June	Forty days after Easter
Assumption	August 15
Eid al-Fitr	Late October	First of Shawwal, the 10th month of the Islamic calendar
Christmas Eve/Day	December 24–25

Regional Holidays

Mount Cameroon Race	January 2
Gbaya Annual Fishing Festival	March
Cameroon International Theatre Festival	November
Lela Festival	December
Ngondo Festival	December

🌸 CANADA

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Victoria Day	Monday on or before May 25
Canada Day	July 1
Labor Day	First Monday in September
Thanksgiving	Second Monday in October
Remembrance Day	November 11
Boxing Day	December 26

Religious Holidays

Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Rosh Hashana	September or October
Yom Kippur	September or October
Eid al-Fitr	Late October	First of Shawwal, the 10th month of the Islamic calendar
Christmas	December 25

Regional Holidays

Quebec Winter Carnival	January–February
------------------------	------------------

Family Day	Third Monday in February
Discovery Day (Newfoundland and Labrador)	Monday closest to June 24
Quebec National Day (Fête National)	Monday closest to June 24
Calgary Stampede	July
Civic Holiday	First Monday in August
Regatta Day	First Wednesday in August
Discovery Day (Yukon Territory)	Third Monday in August

CAPE VERDE

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Labor Day	May 1
Independence Day	July 5

Religious Holidays

Carnival	February–March	Tuesday before Lent
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Assumption	August 15
All Saints' Day	November 1
Christmas	December 25

Regional Holidays

Tabanka	May
Feast of St. Philip (São Filipe)	May 1
Feast of São Joao	Usually midyear

CAYMAN ISLANDS

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Discovery Day	May 16
Queen's Birthday	Monday on or before May 25
Constitution Day	July 4
Annual Pirates Week	October
Remembrance Day	November 11

Religious Holidays

Ash Wednesday	February–March	First day of Lent
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter and Easter Monday	March–April	First Sunday and Monday after Lent
Christmas	December 25
Boxing Day	December 26

Regional Holidays

Batabano	April
Cayman Festival of the Arts—Cayfest	April
Taste of Cayman	July Bank Holiday Weekend

 CENTRAL AFRICAN REPUBLIC

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Boganda Day	March 29
Labor Day	May 1
Independence Day	August 13
Anniversary of the Proclamation of the Republic	December 1

Religious Holidays

Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Christmas	December 25

 CHAD

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Independence Day	January 11
Labor Day	May 1
Africa Day	May 25
Republic Day	November 28

Religious Holidays

Eid al-Adha	Early January	Tenth of Dhu al-Hijjah, the 12th month of the Islamic calendar
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Mouloud	Early April	Twelfth of Rabbi al-Awwal, the third month of the Islamic calendar
Assumption	August 15
All Saints' Day	November 1
Eid al-Fitr	Late October	First of Shawwal, the 10th month of the Islamic calendar
Christmas	December 25

 CHILE

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Labor Day	May 1

Navy Day	May 21
Reconciliation Day	First Monday in September
Independence Day	September 18
Armed Forces Day	September 19
Columbus Day	October 12

Religious Holidays

Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Cuasimodo Festival	March–April	First Sunday after Easter
St. Peter's and St. Paul's Day	Late June/Early July
All Saints' Day	November 1
Christmas	December 25

Regional Holidays

Festival of the Virgin of the Song	July
Festival de la Virgen del Rosario	December 22–24

CHINA

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Day	January 1–2
Labor Day	May 1
CCPS Birthday	July 1
National Day	October 1

Religious Holidays

Chinese New Year	Between January 21 and February 19	First of the first month of the Lunar Calendar
Lantern Festival	February	Fifteenth of the first month of the Chinese Calendar
Duan Wu Festival	June–July	Fifth of the fifth month of Chinese Calendar

COLOMBIA

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Labor Day	May 1
Independence Day	July 20
Battle of Bocoyá	August 7
Columbus Day	October 12
Cartagena Independence Day	November 14

Religious Holidays

Epiphany	January 6
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent

Ascension Day	May–June	Forty days after Easter
Corpus Christi	May–June	Sixty days after Easter
Sagrado Corazon (Sacred Heart) Day	June 21
St. Peter's and St. Paul's Day	June 29
All Saints' Day	November 1
Immaculate Conception	December 8
Christmas	December 25

Regional Holidays

Day of the Blacks and Day of the Whites	January 3–5
Barranquilla Carnival	February/March
Medellín Flower Fair	August 11

❁ COMOROS

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Labor Day	May 1
Anniversary of Organization of African Unity	May 25
Death Anniversary of President Ali Soilih	May 29
Independence Day	July 6
Death Anniversary of President Ahmed Abdallah	November 26

Religious Holidays

Eid al-Adha	Early January	Tenth of Dhu al-Hijjah, the 12th month of the Islamic calendar
Ashura	Early February	Tenth of Muharram, the first month of the Islamic calendar
Mouloud	Early April	Twelfth of Rabbi al-Awwal, the third month of the Islamic calendar
Shab-e-Miraj	August	Twenty-seventh of Rajab, the seventh month of the Islamic calendar
Eid al-Fitr	Late October	First of Shawwal, the 10th month of the Islamic calendar

❁ CONGO, DEMOCRATIC REPUBLIC OF THE

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Martyr's Day	January 4
International Women's Day	March 8
Labor Day	May 1
Independence Day	June 30

Religious Holidays

Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Christmas	December 25

 CONGO, REPUBLIC OF THE*Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
President's Day	February 5
International Women's Day	March 8
Marien Ngouabi Day	March 18
Independence Day	August 13–16
Children's Day	December 25
Republic Day	December 31

Religious Holidays

Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Christmas	December 25

 COSTA RICA*Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Rivas Battle Day	April 11
Labor Day	May 1
Guanacaste Annexion	July 25
Independence Day	September 15
Columbus Day	October 12

Religious Holidays

Epiphany	January 6
St. Joseph's Day	March 19
Maundy Thursday	March–April	Thursday before Easter
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Corpus Christi	May–June	Thursday after Trinity Sunday
St. Peter and St. Paul's Day	June 29
Virgin of Los Angeles	August 2
Christmas	December 25

Regional Holidays

San Isidro Labrador's Day	May 15
Carrera de San Juan	May 17

❁ CÔTE D'IVOIRE

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Labor Day	May 1
Independence Day	August 7
Day of Peace	November 15
Félix Houphouët-Boigny Remembrance Day	December 7

Religious Holidays

Eid al-Adha	Early January	Tenth of Dhu al-Hijjah, the 12th month of the Islamic calendar
El am Hejir	Late January–early February	First of Muharram, the first month of the Islamic calendar
Palm Sunday	March–April	Last Sunday of Lent
Maundy Thursday	March–April	Thursday before Easter
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Easter Monday	March–April	First Monday after Easter
Mouloud	Early April	Twelfth of Rabbi al-Awwal, the third month of the Islamic calendar
Ascension Day	May–June	Forty days after Easter
Pentecost	May–June	Fifty days after Easter
Assumption	August 15
All Saints' Day	November 1
Eid al-Fitr	Late October	First of Shawwal, the 10th month of the Islamic calendar
Christmas	December 25

Regional Holidays

Carnival in Bouak	March
Fête Du Dipri	April

❁ CROATIA

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Labor Day	May 1
Antifascism Day	June 22
National State Day	June 25
Homeland Thanksgiving Day	August 5
Independence Day	October 8

Religious Holidays

Epiphany	January 6
----------	-----------

Palm Sunday	March–April	Sunday before Easter
Maundy Thursday	March–April	Thursday before Easter
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Corpus Christi	May–June	Sixty days after Easter
Assumption	August 15
All Saints' Day	November 1
Christmas	December 25

Regional Holidays

Split Summer	July–August
--------------	-------------

CUBA

Public/Legal Holidays

Liberation Day	January 1
Labor Day	May 1
National Revolution Day	July 26
Independence War Day	October 10

Religious Holidays

Christmas	December 25
-----------	-------------

Regional Holidays

Fiestas Sanjuaneras	End of June
Fiesta del Fuego	July
Havana Carnival	July–August

CYPRUS

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Greek National Day	March 25
Greek Cypriot National Day	April 1
Labor Day	May 1
Independence Day	October 1
Ochi Day	October 28

Religious Holidays

Epiphany	January 6
Green Monday	March–April	Last Monday before Lent
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Easter Monday	March–April	First Monday after Easter
Pentecost	May–June	Fifty days after Easter

Assumption	August 15
Christmas	December 25
Boxing Day	December 26

Regional Holidays

Procession of St. Lazarus	April
Kypria Wine Festival	September–October

❁ CZECH REPUBLIC

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Restoration of Czech Independence Day	January 1
Labor Day	May 1
Victory Day	May 8
Jan Hus Day	July 6
Czech Statehood Day	September 28
Czech Founding Day	October 28
Struggle for Liberty and Democracy Day	November 17

Religious Holidays

Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Easter Monday	March–April	First Monday after Easter
St. Cyril and St. Methodius Day	July 5
Christmas	December 25
Boxing Day	December 26

Regional Holidays

BookWorld Prague	May
International Festival of Advent and Christmas Music	November

❁ DENMARK

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Queen Margrethe's Day	April 16
Dybbøldagen	April 18
Prince Fredrik's Birthday	May 26
Constitution Day	June 5

Religious Holidays

Holy Week	March–April	Week before Easter
Maundy Thursday	March–April	Thursday before Easter

Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Common Prayer Day	April–May	Fourth Friday after Easter
Ascension Day	May–June	Forty days after Easter
Pentecost	May–June	Fifty days after Easter
St. Martin's Day	November 11
Christmas	December 25

Regional Holidays

Tonder Festival	August
Natfilm Festival	November

❁ DJIBOUTI

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Labor Day	May 1
Independence Day	June 27

Religious Holidays

Eid al-Adha	Early January	Tenth of Dhu al-Hijjah, the 12th month of the Islamic calendar
Mouloud	Early April	Twelfth of Rabbi al-Awwal, the third month of the Islamic calendar
Eid al-Fitr	Late October	First of Shawwal, the 10th month of the Islamic calendar

❁ DOMINICA

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Commonwealth Day	Second Monday in March
Labor Day	May 1
CARICOM Day	First Monday in July
Emancipation Day	August 1
Creole Day	Late October–early November	Friday before Independence Day
Independence Day	November 3
Community Service Day	November 4

Religious Holidays

Carnival	February–March	Ten-day period before the start of Lent
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Pentecost	May–June	Fifty days after Easter

Christmas	December 25
Boxing Day	December 26

Regional Holidays

Band Splash	Late January, early February
Vaval	February 25

❁ DOMINICAN REPUBLIC

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Duarte's Birthday	January 26
Independence Day	February 27
Battle of March	March 19
Labor Day	May 1
Restoration Day	August 16
Columbus Day	October 12
Constitution Day	November 6
Discovery of Hispaniola	December 6

Religious Holidays

Epiphany	January 6
Day of Our Lady of Altagracia	January 21
Carnival	February–March	Week before Lent
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Corpus Christi	May–June	Sixty days after Easter
Our Lady of Las Mercedes	September 24
Christmas	December 25

Regional Holidays

Azual Carnival	March 19
Dominican Gastronomic Festival	June

❁ EAST TIMOR

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Labor Day	May 1
Independence Day (from Indonesia)	May 20
Consultation Day	August 30
Liberation Day	September 20
Santa Cruz Massacre Day	November 12
Independence Day (from Portugal)	November 28

Religious Holidays

Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Assumption	August 15
All Saints' Day	November 1
Immaculate Conception	December 8
Christmas	December 25

Regional Holidays

Tara Bandu Ceremony	Determined by village chief
---------------------	-----------------------------

 ECUADOR

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Anniversary of the Discovery of the Amazon River	February 12
National Community Spirit Day	February 27
Labor Day	May 1
Battle of Pichincha	May 24
Simón Bolívar Day	July 24
Independence Day	August 10
Columbus Day	October 12

Religious Holidays

Epiphany	January 6
Carnival	February–March	Three days before Lent
Maundy Thursday	March–April	Thursday before Easter
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Corpus Christi	May–June	Sixty days after Easter
All Saints' Day	November 1
All Souls' Day	November 2
Christmas	December 25

Regional Holidays

Fiesta del Yamor	September 1–15
Our Lady of Mercy Festival	September 23–24
Foundation of Quito	December 6

 EGYPT

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Sinai Liberation Day	April 25

Labor Day	May 1
Liberation Day	June 18
Revolution Day	July 23
Armed Forces Day	October 6

Religious Holidays

Eid al-Adha	Early January	Tenth of Dhu al-Hijjah, the 12th month of the Islamic calendar
El am Hejir	Early February	First of Muharram, the first month of the Islamic calendar
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Sham El Nessim	April–May	First Monday after Coptic Easter
Mouloud	Early April	Twelfth of Rabbi al-Awwal, the third month of the Islamic calendar
Eid al-Fitr	Late October	First of Shawwal, the 10th month of the Islamic calendar

Regional Holidays

Festival of the Fertility God Min	March–April
Abu Simbel Sun Festival	February 22 and October 22

🌸 EL SALVADOR

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Labor Day	May 1
Independence Day	September 15
Columbus Day	October 12
First Cry of Independence	November 5

Religious Holidays

Ash Wednesday	March–April	First day of Lent
Holy Week	March–April	Last week of Lent
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Feast of San Salvador	First week of August
All Souls' Day	November 2
Virgen de Guadalupe	December 12
Christmas	December 25

Regional Holidays

San Miguel's Carnival	November 13–31
-----------------------	----------------

🌸 EQUATORIAL GUINEA

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
--------------------	-----------------------

Labor Day	May 1
Africa Day	May 25
President's Day	June 5
Armed Forces Day	August 3
Constitution Day	August 15
Independence Day	October 12

Religious Holidays

Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Christmas	December 25

ERITREA

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
International Women's Day	March 8
Independence Day	May 24
Martyr's Day	June 20
Beginning of the Armed Uprising	September 1

Religious Holidays

Eid al-Adha	Early January	Tenth of Dhu al-Hijjah, the 12th month of the Islamic calendar
Christmas	January 6–7
Epiphany	January 19
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Mouloud	Early April	Twelfth of Rabbi al-Awwal, the third month of the Islamic calendar
Orthodox New Year's Eve/Day	September 11
Meskel	September 27
Eid al-Fitr	Late October	First of Shawwal, the 10th month of the Islamic calendar

Regional Holidays

Fenkil	Mid-February
Festival Eritrea	Ten days bridging the last week of August and the first week of September

ESTONIA

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Independence Day	February 24
Labor Day	May 1

Victory Day	June 23
Midsummer's Day	June 24
Independence Restoration Day	August 20

Religious Holidays

Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Pentecost	May–June	Fifty days after Easter
Christmas	December 25

❁ ETHIOPIA

Public/Legal Holidays

Adwa Victory Day	March 1
Derg Downfall Day	May 28
New Year's Day	September 11

Religious Holidays

Christmas	January
Epiphany	January
Eid al-Adha	Early January	Tenth of Dhu al-Hijjah, the 12th month of the Islamic calendar
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Mouloud	Early April	Twelfth of Rabbi al-Awwal, the third month of the Islamic calendar
Meskel	September
Eid al-Fitr	Late October	First of Shawwal, the 10th month of the Islamic calendar

❁ FIJI

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Ratu Sir Lala Sukuna Day	Last Monday in May
Queen's Birthday	Second Saturday in June
Fiji Day	October 10

Religious Holidays

Chinese New Year	January–February	Twenty-fourth of the 12th month of the Chinese calendar
Holi	February or March	Full Moon day of the Hindu month of Phalguna
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Mouloud	Early April	Twelfth of Rabbi al-Awwal, the third month of the Islamic calendar

Diwali	October or November
Christmas	December 25

Regional Holidays

Fire Walking	Ten days around the full Moon day in July or August
Hibiscus Festival	First week of August
Sugar Festival	September

FINLAND

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
St. Urho's Day	March 16
Mikael Agricola Day	April 9
Labor Day	May 1
Midsummer's Eve/Midsummer's Day	June 25–26
Independence Day	December 6

Religious Holidays

Epiphany	January 6
Holy Week	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Ascension Day	May–June	Forty days after Easter
Pentecost	May–June	Fifty days after Easter
All Saints' Day	November 1
Christmas Eve	December 25

Regional Holidays

Tango Festival	July
----------------	------

FRANCE

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Labor Day	May 1
Liberation Day	May 8
Bastille Day	July 14
Armistice Day	November 11

Religious Holidays

Epiphany	January 6
Palm Sunday	March–April	Sunday before Easter
Maundy Thursday	March–April	Thursday before Easter
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter

Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Ascension Day	May–June	Forty days after Easter
Pentecost	May–June	Fifty days after Easter
Assumption	August 15
All Saints' Day	November 1
Christmas	December 25

Regional Holidays

Lemon Festival	February
Cannes Film Festival	May
La Fête de la Magdalene	July 11
St. Catherine's Day	November 25

❁ FRENCH GUIANA

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Labor Day	May 1
Victory Day	May 8
Abolition Day	June 10
Bastille Day	July 14
Remembrance Day	November 11

Religious Holidays

Epiphany	January 6
Carnival	February–March	Last two weeks before Lent
Palm Sunday	March–April	Sunday before Easter
Maundy Thursday	March–April	Thursday before Easter
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Ascension Day	May–June	Forty days after Easter
Pentecost	May–June	Fifty days after Easter
Assumption	August 15
All Saints' Day	November 1
All Souls' Day	November 2
Christmas	December 25

❁ GABON

Public/Legal Holiday

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Renovation Day	March 12
Labor Day	May 1
Independence Day	August 17

Religious Holidays

Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Assumption	August 15
All Saints' Day	November 1
Christmas	December 25

 GAMBIA, THEPublic/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Independence Day	February 18
Labor Day	May 1
Liberation Day	July 22

Religious Holidays

Eid al-Adha	Early January	Tenth of Dhu al-Hijjah, the 12th month of the Islamic calendar
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Mouloud	Early April	Twelfth of Rabbi al-Awwal, the third month of the Islamic calendar
Assumption	August 15
Eid al-Fitr	Late October	First of Shawwal, the 10th month of the Islamic calendar
Christmas	December 25

Regional Holidays

International Roots Festival	June–July
------------------------------	-----------

 GEORGIAPublic/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Mother's Day	March 3
International Women's Day	March 8
Independence Day	May 26

Religious Holidays

Christmas	January 6–7
Epiphany	January 19
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Assumption	August 15
St. George's Day	May 6 and November 23

✿ GERMANY

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Labor Day	May 1
National Day	October 3

Religious Holidays

Epiphany	January 6
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Ascension Day	May–June	Forty days after Easter
Pentecost	May–June	Fifty days after Easter
Corpus Christi	May–June	Sixty days after Easter
Assumption	August 15
Reformation Day	October 31
All Saints' Day	November 1
All Souls' Day	November 2
Buss und Betttag	November	Wednesday before Totensonntag
Totensonntag	November	Last Sunday before Advent
St. Nicholas Day	December 6
Christmas	December 25

Regional Holidays

Bamberger Sandkerwa	August
Oktoberfest	Mid-September–early October
Oberammergau Passion Play	Every ten years for five months

✿ GHANA

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Independence Day	March 6
Labor Day	May 1
1979 Coup Anniversary	June 4
Republic Day	July 1
Farmers' Day	December 2
Revolution Day	December 31

Religious Holidays

Eid al-Adha	Early January	Tenth of Dhu al-Hijjah, the 12th month of the Islamic calendar
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Eid al-Fitr	Late October	First of Shawwal, the 10th month of the Islamic calendar

Christmas	December 25
Boxing Day	December 26

Regional Holidays

Bugum Festival	January or February
Deer-Hunting Festival of Ghana	May
Elimina Bakatue Festival	First week in July
Rice Festival	Late November–early December

❁ GREECE

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Independence Day	March 25
Labor Day	May 1
Oxi Day	October 28

Religious Holidays

Epiphany	January 6
Shrove Monday	February–March	Last Monday before Lent
Annunciation	March 25
Palm Sunday	March–April	Last Sunday before Easter
Maundy Thursday	March–April	Thursday before Easter
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Pentecost	May–June	Fifty days after Easter
Transfiguration of Christ	August 6
Assumption	August 15
Finding of the True Cross	September 14
Christmas	December 25

Regional Holidays

Carnival	February–March	Three weeks before Ash Wednesday
Feast of Agnes Georgios	April 23

❁ GREENLAND

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Labor Day	May 1
National Day	June 21

Religious Holidays

Epiphany	January 6
Maundy Thursday	March–April	Thursday before Easter

Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Great Prayer Day	April–May	Fourth Friday after Easter
Pentecost	May–June	Fifty days after Easter
Christmas	December 25
Boxing Day	December 26

Regional Holidays

Nuuk Snow Festival	March 19–22
Greenlandic Viking/Inuit Festival	July

❁ GRENADA

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Independence Day	February 7
Labor Day	May 1
Caricom Day	July 5
Emancipation Day	August 1
Thanksgiving Day	October 25

Religious Holidays

Carnival	February–March	Week before Lent
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Easter Monday	March–April	Monday after Easter
Pentecost	May–June	Fifty days after Easter
Corpus Christi	May–June	Sixty days after Easter
Christmas	December 25
Boxing Day	December 26

Regional Holidays

Easter Monday Kite-Flying Competitions	March–April	Easter week
Carricou Maroon Music Festival	April 29
Fisherman's Birthday Celebrations	June 29

❁ GUADELOUPE

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Labor Day	May 1
Victory Day	May 8
Abolition of Slavery Day	May 27
Bastille Day	July 14

Victor Schoelcher Day	July 21
Armistice Day	November 11

Religious Holidays

Epiphany	January 6
Carnival	February–March	Last Tuesday before Lent
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Easter Monday	March–April	Monday after Easter
Pentecost	May–June	Fifty days after Easter
Immaculate Conception	December 8
Christmas	December 25

Regional Holidays

Saint Patron's Day	May 5
Gwo Ka Festival	Early June
Festival of the Women Cooks	August

GUATEMALA

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Labor Day	May 1
Army Day	June 30
Independence Day	September 15
Revolution Day	October 20

Religious Holidays

Maundy Thursday	March–April	Thursday before Easter
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Holy Saturday	March–April	Saturday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Assumption	August 15
All Saints' Day	November 1
Christmas	December 25

Regional Holidays

Festival of the Black Christ of Esquipulas	January 8–15
Virgen de la Candelaria	February 2
Day of the Dead	November 1
Garifuna Day	November 26

GUINEA

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
--------------------	-----------------------

Second Republic Anniversary	April 13
Labor Day	May 1
Anniversary of Women's Revolt Day	August 27
Referendum Day	September 28
Republic Day	October 2
Invasion Day	November 22

Religious Holidays

Eid al-Adha	Early January	Tenth of Dhu al-Hijjah, the 12th month of the Islamic calendar
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Easter Monday	March–April	Monday after Easter
Mouloud	Early April	Twelfth of Rabbi al-Awwal, the third month of the Islamic calendar
Ascension	May–June	Forty days after Easter
Assumption	August 15
Eid al-Fitr	Late October	First of Shawwal, the 10th month of the Islamic calendar
All Saints' Day	November 1
Christmas	December 25

Regional Holidays

Festival de Guinée	April
--------------------	-------

🌸 GUINEA-BISSEAU

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
International Women's Day	March 8
Labor Day	May 1
Independence Day	September 24

Religious Holidays

Eid al-Adha	Early January	Tenth of Dhu al-Hijjah, the 12th month of the Islamic calendar
Eid al-Fitr	Late October	First of Shawwal, the 10th month of the Islamic calendar
Christmas	December 25

Regional Holidays

Guinea-Bissau Carnival	February–March	Monday and Tuesday before Lent
------------------------	----------------	--------------------------------

🌸 GUYANA

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
--------------------	-----------------------

Republic Day	February 23
Labor Day	May 1
Indian Heritage Day	May 5
Independence Day	May 26
CARICOM Day	July 4
Liberty Day	August 1

Religious Holidays

Eid al-Adha	Early January	Tenth of Dhu al-Hijjah, the 12th month of the Islamic calendar
Holi	March–April	Full Moon day of the Hindu month of Phalgun
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Easter Monday	March–April	Monday after Easter
Mouloud	Early April	Twelfth of Rabbi al-Awwal, the third month of the Islamic calendar
Diwali	October–November	Five days from the thirteenth day of the waning half (Krishna Paksha) of the lunar month Asvina to the second day of the waxing half (Shukla Paksha) of Kartika
Eid al-Fitr	Late October	First day of Shawwal, the 10th month of the Islamic calendar
Christmas	December 25
Boxing Day	December 26

Regional Holidays

Bartica Regatta	March–April	Easter Week
-----------------	-------------	-------------

HAITI

Public/Legal Holidays

Independence Day	January 1
Heroes Day	January 2
Flag Day	May 18
Battle of Vertières Day	November 8
Discovery of Haiti Day	December 5

Religious Holidays

Epiphany	January 6
Norriture Rituelle des Sources Têt d' l'Eau	February 25
Carnival	February–March	Tuesday before Lent
St. Joseph Expression de la Jurisdiction Legba	March
Legba Zaou	Mid-March
Loco Davi	March 16
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter

Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Danbala Wedo	April 27
Casse Canarie	April 29
Ascension Day	May–June	Forty days after Easter
Grande Aloumandia	May 18
Corpus Christi	May–June	Thursday after Trinity Sunday
Agou	August 30
All Saints' Day	November 1
All Souls' Day	November 2
Christmas	December 25

Regional Holidays

St. Jean's Day	June 24
Papa Ogou	July 25
Gran Délai et Gran Aloumandia	July 26
Mangé Yam	November 25

❁ HONDURAS

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Americas Day	April 14
Labor Day	May 1
José Trinidad Cabañas Day	June 9
Independence Day	September 15
Soldiers' Day	October 3
Columbus Day	October 12
Armed Forces Day	October 21

Religious Holidays

Suyapa Day	February 3
Maundy Thursday	March–April	Thursday before Easter
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Christmas	December 25

Regional Holidays

Guanaco Festival	December–January
Fiesta de San Isidro	Third week in May

❁ HONG KONG

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Labor Day	May 1

Chinese Dragon Boat Festival	Mid-June	Fifth day of the fifth lunar month in the Chinese calendar
Establishment Day	July 1
Mid-Autumn Festival	September	Fifteenth day of the eighth month of the Chinese lunar calendar
Zhong Yeung	October	Ninth day of the ninth lunar month of the Chinese calendar
National Day	October 1
Religious Holidays
Chinese New Year	Late January–early February	Starts with the second new Moon after the winter solstice and ends two weeks later with the full Moon, according to the Chinese calendar
Ching Ming Festival	Early April	One hundred and sixth day following winter solstice according to the Chinese calendar
Vesak	First full Moon day in May, except in a leap year when the festival is held in June, according to the Chinese lunisolar calendar
Boxing Day	December 26

HUNGARY

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Hungarian Revolution Anniversary	March 15
Labor Day	May 1
St. Stephen's Day	August 20
Republic Day	October 23

Religious Holidays

Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Pentecost	May–June	Fifty days after Easter
Assumption	August 15
All Saints' Day	November 1
Christmas	December 24–26

ICELAND

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Sprengidagur	February 8
First Day of Summer	April 22
Labor Day	May 1
Independence Day	June 17
Labor Day Weekend	First weekend in August

Religious Holidays

Bolludagur	February–March	Monday before Lent
Maundy Thursday	March–April	Thursday before Easter
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Ascension Day	May–June	Forty days after Easter
Pentecost	May–June	Fifty days after Easter
All Saints' Day	November 1
Day of St. Þorlákur	December 23
Christmas	December 25
Boxing Day	December 26

Regional Holidays

Thirteenth Day of Christmas	January 6
Festival of Lights	February 17–20
Seamen's Day	First Sunday in June
Reykjavik Arts Festival	June of even-numbered years
First Day of Summer	June 21
Þjóðhatid	Early August

❁ INDIA

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Republic Day	January 26
Independence Day	August 15
Mahatma Gandhi's Birthday	October 2

Religious Holidays

Eid al-Adha	Early January	Tenth of Dhu al-Hijjah, the 12th month of the Islamic calendar
El am Hejir	Early February	First of Muharram, the first month of the Islamic calendar
Holi	February–March	Full Moon day of the Hindu month of Phalgun
Maha Shivratri	February–March	Thirteenth or fourteenth day of the dark half of Phalgun in the Hindu calendar
Ram Navami	April
Mouloud	Early April	Twelfth of Rabbi al-Awwal, the third month of the Islamic calendar
Janmashtami	August–September	Begins on the eighth day of the dark fortnight of Sravana, the fourth month of the Hindu calendar
Dussehra	September–October	First through 10th of the month of Asvina, the seventh month of the Hindu civil calendar
Diwali	October–November	Lasting for five days from the thirteenth day of the waning half (Krishna Paksha) of the lunar month Asvina to the second day of the waxing half (Shukla Paksha) of Karttika in the Hindu calendar

Eid al-Fitr	Late October	First of Shawwal, the 10th month of the Islamic calendar
-------------	--------------	--

Regional Holidays

Pongal	January	Four days in Magha, the 10th month of the Hindu solar calendar
--------	---------	--

Bikaner Camel Festival	January
Float Festival	January–February
Taj Mahotsav	February
Goa Carnival	February–March
Rath Yatra	June–July
Onam	August–September

INDONESIA

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Kartini Day	April 21
Independence Day	August 17

Religious Holidays

Eid al-Adha	Early January	Tenth of Dhu al-Hijjah, the 12th month of the Islamic calendar
Chinese New Year	Between January 21 and February 19	First day of the first Moon of the Chinese lunar calendar
El am Hejir	Early February	First of Muharram, the first month of the Islamic calendar
New Year's Eve/Day (Balinese)	March 21	Vernal Equinox
Mouloud	Early April	Twelfth of Rabbi al-Awwal, the third month of the Islamic calendar
Mesh Sankranti	Mid-April	Ninth day of Shukla Paksh (the bright fortnight) of Chaitra, the first month of the Hindu calendar
Vesak	First full Moon day in May, except in a leap year when the festival is held in June
Shab-e-Miraj	August–September	Twenty-seventh of Rajab, the seventh month of the Islamic calendar
Eid al-Fitr	Late October	First of Shawwal, the 10th month of the Islamic calendar

IRAN

Public/Legal Holidays

Magnificent Victory of the Islamic Revolution of Iran	February 11
Day of Oil Industry Nationalization	March 20

Navruz	March 21
Sizdah Bedar	Early April	Thirteenth of Farvardin, the first month of the Perisian calendar
Islamic Republic Day	April 1
Death of Imam Khomeini (literally Heart-Rending Departure of the Great Leader of the Islamic Republic of Iran)	June 4
Religious Holidays
Eid al-Adha	Early January	Tenth of Dhu al-Hijjah, the 12th month of the Islamic calendar
El am Hejir	Late January–early February	First of Muharram, the first month of the Islamic calendar
Ashura	Early February	Tenth of Muharram, the first month of the Islamic calendar
Arba'een Al-Husseini	March	Forty days after Ashura
Martyrdom of Hassan	March–April	Twenty-eighth of Safar, the second month of the Islamic calendar
Martyrdom of Fatima	May–June	Third of Jumada al-Awwal, the fifth month of the Islamic calendar
Birth of Imam Ali	August	Thirteenth of Rajab, the seventh month of the Islamic calendar
Laylat Al-Isra wa Al-Miraj	August	Twenty-seventh of Rajab, the seventh month of the Islamic calendar
Birthday of Imam Mahdi	September	Twelfth of Shaban, the eighth month of the Islamic calendar
Martyrdom of Imam Ali Bin Abi Taleb	October	Twenty-first of Ramadan, the ninth month of the Islamic calendar
Eid al-Fitr	Late October	First of Shawwal, the 10th month of the Islamic calendar
Martyrdom of Imam Jafar Al-Sadiq	November	Twenty-fifth of Shawwal, the 10th month of the Islamic calendar
Birthday of Imam Ali ibn Musa ar-Reza	December	Eleventh of Dhu al-Quidah, the 11th month of the Islamic calendar

🌸 IRAQ

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Army Day	January 6
Revolution Day	February 8
Day of Saddam Hussein's Downfall	April 9
Labor Day	May 1
Republic Day	July 14
Peace Day	August 8

Religious Holidays

Eid al-Adha	Early January	Tenth of Dhu al-Hijjah, the 12th month of the Islamic calendar
El am Hejir	Late January–early February	First of Muharram, the first month of the Islamic calendar
Ashura	Early February	Tenth of Muharram, the first month of the Islamic calendar
Mouloud	Early April	Twelfth of Rabbi al-Awwal, the third month of the Islamic calendar
Navruz	March 21
Eid al-Fitr	Late October	First of Shawwal, the 10th month of the Islamic calendar

 IRELAND*Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Saint Patrick's Day	March 17
Bank Holidays	May, June, August, October
Battle of the Boyne Day	July 12
Halloween	October 31

Religious Holidays

Epiphany	January 6
Holy Week	March–April	Palm Sunday through Good Friday
Palm Sunday	March–April	Sunday before Easter
Maundy Thursday	March–April	Thursday before Easter
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Easter Monday	March–April	The day after Easter
Assumption	August 15
All Saints' Day	November 1
Christmas	December 25
Boxing Day	December 26

Regional Holidays

Pan-Celtic International Festival	April
Dublin Pride	June–July

 ISRAEL*Public/Legal Holidays

Holocaust Remembrance Day	March–April	Twenty-seventh of Nisan, the first month of the Jewish calendar
Memorial Day	April–May	Fourth of Iyar, the second month of the Jewish calendar

Independence Day	April–May	Fifth of Iyar, the second month of the Jewish calendar
Religious Holidays
Pesach	March–April	Begins on the 15th of Nisan, the first month of the Jewish calendar, and continues for seven days
Lag b Omer	March–April	Begins on the 16th of Nisan, the first month of the Jewish calendar
Shavuot	May–June	Sixth of Sivan, the third month of the Jewish calendar, 50 days after Passover
Tisha Be-av	July–August	Ninth of Av, the fifth month of the Jewish calendar
Rosh Hashana	September–October	First and second of Tishri, the seventh month of the Jewish calendar
Yom Kippur	September–October	Tenth of Tishri, the seventh month of the Jewish calendar
Sukkot	September–October	Fifteenth through the 21st of Tishri, the seventh month of the Jewish calendar
Shemini Atzeret	September–October	Twenty-second and 23rd of Tishri, seventh month of the Jewish calendar
Simchat Torah	September–October	Twenty-third of Tishri, the seventh month of the Jewish calendar
Hanukkah	November–December	Twenty-fifth of Kislev, the ninth month of the Jewish calendar
Tu Bshevat	January–February	Fifteenth of Shevat, the 11th month of the Jewish calendar
Purim	February–March	Fourteenth of Adar, the 12th month of the Jewish calendar

🌸 ITALY

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Liberation Day	April 25
Labor Day	May 1
Republic Day	June 2

Religious Holidays

Epiphany	January 6
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Easter Monday	March–April	First Monday after Easter
Ascension Day	May–June	Forty days after Easter
All Saints' Day	November 1
Immaculate Conception	December 8
Christmas	December 25

Regional Holidays

Carnevale	February–March	Ten days before Lent
Explosion of the Cart	March–April	Easter Sunday
Rome's Birthday Celebration	April 21

❁ JAMAICA

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Labor Day	May 23
Emancipation Day	August 1
Independence Day	August 6
National Heroes' Day	Third Monday in October

Religious Holidays

Carnival	February
Maundy Thursday	March–April	Thursday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday and Monday after Lent
Christmas	December 25
Boxing Day	December 26

Regional Holidays

Accompong Maroon Festival	January 6
Rebel Salute	January 17
Bob Marley Day	February 6
Breadfruit Festival	August
Taino Day	November 18

❁ JAPAN

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Coming of Age Day	Second Monday in January
National Foundation Day	February 11
Hina Matsuri	March 3
Spring Equinox	March 20–22
Nature Day	April 29
Labor Day	May 1
Constitution Memorial Day	May 3
People's Day	May 4
Children's Day	May 5
Day of the Sea	Third Monday in July
Respect for the Elders Day	Third Monday in September
Autumnal Equinox	September 23
Health and Sports Day	Second Monday in October
Culture Day	November 3
Labor Thanksgiving Day	November 23
Emperor's Birthday	December 23

Religious Holidays

Obon	Mid-August
Christmas	December 25

Regional Holidays

Setsubun Festival	February 3 or 4
-------------------	-----------------

❁ JORDAN

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
King Abdullah's Birthday	January 30
Labor Day	May 1
Independence Day	May 25
Army Day/Arab Revolt Day	June 10
King Hussein's Birthday	November 14

Religious Holidays

Eid al-Adha	Early January	Tenth of Dhu al-Hijjah, the 12th month of the Islamic calendar
Mouloud	Early April	Twelfth of Rabbi al-Awwal, the third month of the Islamic calendar
Shab-e-Miraj	August	Twenty-seventh of Rajab, the seventh month of the Islamic calendar
Eid al-Fitr	Late October	First of Shawwal, the 10th month of the Islamic calendar

Regional Holidays

Jordanian Song Festival	December
-------------------------	----------

❁ KAZAKHSTAN

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
International Women's Day	March 8
Navruz	March 21
Labor Day	May 1
Victory Day	May 9
Constitution Day	September 1
Republic Day	October 25
Independence Day	December 16

Religious Holidays

Christmas	January 6–7
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent

Ramadan	Late September	First of Ramadan, the ninth month of the Islamic calendar
Eid al-Fitr	Late October	First of Shawwal, the 10th month of the Islamic calendar

Regional Holidays

Khan Tengri Mountain Festival	July–August
-------------------------------	-------------

KENYA

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Day	January 1
Madaraka Day	June 1
Moi Day	October 10
Kenyatta Day	October 20
Independence Day	December 12

Religious Holidays

Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Eid al-Fitr	Late October calendar	First of Shawwal, the 10th month of the Islamic calendar
Christmas	December 25
Boxing Day	December 26

Regional Holidays

Music and Food Festival	May, June, and July
Lamu Dugong Festival	May
Maralal International Camel Derby and Festival	Second week of August
Ferodo Concours d'elegance	September 27

KIRIBATI

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
National Health Day	April 8
Independence Day	July 12
National Youth Day	August 7
Human Rights Day	December 10

Religious Holidays

Good Friday	March–April	Last Friday before Easter
Easter Sunday	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Christmas	December 25
Boxing Day	December 26

❁ KOREA, NORTH

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Kim Jong Il's Birthday	February 16–17
Kim Il-sung's Birthday	April 15
Labor Day	May 1
Fatherland Liberation War Day	June 25
Victory Day	July 27
Liberation Day	August 15
DPR Korea Foundation Day	September 9
Chusok	September 17–18
Party Foundation Day	October 10
Constitution Day	December 27

❁ KOREA, SOUTH

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Independence Movement Day	March 1
Arbor Day	April 5
Children's Day	May 5
Constitution Day	July 17
Liberation Day	August 15
National Foundation Day	October 3

Religious Holidays

Seollal/Seotdal Geumeum	February
Vesak	First full Moon day in May, except in a leap year when the festival is held in June
Chusok	September
Christmas	December 25

Regional Holidays

Muju Firefly Festival	June
Pusan Chagalchi Festival	October

❁ KUWAIT

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
National Day	February 25
Liberation Day	February 26

Religious Holidays

Eid al-Adha	Early January	Tenth of Dhu al-Hijjah, the 12th month of the Islamic calendar
El am Hejir	Late January–early February	First of Muharram, the first month of the Islamic calendar
Mouloud	Early April	Twelfth of Rabbi al-Awwal, the third month of the Islamic calendar
Ascension of the Prophet	August	Twenty-seventh of Rajab, the seventh month of the Islamic calendar
Eid al-Fitr	Late October	First of Shawwal, the 10th month of the Islamic calendar

Regional Holidays

Hala February	February
---------------	----------

 KYRGYZSTAN*Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
International Women's Day	March 8
Navruz	March 21
Labor Day	May 1
Constitution Day	May 5
Independence Day	August 31

Religious Holidays

Christmas	January 6–7
Eid al-Adha	Early January	Tenth of Dhu al-Hijjah, the 12th month of the Islamic calendar
Eid al-Fitr	Late October	First of Shawwal, the 10th month of the Islamic calendar

LAOSPublic/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Pathet Lao Day	January 6
International Women's Day	March 8
Boun Pimai	April 13–16
Labor Day	May 1
International Children's Day	June 1
Lao National Day	December 2

Religious Holidays

Vesak	May	Fifteenth day of the sixth lunar month of the Buddhist calendar
-------	-----	---

Bouk Khao Phansaa (beginning)	July–October	Full Moon of the eighth lunar month of the Buddhist calendar until the full Moon on the 11th lunar month of the Buddhist calendar
Bouk Khao Phansaa (culmination)	November	Full Moon in the 11th lunar month of the Buddhist calendar

Regional Holidays

Vietnamese Tet and Chinese New Year	February	Second new Moon after the winter solstice
That Luang Festival	December	Full Moon of the 12th month of the Buddhist calendar
Bun Pha Wet	December–January

❁ LATVIA

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Constitution Day	May 1
Labor Day	May 1
Proclamation of Independence	May 4
Līgo Day and Jāni	June 23–24
Commemoration Day of Genocide against the Jews	July 4
Lācplēsis Day	November 11
Proclamation of the Republic of Latvia	November 18

Religious Holidays

Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
St. John's Day	June 24
All Saints' Day	November 1
Christmas	December 25
Boxing Day	December 26

Regional Holidays

International Baltic Ballet Festival	April 21–25
Riga Opera Festival	May–June

❁ LEBANON

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Labor Day	May 1
Martyrs' Day	May 6
Independence Day	November 22

Religious Holidays

Armenian Christmas	January 6
Orthodox Christmas	January 7
Eid al-Adha	Early January	Tenth of Dhu al-Hijjah, the 12th month of the Islamic calendar
El am Hejir	Late January–early February	First of Muharram, the first month of the Islamic calendar
Ashura	Early January	Tenth of Muharram, the first month of the Islamic calendar
St. Maroun's Day	February 9
Holy Week	March–April	Last week of Lent
Mouloud	Early April	Twelfth of Rabbi al-Awwal, the fifth month of the Islamic calendar
Assumption	August 15
Eid al-Fitr	Late October	First of Shawwal, the 10th month of the Islamic calendar
All Saints' Day	November 1

Regional Holidays

Baalbeck Musical Festival	July
---------------------------	------

 LESOTHO*Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Moshoeshoe Day	March 11
National Tree Planting Day	March 21
Labor Day	May 1
Family Day	July 4
King's Birthday	July 17
Independence Day	October 4

Religious Holidays

Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Christmas	December 25
Boxing Day	December 26

Regional Holidays

Morija Arts and Cultural Festival	September or October
-----------------------------------	----------------------

 LIBERIA*Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Armed Forces Day	February 11

Decoration Day	Second Wednesday in March
J. J. Roberts's Birth Anniversary	March 15
National Redemption Day	April 12
Samuel Kanyon Day	May 6
Unity Day	May 14
Africa Day	May 25
Independence Day	July 26
National Flag Day	August 24
Thanksgiving	First Thursday in November
Remembrance Day	November 11
President W. V. S. Tubman's Birthday	November 29

Religious Holidays

Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Christmas	December 24–25
Karamu Feast	December 31

🌸 LIBYA

Public/Legal Holidays

People's Power Declaration	March 3
British Evacuation Day	April 28
Revolution Day	September 1
Italian Evacuation Day	October 7
Independence Day	December 24

Religious Holidays

Eid al-Adha	Early January	First of Muharram, the first month of the Islamic calendar
Mouloud	Early April	Twelfth of Rabbi al-Awwal, the fifth month of the Islamic calendar
Eid al-Fitr	Late October	First of Shawwal, the 10th month of the Islamic calendar

🌸 LIECHTENSTEIN

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Day	January 1
Labor Day	May 1
National Day	August 15
Birthday of Prince Franz-Josef II	August 16

Religious Holidays

Epiphany	January 6
----------	-----------

Candlemas	February 2
St. Joseph's Day	March 19
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Ascension Day	May–June	Forty days after Easter
Pentecost	May–June	Fifty days after Easter
Corpus Christi	May–June	Sixty days after Easter
Assumption	August 15
Nativity of Our Lady	September 8
All Saints' Day	November 1
Immaculate Conception	December 8
Christmas	December 25

❁ LITHUANIA

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Independence Day (1918)	February 16
Restoration of Lithuania's Statehood	March 11
Labor Day	May 1
Anniversary of the Coronation of King Mindaugas	July 6

Religious Holidays

St. Casimir Day	March 4
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Assumption	August 15
All Saints' Day	November 1
Christmas	December 25–26

Regional Holidays

Kirmeline	January 25
-----------	------------

❁ LUXEMBOURG

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Labor Day	May 1
Grand Duke's Birthday	June 23

Religious Holidays

Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Oktave	April–May	Third through fifth Sundays after Easter

Pentecost	May–June	Fifty days after Easter
Assumption	August 15
All Saint's Day	November 1
Christmas	December 24–25
Boxing Day	December 26

Regional Holidays

Dancing Procession	May–June
Schueberfouer Fair	End of August–mid-September

❁ MACAU

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Chinese New Year	Between January 21 and February 19	First day of the First Moon of the Lunar Calendar
Tuen Yang	April	Fifth day of the fifth month of the Buddhist calendar
Anniversary of Portuguese Revolution Day	April 25
Labor Day	May 1
Camões Day	June 10
Mid-Autumn Festival	August	Fifteenth day of the eighth month of the Buddhist calendar
National Day of the People's Republic of China	October 1–2
Special Administrative Region Day	December 20
Winter Solstice	December 21

Religious Holidays

Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Cheng Ming	April 5
Vesak	April or May
Procession of Our Lady of Fatima	May 13
St. John the Baptist Day	June 24
All Souls' Day	November 2
Christmas	December 24–25

Regional Holidays

Feast of the Drunken Dragon	May 13
Chung Yeung	October 21

❁ MACEDONIA

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
--------------------	-----------------------	--

International Women's Day	March 8
Labor Day	May 1
Ilinden Uprising Day	August 2
Independence Day	September 8
Antifascist Uprising Day	October 11

Religious Holidays

Eid al-Adha	Early January	Tenth of Dhu al-Hijjah, the 12th month of the Islamic calendar
Christmas	January 6–7
Orthodox New Year's Day	January 14
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
St. Cyrilus and St. Methodius Day	May 24
Eid al-Fitr	Late October	First of Shawwal, the 10th month of the Islamic calendar

Regional Holidays

Skopje International Jazz Festival	October
------------------------------------	---------

MADAGASCAR

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Memorial Day	March 29
Labor Day	May 1
Africa Day	May 25
Independence Day	June 26

Religious Holidays

Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Ascension Day	May–June	Forty days after Easter
Pentecost	May–June	Fifty days after Easter
All Saints' Day	November 1
Christmas	December 24–25

Regional Holidays

Alahamady Be	March
Donia	May
Famadihana	June–September

MALAWI

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
John Chilembwe Day	January 15

Martyrs' Day	March 3
Labor Day	May 1
Republic Day	July 6
National Tree Planting Day	December 13

Religious Holidays

Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Christmas	December 24–25

Regional Holidays

Lake of Stars Festival	September 10–12
------------------------	-----------------

✿ MALAYSIA

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Chinese New Year	February	The second new Moon after the winter solstice
Labor Day	May 1
National Day	August 31

Religious Holidays

Eid al-Adha	Early January	Tenth of Dhu al-Hijjah, the 12th month of the Islamic calendar
El am Hejir	Late January–early February	First of Muharram, the first month of the Islamic calendar
Mouloud	Early April	Twelfth of Rabbi al-Awwal, the third month of the Islamic calendar
Vesak	May	Full Moon of the sixth month of the Buddhist calendar
Diwali	October or November	Five days from the thirteenth day of the waning half (Krishna Paksha) of the lunar month Asvina to the second day of the waxing half (Shukla Paksha) of Kartika
Eid al-Fitr	Late October	First of Shawwal, the 10th month of the Islamic calendar
Christmas	December 25

Regional Holidays

Kuching Festival	July–August
------------------	-------------

✿ MALDIVES

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
National Day	April 9
Huravee Day	July 8

Independence Day	July 26–27
Martyrs' Day	September 4
Victory Day	November 3
Republic Day	November 11–12

Religious Holidays

El am Hejir	Late January–early February	First of Muharram, the first month of the Islamic calendar
Mouloud	Early April	Twelfth of Rabbi al-Awwal, the third month of the Islamic calendar
Ramadan	October	Ramadan, the ninth month of the Islamic calendar
Eid al-Fitr	Late October	First of Shawwal, the 10th month of the Islamic calendar
Eid al-Adha	Early January	Tenth of Dhu al-Hijjah, the 12th month of the Islamic calendar
Hajj Day	January	Last day of Dhu al-Hijjah, the 12th month of the Islamic calendar

MALI

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Day of Democracy	March 26
Labor Day	May 1
Africa Day	May 25
Independence Day	September 22
Army Coup Day	November 19

Religious Holidays

Eid al-Adha	Early January	Tenth of Dhu al-Hijjah, the 12th month of the Islamic calendar
Mouloud	Early April	Twelfth of Rabbi al-Awwal, the third month of the Islamic calendar
Eid al-Fitr	Late October	First of Shawwal, the 10th month of the Islamic calendar

Regional Holidays

Fête des Masques	April–May
Crossing of the Cattle	December

MALTA

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Freedom Day	March 31
Labor Day	May 1

Sette Giugno	June 7
Independence Day	September 21
Republic Day	December 13

Religious Holidays

Feast of St. Paul's Shipwreck	February 10
St. Joseph's Day	March 19
Good Friday	March Friday before Easter
Easter	March First Sunday after Lent
Feast of St. Peter and St. Paul	June 29
Assumption	August 15
Our Lady of the Victories Day	September 8
Immaculate Conception	December 8
Christmas	December 25

Regional Holidays

Fireworks Festival	April 29–30
Malta International Choir Festival	November 8–12

❁ MARSHALL ISLANDS

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Memorial and Nuclear Victims' Day	March 1
Constitution Day	May 1
Fisherman's Day	July 4
Rijerba Day (Worker's Day)	First Friday in September
Manit Day	September 24
President's Day	November 17
Thanksgiving	Last Thursday in November
Gospel Day	First Friday in December

Religious Holidays

Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Christmas	December 25

❁ MARTINIQUE

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Labor Day	May 1
Bastille Day	July 14
Armistice Day	November 11

Religious Holidays

Epiphany	January 6
Carnival	February
Ash Wednesday	February–March	First day of Lent
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
All Saints' Day	November 1
All Souls' Day	November 2
Christmas	December 24–25

Regional Holidays

Gommier Race	May 24
--------------	--------	--

 MAURITANIAPublic/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Labor Day	May 1
Africa Day	May 25
Independence Day	November 28

Religious Holidays

Eid al-Adha	Early January	Tenth of Dhu al-Hijjah, the 12th month of the Islamic calendar
Mouloud	Early April	Twelfth of Rabbi al-Awwal, the third month of the Islamic calendar
Eid al-Fitr	Late October	First of Shawwal, the 10th month of the Islamic calendar

 MAURITIUSPublic/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	January 1–2
Independence Day	March 12
Labor Day	May 1

Religious Holidays

Thaipooasam Cavadee	January–February
Ashura	Early February	Tenth of Muharram, the first month of the Islamic calendar
Maha Shivratri	February–March	Thirteenth or 14th of the dark half of Phalguna of the Hindu calendar
Holi	February–March	Full Moon day of Phalguna, the 12th month of the Hindu calendar
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Assumption	August 15

Ganesh Chaturthi	August	Fourth of Bhadrapada, the sixth month of the Hindu lunar calendar
Father Laval Day	September 9
Ganga Asnan	October–November	Karttika, the eighth month of the Hindu solar calendar
Eid al-Fitr	Late October	First of Shawwal, the 10th month of the Islamic calendar
Diwali	October–November	Lasting for five days from the 13th day of the waning half (Krishna Paksha) of the lunar month Asvina to the second day of the waxing half (Shukla Paksha) of Karttika
All Saints' Day	November 1
Christmas	December 25
Regional Holidays
Chinese New Year	February	The second new Moon after the winter solstice

❁ MEXICO

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Constitution Day	February 5
Flag Day	February 24
Birthday of Benito Juárez	March 21
Labor Day	May 1
Cinco de Mayo	May 5
Independence Day	September 16
Anniversary of the Revolution of 1910	November 20

Religious Holidays

Epiphany	January 6
Día de la Candelaria	February 2
Carnival	February–March	Week before Lent
Maundy Thursday	March–April	Thursday before Easter
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Day of the Dead	November 1
Day of Our Lady of Guadalupe	December 12
Las Posadas	December 16–24
Christmas	December 25

Regional Holidays

Three Kings Bread Fiesta	January 6
Amaranth Festival	February 16–18

Xochimilco Festival	March–April	Two weeks before Easter
Guadalajaras Fiestas de Octubre	October 1–31
Night of the Radishes	December 23

❁ MICRONESIA, FEDERATED STATES OF

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
FSM Constitution Day	May 10
Micronesia Day	July 12
Kosrae Liberation Day	September 8
Pohnpei Liberation Day	September 11
United Nations Day	October 24
National Day	November 3

Religious Holidays

Palm Sunday	March–April	Last Sunday before Easter
Maundy Thursday	March–April	Thursday before Easter
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Holy Saturday	March–April	Saturday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Christmas	December 25

Regional Holidays

Kosrae Constitution Day	January 11
Yap Day	March 1
Pohnpei Culture Day	March 31
Kosrae Arts Festival	Early September
Yap Constitution Day	December 24

❁ MOLDOVA

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
New Year's Eve/Day	January 14
International Women's Day	March 8
Labor Day	May 1
National Heroes' Day	May 9
Independence Day	August 27
Limba Noastra	August 31

Religious Holidays

Christmas	January 7
Holy Week	March–April	Begins on Palm Sunday and ends on Easter
Palm Sunday	March–April	Last Sunday before Easter

Holy Thursday	March–April	Thursday before Easter
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Holy Saturday	March–April	Saturday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Rise of the Holy Cross	September 14

Regional Holidays

Martisor Day	March 1
Wine Festival	October

❁ MONACO

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Labor Day	May 1
National Day	November 18–19

Religious Holidays

St. Devote's Day	January 27
Carnival	February–March	Last Tuesday before Lent
Mi-Carame	March–April	Middle Thursday of Lent
Palm Sunday	March–April	Sunday before Easter
Maundy Thursday	March–April	Thursday before Easter
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Holy Saturday	March–April	Saturday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Ascension Day	May–June	Forty days after Easter
Pentecost	May–June	Fifty days after Easter
Corpus Christi	May–June	Sixty days after Easter
All Saints' Day	November 1
Immaculate Conception	December 8
Christmas	December 25

Regional Holidays

International Circus Festival	January or February
Monte Carlo International Fireworks Festival	July or August

❁ MONGOLIA

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Tsagaan Tsar	End of January to early March (lunar calendar)
International Women's Day	March 8

Day of Children and Mothers	June 1
Independence Day	July 11–13
Celebration of the Revolution	July 21
Proclamation of Mongolia Day	November 26

Religious Holidays

Festival of Maidari	Various times
Tsaul-khural	Twenty days after the first winter Moon

MOROCCO

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Labor Day	May 1
Throne Day	July 30
Revolution of the King and People Day	August 20
King's Birthday	August 21
Green March Day	November 6
Independence Day	November 18

Religious Holidays

Eid al-Adha	Early January	Tenth of Dhu al-Hijjah, the 12th month of the Islamic calendar
El am Hejir	Early February	First of Muharram, the first month of the Islamic calendar
Mouloud	Early April	Twelfth of Rabbi al-Awwal, the third month of the Islamic calendar
Eid al-Fitr	Late October	First of Shawwal, the 10th month of the Islamic calendar

Regional Holidays

Almond Tree Blossom Festival	Second week of February
Wax Candle Feast	May
Imilchil	August

MOZAMBIQUE

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Heroes' Day	February 3
Labor Day	May 1
Independence Day	June 25
Lusaka Agreement Day	September 7
Armed Forces Day	September 25

Religious Holidays

Eid al-Adha	Early January	Tenth of Dhu al-Hijjah, the 12th month of the Islamic calendar
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Mouloud	Early April	Twelfth of Rabi-al-awwal, the third month of the Islamic calendar
Christmas	December 25

❁ MYANMAR*Public/Legal Holidays

Independence Day	January 4
Union Day	February 12
Peasants' Day	March 2
Armed Forces Day	March 27
New Year's Eve/Day	Mid April
Thingyan Water Festival	Mid April
Labor Day	May 1
Martyrs' Day	July 19
National Day	Late November
Karen New Year	December or January

Religious Holidays

Vesak	Late April–early May
Buddhist Lent	July
Maha Dok Festival	August
Festival of Lights	September–October
Tazaungmon Full Moon Day	October–November

Regional Holidays

Kachin Manao Festival	January 10
Naga Traditional New Year's Festival	January 14–15
Shwedagon Pagoda Festival	February–March
Pindaya Cave Festivals	February–March
Waso Chinlon Festival	June–July	Waso, the fourth month of the Myanmar calendar
Taungbyone Nat Festival	Late July–mid August
Popa Ceremony in Yadanagu Pagoda	August
Phaung-Taw-Oo Pagoda Festival	August

❁ NAMIBIA*Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
--------------------	-----------------------	--

Independence Day	March 21
Labor Day	May 1
Cassinga Day	May 4
Africa Day	May 25
Heroes' Day	August 26
Human Rights Day	December 10

Religious Holidays

Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Ascension Day	May–June	Forty days after Easter
Pentecost	May–June	Fifty days after Easter
Christmas	December 25

Regional Holidays

Windhoek Carnival	March–April
Maherero Day	Last week of August
Oktoberfest	October

NAURU

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Independence Day	January 31
Constitution Day	May 17
Angam Day	October 26

Religious Holidays

Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Christmas	December 25

NEPAL

Public/Legal Holidays

Sahid Divas	February	Sixteenth day of Magha, the 11th month of the Nepalese calendar
Prajatantra Divas	February	Seventh day of Phalgun, the 12th month of the Nepalese calendar
His Majesty King Gyanendra bir Bikram Shah Dev's Birthday	July	Twenty-third of Ashadh, the third month of the Nepalese calendar
Nepal Sambidhan Divas	November	Twenty-third day of Karttika, the eighth month of the Nepalese calendar

Religious Holidays

Maha Shivratri	March	Thirteenth or 14th day of the waning half of Phalgun, the 11th month of the Nepalese calendar
----------------	-------	---

Holi	March	Twenty-third of Phalgunā, the 11th month of the Nepalese calendar
Ram Navami	April	Twenty-eighth of Chaitra, the 12th month of the Nepalese calendar
New Year's Day	April	First of Baisakh, the first month of the Nepalese calendar
Vesak	May	Full Moon day of Jesthā, the second month of the Nepalese calendar
Janmashtami	August	Second of Bhādrā, the fifth month of the Nepalese calendar
Dashain	October	Tenth of Asoj, the sixth month of the Nepalese calendar
Diwali	November	Tenth of Karttika, the seventh month of the Nepalese calendar
Regional Holidays
Mani Rimdu	November	Full Moon of Karttika, the seventh month of the Nepalese calendar or the full Moon of Mangsir, the eighth month of the Nepalese calendar

🌸 NETHERLANDS, THE

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Koninginnedag	April 30
Labor Day	May 1
Herdenkings Day	May 4
Liberation Day	May 5
Koninkrijksdag	December 15
Boxing Day	December 26

Religious Holidays

Palm Sunday	March–April	Sunday before Easter
Maundy Thursday	March–April	Thursday before Easter
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Holy Saturday	March–April	Saturday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Ascension Day	May–June	Forty days after Easter
Pentecost	May–June	Fifty days after Easter
Feast of Sinterklaas	December 5
Christmas	December 25

Regional Holidays

Breda Jazz Festival	May
Internationaal Folkloristisch Dansfestival	June, July, or August

✿ NETHERLANDS ANTILLES

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Queen's Birthday	April 30
Labor Day	May 1
Antilles Day	October 21
Mini Winter Carnival	December

Religious Holidays

Carnival	February–early March
Ash Wednesday	February–early March
Palm Sunday	March–April	Sunday before Easter
Maundy Thursday	March–April	Thursday before Easter
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Holy Saturday	March–April	Saturday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Ascension Day	May–June	Forty days after Easter
St. John's Day	June 24
St. Peter's Day	June 29
St. Nicholas Day	December 5
Christmas	December 25

Regional Holidays

Tumba Festival	February–March	Day before Carnival
Bonaire Spring Harvest Festival	First week of April
Curacao Salsa Festival	Early August

✿ NEW ZEALAND

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Waitangi Day	February 6
ANZAC Day	April 25
Queen's Birthday	First Monday in June
Labor Day	October 28
Boxing Day	December 26

Religious Holidays

Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Christmas	December 25

Regional Holidays

Southland Garden Festival	February
---------------------------	----------

❁ NICARAGUA

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Labor Day	May 1
Liberation Day	July 19
Battle of San Jacinto Day	September 14
Independence Day	September 15

Religious Holidays

Palm Sunday	March–April	Sunday before Easter
Maundy Thursday	March–April	Thursday before Easter
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Holy Saturday	March–April	Saturday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Immaculate Conception	December 7–8
Christmas	December 25

Regional Holidays

Santo Domingo Day	August 1
Las Fiestas de San Jeronimo	September–December
Torovenado del Pueblo	October 22

❁ NIGER

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
National Concord Day	April 24
Labor Day	May 1
Independence Day	August 3
Republic Day	December 18

Religious Holidays

Eid al-Adha	Early January	Tenth of Dhu al-Hijjah, the 12th month of the Islamic calendar
Mouloud	Early April	Twelfth of Rabbi al-Awwal, the third month of the Islamic calendar
Eid al-Fitr	Late October	First of Shawwal, the 10th month of the Islamic calendar

Regional Holidays

National Festival of Arts	Mid-April
Gerewol	September

 NIGERIAPublic/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Labor Day	May 1
Democracy Day	May 29
National Day	October 1
Boxing Day	December 26

Religious Holidays

Eid al-Adha	Early January	Tenth of Dhu al-Hijjah, the 12th month of the Islamic calendar
El am Hejir	Late January–early February	First of Muharram, the first month of the Islamic calendar
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Mouloud	Early April	Twelfth of Rabbi al-Awwal, the third month of the Islamic calendar
All Saints' Day	November 1
Eid al-Fitr	Late October	First of Shawwal, the 10th month of the Islamic calendar
Christmas	December 25

Regional Holidays

Durbar Festival	January and October	Dhu al-Hijjah and Shawwal
Argungu Fishing and Cultural Festival	February
Shango Festival	July

 NORWAYPublic/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Labor Day	May 1
Constitution Day	May 17
Midsummer's Eve	June 21

Religious Holidays

Palm Sunday	March–April	Sunday before Easter
Maundy Thursday	March–April	Thursday before Easter
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Holy Saturday	March–April	Saturday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Ascension Day	May–June	Forty days after Easter
Pentecost	May–June	Fifty days after Easter

St. Olav's Day	July 29
Christmas	December 25

Regional Holidays

Northern Lights Festival	January 21–25
--------------------------	---------------

❁ OMAN

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
National Day	November 18
Birthday of HM Sultan Quaboos	November 19

Religious Holidays

Eid al-Adha	Early January	Tenth of Dhu al-Hijjah, the 12th month of the Islamic calendar
Mouloud	Early April	Twelfth of Rabbi al-Awwal, the third month of the Islamic calendar
Lailat al-Meiraj	September
Eid al-Fitr	Late October	First of Shawwal, the 10th month of the Islamic calendar

Regional Holidays

Muscat Festival	December–January
Khareef Festival	July

❁ PAKISTAN

Public/Legal Holidays

Pakistan Day	March 23
Labor Day	May 1
Independence Day	August 14
Defense Day	September 6
Death Anniversary of Quaid-e-Azam, Muhammad Ali Jinnah	September 11

Religious Holidays

Eid al-Adha	Early January	Tenth of Dhu al-Hijjah, the 12th month of the Islamic calendar
Ashura	January–February	Ninth and 10th of Muharram, the first month of the Islamic calendar
Mouloud	Early April	Twelfth of Rabbi al-Awwal, the third month of the Islamic calendar
Eid al-Fitr	Late October	First of Shawwal, the 10th month of the Islamic calendar

Regional Holidays

Pakistan's Basant Festival	Mid-February
----------------------------	--------------

Lok Mela	First week of October
National Horse and Cattle Show	Third week of November

PALAU

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Youth Day	March 15
Earth Day	April 22
Senior Citizens Day	May 5
Constitution Day	July 9
Labor Day	First Monday in September
Independence Day	October 1
United Nations Day	October 24
Flag Day	November 4
Thanksgiving	Fourth Thursday in November

Religious Holidays

Christmas	December 26
-----------	-------------

PANAMA

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Martyrs' Day	January 9
Constitution Day	March 1
Labor Day	May 1
Revolution Day	October 11
National Anthem Day	November 1
Independence from Colombia	November 3
Flag Day	November 4
First Cry for Independence	November 10
Independence Day	November 28
Day of Mourning	December 20

Religious Holidays

Epiphany	January 6
Carnival	February–March	Four days preceding Ash Wednesday
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Holy Saturday	March–April	Saturday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
All Souls' Day	November 2
Christmas	December 25

Regional Holidays

Boquete Flower and Coffee Fair	January
Fair of the Orchids	April 8–11
Palo de Mayo	May 1
Foundation Day	August 15
Festival of the Black Christ	October 21
Colón	November 5

 PAPUA NEW GUINEA

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Queen's Birthday	June 12
Remembrance Day	July 23
Independence Day	September 16
Boxing Day	December 26

Religious Holidays

Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Holy Saturday	March–April	Saturday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Christmas	December 25

Regional Holidays

Goroka Show	Every other year in mid September
-------------	-----------------------------------

 PARAGUAY

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Battle of Cerro Cora Day	March 1
Labor Day	May 1
Independence Day	May 15
Chaco Armistice Day	June 12
Foundation of Asunción Day	August 15
Battle of Boquerón Day	September 29

Religious Holidays

Palm Sunday	March–April	Sunday before Easter
Maundy Thursday	March–April	Thursday before Easter
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Holy Saturday	March–April	Saturday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Immaculate Conception	December 8
Christmas	December 25

Regional Holidays

Festival de San Juan June

 PERUPublic/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day December 31–January 1

Labor Day May 1

Independence Day July 28

Battle of Angamos Day October 8

Religious Holidays

Palm Sunday March–April Sunday before Easter

Maundy Thursday March–April Thursday before Easter

Good Friday March–April Friday before Easter

Holy Saturday March–April Saturday before Easter

Easter March–April First Sunday after Lent

Inti Raymi June 24

St. Peter's and St. Paul's Day June 29

St. Rose of Lima Day August 30

All Saints' Day November 1

Festivity of San Martín de Porres November 3

Immaculate Conception December 8

Christmas December 25

Regional Holidays

Carnival February

Wine Festival March

Puno Jubilee Week November

 PHILIPPINESPublic/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day December 31–January 1

Bataan and Corregidor Day April 9

Labor Day May 1

Independence Day June 12

Manila Day June 24

Day of the Heroes Last Sunday in August

Bonifacio Day November 30

José Rizal Day December 30

Religious Holidays

Palm Sunday March–April Sunday before Easter

Maundy Thursday March–April Thursday before Easter

Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Holy Saturday	March–April	Saturday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
All Saints' Day	November 1
Christmas	December 25

Regional Holidays

Dinagyang	January
Cutud Lenten Rites	March–April	Good Friday

✿ POLAND

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
International Women's Day	March 8
Labor Day	May 1
Constitution Day	May 3
Independence Day	November 11

Religious Holidays

Palm Sunday	March–April	Sunday before Easter
Maundy Thursday	March–April	Thursday before Easter
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Corpus Christi	May–June	Sixty days after Easter
Assumption	August 15
All Saints' Day	November 1
Christmas	December 25

Regional Holidays

International Sacred Music Festival	May 1–6
Lajkonik Festival	May–June	First Thursday after Corpus Christi

✿ PORTUGAL

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Carnival	February–March	Day before Ash Wednesday
Liberation Day	April 25
Labor Day	May 1
National Day	June 10
Republic Day	October 5
Independence Day	December 1

Religious Holidays

Palm Sunday	March–April	Sunday before Easter
-------------	-------------	----------------------

Maundy Thursday	March–April	Thursday before Easter
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Holy Saturday	March–April	Saturday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Corpus Christi	May–June	Sixty days after Easter
Assumption	August 15
All Saints' Day	November 1
Immaculate Conception	December 8
Christmas	December 25

Regional Holidays

St. John's Day	June 24
Estoril International Handicrafts Fair	July–August
Festival do Sudoeste	August

QATAR

Public/Legal Holidays

Anniversary of the Emir's Succession	June 27
National Day	September 3–5

Religious Holidays

Eid al-Adha	Early January	Tenth of Dhu al-Hijjah, the 12th month of the Islamic calendar
Eid al-Fitr	Late October	First of Shawwal, the 10th month of the Islamic calendar

Regional Holidays

Doha Cultural Festival	March–April
Qatar Athletic Grand Prix	May
Qatar Summer Wonders Festival	July

RÉUNION

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Labor Day	May 1
Victory Day	May 8
Fête de la Musique	June 21
Bastille Day	July 14
Armistice Day	November 11
Celebration of the Abolition of Slavery	December 20

Religious Holidays

Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
-------------	-------------	----------------------

Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Ascension Day	May–June	Forty days after Easter
Pentecost	May–June	Fifty days after Easter
Vesak	May–June
Assumption	August 15
All Saints' Day	November 1
Christmas	December 25

Regional Holidays

Fire-Walking	January
Fête de la Vanille	Mid-May

✿ ROMANIA

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
International Women's Day	March 8
Labor Day	May 1
Union Day	December 1

Religious Holidays

Epiphany	January 6
Holy Week	March–April	Saturday of Lazarus–Easter
Saturday of Lazarus	March–April	Day before Palm Sunday
Palm Sunday	March–April	Sunday before Easter
Holy Monday	March–April	Monday before Easter
Holy Tuesday	March–April	Tuesday before Easter
Holy Wednesday	March–April	Wednesday before Easter
Maundy Thursday	March–April	Thursday before Easter
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Christmas	December 25

Regional Holidays

M[abreve]r[cedilla]i[scedilla]orul	March 1
International Jazz Festival	May
Sfantu Gheorghe	December

✿ RUSSIA

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Old New Year's Day	January 13
Defender of the Motherland Day	February 23
International Women's Day	March 8

Labor Day	May 1–2
Victory Day	May 9
Independence Day	June 12
Accord and Reconciliation Day	November 7
Constitution Day	December 12

Religious Holidays

Christmas	January 7
St. Tatiana Day	January 25
Blini Day	February–March	One day before the beginning of Lent
Holy Week	March
Palm Sunday	March–April	Sunday before Easter
Holy Monday	March–April	Monday before Easter
Holy Tuesday	March–April	Tuesday before Easter
Holy Wednesday	March–April	Wednesday before Easter
Maundy Thursday	March–April	Thursday before Easter
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Red Hill Day	March–April	First Sunday after Easter
Pentecost	May–June	Fifty days after Easter
Feast of St. John the Baptist	July 7
Kolyadki	December 25

Regional Holidays

Moscow's Day	September 19
Festival of the North	Late March or early April
Day of Memory and Grief	June 22

RWANDA

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
National Mourning Day	April 7
Labor Day	May 1
Independence Day	July 1
Liberation Day	July 4
Kamarampaka Day	September 25

Religious Holidays

Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Assumption	August 15
All Saints' Day	November 1
Christmas	December 25

❁ ST. KITTS AND NEVIS

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Commonwealth Day	Second Monday in March
Labor Day	First Monday in May
Queen's Birthday	Second Monday in June
CARICOM Day	July 5
Emancipation Day	August 1, or first Monday in August
Independence Day	September 19
Carnival	December 24–early January
Boxing Day	December 26

Religious Holidays

Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Pentecost	May–June	Fifty days after Easter
Christmas	December 24–25

Regional Holidays

Easter-Rama	March–April
Shak Shak Festival	Late June
Culturama	July–August

❁ ST. LUCIA

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Independence Day	February 22
Commonwealth Day	March
Earth Day	April 1
Labor Day	May 1
Queen's Birthday	Early June
CARICOM Day	July 5
Carnival	July
Emancipation Day	Early August
Remembrance Day	November 11
National Day	December 13

Religious Holidays

Ash Wednesday	February
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Pentecost	May–June	Fifty days after Easter

Corpus Christi	May–June	Sixty days after Easter
All Souls' Day	November 2
Feast of St. Cecilia	November 22
Christmas	December 25

Regional Holidays

Fisherman's Feast	June 29
Rose Festival	August 30
Marguerite Festival	October 17

ST. VINCENT AND THE GRENADINES

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
St. Vincent and the Grenadines Day	January 22
Labor Day	May 1
Carnival	Late June or early July
Caricom Day	July 5
Bastille Day	July 14
Emancipation Day	First Monday of August
Independence Day	October 27
Boxing Day	December 26

Religious Holidays

Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Pentecost	May–June	Fifty days after Easter
Christmas	December 25

Regional Holidays

Easterval	March–April	Easter weekend
Big Drum Festival	May
Union Island Maroon Festival	May
Breadfruit Festival	August
Nine Mornings Celebrations	December	Nine days before Christmas

SAMOA

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
National Waste Awareness Day	February 4
Flag Day	April 17
ANZAC Day	April 25
Mothers of Samoa Day	First Monday in May
Independence Day	June 1–3

Children's Festival	Second Monday in October
Arbor Day	Second Friday in November

Religious Holidays

Palm Sunday	March–April	Last Sunday before Easter
Maundy Thursday	March–April	Thursday before Easter
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Holy Saturday	March–April	Saturday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Pentecost	May–June	Fifty days after Easter
Christmas	December 24–25
Boxing Day	December 26

Regional Holidays

Rising of the Palolo	October–November
----------------------	------------------

🌸 SAN MARINO

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Liberation of the Republic	February 5
Anniversary of the Arengo	March 25
Regents Investiture Day	April 1 and October 1
Labor Day	May 1
Fall of Fascism Day	July 28
St. Marinus Day	September 3
St. Stephen's Day	December 26

Religious Holidays

Epiphany	January 6
Festival Day of St. Agatha	February 5
St. Joseph's Day	March 19
Palm Sunday	March–April	Last Sunday of Lent
Maundy Thursday	March–April	Thursday before Easter
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Holy Saturday	March–April	Saturday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Ascension Day	May–June	Forty days after Easter
Corpus Christi	May–June	Sixty days after Easter
Assumption	August 15
All Saints' Day	November 1
All Souls' Day	November 2
Immaculate Conception	December 8
Christmas	December 25

Regional Holidays

San Marco Etnofestival July

 SÃO TOMÉ AND PRÍNCIPE*Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day December 31–January 1

Labor Day May 1

Independence Day July 12

Transitional Government Day November 21

Religious Holidays

Palm Sunday March–April Last Sunday of Lent

Maundy Thursday March–April Thursday before Easter

Good Friday March–April Friday before Easter

Holy Saturday March–April Saturday before Easter

Easter March–April First Sunday after Lent

São Tomé Day/St. Thomas's Day December 21

Christmas December 25

 SAUDI ARABIA*Public/Legal Holidays

Saudi National Day September 23

Religious Holidays

Eid al-Adha Early January Tenth of Dhu al-Hijjah, the 12th month of the Islamic calendar

Mouloud Early April Twelfth of Rabbi al-Awwal, the third month of the Islamic calendar

Shab-e-Miraj August Twenty-seventh of Rajab, the seventh month of the Islamic calendar

Eid al-Fitr Late October First of Shawwal, the 10th month of the Islamic calendar

Regional Holidays

Jenadriyah National Festival of Folklore and Culture February

Saudi International Trade Fair May

Jeddah's International Book Fair October–November

 SENEGAL*Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day December 31–January 1

Independence Day April 4

Labor Day May 1

Religious Holidays

Eid al-Adha	Early January	Tenth of Dhu al-Hijjah, the 12th month of the Islamic calendar
Mouloud	Early April	Twelfth of Rabbi al-Awwal, the third month of the Islamic calendar
Eid al-Fitr	Late October	First of Shawwal, the 10th month of the Islamic calendar

Regional Holidays

Sagoni Festival	January or February
Magal of Touba	March–April
Kaay Fecc	First week in June

❁ SERBIA AND MONTENEGRO

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
National Day	April 27
Labor Day	May 1
Victory Day	May 9
Republic Day	November 29

Religious Holidays

Christmas	January 6–7
New Year's Eve/Day	January 14
Feast of St. Sava	January 27
Holy Week	March–April	Saturday of Lazarus–Easter
Saturday of Lazarus	March–April	Day before Palm Sunday
Palm Sunday	March–April	Sunday before Easter
Holy Monday	March–April	Monday before Easter
Holy Tuesday	March–April	Tuesday before Easter
Holy Wednesday	March–April	Wednesday before Easter
Maundy Thursday	March–April	Thursday before Easter
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Vidovan	June 28

Regional Holidays

International Agricultural Fair	May
---------------------------------	-----

❁ SEYCHELLES

Public/Legal Holidays

Labor Day	May 1
National Day	June 18
Independence Day	June 29

Religious Holidays

Palm Sunday	March–April	Sunday before Easter
Maundy Thursday	March–April	Thursday before Easter
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Holy Saturday	March–April	Saturday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Assumption	August 15
All Saints' Day	November 1
All Souls' Day	November 2
Immaculate Conception	December 8
Christmas	December 25

Regional Holidays

FetAfrik	End of May
Jazz Festival	July–August
Creole Festival	Last week of October

❁ SIERRA LEONE

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Republic Day	April 19
Independence Day	April 27
Labor Day	May 1
Boxing Day	December 26

Religious Holidays

Eid al-Adha	Early January	Tenth of Dhu al-Hijjah, the 12th or pilgrimage month of the Islamic calendar
Mouloud	Early April	Twelfth of Rabbi al-Awwal, the third month of the Islamic calendar
Eid al-Fitr	Late October	First of Shawwal, the 10th month of the Islamic calendar
Christmas	December 25

❁ SINGAPORE

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Labor Day	May 1
National Day	August 9

Religious Holidays

Eid al-Adha	Early January	Tenth of Dhu al-Hijjah, the 12th month of the Islamic calendar
-------------	---------------	--

Chinese New Year	January or February
Palm Sunday	March–April	Sunday before Easter
Maundy Thursday	March–April	Thursday before Easter
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Holy Saturday	March–April	Saturday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Vesak	May	First full Moon day in Vesak, the second month in the Hindu lunar calendar
Diwali	October or November
Eid al-Fitr	Late October	First of Shawwal, the 10th month of the Islamic calendar
Christmas	December 25
Regional Holidays
Singapore Fashion Festival	March or April
ZoukOut	April
Singapore Dragon Boat Races Festival	May or June	Fifth day of the fifth lunar month of the Chinese calendar

❁ SLOVAKIA

Public/Legal Holidays

Slovak Republic Establishment Day	December 31–January 1
Labor Day	May 1
Liberation of the Republic	May 8
Slovak National Uprising Day	August 29
Freedom and Democracy Day	November 17

Religious Holidays

Epiphany	January 6
Palm Sunday	March–April	Sunday before Easter
Maundy Thursday	March–April	Thursday before Easter
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Holy Saturday	March–April	Saturday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Easter Monday	March–April	Monday after Easter
St. Cyril and St. Methodius Day	July 5
Our Lady of Sorrows	September 15
All Saints' Day	November 1
Christmas	December 25

Regional Holidays

Folklore Festival	Second week of July
Hontianska Parada	August

❁ SLOVENIA

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 2
Slovene Culture Day	February 8
Celebration of the Uprising Day	April 27
Labor Day	May 1–2
Proclamation Day	June 25
Independence Day	December 26

Religious Holidays

Palm Sunday	March–April	Sunday before Easter
Maundy Thursday	March–April	Thursday before Easter
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Holy Saturday	March–April	Saturday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Pentecost	May–June	Fifty days after Easter
Assumption	August 15
Reformation Day	October 31
All Saints' Day	November 1
Christmas	December 25

Regional Holidays

Carnival	February or March
Ljubljana Summer Festival	July–August

❁ SOLOMON ISLANDS

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Queen's Birthday	Second Monday in June
Independence Day	July 7

Religious Holidays

Palm Sunday	March–April	Sunday before Easter
Maundy Thursday	March–April	Thursday before Easter
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Holy Saturday	March–April	Saturday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Pentecost	May–June	Fifty days after Easter
Christmas	December 25

Regional Holidays

Province Days	February, June, July, August, December
---------------	--

❁ SOMALIA

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Labor Day	May 1
Independence Day (British Somaliland)	June 26
Independence Day (Italian Somaliland)/Foundation of Somali Republic	July 1
Revolution Day	October 21

Religious Holidays

Eid al-Adha	Early January	Tenth of Dhu al-Hijjah, the 12th month of the Islamic calendar
Ashura	Early February	Tenth of Muharram, the first month of the Islamic calendar
Mouloud	Early April	Twelfth of Rabbi al-Awwal, the third month of the Islamic calendar
Eid al-Fitr	Late October	First of Shawwal, the 10th month of the Islamic calendar

❁ SOUTH AFRICA

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Human Rights Day	March 21
Freedom Day	April 27
Labor Day	May 1
National Women's Day	August 9

Religious Holidays

Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Ascension Day	May–June	Fortieth Day after Easter
Christmas	December 25

Regional Holidays

Kavadi Festival of Penance	January–February
Cape Town Festival	March

❁ SPAIN

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Labor Day	May 1
National Day	October 12
Constitution Day	December 6

Religious Holidays

Epiphany	January 6
Palm Sunday	March–April	Sunday before Easter
Maundy Thursday	March–April	Thursday before Easter
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Holy Saturday	March–April	Saturday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Feast of Corpus Christi	May–June	Sixty days after Easter
Assumption	August 15
All Saints' Day	November 1
Immaculate Conception	December 8
Christmas	December 25

Regional Holidays

Carnival	February–March	Before Lent
April Fair	April
San Fermin Festival	July
La Tomatina	August
Saffron Rose Festival	October

❁ SRI LANKA

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
National Day	February 4
Labor Day	May 1

Religious Holidays

Tamil Thai Pongal	January 13–14
Eid al-Adha	Early January	Tenth of Dhu al-Hijjah, the 12th month of the Islamic calendar
El am Hejir	Late January–early February	First of Muharram, the first month of the Islamic calendar
Maha Shivratra	February–March	Thirteenth or 14th of Phalgun, the 12th month of the Hindu calendar
Good Friday	March–April	Last Friday Lent
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Mouloud	Early April	Twelfth of Rabbi al-Awwal, the third month of the Islamic calendar
Vesak	May–June	Full Moon day of the sixth month of the Buddhist calendar
Poson	June–July	Full Moon day of the seventh month of the Buddhist calendar
Diwali	October–November	Lasting for five days from the thirteenth day of the waning half (Krishna Paksha) of the lunar month Asvina to the second day of the waxing half (Shukla Paksha) of Karttika

Eid al-Fitr	Late October	First of Shawwal, the 10th month of the Islamic calendar
Christmas	December 24–25

Regional Holidays

Kandy Esala Perahera	Mid-August
Sinhala-Tamil Cultural Festival	October

🌸 SUDAN

Public/Legal Holidays

Independence Day	January 1
Uprising Day	April 6
May Revolution Day	May 25

Religious Holidays

Eid al-Adha	Early January	Tenth of Dhu al-Hijjah, the 12th month of the Islamic calendar
Mouloud	Early April	Twelfth of Rabbi al-Awwal, the third month of the Islamic calendar
Eid al-Fitr	Late October	First of Shawwal, the 10th month of the Islamic calendar
Christmas	December 25

🌸 SURINAME

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Labor Day	May 1
Emancipation Day	July 1
Independence Day	November 25
Boxing Day	December 26

Religious Holidays

Holi	February–March	Full Moon day in Phalguna, the 12th month of the Hindu calendar
Palm Sunday	March–April	Sunday before Easter
Maundy Thursday	March–April	Thursday before Easter
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Holy Saturday	March–April	Saturday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Eid al-Fitr	Late October	First of Shawwal, the 10th month of the Islamic calendar
Christmas	December 25

Regional Holidays

Miss Alida Beauty Pageant	June 30
---------------------------	---------	--

❁ SWAZILAND

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
National Flag Day	April 25
Labor Day	May 1
Birthday of King Sobhuza II	July 22
Reed Dance	August–September
Independence Day	September 6
Boxing Day	December 26

Religious Holidays

Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Ascension Day	May–April	Forty days after Easter
Christmas	December 25

Regional Holidays

Siyavuka Arts Festival	December
Incwala	December–January

❁ SWEDEN

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Labor Day	May 1
National Day	June 6
Midsummer's Eve/Day	June 24–25 and June 25–26
All Hallow's Eve	First Saturday of November
Boxing Day	December 26

Religious Holidays

Epiphany	January 6
Palm Sunday	March–April	Sunday before Easter
Maundy Thursday	March–April	Thursday before Easter
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Holy Saturday	March–April	Saturday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
St. Valborg's Eve	April 30
Ascension Day	May–June	Forty days after Easter
Pentecost	May–June	Fifty days after Easter
All Saints' Day	November 1
Feast of St. Martin of Tours	November 11
Christmas	December 25

Regional Holidays

Storsjöyran Festival	July
Nobel Prize Festivities	December 10
Lucia Day	December 13

 SWITZERLAND

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Instauration de la République	March 1
Confederation Day	August 1

Religious Holidays

St. Berchtold's Day	January 2
Palm Sunday	March–April	Sunday before Easter
Maundy Thursday	March–April	Thursday before Easter
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Holy Saturday	March–April	Saturday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Ascension Day	May–June	Forty days after Easter
Pentecost	May–June	Fifty days after Easter
All Souls' Day	November 2
Immaculate Conception	December 8
Christmas	December 24–25

Regional Holidays

Homstrom	First Saturday in February
Carnival	March
Geneva Summer Festival	July
Traditional Onion Market Fair	Fourth Monday in November

 SYRIA

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Revolution Day	March 8
Mother's Day	March 21
National Day	April 17
Labor Day	May 1
Martyrs' Day	May 6
October Liberation War	October 6

Religious Holidays

Eid al-Adha	Early January	Tenth of Dhu al-Hijjah, the 12th month of the Islamic calendar
-------------	---------------	--

Mouloud	Early April	Twelfth of Rabbi al-Awwal, the third month of the Islamic calendar
Eid al-Fitr	Late October	First of Shawwal, the 10th month of the Islamic calendar
Christmas	December 25

Regional Holidays

International Leather Goods Fair	April
Silk Road Festival	September

TAIWAN

Public/Legal Holidays

January Celebrations	January 1–3
Peace Memorial Day	February 28
Youth Day	March 29
Labor Day	May 1
Teacher's Day	September 28
Double Tenth Day	October 10
Retrocession Day	October 25
Jiang Jie Shi's (Chiang Kai-shek's) Birthday	October 31
Constitution Day	December 25

Religious Holidays

Chinese New Year	February	First day of the first month of the Chinese calendar
Lantern Festival	February–March	Fifteenth day of the first month of the Chinese calendar
Farmer's Day	February–March	Fifteenth day of the first month of the Chinese calendar
Tomb-Sweeping Day	April–May	One hundred sixth day after the winter solstice
Jiang Jie Shi Festival	June–July	Fifth day of the fifth month of the Chinese calendar
Ghost Festival	August–September	Fifteenth day of the seventh month of the Chinese calendar
Mid-Autumn Moon Festival	September–October	Fifteenth day of the eighth month of the Chinese calendar
Double Ninth Day	October–November	Ninth day of ninth lunar month of the Chinese calendar

Regional Holidays

Saisyat Festival	November–December	Fifteenth day of the 10th lunar month of the Chinese calendar
Chi Hsi	August–September	Seventh day of the seventh month of the Chinese calendar

❁ TAJIKISTAN

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
International Women's Day	March 8
Labor Day	May 1
Victory Day	May 9
Independence Day	September 9
Constitution Day	November 6
Reconciliation Day	November 9

Religious Holidays

Eid al-Adha	Early January	Tenth of Dhu al-Hijjah, the 12th month of the Islamic calendar
Eid al-Fitr	Late October	First of Shawwal, the 10th month of the Islamic calendar

Regional Holidays

Gulgardoni	Spring
Sayri Guli Lola	Spring

❁ TANZANIA

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Celebration of the Zanzibar Revolution	January 12
Union Day	April 26
Labor Day	May 1
Saba Saba Day	July 7
Nane Nane Day	August 8
Nyerere Day	October 14
Republic Day	December 9
Boxing Day	December 26

Religious Holidays

Eid al-Adha	Early January	Tenth of Dhu al-Hijjah, the 12th month of the Islamic calendar
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Mouloud	Early April	Twelfth of Rabbi al-Awwal, the third month of the Islamic calendar
Eid al-Fitr	Late October	First of Shawwal, the 10th month of the Islamic calendar
Christmas	December 25

Regional Holidays

Sauti za Busara	Mid-February
Mwaka Kogwa	July

❁ THAILAND

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Chakri Dynasty Day	April 6
Labor Day	May 1
Coronation Day	May 5
Queen's Birthday	August 12
Chulalongkorn Day	October 23
King's Birthday	December 5

Religious Holidays

Chinese New Year	February	Second new Moon after the winter solstice
Magha Puja Day	February	Full Moon day of Magha, the third month of the Buddhist calendar
Songkran Days	April 13–15
Vesak	May	First full Moon day of Vesak, the sixth month of the Buddhist calendar
Asalha Bucha Day	July
Buddhist Lent Day	July	First day of the waning Moon in the eighth month of the Buddhist calendar

Regional Holidays

Thailand International Kite-Flying Festival	March or April
Phi Ta Khon Festival	June or July

❁ TOGO

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Liberation Day	January 13
Independence Day	April 27
Labor Day	May 1
Anniversary of Attempted Disembarkment	September 24

Religious Holidays

Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Assumption	August 15
All Saints' Day	November 1

Christmas	December 25
-----------	-------------

Regional Holidays

Evala	July
Dzawuwu-Za	First Saturday of August
Ayiza	Second Saturday of August

❁ TONGA

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
ANZAC Day	April 25
Crown Prince's Birthday	May 4
Emancipation Day	June 4
King Taufaahau Tupou IV's Birthday	July 5
Constitution Day	November 4
King George Tupou I's Birthday	December 4
Boxing Day	December 26

Religious Holidays

Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Christmas	December 25

❁ TRINIDAD AND TOBAGO

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Spiritual Baptist Shouters Liberation Day	March 30
Labor Day	May 1
Indian Arrival Day	May 30
Emancipation Day	August 1
Independence Day	August 31
Boxing Day	December 26

Religious Holidays

Carnival	February–March	Five days before Ash Wednesday
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Holi	March–April
Eid al-Fitr	Late October	First of Shawwal, the 10th month of the Islamic calendar
Diwali	October or November
Christmas	December 25

Regional Holidays

La Divina Pastora Festival	April–May	Fourth Sunday after Easter
Goat and Crab Races	April
Fisherman's Festival	End of June
Ganga Dashara Festival	Mid-June
Santa Rosa Festival	August

❁ TUNISIA

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Independence Day	March 20
Martyrs' Day	April 9
Labor Day	May 1
Republic Day	July 25
Women's Day	August 13
Accession Day	November 7

Religious Holidays

Eid al-Adha	Early January	Tenth of Dhu al-Hijjah, the 12th month of the Islamic calendar
Mouloud	Early April	Twelfth of Rabbi al-Awwal, the third month of the Islamic calendar
Eid al-Fitr	Late October	First of Shawwal, the 10th month of the Islamic calendar

Regional Holidays

Sparrow Hawk Festival	May 28–30
International Carthage Festival	July–August

❁ TURKEY

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Navruz	March 21
National Sovereignty and Children's Day	April 23
Ataturk Commemoration and Youth and Sports Day	May 19
Victory Day	August 30
Republic Day	October 29

Religious Holidays

Eid al-Adha	Early January	Tenth of Dhu al-Hijjah, the 12th month of the Islamic calendar
Ashura	Late January–early February	Tenth of Muharram, the first month of the Islamic calendar

Hidrellez Day	May 6
Eid al-Fitr	Late October	First of Shawwal, the 10th month of the Islamic calendar

Regional Holidays

Camel Wrestling Festival	January
Traditional Mesir Festival	March–April
Marmaris International Maritime Festival	June

❁ TURKMENISTAN

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Remembrance Day	January 12
National Flag Day	February 19
International Women's Day	March 8
Navruz	March 21
Victory Day	May 9
Constitution Day	May 18
1948 Earthquake Remembrance Day	October 6
Independence Day	October 27–28
Neutrality Day	December 12

Religious Holidays

Eid al-Adha	Early January	Tenth of Dhu al-Hijjah, the 12th month of the Islamic calendar
Eid al-Fitr	Late October	First of Shawwal, the 10th month of the Islamic calendar

Regional Holidays

Holiday of Poetry of Makhtumkuli	May 19
Carpet Day	Last Sunday of May
Harvest Festival	Last Sunday of November

❁ TUVALU

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Commonwealth Day	Second Monday of March
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Queen's Birthday	June 12
International Children's Day	August 5
Independence Day	October 1
Prince of Wales' Birthday	November 13
Christmas	December 25

Religious Holidays

Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
-------------	-------------	----------------------

 UGANDAPublic/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Anniversary of the Government NRM-NRA	January 26
International Women's Day	March 8
Labor Day	May 1
Martyrs of Uganda Day	June 3
Independence Day	October 9
Boxing Day	December 26

Religious Holidays

Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Eid al-Fitr	Late October	First of Shawwal, the 10th month of the Islamic calendar
Christmas	December 25

Regional Holidays

World Bird Festival	October, every two years
---------------------	--------------------------

 UKRAINEPublic/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
New Year's Eve/Day (Julian calendar)	January 13–14
Ukrainian Day	January 22
International Women's Day	March 8
Labor Day	May 1
Victory Day	May 9
Constitution Day	June 28
Independence Day	August 24

Religious Holidays

Christmas	January 6–7
Feast of Jordan	January 19
Holy Week	March or April	Begins on Lazarus Saturday
Pentecost	May–June	Fifty days after Easter

Regional Holidays

St. Melania's Feast Day	January 13
-------------------------	------------

Taras Shevchenko Day	March 9
Kiev Days	Last weekend of May

❁ UNITED ARAB EMIRATES

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Sheikh Zayed Bin Sultan Al Nahyan Accession Day	August 6
National Day	December 2

Religious Holidays

Eid al-Adha	Early January	Tenth of Dhu al-Hijjah, the 12th month of the Islamic calendar
Mouloud	Early April	Twelfth of Rabbi al-Awwal, the third month of the Islamic calendar
Shab-e-Miraj	August	Twenty-seventh of Rajab, the seventh month of the Islamic calendar
Eid al-Fitr	Late October	First of Shawwal, the 10th month of the Islamic calendar

Regional Holidays

Dubai Shopping Festival	January–February
Dubai Motor Show	December

❁ UNITED KINGDOM

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
May Day Bank Holiday	First Monday in May
Spring Bank Holiday	Last Monday in May
Summer Bank Holiday	Last Monday in August

Religious Holidays

Palm Sunday	March–April	Sunday before Easter
Maundy Thursday	March–April	Thursday before Easter
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Easter Monday	March–April	First Monday after Easter
Christmas	December 24–25
Boxing Day	December 26

Regional Holidays

St. George's Day	April 23
Guy Fawkes Night	November 5
Remembrance Day	November 11

❁ UNITED STATES

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Martin Luther King Jr.'s Birthday	Third Monday in January
Presidents' Day	Third Monday in February
Memorial Day	Last Monday in May
Independence Day	July 4
Labor Day	First Monday in September
Columbus Day	Second Monday in October
Veterans Day	November 11
Thanksgiving	Fourth Thursday in November

Religious Holidays

Eid al-Adha	Early January	Tenth of Dhu al Hijjah, the 12th month of the Islamic calendar
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Pesach	March–April	Begins on the 15th of Nisan, the first month of the Jewish calendar
Rosh Hashana	September–October	First two days of Tishri, the seventh month of the Jewish calendar
Yom Kippur	September–October	Tenth of Tishri, the seventh month of the Jewish calendar
Eid al-Fitr	Late October	First of Shawwal, the 10th month of the Islamic calendar
Hanukkah	November–December	Twenty-fifth of Kislev, the ninth month of the Jewish calendar
Christmas	December 24–25
Kwanzaa	December 26–January 1

Regional Holidays

Valentine's Day	February 14
Texas Independence Day	March 2
Mardi Gras	March– April	Day before Lent
César Chávez Day	March 31
Patriots Day	Third Monday in April
Gathering of Nations Indian Powwow	Last weekend of April
Cinco de Mayo	May 5
King Kamehameha Day	June 11
Juneteenth	June 19
Halloween	October 31

✿ URUGUAY

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Landing of the 33 Patriots	April 19
Labor Day	May 1
Battle of Las Piedras	May 17–18
Birthday of José Artigas	June 19
Constitution Day	July 18
Independence Day	August 25
Columbus Day	October 12

Religious Holidays

Epiphany	January 6
Carnival	Early February
Palm Sunday	March–April	Last Sunday of Lent
Maundy Thursday	March–April	Thursday before Easter
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Holy Saturday	March–April	Saturday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
All Souls' Day	November 2
Christmas	December 25

Regional Holidays

Virgen de la Candelaria	February 2
Minnesota River Revival	September

✿ UZBEKISTAN

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
International Women's Day	March 8
Victory Day	May 9
Independence Day	September 1
Constitution Day	December 8

Religious Holidays

Eid al-Adha	Early January	Tenth of Dhu al Hijjah, the 12th month of the Islamic calendar
Navruz	March 21
Mouloud	Early April	Twelfth of Rabbi al-Awwal, the third month of the Islamic year
Eid al-Fitr	Late October	First of Shawwal, the 10th month of the Islamic calendar

Regional Holidays

Children's Peace and Disarmament Festival	October 23
Pakhta-Bairam Harvest Festival	December

 VANUATU*Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Labor Day	May 1
Independence Day	July 30
Unity Day	November 29

Religious Holidays

Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Ascension Day	May–June	Forty days after Easter
Assumption	August 15
Christmas	December 25
Boxing Day	December 26

 VATICAN CITY*Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Anniversary of Lateranensi Pacts	February 11
Anniversary of the Pope's Election	April 19
Labor Day	May 1

Religious Holidays

Epiphany	January 6
St. Joseph's Day	March 19
Maundy Thursday	March–April	Thursday before Easter
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Pentecost	May–June	Fifty days after Easter
Corpus Christi	May–June	Sixty days after Easter
Feast of St. Peter and St. Paul	June 29
Assumption	August 15
All Saints' Day	November 1
All Souls' Day	November 2
Immaculate Conception	December 8
Christmas	December 25

❁ VENEZUELA

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Declaration of Independence Day	April 19
Labor Day	May 1
Battle of Carabobo Day	June 24
Independence Day	July 5
Birthday of Simón Bolívar	July 24
Columbus Day	October 12

Religious Holidays

Epiphany	January 6
Carnival	Early February
St. Joseph's Day	March 19
Maundy Thursday	March–April	Thursday before Easter
Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Ascension Day	May–June	Forty days after Easter
Corpus Christi	May–June	Sixty days after Easter
Feast of Sts. Peter and Paul	June 29
Assumption	August 15
All Saints' Day	November 1
Immaculate Conception	December 8
Christmas	December 25

Regional Holidays

Devils of Yare	February
Festival Internacional de Teatro	April

❁ VIETNAM

Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Vietnam Day	January 27
Foundation of the Vietnamese Communist Party	February 3
Liberation Day	April 30
Labor Day	May 1
Ho Chi Minh's Birthday	May 19
Memorial Day for War Martyrs	June 27
Revolution of 1945	August 19
Independence Day	September 2

Religious Holidays

Tet Nguyen Dan	February	First day of the first month of the Chinese calendar
Vesak	May	Eighth day of the fourth month of the Chinese calendar

Regional Holidays

Ba Chua Kho Temple Festival	February	From the 15th to the 16th day of the first month of the Chinese calendar
Lim Festival	February	Thirteenth day of the first month of the Chinese calendar

 YEMEN*Public/Legal Holidays

Labor Day	May 1
National Unity Day	May 22
The September Revolution	September 26

Religious Holidays

Eid al-Adha	Early January	Tenth of Dhu al Hijjah, the 12th month of the Islamic calendar
Mouloud	Early April	Twelfth of Rabbi al-Awwal, the third month of the Islamic calendar
Eid al-Fitr	Late October	First of Shawwal, the 10th month of the Islamic calendar

 ZAMBIA*Public/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Youth Day	Second Monday in March
Labor Day	May 1
Africa Day	May 25
Heroes' Day	First Monday in July
Unity Day	First Tuesday in July
Farmers' Day	First Monday in August
Independence Day	October 24

Religious Holidays

Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Easter Monday	March–April	First Monday after Easter
Christmas	December 25

Regional Holidays

Zambia Agricultural Show	July–August
Lusaka Music Festival	October

 ZIMBABWEPublic/Legal Holidays

New Year's Eve/Day	December 31–January 1
Independence Day	April 18
Africa Day	May 25
Unity Day	December 22

Religious Holidays

Good Friday	March–April	Friday before Easter
Holy Saturday	March–April	Saturday before Easter
Easter	March–April	First Sunday after Lent
Christmas	December 25
Boxing Day	December 26	