

THE NEW YORK PUBLIC LIBRARY

Astor, Lenox and Tilden Foundations

PRESENTED BY

SARAM R. ELLISON, M.D.

The

Saram R. Ellison, M. D.

Collection

NEW YORK

No.

HISTORY Perlegit kund Librum. Oct. 27. 37

MAGICK

By way of

APOLOGY,

For all the Wife Men who have unjustly been reputed Magicians, from the Creation, to the present Age.

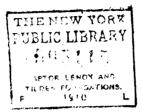

Written in French by

G. N. AUDEUS Late Library-Keeper to Cardinal Mazerin.

Multos absolvemus, si caperimus ant è judicare quam irasci. Senec. de ira lib. 3. c. 29.

Englished by J. DAVIES.

Printed for John Streater, dere to be fold by the Book-sellers of

MMOV W/IM OLIMIN VMAMALI **$

TO THE

Most worthily Honourd. SRRICHARD COMBESKI.

SIR,

TT is certainly but reason, that Innocence, since it so easily meets with Persecutors, should at length light on some Patrons and Assertors, that as those are the Agents & Emisfaries of Ignorance and Barbarism, making it their business to ruine it, so these might, as the Guardian-Angells of restored Civility and Letters, endeavour to vindicate it. have here the greatest miracles A 2

The Epistle Dedicatory. of Mankind in their severall times impeach'd of a crime, the greatest can be committed against either divine or humane Lawes, viz. a Geotick, or superstitious & Diabolical Magick, violently profecuted by a fort of people whose design it is, by noise and number to stifle Truth, and consequently, to make the most innocent the most guilty. In so much that all the liberty they now feeme to have, is that of faying something for themselves, which is hop'd may prove so considerable as not only to divert the Sentence, but knock off the fetters they have so long

The Epistle Dedicatory.

groand under, and gain them an absolute Liberate.

To which end, Sir, you are in this Countrey the Person they make their appeale to, with a certain confidence, that as the prejudice of former Judges hath not a litle contributed to their misfortune, so your integrity may restore them to a reputation among. men, great as when they were the light and ornaments of the Ages they lived in. This is a a trouble you might easily be induc'd to take upon you, did you imagine to your self no other consequences of it, than that, being look'd on as an. effect

The Epistle Dedicatory.

effect of your Goodness, you will oblige all those who cannot but compassionate the undeserved sufferings of such excellent men, & may expect that acclamation and applause, which ever attends the impartial execution of Justice. when you reflect on the particular advantages accrewing to your felf by this Apology, you will haply be satisfyed, there is something extraordinary in the address of it to you. For, what higher motives can Posterity have to believe, that the great perfections you are master of, the general affection you command, the publick fa-

The Epistle Dedicatory.

vour shines upon you, (which when uncourted ever speaks a certain excels of merit) are not the effects of any thing more than natural, than to find you rescuing the oppressed innocency of men, whom onely a transcendency of abilities made the objects of envy and detraction? What can more fatisfy the world, that, when you have done things, exceeding common apprehensions, it proceeds from your vast & knowledge and acquaintance with those Sciences whose luftre dazles ordinary capacities, than to find you relieving fuch as only popular ignorance

A 4 Digitized by Google and

The Epistle Dedicatory. and mistake have made unfortunate? And of this, what other effect can there be than that you live in the fame which they, by your Patronage, are restored unto; and consequently, in the esteem and veneration of all the Sons and Lovers of Learning, but particularly, as the meanest of that number, that of

Your most humble and most obliged Servant

f. DAVIES.

The AUTHOR'S motive and designe in the present Work.

Bout four or five years since, there came abroad a little Book in French, imituled, Nouueau Jugement, &c. New Refle-Aions on what hath been said and written as well for, as against the Book of the curious Doctrine of the Great Witts of these times. the end of this Book the Authour inserted two Invectives, very short indeed, against Homer and Virgil; to what end or upon what ground it is not much material here to dispute; but in that of Virgil, be represents him as a most eminent Conjurer, and one that had done abundance of strange and incredible things by the affistance of Magick. This he presently remembred was taken verbatim out of the last Book publish'd by de Lancre against Wirchcrast; whereupon reflecting on what he bad read, and calling to mind that not only Virgil but in a manner all great persons were in like manner charg'd with Magick, he imagin'd the charge might be unjust and ground-This put him upon search of the truth, thinking it an act of piety to right the memory of those great men and an obligation put upon the world, to endeavour their satisfaction, who want either time or conveniences to informe themselves, and so he re-solv'd to communicate, what he had found, in this APOLOGIE: whereof take this short ac-SDUNT.

In the first place he assignes certain conditions or qualifications necessarily requisite in him, that would judge of Authors, especially Historians and Dzmonographers, who are the chief Architects of this Labyrinth of erroneous opinions, which who is once gotten into cannot well get out without this Clue. Then he divides Magick into severall species, so to confront the charge and the Answer, which consists in the distinction of Magick into Diabolicall and Niturall. That done, he comes to certain generall causes whence the suspicion hath been derived, viz. Politicks, extraordinary Learning, Mathematicks, Supposititious Books, superstitious Observations, Herely, Malice, Emulation, Ignorance, Credulity in Readers, and want of circumspection and Judgment in Writers. This is fully dispatch'd in five Chapters, which are as it were a preludium to XIV more, spent in the particular vindication of Zoroastes, Orpheus, Pythagoras, Democritus, and others, not proceeding so much according to the times wherein they flourish'd as their severall qualities and employments. So that having run through she severall vindications of Philosophers, Physicians, Religious men, Bishops, Popes, all to be done was to close up the treatise with a Chapter discovering the means whereby these Errours are maintained, and what will be the consequences of them if not suppressed.

So much, as to the Authors designe in this work. That dispatched, he thought sit to say something to those who might haply quarrell with him for his checquering it so much with sentences and Authorities out of Latine Authors. There are indeed a many and those the most resind Writers, who cannot, without a certain scorn and indignation, look on the writings of such, as, like them, will not employ themselves so trivially as to compose Love Stories and Romances for the entertainment of women and Children. For those his answer is, that as he quarrels not with them for using a Style proportionable to their capacities to whom they direct their Labours; so does he expect they should be as favourable to him. for not translating those Latine passages as such as are not particularly calculated for the meridian of the Populace, but some of a higher elevation, who measure not truth, by the credit of Historians and Demonographers, that have almost beforted the multitude with their extravagunces. These indeed are a sort of peo-ple so much obliged one to another, that should we imitate them in the Lubours we intend for posterity, we must do as the Rhodians did, who only chang'd the heads of ancients Statues to make them serve for new representations, such a strange art have they of disguising and dismembring one anothers workes that, strictly examined, there's nothing . new but the Titles. For Citaions, he thought they only avoided them who never expected to be cited themselves and that it were too great a presumption in any one to think himself so well furnisht with conceptions as to satisfie so great a diversity of Readers without borrowing any. But if ever there were any such, they were certainly Puttarch, Seneca, and Montagne, who yet have not blash'd to derive from others whatever they thought contributed to the embellishment of their discourses. To prove this we need only mention the Greek and Latine verses cited almost in every line of their workes, and particularly that of Consolation, consisting but of seven or eight Leaves, sem by the former to Apollonius, wherein there are above 150, verses out of Homer, and near as many out A S of Hesiod, Pindar, Sophocles, and Euripides. Nor is he ignorant what these regulators of writing might oppose against this, viz. the authority of Epicurus, who in 300 Volumes left behind him, had not so much as one Citation; but this would make. against them, by reason of the contrary consequences of these two different procedures, for the workes of Plutarch, Seneca and Montagne, are daily read, sold, and reprinted, whereas of those of Epicurus, Lacreius can hardly furnish us with a Catalogue. Yet would he not have this so understood as to approve their course who conceale the treasures of their own abilities to beg and borrow of others, never appearing but as people at false Musters, and, without any hazard to themselves, carrying other mens Arms. Tedious and fruitlesse discourses are like Forrests of Cypresse trees, fair and flourishing to the eye, but bearing no fruit suitable thereto.

The surest way therefore were to keep the mean between these extremities, which is for a man to make a certaine allyance between his own conceptions and those of the ancient, when the subject will bear it. For as it belongs only to such elevated and transcendent Souls as have something above the ordinary rate of men, to transmit their conceptions to us pure and naked, without any other convoy than that of Truth, and that it is the indictum of a low & reptile mind to undertake nothing of itself; so is it the proper character of a person unacquainted with vain glory and arriv'd to a considerable knowledge and experience of things to follow the track which the most learned best esteemed Authors have gone before him, and not so much endeavour to tickle the ears of his Readers, as to neglect what might satisfie their understanding. And this method hath our Author observ'd in this

A POLOGIE: which whoever shall examine without prejudice or passion, must certainly conclude it no small performance, especially if he consider the difficulty of the undertaking, the many Authors consulted, the particularities he hath been forced to quote, and the novelty of the Subject, which, were there nothing else, were enough to oblige the more ingenious, to countenance and encourage

In nova surgentem, majoraq; viribus ausum, Nec per inaccessos metuentem vadere saltus.

NAV DE

NAUD ÆVS.

Viris doctis et fautoribus suis.

Intactæ virtutis opus, juvenisq; laborem Excipite illustres animæ, doctiq; parentes Nominis et Genii, ne postera sæcula credant, Et vos in Magicis pariter peccasse sultaris.

The

The Contents of this Book.

Chap. I.
F the conditions requifite to judge	of Amnors,
ofpecially Historian.	Fol. 1.
Chap. I I.
Of Magick and it Species.	Fol. II.
Chap. III.
That many eminent persons have bee	n accounted
Magicians who were only Politicians.	Fol. 23.
Chap. IV.	- 0.0 - 30
That the great Learning of many es	ecallout men
hath many times been taken for Magick,	Eol ag Chap. V.
That great Mathematicians have be	en suspected for Magicians.	Fol. 36
Chap. V I.
That the Books attributed to divers gr	eat men are not a sufficient testimeny to make ther	es ouilty of Magick.	Fol. 42.
Chap. VII.	2011 1-2
Of all the other sauformhick men sig	A AMV OCCA-
Of all the other causes which may give	Eal st
sion of suspicion thereof.	Fol. 51.
Chap. VIII.	Al
That Zoroasles was neither Author of Geotick, Theurgick, or Artificial Mi	egick. 63.
Chap. IX.
That Orpheus was no Magician.	Fol. 80
Chap. X.
A Vindication of Pythagoras.	Fol.96,
Chap. XI.
Of Numa Pompilius.	Fol. 115.
A	Chap.

	The	C	on	te	nts	$.
	Cha	_	v	T T

Chap. XII.

Of Demociitus, Empedocles, and Apollonius. Fol. 126.

Chap. XIII.

Of the Genii, or Dæmons, attributed to Socrates, Aristotle, Plotinus, Porphyrius, Jamblicus, Chicus, Scaliger, and Cardan. Fol. 143.

Chap, XIV.

Of Alchindus, Geber, Artephius, Thebit, Anfelme of Parma, Raimundus Lullius, Arnoldus de Villa nova, Peter d'Apono, and Paracelfus. Fol. 165.

Chap, XV.

Of Henry Cornelius Agrippa. Fol. 188. Chap. X V I.

Of Merlin, Savanorola, & Nostradamus, F.202 Chap. XVII.

Of St. Thomas, Roger Bacon, Fryer Bungey Michael the Scot, Picus Mirandula, and Trithemius. Fol. 224.

Chap. XVIII.

Of Robert of Lincoln, & Albertus Magnus. Fol. 241.

Chap. XIX.

Of the Popes, Sylvester II. and Gregory VII. Fol. 255.

Chap, XX,

Of Joseph, Salomon, and the Wise men. F.273.

Chap. X X I.

Of the Poet Virgil. Fol.285.

Of the means whereby all these erroneous opinions are maintained, and what may be expected from them, if not suppress'd. Fol. 298.

THE

THE

HISTORY

OI

MAGICK;

By way of

APOLOGIE,

For all those eminent Persons, who have unjustly been reputed Magicians.

CHAP. I.

Of the Conditions requisite to sudge of Authours; especially Historians.

He learned and judicious (a) Ludovicus a Lib. Ac Vives, who for his excellent worth, was tradendis thought the fittest of all the great Wits of the last age, as another Plutarch, to conflivate that of the famous Emperour Charles the Fifth, gives us a good Dichotomy of Prudence.

One part regulates our enjoyments, preserves the health, directs our conversation, acquires charges and employments, and is so much taken up with the procurement of the gods of Fortune and the Body, that it hath gotten, among the Fathers, the title of Prudentia carnis, and is called by Latine Anthours, Vasitices & asturia. The other, labouring onely the cultivation and ornament of the nobler part of man, the Mind, and the enriching of it with Sciences and Disciplines, that so it might discover and practite what is most advantageous and reall therein, is particularly employed in the censure and judgement of Authours. This is to truly necessary, and of such importance, that, being once well ordered, it so guides us into the interiour of the persons we deal with, that it dicovers the calms or tempelts of their passions, the Euripus of their severall agitations, and the admirable diversity of their inclinations. The advantage we are to make of it, is like that of a touchstone to distinguish truth from falshood; of a Torch, to light us in the palpable darknesse of Errour, or we must look towards it, as our onely Pole-star, regulating our course and discoveries of Truth. For fince the alwayes appears to us masked with the passions of those, who either out of ignorance, or interest, endeavour to disguise her, we mult, to enter into familiarity with her, and to be absolutely possessed of her, seek her out, as Palamedes did Ulysses, or young Aristeus, the Sea-god; in those places where the is hidden, and be so importunate with her, that after the lucked under the indifcretion of the ignorant, the envie of the passionate, the extravagancies of the temerarious, the blindnesse of the interessed, and an infinite number of fabulous, strange, and ridiculous opinions, the may appear at last restored ed her own former shape;

b Visg. (b) Et quanto illa magis formas se vertet in omnes, Geor. 4. Tanto, nate, magis contende tenacia vincla,
Donec talis erit, mutato corpore qualem
Videris incapto tegeret cum lumina somno,

Digitized by Google . To

To do this, we must shake off all the insinuating titles, the Panegyricks, the manifest gratulations, -which are ordinarily bestowed on those, who are the most able to disguise her with the greatest Artifices and Palliations. For we should be more tender of our liberty, than to be fooled out of it by the number of their suffrages, as if we were obliged, as a packed Jury, to approve whatever they are pleased to tell us, and had not the freedom of a diligent disquisition and censure, to confider whether it be just and rationall. To our discare, as to this point, may we justly attribute all the fables, impertinencies, and superstitions, that have to this day crept into the writings and imaginations of abundance of people, especially that simple and ridiculous opinion of a many, who have thought the most eminent menthat ever were, even to the highest Magistrates of the Ecclesiasticall State, Sorcerers and Magicians. Bur as this discare hath been extreamly prejudiciall to us, so must we endeavour to make it as advantagious, and use it as Telephu's spear, which only could cure the wounds it made; or as the Sun. who onely disperses those clouds and mists which were risen in its absence.

This task is indeed too difficult and subtle to be indifferently accommodated to all persons, and therefore Experience, which is onely acquired by Time, the Reselvion men ought to make on what they have conceived, the carefull observation of the excellent sayings, and prudent actions of others, and above all things, that Indifference which should alwayes carry the light before us in this disquistion of Truth, give a certain dispensation to weak, inconstant, and obstinate minds, as also to young men, such for the most part, as the whom Virgil describes,

B 2

· Ense velut nudo; parmā ĝ, inglorius alba,

from employing themselves in this censure, whereof a riper age, and a well-settled constitution of mind, acquits it self with better successe, and selfe difficulty. Nor can we but observe, that Drasmus, Vives, Scaliger, Bodin, Montaigne, Canius, Possevin, and many more, who reserved this employment for their more serious studies, have proved so fortunate in this kind, that we must needs (if with Seneca we acknowledge, that Bona themse necessary, necessary and by the assistance of those precepts, which may be generally given for the regulation and refining of the judgement: wilereof,

The first is, to be very well versed in those Authours, who have been most excellent in this kind; as sor instance, Saneca, Quimilian, Plutarch, Charron, Montaigne, Vives; as also in those admirable and great Genius's of History, Thucydides, Tacitus, Guicciardine, Comines, and Sleidan. Adde to this an acquaintance with those who have been Authours of politicall and rational Discomses, and a'l such as are eminent for new discoveries and conceptions, such as Cardan, and the great Chancellour of England, Verulain, in all their books.

The fecond requires the knowledge of Logick; to be able with more readinesse and facility, to distinguish between true and false, simple and compound, necessity and contingence; which does does (as it were) open the way to

The third and last, which is a certain familiarity with the most profitable Sciences, and the most universall and generall account of the affairs of this World that may be had, which is to be gained, partly by our own industry, partly by the endeavours of those who have gone before us, such as may be those of Historians. But in this the choice is of such consequence, that there cannot be too much circums pection used, especially in the present age, wherein self-love does so easily triumph over the industry of men, to sorce upon the world the fruits of their ignorances

> (c) Sic dira frequentes Scribendi invasit scabies, & turpe putatur In nullis penitus nomen prastare tabernis.

c Naogeorgus; Sat.1.

In so much, that we may justly say of the Mystery of Printing, the Mint of all these rampant imaginations, what Seneca laid upon such an occasion in Nature, as this is in Art, Si beneficia natura utentium pravitate perpendimus, nihil non nostro malo accepimus. This is no more than what was forefeen above an hundred and twenty years fince, by the learned Hermolaus, Patriarch of Aquilea, and Perrot, Bishop of Sipontum, and to which alone is. to their cause, we are to attribute the sudden difsemination of our modern Hershes, with this complaint into the bargain, that with all the advantages we derive from the Aucient, we are much inferiour to them in point of learning., I therefore think it extreamly necessary amidshich: a multitude of Authours, to be curious in the choice and selection of those, the diligent reading.

3

6

whereof may convince us, that they have been furnished with all the conditions required in a perfect Historian, such as was for the English, Po--lyder Virgil; for the Germans, Rhenams; and for the French, Paulus Emilius, and discard all the sell, who (as the fore-mentioned) have not the mark of truth. But if we are defirous to read them, let it be on the same conditions, as Seneca permitted his friend Lucilius; Nec te probibuerim (saves he) aliquando ista agere, sed tunc cum voles nibil agere. For my pare it should be my censure, shat they be all suppressed, or that, as anciently all under fourty years of age were forbidden the reading of the Apocalyps, and the last chapter of the Prophet Esdras, to they, whose judgements are not settled by the reading of good books, should not be permitted to surfet on those abortive fruits of ignorance, whereof there is no end, but that of degenerating and bastardizing the spirits of those that trouble themselves with them, Nam qui omnes etiam indignas l'estione schedas exencie, anilibus quoque fabulis accommodare operans. perest.

But before we dilate any further upon the centure and precaution we are to make of them, it will not be amisse, by the way, to lay open the extravagance of, I know not what, persons, who are of a saith, that Paiming and Poesse are two tworn silvers, exercising an Empire over our Belief, equivalent to that of the most impartiall Hinstories. For though it be presumed they may haply take their rise from a true Relation, yet taking the liberty to disguise it, as they please, with their Chimericall imaginations, they have long since incurred the same sentence;

Namá, anum sottamuriter, & inania rerum Semnia concipiune, & Homeras, & acer Apelles.

That person might very deservedly be laugh'd at, who should be perswaded that Turnus, little Tydans, and Rodomon, flung quarters of mountains at their enemies, meerly upon the reputation of Poets; or that Josus Christ ascended into Heaven upon an (d) Eagle, because he is so represente d Flor: de ed in the Metropolitane Church of St. Andrew, in Remond. the City of Bourdeax; and that the Apostles play d c.13 of Pope Joan, on cymbals at the funerall of the blessed Virgin, because a capricious Painter thought fit to paint them so: which considered, we may well excuse the Satyricall retort of Beza, to the pictured argument, which Dr. De Sainetes thought fo prevalent at the conference of Poiss. Nor shall I be too forward to give any more credit to so many other fabulous narrations, as have crept into the world (if it may be permitted to observe some, even in the Ecclesiasticall History)under the banpers of such infinuating and specious titles, as thole of, De infantia Salvatoris, The Conformity of St. Francis, The Golden Legend, The Proto-Evangelium, The nine or ten Gospels, and a many such like, which having been at first printed in the Micropresbyricon, have been since prudently left out of the Orthodoxographia, and the Library of the Fathers. Those who would have Pliny, Albertus Magnus, Vincem de Beauvais, Cardan, and some others not inferiour to them, accounted fabulous Secretaries of Nature, are in my judgement extreamly insensible of the obligation we owe these great persons, for their excellent obser-varions. It were much more rationall to blast with this breath the impossites of Mannebanks, the relveries of Alchymists, the fooleries of Magicians, the riddles of Cabaliffs, the combinarions of the Lullists, and other like excravagances . of certain Engrollers, and Collectours of Secrets, fince they do not contribute any thing more folid to naturall History, than all those old and rotten monuments of Olgus, Saxo-Grammaticus, Turpin, Neubrigensis, Merlin, Nauclerus, Phreculphus, Sigebert, Paulus Venetus, and a multitude of others, do to Policie and civill Society. For these, be-Howing their time rather in gleaning what was scattered up and down, than in weighing the authority of the Authours from whom they borsowed their notes, have not onely advanced an Iliad of chimericall and ridiculous stories, but with the same labour, brought upon the Rage some more improbable than the other, reporting them as most true & certain. Of this, one reason or motive is obsinacie, in that having once exposed them, they could not imitate St. Augustine in his Retractations, Quamvis enim, faith Seneca, vana nos concitaverint, perseveramus, ne videamur capisse fine causa. Another, haply more likely is that being content to follow the common track of those, who when they write, make it their onely businesse, to prove and make good what they have undertaken, by what means they care not, they bring in reasons and arguments by head and shoulders, and take hear-fayes for certain truth, and old wives tales for demonstrations:

e Padent. ——— (e) Et sic observatio crescit in Symath. Ex atavis quondam male capta, deinde seguntis —— Tradi ta temporibus, seris q', nepotibus autra.

Digitized by Google This

This certainly must needs be an impertinent kind of writing, and proper to sheepy mindes, such as willfully quit the bark of Trub, to cast themselves one after another into the Sea of Errow.

But to avoid all these absurdities, we are only to confider the method & defigne of such as enterrain us with these fine conceptions, and make an alcent from one to another, till we come to di cover the first advancer of them, and haply the only man from whom all the rest derived them. For instance: It is out of all controverse, that all our old Romances took their rife from the Chronicles of Bishop Turpin; all the Stories of Pope loan, from one Marianus Scotus; the Salvation of Trajan, from one John Levit; the opinion of Virgil's being a Magician, from Helimundus the Monk. This man once found out, we must diligently confider his quality, the party he inclin'd to, and the time wherein he first writ; and thence bethink our selves, whether we ought not to give greater credit to those who have had the mannagment of Affairs, than to Monks and private men; to persons of honour and worth, than to the dreggs of ignorance and the populace.

In the second place, we are to look on Historians, (those only who are perfectly Heroick excepted) as a fort of people seldome or never representing things truly and naturally, but shadowing and masking them according as they would have them appear, and such as to gain their judgment a reputation, and to infnare others therein, spare not either abilities or eloquence, Stretching, Amplifying, byassing and disguising all things, as they think most proper to their design. Hence it is that we find Heathens and Idolaters have spoken many things against the first Christians, out of the aversion they had to the Religion; that the adherents of some Emperours broach'd many indignities against the Popes; that the English represented the Mayd of Orleans as a witch and Sorceresse; and that modern Heretiques have vented so many fables against the dignity of the Church, and the main Pillars of it.

In the Third place, we are to make that judgment of Books which Parercular made of Learned men, experience teaching us, that in a manner, all Histories within seven or eight hundred years past are so hydropically swoln with lying legends, that a man would think the Authors of them had made it their main strife, who should advance the greatest number, From these severall conditions requisite to the censure of Historians, it may be inferr'd that theywill signific little as to the direction of those dull & earthly souls, which are represented to us in the Ægyptian Hieroglyphicks by the Ono-cophalus, a Creature shat stirres not from the same place, that is to say, such as are not acquainted with any thing beyond the limits of their own Country, who read no Histories, who crouble not themselves, with anything done elsewhere, and who are unlesterr'd and ignorant to that degree, that when they hear some great person named, they think the discourse is about some African monster or something of the new world. For these having nothing either to contradict or oppose, make no difficulty to admit or reject what suits or suits not with their humour, quite contrary to the procedure of a prudent man, (e)

e Aneas Sylvine

cui si plura nosse datum est, majora em septimental dubia; and of the old men represented to us by Aristoile, qui rerum vitiis longo usu detettis et cognitis, nibil impudenter asseverant, and of whom he sayes in the same place, that their long practice and experience makes them commonly incredulous, and suspecting all things: A qualification, which indeed must alwayes be supposed in those who expect to make any advantage of their Readings!

CHAP. II.

Of Magick and its Species.

he famous (a) Civilian hath in his Emblemes, a Alciet I aken occasion to represent the three canfes Embl. 1821 of ignorance by the image of Sphine; pleasure, by her face; inconstancy, by her feathers; and pride, by her feet. Methinks it is not hard to add formething to this representation, by observing the effett of ignorance by the cruelty of the same Monster. For as that took a certain pleasure in catting down from the top of the Rock she sate on, all those who either could not or would not resolve her Riddles; so Ignorance hath ever made it her businesse to precipitate those out of all credit and reputation, who, better employed, would not mind those fooleries and legerdemaines. Nor indeed can we but perceive, that, before Humanity and Learning became common and generally attainable by the happinesse of this last age, all those who endeavoured their propagation and advancement, were (infamontly) terms

Digitized by GOSSIC

12

ed Grammarians and Herevicks; those who made Aricter scrutinyes into the knowledge of naturall causes incurred the censure of Scapicks and Atheists; he who was more then Ordinarily veried in the Hebrew tongue, went for a Jew or an Apostate; and those who studied the Mathematicks, and more hidden Sciences, were suspected to be Conjurers and Magicians; A Calumny that had no other ground then either popular Ignorance, or the envy which the multitude bears to the vertue of eminent persons, because of the stitle correspondence there is between the incli-

b Epis.29. nations of the one and the other, as (b) Seneca ingenuously acknowledges in this passage; Nunquam volui, populo placere: nam que ego Scio, non probat populus, & que probat populus; ego nescio.

But fince the former have, through the discoveries of time, and the endeavours of those who have underraken their just cause, outlived and trampled on the centures of envy and Ignorance; I cannot sufficiently wonder, that amidst such a multitude of writers, there is not any one hath taken pen in hand to rescue the honour of all those hegemonick and predominant soules, and particularly the greatest Lights of Religion, even Popes and Prelates, from a vanity the most ridiculous and opposite to their state that can be imagind, which is that of their having been Magicians, Sorcerers, and Conjurers. This taske Ishall without much difficulty undertake, yet hope to unskale the eyes of valgar Ignorance, scrupulous simplicity and zeal, and Hereticall malice: all which combine together to keep up these sables and erroneous opinions, to the pre-Digitized by Google judice ()

judice of accased innocence, Truth, as to matter cifact, and the honour and integrity of Religion, which certainly never could so far miscarry in the hoice of her principall Ministers, as that they should make an unnaturall conjunction between the Prince of Light and that of Darkneffe, God and the Devil, Christ and Lucifer, Heaven and Hell, and the Sacrifices of the Creatour and those of the most vile and abominable creature in the world. It is certainly not onely to be admired, but deplored, that this opinion, kept above water by fome vain and triviall conjectures, should Lave taken such rooting, that it now concerns us to maintain the piery of those great Souls, whose lives and actions should rather be an example by which to regulate ours, than afford us occasions of Apologies and Vindication.

We shall then lay our foundation with the diinction of Magick into lawfull, and unlawfull or probibited: whereof if every one were but intentive to observe the severall species and effects, me thinks it were not very difficult to comprehend them. Let us then consider Man, as a persect and accomplished creature, made after the image of his Creatour, the noblest production of all Nature, such as she thought sittest to shed her savours on, and to surnish with her greatest excellencies, that so he might be Lord Paramount over all the rest, and exercise dominion over them, it being the inherent right of his excellencie,

· — (c) Et quod dominari in catera posset

V Natus homo, ——

prdering and regulating his extraordinary actions, Digitized by Google

Met. 1 . 1

ons, either by the particular grace of Almighty God, or by the affiltance of an Angel, or by that of a Damon, or lastly, by his own industry and ability. From thele four different wayes, we infer four kinds of Magick: Divine, relating to the first; Theurgick, to the second; Geotick, to the third; and Naturall, to the last.

The first is that sacred and divine Magick, which being absolutely happy and accomplished, exceeds our forces, and wholly depends on that Spirit, qui quò vult spirat, and which discovers it self in its noble and supernaturall operations, such as Prophecie, Miracles, the gift of Tongues, by means whereof it forces its knowledge upon mankind, affords it matter both of instruction and entertainment, so to chastize and mind men of their duties, and to raile a veneration for the Ministers of its Commandments. Magicians of this kind were Moses, Jashua, the Prophets, the Apostles, Gregory Thanmaturgus, and Simeon Sti-Lites, those great Wonder-workers, and a multitude of others, who have exercised this Mosaicall Magick. This Pliny, not understanding it, condemns; as also another, which he cals by the name of the Caprian Magick, that is, that of St. Paul, who being in Cyprus, did, in the presence of the Pro-Conful Sergius, make Elymas the Sorcerer lo'e his light. But this kind never discovered it self with so much lustre and miracle, as in those two transcendent actions, the alliance of God with man, made at severall times, by Moses, and Jesus Christ, who confirmed it onely by the verfortunate in it, that having abjured what he had

bearned in the school of men, he by the practice of this, delivered the people of Israel out of Ægyptian bondage, and made himself a Generall of 60000 men, whom he and his Successours governed according to the Laws he had received from God with thunder and lightening. The latter, Jesus Christ, wrought wonders with so much ease, that both Jews and Gentiles, not able to comprehend whence that power was derived, which yet was no other than that of his Divinity. imagined all done by a wicked and Diabolicall Magick. Thence it came they were so impudent (as (d) S. Hierome, and S. Augustine observe) that In 13. they published certain books under the title of, Exech. Magia Jesu Christi ad Petrum & Paulum Apostoles. But the faid Doctors prove them clearly spurious, in that having seen and read them, they found them fraught with stories quite disconsonant to the actions of Jesus Christ, who left nothing behind him in writing, nor called Paul to the Apostleship till after his Ascension: besides that, he could not by his Magick have made the Prophers say what they had foretold both of his Deity and Coming.

Lib.30. Cap, I,

The second is the Theurgick, or White Magick, which upon the account of Religion, enjoyns, fasting and abstinences, piety, purity, candour, and integrity of life, that the Soul desirous of commerce with the superiour Deities, may not be in anything diverted by its polluted and sinful body. Hence it is that the Apostle sayes, Corpus, much corrumpitur, aggravat animam; and suffers, not a man to make use of that stricturates of Disquisition, which is absolutely necessary in this operation; which, me thinks, Scaliger too prodiqually commends, if so be what he sayes in his thirdy book book against Cardan, be meant of this kinde:

B Exercit. (e) Tertia divina est; nomen apud vulgus odiosum;

327.nu. 5. facit colluvies impostorum, propter Smerdis proditioonem ac persidiam insensa diu; hac Dominum Jesum fuisse promissum Regem, cognoverunt illi qui ad cum adorandum longinquis è regionibus profetti fuerant. For my part, I bould rather explane this of Naturall Magick, against the opinion of Loyer and Godelman, who ground theirs perhaps only on his, calling it Divine. Yet for his to doing there is fome reason, since that those who practise it, acknowledge thereby that supream and onely Divinity, and may as well by the knowledge it gives us of the creatures, ascend to that of the Creatour faceording to the direction of Moses, Facient meam non videbis, posteriora autem mea videbis) as by the affurance it gives us of the miracles of the new Testament, to that of the Redeemer. Other wife we must suppose Scaliger extreamly in the ken, in making such Panegyricks on this Theurgie When it is, not unjustly, condemned by Delrio Pererius, and all the rest, who deserve more credit than this modern Writer, who leaving not a stone unmoved to gain the reputation of a Magician, though ineffectually, thought fit, not long fince to put forth a Rhetorick, confifting of five parts, new and never used before, which he would make conforant to the Ancient, that is, the Arc of Trithemiles to Invention, Theurgie to Disposition, the Art of Armadel to Elecation, the Art Paulin to Pronunciation, and that of Lulius to Memory. For this, I doubt not, fince his reputation encreafeedaily, he will have his reward, that is, within ffry years he shall have as fine stories made of kim, as there are now of Dr. Faufens, De Maugis, Merlin,

Merlin, Nostradamus, and others who are marked with red letters in the Magicians Calendar. To which Caralogue we must also adde Homer, Socrates, Aristotle, Proclus, Jamblichus, Perphyrius, Maximus, and all the great. Wits of these latter ages, if it be true, as they would fain perswade us, that they were acquainted with their Genii, and could dispose of their good Angels, meerly by the Criticall observation of all those ceremonies and Theurgick preparations, so much celebrated by the Poet Palingenius, that a man would think all the morall precepts, whereof his Zodiak of bumane life is so full, aim only at the practice of all those knacks and Image-Arts of Armadel, Paulin, and the Planetary, Et hujusmodi ju- Agrip. de perstitionum genera, qua eò sunt perniciosiora, quò no-vanit. v. 45 bis apparent diviniora; since especially they bring us thorow the back door to the knowledge & practice of Conjurations and Diabolicall Magick, qua cum sit occulta, non minus quam tetra & horri- Apul. in bilis, plerung, roctibus vigilata, & tenebris abstru-Apolog. Ja, & arbitris solitaria, & carminibus mumurata, we ought consequently to be very distrussfull of, as the principall instrument the Devil hath ever made use of, to pretend to the honour belongs not to him, and to be so idolized by men, as that he might divert them from the worship they owe their Creatour. To compasse this with the more ease, we see it hath been his constant employment, to bring into practice all the artificies and subtleties imaginable, putting on all shapes, and making his advantage of all creatures, to make this Idolatry the more universal, & consequently more abominable to him, who, for the love he bears us, call'd himsels sometime a jealons God. We Exo. 20 5. have

Have it from fome Historians, that he spoke to Apollonius under the shape of an Elm, to Pythagoras under that of a River, to Simon Magus under that of a Dog, to some others under that of an Oak. He entertain'd the Heathen in their super-Ricions, by heaps of Stones and Statues, whence proceeded Oracles, and (as they fay) prefides yet among those wretched Assemblies which frequent his Saerifices, under the representation of a Heegoat, the ugifest may be seen; for which yet there must be no more respect had, than that Aprilibro made of Virgin Parchment, at the opening whereni (they lay) he is obligd to answer; or that Shire of Necessary, the Looking-glasse of Durknesse, and fuch instruments of perdition, as these poor, superflicious, and melancholly wretches take aburdance of pains to make, cum cantinuculis, cadave-

Scalig. dance of pains to make, cum cantinaculis, cadave-Exer. 327. ribus, funibus suspendiosorum; qua siquis attrettare num. 3. audeat et iam mereatur.

The sentence we have pass'd against the se-... cond, may in like manner, with no lesse earnestnesse and truth, be directed to all those who busie themselves in a sort of endlesse Divinations, the forwn of the third kind of Magick, which there is no necessity of specifying more particularly, it being the custom of all that write on that Subject, to dispose it into Alphabets and Catalogues. But to deal ingenuously, it were much more discretion to give them a perpetuall act of Oblivion, not only because we may say, and justly, that of them which Terrullian does upon another occasion, Tes pernicies quot species, tot dolores quot colores, tos venena quot genera, but also because they seem to be of the nature of a flame, which (as Ovid describes it) heightens and increases the more it is flirr'd: Digitized by Google

Vidi ego ja tatus mota face crefeere flammus, Et rir fas, nullo concutiente, moti.

Wwele Merefore much more to our purpole, and theadvantage of Religion, to bellow some time in refuting what Piens, in his Apologie, Crimius, and the rest affirm, that this wicked and unlawfull Magick was so predominant all over Ægypt, that people relorted thither from all parts of theworld, as if it had been some Academy or Lyczum, purpolely let up for the propagation of this Idolatry. Hence it proceeds that Lucium and Infidels derive much from this opinion, when they would prove that Moses, who according to the Wise-man, Josephus and Philo, had been instructed in all the wildom of the Egyptians, was so well veri'd in this Magick, that he made ule of it in the working of miracles. To this some adde, that Jesus Christ practifd it, as we find in [i] Marfilius Ficinus, and i De Relig. Proce particularly in [k] Arnobins, who affirms, christe 30. that it was the common objection of those blind k cont. wretches, to fay, Magus fuir, clandestinis arribus Gent, l. 1. omnia perfecie: Ægyptiorum ex adytis Angelorum porentium nomina, & remoras furatus est discipli-tus. This the Authour of the Fortalitium sidei might have pard his ordinary gloffes upon, had he but confidered these objections, as ridiculous as those of a many others, who would have Abrabut and Jacob passe for great Astrologers, Joseph for a Southfayer, and Salomon for a Necromancer, grounded only on certain parlages of the Bible, well many of our Doctors liave interpreted much more fuperflictiously than ever did the Rabbins.

Bite is almost demonstrable, that this kind of C 2 Magick

nigitized by TOOOR

in Carl. 29. fol. $17.

inide.

Magick which was practifed so universally over all Egypt was no other than the Naturall, disguis'd haply with some vain and impertinent Ceremonies, as may be easily judg'd, in that Zoroastes, Zamolxis, Abbaric, Oromafis, Charondas and Damigeron, who were most eminent therein, as all Authours generally affirm, are commended In Alcib. et by Plato, especially the two first, as persons very intelligent and excellent for the knowledge of Nature rather then any command they had over those Genii, Spirits, and Robin-good-sellowes, This may be further provid by the examples of Plato himself, of Pythagoras, Empedocles, and Democritus, who have ever been reputed Philosophers and not Magicians, though by their travels into Egypt they had attain'd those Disciplines. For indeed it were a strange thing, as the Learned De sing cert Bishop Mirandulanus observes, that, this Magick having been so much in vogue, neither Aristorle, nor any Philosopher of his rate, took any paines to leave us the least account of itsespecially the former, who having observed what-ever was conformable to reason in his Books, could not have forgot himself so far, as to passe over the effects of this admirable doctrin, in that little Book wherein he hath, with so much prudence, layd up together whatever he had discover d that were secret, and surpassing the Ordinary course of Nature.

It is therefore no hard conjecture, to think that these transcendent Sciences, this rare doctring these admirable disciplines amounted to no more than the practice of our fourth and last kind of Magick, called Naturall. To discover and unmask which we are to remember that man being

ing a Conversative creature, capab'e of discipline, and furnished with all instruments require for ratiocination and his instruction in the truth of allthings, he is able to put them in practice, either for the attaining of an ordinary vulgar knowledge proportionable to that of others, little or not exceeding that of his Equalls, such as have nothing extraordinary or miraculous in it; because (n) inaqualitat tantum est ubit qua eniment see. Ep ist motabilia sunt; non est admirationi una arbor, ubi 33. in eandem altitudinem tota sylva surrexit. Ot haply to raise himself to the highest and most transcendent speculations, to avoid the common road, and take a Noble flight into those azure vaults of the purest part of our soul, to soare up into that terrestiall paradise of the Contemplation of Caules, that so he may at length arrive at that supreme degree of felicity; which onely opens a man the way into those places to much celebrated by Lucretius, Lib. 2.

Edita doctrinà Sapientum templa serena.

This is indeed the true effect of this kind of Magick, which the Persians called, anciently, Wisdom, the Greeks Philosophy, the Jews Cabbala; the Pythagoreans, Science of the formall numbers; and the Platonicks, the Soveraigne.
Remedy, which seats the soul in perfect Tranquitlity, and preserves the body in a good Constitution by the faculty it hath of being able to reconcile the passive effects to the active vertues, and to make these elementary things here below; comply with the actions of the Stars and celessiall Bodies, or rather the Intelligences which guide them by shaterialls, proper and conveni-

3

initized by GOODE

ent for that purpose. We may therefore conclude with the Learned Verulam, that this south kind of Magick Navaralem Philosophiam à veritare speculationum ad magnitudinem operum revocate nintur, it being nothing else then a practical Physick, as Physick is a contemplative Magick; and consequently since what is subalternate to the ope is the same to the other, it will not be hard to disentangle it out of an infinite web of Super-thictons, confine it to that which it only hath and do with, and appoint it its due bounds and limits.

Quos ultra citraq, nequit confistere restum.

De Divif. Şcien.

$ 3

These are no other than what are assign'd to Physick by Wandeling, Combaching, and the subtle Algazal, and confirmed by (p) Avicenna, who stating the parts of Naturall Philosophy attributes to it, first Medicine, then Chymistry, Astrong. my, Physiognomy and Oneiroscopy, to which may be added Chiremancy, Metoposcopy, Elioscopie, and Geomency, that is, the three former to siognomy, and the last, as Albertus Magnus, Vigenera, Dr. Flood; Pompanarius, and Agrippa, All thele would have it, to Astrologie, paris, in regard they have some soundation in naturall causes, may be, as these Authors affirm, treely practited and that without the fulpicion of any other Magick then the Normal such as is allow'd and approved by all, yet provided alwayes, that the professors confine themselves, the most strictly that may be, within the Limits of their Caples, without wandring into a million of endicinious observations, such as hut top the eastly creep into their mindes, who make it their employment.

CHAP. III.

That many Eminent Persons have been accounted Magicians, who were only Politicians.

TEre it lawfull to adde any thing to that excellent confideration upon which the French (a) Seneca built the first Chapter Montaigne, of his Essayes, namely that it is possible by several Montaigne. wayes, and those absolutely different to attain the same end; I know not any example contibutes more to the demonstration of this truth then that of the punishment of lying and fabulous Authors, whose malice may be supprested by a meanes quite contrary to what was anciently practif'd by the Lyci-Heracl.in ans against falle witnesses and informers. For frag.de powhereas the cultome among them was to treat lines. such as slaves and to prostitute them in publick places, we are on the contrary to establish a Law, that all Histories should be like those contracts which the Civilians call Stricti juris, and that the discovery of the first imposture should fairly entitle the whole body of the Book to the fire, or at least hinder the sale and publishing of ir. Had this been as carefully lookt after heretofore as it is necessary to be put in practice now, we should I must consesse, have sewer precepts but more profitable, fewer Books but more fraught with Learning, leffe History but more truth, and consequently we should have something else to do than to trouble ourselves for Apologies

Cossioder. Lib.4.var. Epist.22. Apologies for all those excellent persons, (c) tanquam artis sinistra contagione pollutos. Nay there is such a multitude of writers represent them as such, that the Civilian Heraldus, considering with himself that in these daies they are only pittifull wretches that are drawn into these persicious and unlawfull practises, took occasion to say that the trade was now absolutely fallen into the hands of cheats and the Ignorant, (d) non amplies Philosophorum, sed rusticorum a idoitarum.

5.Zer.judic.

> Having therefore shewn in the first Chapter of this Apologie that the Propagation of all these yulgar errours happened by the want of Judgment in those that read Authors, we are now to proceed further in our defigne; and finde out the generall causes of all these salse reports, which being of the same alloy with the most extrava-gant imaginations of the Poets, crept into repufation under the appearance of some adventure or occasion. Titus Livius seems to shew us a little light in the Discovery of the first cause for which many excellent persons have been charged with Magick, though not any of them had ever the least acquaintance with it, where he tells us, that, datur hac venia Amiquitati, ut miscendo humana divinis primordia urbium augustiora faciar. Whence we may easily conjecture, that the more subtle and practifed Lawgivers knowing that the readiest way to gain Authority, amongst the people and to continue it, was to perswade them that they were only the Instruments of some supreme diety, who was pleased to savour them with its assistance and protection, have not unsuccessesully father'd all upon seigned Dieries, pretended tended Conferences, imaginary Apparitions, and in a word, this Magick of the Ancients, the better to palliate their ambition, and to lay a furer foundation of future Empire. Hence came is, that sometime Trismegistus affirmed the derivation of his Laws from Mercury, Zamelxis from Vesta, Charondas from Saura, Minos from Jupiter, Lycurgue from Apollo, Draco and Solon from Minerva, Numa Pompilius from the Nymph Ageria, and Mahomet from the Angel Gabriel, who often whispered him in the eare under the Shape of a Pidgeon, being as well instructed to surther his design, as Pythagoras's Eagle and Sertorim's Hind were for theirs. Nay the Cheat hath provid no lesse fortunate to some Politicians, who using all the industry and artifices possible to gain the reputation of the indulgence of some Divinity, by the means of this: Theorgie and seigned apparitions, have brought to passe, some adventures difficult beyond imagination. Such were those of the Hermit Schaca- Nouveau culis, who, having acted that part excellently cynée page well for seven or eight years in a desert, at last drew the Curtains, possessed himself of severall Citties, defeated a Bashaw, and Mahomers Son, and had done much more mischief, had he nor incent'd the Sophy by the meanes of one certain Celender, who under precences of devotion shook all Natolia, and sound the Turk work enough, till at last he lost his life in a pitch'd field. To be short, such another was Elinahel an African who took the fame course to wrest the Scepter out of his Master's hands the King of Morocco; to whom we might adde a many others, whose extraordinary fortune gave Cardan occafion

Libr.4. D:c. 1.

De Sapient, fion to advise such Princes and Soveraignes, who by reason of the meannelle of their extraction, Lib. S. want of friends or a military force, have not credit enough to governe their Countries; to apply themselves, to this facred Theurgie. By such meanes did James Buffularina make a shift to rule for some time at Pavia; John de Ving cence, at Banlangue; and Savanorola at Florence of which latter we have this remark of the Police Tib. 1. Dif. Icalian in his discourse upon Livy : The people of Florence ane no faels, yet Brether Hierom Savano 23. role penfinaded them that be had conferences with Gad. But before all theigh had Vespasian done as much by his miracles, and Numache second founder of Rame, qui Romanos operofisimis superstitimibus eneravit, ut rapaces et adbut serça hominos multisudine tot unminum demerendorum atteniros afficiendo, ad bumanitatem temperarot.

Tertul .in Apol. cap. 35.

And indeed this kind of circumvention is all fisch confequence, that those who thought not fix to make use of it this way, as conceiving it too low; and not able to bring about their ambitious ends, have ascended a step higher, affirming shemselves to be the Sons of these supreme Deinies (rather Desills); under pretence of whose same all other Law-givers, and Politicians were glad to keep up their credit and Authorities.

The

Parnassub ingensi matris se protest under a

When charafore we find Hereules calling himself the Son of Jupier, Remotes of Mars. Servins of Valcan.

Vulcan, Alexander of Ammon, and so of others; we must conceive they did it, sither to bring the people under obedience, and to gain that respect among men which they bore their supposed Fathers. Or haply their Mothers being more then ordinarily crafty and polytick hee present nomine culpan; a trick probably play'd by shole of Plate, Apollonius, Luther, and the Prophet Mar, Man. de lin, whole Remand mult needs take is rife from Infulia. the pretty story of his birth, that so nothing. might be omitted that should render his adventures more full of prodigy and altonish-

To this head may also he reduc'd the vanity of those private persons, who no lesse defirous, to have come influence over their fellow-citizens and the ordinary rate of men, than Bringes and Monarch's have over their funiocis, make it their businesse to perswade us that the Gods have an extraordidary tendernelle for their persons by affiguing them fome Guardian-Angell, or Dis regiot in all the most important aftique af their lives, Among these may be ranked Recretes, Apala lonius, Chicus, Cardan, Scaliger, Campanella and some others, who would perswade themselves; that all the proofs and affurances which they should be pleased to afford us of their familiar Demogs should be acknowledged by us, with no lesse veneration than those ancient Commontaries of the Rabbins, which lay it down as Revelin. de undeniable that among the Patriatch of the Old ish. Tellament, Adom had been governid by his And gel Raziel, Sem by Jophiel, Abraham by Tzad-kiell, Mass by Raphael, Jacob by Piel, and Mor. fee by Mittaten. Not indeed do Lies any season.

to passe any other judgment of the one than of the other; and that the best advantage we can make of all these extravagances, is to use them as a Collyrium to help us to discern truth from falshood, reall Magick from fictions and pretences, and politicall and naturall operations from the Diabolicall, which, as such, are condemn'd by all. Such were those practif'd sometime against Moses, by the Magicians of Pharach, called by St. Paul, Jammes, and Mambres; those of Simon Magus who opposed St. Peter; of Cymops, who was drown'd upon the prayer of St. John the Evangelist; of Elymas struck blind by St. Paul; of Zaores and Arphaxat, who, according to the History of Abdias, were destroy'd by thunder in Persia. To these we may adde of latter times Dr. Faustus, Zedechias the Jew, the little Scot, Trois-eschelles, he who under Charles the fifth, would needs be called Magister videns, and a many others of whom we must understand the Decree, thundring in the Code against Magiciuns, Magi, in quacung, sint parte terrarum, hu-mani generis inimici credendi sunt.

Lege.7. Cod.de malef et Mathem.

Liv. 6.

CHAP. IV.

That the extraordinary Learning of many great menbath oftentimes been accounted Magick.

Lyrim Vesinim the Peasant, accus defore the people of Rome for a fort of wizzardry done by him upon the Lands of his neighbours, which though of greater extent, yet yeelded not so great a Crop as his that were lesse, would take no other course.

course to justifie his Innocence, then to bring along with him, on the day of his appearance, all the Instruments of Agriculture, kept in very good order, beseeching his Judges to believe that he had made use of no other polions or unlawfull drugges then those, together with abundance of paines and a many watchings, which, to his sorrow, he knew not how otherwise to represent. In like manner these great persons

____Queis arte benigna Et meliore luto finxit pracordia Tuan,

need no more, to blast this Calumny, which to this day lyes heavy upon them, than to manifest and discover the proceedings whereby they have attained so great Learning and Abilities. Those indeed they were so eminent for, that it seems in some fort to excuse their weaknesse who could referr them to no causes but what were extraordinary, and upon no other account have made it a crime, such as, were it not true what Apuleius laies, that, Calumniari quivis innocens potest, revin-Apolog. To ci nisi nocens non potest, we might say are in a manner entail'd on all persons of more than ordinary desert. Galen, that great Gemus of Medicina, cap. 27. de consesses that at Rome he was thought guilty of it, raisse cufor diverting a fluxion, by Phlobotoimy in leffe then randi per two dayes, which Erafistratus could not effect lang, missign in a long time, because he would not make use onem. of that remedy. Appleins was forc't to the trouble of two Declamations in publick, and to display all his great abilities and Learning to rescue them from the censure of Magick, which his Enemies would fasten on them, wherein they mind needs be midishen, unlesse they took the word according to the explication of St. Histom; Ad cap. 2. where he sayes, Adagi surrand to sugally philosophamic. Postit it be settrained to that series, We shall such acknowledge; that Galon, Apidisas, and the settes whom we make this Apologie, were Magisians, that is, suddens persons, indefacing the Magisians, that is, suddens persons, indefacing the Man, and sickly, quality commanies stam invitates leg. 1. laboris omnem gratiam corpore deterget, habitudinem temans, succum ensorbet, cotorem obliterat, vigorem debiticat,

These indeed are the charms and enchantments, whereby they came to iniderstand the Tri-: vinns and Onadsivians of the leven Liberall Sciences, so much celebrated by the Moderns, and consequency artised to the knowledge of the whole Encyclopedy. This it was that in some fore raifed them to a communication with that Divinity which Homer accibates to the San, because he sees all things. This likewed them to the Granosophilis, who as Philostrams affirms thought memselves the more acceptable to their Gods, -the higher they jumped and lifted themselves up duto the me in their earths and dances. That indeed bred the quarroll, these grees intelligences, raised themselves to fuch a neight of perfection, that the ignorance of the ages they lived in, envying the differee between them and other offen, hach alwayse charged them with implety in their Speculations and Theory, and Marick in their AIn vita Ni-Ctions. As routhe former; Placarch was the first
iid. Auxthors of this excellent observation, where he cels us that Anamageran and those Philosophets, who first found one the causes of Ectiples, communicated municated it to their Disciples in a Cabalistical & Traditionall way very fecretly, not daring to vencure it among the people, whole faith it was, that only temerations and impions perfore longhe our any reason for those entraordinary effects, which depended immediately on the will of the Gode, whoch Liberty they thought incompatible with the indiffueb'd order of those causes, whereof the Philosophers pretended a naturall Demonstration. Hence proceeded the rigorous punishment inflicted on them, either by banishment, as happened to Protagoras, or long imprisonment was a as to Anaxagonas, out of which Perieles had all the trouble in the world to make him go. Nay they would not pardon Socratos, but condemned him upon this very account that his Philosophy had fomething different from those that went before him. These harsh proceedings gave Plate in Epist fuch an alarm, that he ingenuously confessed to Dionyfine, that for that very reason he had not advanc'd any opinion of his, but under the name of Socrates or some other Philosopher, least somesime or other he should be called to account for The same person, consulted by the Atheni-Plat. lib.de ens about the execution of the Oracles answer Damone which had commanded them to double their Socrati Altar, which was of a Cubick figure, took that extreamely advantageous, to per-Twade them to the study of Philosophy especially Mathematicks, without the knowledge whereof it was absolutely impossible to satisfie the Oracle. This might haply feem fabulous to a many who have agreater reverence for Antiquity then to "Imagine it so stupid and Ignorant; but that the -Author from whom we have this restimony is not to be suspected guilty of either mistake or negligitized by gences IC gence. But if we come nearer our own age, we shall find there was not much more reason, some ages fince, to deny as Lastantin did, against Avicenna, that the Torrid Zone was habitable for to dispute against the opinion of the Amipodes, and to fay, by way of raillerie, to those that maintai-Tib.3.de ned it, Et miratur aliquis hortos penfiles inter septem falfa sopi- : mira narrari, cum Philosophi & agros, & maria, & emiasc.23 · urbes, & montes, penfiles faciant?

Nay, to ridiculous and contrary to Religion was this opinion thought in that time, that the Aventiaus, poor Bishop Virgilius was excommunicated, and lib.3. An- condemned for an Heretick, for patronizing that nat. Beier, reverse of this world, long before it was discovered by Columbus. Nor is it a thing lefte strange, that Philasbrius should put into the Catalogue of the herericall and condemned opinions in his time, that of some Philosophers, who held the · Solidity of the Heavens, which yet hath ever been acknowledged, and fill is in the Schools, though within these thirty or fourty years, some Proses-sours have distarded it, to introduce the ancient, which was the more common and authentick in the time of Philastrius.

It is therefore no miracle, when all the propositions of these great wirs, though most solid and rationall, have ever met with contempt, by the Gentiles, out of suspicion of impiery; by the Christians, of here sie, onely because they happen'd in ages distrustfull of those vast and extraordinary acquests of learning, if the greatest part of Phile-· sophers, Mathematicians, and Naturalists have been unjustly charged with Magick: an observation are obliged for, to that great person, whom Laurenius Valla cals the last of the Latines, rines, who among other lamentations directed to Philosophy, forgot not to lay, Arque hoc ipso af- 1. De con-fines fuisse videmur malesicio, quod tuis imbuti disci-sol. Philoplinis. From which passage we may learn, that soph profa that calumny hath been to pinned to the fleeves 4. of all that have professed those Disciplines, that is feems in a manner an essentiall property in them to be accounted Magicians, since it seldom or never happens, that any Lawyers and Divines (unlesse Hereticks) have been charged therewith. Whereas on the contrary, those who are the most intimately acquainted with Philophy, have not been able to ward off this reproach, or divere men from attributing the fruits of their industry to their proficiencie in the Academy of Devils, where they yet profited more than in any of the other Sciences, if we may trult those who would furnish us with more Magicians, quam olim muf-Plant.in carum est, tum cum caletur maxime.

Initio Diale &.

But to facilitate the discovery in this point, all our businesse is to observe the first appearances of Learning, the first risings of great Wits, the time they flourished, the ages which have brought forth most, and take notice by the way, how that ignorance hath alwayes persecuted them with this calumny. It will tell us, if we will hearken to it, that Zoroastes and Zamolxis never did any thing, but fool away their time in Sacrifices, that Pythagoras, Democritus, Empedocles, Socrates and Aristotle had never known any thing, had they not applyed themselves to the Damons; that April leius was but a Wizard; that Geber, Alchindus, Avicenna, and all the most excellently learned among the Arabians, were Profesiours of Magick; that Rover Bucon . Ripley, Bongey, Sooms, WELE

Google , was a

The Hillory of MAGICE.

34

Were so many cunning men among the English. excellently well veri'd in Necromancie, and very able Conjurers: that Chicus, the Conciliator, Anselm of Parma, and divers other Italians, were very well acquainted with the bufinesse of Invocations; that Arnoldus de Villa nova, and William of Paris, were also very fortunat therein, in France. In a word, all Countreys that had any men famous for learning were sure to have also Magicians, whereof, for want of the former, Germany had alwayes been barren enough, Albertus Magnus excepted, till that, furbish'd & refin'd by letters, it brought forth Trithemius & Agrippa, as the Ring-leaders of all the fore-mentioned. To thefeif we beleeve Bodin, we must add Hermolaus & Cardan; if de Lancre, Scaliger & Picus; if some others yet more superstitious, all the most eminent persons, as if there had been no other schools than the Caves of Toledo, no other books than the Clavicula, no other Doctors than Devils, no other waves for a man to become learned, but by the practice of all those Magicall Superstitions; or lastly, that the reward of a great industry, and the fruits of excellent endowments, were only to enable a man to cast himself into the clays of that enemy of mankind, who'e acquaintance is but too too easily procur'd, it being his businesse, to go about like a roaring Lion, seeking whom he may devour.

Having therefore well considered whence it comes to passe, that many have made such disadvantagious glosses on the learning of these great persons; I am, in the first place, perswaded it might proceed from a reason common to all the erroneous perswasions which insensibly thrust in among us, as the learned Vernlam hath observed, Is humano intellettui error est proprius & per-lib. 3. in. petuns, ne magis moveatur & excitetur assirmativis saur. mag. quam meativis. In the second, that haply it might come from this, that these Philosophers soaring up into contemplations too high and remote from ordinary apprehensions; those, who, in comparison of them, onely crept upon the ground, were obliged to admire them, and, in time, to reproach, as over-confident and supernaturall, whether this change proceeded from the weaknesse of their judgement, or a designe to calumniate them, as Seneca observes, quam magnus mirantium, tam De vita magnus invidentium est populus. Or lastly from beata. this, that whatever the most subtle and ingenious among men can perform, by the imitation or affistance of Nature, is ordinarily comprehended under the name of Magick, untill such time as it be discovered by what wayes and means they effest those extraordinary operations. Of this we have an example in the invention of Guns and Printing, and the discovery of the new world; the people wherof, thought at first sight, that our ships were made by Magick, our vaults & arches by enchantment, and that the Spanyards were the Devils that should destroy them, with the thunder and lightening of their Arquebuzzes and Guns.

From what hath been said may be inserted, that all these great persons have incurred the censure of Magicians, for having performed many strange things by the assistance of Physick and other Sciences they were Masters of, and in the prastice whereof all good Authours are wont to comprehend Magick. The reason of this, is, that they are not so easie to be prostituted to the knowledge of the Vulgar as the Methanicks are, which cannot formuch command admiration, because, being exercil'd about manifest and palpable Bodies, it is a manner impossible that the Authors thereof, should keep up the secret of their several? causes and operations, And this leads us to a necessary of acknowledging that the practice of the Mathematicks, and above all, of these Mechanicks, and judiciary Astrology, hath contributed much to the confirmation of all these erroneous opinions, as we shall show more at large elsewhere.

D 2

the

GHAP. V.

That Mathematicians have many times been accounted Magicsans.

Mong all the Precepts which contribute A any thing to the regulation and conduct of our Actions, me thinks there is not any more ferious or of greater confequence then that. which minds us, that, Venena non dantur nisi melle circumlita, & vitia non decipiunt nisi sub specie Virtuium. Of this we have daily experience, in. thatas Coyners of false mony employ all their industry so to dispose some little Gold or Silver upon bad pieces that they may passe for good and current; so the greatest part of those who by, reason of the lightness and vanity of their Doctrine, fall into the generall contempt, are forc'd to change Scenes, to disguise, and if they are Hereticks, for example, to take the title of Divines ; is Impostors, of Chymists, if Mounte-banks, of. Doctors Doctors; if Sophillers, of Philosophers; if Conjurers, of Well-wishers to the Mathematicks. This makes fad and strange confusion in all things, respecially the Sciences, that, if it be not abloflutely impossible, it is certainly very difficult to beable to discern the Legitimate professors from the Ignorant and presumptuous profaners of them; who, having scattered into them abundance of chears & superstitions, have made them so suspectfull, that even those who have courted them with greated religion could never do it with the generall approbation and allowance of all. This certainly is one principal reason whereby the most criticall and accomplish'd Wits, have given their Enemies occasion to defame them as Magicians, because they had made greater discoveries into -tho'e four parts of the Mathematicks, which are called by [e] Cassiodorus, Quadrifaria Mathesis e Eph.45.1. Janua; by Sarisberiensis, Quadrivii rota; and by Metal.c. Calcagnin, Quadriga disciplinarum, that is, Arl-24, thmetick Geometry, Musick, and Astrology. These in Encomindeed are such, that, by reason of the subtle Art.liberal. operations are wrought by them, the Jesuit Percent took occasion to divide Naturall Magick 1.6ap. 9. into two kinds. One hath an absolute dependance on Physick and its parts, working, by the meanes both of the occult and known qualities 'of all things, many times, very (trange and miraculous effects, such as might be the Golden henne of Sennertus, the Magneticall unquent of Goelinus, the Lamp and invulnerable Knight of Burgravius, the Ideall pouder of Querceranus, the Fulminant Gold of Beguinus, the Vegetall Tree of the Chymifts, and many fuch naturalt miracles which these Authours affirme they have seen and experienc'd

D 2

experienc'd. The other giuded by Mathematicall precepts, makes certain artificiall Engines by meanes whereof we come afterwards to admire Epift. As. that Sphere of Archimedes, parvam machinam, lib.1.var. gravidam mundo, Calum gestabile, compendium rerum, Speculum natura. To that adde those Antomata of Dadalus, those Tripods of Vulcan, the Du Bartas. Hydraulicks of Bostims the Pidgeon of Architas, 1. wiek. 6, that industrious Iron-fly presented to the Emperous Charles the V.by John de Mont royal, which

—from under's hand flew out
And having flown a perfett Round about,
With weary wings return'd unto her Master,
And (as judicious) on his Arm she plac'd her.

Besides which, there are many other producti, ons of man's wir, working, it as it were in spight of nature, which have so dazzled weaker minds, that it is indeed no wonder, it, not able to discover the reasons, which were purposely kept from them, they have attributed all thole infiruments and engines, rather to Diabolicall operations then humane industry, and have through ignorance, bespatter'd the greatest Mathematicians with the infamy of Magick. An instance of this we have in that Archimedes of Gasceny, Francis Fluffad of Candale, who was not able to ward off the blowes of that Calumny. adde John Denys an excellent Mathematician of our time, who printed an Apology for himself in the year 1570. and pleaded his own cause at London. And to him, Pope Silvester, Bacon, Michael Scotus, Albertus Magnus, and all the rest who now put in their Bills of Com-Erultus plaint,

Fructus obest, peperisse pocet, nocet esse feracem. Ovid de

Wherein there is certainly much justice, their only crime being, that their Sciences, their instruments, their brazen heads, their Clocks, and all their other subtle Inventions, have so assonished the populace, that instead of referring these singular effects to their true cause and the experience of the Mechanicks,, the Operator whereof, is, if I may so expresse it, penè socius nature, occulta cassiod l'x reserans, manifesta convertens, miraculis lucens, var. Ep. 44 it hath attributed all to Diabolicall Magick. This they think was very much more in reputation five or fix hundred years fince than it is now, and that was publickly taught in certain Schools in Spain, whereof the ruines are yet to be seen in the Cellars near Toledo and Salamanca. But this rather begs our belief then requires it, in as much as the Authors from whom we have these things, being no more Authentick Testimony, then what we might produce to affirm as much of the Castle of Vicestre. But indeed, it is a certain piety not to think that Citty ever was the Seminary of so many Magicians, which God honour'd with a prerogative above all other, that the doctrine and policy of his Church was confir n'd and maintain'd therein by the assentblies of 17. Councells; besides that those who make Sylvester a Magician acknowledge that he learn'd, what he knew that way, at Toledo.

But when it shall be hereafter evinc'd that Sylvester was no such man, but the greatest and most excellent Mathematican of his Age, it will be but rationall to grant, that, by the Magick

D÷

taught

taught at Toledo is only meant the Mathematicks, which had gain'd such reputation there, and were to perfectly taught, that a certain English man called Daviel Morlerus (who flourish'd in the year 1190, and writt excellently well therein) after a long aboad in Barbarie to learn them, was at last advised to transport himself to Toledo, as the most famous place for their profession in the World. Such, it feems, it was then, and continu'd lo, long after, even to Alphonfus King of Castile in the year 1262. who became such a Mecznas and Patron of these disciplines that he gave, by way of recompence, to certain Arabians whose assistance and industry he had made use of in composing his Astronomicall Tables, above 400000 Crownes: so infinitely desirous was he of being accounted the common Benefactor of all the Mathematicians of his time, that there needs no further security for it, then that infinite number of Treatiles and Translations upon this subject, which had never been done but by the influence of his name, and the example of his Libe-Lult. c. ult. rality. That indeed brought these Disciplines adv. Astro= much into request, especially judiciary Attrology, as Mirandula observes, that it is not to be wondered at that the place where it was so diligently practifed, should be taken for the Schoole of Magick. If fostho'e certainly, who glory'd in the imitation of Metam. the Astrologer Diophanes, who boasted in Apuleius lib. 2. that he certainly knew qui dies copulam nuptialem affirmet, qui fundamenta monium perpetuet, qui negotiatori commade, qui viatori celebris, qui na-vigiis opportunus, must needs expect to be brandlib de Ido- ed for Magicians, nor much differing from the lolat. opinion of Tertullian, who sometimes said, Scimus Magia & Aftrologia inter se societatem. It is also the opinion of the Civilians, who under the same head, treat De Malesicis et Mathematicis, upon occasion of Divinations and this Astrologie, which hath been condemn'd under the name of Mathematicks, because Justinian desirous to make his Constitutions clear and intelligible, made use of the most usuall and Vulgar words: Vulgus autem, saies Gellius, quos genti-the sissos dicit. We have it confirmed also by a passing in Juvenal,

Nota Mathematicis genefis twa

Set. LA

which, as that of Gelline, is not to be understood of Arithemetick, Geometry, Musick, and Astronomy, which are particularly signified by the name of Mathematicks, and generally approved by all, but only of Judiciary Astrology, which is, with much reason, condemn'd by the Church, not as suspected guilty of any thing of Magick, but as a Profession, was stellisted quage-Origen, runtur interra consecrat, makes us slaves to the bom.3. destinies, and is absolutely in consistent with all Hierom. kinds of Religion.

ICHAP#

CHAP. VI.

That the Books attributed to divers great persons, are not a sufficient testimony to make them guilty of Magick.

Sooph. Fereas, in Promeshees

7E find in History, that that potent King of Egypt, Prolemans Philadelphus, having spar'd no industry to adde to and adorn the proud Library he had erected in Alexandria, appointed, for its further splendour, a certain solemn day, on which all the Poets assembled together, recited verses in honour of the Muses, that the most able and fortunate might be gratified with the presents he had designed for them. These guerdons were already voted to divers of the Candidates, when Aristophanes, who was the sewenth of the Judges, opposed the sentence of the rest, and opening the treasury of his memory, amaz'd all with the greatnesse of his reading and his miraculous learning, and discover'd that the pieces they thought so excellent and accomplished, were not theirs who had recited them, but had been taken out of the best Authours, whom he particulariz'd one after another, making such an Inventory of Felonies, that the King, People, and Judges revok'd the former sentence, for to sayour some others, who had not brought any thing, but what was of their own invention. For my part, I am clearly of opinion, that there was not more occasion, for that Aristophanes in the time of Prolemy, than there is in this, and that he should find much more occasion to discover his prodigious prodigious reading, not onely in the centure and condemnation of Plagiaries, but also in the vindications of thelegreat persons. For in stead of receiving those elogies and honorary ritles, sometimes given them by Richard de Bury, Chancellot of England, the greatest Lover of Books that hath been since the time of Ptolomy Philadelphus, who, to infinuate the advantage of good books, tels us, Hi sunt Magistri qui nos instruunt sine virgis & cap. 2. Phiferula, fine verbis & cholera, fine pannis & pecuma : lobibii. fi accedis non dormiunt, fi inquiris non se absocudunt, non remurmurant si oberres, cachinnos nesciune fignores; in stead of these Elogies, I say, they have father'd upon them a number of permicious and pestilent books, for which, in stead of these commendations, they meet with onely the contempt and imprecations of those, who cannot distinguish these supposititious brats from their true and legitimate children.

This hath given some occasion to imagine, that many great men have not been charg'd with Magick, but meerly upon this fourth cause, and the books unjustly father'd upon them, such as are those of Trithemine's Catalogue, and many other Manuscripts, qui eò periculosim errant, quo in selide Sariber. tate nature & vigore rationie suum fundare videmur Polyerat. errorem. For an Antidote against the venom of 4.1.6.18, this fourth kind, according to our method in the precedent, we are to shew that there is no probability, that all these books improbata lectionis, as Vuliant the Civilians call them, were ever written or composed by those, under whose names and anthority they are publish'd, which yet if we should grant, yet can there not any certain proof be deduced out of them, to conclude the Authours

Magicians. Digitized by Google

Magicians. For, in the first place, we have no o--ther knowledge or account of these books, than what we find in certain Catalogues, who furnith -us with their titles in such a manner, that we cannot judge, andelle by fome other circumstances. what the Authours drift and defigne was in the composition of them, whether to illustrate or confute, plead for or agains, mantain or condemn the subject they treat of, and busic themselves about. Whence it came to paffe, that many finding by these Catalogues, that Alexander Aphrodifam had written of Magicall Arts, Aquinas of judiciary Aftrologie, and Roger Bacon of Necromancie, have presently entered into imaginations contrary to what they should, beleeving that they contain'd nothing elfe, but the precepts and direction we are to follow, to be perfect in the practice of all those Divinations, and consequently, that there was much reason, why the Authors Thould be accounted Magicians.

But this consequence is vain, light, and ground-lesse; for besides the first errour, we may observe a second, which, because not so obvious, hath deluded a many, even to this day, who held that there needed no more to qualific any one, an Enchanter or Magician, than to write of Magick: which once granted, we must also infer, that all those who undertake to write against, and to convince them, should be bemir'd with the same vice, and accordingly incur the same punishment. For it must be supposed, that they cannot discover the absurdity of their precepts and maximes, unlesse they understand and declare them to us, which if they do they become equally guilty, because the good of bad intention of the one and the other, doth not make any decration in the tale, relating onely to the nature of Precepts. which should have no more forget taken our of licatrix than Defrio, if he hath once expland, : 1.em, nor of the prohibited Authours, than thois worchute them. Nay, we must presse furthery and affirm, that all those who are able to discourse perfinently of Magick, ought to be condemn'd as Magicians, were there no other reason than that it is in their power, as much as theirs who did it before, to furnish us with books and precepts, which if they do not, it is either because they think it not convenient, or out of some other motive, without any prejudice to their learning. "Ve find Socrates, Carneades, and divers others accounted good Philosophers, though they would never take the pains to commit anything to wring; Hortensius, thought, in Cicero's time, the buit Oracour in all Rome, who, probably, out of an imitation of a many others highly celebrated, by Seneca and Cicero, would never publish any of his Declamations. Adde to this, that it were a ffrange simplicity to think, that only such as have been in the Circles are practited in Invocations, and have exercised Magick, can write or make books of it, whereas every one is at liberty to difcourse according to his humous, of a thing wherein there is neither procepts, order, not method, and where all a man hath to do risto mingle the characters of the twelve Signes and the seven Planets, the names of certain Angels mentioned in Scripture, the Tobu and the Babu, the Urim and Thummins, the Berefith and Merchava, the Enfoph and the Agla of the Cabalists, with this Hippomanes, Virgin parchmens, Pensaele, the dead mans mans muffler, the Deaths head, the blood of Owls and . Bars, and certain prayers and conjurations out of the Flagellum Demonum, to make a world of my-Regions Books and Treatifes. These must afterwards be fold very fecreely, and for good round prices, by such as can make no other shift to stave off their clamorous necessities, than by making a trade of these cheats and impollures, to the cost and forrow of many weak, superflicious, and melancholy inclinations, who think they are within fight of Felicity, and can do miracles, when they meet with their Cheats and Mountebanks.

— Tam magna penuria mêntis ubique! In nugas tam prona via est!

- Lastly, there is no likelihood that these books, which are onely for the most part, the fruits of a long Theory and Speculation, should be sufficient proofs to convince the Authours of Magick, which confils rather in certain practices and operations, than in the laying down of precepts; he Difquis. de onely, according to Biermannue, deserving the name of a Magician, who contracts with the Devil to make the of him in what he shall think fit to employ him in. This definition indeed cannot polfibly agree to all those, for whom we make this Apologie, if there be no other charge against them, than that of the Books they have written on this Subject, fince it is possible they made them withour any contract expressed or understood, simple or publike; as we have shewn before. Nay, to take away all controverse, it is a pure calumny malicioully advanced, an opinion absolutely errone-ous and rash, to think to maintain or prove, that any one of them ever made or troubled himself with the composure of any Book treating of Geotick or unlawfull Magick, or of any Species or difference thereof. And this, in the first place may be confirmed by the Testimony of him who is accounted the Prince and Ring-leader of the De Pade?

46

Magicians, who very well understood the chears Scient.
and suprises of all these Books vamped and never sep. 45. fet up with false Titles, and father'd upon Zoroastes, Enoch, Trismegistus, Abraham, Solomon, Apuleius, Aquinas, Albertus magnus, and severall other great persons. To this adde the Suffrage of De prest.
Visierus and all those who have written with most Lib. 2. judgment upon this subject, grounded, probably cap. 5. upon the same reason that made Picus Mirandula. give the like Judgment of some such Books of ... adv. Judiciary Astrology, which, as he faics, are falfify'd Aftrolog, by certain impoltors, who, queniam, que produncur ab iis, rationibus confirmari non possunt, sive ips illa vera credunt, sive credi volunt ab aliis, libros hujusmodi fabularum, viris clarissimis et antiquissimis inscribunt, et fidem errori sue de fictis Amboribus aucupantur.

The same remarks we may make on all the other kinds of Quacksalving, especially that of Alchymists, who think they have not done their duty and cheated as they should, if after they have made a shift to find the explication of all their Chimera's in Genesis, the Apocalypse, the Hieroglyphicks, the Odyssey, the Metamorphises, nay even in Epitaphs, Sepulchres, and Tombes, they should not send their Books into the world under the names of Mary Mose's Sister, Trismegistus, Democritus, Aristotle, Synesius, Avicenna, Albertus magnus, and Aquinas. As if all these Learned

Learned men and great Authors had had no other employment all their lives then blowing & Rirring of fires, or making of Circles, Characters and Invocations; and that the barbarisme, the extravagances, the childishnesse, want of order, the ...lownelle, errour, and Ignorance of all these Books were not sufficient arguments to rescue from so black's calumny, such transcendent Soules, and Intelligences of Litterature.

Omnes ecclicolas, omnes supera alta tenentes.

And not only that, but with the same labour dis-.> ... cover unto us the muddy, and pestilent source, the Styx and Tartarus, whence proceed all these little Monsters, these Apparitions, these Bastards, these abortive fruits, which indeed is no other then the temerity of some poor reptile Spirits, tie. de diqui sui quastus causa sistas suscipant sententias: fathering them upon the first comes into their mind never minding any reason, choise consideration or respect. Hence it comes that Chicus affirmes he had seen a Book written by Cham cap. 17 lib. concerning Magick, and another made by Solo-3. Polycrat. mon, de umbris Idearum; that John of Salisbury makes mention of an Art of Dreams vented under thename of Daniel; that the two Picur's aknowledge not for legicimate the treatiles of Necromancy attributed to Saint Hierome, Aquinas, and tib. S.cap. 6. Places and that the Abbot Trithemius, not without Anip.l. 1. reason, laughts at all that is father'd upon Bertus Magnus and divers others.

vin. l.1.

ment in Spheram.

dever. Afreleg.

āb, I

For what reason or ground is there to believe that Hippograces was Author of the Book of Luwar Astrologie; Plate of that of the herbes and the Con,

Com, Artstorte of those of the Apple of Vegetables of the properties of Elements and the Secrets of Alexander, Galen of that of Enchamments; Ovid, of that of the Old Woman, and the Loves of Pamphilus; Seneca, of the little Book of Vertues and the Epistles of St. Paul; and that all the belt Authors ipent their time so trivially upon trising Books of no Value or consequence; whereof we have so tittle assurance of the true Authors, that we are not certain to whom we ought to attribute a many we afford places to in our Libraryes. For, to pisse by the works of Orphens, Trismegistus, Berofus, and Munethon, all which are ablolutely feigned, some Apocryphall peeces of holy writ; doubtful Treatifes of Hippocrates, Galen, those question'd by Erasmin at the impression of the Fathers, the Pamplets of Gerson, Fenestella, Pythagorai, and Cato, and all that lye under suspicion among Humanists; is it not irrange that Francis Picus, successor to the Lib 4. Ex-Learning as well as Principality of his Uncle the min. value great Picus, the Phænix of his Age, should take næ gent. fo much prine to prove, that it is altogether uncertain whether Aristotle be Author of any one Book of all those that are found in the Catalogue 1.74. c. 6. of his Works? And yet he is therein seconded De retta by Nizolius, and the bufinesse fo strictly discuss drat. Philoby Patricius, that, after he had discovered a soph. miraculous industry in the scrutiny of the truth Discuss. of that proposition, he concludes at last, that, Peripat. of all the Books of that great Genius of nature, Tom. 1, 1, 3. there are but four, of little bulk and lesse consequence, come to us, as his, without the least doi bt or controversy, that is, That of he Mechanick and three others he writ against Zeno Goreias and Xenophanes

Xenophanes. On the other side Ammoniae, in his Commentaries upon the Pradicaments, affirms, that there were in the Library of Alexandria forty Books of Analyticks, all under the name of Aristotle; though he had made but four, whereof the two first are answerable to the nine cited by Diogenes Laertins. But this, if we credit Galen,

Comment. in lib. Hipp. de

Discuss.

peripat.

is to be attributed to the emulation that was between the Kings of Pergamma and Agypt in renat. bumawarding those who brought them the Books of any good Author, especially Aristole; for the greater ornament of their Libraries; it having never happened before, that the Titles of Ancient Books had been fallifyed. But in this point we shold have been more large had not Patricius taken the paines before us; or that it had been necessary Tom. 1, 1, 3. co demonstrate how unjust it is, and befide all appearance of reason, that some, under their names, whose prodigious Learning rail'd them to greatest reputation, have pester'd the world with an infinite number of impertinent fragments, disorder'd collections, fabulous Treatiles, truitlesse writings; and Books shuffell'd together without reason, method, or judgment.

Non siani esse bominis non sanus jures Orestes.

CHAP.

The History of MAGICK.

CHAP. VII.

Of all the other Causes which may give any occasion of suspicion thereof.

Mough the number of those who have endea-L voured to discover & explain to us the nature & condition of Magick within these two hundred years is almost infinite yet me thinks the first that underrook it have done it with no small distraction, as not feeing well; and the greatest part of the more Modern have endeavoured to faciliate the disquisition by the use of those Glasses which make Ants seeme as great as a man's thumbe, so to represent to us in their Books, atomes like Mountaines and flyes like Elephants, that is, magnifie the smallest faults into the greatest crimes, by a childish meramorphosis of the least jealousy into truth, of a hearlay into a demonstration, and accidents of no consequence into prodigious and memorable Histories. Whence it is not to be wonder'd at, that as the higher & greater things are, the more subject they are to Lightning; so the greatest part of those Noble Souls of past ages, those tutelary Gods of Parnassus and favourites of the Muses have not been free from that of Tongues. For being the principall Actors upon the Stage of this world, and as much above the ordinary rate of men, as they are above other Creatures; their leasts, faults and most in considerable misapprehensions have been more narrowly pry'd into, whether it be that the least mark or mole is more obvious in an extraordinary Beau-E 3 ξý

The History of MAGICK.

ty than on some poor Bancis or Cybale, or that, according to the saying of the sententious Poet.

Omne animi vitium tanto conspectius in se Crimen habet, quanto major qui pecat habetur.

However it be, we may adde this cause to the precedent, as one of the principall that hath raused learned men to be thought Magicians, and upon account whereof the curiofity of Albertus magnus, the natural Magick of Bacon, the judiciary Aftrology of Chiens, the Mathemalicks of Sylvester, and hereig of Alchindus, and xertaine superstitious obervations, have been repured Georick and disbolicall Magick. But it must be consessed, it is for the most part the ma-Javolent interpretation of those who judge not of things, but with misprision; of Authors, but by their outlide and superscriptions; of Books, but by their titles; nor of men, but by their vices; divu ging what they ought in prudence to conceale, and priding it, not only to lay open to the world the milcarriages of all these great perions, but magnifying and aggravating them purpolely to repossesse, and consequently make us passe sentence against their innocence, which certainly ought to have all the faire play that may be, it heing just to suppose it not so weak and wounded as it is represented to us. Bendes, should we a little more parrowly learch into the truth of this opinion que malasattellis et exage gerat, & cothurnis quibusdam anget, we shall find all these proofs resolv'd into conjectures, and all these enormous crimes into-gertain vaine and triviall superdictions. Not is it in the mean, time time any miracle at all, that these glorious men in their times stould somewhat degenerate that way, nay endeavour to practite them, when it is of ordinary experience, that what is most accomplished, is also most delicate and perishable. Thus we find that the sharpest points are the soonest blunted, the perfect it white the most easily soyl'd, the best complexion the most subject to several altrations, & we have it from holy Writt, this the noblest of the Angels was the first that fell.

L[:]pf. de confia.

-52

Having therefore thus deduced all the causes we could find of this suspicion as to what concernes the accused, we shall in the rest of this Chapter observe sive others, which we may say, have contributed more to the propagation of this erroneous opinion, then the former. These are selected, Malice, Ignorance, Credulity, and the Discircumspection, and want of judgment and Authors and writers.

For the first, it amounts to something more there a conjecture that Alchindus, Peter d' Apono? Arnoldus de Villanova Riply, and some others who with some reason trave been suspected guilty of Heresy, may without any be charged with Mazzgick, though Tertullian sometimes said, Notati De prascrip, sunt etiam commercia Harcicorum cum Magistap. 43. plurimis, cum Circulatoribus, cum Astrologis, De anima, cum Philosophis. Which censure be consistent cap. 57. elsewhere, calling Magick, harcicarum opinionum austricem. Hence haply some Catholick Doctors, Disquistre especially Delrio and Maldonat, took occasion to log. lay it down as a Maxime, strengthened by constant experience, that either the Authors and first lib. de Dapromoters of Heresies, have been themselves mon.

Εī

MANUE C

Hermogenes, or that prohibited and Magical Arts have alwayes come in the neck of some herefy. This they exemplify out of some Historians of Spaine who relate, that after the Arrians had long continued therein, the Devils were for a good space of time seen commenting men there. So was the herefy of Hus seconded by a great tempest of Spaine and Demons through Bohemia and Germany, and that of the Lollards through the Apennine Hills. Of this the Jesuit Maldonas gives five principall reasons, which we shall not presse in this place.

In the lecond cause of suspicion, we may observe, that Malice sometime, made Apulains be accused of Magick by his wise's triends; the Popes Sylvester and Gregory by the Emperous they had excommunicated, and some Heretiques their implacable enemyes. To which may haply be addred the procedure of the English against the Mayd of Oriennee, who accordingly condemn'd her for a Witch, whereas de Langey and de Haillan make her act another quite contrary part. But if the common opinion of those who were best acquainted with her may prevaile, there is little probability she should have been a Witch, which is the conclusion Valgrandus Varanius puts to the History ry he made of her.

Tandem collatis patres ultrog, citrog, Articulis, flammas sub iniquo judice passam Darcida, concordi decernuntore: modum g, Angligenas violasse fori, juris g, tenorem.

But Learning, formerly alledg'd by us as one of

of the principa's causes of this salse accusation, obliges us now to say something of Ignerance, its adverse party, and shew, how prodeminant it was, as well among the Greeks before Socrates, who may be called the Patriarch of Philosophy, as the Latines, from the times of Bosins, Symmachus and Caffiodorus, till the latt taking of Conftantineple. Then indeed the world began to put on another face, the Heavens to move upon new Hypotheles, the Aire to be better known as to Meteors, the Sea to be more open and easie, the Earth to acknowledge a Sister Hemisphere, men to enter into greater correspondences by Navigation, Arts to be delivered of those miraculous inventions of Guns and Printing. Then were the Sciences reftor'd to their former luftre, in Germamy by Renchlin and Agricola, in Switzerland by Erasmus, in England by Linacer and Ascham, in Spain by Vives, and Nebrissenses, in France by Faber and Budans, in Isaly by Hermelans, Politianus, Picus, and the Greeks who fled thither for refuge from Constaminople; and lastly in all other parts of the earth, by the meanes of new Characters and Printing. We formerly observed out of Placarch that, before the revolution happening in Socrates's time, it was not lawfull in Greece to advance any thing of Astrology, to. study the Mathematicks, or professe Philosophy. Thence we are now to consider what capacity may be allow'd those, who, suffering the best Authors to moulder away in Libraries, made use of no other Grammarians, then Gracismus Barbarismus and Alexander de Villa dei; no other Rhetoricians then Aquilegius; no other Philosophers, then Gingolfus Rapoleus, Farrabric, and Petrus Hispanus; no other Hillerians, than the Fasciculus Temporum and the Mother, of Histories, nor other Books in Machematicks than the Compat Manuel, and the Stepheard's Kelender What could the Grammarians expect from their but Barbarisms like that of the Priest, whom the Master of Sentences mentions baptizing of infants, In nomine Patriag Filia, & Spiritua Santta? What could Philosophers find there, but luppolitions, ampliations, religions, tophilms, obligations, and a Labyrinth of fruitlesse niceties comprehended under the title of Parais Logicalian So allo, for those that read Histories, what enteresinment had they but that of fidiculous tales upon Merlin's prophecy, Sr. Patricks Purgatory Pilate's Tower 37 Ammon's Gastle .- Pore Joan, and abundance of such fabu-Jone traff and tramperly as now,

Viz puece credunt nisi qui nondum ave lavantur.

dant of ignorance, as a shadow is of the body, or envie of vertue.

And now we have but a step to the sourch cause of inspicion which taltens on these great persons, that is, from Ignorance to that of Credulity, which guilly admits abundance of such things, as though improbable and superstitious, ordinarily fall and follow one in the neck of another. To make this more evident and apprehenfible, we sould begin with what we find related in a liede Treatife, which St. Agobart Bishop of Lyons made in the year of Christ 833, against she extravagance of the people then, who beleeved that those could troublethe air, and raife tempells, who, for thet reason, in the first chapter of the Capitularies of Charlemaigne, and Louis the Debonaire, are called, Tempestarii, sive immissores Tempestarum. Is was, ir feeins, the common, and, by a mapy, thiffely maintain'd opinion, that there were in his time certain Conjurers, that had the power to make it hail and thunder, or to raile tempells, as often and when they pleased, so to spoil and deliroy the fruits of the earth; which so deltroy'd, they afterwards fold to certain Inhabitants of the Countrey of Magodia, who everynyear brought ships thorow the air, to carry away those provisions. This was grown into such a vulgan article of faith, that the good Bishop had much ado one days to deliver three men and a woman out of the clutches of the diffracted multisude, who were dragging them to execution, as having fallen out of those thips. The same Authour relates further in the same book, that there being a generall mortality Life of among Carde, e pecially Oxen, (whereof there Charles died luch a number overall Europe, that Bellefor maigne, rest thought sit to take notice of it in his Additions upon Nicholas Gilles) the more superstitions fort of people presently imagin'd, that one Grimoald, Duke of Benevent, and a great enemy of Charlemaigne, had sent a many men with venomous powders, which they should scatter up and down the sens, fields, and into springs: Infomuch, that this holy and judicious person, seeing abundance of innocent people daily hanged, drown'd, and extreamly persecuted for this simple sable, ends his bookfull of indignation, with this excellent sentence; Tanta jam stutitia oppressive miserum mundans, no nunc sic absurde res credantur à Christianis, quales minquam amen ad credendum poterat quisquam saadere Paganis.

Their and the like Fables were but the Prologue to Romancos, which came upon the stage immediately after, in the reigne of Lewis the Debonaire (in whose time the Bishop was fill alive) and multiply'd fo strangely by the ignorance of that age, easily, it seems, lay'd asseep by any ab-surdicies, though ever so extravagant, that all those, who meddled with the hittory of that time, would needs, to render it more pleasant, interweave it with abundance of such relations. This is very percinently observed by a certain Divine, who ingenuously confesses, that, Hes erat antiquerum plurium vitium, vel petius quedam sme judicio simplicitat, ut in clarerum virerum gestis scribendis se minus existimatent elegantes, niss ad or-natum (ut putabant) sermonis, poetic as siltiones, vel aliquid earum simile admisserent, & consequenter vera falsis committerem. Nay, such reputation did these books gain, that in the year 1290, James de Veragine, Bishop of Gennes, Home (as Vives, Pitheus in Galfredo Mon, and Malchier Canns call him) ferroi oris, plambei fordis, animi certe parum severi & prudentis, yet whole intention was certainly good, thought fit to introduce that style into the Ecclesiastical History, and so writ a Golden Legend, whereby many devout and pious souls were edified, till the late Hereticks began to metamorphose it in a soveraigne Pantagruelisme, purposely to affront the Catholicks, and undermine the soundations of the reverence they pay those holy, but pernicious Relicks.

To the vanity of these Romances we are further obliged for all the false relations which were foon after scattered among the people, of the miraculous stratagems of Sylvefter, Gregory . Michael Scotme, Roger Bacon, Peter & Apone, Thebit, and in a manner, all the most learned of that times These proved excellent entertainments, till the year 1425, when an infinity of other superstitions began to swarm, giving (as it were) a cessation to the precedent. And these we have thought sit to particularize, to shew it is no miracle, if the great knowledge of a many of that time occasioned millions of ridiculous stories and fictions; when the zeal and good life of the greatest Saints, & the conduct & courage of the greatest Captains and Commanders have met with the same sme. Nor does it amount to much, that same of their books have been condemn'd as conjuring books, when a many others, whereof the very reading fufficiently clears their innocence, have met with as little favour. We may infrance in the three propositions made by the famous Chancellour of the University of Paris, Gerson upon the Romance of the Rose, and the judgement of John Raulin, a famous gle

famous Doctor of the same University upon that of Oger the Dane, wherein they affirm the Authours as certainly dumn'd as ever Judas was, if they died without repentance, for the making and venting of such pieces.

5. Lastly, though it be alwayes more rationall and commendable, so to interpret, as to give the best fense to every mans writings, than to impeach them, and to excule than to aggravate, to avoid a comparison: wielethole, who worship not the ri-sing Sun, but with affronts and imprecations; yet can we not, but make this Chapter full weight with the explication of the tall cause of the whole calumny, which, to do Truthwight, is nothing 'elfe, but the negligence of Authours, or rather their want of circum pection and judgement in the composition of their works. For whether shey have an inclis to fively them with leffe troublo, or provein some degree what they had once undertaken, comakenstentation of their reading, or that those found the best entertainment and zeception, who were fullest of flrange and miraculous adventures; or lastly, were to forrish, as to beleeve all things, they have so outvied one another in the allegations of these fabulous nopies, that the impertinences of old Romances, the forderies of all know not what books, the tales of

In Philo-Pseude.

Metalog. l.z. c, 7. these Authours taken for irrefragible Demonstrations, as being a fort of Writers, Qui compilant amnum opiniones, then, que estam divissimis dilia, & scripta successione inopia judicii saribum, & proponunt omnia, quia nesciunt preferre meliora. But it were a thing hard and presumptuous, and oldwives; and fach fictions; as those of Lucian's

Dialogues, and Apuleine's Mecamorphofes, have

haply too tedious, to shew by a large censure, on all those that have written on this subject, what freedome, every one took to discourse thereof at random and to interweave abundance of triviall tales with the most certain and undenyable Truths. For this we may bring to the Bas John Nider, James Sprenger, and Henry : Institute, the Former confessing ingenuously (against [1] Trithemine and Molanus, who made 1 in catalo. him Judge upon the Witches of Germany) that go.in Bibliwhat soever he had said of them, and other Ma-oth. Theogicians in the last book of his [m] Formicarium, log. which is as it were the Leaven of all that hath m Formicabeen said since upon that Subject, he had learn'd rii, lib. 5.6.3 from a Judge of the City of Berne, & a Benedictine Monk, who before his going into the Order, had been, Necromanticus, Joculator, Mimus, & Truphator apud Seculares Principes insignic & expertus. The two other have faggored together 10 many stories into the Mallens Malesicarum. which came abroad in the year 1494. that Vnier had some reason to question whether they deterved any more credit then those brought by Niderus.

The same judgment may be given upon a many others who have follow'd rhese as it were by the scent, whose miscarriages yet are not so considerable as those of some latter writers, and particularly of that eminent man of France, John Bodin. This man, having, with a miraculous vivacity attended by a solid judgment, treated of all things divine, naturall and civill, would haply have been thought something more then Man, may some Intelligence, had he not lest some tracks of this humanity, in his Demonomansie, hand-somely

In lib. de Brigib. somely censur'd by the late learnedKing of England Majors colletta findio, quam feripea judicio. But to make the best of it, we may say, that this great ingenuity more then ordinarily veried in the holy Tongue; was a little belotted with the Learning of the Rabbins and Thalmudists, quibus, as the Jesuit Posovinaffirmes, boc libro tam videtur addittue, ut ad cos sapine recurrat quam ad Evango lium, Whence we may easily conceive that this Book, and that which Vnier made of the impostures and delusions of Devils may stand for the two extreames in comparison of the mean which should be observ'd in judging of the truth of these things, and the integrity of the principal! Authors, who first advanced them. By this meanes we are disengaged from the rest, who, by sabnlous reports, and the little judgment they difcover in this Disquisition would have us embrace the Clouds of their imaginations instead of the reall Jum, and thereby engage us to a recanta-tion of such an abundance of childish and spurious Opinions, as are demonstrative arguments that our Minds may be much more juffly said to creep than to fly; and that, to be rescuid from these Chimera's, they must be set at Liberty, and absolutely possessed of their full right, that so they may freely do their duty, which is to reverence and acquiesce in Ecclesiastiall History, to discourse upon masmrall, and to be alwayed douber full of the Civil

In judicio liby or som Redini.

CHAP. VIIL-

That Zoroastes was neither Amhor nor Premoter of Georick, Theurgick or unlawfull Magick.

TE have indeed many discoveries of the the nimblenesse and subtility of that Emperour's wit, whose intamy for his Apollacy outweigh'd the reputation, his many Vertues and perfections otherwise, which were wholly particular in him, had gain'd him. Bur methinks he never made a greater expression of Ammiani it then at Paris, when the Subtle Orator Delphi-Martelling diss, having accused before him Numerius Governour of Languedoc, and perceiving he had not sufficient testimony to convince him, cry'd out, as it were in indignation, that No man would ever be found guilty if he had no more to do then to deny. The word was no sooner out of his mouth. but the Emperour Julian judiciously reply'd, that no man's innocency was secure, if bare accusations should be admitted for proofs. His meaning in that witty retort was, that the impeach't are not alwayes criminall, nor the acculid punishable; and that to condemne a man and to last the verdure of his Innocence, there are other proofes requir'd then that of a simple word, which argues oftener the ignorance, rashnesse, or passion, of some envious and malevo'ent person, then it does the guilt or defert of him against whom it is directed.

This certainly cannot but make something for all these renowned persons, who must needs be crush'd by the multitude of their Accusers, if we were oblig'd, as Civiliuns, or forc'd, as were anciently the Reman Tribunes, rather to count the suffrages then to examine the reasons; or if Seneca had not sometime given us this advice; which we may now make ne of for their defence, Nontam bené cum rebus humanis geritur, ut meliora pluribus placeant. But he who by a diligent reading knows how to discover the reality of things, will not think this multitude fo confiderable. For as some Captaines are glad to fill their Troops with Rogues and hedge Birds, and force armes upon Boyes and peedees to give the enemy a check upon the first appearance; so the Timons of Literati reamd enemies of all learned men make n'e of such another Stratageme, and level against their Fame, the authority of a multitude of wretcher & Vulgar Souls with certain plagiaries and cur-puries of writers. These, like the Potamonick Philosophers think nothing good or right, but what is judged so by others, see not but with Speciacles, as the Lamia, have no other coaths then the call ones of their Masters, as the peedees, follow no other path then what is the. most beaten, like so many theep, and in all things re-emble those religious Disciples of Epithagoras apud quos tantum opinio prajudicata poterat, ut etiam fine ratione valeret Authoris

Cic. de na.de or. l. 1.

I shall not therefore stand to fift all popular assertions of the Marick of the ancient Philoophers, such as were Zoronfer Orphem, Pythagoran, Democritus, and others; but, having treated of it in general, descend now to particulars, and make that good of every one, which hath been been prov'd of all together. With this caution neverthelesse, that it is not my intention to purious the designe as far as anything may be said of it, if a man would undertake to write whole Volumes, in desence of every one of these great perions. For when we have once examin'd the opinions of the best Authors upon their doctrine, whatever may be added otherwise, is not produc'd so much for explication as to swell up a Volume, and make those, whose Stomacks cannot bear such repetitions, say what they do of a many others.

Et veterem in limo rana cecinere querelam.

This engagment cannot be better or more fitly begun then wish the defence of Zoroastes, a person represented to us, as the living spring and originall of all Magicians, neither more nor lesse then Cain was of murtherers, Nimrod of Tyrants, Ninus of Idolaters, and Simon Magus of Heretiques; through the opinion of the Abbot Serenus in [c] Cassian, of Lastantius, St. Cyprian, Pererius c collst. 8. and most other Dostors, is much more probable. 6. 21. They hold for certain that men should not ima-lib. 2. line any other Author of this perverse and un- fit. lawfull Magick then Satan, the sworne enemy of De idolor. ill the Creation, who made use of this Geotick Vanit. ong before the Deluge. For, as Ensebius prap. observes, the innocency of the first ages Evang.l. 5. ad not been defil'd and corrupted with all those 6.7. vain superstitions and coremonies, if this jealous pirit, envying the hoped-for salvation of man-lind, had not bent all his forces to ensuare them is deeply in this Magical Idolatry as they were in all other exorbicancies and iniquities, which in time so far prevailed over vertue, that God could do no lesse than send an universall Deluge to cleanse the earth from all those abominations. But the waters were no sooner return'd into their place, but this spirit of presumption, this Beelzedub, Prince of Flies, began to renew his practices, and to lay the foundation of his second Monarchy in those weak minds, which are most easily taken, and entangled in the cobwebs of a multitude of suspicious operations, strange sacrifices, and magicall superstitions. It is not indeed possible to particularize and tell justly, who, of all the men of this second age of the world, was the first instrument of this fatall enemy of Nature, to disperse his conjurations over the habitable earth. as we find them now received and prastiled.

Lib. 30. C. 1,2,

Whence we may charge Pliny with a double errour, where he treats of this Subject; one, in that beingan Epicurean as well as Lucretine,

Et mundum nullo credens restore moveri Naturà volvente vices & lucis & anni:

as he openly professes in these words, with no lesse rashnesse than ignorance, Per qua hand dubie 1ib.2. declaratur, natura potentiam id queque effe qued Deum vocamue; he had not recourfe, as the Christians and Platonick Philosophers, to the first Authour of Magick, who is no other than he whom we have already described, as may be furvarg.

ther, were it needfull, proved by a passage of Por-Prap. E-, phyrim cited by Ensebim. The other is, where he affirms Zoroastes to have been the first that ever practiz'd it, and brought it into esteem among men.

Digitized by Google

men. This, how unlikely soever, is receiv'd with so little difficulty by all that have written after him, that few or none have taken the pains to examine that proposition; which, as it is grounded chiefly on the long time it hath been acknowledged, and their authority who maintain it; fo is there but little reason it should be received as infallibly true, when Pliny himself wonders, how the memory and precepts of Zoroastes could be preserved so long time, he having lived, according to one Eudoxu, whom he cites for it, fix thoufand years before Plato. Nay, if we allow the opinion of Pererius and some Moderns, who make De Mag. him flourish in the time of Ninus and Abraham, 1.1. c. 13. yet this age we have so slender an account of, and the things said of it, so lost in the Labyrinth of so many ages, that it were more ingenuous to confesse our ignorance, than prelumptuously to aifirm Zoroastes, of whom,

Ad nos vix tennis fama perlabitur umbra,

to have been the first of all Magicians. Adde to this, that the little knowledge we have of him is so disguised by Historians, that we can hardly meet with two or three, who do not contradict and consute one another in the history of this person.

For if with Theodorev and Agathias we call Histor. 1.2. him Zarades, he will presently be confounded, serm. 2. by all those Writers who mind not the order of time and Chronology, with one Zaratas, whom Plutarch makes Master to Pythagoras; with one Li'. dege-Zabratus, mentioned by Malchus (who is no o-nit. anima, ther than Porphyrius) in the life of Pythagoras; è Timas.

F 2

----Goode

1. Stro-Wat.

and with one Nazaratus, whom some in Clemens Alexandrinus would have to be the Prophet Ezekiel. Or if we will allow him the name of Zoroastes, as the most common, yet will there be no lesse difficulty to guesse which of the fix men, who were of the same name, was the Magician, four whereof are named by Arnobius, the fifth by Eclog. ad .

Suidas, and the fixth by Pliny. Further, be it sup-Arnob.c.5. posed that the true Zoroastes was well known among so many, yet must we allow somewhat to Sixtus Senensis, who mentions two Kings of that name, one of the Persians, Authour of Naturall Magick; the other of the Battrians, first Inven-

Zib.18. 6.19.

tor of the Diabolicall: somewhat to Rhodoginus, and diverse others, who will allow both Nations but one Zoroastes for a Law-giver, that according to the common opinion of all Writers, endeavour'd to perswade them that he had received his Laws and Constitutions from a certain Divinity, whom he called Oromasis. But, what should make us yet more distrustfull of what is said of him,is, that the same Authours would perswade us, that he was the son of that Oromasis, or Ari-

Lib. de origine anime, PTImae, manius, whereas Plutarch, the most considerable man of Antiquity affures us, that Zoroastes meant nothing else by those two words he pronounced so often, than the good and bad Dæmon, to which he was wont to refer that miraculous order which is observed in the course of Nature and revolution of all things, as Heraclisus did to harmony; Anaxagoras, to mind and infinite; Empedocles, to friendship and debate; and Parmenides, to light and darknesse. This the same Authour confirms in the Treatise of Isis and Osiris, as also Diogenes Laertius, Brissonius, Calcagnin and Phi-Googlelphus, lelphus, who would not disparage their judgement so much, as to heap multitudes of fabies and contradictions one upon another, to represent this Zoroastes as the Prince of Mugicians. For indeed there is much more reason to think him, that of Philosophers and Professours of Learning, as, when we have refuted the errour of this pernicious opinion, we shall make appear. It does indeed sufficiently undermine it self by the discord of those that maintain it, and the attendant contradictions, as it ordinarily happens in all other lies; yet, to blow it up, and to apply a remedy as soveraigne as the dilease is invereterate, we must reduce all these opinions to four principall heads, and, in the particular explication of them, shew, that there is no reason in the world, why this Zoroastes should be represented to us, as the first and most eminent of all Conjurers and Magicians.

The first shall be that of Goropius Becamus, as in Gallicia, being the easiest, and needing no other solution than to be understood and proposed. For that Zoroastes was no Magician, he endeavours to make good, by alledging it was a meer fable, and that really there never was any fuch man; which right he does not onely do him, but Mercurina Trismegistus, & Orpheus, deriving the Etymologie of these words from a certain Cimmerian language in use, as he sayes, from the Creation to the Deluge. But while he chimerises on that in liberty of conscience, there fals from him a manifest contradiction, observ'd since by Patricius, in In Magia that having maintain'd the negative as an unde- Phitosophiniable axiom, he afterwards indifferently confounds this Zeroaftes with Japhet one of the fons of Noah.

The History of MAGICK.

70

Lib.3.

Fel.76.

But this opinion, if true, would in some fort agree with the second, which we are now to deduce, the promoters whereof endeavour to prove. That Cham and Zoroastes were but one person, according to Berosus, Didymus of Alexandria, and the Author of the Scholastick History, that Cham was the first that exercised Magick after the Deluge, as is affirm'd by the same Berosus in his Hiflory; and that, this granted, it is to be infert'd, that Zoreastes after the restauration of the world, first began to soil mens minds with the soot of his invocations & forceries. Nay, they stick not to affirm that the first he practised them on, was his own Father, affirming, that the only motive that Noah had to thunder such a curse against him, was that the other had by his Magick so bound and made him impotent, that having, at it were, lost the prerogative of his nature, Diriguit, quantuf q, fuit calor, essa veliquit. Coin GAL Eleg.3.

> Infomuch, that afterwards he could not get any children, either on his wife or any other, as is to clearly and methodically set down by Berosus, that we need not seek that contradiction in his History, which is fallly imposed upon him by du Verdier in his Censure. Whence it comes to passe, that many keep a coil to have this opinion of the first Author of Magick maintain'd, not only upon the account of Berofus, who indeed is the most ancient and venerable Historian we have lest, but also those of Gregory of Towns, and St. Clement, (the two other principall opinions) who, to Arengthen his authority, say, that Chus or Misraim, the two elder lons of Cham were firnam.q

nam'd Zoroaftes, which signifies onely Living Stars, in acknowledgement of the miraculous operations which they effected by this Disclipline.

Bur if we seriously consider the strength of these proofs, we shall at last find, that the two latter are no more probable than the former, and that the whole web of the Argument hath no more truth than likelihood, as is not hard to shew. For first, as to the three Authours, who make Cham and Zoroaftes but one and the same person; Patricius, who produces the authority In Magia of the second, immediately addes, that it deserves Philosoph. no credit, as having no ground of reason or pro-The same account doth Pererius De Mass. bability. make of the authority of the third, who sayes, c. 13. that Ninus subdued Cham, who was yet alive, and called Zoroastes, making him, according to the opinion of some, King of Thrace; whereas Justin affirms, in the beginning of his History, that the Zoroastes that was overcome by Ninus was King of the Battrians. According then to the calculation of this Writer, Cham must have lived, at least, twelve hundred yeers, fince Ninus was contemporary with Abraham and Melchisedec, whom St. Epiphanius, relying on the translation of the Haref. 55. seventy Interpreters, places 1100 years after the Flood, to which adde the hundred years that Cham liv'd before; it will be evident, that he could not be overcome by Ninus, unlesse he be allow'd to live twelve hundred years, a thing not affirm'd by any Authour.

Nor can it be probably said, that notwithstanding his fathers curse, he outlied him by two hundred and fifty years, and his brother Sem by six hundred. For as to Berosus, I think it much more.

Digitized by Google

Z.I.

that preceded him; since all the books published under his name, are nothing but the extravagant imaginations of Annius a Monk of Viterboyas hath been well observ'd by [a] Faber Stapulensis, b]Via Lib. I. ves, [c] Goropius, [d] Vergara, [e] Giraldus, [f] Ga-Pelit. b Lib. 5. de spar Varenus, Melchior Canus, and divers others, tradend. whole authority is of greater consequence against discipl. him, than all that [g] Postel, quem insania, laith c Lib.18. c. 1. de ci- [h] Scaliger, à communi invidia liberare debet, wit. could say to keep up his credit, as making use of d 21.5.de him, as a Base on which to ground the searned reparetemp. Refveries he daily fansied to himself, upon the eightigs. 4. happy conquests of the universal Empire, promised the French Monarchy. Gentium. . The same answer may be made to the second f Lib, inte-proposition of the contrary Argument, which, stilgro, Roma. proposition of the contrary Argument, which, stillgro, Roma. proposition of the contrary Argument. proposition of the contrary argument. There are the contrary argument of the contrary argument. The contrary argument of the contrary argument. The contrary argument of the contrary argument of the contrary argument. The contrary argument of the contrary argument of the contrary argument of the contrary argument. The contrary argument of the contrary a g Lib. 2. de prove Cham to have been a Magician. There loc. Theol. needs no more than to deny it, un!esse it be meant h Lib.de o- of naturall Magick, or rather thole Sciences, riginib. wherein Delrio fayes he was instructed by his fabetr. fol. ther Noach, which name he thinks corrupted by 20 6-222. *Pliny into that of Azonach, who he affirms to * L.b.3.

have been the Master of Zoroastes, as + Bodin ob-† Demon. ferves, that he changed that of Gabbala into Jol. 2. cap. 2. tappe, or Jochabella, Authour of a certain kind of Magick. And yet there is not much to be built on that light conjecture of Delrio, fince what he Difg. Ma- sayes absolutely, that, Cham & filit ejus magianz gu.l.1.c.3. bonam edocti sunt a Noacho, cannot be any waves understood of this Zoroastes, who is represented to us, as a most eminent practiser of Magick and Necromancie.

Nor needs there any other answer to the story of the Magick which Cham exercised upon his father, brought upon the stage to confirm the second proposition. For since we have no other Authour for it than Berofus, falsified by the Monk of Viterbo, there is no reason to admit it for true, and make it outlive the credit and authority of him whose it was, seeing, that if we look narrowly into the originall of this relation, and take off its mask, we shall find that it is grounded upon the curse pronounced by the Patriarch Noah in the ninth of Genesis, Maledittus puer Chanaan, ser-vus servorum erit fratribus suis. Whereof though the cause be clearly laid down in the same place, yet Berosus, the Rabbins, and Thalmudist's must needs glosse upon, and metamorphose it as they please, but with a doctrine so flat, and conceptions so contradictory and fantallick, that they may serve, beyond any thing I know, to convince us of the truth of what Lastantius sayes, Hac Indiviner. mendaciorum natura est, ut coharere non possint. Instit.1.5. For if we credit the former in his History, we 6.3. must withall believe that Cham used certain charms and sorceries, to make his father unable as to the act of generation, It the Rabbi [n] Levi n Pererius in his Commentary on Genesis, that, like another in Genes. Saturn, he guelt him of the parts necessary for that 1.14.c.1. act. If R. [0] Samuel, that he shewed him such a Genebrar. nasty and abominable trick, that I shall be more i.i. chrotender of chaste ears than to mention it, and nolog. passe it by, as Laur. Valla did a word of the like o In sorta-fignification, Malo ignorari, quam me docente cog-litio sidei, nosci And lastly, it we refer our selves to the [p] Thalmudists, we must grant that Cham in- p Ibidem. curr'd this malediction for all the causes together mentioned by the Rabbins, which we have particularized, to shew, that though Zoroastes should assume Cham's person, yet were there no justice to condemn him for an Enchanter and Magician.

Having therefore dispatch'd that, we come now to discover the errour of the third opinion, which men have had of this person : according to which, many have thought him to have been King of the Battrians, because Justin seems to be of their side, when speaking of Ninus, in the first book of his Epitome, he layes, Postremum illi bellum cum Zoroastre Rege Baltrianorum fuit, qui primus dicitur artes magicae invenisse, & mundi principia, Syderumą, motus diligentissime spettasse. And yet this Herculean passage, which hath been alwayes quoted, to cast down the good reputation of Zoroastes at his enemies feet, may easily be refuted by the contrary authority of Diodorus Siculus, who layes, that this King of the Baltrians, against whom Ninus made war, was called Oxiartes, and of whose Magick, neither he nor Ctefine, who, according to Arnobius, writ his particular Hillory, make not the least mention. Nor indeed does Justin speak of it, but under the caution of a Hear-say, and in such ambiguous and doubtfull expressions, that not specifying what kind of Magick this Zoroastes was Authour of, there is nothing more obvious than to conclude from the confequent words, & mundi principia, coliq motus diligentissime spettasse, that it was meant of the philosophicall and naturall. Whence it is certain, that according to the fourth and last opinion, which the most reserved have had of this Zoroastes, he was an excellently knowing man, well acquainted with all manner of Disciplines, a subject subject of Ninus, contemporary with Abraham, and by countrey a Chaldgan, who having been instructed by Azonach, one of the Disciples of Sem or Heber, was so earnest in the cultivation and restauration of the Disciplines lost by the Floud, that he became the most eminent man of his time, and writ a many books, of which Suidas sayes, Four treated of Nature, one of Precious Stones, and five of Astrologie. To these Pliny addes some of Agriculture, and Mirandula ano- In epift. ad ther of Caldaick Sentences, which he said he had Marki. in his Library, with Commentaries upon them Ficia. in the same language; one part whereof was first printed at Paris, and fince angmented by Patricim, who digested it into the first part of his Book, De Magia Philosophica, alluding, in all probability, to that of Zoroaftes, which certainly was onely naturall and philosophicall. Nor is it hard to infer thus much from those shreds which we have left of his Aphorisms and Sentences, which are so far from being guilty of any thing of diabolicall or superstitious Magick, that, on the contrary, Steuchus Engubinus, in his so much cri'd up Book against Infidels, Atheists, and Philosophers, makes use of them ever and anon, to prove and maintain the mysteries of Christian Religion. Adde to this, the improbability that Syrianue, the most learned of all the Platonicks, would bestow on them a Commentary of ten books, as Suidas affirms hedid; or that Marslins Ficinus would cite them so often in his Book Of the Immortality of the Soul, and Picus draw fifteen of his Conclusions thence, if they had been fraught with so many trivial and superstitious things, such as many have imagin'd them, contrary to the opi-

ì

The first of these layer it down as a certain maxime, that a Zoroastre, omnis manavit Theologorum veterum sapientia; the second openly consesses in the defence of his conclusions, that that Magick, which studies the perfect knowledge of Naturall Philosophy was first brought into vogue by Zoro-In Alcibia- astes & Zamolnis; and the last tell us that the Magick of Zoroastes is nothing but that knowledge of divine things wherein the Kings of Persia cau:'d their children to be instructed, ut ad exemplar mundana Reipub suam ipsi Rempublicam regere edocerentur.

To make this good weight, we might adde a many Authorities and passages out of the best of De Reg. Authors, were they not already produc'd by | f |

Persar. 1.2. Brissonias, [t] Bulenger, [n] Philesphus and [x]

Eclog. ad Heurnius, who have made a faithfull collection Armeb. cap. of all that can be faid, to prove that these Mages of Persia and Chaldea, were only priests and Philosophers, and their doctrine an excellent Theology grounded upon the worship and adoration of one supreme omnipotent Divinity, as is pertinently observ'd by the Learned Master of Lastantim, where he sayes, that Eorum Magorum & eloquio et negotio, primus Hosthanes verum Deum merita majestate prosequitur, et Angelos Ministros O nuncios dei, sed veri, ejus venerationi novitassistere. Whence we may well judge that, if Pliny describe this Hostanes (so excellent a person in the judgment of Arnobius) as a famous imposor and Mountebank, Zoroastes must needs meet with worse handling from him and others, who thinking it a shame to be beaten out of the pic, will yet to keep this to long agitated question in Digitized by Google play,

Armeb, cap. u Conviwior. l. 2. x Philo-Coph. Bar-

de.

play, fly to certain impertinent and simple observations of the prefages of his Nativity, the course of his life, and the manner of his death, thence they would conclude, forfooth, that his laughing when he was borne, the beating of his brain, so strongly that it forc'd back ones hand : his twenty years folitude, and the fire from Heaven which consum'd him for his offences, are, (were there no other reasons) more than authentick proofs to make him a great enchanter and Magician. This indeed may feem (omething probable, to those who look on all Securities as good and tolvene, who will receive any mony though ever so bad, who mind only the supersicies of things, & quorum nusquam penetrat ad inti-·matelum.

10

elt

 \int_{V}

[x]

100

igo Phi

160 iot

erri

tan

r Ť

CHM

Stros

ifte.

7/im

пЦ

But since we must try what we can pick out of these proofs, we may answer, to the first that there is not any one can affure us that this laughing of Zoroastes happened precisely on the day of his nativity, whether when he was asleep or awake, whether by the percussion of the Aire, or only an agitation of his lips all which one should know to judge aright of it. But to take away the prodigy & Arangenesse of this accident, Hippocrates tells us Lib. de Sep. that Children, assoon as they are born seeme to timefri. laugh or cry as they sleep; and that, waking, there partu. is a constant vicissitude of laughing and crying till they have passed forty dayes. This might have happened more particularly to Zoroastes for through abundance of Spirits, and consequently neer hear, which rescuing him from that humidity who that is common to others, caufed that action in him, which might well fignifie that he should

History of MAGICK.

one day prove a very great man, but not a Magician. It is indeed a Circumstance hath ever been thought very fortunate, so that it gave Virgil occasion to say

---- Cui non rifere parentes, Nes deus hunc mensa, Dea nec degnata cubili est.

For those who laugh (o soon are ordinarily more active and lively, or as Hippocrates calls them active and lively, or as Hippocrates calls them beenetic and vivacity of spirit, and accordingly give greater hopes of their suture good sortune, then those who are stupi'd, slow, and whose spirits are duil and beavy.

Ecloz.4.

Nor shall we need, if we may trust Pliny, tronble our selvest o derive any greater presage from the motion of his Braine, it being ordinary in all Children newly born to have a certain cavity about the brain-pan where the sagittal suture meets with the coronall, which is cover'd with a grosse and thick membrane, about which, at least till it be converted into bone, a man may easily perceive, visue trasta (as the most Learned Anatrasta.

If gogica perceive, vifu & taltu (as the most Learned Anatragas.

Sell. 2.6.2. ologie) the constant beating of the brain, which haply was preceived more strong and vehement in Zoroastes, then it is usually in other Children, by reason of the abundance of Spirits and naturall heat, which we have shewn to have been particular in him.

Lastly, if any one will inferre that Zoronstes was a Magician, because Pliny tells us that he semain'd to, years in the Wildernesse, and that Suidas and Volaterrams affirme that he dy'd firuck with a Thunderbolt; he must also with the same breath conclude that Epimenedes who stay'd therein so. years, that Mefes, who spent the third part of his age in it, and that all the Fathers of Thebais were far greater Magicians then he, fince they bestow'd all their life time there: And that Tullus Hostilius, Pompeius Strabo, Aurelius Carus, Anastasius, and Simeon Stilites were great Sorcerers and enchanters, because they all dy'd thunderstuck. And yet this is not a little injurious to the truth of the History, and to what is expresly observ'd of the last, in the Spiritual Meadow of Sophrenius, where it is faid, that the Ab- Cap. 57, bot 'Inlian Stilites incenfing at an unseasonable hour, answer'd those who ask'd him the reason of it, quia modo fraser mens Simeon à fulgure dejectus inscriit, & ecce transis anima ejus in tripudio & exultatione. Whence may be easily observ'd their want of judgment, who, upon the diffecurity of such vain conjectures, would perswade us that Zoroastes was the first inventer of Magick, and the greatest enchanter of his time. Which confidence I have the rather taken the trouble to refixe, to make way for that light of truth which we are to follow in the account we have of him; and with the same breath, blow away the proofs and grounds of certain Authors, who believe, that all the Learning the ancient] Philosophers acquir'd in Agypt, was no other then that of the Magick and Invocations of this excellent person, ery .

CHAP. IX.

That Orpheus was no Magician.

LIUmane nature is so limited and confin'd That it cannot judge of things spirituall but by the sensible and materiall, nor of substances but by their Accidents, nor indeed of any thing it knows but by appearances. The only way then, me thinks, to disengage Truth out of all these maskes and disguises, is, to take as strict and near a view of them as may be, and, when we come to the weight and tryall of them, never to admit that prejudicate opinion, which often obliges us to choose and preferre shadows before bodies, darknesse besore Light, and the most extra-regular fables before certain and authentick Histories. This we are to do with so much the more diligence and circumspection in this Chapter by how, much that there is not any thing, as Plutarch affirmes, slides more insensibly into our foules or hath so much charme and sorce to attract and infinuate as the disposition of certain tales handsomely couch'd and interwoven; such as, for instance, those of the miraculous Mufick of Orpheus, at which we see, that,

> Mirantur justi g, senes, trepida g, puella, Narrantis conjux pendet ab ore viri.

To proceed then to a strict and dispassionate examination of all the grounds, which men have had to suspect this Great man, and first Protessor of divinity, guilty of magick, we must build upon on the foundations layd in the former Chapter, and say with Patricius, that, according to the testimony of Philo, Josephus, and all the best Authors, the Sciences and disciplines which had been lost by the Flood, having been re-establish'd in the Schooles of Sem and Heber, the first erected, as the Rabbins and Thalmudists affirme, Zoroastes, who had been instructed in them, and who might be one of the Sons or Nez phens of Cham, endeavour'd so much to dilate and make them flourish in his Country of Chaldea, and among those of this Nation, that besides the knowledge which [b] Apuleius allows him of b2. Florid. Medicine, and that of Astrology attributed to him by St. [c] Hierome, [d] Origen, [e] Propertius, c Ad c. 2. [f | Cicero, [g] Philelphus and most Writers, and Dan. upon the account whereof they passed anciently d Homil. for Astrologers, as the Canaanites for Merchants rem. and the Arabians for Robbers, we have the Au-e Lib. 2. thority of Averroes cited by [h] Patricius, who eleg. 5. layes, that Philosophy was sometime in as much f De Diviesteem in Chaldaa, as it was in his time in Spaine nat. by the meanes of the University of Corduba. All viv. these Disciplines were afterwards translated into h 1n Ma-Ægypt, when Abraham, as is observed in the gia Phile-Scripture, [i] went down into Ægypt, to so-soph. journe there, because the samine was sore in the Gen. 12. Land. For Josephus sayes plainely, and [k k In Epinas Place seems to agree with him, that during his mide. abode in that Country, he taught the Ægytian Priests the Mathematicks, and gave them as it were the first rudiments of all the other Sciences, which thereupon so thriv'd and were so much improv'd that it became the spring-head, whence the Greeks by long draughts got all their wildom and

The History of MAGICK.

٤ ۽

and Learning, by the travells and pilgrimages of Orpheus, Thales, Democritus, and Pythagoras: whereof, the first brought thence Theology, the second the Mathematicks, the third Physick; and the last, all the foremention d with Morall Philosophy into the bargain.

This is it we are now to prove of Orpheus, and hereafter of Pythagoras and Democritus, to thew, by an apparant discovery of what they were, how much they are mistaken, who would still make them no other then Sorcerers and Mountebanks.

them no other then sorcerers and Mountevanks.

Lib. 2. c.6. For as to Orpheus, Diodorus, Siculus affirmes him to be one of the first that pass d into Asype (which happened about the year of the World 3c62, long before Pythagoras, who return'd thence in the time of Polycrates, Tyrant of Samos in the year 3290.) and that he brought thence with him, his Hymnes, his Dionystacks, and his Orgia, which were no other then those of Iss and Osirie.

m. civit. This made [m] St. Austine put him into the Chap-

m' civit. This made [m] St. Austine put him into the Chapdi. Lib. 18. ter of Divine Poets, [n] Virgil to give him the c. 14. n Æncid.6 name and vestment of a priest where he sayes of him.

> Nec non Threicius long à cum veste sacerdos, Obloquitur numeris septem discrimina Vocum.

o Prap. So [o] Eusebius gives him the title of the greatfivang. eff Master of Theologie. [p] Justin and [q] Asbelib. 2.1. nagoras assure us, that he was the first that advanced p Grat exhortat. ad and proposed the names and sacrifices of the Anmenter. tient Gods, and reduced their Theologie into orq Apolog. der, not only in his Hymnes and Books sorep. o Chilsi- mentioned, but in divers others which Suidas an. sayes he made, of the Mysteries of the Trimity, Conferences, of Oracles, and of Purgations.
This gave Plutarch occasion to call his Learning Sympos. 1.2.
Sacred, insomuch, that diverte Catholick qu. 3.
Doctors have been of opinion, that it might be very serviceable to resure the Religion of the Ancients, and confirme Christianty. Among these were St. [f] Angustine, [t] Eusebius, [n] Faultum Marsilius Ficinus, [x] Pichs, [y] Mosellanus, [z] Manch.
Fabius Paulinus, and the Learned Divine, [a] Steu-t Prep. chus Eugabinus, who, with great diligence and Evan. 1.13, a commendable curiosity, hath made a certain u Lib. de Analogy or parallell between the Doctrine of mortalizate. Moses and that of Orpheus, the first Philosopher x in apolog, and Divine among the Greeks, as Zoroastes was et in conamong the Chaldaans, and Trismegistus among clus.
The Analogy is a Comment.

The'e Anthorities I have been the rather enLib. 1.
clin'd to furme up together, to shew, both by the z Heb. donumber and diversity of them, what account we mad. 1.7.
should make of the most part of our Dæmonogra- a Lib. 10.
phers, who must needs be guilty either of Ignophilosoph.
rance or a huge presumption, if they know not c.7. lic. 2.
or esteem not the judgment of so many great persons, qui, ut rationem nullam afferrent, ipsa autoritate nos frangerent, to court and embrace an old sable, and the dreams of doting Antiquity.
And to make the madnesse compleat, they think they have ground enough because they find it in Pausanias, who sayes, that some were of opinion, sa Post Elithut this principall Divine among the Greeks was a Sorcerer and Magician, making it their businesse to retrive the Story & dress it up, as they please, so it contribute any thing to the opinion they would either introduce or maintaine, yet do I not meet

84 The Hiltory of MAGICAR.

with any of all those that maintaine this extravagance, hath made it reach further then le Loyer, Lib. 4.6.3, in his de Spectris, where he sayes, that the Orpheorelesta were to called from Orpheus the greatest Sorcerer and Necromancer that ever was, whole writings contain'd nothing but the praises of Devils, as of Jupiter Alastor, Damon Vindex, o exterminator; of Bacchus, his Master; of the Satyres, of Phaneros, who in my judgment was that Lucifer whom we believe turn'dout of Heaven; the originall of the Gods, alledged by 'Athenagoras; unchast mixtures of Gods with men, (blazon'd fince by Homer and Hesiod) which indeed are nothing but the copulations of Devils, with Sorcerers, for the generation of 'Gyants; and lastly, the initiations into Bacand Diabolilcal Ceremonies, chanalian 'shrowded in o bleure termes, not understood even by those who were of the Magicall Frater-' nity of the Orphcotelesta.

From which passage it is easily conjectur'd, that the chiefest argument and motive to conclude Orpheus a Magician, may, according to this Authour and the rest, be drawn from the charmes and superstition of his Hymnes, which, in some ienie they may be taken in, or some exposition may be giving them, containe nothing but the names of infernall Spirits, the order of their (acrifices, and the several) Ceremonies and susfumigations requisite in their invocations. Whence many have bin perswaded, that they were as effectuall in Georick Magick, as the Plalmes of David in the Divine, the diverse letters, Syllables and Combinations of the Mercaua in the Theurgick, and the medicinall applications of Virgil

Virgil in the Naturall. Bodin therefore doth pamonom. not unjustly charge Mirandula with too much su-l. 1. c.s. perstition, for grounding some of his Conclusions upon the Doctrine of this Magician, who certainely must needs be such, when by the tones of enchanted Musick, he drew after him, not only the most untrastable Animals, but even Woods, Rocks, and Rivers,

Unde vocalem temerè insecuta Orphea Sylva.

Horat. !. I. Ode 12.

To this Philostratus addes, that he became Oracular after his Death bythe Organs of his head, which kept in the Isle of Lesbos, answer'd the Greeks, that they should never take Troy without the Arrowes of Hercules Sethe Ambassadors of Cyrus that the sate of their Prince should be like his own, that is, that he should dye by the hands of a Woman.

But all this amounts to very little in comparison of what lel Loger affirmes of this person, that is, that De Spettris he instituted the Fraternity of the Orpheoielesta, 1, 4. c. 3. among whom Bacchus had anciently the same place, as the Devill hath now in the Assemblyes of Magicians, who have derived all their superstitious operations from these Orpheotelesta. This puts him into an altonishment, that none of all the Authors, who writ upon that subject before him, made no use of that proof to convince the followers of Peter d' Apono, and Vnierus, who deny there were any Magicians anciently, and laugh at the homage which they say they do the Devill. For he observes that what was sung in the Orgia, Saboe Evohe, is answerable to the Shouts and exultations of Magicians Har Sabat Sabat; and that Bacchus, who was only a dilguil'd De-

- Digitized by Goingle

vill, was call'd Sabasius, because of the Sabat of conventions of thele Bacchanalian Priests, whereinaster they were initiated, they were wont to iay, I have drunk of the Tabour, and have easen of the Cymbal, and so I am admitted. Le Loyer would have this to be so explicated, that by the Cymbal we should understand the Cauldron or Baton, which they made use of, as the modern Magicians do, to boyle the little children they feed on; and by the Tabour, the Goat-skin out of which they drew the juice and quintessence to drink.

This way the manner of admission to the Ceremonies of their Bacchus, which were so

COLONA.

nafly and detellable, that Demostkenes had, as he In Quat. de observes, much reason to reprove Aschines, his adversary, that in his younger years he and his mother had been initiated in them, and hid cry'd Eure Sabaoe. But for my part, I am in as great an affonishment that he should not expect to be reproved himself and to be laught at too for, producing such triviall conjectures, such groundless proofs, and fuch fantaflick, extravagant, and tidiculous conceptions to prove that the Orpheote-. lesta practis'd all the Ceremonyes, common. among the Magicians of this time; and confequently, that he, who was the Institutor of them, ought to be the father look'd on, as an Enchanter and Magician. For if Reason may moderate the excess of thee Symptoms, may we not by the way, truely affirme, that he gives the name of Orpheotelesta to all the Priestess of Bacobia which yet appertain'd not but to the Mallers of their Congregation. But then if the former consequence hold, this also must, That Hugh de Payennes, and Godefrey de St. Aumart, who founded the order of the Knights Templers, were Sorcerers and Idolaters; because many Authors are of opinion, that this Order was abolished by Clement V. for these two Vices which had insensibly crept into it. And if that, this also, That all the corruption and irregularity of life, which happens often enough in most Orders and Religious Fraternities, long after their Institutions, must restect upon the innocence and Sancticy of their Authors.

Digitized by Goodounded

But, in the mean time, there's no reason to admir for truth the wantonizing conjectures of this Writer upon the relation there is between the Magicians and the Orpheotelesta, since they proceed rather from an ambition in him to start out some new observation upon so thread-bare à subject, then that he gave the extravagance any credit. To cure him of it, and to cleare up the businesse from the bottom, we must remember, that, according to all the best Authors, the Bacchanalian Orgia or Dionysiacks were first instituted by Orpheus in his Own Country, Thracia; ordaining that they should be celebrated by the Women when they were in their terms, meerly to separate them for that time from the company their Husbands, to avoid the accidents which might happen if they should conceive in that condition. But finding by experience that they were asham'd to be at them, because it discover'd what they were wont to dissemble with all possible artifice, and consquently, that he should be forc'd to his own dishonour, to abolish them if he did not think of some remedy, took occasion from this dislike to make them more samous, permitting all women in general to exercise them

٤,

Dea.

i Lib. T.

Lib.z.c.I.

k Prep. Evang.

upon certain dayes appointed for those Ceremo-In these they took so much freedom and enjoyment, that, besides their Dances, which they regulated by the found of Tabours and Cymballs, as also by the Voices and acclamations which they often repeated Eulos, whence Bacchus, who was no other than the Sun, was since called Euhoeus, as Sabasius, from their running and skipping. There were also certain men h De Syra disguis d in Womens Cloaths, who, as [h] Lucian, [i] Columella, and | k] Eusebius affirme, carry'd the image of the God Priapus, as the representation of fruitsulnesse, and the production of all things, which Orpheus would have highly esteem'd and reverenc'd. But it being true, what the Poet sayes,

> Nox, & amor, vinum á nihil moderabile suadent, because, as he addes,

Illa pudore vacat, vina Venus q, metu.

these sacrifices and Ceremonyes could not so well moderate their enjoyments, nor continue the use of them among those Nations who afterwards receiv'd them into their Countryes, but at last they were made a cloak and covering for thousands of chears, basenesses, and tornications, Cum vinum & nox, & misti faminis mares atatis

Tit. Liv. Dec.4.1.9. tenera majoribus discrimen omne pudorus extinxisfent. Upon which account they were absolutely suppressid and abolish'd at Rome the year after its foundation 568, in the Consulship of Posthumus Albinus, and Martius Philippus.

This hath cost me the pains of consulting Authours much more moderate and judicious than

le

le Loyer was, when he describ'd this imaginary Sabat of the Orpheotelesta, or Superiours of this Bacchick Fraternity, to shew, by the naked truth and simple relation of what was done in these Orgia and Diony flacks, how little reason this Authour had (unlesse his great learning and vast reading may somewhat excuse him) to make such a strange metamorphosis of Enhoe into har-Sabat, a Tabour into a Goat which was suck'd to the very last drop, and little Bels and Cymbals into great Kettles and Cauldrons, wherein they boil'd little and newly born children. He might have hit, if not more fortunately, yet more pertinently, if he had reflected on the Bowls, which, as Pan-Janias affirms, the women, engaged in these Sacrifices, carried in their hands; or the Goat which gave Arnovius occasion to say, speaking to men who troubled themselves with these Congregations, Atque, ut vos plenos Dei numine ac majestate doceatis, caprorum reclamantium viscera cruematis oribus dissipatis. This had been much more proper to prove what he said, than what he relates of the Tabour, or yet the passage of Demosthenes justly reproving Eschines, for that he and his mother were initiated in these ceremonies, at that time much suspected and cried down for the reasons beforementioned, observed by Livy. But as Hercules overcame not the Hydra till he had cut off all her heads, so is it nothing to have overthrown this first Argument, if we cannot do the like with three others yet to come. fince that the least of them remaining entire and without answer, were enough to maintain the suspicion there is, that Orpheus was a Magician.

To begin then with that wherein they say, that Phlegon. lib. de mi-

rabilibus.

Plin.l.7.

C. 52.

his head became an Oracle, and gave answers in the Isle of Lesbis. I shall not stick at the doubt may justly be made, whether this story be true. though all the Authours speak of it with much contradiction, fince that, it being supposed true, it makes nothing against Orpheus. For the miracle happen'd long after his death, and consequently it was not he that spoke thorow his scull; but the Devil undertook to give answers in it, to advance Idolatry amongst his creatures, making this head to speak, as he since did that of one Polycritus, which exposed in the Market-place, foretold the Ætolians that they should lose the battle they were to fight against the Acharnanians. The like text he also did with the head of one Gabinius, which after it had been rerriv'd out of a Wolves throat, did, in a long Poem, fing all the mi-fortunes which should happen to the City of Rome. The inference will be as prejudiciall to Bern.Serm. the two last as to Orpheus. Were it not madnesse 2.de Virg. to lay, that Samuel being dead answered the Witch, the Abbot Cassian, St. Germain, and another St. Macaire, that is, that all these holy persons were Magicians. For it must be thought, that as the Angels spoke under the persons of these last for the instruction of the devout and faithfull; so the Devil, the true Ape of all divine actions made his advantages of the former, the more eafily to deceive men, and involve them in an abyse of new worships and supersticions.

Cassioder. Var. Epift. 1.2.ep. 31.

This granted, our next businesse is to she v the little reason thereis to believe that Orpheus, Mutis animalibas imperavit, vagos á, greges, contemptis pascuis, ad audiendi epulas invitavit. This errour, as we have observ'd in the first Chapter proceeds from this, that many times men take Poeticall Fables for evident Truths; and the literall sense of their writings, for the allegoricall and morall which they meant, as may be particularly observed in this sabulous musick of Orphum. It must then be understood of the civilization which his Laws wrought upon savage and barbarous people, reducing them to quiet and better conversation, it we take the security of Horace, who sayes, Sylvestres homines facer interpres q. Doorum, Cadibus, & vietu fodo deterrais Orpheus, Dietus, ob id, lenire tygres, rabidos q. seones.

Digitized by Google from

De Art.

which is also the common explication of (0) Dion, o Orat, de Chrysostom, (p) Boccase, (q) Cassiodorus, (r) Mar Homero. arobius, and (i) Quintilian. It were therefore p De General metrinent to endeavour to explane the seven of Lib.2. ep.41. draw from the Philosophy of the Platonists, to r Lib.3 in prove this motion of things inanimate possible in some Sciples them not, but to exercise his learning, where c.3. f Lib.1. as, had he advanced seriously, and as true, Delrio t Hebdehath so sully resuted them, that there were not madum, now any ground to receive them as legitimate; heldes that, their main drift was to show the possibility of that musike, which certainly is a very weak proof, and is a manner of no consequence, it we consider with Apuleus, that, Won ominic Apolog.2. que fieri possorum prospettic habenda sunt.

The conjecture they would draw from his Hymnes would be more confiderable than either of the precedent, if we were obliged to follow the glosse and interpretation which hath been made

Lib. de Spe Etric.

made of it by diverse persons, especially le Loyer, who will, I hope, pardon me, it I endeavour to prove, that he hath been as unfortunate in the explication of his Hymnes, as the Metamorphosis of the Orphenelesta into Magicians. For, not to quarrell with the little account or knowledge we have of the Compoler of them (fince Genebrard affures us, that there is not any one book lest of all those old Authours, and first Divines, such as Orphens, Linus, Musaus, Phenias, and Aristens Proconesiens, grounding his opinion haply on the authority of Cicero, who fathers these Hymnes upon one called Cecraps, and thole of Franciscus Picus, Seiden, and Eugubinus, who ingenuously acknowledge that their Authour is utterly unknown to us) we may shew in two words, that these Hymnes contain not any thing that should bring them into the least suspicion of Magick; whether they be considered literally, or in the severall interpretations of their allegoricall and morall sense.

For to shew that there is no such danger as to the former, we need onely reflect on the indu-firy of this first planter of Theologie, who, to fubdue and refine the spirits of a rough and sal-vage people, took the most effectuall course that could be thought upon, to bring about his enterprise, which was to possesse them with a fear and yeneration of certain Divinities. These he himfelf celebrates in his Hymnes, as well to bring them into reputation by his example, as to leave his Successours a certain Modell (as it were) of those observations and ceremonies which ought to be practized, to keep up the honour and devotion of their Sacrifices, whereof there were cer-Digitized by Google tainly tainly many kinds. For as the ceremonies of Christianity, at the present, are not much different one from another, because they relate to the service of one onely Almighty God; So those, of the falle Religion of the Ancients, could not but be very contrary and discordant, by reason of the infinite number of Gods, Idols and Images, which were to be ador'd with Sacrifices peculiar to every one of them; Cum ex hoc Divorum nume- Lib. de Dea ro, (faith Apuleius) nonnulli nocturnis vel diurnis, Socratis. promptis & occultus, latioribus vel tristioribus hostiss, vel ceremonius, vel ritibus gauderent. But this proceeded meerly from the fleight and fubtilty of the Law-makers and first Divines, who thus diversity'd the Sacrifices, as they saw it most convenient for the people. We have a manifelt example hereof in these Hymnes of Orpheus, unlesse any one would lift out a more mysterious and hidden sense under the veil of their Allegories, as Picus acknowledges we must, when he Prafat, in sayes, that, Ut erat veterum mos Theologorum, ita Apolog. Orpheus suorum dogmatum mysteria, fabularum involucris, & poetico velamento dissimulavit, at si quis legat illius hymnos, nihil subesse credat prater fabellas nugas g, meracissimas.

But this Mythologie once admitted, the Chymists presently explane these Hymnes of their severall Tinstures and their Philosophers stone, the Cabalists, of the Ensoph and its Zephirots; Divines, of the mysteries of Christian Religion; Philosophers, of Nature and its causes; and Damonographers, of Sacrifices and Conjurations. When yet there is no ground to believe, that Orpheus would conceal so many mysteries, and those so different one from another, under the mask of his fables, fables, which can neither be interpreted of the universall spirit, or the Philosophers stone, nor of the forceries of Magicians. For as to the interpretation of Alchymitts, we shall in the ensuing Chapters thew, that it hath ever been one of their main fooleries, to be desirous to glosse on all things obscure and difficult, advantageously to their disquisition. For that of du Loyer and other Dzmonographers, it were irrationall to admit it for the legitimate, fince first we have the contrary authority of all the Catholike Doctours, specifi'd before, who allow their authority may be used to confirm the principall points of our Religion. Secondly, we are able to shew that they cannot be better interpreted than of Phylick, according to the judgement even of the great Mirandula, who in the third of his Conclusions upon the Doctrine of Orphens, fayes expressely, that Nomina Deorum quos Ospheus canit, non decipientium Damonum, sed naturalium virtutum divinarum g, Demonum, sed naturalism virtutum divinarum g.

Geogr.l. 10 sum nomina. This is further confirm'd by Strabo, who observes, that in all the Discourses were anciently made of the Gods, under the umbrage of diverse Fables & Metamorphoses, were shrowded
the most famous opinions of those who were particularly excellent in the knowledge of Nature.
Such is Orphem in his Hymnes, which if we would

Nat. qual. interpret in their true sense, we must with Seneca tap. 14. observe, that the Ægyptians, from whom this first Philosopher and Divine had deriv'd all his learning, divided every element into two parts, one whereof they called the male, the other the female. Thus in the earth, rocks and stones; in the air, the winds; in the water, the Sea; in the fire, flame and thunder, are held the strongest and with the Coople

and most forcible parts; and the sost and tractaile earth, fresh waters, the most untroubled Aire, and the least active fixe, are the weaker and more seminine parts.

In allusion to this, does Orpheus put two distinct Vertues into all the bodies of the Vniverse, one whereof was destin'd only to Governe its Sphere, the other to produce the effects which depended on its persection. Desirous therefore to spread this doctrine under the sweetnesse of his Hymnes, he compos'd them all under the names of his vertues, calling those he directed to the Earth, Pluto and Proserpina, to the water Thetis and Oceanus; to the Aire, Jupiter and Jum; to the Fire, Aurora and Phaneta, and giving the names of the Nine Mules, and an Epithet of the God Bacchus to all the rest, whom he plac'd in the Spheres of the leven Planets the Firmament and the soul of the World, as may be seen more particularly in Calim Rhodiginus.

All which put together may be enough to de-2. monstrate; that Le Loyer and such Writers have been extreemly mistaken, when they interpreted those names of a Legion of Devils, and so pittifully charged this Author with Magick upon the Authority of Pausamas, who sufficiently reinters himself, both as mentioning it only upon the score of a common report, and that he sastens the same calumny upon Amphien, a person excellent only for Musick, qui canendo chordis, as Lib.2.vari. (Cassiordorus hath well objerved) Thebanos mu-ar. ep. 40. ros dicirur condidisse, ut cum homines tabore marcidas ad studium perfettionis erigeret, saxa ipsa viderenum ralittis rupibus advenisse. To which we may accee one thing more that may oblige us to have senti-

Digitized by Google

ments

The History of MAGICK.

ments of this great person contrary to theirs who Lib.30,6.1 too lightly suspect him, which is, that Pliny himfelf delivers him out of the Inquisition after he had charg'd a many others, whose Innocencie shall neverthelesse appear when we come to their particular vindication.

90

diendo.

CHAP. X.

A Vindication of Pythagoras.

HAd we not from Placarch this Character of Pythagoras, that he was wont freely to acknowledge, that the greatest advantage he had reap'd from Philosophy, was, Not to wonder at any thing; I should not easily be perswaded but that he would find much matter for his admiration, when he should consider how the malice and ignorance of men hath so chang'd the truth of his History, and the genuine sense of his Doctrine, that his life seems now like that of some Mountebank or Hocus Pocus, and his precepts so fabulous, impertinent, and at such distance with Reason, that a man cannot avoi'd assonishment at such a prodigious Metamorphosis. To reduce which to its former lustre and scowre it from that rult and rubbidge which oblive the Noblest stroaks, and what ever is most like and naturall in the Historicall draught of this great Philosopher, we need only follow the method observed in the precedent Chapter. That is, as Vertue precedes Vice, and truth falshood, to shew, in the first place, what he hath been, according to the true telation of those who knew most of hims that that so we may the more easily judge what account we should make of all these forged storyes which impeach him so highly of sorcery and inchantment, as if he had done nothing all his life, to the destruction of those of his own Species, but deal and trade in.

Quicquid habet Circe, quicquid Me lea veneni, Quicquid et herbarum Thessala terra gerit.

This great person borne to things far above the ordinary rate of men, and having a mind, able to comprehend what ever the world could; that is, such as could not be satisfied within the narrow limits of a City, refolved to go and learne among the Ægyptians & Chaldwans what he could not in his own Country, that is, Ceremoniarum Apud. incredendas potentias, numerorum admirandas vices, Florid. 2. & Geometria solertissimas formulas. Having by a peregrination of fitteen years made himself Matier of all manner of Disciplines, he brought, as it were, the Spoiles of Agypt into Greece, and particularly into the City of Crotona, where he begin to erect an Academy, according to the order which may be seen in Gellius. Here he though Lib. 1. c. 9. fit to com nunicate the precious talent he had acquir'd by his fludy and travell, and lay open the treasures of the Encyclopedie, wherewith he was so inrich'd, that, not to rely too much on the testimonies of Laertius and Jamblichus, who mightibe thought too savourable to him, becane they have made it their bufinesse to write his History; it is not to be doubted after the fenerall consent of all good Authors, who have but justly been tender of the honour and respect due to his memory, For 90 The Digitary of MI WAT CW. For if we begin with his Philosophy, we have no reason to doubt of it, since he is call'd by Apuleius, Primus Philosophia nuncupator & cre-Lib. 2. ditor, as well because he chang'd the name of Florid. Wisdome, in his judgment too arrogant, into that of Philosophy, as that he was the Prince and Institutor of the Italick Philosophers, as Thales had been of the Isniek, as Laertins and others affirme; and that Reacklin, who first dispell'd the cloudy ignorance of Germany, hath delign'd the second Book of his Cabalificall Art, to explaine and revive, in his Country, the Philotophy of Pythagoras, in imitation, as he fayes, of Faber Statulensis and Marsilius Ficinus, who both in France and Italy had brought into reputation those of Aristoile and Plato. If we proceed to Medicine, [e] Laertius and [f] Apuleius are a c Lib. 9. f 2. Plovid. sufficient tellimony to convince us, that he was excellently able in it. Nor have we worse fecurity for his knowledge of the four parts of Mathematicks. For as to Arithmetick or the Science of Numbers, besides the testimony of thole two Authors, we may out of thousands pitch upon that of Cicero, who layes, that Py-In Lucullo. thagoras deduc'd all things from Numbers and the Principles of Mathematicks, whereto he attributed very great Mysteries, and gave the names of certain Divinities. These are explained at large by [b] Plutarch and [i] Calcagnin, who upon them ground the subtlety of that Ancien h Lib. de 1fide & Ofride. Custome of giving an account of all things by i Ezist. lib. Numbers, as Picus promit'd to do in his Conclu-5. fions, to re-establish that Philosophy neglected ever fince the time of Pythagoras, who was so well veri'd therein, that by the difficulties of it he try'd the ingenuity of his Disciples. He also gain'd thereby some advantage as to the practice of Geometry, wherein he was so admirably able, that he, [k] first, brought the Geometricall in-k Aristoxitruments, of the invention of Moeris to persenti-enus apud on, and was the first among the Greeks, that Diogen. us'd weights and measures. Which yer he could Pol Vivgil. not have done without the assistance of that Sci¹ l. 1. c. 19. ence, which he study'd with so much importunity, that having found out an excellent proposition in it, which is the 47. of the first Book of Euclid's Elements, he was so over joy'd, that he expressed his thanks to the Gods, in a Hecatomb, Apollodor, or Sacrifice of 100 Oxen.

Digitized by Google

These two Sciences were as it were steps for apid Die-'him to ascend to two others more excellent, which are those of Musick and Astronomy, the former whereof he must needs be well acquainted in In somwith, since m Macrobius, [n] Boetius, [o] Fici-2. Cap. 1.

nus, [p] Gasurius, and [q] Calcagnin (to omit all n Musica I. the rest who are of the same opinion) particularly 2.6.10. describe his industry in finding out the tones of o Incom-Musick, by the proportion he ob erved in Smiths, mei. when five or fix heat upon their Anviles together. p Musical. The same Macrobius, Athenaus and Maximus Ty-1. c. 8.
rim affirme that he first found out the inferiour q Episol. 1. and celediall Harmony, whether it be interpre-5. f. 70, ted of the admirable order and Symphony of Na-raib. 14.
ture, or of the Musick which [r] Pontus de Tyard, Serm, 21.
and [f] Kepler do maintaine there ought to be in f Au Diathe proportionall revolution of those Globes and log. 2. du great Machins of Heaven. Whence we may sultaire. draw an evident argument of his knowledge in Lib. 20.
Altronomy; to learn which Justin tayes, he went Nat. bist. 1.

to Agypt to Babylon, and Pliny and Lacrtins 2.

H 2 affirme,

affirme, that he first demonstrated the obliquity of the Zodiack, and discover'd the nature and quality of the Planet Venus.

Lastly, for what concernes the other Sciences, it may be prefum'd he was as well provided as for the former, if we may credit Ovid, andespecially Apuleius, who sayes, that Pythagoras learnt of the Brachmanes, qua mentium documenta, qua corporum exercitamenta, quot partes animi, quot vices vita, que diis manibus pro merito suo cui q, tormenta vel pramia. Adde to this, the Lawes he gave the Inhabitants of Crotona, and the three Books which Plutarch and Laertins say he writ, one of Iustitution, another of Civility, and the third of Nature; the fame whereof was so great that Plato hearing that Philolans intended to publish them, gave order they should be bought up for him at the rate of a hundred minæ of Silver.

This Univerfall acquaitance with the Sciences gain'd him such respect in his life time, that Plu-Plas. Flik tarch affirmes, he taught at Crotona and Metapont above thirty years without any interuption, being alwayes follow'd by above 600. Auditors, who, for the integrity of his life and eloquence of his discourses, took his words for Oracles, to far, that, as the Roman Oracor affirmes, his authoricy was thought reason, and divers Princes and

In the tree Potentates of Italy were glad, as Plutarch affirmes, vife, of Phi- to take his advice in all affaires. For these great infophers deterts did the people of Metapont immediately corver fing with prin- after his death consecrate his house, calling it the Oratory of Ceres; and the Street, the 6651 Sacred Street of the Muses. Upon the same account, the Romans, having had an Oracle in the time of the Warrs with the Sammites, this they

Digitized by Google

De nat

l. 1.

they should erect Statues to two men, whereof one had been the greatest Warriout, the other the wifest among the Grecians, without any debate cast this honour on Alcibiades and Pythagoras, the first having been the greatest Captain of his time, the other gain'd fuch reputation through all Italy, that qui sapiens habereiur is continuo Py- Sic. Tufe. thagoreus putaretur. 94.4.

Bur it were an endlesse work to run over all the eulogies & honorary titles that are scatter'd of this person, in all the Books of the Ancients. had an extraordinary effects and reverence for him, as being indeed one of the greatest Wits of all Antiquity, who had the greatest earnest nesse for that which is good and honest, and who endeavour'd more then any other among the Pagans to reduce mankind to a respect and knowledge of a first cause, and to draw it out of irregularity and dissolution, to raise it to the contemplation, of things naturall and Civill.

From the little we have, it is easy to judge, what might be said in his praise; we shall therefore now come to an examination of all those falfities, or rather extravagances, which some, either out of envy to his Vertue or enmity to his fame, have insensibly foissed into the relation of his life, grounded, probably at leaft, upon his vast knowledge of the Mathematicks, and great Learn-Which once done, we shall need no more then the improbability & impertinences of those little stories, to satisfie us, what distance they are at with Reason, who not weighing the proofs they meet with, presently believe that all the ancient Philosophers, and first Authors of Sciences Epist. 65. and Disciplines, such as Seneca calls Praceptores,

H 3

generus e

Leneris humani, have been absolute Necromancers and Magicians. For as to Pythagoras in particular, they are lo confident, that they think it not to be question'd after the instances of it, which may be taken out of [c] Iamblicus, in his lite, c Cap. 13. [d] Pliny, [e] Tertullian, [f] Origen, [g] St. Augustine, [h] Ammianus Marcellinus, and, the most 16,28. d Lib.24. accurate Writer on this Subject, [1] Delria, not to put into the scale the authority of tome late Anim.c. I. Demonographers, quibus satisfactum non est, laith f Adv.Cel-Sarisberiensis, nisi libello doceant quicquid alicubi . (um. g De civit. scriptum invenitur, and who accordingly stifle Dei lib.7. their judgement with a confused collection of all c.35. the stories they can parch up together upon this h Lib. 21. Subject. Such are those that are brought upon the Heftor. stage in the history of this person, whereof some i Lib.3. may be found in Boisfardus, who seems to have Metalog. c.I. taken more pains than any, to rank him among the Magicians, whom he describes in his book of Divinations. From which and all the precedent may be inferr'd, that Pythagoras was accounted a Sorcerer and Magician; because, first, he had uv'd long in Egypt, and had read the books of Zoraaltes, our of which he might probably have learne the properties of certain herbs, which he called Coracefia, Callicia, Menais, Corintlas, and Aproxis, whereof the two first put into water, caused it to freeze, the two next were excellent against the biting of Serpents, and the last took fire at a distance. He also in one of his Symbols expressely. forbade the use of Beans, which, according to the same superstition, he boyl'd, and, for certain nights expord to the Moon, till such time, as, by a strange effect of Magick they were converted into Blood.

Digitized by Goognession'd

This hap'y he did in order to another delution, mention'd by Calins Rhodiginus, after Suidas, and the Schofint of Aristophanes in his Comedy of the Clouds, who affirm that this Philosopher writ with blood upon a hollow glasse, what he thought fit, and holding the letters opposite to the face of the Moon, when she was in the full he saw in the star what he had written in his glasse. Adde to this, his appearance with a golden thigh at the Olympick games; as also, that he caused himself to be salured by the river Nessus; that he Ray'd the Aight of an Eagle, tam'd a Bear, kill'd a Serpent, drove away an Oxe that spoil'd a field of Beins, by the meer vertue of certain words. He was feen on the fame day, at the fame hour, in the City of Crotona and that of Metapont, and foretold things to come with so much certainty, that many think him call'd Pythagoras, because he gave as certain & as infallible aniwers as the Pythian Oraele. This he perform'd by Onomancie, wherein he excelled as we may ghelle by the fragments we have of his inperfficious Arithmetick, and the wheel artributed to him by Plood and Catinus.

The troth on't is, I am asham'd to swell up this Chapter with the relation of so many sables and sooleries, so star and inconsistent with truth, as might make us say with much more reason, what the Saryrist anciently did,

1

Vel qué nunc fugeret, si munc hac monstra videret, Sat.8.
Pythagoras?

For my part, I think he would be distracted by two severall pussions, that is, that of amdiration at their want of judgement, who say of him,

H 4

Caybat

De art.Ca-

bal.l.Z.

what they would be loth to affirm of the most nor torious Cheat and Mountebank that ever was: or that of compassion for their shallownesse, in the choice and triall of all these proofs, which may not by any means be received for legitimate. For it may be generally faid of them, that it were absolutely irrationall, to imagine that a man, so serious all his life, and so learned (as we have represented him) could spend his time in such vain tooleries and leverdemain, uch as can be no other than the imaginary productions of popular ignorance, and the malice of his Enemies and Emularours. That is a handsom observation of Rhenclin, Non enim carnit amulorum livore prastantissimae'us viri virtus, innocentissima vita, egregia do-Etrina, celebris fama, ut of, fit, nihil non pollulum reliauerunt invidi carptores, Timon, Xenophanes, Cratinus, Aristophon, Hermippus, & alii qui de Pythagora suis in libris mendacia plurima scripsere. This is particularly levell'd at the stories that were crept into his Metempsychosis, and his prohibition of eating Beans: For as to the Histories which concern his Magick, he conceives them so feign'd and absurd that he would not so much as mention them, in a Book, wherein he should have brought in the greatest part, had he thought there had been any thing of truth in them, since the drift of it is to prove a resemblance between the Doctrine of Pythageras, and the Cabala of the Hebrews, so far, that he affirms in his Book, De Verbo mirifico, that many strange and extraordinary things may be done by the vertue of numbers and words.

But if the Metempsychosis, or transanimation, which was one of the principall points of Pytha-

Digitized by Goog goras's

gorm's Doctrine, if the greatest part of his Symbols, his prohibition of eating things animate, the main actions of his life, and the history of his death, be so much controverted among Authours, what certainty can we have of these old wives tales, and Hocus Poeus tricks, when Laertius and Iamblicus have prudently passed them by, instancing onely in two or three of fo great a number, and that upon the credit of other Writers. If further their authority be pressed, sor their satisfaction, and that of all those who have accounted Pythagoras a Magician, we may rationally presume, that they did not put into their Books their own opinions of that perion, but the falle reports which from time to time had been scattered of him among the people, by the malice of Timon the Phlyrsian & others his enemies, qui viro alids Rhodigin. Coryphao propemodum magica vanitatis crimen in:1,19,0,7. ustam voluerunt. Thus came the sables beforementioned into reputation, which though they sufficiently refuce themselves, we may yer, to dicover the impertinencie of every one in particular, affirm, that what hath been faid before of the Agyptian Magick, and the books of Zureastes, cap.2. &8. make it clear, that the voyage of Pythagoras into that Countrey, and his reading, as Clemens Alexandrinus delivers, of the books of that perfon, are rather arguments of his knowledge in Phylick; medicine, and naturall Magick, than anything he could do in the Georiela and superfilians. His acquaintance with the former may be further argued, from his knowledge, as Pling relates of cerrain herbs, from which our Adversaries would derive a certain proof to convince him of Magick. Which they might have done with some colour, facul. E.19. fol.

Lib.6.de fimp.med. facul.

323.

Hist.nat. 1.24.c.17.

if Pythagoras had described them with so much superstituon, as sometimes did their Authours, Andreas and Pamphilus, in the book which Galen sayes they made, Of Charms, and the convertion of the facred herbs into Damons, or had gather'd them under tome certain Star or Planet, as those that were anciently called Herba Decamorum, for the reason given by Monsieur Moreau in his learned Comment upon The School of Salerna. But Pliny saying nothing of them that had any relation to these vain ceremonies and observations, I see not what reason they had to make such an extravagant conjecture, nay, he doubting withall, whether the book wherein they are described, should be attributed to Pythagoras, or to one Cleemporus. And if we must follow their opinion, who will have it to be his, their vertue was not so prodigious and extraordinary, but we daily find as much in Mallows, Bafil, Bammo, Vervin, Horehound, Henbane, Cypreffe, Benjamin, and Germander, all which are very good against the biting of Serpents; or in the leaves of Willows, Vines, Lettice, Violets, and Water-lily, which can much more eafily cool water, than they do the air in fick folks chambers. It may be also supposed, he might put in Salt-peter, which is used in stead of ice, to cool wine in the height of Summer. Nay, Pliny seems to give a reason of what might be thought most hard in the vertue and properties of these herbs, when he fayes that the root of Aproxis took fire at a di-stance, as Naphrodid, because it might be of a bicuminous nature, which exhaling many fat & un-Chous spirits, takes fire as a candle newly put out, which is not to be at all doubted of, after the many experiences of ie, as elsey may be found in the Digitized by Google books books of [r] Libavina and [f] Agricola.

T Lib. de

The proofs deduced from this Philosophers bituminib. forbidding the eating of Beans, and the course he subservatook to convert them into blood, may refuted neise with as much case as the precedent, since Rheuelin juilly laught at all those impertinencies, which some hollow and dislocated brains have forg'd upon this prohibition, such as might be that of Hermippus in Laertius, who thought Pythagoras would rather have suffered death at the entrance into a field of Beans, than passe thorow it to avoid his enemies. But the reason of the prohibition, was certainly no other than the first given by M. Morean in the place before mentioned upon the cap. 19. School of Salerna; namely, that Pythagoras, who commanded his Disciples to lie down to rest with the found of the harp and pleasant longs, as it were to charm the foul, and, by harmony, to bring it into it self, absolutely forbade the use of thir fruit, the juycewhereof being flatulent, groffe, and of ill nourishment, sends such vapours to the brain as make it heavie; and divert the spirits from minding the contemplations of Philosophy, which were the main businesse and entertainment of his followers. It may be also affirm'd, that there was nothing extraordinary in the conversion he made of Beans into blood, for M. Marean, in the said Commentary, shows clearly, that according to the principles of Chymistry, which put similarude and resemblance for causes of an action, it is a thing may be done and demonstra-ted by naturall reasons. In the mean time, let no man perswade himself from hence, that Pythagor ras evermade use of this Elizar of Beans, or humane blood, to write upon his hollow glasse; for belides.

besides the little reason there is he should rather use blood in that businesse than any other siquor, u Lib.4.de [u] Campanella proves by sound reasons that operation absolutely impossible. And whereas [x] Ax occult.

aring boasted, that he knew the secret of it, and fenfu. x Occult. grippa boasted, that he knew the secret of it, and Phil.L.I. Natalis [y] Comes bath written, that in the times c.6. y Mythol. 1.3, c.1,7. of Francisthe Fiest, and Charles the Fifth, men knew at Paris in the night, whatever had passed the day before in the Caltle of Milan; the former onely said it to gain reputation, as shall be shewn more particularly in his vindication; and the relation of the latter is a pure Fable and Romance, advanced by those who would needs joyn Magick to the Arms of those two great Princes, as hath been affirmed before, of Ninus and Zoroastes, Pyrrhus and Crasus, Neltanebus and

Philip of Macedon. Whence may be inferred, that what ever is said of this Looking-glasse of Pythagoras, is as unjustly attributed to him, as the superstitious Arithmetick, and the wheel of Onomancie; or if he ever made use of it, it was certainly some game, impossure, or juggling trick, and, to conclude with Suidas, maigroup the natural we may well passe the same sentence on the the relation of Laertins, concerning the golden the relation of Laertins, concerning the golden Vu. Nume. thigh of this Philosopher, since Plutarch openly acknowledges, that it was a pure stratagem of Pythagoras to gain him the reputation of some Hethagoras to gain him the reputation of some Heros or Demy-God, among the infinite number of people that came to the Olympick exercises.

Which yet does not prejudice the probability there is, that that golden thigh was not attributed to him by the Ancients, but in some allegoricall and morall sense, yet not such as Alchymists intagine, who think that Pandora's box, Jason's sleece,

Digitized by Go Sifiphus's

Sissiphu's stone, and Pythagoras's golden thigh, are the true Hieroglyphicks of their Philosophers stone. But much more likely it was, as Calcagnin makes it, when he fayes, in the explication of the particular marks of all the old Philosophers, that Phythagora rerum abditarum pretium, & excellens Lib 3.epis. indicatura, femur aureum fecit. Nor indeed is f.41. there any reason this thigh should be taken literally, or that we should believe it was of massie gold, as the tooth of the Silesian youth, who liv'd within these sourcy yeers, not onely by reason of the impossibility of it, both in Nature and Art, but also for the disagreement of Authours speaking of it; some, cited by Delrie, affirming it to Lib.z.e.s. be a golden river, which he made to run at the quaft. 1. Olympick games; others, that it was his reall feet. I. thigh, according to [c] Ælian, Plutarch, Laer-e Var. hist. tins, and Lucian. But the more probable opinion 1.2. is that of [d] Origen, that it was of Ivory, it being & Cont. easie to imagine that it was the natural I thigh of Celsum, 1.6 Pythagoras, which being fair, white and smooth, was haply celebrated by some of his friends with a similitude to Ivory, a comparison we find Solomon makes use of, when he commends his Spouse, Thy belly is of Ivory, thy neck is as a Tower of Ivory. Cap s. Adde to this, that the Gods could nor think of a & 7. fitter materiall to make Pelops a shoulder than this, because of the colour, and other relations there are between Ivory, and a delicate and smooth fleshinesse, such as haply was that of this so much talk'd of thigh of Pythagoras.

The reputation of all these miraculous operations gave occasion to say he was saluted by the genius of a river, which Laertim sayes was that of savit. Py-Nessus, Apollonius Dissolus that of Samus, and than.

Porphyrius printed by Google

Porchyrine that of Cancasms, which diversity shews what account we should make of such a salutation. as cannot but be fabulous, unlesse, to save the credit of these Authors, we should say it was another politick fleight of Pythagoras, such as I have read of Mahomet, who, having hid one of his Companions under ground, had instructed him, when he heard him passing by with a great multitude of people, to cry out through a Trunk that Mahomet was the great Prophet sent from the Living God. Which having done with care, he was very ill rewarded for it: for Mahomet desirous the cheat of the miracle should never be discover'd, entreated those that were about him to marke the place where they had had so strange a sevelation, by raising there a great heap of stones, which they immediately did with such devotion, that the poor subterranean Angell was presently buried under the weight of such a masse and Pyramid.

Were I not affraid, while I would deliver Pythagoras out of one danger, to make him fall into another, and represent him as an impostor and crafty Polititian, to take away from him the imputation of a Magician, I should with the same explication answer what is said of his appearance on the same day, at the same hour in the two several Cities of Crotona and Metapont. For it being a thing abiolutely impossible as to men (whole essence requires no lesse union as to their own particular, then seperation from all other) and not happening by divine permission, as the apparitions of some Saints in severall places at the same time, as those of St. Ambrose, Agaiba, Nicholas, and Benedict, we must conclude, that either

THE History of MAGICK.

BLĹ either it is a pure Chimeta and fiction (which I think the most probable) of that it was effected by the Subtlety of Pythageras, who can'd his gestures and perion to be acted by one of his Difciples or Companions, whom he sent, in his name, to talke with some simple man or woman of either of those two Cities. Nor indeed needed there any more to raile the report of that miraculous apparition, which ought rather to be thus reconcised, then to have any recourse to spirits and Damons. For it brings with it no difficulty or inconvenience, besides that Laurtine gives such another interpretation of what Her-Vit Numa. mippus affirmes of Pythagoras's descent into Hell, and Plutarch of the tales were made of his Golden thigh, and the Eagle which he had so well instructed that he made him descend when he would upon his head, as they fay Mahomet did his Pidgeon. Yet it should seeme by his story of the Eagle that Pythagoras was well acquainted with that part of Magick which confifts in Ligatures, if we had not lufficient reasons to answer whatever may be said of the power he had over certain creatures. For if it be objected that he brought up a Bear familiarly in his lodgings, what reason is there to conclude he had tam'd it by Magick, fince that, not to mention that which was Parm's Nurse, or another which St. Corbinian made to carry his Luggage instead of the Asse whom it had devour'd, the two Bears, called Mica aurea and Innocentia, which the Emperous Ammian Valentinian caus'd to be brought up in the same Marcell. Chamber in a manner with his own; and that which Sindrigal Prince of the Lithuanians, had mi'd so come from its denne and Knockat his Chamber Digitized by Google Gen. 1.

Chamber door, and receive a certain almes for its nourishment, wherewith it return'd to the Woods till the next day that it came again at the same hour; these are enough, I say, to make us admire the Docility of these Creatures, which are not so savage, but the industry of men is able to reduce them, and that by the force, tis true, of certain words, not Magicall and superstitious, but those pronounc'd by the Creator of all things, when he said to our first patents; Have dominion over the sigh of the Sea, and over the some of the Aire, and over all the Creatures that move upon the Earth.

Nor is it worth much consideration, that Pythagoras, by the uttering of certain words, kill'd a Serpent which did abundance of mischief in Italy. For Boissardus, who cites Aristotle's Authority for the Hory, quotes not the Book whence he took it, and is we learch a little more narrowly into it, we shall find it prove absolutely salie, as being grounded only on their Ignorance who change Socrates into Pythagoras, and who take for sterling a sable related of the somer, in a Book of the causes and properties of Elements, which Patricius demonstrates saliely attributed Discussive to Aristotle. But this negligence of Boissardus 11b 1.1.3. might have been well excused, had he not com-Vit. Numa. mitted another great and more observable, when he cites Plutarch to patronise the story of the Ox,

2. which Pythagoras lent packing out of a Bean-field;
2. after he had whitpered formething in his care.

He had better confelt he had translated it out of Calius, Rhediginus, who inceed cites Plutarch in the beginning of his Chapter, but upon another occasion than that of this fable, whereof it will be found he never made any mention. To give it then a finall shock, we may say, that it is absurd and irrationall that this Philosopher, so grave & vertuous in all his other actions, should trouble himself to drive away that Greature, especially when it was executing his will, spoyling & rrampling the beans, the use whereof he thought the greatest abhomination in the World, But supposing he should take paines to do it, yet is it not sikely it was by the vertue of certain words, or by the wayes known and practiced by certain Mountebanks; as may be seen in [n] Emanuel de Mon-salms, ra, [o] Piering, and [p] Cardan; since the least seet, c. Child, coming near the one might as easily have I. are, 14, done it as this Philosopher.

Lastly for what concernes his conjectures and c.1. art 13. prædictions, we may say they can be but of three rogstyph sorts, that is, morall, as those of Socrates, or na-tit bonoturall, as those of Pherecydes, Thales, and Anaxa rum observations. goras, or Dinbolicall and superstitious, as those of quium. all Magitians. Since then it is easie to conjecture, contraditt. by what hath been said concerning his doctrine; traft. 2. that he might well practile the two former, it contrad. 7. were no lesse barbarisme and simplicity to think he should be engaged in the last than to receive the proofes are brought for it, as good and Authentick, when they are only grounded upon the superstitious Arithmetick and the Wheele of Oriomancy fallely attributed to him by [q] Flood q Tom. 1. onomancy ranery attributed to min by [4] along q 10m. 1. and [7] Catanga. For this Arithmetick and all traff. 2. the impertinent footeries in enfally crept into it, part. 1 is nothing but the pure imagination of those who 8. Microwould needs glosse upon the passage of Plutarch cos. at the where he sayes, that the Pythagoreans honoured end of his Numbers and Geometrical figures with the Geomany.

The History of MAGICK.

names of the Gods, calling a Triangle with equal fides Pallas and Tritogonia, because it is equally divided by three lines perpendicularly drawn from each angle. They call'd Unity by the name of Apollo, the binary by that of Contention and Boldnesse, the tringry by that of Institute, for as much as to offend or be offended, to do or suffer an injury, is done by excesse and detect, Justice re naining equally in the middle.

re naining equally in the middle.

Nor is it a leffe injury to this great person, to think that he ever troubled himself with the s Antipali, practice of this Wheele which [s] Trithemiu and Malef, l. 1. [t] Ragnseus acknowledge as falsely publish'd un-der his name, as that of Plate and Appleius; or t Lib. 2. that he ever exercised Onomancy by the help of Epif. Ma-Common numbers represented by the Letters of 1bcma. the Alphabet, the seven Planers, the dayes of the Epift. 4. week, & the 12. Signes, as Flood would perswade us in his Microcolme. For in the first place, this kind of Divination is counterfeit, and without any ground at all; this application of Numbers without any relation or correspondence with the signs and Planets; this Arithmetick absolutely fabulous. And lastly, it was ever the custome of those, who made it their businesse to bring into reputation, such impertinences as these, or any other Mathematicall Niceties; C3 them under the name of this Philosopher, by reason of the great knowledge he had therein. Whereof we have a manifelt example in de Baiffiere who within these 60. years making some additions to the Rythmomachia, bath in like manner pur it out under the title of, Pythagarical Requestion, though there be nothing to manifest, as thet · Pythagoras minded this sleight, nowactributed to him, as litle as all the other stories, which deferve

rath r

Purgamus

- Purgantes corpora succos, Quisquid & in toea nascitur Amicirà.

Juven. Sat. 9.

than what we have been obliged to say in this Chapter, to discover their vanity, and the little ground there is to admit them for true.

CHAP. XI.

Of Numa Pompilini.

*Heodorus Gaza, the learnedst Greek that ever L came from Constantinople, being ask'd by a friend of his, what Anthonr he would preferve, in case a generall wrack were to destroy all the rest, would not seem to fond of his own Traduchions, as to prefer Aristotle or Cicero besore Plutarch. Him he thought worthy to survive all the relt, not so much, as I conceive, for his admirable learning & variety, as to perferve in him the most judicious Authour that ever was, what could not Montaigne have been found in any other, to wit, the judge- 1.2.6,2. ment he gave of all the things he treated of, which we might make use of as a certain mark to distinguish truth from falshood, or as a guide to conduct us thorow those noble ruines of Antiquity, which we find in his Works. This puts me into a more than ordinary admiration, at the malice or megligence of most of our Dæmonographers, who will not apprehend the true account which this Authour gives us of Numa Pompilius, as they have done long since in the Metamorphosis of Aprideins, which they quote upon all occasions, as a I 2 manifest manisest history to prove Lycanthropie. Out of some such jealouse it was, that the Authour thought himself oblig'd to give us all the precautions possible, to shew that his transmutation was a meer Fable and Romance, when he sayes in the first page of his Book, At ego tibi sermone isto Milesio varias fabellas conseram, and a little after, Fabulam Gracam incipimus, lettor intende, lataberis. Which laid down, if those are deletvedly laugh'd at, who would establish and confirm a proposition of such consequence by a relation acknowledged to be fabulous, even by the Authour of it, we may with as much reason affirm those guilty of a greater malice and temerity, who to apparently fallifie the authorities of Plutarch, Dienysius Halicarnassaus, and Livie, to convert into Magick the admirable wildom and excellent policie of Numa.

That I undertake his vindication next that of Pythagoras, is not grounded on the opinion of Metan. 15. divers, especially Ovid, who have made him 12ter, and a Disciple of that Philosopher, since Livie

Zib.t.

d Antiq.

c Vit.N#-

fayes in his Decads, Authorem doctrine ejus, quia non extat alius, falso Samium Pythagoram edunt. The same is also confirm'd by the said [d] Diony-Rom.lib.2. sius Halicarnasseus, [e] Plutarch, [f] Rhodiginus; and [g] Pererins; the former whereof shews that the City of Crotona was but founded in the fourth year of Numa's reign; and the three others infift much upon all the chronologicall reasons which may prove these two persons not to have been Contemporaries, but by a figure of Anachronism, ordinary, and indeed tolerable, in Poets; but by no means allow'd an Historian. But in regard I ambliens observes in the life of Pythagoras, that he had f Lib. 19. c.8. antiq. kA. g De prim cipiu rer. natur, in Pythag.

Digitized by Google

borrow'd

borrow'd all his learning from the Theologie of Orpheus, I have put their Chapters one after the other, without being too Criticall, as to the time wherein they flourished, fince it contributes nothing to their vindication, and that I am oblig'd to neglect it in divers other parts of this Apologie.

We are then to note, that the accusation against Numa is grounded upon four principall points, the least whereof, were it true, were enough to condemn him for an Enchanter and a Magician, For, first, it is urg'd, that the Genius attributed to him by [d] Ammianus Mancellinus, and which d Lib. 2. e Diony sius Halicarnassaus, [f] Plutarch and e Lib.2. [g] Livie affirm to have been one of the nine Antiq. Re-Mules, or rather a Nymph called Egeria, was fin vite no other than a Succuba with whom he was very Numa. familiar, as being one of the cunning it and bett g Dee. 1. wered that ever was, in the invocations of the his. tinelary Gods, and the Genii of Men and Cities. Hence (h) Postellus takes occasion to maintain; h De orig. that this Familiar was the same that had attended Errur. f. Vesta the wife of Janus or Noah, and then was Guardian of Rome, Quo duce, layes he, Numa tanta molis urbem stabilivit. It is also taken for certain, that by the affiltance and industry of this Divinity, he did many strange and miraculous things, to gain reputation among the people of Rome, that so he might govern at his pleasure. To this purpose is haply, what is related by Diony sins Halicarnassaus and Plutarch, That having once invited many Citizens to supper, he entertain'd them with mean and ordinary things, and with plate that spoke neither wealth nor magnificence. But they had not fate down long, ere he took occasion to tell them, that the Goddesse whom he conversed with, at that very instant was come to give him a vifit, and that immediately thereupon the room was excellently well furnish'd, and the tables covered with all manner of meats, the most exquisite and delicate in the world. The fame may also be confirm'd by the discourses he Initios . 5. had with Inviter, such as may be seen in Arnobins, who layes that Numa, by the advice of his Nymph Ageria, found out a way to bind two Devils, or internall Gods, Faunus and Picus, who taught him how to invocate Jupiter, and force him to come to him by strong and imperious conjurations, in case he should not willingly and of his own accord. This it feems he was fo fortunare in, that he fetch'd out of his throne, the greatest and most powerfull of all the Gods, and i forc'd him to declare, how by facrifice he should expire the thunder and lightening. To which may be added the Hydromancie which Varro, cited by St. Angustine, sayes, he was very well versed in; as also his magicall books, discover'd four hundred years after his death, and condemn'd to , the fire as most permicious, in the Consulship of Publius Cornelius and Murcus Bebins. All this admitted, we may well conclude with all our Dzmonographers, especially le Loger and Debrio, the most learned among them. That Numa Pompilius was the greatest Magician of any that ever wore Crown, and that he had a greater power over Devils than over men, fince he made nie of the affi-Rance of the former, to reduce the Romane people to subjection and obedience to his Laws and

De Civit. D i. l.3.

Inflicutions.

6.35.

But if we would show how all these Anthours

are too prodigall of our leifure and their own, when they take so much pains to hatch a sort of Grange and hideous imaginations, and thereby captivate our belief, we need do no more than take a view of the first draught of this person, done not onely by Livie, and D. Halicarnassam, who drew the first lines of him, but particularly by Plurarch, who hith clad him in his proper colours, and all the circumstances and particularities of his life, that we might thereby judge of the least vices and vertues, as also the disposition, cultom and proceedings of this great Politician, and second Founder of Rome. Whence it will nor be hard to resolve, what credit we should give all their after-draughts and copies of the modern, who have rather follow'd the Originall in their own fautastick imaginations, than that of Plutarch and the best Historians, who seem not to mention Numa, but out of a deligne to celebrace his vertues, and admire the excellent conduct, whereby he fastened and established the Romane Monarchy. For that, being loofe, and but newly set together, might easily have been ruin'd by the least hostile violence, if Numa had not by a peace of three and fourty years, given it time to take root and growth, looking on the Romane people as a Champion that were to fight, having exercifed it self at leisure, for the time he should reign over it, would by that means prove strong enough to oppose any that should question the limits of their Empire.

The first thing he did, after he had possessed himself of the government, was to soften and civilize the City, converting their rough & warlike humour into a gentle and tractable, remitting char!

I 4

ing, by Sacrifices, Feltivals, Dances, and Processions; may ometimes, as Plutarch layes, representing unto them the fear of the Gods. To this end did he make them beleeve, that he had strange vihons, or had heard of great calamities, purpotely to keep down their hearts in a dread of the Gods. To this may also be apply'd that passage of Ter-tullian, cited in the third Chapter of this Apologie, but much more pertinently that of Lettamins, who layes that Numa, Sic novi populi feroces ani-Inflit.L. I. mos mitigavit, & ad studiapacis à rebus bellicis avocavit. Whence may be drawn a certain argument, that whatsoever hath been said of the Nymph Egeria, was nothing but the meer prerences and palliations of this crafty Politician, who by that Fab'e would establish the authority of his Sacrifices, Laws, and Constitutions, as is well oblerv'd by the same Lathantins, when, speaking of Numa, he layes, that to lettle thele things, aliqua cum authoritate, simulavit cum Dea Æger ria notturnos se habere congressus. This increates my admiration at the Lethargick judgements, or te ared consciences of our Damonographers, who can to fecurely deprave the authority of this Authour, with those of Halicarnasseus, Livie, and Pluxarch, to give some colour to what they would have beleev'd, and so ground the truth of their proposition upon the most palpable falsity can be imagin'd. For if le Loyer and [m] Delrio may be credited, the principal! Authours that affirm all these sables we have related of Numa, are Plu-tarch, and D. Halicarnassaus, which yet when we come to toid, and perule, we shall find, that on the contrary they are those that refute, under-

Divinar.

C.22.

m Lib.2. ₹ 5.

Digitized by Google mine,

mine, discover, and advise us not to credit

And that it is so, to begin with the opinion they had of the Nymph Ægeria; Plutarch having VH. Numa. made a long discourse of the credit ought to be given these divine apparitions, concludes it with his own opinion, to this effect. "Howbeit, if any "be of a contrary opinion, he is left at liberty; "for, I do not hold those things improbable, "which others relate of Lycurgus and Numu, "and others of their quality; who, being to deal "with rough and lalvage people, and oblig'd to "introduce great alterations into the govern-"ment of their Countreys, have prudently pre-4 rended communication with the Gods, fince "those fictions and pretences were advantageous "even to thole whom they perswaded to a beleef "of them. This he further confirms, when three or four pages after he layes, immediately after he had cited the verses of Timor the Phlyrian, that this personation of Numa was nothing else than the love of a Goddesse, or some Nymph of the mountains, and the tecret meetings he pretended to have with her. This seems to have been transcrib'd out of D. Halioarnaffans, where speaking Antiq.Ro. of Numa, he sayes, as Portus's Latine Translation manil, 2. hath it, Multa autom eag, admiranda de eo dicunt, references bumanamejus fapienciam ad Deorum monita: fabulose enim dicunt illi congressim fuisse cum quadum Nympha Ægeria, qua illum assiduė Regiam sapiemiam edoceret. Nay Livie, who is Lib. tax'd with no other vice than that of having fill'd his History with abundance of prodigies & miraculous things, confesses ingenuously, that Numa resolv'd to keep the Romanes in subjection by the fear of the Gods, and seeing it would not eafily fasten on them, without the disguise and circumvention of some counterfeit miracle, simulavit sibi cum Dea Ægeria congress un notturnos. ejus se monitu qua acceptissima Dia essent sacra instituere, sacerdotes suos cui q, Deorum prasicere.

Lib.2 I.

But indeed Ammianus Marcellinus feems to be more perrinently cited by our Dæmonographers, and confequently to favour them more than all the precedence. For, discouring upon a certain vision which the Emperour Constantine had, he sayes, that the correspondence between Gods and men is not a thing so extraordinary, but that there were manifest examples of it in the Genii, which sometime were familiar with Hermes, Socrates, Apolloniau, Numa, Scipio, Marino and Augustus. From which passage it might be imagin'd, he was of opinion, that it was not fabulous what was said of the Nymph Egeria, and the conversation that was between her and King Numa. But, be it supposed that this was his opinion, yer can it not conclude any thing to the prejudice of the precedent, fince that thorow all his History, he discovers himself very prone to believe and amplifie fuch narrations; alluding to which, I conceive, not improbably, Ludovicus Vives prefum'd to pronounce this judgement on his Hiltory, Ammiani Marcellini qued superest opus, nes Óratoris emnina nec historici.

Detrad. disciplinis, l. s. f.38.

Lattly, for Postellar's Comment upon the Fable, Ithink it of the same metall, with what he relates in his Cosmography, where he sayes that the Ethiopians are black, by reason of the curse God thundered against Chas the sirst Authour of their Nation, because Chass, his sather, had known his wife in the Ark, against the expresse command of the Patriarch Noah to the contrary. Nor indeed can there be a more true and modelt solution made to all these vaine and chimerical speculations, then to say of their Author as the Proconfull Festus did of St. Panl, Insania Postelle, multa te litera ad insaniam convertum.

Having thus discover'd the weakness & falsity of the proofs, brought to make this Egeria a Witch or Succuba, which was only a subtle nation of Numa's, we must do as much with those which [s] le Loger and [t] Delrio would draw out of s Despett. the same Authors to make good the enchanted 1. 2. 6. 7. Banquet, and the conference he had with Jupiter, t Disquise. by the meanes of this Hydromancy. But this Magic. l. 2. qu. 9. was nothing but the fabulous invention of Numa to surprise Faunus and Pieus, putting wine and honey into the Spring out of which they were wont to drink, that they, being taken, should shew him the way to invocate Jupiter, & know of him what he should do to expire the Lightning, as we have already observed out of Placarch and Arnobius. For as to D. Halicarnaffaus, tis true, that speaking of the Nymph Ageria, he mentions also the Supper Numa made by her meanes; but what he taies in consequence, sufficiently shews that he held it a meer fiction, adding immediately after the relation, sed qui res omnes fa- antiq. bulosat ex historia tollunt, Numam hac que de Reman.!... Ægeria dicebat finnisse dicum, na qui Numen di-Vinum moinerem facilius animum ad se adverterem. O leges quas esset laturus libenter ut àdiis latas acsiperent.

In like manner hath not Plutarch fallen upon a telation of these stables, without a precaution given before, beginning very judiciously thus. By these rudiments and as it were apprecially of 'Religion, the City of Rome became lo civiliz'd, & "had fuch an admiration for the great power of K. Numa, had it receiv'd for truths such tales, as had no more likelihood of truth then there is in 'meer Fables and thought there was nothing incredible nor impossible to him that he should defire to effect.

Digitized by CEPOG [e

There remaines therefore only the objection

concerning his Books about which I shall not gleane up all that may be said of their number, and the time, when, and the manner, how, they were found, fince Guillandinus hath very learnedly performed that task, and that it is sufficient for me to shew, that they were not burnt as treating of Magick, as divers moderne Authors would perswade us. For it was not the y Vit Nu. opinion of any of the ancients, as may be easily demonstrated, in that, according to that of |y| Dec. 4.1. Plutarch, [2] Livy, and [2] Cains Piso Consorius, they treated only of the offices and duties of the Plin. 1. 13. Priests, and the Philosophy of the Greeks, such as it had been, in Numa's time; to that of [b] b Ibidem. Cassius Hamina, they treated only of the Philosoc Divinar. phy of Pythagoras; and to that of [c] Lastantius, instit.c.22. [d] Varro; and [e] Tuditanus, they contain'd on-August. de ly the order and causes of the sacrifices and cerewie. Dei. monies he had instituted amongst the Romans. 1.7. c. 34. Which last opinion I think the more probable, e Apud beause it discovers the reason why the Senate Pliz citate thought it not convenient they should be divulg'd, for since we find in Plutareh that Numa forbad the Romans to believe that God had the forme either of Man or Beast; and to make

3. Plinii capita de Papyro memb.

ult.

a Apud

c. 13.

ma.

Digitized by Google

2DY

any image or Statue oi him, which was observed for the space of 70. years, and permitted not they should do sacrifice but with the powring out of wine, milk, and a litle flower, it is Frobable he had given reasons at large in his Books of that new kind of worthip. These coming to light and acknowledg'd for his, tour thousand years after, 28 Plutarch affirmes, or according to Petron. in Cassins Hemina 535, when the City of Rome was fragm. so tull of Idols, ut facilius effet Deum quam hominem invenire, and that all the temples continually sweltered in the blood of the Victims, it is, I say, eafily conjectur'd, that the Books of this Roman Trismegistus, who, in Juvenal, passes for the example of a great Priest, were burnt by order of the Senate, for fear left some great change might happen in Religion, if by the perusall of those Books, it had been known what reasons Numa infilted on, both to establish the purity of his Sacrifices, and to cleanse men's mind from Idolatry, which had taken such root there at the time of this discovery, that the best expedient was to destroy those Books which were otherwise likely to put the whole Roman Monarchy into disturbance; it being a maxime among Politicians, that the troubles Adissentions in the State are ever consequential to those that happen in Religion.

This in my judgment was the true cause of the condemnation of these books, and not that which le Loyer, and other modernes have endeavoured to find out in Magick, or yet what Cassius Hemi-Lib.1 c.11. na, who might haply live in Augustus's time, seems to relate of their treating of the Philosophy of Pythagoras. For as to the former, his opinion being without any ground or Anthority, eadem facilitate contemnitur qua affertur. For that of the latter, it is sufficiently refuted, not only in what we have shew'd before, that Pythageras was latter then Numa, and, that this h Lib. 17.c. last came not into Italy, according to [h] Gellius, till the raign of Tarquin the proud, but also i Dec.4. 1. by the restimony and contrary opinion of [i] Livy, who faies, that one Amins Valerius gave the fame judgment of these Books Vulgate opinioni, as he adds, qua creditur Pythagera auditorem fuisse Numam, mendacio probabili accommodatà fide. After all which answers and solutions, all I have to wish, is, that our Dæmonographers would own either more modelly or more judgment, that they may not hereafter to indiscreetly forge such Monsters and Chimeras as afterwards frighten them, and make them run away, and cry like little Children, who are many times startled at the dirt they cast in the faces of their companions, quast quicquam infelicius su homine, cui sua figmenta dominantur.

21.

VU.

CHAP. XII.

Of Democritus, Empedocles, and Apollonius.

Should never have presum'd to remove the precious and venerable bounds of Antiquity, which the God Terminus in the fabulous Theologie of the Romans, figuify'd to us immoveable, did I not somewhat selv on its being called by Arnobius, errorum plenissima maser, so far et leaft as to be fatish'd, it was no facriledge to bring that to

to the test which hath been held for true. And this I do after so many ages, as, by their long and various revolutions, are wone, as well in Civil History as naturall, to dragge after them along traine of fables, and from time to time to give them new force and vigour by the multirade of those who, out of meer respect to Antiquity, are ensnar'd by them. And indeed it were too great a severity to be obliged to follow the super-Hitious track of those, who will not do the least violence to Antiquity, which, as if our eves were not able to endure a full light, puts a cobweb before them, and burdens all things, especially the memory and lives of great persons, with tables and fictions, as it does the Statues erected to them with dust and filth. This our designe leades us to maintain, by the examples of these three great Philosophers or rather Damons of knowledge, veri'd in all Sciences, and the chiefest, and of greatest Authority among their people, that is, Democritus, Empedocles and Apollonius. These have undergone such a change and Metamorphosis, by those who make it their businesse to write without minding that precept of Herace,

Quid de quoque viro, & cui dicas, sape caveto,

that besides that they are delivered over to us all three for Sorcerers and enchanters, it is surther believ'd, that Democritus was such a soole as to put out his own eyes, after he had blown away his estate in a struitlesse search of the Philosophers stone; and that Empadocles, as an ambitious Desperado, cast himself into the burning surnaces of Mount Gibel.

Demo

9.

- Deus immortalis haberi Hor.de art. poet. Dum cupit Empedocles, ardemem frigidus Ætnam Infilmit-

But these calumnies are so far from being true or well grounded, that, on the contrary, there's nothing easier then to show how they are absolutely false, if we may bestow but a few lines on them before we come to joyn issue with the most materiall part of the Charge put in against the reputation and Learning of these excellent Persons. For sirst, as to the Book of the Sacred Art; and the knowledge and practice of Alchymy, attribated to Democritus, it is a symptome that fignifies the deprav'd imaginations of our Furnace-Imps, who know no other project to gaine any credit to the Books of their Art, than to father them on Moses, Salomon, Trismegistus, Aristotle, nay (such is their stupidity and want of judg-Quintil, ment) Adam; 2] ut authoritatem videlicet sumat ab Declan. 13. homine qua non hubet ex veritate. But to make an in Libanii. absolute discovery of this imposture, sufficiently mania.
b Alchymia laugh'd at by [b] Riolanus, [c] Guibert, and [d] expugnata, Semertus, we may affirme, that this Book was 1.2. c. 6. never made by Democritus, since the learned Mercurial affores us that Chymistry was not C De consensul.c.3 known at all in Aristotle's time, and that Delrio d Variar. shewes; there is no track of it in any good Author, till from Caligula's cime, when it first broke the shell, till that of Dioclesian, under whom lived one Zozimus, who, as Delrio thinks,

Exercit. ad is the most ancient Greek that hath written of it. Annal Bar. To which may be added that Casaubon saies, he Digtr. 10 faw in the K. of France his Library, a manuf . fcript script treating of the making of Gold, entituled, lepa rexun, or, the facred Art, who yet never mentions Democritus for the Author of it. To make this good weight, we may urge the poornesse of conceptions which it discovers, and the censure long since given it by Laertius, when having been very punctuall in the Catalogue of this Philosophers workes, he sayes that others; under his name, either falsely attributed to him, or taken out of his Writings, may assure us, notwithstanding the Authority of Pfellus, who makes him the Author of it, that Democritus had nothing to do with it, but some other Greek, lesse learned, and much latter, Yet might question the Authority of Mercurial, and conclude against him, that Aristorle was versid in Chimestry because he saies in his Problems, that Oyle may be extracted out of falt, which it cannot but by diffillations and Furnaces, if [f] Gefner & [g] Patricius f In Bibihad not prov'd those Problems not to be Aristi-otheca. tle's, and that it is hard to guesse at the time perip. when they were writ, for that as [h] Henry Ste-Tom. 1.24 phen first obierv'd, the Books of Theophrastus, h In Philo. Ot Sweating and Wearinesse, are transcrib'd in a soph Poemanner Verbatim in them.

But me thinkes, those are yet more irrationall, and log. who, with [i] Tertulian, believe that this Philosopher put out his owneyes, because he could not look on Women without some concupitential insurrections; or with [k] Gellius and [l] k Lib. to. Plurarch, that he might study Philosophy more 17. freely, and be lesse diverted by externall Objects; Lib. de or lastly with Laberius, that he did it.

____malis bene Esse ne videret civibus.

For besides the unlikelihood and diversity of these reasons, we must clearly discredit Hippocrates in his Epistle to Damugetus, where he sayes, that being employ'd by the Abderites to cure the madnesse of Democritus he sound him reading certain Books and dissecting Animals, actions certainly much inconsistent with want of sight. We may therefore imagine, that as his Laughter was morall, his blindnesse was so too; and that sabulous Antiquity hath, as Scaliger conceives, represented him blind, quod aliorume, more oculis non wieretur.

In proble-

mat. Gelli- more oculis non uteretur.

an prob. 72. Nor do I see any more reason to believe what is said of Empedocles, that he cast himself into the stames of Mount Gibel, at cam repente non apparnisset, saies Lastantius, abiise ad Deos credereur. For Empedocles was so farre from that extravagance of ambition, that Laertius assures us, that with incredible constancy he resuled a Royall crown presented to him, preserring a life peaceable and iree from those vaine Grandeurs, before the greatest enjoyments of Princes. And indeed the story is good for none but Polititians, who comment on and make their advantages of it, when they credit it no more than they do a many others; nor indeed do Pausanias and Timess in Laertins, dissemble the falshood of it; this latter concluding his opinion with theirs in part of an Epigram, Si se flagrantem male sanus jecit in Ætnam ; Quomodo adhuc Megaris structa sepulchra jucent ?

Divinar. instit. l.3. ç. 18.

For my part, it shall ever be my saith, that the vast paines and industry of this Philosopher in the disquisition of naturall things considered, if he dy'd in that manner, it proceeded rather out of his over curiosity to find out the cause of so miraculous an effect, as it afterward happened to Pliny in the burning of Vesuvius, than out of any designe he had to get into the Catalogue of Plin. in the Gods, by so hazardous and indiscreet a reso-

Having therefore brush'd off the dust which hid the lustre & perfection of these living Images and modells of vertue, we come now to what is most materiall to our purpose, that is, to answer those proofs, which may be drawn out of Pliny and other Writers, who would fasten on them the black patches of diabolicall Magick, adquam discendam, sayes Pliny, Pythagoras, Empedecles, Lib-30.c.1; Democritus, Plato, navigavere, exiliis verius quam peregrinationibus susceptis. This he more particularly confirmes of Democritus, when he addes in the same place, Plenuma, miraculi et hot, pariter utrasý, artes effloruisse, Medicinam dico, Magicená, eddem atate; illam Hippocrate, hanc Democrito illustrantibus. And ellewhere he saies, he was Magorum post Pythagoram studiosissimus, 216.2.6.17) and that he maintain'd thoulands of litle stories and ridiculous propositions which could not be effected but by Magick. Of this mettall were these, that of the blood of severall young birds might be engendred a Serpent, which eaten would cause a persect understanding of the singing of Birds, that there were certain herbs to powerfull and endu'd with such vertue, that they were requisite in the invocation of the Gods, and would make criminals confesse what judges and torments could not. He affirmes surther that

zib. 28. he had writ a Book of the nature of the Cameleon, which contained things absolutely triviall,

Lib.30.c.1. Magical, and superstitious; and lastly that he had publish'd the works of Dardanns a famous Magician, whereto he added his own traught with sollies of the same nature, and abundance of vaine observations.

Empedocles he is a little more favourable to, in that he gives him not the quality of Magician, but only where he makes him one of the ancient Philosophers who travell'd into Ægypt; nor indeed were there any proofes to make him such, if Satyrus did not let fall a word to that purpose in Laertins, where he cites nine or ten verses of this Philosopher's, wherein are comprehended his Migicall operations, and which are all the ground whereupon the Moderns have made him act the part of a Magician. Of thele, one of the most considerable is Delrio who hath ranked among the miraculous operations of ancient Magicians those of Empedocles when he mitigated the fury and violence of the Etesian winds, paralleling it with that of one Erric King of the Goths, who was surnam'd Windy-cap, because he made the wind to blow which way soever he turn'd it. To that may be added what is said of his making the Plague to cease in the Country of the Salinuntians, and of the women he deliver'd of a long and dangerous suffocation of the

Lib 2.qu.9.

Matrix. But fince it may well be imagin'd, that he omitted these things because he thought them either sabulous or naturall, we may as safely passe the same sentence on those we have specified as well of him as Democritus, since they are all of the same coyne; and that to speak seriously of them, it is absolutely irrationall to think these two great persons guilty of such putful weaknesses contrary to the considence we should have of their vast Learning and integrity, had we no other security for it then that of Luoretius and Hippocrates. The former thinks it an honour to be the Celebrator of Empedacles's vertues, when after a long discourse in the praise of Sicily, he saies, that,

Nil tamenhoc habuisse vivo praclarius in se, Nec santtum magis & mirum clarumg, videtur, Carmina quinetiam divini pettoris ejus Vociferantur, & exponunt praclara reperta, Ut vix humanà videatur stirpe creatus.

The latter, whom we may justly call the Oracle of truth, assures us in his Epistles what account we should make of the admirable wisdome of Democritus, which gave Celsus occasion to call Lib. 10. him, magni nominis Philosophum; and Gellius, c. 12, 17. nobilissimum Philosophorum; wrum prater alios venerandum, authoritate g, antiqua praditum.

But as the same turf brings forth many times both wholsome and hurtfull herbs, and Bees suck honey whence Caterpillers do poison; so the travels, which they say these Philosophers underwent, to learn Magick, must now serve us as a pregnant proof, that they were the occasions of their

.K 3

Apollon.

f.3.

their great Learning and Polymathy. And this must be the more probable, if we restest on what hath been already said of the Magick of the Ægyprians, and the travels of Orphens, Zoroastes, and Lib.de vita Pythagoras; as also on the authority of Philostratus, who, though of a contrary opinion to us, as to the Sages of Persia and the Agyptians, yet sayes, that Pythagoras, Democritus, and Empedocles, notwithstanding their conversation with them, would not learn anything of their Science. To itrengthen this yet further, we may adde the negative authority of Laertins, who makes not the least mention of the Magick of Democritus, and but one word by the way of that of Empedocles, not specifying, contrary to his custom, any thing he had done by the means of it, without bringing on the stage the common solution of this kind of argument. And yet it were but just to urge it, when he from whom it is taken had made it his businesse to say all he could, and to particularize whatever belongs to the Subject he treats on. For instance, if any should undertake to give an exact account of all the Sciences, and should say nothing of Medicine, it might be justly inferr'd, he did not rank it among them. So it may be concluded, that Lacrting and two hundred and eleven Authours, whom he quotes, had not heard ought of the Magick of these two Philosophers, since he sayes not any thing of it in his Book, where yet he intended a full collection, even to the jugling tricks of Pythagoras, and the most inconsiderable particulars, though fabulous, he had read of others.

Bur as to Democritue in particular, we may Lib.30.c.z. balance Pliny's authority with what he sayes himself of the doubt which many made to believe things so leight and triviall of a man so wise and discreet in all his other actions. And to that adde the contrary authority of Gellins, who hath made Lib. 19; an expresse Chapter, De portentis fabularum qua c.12. Plinius secundus indignissime in Democritum Philofaphum confert; where he discovers at large the vanity of all the forementioned fables, and at last. concludes with these words; Multa autem videntur ab hominibus male solertibus hujusmodi commenta in Democriti nomen data, nobilitatis, autoritatisq, ejus perfugio utentibus. Not indeed do Ifind any more than two things in these objections of Pliny, which we may at all flick at, that is, the magicall books written by Democritus, and those of Dardanus publish'd by him. To which may be antiver'd, that fuch proofs conclude not directly; as we have shewn in the fixth Chapter of this Apologie; that these books are not pecified by Lacrins, or any other, and that it is extreamly uncertain who that Dardanus should be. For though Pliny, Tertullian, and Apuleius make him a great Magician, yet all they say of him is upon the credit of Columella, who layes,

At si nulla valet medicina repellere pestem, Dardania veniant artes.

Zib.10

If we will refer the businesse to the Civilians, this Dardanus may well be some other than a Magician, since they say, that Dardanarii are properly Seplasiarii, Propola, Proxeneta, that is, Engressers and Regraters, who fill their barns and thore-houses with all sorts of provision, to be sold spain at extraordinary rates, when a dearth should K 4 happen

Ţ 36 The History of MAGICK. f 0 servat. happen, as it is learnedly interpreted by [f] Cuja-d. 10.0 19. cius and [h] Turnebus. To this I adde, to leave 4.10.619. h Adverthis erroneous periwasion as naked as may be, far 1.9 c 3. what [i] Solinus, speaking of the stone Cathochii Cap. 9. tes, which fluck to the hands of those that handled. it, as it it had been of a viscous and glewy nature. saith, Democritum Abderitem oftentatione scrupuli hujus frequenter usum, ad probandam occultum natur a potentiam in certaminibus qua contra magos ba-. buit. And to that, the opinion of the Spaniard Torroblanca, who layes expressely, that Magians: Delittor Damoniacam pleno ore negarunt Democritus, Aver-Magic.l.2. roos, Simplicius, & alii Epicurei qui una cum Sadc. 2.471.2. ducais Damones effe negarum. For indeed he welldiscover'd what account he made of Spirits and Magick, when he pleafantly laugh'd at those Lucian.in young men of Abdera, who had diignied them-Philops cud selves like Devils, purposely to frighten him in. his solitude, and that being sent for by King Da-Imperat. Fulian. in rius, and entreated by him to raile up his wife, he Epift. answer'd him with a good morall instruction, that: he would do it with all his heart, provided he would bring him but three men who had never bewai.'d the death of their neerest friends; for: there needed no more than to write their names, and put them upon his wife's tomb, to make her rise again immediately. This was much different from the proceeding of Simon Magus, or rather Glyeas An- the counterfeit Monk Santabareaus, who entreatnal. P.4. ed by the Emperour Basilins, that he might see 1.415. his Son, though dead, was much more kind than Democritus, for he gave him a meeting with him, as he went a hunting, and fuffer'd them to embrace one another for some time; which it was as gasie for him to do by his Enchantment, as it was: impossible impossible for Democritus, who had attain'd the knowledge of all things, fave that of Magick.

Digitized by Google

44.

Nor is my admiration lesse, that Delrio should also refer thereto what was done by Empedocles to hinder the over-violence of the winds that blew in his Countrey. For Laertius explaning it, sayes, He commanded a many Asses to be flay'd, & their skins to be made into bags, and put upon the tops of mountains, to represe the immoderate gusts of the Etesian winds. Wherein it is easily perceived there was no more Magick, than in the industry he used to deliver the Salinumians from the plague caused by the noisomnesse of a river, by cutting into it two little rivulets, which disfolv'd the viscousnesse, and carried away all the filth, or in the simple cure he did of the suffocation of the Marrix, which yer hath given some occasion to ay, that he raifed a woman to life, and to Satyrus n Lucrius, that he was a Magician, though mest part of the veries he produces to prove it, and among others thele, Pharmaca queix pellas morbos, releves q, senestam Percipies, qua cantta tibi communico soli Extinctum á, hominem nigro revocadis ab Orco.

hould be interpreted as Talentonins sayes, of a se- Rer. recenret he had to keep a body, for sometime, from ditar. 1.2. corruption, though deprived of nourishment, re-6.1,00 3. piration, and the beating of the Arteries; upon the explication whereof may be consulted Galen, Lib.6. de Goreus, and the forementioned Talentonius. -locis affe-

Drawing now neer unto the end of the Chap-tis, c. 5.in ter, I have briefly two things to note upon the deris, Romance we have from Philastratus in the life of Apollonius.

Antrop.
1.13 e.3.
lib.de Divinat.

tencie of Volateranus, Cassiedorus, Boissardus, and de Lancre, who assure us there is now to be seen in the Vatican at Rome a book, Defiguris conicio, composed by Apollonius Thyanaus, the ambiguity of the name having made them mistake him sor Apollonius Pergaus, simamed Magnus Geometra, who liv'd in the time of Cleomedes, an hundred and fifty years before the nativity of our Saviour : for he it was that writeight books de Ominiceno, four whereof are translated out of the Greek by Frederick Commandin, printed at Bologne in the year 1 566. This being granted, as needing no other proof, I shall say, first, that this Apollomins Thyanaus might be some vertuous man, of a vast and powerfull wit, one who made excellent advantages of philosophicall speculations and his own nature, to dispose of that of Kings and Princes, and so came as neer the Hero's and Demi-Gods, as he was far from the ordinary fort of men. Whence-Sidonius Apollinaris took occasion very much to celebrate one of his friends, a Counsellour to, and of great authority with Evaria King of the Goths, putting him into the scales with this Philosopher. Lege virum, said he to him (Fidei Catholica pace prafata) in plurimis similem tui, idest, à divitibus ambitum, nec divitias ambientem, cupidous scientia, continemem pecunia, interepulas abstemium, inter purpuratos linteanum. This certainly might well feem strange in the mouth of a Bilhop, and a friend who would commend another, were it not evident by the testimonies of Enfebius and Caffindorus, that this Apollonius was a famous Philosopher and a very wife man-Befides, that it were imprudence to credit the fi-Lions

Lib.8. epist.3. THE MITTONY OF MAGICA.

ctions of Philostrains rather than the authorities of St. Hierom, and Justin Marryr, who assigne no other cause of all his miraculous operations than the knowledge he had of Nature, and so absolutely clear him of Magick; the former saying in his Epistle to Paulinus, Apollanius sive Mague, ut vul Ep. 103. gui lognitur, sive Philosophus, ut Pythagorici tradunt. The latter is much more open in his Que-Qu.24. stions to the Orthodox, Apollanius uvir naturalium potentiarum, & dissensionum at g. consensionum earum peritus, ex hac scientia mire faciebat, non authoritate divina; hanc ob rem in omnibus indignit assumptione idonearum materiarum que eum adjuvarent ad id persiciendum, quod essiciebatur.

But if this be not enough, we may read in St. Quell in Anastasius and Cedremus, that one Julian a Chal- S. Script. dan, and another famous Magician called Manethon, fleighted all the naturall performances of Apolloniss, as being nothing in comparison of what they daily did, by the means of Geotick and prohibited Magick; whereas there cannot any proof to the contrary be drawn out of a many Authours, who have forg'd as many lies and Chimerasupon his life, as all our old Romances have done on that of Paladin Rowland. For Vopiscus In D. Au-] made not that Book he promised of his History; relianose-Sidanius had describ'd him such as we have repre-pift.3.1,8. sented him; Tascine Victorianus and Nicomachus. are not to be met with, in any Library; fothat it cannot be judg'd in what sense they writ of him. And for the more ancient, Hierocles had borrow'd Eufeb. in all his relation from Philostrains, who had dreff d'Hieroelem. up his at the request of the Empresse Julian as att the present, Love-stories and Romances are writeten for the entertainment of Queens and Prin-celles.

Digitized by Google

1.3.6.2.

cesses. Besides the false notes of his own imagination, he made use of those of one Maximus, who had written a relation of what Apollonius had done at Tarsus, but his main assistance was the Diary or Diurnall of Damis. Of the integrity of this Dumis, fince a Lion may be known by his claw, and that a man need not drink up the Sea, to try whether it befalt; we are not to make the least account, since he is so impudent as to affirm, Lib. r.e.3. in Philostraeus, that he had seen the chains wherewith Prometheus had been fasten'd to Mount Cancafus, which were yet in the flones, when he pafsed it with Apollonias, who was travelling to the Indies. But as all things, even the most fabulous, have some ground, and that all painting supposes a firm and solid body under it, so must it be acknowledg'd, that this great Volume blown up with falsities, was written by Philostratus out of no other designe, than to make a parallel between the miracles of this Philosopher, and those of Jesus Christ, purposely to undermine the soundations of our Religion, and fet people at a losse, whether of the two they rather ought to credit, our Saviour or Apollonius. The same course took Eumapius, an implacable enemy of the Christians, to disparage the miracles of Saints and Martyrs, by advancing a many invented by himself of Plotinus, Sosspacer, Porphyrius, Maximus, Iamblicus, and divers other Platonists, whose lives he writ. That the calestands thus with Philostratus, the conje-Eture is but too probable; for the Empresse 34lie's defire, to see something of his writing (as being a man very polite and eloquent) might well give him occasion to publish that chimericall, yet pernicious History, in the time of the fixth Persecution, fecution, which happen'd under Septimus Severus, about two hundred and ten years after Christ, when the Papans endeavour'd the destruction of Christianity, no lesse by Artifices than by open war. Upon this very account was it, that Vopisus In Divo celebrated so highly, though in few, words, the Aureliano, vertues and miracles of this Thyanaus; for according to the learned Casauben's glosse upon it, Cum In notis ad hoc tibicine successful homines pagani ruentes jam su-Vopisum, perstitiones suas, nemo debet mirari Vopisum hoc loco in illius laudes ferri.

We may therefore passe our finall judgement on all this, with Paulus Orofius, and Leonard Vair, viz. That as the greatest part of the Fables of Poets, and other Heathen Writers, seem to have taken their disguises out of the holy Scriptures; as for instance, the Deluge in the time of Deucalion and Pyrrha, from that of Noah; the fall of Phaeton, from the miracle of Joshua; the Gyants war, from the Tower of Babel; the Ambrolia of the Gods, from the Manna of the Israelites; the plague at Rome from that in the Defert; and the Serpent of Esculapius, from the Brazen one erected by Moses. So without question all the extravagancies of Philostratus upon his Apollonius, took their rise from the true miracles of our Saviour, fince he hath been pleafed to oppose the Damon, which came to give Apollonius's mother notice of Lib.1. c. 3, his nativity, to the mystery of the Amunciation; 4,7,9,19. the singing of Swans, to that of the Angels; the 6.1,6,16. lightening that fell from Heaven, to the Star that 1.8.6.5. appear'd in Bethleem; the Letters sent to him from divers Kings, to the adoration of the Megis the discourses he held, when very young, in the Temple of Asculapine, to the disputation of Christ among the Doctours; the questions put to him by his Disciples, to those of the Apostles; the judgement he passed upon the Eunuch and the Concubine, to that on the woman taken in adultery; the apparition he met with upon Mount Caucasas, to the temptation of the Devil in the wildernesse; the incredulity of the Ephesians, to that of the Jews; his deliverance of a young man possessed with the Devil, to the like action of Christ; the Maid he railed to life at Rome, to Jairus's daughter; his appearing to Damis and Demetrius without the City, to that of our Saviour to the two Disciples going to Emmaus; the words he said to them, to those of Jesus Christ, Spiritus carnem & offa non habet; and lastly, his death and ascension, either to that of Christ, or to the translation of Enoch or Eliah. All these parallels I have the rather thought fit to particularize, to shew the malice, and the pitifull and indiscreer subtlety of Philostrains; and consequently, that the lafest way to refine all these fictions, is to denythem any relation to Magick, contrary to what Francifeus Pieus hath done, because Jews and Gentiles might make their advantage of them, and thence draw an example, to prove what they have so often said of Christ in the Go-spe', Now we know thou hast a Devil, for thou castest om Devils, through Beelzebub the prince of Devils. Besides that, we must with Ensebins absolutely Meroclem, deny them, and so proceed, according to his dire-Etions in the discovery of them, that we may lay open the weak grounds they are built upon, and all the imperinencies and contradictions they are cic. in Pa-guilty of, Be vetuft a habeantur ista, non ne in vin-radoxis. cula virorum sinty sed eblettament a puer oram.

De rerum Pranot. 1.7. €. 10.

CHAP. XIII.

Of the Genii attributed to Socrates, Aristotle, Platinue, Porphyrius, Jamblicus, Chicus, Scaliger, and Cardan.

He Jesuit Thyram quotes an observation be apparite of some people sufficiently superstitious, who Spirit.c. 14. lay that all Children borne in the Ember-weeks num. 346. commonly bring along with them their caules or certaine membranes, and are much more likely then others to gaine the acquaintance and familiarity of the Genii designed for their conduct. The same Priviledge they also pretend to, according to Ptolemy, who have the Moon, in con-Quadrip. 1. junction with Sagittary, Lady of their actions, 4. c. 13. or with Pifces, of the Nativity. All we inferre texts. 18. hence, is, to imagine one of these two happened in the Nativities of all those for whom we make this Chapter, fince that by the Anthority of most Authors, every one of them might prefume he was brought into the Temple of Glory and Immortality by the extraordinary affiltance of some Genius or familiar Dæmon, which was to them, as Apuleius layes, singularis prafectus, domesticus Lib. de Deo speculator, individuus arbiter, inseparabilis testis, ma-Sociat. lorum imprebator, bonorum prebator. But fince shis opinion cannot be afferted without much injury done to these great men, and taking away from the obligation we owe their excellent Labours, by the meanes whereof, and not by that of these Damons and tutelary Gods, so many precious reliques and monuments of their Learning have come come to our knowledge: me thinks it is but just we should continue them in their deserved reputation, and shew the true meaning may be given this Conversation and correspondence, how extravagant their imaginations are who believe it to have been such as that of the Angels with holy men, or that of Devills with Magicians.

For to come as near the truth as may be, we d Lib. de are to observe that the Platonicks, as [d] Jam-Myfter. blichus and [e] Foxius affirme, affigned four kinds e Comment of rationall Greatures, after that which they in Phadon, called the first Being, or first Goodnesse, that is, the first Author and Mover of all things; that is to fay, the Celestial Gods or Angels; the Damons inferior to them; the Heroes; and the fouls of all men. The principall duty and employment Zib. de an- of the Damons being, as Proclus affirmes, only ind et Da- to enterpole and manage the affaires and conduct mone. of the last, and to be as it were their guides and interpreters towards the Gods, some have taken occasion, from the resemblance of these actions, with those of the souls over their bodies; to call them sometimes by the name of Damens. And to do this they thought there was much more reason, when they arriv'd to such a defiance of the Slavery and tyranny of the matter wherein they were as it were immered, that they had the absolute dispofall of all their faculties, and were as miraculous in all they did as those Dzmons were thought.

De Deo So- According to this tense that does Apuleius lay, Animus humanus etiam nunc in corpore situs, Damon nuncupature; and Heraclitus, that the Spirit of a man was to him instead of a Genius, is $100-in-aman was to him instead of a Genius, is stop in besides that it may easily be inferred that the just desires and good operations of the soul may in like manner be qualified with the same of God. Adde to this what Porphyrius sayes, after Plato in his Timens, that God hath assigned the superior faculty of our Mind as a Dxmon to conduct us, and that it may be justly called Endamon, who looks on Wisdom as the Pharos that should direct it in all the actions of his life.

——Diine nunc ardorem mentibus addunt Eurgale ? an sua cui á deus sit dira cupido ?

This might well ferve for a generall folution to that whatever may be said of the samiliarity and acquaintance of Socrates, Aristosle, and others, with certain Devils; were it not also requifice, to answer the objections may be made against them in particular. To begin then with that famous and so well known Demon of Secrates, no lesse celebrated by their Authority from whom we have the history of it, than by the great De fatt. diversity of opinions concerning it, Some affirm it & dist. might truely be some Apparition, & others that it Socrat. in was a pure fiction of that Philosopher, or of his Theage. two Disciples Xenophon and Plato, who as falsely advanc'd the report of this divine assistance, as that of the Oracle's declaring him the wifest of Mankind, as if there were any reason to bestow the highest and proudest Title imaginable, on a lewd fellow that publikely professed Ignorance, Sloath and Sodomy, who lived upon almes, knowing not any art or discipline, and endeavouring to discreditali the Sciences by his ignorant Wildome,

Passerat.in Poemat. de nibile: Socratici g gregis fuit hac Sapientia quondam Scire nihil-

a man that breath'd nothing but the introduction of Atheisme, deservedly reproved and laugh'd at hy Aristophunos, Timon, Aristophe and Atherent. And lastly a man that for all the praises have been given him; is only oblig'd to two of his disciples; persons not free from suspicion, and consequently not absolutely creditable, who might as well write Apologies for him, and outry one another in his commendations, as Gellins observes sharing of them did when he write his Institutions of Lib, 14.23. Cyrns, out of amulation to the other, who had published ten Books of Common-Wealth,

But these are desperate Sallyes of a dangerous sort of spirits, who purposely so expose him to generall consempt, so freely discredit the Authority of these two great Philosophers, as also those of Apaleion, Maximus Tyrius, Cicero, Plyanch and the best Authours, out of no other motive then that of meer vanity and a groundless hope of being thought more criticall and quick-sighted then others for breaking and battering this ancient image, I should, for my part, rather be of their pumber who reverence it, out of a belief that so many Authors would not bestow such Elogies on Secratory, or call him, as Martial did, maguum Senen, as Persius, berbatum Magistrum, as Val. Maximus, pallianus, animaism varilitatis re-

1 ib. de deo Socratis.

bors, or lastly as Appleius, Druing pundentie seneme, if he had not been to semous for his wildome, that they are rather to be excused their condemned who, with some reason thought he had acquired it by the savour and affiliance of his Daniel.

With this misfortune, neverthelesse, that there is as much uncertainty in the explication of the nature of it according to this opinion, as there was malice and calumny in the precedent. For [o] Appleius will have it to be a God, [p] Lastantius o Ibidem. and [q] Tertullian, a Devil, [r] Plate, invisible; P Divinar Appleius affirmes that it might be visible (s); Lib. 2.c.14. Plutarch that it was a certain sneezing on the log. lest or right side, according to which Socrates pre- r In Theage fag'd good or bad inecesse in the thing undertaken, s De Dee. (t) Maximus Tyrius sayes, it was only a remorse socr. of conscience against the violence of his natural 26, 27. inclination, which was neither heard nor feen, whereby Socrates was restrain'd from doing what was ill; (u) Pompanatius, that it was the ascendent u Deinof his Nativity, & lastly (x) Montaigne that it was cantationia certain impulsion of the will, that presented it self bus, c. 11. to him, beyond the direction of his discourse. But * Estayes. for my part, I think it may be truely and ration- it. ally said, that this familiar Dæmon of Socrates, which was to him, (y) in rebus incertis prospecta. y Apul. de tor, dubiis pramonitor, periculosis viator, was only the good regulation of his life, the wife conduct of his Actions, his experience of things, and the refult of all his Vertues, which wrought in him that prudence, which may justly be termed the salt and leafoning of all actions, the rule and line of all affaires, the eye which fees, directs and difposes all; and in a word, the Art of life, as Me dicine is the Art of health. So that there is much more reason to believe that the soul of this Philosopher, not only refin'd from its violent passions, but inrich'd with all sorts of Vertues, was the true Dæmon of his carriage, than tdimagine him entangled in the dehalions and converting converting with Hobgoblins, crediting them or following their directions, an imagination so absurd that Plutarch thought himself concern'd to endeavour to weed it out of our belief. For in his Book upon Sogrates's Damon he faies 2 that Secrates slighted not celestiall things, as the Athenians would have it believ'd at his condemnation, but that abundance of imaginary apparitions, fables, and superflitions having crept into the Philotophy of Pythagoras and his disciples, whereby it was become abiolutely ridiculous and contemptible, he endeavour'd to regulate it by prudence, to cleanse it from all those Stories, and not to believe any more then what he thought rationall.

To this we may adde a generall Goodnesse shining through all his actions, and that he had no other deligne then to lead his neighbour in the paths of vertue, and thence perceive the little ground we have to conclude this Genius to have been a bad Dæmon. Which yet we should rather believe than that it was a good Angel, since that he must either have it voluntarily and by divine permission (a secret hath not been yet reveal'd) or by the force of his conjurations. But these must needs be vain at that time, wherein Angels rather commanded men, and were not courted with so much facility as since the passion of JesusChrist, who hath deliver'd us from the slavery of fin, to make us equalls and companions to Angels, who would not be ador'd by St. (2) Gen. 18, John, as they had sometimes been by (a) Abraham.

z Apoc.

This foundation layd, there remaines only to resolve three difficulties which may happen concerning this Damon, The first is, why he never perswaded perswaded him to do any thing, but only not to undertake something, and to take heed and avoid it. To this it may be answered that Socrates needed it not, in as much as being naturally enclin'd to whatever were vertuous, his particular endeavour was, by a long habit, to arrive to that reservednesse which the greatest persons, even in their most violent passions, and not withstanding their courage, either have or ought to have. This is true prudence, which regulates their conduct, and makes them do all things wisely, qua ratio, saith Cicero, Poetas, maximed, Flomewam impulit, se principibus Heroum, Ulyssi, Agamemnoni, Diomedi, Achilli, certos deos discriminum of periculorum comites adjungerent.

The second is a proof taken from the Ecstasies which were ordinary to this person, whence fome conclude they could not happen to him but by the means of a Damon more powerfull then that of the perfection of his Soul. As if it were not more rationall, with Aristotle and Marsilius Lib. 13. de Ficinus, who represent Socrates as a man extream-immort. ly melancholy, to imagine their ecitalies as naw turall in him as those of Charles de Bouille, mentioned by Gefner and Trithemins. For Melancho-In Biblioth. ly may for a long time entertaine the Soul, in Scrip torib. a deep meditation, and when the Spirits attend Ecclesiast. the soule to that place where it retreats as it were into its centre, to do it some service there, the other parts are deprived of their influent heat, and feem not to have any spark of life, and: this is properly what is called Ecstasie.

The last depends upon the great number and certainty of the prædictions of this Philosopher; whence is drawn the same inference as from the precedent Digitized by Google precedent, as that Socrates was certainly the instrument of that Dæmon, which not content to. have declar'd him the wisest of all men, would needs add a further respect to him by the meanes of his Oracles and antwers. To this may be faid, that, besides that it were an open breach of Horace's commandment.

De art Pact.

Nec Deus intersit, nist dignus vindise nodus - Inciderit.

to attribute these predictions of Secrates, and the advice he gave his Friends, to some Divinity; it were more rationall to conceive, that, as he was absolutely enclin'd to morall actions, so had he so particularly consider'd all the accidents that happen to men, that any thing almost gave him some light to judge of and soretee what was to come. Hence it also came that he was reputed the eighth wife-man of Greece, because he abfolutely refign'd himself to the practice of commendable and versuous Actions, not medling with the fruitlesse speculations of the Sciences; which, like mony, are sometimes current, sometimescry'd down, one while samp'd one way, another, another, but alwayes embard and very leight. And herein he imitated the seven famous persons of Antiquity, among whom was only Thales whole wildome exceeded the contemplation of those things which were in common use among men; for, him excepted, all the rest acquir'd that so honourable title by their grean understanding of Morality, and Matters of State and Government.

There are those, who, to make Aristoile now inscriour inseriour to Socrates, maintaine he had the purticular assistance of some Damon. But these, methinks, do his doctrine as much violence as [e] Cardon did that of Averses (who never here De fubilieved there were any Devils) when he introduces a Damon who call'd himself one of his diletoles and tollowers; or the Alchimitts daily do to Avicenna, to whom, (though, in [f] Ægidins f Quodli-Romanus, he absoutely deny the possibility of qual. 8. ex their metallick transmutation) they yet attribute ejus comthe knowledge and practile of the Philosopher's ment in lib. fione. For there is nothing, to certain in the Meteor. Doctrine of Aristotle, not wherein his Interpremers do so much agree; as that he never admitted g Quest de any other intelligences then there which caned Damonib. the motion of the celetialt Bodies, discarding art, 1.

All other kinds of Damons and Angels, so con partis de firming his own principles; and admitting no-universo thing which was not known to him either by mo-spiritu.

This is the general afferth i Deincanon of the Peripateticks, with [g] Aquinas; [h] tation.c. 10

William Bp. of Paris, [i] Pompanatius [k] Cardan subtil. et l.

[h] Theupolus, [m] Riolanus, [n] Niphus; and 6.de variet

[o] Bernard Mirandulanus, who expressely layed, c. 93.

Illud negare non possumus, Aristotelem ratione natura-11n Acalinon perveniss miss ad formas qua in corpore aliquo demic. consums. To the same purpose Niphus, before him, m comment faid, that such forms and separated woolfances, ac-in Feinel. l. faid, that such forms and separated workances, ac-in Fernel. I. cording to the doctrine of the Paripatoticks, eram 1. de abdi-Teretismata quadam & sigmenta, such as Their tis.c. 11. polus sayes Aristotle ever slighted, tanquam Sphin-Damon.c.3 gir & Chimera inania nomina, attributing o Lib. 29 what incommonly said of them, to nature, that de singul. is, to the properties of naturall things, to the certam, p. humour and temperament of Animals, to the 519.

4 · qual

qualities of places, and to their vapours and exhalations, leaving nothing at all for the substances And that there is not any dispute concerning them in his workes, is, not that he could not affert tham without some Demonstration, but that he direct not openly refute them, not because he would not contradict Plate, who had gaind much reputation by introducing them, but that he would avoid the centure of impiety by opposing the Lawes of his Country, & the common opinion concerning Gods & Oracles. However it be, we cannot conclude according to his doctrine, that they were any thing but dreames and Chime-For if there were any, they must be either Corporeall or incorporeall; to fay they were incorporeall were to contradict what he fayes in the 12. of his Metaphysicks, that there is no Intelligence but is joyn'd to some body. Besides they must be thought all good; and void of malice and corruption according to what he sayes in the ninth Book of the same treatise, that sin cannot proceed but from matter; wherein, as he explaines it in his Ethicks, lyes the lenfuall appetite, which, when ir exceeds and over-rules the rationall causes that deformity. If they were corporeall, their Bodies-were either eternall or mortall; the former they cannot be, because, in all his Physicks, he asfigns but one only body of that nature, that is that of Heaven. If mortall, they were either simple or compound; if simple, what he sayes in the first and second Book, de Anima, that she is never found in a simple Body, cannot any way stand with it; if the latter, they were consequently corruptible, palpable, perceptible, and inbject to a thouland changes and alterations, which canpor be admitted. Nor Digitized by Google

Nor does it amount to much that he hath the word Damon in leverall places of his Books, for then it must be conceived he speakes according to the opinion of the vulgar & the Platonicks, as Alexander & Niphus affirme, upon the fift of his Metaphy ficks, and the third, Of the generation of Animals, Chap. 14. Or haply he made ule of that word speaking of God, as is evident from that passage in the second Book of his Rhetorick, where he sayes, that the Demon is sent to divers persons of extraordinary Prosperities, not our of any afsection he bears them, but co make their Calamiry the more remarkable; for certain it is that only God can lend those prosperities,

Besides all these proofs, me thinks there is one very pertinent may be had out of his Book Of Divination by dreames, where to shew there was nothing supernaturall in them, he sayes, Omnino autem queniam nonnulla etiam somniant animalia, a Deo certé missa non crunt somnia, neque hujus gratià fiunt, sed damonia sané ernnt, siquidem natura damenia est, non divina. For thoughit hath bred much controverly among the Interpreters and Commentators of Aristotle, about the sense wherein the Epither, he gives Nature, should be taken, yet me thinks Leonicus hath guess'd better then any of the rest; and that the Learned [p] p comment. Carpentarius hath discover'd the full fignification on that of that Phrase, when he sayes that Aristotle would place. thereby shew, [q] in natura bené ordinata depen- q In cap. deme ex coelestium orbium conversione ipsis Intelli-13. Alcine geneiu, eam vim ad omnia explicanda reperiri posse digress. 4. propter quam alii ad Damones confugerum. This pag. 338. explication does first confirme what we have said before of Aristotles's opinion concerning these separated separated substances, and then confute the only cap. 7. lib. Reason which Cefalpinus gives to affert them, de inveftig. even out of his very doctrine. Damon.

.154

Tois certainly were enough to fatisfic the World how much this Philosopher is, injured, when he is charged with the familiarity of one of thele Genis or Damons, which he never took for any thing but dreams and imaginations. are yet tome trivall. Objections railed by certain Authors, who wanting Reason to compasse their designe, sy to Stratagems and cast dust in our eyes.

st. Secunda Medina and others upon [s] Aquinas would atert. I.

nime, that the reach of our spirit is not so grear, as to be able to dive into the knowledge of mature, as did that of Aristotle, without the particular affiitance of some good or bad Genius. And that he made use of the latter, is not, say they, to be questioned. after the proofs whith [s] Laertius, and [t] William, Bishop of Paris, afford.

s In proem. de vit. Philosoph. t I. Part.

Spirit.

Cap. 92.

The former cites a Book of his treating of Magick; the latter, in divers places of his Works; de universo layes that this Philosopher had for Counsellour in all his Actions, a Spirit he made to come down out of the Sphere of Venns, by the facrifice of an infinar'd Lamb, and some other Ceremonies. 153. 6-2. part. c. 6. This piece of superstition gave Emanuel de Moura

Lib. de Ena occasion to relate out of Philoponus in the life of fd. Sest.2; Aristotle, against those who would make him an Atheist that he was to firangely cajoll'd by a Woman, that she made him consult the oracle of Apollo. Adde to this what Plutarch and Laer-· timsaffirme, that he ordain'd by his last will, that there hauld be dedicated to Jupiter Sover and Minerva Soura the efficies of certain Animals, of flone, of four cubits, in performance of the VOVY vow he had made for Nisanor's health. Besides all which, the said do Moura would have him con-sett 2. c.2. sesse in his sirst book, Of Heaven and the World, Se num. 20. cum alies obtaisse diss arms sacrificia, in resignition nem trina perfections in sis invena.

From thelepassages may be inferred, not only that he beloev'd Devils, and was very supertitious in his Religion, but also that he had flumbled on the hardest & highest mystery of our Faish, that is, the Trinity of Perions in the Unity of Estence, as [y] Salmeron, would have it, and before him y Tom. 2. [2] Trapezomina, who hash writ a complease book, traff.25 Of the conformity of Aristotles dodrine with the feet 3. z Lib. 2. de Seriptures' It was aliethe opinion of the famous comparat. Divine [a] Henry and ffia; that Aristothe might Aristot.& naturally arrive to as perfect a knowledge of Di-Platonia. vinity, as that discover'd to our first Parent, when a Apud Sihe slept in the terrestriell Paradife, or that of St. Decad. Pe-Paul when he was taken up into Heaven. But regr. quaf. the spinning out of these proofs, would bring us cap signs. at last to discourse of the salvation of this Philo- quelient. sopher, an opinion so common, that one of the Fathers and Doctours of the Church bath faid, speaking (as it were) to him, Art fredery tandaria ubi nones, & cruciaria ubies; and Werling cites a cerrain Philosopher called Lumbers du Mons, In addit.2. who hath made a Magidrall question, upon what ad Trithemay be racionally choughe of it. I covere there mium, fore much more rationall to unravellall these absendities, which fall one in the cierk of another, without aims or and, and clear up the forementioned, than its digreffe into further repeti-LIONS:

We shall them begin with the authority of Meading public feems to have little reason under the foote stotle of his own proper faculties, to bestow on him others; and to deny him the excellencie of his own nature, to make him subject to that of a Damon. For what ground is there, that those naturall Truths, which he sayes, Aristotle arriv'd to the knowledge of, should now be thought suspicious and doubtfull, through a swarm of Moderns and Innovators, daily encreasing under the banners of Telesius, Patricius, Campanella, Verulamio, Jordan, Brun, and Baffonisu, out of no other deligne, than to put a flur upon that Philosophy, and to undermine that great building which Arifoile, and above twelve thousand who have writ upon him; have spent so many ages to build up; and this not so much by any demonstation or force of reason, as the advantage of that vicissirude and revolution of all things, which infensibly brings it to a declination, Virgil.

Et jam per munia clarior ignis Auditur, propins q, astus incendia volvum.

The book cited by Laertine of Aristotle's Magick, cannot at all confirm this opinion of Medina; for it is clear, that he thought it spurious, when citing it onely in the Proem to his Lives, he mentions it not in the particular Catalogue of this Philosophers works. Besides that, it may well be thought of the same cloth with that of Demoerism, mentioned before, and all those Magicall Manuscripts, which, as M. Gammin thinks, the modern Greeks have published under the name of Salomon, and divers of the Ancients. For it may be gathered from Laertins, that Aristotle afsirm'd therein, that the Parsian Mages medled non with

In notis ad Pfellum de Damonib. with Divinations; and consequently, it being father'd on him, there is more reason to conclude for our opinion, than that of our Adversaries.

Nor should they be so consident upon the authority of William of Paris, since that in another Lib. de leplace speaking of this Genius, he sayes, that Ari-gib.c. 28, stotle, deceptus fuit ab ipso familiari Damone suo quem de caso Veneris descendisse epinabatur, quod hoc ex somno Rustici cujusdam acceperat. This clearly shews he had taken this stat and pitifull relation out of a certain book of Conjunations and Astrologie, which Trithemius sayes was falsy pub-Antipali lissed under his name.

malef. 1. 2.

For Emanuel de Monra, he evidently injures 6.3. Philoponus, who, according to the Greek Text, and the old Translation conformable to that of 'Nunne sins, sayes onely, that Aristosle having attain'd the seventeenth year of his age, was advised by the Pythian Oracle, to apply himself particularly to Philosophy.

The clause in his Will, concerning the erection of the Statues he had vow'd for Nicanor, might, for a shift, make a better proof than any of the precedent, if this discreet Philosopher had not done it, in imitation of Socrates, to preserve his memory from the insamy of Atheism, and to leave a remorse of conscience for those who had accused him of it, which should make more for his justification, than the three Sacrifices he made the Gods, or the knowledge of the Trinity, attributed to him by diverse Catholike Doctours. For these are all Chimera's grounded meerly on what he sayes, speaking of the Ternary number, in his suffice of Heaven, and many the success in his first book of Heaven, and many the success in his suffice of the success in the same instrus.

xpouts a re deisus rere? That is, Quaproper hoc a natura numero sumpto, perinde at a, quadam illius lege, & in Deorum sacrificies celebrandis mit solemus. From which passage cannot be concluded any thing, but that Arisfoile sayes, that the number Three was much used in Sacrifices in his time. Somewhat to confirm this we have in Theocritus, when he sayes in his Pharmaceutria,

Ter libe, ter j, hac pronuncio myfica verba.

But that Aristotle neither did, or could have thought any such thing, is learnedly shewn Lib 3.c. 13. by Cardinall Bessure, who laught at Trapezontins, for taking so much pains to prove from adver(us Calumniat. that Text, that Ariffords had a perfect know-Platon. ledge of the Trinity. Which rashnesse deserves the greater centure, in that he never confider'd, that all the Fathers, and after them Aquinas, have I Part. qu. 32.art.1. mantain'd it impossible and impious, to endeavour the proof of leby naturall realons, and opposite to the authority of St. Paul, to make Aristotle and Plate to Eagle-fighted in the mysteries of our Religion. Besides, it is utterly discon-sonani rothe Philosophy of Jesus Christ, to cele-brate these Philosophers so highly in the apprehennon of Christian Truths.

Whence we may also with the same labout give Henry de Assia his answer, viz. that the estence of material! things is the onely object of the spirit of the way faring man, as the School-men expresser, that is of man while he is in this world.

Wete irour deligne to swell up this Chapter into a Volume, we need onedy make a particular refutation

igitized by GOOGLE

The History of MAGICK.

refutation of all may be faid of the Magick of the Platonicks; taking the relations of an infinite number of Authours, who would tain periwade us to things unterly impossible. But since it were vainly to iquander time away, to lop off the branohes in stead of pulling up the roots, we must with that begin the ruine of all these sabulous narrations, and thew, that whatever the Platonicks have advanc'd, either of Dæmons or Magick, can neither be prov'd by reason nor experience. For first, as to what they fay, that Nature cannot afford two Excreams without some Medium, cementing and uniting them; and that Heaven and Earth are two Extreams, which can have no other Medium than these intellectuall powers; The Peripateticks answer, that they neither assigne the Medium, nor the Extreams right; for they should have oppoled the first Mover, which is absolutely immutable, impassible, and immoveable, to things sublunary, and afterwards joyn them together by the celefiall Nature, which is naturally invariable and eternall, and yer potentially subject to mutarion, relembling God in its intelligences, and things transitory in its motion. We may as easily answer what they say, that the soul of the World being distused and dispersed thorow the whole Univerle is not idle, but produces Animals in all its parts, and that those generated in Fire and Air are properly these called Dæmons. For, besides that this universall Soul is formally denied by Mersennus in his book against Deists, Aristotle 1 Part, 2, never held, that an Animal that must use severall e.20. Organs, can be produc'd and conferv'd in the purity of those two Elements. And for their last reason, derived from those many effects, which mylt

Digitized by Google

159

certamine.

must necessarily be attributed to those causes, I would, before I am forc'd to allow it for good, they had farish'd, as they ought, [k] Pomponatins, k Lib. de [1] Cardan, and the learned Bishop [m] Bernard Incantat. 1 Contra-Mirandulanus, who pertinently thew, that to beditt. 6. leeve Angels and Damons, it were better to refer 214E.2. to the assurances of our Religion, than to all Lib.2.comthose experiences whereof a reason might be gitradict. ven out of the principles of naturall Philosophy. m Lib. 29. de fingul.

This granted, no question, but all that may be said of the Genii attributed to Porphyrius, Plotinus, and Iamblicus, may be referred to what we have already faid of the Damon of Socrates, and that the other stories and miracles related of them, are either meerly the flatteries of their Disciples and Followers, or the pure inventions of Eunapine, purposely advanc'd by him, to lessen the elteem which men had of the fanctity of the new Christians. And that the case stood thus: with these three Philosophers, it may be judg'd: by that Treatise of Ploting, De proprio Damone, that what he layes of it, was rather out of conjecture than experience. Nor could Porphyrius give better fecurity for the little credit he gave all those superstitious practices, than the Epistle n Lib.3. de read of him in [n] Theodoret, and [o] Eusebine. For canic. affest. o Prap. Evang 1.5. c.6, curat. Gra- he layes down therein eight of nine difficulties he made, touching the invocations of Devils, and their Sacrifices; the leaft whereof were enough to convince us, that he was no Magician. All the: trouble then fals upon Jambliem, because he was the man answer'd all those difficulties and doubts, which hath given Authours occasion to tell more miracles of him than the two former. But the: best on't is, that it is yet with lesse ground and. reason:

The Haltory of MAGICK.

reason; for as to Alestromancie, by which Zona- Timo 3. in ras, and most of the Dæmonographers affirm, that Valent. he endeavour'd to find out the name of him that should succeed the Emperour Valens, Ammianus Histor. Marcellinus, who liv'd in the fame time, delivers lib. 26. him from that calumny, not making the least mention of him in the particular account he hath given us of that story. And for his Ecstasies, evocations, and other miracles, a man needs not take the pains to refute them, because they sufficiently destroy themselves, both by the absurdity shat attends them, and that fear Eunapius was in, Lib. de vito be thought an Impoltour for his relations, tis Sopbi-This were enough to latisfie us, that thele Philo-flar.in sophers were nor Magicians, and that if there re- lamblico. main any difficulty concorning their Books, which might any way prejudice their innocence, as such as may the fraught with abundance of supersitions things, we refer them to the fixth Chapter of this Apologie, unlesse we should rather follow the opinion of Cardan, who speaking of chele Dæmons, fayes very judiciously, Nolim ego De Subtili-Atratinam hac sectari, velut Porphyrius, Psellus, at. 1.19.

lotinus, Proclus, Iamblicus, qui copiose de his que n videre, vetut historiam scripsorunt.

The same motive which made me speak of these ancient Philosophers, obliges me to say something of three modern, who are charg'd with an acquaintance and conversation with their Genis, that is, Chiens Æsculanus, Scaliger, and Cardan, whereof what I shall deliver of the first, tends rather to the vindication of Truth, than the merit of his person, or the advantage may be reaped from his Works. For the onely Commentary we have of his upon the Sphear of Sacrobosco sufficiently

Digitized by Google

·101

The History of MAGICK.

Difquifit. l.1. c.3.

102

ently discovers that he was not onely very superstitious, as Delrio cals him; but also that he had a soft place in his head, there being three things in it, that very much lay open his weaknesse. The first is, his interpretation of Sacrobosco's book, according to the tenie of Astrologers, Necromancers, and Chiroscopists. The second, his citations of abundance of fallifi'd Authours, fraught with old wives rales and fooleries, such as, for instance, that of Salomon, De umbris idearum; Hippar-chus, De vinculo spiritus; De ministerio natura; De Hierarchiis Spiritnum; Apollonius, De arte magica; Zoroastes, De Dominio quartarum octava Sphera; Hippocrates, De stellarum aspectibus secundum Lunam; Astafon, De Mineralibus constellatis; and divers others of the same metall. The third that he often makes use of the Revelations of a Spirit called Floron, which he faid was of the Order of the Chernbims, and being once ask'd what the spots in the Moon were, he roundly answered, Ut terra terra est. But, besides that he does not attribute this spirit to himself in any place of the said Commentary, it may be easily 11b.2.e.30. judged, that this relation is like what Pliny sayes of the Grammarian Appion, who invocated the

In his Demon ma-. niae

Devil, to know what Countrey-man Homer was. Orto that related by Bodin, of Hermolans Barbarus, who did the same, to know what Aristotle. meant by the word Emelechia. Or lastly, to what Niphus layes of one in his time, who saw the way y Comment to make the [y] Philosophers stone written in 2 in diffuu.3. piece of paper that was shewn him by a bearded Devil. For all which extravogancies, what bet-Netroman-ter solution can there be than that of Lucretia sit veral tius, Quis dabitat quin omne su hoc rationis egest as ?

Were I at liberty to follow my inclination rather than my duty, I should be loth to say any thing against the Gemi attributed to the two only men, whom we may oppose to the most learned and eminent of the Ancients, as being the last prochuckion and miracle of Nature, Scaliger, and Cardan. For I am clearly of opinion, that either they were themselves deceiv'd in acknowledging those Genii, because they could not, after much examination, find any cause of such extraordinary perfection; Or that they have done it out of modefly, as unwilling to discover, by their learning, how much all others were below them. Or lastly, they endeavoured, by those particular assistances, to elude the envie and jealousie, which might have been consequent to the great Fame they have acquir'd by their unwearied industry.

But fince Truth is the sooner sound by the associated disquisitions of a many, those may well deserve our attention, who say; first, That Scaliger practif'd that sleight by the example of all great persons; and secondly, that he might not be thought to give ground to the ambition of his Antagonist. The Genius he attributed to himself, was, as we find in his Poeticall Art, a simple Lib.3... sally and emotion of Spirit, whereby the Soul sap.26. was (as it were) enslamed in it self, and so elevated into the knowledge of things, during which a man may sometimes speak or write something he understands not, when the heat of that Enthu-sialm is over.

For

Lib. 16.

c.93.

For Cardan, 'tis true he speaks so variously of his Genius, that after he had absolutely affirm'd in a Dialogue entituled Tetim, that he had one, and that Venereall, yet participating of the narure of Saturn and Mercury, and in his Book, De libris propriis, that it communicated it self to hun by Dreams, he in the same place is at a losse, whether he truly had any or no, or that it was the excellencie of his own nature, Sentie. hom, fayes he, feu ex Genio mihi prafecto, feu quod natura mea in extremitate humane substantie condivionifg, & in confinie immortalium posica esfet, &c. and so concludes in his Book, De rerum vametate, that he had not any, confessing ingenuously, Ego certe nullum Damonem aut Genium mibi adesso cognosco. Whence it may sasely be judged, that he and Scaliger had no other Genius, than that of the vast learning they had acquir'd by their indefatigable labours, and the experience they had of things, upon which raising up their judgement, as on two Pyramids, they judged pertinently of all things, and fuffered nothing to escape them, till they had known and master dit.

अस्य देश वर्षेत्र । इ.स. वर्षेत्र । इ.स. वर्षेत्र

and te rich.

CHAP.

CHAP. XIV.

Of Alchindus, Geber, Artephius, Thebit, Anselme of Parma, Raymundus Lullius, Arnoldus de villanova, Peter d' Apono, and Paracelsus.

Should we credit the fabulous Philosophy of the Poets, who represent all things under the Mythology of their inventions, there were some ground to receive the Authority of Pliny, for good, Lib. 30. where he sayes that Magick is a Branch of Medi-c. 1. cine. The motive to believe this, is only, that the so much celebrated Sorceresse, Circe, is by the Poets thought to be the Sister of Esculapius, the first inventor of Medicine, and one of the Sons of Phoebus or the Sun, whose Daughter this Sorceriesse also was, according to the Poet, who, speaking of her, sayes very freely,

Dives inaccessis ubi solis filia lucis Urst adoratam nocturna in lumina cedrum,

But since we have a more authentick Authori-Ecclus, e. 38 ty, that of the Scriptures, which makes God the first Author of so necessary an Art, we need no more to discover the errour of Pliny, and with the same labour, to rescue Medecine, tixnn pinbooper, as Isidorus Pelinsora calls it, from the calumny of this inveterat perswassion. And is so, it must also deliver the professors thereof from the censure, we have to the prejudice of their Innocence, seem'd to be a Lib. 2. de sally don them upon the account of the pernicious spectire. e. 6. & Diabolical Magick, which so let Loyer [d] Boistons 1.

М:

Lib. 3.

e Disquis. Sardus, [e] Delrio, [f] Vuierus, and the rest of the Mag.l. 1.6. Dæmonographers, with divers Historians, after to have been the practice of Alchindus, f Depration Geber, Lullius, and the rest whose cause we plead in this Chapter.

For though it be endeavour'd to represent them, especially the Arabians, as the Bacchantes did Orpheus, and that Empericks, Astrologers, Chymilts and Magicians would gladly cut them in pieces, that they might challenge the greatest and best part in every one of them; yet is it easy to judge by the sragments remaining of their workes, and compositions, that they were Phyficians. But with this misfortune, that it is as impossible punctually to know the particulars of their Lives, and the time of their birth, (which certainly is as indiscoverable) as that of the people called Aborigines, without beginning; or of those, whom the Poets make to come down out of the Clouds, to avoid the blasting of their Noble and generous actions by the meannesse of their Originall. This neverthelesse is not so much to be attributed to any negligence of the Arabians to leave us some account thereof; as to the Barbarisme raigning among the Latines in their time who have troubled them elves to translate the Books which might have given us some knowledge and discoveries. thereof, so little, that they have not so much as made a collection of the lives of the most learned men that were in effect even among themselves, In so much that it may be truly said, that what we now know of R. Lulius, Arnoldus de villa novo, Peter d' Apono, and the rest, is rather grounded on the doubtfull conjectures and several passions of moderne Authors, then the proofs and restimonies derived from the Ancient.

Whence it comes to passe that I can only guesse of this famous person Alchindus, with whom we begin the vindication of Physicians, that he might flourish five or 600. years since, because Averroes who hiv'd about the year 1160, and of whom Gilles of Rome faies he had feen his two Sons at the Quodliber. Court of the Emperour Frederick Red-beard, 9. gives him great Elogies, and makes a large commemoration of his Books, as Cardan relates, De subil. L. To which he adds much in praise of him, giving 16. him the Tittle not only of a great Astrologer, with Albehazen Haly, and Haly Rodoan; or that of a most learned and experienc'd Physician, with Rasis and Mesue; or lastly, that of a subtile Philosopher, with Averroes and Wimpinal, but proceeding further, and grounding, in all probability, his opinion as well upon what they said, as his own judgment, he allowes him an honourable place among the greatest Wits, that ever were, that is, Archimedes, Aristotle, Euclid, Scotus, Suisset, Apollonius Pergaus, Architas, Mahomet the inventer of Algebra, Geber, Galen, and Vitravius. It were not then hard to judge, what an excellently learned person this was, not only by the two Books that are printed of his, De Temporum mutationibus, &, Do gradibus medicinarum compositarum investigandes, but also by divers others, frequently cited by Authours, under the titles of, De ratione sex Quantitatum; de quinque Esseniis; de motu diurno; de Vegetabilibus; & de Theorica magicarum artium. Whereof all the difficulty is concerning this last, fince Francis Picus, and Wimpinall have made whole Treatiles

Treatiles out of it, wherein they discourse at large of the Heresies, blasphemies, and absurdities which may be observed therein, as also of the Magick which Alchindus endeavoured to introduce. Hence is it, that all the Damonographers have taken occasion to speake of him, as an eminent and pernicious Magician. And yet Johanness Picus, the miracle and altonishment of his age, sayes expressely in his Apologie, that he knew but three men that had made the best advantages of natural and lawfull Magick, Alchindus, Roger Bacon, and William Bishop of Paris.

But to extract truth out of thele so manifelt contradictions, me thinks, when a man hath well considered, in Aimery, Wimpinal, and Francis Picus the maine grounds of that Book, there may two things be rationally said of it. One, that it is extreamely supersticious, and full of hereticall propositions and directly opposite to the principles of Faith as having binwritt by one that liv'd under the Law of Mahomet, and took a freedome to write without any respect to Christian Religion, which he accounted falle and illgrounded. Whence it is no miracle, if he, Avicenna Algazel, Averroes, and all the Arabians have fallen into these abysses and precipies since they were not guided by that pole-Starre which conducts us now through these manifest errours and falhties. The other, that there is no ground to make this Author a Magician, when Delrio is content to rank him only among the superstitious, & that he was to far from having ought to do with Theurgick or Geotick Magick, that on the contrary, he seems to have no other designe in his Books than to referre to Nature whatever was attributed to Angels and Devils. In which opinion he hath been fince seconded by Pater de Apono, and Pompanatius, who, in order thereto, imagin'd an absolute dependance of things Sublunary upon the celesiall, and that the formen deriv'd all their vertues and properties from the Latter, and every particular from the whole, by the meanes of certain corporeall rayes which passed from the least even to the greatest. And these he assign'd for cause of whatever was done in nature, as Plato did Idea's; Aucenna, Intelligences; Hermes and Marsilius, Ficinus, the Starrs and Planets; Camillus and Albertus mag-nus the specificials forme; and Galen, Temperament. Whence we may passe a finall judgment with R. Bacon, quod musti libri neputamen inter Lib. depoi Magicos qui non sunt tales, sed continent sapientia testate ar-dignitatem. If 10, Alchindus cannot be con-tura,c. 3. demn'd of Magick; if we do not in the same sentence include all those Anthors, who, as he, have endeavour'd to take away the admiration that follows a many extraordinary effects, by the discovery of some more probable causes which they have found out-

D fquif. l.

Ishould passe by Giver without mentioning him among those that have been charg'd with Magick, upon the security of Cassiodorus, who sayes, Calumnia non prasumitur, ubi nus a probas Varsar, tio habetur, were I nor obliged to answer the only 1. 19. Epis. argument which our Damonographers draw by 5. head and shoulders out of a book which Trithemim sayes was made by Geber King of the Indi1.6.3.
ans, upon the relation between the seten Planets and the seven names of God; and some others quoted for Magicians in the second Book of Pi ca:rix catrix. To which it may briefly be reply'd that this Geber King of the Indians was nothing to this we speake of; and that that Book ought no more to be condemn'd as treating of Magick, than the Commentary of R. Abraham Aben-Ezra, upon the sixth treatise of the sirst part of the Thalmud, where he makes a Symbolization between the ten Hebrew Sephirots and ten celestiall Spheres, and the ten Commandements of the Law.

But to take away all suspicion there may be of truth in this proof, it must be said, it is absolutely salse and absurd; since that, notwithstanding the Autobrity of Vigenere, it is unquestionable, that this Geber, who, they say, was King of the Indians, is a meer fable and Chimzra of these

In his Cyphers, fol. 118.

wretched Charcole-marchants; who by that pitifull fiction, would gain more reputation to the Chymicall writings of a Philosopher of the same name. This Gober, as Leon of Africa affirmes, was a Greek by Nation, first a Christian, then a Mathumetan; and lived, as he sayes, 100 yeares after Mahomet, or, according to the calculation of [a] Vigner about the year 723. though, if the 100. yeares be taken precisely, it should be affirm'd he liv'd rather in the year 732. wherero yet. [b] Blancanus does not agree but makes him flourish in the year 801. unlesse the mistake be, that he went upon the time of his death, and Vigner upon that of his Navity. ever it be, this takes away nothing from his Learning, upon occasion whereof Cardan bath not forgot to put him to the tell, among the most eminent advancers of Literature. Nor indeed was the honour above his defents, since he was so

p Deferip: of Africa. Bibliothec, part. 3. b Prolog.

great

great an Astrologer, that, as Blancanus affirmes, he reform'd many things in the Almagestum of Ptolemy; and for Chymistry, [a] Fallopus and a De Me-[b] Erastus seem to approve the judgment of the b Par. 4. Chymiss, who call him the Master of Masters advers. in that Art. Adde to this, that the Catalogue Paracels. of his works faithfully got together by Gesner, is an evident proof that he knew all but Magick, of which or of the Books he writ thereof, neither he nor any good Author hath deliver'd any thing, Devera, as knowing what Lattantins layer, Turpe oft ho- Sapient. c. minem ingeniosum dicere id, quod si neges. probare non 29. possit.

And indeed if all those who make it their bufinesse to write, had been as carefull to observe this precept, as they have been ambitious to make olientation of their knowledge and reading, by heaping together all those fabulous Stories weh make ever so little to their purpose, we should not be now to shew that that of Artephius, and his living 1025. years by the force of his Magick, is, il not absolutely salse, extreamely suspicious, as having been glossed upon by the Alchymists and Roger Bacon. For he layes in his Book of the abbridgment of Theology, that this Philosopher or Chymist travell'd all over the East, and was to see Tantalus, who sate in a throne of Gold; and discoursed very pertinently of the most abstruce fecrets of all the Sciences. In [a] another of his a Lib. fue works, he sayes that he was a live in Germany even phia. in his time. To which adde what others say in b Lib.2. de [b] Francisus Picus, that it is he who is represented pranot.c. 6. to us, by Philostrapus under the name of Apolloni-All this pur together and well considered, sufficiently discovers, how far they are mistaken,

сир. 38.

lerait.

who, notwithstanding the impossibility of this Animad in length of life, evinc'd by M. Morean and divers others, do yet maintaine, and fagot together so Schola Samany fables upon this person, and, to make it the more plausible, will needs father on him two Books or fragments. One, call'd Clavis majoris sapiencia, creats so persectly well of the order and procedure to be coblerv'd in getting the Philosophers stone, that Johannes Pontanus, one - of the greatest Dreamers among the Chymists, confesses ingenuously, that he had never known the degrees of fire, the principal agent in this Art, had he not read that Book. The other is a little treatile, superstitious and tiditulous beyond expression, where he teaches a way to know the Characters of the Planers, the signification of the motion of Animals, as also what they mean when they fing, the vertues of all Herbs, the Philosopher's stone, things past, present, and to come; with divers other secrets and experiments, and at last, the way to prolong life. All which may Dero, va-be seen in Cardan, who hath transcrib'd viei. 1, 16, it word for word, rather to laugh at, then out of any credit he gave those absurdities; the relation whereof he concludes with his own judgment in these words, Quidnam stultius excegitari potest ut quod Nero tanta impensa, tot immolationibus, dedustis ex Arabia Magis impetrare non potuit, hic verbis simplicibus oftendere promittat. In like manner, one James Gohory, who would needs be call'd Lee Suavius, a great favourer and abetter of such extravagancies, had no way to disguise the Magick of Artephius, than to maske it with the terme of Chymicall morality, when, speaking of it and ud (0.5%)

his fair promises, he saies, that, si scriptum si-Comments quamur, non solum incredibilia videntur, sed ridi in c.7.1. I cula; rerum si scientiam parabolicam, non abhorre-Paracles. re omnino à side sapientum. For my part, I think de vita the businesse were soones decided by saying that longa. that Treatise was some man's who had a designe to abuse the strange credulity of a many Authors, or ground a practise of Magick upon the sooleries of his own braine and the speculations of Alchindus, whose maximes he makes use of though he names him not.

Nor is it a lesse ingratitude towards the memory of that famous Astrologer Thebis Ben-Corat (whom some would have a Jew or Spaniard by Nation; but, as Lelandsu assirmes, he was an English man) the first singler out, according to Blan- In protecanse, of the trepidation of the eighth Sphere, in gom. the year 1270. to ranke him amongs the Maginians, and to say with the facecious Poet and prototype of Rabelais, Merlin Coccains, Ecce Magus Thebit, qui tempestate, venenis, Grandinibus, quadam destruxit imagine regnum.

For if a man look narrowly into the reasons whence the suspicion is deriv'd, he will find they have no other ground then certain Books attributed to him, treating of natural Magick, the composition of Annalets and Images, and the properties of herbs, stones, and the Planets, whence I doubt not but the Demonographers easily pumpe out the sutlest and obscurest part of Magick. But for my part, I can perceive nothing in it but the track of a superstitious Astrologie which in this time, was in greater reputation than

De Inflit.

then any of the other Sciences, by reason of the particular inclination Alphonfus King of Spaine, had for the Hudy of it not long before. Wherefore it is not much to beadmir'd, when, as Lastantius faith, Mores ac vitia Regue imitari, genus obsequii judicatur, if Thebit & a many more endeavour'd to much the propagation of it, that like a fat and fertile foyle it brought forth abundance of weeds, and tares, among the good wheat, that is, that it was burthened with a many vaine and fuperstitious things amidst the sundamentall rules and the certain precepts which their daily observations laboured out. But if the Book publish'd under this Astrologers name were a sufficient testimony to convince him of the crime he is charg'd an eminent Magician, because Trithemius cites three Magicall Books as unjuffly attributed to him as the forementioned to Thebit. And that this is the missoreme of the latter, is fusficiently with, we must in like manner conclude Prolemy

I. c. 3.

3. of Pbi lostratus.

On c. 14. l. evident by the account which Arthur 7 homas gives of one of his Books treating of the vertue of herbs and the Starrs; which was, that Thebit explain'd in it the opinion of Marcilius Ficinus (who yet hiv'd 250. years after him) concerning Planetary Annulets and images made under certain Constellations. Whence it may be safely concluded, that these superstitious treatises are the meer forgeries of some Mountebanks and moderne Cheates; And consequently, that it is a foule shame to harbour any such calumny against Thebit, who hath furnish'd us with so many good Books of Affrology, that he can hardly be allow'd time to mind these eriviall fragments, and that moreover, as Jacobus Cario hath well obferv'd servich. Quam in non vatis seu inerrabilis sphera vestigandis motibus generose cum obscuris & prope inexplicabilibus dissicultatibus certavorit, eruditis non est incognitum.

My next step should be to Raimundus Lullius, were I not obliged to say a word or two in the desence of one Anselm of Parma, who is celebrated by [a] Bartholomen Cocles, as a great Philoso-a In Anapher, and blasted by [b] Wierns, [c] Delrio, and the stale Phyrest of the Dzmonographers, with the title of a h Lib. 2. de Sorcerer and Magician; because, say they, the prafig. c.s. Emfalmifts, or those who cure wounds by words, e Libri. take their name from this Anselm. But there is cap.3. more ground to believe, that the Professours of quality. this kind of Medicine abuse the name of St. Anfelm, from whom they pretend the derivation of this vertue, as the Salatators in Spain do that of St. Carbarine; those who heal the biting of Serpents in Italy, that of Sc. Paul; and some others in France, that of St. Hubert. Or it is more pro- Apud Emabable that the Emsalmists are, as Bravus and Car-nuel de valhe affirm, so called, because they make frequent Moura, use of certain verses of the Psalms, which might spuse de properly be called Empsalmi, as he who practifed Ensalmis. them to do some cure, Empsalmator, or Empsalmista

This being clear, and beyond all considerable contradiction, we come at last to the two Idols and cutelary Gods of the Alchymists, Raimundus Inllius, and Arnoldus de Villa nova, though their atlegations, who make them Magicians; are grounded rather on the custom which Authours have taken to make them act all parts, than on the number or truth of the proofs which may be had of this suspicion. For as to Raimundus Inlius,

A Maria - Argrand y all are lius, I find Peter Montuus laughing as the mere De unias legis veri-Dialectick, which he would needs introduce, aftate,1.5. ter he had transcrib'd it by open robbery our of c.53. the Arabian Abezebron, grounding his fo doing upon Lulling's laying himself, that it were very good in the time of Antichrist, to fatifie his demands in generall terms, Ut si interrogaretur quid credis? in Deum; quare? quia placet mihi : car prie competit deisicare; quare deisicat? quia talis est placet tibi ? quia Deus est.; quid est Deus? cui proejus natura. I find alto that Charles Bovillins takes A. Liftin, occasion from the imposture of certain miracles, to put him into the Catalogue of Blessed; that . Gregory the Ninth governing at Avignon, in the year 1371, condemn'd his Doctrine, because a a certain Bishop had discovered therein above five hundred errours. That the Chymitis actribute to him the knowledge of the Philosophers sione, by a simple Metamorphosis of the import put by King Edward upon the wools, which were. MI stransported one of England into Brebaut, to the at a Sum of fix millions of gold, which was bellowed. on him by this Chymilt, to make war against the Turk and the Infidels. And if we would fhew: how far the vapours of the Mersony had disturbed his brains, we need onely quote the voyages he made, as Bavillius relates, as well to the Popel as King Philip the Fair, to have the three Proposition ons granted, which may be seen at the end of his Book, De nateli pueri. Which were these, that all the Military Orders that were up in his time. should be formed together into one body; That the works of the Philosopher Averroes should be abiolytely suppressed; and that Monasteries Could be built in all parts of the world to in-

Aruck

The History of MAGICA.

Ca

26,1

Ш

doir

۲ť

sd

(117

eļ

177 firmet in strange languages, such as should enter into vows for the conversion of Insidels. But I could never yet discover upon what reasons the greatest part of the Damonographers, and some Historians, as Vigner, have presum'd to represent in his Exhim as a Magician.

To give them time to produce them, we shall flory, and.

in the mean while speak of Arnoldus de Villa nova, who was not an ignorant Friar or Begnin, as R. Lullius; or some wretched and wandering Chymist, as he is represented to us. For, on the contrary, it is certain, he was the learnedst Physician of his time, equally acquainted with the Latine, Greek, and Arabian Tongues, and one whose writings sufficiently witnesse his abilities in the Mathematicks, Medicine, and Philosophy, the practice whereof gain'd him savour and employment about Pope Clement, and Frederick King of Sicily, who certainly would never have made use of him, if they had thought him a Conjurer or Magician, such as a many are perswaded he was:

Among these is Francis Pegna, who refers to Satanicall delusion the metallick transmutation, which John Andreas, a famous Canonist, sayes, he 36 in 2. saw him do at Rome. Adde to this the proof they partem Didraw from two little books published under his rectioni Eyname, one treating, De physicis ligaturis, the o-merit q.11 ther, De Sigillis 12 Signorum. But to shew that Lib. de he is as unjustly charged with Magick by these cenevange-Authors, as he with the writing of the Book, De listar contribus Impessorium, by [a] Postellus, or to have been cordias f.27 the first that tried the generation of a man in an b Lib. 14. Alembically some in [b] Mariana, we are first to Rev. Hispaconsider that [c] Delvie absolutely clears him of Lib. 1.c. f. this accusation; affirming against the said Pegna, qu. 1. sch. 4.

that it was injurious to the Clergie of Rome at that time, to imagin they should employ Arnoldys de Villa-nova, or permit him to practile so freely in their City, if they could have discover'd in him the least indicia of Magick. Nor is it a lesse manifest abuse to attribute to him the Book, De phyficis ligaturis, fince it is evident he did only translate it out of an Arabian, one Lana Ben Cofta. And for that, De Sigillis 12 Signorum, besides the question it is, whether it be his, as being not comprised in the collection of his works, we may roundly answer, that it is like those of Thebit, Chicus, and the rest, and that all the prejudice it can do him, is to confirm the opinion of the rain and supersitious speculations he was guilty of in Astrologie. But even of this no man will doubt,

lib. 5.cont. Aftrolog.

Astrologie. But even of this no man will doubt, that shall observe in Picus, how he laugh'd at the very Science, when he would assigne the birth of Antichrist in the year 1345, and confirm and maintain all his other herefies, which Vigner, in his Ecclesiassicall History, takes the more pains to particularize, by how much the more sympathy and resemblance there is between them, and those of the Hereticks and new Religionaries of these time.

In the year 1308.

But if the particular and over-curious study of Astrologie, hath ever provid prejudicial to those who have practifed it, we may truly say, that the samous Physician Peter d' Apono, hath selt the stings of Calumny more than an of the precedent upon that account. For the common opinion of almost all Authours, is, that he was the greatest Magician in his time, that he had mastered the seven Liberall Sciences, by the assistance of seven samiliar Spigits, which he had constantly lodg'

ola

œ

hit

anl

che

)D

nat

ed io

in

bt,

he th

DC

fodg'd in a Crystall; That he had the way, like another Paletes, to force back the money he had spent into his purse again; and, to conclude with a proof as manifest as undeniable, That it is certain he was accused of Magick, in the eightieth year of his age, & that dying in the year 1305, beforesentence was passed upon him, he was neverthelesse (as Castellanus affirms) condemn'd to the fire and it was ordered, that a bundle of Straw or Oher, representing him, should be burn'd in the publike place at Padna, purposely by an example fo rigorous, and the fear of incurring the like punishment, to prohibit the reading of three superflicious and abominable books of his. Of these the first was called Heptamers, now printed at the end of the first Tome of Agrippa's Works; the fecond, that which Trubemius cals, Elucidarium Necromanticum Petri de Albano; and the last, one, by the same Authour, call'd, Liber experimenterum mirabilium de annutis secundum 28 mansiones Luna.

All which proofs, as well of his practice and his books, as the Sentence thundered against him by the Inquisition, might indeed perswade us that he was the most deeply guilty of all that medled with those magicall and superstitious observations. But we are as well to consider the face, as the reverse of his Medall, and take it out of the safe light, wherein his adversaries have placed it, to view it in its proper situation, and observe there-In the draught of a man that appear'd as a miracle amidst the ignorance of his age. One he was, that besides the knowledge of the Tongues and Medicine, had so fearch'd into that of the lesse common Sciences, that having left, by his wri-N 2 tings tings of Physiognomy, Geomancie, and Chiromaneie, enough to prove his abilities therein, he shook hands with them all, and his own youthfull curiofity, to apply himself wholly to Philosophy, Physick, and Astrologie. In these he proved to forcunate, that not to lay any thing of the two former, whereby he infinuated himfelf into the Carefies of the Popes and Princes of his time, and gain'd that reputation wherein he now thines among all the learned; it is evident he was excellently well skill'd in the last, as well by the Astronomicall figures he caused to be painted in the great Hall of the Palace at Padna, as his translations of the books of Rabbi Abraham Ben Ezra. To which we may adde those he made himself of the Critical dayes, and the illustration of Aftronomy, as also the suffrage of the famous Mathematician Regiomontanus, who made an excellent Panegyrick to him, in the quality of an Astrologer, in an Oration he pronounc'd publikely at Padua, when he was upon the explanation of the book of Alfraganus.

From his so great celebration of this Science, through all his works, especially in the hundredth fifty sixth Difference of his Conciliator, have some Authours taken occasion to maintain an opinion directly contrary to that of the precedent, to wit, that that Sentence passed upon him not for his Magick, but because he would give an account of the miraculous effects that happen many times in Nature, by vertue of the Celestial Bodies, without referring them either to Angels or Damons. This is clear by the collection which Symphoriams hath made of the passages of his Differences, as such as are not to be read without the precaution

3. Parte Abstribrat.

and

and peremptory authority of Franciscus Picus De prenot, who speaking of him, sayes expressely, Abommi-1.7.6.7. bus serme creditus est Magus; verum constat quam appositum dogma ei aliquando tributum sit, quem etiam Haresium inquiscores vexaverunt, quasi nullos esse Damones crediderit. To which may be added, that (a) Baptista of Manua, upon this score, a Lib. 1. de cals him, Virum magna, sed minium andacis temc-patientia, rarieg, dostriva; that [b] Casmannus numbers. b Angelogn. him among those who referr'd all miracles to pare. 2.6.21 nature; and that [c] le Loyer affirms, that he c De spettr. laugh'd at Sorcerers and their Sabats. Whence it qu. 2.1.4. might be wonder'd at, that yet the same Authors, 6.3. in divers other places, rank him among Conjuters and Magicians, were it not ordinary with those who write upon this Subject, so to swell up their books, by copying out whatever they find in others, that they seldom observe the Poets advice, Primo ne medium, medio ne discrepet imum.

Nor can it but happen so, when having gotten to the middle or end, they forget what they said at the beginning, and become like that Didymus, who having deni'd a thing in one of his books, another was produc'd wherein he affirm'd it.

But I should not have insisted on all these proofs of the impiety of Peter d'Apono, so to rescue him from the crime of Magick, by charging him with that of Atheism, if I had not something to clear him of both. For this, I have not onely the testimony of the most illustrious and religious Frederick Duke of Urbin, who, for his great deserts, exected a Statue to him, among those of the most eminent men that are to be seen in his Citradel; but also the publick attestation of the City of Padna, caufing his Effigies to be fet up over the gase of their Palace between those of Titm, Livins, Albertus Magmis, and Julius Paulus, with this in cription upon the Bale.

N a

moit

PETRUS APONUS PATAVINUS PHILOSOPHIE MEDICINEQUE SCIENTISSIMUS, OB IDQUE CONCILIATORIS NOMEN DEPTUS, ASTROLOGIÆ VERO ADEO PERITUS, UT IN MAGIÆ SUSPICIONEM INCIDERIT, FAL-SOQUE DE HERESI POSTULA-TUS, ABSOLUTUS FUERIT.

Demeno-

Differentia 356.

This me thinks were enough to shew, that all the Objections formerly made to convince him of Magickare rather imaginary then reall. But to make an absolute discovery of their falshood, we may answer what Ludwigius hath said of the seven magie. qu. spirits who taught him the seven Liberal Sciences, that this fabulous relation proceeded from the said Peter's affirming, after Albumazar, that the prayers made to God, when the Moon is in conjunction with Jupiter in the Dragon's head, are infallibly heard; and that for his own particular, he had no sooner made his addresses, but, according to his own expression, Sapientiam à prime visus est sibi in illa amplius proficere. Not indeed could it but give diverse Anthours occasion to smile at his indiscretion in disacknowledging his great Industry and Labours, to become obliged for his Learning to the superflition of a certain prayer

Digitized by GOOG

The Hiltory of MAGICK:

prayer which must needs be vain & inessectual caken inwhat fense loever. For if it be directed to the Stars, itwere absolute bestiality to think they could heare it; if to God, I would gladly know whether he were deaf before that conjunction; whether he would not receive our prayers without it, or whether that force did necessitate him to condescendito our defires. Hence was it, that Johannes Piens, speaking of this new Salamon Lib.4.adv. had reason to say, Considerem Petro istint team Astrolog. c. quod profecie fue potius industria, ingenio q, accep 8. tum referret, quam Jovia illi faa sapplicationi.

In like manner, for the three Books divulg'd under his name, it may be fayd, they are no lette uninfly accribated to him than diverse others to most of the great Wits, besides that Trithemius Antipal. will not acknowledge them to be legitimate, be-Lib.cap. 3. cause of the great number of sables therein sather'd upon this Author; and what he had said before in his Catalogue of Ercelesiasticall. Writers, that he thought nothing true of what was faid of the Magick of Peter d' Apano, because he could mever understand he had writ any Book upon that subject. To which if we adde the generall filence of all Libraries, and the confirmation Sym- Traft 4. phorianus gives the Authority of Trithemius, at Lib. de firming he had never teen any of his Magicall clais Me-Books Lave a certain Difference where he creats Scriptori-· Oric by the way, I conceive there is nothing can bus. hinder us from declaring him imoceut, and concluding with the more rationall party, that the suspicion men have had of his being a Magician proceeds, as its true originall, from the power heattibutes to it in the Hundred fifty six difference of his Conciliator, and his faculty of predictions by the affiltance of Astrology, upon which, in processe of time, all these tables and Chimera's crept in, according to the true saying of Preperties, Omnia post obitum pingit majora Vetustas.

N 4

Lally for this Arch-heretick in Philosophy, Medicine, and Religion, Theophrastus Paracelsus, who is now the Zenith, and riting Sun of all the Alchymists, methinks those who would rescue him from the crime of Magick, yet without abatement as to any other he stands charg'd with, may with reason say much in his vindication. Among other things, that the novelty of his conceptions, the difficulty of his style, and the obscurity of a many words frequent in his workes, fuch as, for instance, Ens Pagoicum, Cagastricum, Cherionium, Leffas, Jefadach, Trarames, Staunar, Perenda, Relloleum, and abundance of the like, make the reader so doubtfull of his meaning, that he must needs go seeling in the darknesse of such Manders, and knows not whether he speakes of a Sheeps trackle or a pill, a stone or bread, the Devil or Nature. Which is so, there is much more ground to doubt, whether he makes use of Magick as of riddles (after the example of Trithemins) to disguise his precepts, and to conceale the vanity of his Art, which he thought should be the more admir'd, the lesse it is underflood

Quenia

Omnia enim stolidi magie admirantur, amant go Luctell. 1. Inversisque sub verbis latitantia cernunt.

But for my part, fince I have not fludied the Dictionary Rulandus hath compil'd of the Phrases of this Author, fo far as to be able to judge of his workes and to understand them, I shall, in this question of his Magick be guided by the opinion of his chiefest Interpreters, Severinus the Dane, and Crolling. These make it only the vaile and vizard of his doctrine, witnesse the latter, In Episole page 77. of his preface, Paracelsum expertis Stylo scrip. Pamagica scripfiss, no vulgo, sed fibi & intelligen-racelso. tibus in schola magica educatie, sapientia filiis, my steria sua sub variis pominibus occultaffe. indeed it is certain, that the names of diverse Spirits scatter'd frequently up and down his Books, such as might be taken for covies of Devils, are to be understood, according to the opinion of James Gehory, the first favoriter of Paracelfus comment. in France, of extractions and diverse essences, of paracelfus their properties and preparations, or lastly of de vita lenthings minerall, vegetall and animate, fuch as hest made use of in the composition of his Remedies. With this agrees that of Johannes Operinus; who Apud Brawas his ferwant a long time, and having made firm part. the first discovery of what is now objected to him, makes no mention of his Magick, or his invocations; and Wetterns, who having stayd twenty feven months with him, sayes only, that, when he was drunk, he would threaten to, bring in millions of Devils, to shew what power he had over them, not to take any notice of what a many fay of the familiar Damon which was lock'd up within.

186

within the pommell of his sword. For, not to bring upon the stage the opinion of the Alchymists who maintaine, it was the secret of the Philosophers stone, it were more rationall to believe, that, if there were any thing within it, it was certainly two or three doses of his Laudanam, which he never went without, because he did strange things with it, and used it as an universal medicine to cure all manner of diseases.

medicine to cure all manner of diseases.

It might here be said that it signifies not much to have glean'd up these proofs to strike Paracelsus's name out of the Catalogue of Magicians, when he himself, not content to have put Magick for one of the sour pitlars of Medicine, hath endeavour'd further to acquaint us with the precepts and nature of it, and that, in all his Books and particularly in that de Philosophia sagaci, where

Lib. 1.6. 4. particularly in that de Philosophia fagaci, where he divides it into six species and different parts. The first treats of the fignification of the fignes happening befides the order of Nature, as the Starr that appeal'd to the wife men. The fecond, of the Meramorpholes and transmutation of Bodies; the third, of the vertue of words and ispeech; the fourth, of Annulets; the fift, of enchanted images; and the last, of the Cabal, which he said was to be used to do all those extraordinary actions which cannot be reduced to any of the other five parts. Such are these, to ripen fruits in an instant; to make one horsetravely further in a day, then another shall in a month; to dife course intelligibly with these that are above 5000 miles diffance from us; and in a word, to do whatever feems; and ever hath been throught impossible. But I extremnly wonder since he pretended to the absolute knowledg of all these kinds of

of Magick, why he never did any thing by the afsistance of them. For certainly it had been much more reputation to him, to confirme this new doctrine by some of his experiences, than to follow the ordinary track of Mountebanks, who break out into a torrent of common and popular eloquence to celebrate the miraculous power of their Druggs, and call themselves Professors and Operators, as if they had the certain cure of all diteases.

At nusquam, totos inter qui talia jattam, Apparet quisquam qui re miracula tama Comprobet,

But, however it be, I shall not quarrell with their opinion, who hold, that one of the princis. pall advantages which learned and industrious men have over the ignorant, is, that it is in their power to make new Systems, and advance new Principles, nay change the order, precepts and method of the Sciences, shorrening or lengthening them, like a Stirrop, as they please. which number Paracelsus being one thought he might as well invert the course of Magick, as he had done that of Medicine and Philosophy, and boaffed he could have done of Religion, threatning both the Pope and Luther to bring them both re his Maxims when he should think fit to do it. Though therefore he might justly be condemn'd as an Arch-heretick for the depravednesse of his opinion in point of Religion, yet de l'noe thouk he should be charg'd with Magick. For this confifts not in the Speculations and Theory; which every one may explicate and amplify according to his fantasie, but in the practice of the Circle and Anvocations, wherein, as we have already shewn, not any one of the Authours, that have the greatest aversion for his Doctrine, would ever maintain he employ'd himself.

The History of MAGICK.

CHAP. XV.

Of Cornelius Agrippa.

7Ere there no more requisite to declare a man a Magician, than that he should give himself the title, or were it just, that who should brag he could do thousands of tricks and invocations, were truly guilty of the practice thereof, that Impostor and Mountebank that wander'd up and down Germany in the time of Trithemius, should certainly be taken for the most exquisite Conjurer of our last ages, since he was so ambirious to be known, and called every where by these honourable titles, Magister Georzius Sabellicus, Faustus junier, Fons Necromanticorum, Astrologus, Magus, Chiromanicus, Agromanticus, Pyromanticus, & in Hydra arte nulli sesundus. With the same confidence of Truth may we affirm, that if the composition of Magic: 11 Books were a sufficient proof to convince their Alkhours of this crime, no compurgation of Eloquence could deliver Agrippa, since he is at such Josse of modesty, as to publish, by writings printed even in his life time, the rules and precepts thereof. But as the said Trithemins tels us in his Epifiles, that this Sabellieur had no other ground for that foolish offentation, than the impudence and temerity

Brip. 42 Joes. Virdemois.

temerity he was guilty of in promising all things without effecting any fo may it be faid, that this Book of Agrippa discovers him to be rather of their rank, who, to make a noise, and gain reputation, pretend to know many things beyond the ordinary reach of men, than of that of Conjurers and Magicians.

This I undertake to make good in this Chapter, not so much out of opposition to most Authours, as to propose it as a probleme, for those who defire to fee the reasons of both sides, as a Paradox in respect of the common opinion, and as a true resolution to those, who by my reasons shall think it such. For I doubt not, but amidst the great diversity of mens judgements, such an opinion must needs fall under one of these three interpretations. Whereof as I shall alwayes find favour from the two extreams, so do I expect that those who hold it new and paradoxall, should excuse me, if I endeavour to clear up the truth, becaule, if it be not such, it is a charity to rescue what is so near it from so dangerous a calumny, and to deliver the person, to avoid the censure of Lastantiue, who sayes that, Non major est iniqui- Infit.1.5. tas probatam innocentiam damnasse, quam inaudi- c.t. tam. But if it be such, a man is at liberty to maintain it, and celebrate the praises of Agrippa, as Isocrates some time did those of Busties, and Cardan those of Nero. With this caucion by the way, that their opinion be absolutely discarded, who hold that Agrippa cannot be represented, but like an Owl in a Night-piece, because of his magicall deformity; that he was a superstitions vagabond; that all his travels and peregrinations were but so many flights and elcapes; and that he died in great ereat necessity, (as being forsaken by, beca to abominable to, all the world) among Beggars a. the Scurf of the City of Lyons. For to do othe wile, were, to speak ingenuously, to be guided the ignorance or passion of Paulus Jovius, andtl. Demonographers, rather than the truth of the History, and thereby to passe such a disadvantageous judgement on a man, who was not only a new Trismegistus in the three superiour faculties. Theologie, the Civill Laws, and Medicine; but bis life. Agrippa 2.

1.6.ep. 18. Lib.7. epift.21. Thevet in

Z Agripp.

tom. p.596. Idem 1.3. 4.epif.

Idem 1.6. 67. Idem 13. primis epift. l.x.

Idem in Expostul. Catilin, fol. 510,511.

Id. epift. 47.1.7. Id. in de-

Idem ep. 38. lib.1. Idem 76. & 79.l.3.

Idem 84. 1.5. Idem passim n epift.

one, who by travelling thorowall parts of Exrope, would roll his mind into all Sciences and Disciplines, to be like that Argus, who,

Centum luminibus cinctum caput unus habebat.

By this means, came he from one employment to another, at last to that [z] of Secretary to the Emperous Maximilian; a Favourice of Antonins Delevus, and Captain in his Troops; Professour of Divinity at Dole, and Pavia; Syndic, and Advocate-Generall of the City of Metz; Physician to her Highnesse the Dutchesse of Anjon, Mother to King France the First; and lastly, Concellour and Hilloriographer to the Emperour Charles the Fifth. All there charges may well secure his reputation amongst the greatest persons, and therefens. propo- fore we needed not to have cast into the balance, st.fal. 596. that he was employ'd at twenty years of age by some Gentlemen of France, to endeavour the transmutation of metals; that two years after he -publikely explan'd that obscure and difficult book of Reuclin, De Verbo mirifico; that he understood eight severall Languages; that he was chosen by the Cardinall de Sainte Croix, to assist him in the

Councell

The Hiltory of MAGICK.

5.91

Councell which was to be held at Pife. To this we may adde, That the Pope writ a Letter to him to exhort him, as he had begun, to continue in well-doing; That the Cardinall of Lorrain would needs be Godfather to one of his fons in France; That a Marquesse of Italy, a King of England, the Chancellour Mercurius Gatinaria, and Margaret Princesse of Austria, courted him into their service at the same time: And lastly, that he was singular friend to sour Cardinals, sive Bishops, and all the learned men of his time such as Erasmus, Faber Stapulensis, Trithemius, Capito, Melanthon, Capellanus, Montius, and Cantiuncula.

This granted, I cannot much wonder, that [a] Paulus Jevieu cals him, Portentosum ingenium; a In Elogiis that [b] James Gohory places him, inter clarissima lib.de Mysui saçuli lumina; that [c] Ludwigins cals him, ster. nota-Venerandum Dominum Agrippam, literarum lite. Quast. 16. ratorum g omnium miraculum, & amorem bono- h Damonorum; that d Wvierns, Melchior Adam, and a mag. p. 209. many others, speak of him very honourably, com- c Lib. de plaining that all these elogies, and testimonies, pressig. these extraordinary persections, these greatem d Lib. de ployments and dignities should not any way vis. Medis. shake the opinion men have to this day of his be-inejus ing a Magician. Which indeed is the more deplo- vita. rable, because there are but two or three proofs to make him such, which since they are so false and forged, that it were madnesse or malicious ignorance, to take them for authentick, I should rather believe that this opinion hath not crept into the imaginations of Authours fo much by any of these three wayes, as by the indiscretion of the first Advancer of it. For what he first broach'd, the rest tookson good security, to describe Agrippa

:233

The History of MAGICK.

as the Prince of Magicians, and blast his reputatian on with all the injuries imaginable, so far as to curse him with Bell, Book, and Candle. Nor is this any thing extraordinary in them, it being their designe to praise or dispraise to the worlds end, right or wrong it matters not, and that without any heed or moderation, a many persons, of whom they neither have nor would know any thing, save that they have been condemn'd or approved by such and such; and consequently, that they cannot be mistaken, if they passe the same judgement on them:

Merat.

O imitatores servum pecas ! ut mihi sapè Bilem, sapè jocum, vestri movere tumultus!

But haply I may be thought too harsh with thele Authors, since that what was alledg'd before, may somewhat clear Agrippa; yet is not so pregmant, as absolutly to acquit him from all suspicion of Magick. I would therefore ask Delrio, one of his greatest advertaries, why the judgement of the Pope, the authority of to many Cardinals & Bishops, the favour of two Emperours, and so many Kings, are not as good and authentick proofs to clear his innocence, as that whereby he would jusifie Arnoldus de Villa nova from being a Magician, because the Clergie of Rome, among whom he liv'd a while, would not have employ'd him, if they had known him to be fuch. Besides, if this first read fon, out of which it were not hard to deduce a many more, give them not full satisfaction, I wish they would, for their better, consider what Declamations the said Agrippa makes against Magick, not only in his Book, Of the Vanity of the

From cap.

. Digitized by Google

Sciences,

Sciences, but also in his treatise of Originall Sin, pag. 555. in his Complaint against the School-men in the fourteenth Epittle of the fifth Book, wherein he was indeed a little elevated by a holy zeal, and some animostry against the French: and in Epist. 26. of the same Book, of which Epistle I shall only give notice, that the title is transposed in the last edition; where it is Amicus ad Agrippam, instead of Agrippa ad Amicum, as it is printed with the three Books of his occult Philosophy, Anno 1533.

Adde to this, that being Syndic, and Advocate Generall of the City of Merz, he directly opposed the proceedings of Nicolas Savini then Inquisitor for the Faith in the said City, who would have punished a poor Country woman as a Witch; and thickled so much in the businesse that he got her released, and the accusers and witnesses well sined; which shews he was not so superstitious as the greatest part of those who calumniate him.

3.

ø

1

i

9

2

b

20

hŧ

To make his charge high enough, it is further urg'd that the Divines of Lovaine pass'da severe censure upon his Declaration against the Sciences; that John Catilinet, a Franciscan declaim'd publikely against the explication he had made at Dota, de Verbo mirisico; that the Dominicans of the City of Metz writt against the propositions he had publish'd in defence of the opinion of Faber Stapulensis, concerning the Monogamy of St. Anne. And yet not one of these censurers could take occasion to make any remarkes upon the two first Books of his occust Philosophy printed long before any of these pieces, at Paris, Antwerp, and other places, and every where with the Pri-viledge Digitized by Google

viledge and approbation of those who had the management of such affaires. But it may haply be conjectur'd that the Adversaries will answer this last reason, by saying, that there is indeed no danger in those Books, it being Agrippa's defigne to make that advantage of the curious Philolophy and Learning therein contained, as a gilt pill, to make the poilon of the other to slide down more easily; imitating therein the subtlety of the Crocodile, which counterfeits the voice of a man, to devour him, or rather the Aratageme of Satan transforming himself into an Angell of Light, or of some beautifull Creature, the more easily to deceive us. We shall therefore take this occasion to discover, how much the avarice of Booksellers, and the vanity of certain men, who have no other employment then to make counterfeit keys to all Books and treatifes that are ever so litle difficult and obscure, have injur'd the memory of this Author, tathering on him a fourth Book full of vain, Magical, superstitious, and abhominable Ceremonies, and publishing it with the three of his Occult Philosophy, together with some other shreds and fragments of Peter d' Apono, Arbatel, Pictorius, Trithemins, and commentaries upon the whole History of Pliny by Stephanus Aqueus; the reading whereof we must acknowledge much more dangerous to a mind carry'd through weaknesse, away with such vanities, then that of Ovid to a debauch'd person, of Martiall to a Flatterer and detractor, of Lucian to a Scoffer, of Cicero to a proud man, and of Lucretius to an irreligious man and an Atheist. But note by the Deprafity: way, that these Books are as falsely father'd on

1,10,2. c.5. rhom, as that fourth upon Agrippa, as Vnierus, ip

in desence of the last, affirmes, that that Book was not published till twenty seven years after his death, and that certainly he was not the Author of it. And for Agrippa, we may object, that he fayes in his Epistles, that he had reserved to him- 1ib. 4, Eb. self the key of the three Books he had published, $6. For besides that we may probably answer, that Lib. 5. ep. he mention'd fuch a Key meerly to be courted by 14. the curious, upon which account, [a] James Gohor) and [b] Vigenere affirme he boatled that myst not. he knew the secret of Pythagoras's glasse, as also b Comment. that of [c] extracting the spirit of Gold, to turn Sil-in Paracels, wer or Copper into perfect Gold, yet not for a devita longreater quantity then the waight of the Body gas f. 61. whence it was extracted amounted to. Besides cyphers f. this reason, I say, he clearly expresses what he 16.27. meanes by such a key when he saies in the 19. Epist. of the 5. Book. Hac est illa vera, & mirabilium operum occultissima Philosophia. Clavis ejus Intellectus est, quanto enim altiora intelligimus, tanto sublimiores induimus vir tutes, tanto g & majora, & facilius & efficacius operamur. This I suppose takes away all difficulty concerning this occult Philosophy unlesse we would raise any out of the third Book printed with the other two, in in the year 1532, he being then a [a] Domestick a Lib. 7. of the Archbishop's of Cullen, who thought him-Epist. felf much honour'd with the [b] dedication of b Epist. dethem and [c] permitted him to publish them c De oce. according to the Priviledge of the Emperour Phill. 26 Charles, V. From which circumstances may be inferr'd, that as the two first were publish'd long before, without any prejudice to the Author's re-putation, so is there not any thing in the third, that may give any suspicion of Magick, unlesse it be particularly to such, as, like fearfull travel-Iers, take roots for folded Serpents, huts and bushes for Highway-men waiting for them, Et mote ad Lunam trepidant arundinis umbram. For he treats not of any thing, under the title of Divine and Ceremonious Magick, but of Religion, of God, and of his names and attributes, as also of Dæmons and Angels, of Intelligences and Genius's, of sacrifices, of Man and his severall operations. And all this according to the opinions of Divines, Philosophers and Cabalists, not advancing any thing, but what, as he acknowledges himself, he had taken out of the printed, much read, and much approved Books of Plato. Porphyrius, Proclus, Calcidus Synesius, Ammonius, Psellus, Albertus magnus, Roger Bacon, William of Paris, Gatalinus, Johannes Picus, Reuclinus, Riscius, and such like; who are only suspected co Magick by those that are frightned at any thing they are unacquainted with, and as Lucreties layes, fear, Nihilo qua sunt metuenda magis, quàm Qua pueri in tenebris pavitant singunt és futura.

To this we may adde, that he hath, in his preface, cautiously retracted what ever might have erept into his works contrary to the doctrine of the Church, & does both [a] there and all thorow Lib. 4. his workes, excuse himself, saying that, Minor quam adolescens hoc composite. It is then out of all Bedie. 1.3. controversy that there will not hereafter be any Philosoph so barbarous & inhumane as to glosse more disact vantageously upon the heats & sallyes of his youth, then on those of Pieus, Albertus magnus, Ancms Sylvius, and divers others, who may as well as Agrippa imitate the penitent King, where he sayes, Remember not, O Lord the sins and ignorances of my youth.

Having thus defeated the strongest and most unsulpected proof of the Adversaries, and rendered it vain and of no consequence, the rest are easily rooted, as such, as are fitter to fill up the Magicall Romances of Merlin, Maugis and Dr. Faustu, than that they should be found in the serious and confiderate writings of Historians and Dæmonographers, at least such as ought to be fuch. Among thele, Delrio, Thevet, and Panlus Jovius are the most considerable wirnesses that come in against the life, manners, and doctrine of Agrippa. The former was a man of fuch a vast and prodigious reading that he hath omitted nothing that any way made for his purpose; the other two seem to speak of him with more candour and integrity, in as much as they prudently rank him amongst the most illustrious men, and liken him to that altar of Midas, which feem'd sometimes to be of Gold, but for the most part of stone.

To begin then with the deposition of Thevet, lives of itwho having first drawn him according to the Ori-tustrious ginall of Bohemians and Cingarists,

Quos aliena juvant, propriu habitare molestum, very confidently gives you a reason for all his Travells, which was, that he could not stay long in any place, before he had shewn some trick of his Art, which being discovered, and he thereby known to be an Enchanter and Necro-

Disquist.

Lib. 2.

queft. 39.

manner, all he could do was to fly from one Country to another like those apes that leap from one tree to another, and from one bough to another, till at last they are taken by the Hunters. To make this testimony the more authentick, Delrio makes outh that the Emperour Charles V. would never admit him to his fight, atter he had entertained him with some discourtes 1.2. qu. 12. that he could find out and discover great treafures by his Magick: as also that, being at Lovaine, when the Devil had murthered one of his Pensioners, he commanded him to enterinto his body, and to walke seven or eight turnes in the publick place of the City before he quitted it, that so he might not be troubled or suspected for his death, when the people should find him dead of a sudden and naturall one. To which adde that of the third witnesse Paulus Jovins, who, in his Elogies, sayes, thar, discarded by all the world, he dy'd very poor at Lyons, and that touch'd with some remorie of conscience, he dismitt a great black Dog that had follow'd him all his life, ta-

> the Saone, and was never feen afterwards. Though the ridiculousnesse of these relations sufficiently discover their falsity, yet to pluck them up by the roots, we are to reflect on that saying of Machiavel, that if Cesar had been vanquish'd by Pompey, no question, but he would have been describ'd to us, not such as he is now, but more extravagantly wicked then ever Catiline was. Thus the greatest part of Mankind inter-

> king off his neck a Coller full of images and Magicall figures, saying to him with some exasperation, Abi perdita bestia qua me totum perdidisti, whereupon the Dog went and cast himself into preting the actions of others alwayes suitably to their fortune, all the Vertues we now admire in him, would have been turn'd into so many vices, nor could nature have afforded colours sad enough to disguise him so as to please some Writers. For we may inferre from this Maxim that we may dash out of the Calumnies fasten'd upon Agrippa, the story of the pensioner of Lovaine, as such as we may more rationally deny with Ludwigius, than Delrio affirme it, fince he hath taken it word for word out of a Book called The Theatre of Nature, publish'd in Italian and Latine under the name of Stroza Cicogna, and in French and Spanish under that of Valderama. For the rest, they are saign'd upon the reall actions of his life, which ever since he pur out his Book of the vanity of Sciences, men endeavour'd to interpret in a contrary sense, and make them as deformed and abhominable, as they would have been thought noble, vertuous, or at least tolerable, if he had not committed that fault, which indeed prov'd the cause of all his misfortune. This it was also, and not his Magick, that incensed the * 2 Tomi. Emperour Charles V. as he himself acknow-fol.251. ledges in * severall places of his works, and made Epist. dedihim slight his service; nay he would have gone cat. Apol. further, if Cardinall Campege, and the Bishop of advers.

> > Digitized by Goog preting

Liege had not appeard him. This disgrace gave Scholast. p. his envyers, and emulators occasion to calum-447. niate him with Magick, grounding their malice in defenses on his publishing his three Books of occult Philo-on. prop. Jophy. The two former, as we have shewn, were gam, 9.584. published long before this tempest arose, and & Epist. Rood our the surges of detraction, but coming 15,27, lib. again into the presse they underwent the same 6.

> tate Digitized by GOOGLE

fate with the third, so that there was no more mercy for them than the others as if all things had confipired both their and their Authors ruine. Thence it comes that Thevet attributes all his travells to a base shifting from place to place, and from Country to Country by reason of his Magick. And yet there's nothing so certain, as that all the voyages he undertook from the twenty second year of his age were upon the Negotiations of some Kings and Princes that employ'd him, in the quality of an Agent.

Thus his coming into England was, as [a] he 596 !.3. himself affirmes, to manage an affaire of great ep. 53. & consequence; it was upon the account of Maxi60. !. 7. ep. milian the Emperour that he follow'd the army
1. 21. 44 he sent into Italy; the Dutchesse of Anjon sent elsewhere. for him into France, Margaret of Anstria into Antwerp; the Archbishop of Cullen into Germany.

And upon some such other occasion he return'd again into France, where he dy'd, in the year b De pra-1535. not at Lyons, as [b] Thevet and [c] Paulus sign. 2.c. g Jovius affirme; but, more truely, according to c In vitis Wierus and Melchior Adam, in the City of Grenoillustr. me-ble, at the Receiver General's house, of the prodicer. whose Son dy'd, some years since, first President of the said City.

Lastly for the story of the Dog, represented to us with greater eloquence than truth by Paul Jovius,

Venalu cui penna fuit, cui gloria flocci;

what furer judgment can be passed on it, after so, evident a sality, but that it is a pure Calumny sorged by his emulators? For as men have strange inclinations inclinations for certaine animals, as that of Alexander for his Horfe, of Augustus for a Parrat, of Nero for a Starling, of Virgil for a butterfly, of Commodus for an ape, of Heliogabalus for a Sparrow, of Honorius for a Hen, and of others for others; so Agrippa plac'd his affection on the most ordinary, keeping constantly five or fix Dogges in his house, whose names are often mention'd in five or fix of his [n] Epistles, as also in n zib. 2. the Epicaphs which some of his Friends $\frac{cp.}{76.} 72. 74. upon them. Though [o] Wierus, o De prawho was his servant sayes he had but two, fig.1.2, c.5; which were perperually with him in his fludy, whereof one was called Monsieur, and the other Mademoiselle. But since the incertainty of the number of his Dogs, which he might daily change, makes nothing to his prejudice, I conceive it best concluding with the said Wierus, that they might indeed give his enemies occasion to raise the report that the Devill convered with him under the forme of a great black Dog, as they had before heard that Simon Magus, Sylvester, Dr. Fanstus, and the Bragadochio of Venice, had one perpetually at their heeles under the shape of such a Creature.

Having thus faithfully layd down the reasons producible on both sides, though I leave all persons to incline to which they think it most fationall, yet shall I for my own particular conclude the Chapter with that saying of Seneca, more true on this occasion then many others, Crede mihi De ira, like levia sant, propter qua non leviter excandescimus.

CHAP

CHAP. XV.I.

Of Merlin, Savanerola, and Nostradamus.

There is a story, that among many birds that came not neer the Temple of Minerva, the Goddesse of Sciences and Reason, the Crows durst not take their slight about it, much lesse light upon it. If it be lawfull to give it any other sense than the literall, I think the most probable were this; that that bird, so considerable in the superstitious Augury of the Ancients, according to this verse of Virgil,

Sepe sinistra cava predixit ab ilice cornix,

being the true Hieroglyphick of those who search after things to come, it is to teach us, that all those who are over-inquisitive in such things, together with the Authours and Observers of I know not what chimericall and fabulous prophecies, qua unicuid, pre ingenie singuntur, nen ex vi Scientia, should be eternally excluded the Temple of Mimerva, that is, the conversation of learned and prudent men. For indeed, it were more rationall to acknowledge with Arnobius, Qua nequeunt sciri nescire nos consitement, neque ea conquirere aut investigare curamus que comprehendi liquidissimum est non posse, quamvie mille per corda suspicio se rigat at q, intendat humana, than to walte our spirits in the pretended mysteries of the Cabala, the supersticious invocations of Magick, the fruitlesse study of the Philosophers stone, and the fantasticall predictions

Digitized by Goog

Senec.

Lib. 2.cont Gent.

dictions of certain Figure-flingers, and Cunningwomen, fince they are extravagancies that find no entertainment, but in the imaginations of vulgar and reptile souls, easily taken in such cob-webs, as a mind any thing masculine cannot be ensnar'd in, without an absolute losse of reputation and prudence.

For two reasons have I brought in Savanorola and Merlin into the number of the great persons, for whom I make this Apologie; one is, that they were the Prophets of their Countries, as they say Nostradamus was of France, Lolhardus of Germany, and Telesphorus and the Abbot Joachim of Calabria. The other, that it is a kind of justice to make a true discovery of them, so to raise them from under those heaps of calumnies, which cover both them, and what we should know of them. As to the famous Merlin, all Authours hitherto have thought him gotten by an Incubus, who was a little too familiar with a certain Kings daughter, then a Nun in a Monastery at Carmarthen. What credit can be expected for all the other stories of his life, when we must be lesse prudent, and more credulous than [z] Godfrey of Z Lib.4. de Monmonth, from whom we have them, to believe origine & Monmoun, from whom we have them, to believe geftis Bri-fuch a nativity as this any way possible? Whence tannor. we may safely infer, that the foundation of such a prodigious relation, being so ill laid, it must needs be absolutely false and forg'd, as we shall without any difficulty demonstrate: For if our Dæmonographers will not admit the generation of Merlin to have been by the ordinary way, they must needs acknowledge, that whatever is said of him is nothing but pure fiction; and consequently, the furest and safest way to answer them is, to deny what they say, as confidently as they affirm it.

I shall not therefore at the present make it any question, whether there are such Dæmons as the Incubi and Succuba, but onely with [a] Wierus, a Lib.2. de Praftig c. [6] Sibilla, [c] Cardan, [d] Casmannus, [e] Ulric 33. 6 Ce-Molitor, [f] Guibelet, [g] Eugubinus, [h] Nicholas quent. Remy, Maldonat, and divers others, deny that their b Decad.3. copulations with mankind can produce any gene-C.2. qu.2.p. ration, whether they do it by eluding the imagireg.qu. c De variet. nation, or make use of humane bodies. Not be-€.8. cause, as Nicholas Remy would have it, man and d Angelogy. the Devil differ in specie; for a Mule is engender-Part. 2. ed between a Horse and an Asse; nor yer because E. 2 I. qu.6. € Lib. de God will not co-operate with such an action, by Phythenifthe infusion of a soul, for Adulterers, Fornicators, lis. and incestuous persons, should never ingender f Difc. of for the same reason; but for that if they ingenthe prinder, it is necessary it should be of their own leed; ciple of Generation or a borrow'd. To think they have any of their g De perenown, were too palpable an abfurdity, fince that, as ni philothey are immateriall substances, they cannot possi-∫op. l.6. bly have that excrement, and (as it were) quinç.23. h Damono-tessence extracted out of abundance of nourishlog.1.1. c.6. ment, and confissing of blood and spirits. Besides that, if this were granted, their productions would be like themselves, or rather some mediate substance between a man and a Damon, than an absolute man:

Burdonem ut sonipes generat commixtus asella, Mulus ut Arcadicis ab equina matre creatur. Tityrus ex ovibus oritur hircog, parente. Musinonem capra ex vervegno semine gignit Apris at g, sue setosus nascitur ibris, Ut supus & catula formant coeundo siciscam.

Digitized by GOOGLE

On the other side, to attribute to the Dæmons! a power to transport the seed from one place to another, without diminishing the generative vertue, and the principle which it contains, is a tenent hath no reason at all to support it, when even those that have the instrument of generation of an over-great length, are not to able for the act, because the conduit being so long, the seed cools, and the principle is weakened. And that is must be much more thus in the seed of the Incubi, is not to be questioned, since that Witches, & cottidiana ista, as they are called in Lipsius, genialiam libidinum victima, infelices muliercula, do all unanimoully confesse in their depositions, that they find it extreamly cold, and receive it without either pleasure or satisfaction, as having not those spirits without which there cannot be any, nor indeed generation be effected. Further, as Goldbeing the most perfect of Metals, is accordingly of the most difficult production, so must it be thought, that man, the noblest of all Creatures, hath by the same reason a more difficult, a more persect, and a more accomplish'd generation than any other. Adde to this, that the most considerable authority, which may be brought against this ne gative, out of Genes. 6. is no more advantageous to our Adversaries, than the great number of experiences they endeavour to collect from Apollonins, Alexander, Romulus, Servius Tullius, Simon Magus, Geffrey Great-tooth, Balderus, Luther, the Huns, and Counts of Cleveland, or the Corocoton of new Spain, and the Nefefoglians of the Turks. For that passage of Genesis, where it is said, After the Jons of God went in to the daughters of men, &c. is to be understood, according to Engubinus, and Maldonat,

Maldonat, of the fons of Seth, who was a holy man, and esteem'd by God, and the daughters of Cham, the most corrupt man of his age; Or, as some interpretit, by the Sons of God are meant Judges, whom the Scripture often cals by the name of Elohim. And lastly, for the said experiences, no doubt, but they are fabulous, and the meer fictions of such as thought to make those perions more recommendable by such Romances, which indeed, while the world was yet in fwadling clouts, were good to cover and conceal Adulteries, and to preserve the reputation of those Ladies, who were more than ordinarily defirous of their pleasure. But now, that the world's grown up to yeers of discretion, and more than ever refin'd, Mart.

Et pueri nasum Rhinocerotis habent, such inventions are thought as v ... and triviall, as all the stories of the Magicall Romances of Maugis d' Aigremont, Dr. Faustus, or our Merlin. Of this latter, all, I think, may be truly and rationally said, is, that he was not the son of one of In Scripto- these Incubi, and that according to the descripti-

In centuriis.

vib. Anglia. on we have of him from Lelandus and Balaus, he was the most excellent Philosopher and Mathematician of his time, Disciple to Telesimus, and a great Favourite to four Kings of England, viz. Vortigern, Ambrose, Utherpendragon, and Arthur, whom all Romancists make the first Institutor of the Knights of the Round Table, with whom agrees

the Poet Annevillanus,

Arthurus teretis mensa genitiva venustas. a In proam. But as to the rest of his actions, what is not buried libror. 5.de reb. Anglic. in the ruines of Time, is come to us darkened b Lib. I .biwith such clouds of fables and lies, that [a] Guliflorie Anelmus Neubrigensis, and [b] Polydor d' Urbin do glicane. with

THE History of MAGNEK. with reason laugh at this Godfrey of Monmouth, who hath transplanted some of those of Merlin's Romance into his History, and hath made a colle- 2. Part of ction of certain Prophecies, as falfly attributed bis Library, to him, as to that other Merlin, sirnam'd the Sa- an. 536. vage or Caledonian, whom Ranulphus and Trevisa, in Centur. in Vigner and Balaus would distinguish from the Script. Anformer. Nor are rheir conjectures without some gie. ground, who would maintain that there was but one Merlin under these two names, but in severall times and successively, Ambrose and then the Caledonian, fince they were both Contemporaries, that they liv'd under the same Kings, and excell'd in the same Science, and that, according to the vulgar errour, they both writ certain short Prophecies and predictions. Upon which when I find the Commentaries, of a large Volume, of Alams, a man not ignorant in his age, I am forced to acknowledge with Cicero, that, Nihil tam De divi-absurde dici potest qued non dieatur ab alique Phi-nat.2. lesopherum, For I cannot think any thing at a greater distance with possibility, than the accident on which Merlin took occasion to publish his excellent Prophecies, which was this. King Vortigern was advised by the Magicians, to build a Galf. de strong Tower in some part of his Realm, where erig. Geograf. he might live securely, not fearing the Saxons Britann. whom he had brought out of Germany. Coming 1,4, c.ult. to build, they had hardly laid the foundations, but Adamus, the earth in one night swallows up all, and leaves mentar f. 2 not so much as the tracks of any Edifice. Upon that, the Magicians perswaded him, that to fasten the stones well, they should be sprinckled with the blood of a child born without a father, such as Merlin, after a long search, happened to be. Being

Digitized by Google

accor-

accordingly brought to the King, he first dispured with his Magicians, and told them, that under the foundation of that Tower there was a great Lake, and under that Lake two great and terrible Dragons, one red, signifying the people of England, or Britain, the other white, representing the Saxons. These Dragons were no sooner disburthen'd of the earth that lay upon them, but the ingin a furious combat, whence Merlin takes occasion to bewail the condition of England in his Prophecies. But for my part, I cannot imagine there is any thing equally tabulous with this story, unlesse a man will squander away so much leisure, as to look into this Godfrey of Monmouth's book, to obferve the subtle invention, like that of Amphitrus

Lib. 2.

pograph.

Hibernia.

in Plantus, whereby Merlin made Utherpendragon assume the person of Gorlow, and by that means enjoy the fair Ingerna; as also that of the Danca of the Gyants, that is, great stones and rocks, which he transported out of Ireland into England, to erect a Trophy neer the City of Ambrosiopolis.

But that one [a] Gervase, Chancellour to the Ema Lib.2.de perour Otho the Fourth; as [b] Theodoric a Niem Schismate. £.19. relates, hath so gloffed upon it, as not to be ashab Lib. de med to affirm, that these great rocks and mountains turn'd perpetually in the air, and that not otiis impe-Vatoriis. c Iu Gene-held up by any thing, I cannot sufficiently adthliace Edmire. Whereas [c] Lelandus, who hath made a vard. prinmore curious fearch into the. Antiquities of Engsip. Camland, laughs at the indifcretion of these Authours, brie, in Toaffirming this Dance of the Gyants to be nothing but diverse heaps of great stones, which Merlin caused to be raised like Pyramids or Trophies neer the said City, in imitation haply of those, which

CHAP. XVII.

Scot, Johannes Picus, and Trithemius. Of St. Thomas, Roger Bacon, Bungey, Michael the ridiculous and ill digested relations, which would collections and gleanings of I know not what sed innocent, to gain the greater credit to certain precended integrity, to the prejudice of the accuimagine; to under the shadow and conceit of their fuar, our of an excelle of zeal to the truth, as they without any exception of persons, Tros kutulus ve be no other found than that they strike at all, any reason of this rigorous proceeding, there will thority among the Learned. For if we look for Josophers, Physicians, and others of greatest authops, and Popes, than they had before for Phithey have no more respect for Religious men, Binothing leffe. May, fuch is their impudence; that morte conantur scientiam mutuare, vahich deletves Sarisberiensis affirms of it, morte digni sunt qui a Lib. T. Po- ving death, but as guilty of a crime, as Johannes demn the most eminent Authours, not as defer-Dictators of Rome, do yet so confidently conthough they have not the power of the ancient relects on the temerity of those Writers, who, there is more reason to wonder now, when a man fear of being call'd to any account for so doing. But any defence for himfelt, and that without the least zen he pleafed, without allowing him to make impower the Distator to put to death any Citi-Imong the Komans a Law to barbarous, as should Have lometimes wondered there should be a-

DG/CL

La Lune au plein de Nuiët fur le baut mont, Le nouveau Sopbe, d' un seut cerveau l' a veuë, meentiuneur, pars ea non it meillesima. temere ant attute vera dicunt, pra cateris qua Phanorinm in Gellim, that, ista omniaqua aut i. It. c. L. To which adde that of attite. aberrantibus caterus. tangere, Nott: כשווונשור י wrun ายวาเมีย [WHI tere etiden aliquando Mathematicos vera dicere, &, Charteet with that excellent passage of Seneca, Pa-I thall brietly answer, and withall conclude this especially those whose events are yet uncertain; quently that I ought not so fatte to discredit them, truth at least of tome of those tetrasticks, & conseph the explication he makes of them evince the divers of the Centuries into Latine verse, does, the Author of the French Janus, who translated said Book. But because it may be objected that self, for certain reasons by him layd down in the not possibly be meant of any other then him-This he is so confident of, that he affirmes it can-tore he was born, quoting him by his name and had spoken of him, above thirty four years bevery ingenuoully, pag. 15. that Nostradamm called, The Chymist, or French Conserver, sayes in effigie, and that the Author of a little book which fome years fince was fold up and down something about that imaginary monstrous fish paines to learch them out, fince they met with occations, is only because men will not be at the indeed, that there are not found fome upon all fiting of the Palace and the Bridges of Paris. And the great fortune of Monfieur de Laynes; and the abroad upon the death of the Matshall d' Anere falls out, as for instance, those that are scatter'd prought upon the stagewhen any thing remarkable completed near thirty years fince; yet are they fill greatest part of Nostradamw's predictions are accyes hath shewn in his French Janus, that the triffed away his paines upon all kinds of Prophe-Chavigni, one that, of all others, hath foolishly ons as they pleal'd. For though John Aime sense, that Posserity might interpret his predictito write as to avoid a clear and intelligible we say of this Authour, that his maine defigne was cave, oblique, round, and Cylindricall. So may being of Lead, bent it felt to all figures, conwhich sitted all seet; or that Lesbiantule, which any thing more fiely then to Theramener's shooe, veryfi'd as being such as we cannot compare to et that little hope there is to see these prophecyes without any reason or ground, what esteem. not over-early drawn in to embrace opinions-This premifie, I leave those to judge who are cold, or fome other quality unknown to us, their bodies, proceeding meetly from heat and cissindes according to the naturall alteration of or Autume, as a certain knowledge of those viout of any forefight in them, of Spring, Wintersthe severall seasons of the year, it is not so much to the Birds which thite Countries according to as it gathers together in the Element. And as nacurall instinct, they seel in their bodies, assoon is, the humid influx of the Aire, which, by a thing to come, but only what is present, that the gesture of their bodies does not portend any certaine Creatures, Leonard Vair will tell us, that hour it happened. And lastly for the foresight of the death of the Duke of Burgundy at the very, Lepansosche ocher acquainced Lewis the Sixth with lacion that the Christians had gain'd the battel of 2.6.3. Of these two lash, the former knew by reve- Cominus. L. or the Pope Pins V. & the Archbilhop Angelo Catunlesse it be by way of Revelation, as Jacob did, STOREHILOW OF MAGICK.

Armes in the 31 rectaffick of the oth, century,

This picture, A treate thoise to Juege who are more over-early drawn in to embrace opinions without any tealon or ground, what effects frould be had of these from Centuries, which are enigmatically that it were no mitacle if among a thouland tetraflicks, whereof every one speakes commonly of five or fix severall things, and particularly such as ordinarily happen, there comes in France, or the death of a Grandee in Italy, a plague in Spaine, a Monster, a great site, a victory, in France, or the death of a Grandee in Italy, a or something of this nature, as if those Emergenor something of this nature, as if those Emergenties were extraordinary, and happen'd not at one cries were extraordinary, and happen'd not at one are or some in the strong of this nature, and happen'd not at one case of the strong of the strong were extraordinary, and happen'd not at one case of some or other.

10E 19

Philosoph.

.z .] 128

Valestum, who digg up the very corner stones of a vedivi- tinently refuted by [a] Cicero and the learned [b] have to foretell things to come, which yet is pergrounded on the naturall capacity men fometimes toundation, it must be that of the third cause, So that if we allow his prophectes any rer, as being such as cannot be known till they apbut the spirit of man that is in him: not in the latto the Corinthians, None knows the things of man of our mind, as being such as St. Pant speaks of while they remaine buried in the several motions Not in the former, because they are uncertaine foresee them either in their causes, or their effects. & depend purely on our will, as being not able to not any knowledge of these actions which are stee cause even they, consider a in their nature, have have done it by any revelation from Damons, be-In the second place, Linserre, that he could not mane science, till such time as they are present. ther known or foreseen by the help of any hu-

To answer theresore, in sew words, all those De Sacra this erroneous opinion.

unleffe men are more likely to forceel things then others. or beginnings. Not is it to be credited, that old of there is not in it either the cause, principles, proceed from it this naturall Divination, wherewould find out. But we mult deny that there can by it makes fooner discoveries of the reason it it may cause certain motions in the soul, wheredeepest contemplations upon any subjectinay that quistion of causes, and more perseverant in the eapable of Sciences, more earnelt in the dilof its qualities, make men more desirous and to acknowledge, that Melancholy may, by reason realons alledged to confirme it, we are indeed tembels, and all this without any other instruction the changes of featons, wind, raine, fair weather, ance of the rules of Poell, though he had reconcil'd fintt attended by a Poeticall fury, then by any allileuttered bis predictions rather through a naturall indedicated to Henry the second of France, that be solf confesses in his Episse to the three Centuries then in the other two, because Nostradamus him-I have been more particular in this last caule, on than that of their naturall instinct.

ינט של בנסטטשוכשון כשוכחושונים מוציים מינים מיני

tingent, fuch as are the actions that depend meerof their canies, then things purely free and conthat Art, by reason of the uncertain emergencies For theie are no more under the juridiction of might actain the knowledge of those particulars. Whereof having not left us any tules whereby we by the affiliance of Astrology, the Authors stre, that he could not compole those predictions no concernment. Whence in the first place I in-Circumstances, even to occurrences of litie or t recisely markes out all the accidents and severall wore particular then those of Nostradamus, who to ont knowledge, we have not met with any of all predictions and Prophecyes that ever came And this it were the more eafy to shew, in that, have found more falle than any of his Centuries. if they had well examined them, they thould tpoint of this Fortune-teller, upon causes, which their over-credulity, who would ground the Authree reasons, they certainly are to be blam'd for strious book cannot subsist but by one of these But fince the truth & reputation of that so Myτμςι any decerminate truth or falthood cannot be eily on our will, and which in regard they have not tpc Creatures, foretel, by the disposition of the Aire Gods, as Euripides terms them, and severall other Apud Plut. Dirds call'd bedy knguzes, the Messengers of the deny'd this perfection to man when we fee the Nature with a certaine discare of mankind if she on, they adde that were forme reason to charge ready at Liberty. To strengthen this last opiniifthe foul, by a certain anticipation, were aloften foretell what afterwards comes to patie; as being in the urmost declination of their age, do this we have fome experience in old men, who arriving to the knowledge of things to come. Ot gers her from exceeding her ordinary Limits, and forces and faculties; so that there is nothing hinmost hidden in her, that is her divine and celestrall lancholly the displayes and discovers what is naturall motion by the violent agitation of Mefor the most part, when, being forc'd against her her from this concemplation. And this happens have done while the exigencies of the body divere chings to come as present, which the could not distance from her. Then it is that shee sees the may be free to confider what is at the greatest in the masse of its terrestriall Element, that so certain paralyhis, and leaves it as it were buried from the government of the body, the fuffers a C. 1.9. 1.19. to the opinion of Avicenna, when the is discogaged Soul to foretell things to come. For, according affiltance then that of the capacity of the humane Damon; and a third fort, that he had no other veal'd sto him by the meanes of some samiliar judiciall Astrology; others, that it was re-Some hold he got it by the practile of arrive to such a certain knowledge of things to controverly by what meanes the Authour could him a quice contrary tepute: fome, as Konfard and Meanue not knowing what to lay to their Lib. 4. of isling out true fornetimes; and others looking bis comparities out them as lyes fooleties and impossures, and mentais, containing such a diversity of crafty ambiguities, that it were in a manner impossible not to find containing fuch a divertity of crafty ambiguities, that it were in a manner impossible not to find something among so many thousands of tetrassicks upon any occasion a man can propose to him to make sport with those fasheries, among whom the most ingenious was he, who, without charge the most ingenious was he, who, without charge ing him with contradictions, or calling him Monster as diversed and the most ing him with contradictions.

Met app.

~ w

(16; Mastra damus, nam serba damus, nam fallere nostrum Et cum verba damus, ni nis nostra damus.

did, onely searhim this Distick;

But as there is no Caule to desperate which, in time, meets not with some that will patronnie it; so much it be acknowleded, that there are a many hollow braines, and minds he only to receive any thing that is extravagant, and that without these extravagant, and their pockets emory without these Centuries, which they idelife by without these Centuries, which they idelife ooking on them as more infallible then the Golooking on them as more infallible than all occasions that Quasint, sucrint, qua mox ventura tradantur.

Yet does not this Idolatty hinder, but that anong those who admire them so much, it is a

CODITIONELLY

·ziigols nl

lidius eller ad persundendum specieipsa pietatis, in Josins, speaking of him, well observes) nibil onmight not governe at Florence, quando (as Paulus ty I leave men to judge, whether Savonarala chim Sauonarola, Laugentio Miniatt, Antonio that he might easily blast the memory of Merlin, Telesphorus, Cataldus, Lolhardus, Joayear from 1550, till 1567, he further imigin'd, ons, which he printed at the beginning of every not content to have cheated us in his pradictionly to obletive the vanity of his Defignes. For Janus, and the Pleiades, it being my businesse, jed with them, but the Author of the Evench. tiat and pittifull that no Hilforian hath yet medto its principall circumstances, since they are lo, sbuses, whose life I shall not set sorth according may I much more apply to this Monster of tures and their ordure and excrements. Josele, who in the same Book treats of living Creaway of excuse that it was in imitation of Avifame upon Khodophilus and Dolet alledging by on the molt famous Poets, would needs give the Casar Scaliger, who having passiding judgmene little foile. Or tather to imitate that great Julius as the sparkling of a Diamond is heightned by a norance and little merit of this upstart prophet, to many excellent persons, by the temerations :gthis Apology, were it not to adde tome lustre to I should have lest Michael Wostradamus out of qua etiam tuenda Libertatis studium emineret.

were no fooner abroad, but they immediately gotfuture state of all things in the world. These by publishing a Decad of Centuries, upon the Stions, by the reputation he was in hope to gaine Torquato, and all those that had dabled in predi-

wiy

Poetic. L.

9.0.9

LÅ

King and Miramomelin of Africk. From this floyear 1147, this Noble Potter Abdelmon was made the King Albobaly Aben Teshir being kill'd in, the happened a great dattle between them, wherein, athitance of the greatest part of the Nobility, there tions, that, having gottten this Abdelmon the Law, and did so well, by the force of his perswathe Caliph of Baldae, high Prist of their homet. This done, he set upon the person of the Alabeet, and the blood of their Prophet Ma-Unipers, as fuch as had driven out the family of of the Almoravides, calling them Tyranis and His next butinefle was to preach down the race holy Alphurcanistick Law through all the world. God, who through his meanes, would plant the propose that Abdelmon, was a person raised up by and to reforme them at his pleasure, he began to seconded to far as to engage in the publick Affairs, Herely, and then perceiving himself sufficiently gor some followers by the introduction of a new To effect which with more ease, he first, Porter, a poor and necessirous man, called Abdellife, to crowne, King of Africk, the Son of a Gions, and the great opinion men had of his an Astrologor that seconded him with his preditook without any other assistance than that of ly learned and well veribd in the Alcoran, under-Religious man Almohadi, who being excellentthe fortunate and temeratious enterptife of the eloquence. Toprove this, we may instance in grace of well speaking, and a more then ordinary he pleases especially when he is endu'd with the of living holily, he perswades the people to what us, and that when a man hath once the reputation for Religion hach an extraordinary influence upon

₽ d

101 of Mahomet and Avrius that the respect we have to long a time; knowing well by the examples a connecticit lanctimony to keep up his credit for had withall the affiltances of his revelations and tor the space of ten years at Florence, though he This may Savonarola prelume he did discourles. fing them, at their pleafure by the Charmes of their turning them upfide down; and in a word, dilpotolling them now, on one fide, then on the other porp in the Calmes of peace and Storms of war, nbon the Sea, entertaining them as they pleat'd and democraticall Covernments as the winds are cient Orators, who were as powerfull in popular tive, that he may well be compar'd to thole anendu'd with an Eloquence, so ready and persuatimes upon tery honourable Employments, and cover him a very great Politician, putt many laftly for the rest of othis actions, they eatily disof the Florentines, and the K. of France. And Come of those many strends he had in the Counsels that he had notice of what should be done by true, it is to be attributed either to Chance, or the fallity of them. But if any have fallen our Johnnes Pogus hach purpolely written to discover are at large cited and exemplify'd in a Book which phelies, much more vaine than these, as they dayes after, he dy'd; and divers others of his prothould recover of the ficknesse, whereof, two vour'd to rule in Florence; that Johannes Picus, thould come to an unfortunate end, that endeawould come a fecond time into Italy; that he comines. 1. For instance, the ethis affirming that Charles VIII. the contrary, they have provid almost all falle. divers other Saints and favorites of God, that on Magick, such as were those of the Prophets, and

8. c. 19.

But to make a more rationall and equitable way advantageous to them. gustine, out of an imagination that it is some then Chry ostome, and more learned then St. Aumore zealous then Sr. Paul, more eloquent togox bettons, who would gladly make him ricies and friends, or the lubilety of certain Herebe attributed either to the affection of his savothe praise hath been given him to this day is to piecatis argumentum. Whence it is clear that all cere potuerit, maximum elle videtur singularis tua ut non nife te indigniffime damnato, & cremato quiel-Pontifex hujus nominis sextus, ul g adeo displicuisse, perdito scelerato quam fuit Alexander ille Borgia gies, suyes roundly and confidently, Homini ram it from Beza, who speaking of him in his Elo-For which, if my word may not be taken, take he derogated from the Authority of the Popes. of the Clergy & Court of Rome, and la lly, because that he preach'd scandalously against the manners Ecclefiatheks with an approaching reformation; was not perfectly Catholick, that he threatned the other reason to celebrate him, but that his Doctrin cogiranda. On the contrary the other fort had no ta. Book to him entituled, De morte Christi & propria in esus vi-Frier; as also in that Franciscus Picus dedicated a Fran. Pic. Dominican, upon the meet perswassing of this was refolv'd a little before his, death, to tuin as he could, of Benivenius and Marfilius Ficinus, apparent, in that Johannes Picus, who di polid, most of them were his intimate striends, as is apinto his internall dislimulation, or rather because Magick P 3 they are to far from being the effects of divine dictions which have made him to tamous, that Judgment of him, we may lay, fifth of the Pre-communicate him. no realon to forbid him the Pulpit, and to exthe Pope, to shery that Alexander the sixth had derogate much from the Authority and power of a man very religious and a found Catholick, to in his vindication, that he flick'd not, though Prophecyes; and Franciscus Pieus Was lo passionate tine Priest pur forth a Book of his miracles and admiration. In so much that Bentvenius a Florenpiety, Learning and good life, but with certain

The other fort of people that had a great ve-

Savanerole these verses pur under his effigies. d in epiff. Catalogue of their Mariyrs, as may be seen by ticks, and are both written in Capitalls in the tony of Int- fame punishment, that they were but Archberee in bis my- Hus of thit Country fince they both fuffered the to be wondr'd they call'd him not also the John ·2 ·22110.7 Lessins & Jenius, a Jessen, the Italian Luther. Only it is chrift, and in a word, to conclude with [d] Jes-1/unsp Babylon, the sworne enemy of the Romane Anti-·Sojody ner of Evangelicall reformation, the scourge of great siqui q anne, 1898, him the Jain by lu wirnelle of the Truth, the fore-runof his bellow of Germany, who ordinarily in their writings call pel, du [c] Pleffy, Mornay, and all the Lutherans · E I wd uz a in clogics, the former, that is, [a] Beza, [b] Vigner, Capneration for him, were of a different religion from

ovx youd

Marityrio ornatus, S. AVO NAROLA prius. En Monachus Jolers, rerum scrutator acutus, ojur good man, not fearthing any intrict then others on the common opinion, they thought him a faid much good of £2 conarola, because, replying thate two forts of perfons; that the former have But there is this maine difference between

The History of MAGICK.

ied fuch factions and parties amongst them, as had by realon of the novelty of his Docttine, and raia man who kept them at a diffance with the Pope, to execution, so to quiet the City by the death of ced open the gates of his Monaffery to bring him parey, which in the heat of the commotion forcracie, they were not able to refilt the contrary tims, who would have tetled a kind of an Arittoup the popular State against Guy Anthony Vespuzogenin, who made his advantages of him, to keep no other friends than the inchion of Paul Anthony Eight of the noblest among them. So that having which, by his advice, was done upon seven or

I am not ignotant that many Authours are of a in the ruine of their State and Seigneury. tych Bone inteher, must needs have buried them

ous as celestiall and civine, and speak not of his time was and divers others, who receiv'd his predicti- thust vivor Marsius Ficinus, Flaminius, [8] Matthaus Tosca- & in Peplo Picus, and Franciscus of Mirandula, de Benivenius, The former were certain Catholikes, as Johannes sores of persons who savoured him very much, reputation, was the influence he had over two mit. But what inceed contributed much to his ces he had with the Devel, taking him for a Her-Prophecies, contains nothing but the conferen-For one half of the book he hath writ upon his peritos, & vulgi homines miraculum sui faciant. contra se pugnantium portenta fingunt, ut apud im-Monks St. Hierom speaks of, Qui Damonum and famous Politicians, as being one of those the most fortunate, yet among the most eminent Cardan, who tank this Authour, it not among to shent to Paulus Jovius, Machiavel, and direct contrary opinion to me, as who am inclin'd

pieth 7 d

demonstration and triall, offered to maintain the falfity of them, by fuch a tering into the fire with a Franciscan, who had inffered publikely, with two of his Brethren, ensall to manifest the truth of his Prophecies, he happened in the City of Florence, upon the tefunishment of fire, which, in the commorton that took him at Amboise; and Savanorola by the pulife for a better; the former by a ficknesse that him so much in his predictions, exchanged this wherein both Charles, and he who had tayour'd convinc's of the contrary, till the year 1498, his affirmation of it. Not indeed could they be Thould return again, upon no other ground than two years before, it was generally expected he Charles the Eighth into Italy, foretold by him his own revelations, that after the roming of the Scripture, and the security he gave them of This he could do so strangely, by passages out of the revenging scourge for all their iniquities. Tyrants of Italy, who were foon after to teel formation, to incceed that of the little Kings and Church was threatened with an approaching reupon explication of the Apocalyps, that the people, teaching in his Sermons of the yeur 1489, daily to the reputation he had gain'd among the himself, yet did he make it his businesse to adde affairs were not catried on as he had imagin'd to chually observe, to make their State the most flourishing of those of all Italy. Whereupon, though

But to this contributed not a little, the indignation, not onely of Pope Alexander the Lixth, and most of the Clergie, against whom he ordinatily rail'd in the Pulpit, but also of the principall Citizens of Florence, by teason of the execution, which, which sylvester Girard layes were in Ireland uponithe mountain cyllarus in the time of Henry the Second of England, By these patterns you may judge of the whole piece of these tidiculous fittiones, and so, whether Badius Acensius had not in Epis ad some ground, speaking of the nine books of this Lettorum. Codestry printed by him, to say, In quibus st distincted by him, to say, In distincted by ctually mighty God, & which accordingly they must punwhich he faid had been reveal'd to him by Algreat consequence much conducing thereunts, brace it, proposing to them sour or five points of threig up all the Citizens unanimoutly to emthe lecting of a popular Government, wherein he called to the Councell then held at Flovence for into matters of Policie, and can'ed himself to be he hach made upon his Prophecies, he intruded 1484, 25 he acknowledges himself, in the book cree ambition. This happen'd, when in the year, by degrees to discover some symptoms of his se-Persons, by his zeal and grear devotion, he began. also railed the hearts and affections of all forts of ence with Rhetoricall expressions and figures, but only charm the most delicate eats of his Audipeople of Florence by his preaching, which did nor paying gain'd extraordinary reputation aniong the cover the candor and integrity of his life, that well how to husband his eloquence; and so datof the Order of St. Dominick. This man knew fo Savanovola, born in the City of Ferrara, a Friat Kings of England, we passe to Brother Hierom From this Mertin, to highly favour'd by the never find Readers, were there not more fools who are delighted to see extravagant pictures, than wife men that have the patience to contemplace a simple and naturall Beauty.

Codefrey princed by him, to lay, in quibus si alligenter legevies, agnosces, aut meram antiquitatis integritatem, aut admirandam illius saculi, cum in nominibus, tum verò in temporibns susputandis calliditatem.

Since therefore it were indifcretion in me to break off this Apologie, when I am come to that point for which principally I undertook it, I think it now time to speak of Religious men, and to shew what ingratitude it were in us to make so fleight acknowledgement of the obligation we owe them for the preservation of Letters, from the times of Bostine, Symmachus, and Caffiodorus, to the last taking of Constantinople. At which time Learning began to creep out of Monasteries, which for all the time before, had been (as it were) publike Christian Schools, where not only youth, but also such men as would apply themselves that way, were instructed in all manner of Disciplines, Sciences, & Morality, and that to such a height, that not content with that lo famous Quadrivium of the Mathematicks, which, besides all that is now shewn in Colledges, was then taught, Medicine, both as to Theory and Practice was so well cultivated, that we need no more to convince us how expert they were therein, than the writings of Ægidins, Constantine, and Damascene, Joannitius, Peter of Spain, and Turisanus. So that it were easie for me to answer those who charge them with illiterature and ignorance, did I not think it more requisite to apply the remedy where there is most need, and by culling out five or fix among them,

Verè homines, & Semidei, Heroef g, vocari,

The Millson's of MAGICK.

23

a Lib. 1.

to rescue them from the crime of this Magicall Idolatry, which were to much the more horrid and abominable, practiced by them, by how much they are principally those who should oppose it, and cleanse mens minds thereos, as well by the example of their good lives, as by the zeal and servencie of their learned instructions.

We are then to consider, that the Authour of the Book entituled Ars notoria, published by Giles Bourdin, layer this foundation for the reputation thereof, that the holy Ghost had dictated it to [a] St. Hierom, which we must allow upon another assurance of his, that he translated the history

Astrolog. of Judich in one night. To which adde, that Jo-Franc. Pi=hannes Picus affirms, he had seen a book of Encus 1.5. de chantments, which diverse weak judgements hold pran. c. 6. was interpreted by the same St. Hierom, though with as little reason, as Trithemius affirms, as some attribute certain conjurations of the sour prinacipall Devils to St. Cyprian Bishop of Carthage. This consideration premised, I doubt not, but the evident salshood of these calumnies, will prove a certain light to the judgement we should passe on those books of Necromantical Images, the Metallick Art, the Secrets of Alchymy, and that De essentia essentiarum, divulged and vented a so. Picus daily under the salshood St. Thomas Aquinas, justandwers.

Alvelog. In firmam'd by [a] Picus, Splender Theologia, by Alvelog.

Idem. in Erasmus, Vir non suis aculi, by [b] Vives Scriptor de Heptaplo schold omnium sanissimus, and by the content of in Ecclesial Authours, with that of the Church, The faithable, & in full Interpreter of Aristotle and the holy Scripture, lib. de The The base and foundation of Scholasticall Divinity, b Detrad. and in a word, the Angelicall Doctor. For I would Discipl 1.5. know, what ground there were to imagine, that this this great Intelligence, canoniz'd in the year 1 322, and whose dostrine was approved by a Decree of the University of Paris, in the year 1333; and by three Popes, Innocent V, Urban V I, and John X X I I, should trouble himself with either Magick, or the extravagancies of the Alchymists, who might indeed have brought him over to their party, had they not forgot one thing, which is to dash out and corrupt, as some Hereticks do, that pussage of his Commentaries, upon the second Book of the Master of Sentences, where he for- piffing, 7. mully impugnes the possibility of their transmuta-quast. 3. tions of Metals. Whence, me thinks, they should art. 1. ad 5. take warning not to expose themselves so freely to the icorn of those who distrust whatever comes from them, & who read these supposititious books out of no other defigne, than to observe their great indifcretion therein, and the little judgement they have to carry on their subtle plots. We may instance, not to engage into an infinity of proofs, in their making this great Doctor speak so childishly in the Book De effentis effentiarum, that he might very well be said to have no more acquaintance with his works, than the barbarous Inhibitants of Margajats and Topinamboux in Africk, who should believe that such low and reptile conceptions could fall from a mind to high and lublime; or that he ever dreamt of what they make him say in the same Treatise of an Astrologicall Book, which Abel, son of Adam, De effent. lodg'd within a stone, found after the Deluge by ffentiar. Hermes, who took the book ont of it, wherein was taught the Art of making Images under certain Planets and Consellations. Besides the story concerning himself, that being disturb'd in his stu-Q 2

The majory of TATURE OF C.W.

dies, by the great noise of Horses passing by his door every day at watering time, he made the image of a Horse, according to the rules of the said Book, which being put in the street two or three foot under ground, the Grooms were thenceforward forc'd to find out another way, as being not able to make a Horle passe that way,

Spectatum admissi risum teneatis amici?

S CHAd. Scaund.

9468.69.

For I think a man must be more Agelastus than ever Crassus was, if he can retrain laughing at this pretty relation, fince that, not to say any thing of the ab urdity of its circumstances, there could not possibly be found out another more contrary to the Doctrine of St. Thomas, who in all his works, and particularly in his Sum, in his Quodlibet Questions, and in his Treatise of Secret Verquest, 12 art tues and Properties, denies, that these images can receive any vertue from the Stars and Conflellations under which they were made. This certainly were enough to shew the impertinence and absurdity; it is, to charge this great person with contributing ought to the composition of these books, though we should not presse, that Truthemins in his Catalogue of Ecclesiastical Authours, mentions not any one of them printed with the body of his works, collected into seventeen Tomes; nor take any notice, that Johannes Picus laughs at that book of Necromanticall Images, and Franciscus his nephew, though much a tervant and favourer of the Alchimists, makes it a great quellion, whether those Books of the Metallick Art, are not to be attributed rather to the Alchymiles then St. Thomas. To which I may adde, that, that, as Delrio affirmes, the Commentaries upon the Nativity of one Thomas an English many have been published under his name because of the nearneste there is between these two Latine words, Anglicus and Angelicus; so it may safely be inferred, that since, according to all the Dzmonographers, there have been diverse other persons of the same name that have writ severall Books in Magick, it were more rationall to imagine that that of the Necromanticall images should be rather fathered on them then on St. Thomas of Aquin, of whom it shall be said, in spight of all Ignorance, and to the despaire of the Authours of these calumnities,

he

----Et molliter offa quiescent Semper, & in summo mens aurea vivet Olympo.

Had we the Book, which John Dee, Cittizen of London a very great Philosopher and Mathematiti- In spift. dean faies he had written in defence of Roger Bacon, propaden-where he shows that whatever was said of his mat. Aphomiraculous operations is rather to be attributed to riflicor. de the knowledg of nature, & the Mathematicks than Nature vito any commerce or conversation he ever had with ribus. Demons; I should have as litle to say of him as of Apuleius who clear'd himself from the like acculation in two Apologies. But fince that Book (at least that I know of) never yet came abroad , I must imitate the grassehopper in Ælian, and supply the want of this broken string, with what is to be had, fo to rescue the reputation of this English Franciscan, who was a doctor of Divinity, and the greatest Chymist, Astrologer and Mathematician of his time, from being conde mn'd

The History of MAGICK.

230

demn'd and buried among the multitude of Conjurers and Magicians. For, to tar was he from making one of their number, that a man can no way betrer justify and defend him, then by producing his own declamations against Magick, unlawfull Books, Characters and spells, as you have them in the three first Chapters of an Epissle he writ of the Powor of Art and Nature. Adde to this that Delrio is content to observe only that

Disquisit.l. 31. 6. 3. there were some superstitious propositions in his queft. 1. Workes, such as haply was that which Franciscus

1ib. 2. de Picus saies he had read in his Book Of the fix Scipranotione ences, where he affirmes that a man may become a c. I. & l. Propher and foretel things to come by the meanes 7. 6. 7.

of the Glasse Almuches, composed according to the rules of Perspettive, provided he made use of it under a good constellation, and had before hand made his body very even, and put it into a good temper by Chymistry. Nor indeed am I at all Lib. 2. de Præflig.c.2. fatisly d, why Wierus and divers others Damonoa In prafa. Apolog. lib. graphers should so readily charge this Philosopher with the exercise of Geotick or prohibited de Script. Magick, when he, whom they all so much ac-Anglicis. b Lib. de knowledge, Johannes Picus of Mirandula, main-

Diis Syris taines, that he studied only the Naturall. Where-Syntag. I. to may be added the tellimonies of three famous C. 2. In English Authors, [a] Lelandus [b] Selden and Posteriori Bayly; as also that of Dr. [c] Pits, who laughs at editione Cantab.

their foolish credulity who give any credit to this c Lib. I.de popular Errour, especially since, as Selden afrebus Anfirmes, there's no English Historian ever made glicis. mention of his Magicall operations or any brasen Lib. To. Head, which the populace believe he made.

Symbolor. Upon occasion whereof Majerus observes that he aurea menis brought in as a great Magician in all Comedies @ pag .453. and and that the common report is, that he and his Fellow-Frier Thomas Bungey were seven years about that Head, meetly to know of it whether there were not some meanes to compasse England with a wall or Ramparr, whereto it give an answer which yet they could not understand, for, not expecting to receive it so soon, they were taken up with something else than hearkening to that Oracle.

A very fine relation certainly and suitable to the falle witnesse from whom we have it, if ever there were any falle, that is, the multitude, as having alwayes been accounted such by all good Authors, especially [a] Seneca and [b] Lastantius. 2 Lib. de The former affirmes, you mult never appeal to it vita beata. in any thing of Consequence, Quarendum non b Divin ar. quod vulgo placet, pessimo veritatitis interpreti: and c. 3. the other had reason to admonish us, that Vulgus indoctum pompis inanibus gandet animis qui pueri libus spectat omnia, oblectatur frivolis, nec ponderare secum unamquam g, rem potest. This were enough to stifle that vulgar story, should I say nothing of all the impertinences that accompany it, fince they so evidently discover themselves. I take it therfore to be enough for my purpole to note that the structure and composition of this head was a thing absolutely impossible for the reasons I shall give for it in the next Chapter, and withall that Roger Bacon never minded the making of it, the whole fable having no other ground then common and popular reports. For it being ordinary old wives talk that Pope Sylvester, William · of Paris, Robert of Lincolne, and Albertus Magnus had made such discoursing Statues, it might very well be added that Rober Bacon had in like Q 4 manner manner made one, since that, being a great Mathematician, as may be seen both by the Treatises and instruments of his invention he sent to Pope Clement the fourth and his two Books, printed within these siteen years, of Perspective and Glasses, it is not unlikely he did many extraordinary things by the help of that Science; whereof the cause being not known to the yulgar, (which was much more rough-hewn, and barbarous than it is now) it could do no lesse then attribute them to Magick. But for that he hath for compurgators all learned men, and particularly the Jejuits, who put into their Mathematicall Theses desended at Pont à Mousson in the year 1622. On the day of the Cannonization of Ignatius, and Xavier, That it was possible for a man well ver! din Opricks and Catoptricks (such as undoubtedly Bacon was) dato quolibet objecto, quodlibet representare per specula, Proposit. 12. optic.

Digitized by Google

montem ex atomo, suillum aut asininum caput ex humano, Elephantem à capillo. What hath been faid of Bacon, may be also apply'd to Thomas Bungey, who, meerly because he was his Colleague in studies lying under the same misprisson, must be included in the same desence. And for this there is so much the more reason, in that Delrio sayes not any thing of the Book he Disquist. I. writ of Natural Magick But that it containes ı.

Mathematician.

r. c. 3.qu. certain supersizious propositions. Besides had he been in the least thought guilty of this crime, they would have been more carefull then comake him Provincial of the Order of St. Francis in England, as Dr. Pits affirms he was; and withall that whatever is faid concerning his Magick, proceeds only from his being an excellent Philosopher and

The

The like solution may serve to justifie Michael the Scot, who was no Ignorant person as those imagine who never saw his name but in the books of Dæmonographers, a people that would have nothing to say of him, were it not to rank him among the Magicians, in imitation haply of the Poet Merlin Coccains, who took a pleasure to discribe his enchantments, and Dante the Florentine, who speakes thus of him, at the end of the twentieth Canto of his Hell.

Quell'altro, che ne fianchi é così poco, Michele Schotto fu, che veramente Delle Magiche frode seppe il gioco.

See you that trifling fellow there?
'Twas Michael the Scott, who knew his part.
In all the roguing cheats of Magick Art.

For besides that he is cited as a great divine by the most learned of the Carmelites, and Prince of the Part. fen-Averroists, Johannes Bacco, it is easily judg'd, tent. dias well by the two Books we have of his, Of Phy-finet.33. siognomy, and Questions upon the Sphear of Sacrobosco, as by his History, of Animals and the testimony of Pits, that he was one of the molt excellent Philosophers, Mathematicians, and Astrologers of his time; and upon that account much favour'd by the Emperour Frederic II. to whom he dedicated all his Books, and forecold him that he should die in a castle called Fiorenzola, having also foreseen that himself should end his dayes in a Church. And indeed it came to pass, as de Granger in his Commentary upon Dante affirmes, when being on a certain day adoring the body

Digitized by Google

glicis.

body and blood of Josus Christ, kneeling near the place, where a bell was then tolling, the rope drew down with it a stone, which falling on his barehead, killed him in the place, where afterwards he was buried.

This lay'd down, I leave men to judge whether they who calumniate him without any proof, and that rather out of custome then any knowledg they had of him, are to be credited rather then the Pereb. An- Authority of Pits, a divine and moderne Author, who speaking of him, saies expresly, that though he was look'd on as a Magician by the Vulgar, prudentium tamen et cordatorum hominum longe alind fuit judicium qui potius perspicax ejus in scrutandis rebus abditis admirabantur ingenium, laudabant industriam, quam reprehendendam judicabant curiositatem, inspiciebant g, hominu scientiam, non suspicabantur culpam. And for the formall authority of Dante and Coccains, it cannot conclude any thing to our prejudice, fince these two Poets might well derive such a narration from the vulgar, meerly to sweeren and embellish their Poems, and that Cicero justly laughs at those who take the Poets for good security for any thing they say, when there is so great a disserence between the conditions of a Poem and that of a History, quippe Lib.de Leg. cum in illa ad veritatem referantur omnia, in hoc ad delectationem plerag.

Since then it is easily discover'd by what we have already said, that the ordinary judgment salling on learned men is to be charg'd with Magick I conceive few will wonder, if he who was called by [a] Scaliger, Monstrum sine vitio and by [b] Politian (with the suffrages of the publick voice) the Phanix of all the great Witts, Picm of a In Centur. miscel. præmie. b Epift. Polit. 1.9.

ep. 4.

Mirandula

Mirandula, could not give Hermolaus Barbarus so flender an account of his expence of Six whole years in the reading of Scholasticals Authours, but that the lustre of his great learning must needs so dazzle those who measur'd a Lib. de it with the sewnesse of his years when he began anatom. to break forth, that some, as [2] Zara, look'dingenior. on it as a miracle, and others, in [b] Tarquin b Oratione Gallutius, are so injurious to him, as not to be-pad. vol. I. lieve he could arive to that wisdome and capacity but by the meanes of Magick. Upon which if I may give my opinion, I conceive I may truly fay, that those who are so much prejudic'd against the Learning of this great man, were persons certainly as ignorant as that Divine, who, as the same Picus assirmes in his Apologie, being ask'd what the word Cabala signify'd, answer'd, it was the name of a wicked man and an abominable Heretick, who had written divers things against Jesus Christ, and that all his followers were called Cabalists. For though it may be said, haply more truely of him than any other,

----Primordia tanta

Vix pauci meruere senes-

and that his Learning is to be admir'd as well in respect of his age as the time he liv'd in, wherein Letters did but as it were bud out of the thorns of Barbarism; yet is it too great a missrust and limitation of nature and her forces to think she could not raise this man to such a supreme degree of persection, as might be a marke for all those that would be like him. Mankind is a large field wherein Nature exercises her self severall wayes, sometimes sporting her self with an Amphistides, who could not tell as far as sour. a Thersites, a Meletides or a Cecilian; and sometimes priding it in an Alexander, a Casar, a St. Augustine, or a Picus of Mirandula; using, according to the opinion of Trismegistus, gold, silver, and lead in their Composition. It was a faying of Neucles in commendation of his Brother Epicurus, that Nature, in his generation, had assembled together all the Atomes of prudence into his Mother's Belly. And why may we not, with the same flourish, affirm that she may have united all the externall causes of Aire, climate, Stars, diet, towards the composition of a body, fo to produce a Mind that should be the paragor. of others, and as it were the mold by which others might be made. In this was cast that of Paulus de la Scale, who, in the year 155?. maintained, at Boulougne 1543 Conclusions upon severall subjects of all kinds, and that before he was 22. years of age. That of the young man mention'd by Cardinall Bembus, who propored Virg. Culice 4500, at Rome. That of Postellus who mode-

Digitized by Google

et Terentii fabulis

Lib. de

rated in the Schooles at 13. years of age. That of Gesner and Erasmu, who were more learned at twenty, then others ordinarily are at fifty. That of Agrippa, who at twenty two interpreted the Pymander of Trismegistus, and the Book De verbo mirifico. That of Maldonat, who was admir'd for his reading of Divinity at twenty seven. And lastly that of Edward du Monim, who may be said to have been made up all of fire and spirit, fince that, ere he was ariv'd to the twenty fixth year of his age, wherein he was kill'd, he was so great a Masser of the Italian, Spanish, Latine, Greek and Hebrew Tongues, as also of Philolophy, Philosophy, Physick, Mathematicks and Theology, and had withall so fluent a vein of poely in all those Languages, that he translated into Latine verse, and that in lesse then fifty dayes, Du Bartas's work of the Creation, and saw printed before his death, five or fix large Volumes of his Poetry highly celebrated by the greatest witts of the last age, Fumaus, du Perron, Goulu, Daurat, Morel, Baif, and du Bartas. Since therefore Pliny tells us, that Natura rerum vis at g, majestas in omnibus fide caret, si quis modo partes ejus ac non totum animo complectatur, and that we can exemplify in so many that came so near this Picus of Mirandula, were it not more rationall to admire the extraordinary effects of Nature by judging of the one by the other, then basely to subject it to Spirits and Damons, especially in things wherein there is not ought beyond the reach of her power and performance?

Lattly, for the Abbot Trithemius, who is call'd by Thevet in his life, a fubile Philosopher, an ingenious Mathematician, a famous Poet, an accomplish'd Historian, a very eloquent Orator, and eminent divine; I find that those who would make him a Magician, may in the first place, ground their so doing on a little Book of three or four sheets printed under his name in the year 1612. intituled, Veterum Sophorum Sigilla & imagines Magica, sive Sculptura Lapidum aut Gemmarum ex nomine Tetragrammaton cum signatura planetarum, Authoribus Zoroastre, Salomone, Raphaele, Chaele, Hermete, Thelete, ex Joan Trithemii mamsscripto eruta. Another ground may be his own speaking so pertinently of Magick, and his giving himself the title of Magician in some of his Epi-

The milion of M VOICY.

And a third and last, his writing the Book of Steganography, a treatife stuffed with the names of Devils, and full of invocations, and, as very pernicious, condemn'd chiefly by Charles Boville a learned and eminent Divine, who makes it worse then that of Agrippa or any other Authour, in Lib. de in the Epistle he sent to Germain Ganay Counsellor to the King, and fince Bishop of Orleans, four te Ne Etu sensu. &c. p. 73.

330

years after he had seen and read it in the very study and Abbey of the said Trithemius. This was Au-2 Lib. 2. de thority enough for [a] Wierus, [b] Thevet, [c] Delpreftig.c.6. rir, [d] Godelman and most of the Damonograb In the phers to be of the same opinion. lives of il-But for my part, I am of another, as concei-

Luftrious ving that those, who would judge with more truth men. c D'Squis. than passion as well of this last as the two former l. 2. q. 1. proofs, will beware how they black with eternall d Lib. de infamy the memory of any man especially an Ecclesiastick, upon such poor grounds as these light conjectures, which are absolutely vaine, Magis & venefic. false, and forg'd. For besides the reasons layd down in our 6. Chap. that Pamphlet of making images and Characters upon Stones under certain Confiellations is a pure imposture and cheat of Booksellers, who thought fit to print it as newly retriv'd out of Trithemins's study, whereas, above 120. years before Camillus Lienard made it the third Book of his Mirrour of precious Stones, be-corrupt,

De gener & of his Book De Unquento Armario; so true is that axiome of Aristotle, that, Ad pauca respicientes de facili enuntiant. But beit suppord that that little treatise had been transcrib'd out of Trithemins's fides that it was published by Ludovicus Dulcis in a treatise on the same subject, as also by Rodulphus Goclinus in above four or five severall impressions

minis, who would thence inferre that a Book of superstitious Astrologie were a sufficient resimony to condemne those of Magick who have it in their possession, especially since there cannot the least indicium be drawn from five or six Epistles printed at the end of Tritheminis's Polygraphy, to confirme that opinion to his prejudice, nay they ther justifie him, as may appear by the reading nereof and by [a] Gerard Dorne and [b] James Go-a In clavifory, who shew from their enigmaticals sense that philosoph. Chymica, aney cannot be interpreted of any thing but Chyfub finem. This is so that it may be truely said that all the blib. de suspicion there is of his being a Magician, as he mysteriis himself consessent, proceeds only from the publication of a Letter he sent to a Carmelite of Gaunt named Arnoldon Bostius, wherein he specified devita long many miraculous and extraordinary effects, gain Epishwhereof yet he discovered the wayes of performance in his treatise of Steganographie. For the judgment thereof of Charles Boville being published about the same time, people were presently perswaded that such things could not be taught in any but a Magick Book, and that Trithemins must needs be excellently well versed in Conjuary Presat. Comment.

Now the first that opposed this calumny, after in Paracel. he, who was most concern'd init, had clear'd de vita lonhimself, as well by the key to that book, and b Pag. 12. diverse passinges of his Works, was [a] James of bis cy-Gohory, who writt a short vindication of this Ste-phers. ganography, against the calumnies of Wierus Bovil- c De divile and Cardan. In which designe he was seconded History of ed by [b] Vigenere, [c] Boissardus and [d] Duretus, Tongues. who have shewn that Trithemius had no other de-c. 14. fol. signe in that book then to discover a new, and 152.159.

much

much furer way then that of his Polygraphie, to write and communicate freely one to another whatever were more secret, by the meanes of an invention which could never be suspected to have any other then the right lense, nor dis-cypher'd by any but him that had the key of it. This is further confirm'd by one Sigifmond an Abbot of the order of St. Benedict, who writt a Book, called, Trithemius sui ipsus vindex; and by the divine Adam Tamerus, in an Oration printed by him on that subject at Ingolstadt. But more remarkably then any, and so as to silence all difficulty, is it done by Gustavus Selenus who hath lately given us an explication of this Steganography in the third book of nine, that he hath publish'd concerning Cryptographie. For he first shews why Trithemius would make it so difficult: why he would make use of that maske of spirits and invocations; and then he explaines them and gives such overtures, as whence we may easily judge how far they disparage their own judgment, who with so little consideration blame things they understand not, and withall, that ordinary faying is true, that the most learned are not alwayes the most discreet.

Saram Kallison

CHAP.

The majory of Manage Ch.

24L

CHAP. XVIII.

Of Robert of Lincolne, and Albertus Magnus.

Fit be true that the Authority of a many makes errour the lesse censurable, and that the number of those that erre with us makes our faults seem the more excusable, gives our opinions some ground, and hides the desects of our perswasion; I doubt not but those may easily make such an excuse their sanctuary, who seem to write out of no other design than to revive, in their workes, all those calumnies which have been hitherto maintain'd by vulgar ignorance to the prejudice of the happy memory of Albertus Magnus, since that according to the Satyrist, ——Faciunt hi plura, sed illos Defendit numerus, juncta áz umbone phalanges.

But if the number of these Authors were not yet less considerable than the proofs they bring, I should ingenuously consess, that it were in me no lesse temerity to take a course contrary to them, than it was anciently in Travellers not to cast a stone at those Pillars and Mercuries in the highwaies, to give others notice of them. And since it is not always, according to the saying of Pythagoras, the surest way to follow the most beaten track, & that the most common opinions are ordinarily the most false, as being such as are rather applauded than examined; I shall stand upon the same liberty, which I have taken from the first Chapter of this Apology, to passe from the vindication of Religious

Religious men to that of Bishops, and shew, that it ever great Learning and the ignorance of a barbarous age prejudic'd any man, Robert Great-head, Bishop of Lincolne, or, as others, of Lancaster; and Albertus Magnus Bishop of Ratisbonne have just cause to complain.

As to the first, if we only except certain Demo-In tenfess. nographers, who, upon the account of a Brazen one Amas-Head that spoke, which John Gower an English tis apud Poet, said he had endeavoured to make, to serve Selden. him instead of an Oracle, rank him among the

Vol. 1. de veb Anglieis.

Magicians; all Authors agree with Pits, that he was one of the most learned men of his time, a subtile Philosopher, an excellent Divine, a man equally acquainted with the seven liberal Sciences, and the Latine, Greek, and Hebrew Tongues, one that writ a great number of Books, whereof there are some remaining in Philosophy. Besides all which, he was of to holy and exemplary a life, that (not to prove it by the Fable, so well a life, that (not to prove it by the Fable, so well refuted by Delrio, concerning his death, and that of Pope Innocent sourth) Matthew Paris writes in his Chronicles, that he was in so much reputation among the English, that they called him, the boly Prelate, the King's faithful Counsellant, the Reformer of the Monks, the Director of Priests, the Instructor of the Clergy, the Nursing-father of Schollars and Students, the Preacher of the People, and the Scourge of Vices.

Disquis.l. c.4 qu. 4. Seet. 1.

In clogius vivor dectotum.

Livredu gouvernement degat. And for Albertus, I am very much obliged to Panlus Jovius, that he had not honour'd him with his Elogy, but upon the Title of Great, which was given him even while he lived by the universal content of all Schools. For if we consider with Bouro, on what persons, and upon what occasions that that title hath been bestow'd, I believe there will be some miracle in it, to see a simple Fryar of the Order of St. Dominick have an Epithet given hims not to ordinary with Topes, Emperours, and Soveraign Princes, had not his works discover'd his defert to be so great, and his Learning so extraordinary, that such a recompence might seem inconsiderable, if Trismegistus had not so reser vd the title of thrice great to himself, that it hath not been fince communicated to any. Nor shall I need to say with Trithemius, that Non Surrexit post Script. Ec. eum vir similis ei qui in omnibus literis, scientiis et clesias. rebus tam doctus, eruditus, et expertus fuerit. Nor yet with Thever, that he was to curious in the dil-Vit. vir. quisition of the Secrets of Nature, that it might illustrabe said, one part of his soul was transported into the Heavens, another into the aire, the third under the earth, and a fourth upon the waters, and that he had by some extraordinary course, so united and contracted together his whole foul, that nothing that this world comprehends could elcape it. For all thole Elogies, added to what is commonly said of him,

Inclytus Albertus doctissimus at q, disertus, Quadrivium docuit, ac totum scibile scivit, cannot so well help us to judge of his Learning as the reading of his own works which would make almost as many volums as those of his Disciple Aquinas, if they were as well reprinted. It is not therefore to be admir'd, if so many things may be said of him upon the account of his knowledge, which being so great and extraordinary, some may very well be extreamly doubtful,

Digitized by Google

The History of MAGICK.

244

6, I 2.

others, absolutely sale and sicious. To confirm this we have John Matthew de Luna, who living L. de Rev. about 120 years since, held, though contrary to inventor. the opinion of Polydor Virgil, Magins, Mayerus.

the opinion of Polydor Virgil, Magins, Mayerus, Pancirollus, Florence, Rivault, Zezoldus, and all Authors that writ of the invention of Fire-workes, that Albertus Magnus first found out the use of Canon, Arquebuse and Pistol; For I could never find in these Authors any thing that came near this opinion save that such inventions were put in practite in his time, and that by a Germane Monk call'd Berthold Schwartz, or by a certain Chymist, who, as Cornazanus, an Author ancient enough, conceives, siv'd in the City of Cullen, where it is certain that Albertus Magnus liv'd, ever after he had taken the habit of a Dominican.

And this makes me not a litle wonder that the Alchymists should never bethink them of holding this opinion, fince they might have done it with much more reason, than attribute to him the knowledge of the Philosophers stone, as hath lately done their great favourer and abetter Majerus, who is not asham'd, in his Symbols upon the golden table of the 12 Nations, to affirm, that St. Dominick had it first, and that those to whom he had lest it, communicated it to Albertus Magnus, who by the advantages he made of it, discharg'd in lesse then three years, all the debts of his Bishoprick of Ratisbonne, and afterwards taught is St. Thomas Aquinas, while he was his disciple. To give this the greater Authority, he highly celebrates three Books of Chymistry, which he attributes to him, whereof since there is not any of them either among the collection of his works, or specified in the Catalogue made of them by Tri

Trithemins, we are only to take notice of that L. 3. de which Fran. Picus faics he writ, Of Quintessence, auro. to shew by the forgery of that, what account should be made of the others, it being certain that Albertus Magnus never contributed a thought a Tract. 1. towards it. This may be provide not only from 6. 9. his laughing at the Alchymids and their preten-phylic. c. ded Transmutations in his third Book of (a) Mi-13. nerals, as (b) Velcurion, and (c) Guybert endea- calchym. vour to shew, since he there maintains a quite impulsation. contrary opinion; but because the Author of that 4 2. 4.7. Book calls himself therein, a Friar of the Order . of St. Francis, and faies he writ it in prilon. These two circumstances, which must infallibly relate to John de Rupescissa, easily evince, that some impostor made it his businesse to play the Plagiary, and steal it out of a Book he had written on that subject, to divulge and gain it reputation under the name of Albertus Magnus, according to the ordinary cheat of all Alchymists, who make this their common sleight to inveigle people into a belief of their promises, and by that means,

Nottem peccatis, et fraudibus addere nubem.

To come then to what is most effential in this. Chapter, and to what lies in our power to deliver this eminent person out of the Quagmire of the Magicians, as we have already drawn him our of that of the Alchymists. This were soon done a In Catais we would but appeal to the judgement of Anology, Script, thony de Sienes, and Father Justinian, who writhis Ecclisist. Life, or to take witnesses disengaged from all in-ct Antipal. Life, or to take witnesses disengaged from all in-ct Antipal. terest or passion, (a) Trithemins, and (b)]. Picus b Applage of Mirandula, who absolutely clear him from art. 5.

R 2 this

this calumny. Adding withal, that when it is laid that Albertus Magnus was addicted to Magick, it must be understood of the Natural, for tear lest the false opinion of the contrary, might give many occasion to imagine that it were unlawful for us to do what he hath done.

But fince all these Authorities conclude nothing it some answer be not made to the proofs ordinarily produc'd to blass his innocence (not to mention that even from his youth, he had such a particular devotion to the B. Virgin, that she wrought such an alteration in his mind, that of an unreshn'd and unpolish'd one, she made it capable of comprehending all things) we are to Bzovins de consider, that these proofs have no other ground fign. Ecclef, than that of two Books fallly publish'd under tom. 1. 19. his name, and that Androides, which hath given c. x1. fig. occasion to thousands of Fables and impertinen—36. cies frequent in Authors.

a Depræ-

c. 7. b Disquis. l. 1. c. 3.

For the two Books Franciscus (a) Picus, and (b) Delrio agree in this, that it were an extraordinary injury to think this holy person Author of that de Mirabilibus, and in these words clear him ofit, Alberto Magno tributus Liber de Mirabilibus, vanitate et superstitione repertus est, sed magno Doctori partus supposititus. To which F. Picus addes, that it is falfly attributed to him, as many others were, as, among the reft, that de secretis Mulierum, fince Albertus is not fo much as nam'd at the beginning of it, as he who hath writa Comment upon it would perswade us; besides that it is easily perceav'd, that the Author of it, who ever he was, liv'd tome time after him, because he often cites his Authority. So that all the quariel now lies against that intituled, the Mirrour ! The Hillory of MIAGICA.

747

Mirrour of Astrology, where is treated of the approved and forbidden Authors that have written of that Art. This is condemn'd by Gerson and Agrippa as extreamly superistious, and by F. Picus and divers others, because the Author of it maintains a very erroneous opinion in savour of Magical Books, which, with submission to better advice, he holds, should be carefully preserved, because the time then drew near, that, for certain reasons, not specify'd, men would have occasion to read and make use of them.

To clear Albertus from all suspicion of Magick upon the account of this Book, I can produce no better tellimony than that of]. Piens, a person more fit to judge of this difficulty than any other, who in his first Book against Astrologers maintains that the Treatise De Libris licitis et illicitis, was infallibly writ by R. Bacon, whose custome it was to cite and produce such Authors in all his Books, which cannot be observ'd in Albertus. Magnus. Besides the said R. Bacon was so strangely addicted to judicial Astrology, that Henry d'Assia, William of Paris, and Nicholas Oresmus, all very eminent Doctors, thought themselves oblig'd to inveigh against his works, and all the vanicies of Astrologers. But be it imagin'd this Book was writ by Athereus, I see not why his affirming that Magical Books should be preserved by Inquifitors, and persons of like Authority should make so much noise, since that about 100 years since, it was the advice of Revelin not to a Antipal. burn those of the Jewes. [a] Trithemins 1s of the l. 1. c. 2. same opinion, & [b] Vasquez saies peremptorily, 2. art.3. that Magical Books are necessary, and Magicians disp. 20.6. permitted by God for the greater conviction of 4. Libertines R 4.

man. de

Moura,

Sett. 2. c.

17. art.6.

Percer.

qu. 3.

c De gestis

R'g. An-

glar. 1. 2. c. Id.

d Apud.

Dies Syris

Syntag. 1.

f Harmon.

g Disquis. 1. 1. c. 4:

Cant. 3.

tom. 4.

۽,

C. 2.

bertines and Athiefts, who bythis means mi effe be drawn to acknowledge there are other farestances than what we judge of by the finger and the eye: Quo admisso, taies he, facilius in eam sem tentiam adducantur ut numeu aliquod fateantur, magis ab Atheismo deterreantur, quo avidius Magicis artibus student, quad visi inter Hareticos De us permissset, pane omnes in Atheisma versarentu». To which concurs also Lattantins, when he saies that Democritus, Epicurus, & Dicaarchus would now have to confidently deny'd the immortality of the Soul, Mago aliquo praseme, qui sciret certis cara Apud E-minibus cieri ab inferis animas, et adesse, et prabere se humanis oculis videndas, et loqui et futura pradicere. If after all this Albertus be charg'd with any b 3. Decad. thing of Magick, it must be on some other pretence then that of these two books; since it is clear queft. c. 2 from what hath been faid, that he never had any hand in them, All therefore we have now to do is to refine their errour who are perswaded that brasen heads made under certain Constellations may give answers, and be as it were guides and Counfeliors, upon all occasions, to those that had them. Selden. de in their possession. Among these is one [2] Tepes, who affirms that Henry de Villeine made such a: one at Madrid, broken to pieces afterward by the order of John 2. King of Castile. The same thing c In Exod. is affirm'd by [b] Bartholomen Sibilius, and the Author of the Image of the world, of Virgil; by [c] William of Malmsbury, of Sylvester; by [d] John Gower, of Robert of Lincoln; by the common h Lib. 2. people of England of Roger Bacon; and by [e]

Epist. 1p. 6. Tostatus Bishop of Avilla [f] George of Venice, i De incon. Tostatus Bishop of Avilla [f] George of Venice, stant. 1.2.6. [g] Delrio, Sibillus, [h] Raguseus, [i] Pelancre

Digitized by Goog and,

and others, too many to mention, of Albertus Magnus; who, as the most expert, had made an entire man of the same metal, and had spent 30 years without any interruption in forming him under several Aspects and Constellations. For example; he made the oyes, according to the said Tostatus, in his Commentaries upon Exodus, when the Sun was in a Sign of the Zodiack correspondent to that part, catting them out of diverse Metals mixt together, and mark'd with the Characters of the same Signs and Planets, and their several and necessary Aspects. The same method be observed in the Head, Neck, Shoulders, Thighs and Leggs, all which were fashioned at several times, and being put and fastened together in the form of a Man, had the faculty to reveale to the said Albertus the solutions of all his principal difficulties. To which they add (that nothing be lost of the story of the Statue) that it was batter'd to pieces by Sr. Thomas, meerely because he could not endure its excesse of prating.

But to give a more rational account of this Androides of Albertus, as also of all these miraculous heads, I conceive the original of this Fable may well be deduc'd from the Teraph of the Hebrens, by which as Mr. [a] Solden affirms, many syris, syntate of opinion, that we must understand what is 1. c. 2. said in [b] Genesis concerning Laban's Gods, and b e. 31. in the first book of [c] Kings concerning the c. 19. Image which Michael put into the bed in David's place. For R. Eleazar holds that it was made of the head of a male child, the first born, and that dead-born, under whose tongue they applyed a Lamen of Gold, whereon were engrav'd the Characters and Inscriptions of certain Planets, which the Jews superstitiously wandred up and down with instead of the Arim and Thummin, or the Ephod of the high Priest. And that this Original is true and well deduc'd, there is a manifest Pergr. qu. indicium; in that Henry d' Assia and Bartholomaus decad 3.c. Sibilus affirm, that the Androides of Albertus, and the Head made by Virgil, were compos'd of 2. q. 3. flesh and bone, yet not by Nature but by Arr. But this being judged impossible by modern Authors, and the vertue of Images, Annulets, and Planetary Sigills being in great reputation, men have thought ever since (taking their opinion from Trismegistas affirming in his Afrlepion, that, of the Gods, some were made by the Soveraign God, and others by men, who, by some Arr, had the power to unite the invisible Spirits to things De civit. vilible and corporeal, as he is explain'd at large by dei. l. 8. by Sr. Angustine) that such Figures were made c. 23. of Copper or some other Mettal, whereon men had wrought under some savourable Aspects of Heaven and the Planets. Which opinion, fince it is the more common, it is fit we earnestly buckle with, and shew that it was not without fince it is the more common, it is fit we earnestly buckle with, and shew that it was not without reason resured by St. Thomas, William of Paris & Niphns; as false, absurd, and erronious. To prove this the more easily we are to presuppose; that speeth is the action of some thing that is tiving, and is not performed but by the voice which is defined by St. Thomas, after Aristotle, Sonus ab ore animalis prolatus. For it must need be granted, that, if these Heads spoke, it was either because they were living and animate, or that the Dæmons spake in them. If the former, the Soul whereby they did it, must be vegetative, sensitive, or rational. It could not be vegetasive, because, according to the faculties of the faid Soul; such bodies should be ranked among Plants, be nourish'd, increase and produce their like. It could not be fensitive, for that, besides the faculties of the vegetative Soul, it presupposes two mose, which are particular to it, and never granted to those Statues. Much lesse then can it be rational, unlesse we grant withal, that they could apprehend the Species of things, diccourse, remember them, and, in a word, be like us.

Digitized by Google

Moreover, if these Heads and Statues were really such, that is, living and animate, it was either by an accidental form or a fabstramiall; not the first, at least according to the opinion of all Philosophers, who will never grant, that to discourie, ro speak, to teach, to totelee what is to come; and such effects can depend on an accident, and not on a Sublance. The latter is desse possible, because such Scatues could not receive that substantial form till they had been devested of what they had before; which there is no colour to imagine they should have done by a simple granimutation of figure, since the form of the copper and of their matter was fill fuch as it was wont to be. Further, I would gladly know, where was their morion, the first indicium of life; where their senses, the fluces of all knowledge; and, in a word, (nor to ravel our felves into thoulands of difficulties, aniling from the original and operation of that Soul) where were the Parts and Organs necessary for their discourse and ratiocination.

i 252

Nor does it availe any thing, to grant that the Damons have spoken in them; for it must be done either as the Soul does in our Body, by the assistance of its Organs, or as one should do that aniwers in a Cheft, or some broken por. The former way is impossible such Scattles being noc furnished with Muscles, Lungs, an Epiglottie, and what is requisite to a perfect articulation of the Voice. The latter is at ridiculous, for, if it be true, why should those men take such pains to make a Man rather than a Trumpet, or a Head rather than a Bottle, fince the Devil might as well answer by the one as the other, and that if he hath heretofore uttered his Oracles in Statues, in was to engage men to adore them, to the contempt of their Creator, whereas there is not the least mention of any Idolatry, in the Stories of this Androides, and these fine Heads. So that we may well conclude with the Royal Prophet, The Idels of the Gemiles are Silver and Gold, they have mouths and speak not, nor is there any breath in their nostrils; all we have to do (the reasons of

L. 2. de Trismegistus being fully refuted by Niphus) beDamonibus ing to satisfy the Authority of Tostass, one of the

Galland most authentick Patrons of Albortus's Androides, that so we may at length give a final sentence against the vanity of all these Fables and pernicious falsities.

I must indeed consesse, that Tostatus was the most learned, nay the miracle, if I may so expresse my self, of the learned men of his age; since that, being Counsellour to the King, great Referendary of Spain, and Prosessor, in Salamanca, of Philosophy, Divinity, Civil and Canon Law, and all at the same time, he hath neverthelesse written such fuch large and laborious Commentaries, that were we not certain he dy'd at forty, they were enough to perswade us he had liv'd an entire age. But when I find him affirming therein many, things jultly accounted fabulous by the World, as for instance, what is said concerning the birth of the Prophet Merlin, the Magick of Virgil, a brafen head that discover d the Jewes in Spain, a cerrain earth in Hebron that was good to eat, the Androides of Albertus Magnus, and abundance of the like, I cannot but look on them as so many black patches of his humanity; nay, if we appeal to Scaliger, we must ingenuously acknow-L. 1: de ledge, that hoc oftentationis vitium fuit magnis Plantis on viru sut globatim congererent omnia non ut nihil reli. Theoph. quisse. sed ut nibil nescivisse viderentur: To re-inforce. which Argument, if any shall with Aristotle infilt, Ethic: 1.71 that common report cannot be absolutely false, and confequently, that so many Authors would not have spoken of the Androides of Albertus, if for ething had not been in the wind, I shall finally aniwer, That my design is only to shew that he could not by the help of superstitious Magick, make a Statue that should give him answers in an intelligible and articulate voice, upon all the doubts and difficulties he propos'd thereto, as well of things present as to come; and not absolutely so deny that he might compose some Head or Statue of man, like that of Memnon, from which proceeded a small found, and pleasant noise, when the rising Sun came, by his heat, to rarify and force out, by certain small Conduits, the aire which in the cold of the night was condens'd within it. Or haply they might be like those Statues of Bostins, whereof Cassiodorus speaking.

Digitized by Google

254 The History of MAGICK.

2. I. Vari- speaking said, Metalla mugiunt, Diomedis in are are epist. 45. grues buccinant, aneus anguis insibilat, aves simulata fritinniunt, et qua propriam vocem nesciunt, ab are duscedinem probantur emittere cantilena; for such I doubt not but may be made by the help of that part of Natural Magick which depends on the Mathematicks. It were therefore much more rational thus to interpret whatever hath been said of this Androides, than to prostitute the reputation of Albertus Magnus, Robert of Lincoln, and so many other persons of considerable quality to the judgment of certain Authors, who are so easily carryed away with the slender assurance of a common opinion,

Dvid. Met.	——— Qua veris addere falsa
5. .	Gaudet, et è minimo sua per mendacia crescit.
•	• • • • • •

CHAP.

CHAP. XIX.

Of the Popes, Sylvester II. and Gregory VII.

S it was not lawful for every one in the old A Testament to lend a shoulder to uphold the Ark of the Covenant, even though it were ready to fall, so these are a many that think it were not convenient, that all kinds of Writers undertook the defence of him whom Christ Jesus hath lest as Head and Viceperent of his militant Church. The reason is, that being persecuted by the enemy of mankind, who hath taken into his service all the modern Hereticks, the better to oppose him, and to to Arike at the foundation of spiritual Monarchy, He should employ no other than fuch Christian and Catholick Hercules's, as were Bellarmine, Baronius, and the ornament of Gascony Florimundus Remundus, to whom it properly belongs to vindicate the injuries done to the Successors of St. Peter, to purge their Annals of errours, and to heal their blindnesse who are imprudently carryed away with the forgeries & calumnies of Hereticks. And yet fince, as Tertulian laies, every one may be a Soldier in what concerns the defence of Religion; and that God was pleas'd to make use of the sling of a poor Shepherd to abate the pride of the Philistins, we may prefume (yet without fearthing into the fecrets of his will to find out the cause of #zzab's death, for endeavouring to uphold the Arke) that, as he permits the Devil to set upon the Church by the means of the most inconsiderable Heretick, so is he not displeas'd that any one should should defend her. And this I think it my due to do, as to what concerns the crime of Magick wherewith the simplicity of some ancient At thors and the malice of modern Hereticks, would blast the reputation of those who have sat at the helm thereof in the quality of Popes. Not that I am so unadvised as to think their innocence stands in any need of my pen, since it is strong enough to rescue it self, with the assistance of the holy Spirit who never sorsakes it, from such an accusation, and to overcome all the tempestuous hurricans of such calumnies.

Illisos fluctus rupes ne vasta retundit, Et varias secum latrames dissipat undas Mole suâ.——

But being both by the relation of a Catholick, & the title of this Apology oblig'd to this duty, I might well be laugh'd at, if presuming to vindicate all the eminent persons, I should forget my felf so far, as not to say some thing of those, who, by reason of their dignity, are the most highly considerable. And this the rather, since I withal pretend to draw from this Chapter the strongest Argument that may be, to justifie all the others mentioned in this Book, whom no man will hereafter wonder to find charg'd with Magick, when even those who command us as Liverenants of God, and whom we respect as the high Priests & Prelates of our Religion could not avoid that reproach. Yet as God never permits errour to to infinuate into any thing of importance, but there is light enough to discover it, if a man will look but narrowly thereto; so in this case, so many justitying circumstances offer themselves, and there are so many proofs to undermine the VEFY

The Hippory of MAGICA.

very ground-work of these acculations that men must needs be either strangely passionate or ignorant, it, having ever so little reason or judgment they do not perceive, that all those things which concern the Migick of the Popes, are nothing but. Dreames, Castles in the Aire, Chimara's & Fables.

For to begin with those that are lesse suspected, and by consequence may the most easily be vindicated, I conceive the first charged though but flightly, with this crime, was Lee the III. to whom is attributed a little Book called, Enchiridion Leonis Papa, comra omnia mundi pericula, containing abundance of Croffes, a many names of God, and the Cabala, abundance of mysicall and unintelligible words. Whence it haply comes, that [a] Le Loyer and [b] Delrio do, with rea- a De spectro fon, laugh at those who think that Book was 1. 4. c. 4. b. Disquis. sent by this Pope to the Emperour Charlemagne, 1. 2. qual. fince it containes only a certaine Theurgy very flat 21. and ill manag'd which yet some have since endeavour'd to disguise in Italy under the name of St. Ubald Bishop and Contessour. But as for that fending, theres no more likelihood in it then in what is related by Emanuel De Moura, who layes lib, de Enthat there being a certain Scholler in the Citty of falfett. I. Conimbra, who heal'd wounds by vertue of cer- c. 3. apt. 1. taine words and prayers, the common report was, that they had been first sent by Pope Sixtus V. to John of Austria, then in war against the Turk, to be used in order to the curing of his wounded men. For as the said de Monra affirms. the Scholler gave him another reason of the vertue of those prayers, such as had no coherence with that of the Common opinion.

Next to Lee III. may be put that Monster,

Inclinition of MINGICIA. or rather Chimera, John the eighth, otherwise called Pope Joan, a very knowing person and one that had writt a Book in Magick, as Balane and the Centuriators affirme, if that Achilles of the holy see, and the Patrone of Papall honour, Florimundus Remnndus, had not undeceived us as to that fable, discovering the popular Errour which had kept it in vogue, and inarching it out of the Trophey which Hereticks had railed thereby against the Popes, so to turn it to their own shame and confusion, there being not now any among them to unadvised as to presume to revive it in his books, unlesse he expects to be immediately declar'd a malicious person in the superlative degree, or one very eminent for his ignorance and want of Judgment. Having not therefore any thing to adde to what that learned Counsellous of the City of Bourdeaux hath laid of him, I shall passe to Martin II. whom I shall not acknowledg justly charg'd with magick though Platinus said of him, that malis artibus Pontificatum adeptus eft. For we are to consider it meerly as a reproach of his enemies, and that that manner of expression, frequent in Platinus, even in the lives of divers other Popes who were not Magicians, must be understood of the favour, violence, corruption, Simony, and a many other unjustifiable wayes, whereby such as endeavour the satisfaction of their ambition more than the tranquillity of their Conscience and the well fare of the universal Church, may happly attain, though not without abundance of trouble, that supreme dignitye Ecclefiasticall Monarchy.

250

De praflig. To that Catalogue, if we credit Wierus, we must must adde all those inclusively who had the Chaire from Sylvester II. to Gregory VII. that is about fifteene or lixteene. But since Benno, a schismaticall Cardinall, who made a Catalogue of the Popes that we e Magicians, reckons but four or five, that really were juch, viz. Sylvefter I I. Benedict IX. John XX. and XXII. and Gregory VII. three whereof had never been fulpected but by occasion of the other two, I think I need do no more then shew what this Benno was, and endeavour the particular vindication of Sylvester and Gregory to to clear them all together of that calumny, and discover how little reason men have had to be corrupted to long by the Leaven of this erroneous opinion. For when I reflect on the first and most ancient Authors from whom rhis, kind of injurie hath been deriv'd against the successors of St. Peter, I cannot but say with Apuleius, perinjurium est ei sidem in pejoribus habere, the in melioribus non haberes, and consequently, fall into a double admiration; First, at the simp icity of a many of our Demonographers and moderne Historians, who fill their Books with such triviall stories and fables taken out of those Authours without any discretion. Secondly, at the invecerate malice of Hereticks who, to fatisfie the envy and hatted they bare the holy See, (whose ruine they have as much conspir'd as ever Hannibal did that of Rome) make it still their businesse to seek out those calumnies and reproaches which good Authours cannot furnish them with, in the sepulchers and common shores of Schismaricks, and, as the Civilian Michael Riccius hath Apolog 2. well oblerv'd, Antiques & manuscriptos libros in Lib. de fide Lasprosis lucis Laborios eevolvunt et ex fætido pulvere Gallica. autores

The Hijiory of MAGICA.

200

autores quosvis excitant, quos licentiosé in ipsos Pontifices scripsisse deprehendunt. Whether this be to I appeal to that Collection which Matthias Flaccius Illyricus hath made in that great Volume entituled, Catalogus testium veritatis, which I cannot more fitly compare to anything then to that Poneropolis of Philip of Macedon. that City was inhabited only by Exiles, Rogues, Cutpuries, pillory'd persons, and all the dregges and offalls of the Country; So may it be 'truely faid, that (the depraved passages out of the Fathers and Councels only excepted) all that so vast Catalogue is only a heap of their shreds and fragments who had before either kick'd against the Church: or been cutt off from it as rotten and gangren'd Members, such as, among a million of others, was the pretended Cardinall Benno, who made it his busines to give us the representation of a bad Pope in Gregory VII. as Xenophon did that or a Vertuous and accomplish'd Prince under the person of Cyrus. For I can hardly believe that a man could fay fuch strange things of the wickedest perion in the world, as what this Anthor faies of such a Pope, and upon his account of Sylvester II. John XX. XXI. and Benedict IX. who, if we may believe him, did by his Magick, force women to run after him through Woods and over Mounraines, and gave infallible predictions of things to come. And yet these sables are nothing in comparison of what he addes concerning the Archbish Laurence, who perfestly understood the singing of Birds, and Gregory VII. who cast the holy Host into the fire, conspir'd the Emperours death, poilon'd Ex Popes, by the help of his friend

The History of MAGICK.

friend and Confident Gerard Brazutus, and had fo well Learn'd Magick of Theophylast and Laurence Sylvester's disciples, that he icatter'd fire when he shook his armes, and sent out thunder-cracks out of his sleeve. But this Authour speakes too liberally to be believ'd, and fince it was his defigne to traduce the Popes, he should have done it with more modesty and judgment, and so not have given [a] Delrio and [b] Florimundus Romun-a Disquis, dus occasion to Imagine his Book suppositions to and forg'd, at the eruption of Lutheranisme, christ cap. or rather that he might have avoided the distante 17. of the more rejerved and conscientious among those of the Reformation, and particularly [c] c Biblioth. Vigner, who hath these words of him, Cardinall 2. p. 650. Benno Speakes after a strange manner of the Popes of where he these times, as also of the meanes whereby they ar-speakes of riv'd to that height, I know not whether he be an the death of, Authour that may be credited, or no. Adde to that the end of the Centure siven of him by * Papyrius Massan, in the year the Hittory he hathwritten with too much liberty 1003. of Conscience of the Bishops that have govern'd * Lib. 4. the Church of Rome; for speaking of Sylvester and the injury done him by accounting him a Magician, he layes, Atque hujus fabula inventorem sufpicor Bennonem presbyterum Cardinalem: is enim odio Hildebrandi multa quoque de pradecessoribus ejus fingit, quos ob mathematicas disciplinas velut Maleficos damnat, et hanc de Sylvestro narrat fabulam. Whence may easily be interr'd that Bibliander Tabula 13. hath a mind maliciously to deceive us, when he affirmes, in his Chronicle, that this Benno was created Cardinall by Hildebrand, with whom he was in great friendship, whereas it is evident that that dignity was conferr'd on him by the Anti-Pope

Digitized by Google

Pope Clement III. and that he ever followed the party of the Emperour Henry IV. a Schismatick and excommunicated person. To which may be added, for confirmation, his Letter sound at the Councell convened by the Cardinalls who sided with Henry and his Antipope, against Urban II. and those whom they called sivourers and followers of the Hereses invented by Pope Hildebrand; to disgrace whom, Ultramus Bishop of Noremberg and all the Partisans of the Emperour scattered abroad abundance of Challenges and Libells, as it is ordinary with Princes to be ever well surnished with such Advocates and defenders of their Causes, be they good or bad.

But as this pretended Cardinall Benno, a person equally discarded both by Protestants and Catholicks, feems to have done all he did ont of a fer designe and purpole, to calumniate Gregory VII. so must it be acknowledg'd, that Platinus, an eminent writer of the lives of Popes, hath too credulously embraced what was said before him by Martin de Citeaux and Godefrey of Monmouth, in his Additions upon Sigebert, concerning Pope Sylvester, to represent him to us 25 2 famous Conjuier and Magician. It were much better to fearch the truth of this story to the bottome, and not to trust either this Martin, who had been already deceived in the life of Pope Joan, or Godefrey, who entertaines us with the fine Romance of Arthur and his Prophet Merlin. For had he pursual his designe, with as much integrity as he was oblig'd to have done, those riciculous fables, so frequent in his Writings, would not give us at this day occasion to think him not well affected towards the Popes, because of Paul II.

who devested him of all honours and dignities af-paul. for, ter he had put him to the Torture. Or haply he in Elegin. made his advantage of whatever came to his hands taking all for current mony, fo by those fegaries, to humour the Readers, and shew he was not ignorant of what others had said before him, than not that he gave them any credit himself.

The same judgment may we passe upon Martinus Polonus who publish'd such another story of Sylvester in the year 1320. for it is clear that he hath translated all he sayes of him, in his Chronologicall Supputations, out of this Godefrey who liv'd about the year $150. and one Gervase an Orator of the City of Arles and Chancellour to the Emperour Ottho III. but withall the most consident forger of Fables and the most egregious Lyer that ever took pen in hand. To prove which, there needs no more than the reading of his own Book, De ociis Imperatoris, where all he sayes is so extravagant, and at such a distance with reason and both ordinary and extraordinary possibility, that the Fables of Esop; and the stories of Amadis are a hundred times more credible. Besides, not to make any dissiculty about the diversity of Coppies, and the Additions made to this Martinus Polonus, it were more prudence to conclude, that this authority cannot any way prejudice Sylvester, not only for the foregoing reason, but also because he tires us with such abundance of fabulous things in his Supputations, that it were no lesse lightnesse of perlwasion than want of judgement to credit any thing he sayes of Sylvester. I produce for testimony the tales he hath stollen our of the Book S 4 de de Infantia Salvatoris, and those he makes upon the history of Pilate, of the Greeks, who would theal the bodies of St. Peter and St. Paul; of Sylvester's Dragon, which destroy'd every day six thousand persons, and that of another that was of such vast bulk that eight yoke of Oxen were not ab'e to draw him to the place where he was to be burnt. To which may be added those of Arthur of Britain, of the Prophet Merlin, of Pope Joan, of the Golden Letters of a hundred pound weight a peice, which Charlemaigne bestow'd on twenty three Monasteries he had sounded, & abundance of the same stusse good fornothing but, with the help of a cradle, to rock little Children asseep.

And lastly, for Vincent d'Beauvais, and Antonine de Florence who may have let fall somewhat of the Magick of these Popes, I shall, with MelChap. 22. of chior Canus, and Florimundus Remundus, consining Popular dentity affirme, that though they were creditable persons, yet in regard they have not been at the persons, yet in regard they have not been at the paines to consider well the places whence they have taken their Stories, nor weigh'd the things they have lest behind them, they are of little or no Autho ity among such as cannot brook it, to see the Nob'e name of History upon the Portalls of these monstrous Edifices built of Materialls so consus'd and different, so far from being solid and well cemented. I have been the more large in answering these ancient Authors, because, these soundations once undermired, there's nothing so easy as to pull down the superstructure; such as are, the Authorities of Nauclerus, Funccius, Goldast, Gualterus, du Plessis, Balaus, the Centuriators, and a whole Ant-hill of Lutherans and Calvinists who have with much curiosity, not only transcrib'd out of those Ancients, but made on small aditions so these plausible relations. Nor that they were so simple & stupid as to take them for true, but because they imagin'd all makes for them that hurts their adversaries, and thought this kind of battery would prove very effectual, by the delinquency of 2. or 3. Popes, to make a Breach in the veneration due to all the rest, and to reproach thewhole body with the impersection of some one of its members; Est enim, as Sidonius saith, bac quadam vis malis moribus, ut innocentiam multitu-Lib 9. Epist. dinis devenustent scelera paucorum.

Digitized by Googleonly

To levell, therefore, this Tower of confusion, which, in some of our Historians & Demonographers, want of judgment; in Hereticks, envy hatred and malice, have engag'd them to build up to the dishonour of the Monarch of the Church, upon the too simple and easy credulity of those ancient Authors, we must begin with this Gerbert, or Sylvester I I. He, they say, was Master in Magick to four or five of his successors, whereas there is more ground to acknowledge that he was the most vertuous person, and greatest Light as to all manner of Sciences, of the age he liv'd in, it being much more easy for us to give an account of his learning then the place of his extraction and manner of life, till he arriv'd to the Archbishoprick of Rheims. For some, according to the common opinion, affirme, that he was first a Religious man at Fleury, or Sr. Bennet's upon the Loire. Others there are that hold the contrary, grounding their opinion upon what he saith himself in one of his Epistles to the Emperour Otho III. wherein he openly tells him, that he had, from his Childhood, serv'd his his Father and Grandfather Otho the Great, before he was entertain'd into the service of Adalbero Archbishop of Rheims. But the true story is, that being chosen by Hugh Capet, to be Turor to his Son Robert; he conferr'd on him that Archbishoprick, whereof being devested by John XVII. he retir'd into Germany, to Otho II. who committed to this charge Otho II Land gave him, by way of recompence the Archbishoprick of Ravenna, which he peaceably enjoy'd, till that, his Disciple coming to the Empire, he was by him ordained Popo and maintained against the Romans in the dignity of supreame Bishop.

These things well considered, I see not upon what ground Martinus Polonus and Platinus mistepresent him as a Magician. For I pray, what likelihood is there he should quit his Frier's frock to go and learne Magick at Toledo, Salamanca, or Sevill, the Metropolis of Andaluzia in Spain, when he never stirr'd out of the Abbey of Fleury, till he was taken thence by Hugh Capet, or as he faith himself, spent his youth in the service of Otho I. and II; And is it not more probable he should arrive to all these Ecclesiasticall Dignities by the savour of two Kings of France and three Emperours, to whom he had done great and considerable services, rather then by any assistance or industry of the Devill, who never yet was so good a Master as to bestow a half-peny on all the good a Maîter as to bestow a half-peny on all the Magicians, norwithstanding their most remark1. 2.qu. 12.

2.qu. 12.
3. Detrio, [b] Bodin, [c] Majole, nom. 1 3.c. 3. Remy, and all Authours knowledge? And this c Lib. 1. de-they say proceeds from the special providence of monolat.

God, who hath reserved in his own hands the power to enrich men and to distribute his favours

and

and rewards according to the Plalmith, The earth is the Lords and the fulnesse thereof; he openeth his hand, and filleth every living thing with blessing, he giveth unto every one; and appraideth not; in his left hand are riches and glory.

Nor is there any more marrow in what is added. that, having been answer'd by the Devil, that he should not dy till such time as he had said Mais in Hierusalem, he was extreamly surprized upon warning given him that he was near his death, when, not minding any thing he fald it in the Church of the Holy Croffe in Hierusalem, which is in Rome. As if he should be ignorant there was a Temple in the place of his constant residence called by that name, or should not have reflected on the ambiguity of Oracles, and would have celebrated Masse in a place unknown to him. But what is faid of his end is much more flat and ridiculous. at least, if we could but be perswaded, that, as Martinus Polonus and Platinus affirm, he made a publick acknowledgment of his fault, and that after he had given allured expressions of a sincere and persest repentance, he committed a thing extreamly superstitions, ordering that his body should, after his death, be put in a Chariot to be drawn by Oxen, without any body to guide them, that it might be buried in the place where they should stop. That happened before the Church of St. John Lateran, where the forelaid Authors with divers others, affirm that his Sepulchre gives a certain presage of the death of Popes both by a shock and crashing of the bones that are within, and by a great sweat and moissnesse of the stone without, as is observable, according to Platimes in the Epitaph fet upon it.

But this is all pure cheat and impossure, not only as to experience, never any such thing having been observ'd by any one to this day; but also as to the Inscription of this Sepulchre com-pos'd by Sergius IV. which is so far from making any mention of all thele fables and extravagances, that, on the contrary, it is one of the most considerable testimonies we can have of the good life and integrity of this Sylvester. And indeed it is no small shame, that many Catholicks should so much countenance this calumny, when Marianus Scotus, Glaber, Ditmare, Hilgandus, Lambert, and Herman Contract, who were his Contemporaries, make not the least mention of it. Not to urge, that it is refuted even by some dis-passionate Hereticks, as Vigner in his Bibliotheca, and Papyrius Masson in his History of the Bishops of Rome, where speaking of Sylvester, he saies, Plurimum miramur confictam de eo fabulam mortalium aures ita penetrâsse, ut nunc quog, evelli ex plurimorum mentibus non possit; and so concludes that all this Tragedy came from Cardinal Benno's invention. Of which opinion is also Baronius, who speaking of him, saies, Is fuit primus singende fabule architectus, cujus authorem nominasse solum, sit refutâsse. But it is withal Vigner's judgment, that it may be very likely the Romans, haply not fatisfy'd with Sylvester, as well for that he was a stranger, as because the Emperour had made him Pope without their Election, and that he expres'd more earnestness and affection for his service than their inconstancy would permit, added somewhat to the suspicion, in that, he being well vers'd and excellent in the Mathematicks, they out of their ignorance therein, look'd on them

The Biling of MITGICE. as disallow'd and damnable Sciences. And this indeed I am the more enclined with [a] Ciaconus, a In vitis [b] Genebrard, [c] Florimundus Remundus, and b Lib. Chrod Delrio, to assign for the true cause of this suspi-log.ad ann. cion, in that we are certain of two things which 1002. may confirm us very much. One is, that he flou- e In bis rish'd in the 9th age after Christ, which was book of An-incredibly rude, barbarous, and ignorant. The d Disquis. other, that he was certainly the most eminent, 1. 2. quest, or one of the most eminent persons of his time, as 19. well for matters of State, as for Learning and the knowledge of things divine, humane, and liberal. Of this we have pregnant proofs in his own Epifles, and the Decads of Blondus; besides his in- Decad. 2. timate acquaintance with the Mathematicks, 1.3. which was such that he could discover and discern better than any other as Apuleius sayes, tempo- Lib.4. Florum ambitus, ventorum flatus, et Stellarum meatus, ridorum. tonitruum sonora miracula, syderum obliqua curricula, Solis annua reverticula, and with the help of the Mechanicks, make many rare and subtil in-Of that kind were those Hydraulick Machines which William of Malmsbury sayes, he L. 2, de made with such industry at Rheims, that by force gestis Reg. of the water they made a liweet harmony; or that Ang. c. To. Clock, which as Ditmare relates, he made in such manner, that it discover'd the Pole-Star; and that Brasen head, which was done with such ingenious artifice, that the said William of Malmesbury was In bis adhimself deceived in it, when he attributed it to ditions up-Magick. Adde to this what Onuphrius faies, viz. on Platithat he had seen in the Library of the Farneses, a learned Book of Geometry written by this Gerbert. And for my part (not to meddle with the opinion of Erfordiensis, and some others who make him Author of Clocks and the Arithmetick now among us) I think these proofs sufficient to evince, that those, who never had heard of Cubes, Parallelograms, Dodecaedra's, Almicanthera's, Valfagora's, Almagripa's, Cathalfem's, and other terms, frequent among Mathematicians, might well imagine they were certain spirits that he invocated, and that so many extraordinary things could not proceed but from a man that had something in him extraordinary, and consequently, that he was a Magician. Having been to large in the vindication of this Gerhant, or Sylvester II. 'tis fit something be said for his Scholiers and particularly the Archbishop Laurence, who is traduc'd by the said Benno, as having learnt Magick of Sylvaster, and taught it Hildebrand or Gregory VII. This he does without alledging any other proof than that he was very intimately acquainted with both, and underitood very well, and could interpret the finging of Birds, as, for experience fake, he one day did at Rome, before certain Prelates upon an accidental meeting with a Sparrow, that by his chirping acquainted his companions of a Cart full of Wheat overturn'd at the Gate called Major, and that it was much for their advantage. But the question is whether be the more centurable, Benno, who forg'd the flory upon such another done by Apallonius in Philostratus, or du Plassy Monnay, who was so blinded by passion as to quote it as true and Authentick with all the forementioned of Gregory VII. lest he should leave out any thing that might swell up his Mystery of Iniquity. And yet this pretended Cardinal is fore'd to acknowledge in the lame place, that Pope, de vita Apollonii The unglory of Will CI C.

The Highwy of MAGICA.

Pope Benedict IV. (whom he hath as little favour for, as any of the rest) and this Archbishop Laurence were very well skill'd in the Mathematicks. And Baronius shews, by the relation of Petrus Damianus, that this Archbishop was so far from having any hand in Magick, that, on the contrary, he was a man of a very holy life, and, upon the account of his good works, after his death, put into the number of the Bleffed Saints. Which thing, were there nought elfe, were enough to answer that scandalous Libel, divulg'd by Benno or the Lutherans to blast the memory and reputation of Pope Hildebrand, who could expect no lesse then to be bespattered with the decractions of that mercenary Author, when he had before felt the indignation of his Persecutor the Emperour Henry IV. Forthis implacable enemy of his in two leveral Assemblies of Bishops in Germany held at Majance and Brexina, because Hildebrand had twice excommunicated him as a Schifmatick, and devested him of all his Lands and Dignities, caus'd him to be declar'd a perjur'd man, a Murtherer, a Necromancer and,2 Heretick, setting up against him, as Anti-Pope, Clement III. sometime Bishop of Ravenna, not omitting any thing he imagined would be prejudicial to him. This proceeding of the Emperour was that encouraged the modern: Hereticks to be so outragious against this Pope, as may appear by the writings and bitter Satyres of Goldast, Gaultier, Balaus, du Plessis, and the Centuriators, who call him Sorcerer, Adulterer, Sodomite, and by a simple clinch, Brand-of-Hell, and all, because he was one of the greatest pillars that ever were of the Church, and, to speak of him sincerely and without without passion, he it was that first put her into possession of her priviledges, and rescu'd the Papacy from the flavery it was in to the Emperois. Not to note that he is so highly celebrated in * Genebrard, by a great number of Authors, that, fince Marianus Scotus and Sr. Anselme, who were his contemporaries, say nothing of his Magick, no

Innal. To.

nol. ad an Christi 1075.

more than Martinus Polonus, Otho Frisingensis, Hugh of Cluny, Lanfranc, Bernard of Marseille, Platinus, Nanclerus, Masson, and many more, who would not have been filent had they discover'd any such thing, it were absolute barbarisme, in us to credit what this Benno faies of him in particular. Upon his text have the Lutherans and Calvinifts written their Comments never speaking of this man, but in the burning feaver of indignation, and ever dipping the pen wherewith they draw him, in the gall of their own passions, purposely to make him, the most filthy and hor. rid monster that ever was clad with humane nature, never considering that their attempts are dash'd to pieces against that Corner-stone which J. Christ is pleas'd to build his Church, and that they gain nothing by all these calumnies, but shame and confusion to themselves, since that, as Tertullian saith. Telum aliquod in Petram constantissima duritiei libratum, repercusso in cum qui emist reciproco impetu savit.

CHAP. XX.

Of Joseph, Salomon, and the Wise men.

TEre we to judg of a many Authors with a rigour sucable to the liberty they take to condemn even the most eminent men; or be so severe as to accuse & convict them of their impudence by the testimonies of their own forg'd calumnies: I conceive we might well rely on what Plato sayes in his Lawes, that it is a temerarious liberty to pronounce of what is known and unknown with a like confidence, whereaf he who hath once exceeded the limits, will never afterwards be confined thereby. For if we reflect on the precedent chapters of this Apology, it is easily objervable, how that divers Historians and Demonographers have taken such a strange freedom to charge all forts of men with Magick, that, not content to have impeach'd Philosophers, Phyficians, Astrologers and others, they have pais'd to Monkes, Bishops, and Popes, nay spare not those for whole good life and integrity we have the security of the Scripture, never confidering the dangerous consequences of such an impeachment, as well in regard of the disorder and scandal it would occasion to such as are devout and truly Christian, as of the ill example which persons of loose lives might thence take, according to the saying of Sarisberiensis, Fortius et citius nos corrumpunt exempla magnis cum subennt animes Anthoribus. But L.I. de mu-since I have not hitherto charg'd them with im-c.5. pudence, I shall forbear also in this Chapter,

where Digitized by Google

The History of MAGICK.

where they are the more excusable, for that what they say of the Magick of Joseph, Salomon, and the Wife men, cems to be deriv'd from the authority of certain Catholick Authors and Doctors, whom yet we should not too rigorously tax with the little reason they had to teach any such thing, by reason of their candor, and the sincerity or their do Strine otherwise.

Not to determine therefore these three Questi. ons but with a modesty suitable thereto, I think, that if the collection I have been forc'd to make of to many fooleries and evident extravagancies, , hath bredsome little choller in me, the best way were to discharge it on the ordinary madness and impiety of our Alembick-Idolaters and Alchymilts. These are a fort of people to strangely beforted with the Philosopher's stone, that, having found out the secret Mysseries thereof under the Metamorphoses, the Eneid, the Odissey, the love of Theagenes & Chariclea, Epitaphs, Pictures, Sculpture, Antick, and Fantastick representations, and there being nothing but the Scriptures to make any further tearch in, they have been to prophane as to take the sacrifice of the Masse, and the miracle of the Incarnation for Emblems and figures of what Vid. Maje- they found to be literally express'd in Genefis, the last chapters of the Prophet Esdras, the Camicles, &

rus, Sandi-บางวันรา conrad & the Apocalypse, concerning that Soveraign transother Alchymists.

mutation.

274

That, they fay, was a thing infallibly known to the good man, Job, who by the affistance of it multiply'd his wealth sevensold; to Abraham, who was d wars against 4 Kings; to Joseph who of a sudden became so powerful; to Moses who turned the molten Calf into ashes, to Gideon who represented it under a fleece, though not not a golden one as that of the Argonauts; to Satomon. who made no more account of Gold than of peble-flones; to St. John, of whom it is said in his Hymne, > Inexhaustum fert thesaurum, Qui de virgis fecit aurum, Gemmas de Lapidibus:

and lassly to St. Dominick, who taught it two of the most learned men of his Order, Albertus Magnus, and St. Thomas. All which extravagancies consider'd, it may well be said, > Proh superi, quantum mortalia pettora caca Nottin habent!

Ovid. Mai

and admir'd, how such impertinencies and blasphemies should be harbourd in the hollow brains of these melancholy persons, who, for recompence of their rashness or ignorance, deserve no lesse than to forseit the name of men, since they have lost that which denominates him such, judgement and reason.

This premis'd, we come to explicate that passage of Genesis, which hath given divers occasion chap. 44. to imagine, that Joseph, son of Jacob, and one highly commended by David as the Image and psal. 104: mystical representation of Christ, was addicted to all kinds of superstitious divinations, then in vogue among the Agyptians. For, from what he caus'd his Steward to say to his Brethren who were come to buy coln in Agypt, speaking of the Cup, Is not this it in which my Lord drinketh? and Gen. c.44-what he says himself when they were brought v. 5.

Digitized by Google

before him, Wot ye not that such a man as I am can certainly divine? Some have imagin'd that he profels'd Divination, which he perform'd by a certain kind of Hydromancy, doing it either simply by the cup, as is ordinarily done by some Chrystal vessel, looking-glasse or any thing that is clear and imooth, or by the means of the water that was in it, as Julian the Apostate did, and those who at this day (though it be ill and superstitioully done by them) discover the thief & things loft, in a Viol or Bottle. Or lastly, he did it by the inspection of certain precious stones which were sassned within it. But certainly it were no hard matter to deliver this great Favorite of God from so dangerous a suspicion, if we will but sollow the common opinion of all the Doctors of the Church, who, in Pererius would only finde out a way whereby he might be excus'd from having addicted himself to the practise of that Divination, whereto he indeed had not so much as contributed a thought. Nor need we search for any other explication than that of Petrus Burgen.

2 QUEP. sis, if it be true, as he affirms, that instead of what 104.in Gewe have in the vulgar translation, An ignoratis riesin. quod non sit similis mei in augurandi scientia? The b Queft. Hebrew Text will bear this, Know you not that it is easy for great Lords and Princes, such as I am, 55.in Gen. c Quast. to consult Southsayers and Diviners? Wherewith 95. alt.7. in resp. ad Ægypt was at that time well furnish'd. But since this explication hath not been yet acknowledg'd, and that the vulgar version, authorized by the d In eum Councel of Trem, admits the words before recilocum. Magia di-ted, we may, in the first place with [a] Theodorer, St. b | Augustine, St. [c] Thomas, [d] Tostatus Bininer. and [e] Torreblanca, affirm, That Joseph Spoke c. 10. this this ironically, alluding to the common opinion then current over all Ægypt, nay even in itrange Countries, that he had been advanc'd to that dignity by the happy events of his Predictions; or to daunt his Brethren and make them the more guilty, as having taken away that bowle or cup, whereon depended the continuance as well as the original or his great fortune, and that he forecold things that should certainly come to passe by the means thereof.

This explication may be thought the more probable, in that when he commanded his Stew-" ard to put that vessel into the sack of the youngelt, he only said to him, Put my cup, the silver cup, Gen. 44. in the fack's mouth of the youngest, and his Corn- v. 2. money, not mentioning it to be that whereby he was wont to prelage and divine. Whereas when he commands him to purfue them and to bring them back, he gave him strict instructions what he should do and say, Up, follow after the men, and baving overtaken them , say unto them, Wherefore have ye remarded evil for good? Is not this the Cup in which my Lord drinketh, and whereby indeed he divinerh; ye have done evil in so doing. Whence it is clear, that the addition of these words, and whereby indeed be divineth, et in quo augurari solet, was only put in the, more to trighten them, as that one of them should take that vessel, whereby Joseph had attain'd so high a fortune beyond the ordinary fort of people. But if, notwithstanding this reason, the words of Joseph and his servant are to be understood without any ambages or fiction, we must consider what Rupertus saies of it, who observes that the word angurari is not L. 9. in that place taken precisely to fignific or guesse Gines.

at something, whether by the observation of birds or some other superstitious way, but in its general acception to soresee or foretell things to come by any way whattoever. Thus did Pling

Quest. 2. Gen.

Epifel. 1.4. the younger, ule it writing, to Tacitus, Auguror (nec fallit augurium) Historias tuas immortales futuras; in which sense Rupertus and Pererius affirm, that the speech of Joseph may be taken, without quitting the litteral, in that by reason of the gift he had of Prophecy, he might make use of the word augurari, and know future events. Which that he did, there needs no further proof than that of the interpretation of the dreams of Pharaoh and his Officers. To which may be added his detention of his Brethren for three daies in Ægypt, and then causing them to be pursued by his servants at their departure, which might be to intimate that the Israelites should sojourn there for the space of three Generations, and that when they were to leave it, they should be pur-su'd by all that multitude which was afterwards overwhelmed in the Red Sea.

Whence I leave men to judge of the probability there may be that he should have written the Book entituled Speculum Joseph, mentioned by Antipal. [a] Trithemius, or that we may believe [b] Jub Lib.36. biftor.

stine, who speaking of the Jewes, saies that Jo-Jeph envy'd by his Brethren, was fold by them to certain Marchants who carry'd him into Ægypt, where in a shorr time he learnt the magical Arts, and grew the best of any for the interpretation of dreams and prodigies, being not ignorant of anything that could be known, in so much that he foretold the great dearth which happened in that Countrey, and, for that reason was much sap,mon.

Digitized by Google

vout'd by Pharach. From which story all that may be drawn, is, that he, Tacitus, and others either speak at random, or give a passionate account of that people, and that God, who is pleas'd to give us a true history of them by his faithful Secretary Moses, would not have us to stand in need of the Authority of those prophane Authors, as to anything they might say consonant to what he hath lest in his admirable Books of the Pentateuch,

It, from what is said of Joseph in the 44. chap. of Genesis, he hath been reproached with Magick, I think there is much more ground to imagine the same thing of King Solomon, because of his great and prodigious Idolatry, confidering the Wildom he was master of before. For as there is nothing so certain as that he never practised any thing that were superstitious, while he continued in the grace of God, and a right administration of the favours he had received of him; So we must needs acknowledge (to avoid Lastantius's Instit. 1. 5. censure, who saies, that, eadem cacitas est, et de c. 5. vero falsitatis, et mendacio nomen veritatis imponere) that possibly, fortaken of God for his luxury and Idolatry, he might sell himself over to a Lib. Dif. all manner of vices and abhominations, and par-quift, c.s. ticularly as [a] Delrio, [b] George of Venice, b To. 1. and [c] Pineda affirm, to that of Magick, there Sett. 9. being thousands of examples whence may be et tom. 9. drawn this conclusion to his prejudice, that Sea. r. Luxury, Idolatry, and the vanity of Divinati-prob. 81. ons, rcb. Salom. c. 13,

Et

Et bene conveniunt, & in una sede morantur.

For which we have the testimony of St. Paul, and Galat. S. what is laid of King Manasses, in the Old Testa-2 Kings 21. ment, that he reared up Altars for Baal, and a - 3. little after, he observed times and used inchant-Verse 6. ments and dealt with familiar spirits and Wizzards. And fince women are more adicted to Magick then men, as is learnedly shewn by the Civilian Tiraqueau in his Conjugall Lawes by the authorities of Cicero, Livy, Quintilian, Diodorus, and Zib. dereb. diverse other good Authors, I make no question, Salom.c. with Pineda, but the 700. wives and the 300. 13. Concubines which Salomon had might easily enfnare him in a Labyrinth of Charmes, divinations, drinks, and other superstitious practises, which, if we credit Lucan, (disprov'd indeed by Ovid) have a greater influence on that passion then any other, fince that he faves, > —— Quas non concordia mixti Alligat ulla thori, blanda ý, potentia forma, Traxerunt torti Magicà vertigine fili.

But though we should allow this might happen to Salomon that we have said, yet are we to beware how we exceed much further, and too easily be perswaded, that he should seal so much time from his pleasures and enjoyments, as it would require to write so great a number of Magicall Books as there are at this day published under his name. This indeed is so great, that to prove they are salse attributed to him, we need no more then make a Catalogue of such only as have

The Hillory of MAGICA. have been seen and cited by divers Authors. For though [a] Genebrard make mention but of three, a Lib. 1. and b] Pineda but of 4. or 5. yet is it easily shewn charonolog. chat there are a many more; for Albertus Magnus ad annum in his Book of the Mirrour of Astrology quotes 1460. five: the first dated Liber Almadal, the se-b Lib. 3. de cond, Liber 4. Annulorum, the third Liber deveb. Salonovem candariis; the fourth, de tribm figuris Spi. mon. c. 29.
rituum, and the fifth de Sigillis ad Damoniacos. To thele we may adde four mentioned by Trithe- Lib. 1. Anmine, intituled, the first, Clavicula Salomonis adtipal. c. 3. filium Roboam, the second Liber Lamene, the third Liber Pentaculorum, and the fourth de Officie Spiritunm. Whereto if we adde these three, viz. that of Raziel cited by [a] Reuclin, de umbris Idearum, mentioned by Chicus upon the Sphere a Lib. 10. of Sacrobosco; de Hydromantia ad filium Roboam, de arte cawhich [b] Gretserus taith, he saw in Greek in the balistica.

Duke of Bavaria's Library. And lastly that more probiTestamentum Salomonis, out of which M. [c] bindi malos Gaumin cites, many passages written in the same libres.c. 10. Language, we finde that without comprising that c in notise called by [d] Nicetas, Liber Salomonius, here ad Pfellum. are thirteen different ones, and yet withall Au-Annal. thentick. Which number, might well engage us to make the same judgment of them, as did fometime Roger Bacon, whole reflection thereupon I shall the rather quote, because it makes fomething for all those for whom I make this

Apology. Quicung, saith he, asserunt quod Sa. Cap. 2. de lomon composuit hoc vel illud, aut alii sapientes ne-operibus argandum est; quia non recipiuntur ejusmodi libri tu et naturustoritate Ecclesia, nec à sapientibus sed à seductori-va.

bus qui mundum decipiunt; etiam & ipsi novos libros componunt, 4 novas adinventiones multiplicant, sicut

Digitized by Google

scimus.

282 The History of MAGICK.

> scimus per experientiam, & ut vekementius bomi nes alliciant, titulos praponunt famosos suis operibus; & ea magnis authoribus impudenter as cribunt.

This granted takes away all the difficulty may arise about the Books of Salomon, unlesse it be De reb. Sa- about that of Exorcisms, which Pineda affirmes, 1om. l. 3. either not to have been written by Salomon, or c. 29. d that he did it in the time of his Idolatry. yet methinks it were more rationall, with Jan-Senius, Salmeron, Genebrard and Delrio, to grant, that, during the time that by his wildome he knew all things, and was fill'd with good affection by reason of his sanctity, he might prescribe certain forms to chase away Devills, and to exercise people posses d by them; such as were those practiced by the Jews, in St. Luke, St. Mathen,

Lm. 11. and the Alts. Such were also those, as Tosephus Malb. 12. affirmes, practis'd fince by Eleazar, Who cast Atts 19. Antiq. Jus a Devill our of the body of a possess'd person, in daic. 1. 8. the presence of the Emperour Vespasian, not by E. 2. the vertue of a root, which could naturally have no power over Dæmons and Creatures purely spi-

rituall, but by the force of his exorcisms, x Angelowhich only had that power, as Delrio, [x] Cas-

mannus and divers others explaine it. part. 2, c.

graph.

¥7.

a ad ann.

From thele two passages of the Old Testament, we come now to that of the new, which is in the second of Math. where mention is made of the wife men who came from the East to adore Jesus Christ. I have no designe to repeat in this place a number of Fables, fach as Vipertus, a Dr. of Divinity and the Canon-Law hath taken such paines to gather together, in the History he bath

I. Christi. written, of them, it being enough to my purpose to take out of the writings of [a] Baronius [b] Ca-[anbor

[aubon [c] Maldonat, [d] Bullenger & many other, c In cap. 2. who have written at large on this subject, what is Math. fit not to be omitted in this Chapter, and in few decloge al words, to discover what these wise men or Magi Arnob.c. 6. were, and by what means they had notice to come and adore Jesus Christ in Betbleem. For the first, the difficulty lyes in the fignification of the word Magi, being either ambiguous and equivocall, that is, such as many be understood of enchanters & a Hill. 1. 3. focerers; such as signify'd a certain people among b Geogr. 1. the Medes; who are so called in [a] Herodotus, b] 5.

Strabo, and [c] Epiphanius; and lastly might be said fidei Cathoof the Sages of Persia. These three severall in-lice. terpretations have all had their patrons and fa-d Lib. de vourers; [d] Tertullian understanding that passage Idololatria. of the first, Epiphanus and Panigarolus of the iecond, and Maldonat with Casaubon, of the last, that is for Mages, that is, the most vertuous and most venerable persons among the Persians, such as were in the same reputation in their Country, as the Brachamans were among the Indians, and the Druids among the Gaules. Which last opinionseems to be the more rationall, in that the word Magi is Persian, that it is the custome of the Persians not to accost Kings without Presents, that the Evangelist speaks of them as persons of great quality and reputation; in a word, the Scripture it self lights as it were to the truth, when it layes, that these wise men came from the East, there being no Author that ever held there were any other Magi that way than those of Persia. Yet is there no necessity to have any recourse to the soutish imagination of Paracelsus, who would have Lib. de vita them ride post upon enchanted Horses, so to bring longa. them in lesse then thirteen dayes out of so re-cap. 9. mote

in Mab.

mote a Country, fince there's nothing to convince us they might not spend more time in their 7. journey, as St. Chrysostome would have it, or were not of the nearest parts of that Country; befides that History affords us many instances of greater expedition and diligence, and that these wise men rid on Camells, which go with ease after the rate of at least 100. miles a day.

This difficulty taken away, we are now only to find out the meanes whereby the wife men might be advertised of the Nativity of Jesus Christ. In which fearch, we shall not with the Priscillianists, affirme they it knew naturally by the meer inspection of the Star, lett we incurre, with them, the censure of St. Augustine and Chryfostome. And there being as little ground with a Lib. 1.

[a] Origene and St. [b] Hierome to think it was cont. Celrevealed to them by Damons, as it had been to the CHURL. b In cap. 19 Shepherds by Angels, because this were to make Isaia. them Magicians, contrary to the truth before maintained, our lafest course is to conclude with Maldonat, that they had learn'd it from the pro-In cap. 2. Mztb.

phecy of Balaum, that a new Star should appear at the birth of the Saviour of the world, according to what is said, Orietur stella ex Jacob, and in effect, they shewed no lesse when they peremptorily said, Where is he that is born King of the Jews? for we have seen his Star, speaking of that Starr, as a thing they thought well known among the Jews since it was so much among the Gentiles and Idolaters. But the subject of this Chapter is not so much my businesse as that of Divines, yet have I a confidence they will not take it ill, that I have done what I have, and therein follow'd the doctrine and resolutions of the most

The History of MAGICK.

285

most eminent among them, so the better to clear up the difficulties arining out of this Chapter:

CHAP. XXI.

io d : Ľ,

tty; II(C

: de

Of the Poet Virgil.

THen I seriously reflect on the Condition of those learned men, who flourish'd four or five ages before the restauration of Sciences and disciplines in Europe, nothing feemes more miraculous to me then that the. most learned and best grounded among our Authors have appear'd amidst that Barbarism like Roses among thorns, or Diamonds on the defert Mountaines. And this so much the rather, in that at this day when we are encompassed with so great light as should make us judge of things with more caution, those who should make greatest use thereof are so dazzi'd therewith that they revive many opinions whole first Authors we daily declame against, either for their want of judgment or ignorance. Whereof though the precedent Chapters of this Apology afford sufficient instances, yet have I rejerv'd for this that which we have upon the authority of [a] Bodin & Demoand de [b] Lancre concerning the Magick of Vir-nom.l.2.e. 2 gil, as one of the most pregnant proofs may be la meseregiven of it, if we in the first place consider the re- ance du sorputation of these two persons, (the former being tilege conone of the most esteem'd men of his age) and then, vaincu. the litle ground they had to draw that errour, out pag. 281. of the workes of certaine Authors, that are but che dirt and dreggs of the most Barbarous Writers, and who by the impertinences of their relations

Digitized by Google

The History of MAGICK,

tions teach us that the great Chancellour of England, Verulam, had reason to tell us, that hoc habet ingenium humanum, no cum ad solida non

De augment, So

Sci-suffecerit in supervacaneis & futilibus se atterat. For can there be any thing imagind that were more fantaltick, and disconsonant to common sense and reason, then to see the Phænix of Latine Poely impeach'd not of that Poeticall Magick, and tury, which, by the perfection of his workes, hath charm'd the greatest wits into an imitation of him, such as Statius, Sylvins, and the Floren-tine Poet; and gain'd him the Title of most excellent Orator with Quintilian, St. Hierome, and Seneca; of Father of Eloquence with St. Augustine, and to be the only man worthy the name of Poet, with J. C. Scaliger; but of the Geotick, superstitious, and unlawfull. Which certainly had never been layd to the charge of this Ornament of Parnassus, had it not been for a fort of wretched Fabulists who by the excrescencies of their pittifull writings have traduc'd him, which yet I know not, whether I ought rather to quarrell with, than these two moderne Authors and some others, quos fama obscura recondit who are so light of belief, as to take such' impostors for lawfull proofs of a calumny that much more to their prejudice than that of Virgil. For his life is so well known, and whatever he did that were any thing remarkable, so faithfully preserved by a many Authors, that we may well be altonished at those, who, at this day, would make use of the forgeries and fabulous inventions of 7.0r 8. Barbarian flaves, and the opinions of the populace, to augment the Catalogue of Magicians with the name of this Poer,

The History of MAGICK.

and to entertain us with thousands of little stories and sooleries, which, were they true, could do no lesse then make him be reputed one of the most expert that ever was in the Art. But since, on the contrary, they are salse and ridiculous, they destroy themselves, there needing no more for their resutation, then to draw them up all together to find, (it being presupposed that they are all equally to be credited) that Dr. Faustus, Zedechias, Trois-eschelles and the most samous Conjurers that ever were, have not done any thing comparable to what they say Virgil hath, and consequently that they are not to be believed unlesse by such as will also grant, that Omnia jam fient, fieri qua posse negantur, Et nihil est de quo non sit habenda sides.

But having said in the first Chapter of this Apology that we are endebted to the Monk Helinandus for all these fables, as finding (according to Gesner, who makes him flourish in the year 1069.) no Author more ancient then he that made any mention thereof, and meeting fince with the Collection of the Lives of the White Friers, whose Authour cites Vincent de Beauvais affirming in his mirrour of History that the said Monk liv'd about the year 1209. Iam forc'd ingenuously to consesse I was mistaken, and that the first Author of all these extravagances, is, in my judgment no other than that Gervase, who, Theodoric à Niem fayes, was Chancellour to the Emperour Otho III. to whom he presented his Book entituled Ocia Imperatoris. This is a piece fraught with Lib. 2. de things so absur'd, fabulous & impossible, as I have schismate already observed that I can hardly believe the 6.19. 20 man

Digitized by Google

Z0/

288

man was in his wits when he writt it; and that wrong him not, I appeal to the Reader. faies then (not to meldle with any thing but what is to our present purpose) that the wise Virgi set r a Brasen Fly on one of the gates of Naples, which for the space of 8. years, that it remain'd there, permitted not a fly to enter the faid City, in the same place he caused a Shambles to be mad: wherein meat never smelt orwas the least tainte. that he placed on one of the gates of the same City two great images of Stone, one whereof was fall to be handsome and merry, the other sad and it formed, having this power, that if any one can in on the fide of the former all his affairs profper ed according to his own defires, as he who came on the other, was unfortunate and disappointed in all things; that he let up, on a high mountain near Nap'es, a brazen Statue, having in its mouth a Trumper which founded to loud when the North windblew, that the fire and smoke issuing out of those forges of Vulcan, which are at this day seen near the City of Poussola, were forc'd back towards the Sea, without doing any hurt or injury to the Inhabitants. That it was he made the baths of Calatura di petra bagno & adjuto dil' homo, with fair inscriptions in Letters of Gold, defac'd fince by the Physitians of Salerna who were troubled that men should thereby what difeases every bath could cure. That the time Virgil took such a course that no man could be hurt in that miraculous Vauls cut through the mountaine of Pauflippo, to go to Naples; and lastly that he made a publick fire, wherear every one might freely warme himself, near which he had place'd a brasen Archer with his

Digitized by Google

arrow

ICI

lit;#

Ruk ingk ie/a; opla:

îŋ.

obes

alite

die

1,119

116

iDe G

2:0.

00

:02

attrow drawne out, and such an inscription, If any one strike me, I will shoot off my arrow. Which at length happened, when a certaine sooie striking the said Archer, he immediatly shot him with his arrow, and sent him into the fire; which was presently extinguished.

These impertinences were first transcribed out of this Author by Helinandus the Monk into his Universall Chronicle, and then by an English man one Alexander Neckam a Benedictine Monk, who Lib. 16. relates some of the precedent in his book Of the Nature and property of things. To which he addes, that Naples being troubled with an infinite numher of infectious Leaches, it was deliver'd, assoon as Virgil had cauled a golden one to be call into a well: that he compated his dwelling house and garden (where it never rain'd) with an immoveable streame of aire, which was instead of a Wall, and had built in it a brasen bridge, by meanes whereof he went whither he pleased. L' d made also a Steeple with such miraculous artifice, that the Tower wherein it was though, of stone, mov'd in the same manner as a certain bell, anat was in it, did, and that both had the same shaking and motion. Besides all which, he had made those Statues call'd the Prefervers of Rome, which were warch'd night and day by Priests, for that assoon as any Nation entertain'd any thought of revolting and taking armes against the Romane. Empire, immediately the Statue representing that Nation, and adored by it, moved; a bell, it had about the neck rung, and with its finger it pointed at that rebellious nation, in so much that the name of it might it be perceiv'd in writing, which the Priest carrying to the Emperour, he immediately raif'd an Army to reduce and qulet ir.

Digitized by Google

Nor could this be missed by a certaine Anony-Cap. 103. mous Author, who, about 120. years fince, undertook to make a collection of the lives of Philosophers and Poets. For coming to speak of Virgil, he considently sayes, Hic Philosophia naturali praditus etiam Necromanticus fuit & mira quadam arte hac fecissenarratur. Which premis'd, he brings in the forementioned stories, which have been since coppy'd out verbaim out of the Latine Book of that Anonymus, by Symphorianus Champier, and Albertus de Elib, who hath been Lib. de claso indifcreet and simple, as to put them into the second part of his Poeticall Margarite, under the cinæ Scrip-Title of Sentences and Authorities taken out of Laior. tract. erties. Nay not content with that, he hath added thereto the flory of a Roman Curtezan, who ertime. Nay not content with that, he hath added thereto the flory of a Roman Curtexan, who having hang'd up Virgil in a basket, half way down a great Tower, he, to be reveng'd of her, put out of all the fire that was in Rome, making it withall impossible to light it again unlesse they took it out of the privy parts of that abusive woman, which yet to taken could not be communicated one to another, so that the whole City was oblig'd to come and visit her. Add yet this likely story was no soonerabroad but one Gratian du Pont thought it worth the inserting into his Controversies of the two Sexes male and semale, printed at Thoulonse 1534. as a demonstration of the malice and wickednesses for some and the malice and and the malice

These sables I thought fit to saggor up together, and that according to the order of those that have maintain'd them, to she what creditive shold give the great number of Authors affirming the same thing.

thing, without examining the sufficiency and integrity of him that first advainc'dir. But it would take up abundance of rime to search narrowly into the businesse of the Fly and Leach; and it were as much vaine glory as importunity to rake together all that may be said upon Astrologicall stamps and Sculptures, which the Greeks called Stoecheiodes and the Arabians Talismanitks. Such as were those of Constantinople and diverse other such graven Stones, on which [a] Casaubon, [b] Scaliger, ad Vopisand [c] Camerarius have already made many excum. cellent and curious observations, either to exa-b In a letter mine and refute, as well according to the rules of he writ to Polymathy, as Physick and Metaphysick, all the Mr. Vazet. above-recited Stories, which need no other folu-des Medit. tion then a good confident Negative. And that Historic. 1. the rather, for that Aristotle layes very well, de 3. c. 23. fabulose sophisticantibus non est dignum cum studio intendere; and in the first of his Ethicks, A man Metaphy.3. should not spend his time so trivially as to resute all forts of opinions, but only such as have some probability and appearance of reason. Since therefore the relations of these Authors are fitter to entertaine Old mives, Thracians, and Abderties, then to satisfy those who can judge and distinguish quid solidum crepet, we will dismisse this crue of Barbarians, such as are rather to be pittied than censur'd, to satisfie the Authorities of certaine writers of greater reason, and consequently such as ought to be treated with more respect then the precedent.

Those who read the life of this Poet, thought to be written by Tiberius Donatus, Master to St. Hierome, might haply be formewhat surprised, and be guilty of some litle inclination to believe this V 2

Su'picion may be true, in that speaking of Virgil's father, he layes, Hunc quidam opificem figulum, plures Magi cujusdam viatoris initio mercenarium, mox ob industriam generum tradiderunt. But it were more safe to follow the judgment of Delrie Comment. agreeing with that of Lacerda, who will not alvol. I. trailed des low that Life, such as we have it now, to have eloges. been written by that ancient Donatus. For fince he gives not any reason of that criticall censure, I think, were there no other, this very line enough to make us account the whole piece counterfeit and that Donatus would never have committed an errour, which Crinium, and others Lib.3 de poet. Lat. c. treating of the same subject have avoided. Nor 37. can I imagine that Johannes Sarisberiensis would have mention'd this brasen fly that forc'd away all others from Naples, had it not been, from this flory, though fabulous, to draw an excellent morall inscription, and to teach us by the example of Augustus, which he hath in the sour Chaprer of his Book de nugis curialium, that the publick benefit is to be preferr'd before any private man's advantage and latisfaction. Besides, we are not more oblig'd to believe what he sayes by the way and under the caution of a hearfay, concerning this fly, than what divers Authors have faid of fo many other places, whence these litle insects were banish'd, that their number might well make us doubt whether they ever were from any. For if we credit the Rabbins, there was not one to beseen in the Slaughter-house where the Bealls were kill'd and prepar'd for facrifice, though the place was perpetually full of blood and raw hides. If Calius Rhodiginus, there was not one in the place where the Olympick games were celebrated; ted; nor yet in the City of Leucade in Acarnania. If Pliny, the Oxe-market at Rome; if Solinus, Hercules's, Temple, if Cardan, a certain house at Venice; if Dr. Gervais, the Refectory of the Abbey of Mailleraus in Poilton, were never troubled with any. And lastly, if we credit Fusil, there is but one to be seen all the year long in the Shambles of Toledo in Spaine. And for my part, I think Scaliger did very well to laugh at one of Exercit. these Fly-drivers who having made a little plate 246.84.3. grav'd with diverse figures and Characters, and that under a certain constellation, had no sooner plac'd it on a window to try the experience, but one fly more confident than the rest, came and hansell'd it with her ordure.

The third whose authority is somewhat considerable is Tostatus Bishop of Avila, who rankes in Epilt. D. Virgil among those that practis'd Necromancy, Hieron and that because, as he tayes himself, he had Paulinum read in the 16. Book of Helinandus's Chronologie, concerning the Fly and Shambles he had made at Naples. To which, not to discourse of the severall wayes there are to preserve diverse things for a long time, and somewhat to excuse this great person, who should have examin'd these two stories before he had believ'd them, I should rather affirme, that all the blame is to be laid on this Helinandsu, who hath so faithfully tranfcrib'd and stollen all these falsities, lyes, and Impostures out of Dr. Gervase into his Chronicle that he hath made it very much like Euclio's house in Plantus, que inancis oppleta est at q, araneis. Nay I can; without passion, affirme, that I never found him cited by any Author, but upon the account of some ridiculous fables; of which citations I could easily produce such a numbers as would more then justifie the truth of what fay, were it as easy to lay them down in few words as it were requisite it should be done.

But since the Authors who have made mention of the Magick of Virgil are so many that they cannot be examin'd one after another without losse of much time and abundance of repetitions we must imitate the Civilians, who take Authorities per saturam, and so digesting all that rea De spette, maine into one Article, shew, That, [a] Le Log l. 1. c. 6. er mades mention of his Ecche, [b] Paracelsus of b I . Tom. his Magicall images and figures, [c] Helmoldw oper. traft. of his representation of the City of Naples shur de imaginibus c. ir. up in a glasse bottle, d Sibyllus, and the Authour C I.ib. 4. of the Book entituied the Image of the World, of Histor Slathe head he made to know things to come by; [e] vor. c. 19. Petrarch, and [f] Theodoric à Niem, of the Vault d Peregr. he made at Naples, at the request of Augustus; qualt, ac [g] Vigenere, ot his Alphabet; [h] Trithemien cad. 3. c.2. que lione. of his Book of Tables and Calculations whereby to e In Itine. find out the Genius's of all persons; and lastly of those who have seen the Cabinet of the Duke f Lib. 3. de of Florence, of an extraordinary great Looking-Schismat. c. glasse which they affirme to be that in which this g Cap.19. Poet exerci.'d Catoptromaucy. To all which there gag. 330 of needs no other answer, than that all these Auhis Cyphers, thorities are too young, absur'd, and ill groundh Anipal. ed, and consequently too light to outweigh 1.4. c.3. the Generall silence of all Authors that flourish'd during the space of ten Ages, and who certainly were extreamly to blame not to have left us the least observation of all the'e miracles, if there any such thing, fince faithfull account ny other particularities of lesse copsequence.

· Dignized by Google.

ě-

For what ground is there to imagine that the Emperour Caligula, who did all that lay in his power to suppresse the works of this Latine Homer, and so many other Zoilus's who have sound something to quarrel at even in the most inconsiderable actions of his life, would not have laid hold on a businesse which might have afforded so much fuell to their detraction? Or that the Emperour Augustus, who caus'd all Magicals Books to be burnt, should so far forget and contradict himself as to receive him, being a Magician and Necromancer, into the number of his most intimate friends and favorites? There were certainly as much reason to believe that all Sodomitts that were in the world dy'd the night of our Apud Em. Saviours birth, and that as the famous Civilian 1. de Enfa!. Salicetus affirms, Virgil was one of that number. Sett. 3.c.4.

And yet for what concerns the precedent Au-num. 12. thorities, it is not to be imagin'd that Petrarch, Theodoric à Niem, Vigenere, and Trithemius have been so indiscreet as thus basely to prostitute their reputation to the centures and fatyrs of those who are not so easily laid asleep with these Fables. For it is certain that whatever they say thereof, hath been only to refute them, and to let us know that they were not so credulous as those others who have furnish'd us with the rest of those Authorities, as such as can no way expiate the fault they have committed in being to miterably enfoar'd in the cobwebs of Hearsaies, vagrant reports, and the common opinion of the inhabitants of Naples and places adjacent; who have alwaies attributed to the conjurations of Virgil whatever seem'd to them ever so little extraordinary & miraculous, and where-

Digitized by Google

of they could find out no other beginning. This may be exemplify'd in that admirable cave or grott made in the mountain of Pausilippo near the City of Naples, whereof though Strabo (who liv'd in the time of Scipio, and the taking of Carthage, according to Athenaus, or of August us and Tiberius, according to Patricius) make mention as of a thing very ancient; yet the Countrey people thereabours will not be perswaded but that it was made by Virgil, at the importunity of the Emperour Augustus, because the top of the mountrin under which it is cut was so pestred with Serpents and Dragons, that there was not any man to confident as would prefume to travel over it. So that the main stress of the bufiness confifts now in knowing what gave the first occasion of this suspicion, which certainly can be nothing else but the knowledge of the Mathematicks, wherein Virgil was so excellent, according to the relation of Macrobius, Donatus, Lacerda, and the common confent of all Authors, that, befides his being an eminent Philosopher and well experienc'd in Medicine, it may neverthelesse be affirm'd, that the chiefest of his persections, next to Poefy, was his acquaintance with Astronomy, and other parts of the Mathematicks. And thefe. having ever been more subject to be charg'd with Ma ick than any of the other Sciences, have given Tome occasion to these unsett ed minds to be confirm'd in that erroneous opinion they had before entertained of him, by reason of his Pharmacentria, or eighth Ecloque where he hath so learnedly represented as Apuloius affirms vittus molles, et verbenas pingues et thura mascula et licia discolora, and whatever relates to Magick, that it would

Digitized by Google

would have been very much if he had avoided the suspicion of the practite thereof, especially from those, whom ignorance and the barbarism of the Ages they liv'd in, would not suffer to know that he had translated it word for word out of Theoritus. To which number we may adde some others who are so stupid as not to know what advantages a great Wit can make of these fictions and embelishments, which certainly should no more prejudice Virgil, than the forceries of Circe have done Homer; of Medea, Seneca; of Canidia, Horace; of Ericthon, Lucan; of Tiresias, Statius; of the Thessalian momen, Lucian, and Apuleius; of the old Witch, Heliodorus; of Maeffalina, Coccaius; of Angelica, Ariosto: of Armida, Tasso; or lastly Mandraca, the Author of Astrea. Whence it is evident to any one, that, from this Chapter, may be drawn a most favourable conclusion for all those great perfons for whom we have made this Apology; and that if so many fables, frivolous suspicions and fleight perswasions have found entertainment in the stragling imaginations of those who will needs quarrel with common sense and the opinion of all the world, to make Virgil a Magician, what I have produc'd before, as also all that hath been said against Zoroastes Pythagoras, Numa Pompilius, Democritus, Albertus Magnus, and the rest that have been brought upon the stage and vindicated, should no way derogate from their reputation, nor give any other impression of their learning and deportment than fucht as we ought to have of such as have been

Magnanimi Heroes, nati melioribus annis,

Digitized by GOOG

The History of MAGICK.

and indeed so innocent as to these superstitions and sooleries, that their memory ought to be freed from the least suspicion of their ever having any hand therein.

CHAP. XXII.

By what means all these erroneous opinions are maintain'd, and what may be expected from them, if not suppres'd.

Aving through all the precedent Chapters, both by general and particular reasons, thewn how it might come to passe that so eminent and extraordinary persons have been charg'd with Magick, and consequently deduc'd all I thought requisite for their vindication; I think there cannot any thing be now expected from me, save that, by way of conclusion to this Apology, I should specifie the true causes and several occasions whereby these calumnies are entertain'd and gain reputation daily, and what prejudice and inconvenience (if some course be not taken) they will do as well the Authors, who maintain them, as what is to be truly believ'd concerning Magicians, and what order is to be taken for the punishment of those whom their forceries and misdeeds discover and declare to be fuch. For the former, me thinks the several caufes of such a suspicion may be reduced principally to three. The first is, that all the world is perswaded, and facisfy'd, that the strongest proof and greatest

Digitized by Google

reatest assurance that can be had of Truth, deends on a general confent and universal appro-Dation, which, as Aristotle in the seventh of his Ethicks, affirms, cannot be absolutely salse and tained; besides that it is a thing very plausible, & hath a great shew of goodness & justice to follow the track that's approved by all. Hence it comes to passe, that the last that come to the businesse of writing and books, as well other Authors, as, Dæmonographers, grounding what they do on this Maxime, never mind the examination of what they find believed, and allowed for true by their Predecessors, and those who have written before them upon the same subject. So that what was false in them, spreads by this contagious approbation and applaule, though not proceeding from judgement and the knowledge of the cause, but meerly to second him that first led the dance, without ever confidering that he who would be a wife and discreet Judge, ought very much to suspect what ever the people, that pessimus veritatis interpres, is most taken with, and is appro- Sen. de vived by the greatest number, taking good heed ta beata. that he be not carried away with the current of common & popular opinions. Nay he is to be the more circumspect in this point, because the greatest part is commonly the worst, the number of Fools infinite, insection most dangerous, and most to be fear'd in a throng, the most beaten way the most easily deceives a man, that the wise man faies, qui cito credit levis est corde; and that chap.19. it is most certain, that when we are sway'd by example and cultome, without confulting reason, desert, and truth, we flip and fall one upon another, forfeit our reputation, run into precipices and, in a word alienis perimus exemplis.

The second general Cause is, that the greatest part of those who employ themselves in the composition and evulgation of some piece, such as they are able to work out, do commonly flatter themselves into a periwasion of such things, that they may do their buliness with greatest ease. And as they write not so much for any benefit to the publick, to oblige it by an exact anatomy of Truth, as out of some motive of vanity or ambition or to comply with that necessity which forces them to satisfie famem non famam, as Thuanu saies; so is it their custome to go to work as slightly and as cheap as possibly they can, not troubling themselves with a long and difficult evolution of the first Authors, or searching into the occasions they had to scatter all these fables & calumnies; nor racking their judgement with the confideration of those circumstances which should oblige them to ruminate, recollect, and reflect on things, so as to bring them to the grand Test of Reason, and thence draw solid and certain resolutions. And here certainly they much discover their weaknesse, and, because the advantages they derive from Nature are very slender, Thew, how they are led away by example, groping after things by hear-faies and conjectures, without ever lifting or examining them as they ought, especially in this Age, which is more fit to refine and sharpen mens judgements, then all the precedent put together were, by reason of the great revolutions that now happen, through the difcovery of a new world, the disturbances occasion'd byby Religion, the restauration of Letters, the declimation of Sects and ancient opinions and so many strange inventions and artifices; insomuch that Salomon might now, more truly than ever, 124, Doth not wisdom cry? and understanding Pro. 8. post forth her voice? She standeth on the top of high places, by the way in the places of the paths. She cryeth at the Gates, at the entring of the City, at the comming in at the Doors. Whence it may be inferrd, that there never was a more favourable conjun-Eture than that of the present, to raise mens minds out of the Lethargy they are in, and enliven them to a retractation, and so to a contempt of abundance of false and absurd opinions; were they not, for the reasons before mentioned, indifferent as to the eternizing their memories by the quality of their writings, out of a conceit that they gain reputation enough by the quantity, thereof, which they can swell up as they please, without much trouble or difficulty, with the assistance of a Method, devoutly observ'd of transcribing word for word, whatever hath been faid a hundred and a hundred times over by orhers.

And to do this, they are much oblig'd to the third and last cause of the propagation of all these fassities, which is a Custome lately introduc'd, of making oftentation of Polymathy or great reading, speaking on any subject of all things, and upon any occasion of all subjects, as if there were no other design in writing than to collect and saggot together all, that may be said, and with all what hath ever been said on the subject then to be treated of; it being not the question who hits the

The Hytory of MAGICA.

the mark, but who makes most shots. So that it is not to be admir'd it those who exactly observe fuch a method, are, like Marchants that take up all, burthen'd with many things of no value, and fuch as only corrupt and disparage others, which would be much more in request and reputation, were they cull'd out of the Chaos and confusion of those great Volums. It is certainly a strange thing, that Delrio, Le Loyer, Bodin, de Lancre, Go. delman, who have been, nay yet are, persons of credit and desert should write so passionately up, on the subject of Damons, Sorcerers and Magicia ans, as never to reject any Story, though ever to fabulous and ridiculous, of all those falle and abfird ones, which they have without any difcretion shusted in among the true and legitimate. Nay had they no more than what we have refuted, it were enough to prejudice and discredit the truth of the relt, since that, as St. Augustine

De siv.dei. well observes Solent res gesta aspersione mendaci-1.7.cap.35. orum in fabulas verti, and as St Hierome, Lyers

are not believ'd when they speak truth: witnesse As speak truth: witnes afterwards he playd the Tyrant in his Flock.

So that if we obey the precept of Caffiodorus who saies, that instructus redditur animus in futuvari-ris, quando prateritorum commovetur exemplis, we may, to resolve the second point propos'd, very probably inserr that all the ridiculous stories, sables and manifest untruths, which these Authors suffer so easily to slip into their writings, will infallibly turn to their prejudice, and, which ar.

Digitized by Google

İI

the space of 400 years, that they found work enough for those who were accounted the greatest Sophists and Philosophers in the world, such as, in comparison of whom, Cassindarm and St. Angustine understood nothing, as many are perswaded, of Dialectick, because they have not, in the precepts they have left us thereof, made any mention of the Chimana, Antichrist, Sortes, Buridan's Asse, Nullm et Nemo. But these, together with all those frivolous rubricks and sophi-

Digitized by Google

flications

The Milory of MAGICK.

the ground, by the foresaid Vives, that they are banish'd both out of the Schools and the memory of men, with as much consusion and contempt, as they had hin incroduc'd & maintain'd with appain, who the time of Lombard, and Peter of plause, from were the two first Authors and Promoters of this excellent kind of Dialettick.

The refult of all this, then, will be, that thos: who can make better advantages of wha they read and learn than the flaves of Pedantifn. do, and who are so industrious as to judge of things to come, by a consideration of what are past, may by these examples easily fore-sec That the writings of Demonographers, hydropica ly blown up with to many fables as almost stiff the truth, are threatned with the accomplish ment in them, of Paterculus's saying, Naturali: quod procedere non potest, recidit; and will prov like that great Colossus of Rhodes, which was to in'd only by its own vast and prodigious heigh or those great Edifices, which make the ve found tions crack by the weight of their sup fructures. And indeed experience teache that there is nothing more dangerous that shuffle old wives tales, and relations that doubtful, if not apparently falle, among thing of confequence: for the more circumspect of mankind not able to credit, nay not to adi 1.1 them, it often happens, that the vulgar, w hath not the ability to judge of things by the felves, is lead away by the opinion of those wh it esteems the most prudent, and, is persward understand them much better. So that being their example once arriv'd to so much confidence as to sleight and carp at any one of those stories and opinions it had sometimes held for strue, it presently jumps into an equall uncertainty and contempt of all those others for awhich it had not greater authority and better segrounds than they had for those that were discarded,

The History of MAGICK.

Nam cupide conculcatur nimis ante metutum.

X

fi

It were therefore much to be wish'd, as well Ffor the reputation of our Demonographers, as the mmaintenance & explanation of the truth of the "Subject they treat of, that they would be hence forward more cautious than to advance any Histo-Try or Authority before they have diligently exais mined all circumstances, and would afford all things their true worth and weight. So doing I shall they not be led' into a disadvantageous opinion of any one but upon good ground, nor without reason advance these frivolous accusations, fraught with nought but wind and forgery, fince that when they come to be narrowly examin'd, and the truth thereof discussed, ic commonly happens that they prove meer Calumnies, weakly-grounded suspicions, and indeed but vaine, light and inconsiderate words; which the Devill doth infensibly impose on the good names of the innocent, to the end they may one day prove occasions that that men shall not be able to discern and punish the guilty.

The History of MAGICK.

Verum animo satis bec voltigia parva fagaci Lucret.l.1 . Sunt par que possis cognoscere catera ente.

Digitized by Google

Books Printed for John Streater, and are to be sold by the Booksellers of London.

He Vale-Royall of England; or, The County Palatine of Chefter, Illustrated. Wherein is contained a Geographical and Historical Description of that Famous County; with all its Hundreds, and Seats of the Nobility, Gentry, and Freeholders; Its Rivers, Towns, Castles, Buildings Ancient and Modern: Adorned with Maps and Prospects, and the Coats of Arms belonging to every individual Family of the whole County. Unto which is added, An excellent Discourse of the Island of Man.

The Refinement of Zion: Or, The old Orthodox Protestant Doctrine justified, and defended against several Exceptions of the Antinomians: methodically digested into Questions, wherein many weighty and important cases of conscience are handled, concerning the nature of Faith and Repentance, or Conversion to God. By Anthony warton, De Morbie Famineie The Womans Counse llour, or, The Feminine Physician: Modelly treating of such occult Accidents, and fecret Diseases, as are incident to that Sex.

Pharmacopa 2

Dispensatory. Treating of the whole Body of Phylick: Performing the Office of an Herball; as well as an Apotheca-

An History of the Wonderful things of Nathre Lifet forth in ten several Classes. Wherein are contained, 1. The Wonders of the Heavens. 2. Of the Elements.
3. Of Meteors. 4. Of Mineralls. 5. Of Plants. 6. Of Birds. 7. Of four-footed Beasts. 8. Of Infects, and things wanting blood. 9.

Of Fishes. 10,0f Man.

The Mirrour of true Nobility and Gentility, being the Life of the renowned Nicholas Claudius Fabricius Lord of Peiresk, Senator of the Parliament at Aix: being the sum of all his great attainments in learning, and choise experiments of Philosophy, Physick, Policy, and Antiquitie. Wenten by Petrus Gassendus Prosessor, of the Mathematicks to the King of France, and are to be sold by Humphrey Mosely at the Princes Arms in St. Pauls Church-yard.

wherein by comparing the latter Age with the former, is maintain'd that the World with not decay universally, in respect of it self, or the Heavens, Elements, Mixed Badies, Meteors, Minerals, Plants, Anjuster nor in respect of Man, and his Statute, strength, or Faculties of his Mind, as relating to all Arts, and Sciences, B. John Jonston of Poland.

