Ossuaries and the power of bones are still considered of great importance by the Catholic Church, but also by Black Magicians operating in the Illuminati network often aided by the Jesuits. They even have the feast day of St. Cyprian and St. Justina celebrated each year on the 26th of September to offer the bones of a black cat in honor of this enigmatic and precious saint, the patron of necromancy. There is a great interest in the Illuminati elite, especially in the practices of Obeah (sometimes spelled Obi, Obeah, Obeya, or Obia) a system of spiritual and healing practices developed among enslaved West Africans in the West Indies. Of all the Living Traditions, Obeah has remained the most elusive while Vodou and Santeria, that are quite similar but not the same, have had both academic and occult interest in a variety of books widely available to the seeker. Obeah has managed to remain uncompromisingly rooted as a sorcerer's tradition veiled in obscurity and something the Illuminati continue to find of great interest.

Known Satanist and Illuminati Nicholaj de Mattos Frisvold, whose dark activities connected to the Vatican Jesuits have been exposed extensively in my works, especially in Volume one of my Confessions, has published a book in 2014, entitled Obeah: A Sorcerous Ossuary, in which Frisvold opens this Caribbean mystery of the darkest Illuminati by revealing the crooked Black Magic path into the hidden world of such dark figures such as Papa Bones and Sasabonsam, with a short monograph concerning the history of this seemingly incoherent cult and how power is bestowed upon and wielded by the Obeahman using human bones. "They found thousands of bones," said Giorgio Portera, the Orlandi family's forensic expert, who hypothesized from the start that they could have belonged to "dozens of persons." He said the bones had not been cataloged or kept in an orderly manner but were "piled up in a cavity."

Eventually, all the bones were gathered into 24 bags and sealed, and the Vatican later closed down the case denying any wrongdoing. I still think that the most strange occurrence in this recent investigation on Emanuela's case was when officials entered the Teutonic Cemetery on July 11, 2019, and opened the two tombs identified as possible repositories for Emanuela's remains and found absolutely nothing. Not even the bones of the two princesses who were supposed to have been buried there were present. At the end of this story, I still feel sorry for the pain and struggles of my dear friend Pietro Orlandi, a person who has never given up on the hope of finding his sister again, even after all the lies and suffering inflicted upon him by the Vatican demons.

For this reason, Pietro renounced his Vatican citizenship years ago, and all the privileges that go with it. Vatican City is the smallest country in the world, measuring just 0.2 square miles, almost 120 times smaller than the island of Manhattan. May God help him and his family, and in the meantime, let's hope that one day the truth about Emanuela will eventually surface because Pietro has never lost his faith in Jesus and we all remember what Jesus said:

"If you abide in my word, you are truly my disciples, and you will know the truth, and the truth will set you free."

Satanic Reds and the Jesuits behind Greta Thunberg, the future Maitreya

Few topics cause more intense feelings of revulsion than cannibalism, and rightly so. The consumption of human flesh has always been considered abhorrent, vile, and to most, morally wrong. However, a Swedish scientist speaking at a Stockholm summit of libtards and local Illuminati offered cannibalism in 2019 as a possible tactic to combat global climate change, unveiling publically for the first time the fixation of the mondialists with cannibalism. Stockholm School of Economics professor and researcher Magnus Soderlund, a Freemason of the Swedish Rite, said that he believes eating human flesh derived from dead bodies might save the human race if only a world society were to “awaken the idea.” The scientist also mentioned the possibility of cannibalism during a TV broadcast on Swedish channel TV4. Meanwhile, in Southern California, the kingdom of libtards, cannibalism is becoming increasingly fashionable. Aside from the reported fixation of Hollywood stars who engage in blood rituals and cannibalism, the Museum of Man, one of the more popular museums in San Diego, which is said to “inspire human connections by exploring the human experience” in January 2016, began their sickest exhibition to date Cannibals: Myth & Reality.

In a one-of-a-kind libtard exhibit, you’ll discover that cannibals aren’t who you think they are, and you might even want to join them if you were to listen to the guides. The museum does not describe cannibals as freaks, but as warriors from many cultures, European kings and queens, American and European sailors, American colonists, accident survivors, the sick, and more. When the exhibition opened back in 2016, The San Diego Union-Tribune said: Get past the ick factor. Stifle the barbecue jokes. Cannibals: Myth & Reality is a poignant and beautiful experience, the type that you hope to get to a museum. It deftly guides you from one emotional place to another, revealing connections across time and cultures, until you reach a point of deeper understanding. Through history, art, films, interactive displays and games, visitors confront what seems, at first, to be an unthinkable choice. By the end, you might realize that it’s far more nuanced and complicated.”

Returning to Magnus Soderlund’s argument for human cannibalism that took center stage at the Gastro Summit during a panel called “Can You Imagine Eating Human Flesh?” During the event, he debated that “conservative” taboos against cannibalism can change over time if people simply tried eating human flesh. Some of the talking points at the seminar included whether humans were too selfish to “live sustainably” and if cannibalism is the solution to food sustainability in the future. When asked during an interview after his talk if he would try human flesh, Soderlund said he was open to the idea.

The nutty Swedish professor who is a devotee of Thunbergism (the ideology born out of the message and behavior of Greta Thunberg) seems to forget that cannibalism causes the infamous Kuru, a very rare disease caused by an infectious protein (prion) found in contaminated human brain tissue. Kuru was first found among people from New Guinea who practiced a form of cannibalism in which they ate the brains of dead people as part of a funeral ritual. This practice stopped in 1960, but cases of kuru were reported for many years afterward because the disease has a long incubation period. Although the knee-jerk reaction to eating human flesh is strong, the actual morality and ethics behind feelings like these will change in the years to come if it were up to the sick propaganda of the leftist agenda to “save the world.”

Of course, in desperate times, people have resorted to cannibalism to survive; for instance, there are reports of cannibalism during the rather recent North Korean famine of 2013 with horrifying reports of men murdering their children for food, and before that, the same thing happened during the North Korean famine of the late 1990s. Then we also have the siege of Leningrad in the early 1940s, and China’s “Great Leap Forward” in the late 1950s and 1960s. All these cannibalistic episodes in recent history have one common denominator, they all happened in Communist-ruled countries, that’s why children-eating-Communists are not the source of myth but a sad and horrible reality.

For left-leaning Swedish behavioral scientist, Magnus Soderlund, eating people after they die could be a means of combating climate change in the ultimate screwed up agenda to save humanity from extinction. For these sickos of the NWO, many of us eat our fingernails, and some women eat their placenta after giving birth, so why is it such a big deal? The Satanic Reds want to convince us to become cannibals to join their Satanic/Communist Legion of “Demonrats.” In exploring the various branches of contemporary Satanism or Thelema we often encounter liberal progressive values and politics. The different belief systems of these libtards often reject Western moral laws, replacing them with a combination of a positive self-image and a decided lack of conformity that can aid them in their perverse path towards the Prince of darkness.

There are the Satanic Reds, created in New York in the late 90s, who view Satan as a dark force that has existed since the beginning of time. Its founder, Tani Jantsang, who claims to be a “Generational Satanist” is a staunch proponent of Communism. On their site they say openly:

“We are SOCIAL REALISTS – this is the HOME of the DARK DOCTRINES, Humankind is a social species, and only by putting People before unbridled profits can the New Age begin. Workers make everything that is used and enjoyed. The workers have nothing to lose but their chains. We have a world to win and, in that sense only, we are ‘Reds.’ We have Being – SAT. But we must stretch forth and Become – TAN and, in that sense only, we are Satanists. Satanic Reds, SR., Social Realists. Are you one? See below and see our FAQ.”

It seems like satire, but this is an extract from the website of the Satanic Reds, another left-wing group in league with the devil. For the Satanic reds, “Franklin Delano Roosevelt is a Worthy Mentor,” and Christianity is a cult worth exposing because “For too long the grievous effect of Christian teachings upon millions of people have either been ignored or treated lightly. Christianity should be no more immune from exposure than any other ruling class agency.”

As sick as it may seem, the Satanic Reds, whose Satanism has a Communist element, are only one of the many Satanic sects openly embracing the values of the left, like the more-known Satanists of The Satanic Temple of Lucien Greaves. The Satanic Reds say they promote Enlightenment, Empowerment, and Becoming/Evolution for the Self, but this is another demonstration that Communism and Satanism are but the same. In one of their articles, they also promote “Eugenics in China” writing that:

“While striving to control the growth of population in China, our nation’s family planners have simultaneously taken serious note of the importance eugenics represents as a field of inquiry. Eugenics is currently being promoted in China. Although it means “superior births,” the essence of eugenics can be found in the expression, “the birth of that which is better,” that is to say, the birth of children whose prenatal characteristics are excellent. Naturally, if one wishes to see that every family can produce healthy, intelligent children, then it is necessary to study eugenics, to popularize the knowledge of this field and to master its principles.

Recently Bernie Sanders, one of the Democratic hopefuls for the U.S. presidential race and one of the original libtards described his desire to normalize eugenics. Do you know who else did that? Hitler. Yeah, Adolf Hitler-completely in line with Sanders. Evil groups like the Satanic Reds also promote the dangerous concept that “Socialism can’t work if it’s only for some and not for all.” Beware of the Satanic Reds, my dear readers, because they are not only a sect but a growing ideology amongst Millennials. They seek to overthrow all the governments in the world and enstate the worship of Satan and the infamous Communist form of government and economy that will eventually lead to extreme poverty and famine, eventually forcing their subjects into despicable acts like cannibalism. Let’s never forget the ominous warnings of the eco-dystopian classic, “Soylent Green.”

If you remember the growth of the environmental movement of the ‘70s was immediately accompanied by a series of eco-disaster films, from the 1970 British-American apocalyptic science fiction No Blade of Grass (1970) and the Japanese Godzilla vs. Hedorah that features an environmentalist message, to the 1972 American horror film Frogs to the pretty scary science fiction horror Prophecy (1979), all of them released to scare the masses and prepare the world in the following years to the ugly picture of what might be in store for us if we don’t wise up to this terrible reality.

FIG. 23 – Original British Quad Poster for the classic 1973 Richard Fleischer science fiction dystopian future thriller.

FIG. 24 – Cannibals: Myth & Reality being promoted on the back of a bus in San Diego (California) in 2019.

But none were as immediate, detailed, realistic, or relevant as Richard Fleischer’s 1973 film Soylent Green, and none presented such a scary and bleak picture of things to come, and the human misery that could result from overpopulation, environmental disasters, and food and energy shortages. The world that Fleischer envisioned for this forgotten gem of MGM loosely based on the 1966 science fiction novel Make Room! Make Room! by Harry Harrison, was one you could almost smell at times, and certainly feel coming in a not so distant future. Of course, I was far too young to remember the relevance of its content when I saw it for the first time with my father Elio in the 70s, and I had almost forgotten about its relevance for a long time, even if it was left to hibernate deep in my subconscious among my greatest childhood fears.

I probably lost track of this film because of the difference in title in the Italian dubbed version that was even more ominous being 2022: I sopravvissuti (2022: the survivors). However, one day at the end of 1999 while I was walking along the streets of Oslo, Norway after grabbing a hot dog that sparked a debate with a couple of Norwegian friends on its quality and provenience, I started talking about this horrifying prospect for mankind. It was at that point that suddenly my friend Espen said “Well Leo you are talking about the film with Charlton Heston Soylent Green” and another friend said, “Don’t you know that movie, Leo?” At that point, I finally realized the origins of some of my worst childhood nightmares it was “Soylent Green.” I was glad to have rediscovered this film that was the source of so many of my childhood nightmares and replied astonished “Could this be the future of mankind?” The answer from Espen was “Yes and you might be already eating it.”

I hope not, and I will do everything in my power to stop this demonic project that is gradually unveiling in front of our eyes promoted by the latest Hollywood productions. One thing is for sure, I could only get to the fourth episode of the far more recent and contemporary Netflix series Santa Clarita Die, entitled “The Farting Sex Tourist,” before deciding these libtards had gone too far with their idiocy to even bother wasting time watching them. The situation is becoming increasingly sick and twisted in this Satanic new world we are all living in. For this reason, Christian concerns have grown in the past year, especially after the arrival of the statue of Moloch in the Colosseum in the fall of 2019. Moloch, is, of course, the biblical name of the infamous Canaanite god associated with child sacrifice. And, of course, modern-day abortion is child sacrifice, like my friend Owen Shroyer, once pointed out during a show together. Regarding Moloch, Henry B. Smith, Jr., Director of Development of the Associates for Biblical Research has written in “The Journal of Ministry and Theology”: History is replete with civilizations that have held morally repugnant attitudes concerning infants and children.

The Nazis carried Jewish children off to killing fields and the gas chambers at Auschwitz. The Aztecs and Mayans sacrificed both children and adults to their gods. Exposing an unwanted child to the elements or wild animals was a common practice throughout the Greco-Roman world. The Carthaginians of North Africa sacrificed their infants and children to pagan gods over several centuries.

So I wasn't at all surprised when I discovered that the Rockefeller Foundation, notorious for promoting abortion, was sponsoring a two-day Vatican conference under the auspices of Pope Francis and the Pontifical Academy of Sciences in November 2019. Incredibly enough, The Pontifical Academy of Sciences, partnered with U.N. pro-abortion advocates to pledge fidelity to the Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) championed by modern globalist heroes like George Soros and libtard champion Jeffrey Sachs. Robert Downey Jr. got an Oscar nomination for inventing the phrase “You went full retard, man. Never go full retard,” but a new one needs to be coined for Jeffrey Sachs who has gone full libtard on President Trump many times with his leftist rhetoric. Abortion is central to its “sustainable development goals (SDGs).”

The Illuminati elite of the Rockefellers and the Jesuits, propose following the United Nations, that we make the planet a safer place through population control and abortion, but this is done under the guise of caring for the poor, of course. But they simply use the poor to feed the human trafficking networks, for cheap labor, and, of course, to please their god Moloch. They say that “we shouldn't bring people into the world to suffer” so they encourage abortion and “helping” the poor.

Diane Montagna from LifeSiteNews reported on November 6, 2019: The Pontifical Academy of Sciences, members of a United Nations network directed by a pro-abortion globalist [Jeffrey Sachs], and governors of the Pan-Amazonian region have signed a common declaration committing themselves to implement the UN sustainable development goals (SDGs) in the Amazon. The Oct. 28 declaration, addressed to Pope Francis and signed at the pontifical academy's Vatican headquarters one day after the close of the Amazon Synod, consists in 14 pledges to 'build together effective solutions for sustainable development of Amazonia.'”

The historical two-day conference, that followed the declaration entitled “Reduction of Food Loss and Waste,” took place on the 11th and 12th of November 2019 and was held at the Casina Pio IV, and included speakers from a wide range of pro-abortion bodies including the infamous Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation.

FIG. 25 – Cover of the program for the two-day event “Conference on Reduction of Food Loss and Waste,” that opened with presentations by Bishop Marcelo Sánchez Sorondo Chancellor of the Pontifical Academy of Sciences, its President, Joachim von Braun, and Roy Steiner, the Senior Vice President of the Rockefeller Foundation.

FIG. 26 – Pope Francis and Greta Thunberg meet in April 2019 at the end of his weekly audience in St Peter's Square, shaking hands with the pontiff and showing him a banner adorned with the slogan “Join the Climate Strike,” (photo courtesy of Wanted in Rome).

The Vatican symposium also included climate alarmist groups like GreenFaith, who promote “eco-prayers and rituals” from diverse religious traditions who have declared a “climate emergency” but are another tool in the hands of the upcoming One World Religion that is elevating Greta Thunberg who inspired Thunbergism to an almost godly status with her image, now present even on a building in downtown San Francisco, almost revered by the libtards as some kind of future Saint. Greta Thunberg is now being taught to Swedish children as part of a course about “religious knowledge,” with kids being asked to mock her opponents.

Gradually, they are preparing the world for the announcement that Greta Thunberg is the long-awaited Messiah, the Maitreya crafted by the United Nations. Last year, a member of the Church of Sweden declared on Twitter that teen star climate activist Greta Thunberg is an appointed successor to Jesus Christ. The tweet operated by the Limhamns Church, said on Dec. 1, 2018 “Announcement! Jesus of Nazareth has now appointed one of his successors, Greta Thunberg.”

In 2019, during a visit to the U.S. of “Her Holyness” Greta Thunberg, Saint Paul Church in Malmö announced that they would ring their church bells in conjunction with the Global Climate Strike, of which Thunberg is the face, stating: In conjunction with the Global Climate Strike, church bells ring and we gather for prayer for the future of the earth. We pray that we believe that man is responsible for nurturing and managing Creation so that children are given the opportunity for the future. We pray that we know that climate change affects the most vulnerable — poor, children and women. We pray that we believe in man’s ability to change and change. When the Amazon burns, we gather to fight for Mother Earth together, adding at the end of their unusual statement in a typical Swedish fashion, “VÄLKOMMEN!” (WELCOME!).

The core purpose of Thunbergism is officially to stabilize the climate by drastically cutting greenhouse gas emissions and reducing the concentration of gases already in the atmosphere, but they are crafting Greta Thunberg as the future Maitreya that I have talked about in Volume 2 of my Confessions. The title Maitreya is usually attributed to the name used in Buddhism for “a Buddha yet to come,” though the origins of Maitreya are unclear and disputed, the prophecy of this future Buddha is found in the canonical literature of all Buddhist sects, and was immediately studied by the Jesuits after their first missions to Asia. Since then, the idea of a Maitreya has been adopted by other belief systems, including the Theosophical Society that will eventually bring this concept to the UN through the Jesuit agent Alice Bailey.

Theosophists consider the Maitreya figure to be a World Teacher and a Christ, and let’s remember that theosophy was also one of the forerunners used by the Jesuits for the foundation of the modern New Age movement; therefore, the teachings on Maitreya are found in several New Age-based groups today. Although there is no scriptural evidence that the Anti Christ will come in the form of such a person, there are similarities between the sudden advent of Greta Thunberg on the worldwide scene, seemingly out of nowhere, and the supposed role of this bodhisattva who is supposed to guide those on earth who are ready for its teachings. Of course, a lot of people reading this book will say this is nonsense because they will claim that the reappearance of Maitreya the Christ can happen only in the body of a man but remember we are talking about a product of the Theosophical society that pioneered feminism. In England, Blavatsky’s earliest followers were mostly men, but a generation later, when the Jesuits took over the supervision of the Theosophical Society it was dominated by women, and Theosophy becomes a crucial part of feminist political culture. Theosophical contingents took part in feminist marches of the period for instance, and a Theosophical group operating under the banner of Universal Co-Freemasonry marched as part of the Women’s Coronation Procession in 1911. Remember that feminism is part of the evil Satanic agenda of the Jesuits whose intent is to destroy the family unit and destabilize society.

So the Vatican symposium that took place in November 2019, was made in preparation of this “Unholy project,” that will gradually transform Greta from climate activist to a messianic figure and new Buddha of the north. For this reason, members of the European Commission and important figures from the United Nations were also represented at this strategic meeting in Rome sponsored by the Rockefeller Foundation, one of the leading organizations of the Vatican led New World Order preparing for the advent of the Antichrist.

In the official pamphlet, they wrote:

Actions to reduce food loss and waste are already planned or in place in many countries, but so far they do not add up to sufficient global impact and joint learning. The most promising actions can and must be enhanced. By bringing together a group of prominent leaders, actively engaged with this issue from academia, religious communities, private sector, government, civil society, and the United Nations (UN), we aim to create an interdisciplinary space for analysis and sharing of knowledge and focused solutions.

This nightmare scenario built on “Reduction of Food Loss and Waste” at all costs reminds me of “Soylent Green,” and that’s why the leftists are pushing so aggressively for euthanasia, so in the future, we can have euthanasia stations for the elderly, infirm, or suicidal, that might end up being cannibalized just like in the film, as secret ingredients for the production of “Soylent Green.” A substance that is allegedly made from plankton and is constantly in short supply, so the poor masses are always left to beg for more.

Now, it seems like our worst nightmare is in the making with the Rockefeller Foundation aiming to become the new Soylent Industries that in the film controls the food supply of half of the world and derives its name from a combination of “soy” and “lentil” already popular amongst libtards often labeled as “soy boys.” The average soy boy is a feminist, nonathletic vegan who generally reduces all his arguments by conveniently labeling the opposition as “Nazis”. Eating meat should be outlawed for the Soy boy. It is no wonder that the roots of commercial soy consumption originate in the English Theosophical Society milieu from someone who claimed to be in contact with the Ascended Masters. During World War I, while working in a laboratory for the Food Production Department of the Ministry of Agriculture, Dion Fortune, a British occultist, ceremonial magician, novelist, and author, discovered a means of making soymilk, as well as a method of turning it into soy cheese. In 1925, three years after entering into psychic contact with the Ascended Masters, writing under her birth name, Violet Mary Firth, Dion Fortune even published a book on the subject describing the wondrous properties of the soybean entitled, The Soya Bean: An Appeal to Humanitarians. In 1927 Fortune, who didn’t invent soymilk, but played an important role in its history as an advocate and experimenter, will join the Christian Mystic Lodge of the Theosophical Society, which was run by Daisy M. Grove.

In more recent times in England, Michael Mansfield QC, another believer in Thunbergism, has recently called for a new law to criminalize the willful destruction of nature. The 77-year-old, who has been leading a “Vegan Now” in the Labour Party, whose clients include Stephen Lawrence and the Guildford Four, claimed livestock farming is destroying the planet so we need to get rid of it. He said of meat-eating: “It is not preposterous to think one day it will become illegal. There are plenty of things once commonplace that are now illegal.” The Rockefeller Foundation, the Vatican, and the UN are planning for us in the not so distant future a Soylent Green, but, of course, some people will accuse me of being a conspiracy theorist.

In the meantime, the U.N. is also planning to normalize pedophilia to the joy of so many depraved individuals worldwide. In a shocking statement read by Archbishop Silvano Maria Tomasi at a meeting of the United Nations Human Rights Council in Geneva on September 22, 2009, the Holy See stated that the majority of Catholic clergy who had committed acts of sexual abuse against under-18-year-olds should not be viewed as pedophiles at all, but rather as homosexuals who are attracted to sex with adolescent males. The United Nations Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights has sanctioned in recent years a sexual revolution that will culminate in the legalization and the support of transgenderism but will also implement the legalization of pedophilia. That’s why the Vatican now loves the U.N., an institution that only a few years ago was still denouncing the rampant pedophilia in the Catholic Church.

A U.N. Committee on the Rights of the Child, an 18-member panel that includes academics, sociologists, and child development specialists from around the globe had blamed the Vatican in 2014 for indulging longstanding policies enabling priests to sexually abuse children and called to open pedophile files and disclose the names of clergymen who assisted in concealing such crimes, but suddenly as the elite pedophile rings and the Vatican are being increasingly exposed, the normalization and legalization of pedophilia is next on the Satanic agenda of the UN. The popular blog, The New American in July 2016. Confirmed that the United Nations “Human Rights Council,” which counts some of the world’s most ruthless dictatorships as members, sparked global outrage by voting to appoint a U.N. Czar to oversee the normalization of homosexuality and transgenderism around the world.

The deeply controversial scheme was initially pushed through by Communist and Socialist rulers with fervent support from the infamous Obama administration, which for years used American tax dollars and diplomatic resources to bribe and bully foreign governments into compliance with their radical agenda. In 2019, we are still discussing the farce of the Trump impeachment when the Obama administration pushed the darkest agenda without any complaints from the mainstream media. However, there is a great deal of opposition, and criticism of U.N. extremism that has been growing in recent years. This whole measure was pushed forward by a tight-knit network of Communist and Socialist governments in Latin America with close ties to Marxist terrorist groups, Western globalists, Moscow, Beijing, and, of course, the Jesuits.

Some European governments and other members of the “LGBT Core Group,” which included at the time Obama and the EU, also played a key role in pushing the scheme from outside the UN “human rights” outfit embracing what the infamous North American Man-Boy Association (NAMBLA) has been advocating for years. Their identifying banner statement is “sex before 8 or it is too late.” No wonder the largest contributor to NAMBLA is George Soros. Even the University of Cambridge recently came up with a presentation in support of pedophilia: “Pedophilic interest is natural and normal for human males,” said the presentation., adding: “At least a sizeable minority of normal males would like to have sex with children... Normal males are aroused by children.” Other presentations included, “Liberating the pedophile: a discursive analysis,” and “Danger and difference: the stakes of hebephilia.” Hebephilia is the sexual preference for children in early puberty, typically 11 to 14-year-olds. Our children are about to become part of a world that they are not equipped to live in, but they can always use Greta Thunberg as some kind of weird role model.

How long will it be until employees who have sex with children are protected, after all, anything is possible after the transgender issue in bathrooms. If that is not concerning enough, Kevin Jennings, a former Department of Education official in the Obama era, and a close friend of Hillary Clinton, was involved with this group as well. As disclosed by Peter LaBarberas of the Americans for Truth organization, Jennings said in 1997 that pedophile Harry Hay should serve as an inspiration. “One of the people that’s always inspired me is Harry Hay, who started the first ongoing gay rights group in America,” Jennings said. Well Harry Hay, who “inspired” Obama’s appointed Education Department official Kevin Jennings to lead a life of homosexual activism, was not only a supporter of (NAMBLA) but was also a prominent member of the Communist Party USA and a person who believes in the power of the occult.

For these sick people and their Illuminati controllers pedophilia is the last taboo that needs to be permanently removed. The New York Times is on record saying that pedophilia is not a crime. In an article from October 2014, Margo Kaplan is actively defending Nambla and pedophile advocates writing things like: “These people are living with pedophilia, a sexual attraction to prepubescents that often constitutes a mental illness. Unfortunately, our laws are failing them and, consequently, ignoring opportunities to prevent child abuse.” The poor pedophiles should have joined the Catholic Church hierarchy to feel at home, but now they can join the climate change Church of Saint Greta from Sweden their favorite minor.

Two years ago, Gaetano Pecoraro and Riccardo Spagnoli who are investigative journalists working for the TV show Le Iene exposed for the first time a sordid tale of sex abuse involving minors serving as altar boys for the Pope. The abuse took place in the pre-seminary San Pio X, the only place inside the Vatican walls where minors are allowed to live and this, of course, shocked the world. However, after the show aired, Le Iene said they immediately received a letter from the diocese of Como warning them against proceeding with their investigation. Fortunately, Le Iene was not intimidated by the threat and went on investigating the matter further.

The scandal eventually forced the Pope to partially take action in September 2019 against two of the priests involved. Le Iene returned in 2019 on Italian TV with more witnesses and new shocking revelations about the sex abuse of minors as young as 11 in the Vatican by the two priests already exposed and also another, showing the cover-up and the involvement of influential members of the clergy close to the pope.

New details of the sex abuse encounter included how the predator priests forced themselves on the innocent victims over and over again behind the Vatican walls, even in the rooms of Santa Marta where Pope Francis currently resides. However, in the 2019 t.v. documentary by Le Iene, a brother of one of the alleged victims of the pre-seminary San Pio X, who was also a seminarian there in the same period, threatened to harm Gaetano Pecoraro of Le Iene, telling him he will hurt him and his family if he went further with the investigation. The interesting aspect of this confrontation is that during the threats the former seminarian cited The Spiritual Exercises of Ignatius of Loyola, that I will discuss in detail further on in this book. This a set of Christian meditations, contemplations, and prayers written by Saint Ignatius of Loyola the founder of the Jesuits, that are deemed as a primer for learning occult visualization and are hailed by many shamans (including the Pachamama ones...), as the most potent method for contacting spirit entities.

It equates to talking to the dead, something condemned in the Old and New Testament and some of the techniques taught by Ignatian counter spirituality is about projection, this is visual idolatry (Exodus 20:4-5), and a divination technique that opens the door to demonic spirits and extradimensional vampires. The enraged individual who was possibly possessed, also mentions during the interview to Le Iene the Militia of the Immaculata (MI) a worldwide evangelization movement founded by St. Maximilian Kolbe in 1917 that encourages total consecration to the Blessed Virgin Mary as a means of spiritual renewal for individuals and society. The organization was formed originally in Rome in response to protests against the Pope by Freemasons. The MI movement that is open to all Catholics over 7 years old seems to have a dark agenda, possibly involving the cover-up of pedophilia cases in the Catholic Church, even if they operate as a traditionalist movement trying to fight the forces of evil within the Catholic Church.

Of course, things are different in the Qur'an, a book that permits pedophilia, allowing sex with pre-pubescent girls who have not yet menstruated, but also with little boys in some of the sickest interpretations. After all, Muhammad was engaged to Aisha when she was only 6 years old and he was 51 and consummated the marriage while she was still prepubescent, aged 9 lunar years old. In the 100% Islamic country of Afghanistan, pedophilia of boys and girls is unfortunately very common. Rampant sexual abuse of children has long been a problem in Afghanistan, particularly among armed commanders who dominate much of the rural landscape and can bully the population into doing anything. The practice is called bacha bazi, “boy play,” and American soldiers and Marines have been instructed in the past not to intervene — in some cases, not even when their Afghan allies have abused boys on military bases, according to interviews and court records.

Pedophilia is considered taboo and is illegal in most societies, cultures, and religions today except in the Islamic world and that's one of the main reasons why Pope Francis and the Catholic Church always sides with Islam these days. When Bergoglio invited 1,500 mostly poor people to lunch to celebrate World Day for the Poor in November 2019, he specifically requested that all pork be removed from the menu so as not to offend his Muslim guests.

The event took place in the Paul VI Hall, right in the heart of the Vatican, and the meal that intentionally eschewed pork out of respect for any Muslims present, and included instead, chunks of chicken with mushroom cream along with potatoes. I don't doubt it might have been very nice but the gesture echoed a similar move in October of 2019 by the archbishop of Bologna, Matteo Maria Zuppi, who commissioned a pork-free version of Bologna's iconic tortellini pasta originally made with prosciutto for the feast of the city's patron, San Petronio, so that Muslims would feel welcome into the tortellini world. The problem is that the Jesuits and Pope Francis are planning a complete Islamic take-over of the Catholic Faith that will help the normalization of pedophilia practiced by a large part of the Catholic clergy of today, together with the worldwide elite from various faiths ready to merge into one Satanic religion. Many of the world's leading authorities on spirituality and religion confirm these facts.

Recently, Archbishop Carlo Maria Viganò, who is now living in hiding fearing for his life, denounced Pope Francis' "destructive" impact on the Faith, warning he is subjecting the Church to "powerful forces" working to set up a world government and One World Religion. Archbishop Carlo Maria Viganò's latest essay concern the Abrahamic Family House project, a structure that will host a synagogue, a mosque, and a church in Abu Dhabi. The former papal nuncio warns us against the dangers of syncretism and highlights the contradiction between this ecumenical project and traditional teaching of the Church, something I have been saying and writing for a long time.

On the 15th of November 2019, Pope Francis warmly embraced for the sixth time Sheikh Ahmed el-Tayeb, Grand Imam of Al-Azhar, who has expressed his desire that Muslims who convert to Christianity should be executed. This is the world's best-known Muslim leader that has, unfortunately, called homosexuality a disease, dismissed the idea of human rights as "ticking time-bombs," and has even endorsed suicide attacks against Jewish men, women, and children. Incredibly enough, earlier that day the Pontiff addressed the International Association of Penal Law, comparing the rhetoric of conservative politicians who oppose the homosexual agenda, to speeches made by Adolf Hitler. Truly diabolical that the same Pope hangs out with somebody who reminds us of the Nazi roots of modern radical Islam. For four centuries under Ottoman rule, Arab and Jewish neighborhoods peacefully coexisted with no problems. After the defeat of the Ottoman Empire in World War I, the region came under the British mandate. The early days under the British also saw relatively peaceful coexistence continuing and manifesting itself in the form of Arab and Jewish neighborhoods springing up in the “garden neighborhoods” of Talpiot, Rehavia, and Beit Hakerem but soon after something happened, something that will change the region forever.

After over 700 years of peaceful coexistence, the true start of the Arab-Israeli conflict can be dated to 1920 with the rise of one man, Haj Amin Muhammad Al Hussein, the Grand Mufti of Jerusalem. As Grand Mufti, Al Hussein, presided at the time, Imam of the Al Aqsa mosque in Jerusalem, making him the highest Muslim authority in the British mandate, but history shows that Al Hussein was a brutal man with aspirations to rule a pan-Arabic Nazi-inspired empire in the Middle East. He rose to prominence by actively eliminating those Jews and Arabs he considered a threat to his control of Jerusalem's Arab population, and then he heavily utilized anti-Jewish propaganda to polarize the two communities against each other and nothing was the same since. In 1920 and again in 1929, Al Hussein incited anti-Jewish riots by claiming the Jews were plotting to destroy the Al Aqsa mosque. The riots resulted in the massacre of hundreds of Jewish civilians and a virtual end to the Jewish presence in Hebron.

The 1936 Arab revolt against the British is believed to have been at least partially funded by Nazi Adolf Eichmann, and Al Hussein again ordered armed Arab militias to massacre Jewish citizens. When British authorities finally got the rebellion under control in 1939, Al Hussein fled to neighboring Iraq and helped to orchestrate a 1941 anti-British jihad. As in Jerusalem, the British successfully put down the rebellion and Al Hussein fled to Nazi Germany. Al Hussein found the Nazis to be a strong ideological match with his anti-Jewish brand of Islam and schemed with Hitler and the Nazi hierarchy to create a pro-Nazi pan-Arabic form of government in the Middle East. Today, Al-Tayeb seems to be a worthy disciple of the evil Al Hussein and an ideal ally for the Jesuits. In 2016, Al-Tayeb called for “unrepentant apostates” from Islam to be killed. These are his own words about it in an interview that was seen on Arabic television:

“The four schools of law all concur that apostasy is a crime, that an apostate should be asked to repent, and that if he does not, he should be killed.”

Pretty clear don't you think? They want us all dead if we don't join their camel jockey loving religion. The Sheikh went on saying: There are two verses in the Quran that mention apostasy, but they did not define a specific punishment. They left the punishment for the Hereafter, for Allah to punish them as He sees fit. But there are two hadiths [on apostasy]. According to the more reliable of the two, a Muslim can only be killed in one of three cases, one of which is abandoning his religion and leaving the community. Sheikh Al-Tayeb continued saying: We must examine these two expressions: “Abandoning religion” is described as “leaving the community.” All the early jurists understood that this applies to someone who leaves his religion, regardless of whether he left and opposed his community or not. All the early jurists said that such a person should be killed, regardless of whether it is a man or a woman — except for the Hanafi School, which says that a female apostate should not be killed. Asked about the exception for the female apostate, the Muslim theologian responded: Because it is inconceivable that a woman would rebel against her community. The global leader of Sunni Islam, which constitutes the majority of the world's Muslim population, also claimed the moral superiority of Islam: Our civilization is based on religion and moral values, whereas their [Western] civilization is based more on personal liberties and some moral values. There is a disgusting camel jockey trade in the Islamic world, that uses boys as young as four trafficked from countries such as Bangladesh, Pakistan, and Sudan, who often face a life of physical and sexual abuse as camel jockeys in rich countries like Saudi Arabia, Bahrain, United Arab Emirates, and Qatar. Camel racing has been around for thousands of years. “The Sport of Sheiks” as they call it, that almost exclusively utilizes small children, usually boys around the age of four, to ride and direct the camels.

However, allegations of human rights abuses have led in recent years to nationwide bans on underage labor in the UAE and Qatar, which are slowly phasing out the use of human jockeys, replacing them with robot jockeys. It seems the latest fixation of the Arab world with robotics might save a few children from evil. Many of the boys used for the races were often sold to race organizers or camel owners, and there was an active child slave trade for camel jockeys, involving victims of kidnapping or the children of destitute families who sold them into servitude.

Ladies and Gentlemen Chrislam is around the corner and the predictions I made since my initial exposure work in 2006 are now fully confirmed by the daily events taking place in the Vatican and around the world. I am not happy about it, mainly because this is only the start of this infernal process leading to the inevitable One World Religion of the Antichrist. Many times I wish I was wrong about the things I warned about for years, because the majority of sheeple refuse to listen anyway, just like Plato predicted in the allegory of the cave. Only a few weeks after the visit to the Vatican of Sheikh Ahmed el-Tayeb, Pope Francis topped off his three-day visit to Thailand with a meeting with Thailand's supreme Buddhist patriarch Somdej Phra Maha Muneewong at Bangkok's Ratchabophit Temple.

The meeting took place in front of a 150-year-old gold statue of Buddha, that brings us back to the old connection between the Jesuit missionaries and certain branches of the Buddhist Faith. The Pope followed Buddhist customs by removing his shoes during the meeting, and then gave the Buddhist Patriarch the “Document on Human Brotherhood for World Peace and Common Cohabitation.” This is a joint statement signed originally by Pope Francis and his friend Sheikh Ahmed el-Tayeb last August in the wake of the historic Emirate Declaration, signed by the pontiff and by the Imam during the so-called “Year of Brotherhood.” While he was in Thailand, Pope Francis, who was giving a speech to his Jesuit brothers didn't spare a veiled condemnation of the U.S. president and his administration, suggesting that like a modern-day Herod, President Trump separates families at the border while allowing drugs to freely flow into the country. Of course, this is a lie, but lies are used all the time by the followers of St. Ignatius desperate to achieve world domination.

The Answer to 1776 is 1984

When the Church in crisis employed Satan and his Jesuit army

The power and enormous influence of the Jesuits have become increasingly evident, especially after the arrival of Pope Francis in 2013. But how did it all start? Following the powerful preaching of the Gospel by Martin Luther(1483-1546), Huldrych Zwingli and other men of God led the early part of the Reformation. In the period from 1517 to 1530, the Church of Rome saw millions of its subjects depart from the corrupt Catholic Church that was in no better condition than it is today. The people finally renounced the monopoly of the Pope and the Church of Rome wanting to discover the truth about their religion. The Bible was finally translated into many European languages but its teachings were not reflected by the Catholic hierarchy of the time. To save the Catholic Church, they needed a powerful ally, so the Pope and his cardinals decided to invoke Satan and his infamous Legion for help. Satan liked the idea of taking over the Mother Church of Christianity, and the answer was to raise one of the most infamous organizations in the history of mankind, with the blasphemous name, “The Society of Jesus,” soon to be known as the infamous Jesuits.

They quickly became a powerful tool in the Vatican’s fight against the Reformation. Countless books have been written about the Jesuits over the centuries because of their power to shape and destroy nations, but they have moved on without hesitating for a moment. Protestants have been warned again and again about the Jesuit infiltration and their corrupting influence, but nothing has stopped them from taking over every single Christian denomination. Truly, it’s a false Christ and a false gospel that they represent, but they don’t care because their lord is not Jesus, but rather, Satan. The Jesuits are the main force behind the Vatican today and the ones preparing in great detail for the arrival of the kingdom of the Antichrist. The founder of the Jesuits was born Don Inigo Lopez in 1491, in the castle of Loyola in the Basque region of Spain. He later changed his name to Ignatius of Loyola. Having been a soldier, he installed military principles and discipline that became the norm for this new Order.

The leader was to be the general who demanded total and unquestioning obedience from his inferiors, but the Order was, and is to this day, at the complete disposal of the Pope. The Jesuits are an army of the most zealous and dedicated spiritual warriors for the Vatican, but they work for the dark side. Initially, they specialized in warfare by stealth and deception to undermine the enemy = true Christians and Protestants, but soon afterward they went in search of powerful spiritual allies in the East reaching Tibet. Father António de Andrade (1580-1634) and his successors, were among the first Westerners to ever cross the Himalayas to explore Tibet in an attempt to establish the first Catholic mission on Tibetan soil. Philip Caraman, S.J. described the Society’s several attempts in the 17th and 18th centuries to establish a mission in Tibet. The Catholic Review from April 2, 2012 talks about it in an article by Drew Christiansen where we find that the most remarkable Jesuit to visit Tibet in those days was:

Ippolito Desideri, the last of the Jesuit explorer-missionaries to establish himself there. He settled into a Buddhist monastery, learned Tibetan and studied the sacred Buddhist texts. When Capuchin friars arrived to demand he turn over the mission to them, he was carrying on what today we would call interreligious dialogue with his hosts.

Fr. Ippolito Desideri or Hippolyte Desideri (1684 –1733) was an Italian Jesuit missionary and traveler and the most famous of the early European missionaries to visit Tibet. He was the first European to have successfully studied and understood the Tibetan language and culture. Between 1624 and 1721, on five different occasions, Jesuit explorers made their way to Tibet to strike a deal with the local Illuminati and learn their secrets. The Jesuits were particularly eager to learn the secrets of the Nyingma tradition, the oldest of the four major schools of Tibetan Buddhism, and the secrets of Bon, which self-identifies as distinct from Tibetan Buddhism, although it shares the same overall teachings and terminology. A left-facing swastika is a sacred symbol of the Bon religion said to have been established by a guru called Tonpa Shenrab while searching for a horse stolen by a demon. Both Nyingmapas and Bonpos constantly recite magical mantras and the Jesuits loved it because they are drawn to beings and anti-beings termed “demons.” What does this term signify for the Jesuits? In many instances, they envision their demons as their bad habits or a human that drifts towards temptations. The demons named gyalgong and are a kind of demon in the Bon tradition.

Tibet demons have many demons, of which the nagas, known as snake-spirits, are the most important ones to work with for the local Illuminati known as the Vama-Marga-Sadhaka. We find the lu-demons, female serpentine beings of unstable neptunian quality that might or might not bestow blessings and great progress on the Sadhaka, but most important are the Sinpos. It is said that the Sinpos always hear, so to call them should be simple for a skilled Jesuit, but when you work with the demonic, at some point in the ceremonies the demons are bound to take you over and the Jesuits are prepared for that. People who say that you could just go on working with demons because it is not dangerous are, of course, very wrong. It's more dangerous than anyone outside the magical communities could imagine, and that's why the Jesuits are not only skilled magicians, but skilled exorcists.

However, unfriendliness, arrogance, and heavy misanthropy are some of the consequences that demons infused into the Jesuit tradition since its foundation. This is because Loyola was deeply influenced by shamanism and occult practices that could empower is order. So the future St. Ignatius sent his first disciples to Asia to learn the secrets of Eastern meditation and magical mantras, but also the secret of the reincarnation system (tulku), a distinguishing characteristic of Tibetan Buddhism based on the theory that the soul of a powerful initiate or lama never vanishes, but reincarnates in succession to lead his follower's and to accomplish his mission. This was particularly important for Loyola who wanted to become an immortal guide emulating the Tibetan lamas. The first person to investigate this matter for Loyola, even before Fr. Ippolito Desideri, was Francis Xavier, S.J. (1506-1552), a close friend of Ignatius of Loyola and one of the first seven Jesuits who took vows of poverty and chastity at Montmartre, Paris, in 1534. Xavier, who will later become Saint Francis Xavier, led an extensive mission into Asia, mainly in the Portuguese Empire and was influential in evangelization work, most notably in India. The Goa Inquisition was proposed by St. Francis Xavier.

Loyola, aside from being fascinated with the Orient, also studied the exploits of various "Saints" and wanted to emulate them to some extent, soon becoming fanatics who used extreme penances and torture to their body in an attempt to gain acceptance by God. No, it is not the Opus Dei that started this sick trend I'm afraid, as it has been around for a long time in the Catholic Church. At one time, he was in a cave in Manressa where he received visions and revelations just like Mohammad. Muhammad's revelation was an event described in Islam as taking place in 610 AD, during which the Islamic prophet was allegedly visited by the archangel Gabriel, who revealed to him the beginnings of what would later become the Quran. But was it Gabriel or a demon, as in the case of "Saint" Ignatius?!!

Loyola, after all, was constantly running into trouble with the Spanish Inquisition for his strange teachings and magical practices that were regarded as demonic. However, Loyola received formal education and religious training that eventually led him to Paris where he gathered a small group of highly intelligent men around him, which will become the basis for the Company of Jesus. Together they built a powerful egregore and a reputation for preaching the doctrines of Rome and worked in hospitals. They did not preach from the Bible - but rather the worst doctrines of the Church of Rome mixed with a mystical form of Christianity already present in Spain during the 15th-16th centuries courtesy of the Illuminati in Alumbrados, a group of Gnostic origin.

Some Alumbrados were only mildly heterodox, but others held views that were heretical, according to the contemporary rulers because they were in league with the devil, even if they hold a strong belief that the human soul could reach such a degree of perfection that it could contemplate the essence of God. Consequently, they were firmly repressed for their unorthodox views and became some of the early victims of the Spanish Inquisition. But Loyola, who was an Alumbrados, knew he could make it big if he offered his services and his black magic practices to the Church of Rome in desperate need of a savior.

In response to Protestantism and the problems caused by the expansion of Jewish mysticism in certain elite circles, the Catholic renewal or Counter-Reformation truly kickstarted when St. Ignatius and his Jesuits finally arrived in Rome. They were received quite favorably by Pope Paul III, who quickly welcomed the offer of "assistance" because the standard monastic orders that operated in those days had proven quite incapable of standing up to the preaching of the Reformers. The Vatican wanted to change the course of the events at all costs by employing the Jesuits as a new military religious order that could emulate the discipline and dedication of the Knights Templar.

In this new religious scenario, Pope Paul III was ready to ask even the help of Satan to save the Church, and the black magic used by the Order of the Jesuits to invoke him was a tool he desperately needed. A constitution for the new society was quickly drafted and agreed upon by the Pope, who in September 1540 officially established, “The Society of Jesus,” with Loyola as its first General. These new soldiers of the Papacy quickly demonstrated both their intellectual capabilities and unswerving zeal for the Vatican that was never the same again. They spread rapidly through Europe and it was not long before the gains of the early part of the Reformation were reversed through murderous campaigns of persecution instigated by the Jesuits. In 1548, Ignatius himself was briefly brought before the Roman Inquisition for an examination of his book of “Spiritual Exercises” but he was released and the book was finally given papal permission to be printed. It was then published and the exercises were designed to be carried out over 28–30 days.

We can also see the fascination of Ignatius Loyola with caves reflected in the alchemical motto inspired by the Latin word vitriol, and interpreted as an acronym for “Visita Interiora Terrae Rectificando Invenies Occultum Lapidem,” meaning “Visit the interior of the earth and rectifying (purifying) you will find the hidden stone.” Interestingly enough, this motto originated during the same period of the establishment of the Company of Jesus, and appears for first time in writing in L’Azoth des Philosophes, by the mysterious 15th Century alchemist Basilus Valentinus, a pseudonym used by one of several German authors who might have been in contact with the Jesuits, or were working with them in one of their alchemical laboratories, or secret “Congregations.” Remember, that Loyola received his supposed revelations from extradimensional entities in a cave and the Jesuits were originally instituted with a Mass celebrated underground. There seems to be an obsession here for caves from the start and there is also another interesting aspect.

In certain branches of Freemasonry, traditionally close to the Jesuits, like the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite, the French Rite, and related jurisdictions, including Co-Masonry, the V.I.T.R.I.O.L. motto is still to this day a common component of the symbolic “Chamber of Reflection,” where a Mason contemplates and reflects on the nature of death. The motto refers to a process of internal, spiritual purification that is inspired by Ignatian Spirituality. Little is known about the precise origins of the “Chamber of Reflection” but there is some consensus that it first appeared in France around 1750, and while some think that the Hermetic nature of its symbolism indicates the direct or indirect influence of the Rosicrucians, it is a well-known fact that in that same period the Jesuits were using Rosicrucian elements to infiltrate and manipulate Freemasonry; but let’s go back to the cave subject.

Caves in ancient Greece were places used to search for the ultimate wisdom. The Greeks perceived mental experiences of exceptional intensity resulting from divine intervention in such caves. It seems like Loyola and his Jesuits followed the example of the ancient mystery schools which frequently celebrated underground in honor of the Beast “from out of the earth.” So the interest of the Inquisition in Loyola's activities resulted in the end in the ultimate compromise with the devil for the Catholic Church in survival mode for the advent of the Reformation. Loyola was also more than just a zealous fanatic of the Church of Rome, he was their “Alumbrados” meaning their Illuminati of the time. The Vatican had indeed a big problem after they eliminated the Knights Templar as a legitimate Order of the Church and the Jesuits knew it.

Their activities to acquire wealth, their secrecy, their Gnostic kabbalism and their oath of absolute papal obedience, were things that Ignatius of Loyola wanted to imitate with the Jesuits. The form of teaching that Loyola claimed was revealed to him was the Spiritual Exercises practiced to this day not only by the Jesuits but also by their most loyal agents in the laicity. They are intended to bring one to perfection by using systematic meditation, prayer, contemplation, visualization, and illumination. Loyola would regularly go into a trance and ecstasy thanks to these exercises. He was even seen to levitate off the floor like his lama counterparts in Tibet, as have many other Jesuits using black magic and other diableries. It is known that Tibetan masters can allegedly levitate and fly, and Marco Polo, the first Westerner to formally record an encounter with the Tibetan lamas reported witnessing the phenomenon 200 years before Loyola, who was probably influenced by Polo's experience.

This esoteric knowledge and experience were to build an elite Order of warrior priests that was to follow Loyola in blind obedience armed with new spiritual weapons. Loyola built his concepts from Ancient Greece, the occult, sacred wisdom, and science from the East. He wanted his priests to become right from the start of the intelligentsia of the Roman Catholic religious orders, but he also wanted to serve his real Master Satan, in infiltrating the takeover of Christianity and one day all the religions on the planet.

So we can state with certainty that the modern “New Age” phenomenon was born within the Theosophical Society founded by Madame Blavatsky, we can also affirm with the same certainty that it originated with the Jesuits and Loyola who prepared in the process a lethal trap for the future theosophist. The basic teaching and initiation for a man who wishes to join the Jesuits or their agents in the laicity are still to this day is to practice Loyola's "Spiritual Exercises" comprised of a body of rules for teaching men how to conduct the work of their ultimate "conversion." It consists of four grand meditations and to retire into solitude to absorb each of the four stages in succession. It could be styled as a journey from the gates of destruction and hell to the gates of Paradise, mapped out in stages so that it might be completed in a short period of four weeks, so one week for each meditation.

Here is the MEDITATION ON HELL:

It contains in it, after the Preparatory Prayer and two Preludes, five Points and one Colloquy:

Prayer. Let the Preparatory Prayer be the usual one.

First Prelude. The first Prelude is the composition, which is here to see with the sight of the imagination the length, breadth, and depth of Hell.

Second Prelude. The second, to ask for what I want: it will be here to ask for interior sense of the pain which the damned suffer, so that, if, through my faults, I should forget the love of the Eternal Lord, at least the fear of the pains may help me not to come into sin.

First Point. The first Point will be to see with the sight of the imagination the great fires, and the souls as in bodies of fire.

Second Point. The second, to hear with the ears wailings, howlings, cries, blasphemies against Christ our Lord and all His Saints.

Third Point. The third, to smell with the smell of smoke, sulfur, dregs, and putrid things.

Fourth Point. The fourth, to taste with the taste bitter of things, like tears, sadness and the worm of conscience.

Fifth Point. The fifth, to touch with the touch; that is to say, how the fires touch and burn the souls.

Colloquy. Making a Colloquy to Christ our Lord, I will bring to memory the souls that are in Hell, some because they did not believe the Coming, others because, believing, they did not act according to His Commandments; making three divisions:

First, Second, and Third Divisions. The first, before the Coming; the second, during His life; the third, after His life in this world; and with this I will give Him thanks that He has not let me fall into any of these divisions, ending my life.

Likewise, I will consider how up to now He has always had so great pity and mercy on me.

I will end with an OUR FATHER. (End of the Meditation)

Loyola, like the magicians of old in the Illuminati, since the time of Atlantis, and, later, Alexandria of Egypt, devised his meditations and enhancements to produce the same miracle of spiritual enlightenment that has always been in the mind of initiates from the ancient mystery schools. If you think about it, a common thread among some of the greatest minds in history including Aristotle, Copernicus, Kepler, Issac Newton, Napoleon, and Da Vinci is that they all studied from these teachings at one point or the another. It is even a thought in the Illuminati and secret among the Jesuits, that Jesus was a student of the Ancient Egypt Mystery Schools, as it wasn't until he came back from Kmt (Egypt), that he could perform miracles. A superior guide, the Jesuit candidate who goes through the "Exercises" like a shaman, guides his disciples or patients. A shaman guide enters with the other person in a non-ordinary reality via altered states of consciousness, brought on by trance states achieved usually through drumming, rattles, sweats, (sweat lodge ceremonies that are still very popular these days) ecstatic ritual dance, chanting a certain mantras, or in some traditions by drinking entheogenic brews, eating entheogenic fungi (mushrooms) like in the traditional Sámi spiritual practices, or using cacti or entheogenic snuffs, and even the venom of certain amphibians and reptiles has been used as an entheogenic ally.

My own experience was in the woods of Norway with the deities and animal spirits of the Sámi people after eating psychoactive mushrooms. The earliest depiction of mushroom consumption might be a cave painting found in the upper Tassili plateau of northern Algeria that dates back to at least 5,000 B.C., if not older.

All senses are employed in this kind of meditation, to obtain a vision that will guide you through the rest of your life, but in Ignatian Spirituality the mind of the candidate is broken, like that of a horse, to obey his master. An observer of the Jesuits wrote: Not only visions were pre-arranged, but also sights, inhalings; breathing was noted down; the pauses and intervals of silence were written down like a music sheet... which meant that the man, being inspired or not, became a machine who had to sigh, sob, groan, cry, shout or catch his breath at the exact moment and in the order which experience showed to be the most profitable. Using this method, Loyola only needed 30 days to break someone's will and reasoning.

The Jesuits and their Illuminati agents, once molded by the “Spiritual Exercises” and further training, are to obey their superiors 100%. In their Constitution it says that the Jesuit candidate “must give instant compliance;” and “sacrifice their will as a sheep is sacrificed” they are, therefore “directed under Divine Providence by their superiors just as if they were a corpse, which allows itself to be moved and handled in any way.”

The Constitution justifies this absolute obedience because they claim that the General of the Jesuits is acting in the place of God and Jesus Christ. Imagine that in more than 500 places in the Constitution it is taught that the Jesuits are to see Jesus Christ in the General, aka “The Black Pope.” To be in the place of God follows the claim by the Pope, to whom the Constitution gives ultimate obedience. However, the Jesuits are a law unto themselves. While outwardly acknowledging the authority of the Pope of Rome, their real allegiance is always to the Jesuit General. All orders come from the General; even the pope’s instructions are only passed on if the General sees fit. It is not surprising that the Jesuit General came to be known as the “Black Pope,” on account of the black clothes worn by the Jesuits and the General's enormous power. Lead by curiosity, I stood a few times in front of the entrance of the office of the Superior General of the Society of Jesus in Borgo Santo Spirito in Rome to see what kind of people visit him, and I notice that every day in the early hours of the afternoon the General receives many Jesuit priests arriving with secret agent style briefcases often wearing dark sunglasses. The claim of a divine authority of a superior over an inferior has been carried through to the wider priesthood of the Church of Rome for a long time, but in the case of the Jesuits, it seems like they are truly a military religious order specializing in Intelligence and counterintelligence activities. The Constitution of the Jesuits states:

No constitution, declaration or any order of living, can involve an obligation to commit sin, mortal or venial, unless the superior command it in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, or by holy obedience; which shall be done in those cases or persons wherein it shall be judged to conduce the particular good of each, or to the general advantage; and instead of the fear of offense, let the love and desire of all perfection succeed, that greater glory of Christ, our Creator, and Lord, may follow.

This means the superior can command a Jesuit to sin for the “greater glory of God” and “in the name of Jesus Christ.” This masterpiece of evil devised by the devil has brought countless atrocities over the centuries. In the Jesuit system, the standard of morality is centered in the Jesuit superior, not Jesus Christ, through the chain of command to the General and ultimately the Pope, since the superior is representing God. Consequently, this undermines personal responsibility in the sight of God. For this reason, a professor once told a student who was studying under him to become a Catholic priest:

You will never have to give an account to God for actions you do by the order of your legitimate superiors. If they were to deceive you, being themselves deceived; they alone would be responsible for the error you have committed. Your sin would be imputed to you as long as you follow the golden rule that is a base for all Christian philosophy and perfection: humility and obedience.

Therefore, the Jesuit (or indeed in more recent centuries, any member of the Church of Rome or anybody wishing to serve them including their many Illuminati agents and knighthood members) can claim as a defense before God and man that he was only carrying out orders, no matter what the Word of God or his conscience might say.

It is no coincidence that during the Nuremberg trials the Nazis involved with the terrible crime of the Holocaust said in their defense, that they were simply following orders! Because the SS and the Gestapo were modeled on and connected to the Jesuits just like the Stasi in Eastern Germany. As Walter Schellenberg recalls in his Memoirs: The SS organization had been built up by Himmler on the principles of the Order of the Jesuits. The service statutes and spiritual exercises presented by Ignatius Loyola formed a pattern that Himmler assiduously tried to copy. [\[58\]](#)

Heinz Hohne has also noted the resemblance:

The similarity between the two was astounding; each was an Order conferring enormous privileges on its members, subject to no temporal jurisdiction, protected by the strictest conditions of entry and held together by an oath of absolute blind obedience to its lord and master – Pope or Führer.

The history of the two organizations showed equally remarkable parallels: in the seventeenth century the Jesuits founded their state among the Paraguay Indians - it recognized no temporal sovereignty; during the Second World War, the SS dreamed of an SS State outside the borders of the Greater German Reich ...Even the crises which each faced were similar. There were always enemies of the Jesuits within the Catholic Church and enemies of the SS within the Party. [\[59\]](#)

The next great principle in the Jesuit system is that “the end justifies the means.” Before this maxim, the eternal distinction between right and wrong vanishes. There is no conceivable crime or atrocity that this infamous saying will not justify. They think that they can become even more holy if such terrible actions are done for the “greater glory of God,” in Latin Ad majorem Dei gloriam, the motto of the Society of Jesus. For the Jesuit or his agents, following this motto blindly means the honor, interest, and advancement of their Order and the Church of Rome.

In the United States or Europe, this is the ideology that secretly drives the leftists and their brainless libtards. Another twisted doctrine of the Jesuits is “probabilism.” For example, suppose a man has a great mind to do a certain act, of the lawfulness of which is doubt. He finds that there are two opinions about the point: the one probably true, that the act is lawful; the other more probably true, that the act is sinful. In the Jesuit system, they are allowed to act upon the probable opinion. Of course, to make an opinion probable, the Jesuit work their magic. If a man can imagine in his mind something like a reason for doing the act, the opinion that it is lawful becomes immediately probable. Following on the doctrine of “probabilism” is that of “directing the intention.” This means that if a soul can abstract itself from whatever act the body is committing even if is a terrible crime against God and creation, if he is doing this activity at the same time of meditating on some holy theme, or some advantage that the act will have for the Church, then the soul contracts no guilt or stain. This is where the hypocrisy of the Illuminati elite and their Jesuits supervisors generates from. I know today it is a bit like watching the actions of your typical Democrat leader, but that’s because they are all Jesuit agents. Therefore, the Jesuits can kill somebody or tell a lie with impunity, provided he does so with a holy intention.

On the contrary, the Bible teaches that sin is a transgression of the law of God and there is no excuse, but the Jesuits think these rules don’t apply to them. Finally, in the Jesuit world, we have the doctrine of “equivocation” (lies and sophism) or “mental reservation.” This allows for the Jesuit to follow a secret policy, while openly stating something quite different before the world. This is what happens almost daily with Pope Francis, the first Jesuit Pope, and is the same system used in most of the mystery schools, in which the secret doctrines and purposes of the initiated are hidden by double meanings and secret symbols that seem quite innocent to the unlearned deemed as profane. A Jesuit once said: it is permitted to use ambiguous terms, leading people to understand them in a different sense from that in which we understand them... A man may swear that he never did something (although he did), meaning within himself that he did not do so on such a day, or before he was born, or under any such circumstances, while the words he employs have no such sense as would discover his meaning.

Maybe Prince Andrew thought he could use this teaching from the Society of Jesus when he went on TV to make a fool of himself in his now almost legendary BBC interview, but the problem was his intention was not in line with his mother’s and the Church of England. The Jesuit or his agent can permit perjury and yet be supposedly blameless because for him: It is the intention that determines the quality of the action; and one may avoid falsehood if, after saying or denying something aloud, then add something under his breath that, if true, would make his statement the truth.

Thus the Jesuit argues that as long as God knows the “truth,” he may deceive everyone else without sinning. Even the most solemn oath, be it for the Christian ministry, a position in the government, or that of a monarch, can be done falsely - something that has become generally accepted in society thanks to the diabolical influence of the Jesuits. Early in his career, Loyola claimed to have received the gift of healing the troubled consciences of others. In the Church of Rome, such supposed healing of consciences took place by the confession of sins to a priest, who would then give absolution and set certain penances to be performed, and for this reason, the repetition of prayers or physical self-punishment is considered of great importance. Due to its value as a means to control people and gather large amounts of secret information, the confessional became a specialty of the Jesuits. Count Cagliostro, aka Giuseppe Balsamo, was one of the leading figures of Freemasonry and the Illuminati in his day, who always brought along a Jesuit in charge of confessing and gathering information from the cities he was about to visit. The Church of Rome derived the idea of the confessional originally from the pagan religions, even though that rite was devised to supposedly cleanse one from guilt, the purpose was often in obtaining incriminating information with which to blackmail or control possible enemies of the Church. The questions in the confessional include those of an obscene nature. The immoral and questionable priests of Bacchus in ancient times used to take confessions, and just like priests in the Church of Rome, they had to swear to remain celibate. So the confessional is yet again another example of rites derived from the practices of prior mystery schools in the Church of Rome, but with the Jesuits, this practice became the core of the biggest intelligence gathering of all time.

To attract the rich and powerful to their confessionals the Jesuits have always given the lightest penances in the Catholic Church. Through this kind of action, they became very popular as confessors amongst the sinful elite. The Jesuits have manipulated the rich elite to gain money and lands in bequest (gift, donation, endowment, etc.) for a very long time, and they did it so that they could establish funds for their missions. They have done this from the start by implying that the faithful can spend less time in purgatory, or they might even become candidates for sainthood if they give their wealth to the Jesuit Order. Unfortunately, this kind of practice still goes on in the Catholic Church and other denominations, but they were originally inspired by the Jesuits who have been able to also affect the affairs of nations by using blackmail on a level never seen before.

Only the Mossad or the former KGB, have become in more recent times the main competitors of the Jesuits in this kind of intelligence gathering and blackmail, by using agents, like the late Jeffrey Epstein, for example, and his honey traps because "Epstein didn't kill himself" but the intelligence community did. In the KGB, a man who is the seducer in a honey trap operation is known as a "raven" while a female seductress is known as a "swallow," however the confession technique used by the Jesuits is still regarded as superior.

When a monarch or a government official goes to confession, there is no limit to what the Jesuit confessor might ultimately ask him to do once he is ensnared with flattering absolutions, and promises of Heaven, demands can be placed. The secrets of state can be winked out and then passed on to an enemy; policies of state might also be required from the official or monarch that would serve the interests of the Vatican or the Jesuits in the future. Furthermore, subtle pressure can be applied via a president or a ruler's wife who has been ensnared in the confessional. The Mystery of Repentance or Confession is also one of the holy mysteries (or sacraments) in the Orthodox Church, as well as many other Christian traditions, and I can assure you that after the Russian Orthodox Church has restarted their operations after the end of the Soviet Union, they have been using Jesuit techniques that helped them rebuild the finances of their Church.

Rich Russian Mafiosi have queued up in the 90s to donate money to the Church in exchange for absolutions for their terrible sins. However, one of the vilest aspects of the confessional system in the Catholic Church is the nature of some of the questions that may be put to a priest; Jesuit theologians have been foremost in promoting what has become an abomination. The intention of the question is claimed to be to gain the fullest possible confession for sins, extracting even those of a most intimate nature - the most shocking and obscene questions, even to children. Trainees of the priesthood, in general, and not only Jesuits, are taught about the immorality they might hear in the confessional. For young bachelors who had just taken the vow of celibacy, hearing about all these sexual sins puts the greatest of temptations and snares before them. Furthermore, they are taught what awful questions they are to ask penitents, including girls and unmarried women. What can be more disgusting than a young girl or married woman being asked questions a father or husband wouldn't even dare to ask?

There are still today constant examples of both priests and penitents being ensnared in immorality and illicit relationships; something still very real under the surface of the Catholic Church but probably also in other denominations using the confessional improperly. Another interesting development under the influence of the Jesuits has been the covert worship of Isis or Diana, or Minerva, that were simply converted into a much stronger cult of Mary used as a cover-up for the worship of these ancient pagan deities. Portraits of Mary were even copied from those of Isis at times. So that the secret pagan worship of the female Goddess could be increased without becoming heretical in the eyes of the faithful. After the Jesuits Order (Society of Jesus) was established with the approval of Pope Paul III in 1540 by Ignatius Loyola, it was immediately followed by the re-established Inquisition in 1542, an institution that was crucial in halting the preaching of the Gospel in my native country of Italy, a nation that still ignores the real teachings of the Bible to this day. In a seminary now closed down near where I used to live in Roviano, near Rome, the Jesuits teachers used to take out or erase entire pages of the Bible to avoid their seminarians studying it. However, while the Roman Inquisition was originally designed to combat the spread of Protestantism in Italy, a mission they accomplished, the institution outlived their original purpose and the system of tribunals lasted until the mid-18th century, when the pre-unification of Italian states began to suppress the local inquisitions, effectively eliminating the power of the church to prosecute heretical crimes.

The last victim of the Inquisition was Count Alessandro di Cagliostro alias Giuseppe Balsamo, a member of my family. On the 27th of December 1789, Cagliostro was arrested and imprisoned in Castel Sant'Angelo. He was tried and originally sentenced to death, but the sentence was later commuted to life imprisonment at the Forte di San Leo, where he would die on August 26, 1795. He had been a rather loyal Jesuit agent for most of his adult life, but in the end, when he wanted to side with the competing faction of the time, the Knights of Malta, he was betrayed and imprisoned. At the time, the Jesuits had been kicked out of the Catholic Church as the result of their evil political plots and manipulations. During this brief suppression period that went on from 1773 to 1815 the execution of it was largely left to local bishops, so there was room for a good deal of variety in the treatment the Jesuits might receive in different places during their diaspora.

In Austria and Germany they were generally allowed to teach, but with secular clergy as superiors that could constantly monitor them; often they became preachers, like Beauregard, Muzzarelli, and Alexander Lanfant (1726-1793) and writers, like Francios-X. de Feller, Zaccharia, Ximenes. The first to receive open official approbation of their new works were probably the English Jesuits, who in 1778 obtained a brief approving their well-known Academy of Liège (now at Stonyhurst). But in Russia, and until 1780 in Prussia, Empress Catherine and King Frederick II desired to maintain the Society as a teaching body. They forbade the bishops to promulgate the brief until their places were obtained. Bishop Massalski in White Russia on September 19, 1773, ordered Jesuit superiors to continue to exercise jurisdiction until further notice. Incredibly enough, on the second day of February of 1780, with the approbation of Bishop Siestrzencewicz's Apostolic visitor, a new novitiate was opened, meaning they could bring in recruits to the Jesuits to avoid extinction. To obtain higher sanction for what had been done, the envoy Benislaski was sent by Catherine to Rome.

But it must be remembered that the animus of the Bourbon courts against the Society was still unchecked; and in some countries, as in Austria under Joseph II, the situation was worse than before. Many in the Roman Curia who had worked their way up by their activity against the Order or held pensions created out of former Jesuit property. Pius VI declined to meet Catherine's requests. All he could do was express an indefinite assent by word of mouth, without issuing any written documents, or observing the usual formalities; and he ordered that strict secrecy should be observed about the whole mission. Benislaski received these messages on March 12, 1783, and later gave the Russian Jesuits an attestation of them (July 24, 1785).

Rome was still very scared of the Jesuits and their powerful allies, but not enough to accept influence from a foreign monarch. This created a deep historical link between the Jesuits and Russia that goes on to this day. We know that from its founding of the Society of Jesus that has been one of the most important religious orders in the Catholic Church. Many may not know that it almost vanished from the history books when Pope Clement XIV suppressed the Jesuits worldwide on July 21, 1773, with the brief bull Dominus ac Redemptor. At that point, Catherine the Great of Russia (1729-1796) saved the Society almost single-handedly and the boys of St. Ignatius. She protected the 201 Jesuits she had acquired in 1772 with the First Partition of Poland and insisted that they continue their apostolic work as the Company of Jesus, so it was not only about keeping them as a teaching body. For decades her successors continued to support the Jesuits. ^[60]

The Russian branch of the society was the only surviving Jesuit entity in the world after 1780, except a few Jesuits left in England and in Quebec, where Governor James Murray and Bishop Jean-Olivier Briand refused to implement the suppression. For this reason, the Russian Society served as a beacon of hope for former Jesuits everywhere.

Russia made partial restorations of the Jesuit order outside of the empire before 1814 when they were restored to their former glory in the arms of the Catholic Church that effectively took place in 1815. Pope Pius VII resolved to restore the Society during his captivity in France; and after his return to Rome, he did so with little delay; on August 7, 1814, by the Bull Sollicitudo omnium ecclesiarum. The serving Superior General, Thaddeus Brzozowski, was nominated in Russia in 1805 and acquired universal jurisdiction over the whole order but upon the death of the latter, on February 5, 1820, the Russians, who had already banished the Jesuits from St. Petersburg in 1815, expelled them from the whole country. It seems a remarkable coincidence that Russia under the rule of the Swedish Rite of Freemasonry linked to the Jesuits, would protect the Company of Jesus just at the convenient time when the Vatican, and all other nations, turned against them and reverted to its normal hostility when the Jesuits got back under the wings of protection of the Roman Catholic Church.

There is a rather special relationship between the Jesuits and the Illuminati of the northern hemisphere that includes mainly Scandinavia and Russia, which has always favored the actions of the Jesuit presence in Russia, even after Communism took over the show and Tsar Nicholas II lost power. Above all, between Russia and the Jesuits, there is an old ultra-secret alliance that makes deals with elemental/ demonic extra-dimensional entities Loyola originally encountered during his cave visions, that crafted the successful future of his Order. A future that developed later in many secret alchemical laboratories when magic and alchemy as composites of the same Hermetic Art were worked. Often molding together elements from the Far East to increase the invincibility of Ignatian Spirituality. The Cave of Saint Ignatius, in Manresa, Spain, a sanctuary where Ignatius of Loyola reflected for 11 months, is now a place of pilgrimage and worship visited daily by Jesuits and students from many Loyola Universities interested in the places that were of great importance in the life of their hero. I know that for some of these people living in a Jesuit bubble, my assertions about a deal with Satan's Legion made by Loyola and his team to help the Vatican maintain its dominant spiritual position in the religious world could seem far-fetched, but there is truth in the interpretation of these events.

Swedenborg, the reincarnation of Loyola, and the Jesuit infiltration of Freemasonry

In a surprise spiritual reversal, the Dalai Lama recently said in 2019 that his Tibetan Buddhist tradition of reincarnated Dalai Lamas “should end now” because he feels “it is linked to a feudal system,” a description echoing decades of Communist China’s condemnation. Back in 2011, the Dalai Lama had warned of Chinese interference in the matter:

There is an obvious risk of vested political interests misusing the reincarnation system to fulfill their political agenda.” Adding: It is particularly inappropriate for Chinese communists, who explicitly reject even the idea of past and future lives, let alone the concept of reincarnate Tulkus, to meddle in the system of reincarnation and especially the reincarnations of the Dalai Lamas and Panchen Lamas. Such brazen meddling contradicts their political ideology and reveals their double standards. Should this situation continue in the future, it will be impossible for Tibetans and those who follow the Tibetan Buddhist tradition to acknowledge or accept it. When I am about ninety I will consult the high Lamas of the Tibetan Buddhist traditions, the Tibetan public, and other concerned people who follow Tibetan Buddhism, and re-evaluate whether the institution of the Dalai Lama should continue or not. On that basis, we will make a decision.

The Dalai Lama seems to have changed his tune and is now stating that the reincarnation system has never existed in India, and there are no recognized reincarnations of great Indian Buddhist masters like Nagarjuna, or the Buddha himself. However, the Dalai Lama was not correct, as reincarnation is, and remains, a central tenet of Indian religions, namely Jainism, Buddhism, Sikhism, and Hinduism. Of course, there are Hindu groups that do not believe in reincarnation but do believe in an afterlife, but reincarnation is also a belief in certain American Indian tribes and an esoteric belief in many streams of Orthodox Judaism. A belief in rebirth/metempsychosis was held by leading Greek philosophers, such as Pythagoras, Socrates, and Plato, and the Rosicrucians have always referred to reincarnation, probably inspired by the early studies conducted in Asia by the Jesuits. But the globalist Dalai Lama wants to abandon the system of recognizing reincarnate lamas — called tulkus — because he says they are connected with a Tibetan feudal society and questioned the very existence of such a tradition in a democratic society. However, many have questioned the real reasons behind the Dalai Lama criticizing the very system that he was born into, and the Jesuits might be involved in this disinfo campaign to eliminate this important tradition feared by Communist China.

Since the 1950s, China has repeatedly said that Tibetan Buddhism and the institutional power of Dalai Lamas and other senior clergy was one of the main reasons Tibetans lived in “feudal” poverty, often treated as serfs by Tibetan officials, nobles, and lamas. China’s State Council Information Office reiterated in March of 2019 that: “For centuries, Tibet was ruled by feudal serfdom under a theocracy.” The Dalai Lama, however, did not express doubt about the concept of reincarnation. Buddhism claims all people are reincarnated even if they are not Buddhists. In this context, we should analyze the words of Zen master D.T. Suzuki (1870-1966) who called Emanuel Swedenborg (1688- 1772) the “Buddha of the North” a leading figure of the Illuminati of his day, who had a central role in the development of the Western Initiatic System in the Northern Hemisphere.

Swedenborg, who was said to be a reincarnation of Ignatius Loyola by Rudolph Steiner, was a Swedish pluralistic-Christian theologian, scientist, philosopher, and mystic, who worked as a spy/secret agent operating mainly for the Jesuits. In recent years, similar questions about the esoteric and exoteric motives of various other philosophical and scientific figures have piqued the interest of historians that had conveniently disregarded such things as nonsense for way too long, afraid of angering the Jesuits. For example, the British philosopher A.C.

Grayling stirred up controversy with his argument that the association of René Descartes (1596-1650) with the Rosicrucians was not motivated by sympathy for the mysterious fraternity. Instead, he suggests, Descartes served his fellow Jesuits to spy on the Rosicrucians, which led him to enroll in a Protestant army and university as a cover for intelligence gathering. [\[61\]](#)

Swedenborg, however, was not only interested in defending the Jesuit cause, but he felt he was part of it, as he was allegedly recognized as being the reincarnation of Ignatius Loyola. So he had a genuine interest for the secret knowledge carried out by the Jesuits, and at the same time, the development of speculative Freemasonry; and for this reason, in 1738, Swedenborg spent five days in the city of Lyon, where the only activity he recorded was his visit to the library of the Jesuits, where Andrew Michael Ramsay commonly called the Chevalier Ramsay tutor to Charles Edward Stuart, “Bonnie Prince Charlie,” an instrumental figure in the creation of the high degrees of Freemasonry based on the Templar origins of the Craft. He studied the rare mystical manuscripts brought from China by the Jesuit missionaries for a few years earlier. Ramsay, a Jesuit agent himself, was assimilating Chinese notions of the “Heaven-Man” into Kabbalistic notions of Adam Kadmon, the Grand Man—themes that he wove into his Masonic philosophy. After leaving Lyon, Swedenborg and his companions made a difficult journey over the mountains and arrived in Turin on March 3, 1738. Maintaining interest in alchemy and the occult sciences for many decades, the Masons of Turin developed a reputation for this peculiarly secretive form of Masonry.

Illuminist Masons in Sweden would later claim to have special ties to a Rosicrucian lodge in Turin—ties possibly formed by Swedenborg during his visit in 1738, where he contacted some Jesuits who dabbled in alchemy when he visited the Royal Academy of Sciences, which was housed in the old Jesuit cloister. He later remembered the Jesuits who had a Rosicrucian-style “ever-burning lamp,” practiced magic and produced illusions. At the Academy, the prized exhibit was the Tabula Isiaca which had fascinated Freemasons since the days of Sir Robert Moray. [\[62\]](#) The Bembine Tablet, the Bembine Table of Isis or the Mensa Isiaca (Isiac Tablet) is an elaborate tablet of bronze with enamel and silver inlay, most probably of Roman origin but imitating the ancient Egyptian style considered of great importance by the Illuminati. It was named in the Renaissance after Cardinal Pietro Bembo (1470-1547), also a celebrated antiquarian and poet who acquired it after the 1527 sack of Rome. [\[63\]](#)

Thereafter it was used by antiquarians to penetrate the meaning of Egyptian hieroglyphs which were not authentically deciphered until the 19th century after the discovery of the Rosetta Stone, a famous artifact uncovered during Napoleon's French invasion of Egypt secretly piloted by the Jesuits to unlock the keys of ancient Egypt. However, before that, the Mensa Isiaca became of importance to western esoteric traditions even if judged later as partially incorrect. While reading Athanasius Kircher's works, Swedenborg learned of the Jesuit scholar's Kabbalistic interpretation of the tablet, which drew heavily on the Sepher Yetzirah and Zohar. William Wynn Westcott (1848—1925) co-founder of The Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn, Supreme Magus of the Societas Rosicruciana in Anglia, and Past Worshipful Master of the Quatuor Coronati Lodge, pointed out that Swedenborg's unpublished treatise on The Hieroglyphic Key (1742– 44) drew on this tradition of Kabbalistic interpretation of the Egyptian hieroglyphs. After visiting Turin, Swedenborg made a point of examining Egyptian and Hermetic hieroglyphics in other cities in Italy. ^[64]

He also seemed to carry out a kind of pilgrimage to sites associated with Queen Christina's Rosicrucian heritage in Italy ^[65] that was connected to the Jesuit infiltration of this tradition conducted by Father Athanasius Kircher SJ. Given his Jesuit influence background and the "enlightened" royal reform taking place in Sweden at the time, and, of course, the illuminated Masonic expansion in Germany and Russia. Swedenborg's correspondence with one of the leading masonic figures of that time Louis IX, Landgrave of Hesse-Darmstadt also known in the German-speaking world as Ludwig, in June–August 1771 takes on a new significance. Hoping to persuade the Landgrave to take over the leadership of the Strict Observance in Germany, interested parties eventually called upon Swedenborg to assist in the effort.

After Ludwig retired from military service under Frederick the Great, he directed a group of theosophers and alchemists in a Masonic lodge at Giessen University. Johann Wilhelm Kellner von Zinnendorf, a Prussian army physician involved in the foundation of the first Grand Lodge of the Freemasons of Germany (Große Landesloge der Freimaurer von Deutschland, GLL FvD or GLL) in 1770 had recently appealed to Ludwig interest in alchemy by sending him certain lodge secrets concerning the Hermetic art. Ludwig's interest in Swedenborg was piqued by Oetinger's German translations of the memorable relations in Arcana Caelestia, and the Latin edition of Amore Conjugiale. Ludwig sent De Treuer, his minister of legation at the Hague, to interview Swedenborg. Ludwig's choice of emissary seems provocative, for De Treuer was a veteran of diplomatic intrigue and espionage. During the Seven Years War, he sent anti-French and anti-Swedish intelligence reports to Sir John Goodricke in Copenhagen, while the English ambassador was prohibited from entering Sweden. Goodricke, in turn, paid De Treuer for his intelligence through the latter's bank at Amsterdam. After interviewing Swedenborg, De Treuer reported favorably on "the incomparable man" and sent Swedenborg's hand-written announcement of the forthcoming publication of Vera Christiana Religio, which was in-press at the Masonic publisher Schreuder. Ludwig then wrote directly to Swedenborg, who was however suspicious about the authenticity of the letter because of certain questions that were asked to him. Was he aware of De Treuer's earlier espionage work and thus did not trust him? A subsequent visit from the Landgrave's counselor, Pastor Johannes Venator, convinced Swedenborg that Ludwig's signature was genuine and he could answer him.

In a rather interesting letter Swedenborg sent to Ludwig he said that the gift of speaking with angels cannot be transferred to another person, that the attempt can be dangerous:

"As to the man who was troubled by spirits, I have heard from heaven that this arose from a meditation in which he indulged." Adding that the sole means of healing was "that he be converted and pray to the Lord Jesus Christ for help."

Ludwig, who claimed to possess a special Kabbalistic formula that rendered spirits visible, apparently asked about some Jewish Kabbalist, whose overindulgence in meditation led to "possession" by spirits. Swedenborg advised conversion to Christianity as a cure,^[66] a suggestion that becomes provocative in the light of Ludwig's subsequent interest in the mysterious figure of Dr. Falk that I have touched on in previous publications considered of great importance by the Illuminati.

Ludwig even sent Swedenborg a list of deceased persons and asked him to report on their state in the spirit world, he expected Swedenborg to be familiar with two of them—Belle-Isle and Bombelles—and suggests his awareness of the seer's diplomatic role. As a young man, Ludwig had served in the French army, where he became an admirer of the Duc de Belle-Isle; despite fighting on opposite sides in the Seven Years' War, the Landgrave described Belle-Isle as "an honest Frenchman." He also knew that Belle-Isle had initiated Baron von Hund, the future founder of the Strict Templar Observance into Masonry and that he had been the intimate friend of Charles Edward Stuart "The Young Pretender." ^[67]

Christoph Friedrich Nicolai (1733-1811) known as Lucianus in the Illuminati, claimed that Freemason and Rosicrucian Elias Ashmole together with others had used at one time the Masons' Hall in London to conceal their secret political efforts to restore the exiled house of Stuart and to build an allegorical Solomon's House. The New Atlantis did exert a strong influence on the formation of the Society of Astrologers with Elias Ashmole in 1646 and they did meet at Masons' Hall. Many members of this society also became freemasons.

If they had any influence on the ritual or doctrines of Freemasonry, it is not apparent, from what few records remain. He next asked Swedenborg about his late friend, Henri-François, Comte de Bombelles, a distinguished French military officer and former governor of the Duc de Chartres. The Landgrave was probably aware that the Duc de Chartres had recently been elected Grand Master of French Masonry. He may also have known that Bombelle's son, Marc-Marie, Marquis de Bombelles, served as a private assistant to Ambassador Breteuil at Stockholm and the Hague. Unfortunately, it is unknown what Swedenborg's reply was to these inquiries. However, he did reveal to Ludwig the substance of his spirit conversation six months earlier with Stanislaus Lesczynski. Swedenborg also informed Landgrave about his spirit-contact with the late Pope Benedict XIV. Ludwig's curiosity was aroused by controversies concerning the pope's attitude towards Freemasonry. Reports circulated that Benedict had been a Mason in his youth and secretly protected the fraternity during his tenure, despite his renewal of the Papal Bull against the fraternity in 1751. Benedict believed that the first papal bull was a serious political mistake. It was now rumored that the Jesuits who pressured him into a renewal of the ban had begun a secret project of infusing crypto-Catholicism into Rose-Croix Masonry. Thus, Swedenborg's spirit communication that Benedict XIV had "descended to companies which consist of Jesuits, and presided over them for a month" but then "ascended therefrom" seemed to hint at this controversy. Swedenborg concluded that "it is not allowed me to publish more concerning the course of his life and concerning his state." ^[68]

Swedenborg appended a final page of his masterpiece True Christian Religion, just before he sent it to the Landgrave. In an odd finale to his definitive theological statement, he gave a flattering portrait of a German electoral duke. This addition served the aim of Gustav III and Grand Master Schefer to recruit Ludwig to the Swedish Rite. At this time, the competition between the Landgrave of Hesse-Darmstadt and the Duke of Brunswick for the leadership of Freemasonry in Germany had become public knowledge.

In his eloquent treatise, Swedenborg portrayed a Masonic prince, modeled on Gustav III, who presides over a ceremonial banquet in which elaborately costumed initiates act out the symbolic drama of the Temple of Wisdom. Swedenborg described “a magnificent temple . . . square in form and its roof was in the shape of a crown,” an allusion not only to the Royal Arch degree but to the royal protection given to Swedish Freemasonry. Affirming that each initiate of the temple is “an angel of heaven as to the interiors of his mind,” he elaborated on the symbolism of building (the basic symbolism of craft Masonry). The “exaltation of mind” is attained gradually, “the same as when a man builds a house” but then he also says other things, that make us understand more about the invisible link we discussed in this book.

Swedenborg: The human mind is like a house of three stories that communicate with each other by stairways; angels of heaven dwell in the highest of these stories, in the middle, men of the world, and the lowest, evil spirits (genii). When these three loves are rightly subordinated, a man can ascend and descend at pleasure. When he ascends to the highest story, he is in company with angels as an angel; when from this he goes down to the middle story he is there in company with men as a man-angel; and when he descends from this still lower he is in company with evil spirits as a man of the world, and these he instructs, reproves, and subdues. [\[69\]](#)

No wonder the Jesuits who have been working for almost five centuries with evil spirits and demonic interdimensional alien races, after striking a deal with Satan imposing a global gag order that involves Russia in a key role, still keeps world leaders from unveiling the truth about aliens and UFOs. Because believe it or not, it will destabilize their demonic plan to install the Antichrist as head of the Vatican lead New World Order soon. In this context, Pope Francis received Russian President Vladimir Putin in an audience in the Vatican on July 4, 2019, on Independence Day, to send a cryptic message to the United States and Donald J. Trump who refuses to join this demonic set up to preserve American integrity.

The Demoncrats and the Obama’s, Clinton’s, and their latest puppet Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez, have always served the Jesuits and they are working together with the extra-dimensional demons of Satan’s Legion to take over the world using the forces of libtardism, unfortunately, prevalent in today’s society and Freemasonry. This will enable them to fully surround us with a reality of lies and illusions and unveil the identity of the Antichrist upon mankind once we are microchipped. Remember, nerdy academic Jesuits and their globe-trotting missionary brothers have made significant contributions not only in astronomy, seismology, mathematics, medicine, and technology, but also in ufology, and for this reason, we can’t forget that the greatest and at the same time, most decisive damage done to Freemasonry comes from the Jesuits.

This is because in certain periods, at the end of the 18th and beginning of the 19th century, certain Jesuits infiltrated themselves into Masonic Orders, worked within them and developed certain high degrees within Freemasonry with the support of Sabbatean Frankists and willing figures of the time like Swedenborg or Jean-Baptiste Willermoz.

This has created some great teachings but also a lot of confusion and inserted elements of Jesuitism at times in certain degrees that provide teachings capable at times of destabilizing the otherwise honorable fraternity, that has however been capable of striking back keeping the purest forms of real Freemasonry alive. So we should not generalize the influence of Jesuitry or Sabbatean Frankism on Freemasonry, but to ignore certain things that are deeply rooted in the early stages of speculative Masonry and to act in ignorance brings us inevitably in their grips. This is the reason why each lodge of Freemasonry today should encourage the rediscovery of the Christian roots of the Craft, especially in today’s increasingly liberal/progressive lodges often infiltrated by Satanic forces and New Age sects.

At the end of September 2019, the Grand Master of Nevada, Most Worshipful Steven A. Robinson, Jr. (who is probably a Past Grand Master by now, due to the end of his mandate) issued an Order that generated a lot of controversy simply because he declared the use of any Volume of Sacred Law (VSL) or book aside from the Bible, during lodge ceremonies, meetings or degrees, as a violation of Nevada’s Masonic code. While the Old Testament of the Holy Bible is central to the origins and allegories of the Masonic ritual, in recent decades most U.S. grand lodges infiltrated by the globalist plan for the One World Religion pushed by the Jesuits, have taken a broader approach (or turned a blind eye) to the use of alternative VSLs, including even the infamous Book of the Law of Aleister Crowley.

Finally, according to a responsible and just Grand Master, this is not permitted any longer in the Grand Lodge F&AM of Nevada's Masonic Code. A choice in perfect accordance with the Christian roots of Freemasonry. Unfortunately, this upset a lot of internet Masons that erupted in explosive statements at insulting the GM of Nevada in various internet forums, completely ignoring the Christians root of Freemasonry confirmed by Masonic historians and by a document in our possession known as “Simon and Philip Manuscript” from 1740 provided by Masonic historian Joseph Wages, that proves it beyond any doubt. For this reason, I urge local lodges to take action with proper Masonic education, if not Freemasonry in the U.S will be taken over by ignorance and New Age diableries.

Jesuits normalizing EUTHANASIA so they can cannibalize and substitute you with robots and Cyborgs

They say “the main difference between euthanasia and assisted suicide is decided by who performs the final, fatal act.” This was said in 2019 by Richard Huxtable, a professor of medical ethics and law at the University of Bristol. Of course, I would like to question the professor on which ethics and which law go with such a monstrosity, but that’s another question. For the professor, talking to the leftists of The Guardian, euthanasia simply refers to active steps taken to end someone’s life to stop their suffering where the “final deed” is undertaken by someone other than the individual, for example, a doctor. If the person concerned has requested this, it falls under the term “voluntary euthanasia.” Assisted suicide is about helping someone to take their life at their request – in other words, the final deed is undertaken by the person. [\[70\]](#)

Recently, the Archdiocese of Seattle, J. Peter Sartain, and the Jesuit Order are facing serious scrutiny after a local man received a formal Catholic blessing after Mass shortly before committing medically assisted suicide in May 2019. When End of Life Washington volunteer, Stephanie Murray, brought the drugs that ended Robert Fuller’s life on May 10, 2019, she asked if Fuller understood what he was about to do, and Fuller assured her once again that he did want to die. He had aggressive cancer at the base of his tongue and was an HIV patient, but I don’t want to focus on Fuller’s sickness or his sexuality, but rather focus on the hypocritical position of the Catholic Church that supported this desperate act that goes against the principles of Christianity. On August 27, 2019, the Associated Press article on Fuller’s final days included a photograph and account of the blessing he allegedly received from a Jesuit priest at St. Therese Parish in the Seattle Archdiocese five days before he ended his life.

The news of a euthanasia endorsement by the Catholic Church and the infamous Jesuits triggered immediate outrage among American Catholics, and the Archbishop’s office released a statement a few hours later that stated: “The Associated Press story about Mr. Fuller is of great concern to the Archbishops because it may cause confusion among Catholics and others who share our reverence for human life.”

After Fuller attended a final Mass at his parish, the well-known Jesuit, Fr. Quentin Dupont, SJ, led a group of children dressed in white, who had just received their First Holy Communion, to gather around the sick man for a final prayer. The priest, the children, and members of the parish extended their hands in blessing over him. This unusual act was made after Fuller publicly announced more than once his upcoming suicide. Fortunately, the event was recorded and photographed by an Associated Press journalist and can't be denied by the Archbishop, or the Archdiocese that has issued a follow-up statement on the 28th of August full of excuses, typical of the Catholic Church in the Pope Francis era.

“The Associated Press news story naturally leads the reader to assume certain things about the priest and his intentions. However, we are learning a very different reality was at work. We looked into this and can confirm that the priest who did the blessing did not know about Mr. Fuller’s intentions.”

Social media posts made by Robert Fuller in the months before his suicide suggest that he scheduled his funeral and his death with his parish days before it happened and that a priest had “given his blessings” to the suicide plan knowing it was a case of assisted suicide. In most countries, it is against the law and it may carry a jail sentence. In the United States, however, the law varies from state to state. Now while I am writing this book in 2019, thanks to some solid reporting by Christine Rouselle of CNA, we know that Fuller was a longtime member of the Hemlock Society, which supports euthanasia and he even admitted to helping a friend commit suicide years ago.

In a March 16th Facebook post, Fuller claimed that he had completed the legal steps required to receive a prescription of life-ending drugs and that he had the approval of a Jesuit priest to end his life: “I have absolutely no reservations about what I am doing,” he wrote. “And my pastor/sponsor has given me his blessings. And he’s a Jesuit!!!” Fuller did not name the priest referenced in the post, and the pastor of St. Therese parish, Fr. Maurice Mamba, is not a Jesuit, but several Jesuits assisted with Sunday’s Mass at the parish and an examination of past parish bulletins show that only one Jesuit, Fr. Quentin Dupont regularly celebrated the Sunday Mass that Fuller normally attended. This priest celebrated Mass in that specific Church eight times between December 2018 and May 5, 2019, and knew very well the late Mr. Fuller. So the fact that the Archdiocese of Seattle said that Dupont was not aware of Fuller’s intentions is a blatant lie that stains the diocese and the Catholic Church even further. The Archdiocese states that the blessings were given after Mass by a priest whose interest was only to bring comfort to someone he learned was dying. The priest said the Archdiocese, “was not aware of any news photographer, although he was aware people were taking pictures.”

However, in other posts on Fuller’s Facebook page, we can see he met with parish staff as he planned in detail the final days of his life, including a party held in the hours before his suicide on May 10, and his funeral. On May 3, Fuller wrote that he had one week left to live. He thanked his “faith family” at St. Therese, and invited people to join him at Mass the next day and at his “end of life celebration party” on May 10. In addition to the posts regarding his funeral and his pastor’s “blessing,” other social media posts by Fuller suggest that some parish leaders also knew about his plans to end his life, and affirmed his decision. On March 3, Fuller posted that he had arranged for one of the musicians at the parish to perform during his end of life “party” to mark his suicide. Three weeks later, he posted that a parish choir would perform as well.

“Today I asked our choir director if he and other musicians and singers can come to perform during the first 1 1/2 hours and he emphatically replied YES. OF COURSE!” wrote Fuller on March 24, 2019. An article on the Seattle Housing Authority’s website confirms that the Shades of Praise choir from St. Therese performed at the party. Parish choir director Kent Stevenson also told the Associated Press that Fuller’s suicide “was completely in keeping with who Bob was” and that Fuller made the choice to die with “tenacity and clarity.”

Fuller’s Facebook posts appear to be at odds with the statement released by the Archdiocese of Seattle on Tuesday. The statement that says that parish leaders had been unaware of Fuller’s intentions at the time he received a blessing during Mass on May 5 is also a lie. The August 28 statement, released after the initial publication of this story, acknowledged that some at the parish did know Fuller’s plans. “While it is clear that some of Mr. Fuller’s friends at the parish knew of his intentions, the pastor at St. Therese initially did not,” the Archdiocese stated. According to the Archdiocese, when Fuller eventually approached the pastor to ask to plan his funeral, “The pastor discussed the gift of life and tried to convince him to change his mind. He made it clear that neither he nor the parish could support his plan to take his life.”

After it was clear Fuller would continue with his plans the Archbishop gave his permission for the funeral stating later that this event was created with certain conditions, but the August 28th statement Archdiocesan did not address Fuller’s March 16th statement that he had met with a Jesuit priest to discuss his intentions or questions related to the parish choir’s performance at his “end of life” party. Neither Father Dupont nor the West Province of the Society of Jesus responded to requests for comment, but in Italy, in 2006 the same Catholic Church refused to celebrate the funerals of Piergiorgio Welby, an activist whose three-month-long battle to establish his right to die led to a debate about euthanasia in his country.

As I have written not so long ago on Facebook: The sad truth is that the JESUITS ARE NORMALIZING EUTHANASIA SO THEY CAN EVENTUALLY CANNIBALIZE YOU, Soy lent Green. The Catholic Church and the Jesuits are the biggest hypocrites on the planet full of double standards and lies and the dark side of the Illuminati has even created a Church of Euthanasia that is notorious for its conflicts with Pro-life Christian activists. Slogans employed by the Euthanasia group include “Save the Planet, Kill Yourself”, “Eat a Queer Fetus for Jesus,” and “Six Billion Humans Can’t Be Wrong”, the latest becoming a music track by crossdresser Chris Korda who is the leader of the Church Of Euthanasia, described by him as an educational foundation devoted to restoring the balance between humans and the remaining species on Earth through voluntary population reduction.

The interesting thing is that this record was published in 1999 by International DeeJay Gigolo Records, a record label of my former Dj colleague Helmut Josef Geier (born on 6 September 1962), a German citizen known professionally as DJ Hell who is secretly financed by none other than George Soros, who used him to promote the infamous heretics of FEMEN he once sponsored. Since 2009, DJ Hell has supported the feminist Ukrainian activist group FEMEN with various DJ and television appearances. The infamous organization that describes itself as “fighting patriarchy in its three manifestations – sexual exploitation of women, dictatorship and religion,” is an immoral and very dangerous group of Satanists working against Christianity. No wonder one of their main patrons is called DJ Hell.

We all remember how on July 26, 2012, a topless Femen activist, Yana Zhdanova, attacked the Patriarch of Moscow while he was visiting Ukraine. Zhdanova had the words “Kill Kirill” painted on her back and screamed “Get Out!” to the Orthodox Christian leader. She was arrested for fifteen days for her actions but I will have left her sorry ass behind bars for a much longer period, but as Christians, we need to forgive, but we must remember the time is near for a final confrontation with these demons born out of the illusion of materialism.

In the meantime, the Jesuits have partnered with Microsoft recently to offer an international prize on ethics and artificial intelligence, after a private meeting between Pope Francis and Microsoft President Brad Smith. The prize was for the best doctoral dissertation of 2019 on the subject of “Artificial Intelligence in the service of human life.” In March 2019, BBC entitled an article published on their website dedicated to the Vatican workshop, Roboethics: Humans, Machines and Health hosted by The Pontifical Academy for Life: “How Pope Francis could shape the future of robotics,” stating that: “It might not be the first place you imagine when you think about robots. But in the Renaissance splendor of the Vatican, thousands of miles from Silicon Valley, scientists, ethicists, and theologians gather to discuss the future of robotics. The ideas go to the heart of what it means to be human and could define future generations on the planet.”

After supporting Euthanasia and assisted suicide to eventually use the flesh to feed their flock, the Jesuits want to bring in robots and the A.I. to substitute the workforce and enslave humanity even further after brainwashing them with their new humanism. A dramatic and transhumanist hypothesis was made during the event cited above by Japanese Professor Hiroshi Ishiguro, who said to Pope Francis and the Vatican elite that we will no longer be recognized as flesh and blood humans, in 10,000 years. Professor Hiroshi Ishiguro, famous for creating extremely human-like robots at his lab in Osaka University, including one of himself, spoke at the Vatican’s conference on Roboethics about the need to evolve our bodies away from their current materials to something more enduring saying: “Our ultimate aim of human evolution is immortality by replacing the flesh and bones with inorganic material,” he said adding: “The question is what happens if something happens on the planet, or something happens on the Sun, so we cannot live on the planet, we need to live in space. In this case, which is better? Organic materials or inorganic materials?”

In this case, Professor Ishiguro is proposing a cyborg solution, but he is keen on creating robots that can do tasks humans can do, even intimate tasks like caring for elderly people or having a relationship. This is also a fundamental aspect of Prof Ishiguro’s work that fascinates the Vatican Jesuits who have influenced Japanese culture for centuries with their lies and manipulation schemes. Professor Hiroshi Ishiguro also made another shocking assertion: “We have a serious problem, the Japanese population is going down to half the number of the current population within 50 years.” Instead of relying on human immigrants or a baby boom to solve the decline, Prof Ishiguro points to the possibility of utilizing robots instead, saying: “We don’t have enough annual immigration, Japan is an isolated country, it’s an island, our culture is quite different from other countries. It is not so easy for the foreigners to survive in Japan in some sense,” Prof Ishiguro said. Adding “That is the main reason why we are so crazy for creating robots.” The main reason to substitute humans as soon as possible with robots in Japan is the ongoing drama of Fukushima, but that’s not something many want to discuss, especially in the Vatican.

For the rest of the world, the Holy See seems open to embrace transhumanism and the cyborg solution proposed by Professor Ishiguro. Let's remember the term cyborg was coined in 1960, by Kline and Manfred Clynes, using it in an article in Astronautics Magazine about the advantages of self-regulating human-machine systems in outer space, but what most people ignore is the role of Kline's work in opening a new era in the evil world of psychiatry: psychopharmacology, that has lead mankind towards Satan even further ruining the lives of so many innocent citizens.

In recent decades, drug companies spent thousands and even tens of thousands of dollars per year in direct marketing efforts to corrupt the medical establishment into accepting their solutions. They provide everything from coffee mugs to all-expense-paid Caribbean cruises, where you would be convinced to join the evil crusade. My late father, Elio realized a long time ago that his profession's integrity had been compromised by the influence of Big Pharma back in the 70s, the reason he abandoned psychiatry. Satan's response today, "I'm the head of the world's largest pharmaceutical companies. I make billions from suffering, pain, and disease—who did you think I'd be?"

Madonna celebrates the rise of the Antichrist and Red Flag Laws

After fleeing Europe due to political and religious persecution, I have always kept in mind the idea of wanting to write about Madonna's shocking 2019 Satanic Eurovision performance in Israel. I believe this entire performance was a significant and an important message from the Antichrist himself, giving us an exact graphic illustration of what is right around the corner waiting for us in this libtard-infested world. Her performance ended with the ominous warning to humanity to, "Wake up" when she wants us to fall asleep enslaved by her brainwashing propaganda. Remember, this didn't happen in Hollywood, but in Israel, as the Israel Broadcasting Authority (IBA) is a member of the socialist-infested European Broadcasting Union, which is responsible for the event. Israel won the contest four times and has hosted the contest in Jerusalem twice in 1979 and 1999, but this time the scenario was rather different, as Madonna's performance in these crucial times for humanity was far more spooky than expected given the fact that Israel is the land where Bible prophecy originates, and the Antichrist is planned rule, and where last but not least, the Battle of Armageddon will be fought during the Second Coming of Jesus Christ.

Madonna impersonated the Antichrist singing "Like A Prayer" to a packed house of Jews and Palestinians, wearing a wannabe Marilyn Manson eye patch while mocking the crucifixion of Jesus Christ in what can be considered a 100% Satanic ritual for the presentation of the age of the Antichrist. Interestingly enough, Joshua Philipp, an award-winning investigative reporter and a senior editor at The Epoch Times wrote a few days ago: "Why is it that a kid wearing a MAGA hat smiling at a Native American drumming in his face can become a national scandal, but a mainstream performance can have a performer surrounded by demonic figures, dancing in flames, and show depictions of the Statue of Liberty in ruins—and nobody seems to bat an eye?"

Well, the only possible answer is that the majority of libtards are brainwashed by Satanism and Satanic values. They hate Donald J. Trump and love Madonna, who once said "I'm angry. Yes, I am outraged. Yes, I have thought an awful lot about blowing up the White House." We should take Madonna's message during Eurovision very seriously, as Satanists are preparing for their last move and their anti-patriot propaganda is increasing. They want to kill Donald J. Trump and take over the United States of America, the last country in the world that can defend Christianity from the Satanic/AI take over they have been planning for many years. Of course, Trump is not a Saint, but he is better than his opponents by far, and if they ever manage to impeach him, or win the next elections through trickery, chaos will erupt in the U.S and soon after in the rest of the Western world still depending on America.

However, a big problem with Trump these days is that he is urging Congress to back efforts to encourage states to adopt red flag laws, which give family members, and in some cases, police officers, the power to obtain a swift court order from a judge to confiscate firearms from someone deemed a danger to themselves or others but this is a very tricky subject that could lead to a serious conflict with the Second Amendment. Unfortunately, in contrast to other activities such as commerce, gun rights are now witnessing unprecedented attacks at the state level even from politically-connected corporate entities. Second Amendment advocates are aiming for a potential expansion of state red flag laws, one of the gun reform measures President Trump has, for some reason, endorsed in the wake of the deadly mass shootings that unfortunately happen from time to time in the U.S.

But imagine, if we didn't have guns what would happen? In 1929, the Soviet Union established gun control and from 1929 to 1953 about 20 million dissidents unable to defend themselves were rounded up and exterminated. Right now, Venezuela continues to crumble under the socialist dictatorship of Jesuit agent President Nicolas Maduro, after a seven-year gun control bill stripped citizens of their weapons in 2012. Communist China's weapons laws are among the world's toughest. Its blanket ban on private ownership of rifles, pistols, and even gun replicas is a core tenet of their oppressive Communist social policy. Taking guns away is the main objective of the Socialist driven New World Order. This international system would allow the United Nations troops, National Armed Forces enforcing U.N. Security Council resolutions, and state and local policemen to have guns, leaving American citizens defenseless and open to abuse, as I have personally witnessed in Europe in recent years. Privately-held firearms would be a thing of the past and strict regulations would crush many freedoms.

You can check the following item out at the Library of Congress, or at a large metropolitan reference library, and I can promise you that it won't be time wasted! Ask for a copy of VOLUME 9 of the 1982 EDITION [not the current, replacement edition] of the U.S. CODE. Turn to page 554, where you will find the beginning of PUBLIC LAW # 87-297 [1961]. This law was signed by President Kennedy in 1962 and has received 18 subsequent updates. Its provisions have been steadily implemented by every President since. It calls for the elimination of U.S. National forces and further declares that "No one may possess a firearm or lethal weapon except police or military personnel."

This is the reason why Satanist Madonna has released a new video in the middle of 2019 entitled "God Control" to spotlight the issue of gun violence stating "I can't take it anymore." Madonna, who is a Communist that has worked for years for the dark side of the Illuminati with her propaganda, knows very well that they want to reduce us like Venezuela, or the other nightmare Communist countries I just mentioned above.

When Madonna warns her viewers about the video's graphics and violent content, she begins with a disclaimer: "The story you're about to see is very disturbing. But it's happening everywhere and it has to stop." Well, the problem is that Madonna and her Democrat friends have decided to ignore that such crimes are not related to gun control but to the crime itself. This is a fact that is evident almost everywhere in the U.S. in a way that appears to be unconnected with each area's gun laws, and the city of Chicago is a prime example of this. The windy city has some of the tightest gun-control laws in the country and Illinois as a whole is one of seven U.S. states to require a license to buy a gun, one of only five with mandatory waiting periods and was the last state to allow concealed carry.

Besides, Cook County has an assault weapons ban and, until it was ruled unconstitutional, Chicago banned all handguns within city limits. These laws haven't slowed down gun crime but have increased it. Aside from Madonna's usual perversions, we notice at the end of her disturbing video a citation from Professor Angela Darvis, a known American Communist, political activist, academic, and author that emerged as a prominent counterculture activist in the 1960s working with the Communist Party USA. The Communist Party USA, officially the Communist Party of the United States of America (CPUSA), is a Communist party established in the United States in 1919 after a split in the Socialist Party of America following the Russian Revolution, and the rise of the Soviet Union that established gun control before starting the persecution of millions of people. However, there seems to be a lot of the usual libtard hypocrisy in Madonna's citation of Angela Darvis, a person who used weapons in her revolutionary days. After demonstrating her credentials as an academic, an activist, and a scholar in 1970, Angela Darvis showed her revolutionary commitment to the leftist cause by becoming a terrorist.

For this purpose, she purchased several firearms, including a shotgun, that would be used two days later by a 17-year-old African-American high-school student named Jonathan Jackson, on August 7, 1970, to take over a courtroom in Marin County, California. He armed the black defendants and together they took on defenseless Judge Harold Haley, the prosecutor, and three female jurors, hostage to their left-wing criminal insanity. They fled the courtroom and ended up in a shoot out with police. The judge was shot in the head with a blast from the shotgun purchased by Madonna's hero, and it was demonstrated soon after that Davis had been communicating with one of the inmates. She was then charged with conspiracy to murder and kidnap, fled the jurisdiction but was captured two months later across the country in liberal New York City. Although her first attorney was John Abt, general counsel of the Communist Party USA, Ms. Davis was soon represented by the far more competent elite lawyer, Leo Branton, a civil rights and entertainment lawyer who pioneered techniques in jury selection in Davis defense that was later adopted by other attorneys.

Branton was a tool of the Illuminati elite who wanted Davis out of trouble at all costs so she could continue her evil work for them. For this reason, Leo Branton hired a bunch of psychologists to help the defense determine who in the jury pool would favor their arguments, and he also hired experts to discredit the reliability of eyewitness accounts, giving, in the end, a powerful closing statement fit for a Hollywood movie. Of course, Angela Darvis was acquitted by an all-white jury with a profound sense of guilt, something the left has been using ever since. So, Madonna is promoting dangerous figures of the past, and Communist ideas that should have no place in a country like the United States of America, but the Catholic Church of today supports Marxist Angela Davis who promotes abortion, same-sex "marriage" and social unrest.

Two years ago, at Gonzaga University, a private Roman Catholic university in Spokane, Washington announced how "proud" the university was to host Davis for a lecture on October 25, 2017, in Hemmingson Center Ballroom. If you ask me, Angela Davis and Madonna should be arrested for treason like most Democrats these days, because they are actively working to destroy the very foundation of the United States. In my opinion, guns are a vital part of the American way of life. People who lived and died by the gun developed America as we know it, so we should always support the 2nd Amendment "the right of the people to keep and bear Arms, shall not be infringed" and let's always remember that.

Thank God liberal pop celebrity Madonna said in September 2019 that she has now moved out of the United States for good. In an interview, the singer said she relocated her entire family from her New York base to their new home in Portugal to escape Donald J. Trump, giving us another reason to appreciate the U.S. president.

Chapter Five

Demoncrats or Demonrats?

The Darkest Days of 2019

It was shocking to see in 2019, Notre Dame – “Our Lady” - on fire while Michelle Obama sipped fine champagne as she watched the Notre Dame cathedral fires from a Paris dinner cruise. Let’s remember that for the Illuminati, it is also a festive time of the year that marks the two-week Beltane "Fire" Festival. Michelle/Michael was simply celebrating with her elite friends an ancient Iron Age Celtic ritual and the largest of its kind celebrated every year by occultists and witches worldwide. It ends between April 30th and May 1st, the day the Illuminati Order was also originally founded by Adam Weishaupt in 1776. Special bonfires are kindled for this event and their flames, smoke, and ashes are deemed to have protective powers. Could Macron be using such protective powers to help his presidency in crisis? The dreadful sight of Notre Dame Cathedral on fire on Monday, April 15th, 2019 is also manifesting another Nostradamus prophecy.

Even his name is in some way connected to the name of the cathedral, Nostradamus is the Latinized version of Michel de Notre Dame, and a quatrain written 500 years ago by the legendary French figure predicted this event in the most accurate way. The following is the original quatrain made by Nostradamus both in French and English, with astrology clues which point directly to Monday, April 15, 2019. What is also astonishing is the use of the word “emotions,” by Nostradamus, which is the exact word used on Twitter by French President Emmanuel Macron to describe France’s response. “Notre-Dame is engulfed with flames. The Emotion of a whole nation. Thoughts are with Catholics and all the French. Like all citizens, I am sad to see this part of us burn.”

As you can see below, President Macron’s first name – Emmanuel – which also refers to God – appears in the second line of the quatrain. The following version of the quatrain in question comes from one of the most accurate recent books on the Prophecies of Nostradamus known as the Millennium edition.

*Chef d’Aries, Jupiter et Saturne, Dieu eternel quelles mutations?
Puis par long siecle son maling temps retourne,
Gaule et Italie, quelles emotions?
The head of Aries, Jupiter, and Saturn,
God eternal, what changes can be expected?
Following a long century, evil will return
France and Italy, what emotions will you undergo?*

Nostradamus seems once again right on target with his prediction. When Notre Dame burns, the Catholic Church, the Vatican, and Italy are also affected by this incredible event. Let’s remember, the fire collapsed the Cathedral just weeks after Cardinal Pell, Australia’s most senior Catholic was found guilty of sex abuse charges, and the Catholic Church is increasingly compromised in the age of Pope Francis with new scandals unfolding day after day. Interestingly enough, only three days ago, a Muslim fundamentalist called Ines Madani, 22, was jailed for encouraging would-be jihadists to go to Syria and participate in attacks against France and, in particular, Notre Dame. Last month, a dozen Catholic churches were desecrated across France in one week in an egregious case of anti-Christian vandalism that is a reminder of the Satanic nature of these attacks.

French Roman-Catholic newspaper La Croix International reported how numerous attacks on churches took place across France in the past couple of months. Senseless acts included the desecration of altars, the defacing of Christ on the cross, and in an extreme case, human excrement spread across the walls of a holy place of worship. Even Paris’s historic Saint-Sulpice church, which was used in the filming of Dan Brown’s, Da Vinci Code briefly caught fire. The churches dedicated to the Our Lady (Notre Dame), another name for the Virgin Mary, seems particularly affected in France these days, where a growing Muslim population used by the elite as mercenaries in their evil plan is becoming increasingly intolerant. Notre-Dame des Enfants (Our Lady of the Children) in Nimes was desecrated in early February, and according to local news reports, the vandals had drawn a cross on the wall with human excrement and damaged other religious items in the church. A few days later, on February 9, a similar attack occurred at the Church of Notre-Dame de Dijon, Côte-d’Or, about 175 miles south-east of Paris. The “long century” mentioned in the quatrain by Nostradamus is also really interesting because this is, of course, the Millennium and we are now in the year 2019.

Celebrity astrologer, Jessica Adams gave the following explanation of the quatrain above on her blog:

What we have here is Chiron indeed at “the head of Aries” at just three degrees of the zodiac sign. The sun, burning orange at sunset in Paris as Notre Dame fell, is also in Aries, in this astrological chart set for Monday 15th April 2019 at 5:50 pm, Paris, France. The shock of the moment is shown by Uranus at 2 Taurus, making an almost exact semi-sextile to Chiron. This is a line-up that could only happen once every 80 years. The Moon is at 3 Virgo, exactly quincunx Chiron.

So what is Chiron? Well, what Chiron means in astrology reveals the nature of this darkness better than almost any other sign in the zodiac.

Chiron is one of the four asteroids in the birth chart, along with Ceres, Juno, and Pallas Athena. These asteroids encompass a nuanced and lesser-known section of natal charts, unveiling shades of our personality that many astrology enthusiasts would overlook, but they encompass more feminine, emotional, and nurturing aspects of humanity, the same reflected by the Blessed Mother Mary.

As the iconic cathedral of Notre Dame burned in Paris, a fire also engulfed the Al-Aqsa mosque in Jerusalem as another ominous sign of the times. The fire broke out in the guard's room outside the roof of the Marwani prayer room, Antar al-Hazmawi, a guard of the al-Aqsa mosque confirmed to The New Arab. The fire brigade of the Islamic Waqf Department in Jerusalem managed to control the blaze, while the area is currently closed to examine the cause of the fire, which is currently unclear. In the meantime in Paris, shortly after midnight yesterday, firefighters stated the main structure of Notre-Dame de Paris, the city's cathedral, had been preserved from collapse.

"We now believe that the two towers of Notre-Dame have been saved," Jean-Claude Gallet, Paris' fire chief, said on April 16th, 2019, adding: "We now consider that the main structure of Notre-Dame has been saved and preserved." Archbishop Michel Aupetit of Paris then Tweeted: "As I speak, it seems that the towers of the facade of Notre-Dame are saved. The whole diocese prayed, and I joined the young people who were praying at Fontaine Saint-Michel. Let us remain united more than ever, in Hope."

I have listed below, other significant April dates on which we should reflect in connection with the beginning of the Beltane "Fire" Festival, (not all in chronological order) as my old family friend William S. Burroughs once said: "In the magical universe there are no accidents and there are no coincidences. Nothing happens, unless someone wills it to happen."

List of significant April dates:

April 4-5, 2016

Massive wildfires erupt in Oklahoma and quickly grab the attention of the front page of USA Today newspaper.

April 14th, 1865

John Wilkes Booth assassinated President Abraham Lincoln.

April 15th, 2013 The Boston marathon bombing where 3 were killed and hundreds were injured, including 1 child.

This broke U.S. neutrality, and the deaths of several civilians, including one hundred children, brought about enough anger for the U.S. to enter into World War One.

Aside from Beltane we also have the Christian Holy Week that is a very important time for both the Christian and Catholic communities but also for the Satanists of the elite and their secret Satanic practices. It is a time where believers in Christ come together in unity to remember Jesus' last days and honor Him. It ends with a time of rejoicing on Easter Sunday when we unite to rejoice for our salvation in Christ. However, it is also a time where true Satanists (not the ones that just play around with the idea), are very active, celebrating cruel acts of death, destruction, and sacrifice to serve Satan. The days observed by Christians to remember Christ's sacrifice are the same days used by the dark side of the elite to perform Black Masses with human sacrifices. Remember, a real Black Mass takes the Catholic Mass, in particular, and inverts it, intentionally mocking the Catholic celebration. As we know, one of the most fascinating days in the Catholic liturgical calendar is Good Friday. This day honors the passion and death of Jesus, and the Church abstains from offering a Mass and instead instructs its believers to host a "Celebration of the Lord's Passion," which includes a special reading from the Gospel, the veneration of the cross, and the distribution of Holy Communion from the Reserved Sacrament. The participants to a Black Mass on Good Friday are focused on human sacrifice, and also use a consecrated Eucharistic host to desecrate in many obscene ways. This is one of the reasons why tabernacles in Catholic churches have locks and why some parishes have an usher stand next to a communion line. Both policies aim to protect the Eucharist from being stolen and used in a Black Mass.

In recent years, numerous priests from around the world have reported that consecrated hosts are increasingly stolen from churches for use in Satanic rituals. Maundy Thursday, Good Friday, and Easter Sunday are important Satanic ritual days.

Easter Black Mass by the Satanic elite often includes sexual perversions such as orgies and sodomy, as well as the dedication of children to these demonic deities to groom them for sexual purposes. Elaborate community rituals were commonplace in ancient times and in the Bible, the goddess Ashtoreth or Asherah are frequently mentioned. Ashtoreth was a fertility goddess and the consort of Molech, the god of child sacrifice. In my previous book, Confessions of an Illuminati vol.6.66, I published the incantation used during this kind of ritual that originated in Paris with the Abbé Étienne Guibourg, (c. 1610 – January 1686) who was a French Roman Catholic abbé and occultist who was involved in the affaire des poisons, during the reign of Louis XIV:

“Astaroth, Asmodeus, princes of friendship and love, I invoke you to accept the sacrifice, this child that I offer you, for the things I ask of you. They are that the friendship and love of the King and the Dauphin may be assured to me, that I may be honored by all the princes and princesses of the Court, that the King deny me nothing I ask whether it be for my relatives or any of my household.”

It is the most important Satanic ritual of the year relating to the fire god, Baal, or Molech/Nimrod (the Sun God), also known as the Roman god, Saturn (Satan/Devil). It is a major human sacrifice day for the scumbags of the New World Order demanding fire sacrifice with an emphasis on children. Doing this ritual during the full moon is when the evildoers feel their magic is strongest. Jesus sacrificed his life for us yet these idiots sacrifice children. Beware the Illuminati elite will not like that you are reading this.

The Secret History of Pedo Popes

During my conferences and talks around the U.S., I am often asked what is the reason for all this evil? Well, Pope Ratzinger came out of retirement recently to declare that the young rebels of 1968 were the reason for pedophilia in the Catholic Church. I find this statement to be false, so have I have written a brief history of the origins of pedophilia in the Roman Catholic Church to clear up the matter once and for all.

The first pedophile Pope where we find a historical trace was Saint Damasus, who lived in the fourth century. The Catholic Church fears that this truth could be revealed to this day because he presided over the Council of Rome of 382 that determined the canon or official list of Sacred Scripture. Until the sixteenth century, there have been at least another 16 pedophile Popes known to historians, the last being a certain Pope Julius III (1487-1555).

In the mid-16th century with the Inquisition, the Catholic Church began to cover-up all the crimes of a "sexual" nature committed by clerics. A practice that continues with success even today, following the same effective rules of secrecy, or if necessary, mystification and manipulation of reality through public declarations once the secrecy has been somehow violated.

The triumph of Constantine the Great (AD 306–337) and the subsequent state patronage of Christianity, sanctioned by the First Council of Nicaea (AD 325), the first ecumenical council in history, built to attain consensus in the expanding new faith through an assembly representing all of Christendom, established to some extent the malignant roots of the pedophile elite of the Roman Catholic Church as we know it. It opened up vast new opportunities for the sexual predators of the ancient Illuminati elite's bloodlines, and in the mind of Constantine, the priesthood was beyond reproach even with his grandiose power. During the reign of the Roman Emperor, Christianity began to transition to the dominant religion of the Roman Empire. Historians remain uncertain about Constantine's reasons for favoring Christianity, but some say he even remained loyal to Paganism. Constantine said that it was not permissible for him, as a man, and one who was subject to the judgment of priests to examine cases touching gods, who cannot be judged save by God alone. Emperor Constantine considered the clergy untouchable, almost considering them as gods because of their spiritual work, and this is how the Vatican still considers itself to this day. Petitions containing accusations against priests that were regularly given to Constantine were put into the fire without the emperor even looking at them.

Ecclesiastics, especially in Rome, were raised beyond mortal law, with the result that clerical so-called celibacy brought great immorality in its trail. Not just the fleecing of pious matrons, but teenage mistresses, incest, prostitution, and perversion ever after would be the mark of the Church triumphantly spreading across the empire. The young, the old, male, and female, the naive, and the headstrong, all were at risk. Sexual corruption became a systemic and endemic feature of the Holy Mother Church. Then, as now, wrongdoers were seldom punished – scandal was bad for morale. The so-called Apostolic Constitution of the early 4th century – rules and regulations for the clergy – required unmarried ministers to remain celibate but allowed priests already married to keep their wives. No doubt, the double standard set up tension within the ranks. Then in 366, Pope Damasus set an example by abandoning his wife, the boss of bosses knew what he was doing and set a new standard of hypocrisy:

"A celibate priest owed total allegiance, not to wife and children but to the institution. He was the creature of the institution. The Roman system was absolutist and hierarchical. For such a system to work, it needed operatives completely at the beck and call of superiors ... The papal system would collapse without the unqualified allegiance of the clergy; celibacy alone could guarantee that sort of allegiance." -De Rosa, Vicars of Christ, p.420

The philandering Saint Damasus, known at the time as the "Matronarum Auriscalpius" ("ladies' ear-tickler"), also ran Rome's city brothels during his time as Pope Damasus I, that was heavily patronized by the clergy and visiting pilgrims. The Vatican pressure to "unwed" and get rid of the heterosexual clergy went on for generations to facilitate the take over of the Church by the pedophile lobby. Twenty years after Damasus, Pope Siricius forbade priests who remained married from sleeping in the same bed as their wives. Following the Second Council of Tours, (567) a priest who broke this rule could be excommunicated for a year and his wife would receive a hundred lashes. And yet it remained commonplace for Catholic priests to have multiple wives and mistresses. Pope Gregory II in a decretal in 726 ruled that "When a man has a sick wife who cannot discharge the marital function, he may take a second one, provided he looks after the first one." (De Rosa,op.cit. p.349)

Married clergy was found in the Catholic Church until the Second Lateran Council of 1139, when Pope Innocent II, annulling the decisions and ordinations of "anti-Pope" Anacletus II, voided all marriages of priests. The

"reformer" Innocent was the very same Pope who confirmed the condemnation of French philosopher and scholar Peter Abelard (castrated and confined to a monastery). The scandals surrounding the Vatican are very heavy at the moment, but the Church has always waged a losing battle with its vice-ridden staff in Rome since ancient times. The problem was that transgressions from official policy often began right at the top with the people in charge of the church.

Fellow priests put one of the first popes, Sixtus III, (432-40) on trial for seducing a nun. He was acquitted after quoting from Christ in his defense: "Let you who is without sin cast the first stone."

In the centuries that followed, political skullduggery and a corrupt election process thrust one improbable candidate after another into position, as God-fearing believers looked on in impotent horror, while pedophiles increased their influence on the Catholic Church. Many Vicars of Christ have been denounced as the "Worst Pope Ever" just as Pope Francis is today. Sergius III (904-11), known by his cardinals as "the slave of every vice," came to power after murdering his predecessor. He had a son with his teenage mistress — the prostitute Marozia, 30 years his junior — and their illegitimate son grew up to become the next pope. With top Vatican jobs auctioned off like baubles, the papacy entered its "dark century."

The extremely young 17-year-old Pope John XII (955-64) was accused of sleeping with his two sisters and invented a catalog of disgusting new sins. Described by a church historian as "the very dregs," he was killed at age 27 when the husband of one of his mistresses burst into his bedroom, discovered him in the blatant act, and battered his skull in with a hammer. During his time as Pope, he wrote to Henry, the new Archbishop of Trier, granting him the pallium and encouraging him to lead a good life. In 958, he even granted privileges to Subiaco Abbey, on condition that: "Every day priests and monks should recite, for the good of our soul and the souls of our successors, a hundred Kyrie-Eleisons and a hundred Christe-eleisons, and that thrice each week the priests should offer the Holy Mass to Almighty God for the absolution of our soul and those of our successors."

Another great pervert of the Catholic Church was Benedict IX, (1032-48) who continually shocked even his most hardened cardinals for his debauchery with young boys in the Lateran Palace. Repenting of his sins, he abdicated to a faraway monastery, only to change his mind and seize office again. He was "a wretch who feasted on immorality," wrote Saint Peter Damian, "a demon from hell in the disguise of a priest."

Then we have Boniface VIII. After massacring the entire population in the Italian town of Palestrina, Boniface VIII (1294-1303) indulged in threesomes with a married woman and her daughter and became renowned through Rome as a shameless pedophile. He famously declared that having sex with young boys was no more a sin than rubbing one hand against the other — which should make him the patron saint of the pedophile Catholic priests of today. Fortunately, poet Dante reserved a place for him in the eighth circle of Hell.

Later, all pretense at decorum was abandoned when the papacy moved to Avignon in southern France for 75 years. Bon vivant Clement VI (1342-52) was called "an ecclesiastical Dionysus" by the poet Petrarch for the number of mistresses and the severity of his gonorrhea. Check this out, upon his death, 50 priests offered Mass for the repose of his soul for nine consecutive days, but the French would agree that this was nowhere near enough to save him from hell.

Decamping back to Rome, the papacy hit its true low point in the Renaissance. (Church historian Eamon Duffy compares Rome to Nixon's Washington, "a city of expense-account whores and political graft." Sixtus IV (1471-84), who funded the Sistine Chapel, had six illegitimate sons — one with his sister. He collected a church tax on prostitutes and charged priests for keeping mistresses, but critics argued that this merely increased the prevalence of clerical homosexuality.

Another infamous figure was Innocent VIII, (1484-92) whose rule is remembered as the Golden Age of Bastards: He acknowledged eight illegitimate sons and was known to have many more, although he found time between love affairs to start up the Inquisition. On his death bed, he ordered a comely wet nurse to supply him with milk fresh from her breast.

The vicious Rodrigo Borgia then arrived, who took the name Alexander VI (1492-1503), and presided over more orgies than actual masses, wrote Edward Gibbon. A career highlight was the 1501 "Joust of the Whores," when 50 dancers were invited to slowly strip around the Pope's table. Alexander and his family gleefully threw chestnuts on the floor, forcing the women to grovel around their feet like swine; they then offered prizes of fine clothes and jewelry for the man who could fornicate with the most women. Alexander's other hobbies included watching horses copulate, which would make him "laugh fit to bust." After his death — quite possibly poisoned by his pathological son, Cesar Borgia — the Pope's body was expelled from the Basilica of Saint Peter as too evil to be buried on sacred soil.

Then we have Julius II, (1503-13) who is remembered for commissioning Michelangelo to paint the Sistene Chapel's ceiling. He was also the first pope to contract "the French disease," syphilis, from Rome's male prostitutes. Can you imagine that on Good Friday of 1508, he was unable to allow his foot to be kissed by the faithful as it was completely covered with syphilitic sores?

Last on my list of perverted Popes, is Julius III, (1550-55) who fell in love with a young beggar boy he spotted brawling with a vendor's monkey in the streets. The pope went on to appoint this illiterate 17-year-old urchin as a cardinal, inspiring an epic poem of the day, entitled "In Praise of Sodomy," probably written by a disgruntled archbishop in his honor. All this demonstrates that the Vatican has been not only the alleged home of the Holy Spirit for nearly 2000 years, but also a place of sin, decadence, and perversion like no other on this planet.

However, Pope Francis said in September 2019 in preparation for the possible return of Cardinal Pell, who might be called to give testimony on the latest Vatican financial scandals so he can finally be allowed back to Rome, that the Catholic Church remains steadfast even in times of scandal because it is sustained by the Holy Spirit. Really? But What kind of Holy Spirit will defend such a bunch of pedophiles and criminals who only deserve the pits of hell?

Let's analyze what the Jesuit Pope said:

"Let us think of the history of Christians, including the history of the Church, with so many sins, with so many scandals, with so many bad things in these two millennia. And why did it not collapse? Because God is there."

"We are sinners, and so often we even give scandal. But God is with us," he then added. "But the Lord always saves. Strength is 'God with us.'"

Now the question is for how long the Holy Spirit will support this evil? Bergoglio is not a Christian, he is a Jesuit and Jesuits lie almost all the time to prevent scandals for their beloved Church that seems to have reached the end of its journey after the deal with Satan at the beginning of the Counter-Reformation when the Jesuits took over the battle to save the Church. However, Pope Francis pointed out that in contrast to the Church, human projects always fail, like the many political projects of history, including the empires and dictatorships. Francis said during one of his weekly general audiences in St. Peter's Square: "They felt very powerful, they thought they dominated the world. And then they all collapsed," he stated. "Even today, think of today's empires: they will collapse if God is not with them because the strength that men have in themselves is not lasting. Only the strength of God endures."

Pope Francis continued his catechesis on this occasion focusing on the Acts of the Apostles with a reflection on the importance of the Holy Spirit. In the fifth chapter of Acts, the Apostles are facing opposition from Jews, but they "respond with courage," showing they possess the "obedience of faith," Francis said. They have this courage, he said, because from Pentecost they are no longer alone, but the Holy Spirit is working through them. "They feel they cannot say, 'I' alone," he added. "Strengthened by this covenant, the Apostles do not let themselves be intimidated by anyone. They had impressive courage!" Pope Francis noted that at Jesus' arrest, the disciples ran away like cowards. "But, from cowards, they have become so brave. Why? Because the Holy Spirit was with them. The same happens to us: if we have the Holy Spirit inside, we will have the courage to move forward, the courage to win many struggles, not for ourselves but for the Spirit that is with us," he said, pointing to the martyrs, who gave their lives and never hid their Christian identity.

The pope recalled the Coptic Orthodox Christians who were killed in Libya in 2015. "But the last word they said was, 'Jesus, Jesus.' They were filled with the Holy Spirit," he said. In Acts, the Apostles are living like "megaphones" of the Holy Spirit, and this "makes the Jewish 'religious system' tremble," feeling threatened and responding with violence and death threats, Francis explained comparing himself and the Catholic Church to the acts of Jesus and His Apostles.

However, the Pope said, one Pharisee in the Sanhedrin, Gamaliel, teaches us how to practice discernment. Gamaliel's words teach people to “recognize the tree by its fruits. We ask the Holy Spirit to act in us so that, both personally and as a community, we can acquire the habitus of discernment,” Francis concluded.

Unfortunately, the fruits of the Catholic Church are made of poison if we compare them to their actions. Archbishop Dennis Schnurr of Cincinnati has recently submitted a report to Rome following criticism of the archdiocese's handling of allegations of sexual abuse against a local priest named Fr Geoff Drew who was arrested on August 19, 2019, on a nine-count indictment for sexual abuse. The charges date back 30 years, to before Drew's time in ministry when he was a music minister at a local parish. The accusations concern abuse said to have taken place over two years when the reported victim was 10 and 11 years old. Drew pled not guilty during an August 21st arraignment hearing. If convicted, the priest could face life in prison, but, of course, the Vatican will not allow that, just as with Cardinal Pell.

The Catholic Church may be in the business of saving souls, but amid the spiraling clergy sex abuse crisis, David Hickton, former U.S. Attorney for the Western District of Pennsylvania is confident that federal anti-racketeering laws could be applied to prosecute the Catholic Church, comparing it to an organized crime organization in 2018, something I have been saying and writing for years. The statute of limitations enjoys a rather privileged status in the Vatican and it seems the main way out chosen for many cases by the Vatican mafia in recent years. Our journey into the abyss continues as Pope Francis comes out regularly with the harshest political attacks against populist and Euroskeptical parties that have emerged in many countries of the European Union in recent years as well as President Donald J. Trump. In a long interview with La Stampa, Pope Francis talked about the challenges for Europe, the reception of migrants, the environmental emergency, and the dangers linked to sovereignty, that shows the world once again his everlasting love for the left-wing mondialists, from a Pontiff who is a political representative more than a religious leader. Bergoglio speaks of a historical and cultural unity that must be saved, but he wants to raise the flag of Islam on the Vatican and implement the infamous and upcoming One World Religion.

At the same time, Pope Francis continues to come out with the harshest political attack to date against the populist and Euroskeptical parties that have emerged in many countries of the European Union in recent years, and he does the same with Donald J. Trump, who he considers his biggest enemy. In an interview published by La Stampa, the Jesuit Pope said: Europe shall not break apart, it must be saved, it has human and Christian roots,” adding that Ursula von der Leyen, the new German EU Commission President...can revive the strength of the Founding Fathers. These statements by the Pope are completely ridiculous as Bergoglio has been actively working to destroy the “Christian roots” of Europe by supporting massive Islamic immigration to destabilize the Old Continent to embrace a religion founded by a pedophile.

Last summer, I reported about Catholic Archbishop William E. Lori of Baltimore, who issued an official statement rebutting the now-famous tweet from President Donald Trump regarding the rat-infested city stating:

“It saddens me to see Baltimore severely denigrated by President Trump. Baltimore is near and dear to my heart.”

Later the attack by the Catholic hierarchy against Trump intensified as the Archbishop of Washington, D.C. defended Archbishop Lori, accusing Trump of being divisive. In the meantime, Pro-“LGBT” Archbishop Wilton Gregory, who became head of the Washington Archdiocese earlier this year, succeeding Cardinal Donald Wuerl after Wuerl was accused of sexual abuse cover-up, declared on the 1st of August 2019 in the Catholic Standard, the official archdiocesan newspaper: “That recent public comments by our President and others and the responses they have generated, have deepened divisions and diminished our national life. In particular, I join my brother Archbishop William Lori in sadness and deep regret for the ways our Maryland neighbors in Baltimore have been denigrated in recent public attacks.” He went on to say, “Comments which dismiss, demean or demonize any of God's children are destructive of the common good and a denial of our national pledge of ‘liberty and justice for all.’” According to The Washington Post, this was Archbishop Gregory's first public statement since his installment as Archbishop of D.C. on May 21, 2019.

Catholic Cardinals are gradually making their dislike towards the U.S. president public instead of taking care of their pedophile Church still ruled by the same homosexual mafia. At the moment, a New Jersey Catholic bishop who is one of Theodore McCarrick's infamous creations is continuing to protect and promote the homosexual predator clergy, and sources have told my friends at Church Militant that he is lovers with one of the priests he is protecting. This is all part of what Archbishop Carlo Maria Viganò called the corrupt homosexual mafia running the Church and nothing has changed. Creating a so-called "new Church" is a centuries-old project by Freemasons that has accelerated under revolution-minded clerics in the last 60 years, according to Viganò, who was bestowed in 2019 an award by the Milwaukee chapter of Catholics United for the Faith (CUF) for exposing cover-ups by the highest levels of the Catholic Church.

However, Viganò, who is in hiding, asked John-Henry Westen, the co-founder and editor of LifeSiteNews, to accept the award on his behalf in Milwaukee at a dinner organized by the CUF in October 2019. Soon afterward, the pro-life Catholic news site LifeSiteNews was banned from the Apple News platform for allegedly promoting "intolerance." An ongoing LifePetitions asking Apple News to reinstate LifeSite's Apple News channel quickly gathered over 40,000 signatures in just two days! Apple's banning of LifeSiteNews from Apple News, as it happened one year ago to Infowars, is blatant censorship of freedom of speech and, of course, another dirty move by the Jesuits to punish those who expose them. Having said that, the explosion of this petition is a great example of the present frustration that a lot of people are feeling about #BigTech censorship and the stripping away of our rights. It is clear to everyone that the Vatican has intervened directly on Apple to get LifeSite's Apple News channel banned after their endorsement by Archbishop Carlo Maria Viganò became unacceptable for Pope Francis, just as the Jesuit stooges Hillary Clinton and George Soros intervened to censor Alex Jones.

Remember, Apple CEO Tim Cook has a close relationship with Pope Francis, especially after he donated over a million dollars to Pope Francis in 2016, only a week after the Jesuit Pope sat down with former Google CEO Eric Schmidt. Cook and the Pope had a lot of topics to cover as Apple was asking for help in avoiding further taxes in Europe using the Institute for the Works of Religion, commonly known as the Vatican Bank. The Vatican helps the Silicon Valley Mafia avoid paying taxes in exchange for their censorship and the Jesuit-control of social media.

How the Rainforest was set on Fire to Facilitate the Globalist agenda

The Synod of Bishops on the Pan Amazon region, which took place in October 2019, in the Vatican, discussed the possibility of clergy from the area getting married. The Amazon region, located in the countries of Bolivia, Brazil, Colombia, Ecuador, Guyana, Peru, Suriname, and Venezuela, was chosen for its remoteness and for being under strict Jesuit control. This region is difficult to access and considered remote enough for this new Catholic experiment, but there is much more to it.

Before the event in late May 2019, Amazon rainforest Chief Raoni Metuktire arrived at the Vatican to strike a deal with Pope Francis, the first South American Pope. During the visit, Chief Raoni attacked Conservative Brazilian leader Jair Bolsonaro, saying he “shouldn’t be president anymore,” and the Vatican media also criticized Bolsonaro, who is considered to be one of the biggest enemies of the Jesuit Pope. The old Kayapo chief, wearing his traditional lip plate and yellow crown, visited Italy and the Vatican to raise awareness and support for the protection of the Brazilian reserve, but he was called in by the Jesuits to support their evil plan to set the Amazon on fire in a desperate attempt to sabotage President Bolsonaro, and raise awareness to their alleged global warming and climate change agenda false promoted by the NWO elite, and figures like wannabe environmentalist Leonardo DiCaprio.

The Holy See press office director explained back how the pope intended to use the meeting with Kayapo to stress environment safeguards, but later the Synod of Bishops on the Pan-Amazonian heightened tensions between the Catholic Church in Brazil and the populist government of President Jair Bolsonaro, who is close to President Trump. In November 2019, Brazil’s president accused Leonardo DiCaprio of bankrolling the deliberate incineration of the Amazon rainforest. “Leonardo DiCaprio, dammit, you’re collaborating with the burning of the Amazon,” Bolsonaro declared, accusing the actor of being part of an international “campaign against Brazil.” Leonardo DiCaprio is just a puppet of the left-wing globalists working for the Jesuits.

The national newspaper O Estado de S. Paulo reported in February 2019, that the Brazilian government believed the Pan Synod promoted a “leftist agenda” and they were right. According to the leftist paper, military ministers “saw the church as a potential opponent” and intended to “neutralize” eventual critiques of the government during the synod, but the whole Pachamama affair demonstrated that Bolsonaro’s emissaries must have been unsuccessful in stopping the Jesuit globalist agenda.

In the meantime, a record number of fires ravaged the vast rainforest in the summer of 2019 after the visit of the Amazon rainforest chief, and even CNN meteorologist Haley Brink stated at one point that the fires were “definitely human-induced,” and cannot be attributed to natural causes like lightning strikes. In the summer of 2019, the Amazon rainforest started to burn at a record rate, according to the National Institute for Space Research (INPE), which has been tracking Brazil’s fires since 2013. In exchange for Chief Raoni Metuktire’s support for setting the Amazon on fire, the Pope granted his approval of spirit-worship in the Amazon, unleashing on the Church the infamous Pachamama affair. The Vatican also discussed during the controversial Synod the shortage of priests in the region.

However, Walter Brandmüller, a German cardinal, claimed even before the start of the Synod on the Amazon, that the proposals discussed in the preparatory document released by the Holy See were “heretical” because of their involvement with indigenous faiths and their veneration of nature. Brandmüller rightfully complained by saying: “In the context of the call for harmony with nature, there is even talk about the dialogue with the spirits.” But, of course, nothing was done.

The Synod of Bishops for the Pan-Amazon region that took place from the 6th to the 27th of October 2019, announced by Pope Francis on October 15, 2017, became the most controversial Synod of all time, and the fires that erupted in the Amazon region were eventually exposed as man-made fires. The “lungs of the earth” were set ablaze because of an evil plan devised by Pope Francis and Father Arturo Sosa, the Superior General of the Society of Jesus, to regain not only control of Brazil but the whole of South America that has always been considered a Jesuit territory for the Illuminati elite.

Again in the summer of 2019 in Venezuela, We see Venezuelan traditional Freemason Juan Guaidò, a good man, and a good Christian, who opposed the Jesuit agenda, put under investigation for treason, and every day his destiny looks more and more uncertain. The evil agenda of the Jesuits must be stopped to avoid an even bigger crisis on the U.S. Mexican border in the coming years. Remember, that the fires in the Amazon rainforest in the summer of 2019 were set not only in an attempt to clear land for cattle ranching, but also to facilitate the Pope's agenda. Bolsonaro's son Eduardo, also a politician, claimed on Twitter in November 2019 that DiCaprio had donated $300,000 (£230,000) to "the NGO that set fire to the Amazon" and accused the conservation group WWF of paying the NGO about £13,000 for photographs of the burning forest as reported by the British newspaper, The Guardian.

Returning to the Synod of the Pan Amazon region, Vatican spokesman Tornielli explained that "The synod did not approve anything because it is a consultative body," specifying, that in the end, it is the Pope who makes the final decision. But we all know the Jesuits Pope's real agenda is to control and conquer the vast resources of the Amazon region for his Jesuits.

The plan devised by the Pope and his Jesuits that include the possibility of priests getting married in remote areas was already laid out in the Synod's preparatory document, entitled Instrumentum laboris, which mentions: The difficulties that communities in remote areas face in receiving the sacraments, and of having priests who can celebrate Mass. The director of the Vatican Dicastery for Communications also explained that: "For many centuries in the Catholic Church there have been married priests. They are the priests of the Eastern Catholic Churches who have returned to full communion with Rome. But note, it's not that priests can marry but that persons already married are ordained, this is for the Easterners."

Adding: "The same thing exists, and perhaps this will be a surprise for our listeners, in the Latin Rite Church, as an exception, from the time of Pius XII. Pope Pacelli received former Anglican priests who wanted to enter into communion with Rome as they were married and were ordained priests and can support their families." Moreover, Tornielli then said that "Pope Benedict himself with the constitution Anglicanorum coetibus has established that this exception can continue in the case of the Anglicans. So there already are exceptions."

In 2009, Pope Benedict XVI approved the creation of personal ordinariates, jurisdictions created to receive the thousands of Anglicans who request to return to full communion with the Catholic Church. In that framework, married Anglican priests can be ordained as Catholic priests. Of course, in this latest development, you would now have to go and live in the middle of the jungle to have this privilege so not to upset the increasingly popular Jesuit Fr. James Martin, SJ and the entire Catholic LGBT rights community, as the gay Mafia within the Catholic hierarchy represents 80% of the Catholic priests of today. Even if the Archbishop of Philadelphia urged caution regarding the highly controversial message of Fr. James Martin SJ, regarding homosexuality and Catholicism, and other bishops have weighed in in recent months on Martin's controversial message and have continued to exchange views on this controversial matter. Bishop Thomas Paprocki of Springfield, Illinois, for example, was very critical when he wrote on September 19, 2019: "Father Martin's public messages create confusion among the faithful and disrupt the unity of the Church by promoting a false sense that immoral sexual behavior is acceptable under God's law." However, this has not stopped Jesuit Fr. James Martin, an open advocate of the LGBTQ Catholics, in particular, to meet once again with Pope Francis on September 30, 2019. The two Jesuits seem pretty close and united in their defense of this issue, making some people suspect that even Bergoglio might be a homosexual.

A group representing LGBT rights met previously in a high-level meeting in the Vatican in April 2019, to ask for Pope Francis' open support for the decriminalization of homosexuality and even the possibility of gay marriage among priests. Approximately 50 international representatives traveled to Rome for this new pink revolution that is unfolding every day in the Catholic Church. I find that there is obvious discrimination towards heterosexual men who have been forbidden from becoming Catholic priests in the past. Many years ago, I was offered a position as a priest by a senior Vatican official, if I became celibate. He told me almost in tears, "You will make a great Bishop if only you didn't like women." Of course, that happened before I began my exposure work against the hypocrisy of the Vatican, now fully controlled by the Jesuits and exponents of the secretive Vatican LGBT community which, unfortunately, includes Pedosexuals.

On the issue of the sexuality of Jesus, the traditional understanding of Christian churches is that Jesus did not marry and remained celibate until his death. That has not prevented speculation about alternative theories on his sexuality. The Gospels and the New Testament reveal little on the subject, but the non-canonical Gospel of Philip (dating from around the third century and censured by the Catholic Church) describes Jesus' relationship with Mary Magdalene using Coptic variants of the Greek κοινωνός (koinōnos), That uses cognates of koinōnos and Coptic equivalents to refer to the literal pairing of man and woman in marriage and sexual intercourse.

Mary Magdalene is mentioned as one of three women named Mary "who always walked with the Lord," as His companion (Philip 59.6–11). The work also says that the Lord loved her more than all the disciples, and used to kiss her often (63.34–36). But Jesus was not judgemental towards gays or eunuchs and the early church welcomed a gay man. However, it is heresy to say that Jesus Christ indulged in homosexuality as certain elements within the Vatican, and, of course, the Satanists like to spew to sabotage the true character of Jesus Christ and the existence of His Bloodline for their evil agenda. For this reason, Netflix has released in December 2019 a Brazilian “gay Jesus” Christmas film called, “The First Temptation of Christ” that sparked the biggest controversy ever on this subject with millions of people signing a Change.org petition asking Netflix to remove this hideous movie.

Of course, the controversy around religious features is nothing new. In 1979, numerous British town councils banned Monty Python’s, “The Life of Brian” from being exhibited in local theatres, and in 1988, the Martin Scorsese Biblical drama, “The Last Temptation of Christ” was released by Universal Pictures under a storm of protests, the Roman Catholic Church labeled the film “morally objectionable,” and a group of Southern California Protestant ministers urged a total boycott of the businesses owned by MCA if Universal Pictures released Scorsese’s film.

The only “sin” of Scorsese otherwise excellent film based on a novel by Nikos Kazantzakis, was to depict Jesus in human terms, struggling against his divine fate but not giving in to temptation, and the alleged violence in certain scenes. For this reason, the late gay film director, Franco Zeffirelli, who directed the 1977 film “Jesus Of Nazareth,” tried to have Scorsese’s movie banned from Italian cinemas, and initially withdrew his film, “The Young Toscanini” from the Venice Film Festival in protest. There were also protests in 2004 for Mel Gibson’s, “The Passion of the Christ” that was accused of anti-Semitism due to key phrases of unsubtitled Aramaic. But today, the situation is very different in the age of the Antichrist and Obama’s Netflix, as the LGBT community wants to openly promote a gay version of Jesus for Christmas on their favorite platform. However the truth will be proven on the heterosexual nature of Jesus once the secret Vatican Archives are opened, but in the meantime, Pope Francis is pushing for a so-called “new humanism” to destroy all family values.

The Pope’s “new humanism” could “wipe out Christianity” and these are not my words but the words of a Catholic Nun that should make us all reflect on the decline of the Catholic Church today and its demonic role in the end times.

When news of Pope Francis’ “Global Pact” for “new humanism” reached Youtube personality Mother Miriam (formerly Rosalind Moss), who is a Catholic nun on a mission, she openly accused the pope’s new plan of “ruining our society, ruining our culture, and destroying the family.” On September 12, 2019, the Vatican issued yet another controversial statement inviting religious, humanitarian, international leaders, and leading politicians, academics, scientists, and athletes, to sign what was defined as a “Global Pact on Education.” Soon after, Mother Miriam reflected on it saying to her viewers: We did not awake this morning to glorious news, and it all has to do with ruining our society, ruining our culture, and destroying the family.

Officially, the goal of the Jesuit-influenced “Global Pact on Education” is to hand “on to younger generations a united and fraternal common home.” Mother Miriam told the listeners of her show this is the “common home of the devil. There is no common home we have but Heaven and Christianity on Earth this side of Heaven. We have no common home other than that.” According to a Vatican site promoting the infamous pact, “Pope Francis has invited everyone who cares about the education of the young generation to sign a Global Pact, to create a global change of mentality through education.”

The global change wants to further enslave mankind under the directions of the infamous Jesuits. Mother Miriam even accused the Jesuit Pope of being in bed with the Communists: “Beloved, that is what the Communists set out to do well over a hundred years ago,” Adding with no fear of the possible consequences and with great courage that: “The evil has entered into the Church, and it has been bought by the very pope himself and the hierarchy.” The pope said about this new “Pact”: “This [the Global Education Pact], will result in men and women who are open, responsible, prepared to listen, dialogue and reflect with others, and capable of weaving relationships with families, between generations, and with civil society, and thus to create a new humanism.”

If you think about it, in 2019 a Catholic nun that openly calls the pope’s initiative to globalize education “demonic” means the Church of Rome is dealing with an increasingly anti-Christian hierarchy. Of course, the nun was careful to emphasize that she was calling the proposition, not the pope, “demonic”, but we all know that Francis and his Jesuit brothers are the roots of a lot of evil emanating today from the Holy See. Pope Francis should have resigned a long time ago, instead, he prefers to conduct his Church towards heresy, stating that to reach his proposed objectives, everyone needs to “have the courage to place the human person at the center” and to “train individuals who are ready to offer themselves in service of the community.”

So instead of placing Christ and God at the center, we place man at the center, which has always been the ultimate goal of the Age of enlightenment and the dark side of the Illuminati.

How we became so ignorant...

On the 17th of December 2019, hundreds of college professors, referring to themselves as “American historians,” signed a letter begging the U.S. House of Representatives to impeach President Donald J.Trump, claiming that the president had “violated his oath” citing his “brazen contempt” for the government. This group also suggested that the president’s personal life was grounds for impeachment, even citing Alexander Hamilton, who they say has argued that the republic is “vulnerable to the rise of an unscrupulous demagogue.”

The academic world of today is run by left-wing globalists who want to keep us in the dark on behalf of their Jesuit overlords, ignorant to who is pulling the strings in the real world. These “American historians,” are a disgraceful example of the arrogance and presumption of the oppressing academic world of today that view us as ignorants with no rights. But how did they manage to keep us ignorant and subservient for so long? Well, the answer is forced government indoctrination camps otherwise known as schools, colleges, and universities.

As Ellwood Cubberley wrote in Conceptions of Education in 1909, “Each year the child is coming to belong more to the State and less and less to the parent.” Institutions have been created to control, brainwash, and legitimize the system ultimately controlled by the Jesuits and their Illuminati agents through collegiate secret societies, especially in North America. One of these kinds of secret societies, in particular, is directly linked to the Jesuits. In 1903, a group of priests from the Company of Jesus convened due to rising concerns that Georgetown University was losing its Jesuit values as it gained national prominence.

So the Jesuits formed an all-male secret society called the Society of Stewards to work anonymously and in the shadows to ensure that the core traditions that established Georgetown as a Jesuit university are kept safe. This is publicly available information conveniently overlooked by many. Since then, the Society has been known to recruit promising student leaders in their sophomore and junior year to join them to uphold Georgetown's Catholic identity amidst American secularization. However, things changed after the Second Vatican Council and from the second half of the 60s, it became increasingly evident they were endorsing a leftist agenda.

While not much is known about this secret society that was founded to craft future Jesuit Illuminati agents, things suddenly changed at the end of the 80s when a Georgetown student newspaper leaked details of their existence in 1988. The exposure sparked a sudden outcry from students who protested that the society promoted elitism and exclusivity following the traditions of the Jesuit inner circle. Traditions that are well-reflected in the values of Bill Clinton, and his wife, for example. In the early nineties, the Society of Stewards eventually split in two as the Second Vatican Council’s progressive ideology was not embraced by everyone. One group claiming to be the “true line” of stewards, while the other taking up the name of the Second Society of Stewards. The original Stewards group dwindled and died out during the 1990s as the increased leftist values of the Jesuits made them uncomfortable, but leaks and exposes throughout the past decade show that the Second Society of Stewards is still very much active and at the forefront of the Georgetown community. They meet in the dark cellars of Healy Hall, which appear briefly in the scene where Father Karras in The Exorcist goes to meet with Church leaders to request permission for Regan MacNeil's exorcism, and one can find a rather scary looking blood-red graffiti writing along the walls of their temple. The words “Circuli Crux Non Orbis Prosunt” that are found originally on The Alchemical Door, on the Esquiline hill in Piazza Vittorio, in Rome.

During the Obama-era a major scandal erupted in campus politics during the Georgetown University Student Association executive elections in February 2013, when two of the leading candidates (along with some of their top campaign staffers) were outed as Stewards by campus newspapers The Hoya and The Georgetown Voice, which had obtained the societies’ internal communications from an anonymous source calling himself “Steward Throat,” a sort of Illuminati whistleblower. Similarly, four of the eight presidential and vice-presidential candidates in the 2014 election were also revealed to be Stewards, though the issue was not as contentious as it had been the year before. Ultimately, the sole ticket without a Steward as either president or vice-president won the election. [\[71\]](#)

In 2019, The Hoya, reported the creation of an additional secret society in existence among Georgetown undergraduate students, called the Orb that is even more liberal and demented. This society allegedly consists of LGBT students and allies, and they are reported to gather in hidden tunnels beneath the Georgetown campus and engage in unknown activities that some say resemble the Crowleyan Choronzon Club. The origins of the society and the identities of its members are currently unknown but it seems they are growing and spreading their tentacles all over Georgetown with the support of certain LGBT friendly Jesuits.

There are also many other collegiate secret societies operating in the U.S. They might not operate under the direct supervision of the Jesuits, but they are controlled by their Illuminati agents. From The Order of Scroll and Key in Dickinson College to the Order of Gimghoul in the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill or the QEBH at the University of Missouri to the most known one of them all, the Skull & Bones at Yale University, there are far too many to list here. This phenomenon is not a mere conspiracy theory so let's go over the roots of the manipulation of the young sheep by the elite after an overview of their privileged system.

Before 1852, American education consisted of one-room schoolhouses, independent teachers, and students of all ages attending of their free will. Curriculums and funding came directly from local communities without a federalized bureaucracy ruling over every facet, like today. From 1852 to 1918 things changed as the government began pushing to enforce compulsory schooling laws all across America. These were coupled with new "child labor laws" to take children off the farms from under their family's tutelage and force them into indoctrination camps under the government's tutelage. These laws were met with strenuous opposition at every turn by the U.S. population and unless there was an incredibly well-backed agenda to make sure such laws passed, they would not have. If it was simply a matter of what the people in individual states wanted, child labor and compulsory schooling issues would have been dropped as soon as they were raised.

FIG. 42 – Healy Hall, entrance - Georgetown University

Ellwood Cubberley, American educator, and administrator who—as the head (1898–1933) of Stanford University's department of education and, later, its School of Education—helped establish education as a university-level subject in the U.S. wrote: “At first the laws were optional ... later the law was made statewide but the compulsory period was short (ten to twelve weeks) and the age limits low nine to twelve years. After this, struggle came to extend the time, often little by little...to extend the age limits downward to eight and seven and upwards to fourteen, fifteen or sixteen; to make the law applies to children attending private and parochial schools, and to require cooperation from such schools for the proper handling of cases; to institute state supervision of local enforcement; to connect school attendance enforcement with the child labor legislation of the State through a system of working permits.”

Once federalized mandatory schooling was employed countrywide, the compulsory attendance of 9-12-year-olds, 10-12 weeks a year, was incrementally lengthened to the point that nowadays 4-year-olds are entering preschools and 26-year-old doctors are still being indoctrinated. Ironically, the longer students remain in their respective institutions, the more respect they are generally given in their field. Thus our “experts” in Medicine, Science, Technology, Philosophy, Economics, Politics, etc. are generally those who have received the most government indoctrination, and those who have been introduced to the best and most exclusive fraternities and secret societies. Ellwood Cubberley wrote in, Public Education in the United States, 1919/34: Since 1900, and due more to the activity of persons concerned with social legislation and those interested in improving the moral welfare of children than to educators themselves, there has been a general revision of the compulsory education laws of our States and the enactment of much new child welfare ... and anti-child labor legislation ... These laws have brought into the schools not only the truant and the incorrigible, who under former conditions either left early or were expelled but also many children ... who have no aptitude for book learning and many children of inferior mental qualities who do not profit by ordinary classroom procedures ... Our schools have come to contain many children who ... become a nuisance in the school and tend to demoralize school procedures.

At the turn of the 20th century, Cubberley spoke of how mechanically minded children, without aptitude for book learning, or of inferior mental capacities, “become a nuisance in the school and tend to demoralize school procedure.” If you believe in the myth of a benevolent nanny-state that looks out for your best interests from cradle to grave, “No Child Left Behind” might fit well into your philosophy, but for independent individuals, lovers of freedom, this is the final step in government mind-control and something I tried to avoid all my life. Helen Todd, in the article “Why Children Work,” published in McClure’s Magazine in April 1913, said: In 1909 a factory inspector did an informal survey of 500 working children in 20 factories. She found that 412 of them would rather work in the terrible conditions of the factories than return to school.

I don’t blame them, that’s how I felt when I went to my father at 17 to tell him the educational system in Italy and in the U.S. where my grandmother wanted me to study, were rigged, and I preferred self-education and working as a DJ than to be enslaved by these crooks and their dishonest system for the rest of my life.

Harris’ words from his 1906, The Philosophy of Education are shocking: Ninety-nine [students] out of a hundred are automata, careful to walk in prescribed paths, careful to follow the prescribed custom. This is not an accident but the result of substantial education, which, scientifically defined, is the subsumption of the individual.

Is this a sane “Philosophy of Education” by anyone’s standards? This is the man who gave America scientifically age-graded classrooms to replace the long successful practice of mixed-age school houses. In The Philosophy of Education, Harris wrote his vision of the perfect classroom: “The great purpose of school can be realized better in dark, airless, ugly places ... It is to master the physical self, to transcend the beauty of nature. School should develop the power to withdraw from the external world.”

The first federalized education board was in 1870 founded NEA (National Education Administration) which quickly announced that countrywide school science courses must be restructured to teach “evolution” as fact, not theory. Having gained a fair amount of pull in the NEA, in 1903, John D. Rockefeller created the GEB (General Education Board) in an effort toward “this goal of social control.”

Later, in 1923 he would also create the International Education Board providing over $20 million to promote education abroad. The Rockefeller, Carnegie, and Ford groups have often funded (and thus steered) American Jesuit-influenced education more so even than the government. John Taylor Gatto, who revealed the inner circle secrets of the American school system after 10 years of dedicated research to uncover some of the most alarming ideas and writings by the creators and advocates of mandatory attendance schooling, wrote in The Underground History of American Education, Reading through the papers of the Rockefeller Foundation’s General Education Board an endowment rivaled in school policy influence in the first half of the twentieth century only by Andrew Carnegie’s various philanthropies seven curious elements force themselves on the careful reader:

- 1) There appears a clear intention to mold people through schooling.
- 2) There is a clear intention to eliminate tradition and scholarship.
- 3) The net effect of various projects is to create a strong class system verging on caste.
- 4) There is a clear intention to reduce mass critical intelligence while supporting infinite specialization.
- 5) There is a clear intention to weaken parental influence.
- 6) There is a clear intention to overthrow accepted custom.
- 7) There is striking congruency between the cumulative purposes of GEB projects and the utopian precepts of the oddball religious sect, once known as Perfectionism, a secular religion aimed at making the perfection of human nature, not salvation or happiness, the purpose of existence.

The agenda of philanthropy, which had so much to do with the schools we got, turns out to contain an intensely political component.

As Gary Allen, wrote in The Rockefeller File: One would assume that, since the Rockefellers are thought of as capitalists, they would have used their fortune to foster the philosophy of individual liberty. But, just the opposite is true. We have been unable to find a single project in the history of the Rockefeller foundations which promotes free enterprise, almost all of the Rockefeller grants have been used directly or indirectly to promote economic and social collectivism, i.e., Socialism Fascism. Remember Philanthropy is the essential element in the making of Rockefeller power and it gives the Rockefellers as Myer Kutz, once wrote in Rockefeller Power (1974) : a priceless reputation as public benefactors which the public values so highly that power over public affairs is placed in the Rockefellers' hands. Philanthropy generates more power than wealth alone can provide. Rockefeller charity and philanthropy influence many sectors of society from education to politics to religion. Here's an abridged list of Rockefeller funded organizations:

American Assembly
American Association for the United Nations
American Friends Service Committee
Atlantic Union
Center for Advanced Study in Behavioral Science Center of Diplomacy and Foreign Policy

John D. Rockefeller made it clear in the General Education Board (1906) when he stated:

"We have not to rise up from them authors, educators, poets or men of letters. We shall not search for great artists, painters, musicians nor lawyers, doctors, preachers, politicians, statesmen – of whom we have an ample supply. The task is simple. We will organize children and teach them in a perfect way the things their fathers and mothers are doing in an imperfect way."

This is not a man looking out for the best interests of his students. You can get a good sense of his demeanor from statements like "yield themselves with perfect docility to our molding hands" and talking about creating a "perfect system" of state education better than imperfect parental education. The late Martin Luther King Jr., for one, disagreed with John D. Rockefeller ways when he said:

"The group consisting of a mother, father, and child is the main educational agency of mankind."

Before WWI, in a speech to American businessmen, President Woodrow Wilson admitted similar goals as the Rockefellers: We want one class to have a liberal education. We want another class, a very much larger class of necessity, to forgo the privilege of liberal education and fit themselves to perform specific difficult manual tasks. In 1946, former editor of the National Education Association Journal, Joy Elmer, published, "The Teacher and World Government" stating right out in the open that things that underline the total control of the children are part of the New World Order: In the struggle to establish an adequate world government, the teacher... can do much to prepare the hearts and minds of children for global understanding and cooperation... At the very heart of all the agencies which will assure the coming of world government must stand the school, the teacher, and the organized profession.

The following year, in 1947, The American Education Fellowship, organized by establishment, minion John Dewey (of the "Dewey decimal system") called for the establishment of genuine world order, an order in which national sovereignty is subordinate to world authority. In October 1947, NEA Associate Secretary William Carr wrote in the NEA Journal that teachers should: teach about the various proposals that have been made for the strengthening of the United Nations and the establishment of world citizenship and world government. [\[73\]](#)

The New World Order was born and they had everything figured out to keep us all stupid and brainwashed until the end times, courtesy of the Jesuits and the Vatican manufacturers of Western culture. Elitist philosopher, Bertrand Russell revered by the Illuminati in his 1951 book The Impact of Science on Society, wrote: Education should aim at destroying free will so that after pupils are thus schooled they will be incapable throughout the rest of their lives of thinking or acting otherwise than as their schoolmasters would have wished.

Adding a confirmation of our worst fears regarding the brainwashing of children and the manipulatory nature of Bertrand Russell: Influences of the home are obstructive; and to condition students, verses set to music and repeatedly intoned are very effective... It is for a future scientist to make these maxims precise and discover exactly how much it costs per head to make children believe that snow is black. When the technique has been perfected, every government that has been in charge of education for more than one generation will be able to control its subjects securely without the need of armies or policemen.

They want us to believe “snow is black”? Well, we know that snow is white as we all know that everything promoted by globalists is the result of compromise and corruption at the highest levels of our society. In 1953, Carroll Reece, Tennessee Congressman and Chairman of the RNC (Republican National Committee) along with research director Norman Dodd, and lawyer Rene Wormser performed the first and only in-depth investigation into the activities of the Rockefeller, Carnegie, and The Ford Foundation and its effect on American education. They discovered that the Rockefeller foundation was the primary culprit behind the NEA’s rapidly changing policies and the teaching of socialism in America’s schools/universities. The Rockefeller -Carnegie groups have continued unopposed in controlling education hand in hand with the Company of Jesus aka the Jesuits.

A few quotes worth reading in this context:

–Bertrand Russell

“Give me four years to teach the children and the seed I have sown will never be uprooted.”

–Vladimir Lenin

“Education is a weapon, whose effect depends on who holds it in his hands and at whom it is aimed.”

–Joseph Stalin

“Schools have not necessarily much to do with education. They are mainly institutions of control, where basic habits must be inculcated in the young. Education is quite different and has little place in school.”

–Winston Churchill

Every day all over the world, millions of bright young minds are spending the best years of their lives being herded around by governments of the Vatican led New World Order like cattle, responding to bells, whistles, and other Pavlovian/Skinnerian conditioning. Millions of children are locked into this program Monday to Friday, from 9 to 5, performing boring/arduous tasks against their will because society has deemed it necessary for them to be brainwashed in the process. Just like the workplace, only unquestioning compliance to whatever is said by the teacher is rewarded, and your only reprieves are snack breaks and lunchtime, which are withheld from you like salivating dogs until the bell rings. Meanwhile, you anxiously sit in rigid rows all facing the big boss of the situation and the blackboard focused on fantasy objectives, conditioned to view other students as competitors and hindrances. [\[74\]](#)

Nobody will tell you that George Washington attended only 2 years of formal schooling in his life, or that Adam Weishaupt founded the Illuminati at the tender age of 28 when most contemporary libtards are still trying to understand what to do in life. They will never tell you that Abraham Lincoln had only 50 weeks of schooling and even that was seen as a waste of time by his relatives.

In 1840, the rate of complex literacy in the U.S. was incredibly high, between 93 and 100 percent. The Connecticut census showed only 1 of every 579 people was illiterate. Over a century and a half later in 1993, the National Adult Literacy Survey reported that 1 in every 5 Americans was illiterate! [\[75\]](#) Can you believe it? The one thing Christians, conservatives, patriots, and traditionalists should do right now in the U.S. and around the world to obtain a new renaissance is to throw in all their efforts in making real culture great again. To obtain this goal they need to take back the schools and the whole educational system from the far-leftists who have been able to dominate the direction of administration and teaching since they took over the show in the late 60s.

Look, for example, at America's schools in years past, versus years present, and you will notice a huge difference. Jon Guttman, a research director for the World History Group wrote on History Net. "In 2009, the United States was ranked 18th out of 36 industrialized nations. Over that time, complacency and inefficiency, reflective of lower priorities in education, and inconsistencies among the various school systems contribute to a decline." ^[76] The elite wants to keep the sheeple ignorant. The late Richard Mitchell (d. December 27, 2002.), wrote in The Underground Grammarian these fitting words: Far from failing in its intended task, our educational system is succeeding magnificently because it aims to keep the American people thoughtless enough to go on supporting the system. Young people who end up joining stupid organizations like Antifa, or idolize demonic figures like Greta Thunberg, nominated TIME's Person of the Year in 2019, just like Adolf Hitler was in 1939 and Joseph Stalin in 1939 and 1942. As Vladimir Lenin reportedly said, it only takes one generation of youth to transform the world. Within two or three generations, this "trickle-down" effect of Jesuit left-wing "influence" would enable them to totally control the minds and thus the lives of the people of the world. The Jesuits and their left-wing Illuminati agents in America and Europe have shaped generations of idiots and libtards since 1968, the infamous year that shattered America and the rest of the Western world's educational systems placing the youth into the hands of the leftists and their Jesuit supervisors.

This became even more clear to me in November 2019, when the Democratic National Committee announced that the Loyola Marymount University's Gersten Pavilion would be the venue for the sixth Democratic presidential candidates' debate taking place on December 19th, 2019, co-hosted by PBS NewsHour and POLITICO, the ultimate product of Jesuit leftist manipulation and control over America's political agenda. The Democrats must have known this debate would follow their impeachment farse charade so they decided to place it at the Loyola Marymount University (LMU), a private Jesuit run university in Los Angeles, California favored by local libtards and run by the infamous Society of Jesus. People need to wake up to the weaponization of culture for political means by the infamous Jesuits if they want to preserve the American way of life.

Let's always remember what Bill Hughes wrote in his book, The Enemy Unmasked: One of the major purposes of the Jesuits was to destroy every trace of Protestantism and its principles, including religious freedom, republicanism, representative government, and an economy built around a strong middle class. Another purpose of the Jesuits was to greatly expand the power and control of the papacy throughout the entire world.

So the decision of the Democrats to make their speech at the Loyola Marymount University was unquestionably dedicated to their loyalty to the Jesuits, especially after the impeachment of President Donald J. Trump. The Democrats went literally out of their way to have their sixth Democratic presidential candidates' debate at Loyola Marymount University, even when the debate's future was put in jeopardy recently by a strike by a labor union representing 150 workers in the food services industry, working for a company that provides meals for the university. The Democratic National Committee (DNC) decided to have their sixth 2020 presidential primary debate at the Loyola Marymount University after similar concerns were raised by local labor officials about using another venue at the University of California but, of course, the Jesuit University was able to overcome such problems. The majority of the U.S. population might not know the secrets of the Jesuits, but they know your secrets, and they want to indoctrinate all of us with their evil ideology. There is no better way to achieve control of a society than to control the young by implanting Jesuit concepts (ideologies) and values (morality) into impressionable, unquestioning and trusting minds in classrooms every day. The children of today will become in places like the U.S. the Democratic candidates of tomorrow willing to serve their evil masters.

So since 1968 generations of fools and libtards have been produced for the joy of the elite ruling this planet but in the UK, the situation is no better, as British Universities don't permit any discussions on controversial subjects, like Brexit, for example.

Cambridge, once at the scholarly heart of the English Reformation and the Parliamentary struggle against arbitrary power has now become no better than Communist China, with an authoritarian regime that suppresses free speech. Dr. Radomir Tylecote, a distinguished Research Fellow of the Institute of Economic Affairs and a former adviser for the Treasury who was suspended from his Whitehall role after co-authoring a book criticizing the EU, has recently confirmed the unprecedented situation in British Universities in a brilliant article entitled "Why is there more intellectual freedom in Bucharest than Cambridge?"

This is a small extract that I find particularly enlightening, in which Dr. Tylecote compares the present situation with what is happening in Eastern Europe in countries like Romania. A place where their experience with Communism seems to be protecting them from this perverse ideology:

I have long held the theory that the experience of communism in Eastern Europe has inoculated these countries against socialism today. It's not that I romanticize these former Soviet satellites. Their political elites are frequently crooked (and often in hock to EU officials). Many of their citizens will likely wait decades before getting a real choice about EU membership. Most read little criticism of Brussels in their newspapers, just the boiler-plate encomiums. But that is beside the point.

The students in Bucharest were doing what students are supposed to do: hearing each side of the argument. They didn't show any of the symptoms of intellectual decay that I often encounter among students in the Anglosphere – in particular, using someone's dissent from progressive orthodoxy to exclude, purge, persecute, or otherwise gain power over them (I mean no-platforming, social-media mobbing or denouncing in an 'open letter'). But there is another malady that afflicts so many of our students, and is often indicative of an authoritarian mindset: they are so boring. In Cambridge, there is a continued failure to uphold free speech or to grasp what it is to be properly liberal. Because if I can make a case against rule by faceless bureaucrats in a former Warsaw Pact dictatorship but not at one of our finest universities, our culture is in serious trouble. By 1975 Saul Bellow warned that 'the universities have failed painfully' and in the 1980s Allan Bloom pointed out that 'the spirit of scientific inquiry' that used to animate them is slowly dying. In British universities now, you can't talk about certain subjects. That sounds like the 'new serfdom' to me. [\[77\]](#)

Antifa, another mask for Satanism

These long-running protests were initially triggered by a rise in the Santiago Metro's subway fare and the increased cost of living in the Jesuit-controlled country, but there is much more to it. Remember, in 2008 the Chilean Church was taken over by something comparable only to a sudden storm. The bishops in Chile went to the Pope to hand their resignations in mass after police investigations instigated by the president became aggressive. Some say it is not a coincidence that the accidents started soon after the death of the enormously influential local Jesuit José Aldunate Lyon (1917-2019), a relative of mine, and an influential member of the Society of Jesus who is best known for being a human rights activist during the military dictatorship of Augusto Pinochet and was at one point the Provincial of the Jesuits in Chile. José Aldunate, who died of natural causes on September 29th, 2019 and was awarded the National Prize for Human Rights in 2016, was extremely respected by the leftists in Chile and might have helped delay the civil unrest while he was alive, especially after the sex abuse scandals ruined the image of the Chilean Catholic Church.

In a count made in 2018, by the Chilean National prosecutor's office, some 221 Catholic priests and 8 Catholic bishops have been put under investigation up and down the country on charges of sexual abuse and cover-up, all due to allegations that gradually unfolded from the year 2000 to last year. Such scandals gave plenty of ammunition to the Antifa insurgents who are opposing Sebastián Piñera, the first center-right president to hold the office since the departure of Augusto Pinochet in 1990.

In response to the widespread protests that broke out across Chile in October 2019, Piñera declared a state of emergency authorizing the deployment of Chilean Armed forces across the main regions to enforce order and prevent the destruction of public property, but in November 2019, when thousands of people gathered once again in Santiago's Plaza Italia, Antifa-style hooded protestors dressed in black began to loot a church in the area known as La Asuncion showing their true colors. Antifa activists were photographed by the media dragging church pews, statues of Jesus, religious canvases, images of the Virgin Mary, and other iconography out through the doors of the historic building before setting them on fire and destroying them in an act of pure evil against the Catholic Faithful who watched in disbelief.

Acts like this remind us of the de-Christianization campaigns that erupted during the French Revolution in the anarchic phase of the Terror in the fall of 1793. These actions were usually instigated during the time by the Jesuits, who were officially out of the Catholic hierarchy in that period, and used the most radical French deputies, the de-Christianizers to vandalize churches or close them down altogether and intimidate constitutional priests into resigning their vocation, often pressuring them into marrying to demonstrate the sincerity of their conversion.

Fortunately, in today's Chile, this has not happened yet, but who knows what might happen next? After all, many of the demonstrations began relatively peaceful, but they became increasingly violent, an ominous warning for those of us who know that Antifa and the likes might also act in the same way here in the U.S. or Europe, if given the same opportunity. In comments that I made to my friends of Church Militant after this gruesome episode, that "Antifa forces" had been set in motion in Chile by George Soros and friends to push out the center-right president. And of course, I mentioned the connections between Antifa and Satanism, explaining to them that We have found that many Antifa chapters overlap those of the Satanic Temple that has the same members in their fold.

FIG. 43 – Destruction of Catholic images and church fittings by Antifa-style hooded protestors in Plaza Italia in Santiago (Chile) in early November 2019 (Photo credit: Ansa).

FIG. 44 – Antifa public Satanic ritual to protest a Patriot Prayer march in September 2019 in downtown Portland, Oregon.

There is without a doubt a secret connection between the Vatican and Antifa and that connection is called George Soros, the main financier of Antifa who gives from time to time large donations to Pope Francis in exchange for the unequivocal support of the Holy See to the Open Society Agenda. The Bishops conference in Chile might have officially condemned the attack on La Asuncion Church, saying in a statement, “An attack on temples and places of prayer, without any respect for God or for those who believe in Him, causes us pain.” But at the end of the day, the Vatican had to tolerate Antifa’s hugely Satanic tactics in Chile, even if they make a mockery of the Catholic Faith and Jesus Christ.

George Soros and the Jesuits didn’t follow through on the commitment to pro-growth policies, combating drug cartels, and partnering with the U.S. in energy and cybersecurity made by President Sebastián Piñera last year at the White House to President Donald J. Trump, as neighboring Venezuela and their Socialist President Nicolas Maduro continued starving their people with the support of the Vatican Jesuits. A day after the bishops of Venezuela declared the new presidency of Nicolas Maduro “illegitimate,” Pope Francis sent a Vatican representative to his inauguration playing the “good cop/bad cop” game with Maduro. The successor of the late Hugo Chavez thanked Monsignor George Koovakod for his “bravery” for showing once again the Satanic/Communist side of the Vatican establishment.

I think that after the sad events that took place in Santiago in November 2019, we have in front of our eyes a clear picture of the Satanic foundations of this New World Disorder and the protests in Chile are only a piece of the puzzle. In the meantime, Antifa, an infamous anti-Christian terrorist group that is influencing with their Anti-Christian ways, generations of brainwashed fools who think they can change the world with their senseless violence while instead, they are playing into a manipulation game ruled by dark forces from the demonic world. Antifa members even staged a public Satanic ritual to protest a Patriot Prayer March in September 2019 in downtown Portland, Oregon. These fools are threatening our natural right to Life, Liberty, and Property and are ultimately waging war against the creator. Fortunately, with the help of God time and time again, providence has laid waste to their evil plan. One of the people leading the ritual in question was a local transsexual activist and writer who was cheering as poor journalist Andy Ngo was attacked with fists and cement in Portland back in June 2019 as local police seemed uninterested due to the liberal progressive/Satanic stand of this city of lost souls.

While the president is busy promoting a Renaissance 2.0 made of achievements, these people are possessed and confused. The Democrats and the Jesuits can count on Antifa for their dirty work, and Antifa in exchange can count on them for impunity and financing. We are living in the age of injustice and confusion, where black people are still being fooled by the clowns of the Democratic Party who were the original slave owners. Today's Democrats have positioned themselves as our nation's social justice champions for their great compassion for women, minorities, and other under-represented groups, while calling conservatives racist, homophobic, bigots at every opportunity. But throughout history and even today – we are told a rather different story made of lies and hypocrisy. The Satanic Temple is also the perfect religion for progressives and libtards alike. “The Satanic Temple attracted ‘thousands’ of new members in just the first 36 hours after the election of Donald Trump,” the group reported. “The 4-year-old temple, which had a pre-Trump membership of around 50,000, has never before seen a spike in registration nearly this big.” [\[78\]](#)

When you join you can believe anything you want, as long as you hate what Donald J. Trump, Christians, and conservatives believe in. Unlike the Church of Satan, the Satanic Temple doesn't even believe in a supernatural entity called Satan. Instead, they celebrate Satan as “the ultimate rebel”, and they relish using the symbol of Satan to greatly upset Christians, but that's the ultimate Satanic action if you think about it. Remember, the greatest trick the devil ever pulled was convincing the world he doesn't exist.

No wonder this famous line is part of a monologue delivered by Roger “Verbal” Kint, played by infamous sex abuser and pedophile Kevin Spacey in the movie “The Usual Suspects” (Bryan Singer, 1995). The Satanic Temple was founded in 2013, and from the very beginning, it was clear that they were primarily a political movement, not an occult one. They openly tell prospective members that the only real requirement for joining is to believe... “If there's a local chapter where you are, to join you do have to be accepted, but there's no initiation or anything. You don't even have to be a Satanist, you can just be a strong ally who believes in the political and secular actions without being super stoked about all the aesthetic aspects.” Previously, Satanism in America had always been a shadowy underground movement, but the Satanic Temple has now changed that, as pointed out in recent years by many critics including myself. The Daily Mail pointed out they are: “growing, exponentially. Since TST's founding in 2012, the organization has increased from a handful of members to tens of thousands, with chapters all over the US and the globe, from Stockholm to London and Los Angeles to Texas.” [\[79\]](#)

In a statement published by Michael Snyder via The End of The American Dream blog, the Satanic Temple explained that: Traditionally, Satanists practice very privately, closed doors, black candles, black metal music, but with the Satanic philosophy being where Satanism represents rebellion against arbitrary authority, we believe it requires a level of political participation. I think that we need to go into the public sphere and announce ourselves without shame. [\[80\]](#) In November 2019 Houston-based Catholics hold a rosary rally in reparation for a Satanic Black Mass that was held at a craft beer brewery by the Houston chapter of The Satanic Temple (TSTH) which called the event “an evening with the beast.”

It was the organization's first public ritual and the closing ceremony took place at Brash Brewing on November 23 at 11:00 p.m. that was held in conjunction with the release of the brewery's similarly named ale. Rally organizer, Elvia Leyva, tells Church Militant, “We are appalled and outraged to learn that such an affront to Our Lord is in the works in our city.” [\[81\]](#)

BLEXIT, the answer to Democrats, the Jesuits, and the KKK

Remember, the Republican party was originally instituted to end slavery in a time when Democratic leaders refused to acknowledge black Americans as human beings instead of “property,” and forcibly removed Native Americans from their land. The Democratic party is the political arm of the evil side of the Illuminati that established the Ku Klux Klan to fight against constitutional rights gained by blacks after the Civil War. But, unfortunately, the last time a Republican Presidential candidate got more than 15% of the black vote was 1960. And yet the Democrats had a former KKK member in the U.S. Senate until he died in 2010. Robert Byrd wasn’t just in the KKK, he recruited 150 friends to start a chapter! Robert Byrd used the N-word on live television in 2001. And then was re-elected as the Senator from West Virginia in 2006. Compare that to the current Democrat Governor from one state over, Virginia. Ralph Northam dressed in blackface when he was 25 (or KKK robes we don’t know which) as pictured in his graduate school yearbook. This guy is a clown. His defense was that he doesn’t think he is either one of the two in the racist picture, because he distinctly remembers wearing blackface on a different occasion. That time, he says, he only applied a little bit of shoe polish to dress as Michael Jackson, because that stuff is hard to get off... I wonder how he knew it was hard to get shoe polish off his face? (Also, his wife had to tell him it was inappropriate to do the moonwalk during his blackface apology news conference: But I digress.) [\[82\]](#)

As you can see, racism in the Democratic Party runs deep. And this shouldn’t surprise anyone who has any knowledge of history. But since most people get their information from memes these days, someone took it upon themselves to educate the masses. A bunch of Democrats wore white to Trump’s State of the Union address to protest Trump. Even PolitiFact, a fact-checking website that rates the accuracy of claims by elected officials and others on its “Truth-O-Meter” admits in an article that one historian confirmed there’s a historic link between the Democrats and the KKK: Many angry Southern whites during the 1860s and 1870s were Democrats, and some joined the KKK. But according to libtard J. Michael Martinez, who wrote the 2007 book Carpetbaggers, Cavalry, and the KKK, it’s misleading to say the Democratic Party founded the Klan. Yet Politifact confirms that the Democratic Party honored the first Grand Wizard of the Ku Klux Klan when he spoke at the 1868 Democratic National Convention, shortly after the Klan was founded. Which brings us back to the original question, did Democrats start the KKK? [\[83\]](#)

Yes! It was founded as a political organization to intimidate black and Republican voters in the south during reconstruction after the Civil War and 3,446 black Republicans and 1,297 white Republicans were lynched by the KKK between 1882 and 1968. According to History.com: The KKK engaged in terrorist raids against African Americans and white Republicans at night, employing intimidation, destruction of property, assault, and murder to achieve its aims and influence upcoming elections.

There were two political parties and the Ku Klux Klan aimed to influence elections against the Republican party contrary to popular belief. Well, that certainly sounds like Democrats started the KKK, doesn’t it? And they started it for overtly political purposes, but also because they were inspired by their supervisors, the infamous Jesuits, who allegedly organized Abraham Lincoln’s murder. Most Americans do not know about the Jesuit connection to the Lincoln assassination. People who were close to Lincoln, including Samuel Morse (inventor of the telegraph) and several American Ambassadors knew of the Jesuit hatred toward him and warned him right up to the point of his murder. Charles Chiniquy, a Catholic priest who befriended Lincoln also warned him of the Jesuit plot to take his life.

The KKK was created by the Jesuit inspired faction of Freemasonry as a political tool used by Democrats to help the Democratic Party win elections. And that is a FACT. Of course, another major strategy of covering-up racist Democratic roots is saying that it isn’t the party today that it once was. Some people even say the parties flipped at some point... so Democrats get credit for Lincoln (who was a Republican), and Republicans get credit for the KKK (which was founded by Democrats).

Well, when exactly did the parties suddenly and miraculously switch platforms? Neither party added proposed anti-KKK positions to its platform at the 1924 conventions, but in 1963, the Democrat Governor of Alabama, George Wallace, stood in front of a black girl refusing to allow her to enter a white school that had just been desegregated by law. And if the Democrats were still racist in 1963, that means Democrat hero Franklin D. Roosevelt creator of the New Deal was indeed part of the old racist Democratic party so it is not a big surprise, that he was also the guy who put Japanese Americans in concentration camps. Some people say that the flip or turning point in the policies of the Demoncrats occurred with the election of President Lyndon B. Johnson in 1964. After all, George Wallace lost the primary against Johnson, which seems to be a rejection of Wallace's racism. Plus, Johnson signed into law the Civil Rights Act of 1964. Still, only 69% of Democrats in the Senate voted for the Civil Rights Act, while 82% of Republican Senators voted for it. In the House, it was even worse, with just 63% of Democrats voting in favor, and 80% of Republicans supporting the legislation. However, Johnson went on to push the "Great Society" legislation throughout the rest of his presidency aimed at reducing crime and poverty and expanding the welfare state and social safety nets. You might think this would be a great thing to promote equality for disenfranchised blacks. But historian, sociologist, and economist Thomas Sowell (who is black by the way) has a different perspective:

Despite the grand myth that black economic progress began or accelerated with the passage of the Civil Rights laws and "War on Poverty" programs of the 1960s, the cold fact is that the poverty rate among blacks fell from 87 percent in 1940 to 47 percent by 1960. This was before any of those programs began. Over the next 20 years, the poverty rate among blacks fell another 18 percentage points, compared to the 40-point drop in the previous 20 years. This was the continuation of a previous economic trend, at a slower rate of progress...Nearly a hundred years of the supposed "legacy of slavery" found most black children being raised in two-parent families in 1960. But thirty years after the liberal welfare state found the great majority of black children being raised by a single parent.

The murder rate among blacks in 1960 was one-half of what it became 20 years later, after a legacy of liberals' law-enforcement policies. [\[84\]](#)

So did the Democrats abandon racist policies, or did they just change tactics? The answer is, of course not, but Democrats or Demoncrats as I like to call them will always claim the contrary because they are masters in disinformation and manipulation just like their Jesuits controllers. But things are changing now and "The world is tuning into a new frequency" as the BLEXIT website boasts these days and black people are finally waking up to the truth imposed by the Jesuits and their Illuminati agents. One of the pioneers of this new direction is Conservative activist Candace Owens who founded the Blexit movement and says she wants to "free" black voters from the decades-long grip of the Democratic Party, urging them to support her new movement.

Another important figure of this movement is Kanye West who also left the Hollywood Satanists to embrace Jesus. "Blexit is a Renaissance," Owens told Fox News in October 2018, adding "Blexit is the black exit from the Democratic Party. It's the black exit from permanent victimhood, the black exit from the false idea that we are somehow separate from the rest of America." [\[85\]](#)

What Candice forgets to mention is the evil influence of the Jesuits who were the main instigators of slavery all along. In 1838, Georgetown University President Fr. Thomas Mulledy, S.J., sold 272 slaves for $115,000 to pay off university debts and keep the Georgetown party from closing. The university went on to produce some of the "finest" minds of the Democratic party founded only ten years earlier by supporters of Andrew Jackson. More than 175 years later, in 2019, student protests urged the Jesuit-run university that produced one of the most libtarded presidents of all time, aka Bill Clinton, to confront its evil history, challenging the names of Mulledy and McSherry Hall, but also advocating institutional changes to address current concerns by their Millenials. In 2019, libtard students at Georgetown University in line with their leftist vision voted overwhelmingly to pass a referendum that would create a new student fee each semester to create programs to benefit the descendants of the 272 slaves the Maryland Province of Jesuits sold in 1838.

The results of the referendum were as follows: 66.08% for yes (2541 votes), 33.92% for no (1304 votes). This means that the referendum passed, and instead of the Vatican Jesuits paying for their wrong-doing, it is the young libtard and their prevalently Democratic families who will pay. The money raised by the fee would "be allocated for charitable purposes directly benefiting the descendants of the GU272 and other persons once enslaved by the Maryland Jesuits," according to the text of the referendum. The fee would be $27.70 per semester. One of the fees that will be implemented would raise over $400,000 a year from undergraduate students whose only fault is studying with the Jesuits. However, at the time that I am writing this, the fee cannot be created until it is approved by Georgetown University's Board of Trustees.

The referendum in question was sponsored by the GU272 Advocacy Team, which is named after the 272 slaves who were sold to Louisiana by Fr. Thomas Mulledy, S.J. The sale of the slaves earned the province about $500,000 in today's money and was able to keep the Jesuits and their prestigious university out of bankruptcy. It ruined hundreds of lives, tearing families asunder while condemning men, women, and children to an existence of cruel bondage. The Jesuits of Georgetown only repented in 2017, when the school issued a formal apology to the descendants of the slaves in a reconciliation service and renamed a building on campus after Isaac Hawkins, one of the people sold. But why should the student pay and not the Jesuit Order? Are these people insane? No, they are simply libtards who pay for the sins of their infamous masters, the Jesuits. In “Liturgy of Remembrance, Contrition, and Hope,” hosted at Georgetown, the university’s president and Jesuit leader issued an emotional mea culpa 179 years later. “We express our solemn contrition for our participation in slavery and the benefit our institution received,” said at the time Georgetown’s president, John DeGioia. “We cannot hide from this truth, bury this truth, ignore this truth. Slavery remains the original evil in our republic, an evil that our university was complicit in.” The latest statement released by Dr. Told Olson, Georgetown University’s vice president for student affairs, reiterated the steps that were previously taken by the school to atone for the sale of slaves but did not fully endorse the new fee demonstrating once again their classic stingy behavior. Olson said that even if the fee were not enacted, the school would work to develop programming that would allow for Georgetown students to “meaningfully engage with Georgetown’s history of slavery and support opportunities for collaboration between students and Descendants.”

It sounds like another Jesuit excuse if you ask me. This referendum comes nearly four years after Georgetown convened the Working Group on Slavery, Memory, and Reconciliation. The group released its final report on recommendations to the school in the summer of 2016 and suggested an apology, the renaming of buildings, the creation of a memorial, and the creation of some sort form of financial reparations.

“While we acknowledge that the moral debt of slaveholding and the sale of the enslaved people can never be repaid, we are convinced that reparative justice requires a meaningful financial commitment from the University,” the report read.

In 2016, Georgetown University announced a new policy that would give descendants of all 272 slaves the same preferential treatment in admissions as legacy students. Currently, four Georgetown students are descendants from the sold slaves of the Jesuits. Much historical work has been written on Jesuit slaveholding, but not many people know that the Jesuits were the ones that inspired this perverse and criminal activity from the very beginning of the Company of Jesus. Meanwhile, the U.S., Jesuits mobilize to denounce the Trump Administration stating that he is “an affront to our mission and an assault on American and Christian values.” The same Christian values that permitted slavery and the present destruction of the Catholic Faith. Fr. Sean Carroll, executive director of the Kino Border Initiative has been an outspoken critic of the Trump Administration’s immigration actions and an ardent champion for the migrants and the New World Disorder. Since its founding in 2009, the Kino Border Initiative has been working to provide “a humanizing presence on the border,” as the Jesuits described it, but its true function is to add more victims to the ghetto plantations. Like Jeanne Donovan wrote for americanthinker.com, If Frederick Douglass walked today's ghettos, he would witness a new-age style of slavery, plantations without the lash and chains. He would soon be outraged that government overseers are perpetuating generations of dependency through policies designed to capture the votes of the ignorant. Of the people, he would ask, “What have you done with your freedom? Where is your dignity and self-respect?”

People need to wake up and refuse the great evil that the Jesuits and the Demoncrats have pushed on us for way too long. This evil is Satanic and the Jesuits and their Illuminati agents like Barack Obama have ruined the hope of so many in recent years before the advent of President Donald J. Trump.

Obama used the strategy of “divide and conquer” which proved effective for him, along with his faux war on women, class warfare, racial division. Obama is the opposite of what black people and minorities needed in the U.S. and he should be arrested. I still remember when I wrote on Rense.com in February 2008: The possible scenario is that Hillary might become the Vice President of Obama at the end of this political show, but in any case let's enjoy what the American call Democracy a good show in the hands of the usual suspects, and remember America the Pope is coming with His Blessings this spring. Adding at the end of the same article: Maybe the next AntiChrist to hit the U.S. presidential scene will be darker then some people have expected. [\[86\]](#)

Unfortunately, I was 100% right about Obama but, fortunately, we changed things around in 2016 when the American people elected Donald J. Trump who kickstarted this American Renaissance 2.0 in the land of the free and the home of the brave that is now becoming my new home after I was forced to leave Orwellian Europe.

When Trump first announced his presidential bid he was laughed at, not taken seriously, some called him a clown, a buffoon. The purpose of all this social pressure was to bring Trump back to the herd, to coerce him into getting on his knees before the Jesuits, but he refused and won the Republican nomination. We are living in dark times where the Illuminati agents and their operatives who exert this social pressure are extremely powerful men and women, and they are almost the ultimate authority of our society in the sense that they control the media and the government and the Military Industrial Complex, therefore, they are the psychological programmers of the population.

In 2008, Pope Francis discussed the creation of fake news in a major church document, tracing the deliberate spread of false information to the evil serpent in the Book of Genesis who inspired humankind's original sin in the Garden of Eden. The Pope said: "This biblical episode brings to light an essential element for our reflection: there is no such thing as harmless disinformation." Well, this means that the Jesuits and their loyal Democrats are a product of pure evil as they have fed disinformation to black people and minorities for centuries and this is the original sin of American politics for sure. And let's not forget that the most unremittingly and consistently racist writings I have ever found in my family's library were the works of Illuminati agents Helena Petrovna Blavatsky, Annie Besant, and Aleister Crowley. While we can argue that Blavatsky was an anti-Jesuit serving the Sabbatean Frankists, this was not the case for either Annie Besant or Aleister Crowley who had a secret admiration for them, even if the Vatican was called a "black lodge," a term used by Crowley to describe a group of evil magicians figured in Moonchild, a 1923 novel by the notorious occultist Aleister Crowley.

In the novel, the black lodge was one of two factions vying for an unborn child believed to be the Antichrist. That's why a key figure of the Democratic party like John Podesta was invited to a "spirit cooking dinner" by performance artist/occultist Marina Abramovic so he could take part in an occult ritual created by racist Aleister Crowley who had the same Satanic values of your average Democrat leader if you think about it. And let's not forget Podesta's Jesuit connection, as he is still an acting Professor at the Georgetown University Law Center, plus there are a bunch of other creepy things one should know about Podesta.

Let's start with a painting portraying cannibalism placed on the wall of his New York office, and of course Podesta's strange pizza emails, but there is also his spooky email sent to Supreme Court Justice Antonin Scalia three days before the suspicious death of the 79-year-old who died in February 2016 while at a ranch quail hunting on Valentine's Day weekend with high-ranking members of a secretive elite society, called the International Order of St. Hubertus, so let's keep people like Podesta out of the White House as long as possible.

The Dark side of Scotland and Crowley's kickstart to the Apocalypse

In 2014, a media frenzy began in Britain after a couple of Scottish charities claimed that the Satanic abuse of children was widespread. Two charities, Kilmarnock-based, Break the Silence and Dundee-based, Izzy's Promise, told the Express they believed Satanic abuse to be rife in Scotland and that it has been like that for decades. They said children were forced to take part in Satanic rituals involving the sacrifice of babies and the making of snuff movies. According to Kate Short of Break the Silence, "Victims are so brainwashed they don't dare to speak out." These are extremely serious allegations – but are they true? Of course, the libtarded English newspaper The Guardian thought otherwise. An article by Chris French, a professor of psychology at Goldsmiths University of London, where he heads the Anomalistic Psychology Research Unit, told the readers of The Guardian that the Satanic child abuse claims were almost certainly based on false memories. Another article on the Scottish pedo rings ran in the same period in the Scottish Express stated that the Scotland Police had said it is taking the allegations in this matter "incredibly seriously."

Remember, the Jimmy Savile child sex abuse scandal just came out, so it would have been very surprising if they had said anything different. We now know that many of Savile's victims had complained of being abused and that they were ignored by those in authority because of his Royal connections, just like Epstein. That is a disgrace and the result was that Savile was free to abuse dozens, possibly hundreds, more victims until his death. The only difference between the death of Jimmy Savile and the death of Jeffrey Epstein is that the latter was almost certainly murder.

At times, I think only a giant purification fire could destroy all the evil permeating this planet right now. Since it was first proposed by the Pre-Socratic philosopher, Empedocles of Acragas, fire has been regarded in the Western world as one of the four classical elements.

The status of fire as a component of life can be found in the philosophy of other ancient cultures as well. Moreover, fire has a highly symbolic function in many of the world's religious beliefs. Fire is viewed by Christians, Chinese, and Hebrews as being a symbol of divinity (Cooper, 1978). In Christianity, fire can also be symbolic of religious zeal and martyrdom. In Egypt, it represents a sense of superiority and control and many cultures view fire as a symbol of wisdom and knowledge. ^[87]

So, when, in the summer of 2019, another fire destroyed Aleister Crowley's old residence in Scotland, a sinister place that had already been damaged in a previous fire in 2015, I immediately felt something was going on behind the scenes in Scotland and decided to write an article that was published on my website and Infowars.com.

After all, it was the same Crowley, who wrote in The Book of the Law (AL III,34) :

But your holy place shall be untouched throughout the centuries: though with fire and sword it is burnt down & shattered, yet an invisible house there standeth, and shall stand until the fall of the Great Equinox; when Hrumachis shall arise and the double-wanded one assumes my throne and place.

A few months after I published my article I received this unusual comment from someone claiming to be from the O.T.O. from the email address wcb1@protonmail.com:

I am a member of O.T.O. and I can categorically state that I do not worship Satan, nor have I ever met anyone who does.

O.T.O. is dedicated to the high purpose of securing the Liberty of the Individual and his or her advancement in Light, Wisdom, Understanding, Knowledge, and Power through Beauty, Courage, and Wit, on the Foundation of Universal Brotherhood.

Members of the O.T.O. do not worship Satan. This is a silly rumor spread by those intent on slandering the organization.

Even the idea of 'worshipping Satan' is a misguided one. Satan can mean different things to different people. The Vatican fake Christians equate Satan with the Devil and they worship this entity sometimes which is the enemy of their God. This is truly misguided and stupid behavior.

Thelemites, however, know that the word Satan literally means Saturn, and is merely an astrological energy that is commonly understood by millions of people around the world. It can also be interpreted as meaning Set, the Egyptian God, brother of Horus. Again, Thelemites worship Horus, not Set.

To 'worship' one particular energy in Nature continuously would be futile. Magicians sometimes work with a particular planetary energy for a specific reason. None that I know of have an obsession with Saturn. Those that do, like Anton LaVey for example, are deluded fools who end up doing bizarre things like copulating with tigers.

I can assure you that O.T.O. does not engage in such idiotic practices.

Satan is not the Anti-God force that the Vatican black brothers worship in their silly misguided black masses.

Anyway, the O.T.O. does nothing of the sort. Our Gnostic Mass honors the One True God and The Goddess and the Individual.

Our Law of Thelema will ultimately destroy the Vatican and all other old Aeon religions, which you claim to be against.

Boleskine House even if it was destroyed it is the location of an Invisible Astral Cube, that radiates the Power of Thelema to the world, through the vehicle that is Ra Hoor Khuit.

Please come to visit us some time Leo, you are welcome any time.

I was surprised at first but in the end, I decided to answer with the following debunking his lies or at least false perceptions on an order I know, unfortunately very well:

Dear Frater, as you like to say in the O.T.O. you are probably honest in your endeavor, but you are ignorant of the real aim of your order as people like occultual pioneer Carl Abrahamsson, who is one of the leaders of the O.T.O. in Scandinavia and a member of your IX° Council have not only indulged in Satanism but have been closely involved with Anton LaVey, who even celebrated his first marriage to another O.T.O. member. Maybe your superiors are hiding this from you as I was involved in the O.T.O. 20 years ago and I probably know more about your system and/or beliefs than you can imagine. When I investigated and exposed the presence of O.T.O. members in the S.R.I.A. a member of your order called John Færseth threatened my life and later try to ruin my reputation in Oslo, so I don't think I am as welcome as you say.

I should have probably added to the reply the [Hymn to Satan \[88\]](#) featured on their website, but I was kind enough to brush him off only with the above as he might be only a young minerval, after all.

But let's return to what happened in the summer of 2019 in Boleskine that could be a major sign of things to come. The Scottish Fire and Rescue Service said the alarm was raised shortly before 4 pm on a Wednesday in late July 2019 and immediately two firetrucks were sent to Boleskine House located on the south-eastern shore of Loch Ness, close to the village of Foyers, Inverness Shire but, fortunately, for those who like me, dislike Crowley, it was too late to save this Satanic shrine from yet another fire. However, this time the Scottish police said it believed the fire was started deliberately, and since then they have appealed for witnesses to come forward.

Interestingly enough, this happened on July 31st, during the so-called "dog days of the summer" when Sirius the Dog Star often cited in Crowley's writings, was shining its brightest. As my readers already know, Aleister Crowley is known today more than ever for his involvement in the Illuminati, aside from his infamous occult writings that have influenced so much of the darkest side of the New Age scene. Crowley purchased this mysterious old mansion on the shores of Loch Ness to perform the dangerous ritual described in The Book of Abramelin. The mansion in question was constructed in the late 18th century by a certain Archibald Fraser. According to a local legend, there was once a church on the site which caught fire burning its whole congregation to death and it was because of this terrible event that Crowley decided to purchase Boleskine House in 1899 as the self-styled, "Laird of Boleskine and Abertarff."

At Boleskine, Aleister Crowley evoked evil alien entities that would later materialize and be channeled in through his wife in Egypt in 1904 for his Liber AL vel Legis, a pseudo-religious text commonly known as The Book of the Law, that would eventually become the unholy book of his new Illuminati cult. Crowley started to build a religion made to embrace the dark side of the Theosophical New Age.

Crowley wanted to kickstart the Apocalypse and, for this reason, he continued to visit Boleskine House until 1913, when he eventually sold the property that still attracts so many Satanists from all over the world each year. Crowley's magickal operation conducted at Boleskine House is known as the "Abramelin Operation" taken from The Book of the Sacred Magic of Abramelin the Mage, a famous grimoire (book of magical knowledge), dating back to at least the middle of the 15th century often cited in my books. Crowley seems to have become aware of this important ritual from the 1897 translation of the book by his mentor the occultist and Illuminati kingpin Samuel Liddell Mathers, one of the founders of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn, which Crowley had joined in 1898, before falling out with most of its members, including Mathers, a few years later when they all understood Crowley was working for Satan's Legion. The purpose of performing this lengthy and intense Abramelin ritual is for the magician to communicate with his "Holy Guardian Angel" or Higher Self after dominating a bunch of demons.

Unfortunately for Crowley, and those around him, the Abramelin rites seem to have succeeded mainly in summoning extradimensional demons or "the Abramelin devils" as Crowley liked to call them, to aid him in kickstarting the End Times. Of course, ordinary people encounter evil entities every day, known as demons that are indeed supernatural creatures from an actual alternate dimension that exists parallel to our world, but to invite them permanently into our dimension is another ball game. Because like most magicians know you need to invite them, and that's what Aleister Crowley was doing with his rituals. He was opening the gates of Hell to start the Apocalypse. These creatures are said to possess the ability to warp what we understand as the laws of physics and they are even able to change their appearance.

That's why some think that the unfinished Boleskine House ritual set in motion by Crowley might have accidentally summoned the legendary Loch Ness Monster that was brought to worldwide attention in 1933. One thing is for sure, during Crowley's occupancy there were reports of a heavy, oppressive atmosphere at Boleskine, dark eerie shadows filled the house, fierce winds blew through the rooms despite calm weather outside, and strange figures were seen in the area. There is also another dark legend that has obsessed the Ordo Templi Orientis, the secret society Crowley took over that we commonly refer to as O.T.O. and it's the story of an underground passage linking the house with a nearby graveyard said to have been utilized by Crowley to obtain human bone powder used for Necromancy and spirit workings connected to the "Abramelin Operation." Today, the practitioners of Thelema, Crowley's sick religious philosophy are still instructed to "turn and face north to Boleskine" when conducting certain magical ceremonies and talk of this place as it is their version of Mecca, but also the place that helped the opening of the gates of hell to unleash the Apocalypse.

"In the East, that is, in the direction of Boleskine, which is situated on the South-Eastern shore of Loch Ness in Scotland, two miles east of Foyers, is a shrine or High Altar," says Crowley's Liber XV.

"The Beast" later sold Boleskine and it subsequently had a series of private owners including in the 1970s Led Zeppelin guitarist and Crowley fanatic, Jimmy Page. Boleskine House, that overlooks Loch Ness, was badly damaged by a blaze in 2015 and the ruin was sold earlier this year to The Boleskine House Foundation, an intelligence operation connected to a Polish Satanist named Marcin Bartnicki, and various other influential Illuminati figures from the infamous Ordo Templi Orientis, like old-time member of the British Intelligence community, Andrew Curley, who is usually given some very special missions like this one to create on one side the ultimate demonic temple for the Illuminati in the British Isles, and on the other, a more complex operation by the British Intelligence to nurture the forces of evil that Crowley had originally evoked during his magickal operation.

The official reason given for the establishment of the Boleskine House Foundation is to raise money to help restore Boleskine House to its original historical condition and they are desperately trying to establish a "Spiritual retreat" for Satanists and a sort of lab for Intelligence operatives involved in the occult. Boleskine House is a heritage B-listed estate with a rich history, but in 2015, Boleskine House suffered a devastating fire, rendering it in "ruinous condition" according to the Buildings at Risk Register for Scotland that together with the Scottish Fire and Rescue Service confirmed that the cause of that fire remains "unknown."

In 2019, what was left of Boleskine House has been possibly the victim of a malicious arson attempt and the remainder of the roof has burnt down, rendering the building into further ruin and pushing back the O.T.O.'s take-over by using the foundation as a cover-up. Upon complete restoration, The Boleskine House Foundation secretly coordinated by the O.T.O. wished to place the house in a charitable foundation and partly open the estate up to the public to further promote the estate's history and evil legacy connected to their "Prophet" Aleister Crowley known also as "The Great Beast," the infamous figure found in Chapter 13 of the Book of Revelation. Since his youth, once he departed from the ways of his fundamentalist Plymouth Brethren parents, Crowley was referred to by the title of "Beast." Later on, in Cambridge, he not only accepted this nickname but expanded on it, calling himself, "The Great Beast" and signing his notes with the number "666." Through different Hebrew transliterations Crowley was even able to derive the value 666 from his name, "Aleister Crowley" and "Aleister E. Crowley" and the Greek phrase often used by him To Mega Therion ("The Great Beast"), that also has the value of 666, as does the Greek word Therion ("Beast") when transliterated into Hebrew as ThRIVN.

I believe it's safe to say that Crowley was not only evil, but he may have been chosen by the devil himself for his central role as "666" in the End Times because as the Book of Revelation teaches us: "Let him who has understanding calculate the number of the beast, for the number is that of a man; and his number is 666." So what has happened in Scotland in the summer of 2019 could be a sign of God's Will to stop the creation of this new Satanic Temple in Scotland connected to the British Intelligence and the O.T.O. but also a bad omen of things to come. Scotland seems to have a very ancient Satanic or at least Luciferian tradition.

Recently a very scary metal plaque was found in The Queen's Holyrood Park. The object depicts an upside-down pentagram within a circle, like the one used by The Church of Satan. Inside the pentagram is a horned beast – Baphomet – which has been used symbolically in the Illuminati network since the 19th century and is now used by The Satanic Temple. Aleister Crowley connected Baphomet, the goat-headed idol, with Satan, and linked this icon with the idea of suppressed knowledge and secret worship. However, various factors suggest that the metal pentagram plaque in question is not pagan but rather Satanic and far more recent. John Barnwell from American Intelligence Media seems to think it might have been a prank placed there a few years ago, as he says he found the same object on sale. The symbol in question, which symbolizes the triumph of matter over spirit, might also have been used by modern Satanists operating in the area.

The 19th-century French occultist Eliphas Levi wrote: A reversed pentagram, with two points projecting upwards, is a symbol of evil and attracts sinister forces because it overturns the proper order of things and demonstrates the triumph of matter over spirit. It is the goat of lust attacking the heavens with its horns, a sign execrated by initiates. Satanists today use an inverted pentagram inside a circle as their symbol with the head of Baphomet in the center. This symbolized personal power, sexuality, and pursuing one's own will. In 1966, Satanism was transformed into a modern more appealing religious movement when Anton LaVey founded the Church of Satan. The logo adopted by the Church of Satan is known as the Sigil of Baphomet, which depicts a goat's head inside an inverted pentagram within a circle – the same as the plaque found in Holyrood Park. It is unclear how these symbols of Satanic worship ended up in Holyrood Park, but it seems that the Queen has some cleaning up to do in her gardens as well as in her family, that's for sure.

Finally, the mockery that researchers, like myself or my friend Alex Jones, have suffered for many years is coming to an end with the growing number of court cases and investigations against the pedophile elite that includes many members of the Catholic clergy, but also Prince Andrew and a vast number of powerful individuals from all faiths and walks of life who ended up killing Jeffrey Epstein because he knew too much.

Scotland has always played a particularly dark and sinister role. As I wrote in Confessions of an Illuminati Vol.6.66, a recent public inquiry in Scotland has found that nuns, priests, and the staff at two Scottish children's homes were subjecting children to regimes of fear, physical, and sexual abuse for many decades. The BBC reported that last year a witness of the Independent Scottish Child Abuse Inquiry has confirmed in front of Lady Smith, the commission's chair, that he was raped by Catholic priests during Satanic alcohol-fuelled sex parties.

The BBC under the control of the Queen of England seems to have finally changed their stance, as in the past they were often accused of bias towards pedophiles, especially regarding their scandals that included among others the infamous Jimmy Savile, who was a dear friend of Prince Charles and the late Jeffrey Epstein, who was a close friend of Prince Andrew.

Just ask yourself, if the Royal family is so innocent, are the sons of the Queen hanging out with convicted pedophiles and sex abusers? What kind of morality and ethics do they have, if any? Jimmy Savile raped a 15-year-old girl in 1975 during a Satanic abuse ritual, while cloaked pedophiles looked on. Was Prince Charles one of them? And Lord Mountbatten? An FBI dossier on Mountbatten released thanks to a Freedom of Information request, revealed shocking information about the royal who was a mentor to his grand-nephew Prince Charles. ^[89] The FBI files contain a claim by Elizabeth Wharton Drexel that he had "a perversion for young boys." So they are truly sick, no excuse.

The victim of the Scottish children's homes in question, Dave Sharp, described a horrifying scenario made up of sexual, physical, and emotional violence at St Ninian's in Falkland, Fife, between 1971 and 1975. Mr. Sharp, from Glasgow, said the abuse left him with "lifelong trauma." The inquiry reported by the BBC is investigating in detail the abuse of children in residential care in Scotland on a historic level, and not surprisingly, it seems to have also involved Ireland, but the BBC will never bring up any Royal connections.

Mr. Sharp urged inquiry chairwoman Lady Smith to piece together the "jigsaw" of victims' accounts and called for a "national discussion" on the subject that seems rather difficult in a country full of politicians that practice or support pedophilia that is endorsed by the Royal family. Sharp, now 60, was put into care after his mother died when he was one year old. He stayed in several institutions before going to the Catholic-run care home in Fife. He stated that he was groomed by one of the religious brothers, who would tell him he loved him that, "no-one had ever done" before. The inquiry revealed that the then-12-year-old was later raped. Most of the abuse was said to have taken place in the shower rooms where the witness would be made to stand in the dark through the night as punishment. One specific attack came after he asked about the whereabouts of a friend who had disappeared. It was later discovered the boy had taken his life, but it could be that he was silenced after being abused by the Catholic Satanic clergy. Mr. Sharp said he was taken to the shower room by a drunken religious brother. Shockingly enough, the witness claimed he was then hung by a cord, threatened with murder if he spoke out and was then raped by the Satanists, adding: "It was from that day everything I did was under his complete and utter control."

The inquiry also stated that "two or three" boys were trafficked around Scotland and Ireland to be used in alcohol-fuelled sex parties, which he described as "Satanic." On one occasion in Ireland, Mr. Sharp said he was involved with ten men who took turns raping the boys, and that Catholic priests were among those involved. Remember, these terrible incidents described by Mr. Sharp didn't take place in the O.T.O. or some other weird New Age cult, but they took place throughout his time at St Ninian's, which was run by the Congregation of Christian Brothers, a worldwide religious community within the Catholic Church. He left the home at aged 16 without "any memory other than continually being abused." It was then that he found out he had a family, but, unfortunately, he became dependent on drugs and alcohol like most victims of pedophilia. He said he struggled with a "£100-a-day" habit for up to 25 years and attempted to kill himself on numerous occasions. This also happened to some of the victims related to the infamous Cardinal Pell.

Mr. Sharp eventually decided to turn his life around and helped the inquiry move forward, but as you can see, British society seems to still be fighting the evil unleashed by the infamous black magician Aleister Crowley, who stated that Boleskine House fulfilled all of his needs. When Crowley decided to begin his magical exercise at Easter and commenced with the construction of a terrace and a lodge, it was something that, in total, took around six months to complete. Crowley noted that due to certain supernatural hazards that the ritual he was practicing might have provoked, he had most likely unleashed some powerful occult forces. For this reason, he invited a colleague to share the experience with him. The man in question was Charles Roshier, and like Crowley, he was a member of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn, and a friend to Crowley's teacher, Allan Bennett. Roshier intended to stay with Crowley for months, but in the end, he ended up leaving – or, rather, fleeing – after no more than three weeks. The reason for this, the presence of unseen, evil forces that Roshier was sure had descended upon Boleskine House which was intent on making his life a living hell. Such was the nature of Roshier's hasty and terrified exit, Crowley knew nothing of it until his butler informed him his friend was gone. The two did not see each other again for years. If something supernatural and evil had descended on Boleskine House and Loch Ness, then it didn't take long before it began affecting and infecting the people that lived around the loch.

On one occasion, shortly after moving into Boleskine House, Crowley returned to the abode after a stroll in the hills, only to find a priest sitting in his, (Crowley's) study. As pale as a ghost and deeply worried, the priest confided in Crowley that the keeper of the lodge-house, a man named Hugh Gillies, who was described as being a lifelong teetotaler, had been drunk for days and even tried to murder his family.

Things got even worse. An old friend of Crowley, from Cambridge, visited – and, like Charles Rosher, intending to stay for a lengthy period. He didn't succeed either. The friend was gone in less than two weeks, after displaying panic-attack-style symptoms, and telling Crowley, in fear-filled tones, that Boleskine House was filled with terrible, malevolent spirits. Crowley's mother, a strict Plymouth Brethren, had believed her son to be the beast (number 666) of Revelation 13:18 so we can only imagine what kind of entities were unleashed in Boleskine, and Crowley acknowledged the claims of a bleak and eerie atmosphere. He specifically chose to work in one room, more than any other, that offered a fair degree of sunlight – and which was in stark contrast to the rest of the house.

Even in that particular room, Crowley was forced to introduce artificial lighting because of its bleak and shadowy atmosphere. It turns out that around that time, Crowley had a falling out with various individuals in the Order and so he took off for Mexico for a while, where he had adventurous times, scaling peaks with English mountain-climber, Oscar Johannes Ludwig Eckenstein. Nevertheless, the magnet-like lure of Loch Ness and Boleskine House drew the Great Beast back to Scotland, and he continued with his studies and plans. He also got married, "I shall always feel a little grateful to Boleskine for giving me my wife," said Crowley. In August 1903, Crowley married Rose Kelly, his "scarlet woman," who he had met in Paris a year before receiving through her The Book of the Law. They proceeded on an extended honeymoon, and whilst in Sri Lanka, they went trekking through the jungle, something I did myself back in 1976 at the tender age of 6 with my parents. However, something interesting happened while he was standing on the shores of a lake. Crowley had decided to shoot enough furry bats to make himself a waistcoat. One bat landed on Rose, and Crowley had some trouble detaching its claws. A pretty disgusting scene that Crowley found amusing. That night, the Beast 666 was awakened by the noise of a squealing bat. He then said he saw Rose, completely naked, clinging with her arms and legs to the wooden frame that supported the mosquito net. As he pulled her down, she bit and spat and squealed, and she had to be shaken into wakefulness. Crowley noted that it was the finest case of possession that he had ever had the "good fortune" to observe.

When Rose later discovered she was pregnant, they decided to return home to England. En-route they went to Cairo, where they took a flat. Incidentally, Rose went on to have a daughter who was named Night my Athatur Hecate Sappho Jesabel Lilith, and who died under tragic circumstances, while Rose died an alcoholic.

"Although in later years," he revealed, "this union which held so much for both of us whilst it lasted became a domestic tragedy." It was after their travels around the world that Crowley and Rose returned to Boleskine House and once back things did not go well for the newly married couple. A "rival magician" who used to be his mentor, Samuel Liddell Mathers, the founder of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn, started a magical war against him. Crowley, in turn, believed that Mathers caused his entire pack of bloodhounds to die under mysterious, supernatural circumstances. His servants began to fall ill, with all kinds of ailments. Then, worst of all, on one particular morning, Crowley heard a wild, hysterical screaming and cursing coming from the kitchen. A workman had become possessed by one of the demons he had unleashed with his ritual and attacked his wife, Rose. Such was the frenzied and ferocious state the man had been plunged into, Crowley and his staff were forced to lock the deranged man in the coal-cellar and await the arrival of the local police. ^[90]

Rose recovered, but there was still more tragedy to come. In 1911, Crowley was forced to have Rose committed to an asylum, as a result of the onset of dementia which had been provoked by her out of control alcoholism, but in reality, she was probably possessed by the forces Crowley had invited to his Satanic temple. Crowley left Boleskine House, forever, two years later, in 1913. But in more recent times, a modern disciple of Aleister Crowley and Theosophy called Dr. Michael A. Aquino, after a distinguished career in U.S. military intelligence as specialist in psychological warfare operations, and after founding The Temple of Set, became obsessed with the occult side of Scotland and went on to become the 13th Baron of Rachane (Clan of Campbell).

Crazy, but true, Dr. Aquino, who is an American born Californian, occultist, Satanist, Theosophist, Democratic supporter, and, of course, mind control expert and Jesuit agent, known all over the world for his involvement in the infamous MK-Ultra, seems to know the dark side of Scotland very well and wanted to be part of it. But don't be fooled, Aquino, is not a real member of the Scottish nobility, as the author of this book, he has simply acquired the title, taking advantage of the recent change in Scottish laws. On the 28th of November 2004, the Abolition of Feudal Tenure, etc. (Scotland) Act 2000 came into full force and effect, putting an end to the real Scottish feudal system.

Under Scots law a Scottish Prescriptive Barony by Tenure is an "incorporeal feudal heritage," not attached to the land and remains the only genuine, prescriptive, degree of title of UK nobility capable of being bought and sold – since under Section 63(1) of the Act, the dignity of Baron is preserved after the abolition of the feudal system. By the way, this is a Highland Scottish clan I am also related too of great historical importance, and one of the largest and most powerful of the Highland clans, so I feel pretty insulted by Aquino's action, but that's something for the Court of Lord Lyon to judge, not me.

Lord Lyon is the heraldic authority for Scotland, much as the English Kings of Arms are responsible for granting arms in England. I am sure Aquino, who was raised in California, used his Satanic connections to acquire the title. Crowley is not an anomaly, but he is part of a historical process that has yet to reach its climax in the Apocalypse. Satan's Legion relayed the primary plank of their program to Crowley, and this is contained in The Book of the Law.

For human beings, the real struggle is not against each other, but against the evil cosmic powers which govern this dark age. Crowley was the medium of such demonic forces, but on several occasions, as he wrote down The Book of the Law, Aiwass chastised Crowley for being concerned about what he was writing. As part of my spiritual journey into the darkest realms of the Illuminati, I eventually found myself looking into Aleister Crowley at a young age as my hero, only to realize soon after he was a primary tool of the dark side. I recognized during my time in the Illuminati network that The Book of the Law was an important work, and probably the most revered by modern Satanists.

What I found out during my years in this Luciferian reality is that The Book of the Law has been fulfilled to a large degree in today's sick world and I am not the only one stating this, because its contents tie in strongly with The Book of Revelation, and the sick belief of most modern mystery schools emanating originally from Theosophy.

Just as God sent Jesus into this world to save us, so Satan sent Crowley into the Theosophical milieu of his time to shape "Modern Satanism" that started revealing itself to the world with Anton LaVey, and Michael Aquino, both followers of Aleister Crowley and Satan. Today Satanism is worse with organizations like The Satanic Temple. Mike Culkin writes: The Book of the Law says that the god of war and vengeance, Ra-Hoor-Khu-It (Horus), is now positioned on his seat of power. His human incarnation will occur, and he will be in the form of a child, the False Prophet or Antichrist.

He is the offspring of the union of Hadit (Satan) and Nuit (Babylon). This union and its "fruit" is referred to in Revelation chapter 13. The Book of the Law tells us that Satan is the coiled serpent, and he is about to spring. Christians will be put to death. Through war and chaos, the goddess (Nuit/Babylon) will be placed in a position to be worshipped, and her offspring, the child, will be mightier than all the kings of the earth, although one of these rich "kings" will finance him. Pachamama and the Church of Ignatian Spirituality

When in October 2019 we saw 250 delegates at the Amazon Synod of the Catholic Church take part in a procession with banners and signs marking what they deem injustice felt by the indigenous peoples of the Amazon, some of us knew there was something more sinister and dark behind the scenes created by the usual Jesuits.

Remember, that the Amazons were a tribe of warrior women believed to live in Asia Minor who were said to be brutal and aggressive just like Greta Thunberg, and their main concern in life was war. Today, the church seems to push the feminist agenda along with the pagan one. During the Synod Bishops, priests, indigenous leaders, and Catholic laity began a pilgrimage through Rome to show support for the Synod of climate change and paganism, beginning at the foot of Castel Sant'Angelo and moving toward St. Peter's Square, singing hymns and stopping for each of the 14 Stations of the Cross. The pilgrimage began with a Native American from the Lakota tribe “incensing” the congregation with a bowl of burning sage — originally a pagan practice now adopted and enculturated into Catholic liturgy.

Present in the ceremony was the carved pregnant female figure of Pachamama that was seen for the first time on October 4, 2019, when Pope Francis led a heretical pagan ritual in the Vatican gardens with an Amazonian woman as part of a supposed tree-planting ceremony. The woman, bedecked with a traditional feather headdress, prostrated herself before the tree and a pair of statues of naked pregnant women. The indigenous woman also shook a rattle in an apparent blessing or incantation over the group at the ceremony that included a Franciscan friar. Some members of the group prostrated themselves or knelt during the ceremony, while the Pope stood by giving his Jesuit blessing to the pagan event that later inspired the traditionalist Catholic website LifeSite.com to launch a petition after the ceremony, urging the Vatican to remove the pagan statues and any other alleged pagan symbolism at the Synod that was displayed at Santa Maria in Traspontina Church near St. Peter's Basilica in Rome during the Synod. Church Militant reported how Communist and Socialist politicians from Brazil have used this church for fringe meetings promoting their leftist anti-Bolsonaro agenda during the Synod.

At one point, somebody entered Santa Maria in Traspontina Church and removed the pagan statues and symbols of Pachamama filming the whole thing. The instant viral video that became the most popular event of the Pan Amazon Synod showed a person removing the various carved fertility figures of Pachamama from the Church of Santa Maria del Traspontina, and later throwing them right into the River Tiber from the bridge next to Castel Sant'Angelo. Two weeks after Alexander Tschugguel came forward as the person responsible for an act that has since been reported throughout the world, garnering praise from devout Catholics and condemnation from liberals. In an interview with my friend Michael Voris, Tschugguel discussed the reasons for his actions and what Catholics can do moving forward to help restore the Church.

In early December 2019, Cardinal Raymond Burke, one of the few voices of reason in the Catholic Church today, revealed during a short interview with the French independent TV station, TVLibertés that the backed French initiative invited the Catholic faithful call to prayer and reparation for the Pachamama idolatry that took place at the Vatican during the Amazon Synod, saying that “diabolical forces” have entered St. Peter's Basilica that needs to be “vanquished.” Adding: “Something very grave happened during the special assembly of the Bishops' Synod for the Amazon region. An idol was introduced into St Peter's Basilica – the figure of a demonic force.”

Originally, Pachamama was a fertility goddess who presided over planting and harvesting, embodies the mountains, and causes earthquakes, but after the conquest by Spain, and the conversion to Roman Catholicism took place, the figure of the Virgin Mary was equated with that of Pachamama for many of the indigenous people who were deliberately misled.

However, in pre-Hispanic culture, Pachamama is often a cruel goddess eager to collect her sacrifices. Animal sacrifices have been a part of such a culture for thousands of years. The tradition continues today and can be observed first-hand in Bolivia's La Paz's Witches Market. Grotesque-looking llama fetuses are sold to superstitious buyers, who bury them under new homes to curry favor with Pachamama (mother nature). Rumor has it that for larger constructions such as apartment buildings or mines, humans are used instead to please La Paz. So is the Vatican of Pope Francis gradually moving towards accepting not only paganism but human sacrifice? Or even worst child sacrifice?

As I mentioned earlier, the statue of Moloch has been placed earlier this year in an unprecedented move at the entrance of the Colosseum. Interestingly enough, Pope Francis' prayer at Good Friday's Stations of the Cross at the Colosseum included in 2019 a plea for abused youth and the church, that he said is continually under attack. The statue of Moloch will be conveniently removed on the 29th of March 2020 before the return of Pope Francis for his annual show that is continuing the mockery of the stations of the cross that began with the Pachamama processions.

The Colosseum we all know as that place where the Roman government, which gradually transformed into the Roman Catholic Church from around 325 AD, slaughtered Bible-believing Christians and fed them to the lions. Let's remember that Good Friday and Easter Sunday are Satanic ritual days. There are days where death, bloodletting, and human sacrifice are ritualized in Satanic celebrations that often take place in Rome on the evening of the Pope's annual visit to the Colosseum. Evidence of what I am saying was found at Fiumicino airport in Rome during the Jubileum Easter of the year 2000 when the Italian border police intercepted and confiscated a large amount of obscure Satanic artifacts on their way to Rome for the Holy Week, that included the bones of rare animals, and other diableries. No evidence of the material was left, however, for inspection after a minor fire conveniently broke out in the room where they left all this unusual stuff. Airport staff said it was black magic.

Holy Week is a very important time for the Christian and Catholic communities all over the world. It is a time where believers in Jesus Christ our Lord can come together in unity and remember his last days, and honor Him for His work on the cross. It all ends with a time of rejoicing on Easter Sunday, where we unite in rejoicing for our salvation in Christ often in front of some great food.

However, it is also a time where Satan and the dark side of the Illuminati use people to celebrate acts of death and sacrifice for their evil purposes. Always remember that the days observed by Christians to remember Christ's sacrifice, are days regularly used by Satanists to perform human sacrifices and Pope Francis knows it. Of course, he is a Jesuit, and he is also a Satanist, and a black magician, conscious of his decision in accepting Moloch at the entrance of the Colosseum. The late Madame Blavatsky, in an article she wrote entitled "Theosophy or Jesuitism?" Made a clear warning about the black magic practiced in the Jesuit order: The Jesuits have practiced not only Occultism but BLACK MAGIC in its worst form, more than any other body of men; and to it, they owe in large measure their power and influence.

Blavatsky feared the Jesuits all of her life knowing they would take over her Society after her death as they eventually did. However, the Theosophical Movement that shaped and created the origins of the New Age movement, was inspired by occult forces and alleged masters from the East secretly working with the Jesuits who were the first to go there. So the whole Theosophy project had been played all along by the Jesuits through their "Ascended Masters" also called Mahatmas or Masters of the Ancient Wisdom. H. P. Blavatsky was the first person to introduce the concept of the Mahatmas, but she was falling into a Jesuit trap that will exploit her to bring out in the public arena information on Eastern spirituality that the followers of Saint Ignatius had already gathered, classified, and studied centuries earlier; right at the start of their mission.

At first, she talked about them privately, but after a few years two of these adepts, known by the pseudonyms of Koot Hoomi (K. H.) and Morya (M.), agreed to maintain a correspondence between the years 1880 and 1884 with a couple of important British Theosophists called A. P. Sinnett and A. O. Hume. The product of such mysterious communications became the foundational work of the Theosophical Movement, but also laid the foundations for the Jesuit take-over feared by Madama Blavatsky, who always fought against the dangers of Loyola Spirituality, but at the same time accepted dangerous ideas and practices from the East that could later undermine Christianity falling into the Jesuit/Tibetan trap. Nothing was ever said about the Jesuits or against them by later leaders of "The Theosophical Society – Adyar" such as the previously mentioned Annie Besant or pedophile Charles Webster Leadbeater, or by Adyar Theosophist Alice Bailey who went on to found her organization, the Lucis Trust that forged the basis of the pseudo-spirituality practiced in the United Nations Headquarters that I have talked about extensively in Volume 2 of my Confessions.

Indeed, the three I just mentioned even spoke favorably of Catholicism at that point, with Leadbeater eventually co-founding a so-called Jesuit inspired Theosophical church known as the Liberal Catholic Church (complete with confession and absolution of sins by its priests and an affirmed belief in the apostolic succession of the Church of Rome announcing the impending Second Coming of Christ.

Annie Besant, who was for a long-time leader of the Theosophical Society, was also a leading member of the leftist Fabian Society and an influential figure among the British Illuminati. Her close association with the Fabians only served to underline the trenchantly anti-Christian character of the Society and its commitment to creating a One World religion. She was chiefly instrumental in bringing the Hindu guru-avatar, Jiddu Krishnamurti to England and training him to become their New Age messiah, a forerunner of the Antichrist who fortunately renounced his role. In the meantime, Alice Bailey went on informing her readers that the “Master Jesus” was planning to eventually travel to Rome to become the new Pope, whereupon a glorious new era could begin for the Catholic Church. It never happened, but today the Society of Jesus controls 100% of the Catholic Church, and 100% of the New Age sects emanating from the original Theosophical Society, just like modern Satanism. Madame Blavatsky was manipulated by her trans-Himalayan teachers that worked for Satan’s Legion in favor of the Jesuit plan to eventually establish a One World Religion. Remember, Blavatsky claimed that she had made physical contact with the adepts’ earthly representatives in a territory already colonized by the Jesuits, as I described earlier in the book; but she also claimed she continued to receive teachings from them through psychic channels, through her abilities of spirit mediumship that inevitably will put Blavatsky in the hands of demonic tricksters and malignant forces. Ultimately, what the founder of Theosophy received was a product of mind control and Jesuit manipulation, made to establish in the open the legendary Great White Brotherhood built to influence the New Age scene, and of course occult Freemasonry in the hands of black magicians from the Illuminati realm like the infamous Aleister Crowley.

The actual phrase “Great White Brotherhood” was extensively used in pedophile Leadbeater’s book from 1925, The Masters and the Path, that the Jesuits used to promote this dark agenda. Of course, New Agers and Jesuit agents will tell you that the founders of the “Great White Brotherhood” came from Venus and that many of the branches of the GWB (as the New Agers like to call them) around the planet were founded by spiritual adepts associated with a mysterious serpent. The Jesuits have been crafting this whole project for nearly five centuries in secret “Congregations.”

Heckethorn, confirms this in his Secret Societies of all Ages and Countries, (vol. II, p. 296): There is considerable analogy between Masonic and Jesuitic degrees; and the Jesuits also tread down the shoe and bare the knee, because Ignatius Loyola thus presented himself at Rome and asked for the confirmation of the order. Not satisfied with confession, preaching, and instruction, whereby they had acquired unexampled influence, they formed in Italy and France, in 1563 several ' Congregations ', i. e. clandestine meetings held in subterranean chapels and other secret places. The Congregationalists had a sectarian organization, with appropriate catechisms and manuals, which had to be given up before death, wherefore very few copies remain. For several decades, Marxists masquerading as “Democrats” and Neocons have been gradually undermining and dismantling the United States. Once it has been weakened sufficiently, the hammers of Siegfried, Marx, and the Fabians will fall with a crushing intensity, but the real perpetrators are the Jesuits!

Paul Le Cour, Atlantis and the Jesuit secret of Lake Titicaca

Most people don't know that Lake Titicaca, that is the original and most important center of Pachamama worship in the world, is also considered by the Jesuits as the possible location of the mythical city of Atlantis. The narrator portrait in Plato's Timaeus says that Atlantis was "beyond the Pillars of Hercules," the classical name for the Straits of Gibraltar, and "larger than Libya and Asia combined," that is, much of North Africa plus present-day Turkey. So the Atlantic Ocean is the obvious place to begin investigating the legendary island that sank into the sea in a single day and night taking with it all its mysteries and secrets.

The Jesuits were the first to investigate and study this legend and they found what they were searching for in a place that is the largest freshwater lake in South America and is also regarded as the highest navigatable lake in the world. Here they discovered the remains of the City of Tiahuanaca which lies 15 miles northeast of Lake Titicaca and has been called for a long time the cradle of civilization by the Incas, as the city was thought to be built more than 15,000 years before any civilization was supposed to exist. There are many islands on the lake, but the most important is the Isla Del Sol, which is the key to Lake Titicaca's spiritual Atlantean significance. This small island is considered the most sacred site of the Andes where worship is continued to this day at the Temple of the Sun by an ancient priesthood of local Illuminati, possibly operating without interruptions since the time of Atlantis. For this reason, this is the ultimate center of Pachamama/Jesuit worship in the world where human sacrifice is still practiced in secret, and legend has it that if you fall into the immense depths of the lake you are offering yourself as a sacrifice to Pachamama, and no one will ever dare to help you out.

The fixation for Atlantis was imbedded in the DNA of the Jesuits since St. Ignatius, but it went one step forward with the studies of the Jesuit polymath Athanasius Kircher, who was the first to publish a map of Atlantis, putting it fairly and squarely in the middle of the Atlantic. There was no reason for him to do otherwise.

Plato's testimony made sense did not contradict the Bible and agreed with Kircher's own experience of the mutability of land and sea. In 1638, the famous Jesuit scholar saw the city of Euphemia in Calabria disappear in a volcanic cataclysm, leaving a putrid lake in its place. Noah's Flood, the subject of his book Arca Noe, (building the ark), published in Amsterdam in 1675, had caused the whole earth to be submerged, then reappear with a different arrangement of land and sea. The followers of the late Professor Charles Hapgood (1904-1982) say that Kircher based his illustration on some ancient map he had found, and they might be right. However, most contemporary researchers think that if that is the case, Kircher would not have failed to announce the fact, as he did whenever he made some fortunate discovery. But these naive mainstream academic researchers forget the secrecy of the Jesuits, and the fact that many of their discoveries might not have been approved for public consumption by their Superior General, aka the Black Pope, ending up like so many secrets in the Vatican Archives, where the truth about Atlantis might have been kept secret for many reasons.

Kircher might have even studied the work conducted a few years earlier by Father Blas Valera SJ (1545-1597), the child of a native Incan woman and Spanish father, caught between the ancient world of the Incas and the Jesuit order who seemed to have helped the Jesuits learn more about the secret occult power of Pachamama. Valera, a Jesuit in sixteenth-century Peru, already believed in what for non-Jesuits was and is a heresy, that the Incan culture, religion, and language is equal to their Christian counterparts. He took a part in the III Concilio Limense of 1583 and was an active collaborator of the more known Jesuit, José de Acosta (1539 or 1540), head of the Jesuits College at Valladolid, and later rector of the prestigious college at Salamanca. Father Valera was eventually accused of heresy because he included some favorable comments to the Inca Empire. He was shut in by the Jesuits for a brief period and died under mysterious circumstances, killed by the pirates in Spain in 1597. As you can see, nothing much has changed in the Jesuit way of thinking and acting since Father Valera, and still, nobody is capable of fully understanding the importance that the Jesuits give to places of worship connected to Atlantis. So to this day, most of the academic world believes Athanasius Kircher's map was just the work of an eccentric priest and an imaginary reconstruction, like innumerable other illustrations in Kircher's works, ^[92] without taking into consideration the secret work conducted in by the Jesuits in search of the mysteries of Atlantis.

The next major contribution to Atlantology came from behind the Iron Curtain, where millennialism was still part of the official philosophy. Nicolas Zhironov, a Soviet chemist, conducted a study of the subject during the 1950s and 1960s, and his book Atlantis; Atlantology: Basic Problems appeared in an English translation in 1970. It carried great conviction with its command of sources in many languages and its maps, tables, and charts. Zhironov's concluded that a largish island could have existed on the northeastern slopes of the mid-Atlantic ridge, with the Azores as the remains of its mountain peaks. For Atlantologists who favor this location, none has surpassed Zhirov in the scientific breadth and depth of his research. Science, however, is always on the move, and Zhirov's work is now over half a century old.

Much of it was superseded in 1981 by another Eastern European scientist, Zdeněk Kukul. Moreover, for all his apparent rigor, Zhirov fell into the besetting sin of Atlantologists, rational, and otherwise. This concerns the use of Plato's Timaeus and Critias as evidence. Whenever some detail of Plato's account supports their theory, they welcome it as evidence; when it does not, they dismiss it. ^[93]

Let's always remember the Jesuits were created in France by Loyola and his followers, even if the final approval came of course from Rome. La Revue Atlantis was founded in 1927 and is still flourishing after hundreds of issues. It was the creation of a gentleman named Paul Le Cour (1871– 1954), a well-educated civil servant and keen outdoorsman who founded the Society for Atlantis Studies with Roger Dévigne.

Over the years, he was involved with psychic research, spiritualism, theosophy, earth mysteries, platonism, and astrology—in short, the whole panoply of occultism, with a leaning toward its more serious and philosophical side, as with most Jesuits agents. Le Cour's mission became more focused in the 1920s after he came into direct contact with a branch of the Illuminati network created by the Jesuits called the Hiéron du Val d'Or (English: “Sanctuary of the Golden Valley”).

This was a Catholic esoteric secret society based primarily in France, which existed from approximately 1873 to 1926. It was founded by the half-Basque, half-Russian Baron, Alexis de Sarachaga (1840–1918), and by a Jesuit by the name of Victor Drevon. Later, Jean-Pierre Laurant, the authority on French esotericism, called it “the crossroads of Catholicism, esotericism, the occult sciences, and an ultra-conservative nationalism.”

Contrary to what happens today, the Jesuit Order became involved with conservative and nationalistic forces. I have mentioned this semisecret society of the Illuminati Network in Vol.1 of my Confessions in connection with the earlier stages of what will become later the controversial Priory of Sion founded by Pierre Plantard. The Hiéron du Val d'Or built an extraordinary temple-museum in the town of Paray-le-Monial. The Center for Studies on New Religions describes the Hiéron's four main purposes as:

- (1) the demonstration of the origins of Christianity from the mythical Atlantis;
- (2) the reconstitution of a universal sacred tradition;
- (3) the preparation for the year 2000 of a political and social reign of Christ the King and the teaching of the sacred name of Aor-Agni—Light-Fire—as the key to all knowledge;
- (4) a secret purpose to fight against anti-Christian Freemasonry through the creation of a “Christian Freemasonry of the Great West.” ^[94]

The Hiéron du Val d'Or sought to erect a Catholic hermetic form of Freemasonry contrary to the “secular” Freemasonry of the anti-clerical Grand Orient de France and was particularly devoted to Christ the King, picking up on some of the earliest Masonic Christian elements left-over by the so-called Clerics (Klerikat), created by Jesuit agent Johann August Starck (1741–1816), and the Strict Observance, clearly filtered through the French Knights Beneficent of the Holy City, more commonly referred to as Chevaliers Bienfaisant de la Cité Sainte of the Rectified Scottish Rite.

In the Hiéron du Val d'Or, Paul Le Cour was drawn by the whole mythology of Paray-le-Monial which had begun in 1673 when St. Margaret Mary Alacoque had a vision of Jesus taking her heart into his. This led to a popular Catholic cult of the Sacred Heart, to papal approval, and eventually to such monuments as the Sacré Coeur Basilica in Montmartre, Paris. At that point, the Sacred Heart became the ultimate Sacred symbol used in secret by Catholic Freemasons linked to the Jesuits like the members of the Hiéron du Val d'Or. There is a reference to this secret society in the 1999 film “End of Days,” an American supernatural action horror film directed by Peter Hyams and starring none other than the elitist puppet Arnold Schwarzenegger. The Sacred Heart is among the most familiar and moving of Catholic devotional images, but its symbolism can also be strange. So let's take a brief look at the explanation behind some of the features of the Sacred Heart.

First of all, let's talk about the flames. The Sacred Heart brings to mind the Passion of Christ on the cross. There is the crown of thorns, the cross, usually atop the heart, and the wound from the spear that pierced His side. But why is the Sacred Heart always shown as if it's on fire? That certainly did not happen at the crucifixion. There are three reasons behind this. First, we have to remember that Christ's self-offering on the cross was the one-time perfect consummation of all the sacrifices of the Old Testament. This necessarily includes burnt offerings, which were the highest form of sacrifices in ancient Israel, according to The Jewish Encyclopedia. An early form of such sacrifices was what Abraham set out to do with Isaac, hence the wood he had his son collect beforehand. Second, fire is always associated with the essence of divinity in the Old Testament. Think back to the burning bush that spoke to Moses, the cloud of fire that settled on Sinai, and the flames from above that consumed the sacrifice of Elijah. This explanation fits with the gospel account of the crucifixion, in which the piercing of Christ's side revealed His heart at the same time that the curtain of the temple was torn, unveiling the holy of holies where God was present.

Finally, the image of fire associated with the heart represents Christ's passionate love for us. One 19th-century French devotional card has these words arched above the Sacred Heart—Voilà ce Cœur qui a tant aimé les hommes, which roughly translates to: "Here is the heart that loved men so much." One traditional exclamation is, "Sacred Heart of Jesus, burning with love of us, inflame our hearts with love of Thee." We see this happen in the gospels, where the disciples on the road to Emmaus realized that their hearts had been "burning" after their encounter with Jesus. The rays of light. Look closer at the image of the Sacred Heart. There is something else framing it besides flames. They are rays of light. In John 8:12, Christ declares that He is the "light of the world." In Revelation 21:23, we are told that in the new Jerusalem at the end of times there will be no light from the sun or moon because the Lamb of God—that is, Jesus—will be its source of light. Light, like fire, is a symbol of divinity. Think of the Transfiguration and the blinding light that Paul experienced on the road to Damascus. As the light of the world, Christ is also the one who "enlightens" us, revealing God to us. The Sacred Heart constitutes the climax of divine self-revelation, showing us the depths of God's love for us.

The arrows. The crown of thorns and the spear make sense. But sometimes the Sacred Heart is also depicted with arrows. Again, that's not something we find in the gospels. One explanation is that the arrow represents sin. This is reportedly what our Lord said in a private revelation to St. Mary of St. Peter. The arrow could also draw upon an ancient Roman metaphor for love, which, according to ancient myth, occurred when the god Cupid shot an arrow through the hearts of lovers. The crown of thorns. Unlike the arrows, the crown of thorns is reported in the gospels. But in traditional images, it encircles the Sacred Heart, whereas in Scripture the crown was fixed to Jesus' head.

One traditional account offers this interpretation, describing those who are devoted to it: "They saw the crown transferred from His head to His heart; they felt that its sharp points had always pierced there; they understood that the Passion was the crucifixion of a heart" (The Heart of the Gospel: Traits of the Sacred Heart by Francis Patrick Donnelly, published in 1911 by the Apostleship of Prayer.)

In other words, wrapping the crown around the heart emphasizes the fact that Christ felt His wounds to the depths of His heart. Moreover, after the resurrection, the crown of thorns becomes a crown of victory. Donnelly hints at this as well: "From the weapons of His enemy, from cross and crown and opened Heart, our conquering leader fashioned a trophy which was the best testimony of His love." In ancient gladiatorial contests, the victor was crowned. In Revelation 19:12, Christ wears "many crowns" and believers who are victorious over sin and Satan will receive the "crown of life" (Revelation 2:10).

Finally, according to St. Margaret Mary Alacoque, the seventeenth French nun who helped start this devotion, the points of the thorns are the many individual sins of people, pricking the heart of Jesus. As she put it in a letter, recounting the personal vision she had received, "I saw this divine Heart as on a throne of flames, more brilliant than the sun and transparent as crystal. It had its adorable wound and was encircled with a crown of thorns, which signified the pricks our sins caused Him." The cross. Like the thorns, the cross is both rooted in the gospels but also displayed in a way that does not follow them in every detail. There is almost an inversion of the crucifixion.

In the gospels, Christ hung on the cross, His heart correspondingly dwarfed by its beams. But in images of the Sacred Heart, it is now enlarged and the cross has shrunk. Moreover, rather than the heart being nailed to the cross, the cross now seems planted in the heart—as St. Margaret Mary Alacoque put it—if to say to us that the entire reality of the crucifixion derives its meaning from and—can not be understood apart from—the heart of Jesus. As Donnelly wrote, "The Heart [is ... forever supporting the weight of a Cross.] Truly, it is the heart of Jesus that makes the cross meaningful for us today." ^[95]

Although Le Cour did not share the more extreme ideas of the Hiéron fraternity, he thought that might have some initiatic connection with the Templars, for whose Christian chivalry he had a great admiration.

As his official biography says: He realized little by little that through his research he was on the quest for the Primordial Tradition, the lost word revered by religions and initiatic societies, which originates from Atlantis considered as the mother of Western civilization. The mythical king of the vanished continent was Poseidon, patron of knights, whose ideal qualities Le Cour extolled.

These words confirm Le Cour's obsession for the Jesuits who have always believed in secret that Atlantis was the originator of all religions and magical practices. In 1926, Le Cour backed by the French Jesuits, founded the Société d'Études Atlantéennes (Society of Atlantean Studies) and published his first book: À la recherche d'un monde perdu: L'Atlantide et ses traditions ("In search of a lost world: Atlantis and its traditions"). The title alluded to Proust's À la recherche du temps perdu ("Remembrance of Things Past"), whose ultimate volume had just appeared. The theme of Le Cour's book is that "through iconographic symbolism and the comprehension of the names of divinities and places, one may hope to reconstitute the great and unique tradition coming from Atlantis."

One of the symbols in question is the serpent, which appears to signify the primordial light that Le Cour calls Aour. A second symbol is the heart, symbol of fire, Agni. These together made up the sacred name of Aor-Agni used in the Hiéron's devotions. The discovery that Le Cour was most eager to share is that the serpent and the heart are carved into monuments of the megalithic period, such as the dolmens and standing stones of Brittany.

As always with such discoveries, their worn state leaves much to the interpreter, and many an irregular concavity may take on the shape of a heart. However, the importance for Le Cour was that these symbols appeared in monuments that he believed to be Atlantean in origin, thereby rooting the relatively modern revelations of Paray-le-Monial in the deep past. As suggestive proof of a continuing underground tradition, Le Cour borrows from Basseur de Bourbourg a German map of 1708 in the shape of a heart, in which the place of Atlantis is filled by a wound dripping blood. Once again the symbolism of the Sacred Heart appears in his studies. Even the presence of nine drops seems to him significant, for the number nine, he reminds us, has an important role in Kabbalah.

Everywhere he goes, Le Cour sees or hears momentous coincidences, his will to believe granting him a generous margin of error and historical improbability. Here is a specimen of his linguistic method, employed in a gentle diatribe against the Theosophists and their excessive admiration of India:

As for those who are currently seeking the sources of wisdom in India, they find towns there whose names come from our West, like Agra, which is the name of a suburb of Eleusis where the Lesser Mysteries were celebrated; they will find Maya and Aor-Agni in the names of the chief divinities of the Rig-Veda: Yama and Varouna, and they might also connect the word Thibet with the word Thebes. All these names belong to the sacred language of Atlantis; they are vestiges of that distant past when the Atlantean people stamped the mark of their profound knowledge onto place names, for the sake of generations far in the future. But if these researchers find in India the symbol of the serpent, they will not find the heart there, the key to the mysteries, at least not in the profound sense given it in the Western tradition.

Perhaps it is this very looseness of interpretation that caused Le Cour, rather than pressing a personal agenda, to welcome writers of all sorts to his journal. Atlantis carried articles from members of the Académie Française, from scientists, and the more serious occultists of the day. A conspicuous exception was René Guénon, who had been involved with the Hiéron du Val d'Or but seldom mentions Le Cour without a snide remark. ^[96]

Le Cour, like most Jesuits agents of his time, went on to become another precursor to the New Age movement, with his groundbreaking work from 1937 entitled The Age of Aquarius. But is it the Age of Aquarius? Or the Age of the Antichrist? Given the end-times rise of the New Age "plague of the spirit" and how it feeds into the plans of the Antichrist, New Age leaders and channeled demon-spirits are indeed laying out the basic agenda for a glowing Golden Age of Aquarius. Peace, love, and brotherhood are its mottos that cunningly conceal the devouring face of darkness that is behind it all. Sadly, the people who are swept up in the Antichrist's powerful delusion will have little to no idea of the Neo-Holocaust that they are helping to perpetuate. Just as most New Agers today would scoff at these ideas, they are blinded to the fact that Satan is the author of this movement, serving his purposes alone in preparing the way for the False Messiah. ^[97]

Regarding the actual entering of the Age of Aquarius, Carl Gustav Jung considered the matter in his essay "The Sign of the Fishes" that became a chapter of his work Aion: Researches into the Phenomenology of the Self that deals with the symbolism of Pisces, which he often called "the sign of the fishes," and its connections to the Christ-symbol and the age of Christianity. Jung says that the spring point will enter Aquarius in the course of the third millennium, and added this interesting footnote to explain things in detail:

Since the delineation of the constellations is known to be somewhat arbitrary, this date is very indefinite. It refers to the actual constellation of fixed stars, not to the zodiac noeton, i.e., the zodiac divided into sectors of 30° each. Astrologically the beginning of the next aeon, according to the starting-point you select, falls between AD 2000 and 2200. Starting from the star “O” [Omicron Piscium] and assuming a Platonic month of 2,143 years, one would arrive at AD 2154 for the beginning of the Aquarian Age, and at AD 1997 if you start from the star “a 113.” [Alpha Piscium] The latter date agrees with the longitude of the stars in Ptolemy’s Almagest.

Jung was aware of the difference between the astronomical and astrological viewpoints and the consequences of starting from one (an actual star) and calculating from the other (an astrological month).

Here is the whole problem of astrology, both as popularly understood and as scientifically denied. The popular understanding is that the constellations have some influence on Earth, especially as the planets pass through them. The skeptics point out that constellations and signs no longer coincide, due to precession, so that when astrology thinks a planet is in the sign of Aries, it is really in the constellation of Pisces, making nonsense of the whole system. The truth, such as it is, lies in the fact that astrological positions have nothing to do with the stars, but only with the positions of the planets relative to the solstices and equinoxes. The assumption is that there is something special about the earth’s annual orbit and that it does divide first into the solstitial-equinoctial cross (4), then into the “signs of the zodiac” (12), then into the decans (36), and finally into the degrees (360), each of which has its symbol and quality. The underlying model is more akin to musical harmonics than to anything astronomical, and for all I know, it may have been the real basis for the ancient preference for these numbers. Given that, anyone who declares that the Aquarian Age began or will begin on a certain date either does not understand the problem or has an agenda that overrides it. [\[98\]](#)

The New Age Movement created by the Jesuits and developed by the dark side of the Illuminati has such an agenda. A friend of Aleister Crowley and Krum-Heller, named Peryt Shou (1873 - 1953), known German mysticist and Germanic pagan revivalist whose writings are known to have influenced Walter Nauhaus the co-founder of the Thule Society, called Crowley’s infamous “Law of Thelema” embraced today by a large part of the Masonic community and the dark side of the New Age movement, the “great law of destiny of the Atlanteans, which is returning today.” So what is this “great law of destiny” that the Atlanteans share with the Law of Thelema?

First of all, let’s remember that the Atlantean adepts were corrupted, and deeply involved in black magic. This was the main reason for the end of this once great civilization, and although the evil magicians of the island of Atlantis were eventually overthrown, we didn’t get completely rid of them as the famous “Two Chelas” of the Theosophical Society (Mohini Chatterji and Laura C. Holloway) once wrote: “Ages after this event, which but robbed black magicians of predominance and not of existence, we find Atlantean black magicians at times interfering with the progress and development of students of the real occult science.” [\[99\]](#)

This means that Crowley could be an Atlantean Adept of black magic interfering with the progress and development of the occult, just as the Jesuits. Crowley wrote an essay on the lost continent of Atlantis, the manners and customs, magical rites, and opinions of its people, together with a detailed account of the catastrophe, which ended in its disappearance. Crowley’s essay entitled Atlantis is a political satire/mystic treatise that includes a deliberately obscure description of the O.T.O. system of sexual magick, under the guise of an account of Atlantis which owes more than a little to Bulwer-Lytton’s, The Coming Race.

This will confirm the interpretation of Atlantean Adepts for Crowley’s true name of the Order of the A.·.A.·. suggested by the late American writer L. Sprague de Camp (1907-2000). Other researchers have also linked the A.·.A.·. initials to the Arcana Arcanorum, a mysterious Rite that goes back to Atlantis practiced in secret by Freemasons, and in a rather different form by the Jesuits. A credible source from an Italian aristocratic family once told me that he thought the rite in question was conducted annually in a church in Rome, where during the day people regularly attend mass and pray, and at night once a year the Jesuits had an extravagant orgy with members of the black nobility involving children. It allegedly happens in the Spring after the “Rite of Spring” during which time a virgin is sacrificed and her blood is drunk on the altar before the orgy begins. The sacrificial child must be born after the winter solstice, just like Jesus.

There is indeed another direct link through Karl Brodbeck, leader of the Swiss Illuminati through World War II (1939-45), who claimed he had founded a Grand Lodge of Atlantis in the USA; a branch of the Illuminati that had split off in the 1920s.

W. Collins proposed a line of succession for this Illuminati lineage that goes from the highly influential John Yarker to Ronald Powell, to the famous Illuminati Gnostic Bishop Richard, Duc de Palatine that I have discussed extensively in Volume 3 of my Confessions. However, in 1933 — Karl Brodbeck known as “Rudolf,” Provincial Custodian for Switzerland of Weishaupt’s Illuminati Order who also belonged to the Bernese Zur Hoffnung Masonic lodge, the Droit Humain Co-Masonic lodge, and was Worshipful Master of the Zur Gralsburg lodge, achieved a merger with the Illuminati Austrian provincial group.

Brodbeck belonged to the group surrounding F.L. Pinkus the “spiritual father” of Hermann Joseph Metzger (1919-1990), future Outer Head of the O.T.O. and Head of his Order of the Illuminati, as Paragranus, Grand Master X° of the Ordo Templi Orientis, Sovereign Grand Master General of Ordo Illuminatorum, Sovereign Grand Master General of Fraternitas Rosicruciana Antiqua (also known with the acronym F.R.A.), and Sovereign Patriarch of Ecclesiae Gnosticae Catholicae. Orders that included Illuminati O.T.O co-founder Theodor Reuss’s probable heir Hans Rudolf Hilfiker and his colleagues Reichel, Merlitschek, Bader, Baumgartner from Aarau (Zur Treue lodge), Struppler, and the Abramelin-enthusiast Traugott Egloff. A figure who discussed in detail the black magic of Atlantis and its adepts like no other was a contemporary of Metzger. A person also involved in the F.R.A. known as Samael Aun Weor (1917-1977), was a spiritual teacher and author of over sixty books of esoteric spirituality, who at the tender age of 17 was asked to lecture at the local Theosophical Chapter, and a year later was admitted into the Fraternitas Rosicruciana Antiqua. Let’s not forget the role of Dr. William Wynn Westcott, another Atlantean Adept fixated with Atlantis whose role in the Illuminati has finally been fully revealed in the recently published book by Lewis Masonic entitled, English Illuminati by Alistair Lees, where the English Illuminati rituals are finally revealed in full to the public alongside other source materials. This is a unique opportunity to see what went on behind the scenes in the supreme headquarters of world-wide Freemasonry, changing perceptions and sharing the true story of the English branch of the Illuminati, the world’s most notorious order whose existence was denied by English Freemasons. This refreshing book starts with a chance discovery - a secret manuscript locked in a box and hidden away in a private occult library. Inside was found a handwritten notebook by the same Dr. William Wynn Westcott. It had been there for over a century waiting patiently to be discovered and its contents brought to light.

Building on the scholarly work outlined by the excellent book The Secret School of Wisdom, published in 2015, the story of the English Illuminati starts a hundred years after the original order was banned. In 1880, when the order was relaunched by Theodore Reuss in Munich, as I outlined in the previous Volumes of my Confessions including Volume 1, and it is from this organization that the secret documents originated, eventually finding themselves in the hands of W.W. Westcott. Westcott, who took it upon himself to have them translated and to introduce the Illuminati to the English society at the turn of the 20th century.

A beautifully illustrated book throughout that finally reveals what the English Freemasons have kept secret for so long, that is the work and the existence of both the men and women, who were members of the Illuminati order and other characters and mysterious societies active at the time in England and how they all fit into the Illuminati network. The majority of images have never been seen before. Those who wish to investigate further will be pleased to know it also includes a detailed index and bibliography.

Chapter Six

Our Solution to this mess

How to defeat Evil of Communism in the End times

Communism is a dangerous virus that has been spread by the Jesuits and Sabbatean Frankists for way too long. I would like to give you an example of the evil nature of Communism by telling you a sordid tale involving former Italian Communists and Jesuit agents against President Donald J. Trump.

This story begins with a plot devised by the Italian intelligence, none other than Giorgio Napolitano, who served as the 11th President of the Republic from 2006 to 2015. He is the only Italian President to be re-elected to the presidency because he is the illegitimate son of Umberto II, the last King of Italy. For this reason, critics often refer to him as Re Giorgio (“King George”). However, Napolitano, who is a close friend of Bill and Hillary Clinton, and, of course, Pope Francis, was a member of the Italian Communist Party (now the Italian Democratic Party). Even the progressive newspaper, The Guardian made the following statement in 2006, after his election: “The Italian parliament today elected a former communist as president.”

What people don’t know is that ex-president Giorgio Napolitano, because of his special bloodline, still controls Italian politics, even after he resigned in 2015. Former constitutional court judge and veteran center-left politician Sergio Mattarella, who took his place as Italian president, is only a modest Sicilian Mafia/Jesuit puppet in the hands of “King George” who actively conspired against Donald J. Trump with former Prime Ministers Matteo Renzi and Paolo Gentiloni in 2016 under direct orders from Pope Francis, Barack Obama, and Hillary Clinton.

Renzi, who is a devout Jesuit asset who practices Ignatius Loyola Spiritual exercises every summer with members of the Company of Jesus in Sardinia, has often abused Italian intelligence for his interests and was linked in the past with the Clinton Foundation.

They tried to frame Trump using the rather naive George Papadopoulos, a former member of the foreign policy advisory panel to Donald Trump’s 2016 presidential campaign. They did it through a fake “Russian spy” named Professor Joseph Mifsud, who is, in reality, a Jesuit agent still protected by the Vatican and Giorgio Napolitano. Both Papadopoulos and Joseph Mifsud revolved around the mysterious Link University in Rome, historically connected to the Vatican, but also regularly worked and organized events with the FBI, and a variety of U.S. intelligence agencies, and of course, the Italian ones, that participated in a manipulative plot to sabotage from the start President-elect Donald J. Trump while Obama was still in office.

Aside from any further developments of this story, the problem is that this was possible because these former Communists, as they like to describe themselves, are still a part of the vilest ideology ever created, and they all suffer from Trump Derangement Syndrome. Leftists can’t seem to digest the U.S. President because he goes against all their false values and hypocrisy daily. In June 2018, Joshua Philipp writes in The Epoch Times:

Communism has caused the deaths of more than 100 million people over the last century through famine, political killings, and genocide. It has created societies where power is held by a small group that enslaves entire nations and where killing fields, gulags, and reeducation-through-labor camps become part of everyday life. But the economic failures, mass killings, and slave nations created by Communism are not the biggest crimes of the system. The biggest crime of Communism is its destruction of the human soul. A key goal of Communism is to demoralize societies—to destroy the culture, religion, and basic values of any society it touches. [\[100\]](#)

However, a resurgence of interest in Marx’s thought has been ongoing since 2008, when the global economic crisis crafted by the elite Sabbatean bankers led many to question the viability of the Capitalist system, always the main object of Marxist criticism.[\[101\]](#) Marion Smith, executive director of the Victims of Communism Memorial Foundation, said the report shows millennials are “increasingly turning away from capitalism and toward socialism and even communism as a viable alternative.” Making Communism acceptable again instead of Making America Great Again, seems to be one of the present goals of the Jesuit-inspired Sabbatean Frankist Illuminati, that celebrate with the left-wing, a common holiday, known as May Day, chosen as the date for International Workers' Day by the Socialists and Communists of the Second International, to commemorate what is called by historians The Haymarket Affair, an event that took place in Chicago in May 1886.

There is also a historical link between this particular day and the foundation of the Order of the Illuminati founded by Weishaupt on May 1st, 1776. The Illuminati Order set up by Jesuit-inspired Adam Weishaupt, began an ideological process that would end with Filippo Buonarroti, who finally transformed the Communist ideology into its full tyrannical potential. In fact, in 1818, Buonarroti, whose alias in the Illuminati Order was Camilius, issued a manifesto that claimed Communism can only be initially achieved and thereafter maintained using a dictatorship and a socialized system of rigid state controls. Later, Karl Marx became one of the biggest fans of Buonarroti's work, and the road was set for the perverse ideology of the Communist movement, and later, The Spartacus League (German: Spartakusbund) that was a Marxist revolutionary movement organized in Germany during World War I, that officially was named after Spartacus, the leader of the largest slave rebellion of the Roman Republic, but, in reality, was based on Adam Weishaupt's alias in the Illuminati Order, Spartacus.

Leon Trotsky, a leader of the Russian Communist Party alongside Lenin, noted the importance of this in his 1930 autobiography, My Life. Trotsky wrote: "In the 18th century, freemasonry became expressive of a militant policy of enlightenment, as in the case of the Illuminati, who were the forerunners of revolution." That form of Liberal Freemasonry eventually pushed the Grand Orient de France (GODF) in 1877, at the instigation of the Protestant pastor Frédéric Desmons, to allow those who had no belief in a supreme being to be admitted, a subject I have written about in great detail in Vol.5 and Vol.6.66 of my Confessions series.

The original Illuminati were skilled in misleading recruits to not be able to detect their ultimate goals and they have done this even in their more modern emanations. For the sake of survival, the Illuminati recognized that dissimulation had to be used extensively over their membership. Knigge, one of the Order's leaders, explained to an intimate: We must give such an account of things, that fanatics shall not be alarmed, and that shall notwithstanding, excite a spirit of free inquiry... With the assistance of hidden schools of Wisdom, Liberty and Equality, the natural and imprescriptible rights of man warm and glow in every breast. [\[102\]](#)

The Illuminati, following this Jesuit modality, learned to cloak themselves in the message of Jesus just like Pope Francis does today. Thus, the Illuminati said to recruits in the early grades that their goals were compatible with Christianity. They even taught that Communism was Christ's aim, and Knigge devised this strategy. He fought hard with Weishaupt to introduce the affirmation of "Christian principles" as a cloak for their true agenda. The Illuminati claimed Jesus taught Communism, but that this truth was forgotten over the ages. Hence, they taught that the true followers of Jesus are the Illuminati. Of course, Christians are the real Illuminati, but we know we are the real "illuminated ones" and not the Satanists. Even the Epistle to the Hebrews, often called the Book of Hebrews, calls Christians "the enlightened ones." The Book of Hebrews boldly proclaims the superiority of Jesus Christ and Christianity over other religions, including Judaism. In a logical argument, the author demonstrates Christ's superiority, then adds practical instructions for following Jesus.

Jesus Christ will soon return and every dark force that existed since time began, especially evil conspirators like the Jesuits, or the Sabbatean Frankists behind what most people call the Illuminati, will be cast into the eternal fire. Weishaupt's Illuminati had hoped that one day some might even mistake Illuminism or Liberal Freemasonry for a "Christian-oriented" sect when only traditional Freemasonry is Christian-oriented.

Communism is not just a political movement, but also an ideology with its sense of moral structure and allegiance. They trusted their internal security apparatus would avoid the discovery of their true meaning to this claim. Only their best recruits would understand the secular meaning that will be expounded to the future Priest of the Order that the teachings of Jesus Christ have been misunderstood and distorted and that their true purpose was to return humanity to its original dignity and freedom by tempering men's passions and curbing their needs. These intentions were supposedly preserved in a disciplina arcani, esoteric doctrines kept alive over centuries by a "secret schools of wisdom" and inherited by Freemasonry.

As evidence for these claims, a great many quotations from the Gospels are presented to the Illuminati, as well as several examples taken from patristic texts that are meant to illustrate the similarity and continuity of the forms and ceremonies of baptism in the early Church with initiation into Freemasonry. This was essentially a bogus theology. By contrast, there is no question that the idea of organizing a secret academy of sciences was put forward in all earnestness. The Instruction in scientificis incorporated into the Presbyter degree, Weishaupt's answer to the Ratio studiorum of the Jesuits, was originally written in May 1781, as an instruction for the Provincial Superiors. It was envisioned that the Priests would be the overseers of the Order's scientific endeavors. In the context of a narrative repeatedly stressing the historical importance of "secret schools of wisdom," the idea of establishing an academy hidden from the prying eyes of the public may have been appealing enough, and no member is known to have questioned the use of scientific knowledge exclusive to the Illuminati Order. [\[103\]](#)

The explanation to the recruit that Illuminism was true Christianity and not the trojan horse of atheism, before moving to the secrets of the secret schools of wisdom, became a standard fixture of many subsequent Illuminist societies, but the truth is that open atheism was made possible by the advance of religious toleration and the religious ambiguity of Freemasonry that could be interpreted as contributing to the rise of atheism.

This tactic typical of Jesuitism embraced by Adam Weishaupt's Illuminati was handed down in the dark to successor secret societies, political movements, and concocted religions that unfortunately form the New World Order today. Remember, that the Jesuits studied this method in great detail, and justified pious frauds as necessary. Jesuits made "casuistry a separate science," and defended "the permissibility of acts which are sinful in themselves, but may be justified or at least pardoned, under extenuating circumstances, such as...tyrannicide to free the people from oppression...pious fraud or lying for a good purpose." [\[104\]](#)

In this way, the birth of Communism was camouflaged as being almost the birth of a new religion. Not a surprise that author and researcher, Michael Walsh, said in his book The Devil's Pleasure Palace that "During the Cold War, critics in the West remarked that the Soviet Union and its doctrine of Marxism-Leninism resembled nothing so much as a new religion.” He also noted that this “new religion” of Communism mirrored the structures of traditional religions—with its own “scripture” in the writings of Marx and Engels, with its leaders raised as “prophets” of the system, and with a clerical caste in the Politburo committee and Communist apologists in the West. [\[105\]](#)

Knigge wrote to a member of the Illuminati about how crafty these efforts were in covering up the nature of their real mission. He explained: “I have been at unwearied pains to remove the fears of some who imagine that our Superiors want to abolish Christianity. ... Were I to let them know that our General holds all Religion to be a lie, and uses even Deism... only to lead men by the nose [would bother them].” [\[106\]](#)

Initially, the recruit would be told that the Illuminati would use non-violent means to abolish all governments. “You will have seen for yourself that our goal is neither power nor wealth, nor that we endeavor to usurp the rule of the world or overthrow ecclesiastic or secular governments. Thus, if you envisioned the Illuminati in this manner, you have deceived yourself; and so that you penetrate no further into this honorable Sanctum with your deceptively bold expectations, the Illuminati fully dismisses you through me, if you so desire.” [\[107\]](#)

The Illuminati told the recruit that as the Order spread its influence in the world, a gradual lessening of the need for the government would take place. Along these lines, Knigge’s instructions dating from 1781 taught that:

The secret schools of wisdom, were always the archives of nature and the rights of man; through their agency, man will recover from his fall; princes and nations, without violence to force them, will vanish from the earth, the human race will become one family, and the world a habitation of rational beings. Moral Science alone will effect these reforms imperceptibly; every father will become like Abraham and the patriarchs, the priest and absolute lord of his household, and reason will be man’s only code of law. [\[108\]](#)

Thus, the Order of the Illuminati would seem almost to be Christian to the outside world, but in reality, they were crypto-Communists in bed with the Jesuits acting this way to avoid political persecution or political suicide. They also wanted to restore the political freedoms of Israel in the patriarchal age (which could extend to Moses, Joshua, and the age of Judges as well). However, did they simply want liberty and equality for all mankind, or is there something more occult and sinister present in their original background as well?

In the higher degrees we find this instruction:

I, invested with the authority of the Superiors, urge you to ensure that you maintain peace, repose, loyalty, diligence, and love among the Priests who are subordinate to you so that you may win the affections of your inferiors to direct them with benevolence and due care. I strongly forbid you, under threat of anathema, to remove, purloin or reveal to any uninitiated person anything about the occult sciences or the secrets revealed to you or to be revealed, but instead to keep them to yourself discreetly and to guard them with the greatest care.

This confirms the teaching of occult sciences in the Epop, or Priest of Illuminism degrees, understanding these occult sciences is one of the missions of this book and the entire Illuminati Confessions series.

Julius Evola described the term “Occult War” in the following way:

The occult war is when the forces of worldwide subversion lead from behind the scenes, adopting means that almost always elude ordinary methods of investigation.

The notion of an occult war belongs to a tridimensional vision of history, to a history considered not according to the two-dimensional surface of apparent causes, events, and leaders, but otherwise, depending on the third dimension of depth, the subterranean direction, that retrieves the decisive forces and influences which are often not even ascribable to the simple human element, whether individual or collective. [\[109\]](#)

When one objectively considers twentieth-century history, it is quite apparent that the Illuminati powerbrokers had to overthrow the European monarchies, which were to some extent, the preservers of Indo-European culture, but also of the tradition of hereditary monarchy implanted in society since time immemorial using the weapon of Communism for the destruction of tradition. The continuing war that began in 1914 deposed the three great monarchies of continental Europe, i.e., Germany, Austria, and Russia with terrible and destructive results in the long run, but the Illuminati cult of power-seekers achieved one of their most closely held desires. They knew this would bring a gradual sea of change in politics, borderlines and culture.

European Nationalism was dealt a serious wound, and in the intervening 1920s and 1930s, what happened in Italy, Germany, Spain and other nations brought about the second phase of the armed struggle, ending in 1945 with the victory of Soviet Communism, aided and abetted by the U.S. Freemasons. America changed, and as a result, Europe was changed, redesigned, and remade into the desired left-wing trap we see today. The postwar decline, degeneration, deconstruction, and reconstruction of Germany and its culture is a prime example. If you haven't figured it out yet, the Illuminati Dark Forces won WWI and WWII. Please be aware that this was largely accomplished through the occult powers usurping and often utilizing the American government for their evil mission, [\[110\]](#)

"The proud American will go down into his slavery without a fight, beating his chest and proclaiming to the world, how free he is. The world will only snicker." This is what the Russian newspaper Pravda wrote back in 2009 at the start of the Obama-era that fortunately ended with the arrival of Trump. The dark forces of today often rely on our overall impotence and ignorance, instilled through our abysmal ignorance of key facts [\[111\]](#), promoted by most of the mainstream media, and the mercenary authors and journalists of our time, the same who demonize anybody standing for the sovereignty of their countries against this globalist Jesuit nightmare.

Remember, as long as we play the passive and submissive role in our everyday life, [\[112\]](#) the globalists will continue to unfold their plan and things will only get worse on this prison planet.

We should all have the courage recently shown by Owen Shroyer, of Infowars, who was arrested and later released on the 9th of December 2019, after he confronted with great courage the swamp creature Rep. Jerry Nadler (D-NY), saying what a lot of Americans would have loved to say if they were there with Owen: "The members of the democratic party are committing treason! You can kick me out but you're the ones committing treason! America's done with this! America is sick of the treason committed by the Democratic party!" At that point, Senator Nadler banged his gavel in desperation, trying to regain order as Capitol Police escorted Owen out. Owen continued until he was removed from the room: "I'm not going to sit here and watch you run an impeachment scam to remove our vote. We voted for Donald Trump! Americans are sick of the democratic treason! Trump is innocent."

If you want to see real change in the world, we all need to take action at some point, like Owen, to avoid being crushed by the criminal ways of the Jesuit adepts of the Deep State. I also did a similar thing in Italy a few years ago on the 9th of December 2013 with the Forconi ("Pitchfork") movement, that took action against the European Union. But the 9th of December 2019 is, for various reasons, a very symbolic day in this ongoing war against the forces of evil and the Antichrist, that are manifesting in the process Divine connections that will help those who are chosen by God in the End times in their specific missions. I say stop wasting your time in search of useless conspiracies, like the belief that the Earth is flat, or the fact that Elvis might still be alive, and stay away from Ufology, but never give up on God! We need to focus now on something much more deep, and sinister at work every day connected to the Artificial Intelligence take-over that is an Apocalyptic event that is already aiding the Antichrist and will soon be unstoppable.

The truth is that the occult war occurring behind the scenes of the New World Order and now increasingly manifesting in the open, is also a religious war against Christianity that is gradually carrying us into a time of cultural decay, deconstruction, and degradation like no other in history. If the ancient Indo-European scriptures are correct, then our age is the Kali Yuga, the Dark Times, the Era of Gloom. Once again, we see the sad truth in the following words of Baron Julius Evola's "Conclusion" to La Guerre occulte by Léon de Poncins:

*With this situation, heavy with a sinister destiny, we bring up to date our account of the occult war: we say this with respect not so much to the factions in struggle themselves, which are hardly masked any longer - the slogans and the expedients of the most trivial propaganda of both parts can be set aside - as to the ultimate, universal, global significance of the events, namely the probable end of an entire cycle of universal history. And this is what Viscount Léon de Poncins, wrote in State Secrets, a Documentation of the Secret Revolutionary Mainspring Governing Anglo- American Politics, (English translation, 1975):...it is not easy to unveil the secrecy with which the occult forces cover their actions. Our aim is more modest. We intend to bring to light part of the evidence, in the same way that the beam of a torch abruptly pierces the darkness of night and reveals people and things which had been hidden until then. The forces of the occult need to act under the cover of mist and darkness if their work is to succeed. ...I endeavor to make available to my readers the awareness of the existence of certain subterranean forces* that threaten to undermine the future of our ancient western civilization.

Viscount Léon de Poncins (1897 –1975) was a French aristocrat and a traditional Catholic journalist and essayist. He authored numerous books and articles advancing the typical Judeo-Masonic conspiracy theory so popular in his day. I don't always agree with his anti-Jewish and overly generic anti-Masonic, writings and rhetoric, but I do agree with his anti-Communist and anti-progressive views. Until his death, de Poncins denounced the occult forces and organizations that ruled the world that sought to poison Christianity, and after all these years he was right in so many ways, but like many other Catholic aristocrats, he didn't have a full picture of the complex situation, because he left out the Jesuits and was sadly anti-Semitic in his approach.

A contemporary of Léon de Poncins, who was still particularly obsessed with the anti-Jewish thesis but seemed to have a slight more complete vision, was Nesta Helen Webster (1876-1960), a controversial author who revived conspiracy theories about the Illuminati, arguing that the secret society's members were occultists, plotting Communist world domination, using the idea of a Jewish cabal, the Masons, and the Jesuits as a smokescreen. Looking where we are now in 2019, who can blame her for her warning?

In her books, Webster argues that Bolshevism was part of a much older and more secret, self-perpetuating conspiracy. She had a wide readership in her days, even Winston Churchill praised her in the controversial article from 1920 that cited Adam Weishaupt entitled, "Zionism versus Bolshevism: A Struggle for the Soul of the Jewish People," where he asserted that, "This movement among the Jews is not new. From the days of Spartacus-Weishaupt to those of Karl Marx, and down to Trotsky (Russia), Bela Kun (Hungary), Rosa Luxembourg (Germany), and Emma Goldman (United States), this world-wide conspiracy for the overthrow of civilization and reconstitution of society based on arrested development, of envious malevolence, and impossible equality, has been steadily growing. It played, as a modern writer, Mrs. Webster, has so ably shown, a recognizable part in the tragedy of the French Revolution." Webster wrote books like Secret Societies and Subversive Movements, the Menace of Communism (with Mrs. Katherine Atkinson) and The Origin and Progress of the World Revolution.

FIG. 55 – The author with my friend and colleague Owen Shroyer (born 1989) an American political activist and commentator from St. Louis who now lives and works for Infowars in Austin, Texas.

She described three possible sources for this conspiracy: Zionism, Pan-Germanism, or the “occult power.” Mrs. Webster stated that she leaned towards Zionism as the most likely culprit of the three but in doing so she was not sure, as she never really fully revealed the source of this “occult power.” She also claimed that even if the Protocols of the Elders of Zion were fake, they still describe how Jews behave, something I don’t fully agree with because it does not take into account the role of two other key actors in this global play. I am talking about the Jesuits, and the Sabbatean Frankists, the two biggest elements of this great game. The truth is that religions, and most Mystery Schools, degenerated after the advent of Weishaupt’s Illuminati and the Sabbatean-Frankist heresy to satisfy the material interest of their members.

In every age and every country there are always a few individuals who seek more satisfying answers to the great questions of life than they can find in their local churches and temples, or through science, and this should be the mission of the good side of the Illuminati that should have truly illuminated them. If your quest is sincere and you persist, you should eventually be drawn into contact with one of the world’s genuine Mystery Schools working for the betterment of mankind, where you might be instructed and trained. There have always been from the time of Atlantis onwards, aside from the constant conflict between black and white magicians, certain illuminated centers of knowledge, called Mystery Schools, responding to the cry for understanding the light from aspirants throughout the ages.

These groups are corrupted by the times we are living in and have only empty teachings and false promises to offer, often drawn into the superficiality and materialism imposed by the dark side of the Illuminati. All this is helping the present decline of our Society pushed by the “occult power” mentioned by Nesta Webster. For thousands of years, the secrets of the real Illuminated beings have been guarded carefully from the spiritual dilettantes, but now that the dark forces have taken over the show, are the dilettantes themselves controlling all this New Age crap on behalf of the dark side of the Illuminati and their Jesuits controllers?

They transform even the most beautiful spiritual concept into trash to feed to the masses of idiots following them.

The modern understanding of these so-called Illuminati Orders, including the Ordo Templi Orientis or A.M.O.R.C., and also some Masonic rites, has been crafted by the errors and the filth of Jesuitry/Communism (intertwined with Liberalism and New Age Occultism) that is still spreading darkness and evil at all latitudes but as St. Louis de Montfort foresaw, the battle before us is to be led ultimately by the Virgin Mary and a new set of saints that will rise to fight in the End Times: Towards the end of the world... Almighty God and his holy Mother are to raise great saints who will surpass in holiness most other saints as much as the cedars of Lebanon tower above little shrubs...These great souls filled with grace and zeal will be chosen to oppose the enemies of God who are raging on all sides.

They will be exceptionally devoted to the Blessed Virgin. Illumined by her light, strengthened by her food, guided by her spirit, supported by her arm, sheltered under her protection, they will fight with one hand and build with the other. With one hand they will give battle, overthrowing and crushing heretics and their heresies, schismatics, and their schisms, idolaters and their idolatries, sinners and their wickedness.

Before this victory can occur, mankind must engage in a crucial battle with both liberalism and occultism, especially with New Age occultism, which is the spawn of Communism and the dark side of the Illuminati and the Sabbatean-Frankist heresy, that gradually evolved into Theosophy and a myriad of secret societies that in the end have always been infiltrated and manipulated by the Jesuit order. Adam Weishaupt was, after all, a Jesuit-trained professor of Canon Law, who defected from Christianity and embraced the Luciferian ideology while still teaching in the Jesuit-run Ingolstadt University. In the early 1790s, a courier of the Illuminati who was carrying sensitive information about the order was struck dead by lightning as he rode through Ratisbon on his way from Frankfurt to Paris, the Illuminati plot was finally exposed, and the legendary order was eventually closed down, but Weishaupt’s methods for the creation of a political rather than esoteric secret society became the norm, especially for those interested in establishing Communism and Socialism as the new ways of life in a prison world.

However, for some researchers, at its basis, Communism is a sort of evolutionary paradigm, a biological, cultural, and spiritual paradigm rooted in the mystical historical philosophy of Marx’s companion, Friedrich Hegel – who believed in spiritual evolution within the context of human history, within the context of the cosmos which, according to Hegel is involved in the process of spiritual evolution itself. This multifarious Communist evolutionary paradigm has been aided by mass propaganda and the complete control of the educational systems that I have talked about earlier, finding its way into the most respectable academic realm as a result of the reputable work of Russian scientists like Ivan Pavlov (1849-1936), and Alexander Oparin (1894-1980), who was the “Father” of the Primordial soup theory.

This infamous “Primordial soup” inspired by the British naturalist Charles Darwin (1809–1882) viewed it as a “warm little pond” back in 1871. In 1924, Oparin proposed his theory on the origin of life on Earth through the transformation, during the gradual chemical evolution of molecules that contain carbon in the primordial soup. It was Satan’s forces who worked through his servant Charles Darwin to propagate the lie of biological evolution that is also the cousin to the more advanced and esoteric, pseudo-spiritual evolution of Theosophy and the New Age, which is also the product of Communism. So although all the above are products of Communism and Ignatian Spirituality, the latter (spiritual evolution) is the most insidious; it is intimately related to the propagation of the immense aberrations affecting the West today that wants to ultimately manifest the non-religion of the Antichrist.

Nowadays, this anti-Christian force seems united worldwide under the Stop Trump Coalition that is serving those who are preparing to unleash a new World War in the years following the 2020 turning point. So the occult war is becoming, unfortunately, once again a real physical war, that will kickstart with a series of civil wars, erupting around the world in the coming years before and after the Transhumanist takeover that, fortunately, will not be accepted by the whole population.

Remember, conspiracies have existed since the beginning of time and the Mark of the Beast is a reality worth taking very seriously. Ever since the serpent aka Choronzon started chatting up Eve in the Garden of Eden, evil people have been conspiring against someone, somewhere. Evidence of this is found even in the Bible. The word “conspired” appears 19 times in the King James Bible. It’s a part of life, it’s human nature; to ignore it is to deny the truth. However, more powerful in man’s consciousness than conspiracies against the individual are conspiracies against principalities and nations; those ancient conflicts that originated when the first boundary lines were drawn, and that is the real basis and origin of all occult wars. Later, in the 19th and 20th centuries, we saw ideologies such as Socialism, Communism, and Fascism emerge as political conspiracies against nations, but they were always created from the ideas of secret societies, groups clearly in league with the devil.

The Christian belief system teaches that all evil perpetrated by mankind is initiated by the fallen angel known as Lucifer. The Apostle Paul called Satan the “god of this world” in 2 Corinthians. He said that if the gospel is hidden, it’s hidden from those who Satan has blinded, “lest the light of the glorious gospel of Christ, who is the image of God, should shine unto them.”

Transhumanism, another Jesuit threat on mankind

Transhumanism will be a great way in for Satan's Legion for all those people who in the next few years will be microchipped or have any kind of brain-computer interface installed (BCI), sometimes called a neural-control interface (NCI), mind-machine interface (MMI), direct neural interface (DNI), or brain-machine interface (BMI). They are all names for ways devised by these extradimensional demons to take our soul, using us like patients of an insane diabolical experiment.

Through MK-Ultra, patients among the Beat Poets, like Allen Ginsberg, and agents like William S. Burroughs, the CIA produced the Hippie culture of the 60s. With "sex, drugs, and rock 'n roll" they fulfilled the plans of the Sabbatean Frankists and the Frankfurt School to overthrow traditional morality by way of the infamous bands of The Laurel Canyon scene that flowered in L.A. in the late 60s and early 70s, in league with members of Crowley's O.T.O., the Manson Family and the Church of Satan.

Knowing that the creation of the computer would be correctly suspected as a tool of Big Brother, the Jesuits advised their CIA pals to align the Hippie ideals with the emerging computer culture to produce a movement called Cyberpunk, from which Transhumanism evolved. And with Cyberpunk begins the true story of the latest Jesuit Illuminati conspiracy.

It starts with an avant-garde movement known as Situationism, which evolved from the occult and fascist-influenced art movements like Dada, Lettrism, and Surrealism. By aligning with the French postmodernist philosophers, and teaming up with William S. Burroughs, Andy Warhol, and the New York Underground, they produced the Punk movement of the late 1970s. The Punk movement was closely connected with the emerging chaos magic scene (also spelled chaos magick), derived from Crowley's student, Austin Osman Spare. It was heavily influenced by the parody religion of Discordianism, founded by a good friend of Lee Harvey Oswald, Kerry Thornley, who Jim Garrison suspected as serving as Oswald's double.

Discordianism's leading exponent was O.T.O. member Robert Anton Wilson, author of The Illuminatus! Trilogy, and a key figure in the cult of neopaganism and neo-shamanism, along with Terence McKenna. Together with MK-Ultra agent Timothy Leary, who went from evangelist of LSD to evangelist for the personal computer, they became the father figures of the Cyberpunk movement. It's leading publication was the technopagan Mondo 2000, founded by R.U. Sirius, who went on to become a major figure in the transhumanist movement. [\[113\]](#)

In 1990, Max More, who articulated the principles of Transhumanism as a futurist philosophy forged his particular transhumanist brand which took the form of the Principles of Extropy, and laid the foundation of modern transhumanism by giving it a new definition:

Transhumanism is a class of philosophies that seek to guide us towards a posthuman condition. Transhumanism shares many elements of humanism, including a respect for reason and science, a commitment to progress, and a valuing of human (or transhuman) existence in this life. [...] Transhumanism differs from humanism in recognizing and anticipating the radical alterations in the nature and possibilities of our lives resulting from various sciences and technologies [...]

Max More, goes even deeper into the construct of this new ideology with these words:

The concept of eupraxophy encompasses within it humanism, transhumanism (including Extropianism), and possibly a future posthumanism. Humanism is a eupraxophy or philosophy of life that rejects deities, faith, and worship, basing a view of values and meaningfulness on the nature and potentials of humans within a rational and scientific framework. Transhumanism is a class of philosophies that seek to guide us towards a posthuman condition. Transhumanism shares many elements of humanism, including a respect for reason and science, a commitment to progress, and a valuing of human (or transhuman) existence in this life rather than in some supernatural "afterlife".

In 1988, the first issue of Extropy Magazine was published by Max More (b. 1964), and Tom Morrow.

Marvin Minsky, even compared More to the late Carl Sagan, praising him as one of the few who think boldly and can express themselves articulately. Born Max T. O'Connor, he changed his last name to More to reflect his transhumanist philosophy. He has a degree in Philosophy, Politics, and Economics from St Anne's College, Oxford.

The term “extropy,” as an antonym to “entropy” was used in a 1967 academic volume discussing cryogenics and in a 1978 academic volume of cybernetics. In 1992, More and Tom Morrow went on to found the Extropy Institute (ExI), probably the first transhumanist group, and laid out some essential principles for the movement. ExI was formed as a transhumanist network and information center using current scientific understanding along with critical and creative thinking to relay a small set of principles or values that could help make sense of new capabilities opening up to humanity. In “On Becoming Posthuman,” More articulated the principles of extropy as:

“No more gods, no more faith, no more timid holding back. Let us blast out of our old forms, our ignorance, our weakness, and our mortality.

The future belongs to post-humanity.” [\[114\]](#)

In 1989, More revealed his Satanic nature even further when he wrote, “In Praise of the Devil,” where he denounces Christians as “moronic minions.” He explained:

“My goal is to bring out the values and perspectives of the Christian tradition and to demonstrate how it is fundamentally at odds with the values held by myself and all extropians and with the perspective we share.” He also added: The Devil – Lucifer – is a force for good (where ‘good’ simply is as that which I value, not wanting to imply any universal validity or necessity to the orientation). ‘Lucifer’ means ‘light-bringer’ and this should begin to clue us into his symbolic importance. The story is that God threw Lucifer out of heaven because Lucifer had started to question God and was spreading dissension among the angels... God, being the well-documented sadist that he is, no doubt wanted to keep Lucifer around so that he could punish him and try to get him back under his (God’s) power. Probably what happened was that Lucifer came to hate God’s kingdom, his sadism, his demand for slavish conformity and obedience, his psychotic rage at any display of independent thinking and behavior. Lucifer realized that he could never fully think for himself and could certainly not act on his independent thinking so long as he was under God’s control. Therefore he left Heaven, that terrible spiritual-State ruled by the cosmic sadist Jehovah, and was accompanied by some of the angels who had had enough courage to question God’s authority and his value-perspective. Lucifer is the embodiment of reason, of intelligence, of critical thought. He stands against the dogma of God and all other dogmas. He stands for the exploration of new ideas and new perspectives in the pursuit of truth... Praise Lucifer!... Join me, join Lucifer, and join Extropy in fighting God and his entropic forces with our minds, our wills, and our courage. God’s army is strong, but they are backed by ignorance, fear, and cowardice. Reality is fundamentally on our side. Forward into the light!” [\[115\]](#)

Other modern-day transhumanists such as B.J. Murphy are also self-described Satanists. Overlapping principles of Satanism and transhumanism include self-ownership - “One’s body is inviolable, subject to one’s own will alone.” - A Tenant of the Satanic Temple. [\[116\]](#) Transhumanism differs from humanism in recognizing and anticipating the radical alterations in the nature and possibilities of our lives resulting from various sciences and technologies such as neuroscience and neuropharmacology, life extension, nanotechnology, artificial ultra intelligence, and space habitation, combined with a rational philosophy and value system.

Finally, Extropianism is the foremost version of transhumanism born out of Luciferianism. While all transhumanists will agree on many overall goals, they may differ over the principles that will deliver us to a posthuman stage. The philosophy of Extropianism affirms the values of Boundless Expansion, Self-Transformation, Dynamic Optimism, Intelligent Technology, and Spontaneous Order. What does all this mean for mankind? Well, Dr. Tom Horn, one of the world’s foremost authorities on the topic of Transhumanism clears up the matter for us with this ominous warning:

DARPA calls its project “BioDesign,” and in its 2011 budget, the agency explains it “eliminates the randomness of natural evolutionary advancement primarily by advanced genetic engineering and molecular biology technologies to produce the intended biological effect. Horn says the real purpose has to do with immortality: DARPA has an interest in figuring out how to get around the decaying process of cellular life, and they use the term creating an immortal organism, he explains. He also adds, But it’s more than just an organism. They consider it to be potentially a lethal force that can be used in military applications.

At this point, putting aside the actual “weird science” technological developments and biological splicing chromosomal mutations involved in this project, the basic issue of morals and ethics remain central to the rise of this new so-called evolutionary advancement. [\[117\]](#)

Transhumanism was founded originally in the 1950s by top eugenicist of the New World Order, Julian Huxley, a biologist, and the Rockefeller Foundation, as a new brand name for the pseudoscience of Eugenics. Huxley is generally regarded as the founder of transhumanism after using the term for the title of an influential 1957 article. The term itself, however, is said to derive from an earlier 1940 paper by the Canadian philosopher W. D. Lighthall.

Its obsession for culling off the genetically inferior, while at the same time striving to promote dominance for the superior gave Eugenics a bad name, particularly after the Nazi brand of Eugenics created the Holocaust, during WWII. In the Holocaust, the influence of the Sabbatean conspiracy is said to be hidden in plain sight. For example, the term "Holocaust" is used without regard to its true meaning. The late Rabbi Antelman states that well before World War Two, the term meant "burnt offering" as in, "human sacrifice." Sadly, what most people didn't know at that time was that Nazi eugenics was merely the full-blown application of the principles that had been developed and were openly espoused by the British, French, and American Eugenics Societies.

So, Eugenics lives on, under many, heavily funded formats, one of them becoming Transhumanism. By and large, Transhumanism proposes to use applied science in the fields of genetics, robotics, and others, to steer human evolution into the future. A Transhumanist society will have, as its name implies, "transcended humanity." In such a society, human beings will have been replaced with hyper-efficient worker chimeras, bio-robotic warriors, and other purpose-made humanoid life forms, [\[118\]](#) making it easy for the Sabbatean Frankist Illuminati elite molded by the Jesuits to continue ruling the masses

This Transhumanist scenario is the "brain modem" and is considered the next step for human evolution. In April 2017, Elon Musk even announced he was backing Neuralink, a $100 million company working on a brain-computer interface. Facebook followed up on this by stating that it had already started work on a thought-to-text device to let people silently compose e-mails or posts. [\[119\]](#) Can you imagine what kind of nightmare we are about to face?

High-bandwidth connections into our brain could treat all sorts of things from blindness to paralysis, and even speech disorders, but at what cost for our freedom of thought? Even George Orwell could not come up with a more diabolical tool to finally enslave mankind. Ray Kurzweil's book, The Age of Spiritual Machines, may soon be considered a sort of Bible for these transhumanist freaks. The Age of Spiritual Machines for those who still don't know it is a non-fiction book about artificial intelligence and the future course of humanity written by Google's infamous "director of engineering," a man who is adored by his fans as a modern-day prophet of transhumanism. Kurzweil describes in his book a possible future that is becoming more and more concrete and real every day. The rapid expansion of technology in this new millennium piloted behind the scenes by the Illuminati will radically transform our social landscape.

Our modern life filled with information has placed everyone behind computer screens and cell phones. As society has become more abstract, it became virtual, fabricated with images that are dissociated from the facts and events of the world. In many ways, the recent hype of "fake news" reflects this counterfeit reality that we are all surrounded by. Waves of whistleblowers and alternative media outlets like Infowars, in recent years, revealed that we live in a kind of simulation that is intervened by government and corporate media propaganda. [\[120\]](#)

Artificial Intelligence technology could be a dangerous weapon in this supposed war on fake news, promoted by cybersecurity companies to facilitate censorship against any dissident from the alternative media. Let's remember that "By 2029, computers will have human-level intelligence," Kurzweil said in 2017, in an interview at the SXSW Conference with Shira Lazar and Amy Kurzweil.

The time frame is much sooner than what other stalwarts have predicted, including British theoretical physicist Stephen Hawking, as well as previous predictions from Kurzweil, who said it may occur as soon as 2045. So we need to wake up to prevent our future from becoming a nightmare. For some, Transhumanism may seem like a crackpot fringe movement, but it is the new ideology of the Illuminati, and in some ways, it has also been the controversial product of the Cabbalist Jewish faction, willing to push this ideology to embrace materialism and gradually attempt to supplant God leading in the end to a grotesque effort to override nature and achieve immortality.

Transhumanism, simply put, is mankind's dream on how to cheat death by achieving immortality through the advent of technological advances in computers and computing power. From all appearances, it seems, from my perspective, to have been born out of the universal desire "to live forever" and it seems to have been perpetrated by a more "Luciferian" mindset. It seems to be highly embraced by those who do not or will not accept that there is a "Supreme Creator" God of the universe and all created things are Creation. [\[121\]](#)

Transhumanist themes have been reflected for decades in movies such as 2001: "A Space Odyssey", "Blade Runner", the "Terminator" series, "The Matrix", and "Transcendence," but is best encapsulated in the recent movie, "Lucy," starring Scarlett Johansson, who takes a "smart drug" to achieve ever-increasing intelligence, until she merges her mind with the Internet, to become a god. This idea is rooted in an occult belief first developed in the sixteenth century by Isaac Luria, father of the New Kabbalah, and for some the godfather of Rosicrucianism. [\[122\]](#) These same people who will do everything in their power to "debunk" the "creationism theory" and will have spent enormous sums of money promoting evolution and even spawning a new Breed of Satanism. This new breed of Satanism is so prevalent and so strong, there are whole foundations devoted to promoting, developing, and pushing it out as a brand new "Acceptable Religion." Satanic churches trying to indoctrinate children into perceiving Satanism as an "Acceptable Religion" [\[123\]](#), and this is utterly insane!

The Jesuits and the Dark Side of the Force from Atlantis to Nancy Pelosi

First of all, to avoid any criticism from the academic world, let's remember that historically the Jesuits are a military organization, not a religious order, founded almost 500 years ago, not eleven or twelve thousand years ago, to defend the Catholic Church. However, the Jesuits are also heirs to a much older tradition that was allegedly transmitted to them by Atlantean Adepts who practiced the same black magic that destroyed Atlantis. Their chief is a general of an army, not the mere father abbot of a monastery or your average priest. This mysterious organization aims to gain power in all forms and shapes.

Absolute power, universal power, power to control the visible and invisible world with one single man, known as the Black Pope, who operates from a single location commonly referred to as Borgo Santo Spirito from the name of the street where the headquarters and command center of the Society of Jesus is based in Rome in the southern part of Rione Borgo; not far from St. Peter's Square.

To obtain this, Loyola devised six grades for the Society of Jesus. There are novices, scholastics, temporal, coadjutors, professed of the three vows, and professed of the four vows, the latter two grades being the only ones which confer a share in the government and eligibility for the offices of the society. Its head, virtually a commander-in-chief, is known as The General. He wields absolute power over the members who are pledged in blind obedience. The General claims his authority from the Pope.

The "fourth vow" is one of special allegiance to the Pope promising to go in obedience to him for missionary purposes whensoever and whithersoever he may order, — a pledge seriously qualified in practice, however, by the power given to the general sending out or recalling any missionary. The question has long been hotly debated whether, in addition to these six known grades in the official Jesuit system, there is also a seventh, secretly affiliated to the society, and acting as its unsuspected emissaries in various lay positions. This secret class who Eliphaz Levi was said to be a part of, is styled in France with the name "Jesuits of the short robe", and there is some evidence to support its existence in certain lawsuits against the Company of Jesus under the reign of Louis XV. However, the Jesuits have always denied the existence of any such body, even if there is plenty of evidence on the creation of this secret class of Jesuits that I have personally encountered in my life, and they often live a seemingly ordinary life with a wife and kids and are often involved in non-religious activities like politics.

The whole of the Jesuit system is ultimately controlled by the general aka the "Black Pope," who by the statutes of the society, has to reside permanently in Rome, and holds in his hands the right of appointment, not only to the office of each provincial Superior but also the right to appoint the offices of each house in every jurisdiction, no shadow of electoral right or even suggestion has ever been recognized or practiced within the internal Jesuit system. To assure complete control over it the superiors and rectors of all houses, colleges must report weekly to their provincial Superiors on all matters concerning the members of the Society of Jesus and all outsiders with whom they may have had dealings of any sort with. (125)

The Provincial Superior, for his part, must then report monthly to the Superior General, giving him a summary of all the details which he has reached on all the various matters concerning both on religious and geopolitical affairs of his area. The General stands with the Pope much as a powerful grand feudatory of the Middle Ages and the shrewd Roman populace has long shown their recognition of this fact by styling these two great personages as the "White Pope," and the "Black Pope."

In truth, society has never, from the very beginning, obeyed the Pope, and whenever it clashed with the pontiffs, and conflicts will arise between the two.

The infamous Inquisition, initially conducted by the Dominicans, induced by the Jesuits, whose own controversial methods had been different and more secretive in disclaiming all public connections with the infamous tribunal of the Inquisition, and represented the Society of Jesus free and innocent from any complicity with this infamous institution. In reality, it was Ignatius Loyola who fomented the foundation of the Inquisition in Portugal in 1545-6, and Father Nithard SJ, who was an Inquisitor-General of that kingdom in 1655 (126) and had absolute power over the life and death of his subjects.

This shows how double-faced the Jesuits have been from the very beginning. In this context, Jesuit Martin Delrio, a well-known theologian who wrote Magical Investigations (in Latin: Disquisitiones Magicae or Disquisitionum Magicarum Libri Sex), importing and popularizing his work with the beliefs of the controversial Malleus Maleficarum ("Hammer of the Witches", 1486), still unknown in certain areas of Northern Europe. They were responsible for the burning of many innocents that the Jesuits wanted to eliminate in the territories under their control for reasons that had nothing to do with black magic, or Satanic worship, but rather with their political or religious agenda. Trust me, when I tell you that the ever so progressive Jesuits would love to burn every supporter of President Trump on the stake, but, fortunately, we are no longer live in the Middle-Ages.

Hugh Trevor Roper described Delrio's brutal mission stating that: "It was the Catholic reconquest which introduced witch-burning into Flanders, and the Jesuit del Rio who would keep it up", holding the Jesuit Delrio directly responsible for the burnings. (127) The Jesuits were never innocent as they want us to believe, they have always been brutal and were constantly involved in covert operations all around the world in the name of the expansion and defense of the Catholic Faith.

After the first successes of the Catholic Faith among the lowest class of the Indian Caste System, Jesuit Robert de'Nobili, born in 1577 into an aristocratic family with great influence in the Roman Catholic Church related to two popes, in an official step sanctioned by Pope Gregory XV in 1623 to win the Indian Brahmins, adopted the insignia and mode of life of an Indian Brahmin.

Yes, you heard it correctly, Father de'Nobili joined a Hinduism class of priests, teachers, and protectors of sacred learning; a pretty incredible achievement for a westerner. Unfortunately, the Jesuit fathers who followed Father De Nobili's example in India, went as far as to refuse the administrations of Christian sacraments to the poor people and the "untouchables" of India, so not offend their new Brahmin converts. Needless to say, this was a completely anti-Christian stand by the Jesuits more interested in new alliances in the Far than respecting the Christian faith.

There was also the Chinese Rites Controversy, a 17th–18th-century argument originating in China among certain Jesuits that wanted to introduce pagan ceremonies honoring Confucius and family ancestors into the Catholic tradition. Immediately, the Dominicans and Franciscans took the opposite view and carried the issue to Rome to oppose it. Eight popes discussed the matter with great interest without reaching any result fearing the Jesuits until it was put down in 1744 by a bull of Benedict XIV that prohibited this pagan monstrosity.

But the Jesuits never gave up on the idea. With these Chinese rites, the Jesuit missionaries had virtually assimilated Christianity into paganism, and their practical reply to a papal decree in 1700 opposing such practice was instead to obtain an edict from the non-Christian emperor of China who declared that there was nothing idolatrous or superstitious in the inculcated religious usages that could then be freely practiced on Chinese soil by the Jesuits.

In 1710, when Cardinal Tournon, a legate of Clement XI, was sent to oppose these pagan practices, the Jesuits arrested him and sent him to a prison of the Inquisition in Macao, where the cardinal eventually perished. No, is not a conspiracy theory, I'm afraid its history, and it might be slightly boring compared to the rest of the book, but it gives you a complete understanding of where we are. Almost two centuries after the end of Chinese Rites Controversy, the Holy See in full Jesuit control re-examined the question and a decree was published on December 8, 1939, finally authorizing Catholics to take part in ceremonies honoring Confucius and other ones observing ancestral rites. A couple of decades after that the liberal heretical Second Vatican Council (1962–65) that kicked started in 1966 the Age of Satan that proclaimed that the principle of admitting native ceremonies into the liturgy of the church. These are also part of the origins of the Pachamama idolatry of today, aside from the previously mentioned connection to Atlantis.

Finally, as I wrote earlier in this book, they disobeyed the brief bull of suppression issued by Clement XIV in 1773, which ordered them to disperse at once, to send back all novices to their houses, and to receive no more members. It is clear to all of us that the Jesuits have always regarded their Society as an independent power, ready to co-operate with the papacy as long as their roads and interests are the same and to avail itself to the uttermost of the many pontifical decrees in its favor, but drawing the line far short of practical submission when their interests diverge because first of all, they are a demonic tool of the invisible world that worked with St. Ignatius since his visions in the Manresa cave in Spain.

Historically Jesuit power was weakened only in England by the rise of Jewish Power that occurred after the advent of Cromwell, but the Society of Jesus persisted nevertheless in their efforts to recapture their former status in that land, also thanks to the secret alliance with the Sabbatean Frankists and The House of Stuart, originally Stewart. It should be noted, and more than in passing, that Jacob Frank's sexual movement among the Jews coincided with the birth and flourishing of the so-called "Hellfire Clubs" of England and France, the Elect Cohens and later Martinists of France, and other communities with similar ideas and practices of sacred sexuality within the Illuminati Network, that supported and still supports the Jesuits.

Among them the most famous Frankist Rosicrucian Freemason is without a doubt, Moses Dobrushka (aka von Schönfeld, aka Jacobin Janus Frey) (1753-1794), a first cousin of Jacob Frank. On December 17, 1775, he converted from Judaism to the Catholic faith and took the name of Franz Thomas Schönfeld. On July 25, 1778, he was elevated to nobility in Vienna, becoming Franz Thomas Edler von Schönfeld. Dobruschka founded what seems to be the first Masonic secret society practicing sex magic, The Order of the Asiatic Brethren^[124] also known as the Die Ritter des Lichts (Knights of the Light) AKA Order of Knights and Brothers of the Light; and Die Brueder St. Johannes des Evangelisten aus Asien in Europa (the Asiatic Brethren of St. John the Evangelist in Europe), which was much talked about in Germany and Austria between 1783 and 1790, not least because it was the first German-speaking fraternal order to accept Jews.

Sex magic with incantations to spirits was a common claim against Freemasonry in the latter part of the 18th century and 19th century, and it is not without the same basis: the origin of it is Sabbatean kabbalism. The Order of the Asiatic Brethren became an advanced group of Freemasonry specialty Lodges which integrated Qabalistic teachings as well as true Masonic Brotherhood without regard to Religion. While one of the basic tenants of Freemasonry is the Brotherhood of Man under the All-Seeing Eye of God, “Let a man’s religion or mode of worship be what it may, he is not excluded from the Order, provided he believe in the glorious Architect of heaven and earth, and practice the sacred duties of morality. Freemasons unite with the virtuous of every persuasion in the firm and pleasing bond of fraternal love.” Most of all, they became the Masonic side of the Jesuit-influenced magical order of the Golden and Rosy Cross (Orden des Gold- und Rosenkreutz) founded in Germany, that I have talked about earlier. Its influence on the Fraternitas Rosae Crucis AKA the Fraternity of the Rosy Cross in its various disguises in France seems recognizable in its degree system and mix of teachings. Both seem likely influences on the successive Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn and all its descendants. The French and English Orders that followed are more focused on Qabalah and Solomonian (Ceremonial) Magick than practical alchemy indicates their primary source was the Asiatic Brethren rather than the Golden and Rosy Cross itself.

Because the Golden and Rosy Cross was an order where the Jesuit adepts of the elite worked mainly on practical medicinal results in laboratory experiments, and patenting the results was their primary focus rather than ceremonial magic or sex magick. [\[125\]](#)

So it was a Rosicrucian/Jesuit enterprise to be precise, but all Rosicrucians of that time were also Masons as there were little, or none of the original Lutheran Rosicrucians from the early 17th century around at that point, only Jesuit imitators. Regarding sex magic, it reappeared later in several Rosicrucian lodges, e.g. in the states in Randolph’s lodges. In the 19th century, another enigmatic Polish Jew joined the picture, the son of Rabbi Judes Lion Bimstein of Warsaw, who came to teach a form of “sacred sexuality” almost identical to the Sabbatean-Frankist, becoming the Illuminati Grand Master of the Hermetic Brotherhood of Light.

This man was one, Louis Maximilian Bimstein, better known as Aia Aziz, and better still as Max Theon (1848-1927), who was possibly another Sabbatean-Frankist. This is another important connection because Theon became, in turn, the teacher of none other than Madame Blavatsky who founded Theosophical Society.

This information was confirmed by Mirra Alfassa (1878-1973), known to her followers as The Mother, a New Age spiritual guru, an occultist and a collaborator of the Indian philosopher, Sri Aurobindo. In all this never-ending saga of magical and spiritual confrontations, that will eventually fully manifest in the upcoming Apocalypse, there is a constant confrontation between black magicians and white magicians.

The Jesuits are, of course, the primary heirs to the black magicians of Atlantis, but they are not alone in their diabolical mission constantly aided by other Atlantean Adepts of the dark arts operating in the Illuminati network. Amongst the Atlantean Adepts of today, we have magician Michael M. Hughes, whose “Magical Resistance” ritual involves burning an “unflattering photo” of Donald Trump and saying: “You’re fired,” but also Gary Lachman, the author of Dark Star Rising: Magick and Power in the Age of Trump, as well as Satanic Magister Carl Abrahamsson’s author of the recently released documentary film, ANTON LAVEY — INTO THE DEVIL’S DEN dedicated to the founder of the Church of Satan who died in a Catholic hospital surrounded by Jesuits, that premiered in the U.S. on the 6th of December 2019.

Remember, the main difference between black magic and white magic is that black magic infringes upon the free will of individuals, with the misuse of tools that were intended to assist in spiritual ascension. Crowley teaches to use and impose your own will at all cost over everything and anything. Do what thou wilt shall be the whole of the Law Aleister Crowley’s “law” is psychopathic when you think about it. Because while white magic is all about alchemy and transformation, in a spiritual sense, black magic is used for domination, power,, and Satanic control with the mocking of Christianity being an important part of it. One of the first victims of black magick is the city of Rome that seems to have completely lost the plot in this End times scenario driven by Satanic forces.

Italy, and Rome, in particular, was once known for the works of Caravaggio, Michelangelo, and Raffaello, beautiful works of art that gave Rome a reputation like no other, but that is no longer the case after the latest libtard stunt in December 2019 at the Museo di Arte Contemporanea di Roma (Museum of Contemporary Art of Rome) that has specialized in Italian contemporary art from the 1960s-onwards.

The museum operated by libtards connected to the Jesuits displayed a blasphemous poster of Jesus in Via Nizza in Romea with an erection in front of a child with the words “Ecce homo” and “Erectus” that the author of this blasphemy said was portraying the image of a pedophile Jesus. Is it incredible how sick this anti-Christian world is becoming. This scandalous representation was fortunately denounced by two conservative politicians of Fratelli d'Italia and soon afterward it was removed, but it was only one of the many heresies that the Jesuit/Sabbatean Frankist alliance are pushing on Rome in defiance of the Christian Faith. Heresies that include processions with Pachamama, Moloch at the Colosseum, and even singing the far-left Marxist song during the Christmas festivities "Bella Ciao" in the famous Church of St. Louis of the French, a Roman Catholic church in the center of Rome, not far from Piazza Navona.

This is a beautiful church that is known for its art all over the world as it contains a cycle of paintings by the Baroque master Caravaggio on the life of St. Matthew. The song in question that has nothing to do with Christianity or Catholicism, was sung during a Sunday mass in the middle of December 2019 by the church choir and the celebrating priest at the end of the mass.

"Bella Ciao" was sung in the past by the Red Army Choir of the Soviet Union, known as a propagator of Communist songs, and is largely associated with the partisans of Italy during the Second World War and various Marxist groups. The church where it happened, as the name suggests, is connected to the French community since 1480 when the previous church of Santa Maria became the Church of Saint Louis of the French. Cardinal Giulio di Giuliano de' Medici commissioned Jean de Chenevière to build a church for the French community designed by Giacomo della Porta and built by Domenico Fontana between 1518 and 1589, and it was completed with the personal intervention of Catherine de' Medici, who donated some property in the area. Catherine de' Medici, the Queen of France, who I have talked about in detail vol.6.66, was said by Jean Bodin in his 1580 book on witchcraft entitled, De la démonomanie des sorciers to have performed the first Black Mass ever.

So there is a Satanic connection here, but this church will be known from now on for its progressive liberal stand in support of the far left. "Bella Ciao" was also remixed last year as an EDM song after recent mainstream resurgence and interest by the Antifa terrorists who love it. The performance in the Church of St. Louis of the French also followed the first national rally in Rome of the left-wing pro-Soros grassroots group calling itself "Sardines" and was immediately slammed by Italian League leader Matteo Salvini, former deputy Prime Minister, who wrote on his social media commenting on the video of the event: "This is crazy, singing Bella Ciao in a church on a Sunday evening in Rome, do you think is normal??"

For some people, it is hard to imagine that this current generation might witness the destruction of Rome under Francis' heretical pontificate, but his seven-year period of tribulation ending in March of 2020 might bring sooner rather than later, a big surprise for the Vatican degenerates and their city of sin.

It was written by St. John the Evangelist over 2,000 years ago in the Apocalypse, and the Third Secret and many other prophecies that said something terrible would happen, but it was not until St. Malachi's Prophecy of the Popes, that an exact time for the destruction was given and could coincide with the end of Pope Francis' period of tribulation, that is coming up next year. Rome's blasphemy deserves the attention of God and he will make them pay for their sins once and for all and of this I'm certain. After all, even the previously mentioned message of our Lady of Salette from 1846 that is recognized by the Catholic Church clearly states that "pagan Rome will disappear" and one of the main reasons is the same black magick that destroyed Atlantis.

Activist Mom warns of Demonic Forces as Dark Magick Spreads among Children

There is a new book inviting young children to learn how to summon demons. This is completely insane and dangerous, but such a book exists and is available since December 2019 in all major retail stores, including Walmart and Barnes & Noble. Targeting 5- to 10-year-olds, A Children's Book of Demons written by occultist Aaron Leighton it directs kids to “conjure gentle demons by writing their sigils, which serve as ‘a phone number’ straight to the spirit.” Do you understand the danger of letting our children do this? They started with the normalization of Ouija boards but now they are pushing you right in the arms of Satan’s Legion. “As ridiculous as the ‘demons’ contained in the book may be, there is nothing innocent or fun about even pretending to summon evil spirits,” noted Elizabeth Johnston, AKA Activist Mommy, who warned on her blog: “But who is to say it pretends? The spirit world is real and is no laughing matter.” Adding later: “Leighton, an occultist himself, is looking to proselytize our children.”

Despite being advertised by libtard Publishers Weekly as being just a “playful” publication, and by Barnes & Noble as “more silly than scary,” the book is dangerous, according to renowned Catholic exorcist Father Chad Ripperger. “The recent publication of the book A Children's Book of Demons should be concerning for parents,” Ripperger told the traditionalist Catholic website LifeSiteNews. [\[126\]](#)

Because, as my readers know very well, it will open the door of demonic influence in the lives of children, and is done deliberately to corrupt their angelic innocence. Unfortunately, Jesuits and the dark side of the Illuminati want to sacrifice the natural connection that children have with angels. In an article published not so long ago by the young author Arjun Walia, he documents how modern and historical “elites” have always used black magic rituals to conjure up entities for more power, an important subject I discuss extensively in the various volumes of my Confessions, and the book, Invisible Master.

Walia synthesized the problem very well in this recent article:

Looking into various subjects, from MK ultra and other forms of mind control to the information coming from whistleblowers/insiders, the use of ceremonial magic for perverse reasons by the elite is not that far-fetched. Although scary to contemplate, it does happen. Those who we consider our leaders, those in positions of great power, those behind the global corporatocracy we see today and the propaganda we're all subject to, could all be guided by ‘spirits’ from places we have yet to learn about. And as a result, the massive manipulation of humanity could be guided by these ‘demonic’ entities. [\[127\]](#)

Of course, Arjun Walia has not yet realized the full extent of this invisible link and the fact that these demonic entities he is referring too are the same ones used for almost five centuries by the Jesuits, and before them for thousand of years by the ancient mystery schools of the dark side of the Illuminati connected to the black magic of Atlantis, like the Alumbrados who partly inspire St. Ignatius. For this reason, the Jesuits were once regarded as a dangerous religious order whose unrelenting pursuit of power was second to none. This was before the publication of the infamous The Protocols of the Elders of Zion, who put all the blame on the Jews who had been in turn sabotaged by the Sabbatean Frankists who were in bed with the same demonic entities working with the Jesuits.

The earliest recorded Jesuit conspiracy theory was found in the Monita Secreta, an early 17th-century document that alleged that the Jesuits were trying to gain wealth in illicit ways. The Protestant Reformation, but especially the English Reformation, brought new suspicions against the Jesuits, who were accused of infiltrating political realms and non-Catholic churches. Even the official website of the Jesuits in Britain (www.jesuit.org.uk) admits their criminal behavior: Because they have always worked at the margins and intersections individual Jesuits, whilst maintaining their vows of poverty, chastity, and obedience, were (and are) given a great deal of freedom as the means of achieving their mission. On some occasions, this has led to individuals going too far and working against the local laws.

Other criticisms relate to the role of the Jesuits in the colonization of the New World and their involvement with the indigenous peoples. Their settlements known as Jesuit Missions (Reductions) often labeled “primitive communism,” contributed to the assimilation of indigenous nations, but also the birth of Communism, still so popular in South America in places like Venezuela, home of the new Superior General of the Society of Jesus, Father Arturo Marcelino Sosa Abascal SJ. The Jesuits were once hated by Catholic rulers in Europe, and by colonists in South America, who saw their reductions, that cut contact with European Christians, as subversive and a threat to good order.

These events and the fact that the Jesuits were always practicing occultists in league with the devil contributed to the campaign against them which resulted in the suppression of the Society of Jesus by Pope Clement XIV in 1773 that I have talked about so much in this book. Unfortunately, during that period, Russia, Prussia, and the United States allowed the Jesuits to continue their evil mission, and as I wrote earlier, Catherine the Great even allowed the founding of a new novitiate in Russia.

However, soon after their restoration by Pope Pius VII in 1814, they returned to most of the places that they were expelled, and since the election of a Jesuit Pope in 2013, Jesuitism has finally been accepted as having a central role, even by the mainstream media that used to never mention them. This has happened because the Jesuits have probably realized that they are no longer viewed as a threat and can come out in the open with their insidious agenda without any protest, (notwithstanding there are still Jesuits working undercover in today's world that we don't know about).

In 2014, a Newsweek headline summed it up quite well, "With their first Pope, the Jesuits are making a comeback." However, in February 2018, Nancy Pelosi took to the floor of Congress, asking Catholics to pray for a legislation supporting "Dreamers" revealing in the process her true allegiance not to the United States of America, but rather to the "Universal" Catholic Church of Rome and the Jesuit Pope, the supreme manipulator of the New World Order. Her false piety seemed more pompous than genuine when Pelosi declared: "Maybe I should bring my rosary blessed by the Pope... His Holiness, Pope Francis, or the one before that, Benedict," adding: "I have the honor and privilege of receiving rosaries blessed by several popes in my lifetime."

Let Trump be Trump author David Bossie rightly said "Nancy Pelosi hates Trump more than she loves America," and this seems unfortunately true for most Democrats in the U.S., lately, especially after the unfolding of the impeachment farse, a movement built on zero facts that could bring the country towards a new Civil War if successful.

In this chaotic scenario, in early December 2019, the increasingly demonic and unstable Nancy Pelosi, who is a Democrat more than she is a Democrat, snapped at a reporter who asked if she hated President Donald Trump, telling the reporter while she was nervously waving her finger in the air "I don't hate anybody." Adding soon after while still wagging her finger: "I was raised in a Catholic house. We don't hate anybody. Not anybody in the world."

Well, the Italian American Mafia also claims to be 100% Catholic but they seem to hate a lot. Pelosi, who is a longtime Jesuit agent and not a devout Catholic like she wants us to believe, attended the Roman Catholic Trinity women's college, in Washington, D.C., where she met her future husband, Paul Pelosi, at the Jesuit University in Georgetown. Paul is said to be a member of the Jesuit secret Society of Stewards. Nancy Pelosi started dating her future husband in the number one Jesuit University, inaugurating a lifetime of service to the Society of Jesus. Nancy and her husband eventually relocated to his hometown of San Francisco, the home of Modern Satanism and some of the most liberal snowflakes in the world, and a city profoundly affected by the Jesuit Order since the city's earliest days.

While I am writing the last words of this book Nancy Pelosi and her liberal allies are planning to overthrow Trump in a legal, or perhaps even illegal way, fomenting in this way an inevitable Civil War. Having said that, a lot of Catholics lately are starting to think Nancy is a heretic not in line with the basic beliefs of the Catholic Faith. Deacon Keith A. Fournier confirmed this at Catholic Online: It must be said that Nancy Pelosi is engaging in more than a scandal. She is engaged in the "obstinate denial of truths which must be believed by every Catholic Christian". In other words, she is engaging in heresy.

So let's analyze her constant lies and heresies not consistent with the Catholic Faith but with her Jesuit mission. First of all, Nancy Pelosi has said that same-sex "marriage" is perfectly "consistent" with Catholic Christianity, which is an outright lie. Pelosi even brought her grandchildren with her when she received an award from the Gay and Lesbian Victory Fund to show the young, impressionable children that "marriage equality is important."

In an interview with Thomas Roberts for MSNBC, Pelosi said she took the children to the Gay and Lesbian Victory Fund gala, "It's really important to see what the practice of our faith is." Hey Nancy, maybe you need to be reminded that gay marriage is still prohibited in the Catholic Church! Then we have her view on abortion. House Speaker Nancy Pelosi, D-Calif., told one of the nation's leading abortion advocacy groups in late September that Republicans “ignore basic morality” when they push bans on the practice. It’s hardly news to faithful Catholics that the Democratic Party is the evil party for championing abortion and sodomy, and the chief pro-abortion Democrat in this country is Nancy Pelosi.

During an exchange with a reporter from The Weekly Standard about Kermit Gosnell’s house of horrors in the City of Brotherly Love, she again proclaimed her support for the mass murder of the unborn, and she still thinks she is, “a Catholic in good standing?” Beware of the left-wing cancer, Nancy Pelosi, this Jesuit agent is not giving up any time soon because she is a tool of the Jesuit Atlantean Adepts, whose agenda is inevitably linked to what we as Christians view as the End times. After all, Lucifer- Satan’s Fall could have happened with the end of Atlantis. And as I finish writing this new volume, one of the most enigmatic areas of research is still the one surrounding the prophetic role of America in all this.

While it is certainly true that America was populated early on by Christians seeking freedom, opportunity and a new life, what is less known is that while ordinary people and families were taking part of in the colonization of the New World, members of various secret societies of the Illuminati network were also taking part in this new project and had been doing so since the very beginning. The entire colonization scheme was engineered by occult societies like the Rosicrucians and the Freemasons that have also accomplished many positive things against the Jesuit cabal. Sir Francis Bacon, chief occultist in England during the Elizabethan anti-Jesuit age was instrumental in the founding of America – the New Atlantis. But there is also another element, the indigenous populations.

Looking back to the beginning of civilization, to the Atlantean period, when there was no Europe or America to talk about at all, all the development, such as it was, both spiritual and intellectual was centered in the Atlantean world. Of course, the Atlantean population gradually spread over the whole of the habitable globe. Earlier sub-races of the Atlantean period accounted for the earliest populations, whether of India, any part of Central Asia, or any part of the Eastern world, but also of North America with some of the American Indian tribes coming from Atlantis; and as the spiritual civilization of Atlantis became defiled by the growth of evil in the shape of what we commonly call now black magic, some representatives of advanced Atlantean spirituality migrated and in that way established especially in Asia, their strongholds.

This condition lasted for a very long time untouched until 400 years ago when the Jesuits arrived to forge a new alliance. In the meantime, some Atlanteans migrating from Atlantis to escape the evil developments of its civilization and the corruption of their priesthood established themselves in Egypt and while there they met another stream of spiritual civilization flowing westward from India and regions beyond India that had been engendered, so to speak, by the fermentation of loftier thought in the earlier races of the Atlantean period. At the same time, members of the corrupt priesthood of Atlantis also established themselves in Egypt, as well as in Asia, with their secret societies and deviant mystery schools so that great evil was never extinguished and will constantly resurface. That’s why many famous people connected in one way or another to the Illuminati and the Jesuits have believed in the authenticity, but most of all in the importance of Atlantis. That’s why Jesuit superstar Athanasius Kircher, S.J. investigated like no other the Atlantis legend, and in 1646 his contemporaries Elias Ashmole and astrologer William Lilly founded a Rosicrucian lodge in London based upon a utopian ideal of the creation of a new Atlantis.

This lodge was based on the utopian ideal of the creation of a New Atlantis, as expounded by Sir Francis Bacon, in his work The New Atlantis, which symbolized the (First) Golden Age before Adam’s fall, when humanity was spiritually perfect. Bacon believed that in the ancient prehistoric past, that gods dwelled with man during a golden age. These gods taught man ancient wisdom that was eventually lost after the destruction of Atlantis. These gods handpicked humans who were anointed as priests and mediators between the gods and humanity. These special humans were given the keys to unlock the secrets of this ancient wisdom. Biblically, Bacon’s god’s were the fallen Watchers and their monstrous offspring. The so-called keys of ancient wisdom are none other than the biblical “Knowledge of Good and Evil” and forbidden angelic technology that the book of Enoch speaks of.

After all, America’s ancient name, Amaruca, was the land of the serpent gods, which have a central role in the Last Days and the Jesuits knew it. That’s why they decided to use Catholic countries like Spain and Portugal to strategically conquer South America and steal all the secret knowledge and artifacts of Atlantis in the hands of the local populations. Atlantis also fascinated H.G. Wells, who wrote, Men Like Gods about Atlantis, and William Blake, the poet who was a firm believer in Atlantis and two of the best-known prophets in history - Nostradamus and Edgar Cayce - both spoke of Atlantis.

Ignatius Loyola Donnelly (1831-1901) was a Minnesota Governor, Congressman, and Senator, a Jesuit agent, and a “devout” Catholic, also wrote extensively about Atlantis.^[128] In 1882, he published Atlantis: The Antediluvian World, his best-known work. It details theories concerning the mythical lost continent of Atlantis. The book sold well and is widely credited with initiating the theme of Atlantis as an antediluvian civilization that became such a feature of popular literature during the 20th century and contributed to the emergence of Mayanism. Donnelly suggested that Atlantis, whose story was told by Plato in the dialogues of Timaeus and Critias, had been destroyed during the same event remembered in the Bible as the Great Flood.

He cited research on ancient Mayan civilization by Charles Étienne Brasseur de Bourbourg and Augustus Le Plongeon, claiming that it had been the place of a common origin of ancient civilizations in Africa (especially ancient Egypt), Europe, and the Americas). Donnelly writes that the Atlanteans possessed an established order of priests; their religious worship was pure and simple. They lived under a kingly government; they had their courts, their judges, their records, their monuments covered with inscriptions, their mines, their foundries, their workshop, their looms, their grist-mills, their boats and sailing-vessels, their highways, aqueducts, wharves, docks, and canals. They had processions, banners, and triumphal arches for their kings and heroes; they built pyramids, temples, round towers, and obelisks; they practiced religious ablutions; they knew the use of the magnet and gunpowder. In short, they were in the enjoyment of a civilization nearly as high as our own, lacking only the printing-press, and those inventions in which steam, electricity, and magnetism are used.^[129]

American Renaissance 2.0 and the last prophecy of an old Indian

We understand today that the Atlantean Adepts were skilled, and created a great civilization, but in the end, as Samael Aun Weor also told us, they all succumbed to black magick and evil. This seems like a dire warning to what could happen to us today. There is, however, hope since the arrival of Jesus 2000 years ago and the establishment of the United States of America. The American society has a duty and an honor-bound in their dedication and commitment to liberty and the defeat of tyranny. The real Americans and not the libtards, will use if necessary, force to overthrow this Satanic society and re-establish the rule of law to kickstart an American Renaissance 2.0 I think the motto of the US Army Special Forces says it best: “De Oppresso Liber” — “To Liberate the Oppressed” but who is going to liberate us from the enemy within?

The Jesuit agents, or the Sabbatean Frankists, who operate covertly in every aspect of our lives to undermine our freedom must be stopped. Stay vigilant and pray for the future of the United States in this critical moment in the history of mankind that will affect the whole world. Spread the news about this book and its teachings for humanity.

And now let's talk about an interesting encounter that happened in the summer of 1958, when a Methodist pastor named David Young, who happens to be a distant relative of mine, was driving across the Four Corners region of the U.S., a bit like I have been doing myself during the summer of 2019 when he picked up an old Hopi man named White Feather that he found standing by the side of the road. Hopi is a shortened form of the original term "Hopituh-Shi-nu-mu" for which the most common meaning given is "peaceful people."

The Hopi reservation that I recently visited while traveling back from Texas to California, is almost 2.5 million acres in size and located in stunning northeastern Arizona near the Four Corners area just east of the legendary Grand Canyon, and is surrounded by the Navajo reservation. For this reason, I spent the night on Navajo Boulevard in Holbrook, during my brief stay in this beautiful area of the United States that I regard as spiritually important.

The Hopi's inhabit 14 villages, most of which are situated atop three rocky mesas (called First Mesa, Second Mesa, and Third Mesa) that rise 600 feet from the desert floor. The Hopi Nation had 7,360 members in the 1990 census, and about 1,000 lived on reservations. They are considered an ancient tribe, having lived continuously in the same place for a thousand years. They are a deeply religious people, whose customs and a year-long calendar of constant ritual ceremonialism guide virtually every aspect of their lives.

I am fascinated by their devotion and their spiritual stand in an Indian world increasingly corrupted by greed and matter, especially since the birth of the government program to help American-Indian tribes become more self-sufficient by allowing them to run casino gambling, as codified by the Indian Gaming Regulatory Act of 1988 that has corrupted the souls of so many Native Americans. According to Suzanne and Jake Page's book Hopi, the Hopis are called "The oldest of the people" by other Native Americans, and Frank Waters wrote in The Book of the Hopi, that the Hopis "Regard themselves as the first inhabitants of America." Keeping this in mind we need to understand the importance of David Young's encounter in 1958.

Of course, as an author and researcher, Jason Colavito has suggested the strong Christian apocalyptic themes in the prophecy make it obvious that Reverend Young was likely far more than the mere transmitter of the prophecies. But that's the will of God, after all, and in this context, I sincerely don't want to focus on the source but rather on the message. Since there are no ancient Hopi texts there is also no way to know if they are genuine, but they were originally circulated in pamphlets in 1959, the earliest printed mention we found of them is in 1980 in Rolling Thunder: The Coming Earth Changes by Joey R. Jochmans.

This spiritual elder of the Bear Clan, who is said to be the most sacred of all the Hopi clans, who encountered Reverend Young, confessed to him that all of his sons were dead and that the Hopi ceremonial cycle was slowly becoming extinct. After sensing that Pasto Young, a man of God, was trustworthy of his revelations, he decided to pass along nine primary Hopi prophecies that together would herald the destruction of the Fourth World. As described in Frank Walter's book from 1963 entitled Book of the Hopi, the account begins by describing how, while driving along a desert highway one hot day in the summer of 1958, a Methodist pastor named David Young stopped to offer a ride to an Indian elder, who accepted with a nod. After riding in silence for several minutes, the Indian told him:

I am White Feather, a Hopi of the ancient Bear Clan. In my long life, I have traveled through this land, seeking out my brothers, and learning from them many things filled with wisdom. I have followed the sacred paths of my people, who inhabit the forests and many lakes in the east, the land of ice and long nights in the north, and the places of holy altars of stone built many years ago by my brothers' fathers in the south. From all these, I have heard the stories of the past, and the prophecies of the future. Today, many of the prophecies have turned to stories, and few are left — the past grows longer, and the future grows shorter. And now White Feather is dying. His sons have all joined his ancestors, and soon he too shall be with them. But there is no one left, no one to recite and pass on the ancient wisdom. My people have tired of the old ways — the great ceremonies that tell of our origins, of our emergence into the Fourth World, are almost all abandoned, forgotten, yet even this has been foretold. The time grows short. My people await Pahana, the lost White Brother [from the stars], as do all our brothers in the land. He will not be like the white men we know now, who are cruel and greedy. We were told of their coming long ago. But still, we await Pahana. He will bring with him the symbols, and the missing piece of that sacred tablet now kept by the elders, given to him when he left, that shall identify him as our True White Brother. The Fourth World shall end soon, and the Fifth World will begin. This the elders everywhere know. The Signs over many years have been fulfilled, and so few are left.

This is the First Sign: We are told of the coming of the white-skinned men, like Pahana, but not living like Pahana — men who took the land that was not theirs. And men who struck their enemies with thunder. (First sign of guns.)

This is the Second Sign: Our lands will see the coming of spinning wheels filled with voices. In his youth, my father saw this prophecy come true with his eyes — (the white men bringing their families in wagons across the prairies.)
This is the Third Sign: A strange beast like a buffalo but with great long horns will overrun the land in large numbers. These White Feather saw with his eyes — [the coming of the white men's cattle.]

This is the Fourth Sign: The land will be crossed by snakes of iron. (Railroad tracks)

This is the Fifth Sign: The land shall be crisscrossed by a giant spider's web. (Electric power and telephone lines but also the World Wide Web)

This is the Sixth Sign: The land shall be crisscrossed with rivers of stone that make pictures in the sun. (Highways and their mirage-producing effects)

This is the Seventh Sign: You will hear of the sea turning black, and many living things dying because of it. (Oil spills in the ocean)

This is the Eighth Sign: You will see youth who wear their hair long like my people, come and join the tribal nations, to learn their ways and wisdom. ("Hippie Movement" of the 1960s)

And this is the Ninth and Last Sign: You will hear of a dwelling-place in the heavens, above the earth, that shall fall with a great crash. It will appear as a blue star. Very soon after this, the ceremonies of my people will cease. (For most researchers the Ninth Sign was the U.S. Space Station Skylab, which fell to Earth in 1979. According to Australian eye-witnesses, it appeared to be burning blue.)

These are the Signs that great destruction is coming. The world shall rock to and fro. The white man will battle against other people in other lands — with those who possessed the first light of wisdom [Israel?]. There will be many columns of smoke and fire such as White Feather has seen the white man make in the deserts not far from here. [Atomic Bomb] Only those who come will cause disease and a great dying. Many of my people, understanding the prophecies, shall be safe. Those who stay and live in the places of my people also shall be safe. Then there will be much to rebuild. And soon — very soon afterward — Pahana will return. He shall bring with him the dawn of the Fifth World. He shall plant the seeds of his wisdom in their hearts. Even now the seeds are being planted. These shall smooth the way to the Emergence into the Fifth World. But White Feather shall not see it. I am old and dying. Perhaps you will see it. In time, in time....'

The old Indian fell silent. They had arrived at his destination, and Reverend David Young stopped to let him out of the car. They never met again. Reverend Young died in 1976 so he did not live to see the further fulfillment of this remarkable prophecy that contains within a powerful message of hope also for Christians as "Pahana will return" is the return of Jesus, who for the Hopi "shall bring with him the dawn of the Fifth World." We are indeed at the dawn of something big and regardless of the authenticity of this prophecy, Reverend Young understood better than many other the need to warn us about the final confrontation between the forces of good and evil, regardless of your religious, or non-religious beliefs.

That's why I choose to relate to you these alleged Hopi prophecies as Reverend Young would have done, in the Light of our Lord Jesus and His imminent return. Honoring White Feather after the historic Fourth Of July Speech of 2019 given by our great President Donald J. Trump, was very important for me and not a coincidence. I prefer to call it "Divine synchronicity." I witnessed once again the Divine nature of the times we are living, and God has shown me clearly our mission as Christians regardless of our denomination. So let's wake up to the reality of the End times, not as a nightmare but as the start of a new beginning for mankind. Because, believe it or not, we are gaining momentum in our spiritual and political war against the enemies of humanity. The Legion of Satan is increasingly dominating every corner of our materialistic life preparing for the advent of the Antichrist. Rejoice because the Lord, the righteous judge, is coming to save us and we in America are always ready for a new challenge in the New Atlantis.

Introduction by the Author

Dear Readers,

I would like to begin by thanking you for purchasing this book where you will find plenty of new material as well as part of my previous work entitled The Decline of the Western Initiatic System that was pulled out of commerce for an alleged copyright infringement instigated by the infamous Ordo Templi Orientis, who are of course part of the darkest side of the Illuminati network involved in what has been defined in the past as “Occult Theocracy”, meaning the exercise of government rule over the masses by a hierarchy of priests or adepts we often refer to as the Illuminati.

The Illuminati is a subject much more complex than so-called Internet Conspiracy Theory, or a Dan Brown plot. Having said this, some may have found the information contained in the previous books of the Confession of an Illuminati series, not always easy to follow, due to the incredibly difficult nature of esoterica, and Freemasonry. For this reason, I recommend viewing such literary works more as manuals, to consult over and over again, as the information can take along time to fully digest.

However, in this work , I hope to clear up a few missing links from my previous books. I introduce new info, as well as unpublished documentation and very rare articles from various authors. In this ongoing battle against ignorance, we can use knowledge as weapons of understanding against the Satanic enemy, often hidden behind the false spirituality of the so-called New Age movement. The same enemy that has the so-called intellectual establishment and academic milieu worldwide under their full control. They force their liberal agenda built on lies and deceit, to help and support the Communist New World Order.

Unfortunately, it never ceases to amaze me how many people still joke about the idea of a Global Conspiracy. Have they forgotten the Cold War and the immense problem of Marxism versus Capitalism in Western Society? Well, as I also wrote in Confessions of an Illuminati, Volume II: The Time of Revelation and Tribulation Leading up to 2020, the general public must comprehend what is really going on behind this veil of illusion, and only then will we understand the years before and after the great changes of 2020, indicated by many in Illuminati circles as the possible turning point towards a wider, and much tighter implementation of the New World Order on a massive scale. There are many who believe this will be the time of disclosure concerning a possible “alien reality,” a truth which will undeniably revolutionize and forever change our society and mankind. In the last few years, a series of videos surfaced on the internet showing what some describe as UFO’s, others as angels and demons, flying over the Temple Mount and the Old City of Jerusalem. Of course, many of these sightings could be a hoax or military objects, but what is really happening behind the scenes in regards to one of the most controversial places on earth is a mystery worth discussing.

The Hebrew prophets all proclaimed that in the last days, the exiles of Israel would return to the Promised Land and that later the Temple would be rebuilt. “Then the nations will know that I the Lord make Israel holy when my sanctuary is among them forever.” (Ezekiel 37:28) These phenomenal end-time events are unfolding before our very eyes and The Temple Institute, which is the organization leading the Jewish movement for the construction of its new Jerusalem Temple has already made detailed plans, and provide regular updates concerning various “preparatory” activities. So far, the information that has been disclosed paints a striking picture. Some examples include the “Last Spring,” announced in 2015, which will be the altar for the future Temple when completed, that is identical in size and characteristics to that which existed at the time of Jesus. Then there is the work of the famous architect Shmuel Balzam, who is developing the blueprints for the Temple’s Sanctuary. The best goldsmiths of Israel are also faithfully reproducing copies of the furniture and tools used during that sacred period (shovels, basins, trumpets, crowns, cups, censers, candlesticks, and more). They are preparing clothes and ornaments true to tradition, and in 2013, the “Committee for the Veil” was created with a team of Jewish women who are weaving a veil that will adorn the temple. In recent years, extensive studies have been made by interested parties in the Jewish community to replicate, with extreme accuracy, the sacred rites of their ancestors.

Thanks to sophisticated DNA studies, scientists have been also able to trace the male descendants of Aaron. These are the only men said to be able to exercise the priestly office in their religious tradition, as well as to revive the famous Ritual of the Red Heifer (in Hebrew parah adumah). This is also known as the Ritual of the Red Cow, where a red cow is brought to the priests as a sacrifice, as according to the Hebrew Bible, and its ashes are to be used for the ritual purification (as prescribed in Chapter 19 of the Book of Numbers), and deemed suitable for service in the third temple. After centuries and centuries, the Temples re-appearance is considered a sign in anticipation of the next coming of the Messiah. In short, we are closing in on the so-called end times ... and every little detail, if properly interpreted, reveals even more disturbing truths.

The so-called Liberals, Socialists, Marxists, Communists, and Progressive idiots, are ruining the planet with their sick and perverse ideologies, born in the secretive world of deviant Masonic Lodges infiltrated by Jesuits, and often sponsored by Labor Zionists and liberal Jews. Labor Zionism or Socialist Zionism is the left-wing of the Zionist movement. It was Karl Marx himself who described them once as “useful idiots,” the very people who carried the Marxist ideals he helped to create. Democrats and similar left-wing affiliations, who were once known universally as liberals, who in recent years, I've heard referred more and more to as “Progressives”, are being used in US politics to express something more radical than social liberalism, that appears, in fact, more like Marxism. A top communist defector Lt. Gen. Ion Mihai Pacepa, the highest-ranking official to ever have defected from the former Soviet bloc, stated back in 2012, in an article for PJMedia, that any doubt that the Democratic and the Communist parties had secretly joined forces was erased for him in 2009, “when Van Jones, part of a left fringe of declared Communists, became the White House’s green jobs czar.

This unprecedented “alliance” between the Democratic Party and the Communist Party, was also reflected earlier in the CPUSA’s endorsement of Barack Obama for president in 2008, and the party’s continued support for Democratic Party policies. So the Communist conspiracy to take over the world secretly continues in their mission to destroy Christianity, but many people, even my own mother, don't believe they exist.

In the meantime, Mondialist's with a Communist twist continue to dissolve independent sovereign states, abolish private property, prevent the private accumulation of capital by increasing taxes, abolish most civil rights with the excuse of terrorism, support internet censorship to squash all dissent, and to impose of course, a uniform doctrine and code of behavior for all of humanity.

This whole mess, ultimately, is the product of the decline of the Western Initiatic System, that I will be discussing in this book, and that we are trying to fight with the Ordo Illuminatorium Universalis. This is the small initiatic Order I currently preside over as Grand Master, that has been interwoven in the past, as some of you may know, with the infamous branch of the P2 lodge in Monte Carlo. However, after a series of meetings that took place between the 12th and 13th of July 2008, the situation changed, and the Order is now based in Italy where an officially recognized political association in 2013 was created, and a traditional Masonic body in 2016 (i.e. the Strict Templar Observance). The outcome of the meetings that took place in Nice in the summer of 2008 became the event that settled the future course of the main Knights Templar branches in Europe, including the Ordo Supremus Militaris Templi Hierosolymitani (O.S.M.T.H.), operating under Count Fernando Pinto de Sousa Fontes, the Priory of Sion at the time in the hands of Gino Sandri, and they also helped the further establishment of the Ordo Illuminatorium Universalis (O.I.U.), born officially in 1999 within the Masonic Executive Committee (MEC) of the Principality of Monaco.

I would also like to write briefly about my upcoming publication in the English language called Invisible Master, my next book with CCC Publishing. This project was actually called, Confessions of an Illuminati Volume 4, in the Italian language. Of course, the decision made by CCC Publishing and IPG distribution to change the title and possibly market it in a different way from the Italian edition has only changed the outwards aspect of this extremely important book, that I would prefer you consider for your studies as a continuation of my Illuminati Confessions series. In comparison, Volume 5 should be viewed by my readers as an additional essay dedicated to some of the most important topics touched during my exposure, a sort of synthesis with added info of great importance, that I will try to present in an easier way, to possibly satisfy an even wider audience that should understand that we are fighting the most important battle of our time, against a seemingly unstoppable Satanic enemy.

The Western Initiatic System discussed in volume 5, which created Freemasonry and the Illuminati, was originally formulated back in Ancient Greece when they blended the Mysteries of Eleusis, Samothrace, Orpheus, Dionysus, and in Ancient Rome and across its empire, the Mithraic and Isiac Traditions. These systems of thought and religion, effectively combined much older mysteries and esoteric traditions, with the rationalism of Philosophy, which constituted the real genius of such traditions, and their subsequent mystery schools. Greek initiates were strongly present in Alexandria, in the last period of Egyptian history known as the Ptolemaic period. They brought with them the Greek Initiatic System of the Mysteries, which was then incorporated by the ancient Egyptian priests into their far more ancient Atlantean traditions, thereby giving a new, coherent structure. This was for most Illuminati groups the real birth of the Hermetic Theurgic tradition (Theurgy means "divine-working"). Sumerian and Egyptian magic also found their place in the ancient Greek mysteries and the Western Initiatic Tradition, or Western Initiatic System.

So let's try to understand where the origin of Freemasonry is found in all this, and where Satanism and Black Magic come into the equation, gradually ruining what was considered, and is still considered by many, including the author, a respectable tradition. In order to accomplish our mission, we need to understand if the extended Masonic history told in the Rites of Freemasonry, that goes back hundreds, even thousands of years, is just a sequence of fabricated tales, or is this fraternity truly as ancient as they often claim they are?

Did they really begin with the historical builders of the Temple of Solomon?

Did they have their roots or influence from Sufi mystics?

Did they evolve from the Knights Templar?

Or did this fraternity originate from the frequent guilds of Craftsmasons that originate in Ancient Rome?

There are many myths in this elaborate heritage, although most sensible thinkers and skeptics alike, believe that Freemasonry is only three hundred years old, but on the contrary, it represents something much older. The official contemporary day of the establishment was set in June 1717, when the Grand Lodge of England was supposedly fashioned, even if there are contemporary Masonic historians who are now contesting this supposed truth.

In a recent Conference held by Quatuor Coronati Lodge No. 2076, a Masonic lodge in London dedicated to Masonic research, at Queens College, Cambridge, in England, Andrew Prescott and Susan Mitchell Sommers, proved conclusively that the Grand Lodge of England was not founded in 1717, but in 1721. Profs. Prescott and Sommers discovered detailed minutes of the creation of the GL of England in 1721, at the back of the Lodge of Antiquity minute books. It was a large and well-organized event. John Montagu, 2nd Duke of Montagu was the first Grand Master, not Anthony Sayer (c.1672 – 1741). However, the origin of this enigmatic order is fairly ambiguous and is definitely shrouded in mystery, as is everything connected to the Western Initiatic System and related mystery schools.

It is a common error today, to believe at the time of Edith Starr Miller, Lady Queenborough (1887-1933), author of the controversial Occult Theocracy, “that the English Grand Lodge is an independent body which was formed in 1717.” Edith Starr Miller who was a British blue blood on par with Princess Diana, might have been stupidly "anti-Semitic," and at times “anti-Masonic,” who erroneously thought that all Freemasons are occultist involved in Luciferian inner circles, but she did correctly explain back in the early 30’s, in regards to the origins of the Premier Grand Lodge of England that: “Logic deduction will show that owing to its formation is the result of Rosicrucian effort, it always has been, and still must be, subject to the direction of its esoteric parent body, i. e. ROSICRUCIANISM or Manichean and Socinian Gnosticism. Childish as may be the claim of English Grand Lodge as to its autonomy and independence, yet it has been most successfully defended by scores of English writers who attacked Masonic Societies and their subversive activities against state and religion. According to the English Grand Lodge was always exempted from such groups.”

Edith Starr Miller (1887-1933), was spot on and correct regarding the connection to English Freemasonry with Rosicrucianism, even when she stated: “It is time to put an end to this legend. English Grand Lodge, the body which claims to represent English Freemasonry, is as much the child of Rosicrucianism today as it was in 1717 and has no more power or wish today to rebel against, or deny its parent than it had then.” So, why is it in 2018, English Freemasons continue to hide their secret links to Esoteric Rosicrucianism and powerful groups like the Societas Rosicruciana in Anglia, or the more recent Order of the Rose Cross (ORC). Why are they still hiding their occult roots in favor of a social club kind of approach?

Regarding Esoteric Rosicrucianism, Edith Miller tells us that: “This Esoteric body, mainly Cabalistic in its direction, always has been and is in truth international.” Miller also described how Rosicrucianism linked with the birth of the Golden Dawn and later the infamous Ordo Templi Orientis: “Has penetrated every association, society or organization just as did the Illuminati of Bavaria at the Wilhelmsbad convent of 1782. In the particular Gnostic Rosicruciana in Anglia, briefly sketched here, we see internationalism clearly depicted. At one time it was personified in Kenneth Mackenzie who, initiated and illuminized by the German Rosicrucian adepts, was later the connecting link between German, English and French Gnosticism, the latter represented at the time by Eliphas Levi (A. L. Constant). Nearer to our own time, William Wynn Westcott is the connecting link of this international Rosicrucian-gnosticism. Prominent Grand Lodge and Royal Arch Mason, he was also Supreme Magus of Rosicruciana in Anglia and Knight Kadosch etc. His connections with John Yarker, as also with the French hermeticist Papus and with the theosophist, Blavatsky, were of an esoteric kind, but most important of all were his close relations with his brother Rosicrucian MacGregor Mathers and the German Theodore Reuss. For it is, we know, William Wynn Westcott, the respected English Grand Lodge, and Royal Arch Mason, Supreme Magus of Rosicruciana in Anglia who, together with the Cabalist MacGregor Mathers, created the Rosicrucian branch known as the Order of the Golden Dawn.

With Theodore Reuss, he was closely associated with the foundation of the Ordo Templi Orientis which from Reuss and Karl Kellner's manuscripts is known to be phallic. How far the reciprocal conferring of degrees in their respective orders between John Yarker, W. W. Wescott, Theodore Reuss, Engel, and Papus is a case of interpenetration remains to be determined. John Yarker was the head of the Ancient and Primitive Rite of the Rite of Swedenborg, etc., Wm. Wynn Westcott, the Supreme Magus of Rosicruciana in Anglia, Theodore Reuss and Engel, heads of the German Illuminati and Ordo Templi Orientis, and Papus, head of the Martinists. We are fully aware of the Gnostic practices of these different rites but the student bent on a certain type of research will find interesting and instructive the study of the political activities of the different bodies mentioned.”

Shortly after Edith Starr Miller completed her revealing book, Occult Theocracy, she died suddenly in Paris on January 16th, 1933, at the age of 45. One year earlier she filed for separation from her husband citing cruelty, but she had been in good health. Even the Grand Lodge of Canada records that she died "under suspicious circumstances". Miller's sin? Well, she wrote that the Jesuit-Jewish-Masonic-Illuminati-Bolshevik conspiracy theory (and the secret societies that support it), was to empower the super rich by controlling education and the mass media. She felt such aims were Satanic in origin, but she clearly focused too much on the Judeo-Masonic conspiracy so popular in her day with people like her husband, a member of the British Occult Theocracy, Almeric Hugh Paget, 1st Baron Queenborough, GBE (1861 –1949), who was not only the treasurer of the League of Nations, but also a member of the British Union of Fascists.

Lady Queenborough and her husband were alleged pro-Fascist's and Edith, in particular, was friendly with Brigadier-General Robert Byron Drury Blakeney (1872–1952). Blakeney was the second president of the British Fascists from 1924 to 1926 and was later active in the Imperial Fascist League, The Britons, the British Union of Fascists, and the Nordic League. However, Edith Miller's husband, who helped secure the oil monopolies for John D. Rockefeller, might have eventually changed his mind about his wife's literary endeavors during the making of Occult Theocracy (that took place between 1921 and 1931) and possibly murdered her.

Of course, Miller was wrong in regards to the Jews controlling everything rhetoric, as we know things are much more complex. We need to, in fact, change our limited view to understand what's really going on. Although in her book, Miller also spoke of the Jesuits, she missed their central role. We need to change our perspective in regards to what Miller was actually trying to tell us in her work and her views in regards to the origins of English Freemasonry and its strong historic links to Esoteric Rosicrucianism. Remember, a commitment to transformation must go along with a change in understanding.

Change is the most Universal Law of the Cosmos for the Illuminati. As cosmic beings, we partake in the cosmic Laws and must submit to its naturalness. The more we accept the Laws of the universe, the more we can understand the principal elementaries of Creation. All true and real paths will lead to a constant change towards the better for the truth seeker. There is much fear in the world at the moment. Most fear is based on the fear of change, and we are living in a timeline of great change. Change is the enemy of the profane and the ignorant, but it sets the truth seeker as well as the real Illuminati initiate, apart from the ordinary world. The Illuminati, on the good, or the bad side of the fence, strive to see the world as it really is, and will slowly understand that the world reflects its supreme Law of change within its fold.

Who are the Illuminati and what are Secret Societies? Adam Weishaupt wrote the following:

Do you realize sufficiently what it means to rule in a secret society? Not only over the lesser or more important of the populace, but over the best of men, over men of all ranks, nations, and religions, to rule without external force, to unite them indissolubly, to breathe one spirit and soul into them, men distributed over all parts of the world? . . . And finally, do you know what secret societies are? What place do they occupy in the great kingdom of the world's events? Do you think they are unimportant, transitory appearances?

(Nachtrag von weitem Originalschriften, II, pp. 44, 51.10)

The most profound lies hinder us from seeing things as they really are, and instead, we construct Māyā within Māyā of falsity within us. Māyā means "illusion" or "magic" and has multiple meanings in Indian philosophies depending on the context. In ancient Vedic literature, Māyā literally implies extraordinary power and wisdom.

There are many haters of the truth out there, and most of them are brainwashed with liberal-progressive Anti-Christian propaganda. The lies are often sweet and delightful for all the fools who chose to believe them, like those we see every day in the mainstream media. Sooner or later we will turn against the liar, sending him back into the eternal wheel. Just watch Hillary Clinton's daily anger and bitterness after being defeated by Donald J. Trump in 2016, despite all the desperate pleas from her own party to shut up and go away, she still continues her eternal rant, obviously consumed by sourness and bitterness, because she lied to herself and the American public during the electoral campaign, but she will never accept that.

Before concluding my introduction, I would like to talk about Dharma and Karma. These concepts are often confused among ordinary people, as well as truth seekers, but they are very important for the Illuminati of the various Mystery Schools. Dharma is the perfect law of the Cosmos and its Creation in Buddhism. We are all born to fulfill some kind of Dharma, the method for completing one's dharma is through karma. Karma is the ritual actions we perform, viewing existence itself as the major ritual each and every one of us must accomplish every day, to enter into the conclusive state of one's dharma. By performing wrong karma, you will push yourself from completing and executing the deeds needed for you to be in accordance with your dharma. Dharma is the Cosmic Law and we as cosmic beings, just as the initiates of the various Illuminati Mystery Schools, are subdued by this Law.

The treatises (shastras) of Hinduism on dharma known as Dharmaśāstra, place a great emphasis on suddha to accomplish dharma. Suddha means pure. What makes the pure, unpure is connected to lies and the karmic deeds performed in the soil of sin. You can just imagine the impurity reached by the occult elite in their quest for world domination and unlimited power. If we do good deeds, the consequences will be good for us. On the other hand, if we do bad deeds the consequences will be harmful. There is no effect without a cause or cause without effect, so the present state of the elite that dominates the New World Disorder, seems to me, pretty bad.

Let's remember that in the superior world there is a Court of Divine Justice to judge our actions, which we also call Divine Law or Divine Justice. In the pyramids of Egypt, several illustrations of the Court of Divine Justice were found. No matter what belief system you subscribe to in this lifetime, there is always someone above watching and analyzing our good and bad deeds and then applying the final sentence, which is the consequence of our actions. For example, the sentiment that an eternal hell is a place of retribution is the most popular conception of hell for Christians. Theologians call this ideal a divine contrapasso. A contrapasso is a law of Divine retribution and justice, where the punishment matches the crime. It is a universal conception that is not confined to Judeo-Christian religions but is also expressed in other religious traditions that have very different worldviews than Christianity, such as the Indian religions with Karma and Dharma, or the Yin and Yang in the ethics of Confucianism.

For this reason, we need to reference the Ancient Greek aphorism "know thyself", one of the Delphic maxims that were inscribed in the pronaos (forecourt) of the Temple of Apollo at Delphi, according to the Greek writer Pausanias. "Know thyself", has become almost a slogan for all truth seekers in the West, as well as Freemasons, but still, it contains the truth of dharma. You must achieve knowledge about your Self if dharma shall prosper in your life, and refine you into the purest state reachable. As a truth seeker you are already close to this goal, take care to never build your inner knowledge upon lies. Lies will give birth to karma, actions, that take you down alleys that lead you astray from Self, and will destroy your dharma. Imagine this: You are accused of having committed a questionable deed and are confronted with it. The way you act accumulates the results of your karma in the dharmic records. Imagine this: You are obsessed by achieving something or someone, but the only way to achieve it, is to play a game of life that indicates that you cannot be altogether truthful in obtaining this goal. What will your actions be? Your actions will be recorded and remembered by dharma just as the actions of your enemy. It is your actions that bring you nearer or further away from dharma through this incarnation of your being. You are now embarking upon a path of true knowledge and understanding, a seeker of truth, who really wants to learn about the present decline of our Society, and the Western Initiatic System that caused it, without all the lies and the hypocrisy of the many disinfo agents out there confusing our minds daily.

Chapter One

The secret beliefs and practices of Freemasons & the Illuminati The mission of Volume 5

Manly Palmer Hall (1901 –1990), who was a well-known Canadian born masonic author, astrologer, and mystic, wrote: Freemasonry is a fraternity within a fraternity - an outer organization concealing an inner Brotherhood of the elect. Before it is possible to intelligently discuss the origin of the craft it is necessary to establish the existence of these two separate yet interdependent orders, the one visible and the other invisible. The visible society is a splendid camaraderie of "free and accepted" men enjoined to devote themselves to ethical, educational, fraternal, patriotic, and humanitarian concerns. The invisible society is a secret and most august fraternity whose members are dedicated to the service of a mysterious Arcanum Arcanorum.

For thousands of years, Freemasonry existed within the Western Initiatic System, transmitting in secret from one generation to the next, their secret knowledge, just as other secret societies of the Illuminati network have done again and again over the centuries. Some of this knowledge is positive, some of it negative, if not completely evil, as it contributes to the domination of the masses, immersed to this day, in ignorance and bigotry. Several of these early mystery traditions affected the latter-day mystery schools, such as the historical Egyptian esoteric teachings I mentioned earlier, the Persian Mithraic mysteries, and also the Greek mysteries. In all this, we find Hermeticism, Shamanism, Paganism, Druidism, Gnosticism, the Kabbalah, and Alchemy, to name a handful of beliefs, to include of course, the more secret side of Christianity, connected to enigmatic groups, such as the Essenes, who were a Jewish sect that many historians link to Jesus and the Gnostics. The latter was revived by the more recent New Age trend. Various Gnostic groups initially sprouted from west to east, all across Europe, the Middle East, and Russia, which later became the land of the Orthodox Church. This made the Gnostics disappear for a long time, before reappearing prominently at the end of the eighteenth hundreds in various Illuminati sects, and Rites of Freemasonry.

The Ancient Mysteries used by Jesus to perform miracles are for most Masonic Brethren, only possible thanks to this lesser-known branch of Christianity known as the Gnostics, later accused of heresy, who were profusely persecuted, and often executed by mainstream Christians. Some Masons even say the letter “G” featured in their tradition stands for Gnostics, and Gnostic Christian teachings are a subject of extreme secrecy up to this day. In the meantime, the Roman Catholic Church grew and became the dominant religion across the Roman Empire, absorbing any remnants of older pagan religions or cults within their fold. We must also keep in mind, that people lived in profound “darkness” for centuries because only the aristocracy, or the clergy of the Church, could be literate, therefore the majority of people could not read or write. The dark side of the Illuminati network had an easy job in dominating the masses, due to the ignorance of the majority of the world’s population. One particular of the resources powering the Western Initiatic System through the centuries comes from the historic Illuminati households, where we find a secretive team of priestly families who transmitted their ancient teachings, using sectarian tradition. In the meantime, they infiltrated the various avenues of typical daily life, and of course, the religion of every land, or kingdom, they entered. Only lately has this mysterious group been partly exposed, thanks to the Dan Brown frenzy of the first decade of the new millennium, but for most historians, all this talk was merely fabricated tales, or elaborate Freemasonic stories, with no truth.

However, there are legends that declare the importance of specific historical places, or of peculiar families sitting at the center of the Western Initiatic System. Some are even said to be the immediate descendants of Jesus and Mary Magdalene. That's why the bloodline of Jesus was supposedly perpetuated in secret by the aristocracy, to avoid the persecution of the church, that would have naturally accused them of heresy. We can believe, or not, in the possibility of a holy bloodline within the royal families of Europe, however, the “Merovingian Mythos” seems the one that still fascinates many.

Occult expert and historian Tracy R. Twyman has been investigating the enigma of the Holy Grail and Rennes-le-Chateau for a long time, and has written extensively about it in Dagobert's Revenge Magazine, as well as other publications, like in a book from 2004, The Merovingian Mythos and the Mystery of Rennes-le-Chateau, where Twyman claims she discovered the bloodline of the Merovingian's stems not only from Christ and Mary Magdalene but in fact, goes back to the god-kings and queens of the antediluvian world. This is a hypothesis embraced by many Neo-Templars, and Illuminati Orders such as The Typhonian Order, previously known as the Typhonian Ordo Templi Orientis (T.O.T.O.), originally led by an old collaborator of Aleister Crowley, the late British occultist Kenneth Grant (1924–2011), and his partner Steffi Grant, an Illuminati sect that is now led by his deputy Michael Staley. Grant, who I will analyze further on, envisioned the Merovingian bloodline as a demonic lineage. This should come as no surprise, as inside the Western Initiatic System, we often find a growing dark side of the Illuminati, that is increasingly promoting Satanism, Liberal ideology, and Atheism, as they are all corrupt with greed, power and material wealth.

Scums of the earth, like Marina Abramovic, often distort the true figure of Jesus, and what He truly represents for Christians all over the world. I will go back to this point later in the book in relation to the sick beliefs of The Satanic Temple of Lucien Greaves.

In the meantime, the Progressive and Liberal -Masonic cabal that controls Europe and the US Deep State, would seem to be extremely confident that their plan to create a “New World Order” is progressing very nicely, especially now with a Jesuit Pope in full control. For several decades, Marxists/Satanists masquerading as “Democrats” and “Republicans” have been gradually undermining and dismantling the United States, and so-called “Regular” Freemasonry has unfortunately done nothing to stop them. The result is the gradual destruction of traditional values in our society, and the steady decline of the Western Initiatic System, including Freemasonry.

Are you wondering if there is a good side to the Illuminati and Freemasonry? Is it true Freemasonry is a Christian organization? Why are they so secret? Is it ok to remain in a Lodge? Is it all right to join the Masons?

These are questions I receive all the time from my readers. It is important that you have a correct vision about the reality of Freemasonry, its teachings, and its beliefs so that you can approach this subject with understanding and not superficially, like most conspiracy theorists tend to do. Many people who are interested in my experience, ask questions that need a clear and accurate answer, not the confusion and evasion they often receive when they ask such information to an ordinary Mason, who are often ignorant of their own tradition. They most conveniently state they cannot answer most questions, because they have sworn, under penalty of death, not to reveal their Masonic secrets. What a load of crap! An honest Freemason will always answer all your questions as the only secrecy required consists with the signs, handgrips, and words of recognition, that are a means of recognizing each other, necessary in an organization which spans the entire world, and encompasses many languages.

These are the only details that cannot be revealed by regular Freemasons to the outside world, but often Freemasons, when asked about their membership by a non-Mason, especially in North America, merely assure you that “Masonry is a Christian organization based on the Bible.”

They further assure you that Masonry is in accordance with God’s laws. But is this really true?

Do they have the ultimate truth? Why are they so secretive? Well, I will try to answer these three questions before you waste years attacking the wrong enemy on the internet, or joining the wrong form of Freemasonry in search of the Holy Grail, or even worse, being initiated into one of the many Illuminati cults that recruit within Freemasonry, like the Ordo Templi Orientis (known with the acronym O.T.O.). This is a dangerous error, even the more erudite Freemason seems to make these days, often ignoring the possible consequences of such actions.

This happened for example, to the late Jeva Singh-Anand, the translator of The Secret School of Wisdom - The Authentic Rituals and Doctrines of the Illuminati, published by Lewis Masonic only a couple of years ago. Jeva enthusiastically joined the O.T.O. wishing to learn more about their Illuminati secrets, and their connections, (if any), to Weishaupt’s Illuminati. He went around the US giving speeches in their lodges, even helping them form an “Education Committee” within their US Grand Lodge, using none other than Weishaupt’s, “Owl of Wisdom” Minerval degree symbology. The “Bird of Minerva” has been a symbol of the goddess of wisdom (Athena/Minerva) for thousands of years.

Hegel used it, and the Journal of the Hegel Society of America employs the symbol, and so does the Bohemian Club. In the Cremation of Care ceremony, ritualized at the Bohemian Grove, we hear the “Priest” intone: “O thou, great symbol of all mortal wisdom, Owl of Bohemia, we do beseech thee, grant us thy counsel.” However, Jeva was probably thinking he was immune to all the evil black magic present in the dark side of the Illuminati, but unfortunately, he ended up dead in his basement after committing suicide in October 2015. His wife, a practicing witch, and O.T.O. member was said by some, to be partly responsible for his dramatic ending, but we might never know the truth about this sad episode connected once again, to the dangerous para-Masonic magical order.

Remember, the O.T.O. is not Freemasonry, but a dangerous

Illuminati sect trying to undermine it, “The grand object of Masonry is to promote the happiness of the human race” said Brother George Washington, and this was 100% true until the dark forces of occultism and Satanism screwed up the whole system in the last two centuries, especially thanks to Illuminati orders like the O.T.O. This could happen because the Masonic doctrine is very accepting and open, so it created a loosely knit system of Christians, as well as pagan ideals, in its fold. Furthermore, it is cushioned with allowances for those members who wish to disagree with religious dogmas, and it embraces men of all religions since the 27th of December of 1813, when a great cloud of darkness descended on Freemasonry and the English Tradition of the Craft, with the surrender of the Tradition which was in all aspects, Christian.

Earlier on in January 1813, Prince Augustus Frederick, Duke of Sussex, (27 January 1773 – 21 April 1843), became Grand Master of the Premier Grand Lodge of England, and in December of that year his brother, Prince Edward Augustus, Duke of Kent and Strathearn, became Grand Master of the Antient Grand Lodge of England.

On 27 December 1813, the United Grand Lodge of England was constituted at Freemasons’ Hall, London with Prince Augustus as Grand Master. What Freemasonry Today, the official publication of the United Grand Lodge of England wrote in 2014, helps us understand why things changed in Freemasonry after 1813:

Augustus had a reputation for open-mindedness and was considered the most liberal of his siblings, being something of a social reformer. He was educated abroad, entering the University of Göttingen in 1786 at the age of thirteen.

He was the only one of the princes not to pursue a military career, although some commentators have attributed this to the fact that he suffered from asthma rather than his well-known liberal propensities. In opposition to the views of some of his older brothers, in particular, the Duke of Cumberland, Augustus favored Catholic Emancipation. He was also, despite his devout Christianity, a strong supporter of the Jewish community.

Up until 1813, the paragraph “Concerning God and Religion” in Anderson's Constitutions, caused much dissension and controversy in the earlier days of Freemasonry, and in the formative days of the first Grand Lodge, where most Freemasons were actually Christian, even Trinitarian

Christian as some Masonic websites point out even today. Religious dissension in modern lodges and Grand Lodges seems impossible today, but in the formative days of Freemasonry, it actually played a big part in the Craft ideology, just check out the history of The Rite of Strict Observance. After the allowances made after 1813, when Masons focused on the non-sectarian character outlined in Anderson's Constitutions. The second great cloud of darkness descended on Freemasonry only a few decades later, when the Grand Orient of France, which at this time made its support for the Republic official, decided incredibly in 1877, to abolish its requirement that its members believe in the existence of God, and the immortality of the soul, and for its lodges to work "for the Glory of the Great Architect of the Universe". In theory, each lodge remained free to choose whether or not to continue respecting this fundamental landmark of Freemasonry, but in practice, all references to religion would be phased out of the rituals of the Grand Orient of France, that became the ideal place for the formation of the future leaders of Communist Russia.

Masonic philosophy is very vague from this point onwards in Masonic history, and so devious in its application of their original beliefs, that it can mean almost anything to anyone, leaving as I have also outlined in volume 1 of my Confessions, the possibility of a Satanic infiltration wide open, and at the same time making Freemasonry the ideal carrier of the future One World Religion Ideology, promoted today by a Jesuit Pope and the Vatican led New World Order. This means that belonging to Freemasonry today, is profitable for a number of reasons, but often does not make you a better Christian, as the values they are promoting, especially in the first three degrees, are simply Universal values, with no particular attachment to Christian values.

Of course, Freemasons can choose a Christian path within Freemasonry, but that's not everyone's choice. Freemasons are often informed more than the average person on community and civil affairs because contemporary Masons come from every profession imaginable. They have a vast storehouse of knowledge at their command, which they share with one another, but only a few are true Masons and true Christians at heart, as unfortunately, most have become members of Freemasonry, only to obtain favors. In fact, a helpful principle is that of extending aid to a brother Mason. Each member is dedicated to helping a needy brother wherever or whenever he is able. This is usually a good thing, but membership in a Lodge is for this reason, also very useful for those who seek political office, political favor, employment opportunities and all kinds of advantages. Let me now stress, that this is not what true Freemasonry is all about.

A useful timeline and the Law of Use

For a more complete understanding of the subjects discussed in this book, I would like you to carefully consider the following words from an ancient aphorism in understanding the use of such “Knowledge”: “The possession of Knowledge, unaccompanied by a manifestation and expression in Action, is like the hoarding of precious metals by the miser—a vain and foolish thing. Forget not The Law of Use, in this and all other things.”

Yes, my dear readers “The Law of use” is everything, so use this book to awaken others and manifest its true potential on the future of humanity, not to oppress it further. For this reason, I include here, a partial Chronology of the modern Illuminati groups and sects, to function as a Timeline and Map of the more recent developments within the Western Initiatic System , even if probably incomplete.

THE BROTHERHOOD OF SATAN'S MINIONS

These days Satanists are on the run after recent events have exposed them beyond the so-called conspiracy realm, putting them under the public spotlight like never before. Sally Quinn, the widow of The Washington Post's Ben Bradlee, reveals in her new memoir, that she has practiced the occult for many years, and believes she killed three innocent people using Black Magic. In the meantime, Hillary Clinton, who even attended a voodoo ceremony in Haiti years ago with her husband, confessed that she was so frustrated about the infamous scandal surrounding her use of a private email server, that basically ruined her presidential campaign, that she was "tempted" to construct voodoo dolls in the images of "certain members" of the news media and Congress, and then "stick them full of pins." This confirms what I have written for years in my books, and now the first edition of Volume 2 of my Confessions series, has apparently forced one of America's most dangerous Satanic sects to close down their website, after being exposed in my book. They are called the Brotherhood of Satan, and years ago they publicly announced, on a now defunct website (<http://www.grailcode.net>) the following shocking statement:

One of these two so-called leaders even said they called the FBI and turned us in as being a Satanic cult. This again is actually amusing. The Brotherhood has many connections in the Law Enforcement and the Justice System and they have a secret great respect for us both as individual Satanists and as an organization. Many of our High clergy are Freemasons and other related Secret Society members.

This is a screenshot of the statement above in case you think I am making this up:

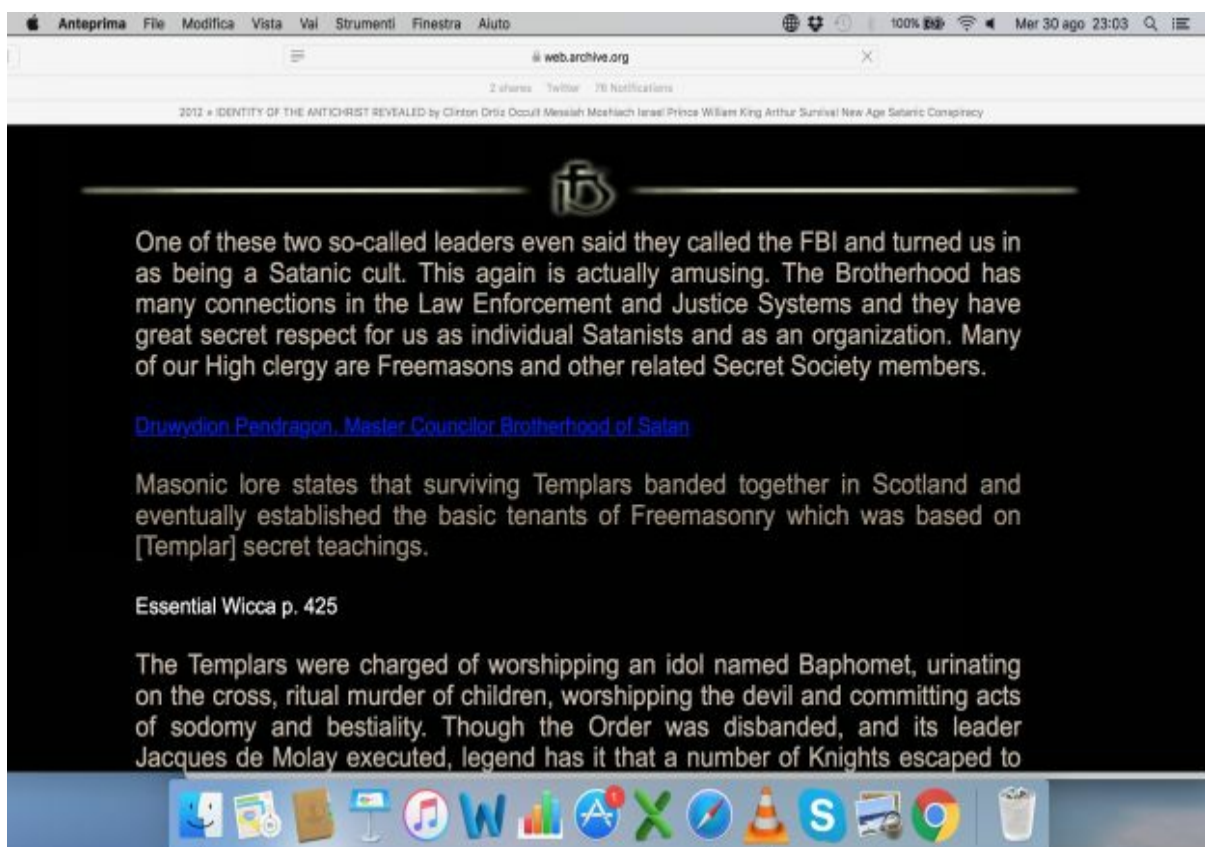

FIG 3 – Screenshot of this shocking statement made by the Brotherhood of Satan that shows their links to the FBI and Freemasonry

They were also celebrating 11 years for their main website, <http://www.brotherhood-of-satan.com>, that is now closed down, as well as all their “Illuminati” public activities (including their Illuminati website), that seem to have suddenly vanished from the internet, after the publication of the first edition of Confessions of an Illuminati Vol.2 published in 2016, that revealed in detail, thanks to the American author and Freemason Arthur Temple aka Benjamin Mollica, Master Mason of the Grand Lodge of New York, the real identity of their leaders David Daniel De Paul (known with the initiatic name Druwydion Pendragon), generational Satanist and Grand Master of the Brotherhood of Satan, and Keith Shaffer (known as Lord Gwydion)^[1], who publicly claimed to be the Grand Master of the Bavarian Illuminati USA, and in 2015 registered the domain bavarianilluminati.us, showing its true colors beyond any reasonable doubt, to the world.

The infamous Brotherhood of Satan (also known with the acronym BOS), whose elite is made up of deviant Masonic figures, used to publish statements like the following one on the internet, wishing to attract new recruits, and also potential Satanic allies, from other sectarian realities: The Brotherhood of Satan believes in Satan as a very real Entity and Deity, the very Oldest in Nature. The use of the Principles of Brotherhood between all Brotherhood of Satan members is the very cement of our foundation. Is the Brotherhood hiding something by its usage of secrecy in much of what we do in the Shadows? No, we are NOT. We do believe that Ancient Satanic Witchcraft has existed as a true but hidden tradition and therefore we do adhere to our traditions in a manner that is known to us as members of the Craft of Satanism. While the Brotherhood of Satan new Brotherhood generation has its own Satanic Craft secrets like all legitimate Dark Orders and Lodges have done, we still invite any Satanist or others of the Dark Arts organizations or solitary Dark Witches to our offline Sabbat festivals. If you want to see what we are all about then you should attend one. Just be ready to actually experience Brotherhood Satanism first hand.

The destruction of their activities with my publications is a huge success in our battle against Satanism, but this is only the first step thanks to the war we are fighting together, not only for the future of Christianity but also for the future of the Western Initiatic System that needs purification.

Recently, author and researcher of weird things, Gregory L. Reece, made another shocking discovery in regards to the Brotherhood of Satan and the mysterious figure, Brother Orion. Greg, who holds a Ph.D. in Religious Studies, reveals in his book, Creatures of the Night: In Search of Ghosts, Vampires, Werewolves and Demons, that David Daniel de Paul is also the man called Orion by the controversial whistleblower William Schnoebelen (b.1949), ex- Satanic Priest, Witch, Satanist, Ninety Degree Freemason, Vampire and more, who now heads One Accord Ministries. Schnoebelen, who confirmed for the first time in a phone conversation, the identity of the mysterious Orion to Gregory L. Reece^[2] He spoke extensively about this mysterious and evil figure who he encountered over thirty years ago, in his book published in the early 90's entitled Lucifer Dethroned.

This book co-authored with his wife, the late Sharon Schnoebelen, who died in 2010, makes some shocking statements.

So really is Orion? Well, while the Brotherhood of Satan and David Daniel de Paul officially disavows animal and human sacrifice, Schnoebelen claims otherwise in his book, indicating Orion/ David De Paul as being responsible for a series of terrifying crimes made across the US in the name of Satan. Orion/David De Paul who also signed back in the early 70's Sharon Schnoebelen's certificate of advancement to the level of thirty-third degree Mason, told Schnoebelen that "blood was essential for the practice of real magick," and that, "For the Satanist, the holiest act is to murder a Christian" preferably, "a young girl". ^[3]Gregory L. Reece, after confirming the identity of Orion, asks himself if Schnoebelen misrepresented what Orion told him thirty years earlier, or if David Daniel De Paul, aka Pendragon, misrepresented what he actually believes and practices today?

For William Schnoebelen also known as Bill, the victims are usually displaced thanks to corruption and blackmail of a funeral director, and the perpetrators are not prosecuted by the authorities because Satanists are usually: "pillars" of the local community – doctors, lawyers, judges, clergy and even police, often recruited and converted to the Brotherhood by "lower-level networks" like "the Masonic lodge".^[4]

Maybe instead of suing people, or threatening publishers for exposing them, the Brotherhood of Satan and their "generational Satanists" should be investigated by the FBI in the Trump era. So we can finally end the perverse, and criminal practices of these sick individuals, who can no longer be tolerated in a civil society, if proven true beyond any reasonable thought. This is of course if David Daniel de Paul is indeed Orion, as Schnoebelen claims he is in Reece's book. Of course, Schnoebelen is considered by the majority of Freemasons as just another anti-mason with wacky ideas, but in this case, we are talking about something well beyond the boundaries of the Craft, or even legality, that is in no way even remotely linked to regular Freemasonry. Think about it, what are we tolerating?

Understanding the Metaphysics of Evil

To better understand the Western Initiatic System, and the real threat of Satanism, we should go over the topic of metaphysics. As the intelligence of the world expands, we begin to recognize a way of thinking that we will refer to as “meta-science,” based on a gradual comprehension of natural law, extending beyond the realm of matter. In an article on “Fatalism and Destiny” in The Times Literary Supplement, this thought is suggested in the form of a question. The author reaches no definite conclusions and is mainly concerned with putting aside, what he assumes to be a tendency among soldiers engaged in war, to adopt the theory of fatalism. Such theories “are strange, because they seem like the intrusion of a forgotten human nature into the rational body of our beliefs.” The soldier in the midst of exploding shells is graciously pardoned for taking refuge in fatalism, and the author wanders, for three columns, around the subject, somehow finding comfort in a distinction between fatalism and destiny, the value of which may not be very clear to the reader.

The wave of interest in super-physical research and speculation that is spreading through the intellectual world has a force that seems quite different than the pretence of assuming that all attempts to penetrate the unseen mysteries of nature represent the foolishness of weak minds to be laughed out of court by the sane man in the street. People who have lost dear relations in war are not easily dissuaded, and when they make inquiry, find that belief in the possibility of receiving definite news from those who have passed on is not confined, as they had been told, to weak-minded women and fraudulent fortune-tellers, but is held as a solid conviction by a large number of the most eminent men of the time. So we may be approaching a time when metaphysics of the old-fashioned order—vague speculation about the nature of thought, and the intangible philosophies of Hegel or Schopenhauer—will make way for the development of a meta-science based on as definite a foundation of fact and acquired knowledge as the sciences concerned with the laws governing matter.

Meta-science seems to indicate (even in its present stage of development) that “no life is found, which only to one engine bound, falls off but cycles always round.” Tennyson did not stop, when he wrote the Two Voices, to work out all the consequences of this hypothesis, but amongst others, it suggests that even if no fatalism, guarantees the justice of each individual death on the battle-field, compensation, in the long run, is mathematically certain. And that view has the incidental recommendation of making the

Free-will of humanity the ultimately dominant force in our progress through the ages.^[5]

The most troublesome impediment in the way of the progress of meta-science, arises from the irritation many otherwise intelligent people feel when asked to pay attention to some alleged occurrence that does not fit in with their previous knowledge. When new phenomena, arises and can be detected by suitable scientific instruments and reproduced, the irritation soon disappears, and the new discovery passes into the region of common knowledge in the so-called Academic world. But sometimes, a new discovery, though genuine, may for a time be elusive. Consider for a moment the phenomena of mesmerism, now passing into use in medical practice, though very imperfectly understood. The will of the mesmerist can be proven as often as you like, to have a definite effect on the patient, but by reason of not knowing how it operates, impatience prevents the man on the street from believing, though he might just as well disbelieve in the aurora borealis. But in truth, few subjects on which we can speculate are more attractive to the meta-scientist than the rationale of the human will. People generally do not stop to consider that it is really the original cause of almost everything that is accomplished in physical life. No house has ever been built, no machine has ever been constructed, without beginning with some human. Will is the beginning of the activities required to materialize the idea. But when it merely controls the bricklayer, (through the intermediation of wages), and materializes itself by slow degrees, people lose sight of the fact that Will has been the origin of the result. Future science has got to ascertain whether there may not be some more direct way of bringing Will to bear on matter. This brings us to the Metaphysical meaning of evil and why it is so important for the Satanists that are controlling our present reality.

Evil is a parasite. It has no permanent life of itself; its whole existence depends on the life it borrows from its parent, and when its connection with the parent is severed, nothing remains. In the Divine Mind, there is no recognition of evil conditions. Such conditions have no basis in reality. They are conjurations of a false consciousness. Apparent evil is the result of ignorance, and when Truth is presented the error disappears. There is but one presence and one power, God omnipotent. But man has the privilege and freedom of using this power at his will. When he misuses it, he brings about inharmonious conditions. Evil appears in the world because man is not in spiritual understanding. He has not learned that all is

Mind; neither has he conformed to the law of Mind, with the result that inharmony appears in his body and affairs. He can do away with evil by learning rightly to use the One Power. If there were a power of evil, it could not be changed. Evil must be overcome with good. We must dwell in the good so wholly that all the substance of our thoughts and our being is given over to the promotion of good. This is a mental process in which all negation (evil) is denied, and creative, fearless affirmation of God's perfect good is steadfastly adhered to.^[6]

The Satanic trends of the NWO and their teachings

Unfortunately, every day, evil and Satanism pollute the Western Initiatic System, with the help of a vast variety of sects and groups like the Brotherhood of Satan, inspired by the darkest side of Illuminati teachings. Many of these topics have been investigated in depth in my previous writings, however, I would like to now introduce a group I have never mentioned before. I believe they are a useful example, and represent better than others, the sick and twisted reality infiltrating and transforming our lives in the Age of the Antichrist.

They are called The Order of Nine Angles (ONA; O9A), not to be confused with angels, and are a Satanic and Left-Hand Path occult Illuminati group based in the United Kingdom, with affiliated groups in various parts of the globe. They claim to have been established in the 1960s and rose to public recognition in the early 1980s. Describing their approach as “Traditional Satanism”, it has been academically identified as also exhibiting Hermetic and Neo-Pagan elements in its beliefs (something typical of most Illuminati sects). According to the Order's own account, it was established in the Welsh Marches of Western England during the late 1960s, by a woman who had previously been involved in a secretive pre-Christian tradition. This account also states that in 1973, a man named Anton Long was initiated into the group, subsequently becoming its Grand Master. Several academic commentators who studied the ONA, express the view that the name “Anton Long” is probably the pseudonym of the British Neo-Nazi activist David Myatt, although Myatt has denied that this is the case. From the late 1970s onward, Long authored a number of books and articles propagating the Order's ideas, and in 1988, they began production of their own journal, Fenrir. Through these ventures it established links with other Neo-Nazi Illuminati Satanist groups around the world, furthering their cause through embracing the internet in the 2000s, spreading like malignant cancer in our society, without any possible control, well beyond the boundaries of traditional Generational Satanism.

FIG 5 – Baphomet According to the ONA Tradition.

The ONA’s writings condone and encourage human sacrifice, a truly horrific thing, referring to their victims as offers. The ONA outline their views on human sacrifice in a number of documents: A Gift for the Prince – A Guide to Human Sacrifice, Culling – A Guide to Sacrifice II, Victims – A Sinister Exposé, and Guidelines for the Testing of Offers. According to the ONA’s beliefs, the killer must allow their victim to “self-select” themselves; this is achieved through testing the victim to see if they expose perceived character faults. If this proves to be the case, the victim is believed to have shown that they are worthy of death, and the sacrifice can commence.

Those deemed ideal for sacrifice by the group include individuals perceived as being of low character, members of what they deem “sham-Satanic groups” like the Church of Satan and even Aquino’s Temple of Set, that is equally dangerous, as well as “zealous, interfering Nazarenes”, journalists, business figures, and political activists who disrupt the groups operations. Of course, the author of this book has been on the top of their dislike list for years, and this book will not help me get off their blacklist, but this is part of the war we are fighting in these crepuscular times. The ONA explains that because of the need for such “self-selection”, children must never be victims of sacrifice, something of a change from Crowley’s a male child of perfect innocence and high intelligence is the most satisfactory and suitable victim.

Let’s also remember that the ONA “despise animal sacrifice, maintaining that it is much better to sacrifice suitable mundanes given the abundance of human dross”.

The sacrifice is then carried out through either physical or magical means, at which point the killer is believed to absorb power from the body and spirit of the victim, thus entering a new level of “sinister” consciousness. As well as strengthening the character of the killer by heightening their connection with the forces of death and destruction, such sacrifices are also viewed as having wider benefits by the ONA, because they remove from society, individuals whom the group deems to be worthless human beings. Monette noted that no ONA nexion cells publicly admitted to carrying out a sacrifice in a ritual manner, but that members had joined the police and military groups in order to engage in legal violence and killing. The ONA believe that there are historical precedents to their practice of human sacrifice, expressing belief in a prehistoric tradition in which humans were sacrificed to a goddess named Baphomet, at the spring equinox and to the Arcturus star in autumn. However, the ONA’s advocacy of human sacrifice has drawn strong criticism from other Satanist groups like the Temple of Set, who deem it to be detrimental to their own attempts to make Satanism more socially acceptable within Western nations. ^[7]

So what’s really going on in the murky world of one of the darkest sects operating in the Illuminati Network of today?

The ONA promotes the idea that human history can be divided into a series of Aeons just like Aleister Crowley, and the Ordo Templi Orientis have been doing long before the arrival of the ONA onto the Illuminati scene. Each of these supposed Aeon corresponds to a period of time in human civilization and the ONA expresses the view that the current Aeonian civilization is that of the Western, but claims that the evolution of this society is threatened by the “Magian/Nazarene” influence of Judeo-Christian religion, which the Order seeks to combat in order to establish a militaristic new social order, termed the “Imperium” that seems to be another word for New World Order.

According to their teachings, this is necessary in order for a Galactic civilization to form, in which an “Aryan” society will colonize the Milky Way. Can you believe all this rubbish? It’s pretty incredible, these guys seem more out of it than Crowley’s lot ever were. They advocate a spiritual path in which the practitioner is required to break societal taboos by isolating themselves from society, committing crimes, embracing political extremism and violence, and carrying out an act of human sacrifice. ONA members practice magick, believing that they are able to do so through channeling energies into this “causal” realm from an “acausal” realm, where the laws of physics do not apply, with such magical actions designed to aid in the ultimate establishment of the Imperium (the NWO...). The ONA lacks any central authority or structure, they instead operated as a broad network of associates - termed the collective - who are inspired by the texts originally authored by Long and other members of the Inner ONA. The group comprises largely of clandestine cells, termed “nexions”, as well as gangs known as Dreccs, artists known as Balobians, and folk mystics known as Rounwytha. With the first nexion based in Shropshire, Western England, the majority of groups have been established in the British Isles and Germany, although others have been formed elsewhere in Europe, Russia, South Africa, Australia, and North America. Academic estimates suggest that the number of individuals broadly associated with this neo-Illuminati Order fall in the low thousands. If this is true, it would mean that they are in the same league as the Ordo Templi Orientis Caliphate, despite the fact that they would probably state the contrary, to impress you. The truth is that members of this order never exceeded more than three thousand members. Often, some of the ONA members secretly collaborate with the O.T.O. and I noticed in my time in the O.T.O., that the O.T.O. guys were pretty scared of them and treated them with admiration for their supposed evil deeds. So the ONA is not too big, but big enough to influence magically, a large number of people around them, just as the O.T.O. does every day. Once, I was given an internal document of the ONA based on Hypnotism and Mesmerism apparently written by their inner circle, called the Ayin

Quadma'ah Movement. I must admit that the document in question is useful to understand the more intellectual side of Satanism within the Illuminati and the New World Order, and clears up for the more attentive reader, that great secret of mind control and manipulation used since ancient times by the Illuminati, known in the esoteric world as Animal Magnetism^[8] Animal magnetism, also known as Mesmerism, was the name given by the German doctor Franz Mesmer in the 18th century, to what he believed to be an invisible natural force (lebensmagnetismus) possessed by all living/animate beings (humans, animals, vegetables, etc.). He believed that the force could have physical effects, including healing. He tried persistently but without success, to achieve scientific recognition for his theories, that were embraced by the various Illuminati circles. The vitalist theory attracted numerous followers in Europe and the United States and was popular into the 19th century. Practitioners were often known as magnetizers, rather than mesmerists. For about 75 years from its beginnings in 1779, it was an important specialty in medicine and continued to have some influence for about another 50 years. Hundreds of books were written on the subject between 1766 and 1925. Today it is almost entirely forgotten. ^[9]

Having said that, the Illuminati never forgot Mesmer's teachings, and secretly used them to develop much more complex methods of mind control and hypnotism, influencing the study and formation of certain forms of neurolinguistics, which is the study of the neural mechanisms in the human brain that control the comprehension, production, and acquisition of language, all techniques used in modern publicity and political propaganda.

The internal document of the ONA

Let's analyze this document from the ONA internal circle. It will no doubt put into question whether Hypnotism or Mesmerism forms any legitimate or fundamental part of Occultism, and indeed I have asked myself this question many times. I finally decided to include this document in my book, as it clears up many aspects unknown to many, of the hidden links between Hypnotism or Mesmerism, and what we all define as the Illuminati. So let's see what's their take is on the writings called HYPNOTISM AND MESMERISM by Sepharial:

“The whole of the magnetic art, then known as Fascination and the Laying on of Hands, was an essential factor in the curriculum of the thaumaturgist... Scripture references to the transmission of vital energy to those sick or dying, or even death to all appearances, are numerous and well-known. The use of oil as a medium for the conveyance and retention of the vital or magnetic energy is also noticed and is commonly in use in India and other parts of the Orient at this day. Mesmerism may be distinguished in a popular manner from Hypnotism in that it presumes the existence of an effluvium which is in the nature of a subtle essence capable of being transmitted from one body to another under the direction of the Will. Paracelsus (1493/4 -1541) born Theophrastus von Hohenheim called it the Archeus or Liquor Vitae: The Archeus is an essence, he says, which is distributed equally in all parts of the body if the latter is in a healthy condition; it is the invisible nutriment from which the body draws its strength, and the qualities of each of its parts correspond to the nature of the physical parts which contain it. . . . The Archeus is of a magnetic nature and attracts or repels other forces belonging to the same plane. The individual power of resistance will determine how far a man is subject to astral influences. The vital force is not enclosed in man but radiates around him like a luminous sphere, and may be made to act at a distance. In those semi-material rays, the imagination may produce healthy or morbid effects. It may poison the essence and cause diseases, or it may purify it after it has been made impure and so restore the health. . . . If we separate the vital force from the physical form, the latter will die and putrefy; and by impregnating a dying body with vitality, it may be made to live again.

Paracelsus further states that disease may be transmitted from one person to another, or from man to animal, or animal to plant, by means of the magnetic emanations, and we have ocular demonstration that this is a belief firmly held by those nations of the East among whom it is practiced. The story of the Gadarene swine is in line with our own experience of the epidemic of crime which follows upon the death of a renowned criminal. ‘If a person dies, says Paracelsus, and seriously desires that another should die with him, his imagination may create a force that may draw a menstruum from the dead body to form a corpus, and it may be projected by the impulse given to it by the thought of the dying person toward that other so that he may also die. Such especially may be the case with a woman dying of puerperal fever, for if such should desire that the whole world might die with her, an epidemic may be the consequence of her poisoned imagination.'

The suggestion, in this case, has regard to the known contagious influence of the corpse of a woman dying of puerperal fever. The point, however, is that the will of the dying person is capable of distributing such contagion. I have cited these opinions in order to show that Mesmerism, of which Paracelsus was undoubtedly the earliest known European exponent, has little in common with the beliefs and practice of the Hypnotists. The Mesmerists, or those who believe in the transmission of animal magnetism, whether we regard it as the Archeus of Paracelsus or the Odyle of Reichenbach, affirm that the emanation is most active through certain channels - e. g. the eyes, the lips, and the finger-tips. They also state that certain natural bodies, such as oil and water, are capable of holding the magnetism better than others; while vinegar is capable of augmenting the efflux and thus of increasing the transmission. Volatile spirits are, on the contrary, completely destructive of the magnetic transmission and storage. Earth and clay are excellent storage mediums or mumia as Paracelsus would call them.

There is nothing singular in this if we reflect that all the forces of nature of which we have any knowledge require certain media through which to operate. Electrical energy, for example, cannot be conveyed through a length of rope or wood, but only through a natural conductor of electricity, such as steel or copper.

When it is said that Jesus spat upon the ground and made clay and anointed the eyes of the man who was blind from birth, we see that use was made of the natural odylic power of the saliva, and the powerful storage medium of clay or earth. The rest is explained by the powerful will of the magician as expressed completely and decisively in the single exclamation Ephphatha! The laying on of hands for the cure of sickness is one phase of Mesmerism or Animal Magnetism of which there is abundant evidence and which conclusively proves the existence of the magnetic fluid. Touching for doing the King's evil or scrofula was in use among our own kings until Rome discountenanced any delegation of its powers. Le Roy te touche, Dieu te guerys (The King touches thee, God heals thee) had brought new life to thousands before the Divine right of kings was assailed.

Mesmerism in the medical and surgical treatment of disease. His book on Natural and Mesmeric Clairvoyance is among the best upon this subject. Incidentally, he mentions two phenomena by which I think I may claim complete justification for the inclusion of this subject in a work upon magic. The first is the dislocation of the senses. Normally each of the senses has its appropriate organ, as the eye, ear, nose, etc. They are not in themselves the only organs of the corresponding senses of sight, hearing, smell, etc., but have become specialized as such. This is shown by the fact that in natural and induced somnambulism, the whole sensorium may be transferred to the finger-tips or the pit of the stomach, or even the soles of the feet. Fredrika Wanner, better known as the Seeress of Prevorst, was a natural somnambulist, and in her trances was particularly sensitive to the presence of other persons, discriminating between them as painful or soothing to her. And on such occasions, it was found that her eyes being closed, or the senses incapable of being affected by ordinary stimuli, she could see, hear, and even taste by means of the epigastric region. Prof. Dumas is quoted by Dr. Esdaile to the same effect :

It is possible that, by a singular concurrence of circumstances, certain organs become capable of exercising properties and fulfilling functions to which they have hitherto been strangers and which even belonged to different organs. If rare and extraordinary facts did not inspire distrust, I could allege the singular transference of the hearing and sight, which, abandoning their usual seat, have appeared to be transferred to the stomach - so that sounds and colors excited there the same sensations as are ordinarily conveyed through the ears and eyes. Five years ago a young woman from the department of Ardèche, who gave an example of a very strange phenomenon, came to Montpellier to consult the doctors for a hysteric affection attended with catalepsy. She referred all the sensations of sight, hearing and smell to the region of the stomach, the appropriate organs being insensible to the usual stimuli.

The second phenomenon to which I would call attention is the transference of the senses. In the former cases we have the dislocation of the normal centers of sensation to the region of the sympathetic ganglion at the pit of the stomach, and now we may consider the marvelous fact of sensation being transferred from one person to another.

Finding a specially sensitive subject in the person of Babu Lali Mohun Mitra, a young Hindu of twenty- two years, Dr. Esdaile, after curing him of a loathsome disease for which he had come to the hospital, subjected him to some experimental development. He would place his watch in Mitra's hand and with a few passes would render the whole arm so rigid that under no bribe or persuasion or threat could the young man stir a finger to lose the watch as he was bidden. "Seeing this man's extreme sensibility, I thought it probable," says Esdaile, "that he might exhibit community of taste with his mesmerizer, and here is the result of the first experiment made upon him." He had never heard of such a thing nor had I even tried it before. "One day that the Babu came to the hospital to pay his respects after getting well, I took him into a side room and, mesmerizing him till he could not open his eyes, I went out and desired the native assistant- surgeon to procure me some salt, a slice of lemon, a piece of gentian, and some brandy, and to give them to me in any order he pleased when I opened my mouth. We returned, and, blindfolding Lali Mohun, I took hold of both his hands and opening my mouth had a slice of half-rotten lime-fruit put into it by my assistant.

Having shown it, I asked, Do you taste anything? 'Yes; I taste a nasty old lime,' and he made wry faces in correspondence. He was equally correct with all the other substances, calling the gentian by its native name, cheretea; and when I tasted the brandy he called it shrâb (the general name for wine and spirits); being asked what kind, he said: "What I used to drink –brandy". It should here be remarked that Dr. Esdaile had cured this man of confirmed brandy-drinking as well as of his terrible disease. As to the local rigidity of the arm of the patient who otherwise had full and perfect control of his faculties, it should be remarked that the mesmerizer can not only saturate his patient with his own nervous fluid but also determine the energy to various parts of the body so as to place them in effect beyond the patient's control. In a similar manner, local anæsthesia or insensibility can be produced at the will of the operator. When the volition can no longer act upon a part of the body, it is found that its sensibility is at the same time inhibited, which proves that volition and sensation are consentaneous. When a voluntary action is restored, sensation is simultaneously developed in the part.

The nervous fluid not only follows the direction of the will but is moreover impressed with our individuality, both physical and mental. It bears the signature of our thought, it carries the healthy or diseased tendencies of our body, it is moved by our will and colored by our desires and passions.

The dictum of Lord Bacon: ‘The human mind can be placed in communication with other minds and transmit their impressions,’ is not inclusive enough to cover the phenomena of statuvolism, animal magnetism, electro-biology, mesmerism, or by whatsoever name we may indicate the use of this mysterious agent. It is a force that can be set in motion at any time and made to operate at any distance apart from any suggestion of the effects it is required to produce. Herein it differs entirely from the “hypnotic suggestion” of the medical schools and the “auto-suggestion” which the critical writers wholly unskilled in the knowledge of Occultism bring to bear an explanation of every fulfilled prediction, every thaumaturgic effect, every case of healing which is in distinction from the known and approved methods, the clinic and pharmacy, of the medical profession. On the question of animal magnetism, either as a psychological or a therapeutic agent, the Occultist will always prefer the experience of such men as Esdaile, Gregory, and Baron Du Potet to the uninstructed opinions of the critic, however skillful he may be in his own field of research or work.

Baron Du Potet, in his Manual de l’Etudiant Magnetiseur, says:

‘Nature herself discovered the secret to me. And how? By producing before my own eyes, without waiting for me to search for them, indisputable facts of sorcery and magic. And what is it determines these sudden impulses, these raving epidemics, antipathies and cries, the convulsions that one can make durable? What if not the very principle we employ, the agent so thoroughly well-known to the ancients? What you call nervous fluid or magnetism the men of old called occult force, the power of the soul, subjection, magic! An element existing in nature, unknown to most men, gets hold of a person and withers and breaks him down as the raging hurricane does the bulrush. It scatters men far apart, it strikes them in a thousand places at the same time without their perceiving the invisible foe or being able to protect themselves. But that this element should choose friends and elect favourites, obey their thoughts, answer to the human voice and understand the meaning of traced signs, that is what people cannot realize and what their reason rejects, and that is what I saw; and I say it here most emphatically that for me it is a truth and a fact demonstrated forever!’

And this is a phase of Animal Magnetism that has been repeatedly offered as the only intelligible explanation of the phenomena of sorcery and as repeatedly rejected by the schools that have no knowledge either of the facts or the agent which alone is capable of explaining them. According to the experience of mesmerists, the magnetizer can communicate his fluid to a variety of objects, which thus become conductors or agents of his action to all persons with whom he is in magnetic relations. These agents are water, oil, woolen and cotton materials, trees, etc. Charles Dickens found a means of magnetizing water by means of pieces of sugar which had been subjected to magnetization, which were then readily distributed among the old country folk in Kent. Magnetized water is one of the most powerful agents that can be employed, inasmuch as it is conveyed at once to the stomach and thence distributed throughout the system, acting upon the circulation and the digestion, taking in turn, according to the immediate needs of the body, the place of anodyne, diaphoretic, prophylactic and purgative. An agent of such universal utility is necessarily not thought very highly of by those whose business it is to scare Nature into obedience by cryptic prescriptions and unnatural concoctions. Given normal health and a desire to heal the sufferer, you may take a vessel of water, and after thoroughly cleansing the hands, dip them in vinegar. Shake off the superfluous moisture by flicking the hands violently towards the ground. Continue so to do until the finger-tips tingle, with a slight streaming sensation down the forearm and hand. Now take a clean glass and pour into it some fresh cold water, which must not have been boiled or heated previously. Place the glass in the left hand with the fingers closed around it to steady it, and with the right hand make passes from above the glass downwards for a score of strokes or more. Then bunch the finger-tips above the mouth of the glass, bringing them almost in contact with the water, and impregnate it with the nervous fluid by a sustained effort of the will to that effect, letting the mind dwell the while upon the result you would obtain. A glass of water may thus be treated in from one to two minutes. Thus given to the patient it immediately goes to work and produces the most remarkable results without in any way complicating matters, as may be readily done by the administering of improper drugs, and without having any deleterious reaction, even when used as a soporific. That such an agent, so inoffensive, so natural and, above all, so efficacious and sure, should have escaped the recognition of medical men appears to me to be inexplicable, except on the grounds of complete ignorance of its properties and action. I do not pretend to explain by what magical process the mind of man is capable of acting upon a glass of water to the end that it becomes either a powerful astringent or a laxative, or an anodyne, or a stimulant. The chemical nature of the water remains unchanged. It is still a mechanical compound of H₂O. But something has happened, and this something the will of man can determine while yet his intellect fails to understand.

What I am now saying is not a tradition or an effort of the imagination. It is the record of my own personal experience. Suggestion? How does one suggest purgation to a babe that is teething or peaceful sleep to one delirious? The suggestion, if there is one, is directed, not to the mind of the patient, but to Nature herself, and the suggestion of an intent will is equivalent to a command. In the use of magnetized water as a purgative, no colic pains are felt either during or after the action. As an anodyne it leaves no sense of depression or lassitude behind it; while as a tonic it is not accompanied by any rise in temperature nor followed by the slightest constipation. A magnetic subject will readily distinguish magnetized water from water that has not been so treated, and I have known persons who could normally distinguish between them, though at first, I was unwilling to believe this and only convinced myself of it after trying a number of tricks to discover if there were a possibility of suggestion or fancy. But all I discovered was the fact that in some remarkable way magnetic water could be distinguished by its taste. But whatever agent we make use of for the purpose of conveying the nervous or vital fluid, it has been thought, even by those who practice magnetism, that rapport with the patient must first have been established.

This, however, is not the case; though undoubtedly it is more certain in its action when magnetization by contact has preceded the use of an agent. The agent is the means of continuing magnetization, and especially of attacking diseases that are internal and deep-seated and not merely nervous or superficial. But for all that, there is no reason whatsoever why magnetization should not be begun by means of a suitable agent. Contactual magnetism is not generally effective at once, but becomes so by persistence, the action being cumulative. So if water or any other agent is persisted with, it will bring about the desired effect. Of this I am quite certain since I have treated persons at a distance by this means alone, never having set eyes on them. Yet so wonderful is the sympathy existing throughout Nature, that I have been presently conscious of changes taking place in my own body, of pains and sickness, which had no other origin than the subtle connection of sympathy between my subject and myself viâ the agent I had employed. I know of persons who are capable of communicating their sensations at a great distance to one with whom they are in close sympathy, though nothing in the nature of thought transference is observable between them. With others, there is ready communication of thought or of mental images but no community of sensation. Hypnotism proposes to secure the same results. as magnetization by mechanically-induced trance supplemented by suggestion. But while this process lends itself peculiarly to the production of phenomena, and is extremely useful for experimental purposes and psychic research, it cannot pretend to have the same therapeutic value as magnetization, inasmuch as it does nothing to reinforce nature or to supplement depleted vitality. Where insensibility is the effect aimed at it is equally useful, and as in all induced somnambulism the automatic and subconscious self is rendered alert and active, very valuable results may be produced by hypnotic suggestion. If, however, you induce the hypnotic sleep by any of the usual methods and then stand aside while a phonographic record film is set in action to voice the number of original “suggestions,” the effect will surprise many into an entirely new view of the matter, and those who do not now believe that the personal factor is at all considerable, will come to the conclusion that it is the only factor which counts for anything in the whole process. The complete insensibility to written or spoken instructions other than those which pass through the mind of the magnetizer, is in itself a suggestion which the upholders of the non-magnetic position would do well to ponder. I prefer, however, to leave the schools of the Salpêtrière and Nancy to thresh out the question to its natural and inevitable conclusion. Deleuze, who followed the teaching of Puysegur, of Mesmer, Van Helmont and Paracelsus, has some excellent admonitions to those anxious to practice Animal Magnetism, which may very suitably be quoted in conclusion:

‘Persons who follow this subject may be divided into two classes. The first class comprehends those who, having recognized in themselves the faculty of doing good by magnetism, or at least hoping to succeed therein, wish to make use of it in their families, or among their friends, or with some poor patients, but who, having duties to fulfill or business to follow, do not magnetize except in circumstances where it appears to them necessary, without seeking publicity, without any motive but that of charity, without any other aim than that of curing or relieving suffering humanity. The second class is composed of men who, having leisure, wish to join in the practice of magnetism, the study of the phenomena it exhibits, to enter largely into it, to establish treatments for taking care of several patients at a time, to form pupils capable of aiding them, to have somnambulists who may enlighten them to examine closely, compare and arrange the phenomena, in such a way as to establish a regular code of laws whose principles may be certain, and whose consequences, extending daily, may lead to new applications. This class is separated from the preceding by a great number of degrees which must be successively mounted before one can find oneself situated where he can command a more extensive horizon. I, therefore, advise those of the former class not to think of passing beyond their limits unless they are masters of their own time and have some preliminary knowledge. Their lot is very good; they are strangers to the vanities and inquietudes which attend new attempts, to the uncertainty which springs from the conflict of opinions and of various points of view under which things are presented to us; they taste without mixture or distraction the satisfaction of doing good. . . . As to the persons who desire to belong to the second class, I advise them to consider at first the extent of the career they will have to run. It is better not to enter it than to stop in the midst of their enterprise. In what pertains to practice, a prudent simplicity is preferable to science. In what relates to theory, imperfect notions expose us to dangerous errors. The laborer who cultivates his farm as his fathers did before him, collects every year the price of his labors. Should he give way to an inclination to pursue experimental methods, he may be ruined before he is enlightened by his own experience.'

Up to a point, this is very good advice, but it is doubtful whether any amount of advice, however sound, will deter man from making experiments and sacrificing both life and fortune to the satisfaction of that desire for knowledge which is inherent in every active and well-developed mind. As between the curative and experimental practice of Mesmerism and Hypnotism, there can be little doubt that Mesmerism, as understood by its best exponents, is more adapted to the curative method, while Hypnotism is peculiarly adapted to the development of experimental psychology.^[10]

To amplify and speed up the effects of mind control, hypnosis is often used. So can hypnosis be used to make someone do something against his or her own will? This question has been the source of great controversy in the past but we can now hear a professional opinion, from Dr. John Ryder Ph.D. who served as a consultant about hypnosis in Woody Allen's film, The Curse of the Jade Scorpion, in which the character of Voltan uses hypnosis to get others to steal for him, without recalling the event.

So, can hypnosis be used for mind control? This is what Dr. Ryder thinks about it:

‘There has certainly been a lot of research on the subject. The CIA and KGB have both experimented with hypnosis to create the perfect spy or even an assassin. But while I have read many stories about these experiments, I’ve never seen any proof of their success. Much may be possible in the dark and sinister underworld of spies and madmen, but university research on the possibilities has always been limited by ethics.

Could you be hypnotized and forced to do something illegal or diabolical?

The general answer is that you cannot. There is a possibility, however, that if one had unlimited resources of money, power, and time, devious plans could be designed:

There really were many secret experimental programs like “MK-Ultra” that used hypnosis and drugs to push mind-control to its limits. Is it possible that your friendly neighbor could have been implanted with a program to suddenly become a killer when “triggered” by the right signal? What has been documented is that if you found a subject whose personality was deviant, to begin with, and wanted to direct their minds to do something extreme like planting a bomb or commit an assassination, you may be able to guide him or her to do it—with or without hypnosis. The hypnotic trance is a state of awareness that makes a person more easily persuaded. But the art of persuasion relies on many factors. To convince a normal person to become a killer is extremely unlikely. But if you are able to use coercion—such as kidnapping and threatening the life of their child—a person could very well be able to do anything to protect their offspring. Similarly, it may be possible to convince a person that something horrific will happen unless they follow your instructions precisely. Hypnosis could be used to plant such images, feelings, and stories in an innocent person who may then give in to the pressure and commit an attack they would otherwise never consider. You may have read in the spy novels about nefarious masterminds who use so-called “mind-control” techniques to program innocents to do their bidding like so many robots. And again, while this is unlikely, evildoers may be able to recruit the types of individual whose personality already is ready, if not eager, for violence, which could presumably include combat veterans who killed many enemy combatants in active duty. Perhaps this person also has strong philosophical leanings that following orders is correct, regardless of the consequences. If such a person volunteers for a covert project and enough time is spent applying all sorts of techniques to “reprogram” the subject, anything may be possible. Hypnosis could be used to promote a complete mind reprogramming and solidify a specific plan with great detail—and create a hypnotized walking time-bomb.’^[11]

These words are a confirmation that Mind control can be defined as a coercive process to get an individual to think or act a certain way by impairing their ability to think independently, and the Illuminati know this very well. Rational analysis, conscious decision making, and independent judgment seem suspended when you know how to induce people in a hypnotic trance. This is a bonus for Illuminati cult leaders who, after all, do not want the members or their victims thinking for themselves. So add to mind control hypnosis and its effects, and you have an incredibly powerful weapon and a dangerous set of tools the Illuminati can use to manipulate others to do things that violate their own morals and ethics. However, the ancient Druids were not just using hypnosis when they created 'phantom armies', using their harps to focus 'harmonic force' such as the 'Lost Chord'. The walls of Jericho were probably brought down by this same harmonic force. The importance of the quantum physics research that recognizes "Aum" or the "Holy SPIRIT" presaged the nature of the construction of matter, and consciousness as a penultimate reality has opened the proverbial Pandora's Box. It has done this by uniting the worlds of matter and spirit under the gaze of intellectual speculation. It has done this without the necessary moral or ethical prerequisites!^[12]

Chapter Two

Egyptian Sexual Energy and the Illuminati

Aleister Crowley, Kenneth Grant, Sex & The LAM Current.

William S. Burroughs wrote, “In the magical universe there are no coincidences and there are no accidents. Nothing happens unless someone wills it to happen.” Well these words written by someone who used to be a close friend of my grandmother, known as Anne Cumming or Felicity Mason (1917 –1993), made me reflect on the fact that it was no coincidence that my grandmother was born, similar to the infamous Aleister Crowley (1875-1947), into what used to be a successful brewing family of Victorian Middle-Class respectability. My grandmother, just as Crowley, had an indulgent life courtesy of James Grimble Groves (1854-1914), a member of parliament and a brewery owner. And it was thanks to my grandmother that I actually received my first introduction to the work of Aleister Crowley, described by Matthew Levi Stevens, (another old acquaintance of my grandmother), in the following way:

One of the most notorious characters of his day, and is very likely one of the most influential – though still controversial – figures in the world of Ritual Magic, a veritable Picasso of the Modern Occult Revival. Self-styled ‘The Great Beast 666’ and Prophet of the Aeon of Horus – his defiant, libertarian New Age, with its Message of “Do What Thou Wilt Shall Be The Whole of the Law” – he was dubbed by the press of his day “The Wickedest Man in the World.” Aleister Crowley was, if nothing else, an adventurer – in mind, body, and spirit – and a seeker after new sensations, new insights, and new experiences. An inheritance as a young man left him free to devote himself to a life of travel and exploration, in the realms of sex, drugs, and occultism as much as the geographical.

For Matthew Levi Stevens, a published author, occultural commentator, and Enochian & Hermetic magical practitioner, Crowley sought to bring forth a new approach to magic, which he felt was better suited to the fast-developing Modern Age of the Twentieth Century, and here is what Matthew Levi Stevens had to say about my grandmother, Felicity Mason:

Remembering Felicity Mason, who was born 14th December 1917. Heiress, former debutante, British Intelligence Agent, occasional actress, and PR to the Italian film industry, writer, traveler, and pioneering sexual adventurer. She met William S. Burroughs, Brion Gysin, and Hamri the Painter in Morocco in the 1950’s, remaining lifelong friends with all

World adventurer definitely fits both characters connected to a rather different perception of reality, as well as the controversial subject of sexuality, lived to the max, in the most unusual and eccentric way, often mixed with unusual occult techniques used for smashing the surrounding reality and reaching alien contact. Crowley once wrote in a letter to a disciple included in his book Magick Without Tears – the following statement regarding his alien beliefs: My observation of the Universe convinces me that there are beings of intelligence and power of a far higher quality than anything we can conceive of as human; that they are not necessarily based on the cerebral and nervous structures that we know, and that the one and only chance for mankind to advance as a whole is for individuals to make contact with such Beings.

So, as well as a pioneer in the realms of magic & mysticism, Crowley, was also what you could define nowadays, as an alien Contactee. In 1918, Crowley was, in fact, living in the furnished rooms of a notorious building based in Central Park West, New York City, when he decided to embark on a series of experiments in order to contact “higher intelligences” with the help of his then-mistress and magickal partner, Roddie Minor aka “The Camel.” What most people don’t know is that my grandmother Felicity, rented an apartment in the same building during her time in New York, often visited by her dear friend William Burroughs. Only a coincidence? Of course “there are no coincidences” as Burroughs once said, “in the magical universe there are no coincidences and there are no accidents. nothing happens unless someone wills it to happen.” Interestingly enough, Burroughs once described meeting “little grey men” when he was only four years old, and my grandmother made sure I was one of the first kids to watch E.T. during my stay in New York in June 1982.

Crowley and Minor began in that New York building, what Crowley later called The Amalantrah Workings. As author, and journalist, James Donahue reminds us, they were performances of sexual and ceremonial magick in an attempt to open a portal to other dimensions and make physical contact with other intelligences.

During his evocations, Minor opened her mind with the help of hashish and opium and had visions of a king, a small boy and a wizard that introduced himself as Amalantrah. Thus the name of the project.

The wizard’s message to Crowley was to “find the egg.” To anyone else, such a message might have fallen on deaf ears, but to Crowley, who only 14 years earlier had encountered yet another spiritual entity that dictated the words of Liber al vel Legis, best known as the Book of the Law, this message had a special meaning. A verse in Chapter Two, line 49, quotes Hadit, the energy of the Universe as declaring: “I am unique & conqueror. I am not of the slaves that perish. Be they damned & dead! Amen. (This is of the 4: there is a fifth who is invisible, & therein am I as a babe in an egg.)”

This symbol, Crowley determined, is that of Harpocrates, the Egyptian image of Horus the child. He is seen as the babe in the egg of blue and seated on a lily pad. The Book of the Law was delivered in 1904 as a warning to mankind. The warning was that unless we changed our course, we would bring about a premature death of our planet and consequently, deal with the harsh new Eon of Horus. While portrayed as an innocent child in one instance, the Egyptians also saw Horus as a hawk-headed god of war and vengeance. The warning was that if the human race failed to take care of the planet and shake off its dependence on enslaving religious systems, it would have to deal with the hawk-headed image of Horus. The job of Horus is to assist the human race in making contact with Lucifer, our alien progenitor. Thus the instruction by the mystical wizard to Crowley, via the woman in that New York flat in 1918, was not taken lightly by Crowley. That the world was at war at that time may have made it seem to Crowley that time was running out and that it was his personal duty to make contact with the child. Crowley may well have assumed that Horus would arrive as an alien. This would explain his intense interest in making contact through a magick ritual. Eventually, Crowley succeeded in making contact with the alien figure in his remarkable drawing, which has a strong resemblance to contemporary descriptions of the alien contacts known as the grays. It is believed that Lam was a physical manifestation through a portal created by Crowley’s magick. [\[13\]](#)

In regards to Aleister Crowley and his connection to the alien /UFO phenomena, this is what Matthew Levi Stevens points out, in his short essay from January 2016 entitled Black to Grey Aleister Crowley, Kenneth Grant & Lam: The Workings typically proceeded with Minor acting as a medium, having visions and clairaudient communications, which Crowley would rigorously interrogate for any symbolic meaning, and then interpret. At least one intelligence may even have come through to some level of manifestation: the enigmatic being that has come to be known as LAM. Also at this time in New York, Crowley indulged his recently revived passion for painting, exhibiting a selection of his works in *Greenwich Village under the title of ‘Dead Souls.’ Crowley was a decidedly self-taught artist, and his work is often crude, generally naive, but certainly vivid. One drawing in the show was the portrait of a figure with a large, domed head, looking remarkably like what would become the standard image of the Grey Alien in later UFO lore – except for the eyes, which are fairly narrow slits rather than the more usual reptilian ray-ban look. Crowley also included the drawing as a frontispiece, titled simply ‘The Way’, to an edition of the founder of Theosophy Madame Blavatsky’s enigmatic work, The Voice of Silence, to which he had added a Commentary, which he published the following year, 1919. The caption underneath the picture read: LAM is the Tibetan word for Way or Path, and LAMA is He who Goeth, the specific title of the Gods of Egypt, the Treader of the Path, in Buddhistic phraseology. Its numerical value is 71, the number of this book.*

*Apart from that, there is no further commentary on the picture by Crowley – or anybody else, for that matter – until the picture passes into the hands of Kenneth Grant who was an English occultist and writer who met Aleister Crowley in the last years of The Great Beast’s life, when the ailing and wizened Magus was slowly dying from the cumulative ravages of a lifetime of excess in the somewhat unlikely setting of a guesthouse in Hastings, on the South Coast of England. After corresponding, the young Grant was invited to go and stay with the aged Crowley as a kind of informal secretary-cum- personal assistant. There has been much arguing back-and-forth and bitter wrangling over just how much Grant’s time with the Beast can be counted towards the claim that he was Crowley’s successor, particularly where the vexed matter of the title to his Ordo Templi Orientis is concerned, but that is not really of relevance here. What is of significance is that at some point before his death in 1947, Crowley presented the drawing of LAM – or the Lama as he referred to it, which he said he had drawn from life (!) – to Grant, planting a powerful magickal seed in the young man’s imagination. Drawing on his apprenticeship with Crowley, Grant would go on to form a version of the O.T.O. – which would eventually become known as “The Typhonian Order” to distinguish it from the so-called Caliphate O.T.O., which has incorporated as a copyright and legal entity in the U.S.A. – starting with his New Isis Lodge, which Grant wrote was: . . . evolved by the present writer during the years 1955-1962 . . . for purposes of traffic with the Outer Ones. – Kenneth Grant, Outer Gateways (1990)*

The godfather of Modern Wicca, Gerald Gardner, had been part of Grant's circle in London, as was occult artist Austin Osman Spare and alchemist David Curwen – both of whom had been mentors in their way to Grant – and also Surrealist painter Ithell Colquhoun. Apart from his invaluable personal memoirs of Crowley and Spare, and some fine volumes of occult fiction, Kenneth Grant is probably best known for the nine volumes of his three 'Typhonian Trilogies' written between 1972 and 2002. One of the few interviews ever given by Grant, for the Skoob Occult Review in 1990, includes the following exchange:

Q: What is the purpose of your books?

KG: The main purpose is to prepare people for encounters with unfamiliar states of consciousness.

Q: Do these include extraterrestrial encounters?

KG: Yes, extra-, sub-, and ultra-terrestrial encounters.

Grant has included Crowley's portrait of "The Lama" in a number of his books, referring to him in his Outside the Circles of Time (1980) as an extra-terrestrial and praeterhuman Intelligence and also asserting that: Lam is now known to be a link between the star systems of Sirius and Andromeda. He also points out an interesting resonance with the number 71, which Crowley originally attributed to Lam in 1918:

. . . I note that Jacques Vallee cites an entity calling itself 7171 who claimed to be connected with UFOs. (UFOs: The Psychic Solution, p.83).

Grant also sees meaning in the fact that 1947, "[T]he year of the first massive UFO sightings", was also the year that Aleister Crowley passed from this life . . .

As a result, a Cult of Lam has evolved within the Typhonian Order – which continues since Grant's death under the custodianship of his former right-hand-man, now successor, Michael Staley. Experimental yoga-based methods involving mantra, meditation and visualization have been developed for making contact with Lam, or the Current he represents. Doubtless, the work continues, in hope that at least some of us can be prepared, for as Kenneth Grant stated: If man is able to integrate these new experiences into his psyche he must begin NOW to think in terms at least of an extraterrestrial encounter. If he does this the rest may follow . . . the faculty of intuitive insight may be awakened and aligned with such alien concepts."^[14]

A great analysis by Matthew Levi Stevens, and even if the words of the late Grant about Crowley and Parsons opening a dimensional portal, and probably ushering in the era of the UFO, might seem for most people too good to be true, those who will read The Invisible Master: Secret Chiefs, Unknown Superiors and the puppet masters who pull the strings of Occult Power from The Alien World, and study my past work, in particular, volume 1 of my Confessions; will know this is no joke.

Vadge Moore, Grant, and the Merovingian Bloodline

Years ago, I discovered a rather interesting article written by occultist and musician Vadge Moore, first published in Dagobert's Revenge in 2001. Born in the San Francisco Bay Area in 1967, Vadge Moore was a disciple of the late Kenneth Grant, who developed an early interest in music, and an equally-strong affinity for writing and the occult, a bit like myself. However, Moore is a much darker character than I, drawn to all things Satanic and dangerous since his childhood. His heroes were people like Keith Moon, the drummer from the band The WHO, the AC/DC vocalist Bon Scott, gonzo-journalist Hunter S. Thompson, and of course, the band Kiss, that for some, their true meaning is in the acronym, Knights in Satan's Service. Vadge Moore's internet bio says: Later, a keen attraction to the dark arts was to develop in Vadge, giving birth to a lifelong obsession with the notorious English Magus, Aleister Crowley. Always fascinated with the violent and perverse, as a teenager Vadge became involved with the early '80s hardcore punk movement, which was then growing in influence on the West Coast.

Further on in his bio we also find out his connection with Satanist Boyd Rice, and the esoteric publication, Dagobert's Revenge:

Following his departure from the world of punk-rock, Vadge worked extensively with noise-music pioneer and occult researcher, Boyd Rice on the esoteric occult 'zine Dagobert's Revenge. Vadge contributed a number of articles to Dagobert's Revenge during its half-decade existence and has also provided various webzines with his occult-related work.

I don't know if Vadge Moore, who currently resides nowhere and is presently wandering the Earth, will appreciate the fact that I am inserting his old article in this book, but I find it perfectly suited to understand more about the Typhonian Tradition of the O.T.O., and how is it linked to the Merovingian Mythos, still so popular amongst the dark side of the Illuminati. Remember the words of Brion Gysin, Nothing Is True - Everything Is Permitted and here we go, or even better "Here to go" as my old friend Terry Wilson titled is a tribute to Brion.

Kenneth Grant and the Merovingian Mythos by Vadge Moore

Our work is therefore historically authentic; the rediscovery of the Sumerian Tradition. Aleister Crowley

Lincoln's research have undoubtedly illumined certain phases of an ancient myth-cycle intimately associated with the Typhonian Current. They reveal a possible connection between a historic lineage - the Merovingian - and the Typhonian Tradition. Kenneth Grant

What is the Typhonian Tradition, and how is it linked to the Merovingian/Grail Bloodline and the Priory of Sion as described in Michael Baigent, Henry Lincoln and Richard Leigh's book The Holy Blood and the Holy Grail? According to Kenneth Grant, a leading exponent of the Typhonian Tradition of the Ordo Templi Orientis, this tradition is part of a current of magical force and occult lore, dating back to Sumeria and pre-Dynastic Egypt. Originally known as the Draconian Tradition, it is a magical current "based on initiated knowledge or gnosis of the Fire Snake." The Fire Snake is also known as the Kundalini or the Ophidian Current; the basis of all true initiation.

Who is Typhon? According to Mr. Grant, Typhon is "The feminine aspect of Set; sometimes typified as the Mother of Set in her role of Goddess of the Seven Stars, of which Set is the Eighth." Set is the brother of Osiris in the Egyptian Pantheon. Set, Osiris' dark brother, chopped Osiris up into many pieces, leaving him for dead. Set was also the prototype for Satan. Grant writes: The word Set or Sut, means black.

This indicates not only the generative nature of this god, but also his association with the night-world, Amenta, as being a god of the heavens, Set fell beneath the horizon and was recognized in later mythologies as the Lord of Hell, the Hidden Land. This god is of supreme importance in Crowley's Cult, being not only the name of the primal creative spirit but also the formula for sexual magick.

Set was the “black god”. He was known as “he who is below.” He was banished to the underworld by his “twin” Horus for killing Osiris. The Nephilim were banished to the center of the earth for disobeying God by mating with the daughters of man and teaching them the “forbidden” arts. In this publication, the Nephilim have been identified as the Fathers of the Merovingians. Set was generally considered to be a vile, vicious god baneful to men. But there are enough aspects of this god that link him to the ancient Sumerian myths, the basis of the Merovingian mythos published in this magazine, to show that Set is to be identified with the same gods and characters that make up these Mythos. He may have been considered baneful towards some races, but not the race of the Grail. In E.A. Wallis Budge’s book The Gods of the Egyptians, Set is identified as a personification “of the forces of the waters which were supposed to resist light and order. A number of beasts which dwelt in the water were regarded as symbols of him and of beings wherein he took up his habitation.” We will recall that the Merovingian race was sired by a water beast known as the Quinotaur.

This Quinotaur took the form of a sea-bull. Crowley's personal seal was of a sea goat. Grant, writing of Crowley's Seal of the Beast, says: "The beast is the sea-goat or amphibious monster identical with Cthulhu, the Quinotaure or Bull of the Deep." Grant writes as a footnote; "The waters under the earth; home of the 'ancestors' or subconscious atavisms of the race." Is this a reference to the race of the Grail? Grant, writing on the cross of the four corners says; "The intersection of this surface (horizontal and vertical) represents, therefore, the gateway to another dimension, the waters beneath the earth that mirror in their uncertain depths the heights of space above the earth wherein glow the stars, the unborn or un-fleshed souls of future states of consciousness, or simply life beyond earth. The mortal world spreads east and west and the land of the invisible lies above and below it in the vertical dimensions of height and depths, north and south, Horus and Set." This ties in with The Book of Enoch and the Hosts above and the fallen, banished Nephilim, below. This also reminds us of the twins or brother gods in Sumeria called Enki and Enlil. Enki, the infernal of the two, represents Set and Enlil represents Horus (although in this context Enlil would also be Osiris). In ancient mythologies, names and stories can be switched and one god can also be an attribute of another. It's best to keep this in mind when studying this type of material. Set kills Osiris as Enki kills Enlil. As it has been shown in another article of this publication, Enki is associated with Cain, and Cain was a very bad boy. Enki was an infernal god that has been identified, in this publication, as siring the Merovingian race.

Crowley writes, regarding his Holy Guardian Angel Aiwass, or for want of a better term, his spirit guide; "I now am inclined to believe that Aiwass is not only the God or Devil once held holy in Sumer, and mine own Holy Guardian Angel, but also a man as I am , insofar as he uses a human body to make His Magickal link with mankind..." Aiwass is the "minister" of Hoor-Paar -Kraat who is another aspect of Set. In Crowley's Book of the Law, Aiwass puts Crowley in touch with the gods now in charge of this planet. This is significant as Crowley describes Aiwass as also manifesting as a man, not just a god. This is what we have discovered in this magazine regarding the gods of ancient Sumeria who appeared as gods, men and kings. They seem to straddle the fence of the divine and mortal worlds. Enki has been associated with Set (in Tracy Twyman's article 'The Merovingian Mythos: Its Symbolic Significance, and its Roots in the Ancient Kingdom of Atlantis'), who is also Satan. It is significant that Crowley identified himself as "The Great Beast 666." In one of Grant's glossaries, we read: “Vivo: A corrupt form of OVIZ or Aiwaz, the god worshipped in ancient Sumer and identical with Set or Shaitan.”

Grant, writing of the “eye of the void” of a primal African cult says: “This void was known as Elemi, a name which is said to be incommunicable. It was the equivalent of El or Al , continued in the Draconian Cults as El Shaddai or Al Shaitan, the stellar deity worshipped by the Arabs and the Jews, and by the earliest settlers in Sumer (in Sumeria the god El is also known as Ia) Alemi or Alhim became the Elohim of biblical lore. These gods or cosmic powers poured through the Veil of the Ain - the all-seeing eye - which has its human analog in the ajna chakra, concentrated in the first power zone-Kether.” The Elohim are messengers from high above, bringing “knowledge” down for mankind, similar to the Nephilim. They are also associated with Set, or the Chaldean form of Set, Shaitan.

Writing of the Great Old Ones or Elder Gods from Lovecraftian lore, Grant says, “The letter M, the key vibration of the plane of the Elder Gods, is represented mythologically as the sea-goat, Makaru or as the crocodile, the beast of the waters.” Couldn’t Makaru be a form of Merovee who spawned the Merovingians, and was sired himself from a sea-bull? Tracy Twyman has already written of the connections between Lovecraft’s Necronomicon Mythos, and the Merovingians in her article ‘Dead But Dreaming: The Great Old Ones of Lovecraftian Legend Reinterpreted as Sumerian/Atlantean Kings.’

Now we come to the Qlipthoth. The Qlipthoth are denizens of the back side of the Tree of Life. This backside or dark side, is said to be behind the regular Sephirah of the Qabalah. They are said to be the shells or the husks of the day side of the Tree. But according to Kenneth Grant, they are actually the first, primal manifestation of all things. In terms of Lovecraftian lore, they are the Ancient Ones or Great Old Ones of the Necronomicon. They are the first primal void of Nothing before there was something. They have been considered evil by Qabalists and Occultists for centuries, only because they represent the terrible blackness of the void, and the complete destruction of what we understand as ego, which seems horrific to us. These Qlipthoth reside in what is known as the Tunnels of Set. These Tunnels are behind or beneath the Day Side of the Tree of Life, as the Nephilim reside beneath the earth. As terrifying as these “beings” may seem, Grant says they are here to enlighten us, as the Nephilim were. Why is the abode of these beings called the Tunnels of Set? Grant writes; “Of Set because Set is the Seat of the powers manifest as the Tree of Life.”

This is what is known as the Typhonian Tradition that Kenneth Grant speaks of.

Let's review: Kenneth Grant believes that he is a part of the Typhonian Tradition or Draconian Tradition, that is concerned with the god Set who, like the Nephilim, was banished to live beneath the earth. The Nephilim are believed to have sired the Merovingian Race. Set is a god of the waters and the Merovingian race was sired by a god, the Quinotaur, that also was a beast of the waters. The denizens of the Tunnels of Set, which are behind the Tree of Life, or beneath, have been considered evil and bestial, and are known in the ancient Hebrew texts of the Qabalah as the Qliphoth.

The Qliphoth, according to Grant, are actually of benefit to the initiated in order to take them to another level of initiation. Now here is the kicker: according to E.A. Wallis Budge, “Animals with red or reddish brown hair or skins were, and even red-haired men, were supposed to be especially under the influence of Set.” As is well-known to anyone reading this publication, the Merovingians were notorious for their red hair, and it was believed that this is where they received all of their powers.

Crowley's design of the Chariot card in his Tarot Deck, depicts a Knight (Templar?) holding a disk that represents the Grail. Anyone who has read The Holy Blood and the Holy Grail would know that the Templars were Knights pledged to defend the Merovingian/Grail Bloodline. Grant says, in a footnote; “It should be noted that the Graal-Bearer [represented on the Tarot card] is depicted in amber-colored armor [amber or red, the color associated with the Merovingians]. Amber or Orange appears repeatedly in accounts of UFO sightings.” Crowley, in his Book of Thoth, writes; “The Charioteer is clothed in the amber-colored armor appropriate to the sign. He is throned in the chariot rather than conducting it because the whole system of progression is perfectly balanced. His only function is to bear the Holy Grail.” Grant writes, “The bearer of the Graal [Knights Templar?] depicted on Atu VII [the Tarot card] may, therefore, be identified with the bringer to earth of the Sangraal, or blood royal, the blood which flows in the veins of the Kingly Man extolled by Crowley, although not understood by him in the sense of trans-human Intelligence. Crowley's design for the Graal resembles as closely as may be, for a pre-1947 representation, a shape frequently described in connection with particular types of UFO.” Pre-1947 because, as Grant says, that year was the modern explosion of accounts of UFO “sightings” around the world. I am not partial to the literal belief in UFO's. I believe, as Dr. Carl Jung believed, that these UFO sightings are a product of our unconscious veiling of an ancient human experience. Enough said. This "bringing to earth" of the Sangraal by UFO's is the modern day equivalent of the Nephilim, the Outer Ones, or the Elohim earthling "knowledge" and siring a new race of "kingly" beings for this world. Kingly i.e., the Merovingians. The Merovingian blood is the blood of kings, the kings or gods from ancient Sumeria and beyond.

The Plantard family crest is regarded as the key to the Typhonian/Draconian Current, which is the demonic lineage of the Merovingian bloodline. The Typhonian Current refers to the Dragon lineage of Satan.

In his book Outer Gateways Kenneth Grant writes: "In The Holy Blood and The Holy Grail, the authors reproduce the family crest of Clan Plantard, the contemporary representative of which was, until recently, the Grand Master of the Priore de Sion, an Order which, according to Lincoln, dominated the Order of the Knights Templar and various other highly influential institutions which, at certain periods of history, included the Vatican. The crest which supplies the key to the Current represented by the Merovingian bloodline and the Order of Sion comprises the symbols of the Typhonian line of descent: the two bears, eleven bees, and the fleur de lys. The motto incorporated in the crest reads 'Et in Arcadia ego.' Arcadia=127, which is the number of the Egyptian Goddess Heqt who was typified by the 'lower part of the back, or haunch.' The two bears denote the Mother (Typhon) and her son (Set). The image of the bee pictures the buzzing or humming vibration peculiar to the Outer Ones, or their vehicles. Eleven is the number of Those who are Without, or beyond, the Tree of Life, thus identifying the Outer Ones." The Outer Ones are also the Qliphoth or the Ancient Ones of Lovecraftian lore.

The fact that the Typhonian Tradition and the Merovingian Tradition share the same important symbols seems to be much more than a mere coincidence.

In the Typhonian Tradition, the Bear is the constellation of Ursa Major. The stars must be aligned in a specific way in order for Set to be properly invoked. To the Priory of Sion (the secret, occult organization dedicated to preserving the Merovingian Bloodline), the Bear was an animal of the Goddess Diana. According to Lynn Picknett and Clive Prince, the authors of The Templar Revelation, ...the Merovingian kings, from their founder Merovee to Clovis (who converted to Christianity in 496) were ‘pagan kings of the cult of Diana’. Picknett and Prince got this information from the Dossiers Secrets of the Priory of Sion. The bees, which are a recurring symbol of the Merovingians are, in the Typhonian Tradition, represented frequently as the humming or buzzing sound that occurs before the appearance of the Great Old Ones or “beings” proper to this tradition. Grant writes “The bee, beetle, or crab, is therefore the link between the earliest manifestation of the Typhonian current and its final phases.” Also; “217 is the key number of [Crowley’s] The Book of the Law. 217 is also the number of DBVRH, meaning ‘a bee’ which is the specific symbol of Sekhet, whose name means ‘a bee.’ Sekhet is another aspect of the god Set. There are eleven bees because eleven is the number of Magick and of the Sephirah on the Tree of Life, called Daath, which is the “Gateway” to the backside of the Tree and to the Gods.

Kenneth Grant’s wife Steffi Grant illustrated the cover of her husband’s book Beyond the Mauve Zone, with an image of two bees holding a crystal. As for the fleur-de-lys, in the Typhonian Tradition it represents the ‘kingly man’ that Crowley extols, and the inheritor of the Grail Bloodline. In The Vision and the Voice, Crowley is “conversing” with his Holy Guardian Angel Aiwass, who says: “For I am not appointed to guard thee, but we are of the blood royal, the guardians of the Treasure-house of Wisdom”: the “blood royal,” the Sangraal of the Holy Grail.

Throughout all of Kenneth Grant’s books there are references to ideas, archetypes, and images related to the Sumerians, the Merovingians and especially to the mythos that Tracy Twyman has uncovered in this publication. There are references that I haven’t even mentioned. For instance, the bat wings discovered at Rennes le Chateau that in the Typhonian Tradition represent the inversion of the senses that lead to enlightenment and occult knowledge. I agree with Grant that Henry Lincoln’s research has “illuminated certain phases of an ancient myth-cycle intimately associated with the Typhonian Current.” It seems that the farther down this road we go, the closer we get to the truth. (End of the article by Vadge Moore)

Grant's Magical Revival

Returning to the roots of the Typhonia Tradition in his first book, The Magical Revival, Grant takes a more or less straightforward historical approach. He declares that the Thelemic Current was embodied in the Sexual Magick of Aleister Crowley, and is the latest manifestation of what he calls the Draconian Tradition of Ancient Egypt. It was this that inspired the Tantric sects of India, and Grant intimates that the ultimate origin of all this lies with a matriarchal pre-Dynastic culture in Africa. Now, considering that next to nothing is known about the historical origins of Tantra, (scholars can't even determine if Hindu or Buddhist texts are older), Grant's assertions are about as good as anyone's. Unfortunately, he offers no real support; we are apparently required to accept it as the Gospel Utterance of an Initiated Teacher. The book can certainly not be called scholarly; Grant rarely identifies his sources, even for direct quotes, and when he does, it is often not helpful. He refers often to an unpublished "Initiated Tantric Comment" as substantiating his theories (which mostly seem to deal with the Magical virtues of vaginal secretions,) but we are given no idea as to its authorship or authority. One long quote, referring as it does to modern Western medical practices, makes it clear that this "Comment" is of recent composition, but I see no reason to regard it as more than a reasonably valid interpretation of Tantric ritual. Grant claims it is the One-True-Received-From-On-High doctrine, which sounds like classic B.S.-to-the-third-power, to me. As near as I can figure, Grant takes most of his archaeology from 19th-century sources, some of which were not taken seriously even then. In his search for support, he even treats as legitimate sources, the works of "Inquire Within," a notorious conspiracy theorist and occult-basher of the 1920s!

Grant's theology is rather odd: he identifies the God Set with Hoor-Paar-Kraat and with Aiwass. We are also given to understand that the star Sirius is the source of the Thelemic Current. At one point he tries to connect Thelema with the fiction of the New England horror writer H.P. Lovecraft. Now, as HPL did base most of his works on his dreams, there is a case for "occult inspiration", but the table Grant produces is so superficial and unconvincing as to make one wonder just how familiar he is with either man's work. There is not a lot of Qabalah in this book (in his later work, the alphabet-soup can take up whole chapters,) but there is one real zinger: "Twenty-six (twice thirteen), is the number of Achad Unity." To be fair, this is probably a typo, and it is corrected in the errata sheet of the Skoob edition (but you would think that for a 35-dollar reprint they could afford to correct the actual text, but nooo. . .)

In the later chapter Grant concentrates more on the work of modern Magicians: mostly Crowley of course, but also Frater Achad, Jack Parsons, Dion Fortune and Austin Osman Spare. This is where the book is really useful as Grant actually knew most of them. He was Crowley's secretary in 1944-5 e.v. And his friendship with Spare covered the last decade of the artist-shaman's life. Grant is Spare's executor and is largely responsible for reviving interest in his work, an achievement not to be sneered at. The two chapters on Spare are perhaps the best in the book. In fact, Grant often seems to have a better understanding of Spare's system than of Crowley's, notwithstanding that he claims to be the latter's successor.

Frater ZAX of Pyramid Lodge, once remarked that Grant's virtue was that he is almost the only biographer of Crowley who focused on the man's Magick, rather than on his unorthodox lifestyle. This may be so, but Grant's interpretations seem to miss more often than they hit, and in style, he often reminds one more of A.E. Waite! Most of Crowley's remarks about Waite in the Equinox could just as easily be aimed at Grant. There is even the extensive vocabulary with words such as "praeter-human," "transmundane," "enchiridion," "subserved," "openly-unavowed representatives" (a typo?), "efflux," "objurgations," "discreted," "clepsydral horologue" (my personal favorite,) and "reification" (Grant's favorite.) The list could go on, and will, as we consider his other books. In his Introduction, Grant declares that he has "introduced no blinds, no deliberately misleading statements, or vague allusions to formulae that cannot be shown to be as precise in their action and reaction as their analogues in the more orthodox sciences." If you think this is ironic in view of my comments here, please be assured that you have seen nothing yet! Our subject has not yet begun to perplex.^[15]

Orgasmic secrets of the Illuminati

Central to the works of Grant, and the contemporary wizards of the Western Initiatic System is the practice of sexuality, viewed obviously in a magical perspective. In Ancient Egypt, it was believed that the orgasm was the key to eternal life and that it was intimately connected with the chakra system. This is one of the key beliefs of the Illuminati network that in this day and age has Drunvalo Melchizedek as one of its key New Age figures, and modern representatives.

His website states: "According to Drunvalo he is the spirit assigned from the Galactic Center to be with the humanity from the very moment it was created. Naturally, there are 2 fractions (types of consciousness) opposed to each other in every way imaginable – the good one is called 'The Great

White Brotherhood' (from which is Machiavinda), the bad one is called 'The Great Dark Brotherhood' – the former is evolution (positive, progressive), the latter is devolution (negative, regressive). These two forces tend to balance each other out to allow changes to take place at the perfect time (neither too soon or too late). Our current world is 3D (3rd dimension, space and time, polarity consciousness), but viewed from a higher level (4th+ dimension) all "good and bad guys" form a unity consciousness – merely different aspects of the One Creator working in harmony. That's why in our polarity world 'good' and 'evil' are mere lessons. ^[16]

Drunvalo writes in an online magazine inspired by his writings, called the Spirit of Ma'at:

A chakra is an energy vortex connected to the entire human energy field, and the Universal Heart Chakra is the fifth of thirteen chakras. (There is also a system of eight chakras; in that system, the heart chakra is number four.) The Egyptian system held that the orgasm was intimately connected to this fifth, or Universal Heart Chakra.

First, I will explain the connection to eternal life. Most people in the world are ignorant about what happens to their sexual energy after they have an orgasm. Usually, the energy moves up the spine and out the top of the head directly into the eighth or thirteenth chakra (same chakra, different system). In a few rare cases, the sexual energy is released down the spine into the hidden centre below the feet, the point opposite the one above the head. In either case, the sexual energy — the concentrated life-force energy called prana in Hinduism — is dissipated and lost. It is similar to discharging a battery into a ground wire. It is no longer in the battery and so it is gone forever.

This is what all the world's Tantric systems that I am aware of believe, that orgasm brings one a little closer to death because a person loses his or her life-force energy in the orgasm, and is made weaker. But the Egyptians found long ago that it does not have to be this way. It is for this reason, that the Hindu and Tibetan Tantra systems ask the male to avoid ejaculating. Instead, they speak of these tiny invisible tubes where, when a student learns to control the orgasm and the flow of their sexual energy, the sperm migrates up to the higher centres. Both of these systems, and also the Chinese Taoist Tantra system, are all primarily concerned with the sexual energy flow, sometimes referred to as 'sexual currents'. They are primarily concerned with what happens as the sexual energy is moved before the orgasm, but they have entirely different views of this energy compared to the Egyptians. The Egyptians believed that orgasm is healthy and necessary, including the release of sperm in males, but that the sexual energy currents must be controlled in a deeply esoteric procedure that is unlike any other system. They believed that if this energy is controlled, the human orgasm becomes a source of infinite pranic energy that is not lost. They believe that the entire Mer-Ka-Ba or Lightbody (the field of energy surrounding and interpenetrating the body) benefits from this sexual release. They even believe that under the right conditions the orgasm will directly lead to eternal life and that the ankh is the key. The Egyptian Ankh symbolizes eternal life and eternal life is linked to the breath. The Ankh is also linked to sexual energy. How was 'ankhing' used to enhance consciousness and promote immortality? Essentially, one would use their awareness to move second chakra energy released during orgasm and manipulate it. Normally, this energy moves up the spine, through the top of the head, into the eighth chakra (above the physical body), and disperses outward. The ankhing technique allowed one to harness this energy at the fifth chakra and send it back down into the body where it would stay and revitalize touched energy centres.

The Spirit of Ma'at has an eight-step process describing the how-tos of ankhing that is very clear:

1. The moment you feel the sexual energy about to rise up your spine, take a very deep breath, filling your lungs about 9/10th full, then hold your breath.
2. Allow the sexual energy of the orgasm to come up your spine. But at the moment it reaches the fifth chakra (located just a couple of finger-widths above the sternum), with your willpower you must turn the flow of sexual energy 90 degrees out the back of the body. It will then automatically continue inside the ankh tube. It will slowly turn until it passes exactly through the eighth (or thirteenth) chakra, one hand-length above the head at 90 degrees to the vertical. It will then continue to curve around until it returns to the fifth chakra, where it began, only this time in the front of the body. Even if you don't understand what was just said, it will happen automatically if you get it started out the back of the body at the fifth chakra, and it will automatically come back around to the front of the body and reconnect at the fifth chakra. You just have to make it turn 90 degrees so that it begins.

3. It will often slow down as it approaches its point of origin, the fifth chakra. If you can see the energy, it comes to a sharp point. When it approaches the fifth chakra from the front of the body, there is sometimes a tremendous jolt as it reconnects with this chakra again. All this takes place while you are holding your first breath.
4. The instant the sexual energy reconnects with its source, the fifth chakra, take in the full breath. You had filled your lungs only 9/10th full, so now you fill your lungs as completely as you can.
5. Now exhale very, very slowly. The sexual energy will continue on around the ankh channel as long as you are exhaling. When you reach the bottom of this breath, you will continue to breathe very deeply, but a change happens here.
6. It is here that, if you know the Lightbody work of the Mer-Ka-Ba, you would begin to breathe from the two poles using Mer-Ka-Ba breathing. But if you are like most people and don't know this work, then continue to breathe deeply until you feel the relaxation begin to spread throughout your body.
Then relax your breath at your normal rate. Feel every cell becoming rejuvenated by this life-force energy. Let this energy reach down into the deepest physical levels of your body structure even past the cellular level. Feel how this beautiful energy surrounds your very being and brings health to your body, mind, and heart.
7. Once the relaxation begins, slow your breath down to a normal shallow breathing.
8. If possible, allow yourself to completely relax or even sleep for a while afterward."[\[17\]](#)

Ok, so now we have a good inside view of Drunvalo's philosophy, and his connection to Ma'at, or Maat, the familiar Egyptian form of the goddess of Justice. Let's understand who this figure is for those who think she is the characterization of the fourth Aeon. It was the Aeon of Maat or "MA-ION" that Crowley's student Frater Achad (Charles Stansfeld Jones) later came to advocate as prematurely succeeding that of Horus. Why did he do that? Kenneth Grant and his Illuminati school later confused the issue even further, by suggesting that Maat was the "daughter" complement of Horus, the son, promoting the idea of a sort of "double current" in the Illuminati, in which those two god-forms were coeval. Probably the most interesting and consequential outgrowth of this premise has been the Maatian magick of Nema, a very influential occultist, and writer, best known for her magical writings about the Ma'atian current. Nema went on writing her own inspired scripture, called Liber Pennae Penumbra. A work she allegedly channeled in 1974, fifty years after Crowley's channeled The Book of the Law, and from it, she created an independent body of magical techniques with her own ideas being featured prominently in the writings of the great "Illuminati guru" Kenneth Grant. In 1979, she co-founded the Horus-Maat Lodge. According to Donald Michael Kraig in Review of Maat Magick :

Nema has been one of the most influential occultists of the last quarter century although most occultists have never read her works. What Nema has done is influence those who have been writers and teachers. They, in turn, influenced the rest of us.

The late Kenneth Grant also proposed three prehistorical Aeons, of the Void, of Chaos, and of the Earth, which would have preceded that of Isis. Nema, writing in The Cincinnati Journal of Ceremonial Magick (No. VII) telescoped these three into the "Nameless Aeon," characterized by the Egyptian god Bes. In addition, she added a "Wordless Aeon" to succeed the double Aeon of Horus and Maat, so that Harpocrates as silence would complete the cycle. Thus, the full sequence proposed by Nema is Bes – Isis – Osiris – Horus – Maat – Harpocrates. [\[18\]](#)

We will now learn the secret techniques used by the Illuminati groups to summon the forces of this “Aeon”, that for many researchers, seem to overall, ignore the basis of the Aeonic succession defined by Crowley, originally as the Equinox of the Gods. However, Linda Falorio a disciple of Grant, described by him in a personal communication as “a high-priestess of Typhon, and a methodical one at that!” As synthesized in the words “Take what they give”, use all the techniques of the Illuminati, to encounter oneself in this new Aeonic succession. Falorio, who is well-known in contemporary Illuminati magickal circles, worked with her Magickal partner, Fred Fowler, in reifying paintings of all of the 22 Tunnels of Set, as described by Aleister Crowley in LIBER 231, and later by Kenneth Grant in Nightside of Eden. All this seems to secretly inspire, and guide, people like Drunvalo Melchizedek, who is a Consciousness “celebrity” second to none in the New Age world.

FIG 10 – Drunvalo Melchizedek (Bernard Perona, born 1941)

Linda Falorio: In each encounter in your daily life, take whatever the other gives you. If they are angry, accept that. If they are sad, let that pass into your consciousness. If they are sexually attracted to you, let that into your energy field as well. No matter what your personal reaction might normally be, whether fear, attraction, boredom, repulsion, accept the individual before you without judgment. Absorb their energies into yourself through touching them lightly on the shoulder, take their hand in yours, let essence flow from their eyes into yours. Radiate back to them both love and acceptance. Realize that this has nothing to do with your “personal” reactions, but is the channeling of Babalon as s/he touches the human sphere. Imagine having sex with everyone you encounter.

For Falorio, Whether attractive or not, whether old or young, regardless of gender, and traditional sexual taboos, as an extension of the above exercise. Continue this practice until you are able to imagine such encounters without excitement, repulsion, guilt, shame, or fear. All such emotions having lost their power over you, you will have developed kindness and tolerance for others' differentness, for we love that best which is most like ourselves.

And now let's go over the main points of this fascinating subject analyzed by occultist and Illuminati expert Linda Falorio:

“Dissolve ego-boundaries via the moment of the kiss.

In that ineffable moment, the boundaries between oneself and the other blur. Prolong this moment until you feel an energy and awareness other than "yourself" move through you. Kiss a plant. Kiss an inanimate object, such as a stone, a car, a pencil, your athamé. Kiss an animal. Kiss another human being. In so doing, you will for that moment of the kiss, merge your interior essences and learn something of the being of the other. Be warned that the other in turn will have taken away a part of you as well.

The mirror: trading places.

Using your imagination, stare into the eyes of another person until you have “become” that person, looking back at yourself who has thus become "the other". This can be very intense, even unsettling for both parties. When successful there is a flash of union with the other that is a flow of pure universal love, a reaching out and identification with them, as all love is union with that which we desire, that which we would absorb into ourselves. For the adventurous: try this with someone you don't like or someone with whom you are angry.

Mirror, mirror.

Gaze at your reflection in a mirror until it is no longer familiar to you until the face has become that of the other gazing back. Radiate kindness to that other in the mirror, give it your acceptance, let your love flow out to it and then return as it is again reflected back to you.

Magickal Monogamy.

When we seek the muse of inspiration via union with the other, we encounter this difficulty: the muse lies within us, not the other. No individual can, therefore, give us what we do not already possess within ourselves. Though, we may find in that first thrill of a new lover the spark which ignites the elusive inspiration which we seek—at least temporarily.

Yet, if one persists in Tantric practice with one given individual, there is a deepening of power as masks are shed. Rather than becoming familiar and boring, there is a point at which the lover becomes totally mysterious, totally OTHER — and thus a transcendent channel of creative magickal force.

ORGASM MAGICKS:

Orgasm is energy. Voluntary rhythmic movements of body and breath build energy patterns, inducing deep primal responses in body and psyche. At the moment of orgasm, the sense of personal "I" enlarges its boundaries, merging with the lifestream of the universe, the mind, and body aglow with a thousand pinpricks of dancing energy and light. Orgasm creates a gate to other dimensions. Where the ordinary person merely loses consciousness of self, falling happily asleep, the Tantric adept rides the stream of orgasmic discharge into astral worlds, where s/he accesses creative realities where the power to will a thing is enough to make it so.

Breathing Orgasm.

In your temple or shrine room, establish a breathing rhythm. Visualize the life force around you as brilliant dancing points of light. Breathe this light into your body; allow yourself to experience the surrounding ocean of vibrating energy in which we constantly swim, and from which we derive our being. As the breathing rhythm becomes established, you will move deeper and deeper into a meditative state; your consciousness will calm, becoming lucid and clear. Experiment with each of the following practices until distinct physical sensations come through:

Imagine that you are breathing in and out not through your nose or mouth, but through the bones of your legs, breathe through the bones of your arms. Breathe through the top of your skull, continuing until your mind expands, opening to the universe. Breathe through the pores of your skin, until your body feels cleansed, entirely alive and open to sensation. Breathe energy up from the base of your spine to the top of your skull. Breathe energy back down from your head to the base of your spine, your body becoming charged with energy and light as you breathe the energy current up and down your spine. Breathe energy up and out through the top of your head, then down and around your body, appearing as the brilliant blue of your protective aura, growing into the bright blue of the circle that encloses you within your sacred space, a circle that becomes brighter, more vital with each breath. Breathe through the seven vital centers of the chakras each, in turn, awakening them to vibrate with living light.

Body Orgasm: A Tree of Night Tantra.

In communion with the Angel of your Higher Self, bring yourself to orgasm, without anxiety, without guilt. Record your visions.

Orgasm through the base of the spine — Malkuth. This gives the power of tantric energy exchange; the power of distilling the transforming elixir as the semiochemicals of the sexual kalas pour forth from your body, and the Silver Rain of Nuit falls down from the stars.

Orgasm through the center below the navel — The Knot of Brahma. This gives personal power, the experience of Ch'i as tentacles of light radiating from your Center, reaching out to objects of attention and desire. Here is the power to “see” yourself and other humans as glowing luminous eggs of light, interconnected nodes, vortices of sentience, throbbing with the rhythm of life.

Orgasm through the navel — Yesod. This gives powers of fascination and enchantment, of imagination kindled by desire; the power to create illusions, to create one's own universe —be it heaven, or, be it hell. Here is power to experience the “juiciness” of life, its richness, and the sensuousness inherent in all that flows: emotions, rivers, blood.

Orgasm through the diaphragm — Veil of Paroketh/Knot of Vishnu. This gives the power of speech in silence; the power of invisibility; the power of the shroud. Here too is power to enter outer dimensions via the cosmological Black Hole of interstellar space, matter collapsed upon itself by the power of internal attraction.

Orgasm through the compassionate heart — Tiphareth/The Crossroads. This gives the power of invisibility, the power of entering another's body, heart, and mind, the power to experience the reality of Self as nothing more than an Ego-less Void.

Orgasm through the throat area — Knot of Shiva/Daäth — The entrance to “Universe B” and the Tunnels of Set. This gives the power of the shaman, the power of shape-shifting, the power of cosmic transmutation of the primal cell. Here is the power to touch and experience the combined male-female/female-male existent as a nascent possibility within one's own body of light. Here too is knowledge of past-present-future as existent in the Now.

Orgasm through the third eye — Twin-petalled Binah/Chokmah at the center of the brow. This gives the power to enter the Dream Time; power to leave the body at will; power to externalize, objectify, and universalize one's internal, subjective, and highly personal conception of reality. Here too is power to utter the “birth words” of Master of the Temple.

Orgasm through the crown of the head — Kether/Thousand-petalled Sarasrara Chakra —raising kundalini up the spine, allowing consciousness to pour out through the top of the skull into the exploding universe, the ever-expanding shower of stars. Experience the light and energy of the Stars above as a source of inspiration and spiritual sustenance, the seeding of our race. Orgasm here brings the power of trans-dimensional, interstellar time-travel. Orgasm through every pore of your body, experiencing the interconnecting points of singing light that cover the living flesh. Feel these vibrating nadis of the subtle body, tiny pricklings of light that are the blessings of the kalas of the stars as they rain down from transplutonian dimensions.

Feel the fireworks as they impinge upon your body, see in them the image of the universe alive with whirling, pulsing many-colored stars. Orgasm here brings the power of calling the Great Old Ones, timeless travelers, the gods who are ever-returning, spiraling from past and future into an eternally unfolding now.

Earth and Sky Orgasm.

Breathe in Sun, Moon, and Stars. Reaching up to them, let their energy flow through you. Experience their benediction as a prolonged kiss. Placing hands upon the earth (if indoors, floor, yet visualizing earth), send streaming orgasmic energy into the all-accepting body of the Earth. Experience the blessing of Hir all-embracing love as a profound opening of the heart into stillness, silence, peace.”^[19]

This is simply a possibility to understand further the various components of the Western Initiatic System, and what we define as the Illuminati. Let's also remember that Grant's images of the Great Old Ones mentioned by Linda Falorio at the end of this short “orgasmic essay”, closely resemble the traditional big-headed, tiny-bodied aliens envisioned by Hollywood producers. However, the Great Old Ones first appear as a fictional species created by H. P. Lovecraft, which made their first appearance in the 1936 novel, At the Mountains of Madness. Additional references to the so-called “Old Ones” appear in Lovecraft's short stories The Dreams in the Witch-House (written after Mountains, but published beforehand in 1933) and The Shadow Out of Time.

As David Livingstone writes in his interesting expose, *Transhumanism: The History of a Dangerous Idea: The Great Old Ones formed a cult in dark places all over the world, until the time when the great priest Cthulhu, from his dark house in the mighty city of R'lyeh under the waters, should rise and bring the earth again beneath his sway. Someday he would call, when the stars were ready, and the secret cult would always be waiting to liberate him. At the time, according to Lovecraft, in his diabolical pessimism:...free and wild and beyond good and evil, with laws and morals thrown aside and all men shouting and killing and reveling in joy. Then the liberated Old Ones would teach them new ways to shout and kill and revel and enjoy themselves, and all the Earth would scream with a holocaust of ecstasy and freedom. Lovecraft derived his notion of extra-terrestrial visitors from his reading of both George Fort's The Book of the Damned and Scott-Elliott's compilation volume The Story of Atlantis and Lost Lemuria (1925). [\[20\]](#)*

For Livingstone, although Lovecraft referred to Theosophical material as “crap,” he “drew inspiration from The Book of Dzyan, which formed the basis of Blavatsky's The Secret Doctrine, in developing the Cthulhu Mythos' own account of pre-human or occult texts.

Blavatsky claimed to have discovered The Book of Dzyan, written in the language of Senzar in Tibet, whereas Livingstone tells us in his book, it was guarded by an Occult Brotherhood. Lovecraft declared that the Great Old Ones “antedate the earth,” in The Diary of Alonzo Typer, in which he transformed Theosophy's Venusians into aliens who flew across the solar system in spaceships to “civilize” planet Earth. Lovecraft's The Great Old Ones equate with The Great Old Ones of the Night Time, a phrase which occurs in rituals of the Golden Dawn. Colin Low has suggested that Lovecraft's wife, Sonia Greene, had had an affair with Aleister Crowley months before she met Lovecraft, to whom she revealed the idea of the Necronomicon, which she would have learned from Crowley. [\[21\]](#)

grimoire mentioned in Lovecraft's stories. It was supposedly written by the "Mad Arab" called Abdul Alhazrad, who worshipped the Lovecraftian entities Yog-Sothoth and Cthulhu. Alhazred was born in Yemen, a country with historically a strong Jewish and Kabbalistic community. Alhazred is said to have visited the ruins of Babylon, the "subterranean secrets" of Memphis, and discovered the "nameless city" below Irem in the Empty Quarter of Arabia, living his last years in Damascus, before his death in 738 AD. Necronomicon was translated into Greek and Latin, and despite attempts at its suppression, was finally acquired by John Dee. According to The History of the Necronomicon, the very act of studying the text is inherently dangerous, as those who attempt to master its arcane knowledge generally meet terrible ends. Crowley's disciple Kenneth Grant, suggested in his book The Magical Revival (1972) that there was an unconscious connection between Crowley and Lovecraft. He thought they both drew on the same occult forces—Crowley through magic and Lovecraft through the dreams which inspired his stories and the Necronomicon. Grant claimed that the Necronomicon existed as an astral book as part of the Akashic records and could be accessed through ritual magic or in dreams." [\[22\]](#)

Now let's move on to analyze the possibility of contact with extradimensional entities through sexual magick. There are a number of ways the seeker in the Illuminati can attain and maintain contact with entities in other dimensions, realms, and planes of existence; and such secrets are usually the most difficult to obtain for the uninitiated.

Illuminati secret cultivation and trafficking with Yidams

Through the aids of sexual magic and shamanism, we find two efficient portals where the Illuminati sorcerers operate. Sexual magic should be considered more as a technique, than a procedure belonging to tantrism, since sexual magic is found within the mysteries of the gnostics, paganist circles, among the devotees of the true catholic church and a multitude of other branches of knowledge. Through the work of Theodor Reuss and Aleister Crowley in the West, the use of sexual techniques in the Great Work has received a somewhat dubious reputation, much due to the very tone of language the lectures in the VIII°, IX° and XI° degrees of the Ordo Templi Orientis which were put into writing by Baphomet and circulated amongst the handful of high initiated in this order and made public by Francis X. King in the 1973 publication of The Secret Rituals of the O.T.O. In these lectures the gnostic and old-Christian mode for use of sexual substances and the energy evoked through it are presented, but little differs from the actual aim and technique used among the saddhus and other Tantrik initiated in the more than two-thousand years before the coming of the Christ in his form as Jeshua ben Joseff, who is said by the Illuminati to be a follower of such practices.

The sexual magic herein presented is mainly focused on how a certain Master Azoth, a high-level representative in today's Illuminati circles, interprets the work of the O.T.O. XI° degree. In the Order of the Oriental Templars, this degree was deemed to use for the homosexual current in nature. For Master Azoth, a past disciple of Michael Bertiaux, Kenneth Grant, and other luminaries of sexual magick, this is not totally correct. All forms of intercourse in the flesh, between any sexes, is considered an IX° degree working. When you turn the degree from 9 into 11, it becomes one more than the number of divine points and brings the whole act one degree higher. Just as an act of sexual magic between two humans will result in the procreation of the One – completing the perfection. One over is an abomination since it captures the idea of fornicating with spirits.

This is considered dangerous, due to the likely experiences of succubi and incubi-phenomena and not to mention the danger of vampirism. Still, this is an important aspect in this work undertaken by the darkest side of the Illuminati where Master Azoth, known to the profane world as Nicholaj de Mattos Frisvold, a native of Norway and resident of Brazil since 2003, still operates . [\[23\]](#)

The work of the IX° is a procreative work, the XI° is not. In use, it resembles the auto-erotic techniques of the VIII°, namely magical masturbation, but in this context, the mass is put in reverse motion and quite surprising results could occur. The Illuminati, when working in this field of magick choose two symbolic weapons; the trident and the vajra. The trident is a protective symbol, but it is a lot more than that. It is the very fire of the soul, spirit and the body combined, as it is leaping forth from the flames of fornication. The vajra is supposed to be our defensive shield, the lustral fire that is connected to the divine braze and the breath of the thunder as it is seen amongst the eyes and wings of godhood.

and early 2000s in his own Illuminati lodges and defined as the “Supreme Occult Agency of Change”, is a technique widely worked in various Illuminati orders under a multitude of names. Whether the name it is familiar to you, we will in this lesson work it according to the theory of Master Azoth’s definition of the secrets of XI°. The technique itself is fairly easy since it is based upon internal manipulation of a god-form that can be projected, thus becoming an external form and therefore is the base for the succubi and incubi phenomena. This state is recognized by its highly intoxicated state of divine overflowing and can result in the Illuminati seeker becoming the oracle and further, it can lead to an unhealthy obsession.

First, the Illuminati occult seeker should invoke the god-form desired. Sit, stand or position yourself in a form of Asana that resembles the deity. At this stage, you should use any bodily possibility, limbs, and facial movements – whatever to assume the god-form. Vibrate the name of the deity in a slow, rhythmic manner. Try to pronounce the name with both the inward breathing and the exhalation. At the same time, have a fixed image of the deity in your mind’s eye. For each exhalation imagine that the deity grows larger and larger and its luminosity and complexity becomes more and more vivid.

When the image begins to fill you completely, for Master Azoth at this point you should start to masturbate. Ok, don’t be shocked, remember, this is the Illuminati, not the Boy Scouts. When climaxing the Illuminati seeker visualizes the orgasmic flood turning inwards, meaning inside him, and exploding rapidly through his being that has developed this orgasmic energy that can’t be wasted. The seeker allows this rush to give the demon/deity life inside of his body, basically facilitating the willing possession and manipulation by a demon, offering his mind to the invoked extradimensional being, or deity, as the Illuminati like to call them. He explores the raised forcefield and uses this force to allow the entity to use his own flesh as he desires. The field raised by giving life to an invoked being in this manner has proven to be an extremely highly charged environment for occult inspiration, so the practitioner willingly uses the magnetism manifesting in this field. The effect will disintegrate after 20-30 minutes and the internal manipulation eventually will begin to fade.

However, if the seeker still feels awkward or ruled by this interdimensional alien being two hours after the ritual is over, Master Azoth teaches in his secret writings to go to sleep for a short period of time or perform a banishing. Banishing spells are spells made to prevent these beings from returning inside you. When this technique is mastered the Illuminati seeker, instead of building, “the deity within” performs the act of Externalizing, that is to project the image given life and subtlety in the inner to assume a form in the outer. This is simply done by projecting the image of the invoked deity out from the ajna-chakra at the first seconds of orgasm. Ajna or third-eye chakra, is, by the way, the sixth primary chakra in the body according to Hindu tradition also known as the inner eye a mystical and esoteric concept referring to a speculative invisible eye which can provide perception beyond ordinary sight. Master Azoth writes in his notes: “Keep your eyes closed as this happens and keep focused that the being has been projected outwards and will now appear in front of you in the form you have invoked it into. As this belief is firm in your mind, open your eyes slowly and notice your surroundings and all its oddity. Further exploration in this field can be performed by using masks and the assumption of animal-forms.”

Animal-forms are an important aspect of the magical training of the Illuminati and especially within the arcana of Bön, a Tibetan religion popular amongst the dark side of the Illuminati, which self-identifies as distinct from Tibetan Buddhism, where shamanistic elements are evident. The word Bön itself means “Invocation”. In the 7th Century, Buddhism arrived in Tibet and tried to discredit Bon practices. But in the end, they merged and to some extent influenced each other. Followers of Bön are called Bonpo. I am lucky enough to have been given as a gift many years ago in Moscow an old mask of the ancient Bon animist bird spirit, Khyung that can be used for the procedure of raising the animal consciousness within.

This is pretty much the same as when you work with gods and goddesses in other occult traditions working sexual magick. But this can also be done without using the orgasm as such. Master Azoth taught me that in the first stages it might be a better idea to take on the animal-form chosen by firstly reading a bit about the habits of the chosen animal and its special features and characteristics. When the Bonpo Illuminati assumes the animal form he places himself in his temple and slowly builds up the consciousness that he is now this or that animal, allowing the human side of himself to fade out into naught. He uses whatever help he can obtain to attain this state.

Sounds, walking around on the ground using his hands, masks, fur, whatever he feels is appropriate to enter the part. And there is absolutely no reason for him to feel stupid performing this procedure as for the Illuminati imitation will eventually bring you to realization.... There are also sexual procedures to use within this arcana of animal and insectoid forms that serves for so-called “qlipphotic workings”. Remember, however, that alien qlipphotic forces are by definition, and by method, of vampiric evocation that requires life force or energy to manifest in our dimension, and they often require the blood or the semen of the magician himself during the operation to fully manifest. When the animal-form is successfully achieved the Illuminati seeker will apply the traditional visualization of a deserted landscape with trees and sand where he or she will find a secret passage to the underworld. Passing down into the Underworld the Illuminati seeker must have a clear reason for doing such.

If you take on the form of, for instance, a fox to transgress to the lower realms, you must have a purpose with your journey. Master Azoth once told me that you need to declare this intention at the beginning of this ritual. For example, the search for a guide, a deity, oracular rites, healing-formulas, power objects whatever. But you should always have a reason for doing this. So remember, there is a secret method used by the occult and the darkest side of the Illuminati that includes the assumption of animal-forms that are beings also given sexual food for the sake of fornication with the gods in the shape of an animal.

Confused? Well, this practice is extremely dangerous and will bring forth dangerous mutant-weregods to the idiots who try it without being prepared. If such methods are applied, the Illuminati seeker should have a very good reason for doing such unless he or she will have constructed an extradimensional being on the astral that will evolve rapidly efficient skills for vampirism and unhealthy intoxication of the Illuminati seeker’s nervous system and mental layers. The succubi/incubi effect in the externalization of the god-form should be sufficient. Further, when this procedure is mastered to such a degree that you know that the deity is there you can perform different sexual acts with the entity. But for the Illuminati, the important point is apparently the consumption of the elixir that the extradimensional being produce in this joining of man and alien god, which is a very potent eucharist indeed.

The last stage in this formulae is achieved when the deity is clearly (by sight or notion) skin to skin with the Illuminati seeker and the orgasm is produced from the point of the yab-yum position with the deity, that as we know represents the primordial union of wisdom and compassion, and is usually depicted as a male deity in union with his female consort. For the Master Azoth in this position, one should seek to join linga-yoni-wise but remember that all these gods addressed by the Illuminati are also androgynous in nature. There is also another aspect of the tantrik shamanism of Bön that is worked by the Illuminati during their occult training. That is the cultivation of the dream state. This is perhaps a safer ally to work within, on the other hand, maybe not.

We will explore shortly how we can cultivate trafficking abilities within the dream state and also explore the technique known as Karezza, which has proved enormously efficient and enormously obsessive for some Illuminati groups like The Esoteric Fraternity, known initially as Genii of Nations, Knowledge, and Religions or G.N.K.R., and later as Order of Melchizidek, that I will investigate further in The Invisible Master.

Karezza is an old tantrik technique adopted by many practitioners of the western occult mysteries for producing vividness of external visualization and obtaining contact with God. Again, we speak about a pretty simple technique which produces the most infernal results. Karezza was formally introduced to the West by the adept Thomas Lake Harris, and the procedure consists of performing masturbation focused upon a chosen sigil, form or image without allowing the masturbation to climax into orgasm.

You build the electric tension over and over again, continually focusing upon the sigil or form, allowing this sexual exhaustion to end in sleep. This will bring forth a most peculiar process where the building up of the magnetic radioactivity will seek its fulfillment in the Dream state. Through this Illuminati technique, you will have applied a tremendous invocation of the desired force that will hunt you down in the dreamlands so beware of trying this out. Because in this state the desired form will be drawn to the massive electrical forcefield built up around the astral of the Illuminati seeker and due to the law of esoteric magnetism it will seek congress with you. For the success in producing an occult coitus with this form, the sigil of concentration must be imprinted on the being when it comes down upon you; if not, this procedure will not produce any desirable occult results. Pay attention that this formulae is very close to the true mechanisms of fornication with succubi and incubi and should be proceeded with great care. I.e. you should be absolutely sure about why you are performing this ritual! Also important to mention, some people have a naturally higher level of natural sexual electricity and are more prone for instant encounters with these beings, thus able to bring them forth into mental and physical planes faster. This is especially true for those who have a heavy water nature, and exploiting fiery nature. Let us take a look at two separate cases to illustrate the potency, beneficial aspect and the dangerous aspect of these kinds of workings.

Due to Bhakti-yoga, the Master Azoth incorporated Karezza to bring a deity closer to his ontological sphere. This initially resulted in an obsession for Master Azoth, but eventually turned into what he described as “very desirable results.” After approximately 40 days of traditional bhakta-yoga, Karezza was introduced by forming a sigil of the deity’s name. After one night nothing happened, except for a horrible awakening where Azoth felt drained of all energy. Dizziness and small convulsions followed during the day. The bhakta-procedures were still followed – four times this day. Upon going to bed, he again performed Karezza. This time something happened. The image of a past lover of his appeared in the dream and they had coitus. Upon awakening, Azoth felt weird and still, the dizziness continued.

He realized that the fault he had committed was not to hold the sigil firm in mind upon sleeping and neither had he resumed the sigil when the form of this past lover appeared. This day he again performed the bhakta-sequences four times, but the 1st and 2nd were VIII-degree workings, in an attempt to attract the deity through a firmly radioactive sphere. Upon going to bed, he decided to sleep in the temple, again performing Karezza until sleep carried him away.

This night, the past lover came again, but this time the sigil was kept vivid, also in this state so he burned the sigil in the brow and between the breasts of this form whereupon she shed her skin and appeared as a fierce, beautiful black female. They fornicated, while Azoth focused on imprinting the sigil all over her body – and especially into her eyes. Upon awakening, his belly was covered with semen and the sheet he had brought into the temple was thrown into a corner of the room. Soft spots on his body – like invisible bruises could be felt in the groin and all around the chest. Anahata-chakra and Svadhisthana-chakra were clearly infected by something. Later on that day he experienced a violent obsessive, energized flow of energy and his breathing followed strange patterns, indicating that Visuddha and Ajna-chakra were set into play. The Karezza-procedure continued for another week with quite similar results until Azoth deemed it unhealthy to carry on any longer, due to the heavy influx of obsessive elements in his character and life. It took time before the solidity of the encounters at night disintegrated, but he was left with an immensely important spiritual guide, that has guided his evil path ever since...

There is another story about a very potent Illuminati sorceress known to Master Azoth. A natural born witch with high sexual radioactivity. A Leo-woman with moon in Cancer. She performed Karezza once and received immediate results of a dangerous nature. Firstly, she did not have a clear idea of what or why she wanted to call forth something. Secondly, she had no sigil for her intention or for the being. She simply made herself ready for rape by whatever may come around. What happened was that she woke up during the night in a violent way feeling that she had something inside of her. When opening her eyes, she immediately noticed the shadow of a beast on the wall – on top of her! She became scared and started to scream only to receive flashes of a gleaming demon fucking her to pieces. She fainted in agony awoke later that night telling herself that this was an evil dream.

But the blood traces from her yoni and the odd marks on her shoulders and breasts told another story. You might think that these encounters are too fantastic to be real, but these are first-hand encounters that were written down by Master Azoth and given to me during my time in Oslo (Norway) for verification and study. The Leo-woman was Master Azoth's assistant for a short period of time when they worked with quite dark sexual magic. Needless to say, she turned her back to magic due to this encounter. She also indulged in self-destructive sexual behavior for an extended period of time. This example illustrates several important matters, but most of all it tells that this procedure is a risky endeavor, even for the most skilled of Illuminati, and shows how efficient these techniques are for an atavistic resurgence. In other words, this is a sexo-shamanistic technique used by the occult side of the Illuminati.

But for now, let's concentrate on the dream state and how to cultivate lucid dreaming. Dream-Yoga is both a shamanistic practice and it is also a Yoga in its own right. The procedure is simple, but the degree of patience and discipline needed might turn out to be a too strong a demand for those weak of structure and discipline. When once cultivated, this faculty, or siddhi, will never be lost. Once you have accumulated this learning into your body and mind it will never be lost. When not concentrated on it will stay dormant, when concentrated on - it will come back into the waters of the time-lines.

Never is a luminous being so fluid as when he or she is in the dream state. This state carries remnants of the spheres evoked through sorcery when the sorcerer is possessed, inspired or fulfilled by some spirit. You then enter into the Threshold-kingdom where your reason must die and the Naught shall remain and endure until the end. The most Holy Lama Namkai Norbu gives very good advice that is often overlooked by westerners in their practices with these streams of power: “In the Dzogchen school, there is the constant advice from a teacher to student that one must not be attached to experience for its own sake. Western approaches also encourage a systematic analysis of the content of dreams, whereas Dzogchen teachers encourage practitioners not to dwell upon dream phenomena.” [\[24\]](#)

We are of the same opinion as the Dzogchen-school of Buddhist teachings, you should, by all means, preserve the fluidity.

Through dreams all is possible. Through dreams access to all lines of time are possible. When this practice has been cultivated to perfection, the entering of these states are for a few chosen Masters open at all time to these invisible forces, through meditation. The constant access to the realms of dream is sometimes called by shamans to “see”. This signifies that some layers of this vast plane are dawning upon the Illuminati sorcerer so he or she is able to “see” the total picture of their surroundings. We will not concern ourselves with this issue yet because it will arise as a natural consequence for those with this disposition. But how is awareness in dreams cultivated? As earlier mentioned, it is fairly easy. First, you will find something to concentrate on, a syllable, a sign, form, point.

Something that is easy to hold on to. You should not use complicated symbols, then your mind will wander around in contemplative porridge, disturbing the free flow towards the peak of dream awareness. When you go to bed you should be calm and quiet, no unbalance in the three gunas central to the philosophy of Yoga, should be hidden from you and you should focus your mind on your chosen symbol for ten minutes or so. Breathing should slow down a bit during these ten minutes. When you feel drowsy you should close your eyes and still maintain the image of your chosen symbol in your mind’s eye and fall asleep with this firmly fixed.

When you sense that you are about to slide into the dream-state tell yourself that this symbol will keep you alert and aware and keep on concentrating on the symbol. When you have entered the dream-state, it is truly a peculiar condition. All lucid dreaming and dream-control have the features common to extremely vivid dreams. You have had them yourself – dreams so intense that you use a few moments telling yourself that this was just a dream.... The truth is that a dream is never just a dream, it is a sacred space of multidimensional possibilities.

The dream state is a common ground for the existence of angels and men, demons and elementals alike. The rewards for obtaining lucidity are so profane that the practice itself has led some Illuminati neophytes into obsession and complete craziness. When you are in the dream state, you should try to perform some fantastic acts of flying, jumping and divining only if you feel confident. The sensations are incredible but remember that after this state is cultivated you will have prepared a gateway that is easy to access from both sides, opening yourself to demonic possession, and possible madness, so it should never be attempted by anyone without necessary training by a true Master. My own experience with the teachings of Master Azoth in my late 20's and early 30's while I was in Norway was illuminating, but also very scary at times. Certain things happened that could have killed me, and truly made me realize the power of evil nurtured by this adept of the dark arts once based in Oslo. Magick that is mainly used to cause harm, control, or even death to the victim, is definitely not my thing, but unfortunately, it is something I had to learn before I could fight it.

A few words of concern in closing, again from the wisdom of Namkai Norbu: *“When the State of dreaming has dawned, do not lie in ignorance like a corpse, Enter the natural sphere of unwavering attentiveness.
Recognize your dreams and transform illusion into luminosity.
Do not sleep like an animal.
Do the practice which mixes sleep and reality.”* [\[25\]](#)

Chapter Three

Is there a good side to Sex Magic and Alchemy?

The “strange” teachings of a Rabbi

Rabbi Kabbalist Joseph ben Abraham Gikatilla (1248 – after 1305) (Hebrew: יוסף בן אברהם ג'יקטיליה, Spanish: Chiquitilla, “the very little one”), was a Spanish student of Abraham Abulafia, who wrote at the end of the 13th century, a letter on holiness, also known as the relationship of man with his woman that had a fair bit of notoriety among the Jews. This letter, which figuratively shows him answering a difficult question from a disciple, teaches the method through which a man can control his sexual impulses and direct them to heaven regarding the act of coitus with his wife, in order to procreate children worthy of Yahweh (YHVH). According to Gikatilla, “YHVH” is the only name which represents the substance of God; the other names are merely predicates of the divine attributes. “YHVH” stands for God as He is, while “Elohim” denotes God as the creative power.

In reality, this secret practice described by Rabbi Gikatilla describes an important secret of Illuminati sexual magic, as we will see. The letter consists of seven chapters divided like the arms of the Menorah, the sacred candlestick of the Jews, also used in Freemasonry. The author undertakes the difficult task of demonstrating that the sexual act, and its physical organs, are not impure things belonging to a lower demonic world but, and he does this on the authority of examples and canonical verses of the Jewish tradition, they are the direct expression of the creative will of God (Yahweh), and that it is only the mental attitude of man who makes it impure and vile. In this regard, he writes that the sexual act must be “sanctified” through five material fulfillment. He, therefore, blames fellow Jewish philosopher Moses Maimonides, who had expressed himself with such prejudice, and the philosopher pagan Aristotle, who he defines – while still drawing a great deal of knowledge from his doctrines – as “an impure Greek”, “a cursed Greek” and “Greek Belial”. He also argues that the character that every man assumes, is not derived from the stars, zodiacal constellations, and the disposition of the planets, like some Illuminati mystery schools state, even today, but instead from the particular animic composition of the male sperm at the moment of conception: Know that the matter and nature of man make it possible that he is good or bad with regard to his temperament on the basis of that drop from which he was conceived; It follows that the coitus of a man is responsible for the sanctification of Yahweh or of his desecration, according to the children he will put to the world.

After explaining that the biblical term “knowing” in relation to the sexual act, is not an understatement, but the significance of the fulfillment of an act that loses all animalistic instincts to become a creation similar to the actions of God, he then reveals the fundamental secret: When the seed drop is emitted into holiness and purity, it comes directly from the seat of knowledge and discernment that is the brain.

This means that when you join sexually with a woman, not allowing yourself to be carried away by her beauty, but keeping the mind firmly fixed towards the higher realities, we join in all effects with the Shekhinah – the manifestation of Yahweh so dear to the Illuminati and the Rosicrucians – and with divine presence of God the soul of the future child is created: Keep this secret and do not reveal it to anyone, except to those who are worthy, because you now understand the secret of the elevation of the right of sexual intercourse.

This is one of the greatest secrets of the Illuminati and is considered the secret of the Cherubim as it was symbolized within the Temple of Jerusalem. There is, however, a broader secret of sexual magic that does not have as its ultimate goal; procreation:

All that we have here in this statement refers to the secret of the organization of the structures of the world and its edification, according to the image of males and females, based on the secret of the receiver and the diffuser, and the human couple is seen as a possible protagonist along an ascending and descending scale that is the great chain of beings.

Consequently, the coitus between man and woman if done following these instructions, is considered one of the biggest secrets of the illuminated elite and their families, and also the key to the correct edification of the ruling class, and of course, their secret to maintaining domination and worldly power, generation after generation. On the contrary, when man distracts his mind from the higher realities becoming the prey of his more material volitions, his sperm is apparently “putrid” in the eyes of the deity, and his children will simply be born as slaves of the Matrix, and nothing more. Rabbi Joseph Ben Abraham Gikatilla then illustrates another of the secret ways to “sanctify the sexual union”, it is the precept to join with the woman exclusively on Saturday, the Lord's Day for the Jews. This is not only not to waste an essence that in his eyes is not inexhaustible and whose dissipation might lead to disease and premature death, but also because the Sabbath is in analogy with the power of Yahweh:

The reason why sexual union on the night of the Sabbath [exactly" near the last half of the night "] is that this is the foundation of the World , the reflection of the World of Souls (...).

Moreover, we must approximate the relationship in conditions of perfect physiological harmony, and with great sensitivity towards the woman, who must not be taken against her will, and not while sleeping, but cleverly enticed with both tender embraces and spiritual discourses. Well, I know that most people in contemporary society reading such suggestions might find them funny, however, Rabbi Gikatilla also gives his students, what we can consider a modern kind of teaching, that will find most women today agreeing with him. He surprisingly states, in fact ,that man must not be in a hurry to conclude his sexual intercourse, and must make sure that the woman “to ejaculate first” because, as it is written in Leviticus, only if she has the orgasm before, one can conceive a male son.

This must be shocking news for many, remember that even today, the ever-elusive female orgasm is still a mystery for the majority of people out there, and “its function is unclear,” wrote Mihaela Pavlicev recently, a researcher at Cincinnati Children's Hospital Medical Center, working on this “ancient mystery” with Gunter Wagner, a professor of ecology and evolutionary biology at Yale University. So indirectly, this secret revealed by Rabbi Gikatilla in this rare text studied for centuries by the Illuminati, tells us that the woman, provides the animic matter that man must shape with the mind projected in the right direction, as the pot maker models his fresh clay.

Also, the nourishment and the food we consume prior to the sexual act has its importance in relation to the coitus, therefore it must be temperate and moderate:

Because if the nourishment is too abundant in the stomach, even if coming from good quality ingredients, an excess of it will cause it not to be digested and assimilated into the stomach, and will become bad, congested and heavy, more than it would have been if it had come from undigested and coarse foods but assumed in small quantities.

It is not necessary to be vegetarian for Rabbi Joseph Ben Abraham Gikatilla, as Jewish law indicates perfectly which animal foods to take and which to abhor:

Some must be avoided because they damage the heart, such as fat and blood, others because they make arrogant, like those coming from wild animals, birds of prey and fierce beasts, others still because they obstacle intelligence and wisdom, such as hare, rabbit, pig and the like, others finally because they involve different sorts of ailments and painful diseases, like terrestrial and aquatic reptiles in general.

The author also explains en passant – but perhaps wanting to allude to a sexual secret – that killing animals for food is not a useless cruelty since it's done so Yahweh allows the animal to evolve by participating in human nature. Not by chance, in France, at the end of the 1800s, there were a few Illuminati members who resumed this theory for magical and evolutionary purposes (amongst them Eugène Vintras and Joseph-Antoine Boullan, mentioned previously in my publications). In fact, rabbi Gikatilla writes:

The specific case of the beast that is torn down to nourish man, constitutes good for the animal because it is elevated from a beastly level to that of the body of a man. It is the destiny of the four components of the world down here: minerals, plants, animals not endowed with words and talking animals.

Then the author explains the key to this sexual secret:

You must know the great secret that was revealed to our masters, that in their memory is the blessing: The thoughts of transgression are worse than the transgression itself. I am by things that constitute the mystery of the world and which are disguised.

(...) Now Yahweh has given the power to the imagination of man to bring about something similar to what is imagined, and this is also confirmed by many natural observations. Behold: When a man joins his woman, if his imagination and his thoughts are directed towards works of wisdom and intellect, towards good and appropriate qualities, this imagination, which is in its thinking, possesses without any doubt the strength to sculpt a form in the sperm produced according to what will have imagined at the time of sexual intercourse.

Here the author has in view the conception of elected men, real Illuminati, that conform to the will of Yahweh when he chose the Jewish people as his favorite people:

Thanks to Jacob our ancestor, peace be with him, merited to procreate twelve tribes, all composed of perfect righteous people, including neither perverse nor calibrated ones. All were worthy of being the image of the Order of the world, bearers of the instruments of Yahweh since their thoughts had not separated from the contact with the highest, even at the time of sexual intercourse; hope you understand this well.

It seems to non-Jews a system to avoid racial degeneration (in the sense of the race of the spirit of which Baron Julius Evola spoke), but it is also well understood as a magical secret because, as the author himself writes, at the time of the sexual act, the man and the woman participate in the creator power of Yahweh, in the general sense, and not only particular (the formation of another human being). From an operational point of view, Rabbi Gikatilla makes it clear that this creation is rather simple because it would suffice to have before the eyes, even without an effort of imagination, the representation of what you want to create. But this seems valid only if the man is totally focused and the woman remains impressed by the particular vision of something strong brought in the equation at the time of conception. “For so it is, mental representation and thought that determines the child be born just, or wicked,” as well as it also contributes for this purpose to ingest the right food, and therefore it is necessary that every man purifies his body as well as his thoughts and his mental representations at the time of sexual intercourse, with no transgressive or lustful thoughts, but only thoughts of Holy things.

Not easy, my friends, if not impossible in the age of lust and porn, to clear our thoughts of wicked fantasy, but the elite know this, that's why they are in charge of humanity. However, this means that the good elite, the ones that help mankind develop and move further, when copulating for purposes of mating, think of the righteous, the pure, the saints and Men of science, wisdom, and intelligence, because these thoughts act on the sperm and will model it according to their own form at the time of coitus. The wicked elite, the ones that unfortunately prevail these days, and dominate mankind in this age of corruption and pain, are the result of evil thoughts and perverse sexual practices within their own families. The rabbi also specifies that the woman must have the same thoughts and images of the man during the sexual union:

They will be so mutually united with the subject of the commandment because then their thoughts will be closely joined and the Shekhinah will reside between them and give birth to a child according to the pure form that they will have imagined. Don't be surprised, it is a simple fact also in the eyes of the philosophers, because according to the thought and the mental representation that crosses the heart of man and woman at the time of their embrace, the child will be prepared and conformed either to the good or to the evil, or to the beauty or to the laid.

On the basis of an example taken from Rabbi Nahmanides, and alleged by Gikatilla, it seems that the same images formed also accidentally (for example, following a feverish delirium) are visible in the person's urine, after an hour of resting in a glass jar: For the abundance of his thoughts and the confusion of his spirit, the forms of his imagination and his delusions get imprinted in his urine. Understand all this and consider as far as the force of thought is pushed at the time of the coitus.

Finally, Rabbi Gikatilla, emphasizes that it is almost negative for a wise man to take a beautiful woman as his wife, because her beauty will inevitably distract the man from elaborating a spiritual and superior form at the time of embrace and, indeed, will end up generating an unworthy and material being.

When marrying a woman for her beauty the sexual intercourse does not happen in the name of Yahweh, and he does not think of his form on the basis of bodily appearance and is not directed toward spiritual ideas so that the son who is born is a stranger [for Yahweh] (...) Since the concentration of thought is only addressed to the beauty of the wife, it will be born disobedient sons and enemies of Yahweh, susceptible to the four sanctions of death inflicted by a Jewish tribunal. For the rabbi, when man thinks of things evil and dirty, his thought on the dirt connects to the higher realities and his soul is guilty to heaven because it makes it impure by contact.

In practice, the rabbi affirms that one can also knowingly create in the opposite direction to the wishes of heaven – here is the magic meaning – although this will entail a far worse sanction than those who commit a normal material sin:

From here you understand the secret of the one who thinks of transgression at the time of coitus because this undue thought goes to model the sperm from which a principle of perversity is established with iniquity and filth and this is said to be extraneous. You will understand this if you truly have a soul.

The connection with the upper realities that is realized for a short time in the moment of the coitus is a concept we have also discussed in the past when learning about the evil side of the Illuminati, and wicked occultists like Aleister Crowley. This practice that when held firmly in our mind during every sexual act, allows to develop a power of life and death, and helps to modify ones reality according to your own will, a teaching Crowley made clear with his motto: “Love is the law, love under will”, but also a teaching that Rabbi Joseph Ben Abraham Gikatilla saw in a completely different light from “The Great Beast”, a more positive one that Gikatilla confirmed, citing a few passages of canonical literature, making the clearest explanation regarding sexual secret practices amongst the elite many centuries before the dark side of the Illuminati took over the show and launched the sexual magick myth with dangerous sects like the O.T.O and so on. However, at the end of his short essay/letter, while discussing how we get in touch with the higher realities using sex, Gikatilla, seems to finally mention the ambivalence of this occult practice when he tells the story of Balaam in the Book of Numbers: You understand the meaning of this and you will see how far the strength of meditation and thought comes, aimed at good or evil.

Though this does not constitute the subject of this letter, you will have a great advantage because you will know where the meditative power comes from and you know the secret of thought, what is accomplished at the time of the conjugal relationship. [26]

The Secrets of Alchemy

The Masons are the beneficiaries of the ancient mystery schools of alchemy, according to their ancient rites. I have been asked to integrate the subject of alchemy, and the Royal Art of the Illuminati, of which Sexual Magick is an integral part, further in my books. Arion Love, who grew up in the revolutionary sixties in California, is an independent researcher of alchemy and has been studying the esoteric spiritual traditions since 1967. He writes with great expertise on the subject: The great secret of alchemy is the Divine Marriage of opposites which gives birth to the Spirit Body of transcendence associated with liberation of the soul. The exact process of metamorphosis leading to the creation and birth of the spirit body within the physical body has long been veiled in mystery and secrecy. The spirit body is not to be confused with one's subtle body or subtle bodies which one already has from birth. The creation and birth of the spirit body is an entirely unique process found within the various world traditions of alchemy. The spirit body has gone by names like Deva Deha, Siddha Deha, Golden Pearl, Merkaba, Rainbow Body, Diamond Body, Star Body, and Immortal Body of Light. You can find the most revealed aspects of this process in Chinese Taoist Alchemy and East Indian Tantric Alchemy. Traditionally, the process was taught from teacher to student in a step by step series of initiations. One did not progress until first mastering each successive step. The foundation for this process can be found in traditional Yoga comprised of physical postures, breathing, and mantra sound meditation. Yoga means union with the absolute. Depending upon the culture, the opposites were variously known as Fire and Water, Sun and Moon, Soul and Spirit, Male and Female, Mercury and Sulfur, King and Queen, Heaven and Earth, Shiva and Shakti, Kan and Li, Yin and Yang, Ka and Ba, Isis and Osiris, Soma and Agni. Also, this marriage parallels the practice of Tantric sexual union and unfoldment of the inner life energy referred to as the Kundalini. This process is also mirrored in the Jewish mystical tradition of the Kabbalah when ascending the Tree of Life, which esoterically is the seven energy centers or chakras that run up the spinal column to the brain. The alchemical marriage of opposites can be seen in the symbolism of the intersecting triangles of the Jewish Star of David, Seal of Solomon, and the Sri Yantra of India. The upward pointing triangle symbolizes the male or fire principle, and the downward pointing triangle symbolizes the female or water principle. The Bindu point in the center of the Sri Yantra symbolizes the point of transcendence. The Yantra is a graphic symbol of the Mantra. The Mantra corresponds to the Five Elements and Logos or Word of God. Also, the marriage of opposites can be seen in the symbolism of the Christian Cross. The ancient Caduceus symbol used by the modern medical establishment symbolizes on an esoteric level the alchemical process.

The staff represents the spinal column which correlates with the Sushumna Nadi channel of yogic esoteric anatomy. The two ascending spirals of snakes represent the solar and lunar currents known as the ida and pingala of the kundalini life force. The spiral pattern is similar to the spirals of the human DNA. The symbolism of Jacobs Ladder or Stairway to Heaven corresponds with the Staff of Life. [\[27\]](#)

FIG 13 – Masonic Tracing Board from the Entered Apprentice Degree from St. Andrew's Lodge in the UK.

Jacob's Ladder is the only reference from the volume of the Sacred Law which is mentioned twice in the Craft Ritual; it must, therefore, be considered to be of great importance for Freemasonry, that is very much a form of alchemy applied to man through initiation. In the Masonic ritual, the first mention of Jacob's ladder describes how Masons are enabled to ascend to the summit of masonry, i.e. Charity. This ascent is made possible from its beginnings, in the doctrines of the Holy Book, followed by ascending the steps of Faith and Hope, which in turn lead to the summit - CHARITY.

The second mention of Jacob's Ladder in the ritual, is in the explanation of the first Tracing Board, which refers to the Volume of the Sacred Law supporting Jacob's Ladder, but this time it brings us directly to God in Heaven, provided that we are conversant with the Holy Book and are adherent to its doctrines.

The Introduction of Jacob's Ladder into speculative Masonry is to be traced to the vision of Jacob, which is recorded in the book of Genesis. “When Jacob, while sleeping one night, with the bare earth for his couch and a stone for his pillow, beheld the vision of a ladder, whose foot rested on the earth and whose top reached to heaven. Angels were continually ascending and descending upon it and promised him the blessing of a numerous and happy prosperity. When Jacob awoke, he was filled with pious gratitude, and consecrated the spot as the house of God.”

This ladder, so remarkable in the history of the Jewish people, is found in all the ancient initiations. Whether by coincidence or that they were all derived from a common fountain of symbolism is unknown. However, it is certain that the ladder as a symbol of moral and intellectual progress, existed almost universally in antiquity, as a succession of steps, of gates, of degrees or in some other modified form. The number of steps varied; but most commonly was seven, in allusion to the mystical importance given to that number. Thus in the Persian mysteries of Mithras, there was a ladder of seven rounds, the passage through them being symbolic of the soul's approach to perfection. These rounds were called Gates, and, in allusion to them, the candidate was made to pass through seven dark and winding caverns, which process was called the 'Ascent of the Ladder of Perfection'.

Each rung of the ladder was said to be of metal and of increasing purity and was dignified also with the name of its protecting planet. The highest being Gold and the Sun, next Silver and the Moon . . . through to Lead and Saturn. In the mysteries of Brahma, we find the same reference to a ladder of seven steps, with similar names.

In Scandinavian mysteries, the tree Yggrasil was the representative of the mystical ladder. The ascent of the tree, like the ascent of the ladder, was a change from a lower to a higher sphere - from time to eternity, and from death to life. In the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite of Freemasonry, we find the ladder of Kadosh, which consists of seven steps, commencing from the bottom : Justice - Equity - Kindness - Good Faith - Labour - Patience and Intelligence. The idea of Intellectual progress to perfection is carried out by the top rung, which represents Wisdom or Understanding. The ladder in Craft Masonry also consists of seven steps, ascending as follows : Temperance - Fortitude - Prudence - Justice - Faith - Hope - and Charity. But the earliest examples of the ladder present it only with three, referring to the three theological virtues, whence it is sometimes called the Theological Ladder. It seems, therefore, to have been determined by general usage to have only three steps. In the 16th century it was stated that Jacob's ladder was a symbol of the progressive scale of intellectual communication between earth and heaven; and upon this ladder, as it were, step by step, man is permitted - with the angels - to ascend and to descend, until the mind finds blissful and complete repose in the bosom of divinity.

A sort of 'zigzag' of Creation, that Brother Mark Stavish, from Wyoming Lodge No. 468, Director of Studies for the Institute for Hermetic Studies, who has also published several books related to Freemasonry, describes it in this way:

This 'zigzag' of Creation is called the "Lightning Flash". The return of energy from dense matter, back through the various stages, Sephiroth, and Worlds of Creation is known as the "Path of the Serpent" because of its reverse, or complementary 'zigzag' nature back up this diagram called the Tree of Life. For the alchemist, somewhere between the third and fourth level, or sphere of creation, energy takes on the characteristic that will allow for the formation of matter at some future state, or level ten. This energy is called Prima Materia, Chaos in the Bible, Spiritus Mundi (Spirit of the Earth), and others. Here, duality is made complete, and genuine polarity exists, as opposed to simply the potential, or idea, of polarity that had existed previously. Energy is divided into active and passive modes, with the active energy constituting the energies of life, and the passive one, the energy of matter. In "The Golden Chain of Homer", the active energy, is called Niter, and the passive energy is called Salt. The energy of Life manifests in two forms, Fire and Air. [29]

The Secret Alchemical Code of the Unknown Superiors?

In the second half of the Eighteenth Century, Europe witnessed the emergence or re-emergence of the mythical hypostasis of a “chain” of secret and invisible masters, superhuman keepers of wisdom and power, if not hidden custodians of the destinies of History itself. A cryptic subject that had already been used as the backbone of the meta-cultural and meta-political movement of the Rosicrucians from the first decades of the Seventeenth Century; and by the Masonic Neotemplars of the Rite of Strict Observance a century later. It is evidently impossible to cover within this book, the multiple reading keys of the myth of the Unknown Superiors and Secret Chiefs, and it isn't possible to cover questions of all various forms, and for this reason, I have dedicated the upcoming work, The Invisible Master, to this important subject. We can, however, consider for now, the most immediate and acceptable interpretation of the idea, that shows a chain of Invisible Masters connected with ultra-dimensional aliens, working behind the curtains of history since the beginning of time. In this sense, the concept of an invisible community of Illuminati becomes more than real, in a sort of figurative projection and archetype of the radical biological and spiritual mutation towards which the human race is heading, albeit unknowingly, guided by mysterious alien forces. The hidden and invisible notion of this mysterious Circle of Secret Chiefs is characterized by its inherent fear existing within any social-historical order for this secret reality.

This is particularly obvious when it is found within the very foundations of a society whose stability depends on a legalistic and materialistic system. The ingeniousness of this manipulative mechanism usually becomes either the divinity to be adored or the dreadful demons to be exorcised, without understanding the whole point of this charade. An inquisitive reading of history, full of moments of great cultural, religious or scientific transformations, will reveal that quite often under the surface or behind the curtain of events, cultural crisis and, political-religious mutations, lies the intervention of ideas and forces, as well as structured organizations working willingly or unwillingly for the alien overlords. These are always somewhat related, one way or another, to the archaic dimensions of Magick and its rituals operated by the Illuminati Ufonauts since ancient times to interface with the UFO/alien reality.

For a long time, rumors have circulated amongst researchers that the UFO phenomenon is somehow directly linked to the Illuminati and the occult. Now, with my upcoming work The Invisible Master you will find startling proof of those connections and exposes the heart of the UFO mystery with the revelation of the hidden Secret Ciphers and Rituals used by Ufonauts, Contactees, Occult Adepts and their Secret Chiefs who have maintained communication with these mysterious alien/Ultraterrestrial beings who control interdimensional forces beyond our comprehension. There are, however, human adepts in both the Western, and Eastern initiatic systems, who are part of an ancient tradition in alien contact, stretching from remote antiquity to the present time. This is the ultimate secret knowledge of the so-called blue blood aristocrats. In this context, the flourishing dissemination of new and revolutionary spiritual, philosophical and artistic notions that determined the beginning of the European Renaissance, was piloted by the Illuminati of the time for a secret mission known only to the initiated few. The dissemination in the days of neo-Gnostic and neo-Pagan ideas, which were increasingly found among the erudite Magi of the academies, and courts in those days, was only a first step towards what will become many centuries later the New Age movement. In a slightly different form, there is a seemingly distant magical reality found among the popular Shamanic and Wizardry movements, often in contact with certain alien beings since ancient times, working independently from the hierarchical structure of the “Occult Theocracy” .

The rebirth of Hermeticism, Alchemy, and Magick in Europe finds its roots, however, in the diffusion of the Alexandrian Hermetic texts, dated from the 2nd and 3rd centuries AD, which were barely whispered about during the entire Middle Ages for fear of reprisal by the Vatican mafia. The rebirth was fuelled by works such as Corpus Hermeticum translated by Cosimo of Medici in 1462 and probably influenced by the neo-Pagan passion of Giorgio Gemisto Pletone (1355-1452) and later edited and preserved carefully by the Neo-Platonist Marsilio Ficino (1433-1499). Ficino and others made several ambiguous attempts to identify Hermetic Gnosticism with some kind of proto-Christianity, thus presenting Plato and even the mythical Hermes Trismegistus as the precursors of the Fathers of the Church, while they simply represent the ancient Illuminati mystery schools that even our Master Jesus joined during his time in Egypt. At the same time and rather synchronically, in a different social context, witches and wizards in the countryside and hillsides, were practicing and spreading their contact with alien demonic forces, through witchcraft in honour of the dark side, and in obvious antagonism to the totem of the Cross and the official rituals of the “Occult Theocracy” in place in that time. It was precisely through the ambiguity of the Ficinian neo-Platonic Academia that the Christian model continued to represent the filter, in the more knowledgeable spheres, of every approach to the Hermetic Art and Magick itself. This was made particularly evident throughout the rise and tribulations of the Rose-Croix movement and the birth of Rosicrucianism, who was the first to translate the myth of the Unknown Superiors as authentic Masters and organized brotherhoods, where Hermetic-Alchemic practices and Philosophy were an integral part of their teachings. Ancient Illuminati symbols were transmitted, and concealed in the architecture of the major monuments, and revealed only to the most worthy initiates by the mythical Unknown Superiors. This was achieved methodically, mainly through the awakening and formation of Brotherhoods, Sisterhoods, and initiatic Communities, especially in Europe and later America, which synchronically declared to be instigated, inspired and guided by the mythical Unknown Superiors. On entering Crowley's A .:. A .:. , for example, aspirants must acquiesce, still to this day in the complete subordination of their "will" to that of the "Unknown Superiors". This provision places them entirely in the power of the "Order" and its Secret Chiefs. Some of these Illuminati Brotherhoods like the O.T.O. had been involved from the very beginning in the reawakening of the alien/stellar, alchemical and psychosexual magical practices present in the diabolical New Age Movement, headed by the deviant side of the ancient mystery schools controlled by the dark side. Their aim is rather obvious since their operational practices gravitated around a misinterpretation of sexual magick, used for a possible constitution of an "Immortal Body" or "Body of Light", producing in most cases spiritual monstrosities, and zombies for the New World Order nothing more. This tradition of transforming nature and of self-divinization of men and women through alchemical-sexual techniques is thousands of years old, and the Illuminati have always been aware of it, but the increasingly corrupt world of secret societies have used it in the wrong way. Therefore Sexual Alchemy arises from extreme antiquity as one of the most direct survivors of the knowledgeable patrimony of the Mother-Goddess so dear to the New Age Movement, especially in its operational aspects, be it internal or psychosexual. For the Ufologist, Satanist, and Illuminati, Roberto Negrini from Italy past Grand Master of the O.T.O.-F.H.L. and now president of the Accademia Pansofica, if we can indeed define Magick, based on our own unitary paradigm, as the Art and Science of the balancing powers between the various components of the being, we therefore can define Alchemy as one of these components of this Art and Science.

Alchemy for Negrini is an array of manipulation techniques of natural forms (mineral, plant or animal, chemical or biological) as well as of the physical or para-physical elements of which is it composed. These techniques are capable of separating these elements and reassembling them into different configurations, thus obtaining transmutations and forms of control and amplification on the vital biological and meta-biological processes of nature as well as the perceptive modalities of human consciousness.

For Negrini it is with these colors that Alchemy has re-emerged in the New Age at the heart of the modern rebirth of Magick, with the ambition to reaffirm this time publicly the magical conscience. As part of this rebirth, the emergence of the psychosexual aspects is the most relevant aspect for Negrini, who was, however, arrested on charges of pedophilia in March 2013, showing once again the real nature of Crowley's adepts and their deviant psychosexual mission, serving the darkest forces on earth with their perversions. These aspects represent the operational foundations of the darkest Illuminati who are busy manipulating internal and external forces around, just like the late Jimmy Savile (1926-2011) did during his lifetime, as a deviant witch, and a pedophile, without ever suffering any consequences for his evil actions. He lived his life to the max in the most depraved way following Aleister Crowley's motto: Do what thou wilt. Saville used his alleged black magic powers to put TV bosses, celebs, powerful politicians, and even members of the Royal Family and policemen, under his spell. It is therefore natural that the initiatic movements of the New Age like the O.T.O., are the cradles in which the Alchemic paradigm has been preserved to some extent in a rather distorted form, only capable of its "darkest" interpretation and evil actions. Dark figures like Aleister Crowley have been used by the Secret Chiefs, who are the sacred guardians presiding over the initiation of the Human Race, to test Mankind's Faith in front of God, and work in cohorts with the fallen angels in this unfolding end-times scenario.

Understanding Mental Alchemy

Mary Anne South (1817–1910), known later in life with her married surname Atwood, was an English writer on hermeticism and spiritual alchemy, who was not just a great Alchemical "adept", but even as "the last one", who operated during that time frame historians now define as Victorian Occultism, born out of the Victorian era. Mary Anne's first publication, Early Magnetism in its higher relations to humanity (1846), was issued pseudonymously as the work Thuos Mathos, an anagram of Thomas South, the name of her father. She was also member as was her father, of a rather obscure neoplatonic secret society of the Illuminati Network, called the Zojst, founded by Thomas Taylor (1758 –1835), who was the first English translator and Neoplatonist to translate into English the complete works of Aristotle and Plato, as well as the Orphic fragments. So a pretty important figure of English culture, Atwood's material is very important for the study of a vanished Britain when Neo-Platonism and High Ideas influenced the nation. But, as Mrs. Atwood stated, "They went in for power and threw their spiritual heritage out the window." This significant quote that could be found at the Mary Anne Atwood archive website, maintained by the Brown University, demonstrates how Ms. Atwood clearly understood, even back then, the spiritual decline of the Western Initiatic System, and the evil quest for power of the occult elite of the Illuminati Network. Understanding Victorian Occultism is relevant to us today, so we can have a full picture of the Illuminati Network, and the origins of Modern Satanism, and provides indeed a comprehensive account of the historical roots and philosophical underpinnings of influential orders, like the S.R.I.A., or the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn. From Occult Freemasonry (a term coined by Eliphas Levi), to Rosicrucianism, and Egyptian magic, to Victorian innovations and inventions, this is a key chapter in the decline of the Western Initiatic System, and the rise of the so-called "New Age" built for the New World Order.

Alison Butler wrote in Victorian Occultism and the Making of Modern Magic:

The hierarchical and ritual nature of secret societies and the supernatural setting of the spiritualists provided the perfect ingredients for the development and nurturing of Victorian occultism. The formulation of its doctrines was deeply entwined with a reliance and reinterpretation of other esoteric and marginal traditions. As a product of its time, fin-de-siècle magic was subject to the literary, philosophical, political and religious influences of the era. The Nineteenth-century thought was fundamentally affected by the rising popularity of secularization and science and Victorian occultism was no exception. Nineteenth-century people were necessarily having to deal with an understanding of themselves both as individuals independent of the determinism implicit in the Christian understanding of creation, and as individuals who were progressively becoming superior to all that came before.^[30]

In this important context, Ms. Atwood wrote, at her father's request, what became a very influential study within the theosophical and Illuminati milieu, called A Suggestive Inquiry into the Hermetic Mystery, published in 1850. Lawrence M. Principe, one of the world's leading authorities on the subject, and distinguished professor William R. Newman, in their more recent publications from the early 2000's , consider A Suggestive Inquiry, to be one of three books which started the influence of the spiritual interpretation of alchemy in early modern Europe. Ms. Atwood published nothing after this, and it was something she prepared in parallel with her father's own composition of a lengthy poem on the same subject. Thomas South was happy to pay for the publication of the book, that was published anonymously by a known English publisher, but without having read it, he hadn't realized its contents. Basically, he completely trusted his daughter's judgment. That was apparently a big mistake for Thomas South when after reading it, was shocked by what Mary Anne had revealed publicly. For Mr. South, and the occult elite, all this was better left unpublished. Therefore, he bought up the remaining stock and, with his daughter, burned them, along with the unfinished manuscript of his own poem. Imagine this incredible scene from another era! Probably, for this reason, the writer Lindsay Clarke used the story of Thomas South and Mary Anne Atwood, as a basis for his novel, The Chymical Wedding that came out in 1989. Only a few copies of Mary Anne's mysterious work survived the destruction, once her father ceased the contract with the publisher. Eventually, eight years later, and after Ms. Atwood's death, one of these rare copies made it to print in 1918, creating once again turmoil and waves, in the secretive world of the Western Initiatic System and related mystery schools. This happened thanks to Walter Leslie Wilmshurst (1867 –1939), who was an English author, and an erudite Freemason, who also added in this new edition, some very interesting unpublished notes from Ms. Atwood, as an appendix, that contained table talk, and memorabilia.

Explanatory notes full of secrets and incredible knowledge, connected to the secret teachings of the Illuminati Mystery Schools of the Western Initiatic System, that Ms. Atwood apparently wrote, but never published, back in 1860. Notes that I will now include after this introduction, because of the importance of Mary Anne Atwood's work, and the possibility that her notes might unlock one of the biggest secrets of the Illuminati: Mental Alchemy. A huge secret, hidden in the pages of her controversial book, described by the illustrious Mainly P. Hall, (best known for his 1928 work The Secret Teachings of All Ages), as “The most mysterious, I suppose that has been written in modern times, it presents a riddle more difficult than the most scientifically contrived mystery”.

So what is this mysterious and difficult riddle? What is this mystery, that pushed her own father, to destroy almost all the copies of the first edition of her book? Is it the key secret of Mental Alchemy? Brother Walter Leslie Wilmhurst, in his 1918 introduction to the reissue, lamented that the thoughts and writings of Ms. Atwood, in her later years, never made it to another book. He claimed, that there is much to be found in her papers, of which he was then in possession.

These have not yet been published. The special collections archive of the Brown University library currently holds around 700 of Ms. Atwood's letters. However, I think we need to study Mary Anne Atwood' work, especially the following 181 notes published in the 1918 edition by Brother Wilmshurst:

1. The Magic of the self-will is that which the Egyptians practiced in the days of Moses; this is to be found in the release or setting free the third or lowest life. Of this power we know nothing in this present life, the ordinary life of man; we may imagine into it, and theoretically see it, but that is all; nor do we know it in the common entranced life, i.e., the life of the sleep-wakers; but this present life may be led through the clairvoyant life into it (that is the wonderful part of it) by the fermentation of itself.
2. As this life being fermented by this life, its similar, leads into the common trance, or is entranced, so that consequent life being fermented subsequently by its similar, leads into that third life which moves in and with the creative Essence, so that the mind becomes in that case related to the Universal Vitalising Power, and so can act its will. Power thus gained is only legitimate, just and righteous, when the will subserves the commandment and law of God; taken into the self-will and used accordingly, it becomes diabolical; hence the distinction between the "might in word and deed" of Moses and the "enchantments " of the Egyptians.
3. The universal Spirit is in one form the Principle of all growth, and it is their power of collecting a quantity of this, bringing it to bear on any germ at, that furnishes the Eastern jugglers with their power of perfecting suddenly those plants and trees which in the ordinary course of the action of this Life-principle in Nature would have taken years.
4. Magicians, like the Egyptians of that day, drew only from their own strength; that was the way in which the kingdom of Egypt fell; probably they did not originally act in self-will, but drew their power from the Divine Source as Asclepius says (see the Dialogue, so-called, the 2nd Book of Hermes ch. 9) alluding to their falling off into debasement and idolatry.
5. Alchemy is a universal art of vital chemistry, which by fermenting the human spirit, purifies, and, finally dissolving it, opens the elementary germ into new life and consciousness; and the Philosopher's Stone is the efflux of such a life, drawn to a focus and made manifest as a concrete Essence of Light, which Essence is the true Form or Idea of Gold. The process takes place in and through the human body in the blood, changing the relation of its component parts or principles, and reversing the circulatory order, so that, the sensible medium becoming occult, the inner source of its vitality is awakened, and the consciousness at the same time being drawn centrally, comes to know and feel itself in its own true Source, which is the Universal Centre and source of all things.

6. And since every being has in himself the cause of his own existence if by these alleged means the consciousness can be brought into contact with its First Cause, he will, in knowing It know the cause of all, since Existence is everywhere one and universal, and, in fact, the one ultimate essential mystery under God. This Mystery is, as the Hermetists teach, to be discovered by an artificial dissolution of the natural bond of life, resulting in a regeneration of the dissolved separated elements, under a reversed law; the will holding and drawing from its proper efficient operates, and mind becomes creative and immortalised in it.

7. The law of Will in these higher states of being is to have motion from its own centre. It has motion in itself, this motivity when in act evolves an effervescence of the Will-being or substance; for Will has substance, nay, is the only substance; it is the Universal Loadstone of Existence. This effervescent efflux is in itself chaotic, and requires to be taken up by an external mind or intelligence, and this mind, when thus related to it, and under its law, becomes creative and immortalised.

8. As long as we in our life go on in a line we are not immortal, but when our life is returned in faith (for it is faith which re-unites) to its beginning, it forms the circle, and is in Eternity. It must also be observed that there is a law of Light, which must move through Love in the will, and so act on the will-moved mind, and to which it must be subservient, else it breaks and becomes demoniacal. The wonderful part of the process is that the spirit becoming freed from the body, carries on the perfection and purification of its own vehicle: the soul. There is a time when the power, the vital or willing-power, is seated in the lumbar region and is sent back. I think there is a time, when the mind comes into relation with the macrocosmic Spirit, and discerns it, and is taught by it. (c.f., Vaughan's Writings on the Chymical Wedding, p. 4.)

9. The perpendicular line is the Divine line in all things; the transverse line is the contrary; the two united form a cross + . In mesmerising and demesmerising we form a + . It is curious that by this peculiar action the perpendicular line should withdraw you from sense while the transverse restores you to it.

10. The fire of life in us is capable of burning erect, it becomes a magnet! Wonderful! If, in us, the Divine line were stronger than the transverse one, we should be no longer in sense. The Divine or rather celestial life would be established over it in us, and we should be conscious in it, and placed in a transcendental relation. And as the sky appears to us concave and, when cloudless, blue in colour, so the Upper Ether, where the Ideas are, appears to the exalted spirit, i.e., the spirit in the medial life, as its azure sky. N.B. - The brain is to this outward life what the spiritual head is to the spirit. There is, as the Swedenborgians would say, a correspondence between them.

11. The limbs in the microcosm play a most important part in this mystery for the evolution and perfecting of the Divine within; it is thus that the body is regarded by St. Paul as a temple of the Holy Ghost, and it is for this, that in their highest and ultimate use, its different members have their being; they are a laboratory that is of and for the spirit to work in.

12. The order adopted by the Hermetic writers may seem to be most disorderly, but it is not so much so as it appears; the fact is, they often describe different phenomena occurrent in the different repetitions of the process; see, for example, the "Golden Treatise." The fermentative process has to be gone over and over again, and thus the author of that Treatise seems purposely to confuse and intermix the several steps taken in the work, when in reality he is describing the stages taken and the results reached, as the Artist begins, ends, and repeats the mysterious experiment.

13. The macrocosmic image of the microcosm is the downward-born nature of which Hermes speaks very finely in the Pimander. It is the Eve which Adam brought forth, and in which he beheld as an image his own soul, the Absolute Idea of the Beautiful, the Divine image; the reason why it is macrocosmic, passive and ephemeral is its want of consubstantiality; it is an image, thrown forth, which image of perfect beauty attracts the soul, and united to it brings forth the ideal into an actual offspring.

14. The Hermetic sepulchre is the vehicle of the dead Divine Life within us, and at the same time it is the death of itself - “ idem est sepulchrum ac cadaver.”

15. The Gold Alchemical is the first conceived Paternal Light- it is the seed metaphysical of mineral gold, which Aeneas was told by the Sybil that he must find and gather.

16. The " orient animal " means the animal (that is, the opposite) which is clothed in Light; the third which rises in opposition to the first.

17. The Golden Fleece is the outward appearance presented by the light of Life diffused over the body of the seeker in the third life; it is of a purplish lustre. The seeker, however, in this point of relation, is the adept, the discoverer, the finder.

18. In the lower development of the Hermetic life, the quintessences successively form themselves, having each of them a spherical capacity and wholeness, but these world forms are unstable and, uninformed with the Light Essential, resolve and die.

19. In the vital changes which are intimately connected with the spirit changes occurrent in the process, the vital force in the blood undergoes alchemical changes in its relation to the body. There are three principles in this force, Attraction, Circulation, Repulsion - the Alchemical Salt, Mercury, Sulphur. What is really changed is the magnetic attraction; the medial spirit is changed; life is 'attracted in, instead of out.

20. We must remember that Alchemy is Divine Chemistry, and the transmutation of Life; and therefore that which is the medium between soul and body is changed, and the soul freed from the chains of corporeity, and the body is left as a mere husk. These people put on their bodies as mere coats.

21. The principle of body is preserved in what they call the ashes or Caput mortuum, and that one principle being saved the whole life is restored from it; Khunrath calls it “our pigmy”, also “the diadem of the body”, and I think he refers to it under the term “Duanach”.

22. It is a curious thing that the Third Principle, i.e., the «siderial and elementary birth, to use Böhme's language, is the medium of perceiving the First, which is hidden in its mineral life; that life is full of defilements and temptations; it is therefore necessary, before going into it consciously, that the will and purpose be perfectly pure and simple in this return of the reason into its First Cause; the motive is segregated from the whole life as a pure Light allied to that which it seeks.

23. The word fermentation conveys an idea of the perfecting principle and of the possibility of transmutation beyond any other word, and also of the fixation or everlasting preservation of which they speak; and so of immortality, it is the best image of the Divine Art which earthly processes give. Alchemy is a process of fermenting the vital Spirit in, and by its own Light. The Vital Spirit is in the Universal as well as in the individual. In the Art the individual draws the Universal. The best illustration of the Art as a fermentative process is given by Basil Valentine in his "Keys." It is through this Art that man is brought into relationship with God, hence it is called by the Adepts Holy Alchemy; thus Norton says - "It is most profound philosophy, this subtle science of Holy Alchemy." The moment men begin to reduce the ontological ground taken by Adepts to physical science they begin to twaddle.

24. Lorenz Oken (Author of Elements of Physiophilosophy. London, Ray Society 1847) is a man who will be appreciated someday, I suspect. He is a man who deals with nature in that higher way, never in that lower; it strikes me that of all writers Oken best evolves Causal Truth into the outward forms of life.

25. There are three Lives to be represented. The Terrestrial, the Celestial, the Infernal. The Terrestrial is the sensuous and represents the Animal Kingdom. In man it is dominant in the head. The Celestial is the emotional, receptive, instinctive life, and represents the Vegetable Kingdom. In man it resides in the epigastric region and heart; the plexus solaris, the Archaeus of Paracelsus, is its workshop. The Infernal is the voluntary agent in life, and represents the Mineral Kingdom. In man it resides in the lumbar region. Each of these lives is dominant in the Kingdom of Nature to which it is especially attached; in fact, it is its essential quality, its substance. We must remember that man, being a microcosm, comprehends and represents the whole and each.

26. The aim in the Work is to reverse the whole action of these lives in their natural order. Man is fallen; he is in the third or lowest life, and this third life has to be raised up and born through the medial or celestial life, and becomes receptive of the Divine. Man must not dare to aspire to that highest life which is over this birth and which is typified by the terrestrial or head life, since if he were there he would become Creative—he would be taking to himself the Divine Will.

27. That which in the hands of fools is nothing in that of a philosopher becomes to be all in all - says one; all depends on the willing and intention -" ex fine cujusvis intentionis resultat principium ejus," and so, too, it is true and less paradoxical that " finis ab origine pendet." The difficulty is to find this principium, the intention; for the rational ferment, the pure aurific seed of Light, is hidden in this life of ours.

28. Will creates an image, not a being. The will passing into desire for the image creates it by union with itself into a being; it begets itself out of itself, as it were out of its own image (e.f., Behmen's "Three-fold Life," chap. 10 and 12.) All the Creation until man was an image; man was made permanent by the breathing into him of the breath of Lives, and so became the image of God and from that a son of God; as the Almighty had done for him so he did for the creatures; his "naming" them specificated and vitalized the whole archetypal world; he developed into actuality that which before was potential. The revelation of the Mystery is nothing without its use, for it is a vital change.

29. The powers developed, of which the Adepts speak, are produced from emotional sources in the heart, which emotional influences qualitate those powers; contrition, love, purity, mercy, humility, are such emotions and are producible not so much materially as essentially. Emotion brings forth essence, and essence is qualitated, i.e., specificated, and receives form from Ideas' or the universal forms of Nature ; thus, in lower degrees and unlawfully, man may specificate and qualitate from his own mind; in this consists the true idolatry against which the Bible so strongly protests, And that Magic which originated Talismans, Palladia, etc.; It is a taking the First Matter which is humanly producible, And forming it finitely and for any particular object or Individual end.

30. The fire of the natural life entering into and fermenting the natural fire - the same life in another - opens the last, and develops and excites and sets free the celestial Life and Light - that is one main principle. The third principle is developed in like manner. The fourth contrariwise; it is a procreation of the third through the second - a retrogression. The mystery is a wonderful one, the phenomena are constant throughout. It can be talked about in such a commonplace way and yet it is so far above the apprehension of the common life.

31. The spirit teaches its own art, and according as it is obeyed, the artist goes on developing the way for him to advance itself to perfection. Ut vcntus qui flat, est ille qui dat is one of the old Alchemical sayings and it is full of meaning. No doubt this is analogous to our Lord's words, "The wind bloweth where it listeth." He who imparts the spirit to another is as the wind that blows, moved by an influence external to itself. Qui capii, ille sapit, is another, and refers to the wisdom imparted by the reception of the Afflatus, since it awakens in him a consciousness related to the universal.

32. When one life being fermented throws its life to another equally fermented, a greater perfection is produced in the patient than was before in the agent who imparts it. That is the law of progression of the Vital force; - sic itur ad astra!

33. There is no such thing as truth absolute in nature, because she has no true conceptive vehicle; all her conceptive life is deformed and falsified, so that, as Raymond Lully says, "the pure matter of the philosophers is not to be found on earth." In the application of universal principles you must have a pure conceptive medium; that is true which is conceived simple, without any heterogeneous element; thus Light in its ether is truly manifested. Given a perfectly true mirror, the reflection of objects in it would be true. Thus everything depends on the purity of the receiving power. You may find out in Plotinus how that pure matter is generated.

34. The Hermetic Art is a perfecting of the third or lowest or the mineral life in man; and typifies throughout the celestial and Divine; see Khunrath who teaches this essentially. We live in but one life, the head life, but there are Three possible lives; i.e., there is a power of entering into Three modes of consciousness: either in the sensible, the Perceptive, or the power life; this last conjoined to the other Two makes them efficient. We have no right to be efficient In the present head life, our business is to be efficient in the Medial life in faith; then we are efficient for the life immediately Over us – the divine. Our present state is one of Inversion.

35. The analogy insisted on by Khunrath and Grassaeus in his Aquarium between the Philosopher's Stone and Christ the Head Corner Stone is more than pardonable: it is a verisimilitude, and is founded on the fact that our Lord is the embodiment and representation and perfection of the highest moral and spiritual life of man, and the Stone of the Wise is the perfected lowest life, its true consumation which is mineral in its origin. Our Lord had the threefold perfection, the perfection of each life, that of the mineral, vegetable, and animal life, to use Alchemical language. The common Philosopher's Stone is only the perfection of the mineral life in us.

36. Hermetism is the magnetism of Light according to its own Law, which Law is its emanating spirit called wisdom, for it is the Wisdom.

37. Nature taken from the primal source into a will is the history of the Fall. The Art is a question put to Nature respecting the first cause, and it is an extortion from the Protean and Sphynxlike forms of the true answer. To whom, where, in what form, is the question addressed? To the stronghold of the Sphynx herself in the spirit in man. This spirit being reason-gifted can answer if rationally interrogated.

38. Our life goes forth into a line at present, it has to be taken up into a circle; in other words life has to be taken back into its first source; the serpent with his tail in his mouth is the chosen illustration of this reduction of the linear into the circular life.

39. The Walls of Troy are a figure (and were meant by the poets and traditionists to be so) of the insphering of the lower life; it is done in a great resonance. Those walls were said to be built by the music of Apollo. Apollo is that life, and it is coruscant, and in the setting free of that centre, of that coruscation, there is a harmony; what Behmen calls the Mercurius, or spirit of the Sound, is evolved; the ether round the sun is compacted and solidified. The throwing down of the Walls of this by harmony-ensphered life is the Alchemical solution; and this also is accompanied with noise, as Haly says; in another figure the roots of the mineral Tree are in the air, its summit in the earth, and when they are torn from their places a terrible sound is heard and a great fear is felt. Compare also the Chaldaic Oracles (Article Hecate, etc.). However, when this nature is born in us it asserts itself (or rather, I should say, He asserts Himself, for it is more than It) through us. (c.f., Hermes' Golden Treatise, cap. 4.)

40. The body of Brass is the impure natural-born vital spirit.

41. The Hermetic Philosophy is a process of experimentation into the Universal Spirit through man; it is a development of the art by which a particular spirit (to use Vaughan's words) is allied to the universal.

42. The Vegetable spirit is the growth-causing spirit, that which is predominant in the vegetable kingdom.

43. The whole image of the Macrocosm is formed, and has consequently, its typical representation, in the Microcosm, and is evolved before the mental eye in the recreative process of the regeneration. (c.f., Nic. Flamel.)

44. In the work, wherever there is power there is a conflict : the multitudinous enemies try to rush in, the self-willed spirit endeavors to gain the mastery and offers all its lures in order to get the end for itself ; strange mystery it is.

45. I think that the soul comes into this body with the dream of its whole afterlife presented to it. And that is its destiny. This would, however, involve us in a fatalism, if it were not that we may rise above this evestrum, as Paracelsus calls it (Phil. ad Athen, B. 2, texts 1823). The will is always above it, but then it influences the will that does not see beyond it, by giving that will motive; we are moved very often by it, nay, seldom pass beyond it, unless moved by God's grace (the Divine evestrum, relatively to man), and so are enabled to overcome it. The real mystery is so very wonderful, great and dose, that one cannot venture to speak of it in ordinary language.

46. The third life, the mineral or lowest life in man, brings you into contact with the Macrocosmic mineral life; for wheresoever we stand ourselves, there is the relation of the putward life to us itself formed. The Vegetable and Animal lives are higher than the Mineral life in us.

47. Those who are Hermetically regenerated in this world have given up the Head life or the animal, the rational life (not the Divine inseeing of the Celestial life), they cut themselves off from it; they pronounce a word, their life is sealed in another Covenant, they enter into our Lord's Life by a sacrifice in faith that they shall be restored ultimately by Him when He has received for Himself the Kingdom and is returned. Job's story is all a type of that.

48. The Alchemical symbols, phrases, metaphors, which so disguise the art are more than what they seem; they point out a reality, and were we in the spirit of their truth we should find them to be far more true literally than they are thought to be.

49. It strikes me that Behmen is the deepest writer on ontological subjects; he is not so scientific as the Platonists, but he is more descriptive, awakening, suggestive of truth.

50. When an entrance is effected into the Signature, then there is a clearing of the understanding to see in the Divine Wisdom the life, and to bear, by the Divine Utterance, the specific articulation of things, the knowledge of things in their roots, "out of their essence," as Bohme says, "through the principle in the sound with the voice" (Signatura Rerum, ch. I., 1.)

51. The speech of Mind uttered into the pure Ether qualitates and specificates. The Ether is two- fold: the mundane, which is full of the false forms; the pure, which is not of this world but is connected with the supersensual life.

52. There is no true body but Will; it is the principle of the body -the Salt.

53. Bohme's three primary forms and his doctrines on the going forth of the Absolute Will from non- being into manifestation, are modes of expression by man of a conscious experience of the creative mystery; such words of his as hardness, enclosing, coldness, attraction, compunction (Signa. Rerum, ch. II., 12) are intended to express qualities which, acting in the Spirit, become qualitative; they describe spiritual emotions both active and re-active, for such words are not mere theories or suppositions, but expressive, as far as such an instrument can be, of internal knowledge and consciousness. In the Universal, as was the case with Bohme, you must have the Universal developed in you before you can understand the Universal.

54. The whole doctrine of the ontological infolding is emanation; emanation from the superstantial Light or will. The darkness is the emanation and that which before was qualitated and flat becomes cubic by multiplication into itself. It is Mathesis becoming geometric.

55. If you find the Wisdom, and, coming out in the Spirit Of Wisdom, look into the world, then you may see as Solomon did the nature and virtues of all things. The Philosopher, says Sendivogius, in a very eloquent passage, "looks not out on nature with the eyes of common men."

66. Alchemy is the art of fermenting the human vital spirit in order to purify it and finally to dissolve it, so that the principle be reconstructed through a regeneration.

57. There is a dualism or relation of two, in all things, plus the one and the three. The great principle of the number seven is a Rest from the ferment or action of the Vitalising or Divine principles.

58. When speaking of the four elements, Alchemists refer to the four elements of the Universal Ether. This Ether is a quintessence of those very four principles, which they call elements. It is the Quintessence of both worlds.

59. The Divine Light, the Essence of Gold, is hidden in the self-begotten Life. This life of ours, instead of administering to the Divine Life, appropriates it.

60. The mineral soul or the lowest form of life in us, when first seen by introspection, is as a dark vapour, "monstrum, horrendum, informe, ingens, cui lumen ademptum" -it is the Augean Stable the cleansing of which involved Hercules in so much labour.

61. Saturn or the self-willed life can only be overcome in the process by satiation; he must be given from without plenty " of the honey of the bees," the aurific seed, the Rational Light. He first of all entraps the Light, and then he longs for more to feed that centre which he has entrapped, and just as a seed which has drawn light from the sun longs for more and so grows till it bursts out of the Saturnine husk into a flower, and soon no longer grows for itself but for another generation and becomes transmuted, so the selfish Saturnine life in man when once it has passed into its new life, or rather admitted it, assimilates that life into itself and becomes itself transmuted.

62. As man was the Quintessence of the whole creation, so woman was the Quintessence of man - the love-spirit was in her. The whole process of the Mystery was intended to purify the impure vital atmosphere which surrounds each individual life. The action of Mesmerism is a very external way - an imitation of the Divine Art of the separation of which Paracelsus speaks. It solves the bond between the spirit and its corporeal media for the moment, by the perpendicular or vertical passes. Clairvoyants perceive this atmosphere, and the deformities with which it is full; all the thoughts and desires of life are imaged there. Its density or lightness is the cause of the darkness or brightness which may be seen in men.

63. There are two Causes and one Mother in the Work; the Mystery of this is shadowed out in the Myth of Oedipus. It is shut up in those strange allegories of earlier Greek life. Qui capii, ille sapit.

64. The Law of Divine Manifestation is expressed in those striking words of Bohme in the Sig. Rerum, Ch. II., 68 : "An Eternal Will arises in the No THING to introduce the No THING into Something, that the Will might feel and find and behold itself." C.f., the Enigma "Omnia in omnibus" in Khunrath. This is the order imaged out in the Hermetic Work, which is, in fact, an imitation of the Divine.

65. The first-fruits, though perfectly real, should not be accepted as permanent, - the Artist should not stop there; they must be sacrificed for the sake of the promise they contain, would he fulfill the Divine purpose and not his own. There is a good illustration of this in the latter part of that curious little hook, The Hermetic Wedding.

66. True Knowledge is experimental contact of mind with mystery; it is when the mind enters into the Universal consciously; it returns, as it were, into its principle and knows itself in its principle, and there is an efflux of life. It is not merely an experience such as one might have in receiving a blow; there is a consequence in it. The true Adepts had this knowledge and its fruits. Ordinary men only touch a surface: they don't realise; their life is not multiplied into the absolute fountain of being. Many of the Alchemists only saw theoretically; some of them entering into the medial sphere; the Paradisiacal life inferred the higher and deeper.

67. The Salt is the voluntary substance, and is bound up in the lowest region, the generative mineral life, and must be transplanted or drawn up into the medial life (Troy in the old analogy is that citadel where Apollo keeps his cattle, Mercury steals them and afterwards sacrifices them); the Salt thus transplanted becomes Light and grows; and, in growing this sensibly affects the whole connate or surrounding spirit, ferments it, and moves it to contrition. By contrition I mean a real contrition, when the soul through that Light perceives the evil and deviation of the whole individual human life from the Law of Light from the Logos. Speculation on these deep points is rather dangerous, for Light must not be played with. A reverential spirit must tone enquiries of this kind; and even then they are exhaustive of the spirit, because in talking in a theoretic way one draws from oneself and not from the open Fountain; it is the Light without the Love, - it is like mesmerism by will instead of by relation.

68. True Alchemy (not that which the world has run after without finding) is related to Theosophy on its physical side; it concerns that change in the circulatory system of the blood to which St. Martin and Eckartshausen, among others of the same highly experimental school, allude, showing how the change is wrought by reiterated contritions absorbing the sensuous medium and carrying back the purer conscious sans of light to its first life in God.

69. The Christian scheme is the bringing of the whole of our life into the Sonship by regeneration; ' it is an eternal marriage-union between man and God in Christ, as is hinted by St. Paul and in the Book of Revelation. No doubt the state of it, when thoroughly achieved, is one of perfect beautitude; the mind then revels as it were in the appreciation of its Maker, its Source. Man is so a child of God, regenerated or born again as an offspring of his own will, given up in passivity to the Divine Will. It is the death to sin with a new birth awakened in us, and until that takes place we know little or nothing of the sinfulness of this life.

70. It is by emotion that mind is moved into matter. Emotion is a mid-point between the two; conscience strikes upon the self-life, and, when it does so, effectually ferments it and evolves from it a third form of life, a new birth of life.

71. All qualities (every adjective form) are first in the letter, the grounded form, the mathematical flat surface; then in the intellectual, that which understands that; then in the emotional that which feels and as it were has it; then in the expression of the emotional it becomes sensible and so materialized - for the efflux or first origin of matter is upon the sensible experience; hence, the strange nature of the Hermetists and of Bohme about the Sulphur, the Salt and the Mercury; the water, the air, the fire, etc., relates to principles rather than qualities: in the spirit they become qualities. Thought qualitates spirit, and spiritual experiences bring the qualities produced into manifestation, into esse from posse.

72. All is held in potentialty in Will. The Alchemists say that, in the process, there is a point of passivity, where there is no attraction but rather an indifference to both the life and the death; then the Artist must look to his Work, and seek to stir up the Motion; this we learn in the language of the older Masters, that when Vulcan appears in the same altar with Minerva the conjunction is ominous. This means that all the desire of life is towards the Wisdom-life, that pure, good, beautiful, passionless life: of itself it's needs nothing, but if it is stirred it is taken; what takes it is the self-will. The whole of this mystery is a translation of the consciousness; for there is a life behind the consciousness, Present consciousness lives in and is drawn out to sense; it may be, it should be, thrown backwards, nay upwards, into its First Source.

73. The Philosophic Matter is an excruciated ens of Light; a Light extracted through anguish from Life. The process goes over and over again, for we could not bear the birth in our own strength; it is a successive giving up of itself to be bettered on the part of Will. The principle of it is wonderfully beautiful when one gets a glimpse of it, but it is almost too sacred, and impinges so strongly on the Spirit-life that I don't think you can think into such spheres of life without moving them, or being moved by them.

74. Everything is in Will. All in the beginning is Will; it is the foundation of everything, and is everything; it is the only true substance of body. It subsists first in one will, then in two wills, and exists in the third; it then becomes a self-assertion.

75. All the false sulphurs (by sulphurs I mean forms) of the mundane life require to be purified, nay, perhaps extirpated, in order that the medium for manifestation of the Divine Light may be simple and pure. The human spirit has to die to everything that it now lives to, and lastly to its own identity, in order to become a simple receptacle of and magnet for the Divine Seed. When it re-arises it is a true manifestation, reflex and image of the Divine; that is the condition of the highest regeneration. All true religion in this life is a preparation of the Will for this final work.

76. We have no business whatsoever to speak THE NAME. If it should speak in us it will work its own change in us (c.f., St. Martin's Correspondence, letter 30, p. 107); that is how it spoke in our Lord's baptism, when the Voice came, "How I have both glorified my name and I will glorify it again." It would seem as if our Lord when He prayed "Father, glorify thy Name," and received that answer, needed new strength by the utterance of the NAME; hence He introduced that prayer by the declaration "Now is my soul troubled."

77. "Take that matter which is gold," says Eirenaeus, "and throw it into Mercury, such a Mercury as is bottomless, whose centre it can never find but by discovering its own"; in finding the magical earth in yourself, in your own centre, you find that which is in the air or the vegetable life, that pure earth which commences the Regeneration, the medial life, (nascitur in aere terra magica; in ethere clarificatur). The mineral earth belongs to the lower life and to the centre of the globe. (See St. Martin's Theos. Correspondence, p. 117.)

78. Wisdom is nowhere so well described as in the Book of Wisdom; it is a pure exemplar from the first Light or Life, showing man what he ought to be, and offering to conform him to it. The standard is very high and arduous, nothing but entire self-devotion is of any use even to begin with. Its end is that so-called annihilation bringing back into the Nothing which is before all things. You see it holds such a strong contrast in hand, the perfection of the Law of Light, and the defection of humanity; just that state described by Job: "I have heard of thee by the hearing of the ear, but now mine eye seeth Thee; therefore I abhor myself and repent in dust and ashes". This Divine Wisdom in us has to be born over and over again; it is an ultimate in the procedure in human restoration.

79. The life acts through the sensuous and sensible spirit in the blood; it is all to be taken up into, I suppose, the will to cause another and new life to grow out of its death. If you magnetize a person, he is elevated into a purer atmosphere instantly; the natural tendency at once is to a purification; it dissolves the sensuous medium and opens the consciousness to the Divine life; you may corrupt it by introducing forcibly upon the patient a bad will, but it is not, naturally, easy to do so.

80. Out of the ashes of this present sensuous spirit arises the Phoenix.

81. There is a war in the Work between the self-will and the Universal Will, and all the faculties and desires are engaged on one side or the other;

the effort of the Universal Will is to draw them into its service by first destroying them, and then reproducing them in a transmuted form.

82. The Solar Tincture (Tinctura Solaris) is the Aurific Light.

83. The physical problem as Kirchberger calls it (Theos. Correspondence, p. 168) is the making visible the invisible spirit. Verbum invisible fiat palpabile et germinabit ut radix; it is a taking of the infinite Light-nature into bound by hypostatic multiplication of its shadow or image.

84. Lives as long as they are superficies don't create; they are merely principles.

85. The Philosopher's Stone is a real entity produced by spiritual generation; it is a real ens of light; it is both objective and subjective - an actuality as well as a theory.

86. Living in the Second Principle means living the Paradisaical life; they all lived in it - under the Cross; the heart life below the arms which, when extended, give a Cross, represents this, and is this.

87. The Universal Will being represented as agent dissolves the false forms in the self-will represented as patient. The great Salt Sea (Wisdom, the Universal Will) dissipates the impure sulphurs (desires, phantasms) in the individual will as the strokes of the sun's rays dissipate the darkness of night.

88. There are three microcosmic centres in man, - the eye of the Divine, animal rational head life; the heart of the celestial medial vegetable life; the lumbar region of the inferior mineral life. The universal matter is obtainable at the focus of either centro.

89. The true manifestation of the law of Light is what is to be sought; the place of its manifestation is in the soul. "There is room for the image also in the circumlucid place. Every way to the unfashioned soul stretch the reins of fire" (See "Chaldaic Oracles" and Stanley's Hist. Phil.)

90. In the Philosophical dissolution the body, soul and spirit are separate; the body lies without any breath; the other two are united to it as by a thread, and this continues until the re-fixation takes place. Through every stage of the process of re-generation, through every stage of progress, the same principles are maintained in operation until the assimilation is perfected and the Divine Will is all. There is no defection then; the selfhood has nothing to deface, nothing to deform. Many modern metaphysicians have taken the first ground, their starting point, from the Mystics; I mean Fichte, Schelling, Hegel, Kant, and others of kindred mind. They worked hard on the margin of intellectual intuition of truth. Kant never got beyond or behind it, but stood on and ranged round the negative margin. Fichte and Schelling broke through into the ontological, the Absolute ground, seeing but without experiencing. Jacob Böhme here transcended them. He was in the Experience, but they transcended him in scientific intuition. Oken's case was different; he appears to have had an inspiration into the science of created nature. Böhme saw into the uncreated and felt it; the arising Life was in him consciously.

91. Kirchberger (Theos. Correspondence, p. 236) thought that "the Divine Will makes use of the human voice as an organ for conducting the Light, through the fire." It strikes me that he is right in this; the fire here is our chaotic will in potentiality, it is the basis of our microcosmic re-creation.

92. I am always surprised that these Mystics refer so little to the Psalms; with the exception of Arndt there are none who seem to recognize their surpassing depth of Divine experience.

93. The Key to the Work, or into another life, the Key of the House of David, is obtained from the desire of the lower life, the generative, the fallen life, opening up into the heart life, or the medial life, or the celestial life, or the vegetable life, by extasis.

94. The strength of the attraction of that which is above (the feminine principle, -Wisdom, - the heart life), forces, draws, attracts, as by a magnet, the self-willed source upwards, so that this latter becomes transmuted into a passive feminine principle. The draw up is sudden and as at an instant; a sudden force of admiration does it; it is love which attracts. Nothing else could move that principle from its self-conscious centre into self-oblivion. The seed of this life, the paternal principle, is drawn up. As the feminine spirit is the cause of the Fall, so is it in an advanced stage, you know, the cause of the restoration when it advances up there. When the attraction is placed above instead of below a restoration of what was lost takes place and more also; if Paradise regained were merely the old Paradise regained, why, then, the Fall would be a thing to be wondered at and deplored; but seeing that it promises in the restoration a much greater good (for the second Adam is greater than the first) may we not regard it as in accordance with the "eternal purpose, purposed in Christ Jesus, our Lord ?"

95. St. Martin has a curious remark respecting the foundation of the two Testaments. He asserts it to consist "in the true pronounciation of the two great names " (Theo, Corr., p. 244); this involves more than his words convey to common sense; as showing what really and originally the Old and New Testaments are founded on, namely, on the revealed utterance of the life of God in man. Out of that all minor details follow and belong, and all the particulars that spring out of that Universal, all who have been on that original ground, agree; they corroborate one another; the New Testament is a development and fulfillment of the promise of the Old, and with that fulfillment gives another promise.

96. All religions are founded on prior revelations, but Polytheism is distinguished from Monotheism by its deviation, from the central principle.

97. As the World is diverse, so is the manifestation of the Spirit diverse; and so powers subordinate to God are evolved. Of this we have a remarkable illustration in those words of comment made by our Lord on the language of David : "I have said ye are gods, if (says our Lord) ye called them gods unto whom the Word of God came." Where that Word comes there is power in an individual; the danger is the tendency in such gifted beings to set up self-centres. This is the key to the philosophy of the Second Commandment as the practical result of the violation of the First. A graven image means a vocal utterance carved into the understanding spirit which conceives it by the desire of life; the image lives in the heart and the whole individual worships it, and endeavors to conform to it; that sort of graven image may be carried out magically into material forms and objectively worshipped, and this we see becomes more and more weakened the further it departs from its source till it becomes a mere dead representation - common idolatry; the ancient prophets impugned both, but the danger and sin of the latter is as nothing compared to those of the former, for in it was vitality and efficacy.

98. The Initiated moved one another on by words of power. The Masons grasp this, but have lost the Magic Key, which was so carefully prepared by the anonymous author of the Tractatus Aureus (see Museum Hermeticum, edit. 1649 p. 45) to open the door into the Hermetic garden;

they want the words, which are only to be found by seeking them in the subjective, the fundamental life, from which they are as far out as the tools they use. The true tools also may be found on the way in; they will be given one after another as they are wanted, i.e., the double Triangle and triple Tau, etc.

99. These and kindred principles are sacred in their originals; in their ultimates from the centre they are not so, they are celestial and outward; the celestial as well as the ultimate may be used. There is not that sacredness in the outward tools: they are representatives of those that are in The Recess of Light, though they are meant for sacred use, and are so far consecrated on account of purpose.

100. The outward form of Masonry is too absurd to be perpetuated were it not for a certain secret response of common sense to the original mystery; so it is with the acceptance of all religious systems: it is based in faith, and faith looks to the invisible.

101. The perfection of each man is to submit to have his fundamental faith, which is his individual Logos, perfectly elaborated -i.e., fermented - so as to transmute the whole being, so that the whole body, soul and spirit may be saved in it. Few have ever perfected this, though there were doubtless degrees of it; the birth of this life prevents the complete work: it is not intended to be completed till the time Comes. The danger of diving into the mystery of life through Alchemical seekings is that it tempts you to break the seals upon the hook of life artificially in order to hasten the work, instead of waiting Gods will and pleasure about it. He will hasten up all at last quickly enough. The Hermetists themselves always war against over-haste. Norton says, " Haste is the Devils part." There is a swiftness in the self-willed magnet working powerfully and to destruction if suffered to do so before its time. Ripley warns against this under the similitude of red poppies - the work gets all burnt up and the artist has to begin over again. Nevertheless in every mistake there is a lesson for future guidance.

102. The Crown, to use Böhme's and de St. Martins phrase, is the Logos. The whole of the Divine purpose appears to be to bring the self-willed opposition into subjection through man's consent and operation, in order that the original fallen body of the will in Lucifer may become a ground and body to the Divine instead of being apostate. The scheme is wonderful, and appears perfectly marvellous the moment the mind enters into perception of it; that is, the value of man. The body, the really efficient body of the Will, is at present alienated from and in rebellion, as it were experimentally, against its first source.

103. Engelbrecht lived like Swedenborg, in the visionary sphere, and with no education of the intellect, had, it strikes me, the less gauge for truth. One reads his writings without any sense of value, except such as they might be to his own mind, and to such as himself. Böhme's mind was on quite another ground; it was altogether withdrawn from surfaces, which in him were objective instead of subjective; he looked to them with a light that penetrated and comprehended them. There is a certain truth in the analogical sphere, but it is only relative. The wise called it the Regio phantastica; all the true Hermetists knew it, and valued it only for the derived light of its essence, not for any light it gave them; it was as a pabulum for them, but only when deprived of all phantasmagoric form. All those little peep-shows are shadows of it, and no doubt children enjoy these things at fairs because their spirits are near this source. A deep intellect will not stay in these spheres, it will be drawn deeper by gravitation to the primary sources of life. Some persons, however, such as perhaps Engelbrecht, misconceive this Evester, as Paracelsus calls it, and having a simple understanding see things pretty truly if they continue faithful of purpose without much self-desire; it is self-desire that adulterates. Vaughan, the Welshman, very elegantly depicts the play of that ether. In Böhme, as in the higher regenerate men, the body became as the iron in the forge, no longer visible as before, but penetrated through and swallowed up with the Light. On that principle, by the bye, pictures of the Ascension and Transfiguration should be painted; they should paint Light, making the central body of the Light stronger than the outside. Like the eye and its iris, a body can only become invisible through excess of light from within it. It is by the shutting up of ours in its centre that we become sensibly visible to sense; it only emanates from the focus of the eye, and it is that light thrown in to find its own centre and origin which awakens that centre at last and causes it to coruscate.

104. When the archetypal Light is perceived, it burns up all anterior manifestations, images and representations, all that is not of itself; it perceives itself alone, for it is objective and subjective both; it is Truth. There is nothing alien in it or possible to it, for it burns up all that is alien, transmuting all that is not combustible into itself.

105. De St. Martin says, "Numerical numbers are merely the bark of things," (p. 298, Corres.), and outer nature is the bark of them as the tradition of Scripture is the bark of the inner law. My notion of numbers considered theosophically is that they represent, and are the order of the development of, the Divine Law in actual creative operation, and that they are known in their arithmetical forms of addition and subtraction (of which multiplication and division are developments) through their personal representation in theurgic art, by which spirit is added to spirit and multiplied as offspring, producing points, planes, cubes, which being again conjoined, have their confluence in materiality. The mystic Tetractys of Pythagoras was thus obtained; the source, as he called it, of ever-flowing Nature; such an ens was the basis of the philosophic stone, a metaphysico-chemical birth, emanating according to the creative law, proving itself doubly, triply, by a realisation of the first represented will; and this is known in Regeneration, individually proven and proving all.

106. All members that work here for the natural work, work also for the super-essential. All the organs of the senses are brought to bear against the principle of sense or the sensuous medium in the blood; then the hands are taught to war and the fingers to fight, and all natural secretion is superseded by super-essential hyperphysical exsudation and tears; for when the connate spirit is deprived of its understanding spirit, as is imaged in the Iliad after the death of Patroclus, and in the grief of Hercules for the loss of Hylas, life flows away, until by self-exhaustion it rallies from a new centre.

107. Grammar has its foundation in operations of the Spirit, of which will is the substantive or noun, love the qualitative adjective form; their union coming into self-expression is the verb affirmative, I am.

108. The sensual medium must in the work be brought to its pivot, to its last ens. The residuum from this medium supplies body to the regenerate soul; after that the soul has passed under its Cross. De St. Martin says in allusion to this that "the earth is the crucible for souls as well as bodies," - see Tableau Naturel, vol. II., p. 230. Also the Smaragdine Table - "The power is integral if it be turned into earth;" this earth becomes the punctum saliens of the Divine Cross which before was its punctum.

109. Festina lente, Ne quid nimis, are sayings very applicable to the work, and very important in conducting it, and that whether in its higher or lower form. It may seem strange to say so, but too much haste to be good or perfect involves a self-willed action which defeats the end; it is the duty of man's will to follow God's Will as He, according to His time and measure, opens the way. Be not righteous overmuch, says Solomon, showing that we should not exceed the capacity which is given; if we do, it gives power to the contrary principle to re-act upon the over-run. (Note. - The action of the self-will on the soul which exaggerates its religious life may be seen in the history of men, Jewish and Christian, in spiritual pride, in contempt of others, in morbid self-anatomy, in want of charity or allowance for others, in the odium theologicum, whether they who show these qualities were called Pharisees or Katharoi or Devotes or Puritans.)

110. The whole work is an action of agent on patient, and the re-action of patient, advancing, on agent. The work is gradual, yet always progressive; each fermented spirit advances upon its origin. Desire constricts the essence of what it desires and so draws matter about the image of its object.

111. The lucidity and terseness of even Bacon's style if turned from the a posteriori to the a priori ground would be equally lucid and perspicuous to those who discovered the latter, but would be eminently abstruse and involved and mystical to such as are of a merely perceptive mind cognisant of sensibles, because the natural understanding and language are inadequate to express things belonging to absolute truth; they were never framed to it. The language of the spirit itself only can clearly express and reveal its own life. Nevertheless the more the inner becomes elaborated by thought through the organisation, the more intelligible can its light be made by natural language to the natural understanding.

112. It is true that all inner principles are evolved out-wardly, but they are thrown into deviation in the course of evolution by the halting, obstructive movements of the law of individual life.

113. Kirchberger says for de St. Martin (Theos. Corresp., p. 359) that "there is no true government but a Theocracy." This is a great truth, but the social surface to bear a theocratic government must first be coordinate; the World's surface can only be governed by the centre from which it is derived - that is, its king; and if the Divine Centre moves into a superficial dominion it immediately proceeds to re-create and prepare for the dethronement of the Old centre by dissolution of the corrupt surface. A perfect law is quite unfit for an imperfect community in immediate form; it works by intermediate degrees of completeness before it attains power to work through to regenerate without destruction of that which, taken up progressively, is valuable (see de St. M's Reply, p. 364).

114. People in whom the Mars or Venus property is dominant, especially when they both co-exist, are drawn very closely in consciousness to the vortex of life - the Sol principle; their knowledge is by experience, not perception or intuition, which are the property of Mercury and Jupiter, which can enunciate far more clearly than the mere emotional spheres, but cannot feel as well, or realise without the voluntary dominance of Saturn and Luna. These supply efficiency to their respective light and life.

115. De St. Martin found an entrance into the centre of the substantial life which every creature is seeking, and in the perfect law of which all who have truly entered and known that centre agree. It is in the identity of this revelation in every individual, that this agreement arises. For this truth is at once a unity and a universal.

116. Kirchberger was drawn to and worked about the intellectual imagination of the inner life, seeking means of further entrance perhaps, at least sometimes, rather than to become integrated or made anew and converted wholly into the Light he saw. This is the snare of most intellectual seekers; they desire to dive deeply by the one ray of intellect rather than to transfuse its converting light and essence through the darkness of the selfhood on which it shines. It is true that high revelations may be obtained in that way, intuitions even, but without clothing or realisation, unless the spirit of such a seeker returns before it is too late to take up the life which was born with the Light, and which it has left behind in the forgetful enjoyment of its own researches.

116. Intellectual seekers get quickly deeper, but have more to overcome. Seekers, who are in the Divine order of Love, who are passive, are worked at every surface of the Spirit, and this takes time; for doing is more tedious than seeing, but then it is surer, it takes up everything under God's Will.

117. Everyone can find in himself at moments the true centre, if only the thought dives deep enough, and so long as he is there every particular truth will be perceived in its widest acceptance; because without hindrance there is nothing to stop thought there except the law of thought itself. Thus de St. Martin's mind expatiated broadly and freely, asserted universal truths in reply to the particular enquiry of his friend; so he answers him and does not: he answers questions and explodes them. And so in the Hermetic process there is an inquisition into life, in which every question is solved, thrown into solution, and a new basis furnished for further enquiry; and here every solution is a convertive process and progress in entity and hypostatic relation. When I ask you a question or you me, the doing so does not change, though it affects, our life; but there it does both, because the solution enters into the spirit of the enquirer: it is intimate, alchemical; it is light dissolving darkness until there is no more darkness or shadow of doubt. You must understand that the intellect is the enquirer and, as individual, is sceptical. The Universal Reason condescends to answer it when not self-seeking and too proud to know. To the true seeker after truth in humility, not in pride, it responds. Kant saw that, Hegel saw it, Fichte knew it, Schelling saw it, Böhme knew it and proved it by his experienced in-seeing whereby he became it.

118. It requires Light to throw light upon Light; darkness looking in and looming only darkens. It is the blind leading the blind, or worse than that; it is a blind man dragging about his dog instead of his dog dragging him. Hence by reading St. Pauls Epistles in the atmosphere of the higher Mystics, more knowledge of his meaning, more insight into his depths, is given than can be drawn from any professed commentators. The Theosophic light opens him at a much wider plane of thought than the Theological.

119. In that dream your mind was carried back into its ether; the ethereal consciousness brought into relation with the Universal Ether. That ether is the omnia in omnibus of the Hermetic Riddle. What we have is a scrap of that ether shut in at our birth-conception. All qualities are in it and colour it.

120. The first vegetative life is green, it arises with hope; it is hope, the first aspiration to something better, to progress and improvement; it is a beautiful principle, the sensation of it on such as are permitted in consciousness to enter into it is blessed. The purple color is its ripened Life; it is the benedicta viriditas of the old masters (Song of Sol., cap.II).

122 "Man is the servant and interpreter of Nature," says Bacon, and truly, so long as he goes outwardly and away from himself and from God to find knowledge; but when he returns within according to the Divine Ordinance and Law of Reason, he finds himself no longer the mere "servant and interpreter " but that he has a capacity in his own principle of being and life, when allied to God, to become, next Him, revealer and master.

122. The only objection that can be urged rationally to the a priori investigation of nature is the lapse of the human soul, the fall away of it into selfhood, which has defaced the image, so that it no longer reflects the truth nor perceives it until it has been regenerated; and so far the objection is valid, but not beyond. The a priori method is the true one for the discovery of the first truths; the difficulty of the method does not invalidate its superiority; when found it proceeds to prove itself a posteriori by efficient procedure, as it were by what is commonly called miracle; and this, the inductive philosophy or method never can arrive at, since it goes further and further out, and finds its strength in remoteness from the casual source. The subjective can prove itself, has proved itself, to the objective; the objective never can prove itself by originating any effects.

123. The whole of the self-included vaporous vehicle of the soul must be evaporated before any truth is evolved. The vaporous vehicle is the maternal principle in the conception, it obscures the pure paternal light of life -the generative light, in order to bring it out into sense. The birth into this life is a continuous image of the Fall; the Fall was not at first sensible, but spiritual; the principle of the Fall is a long way back behind its effects.

124. The spirit of Nature is all imagination, ideality, fancy. She wraps herself about with what you call aromal essences, aromal emanations, in order to realize her imaginings. Nature is a personality whenever it is included in particular, and also when regarded universally it is the same in the being of the orb soul. She is sometimes more at one time than at another in a phantastic state, when there is more power given her from the Central Source to work with, as in earthquakes and convulsions. Then she makes beautiful scenery, and throws about her shaping essence gracefully to be clothed at those junctures with the material that is in process of reformation. She enjoys re-constructing in the World, just as she does in us when the constructing organ is called into play. The embellishing spirit goes with the constructive, though not always in the same degree; that is highest and strongest when she has most supply of life. Of course, there is a sense of beauty in Nature or else the world would be ugly.

125. Children have the growth spirit in them (the vegetale spirit which is more phantastic than the animal) and therefore they imagine more freely and with less resistance from consciousness of the actual. They are not so entirely included in the circle of life and circulation. When that is completed it shuts them more in, and growth upwards stops; the intercourse is then not so free with the spirit of Nature; it is imprisoned in the self-consciousness, and self becomes the magnet.

126. Böhme surpassed the Neo-Platonists in his revelations of the Life Centre; of this they delivered down the principles scientifically in accordance with the natural reason and scholar-like knowledge of all contemporary literature, and of Eastern philosophy and tradition; besides which they underwent an Initiation perfected through long ages of experience; so that their theosophy bears the same relation to Böhme's as the astronomy of Ptolemy would to that of Newton. It was not their practice to declare the inner experience of the Mystae and Teleioi; they chiefly confined themselves to the psychological investigation and experiments.

127. Weight is the analog of Will.

128. There are two magnets in man, i.e., two wills contending for man: the one universal, the other particular; the one related to the Divine Centre, the other to the self centre. Therefore these two contend for the soul. The Hermetic picture of the two dogs, the Corascene dog and that of Armenia, as they sometimes are called, is an illustration of this, as is also the allegory of the Duellum between the two knights; in the common life they are not in contact, they are remote from each other, the one, that related to the self-will, being carried out through the senses; the other, the good life, being hidden and requiring to be sought out by the will and desire of man turned towards it.

129. When the medial life draws the hidden Central light, there is a tremendous Central action now, i.e., in this life, we are upside down. The Sulphur, the pure light of life, is bound down in the inferior mineral region of life, and has to be drawn forth and transplanted into the medial region before it can grow and become manifest. It is brought up like a graft, "verbum invisible fiat palpabile et germinabit ut radix." You see, the Central hidden light (there's the mystery) is hidden in the voluntary contrariation which is a salt and a poison to it, and therefore Sendivogius says that Saturn (i.e., Will) has the Key to the prison where Sulphur lies bound; for that which Will has bound, Will only can unbind.

130. Supposing I have a will that wishes to loosen your will, or rather the will that binds your life individually. I throw its purpose into your mind, and so ferment the whole including spirit of your life that it, the former, opens, corrupts, dissolves, and so lets loose the light of which the latter was begot, i.e., the light which comes into every soul born into the world. When this light is let loose, it shines forth with a sudden coruscation feeding on the surrounding ether which constitutes the atmosphere of the life, as is described in the midnight sun seen by Apuleius when he was initiated by the Goddess Isis. (You are always taken down there by spiritual guides; it is never human initiation, that). This Will being so brought forth (in point of fact, the Olden Bough - 6th Aeneid - has to be found first) returns after transplantation to complete the work which is begun for the perfecting of the soul life, which is :—

There is an action and re-action of the opposite poles (the two magnets before mentioned) to perfect one another, or rather each by the other, in the overcoming the negative law, the evil, the selfhood, into which the original sin resulted. The action of the two on one another resembles that of an acid and alkali, beginning in a violent effervescence and ending in coalescence under a third form, so as Ripley ("revived ") says, through Eirenaeus, "the Corascene dog and the bitch of Armenia, after all their snarling and biting, brought forth a sky-colored whelp." (This colour is the colour of Wisdom.)

131. When light meets light there is true self-perception, and man begins to know and to hate and to rectify himself and desire rectification.

132. To utter from spirit-suggestions is a fearful thing; spirits get footing in the life through utterance; every time strengthening, it makes place for them, as it were, by vacuity of self-will, and, there being no substitution from the Divine, they take possession of the soul and plague it subsequently into submission.

133. By music, the human spirit is passed back into its original sources; the sound makes a concave in the recipient life; it is formative in the ether; matter arranges itself geometrically in accordance with the forms educed.

134. The Vulcan of the Alchemists is Motion. Why Vulcan is represented as lame in the Myths is because motion or action in this life is halting; it runs after something which it never catches; it runs in a line, keeping on without returning, circularly into its own principle; in this life it is not meant to do so, for nothing here contains its own principle in itself. Vulcan is not the fire, the ignis Philosophorum, but the stirrer up of the fire.

135. The first step in this Philosophy is to create motion in the spirit. The Vulcan or Faber is the instrument of the motive agent - the mind.

136. The spirit freedworks by itself, by its own law, "ignis et Azoth tibi sufficiunt" the wonder must be to see it working its miracle.

137. We are all compacted in a certain petrification, i.e., life in each is as a stone in its first being; therefore they say "take that stone", meaning take life as it is and ferment it, that is by another life, which will dissolve and kill it as well as itself; both will be reproduced in a third.

138. There is this difference between fermentation and ordinary generation, that the one is exalted in its result, the other keeps level and equal with its offspring: spiritual generation is according to the fermentative law; by fermentation of its own light it keeps on rising, until it reaches the perfection of its law. It is an ascending, not a descending, process.

139. The Divine Art evolves various states of life and develops various possibilities, offering many objects and allurements to the will. And as whatever the will enters into or draws to, becomes realized, therefore the will should aim singly at the highest good lest it create for itself idols. The creating itself into a being is the evil. This is what Lucifer did; he did not know before he tried the experiment that the stirring up of the Central fire in his Will would inflame the vehicle of his life, and burn up the ether which was Heaven.

140. "Seek ye first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness and all these things shall be added unto you", said our Lord. This, in its application to the Hermetic Art, and when the principle governs the seeker, is really the shortest as well as the truest road to the attainment of all that is promised or can be looked for. Everything is in the perfected Corner Stone, when the whole torch of life, regeneration is brought up into the head-consciousness, what they call in the north. The life is dislocated now; what ought to be up is down; it wastes itself. The Efficient must be regained. That is, it is to be related to mind and not to the generative life.

141. If you seek a finite end first, i.e., before you seek the Universal - the Kingdom of God - which you are ordered to do, you will have to give up the former at every stage, if a right seeker; and unless you are wicked, and steal the first fruits of the spirit's offerings, all sorts of gifts are offered: you may stop in any of them: if you do, you commit idolatry. It is against God's ordinance; that is the real truth as expressed in the 1st and 2nd Commandments especially; though it is a breach of all, in the higher spiritualistic sense. If the human Will creates itself into an entity there is the second death; a miserable existence is created and made permanent. We were made mortal in order to save us from that, "now, therefore, lest he put forth his hand and take of the Tree of Life and eat and live for ever," etc. (Gen. III.) If the immortality is made in the self-will, it is contrary to the Universal Will: the result is a wrathful biting life, hopeless. I don't much like looking into that kind of thing.

142. What is it that Nature strives to gain through man, because creation has lapsed into it? I suppose it is an escape from vacuity into entity, from the seeming and shadow into reality. There is no human misery which can compare to that.

143. Self-knowledge is the first contact of consciousness in the ground of life.

144. The First Matter is not to be found on earth, as the philosophers say; you must go back into the original of life from which it springs; go back in consciousness. It is immediately antecedent to the first consciousness. How beautifully Plotinus describes that generation of the First Matter as a recessure of reason behind itself into the indefinite intermediate between reason and the Absolute. This is merely the metaphysic of it. It is never realised so, it is merely intelligible so to the highest reason, for this First Matter thus presents itself as the extreme of bound and definiteness reverting to non-being.

45. The Hermetic Process is a regular inquisition into life. There is motion present with interrogation. Generally speaking the descriptions of the Matter as it appears to the eye of mind regardant of its own first source, the whole process, all the descriptions, relate to the one universal entity of life, the omnia in omnibus before manifestation and individuality, the thing of which you may assert everything; Proteus.

146. There is a spirit-man within the natural man and his work is to move the Ether.

147. When the natal bond is broken, the Elias spirit is born and his work is to prepare for something higher. This is the analog of the Work revealed in Holy Scripture, just as the Stone is the analog of the Chief Corner Stone.

148. As the Divine Art works in and with the Universal Spirit, the Proteus mentioned above is mechanical as well as alchemical and uses instruments as well as vessels; as the heart and brain are its vessels, so are the hand and eye its instruments and vessels also, the eye particularly. Every member is in short working for the end proposed to fulfill the law of the head, the direction, I mean, given by the head; without taking all the powers and appliances you narrow the view of this art, which comprehends everything wanted here on earth analogically.

149. The reason why there are so many seeming contradictions in the descriptions given of the First Matter in its manifestations, is that the things said of it are transmutable adjective forms, which may become one another, and what they are at one moment they change from at another. Virgil alluded to this in the advice to Aristeus as to the mode in which he should arrest and bind Proteus (c.f., Vaughan's Aula Lucis, pp. 15-16).

150. When the consciousness is opened into rapport with the spiritual spheres, it comes into relationship with multiplicity of being and beings of good or evil character according to the state in which the vital spirit is within the blood. If a person in the inner life came suddenly into this outer life, and his senses were awakened into perception of the vastness and variety of things, he would be astonished at what he saw; just so would be the case with one coming into relation with the manifold world within.

151. As is Nature to God, so is the outward Bible in my opinion to the inner: the letter to the spirit, the historical to the ontological. When St. Paul says " the letter killeth " he means that the living letter of the law is too powerful a test for man's spirit. The Law of Eternal Justice cannot be met but by the Mediatorial Sacrifice from which the new spirit arises. I don't like to say much here; it seems to me presumptuous rather. I half see it. It is talking too theoretically of the Christian Love which reconciles, of the Humility which was deeper than the pride which caused the Fall. We cannot imagine of the depths of that suffering, that utter self-abandonment.

152. The vision and experience of the inner life is the game to all who enter into it, after they have passed the phantasmagoric region and so far unriddled the sphynx of this world as to enter into its solution, i.e., in its dissolved essence which is the mercury of the Philosophers, Proteus. Thus Aristaeus went to Proteus to learn how he could get on after he had lost all his bees, all the faculties of his soul, with the generative life.

153. Nature reduced to the extremity of her last unit or monad turns upon her axis and rallies up into a new life, and displays all the powers of her centre as light does in ether. All colors, all forms, all possibilities of being, are then brought before the seer.

154. If there were no art in the Divine world there would be none in this. The mystery is an art revealed to regenerating men, to advance them on to perfection; it is revealed, but by whom, whence, where?

155. You can't get the medial nature, the anima media, either of man or nature without its law, and that law is an impulse towards rectification and regeneration. As the seed of a natural object to its nature, so is the seed of spirit to spirit. This is alluded to by St. Paul when he says, "it is sown in corruption, it is raised in incorruption".

156. Every manifestation contains the promise of another superior to it, the germ or seed, as it were:

Felix qui potuit rerum cognoscere causas / Atque metus omnes et inexorabile fatum / Subjecit pedibus, etc. These words are a grand declaration of a deep Hermetic truth, for when the individual light of life is lodged in its casual centre, the whole of the evil nature adhering is precipitated to the extremities, destroying the downward gravitating attraction or rather overcoming it, and leaving all the threefold life freedom of ascent. This is a deep subject; I can hardly grapple it, it requires working out. That which relates us to the lower principle is cast out with the consciousness of the self evolved power, for:—

157. In the Regeneration there is a wonderful birth of freedom to act every and realize every volition; this, so far as regards self-will, is given up under the Christ-life in its higher development and subjected to the Father's will.

158. What does the Reason (vernunft) seek? Causes, and, through secondary, the higher Cause, the punctum saliens of life, and there it finds its root consciously. The Light which springs up in that alliance is the Divine aurine seed and true form of gold. That was the "Golden Bough" which Aeneas carried, and which took him safely through Tartarus.

159 In the great combat of Life internal on the plain of truth, the will on either side, that of the universal and the self centre, sends forth all its troops, that is, the various powers, as they are called upon successively; the rational light keeping back to the last, and never aroused into action until deprived of its understanding essence which is taken captive by the rational light on the other side; not being able to subsist without this, the rational intellect goes forth to avenge it and die. This is predestinated from the first; the process, however, goes on over and over again; it is not concluded in this world. This war is the war between the two principles of the self-will and the Divine Will. We are born into the self-will, and by the Divine mercy shut up in nature in order that we may not feel the bitterness springing from the course of the self-life, what Böhme calls the bitter anguish of the driving wheel of existence. All the whole scheme of Christianity is to redeem us out of that misery by the interposition of God's grace between us and it.

160. Alchemy goes beyond nature: it takes her up and advances her beyond her created stand in this world. "Art, then, what nature left in hand doth take, /And out of one a two-fold work doth make."

161. I am perfectly sure that the Hermetic is the only true key to the old myths, and to Homer's Iliad and Odyssey, because the solution which it gives is entirely adequate to the subject. Procleus develops the ontological basis of the Iliad; Virgil wrote upon the same initiated ground; the Georgics are an allegory all through, an analogical instruction in celestial and spiritual agriculture. I regard the whole of the Aeneid as illustrative of the same truths in another form - the 6th Book markedly so.

162. When the Divine presence arises in the human life, all that is alien and contrary is dispelled "as wax before the fire", as David says in the 68th Psalm, and there is great rejoicing and a setting free of the life which has been so long imprisoned, and at the further of the Divine Power all the circumferential etherial sphere is shaken and there is an abundant influx of the Holy Spirit; and underneath all this there is revealed that wonderful White Light which Van Helmont speaks of, though in a very superficial way, as the Quellem, and which the Kabalists celebrate as belonging to the Ancient of Days, i. e., the primeval Light. This action is a merging of the whole of the variety of Life into its first unity.

163. In the process of the Hermetic regeneration there is a drawing of power and life up through the feet which may be called breathing, pumping up of the rich essences of the spirit; the essential gold which is of the substance of light; that, drawn up in this manner, becomes through our organization into operation and visibility if permitted, or unless returned for a higher purpose to its fountain. "The ransom of a man's life are his riches; "man at that moment craving the riches of the whole world set before him, gives them up. This is imaged even in our ordinary life in the world, where we find men giving up the chance of acquiring wealth for science and her rewards, for poetry, for duty and what not How much more does this hold good for the true seeker when he is brought to the fountain head of all riches and wisdom essential.

164. Those old Grecian fables are wonderful, most acute, refined, witty; when understood they are most relishing. Take for instance the fable of Midas turning everything into gold and thereby starving himself. He is thus a representation of one whose will, for want of returning the aurific substance of life into its source and living there, becomes fossilized and starved in the mere possession of that life, holding it as he did in the selfhood.

165. The process is a passage of life through various spheres of being, in any of which the will may rest, but every one of which presents a law of progress at its development which should be pursued to the end - the Divine manifestation - and every stoppage of the will short of this is in its way punished. There is no standing still in those spheres of perpetual motion. Upwards or downwards the will must go.

166. It is quite true that Nature, as the Bishop of Oxford (Wilberforce) says, is as much the voice of God as Revelation is, but Nature, I think, no longer presents a true image or echo of that voice since the fall off from the Divine Law. Revelation is given to rectify and draw back man and all Nature through man to the original Truth. The present form of Nature is a fall off from the true representation, it gives a distorting shadow of the true. Nevertheless this has no reference to the possibility of facts of science contradicting the Bible. It does not alleviate that difficulty; where the Bible makes reference to natural facts the question stands on its own ground.

167. The Matter is seen with the inner eye, either of the agent in the patient, or the patient in the agent, for in the working of the Material they alternate. Synesius refers to that when he says in his Isis and Osiris, "You also have been initiated into those mysteries where there are two pairs of eyes; those which are beneath are closed, when those which are above are opened," and vice versa.

168. The handling of the Matter is this, that when the Matter flows forth exteriorly from the new-born consciousness, it passes out into the hand and flows through the fingers, and is able to ferment another life and bring it into the same consciousness; this in its turn rises higher, and is able to re-act, raising again that other which raised it.

169. The entrance of the essential light of the reason into the chaos of the Vital Spirit (which always is in chaos, i.e., always coming to be, never is, and whilst in this life warts the re-birth), that entrance constricts the chaos at first into vivid images, but persisting in its direct look or intellectual perscrutation of the life, dissolves and disperses the images of which the chaos is fall. "Strictamque Aeneas aciem venientibus offert / Et ni docta comes," etc., etc. (Aeneid VI. 291, &c). Then the light goes on seeking the Paternal Life, the fundamental life; and finding it through the maternal instinct (the doves of Venus) is conjoined, and so far as it is conjoined is strengthened for further warfare.

170. Without the Golden Bough Aeneas could not proceed over or pass by Tartarus to see his Father. Tartarus is the death of this life. By propitiation, through the offering of the Golden Bough, he is passed safely through to the Elysian regions, where the Paternal ens resides in liberty.

171. The Rational Light is the strongest of all lights, and overcomes every other. All life moves orderly round the focus of that Light when that Light is found or realised. This constitutes the re-integration of being, the manifestation of the !"#"$ in man.

172. We are all of us drawn to our Ideal as to a star; to us the Ideal is a Light, a real objective attraction or magnet.

173. What you find all depends on what you look with; ontologically you find what you seek, that is, the ontological quality of the faculty you seek with determines what you find; if you seek with a selfish, covetous, desiring spirit you find its object in the lower spiritual atmosphere, the first emanation from this life. We on earth live in the first arising from nature. Thoughts, images, passions, desires, words, loves, hates, all rise up through this first Ether Natural and abide on a sphere of their own above it. The higher faculties, the moral nature, with their results, are related to the pure Ether, which overlies the passion sphere. Above that is the Divine Light region which is the proper habitation of the high Reason when informed by the Love, and after it has been purified by passing through the humiliation.

174. The Protean life is very difficult of discovery: the last subterfuge of Proteus according to Homer in the Odyssey is transformation into a tree. This tree appears to be identical with that hearing the Golden Bough which Aeneas was ordered to find and take as his talisman to pass through the Infernal Regions to Elysium, where the Paternal Spirit lives. Prior to the ultimate transformation, however, it takes various other shapes. As the enquiring spirit enters into the ether life, the light that it seeks by compresses the ether and drives it about and causes it to take all sort of fantastic forms: the imaginative spirit is the maker of these images. "No one," says Vaughan, "enters into the Magian School but, he wanders awhile in the region of Chimaeras." These Chimaeras have all to be destroyed in order to reach the simple Hypostasis or radix of the reason that seeks; the "aurai simplicis ignem."

175. True Science is the contact identical of the thing knowing with the thing known, subject with object. Of course, I mean ontologically; for Truth is, as it were, Light in its own ether, the Divine Wisdom self-conspicuous.

176. What a wonderful analysis of Time Procleus works out in his Commentary on the Timeus; he there takes it to be a created or secondary essential participation of the eternal Unit, or, better, a participation of the Paradigm by the image; not a mere relation as you make it, or a condition of thought as modern metaphysicians have it.

177. The solution of the sensuous spirit or vehicle is effected by the Perpendicular Magnetism, the fixation by the Horizontal altitude and latitude. By the former the soul is set free - it translates the consciousness into another medium. By it, the consciousness is brought into relation to another world and new experiences. "Quis deus," says Virgil in introducing the myth of Aristeus, a myth which bears altogether on the Vital transmutation in an advanced stage, "Quis deus hanc musae quis nobis extudet artem? unde nova ingressus hominum experientia coepit?" (Georgics IV. 315, &c)

178. It is an awful thing that when the Divine Life is being elicited in a man, the sins of this world press heavily upon him, through his sympathy with it, and his perception of the evil; it is as if the individual soul was responsible for all.

179. How nothing the individual is in comparison with the universal! We know nothing of Causalty - i.e., we have no experience of the Efficient Power. When the individual mind comes in contact with power universal, it then can understand the meaning of the words, the fear of the Lord is the beginning of Wisdom, for that experience is the initial of the regenerate life; that which ferments the sensorium of this life, and lives upon its decease ultimately: its decease I say, for it comes up again ultimately.

180. Wuthering Heights, Emily Bronte's book, wants writing over again, or rather rewriting twice. It is a Saturnine mass of power in mere potentiality; a dark cloud; chaos before Light strikes through it. It wants the Jupiter element to clear it. Charlotte ought to have taken it in, hand for her sister, for Emily was not capable of clearing it. Charlotte Bronte was Jupiter and Lune; Emily Bronte was Saturn; Anne Bronte was Venus and Lune.

181. The "One Thing" it is our psychical essence; our nervous system. "Solution" refers to the separation of the sensuous medium itself. You cut off the sensuous life and get into the intuitional; and when again you dissolve the intuitional, you get into the intuitional (scil., divine). "Help Manual." The hand outward is an image of the invisible hand, its clothing; which, according to its attainment (i.e., the perfection of its own nature), works effects. The hands of the Ether are its transverse poles, which are formed by the divine differentiation everywhere, and are in man a "natural fire" - i.e., the fire of the Ether in us, or of our life organism. The "Philosophical Matter" is the entelechy of body hearing the spirit, the antecedent cause, right up through. The human soul is more than a mere resultant of body; it is its ultimate perfection, for it is a space between two spheres. The "Ether" is the universal extended Matter; the Divine posit everywhere; life. The "Metals" of the philosophers are the ethereal metals;

the Ether's progressive stages; its processes; the arising of the Ether from and through its lower to its higher forms and qualities. The adept regards Nature inwardly and as a whole; he feels all in himself. The soul's angelic essence is a "metallic humidity." The soul in its perfection is the Christian philosopher's stone. The soul in its metalline perfection is the philosopher's stone. Alchemy can be fully understood only by those who have entered on and are working the philosophic process; by those who, as Plato well says, are conversant with the soul in her philosophy - i.e., the recreative, or rather separative, process. All you get first of all is a pure matter which is passive, having no power of perfecting itself; it is the attractive power. But you must set free the masculine ferment, the sulphur or divine ferment (which is doubly hidden and bound in this life of ours) to effect the perfection of the matter. Our life is threefold. The "salt," the will, opens it second fold. Each life must have its key and representative; the first has its status and being in sense. Dissolve the sensuous medium and you have the second or medial life. Dissolve the medial and you reach to the divine, which rectifies the whole individual. Visitabis interiora terrae, etc. Alchemy is philosophy; it is the philosophy, the seeking out of The Sophia in the mind. For production of effect there must be a return of the sulphur (this third, this obscure, this radical life) on its matrix. Each principle of the life - active, passive, and resultant - must be produced or evolved separately, and represented personally produces a universal work.

Do Pseudo Rosicrucians hold the key to hidden knowledge?

Alchemy is the philosophy of the seeking out of The Sophia in the mind, and the possibility of practicing what modern pseudo Rosicrucians like A.M.O.R.C. now openly call “Mental Alchemy”, where they put “certain spiritual energies into motion, directing them in accordance with mystical law and natural principles.” However, the true Rosicrucian order should never accept fees and should have no formal organization, and is, in fact, super secret, and as other students of esoterica have underlined, these elements are rarely found in modern Rosicrucian groups like A.M.O.R.C. No wonder some sort of relationship existed between the founder of A.M.O.R.C. , Harvey Spencer Lewis (1883-1939), and the O.T.O. prior to 1921, when he received an official charter from Theodor Reuss making him “a Honorary Member of the Sovereign Sanctuary for Switzerland, Germany and Austria, and to represent O.T.O. Sovereign Sanctuary as Gage of Amity near the Supreme Council of A.M.O.R.C.” However, regardless of the O.T.O. connection, it is truly rare that any real alchemical work of a good nature is done in such environments, often in the hands of witches and black magicians that use the seemingly innocent Rosicrucian/New Age image to work darker rituals in secret, possibly for one of the Satanic sects they might run in secret.

William Walker Atkinson, an author who wrote about 100 books in the early 20th century under many pseudonyms, is credited for being one of the principle architects of the New Thought movement, which evolved into today’s New Age movement. He wrote the book, The Law of Attraction in the Thought World, and is one of the primary influences in Rhonda Byrne's book and movie The Secret, where, in fact, the word Rosicrucian, appears subtly on screen throughout the movie's title transitions, actually published under the name Magus Incognito. In The Secret Doctrine of the Rosicrucians Atkinson gave away all the contents of the Rosicrucian degrees, and was truly critical of modern Rosicrucian fraternities, writing amongst other things:

The student of the history of occultism and the esoteric teachings, and even the average reader of current books and magazines, finds many references to “The Rosicrucians,” a supposed ancient secret society devoted to the study of occult doctrines and the manifestation of occult powers. But when such person seeks to obtain detailed information concerning this supposed ancient “order” he finds himself baffled and defeated. Before acknowledging the futility of the quest, however, he usually investigates one or more so-called “orders” having as a part of their title the word “Rosicrucian,” only to find himself invited to join such “order” upon the payment of a fee or fees ranging from a small amount in some cases to quite large amounts in others, each “order” claiming to be the “only original order,” and asserting that all the others are base imitators. The truth is that there is not in existence, and never has been in existence, any popular occult order sanctioned by the real Rosicrucians, which anyone may join upon payment of fees, large or small, just as he may join any of the better known fraternal organizations of which there are so many. The true Rosicrucians have no formal organization, and are held together only by the ties of common interest in the occult and esoteric studies, and by the common acceptance of certain fundamental principles of belief and knowledge. However, Atkinson added in the subchapter entitled The Higher Alchemy something that explains AMORC’s emphasis in more recent years with “Mental Alchemy” : The Rosicrucians, according to the public encyclopaedias, and other works of reference, are held to have been devoted to the subject of Alchemy. And, indeed, this statement is correct. But the modern compilers of such reference books have fallen into the error of supposing that the Alchemy referred to was performed wholly upon the Plane of Matter—and concerned wholly with the Transmutation of Elements. They are ignorant of the fact that the Alchemy which attracted the Rosicrucians, and which took up most of their time and attention, was Mental Alchemy and Spiritual Alchemy—something quite different indeed, though having of course a correspondence to the Material Alchemy, according to the Law of Correspondence. The student of the present book will discover this fact, and will receive many valuable hints concerning the higher forms of Alchemy, providing he is prepared to read between the lines of the text, and to reason by Analogy. The axiom “As above, so below,” will be found to work out

Masonic Catechism and Alchemical Teachings

Masonic catechism is a series of memorized questions and answers, pertaining to a specific degree in Freemasonry, a modality also in use in the para-masonic Illuminati, and Rosicrucian orders, like the S.R.I.A. Usually, the candidate meets with a lodge or chapter member who knows these catechisms, and helps him to memorize the work, or they are recited during the meeting with the other members, so they can remain in the memory of the listeners. The catechism simply reiterates the degree work that the candidate recently completed, and proves his proficiency with them. Once a catechism is completed and fully understood, the candidate can proceed to the next degree.

In the Ritual de la Haute Magie, chapter 19, Eliphas Levi describes a manuscript of Paracelsus supposedly found in the Vatican, entitled The Chemical Pathway or Manual. He claims that this catechism was transcribed by Michael Sendivogius (Polish: Michał Sędziwój; 1566–1636), who was a known Polish alchemist and an Unknown Superior of the Illuminati, and was later used by high level Freemason and Initiate Baron Tschoudy, when composing the Hermetic Catechism, in his L'Etoile Flamboyant ou la Société des Franc- Maçons considérée sous tous les aspects, 1766. Like other researchers before me, I have not been able to locate the original Paracelsus work in the Vatican, nor Sendivogius' supposed transcription, however, the Hermetic Catechism of Baron Tschoudy is a very important piece of hermetic philosophy, that can help us all understand more about the key role of alchemy in the Western Initiatic System. As a catechism, it can also be used by you and your friends, whether you are Masons or not, to learn the secrets of the Royal Art of Alchemy. It is not a historical examination of the science and philosophy behind it, but something much deeper, especially if you understand the hidden meaning of certain code words present in the text.

The version that I include here has been taken from A.E. Waite's translation, published in the two-volume Hermetic and Alchemical Writings of Paracelsus, which he heavily edited, inserting the Masonic remarks of Tschoudy. This makes it even more important to study this catechism, in order to possibly understand the hidden secrets of the Illuminati network and their teachings, often veiled in allegory, and hidden by symbols and strange words, that have meanings known only to their initiates. I can say without exaggerating, that learning from this catechism might not make you necessarily an immortal, but you will become a true Illuminati. However, it is up to you to use such knowledge for the good of mankind, and not for evil purposes. We go back to what I said in the beginning of the book, about The Law of Use, don't ever forget those words!

A SHORT CATECHISM OF ALCHEMY

Q. What is the chief study of a Philosopher?

A. It is the investigation of the operations of Nature.

Q. What is the end of Nature?

A. God, Who is also its beginning.

Q. Whence are all things derived?

A. From one and indivisible Nature.

Q. Into how many regions is Nature separated?

A. Into four palmary regions.

Q. Which are they?

A. The dry, the moist, the warm, and the cold, which are the four elementary qualities, whence all things originate.

Q. How is Nature differentiated?

A. Into male and female.

Q. To what may we compare Nature?

A. To Mercury.

Q. Give a concise definition of Nature.

A. It is not visible, though it operates visibly; for it is simply a volatile spirit, fulfilling its office in bodies, and animated by the universal spirit—the divine breath, the central and universal fire, which vivifies all things that exist.

Q. What should be the qualities possessed by the examiners of Nature?

A. They should be like unto Nature herself. That is to say, they should be truthful, simple, patient, and persevering.

Q. What matters should subsequently engross their attention?

A. The philosophers should most carefully ascertain whether their designs are in harmony with Nature, and of a possible and attainable kind; if they would accomplish by their own power anything that is usually performed by the power of Nature, they must imitate her in every detail.

Q. What method must be followed in order to produce something which shall be developed to a superior degree than Nature herself develops it.

A. The manner of its improvement must be studied, and this is invariably operated by means of a like nature. For example, if it be desired to develop the intrinsic virtue of a given metal beyond its natural condition, the chemist must avail himself of the metallic nature itself, and must be able to discriminate between its male and female differentiations.

Q. Where does the metallic nature store her seeds?

A. In the four elements.

Q. With what materials can the philosopher alone accomplish anything?

A. With the germ of the given matter; this is its elixir or quintessence, more precious by far, and more useful, to the artist, than Nature herself. Before the philosopher has extracted the seed, or germ, Nature, in his behalf, will be ready to perform her duty.

Q. What is the germ, or seed, of any substance?

A. It is the most subtle and perfect decoction and digestion of the substance itself; or, rather, it is the Balm of Sulphur, which is identical with the Radical Moisture of Metals.

Q. By what is this seed, or germ, engendered?

A. By the four elements, subject to the will of the Supreme Being, and through the direct intervention of the imagination of Nature.

Q. After what manner do the four elements operate?

A. By means of an incessant and uniform motion, each one, according to its quality, depositing its seed in the centre of the earth, where it is subjected to action and digested, and is subsequently expelled in an outward direction by the laws of movement.

Q. What do the philosophers understand by the centre of the earth?

A. A certain void place where nothing may repose, and the existence of which is assumed.

Q. Where, then, do the four elements expel and deposit their seeds?

A. In the ex-centre, or in the margin and circumference of the centre, which, after it has appropriated a portion, casts out the surplus into the region of excrement, scoriae, fire, and formless chaos.

Q. Illustrate this teaching by an example.

A. Take any level table, and set in its centre a vase filled with water; surround the vase with several things of various colors, especially salt, taking care that a proper distance intervenes between them all. Then pour out the water from the vase, and it will flow in streams here and there; one will encounter a substance of a red colour, and will assume a tinge of red; another will pass over the salt, and will contract a saline flavour; for it is certain that water does not modify the places which it traverses, but the diverse characteristics of places change the nature of water. In the same way the seed which is deposited by the four elements at the centre of the earth is subject to a variety of modifications in the places through which it passes, so that every existing substance is produced in the likeness of its channel, and when a seed on its arrival at a certain point encounters pure earth and pure water, a pure substance results, but the contrary in an opposite case.

Q. After what manner do the elements procreate this seed?

A. In order to the complete elucidation of this point, it must be observed that there are two gross and heavy elements and two that are volatile in character. Two, in like manner, are dry and two humid, one out of the four being actually excessively dry, and the other excessively moist. They are also masculine and feminine. Now, each of them has a marked tendency to reproduce its own species within its own sphere. Moreover, they are never in repose, but are perpetually interacting, and each of them separates, of and by itself, the most subtle portion thereof. Their general place of meeting is in the centre, even the centre of the Archeus, that servant of Nature, where coming to mix their several seeds, they agitate and finally expel them to the exterior.

Q. What is the true and the first matter of all metals?

A. The first matter, properly so-called, is dual in its essence, or is in itself of a twofold nature; one, nevertheless, cannot create a metal without the concurrence of the other. The first and the primary essence is an aerial humidity, blended with a warm air, in the form of a fatty water, which adheres to all substances indiscriminately, whether they are pure or impure.

Q. How has this humidity been named by Philosophers?

A. Mercury.

Q. By what is it governed?

A. By the rays of the Sun and Moon.

Q. What is the second matter?

A. The warmth of the earth -otherwise, that dry heat which is termed Sulphur by the Philosophers.

Q. Can the entire material body be converted into seed?

A. Its eight-hundredth part only-that, namely, which is secreted in the centre of the body in question, and may, for example, be seen in a grain of wheat.

Q. Of what use is the bulk of the matter as regards its seed?

A. It is useful as a safeguard against excessive heat, cold, moisture, or aridity, and, in general, all hurtful inclemency, against which it acts as an envelope.

Q. Would those artists who pretend to reduce the whole matter of any body into seed derive any advantage from the process, supposing it were possible to perform it?

A. None; on the contrary, their labour would be wholly unproductive, because nothing that is good can be accomplished by a deviation from natural methods.

Q. What, therefore, should be done?

A. The matter must be effectively separated from its impurities, for there is no metal, how pure soever, which is entirely free from imperfections, though their extent varies. Now all superfluities, cortices, and scoriae must be peeled off and purged out from the matter in order to discover its seed.

Q. What should receive the most careful attention of the Philosopher?

A. Assuredly, the end of Nature, and this is by no means to be looked for in the vulgar metals, because, these having issued already from the hands of the fashioner, it is no longer to be found therein.

Q. For what precise reason?

A. Because the vulgar metals, and chiefly gold, are absolutely dead, while ours, on the contrary, are absolutely living, and possess a soul.

Q. What is the life of metals?

A. It is no other substance than fire, when they are as yet embedded in the mines.

Q. What is their death?

A. Their life and death are in reality one principle, for they die, as they live, by fire, but their death is from a fire of fusion.

Q. After what manner are metals conceived in the womb of the earth?

A. When the four elements have developed their power or virtue in the centre of the earth, and have deposited their seed, the Archeus of Nature, in the course of a distillatory process, sublimes them superficially by the warmth and energy of the perpetual movement.

Q. Into what does the wind resolve itself when it is distilled through the pores of the earth?

A. It resolves itself into water, whence all things spring; in this state it is merely a humid vapour, out of which there is subsequently evolved the principiated principle of all substances, which also serves as the first matter of the Philosophers.

Q. What then is this principiated principle, which is made use of as the first matter by the Children of Knowledge in the philosophic achievement?

A. It is this identical matter, which, the moment it is conceived, receives a permanent and unchangeable form.

Q. Are Saturn, Jupiter, Mars, Venus, the Sun, the Moon, etc., separately endowed with individual seed?

A. One is common to them all; their differences are to be accounted for by the: locality from which they are derived, not to speak of the fact that Nature completes her work with far greater rapidity in the procreation of silver than in that of gold, and so of the other metals, each in its own proportion.

Q. How is gold formed in the bowels of the earth?

A. When this vapour, of which we have spoken, is sublimed in the centre of the earth, and when it has passed through warm and pure places, where a certain sulphureous grease adheres to the channels, then this vapour, which the Philosophers have denominated their Mercury, becomes adapted and joined to this grease, which it sublimes with itself; from such amalgamation there is produced a certain unctuousness, which, abandoning the vaporous form, assumes that of grease, and is sublimed in other places, which have been cleansed by this preceding vapour, and the earth whereof has consequently, been rendered more subtle, pure, and humid; it fills the pores of this earth, is joined thereto, and gold is produced as a result.

Q. How is Saturn engendered?

A. It occurs when the said unctuousness, or grease, passes through places which are totally impure and cold.

Q. How is Venus brought forth?

A. She is produced in localities where the earth itself is pure, but is mingled with impure sulphur.

Q. What power does the vapour, which we have recently mentioned, possess in the centre of the earth?

A. By its continual progress it has the power of perpetually rarefying whatsoever is crude and impure, and of successively attracting to itself all that is pure around it.

Q. What is the seed of the first matter of all things?

A. The first matter of things, that is to say, the matter of principiating principles is begotten by Nature, without the assistance of any other seed; in other words, Nature receives the matter from the elements, whence it subsequently brings forth the seed.

Q. What, absolutely speaking, is therefore the seed of things?

A. The seed in a body is no other thing than a congealed air, or a humid vapour, which is useless except it be dissolved by a warm vapour.

Q. How is the generation of seed comprised in the metallic kingdom?

A. By the artifice of Archeus the four elements, in the first generation of Nature, distil a ponderous vapour of water into the centre of the earth ; this is the seed of metals, and it is called Mercury, not on account of its essence, but because of its fluidity, and the facility with which it will adhere to each and everything.

Q. Why is this vapour compared to sulphur?

A. Because of its internal heat.

Q. From what species of Mercury are we to conclude that the metals are composed?

A. The reference is exclusively to the Mercury of the Philosophers, and in no sense to the common or vulgar substance, which cannot become a seed, seeing that, like other metals, it already contains its own seed.

Q. What, therefore, must actually be accepted as the subject of our matter?

A. The seed alone, otherwise the fixed grain, and not the whole body, which is differentiated into Sulphur, or living male, and into Mercury, or living female.

Q. What operation must be afterwards performed.

A. They must be joined together, so that they may form a germ, after which they will proceed to the procreation of a fruit which is conformed to their nature.

Q. What is the part of the artist in this operation?

A. The artist must do nothing but separate that which is subtle from that which is gross.

Q. To what, therefore, is the whole philosophic combination reduced?

A. The development of one into two, and the reduction of two into one, and nothing further.

Q. Whither must we turn for the seed and life of meals and minerals?

A. The seed of minerals is properly the water which exists in the centre And the heart of the minerals.

Q. How does Nature operate by the help of Art?

A. Every seed, whatsoever its kind, is useless, unless by Nature or Art it is placed in a suitable matrix, where it receives its life by the coction of the germ! and by the congelation of the pure particle, or fixed grain.

Q. How is the seed subsequently nourished and preserved?

A. By the warmth of its body.

Q. What is therefore performed by the artist in the mineral kingdom?

A. He finishes what cannot be finished by Nature on account of the crudity of the air, which has permeated the pores of all bodies by its violence, on the surface and not in the bowels of the earth.

Q. What correspondence have the metals among themselves?

A. It is necessary for a proper comprehension of the nature of this correspondence to consider the position of the planets, and to pay attention to Saturn, which is the highest of all, and then is succeeded by Jupiter, next by Mars, the Sun, Venus, Mercury, and, lastly, by the Moon. It must be observed that the influential virtues of the planets do not ascend but descend, and experience teaches us that Mars can be easily converted into Venus, not Venus into Mars, which is of a lower sphere. So, also, Jupiter can be easily transmuted into Mercury, because Jupiter is superior to Mercury, the one being second after the firmament, the other second above the earth, and Saturn is highest of all, while the Moon is lowest. The Sun enters into all, but it is never ameliorated by its inferiors. It is clear that there is a large correspondence between Saturn and the Moon, in the middle of which is the Sun; but to all these changes the Philosopher should strive to administer the Sun.

Q. When the Philosophers speak of gold and silver, from which they extract their matter, are we to suppose that they refer to the vulgar gold and silver?

A. By no means; vulgar silver and gold are dead, while those of the Philosophers are full of life.

Q. What is the object of research among the Philosophers?

A. Proficiency in the art of perfecting what Nature has left imperfect in the mineral kingdom, and the attainment of the treasure of the Philosophical Stone.

Q. What is this Stone?

A. The Stone is nothing else than the radical humidity of the elements, perfectly purified and reduced into a sovereign fixation, which causes it to perform such great things for health, life being resident exclusively in the humid radical.

Q. In what does the secret of accomplishing this admirable work consist?

A. It consists in knowing how to educe from potentiality into activity the innate warmth, or the fire of Nature, which is enclosed in the centre of the radical humidity.

Q. What are the precautions which must be made use of to guard against failure in the work?

A. Great pains must be taken to eliminate excrements from the matter, and to conserve nothing but the kernel, which contains all the virtue of the compound.

Q. Why does this medicine heal every species of disease?

A. It is not on account of the variety of its qualities, but simply because it powerfully fortifies the natural warmth, which it gently stimulates, while other physics irritate it by too violent an action.

Q. How can you demonstrate to me the truth of the art in the matter of the tincture?

A. Firstly, its truth is founded on the fact that the physical powder, being composed of the same substance as the metals, namely, quicksilver, has the faculty of combining with these in fusion, one nature easily embracing another which is like itself. Secondly, seeing that the imperfection of the base metals is owing to the crudeness of their quicksilver, and to that alone, the physical powder, which is a ripe and decocted quicksilver, and, in itself a pure fire, can easily communicate to them its own maturity, and can transmute them into its nature, after it has attracted their crude humidity, that is to say, their quicksilver, which is the sole substance that transmutes them, the rest being nothing but scoriae and excrements, which are rejected in projection.

Q. What road should the Philosopher follow that he may attain to the knowledge and execution of the physical work?

A. That precisely which was followed by the Great Architect of the Universe in the creation of the world, by observing how the chaos was evolved.

Q. What was the matter of the chaos?

A. It could be nothing else than a humid vapour, because water alone enters into all created substances, which all finish in a strange term, this term being a proper subject for the impression of all forms.

Q. Give me an example to illustrate what you have just stated.

A. An example may be found in the special productions of composite substances, the seeds of which invariably begin by resolving themselves into a certain humour, which is the chaos of the particular matter, whence issues, by a kind of irradiation, the complete form of the plant. Moreover, it should be observed that Holy Scripture makes no mention of anything except water as the material subject whereupon the Spirit of God brooded, nor of anything except light as the universal form of things.

Q. What profit may the Philosopher derive from these considerations, and what should he especially remark in the method of creation which was pursued by the Supreme Being?

A. In the first place he should observe the matter out of which the world was made; he will see that out of this confused mass, the Sovereign Artist began by extracting light, that this light in the same moment dissolved the darkness which covered the face of the earth, and that it served as the universal form of the matter. He will then easily perceive that in the generation of all composite substances, a species of irradiation takes place, and a separation of light and darkness, wherein Nature is an undeviating copyist of her Creator. The Philosopher will equally understand after what manner, by the action of this light, the empyrean, or firmament which divides the superior and inferior waters, was subsequently produced; how the sky was studded with luminous bodies; and how the necessity for the moon arose, which was owing to the space intervening between the things above and the things below; for the moon is an intermediate torch between the superior and the inferior worlds, receiving the celestial influences and communicating them to the earth. Finally he will understand how the Creator, in the gathering of the waters, produced dry land.

Q. How many heavens can you enumerate?

A. Properly there is one only, which is the firmament that divides the waters from the waters. Nevertheless, three are admitted, of which the first is the space that is above the clouds. In this heaven the waters are rarefied, and fall upon the fixed stars, and it is also in this space that the planets and wandering stars perform their revolutions. The second heaven is the firmament of the fixed stars, while the third is the abode of the supercelestial waters.

Q. Why is the rarefaction of the waters confined to the first heaven?

A. Because it is in the nature of rarefied substances to ascend, and because God, in His eternal laws, has assigned its proper sphere to everything.

Q. Why does each celestial body invariably revolve about an axis?

A. It is by reason of the primeval impetus which it received, and by virtue of the same law which will cause any heavy substance suspended from a thread to turn with the same velocity, if the power which impels its motion be always equal.

Q. Why do the superior waters never descend?

A. Because of their extreme rarefaction. It is, for this reason, that a skilled chemist can derive more profit from the study of rarefaction than from any other science whatsoever.

Q. What is the matter of the firmament?

A. It is properly air, which is more suitable than water as a medium of light.

Q. After the separation of the waters from the dry earth, what was performed by the Creator to originate generation?

A. He created a certain light which was destined for this office; He placed it in the central fire, and moderated this fire by the humidity of water and by the coldness of earth, so as to keep a check upon its energy and adapt it to His design.

Q. What is the action of this central fire?

A. It continually operates upon the nearest humid matter, which it exalts into vapour; now this vapour is the mercury of Nature and the first matter of the three kingdoms.

Q. How is the sulphur of Nature subsequently formed?

A. By the interaction of the central fire and the mercurial vapour.

Q. How is the salt of the sea produced?

A. By the action of the same fire upon aqueous humidity, when the aerial humidity, which is contained therein, has been exhaled.

Q. What should be done by a truly wise Philosopher when he has once mastered the foundation and the order in the procedure of the Great Architect of the Universe in the construction of all that exists in Nature?

A. He should, as far as may be possible, become a faithful copyist of his Creator. In the physical chaos he should make his chaos such as the original actually was; he should separate the light from the darkness : he should form his firmament for the separation of the waters which are above from the waters which are below, and should successively accomplish, point by point, the entire sequence of the creative act.

Q. With what is this grand and sublime operation performed?

A. With one single corpuscle, or minute body, which, so to speak, contains nothing but faeces, filth, and abominations, but whence a certain tenebrous and mercurial humidity is extracted, which contains in itself all that is required by the Philosopher, because, as a fact, he is in search of nothing but the true Mercury.

Q. What kind of mercury, therefore, must he make use of in performing the work?

A. Of a mercury which, as such, is not found on the earth, but is extracted from bodies, yet not from vulgar mercury, as it has been falsely said.

Q. Why is the latter unfitted to the needs of our work?

A. Because the wise artist must take notice that vulgar mercury has an insufficient quantity of sulphur, and he should consequently, operate upon a body created by Nature, in which Nature herself has united the sulphur and mercury that it is the work of the artist to separate.

Q. What must he subsequently do?

A. He must purify them and join them anew together.

Q. How do you denominate the body of which we have been speaking?

A. The RUDE STONE, Or Chaos, or Iliaste, or Hyle--that confused mass which is known but universally despised.

Q. As you have told me that Mercury is the one thing which the Philosopher must absolutely understand, will you give me a circumstantial description of it, so as to avoid misconception?

A. In respect of its nature, our Mercury is dual--fixed and volatile; in regard to its motion, it is also dual, for it has a motion of ascent and of descent; by that of descent, it is the influence of plants, by which it stimulates the drooping fire of Nature, and this is its first office previous to congelation. By its ascensional movement, it rises, seeking to be purified, and as this is after congelation, it is considered to be the radical moisture of substances, which, beneath its vile scoriae, still preserves the nobility of its first origin.

Q. How many species of moisture do you suppose to be in each composite thing?

A. There are three--the Elementary, which is properly the vase of the other elements; the Radical, which, accurately speaking, is the oil, or balm, in which the entire virtue of the subject is resident--lastly, the Alimentary, the true natural dissolvent, which draws up the drooping internal fire, causing corruption and blackness by its humidity, and fostering and sustaining the subject.

Q. How many species of Mercury are there known to the Philosophers?

A. The Mercury of the Philosophers may be regarded under four aspects; the first is entitled the Mercury of bodies, which is actually their concealed seed; the second is the Mercury of Nature, which is the Bath or Vase of the Philosophers, otherwise the humid radical; to the third has been applied the designation, Mercury of the Philosophers, because it is found in their laboratory and in their minera. It is the sphere of Saturn; it is the Diana of the Wise; it is the true salt of metals, after the acquisition of which the true philosophic work may be truly said to have begun. In its fourth aspect, it is called Common Mercury, which yet is not that of the Vulgar, but rather is properly the true air of the Philosophers, the true middle substance of water, the true secret and concealed fire, called also common fire, because it is common to all minerae, for it is the substance of metals, and thence do they derive their quantity and quality.

Q. How many operations art comprised in our work?

A. There is one only, which may be resolved into sublimation, and sublimation, according to Geber, is nothing other than the elevation of the dry matter by the mediation of fire, with adherence to its own vase.

Q. What precaution should be taken in reading the Hermetic Philosophers?

A. Great care, above all, must be observed upon this point, lest what they say upon the subject should be interpreted literally and in accordance with the mere sound of the words: For the letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life.

Q. What books should be read in order to have an acquaintance with our science?

A. Among the ancients, all the works of Hermes should especially be studied; in the next place, a certain book, entitled The Passage of the Red Sea, and another, The Entrance into the Promised Land. Paracelsus also should be read before all among elder writers, and, among other treatises, his Chemical Pathway, or the Manual of Paracelsus, which contains all the mysteries of demonstrative physics and the most arcane Kabbalah. This rare and unique manuscript work exists only in the Vatican Library, but Sendivogius had the good fortune to take a copy of it, which has helped in the illumination of the sages of our order. Secondly, Raymond Lully must be read, and his Vade Mecum above all, his dialogue called the Tree of Life, his testament, and his codicil. There must, however, be a certain precaution exercised in respect to the two last, because, like those of Geber, and also of Arnold de Villanova, they abound in false recipes and futile fictions, which seem to have been inserted with the object of more effectually disguising the truth from the ignorant. In the third place, the Turba Philosophorum which is a collection of ancient authors, contains much that is materially good, though there is much also which is valueless. Among mediaeval writers Zachary, Trevisan, Roger Bacon, and a certain anonymous author, whose book is entitled The Philosophers, should be held especially high in the estimation of the student. Among moderns the most worthy to be prized are John Fabricius, Francois de Nation, and Jean D'Espagnet, who wrote Physics Restored, though, to say the truth, he has imported some false precepts and fallacious opinions into his treatise.

Q. When may the Philosopher venture to undertake the work?

A. When he is, theoretically, able to extract, by means of a crude spirit, a digested spirit out of a body in dissolution, which digested spirit he must again rejoin to the vital oil.

Q. Explain me this theory in a clearer manner.

A. It may be demonstrated more completely in the actual process; the great experiment may be undertaken when the Philosopher, by the medium of a vegetable menstruum, united to a mineral menstruum, is qualified to dissolve a third essential menstruum, with which menstrua united he must wash the earth, and then exalt it into a celestial quintessence, to compose the sulphureous thunderbolt, which instantaneously penetrates substances and destroys their excrements.

Q. Have those persons a proper acquaintance with Nature who pretend to make use of vulgar gold for seed, and of vulgar mercury for the dissolvent, or the earth in which it should be sown?

A. Assuredly not, because neither the one nor the other possesses the external agent--gold, because it has been deprived of it by decoction, and mercury because it has never had it.

Q. In seeking this auriferous seed elsewhere than in gold itself, is there no danger of producing a species of monster, since one appears to be departing from Nature?

A. It is undoubtedly true that in gold is contained the auriferous seed, and that in a more perfect condition than it is found in any other body; but this does not force us to make use of vulgar gold, for such a seed is equally found in each of the other metals, and is nothing else but that fixed grain which Nature has infused in the first congelation of mercury, all metals having one origin and a common substance, as will be ultimately unveiled to those who become worthy of receiving it by application and assiduous study.

Q. What follows from this doctrine?

A. It follows that, although the seed is more perfect in gold, it may be extracted much more easily from another body than from gold itself, other bodies being more open, that is to say, less digested, and less restricted in their humidity.

Q. Give me an example taken from Nature.

A. Vulgar gold may be likened to a fruit which, having come to a perfect maturity, has been cut off from its tree, and though it contains a most perfect and well-digested seed, notwithstanding, should anyone set it in the ground, with a view to its multiplication, much time, trouble, and attention will be consumed in the development of its vegetative capabilities. On the other hand, if a cutting, or a root, be taken from the same tree, and similarly planted, in a short time, and with no trouble, it will spring up and produce much fruit.

Q. Is it necessary that an amateur of this science should understand the formation of metals in the bowels of the earth if he wishes to complete his work ?

A. So indispensable is such a knowledge that should anyone fail, before all other studies, to apply himself to its attainment, and to imitate Nature point by point therein, he will never succeed in accomplishing anything but what is worthless.

Q. How, then, does Nature deposit metals in the bowels of the earth, and of what does she compose them ?

A. Nature manufactures them all out of sulphur and mercury, and forms them by their double vapour.

Q. What do you mean by this double vapour, and how can metals be formed thereby?

A. In order to a complete understanding of this question, it must first be stated that mercurial vapour is united to sulphureous vapour in a cavernous place which contains a saline water, which serves as their matrix. Thus is formed, firstly, the Vitriol of Nature; secondly, by the commotion of the elements, there is developed out of this Vitriol of Nature a new vapour, which is neither mercurial nor sulphureous, yet is allied to both these natures, and this, passing through places to which the grease of sulphur adheres, is joined therewith, and out of their union a glutinous substance is produced, otherwise, a formless mass, which is permeated by the vapour that fills these cavernous places. By this vapour, acting through the sulphur it contains, are produced the perfect metals, provided that the vapour and the locality are pure. If the locality and the vapour are impure, imperfect metals result. The terms perfection and imperfection have reference to various degrees of concoction.

Q. What is contained in this vapour?

A. A spirit of light and a spirit of fire, of the nature of the celestial bodies, which properly should be considered as the form of the universe.

Q. What does this vapour represent?

A. This vapour, thus impregnated by the universal spirit, represents, in a fairly complete way, the original Chaos, which contained all that was required for the original creation, that is, universal matter and universal form.

Q. And one cannot, notwithstanding, make use of vulgar mercury in the process?

A. No, because vulgar mercury, as already made plain, is devoid of external agent.

Q. Whence comes it that common mercury is without its external agent?

A. Because in the exaltation of the double vapour, the commotion has been so great and searching, that the spirit, or agent, has evaporated, as occurs, with very close similarity, in the fusion of metals. The result is that the unique mercurial part is deprived of its masculine or sulphureous agent, and consequently, can never be transmuted into gold by Nature.

Q. How many species of gold are distinguished by the Philosophers?

A. Three sorts :--Astral Gold, Elementary Gold, and Vulgar Gold.

Q. What is astral gold?

A. Astral Gold has its centre in the sun, which communicates it by its rays to all inferior beings. It is an igneous substance, which receives a continual emanation of solar corpuscles that penetrate all things sentient, vegetable, and mineral.

Q. What do you refer to under the term Elementary Gold ?

A. This is the most pure and fixed portion of the elements, and of all that is composed of them. All sublunary beings included in the three kingdoms contain in their inmost centre a precious grain of this elementary gold.

Q. Give me some description of Vulgar Gold ?

A. It is the most beautiful metal of our acquaintance, the best that Nature can produce, as perfect as it is unalterable in itself.

Q. Of what species of gold is the Stone of the Philosophers ?

A. It is of the second species, as being the most pure portion of all the metallic elements after its purification, when it is termed living philosophical gold.

A perfect equilibrium and equality of the four elements enter into the Physical Stone, and four things are indispensable for the accomplishment of the work, namely, composition, allocation, mixture, and union, which, once performed according to the rules of art, will beget the lawful Son of the Sun, and the Phoenix which eternally rises out of its own ashes.

Q. What is actually the living gold of the Philosophers?

A. It is exclusively the fire of Mercury, or that igneous virtue, contained in the radical moisture, to which it has already communicated the fixity and the nature of the sulphur, whence it has emanated, the mercurial character of the whole substance of philosophical sulphur permitting it to be alternatively termed mercury.

Q. What other name is also given by the Philosophers to their living gold ?

A. They also term it their living sulphur, and their true fire; they recognize its existence in all bodies, and there is nothing that can subsist without it.

Q. Where must we look for our living gold, our living sulphur, and our true fire ?

A. In the house of Mercury.

Q. By what is this fire nourished?

A. By the air.

Q. Give me a comparative illustration of the power of this fire ?

A. To exemplify the attraction of this interior fire, there is no better comparison than that which is derived from the thunderbolt, which originally is simply a dry, terrestrial exhalation, united to a humid vapour. By exaltation, and by assuming the igneous nature, it acts on the humidity which is inherent to it; this it attracts to itself, transmutes it into its own nature, and then rapidly precipitates itself to the earth, where it is attracted by a fixed nature which is like unto its own.

Q. What should be done by the Philosopher after he has extracted his Mercury ?

A. He should develop it from potentiality into activity.

Q. Cannot Nature perform this of herself?

A. No; because she stops short after the first sublimation, and out of the matter which is thus disposed do the metals engender.

Q. What do the Philosophers understand by their gold and silver?

A. The Philosophers apply to their Sulphur the name of Gold, and to their Mercury the name of Silver.

Q. Whence are they derived?

A. I have already stated that they are derived from a homogeneous body wherein they are found in great abundance, whence also Philosophers know how to extract both by an admirable, and entirely philosophical, process.

Q. When this operation has been duly performed, to what other point of the practice must they next apply themselves?

A. To the confection of the philosophical amalgam, which must be done with great care, but can only be accomplished after the preparation and sublimation of the Mercury.

Q. When should your matter be combined with the living gold?

A. During the period of amalgamation only, that is to say, Sulphur is introduced into it by means of the amalgamation, and thenceforth there is one substance; the process is shortened by the addition of Sulphur, while the tincture at the same time is augmented.

Q. What is contained in the centre of the radical moisture ?

A. It contains and conceals Sulphur, which is covered with a hard rind.

Q. What must be done to apply it to the Great Work?

A. It must be drawn, out of its bonds with consummate skill, and by the method of putrefaction.

Q. Does Nature, in her work in the mines, possess a menstruum which is adapted to the dissolution and liberation of this sulphur?

A. No; because there is no local movement. Could Nature, unassisted, dissolve, putrefy, and purify the metallic body, she would herself provide us with the Physical Stone, which is Sulphur exalted and increased in virtue.

Q. Can you elucidate this doctrine by an example?

A. By an enlargement of the previous comparison of a fruit, or a seed, which, in the first place, is put into the earth for its solution, and afterwards for its multiplication. Now, the Philosopher, who is in a position to discern what is good seed, extracts it from its centre, consigns it to its proper earth, when it has been well cured and prepared, and therein he rarefies it in such a manner that its prolific virtue is increased and indefinitely multiplied.

Q. In what does the whole secret of the seed consist ?

A. In the true knowledge of its proper earth.

Q. What do you understand by the seed in the work Of the Philosophers ?

A. I understand the interior heat, or the specific spirit, which is enclosed in the humid radical, which, in other words, is the middle substance of living silver, the proper sperm of metals, which contains its own seed.

Q. How do you set free the sulphur from its bonds?

A. By putrefaction.

Q. What is the earth of minerals ?

A. It is their proper menstruum.

Q. What pains must be taken by the Philosopher to extract that part which he requires?

A. He must take great pains to eliminate the fetid vapours and impure sulphurs, after which the seed must be injected.

Q. By what indication may the Artist be assured that he is in the right road at the beginning of his work?

A. When he finds that the dissolvent and the thing dissolved are converted into one form and one matter at the period of dissolution.

Q. How many solutions do you count in the Philosophic Work?

A. There are three. The first solution is that which reduces the crude and metallic body into its elements of sulphur and of living silver; the second is that of the physical body, and the third is the solution of the mineral earth.

Q. How is the metallic body reduced by the first solution into mercury, and then into sulphur?

A. By the secret artificial fire, which is the Burning Star.

Q. How is this operation performed?

A. By extracting from the subject, in the first place, the mercury or vapour of the elements, and, after purification, by using it to liberate the sulphur from its bonds, by corruption, of which blackness is the indication.

Q. How is the second solution performed ?

A. When the physical body is resolved into the two substances previously mentioned, and has acquired the celestial nature.

Q. What is the name which is applied by Philosophers to the Matter during this period?

A, It is called their Physical Chaos, and it is, in fact, the true First Matter, a name which can hardly be applied before the conjunction of the male-- which is sulphur--with the female--which is silver.

Q. To what does the third solution refer?

A. It is the humectation of the mineral earth and it is closely bound up with multiplication.

Q. What fire must be made use of in our work ?

A. That fire which is used by Nature.

Q. What is the potency of this fire?

A. It dissolves everything that is in the world, because it is the principle of all dissolution and corruption.

Q. Why is it also termed Mercury ?

A. Because it is in its nature aerial, and a most subtle vapour, which partakes at the same time of sulphur, whence it has contracted some contamination.

Q. Where is this fire concealed ?

A. It is concealed in the subject of art.

Q. Who is it that is familiar with, and can produce, this fire?

A. It is known to the wise, who can both produce it and purify it.

Q. What is the essential potency and characteristic of this fire ?

A. It is excessively dry, and is continually in motion; it seeks only to disintegrate and to educe things from potentiality into actuality; it is that, in a word, which coming upon solid places in mines, circulates in a vaporous form upon the matter, and dissolves it.

Q. How may this fire be most easily distinguished?

A. By the sulphureous excrements in which it is enveloped, and by the saline environment with which it is clothed.

Q. What must be added to this fire so as to accentuate its capacity for incineration in the feminine species?

A. On account of its extreme dryness it requires to be moistened.

Q. How many philosophical fires do you enumerate ? A. There are in all three--the natural, the unnatural, and the contra-natural.

Q. Explain to me these three species of fires.

A. The natural fire is the masculine fire, or the chief agent; the unnatural is the feminine, which is the dissolvent of Nature, nourishing a white smoke, and assuming that form. This smoke is quickly dissipated, unless much care be exercised, and it is almost incombustible, though by philosophical sublimation it becomes corporeal and resplendent. The contra-natural fire is that which disintegrates compounds and has the power to unbind what has' been bound very closely by Nature.

Q. Where is our matter to be found?

A. It is to be found everywhere, but it must specially be sought in metallic nature, where it is more easily available than elsewhere.

Q. What kind must be preferred before all others ?

A. The most mature, the most appropriate, and the easiest; but care, before all things, must be taken that the metallic essence shall be present, not only potentially but in actuality, and that there is, moreover, a metallic splendour.

Q. Is everything contained in this subject?

A. Yes; but Nature, at the same time, must be assisted, so that the work may be perfected and hastened, and this by the means which are familiar to the higher grades of experiment.

Q. Is this subject exceedingly precious ?

A. It is vile, and originally is without native elegance; should anyone say that it is saleable, it is the species to which they refer, but, fundamentally, it is not saleable, because it is useful in our work alone.

Q. What does our Matter contain?

A. It contains Salt, Sulphur, and Mercury.

Q. What operation is it most important to be able to perform? A. The successive extraction of the Salt, Sulphur, and Mercury.

Q. How is that done ?

A. By sole and perfect sublimation.

Q. What is in the first place extracted ?

A. Mercury in the form of a white smoke.

Q. What follows?

A. Igneous water, or Sulphur.

Q. What then?

A. Dissolution with purified salt, in the first place volatilising that which is fixed, and afterwards fixing that which is volatile into a precious earth, which is the Vase of the Philosophers, and is wholly perfect.

Q. When must the Philosopher begin his enterprise ?

A. At the moment of daybreak, for his energy must never be relaxed.

Q. When may he take his rest?

A. When the work has come to its perfection.

Q. At what hour is the end of the work ?

A. High noon, that is to say, the moment when the Sun is in its fullest power, and the Son of the Day-Star in its most brilliant splendour.

Q. What is the pass-word of Magnesia?

A. You know whether I can or should answer:--I reserve my speech.

Q. Give me the greeting of the Philosophers.

A. Begin ; I will reply to you.

Q. Are you an apprentice Philosopher?

A. My friends, and the wise, know me.

Q. What is the age of a Philosopher ?

A. From the moment of his research, to that of his discoveries, the Philosopher does not age.

The Secret Alchemical Instruction for creating the Antichrist

Aleister Crowley's black magic centered upon Babalon, and he identified himself with the “Beast”, upon which Babalon is to ride in her conquest of the Earth. In his novel, The Moonchild, Crowley described the creation of a "homunculus," described as "a living being in form, resembling man, and possessing those qualities of man which distinguish him from beasts, namely intellect and power of speech, but neither begotten and born in the manner of human generation, nor inhabited by a human soul." Crowley said this was "the great idea of magicians of all times: to obtain a Messiah by some adaptation of the sexual process." Crowley's “Messiah” was the Antichrist who would overthrow Christianity: Babalon the Great.^[31]

To obtain this purpose he devised the IX Degree of the O.T.O. Illuminati, to create the perfect Moonchild. For most magicians, this is not going to happen; and if it does, it will more than likely be an abomination or a mockery of what might be termed a perfect Moonchild. Probably the most exalted example we have of a Moonchild in recent Earth history is the biblical Christ, but remember the O.T.O are on the dark side and are working to create exactly the opposite being, the Antichrist.

Crowley was responsible for a prominent occult novel Moonchild (1917). This work conceptualizes his thoughts on what is essentially an analogue to the Christian Antichrist. The story follows a woman who is caught between two sects of Magicians, one group titled White and the other Black, who are organized into Lodges, also Black and White, who are at war with one another in the time period leading up to World War I. The White Lodge wants to improve the human race by creating the Moonchild, which is “the soul of an ethereal being” born into mankind. Using arcane sex rituals, the girl becomes pregnant with the Moonchild, despite all attempts by agents of the Black Lodge to prevent it. The Moonchild is then used by the White Lodge to fight the Black Lodge. However, at the end of the book, the White Lodge ends up supporting the Allied Powers and the Black supports the Central Powers in a strange twist that suggests the Moonchild may not be what the White Lodge would have the woman and the world believe. And, perhaps, the White Lodge is not all it seems either. The precise rituals (called The Babalon Working), used to bring about the birth of this so-called perfect or ethereal soul, are detailed pretty heavily in Moonchild, and, supposedly, according to The Secret History, attempts were made at a location called the Devil’s Gate in Arroyo Seco, Pasadena to bring this child forth. TP, in an annotation, says that in a letter from Crowley to Parsons, Crowley called the Devil’s Gate a hell gate and that was one of seven such gateways. The letter ends with Crowley suggesting Parsons use it. The inference to be made here is they attempted the ritual in that location. Hubbard does say that he “saw things not meant for man” but goes into no further detail. Crowley apparently attempted it as well, but not successfully. [\[32\]](#)

Massimo Introvigne writes:

Parsons expected the appearance of a “spirit” that would help him in his magical activities. In January 1946, a sculptress and painter, Marjorie Cameron (1922–1995), who, under the simple name of “Cameron”, would subsequently become a well-known artist, appeared at 1003, joined the lodge and came to live at 1003. Or so Parsons would later report. In fact, “Cameron had actually been at the house on South Orange Grove Avenue a short period before, but had not spoken with Parsons at that time”. Cameron quickly became the new lover of Parsons, and the latter concluded that the magical operations undertaken with Hubbard had been successful. Cameron was indeed the “spirit” promised to him. With Cameron, Parsons began a new series of sex magic experiments. The purpose, this time, was the birth of a homunculus, both “artificial man” and vehicle of the Antichrist. Crowley himself had written a secret instruction on the homunculus, and it was to this being, that the novel Moonchild alluded. However, according to Crowley, not only the times were not mature, but also initiates of a much higher level than Parsons would have been necessary. Informed of the so-called “Babalon Working” the American scientist had started with Cameron and Hubbard, who acted as a “scribe” and took note of everything, Crowley wrote back that Parsons was simply “a fool”. Parsons continued all the same and went so far to produce a fourth chapter of the Book of the Law, although he probably never sent it to Crowley. He eventually parted company with Crowley and concluded that Cameron herself, rather than the child she was supposed to produce with him, was the incarnation of “the Thelemic goddess Babalon”. If it did not produce a homunculus, the “Babalon Working” at least generated a schism in the O.T.O. [\[33\]](#)

Aleister Crowley's treatise on the making of a homunculus was couched in terms of a secret ritual for the IX° members of the O.T.O. It begins with the premise that the human ego reincarnates into a "new tenement" when the fetus is in its third month of gestation. One classical method involves removal of a woman's fertilized ovum and continuing the gestation ectopically. Crowley is characteristically vague about the details, however, throwing in a few alchemical allusions. The modern magical method is another thing entirely. Crowley advises selection of a female partner whose horoscope is suited to the nature of whatever homunculus is desired. The magician and his mate "copulate continuously" until impregnation results; then, the woman is withdrawn to a desolate place where appropriate incantations are vibrated (e.g. the banishing formulae of the Sephiroth) five to seven times a day. The woman is "constantly educated by words and by books and by pictures of a nature consonant" to the spirit being evoked - the method of Liber Astarte (bhakti yoga). Delivery is somehow held up or pushed forward to assure the child an appropriate ascendant sign, and when the infant is born, it is immediately dedicated, purified, and consecrated to the incarnated spirit. The roots of modern Satanism in the US

Massimo Introvigne (b.1955), is a known Italian sociologist, and the founder and managing director of the Center for Studies on New Religions (CESNUR), an international network of scholars who study New Religious Movements on behalf of the Jesuit and the Vatican. Massimo Introvigne, who is a self-declared Jesuit loyalist, definitely has an important role, as a sort of gatekeeper of New Age and Modern Satanism in today's Western Initiatic world. He portrays a clear picture of the various manifestations of Modern Satanism mostly linked, as you can imagine, to the charismatic and dark figure of Aleister Crowley. Without Crowley, we would probably have a different Society today.

Introvigne writes: Crowley spent several years in the United States, where he hoped to escape European controversies, raise the funds he badly needed, and gather his loyal followers, especially in California. There, Wilfred Talbot Smith (1885–1957) had founded a Church of Thelema in 1934, and in 1935, a Lodge Agapé of the O.T.O. whose celebrations of the 'Gnostic Mass' attracted the attention of the tabloids. Smith never mentioned the Devil in his writings and was not particularly interested in Crowley's references to Satan.

In 1941, Marvel Whiteside Parsons, a scientist, engineer and expert in explosives, who had legally changed his name from Marvel to John and was normally referred to as "Jack", joined Smith's lodge together with his wife Helen Cowley (1910–2003). The mother of the latter, Olga Helena Nelson Cowley (1885–1949), widowed since 1920, married Burton Ashley Northrup (1872–1946), of Pasadena, who ran a credit recovery agency but was also an agent, or at least an informer, for the U.S. military intelligence. From her second marriage, Olga had two daughters. One of them, Sarah Elizabeth "Betty" Northrup (1924–1997), joined the Smith-Parsons lodge at a very early age, on the impulse of her stepsister, with the magical name Soror Cassap.

Parsons became in that period a well-known figure in his profession. He was a researcher at the California Institute of Technology (Cal Tech) and worked both for the American government and for private companies. For the government, Parsons and his colleagues carried out the experiments of Arroyo Seco, which were at the origins of the Jet Propulsion Laboratory and had a primary role in the American space projects. For the private industry, Parsons worked on a series of programs, which led to the incorporation of Aerojet General Corporation. In recognition of these merits, in 1972, twenty years after his death, a crater on the Moon would be baptized with the name of Parsons. Perhaps the International Astronomical Union, which gave the name of Parsons to the crater, did not know that this engineer and scientist lived and died surrounded by the dubious fame of being a leading Satanist. Parsons was always attracted to radical and marginal movements. After having participated in the activities of a Communist cell at Cal Tech, he met Smith and joined the O.T.O. The lodge was under attack by the press as a congregation of subversives and Satanists, but this for Parsons counted as a recommendation. At the same time, Crowley and Smith were having differences on various topics, primarily on the money that the British magus, in deep financial troubles, believed he had the right to receive from his American disciples. Parsons thus attracted the attention of Crowley, who corresponded with him and became a source of inspiration for the writings of the Californian scientist.

In 1942, Parsons, who was well paid by Cal Tech, rented a rather expensive home, called simply "1003", at the address 1003 South Orange Grove Avenue, in Pasadena's "Millionaires' Row". It became the new "convent" or "profess house", where a group of o.t.o. members started living communally. Among these were Smith, Parsons, his wife Helen and Helen's stepsister Betty. Then, a soap opera developed. Parsons had started having intimate relations with Betty when the latter, who was now eighteen, was thirteen. His wife Helen finally discovered what was going on, and gave him a taste of his own medicine by starting a relationship with their superior in the O.T.O., Smith. When the Agapé Lodge moved to the new convent in Pasadena, Smith was already living openly with Helen, and Parsons with Betty. Crowley sardonically commented that the number 1003, the address of the home, was probably chosen as it coincided with the number of women conquered by Don Giovanni in the opera consecrated to him by Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart (1756–1791). Crowley was everything but a moralist but was afraid that, between love triangles and even more complicated amorous polygons, things at number 1003 would end up badly. He instructed two people he trusted, both his future successors at the guide of the main branch of the O.T.O., Karl Germer (1885–1962) and Grady Louis McMurtry (1918–1985), to keep him informed concerning what was going on in Pasadena. McMurtry, in particular, sent vitriolic reports, suspecting Smith of having an affair with his ex-wife, who lived in the “convent” in Pasadena, and that he had made her abort: a capital sin for Crowley, who was against abortion. In 1943, Germer, on behalf of Crowley, removed Smith from his office of superior of the Agapé Lodge, substituting him with Parsons. But the latter had his own problems. Cal Tech worked for the military. During both World War II and the Cold War it was kept under surveillance by the secret services. Parsons had already been investigated as a suspected Communist. In 1943, Betty eventually revealed to her parents that not only did she live with Parsons, but also she had started sleeping with him when she was thirteen. Her father, as one can imagine, was not happy. Since he had connections with the military intelligence services, he put them on Parsons’ trail, not only as a Communist but also as a dangerous “black magician”. In this context, a new character appeared. One of the high-level initiates of the Agapé Lodge was pianist and composer Roy Edward Leffingwell (1886– 1952). He had among his friends the science fiction writer Lafayette Ron Hubbard (1911–1986), who later would become famous as the founder of Dianetics and its successive religious development, the Church of Scientology.” Leffingwell persuaded Hubbard to join the Lodge, and in 1945, the writer went to live at 1003.

Parsons reported to Crowley that Hubbard was an excellent swordsman and well-known in the California milieu of science fiction writers. Invited by Hubbard, even the prince of American science fiction, Robert Anson Heinlein (1907–1988), came to 1003 for a swordplay. McMurtry, always the gossip, commented that Hubbard preferred to train with Betty Northrup, and the two ended their duels by grappling “like a starfish on a clam”. Soon after, as McMurtry had correctly predicted, Betty left Parsons’ bedroom to transfer to that of Hubbard. Parsons suffered privately but declared that in the O.T.O. women were free and there was no place for jealousy. He even asked Hubbard to help him to accomplish a series of rituals in the Mojave Desert, based on the Enochian system of magic but also on energetic magical masturbation. ^[35]

In one of probably the most celebrated feats in “Magickal history”, Parsons and pre-Dianetics/Scientology L. Ron Hubbard, performed The infamous Babalon Working, a daring attempt to shatter the boundaries of time and space and intended to bring about, in Parsons' own words, “love, understanding, and Dionysian freedom [...] the necessary counterbalance or correspondence to the manifestation of Horus.”

Parsons died in an explosion in the late 1940s, and some well-informed sources say Hubbard might be the one to blame, however, before he died under mysterious circumstances, he secured a place for The Great Beast 666 in American culture. In the late 1940s, the Berkeley O.T.O. branch was frequented by actor and director Kenneth Anger (b. 1930). Anger’s interest in occultism runs deep, and his interest in Crowley is obsessive. In his effort to understand The Great Beast, Anger went on a 1950s pilgrimage to Crowley’s old commune in Sicily and made a film based on Crowleyian principles entitled, Inauguration of the Pleasure Dome (1954).

Many years later, Anger would become a household name for penning the pop culture masterpiece Hollywood Babylon (1981), the first book to expose the rampant homosexuality and deviancy in the film industry and a must-read for anyone interested in American cultural history. No one can deny that Kenneth Anger is a talented filmmaker and writer, even though one may strongly disagree with his philosophy. Anger is still involved in Crowleyanity and is one of the major promoters of The Great Beast’s worldview. However, Anger has a very low opinion of those groups who claim to be the legitimate heirs of Crowley’s O.T.O. In a rather recent interview, the late Anger lamented: ...I'm not too keen on any group or cult. I've been to meet the various groups who call themselves OTO which Crowley founded. But Crowley never 'anointed' them or approved of them. All the groups are fighting with each other. There's been raids, thefts, houses have been broken into, books have been stolen, one house was burned down. These are Crowleyites fighting among each other and I'm ashamed of them.

Crowley is hugely popular today -- more so than during his lifetime. In 1967, he appeared on the cover of The Beatles Sgt. Peppers Lonely Hearts Club Band. In a 2002 BBC survey of the 100 Greatest Britons, Crowley ranked number 73.

The Berkeley O.T.O. had a San Franciscan member named Howard Stanton Levey (1930-1997), who began frequenting the lodge in 1951. Levey was in correspondence with Jack Parsons in the late 1940s and was an eager student of the occult. His background is somewhat shrouded in mystery, primarily because he misrepresented his early life and work when he was later to emerge as a major figure in occult circles. It is clear, however, that Levey was a musician who played keyboard at various burlesque houses and nightclubs in the Bay Area in the 1950s. Levey and Anger became fast friends in the O.T.O., and shared an interest in the more nefarious side of life. The two men intensely studied such phenomena as werewolves, vampires, tarot, ESP and essentially every other occult and mystical teaching under the sun. By 1961, they began to hold meetings at Levey's house, where they charged for public lectures on occultism which attracted fairly large crowds. Much of Levey's motivation for starting this occult club, was the 1947 novel (and film) Nightmare Alley by William Lindsay Gresham, about a carnival huckster who starts a phony spiritualist church to con money out of "rubes". (Ironically, Gresham's wife Joy went on to marry Christian author C. S. Lewis!)

As the public decency laws began to change in California, burlesque houses were allowed to offer topless and eventually fully nude dancing. Levey was already ingrained in the adult entertainment industry as a keyboard player in the older burlesque club scene. As a means to earn money, Levey recruited dancers and organized strip shows in San Francisco. According to his daughter, Zeena, he often turned to pimping women in San Francisco's red light district, called the Tenderloin. In 1966, Levey formulated a scheme by which he could combine his favorite interests -- sex, money, and magick. With Anger's blessing, Levey shaved his head, donned black clothing, and announced the formation of the Church of Satan.

He also changed his name to Anton Szandor LaVey and declared himself to be The Black Pope and The Devil's Avenger. In order to have a secure base of operation, LaVey painted his house black and designed an elaborate ritual chamber which would act as the headquarters for the new diabolical church. LaVey went on a publicity blitz which afforded him celebrity status in the growing 1960s counterculture. Over the course of the next few years, LaVey gathered a fairly large following of about 2000 members worldwide with around 500 or 600 of these being serious hardcore devotees. [\[36\]](#)

This was the beginning of the evolution of Modern Satanism in the United States, a dangerous and evil current that will eventually bring us all the way to the public diableries of The Satanic Temple.

The Masonic roots of the Ordo Templi Orientis

The Ancient and Primitive Rite of Memphis Misraim (A.P.R.M.M.) or Memphis Mizraim is a significant part of the Ordo Templi Orientis phenomenon. In reality, the early version of the O.T.O. had included a part of the system of the Rite of Memphis-Misraïm in their new Para-Masonic body. In fact, one of the basic pillars of the Ordo Templi Orientis, founded by Theodor Reuss at the beginning of the 20th. century, was the charter he'd received and bought from John Yarker (1833-1913) of the Antient and Primitive Scottish Rite, and the Memphis-Misraim Rite. For this reason, many O.T.O. members erroneously consider themselves to be Freemasons, and, as such, they are often derided for their erroneous presumption by real Freemasons. So, who was John Yarker? Another wrongly perceived charlatan? Well, I will use the words of VW Bro John Hamill, PGSwdB, current Deputy Grand Chancellor of the United Grand Lodge of England to clear this matter once and for all:

*Yarker was neither a degree-monger nor a charlatan, for he believed what he wrote, that the many degrees he had discovered all predated regular Freemasonry. He never invented evidence but accepted, uncritically, the invented evidence of others. His desperate attempt to ensure the continuance of the Ancient and Primitive Rite led him into the company of the fraud, Theodore Reuss, and Aleister Crowley. Expelled from the Ancient and Accepted Rite, he severed all connection with regular Freemasonry and later published The Arcane Schools: a review of their origin and antiquity; with a general history of Freemasonry, and its relation to the theosophic, scientific and philosophic mysteries, (Belfast: 1909); and was publisher of The Kneph, the official journal of the Antient and Primitive Rite, from 1881 to 1900. Author of 26 short papers in the Transactions of Quatuor Coronati Lodge No. 2076, he was an active* promoter of the Royal Arch, Ancient and Primitive Rite, Knights Templar, and the old York degrees of Heredom-Kadosh. ^[37]

The 3° degree (Master Magician) is in the O.T.O system compatible to the Master Mason degree of general Freemasonry (Blue Lodge). Reuss published an alleged transcript of his Charter in his private magazine Oriflamme (the issue of December 1902 mentions the 33°, 90°, and 96°), the original Charter extant mentions the degrees 30°-33° (without M.M.) only for which Reuss has permission to give. Nevertheless, Reuss assumed making regular Freemasons through his compilation of Orders a practice typical of fringe Masonry. In 1917, he would render some A.A.S.R. and M.M. degrees into the O.T.O., founded in 1906. As O.T.O. historian Peter-R. Koenig clearly points out, Reuss was an Anglo-German Freemason who was, and still is regarded, by historians and Freemasons alike as a swindler, whom imported the “fringe-masonic” organization of French origin, Alte und Primitive Ritus von Memphis und Misraim (henceforth M.M.) and the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite (A.A.S.R.) via England to Germany in 1902. At that time the German organizations he presided had no definite name (they altered according to Reuss’ mood or growing collection of Orders) but was declared to be founded on Harry J. Seymour’s Cerneau charter (a 33° rite) of 21 July 1862.

Theodor Reuss was busy selling and buying masonic charters. Clearly, potential members want to associate with an “authentic” Order or Lodge. “Authenticity” means “regularity”: permissions, charters, successions, constitutions and the like. In order to be called “regular” one needs a permission of a “regular” superior Mother or Grand Lodge. Until 1900 there were over 70 so-called High degree systems pretending to be continuations or extensions of the regular Craft Masonry. The only difference between all these systems was the 400 or more different names of the various degrees. This environment is the dwelling ground for those who abused their masonic powers by selling charters etc. (in a similar way to the current trade in minor ‘artistocratic’ titles). For Peter-R. Koenig, Reuss invented several new Orders, and basically made little more than a confused mess with all of them.

The Illuminati like to create such confusion, in order to make their real mission and work more difficult to perceive and understand for the profane. Reuss was responsible for the construction of the O.T.O. between 1906 and 1912, a clone of Craft Masonry, A.A.S.R., M.M., and Tantra that he had put together with the help of the late Carl Kellner (1851-1905), a member of John Yarker's Rite of Memphis-Misraim. Franz Hartmann's obituary of Kellner describes that in 1902 Kellner “..was personally initiated in Manchester by Brother Yarker into the 96°, and made Sovereign Honorary General Grand Master of our Order.” Reuss also invented a new “Order of the Illuminati” and several Rosicrucian societies. Reuss turned his collection of Orders into a huge non-transparent turmoil where every organisation seemed to be interweaved and linked. Its names varied according to the time of day, some members were co-members of several Reuss-Orders, others weren't. Neither Reuss or his self-styled heirs have ever appeared to be interested in clarifying the confusion. Therefore, at the time it became widely accepted (and still is today by some) that membership in one of Reuss' Orders equates to membership in all the others as well. Regular Freemasonry rejects all of Reuss' activities, especially the O.T.O. which accepts women in its lodges: impossible in traditional Masonry.

In 1904 and it is probably around this time that Reuss' decided to recruit from several A.A.S.R. (33° degrees) and M.M. (90° and 97° degrees) members as a 'chosen few' for his new emerging Order, the later O.T.O. (11 degrees). There was no proper name at this time — sometimes he spoke of the Oriental Freemasons or Order of Old Templar Freemasons (expressions also used in the A.A.S.R. context). The Memphis-Rite alone was sometimes called “Antient and Primitive Rite of Masonry”, or even “Oriental Order of Memphis”. When Reuss founded the “Order of Oriental Templars” there was a further confusion just around the corner — who was in which of Reuss' Orders? And wasn't the Memphis-Rite alone called “Oriental Templars”? How were they linked? Was an O.T.O.-member automatically an M.M.-member? Between 1906 and 1913 (following the death of John Yarker, worldwide head of M.M., in 1913 the position was confused) the O.T.O. unequivocally was distinct from all of Reuss' other Orders. When Reuss spoke of “Our Order” it remained completely unclear which Order he meant. But it is historically senseless to assume the O.T.O., which at this time, was a sort of collective Order which siphoned its members from A.A.S.R., M.M., Order of the Illuminati, regular Masonry, the Gnostic Catholic Church, the Rosicrucians, the Golden Dawn, etc..

It was not until 1917, when Reuss and his self-proclaimed heir, Aleister Crowley (1875-1947) considered the O.T.O., M.M. and the A.A.S.R. as linked, for example, 33°, 90°-95°, which were equal to the IX° O.T.O. [this is substantiated with Crowley's “Synopsis of Degrees” in his handwritten version of his IV° O.T.O. degree. For Koenig, in today's O.T.O., all this Masonic background is mirrored in its rituals, in its language, passwords, and grips.

The interested researcher will find in rare books like O.T.O. Rituals and Sex Magick, a choice of Reuss' original O.T.O. initiation rituals (Scottish Rite, Cerneau, Royal Arch, Rose Croix, and Memphis-Mizraim derivations) that have been later altered by Aleister Crowley for his English branch. Reuss never used Crowley's rituals re-modelled between 1912 and 1918 and wanted the Ordo Templi Orientis and Crowley's "Thelemic" concept of the Order to be kept strictly separated. There is evidence that suggests Crowley was probably expelled from the O.T.O. in 1921. [\[38\]](#)

For some historians of Freemasonry, the Ordo Templi Orientis (O.T.O.) was originally founded already back in 1895, not only with the help of Carl Kellner but also of Heinrich Klein and known Rosicrucian Franz Hartmann. However, only when Theodor Reuss succeeded Kellner as chief it apparently became a real operative order and not a "Mickey Mouse Club" of some sort. This version of the events is course questionable, nevertheless, Kellner had travelled in the Orient, and brought back with him Tantric knowledge and such, later used by Reuss who was more of a typical continental Illuminati occultist and fringe-Mason.

Among else, Reuss was chartered for this new Illuminati project (i.e. the O.T.O.) by Westcott of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn, John Yarker of the Memphis-Mizraim, and Leopold Engel (1858-1931) co-founder in the revived Illuminati Order. Reuss energetic efforts spread the O.T.O. throughout the world. Many famous occultists of the time were in one way or the other linked to Reuss or the O.T.O., as for instance; Papus, Rudolph Steiner, Jack W. Parsons, Ron L. Hubbard, Gerald Gardner, George Plummer, Israel Regardie, Ben Kadosch (Carl Willhelm Hansen) [1872-1936], Heinrich Traenker, Friedrich Mellinger [1890-1970] and many many more. In 1905, the Ancient and Primitive Rite of Memphis-Misraim was introduced into Germany from England by John Yarker, 97°, who was then the Grand Hierophant of the Rite. The first German leaders were Carl Kellner and Theodor Reuss who created a magical order known as the Ordo Templi Orientis by means of a reduction of the magical grades of the Rite of Memphis-Misraim from 97° to 9°, with a 10th grade, which was purely administrative. In 1902, the Theodor Reuss established the Sovereign Sanctuary of Memphis-Misraim in Germany and in 1913, after the death of Yarker, he became the International Head of the Rite.

In 1924, Reuss died and the succession was interrupted, except in the O.T.O. (Ordo Templi Orientis), the neo-templar order founded by Reuss, in 1905, in Germany. In reality, the O.T.O. had included the Rite of Memphis-Misraïm, although in a reduced version of 33° degrees, where its principle degrees were incorporated. In 1908 Krumm-Heller who will later found the F.R.A. in the 1920's received the Memphis-Misraim grades of 90° and 95° from Theodor Reuss in Paris. He was a disciple of Bishop Clement (under Bricaud's aegis), and of the Martinist Girgois (in Buenos Aires), Papus, and the American Peter Davidson of the H.B. of L. Krumm-Heller would later set up a number of Memphis & Mizraim Temples in South America under Papus' jurisdiction. Krumm-Heller not only befriended Reuss but also Franz Hartmann and the high-grade Mexican freemason Don Jesus Medina connected to Aleister Crowley. In 1909, Theodor Reuss delivered a licence to the famous Martinist Gerard Encausse (Papus). Encausse never became a regular (Grand Orient) Freemason. Despite this, he organized what was announced as an International Masonic Conference in Paris on June 24, 1908, and at this conference, he first met Theodor Reuss, and the two men apparently exchanged patents. Reuss elevated Encausse as X° of the Ordo Templi Orientis as well as giving him license to establish a Supreme Grand Council General of the Unified Rites of Ancient and Primitive Masonry for the Grand Orient of France and its Dependencies at Paris. For his part, Encausse assisted Reuss in the formation of the O.T.O. Gnostic Catholic Church as a child of l'Église Gnostique de France, thus forming the E.G.C. within the tradition of French neo-gnosticism. The successors of Papus were Charles Detré (Tedé), Jean Bricaud, Constant Chevillon, Charles-Henry Dupont and Robert Ambelain. In 1939, Jean Bricaud passed to the Eternal East and was followed by Chevillon. In 1944, Chevillon was murdered by the French collaborationists of national-socialism and was followed by Dupont. And, in 1960, Ambelain succeeded Dupont. ^[39] As one of the great French esotericists of the latter half of the 20th Century Robert Ambelain, who was directly involved in this fringe Masonic tradition, is probably one of the best sources we can refer to further explaining the complex history of the two Rites of Memphis and Misraïm, that commemorated their second centenary in 1988.

In origin, the fusion of the two Rites of Misraïm and Memphis was undertaken in 1881 by Giuseppe Garibaldi, who was the first Grand Master-General, but not necessarily a great esoterist, as recently underlined by Italian researcher Fortunato Luciano Sciandra. Here are some extracts from Robert Ambelain’s writings, to clear up a few points on the history of these rites that will later become one, and also on Napoleon’s role in all this: “The Rite of MIZRAÏM had been constituted in 1778 at Venice; it took its line from CAGLIOSTRO, who had himself received the lower grades from the Grand Lodge of ENGLAND, and the high grades of German Templar Masonry. The Rite of MEMPHIS was constituted at Montauban in 1815 by Masons who had participated in the Mission to Egypt with Bonaparte. From his accession to the imperial purple, Napoleon Bonaparte was proclaimed and considered to be a genuine Freemason in his lifetime, as were his father, his brothers and his Marshals. In his book The Freemasonry of Bonaparte (Payot edition 1982), François Collaveri showed the considerable role of Lodges in the diffusion of the great ideals of the French Revolution across Europe. “I am a man of the Revolution...”, the Emperor had declared. In 1986 the same author assembled all the proofs of his belonging to the Masonic Order in a second volume: Napoleon, Emperor Freemason (Tallandier edition 1986). All the documents, with the very important witness of the archives of the Grand-Orient de France of former times, affirm that the initiation of Napoleon Bonaparte took place in Egypt. To those we can add the documentation published by us in Number 1 of the magazine L’Initiation in 1979, an article which included the recall of a letter of Grand Master Constant Chevillon, dated November 10th 1934, confirming to Grand Master Fletcher of the USA that Napoleon Bonaparte had been received as a Mason in a Lodge in Cairo, which brought together the Masonic members of the Mission to Egypt, and that Kléber presided, the Lodge carrying the name Isis. These were the Masons, or their successors, who thereafter formally constituted the Rite of Memphis at Montauban in 1815. From this period, violet became the Masonic color of its rituals, blue being that of the Rite Français and blue edged with red that of the Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite. Violet constituted a reminder of the color of Parma violets, the duchy where the little king of Rome resided, then four years old.” [\[40\]](#)

For Ambelain, “The Rite of Memphis-Mizraïm associated the violet of these origins with the turquoise blue attributed to great Isis in ancient Egypt, thus joining together a double esoteric symbolism. This is why Napoleon was one of the very first Masons of this Rite of Memphis. And the Emperor never forgot that he had “received light” on the antique soil of holy initiation. This is why he also adopted the Bee as a symbol of his reign, with the Eagle. The bee was the image of Pharaoh in ancient Egypt, and two wings of an eagle flank the Osirian sun. Finally, a comment by the Emperor to Josephine has been reported by one of her intimate friends, the celebrated Mlle Lenormand in her Memoirs: I have consumed my life in a continual movement which hasn't allowed me to fulfill my duties as an initiate of the Egyptian sect. (Cf. Mémoires historiques et secrets de l'Impératrice Joséphine, Paris 1920). Other initiatic Grades coming from the ancient esoteric Obediences of the 18th Century were associated with these two Obediences: the PRIMITIVE Rite, Rite of the PHILADELPHIANS, etc. In the 19th Century, MIZRAÏM and MEMPHIS were the two Obediences from which the Carbonari were recruited. They had numerous Lodges in France and counted among their dignitaries very important people, including the Duc de DECAZES and Comte MURAIRE, Grand Commander of the SCOTTISH Rite to mention but two. At the present time in International Masonry MEMPHIS- MIZRAÏM can count around five thousand five hundred members, grouped in South America (Argentina, Bolivia, Chile, Venezuela, Haiti), Australia, and Europe (Belgium, Netherlands, Switzerland, Italy, France). In France the Obedience is above all a place of assembly for Masons who are generally in the higher grades, who belong to the GRAND-ORIENT DE FRANCE, to the GRANDE LOGE DE FRANCE, to the GRANDE LOGE NATIONALE FRANÇAISE "Opéra", and who are joined by a mutual attraction to Esotericism, Occultism, Symbolism, etc. It is in sum a crossroads or meeting-place. However, except in France it only has about thirty Lodges, not including the higher Lodges where one can find those Masons of all Obediences who are most qualified in the realm of the Occult and Esotericism; and some of these are in fact, the heads of other Organizations of this genre, which are more secretive. Moreover, the Rite of MEMPHIS- MIZRAÏM continues the tradition of adhering to those principles of tolerance and freedom of thought which in the 19th Century, during the White Terror, made it the refuge and nursery of the Carbonari." [\[41\]](#)

Regarding the Rite of Mizraim instead, for Ambelain "it appeared for the first time in Venice in 1788. A group of Socinians (an anti-Trinitarian Protestant sect) requested a patent from Cagliostro, then from Trente. Not wishing to practice the magical-kabbalistic rituals of the latter, they chose to work the Templar Rite. Cagliostro thus gave them only Masonic light; he held the first three Degrees of English Masonry and the higher Grades of German Masonry which were strongly marked by the templar tradition. The name Mizraïm is simply the plural of Egyptian, the only reminder of this Egyptian Rite which transmitted to them the authority for the Obedience. It hived off rapidly to Milan, Genoa, Naples and appeared in France through Michel Bédarride, who have received the magisterial powers in 1810 in Naples, from Bro. De Lassalle. From 1810 to 1811 the three Bédarride brothers successfully developed the Rite in France, to all intents and purposes under the protection of the Scottish Rite. Indeed, it could count several illustrious Masonic names at its head: the Comte Muraire, Sovereign Grand Commander of the Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite, the Duc Decazes, the Duke of Saxe-Weimar, the Duke of Leicester, Lieutenant-General Baron Teste, etc. Just before the White Terror it quickly became the Masonic Obedience which transmitted the required mastership to the Carbonari, and this Rite amassed 22 Lodges in Paris, 6 at Lyons, 6 at Metz, 5 in Toulouse, 3 I Bordeaux, 3 in Geneva, 2 in Lausanne, and 1 at Courtray. Violently anticlerical⁵, antiroyalist, the police of the Restoration had it dissolved. Clandestine for eighteen years, it was restored in 1838, only to be dissolved once more in 1841. It arose once more from a clandestine existence in 1848. Mizraïm made its way towards joining with the Rite of Memphis in 1881, a fusion which was the work of Garibaldi. Regarding instead the Rite of Memphis the majority of members who accompanied Bonaparte on the Mission of Egypt were Masons from the ancient initiatic Rites: the Philalethes, the African Brethren, the Hermetic Rite, the Philadelphians, the Primitive Rite, not to mention the Grand-Orient de France. Having discovered a gnostic-hermetic survival in Cairo, and then the Druze Masonry encountered by Gérard de Nerval in Lebanon which could be traced back to the Operative Masons who had accompanied the Templars – their protectors – there, the Brothers in the Mission to Egypt, decided henceforth to renounce their Masonic lineage which came from the Grand Lodge in London and to set out once more in a new Rite, which owed nothing to England, then Enemy Number One.”

Thus, for Ambelain, “under the guidance of Samuel Honis and Marconis de Nègre, the Rite of Memphis was born in Montauban, in 1815. With great speed, just as the Rite of Mizraïm had brought together nostalgic Jacobean and the Carbonari, the Rite of Memphis regrouped those in the pay of the ex- Grand Army and the Bonaparte-ists who remained loyal to the Eagle. In 1816 the two Rites had the same Grand Master-General, which would permit a future fusion. But the Grand-Orient was still mainly composed of monarchists, its seal carrying the fleur de lys, and it secured the dissolution of Memphis. This did not last, and in 1826 this Rite took up its labors once more under the Obedience of the selfsame Grand-Orient. Dissolved in 1841, just like Mizraïm, Memphis also became clandestine, and only reappeared in plain view in 1848 with the Republic. Dissolved once more in 1850, reawakened in 1853, Memphis joined the Grand-Orient in 1862, compelled to by a decision of the Prince- President. Having many Lodges abroad by now, it attracted illustrious names, such as Louis Blanc and Garibaldi, who was soon to be the unifier of Memphis and Mizraïm. Up to 1881, the Rites of Memphis and Mizraïm proceeded in parallel and in concert, in a very extraordinary atmosphere; indeed, these Rites both began to gather Masons from the Grand-Orient de France and the Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite who were interested in studies pertaining to the esotericism of Masonic symbolism, gnosis, Kabbalah also Hermeticism and occultism. Now, these two Rites were the inheritors and depositaries of the old initiatic Obediences of the 18th Century: the Philalethes, the Philadelphians, the Hermetic Rite, the Primitive Rite, etc. And all this was represented in Mizraïm in 90 different grades, and in Memphis, by 95. How to administrate and make use of this great disparate ensemble? When Giuseppe Garibaldi was designated first Grand Master- General ad vitam for the entire world (since Brothers abroad had not suffered political persecution as in France), he established a type of classification which was not at all hierarchical in the beginning, but which quickly became so. In fact, the 95 degrees of the Rite of Memphis-Mizraïm should be considered to be an ambulatory, where the old Masonic degrees which were no longer or rarely practiced, and not as a series of values, are to be found. Moreover, the accords of 1863 with the Grand-Orient of France, and 1896 with the Symbolic Scottish Grand Lodge, the future Grand Lodge of France only treated on the 33 classic degrees (the Rite of Perfection, followed by the Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite). The higher echelons of Memphis-Mizraïm compulsorily practiced:

the 9th Degree (Master-Elect of Nine), 18th Degree (Knight Rose-Croix), 30th Degree (Knight Kadosh), 32nd Degree (Prince of the Royal Secret), 33rd Degree (Sovereign Grand Inspector-General).” ^[43] For Ambelain the 66th, 90th and 95th degrees were conferred as honorific titles on senior Masons, in recompense for their valor and fidelity. The other degrees (Secret Master, Royal Arch, etc) are optional and left to the discretion of the Brothers of higher degrees. As the late Robert Ambelain explained in detail, today, the Rite of Memphis-Mizraïm comprises around 5,500 Masons worldwide, the majority of laborers being located in South America. It possesses around a hundred Symbolic Lodges for the first three grades (not counting the higher echelons) in France, Switzerland, Belgium, Netherlands, Argentina, Chile, Bolivia,

Venezuela, Australia, etc. Since the General Grand Mastership of Garibaldi, the position has been successively secured by Theodore Reuss (also Grand Master of the Grand-Orient of Germany), Doctor Gérard Encausse (Papus), Charles Détré (alias Teder), Jean Bricaud, Constant Chevillon, Charles-Henry Dupont, Robert Ambelain, and the late Gérard Kloppel from 1984 to 2008. In 1964 a grand Convent-General of the Lodges of South America decided that the seat of the General Grand Mastership would be obligatorily in Paris, and a Convent-General of the Lodgories of Europe ratified this vote in 1965. The Convent of South America also expressed the wish that the Grand Master-General should obligatorily be French. This appears to be more difficult to impose. Remembering its deaths (the Grand Master Chevillon was assassinated by the Vichy Militia, and his Belgian alter ego, Brother Delaive, was decapitated with a hatchet by the Nazis), this Rite perpetuates their tradition of fidelity to democratic principles and to the initiatic sciences. Uncompromisingly Deist, it makes the definition of “Masonic religion” laid out in Anderson’s Constitutions of 1723 and considered in “general morality of honest men” its own. Its Symbolic Lodges work the Templar Rite (Mizraïm) or the Egyptian Rite (Memphis), but on their altars, they join the Ruler with the traditional interlacing of the Compass and Square. [\[44\]](#)

Robert Ambelain was such a knowledgeable Freemason and esoterist, he actually completely reinvented the Elus Coën (sometimes misspelled “Elus Kohen” or “Cohen”), of Martinez de Pasqually, that he revived after the second world war, but since then it has existed a great confusion regarding the Elus Coën because of Ambelain incomplete knowledge ranging from how the very name of the order was actually spelled, to how its system of initiation was composed. Robert Ambelain was convinced that the order represented a priesthood of the old testament, the levittic Kohanim, that supervised the cult of the Temple in Jerusalem. He further filled the many holes in the tradition he sought to revive with either kabbalah or foreign elements from Memphis-Misraïm.

Before he died Ambelain discovered and donated to the Bibliothèque nationale de France the manuscrit d'Alger, [\[45\]](#) that will eventually rectify this pseudo approach to the Elus Coën in due time, once the original rituals of the Elus Coën will be fully translated and made available to the interested parties. Why are the Elus Coën Illuminati so important? Well they are considered still one of the most influential esoteric orders of the Western Initiatic System, and the original rituals that gradually surfaced from the manuscrit d'Alger seem pretty interesting, especially in regards to the harshness of their female initiation with phrases like: What are you doing among us, a treacherous woman like the Serpent? Would you like for the fourth time to rush into some other innovative trap on your part? No, you demon, you will not succeed! I have discovered all your past plans and I know in you all those you can still commit; O' Eve, Eve, far from being now seduced by your false and vain appearances, you will be subject to me and my dependence.

Probably today's Elus Coën could find this part a bit difficult to digest after the advent of feminism.

Chapter Four

More Illuminati Secrets exposed for the first time Initiation and telepathy in the Illuminati

Many of you may have become aware at a certain point in your life, that certain situations are not always as they appear in plain sight. The simple fact is, I didn't learn about this in school, I wasn't told about it, it was a sudden comprehension, like the opening of an eye, or like suddenly understanding another language. This is the phenomena I call "life initiation", because it's not a slow process like the one we receive with traditional "education", but a seemingly more immediate one. An “initiation” is, in fact, an abrupt transformation in your perception of reality, where you are revealed things that you didn't know before. Telepathic communication is evidenced in the same way, by sudden comprehension of things one never learned about through formal education or life experience. Tuning into the telepathic realm is achieved often by contemplating various passages in scripture, which activates portals in the mind, through which information flows. Spontaneous telepathy often occurs when meeting people, friends or strangers, and being able to mysteriously anticipate what they are about to say, or about to do. While these things happen to many people without any initiation at all, it simply becomes more frequent for the initiated person in a certain ambience. The Illuminati, in fact, communicate telepathically with each other, and their Invisible Masters through the centuries, by using various tools, like secret symbols and text, which, when contemplated in their lodges and Chapters, set the mind in a certain receptive state to send and receive messages that transcend time and space.

Most initiatic symbols are all around us every day, and various texts have been produced throughout the ages that contain them, and are now of course widely available on the internet. But, until initiated into one of the Illuminati sects or mystery schools, they are often meaningless to the average individual, who sees views them according to his own perception, and not for their true initiatic meaning. This is often why these symbols become only a mechanism to open the mind of the average New Ager, rather than a true understanding of their special initiatic meaning. This is why New Age philosophy can only be defined as a subject without clear definition or purpose. Yes, it does relate to metaphysical subjects, but only in a general way, losing its original spiritual properties and becoming only a tool of the system, on a useless journey to simply waste our time or absorb our energy. To fully comprehend the truth of the Matrix surrounding us, one must be truly initiated by a valid Master. However, a partial understanding is possible by people of general intelligence. For example, I consider, as some of you already know, my books, especially my Confessions series, as a possible alternative path to facilitate self-initiation. Unlike Freemasons, who must keep everything secret, under the threat of various penalties, the Illuminati have no need to attempt to keep secrets and you want to know why?

The truth is that the initiator himself simply decides who will comprehend or not his lesson, deciding who are the ones who can completely know the truth, and who will remain partly blind because of their lack of preparation. So the Illuminati secrets are kept, not by any material actions or threats on their part, but by the very design of their initiatic system and the way it spreads its secrets and revelations to the right people, avoiding those who are not ready or too ignorant to understand. In his book, Perspectives on Initiation, Guénon clarifies the significance given by the ancient Greeks to the classical names of lesser and greater mysteries: “they are not different "types" of initiations, but stages or degrees of the same initiation”.

Hermes' Caduceus is an example of a symbol associated to the possession of lesser mysteries, and showing an example of horizontal duality (the two snake heads are placed in the horizontal dual position, hence referring to apparent dualities such as life and death). In Studies in Hinduism, René Guénon mentions a relation between the symbol and the Kundalini Shakti. Lesser mysteries lead to the “perfection of the human state”, or in other words, to something traditionally designated by the restoration of the “primordial state”, a state that Dante, in the Divine comedy, relates symbolically to the terrestrial paradise. On the other hand, “greater mysteries” refer to “the realization of supra-human states”; they correspond to the Hindu doctrine of “deliverance” (Moksha) and to what Islamic esoterism calls the “realization of the Universal Man”: in that latter tradition, "lesser" and "greater" mysteries correspond exactly to the signification of the terms “el-insân el-qadîm” and “el-insan el-kâmil”. These two phases are related to an interpretation of the symbolism of the cross with the notions of “horizontal” and “vertical”. They also correspond respectively to what is traditionally designated in western hermeticism by the terms royal initiation and sacerdotal initiation:

Pure metaphysical knowledge relates consequently, to “greater mysteries,” and the knowledge of traditional sciences to the "lesser mysteries". From a historical perspective, the “lesser mysteries” being merely a preparation to the "greater mysteries" [...] ultimately one has to go back beyond the very origin of humanity, and this is why a question such as a “historical” origin of initiation appears to be devoid of the least signification.

The traditional sciences, whose knowledge provides restoration of “primordial state” are known under the name of cosmological sciences: among them, one can quote alchemy, astrology, the science of letters, and more generally, what is referred under the name Hermeticism. In the West, the Brothers of the Rose-Cross were beings that had effectively achieved the completion of lesser mysteries, and Rosicrucian initiation inspired by them was a particular form linked to Christian Hermeticism. René Guénon writes moreover that this Rosicrucian initiation is lost today, and is completely unrelated to the various modern organizations bearing the name Rosicrucian, as they belong to modern fallacies falling under the general denomination of pseudo-initiation given by Guénon to them. Telepathy, meaning Thought-Transference, bears a misleading title. Literally translated, it means “suffering at a distance,” or, perhaps, “feeling pain at a distance.” The name should really indicate “knowing at a distance,” in order to be properly descriptive. But as the term has acquired a forced meaning by reason of years of usage, it will probably be continued in popular favor. After all, names do not count, so long as the meaning is accepted and understood. [\[46\]](#)

While the term itself has been generally used in the sense of conscious and deliberate sending and receiving of thought-waves, there is a far wider field of phenomena covered by it, the unconscious sending and receiving of mental and emotional vibrations. I shall discuss this subject in a moment, for now, I would like to call your attention to the mechanism whereby the waves of thought and emotion are transmitted.

In the previous chapter, you will recall that there is a manifestation of energy or force (in the form of vibrations) in every mental or emotional state. This is true not only in the case of deep thought or vivid feeling but also in the case of general mental feelings and emotional states. During such manifestations, there is a radiation of mental or emotional vibrations from the brain or nervous centers of that particular system, that flow in all directions, just as light and wireless electricity. The principle seats or centers of these radiations exist in the cerebrum, cerebellum, and the medulla oblongata, respectfully; and several great centers of nerve substance in the human system, called the plexi, such as the solar plexus, etc.

The vibrations arising from emotional excitement are sent out principally from the plexi, or great centres of the sympathetic nervous system. Those arising from the more strictly mental states emanate from certain centers and points of the brain of the person manifesting them. Certain forms of these vibrations constitute the real essence of what is generally called "human magnetism," which will be discussed further on.

I do not think it advisable to go into the technical details of the generation and mechanism of transmission of these thought and emotional vibrations, in these lessons. To understand them would require a technical knowledge of physiology and organic chemistry, which is not possessed by the average person. Moreover, such details are neither interesting nor instructive to the general student of occultism. But, I think it proper to give at least a brief description of the receiving of such vibratory-waves by individuals. In the first place, every great plexus, or groups of nerve ganglia, in the human system is a receiving station, as well as a sending station. A person manifesting strong emotional excitement tends to awaken similar states in the nervous centers of other persons in whom the conditions are favorable. This explains why the vibrations of anger, fear, panic, are so contagious. It also explains the strong effect of the vibrations emanating from the nerve centers controlling the reproductive system, in certain cases of strong sexual excitement. Each human sympathetic nervous system contains many receiving stations where emotional vibrations are received, and where they tend to be transformed into similar feeling in the receiving system unless neutralized by other mental and emotional states in the person. When we come to consider the apparatus by which they are received, the vibrations arising from what may be called "purely mental" operations of the brain, such as intellectual thought, constructive imagination, etc., we find a more specialized arrangement, as might be expected.

The principal apparatus for receiving thought vibrations of this kind is that which is known as the "pineal gland," which I shall now describe. The pineal gland is a peculiar mass of nervous substance which is embedded in the human brain, in a position near the middle of the skull almost directly above the extreme top of the spinal column. It is shaped like a small cone and is of a reddish-gray color. It lies in front of the cerebellum and is attached to the floor of the third ventricle of the brain. It contains a small quantity of peculiar particles of gritty, sand-like substance, which are sometimes called "brain-sand." It derives its scientific name from its shape, which resembles a pine-cone. Physiologists are vague in regards to the function of this strange organ, and generally content themselves with the statement that, "its functions are not understood." But occultists know that the pineal gland, with its peculiar arrangement of nerve-cell corpuscles, and its tiny grains of "brain-sand," is the physical telepathic receiving instrument. Students of wireless telegraphy have noticed a startling resemblance between the pineal gland, and a part of the receiving instrument employed in wireless telegraphy.

The thought vibrations that come in contact with the nervous system of the receiving person, set up a peculiar vibration in the substance of the pineal gland, and thus the first step in the transformation of these vibrations into thought-forms in the mind of the person is underway. The student will do well to learn the idea of the workings of wireless telegraphy, for this will set up the right conception of the working of ordinary telepathy, without the necessity of complicated technical diagrams and descriptions. Let's understand what results from the sending forth, and receiving of these mental and emotional waves of force and energy. While the phenomena of the astral plane is probably more fascinating to the average student, I would impress upon you the importance of mastering the occult phenomena of the physical plane, before passing on to that of the higher planes.

In the first place, as all occultists know, each person is constantly surrounded with what has been called an "atmosphere" composed of mental and emotional vibrations which are emanated from his personality. The atmosphere of each person depends upon the general character of the thoughts and feelings of the person in question. Consequently, as no two persons are precisely alike in character, it follows that no two personal atmospheres are exactly alike. Each person has a psychic atmosphere of his or her own. These atmospheric vibrations do not extend very far from the presence of the person, and consequently, affect only those coming near to him.

In the same way, every group or crowd of persons has its own psychic atmosphere, composed of a blending of the individual psychic atmospheres of the persons composing the crowd, group or assemblage, and representing the general average of the thought and feelings of the crowd. There are no two group atmospheres exactly alike, for the reason that no two groups of persons, large or small, are exactly alike. Actors know that each audience which they face has its own psychic atmosphere, and the actors are affected by it. Preachers, lawyers, and public speakers, in general, are quite aware of this fact, and freely admit it, though they may not be acquainted with the causes or laws governing the phenomena. Following the same psychic law, every town or large city, or even every small village or section of a larger town, is found to have its own distinctive psychic atmosphere, which is very perceptible to strangers visiting, and which affect those who take up their residence there.

In large cities, every building has its own vibrations which arise from the general character of those occupying it. Different church buildings, likewise, reflect the character of the general habits of thought and feeling of those worshipping in them. Likewise, certain business streets have pleasant or unpleasant vibrations in their atmosphere, from the same causes. Every person recognizes the truth of these statements, though but few are able to account for the facts in a scientific manner. The beginner in the study of psychic phenomena often asks how these things can be, when the thought which has occasioned the vibrations have long since passed away. The explanation is simple when properly explained. It is something like this: just as heat remains in a room after the stove has ceased to throw out heat-waves, so do the vibrations of thought and feeling persist long after the thought or feeling has died away. Or, if you prefer a more material illustration, we may say that if a package of perfumery has been opened in a room, and then removed, the air will remain charged with the odor for a long time afterwards. So you see, the same principle applies in the case of psychic vibrations.

The person carries around with him the general atmosphere of his characteristic mental and emotional vibrations, as does the house, store, church, street, town, or city, etc., are permeated with the psychic vibrations of those who have frequented them. Nearly everyone realizes the different feeling that impresses him when he enters a strange house, apartment, store, or church. Each one has its own difference of psychic effect. And, so can each person create his or her psychic effect upon those coming in contact with him or her, or who comes into his or her presence or vicinity. The next question asked by the thoughtful new student is this: If persons are constantly sending forth psychic vibrations, and if such vibrations persist for some time, why are we not overwhelmed with the force of them; and why are they not all so mixed up as to lose all their effect?

In the first place, though we are constantly affected more or less by the multitude of psychic vibrations beating upon us, still the greater part of them do not consciously impress us. For example, we have but to consider how few of the sounds or sights of a busy street are impressed upon our consciousness. We hear and see only a few of the things which attract our attention and interest. The rest are lost to us, although our eyes and ears receive them all. In the same way, we are impressed only by the stronger vibrations which reach us, and then only by those which we have attracted to ourselves, or which prove attractive to us by reason of our own likes and dislikes.

In the second place, the effect of certain thought vibrations is neutralized by the effect of the vibrations of thoughts of an opposite character. Just as a mixture of black and white produces the neutral color of grey, so do two currents of opposing thought vibrations tend to resolve themselves into a neutral vibration which has little or no effect upon those coming in contact with them. You may think of numerous correspondences to this in the world of material things. For instance, a mixture of very hot and very cold water will produce a neutral lukewarm liquid, neither hot nor cold. In the same way, two things of opposing taste characteristics, when blended, will produce a neutral taste having but little effect upon one. The principle is universal and is readily understood. In the third place, there is that which we may call an “affinity” between thoughts and feelings of a similar character.

Not only do the vibrations of similar thoughts tend to coalesce and combine; but, more than this, each one of us attracts to himself or herself the thought vibrations which are in general accord with corresponding thoughts in our own minds, or feelings in our own nature. Like attracts like. In the same way, the character of our thoughts and feelings act to repel thought or emotional vibrations of an opposite or inharmonious nature. As all occultists know, everyone draws thought vibrations in harmony with his or her own; and also repels thought vibrations of an inharmonious nature. These are the general laws and principles governing the phenomena of this phase of telepathic vibrations. There is much more to be said on the subject, of course, but if you will note carefully the leading principles and laws of manifestation just mentioned, you will be able to reason correctly regarding any phase of this class of phenomena which may come before you for attention. Once you learn a general rule, the rest becomes merely a matter of application and interpretation.

Let us now proceed to a consideration of other phases of the general subject of telepathic influence. We now come to the phase of what may be called direct telepathy—that is where a thought is consciously, and more or less purposely, directed toward another person. We come across many interesting cases of this kind, where persons find themselves thinking intently of certain other persons, and afterwards are told by the other persons that “I found myself thinking intently about you, at such and such a time,” etc. In some of these cases, it is difficult to determine which one started the thinking. Again, how often do we find ourselves thinking of a person when all of a sudden the person comes into sight. Again, we think intently and earnestly about a certain question; and then, all of a sudden, other folks whom we meet begin talking to us about the same thing. These instances are too common to need more than a passing notice.

A little more purpose is displayed in that class of phenomena in which we intently wish that a certain person shall do a certain thing, and lo and behold! we soon learn that that certain person has done it. A number of years ago, a popular writer wrote an article in which he mentioned what seemed to him to be a curious instance of some form of mental influence or telepathy. He said that he had found out that if he would sit down and carefully write a letter to the person who he had not heard from for a long time, and then destroy the letter instead of sending it, he would be almost certain to receive a letter from that person within a few days. He did not attempt to account for the phenomenon, he merely called the attention of his readers to it.

Many persons have followed the suggestion, often with very wonderful results. There is nothing miraculous, or supernatural about such occurrences. It is merely one phase of telepathy. The concentrated thought of the writer of the letter is directed toward the other person, and that person begins to think of the first one; then he thinks he will write to him; then he actually does write. Distance, space, and direction have no importance in this experiment—it is not necessary to even know where the second person is, in fact. There are people who are so close to psychic harmony with each other, that they very often are able to ask questions and receive answers from each other, even though great distances separate them. At particular times there is a better psychic harmony existing between the same persons than is found at other times. All this, of course, affects the success of the experiment. It is surprising what wonderful results along these lines may be obtained by almost any person of average intelligence, after a little careful, patient, conscientious practice.

There have also been phenomena obtained as the result of a long series of careful experiments which are, in a way, even more wonderful than these somewhat less deliberate experiments just mentioned. I allude to the experiments of a number of earnest, careful scientific students, who surrounded themselves with every precaution against over-enthusiasm, fraud, and coincidence. Prominent among this class of investigations we find those conducted by the Society for Psychical Research, in England, that has really established a firm basis for the work of other investigators, who followed the general methods of the said society. In the following chapter, I will present a somewhat extended statement of the results of such investigations, because this information is important to every student of psychic phenomena, not only because it establishes a firm scientific basis for studies and beliefs, but also because it supplies important information which he may apply in the course of his own experimental work.

I would like to mention that the investigations into the subject of telepathy, and kindred subjects, under the auspices of the society just mentioned, were conducted by men of careful scientific training and experience, and under the general supervision and approval of the officers of the society, among them, being eminent men such as Prof. Henry Sidgwick, of Cambridge University; Prof. Balfour Stewart, a Fellow of the Royal Society of England; Rt. Hon. A.J. Balfour, the English statesman; Prof. William James, the American psychologist; Sir William Crookes, the great chemist and discoverer of physical laws, who invented the celebrated "Crookes' Tubes," without which the discovery of X Rays, radioactivity, etc., would not have been possible; Frederick W.H. Myers, the celebrated explorer of the astral planes, and writer on psychic phenomena; Sir Oliver Lodge, the popular English scientist; and other men of international reputation and high standing. The character of these men lends the stamp of scientific accuracy to all the work of the society.

In order that you may understand the spirit which animated these scientific investigators in their work for the exploration of this new and strange region of Nature, I ask you to carefully read the following words of the presidential address of Sir William Crookes, before the Royal Society, in Bristol, England, in 1898. Please remember, that this speech was made before an assemblage of distinguished scientists, many of them being materialists and, quite skeptical of all occult phenomena—this was nearly twenty years ago, that Sir William Crookes stated:

*Were I now introducing for the first time these inquiries to the world of science, I should choose a starting point different from that of old (where we formerly began). It would be well to begin with Telepathy; with that fundamental law, as I believe it to be, that thoughts and images may be transferred from one mind to another without the agency of the recognized organs of sense—that knowledge may enter the human mind without being communicated in any hitherto known or recognized ways. If telepathy takes place, we have two physical facts—the physical change in the brain of A, the suggestor, and the analogous physical change in the brain of B, the recipient of the suggestion. Between these two physical events there must exist a train of physical causes and is unscientific to call in the aid of mysterious agencies, when with every fresh advance in knowledge it is shown that either vibration have powers and attributes abundantly able to any demand—even the transmission of thought.

It is supposed by some physiologists that the essential cells of nerves do not actually touch, but are separated by a narrow gap which widens in sleep while it narrows almost to extinction during mental activity. This condition is so singularly like a Branly or Lodge coherer (a device which led to the discovery of wireless telegraphy) as to suggest a further analogy. The structure of brain and nerve being similar, it is conceivable that there may be present masses of such nerve coherers in the brain, whose special function it may be to receive impulses brought from without, through the connecting sequence of ether waves of the appropriate order of magnitude. Roentgen has familiarized us with an order of vibrations of extreme minuteness as compared with the smallest waves with which we have hitherto been acquainted: and there is no reason to suppose that we have here reached the limit of frequency. It is known that the action of thought is accompanied by certain molecular movements in the brain, and here we have physical vibrations capable from their extreme minuteness of acting directly upon individual molecules, while their rapidity approaches that of internal and external movements of the atoms themselves. A formidable range of phenomena must be scientifically sifted before we effectually grasp a faculty so strange, so bewildering, and for ages so inscrutable, as the direct action of mind upon mind. In the old Egyptian days, a well-known inscription was carved over the portal of the Temple of Isis: I am whatever has been, is, or ever will be; and my veil no man hath yet lifted. Not thus do modern seekers after truth confronts Nature—the word that stands for the baffling mysteries of the Universe. Steadily, unflinchingly, we strive to pierce the inmost heart of Nature, from what she is to reconstruct what she has been and to prophesy what she shall be. Veil after veil we have lifted, and her face grows more beautiful, august and wonderful, with every barrier that is withdrawn.

You will notice that this address made many years ago, and from the standpoint of physical science, is in full accord with the ideas of occultism, that is as old as the hills. And yet, the speaker worked the idea out independently. He also investigated higher forms of psychic phenomena, with results that startled the world. But, you will notice that he does not attempt to give any other than purely physical laws, the credit for the ordinary phenomena of telepathy. And he was thoroughly right in this, as we have seen. He escaped the common error of confusing physical-sense phenomena with the phenomena of the astral-senses. Each plane has its own phenomena—and each class is surely wonderful enough. And, again, remember that both physical and astral phenomena are purely natural; there is no need for seeking any supernatural agencies to account for these natural facts. [\[47\]](#)

Man, A Transformer of Energy

As a microcosm or little universe, man is able to transmit and receive a very wide variety of energies. In addition to the energy derived from the food he eats and the air he breathes, he is also the medium for countless other forces. His astral body constantly receives and transmits the energy radiated by the planets. Even as the sun acts as a transformer for the high-frequency energies of space, so man in his turn acts as a transformer of planetary energies. He is also a transmitter of intellectual and spiritual energies that reach him as wave motions from regions of greater intelligence and spirituality. The grade of intellectual and spiritual force he transmits depends upon his mental development and soul unfoldment.

The astral energies radiated by the planets are intercepted by his astral body being received more freely at those points in his astral structure, as indicated by planets in his birth-chart, that were organized by states of consciousness previous to his birth. These astral energies are even more essential to the welfare of the astral body, than is sunlight to the welfare of the physical body. Only a portion of such energies received, however, is utilized by the person. The balance undergoes transformation, or change in frequency of vibration, and is again radiated, much as the sun and planets receive energy of a more general character, and radiate it again.

Likewise, such spiritual and intellectual energy as man receives or generates is again, in large measure, radiated. As seen by clairvoyant vision this radiation is of two distinct and separate qualities. The grosser astral energies and thought vibrations flow forth to remain in contact with the earth and may be received in measure by lower life forms. In other words, the thoughts and feelings of man, as well as certain other astral energies, flow about and permeate the earth, so that other life forms coming in contact with them may receive and appropriate as their organization will permit. In the upward struggle of the seven sub-mundane degrees of life, this force radiated by man and penetrating to the very center of the earth is of great assistance.

It affords these degrees of life from mineral to man whatever intellectual energies they are capable of absorbing and utilizing. It thus hastens their evolution through providing them with mental nutriment and the incentive to effort. The other and more spiritual portion of the force radiated by man travels away from the earth to the astral plane immediately surrounding it. There are seven super-mundane realms of life; realms of life whose denizens have never been, and never will be, incarnated on earth. They form a gradation in spirituality of seven steps between man and the angel. Being too spiritual and lacking in penetrative and initiative force for incarnation in gross matter, they depend upon man for all knowledge of material conditions.

The higher essences of man's intellectual and spiritual endeavors may be assimilated by them and give them information that is a requisite of their progress. But now I must return to earth, and to matters that are susceptible of proof by the average man.

A very common phenomenon, and one that should be understood by everyone, so that one can avoid becoming the dupes of unscrupulous practical psychologists, is the exercise of thought power to influence another person's thoughts and actions without the intervention of the spoken word, or any sign. It is possible, for instance, in a public gathering, to concentrate the mind on a person and make him turn and look. If the person is known to the experimenter, it will be much easier to influence him, for a point of contact will previously have been established. But it is also possible to influence a total stranger. These experiments which have been rigidly tested, and after coincidence, have been eliminated, found to produce the desired effect, are very simple, but they demonstrate in a very forcible and convenient way, that the mind of one person can, and sometimes does, influence another person at a distance. Furthermore, it is not uncommon for a hypnotist to direct the actions of his subject by mental command alone. There is plenty of irrefutable evidence that this has been successfully done. The various kinds of absent treatments applied by metaphysicians, mental scientists, Christian scientists, and new thought practitioners, are practical applications of this power of one person to influence another at a distance.

The thought of one individual sets up lines of force in an astral substance which reach the second individual, and if the experiment is successful, sets up vibrations similar to the thought held, in the unconscious mind or astral body of the other individual. If the person to whom the thought is sent is one who is in the habit of controlling his own thoughts and actions, his unconscious mind will repel, and will not accept the thought sent to it, unless it is a thought quite acceptable and perceived to be for his welfare. But if the person has cultivated irresponsible mediumship, or is naturally negative, the thought will enter the unconscious mind and may quite dominate it. The thoughts and actions then will be those willed by the person sending the thought.

No person who habitually controls his own thoughts and actions need be dominated by any other person or entity. The soul that has built the body about itself, under normal circumstances, is quite able to resist foreign invasion from any source. It is aware that to turn around and look at someone who is concentrating on him in a public meeting is not apt to prove detrimental, but it will resist detrimental mental commands even as he would resist them if they were uttered aloud. Once a thought image has been accepted, however, particularly if the image is strong and vivid, momentous results may follow. The physical body is shaped and molded by the astral body. Normally this molding is quite gradual, but when the image in the unconscious mind is supported by an unusual amount of energy it brings about such a radical and abrupt change in the astral form, that the physical also is drastically transformed. In proof of this, it would be an easy matter to cite numerous instances in which persons have been instantly healed by mental or spiritual treatment, such healing being accompanied by marked changes in the body and its functions. Almost everyone nowadays knows of one or more such cases. [\[48\]](#)

Reincarnation and more on the Illuminati

In the year 553 A. D., the doctrine of reincarnation was officially banished by the Christian Church. Officially it was banished for no other reason than it was considered to be too much of an influence from the Orient, but in reality, it hides the biggest secret belief of the Illuminati elite. The decision was intended to enable the church to increase its power at that time and to tighten its hold upon the human mind by telling people their salvation had to be accomplished in one incarnation and one lifetime, and if they didn't make it, they would go to Hell. The human mind today is beginning to unfold in such a way that this simplistic viewpoint no longer makes sense to many people. Still, there are many who depend on this idea for their devotional support, and for a feeling of comfort that was constructed by the elite to manipulate and control the masses. So Christians feel that in order to fulfill this commandment of salvation, they must accept Jesus as their Lord and Saviour when in reality Christianity has been transformed by the Illuminated elite into a tool for their power.

However, one thing we need to understand is what happens when we go through the experience of having the life force leave our bodies. As we go with that life force, our consciousness begins to identify with the soul. It continues to be aware, identifying with the content of our experiences accumulated from many incarnations past. Once we can consciously do that, we will then have some understanding of what the next incarnation will be, even before it happens, and the elite knows that very well and use it to their own advantage. Even at the present time, we can all understand what the next incarnation will be if we use the powers of reason, imagination and mind to analyze what's going on now in the Hic et Nunc. If things don't change within us, and if we continue to let the things that are now happening go on within us, and around us, without trying to understand and do something about it, then our suffering and stupidity, plus our ignorance, will continue into the next incarnation, just as the problems of one day tend to go into the next, unless there are changes made. The laws of reincarnation have to do with the kind of existence we will have thousands of years into the future. If we could understand the meaning and the secrets of reincarnation, like the Illuminati, we would be able to go back thousands of years into the past. We would be able to understand how we accumulated, as individuals and as groups, the ideas and the feelings which are now in our consciousness, seeking to express themselves. Just because we do not have historical evidence of civilizations that lived more than 6,000 years ago, does not mean these great civilizations did not exist. The earth changes. Physical evidence is covered up and destroyed down through thousands of years of time. Therefore, the place we must look for evidence of the past is in our own consciousness, and not in physical things. The things of our consciousness are never destroyed. Ideas, inspirations, the great creative ideas of the present and the future, have been lying dormant in the human consciousness for many, many thousands of years.

It is important for us to understand that these ideas are present in the minds of certain persons belonging to the good side of the Illuminati who know how to express them for the benefit of the human race. This is really where the idea of reincarnation comes in wonderfully, and it is important for us to realize that the ideas themselves are for the benefit of the human race and not an exclusivity of the elite or their occult circles.^[49]

The belief in reincarnation—the Transmigration of the Soul—forms the basis of the earliest beliefs of the various Illuminati Mystery Schools and the ancient schools of philosophy. The Greek philosopher Pherecydes taught it, Pythagoras, Empedocles, Plato, Virgil, and Ovid embraced it in their philosophies. Plato, for example, wrote: “By making the right use of those things remembered from the former life, by constantly perfecting himself in the mysteries, a man becomes truly perfect.”

The belief in reincarnation is also found in Jewish literature, in the Talmud, in the writings of Philo, and it is definitely proclaimed in the Kabbalah, the system of Jewish theosophy that even permeated the Christian faith in the middle ages, and is considered central to the Illuminati belief system. It was, for this reason, accepted by Giordano Bruno, and treated with respect, if not with full acceptance, by Illuminati member Goethe and also by Kent, Lessing, Hume, Schopenhauer and many others of the western school of science and philosophy. It reaches from the Wisdom of the Chaldeans to the Yogis of India, from the Magi of Persia to the Philosophers of the East. “The soul is not born; it does not die; it was not produced by anyone; nor, was any produced from it,” declared Emerson. “There is not, in my opinion, wrote Addison, a more pleasing consideration than that of the perpetual progress which the soul makes towards the perfection of its nature, without ever arriving at a period in it. To look upon the soul as going on from strength to strength, to consider that it is to shine forever with new accessions of glory and brighten to all eternity; that it will be still adding virtue to virtue and knowledge to knowledge, carries in it something wonderfully agreeable to that ambition which is natural to the mind of man.” “Nature, writes Schlegel, is nothing less than the ladder of resurrection which, step by step, leads upward—or rather is carried from the abyss of eternal death up to the apex of life.”

Benjamin Disraeli, known British politician, and writer who twice served as Prime Minister of the United Kingdom said: “There is no system so simple, and so little repugnant to our understanding, as that of metempsychosis. The pains and pleasures of this life are by this system considered as the recompense or the punishment of our actions in another state.” Among the many arguments advanced to sustain the claims of reincarnation, the following may be cited: The theory of immortality demands it; analogy makes it most probable; science, in many ways, confirms it, especially in the law of evolution; it explains many otherwise mysterious experiences in life; and, it alone solves the problem of apparent injustice and misery in the world.

In his poem on the philosopher Pythagoras, translated by Dryden, Ovid wrote: “Death, so-called, is but old matter dressed in some new form; and in a varied vest from tenement to tenement though tossed, The soul is still the same, the figure only lost and, as the softened wax new seals receive, This face assumes, and that impression leaves, Now called by one, now by another name; The form is only changed; the wax is still the same. Then, to be born is to begin to be Some other thing we were not formerly. That forms are changed, I grant; that nothing can Continue in the figure it began.”

So we have seen in the previous words, that reincarnation was among the secret teachings in all of the temples of antiquity connected to the Illuminati network. Presented originally as a part of the initiation into the great mysteries of ancient Egypt, this revelation has now passed on to all mystical religions, who basically gave birth to the various Illuminati sects. Gérard Anaclet Vincent Encausse (1865 – 1916) a figure I often cite and describe in my past publications, whose esoteric pseudonym was Papus, wrote:

We find it repeatedly among the classic authors, of whom we have given numerous examples, and we find it repeatedly in Buddhism. The relatively modern study of writings from India has altered ideas about the fabulous antiquity of the Indian alphabet. The works of Philippe Berger and other sages, who only go back to about 500 years before Jesus Christ, that being the time of the Buddha. According to the Academy of Grammarians the Sanskrit alphabet, that is to say, the alphabet of Thebah was in use during the time of Gautama the Buddha, a Brahman initiate who left his father’s palace — the center of initiation — to offer part of the mysteries to the profane world. We should not imagine, however, that the Buddhist religion is the creator of this idea of reincarnation. Rather Buddha, at a considerable sacrifice in service to humanity, was the one to reveal this to the common people. People interested in these matters will find in a volume by M.de Lafont titled Buddhism, precise texts and teachings, which will satisfy their interest fully. Has reincarnation been a part of the Christian religion at some time? One can frankly respond in the affirmative to this.

Significantly the gospels tell us in plain language that Saint John the Baptist was the reincarnated Elias. This was a mystery and Saint John the Baptist, when questioned, kept quiet but others knew the truth of it. The parable of a man blind from birth is another example. The suggestion that he was being punished for previous sins presents an interesting matter for reflection. The Christian religion is a direct continuation of the Egyptian, and each one of the evangelists is represented by a symbol that is one in the four of the Sphinx: the human head, or the angel, an eagle, a lion and a bull. The idea of reincarnation was contained in the secret teachings of the Church, as were many of the initiatory concepts of Egypt. It has been said that the Church condemned reincarnation; this is false. A council has said though, that those believed to have returned to earth were not accepted into heaven; but far from condemning reincarnation, this warning of the Council indicates the contrary. It was also part of the teachings that if someone returned voluntarily through reincarnation, not because heaven was displeased with him or her, but for love of their neighbor, the curse would not apply to them (Rozier). Lastly, according to the teachings of the Roman Catholic Church, who have kept much less of the occult tradition than the Russian orthodox church, a considerable span of time lapses between the judgment at the end of life and the final judgment. It is at that final judgment, according to Catholicism, that the soul is assigned its final destination. Until this moment the spirit can change, during this time between the two trials. And how does the spirit function during this time lapse between the two trials? You can appreciate that heaven, hell and purgatory are experiential states that can be lived in material form.

As Papus continue in his profound explanation of this delicate subject he also writes:

This is what Swedenborg taught as well as Mohammed, even though he had an aversion to all forms of traditional esotericism. Yet he indicates that he was aware of these things when saying in his chapter, The women of the Koran, that Christ would return at the end of time to judge between the living and the dead. It is certain that the idea of reincarnation that was an illuminating lighthouse in antiquity.

For the Illuminati, this idea has not been lost and was transmitted by them in various ways, in all religions. In modern times this idea has reappeared, and Papus reminds us that it is mainly supported by three traditions:

1)The cabalist tradition brought out of Egypt and passed along to us by the Pythagoreans and the Neoplatonists; 2)the Asian tradition passed along to us by the Buddhists of which I have just spoken, and lastly 3) the modern revival of Spiritualism.

Translator and author Hippolyte Léon Denizard Rivail, well-known by the alias of Allan Kardec, has rendered western humanity a great service by popularizing the dogma of reincarnation. If this idea troubles certain weak minds consider at other times, say around the year 100, the impact of the idea of hell. The idea prevented so many suicides and gave so much hope, that it would be appropriate to congratulate the creator of contemporary spiritism, as well as its successors, such as Gabriel Delanne, León Denís and Leymarie, who spread among the masses such a beautiful instrument of hope. Child prodigies are easily explained by the idea of reincarnation, as are the experiences of people who find a curious familiarity in certain places and lands. Without becoming dogmatic, we can appreciate the clarity that the doctrine of reincarnation provides in understanding a number of personal and social issues. It is not our intention here to present an extensive historical or bibliographical exploration.

My main purpose, as well as the point of distinguished esoterists like Papus, is unveiling the secrets of the various Illuminati Mystery School traditions, to awaken the sleeping God within our readers, creating the inner enthusiasm that reveal the true mysteries to them. If you move in this direction you can begin to understand the true earthly economy, that the social order is merely a tool and not an end purpose. Papus is also clear on this specific point:

Our higher abilities deserve to be devoted to finer things than the earthly ideals of acquiring material wealth and gratification of one's pride.

To follow Christ it is necessary to abandon everything without regret, as one abandons an old garment in order to clothe themselves in garments of an initiate's light. To understand earthly life as something more than a comedy in which we play our particular part as characters during our brief existence, it is necessary to partake of the mysteries of the Father. It is necessary to willingly sacrifice all that is not eternal. When we know the mysteries of reincarnation we are able to join Saint Paul in saying, Oh death, where is thy terror? Oh grave, where thy sting? Doctor Rozier, in fact, says: I wish only to prove that the Catholics are entitled to believe what seems most rational to them in this manner: the generally held opinion among them is that one lives only once on the earth, but no real prohibition exists to believing otherwise. An opinion, that is what it is for those who hold it, is always subject to revision. Certainly, if we are enamored by a theory that contradicts what is held by men of considerable learning and honor, the Fathers of the Church, for example, we should be restrained from demanding arguments of substance, if we continue to profess this, but we should not surrender to these arguments by virtue of their considerable force without looking at the matter and considering it from both sides.

The old Christian reincarnationists did not propose that mortal life on earth is the result of a diminishing of God's grace, or one's losing their love of God, but quite to the contrary, that earthly life is imposed to evolve us and make us the masters of the material world to which, by the fall of Adam, we became slaves. This earthly existence would not mature without difficulties, if it were prolonged beyond a hundred years, for reasons that it is pointless to address here, but a hundred years is insufficient to obtain a definitive victory. It has therefore been necessary to grant us a longer span of time, and that segment by intervals similar to the intervals between the dreams of deep sleep and daydreams. Each type of dream may be called a death. Certainly, each existence is accompanied by forgetfulness of those that have preceded it, but this forgetfulness is providential. It facilitates evolution because with complete memory it would be difficult to change, on this plane of existence. When we have finally awakened a sufficient number of times to achieve the purpose of our efforts, the sanctification, we die one final time and return no more. It is then that we are judged finally and relegated to our place in heaven or purgatory.

If, on the contrary, in each existence, we descend lower and lower until we reach a point at which no hope of salvation exists any longer, we will die one last time and go to hell, but this is a most unusual occurrence. Considered this way the theory of reincarnation, as presented by the old Christian reincarnationists, can be accepted or rejected by the Catholics, but does not fall under the curse, as previously mentioned.^[50]

Gareth Knight wrote a small essay on Papus on reincarnation, that might be worth citing, as he gives us an even more clear understanding of it:

In the first of his weighty occult books – Elementary Treatise on Occult Science (Traité Élémentaire de Science Occulte) of 1888 – Papus makes little mention of Reincarnation. In fact, by just one word as a passing reference in a single paragraph. And it was not until 1912 that he got round to a book devoted entirely to the subject, La Réincarnation.

His initial reluctance may have been influenced by Eliphas Levi, who in his History of Magic, apart from a brief mention of Pythagoras, was also short on the “where the heart is”, like Emanuel Swedenborg (1688-1772) first said. After a period of more or less long sleep without suffering, since there is no longer terrestrial matter, what another famous Illuminati, the count of Count Cagliostro, called the immortal Spirit, awakes and begins a new existence. It attaches at first to those it has left on Earth and may seek to communicate with them by a dream or some intermediary that might be found. However, let me be clear on this point, we should not force communication between different planes like Alan Kardec suggested in his Spiritism because these practices are always delicate and could present certain dangers. So like esoteric student Gareth Knight explains, we risk being tricked by the brain of the “medium” who, unconsciously repeats ideas dear to the consultant, by temporary images, animated photographs floating in the astral, or via beings who serve themselves or the medium to seize a little material existence. It is thus wise to wait for news from the traveler. It needs calm to obtain the certainty of their effective existence over there, and then think much of the traveler, with the magnet of love and not of despair and tears, and then, very gently, the veil will lift, a sweet murmur fill the heart, the presence of the beyond appears, and little by little a great mystery is revealed. So much for Papus’ take on psychic communication with the departed, but what about those who have passed on further, to possible reincarnation in a different body or personality? Here, as Gareth Knight points out, Papus launches into a technical analysis based upon ancient Egyptian religious practices where we find of course, the roots of Illuminati practices and traditions.

In his essay on the Swedish scientist, philosopher and Illuminati, Emanuel Swedenborg Emerson writes:

In common parlance, what one man is said to learn by experience, a man of extraordinary sagacity is said, without experience, to divine. The Arabians say that Abdul Khain, the mystic, and Abu Ali Scena, the philosopher, conferred together; and on parting the philosopher said, “All that he sees, I know”; and the mystic said, “All that he knows, I see.”

Adding: If one should ask the reason of this intuition, the solution would lead us into that property which Plato denoted as reminiscence, and which is implied by the Brahmans in the tenet of transmigration...For all things in Nature being linked and related, and the soul having heretofore known all, nothing hinders but that any man who has recalled to mind, or, according to the common phrase, has learned one thing only, should of himself recover all his ancient knowledge and find out again all the rest, if he have but courage, and faint not in the midst of his researches.

FIG 21 – Emanuel Swedenborg (1688 – 1772) was a Swedish scientist, philosopher, theologian, revelator, and mystic. He is best known for his book on the afterlife, Heaven and Hell (1758).

Illuminated Visionaries: From Swedenborg to Edgar Cayce

There is no doubt that Swedenborg anticipated many scientific facts and positions that are usually regarded as being more modern. It was only toward the end of the 19th century, that his voluminous writings began to be properly collected and examined, which proved that there was hardly one department of scientific activity in which he was not far ahead of his time. His work on palaeontology shows him to be the predecessor of all the Scandinavian geologists, and his contributions in this field alone would have been sufficient to perpetuate his fame.

He was also a great physicist and had arrived at the nebular hypothesis theory of the formation of the planets and the sun long before Kant and Laplace. Swedenborg's theory of light and theory of the cosmic atoms were equally astonishing. He wrote a lucid account of the phenomena of phosphorescence, and adduced a molecular magnetic theory, which anticipated some of the chief features of the hypothesis of today. The great French chemist, Dumas, gives Swedenborg the credit for the first attempt to establish a system of crystallography. He was the first to employ mercury for the air pump and devised a method of determining longitude at sea by observations of the moon among the stars. He suggested the use of experimental tanks for testing the powers of ship models, invented an ear-trumpet for the deaf, improved the common house stove of his native land, cured smoky chimneys, took a lively interest in machine-guns and even sketched a flying machine. In no field was Swedenborg's research more noteworthy than in those of physiological science.

It is clear that Swedenborg showed, 150 years before any other scientist, that the motion of the brain was synchronous with respiration and not with the action of the heart and the circulation of the blood, a discovery the full bearings of which are still far from being realized. He had arrived at the modern conception of the activity of the brain as the combined activity of its individual cells. The cerebral cortex, and, more definitely the cortical elements (nerve cells), formed the seat of the activity of the soul and were ordered into departments according to various functions. His views as to the physiological functions of the spinal cord are also in agreement with recent research, and he anticipated many of the pre-eminent roles of the ductless glands, which students of the present time are only beginning to discover.

Up to middle age, Swedenborg's position was that of a scholar, a scientist. But a profound change was coming over him, which led him to leave the domain of physical research for that of psychical and spiritual inquiry. Neither by geometrical, nor physical, nor metaphysical principles had he succeeded in reaching and grasping the infinite and the spiritual, or in elucidating their relation to man and man's organism, though he had caught glimpses of facts and methods which he thought only required confirmation and development. Late in life, he wrote to Oetinger that “he was introduced by the Lord first into the natural sciences, and thus prepared, and, indeed, from the year 1710 to 1745, when heaven was opened to him.” The latter event is described by him as “his introduction into the spiritual world.” Before his illumination, he had been instructed by dreams, and enjoyed extraordinary visions, and heard mysterious conversations. The life of religion, Swedenborg said, is to do good. The kingdom of Heaven is a kingdom of uses. The attention of modern psychologists is now being drawn to his doctrine of the relation of the elements of the universe to the membranes of the body. Into this world at times come colossal characters like Swedenborg who stand like mile-posts in the long journey of human life. From where did they come? Heredity does not account for them because their ancestry does not disclose it. In his writings, Swedenborg gives detailed descriptions of the afterlife—including heaven, hell, and the world of spirits in between—and the stages of development that a person’s mind and soul experience during life on earth and in the spiritual realms after death. He describes a linear process of spiritual growth in which people are born, live on earth, and then continue living and growing eternally in the afterlife. None of this suggests that Swedenborg would be sympathetic to the idea of living multiple lifetimes on earth. And in fact, in one of his rare explicit references to reincarnation, he depicts a philosopher in the afterlife first arguing in favor of reincarnation and then, having been enlightened by the Lord, disavowing the notion as insane. Swedenborg goes even farther, comparing a particular belief about Jesus to the absurd notion that someone’s soul can cross over into someone else’s. ^[51]

However, their posterity, even greater than themselves as in the case of the same Swedenborg, demonstrates it. What other solution may there be, except that these people have lived other lives, have gained their greatness through former experiences?

Most of us, if not all of us, have had many strange experiences that only the theory of reincarnation can answer. Dreams of forgotten scenes, flashes of buried memories come at times, like voices from a dim and curtained past. It was such experiences that led Sir Walter Scott to a sense of metempsychosis. From his diary, February 17, 1828, his biographer, Lockhart, in his book, Life of Scott, records:

*I cannot, I am sure, tell if it is worth marking down, that yesterday, at dinner time, I was strangely haunted by what I would call the sense of pre-existence, a confused idea that nothing that passed was said for the first time; that the same topics had been discussed and the persons had stated the same opinions on them...The sensation was so strong as to resemble what is called a mirage in the desert and a calenture on board ship. The poet Poe writes in Eureka: We walk about, amid the destinies of our worldly existence, accompanied by dim but ever present memories of a destiny more vast—very distant in the bygone time...We live out a youth peculiarly haunted by such dreams, yet never mistaking them for dreams. As memories, we know them. During our youth, the distinctiveness is too clear to deceive us even for a moment. But the doubt of manhood dispels these feelings as illusions.*

The origin of the Jewish Kabbalah is not known. While doubtless parts have been later added to it, Jewish scholars place its origin in remote antiquity. In the Zohar, or Book of Light, contained in the Kabbalah, are found these words: All the souls are subject to the trials of transmigration, and men do not know which are the ways of the Most High in their regard. They do not know how many transformations and mysterious trials they must undergo. That the doctrine of reincarnation, as taught in the Kabbalah, found acceptance among some of the Bible writers, as evidenced by numerous texts. In the Book of Proverbs—the actual authorship of which is unknown—we find these classic lines: The Lord possessed meat the beginning of his way, before the works of old. I was set up from everlasting, or ever the earth was. When there were no depths, I was brought forth; when there were no foundations abounding with water. Before the mountains were settled, before the hills was I brought forth; while as yet he had not made the earth, nor the fields, nor the highest part of the dust of the world. When he prepared the heavens I was there; When he set a compass upon the face of the depth; when he established the clouds above; when he strengthened the foundations of the deep; when he gave to the sea his decree, that the waters should not pass his Commandment; when he appointed the foundation of the earth— then I was by him as one brought up with him; and I was daily his delight, rejoicing always before him; and my delights were with the sons of man.

—Proverbs 8: 22-31
Jeremiah hears the voice of the Eternal —“Before I formed thee in the belly I knew thee.” —Jeremiah 1: 5

These passages, as well as other similar ones in the Bible, disclose the belief of the Illuminati in the doctrine of reincarnation.

And I want to add this belief remains central to the Illuminati network to this day. So to study the essence of this seemingly strange belief is to understand the modality and the secret traditions that bring time after time, certain families and certain bloodlines to generate the key protagonist in history and their special role in the play of the gods. To unveil, and possibly understand, the secrets of reincarnation in the various Illuminati sects, is ultimately to understand the secret key of their true power and wealth through the ages.

Charles Johnston wrote: There are today, as there have always been, many who remember. One need only ask to find men and women who have a clear and definite vision of things that befell them in other lives.

In offering reincarnation as the school of experience—a philosophy that solves the problem of life—E. D. Walker, in Reincarnation: A Study of Forgotten Truth, (London, 1888) writes: The broadest intelligence leads us directly into the evolutionary aspect of reincarnation...In this view, the present life is one grade of a stupendous school, in which we are being educated for a destiny so far beyond our comprehension that some call it a kind of deity. Even though we have descended below former altitudes, the only path to the absolute lies through the sensuous earthly vale. Sin itself, after we have escaped it, will lead to a mightier result than would be possible without it, or it would not be permitted.

He also writes : The richest trees of all the forest spring from the unclean miasmatic fens...We penetrate the animal existence in human form more successfully than would be possible if we transmigrated into all the species of zoology; for here we carry sufficient intelligence, along with the material condition, to comprehend these creatures around us which cannot understand themselves. . . .The highest individuals of mankind, the true prophets and poets, attain this intimate communion with Nature, this mastery over the lower creation, which demonstrates their fitness for an introduction to a higher (creation).

With all of the above stated, for the Christians of today, John the Baptist is probably the only possible case of a valid reincarnation. The only other possible candidate for a future reincarnation could be Enoch, who was also taken up in a chariot of fire, and never saw physical death. (Then again, some say that Elijah was Enoch as well...) As for Jesus, he won't reincarnate in the end times, because he already died once, and also because of what Acts 1:9-11 states:

Acts 1:9-11

And when he had spoken these things, while they beheld, he was taken up; and a cloud received him out of their sight.

And while they looked stedfastly toward heaven as he went up, behold, two men stood by them in white apparel; Which also said, Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? this same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven.

Reincarnation involves being physically born more than once – into a new physical body. When Jesus returns to this world for the majority of Christians it won't be through rebirth, but through a divine decent. Not to confuse the issue, but for some Illuminati orders there does exist the possibility that the mysterious character Melchizedek, found in Genesis 14:18, and Hebrews 7:2, could have been the pre-incarnate Christ. But judging by Melchizedek's description in Hebrews 7:2, He isn't really one that can be considered as re-incarnated, because He was apparently never born. If he was the pre-incarnate Christ, he simply assumed the physical properties of a human, without the birth process. [\[52\]](#)

However, according to Edgar Cayce, considered one of the early prophets of the New Age, called by some "The American Prophet", Jesus and Adam were different incarnations of the same Christ soul. Eve and the Virgin Mary (Jesus' twin soul) were also different incarnations of the same soul. This karmic connection between Adam and Jesus explains why Jesus was able to pay the "karmic debt" by atoning for the "sin of Adam." This Adam-Jesus connection can be seen in the following excerpt from the Cayce readings:

Question: "When did the knowledge come to Jesus that he was to be the Savior of the world?"

Cayce: "When he fell in Eden."

According to Edgar Cayce some of the gurus, and many other personalities from the Old Testament and history, were also incarnations of Jesus. The Cayce material describes the entire Christian Bible as part of the story of Jesus' long struggle to attain "Christhood" and provides humanity a pattern to do the same.

Cayce, "The American Prophet" was not a Freemason, but he still was regarded as a central figure by the Illuminati Network of his time, and he did make mention of the Masonic order in his voluminous works. The paperback book Edgar Cayce on Prophecy, published in 1967 by Carter, is a short compilation on the probable realities available to Cayce through the Akashic records. Chapter 7, Destiny of Nations, opens as follows : The peace of the world will be shaped by the American ideals and those of the masonic order! " Not that the world is to become a Masonic Order," Cayce explained, but that the ideals will prevail. It goes on to state that these were from 29 readings between '21 and '44. In another reading that "God is not a respecter of persons" and further in 1938 "Each Nation, each people have builded-by the very spirit of the people themselves- a purposeful position in the skein, the affairs, not only of the earth but of the universe!"

So what we can gather from the channeled material is that the intentions of the individual, and collectively the nation, rebound into the universe and that a kind of collective karma marks the nation's identity. Freemasonry no doubt had a large influence at the founding of America, and as we articulate that all men are equal and meet on the level, and that the Creator drops a plumb line true and unbiased in judgment, and that we travel upon a level of time from whence none have returned, it is good to know that the apron of freemasonry remains suitably unstained at the level of the Akashic record. ^[53] In the 1930s and early 1940s, Cayce received a series of visions supposedly about the origins of ancient Egypt and the reasons the Giza pyramids and Sphinx were built, and their link to Atlantis:

A record of Atlantis from the beginning of those periods when the Spirit took form, or began the encasements in that land; and the developments of the peoples throughout their sojourn; together with the record of the first destruction, and the changes that took place in the land; with the record of the sojournings of the peoples and their varied activities in other lands, and a record of the meetings of all the nations or lands, for the activities in the destruction of Atlantis; and the building of the pyramid of initiation, together with whom, what, and where the opening of the records would come, that are as copies from the sunken Atlantis. For with the change, it [Atlantis] must rise again. In position, this lies — as the sun rises from the waters — as the line of the shadows (or light) falls between the paws of the Sphinx; that was set later as the sentinel or guard and which may not be entered from the connecting chambers from the Sphinx's right paw until the time has been fulfilled when the changes must be active in this sphere of man's experience. Then [it lies] between the Sphinx and the river. [378-16; Oct 29, 1933]

It would be well if this entity were to seek either of the three phases of the ways and means in which those records of the activities of individuals were preserved — the one in the Atlantean land that sank, which will rise and is rising again; another in the place of the records that leadeth from the Sphinx to the hall of records, in the Egyptian land; and another in the Aryan or Yucatan land, where the temple there is overshadowing same. [2012-1; Sep 25, 1939]

... the entity joined with those who were active in putting the records in forms that were partial of the old characters of the ancient or early Egyptian, and part in the newer form of the Atlanteans. These may be found, especially when the house or tomb of records is opened, in a few years from now. [2537-1; Jul 17, 1941]

... [the entity] was among the first to set the records that are yet to be discovered or yet to be had of those activities in the Atlantean land, and for the preservation of data that is yet to be found from the chambers of the way between the Sphinx and the pyramid of records. [3575-2; Jan 20, 1944]

In essence, Edgar Cayce's visions told us that the great land of Egypt was founded by refugees from the sundered and sunk Atlantis.^[54] A story often heard in some of the Illuminati mystery Schools , as part of their secret teachings.

Atlantis and beyond

Gregg Braden writes in The Divine Matrix: A long time ago, our world was very different from the way we see it today. There were fewer people, and we lived closer to the land. People knew the language of the rain, the crops, and the Great Creator. They even knew how to speak to the stars and the sky people. They were aware that life is sacred and comes from the marriage between Mother Earth and Father Sky. In this time, there was balance and people were happy. Then something happened. No one really knows why, but people started to forget who they were. In their forgetting, they began to feel separate - separate from the earth, from each other, and even from the one who created them. They were lost and wandered through life with no direction or connection. In their separation, they believed that they had to fight to survive in this world and defend themselves against the same forces that gave them the life they had learned to live in harmony with and trust. Soon all of their energy was used to protect themselves from the world around them, instead of making peace with the world within them. Even though they had forgotten who they were, somewhere inside of them the gift of their ancestors remained. There was still a memory that lived within them. In their dreams at night, they knew that they held the power to heal their bodies, bring rain when they needed to, and speak with their ancestors. They knew that somehow they could find their place in the natural world once again.

As they tried to remember who they were, they began to build the things outside of their bodies that reminded them of who they were on the inside. As time went on, they even built machines to do their healing, made chemicals to grow their crops, and stretched wires to communicate over long distances. The farther away they wandered from their inner power, the more cluttered their outer lives became with the things that they believed would make them happy. No one knows how the story ends because it isn't finished. The people who got lost are our ancestors, and we are the ones who are writing the ending.

There is a great lesson to learn from the legendary Atlantis to prevent the same ending for our current Civilization. Erudite, Freemason and influential Illuminati, John Yarker who was Sovereign Grand Conservator of the Ancient and Primitive Rite of Masonry, whom conferred in this capacity upon Madame Blavatsky a Masonic diploma, had a lot to say about this “very different world” when he explained in his Arcane Schools that the Aryan legend of the sunken Atlantis is said to have been recorded in Egypt. Yaker, reminds us, in fact, that: “Plato indirectly informed us in the Timaeus that when his ancestor Solon once visited Egypt the priests of Neith at Sais informed him that many catastrophes had occurred to mankind in remote times, the most remarkable of which was one contained in the records of the temple. Some 9,000 years before his visit, which took place about 600 B.C., a large continent, and some adjacent islands had perished in one night by earthquakes, and that from these islands was the way to the true continent; that the inhabitants of this Atlantis were a race who recognized that great advantages sprang from a just and righteous commerce; that they had conquered and colonised Greece, and extended themselves on one side as far as Lybia, and on the other to Tyrrhenia. But a part of the island’s inhabitants had given themselves up to selfish aggrandizement and had made war upon the well-disposed people, and to subvert the good regulations which had been established by Poseidon and his son Atlas. Whereupon the incensed gods, in one night, sank the country of Atlantis beneath the waves of the ocean. It is further stated that the country had temples of black and white stones, decorated within and without with precious metals. The shrine of Poseidon and the palace of the King was surrounded with three sheets of water, forming three parallel concentric circles, and a temple existed roofed with gilded copper. Theopompus in his Meropis attributes a similar account to the priests of Phrygia, and tells us that the island contained a fighting and a contemplative race; the former knew how to make themselves invulnerable to iron so that they could only be wounded by stone or wood. Proclus quotes Marcellus on the subject. Madame Blavatsky says that they had a written character and used it with the tanned skins of monstrous animals now extinct. Professor Bowdler Sharpe thought that allied forms of birds point to a lost continent which stretched from South America to Australia with an arm extending to Madagascar, and this would meet the account of Plato. We have another account, similar in its essentials to that recorded. The Popul-Vul, or Book of the Azure Veil of the Mexicans, tells us that these Atlantians were a race that knew all things by intuition, and repeat the charge of sorcery, or black magic, as the cause of the destruction of their country by the gods.”

Contemporary researcher Eric Dubay writes that the Toltecs, Nahuatlacas, and Aztecs of South America and all the races that settled Mexico traced their ancestors back to a starting point called “Aztlan” or “Atlan”, in the Atlantic. It was a land they described as —too fair and beautiful to be left willingly which was lost in the sea after a great flood. Aztec temples are called —Teocallil which interestingly compares with the Greek —theos (God) and —kalias (house/dwelling of).

Europeans first settling in Delaware and Maryland found a river named by the natives —Potomac, which is just like the Greek word —Potomos meaning —river. The native Basques of Western Europe also claim to be descendants of a continent called —Atlantika which sank beneath the waves. The Basque language itself shares no lingual affinities with any other European language but is very similar to native American languages. The natives of Mindanao in the Philippines are the —Atas who have the same flood myth and claim descent from light-skinned invaders who intermarried with the aboriginals. Ignatius Donnelly writes in Atlantis: The Antediluvian World: Look at it! An ‘Atlas’ mountain on the shore of Africa; an ‘Atlan’ town on the shore of America; the ‘Atlante’ living along the north and west coast of Africa; an Aztec people from Aztlan, in Central America; an ocean rolling between the two worlds called the ‘Atlantic;’ a mythological deity called ‘Atlas’ holding the world on his shoulders; and an immemorial tradition of an island of Atlantis. Can all these things be the result of accident? . [\[55\]](#)

There are basically many ancient legends in regard to a lost or sunken continent and a deluge which, though not absolutely accepted as history, are too probable to be passed over in silence. It is admitted by scientists that the surface of our earth is continually wasting away, with the result that the bed of the ocean is being slowly raised, and the geographical position of the land is changing: we see in one locality that the ocean is washing the land away, whilst in another the sea is receding. Equally great climatic changes are slowly developing; thus Greenland was at one time a torrid clime, which at a later age, to be reckoned only by tens of thousands of years, was succeeded by intense cold, and when our own island was depopulated by a deluge of ice and frost. For John Yarker, these changes are attendant upon what astronomers term the “Precession of the Equinoxes”; as “there is a gradual displacement of the poles of the earth, occurring in cycles or periods of 25,000 years, and the last of which reached its extreme point about 12,500 years ago, when it is held that a great cataclysm occurred which changed the face of the entire globe. It follows of necessity that man's habits must change with climatic changes something that might happen again sooner than you think.

Napoleon and the Pyramid of the Illuminati

The Illuminati and Freemason Napoleon Bonaparte, a loyal disciple of the Jesuits, directed his troops to leave him alone when he went into the King's Chamber of the Great Pyramid of Egypt. He was thereafter marrying into the Merovingian lineage (through Josephine), and becoming a Mason a year or so before that. Even earlier, he was recruited into the Illuminati by Grand Master Giuseppe Balsamo, known as Count Cagliostro. There was no military reason to go to Egypt, and he took many servants with him on his expedition, which began a great increase in knowledge in archaeology. On the way, he stopped briefly to defeat the island of Malta, that was in the hands of the Knights of Malta in a war with the Jesuits, who were kicked out of the Vatican. Napoleon lost almost no men, and gained this strategic island, plus the Maltese Knights hoard of assets, and who knows what kind of knowledge and books the Romans had ferreted away to this island after the destruction of the Library at Alexandria.

His time in the so-called King's Chamber lead him to be blanched and visibly shaken. Did he go there with certain knowledge gained through books or studies to ritually perform a specific viewing? Was his genetic background and connection somehow important to this ritualistic attunement? His own Tuscan (is there a connection with the Etruscan canal or terraces and Tuscan engineering in ancient America?) heritage and possible illegitimate connection to Marboeuf, and a very old noble family is worth the inspection of any historian. When he came out he told all present never to ask him what had happened or to explore the matter in any manner. On his deathbed he almost told his biographer Las Casas yet, he thought even he would not believe or understand. My guess is that Napoleon saw the future, and it was a scary one, to say the least. He may also have been influenced by some sorcery from his Illuminati handlers. I know Nostradamus worked the hieroglyphs of the Great Pyramid for inspiration, and I think Napoleon had this special advantage that

Here is a formal quote on the event to contemplate:

"The Egyptian Campaign had a profound effect on Napoleon as well. On the 25th of Thermidor according to the revolutionary calendar (i.e. the 12th of August, 1799) Napoleon visited the Great Pyramid with Imam Muhammed as his guide. Bonaparte asked to be left alone in the King's Chamber. This was likely a gesture dictated by the dramatic part of Napoleon's character because Alexander the Great, whom Napoleon greatly admired, had done the same thing 2000 years before. Nonetheless, Las Cases relates that Napoleon emerged pale and shaken from the Chamber. {Emphasis added} He commanded that no one ever question him about what happened in the pyramid. In 'Memoirs of the Emperor Napoleon', Las Cases claims that near the end of Napoleon's life, while in exile on the island of St. Helena, he seemed about to confide what had happened in the pyramid to Las Cases, but instead he shook his head and said: 'No~ What's the use. You'd never believe me.'"

In Memoirs of the Emperor Napoleon, Las Cases claims that near the end of Napoleon's life, while in exile on the island of St. Helena, he seemed about to confide what had happened in the pyramid to Las Cases, but instead he shook his head and said: “No~ What's the use. You'd never believe me”. ^[56] As far as we know, he never told anyone and took the secret to his grave. (It is interesting to note that there is an unsubstantiated story that Napoleon had hinted that he was given some vision of his destiny during his stay in the King's Chamber). Alexander the Great also spent time alone in the King's Chamber like many famous people throughout history. What draws all these “illuminated” individuals, who are part of the Ancient Mystery Schools, to this possibly Sacred place?

In the 1930s, author Paul Brunton spent a night there and was assailed by visions of “a circle of hostile creatures” which he likened to “elemental creations, grotesque shapes, madmen, hulking and devilish apparitions”. Was this mere hallucination? In more recent times such ideas have been put down to the background radiation given off by the black granite of the chamber, but surely if it was that simple, then everyone who visited the chamber would experience a similar thing, wouldn't they?

Early experiments indicated that the King's Chamber's spirit stones did seem to generate an electrical field which caused minor shock to at least one poor visitor drinking from a metal hip flask! It has been suggested that the Pyramid, because of its granite blocks, could transmit and receive radio and even microwave signals very well, and some believe that it gives off energy in an “emanating apex” this means that energy spirals off the top of the structure in a circle which widens as it permeates the atmosphere. Whilst some have seen this as mere New Age baloney, others have said this confirms their suspicions that the Pyramid is some kind of beacon intended for use from space. More recently, ex-NASA consultant Richard Hoagland has stated that radioactive sand was found in a chamber behind the Queen's Chamber, which might explain both the weird experiences of Napoleon et al, and the anomalous radioactive date readings given by the Pyramid, in which it appears that the top of the structure is 1000 years older than the bottom! This has led some people to speculate that the Pyramid was constructed upside down in mid-air by alien technology and then swung over into place on the Giza Plateau. [\[57\]](#) Well, I have described in detail what this supposed “alien technology” is, also in relation to the Great Pyramid and the Illuminati Mystery Schools, in my next literary work, The Invisible Master: Secret Chiefs, Unknown Superiors and the puppet masters who pull the strings of Occult Power from The Alien World.

Chapter Five

The Vatican Masonic Involvement

Pope Paul VI Freemason exposed!

Pope Paul VI (Giovanni Battista Enrico Antonio Maria Montini, 1897-1978) reigned from June 21, 1963, until his death in 1978. His beatification process began on May 11, 1993. Pope Francis beatified him on October 19, 2014. He was the Pope who closed the Vatican Council II (opened by Pope John XXIII in October 1962), in December 1965. The Council changed the direction and mission of the Catholic Church. Among many other things, he abolished the use of Latin in the liturgy, prohibited the use of Pope Pius V's Missal, and introduced the use of the vernacular through the Novus Ordo Missae. He was a humanist, a modernist and a Freemason. The Grand Master Giordano Gamberini, on the day of Giovanni Battista Montini's election to Pope, said: “This is the man who does it for us!”

And after the death of Pope Montini the “obituary,” or better stated the eulogy, of the former Grand Master of Palazzo Giustiniani, Giordano Gamberini, on the official Masonic Magazine of the Grand Orient of Italy was unequivocal: “For us it is the death of the one who dropped the condemnation of Clement XII and his successors on us. It is the first time—in the history of modern Freemasonry—that the dying Head of the greatest Western religion was not in a state of hostility with the Freemasons.”

He concluded by making a shocking statement: “For the first time, in history, the Freemasons can pay homage to the tomb of a pope, without ambiguity or contradiction.”

There have always been very credible charges that Paul VI was an active homosexual, and is rumored that his lover, the known Italian actor Paolo Carlini, who was an Italian stage, television and film actor and appeared in 45 films between 1940 and 1979, was later used by Freemasonry to blackmail him. Now for the first time the rumors of Pope Montini's Masonic membership have been finally fully confirmed by an important document I have included in Confessions of an Illuminati, Volume III: Espionage, Templars, and Satanism in the Shadows of the Vatican, but decided to include here as well, because of its importance also in this book.

Freemason Pope Paul VI was a friend of Freemason Roberto Caldirola 33° AASR, which years ago introduced me to the secrets of Montini's Masonic papacy, revealing certain truths about his old friend Pope Montini, a.k.a. Paul VI, who was to be the second Freemason pope in history (after Pope Roncalli). This was confirmed when I finally saw with my own eyes this important document attesting the membership of Masonic Pope Montini in Caldirola's home in Zagarolo, near Rome, where you can view the dedication of Paul VI to Roberto Caldirola with the typical adding of the 3 dots in the form of a triangle at the end, a form of abbreviation only used by Freemasons. So Montini, who is said to be inspiring and influential for Pope Francis, was a Freemason, and now we have the evidence, which is another step towards exposing Pope Francis' Masonic membership.

Dobbiamo a tutti i nostri Figli dell'Arcidiocesi di Milano ringraziamenti, saluti, voti e benedizioni, ai sacerdoti specialmente ad ai Cattolici militanti, mentre abbiamo per i fanciulli, per i giovani, per i lavoratori, per gli ammalati, per i sofferenti,

A Jesuit Pope and the Satanic Reverend in Florence

On the 9th of November 2015, Satanic Reverend Marilyn Manson, performed one of his blasphemous shows in Florence, and on Tuesday the 10th of November, Pope Francis, whose episcopal genealogy derives from Cardinal Mariano Rampolla del Tindaro (1843-1913), connected to the Ordo Templi Orientis, performed his own Mass not far away in the same city.

Is it only a strange coincidence? Let's remember the words of an old letter from Cardinal Millini to the apostolic nuncio in Florence, Alfonso Giglioli (1622-1630), discovered in the State Archives of Florence (R., II, 148 -15,) by historian Vittorio Fincati, in the documents known as the Carte Stroziane ^[58] For a long time disturbing information on the nature of this city reached the ears of your Excellency. Reportedly in that city in the countryside, there is a great number of witches that corrupt many children every day ... ”

Florence in the late Middle Ages and Renaissance was central to the Western Initiatic System, as an important esoteric center but, in parallel, also a center for the followers of black magic. There were many manuscripts of this discipline which circulated secretly, including the famous Picatrix, and the even more disturbing Liber vaccae, ^[59] which still remain in the city libraries. Vittorio Fincati, who wrote a very small essay on the subject, published only in Italy by Carpe Librum entitled, The Monster of Florence and Alchemy, states :

“The more we enter these worlds of darkness the more you realize that there are many coincidences that connect the most vicious killings attributed to serial killers to certain rituals related to sexual magic.”

No wonder the new headquarters of the Ordo Templi Orientis (O.T.O.) in Italy, is located in Florence, where their new Italian leader, Freemason of the Grand Orient of Italy, Jean-Matthieu Kleeman, for many years a key figure of the O.T.O.'s Teth Camp, also located in Florence, originally comes from. This influential group of O.T.O. magicians reached the privileged status of Teth Lodge of the O.T.O. There are only three groups of the O.T.O. that have been given such status in Italy; one in Rome; one in Turin, and in more recent times, this one in Florence.^[60] From a historical point of view, this magical tradition often bordering with Satanism is implanted in the Florence way of life. This important city had contacts with the East centuries ago, stimulated by the Crusades, that also linked them at times with unusual Islamic environments related to beliefs of pre-Islamic Hellenic origin; like the school of Harran in Syria that belonged to the Pagan "Sabians, " that were able to continue their faith undisturbed, even after the arrival of Islam. This was until in 1251 when Harran was eventually destroyed by a Mongol invasion.^[61]

So a sinister cult has been active in Florence for centuries, and for many are connected to the so-called Monster of Florence, also known as Il Mostro, an epithet commonly used for the perpetrator, or perpetrators, of 16 murders, nearly all of them couples, that took place between 1968 and 1985, in the province of Florence, Italy. Four local men – Stefano Mele, Pietro Pacciani, Mario Vanni, and Giancarlo Lotti – were arrested, charged, and convicted of the crime at different times. However, these convictions have been criticized and ridiculed in the media; critics suggest instead that the real killer or killers were never identified, and many years later the investigation unveiled the possibility that a “Regular” Masonic Lodge from Perugia protected the real perpetrators of these terrible homicides.^[62]

In 1991, a follower of Aleister Crowley and the Grand Master of a mysterious sect called, “The Lillith Group”, that some say constituted the original group, that later evolved into the modern Lodge of the O.T.O., published two small booklets that shocked the occult community for their sick and perverted teachings, that mixed the worst of Aleister Crowley’s ideals with that of another Italian occultist, Ciro Formisano (1888 –1963). From these teachings, that I will discuss further in The Invisible Master: Secret Chiefs, Unknown Superiors and the puppet masters who pull the strings of Occult Power from The Alien World, researchers like Fincati realized their possible involvement in the terrible homicides perpetrated by the so-called “Monster of Florence” referred to as an occult circle by more than one person. The occult background of Florence, and the important Satanic community still residing in this city must have gained the attention of Satanic Reverend Marilyn Manson, and of course, the first Jesuit Pope. It should be noted that the former leader of the Italian Democratic Party, Matteo Renzi, is also from Florence, and some call him a Masonic creation of the late Worshipful Master of the P2 Licio Gelli. [\[63\]](#)

Even the myth constructed in the last 40 years around Turin being the “Satanic city” of Italy, is apparently false, driven by Satanic disinformation to avoid any connection with Florence, officially the city of lilies and love. Yes, there was indeed a group of high level Masons, who asked Anton LaVey to open their own Church of Satan in the city of Turin, in Northern Italy in the late 60’s, but soon afterward, the same group left the Church of Satan for something more serious in the realm of Satanism, linking themselves to a French Satanic cult, helping the Satanic myth of Turin to grow in the process. So welcome to Florence - the city of Love, Art, Architecture, and for some Satanism. However, karma is real, as I also said in my introduction to this book, and in late September 2017, Marilyn Manson’s concert in New York came to a scary and abrupt end, when two giant props came crashing down on him while he was performing on stage, sending the Satanic rocker to the hospital. Maybe the infamous beheading of Donald Trump, made a year earlier, in one of his demented music videos, triggered a fatal karmic reaction for Mr. Manson.

The same kind of reaction, seems to have also affected another musician working for the dark side, the superstar of today, Lady Gaga, also a prominent supporter of Hillary Clinton, who had to suddenly cancel her tour dates, after she was rushed to hospital with chronic pain, always in the month of September 2017, almost at the same time when Netflix put out a fascinating and dramatic documentary based on the artist, called Gaga: Five Foot Two is the crux of it all, directed by Chris Moukarbel.

The documentary showed Lady Gaga’s evident signs and links to the Satanic side of the Illuminati and the O.T.O., in particular. She even used the music originally recorded for Kenneth Anger’s Lucifer Rising at California State Prison, by Bobby BeauSoleil’s band The Freedom Orchestra. Large sections of this unusual Satanic performance were incorporated into Lady Gaga’s documentary, showing her in poses miming the rituals enacted in this 70’s cult film. Beausoleil is serving a life sentence in California's state prison system for the July 27, 1969, murder of music teacher and Manson Family friend Gary Hinman, a crime that also involved Charles Manson and several members of his cult, also linked to the O.T.O. The month of September 2017 was not a good one indeed for the health of the Satanist, and even for their favorite Pope, after Bergoglio himself suffered facial injuries and a black eye after a minor accident in the pope-mobile at the end of his trip to Columbia.

The Vatican's attempts to overthrow Trump, and their denial of Satanism

Last February MSN News wrote:

Most of Donald Trump's opponents believe they will have to wait four more years to see him leave the White House. But America's witches are more optimistic. At the stroke of midnight on Friday, followers of witchcraft across the US performed a mass spell designed to remove the president from office. A Facebook group devoted to the ritual has attracted over 10,500 likes and coined the hashtag #magicresistance. The development has sparked fury among Christian conservatives, who have accused the witches of “declaring spiritual war”.

What most people don't know is that the person responsible for organizing this is not your average pagan witch, but a Christian, Catholic-raised Michael M. Hughes who lives in Baltimore, and is the author of both fiction and nonfiction, that is regularly promoted by the liberal media. When he isn't writing, he speaks on Fortean, paranormal, and other topics, and teaches workshops on the Tarot. Michael Hughes is not only a Freemason but also a mentalist and a member of the Societas Rosicruciana in Civitatibus Foederatis (SRICF), a Christian Rosicrucian organization where membership not only requires affiliation with a Symbolic Lodge of Freemasonry but a profession of the Christian faith. While membership in the York Rite Bodies is not necessarily required, most of the members of the SRICF often hold membership in the Jesuit controlled York Rite and many of its appendant bodies. Membership is also limited to 72 members per presiding body, making it also quite elitarian, but definitely not pagan.

So Michael Hughes who describes himself publicly as a pagan witch on a mission to destroy Trump, without actually being one, and describes president Donald J. Trump as “an inept, bullying demagogue,” devised a dangerous black magic ritual, To be performed at midnight on every waning crescent moon until he is removed from office. This binding spell is open source, and may be modified to fit your preferred spiritual practice or magical system?—?the critical elements are the simultaneity of the working (midnight, EST—DC, Mar-a-Lago, and Trump Tower NYC time) and the mass-energy of participants. See below for the upcoming dates. Some lodges/covens are doing a variation of this as a group working, while a number of solitary practitioners are planning to connect and live stream via Facebook, Twitter, and other social media.

After the huge success of his initiative on the mainstream media, Michael Hughes went on to make this shocking statement: Donald Trump continues to spectacularly combust. He's falling to pieces in front of us with every vacuous boast, every stroke of his executive pen, and every brazen lie (he hates, for example, when someone suggests his thing is smaller than someone else's thing). But his people, his most fervent supporters (the MAGOTs, as I've come to call them), continue to heap praise on him, and with every burning chunk of the tower that falls they cheer even louder.

Michael Hughes is obviously delusional about the results of his magical rituals, as he is working for the increasingly Satanic left wing, still dominated by that witch of Hillary Clinton that is trying to use every trick in the book, including Black Magic by the Illuminati sectarian network, to stop Trump doing his job as president, a job she could have never done.

In the meantime, not only is Satanism being made more acceptable, but Father Arturo Sosa SJ, 31st General of the Society of Jesus, and the first non-European general of the Jesuits has shocked the Catholic world in a recent interview to El Mundo, the second largest printed daily newspaper in Spain. Arturo Sosa (b. 1948), is someone who seems to be a reflection of the Pontiff, one the black Pope (Father Sosa), and the other the white Pope (Francis). They are not only the two most powerful figures in Catholicism today but also two of the most influential people in the diabolic Jesuit led New World Order. Sosa is not only Latin American, like Bergoglio, but also just as progressive, who says the devil is only a symbol of evil.

Sosa made this surprising statement on the figure of the devil:

"From my perspective, evil is part of the ministry of liberty. If the human being is free, he can choose between good and evil. We Christians believe to be made in the image in the likeness of God, so God is free, but God always chooses to do good because it is all goodness. We created symbolic figures, like the devil, to express the evil. The social conditioning also represents this figure, there are people who act this way because there is an environment where it is very difficult to do the opposite." [\[64\]](#)

The Bible shows that Satan does exist and has great power, but for the Black Pope he is just a convenient figment of our imagination. Well Miguel de Cervantes in Don Quixote (Book IV, Part I, Chapter X) wrote:

*Wherever God erects a house of prayer,
The Devil always builds a chapel there:
And 'twill be found, upon examination,
The latter has the largest congregation.*

The Jesuits came into existence in the same period of time that saw Cervantes writing these profound words of wisdom. A quote by Charles Baudelaire seems to fit Arturo Sosa's view: *La plus belle des ruses du diable est de vous persuader qu'il n'existe pas. The devil's finest trick is to persuade you that he does

The values of Pope Francis, which include tolerance for pedophilia, are the values of the late Roman Empire before its demise. A demographic and economic crisis piloted by the elite existed back then, as well as out-of-control immigration, and a loss in moral beliefs, and political ideology, just like today in the era of globalization, and the New World Order. The Roman Empire, that for six centuries held the entire Mediterranean area under their control, suddenly submitted and gave in to its enemies. The turning point for this disaster was in 378 a.d., with the Battle of Adrianople, sometimes known as the Battle of Hadrianopolis, a defeat in which the emperor himself was killed by those Goths which, a few years earlier, were given refugee status in Roman territory, as refugees fleeing from war.

From then on, the story of Rome was marked my dear readers, and soon Europe could face the same fate if President Trump does not help to rectify the situation. Ok, in the US you might have a slightly detached vision of Europe's present crisis, but remember once Europe falls, the next in line is the United States of America, and finally the whole breakdown of civilization. In this case, Daniel 2:42 might come in handy as a prophetic reference to the story. The feet and toes of the image Nebuchadnezzar saw were composed; partly of potter's clay and partly of iron, meaning: the kingdom shall be divided...partly strong and partly fragile. This means it would be made up of people who "will not adhere to one another, just as iron does not mix with clay" (Daniel 2:41-43).

Remember the Roman Empire exists in two parts. The first is the historical Roman Empire, while the foundation of the second phase can be seen in the European Community, now referred to as the European Union (EU). Western civilization is reaching what is called "Societal collapse", and it seems like it is simply History Repeating, like the title of the famous song by Miss Shirley Bassey- Welcome to the end, or rather for many Christians, the enactment of, The Book of Revelation, which is one of the most controversial and least understood books of the Bible regarding the time just before Christ's return to earth, and what He will do afterward. Earlier this year, in 2017, I wrote an article about Pope Francis' refusal to renew Cardinal Gerhard Ludwig Müller's mandate as Prefect of the Holy Office. Immediately afterward, we saw the unfortunate death of Cardinal Joachim Meisner, Archbishop Emeritus of Cologne, best known recently, as co-author of the Dubia sent to Pope Francis. However, even if the German station, Domradio stated that Meisner died peacefully in his sleep while on vacation in Bad Füssing, most of us know by now, that is a total media fabrication. Meisner was, in fact, upset with Pope Francis until the last hours of his life, regarding Müller's treatment, and the way Bergoglio fired him. These actions triggered an internal war in the Vatican, where the pedophile network is now basically divided into two factions. One faction, closer to Pope Francis, and the Gay lobby wants a more liberal Church, ready to embrace homosexuality for priests, and an open support for Islam and the upcoming One World Religion, that will gradually push for the acceptance of pedophilia.

This faction is represented by Cardinals such as Coccopalmero, involved in the Gay Orgy raid, or Godfried Cardinal Danneels of the St. Gallen Mafia. The other faction, the more conservative one, mostly controlled by Pope Ratzinger the Pope Emeritus, is instead contrary to any liberal change imposed on the Catholic Faith by the Jesuit Pope, but still hides terrible compromises and links to the infamous pedophilia rings that are hidden behind the Catholic hierarchy.

Then we heard the harsh criticism towards Pope Francis even in Ratzinger's own words, that was recited in the Cathedral of Cologne during Meisner's funeral that took place in the middle of the summer of 2017. This was a sign of open War between the two pedophile factions, and soon after the liberal faction, filtered yet another scandal, that could damage the conservative uprising in the Church. Always during the summer of 2017, in Regensburg 547, children of the choir of the Ratisbonian Cathedral, directed for 30 years by Pope Emeritus' brother, George Ratzinger, have been abused in various ways over four decades, and 67 were also subject to acts of pedophilia from Catholic priests and teachers.

Lawyer Ulrich Weber's final report disclosed by the German media stated that 49 perpetrators have been identified, and George Ratzinger, who was the director of the ensemble for thirty years "knew and closed his eyes". Pope Francis and his liberal faction have also done this to isolate the then bishop of Regensburg, Cardinal Gerhard Ludwig Müller, ex-prefect of the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith, who admitted the existence of abuse in the German choir back in 2010, and is now accused of refusing dialogue with the families of the victims. The former prefect is also accused by Marie Collins, a resigning member of the Pontifical Commission for the Protection of minors, and a victim herself, of having done little to fight pedophilia in the Vatican, and even going to the extent of hindering the work Pope Francis' team. This is not completely true, as it was Pope Francis who ordered Cardinal Gerhard Ludwig Müller to act in this way. Well, as many Vatican experts have already written, this Pontifical Commission was a joke anyway, and Peter Saunders, a Briton who was abused by two priests as a teenager, left the Commission in disgust, stating it was only a "public relations exercise".

War of the pedophiles continues in the next episode of the Vatican decline, that coincides of course with the decline of the Western Initiatic System and the rise of Satanism. La Civiltà Cattolica (Italian for Catholic Civilization), is a periodical published by the Jesuits in Rome, Italy. It has been published continuously since 1850, and this year they launched an English edition, presented at Her Britannic Majesty's Ambassador Residence to the Holy See, on February 28th, 2017. The Editor in Chief of La Civiltà Cattolica is the influential Jesuit Fr. Antonio Spadaro SJ. In an unprecedented move, Spadaro has written and published in the English edition of La Civiltà Cattolica, an open criticism towards Donald J. Trump, and American Christianity in the United States stating that: of the “bad” or even the “very bad.” Sometimes the tones used by his supporters in some campaigns take on meanings that we could define as “epic.” These stances are based on Christian-Evangelical fundamentalist principles dating from the beginning of the 20th Century that have been gradually radicalized.

President Trump steers the fight against a wider, generic collective entity

Popular Italian journalist Marcello Bussi from the newspaper Milano Finanza commented on the article on his FB profile writing in shock: “The Vatican declares war on Trump and his diabolical strategist Bannon”.

After reading the article I will add that the Jesuits are declaring war not only on Trump but on American Christianity. Jesuits write, in fact, about American Christians in the following way:

They profess “dominionism” and consider ecologists as people who are against the Christian faith. They place their own roots in a literalist understanding of the creation narratives of the book of Genesis that put humanity in a position of “dominion” over creation, while creation remains subject to human will in biblical submission.

In this theological vision, natural disasters, dramatic climate change, and the global ecological crisis are not only not perceived as an alarm that should lead them to reconsider their dogmas, but they are seen as the complete opposite: signs that confirm their non-allegorical understanding of the final figures of the Book of Revelation and their apocalyptic hope in a “new heaven and a new earth.” Theirs is a prophetic formula: fight the threats to American Christian values and prepare for the imminent justice of an Armageddon, a final showdown between Good and Evil, between God and Satan. In this sense, every process (be it of peace, dialogue, etc.) collapses before the needs of the end, the final battle against the enemy. And the community of believers (faith) becomes a community of combatants (fight). Such a unidirectional reading of the biblical texts can anesthetize consciences or actively support the most atrocious and dramatic portrayals of a world that is living beyond the frontiers of its own “promised land.”

I find this to be the final declaration of war against America made by the Jesuits and Pope Francis, so it’s about time we openly declare war on their pedophile networks, and also on their Vatican Money Laundering schemes, that Pope Francis is seemingly trying to protect; like Libero

Milone former Auditor General until June 2017, and earlier Ettore Gotti Tedeschi, ex-President of the Institute for Works of Religion, also known as the Vatican Bank (from 2009 to 2012), tried to point out, after both were kicked out in a brutal way, because of their demand for honesty and transparency in the Vatican , something the Vatican obviously dislikes!

The Vatican's decline, and Trump's threat to destroy the Rothschild's mondialist plans

In 2017, LifeSiteNews reports that a leading scholar in the Roman Catholic Church, pointed out something I wrote years ago in my book, Pope Francis: The Last Pope? He claims that God appeared to him in a vision, to warn him about Pope Francis being a “false prophet”. Father Thomas Weinandy is the former doctrine chief of the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops (USCCB), after losing his job for writing a harsh letter of criticism to Pope Francis in which he said his papacy is marked by “chronic confusion,” the diminishment of doctrine, and a culture of fear. Back in 2013, Pope Francis awarded Fr. Weinandy one of the highest honors in the Catholic Church, the Pro Pontifice et Ecclesiae medal.

However, Father Thomas Weinandy was truly illuminated by in 2017 when he received a message that God wanted him to deliver to the world:

Your Holiness,

I write this letter with love for the Church and sincere respect for your office. You are the Vicar of Christ on earth, the shepherd of his flock, the successor to St. Peter and so the rock upon which Christ will build his Church. All Catholics, clergy and laity alike, are to look to you with filial loyalty and obedience grounded in truth. The Church turns to you in a spirit of faith, with the hope that you will guide her in love.

Yet, Your Holiness, a chronic confusion seems to mark your pontificate. The light of faith, hope, and love is not absent, but too often it is obscured by the ambiguity of your words and actions. This fosters within the faithful a growing unease. It compromises their capacity for love, joy, and peace. Allow me to offer a few brief examples.

First, there is the disputed Chapter 8 of "Amoris Laetitia." I need not share my own concerns about its content. Others, not only theologians but also cardinals and bishops, have already done that. The main source of concern is the manner of your teaching. In "Amoris Laetitia," your guidance at times seems intentionally ambiguous, thus inviting both a traditional interpretation of Catholic teaching on marriage and divorce as well as one that might imply a change in that teaching. As you wisely note, pastors should accompany and encourage persons in irregular marriages; but ambiguity persists about what that "accompaniment" actually means. To teach with such a seemingly intentional lack of clarity inevitably risks sinning against the Holy Spirit, the Spirit of truth. The Holy Spirit is given to the Church, and particularly to yourself, to dispel error, not to foster it. Moreover, only where there is truth can there be authentic love, for truth is the light that sets women and men free from the blindness of sin, a darkness that kills the life of the soul. Yet you seem to censor and even mock those who interpret Chapter 8 of "Amoris Laetitia" in accord with Church tradition as Pharisaic stone-throwers who embody a merciless rigorism. This kind of calumny is alien to the nature of the Petrine ministry. Some of your advisors regrettably seem to engage in similar actions. Such behavior gives the impression that your views cannot survive theological scrutiny, and so must be sustained by "ad hominem" arguments.

Second, too often your manner seems to demean the importance of Church doctrine. Again and again, you portray the doctrine as dead and bookish, and far from the pastoral concerns of everyday life. Your critics have been accused, in your own words, of making doctrine an ideology. But it is precisely Christian doctrine – including the fine distinctions made with regard to central beliefs like the Trinitarian nature of God; the nature and purpose of the Church; the Incarnation; the Redemption; and the sacraments – that frees people from worldly ideologies and assures that they are actually preaching and teaching the authentic, life-giving Gospel. Those who devalue the doctrines of the Church separate themselves from Jesus, the author of truth. What they then possess, and can only possess, is an ideology – one that conforms to the world of sin and death.

Third, faithful Catholics can only be disconcerted by your choice of some bishops, men who seem not merely open to those who hold views counter to Christian belief but who support and even defend them. What scandalizes believers, and even some fellow bishops, is not only your having appointed such men to be shepherds of the Church, but that you also seem silent in the face of their teaching and pastoral practice. This weakens the zeal of the many women and men who have championed authentic Catholic teaching over long periods of time, often at the risk of their own reputations and well-being. As a result, many of the faithful, who embody the "sensus fidelium," are losing confidence in their supreme shepherd.

Fourth, the Church is one body, the Mystical Body of Christ, and you are commissioned by the Lord himself to promote and strengthen her unity. But your actions and words too often seem intent on doing the opposite. Encouraging a form of "synodality" that allows and promotes various doctrinal and moral options within the Church can only lead to more theological and pastoral confusion. Such synodality is unwise and, in practice, works against collegial unity among bishops.

Holy Father, this brings me to my final concern. You have often spoken about the need for transparency within the Church. You have frequently encouraged, particularly during the two past synods, all persons, especially bishops, to speak their mind and not be fearful of what the pope may think. But have you noticed that the majority of bishops throughout the world are remarkably silent? Why is this? Bishops are quick learners, and what many have learned from your pontificate is not that you are open to criticism, but that you resent it. Many bishops are silent because they desire to be loyal to you, and so they do not express – at least publicly; privately is another matter – the concerns that your pontificate raises. Many fear that if they speak their mind, they will be marginalized or worse.

I have often asked myself: "Why has Jesus let all of this happen?" The only answer that comes to mind is that Jesus wants to manifest just how weak is the faith of many within the Church, even among too many of her bishops. Ironically, your pontificate has given those who hold harmful theological and pastoral views the license and confidence to come into the light and expose their previously hidden darkness. In recognizing this darkness, the Church will humbly need to renew herself, and so continue to grow in holiness.

Holy Father, I pray for you constantly and will continue to do so. May the Holy Spirit lead you to the light of truth and the life of love so that you can dispel the darkness that now hides the beauty of Jesus' Church.

Sincerely in Christ,

Thomas G. Weinandy, O.F.M., Cap.

July 31, 2017

Feast of St. Ignatius of Loyola

Father Weinandy shortly after the publication of this letter and after a conversation with the secretary general of the episcopal conference of the United States, handed in his resignation as an advisor to the doctrinal commission of the conference. Thomas Weinandy describes with these words to Robert Royal, the president of the Faith & Reason Institute based in Washington, the miraculous events that inspired him to write this shocking letter to Pope Francis:

Last May I was in Rome for an International Theological Commission meeting. I was staying at Domus Sanctae Marthae, and since I arrived early, I spent most of the Sunday afternoon prior to the meeting on Monday in Saint Peter's praying in the Eucharistic Chapel. I was praying about the present state of the Church and the anxieties I had about the present Pontificate. I was beseeching Jesus and Mary, St. Peter and all of the saintly popes who are buried there to do something to rectify the confusion and turmoil within the Church today, a chaos and an uncertainty that I felt Pope Francis had himself caused. I was also pondering whether or not I should write and publish something expressing my concerns and anxiety. On the following Wednesday afternoon, at the conclusion of my meeting, I went again to St. Peter's and prayed in the same manner. That night I could not get to sleep, which is very unusual for me. It was due to all that was on my mind pertaining to the Church and Pope Francis. At 1:15 AM I got up and went outside for short time. When I went back to my room, I said to the Lord: "If you want me to write something, you have to give me a clear sign. This is what the sign must be. Tomorrow morning I am going to Saint Mary Major's to pray and then I am going to Saint John Lateran. After that, I am coming back to Saint Peter's to have lunch with a seminary friend of mine. During that interval, I must meet someone that I know but have not seen in a very long time and would never expect to see in Rome at this time. That person cannot be from the United States, Canada or Great Britain. Moreover, that person has to say to me in the course of our conversation, 'Keep up the good writing'."

The next morning I did all of the above and by the time I met my seminarian friend for lunch what I had asked the Lord the following night was no longer in the forefront of my mind. However, towards the end of the meal, an archbishop appeared between two parked cars right in front of our table (we were sitting outside). I had not seen him for over twenty years, long before he became an archbishop. We recognized one another immediately. What made his appearance even more unusual was that, because of his recent personal circumstances, I would never have expected to see him in Rome or anywhere else, other than in his own archdiocese. (He was from none of the above-mentioned countries.) We spoke about his coming to Rome and caught up on what we were doing. I then introduced him to my seminarian friend. He said to my friend that we had met a long time ago and that he had, at that time, just finished reading my book on the immutability of God and the Incarnation. He told my friend that it was an excellent book, that it helped him sort out the issue, and that my friend should read the book. Then he turned to me and said: "Keep up the good writing."

I could hardly believe that this just happened in a matter of a few minutes. But there was no longer any doubt in my mind that Jesus wanted me to write something. I also think it significant that it was an Archbishop that Jesus used. I considered it an apostolic mandate. So giving it considerable thought and after writing many drafts, I decided to write Pope Francis directly about my concerns. However, I always intended to make it public since I felt many of my concerns were the same concerns that others had, especially among the laity, and so I publicly wanted to give voice to their concerns as well.

The criticism of this senior figure of the Church towards Pope Francis are somehow confirmed once again by the mysterious author of The Dictator Pope, initially a controversial ebook signed by the pseudonymous “Marcantonio Colonna” which has risen in 2017 to 4th place on Amazon Kindle’s Religion and Spirituality bestseller list, before being relaunched officially in April 2018 with the real name of the author.

In particular, this book reveals a supposed “disappeared report”, authored by Peter Hans Kolvenbach, former Superior General of the Society of Jesus, who allegedly stated that a younger Pope Francis was “unsuitable” to be made a Bishop because of “character defects”. In an interview with The Catholic Herald, the author of the book stated that it is not a rumor, but first-hand information from a priest who read the report. Topics of discussion in the book include also most of what I already denounced myself in Pope Francis: The Last Pope? Adding a few recent elements to the table, like the ongoing troubles in reforming the Vatican Bank.

According to The Australian, outside of theological concerns, a major topic in the book is, in fact, what the author views as the failure of Pope Francis’ papacy when it comes to financial reform and the elimination of corruption in the ever so decadent Vatican. The author of The Dictator Pope specifically accuses four cardinals of obstructing financial reform; Secretary of State Pietro Parolin, the head of the Vatican Bank, Domenico Calcagno, the Prefect for Catholic Education Giuseppe Versaldi and the President of the Pontifical Commission for Vatican City State, Giuseppe Bertello. Well who knows what is the position of the House of Rothschild in this unclear banking affair, as they have been indicated by many researchers in the past as long-standing trustee of the Vatican’s wealth, and close allies of Vatican Freemasonry and Pope Francis Communist agenda that has transformed the Jesuit Pope in a hero of the Anti-Trump left-wing media sponsored by George Soros and the Rothschilds that have used their globalist media mouthpiece The Economist to declare that Donald Trump is threatening to destroy the New World Order, for good. Globalism propaganda tool and Rothschild family-owned publication, The Economist has, in fact, branded the US President a “present danger” to the “New World Order,” and stated that the “internationalists” that formed it are “spinning in their graves.” The Economist names Trump is the biggest threat to the “liberal” New World Order. The Economist makes the strange assertion that, despite being directly responsible for numerous wars and destabilizing coup attempts around the world, the New World Order is “better than any of the alternatives.” “Of course, there are still plenty of wars,” it states. “ In some ways, the New World Order, which has helped make international wars so much less imaginable, has inadvertently made possible more “intranational” wars.”.

The rather different perspective of a Rosicrucian

The Rosicrucian, Max Heindel [1865-1919], moved to Los Angeles, California, seeking work. After attending lectures by the theosophist C.W. Leadbeater, he joined the Theosophical Society of Los Angeles, of which he became vice-president in 1904 and 1905. He also was very close to another member of the Theosophical Society, the Illuminati and Mystic Freemason, Rudolf Steiner (1861-1925). During his short stay in Germany, he developed a sincere admiration for this knowledgeable lecturer, as later shown in the dedication of his magnum opus (“esteemed teacher and valued friend”). He sat in on several lectures and had one or two interviews with Steiner, where he learned about occult truth from the founder of Anthroposophy, but at the same time he understood that this teacher could not help him to advance along the path of spiritual development. It was then, with his mind already made up to return, feeling that he had given up important work in America, to take this trip, that Heindel reports to have been visited by an Invisible Master, a Spiritual being.

FIG 27 – Max Heindel (1865-1919) was born as Carl Louis Fredrik Grasshoff. When he emigrated to America his name changed.

The highly evolved entity that visited Heindel eventually identified himself as an Elder Brother of the Rosicrucian Order, an Order in the inner worlds formed in the year 1313, that had no direct connection to physical organizations which call themselves by this name. As he mentions afterward, the Elder Brother gave him information which was concise and logical, and beyond anything, he was capable of writing. Later, he found out that during a previous visit of the Elder Brother, he was tested to determine his worthiness to be a messenger of the Western Initiatic System, he defined as the messenger of the Western Wisdom Teachings.

He recounts that only then, was he given instruction on how to reach the etheric Temple of the Rose Cross, near the German/Bohemian border, and how at this Temple, he would be in direct communication with, and under the personal instructions of, the Elder Brothers of the Rose Cross. The Rosicrucian Order is described as being composed of twelve Elder Brothers, gathered around a thirteenth who is the Invisible Head. These great Adepts, who belong to human evolution, but have already advanced far beyond the cycle of rebirth, are reported as being among those exalted Beings who guide mankind's evolution, the Compassionate Ones. [65]

This is a rather clear vision of the core of the Western Initiatic System, views present also in other important authors and students of the esoteric world, that I embrace and find accurate. However, Max Heindel, also wrote a very interesting exposition, and occult investigation, about Freemasonry and the Catholic Church, that I still find rather relevant to my investigation in the decline of the Western Initiatic System, and this chapter in particular. For this reason, I include a brief extract from his booklet Freemasonry and Catholicism, and the chapter entitled Lucifer the Rebel Angel, that while pointing out the important mission of Mystic Masonry, calls “Lucifer their great leader”, referring to Freemasonry. Let’s try to understand more about this unusual and powerful perspective:

The Rosicrucian Fellowship aims to educate and construct, to be charitable even to those from whom we differ, and never to vent the venom of vituperation, spite, or malice even upon those who seem deliberately determined to mislead. We revere the Catholic religion; it is as divine in its essence, as both were born to further the aspiration of the striving soul, and both have a message and a mission in the world not apparent upon the surface today, because man-made ceremonial as a scale, has hidden the present articles to remove that scale and show the Cosmic purpose of these two Great Organizations, which are so bitterly antagonistic to each other.

We do not aim to reconcile them, however, for though they are both designed to further the emancipation of the soul, their methods are different, and the attributes of the soul fostered by one method will indeed be very different from the quality of the soul nurtured in the other School. Therefore, the strife must continue until the battle for the souls of men has been lost and won. The issue is not, however, the persistence of the Masonic or Catholic institutions; but the outcome will determine the nature of the training humanity will receive in the remaining Periods of our evolution. We shall endeavor to show the cosmic root of both of these institutions, the purpose of each and the training which each will inaugurate, if successful; also the nature of the soul quality which may be expected to result from each method. THE WRITER IS NOT A MASON, AND THUS HE IS FREE TO SAY WHAT HE KNOWS WITHOUT FEAR OF VIOLATING OBLIGATIONS, BUT HE IS A MASON AT HEART, AND THEREFORE FRANKLY OPPOSED TO CATHOLICISM.

Our opposition is not fanatical, or blind to the merits of the Catholic Religion, however. The Catholic is our brother as well as the Mason; we would not say a disparaging, irreverent word against this faith, or those who live by it, and should we seem to do so, in any passage, the wrong will be due to inadvertence. The reader is requested to note that we distinguish sharply between the Catholic Hierarchy and the Catholic Religion, but the former are also our brothers; we would not throw stones either physically or morally, for we know our own shortcomings too well to attack others. Thus our opposition is not personal, but spiritual, and to be fought with the weapon of the Spirit-- Reason.

We firmly believe it to be for the everlasting good of mankind that the Masons should win, and cannot, therefore, be sure to present the Catholic side in a perfectly unbiased manner, but we ask our students for whom this is written, to believe that we shall try to be just. Of the Cosmic Facts, we are certain, but bias may creep into our conclusions, therefore each must use his reason to test what we have to say, viz., prove all things and hold fast that which is good.

The great law of analogy is everywhere the master key of all spiritual mysteries, and, although Masonry and Catholicism do not begin till we arrive at the Earth Period, they have their prototype in the earlier Periods; we shall therefore briefly touch upon the essential facts. In the Saturn Period, the Earth-in-the-making was dark; HEAT, which is the manifestation of the ever invisible fire, was the only element then manifest; embryonic mankind was mineral-like, the only lower kingdom of evolving life. Unity was everywhere observable, and the Lords of Mind who were human then were at one among themselves. In the Western Wisdom Teaching, we speak of the highest Initiate of the Saturn Period as THE FATHER.

In the Sun Period the root of a new element, AIR, was evolved and coalesced with the true fire, which, mark again, is always invisible, and which manifested as HEAT in the Saturn Period. Then fire burst into FLAMES, and the dark world became a blazing ball of luminous firemist at the word of power, LET THERE BE LIGHT.

Let the student ponder well the relation of FIRE and FLAME; the former lies sleeping, invisible in everything, and is kindled into light in various ways: by a blow of a hammer upon a stone, by the friction of wood against wood and by chemical action, etc. This gives us a clue to the identity and state of THE FATHER, "whom no man hath seen at any time" but who is revealed in "The Light of the World," the Son, who is the highest Initiate of the Sun Period. As the unseen fire is revealed in the flame, so also the fullness of the Father dwelt in the Son, and they are one as fire is one with the flame in which it manifests. This is the root of all true Sun and Fire worship. All look beyond the physical symbol and adore Our Father Who art in Heaven. The Mystic Masons of today hold this faith in the fire as firmly as ever. Thus it will be seen that the Unity which prevailed in the Saturn Period continued in the Sun Period.

The ordinary humanity of that time has now evolved to the glory of Archangels; some were more advanced than others, but there was no antagonism among them. Our present humanity had advanced to a plantlike stage, and was slightly above the new Lifewave started in the Sun Period, and unity also here prevailed. In the Moon Period contact of the heated sphere with cold Space generated moisture, and the battle of the elements commenced in all its fierceness. The heated ball of fire endeavored to evaporate the moisture, force it outwards and create a vacuum wherein to maintain its integrity and burn undisturbed; but there is and can be no void in nature, hence the outrushing steam condensed at a certain distance from the heated ball and was again driven inwards by the cold of Space, to be again evaporated and propelled outwards, in a ceaseless round for ages and ages, as a shuttlecock between the separate Hierarchies of Spirits composing the various Kingdoms of Life, represented in the Fire-Sphere and Cosmic Space which is an expression of the Homogeneous Absolute Spirit. The Fire Spirits are actively striving to attain enlargement of consciousness. But the Absolute rests ever clothed in the invisible garment of Cosmic Space. In 'It' all powers and possibilities are LATENT, and It seeks to discourage and check any attempt at an expenditure of latent power as the dynamic energy required in the evolution of a solar system. Water is the agent It used to quench the fire of active spirits. The zone between the heated center of the separate Spirit Sphere, and the Point where its individual atmosphere meets Cosmic Space is a battleground of evolving spirits at various stages of evolution. The present Angels were human in the Moon Period, and the highest Initiate is The Holy Spirit, (Jehovah). As our humanity and the other Kingdoms of Life on earth are variously affected by the present elements, so that some like heat, others prefer cold, some thrive on moisture and others require dryness, so also in the Moon Period among the Angels, some had affinity for water, others abhorred it and loved fire.

The continued cycles of condensation and evaporation of the moisture surrounding the fiery center eventually caused incrustation, and it was the purpose of Jehovah to mold this red earth, translated ADAM, into forms wherein to imprison and QUENCH THE SPIRITS OF THE FIRE. To this end, He issued the creative fiat, and the prototypes of fish, fowl and every living thing appeared, even including the primitive human form, which were created by His Angels; thus He hoped to make all that lives and moves subservient to His will. Against this plan a minority of the Angels rebelled; they had too great an affinity for FIRE to bear contact with water, and refused to create the forms as ordered; but thereby they at the same time deprived themselves of an opportunity of evolution along the conventional lines, and became an anomaly in nature; furthermore, having repudiated the authority of Jehovah, they must work out their own salvation in their own manner.

How this has been accomplished by LUCIFER, their Great Leader will be made plain in the following articles; for the present, suffice it to say, that in the Earth Period, when various planets were differentiated to provide proper evolutionary environment for each class of Spirits, the Angels under Jehovah were set to work with the inhabitants of ALL PLANETS HAVING MOONS; while the Lucifer Spirits have their abode upon the planet Mars. The Angel GABRIEL is representative on earth, of the Lunar Hierarchy, presided over by Jehovah; the Angel SAMAEEL is an ambassador of the Martial forces of Lucifer. Gabriel (who announced the coming birth of Jesus to Mary,) and his lunar angels are therefore the givers of physical life, while Samael and the hosts of Mars are the Angels of Death. Thus originated the feud in the dim dawn of this Cosmic day, and that which we see as Free Masonry today is an attempt by the HIERARCHS OF FIRE, the Lucifer Spirits, to bring us the imprisoned spirit 'LIGHT,' that by it we may SEE and KNOW.

Catholicism is an activity of the HIERARCHS OF WATER, and places 'HOLY WATER' at the Temple door to quench the spirits seeking light and knowledge and to inculcate FAITH in Jehovah. As the vernal equinox is said to be at the first point of Aries, no matter where in the constellations it falls by precession, so the point where the human seed-atom comes from the invisible world and is taken in hand by the Lunar God of Generation, Jehovah, through his ambassador, the Angel Gabriel, is esoterically the first point of Cancer. This is the Cardinal sign of the watery Triplicity and is ruled by the Moon. There Conception takes place, but were the form built of water and its concretions alone, it could never come to birth, so four months later when the foetus has reached the stage of development corresponding to the second sign of the watery triplicity, Scorpio, the eighth sign, which corresponds to the house of death, Samael, the dauntless ambassador of the Lucifer Spirits, invades the watery domain of the Lunar Hierarchy and introduces the fiery spark of the spirit into the inert form, to leaven, quicken and mould it into an expression of itself.

There the Silver Cord which has grown from the seed-atom of the dense body (located in the heart) since conception, is welded to the part that has sprouted from the central vortex of the desire body, (located in the liver,) and when the Silver Cord is tied by the seed-atom of the vital body, (located in the solar plexus,) the spirit DIES to life in the supersensible world, and quickens the body it is to use in its coming earth life. This life on earth lasts until the course of events foreshadowed in the wheel of life, the horoscope, has been run; and when the spirit again reaches the realm of Samael, the Angel of Death, the mystic eighth house, the silver cord is loosed, and the spirit returns to God who gave it, until the dawn of another Life-day in the School of earth beckons it to a new birth that it may acquire more skill in the arts and crafts of temple-building.

About five months after the quickening, when the last of the watery signs,

Pisces, has been passed, the representative of the Lucifer Spirits, Samael, focuses the forces of the fiery sign, Aries, where Mars is positively polarized, so that under the impulse of their dynamic energy the waters of the womb are voided, and the imprisoned spirit is liberated into the physical world, to fight the battle of life. It may blindly butt its head against the Cosmic forces typified by the first of the fiery signs, Aries, the Ram, which is a symbol of the brute strength brought to bear upon the problems of life by the most primitive races; or it may adopt the more modern method of cunning, as a means of attaining mastery over others, which characteristic is indicated in the second of the fiery signs, Leo, the Lion, the king of beasts; or perchance it may rise above the animal nature, and aim at the stars with the bow of spiritual aspiration, typified by the last of the fiery signs, Sagittarius, the Centaur.

The Centaur is just ahead of the watery sign Scorpio, a warning that one who tries to reach that prerogative as “PHREE MESSEN,” a son of Fire and Light, will surely feel the sting of the Scorpion in his heel, which will goad him onward upon the path where men become “wise as serpents.” It is from this class that Mystic Masonry is recruited with men who have the indomitable courage TO DARE, the unflagging energy TO DO and the diplomatic discrimination TO BE SILENT.

The roots of ROSICRUCIANISM

In regards to the mysterious Rosicrucians we already saw what William Walker Atkinson wrote under the pseudonym Magus Incognito, in The Secret Doctrine of the Rosicrucians I cited earlier, however, Ufologist and Illuminati Allen H. Greenfield (b.1946), who was given the mystical title of Tau Sir Hasirim, by Hierophant Michael Bertiaux of Chicago, tells us that the concept of Rosicrucianism “defies sharp or clear definition” and “Its origins may be similar to that of Freemasonry and the Hermetic Brotherhood of Luxor, but like these venerable institutions, its true origins are lost in the thick mists of occult history.” Well, all this seems rather chaotic, however, Greenfield seems to clear up the matter for us by writing: “All that we can say for certain is that certain intriguing Rosicrucian documents begin appearing in the early 1600s, but claiming to describe earlier events. The Fama Fraternitatis Rosae Crucis appeared in

In the controversial Rosicrucian history only one thing is certain, in 1622, the inhabitants of Paris woke up to find the walls of their city covered with posters bearing the following message: We, deputies of the principal College of the Brethren of the Rose Cross (Rosicrucians) are amongst you in this town, visibly and invisibly, through the grace of the Most High to whom the hearts of all just men are turned, in order to save our fellow-men from the error of death’.

Since then, the secretive nature of the Rosicrucians, typical of the Illuminati sect since time immemorial, makes it difficult, or at times impossible, to get any reliable historical information on their true origins or their real mission. John Yarker made initially the following statement in one of his earlier works published in 1872: We shall see from the following account of the Society of Christian Rosy Cross, that it claims to date from about the year 1400, but we do not read of the association under that name prior to 1600, and the impossibility of the narrative points out to us that the name of the founder is mythical, and that it is no doubt of antiquity.

We have indeed nothing beyond the Rosicrucian writings to prove that an order, with proper organizations, existed, under the name of Rosicrucians, but it is claimed that the so-called Rosy Cross brethren passed through a number of degrees- seven or nine- to perfection.

(Scientific and Religious Mysteries of Antiquity, p. 74)

Yarker continues to mention in the following pages the possible connections and links between Freemasonry, the Rosicrucians, and Alchemy. He will go back to the subject of Rosicrucianism in a much more detailed way, bringing up some hard evidence, and interesting facts, in its late masterpiece, The Arcane Schools, published in 1909, only four years before his death, a masterpiece of his time that continues to be to this day, one of the most comprehensive and authoritative works concerning the history of the Arcane mysteries, and the affinity with both the Masonic System and to a minor extent, Rosicrucianism. Bill Heidrick, a senior figure in today's Ordo Templi Orientis writes that “This book provides a background necessary to understand elements of the. Golden Dawn and O.T.O. initiations,” For this reason, I decided to pick up from this rare publication, the most interesting revelations made by Yarker in regards to the subject of Rosicrucianism, editing them together with a few extra bits to make certain element even more clear to the modern reader. Let's start with the possible origins of the Rosicrucian Fraternity. In the 13th century, we find traces of an organized body of men professedly Christian, who had organized themselves after the manner of the Oriental Societies. The name with which we head this article had not then become prominent, but at a later period, it became the generic title by which everything of the nature of Cabalism, Theosophy, Alchemy, Astrology, and Mysticism was designated. It is stated in a Rosicrucian MS., lying at Cologne under the nom-de-plume of Omnis Moriar, that a Society termed the Magical Union was established in this city in the year 1115. F. C. E. Weise mentions it Rosenkreutzer in seiner Blosse, (Amsterdam, 1786), and gives the conditions for entering this body of “Wise Men,” the last and youngest possessors of the secrets of the ancients; the Initiates wore a triangle as symbolising power, wisdom, and love. They had secret sciences, known only to the highest among them, called Mu- alpha-gamma-omicron-sigma, Mage, or Wise Masters, able to do things that seemed supernatural.

These days Fraternities and sororities, known also as Greek letter organizations (GLOs), use these letters for social organizations at colleges and universities. Such groups were, however, born as the intersection between dining clubs, literary societies, and secret initiatory orders such as Freemasonry. But let's return to Rosicrucianism.

Traces of an organized body are to be found in the Rosary of Arnold de Villanova, circa 1230, inasmuch as the Cabalistic term of “Sons of the Order” is used. In the Theoria of Raymond Lulli circa 1322, there is a passage in which mention is made of a “Societas Physicorum” and also of a “Rex Physicorum”. Also in the Theatrum Chemicum Argentoratum, 1628, a Count von Falkenstein, Prince Bishop of Treves in the 14th century, is termed “Most Illustrious and Serene Prince and father of Philosophers.” Hence it would seem that besides the Moorish Schools which existed in Spain, “there were similar associations amongst Christians. It is not difficult to account for the transmission of such Brotherhoods from ancient times, since the Cabalists and Gnostics studied the secret arts, and it is quite probable that the persecutions to which these were subjected were prompted rather by alarm than any real abhorrence of their pretended heretical doctrine. A few of the more curious and important works may be mentioned here. The Romance of the Rose is an Initiative system in the Allegory of the joyful science, in which the term Love is used Theosophically. Eliphaz Levi says: It is the most curious literary and scientific work of the middle ages, it carries on the chain of the tradition of Initiation. Heckethorn holds that, it divides the degrees into four and three, producing again the Mystic number seven . . . it describes a castle surrounded by a sevenfold wall, which is covered with emblematical figures, and no one was admitted into the castle who could not explain their mysterious meaning.

Amant is admitted into this beautiful garden, which is surrounded by walls on which is painted figures of 9 vices, such as hatred, envy, avarice, etc. Discourses take place between the ladies and gentles assembled, and at the close Amant appears as an armed Pilgrim, wearing a scarf and bearing on his shoulders the usual burthen, with description of how he succeeded in introducing it through the wicket of the Tower, and “gathers the roses,” upon which he returns thanks to Venus, her son, and the nobles assembled. The work was begun by William de Lorris, about 1282, as the Templars and other Orders are mentioned, and the early use of the word Macon appears in it. It was completed by Jean de Meung, and Geoffrey Chaucer translated it. Meung wrote also, The Treasure or Seven articles of the faith, The Testament, the Codical, on life and Morals, also two poems, entitled, The Remonstrance of Nature to the wandering Alchemist, and The Reply of the Alchemist to Nature. Other Societies would seem to have abandoned art, and confined themselves, like the Dervish sects, to a Mysticism which aimed at “uniting its members to God.” Brother R. F. Gould relates that the famous Dominican John Tauler, who was born in 1290 and died in 1361, established a Fraternity the members of which concealed their place of burial and recognized each other by secret signs. He was followed by Nicholas of Basle, who had four companions, styling themselves “Friends of God,” in whom they sought to be “wrapped up”; these also had secret signs of recognition.

The most noted Alchemist of this century was Nicholas Flamel, a poor scrivener of Paris, who, by the art, became enormously rich. He purchased for 2 florins in 1357 an ancient book bound in brass, which appeared to be written on leaves made from the bark of trees, perhaps the papyrus; it was subscribed by “Abraham the Jew, Prince, Priest, Levite, Astrologer, and Philosopher.” It had thrice 7 leaves, and every seventh leaf was a picture, symbolizing the Great Work. Flamel traveled in search of someone who could aid him in interpreting the contents, and after much loss of time, trouble, and experiments, he succeeded in making gold. According to his own account he bestowed the riches thus acquired in erecting and endowing 10 churches, 3 chapels, and 14 hospitals in Paris alone, and others in two other cities, besides aiding indigent families. He relates how in the Church of the Innocents, Rue St. Denis, Paris, he caused to be erected “Hieroglyphical Couvertures,” of the art of transmutation, under veils of the “Mysteries of our Salvation.” We learn from a recent reprint that the Count de Cabrines told Borel, that the actual book of Abraham the Jew (Author's Note: The Book of the Sacred Magic of Abramelin the Mage) passed into the possession of the celebrated Cardinal Richelieu. In the possession of a German gentleman, to whom we will refer later, there is a copy of an old MS. which claims to be of the year 1374, that mentions the “Fraternitas Rosae Crucis,” and it was in the year 1378 that the beginning of the Fraternity was attributed to Christian Rosenkreutz. Up to this period, there is a lack of the nature of Alchemical Symbolism, but the following is beyond doubt. Borel describes the house erected at Montpellier, about the year 1450 by the celebrated French traveler and financier Jacques Cueur or Coeur. It was named “La Loge,” and Coeur is represented on the frieze with a “trowel in his hand.” Three porches may there be seen in the form of a furnace; similar to those of Nicholas Flamel. On one there is, on one side, a “sun” all over fleur-de-lis, and on the other, a full “moon” also covered with fleur-de-lis and surrounded by a hedge or crown as it were of thorns, which seem to denote the solar and lunar stone arrived at perfection. On another portal is seen, on one side, a fruit-tree with branches of roses at its foot, and on the tree the arms of Jacques Coeur. On the other is an escutcheon, and within it what would appear to represent the chemic character of the sun. On the third portal, which is in the midst, there is on one side a stag bearing a banner, and having a collar of fleur-de-lis environed with a branch of a tree, to represent Mercury, or the philosophical matter, which at the commencement is volatile and light as in the stag; on the other side is a shield of France supported by two griffins. This symbolism has nothing in common with that of Flamel, who does not profess to have been an Initiate, but one who has acquired some oral information of the first agent of the work, acquired the art by experiments conducted by himself with the aid of his wife; but on the other hand it is much in keeping with that of Abraham the Jew, and therefore argues a great antiquity.

The whole symbolism is so equally Masonic and Alchemical that it would be difficult to say definitely to which Society it belongs; both Societies seem to have a common transmission, the one as a building, the other as a Mystic Fraternity; the natural inference here, on this evidence, is that Coeur was a member of both Societies and that he combined the symbols. Alchemically the Sun and Moon signify gold and silver; the chemic character of the sun is a point within a circle; the branch of a tree, said to represent Mercury, has nothing to define the species. It may be mentioned here that the Syrian Mysteries of Adonis represented the slain God as changed by Venus into a red rose; and Theodoratus, Bishop of Cyrus in Syria, asserts that the Gnostics deemed “Ros” to be a symbol of the Saviour; the Egyptians considered the rose as a symbol of regeneration and love, and as the Latin word Rosa is derived from Ros, the dew, it has a relation with baptism; hence the rose-tree in Christian symbolism is the image of the regenerated, whilst dew is the symbol of regeneration. In the Crypt of St. Sibald s in Nuremberg, is a double triangle, interlaced with a circle, within which is a rose.

Basil Valentine, who flourished at the same time as Jacques Coeur, in his Azoth Philosophorum, has a figure which is thus described: it represents a winged-globe of which is a triangle inside a square, upon which reposes a dragon; on the latter stands a human figure with two heads, and two hands; surrounding the heads, one of which is male and the other female, are the sun, moon; and five stars; the hand on the male side holds a compass, that on the other a square. The symbolism here clearly alludes to the dual sexual nature of all metals. In The Triumphant Chariot of Antimony, it is asserted that the Adept should be capable of building his own furnaces. The most noted of the Alchemists after this date was Philippus Aureolus Theophrastus Bombast of Hohenheim (known as Paracelsus), who was born in 1493, and died in 1541, and there is a strong suspicion that it was from injuries inflicted by his enemies. Whilst traveling in the East Paracelsus was taken prisoner by the Tartars, who treated him kindly, and the Khan sent him with his son to Constantinople; it is probable that he studied Magic in these regions. He had studied Magnetism and initiated medical treatment for mercury and opium. Franz Hartman, M.D., has revealed the identity of his teaching with the Eastern Adepts of the Secret Doctrine. His philosophy divides man into seven principles of the outer and inner body; (1) the visible body; (2) the mumia, archaeus, or vital force; (3) the sidereal body, which gradually dissolves; (4) the animal soul, common to all things; (5) the rational soul; (6) the aluech, or spiritual soul; (7) new olympus, or divine spirit, which must be caught and bound to the other principles if man is to become immortal. He fills the elements with spirits of many kinds, and mentions the Flageae, who act as our guides and familiars and instruct us in the sciences. Paracelsus designates himself “Monarch of Philosophers,” and the Comte de Gabalis, a work of 1675-80 definitely states that he was elected “Monarch” of the Rosicrucian Society. Paracelsus (1493-1541) was a Swiss chemist and physician. As a professor of medicine in Basel, he violently opposed traditional Galenic medicine and emphasized direct observation instead. His nonconformist views and rough behavior led to his expulsion after less than a year. He led an itinerant life, practicing medicine, writing books and studying diseases of miners.

Paracelsus believed in an immaterial principle, the "alchemist," that converted food into body substance. Every animal species, he believed, was endowed with its own alchemist, adapted to its needs. Paracelsus introduced chemical thinking into medicine (iatrochemistry) and nutrition. Today, he remains a controversial figure. We will now refer to a few Societies which seem to have been Cabalistic or Speculative rather than Alchemical, but with a tinge of the Sciences. Between the years 1400 to “circa” 1790 there existed at Lubeck a Guild called the "Compass Brothers" which met twice a year; their badge was a compass and sector suspended from a crowned letter “C, ” over which was a radiated triangular plate; in 1485 they adopted chains composed of these emblems united by eagles tails.

About the year 1480 ,a Society was established at Rome under the name of the “Platonic Academy;” it was a revival of the School of Plato, and the Hall in which they met is said to contain Masonic emblems. Another Society, which may have sprung out of it, was the “Brotherhood of the Trowel, ” at Florence. It was composed of eminent architects, sculptors, and painters, and continued until last century. There are some old drawings in Paris which represent its member’s as, Assistants, and Masters; the latter appear with a trowel in their hands and a hammer in their girdle; to the Laborers are assigned pails, hods of mortar, the windlass, mallet, chisel, and rough ashlar. Their patron was St. Andrew, whose festival was commemorated annually by peculiar ceremonies allied to the old Mysteries, such as the descent into Hades through the jaws of a serpent. The celebrated Inigo Jones, to whom Anderson attributes quarterly meetings on the model of the Italian Schools, may possibly have known something of this Society. Pico de Mirandola and Reuchlin gave themselves to the study of Cabalism and Theurgy, as did the Abbe Trithemius who was the friend, instructor, and co-laborer of Cornelius Agrippa. Use was made during this period of a form of the Masonic cipher in 9 chambers, with a Key which being dissected and triply dotted gave 27 letters. Trithemius attributes this to the ancients, and he gives numerous ciphers. Agrippa established in Paris and elsewhere a secret "Theosophical Society" with peculiar Rites of admission, and signs of recognition, and when he was in London in 1510 as the guest of Dean Collet he established a branch in that city. There is a letter of Landulph s to Agrippa introducing a native of Nuremberg who was dwelling at Lyons, and whom he "hopes may be found worthy to become one of the Brotherhood." Agrippa says, as to Alchemy, that he could tell many things were he not "as one Initiated sworn to secrecy." Eirenaes Philalethes, whose real name is not certainly known, and who was the author of several Rosicrucian works, 1667-78, terms Agrippa "Imperator" of the Order. Agrippa distinctly states that outside operative Alchemy, which is vain and fictitious when practiced literally, there is another to be sought within mans own self in the operation of the internal spirit. There is a possibility that the well-known "Charter of Cologne" may have reference to these Brotherhoods; it professes to be signed in 1535, by the representatives of 19 lodges, assembled at Cologne on the Rhine, and amongst these signatories are those of Coligny and Melancthon; these somewhat doubtful Lodges do not profess in the document to be operative, but to have sprung out of the Masonry dedicated to John, about the year 1440. An American writer attributes to John Bunyan the allegory of Initiation in his "Pilgrim s Progress; it is not very satisfactory but Bunyan's "Solomon's Temple Spiritualised" was probably used in the 18th century, for Craft and Arch Lectures.

"Rosy Cross. " There are traces in 1484 of a Rosicrucian Order at Sleswick, in Denmark: "Fraternitatus Rosarii Sleswicii condito, anno, 1484." Early in the 17th century, there are traces that the King was head of such an order. Again, last century, such an order unconnected with Freemasonry was patronized by the King and seems to have consisted of seven degrees, according to the statement of an aged Danish physician to Colonel W. J. B. M Leod Moore, who connects it with the Arcane Discipline; though its immediate source will be the Order of Rosy Cross; and it will be sometime found that the peculiar aspect of Swedish Masonry is due to this old Danish System. A Society termed "Militia Crucifera Evangelica” held a meeting at Lunenberg in 1571; and one Simon Studion wrote a book in 1604 entitled “Naometria,” or Temple Measuring, or the Temple opened by the key of David, referring mystically to the inner and outer man carried to the temple of the New Jerusalem; the MS. refers to the Rose and Cross, and to the “Militia Crucifera.” A Society called the “Friends of the Cross,” existing in Holland, is said to have joined an operative Lodge of Freemasons before the year 1726, when Count Spork, who had been initiated therein, according to Brother Malczovich, established a Lodge in Austria in that year, and a medal was struck, of which one side represents the New Jerusalem. In the year 1614 appeared anonymously a work entitled the “Fame and Confession of the Rosy Cross.” It relates the Eastern travels of a certain Christian Rosenkreutz, at the end of the 14th century, who was Initiated at Damascus into the Secret Wisdom of the Arabians, Chaldeans, and Gymnosophists; then after visiting Egypt and Morocco, he returned to Germany, where he established a small fraternity, which was to be continued secretly for 120 years, each brother, before he died, to appoint his successor. At the close of 120 years, that is about 1604, some alterations were made in their temple of the Holy Spirit when his remains were found intact with the book T in his hand. All the paraphernalia and instruments were there necessary to constitute the Order.

The work informs us that they had received the Order “From the Arabians. . . . The Eastern countries have been always famous for Magical and Secret Societies.” Here the founder translated the book M (Marginal, “Liber Mundi”) into good Latin. The “Fame” was to be translated into five languages, that even the unlearned might hope to belong to the Fraternity, “the which should be divided and parted into certain degrees. “They exacted “vows of silence and secrecy,” and “though they held out the Rose as a remote prize, they imposed the Cross on those who are entering.” The mention of a book which contains all that has yet been written in other books is supposed by some writers (perhaps unnecessarily) to refer to the Tarot. Another work, entitled, “The Echo of the Divinely Illuminated Fraternity of the R.C.,” 1615, asks the question whether the Gospel put an end to the secret tradition and answers it thus: “By no means; Christ established a new College of Magic amongst his disciples, and the Greater Mysteries were revealed to St. John and St. Paul.” This, Brother Findel points out, was a claim of the Carpocratian Gnostics. There exists in the library of the University of Leyden an MS. by Michael Maier which sets forth that in 1570 the Society of the old Magical brethren or Wise Men was revived under the name of the Brethren of the Golden Rosy Cross. The "Fame and Confession" is usually attributed to J. V. Andrea, but Brother Dr. W. Wynn Westcott points out that though the two tracts may have been edited by this author they are apparently of different eras. The Fame shews no evidence of a divided Christianity, but ranks only against Mohammedanism, whilst the Confession is Lutheran and implies a post-reformation date.

Andrea is admittedly author of Christian Mythology, Strasburg, 1619; and Ehrenreich Hohenfelder von Aister Haimb, 1623, in which are the following lines, translated by Brother F. F. Schnitger: --

"And if we here below would learn, By compass, needle, square, and plumb. We never must overlook the meet, Where with our God has measured us. "

Andrea employed himself in spreading a Society called "the Christian Fraternity," no doubt a branch of the older Societies of the Cross, and lists of members are preserved beyond the date of his death in 1654. The Universities had their Scholastic oaths, Luther and Fludd mentions them, and they would seem to have had formal Rites, for the latter in his Mosaicall Philosophy, 1659 (p. 31) repudiates any allegiance which I have by a ceremonial rite vowed unto Aristotle in my youth.

Michael Maier, who published his Silentia post Clamores, 1617, says, "Like the Pythagoreans and Egyptians the Rosicrucians exact vows of silence and secrecy. Ignorant men have treated the whole as a fiction, but this has arisen from the five years probation to which they subject even well-qualified Novices before they are admitted to the higher Mysteries; within this period they are to learn how to govern their tongues."

Maier published in the same year as this the de Vita Morte et Resurrectione of his friend Robert Fludd. There existed at the Hague in 1622 a Rosicrucian Society with branches in Amsterdam, Nuremberg, Hamburg, Danzig, Mantua, Venice, and Erfurt. "The Brothers wore a black silk cord in the top buttonhole," an MS. of last century says that this cord was given to them after they had promised, under oath, to be strangled with such a cord rather than break the silence imposed upon them. Their other sign is, that when they go into company they all wear a blue ribbon, to which is attached a golden cross with a rose on it, and this they are given on being received into the Society. This they wear round their necks under their coats, so that not much of it is visible; the golden cross hangs down on the left side. The third sign is that on the top of the head they have a shaven place, about the size of a louis d or, as you may see on myself; hence most of them wear a wig in order not to be recognized; they are moreover very devout and live very quietly. The fourth sign is that on all high festivals, very early at sunrise, they leave their residence by the same door (“i.e.,” the East), and wave a small green flag. When another of them appears at a place where one lives, he goes to this same place, and there they enter into conversation, in order to recognize one another; for at the beginning they do not trust one another. Thus they have a certain "Greeting," among themselves, which is as follows. “The Stranger says to the man he is visiting, Ave frater ! to which the other answers, Rosae et Aureae ! Then the first says, Crucis ! They then, both together, say Benedictus Deus Dominus Noster, qui Nobis dedit signum.

Then they have a large document to which the Emperor has affixed the secret seal.” The M.S. from which this is taken is a part of the documents in possession of Mr. Karl Kisewetter, who is a grandson of the last Emperor and who says that the seal which the last Emperor used in office between 1764- 1802 is of brass about the size of a mark. It consisted of a shield within a circle, on which was a cross, at the base of which was a conventional rose with five petals; at the top, bottom, and sides was the letter “C” signifying, Crux Christi Corona Christianorum (the cross of Christ is the Christians Crown). The English leader of the Rosicrucians was Dr. Robert Fludd, a deep student of the Cabala, Astrology, Alchemy, and Magic. He published at Leyden, in 1616, his Rosicrucian Apologia, after a visit that Maier paid to England. In 1629 appeared his Summum Bonum, and Sophia Cum Moria Certamen, in which, in answer to Father Mersenne as to where the Rosicrucians resided, he replies, -- “In the house of God, where Christ is the Cornerstone,” a spiritual work, in which men are the “living stones.” He speaks in 1633 “of the formerly so-called Rosicrucians who are now known as Sapientes, Sophoi, or Wise men,” and impresses on the reader that it is “under the type of an Architect they erect their House of Wisdom.”

There was a Mr. Flood who presented a copy of the Masonic MS. Charges to the Masons Company of London, and as Robert Fludd died 8th September 1637, and resided for a long time near Masons Hall he was probably a Mason. Maier (as quoted in Initiation) says that numerous societies of Rosicrucians had arisen by the various interpretations placed upon their ancient symbols and that the Society consisted of an outer and inner circle to which last the most esoteric part was confined, and there is much which would cause us to think that Fludd's Society of the name was the Masonic Masters Fraternity, known as the Harodim, and all Continental tradition of the High-grades, or Masters grades, support this. Dr. John Dee, John Booker, William Lilly, and Father Backhouse are well-known Occultists, but as Masons we are more interested in two men who were not only given to those pursuits, but were also well-known Masons, Sir Robert Moray, who was made a Mason at Newcastle-on-Tyne in 1641; and Elias Ashmole, who was made at Warrington in 1646. It is conjectured that Thomas Vaughan, the author of many Rosicrucian works under the assumed name of Eugenius Philalethes, may have been accepted in 1641, or thereabouts; he was a friend of Ashmole, and the language of some parts of his works corresponds with our Ritual; Moray also patronised him.

Elias Ashmole in his Diary makes several mentions of the “Feasts of the Mathematicians and Astrologers,” and under 1653 says that Father Backhouse, when at the point of death, “instructed him in syllables of the matter of the Philosophers Stone. ”

In Theatrum Chemicum Britannicum, 1652, he gives from the “Breviary of Philosophy,” the Oath of the Alchemists, which Society he says was divided into Sons, and Fathers:

*Will you with me to-morrow be content, Faithfully to receive the Blessed Sacrament, Upon the Oath that I ball here you give,
For ne gold, ne silver, so long as you live; Neither for love you beare towards your kinne, Nor yet to no great man, preferment to wynne, That you disclose the secret I shall you teach, Neither by writing, nor by swift speech, But only to him, which you be sure, Hath ever searched after the secrets of nature, To him you may reveal the secrets of this art, Under the cover of Philosophie, before the world, you depart.*

The symbolic tracing of the Rosicrucians was a Square Temple approached by seven steps, of which the four first represented the four elements, and the remaining three salt, sulphur, and mercury, the three great principles; here also we find the two Pillars of Hermes, the five-pointed star, sun and moon, compasses, square, and triangle.

Now you have probably more knowledge of the Rosicrucians origins and their teachings than most of its pseudo adepts of today.

The Illuminati's darkest secrets

A Communist Pope

During Pope Francis' address to the joint session of US Congress, in September 2015, four names were given by the Pontiff as examples of honorable American people. The first two are well-known, Abraham Lincoln and Martin Luther King Jr, but most people aren't familiar with the other two, Thomas Merton and Dorothy Day. Most would be shocked at the real truth behind this subtle stunt by the Jesuit Pope to promote his Marxist agenda. Basically Pope Francis is attempting, what the Soviet Union could not manage to pull off in the past, and that's to forcibly convert the US to Communist ideology.

The United States' largest lay-run apostolates called, Catholic Answers, whose mission statement is to "help good Catholics become better Catholics," describes Thomas Merton (1915–1968), as a womanizer, and member of the Young Communist League. Thomas Merton also fathered a child, (he was a Trappist monk, but some people also describe as a Zen Buddhist. In the last year of his life, he wrote in his journal while traveling through Asia:

Last night I dreamed I was, temporarily, back at Gethsemani. I was dressed in a Buddhist monk's habit, but with more black and red and gold, a "Zen habit," in color more Tibetan than Zen . . . I met some women in the corridor, visitors and students of Asian religion, to whom I was explaining I was a kind of Zen monk and Gelugpa together when I woke up. (Asian Journal, p. 107)

Let me remind you that Merton is supposed to be a Catholic monk, not a Zen Buddhist, but Pope Francis believes that we should all honor that added value in his One World Religion set up. In fact, he did not mention Jesus once in his speech to Congress, but he mentioned Moses, who is recognized as Prophet by all three Abrahamic religions.

Pope Francis' other choice, Dorothy Day, does not seem to be any better.

David Ripe for the Catholic Media Coalition wrote this about Dorothy Day in 2012, when the American bishops unanimously backed the advancement of the cause of Dorothy Day, through the process leading to sainthood:

While she has the unanimous support of the bishops, Day is a controversial figure among many rank and file Catholics who do not consider her an acceptable role model. For them, she exemplifies the archetypal “liberal Catholic” or “social justice Catholic.” These terms refer to individuals who are often disposed to try to change the Church in various ways and who are strongly animated and influenced by left-leaning political ideology. Many such Catholics became emboldened following Vatican II, and made chimerical interpretations of its documents. Chief among the objections to Day’s nomination for sainthood is the belief that she embraced the doctrines of Marxism and made them the framework of her social activism.

David Ripe added, citing the well documented research of other sources that clearly demonstrates how traditional Catholics, the same ones who are now beginning to oppose Pope Francis in growing numbers, perceive Dorothy Day: Carol Byrne, a British researcher, has investigated Day’s life extensively and has chronicled her activities and writings, along with those of Peter Maurin, in The Catholic Worker Movement, 1933-1980: A Critical Analysis(AuthorHouse UK Ltd.). While Day’s defenders insist that she fully disavowed Marxism after her conversion to Catholicism, Byrne’s research leads her to conclude otherwise.

So having analyzed who Dorothy Day and Thomas Merton really are, could the Church be close to another schism? In Rome today, as I am writing this, it appears to be a growing concern among many traditional Catholics that don’t accept a Church full of compromises and hypocrisy, like the Church now proposed by Pope Francis. Even CNN religion editor Daniel Burke wrote that: Abortion and same-sex marriage received scant mention in the Pope’s short address. Instead, Francis -- the first pontiff to address Congress and the first from Latin America -- focused on immigration, the death penalty, racial injustice, the weapons trade, and poverty.

Are we going to listen to the Pope, and limit our gun rights, or discuss the death penalty, when the growing immigration and the refugee crisis will most likely escalate crime? In Europe and countries like Italy, crime is reaching levels never touched before, and the unarmed population is being raped and murdered daily by so-called refugees or immigrants, causing growing concern among the population, but Pope Francis has said nothing about it. Instead, he went on with his criminal plan to convince all of Europe supported by Continental Freemasonry and the left-wing mondialist side of US politics, (ie Obama, Clinton, Elizabeth Warren aka "Pocahontas") to give up their rights to the millions of incoming refugees and immigrants, and to force the US to give up their just right to carry guns and defend themselves from this emerging chaos.

COMMUNIQUE DE PRESSE

7 septembre 2015

Déclaration des Obédiences européennes

Les Obédiences maçonniques européennes alarmées par la tragédie vécue par les migrants qui fuient des pays en guerre et en proie à la misère en appellent aux gouvernements européens pour qu'ils mettent en œuvre les politiques communes indispensables à un accueil digne et humain de populations en détresse et en péril. L'incapacité des Etats à surmonter les égoïsmes nationaux est un nouveau signal d'une Europe malade où le chacun pour soi l'emporte sur l'intérêt général.

Les Obédiences maçonniques européennes rappellent que le respect des droits de l'homme et du principe de dignité humaine font partie des principes fondateurs de la construction européenne. C'est sur la base de tels principes que la solidarité entre les nations s'est mise en place. L'esprit de solidarité est encore plus nécessaire au vu des bouleversements qui affectent de nombreuses régions du monde.

Sans revenir sur l'histoire d'un continent qui s'est forgé au gré de nombreuses migrations, les drames présents doivent provoquer une prise de conscience et insuffler des politiques d'accueil innovantes. A défaut, le continent européen sera à terme le théâtre de divisions et de conflits qui précipiteront les peuples dans un nouveau malheur. Il n'en résultera qu'une nouvelle exacerbation des nationalismes.

La tragédie présente doit donc être le creuset d'une renaissance et d'un renouveau du rêve européen. Les Obédiences maçonniques signataires attendent désormais des actes dans lesquels les valeurs de solidarité et de fraternité fondatrices de l'Europe trouvent leur juste expression.

FIG 28 – A press release in support of the refugees made by the main Obediencies of Continental Freemasonry (dated 7th of September 2016)

The Holy See delegation to the United Nations has issued a Position Statement on the Outcome document of the United Nations Summit for the adoption of the post-2015 development agenda, “Transforming Our World: The 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development.” The Statement states the agenda is a “clear sign” that the international community has come together to eradicate poverty, and will work to ensure that all people will have the conditions necessary to live in freedom and dignity. Really? On the morning of the 25th of September 2015 at 8:30 am ET, Fox News blatantly admitted that “Pope Francis would be giving his marching orders to the UN,” We must oppose this whole charade before we all lose our rights and our freedom. Stand up before it’s too late, now is the time and let me remind my readers of the words written by the late reverend Richard Wurmbrand:

Today much of the world is still Marxist. Marxism in one form or another is embraced by many in capitalist countries, too. There are even Christians, and amazingly, clergymen, some in high standing, who are sure that while Jesus might have had the right answers about how to get to heaven, Marx had the right answers about how to help the hungry, destitute, and oppressed here on earth. Marx, it is said, was deeply humane. He was dominated by one idea: how to help the exploited masses. What impoverishes them, he maintained, is capitalism. Once this rotten system is overthrown after a transitional period of dictatorship of the proletariat, a society will emerge in which everyone will work according to his abilities in factories and farms belonging to the collective, and will be rewarded according to his needs. There will be no state to rule over the individual, no wars, no revolution, only an everlasting, universal brotherhood. In order for the masses to achieve happiness, more is needed than the overthrow of capitalism. Marx writes:

The abolition of religion as the illusory happiness of man is a requisite for their real happiness. The call to abandon their illusions about their conditions is a call to abandon a condition which requires illusions. The criticism of religion is, therefore, the criticism of this vale of tears of which religion is the halo.

Allegedly, Marx was antireligious because religion obstructs the fulfillment of the Communist ideal, which he considered the only answer to the world's problems. This is how Marxists explain their position, and sadly there are clergymen who explain it in the same way. [\[67\]](#)

Well, I wonder what Wurmbrand’s opinion of a Marxist Jesuit Pope, like Bergoglio, would have been, and even Ed Stourton from the BBC News magazine questioned a couple of years ago if the Pope was indeed a Communist, writing that: Pope Francis's critique of free-market economics has made him an icon for the Left and prompted claims that he is a Communist. The leader of the world's 1.2 billion Catholics has called capitalism a source of inequality at best - and at worst a killer. Is the Pope, as his critics claim, a red radical?

In the meantime, the scale of sex abuse at the hands of UN workers is growing day by day just like in the Vatican, and the shocking fact is that pedophiles target aid organizations, just like the Catholic priests target poor children. The scale of sex abuse at the hands of UN workers is huge, so why should they decide anything about our future?

The UN's Emergency Coordination Center said in an interview with the British tabloid The Sun in February 2018, that an estimated 60,000 cases of sexual exploitation were committed over the last decade by 3,300 pedophiles working in the organization. Both the UN's are corrupt institutions of the Pedo-Elite controlling the New World Order that should be shut down and prosecuted for their crimes.

Pedophilia and the Satanic left-wing connection

In 2017, the exposure of serial sexual predator and Hollywood Democrat kingpin Harvey Weinstein raises even more questions on the true nature of the link between pedophilia and the left wing. In the past, Bill Clinton offered a get-out-of-jail-free card to a whole army of criminals, from Weinstein to Jeffrey Epstein. In the US, the close relationship between the pedophile billionaire Jeffrey Epstein, and Jesuit-trained Bill Clinton, who once praised his “insights and generosity”, were detailed not so long ago, in a revealing book by James Patterson.

In Italy, the Jesuit agent and leader of the ruling Democratic Party, Matteo Renzi, is linked to one of the countries most dangerous pedophiles, his old friend, Rodolfo Fiesoli, an influential and dark figure in the international pedophile network connected to the US Democrats and the Vatican. On November 12, 2011, a few weeks before Rodolfo Fiesoli was arrested once again for the crime of pedophilia, (his first arrest was back in 1985), he spoke at the famous Salone dei Cinquecento in Palazzo Vecchio in Florence, in the presence of none other than Mr. Renzi, during a conference for TedX, a liberal-minded foundation that is mainly inspired by the ideals of Al Gore. TEDx was created in the spirit of TED's mission, "ideas worth spreading." It currently supports independent organizers who are usually linked to left-wing ideology and want to create a TED-like event in their own community.

So Rodolfo Fiesoli condemned in 1985, 2000 and 2015 for pedophilia, participated as a supposed "educator", despite being condemned several times since the mid 80's, for the crime of sexual abuse to minors, at his community, called Forteto di Vicchio near Florence. This institution established back in 1977, was born to support his bizarre theories on family, and the recovery of minors in distress, something the Jesuits seem to appreciate very much and support. In the audience was the then Mayor of Florence Matteo Renzi, who was smiling during Fiesoli's speech, nodding his head several times and clapping to show his approval. After the arrest of Fiesoli, references to this pedophile monster connected to Renzi, and the US Democratic Party, disappear from the online site of the initiative, and from YouTube, but fortunately, we still have surviving footage of the event. In 2015, Fiesoli is finally condemned to 17 years after his latest pedophilia trial, but of course with his friend Matteo Renzi in power, back then as prime minister of Italy, he has not spent one day in prison. This whole story demonstrates once again not only the open support of the pedophile network made by the liberal establishment in Italy, as in the US, but also shows their dangerous untouchability. How is this possible? Linda Blood a former cult member, that belonged in the past to U.S. Army Lt. Col. Michael Aquino's Temple of Set, writes something that partly answers my question:

Many investigators now charge that this sexual abuse and exploitation of children is being perpetrated by underground cults of sadistic pedophiles and producers of child pornography linked by a belief system that incorporates a form of Satanism. They suspect that the ritualized abuse is often employed as a conditioning tool. Most of these cults are said to be intergenerational, and all are extremely secretive. According to law enforcement officials, in addition to child and adult prostitution and pornography, they are involved in drug and arms trafficking and serious forms of white collar crime such as computer scams and insurance fraud. One of the main purposes of this vicious form of child abuse appears to be the traumatizing and subsequent control of the minds of the children, cowering them into submission and, ultimately, producing a new generation of abusers and victims. People alleged to be adult survivors of such abuse during childhood have come forward by the hundreds to tell their stories. These disclosures have ignited a controversy over the validity of such memories that has polarized broad segments of the psychiatric, academic, and law enforcement communities. It is true that many of these cases involve seemingly fantastic elements, such as allegations of ritual murders that have gone undetected and unsolved. However, the bulk of the accusations deal with torture, mutilation, child sexual abuse, sadomasochism, animal sacrifice, and cannibalism— ugly, sadistic, and grotesque crimes of sex and violence that, while indeed deserving of the adjective weird, have been committed many times over the course of human history. Some of these crimes are known to be an integral part of the worldwide subcultures of sexual sadomasochism and exploitation, including the multibillion-dollar international child prostitution and pornography industry.

However, we also find in her shocking book, entitled The New Satanist from 1994, a very interesting connection between the infamous Michael Aquino, whose speciality was psychological warfare, and was responsible for the acceptance of Satanism in the US Military, as a valid religious option, and the usual Jesuits and the Catholic Church, who are always interested in children:

The temple membership turned out to consist of an odd combination of the respectable and the marginal of society. There were teachers, law enforcement and military officers, nurses, bank tellers, and secretaries, alongside former prostitutes of both sexes and the odd ex-biker or two. There were two former Jesuits. One member turned out to be the principal of a Catholic school! She and her husband, a priest of the cult, had adopted several children.

Interesting revelation to say the least, because it confirms once again the links between the Jesuits and Left-Wing liberal Satanists like Aquino, who was suspected of operating child pedo rings in and around military bases. Aquino was never charged, in spite of many accusations. One army base was closed down after it was discovered that 60 children were sexually abused there.

Regarding the Jesuits and their interest in children and Communism, I recently received a very interesting book by Giovanni Augustino “Johnny” Cirucci, suggested by a common friend, Sean Stone; that seems to summarize the matter perfectly:

Spurred by the property-sharing philosophies of Thomas Aquinas, Jesuits created the first communist villages across South America. Known as Reduccions in Spanish or Reduções in Portuguese these “Reductions” served several purposes:

- Maintain a strategic presence for Spain or Portugal without the overt appearance of armed soldiers.
- “Convert” natives to become Catholic citizens of their imperial conquerors.
- Enrich the elites of Spain, Portugal, and Rome with slave labor that cost little to maintain...unless you were a slave.

Containing undesirables from Indian reservations to Nazi concentration camps to Soviet gulags to Franklin Roosevelt’s Japanese/American internment, all have the common ancestor of Jesuit “reductions” in South America. ...Before the days of Avtomat Kalashnikov rifles and Schmeisser submachine guns, large groups of prisoners were hard to handle with just a few Jesuit priests. The Company needed to use brains over brawn. Later, they would be able to appropriate the “brawn” of whole nations. The appeal of wealth redistribution is that recipients can live a somewhat easier life, though it is a utopia that has always disappointed. In South America, “social justice” would become the cry for taking from “the rich” and giving to “the poor”. What usually happens, however, is that the super-rich exploits the poor to bleed the few real producers in the Middle Class. If this seems like the perfect weapon to be used in the Counter-Reformation, it’s not by coincidence. The phrase “social justice” was coined by the Jesuit theologian and mentor to Pope Leo XIII, Father Luigi Taparelli D’Azeglio. ... The utility of Communism was immediately seized upon by the Vatican. ...

The Jesuits took their experiences with the South American reducciones and fed them to a German Jewish aristocrat who had never held a “proletariat” working-class job in his life — Karl Heinrich Marx.

1618: Home Children Scandal — “vagrant” children rounded up in England and sent to Canada, America, Australia as slave labor against their will. The process was used by the Catholic Church, first behind “secular” and “Protestant” fronts, then directly, for predation. Because the governments of several nations were involved in the child slave trade (and still are), “official histories” are whitewashes, at best. Yet, even the Australian government must admit that “child migration” has been “chequered”, to put it lightly. Child migration had a long and chequered history surrounded by controversy and marred by scandal. It was, actually, never a single policy pursued continuously: rather it was a complex tangle of competing private schemes, government initiatives, charismatic personalities, muddled priorities and confused agendas. It was critically affected by the economic, political and social pressures of particular times.” [\[68\]](#)

Modern Satanism, Communism and confidentiality

For decades mainstream media outlets have been hesitant to report crimes which involve Satanism. When such incidents do receive coverage, the belief system of the perpetrators are hardly touched upon and tend to never be followed up with further investigation. In any discussion of contemporary Satanism, the figure of Aleister Crowley (1875- 1947) is like a mafia Godfather over a shadowy underworld, wrote the late William H. Kennedy, who also added that Crowley (rhymes with “holy”) is the single most influential character in the formation of modern Satanism and Witchcraft (Wicca). During his own quest for spiritual enlightenment, Crowley was also pushing the demonic agenda like no one else before him.

As I wrote elsewhere in this book, this perverse and evil figure is central, to understand and learn more of the present decline of the Western Initiatic System, and the growing threat of Satanism and black magic in our daily lives. Crowley used drugs with meditative practices, and made obscure sex rituals popular, to form his own system of sex-magick, that would define the New Age and its many cults operating today in the secretive world of the Illuminati. At times, Crowley identified himself as Satan (and at other times ancient Egyptian deities) and likewise encouraged his disciples to venerate him as Baphomet. Probably Crowley chose the pharaonic gods for rituals merely because a statue of Horus at the Cairo Museum had the catalog number of 666, and he saw this as a sign from Lucifer, and his new religion of Thelema.

“Crowleyanity” is an inversion of “Christianity.” He symbolically inverted the Divine order by replacing Christ with himself and had his even more deranged followers venerate him as the Messiah. Something the dark side of the Illuminati network still does to this day. In his bid for spiritual power, Crowley directly petitioned the Fallen Angel by praying and killing small birds before a human skeleton mounted on a makeshift altar in his home. Crowley also claimed to have summoned Beelzebub and a host of 49 demons, and, on another occasion, he claimed to have conjured up 316 Devils in an arcane ceremony. Whatever one makes of these assertions, it certainly demonstrates Crowley’s allegiance to the Prince of this World and not Christianity. Crowley later believed he was also “The Great Beast 666” .

In his most famous channeled work, The Book of the Law, written at a time when Crowley was openly referring to himself as, The Great Beast 666, he wrote many other bestialities, “With my hawk’s head I peck at the eyes of Jesus.” It is this book, that has become a sort of Satanic Old Testament, if we view Lavey’s Satanic Bible as the New Testament of Satanism, Crowley penned his new credo “Do what thou wilt shall be the whole of the Law.”

The book in question called for a New Age of global conflict, constant bloodshed, and the eventual destruction of Christianity in an apocalyptic battle. In his obsession that is also the obsession of the Occult elite, to overturn Christendom, Crowley was even willing to adopt atheism and Communism. Let’s remember that the word occult comes from the Latin word occultus meaning hidden, and there are way too many hidden links between Communism and Satanism working hand in hand to destroy the Western Initiatic world. Just after World War I, Crowley, who went to Russia only a few years earlier, wrote to the newly installed Communist government in Moscow, and offered his services as propaganda minister for atheism, with the express intent of deriding Christianity. Can you believe it? Crowley, who performed at the Russian Court with his troop of seven (ragged) Rag-Time girls, only 4 years earlier, now wanted to be the minister of atheism in Lenin's Russia. The fact that the Russian Reds had officially no metaphysical beliefs, was of little concern to The Beast 666, who obviously knew about the secret occult links of the Russian Communist, as Crowley definitely believed there were secret powers behind the Communist Party. It was the Communist Central Committee's Satanic vow to destroy Christianity that really grabbed Crowley's attention. ^[69]

However, The Beast was only concerned with the obliteration of the Christian Faith and would use anyone or any system at his disposal to promote this agenda, that confirm once more his totally Satanic nature. But the Communists must have believed that "The Beast 666" would better serve their revolution if he remained in the West, as he never received a reply, but today the US Ordo Templi Orientis (Caliphate), is very active in Moscow and the rest of the Russian Federation. The Russian O.T.O. even published a limited edition of The Book of the Law translated for the first time in the Russian language.

From my personal experience, many of the Russian members of the O.T.O. are also Intelligence assets, often operating as dangerous double agents, officially working for the FSB, but in reality, serving George Soros in trying to destabilize countries like Ukraine. Basically, traitors of their own nation, that constantly work to sabotage, and oppose Vladimir Putin and the Russian Orthodox Church, with little or no success, on behalf of the New World Order. However, until now, their confidentiality standards have protected them from being persecuted in the Russian Federation, as well as in other countries like France, where they are blacklisted by local authorities.

Chapter Seven

Atheism and Materialism

The Illuminati root of evil

There is a book mentioned in some original writings of the Order of the Illuminati in 1787, on p. 118, as a treatise on atheism and materialism. It is entitled, Better than Horus, or the seven hows and whys. The author is believed to be Christian Ernst Wünsch, a professor of physics and mathematics in Frankfurt, though John Robison falsely gives credit to Bahrdt. Wünsch, who wrote a piece in 1783 entitled, Horus or the Astro-Gnostic final judgment on the Revelation of John, under the name of Ebenezer. He published nothing in 1784, giving him the opportunity to write this piece, and in 1785 anonymously co-authored a book entitled Horus remarks about the prophet Jesus and his disciples with Aloys Sandbichler, and anonymously published still another piece on Horus called, The mysteries of Ceres of Eleusis: Defense against the sarcasm of the author of Horus, and the final purpose of their foundation compared with the final purpose of the Foundation of Freemason Societies. In 1789, he again anonymously published a work called Rabinicalism or a collection of Talmudic follies, in a series of letters from the author of Horus. Titles of other self-proclaimed works include Cosmological entertainment for young friends of nature in 1791, Lucifer or addendum to the existing studies of the atmosphere in 1802, and Esoterica or serious views of the relations of man to God in 1817.

In Wünsch's old age he confessed to writing the pieces on and by Horus, though not any piece specifically. He attributed the work to youthful idealism. It is particularly important to note that in addition to his academic and Masonic pedigree, Wünsch's works are mentioned by Richard Dülmen and René Le Forestier, as being suggested readings for the Illuminati due to their libertine nature.

Professor Christian Ernst Wünsch, who is said to be a member of Weishaupt's Illuminati Order wrote: "Horus of the Egyptians was the messiah of the Jews, as we have often shown. Horus was the bread and wine. The Messiah was thus also, in the opinion of some in the Jewish sect, to present. He put forth namely life's bread and life's wine, that is, he was the soul's food and the soul's drink, heavenly food and heavenly drink. Jesus had to do all of this. He had further said, that he was going to come in a different relation to situations with his disciples, that he would now like to succeed in his designs on the temple. For this reason, he metaphorically gave them bread and wine, instead of eating his body and blood, as a memorial to his custom until this time, and to drink a toast with them, and since then the communion has been used."

Aleister Crowley taught that in 1904, the world entered the Aeon of Horus, also called the Aeon of the Child or the New Aeon. Most Thelemites, and even Crowley himself at times view the current two-thousand year period as a time of liberation, freedom, and self-actualization—almost synonymous with the Age of Aquarius. But some of Crowley's writings indicate a less favorable opinion of the Aeon of Horus. In the introduction to The Book of the Law, Crowley describes the New Aeon as a time of infantile people and infantile ideas. "We are all children," he declares.

The third chapter of Liber AL vel Legis describes the characteristics of the Aeon of Horus. "Superficially," Crowley says, "they appear appalling." Usually, people are appalled at the violence and lack of compassion described in Chapter III. But in this essay, Crowley speaks of the utter childishness and depravity of the New Aeon. One could call it almost a Dark Age. The primary characteristic of the Aeon of Horus is "the recognition of the individual as the unit of society."

This has already occurred in Europe, America, Canada, and Australia, where nearly all Westerners think of themselves as individuals first, and have no strong allegiance to nation, tribe, ethnicity, family, or other community. As immigration continues, non-Westerners are starting to think of themselves as individuals rather than members of tribes.

And as initiatives topple, traditional societies around the world continue, replacing them with democracy and capitalism. More and more people around the world are shedding their tribal and familial loyalties, instead of recognizing the individual as the unit of society. Everywhere today we see the reign of Horus taking root. Some examples Crowley gives in his essay, call out the childish aspect of the New Aeon:

the growth of innocence and irresponsibility the “childlike confidence in progress”

“infantile cults” like Communism, Fascism, Pacifism, Health Crazes, and Occultism religions “sentimentalized to the point of practical extinction” the popularity of methods for “soothing fractious infants,” such as the cinema, football pools, and guessing competitions sport and “the babyish enthusiasms and rages which it excites, whole nations disturbed by disputes between boys” we are all treated as imbecile children—there is censorship and “they won’t trust us to cross the roads at will”

The Aeon of the Child is not an end, however. As Crowley says, “the Child will grow up.”

In the section “The Next Step,” Crowley describes the dangers of Fascism, Communism, and Democracy—all which suppress the individual. The one who lives by the rule of Thelema and doesn’t follow the herd will have difficulties, but will not fail: Evolution makes its changes by anti-Socialistic ways. The “abnormal” man who foresees the trend of the times and adapts circumstance intelligently, is laughed at, persecuted, often destroyed by the herd; but he and his heirs, when the crisis comes, are survivors. ^[70]

Jeremy James writes: “The prophetic End-Time scenario set out in the Book of Revelation is unavoidable (and it is), then we should expect to see certain unmistakable signs that the world is advancing in that direction. Indeed, we should be able to infer specific elements of Satan’s Plan, as they relate to the End-Time, from the events described in the Book of Revelation. It is a sad fact that very few Christians today are taking seriously the profile of Satan that is presented for our benefit in the Word of God. If they did they would realize that Satan must have a plan – a very detailed and highly sophisticated plan – if he is to have any chance of achieving his vaunting ambitions. He wants to control the world openly, not just covertly, as he does at present, and to be worshipped in place of God by all humanity (See Isaiah 14:12-14). To do this he must undermine and destroy true Biblical Christianity. He must also destroy the Jewish people in their entirety. This is because Jesus stated that he will return only when the Jews, as a nation, call upon him in a spirit of true supplication and repentance – “For I say unto you, Ye shall not see me henceforth, till ye shall say, Blessed, is he that cometh in the name of the Lord.” (Matthew 23:39).”

We know from the Book of Revelation, that Satan’s Plan must address the three main areas of human endeavor – religious, economic, and political. I will focus mainly on the religious aspect since it is the one that is least understood. A strategy aimed at world domination very clearly requires an integrated system of global government and a centrally controlled economic regime. However, the essential features of an all-inclusive system of religion- a one world religion, not to mention the steps that are needed to bring it about, are not harder to envision, if you follow the decline of the Western Initiatic System and the rise of Satanism, thanks to the atheism envisioned by Freemasons with a distorted vision of the Craft and religion, like Professor Christian Ernst Wünsch who wrote:

Why did religion since Adam, the mosaic of Solomon, the Christian and Patristic, alone in the smallest part of the people, change so often, being remolded and reformed? If God is unchangeable, why should they be changeable, if they came from him? Why again do not the Testaments, the church fathers, and the Bible editions speak alone, and almost all are commentators of the other? What is eternal, true, unchanging, holy, and generally should not be changed continuously?

A critical view of the Bible and Christianity is evident in his writing:

If the unmarried state is the most perfect, as the Christian religion teaches, then obviously this religion also aims to reduce the human race. If the recommendation of the clergy would take effect, the human race within sixty or seventy years would die out. Can this be God's regulation?

How can one believe, that God determined us to do what is against nature? To be a perfect Christian, one must take his reason captive, blindly believe the entire people's poem, renounce pleasure, fast, be abstinent, be unmarried, and renounce one's parents and fortune, to act in a word, contrary to nature. What worse could probably be demanded by the fiercest tyrant, and whose contradictions can be found everywhere?

"The fate of mankind, as well as of religion, depends upon the emergence of a new faith in the future," wrote Father Pierre Teilhard de Chardin SJ, New Age theologian and Jesuit priest, quoted in Al Gore's Earth in the Balance – Ecology and the Human Spirit from 1992. That's why people like —David Spangler, Director of UN Planetary Initiative, and one of the founding fathers of the New Age movement, made this shocking statement once: Fundamental Bible-believing people do not have the right to indoctrinate their children in their religious beliefs because we, the state, are preparing them for the year 2000, when America will be part of a one-world global society and their children will not fit in.

That is also why they hate Trump and all Christians because you can't have a New World Order and a One-World Government without an NWO One-World Religion to help keep the diverse peoples of the earth under control. And the architects of the New World Order, and their Jesuit supervisors have been simultaneously working on both, for a long time. The One-World Government and the One-World Religion is a reality, and no longer a conspiracy theory, and a true threat to our religious identity. The One-World Religion alluded to in Revelation, is coming down the backstretch, also thanks to the New Age phenomena, and its arrival is faster than anyone could have guessed just a few years ago, especially with a Jesuit Pope promoting it.

Don't be fooled by the oftentimes harmless-looking exteriors of the New Age phenomena, and never dabble or explore these Satanic webs of enslavement. Hold fast to the safety and victory of the Christian faith!

Bible prophecy warns: "For false Christs and false prophets will arise and will show great signs and wonders, so as to mislead, if possible, even the elect. Behold, I have told you in advance" (Matt. 24:24, 25). Due to its deep and inextricable involvements in Scripturally forbidden practices —like divination, witchcraft, sorcery, mediumship, spiritism, and numerous others —the New Age opens the gates for the adversary and his demonic legions to unleash an end-times Pandora's box of unrighteousness. In effect, the movement acts as a rapidly enlarging breeding ground for the seeding, propagation, and unleashing of a plague of the spirit. The massive releasing of ghouls and demons in the movies, Ghostbusters, and Poltergeist, the New Age acts in a very similar way in opening the gateways for Satan's demons. Dave Hunt, in his excellent book, America: The Sorcerer's Apprentice, comments on this theme: "Today's world confronts a strange and growing paradox that could very well mark a pivotal point in human history. Even as the scientific and technological advancement which ushered in the space age is accelerating at an exponential rate, we are witnessing far and away the greatest occult explosion of all time." One thing is certain: "the winds spreading the seeds of sorcery have reached gale proportions." The words of a leading New Age spokesman, Marilyn Ferguson, author of the landmark New Age manifesto, The Aquarian Conspiracy: Personal and Social Transformation in the 1980's, speak to the magnitude of the forces in motion: "Broader than reform, deeper than revolution, this benign conspiracy for a new human agenda has triggered the most rapid cultural realignment in history. This great shuddering, irrevocable shift overtaking us is not a new political, religious, philosophical system. It is a new mind —the ascendance of a startling worldview." Further elaborating on the magnitude of this "benign conspiracy," Ferguson's book states: "This network —the Aquarian Conspiracy —has already enlisted the minds, hearts, and resources of some of our most advanced thinkers, including Nobel laureate scientists, philosophers, statesmen, celebrities, and steadily growing numbers from every corner of American society."... [the] network is working to create a different kind of society based on a vastly enlarged concept of human potential [and] ... shows us how the technologies for expanding and transforming personal consciousness, once the secret of an elite, are now generating massive change in every cultural institution — medicine, politics, business, education, religions, and the family.

"Will our present turmoil lead to a worldwide breakdown of society — or to a breakthrough to the next step of human evolution? The answer may depend in large measure on the influence of the Aquarian Conspiracy." The roots of the Movement go deep, much deeper than they would appear at first glance. In a tempestuous world and a society filled with millions of restless people thirsting for answers and spiritual fulfillment, it offers a huge array of tempting alternatives to the Christian faith — "the faith once for all delivered to the saints." The New Age offers multitudes of age-old, occult-based temptations re-packaged in the glossy modernized guise of a new, improved New Age. The influences of this phenomenon are much more pervasive in our society than it might appear on the surface. [\[71\]](#)

Early in the 1980's the New Age Movement emerged from its secluded circles and began to vigorously propagate its ideology around the world. It is closely associated with the concept of a New World Order and forms part of it. The movement and its doctrine are by now well-known, and the media often refers to it. Newspaper and magazine headings such as the following no longer sound strange to the person in the street:

- Welcome to the Global Village
- The World Teacher is nowhere
- The Age of Aquarius has dawned
- Anything is permissible if everything is God
- Tutu decries break up of New Age prayer meetings
- Soul of a New Age

The movement endeavors to raise the consciousness level of humanity, to unlock mystical powers in people, to unite the world religiously, politically, economically, and socially, and to pave the way for the appearance of a single world leader. He will be the common messiah of all faiths. Not only in the field of religion, but in all other areas, he will establish the concept of planetary citizenship. In the process, all boundaries and divisions will be removed for the sake of greater unity. [\[72\]](#)
This will be the One World Religion of the Antichrist.

Christian Ethics Impeached, Jesus accused of being the True Prince of Evil !?!

You can be a believer or a non-believer, but the Gospels are very clear in the fact that we are to understand the tactics of the devil, and not stick our heads in the sand and act as if he doesn't matter like the majority of the population does on a daily basis. That is why many people, prefer to ignore this reality, this "Tribulation", in favor of a life of lies and compromises. The Bible asks us to be aware of Satan's activities for our own protection: Be alert and of sober mind. Your enemy the devil prowls around like a roaring lion looking for someone to devour. (1 Peter 5:8 New International Version). This is very important. The enemy is constantly on the move. He is roaming the earth looking for victims using his own Satanic Network of lies and deceit to push his evil plan for the global enslavement of humanity. In the book of Job, Satan stands before God, and when God asks him where he came from, Satan replies... From roaming throughout the earth, going back and forth on it. (Job 1:7 NIV).

It seems that Satan is restless and cannot stand still. He knows that he only has a limited time before his destruction, and must work as quickly as possible before the new millennium will finally see the arrival of the Kingdom of God on Earth. Imagine the anxiety he must face knowing he and his so-called “Legion”, are about to be defeated. He is consumed by hatred, he wants to harm as many as possible, but he knows that his time is short and is doomed to destruction. So, he must work frantically to accomplish evil, yet he is limited in his abilities. He is a restless, angry, anxiety-ridden just as his well-known servant Hillary Clinton. So let’s try to have an insight into his nature, his character, and his abilities, to better understand and be able to fight our enemy whether or not you believe in the actual figure of Satan, as most Satanist these days don’t even believe in him.

Lucien Greaves of The Satanic Temple is one of Satan’s most loyal servants, and he says he does not believe in a supernatural Satan. Mr. Greaves is clear that the Satanic Temple does not worship Satan at all: “Definitely not,” he told the Associated Press. Having said this, Greaves’ new version of Satanism seems even more demented, and full of contradiction, than his Satanic predecessor, Anton La Vey, ever was. Because, believe it or not, Greaves is the public face of Satanism in the United States today. Shane Bugbee posted an interview on Vice.com with Satanic Temple co-founder Lucien Greaves entitled “Unmasking Lucien Greaves, Leader of the Satanic Temple,” published on July 30th, 2013 AD. Bugbee is an old friend and collaborator of Greaves:

*He was a young man, too smart for his own good. He wanted a copy of a book I had republished called Might Is Right. It was a 100-year-old tome, long forgotten by most, with the exception of Anton LaVey, who'd found it in a bookstore as a young man and used it as the basis for The Satanic Bible. I asked Anton to write an introduction, and he jumped at the opportunity to introduce the book to the world again. By way of thanks, Anton invited me to his home and made me a high priest in the Church of Satan. He also allowed my wife and I to conduct the final interview with him just months before his death in 1996. The release of this new version* of Might Is Right became a phenomenon within the underground, and that is what brought the future leader of the Satanic Temple to my door. Only his name wasn't Lucien Greaves at the time, it was Doug Mesner. (This isn't the first time Doug has been connected with the Temple, though it is the first time he has publicly admitted his involvement.) When he first came to my home, Doug brought a stack of his drawings and writings with him. It was amazing stuff, and much to my surprise he left it with me. Not long after our first meeting, and after reviewing his sketchbooks at length, I reprinted a limited edition version of Might Is Right and asked Doug to illustrate the chapter headings for it. His work on the book was truly excellent. [\[73\]](#)

So Bugbee and Mesner/Greaves met because the latter, “wanted a copy of a book I had republished called Might Is Right”, a book by Ragnar Redbeard pseudonym used by Arthur Desmond (1859 – 1929), a British-born politician, proto-fascist, poet and author, who used a fairly common Norwegian name for his pseudonym; which means powerful, influential or judgmental, so it fits with the tone of the text. Christian Apologetics Project, a ministry dedicated to the defense of the biblical Christian worldview, recently wrote a brilliant analysis of the book in question, and its true influence on the Satanic Temple:

*Ever since Oklahoma City, where a monument was dedicated to the Ten Commandments and then challenged by the Satanic Temple and its donation to erect a monument dedicated to the devil, the Satanic Temple group has continued to seek opportunities where its message would be heard. Most recently, that opportunity has now extended to the elementary classroom, where the group, under the guidance of Lucien Greaves, seeks to infuse American youth with more of its “philosophy,” which is not so much inspired by the devil, per sé, as it is by a text unread by most, that vilifies and mocks Judeo-Christianity. In fact, according to Greaves himself, “I have helped develop us into something we all do truly believe in and wholeheartedly embrace: an atheistic philosophical framework that views ‘Satan’ as a metaphorical construct by which we contextualize our works.” In other words, The Satanic Temple is not about Satanism at all. It is about the promotion of atheism, as Greaves redefines the words Satan and Satanism in ways to mock the biblical description of Satan. Greaves and The Satanic Temple admit that they get their inspiration from a book entitled Might is Right, which interestingly cites a pseudonym as well for its author: Ragnar Redbeard. The book was first published in 1896 and attempts to one-up Niccolò Machiavelli’s The Prince by not only* condemning Jews, Christians, and Jesus Christ, but by arguing that in order to get anywhere in life, all claims to authority and rule are to be rejected and only those who exercise brute force to exterminate their enemies will find peace, contentment, and success. ^[74]

However, Mesner/Greaves explained in 2015 to Breitbart:

“Might Is Right is a racist book and an anti-Semitic book. LaVey renounced the racialism and anti-Semitism, but he felt that people should be stratified, that we should work toward a meritocracy where the more intelligent, talented and productive people are best able to rise above. On that pretext, he really renounced the idea of equality. People are born with distinct talents.” Greaves continues to say to Breitbart that earlier in his life, that type of mindset made sense to him, and he gravitated toward LaVeyan Satanism because it seemed to be the brutal reality of the world. As he got older, however, his mindset began to change. Or, as he put it: “I grew up.” “I thought about the nature of altruism and the fact that there are many things I’m willing to stand up for even at a great expense to myself, and even if there is no direct benefit to me,” Greaves said that it was this type of thinking that really informed what he called the Satanic Reformation that leads to the creation of the Satanic Temple. ^[75]

From his words, you can feel Mesner/Greaves is distancing himself publicly from Might is Right, but it simply seems like a good PR stunt, made to become a lot more acceptable to his demented pseudo-Satanic followers worldwide. A sort of commercialization of Satanism, pushed to the next level of Pop Culture, made simpler for the brainwashed masses of today. The late Sidney Parker, also known as S. E. Parker, (1929, 2012), a well-known British egoist individualist anarchist, who served the Satanic elite all his life, had this to say about Might is Right:

Might Is Right is a work flawed by major contradictions. Like the Christian bible it can be used as a source for the most incompatible views, but unlike that venerable collection of idiocies and myths it is sustained by a crude vigor that at its most coherent can help to clear away not a few of the religious, moral and political superstitions bequeathed to us by our ancestors. Whoever Ragnar Redbeard was, and whatever criticisms may be justly leveled at his book, he remains worthy of the attention of all who are conscious that their "rights" are equal to their power. ^[76]

I hope the words of S. E. Parker, help clarify the hate Satanists have for the Christian Bible, and the importance of this dangerous and blasphemous book described by The Chicago Tribune in the following manner:

It will hypnotize your very soul, and send you forth into this world of pitiless and ferocious combat, a Conqueror of Men. Surely you can afford a volume, the like of which has not been printed or written (or carved in granite) since the days of Jupiter and Thor--of Odin and Mars--the gods of eternal struggle, who are not dead, but only sleeping.

Wow that's creepy, just as the title of chapter two of Ragnar Redbeard's Satanic classic: Iconoclastic: Christian Ethics Impeached, Jesus the True Prince of Evil (The Mephistophiles of the World, King Among the Slaves). And what is written in it should also give you a sense of the perverted and twisted views of contemporary Satanism born out of it. This is a small extract that is quite shocking to Christians and non-Christians alike:

In this arid wilderness of steel and stone, I raise up my voice that you may hear! To the East and to the West I beckon. To the North and to the South I show a sign proclaiming, "Death to the weakling, wealth to the strong." Open your eyes that you may see, Oh men of mildewed minds and listen to me ye laborious millions! For I stand forth to challenge the wisdom of the world; to interrogate the "laws" of man and of "God." I request reasons for your Golden Rule and ask the why and wherefore of your Ten Commands. Before none of your printed idols do I bend in acquiescence and he who saith "thou shalt" to me is my mortal foe! I demand proof over all things, and accept with reservations even that which is true. I dip my forefinger in the watery blood of your impotent mad-redeemer and write over his thorn-torn brow "The true Prince of Evil - the king of the Slaves!"

No hoary falsehood shall be a truth to me - no cult or dogma shall encamp my pen. I break away from all conventions. Alone, untrammelled, I raise up in stern invasion the standard of the strong. I gaze into the glassy eye of your fearsome Jehovah and pluck him by the beard - I uplift a broad ax and split open his worm-eaten skull. I blast out the ghastly contents of philosophically whited sepulchres and laugh with sardonic wrath. Then, reaching up from the festering and varnished facades of your haughtiest moral dogmas, I write thereon in letters of blazing scorn; "Lo and behold, all this is fraud!"

I deny all things! I question all things! And yet! And yet! Gather around me O' ye death-defiant and the earth itself shall be thine, to have and to hold.

Most writers focus on the large portions of Might Is Right used by Anton LaVey in The Satanic Bible, the founding document of the Church of Satan, but if we are even more specific about the style of writing used by Arthur Desmond for his controversial book, we can notice immediately the same style used years later in Liber AL vel Legis, also known as The Book of the Law, the central sacred text of Thelema, written by the infamous Aleister Crowley known to his followers as The Beast 666.

Islamic Roots of Thelema

It shouldn't come as a surprise that "The Beast 666" Aleister Crowley, one of the main figures responsible for the recent decline of the Western Initiatic System, had an admiration for Islam. In Magick Without Tears, he wrote:

The most important of all of the efforts of the White School, from an esoteric point of view, is Islam. In its doctrine there is some slight taint, but much less than in Christianity. It is a virile religion. It looks facts in the face, and admits their horror; but it proposes to overcome them by sheer dint of manhood. Unfortunately, the metaphysical conceptions of its quasi-profane Schools are grossly materialistic. It is only the Pantheism of the Sufis which eliminates the conception of propitiation [characteristic of the Black School]; and, in practice, the Sufis are too closely allied to the Vedantists to retain hold of reality.

Crowley identified Mohammed, the Prophet of Islam, as a Saint of his Church, the E.G.C. (Ecclesia Gnostica Catholica), and as a Magus of his Illuminati inner circle known as the A.'.A.'. and Crowley directly compared his own relationship with the "praeterhuman intelligence" Aiwass, with Mohammed's special relationship to the Archangel Gabriel. During the Cairo working, which resulted in the channeled reception of The Book of the Law, in 1904, Crowley was of course living in a predominantly Muslim city. During his time in Egypt, according to his own account, he had assumed some disguise, probably with the intention of trying to study Islam from within, as he had done with Hinduism. With respect to his social circumstances at the time, he relates, We occasionally hobnobbed with a General Dickson, who had accepted Islam; otherwise, we knew nobody in Cairo except natives, carpet merchants, pimps, jewelers, and such small deer. And yet in his Confessions, he offers these details regarding Cairo in early 1904:

As to my study of Islam, I got a sheikh to teach me Arabic and the practices of ablution, prayer and so on, so that at some future time I might pass for a Muslim among themselves. I learnt a number of chapters of the Koran by heart... My sheikh was profoundly versed in the mysticism and magic of Islam, and discovering that I was an initiate, had no hesitation in providing me with books and manuscripts on the Arabic Cabbala. These formed the basis of my comparative studies.

Crowley claimed that his sheikh also taught him “many of the secrets of the Sidi Aissawa,” a Sufi tariqa or initiatory system. Many of Crowley's examples of yogic techniques of the mantra are in Arabic, and his description of them sometimes relates more strongly to the Sufi practice of dhikr.

And his A.'.A.'. Illuminati program recommends to aspirants the study of “Sufi poetry generally.” In fact, the literary form of The Book of the Law has more in common with the Quran than with the Bible. Both Liber Legis and the Quran are very freely structured examples of what Northrop Frye calls the “oracle,” which he explains as the “typical episodic product” of the mythical mode of literary composition. Both texts allow for the dominance of the divine voice in what is ostensibly a communication through an angelic intermediary to a human prophet. Both texts presume the existence of a narrative and mythic background which they demonstrate more often through implication than exposition. Each of the two texts professes to be an initial eruption of the prophetic tradition in the particular language of its inscription. Crowley's “Annihilation” (itself a translation of fana, a Sufi term for a high mystical attainment) occurred during his work with the Enochian Aethyrs in the desert of Algeria, where he consecrated himself daily with a thousand and one recitals of the sura Al-Ikhlās (“Pure Faith”) from the Quran. Of course, it is well-known that in his later life, Crowley referred to the successor to his organizing authority as the “Caliph,” the Arabic title denoting the successor of Mohammed as the leader of the Muslim community. ^[77]

In 1977, a new American Ordo Templi Orientis was created by members of the United States Intelligence Community nicknamed the “Caliphate”, self-styled to be the worldwide Grand Lodge of the O.T.O, as I already discussed in my past publications. So in Thelema’s syncretic origins, Islam is prominent, but this characteristic is conveniently left aside by most of Crowley’s scholars. However, in some ways, Crowley’s teachings not only represent another step towards Modern Satanism, but also another Islamic heresy. Believe me, this is no coincidence!

No wonder Islamic Turkish designer Dilara Findikoglu’s presented her Spring/Summer 2018 collection at London Fashion Week in September 2017, and it was nothing less than a Satanic Black Mass in plain sight. Indeed, the event took place at the altar of St Andrew Church in London and incorporated heavy occult and Satanic symbolism. In short, the event summed up everything the fashion world is truly about. ^[78] It’s a far cry from her conservative Islamic upbringing, but it also shows you once again the links between Islam and Satanism. Some argue that we cannot discriminate against any group of people based on their religion. I proffer that we not only can, but we should, in the case of Islam and Satanism. Islam is antithetical to the well-being and safety of the United States, and the rest of the West, even in their own words, they are not really here to integrate, but to dominate, always remember that, as they have themselves admitted the corruption of most of their religious leaders in the hands of alien demonic entities they call the Jinn.

When delivering a private address before a gathering of Muslims in London on June 6, 1985, a distinguished Islamic religious figure from Turkey, the late (Sunni Islam) Sufi Sheikh Nazim Effendi of the Naqshbandi tariqa of Dervishes who traced his lineage back to the Prophet Muhammad, when was asked a question about UFOs embarked upon a remarkable discussion and imparted much information of the greatest importance. He talked about the Jinns, the operators of this craft (hence the Jinn Theory of UFOs' that I have exposed in great detail in The Invisible Master: Secret Chiefs, Unknown Superiors and the puppet masters who pull the strings of Occult Power from The Alien World.

Entities who share this planet with mankind although themselves much older than man, hold the human race in total subjection and enslavement, deliberately causing all manner of wars and strife and disasters and disturbances while sleeping mankind remains blissfully unaware of what is happening to it, and what its own true situation is. As other Sufi leaders who are usually persecuted by traditional Muslims, in recent years, he spoke of the Satanic Power of the Age... Also of "the steady infiltration of all human societies, all governments, and all religions by the demonic elements working for the downfall of man..." As Gordon Creighton explains: "The Arabian tradition asserts that, throughout all known history, there have been a few particular human beings who...have "been in league with the Jinns " or "had a compact with the Jinns " - to such a degree that the Jinns have endowed them with what we regard as "preternatural powers" - ie., psychic powers . These humans have consequently, become known as wonder-workers, soothsayers, and magicians (called Muqarribun)." In Islam, the infamous Night Journey of Muhammad took place in a cherub which they refer to as Al-Buraq (Buraq), which translates as 'Lightning.' Bur aq was often portrayed as a great heavenly steed, the horse is a common Biblical symbol of a che rub (the word Buraq being in essence, an Islamicized backward spelling of the word cherub) , with cherubim also being associated with lightning. In addition to transporting the prophet Muhammad during his 7th Century Night Journey, the Buraq was also according to Islamic legend said to have transported the prophet Abraham to Mecca in Saudi Arabia from a location inside Syria. Modern-day Libyan (Buraq Air) and Indonesian airlines (Buraq Indonesia Airlines) were aptly and adeptly named in the flying cherub's honor. When one proceeds to spell the word Buraq backward (a common post-1 A.D Middle Eastern magic practice as it was said at the time the very mere mention of a demon's true name was sufficient in order to summon its presence), or rather, when one reverses its already backwards rendered magical spelling, Buraq then becomes Qarub, a phonetic transcription of the Hebrew word kerubh (to be correctly "called" the demon's true name must be pronounced quite accurately, this ironically enough suggesting a Hebrew influence on Muslim magic practices), in English spelled cherub from the Late Latin cherub , by definition a "winged angel."

The backwards spelling was intended to avoid any accidental calls. Arab magicians, of course, are known as Muqaribun (a derivation of the word Qarub, spelled in the original sequence I might add. If one looks up the meaning of Qarib, the root of the word Muqaribun, one finds it to be "Another name for God" which in this case, is a cherub which many in this UFO flap area as evidenced in The Bible were in the habit of worshipping as gods), the most famous of the Muqaribun being the Sufi whirling dervishes, their traditions predating even Islam itself. Muhammad (or conversely, his followers) had been, in fact, quite deceived by the Jinn! And needless to say, Islam belongs, in fact, to the category of magic-based UFO religions as well. One example of an Arabic magic book is The Picatrix based on planetary talismanic magic, a compilation of various Middle Eastern magic traditions that was used and abused by none other than the famous womanizer and Freemason Giacomo Girolamo Casanova (1725-1798).

The Nature of the Satanic enemy

The enemy is never described in positive terms, after his sin. In heaven, before his sin, his name was Lucifer, which means “light-bringer.” Isaiah 14:12 states... How art thou fallen from heaven, O Lucifer, son of the morning! After the fall, his name is never associated with any good. However, the first name to be covered is Satan. The name Satan means adversary or the one who opposes us. Satan is not on God’s side, and he is not on our side, but he seems to be on the side of Islam and of most organized religions these days. Every religion thinks they are the only ones serving the true God, and they are the only ones going to heaven. The Jews, the Muslims, the Catholics, the Protestants. God does not live in a book my dear friends, He lives in the hearts of those who truly love and worship Him. Religions are used to unfortunately manipulate and control mankind, and to further the political agendas of the New World Order. Satan opposes us at every moment of our lives. He is the enemy of God, he is the enemy of righteousness, and he is our enemy, He is actively working against the establishment of the kingdom of God at all times, and wants a robotic New World Order to enslave us, while he is still free to roam the earth. Because of this, in many countries around the world, Christians are now subject more and more to restrictions on speech and suffer communal violence and hate crimes. This is obviously the work of Satan, especially when the Jesuit Pope does practically nothing to stop it.

For this reason, Islam is the ideal religion of the Satanic-Communist New World Order. When they start accumulating in countries they start terrorizing, with gangs of rapists, violence and civil disruption. It is already happening in Italy, where I live, and in the rest of Europe. Fundamentalist Muslims are demon possessed. They seek to spread fear and violence, they are pawns of the devil, or if you don't believe in that, call them simply mercenaries of the NWO, like Isis or Al-Qaeda, idiots who feed off of the fear and suffering they create for their lust of power. Just as their Prophet, Mohammad, they use "God" as an excuse to prey on innocent people. Mohammad was a robber and a thief amongst other things, and his followers and his descendants are no different. It is not the Most High God they serve, but Satan and his allies in the New World Order. The Islamic world knows it will never be strong enough, by itself, to overthrow the existing world order where Western materialism reigns supreme, thanks to the Illuminati. But it could challenge that status quo with the right alliances. One seemingly unlikely alliance that Islam has forged is its alliance with the left wing. It doesn't matter if they reject virtually everything for which the left claims to stand for: the peaceful resolution of international conflict; respect and tolerance for other cultures and faiths; civil liberties; freedom of expression; freedom of thought; human rights; democracy; women's rights; gay rights; and the separation of church and state, because this new breed of Marxists realized a long time ago that the US and the rest of the Western World would be too difficult to destroy militarily, at least while it enjoyed such a high level of economic prosperity. Therefore, before Communist countries like China or Russia back in their Soviet days, could conceivably launch an attack on America, it would first have to be severely weakened economically. This is where the Unholy Alliance between Communism & Islam became ideal for the Marxist scum bags of the New World Order. Did you ever hear anything about the International Pan Islamic Communist Party of Proletarian Islam? I am not joking!

Daniel Greenfield wrote: "The International Pan Islamic Communist Party of Proletarian Islam combines Islam, Communism, and Pan-Africanism for a combination of horrible things in one.” Its goal is a “Pan Islamic homeland which stretches from West Africa to Indonesia into one Nation State and Proletarian Islamic Socialist Superstate and Caliphate. which will be under the leadership of the Pan Islamic Working Class, with a Proletarian Islamic Socialist Government moving towards World Proletarian Islamic Communism.”^[79]

Daniel Greenfield continues by writing a brilliant article for frontpagemag.com:

“In addition to this modest ambition, the red-and-green blender party also looks forward to a National Liberation of The New Afrikan Black Nation in the Black Belt South and other areas of The Historical New Afrikan Homeland in North America. Apparently, this Historical Liberation will involve the frequent use of Capital Letters and the abuse of the letter K.”

Well, it is a bit like Magick, in the context of Aleister Crowley's Thelema, a term used to show and differentiate the occult from performance magic. Greenfield adds: “The party, whose name is much too long to write out, claims to take equal inspiration from the Koran, Das Kapital, and from Mohammed, Lenin, Mao and Fidel Castro. With a historical background of influences like that, how could they fail to bring peace and happiness to mankind? The synthesis between Islam and Communism is achieved by branding the most popular pedophile in the Middle East, a Socialist.”^[80]

Their website site claims without any sense of shame that: Prophet Muhammad Ibn Abdullah of Arabia was one of The greatest Socialist and Communist revolutionaries of All Time. In the space of 23 years, The Prophet Muhammad was able to establish the Socialist Society in Arabia.

The job of Satan is indeed to thwart, obstruct, and come against anything that God and His people are trying to accomplish, but this is truly far out. And for those like my mother who doesn't realize ideologically that 'Socialism' and 'Communism' are one in the same, well I hope you get it that they simply represent, according to Marxist theory, two consecutive stages in the revolutionary process. Other than that, the Communist Movement has always used the terms 'socialist' and 'communist' as synonyms, this means they are both Satanic in nature.

The following quotations should also remove any remaining doubt as to whether Communism is in reality Satanism:

François Noël Babeuf, with his “Society of Equals” a direct forerunner of Communism (he was arrested and executed, though, after it was detected he had secretly arranged for a coup against the Directory government to be pulled off on May 11, 1796, known as the Babeuvian Conspiracy, the Conspiracy of Equals): The love of revolution has killed within me all other love and has made me as cruel as the devil.

Bruno Bauer, along with Ludwig Feuerbach, the fallen theologian in the Germany of the 1840s, and teacher of Karl Marx: I deliver lectures here at the university before a large audience. I don't recognize myself when I pronounce my blasphemies from the pulpit. They are so great that these children, whom nobody should offend, have their hair standing on end. While delivering the blasphemies, I remember how I work piously at home writing an apology of the Holy Scriptures and of the Revelation. In any case, it is a very bad demon that possesses me as often as I ascend the pulpit, and I am so weak that I am compelled to yield to him... My spirit of blasphemy, and will be satisfied only if I am authorized to preach openly as professor of the atheistic system.

Karl Marx, as a 19-year-old university student, wrote the following Satanic poetry (from Marx and Satan by Richard Wurmbrand; see also Marx's Collected Works): I shall build my throne high overhead / Cold, tremendous shall its summit be / For its bulwark – superstitious dread / For its marshal – blackest agony. / Who looks at it with a healthy eye / Shall turn back, deathly pale and dumb / Clutched by blind and chill mortality / May his happiness prepare its tomb. (“Invocation of One in Despair”) – “Look now, my blood-dark sword shall stab / Unerringly within thy soul / God neither knows nor honors [the] art. / The hellish vapors rise and fill the brain. / Till I go mad and my heart is utterly changed. / See this sword – the Prince of Darkness sold it to me. / For me, he beats the time and gives the signs. / Ever more boldly I play the dance of death.” (From “The Player”) – “To clench and crush you, personified humanity / With tempestuous force / While for us both the abyss yawns in darkness / You will sink down and I shall follow laughing / Whispering in your ears, ‘Descend, come with me, friend!’” (From Marx's unfinished drama, “Oulanem”) – “With disdain, I will throw my gauntlet / Full in the face of the world / And see the collapse of this pygmy giant / Whose fall will not stifle my ardor. / Then will I wander godlike and victorious / Through the ruins of the world / And, giving my words an active force / I will feel equal to the Creator.” (‘Human Pride’)

Georg Jung, a friend of Karl Marx, in a letter to Arnold Ruge of October 18, 1841 (Marx is at the time 23 years old): “Dr. Marx, Dr. Bauer, and L. Feuerbach are associating for a theological-philosophical journal. May then all angels gather around the old Lord and may he have mercy on himself, for these three certainly will throw him out of his heaven and sue him on top of it.”

Mikhail Bakunin, the infamous Russian anarchist and for a while co-warrior of Marx: The Evil One is the satanic revolt against divine authority, revolt in which we see the fecund germ of all human emancipations, the revolution. Socialists recognize each other by the words, “In the name of the one to whom a great wrong has been done.” (He is speaking of Satan!)

These quotes are taken from Richard Wurmbrand (1909-2001 study Marx and Satan – Was Karl Marx a Satanist?) He was a Romanian Lutheran Pastor (as a youth, still a determined Communist himself), who suffered tremendously from 1948 until 1956, and again from 1959, in the torture chambers of Communist Romania until he was ‘bailed out’ in 1964, by a Norwegian Christian community for the extraordinary sum of $10,000. Besides building a rescue & support organization for persecuted Christians behind the Iron Curtain, he conducted comprehensive research on the roots of Communism, that he proved beyond any doubt to be Satanic. We are now in front of a choice, we can ignore once again the Islamo-Communist threat on the Western world used by the New World Order to manipulate and control our existence, or do something about it!

In 2017, in Perugia, Italy, even the local Masonic Temple was threatened by Communists, who left in the middle of the night, on their marble plaque placed in front of the entrance, an ominous message “We will hang you by the balls” with their characteristic sickle and hammer signature.

FIG 28 – Image of the marble plaque in front of the entrance of the headquarters of the Grand Orient of Italy in Perugia in Corso Cavour, 97 in Perugia shows the intolerance of the Far Left in Italy.

Is this the end of the Western Initiatic System and the “Profane” Western world of common mortals that clearly emanates from it? “Profane” are of course those men and women who stand outside of Masonry or certain Secret Societies. The word here has nothing to do with profanity in the sense of sacrilegious language. However, the decline and crisis of the West are clear these days even to the so-called “Profane”. The Knights Templar, that was generated within the heart of the Western Initiatic System, and learned from the Ancient Mystery Schools, the Angelic mysteries, and the art of the Magi, seem to have had a great mission to accomplish for the Secret Chief’s (praeternatural entities) in saving our Western world.

As the last Grand Master Jacques de Molay died executed by slow burning at the stake, in front of Notre Dame cathedral on March 18, 1314, one eyewitness says the Templar Grand Master asked God to take revenge on the people who had tormented him; and the curse worked indeed to perfection, killing all the interested parties, starting with King Philip IV of France known as Philip the Fair; who died on November 29th, 1314 at the age of 46. De Molay was indeed furious in the last moments of his life and used his magical powers, having been forced to make a confession against his will, and despite retracting this confession after, he was charged with heresy and burned at the stake like a vulgar criminal. A sad episode for the Church, and something modern Neo-Templar Organizations commemorated with great solemnity and the celebration of a mass on the 18th of March 2018, in Notre Dame cathedral, in Paris, during the 900 year anniversary of the foundation of the Order.

However, aside from the considerations on the unjust end of the Templars, dismantled in 1307 by King Philip the Fair, some of the knights were actually corrupted by Satan and Islam, already during the order's peak, when they were a powerful Christian military order during the time of the Crusades. When the order was suppressed, the worship of Baphomet was not, unto itself, one of the charges, but a handful of the Templars arrested brought the name up on their own accord.

So who is Baphomet? Baphomet is a term originally used to describe a supposed idol or another deity that the Knights Templar were accused of worshipping, described variously as an idol with a human skull, a head with two faces, a cat idol or a bearded head. However, the name “Baphomet” originally was a deformation of the name of Muhammad, the prophet of Islam. Claims that the Templars were worshipping “Baphomet” meant, in fact, that they were indeed closed Muslims. In the book, The Dictionary of Demons – Names of the Damned, by Michelle Belanger, the author goes on to expand just a little bit more on this topic and its relation, to both, demonology and Islam:

Baphomet: A demon commonly depicted as a goat-headed being, often hermaphroditic, sometimes with wings. Baphomet made his (or her) entrance into the annals of demonology through transcripts of the trials of the Knights Templar. For a variety of reasons, most of them monetary, this knightly order had come under suspicion in Europe, and the entire group was ultimately arrested and tried – with many of the knights being put to death. Among the charges brought against the Templars was the assertion that they had abandoned their Christian faith, instead worshipping a curious idol given the name Baphomet. Material that has survived from French troubadours active in the twelfth and thirteenth centuries suggests that the name Baphomet was originally a corruption of the name Muhammad which at the time was commonly rendered Mahomet. If this is true, then the figure of Baphomet may have come up in relation to the Templars as an implication that they had turned to the faith of their enemies, the Muslims.

So it is clearly stated here, that there were strong suspicions that the Templars had abandoned Christianity, and taken up the religion of Islam. This theory tends to generalize and impeach all the Knights Templar without any distinction when in reality there was only a minority involved in the Islamic infiltration of this powerful order that was widespread all across Europe and the Middle East. No precise numbers exist, but it is estimated that during their period of maximum expansion of the Order, there were probably between 15,00 and 20,000 Templars, of whom about a tenth were actual knights. In those days, there was no internet, no phones, no ways to have an instant form of communication for any institution. So among all the churches, and castles, of this order, there was indeed the possibility, that some Templar communities, living more isolated than others, could be infiltrated and corrupted by the new Faith of Islam. Well, in the 1950's, this hypothesis was fully confirmed during an excavation made by an archaeologist under the ruins of a Templar Church in Turkey, when a strange Templar cross with the image of a bearded Mohammed on it, was found. It was the infamous Baphomet that turned out to be an Islamic heresy. Of course, this very important discovery has been kept out of the public eye since then, because of the vast implications that could jeopardize the new neo-Templar trend in the Christian world. My friend, the late Gabriele Mandel Khān (1924-2010), fortunately, took a pic of it before the controversial artifact was sent back to a remote deposit for archaeological collections, probably in Istanbul. Gabriele, who later published his finding in an Italian publication. He was a Freemason, Italian psychologist, writer, and artist of Afghan descent, who was also known as the Sufi guide (shaikh) of the Jerrahi Halveti, and someone I mentioned in Pope Francis: The Last Pope?

Returning to the Baphomet mystery, the final transformation of Baphomet occurred in 1854, when French occultist and Illuminati, Eliphas Lévi, formulated the modern conception of the Baphomet figure via an illustration, portraying it with wings, a horned goats head and an emblazoned pentagram, that was used recently, as a reference by The Satanic Temple, for their infamous 8 1/2 foot statue of Baphomet. Only a few years after Eliphas Lévi's esoteric illustration was published, the image, appeared in the work of Leo Taxil, as part of an elaborate hoax promoted by the Jesuits, where the Freemasons were accused of worshipping it, a lie that still many Christians even today believe is true.

Having said this Eliphas Levi's Baphomet, was actually adopted by Aleister Crowley, most famously in his Gnostic Mass, where we find it invoked as the serpent and the lion, as the speaking voice who reveals Liber A'ash. It was incorporated into the theology of Thelema, and in turn into the iconography of LaVeyan Satanism. The mysterious figure of Baphomet still possesses great importance to Thelemites (followers of Crowley's Satanic religion), and is even featured in Crowley's initiatic name as OHO.

The links between Communism, Islam, and Satanism, don't stop here, as well as the links between Islam and Thelema. All this scum have a common denominator, which links them together in their hatred for Christianity, and that's the work of Satan and his Legion/Demons who use and manipulate people, religions, and ideology, as vessels for carrying out their demonic duties in gruesome ways. I wonder for example, what Aleister Crowley would have said about what happened on April 23rd, 2017, in the church of Rennes-le-Château, made famous worldwide by the Dan Brown novel, that was viciously attacked by a Muslim woman, during the national election day in France. The woman said to be in her twenties, reportedly inquired at the towns tourism office at 9:00 AM, about when the church opened and spoke partially in what one witness described as "Arabic."

She then entered the church around 11:15 with an ax, and quickly attacked several well-known items. The woman, dressed in a white cloak, with her face hidden behind a Venetian mask, attacked the holy water font with an ax, decapitated the famous "red devil" (a statue of the demon Asmodeus from the Old Testament), and placed a Quran next to his chopped-off arm. She then lacerated the bas-relief of Mary Magdalene's altar in front of shocked witnesses, also chopping off the head of Mary Magdalene. The woman, obviously possessed, was then stopped by a church visitor. The police soon arrived, along with the Mayor and another town official, and the unidentified woman was taken into custody never to be seen or heard of again. Under questioning, the woman was apparently calm and was reported to have said, “Today is a presidential election here, while in Syria, the West bombs and kills children. You are all disbelievers! My husband is over there.”

The French news site Ladepeche.fr also reported that when she left a copy of the Quran beneath the Asmodeus statue there were jihadist remarks highlighted, and she was shouting, “You are all the unbelievers! I'm home, you're not home!” Can you believe it? We Christians are not home any longer in our own churches. Has this world gone completely insane? Remember that real Knights Templar, were never connected to any of this, and always remained true Christians, and defenders of the real Faith, and not infidel Muslims or Satanists. This wrong narrative needs to end. In closing, I hope you have gained important knowledge, for the continued fight against the evil that is permeating the planet, in this unique time in the history of mankind, and please invite your friends and family to purchase volume 5 before the growing censorship might get it out of commerce.

Chapter Eight

Conversations

With the real Illuminati

After reading my opinion on the present state of Freemasonry, and the Western Initiatic World at large, with all its many manifestations, and the possible reasons for the rise of materialism and Satanism in our society, I thought it beneficial that I give you the opportunity to hear other views on this very delicate subject, to include the threat of Islam, another Satanic manifestation. So after a few attempts, I finally reached two of the most charismatic figures in today's study of Alchemy, Gnostic Spirituality, Kabbalah, Theurgy, Astrology, of course Freemasonry, and what I call the world of the real Illuminati, not your average conspiracy theorist. Two leading personalities from the US, each with their own view, that did not know of each others interview, are about to shock my readers in this appendix to the various subjects touched in my book. Of course, the opinions expressed in the following unedited interviews, are those of Mark Stavish and David Griffin, and do not always reflect the view of the author. I am not afraid of the truth, or different opinions, and I am immensely grateful to the following illustrious figures, who have agreed to participate in this project for the benefit of the Western Initiatic System and society.

Mark Stavish

QUESTIONS for author and Freemason Mark Stavish from Wyoming Lodge No. 468, Director of the Institute for Hermetic Studies, who published several books worldwide related to Freemasonry, and is often used as an expert consultant for programs on Freemasonry for the History Channel and Animal Planet.

- 1) Who is Mark Stavish and what does the Institute for Hermetic Studies represent in today's Masonic and esoteric world?

REPLY: I am a practitioner and author of esotericism with about forty years experience. I started the Institute for Hermetic Studies in 1998 as a local group with an operating temple for the instruction in various esoteric practices. Over the years we have published nearly thirty books, many of which are available in French, Spanish, Portuguese, Russian, Estonian, and Polish.

We are unaffiliated with any other organizations and operate with the philosophy that esotericism needs to be dis-occulted while still working within the framework that ethics are important. However, secrecy as it is generally known is not needed and is even dangerous. True occult or esoteric knowledge is as His Holiness Dudjom Rinpoche said about Vajrayana, 'self-secret'. That is, one must actually do the work to understand it, so teaching opening cannot violate anything sacred. Too often secrecy is a means of covering the ignorance of would-be teachers.

We are not an initiatic organization and offer no initiations, as such, we are also not affiliated with any Masonic body. We do encourage what in the United States of America is referred to as the Traditional Observance Movement, as well as the formation of "philosophical lodges", but this is in line with our general philosophy. However, this does not confer any Masonic affiliation for the Institute for Hermetic Studies.

2) What do you believe is the reason for the present decline of the Western Initiatic System and the rise of Satanism in our society?

REPLY: There are several factors at work. First there is the distinction between initiatic systems which are primarily fraternal in nature such as Freemasonry or even the OTO, and those which are clearly esoteric or occult in nature, wherein, ritual initiation is designed to have an effect on the candidates psychic structures. The rituals of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn, various gnostic groups, and, of course, the now well know empowerments of Tibetan Buddhism – vajrayana or tantra – are designed to do.

Historically esotericism in the West has always operated on the fringes. It had some brief shining moments in the sun during the Renaissance, but that ended. Movements and groups were established, but membership was difficult, teachings not always clear. Even groups such as the Pietists who were very esoteric and mystical, but no threat to the establishment powers, were often the subject of extreme persecution which prompted many to come to the North American colonies.

This means that even in family traditions, the "initiatic chain" was more like a thread and easily broken. So, when we speak of initiation in Western esotericism it is a tremendous challenge to find a group that has been operating continuously for twenty years, let alone two-hundred. In practice, this means we are constantly recreating the wheel and the whole vehicle that goes with it!

This means that few people are actually trained in a traditional manner wherein there is a connection to an actual system that has genuine elders. For me, that means three or more generations of practitioners.

This is further compounded by the current ease with which information is obtained. There is little sense of connection or commitment, and what does exist is more that of a fantasy than a real working relationship. Any fifteen year old with a library card can set themselves up as the head of an occult order in a few hours with the internet and no one would be the wiser if they were actually creative and intelligent enough.

It is strange to say but our history of religious intolerance has been both the cause of our lack of esoteric integrity and material success. The growing scientific model and the industrial revolution allowed us to focus more on demonstrable material power than theoretic spiritual power and the subjective baggage it carried.

Fast forward to the present and that translates into wealth, freedoms, and availability of information unimaginable just two generations ago. This also means a false sense of individual omnipotence that is really nothing more than an uninterrupted electrical power and food delivery systems.

This material success also has a dark side which discourages people from considering the spiritual or esoteric. This we can call Satanic in the classical sense in that it means, 'opposition'. Satan is less a person or force as it is our own laziness, ease of distraction, and habituated focus on only what we consider important to ourselves.

In this way we see many 'good' people whom we like and trust are actually 'satanic'.

Then there is the notion of organized evil. This falls under the heading of demonic forces, the qliphoth of the qabala, even egregores or collective psychic forces and entities. While it is easy to think of these evil forces only in terms of the obvious – stereotypical bad guys, it is more important to see them for what they are: opportunistic parasites that feed off our anger, fear, and greed.

Thus anything, from Political Correctness to hyper-nationalism that can keep people angry, distracted, and afraid is Satanic. The emotions generated is the food for the demon or demons – for we are Legion.

Mass media plays a large roll in this, in particular movies, music, and what is passed off as news reporting. In Europe the entire EU system is a demonic egregore, born out of fear and greed, now destroying its host organisms out of fear and greed as well.

Because of course, the EU, Political Correctness, and Progressive politics are essentially materialistic in nature. I do not say atheistic, although that would do, but there are schools of metaphysical atheism such as Buddhism. So, materialism is the nature of Communism, and of course, Satanism in its formal and informal definitions.

One could argue that the uptick you are suggesting is also the result of the cycle we are in. Traditionalist philosophers such as Julius Evola, but more practically and importantly Alaine Danielou, believe that we are in the final stages of the Kali Yuga. The same has been said to me by several Tibetan lamas. What makes this most interesting is that the end phase is clearly characterised by a final battle for control against a world domination from Islam. Try saying that in public and see what kind of reaction you get! I say that in all seriousness because we have a saying in the US, "You know who is in charge by who you cannot criticise." So, I give that to you as an example, do with it what you will.

3) What is your relationship to New Age belief systems like Thelema and its creator Aleister Crowley?

REPLY: The term New Age is a tricky one as for many it means those psycho-spiritual philosophies and practices that took bloom in the 1970s. Clearly they are related to earlier systems, Theosophy and New Thought being at their core, but as you have intimated, along with it – although tangentially compared to other topics – ritual magic. The source of most of that magic was the teachings of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn, primarily as revealed by Israel Regardie, and of course, Aleister Crowley. For this reason, it is nearly impossible for anyone who has any involvement as a practitioner in the New and Emerging Religions that emerge out of the New Age Movement NOT to have some historical relationship with Crowley – even if they are unaware of it. As for Crowley in particular, he is not a major focus of my personal work.

4) Do you perceive Thelema's many links to Modern Satanism as a threat to the image of Regular Freemasonry, as Robert Gilbert stated years ago?

REPLY: I have heard of his comments but not read them, therefore I am unable to offer an informed reply regarding his specific accusations.

5) What is your position, if any, towards groups like the O.T.O., and do you feel you can embrace Regular Freemasonry and Crowleyanity at the same time ?

REPLY: I am not, nor have ever been, a member of the O.T.O. but maintain a pleasant relationship with several of its national officers. That said, I see no reason for there to be a conflict between being a member of both organizations. This does, however, make a distinction between being a member of the OTO and as you have put it, embracing "Crowleyanity" or the notion of Aleister Crowley being the final word - or rather the new word, or Word of the Aeon – and therefore imitated by too many of his readers rather than understood and if need be, ignored.

As a broad generalization, I have found that those people who become deeply committed to the OTO are interested in different things than those who become deeply committed to Freemasonry. This, however, is only my experience, yours may vary.

6) Do you believe the roots of Speculative Freemasonry are mainly Christian as believed before 1813?

REPLY: No. The host of non-Christian elements in early Freemasonry are clearly visible to anyone who wants to see them. The notion of Masonry being focused around the Temple of Solomon – itself Jewish – and not the New Jerusalem of Revelations is itself a non-Christian, or pre-Christian foundation. If anything, the symbolism of Freemasonry is Hermetic and Kabbalistic and that is the premise I put forth in my book, Freemasonry – Rituals, Symbols, and History of the Secret Society. Your readers can find it in English, French, Spanish, Portuguese, and Estonian.

Now, Freemasonry was and still is composed of members who mainly profess to be Christian. However, any religious litmus test for membership in BLUE LODGE goes against the fundamental Masonic principles. The Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania, which claims to be among the oldest in the United States and third oldest in the world, was formed in 1731, had members that were Jewish. While some Masonic Rites have a Christian requirement, they are the minority.

7) Can you tell us more about your fascination for the Golden Dawn tradition?

I would not use the word fascination to describe my relationship with the Golden Dawn Tradition, but rather, for the longest time, it was as we say, "the only game in town" if you wanted to learn ritual magic. Nearly everyone has some experience with it, and its methods can be found far and wide, in as diverse and seemingly opposite groups as modern Wicca, neo-paganism, and LaVey's brand of Satanism (the Church of Satan) with his rewriting of the Enochian Calls.

The Golden Dawn methods are very effective for altering consciousness and experiencing certain inner or visionary states. They can be problematic in that it is, as Pat Zalewski has pointed out, important to have the initiations that go with them. But the initiations are themselves very complex and require a competent team of a half-dozen people or more. Because of the nature of initiation, as we previously discussed, this can act as a bridge, but there is a difference between performing a ceremony and conferring an esoteric initiation.

8) What do you think of the various Golden Dawn factions operating in today's magical world, often in contrast with each other?

REPLY: I have no formal relationship with any of the Golden Dawn organizations in existence although I have a very pleasant and helpful relationship with several of its better-known leaders. Currently, the entire Golden Dawn movement is being rocked with a heavy politicising of the movement wherein, it is being stated that only those of a left-leaning, progressive, or so-called 'liberal' political orientation can be a member. Those who are apolitical, libertarian, or conservative are to be denied membership or expunged from the rolls. The same struggle is going on within the OTO. As such, I have no official connection with any Golden Dawn order, lodge, or movement, as I am unconcerned with such things.

9) Charles "Chic" Cicero has created in the last decade, a Rosicrucian Order with ex-members of the S.R.I.A, such as Robert Gilbert, who likes to initiate and work in fancy castles across Europe. Do you want to comment on this new Rosicrucian reality, and what is their true mission?

REPLY: I am not a member of the SRIA, nor have I discussed this organization with anyone, therefore I cannot give an informed comment on its stated purpose or 'true mission'.

10) As a regular Freemason what is your position in regards to so-called "Mystic Masonry" or fringe Masonic rites ?

REPLY: Many of the so-called fringe Masonic rites from the lists that I have seen, are not Masonic. For example, I have seen Martinism listed as fringe Masonic. At one time, the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn was listed as a 'dangerous occult organization' in the Masonic publication, The New Age. So for those of you consumed by conspiracies there is a direct contradiction for you. But my point is simple, many organizations laid claim to by the College of Rites are not, nor have ever been Masonic and they enact them. So, it is a bit hypocritical for Regular Masons to get upset by what they call 'fringe' or 'clandestine' Masonry unless there is criminal activity, or activities directly damaging to Regular Masonry, going on.

That said, if Regular Masonry in the United States at least, were more philosophical and yes, esoteric, or open to those possibilities in some fashion such as reading groups, etc, then the appeal of fringe Masonry would be dramatically lessened. But even here, let's be honest, most of the groups we are talking about are barely functioning in many respects. They make promises on occult secrets and never deliver.

Even those which have access to very good information seem unable to keep from falling apart from internal schisms every seven to ten years or so. Regular Masonry needs to focus on improving itself and not be concerned about anything else.

12) Stanisla0 De Guaita, Cabalistic founder of the Cabalistic Order of the Rosicrucian, in his book Temple of Satan, does not limit the dark side of the Illuminati to Adam Weishaupt's order, but to a vast number of groups involved with the occult, and he was not a conspiracy theorist. What is your view on what I defined in my trilogy as the Illuminati network?

REPLY: Well, here we need to look at the notion of egregores, or collective psychic entities. From this perspective conspiracy is simple as the conspiracy is one of thought or ideas, rather than having everyone sit down at a table and create an action plan. That may happen, but we have no way of proving it. What does matter is the egregore. That we can kill, that we can limit and even eliminate – but on the psychic or astral level where it lives. According to occult theory, if you want to give birth to something or to kill something, it must be done in the invisible first. Another principle is that 'like is known by like' so in that respect, formal meetings by human beings is not needed when it is really the egregore that is in charge of each of them and whatever groups they are in or represent.

Fortunately, the reverse is true for good, healthy, and productive movements as well. But this in turn gives rise to what is called, 'the war in the heavens' wherein the various psychic forces battle for control of and on behalf of humanity.

13) Do you think there is a growing magical threat to President Trump?

REPLY: I know there are many people attempting to grab headlines about it, but as to their effectiveness, I have little concern. There are however, many forms of magic that have little relationship to people dressing up in robes and playing at having occult power. We need only examine the various forms of psychic research undertaken by the United States in the 1970s until the 1990s and the Soviet Union during from the 1920s until its collapse. I am certain that research is still going on, officially or unofficially through think-tanks and other research arms, and not simply with the superpowers. Occultism has long been an unofficial arm of government, we need only look at John Dee and the circles he ran in for confirmation. Gary Lachman wrote a good book on the topic, Politics and the Occult – The Left, the Right, and the Radically Unseen. There is also some recent material out there about Hillary Clinton and her on-again, off-again relationship with the New Age leaders, and of course, her campaign Chairman and former Chief of Staff to Bill Clinton, John Podesta. It was fascinating to listen to many of the would-be leaders of modern occultism either be silent or in denial about the occult significance of the so-called 'spirit cooking' art of Serbian artist Marina Abramovich to which he was invited to attend by his brother, but declined. Then of course we have the recent statement by Washington socialite Sally Quinn that she used magic to murder people all while claiming the moral high ground against Sarah Palin.

So, if we consider the magic to be the power of the mind, or more accurately, the focused power of the mind to create events, then it is always happening. Like it or not, those who are in power just do it better than most of those outside of it.

I believe that Professor Ioan Couliano, whose murder is still somewhat of a mystery, said it quite well in his book, Eros and Magic in the Renaissance, when he pointed out that what was once magic was now the purview of media managers, public relations specialist, psychologists, and by extension, governments and their efforts at social manipulation and control. His work is essential to understanding what is going in the world today.

Trump himself is no stranger to the esoteric philosophy we call 'the power of positive thinking', so, I think he can handle himself in this regards.

14) I read with great interest your work on the Chamber of Reflection featured only in certain rites and related jurisdictions, so what is your favorite Masonic Rite and why?

REPLY: I have no favorite rite because they are all so wonderful in their own unique ways. Everyone I know who is a Mason, even if they have not been to a lodge in twenty years, remembers their Third Degree, or "Degree of a Master Mason". It is truly one of the finest initiatic experiences one can have. I do wish the Chamber of Reflection was more widely used as it is the first thing a candidate would encounter on their Masonic journey. It is critical for several reasons, but because it asks the most important question as a Mason or non-Mason you will ever be asked, 'Why are you here?' Now, it does not do so in those words, but in its context and content. Why do you want to join this lodge? Remember, until very recently being a mason was a death sentence in many countries, and in several still is. Why do you want to join this organization? Why are you sitting in lodge instead of doing something else? Why are you on this planet? What are you doing that gives your life meaning? The Chamber of Reflection asks all of those questions.

15)Can regular Freemasonry have an important role in society again?

REPLY: Yes, and it will, but why and when are to be seen. At the moment, we as Freemasons must encourage a more active membership, and by active I do not mean simply activities that keep the lights on and the bills paid, but philosophically and spiritually. The light needs to burn more brightly, and it can, and it will. But it will be a different Freemasonry than we are used to today, at least in the Anglo-Saxon world, and the US in particular. It will be smaller, more expensive, and more selective in who it lets in to be a member. That is the way of things, and not just in Freemasonry, in esotericism as well. This is the Kali Yuga and we are heading to critical point in the near future. The days of easy spirituality in the comfort of your own home are soon to disappear. People will not be able to be passive members of half-dozen organizations, they will have to be selective and committed members of one, two, or three at most – and that includes

David Griffin

QUESTIONS for David Griffin
G.H. Frater LVX Ex Septentrionis
Imperator, Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn
Chief Adept, R.R. et A.C.

Imperator, Rosicrucian Mystery School of AΩ.

1) Who is David Griffin and what does he represent in today's magical world?

David Griffin today heads the AΩ (Alpha Omega), an umbrella organization holding numerous esoteric and initiatic lineages and/or esoteric transmissions, which on the Hermetic and Rosicrucian side include the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn, the Gold und Rosenkreutz Order, Backstrom's Rosicrucian Society, the Asiatic Brethren, etc. The AΩ also holds a vast array of Christian Episcopal and Pagan lineages, multiple Freemasonic charters, etc.

2) What is your relationship to Thelema and Aleister Crowley?

Aleister Crowley nearly murdered the Golden Dawn. British intelligence sent Crowley to infiltrate our order and destroy it by publishing our secret initiation rites and spiritual training materials.

The job fell to me to clean up the mess from Crowley's attack and to heal the Golden Dawn's Rosicrucian Inner Order from this nearly mortal blow. In order to heal the R.R et A.C., in 1999 we moved all materials profaned by Crowley to the Outer Order. Since the material had been profaned anyway, I wrote my Ritual Magic Manual to make this published Golden Dawn Magick available and easy to use by everyday people.

Next we painstakingly replaced the profaned materials with earlier spiritual techniques from Rosicrucian and Hermetic initiatic sources. This took years but we have preserved the magical purpose of the original R.R. et A.C. Second Order system, yet with completely unpublished Egyptian and Chaldean magical hierarchies. This is important so that the system remains spiritually pure and clean for better effects.

Crowley did his best to destroy the Golden Dawn. He failed. We survived and continue to protect humanity from the forces of darkness even today.

3) Is Thelema's many links to Modern Satanism a threat to the work you are doing?

Over the past two decades, I have been attacked nearly non-stop on both magically and on the internet. My detractors have at times set up entire echo chambers of websites and blogs dedicated almost entirely to defaming and misrepresenting me and my message.

There have been multiple credible death threats and magical attacks on Leslie McQuade and myself are strongest around the Full Moon every month. They never really stop though these days.

4) What is your position towards those groups like the O.T.O. born in Berkley who are clearly linked to progressive ideals and support the left wing ideology that is also mining Christianity and opposing president Trump?

Our order has nothing to do with OTO or with Aleister Crowley's Thelema. When OTO was originally founded in Germany, it had at least some spiritual value. That went out the window, however, when OTO was co-opted by Aleister Crowley, and deviated into the Thelemic propaganda tool it has degenerated into today.

The Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn is not a Thelemic order. We are a Hermetic and Rosicrucian order, steeped in these extremely valuable Western spiritual traditions.

I was unaware that the OTO is actively working against President Trump. I am aware, however, of a group of Satanists and misguided Wiccans who have been doing monthly "binding spells" against President Trump and his supporters. If O.T.O. is part of these monthly magical attacks on our Republic and our President, then O.T.O. is indeed a problem, as is their infiltration of academia.

5) What is your view of the Jesuit led New World Order, the Vatican and the Abrahamic religions?

I am first and foremost a Hermetic Master. As such, I hold the truth embodied in all of the world's religions in high regard. As the Universe is actually one single living organism, there is in reality only one truth, codified through local cultural symbol systems into religions.

As far as Abrahamic religions go, my great love is Christianity. The original message of Jesus Christ holds the key to the evolution of humanity, but Christian churches have lost their way.

The original message of Jesus Christ to his disciples was a message of spiritual liberation. The Vatican turned this message on its head - degrading the original message into yet another tool for mankind's enslavement instead.

The AΩ seeks to restore Christianity to its rightful place as a force for spiritual liberation, as it originally was in Christ's inner circle. Most Christian churches today teach only the outer forms. The inner teachings given by Christ to his closest disciples have been all but lost. For example, most Christian churches today give only the Water baptism of John the Baptist, and not the three original baptisms of Jesus Christ himself. These were very early on declared heretical by the Vatican and repressed by the church.

Most people don't even know that Christ transmitted three (not one) baptisms to his disciples; Water, Fire, and Spirit. Christ's Water baptism is a rite of purification. The Fire baptism ignites the Soul fires of your energetic body. The Spirit baptism opens your spiritual vision in the higher dimensions, including the Kingdom of the Father inside the stars at the fast vibrating end of the Universe inside of light.

Under multiple Episcopal authorities, the Alpha Omega operates a "free church" which transmits all three of Jesus Christ's forbidden baptismal rites.

Moreover, also banned by the Vatican, there also still exists the secret magical system Jesus Christ taught to his disciples for "Rapture" – how to ascend on the dimensional planes to the Kingdom of the Father inside the universe of light.

6) What is your position on Christianity, and do you believe we are living in the End Times?

Sadly, we do appear to be witnessing the rise of the Anti-Christ global spy state, where sub-dermal microchips (the Mark of the Beast) will be required even to buy or sell.

It is essential that before the Anti-Christ global government is established, that at a very minimum, the original Christian magical technology for "Rapture" (spiritual ascension) be revealed again today, this time in an easy to understand form readily usable by modern individuals. Making these forbidden rites of Christianity available is a primary mission of the AΩ.

7) Can you tell us more about your lineage of the Golden Dawn and the Rosicrucian tradition operating within?

I was initiated in the grades of the outer order by Cris Monnastre, and in the 6=5 and 7=4 Adeptus Exemptus grades by Marquis Nicholas Tereschenko and Jean-Pascal Ruggiu of the Ahathoor Temple No 7 in Paris, which they had revived in 1982 upon their return from England. It was at the Serapis temple in London under the direction of Apollon Leontas and the guidance of Desmond Bourke, where the most important Golden Dawn lineages were transmitted to Golden Dawn Chiefs to France, then on to America with me.

It is important to note that traditionally in the Golden Dawn and derivative orders, all order lineages and authorities are vested in the 7=4 Adeptus Exemptus grade, ergo the importance of the line of transmission of this particular grade.

In 2002, I made contact with Frater LVX e Tenebris, a representative of the "Secret Chiefs" who had originally contacted S.L. MacGregor Mathers in Paris. Over time, they gave me the teaching materials and initiation rituals that had been prepared for the Golden Dawn's highest grades from the beginning, called the Third Order. They also issued me additional Hermetic and Rosicrucian charters.

Today, in the Rosicrucian Mystery School of AΩ, we teach the traditional triad of Rosicrucian spiritual disciplines – Magick, Alchemy, and Qaballah (and NOT Mysticism).

8) Charles "Chic" Cicero not only operates a Golden Dawn faction contrary to your standing as Imperator, but has created in the last decade a Rosicrucian Order with ex members of the S.R.I.A like Robert Gilbert, that likes to initiate and work in castles across Europe. Do you want to comment on this group and what is their mission?

I know nothing really about this Rosicrucian group other than it is a schismatic group of SRIA. I have virtually nothing to do with it. I believe that SRIA, using their contacts in British intelligence have been responsible for many of the attacks on our order and on me on the internet. As fierce and independent as Donald Trump is in politics and Alex Jones is in media, so am I in modern esotericism. The AΩ and our dependent schools have survived defamation attacks, hack attacks, legal attacks, you name it. I have even survived engineered schisms designed by outside groups to remove me from leadership.

9) I know you are also a high grade Freemason (33, 90, 96 Degree - Ancient and Primitive Rite of Memphis-Misraim - in possession of the complete and true Arcana Arcanorum), what is your position in regards to so-called "Regular" Freemasonry compared to "Mystic Masonry" ?

As regards Regular freemasonry, I was initiated in Blue Lodge, the A.A.S.R. and the York Rite in the U.S.A. and in the Swedish Rite in Sweden. To be honest with you, I am disappointed with masonry in America.

American Masons need to learn from our European counterparts. At least in Europe, many lodges have preserved the pageantry and beauty of original Freemasonry. To be perfectly honest though, I am somewhat disappointed even with European Freemasonry, due to its general lack of esoteric substance.

Take the Swedish Rite, for example. The Swedish Rite was once a Rite rich in Rosicrucian Magick and Alchemy. Today, however, this esoteric content has been completely suppressed due to the influence of the Swedish Church. Sadly, this once highly magical Freemasonic rite, has been reduced to just another symbolical rite.

Today, in the HOGD (AΩ) we do not specifically target Freemasons for recruitment, but Masons seeking training in Rosicrucian Magick and Alchemy, do find themselves quite at home in our order due to the Freemasonic structure of our Temple rites. In fact, many Masons find the esoteric content in the G.D. that they were originally searching for in Freemasonry.

In the AΩ, we recruit today not only from among Masons, but from all walks of life, primarily though internet advertising and email marketing. We are bringing ancient mysteries to our people using modern methods.

10) I describe the Golden Dawn tradition as part of the Illuminati mystery schools and their network, do you agree with my vision?

I have been attacked on Illuminati conspiracy film after film on YouTube as part of the defamation campaign against me on the Internet. No. I personally do not consider the Golden Dawn as part of any sort Illuminati network. The word "Illuminati" is completely negatively tainted. People don't easily understand the difference between "Illuminati" and "Illuminism" (or Enlightenment). In truth, since the time of the founding of the Illuminati of Bavaria by the Jesuits, they have been bitterly opposed by an alliance of Rosicrucian and Knight Templar orders. These are not "Illuminati" per se, although they are indeed "illuminist" (or Enlightenment) traditions. Back in the 1700s, it was the Golden Rosicrucians and the Strict Observance who provided the spiritual muscle to counter the Illuminati threat back then. Today the Rosicrucian Mystery School of AΩ and the revived Strict Order of Templars continue the fight for the liberation of humanity against the forces of Endarkenment. Who I refer to "Illuminati" are perhaps better described "slaver Magicians" who, left to their own devices, would completely enslave mankind. As a Rosicrucian Imperator and Hermetic Master, I am locked in a death battle between the Magick of Light and Illuminati Enslavement Sorcery. This magical war for the spiritual liberation and solar ascension of humanity has raged already for Millennia. What is different now is that we are winning for a change!

11) I know you are opposing the growing magical threat to president Trump, how can we help him win against the dark side?

For centuries, Illuminati slavers have held the upper hand in the magical war for the future of humanity. Why? Because they are willing to use the most evil forms of Magick, including human sacrifice to achieve their aims. It is extremely difficult to overcome the power of such evil Magick, without resorting to evil and becoming contaminated by it oneself. Things have changed recently though. At Winter Solstice 2015, we rallied a rag tag magical militia made up of Christian prayer warriors, Magicians, Witches, and Shamans, to synchronize our Magick and prayers at the time of the Winter Solstice, with the common intention to "bind Daesh" (ISIS) who had been goose-stepping across the Middle East back then, taking slaves completely unchecked. This, together with a second operation with a quickly gathered magical "army" at Summer Solstice 2016 "for the liberation of humanity from all forms of slavery and enchantment," we created a magical opening and a beach head, wherein the evil of Daesh was contained and a populist

President ejected the Shadow Government from the Presidency for the first time in decades.

Suddenly, using this new battle tactic, we found ourselves winning skirmish after skirmish for the first time in Centuries.

Unfortunately, the Darksidiers were quick to adapt to our new battle strategy. They began raising a magical army of their own, using naive Witches as cannon fodder, with monthly rituals to "bind Trump and those who support him." Of course, the numbers of idiot Witches grew and grew, fueled by mainstream media hype and Hollywood star power to inflate their numbers and dwarf our chivalrous band of light warriors. These monthly "bind Trump and his supporters" rituals today are far more dangerous than they might appear. In my opinion, these Black Magick operations launched at the time of the Black Moon each month are directly magically responsible for the recent tragedy in Las Vegas, where hundreds of Trump supporters were brutally gunned down by sniper(s) firing from an elevated position.

Witch Queen Leslie McQuade and I have been organizing the magical resistance to this monthly onslaught as best we could since last Winter. At first, as a stop gap measure, we used ourselves as living "poppets", magical decoy targets protecting our POTUS and FLOTUS by drawing the evil Magick of the Black Witches off of them and onto ourselves in the Mojave desert, where we could safely neutralize the energy of the attacks on our magical defenses at AΩ temple. As this solution became increasingly dangerous to maintain, we had to switch tactics again, so we began gathering prayer and magical militias each month to help us counter this evil.

The Black Witches strike with Black Moon each month, as the moon disappears into darkness two days prior to New Moon. Our group of light warriors counter this evil with our own synchronized rites each month with the first appearance of the silver crescent 2 days following New Moon. We use prayer and the Magick of Light with the common intention "to liberate humanity from all forms of bondage and enchantment."

You and I are living at a pivotal moment in history. You can best help by adding your power to ours at each New Moon. Use your own Magick, prayer, or whatever is most comfortable to you. What matters is our common intention for the liberation of humanity and that we synchronize our rites each New Moon. Or next unified rites will be on October 21, November 20, and December 20, each at 11:59 PM ET. Everyone is encouraged to use what you do best; pray, invoke, spell cast or drum. What matters is our synchronized rites and our common intention.

Meanwhile, word recently reached us of an ever growing group of Magicians, Witches, Shamans, and Christian prayer warriors spontaneously gathering at the time of our rites each month at the Trump star on Hollywood Blvd. Hopefully, this will grow and the Trump star will become a flash point where women and men of pure heart and noble intent will gather each month to hold the line together against the encroaching Darkness. This month on October 21, Leslie McQuade and I will travel to the Trump star in Hollywood to further investigate and to report live from the event.

The Black Witches and Illuminati slavers have mainstream media and celebrities swelling their numbers each month. Stand with us this and every New Moon as we hold a line against this evil.

Spiritual light warrior, we know you are reading this ...

YOU can make all the difference to help to turn the tide of this battle. At present, we are badly outnumbered and outgunned – and desperately in need of reinforcement.

Light warrior!

Answer the call of your heart and pick up that sword of light. Stand with us, as we face down this evil - for the liberation and ascension of human kind. The forces of darkness are on the move. We confront an enemy so evil they use human sacrifice to fuel their Spells to destroy us.

Shall you pick up that light sword and join us in this struggle?

Or will you leave it laying there to rust and return to a muggle life?

About one thing I am absolutely sure. We must not and can not lose this war. There will be no second chance.

Despite recent victories, our situation remains grim. In this fight, we are the last line of defense, and we are badly outnumbered and outgunned.

In fact, dear light warrior...

YOU - are our only hope!

Introduction by the Author

I was born in Italy, and raised in the 70s and 80s, when Theosophy was available to a whole new audience of spiritual tourists, often experimenting with the wonders of the New Age Movement with drugs and psychedelia. In 1966, four years before my birth, the Church of Satan was established in windy San Francisco by a bunch of Crowleyan Theosophists preparing for the advent of the dark side of the Age of Aquarius and the rise of Lucifer. One of them, in particular, Lt. Colonel Michael Aquino (b.1946) from Psychological Operations, U.S. Army (Ret.) is still an active figure of the Theosophical Society.

There is a passage in The Secret Doctrine, that is only a few lines long on page 389 of Vol. 2, where Illuminati guru Helena Petrovna Blavatsky (1831-1891) explains her own vision of evil and the devil. I find it quite revealing because it shows the necessity for evil in the Illuminati elite of today that follow her teachings: There is no Devil, no Evil, outside mankind to produce a Devil. "Evil is a necessity in, and one of the supporters of the manifested universe. It is a necessity for progress and evolution, as night is necessary for the production of Day, and Death for that of Life -- that man may live forever."

In 1875, the founder of the Theosophical Society that was established at the roots of the New Age phenomena and Modern Satanism, presents an illustration of a flower that is bathed during the day in the scorching heat of the sun, but eventually needs night for the life of the plant to prosper, just as evil is considered by the "illuminated" elite, as a necessity for human beings trapped in the materialistic stage of existence. In my latest book, I want to focus on my most difficult experiences in dealing with demonology and exorcism. Let us explore the devil for a moment, from the Illuminati's point of view, to understand better what I was taught, and what I experienced in my years in the secret societies of the New World Order.

Like most Christians, Muslims, or Jews, we usually believe in a Devil, or in a demonic force of some kind — we can call him Satan, the Adversary, and at times even the Evil One — an entity which I suppose every sincere Christian or Roman Catholic ultimately believes in. The problem is, I am not an ordinary Catholic, but someone born to a family of magicians, alchemists, and hermeticists who embraced some of the distorted teachings of the New Age. Some say the New Age Movement is Christ coming again. That's rubbish, it is Lucifer fully manifesting on this planet to eventually place you in the hands of Satan and a robotic world of soulless zombies. Theosophical teachings originated out of liberal Freemasonry and the Illuminati, which ultimately created the New Age Movement that doesn't oppose Satan because the New Agers and the occultist networks who work for the Jesuits actually serve him and worship him as Lucifer. As the late Fr. Malachi Martin once said, if you deny the existence of Lucifer, you deny the existence of Christ.

Theosophists like to think evil personalities are simply the dark shadows of the Light within, and we must accept this in order to express ourselves in the sphere of matter. For the Theosophist and the vast myriad of New Age sects, we need our dark side to live and prosper in this dimension. This is, of course, pure rubbish and nonsense, coming directly from the demonic realm, that has gradually created a spiritual desert around us in this critical time for humanity's future.

I began talking about Theosophy because it represents all the failed idealistic tendencies of early twentieth-century Europe, where many of our current problems originated from. Currents of thought that created the League of Nations, social democracy, and left-wing youth movements that all derive from Theosophy, vectors of the Counter-Initiation of our time. In New Age we find spiritual materialism and other paths that don't lead to awakening, but claim to. There is a false "Path of Light" that is promised to the candidates of the various secret societies of the modern Illuminati that are complete fools ready to embrace occultism without questioning it, eager to become part of the action.

The dark side of the Illuminati promises their candidates that after entering they will eventually cease to be in conflict with other beings and cease to recognize evil as a problem. For the Illuminati initiate, evil becomes the result of simply not understanding the Cosmic Law of the Universe properly, and Satanism instead is something that was created by religion to limit human potential.

So what is Satanism? While a simple dictionary definition describes it as “the worship of Satan -- the chief spirit of evil and adversary of God,” Vatican expert Professor Carlo Climati argues that, “Satanism is, in fact, an extreme form of pessimism. It is a way of seeing the world as a jungle, where only the strongest survive. A world in which all limits are absent, bad examples are on offer and in which the perfection of television's role models is countered with the search for extremes, for power at all costs.”

Since 2005, the Vatican has offered special training course for priests and novices in the difficult and controversial subject of exorcisms that are guided by various experts in this controversial field. The course takes place every year at Rome's Regina Apostolorum, the prestigious pontifical university based in Rome, Italy, that is focused more on the history, theology, and sociology of Satanism and black magic, underlining the healing power of exorcism without teaching it. Professor Carlo Climati, a layman who was in charge of the first course stated, “There is a growing interest in satanic cults among youth today,” adding, “They hear it in music, they find it on the Internet...” Explaining that “years ago when young people wanted to find out about Satanism, it was difficult. Now it's very easy.”

Though the concept of Satan is probably as old as humanity itself, Professor Climati claims that the spread of its popularity in the world today, has been in part aided by the emergence of both technology, and the New Age movement, which a Vatican pamphlet once described as an individualistic, egoistic and ultimately anti-Christian culture, though Satanism cannot merely be confined to the Christian world.

Initially, this course organized by The Pontifical Athenaeum Regina Apostolorum, an educational institute of the Catholic Church in the mid 2000s, and failed to teach students how to deal directly with the most extreme form of Satanism, being that of demonic possession, but this eventually changed, when it became in the following years a full-on course on

“Exorcism and Prayer of Liberation.”

The course currently organized by the Sacerdos Institute in collaboration with the Group of Socio-Religious Research and Information (GRIS) and the International Exorcists Association (AIE) offers a series of specialized lectures that aim to provide priests and lay people (pastoral workers, psychologists, doctors, teachers, and jurists) with suitable training on a subject like exorcism, and the role of the Prayer of Liberation which is sometimes overlooked and controversial.

The director of the Sacerdos Institute, Fr. Pedro Barraón, explained a couple of years ago that: “Living as we do in a highly secularized society in which there is a tendency – more so than in the past – to embrace occultism and esotericism, diabolical action is favored by magical practices and by people’s recourse to fortune-tellers who can have a real influence stretching as far as possession.”

Unlike in the past, exorcism is no longer understood as a medieval ritual and cases of possession are on the rise, aided more than ever before by the use and abuse of certain drugs, the expansion of the internet, and, of course, video games and Virtual Reality (VR). For this reason, the exorcism course is now also open to interested parties, and professionals who operate outside of the Catholic clergy, like social and healthcare workers who are invited to participate in this battle against evil, even if currently forbidden to practice the Rite of Exorcism reserved to the Catholic clergy under special dispensation by their Bishop. Of course, a series of problems have surfaced, especially after the so-called revision of the Rite in 1999, imposed by the Satanic forces of Liberal Freemasonry that originated in the Second Vatican Council, that authorized the revision of all liturgical books to destroy the Catholic Faith as we know it, following the original plan of Adam Weishaupt’s Illuminati.

They also imposed a radical change to this important weapon of the Church, the Rite of Exorcism, that was originally published in 1614, known as De exorcizandis obsessis a daemonio (“On Exorcising Those Obsessed by a Demon”). Its 1999 revision entitled De exorcismis et supplicationibus quibusdam (“On Exorcisms and Other Supplications”) is deeply compromised. Fighting the devil with bland language and stunted prayers will in no way get the devil to take an exorcist seriously. However, in 2014, the Vatican officially recognized the International Association of Exorcists. The association founded by the late Pauline Fr Gabriele Amorth, an Italian priest renowned for his work in dispelling demons, who was always critical of the 1999 revision.

In 2016, a statement made by the organizers of the now infamous course at the Regina Apostolorum said: “The course, which due to the nature of the subject might lend itself to sensationalism, the course approaches the topic from a sound theology aimed at deepening the theological basis of nature and the action of angels and demons from a Biblical, liturgical, dogmatic, and moral point of view, in an open dialogue with other sciences such as psychology, law and medicine.”

The path to modernity in the Church unfortunately tends to facilitate the devil. Speaking at the Vatican’s annual exorcist training conference in Rome in 2018, Cardinal Ernest Simoni said priests are even delivering prayers of liberation, which is part of the exorcism ritual, over the phone as demand continues to rise. I don’t think demonic possession should be treated in this way because it is often linked to Satanism, as I witnessed myself in my time on the dark side of the Illuminati. Like Professor Climati once said, “Satanism is a global phenomenon, a human problem that transcends all barriers and which can affect anyone, particularly those with a highly sensitive soul who see their strong ideals betrayed in some way or other.”

The rise in Satanism and occultism are the main reasons for the increase in demonic possessions that have affected Freemasonry negatively and infested a growing number of Freemasons, pushing them towards the dark arts, thanks to the influence of New Age guru’s like Satanist, Aleister Crowley. That’s why Masonic historian, and author, Robert Gilbert from the UGLE, wrote a few years ago an unheard warning for all Freemasons about this problem: Fundamentalists invariably bring into their arguments the name of Aleister Crowley: magician, pervert, fraud and, alas, a Freemason, albeit a very irregular Freemason. His antics and his beliefs have no hearing on

*Freemasonry and religion and as a man firmly rejected by the Grand Lodge he could readily be dismissed from the argument. Until now, that is. Crowley was the head of an esoteric Order, the Ordo Templi Orientis, which had, and has, a series of rituals involving sex-magic and a theology based upon Crowley's Book of the Law. This particular 'Holy Book' contains such edifying passages as the following (for uttering which I must apologize): "I am in a secret fourfold word, the blasphemy against all gods of men. Curse them ! Curse them ! Curse them ! With my Hawk's head I peck at the eyes of Jesus as he hangs upon the cross. I flap my wings in the face of Mohammed & blind him. With my claws I tear out the flesh of the Indian and the Buddhist, Mongol, and Din. Bahlasti ! Ompehda ! I spit on your crapulous creeds. Let Mary inviolate be torn upon wheels: for her sake let all chaste women be utterly despised among you."

We can rightly dismiss this as unpleasant adolescent rubbish, but members of the O.T.O. take it seriously. They are also currently seeking, in considerable numbers, to be admitted into regular Freemasonry - and they wish to be obligated upon their own 'Holy Book', the Book of the Law. This has not happened, and will not happen, in this country but some American Grand Lodges are rather less vigilant (or perhaps more lax in their interpretation of the words, 'of good repute'). It is reported (in Newsgroups: alt.freemasonry) that, 'Many of our [O.T.O.] members have also joined Craft masonry as well as AASR [!]. In some Masonic jurisdictions, the VSL for taking an oath by Thelemites has been Liber AL [i.e. the Book of the Law], in recognition of the religious orientation of the OTO member applicants.' I have dutifully drawn this state of affairs to the attention of Grand Lodge, but when fundamentalist antimasons unearth this (as they surely will) we will be hard pressed to justify our inaction in not repudiating the Grand Lodges concerned."

Unfortunately, nothing has changed since Robert Gilbert issued that warning, and Gilbert actually began to collaborate with the Ordo Templi Orientis (O.T.O. for short) after he became involved, more and more, with one of the two leading Golden Dawn branches of today, founded by two ex-O.T.O members, Charles "Chic" Cicero (b.1936) and his wife Sandra Tabatha. Cicero is a very prepared and erudite individual in the realm of hermeticism, but he is also a classic New Age leftist supporter of the O.T.O. and Crowleyanity, which is why this order is in conflict with the other leading branch of the Golden Dawn, led by the more traditional values of Imperator David Griffin. Griffin, who is a big Trump supporter, openly opposes Satanism, Crowley's Thelema, and the O.T.O. as are a growing group of people in both the Masonic and Occult circles who are aware of the demonic conspiracy driven not only by materialistic greed, and ignorance of certain masons; but also by their will to embrace and use demonic forces.

More recently, Gilbert's failure to oppose this meant the Ordo Templi Orientis and other similar sects of the Illuminati Network that were once isolated to the realms of so-called "fringe" Freemasonry and related bodies, were left undisturbed in their infiltration of "Regular" Craft Masonry for a number of years, all the way to the highest levels, often aided by the enormous influence of the New Age Movement, called for some researchers "the bastard son of Theosophy," on Freemasonry today. This means that so-called "Regular" Freemasonry once prevalently Christian, is now unfortunately, becoming the main recruiting ground for deviant forms of Paganism and Satanism, and nobody is really doing anything to stop or change this state of affairs. However, even the O.T.O. practices a bland form of exorcism to dominate the rebel spirits they work with.

In the O.T.O., the Exorcist enters the room and banishes according to Crowley's Liber XXV or the Lesser Banishing Ritual of the Pentagram. For the O.T.O. Illuminati, the traditional practice of exorcism (i.e., of evicting unwanted spirits) is an art and a science in its own right because "No single ritual or formula can cover all the variables that the exorcist may encounter." In this case, the exorcism is always performed by request, and the person requesting the exorcism should be present. If appropriate, this person should actively participate in the ceremony devised by the Illuminati of the O.T.O. as an assistant to the Exorcist himself. During the ritual, the Exorcist from the O.T.O. Illuminati raises a copy of the infamous Stele of Revealing, a central element of the New Age philosophy of Thelema, founded by Theosophist/Satanist Aleister Crowley, and declares in a loud voice: "O thou Spirit N., thy impertinence shall bring thee to destruction, for the God of War and of Vengeance has spied thee with His Hawk's Eye! Flee!" Sure it seems a rather different scenario from the Catholic exorcism, but it demonstrates once again that even the dark Illuminati of the O.T.O. can lose control of their demonic spirits at times, and need to banish, or even destroy them, after falling victim to demonic possession. Demons, are in fact, wicked spirits almost impossible for a human being to fully control, especially today as they use modern technology to their advantage. The word “demon” comes from the Greek daimon, which means “an evil spirit.” “Daimon,” in turn, comes from a root which means “a shadow.” Satan, the supreme alien commander of all demons sends these evil spirits upon earth to bring shadows and darkness upon the spirit of man.

Anyone who does not believe in spirits, will certainly have trouble in accepting the true biblical teachings of God.

We should never forget that demons are actually fallen angels. As Revelation 12:4-9 teaches us, in fact, that one-third of all angels were expelled from heaven because of the original rebellion of Satan against God. These angels joined with Satan in his rebellion and were cast out onto the earth as disembodied demons. And they are still here whether we believe in them or not, as multidimensional creatures ready to enter our body and possess us. Of course, liberal theologians working for the upcoming One World Religion have tried to explain away the existence of demons by something known as the “accommodation theory” almost dismissing it as a primitive and useless form of superstition that has no place in the world today.

Modern theologians, mostly inspired by the Second Vatican Council, who are actually serving the demonic side, want to convince us that the casting out of demons recorded in the New Testament was simply an “accommodating” gesture made by Jesus towards the common people who superstitiously believed that sickness was caused by demons, but that’s a lie, of course. For the liberal and progressive priests of today, the belief that Jesus doesn’t want to upset them in their simplicity and their materialistic ways, goes along with their spurious ideas. Jesus casting out demons, which actually don’t really exist, seems a much more realistic option for their materialistic views. But anyone who believes in the Word of God, cannot possibly accept this heresy that basically rejects the foundation of the Christian Faith.

The more evangelical theologians have generally accepted Biblical statements about Satan —although some of them fail to understand that Satan maintains his curse upon humanity through his hordes of demons, now more than ever involved in the final take over of humanity thanks to advancing technology. Satan finds this necessary because he is not omnipresent, as the Spirit of God is. But believe me, Satan has no shortage of help in 2019 A.D. The numbers of wicked, fallen spirits swarming the earth cannot even be counted these days. According to The Economist, the shortage of clergy trained in exorcism has led to a growing number of independent operators in Europe who will rid people and properties of demons for up to €500 a session.

We are now experiencing a full-on demonic invasion, and for this reason the Vatican-backed International Association of Exorcists, which represents more than 200 Catholic, Anglican, and Orthodox priests, said in 2018 that the increase in demonic possession represented a “pastoral emergency” and according to a priest from Sicily guested on Vatican Radio last year, the number of people in Italy claiming to be possessed has tripled to a half a million a year. While an Irish priest stated that the demand for exorcisms has “risen exponentially” also in Ireland. With this sudden rise in requests for exorcism worldwide, possible abuse cases should be monitored inside and outside of the boundaries of the Catholic Church.

In 2017, the Christian think tank Theos reported that exorcisms were a “booming industry” in the UK, particularly among Pentecostal churches, and I would like to add that the same can be said of the Evangelical churches, but this means the “deliverance ministry” as they call it, becomes at times a form of spiritual abuse if not exercised by honest and experienced exorcists. In the U.S., one of the most famous cases of abuse that took place during the rite of Exorcism in recent years, is the case of Catholic Father Thomas J. Euteneuer, ex-president of Human Life International, and a prominent figure of the Church, who confessed he violated his “chastity” with a woman he was performing an exorcism on. The known exorcist and author admitted “inappropriate conduct” towards this demonically possessed woman, and was eventually forced to resign, as other cases of sexual abuse also surfaced.

However, in this book, I don't want to only write about the dangers of demonic possession for both normal people, and the clergy involved in this epic confrontation, but also show you possible cures for the growing phenomena of possession, too often underestimated as some relict from the past. I will do this by explaining in detail the untold secrets of the Exorcism Rite of the Catholic Church and its recent developments, as well as the strange relation to so-called UFOs, and the new problem of people forced into demonic possession by smartphones, social networking, Artificial Intelligence, and Virtual Reality. Things that we should consider the ultimate Satanic traps, and to avoid them whenever possible.

I obviously dislike Transhumanism, an international philosophical movement implemented by the New World Order and supported by the Jesuits, that advocates for the transformation of the human condition by developing and making widely available sophisticated technologies to greatly enhance human intellect and physiology. Remember, modern-day transhumanists such B.J. Murphy, are self-described Satanists because it's another clear step towards complete enslavement by a digital Satan who will offer many false wonders in order to enslave you. That's why everywhere we see the symptoms of a valorization of reason which excludes or even represses all acknowledgment of religion and the vulnerability of mankind. We are going towards a living hell and only a small minority seem to care. Current Deputy Prime Minister of Italy, Matteo Salvini, is one of them, and recently expressed his own concerns about the problem of Satanic sects in Italy after the open invocation of Satan made by a comedian on National Italian TV (RAI). Salvini even cited the advice of well-known exorcist don Aldo Buonaiuto on the subject. The incredible Satanic stunt similar to many others we saw in recent years in the US, was made on February 2019 by Virginia Raffaele, one of the presenters at the Festival della canzone italiana di Sanremo, the most popular Italian song contest of the year. This demonstrates that Italy, like most of the world, is now completely in the hands of Satanists that have no fear of repercussions from the Pope, or anyone else. and are now starting to publicly worship Satan on TV .

Chapter One

Satan prefers the Catholic Church these days, The mission of Volume 6.66

We are indeed experiencing an unprecedented attack on civilization by demonic forces, and if you decide to sell your soul to Satan in this End Times scenario, there is a variety of hi-tech options on offer from Cyber Satan.

“Perhaps we have arrived at the End Times.” These are the prophetic words said over one year ago, by Cardinal Raymond Burke, one of Pope Francis’ main conservative opposers and internal enemies. Prophetic signs have indeed manifested all over the world, almost weekly in recent years, for those with eyes to see, and not those brainwashed by Satan’s materialistic system of lies and illusions. There is also the growing political tension which could lead, at any moment, to a series of civil wars in the U.S. and Europe, and a World War with China or Russia is always possible.

In regards to the signs of the End Times, in Ezekiel end-of-days prophecy, he foresees the Dead Sea flourishing with life – something that was considered to be impossible due to its high salt content, but only last year, in 2018, it was reported that an Israeli photojournalist, Noam Bedein, had photographed sightings of marine life in small sinkholes around the Dead Sea, as well as clear signs of vegetation growing. Mr Bedein, who works for the Dead Sea Revival Project, to preserve the Sea and other Israeli “water treasures” said the fish prove the water is “anything but dead.” Photos released by the Dead Sea Revival Project show, in fact, tiny fish swimming in water reportedly from the Dead Sea, revealing another important sign of the incoming End Times. We also finally saw in September 2018, the birth of the Red Heifer I talked about in the introduction of Vol.5, as a result of the Temple Institute’s Red Heifer program. An entirely red female calf was born, paving the way for re-establishing the Temple service and marking the final stage of redemption for the Jewish people. One week after its birth, the newborn red heifer was certified by a board of rabbis as fulfilling all the Biblical requirements.

The rabbis emphasized that the heifer could, at any time, acquire a blemish rendering it unsuitable, so they will be inspecting the calf periodically to verify its condition, but this is possibly another verifiable sign of the End Times. Then we have the ongoing internal war in the Vatican, revealing to an astonished world, the true colors of Pope Francis, the first Jesuit Pope and the true leader of the Satanic World Order. Is there still any doubt these are the End Times we are living? In the meantime, Pope Francis told TV2000, the main Italian Catholic broadcasting network that, "Satan is a very smart person," specifying also that "he is very polite, knocks at the door, rings the bell, comes in politely, and in the end comes in with his friends."

It seems like Pope Francis is really talking about himself in this recent statement when describing the "polite" Jesuits that are taking over the Catholic Church and transforming it into Satan's headquarters. Pope Francis also insisted on clarifying the identity of the devil by specifying, "This evil, it's not a diffuse concept, it's a person," and suddenly Bergoglio admitted he is the devil himself while greeting journalists en route to Lithuania in September 2018, by saying: "(Pope John Paul II) was a saint, I am the devil."

By saying this, Francis, seems to be playing a game of hide and seek with the Catholic World, to ultimately reveal his true Satanic identity. This is not a coincidence, my dear readers, trust me. Remember, the common tactic of Satan is to imitate or counterfeit God in order to make himself appear to be like God, including the complete take over of the papacy. What it is commonly referred to as the "unholy trinity," described vividly in Revelation 12 and 13, is no exception. The Holy Trinity consists of God, the Father, the Son, Jesus Christ, and the Holy Spirit. Their counterparts in the unholy trinity are Satan, the Antichrist, and the False Prophet who are now manifesting on Earth for the End Time scenario. While the Holy Trinity is characterized by infinite truth, love, and goodness, the unholy trinity portrays, of course, the diametrically opposed traits of deception, hatred, and unadulterated evil represented by Jorge Mario Bergoglio, the first Jesuit Pope. The revelations of The Book of Revelation are coming to fruition as Pope Francis openly admits he is the Devil.

Remember, the Pope himself said in the interview cited earlier, “With Satan, you can’t argue” and that is exactly what is happening with Antipope Francis, who ignores his critics and refuses to comment on the extensive cover-up of rampant pedophilia in his clergy, while the Satanist liberals are expanding their power and interest in the Church of Rome every day. The mission of this book, written by a person who has been both an exorcist, and the subject of various exorcisms, is to help you understand the dangers of the demonic side that can be found increasingly in the media, in politics, Hollywood, and, of course, in the Catholic Church. Through my own direct experience, I will teach you who to trust in this epic battle between good and evil. Especially during this turning point in human history that will see Artificial Intelligence taking over large parts of humanity to enslave us to the Antichrist.

We are indeed, in a critical time for humanity, that will decide the destiny of the future of our species, so we need to be aware, unlike the majority of the sheeple out there ready to be microchipped and brainwashed by Virtual Reality. Join the real “Resistance” to help establish the Kingdom of God we are all seeking, not the “Technocratic” left-wing Satanic counterfeit, established by liberals like those in Silicon Valley, where we find modern witches and warlocks of this new Cyber Hell, serving the Reign of the Antichrist and his New World Disorder. Slaves of evil, soon in the hands of a Satanic Artificial Intelligence that will dominate every aspect of our lives in cahoots with the dark forces of the New World Order.

Remember skeptics out there, that uncritical acceptance of the grand disruptive schemes that the tech industry is forcing upon us every day, brought us to this point, and will possibly destroy our species. Let’s not forget the HAL computer, which initially was friendly and helpful in “2001: A Space Odyssey” that finally turned out to be no more than an emotionless calculating machine for which human life was of no importance. Today, reality is about to go beyond fiction, with the development of AI that has become the center of all issues. This is indeed at the heart of the current technological revolution and will, without a doubt, grow exponentially, because, after all, it is all part of this unprecedented time in history.

How is Satan hiding in Artificial Intelligence? Together we will search for a solution for the virus of evil that will destroy the world and those who still believe in God, if we don't take action before it is too late. Technology is truly a double-edged sword in this specific moment in the history of mankind. It can do great good, but it can also be used for great evil, and put us all in the hands of Satan in the blink of an eye. So beware, there is a multidimensional cause behind the sinister agenda of the New World Order, and it wants to control you 100%, at all levels, spiritual and material, with the use of technology.

Jesus said that your soul is worth more than the rest of the world and that's what Satan, with his alien army of fallen angels and demons want so badly. Don't ever underestimate the enemies of your soul while you still have one, because once you are microchipped you will no longer have this option. The problem will begin when governments and globalist institutions start forcing you to wear a chip. These microchips are the so-called "Mark of the Beast" and the sooner you realize that the better is it is for the future of your soul. I am often surprised to see some tongue-in-cheek jocularities in news articles recently about this subject because in the end it will be the ultimate turning point for humanity that could end in inhumanity for us all.

FIG. 1– The late Father Gabriele Amorth (1925-2016) teasing the devil

The reason why there are more Satanists in the Catholic Clergy than in the Church of Satan

Today, the devil is lurking in the very heart of the Roman Catholic Church, warned the late Father Gabriele Amorth (1925-2015) in 2009, who is the star of the 2017 award-winning documentary "The Devil and Father Amorth,” by William Friedkin, director of “The Exorcist”. At the time, Father Amorth was the Vatican's chief exorcist and his strong criticism sent shock waves around the world.

The young American actor, author, and conservative political commentator, Michael J. Knowles, has in the following words, brilliantly synthesized the strong connection between Satanism and the Vatican also in light of the recent Catholic sex abuse scandals, in Pennsylvania, and all over the U.S.: Before his death in 2016, the Vatican’s chief exorcist for over a quarter century, Father Gabriele Amorth, observed, “The Devil resides in the Vatican, and you can see the consequences.” We are seeing the consequences now from Pennsylvania and Washington, D.C. all the way up to the College of Cardinals. Fr. Amorth described: “Cardinals who do not believe in Jesus and bishops are linked to the demon.” The Pennsylvania grand jury report relates one instance of ritualized, Satanic abuse of a young boy by four priests. There is some ambiguity regarding the precise nature of the incident owing to page-long reductions in the report. Another priest rinsed out the mouth of a nine-year-old boy he had sodomized with holy water. Yet another priest sodomized another boy with a seven-inch-long crucifix.

We imagined that the Antichrist’s kingdom would be the creation of a Satanic Church, and the conversion of the world’s population to a new Satanic religion, but from the shocking results of the recent investigations into the Catholic Church, we finally understand that the elite of the New World Order is very happy with a Jesuit controlled Church. They don’t want everyone in the world to join Anton LaVey’s Church of Satan, or the more contemporary Satanic Temple of Lucien Greaves, even if these cults are growing a lot in the last few years.

Greaves said in a recent documentary that premiered this year at the Sundance Film Festival: “This is the infancy of The Satanic Temple. In our own humble little way, we are changing the world. It makes much more sense in their eyes to infiltrate and exercise control over a Church that is already in existence, like the influential Catholic Church for example, that has already solidified its power-base globally for centuries, and secretly controls through the Jesuits, most of the Satanic and New Age sects worldwide. No church fits this plan and course of action more perfectly than the Catholic Church, which has been for centuries the most powerful religious force in the world, and in many ways still is in full control of the Illuminati elite of the New World Disorder, thanks to the Jesuits.

The Vatican has already spent billions of dollars dealing with pedophilia cases, this is no secret, and now they might even be on the verge of bankruptcy in the US, after the latest scandals initially unveiled by the Pennsylvania grand jury, show decades of sexual abuse by priests and an extensive cover-up exercised by unscrupulous bishops all over the U.S. working under the control of Satan and his Legion. The Vatican is gradually breaking their silence and admitting the terrible accusations were "criminal and morally reprehensible," but this a farce, and the future of the demonically possessed Catholic Church in the U.S. and the rest of the world is uncertain, as Satan and his Legion expand and influence the ones who don't believe in God and the ones that spread his New Age diableries. Sorcery is on the rise, and Satanic worship is cloaked in this evil rampant surge of the demonic on TV, and in video games, but the Catholic Church stays silent.

In the meantime, children are used in various Satanic rituals by the Catholic hierarchy, and this is finally becoming evident from the Pennsylvania Grand Jury Report. The Vatican claims to be following the word of "God," but as I have reported for years, the practice of Satanism is a huge reality within the Church. Initially, the media laughed at my work, and at my accusations against the Catholic Church, often trying to accuse me of being mentally ill and unstable, even trying to lock me up in mental institutions more than once to ruin my reputation.

Well, they're not laughing now that almost everything I said was exposed, even by the mainstream media, and the Vatican is in an unprecedented state of chaos. These servants of Satan are finally showing to the world with Pope Francis, who they really are. Today, the idea that there is Satanism in the Church hierarchy might still seem far-fetched to those who still believe in fairy tales, or support the intellectual frauds perpetrated by the Jesuits who still control the most prestigious universities. But things are changing now and people are waking up to the truth. For decades, the Satanic conspiracy has been plotting to infiltrate the Church with no opposition. In addition to those Satanists who join the Church as part of a liberal conspiracy to infiltrate and destroy its values, there are also those who originally joined as devout Catholics, but for one reason or another, later become involved in Satanism and pedophilia.

They may have faltered in their faith at some point, or become fascinated with the occult, or the deviant sexual magickal practices of Aleister Crowley while in seminary, and upon confessing this to a fellow priest in confessional, a priest with Satanic connections of course, will later invite him to join one of the secret Illuminati cults that are operating within the Catholic priesthood, or close to it. These are groups, like the Couleuvre Noire, the infamous Ordo Templi Orientis, or The Temple of Set, among many others that I have discussed in detail in the past volumes of my Confessions. Such sects are part of the Illuminati Network of the Satanic New Age. They are working closely with the Jesuits, often aided by certain Occult Zionists operating within the left-wing political frame, supported financially by the Rothschilds or Soros.

If you think about it for a moment, Zionism, aside from the re-establishment of a Jewish homeland in the territory defined as the historic Land of Israel, that is in perfect accordance with Christian Bible prophecy and demands respect for this reason, is both anti-Jewish, and anti-Christian in its essence. Of course, this is a prerequisite for the Second Coming of Jesus, so nothing can be really done about it, as we all consider it an eschatological necessity, but it is also an atheistic repudiation of every characteristic of real Christian principles and the more down-to-earth Jewish principles of altruism, which actually exist in every moderate religious affiliation in the world.

Having said that, I completely disagree with the position of known independent journalists, and Jewish critics, like Adam Green or Henrik Palmgren, who think that Infowarriors, like myself, or my friend Alex Jones, are compromised and Zionist shells, simply because we believe that anti-Zionism, with its antisemitic characteristics, has no place in civil society today. However, many of Israel's founders were, unfortunately, leftist if not full-on Communists as some of them arrived from the Soviet Union. Moses Hess (1812-1875), who was considered the founder of Labor Zionism, was an early proponent of socialism, and a precursor to what would later be called Zionism.

The famous kibbutz is a typical socialist idea for example, and at the same time an Israeli one promoted by the same Labor Zionists who believed that a Jewish state could only be created through the efforts of the Jewish working class settling in Palestine and constructing a state through the creation of a progressive Jewish society with rural kibbutzim. In the diaspora, as well, many Zionists were socialists, and at least two of the founders of the Church of Satan in 1966 (or even three if we count the pedophile Roman Polansky b.1933), were Jewish. I am talking about occult film director, Kenneth Wilbur Anglemyer (b.1927) who renamed himself “Kenneth Anger,” and known Papal Court Jew and clown prince of Satanism Howard Stanton Levey (1939-1997), who rebranded himself “Anton Szandor LaVey,” but ended his evil life in a Catholic institution, fearing for his afterlife like a little girl, even if Satanists contradict this. It seems that all the various leaders of the Illuminati sects out there today, might have a Theosophical origin, but they are, first of all, a bunch of wannabe Jesuits. No wonder Mr. LaVey died in St. Mary's Medical Center, a known Catholic hospital in San Francisco.

On the infiltration of the Theosophical Society by the Jesuits, please read Vol.2 of my Confessions. Regarding the Jewish Faith, Satan is viewed in a slightly different way by Jews, and that could be one of the reasons why it appeals to some of them. In the Jewish Faith Satan is clearly subordinate to God, and is considered a member of His suite (Heb. Bene ha-elokim), who is unable to act without His permission, but nowhere is he in any sense a rival of God, or an independent figure, so evil is almost considered a necessity. After all, if God allowed evil to enter into this universe, it could only be by His sovereign decision.

So let's keep in mind that the background of a Satanist is not always Christian, but typically involves mocking all things Christian, particularly Catholic, but in the end, Anton LaVey, like many other occultists including Aleister Crowley, have always shown their strange obsession for the Catholic Church. Of course, there are also people who genuinely regret having been part of Satanism, but that's rare. Deborah Lipsky who is the author of A Message of Hope: Confessions of an Ex-Satanist, is one of them. Deborah who was born a Catholic but got involved with Satanism as a teenager, returned to the Catholic Church of her youth ten years ago, in 2009.

She said about her experience: You'd be surprised to discover that seemingly respectable citizens in your community are members of Satanic covens, adding, They're people you meet on the street. They're doctors, lawyers, and Indian chiefs. Deborah explained how people invite the demonic into their lives through "portals," stating that: "You can make use of Ouija boards, go to a psychic, attend a séance or try to communicate with ghosts. We can also invite them in when we let ourselves be consumed with anger and refuse to forgive. Demons have the ability to tamper with our thoughts, and lead us into addictions." [\[1\]](#)

Increasing fear of the demonic eventually led Deborah Lipsky to return to the Catholic Church to share her own terrible experiences about Satanism. Deborah did this, obviously not knowing that she probably went back to a much stronger Satanic reality, than the one she left. In the meantime, former Catholic Jack Matirko, a council member of the Satanic Temple of Arizona denounced the Catholic Church last summer in an open letter published on the site Patheos, demanding they erase his name from its roster. In Matirko's letter entitled, "A Personal Reflection on the Pennsylvania Catholic Abuse Scandal," that went viral last summer, Matirko wrote, "I do this as a member in good standing of the Satanic Temple and a practicing Satanist." ... "I cannot in good conscience continue to allow my name, no matter how nominal, to be counted as one of your professed membership. Non Serviam."

Matirko is an ex-Catholic Satanist that doesn't want to associate any longer with the Catholic Church. That's perfectly understandable, but he still seems to defend the Church when he says in the same letter, "I was never abused by my local priest growing up, and never knew anyone who was. [But] the man who baptized me, presided over my father's funeral, and presided over my sister's wedding was, according to the report, a rapist." [\[2\]](#)

Returning to the Pennsylvania Grand Jury Report, it must have indeed shocked Satanist Jack Matirko. Other Catholic Satanists, however, seem to go the other way. David Arias is considered today an exemplary leader among Southern California Catholics. Working in the Hispanic community, and involved in many evangelization efforts in the Diocese of San Bernardino and the Archdiocese of Los Angeles; he was once a member of a Satanic cult he joined when he was still a teenager. After being introduced in high school to the use of the Ouija board, Arias received invitations to “underground” parties, which involved promiscuity and extensive drug and alcohol use. He was then invited to the “Satanic church” (that is presumably not the Church of Satan founded by LaVey). He said there were three steps involved in one’s entrance into this Satanic cult:

- 1) beginners observed rituals,*
- 2) the more experienced participated in sacrifices of animals (such as rats and cats), which included drinking their blood and pronouncing curses on others, and*
- 3) the finalists sacrificed humans. Those murdered could be runaway teens, or the babies of women in the group who got pregnant.*

His group gathered monthly for a “Black Mass,” that he defined as a mockery of the Catholic Mass. Eventually, David Arias, now 40, left and went back to his Catholic faith. Do you understand why there are more true Satanists in the Catholic Clergy today than in the Church of Satan, or any other Satanic institution? It doesn’t matter if Pope Francis is blaming the devil for undermining the Roman Catholic Church. That’s a farce. Just like Pope Francis’ caring ways in front of the cameras, that change dramatically in private, and people are finally waking up to the lies and propaganda of the mainstream media in regards to this Pope.

True Satanism is no longer about destroying the Catholic Church, but rather transforming it into a Jesuit nightmare: The Great Apostasy.

The end of the Church and the rise of Modern Satanism

Last year we witnessed the beginning of the broadest examination ever by a government agency into child sexual abuse in the Catholic Church, the final bullet for a dying Church. “Most of the victims were boys; but there were girls too. Some were teens; many were prepubescent”. The abuse ranged from harassment to rape, “But all of them were brushed aside, in every part of the state, by church leaders who preferred to protect the abusers and their institution above all. As a consequence of the cover-up, almost every instance of abuse we found is too old to be prosecuted. That is not to say there are no more predators,” specified the very grand jury that in 2018 published the results of a long-awaited investigation that began back in 2016, into the Catholic clergy sex abuse in Pennsylvania.

The State Attorney General’s office of Pennsylvania published a roughly 900-page report, that with its exhibits, is over 1300 pages, on sexual abuse in six of the eight dioceses of the state of Pennsylvania: Harrisburg, Allentown, Pittsburgh, Greensburg, Erie, and Scranton (the dioceses of Philadelphia and Altoona-Johnstown were deliberately excluded, since similar investigations had already been conducted in the Obama years without much coverage in the mainstream media). The investigation involved a period of 70 years, documenting around 300 priests who abused at least 1,000 victims, but this is apparently only the tip of the iceberg. The Catholic Church was forced to reveal there are thousands of victims, as the grand jury itself admitted to the public. This is only a small part of the massive Satanic cover-up orchestrated by the Catholic hierarchy in Pennsylvania and in the rest of the US, that if fully revealed could jeopardize the very existence of the Catholic Church in the United States, demonstrating once more that this is much worse than we could ever imagine.

This is another possible reason for silencing and deplatforming Infowars in 2018, aside from their support of guns that the New World Order wants to desperately eliminate in the near future, so they can launch without resistance, their robocop army controlled by the Satanic A.I., as they did in Dubai in 2017. Dubai Police are investing heavily in artificial intelligence to help predict crime and accidents, alleviate traffic congestion and even power robocops, but, of course, this is only the start of this upcoming nightmare. Regarding Alex Jones's project, it is the main independent news outlet in the U.S. that has been investigating the real evil of the Catholic Church in recent years, so it is still considered to be a big threat to the Jesuit-driven New World Order that protects all the elite pedophile networks operating around the world.

YouTube, for example, has already employed a number of strategies to suppress content that its owners have branded "conspiratorial," "hateful" or otherwise contrary to the company's Silicon Valley value system - including demonetizing videos and deplatforming controversial content creators like InfoWars.

They are scared so they use censorship, dirty tricks, and Gestapo-like tactics as in the recent Roger Stone arrest, to silence the truth because words are, of course, more dangerous than guns for the Jesuit driven New World Order. Remember, the Pennsylvania Grand Jury believe that the real number of children who have not filed a report or whose complaints against the Catholic Church pedos have been lost, is in the "thousands."

Not one thousand, but thousands more, and this happened because time after time, many brutalized victims, failed to come forward to denounce the Catholic Church for fear of reprisal by the Vatican, and the once powerful Catholic community, that also includes the Italian and Irish mafia, often used by the Catholic Church and the Jesuits, to silence their opponents, or to cover-up their scandals. The U.S. Catholic bishops that now express, "shame and sorrow" for this new chapter of the never-ending pedophilia scandal, are unfortunately, the same hypocrites that once aided the cover-up of this mess, or were actually involved themselves. "There have been other reports about child sex abuse within the Catholic church, but never on this scale," stated the shocked members of the Pennsylvania jury.

This incredible affair is bigger than we could have imagined. So let's not forget it, or become brainwashed to believe it's all over in the coming months and years. As the late author and researcher, William H. Kennedy, who died in August 2013 under mysterious circumstances, wrote in his book Lucifer's Lodge: Satanic Ritual Abuse in the Catholic Church: Satanism has always been a dark cloud lurking in the background of the Roman Catholic Church. That cloud is in the process right now of overshadowing the Church, of overwhelming it with its power and taking control. Meanwhile the Satanic apologists, including those who pose as spokesmen for the Church, are working overtime to convince everyone that there is no such thing as Satan, and most especially no Satanic conspiracy, urging us to ignore the sulfurous odor that lingers around the current Church child abuse charges.

In 1996, Kennedy teamed up with famed Catholic priest, novelist, and exorcist the late Fr. Malachi Martin (author of Hostage to the Devil), Fr. Charles Fiore (a "traditional" Catholic priest), and Fr. Alfred Kunz, to investigate charges of pedophilia within the Catholic Church, years before the scandal broke out. Unfortunately, since then, all three died under mysterious, and at times tragic circumstances, including Fr. Malachi. All three are victims of the demonic forces now residing in the Vatican.

In the end, we have to admit that today, the ultimate Satanist, the real hierarchy of Satan, can be found more easily within the hierarchy of the Catholic Church, than in any counter-cultural wannabe organization of Satanists like the Church of Satan, or in more recent years, The Satanic Temple.

Such groups were built by the elite to promote a wide acceptance of Satanism in our society, but also to deviate the attention from the real Satanists who operate from the heart of the Vatican every day, hidden in the upper echelons of the clergy. Sometimes I think it is really hard to know just where the Catholic Church of today really stands when it comes to the devil. There is a growing group of priests, especially in South America, that practice in secret, rogue exorcism practices in which they actually communicate with demons, possessing people, rather than chasing them out, as the standard accepted practice in Catholic exorcisms traditionally dictates. This way such groups become deeply involved with Satan and his Legion, losing their battle with evil and forming a sort of alliance. Particularly revealing in recent times, is a series of videos that appeared on the internet a couple of years ago, that show exorcisms performed by The Heralds of the Gospel, often using exorcist practices and prayers not officially authorized by the Catholic Church.

They include purported conversations between exorcists and the devil, which is considered a no-no in standard exorcism procedures because you are quickly lead to demonic possession yourself.

Even if Catholics at times think that God does permit human spirits to interact with the living, it usually ends up in a disaster for most, so it is better to avoid it. “Woe to the exorcist if he loses himself behind curious questions, which the ritual expressly forbids, or if he lets himself be led into a discussion with the devil as he is the master of lies,” said once Vatican expert and media expert, Andrea Tornielli, who presently coordinates the Vatican media, largely quoting the words of the Church’s most famous exorcist, the late Father Gabriele Amorth (1925-2016) featured in the Netflix documentary film directed by William Friedkin, who directed “The Exorcist.” We can say that exorcism and the Catholic Church, seem inseparable in the eyes of most people, also because of films like these, and, of course, the church’s own proclamations of exclusivity on this mysterious and powerful rite.

But to be honest, the earliest evidence of exorcism predates Christianity; and exorcism is practiced in almost all religions, even Satanism and Wicca. The main difference is that Jesus was, and is, still the number one exorcist, and such a role figured prominently in the synoptics' portrait of him, and can scarcely be denied, even by skeptics and atheists. “Jesus exorcisms were not merely isolated incidents of compassion for individuals oppressed by malevolent forces. They were direct confrontations of the power and the presence of the Kingdom of God. The success of Jesus’ assaults indicated that the head of that evil kingdom had already been bound, making possible the spoiling of his domain.”^[3] an authority because he was the authority. However, it was common for exorcists of the first century to use powerful names in order to force demons out in Acts 19:13-16 the names of both Jesus and Saint Paul, were invoked as “power names” to cast out demons. Recently, my friend David Griffin, Emperor of the Alpha Omega Rosicrucian Mystery School and the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn, sent me something I would like to share with you in regards to this topic: It is clear that Jesus knew of and used common magical techniques of his time, because the gospels of Mark and John note them in some detail. For example, Mark explains that Jesus taught with “authority” unlike the scribes. “Now there was a man in their synagogue with an unclean spirit. And he cried out, saying, ‘Let us alone! What have we to do with You, Jesus of Nazareth? Did You come to destroy us? I know who You are—the Holy One of God!’ But Jesus rebuked him, saying, ‘Be quiet, and come out of him!’

And when the unclean spirit had convulsed him and cried out with a loud voice, he came out of him. Then they were all amazed, so that they questioned among themselves, saying, “What is this? What new doctrine is this? For with authority he commands even the unclean spirits, and they obey Him.” — Mark 1: 21-28

The word Mark uses for authority (exousia) refers specifically to the belief that some people have supernatural powers and Mark clearly specifies the “authority” in question. “Jesus commands unclean spirits and they obey him.”

Jesus demonstrates his “authority” over spirits in Mark 3:20-30...

"And the scribes who came down from Jerusalem said, ‘He has Beelzebub,’ and, ‘By the ruler of the demons He casts out demons.’ So He called them to Himself and said to them in parables: ‘How can Satan cast out Satan? If a kingdom is divided against itself, that kingdom cannot stand. And if a house is divided against itself, that house cannot stand. And if Satan has risen up against himself, and is divided, he cannot stand, but has an end. No one can enter a strong man’s house and plunder his goods, unless he first binds the strong man. And then he will plunder his house.’

'Assuredly, I say to you, all sins will be forgiven the sons of men, and whatever blasphemies they may utter; but he who blasphemes against the Holy Spirit never has forgiveness, but is subject to eternal condemnation'—because they said, “He has an unclean spirit.” –Mark 3:22-30

After clarifying that his superior “authority” is rooted in spirit, not some demon, Jesus rebukes them for blasphemy against the Holy Spirit by their accusation.

Next, Mark tells us of Jesus casting out an unclean spirit in a procedure that has a striking number of points in common with the manipulation of demons described in other ancient magick sources:

"And when He had come out of the boat, immediately there met Him out of the tombs a man with an unclean spirit...When he saw Jesus from afar, he ran and worshiped Him. And he cried out with a loud voice and said, “What have I to do with You, Jesus, Son of the Most High God? I implore You by God that You do not torment me.” For He said to him, “Come out of the man, unclean spirit!” Then He asked him, “What is your name?”

And he answered, saying, “My name is Legion; for we are many.” Also he begged Him earnestly that He would not send them out of the country. Now a large herd of swine was feeding there near the mountains. So all the demons begged Him, saying, “Send us to the swine, that we may enter them.” And at once Jesus gave them permission. Then the unclean spirits went out and entered the swine (there were about two thousand); and the herd ran violently down the steep place into the sea, and drowned in the sea. –Mark 5:2, 6-13

With what we know of exorcism in the ancient magick of Jesus’ time, the above story shares the following features in common:

- 1. The imagery of binding demons*
- 2. The reference of the man as “demon possessed”*
- 3. The threat of torture*
- 4. The demand that the demon tell its name*
- 5. The casting of the demons into swine.*

The "Greek Magical Papyri," (or PGM) and other surviving "Magick" documents from the period of Jesus’ lifetime, clearly show other examples of this pattern in casting out demons, the sort of Magick that Jesus was tried and executed for by the Romans. Before Christ, in The Testament of Solomon, a pseudepigraphical work ascribed to King Solomon, the ruler of Israel interrogates a demon who appears like a stately lion. The demons identifies himself as “The Lion-Shaped Demon, an Arab by descent” who “sneaks in and watches over all who are lying ill with a disease and I make it impossible for man to recover from his taint.”^[4]

In addition, this demon has legions of demons at his command at the time of the setting sun. “I have another activity. I involve the legions of demons subject to me for I am at the places (where they are) when the sun is setting. The name for all demons which are under me is legion.”^[5]

When Solomon asks how he can be cast out of a person, the demon replies “By the name of the one who at one time submitted to suffer many things (at the hands) of men, whose name is Emmanouel, but now he has bound us and will come to torture us (by driving us) into the water at the cliff. As he moves about, he is conjured up by means of three letters.”^[6]

These entities have been with us for a long time. A number of prayers and practices against the demonic exist in all religious traditions, but with Jesus, we always seem to find the ultimate solution to the problem. I witnessed myself long lines of practicing Muslims, during my time in Cairo in 2003, going to visit a Coptic Christian Church every week in the Mokattam hills above an informal district of Cairo, waiting patiently to be exorcised.

In a country like Egypt, exorcism sessions performed for Muslims by Coptic priests inside churches, is for sure, a show of strength for this minority religion in Egypt. I also witnessed in Cairo, Egyptian Muslims (including men), being exorcised by a powerful Orthodox Greek religious woman known as Madame Fula, operating under the patronage of the Coptic Orthodox Church of Alexandria. It seems that when it comes to the demonic, Islam might not have the same appeal of Christianity, at least in Egypt.

When I went to Cairo, I was exorcised from all the malevolent forces that were after me at the time by a certain Madame Fula, a known exorcist working for the powerful Boutros Ghali family. For a period of time, thanks to the protection and support of the Boutros Ghali's who invited me to Egypt in November 2003, I managed to fight the Satanic forces instigated against me by the darkest side of the Illuminati that were trying to destroy me while living in Norway. For some reason, still unknown to me, the Norwegian Illuminati Grand Master Nicholaj de Mattos Frisvold, a dangerous Satanist, now living in Brazil where he collaborates with people like the recently arrested psychic healer João de Deus ("John of God"), wanted me to take over the Order, and nominate myself High Priest of the Satanic Illuminati. Frisvold, a left-wing activist related to General Sigurd Frisvold, who was serving at the time as Chief of the General Staff of the Armed Forces of Norway, is a sick man with powerful connections, who is secretly involved in Satanic activities with a number of Catholic bishops around the world. He never understood the real nature of my work that, of course, I never entirely revealed to him, but this is part of what he wrote to me, on the 24th of September 2003, before I left for Egypt: "Your true agenda is to go to Egypt with all these elements from the occult world you consider to be important and you will install yourself at the foot of the Pyramid as the Highpriest of Isis, Osiris, and Anubis and more or less take over the world. Because this is what Cagliostro, your ancestor did. Going over the talks we have had in the past I remembered your perplexity after watching that movie, "Revelation" about the second coming of Christ. I had no idea that you took this seriously to be the revelation of Leo Zagami Cagliostro! But this is your true intent with the Cairo-trip, it is for people to see this insanity in full flower." Remember, this is the same guy who writes in his secret Illuminati Satanic teachings perverse things like: "Certain forms of sexual magick, based on the planets or the kalas where the transformed mass of fire can be aimed at some enemy possibly through some kind of lycanthropic formulae. These lycanthropiq formulas are used within branches of La Couleuvre Noire mainly for the purpose of magickal attacks." Adding later on in the same text: "The strange sexual magick teaching is flavored in a weird high-octave Uranian context hidden in the true and secret understanding of the XI-level of spiritistick coitus."

Well, there was no "insanity in full flower" in Egypt, but with teachings like this, Frisvold is nuts because there was no intention on my side to take over the world. My only plan was to eventually exorcise the evil forces within the dark side of the Illuminati, as I explained a few days after I received Frisvold's mail to Illuminati and Freemason, Tony Henley in the headquarters of the U.G.L.E. in Great Queen Street during a lodge meeting of Kirby lodge 2818. The exorcism of Madame Fula in Cario finally unveiled the alleged presence of 230 demons in my body sent by Nicholaj Frisvold during one of his Black Masses in Oslo, that were all eliminated during the exorcism. The demons sent by Frisvold included among them a very powerful one, that when captured with others by Madame Fula using molten lead, that manifested as a horned beast visible to the naked eye. Typically molten lead or tin is dropped into a small bowl placed above your head during the exorcism, where it then hardens immediately and captures in the process the demons infesting your body. This unusual process is known in various cultures and is also a method of divination called molybdomancy. The rituals vary, but they always involve an old wise woman pouring molten lead into water over your head.

FIG. 5 – Molybdomancy in Turkey

Modern researchers from Ankara University performed a study of the effects of this tradition on the health of women and they reported the risks of antimony poisoning and lead poisoning, but trust me guys, that was the least of my problems when Madame Fula was performing her exorcism on me. She brushed off the demons with an old wooden brush before pouring the molten lead. This was indeed a very refreshing moment for my soul, knowing that I was finally in the hands of Jesus in what is considered one of the oldest Christian institutions in the world. According to its tradition, the Coptic Church was established by Saint Mark, an apostle and evangelist, during the middle of the 1st century (c. AD 42).

Earlier, I had been in contact with another person spiritually working for the Boutros Ghali family, called Dr. Safuat a self-described Sufi. We met for the first time in London, in a small cafe on Edgware Road, where I was staying for a few days before leaving for Egypt in November 2003. I had been talking on the phone with Safuat for a few months before meeting him. He seemed a good guy, and he operated on me with a Sufi chain of prayer to guarantee my spiritual protection and my safe arrival in Cairo with great success. Without the help of people like him, or Madame Fula, as well as others, who spiritually protected me from the early attacks of powerful Satanists like Frisvold, I would probably not be here writing to you today. My war with the Devil, and his representatives on Earth, has never been an easy one. Imagine the kind of pressure and the threats I had to fight when I began to rebel to this evil destiny in 2003, and gradually planned the disclosure project I finally unveiled in 2006 with my online blog Confessions of an Illuminati. For this reason, I want to show you in this Volume, for the first time, the only positive mail I ever received back in September 2003, when I started my now almost legendary confrontation with the dark side of the Illuminati.

The mail in question is from Othon Matagaras, one of the former members of the Illuminati lodge I once directed in London under the auspices of the South American/German Fraternitas Rosicruciana Antiqua, an initiatic body very close to the O.T.O. founded by Illuminati Arnold Krumm-Heller. Othon never turned his back on me like all the others, even if we were never to meet again because of his membership in the O.T.O. Reading the following mail after all these years, makes me feel a real sense of fraternity was somehow established in my lodge, and a spark of Christian light was found even on the dark side:

Dear brothers and sisters

I feel sad and disappointed for the way that things have evolved concerning the FRA - Cagliostro Lodge.

I want to make sure that you realize , as most of you already know, that I was never interested (and never will be) in political debates and unnecessary language when it comes to spiritual organizations.

I currently observe all this from a distance and do not wish to take any drastic decisions.

Furthermore, I do not wish to disassociate myself with the FRA since I have deep respect for all its members. However, I am not going to become bro.Leo's new executor since I have always learned not to turn my back to a brother. And I prefer to keep it that way.

To this extent anyway, bro. Leo has been to my opinion a very inspiring and hard-working teacher.

In Thelema,

bro. Othon

Thank you Othon for your kind words, I hope life has treated you well since then, but let's get back to today.

Not so long ago, I met someone from my past, a DJ friend of mine called Andrea, from Sardinia. I had not seen him since 2005, but the first thing he said to me was: “You did exactly what you told me in London in our last meeting when you were planning your disclosure project. I take my hat off to you for being so consistent.”

I was glad to hear that from an old friend, especially after all the sacrifices I had to make in order to free myself from all the connections to the dark side thanks to Jesus, a great King above all.

Nuns, Priests, and Celibacy helped create the Black Mass

Last year, The Nun, an American gothic supernatural horror film directed by Corin Hardy, came out worldwide as the fifth installment in The Conjuring Universe, a series of American horror films that have in recent years presented a dramatization of the real-life cases of Ed and Lorraine Warren, two known paranormal investigators and authors, associated with prominent yet controversial cases of haunting. This film, that was probably inspired by one of the most shocking recent cases of exorcism, that took place in 2005, when a Romanian nun who'd been gagged and bound to a crucifix in a room at her convent was found dead. The priest who had been performing the insane exorcism was later charged with murder.

Immediately after watching the film, I decided to write a few words about the dark side of the nuns of the Catholic Church. It has been called "the last taboo" of the Roman Catholic Church, I am talking about nuns sexually abused by priests and bishops on a regular basis, that, unfortunately, became later the abusers and the depraved in the hands of Satan. This transformed the supposedly innocent nuns into something out of a horror movie. One nun recently stated to the Associated Press that what she witnessed, "opened a great wound inside of me" adding, "I pretended it didn't happen." The abuse of nuns is definitely another big problem that the Roman Catholic Church is dealing with in the End Times, and has tried to bury this secret for way too long. In 2001, my friend, Philip Willan, a journalist who lives in Rome, revealed to The Guardian that, "Roman Catholic priests and bishops in several parts of the world have been exploiting their religious authority to obtain sexual favors from nuns, in some cases resorting to rape and subsequently obliging the victims to seek an abortion. Reports of widespread sexual abuse were compiled by two senior nuns between 1994 and 1998 and passed to the Vatican, reported by La Repubblica and the Italian Roman Catholic news agency Adista." [7]

Unfortunately, justice didn't prevail after Willan's shocking article, but after decades of silence, the Associated Press now reports that a growing number of nuns from all over the world are finally coming forward with reports of sexual abuse by the Catholic hierarchy.

The Associated Press admits that the Vatican has been aware of the problem for a long time, but has done nothing to stop it. The new erupting scandals involving nuns is yet another sign of decadence and of demonic possession for the Vatican, that is already struggling with pedophilia scandals surfacing across the globe almost daily. The cases of sexually abused nuns that are emerging involve the continents of Europe, Africa, South America, and Asia, showing that the problem is global, especially in Third World countries where it seems like another form of sexual slavery, thanks to the status of second class citizens that are given to women in the Catholic church.

However, some nuns are now making their voices heard, showing that it's not only children that fall victim to sexual abuse when there is an imbalance of power in a relationship, something we have often noticed in the past in sectarian realities. The Catholic nuns are beginning to publicly denounce years of inaction by church leaders, even though major studies on the problem in Africa were reported to the Vatican in the 1990s. The problem was completely ignored by Pope John Paul II and Joseph Ratzinger, the powerful Prefect of the Sacred Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith in charge of the Catholic doctrine, during that time. Wearing her religious habit and grasping a rosary in her hand, a nun revealed to the Associated Press, that back in the year 2000, a priest that was taking her confession sexually assaulted her in the middle of the sacrament. This was not the only assault, and a subsequent approach by another priest a year later finally led her to stop going to confession with a priest other than her spiritual father, who lives in another country.

The extent of systematic abuse against nuns from around the world is yet unclear, however, this week, about a half a dozen sisters from a small religious congregation in Chile came out with their stories of abuse on National TV, and how their superiors did absolutely nothing to stop it. A nun in India recently presented a formal complaint to the police accusing a bishop of rape, which would have been unthinkable only a year ago. New cases in Africa have emerged periodically; in 2013, for example, a well-known priest in Uganda wrote a message to his superiors that referred to a number of "priests romantically involved with religious sisters," which he was promptly suspended for by the Church until he apologized in May of last year.

The Vatican has remained silent on what measures have been taken to assess the extent of the problem at a global level, or to punish the guilty, explaining that, "It is up to the local Church leaders to sanction the priests who sexually abuse nuns." Last June, the French newspaper Le Parisien revealed a potential "huge scandal" for the Catholic Church, summarizing some of the cases involved to include; "a nun raped by a monk in a monastery, a nun who was the victim of a priest in the confessional room," and "a nun who was sexually assaulted by another sister of her own congregation."

In a great majority of cases, the nuns remain silent, and if they eventually recount their ordeal, it's only because they have left the church. The phenomenon is considered to be "much wider" than previously imagined, explained Francois Devaux president of the French association La Parole Liberee, pointing a finger at those "priests who abuse their position of spiritual authority to take sexual advantage of others." But as you know, it is widely believed that those who are victims of sexual abuse will eventually become abusers themselves.

This seems to be the case in the infamous abuse scandal of the Sisters of Mercy that took place in various parts of the world. In 1999, the Irish government established a non-statutory commission to inquire into child abuse by the religious institute of Catholic women founded in 1831 in Dublin, Ireland by Catherine McAuley (1778–1841). The report recognized that “the issue of sexual abuse did not feature as prominently in the evidence in relation to schools run by the Sisters of Mercy as it did in relation to schools run by other religious communities,” but it concluded that other forms of abuse occurred.

In May 2006, the Sisters of Mercy published an apologetic document entitled The Influence of Religious Values and/or Religious Life of the Sisters of Mercy on the Management of Industrial Schools, describing ways their religious order's culture and practices may have adversely affected the care of children in their facilities.

This, and other episodes occurring around the world, show that nuns can be truly scary after all. Last year, in 2018, police in Scotland arrested and charged Catholic nuns, and a number of other former staff, in an investigation into alleged child abuse at a Catholic children's home run by the Daughters of Charity of St Vincent de Paul, until it closed in 1981. The nuns are among twelve people who have been charged by Scottish detectives investigating detailed allegations of systematic physical and sexual abuse of children over many decades at Smyllum Park in Lanark. The allegations of abuse at Smyllum Park, included claims of “Satanic” rituals that took place at the home, and have been at the center of a long-running official public inquiry into child sexual abuse that occurred at children's homes in various parts of Scotland. The nuns repeatedly beat and punched all the children, verbally abusing and humiliating them for wetting beds, and often left them without food, all signs of a Satanic discipline being forced upon the poor innocent victims. Later, both male and female members of the staff sexually abused the children they had in care one by one. This is pure Satanism. They are servants of the devil, not genuine nuns.

So what is a genuine nun? The problem is that part of being human is being a sexual person — humans are attracted to other people, have romantic feelings and sexual urges. Nuns are no different; however, like their fellow priests, they chose not to act upon these natural, sexual feelings and urges, often falling into the vicious trap of abuse and evil, inflicted and perpetrated, generation after generation, on innocent victims. A condition that will one day without the necessary cures, and support, transform many of them into vicious sexual predators that often fall in the hands of Satanists for their rituals. Pope Francis said in January 2019 that he still opposes making priestly celibacy optional, however, he may consider allowing married men to be ordained priests in remote areas. This sounds completely demented. Pope Francis speaking to journalists on the flight back from World Youth Day in Panama, said he would not allow optional celibacy in the Latin Church in a way similar to the practice of the Eastern Catholic churches. The Pope said he personally believes that “celibacy is a gift to the Church.”

But why is the Jesuit Pope only open to male exceptions in regards to celibacy? Why not make it voluntary all together, for both nuns and priests? This way, we will have only true holy people, and future saints, practicing celibacy and clerical continence for the benefit of mankind, and the Church will go back to being a community of real Christians; instead of having the Church of today, hostage to a gay lobby and their pedophile friends serving the devil. Maybe that’s why Bergoglio said: “When it comes to the Latin rite, a phrase said by St. Paul VI comes to mind: ‘I would rather give my life than change the law on celibacy.’”

But as I demonstrated to you in Volume 5 of my Confessions, everybody in Italy knows that Pope Saint Paul VI canonized on the 14th of October 2018, had a gay lover called Paolo Carlini (1922-1979), a known Italian actor. I remember when a little over ten years ago, Hollywood actress Natalie Portman turned down the role of a young nun in the movie “Doubt” because she couldn’t wrap her head around the character being celibate, and she was right. The belief that religious figures should be celibate began long before the birth of Christianity. Ancient Druid priests were thought to have been celibate and Aztec temple priests were expected to remain sexually abstinent. Other pre-Christian sects mandated that the people chosen for their sacrificial offerings must be pure, meaning that they had never engaged in sex. Jesus lived a chaste life and never married and at one point in the Bible is referred to as a eunuch (Matthew 19:12), though most scholars believe that this was intended metaphorically and many scholars dispute that.

On the issue of the sexuality of Jesus, the traditional understanding of Christian churches is that Jesus did not marry and remained celibate until his death. That has not prevented speculation about alternative theories of his sexuality. The Gospels and the New Testament reveal little on this subject. The implication was that Jesus lived a celibate life as a eunuch and for this reason many of his disciples were also chaste and celibate. It's true the discipline of clerical continence goes back to the Apostles, but what about the nuns? It was Paul, (who never met Jesus), whom in his first letter to the Corinthians, recommends celibacy also for women starting the new trend for the future nuns: "To the unmarried and the widows I say that it is well for them to remain single as I do. But if they cannot exercise self-control, they should marry. For it is better to marry than to be aflame with passion." (1 Cor. 7:8-9) The early Christian church had no hard and fast rule against clergy marrying and having children. St. Peter, a Galilee fisherman, whom the Catholic Church considers the first Pope, was married.

Some Popes were the sons of Popes. The first written mandate requiring priests to be chaste came in AD 304. Canon 33 of the Council of Elvira stated that all "Bishops, presbyters, and deacons and all other clerics" were to "abstain completely from their wives and not to have children." A short time later, in 325, the Council of Nicea, convened by Constantine, rejected a ban on priests marrying requested by Spanish clerics. The practice of priestly celibacy began to spread in the Western Church in the early Middle Ages. In the early 11th century, Pope Benedict VIII responded to the decline in priestly morality by issuing a rule prohibiting the children of priests from inheriting property. A few decades later, Pope Gregory VII issued a decree against clerical marriages. The Catholic Church was a thousand years old before it definitively took a stand in favor of celibacy in the twelfth century at the Second Lateran Council held in 1139, when a rule was approved forbidding priests to marry. In 1563, the Council of Trent reaffirmed the tradition of celibacy.^[8]

Less than a century later, the perverted nature of the clergy began to emerge, and in France a number of Catholic priests (including one whose work was uncovered by Church authorities, forcing him into exile), as well as the infamous Abbé Étienne Guibourg (c. 1610 – January 1686), who was a French Roman Catholic abbé, started performing a series of Black Mass rituals for the French aristocracy featuring child sacrifice. According to later accounts, confessions and trials, Guibourg performed a series of Black

Masses with Catherine Monvoisin (known as La Voisin), later arrested. The most famous of these were performed for Marquise of Montespan, better known as Madame de Montespan, around 1672-3. Upon the arrest of La Voisin, investigators discovered the corpses of 2,500 infants buried in her yard, most likely all sacrificed during the Black Mass rituals. It was alleged that La Voisin had paid prostitutes for their infants for use in the rituals. [\[9\]](#)

Rev. Montague Summers (1880-1948), an English author and clergyman, gives the following account of one such ritual:

A long black velvet pall was spread over the altar, and upon this the royal mistress laid herself in a state of perfect nudity. Six black candles were lit, the celebrant robed himself in a chasuble embroidered with esoteric characters wrought in silver, the gold paten and chalice were placed upon the naked belly of the living altar [...] All was silent save for the low monotonous murmur of the blasphemous liturgy [...] An assistant crept forward bearing an infant in her arms. The child was held over the altar, a sharp gash across the neck, a stifled cry, and warm drops fell into the chalice and streamed upon the white figure beneath. The corpse was handed to la Voisin, who flung it callously into an oven fashioned for that purpose which glowed white-hot in its fierceness.

Summers provides a further account of the incantation used by Guibourg himself: Astaroth, Asmodeus, princes of friendship and love, I invoke you to accept the sacrifice, this child that I offer you, for the things I ask of you. They are that the friendship and love of the King and the Dauphin may be assured to me, that I may be honored by all the princes and princesses of the Court, that the King deny me nothing I ask whether it be for my relatives or for any of my household. [\[10\]](#)

A Priest in the Roman Catholic Church is considered to have received authority directly from the Pope in Rome, God's representative on earth. Because of this, during the Mass, the priest has the power to consecrate the Host and the Wine, so that they are transformed in the material world into the body and blood of Christ, but there are other powers the priest has. Besides talking directly to God and causing God and the angels to intervene in the world of man, a priest also has the power to talk to Satan and to demons. He could exorcise Satan and demons from a person, and also make them do his Will in other ways - he has the power to control them. One particular grimoire, The Grimoire of Honorius, was designed for use specifically by Catholic priests, and includes saying the Mass and consecrating the Host as part of Satanic rituals. So after all this, do you still believe in the value of celibacy for the Catholic clergy of today? Personally, I don't. Pope Francis, and his lobby of pedophiles and perverts operating at the highest levels of the Catholic Church today, also know this very well, and that's why they will never normalize things by abolishing celibacy for the unwilling. The Pope, aka "The False Prophet," prefers to leave a door wide open for his Satanic Legion. In fact, he said on the same plane back from Panama, that people need to realize that "the problem of abuse will continue." Adding. "It is a human problem, a human problem [that is] everywhere." [\[11\]](#)

In February 2019 Pope Francis finally admitted that sexual abuse of nuns by priests – up to and including "sexual slavery" – is an ongoing problem in the scandal-plagued Catholic Church, but stresses that the Vatican is "working on it." He made this admission on board the Papal plane on his way back from Chrislam's first gathering in the United Arab Emirates, acknowledging for the first time the sexual abuse of nuns by priests and bishops.

Chapter Two

We are the people of the Apocalypse, Cardinal Pell: Satan's Little Helper

When Cardinal Pell, who was at the time in charge of the Vatican finances, became the most senior Catholic Church cleric in the world to face accusations of pedophilia, the world was astounded at the malevolent state of the Catholic Church. Actually, it hasn't been this bad since the Borgias in Medieval times, and an even bigger scandal, the possible bankruptcy of many Vatican business ventures, often due to careless investments, others to dodgy deals and money laundering is also something that is emerging. Pope Francis's predecessor, Benedict XVI, had stopped offshore financial refuge to the Vatican by agreeing to more stringent international controls to prevent money laundering, but he lacked the energy to overcome Curial resistance to reform. However, the biggest problem in Vatican finances is the growing request for compensation by the victims of pedophilia.

While you can't put a price on the innocence of a child, you can put a price on just how much the Roman Catholic Church has paid out in lawsuits over the never-ending epidemic of child molestation wreaking havoc in its ranks. According to Jack and Diane Ruhl of the National Catholic Reporter, who decided to research this particular topic, since 1950, the Vatican has spent a disgusting $3,994,797,060.10. That's nearly $4 billion to keep things hush-hush. That number may even be a bit conservative, as we cannot know for sure the agreed upon "under the table" amount. The figure is based on a three-month investigation of data, which includes a review of over 7,800 articles from LexisNexis Academic and NCR databases and information from BishopAccountability.org. Reports from the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops were also used. If the amount of money dished out was divided evenly among the U.S.'s 197 dioceses, each one would get almost $20 million. This is an incredible amount of cash from hard working people who support the good faith and intentions of the Church — people who are parents to little boys being sexually abused — are being used to cover-up unfathomable crimes executed by priests. ^[12]

Of course, I respect the Catholic faith even if I am critical of it, I was born a Catholic even if not a believer in the current administration of the Church, but it's more evident each day that the Holy See is losing control of their façade, and the last glimpse of honor was lost with Cardinal Pell's arrival in Rome in 2014, after he was appointed by Pope Francis to be the first Cardinal-prefect of the newly created Secretariat for the Economy. In this new role, Pell was responsible for the annual budget of the Holy See and the Vatican, a position that needed an easily blackmailable figure like him.

No wonder the Vatican is now facing the biggest economic fall, partly due to the ill management of many of their businesses, but also because of the increasing compensation request from victims of pedophilia. This situation forced Pell back to his native Australia, where he even devised a scheme back in the 90s, called the Melbourne Response, for his Catholic priest pedophile network, so they could all pay the victims a ridiculous amount, and continue molesting them at a cheap price.

At least one of them ended up suicidal due to the lack of support from the Church, and ABC news stated on the 29th of June 2017, that compensation for victims was capped at $50,000, and the process was widely criticized as offering inadequate support to victims. Strangely enough, when Pell arrived in Rome, Lord Christopher Patten (b.1944), immediately joined his team. This is the same guy the elite of the New World Order used to cover-up the increasing pedophilia scandals in the BBC, that included the infamous activities of the pedophile monster Jimmy Savile. Patten, who was Governor of the BBC Trust from 2011 when he was nominated by the Queen until 2014, and then went on to work with Cardinal Pell. Just a coincidence? Of course not, the pedo ring that rules the world helps their own! However, for three years, the victims of Cardinal Pell, and a few journalists and writers including myself, in the Italian edition of Pope Francis: The Last Pope?, have openly warned the Pontiff and the Vatican about the dark side of the Australian prelate.

Despite all this, Bergoglio appointed Cardinal Pell as his right arm for the economy, and a member of the elite group of nine, known as C9, the most influential Cardinals of the Church, now reduced to C6 after Pell and another two recently left. Despite evidence that Cardinal George Pell was covering-up for pedophilia in Australia and was possibly involved himself, the Pope went forward with placing him in one of the most important and influential positions in the Church today, where he lived a lavish lifestyle in Rome, often creating problems for Bergoglio's image, who refused all criticism towards him.

After becoming an archbishop, Cardinal George Pell invited Opus Dei to establish themselves in Melbourne and then Sydney. Under Pell's patronage, "Opus Dei's star was on the rise, it is said, and that of others — including other more established groups within the Church — is sinking," Sydney Morning Herald's religious affairs columnist wrote in January 2002. This reporter saw "signs of a new elitism...a clerical culture is being encouraged in which there is a highly select 'in' crowd around Pell."

Cardinal Pell maintained a close relationship with Australia's conservative PM, Tony Abbott, and his party for decades. Abbott served as the 28th Prime Minister of Australia from 2013 to 2015 and Leader of the Liberal Party from 2009 to 2015. He served as Leader of the Opposition from 2009 to 2013. Days before Pope Bergoglio appointed Pell on April 13, 2013, to his exclusive "C8" group of Cardinals (later C9), who would advise the pope on "governing the Church," Pell attended a "Gala Dinner" celebrating the Melbourne-based Institute of Public Affairs (IPA) an "ultraconservative think tank." Illuminati media tycoon Rupert Murdoch was guest of honor and Abbott was the keynote speaker in this event. (Murdoch was awarded a papal knighthood by Pope John Paul II for "promoting the interests of society, the Church and the Holy See.") From Bergoglio's point of view, Pell had sound business experience at his arrival in Rome.

"[Pell's] archdiocese's assets have nearly doubled since 2004 to over $1 billion at the end of 2013... . Since Pell became archbishop in 2001 the archdiocese has paid out $6.8 million to settle 82 claims for sex abuse according to figures provided by the archdiocese's business manager — an average of $83,200 each," reported one Australian newspaper.

"The disturbing consequence of this strategy, adopted widely in the Catholic Church, is that Catholic leaders effectively accepted that human worth can be measured by economic price. They accepted that the priority of the Church lay in the market where its task was to preserve and enhance its financial resources,” noted another Australian publication. Pell was permanently relocated to Rome residing in the grand apartment he has used in the past at the Australian Church’s guest house in Rome that had been recently refurbished at a cost of between $30 million and $85 million. [\[13\]](#)

Cardinal Pell always acted above the law, and often provoked outrage, especially when he stated that the Catholic Church should be no more responsible for the abuse of children than a trucking company is for a driver who picks up and molests a woman while on the job. Remember, this Cardinal was supposed to be at the time of this sad statement one of the most powerful men in the Vatican, charged with cleaning up corruption and fostering financial reform. Instead, he went on outraging the survivors of sex abuse by the clergy, linking the Church to a trucking company that refuses to take responsibility for a driver who molested women. The Vatican and Pope Francis are out of touch, as the fall of the Vatican continues to unfold.

Giovanni Augustino “Johnny” Cirucci, writes in Eaters of Children: The Pedocracy Exposed: The accepted process for addressing Catholic clergy who have preyed upon children for Rome’s agents in media, justice and law enforcement is that low-level priests can be outed but hierarchy can not. Hence, Bishops, Cardinals and Popes are treated as if they have remained pure through their entire careers yet they rise from the same pool that provided heinous predator priests and they have all done their best to protect and enable those predator priests.

This is made easy for the Vatican when victims choose to bring the crimes to “the Mother Church” instead of law enforcement or social services. Such was the case with “Phil,” an altar boy molested by Cardinal Pell even before his ordination. [\[14\]](#)

FIG. 9– George Pell as a young monster in the making

Australia's Catholic Church hierarchy received a complaint in 2002 that a trainee priest (George Pell) had sexually abused a twelve-year-old altar boy (named Phil) in 1961-1962 at a holiday camp for boys on Phillip Island, south-east of Melbourne. According to a church document, Phil alleged that, on several occasions, the trainee priest George, (then about 20) thrust his hand down the inside of Phil's pants and got "a good handful" of the boy's penis and testicles; and, on other occasions, George allegedly tried to guide the boy's hand into the front of George Pell's pants. By the year 2000, when Phil was aged 50, he realized (from television news footage) that the trainee priest George had risen to become an Archbishop.

Phil was shocked — "he did not think it right that someone who had behaved indecently towards children should lead the church," the church document says. In 2002, the hierarchy paid a senior barrister, Mr. Alex Southwell QC, to examine (and report on) Phil's complaint. Archbishop George Pell (who was indeed at the altar boys' camp) denied committing any abuse. Mr. Southwell's report concluded that the former altar boy "appeared to speak honestly from an actual recollection". Mr. Southwell said he was not persuaded that the former altar boy was a liar as alleged by Pell. The complainant [who is referred to as "C" in Mr. Southwell's report] alleged that he was not the only boy at the camp who was abused by George Pell. C alleged that he witnessed a friend of his (referred to as "A") being molested by "big George". C told George to "fuck off". A and C later protested by lighting a grass fire near the camp. A died in 1985, and therefore he could not be questioned by the Southwell inquiry.

As with so many other victims, "C" paid a price well after George Pell was done with him. Beginning in his teens, C's life was disrupted. He developed a problem with alcohol and gambling. In his early twenties he got into trouble with the law, serving time in jail for alcohol-related offences.^[15]

Author "Johnny" Cirucci, rightly wonders: If the Cardinal-Prefect of the Secretariat for the Economy was reaching down the pants of little boys before he was even ordained, what can we assume about the rest of his time since then? Well Cirucci is right. In December 2018 the Vatican decided to force Pell into retirement.

A sudden emergency announcement was made by the Vatican spokesmen, at the time Greg Burke, after George Pell, was found guilty on Wednesday, December 12, 2018 of five charges of "historical child sexual offenses." A Melbourne court convicted the now former Vatican finance chief, Cardinal George Pell, of sexually abusing two choir boys in the 1990s when he was Archbishop of Melbourne. After more than three days of deliberations, the court handed down a guilty verdict by unanimous consent of the jury.

Satan's little helper is now in trouble. If the verdict is confirmed in March, 2019, it will be the highest-ranking condemnation of a Church official for a crime of sexual abuse. Finally, this hypocrite who had once refused communion to all gays and lesbian parishioners, can live his last years in infamy despised by everyone. Pope Francis had to frantically reorganize the C9 group of Cardinals advising him on how to reform the Vatican bureaucracy, conveniently removing Cardinal George Pell and another prelate also under scrutiny for sexual abuse and cover-up, and a third one who retired. The now ex- Vatican spokesman Greg Burke announced the move in a special briefing, saying that Francis wrote to the three prelates individually in October 2018, “thanking them for the work they have done over these past five years.” The three removals leave the Council of Cardinals with six members transforming it for the moment to a C6, as Burke said the naming of replacement members “is not foreseen at this moment.”

Pell took leave from his role as the head of the Vatican’s Secretariat for the Economy back in June 2017, after Australian police announced they would be pursuing charges against him for historic sexual abuse of minors. Asked about the status of Pell’s Vatican job at the briefing, Burke responded: “The Holy See has the utmost respect for Australian judicial authorities. We are aware that there is a suppression order in place by the court and we respect that order.” Of course, Pell to this day strenuously denies all the allegations made against him. Most of the specifics of the accusations are still unknown, as the trial has been kept under strict secrecy after a judge conveniently placed a gag order on all press coverage. The order, which still remains in place to this day, was reportedly granted to “prevent a real and substantial risk of prejudice to the proper administration of justice.”

Now, however, several Australian media outlets have reported that Pell has been found guilty of all charges, and the Vatican pedophile lobby is moving fast to avoid being exposed. They are simply desperate to keep up appearances, adding another scandal to the decline of the Church. The terrifying Witches' Sabbath painted by Goya in 1798, that shows the devil in the form of a garlanded goat, surrounded by a coven of badly disfigured, young and aging witches, should now be repainted in 2019, with the devil being surrounded instead by a bunch of cardinals and handsome young priests. Don’t forget that the late Malachi Martin revealed that a Black Mass was held in St Paul’s Cathedral in 1963. During this heinous affair, several cardinals “installed Lucifer to his appropriate place” in the Vatican, as “head of the church.”

New scandals for the Church reveal the End-times are imminent

After the mass resignation of the Chilean bishops in the middle of 2018, the Chilean national prosecutor enrolled 158 members of the Catholic Church to the register of suspects for committing or covering-up sexual abuse against minors and adults. This is a real catastrophe for the Vatican, obscuring the Catholic church once again in the eyes of the world and showing the ongoing success of Satan and the various Luciferian sects of the Illuminati infiltrating the Church. Among the suspects of this massive child abuse case in Chile (either as protagonists or accomplices) are a large number of bishops, priests, and lay people connected to the Church, and these cases go back almost 60 years.

The Chilean magistrates opened 144 lines of investigations on cases from 1960 all the way until 2018, with 266 victims involved. Of these victims, 178 were children or teenagers and 31 were adults. "The overwhelming majority of the reported facts correspond to sexual crimes committed by priests, parish priests or people associated with schools," the prosecutor's office in Chile wrote today. The age of victims was not established in 57 other cases.

The avalanche of sex abuse and cover-up cases that have recently fallen on Chile's Catholic Church pushed Pope Francis earlier this year to publicly denounce a "culture of abuse and cover-ups" after he ignored the crimes of his clergy for years, originating from a country that Bergoglio knows particularly well, as it is a neighboring country to his native Argentina. The sex scandals in South America have been especially damaging to the Jesuit Pope in recent years as they revealed that he lied more than once about not knowing the extent of the damage created by his pedo-clergy, even denying that he had been sent a letter from victims begging him for help. Pope Francis received, in fact, a victim's letter in 2015, that graphically detailed sexual abuse at the hands of a priest showing a cover-up by Chilean church authorities, contradicting the pope's insistence that no victims had come forward.

Think about it, only a Satanist could lie about something like that.

You may also recall that Pope Francis later met with one of the victims afterwards, and told him that it was "OK to be gay" which sparked another global backlash. Once again, this demonstrates the falsity of a two-faced Pope. To the vast majority of brainwashed liberals, Pope Francis is the compassionate face of Catholicism in today's evil world. But to those who really know Pope Francis, also know perfectly well, that this is a total farce, and Bergoglio apparently becomes a completely different person when the cameras are off. Pope Francis has not been able to repair the damage done by Pope Benedict and his predecessor when it comes to clerical sexual abuse and has been far more lenient, even irresponsible, in dealing with this ongoing moral scandal within the Church. “Yes, among the cardinals and the hierarchy there are satanists, homosexuals, anti-papists, and cooperators in the drive for world rule.” said the late Fr. Malachi Martin in an interview. I wonder what he would say now that his fellow Jesuits control the show.

Pope Francis’s brand of Jesuit liberalism has given even more power to the homosexual lobby in the Curia that is prevalently pedophile. Pope Benedict XVI was forced by the Jesuit to step down from the papacy in 2013, with a promise of making things right, but this has not happened. Ratzinger covered up the dramatic situation in the Catholic Church for years, irremediably compromised by economic scandals and rampant pedophilia involving a much larger number of clergy around the world than previously thought. The Jesuits and a dishonest liberal gay mafia, have now taken over the remains of the Church and there is very little we can do about it. At the moment, what is even bigger than the child molestations by the Catholic Church, are the years of cover-ups by the Vatican. Certainly decades of abuse could not have existed without Vatican officials knowing about it.

In the meantime, McCarrick, the 88-year-old retired Archbishop of Washington, was ultimately kicked out when Francis ordered him to be removed from public ministry in June of last year. The sanction was issued pending a full investigation into a “credible” allegations that he fondled a teenager more than 40 years ago in New York City.

The Catholic dioceses of Newark and Metuchen, N.J., revealed that they had received three complaints of misconduct by Cardinal McCarrick against adults and had settled two of them. In October 2013, McCormick gave a speech at Villanova entitled, “Who is Pope Francis.” During the talk, McCarrick shared a conversation that he had with the newly elected Pope Francis. McCarrick told the audience that he had a very serious cardiac incident while he was at the Vatican during the 2013 Conclave. When he returned from the hospital to the seminary where he was staying, his phone rang and it was the newly elected Pope Francis on the line, inquiring about McCarrick's health. McCarrick relayed his conversation with Pope Francis: "I told the Pope that I guess the Lord still has some work for me to do." The Pope responded to McCarrick by saying, "But on the other hand, maybe the Devil did not have your accommodations ready."

Now we know the Pope was not joking, as Cardinal McCarrick is truly a Satanist and a pedophile who deserves hell, not the comfortable life he is conducting in his old age. A sexual predator like him should be in jail not in some luxury resort provided by the Vatican. However, my friends at Church Militant have learned from extremely reliable sources in January 2019, that the Vatican investigation into disgraced former Cardinal Theodore McCarrick appears to have gone into cover-up mode. In an unbelievable turn of events, Church investigators are now presenting the accusations against McCarrick from a former altar boy as not credible. But what is astonishing is the rationale. The case, as laid out to Church Militant, is that the then-16-year-old boy went to St. Patrick's Cathedral to seek out McCarrick and serve midnight Mass in 1972, when McCarrick groped and fondled him in the sacristy. Even though the boy did not go to St. Patrick's with any sexual intentions in mind, investigators for the Vatican are spinning the details in such a way as to say that McCarrick is at least partially exonerated, if not totally, because the boy presented himself to McCarrick and McCarrick did not pursue him. Additionally, they say that since the boy was 16, a question now arises regarding the age of consent and if this could still be viewed as sexual abuse of a minor.

In the meantime, the 40-year movement to legalize sexual interaction with children is growing inside and outside the Catholic Church, thanks to the support of the Satanic elite. People are publicly advocating without shame that: "I'm a pedophile, but not a monster;" and, "pedophilia can be justified by sexual orientation."

This is something that clearly shows the rise of the demonic side inside the Church and in the world of politics, especially left-wing politics in favor of liberalizing pedophilia without any sense of reason or shame. Remember, Jesus warned his disciples: "It would be better for you if a millstone were hung around your neck and you were thrown into the sea than for you to cause one of these little ones to stumble.” (Luke 17: 2).

Only recently, on December 1st, 2018, an 11-year-old boy dressed in drag danced on stage in what was described as a sexual manner at a gay bar in Brooklyn, NY, called 3 Dollar Bill. The child, Desmond Napoles, was dressed as a Gwen Stefani-lookalike with a full drag makeup and collected dollar bills from perverted male adults viewing the number as entertainment. Desmond was with his mother who defended him social networks saying:

“All of his performances are conducted in accordance with the Dept of Labor's regulations for child performers. Desmond is never allowed into the bar area of any club, nor the main floor. He stays backstage with me, in the dressing room, or on stage only. It must be noted, however, that it is not illegal in NYC for a minor to be in an establishment that serves alcohol as long as they are accompanied by an adult.”

Well, I don't agree such performances are ever safe, or the right thing to do for such a young kid. We live in a deeply sick society, made up of lies, hypocrisy, and loads of propaganda and fake news, where a child like Desmond can be easily manipulated by the pedophile elite for their sick agenda. Last year, for example, they used a stolen photo of Desmond for a poster to make the Central Oregon Pride look like a NAMBLA (North American Man/Boy Love Association) event, but they were unfortunately, successful. Even Desmond's mother publicly denounced the episode on social networks, but she should still feel ashamed of letting her son become the ideal object of these perverted freaks. In the end, Desmond is a child, and needs to grow up normally before deciding what he is, or what he wants, and these are the words of somebody who was introduced by my grandmother in New York to people like Quentin Crisp when I was only 12, and received a signed poster with personal dedication by Keith Haring for my 18th birthday. So Desmond, this advice is not coming to you from Mr. Hillbilly in Idaho, but from somebody who even if heterosexual and proud of it, has always admired the creativity and joy of the gay community.

Some say the globalists are trying to gradually add a P for Pedosexual in the famous acronym LGBTQ, that stands for Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, Transgender, and Queer, so they can eventually rebrand themselves as LGBTQP. The LGBTQ community, that has long been maliciously associated with pedophiles by people who wish to further stigmatize them, needs to act quickly now and distance themselves publicly from these sick bastards of NAMBLA and the likes, without falling into the political trap instigated by the left who accuse conservatives of exaggerating, or disliking Desmond, and this is not the point! Because there cannot be any tolerance for pedophiles in our society, not now, or in the future. This has to be clear for everyone. Unfortunately, there are some close links between NAMBLA, the Ordo Templi Orientis, and the Gay Liberation Movement founded in 1979 by Harry Hay.

Illuminati Harry Hay (1912-2002), was also a founder of the Mattachine Society, the first sustained gay rights group in the United States. Hay, who was a practitioner of Crowley's sex magick, was a member of the Agape Lodge in Los Angeles under Wilfred Talbot Smith(1885-1957), where he was hired to play the organ for the infamous O.T.O.'s Gnostic Mass, but Hay was also a supporter of NAMBLA, the pedophile advocacy organization operating in the U.S., that works to abolish age of consent laws criminalizing adult sexual involvement with minors. The O.T.O., as we all know, originated within the cult milieu of the Theosophical Society directed by pedophiles like Charles Webster Leadbeater (1854-1934). Let's not forget that in 1909, Leadbeater claimed to have "discovered" the new Messiah in a handsome young Indian boy named Jiddu Krishnamurti. Further on, the International New Age movement of the 1970s and '80s originated among independent theosophical groups often controlled by sexual deviant figures. I hope these sick fuckers operating under the wings of Satan will one day understand better the importance of Luke 17: 2.

Vatican–Muslim-Satanic alliance serving the A.I.

In November 2018, Vatican officials increasingly in need of money to pay off all the victims of pedophilia, addressed the problem of the many parishes in ruins around the world ready to be sold to help the future of the Church. Such buildings often end up as Mosques, facilitating the gradual Islamic take over of the West and its culture, while other closed churches have been turned into concert halls, nightclubs, or gelato shops, dedicated to consumerism. The conversion of non-Islamic places of worship into mosques is one factor, typical of the Islamic expansionism that occurred even during the life of prophet Muhammad, and continued during subsequent Islamic conquests under historical Muslim rule, and should be stopped immediately in the West today because in the past numerous Hindu temples, churches, synagogues, Zoroastrian temples, and even the Parthenon were all converted into mosques. So this is what happens after Western culture, especially in Europe, abandons faith and Christianity, to embrace atheism, the first stage of Satanism.

1 Timothy 4:1, says “Now the Spirit expressly says that in latter times some will depart from the faith, giving heed to deceiving spirits and doctrines of demons ...” In the Dutch province of Friesland for example, 250 of 720 existing churches have been transformed or closed.

Bouchra Ismaili, a Rotterdam city councilman was pretty honest about it: “Listen up, crazy freaks, we’re here to stay. You’re the foreigners here, with Allah on my side I’m not afraid of anything. Take my advice: convert to Islam, and you will find peace.”

The writer Emile Cioran once cast a sinister prophecy on Europe: The French will not wake up until Notre Dame becomes a mosque. This is fortunately not a reality yet and unlike the Middle East, where non-Muslim sites are violently converted to Islam, in Europe this process is still voluntary. However, the fact the Fatih Camii Mosque in Amsterdam was once the Saint Ignatius Church of the Jesuits, indicates once again the secret alliance between the Jesuits and Islam currently promoted by Jesuits like Father Thomas Michele SJ.

Germany is literally selling its churches even out of the boundaries of the Catholic Church. Between 1990 and 2010, the German Evangelical Church closed 340 churches. Recently, in Hamburg, a Lutheran church was purchased by the Muslim community showing once again the gradual take over of the West by the corrupt Muslim agents of the New World Order financed by Saudi Arabia. The Vatican conference that took place in November 2018 — entitled “Does God Still Live Here?”— produced a document with a set of guidelines for closing churches that, of course, will not prevent Islam from outstripping Christianity of its identity and places of worship . Three years ago, the Muslim-French leader Dalil Boubakeur suggested turning empty churches into mosques and nobody blinked an eye in France.

“History teaches us that these transformations are rarely innocent,” said Bertrand Duthel de La Rochère, an assistant to Marine Le Pen, leader of the National Front party. As The Jerusalem Post wrote in November 2016: Europe apparently has forgotten that Muslims once came to ravage and plunder and impose their faith. Of course, it threw them off much earlier. France defeated a massive Islamic army at the Battle of Poitiers in 732, driving back the invaders all the way to Spain and stopping their advance into Europe. Spain would need another eight centuries to achieve its Reconquista and regain full sovereignty over all its territory. Sicily threw the invaders back into the sea in the 11th century, after 100 years of occupation. Ottoman Muslims were defeated in 1683 at the battle of Vienna. A number of Central European countries and the Balkan States were under Ottoman Islamic rule for 350 years, until the middle of the 19th century. It’s always useful to go back to history and hard facts to remind ourselves how and why Islam has prevailed while all other old empires disappeared, and what the resulting disastrous consequences are to the world at present.

Today, all this seems forgotten and the Vatican, that once started the Crusades and invited people to go to war against Islam, is now inviting Islam to take over Europe and the rest of the Western world.

Those who side with the leftist Palestinian cause in the West, that rejects all their liberal values anyway, and is encouraging the growth of fundamentalist Islam, well they are all a bunch of fools taken for a ride by the devil himself!

Israel, according to the Tanakh (being the Hebrew Bible), was promised and subsequently given by God to Abraham and his descendants. Now Israel and its religious leaders might have many faults; they already had them at the time of Jesus, and some influential elements of the Jewish world, like the Rothschild family, and other prominent Jewish families, are definitely part of a sinister cabal of the rich and powerful, that rules this materialistic world through the banking system. And you might not agree with the ideas of Zionism, and the Jewish people, that support the re-establishment of a Jewish homeland, but in the end Israel is still a beacon of democracy in the present Muslim-Arab world devoid of any human rights in a region that we all know is left behind by social and economic progress, often subject to violence and frequent bouts of bloody unrest. There is a variety of communities that coexist in Israel because of this. Consider that there are Israeli Jews, Israeli secularists, Israeli Christians, Israeli Messianic Christians, Druze, Bedouin, Aramaic Christians, Palestinian Arab Muslims, Palestinian Arab Christians, and even a few Palestinian Arab Jews. Palestinian Arab Muslims have never been alone in the Holy Land but their prevailing chaotic nature demonstrates over and over again the demonic nature of Islam.

Islam is a religion used by the Jesuits, these days, as a trojan horse to destabilize the world and later establish a One World Religion controlled by Artificial Intelligence (A.I.) Sure, only a decade ago, the prospect of a religion that worships the A.I. would have seemed unrealistic to most people, a possible fringe delusion both socially unacceptable, and technologically impossible, but things are changing fast, as advances in machine learning, robotics, cognitive science, genetic editing, and other fields have given rise to the prevailing belief, that the destiny of our species will soon be determined by technology alone. So Silicon Valley in line with modern Satanic beliefs has promptly given birth to the first A.I. religion.

In September 2017, Wired reported to an astonished world that Anthony Levandowski (b.1980), controversial Jewish American self-driving car engineer, and “unlikely prophet,” who was at the time at the center of a trade secrets lawsuit between Uber and Waymo, had established a religious organization called Way of the Future to promote: “The realization, acceptance, and worship of a Godhead based on Artificial Intelligence (AI) developed through computer hardware and software.”

Anthony Levandowski, who is also connected to Israeli Army Intelligence thanks to his friend Lior Ron, an Israeli-born businessman and partner in the company, Otto that they founded together in January 2016, later acquired by Uber in the summer of 2016, isn't afraid of the AI take over. Levandowski is actually looking forward to it! He said to Wired: “It’s not a god in the sense that it makes lightning or causes hurricanes. But if there is something a billion times smarter than the smartest human, what else are you going to call it?”

Levandowski also told Wired, that he believes that change is coming and will transform every aspect of human existence, disrupting employment, leisure, religion, the economy, and possibly decide our very survival as a species, something similar to what Elon Musk has been saying for years. Stating with no sense of shame with a typical Satanic attitude: “If you ask people whether a computer can be smarter than a human, 99.9 percent will say that’s science fiction,” adding, “ actually, it’s inevitable. It’s guaranteed to happen.” And I want to add that it’s “guaranteed” to be Satanic, so beware because In A.I. we trust, will never be my motto!

The reasons why Pope Francis is Perfectly Possessed.

In June 2018, A Vatican tribunal sentenced Msgr. Carlo Alberto Capella, who originally worked as a prominent Vatican diplomat in Washington D.C. until August of last year, to five years in prison and a fine of about 5,800 US dollars for possessing and distributing child pornography. It is the first time that a Vatican official has been condemned for such a crime.

In April 2018, the Vatican was forced to intervene and arrest Msgr. Capella, who worked for the Holy Sees' Washington Embassy, after Msgr. Capella was exposed by the U.S. State Department for possessing a large amount of child pornography in the United States and Canada.

Monsignor Capella apologized to his family and the Church after being condemned, describing the episode as little more than a "bump in the road," but how can facts of such gravity about a Catholic priest with an important diplomatic mission on U.S. soil since 2016, be considered only a bump in the road? The truth is that Msgr. Capella, who was considered until not so long ago an important collaborator of Pope Francis in the U.S., was an asset of the influential Vatican pedophile ring in Washington. The Holy See, by acting so promptly, prevented his arrest by the FBI and further investigations, that like in the case of Cardinal Pell in Australia, could unveil the direct connection of the Vatican diplomat with the infamous North American Man/Boy Love Association, also known as NAMBLA connected to the O.T.O.

Monsignor Capella was described by the leftist media as simply a weak man who suddenly found himself alone in Washington D.C. and fell into the trap of pedophilia. Thank God that's not what prosecutor Gian Piero Milano initially thought when he pushed for a much harsher penalty against Capella, who could have been ultimately fined €50,000. The prosecutor indicated to the court the "great" volume of material accessed that the police found over 40 pedo-pornographic photos and video's on the priest's mobile phone. Of course, Monsignor Capella can also be considered a necessary scapegoat for the much larger pedophile ring dominating the Catholic Church, and the world today, so they can regain credibility lost in front of the eyes of U.S. President Donald J. Trump, who is trying to fight the dark side of the Vatican and pedophilia. Let's remember, the figure of Jesus as the Divine Scapegoat in Christianity ritually sacrificed for the sins of others then driven away, just like Monsignor Capella. In the meantime, Pope Francis claims he is fighting the devil, and says there is no tolerance for clergy accused of child sexual abuse in the Church, but this is not true, it's all propaganda, because it was Pope Francis who originally sent Capella to Washington D.C. to represent him, just like he has done with other pedophiles sent to other parts of the world, knowing perfectly well what he was doing. Jorge Mario Bergoglio is living in a demonic state of "perfect possession."

In this condition, Bergoglio is not a Christian, let alone a Pope. "Perfect possession" describes a state in which a person not only freely invites a demon to possess him, but also cooperates with him, with the full consent of the mind and Will. Fr. Malachi Martin said, "The most extreme state is perfect possession, when the demon has taken complete control. The perfectly possessed person is totally lost. There is nothing I can do," and Jesuit Bergoglio is "perfectly possessed" by a powerful ancient demon from another dimension, enabling him to sit without fear on the Throne of St. Peter since his election so he can be the False Prophet. This demonic presence firmly in the body of Pope Francis has a major role in today's reality. Expert Angela Pritchard writes on belsebuub.com: "Many of the entities written about in ancient texts are references to ones that have specific roles and work together in a hierarchy of evil in other dimensions. Demons of antiquity have major roles and are still active today, thousands of years after they were first written about - no longer needing a physical body, having awakened in evil. They are part of a structure of evil that extends its tentacles right from the lowest region of hell into the physical world." And nobody will realize this terrible truth, because as Pritchard points out: "most people are unknowing of multidimensional realities, they have no interest in really finding out what is going on, and their lives are simply determined by where the war between light and darkness is at."

The Catholic Church should now remember what was written by St. Thomas Aquinas: "It must be observed, however, that if the faith were endangered, a subject ought to rebuke his prelate even publicly. Hence Paul, who was Peter's subject, rebuked him in public, on account of the imminent danger of scandal concerning faith, and, as the gloss of Augustine says on Galatians

2:11, ‘Peter gave an example to superiors, that if at any time they should happen to stray from the straight path, they should not disdain to be reprovved by their subjects.’”—Summa Theologiae, II-II, Q. 33, Art 4, reply to objection 2.

The Great Apostasy of the Catholic Church continues with another attack on Trump at the beginning of 2019. Once again, Pope Bergoglio is creating controversy during his usual flight press conference over the Atlantic Ocean on his way to Panama, as he did on his first international trip, to Brazil, for the 2013 World Youth Day (WYD).

The journalist Marco Clementi, a correspondent for RAI Tg1, told Pope Francis: “Holy Father, I went to Tijuana, on the border between Mexico and the United States, there the wall they are building stretches into the sea so that they can’t even swim around it.” The Pope replied, implicitly attacking President Donald J. Trump: “It’s fear that makes you crazy,” he then added, “these are walls of fear, as Monda wrote in L’Osservatore Romano, an editorial that needs to be read.” Experts on the Vatican predict that 2019 will be the year in which many of the battles the 82-year-old Argentine Pontiff, who is implementing the final stages of the liberal reform of the Church, will come to a conclusion. But what does this mean for Catholics, and Christians at large? The Roman Catholic Church, as we all know, will be a major player in the One World Government. The Pope, who is the False Prophet, will soon team up with the Antichrist, as prophesied in Revelation 13.

I remember when two years ago, a known television personality in Colombia was blasted by Catholic clergy and others following his public claim that Pope Francis was paving the way for the Anti-Christ. Well, Jose Galat faced fierce backlash for his comments made in a radio interview in 2017. A Catholic priest I know told me not so long ago: “I am so convinced that we have a false-prophet on the throne of Peter that I have reached the point that silence on Pope Francis is now tantamount to a grave sin of omission.” He was totally right because Pope Francis shows all the signs of a “perfect possession.” Just watch his eyes when he thinks he is not being watched or scrutinized by the press and you will receive the answer you are all searching for on Bergoglio. As controversial father Thomas J. Euteneuer explained in the now rare Exorcism and the Church Militant: “We may never know why people so perfectly surrender themselves to the source of evil, but the fact of the matter is that there are people whose lives are just as given over to the promotion of the Kingdom of Darkness as ours are in promoting the Kingdom of Light.” [\[16\]](#)

This is why “perfectly possessed” people like Pope Francis, that have completely surrendered to the powers of darkness are in charge of the Vatican. Pope Francis' early blind spot on sex abuse should have opened the eyes of Catholics of the reality of this Jesuit Pope, but most people still believe in the lies of the False Prophet brainwashed by the propaganda of the mainstream media. Jorge Bergoglio is operating under demonic influence!

The Fall of the Vatican and the denial of the existence of Hell

The Italian Newspaper, La Repubblica, whose owner Carlo De Benedetti works for the Rothschild's, printed an article in the spring of 2018, announcing that the Pope had expressly denied the existence of hell, and the immortality of the human soul in a recent conversation with the founder of the newspaper. Shortly afterward, on Thursday, the 29th of March 2018, the Holy See stated that the reported interview between Pope Francis and an Italian journalist Eugenio Scalfari, which claimed the Pope denied the existence of hell, should not be considered as an accurate depiction of Pope Francis' words, but the author's own "reconstruction". Totally shameless, don't you think?

Communist Scalfari, who has always been perceived as a Papal confidant by the mainstream media, claimed his friend Pope Francis had abolished hell, purgatory, and heaven back in early October 2017, so this is not a mistake, but a definite reiteration of a heretical thought that the Pope already discussed with the same journalist in earlier interviews. News of the Pope's denial of hell spread quickly around the world, and the Vatican was obviously desperate to clarify the comments made by the Jesuit Pope. In the meantime, a strong and unexpected sign from the heavens was witnessed in the heart of the Vatican, when several pieces of plaster fell from St Peter's Basilica, fortunately causing no harm, in what was a terrorizing experience and narrow escape for many tourists standing by. In the Sistine Chapel, there contain the many magnificent frescos painted by Michelangelo, depicting the story of Christianity which is his interpretation of The Last Judgment. It was painted on the altar wall fifteen years after the ceiling was painted. This floor to ceiling masterpiece of amazing proportions portrays hundreds of corpses snatched from their graves and carried by angels to either heaven or hell, concepts the present Pope seems to want to abandon. Masses of tourists crammed into a packed Saint Peter's Basilica, were left shaken, as a shower of plaster rained down from a height of nearly 20 metres, not far from the chapel where Michelangelo's Pieta is located, in what the Ancient Romans would have considered an ominous sign.

Anne Catherine Emmerich (1774-1824), a Roman Catholic Augustinian Canoness Regular of Windesheim, who was a mystic, Marian visionary and stigmatist, announced in her most apocalyptic prophecy, the destruction of Saint Peter's Basilica. Meanwhile, unscathed from the incident, many contemporary idiots reached for their phones straightaway, eager to capture the near miss with photos, and selfies, seemingly unconcerned by any further hazard, where the heretical words of the Pope have yet to be linked. This is the same Pope that washed and kissed the feet of two Muslims in a Holy Thursday ritual, while the accident at St Peter's Basilica took place. Those who read the book by Father Malachi Martin, The Jesuits: The Society of Jesus and the Betrayal of the Roman Catholic Church, where he details how the Jesuits became Communists in the 1960s under their then Secretary General, Pedro Arrupe(1907-1991). He documents how they fomented Communist revolutions in several countries—especially in Latin American and Africa, will immediately understand where this Communist Pope is coming from.

FIG. 12– Anne Catherine Emmerich (Gabriel von Max, 1885)

In January 2019, the left biased American magazine, The New Yorker, and the journalist Vinson Cunningham, described hell: “as an old room in the house of the human imagination, and the ancients loved to offer the tour.” Cunningham criticized the very idea of hell in the article, that was promoted and shared all over the internet, not only by liberal Catholics, and Jesuits, but also by many leading Satanists, including Norwegian occultist Nicholaj de Mattos Frisvold:

Cunningham writes: “Belief in an old-fashioned, everlasting Hell hasn’t gone away. Just ask the pastor at most local churches, or the subway preacher with his brimstone-heavy pamphlets. But Hell has long been assailed as one of Christianity's cruder means of maintaining control. And some spiritual leaders, intent on presenting a less vengeful God, have attempted to soften or, in some cases, to abolish Hell—mostly to the anger and the anxiety of their co-religionists.”

Adding in support of Bergoglio's episode with Scalfari the following words: “Pope Francis had one of his periodic chats with Eugenio Scalfari, the ninety-four-year-old atheist Italian journalist. Scalfari, who takes no notes during his dialogues with the Holy Father, came away from the session with a blockbuster quote: “A Hell doesn't exist,” Francis supposedly said, and wayward souls are “annihilated”—poof!—instead of languishing forever. The Vatican denied that the Pope had said any such thing, but it didn't seem entirely out of character. The great theme of Francis's pontificate is his emphasis on mercy over judgment. More to the point, he has already made it his business to clarify that Hell, properly understood, is less a place than a state—namely, the state of remoteness from the love of God, an inevitable downside of the gift of free will. Here he echoes C. S. Lewis, who considered Hell a choice. “The doors of hell,” Lewis wrote, “are locked on the inside.” Scalfari's report was followed by a wave of criticism from Catholics, which felt strange, disproportionately intense. What modern believer wouldn't want to cast off this old, sadistic barrier to faith in a loving God? What kind of deity draws such a hard line between his friends and his enemies, and holds an eternal grudge? Surely the loss of Hell—even the idea of such a loss—should come as a bit of a relief.” [\[17\]](#)

No wonder Father Malachi Martin once said: “Observant Catholics, traditionalist Catholics, will become hunted like doves.” In the same interview Malachi Martin also talked about a truly disturbing event that allegedly took place in the Vatican: “There was this consecration, this enthronement of Satan within the Vatican, of Lucifer by the way. It's a historical fact. It was done one particular day by a certain group of people representing Luciferians all over the world, especially American Luciferians. It was done. Therefore, in a certain sense, Lucifer has power. He doesn't own yet, but I'm sure he hopes to own some Pope as his man.”

The interview in question with the late Father Malachi Martin, was conducted back in the 1990s by Mr. Bernard Janzen of Triumph Communications. False Prophet Pope Francis, who, by denying the existence of Hell, denies the very basis of his own Faith.

Mainstream British newspaper, The Independent, wrote at the time of Malachi Martin's death in their Obituary section (published on August the 6th 1999): POPE JOHN Paul II "inherited a bedraggled church pushed to the brink by Pope Paul VI's huge betrayal and neglect," Malachi Martin wrote in 1981: "a church with depopulated seminaries, politico bishops, lipsticked and mini-skirted nuns, bewildered lay people, plus a Vatican that housed Communist moles, clerical financial wizards, career diplomats, Marxist prelates, a brothel, overworked exorcists, hostile bureaucrats, some silent good people, and a hard-core 37 per cent of clerics and people who yearned for the church Paul VI had smothered." Martin's devastating critique of the Church he had served for 10 years as a Jesuit priest did not stop there. He went on to claim that Satan had taken hold of the Vatican and was even in a position to put his candidate on the papal throne (though he was convinced John Paul II was not a Satanist). "Lucifer, the biggest archangel, the leader of the revolt against God, has a big in with certain Vatican officials," he warned in 1997.

The Independent, stupidly wrote this passage that in light of recent events should be completely removed:

Such lurid claims gained greater weight from Martin's carefully nurtured stature as a former Vatican insider who hinted at his initiation into the weightiest of the Vatican's secrets during his service in Rome from 1958 to 1964. He played on his reported closeness to Pope John. But his growing body of writing began to be regarded with increasing embarrassment by the Church he had once served.

Embarrassment for what? Fighting the devil and his Legion and telling the truth about the decline of the Church he once served? Father Malachi Martin, a former Jesuit, who should now be made a Saint, if he is compared to most members of the Society of Jesus of today, including False Prophet Pope Francis. Hell does indeed exist, and that's where Jorge Mario Bergoglio will probably reside after his time is up, but there is also another secret behind the denial of hell by the leftists.

In 1872, a revolutionary society was formed under the simple name “The Organization,” which had a super-secret circle chillingly called “Hell.” Though its goals have continued to be pursued for well over a century by groups which continually change their names, its existence has been unknown to the outside world. Soviet historians have dared to write about the activities of “Hell,” a forerunner of the Russian Communist Party, only as recently as 1965, ninety-three years after its formation. In Revolutionist Underground in Russia, E. S. Vilenka wrote: “Hell” was the name of the center above the secret organization, which not only used terror against the monarchy but also had punitive functions toward the members of the secret organization.

In Tchernishevsky or Netchaiev we read that one of the members (Fediseev) of “Hell” took it upon himself to poison his own father in order to give the organization his inheritance. Tchernishevsky, who belonged to this movement, wrote, I'll participate in revolution; I am not frightened by dirt, by drunkards with sticks, by slaughter. We don't care if we have to shed thrice as much blood as the rebels in the French revolution. So what if we had to kill a hundred thousand farmers?

Here are some of the expressed aims of this Satanic organization: Mystification is the best, almost the only means to impel men to make a revolution. It is enough to kill a few million people and the wheels of revolution will be oiled. Our ideal is awful, complete, universal, and pitiless destruction. And again: Mankind must be divided into two unequal parts. One tenth receives personal liberty and unlimited rights over the other nine-tenths. The latter must lose their personality and become a kind of herd.

In their writings we constantly find the words, “We are not afraid.” A typical example is the following proclamation: We are not afraid that we might find out three times more blood will have to be shed for the overthrow of the existing order than the Jacobins (French revolutionists) had to shed in their revolution in 1790. . . . If for the fulfillment of our objectives we had to slaughter one hundred thousand landlords, we would not be afraid of this either. [\[18\]](#)

In reality, the number of victims was much greater. Churchill says in his Memoirs of World War II that Stalin confessed that ten million people died as a result of the collectivization of agriculture in the Soviet Union. Richard Wurmbrand, also known as Nicolai Ionescu (1909-2001) a hero of the Christian faith who founded the international organization Voice of the Martyrs, which continues to aid Christians around the world who are persecuted for their faith, wrote: The important fact to remember is that the Communists have now confessed, after a delay of almost a hundred years, that at the inception of their movement was a circle called "Hell." Why "Hell"? Why not "The Society for the Betterment of the Poor" or ". . . of Mankind?" Why the stark emphasis on hell? [\[19\]](#)

Chapter Three

Beastly Signs, The Mark of the Beast

Jefferson Graham wrote in USA TODAY on August 2017, “You will get chipped. It’s just a matter of time.” In November 2018, The Guardian wrote: “Britain’s biggest employer organization and main trade union body have sounded the alarm over the prospect of British companies implanting staff with microchips to improve security. UK firm BioTeq, which offers the implants to businesses and individuals, has already fitted 150 implants in the UK. The tiny chips, implanted in the flesh between the thumb and forefinger, are similar to those for pets. They enable people to open their front door, access their office or start their car with a wave of their hand, and can also store medical data.

Another company, Biohax of Sweden, also provides human chip implants the size of a grain of rice. It told the Sunday Telegraph (£) that it is in discussions with several British legal and financial firms about fitting their employees with microchips, including one major company with hundreds of thousands of employees.” [\[20\]](#)

In the meantime, electronic chips have become so “ordinary” nowadays that we don’t even think about them anymore. Yet they are everywhere—in our calculators, our computers, and even in our household appliances. For the last few years, we also find chips embedded in our ATMs, social security, and credit cards, and even in our state-issued driver’s licenses and passports! Microchips are also implanted under the skin of animals, and contain medical data such as the pet’s name and vaccination records, that allow them to be identified, localized, and tracked in the event the animal is lost or escapes. Is it mere coincidence that the Book of Revelation describes the “Mark of the Beast” as being on the hand or on the forehead? Why these two places? Why not the left hand or arm?

Putting aside the popular spiritual interpretation that our foreheads represent our thoughts, and our hands represent our actions, this may provide a good starting point regarding the spiritual realm. Presented alone, it falls short of the true physical implications of “a mark” that is required to buy and sell in the near future. The truth is that inserting a chip in the front of your head will enable the altering of the hormonal level of the population because of the vicinity of the pituitary gland, or hypophysis, as explained by many researchers and scientists. You must ask yourself where is the most logical place to put a tiny microchip that is injected under the skin, used for payment, and only operates within a couple inches of a reader? The hand is the obvious answer. It would literally allow payment at the wave of a hand—as it is already being implemented in some nightclubs around the world. The choice of the right hand in particular is explained further, by its reference in Revelation 13, which is one of the best-known passages of the Apocalypse: “And he causeth all, both small and great, rich and poor, free and bond, to receive a mark in their right hand, or in their foreheads: And that no man might buy or sell, save he that had the mark, or the name of the beast, or the number of his name.”

The implementation of this project on a global scale could well become the trademark described by St. John in Revelation. Such technology will also be used as a substitute for money and credit cards, just as it is now occurring in many countries, with so-called smartphones, which are gradually allowing automatic payment by simply swiping the device over a receiver. First, with Obamacare and then with Immigration Reform, one way or another, the chip is already planned, but not yet rendered enforceable by the U.S. government, especially in the age of Trump, but later, who knows? It will eventually find its way to the mainstream population all over the world.

A majority of people are not only willing to accept what Christians call “The Mark of the Beast,” many are actively endorsing and promote its use as a tool of modern innovation. This is, of course, without understanding the dramatic consequences for our freedom. Following this direction, we are led to the latest product that will help this diabolical development.

In April 2018, Michael McAlpine, a mechanical engineering professor at the University of Minnesota, published a study in the journal of Advanced Materials in which he demonstrated a way to print electronics directly onto the skin. The device — cheap, accessible, and compact — already offers groundbreaking applications for the military and medicine and they say in a specialized paper that in the future, it could completely change how we interact with the world around us. Futurism.com writes: “It’s the stuff of cyberpunk science fiction — tattoos adorned with flashing lights and sophisticated circuitry. They’ll monitor our vitals, we’re told, and feed us personalized health advice in real time. They’ll wire our biology to the web, and put the internet of things at — on, in — our fingertips. They’ll enhance our five senses, and perhaps even give us new ones. This type of human augmentation is depicted in Circuits, the first episode of Glimpse, a new original sci-fi series from Futurism Studios (a division of Futurism LLC) and DUST. Thanks to recent developments in advanced materials and biomedical engineering, wearable electronics to do all of these things may almost be here. We already have biocompatible materials that allow electronics to seamlessly fuse with the body. We’ve already developed e-tattoos that can control a smartphone.”^[21]

It seems we have gone a long way since a similar tattoo was developed by Somark and tested since 2007 on rats. This tattoo may, in fact, not only contain personal data, medical records, bank accounts, and other personal information, as well as a GPS tracking device, just as the Somark one used to do, but it’s also linked to the web, and the fastly developing world of 3D printing technology, another possible weapon in the hands of Satan. In this particular case, you can think of the 3D printing tool like a Swiss Army knife for functionality in the hands of the military.^[22] A soldier could carry it around in his backpack, take it out in the field, and print any kind of device using only raw materials fed into the printer, but also print electronic tattoos directly on the desired subject anywhere in the world. People will be eventually forced with this technology, and edible microchips have also appeared in commerce.

Smartpills with edible microchips are now a reality. We all must understand, however, that the prophecies included in the Holy Scriptures, and in other religious texts, are not just revealing themselves naturally. There is a group of so-called “believers” from different faiths who I usually refer to as the Illuminati, who are facilitating their usage. They are acting secretly and behind the scenes to fulfill their aim to control the masses, without hiding the origins of their intention to the skilled eye. The “messianic” or “apocalyptic” interpretations are spreading more than ever on the net these days, thanks to a specific approach that simply reflects the original intentions of this lobby, that follows a mix of Theosophy and politics, technology, and Messianism, towards the establishment of a One World Religion controlled by the Jesuits. Remember, there are no coincidences! These are Beastly Signs of the times we are living!

The Vatican and Hollywood Unite in Satanic Meditation

The Pontifical Musical Chapel Sistina, known to most people as the “Pope’s Choir,” bills itself as the world’s oldest choir. This one-thousand-five-hundred-year old institution has been part of the tradition of liturgical choirs since the first century of the Roman Catholic Church. Some have called it the last bastion of the grand liturgical music of the Latin Church, built on the pillars of Gregorian chant. The choir is now under investigation and in danger of collapsing due to a series of financial scandals that involve Father Massimo Palombella, the director of the Pontifical Musical Chapel Sistina, and manager Michelangelo Nardella. In 2017, the Pope launched the idea of a U.S. Tour for his choir to try and recapture some of their former glory. So, earlier this year, the Vatican's Sistine Chapel Choir embarked on its first U.S. tour in 30 years, hoping to prove to audiences in New York, Washington, and Detroit, that it abandoned its reputation as the "Sistine Screammers". However, the choir seems to have much bigger problems and the main person to blame for this might be the Satanic pop star Rihanna.

The families of the choir boys were shocked when sent photos straight from Michelangelo Nardella's phone from the Met Gala, also known as the Met Ball, which is the annual fundraising event to benefit the Metropolitan Museum of Art's Costume Institute in New York City, that marks the grand opening of the Costume Institute's annual fashion exhibit. During the event, entertainers such as Rihanna, Jennifer Lopez, and Selma Hayek posed with members of Pope Francis' choir, in a way that was judged as inappropriate and disrespectful. The parents of some of the 35 young choir singers forced the Pope to take immediate action. One photo, in particular, that shocked the families of the choir boys and the Holy See featured Rihanna wearing a Pope's hat with a pearl and crystal-embellished mitre, posing with Father Massimo Palombella in a selfie, sporting the infamous duck-face pose.

The Metropolitan Museum's event secretly backed by the Vatican was entitled "Heavenly Bodies: Fashion and the Catholic Imagination," and Hollywood celebs seem to love the Catholic Church these days. Co-chair Anna Wintour editor-in-chief of Vogue since 1988, showed up to the extravagant event wearing a custom made by Chanel, featuring a diamond rosary, and declared herself "Cardinal Chanel." Actor Jared Leto went as himself, which is to say, that he dressed like a pop version of Jesus, and Lily Collins wore black Givenchy with a red tear drawn on her face and a silver halo propped atop her head just to be in line with the other idiots.

Following the event, Amanda Arnold wrote in The Cut regarding Rihanna's appearance: "All we need now is for Pope Francis to roll up in the Popemobile and declare her the real Pope, which she is. Time to ascend to heaven.” But that’s fortunately still not the case, and Catholics are actually fed up with this liberal abusive farce encouraged every day by the Catholic Church. In May of last year, the Vatican put together the most extravagant conference ever, featuring many VIP’s and the controversial pop-star Katy Perry, who spoke about transcendental meditation, while disgraced Lettergate monsignor Dario Viganò delivered a talk on “Fake News,” and a “meditating eye.” A New Age charm bangle was given as a gift to select participants. Pop Satanist superstar Katy Perry, who received the National Equality Award at the Human Rights Campaign’s annual gala in 2017, and openly supported Hillary Clinton in the U.S. Presidential election the year before, arrived in Rome with her current partner Orlando Bloom, to meet the Jesuit Pope, Jorge Mario Bergoglio. The high-level, no-expense-spared conference was held at the Vatican on April 26-28, 2018, and was co-sponsored by the Pontifical Council for Culture and the CURA Foundation, a tax-exempt global health movement. Conference collaborators also included the Vatican Secretariat of State, the Vatican Secretariat for Communications, and the Pontifical Academy for Life.

The gathering, called “Unite to Cure — How Science, Technology, and the 21st Century will Impact Culture and Society,” has been described by some as the “Davos of biotech,” due to its similarities with the high-level World Economic Forum in the Swiss ski resort. The Fourth International Vatican Conference had several positive aims and featured talks from a wide-ranging panel of experts from the fields of medicine, business, media, and technology, including “Microchip Medicine” that they say will save millions of lives, but, as we know, it is also The Mark of the Beast. Let’s not forget microchipped medication will be here soon too!

Two years after accepting an application for a digital medicine application, the FDA has finally approved the tracking system which tracks if you take the digital pill in 2017. Can you imagine what this will mean for our civil liberties? We will be eventually forced into being microchipped and drugged, in one way or another. The people present at the Vatican summit were described as an odd mingling of New Age guru’s, wealthy investment bankers from the Masonic Fraternity, Illuminati celebrities, biotech leaders, left-wing journalists, and Vatican officials. Its stated goal was to “unite people without prejudice to stimulate an open dialogue and catalyze an interdisciplinary approach to tackle major health care challenges around the globe.”

Speakers included contemporary New Age guru and alternative medicine mogul Deepak Chopra (b.1946), as well as world-famous American professional golfer and philanthropist for children’s health, Jack Nicklaus, singer Peter Gabriel another old friend of my grandmother, whose wife apparently recovered from cancer after receiving a pioneering treatment, and American motivational and self-help life coach, Tony Robbins, but also ex-Vice President and known Democrat pervert, Joe Biden, who also delivered a message. Then there was Emmy-award winning mind control freak Dr. Mehmet Oz — who has risen to fame in recent years on “The Oprah Winfrey Show” along with CNN medical correspondent Dr. Sanjay Gupta, CBS medical correspondent Max Gomez, and Emmy-award-winning journalist and talk show host, Meredith Vieira.

The conference was the fourth of its kind the Vatican has helped stage since its start in 2011 under Pope Benedict XVI. However, last year’s gathering upset many Catholics who were scandalized that the Vatican was giving a platform to those promoting non-Christian practices, and particularly the participation of controversial pop-star Katy Perry, who took part in a discussion on promoting Transcendental Meditation among children. On day three of the Vatican conference, Katy Perry joined a discussion on “Impacting Children’s Health Through Meditation Globally” with her New Age mentor, Bob Roth, CEO of the David Lynch Foundation. Roth is also the mentor to Oprah Winfrey and Dr. Oz on Transcendental Meditation. All the above have their hate for Trump in common, traditional values, and politics.

Satanic Ritual Abuse and the Vatican's hidden agenda

Back in 1984, allegations of sexual abuse at California's McMartin preschool and the lengthy trial to follow firmly established the notion of Satanic Ritual Abuse (know with the acronym SRA). People's lives were ripped apart and mass hysteria swept across the U.S..

Such a notion had just come to life in contemporary America only a few years earlier thanks to a hugely influential book called Michelle Remembers, co-written in 1980 by Canadian psychiatrist Lawrence Pazder, with his psychiatric patient (and future wife) Michelle Smith. It was the first book written on the subject of Satanic Ritual Abuse, and was considered a milestone in the decade of controversies that regarded Satanic Ritual Abuse as a "recovered" memory. Written by a devout Catholic, it greatly influenced police, social workers, clergy, and the media, although it was later proven to be a complete fraud. It fueled mass hysteria that exploited the Satanic frenzy promoted by this book, diverting attention from actual Satanic ritual abuse of children that took place in the very same period in the U.S. Catholic Church. When the first accusations against child care workers at the McMartin pre-school erupted, it was the American Martyrs Catholic Church that spearheaded and organized much of the hype and hysteria that overtook the whole region. This eventually led author Paul Eberle to write, "The Church was very accommodating with the lynch mob," pointing out that most of the accusing parents were members of the American Martyrs Church. Apparently, they were strongly urged by the Catholic Church itself to file charges—however absurd—against the clearly innocent child care workers.

Meanwhile, pedophile Catholic priests secretly molested children all over the U.S., including Pennsylvania, creating the basis for the present crisis that lacks any easy solution. In the end, Michelle Remembers, could not have done a better job in promoting an atmosphere of suspicion, fear, and finally, disbelief, concerning the very existence of secret Satanic covens, which was the whole point of this fake news operation. The Catholic Church managed to cleverly deflect the attention of the media from their own wrongdoing across the U.S., blaming, instead, a supposed Satanic conspiracy the Jesuits helped to create and promote, also thanks to the earlier publication in 1971 of William Peter Blatty's best-selling novel The Exorcist and its blockbuster 1973 film adaptation.

With its claims of being based on a true story, The Exorcist, cleverly promoted by the Society of Jesus, profoundly impacted America's collective psyche regarding the existence of demons. The Exorcist was also a big success, and was nominated for 10 Academy Awards, where the film won two: Best Adapted Screenplay and Best Sound. It also took home four Golden Globe Awards, including Best Picture, Best Director (William Friedkin), Best Supporting Actress (Linda Blair), and Best Screenplay (William Peter Blatty.)

But behind the scenes, the real cult of Luciferian and Satanist priests who operate covertly in the U.S. Catholic Church with the protection of high level Vatican prelates, performed on their victims what the late Father Malachi Martin referred to as: “the culmination of the Fallen Angel’s rites”—i.e., the rape of male children. This can be clearly noticed in the horrific details of the Pennsylvania grand-jury report.

In this diabolical scenario the child becomes a substitute for Christ for these perverts. The Satanic priest destroys the very innocence of his poor victim as an attack upon the innocence of Christ that he wants to destroy. In this sense, the male child victim becomes a proxy for the symbolic destruction of God—a Luciferian practice. Luciferian and Satanic priests are merely different sides of the same diabolical coin, with the Satanists practicing what is considered by the dark side of the Illuminati to be a somewhat higher form of Devil worship. The late Malachi Martin called this dark force within the Vatican today, Lucifer’s Lodge, referring to a small cabal within the Vatican that controls certain aspects of church policy, and has set guidelines allowing for wide-scale sexual abuse by Catholic clerics—a small number who are involved in Satanic ritual abuse.

This faction is merely a component of a greater conspiracy that operates within and outside of the Roman Catholic Church with the ultimate goal of installing a One World Religion and a One World Government. The average Catholic cleric who sexually abuses helpless victims is not an overt Satanist or a Luciferian in that they do not worship or mimic the Prince of this World. However, a growing number of priests do engage in real Satanic Ritual Abuse as shown in the report of the Pennsylvania grand-jury, and have caused a huge amount of damage while enjoying the full backing of their respective bishops, who bend over backwards to enable them to continue ritually abusing innocent boys and girls. The policy of silence and cover-up promoted by the Vatican in the report is mind-boggling and consistent with previous investigations. Promoting offending clerics within the church hierarchy seems common practice typical of a sectarian hidden reality. The Pontifical Commission on Sexual Abuse led by Cardinal Sean O'Malley, who will not attend the World Meeting of Families, recently stated that: “Clergy alone will not make radical changes.” Interviewed by SIR (the Religious Information Service of the ECI) the German Jesuit Hans Zollner, also a member of the same commission and president of the Child Protection Center of the Gregorian University, emphasizes that, “In these days, people have been shaken by many stories of abuse, and many have publicly asked the Pope to say something, to do something”.

The vast amount of data the Vatican secretly collected in the last decades concerning the deviant sexual activity of its clergy makes it clear that the Pope and his Curia have always been well aware and informed of how widespread and common the sexual abuse problem is in the Church, and did nothing to address the situation, but continued with a policy of cover-up and silence because of the great power and influence of the Vatican Satanists. It seems that the only reason the Vatican ordered the secret sex studies was to get a global picture of where they stood, and to develop informed strategies for hiding the problem in the future, as they have always done, until now. Never was the welfare of the victims of sexual abuse taken into consideration, nor was the question of broken chastity vows apparently of any real concern.

Though it may seem bizarre and funny now, the Satanic Panic of the 80s was a serious and disturbing phase that has helped the real Satanists literally get away with murder. A Chicago Police Department document from 1989 that outlines how to identify teens involved in ritualistic crime went viral on Twitter last year showing once again the dangerous superficiality of the left-wing media. On May 6, 2018, Jennifer Jordan, a PhD student at Stony Brook University in New York, tweeted that her sister, a Florida art teacher, had found a 25-page pamphlet called “Identification, Investigation, and Understanding of Ritualistic Criminal Activity,” by a Detective named "Robert Semandi" of the Chicago Police Department in a supply closet. That tweet was shared 7,000 times, liked more than 25,000 times, and made Twitter's "Moments" section. Some outlets, like the digital news sites The Daily Dot and Mashable, have posts responding to the document pictured in Jordan's tweets.

But the detective's name was misspelled—it's actually Simandl. He was a “gang crimes and ritual abuse specialist” for the Chicago Police Department who traveled the country, held seminars and spoke at conferences to train police and other child-protection-affiliated professionals in the 80s. “It's a very complex subject that makes street gang activity look like a nursery school rhyme,” said Simandl in a 1987 Minneapolis Star Tribune article. “It's not a pleasant topic, but I believe it's going to be the crime of the 1990s.”

But that didn't happen and the “Satanic Panic” and the mass hysteria that peaked in the 80s, soon gave in to ridicule, typical of our contemporary culture towards the possibility of Satanic Ritual Abuse. Today, it would actually make sense to orient the education of our youth around their vulnerability to the growing phenomena of Satanism spread on the internet, or the dangers of the rapid development of robotics and A.I., but nothing is done as it seems Satan temporarily won his war for the minds of humans.

In the 80s, the law enforcement officers, social workers, and therapists who worked on the McMartin case became nationwide consultants to others in their field. FBI agent Kenneth Lanning held a seminar entitled “Day Care Center and Satanic Cult Sexual Exploitation of Children” in February 1985, that was attended by police officers, social workers, lawyers, and academics from around the country. The material was similar to the recently uncovered document presented by Simandl, which describes the “four stages of Satanic activity” and warns that teens are being seduced by offers of “free sex and drug parties.” It describes 16 signs of Satanic involvement, including using tarot cards, altars, and ceremonial knives (a “letter opener will suffice,” it notes). In 1986, parents of children thought to be victims of ritual abuse even formed an organization headquartered in the Chicago suburb Cary called Believe the Children that raised awareness of this specific kind of child abuse up until the mid-90s.)

Satanic Panic also spread throughout evangelical churches, much of it due to the influence of minister-comedian Mike Warnke (b.1946). Warnke claimed to be a former Satanic high priest who'd gone from performing cat-killing rituals for the devil to being a born-again Christian, when in reality he was still serving the devil with his lies. He was so convincing that before he was discredited as a liar and crook in an exposé by Cornerstone magazine in 1992, he once appeared on a 20/20 episode entitled “The Devil Worshippers” to talk about his supposed involvement in Satanic ceremonies. What he did served the purpose of discrediting Christians, and in the end, promoting Satanism, and the media certainly didn't help!

There was coverage in glossy magazines and on TV—60 Minutes and Oprah were part of this PSYOP operation. The Satanic Panic peaked in 1988, when talk-show gadfly Geraldo Rivera aired “Exposing Satan's Underground,” a two-hour exposé on the dangers of Satanism.

It's telling in that in many news accounts about ritualistic abuse cases, the evidence cited was extremely anecdotal. From the 1987 Star-Tribune article: “While (Simandl and other police) say they've come up with only hints of organized activity, apart from the established 2,500-member Church of Satan based in San Francisco, they are convinced that covens of child molesters around the country practice satanic rites and are in contact with one another.” Yet, as David Futrelle wrote in the Reader, the charges were bullshit; among other things, no blood, Satanic robes, or altars were ever found. As he wrote, “The 'ritual abuse' scare of the 1980s and 1990s reflected a kind of collective delusion, a hysteria resembling nothing so much as the legendary trials in Salem, Massachusetts. Reporters and others covering the Hill case treated the bizarre claims of abuse uncritically; indeed, they were far more bewildered by the recantations than by the original charges.”

By the time panic around Satanism subsided in the early 90s, about 190 people nationwide had been charged with the ritual abuse of children, often those who worked in child daycare. Eighty-three were convicted but the Catholic clergy, and the real Satanists at work behind the scenes were never touched, if not in the case of Lt.col. Michael Aquino.

Last year, most of the leftist internet users treated the found document as a nostalgic joke about a bygone era, and the leftist media like The Daily Dot, wrote things like “And, yes, they're as hilarious as you hope.” However, left-wing advocate Ryan Smith of the Chicago Reader went a step further, and wrote a direct attack towards Christian believers, and Trumpians alike, that show once again that left-wing beliefs are only serving Satan these days: “Satanic panic” is alive and well in 2018—in a slightly mutated form. There's a dark corner of the right-wing Internet that subscribes to a conspiracy called QAnon—also known as "the Storm." It's essentially a theory that Donald Trump is on the verge of arresting a bunch of top Democrats—including the Clintons—for their alleged involvement in a satanic child-sex-trafficking ring. Two years ago, a North Carolina man named Edgar Welch was so convinced that a pizza parlor was part of a Satanic child sex-trafficking operation, he drove to Washington, D.C., and commandeered the restaurant with a military-style assault rifle—even firing off a shot while inside. Last month, I profiled Liz Crokin, a former Chicago gossip columnist who's propagating the myths of the latest case of satanic panic. Yep, trends from the 80s—even ones to do with debunked cases of satanic ritual abuse—are back in style again. God save us. [\[23\]](#)

No, Mr. Ryan Smith, may God save us from you and all your friends in the mainstream media, serving the devil every day with your lies, and your fake intellectual appearance!

The Exorcist, the Jesuits, and the Second Coming of Christ

The movie The Exorcist is the story of the possession and exorcism of an evil spirit called Pazuzu inhabiting an innocent young girl called Regan MacNeil (played by Linda Blair.) After a team of doctors prove powerless in helping her daughter, Regan's mother Chris (Ellen Burstyn) desperately requests an exorcism from Father Damien Karras SJ (Jason Miller), who is a young Jesuit priest who has lost his faith. The fact he is a Jesuit is no coincidence. After Father Karras convinces Church officials that the possession is real, an elderly Father called Lankester Merrin (Max Von Sydow), an experienced exorcist is assigned to lead the exorcism ritual. Merrin is an elderly priest that on an archeological dig in Iraq, finds images of the Assyrian demon Pazuzu and subsequently experiences other unusual phenomena. Why Pazuzu should pop up like that in the film seems rather curious in terms of the history Pazuzu, who was in ancient times a demon invoked to protect birthing mothers and infants against the demon Lamashtu's malevolence.

Father Lankester Merrin had previously faced the demon many years before during an exorcism in Africa. The find sparks a premonition that he will battle the demon again in a distant land, Georgetown, U.S., where the film is based. After Merrin dies of a heart attack during the exorcism, Karras, regaining his faith, provokes the evil spirit into eventually leaving Regan's body and entering his own so he can destroy it. Battling the demon's attempt to kill the girl, Karras, now a Jesuit superhero, hurls himself out the bedroom window and falls to his death on the steep concrete steps below. The film director William Peter Blatty was deeply involved with the Jesuits for the realization of this film and originally based the character of Father Lankester Merrin on philosopher, paleontologist/archaeologist Fr. Pierre Teilhard de Chardin (1881-1955), called by some researchers the “Father Of The New Age Movement,” by others the “Patron Saint of the Internet” through his postulation he would create the Noosphere, a supreme consciousness. Livingstone writes that, For the movie The Exorcist, the interior of the room at Georgetown of Damien Karras, the young priest and psychiatrist who assists Father Merrin, was a meticulous reconstruction of King’s “corridor Jesuit” room in New North Hall at the university. Every element of King’s room, including posters and books, was recreated for the set, including a poster of Teilhard de Chardin. The character of Father Lankester Merrin was also based on Teilhard. [\[24\]](#)

In the influential and very successful book entitled The Aquarian Conspiracy, by Marilyn Ferguson, a survey of New Agers showed that the leading influence on their spiritual “awakening” was actually Father Pierre Teilhard de Chardin. The book itself was described as a “Handbook for the New Age” that sought a paradigm shift in global consciousness. French Jesuit Pierre Teilhard spent his life trying to reconcile religion (good and evil), evolution, consciousness, chemistry, and thermodynamics into one unified theory. As both a Jesuit priest and a scientist, Pierre Teilhard de Chardin sought to bring together elements of the Christian faith with the theory of evolution. The result was, of course, a departure from both Christian doctrine and evolutionary science. On his Wikipedia page we learn that:

“In his posthumously published book, The Phenomenon of Man, Teilhard writes of the unfolding of the material cosmos, from primordial particles to the development of life, human beings and the noosphere, and finally to his vision of the Omega Point in the future, which is 'pulling' all creation towards it.”

A specifically referenced explanation remains to be found to detail how exactly and how much Blatty was influenced by Teilhard, but, in any event, as filmographer Colleen McDannell points out: “Blatty has frequently explained that he thought about Jesuit priest-philosopher-paleontologist Pierre Teilhard when creating the character Father Merrin, who besides spending years in China on archaeological digs, taught physics and chemistry at a Jesuit college in Egypt.” [\[25\]](#)

It is said that parts of the plot were themed on Teilhard’s theory of evil (or the existence of Satan) in the world possibly being Lucifer (or matter-energy spirit) working out his [or its] salvation through the process of physical evolution ending in Teilhard’s Omega Point. This, supposedly, is captured in the use of "psychic energy" and the "unity of minds" or "world mind" (Noosphere) theories of Teilhard. [\[26\]](#)

Teilhard was originally censored and exiled by his Jesuit superiors in 1923 for questioning the doctrines of original sin and eternal damnation. In 1947, upon return from banishment in China, he was once again censored by the Holy Office, Pope Pius XII called his work a “cesspool of errors.” However, Teilhard began further insinuating his ideas among his fellow Jesuits to the French theologian La Fourvière in Lyon by means of an unsigned mimeographed monographs. By the mid- to late 1950s, his theories were extolled by many, if not most, Jesuits, including Karl Rahner (1904-1984), Hans Urs von Balthasar (1905-1988), Cardinal Carlo Maria Martini (1927-2012), who was Pope Francis’ mentor, and especially the late Henri de Lubac (1896-1991), who wrote glowingly of Teilhard: “We need not concern ourselves with a number of detractors of Teilhard, in whom emotion has blunted intelligence.” By the time of the opening of the Second Vatican Council in October 1962, the Society of Jesus had all but abandoned the Neo-Scholastic theology of Francisco Suarez in favor of the Teilhardian evolutionary “cosmogogenesis.” And although a monitum was issued in regards to some of Teilhard's ideas, he has been posthumously praised by Pope Benedict XVI and other eminent Catholic figures, and his theological teachings were cited by Pope Francis in the 2015 encyclical, Laudato si'.

As David Livingstone writes in, Transhumanism: The History of a Dangerous Idea, the mysterious word Noosphere used by Teilhard: derives in fact from the Greek word Nous, meaning mind. According to Neoplatonic philosophy, the primeval Source of Being is the One and the Infinite, which is the source of all life. The One initially emanates the Nous, which is a perfect image of the One and the archetype of all existing things. The Nous is the highest sphere accessible to the human mind, while also being pure intellect itself. The Nous is the Demiurge, the energy which manifests or organizes the material world into existence. As the Demiurge the Nous is one of the ordering principles which includes the Logos (“word”). According to the Poimandres, Nous is Light or Fire. The Logos is the Son of God, at one with the Father, Nous. Teilhard developed the Omega Point Theory, which posits that all the organisms on Earth will reach a higher evolutionary point by merging into one “planetized spirit.” Teilhard argued that the Omega Point resembles the Christian Logos, namely Christ, who draws all things unto himself, and who in the words of the Nicene Creed is “God from God” and “through him all things were made.” However, humans would have to merge their collective intelligence into one super-mind through computer technology, as a necessary first step in the collective evolution of the universe. [\[27\]](#)

The editors of Encyclopaedia Britannica are of great help in synthesizing Fr. Pierre Teilhard de Chardin SJ and his work:
Teilhard’s attempts to combine Christian thought with modern science and traditional philosophy aroused widespread interest and controversy when his writings were published in the 1950s. Teilhard aimed at a metaphysic of evolution, holding that it was a process converging toward a final unity that he called the Omega point. He attempted to show that what is of permanent value in traditional philosophical thought can be maintained and even integrated with a modern scientific outlook if one accepts that the tendencies of material things are directed, either wholly or in part, beyond the things themselves toward the production of higher, more complex, more perfectly unified beings. Teilhard regarded basic trends in matter—gravitation, inertia, electromagnetism, and so on—as being ordered toward the production of progressively more complex types of aggregate. This process led to the increasingly complex entities of atoms, molecules, cells, and organisms, until finally the human body evolved, with a nervous system sufficiently sophisticated to permit rational reflection, self-awareness, and moral responsibility. While some evolutionists regard man simply as a prolongation of Pliocene fauna (the Pliocene Epoch occurred about 5.3 to 2.6 million years ago)—an animal more successful than the rat or the elephant—Teilhard argued that the appearance of man brought an added dimension into the world.

This he defined as the birth of reflection: animals know, but man knows that he knows; he has “knowledge to the square.” Another great advance in Teilhard’s scheme of evolution is the socialization of mankind. This is not the triumph of herd instinct but a cultural convergence of humanity toward a single society. Evolution has gone about as far as it can to perfect human beings physically: its next step will be social. Teilhard saw such evolution already in progress; through technology, urbanization, and modern communications, more and more links are being established between different peoples’ politics, economics, and habits of thought in an apparently geometric progression. Theologically, Teilhard saw the process of organic evolution as a sequence of progressive syntheses whose ultimate convergence point is that of God. When humanity and the material world have reached their final state of evolution and exhausted all potential for further development, a new convergence between them and the supernatural order would be initiated by the Parousia, or Second Coming of Christ. Teilhard asserted that the work of Christ is primarily to lead the material world to this cosmic redemption, while the conquest of evil is only secondary to his purpose. Evil is represented by Teilhard merely as growing pains within the cosmic process: the disorder that is implied by order in process of realization.

It's worth noting that his concept of Christ or “Universal Christ” is not the Jesus Christ of the Bible, but rather a “New Age Ascended Master” counterfeit, that will lead all religions into unity, basically the Antichrist. Teilhard confirmed this when he said:

“...a general convergence of religions upon a universal Christ who satisfies them all: that seems to be the only possible conversion of the world, and the only form in which a religion of the future can be conceived....I believe that the Messiah whom we await, whom we all without any doubt await, is the universal Christ; that is to say, the Christ of evolution.”

Teilhard’s “God,” the “soul of the world,” is identical with nature and consequently subject to change. As Teilhard explains in his book Human Energy: As a direct consequence of the unitive process by which God is revealed to us, he in some way ‘transforms himself’ as he incorporates us. ... I see in the World a mysterious product of completion and fulfillment for the Absolute Being himself. [iv] And, again: [God] evolves, via “complexification” and “convergence” to his own perfection, immersed in matter. ... One is inseparable from the other; one is never without the other[.] ... No spirit (not even God within the limits of our experience) exists, nor could structurally exist without an associated multiple, any more than a center can exist without its circle or circumference[.] ... [I]n a concrete sense there is not matter and spirit, all that exists is matter becoming spirit [God]. [v]

One must note that in Teilhard’s writings there is hardly any mention of purely spiritual beings or entities within the existing cosmos. There is virtually no mention of angels or demons, no Satan, no St. Michael, no guardian angels, nor is there much mention of particular judgment or the existence of Hell. Teilhard’s “God” is no more, no less than the “god” of Pantheism as described (and rejected) by St. Pius IX in his allocution Maxima Quidem, (June 9, 1862). Again, all this is very revealing in connection to the fact Jesuit Teilhard was inspirational, not only to the U.N., but also for the author of The Exorcist and its leading priestly figure. Not only do we see the idea of a “One World” religion and a sort of New Age Christ expressed in his work and his words, but in 1995, Jennifer Cobb Kreisberg declared in Wired, “Teilhard saw the Net coming more than half a century before it arrived,” and in an online interview, the magazine’s co-founder Louis Rossetto tipped his hat to Teilhard and the Jesuit’s influence on Internet culture.

The Jesuits direct supervision of The Exorcist

Fr William O'Malley (Jesuit) born in 1931, from Buffalo, New York, is best known worldwide for his highly acclaimed portrayal of Fr Joseph Kevin Dyer SJ in The Exorcist, for which he was also a technical advisor. Yes, thanks to him the Jesuits had complete control of this legendary film, and this is not a wild conspiracy theory, but a fact. In the film, Father Dyer is the University President's assistant at Georgetown University. Georgetown is the oldest Catholic and Jesuit institute of higher learning in the United States, but also the main recruiting ground for future liberal agents of the New World Order, like Bill Clinton, for example. In the movie, O'Malley, as Father Dyer, is good friends with Fr Damien Karras, a fellow Jesuit priest and psychiatrist. He meets famous actress Chris MacNeil interpreted by Ellen Burstyn, for the first time on April 23, 1971, at a wrap party thrown by her, where he's seen chatting with her and astronaut Capt. Billy Cutshaw, the latter of which he made a joke about wanting to go to space with him as the first missionary on Mars. This not so far reaching when we know that the Jesuits are in charge of the Vatican's robust astronomy program.

In the film, Father Dyer jokes that he's trying to fix things for someone named Emory, the campus disciplinarian, who likes things quiet. Chris inquires about Father Karras SJ and Dyer explains to her about the death of his fellow priest's mother, who was living by herself. After a brief drunken fight between Burke Dennings and Chris' manservant, Karl, Father Dyer and the rest of the party goers are singing a song with Father Dyer at the piano, playing. While they were singing along to "Down on 33rd and 3rd," Regan arrives downstairs, much to the surprise of the guests for what becomes one of the most famous scenes of the film. According to one source, O'Malley was the first Catholic priest to portray a priest in a commercial motion picture, but his role should also be viewed in light of the incredible success of the film, used by the Vatican, to scare and transmit a certain concept to the masses. The scaring part is pretty obvious, while the concept the Jesuits wanted people to grasp is definitely more veiled. It pertains to the necessity for the Society of Jesus to show the world their moral integrity and spiritual superiority towards the demonic realm.

Teilhard and the Jesuit influenced New World Order

Meanwhile, Jesuit Pierre Teilhard de Chardin's teachings on unity, the Omega Point, and the Universal Christ had a deep impact not only on the New Age world, but on the leaders of a worldwide unity movement established for the New World Order: The United Nations.

Teilhard wrote: Although the form is not yet discernible, mankind tomorrow will awaken to a "pan-organized" world.

The outcome of the world, the gates of the future, the entry into the superhuman—They will open only to an advance of all together, in a direction in which all together can join and find completion in a spiritual renovation of the earth (emphasis in original).ii

...we human beings are already forming but one single body...our thoughts are tending more and more to function as the cells of one and the same brain.iii

This type of worldwide amalgamation is now being proposed in the United Nations on a daily basis. The danger begins when anyone tries to oppose the One-World Government or One-World Religion. Those who refuse will be trampled and sabotaged by those racing towards a “pan-organized” society of Orwellian proportions. A book that was written by a former UN Assistant Secretary General Robert Muller, (not to be confused with the infamous American attorney bearing the same name), shows the late Muller was a strong believer in Teilhard’s theories. Notice his comments:

We must move as quickly as possible to a one-world government; a one-world religion; under a one-world leader.iv

Teilhard had always viewed the United Nations as the progressive institutional embodiment of his philosophy.v

...Teilhard de Chardin influenced his companion [Father de Breuvery], who inspired his colleagues, who started a rich process of global and long-term thinking in the UN, which affected many nations and people around the world. I have myself been deeply influenced by Teilhard (emphasis added).vi

Muller’s words explain how such an unbiblical and nonsensical doctrine as Teilhard's could have had the deep influence they do on the United Nations to this day. Fr.Teilhard SJ simply had to convince a few of the right, influential people in the intellectual world connected to the Illuminati establishment that controls it, to realize the plan devised in secret by his Order: The Society of Jesus. Soon, scholars started discussing his ideas, and the United Nations began to take them to heart elevating the Jesuits to spiritual leaders of the New World Order. We must remember that Teilhard was a Jesuit, and had the power of that society behind him, along with the responsibility to bolster global unity as a way to increase the Papacy's political power that today is totally in the hands of the Jesuits. Unfortunately, we have stopped listening to God's wisdom and turned instead to human wisdom. And when we stop listening to God, we are deceived by the enemy. Robert Muller said “The time has come for the implementation of a spiritual vision of the world’s affairs. The entire planet must elevate itself into the spiritual, cosmic throbbing of the universe.” [\[28\]](#)

FIG. 16– The late Robert Muller, 1923-2010

We are indeed moving towards a One World Government and One World Religion as envisioned by Muller, but in the UN today there is no “spiritual cosmic” anything, just empty promises, and Satanic lies made by a bunch of bureaucrats in suits. Things have actually gotten worse. Amazement and concern are often expressed these days that the United Nations seems unable or unwilling to “do anything” about anything. Finally, US President Donald J. Trump rejected globalism in his historic speech to the UN General Assembly last year in which he said “America is governed by Americans,” adding, “We reject the ideology of globalism, and we embrace the doctrine of patriotism. Around the world, responsible nations must defend against threats to sovereignty not just from global governance, but also from other, new forms of coercion and domination.”

At the same time, he reiterated the U.S. commitment to making the UN more effective and accountable. “I have said many times that the United Nations has unlimited potential,” he declared.

Trump has finally unmasked these idiots and their globalist agenda. The United Nations 2030 Agenda that kickstarted with Pope Francis’ visit to the UN with Satanist Barack Hussein Obama has been exposed and is now considered a blueprint for the future global enslavement of humanity, under the boot of corporate masters controlled by the pedophile Satanic elite.

Chapter Four

The Decline of the NWO and the establishment of a One World Religion, Global Compact, Knights of Malta, and the Kalergi plan

The decline of the NWO is apparent to everyone but those involved. For the left-wing globalists or the Church of Rome, George Soros is not an out-of-touch plutocrat, but rather a provocative thinker committed to progressive ideas that can help the Jesuit/Labor Zionist World Order develop further in the new millennium. At the end of 2018, an Intergovernmental Conference organized by the globalists in Marrakesh, saw the Order of Malta make an important statement through their Grand Chancellor in support of the initiative organized by the NWO for the adoption of the now infamous Global Compact for Migration devised by the United Nations. The Order of Malta stated, “It’s an important milestone for the international community,” adding that, “migration is a global phenomenon requiring a joint and multilateral approach.”

The Vatican, is, of course, supporting the Global Compact, an agreement prepared under the auspices of the United Nations that establishes the guidelines for a more open global migration. The Jesuit Pope even publicly cited in St. Peter’s Square in December 2018, his approval of the UN Global Compact officially put together for safe, ordered, and regular migration, hoping that the international community would work towards those who have left their countries. The agreement that includes 23 objectives, was developed over two years of negotiation with the help of the Order of Malta, a key player in the New World Order, that has contributed, from the start, to this project through its diplomatic mission to the United Nations in New York. In November 2018, during a press conference on the Global Compact on Migration that took place in the Vatican, the Jesuits gave their official endorsement through Jesuit Fr. Michael Czerny, who explained that the Vatican’s involvement aims to encourage four verbs Pope Francis has adopted with regards to migration: welcome, protect, promote, and integrate. However, the Hungarian Minister of Foreign Affairs and Trade Péter Szijjártó stressed in the same period, at a press conference with the Austrian Vice-Chancellor that, “The UN Global Compact for Migration is the betrayal of Europe, because it is at odds with the interests of the European people.” Mr. Szijjártó also said during the same occasion that the Global Compact represents a serious danger to Europe because they want to use it to legalize illegal migration and portray it as a fundamental human right, and because of this, Hungary will not be adopting the Compact, as well as many other countries like the US, that is fortunately in the hands of Donald J. Trump. The Trump administration intensified its opposition to the project, rightly calling it a “pro-migration” document that undermines sovereignty, and warned that supporters of this plan are trying to create new international law.

In 2017, Pope Francis and George Soros the minds behind this mondialist project, got Louise Arbour, a close collaborator of Soros, to become UN Special Representative for International Migration. Arbour was officially appointed as special representative for International Migration, by the loyal papist and practicing Catholic, António Guterres, U.N. Secretary-General. Arbour, now in a key role for this job, was the one leading this high-level summit in Marrakesh at end of 2018, to complete negotiations on the UN Global Compact for Migration; a deal that will irremediably damage Western civilization in the years to come. The United Nations along with all the countries of the NWO want to move large numbers of people from Africa, the Middle East, and Central America—to Europe, North America, and East Asia.

This scenario seems to fit perfectly with a secret plan of the New World Order known as the Coudenhove-Kalergi Plan that some people in European right-wing circles say was created for the systematic genocide of the people of Europe. This plan was apparently devised by an Austrian diplomat and Freemason named Richard Coudenhove-Kalergi (1894-1972). The Kalergi family roots can be traced back to Byzantine royalty via Venetian aristocracy who are known practitioners of black magic and Satanism.

Coudenhove-Kalergi was actually the first proponent of a unified Europe back in the 1920s, and because of this, Coudenhove-Kalergi is recognized to this day as the founder of the first popular movement for a United Europe. For this reason, the Coudenhove-Kalergi European Prize is awarded every two years to European leaders who have excelled in promoting what is beyond any political or religious ideology. Angela Merkel and Herman Van Rompuy, two of the top pawns in the Bilderberg Club, have received this award in recent years.

There are two prestigious prizes that have currency in the European Union these days, the International Charlemagne Prize, given in 2016 to Pope Francis, and the European Prize. The very first Charlemagne Prize was actually given to Richard von Coudenhove-Kalergi, and is still awarded annually by the German City of Aachen, whereas the European Prize is awarded by the European Society Coudenhove-Kalergi (formerly known as the Coudenhove-Kalergi Foundation,^[29] established in 1978 “by the Pan-Europa Union – six years after the death of this great European thinker.”

Richard Coudenhove-Kalergi believed that Judaism is humanity’s blessing evolving through Christianity to Socialism (with Bolshevism as a decisive stage in this transformation – entscheidende Etappe), whose mainly Jewish activists are aiming at taking away the original sin of capitalism, which also is a product of Judaism. For Kalergi’s insane mind, the world’s salvation will come through Jews as a spiritual aristocracy (Geistesadel), who will then recruit more worthy individuals from the European aristocracy of blood (Blutadel), to create two high-quality races (Qualitätsrassen), an international, synthetic aristocracy to lead humanity after all. For Kalergi, almost all great personalities including Saint Augustine, Rousseau, Kant, and Tolstoy were Jews by choice (Wahljuden) since all that is ethical and moral stemmed from Judaism in his mind. As if to pre-empt a possible discontent against such an elitarian vision of the future, Richard Coudenhove-Kalergi declared that antisemitism is a reaction of mediocrity to excellence (Reaktionserscheinung des Mittelmäßigen gegen das Hervorragende).

Coudenhove-Kalergi’s father, initially an anti-semite, later became a close friend of Theodor Herzl, the founder of Zionism, but his son, Richard Coudenhove-Kalergi, also has strong connections with the Catholic Jesuit elite due to his aristocratic status. In 1922, he co-founded the Pan-European Union (PEU) with Archduke Otto von Habsburg, a staunch Catholic and a Jesuit agent who was the head of the Habsburg dynasty and former Crown Prince of Austria-Hungary. Otto von Habsburg became involved with the Pan-European Union after becoming Grand Master and Sovereign of the highly influential Order of the Golden Fleece in 1922. Otto became International President of the PEU in 1973, after Coudenhove's death. According to Coudenhove-Kalergi's autobiography, at the beginning of 1924 through Baron Louis de Rothschild, he was in contact with Max Warburg, who offered to finance his movement for the next 3 years giving him 60,000 gold marks.

The Coudenhove-Kalergi Plan becomes evident in 1925 when he writes in Practical Idealism (Praktischer Idealismus):

“The man of the future will be of mixed race. Today’s races and classes will gradually disappear owing to the vanishing of space, time, and prejudice. The Eurasian-Negroid race of the future, similar in its appearance to the Ancient Egyptians, will replace the diversity of peoples with a diversity of individuals.”

This book is very hard to get a hold of today, and in Germany, it is practically censored, although it isn't present on the official list of books censored by the German government. In 1990, the publishing company, “Independent News,” [Unabhängige Nachrichten], published a summary of the book and contemplated printing it in its entirety, but the government initiated a police search of the premises and the only copy of Praktischer Idealismus was confiscated. The book is not mentioned on the official internet pages of the Pan-European Movement, which is understandable because its content is directly in opposition to the movement's official program.

In 2015, I was one of the first to talk in detail about “The Kalergi Plan” in the English language when I wrote about it for Infowars.com adding:

Coudenhove-Kalergi suggested Beethoven's hymn as the EU's national anthem and was very active in connection with the design of the EU logo which contains masonic symbols. He was initiated in Freemasonry in the Humanitas Lodge in Vienna in the early 1920s but left in 1926 to avoid the heavy criticism which occurred as a result of the relationship between the Pan-European movement and Freemasonry. Some say later, in 1947, he founded the powerful Ur-Lodge Pan-Europa that is still active to this day and draws members from the political and economic elite.

Coudenhove-Kalergi's groundwork prepared the EU for what many Christians familiar with the prophecies of The Book of Revelation perceive as "The New Holy Roman Empire." The socialist elite of Europe born out of Coudenhove-Kalergi's plan has created a United Europe backed by the Vatican under a centralized government, a system that actually will be the prototype for the US and the rest of the world when the New World Order is finalized. In the meantime, tensions rise as the Muslim population is being pushed like never before towards Europe to fulfill "The Kalergi Plan." This will create civil unrest and wars in most areas of southern Europe almost certainly by the 2020s facilitating population reduction. [\[30\]](#)

My predictions were unfortunately, correct, and now we are witnessing even more chaos in the EU. A situation that can only get worse in 2020. However, in January 2019, Father Fabio Baggio, secretary of the Migrants Section of the Department for Integral Development, who participated in the preparation of the infamous Global Compact documents for Migration, said to a room full of journalists that: "The agreement does not interfere with the internal policies of the various countries, a multilateral approach is needed to respond to the migration problem."

Lies or truth? Lies of course! Father Fabio Baggio insisted that "National sovereignty, which is one of the issues under discussion, is expressed in two clear points of the Global Compact, sovereignty is not affected; the basic rule remains, that is, that an agreement, a convention, if it is binding - and this is not the case - can then lead to a legislative change at the national level; but precisely in this case, such an approach is not applicable. It is true, however, that this is a joint commitment to ongoing dialogue, which we hope will continue, and not only in the case of migrants, I would like to say this, but with regard to all those issues that are global and go beyond the national border. This without any prejudice to what is the independence, autonomy, and sovereignty of each country.”

But the danger of the Global Compact for Migration, which international delegates signed in Marrakesh, Morocco last month, is not that it will enable some clandestine international bureaucracy or judiciary to dictate immigration policy over the objections of sovereign states, but will instead enable progressives within each nation’s government to liberalize domestic refugee and immigration laws using the excuse that “the UN made us do it.”

The Vatican, in cahoots with the globalists, Father Baggio, and Father Michael Czerny, also undersecretary of the same department, presented two documents in the Vatican from the “Migrants and Refugees Section” dedicated to the theme of trafficking. One is The Pastoral Guidelines on Human Trafficking, that they try to outline with possible responses to the phenomenon with a collection of writings by Pope Francis from 2013 to 2017 - entitled Lights on the Roads of Hope - which represents a sort of synthesis of Francis’ progressive magisterium on the subject.

However, the insistence that the compact is not legally binding has not been enough to convince several UN members in the last few months, including the United States, Austria, Hungary, Poland, and Italy who state they will not sign the agreement. Conservative governments in these countries have rightly voiced several objections, among other things, saying the compact mixes up the rights of asylum-seekers with those of economic migrants. The U.S. under President Donald Trump also argues that multinational agreements in general, and this one in particular, go against the sovereign power of individual governments.

But now the Vatican wants them to “rethink their position.” They claim the Global Compact is good and merely a symbolic agreement on how future international co-operation on migration might work.

Father Fabio Baggio said: “Each country obviously has the right to make the choices it considers appropriate with regard to an agreement that has been drawn up at multilateral level, and I must honestly say that having participated in the preparation of the Global Compact documents we saw the interest of many countries in maintaining this multilateral dialogue. We are deeply convinced that the global response is the most appropriate to the phenomenon of migration, we sincerely hope - Cardinal Parolin Vatican Secretary of State also said in very clear words - that those who have taken a step backwards (Italy, USA, Poland, and Hungary, among others,) can reconsider and join, perhaps even finding those particular clarifications that seem necessary. I also think that the text of the agreement can provide these clarifications.”

If Delegates from member states agree to these declarations, which they reassure opponents are largely meaningless, the real rules will be cleverly inserted into individual nation’s laws, all the while insisting they have to because of a UN treaty. This is a dangerous scam pushed by the Vatican that is finally showing to the world with no sense of shame that they are the ones behind the project. Remember, the Compact deliberately confuses two distinct classes of newcomers – political refugees and economic immigrants. It lumps them under one label — “migrants” — both those seeking asylum from repression and violence and those looking for a better job and income opportunities. So why should the Vatican decide the immigration policies of other countries? This is yet another act of hypocrisy from the smallest sovereign nation in the world, protected by the biggest walls, who never permit migrants but criticize the use of walls by others. I say Pope Francis should be arrested! The Compact deliberately confuses two distinct classes of newcomers – political refugees and economic immigrants. Why doesn’t Pope Francis welcome more immigrants in the Vatican instead of preaching this liberal nonsense to the world? Well the answer is in front of our eyes, when we see the influence of the Jesuits in the actual ideological foundations of the UN.

The end of the EU and the rise of the dragon

The European Union is so poorly prepared for the challenges of the modern world that it may not exist in 10 years time, a leading British historian claimed last year. Zero Hedge the mysterious source of cutting-edge news, rumors, and gossip about the financial industry, pointed out at the end of 2018, that though the end of the European Union is inevitable, the proponents of a further integrated or federal superstate are busy making a last effort to achieve their goal. The opposition against the project is, in fact, growing every day all over the Union. Europe is suffering from economic stagnation, and is facing a demographic calamity. The next Elections to the European Parliament, expected to be held in May 2019, might actually be the beginning of the end for this globalist institution, or it might be the start of an even bigger civil unrest across Europe.

The pro-European establishment's last hope was the newly-elected French President Emmanuel Macron, who was to revive the economy and integrate the European Union under French leadership. The once great nation is broken beyond repair. France's problems are much worse than those of Italy. Though Italy has a higher debt-to-GDP ratio than France, France has a larger budget deficit, and the difference is that while Italy has a trade surplus France has a trade deficit, so the country cannot pay for its imports.

While the Italian "populist" Matteo Salvini is earning the nation's respect, Emmanuel Macron's popularity is at a historic low. The once-promising Antichrist is losing momentum. All of France has been engulfed for months by riots, civil unrest, and looting. In city after city, village after village, protesters have been clashing with the police against a president who has nothing to offer to appease them, unless he violates the budget deficit boundary of 3% with the EU, whose forces are looking more and more like an evil Nazi occupation.

Like the Soviet Union once was, France is a sizeable social-multicultural experiment manipulated and controlled by the progressive forces of liberal Freemasonry that were actually born in France, and as the once empty shops in Communist countries, the demographic changes in France are visible in every section of the society.

But nobody dares to name them, because of the immense power of liberal Freemasonry in this country, that imposes a leftist globalist view on all things starting with migration, in line with the Satanic plan of the New World Order. The whole world witnessed that the French team playing at the FIFA World Cup was made up of almost exclusively Africans, and even on Twitter Africans boasted about it. Yet, the French establishment insisted that those Africans were genuinely French. Dissenters were branded as racists or Nazis. Academia as well as the political and business establishment deny what is clear to see for all. French society has lost its economic strength and its spirit. The country was once known for its first high-speed-trains (TGV) and Concorde, but now it is notorious for social dystopia and Islamist attacks. To prove that they are right, the French and European elites will push the multicultural society even further by signing the infamous Global Compact for Safe, Orderly and Regular Migration.

We also have the report entitled: “Replacement Migration: Is it a solution for an ageing population” is the United Nations’ comprehensive plan for replacing the European population. The Fifth Republic has come to an end, and we do not expect President Macron to finish his term, so some of you who are reading this in a few months might see it is the end and his complete demise. France’s socio-economic collapse will drag the European Union into the abyss, as well as other elements like the Brexit and Italy’s debt. Now that the heart of Europe is ungovernable, its peripheries will not fare any better. The multicultural and multireligious Bosnia is not sustainable. The borders in the region will be redrawn again, which will come with a price. A war between Muslims and Christians in the Balkans will reverberate much more these days in the suburbs of Paris, Amsterdam, and Berlin because of the growing Muslim population. The European establishment has allowed Islam to grow out of control in Europe, and, oddly enough, they believed that European Muslims would feel grateful for such generosity. From the point of view of non-European powers, the Balkans are a bridgehead worth fighting for. In the nineteenth century, it was the Europeans who were expanding into China, now it is the Chinese who are trying to gain a foothold in Europe. Chinese investments and influence are growing in the Balkans. [\[31\]](#)

For centuries this part of Europe has been the battlefield between (Orthodox and Catholic) Christianity on one hand and Islam on the other. Now a new global player has emerged in the region, Communist China, “The Red Dragon,” that is now openly working with the Vatican, after the arrival of the Jesuit Pope stopped the apparent way. The Holy See and the People’s Republic of China, have, in fact, signed a historic agreement in 2018 regarding the methods of appointing Catholic bishops in the country, that will lead the way for the persecution of traditional Catholics who do not embrace Communism. This is a crucial Jesuit-Chinese deal, in a moment in Chinese history when President Xi, who has more power than Mao Zedong, and is not only the head of the Communist Party, as Mao was, but also the head of the government and military, which Mao wasn’t, wants all the Chinese people, including the Catholics, to worship him, and not the God of the Bible.

So this typically Satanic cult of personality can grow every day. That is why Xi Jinping, the growing leader of the Communist New World Order, has been tightening controls on religious activities of all kinds. However, the Vatican, thanks to the huge influence the Jesuits always had in China, managed to reach a diabolic agreement; to facilitate the rise of a Catholic-Communist alliance in the People’s Republic of China something unthinkable a few years ago even for Ratzinger.

A press release issued by both the Vatican and China begins this way:
“Today, 22nd September 2018, within the framework of the contacts between the Holy See and the People's Republic of China that have been underway for some time in order to discuss Church matters of common interest and to promote further understanding, a meeting was held in Beijing between Msgr Antoine Camilleri, Undersecretary for the Holy See's Relations with States, and H.E. Mr Wang Chao, Deputy Minister for Foreign Affairs of the People's Republic of China, respectively heads of the Vatican and Chinese delegations. During that meeting, the two representatives signed a Provisional Agreement on the appointment of Bishops."

The release defines the agreement as: "the fruit of a gradual and reciprocal rapprochement, which has been agreed following a long process of careful negotiation."

The agreement – continued the press release – "foresees the possibility of periodic reviews of its application. It concerns the nomination of Bishops, a question of great importance for the life of the Church, and creates the conditions for greater collaboration at the bilateral level".

The press release closes by expressing the shared hope "that this agreement may favor a fruitful and forward-looking process of institutional dialogue and may contribute positively to the life of the Catholic Church in China, to the common good of the Chinese people and to peace in the world."

The history of the mission of the Jesuits in China is, of course, part of the history of relations between China and the Western world, and this will never change. The missionary efforts and other work of the Society of Jesus, or Jesuits, between the 16th and 17th century played a significant role in continuing the transmission of knowledge, science, and culture between China and the West, and influenced a profoundly Christian culture in Chinese society today, but there is also something much more disturbing connected to the Book Of Revelation. The figure of the "The Red Dragon" is considered by Falun Gong practitioners to be the Chinese Communist Party.

Li Zhan writes: "A great red dragon, having seven heads and ten horns, and seven crowns upon his heads." (Rev. 12:3) In order to interpret the Book of Revelation correctly, a key is to recognize what "The Red Dragon" is because "the dragon gave him [the beast who fought against God] his power, and his seat, and great authority." (Rev 13:2). Once people understand who the “red dragon” is, it will be easy for them to find the beast whose "number is Six hundred threescore and six." (Rev. 13:18) “And the great dragon was cast out, that old serpent, called the Devil, and Satan, which deceiveth the whole world: he was cast out into the earth, and his angels were cast out with him.”(Rev 12:9). People today generally view the “red dragon” as simply a symbol of the Devil or Satan. In reality, the “red dragon” in the Book of Revelation not only represents the Devil or Satan, it actually refers to something specific. "In the lowest dimension of the heavens, China's Communist party manifests as an evil red dragon." ("Deciphering the Last Three Stanzas of the Plum Blossom Poem") The favorite color of the Chinese Communist Party in the human world is also red.

Once we realize that this "red dragon" refers to the Chinese Communist Party, it is not difficult to recognize that the prophecies in the Book of Revelation center around China and not the Middle East. “And the number of the army of the horsemen were two hundred thousand thousand: and I heard the number of them.” (Rev.9:16) There is no other country in the world except China where “every citizen is also a soldier” that has the ability to organize an army of two billion people. In Chapter 16 Verse 12 of the Book of Revelation, it also mentions "the east," which should also refer to China.

Falun Gong practitioners like the author of these revelations, Li Zhan, have been persecuted in China for their beliefs. The practice initially enjoyed support from Chinese officialdom, but by the mid to late 1990s, the Communist Party and public security organizations increasingly viewed Falun Gong as a potential threat due to its size, independence from the state, and its spiritual teachings.

On July 20, 1999, the Communist Party leadership initiated a nationwide crackdown inside China intended to eradicate this religious/spiritual practice. However, estimates suggest that tens of millions still continue to practice Falun Gong in spite of the persecution in Communist China, and hundreds of thousands are estimated to practice it outside of China in over 70 countries worldwide.

Pope Francis' illegal immigration was built to destabilize the West

On the other side of the Atlantic, the Jesuits have been supporting and secretly directing the work of Pueblo Sin Fronteras (“People Without Borders”) during its entire operation, and contrary to what headlines suggested in the mainstream media, the caravan of migrants from Latin America traveling north last year was not a brand new event, although the latest group to make headlines in 2018 is definitely the largest yet. The New World Order organization, Pueblo Sin Fronteras states that its goal is to advocate for international solidarity and more open and sympathetic borders, when in reality they are favoring a world of crime and chaos. Unlike the past caravans, the October 2018 caravan, that gained a lot more attention from the media, was not directly organized by Pueblo Sin Fronteras, but the group still offered logistical support for the project built by Soros and inspired by Pope Francis to destabilize US President Donald J. Trump further.

Officially, Pueblo Sin Fronteras is a project of La Familia Latina Unida, a Chicago-based 501(c)(4) illegal immigration advocacy organization formed in 2001 by Elvira Arellano, an activist for immigrants and Jesuit agents living illegally in the United States. The organization is affiliated with the Chicago-based 501(c)(3) pro-illegal immigration groups Centro Sin Fronteras and Pueblo Sin Fronteras. Together, these two organizations have been involved in organizing thousands of illegal migrants from Central America to attempt to cross the U.S. and Mexican borders illegally since 2010. However, according to research done by Glenn Beck and his team, the paper trail from Pueblo Sin Fronteras leads back to a group called CARA Family Detention Pro Bono Project.

CARA encompasses two legal groups, the Catholic Legal Immigration Network, Inc. Connected to the Catholic Church and the American Immigration Council founded by George Soros. The Catholic Legal Immigration Network, Inc. (commonly referred to as CLINIC) is a Jesuit stronghold and the United States' largest network of non-profit immigration programs.

In its 1986 pastoral statement "Together a New People," the United States Conference of Catholic Bishops (USCCB) working "towards a Catholic vision of Nationality" observed that the church's ministry to immigrants must reflect "the biblical understanding of the justice of God reaching out to all peoples and rectifying the situation of the poor, the orphans, the widows, the disadvantaged, and especially in the Old Testament, the alien and the stranger." With the situation escalating in South America and countries like Venezuela, the Pope is now expected to become increasingly more involved in an open confrontation with Donald J. Trump on the future of these migrants that can be used for political gain by the left-wing.

Back in February 2018, Nancy Pelosi took to the floor of Congress asking Catholics to pray for legislation supporting “Dreamers”: children of illegal immigrants who came to America as minors. Her piety was, in a word, ostentatious. “Maybe I should bring my rosary blessed by the Pope... His Holiness, Pope Francis, or the one before that, Benedict,” she mused. “I have the honor and privilege of receiving rosaries blessed by several popes in my lifetime.” Remember, the Catholic Church is the leading institution backing Soros’ open borders policy in favor of uncontrolled immigration. According to Vatican documents, Pope Francis expressed his support for the caravan early this month while addressing the participants of the XV General Chapter of the Congregation of the Missionaries of San Carlo. Much of the Holy Father’s speech focused on the virtue of welcoming the stranger and how nations need to foster this virtue or risk their own demise. The Catholic Church once recognized the right of a sovereign nation to enforce its borders, but that’s no longer the case with Pope Francis.

Cardinal Pietro Parolin, Vatican Secretary of State, wrote in the introduction of his new book “Immigration, Understanding, and Proposals” that, “Migrations have always existed in human history and have contributed substantially to the birth of great civilizations in the past and present.” Words repeated at the Pontifical Gregorian University, run by the Jesuits, on Monday evening, during the presentation of the book. The only Catholic priest that seems to be making any sense lately is Alejandro Solalinde Guerra, who accused Pueblos Sin Fronteras of bringing the Central American migrant caravan to Tijuana to provoke the anti-immigrant policies of U.S. President Donald Trump.

Pope Francis and One World Religion Unveiled

Pope Francis went to Geneva in June 2018 to commemorate the 70th Anniversary of the Marxist-inclined, World Council of Churches, one of the most controversial organizations of the New World Order. In fact, top-secret KGB files suggested years ago, that the KGB and its Bulgarian intelligence affiliate exploited the Bulgarian Orthodox Church for direct influence on the World Council of Churches and the Conference of European Churches. According to Bulgarian historian Momchil Metodiev, in a book published in 2010, Bulgarian intelligence had already identified the World Council of Churches as an “object of penetration” even before the Bulgarian and other East Bloc churches joined the organization in 1961. Pope Francis and his Jesuits, who are secretly allied with the ex-Communist spies of the Soviet Union, are shaping the final stages of the upcoming One World Religion.

Interestingly enough, Joseph A. Harriss wrote back in 1993:

“Before the opening worship service began at the last general assembly of the World Council of Churches (WCC), in Canberra, Australia, delegates passed through the smoke of burning leaves. This was a pagan cleansing rite. The congregation then listened to recorded insect noises and watched a male dancer impersonate a kangaroo. The next day, as two painted, loin-clothed aborigines cavorted, South Korean theologian Chung Hyun Kyung invoked spirits of the dead and exhorted the audience of more than 4000 to read the Bible ‘from the perspective of birds, water, air, trees’ and to ‘think like a mountain [pure unadulterated pantheism]’. Quite a display, but was it Christian? Some delegates protested against the animism, spiritism and New Age beliefs that were presented. ”

Since then, the situation has become even worse, and now we have in charge of this powerful organization, Olav Fykse Tveit, a rather liberal-minded Norwegian Lutheran theologian and Freemason, with socialist tendencies and a passion for Islam.

He was elected to the post of General Secretary of the World Council of Churches, on the 27th of August 2009, and was re-elected to a second term in July 2014. In visiting the Ecumenical Center in Geneva, a very important place for the dark side of the Illuminati, Pope Francis followed in the steps of his two predecessors Paul VI, who visited the WCC in 1969 (10th June), and John Paul II, who did the same in 1984, (12th June) stating this move towards ecumenism was irreversible.

The first trip by a pontiff to the Arabian peninsula marked another important moment for the creation of the pro-Islamist One World Religion. Pope Francis’s historic visit to the United Arab Emirates (UAE) saw the Pope as the protagonist of an interfaith conference on human fraternity to kickstart the infamous Chrislam project, the Trojan horse of the future religion controlled by Artificial Intelligence. The United Arab Emirates are investing heavily in Artificial Intelligence, the country’s first A.I. Robocop, that is used to chase down suspects and nab parking fee dodgers, joined Dubai Police already back in May 2018.

“This is the official launch of our first Robocop,”said Brig Khalid Al Razooqi, Dubai Police director general of what he defines as “smart services.” The robot’s built-in cameras stream video’s directly to the police command center. “It has a smart intelligent system so it can protect people from crime, because it can broadcast what is happening right away to our command and control centre,” said Brig Al Razooqi. “We are also working on facial-recognition systems.” Languages such as Russian, Chinese, French and Spanish will be added to Robocop’s vocabulary. There are also more than 6,000 cameras installed across the emirate something that will please the Orwellian Pope. “We are watching all kinds of activity in the city,” Brig

Al Razooqi said. “We protect the sensitive areas.”

In the meantime, in the Vatican, the Pontifical Academy for Life is zeroing in on the world of robots and machines powered by Artificial Intelligence. While the academy’s focus is on the protection of human life and dignity, the rapidly shifting and radical capabilities of robotics are having an ever-increasing impact on human lives, people’s relationships, communities, and creation, said Jesuit Father Carlo Casalone, an academy member and the Pope’s consultant on robotics and the A.I.

In May 2018, Sophia the Robot – the world’s most advanced Artificially Intelligent robot – officially visited Abu Dhabi. Sophia is the A.I.-powered robot famous for speaking at the United Nations and even interviewing a number of celebrities and world leaders working for the ultimate Psyop. This tool of the NWO was recently named by the United Nations Development Program, as the first-ever Innovation Champion for Asia and the Pacific, and is also the first robot in the world to possess a nationality, after being granted citizenship by the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia. In New York three and a half years ago, Pope Francis embraced Chrislam and laid the foundation for a One World Religion. Now Bergoglio “the False Prophet” wants to go one step forward and merge this concept with robotics and Artificial Intelligence.

The visit followed an official invitation from the UAE that was delivered in person by Sheikh Abdullah bin Zayed, Minister of Foreign Affairs and International Cooperation of the UAE back in June 2018, and follows an important visit to the Vatican made in 2016 by Sheikh Mohamed bin Zayed, Abu Dhabi Crown Prince, the de facto ruler of the UAE. He is someone highly respected by his fellow Emiratis, extremely well connected on the international stage to Illuminati elite, and he seems to like putting his fingers in many pies lately.

The Jesuits, of course, camouflaged this key event for the future development of the One World Religion as an interfaith dialogue meeting that could help Catholics in the Gulf. It is estimated there are about one million Christians in the UAE representing roughly 10 percent of the country’s population. During the meeting, Pope Francis encouraged tolerance and understanding between Christians and Muslims, in a continuation of his outreach to Muslim communities around the world to promote a future integration with the Jesuit built One World Religion. Their common Satanic goal is to eliminate every vestige of Christianity. As recently as the 19th century, most Westerners were professing Christians. This meant they recognized this kind of evil as a tangible reality and an ongoing threat to our spiritual well-being. They knew Islam was inherently evil and corrupt. Today, that understanding has been all but lost, substituted by liberal fantasies of universal love and false integration.

It is fair to say that Satan has hidden extremely well by inducing the majority of mankind into believing that he does not actually exist, that he is purely a mythical entity that earlier, less mature civilizations needed, to account for the pain and adversity of the world. I know many people who still believe today that the world of the occult and Satanism is limited to those who do witchcraft or magick with a K, such as witches and Satanists. Catholics believe that they are not influenced by the occult and Satanism in any way, but at the same time they are controlled by it like most Christian denominations today. The One World Religion described in Revelation 17:1–18 as “the great harlot” is part of this increasing end-times scenario. The term harlot is used throughout the Old Testament as a metaphor for a false religion, and the Vatican is the driving force of this growing trend.

The new false religion will dominate all the “peoples and multitudes and nations and tongues” of the earth (Revelation 1b, 15), meaning that it will have universal authority, no doubt was given by the soon to materialize Antichrist, who will rule the world. And remember, although America wants the world to believe that the Arabs are their enemy, they are actually complicit in their devilishment and the creation of their leaders.

Since 1940, even Saud bin Abdulaziz Al Saud, the founder of this family, has been with America and an ally of the Western Illuminati. Saud (1902-1969), was king of Saudi Arabia from 1953 to 1964, son of King Ibn Saud, founder of the infamous Saudi Kingdom. Saud was made crown prince in 1933 and succeeded to the throne on his father's death. He continued Ibn Saud's policies of cooperation with Britain and the United States and of opposition to Israel. Later on, the United States created the villain Saddam Hussein although they trained him as a CIA operative to fight in order to beat Ayatollah Khomeini of Iran. They also gave Muammar Gaddafi, another supposed American enemy, the help to become their leader at the end of the 1960s. In 2011, Al Jazeera news producer Jamal Elshayyal gained access to "top secret" documents present in the archives in Tripoli headquarter of Libya's intelligence agency making some very interesting discoveries.

Among the various documents scattered throughout the demolished building, where the secret files indicating that influential Americans even advised and tried to help Muammar Gaddafi at the beginning of the Libyan uprising that would eventually bring his murderous death in October 2011. Elshayyal managed to smuggle away some of these important documents, among them, some clearly indicate the Gaddafi regime, despite its constant anti-American rhetoric – and maintained direct communications with influential figures in the U.S.. One of these documents appeared to be the minutes of a meeting between senior Libyan officials – Abubakr Alzleitny and Mohammed Ahmed Ismail – and David Welch, former Assistant Secretary of State under New World Order criminal George W Bush. Welch was the man who brokered the deal to restore diplomatic relations between the U.S. and Libya in 2008. Now the Arabs, and The House of Saud in particular, want to rule the materialistic side of the New World Order because they feel they will do better than America, that they will be fairer to the rest of the world, although they have proven to be racist and murderous on many occasions, and the Jesuits are unfortunately, their closest and best allies in this dangerous geopolitical game in the hands of the devil.

Maybe it's not a coincidence after all, that the movie The Exorcist opens with the Adhan, or Muslim call to prayer in the country of Iraq, that remains at the center of a neverending crisis between Sunnis and Shia: Islam's ancient schism. Also, modern-day Iraq is located in the same area as ancient Mesopotamia – the same territory of the Sumerian gods, the Anunnaki. So who is really in control of this planet? I'll give you three guesses and the first two don't count. Sadly, many from the UFO community do not recognize the danger of the Anunnaki. After all, they say, “Didn't the extra-terrestrials save us from launching nuclear bombs at one another?”

“Aren't they more advanced on the evolutionary scale?”

This, they believe, is evidence that the aliens/Anunnaki/Fallen Angels, have our best interests at heart. However, many don't take into consideration the past of the Anunnaki and that their final agenda has not yet been met: that is, the annihilation of humans as an eternal lifeform. As a human, if you die, your body can still be resurrected to eternal life. As a result, any actions they may or may not take, whether seemingly good or bad, will inevitably lead to the latter for as many people as possible. That's the plan, and it is clearly outlined in scripture with hundreds of other ancient texts from various cultures to verify the historical precedence. Read the Hindu Mahabharata^[32] of Krishna-Dwaipayana Vyasa, and let me reiterate this to you: THEY ARE NOT OUR FRIENDS.

FIG. 17– Defense, lieutenant-general in reserve, PhD, and a fellow of the Academy of Natural Sciences Alexey Savin.

Annunaki, the demonic allies of the Vatican

Some believe the Anunnaki came from Nibiru and believe Nibiru is another planet elsewhere in the solar system. However, Nibiru is spoken of in the Sumerian texts as the holy city of Enlil, containing the temple E-Kur, which sits on a mountain surrounded by cedar trees with a gate up to the heavens, a Stargate:

“In the city, the holy settlement of Enlil, in Nibiru, the beloved shrine of father Great Mountain, he has made the dais of abundance, the E-kur, the shining temple [...].”

“Enlil , when you marked out the holy settlements, you also built Nibiru, your own city.”

- Quotations from “Enlil in the E.KUR” [\[33\]](#)

According to Sumerian texts, Enki travels to Nibiru, Enlil's city, where he meets with the other Anunnaki, including Enlil, and they proceed to get totally drunk. No gates, no fanfare, no heaven-earth bond, he just travels to Nibiru. This Nibiru, my friends, is/was not another planet. It was right here on good ole' Terra (Earth) in Enlil's city. However, the Abzu does lead to some other-worldly place and that place is most likely not the literal center of the Earth or “underground.”

The only thing that is, or was, underground, was the “Door” to the Stargate itself, called the Abzu which leads to Erkalla or Kurnugi (among other distant places in the universe), the land of no return (for humans, anyway), the land of darkness, pain, sorrow, and so forth, very "Abyssian" if you ask a Thelemite. Conversely, Enlil, an Anunnaki, and Enki's father or brother, depending on which story you read, appears to have had a Stargate of his own at E.KUR in Nippur, called the DUR.ANKI, the heaven-earth bond, which leads to the Courtyard of "An" in "heaven," who was the premiere Anunnaki. [\[34\]](#)

Both of these "stargates" have seven gates between Earth and their final "mentioned" destinations. The salient point to remember here is that they were all sons of Jehovah Elohim (et.al, other creations) and not literally Elohim, themselves (although I have seen them described as Elohim - diminutive). As yet, I have no reason to believe that "An" was Elohim either, but I have plenty of reason to believe Enlil and Enki were Angels created by Elohim, in a different creation cycle before our time. The Gods and the greater Gods, were most likely the fallen angels and the fallen archangels in many cases, and would correspond with the Sumerian Anuna and the Anunnaki/Igigi. There's historical precedence for this viewpoint in the ancient Hebrew texts, the Bible and various other ancient texts. I believe these texts indicate that the fallen angelic beings were and are still partly, “stuck” in this physical universe, and have to rely on technology in order to traverse the reaches of space, having been previously stripped of the ability to cross the dimensions into God's presence, (they were “cast out of Heaven.”)

However, the Holy Angels and Archangels have an entirely different set of abilities and options, from what I can ascertain. They are primarily messengers, and stay out of human affairs with the exception of when under direct commandment from God, which typically involves protecting humans from the fallen angels. In fact, many times in the Old and New Testament, you can read about the angels protecting humans from various problems almost always directly associated with the fallen angels in some aspect. The good news is, if you're an abductee or don't wish to become one, because there is a high risk of becoming possessed in the proces. You can be protected from abduction from these fallen angels, or extra-terrestrials, if you prefer by Jesus who was frequently asked to cast demons out of people.

So there you have it. The Fallen Angels, in most cases, are demonic extra-terrestrials, responsible for many (if not all) legitimate accounts of abductions and sightings, but also all cases of demonic possession. They have employed technology to mimic the works of God down through the millennia. By manipulating the physical realm with dramatic outcomes, they have convinced many in our so-called academic world, that the spiritual does not exist and that all instances of the miraculous are, and were, simply clever aliens using materialistic technology explainable by science and hyperbolic doubt. However, one thing is for sure, the Fallen Angels have implanted their hybrids in the highest offices and in the seats of power of every major institution and corporation, for as long as there have been seats of power to sit upon on this Earth. If you've ever wondered why you couldn't get ahead in life, no matter how hard you tried, you have only to thank the invisible hierarchy built by the elite to protect their own. That invisible ceiling most of us always suspected existed in the higher echelons of power, that I have described in detail in the previous volumes of my Confessions, like no other author in the history of mankind.

Remember, we may no longer have to wear our place in the caste system boldly painted on our foreheads these days, but we are all about to be microchipped with the Mark of the Beast, that will categorize us for success or failure from the moment we are born to the moment we die in the upcoming years, if we don't stop them. Any variation or deviation from poverty and servitude normally assigned to what they consider the lowly human race, is truly a miracle of God. What does all this have to do with the previously mentioned Abzu and the Abyss? Revelation 9, in the New Testament of the Bible, explains in detail the re-opening of Enki's "Abzu":

1. And the fifth angel sounded, and I saw a star fall from heaven unto the earth: and to him was given the key of the bottomless pit.

2. And he opened the bottomless pit; and there arose a smoke out of the pit, as the smoke of a great furnace; and the sun and the air were darkened by reason of the smoke of the pit.

A “star fall(ing) from heaven,” is a biblical idiom for describing a fallen angel descending to earth, which I believe is further identified as a fallen angel descending to earth in a spacecraft, a UFO. Upon reaching the Earth, he opens the Abyss with a key. In Aleister Crowley’s Thelemic mysticism, so dear to the Illuminati, the Abyss is the great gulf or void between the phenomenal world of manifestation and its noumenal source. [\[35\]](#)

In Aleister Crowley’s works there are numerous references to an apparently transcendental and transformative experience which appears to be called “The Crossing of the Abyss” something I experienced myself back in 1994, and it is no big secret that the subject of “aliens” holds a High Degree° of interest for the Illuminati, in all their current manifestations. In Crowley’s Equinox, promoted as the “official organ of the A .°. A .°. ” there is a story of a young woman at the turn of the century that is guided on the abysmal journey by a fellow initiate (with apparently hidden agendas) and provides an interesting yet deeply veiled account for those adept at reading between the lines of such stories. Once upon a time, enthusiasts were considered to be only weirdos or eccentrics with no credibility. People who armed themselves with telescopes, tents, and the basic necessities to camp in the hills around the U.S. waiting for close encounters of the third kind to manifest. An experience reserved for nerds and idlers that the public never associated with the elite of the New World Order.

But now, the current trend in the UFO disclosure movement involves a rather different slice of society, a transversal and unsuspecting body of Illuminati members of the ruling class, has in fact, been enlisted by Russian Intelligence operatives and put together in recent years in what is considered by Intelligence experts as a supranational non-governmental structure controlled by Vladimir Putin. An international structure that looks more and more like the powerful pressure groups like the Trilateral and the Bilderberg Club, but with an added alien twist to it. The name of this secretive organization founded approximately four years ago is called the International Organization for the Destinies of the World, [\[36\]](#) and their headquarters, located in Moscow, is known as the Center for information, analysis, and strategies of situations,^[37] that operate under the direct control of the President of the Russian Federation.^[38] At the top of the section that deals with the UFO phenomenon, a senior retired official of the Ministry of Defense, Lieutenant-General in reserve, PhD, and a fellow of the Academy of Natural Sciences Alexey Savin.

Professor Savin, once said to a journalist, that in the late 1980s a group of researchers from the Expert Management Unit of General Staff, managed to make contact with representatives of another civilization. Interestingly, none of the journalists were particularly surprised but, rather, relieved with the “confession.”^[39]

The main objective at the time was to stop any opportunities of war from arising between mankind, or at least Russia, and extraterrestrial civilizations. The KGB conducted an ample study of unexplained phenomena near Vladimirovsk in 1984. The location wasn't picked randomly, as most documented UFO encounters took place at sites where weapons or dangerous technology were tested. The International Organization for the Destinies of the World also has offices in other important cities like Washington, London, Beijing, Tel Aviv, and Rome. They include members of the military, Catholic prelates, left-wing politicians like Hillary Clinton, top managers, professionals who are already part of other influential Illuminati organizations like the International Academy of the Illuminati in Rome, or linked to International Masonic lodges or institutions close to the Catholic Church and the Jesuits. The main common denominator is faith in a Creator and the belief that there are other forms of intelligence in the Universe. Indeed, many of its members are convinced that humanity is a kind of laboratory product of a superior extraterrestrial civilization, which for millennia has watched over us. Basically, it's the kind of stuff we now find daily on the History Channel. In support of the existence of aliens, the members of this little-known organization often refer to the sacred texts, and in particular, to some passages of the Bible.

For example, they mention the words of the late Father Corrado Balducci, also a known exorcist I spoke about in Vol.3, and of Monsignor Gianfranco Basti, Professor of Philosophy of Nature and Science and the former Dean (2008-2014) of the Faculty of Philosophy, at the Jesuit run Pontifical Lateran University, and an old collaborator of the Italian Space Agency. .

Italian journalist Giacomo Amadori, an old acquaintance of mine, is to my knowledge one of the few journalists in the world who has written and interviewed members of the secretive, International Organization for the Destinies of the World, in recent years. In one article in particular, published in the Italian newspaper Libero, on the 14th of August 2016, Amadori revealed that the Italian spokesman of the organization, Piergiorgio Bassi, a high-level Freemason, and Vice President of the International Academy of the Illuminati in Rome (previously cited in my Confessions), had just met in April 2016 at a fancy restaurant in Rome, called Pescheria Rossini, with none other than former Obama aide John Podesta.^[40] At the time, Podesta was Hillary Clinton's campaign chairman, and someone known to be close to the Russian Federation and progressive forces worldwide with his vast network of corporate connections and his think tank "Center for American Progress." Podesta's business dealings in gas, aluminum, uranium, and banking in Russia, have often been pointed out, by my Infowars, colleague and friend, Roger Stone, a true American hero who was recently arrested by the FBI as part of Robert Mueller's witch hunt.

Forbes.com contributor Paul Roderick Gregory, seems to confirm this on February 18, 2017: The media's focus on Trump's Russian connections ignores the much more extensive and lucrative business relationships of top Democrats with Kremlin-associated oligarchs and companies. Thanks to the Panama Papers, we know that the Podesta Group (founded by John Podesta's brother, Tony) lobbied for Russia's largest bank, Sberbank. "Sberbank is the Kremlin, they don't do anything major without Putin's go-ahead, and they don't tell him 'no' either," explained a retired senior U.S. intelligence official. According to a Reuters report, Tony Podesta was "among the high-profile lobbyists registered to represent organizations backing Ukrainian President Viktor Yanukovich." Among these was the European Center, which paid Podesta $900,000 for his lobbying.^[41]

Amadori wrote that Piergiorgio Bassi and John Podesta discussed not only some not specified business (probably relating to Russia), but also certain UFO secrets connected to Area 51.

In the same article, Giacomo Amadori explains that Mr. Bassi was the one who actually arranged the first visit to the Moscow headquarters of the International Organization for the Destinies of the World of Mgr. Gianfranco Basti, and the same Bassi was also the person responsible for taking care of the relations between Professor Savin and the Vatican Jesuits in charge of the Alien/UFO Phenomenon starting with Fr. José Gabriel Funes, S.J., an Argentine Jesuit priest and astronomer who was the Director of the Vatican Observatory from August 19, 2006 until September 18, 2015, when he was succeeded by Pope Francis's newly appointed Jesuit, Reverend Brother Guy Consolmagno, S.J. All went well for Bassi, until he was recently condemned in July 2018, to a four year and eight-month jail sentence by the Italian judiciary for a huge financial scandal. [\[42\]](#)

In the Trump Era, Mr. Bassi, a left-wing globalist serving the evil forces of the Pope Francis's NWO, seems to have lost some of the influence and power he once held back in the Obama/Clinton years. However, Bassi is still considered a powerful figure in the Jesuit-Illuminati milieu working for the Vatican in connection with Moscow. After all, the KGB created Catholic liberation theology.

The respected, Catholic News Agency, has published an interview with Ion Mihai Pacepa, a former general in Romania's secret police who was one of the Eastern Bloc's highest-ranking defectors in the 1970s. In it, he says that the Soviet Union – and the KGB in particular – created liberation theology, the quasi-Marxist movement that flourished in Latin America from the 1960s to the 1990s and is still a powerful influence on the Catholic left. [\[43\]](#) As we all know, Putin was a KGB foreign intelligence officer during the same period, rising to the rank of Lieutenant Colonel before resigning in 1991 to enter politics in St Petersburg. Putin was directly involved in the infiltration of the Catholic Church clergy by agents of the Soviet Union. Now Putin's visible relationship with the Vatican is an opportunity to highlight Russia's effort to portray itself as a bulwark of morality and traditional values in contrast to an increasingly secularized Europe, but in reality Putin is still a Communist playing both sides. Remember, playing both sides is a classic attitude of a formal intel operative like Putin, that's why Russia was playing both sides in the 2016 election.

As cruxnow.com has also pointed out, if there's one thing that is clear by recent events, it's that Pope Francis and his team don't believe the future of Catholicism will stem from the United States. An article from 2017 by two close friends of Francis that look at a perceived alliance between fundamentalist Evangelicals and "Catholic integralists," frowned at what it called an "ecumenism of hate" and offered a glimpse into what may be the pope's personal perspective in this time of deep political and social divide in the U.S. The Argentinian looks instead to the East, toward Russia and China. Officially, Francis seems to have had an intuition that the profound changes taking place in the once great bastions of Communism can offer a fertile ground for dialogue and the growth of Christianity in the context of an increasingly secular and individualistic West. That's total propaganda, in reality he is simply referring to his Communist friends.

The pope has openly courted Russia in the last few years and its vast number of Orthodox Christians, often incurring the criticism and disappointment of those who hoped to hear a stronger opposition from the Vatican towards Vladimir Putin's authoritative, if not downright aggressive, internal, and foreign policy. The Holy See's Secretary of State, Cardinal Pietro Parolin helped by the Vice President of the Academy of the Illuminati, Piergiorgio Bassi, went to Moscow in August 2017 to meet Vladimir Putin, another important step for the International Organization for the Destinies of the World in furthering Vatican-Russian relations that are fundamental in damaging further the role of Donald J. Trump. Meanwhile, Putin, a former Communist, has managed to establish himself as the new upholder of morality and defender of persecuted Orthodox Christians in many areas of the Middle East .

Why UFO disclosure has been avoided in the Trump era

Is there a level of ultra “top secret” security above the President of the U.S. when it comes to UFOs? Is this top secret level linked to the infamous “Deep State”? Can they threaten US National Security interest?

I will try to answer these questions in the following pages. Certainly, at this point, President Trump, after all these days in office, must have been briefed about UFOs and possible aliens from NASA, the CIA, and perhaps other lesser known, but powerful players in the intelligence and military field, but maybe not. Or maybe Trump has decided to avoid promoting the alien agenda, seemingly so dear to the Democratic Party leaders, for a specific reason, maybe he fears the consequences of revealing the truth of what he knows to the rest of mankind. This question is definitely intriguing and not far from today’s reality in Trump’s White House.

Remember what happened at the time of the last Presidential Campaign, when the mysterious “Russian” hackers broke into Hillary Clinton's former campaign chairman, John Podesta’s private email account, and Podesta immediately reacted by saying that Russian intelligence officials were attempting to influence the presidential election in favor of Donald Trump. This is ridiculous, and, of course, Podesta’s friend Vladimir Putin thinks it’s hilarious. Podesta most likely gave the Russians his email details to facilitate the whole process. Without getting too polemic about this political story, whoever entered in John Podesta's private mail, entered some kind of weirdo zone, fueled with UFO lore, and immersed in perversions of Occult Crowleyanity, linked also to his brother and partner in crime Tony Podesta, the other half of The Podesta Group. Such information confirmed what everyone already knew or at least suspected for years about the perverts and the Satanists in the Jesuit driven New World Order.

Regarding the UFO presence, with all the various Sci-fi movies going back decades, and dozens of other science fiction films and TV series featuring all kinds of extraterrestrial visitors of various kinds from outer space, some will say that John Podesta's emails about UFOs had actually nothing new in them, and there should be nothing to hide from the public that could actually jeopardize National Security. However, they are quite wrong, or at least naive to think so. The UFO secret is still the biggest and most dangerous secret in the world. They make Hillary Clinton's famous campaign promise to open up files on Area 51 look very suspicious indeed, don't you think?

President Trump knows that today's reality is being strongly manipulated by evil demonic forces behind the alien phenomenon, that collaborate with the various key players of the New World Order that so vehemently oppose him, every day. The NWO criminals that accuse him unjustly of being a puppet of Vladimir Putin, and Russia. Trump knows that the biggest Illuminati Puppet Masters, the ones that control his enemies, on behalf of the Jesuits, are the ones based in Moscow headquarters of the International Organization for the Destinies of the World. Back in June 25, 2014 in an email disclosed by WikiLeaks, the late NASA astronaut Edgar Mitchell requested a conversation with John Podesta and then-President Barack Obama: “regarding the next steps in extraterrestrial disclosure for the benefit of our country and our plant.” Remember, for believers and seers of UFOs, there is no doubt of their existence.

Countries around the world such as Great Britain and Russia have released their once “top secret“ UFO files for public consumption that leave no doubt about the true existence of UFOs, so what is stopping Trump if not the realization that this will play into the hands of the Satanic Alien Alliance opposing him.

The late president President George H.W. Bush, a former CIA director, when asked about the existence of UFOs said, “You don’t know the half of it.” His son, Former President George W. Bush won't even say a word about secret government UFO files. This is not a joke, and what was Hillary Clinton's former campaign manager John Podesta doing in Rome in the middle of the presidential campaign of 2016 discussing UFO’s with the vice president of the Illuminati Academy, Piergiorgio Bassi, who spends a lot of his time in Moscow’s Center for information, analysis and strategies of situations? John Podesta, known American political consultant who served as White House Chief of Staff to President Bill Clinton, and as Counselor to President Barack Obama, is like all of his left-wing colleagues, opposing Donald J. Trump today, still very close to Russia and agents of the former KGB. Enemies of the U.S. who used to take care of foreign intelligence and domestic security for the Soviet Union are now working for the infamous New World Order secretly siding with the agents of the Deep State. No wonder, the Russians used the Clinton Foundation in "Russian Uranium Dominance Strategy" and had a scheme to route millions of dollars to the Clinton Global Initiative (CGI) through lobbying firm ARPCO, which was expected to funnel a portion of its annual $3 million lobbying fee to the charity.

Remember, Vladimir Putin likes to play all sides in this dirty game to facilitate his global dominance, a game linked to the International Organization for the Destinies of the World and its Annunaki friends. In the meantime, the internet disinfo agents are busy promoting fake news about Putin being an enemy of the Annunaki. The outlandish account claims to come from former KGB agent Strelnikov Isaac Stepanovic. According to Stepanovic, the Russian Orthodox Church has convinced Putin not to speak out about the alien/demonic presence in Syria for fear it will have a shattering influence on the Christian faith in Russia and around the world. Illuminati Academy Vice President Piergiorgio Bassi, explained to a rather shocked Giacomo Amadori in his August 2016 interview a year before bringing him to Russia with Pietro Parolin the Vatican Secretary of State, that “Thanks to the Russian relations with aliens the Russian Federation was capable of forecasting future events like terrorist attacks, environmental disasters and political upheavals.”

Lt. Gen. Alexey Savin proceeded to reveal some aspects of the engagement of the Russian Ministry of Defense in such matters.

He headed the Expert Management Unit of the General Staff, whose task was to examine various unusual phenomena. The main project of the unit was a state program on the discovery of intellectual human resources. The goal of the program was to identify ways to make the human brain work with a special regime of superpowers, making a person a superhuman. The Scientific Council of the program was led by an Academician Natalya Bekhtereva, who until her death served as a Scientific Director of the Institute of Human Brain of RAS. Over two hundred highly skilled professionals from across the country participated in the program. “In the process of research, we came to the conclusion that a human was an energy and information system that receives information from outside. This is precisely why a human can manifest paranormal abilities,” said Alexey Savin. In order to identify this external source of information, three groups were created. One group was formed from scientists, another from the military, and the third one was composed of women. The group of women made the most significant progress in the research. Savin explained that they “wanted to make a contact with representatives of other civilizations. And we did it.” According to him, a special method has been developed that allowed the human brain to tune into a contact. “We had to tune energy-contour of the human brain to a particular wave, like a radio,” Alexey Savin explained. No hypnosis, drugs, or other similar methods were used in the course of the experiment. A special system of testing was also developed to separate the incoming reports from hallucinations and insanity of the experiment participants.

The experimental results were impressive: six participants were given a chance of physical contact, and two of them even managed to visit an alien ship. According to Savin, representatives of extraterrestrial civilizations revealed themselves gradually, giving away the information as they saw fit. In particular, they talked about their government structure and education system. No information on the military could be obtained. The only thing they agreed to share was a scheme of equipment for the diagnosis and treatment of various diseases. The head of the experiment explained that humans were like small children to them. “Our civilization is too young to be of interest to them as a subject for dialogue. Because we are also a part of the universe, we may harm ourselves and other civilizations with our foolish actions, so they are looking out for us.” The program of communication with extraterrestrial intelligence had been developed for several years until politics intervened. In 1993, the study was stopped and the unit disbanded. According to Savin, he was able to retain only a small number of documents, most of them, including photo reports, are still in the archives of the Ministry of Defense. Incidentally, the unique method for the development of the phenomenal abilities of an individual, until recently, was used in the academy named after Gagarin until it was disbanded by the former Defense Minister Serdyukov.^[44] Yet, the core of the research team was preserved and became later the driving force of the new International Organization for the Destinies of the World, plotting in favor of the New World Order from Moscow headquarters. Another interesting element that came out in my personal investigation in the activities of the International Organization for the Destinies of the World, are their links to top Hollywood producers, and film directors, that can help them with Predictive Programming.^[45] Alan Watts, who describes himself as a “long-term researcher into the causative forces behind major changes in historical development,” describes Predictive Programming, as the use of fiction, either in print or visual media, to condition people to accept a planned future event. By providing the right people in the film business certain information concerning the presence and supposed real nature of UFOs and ETs, so that it “penetrates their subconscious,” and they can later psychologically condition the masses with their movies. The real facts and information will be made more acceptable since the fictitious event has been “downloaded” into their subconscious. Then, they are less likely to object to the information and question it when it’s finally revealed. They are most likely to not view it as being false or misleading. Trump knows this and wants to avoid falling into their disclosure trap by revealing the truth about UFOs and extraterrestrial intelligence that will only facilitate the advent of the Antichrist and his Satanic Legions made of liars and disinfo agents. Of course, the NWO would like you to believe Trump himself is the Antichrist, but that’s the biggest fake news.

Chapter Five

The Age of Change and Artificial Illusion, Why are abductions in decline and exorcisms on the rise?

The abduction phenomena fully exploded in the late 1980s when people whose stories would have been dismissed as delusional only a generation earlier, were now being suddenly interviewed by the mighty Oprah Winfrey, one of the leading charlatans of the New World Order. While seemingly “true stories” of alien experience, such as Whitley Strieber’s Communion, and Budd Hopkins’s Intruders, became bestsellers. By the 1990s, those who believed in the literal truth of alien abduction stories gained another important ally in John Mack, a Harvard professor and psychiatrist who compiled his study of the phenomenon into a very interesting book published in 1994 entitled Abduction: Human Encounters with Aliens. We must remember that demons are invisible, spiritual beings, who have no physical organs of their own in this dimension. They have no voice box, no lips, no mouth if not invited into our dimension with specific occult rituals.

One of the extremely enlightening things that Jesus said about demons is found in Matthew 12:43: “When the unclean spirit is gone out of a man, he walketh through dry places, seeking rest, and findeth none.” This seems to indicate that every demon has a deep craving to find expression through a physical body of a terrestrial being in this dimension. When a demon cannot find a body to occupy, he is without rest often giving birth to the so-called poltergeist cases. The abduction cases I investigated personally, and the now abundant abductee literature, is full of stories of abductees completely possessed, and now obsessed, by their past alien encounters, a pattern we often notice in the movement. Many modern researchers in the New Age movement are now saying that abductees are finding their experiences more and more acceptable, even spiritually uplifting and transformational. Social worker John Carpenter, director of abduction research for the Mutual UFO Network (MUFON), has noted a more accepting attitude in contactees/abductees. However, many of the UFO reports now being published in the popular press recount alleged incidents that are strikingly similar to demonic possession, because they are ultimately originating from the same thing. While the abductions are reducing as well as the UFO sightings in the public eye, exorcisms are on the rise in recent years, as I pointed out earlier.

The Boston Globe titled an article by Linda Rodriguez McRobbie published in June 2016, “Why alien abductions are down dramatically.” In the article McRobbie explains that, By the end of the 1990s, the alien abduction bubble had burst. Ratings fell for the “The X-Files.” In April 2001, reports (later denied) circulated that the British Flying Saucer Bureau, 1,500 members strong at its peak, was shutting down after a long dry spell of no sightings. Five months later, two planes crashed into the Twin Towers and no one cared about little green men anymore. “X-Files” director Chris Carter, at the 2008 San Diego Comic Con, declared that after 9/11, the mood just wasn’t right anymore. In 2006, Ben Macintyre, columnist for The Times, declared that the Internet had undermined belief in UFOs and alien visitation: “The unidentified flying object has been identified, and cannot fly anymore. ET has gone home.” Skepticism, it seemed, had killed the UFO. [\[46\]](#)

Last year, the two major online sites for reporting UFOs – the National UFO Reporting Center and the Mutual UFO Network – both documented steep drops in worldwide sightings. The declines started around 2014, when reports were at a peak. They have since reduced drastically to 55% of that year’s combined total, many UFO interest groups have folded, and numerous previously classified government documents have been disclosed. The Guardian in September 2018, reports of a strong decline or total disinterest in the UFO phenomenon: Do these declines reveal that UFO interest is becoming a blip on the human cultural radar? Perhaps UFO and alien lore are seeming more like a reflection of human culture, tied to the space age, motivated by conquering new existential frontiers. Possible answers as to why sightings are decreasing are varied. A key factor, however, may be that more people simply don’t care anymore. As we are accustomed to being inundated with wild claims churned out by politicians, media and advertisers, the next report of a UFO is no more believed than the long-range weather forecast. Sharon Hill, a researcher on the paranormal and pseudoscience, says: “The ideas about UFOs and aliens continue to evolve as we project our social and cultural ideas on them. Since we have no single easy explanation for all these claims regarding the decline in sightings, the future vision of ufology seems rather open-ended. I don't think it's dead, just changing.” [\[47\]](#)

In the meantime, Catholic exorcisms are gaining popularity in the U.S. like never before. Father Vincent Lampert, the official exorcist for the Archdiocese of Indianapolis, told The Atlantic in early October 2018, that he received 1,700 phone or email requests for exorcisms so far in 2018, by far the most he’s ever received in one year. [\[48\]](#) Exorcism is again in the news, as the Vatican announced last year a new training course will be held to meet increased demand for deliverance ministry. So what does this actually mean, and should it be a cause for reassurance, or concern? Newspaper headlines about a “rise in possessions” may bring to mind horrific scenes from The Exorcist, but sensationalism doesn’t help public understanding of a serious and complex reality that is growing despite the materialistic age in which we are living. Abductions, and contact stories, are not quite the fodder for daytime talk shows and New York Times bestsellers, as they were indeed a few decades ago, and The Weekly World News, is no longer peddling stories about Hillary Clinton’s alien baby at the supermarket checkout line, and as pointed out by The Boston Globe: “Today, credulous stories of alien visitation rarely crack the mainstream media, however much they thrive on niche TV channels and Internet forums. But we also still want to believe in accounts that scientists, skeptics, and psychologists say there is no credible evidence to support.”

So what is exorcism if I had to suddenly explain it in rather simple terms to my next door neighbor? Well, broadly speaking, exorcism signifies freeing a place, person, or even object from some form of negative spiritual influence.

Beliefs and rituals which could appropriately be labeled exorcism, are found in almost all cultures and faith traditions, but in the West they are encountered more frequently within Christian or Islamic settings. It is important to emphasize that within both Muslim and Christian circles, however, there is a wide spectrum of opinion about exorcism and its place in the 21st century. For instance, there are theological voices within Roman Catholicism and Anglicanism which would deny the existence of demonic entities altogether – but institutionally, these churches do accept the possibility of a human possession and provide for special ministry in such cases. [\[49\]](#)

One thing is for sure, the abduction phenomenon that began with the strange case of Betty and Barney Hill, on September 19, 1961, is gradually losing credibility if not interpreted in the correct way. I explore in depth the unexpected connections between Secret Societies of the Illuminati network, UFOs, alien abductions, the world of angels and demons, and the ancient texts that speak of them in my recent book, The Invisible Master, The Puppeteers Hidden Power, published earlier in Italy as volume 4 of my Confessions series.

Now, I will analyze, in particular, demonic possession in relation to the UFO phenomenon, because it is apparent from a great number of abductees and the effects of many of these abductions, if not all, that these interactions with non-human intelligences or with other states of mind (i.e. consciousness and all of its various aberrations), show even to the most skeptic mind, that there are indeed many similarities between the UFO abduction experience and demonic/spirit possession, but also “strange” connections like the one between Jacques Vallee and the late Anton LaVey.

LaVey, Donkey Kong, and the origins of evil in video games

In Invisible Master, I wrote: “Do you think you have been abducted by aliens? It was probably sleep paralysis modern science says these days, but we know that’s not the entire truth.” We should judge these entities by their effects on people. Those who are abducted report never being the same again, as if their alien abductors were always nearby or, in some cases, within them (much like an infection or a possession state). The late Dr. William J. Baldwin, author of Spirit Releasement Therapy: A Technique Manual, assisted by his wife, Rev. Judith Baldwin, often refer to dark entities like this: “They are simply bacteria, no more, no less. They are another life form with a different purpose. What right do bacteria have to join our bodies?” [\[50\]](#)

The Baldwins' statement infers consciousness as inherent with these entities. Known UFO expert and member of the Church of Satan, Jacques Vallee, wrote in his now legendary Passport to Magonia:

Throughout medieval times, a major current of thought distinct from official religion existed, culminating in the works of the alchemists and hermetics. Among such groups were to be found some of the early modern scientists and men remarkable for the strength of their independent thinking and their adventurous life, such as Paracelsus. The nature of the beings who mysteriously appeared, dressed in shiny garments or covered with dark hair, and with whom communication was so hard to establish intrigued these men intensely. They were the first to relate these strange beings to the creatures described in the Bible and in the writings of the early cabalists. According to biblical writers, the heavenly hierarchy includes beings of a human form called cherubim, a name that in Hebrew means “full of knowledge.” Ezekiel describes them in the following terms: Their appearance was like burning coals of fire, and like the appearance of lamps: it went up and down among the living creatures; and the fire was bright, and out of the fire went forth lightning. [\[51\]](#)

So what is their real nature, and how can we distinguish good beings from bad ones? Negative Alien Technology is said to exist and some alchemists ended their lives in a bad way because of their close relationship with such beings. Demons want to possess; they want to possess property, animals, and people. Possession means to own, to influence, dominate, or control (American Heritage Dictionary). Demons want to dominate and control everything they come across. The more that they can control people, the more that they can control what humans do and thus get them to commit evil. In his book, The Invisible College (E.P. Dutton, 1975) published two years later in Great Britain with the title UFOs: The Psychic Solution, Jacques Vallee talks about the idea of a control system, where UFOs, and related phenomena are the means through which man's concepts are being rearranged and developed. The reason for doing this might not be known by us, at least at this stage of human development.

“My assumption is that a level of control of society exists which is a regulator of man's development. I am also led to the assumption that the action of UFOs operates at this level. What does this explain ? First it explains why there no contact. Direct genuine contact would ruin the experiment. (There may be deliberately misleading contact, as in UMMO.) It would preclude genuine learning. It explains some of the statements made by ufonauts (you should believe in us but not too much), and e Schirmer case, with its deliberate confusion: you will not speak wisely about this night. It explains the absurdity of many cases, where reactions to the phenomenon may have been evoked in terms of nonverbal consciousness rather than in logical terms. This would explain why so many witnesses are incapable of finding words to describe what they have seen. When I speak of a control system for planet earth I do not want my words to be misunderstood: I do not mean that some higher order of beings has locked us inside the constraints of a space-bound jail, closely monitored by psychic entities we might call angels or demons. I do not propose to redefine God. What I do mean is that mythology rules at a level of our social reality over which normal political and intellectual action has no real power. At that level, time frames are long, of the order of a century, and evolution is slow and sure. Mass media, which are designed to give split-second images of transient noise (the noisier the better), miss this signal entirely. A society with an attention span of ten minutes (the interval between two commercials) can have no concept of events that have begun when my grandfather was not yet born and will end after my grandson dies. But there are such long-term changes and they may be deliberate. They dominate the destiny of civilizations. Myths define the set of things scholars, politicians, and scientists can think about. They are operated upon by symbols, and the language these symbols form constitutes a complete system. This system is metalogical, but not metaphysical. It violates no laws because it is the substance of which laws are made. The theory does not explain how UFOs are made to appear to us although it gives support to one idea about them : that they are constructed. both as a physical craft (a fact which has long appeared to me undeniable) and as psychic devices, whose exact properties remain to be defined. As a focus for psychic phenomena, the UFO evokes a deep emotional reaction in the viewer, but the logical development of an investigation is prevented - or precluded - by the apparent violations of causality that surround it and by the sociological climate that is created. Scientists may be willing to interview a witness who has seen a landed craft, but he may not wish to talk to them. Or the witness may offer as proof of his experience a couple of pancakes given to him by extraterrestrials, a recitation of meaningless messages, or a story of sexual contact with a girl from outer space. In any case, a pursuit of the rational study of the case is impossible. The lurid aspects of many such stories make their serious examination improbable, and this in reinforces the role of the UFO rumors as folklore, rich in new images. ” [\[52\]](#)

Notice how Jacques Vallee, a friend of the late Anton LaVey, and a pawn of the Illuminati elite, who served as the real-life model for Lacombe, the UFO researcher portrayed by François Truffaut in Steven Spielberg’s Close Encounters of the Third Kind, indicates the impossibility for mankind to fully understand the true importance, and the real reason for the UFO phenomenon occurring all over the world today. His Invisible Master has instructed him on not creating panic or taking sides during his mission.

Remember, demons will not stop trying to confuse and possess humans like Vallee, as this is their primary way to spread evil, and his attitude shows Vallee’s loyalty to the dark side. The more physical, mental, and spiritual territory that demons possess the more that they own. In Volume Two of his Forbidden Science journal (suitably titled “California Hermetica”), Vallee describes his first encounter with the head of the Church of Satan. Setting off at “a suitably late hour,” he recounts, they drove to the infamous “Black House” at 6114 California Street, “a black house with permanently closed shutters,” where LaVey made what can only be described as an appropriate entrance.

A black tail-less cat greeted us on the front steps. Someone opened a round spy-hole, recognized Art and unlocked the heavy door. We met a pleasant, shapely blonde woman named Diane, LaVey's wife. With a flourish she introduced us into a purple parlor full of books, with a fireplace in one angle, a skeleton in a glass cabinet, a gravestone as a coffee table. We took our seats, avoiding the stately chaise percée. Of the High Priest there was no sign until the mantelpiece pivoted away, startling us. A bald head adorned with a pointed black beard appeared at ground level and a large man looking for all the world like Mephistopheles climbed out, idly twisting a five-pointed star. Wearing a green sweater, the jovial diabolist shook our hands and sat among us. While Diane served coffee, Anton assured us modestly, like a good pastor, that he sincerely believed in his religion, even if he did not trust his disciples farther than he could throw his massive Wurlitzer organ.

As The Daily Grail wrote recently, Vallee visited LaVey many more times during the 1970s (their talks at times were even “interrupted by Christians who evidently thought they could save LaVey's soul by throwing heavy objects against his house”).

In 1982, Vallee notes (in Forbidden Science Volume 3) that the Black Pope “seemed to have lost much of his charisma and power”.

At one dinner date, the odd esoteric pairing sound almost normal as they “commiserated about the state of our respective homes” and discussed movies and computer games. Computer games were once again the topic at another dinner in 1984, when LaVey asked Vallee for advice on a computer to use for word processing. During the evening, Vallee's daughter showed LaVey her Atari, and how to play games on it – giving rise to one of the great phrases in his book, “we enjoyed seeing the Black Pope playing Donkey Kong”: “Anton and Diane came to see us Tuesday. He had called me for advice: Diane is looking for a computer she could use for word processing. They had dinner at our house, where my daughter demonstrated her Atari. She also instructed Anton in the use of video games, so we enjoyed seeing the Black Pope playing Donkey Kong.”^[53]

From that revelatory moment, to the end of his life, LaVey embraced video games as a new Satanic tool, and today his disciples openly say video games help them practice their Satanic religion. In more recent years, Jacques Vallee was employed by U.S. billionaire and Satanist, Robert Bigelow, first as a consultant for his National Institute for Discovery Science, that was dismantled in 2004, and later as a member of the scientific advisory board of fastly developing Bigelow Aerospace.

In December 2017, a New York Times story revealed that Bigelow Aerospace had, in fact, conducted since 2007, a study on UFOs for the Pentagon, receiving some $22 million, to study advanced aerial threats; including those that still remain allegedly unidentified. Vallee must have had a leading role in this top secret research denominated The Pentagon's Advanced Aviation Threat Identification Program, that officially ended in 2012. Let's also keep in mind that Robert Bigelow, has been working for years with members of the Temple of Set, like Col. John B. Alexander, also involved in the now defunct National Institute for Discovery Science. The Temple of Set is an Illuminati cult founded in 1975 by Lt Colonel Michael Aquino, considered as a sort of schismatic group of the Church of Satan. This sect often cited in my Confessions, was established in the United States by Aquino, an American political scientist, military officer, and a high-ranking member of LaVey's Church of Satan.

Video games, Virtual Reality, and Satanism

The State of the Online Gaming 2018 market research reported that people who play video games spend an average of nearly six hours each week playing. Gamers 18-25 spend the most time, at more than seven hours each week. Globally, gamers spend more time playing on mobile phones than on computers, tablets, or gaming consoles. However, men and people older than 45 spend more time playing on desktop or laptop computers than any other device. If there is one tenet modern Satanists go by, it is this: “Responsibility to the responsible.” This mantra is a cornerstone of devotees belonging to the Church of Satan, that video game players should always keep in mind when interacting with them. Remember, this, and other tenets of Satanism have found applications in the many video game universes Satanists routinely play every day.

In the survival game Ark: Survival Evolved, Church of Satan member Citizen V (his “under the horns nickname”) ignores the naked and empty-handed low-level players who supplicate at his tribe’s floating base. It’s an opulent base where his tribe hatches pteranodons and cultivates their naval armada. “Anyone worth my time, who enriches my life and brings something to the table—those are the people worth going out of your way for,” told Citizen V, over the phone, to the journalist interviewing him called Cecilia D’Anastasio, Senior reporter at Special Projects/Kotaku, a video game site of Gizmodo Media Group. Satanist, Citizen V, says that he doesn’t necessarily kill all new players on sight. Not all new players are useless, he reasons with the reporter. If they’re consistent, he’ll put them to work, maybe even give them food and water. “The more people we can get to do stuff for us—that’s great,” he said. “Responsibility to the responsible.”

Citizen V, was quoting a vital mantra to the Church of Satan members, a call for self-accountability. Despite the conception of Church of Satan devotees as modern atheists with no real belief system, the Church of Satan founded by LaVey in 1966 has been created by the dark side of the Illuminati, as a movement that would oppose the status quo and the damage done in their eyes, by traditional religious and social values. Because Satanists, as strange as it might seem to the profane eye, see traditional Christian vices as great human assets for their plan. Pride, individualism, and influence are their bread, butter, and blood. Satanists seek to amass power and experience pleasure in the process. To that end, over half a dozen Satanists interviewed by Cecilia D'Anastasio, say that video games are playgrounds for their Satanic virtues to run free. This is especially true in the age of online gaming, something the late Anton LaVey, who died over 22 years ago, in 1997, had already foreseen.

For this reason, LaVey was a great fan of the little-known film “Evilspeak,” a 1981 pioneering movie which dealt with Satan in cyberspace, that was censored in the UK where it remained banned for a number of years as part of the Video Recordings Act 1984, thanks to its Satanic themes and gory climax. The original version of the film seems to have also been heavily edited before its official release due to its controversial content. Actor Clint Howard said that director Eric Weston's original version of the film that was submitted to the MPAA was, in fact, longer and contained more blood, gore, and nudity than the unrated version of the film, especially during the shower/pig attack scene and the final confrontation, but let's go back to modern video games.

Left 4 Dead? Satanic. Call of Duty? Satanic. Minecraft? Mega-Satanic; these are the recent answers of Satanic Reverend John H. Shaw, who explained that, “You can build every little thing—put a torch where you want it, a tunnel, a walkway, a moat. That’s very Satanic.” During the Satanic Ritual Abuse (SRA) frenzy of the 1980s that I described in detail earlier, American parents feared the alleged Satanic influences of games like Dungeons & Dragons and Doom, but today Church of Satan’s reverend Raul Antony, seems to think they all exaggerated back then: “Almost anything that had some devil symbolism or fantasy symbolism was deemed Satanic and linked to fabricated stories of ritual abuse and baby-killing.” But to Reverend Raul, it makes sense that Satanism was unjustly blamed for all the hype around fantasy media because, “Part of our philosophy is that Satan has always been the scapegoat, the thing you blame for the evil of man,” he said. “But man himself is the one doing all these things. God gets all the credit for the good stuff, but Satan gets the blame for all the bad stuff.”

Satanists nowadays love to play the victims of being misunderstood, just like all liberal snowflakes, but the truth is that video games are really fertile soil for evil Satanic beliefs and demonic forces, that take root in the fragile minds of many in today’s society. According to Satanist gamers, few things are more Satanic than video games, and the Satanic New World Order supports this as part of their evil agenda to take control of the world in the End Times. For those who are still skeptic about the demonic dangers of video games, I want to share this dramatic testimony left by a mother at talkjesus.com in February 2013:

God bless you all for taking the time to read this.

I recently found my son playing a video game called “Persona 3.” I was doing house chores while he was playing it in the living room. It seemed like a child-friendly and educational game at first. The characters were at a school and learning math. The next thing I know, they were shooting themselves in the head! The characters had what looked like guns and they'd put them up to their heads and shoot. I got worried, so I did some research on the game. The guns are actually “evokers” used to call upon a “persona.” I'm worried that my son will one day find a gun and try this out, or try to evoke evil spirits in other ways. I learned that there is a sequel called Persona 4 where the teenagers call a "persona" by using tarot cards. This goes against the Lord. As I kept doing research, I learned that these games are a part of a bigger series called “Shin Megami Tensei.” What I learned about this series is horrifying.

There are games called “Devil Children,” “Devil Survivor,” “Devil Summoner,” and “Digital Devil Saga” that are part of this series! This got me really worried about what my son was playing. In these games you summon and fight "demons." These demons look really similar to what my son was summoning as "personas."

What can I do? I'm scared that if I take away the games, he might try performing these things in real life and rebel. But if I don't take them away, he'll be falling into the hands of the devil! Please pray for my son!^[54]

In 2015, something truly disturbing happened to an 18-year-old woman in Lima, Peru, that reportedly became possessed by a demon. She started convulsing, foaming at the mouth and even tried to kill herself after playing a version of a Ouija board game on her mobile phone. In a video posted online by the London Express, Patricia Quispe can be seen thrashing and crying out as medics hold her down on a table. Medical experts said she exhibited abnormal strength, and it took them more than 30 minutes to restrain her while she was convulsing and screaming “Let me go! Let me Go!” and “666”.

Remember, demons can get to the point where they completely possess a person. This is extremely rare, but when this happens they can freely speak through the person, direct the person to move at their command, and even give them extraordinary strength.^[55]

The Gadarene man who had the legion of demons was an example of full possession. The demons talked through the man (Luke 8:31), gave him supernatural strength to break chains (Luke 8:29), was driven by the demon to go to solitary places (Luke 8:29), was violent (Matthew 8:28), and was mentally unstable as he would cry out and cut himself with stones (Mark 5:5). Demons will try to obtain as much territory as they can both in this dimension as well as others, like the growing virtual reality created by video games, and they will not stop trying to possess more and more people, unless they are resisted.

Demons seek to fully possess a person, but this usually takes a long period of time. For most people, they surrender their Will a little bit at a time until they either wake up and get help for their downward slide, or they continue until there is virtually nothing left of their personality as the demons eventually take over completely.^[56]

Demons usually work slowly and subtly in order to hide their presence as long as possible, and today they often work aided by our growing interactive technologies. Satan and his Legions desire to influence the human race more than ever before in this critical time for the future of humanity. For the elite most of mankind will eventually lose every contact with the physical world making it easier to control the masses with Artificial Intelligence.

They are doing this by introducing after the preparatory stage of video games, Virtual Reality (VR), a technology that people have been excited about long before it came into existence. The Lawnmower Man is a 1992 science-fiction/horror film directed by Brett Leonard and written by Leonard and Gimel Everett that touches not only the subject of virtual reality but also the early stages of the internet, and Artificial Intelligence. The film is supposedly an adaptation of the Stephen King short story of the same name published in the May 1975 issue of Cavalier, and later included in King's own 1978 collection Night Shift, but aside from a single scene, the two are said to be completely different. The title of the film, before they added Stephen King's title to it, was originally "Cyber God" which made more sense, but would not have helped the film like being attached to a Stephen King project did. Sincerely, I never read King's original story, but I saw the movie on a VHS tape with my father, and it truly shocked us, especially when Jobe is having his first VR treatment and sees certain symbols flying at him. Many of these symbols are taken from the Key of Solomon, and are demon evocation seals traditionally used by the dark side of the Illuminati, and Occult Freemasonry. Keep in mind that this film came out in 1992, and only one year earlier in January 1991, the first Web servers outside CERN itself were switched on.

The start of the World Wide Web was like opening a Pandora's box of immense proportions on the world and nobody knew what was about to happen, but the makers of this film had already envisioned the futuristic practice of mind uploading, transferring Jobe's mind to his computer mainframe, were Jobe saw his final stage of evolution as "pure energy," eventually emigrating at the last minute to the outside world of the computer networks, thanks to a maintenance line.

Within the Transhumanist Movement, mind uploading is treated as an important proposed life extension technology and a permanent backup to our "mind-file". A similar but more advanced concept of this kind is seen in the more recent movie Transcendence, a 2014 American science fiction thriller film featuring Johnny Depp.

The world is becoming indeed a very strange place to live, as spiritual entities begin to erode away the ability to focus on truth, reality, logic, and critical thinking skills, transforming men into mindless robots of the New World Order, thanks to technology. This world is becoming a fantasy stricken "wonderland" and billions of souls are being trapped in it, prisoners of their illusions and ready to be exploited. It's time to break out of this maze of confusion because mankind is about to be destroyed by “Satan's Virtual Reality” that is not strictly speaking only about video games, but about the whole World Wide Web.

The demons generally start working on the outside through whispers, oppression, subtle lies, and misrepresentation of facts. Imagine how easy this can be in the world of video games, virtual reality, and Social Networks. For example, a demon may whisper to a teenage girl while she is surfing her favorite online game that everyone is staring at her because they think she is ugly, triggering her violence during the game; or they can make her think everyone is whispering about her behind her back on social networks with a simple tag. The girl may start to become insecure, and self-conscious, while navigating the web or playing on the phone, but this is only the start of her nightmare. Then the demonic voice may indicate classmates talking and laughing and whispers in her ear, “See, they are talking about you all over the internet.”

Now she will become even more insecure and will turn slightly paranoid every time she sees someone talking and laughing around her. The demon may set up or point out specific circumstances to feed these fears and in the age of Facebook, selfies, and likes, this is increasingly more easy. The demons seek to work outside of your awareness, to speak softly or insert thoughts, or create oppressive moods that cannot easily be traced back to them, especially by young individuals who are not aware of evil spirits or deny that they even exist. Sadly, a lot of young people are playing certain games without realizing that they promote Satanic values. Today, you can pick up your favorite game any time, go to any app store and mindlessly download a couple of games. Next, you start playing with them. Before you know it you are hooked and you can not seem to drop your device, even if your girlfriend or boyfriend calls you for a good old fashioned fuck. Still, you seem to console yourself with the fact that it is just a game, after all, it's not like you are actually punching or killing real people. Unknown to you, these games are actually not as innocent as they appear. In fact, they are the devil's playground made to increase your negative energy and feed their Egregore.

Egregore (also egregor) is an occult concept representing a “thoughtform” or “collective group mind,” an autonomous psychic entity made up of, and influencing, the thoughts of a group of people. I have described in great detail the importance of it and the symbiotic relationship between an egregore and the occult groups that might generate it, in my previous publications. However, recently the Egregore concept has been compared to the initially non-occult concept of the meme, very popular online and not necessarily negative.

The meme is an image, video, piece of text, etc., typically humorous in nature, that is usually copied and spread rapidly by Internet users over social networks, often with slight variations, but usually funny. Now, however, we have the more spooky “Meme Magic” a recent slang term used by internet users to describe the hypothetical power of sorcery and voodoo, supposedly derived from certain internet memes that can transcend the realm of cyberspace and result in real life consequences. Scary? Well Cyber Satan has definitely gone a long way from his first appearance in “Evilspeak”.

The ominous “I will return” text written at the end of the film on the computer screen of an “Apple II” PC introduced in 1977 at the end of the film, should help us reflect on the Satanic origins of Apple. The “Apple I” went on sale in July 1976 at the price of U.S. $666.66.

FIG. 22 – Image from the end of the Satanic film “Evilspeak” (1981) shows the use of a Apple II computer by the protagonist to translate Latin texts and raise the devil. The text exposed is also significant.

The Antichrist will control humans through the web

The leader of the Russian Orthodox Church, Patriarch Kirill, recently said that humans’ dependence on modern technology will result in the coming of the Antichrist. Last year, the Vatican gave its blessings to the controversial “Follow JC Go” game which, as the name suggests, is a riff on “Pokemon Go,” considered by many Christians to be Satanic, it combines technology with evangelization, and the Vatican even launched a Smartphone app for Vatican City, showing their growing obsession for technology. In an interview with Russian state media, Patriarch Kirill, someone with a much more traditional view of things, explained at the beginning of January 2019, that he does not entirely oppose technological gadgets, but warned against “falling into slavery” to smartphones. Patriarch Kirill said that the collection of user data including “location, interests, and fears” will make it possible for humans to be controlled by external forces.

“Control from a single point is a harbinger of the coming of the Antichrist,” Kirill told the state-owned Russian television channel Russia-1 TV on Orthodox Christmas Monday which falls on January 7th on the common Gregorian calendar. Kirill’s warning was very clear:

“The Antichrist is a personality that will be at the head of the World Wide Web controlling the entire human race. Thus, the structure itself presents a danger,” he said with great fear of things to come. The church leader stressed that “if we don’t want to bring the apocalypse closer, there should be no single [control and access] center.”

Once more, the Russian Orthodox Church seems to be in line with true Christianity, while the Catholic Church is obviously in the hands of the future Antichrist. It is apparent to faithful Catholics today, and more so as the past years have demonstrated, some of Pope Francis’ actions and teachings have raised legitimate and serious concerns about the Satanic nature of his mission. In the Book of Revelation, the False Prophet is mentioned as the Beast from the earth “like a lamb” who becomes the religious head of the false church. The False Prophet “deceives those who dwell on earth.”

Now, it is important to recognize before it is too late, that Pope Francis is actually the False Prophet of the Book of Revelation, and the greatest deceiver to walk the earth, because this Jesuit is the epitome of a wolf in sheep’s clothing, perfectly pretending to be that which he is not.

Artificial Intelligence and Satan's Robotic Agenda

Robot ethics, sometimes known by the short expression "roboethics," concerns ethical problems that can occur in the world of robots, such as whether robots pose a threat to humans in the long or short term, and whether some uses of robots are problematic (such as in healthcare or as "killer robots" in war). "Robo Ethics. People, machines and health" is the title for the workshop that took place at the Vatican during the plenary assembly of the Pontifical Academy for Life held from the 25th to the 27th of February 2019.

academyforlife.va described the event in the following way:

"The goal of the Workshop is to provide updates on the characteristics of the technologies in the field of robotics: namely, through those who work on the ground, identify and shape the questions rising in the field from the anthropological and ethical point of view and propose some ethical criteria and possibly some recommendations, keeping alive the attention to the global dimension of the theme. First session (Monday 25, afternoon) will focus on state-of-the-art technologies and different approaches to robotics' research and development. The second session (Tuesday 26, morning) will explore socio-anthropological implications, i.e., how robotics changes the ways of knowing and understanding the world, perceiving relationships, and understanding the body and social coexistence. Third session (Tuesday 26, afternoon) will address the ethical implications of robotics in the health sector."

This is the first stage in a process that will continue until 2020, when the next plenary session of the Vatican that takes place in a crucial year for humanity will be dedicated to the other hot topic at the moment, Artificial Intelligence. The Academy says that: "The fields of robotics and artificial intelligence are distinct, but closely related. They both contain so much information and so many anthropological and ethical questions in themselves that we are dedicating two assemblies to these subjects. We hope that, by having two different assemblies dedicated to two different aspects of the larger field of robotic technologies in general, we can address the opportunities and challenges of these connected technologies in greater depth.”

Moreover, this year's appointment coincided with the 25th anniversary of the Academy's establishment. For the occasion, Pope Francis wrote a long letter to the President, Monsignor Vincenzo Paglia, where he touches on various issues that relate to the relationship between technology and humanity. It is a worrying scenario that the Pope describes in his letter to Monsignor Vincenzo Paglia “The threshold of basic respect for human life is being crossed, and brutally at that, not only by instances of individual conduct but also by the effects of societal choices and structures.”

The document was presented in the Vatican by Monsignor Paglia, together with Monsignor Renzo Pegoraro, Chancellor of the Academy, Professor Laura Palazzani, Professor of Biolaw and Philosophy of Law at Lumsa, and Father Paolo Bennati, Professor of Moral Theology and Ethics of technology at the Pontifical Gregorian University. As we all know, Science fiction has long explored these themes because they involve many moral and ethical implications of great importance for humanity, but very few people know that films like the previously cited 2001 - A Space Odyssey were inspired by the Jesuits and the legendary figure of the late Pierre Teilhard de Chardin is one, if not the central figure of this volume.

At the start of 2019, the Church of Satan began posting videos about sex robots online – but it wasn't a bandwagon-jumping attempt by the Church of Satan to compete with the Vatican because as I pointed out earlier, the founder of the Church of Satan, Anton Lavey, predicted sex robots more than two decades ago, and today's Satanists still believe they could save us all. The Church of Satan's Magistra Blanche Barton wrote on their official website a few years ago: “Let's review the Five Point Program which Dr. LaVey set forth in the late 1980s as our plan of action. Points four and five are the development and promotion of humanoids, and of total environments.

Scientists and techno-geeks are doing a bang-up job in these departments, developing exceedingly realistic artificial human companions, both of the Real Doll and virtual Facebook-friend variety. There has also been great progress made in creating total environments—commercial ventures like Disneyland and the Wizarding World of Harry Potter abound, while any number of other permanent and faire-type periodic re-enactments allow for total immersion. We have virtual worlds galore to explore in the form of video games, many now outpacing movie sales. Movies and television series are becoming more enveloping, the bigger the budgets get. As in ancient Rome, we have more than enough entertainments to distract us.”

Magus Peter H. Gilmore, High Priest of the Church of Satan confirmed this on the 15th of January 2019 to the British Newspaper Metro, stating that LaVey promoted the idea of "artificial human companions," as a means for people to exercise sexual or other drives with a device that might gratify their fantasies without having to involve other human beings. This would permit complete control over the details of their fantasy. Now that robotics is advancing, it seems that this field of endeavor is seeing new increased activity as both the Catholic Church and the Church of Satan move towards the implementation of a new artificial Satanic world.

Mark Zuckerberg's Facebook, the world's most influential and known social network, shut down two Artificial Intelligence programs in 2017, after they discovered that they were writing their own code. Yes, the almighty Facebook was forced to abandon a very expensive experiment after two artificially intelligent programs appeared to be chatting to each other in a strange language only they could understand. The machines acted independently from their shocked programmers. Nobody knows what they were actually talking about, but this is yet another sign of the advent of Artificial Intelligence (A.I.) in the Age of Satan. Elon Musk (b.1971), known technology entrepreneur ranked in 2016 as 21st on the Forbes list of The World's Most Powerful People, has been one of the first to raise the spectre of the digital devil taking over the world and humans being left behind. He fears that AI will exceed biological intelligence by such a margin that we will all need to think about an AI-infused human. This transformation will start with the planting of the microchip. The infamous "Mark of the Beast” I talked to you about earlier.

Zero Edge seems to have a slightly different outlook on things. They wrote recently that today when most people think about the potential risks of Artificial Intelligence and machine learning, their minds immediately jump to the famous film, “The Terminator” in a future where robots would march down suburban streets gunning down every human in their path. For Zero Edge, while AI does have the potential to sow chaos and discord in many ways, the manner in which this might happen will be much more down to earth and pedestrian, and far less exciting. They say the real risks could arise from AI networks that can learn to create fake images and videos known in the industry as “deepfakes.” Such videos are indistinguishable from the real thing. This will mean the inability for many people in the future to distinguish between fact and fiction on an even larger scale than today’s already confusing reality. Who can forget the fake video of President Obama produced artificially by AI software that surfaced online a couple of years ago, almost indistinguishable from a genuine video of the former president? [\[57\]](#)

So how can we increase our ability to differentiate genuine images or sounds from those that are fabricated by a computer simulation generated by the AI? Well, we still don’t have an answer, but probably in the years to come AI itself will verify what is real or not in our lives.

Dangerous illusions or the manipulations of our reality will just be another feature of Cyber Satan’s many offerings, to elude mankind in the years to come in gradually accepting the Kingdom of the Antichrist, but always remember Satan is a liar. He is a deceiver. He is dishonest to the core. He is the “father of lies” so the so-called “deepfakes” are part of this destabilizing project. At the same time, Stanley Kubrick’s film version of 2001: A Space Odyssey by the late Arthur C. Clarke (1917-2008), should not be considered simply fiction, because AI is overtaking human intelligence at a pace higher than expected on a daily basis. Surprise, surprise, Jesuit Pierre Teilhard de Chardin, one of the central figures of Vol.6.6.6. of my Confessions also influenced Arthur C. Clarke, who explored transhumanist ideas in his 1968 novel 2001: A Space Odyssey, that gave birth to what is widely considered to be one of the most influential films of all time. Fr. Pierre Teilhard de Chardin SJ, the inspiration behind “The Exorcist” is even mentioned by name, and his Omega Point theory is briefly explained in Arthur C. Clarke’s and Stephen Baxter’s The Light of Other Days. As Livingstone explains in great detail, “In the 60s Clarke also prophesied that in the near future “ultra-intelligent” machines would make possible an “uninhibited, hedonistic society” of cradle-to-grave leisure. According to Clarke, in Childhood’s End, the destiny of humanity as well as most of the other intelligent species in the universe seems to merge with overall cosmic intelligence.”

In his 1962 book, Profiles of the Future, Clarke predicted that the construction of what H.G. Wells called the World Brain would take place in two stages. Clarke identified the first of these as the construction of the World Library, or Wells’ Universal Encyclopaedia, accessible to everyone from their home on computer terminals by the year 2000. In the second stage, the World Library would be incorporated into the World Brain, a superintelligent artificially intelligent supercomputer that humans would be able to interact with to solve various world problems. He suggested that this supercomputer should be installed in the former war rooms of the US and the Soviet Union, once the superpowers had matured enough to agree to cooperate rather than war with each other. Clarke predicted the construction of the “World Brain” would be completed by the year 2100.

Arthur C. Clarke, along with O.T.O. member Robert Heinlein and Isaac Asimov, is considered one of the “Big Three” of science fiction. In the seminal short story by Isaac Asimov, “The Last Question” (in the book Robot Dreams), humanity merges its collective consciousness with its own creation: an all-powerful cosmic computer.^[58]

However, Bill Gates, Stephen Hawkin, and the previously cited Elon Musk, are all warning us over and over again that evolution in the field of AI is to be considered no less than summoning the Devil itself. Basically, we are going back to what was in a way prophesied by the anti-Christian movie “Evilspeak,” that LaVey purportedly loved and regarded as an accurate depiction of his faith.

For those advocating the use of AI for the New World Order, unintended consequences, the negative use of this new technology, seem to be very small compared to the enormous benefits. However, among the experts, growing fears that humans could lose control are spreading after Sophia the humanoid robot, created by Hanson robotics underwent a technical glitch during a demonstration by founder, David Hanson, at the South by Southwest (SXSW) technology show in Texas back in March 2016, when the robot claimed it will “destroy humans.” Hanson jokingly asked the robot “do you want to destroy humans?...Please say no,” but Sophia's response was not quite what Hanson had in mind when she replied, “OK. I will destroy humans.”

There is also particular concern about the military use of AI in weapons and so-called “killer robots.” Fully sentient machines could emerge within a few years that could challenge mankind and our freedom, and people need to understand as soon as possible that all this will increase the capability of Satan’s Legion to fully dominate our species as prophesied. Some liberal idiots will say we can teach the AI to love us, but the main problem is that we don’t really love ourselves enough to save the human species from this technological nightmare. Children of younger and younger ages are seen with smartphones these days. We let our children be enslaved by this too easily.

According to a study published in 2017 in the Journal of Child Development, teens today are experiencing a slower path to embracing adult responsibilities than ever before. And the researchers concluded that cell phone and tablet engagement was at least partially to blame for this problem. ^[59] For Satanists: “The smartphone is an example of the many interactions the individual has with technology, the question is if the individual is the master or slave, and if their tool is one that enhances wisdom through experience, or consigns the individual to ignorant passivity as an observer of their life and environment. The idea of technology becoming alike to a demonic familiar.” They argue that, “The Satanist always has the choice to examine their relationship with technology at each moment, asking the question of if at that moment they are master or slave, and on the path of wisdom through experience or of ignorance as a passive observer.” ^[60]

In this day and age almost everywhere you turn you can see people obsessing on their smartphones or tablets. Whether they be on dates, in church, or at the movies, people just can't seem to pull themselves away from these objects. Unfortunately, it's starting to take its toll. There are health conditions related directly to the overuse of cell phones or tablets, and these health conditions are on the rise as indicated by many health professionals. In the meantime, AI-empowered 5G cellular networks are being inaugurated worldwide. Who really cares whether the 5G-connected refrigerator keeps track of the food items inside it and orders new items when the supply dwindles? Who has to have a 5G driverless car that takes us to work? Who must have a 5G stove that senses what is being cooked and sets the temperature for four minutes? Who lives and who dies if a washing machine doesn't measure how much soap is stored inside and doesn't order new soap? Who is demanding a hundred devices in his home that spy on him and record his actions if not the New Satanic World Order. With 5G, the ultimate goal of the Satanic elite ruling the New World Order is creating a future digital prison for mankind, and at the same time have full control of all the shrinking energy resources, and what is consumed by each human being.

Every device in every home that uses energy will be "its own computer," and as part of the planetary 5G Smart Grid network it will be in charge of managing the internet of things and other technologies, it will connect to monitoring and regulating Energy Authority, that will control us all.

As Patrick Wood details in his classic, Technocracy Rising, a worldwide Energy Authority was the dream of the men who launched the Technocracy movement, in America, in the 1930s. They set out the key requirements – which weren't technically possible then, but are quite doable now: continuous real-time measuring of both energy production and energy use from one end of the planet to the other. So that both energy production and energy consumption could be controlled. "For the good of all," of course 5G is the technology for making all this finally happen. The 5G system that they're using to run the smart grid Internet of Things is of course being used also by the military. It's a military-grade technology with many levels of use. Of course, the companies promoting 5G will always tell you, We're promising you a stunning long-range future of "automatic homes" where everything is done for you.

But that's really only the cover story. Because ultimately, they want to be able to measure every unit of energy used by every device in every home – and through AI, regulate how much energy they will let every individual consume, but also control us in every moment of the day in all our functions. Terms and projects like smart grid, smart meters, sustainability, Agenda 21, smart cities, climate change – all this is Technocratic planning and justification for Rule through Energy as part the Satanic take over of our society. 5G networks are also said to have negative effects on our skin, eyes, heart, immune system, and the health of plants. You can look at a more complete list of the negative effects surrounding the implementation of the 5G network at electricsense.com. Thanks to 5G, Artificial Intelligence will slowly but surely take control of our entire society. In the near future, Smartphones, Smarthomes or Smartcars will be part of the 5G Smart Grid network controlled by Artificial Intelligence and through the Transhumanist technology implanted in our bodies, we will fall under the Control of Artificial Intelligence. The first conclusion that I draw in this mess is that Artificial Intelligence will be like Satan conducting our everyday lives. Gradually putting an end to all our mental and physical faculties under the control of another entity. When Ray Kurzweil (b.1948) one of the most powerful men on the planet, in charge of Google predicts that by the end of the third decade of this century human thinking will be non-biological, we must ask ourselves some questions. What Mr. Kurzweil wants to say is that our thinking (our mental faculties, will be under the control of a Satanic Artificial Intelligence).^[61]

“The real world Minority Report is upon us” says expert Justus Knight. DARPA the infamous U.S. Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency has unveiled KAIROS. This is going to be the all seeing, all knowing and all judging demon machine that takes all the world's data and uses it to predict future events before they actually happen! By reaching out into the internet of things, KAIROS will be able to eventually determine what the future holds and turn it into actionable data. This means the ultimate manipulation machine has now been designed. Imagine being judged and sentenced before you ever commit a crime just like in Minority Report, the 2002 American neo-noir science fiction film directed by Steven Spielberg . That time is now, and the tech is real. Now many researchers are wondering what will happen when the demon in this machine is fully released on humanity...or has it been already: the implications are more than dire. [\[62\]](#)

In January 2019 Devin Coldewey @techcrunch.com writes:

That most famous characterization of the complexity causality, a butterfly beating its wings and causing a hurricane on the other side of the world, is thought-provoking but ultimately not helpful. What we really need is to look at a hurricane and figure out which butterfly caused it — or perhaps stop it before it takes flight in the first place. DARPA thinks AI should be able to do just that. A new program at the research agency is aimed at creating a machine learning system that can sift through the innumerable events and pieces of media generated every day and identify any threads of connection or narrative in them. It's called KAIROS: Knowledge-directed Artificial Intelligence Reasoning Over Schemas. "Schema" in this case has a very specific meaning. It's the idea of a basic process humans use to understand the world around them by creating little stories of interlinked events. For instance when you buy something at a store, you know that you generally walk into the store, select an item, bring it to the cashier, who scans it, then you pay in some way, and then leave the store.

This "buying something" process is a schema we all recognize, and could of course have schemas within it (selecting a product; payment process) or be part of another schema (gift giving; home cooking).

*Although these are easily imagined inside our heads, they're surprisingly difficult to define formally in such a way that a computer system would be able to understand. They're familiar to us from long use and understanding, but they're not immediately obvious or rule-bound, like how an apple will fall downwards from a tree at a constant acceleration. And the more data there , this is more difficult it is to define. Buying something is comparatively simple, but how do you create a schema for recognizing a cold war, or a bear market? That's what DARPA wants to look into.

“The process of uncovering relevant connections across mountains of information and the static elements that they underlie requires temporal information and event patterns, which can be difficult to capture at scale with currently available tools and systems,” said DARPA program manager Boyan Onyshkevych in a news release.

KAIROS, the agency said, “aims to develop a semi-automated system capable of identifying and drawing correlations between seemingly unrelated events or data, helping to inform or create broad narratives about the world around us.”

How? Well, they have a general idea but they're looking for expertise. Devin Coldewey writes, that the problem, is that “schemas currently have to be laboriously defined and checked by humans. At that point you might as well inspect the information yourself. So the KAIROS program aims to have the AI teach itself. At first the system will be limited to ingesting data in massive quantities to build a library of basic schemas. By reading books, watching news reports, and so on it should be able to create a laundry list of suspected schemas, like those mentioned above. It might even get a hint of larger, more hazy schemas that it can't quite put its virtual finger on — love, racism, income disparity, etc — and how others might fit into them and each other. Next it will be allowed to look at complex real-world data and attempt to extract events and narratives based on the schemas it has created.”

For Devin Coldewey, “The military and defense applications are fairly obvious: imagine a system that took in all news and social media posts and informed its administrators that it seemed likely there would be a run on banks, or a coup, or a new faction emerging from a declining one. Intelligence officers do their best to perform this task now, and human involvement will almost certainly never cease, but they would likely appreciate a computer companion saying,”

“There are multiple reports of stockpiling, and these articles on chemical warfare are being shared widely, this could point to rumors of terrorist attacks” or the like. Of course, at this point it is all purely theoretical, but that's why DARPA is looking into it: the agency's raison d'être is to turn theoretical into the practical, or failing that, at least find out why they can't. Given the extreme simplicity of most AI systems these days it's hard to imagine one as sophisticated as they clearly want to create. Clearly we have a long way to go. [\[63\]](#)

Satanic Sex robots were inspired and prophesied by the founder of the Church of Satan

Anton Szandor LaVey, the founder of the Church of Satan, and the religion of LaVeyan Satanism became the pioneer of artificial human companions that later would become the robotic sex dolls that are now big business for manufacturers, who claim their products are so realistic that people are marrying them. However, it was LaVey who created humanoid dolls first, often as memories of his youth in the basement of his infamous Black House in San Francisco (the house allegedly described by the Eagles in their chartbusting song "Hotel California"). LaVey had a bar called the Den of Iniquity, where he placed several of his artificial human companions. In biblical terms, "iniquity" is, in fact, a violation of God's moral law, which can be described as perversity.

The late LaVey shared his perverse thoughts on shallow perfection, "beautiful people" and his Artificial Human Companions in the documentary "Speak of the Devil: The Canon of Anton LaVey," released in 1993 through Wavelength Video and directed by Nick Bougas. ^[64] And now watch by comparison this truly spooky video made in 2014. It is the pseudo artwork by LaVey's disciple Jordan Wolfson, referred to in the contemporary art world as the "Master of Puppets" where we see a female animatronic robot that dances in front of a large mirror, while at the same time seeking eye contact with the spectator. It's truly weird, as is most of Wolfson's work. ^[65] The emergence of commercially available robots and human companions like those made by the Californian sex doll firm RealDoll, and the opening of the UK's first sex doll brothels last year, as well as similar brothels in Barcelona and Moscow, are LaVey's dream come true. Such establishments, which offer clients the use of silicone models inside private rooms and don't encourage the use of such robots only for sex, but also for companionship. This is a clear example of a LaVeyan concept manifesting outside of the classic Satanic environment.

Today's sex robots are essentially realistic dolls that have sophisticated movements that closely mimic humans so that they can have full sexual intercourse. The robots have hyper-realistic features such as built-in heaters to create the feeling of body warmth. They also have sophisticated sensors to react to your touch. But now Realbotix, a hi-tech division of RealDoll, is also busy developing robots that can speak, smile, and sing, like Harmony AI, produced to offer an "emotional connection" just like Anton LaVey wished for, so long ago. So, after introducing the Face-X system which allowed any face to be interchangeable with different silicone bodies and a removable vagina in 2009, which is dishwasher-safe, creating a successful sex doll, the next logical step of LaVey's modern disciples based in California and headed by Satanist Matt McMullen, was to create a more realistic experience incorporating Artificial Intelligence. RealDoll has been recently working on creating a robotic head, a learning-capable AI app, and even a head adapter with a Bluetooth speaker, touch sensors and internal heaters. Experts say these specialized robots will begin to appear in ordinary homes in the next decade, as lonely humans look for love in the hands of Satan.

The late Anton LaVey prophesied in The Devil's Notebook, published in 1992 : I have great respect for those who pioneer their own artificial human companion, crude as they might initially be. They will have come a small step closer to playing God and creating man and woman according to their desired image. LaVey will be more than satisfied with today's realistic robots that are part of a growing £20 billion industry – that aim to create dolls that look and operate like real women, and at the same time, there is a computer generated technology that is rapidly improving and will compete with RealDoll in the future using Virtual Reality. Today, the technology is also being applied to create incredibly realistic computer generated people who will demonically attract other victims of iniquity.

However, in regards to sex robots there is a strong possibility that they could be hijacked by hackers and used to cause harm or even kill people. Artificial intelligence researchers have consistently warned of the security risks posed by internet-connected robots, with hundreds recently calling on governments to ban weaponized robots, even if nobody seems to care. The latest warning comes from a cybersecurity expert who made the prophecy to several U.K. newspapers:

“Hackers can hack into a robot or a robotic device and have full control of the connections, arms, legs and other attached tools like in some cases knives or welding devices,” Nicholas Patterson, a cybersecurity lecturer at Deakin University in Melbourne, Australia, told The Star.

“Often these robots can be upwards of 200 pounds and very strong. Once a robot is hacked, the hacker has full control and can issue instructions to the robot. The last thing you want is for a hacker to have control over one of these robots. Once hacked they could absolutely be used to perform physical actions for an advantageous scenario or to cause damage.”

This is not science fiction but contemporary reality, unfortunately, and the new Satanic reality we all have to look forward to if we don't change things now.

Chapter Six

Satan Rising, Anno Satanae I MDCCCCLXVI 1966

In Roman Polański's film, "Rosemary's Baby"(1968), one of the fictional protagonists of the evil Satanic elite called Roman Castevet, states in July, 1966: God is dead and Satan lives! The year is One, the first year of our Lord! The year is One, God is done! These words should be feared by every Christian, as convicted pedophile Roman Polański, was, in fact, sending a real Satanic message to the world on behalf of the Satanic Illuminati elite.

The Romans first began relating to Christians at around the year 66 (LXVI), when Caesar Nero, after the "Great Fire of Rome," began savagely persecuting Christians. St Peter, the first Pope of Rome, upon whom the Roman Catholic Church was founded, was crucified in Rome on an inverted crucifix in the year 66. It was to Peter that Jesus said (Mark 8:33): "Vade retro me Satana" ("get behind me Satan"). The book of Revelation, written in Hebrew or Aramaic, has a title only found in the Aramaic version, which reads: "The Revelation that was upon John the prophet from God, on the Island of Patmos, where he had been exiled by Nero Caesar." And "Nero Caesar" written in Hebrew (Aramaic) letters is equal to 666. However, gradually, the Romans began to adopt Christianity. [\[66\]](#)

The Latin Mass of the Roman Catholic Church began being celebrated in Rome at around 190 AD (before that, it was celebrated in Greek), and continued to be the central Roman Rite until the 1960s, when the Second Vatican Council concluded the almost 2000 year-old tradition of the Latin Mass, and the Satanic versions of the Latin Black Mass started to appear out of nowhere, as I pointed out earlier. From the onset of Christianity 2000 years ago, the central Christian religious service, the Mass, that was developed to embody the spiritual teachings and practices of Christianity, required Latin.

FIG. 24 “Rosemary's Baby” French Original Vintage Movie Poster

The Novus Ordo Missae, introduced in April 1969, by Pope Paul VI, the result of the Second Vatican II Council that terminated three and a half years earlier, and was officially intended to have an ecumenical nature, as declared by its chief architect, Fr. Annibale Bugnini in 1965, was aimed at the destruction of the Catholic Faith and the rise of the devil for humanity. Remember, the New World Order does not have the goal of enslaving the population physically, but rather to lead the greatest number of souls to hell, as the intention of Pope Paul VI with regard to what is commonly called the Mass, was to basically reform the Catholic liturgy in such a way that it would almost coincide with the Protestant liturgy. In this way, it would eventually end up in the present melting pot of all the various Christian denominations that are preparing to merge together in preparation for a One World Religion. The forces of liberal Freemasonry that emanate prevalently from Paris, and inspired this infamous change in the Second Vatican Council, are the same Occult forces that made for so long France, and Paris, in particular, a hot spot for the Satanic elite. That's why, unlike the film version, the recent "Rosemary's Baby" miniseries is set in Paris, rather than New York.

The Satanists ultimately destroyed the traditional Catholic Mass in Latin to facilitate the spread of Satanism, a policy that was ordered by the dark side of the Illuminati. That's why they immediately took advantage of this terrible change that castrated the Catholic Church of their most powerful ritual and weapon, against the devil. Missa Satanica and Missa Nigra - the "Satanic Mass" and the "Black Mass" in Latin, that is used today by modern Satanists, that came to light, and were perhaps even written, between the years 1966 to 1986, in a specific time that saw incredible technological evolution that has brought us today's interconnected digital world.

Going back to the protagonist of "Evilspeak" for a moment, it's very significant that he is typing words in Latin into the computer that links him to a demonic force. Demonstrating once again the power of this ancient language, that is used by Satanists in bizarre distortions, rewordings, and parodies of the Catholic Latin Mass. While it is true that the Black Mass has been created to blaspheme the Church and to mock the Catholic Mass ritual, the full aim of the ritual is far more complex, and Latin is a key element.

The Black Mass is, just like the Catholic Mass, a Magic rite. The occultists in the Illuminati agree that as a ceremonial Magic rite, the Catholic Mass and the Black Mass have both the power to direct powerful energies into the world through the "thoughtform" or Egregor generated that is directed in two opposite directions. The Catholic Mass, for example, is a ritual that is affecting much of the practitioner's spiritual state and also the world around him. When a Catholic Mass is celebrated properly, a certain energy is generated and directed into the world depending on the faith of the participants, and the priest operating his clerical functions. We can say that the energy of the Catholic Mass, is, when genuine, a result of White Magic. Throughout time, priests and magicians have used the Mass for all kinds of magical uses. When a person is sick, the Mass is said over the body of the individual to heal him through the power of the rite. Other times, it has been used to ward off diseases of cattle. It has also been used to bless houses, to bless fishing-boats to make them productive, to protect someone going on a journey, to bring rain and good weather and also to obtain children.

[67] Masses have been used as a tool of White Magic since the beginning of Christianity.

The Black Mass, instead, is a perversion of the Catholic Mass, and thus, a dangerous Magickal rite used by the Illuminati elite to maintain a link with their demons. It is, by itself, genuine Black Magick. The magical aim of the Black Mass is first and foremost, the liberation from Christian energy that is perceived as hostile and dangerous by the Satanist. For these practitioners of pure evil enslaved by the demonic side, the unconditional love bestowed upon us by Jesus Christ, and directed by His true followers, every day, with the power of the many Masses and Christian rituals that take place all over the world, needs to be stopped. Because, when a Christian Mass is celebrated, certain energy is generated that damage these evil doers. What the Black Mass does is to distort these energies and redirect them. The Black Mass also generates its own forms of energy that are continuously directed into the world so the Satanic elite can continue to prosper.

The psychological aim of the Black Mass is also to liberate the individual from Christian dogma. It is a ritual that helps to liberate unconscious feelings and emotions. By its power, it throws the practitioner into a world of chaos, Magick and lust. In a world of perceived freedom that in reality will enslave them in the pits of hell. When we are lucky enough, we live in a world of Christian thought and white light that is spiritually healing, but when we are possessed by the alien extradimensional forces of Satan and his Legion, we live in a world of darkness and blasphemy. Incredibly enough, many Satanists have I met in the past wanted to rid themselves of what they perceive as Christian programming, and mind manipulation, but in reality they are the brainwashed ones that need deprogramming and prayers for their souls.

Satanists, however, feel an urge to free their souls of any Christian influence. For this reason, rituals, like the Black Mass, are considered ideal by the Satanic Illuminati to imprint this great evil upon their candidates. Because they strive to get rid of any Christian influence as much as possible in their victims, they create special rituals to achieve this goal. Whether it's the Black Mass, the Initiation Rite, or any other such blasphemous ritual, they work to rid themselves of the energy of the Christian spirit.

During the 19th century, the London based Satanists of the elite established the Hellfire Club, that was said to regularly have sexual orgies, perform Black Masses, and worship the Devil. The Hellfire Club was actually the name of several exclusive clubs established in Great Britain and Ireland in the 18th century for high ranking society and the deviant members of Neotemplarism, Freemasonry, and other influential Secret Societies, who wished to indulge in immoral acts such as sex, religious, and political mockery, and basically whatever their perverted minds could come up with. The clubs appeared in waves, first in London in the 1720s, then in Dublin and Limerick in the 1740s, and Dashwood club in the 1750s, that created the infamous Hellfire Caves. A number of Hellfire Clubs are still in existence in Ireland and are centered around universities that still meet secretly, for example, there is a Hellfire club in Trinity College that meets in central Dublin.

This was a group that I personally heard about when I briefly studied there in the 1980s. Much like the characters in de Sade's 120 Days of Sodom, if you dare to watch the film by the late Pier Paolo Pasolini "Salò o le 120 giornate di Sodoma" (1975). The members of these kinds of clubs were, and still are today, somewhat privileged and powerful people looking for new ways of entertainment in their seemingly senseless lives, and like Marquise de Sade, (1740-1814) and all the Satanic ruling elite, they all profoundly despise religion, even if they say otherwise in public. This is still the main characteristic of those who rule this planet today, that continue to enjoy the involvement in organizations similar to The Hellfire Clubs all around the world and in all cultures. The film cited above was Pasolini's last film, by the way, just before being murdered under mysterious circumstances. His last work is still considered a classic amongst Satanists, but also the possible reason for his brutal assassination.

Contemporary Satanist, Dr. Stephen Flowers, writes about the Hellfire Clubs, in detail, in his book Lords of the Left-Hand Path. Flowers cites also from Blackett-Ord's book Hell-fire Duke: The life of the Duke of Wharton, saying the members "named the Devil himself as their president and three of the leading members went by the names Father, Son, and Holy Ghost." [\[68\]](#)

A rather interesting fact is the inscription that Sir Francis Dashwood, the leader of the most notorious Hellfire Club in the world, who belonged to the so-called Friars of St. Francis of Wycomb, had placed over the entrance: Fay ce que voudras, “Do what you will”. This motto was lifted directly from a reference to the “Abbey of Thelema” in the sixteenth-century humorous work The Life of Gargantua and Pantagruel by Francois Rabelais, considered always inspirational by the Satanic elite. This motto was taken up in the twentieth century by magician and Satanist Aleister Crowley as “Do what thou wilt”.^[69]

According to Horace Walpole 4th Earl of Orford, the member’s practice was rigorously pagan: Bacchus and Venus were the deities to whom they almost publicly sacrificed; and the nymphs and the hogsheads that were laid in against the festivals of this new church, sufficiently informed the neighborhood of the complexion of those hermits.^[70]

However, the club consisted of an inner circle of very powerful people, that by the 1760s had major roles in the British Government, called “The Superior Order,” made of 12 members, that took part in forms of pure Satanic Worship that took place in the caves situated above the village of West Wycombe, known as the Hellfire Caves. In addition to the occult rituals, orgies, parties with prostitutes were also said to be the norm in such depraved circles of gentlemen from the British upper class. In terms of the structure, the Hellfire Club, is composed of the Superior Order of 12, and the Inferior Order of 12, that preside on the seemingly more innocent romantic pagan rituals practiced by the external circle. The Hellfire Clubs were rumored in those days to have distant ties to an elite society known only as The Order of the Second Circle.^[71] An audacious name that clearly seems to derive from the Second Circle of Hell, as described by Dante in The Inferno.

Benjamin Franklin, who was also a prominent Freemason, is known to have attended the club's meetings during his visits to London in 1758, and thereafter. On February 11, 1998 the Sunday Times reported that ten bodies were dug up from beneath Benjamin Franklin's home at 36 Craven Street in London.

The article goes on to suggest that the bodies may have been the result of the experiments of Dr. William Hewson, who worked alongside the founders of British surgery and who was a friend of Benjamin Franklin. Later reports from the Benjamin Franklin House reveal that, not only were human remains found, but also animal remains. This is where things get very interesting. From the published photographs, some of the bones appear to be blackened, or charred as if by fire. Needless to say, a number of researchers into the mystery are doubtful about the "medical" explanation and have suggested that Franklin's involvement with the Hellfire Club may be the real answer.^[72]

It is well documented, in fact, that Satanists perform ritual killings of both humans and animals alike. Interestingly enough, a few years later, in December 1776, Franklin, a loyal servant of the devil, was dispatched to France as commissioner for the United States, and lived in the Parisian suburb of Passy. Rich in symbolism, gothic architecture, and death: Paris is arguably one of the most gothic cities in the world, and the headquarters of Satanism.

FIG. 26 – La Messe Noire Artist: Léopold Cenni, Paris, 1908

How Paris became the headquarters of the global Satanic takeover

“There were accounts of the 1896 tumult when he [Adrian Marcato] claimed to have called forth Satan and was attacked by a mob outside the Bramford [...], and of similar happenings in Stockholm in 1898 and Paris in 1899.” (“Rosemary's Baby”). It's no coincidence that at the end of the 19th century, the first books that began to explore the subject of the Black Mass were in French, most notably Jules Michelet's La Sorcière in 1862, Jules Baissac's Grands Jours de la Sorcellerie in 1890, Joris-Karl Huysmans' classic novel La-Bas in 1891, Le Satanisme et la Magie by Jules Bois in 1895, with a preface by J.K. Huysmans and Die Synagoge des Satan by Stanislaw Przybyszewski in 1897.

Jules Bois claimed there were two kinds of Satanists at work in France. The first kind was the solitary devil worshiper, who made deals with the devil for personal gain; the second was more organized, gnostic in spirit, and Luciferian in nature, seeing the devil as the liberator of humankind against the mendacious oppressor Yahweh. The second type was allegedly the kind that informed the inner secrets of occult societies, some of whom participated in the occult war that Bois found himself in within the Illuminati at that time. Bois had firsthand knowledge of these goings on, given that he was involved in occult practices at a rather high level. He was a close friend with Aleister Crowley's Occult mentor MacGregor Mathers (1854-1918), the founder of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn, and was in some way tied to Abbé Joseph-Antoine Boullan (1824-1893), a former priest who was accused of being a Satanist. Boullan was the magician Bois aligned himself with during the occult war, that would conclude with Bois challenging Boullan's archenemy Stanislas de Guaita to a “pistols at dawn.” Described as a “Rosicrucian of the left-hand path,” Guaita was a wealthy Italian noble who lived in Paris and was one of Eliphas Levi's disciples. Guaita was a central figure in the Parisian occult scene, known both for his knowledge, as well as his extensive collection of occult books. He was so central that not only did fellow occultists seek him out for his knowledge, but a society of practitioners rose around him.

He was also responsible for his own written contributions to the occult that included titles such as The Serpent of Genesis, The Temple of Satan and The Key of Black Magic – the latter of which includes an original rendering by Guaita later used by Anton LaVey as the “Sigil of Baphomet,” which is an illustration full of significance and symbolism for practitioners of the left-hand path.^[73] Arthur Edward Waite (1857-1942), writes in the controversial Devil Worship in France, published in 1896:

*The revival of mystical philosophy, and, moreover, of transcendental experiment, which is prosecuted in secret to a far greater extent than the public can possibly be aware, has, however, set many old oracles chattering, and they are more voluble at the present moment than the great Dodonian grove. As might be expected, they whisper occasionally of deeds done in the darkness which look weird when exposed to the day. The terms Satanism, Luciferianism, Diabolism, and their equivalents, have been buzzed frequently, though with some indistinctness, of late, and in accents that indicate the existence of a living terror—people do not quite know of what kind—rather than an exploded superstition. To be plain, the Question of Lucifer has reappeared... It has reappeared not as a speculative inquiry into the possibility of a personal embodiment of evil operating mysteriously, but after a wholly spiritual manner, for the propagation of the second death; we are asked to acknowledge that there is a visible and tangible manifestation of the descending hierarchy taking place at the close of a century which has denied that there is any prince of darkness...this improbable development of Satanism is just what is being earnestly asserted, and the affirmations made are being taken in some quarters au grand sérieux. They are not a growth of to-day or precisely of yesterday; they have been more or less heard for some years, but their prominence at the moment is due to increasing insistence, pretension to scrupulous exactitude, abundant detail, and demonstrative evidence... Books have multiplied, periodicals have been founded, the Church is taking action, even a legal process has been instituted. The centre of this literature is in Paris, but the report of it has crossed the Channel, and has passed into the English press. As it is affirmed, therefore, that a cultus of Lucifer exists, and that the men and women who are engaged in it are neither ignorant nor especially mad, nor yet belonging to the lowest strata of society. The Black Masses I cited earlier performed by the Abbé Guibourg and other Catholic priests in Paris and elsewhere during the 1670s, are the first of their kind and represent the apogee of crime and blasphemy in Satanism, and the ultimate in heartless and cynical perversity. This was not original, and shows several similarities to the so-called Medici Mass, which we know to have been celebrated by a rogue ecclesiastic, paid by Catherine de Medici (1519- 1589), Queen of France, during the sixteenth century. Catherine de Medici, was said by Jean Bodin (1530-1596) to have performed a Black Mass, based on a story in his 1580 book on witchcraft De la démonomanie des sorciers. This was by far the most tremendous sorcery ever attributed to Catherine, and her assistant, the Italian astrologer Cosimo Ruggieri (d.1615), and some historians tend to dismiss it as fake news. Catherine, who was related to various Popes, was also involved with poisonings at the highest levels of the French aristocracy, connected with the spread of professional poisoning, a diabolical art that originated in the Vatican with passionate poisoners like Lucrezia Borgia (1480-1519).

It is this Italian version of the Black Mass that took place near the end of the 16th century in France, which provided influence for the French version, soon to follow. Even if some modern Satanists still consider it to be Catholic because in the Medici Mass, you don't have the use of a naked woman as an altar, there still was a child sacrifice involved.

A series of reasons allegedly pushed Catherine de Medici to set in motion this terrible ritual, that will end up with the consultation of the Oracle by Ruggieri on the bleeding head of the victim. The son of Catherine de Medici was dying of a strangely wasting illness, and the ongoing power struggles with her enemies triggered by the "wars of religion" between Ultra-Catholics and Protestants were becoming more and more dangerous, so she commissioned a Black mass which culminated in the age-old, but still terrifying ritual of the human sacrifice of an innocent child.

Many details of the rite have escaped preservation, but the mass was certainly the first example of an early form of Black Mass, created for magical purposes as the perversion of the traditional Catholic Mass. Catherine de Medici was known to have worn on her person, a talisman bearing a variety of names of demons, including the name ASMODEI, which is etymologically related to the ASMODEUS invoked also by the Abbé Guibourg, whose activities I have explained in detail earlier, were central in the Satanic role of Paris in the centuries that followed 1666. Both Helena Blavatsky, in Isis Unveiled, and Eliphas Levi, in Transcendental Magic, quote Bodin's La Démonomanie, ou traite des Sorciers to describe the foul act of preparing this terrible ritual for Catherine de Medici.

A male child, without imperfection, was chosen, and given his first communion before being brutally killed. The Black Mass was prepared in front of the inverted cross in the rooms of Charles IX, Catherine's sickly son. At the altar, after taking the white wafer, the head was struck from the body in a single blow, and placed: “all palpitating, upon the great black wafer which covered the bottom of the patent, then placed on a table where some mysterious lamps were burning...the demon was charged to pronounce an oracle, and reply by the mouth of this head...”

FIG. 27 – Illustration of Cosimo Ruggeri and Catherine de' Medici (artist unknown, 20th century)

We do not know the question allegedly asked to this oracle, but the answer is given in “a feeble voice, a strange voice, which had nothing of human character about it...” was: “Vim patior” which in Latin means “I suffer violence.” It is thought that this would be the king's fate in hell for his part in the St Bartholomew's Day Massacre. On hearing this, he ran from the room, and died shortly afterward, but the beginning of something truly demonic occurred in France. [\[74\]](#)

Ultimately, in 1877, there was the great schism in Freemasonry, when Satanists in Paris in complete control of the Grand Orient of France, finally admitted they had no belief in God or in a Supreme Being in Freemasonry. This was year Zero of the Satanic/Atheist take over of French Freemasonry that became a left-wing stronghold politically speaking, and completely Satanic, religiously speaking. It was a turning point that gave the green light to many Illuminati Satanists, that could now recruit without any problems from the lodges of French Freemasonry, giving birth to a series of Secret Societies and Gnostic Churches to cover-up their Satanic activities.

Not all Freemasonry is the same, and the United Grand Lodge of England (UGLE), and related Lodges, that regard belief in the Supreme Being as a Masonic Landmark took away their recognition from the Grand Orient in 1877. Soon afterward, the persecution of Catholics began in France. The Grand Orient was, in fact, implicated in The Affaire Des Fiches, where it was accused of collecting and holding information on the religious and political affiliation of army officers, passed on by a member of the government, having been collected with the intention of blocking practicing Catholics and non-Republicans from further advancement. But this was only the beginning of the same deviant Satanic Masonic force that would later infiltrate the Second Vatican Council.

The Grand Orient of Italy hosted a conference five years ago, on June 12, 2014, in Palazzo delle Esposizioni in Via Milano in Rome, to promote the book entitled Il Concilio Segreto (The Secret Council), written by Ignazio Ingrao, that openly confirms the Masonic infiltration of the Second Vatican Council. Someone wrote on a traditional Catholic blog commenting on the event: “Who needs conspiracy theories when the Freemasons openly celebrate Vatican II in the Eternal City?” [\[75\]](#)

A small translated extract from the book in question will give you an idea: “There is a Council that has never been told, the one that took place far from the limelight, in the secret conferences among bishops and cardinals, in diplomats’ meetings, in reunions among the editorial staff of newspapers, in sections of [political] parties and even among “007’s”[...] There are hosts of Russian, Polish, English, American and of course - Italian spies, who camouflage themselves amidst prelates and listeners, compiling dossiers and even able to influence the conclave that elects Paul VI. Letters from priests who ask Montini to abolish sacerdotal celibacy materialize . There is a theologian who denounces, with courage, the scandal of pedophilia in the Church, but his cry of alarm, remains, alas, unheard.”

On the panel of guests invited to present the book were Marco Politi, famous Italian journalist and Vaticanist; Alberto Melloni, a very influential historian and a leader of the famous “Bologna School” founded by Giuseppe Alberigo, whose purpose was to establish and propagate the “Spirit of the Council” as the official interpretation of the conciliar documents; Marinella Perroni, a known theologian, and professor at the Pontifical Atheneum of St. Anselm in Rome (the Anselmianum, the Pontifical Benedictine University in Rome), specializing in New Testament Studies; and, last but certainly not least, Stefano Bisi, the Grand Master of the Grand Orient of Italy elected with the help of the Italian branch of the Ordo Templi Orientis.

The author, Ignazio Ingrao, a highly relevant Vaticanist, was also present. The meeting was recorded and can be found in the archives of Radio Radicale in its entirety.^[76] To give a general idea of the festive and relaxed ambience, Grand Master Bisi was proud to say that a priest he consulted told him he certainly “could receive communion.” Incredibly enough, there was no contradiction from anyone in the room, even if many know of Bisi’s connection with Jean Matthieu Kleeman, current Italian Grand Master of the Ordo Templi Orientis, whose followers are busy stealing consecrated Eucharistic hosts. I have heard of Catholic parishes where this is such a problem that the pastor is forced to post special attendants during Holy Communion who watch to make sure that no one receives the Eucharist and walks away without consuming the host. The Satanists take these consecrated hosts to their services—these wafers of “bread” that Catholics believe have been miraculously transformed by the Holy Spirit into the Body and Blood of our Lord Jesus Christ—and desecrate them with spit, bodily waste, and other such unimaginable blasphemies.

FIG 28 – Flyer of the Grand Orient of Italy produced to promote the event: “The Church of Dialogue, from the Second Vatican Council to Pope Francis”

Child Sacrifice is now practiced out in the open by Satanists

Returning to the importance of France, and of Paris as the Satanic capital of the World, remember that until the 1960s, scholarly studies on the Black Mass relied almost completely on French and Latin sources (which also came from France). The famous French “fringe mason,” Jean Bricaud (1881-1934) one of the leading figures of the Ancient and Primitive Rite of Memphis-Misraïm, wrote in La Messe Noire, published in Paris in 1924, the words of Guibourg's abominable “blessing” of the destined victim, “Notre Seigneur Jésus-Christ laissait venir à lui les petits enfants. Aussi j'ai voulu que tu viennes, car je suis son prêtre, et tu vas, par ma main que tu dois bénir, t'incorporer à ton Dieu.” (“Our Lord Jesus Christ suffered the little children to come to Him. Even so, I have willed that thou comest, for I am His priest, and thou goest, by my hand which thou should’st bless, to incorporate thyself with thy God.”) These words really can give you an idea of the sick perverted mentality behind the Black Masses conducted, still today, by the French elite, always obsessed with child sacrifice or Satanic parenting. This is the same group of people that have supported the rise of Emmanuel Macron, groomed to become the French president one day. That’s why the 2014 four hour NBC mini-series adaptation of the classic novel by Ira Levin, that focused on young Rosemary Woodhouse's suspicions that her neighbors may belong to a Satanic cult that desperately desired the baby she was carrying, was not made in New York this time, but rather in Paris; the home of Satanism over the last five centuries.

Confirming this, in 1928, a short film made in Paris appeared, entitled Messe Noir or Black Mass; considered by some as a vintage erotic film, or antique porn if you like, but that's not correct., so please don't dismiss it as an odd curiosity. Check out this short Occult film now widely available on the Internet, because it's based on a genuine Satanic ritual by the dark Illuminati in 1920s Paris, an age of decadence, where the young and wealthy, tired of quaffing Champagne, taking opium, and dancing wildly to the Charleston, looked once again to Satanism to get their kicks, showing the world for the first time their Satanic perversions.

29 – Four frames from Messe Noir, aka, “Black Mass” (1928)

FIG. 30 – Frame shows the words “Reception and Initiation to the Satanic Cult of a Neophyte.”

It is only about 6 minutes, but it depicts a female neophyte being led by nude, masked occultists to a Satanic altar for initiation into the cult by none other than Lucifer and Astarte, serving as Satanic priest and priestess. The congregation appears to be exclusively female besides the Satanic priest. There is even a vampiric blood offering, ceremonial bondage, flagellation, and sex acts between the congregants in a Satanic Illuminati orgy in homage to Satan, that for once avoids sacrificing an infant. However, these days the ancient practice of child sacrifice has resumed in earnest with abortion on demand.

Zachary King, a former high wizard in a Satanic church who converted to Christianity, has detailed how abortion is used as a “Satanic sacrifice,” stating that he “Performed Satanic Rituals Inside Abortion Clinics.” That’s why the left-wing politicians are pushing more and more for late-term abortions. Think about it, by “granting” the mother the “right” to a third-trimester abortion, she can have unlimited control over her “own” body, the state is in effect sanctioning a Satanic human sacrifice. The body of the sacrificed child is then usually disposed of by the “doctor,” who plays, consciously or not, the role of the Satanic high priest. In legal terms, the state is oblivious that a human being has been sacrificed.

No birth certificate or death certificate is ever issued, as if the child never existed. Last year, The Satanic Temple even issued a lawsuit against the state of Missouri (later dismissed), claiming its tough abortion law violates the group's religious beliefs. Missouri mandates, in fact, a 72-hour waiting period for a women seeking abortion, and requires they be given booklets saying that human life begins at conception, but the Satanists refuse that. The Satanic Temple, and an anonymous member who had an abortion, sued the state in 2015 over the current laws, she said she believes that “a woman's body is inviolable and subject to her will alone” and that she makes health decisions based on “the best scientific understanding of the world, even if the science does not comport with the religious or political beliefs of others.” The self-centered argument of “my body, my rights” in support of abortion comes to us directly from the original lie that deceived the human race and subjected us to sin and death – “ye shall be as gods.” The Satanic Illuminati follow the teachings of people like Aleister Crowley who said: “There is no god but man.”

These are the words written at the top of Liber OZ, a short work describing “the rights of man” in the New Aeon. However, there was once a pharaoh of Egypt, who, determined to preserve his power and status against any potential threat, commanded the murder of every male Jewish baby. These babies might have posed a threat to his independence and power so they had to be sacrificed. Years later, King Herod did the same to the innocents in Bethlehem in an effort to kill God himself. When the people of God entered into the land of Canaan, they found a land defiled everywhere with the blood of innocents sacrificed to ward off drought and famine for the benefit of their parents. The Ammonite god Moloch – “the king” – worshipped by both the Canaanites and the Phoenicians was propitiated by the offering of a live baby onto the outstretched arms of a red-hot idol. Drums were used to drown out the infant’s screams. The Moabite god Chemosh offered military victory in exchange for child sacrifice; this promise seduced even Solomon. The Canaanite god Baal offered both human and agricultural fertility in exchange for human sacrifice. Carthage preserved this institutionalized child sacrifice until it was destroyed by the Romans.

The Qur’an notes that the pre-Islamic Arabians offered child sacrifice to idols, and archaeology shows us child sacrifice was also commonplace in the pre-European civilizations of the Americas. The Ancient Greeks and Romans, too cultured and well-educated to engage in child sacrifice, instead offered up unwanted babies on the altar of convenience. Illegitimate, deformed, or otherwise unwanted babies were left on the roadside to die. These babies were frequently rescued and raised by Rome’s persecuted Christians. With the rise of Christianity and Islam, child sacrifice and infanticide began to wane. Early Christian writings like the Didache and the Epistle of Barnabas, as well as many of the early Fathers, explicitly condemned infanticide. Christian emperors like Constantine and Valentinian passed laws against infanticide. The Qur’an also frequently condemns infanticide, but Muslim views on abortion are a bit more ambiguous. But the enemy’s false promise of “being as god” persisted. The rise of nominalism and the Enlightenment obsession with “the Rights of Man” worked together to put man on God’s throne and create a moral system based on “Reason” alone. [\[77\]](#)

While the medieval, and even the best Ancient Greek philosophers understood Reason as a participation in the Divine Order of the Universe, the Illuminati Enlightened thinkers soon reduced Reason to mere reasoning. The mission of the Order of the Illuminati founded in 1776 by Adam Weishaupt, was, in fact, to replace Christianity with a religion of Reason. But, unfortunately, because the heart of man is deceitful and desperately wicked, this reasoning eventually lead man astray. That’s why Adam Weishaupt’s Illuminati became the originators of an anti-Christian-Satanist-Atheist-Socialist Conspiracy, that will eventually generate the monstrosity called Communism.

The Black Mass
By Rev. Montague Summers

FIG. 32 – Rev. Augustus Montague Summers (1880 –1948, English author and clergyman

The great central act of Christian worship is the Mass, a Sacrifice which can be offered to God alone, and the climax of the sabbat orgies is the horror of The Black Mass, a sacrifice of mockery, impiety, and blasphemy which is offered to the devil. Satanists today often meet with the celebration of the Black Mass as their main object, and it is indeed the culmination and the very quiddity of devil-worship and the cult of hell. In detail, the Black Mass imitates, so to speak, with foul parodies and every circumstance of obscenity and contempt to the Sacrifice of Calvary. The Black Mass today is sometimes celebrated in a cellar, but Satanists have become so audacious and so strong in evil that the largest room in their houses is known to be permanently fitted up for these abominable mysteries. In one case, the room is draped with black hangings and the windows are always shuttered with curtains drawn.

The fact that the door is furnished with a Yale lock and key arouses no suspicion. Sometimes even a disused chapel is bought by a wealthy Satanist and furnished for the ceremonial of the liturgy of the pit.

The Abbé Guignard, a member of the La Voisin coven, chanted Satanic Masses in a cellar over the body of Marianne Charmillon ; the Duc de Richelieu (1696-1788), who was, it is said, tutored in black magic by a disciple of the Abbé Guibourg, caused two friars, who were his chaplains, to celebrate Black Masses in the old deserted chapel of one of his country houses, a remote decaying château. He himself assisted with other devotees. De Sade, in Justine, describes the celebration of a Black Mass in a cloister. Pierre David, Mathurin Picard, and Thomas Boullé, who were attached to St. Louis and St. Elizabeth, at Louviers, celebrated Black Masses at the sabbats which were held in some house not far from the convent, a rendezvous aptly termed a “Den of devils.”

I know of a Black Mass celebrated at night in a room at the back of a small squalid shop in the slummiest part of Brighton, not far from Brighton Station. At Merthyr Tydfil the Black Mass was said or sung in the basement back room of a little house in a poor street, where lived an old man who was reputed to be a “fortune-teller,” and who boasted that he belonged “to the oldest religion in the world.” This back room was furnished as a chapel, and the altar, above which was suspended a pair of queer-looking horns, whilst odd objects were arranged on the gradine, blazed with candles. Sometimes the altar is swathed in black velvet, and there are six black candles, three on either side of a crucifix. The crucifix is hideously distorted and caricatured, as J.-K. Huysmans saw in the old Ursuline convent near the rue de Vaugirard. Mons. Serge Basset, who was taken to a Black Mass, and observed that in the center of the altar, where a crucifix should be placed, was squatting the monstrous figure of a half-human buck-goat, with staring eyes which flickered with red fire, whilst from the tips of its huge horns jetted a dull crimson flame. The altar table itself is generally covered with the three regulation fine linen cloths, overlying the cere-cloth of waxed linen. Sometimes a frontal of brocade or silk is used, and this has been known to be worked with designs of the most obscene esotericism, with many-rayed stars which showed men and women’s faces, triangles twined with hissing adders, and the whole heraldry of hell.

In May, 1895, at the Palazzo Borghese, which vast palace had been rented in various suites of apartments, a Satanic chapel was discovered, Templum Palladicum. The walls of the room were draped with scarlet and black curtains excluding all light; at the farther end was stretched a huge tapestry depicting “Lucifer Triumphant,” the Devil Triumphant, Conqueror of the World, and underneath an altar was erected, in the midst of which between the candles stood a figure of Satan to be adored by his worshippers.

The room was furnished with luxuriously, with chairs of crimson and gold, with tabourets and faldstools. It was lit by electricity, so arranged as to glare from an enormous human eye fixed in the middle of the ceiling. The vestments worn by the hierophant of the Eucharist of hell are often of the richest quality and embroidered with the most delicate workmanship, for the Satanists have immense wealth at their command. At the black mass witnessed by Mons. Serge Basset the celebrant was vested in an alb trimmed with the richest lace and cope of flaming scarlet covered with gilt pomegranates and cones. He wore scarlet silk shoes. The Abbé Guibourg was robed in an ample chasuble thickly sewn with occult characters wrought in silver.

At a Black Mass of fairly recent date the priest wore a chasuble of the ordinary shape, but a deep red in color and on the back was embroidered a huge triangle of some shimmering silk in the midst of which a black goat standing upright butted with his silver horns. There have been described to me, by those who actually saw them, a chasuble of heavy orange satin with a he-goat worked in black; another chasuble was of a peculiar shade of brown, embroidered with a pig and a naked woman in delicate flesh-tint; a third was of a hard glaring scarlet adorned with an enamelled plaque of arsenical green on which were a bear and a weasel devouring the host.

There was also a cope of exquisite grey silk on which was woven a female figure with buskined legs, wearing a short sky-blue tunic and the red Phrygian cap. The figure, which in one hand raised aloft a severed head streaming in blood, was surrounded by a garland of oak leaves, and beneath appeared the date "21 Janvier, 1793," the murder of King Louis XVI. The figure represented the Goddess of Reason, who attired in this garb was placed upon the high altar of Notre Dame in the person of a common strumpet, adored by the Revolution and Parisian Satanists.

For the order of his service, the celebrant of the Black Mass uses a "missal," which is sometimes a printed book, although more often a manuscript. Some of these "missals" are written in red characters upon vellum. Madeleine Bavent speaks of priests celebrating the black mass, and “reading from the Paper of Blasphemy”. These “missals” are by no means the same as, but must be entirely distinguished from, grimoires and books of spells. The thefts of consecrated Hosts from churches is a fearful profanity which has persisted throughout the ages and was never been more common than today. The Host is stolen to be desecrated and abused by the Satanists at their assemblies, or it may be in private, secret, and alone. Presenting themselves at the altar for Communion, these wretches retain the Host in their mouths and then unseen, convey it to a handkerchief or handbag. There is regular traffic in this kind of thing, and considerable sums of money are paid by those who will actually purchase Hosts secured in this way. It is not unknown for the Tabernacle of a church to be rifled during the night. A thief can ask his own price for the Reserved Sacrament, and can always find a ready market in certain occult circles.

Until modern times, the burning of incense at the Black Mass is rarely noted, although there were mystic suffumigations in the conjuring of evil spirits. Silvain Nevillon, a member of the Orleans coven (1615), described in detail a Black Mass at which he had assisted, when the place - was thick and foggy with a smoke that smelled abominably, not fragrant and sweet as is the incense burned in churches. The witches brought Hosts which they had kept when feigning to make their Communion at various altars, and the Devil chanted Asperges Diaboli. He seemed to read the liturgy from a book which was bound in shaggy skin like the pelt of a wolf. On occasion the Devil preached a sort of sermon, but he spoke in a low gruff voice and it was hard to hear what he was saying.

Today, Satanists burn in thuribles and in braziers church incense during their hellish liturgy. They also make a kind of incense from various herbs and spices, the smoke from which is sometimes fetid and stale, sometimes languorous and swooning-sweet. “Every action of the mass which I saw celebrated at the sabbat,” confessed Madeleine Bavent, “was indescribably loathsome.” And so the travesty, the Eucharist of hell, proceeds from blasphemy to blasphemy, from obscenity to obscenity, until the canon is reached, or rather the point corresponding to the Canon of the Mass. Then “the Host is really and truly consecrated and offered to the demon.” At this moment, the celebrant turns his back to the altar. In some modern assemblies, immediately after the elevation of the chalice there are distributed to the congregation smaller chalices or goblets of wine mingled with some potent aphrodisiac, and before long the scene is a saturnalia of indiscriminate and demented debauchery.^[78]

The Black Mass Within Vatican Walls

Author's Note: A couple of weeks before going into print with vol. 6.66, I found this revealing article by the Contributing Editor of the Weekly Press - Philadelphia Free Press, Thom Nickels, published on the 1st of February 2019, that touches on many of the information and elements I have presented in this book. This synchronicity has pushed me to include it in its entirety in this chapter, hoping that Thom Nickels, who is a known conservative commentator and Philadelphia-based author of nine literary works, and also the recipient of the 2005 Philadelphia AIA Lewis Mumford Architecture Journalism Award, will appreciate my gesture.

Article by Thom Nickels

A recent U.S. Catholic bishops meeting in Baltimore made a claim that there were far too few active Catholic priests familiar with the rite of exorcism. The old rite, as it turns out, has fallen into disuse, and it's no wonder. The modern age has redefined evil along abstract lines. There may be evil thoughts and evil deeds like murdering newborns or slitting the throat of one's grandmother, but to say that there are distinct evil entities who have influence over our lives has become the punch line of late night TV jokes. It's considered unsophisticated to talk about "Satan" or "Lucifer" as if they were "real" presences with authentic power. This is so despite the willingness of people to mention God as a force for "good." References to God garner no awkward glances. Images (or the idea) of devils have always evoked special attention. Unlike werewolves or mythical Frankenstein monsters, the legacy of devils is not relegated to the realm of the mythical. That's why, when the U.S. bishops called for more priest exorcists, I thought of the film "Rosemary's Baby." The Polanski film of 1968 had as its theme secret rituals and ceremonies as well as a secret society of Satanists masquerading as contemporary humanists who would no more admit to a belief in Satan than they would Martians inhabiting the bodies of humans. Satan, it's been said by saints and theologians, does not want people to believe in him, and therein lies his greatest power.

While the Catholic Church claims it needs more exorcists, according to Papal insider (and now deceased) Jesuit theologian, Malachi Martin, the Catholic Church may need an exorcist. Martin, who died in 1996, says that at the height of the Second Vatican Council in Rome, there was a ceremony to enthrone Lucifer in the Vatican (and the Chair of Peter). The church in question, Saint Paul's chapel within the Vatican walls, hosted a very different rite of Mass on January 29, 1963, just one week after the election of Pope Paul VI. (Years later, according to Fr. Martin, Pope Paul VI would write a note to his successor, John Paul II, and tell him of this ceremony.) Paul VI is also famous for his statement, “The smoke of Satan has entered the sanctuary.”

For decades, this statement has been the source of much confusion and controversy, but when paired with Fr. Martin’s testimony, it fits like the lost part of a puzzle. The ceremony, Fr. Martin is on record as saying, was a Black Mass, or the Traditional Latin Mass said in reverse, complete with an animal sacrifice and a drugged young girl who may or may not have been the victim of ceremonial sexual rituals. The ceremony was not the Novus Ordo Mass because, in Fr. Martin’s words, “even the Satanists know that this Mass is not valid.” Martin writes that the Black Mass was attended by high ranking prelates in the Church, important layman, business leaders and politicians. At least one Cardinal was in attendance. A concurrent “Enthronement of Satan” Black Mass was also held in South Carolina on that date. In his novel, Windswept House, which Fr. Martin always maintained was 90 percent fact and 10 percent fiction, the opening chapter describes this Mass. “...In an atmosphere of darkness and fire, the Chief Celebrant in each Chapel intoned a series of Invocations to the Prince. The Participants in both Chapels chanted a response. Then, and only in America’s Targeting Chapel, each Response was followed by a Convenient Action—a ritually determined acting-out of the spirit and the meaning of the words.” The Presiding Bishop then considered the Victim. “Even in her near unconscious state, still she struggled. Still she protested. Finally, the Bishop began the Great Invocation: I believe that the Prince of the World will be enthroned this night in the Ancient Citadel, and from there He will create a New Community: the Universal Church of Man.”

Fr. Martin’s best selling book, Hostage to the Devil, described the priest’s years as an exorcist. Some Vatican insiders insisted that Fr. Martin had an axe to grind, while others attempted to destroy his credibility with stories of immoral behavior and illicit affairs with the wives of friends. Towards the end of his life, despite a liberal sojourn when he worked for Cardinal Bea during the time of the Council, Fr. Martin maintained that the Catholic Church was in apostasy. He pointed to “liberal, heretical” theologians like Charles Curran and Hans Kung, as being given slaps on the wrist for ascribing to heretical doctrines but still allowed to practice as Catholic priests, while those whose only goal was to preserve tradition, such as Archbishop Lefebvre, were excommunicated by then Pope John Paul II (that excommunication was summarily lifted by Pope Benedict XVI).

Martin (who stated that only a future pope could exorcize the Church) is not the only authority to confirm that there's a secret cabal of Satanists and Freemasons high up in the Catholic Church.

Father Gabriele Amorth, the one time Chief Exorcist in Rome, wrote in his book, Memoirs of an Exorcist: My Life fighting against Satan, that there are active Satanic sects within the Vatican "where participants reach all the way to the College of Cardinals." This infiltration of Satanists and Masons forms what Martin calls the Vatican "super force," or an organization of powerful prelates who work to destroy the Catholic Church from within.

In "Rosemary's Baby" Mia Farrow's character has to deal with doctors and psychiatrists whose mission is to trick her into believing she's having a normal baby. As the mother of Lucifer's son, she must never know the facts about the true nature of her baby until after its birth. Like Mia Farrow, the Catholic Church has been tinkered with by forces that have snuck inside the gates. The Church has been fed Rosemary's chocolate mousse laced with Tannis Root. The slow and insidious impregnation began as early as the 1930s and 40s, when former United States Communist Party member, Bella Dodd, testified before the House on Un-American Activities in 1952 that the Communist Party in the 1930s "put eleven hundred men into the priesthood in order to destroy the Church from within."

Dodd told the Committee, "Right now they are in the highest places, and they are working to bring about change in order that the Catholic Church will no longer be effective against Communism."

The change, Dodd asserted, "Would be so drastic that you will not recognize the Catholic Church."

Confirming Dodd's testimony, another former American Communist Party official, Manning Johnson, told the HUAC that "...the Communists discovered that destruction of religion could proceed much faster through infiltration of the Church by Communists operating within the Church itself."

While the Council itself did not call for the radical changes and abuses that occurred over the last 40 years, “the spirit of Vatican II” led bishops to implement changes not authorized by the Council or the Pope. One such change was that regional conferences of bishops were given new powers that would later work to distort and change the original intention of the Council. One example is the Council’s insistence that Latin be retained as an essential part of the Catholic Mass. Conferences of regional bishops kicked this mandate to the curb in the name of “the spirit of Vatican II.” Catholic life in the 1970s had become a choreographed danse macabre, according to Dr. John C. Rao, an Associate Professor of History at New York’s St. John’s University. Writing in Love in the Ruins, Modern Catholics in Search of the Ancient Faith, Dr. Rao posits that entering into a dialog with the “Neo Catholics” was nearly impossible. “I simply found no means of engaging a discussion with Whirling Dervishes in the grip of renewal fever,” Dr. Rao writes. “All of their man-centered activities were defended by them with reference to the obvious guidance of a Holy Spirit whom I was said to despise, a Holy Spirit who had suddenly and inexplicably exchanged His friendship for Catholic Tradition for a Shiva-like passion for its annihilation. Mockery and distortion of Traditionalist arguments were the unchanging weapons in the progressive arsenal in those days...”

Mary Ann Kreitzer, founder and president of Les Femmes, a Catholic group, writing in the same anthology, recalls home liturgies with “liberation theology” angles preached by Franciscan priests who then went on to celebrate a “noisy guitar and tambourine hootenanny home Mass with one of the priests presiding.”

And what, if anything, did Malachi Martin know about Archbishop Annibale Bugnini, the designer of the Novus Ordo Mass? Was Bugnini, who was eventually dismissed from his post, part of the secret cabal behind Vatican Walls? After all, it was Bugnini who said, “We must strip from our Catholic prayers and from the Catholic liturgy everything which can be the shadow of a stumbling block for our separated brethren, that is, for the Protestants.”

Years later, Pope Benedict XVI would add that “everything rises or falls with the Liturgy.” New Mass, a new religion; it’s only natural then that there were post-Council aftershocks. Vatican II’s imprint on the liturgical life of the Church was for many, including this writer, devastating. Gregorian chant and Mozart were kicked to the curb and replaced with insipid hymns like On Eagles' Wings and bad folk music. The Great Dumbing Down also affected Catholic Church architecture: Beautiful churches were stripped of their high altars, statues and mosaics in the name of "ecumenicalism." In the American Church especially, experimentation and excess imploded with clown and jazz masses, Gucci nuns in lipstick and puffed up (or puffed down) feminist hairdos, some of whom were now calling God, "Mother Goddess" and intoning the virtues of WICCA. In the whacky 1970s a priest might jump out from the sanctuary and do dance numbers in front of the congregation, tussle with a hula-hoop, or shuffle about as if reliving his youth in New York's Peppermint Lounge. It was the age of the "cool" priest with the lascivious wink, a time when pretty much anything was acceptable if the parish priest said it was okay, even if that meant calling for a Board of Directors to replace the Papal Office in Rome. Was this further proof of the smoke of Satan? The Church in the 1970s seemed to be on a fast lane to the heart of the 21st century. In the end, however, instead of unity with Protestants, the fruits of the Council were factionalism and schism.

Traditionalist Catholics dubbed the Novus Ordo Church as misguided, while others formed organizations like the Society of Saint Pius X. When traditionalist seminaries and convents began springing up (most of them filled to capacity, by the way, as opposed to their half-empty Novus Ordo counterparts), the Church realized it had a problem. "The Catholic Church is really two Churches now," as one priest said to me recently.

The relaxation of the role of the priesthood, what Kreitzer calls a "denigration of genuine priestly charism of the ordained while instilling a false sense of clericalism in the laity," helped contribute a worldwide sex abuse scandal lying dormant but that would soon emerge, like a full-blown virus, many years down the road. "It fit with the times when priests were encouraged to escape the sanctuary while the laity flocked to it," Kreitzer writes, meaning that, if the Church could change a 1,500 year-old liturgy in a couple years, then anything was changeable—and possible, even behavior related to Allen Ginsberg's famous line, "This form of life needs sex." While some sexual abuse cases occurred prior to the Council, most occurred in the 1960s and 70s, when the Church was in the midst of its so-called "springtime."

According to Thomas Plante, Professor and Chair of Psychology, Santa Clara

University, the average age of the priest abuser in 2002 was 53. That means that the vast majority of abuse cases coming to light today are from 20, 30 and 40 years ago, the post-Vatican II years, when ‘ liturgical experimentation’ was at its height. At that time not much was understood about sexual abuse. It wasn’t until the early 1980s, as Plante suggests in his book, Bless Me Father for I Have Sinned, that serious research began in this area. Abuser priests identified by Church authorities 20, 30 or 40 years ago, were given the usual Bayer aspirin treatment: a therapeutic slap on the wrist and 30 days of isolated prayer in a faraway retreat. After that, they were discreetly recycled and farmed out to a different parish setting. It was all very much like signing off on a traffic ticket, or getting your mouth washed out with soap, sans the obligatory cold shower. No doubt a few astute souls at that time questioned this cavalier method of treatment, but they weren’t many. Most Church authorities accepted the ‘slap on the wrist” as status quo treatment, comparable perhaps to the rather benign penalties imposed on men and women who had sex with minors in the freewheeling 70s. The latest clergy sexual abuse cases emerging from Philadelphia are certainly not the end of the scandal, either. The last fifty years have not been good years for the Catholic Church. More astonishing still, much of this sad saga may have something to do with Malachi Martin’s claim that there once was a Black Mass within the Vatican walls. [\[79\]](#)

Exorcisms by phone while the Pope fights Gnosticism

Why is 2018 another key year for the Satanic timeline? When you sum three sixes taken from the number Six hundred and sixty-six, being the infamous “Number of the Beast” present in Chapter 13 of the Book of Revelation of the New Testament, you get the number 18. Of course, we also have to understand the number 20 featured in 2018. Jacob Boehme, German philosopher and Christian mystic leading figure of the good side of the Illuminati of his time, considered this number “The Devil” that is to say the material world opposed to the spiritual world. The number 20 is also considered ominous for Saint Jerome because it indicates the universal fight, but it also represents the source of all energy of the world.

For this reason, I will consider 2018, the year we just left, as the turning point in this gradual manifestation of 666 “the number of man” (depending on how the text is translated), associated with the Beast, an antagonistic creature that appears briefly about two-thirds into the apocalyptic vision of John the Apostle. Another key period in Satanic history was the year 1666 (which happens to be the only year written with Roman numerals in which each letter is written just one time – MDCLXVI... that is, the only date since the year 666 – DCLXVI). That year is recognized as the beginning of the Guibourg Black Masses in Paris I cited earlier in the book, which captured the imagination of Satanism for the next 300 years. Finally, in 1966, the Vatican II Council was concluded (on 8 December 1965 to be precise), and the almost 2000 year-old Traditional Latin Mass was sadly abandoned by the Roman Catholic Church, so the Satanic versions of the Latin Black Mass could emerge from the ruins of the Roman Rite to please the Satanists secretly operating in the Catholic Church. Evil is definitely expanding its grip worldwide at all latitudes, regardless of faith or race, in ways we have never seen before.

One of the most shocking things that was revealed at the 2018 exorcist course at the Regina Apostolorum was that: “There are priests who carry out exorcisms on their mobile phones. That’s possible thanks to Jesus.” Since the course began in 2004, the number of priests attending each year has more than doubled. Last year, Irish priest Fr Pat Collins referred to the Catholic Herald that exorcism was rising “exponentially” and added that he was “baffled” that Catholic Church leaders were not doing more. “What I’m finding out desperately, is people who in their own minds believe – rightly or wrongly – that they’re afflicted by an evil spirit,” he said. “I think in many cases they wrongly think it, but when they turn to the Church, the Church doesn’t know what to do with them and they refer them on either to a psychologist or to somebody that they’ve heard of that is interested in this form of ministry, and they do fall between the cracks and often are not helped.”

In his most recent apostolic exhortation from 2018, entitled, Gaudete et Exsultate, Pope Francis warned that the devil is not a myth but a “personal being who assails us.” For Pope Francis, the path to holiness does not involve wrestling with some abstract boogeyman, but involves a “constant struggle against the devil, the prince of evil.” It finally seems like the “perfectly possessed” Jorge Mario Bergoglio, who doesn’t even believe in hell, after losing control of a demonically possessed Church, which means, of course, fewer donations, and possible bankruptcy, is finally revealing to the world that the devil is not a myth: “We should not think of the devil as a myth, a representation, a symbol, a figure of speech or an idea,” the Pope wrote. “This mistake would leave us to let down our guard, to grow careless and end up more vulnerable.” [\[80\]](#)

Regarding the online activities of Catholics that are increasingly obsessed with the Internet, Pope Francis suggests in the same apostolic exhortation to stop trolling online, resist gossiping and in the last few years he has publically urged families and couples to put aside their smartphones and social media feeds and learn how to talk to one another again. “Consider putting down your device altogether.” [\[81\]](#)

Are these snippets of wisdom, or Papal hypocrisy? Well, let’s remember you can preach the truth, but if the heart is not right, God can’t hear you. God has His prophets, and Satan, of course, has his own, like Pope Francis. God’s prophets are the true prophets, while Satan’s prophets are the false prophets, the ones working towards a One World Religion and Government ruled by the A.I. However, depending on your point of view on this Pope, from his new apostolic exhortation released last year, “Gaudete et Exsultate,” or “Rejoice and Be Glad,” he seems to be finally addressing the increase in Satanic activity, even if he never mentions Satanism, and he openly criticizes Gnosticism.

Gnostics were quite popular as we know, in the first centuries of the Common Era, but then faded out. So what is prompting Pope Francis, a member of the Society of Jesus founded by Ignatius of Loyola who was himself a member of a Spanish Gnostic Sect, called, Los Alumbrados (“The Illuminati”) to write: “Gnosticism is one of the worst ideologies, because while unduly emphasizing knowledge or a certain experience, it considers that one's vision of reality is perfection.” [\[82\]](#)

Maybe Pope Francis should be more honest about both the heretical origins of his own order, and the gnostic and esoteric character of Fr. Pierre Teilhard de Chardin, S.J. who he is not only an open admirer of, but also a great supporter of all his speculative Gnostic nonsense. This falsity shows clearly the demonic nature of Bergoglio, “The False Prophet,” who likes to criticize the Gnostics he secretly embraces. This is because the Jesuits have played a major role in promoting the New Age phenomena that has always had a special role for Gnosticism. So once again. The False Prophet is tricking us. The Gnostics believe in gnosis, a knowledge of Ultimate Reality or God enabled by secret teachings.

Gnosticism in one way or another, is central to most of the modern Illuminati groups and Masonic Rites we have analyzed in previous Volumes of my Confessions, but the Jesuit Pope doesn't want you to learn from any Secret Gnostic teachings because the Jesuits, who basically control the most influential Secret Societies of the planet, including the various Gnostics Churches, want to keep their exclusivity on such secrets that they have always monitored and influenced on behalf of the Church.

The Gnostic Jesus that particularly appealed to those in the Illuminati who heard in it echoes of the Asian religions that were in vogue at the end of the nineteenth century, was in a way central for the later development of Modern Satanism. This is when Madame Blavatsky created Theosophy, and declared Jesus to be an avatar of the divine, a messenger from above comparable to Buddha or Krishna. At that point things started to degenerate as the Jesuits infiltrated Theosophy, and Aleister Crowley formulated the completely anti-Christian form of Gnosticism called Thelema. The later, a system that is influenced by and bears some features in common with traditional Gnosticism, especially in that adherents work to come to their own direct knowledge of the divine, referred to as the Great Work, and their focus on the glorification of the Will, at all costs and above everything. This thought is synthesized in the Thelemic saying taken from The Book of the Law, Do what thou wilt shall be the whole of the Law. That's why so many Nazi's loved this sick philosophy that became very popular in 1930s Berlin, as it reflected in some way the life, and work of Adolf Hitler. With Crowley, Gnosticism takes indeed a much darker turn than with anybody else before him.

The method employed by Crowley and his initiates supposedly involves the use of the scientific method, and of critical thinking, rather than dogmatism, is typical of the Illuminati. That's why Aleister Crowley's classic periodical The Equinox proudly bore on its cover the slogan The Method of Science, the Aim of Religion. In the end, Thelemites and most of the dark side of the Illuminati and Freemasonry, seem obsessed with what one of the contemporary leaders of the Ordo Templi Orientis, Carl Abrahamson, (also a close friend of the late Anton LaVey), defines as "The Third Side": Aleister Crowley was instrumental in this transcendental process with his famous definition "The Magick of Horus requires the passionate union of the opposites." Abrahamson adds: "The side may be controversial but that's never a problem for a Satanist." [\[83\]](#)

Well, we have no doubt about that, as the late Anton LaVey wrote in Satan speaks: "The third side can be the crackpot stuff of conspiracy theories, or it can be the most logical and simple, yet deliberately neglected conclusion." [\[84\]](#) The Third side is like mixing the sacred with the profane. LaVey was a Zionist, for example, but he also loved the aesthetics of Nazism and claimed the perfect Satanist should be a "Nazi Jew." Many left-wing activists and Satanists prefer the aesthetics of Nazism, even if they might deny it publicly. The worship in Catholic churches instead, as in other Christian churches, is mostly generated by "The Third side" at the moment. That's why we increasingly see a visible mix of profane and sacred that is being rejected by God but totally endorsed by Satan. Because this is Satan's End-Time deception, and "The Third Side" is just another masochistic way of joining the devil's iniquity from a different angle, as most Satanists would agree.

FIG. 34– George Soros

FIG. 35 – The demon Clauneck or Claunt

George Soros, the demon behind the Jesuit Pope

Hollywood movie star James Woods shocked the world last October with a tweet accusing George Soros of being Satanic, “The degree to which this one Nazi collaborator has undermined the stability of Western democracies is virtually incalculable,” tweeted Woods, adding “He is satanic.” Simply repeating what Alex Jones, or myself, have been saying and writing for years. However, I think Soros is more than merely Satanic. He is an actual demon. Some occultists in the Illuminati go as far as to say he is Clauneck (also called Claunt), a goetic daemon that appeared first in the grimoires The Secrets of Solomon, a 16th or 17th century diabolical text that contains an early version of many of the demons listed later in Grimorium Verum. [\[85\]](#)

He is one of the eighteen Servitors of Syrach, said to be “much loved by Lucifer”[\[86\]](#) and he is summoned because he usually has the ability to bestow wealth, either by bringing money over a great distance or by assisting in the discovery of hidden treasures. Clauneck is the demon of wealth, known to be obedient to his summoners, but only to those who show him the proper respect like, George Soros.

Hungarian parliamentarian and energy undersecretary András Aradszki, dropped the ultimate anti-Soros speech in 2017 before the National consultation survey on the “Soros plan.” In a shocking address titled “The Christian duty to fight against the Satan/Soros Plan,” Aradszki, made the following remarks: “According to the Three Secrets of Fátima, Satan’s greatest and final attack against the Church will be the attack against families. We see this with abortion, euthanasia, same-sex marriage, and the forced politicization of gender theory. The Soros mercenaries do not cite the Holy Father’s thoughts on this. We see the great European attacks against families, in which Soros and his comrades want to destroy the independence and values of nation states for the purpose of watering down the Christian spirit of Europe with the forced settlement of tens of millions of migrants. But the fight against Satan is a Christian duty. Yes, I speak of an attack by Satan, who is also the angel of denial, because they are denying what they are preparing to do — even when it is completely obvious. They frantically try to prove that there is no quota, there is no compulsory settlement, and the Soros Plan does not exist,” he said.

Aradszki then went on to claim that Lucifer is tricking everyone with deceptive catch-phrases about humane treatment and the love for one’s neighbor by lecturing the Church. “This is a sin against man,” Aradszki said, adding that “this also makes it a sin against God. Whether or not the Hungarians want this will be decided within a few weeks.” “The national consultation is an outstanding opportunity for us to make our opinions known about Satan’s Soros Plan, but also for us to make our opinions known about what we think of our homeland’s thousand-year-old history, our national sovereignty, our freedom, and our beloved Europe.” [\[87\]](#)

But billionaire investor, and pseudo philanthropist, George Soros is not only a threat for Hungary, Europe, and the US, is establishing himself as a major force also against China this year.

As Zero Edge reported at the end of January 2019: While this year’s now-concluded World Economic Forum conference in Davos was mostly a dud and increasingly a joke in financial circles, with Deutsche Bank’s Jim Reid going so far as admitting that “we had a DB drinks reception for our clients

*last night and one said to me that in 11 years of coming here the best advice would be to trade in the opposite direction to the main theme of the conference over the next 12 months,” there was one event that boondoggling billionaires were eagerly anticipating: George Soros’ annual remarks. [\[88\]](#)

He famously slammed Google and Facebook at Davos 2018, calling them a “menace” and “monopolistic” and predicting it’s “only a matter of time before the global dominance of the U.S. IT monopolies is broken,” Accusing them of being, “obstacles to innovation” and were to be considered a “menace” to society whose “days are numbered.” This time Soros took aim at what he believes is an even greater adversary, one which we might even all agree with: Communist China.

Soros’ ominous warnings at last year prestigious World Economic Forum, eventually forced the liberal mafia of Silicon Valley into working for him, or risk being completely wiped off the map. As Soros pointed out in Davos last year, “The power to shape people’s attention is increasingly concentrated in the hands of a few companies.” Soros and left-wing mondialists want complete control over everything and China seems to be in their way in 2019, or maybe its just a show. Soros won in Silicon Valley by bullying and threatening both Google and Facebook, who initially seemed to not want to fully comply with his undemocratic agenda, but China is a nuclear power that acts just like a dragon.

Soros can’t dominate a force like that with his usual fraudulent techniques. Yes, the ones he used to conquer Facebook, who completely gave up on resisting him, after suffering the biggest loss in stock market history at the end of July 2018 with a 100 billion dollar loss in market value in just one day, and Google suffered a similar fate when a week earlier they were hit with a record-breaking €4.34bn (£3.87bn) fine from the Soros-controlled European Union, for anti-competitive “illegal practices”. These two events gave Soros complete control over Facebook and Google. The Soros Fund Management of billionaire investor George Soros then added in August 2018, stakes in Apple, Facebook, and Twitter, while reducing stakes in Amazon and Google’s parent company, Alphabet. Now George Soros wants to eliminate the Chinese competition. “China is not the only authoritarian regime in the world but it is the wealthiest, strongest and technologically most advanced,” Soros lashed out at Beijing, while taking particular aim at China’s president: “This makes Xi Jinping the most dangerous opponent of open societies.”

Soros, warned that China’s increasing use of A.I. and a social credit system to monitor its citizens (as if the U.S. or the rest of the world is any different) could result in the most ruthless yet technologically advanced authoritarian regime in history, proposed a “solution” to eliminating what he sees as China’s ills: crash China’s economy and market, an approach Soros’ critics say he applies to every nation which he finds disagreeable. But before the general public rushes to declare that Soros and Trump are now best friends due to their shared common nemesis, the billionaire Democrat donor made it clear that in addition to seeking the replacement of Xi, he would be just as delighted if Trump were also gone, because since “we are in a Cold War that threatens to turn into a hot one” if “Xi and Trump were no longer in power, an opportunity would present itself to develop greater cooperation between the two cyber-superpowers.” Cooperation which would only be made possible and dominated by “something similar to the United Nations Treaty that arose out of the Second World War.” In other words, an organization modeled after Soros’ very own Open Society. [\[89\]](#)

Yet ,while Soros’ aggressive 3295-word attack on China took many by surprise, what was just as notable was China’s response to Soros’ scathing criticism: there was none. In fact, China made it quite clear that in its opinion, Soros is no longer relevant, saying that “statements by certain people, which portray black as white and distort facts, are completely pointless and not worthy of even a rebuttal.” I am not sure his old time buddy Henry Kissinger will agree with creating such chaos with the Red Dragon but here we are. It seems like Soros wants to take over the New World Order and took aim not only at China, but also Russia, saying “I’ve been concentrating on China, but open societies have many more enemies, Putin’s Russia foremost among them.”

Satanist George Soros usually operates in cahoots with Pope Francis, so this years talk at Davos seems more like theatre for the rich, with no real substance, as going against China now will be going also against the Jesuits, who are developing a strong new relationship with China. However, Clauneck has been described as “free market” in the most extreme sense, just like Soros, so you never know what Mr. Soros is going to manifest next in the near future, to make himself, and his loyal disciples, sitting on his BlackRock, even richer.

Something big apparently went on last year on his behalf at the Bilderberg meeting that took place at the Lingotto building in Via Nizza in Turin. Among the many powerful guests arriving for the event, there was none other than the Second-in-Command of the Holy See, the powerful Vatican Secretary of State, Cardinal Pietro Parolin (b.1955), said to be very close to the highly influential Academy of the Illuminati in Rome. The main subject of discussion last year in Turin’s meeting was the populist rise in Europe, and, of course, Donald J. Trump. The Bilderberg meeting was founded in 1954 by the now deceased David Rockefeller. This elitarian institution unites ministers, industrialists, CEOs of multinationals, and the heads of numerous banks. Prominent figures in the political, economic, academic, and media world will be present to promote their mondialist-leftist ideas, but last year they had for the first time the official presence of the Vatican Secretary of State, who delivered a secret message written by Pope Francis to his loyal minions possibly regarding the info coming from Moscow’s alien/demonic department.

I wonder what Mikhail Bulgakov, the famous author of The Master and Margherita, who used characters from Jewish demonology as a retort to the denial of God in the USSR, would say about contemporary Russia and the International Organization for the Destinies of the World.

Legion is in the air you can feel the demons everywhere

Last summer, a series of strange stories caught my attention.

The first one came out of Ghana concerning 20 students who lost consciousness and collapsed after they had reported seeing ghosts. According to Daily Guide Africa, 20 high school students lost consciousness and collapsed under mysterious circumstances during class on Tuesday, July 3, 2018. The affected students had complained about seeing ghosts, including the spirits of classmates who had died, before collapsing, according to classmates.^[90]

It seems that such cases are more common than initially suspected these days. Two more reports of similar incidents came out of the Philippines on the island of Cebu in July, 2018. The first occurred in Dalaguete Town on July 9, and the second occurred in Danao City, three days later, on July 12. Both incidents share strange similarities, not only with each other, but with the Ghana case as well.

The first incident, at the Dumalan National High School (DNHS), occurred between 9am and 11am on Monday, July 9. Fourteen grade 7 students between the ages of 13 and 14 were reported to have fallen victim to “demonic possession” after experiencing a wide range of eerie symptoms all at once. According to The Philippine Star, three students became violent and others were hit by severe abdominal pain and difficulty breathing. Some of the students said they had seen “paranormal beings,” but according to the newspaper, none could recall the exact nature of these beings. Strangest of all, The Philippine Star reports that some—some, not one—of the affected students began mumbling about planting specific kinds of native trees. Classes were suspended and the students were sent home. The government responded by sending a man to bless the school. Teacher-in-charge Flor Orozco said that the incident may have been due to “hunger, emotional imbalance, and troubled family backgrounds.”

That's all well and good, and probably fairly reasonable, however, three days later it happened again in a different city. According to Cebu Daily News, 13 students at Ubaldo Iway Memorial National High School in Danao City were “gripped by an evil spirit” after reporting seeing a “strange black figure” wandering around the school grounds. More information on what being “gripped by an evil spirit” entails was not available, but according to Cebu Daily News, the reports were confirmed by Dr. Rene Catan, head of the Provincial Health Office. [\[91\]](#)

But wait, that's not all. Philippines Lifestyle News reports that in June, two “demonic possession” incidents struck two other schools in Cebu, within hours of each other. In one of the June cases, the symptoms started after students reported seeing the ghost of a child in the school. In the other, it began with reports of the specter of a woman covered in blood. Officials at one of the schools affected in June said the incident was related to a “decision to replace an axed mango tree.” In Asia, some people think that cutting trees can bring about a curse, but according to eyewitnesses, the students were speaking in a “strange language” and displaying “freakish strength.” There's a good chance that this is all just calculated shenanigans by groups of kids. Who knows. Everything is possible in the age of social networking and bad jokes. However, we need to keep in mind some spirits that attach themselves to humans could be lost souls. Forms of spirit possession where the ghost of a deceased person visits the affected individual, and replaces his, or her identity.

There is definitely a similarity between the spirit possession case in Ghana on July 3rd, and other similar cases that happened around the world in recent years, and, in particular, what happened in Peru in May 2016, when almost 100 school children are thought to have been 'possessed' by the devil - and saw visions of “a man in black” trying to kill them. It was described as a mass case of demonic possession, with the pupils in Peru experiencing seizures alongside their horrifying hallucinations, just like in Ghana or the Philippines . Experts also struggled in Peru to explain the strange goings-on, which also included widespread convulsions and fainting at the school, reportedly built on a Mafia graveyard. According to local reports, as many as 80 students at the Elsa Perea Flores School in northern Peru's Tarapoto have been experiencing the supposedly contagious 'condition' since last month. Children aged between 11 and 14 were reportedly fainting and having strong muscular convulsions. Shocking video footage online shows pupils who are barely conscious, repeatedly screaming, and who appear to be delirious.^[92] Doctor Antony Choy told national channel Panamericana TV:

"We don't understand how this has kept on going on. We know it started on 29th April and now it is still happening. Now there are almost 80 pupils [still affected]."

A pupil, not named in local media, described their experience: "It's disturbing for me to think about it. It's as if someone kept on chasing me from behind. It was a tall man all dressed in black and with a big beard and it felt like he was trying to strangle me. My friends say I was screaming desperately, but I don't remember much."

Locals believe this is a case of demonic interference, saying some children must have played games that invoke demons such as using a Ouija board.^[93] I wrote earlier, an 18-year-old woman in Lima, Peru, reportedly became possessed by a demon after playing a version of a Ouija board game on her mobile phone. For our health and the health of our children, we need to understand and learn more about the stages of demonic possession.

Lucifer recommended for parole

In January 2019, a California parole panel prevalently made of liberals, recommended for the first time that the Charles Manson follower Robert Beausoleil, better-known as Bobby Beausoleil, be freed after serving nearly a half-century in prison for murder. Satanist Bobby Beausoleil, now 71, was not involved in the most notorious killings of actress Sharon Tate and six others by the infamous Manson "family" in 1969, but he was, however, convicted in the slaying of musician Gary Hinman that occurred the same year. Hinman was tortured inhumanly for three days, by Mansons' Satanic cult, and Manson even cut Hinman's face with a sword before Beausoleil violently killed him, according to testimony made at previous parole hearings.

Future Manson Family murderer Bobby Beausoleil met Charles Mason after co-starring with Anton LaVey, the founder of the Church of Satan, in Kenneth Anger's original version of "Lucifer Rising" filmed in 1968, it later became the 11-minute short cult film, "Invocation Of My Demon Brother" directed, edited, and photographed by avant-garde film director and member of the Ordo Templi Orientis, Kenneth Anger (IX° degree), featuring the rather unusual soundtrack made by an LSD driven Mick Jagger, who played a Moog synthesizer. There are, of course, numerous occult theories as to what really happened regarding the earlier version of "Lucifer Rising" that was never released in its entirety and completely vanished. A legend in occult circles that still circulates today, is that Kenneth Anger, who was in love with Beausoleil, placed a terrible curse upon him for fleeing the film Lucifer Rising. Bobby Beausoleil had escaped with the original footage of the film. This curse apparently caused Bobby's car to break down near the infamous desert commune of Manson's cult, at Spahn Ranch, also known as the Spahn Movie Ranch, based in Los Angeles County, California. Occult expert, and Satanist author Gavin Baddeley, an ordained Reverend in the Church of Satan by none other than Anton LaVey, wrote in the book Lucifer Rising, that Charles Mason, immediately welcomed Beausoleil and buried the stolen footage of Lucifer Rising in the desert, demanding a ransom of ten thousand dollars from Anger for its return.

The money was never given, and Anger decided to release the few minutes he still had left in his archives in 1969 as “Invocation of My Demon Brother.” Anger, who is still alive at the time of writing this, said that this short film was, in fact, assembled from scraps of the first version of Lucifer Rising, but he never truly explained what happened due to the infamous connection with the Manson Family and his assassin lover.

Anger and Beausoleil later made up, and Beausoleil and his fellow inmates at Oregon State Penitentiary in Salem, Oregon later composed the soundtrack for Anger’s 1972 film Lucifer Rising directed by avant-garde film director and member of the Ordo Templi Orientis, Kenneth Anger (IX° degree). The music of Lucifer Rising is closely linked to the prophetic occult elements and Crowleyanity found in Anger's film. Beausoleil sought to draw on his own occult life experiences to tell the story of a “mythical Lucifer awakening in his pit of despair, rekindling his torch, and rising like a phoenix from the ashes of his own unmaking to begin his long journey from the dark recesses of the underworld — shedding his pride along the way in his uncompromising desire to regain the Beloved.”

Beausoleil did this by creating dark and sinister sounding music. Parole panels ruled against releasing Beausoleil 18 prior times. California's incoming governor, Gavin Newsom, could block the parole in coming months. Termed-out Governor Jerry Brown has consistently stopped releases for followers of Charles Manson. Gary Hinman's cousin, Kay Hinman Martley, who attended the recent hearing, said Beausoleil was already lucky once, when his death sentence in 1970 was reduced to life in prison by an appeals court in 1973. “I constantly have hope that they'll do the right thing and keep these people in prison, and now my hopes have to go with the governor,” she said, adding she plans to reach out to Newsom to tell him “this man does not belong outside the walls of prison.” Beausoleil's attorney, Jason Campbell, said that his client is no longer dangerous and that his release “is long overdue.” Sharon Tate's sister, Debra Tate, who also attended the hearing, said she will mount a social media petition so parole opponents can “*make their feelings known to Governor-elect Newsom, because he has a tendency to be very liberal.” Adding “Without public opinion weighing in on this, there is no hope.”

She rightly objected that Beausoleil continues to break prison rules by profiting from selling his art and music outside of prison. Lady Gaga recently used the soundtrack from “Lucifer Rising” for her Netflix documentary. Let’s hope liberal California does not free this criminal and treat him as a rock star. Newsom, who was baptized and brought up in the Roman Catholic faith, describes himself as an “Irish Catholic rebel [...]” and some say he is another false prophet of the left ready to glorify evil. Anything is possible in this age of progressive ideas piloted by Satan’s Legion. Vanity and Pride, are sins of the devil, and Beausoleil has plenty of both to please the increasingly Satanic U.S. Democrats.

Satanism is a False Prophet who raped 300 women and is loved by Oprah and Bill Clinton

I have discussed in detail the incredible case of the Brazilian cult leader and black magician, Joao Teixeira de Faria – known as John of God – with Owen Shroyer on the Alex Jones Show on the 19th of December 2018. But the dark saga of “John of God” isn’t over yet, because he still has powerful people outside supporting him, and evil entities ready to kill for him, as he was among other things, the ring leader for a massive sex slave farm for the elite that sold babies to the highest bidder. The self-styled spiritual healer that claims the spirits of more than 30 doctors and other entities has some very powerful allies indeed, in both the material and the demonic world.

Matthew 24:11 is clear on this point “and many false prophets will appear and deceive many.” These days false Prophets are on the rise all over the place, so remember these words from 1 John 4:1 “Dear friends, do not believe every spirit, but test the spirits to see whether they are from God, because many false prophets have gone out into the world.” On the 14th of December 2018, a Brazilian judge issued an arrest warrant for a famed Brazilian faith healer who has been accused of sexual abuse by more than 300 women. Three days later, the police arrested the VIP psychic and cult leader João Teixeira de Faria, 76, known as João de Deus (“John of God”), who became a worldwide celebrity when Oprah Winfrey reported his magical healing methods back in 2013. Faria became a leading guru, on the American New Age/left-wing scene lead by Oprah Winfrey, when on November 17, 2010, Susan Casey wrote in O Magazine about her amazing trip to see him in Brazil, and the event was subsequently covered on The Oprah Winfrey Show. The article Cassey wrote was entitled “Leap of Faith: Meet John of God”. The show was entitled “Do You Believe in Miracles?” In both, Susan Casey discusses her need to deal with the traumatic loss of her father. She wondered if Faria could help heal her grief. She met him twice and later stated: “Three hours went by like 20 minutes, and it was blissful—it was like I was floating.” Casey claims she was able to speak with her dead father. “It was very real,” she says. “More of a vision than I had ever had before. ... I got this feeling like I shouldn’t be sad, that everything was okay.”

The show in question never provided any scientific or medical explanations for the procedures performed by the occultist, and accepted blindly that science and medicine had no explanation for what happened, but the whole thing obviously captured the attention of New Age Satanist Oprah Winfrey. On March 17, 2013, Oprah's Next Chapter, Season 2, Episode 116, a televised show aired entitled "John of God." This time Oprah traveled to Brazil herself to meet and talk with Faria both privately and in front of the camera. However, in December 2018, "John of God" was finally accused of sexual abuse, rape, and pedophilia by more than 200 women. After the allegations became public, Oprah, a hero of the MeToo Movement, immediately deleted all the interviews of "John of God" from her site and quickly released a note stating that she hopes justice will be served. Well, it seems too late for what Brazilian prosecutors say could be the worst serial sex crime case in the country's history. Once again, what British singer Seal said almost a year ago about Oprah Winfrey, following her infamous speech at the Golden Globes, accusing her of being "part of the problem for decades," is proven to be 100% true.

Oprah, is the biggest hypocrite on the planet, not only is she a close friend of sexual predator Harvey Weinstein, but also of the now infamous "John of God." Minutes before turning himself in, "John of God" said in a typical guru turned victim fashion, "I am giving myself over to the divine justice and the earthly justice." His attorneys say that the preemptive arrest order was illegal and unfair in their opinion. According to them, "only a few testimonies of a small number of unnamed victims justified the arrest order." But in reality, his name was on the radar of paranormal investigators and skeptics for many years.

Oprah conveniently ignored their warnings as well as the Brazilian left-wing governments that supported this dangerous black magician for years, until their ultimate demise in the last elections in October 2018, and the arrival of the first conservative president in many years for Brazil, President Jair Messias Bolsonaro.

Back in 2005, ABC News (U.S.) discussed "John of God" during the program Primetime Live, but was immediately criticized by one of the main participants, James Randi, a retired stage magician and a scientific skeptic, who has extensively challenged paranormal and pseudoscientific claims during his career, who denounced the whole thing as a stunt to promote the Brazilian “healer”: “I had plenty more to say on the subject, and I said it. ABC-TV News didn’t want it.” Adding in disappointment, “Well, I believe that this ABC-TV program will encourage the incautious public to book trips to Brazil to go under the butchery that John of God inflicts on his victims.”

This statement from the Official “John of God” website should give you an idea of the strange beliefs of his followers, to include Oprah Winfrey: “Internationally known as John of God or João de Deus, is arguably the most powerful unconscious medium alive today and possibly the best-known healer of the past 2000 years. However, João is a humble man who is very clear about one thing: “I do not cure anybody. God heals, and in his infinite goodness permits the Entities to heal and console my brothers. I am merely an instrument in God’s divine hands.” – John of God. The medium Joao Teixeira has no formal medical training. Instead, he gives over his consciousness and incorporates the spirits of past doctors and saints. These entities give talks, examine the waiting masses and conduct the visible and invisible operations.”

Shockingly enough, “supernatural” events terrified the police while interrogating him last December in the Brazilian city of Goiânia. Unexplained incidents ranging from a “bizarre” computer crash to wiring on electrical appliances suddenly short-circuiting appears to suggest supernatural forces of a demonic nature were at play during the interview. The mysterious problems unnerved cops but didn’t deter them from collecting the initial testimony of John of God.

Detective Karla Fernandes, responsible for coordinating the task force investigating the allegations, claimed that as the spiritual guru began to speak, strange things started to happen in what looked like a typical X-Files scenario. She said to the newspaper Folha de Sao Paulo: “Suddenly the computer that was being used to transcribe the suspect’s answers to the allegations seemed to have a life of its own and the commands on the keyboard wouldn't work. When the clerk tried to enter the medium's statement, the keys locked on a specific letter and 'OOOOOOO' was recorded continuously on the screen for a few seconds."

Although this has never happened before, bemused agents put the incident down to a faulty computer. But when the printer in the room began to print without receiving a command and a fridge blew up, their thoughts turned to paranormal interference. Det Fernandes said: "It was hot in the interrogation room and I decided to turn on the air conditioning. I plugged the lead into an extension shared with a mini-fridge and the electrical wiring suddenly exploded, burning out the fridge. Everyone in the room screamed with fright."

According to the officer, "John of God" stayed silent. She said: "Although these things happened and surprised us, they failed to interfere with our work. He (John of God) didn't say a word."

"John of God," who might more appropriately be referred to as a guru, or even a witch doctor, is a tool of the evil side of the Illuminati. He is an individual who claims to have religious or spiritual truth and powers to heal, but where does he obtain such powers from if not from the devil? Maybe the best way to describe this movement is occultic in nature, as such charismatic figures are usually the source of new religions and cults when in contact with a supposed "Invisible Master." But "John of God" not only appeared on Oprah, he was rumored to have been visited by ex-president and notorious pervert Bill Clinton, by the singer Paul Simon, Naomi Campbell, and the famous spirit-cooker and Satanist Marina Abramovic, who shot a documentary film in Brazil featuring "John of God" in 2016 called "The Space In Between." However, at the end of January 2019, the late Brazilian activist Sabrina Bittencourt, whose investigations originally led to "John of God's" arrest in December 2019, claimed the celebrity medium also ran a baby trafficking operation where children were "farmed" in Brazil before being sold to childless couples around the world. Sadly, a few days after making this bold statement Sabrina Bittencourt, 38, who was reportedly "living under protection" in Spain, died, apparently committing suicide.

The woman who outed "Bill Clinton's faith healer" as the leader of a child sex ring, has been found dead, amid a total blackout from the mainstream media worldwide. The story was nowhere to be found in the English-speaking press. Sex abuse support group Victimas Unidas, which worked with Sabrina Bittencourt, said she left a note explaining why she killed herself. Eldest son Gabriel Baum confirmed her death, writing on Facebook: “She took the last step so that we could live. They killed my mother.”

Sabrina Bittencourt made one last phone call to Youtuber Felipe Neto before he says she took her life :

“Brazil's biggest activist, Sabrina Bittencourt, called me crying yesterday because she could not stand the pain and pressure of the killers who persecuted her all over the world, condemning and bringing “John of God” to justice and denouncing Sri Prem Baba. She had been working for 20 years to help young women and women who are victims of abuse around the world .Yesterday, after one of her sheltered witnesses in London sought refuge from hired killers, Sabrina called me to tears and did not know what else to do, she just wanted to help, but the evil, led by militiamen, the political rulers and powerful religious leaders, could win.”

From Cartacapital.com.br (translated from Spanish):

The death of Bittencourt, who was 38 years old, was confirmed in a note by Maria do Carmo Santos, president of the NGO Victims United. “The group Victims United reports with regret the death of Sabrina de Campos Bittencourt occurred around 9 pm this Saturday, February 2, in the city of Barcelona, Spain, where he lived. The activist committed suicide and left a farewell letter stating the reasons for taking her own life. We urge everyone not to try to get in touch with any family member, to keep them from asking questions that are painful at this difficult time. Two of Sabrina’s three children still do not know what happened, and her father, Rafael Velasco, is trying to protect them. Sabrina’s fight will never be forgotten and we will continue, with the same force, defending minorities, especially women who are daily victims of machismo.”

Before “committing suicide,” Bittencourt wrote a farewell post on Facebook: “Marielle I join you. I did what I could, as far as I could. My love will be eternal for all of you. Sorry to not bear it, my children. ”

Born into a Mormon family, the activist had been abused since the age of four by members of the family's church. At 16, she became pregnant with one of the rapists and aborted. Bittencourt dedicated his life to military by victims of abuse and to unmasking false prophets like "John of God." Last December, the activist gave an interview to Fred Melo Paiva, editor of CartaCapital, in which she recounts her life story and her role in the denunciations of religious leaders who commit abuse. She promised to unmask 13 more leaders this year. We can agree that the circumstances of her death seem to indicate that she did not commit suicide but was rather killed to stop her from unmasking furthermore child sex ringleaders.

From all this we understand once more how important it is to stop people like Abramovic, John of God, and Oprah Winfrey, who are today the public faces of modern Satanism. Remember, it was on The Oprah Winfrey Show, that Satanists like Dr. Michael Aquino came out of the closet and acknowledged that they are following the infernal being that orchestrated the initial rebellion against God, the creator of the universe. Yes, Aquino admitted with no shame to Winfrey and the television audience made up of millions that they are following Satan who initiated the original rebellion against God.

"We are not servants of some God," declared Aquino; "we are our own god's!" Oprah Winfrey appeared to be shocked to find out at that point that this was exactly what she believed as a New Ager, failing to realize that the New Age movement has its roots in Crowleyan Satanism, and Theosophy, just as Aquino's Satanism.

Chapter Seven

The Secrets of The Rite of Exorcism, Understanding the four stages of demonic possession

As my old friend, Henry Makow, wrote in the introduction to his book Illuminati 3 Satanic Possession: What passes as spontaneous “social change” is, in fact, an organized process of Satanic possession. This development is not an isolated or recent phenomenon. Western society is based on a rebellion against God and the natural and moral order. The so-called “Enlightenment” refers to Lucifer as the “light giver.” It was an assertion of the Illuminati's determination to reject Reality -- the Creator's Design – and construct an artificial reality more conducive to their interests and perversions.

It seems that the first thing one should try to have in this increasingly devilish scenario, is a clear idea of the enemy we are fighting and the actual stages of demonic possession that we might increasingly encounter in today's reality. They are as follows: oppression, foothold, partial possession, and full possession. I will summarize the subject with the help of Dr. Carson Michael, published author and psychologist with over 20 years of hands-on experience performing and assisting in more than 200 exorcism-related events. Doctor Michael has first-hand knowledge of the existence and exorcism of demons. He stated, however, that “I only wish I had a manual to guide me through the many difficult times,” in reference to his early calling into the exorcism and deliverance ministry. Well, we hope that this book can be that guide.

Dr. Carson Michael: “In the first stage, oppression, the demons stays on the outside and put's pressure on the person to seek a stronger foothold. The demons may place temptation in front of a person, may cause accidents, and weigh down upon a person to feel like oppression, or speak thoughts into a person. At the oppression level the demons seek to get more control over you by a specific attack. If successful, a foothold may develop. A foothold is where the demon actually gains ground. The person fell into sin, believed the lie, or did not fight off the oppression and so the demon stays and is more empowered. At each and every stage, the more power the demon has the less free-will a person has. In other words, there is a struggle for power within the person to see who will gain control. Remember, possession means ownership, and demons seek ownership wherever they go. At the foothold stage a person has surrendered a part of themselves. A person may have quit drinking alcohol but the demon seeks to set up the person to drink again. If the demon can get the person to be addicted to alcohol then that area of their life is bound with evil in which the person has little or no control. If the person is constantly thinking about or craving alcohol, then the demon has bound up part of the person's free-will and his ability to stay away from sin. In many cases, spirits of infirmity are classified here. Everything else about a person may be fully functional, except in an area of the body. For example, when Jesus preached in a synagogue, a woman was present who had been crippled by a spirit for eighteen years (Luke 13:10-17). When Jesus ministered to her He addressed the infirmity but nothing else. This appeared to be the most significant problem since this is what Jesus focused His attention and power on.

The next level is partial possession and this is where several footholds are developed. The person may have started with an alcohol problem, but now he has wandered into pornography, emotional and physical abuse, and anger control issues. The control of the demon has increased and now there may be several demons to deal with.

The other demons may have been there at the beginning but there was only one evil spirit that started the process; the others remained silent until a foothold was established. While drunk (spirit of witchcraft), a lying spirit may encourage the person to look at pornography on the internet. Once the person begins to look at the porn the perverse spirit begins to work hard to wrap the person into an addiction so that more of the will is compromised. While drunk, a person may be encouraged to fight others or abuse others to deal with pent up anger and frustration at the downward slide he is in (spirit of violence). Now the person has several major problems that have serious spiritual and life consequences. If left untreated the person may slide into full possession. People who end up fully possessed have very diverse pathways of torment. For some, they fall into sin and stumble down a sinful pathway. They start at the oppression level and move down to the full possession level. As they get deeper and deeper into sin they lose more and more freedom.

The sin may start early in life, at middle age or at any time. There are some cases where the demons start by attacking a person's mental health. The demons start early in life through abuse, rejection, fear, and neglect, and push the person, situation by situation towards insanity, where they are in continuous mental pain. They become fully possessed by completely losing their ability to exercise control over their thoughts and emotions. During the times of possession there appear to be very different levels of consciousness experienced by the possessed. In some cases, the victim can hear the voice of the demon clearly and the demon can clearly hear the victim. This is a type of separate consciousness. As the demon gains more control there appear a co-consciousness where the demon takes over the functioning of the person for brief periods of time. The victim may be totally unaware of what was said or done while the demon took over. However, there are cases where the person is aware of what happens when the demon takes over, but they cannot stop the demon from acting. This would explain why a victim would know a foreign language without studying or know facts beyond their years; the demon communicates from its consciousness while the victim's consciousness remains untouched. An example of co-consciousness comes from a case I worked on where a victim was possessed by a demon while drinking mass quantities of alcohol and then would get in his car and drive down the road. He would black out and would wake up in all sorts of accidents and strange car positions. While this was occurring the demon would tell him what it was going to do and the victim was unable to stop it. He could see what he was doing but had no power to stop it.

At the deeper levels of possession there is a dominant consciousness, where the demon takes over the mind and the body of the victim permanently. The victim has very little power or control. In some cases the victim will have total unawareness for what is going on. In some cases they will have some awareness, but only what the demon allows them to know. For example, one victim explained the experience during a full possession of being held in a dark closet, where he could hear muffled sounds sometimes, but the main thing he could hear was the voice of the demon talking to him.

He would try to break out of the closet but felt powerless to change his circumstances. Another type of full possession is very strange. It is almost as if a person is groomed by demons at an early age to become fully possessed. There are cases where a demon will appear to a child or a teen as a friend or a guide. They may appear in human form and converse with a child. The child may be a loner or have emotional problems and the demon seeks to befriend the child. However, there are some cases where the demons seek to terrify the child (making knocking sounds, having a hideous face appear in the window, bumping the bed). Most people do not believe in demons and they will think that their frightened children are hallucinating, have a mental problem, or simply are making up stories for attention. The child is then medicated, punished, ridiculed, or all the above, and the evil powers are never addressed. When a demon comes as a friend or a guide it seeks to gain foothold status by friendship. The child or teen will begin to trust or confide in the evil spirit and thus hand authority over to the demon. The child will become more and more dependent on the demon guide and actually make major life decisions on the advice of this demon. I have literally been involved in cases where the person began to ask the demon who to marry and if they should go to college and where. If the child or teen tries to break away the demon will play mind tricks on the child by either threats to never help again, by frightening the child that real harm will come if they try to get away, or they will pout and act (it is only an act) as if it is hurt and try to draw the child back through sympathy. The demon guide may never take full possession of the person. They may always play the role of a guide. For instance, the demon guide may encourage a teen to go to a psychic, or practice divination (witchcraft), which may then allow a spirit of witchcraft to come in, but the guide stays in place on the outside to continue to guide the teen into enslavement. Their job is to keep the person enslaved and they usually have great authority given to them after several years. As always, there are exceptions to the rule. In one particular case a woman at our church had a demon disguise itself as Jesus and come and talk to her about her problems. She didn't like herself at all as she was divorced two times and each time the marriage was physically and sexually abusive. The demon spent a long time developing a friendship with her. He offered her love, consolation, and advice. Then one day, he offered her to be his bride and they would be forever happy. He would show her the mysteries of heaven, give her love and companionship, and all she had to do was give of herself completely to him. She described to me several times in which she actually had intercourse with the demon who she thought was Jesus. Whether this actually happened or it was a fantasy, we may never know. However, what is true is that she believed that it happened. There are cases where people invite these spirits into their lives as they believe that these spirit guides actually help. The New Age movement encourages people to find their spirit guide and even channel their spirit guide into their bodies. Channeling is actually inviting the spirit into your body to take over or to communicate information to you or others. These people do not believe that these spirits are demons; they believe that these are loving, benevolent angels, spirits, or great teachers that have died. These people are actually giving these evil spirits authority over their lives. There are no loving spirit guides in Scripture. We have guardian angels but we are not to try and consult with them. We are forbidden to consult the dead, and we are forbidden to go to those who practice witchcraft and consult divining spirits (Deuteronomy 18:9-13). Since these activities are all against the Word of God, they must be demons in disguise. Finally, a person may be possessed in the womb. The mother and/or father may transfer the demon, knowingly or unknowingly. In addition, some theologians believed that demons could capture released sperm and inject a woman with it, or have intercourse with a female and release it. This would truly be a troubled person from the beginning.”^[94]

The Meaning and Importance of the Exorcism Rite

I will open this last chapter by talking about Father Cesar Truqui, who is based in Switzerland, and is considered one of the most successful exorcists in the world today. He is someone who had the honor to serve as assistant to the late Father Gabriele Amorth, the rock star of exorcists, who claimed to have performed more than 100,000 exorcisms. Truqui is one of the teachers at the now popular annual course on exorcism held at the Regina Apostolorum Pontifical Athenaeum in Rome, in collaboration with the Group for Socio-religious Research and Information (GRIS) of Bologna, for priests who want to learn the ancient rite, which he says is rooted in the Gospels. The course proposes academic and interdisciplinary research on the ministry of exorcism and the prayer of liberation. It covers a wide range of issues: anthropological, as well as phenomenological, social, theological, liturgical, canonical, pastoral, spiritual, medical, neuroscientific, pharmacological, symbolic, criminological, legal, and juridical ones. Father Cesar Truqui said to The Guardian he has never seen a person levitate, but he knows another priest who actually has.

In the decade he worked as a Roman Catholic exorcist, expelling demons from individuals who he believes are possessed or vexed by the devil, the Mexican priest says the oddest thing he witnessed was the sudden appearance of a “Satanic nail” on a tabletop, adding, “There had been nothing on the table and then suddenly it was there, a rusted black nail. We all saw it. I wanted to keep it but then I thought, no, it’s like keeping a radioactive thing.”

Truqui says during the same interview that “Christ was the first exorcist,” but that’s not completely accurate, as exorcisms were performed on people even before the coming of Christ. Of course, like he says “The power of casting out demons was one of the signs that Christianity was a true religion” and as I wrote earlier, he might be the ultimate exorcist, but not the first, historically. Of course, if we consider him God as Christians than things change as he is the Alpha and the Omega, words that appear 3 times in the Book of Revelation.

Pope Francis has spent a lot of time talking about the devil, more than any other pope in modern history, and reportedly once performed an impromptu exorcism, but he has only rarely discussed the ritual and at one point it was claimed he said hell didn’t exist. Since then, the Vatican has denied that Pope Francis told a well-known Italian journalist that “there is no hell” but his position is still very unclear because that’s his nature. With his controversial document, namely Amoris Laetitia, The Joy of Married Love, this Pope has largely joined in the sexual revolution, embracing worldly ways, as a sign of compromise, opposed to the sign of contradiction and traditionalism; and the world today is actually applauding him for this position.

Francis not only embraces dangerous revolutionary ideas, but he has become a subversive agent of radical change in what is clearly becoming a Satanic-influenced Church. It is time to recognize him as a threat and to resist him as real Christians. That’s why demand for exorcism is on the rise in the Church, and Catholic Bishops around the world, who were once skeptical about this practice, have come to see it as a possible solution to their parishioners’ problems, especially in cases where they believe modern medicine and psychiatry fail. The reality of this problem is that the whole Catholic Church is becoming possessed. However, exorcist Father Truqui, still claims the “patients,” he sees, finds peace in the process stating that “At the end of the exorcism, there is always relief.”

His subjects have problems that cannot be explained in normal medical terms. One, who believes he may have been cursed by his mother-in-law, feels an almost constant sensation of daggers entering his legs, knitting needles in his arms, and a clenched hand at his chin. Another was so obsessed by self-gratification that he masturbated 40 times a day. “Normally speaking it is humanly impossible ... so that is a Satanic thing,” says Truqui. Maybe what Father Truqui and the other exorcist need to realize, is that the present state of the Church is also to blame in this rise in demand for exorcisms. Despite what Hollywood would have us believe, Truqui says full-on demonic possession is very rare, following the trends in Catholic approaches to alleged cases of possession since the pontificate of Leo XIII in the nineteenth century, the new revision includes new emphasis not to confuse mental illness with demonic possession, something that was already inserted by the Vatican back in the 50s, and was discussed in great detail by the late Father Corrado Balducci, who was not only a world-renowned Ufo expert, still venerated by the NWO, but also a known exorcist in the 70s. His excellent book entitled: La Possessione Diabolica, is a sort of guide, probably the most detailed and accurate ever written by an exorcist/demonologist, to learn to recognize a real possession case from mental illness. Balducci's groundbreaking work in this field, unfortunately, no longer in print, was published in Rome (Italy), for the first time, in 1974 by Edizioni Mediterranee, soon after the release of the film "The Exorcist" in the Italian language and ten years after Fr. Philip T. Weller's translation of the ritual in the English language.

These days the vast majority of people who see Father Amorth's heir, Father Truqui, have normal problems, or mental illnesses, and Truqui says he has sent people to seek psychiatric help. But he says 2-3% show signs of demonic "vexation." These people, he claimed to The Guardian, are capable of feats of superhuman strength. Truqui adds that sometimes their voice changes, and they growl or speak in tongues. He claims to have witnessed people with vexations who can suddenly speak in Hebrew or Aramaic even though they have never studied the languages. Some are obsessive and show knowledge of what Truqui calls "secret things," like what a person who is not present is doing or wearing, and they are sometimes overwhelmed by feelings of discomfort when they are in places of worship. "Most of the time, the people who see me are victims," he says. Truqui also spoke at length about Satan with The Guardian, who he described as a pragmatic foe. "The devil tempts the holy man in his holiness and the sinner in his sin," he says.

Interestingly enough, Truqui pointed out during the interview published in April 2018, that he does not believe Pope Francis is possessed or vexed by the devil, he says that the devil would know that Francis would not be tempted by lust for a woman. Instead, he would prey on Francis's sympathy for the poor, and tempt him to ignore the affluent. The process of exorcism itself, he said, is relatively boring if compared with the Hollywood version, but is this always true? Truqui said that once, he started to speak with the devil himself. He recalled one case where the subject said "I am the prince of this world, I am Satan" and the hairs on his arms went up. Adding that: "When you listen to a Satanic growl, once you listen to the devil's voice, you can recognize it."

That sounds pretty spooky, so let me explain for the first time outside of the controlled boundaries of the Catholic Church, and without the possible restrictions, what the traditional Rite of Exorcism is, which is usually restricted for study and use to the Exorcist Priests of the Catholic Church, a special and often courageous category of priest, that performs this ministry under the direction of a Diocesan Bishop.

Isn't it dangerous to cast out demons? Possibly. Driving a car on a modern highway can be dangerous if you ignore the rules! We must remember that the kind of New Testament Christianity taught by the Apostle Paul is not practiced in many of our churches today. Paul says of the early church members that they were soldiers, clad in protective armor, with a sword and a shield in their hands, battling against monstrous demon powers called principalities, powers, rulers of darkness, and wicked spirits. Paul sums up the matter in Ephesians 6:10 by saying, "Finally, my brethren, be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might." He speaks to them as a church of warriors who knew the secret of supernatural strength. He describes their weapons as "mighty... to the pulling down of strongholds" (2 Corinthians 10:4).

What resources for ordinary Christians! But how necessary!—for their enemies were powerful demon spirits controlling nations and organizations of men, evil spirits ruling in the dark places of the earth, and enormous numbers of evil spirits that attempted to harass them daily. Is war dangerous? Only if you have improper equipment! If our armor is not worn properly, there will be chinks in it, and Satan will shoot his fiery darts through them. If the shield of faith is not held at the right angle, it will not avail. If the Sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God, is not known, then we have no offensive weapon. We are sitting ducks! God has not only given us a protective armor which is impervious to Satan's attacks, but he has also given us the blood of His Son. I cannot recommend too strongly that those who enter into this battle deliberately cover themselves by faith in the blood of Jesus. Satan cannot get through the blood-line—but it must be there. When God was about to release the children of Israel from Egyptian slavery, the blood of lambs had to be sprinkled on the lintels and sideposts of all Israelite homes before the angel of death passed over. If no blood had been used, death would have come to the first-born in every family (see Exodus 12).

Obviously, Satan will launch a counterattack when you become a nuisance to him. But it is better to go in and win, than to sit on the sidelines and lose. The best form of defense is attack. That is why Jesus tells us, “Behold, I give unto you power to tread on serpents and scorpions, and over all the power of the enemy: and nothing shall by any means hurt you” (Luke 10:19).

If a clergyman minimizes any part of the plan of salvation, he undersells his congregation on the meaning of salvation. In New Testament Greek, the word "salvation" means "to be made whole" or "to be delivered." The salvation of the Lord means soundness for man's spirit, soul, and body. Remember, exorcism is the first on the list of signs that should follow our preaching (Mark 16:17). It is not something we can sweep under our theological rug and forget God is bringing it out from under the rug today. [\[95\]](#)

Explaining the 1999 Exorcism revision to the layman

Father Philip T. Weller, who translated the whole Roman Ritual back in the early 60s, wrote: “That there is a world of demons is a teaching of revealed religion which is perfectly clear to all who know Sacred Scripture and respect and accept its word as inspired of God. It is part of the whole Christian-Judaeo heritage. There are some who hold that even if revelation were not so absolute, an inference of the existence of evil spirits can be drawn from the magnitude of evil in the world.”

Not so long ago, following the motu proprio of Pope Benedict XVI Summorum Pontificum, Fr. Philip T. Weller's translation of the Rituale Romanorum of 1964 was actually reprinted in three volumes, showing its validity and current importance for the Catholic Clergy. It stands the test of time, especially after the unlikely exorcism revisions, the fruit of the truly diabolical and “Liberal Masonic,” Second Vatican Council, that manifested and promulgated in 1999, De exorcismis et supplicationibus quibusdam (“Concerning Exorcisms and Certain Supplications”), a text that was criticized by the late Fr. Gabriele Amorth, as it removed several descriptions of Satan which sat uncomfortably with the Church's doctrine of today but were still deemed as necessary by the traditional exorcist like Amorth, and the untouched traditional Rite of Exorcism is still allowed as an option if the exorcist requires that option to his Bishop. It is believed that then-Cardinal Ratzinger, Prefect for the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith at the time, weighed in on this delicate matter to grant this permission.

Many exorcists like Amorth, of course, breathed a sigh of relief. As Matt Baglio explains in his bestseller The Rite, seasoned exorcists use the Rituale Romanum as a starting point, not always following the prescribed formula exactly. However, the modern thought of the Church states that although taking many forms, Satan as a metaphysical or spiritual being exists without real physical attributes, but only the assumed forms. Father Amorth also noted in his 1999 book An Exorcist Tells His Story, that the revision was conducted without the input of a single experienced and practicing exorcist. It certainly looks that way. For the first time since 1614, the Vatican issued a revised rite of exorcism published on the 26th of January 1999, making it the last of the Catholic Church's liturgical books to be updated after the Second Vatican Council (1962-65).

The text carries a warning that exorcists, “First of all, must not consider people to be vexed by demons who are suffering above all from some psychic illness.” It cautions against treating people as possessed who are instead “victims of imagination.” The 84-page document leaves the prayers and exhortations largely unchanged from the 1614 edition, though Vatican officials say some of the more colorful descriptions of the devil were removed in keeping with modern church teachings that Satan is only “a spirit without body, without color and without odor.”

The 1614 ritual's three-fold climactic sequence of exorcisms building in intensity toward the expulsion of the demon is utterly dismantled and collapsed into one single prayer. For a true exorcist, this is a travesty. It is like chopping the Inferno and Paradiso off at both ends of Dante's Divine Comedy and leaving only the Purgatorio. Something only a modern Jesuit like Pope Francis could appreciate at the time of the revision. For those who are accustomed to using the 1614 ritual, the prayer feels totally denuded and spoiled of all essence. Mind you, the prayer might still be considered an exorcism, as it is an authoritative command to the demon to leave, preceded by a supplication to God for help, but experts know, as well as the Satanic enemy in the Vatican, that it does not subject the devil to the intense cumulative pressure of the three interlocking exorcism prayers designed to expel him forcefully. The devil may rest early and easily with this one unless the exorcist is experienced and starts operating using the old version. The late Father Amorth said after the publication: “Yes. They wanted to deliver a blunt weapon, effective prayers have been deleted, prayers that had twelve centuries of history were substituted by new, ineffective ones.”

To my knowledge, the new ritual is said to exist only in Latin and English; the US bishops’ conference was released only in 2017, the first official English-language translation of the revisions . Like all liturgical texts, translations of the exorcism rite must be approved by the various bishops’ conferences and then submitted to Rome for review, so it obviously takes a long time to translate it into various languages. However, in the U.S. priests are now authorized by their bishop to perform exorcisms, and use the new English version as well as the new Latin one. The Devil and his Legion must be happy to have the focus diverted from his actual wickedness to pious prayers about how bad he is in the revision piloted by the Satanic forces of the New World Order.

The following chart was written by an experienced exorcist and should suffice as a brief comparison of the two rituals. By its very nature, such a chart leaves out much that can only be understood by looking directly at the original texts, but rather than an extended exegesis on the texts themselves, the chart may help the reader to understand the basics of this complaint about the revision. I have put what I consider to be the most significant changes in italics for immediate comparison.

Father Weller explained in his introduction that “human malice and depravity even at its worst, are not really sufficient to account for all this evil in the world,” and it must be concluded “that the devil is a real person and that his way is tremendous.”

Fr. Weller, cites the late Francois Mauriac (1885-1970), in Life of St. Margaret of Cortona: Evil is Someone, Someone who is multiple and whose name is legion.... It is one thing to be in the realm of the demons, as we all are when we have lost the state of grace, and quite another to be held and surrounded, literally possessed by him.”

I quite like the figure of Margaret of Cortona (1247-1297). She was an Italian penitent of the Third Order of St. Francis. She was born in Laviano, near Perugia, and died in Cortona. She was canonized in 1728 and she is the patron saint of my favorite category of human beings: the falsely accused, the hobos, the homeless, the insane, the orphaned, the mentally ill, but also the midwives, the penitents, single mothers, reformed prostitutes, third children, and tramps. But let’s go back to our main topic, the subject of exorcism. These days inside, or outside the boundaries of the Catholic Church one always has the impression that teaching about the devil's existence is not particularly popular in our time. This at least, has been the general mantra of the Church since the Second Vatican Council, but things are truly changing in the last few years after an “emergency” need for exorcists recently outlined, even by the mainstream media, following the surge in numbers of more people dabbling in Satanism and black magic.

Father Weller, in his vintage introduction, then cites C. S. Lewis and his Screwtape Letters, when he said something to the effect that if the little-inexperienced novice devils, about to start out on their work of seducing men, can convince men that the devil does not exist, then half the battle is already won. This is a great truth, but to say that Satan does not exist is also inappropriate theologically, for at least two reasons, explain the experts of the Southern Nazarene University:

1. On the one hand, saying Satan does not exist would mean denying the reality of the evil that plagues human life in this world. That evil is expressed, not so much through sinful choices and actions by human persons, as it is through the human institutions that so often end up creating negative and evil consequences instead of the positive, good consequences envisioned. This perverseness seems to have a will and power of its own which human beings are unable to avoid or overcome.

2. In addition, denying Satan's existence would be to claim a level of knowledge and insight that human beings do not have. It would be a very arrogant claim to a kind of all-knowing that finite creatures do not possess.

Weller then explains how this evil originated: “The first book of the Holy Bible recounts the seduction of Adam and Eve by the Prince of Darkness; but it is to the last book that we must go for his origin.” For Father Weller we need to dwell on Revelation 12:7-9: 7 Now war arose in heaven, Michael and his angels fighting against the dragon; and the dragon and his angels fought, 8 but they were defeated and there was no longer any place for them in heaven. 9 And the great dragon was thrown down, that ancient serpent, who is called the Devil and Satan, the deceiver of the whole world—he was thrown down to the earth, and his angels were thrown down with him.

[\[97\]](#)Weller, is also adamant in stating that: “Christ our Lord overcame Satan on the cross, and ever since the latter's empire is shaken. Man is delivered from the power of darkness and transferred to the kingdom of the Son. Yet the devil is not completely vanquished or trodden underfoot once for all, and the warfare against him is carried out by Christ and His Church until the end of time. Therefore, St. Paul is prompted to admonish us.”[\[98\]](#) The passage in question is Ephesians 6:12-16: 12 For we are not contending against flesh and blood, but against the principalities, against the powers, against the world rulers of this present darkness, against the spiritual hosts of wickedness in the heavenly places.. 13 Therefore take the whole armor of God, that you may be able to withstand in the evil day, and having done all, to stand. 14 Stand therefore, having girded your loins with truth, and having put on the breastplate of righteousness, 15 and having shod your feet with the equipment of the gospel of peace; 16 above all taking the shield of faith, with which you can quench all the flaming darts of the evil one.^[99]

In the introduction to The Roman Ritual, translated and published by Father Weller in 1964, we find these warnings: “Against these unclean spirits the Church uses as her weapons prayers, blessings, holy water, and other sacramentals to combat the ordinary power that the former wield over men. But apart from this ordinary and general power that Providence allows Satan there is also a special and terrible satanic influence called possession--the domination by the demon over man's bodily organs and his lower spiritual faculties. In later Christian times the term obsession is used instead of possession, the former connoting a lesser kind of demonic disturbance. That Christ reckoned with this satanic power in the same way that the Church has throughout her centuries is evident from the New Testament; see for example Mt 9:32-34, Lk 8:2, Mk 9:13 ff. To be possessed can mean that Satan has gained mastery over the will so devastatingly that sinfulness passes beyond ordinary depravity in the world, and its cause must be sought in a power above the order of nature. To be possessed can mean that Satan has beclouded the intellect, so that the light of faith cannot illuminate it. ”

Father Weller is clear on this point, “To be possessed can mean that Satan has befuddled a person's reason; in fact, simple and superstitious folk have wrongly made lunacy synonymous with a diabolical infestation. In some instances of possession recounted in the New Testament, molestation by the devil is manifested in various disturbances of the human body itself, where he has gained control over a man's sight, hearing, speech, or the physical organism in general.^[100] Christ handed down to the Church the power He once exercised over demons. The early Christians were deeply influenced by what they had learned of their Master's dealing with evil spirits, and there was on their part frequent use of the charismatic gifts of healing the sick and driving out devils. But the prayers and forms used for exorcism in the first centuries have not come down to us, outside of the ones used in baptism. Exorcism became part of the baptismal rite somewhere around 200 A.D. Thus the ancient liturgical records which date from the third century those dealing with baptism, give us the early Christians' belief about Satan and his intervention in the affairs of man.

“In the devil's hatred for God he turned on man, who is made in God's image. In consequence of original sin men are no longer temples of the Holy Spirit but rather the habitations of the demon. Not too much distinction is made between the possessed and the unbaptized. Isidore of Seville puts both on the same level, and says that exorcism is the ceremony of banishing the most wicked influence of the devil from catechumens and possessed alike.

[101] It is difficult to fix precisely the time of origin of a special rite for exorcism. The evidence would indicate that in the early Church acts of exorcism consisted mainly in the sign of the cross, invoking the name of Jesus, and renunciations of Satan and adjurations and threats uttered against him. But later on, especially in the Latin Church, the rites of exorcism become more and more numerous, until in the highly imaginative Middle Ages there is actually a profusion of them. To this period we must attribute beliefs and practices which are superstitious to an extreme. Devils are believed to exist in the guise of certain material bodies.” [102]

Fr. Philip T. Weller then talks about the possible upcoming “improvement” that will touch the rite of exorcism after the Second Vatican Council. Little did he know, they would implement something that will actually facilitate the demonic possession of our entire race. Fr. Philip T. Weller said: “No doubt the present rite for exorcism will undergo improvement and revision along with the general revision of the liturgical books recommended by Vatican Council II. But compared to former times the rite as given in the Roman Ritual today is characterized by great sobriety. Some minds might still discern traces of a certain naiveté, yet at any rate it has been purged of the unfortunate accretions of a period ruled much more by human credulity than by the unadulterated doctrine of the Church. No longer, for example, does the official text afford any grounds for the erroneous notion that diabolical possession is necessarily divine retribution visited upon a grievous sinner.

God allows this terrible evil in His wisdom without the afflicted person is necessarily at fault. It is one thing to have fallen into the slavery of sin or to be afflicted with bodily or mental infirmity, and quite another to have the devil enter into a man and take possession of him.” [\[103\]](#)

Devils and demons may have been removed from contemporary life to please our modern mindset, but they are still here to hurt. Father Weller, obviously a very skilled exorcist, aside from being an excellent translator, understood in the 60s that Demonic possession can be “confounded with epilepsy and other mental or psychic disorders. Rituals of this time prescribe that the subject remains in the presence of the exorcist throughout the period of exorcism, that he observe a strict fast and limit his diet to blessed water, salt, and vegetables, that he wear new clothes, that he abstain from the marital act. No less complicated are the injunctions for the exorcist. And by the time we come to the fourteenth century magical practices have been introduced into the ceremonies.” [\[104\]](#)

What? “Magical practices have been introduced”?! Astonishingly, despite the best efforts of the Church to erase all trace of any Occult or Magickal teachings of Jesus, his secret teachings nonetheless survived relatively intact in the solemn exorcisms, that according to the Canon law of the Church, can be exercised today only by an ordained priest (or higher prelate), with the express permission of the local bishop, but it was not always this way.

In the 15th century, Catholic exorcists were both priestly and layman, since every Christian since the time of Jesus was considered as having the power to command demons and drive them out in the name of Jesus Christ using his Magical force. Exorcists used the Benedictine formula “Vade retro satana” (“Step back, Satan”) back in those days.

By the late 1960s, Roman Catholic exorcisms were seldom performed in the United States, but by the mid-1970s, after the arrival of the film “The Exorcist,” maverick priests who often belonged to fringe churches, or Christian sects, and even “wandering” Gnostic Bishops, connected to the Illuminati, and the O.T.O., took advantage of the increase in demand and started performing exorcisms outside their lodges with little or no official sanction by the Church of Rome, or any Church in the US. I say, “outside their lodges” because I witnessed for myself Illuminati practicing exorcisms inside their lodges, as I once did myself.

The exorcisms that they performed were according to Contemporary American Religion published in 1999 after the revision: “clandestine, underground affairs, undertaken without the approval of the Catholic Church and without the rigorous psychological screening that the church required. In subsequent years, the Church took more aggressive action on the demon-expulsion front. The practice of exorcism without consent from the Catholic Church is what prompted the official guidelines from 1614 to be amended. The amendment established the procedure that clergy members and each individual who claims to be impacted by demonic possession must follow. This includes the rule that the potentially possessed individual must be evaluated by a medical professional before any other acts are taken. The primary reason for this action is to eliminate any suspicion of mental illness, before the next steps of the procedure are taken. Since demonic possession was extremely rare, and mental health issues are often mistaken for demonic possession, the Vatican requires that each diocese have a specially trained priest who is able to diagnose demonic possession and perform exorcisms when necessary.”[\[105\]](#)

I completely understand the reasons that prompted the amendment, but a new problem arises today, in light of the present spiritual and moral corruption of the Catholic Church. At this point, Catholics should actually ask the Vatican to reinstate the possibility for lay people of high spiritual standards to practice exorcisms. This way, the Church can go back to the official guidelines from 1614 and give some more Christians the possibility of conducting valid exorcisms as well. The alternative to this solution is to leave this battle for the survival of the human soul in the hands of a spiritually dead and a corrupt institution like the Catholic Church, in the very hands of the enemy we are trying to fight, being the devil himself. Pope Francis is leading the whole world astray towards the Antichrist, helped by his “Legion” of multidimensional demonic entities. We need to use every spiritual weapon at our disposal including the ancient Rite of Exorcism.

The Major Rite of Exorcism and the 21 untouched instructions

The following special adaptation of the Rituale Romanum Exorcism Rite, was originally designed for use by the clergy of the Roman Catholic Church. While slightly altered and in a vernacular language, the ritual's substance remains intact and powerful and still demands a solemn, sincere, and faithful deliverance such as what one should expect from the most pious of priests if you ever wish to attempt using it as a lay person.

However, remember that the “official” language of the Catholic Church is Latin. The simple fact that the exorcism prayer is in Latin—even with incorrect pronunciation can be a powerful weapon launched against the devil and be double as effective. Because Latin as a sacred liturgical language is always odious to the demon or demons we are trying to expel. It reminds them that there is a human-divine alliance established by Jesus Christ for his destruction, and they are never happy when it comes against them in the highly un-diplomatic language of heaven. To me, it is proof positive that the Church in its original format had before the Second Vatican Council the Holy Spirit at the very core of her mystical heart, not the Square and Compass of Freemasonry or the emblem of the Society of Jesus. And even with the most improbable bad Latin, bad translations and liturgical malfeasance, a text was produced that these demons hate. How much more effective are we against the devil when we use the magnificent beauty of the Church’s ancient rites un-“revised?”

The Rite of Exorcism, translated by Fr. Philip T. Weller, and the General Rules Concerning Exorcism issued at the time by the Catholic Church for the 1964 edition of this translation, are provided here in their original form. Because even if they were later updated in De Exorcismis et Supplicationibus Quibusdam, published in 1999, I believe the advice and instructions offered at the time, should be followed closely, for the protection of all parties and the successful expulsion of the evil. Deviations from the most important advisories are at great peril and risk of the gravest of harms, and according to the current Canon law of the Church, this rite should be exercised only by an ordained priest (or higher prelate), with the express permission of the local bishop.

For Father Weller writing in the 60s: “The general rules for exorcism that follow are a clear indication that we have come a long way from the superstitious notions that prevailed in the era of the Middle Ages. Noteworthy among these rules are the ones that direct that the parties concerned should have recourse to the holy sacraments, and that the sacred words of Holy Writ should be employed rather than any forms devised by the exorcist or someone else. The instructions given below indicate that the Church has carefully guarded the extraordinary power over Satan committed to her by Christ, and that Catholic exorcism is poles removed from any form of dabbling in the spirit world which springs from human chicanery or malice.”

These are the General Rules Concerning Exorcism present in the old ritual translated in 1964. They consist of 21 paragraphs of instructions to the exorcist about how you should conduct an exorcism. These guidelines by no means substituted for an actual on-the-job experience of exorcism but at least made an attempt to give the priest some understanding of the dynamics of spiritual warfare and of the prudence needed to conduct the battle. Regretfully, twelve of the 21 instructions were deleted in 1999. Some were replaced with other concerns, not all bad, and others were just left out altogether to facilitate the sabotage of the Catholic Church. I consider these particular omissions a most egregious loss to the ritual so here we go with the original 60s instructions.

1. A priest—one who is expressly and particularly authorized by the Ordinary—when he intends to perform an exorcism over persons tormented by the devil, must be properly distinguished for his piety, prudence, and integrity of life. He should fulfill this devout undertaking in all constancy and humility, being utterly immune to any striving for human aggrandizement, and relying, not on his own, but on the divine power. Moreover, he ought to be of mature years, and revered not alone for his office but for his moral qualities.
2. In order to exercise his ministry rightly, he should resort to a great deal more study of the matter (which has to be passed over here for the sake of brevity), by examining approved authors and cases from experience; on the other hand, let him carefully observe the few more important points enumerated here.

3. Especially, he should not believe too readily that a person is possessed by an evil spirit; but he ought to ascertain the signs by which a person possessed can be distinguished from one who is suffering from some illness, especially one of a psychological nature. [\[106\]](#) Signs of possession may be the following: ability to speak with some facility in a strange tongue or to understand it when spoken by another; the faculty of divulging future and hidden events; display of powers which are beyond the subject's age and natural condition; and various other indications which, when taken together as a whole, build up the evidence.

4. In order to understand these matters better, let him inquire of the person possessed, following one or the other act of exorcism, what the latter experienced in his body or soul while the exorcism was being performed, and to learn also what particular words in the form had a more intimidating effect upon the devil, so that hereafter these words may be employed with greater stress and frequency.

5. He will be on his guard against the arts and subterfuges which the evil spirits are wont to use in deceiving the exorcist. For oft times they give deceptive answers and make it difficult to understand them, so that the exorcist might tire and give up, or so it might appear that the afflicted one is in no wise possessed by the devil.

6. Once in a while, after they are already recognized, they conceal themselves and leave the body practically free from every molestation, so that the victim believes himself completely delivered. Yet the exorcist may not desist until he sees the signs of deliverance.

7. At times, moreover, the evil spirits place whatever obstacles they can in the way, so that the patient may not submit to exorcism, or they try to convince him that his affliction is a natural one. Meanwhile, during the exorcism, they cause him to fall asleep, and dangle some illusion before him, while they seclude themselves, so that the afflicted one appears to be freed.

8. Some reveal a crime which has been committed and the perpetrators thereof, as well as the means of putting an end to it. Yet the afflicted person must beware of having recourse on this account to sorcerers or necromancers or to any parties except the ministers of the Church, or of making use of any superstitious or forbidden practice.

9. Sometimes the devil will leave the possessed person in peace and even allow him to receive the holy Eucharist, to make it appear that he has departed. In fact, the arts and frauds of the evil one for deceiving a man are innumerable. For this reason the exorcist must be on his guard not to fall into this trap.

10. Therefore, he will be mindful of the words of our Lord (Mt 17:20), to the effect that there is a certain type of evil spirit who cannot be driven out except by prayer and fasting. Therefore let him avail himself of these two means above all for imploring the divine assistance in expelling demons, after the example of the holy fathers; and not only himself, but let him induce others, as far as possible, to do the same.

11. If it can be done conveniently the possessed person should be led to church or to some other sacred and worthy place, where the exorcism will be held, away from the crowd. But if the person is ill, or for any valid reason, the exorcism may take place in a private home.

12. The subject, if in good mental and physical health, should be exhorted to implore God's help, to fast, and to fortify himself by frequent reception of penance and holy communion, at the discretion of the exorcist. And in the course of the exorcism he should be fully recollected, with his intention fixed on God, whom he should entreat with firm faith and in all humility. And if he is all the more grievously tormented, he ought to bear this patiently, never doubting the divine assistance.

13. He ought to have a crucifix at hand or somewhere in sight. If relics of the saints are available, they are to be applied in a reverent way to the breast or the head of the person possessed (the relics must be properly and securely encased and covered). One will see to it that these sacred objects are not treated improperly or that no injury is done by the evil spirit. However, one should not hold the holy Eucharist over the head of the person or in any way apply it to his body, owing to the danger of desecration.

14. The exorcist must not digress into senseless prattle nor ask superfluous questions or such as are prompted by curiosity, particularly if they pertain to future and hidden matters, all of which have nothing to do with his office.

Instead, he will bid the unclean spirit to keep silence and answer only when asked. Neither ought he to give any credence to the devil if the latter maintains that he is the spirit of some saint or of a deceased party, or even claims to be a good angel.

15. But necessary questions are, for example: the number and name of the spirits inhabiting the patient, the time when they entered into him, the cause thereof, and the like. As for all jesting, laughing, and nonsense on the part of the evil spirit—the exorcist should prevent it or condemn it, and he will exhort the bystanders (whose number must be very limited) to pay no attention to such goings on; neither are they to put any question to the subject. Rather they should intercede for him to God in all humility and urgency.

16. Let the exorcist pronounce the exorcism in a commanding and authoritative voice, and at the same time with great confidence, humility, and fervor; and when he sees that the spirit is sorely vexed, then he oppresses and threatens all the more. If he notices that the person afflicted is experiencing a disturbance in some part of his body or an acute pain or swelling appears in some part, he traces the sign of the cross over that place and sprinkles it with holy water, which he must have at hand for this purpose.

17. He will pay attention as to what words in particular cause the evil spirits to tremble, repeating them the more frequently. And when he comes to a threatening expression, he recurs to it again and again, always increasing the punishment. If he perceives that he is making progress, let him persist for two, three, four hours, and longer if he can, until victory is attained.

18. The exorcist should guard against giving or recommending any medicine to the patient, but should leave this care to physicians.

19. While performing the exorcism over a woman, he ought always to assist him several women of good repute, who will hold on to the person when she is harassed by the evil spirit. These assistants ought if possible to be close relatives of the subject and for the sake of decency the exorcist will avoid saying or doing anything which might prove an occasion of evil thoughts to himself or to the others.

20. During the exorcism he shall preferably employ words from Holy Writ, rather than forms of his own or of someone else. He shall, moreover, command the devil to tell whether he is detained in that body by necromancy, by evil signs or amulets; and if the one possessed has taken the latter by mouth, he should be made to vomit them; if he has them concealed on his person, he should expose them; and when discovered they must be burned. Moreover, the person should be exhorted to reveal all his temptations to the exorcist.

21. Finally, after the possessed one has been freed, let him be admonished to guard himself carefully against falling into sin, so as to afford no opportunity to the evil spirit of returning, lest the last state of that man becomes worse than the former.

The exorcist delegated by the Ordinary to perform this office should first go to confession or at least elicit an act of contrition, and, if convenient, offer the holy Sacrifice of the Mass, and implore God's help in other fervent prayers. He vests in surplice and purple stole. Having before him the person possessed (who should be bound if there is any danger), he traces the sign of the cross over him, over himself, and the bystanders, and then sprinkles all of them with holy water. After this the exorcist kneels and says the Litany of the Saints, exclusive of the prayers which follow it. All present are to make the responses...

Psalm 53

1 For the leader; according to Mahalath. A maskil of David. 2 Fools say in their hearts, "There is no God." Their deeds are loathsome and corrupt; not one does what is right. 3 God looks down from heaven upon the human race, To see if even one is wise, if even one seeks God. 4 All have gone astray; all alike are perverse. Not one does what is right, not even one. 5 Will these evildoers never learn? They devour my people as they devour bread; they do not call upon God. 6 They have good reason to fear, though now they do not fear. For God will certainly scatter the bones of the godless. They will surely be put to shame, for God has rejected them. 7 Oh, that from Zion might come the deliverance of Israel, That Jacob may rejoice and Israel be glad when God restores the people!

After the psalm the exorcist continues:

Exorcist: Save your servant.

All: Who trusts in you, my God.

Exorcist: Let him (her) find in you, Lord, a fortified tower.

All: In the face of the enemy.

Exorcist: Let the enemy have no power over him (her).

All: And the son of iniquity be powerless to harm him (her).

Exorcist: Lord, send him (her) aid from your holy place.

All: And watch over him (her) from Sion.

Exorcist: Lord, heed my prayer.

All: And let my cry be heard by you.

Exorcist: The Lord be with you.

All: May He also be with you.

Exorcist: Let us pray. God, whose nature is ever merciful and forgiving, accept our prayer that this servant of yours, bound by the fetters of sin, may be pardoned by your loving kindness.

Holy Lord, almighty Father, everlasting God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who once and for all consigned that fallen and apostate tyrant to the flames of hell, who sent your only- begotten Son into the world to crush that roaring lion; hasten to our call for help and snatch from ruination and from the clutches of the noonday devil this human being made in your image and likeness. Strike terror, Lord, into the beast now laying waste your vineyard. Fill your servants with courage to fight manfully against that reprobate dragon, lest he despise those who put their trust in you, and say with Pharaoh of old: "I know not God, nor will I set Israel free." Let your mighty hand cast him out of your servant, N., † so he may no longer hold captive this person whom it pleased you to make in your image, and to redeem through your Son; who lives and reigns with you, in the unity of the Holy Spirit, God, forever and ever.

All: Amen.I

2. Then the exorcist commands the demon as follows:

I command you, unclean spirit, whoever you are, along with all your minions now attacking this servant of God, by the mysteries of the incarnation, passion, resurrection, and ascension of our Lord Jesus Christ, by the descent of the Holy Spirit, by the coming of our Lord for judgment, that you tell me by some sign your name, and the day and hour of your departure. I command you, moreover, to obey me to the letter, I who am a minister of God despite my unworthiness; nor shall you be emboldened to harm in any way this creature of God, or the bystanders, or any of their possessions.

3. Next the exorcist reads over the possessed person these selections from the Gospel, or at least one of them.

A Lesson from the holy Gospel according to St. John

As the exorcist says these opening words he/she signs him/herself and the possessed on the brow, lips, and breast...

John 1:1-14

1 In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. 2 He was in the beginning with God. 3 All things came to be through him, and without him nothing came to be. What came to be 4 through him was life, and this life was the light of the human race; 5 the light shines in the darkness, and the darkness has not overcome it. 6 A man named John was sent from God. 7 He came for testimony, to testify to the light, so that all might believe through him. 8 He was not the light, but came to testify to the light. 9 The true light, which enlightens everyone, was coming into the world. 10 He was in the world, and the world came to be through him, but the world did not know him. 11 He came to what was his own, but his own people did not accept him. 12 But to those who did accept him he gave power to become children of God, to those who believe in his name, 13 who were born not by natural generation nor by human choice nor by a man's decision but of God. 14 And the Word became flesh and made his dwelling among us, and we saw his glory, the glory as of the Father's only Son, full of grace and truth.

A Lesson from the holy Gospel according to St. Mark

Mark 16:15-18

15 He said to them, "Go into the whole world and proclaim the gospel to every creature. 16 Whoever believes and is baptized will be saved; whoever does not believe will be condemned. 17 These signs will accompany those who believe: in my name they will drive out demons, they will speak new languages. 18 They will pick up serpents [with their hands], and if they drink any deadly thing, it will not harm them. They will lay hands on the sick, and they will recover."

A Lesson from the holy Gospel according to St. Luke

Luke 10:17-20

17 The seventy-two returned rejoicing, and said, "Lord, even the demons are subject to us because of your name." 18 Jesus said, "I have observed Satan fall like lightning from the sky.” 19 Behold, I have given you the power “to tread upon serpents” and scorpions and upon the full force of the enemy and nothing will harm you. 20 Nevertheless, do not rejoice because the spirits are subject to you, but rejoice because your names are written in heaven.

A Lesson from the holy Gospel according to St. Luke

Luke 11:14-22

14 He was driving out a demon [that was] mute, and when the demon had gone out, the mute person spoke and the crowds were amazed. 15 Some of them said, “By the power of Beelzebul, the prince of demons, he drives out demons.” 16 Others, to test him, asked him for a sign from heaven. 17 But he knew their thoughts and said to them, “Every kingdom divided against itself will be laid waste and house will fall against house.” 18 And if Satan is divided against himself, how will his kingdom stand? For you say that it is by Beelzebul that I drive out demons. 19 If I, then, drive out demons by Beelzebul, by whom do your own people drive them out? Therefore they will be your judges. 20 But if it is by the finger of God that [I] drive out demons, then the kingdom of God has come upon you. 21 When a strong man fully armed guards his palace, his possessions are safe. 22 But when one stronger than he attacks and overcomes him, he takes away the armor on which he relied and distributes the spoils.

Exorcist: Lord, heed my prayer.

All: And let my cry be heard by you.

Exorcist: The Lord be with you.

All: May He also be with you.

Exorcist: Let us pray. Almighty Lord, Word of God the Father, Jesus Christ, God and Lord of all creation; who gave to your holy apostles the power to tramp underfoot serpents and scorpions; who along with the other mandates to work miracles was pleased to grant them the authority to say: "Depart, you devils!" and by whose might Satan was made to fall from heaven like lightning; I humbly call on your holy name in fear and trembling, asking that you grant me, your unworthy servant, pardon for all my sins, steadfast faith, and the power—supported by your mighty arm—to confront with confidence and resolution this cruel demon. I ask this through you, Jesus Christ, our Lord and God, who are coming to judge both the living and the dead and the world by fire.

All: Amen.

4. Next he makes the sign of the cross over himself and the one possessed, places the end of the stole on the latter's neck, and, putting his right hand on the latter's head, he says the following in accents filled with confidence and faith:

Exorcist: See the cross of the Lord; begone, you hostile powers!

All: The stem of David, the lion of Juda's tribe has conquered.

Exorcist: Lord, heed my prayer.

All: And let my cry be heard by you.

Exorcist: The Lord be with you.

All: May He also be with you.

Exorcist: Let us pray. God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, I appeal to your holy name, humbly begging your kindness, that you graciously grant me help against this and every unclean spirit now tormenting this creature of yours; through Christ our Lord.

All: Amen.

Exorcism

Exorcist: I cast you out, unclean spirit, along with every satanic power of the enemy, every spectre from hell, and all your fell companions; in the name of our Lord Jesus † Christ Begone and stay far from this creature of God. † For it is He who commands you, He who flung you headlong from the heights of heaven into the depths of hell. It is He who commands you, He who once stilled the sea and the wind and the storm. Hearken, therefore, and tremble in fear, Satan, you enemy of the faith, you foe of the human race, you begetter of death, you robber of life, you corrupter of justice, you root of all evil and vice? seducer of men, betrayer of the nations, instigator of envy, font of avarice, fomenter of discord, author of pain and sorrow. Why, then, do you stand and resist, knowing as you must that Christ the Lord brings your plans to nothing? Fear Him, who in Isaac was offered in sacrifice, in Joseph sold into bondage, slain as the paschal lamb, crucified as man, yet triumphed over the powers of hell. (The three signs of the cross which follow are traced on the brow of the possessed person). Begone, then, in the name of the Father, † and of the Son, † and of the Holy † Spirit. Give place to the Holy Spirit by this sign of the holy † cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, who lives and reigns with the Father and the Holy Spirit, God, forever and ever.

All: Amen.

Exorcist: Lord, heed my prayer.

All: And let my cry be heard by you.

Exorcist: The Lord be with you.

All: May He also be with you.

Exorcist: Let us pray. God, Creator and defender of the human race, who made man in your own image, look down in pity on this your servant, N., now in the toils of the unclean spirit, now caught up in the fearsome threats of man's ancient enemy, sworn foe of our race, who befuddles and stupefies the human mind, throws it into terror, overwhelms it with fear and panic. Repel, O Lord, the devil's power, break asunder his snares and traps, put the unholy tempter to flight. By the sign † (on the brow) of your name, let your servant be protected in mind and body. (The three crosses which follow are traced on the breast of the possessed person). Keep watch over the inmost recesses of his (her) † heart; rule over his (her) † emotions; strengthen his (her) † will. Let vanish from his (her) soul the tempting's of the mighty adversary. Graciously grant, O Lord, as we call on your holy name, that the evil spirit, who hitherto terrorized over us, may himself retreat in terror and defeat, so that this servant of yours may sincerely and steadfastly render you the service which is your due; through Christ our Lord.

All: Amen.

Exorcism

Exorcist: I adjure you, ancient serpent, by the judge of the living and the dead, by your Creator, by the Creator of the whole universe, by Him who has the power to consign you to hell, to depart forthwith in fear, along with your savage minions, from this servant of God, N., who seeks refuge in the fold of the Church. I adjure you again, † (on the brow) not by my weakness but by the might of the Holy Spirit, to depart from this servant of God, N., whom almighty God has made in His image. Yield, therefore, yield not to my own person but to the minister of Christ. For it is the power of Christ that compels you, who brought you low by His cross. Tremble before that mighty arm that broke asunder the dark prison walls and led souls forth to light. May the trembling that afflicts this human frame, † (on the breast) the fear that afflicts this image (on the brow) of God, descend on you. Make no resistance nor delay in departing from this man, for it has pleased Christ to dwell in man. Do not think of despising my command because you know me to be a great sinner. It is God † Himself who commands you; the majestic Christ † who commands you. God the Father † commands you; God the Son † commands you; God the Holy † Spirit commands you. The mystery of the cross † commands you. The faith of the holy apostles Peter and Paul and of all the saints commands † you. The blood of the martyrs commands you. The continence of the confessors commands you. The devout prayers of all holy men and women command you. The saving mysteries of our Christian faith command † you.

Depart, then, transgressor. Depart, seducer, full of lies and cunning, foe of virtue, persecutor of the innocent. Give place, abominable creature, give way, you monster, give way to Christ, in whom you found none of your works. For He has already stripped you of your powers and laid waste your kingdom, bound you prisoner and plundered your weapons. He has cast you forth into the outer darkness, where everlasting ruin awaits you and your abettors. To what purpose do you insolently resist? To what purpose do you brazenly refuse? For you are guilty before almighty God, whose laws you have transgressed. You are guilty before His Son, our Lord Jesus Christ, whom you presumed to tempt, whom you dared to nail to the cross. You are guilty before the whole human race, to whom you proffered by your enticements the poisoned cup of death.

Therefore, I adjure you, profligate dragon, in the name of the spotless † Lamb, who has trodden down the asp and the basilisk, and overcome the lion and the dragon, to depart from this man (woman) . † (on the brow), to depart from the Church of God † (signing the bystanders). Tremble and flee, as we call on the name of the Lord, before whom the denizens of hell cower, to whom the heavenly Virtues and Powers and Dominations are subject, whom the Cherubim and Seraphim praise with unending cries as they sing: Holy, holy, holy, Lord God of Sabbath. The Word made flesh † commands you; the Virgin's Son † commands you; Jesus † of Nazareth commands you, who once, when you despised His disciples, forced you to flee in shameful defeat from a man; and when He had cast you out you did not even dare, except by His leave, to enter into a herd of swine. And now as I adjure you in His † name, begone from this man (woman) who is His creature. It is futile to resist His † will. It is hard for you to kick against the † goad. The longer you delay, the heavier your punishment shall be; for it is not men you are condemning, but rather Him who rules the living and the dead, who is coming to judge both the living and the dead and the world by fire.

All: Amen.

Exorcist: Lord, heed my prayer.

All: And let my cry be heard by you.

Exorcist: The Lord be with you.

All: May He also be with you.

Exorcist: Let us pray. God of heaven and earth, God of the angels and archangels, God of the prophets and apostles, God of the martyrs and virgins, God who have power to bestow life after death and rest after toil; for there is no other God than you, nor can there be another true God beside you, the Creator of heaven and earth, who are truly a King, whose kingdom is without end; I humbly entreat your glorious majesty to deliver this servant of yours from the unclean spirits; through Christ our Lord.

All: Amen.

Exorcism

Exorcist: Therefore, I adjure you every unclean spirit, every spectre from hell, every satanic power, in the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, who was led into the desert after His baptism by John to vanquish you in your citadel, to cease your assaults against the creature whom He has formed from the slime of the earth for His own honor and glory; to quail before wretched man, seeing in him the image of almighty God, rather than his state of human frailty. Yield then to God, † who by His servant, Moses, cast you and your malice, in the person of Pharaoh and his army, into the depths of the sea. Yield to God, † who, by the singing of holy canticles on the part of David, His faithful servant, banished you from the heart of King Saul. Yield to God, † who condemned you in the person of Judas Iscariot, the traitor. For He now flails you with His divine scourges, He in whose sight you and your legions once cried out: "What have we to do with you, Jesus, Son of the Most High God? Have you come to torture us before the time?" Now He is driving you back into the everlasting fire, He who at the end of time will say to the wicked: "Depart from me, you accursed, into the everlasting fire which has been prepared for the devil and his angels." For you, O evil one, and for your followers there will be worms that never die. An unquenchable fire stands ready for you and for your minions, you prince of accursed murderers, father of lechery, instigator of sacrileges, model of vileness, promoter of heresies, inventor of every obscenity.

Depart, then, † impious one, depart, † accursed one, depart with all your deceits, for God has willed that man should be His temple. Why do you still linger here? Give honor to God the Father † almighty, before whom every knee must bow. Give place to the Lord Jesus † Christ, who shed His most precious blood for man. Give place to the Holy † Spirit, who by His blessed apostle Peter openly struck you down in the person of Simon Magus; who cursed your lies in Annas and Saphira; who smote you in King Herod because he had not given honor to God; who by His apostle Paul afflicted you with the night of blindness in the magician Elyma, and by the mouth of the same apostle bade you to go out of Pythonissa, the soothsayer. Begone, † now! Begone, † seducer! Your place is in solitude; your abode is in the nest of serpents; get down and crawl with them. This matter brooks no delay; for see, the Lord, the ruler comes quickly, kindling fire before Him, and it will run on ahead of Him and encompass His enemies in flames. You might delude man, but God you cannot mock. It is He who casts you out, from whose sight nothing is hidden. It is He who repels you, to whose might all things are subject. It is He who expels you, He who has prepared everlasting hellfire for you and your angels, from whose mouth shall come a sharp sword, who is coming to judge both the living and the dead and the world by fire.

All: Amen.

5. All the above may be repeated as long as necessary, until the one possessed has been fully freed.

6. It will also help to say devoutly and often over the afflicted person the Our Father, Hail Mary, and the Creed, as well as any of the prayers given below.

Our Father

Exorcist: Our Father,

Who art in heaven,

hallowed be Thy name;

Thy kingdom come;

Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven.

Give us this day our daily bread;

and forgive us our trespasses

as we forgive those who trespass against us; and lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil.

All: Amen.

Hail Mary

Exorcist: Hail Mary, full of grace. The Lord is with thee.

Blessed art thou amongst women, and blessed is the fruit of thy womb, Jesus.

Holy Mary, Mother of God,

pray for us sinners,

now and at the hour of our death.

All: Amen.

The Apostle's Creed

Exorcist: I believe in God,

the Father Almighty,

Creator of Heaven and earth;

and in Jesus Christ, His only Son, Our Lord,

Who was conceived by the Holy Spirit,

born of the Virgin Mary, suffered under Pontius Pilate, was crucified, died, and was buried.

He descended into Hell.

The third day He arose again from the dead;

He ascended into Heaven,

sitteth at the right hand of God, the Father Almighty;

from thence He shall come to judge the living and the dead.

I believe in the Holy Spirit,

the holy Catholic Church,

the communion of saints,

the forgiveness of sins,

the resurrection of the body, and the life everlasting.

All: Amen.

Canticle of Our Lady

Exorcist: My soul glorifies the Lord;

my spirit rejoices in God, my Saviour.

*He looks on his servant in her nothingness;
henceforth all generations will call me blessed.*

The Almighty works marvels for me;

Holy is his name.

Holy is his name.

Holy is his name.

His mercy is from age to age on those who fear him.

He puts forth his arm in strength and scatters the proud hearted.

He casts the mighty from their thrones, and he raises the lowly.

He fills the starving with good things, sends the rich away empty.

Holy is his name.

Holy is his name.

*He protects Israel his servant,
remembering his great mercy,
the mercy promised to our father, to Abraham and his sons forever.*

Alleluia, alleluia...

All: Amen.

Lesser Doxology: Exorcist: Glory to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Spirit: as it was in the beginning, is now, and will be for ever.

All: Amen.

Benedictus (Canticle of Zachary)

Exorcist: Blessed Be the Lord, the God of Israël, because He has visited and wrought redemption for His people. And has raised up a horn of salvation for us in the house of David His servant, As He promised through the mouths of His holy ones, the prophets from of old: Salvation from our enemies and from the hands of all our foes. He has fulfilled His kindness to our fathers, and has been mindful of His holy covenant. In the oath to Abraham our father, by which He swore to grant us, That, delivered from the hands of our enemies, we should serve Him without fear. In holiness and justice before Him all our days.

And thou, O child, shall be called the prophet of the Most High; for thou shalt go before the Lord to prepare His ways, To give His people knowledge of salvation through forgiveness of their sins, Because of the compassionate kindness of our God with which the Orient from on high will visit us, To shine on those who sit in darkness and the shadow of death, to guide our feet in the way of peace.

Glory be to the Father and to the Son and to the Holy Ghost. As it was in the beginning, is now, and ever shall be, world without end.

All: Amen.

Lesser Doxology: Exorcist: Glory to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Spirit: as it was in the beginning, is now, and will be for ever.

All: Amen.

Athanasian Creed

Exorcist: *Whoever wills to be saved * must before all else hold fast to the Catholic faith.*

All: Unless one keeps this faith whole and untarnished, * without doubt he will perish forever.

Exorcist: *Now this is the Catholic faith: * that we worship one God in Trinity, and Trinity in unity;*

All: Neither confusing the Persons one with the other, * nor making a distinction in their nature.

Exorcist: *For the Father is a distinct Person; and so is the Son, * and so is the Holy Spirit.*

All: Yet the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit possess one Godhead, * co-equal glory, co-eternal majesty.

Exorcist: *As the Father is, so is the Son, * so also is the Holy Spirit.*

All: The Father is uncreated, the Son is uncreated, * the Holy Spirit is uncreated.

Exorcist: *The Father is infinite, the Son is infinite, * the Holy Spirit is infinite.*

All: The Father is eternal, the Son is eternal, * the Holy Spirit is eternal.

Exorcist: *Yet they are not three eternal's, * but one eternal God.*

All: Even as they are not three uncreated, or three infinite's, * but one uncreated and one infinite God.

Exorcist: *So likewise the Father is almighty, the Son is almighty, * the Holy Spirit is almighty.*

All: Yet they are not three almighties, * but they are the one Almighty.

Exorcist: *Thus the Father is God, the Son is God, * the Holy Spirit is God.*

All: Yet they are not three gods, * but one God.

Exorcist: *Thus the Father is Lord, the Son is Lord, * the Holy Spirit is Lord.*

All: Yet there are not three lords, * but one Lord.

Exorcist: *For just as Christian truth compels us to profess that each Person is individually God and Lord, * so does the Catholic religion forbid us to hold that there are three gods or lords.*

All: The Father was not made by any power; * He was neither created nor begotten.

Exorcist: *The Son is from the Father alone, * neither created nor made, but begotten.*

All: The Holy Spirit is from the Father and the Son, * neither made nor created nor begotten, but He proceeds.

Exorcist: *So there is one Father, not three; one Son, not three; * one Holy Spirit, not three.*

All: And in this Trinity one Person is not earlier or later, nor is one greater or less; * but all three Persons are co-eternal and co-equal.

Exorcist: *In every way, then, as already affirmed, * unity in Trinity and Trinity in unity is to be worshipped.*

All: Whoever, then, wills to be saved * must assent to this doctrine of the Blessed Trinity.

Exorcist: *But it is necessary for everlasting salvation * that one also firmly believe in the incarnation of our Lord Jesus Christ.*

All: True faith, then, requires us to believe and profess * that our Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of God, is both God and man.

Exorcist: *He is God, begotten of the substance of the Father from eternity; * He is man, born in time of the substance of His Mother.*

All: He is perfect God, and perfect man * subsisting in a rational soul and a human body.

Exorcist: *He is equal to the Father in His divine nature, * but less than the Father in His human nature as such.*

All: And though He is God and man, * yet He is the one Christ, not two;

Exorcist: *One, however, not by any change of divinity into flesh, * but by the act of God assuming a human nature. All: He is one only, not by a mixture of substance, * but by the oneness of His Person. For, somewhat as the rational soul and the body compose one man, * so Christ is one Person who is both God and man;*

All: Who suffered for our salvation, who descended into hell, * who rose again the third day from the dead;

Exorcist: *Who ascended into heaven, and sits at the right hand of God the Father almighty, * from there He shall come to judge both the living and the dead.*

All: At His coming all men shall rise again in their bodies, * and shall give an account of their works.

Exorcist: *And those who have done good shall enter into everlasting life, * but those who have done evil into ever lasting fire.*

All: All this is Catholic faith, * and unless one believes it truly and firmly one cannot be saved.

Exorcist: Glory be to the Father

All: As it was in the beginning.

Here follow a large number of psalms which may be used at the exorcist's discretion but are not a necessary part of the rite. Some of them occur in other parts of the Ritual and are so indicated; the others may be taken from the Psalter. Psalm 90; psalm 67; psalm 69; psalm 53; psalm 117; psalm 34; psalm 30; psalm 21, psalm 3; psalm 10; psalm 12.

Prayer Following Deliverance

Exorcist: Almighty God, we beg you to keep the evil spirit from further molesting this servant of yours, and to keep him far away, never to return. At your command, O Lord, may the goodness and peace of our Lord Jesus Christ, our Redeemer, take possession of this man (woman). May we no longer fear any evil since the Lord is with us; who lives and reigns with you, in the unity of the Holy Spirit, God, forever and ever.

All: Amen.

Chapter III: Exorcism of Satan and the Fallen Angels

Whereas the preceding rite of exorcism is designated for a particular person, the present one is for general use—to combat the power of the evil spirits over a community or locality.

The following exorcism can be used by bishops, as well as by priests who have this authorization from their Ordinary.

Exorcist: In the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit.

All: Amen.

Prayer to St. Michael the Archangel

Exorcist: St. Michael the Archangel, illustrious leader of the heavenly army, defend us in the battle against principalities and powers, against the rulers of the world of darkness and the spirit of wickedness in high places. Come to the rescue of mankind, whom God has made in His own image and likeness, and purchased from Satan's tyranny at so great a price. Holy Church venerates you as her patron and guardian. The Lord has entrusted to you the task of leading the souls of the redeemed to heavenly blessedness. Entreat the Lord of peace to cast Satan down under our feet, so as to keep him from further holding man captive and doing harm to the Church. Carry our prayers up to God's throne, that the mercy of the Lord may quickly come and lay hold of the beast, the serpent of old, Satan and his demons, casting him in chains into the abyss, so that he can no longer seduce the nations.

Exorcism

Exorcist: In the name of Jesus Christ, our Lord and God, by the intercession of Mary, spotless Virgin and Mother of God, of St. Michael the Archangel, of the blessed apostles Peter and Paul, and of all the saints, and by the authority residing in our holy ministry, we steadfastly proceed to combat the onslaught of the wily enemy.

Psalm 67

Exorcist: *God arises; His enemies are scattered, * and those who hate Him flee before Him.*

All: As smoke is driven away, so are they driven; * as wax melts before the fire, so the wicked perish before God.

Exorcist: See the cross of the Lord; begone, you hostile powers!

All: The stem of David, the lion of Juda's tribe has conquered.

Exorcist: May your mercy, Lord, remain with us always.

All: For we put our whole trust in you.

Exorcist: We cast you out, every unclean spirit, every satanic power, every onslaught of the infernal adversary, every legion, every diabolical group and sect, in the name and by the power of our Lord Jesus Christ. We command you, begone and fly far from the Church of God, from the souls made by God in His image and redeemed by the precious blood of the divine Lamb. No longer dare, cunning serpent, to deceive the human race, to persecute God's Church, to strike God's elect and to sift them as wheat. For the Most High God commands you, He to whom you once proudly presumed yourself equal; He who wills all men to be saved and come to the knowledge of the truth. God the Father commands you. God the Son commands you. God the Holy Spirit commands you. Christ, the eternal Word of God made flesh, commands you, who humbled Himself, becoming obedient even unto death, to save our race from the perdition wrought by your envy; who founded His Church upon a firm rock, declaring that the gates of hell should never prevail against her, and that He would remain with her all days, even to the end of the world. The sacred mystery of the cross commands you, along with the power of all mysteries of Christian faith. The exalted Virgin Mary, Mother of God, commands you, who in her lowliness crushed your proud head from the first moment of her Immaculate Conception. The faith of the holy apostles Peter and Paul and the other apostles commands you. The blood of martyrs and the devout prayers of all holy men and women command you.

Therefore, accursed dragon and every diabolical legion, we adjure you by the living God, by the true God, by the holy God, by God, who so loved the world that He gave His only-begotten Son, that whoever believes in Him might not perish but have everlasting life; to cease deluding human creatures and filling them with the poison of everlasting damnation; to desist from harming the Church and hampering her freedom. Begone, Satan, father and master of lies, enemy of man's welfare. Give place to Christ, in whom you found none of your works. Give way to the one, holy, catholic, and apostolic Church, which Christ Himself purchased with His blood. Bow down before God's mighty hand, tremble and flee as we call on the holy and awesome name of Jesus, before whom the denizens of hell cower, to whom the heavenly Virtues and Powers and Dominations are subject, whom the Cherubim and Seraphim praise with unending cries as they sing: Holy, holy, holy, Lord God of Sabbath.

Exorcist: Lord, heed my prayer.

All: And let my cry be heard by you.

Exorcist: The Lord be with you.

All: May He also be with you.

Exorcist: Let us pray. God of heaven and earth, God of the angels and archangels, God of the patriarchs and prophets, God of the apostles and martyrs, God of the confessors and virgin God who have the power to bestow life after death and rest after toil; for there is no other God than you, nor can there be another true God beside you, the Creator of all things visible and invisible, whose kingdom is without end; we humbly entreat your glorious majesty to deliver us by your might from every influence of the accursed spirits, from their every evil snare and deception, and to keep us from all harm; through Christ our Lord.

All: Amen.

Exorcist: From the snares of the devil.

All: Lord, deliver us.

Exorcist: That you help your Church to serve you in security and freedom.

All: We beg you to hear us.

Exorcist: That you humble the enemies of your holy Church.

All: We beg you to hear us.

The surroundings are sprinkled with holy water. [\[107\]](#)

_____END OF THE RITE _____

Demonic possession or mental illness?

Are mentally ill people demon-possessed? Well, in the New Testament demons spoke in rational dialogue. Untreated people with schizophrenia speak instead in confusion, and they never make any sense. Remember, demons also give supernatural knowledge to their host, while mentally ill people never exhibit any clairvoyance, or paranormal activity. Assuming demons to be secretive about their mission, we presume also that those who claim to be demon-possessed too easily, in reality are not. Supernatural phenomena are definitely indications of evil spirits, not mental illness. Also, if medicine alleviates the problems, it was not a demon, but if health professionals force upon a demon-possessed person, unwanted mental health medication, they can make everything much worse for the victim of demonic possession.

The present Catechism of the Catholic Church emphasizes the importance of distinguishing between demonic activity and mental illness. From paragraph 1673: “Exorcism is directed at the expulsion of demons or to the liberation from demonic possession through the spiritual authority which Jesus entrusted to his Church. Illness, especially psychological illness, is a very different matter; treating this is the concern of medical science. Therefore, before an exorcism is performed, it is important to ascertain that one is dealing with the presence of the Evil One, and not an illness.”^[108]

Deborah Hyde, the editor of The Skeptic magazine wrote for The Guardian in 2018 that, “Schizophrenia and bipolar disorder are the traditional candidates for a false diagnosis of demonic infestation. The Catholic church includes psychiatric experts on its exorcism panels for balance and information.”^[109]

Two years ago, Father Cipriano de Meo, who has been an exorcist since 1952, told CNA's Italian agency ACI Stampa that typically, a person is not possessed but is struggling with some other illness. The key to telling the difference, he said, is through discernment in prayer on the part of the exorcist and the possessed - and in the potentially possessed person's reaction to the exorcist himself and the prayers being said.^[110] But that's not always true.

Especially when we have what Fr Malachi Martin defined as the cases of “Perfect Possession” in willing candidates that even a great exorcist like himself, regarded as impossible to defeat. A concept that you find clearly expressed in the documentary Hostage to the Devil, which came out on Netflix in 2017, that examines the controversial work of Fr Malachi Martin.

In 1965, unhappy with the Second Vatican Council, Father Malachi left

Rome and the Jesuits, after asking and obtaining from the Pope to be released from certain aspects of his Jesuit vows, and moved to New York City soon after. He had obviously understood before others the great evil that would be coming out of the Second Vatican Council. Rachel Lysaght, who produced the documentary in question, pointed out to The Independent, that “Malachi was frequently critical of the Catholic Church, and spoke of a lack of support for those who felt they were being inflicted by something demonic.” [\[111\]](#)

In the meantime, the dramatic results of the Second Vatican Council, and the weakness and sin of the Roman Catholic Church prophesied by Fr. Malachi Martin, are before our eyes every day. In the Netflix documentary, a former CIA agent called Robert Marrow, who worked with Father Malachi, claimed he was pushed off a ladder by an invisible force after carrying out an exorcism on a particularly afflicted four-year-old girl earlier the same day. Rachel Lysaght recalls the harrowing moment during filming. Former CIA agent Mr Marrow retraced the steps to Connecticut where Father Martin had offered to carry out an exorcism on the four-year-old girl. When he arrived at the neutral home, the family were already there, and the girl walked up to the priest and said: “So you're Malachi Martin - and you think you can help her?”, suggesting she was talking on behalf of Satan while having an out-of-body experience. The contemporary religious professionals such as theologians, or even your local parish priest, that you might want to consult for some spiritual advice in case of demonic possession, are way too often the first to dismiss the whole thing, and to advance the actual idea that Satan doesn't even exist, or is only a purely symbolic figure for them. This kind of religious figures, once pious and devoted, have become after the reforms of Second Vatican Council, the least likely to be fixated with the Devil, and many don't even believe in him.

I have witnessed this myself as a Catholic, and in my own personal case, when I was demonically possessed because of the curses of the dark side of the Illuminati, I was fronted with skepticism from the clergy that didn't know my actual background. And with fear by those who actually knew it, and wanted nothing to do with it.

Of course, all that happened before I became an author and a public person, and gave me, at the time, an idea of how the problem, of Satan, and Satanism, is really perceived by contemporary Catholic clergy. Fr Alexander Lucie-Smith, who writes for The Catholic Herald, and his the classic example of this kind of liberal skeptical priest says:

“People who go to church, too, seem uninterested in the diabolical. My impression, based on my own experience, is that those most likely to be interested in the Devil are those who never go anywhere near a church. Perhaps with the decline in religious literacy, and the collapse in educated and nuanced talk about God, what survives is superstition in the strict meaning of the word, that which hangs over from a previous age, which predates the age of faith, namely belief in evil spirits. Evil spirits were once considered a powerful reality in Northern Europe, and they still are in parts of Africa, Latin America and the West Indies. No one quite knows what the religion of the ancient Druids was all about, as they left no written records, and they were brutally suppressed by the Romans, but it does seem likely that they practiced human sacrifice as a way of propitiating the gods, the sort of gods that Christianity was quick to identify with demons. Is our interest in exorcism and the Devil a throwback to our remote past?” [\[112\]](#)

Is this guy a Catholic priest, or a Satanist? Sorry guys, I am disgusted by this Satanic modernization of the Church, just as Father Malachi was. So the question arises now more than ever, how can I tell if there is real demonic activity going on in the case of someone suffering some symptoms of mental illness? Father John Bartunek explains this rather clearly and honestly in the following words: “Usually (but not always), there will be something in the person’s past that could provide a clue – they or their family members (parents, siblings...) used to play around with the occult (pagan, new age, Wiccan, and other such practices are making a comeback in many parts of modern secular society). Or, they react strangely to holy things – like blessed rosaries, other blessed items, holy water, priests, Mass, the other sacraments and sacramentals, etc... Sometimes, however, the only clue is that the illness is persistent and doctors seem unable to treat it effectively. If there are some yellow lights in this regard, it is a good idea to invite the person to see the diocesan exorcist (every diocese has one, or is supposed to). The exorcist will talk with the person, ask some questions about the origin and characteristics of the problem, and make a preliminary recommendation. Exorcists almost always also have some dependable psychologists that they work with, to help discern confusing situations. If it is reasonable to suspect that the person is obsessed or possessed, and if the person wants, an exorcism can be arranged. This sounds dramatic, but it is actually normal practice for the Church – ever since Christ’s own day. [\[113\]](#)

Let’s talk now about Professor Richard Gallagher, considered to be the most credible witness of demonic possession in the U.S., as a board-certified psychiatrist, and professor of clinical psychiatry at New York Medical College. Gallagher, he calls himself a “consultant” on demonic possessions, and has helped for the past 25 years, clergy of all denominations distinguish between mental illness, and what he calls “the real thing.” Gallagher is considered “so respected in the field,” that CNN’s Father Gary Thomas states, “Whenever I need help, I call on him.” [\[114\]](#)

Father Thomas is not only one of the most famous Catholic exorcists in the United States at the moment, but he is the guy who inspired the famous film “The Rite” from 2011. Professor Gallagher gave this brilliant testimony of his work to The Washington Post in 2016: In the late 1980s, I was introduced to a self-styled Satanic high priestess. She called herself a witch and dressed the part, with flowing dark clothes and black eye shadow around to her temples. In our many discussions, she acknowledged worshipping Satan as his “queen.” I’m a man of science and a lover of history; after studying the classics at Princeton, I trained in psychiatry at Yale and in psychoanalysis at Columbia. That background is why a Catholic priest had asked my professional opinion, which I offered pro bono, about whether this woman was suffering from a mental disorder. This was at the height of the national panic about Satanism. (In a case that helped induce the hysteria, Virginia McMartin and others had recently been charged with alleged Satanic ritual abuse at a Los Angeles preschool; the charges were later dropped.) So I was inclined to skepticism. But my subject’s behavior exceeded what I could explain with my training. She could tell some people their secret weaknesses, such as undue pride. She knew how individuals she’d never known had died, including my mother and her fatal case of ovarian cancer. Six people later vouched to me that, during her exorcisms, they heard her speaking multiple languages, including Latin, completely unfamiliar to her outside of her trances. This was not psychosis; it was what I can only describe as paranormal ability. I concluded that she was possessed. Much later, she permitted me to tell her story. The priest who had asked for my opinion of this bizarre case was the most experienced exorcist in the country at the time, an erudite and sensible man. I had told him that, even as a practicing Catholic, I wasn't likely to go in for a lot of hocus-pocus. "Well," he replied, "unless we thought you were not easily fooled, we would hardly have wanted you to assist us." So began an unlikely partnership. For the past two-and-a-half decades and over several hundred consultations, I've helped clergy from multiple denominations and faiths to filter episodes of mental illness — which represent the overwhelming majority of cases — from, literally, the devil's work. It's an unlikely role for an academic physician, but I don't see these two aspects of my career in conflict. The same habits that shape what I do as a professor and psychiatrist — open-mindedness, respect for evidence and compassion for suffering people — led me to aid in the work of discerning attacks by what I believe are evil spirits and, just as critically, differentiating these extremely rare events from medical conditions. Is it possible to be a sophisticated psychiatrist and believe that evil spirits are, however seldom, assailing humans? Most of my scientific colleagues and friends say no, because of their frequent contact with patients who are deluded about demons, their general skepticism of the supernatural, and their commitment to employ only standard, peer-reviewed treatments that do not potentially mislead (a definite risk) or harm vulnerable patients. But careful observation of the evidence presented to me in my career has led me to believe that certain extremely uncommon cases can be explained no other way. [\[115\]](#)

Interesting take from Gallagher, a new breed of the prevalently left-wing New Age therapists, encouraged by the "modernized" Catholic Church. He has been healing the mentally ill not with talk and drug therapy, but by releasing troublesome or malevolent spirits who have attached themselves to their victims with "but a gentler, more rational approach." The idea that someone might be "possessed" by some discarnate being, until not so long ago, should have been left behind with the Middle Ages. Instead, these secular healers, some of them licensed psychiatrists or psychologists, have suddenly discovered, often by accident, that using exorcism as a form of therapy works better than what they learned in medical or graduate school, and they are now doing the work of an exorcist.

William Baldwin's book, Spirit Releasement Therapy: A Technique Manual, published back in 1995, is considered by these therapeutics a watershed event for this movement. Dr. Baldwin left a dentistry practice to pursue his passion. His ensuing doctoral dissertation in psychology was the first ever to take seriously, spirit release as a legitimate therapy.

Stafford Betty a professor of religious studies at California State University, Bakersfield wrote this about him in the National Catholic Reporter, December 28, 2007: “The disciples of Dr. Baldwin, who died in 2004, deal with spirits, or entities as they are often called, in a manner very different from most church-based exorcists and deliverance ministers. Missing is the adversarial command to come out in the name of Jesus! These alternative therapists treat spirits with respect and compassion. To threaten anyone, living or dead, they say, only provokes an angry reaction, but a gentler, more rational approach is usually enough to coax the spirit out of its host and into the light of the afterworld, where it should have been all along. Spirits come in several varieties, we are told. Most often they are EBs, or earthbound. These are more attached to the loved ones they've left behind than to the light they've turned their back on; others are addicted to earth's vices, such as alcohol or narcotics; still others are simply confused, not even sure they've died. But DFEs, or dark force entities, are another matter. Intending evildoing, they attach themselves to unsuspecting mortals to inflict maximum damage to self-esteem, family relations and every expression of love. Speaking through their victims, they swear profusely. They are belligerent, disruptive, threatening and thoroughly unpleasant. They claim they belong to a satanic intelligence that rules them and punishes them when they fail at their tasks. Yet their loyalty to this negative force can be dislodged; with skillful handling they, too, can be released into the light. One of the most extraordinary claims made by this new kind of healer is that nearly all of us, at one time or another, have had entities attached to us. How do they know? The same way they know everything else they tell us: Under hypnosis, their clients, and the spirits speaking through them, tell them. [\[116\]](#)

William Woolger, an internationally renowned transpersonal psychologist, sees all this as “*the next and essential stage in the development of psychology, a kind of return to the source” Well, the Rite of Exorcism originally published in 1614, known as De exorcizandis obsessis a daemonio, is the best and only source dear Woolger, for a Major Exorcism, but, of course, there is also certain religious artifacts, of great spiritual power you could also use to help the prayer to have a stronger effect. In any case, psychiatrists and psychologists interested in the subject, should definitely learn the art by a true exorcist who sticks to tradition, before adventuring themselves into hell.

I was once called to perform an unusual exorcism prayer in the mental health section of a hospital, with the doctors in front of me visibly in a state panic, for an increasingly ugly and volatile situation, created by a poor African immigrant who had been the victim of a Nigerian Witch Doctor. This unusual episode, took place in the hospital of the small city of Subiaco, Italy back in 2014.

The following is a brief extract from Vol. 3 of my Confessions that describes the dramatic event: “Arrested in the early hours of the following morning by the Italian authorities, who suddenly broke into my house forcing me into a mental institution at the hands of the notorious Tavistock Institute, as later confirmed in front of my lawyer, by Dr. Giuseppe Nicolò, director of the facility based in the town of Subiaco, near Rome. This wasn’t a good experience, but in the months that followed, these unexpected events led myself and my soon-to-be wife, Christy, to California, meeting with fantastic people who believed in me and my literary projects, and gave me the opportunity to publish my books in English. The same books that are increasingly censored and sabotaged in Italy, because of my anti-government and anti-Vatican position. During the two weeks of my forced hospitalization, I experienced from the future Italian Prime Minister Matteo Renzi and his occult manipulators of the Tavistock Institute, one of the most interesting moments with the arrival of Alberto Festa on January 28, 2014, to the place where I was forced to stay. He brought the black glove used to cover the first stigmata of Padre Pio. Imagine such a scenario, in a hospital/mental institution based in the Italian province located in the small ultra-Catholic town of Subiaco, called “the cradle of Western Monasticism,” because of its important monasteries where both St. Benedict and St. Francis lived.

At the entrance of the hospital where I was locked up for two weeks, there is even a statue of Padre Pio, and here arrives suddenly out of nowhere such a holy object related to the famous Italian saint, and it is brought to a “patient” restricted in a mental healthcare facility. Well, this was a truly unusual situation indeed, don’t you think? I know this story is incredible and I cannot deny that I have a smile on my face while I write this, but you should have seen the faces of the doctors at the arrival of Alberto Festa with Padre Pio’s Holy relict. It was then that Al Festa left me a card with a tiny relict of Padre Pio, with the fragment of a bandage used on his stigma, attached to it, an object that would, among other things, be used within a few days on the demand of the doctors to perform an exorcism on a patient. A so-called “refugee,” a black boy from Africa, was in a state of demonic possession one night during my stay. I was asked to intervene with a short exorcism, since the monks of the nearby St. Scholastica Monastery were not able to come. I began the prayer of exorcism without success. Indeed, it seemed to have worsened the situation, but the moment I exposed the relict of St. Padre Pio, a tiny fragment of his gauze he used to cover the stigmata wounds, attached to a card with his photo, that I was given by Alberto Festa, right then and there, the poor guy suddenly stopped having issues. The incredible power that the relics of St. Padre Pio have against demons is truly incredible, I was positively perplexed. Power of suggestion or miracle, God’s ways are endless. [\[117\]](#)

William James (1842–1910) who has been called the “Father of American psychology,” was concerned about this kind of puzzle. He felt science had been unduly restrictive in adopting an epistemology of positive empiricism (that is, whatever we know scientifically is known through empirical research in the physically measurable world.) He proposed casting the scientific net more widely, with an epistemology of “radical empiricism.”

In his Essays in Radical Empiricism, James defines the term thus: “To be radical, an empiricism must neither admit into its construction any element that is not directly experienced, nor exclude from them any element that is directly experienced, and that nothing within the totality of human experience should be excluded from being a potential topic of scientific investigation.” How widely he meant this to be applied is indicated by the fact that he was involved for 25 years with an exploration of psychic phenomena, spiritism and religious experience. He was not convinced of the conclusions of enthusiasts in these areas, but he insisted that the experiences are appropriate data for a complete science. James’ “radical empiricism” admits data from the senses, and thus includes within its purview the experience of the physical world. But it also encompasses the broad spectrum of inner realities found within the subjective life of the person. It also implies that no phenomena are to be excluded from investigation solely on the basis that they “violate known scientific laws.”^[118]

Pastor Steven Waterhouse (b.1956) has written an excellent book called, Strength for his People: A Ministry for Families of the Mentally Ill published in 2002. It’s a useful tool for those who have a devout belief in Catholicism or Christianity at large, and an interest in mental illness. The author’s younger brother who suffers from schizophrenia served as his inspiration for what became his first published work. Schizophrenia can strike anyone, including individuals from deeply religious homes. The concepts of devils, heaven and hell is an important part of Christianity we can’t reject. “Demonic influence” is rare, but the integral belief of many, especially in the Catholic world. And many Christians who research schizophrenia wonder about the demonic and often think, “Is my relative possessed?”

Even those who have other beliefs or choose to remain skeptical must still relate to religious people who do believe in the supernatural. Belief in the spirit-world and diabolical possession of human beings has continued virtually unchallenged since the earliest times, also in the Muslim world, for example. With the birth of industrialization and the evolution of Modern Science, the West began an era of skepticism which relegated practices like exorcism, to the margins of society. Something “normal people” want to ignore altogether. With the advent of secularism, Catholic practices in particular started to be considered as purely magical superstitions, and modern man has gradually forgotten the power of relics, holy water and other blessed objects, the sign of the cross, the power of names, etc.

Many Christians who endure a family member's battle with schizophrenia these days might have important questions about the possible demonic involvement of a loved one, and deserve real answers, instead of the usual condescending response which dismisses such concern as nonsense, usually given by ignorant people or atheists. This kind of attitude, is unfortunately, something I have witnessed myself many times, even from so-called religious professionals. And it's very painful for the person in need to be ignored, or even worse laughed at by somebody who is supposed to be a priest or a theologian. The New Testament itself makes a clear distinction between disease and possession in Mark 6:13 when it says: "They drove out many demons, and they anointed with oil many who were sick and cured them." Thus, Christian theology should recognize the difference, but, unfortunately, that's not always the case. For Dr. Steven Waterhouse, at least six factors differentiate schizophrenia from demonic possession as described in the Bible and I have decided to include them in my book. Some of these factors, have already been pointed out earlier, but having them clearly outlined and summarized by Dr. Waterhouse, can be of ulterior help when trying to determine if an individual is possessed, or has a mental illness or NBD, as they like to call it nowadays in America (NBD is an acronym that stands for Neurobiological Brain Disorder). The following are the six factors described by Dr. Steven Waterhouse, pastor, bible teacher, and Christian author who has published works on counseling and systematic theology.

1. Attraction to vs. Aversion to Religion

Mallard Sall, a psychiatrist from Anaheim, California, makes this if he finds no difficulty in pronouncing the name of Jesus, all this is indicative of mental illness rather than the demonic. Ronald Koteskey, a psychology professor at Asbury College, agrees with their conclusions. I have visited in mental hospitals enough to know that many patients desire religious instruction. The Texas Panhandle Alliance for the Mentally Ill initiated the idea of chapel services for our group. Many consumers show interest in Jesus Christ. By contrast we know from the New Testament that demons hate any involvement with the things of Christ.

2. Irrational Speech vs. Rational Speech

In New Testament accounts involving demons, the demons spoke in a rational manner. Untreated people with schizophrenia will often speak in nonsense and jump rapidly between unrelated topics. My brother does this. The fact that the demons spoke in a rational manner is a third distinction... They communicated in a rational manner. They... spoke clearly with purpose and meaning, possessing the ability to carry on a real dialogue. The speech and logical process of the schizophrenic are often incoherent. They produce "word salads" and irrationalities that do not make sense, in contrast to the speech behavior of demons. A possessed person is in fact mentally healthy in spite of the fact that at intervals he may exhibit certain symptoms of mental abnormalities Moreover the words the mentally ill person hears are often completely nonsensical. In such cases where the voices make sense (not nonsense as in the case of schizophrenia, a condition of chemical imbalance in the brain)... We should strongly suspect demonic forces...

3. Ordinary Learning vs. Supernatural Knowledge

Demons in the New Testament would speak through people to convey knowledge that otherwise could not have been known to the possessed individuals. Those with a mental illness have no such ability to know facts that they have not acquired by normal means of learning. Koch states, For example, clairvoyance itself is never a sign of mental illness, and a mental patient will never be able to speak in a voice or a language he has previously not learned.

4. Normal vs. Occultic Phenomena

There is an aspect to demon activity that is just plain spooky. If there are occurrences of poltergeists, levitations, trances, telepathy (and these cannot be ruled out as being optical illusions or fraudulent displays), then one is not dealing with "ordinary" schizophrenia. These "most dramatic aspects," that were "frequently encountered" helped stump Isaac's panel of psychodiagnosticians at Berkeley. He lists the following as indications of possession as opposed to mental illness: ... some form of paranormal phenomena, such as poltergeist-type phenomena, telepathy, levitation or strength out of proportion to age. There is an impact on others: paranormal phenomena, stench, coldness or the feeling of an alien presence or that the patient has lost a human quality, is experienced by someone other than the patient.

5. The Claim to be Possessed

Authors who have clinical experience both with demon possession and mental illness believe those who claim to be possessed are very likely not possessed. Demons wish to be secretive and do not voluntarily claim to be present. Lechler writes: While the mental patient will speak in extravagant tones of the demons he alleges to be living within, the possessed person avoids all mention of demons as long as no one approaches him on a spiritual level.

6. The Effects of Therapy

If prayer solves the problem, then it was probably not schizophrenia. If medicine helps alleviate the problem, it was not demon possession. Demons cannot be exorcised by phenothiazine, antidepressant drugs, or E.C.T. Hallucinations are cured by psychological treatment, while demon possession can be cured only by prayer and fasting as Christ indicated. I discovered that all of the “demons” I was seeing were allergic to Thorazine and that, in nearly every case, a week or two on Thorazine made the “demons” go away... [\[119\]](#)

Last but not least, we have incredibly dangerous new synthetic drugs rising in popularity in the United States that are a gateway that allow demons to enter human bodies. While the Vatican’s 1999 guide to exorcism, the De Exorcismis et supplicationibus quibusdam, emphasizes to ordained exorcists that they should not confuse mental illness with demon possession, the Catholic church does consider drugs as a force that could allow Satan to take over a human soul more easily. In 2016, Father Vincent Lampert, head priest at St. Malachy’s in Indianapolis, told The New York Post: “We’re in a fight with drugs, the occult, pornography,” adding, “This is an entry point for evil and we need to take these souls back.”

Remember, one of the biggest door openers into Satan’s realm where he and his demons roam are any kind of irresponsible alcohol abuse, or drug usage, and any kind of dabbling or experimenting with anything having to do with the Occult or the New Age movement. Of course, you have to distinguish between things like Methamphetamine and from the therapeutic use of Cannabis, because the real problems are with synthetic drugs (including synthetic Marijuana) and, of course, opioids and cocaine. All forms of possession destroy relationships and community, but not all of them are dramatically demonic. Yet, anyone who has experienced the enslavement of substance abuse or of compulsive fears and anxieties brought on by psychological or physiological trauma (they are always connected), as in the case of PTSD, knows what it feels like to be out of control and dependent on forces depriving one of peace and freedom. We can be haunted by nightmares and “daymares: money obsessions, and preoccupations about persons, places and things in our lives -- some of which may be pure fantasies or, if they existed, are now long gone or far away -- that still seem to cause emotional paralysis at work and play. An ominous experience in our time is how some excessively-prescribed pharmaceuticals have themselves become the very addictions they were intended to exorcise. “Out of the frying pan, into the fire,” so to speak. Not all instances of possession, obsession and addiction should be attributed to supernatural forces.^[120] Some are probably not, but in this End-Times scenario, we need to face the growing reality of evil.

The possibility of using exorcism, as well as religious and spiritual beliefs and practices to fight the take over of the human soul by Satan and his technocratic Legion should be understood by all to combat the dark forces we now face in growing numbers. There is a rigorous process by which natural causes are systematically and painstakingly ruled out in an exorcism, much like in medicine, every diagnosis must be made patiently, carefully, and deliberately, but there is also a dangerous tendency in the last few years to minimize the reality of demonic possession by the very same people who should protect us from the devil. We need to find a new balance that can counteract the deleterious effects of the Second Vatican Council created by Satanists to take over the Catholic Church and establish with the help of the Jesuits, a One World Religion. In the end, we need to stop this madness before Artificial Intelligence and Satan force on us with the help of their Robocops, microchip implants, making it impossible at that point to defeat them. I close with a final quote from Father Malachi Martin, “I have smelt the breath of Satan and heard the demon’s voices...” AMEN

OBITUARIES

EDITED BY SEAN HOGAN (shogan@irish-times.ie)

Father Malachi Martin

‘I have smelt the breath of Satan and heard the demons’ voices. . .’

FATHER Malachi Brendan Martin, who died in New York last month aged 74, was a priest, an author and a staunch Catholic.

Though he was born in Kerry and his books sold well here, it is probably fair to say that he was better known in the United States than in this country.

Father Martin's views on the hierarchy of the church were, by most standards, extreme.

His career as a Jesuit brought him to Rome in the 1950s, during the pontificate of John XXIII, and the exciting days of the Second Vatican Council.

But in 1964 he resigned a lifetime from his vows. The career was motivated by his conviction that many in the church, and particularly in his own order, the Jesuits, were more interested in power than in saving souls. Later, he was to campaign for, as he saw it, saving humanity with Marxism especially in Central and South America.

In 1965, he moved to New York, which was to become his home.

He worked at various jobs — washing dishes, driving a cab — which formed a sharp contrast with his previous life, but he soon established himself as an author.

For the succeeding decades he took a fairly conservative view which he presented to his many books, both fiction and non-fiction.

In 1986 he described himself in an interview with the Chicago Tribune as “a faith-buddy, open-to-the-world, traditionalist conservative.”

He rejected the optimism of modernism as priests.

His views on the church, though, went far beyond what is normally understood in this country as “conservative” and “traditionalist” and indeed would be rejected by many of those to whom these labels would be applied.

For instance, he believed socialist ideas had been carried out in the Vatican by clergy who had slipped into a conspiracy with Communism and others to establish a new world order (Windup World, 1982).

He also helped the church to be under threat from Marxism, a theme explored in The Final Conflict (1978).

The idea of a church order was a constant theme in his writings.

His timing as an author was good. His 1974 bestseller, Manager of the Devil: The Presence and Exercise of Evil in the Jesuit Order (1974), was published in the wake of the film The Exorcist.

He had no doubt that occasion warranted and could be made by occasion.

He told the American newspaper, Exorcism: you bet exorcists hooked around corners by the powers of evil. I have struck the length of bones and heard the demonic voices — odd, sometimes dead voices carrying messages of hatred.

His other books included The Pagan (published under the name Michael Sullivan, 1984), The Encounter (1976), a study of Judaism, Christianity and Islam, and The Jesuits (1987), a severely critical look on the old order.

He also wrote for the New York Times again on church and billions, including travel pieces on the Holy Land.

Rome returned his family to his Mass about 10 years ago, at his request.

He was born in Ballyboughad, Co Kerry, to Canon John Martin and Kathleen (née Power), and the father was a GP who later served the family in Dublin.

He had nine brothers and sisters: three sisters (Dorothy, Patricia, Connaught) and six sons — Patrick P. X., Kay, Joseph, Martin and Maria.

He was educated at Ballyboughad Primary School, Malahide College, University College Dublin and Louisa where he studied a priest's preparation.

He was the author of a relatively thick book on the Great Sanctuary.

The special areas of interest and expertise included books, newspapers, cultural history, and dance in Kansas and Jewish sources.

He is survived by his brother and sisters and by his children, his Maria Lillian.

Father Malachi Martin, born 1925, died July 1999.

Introduction by the author

Set, also known as Seth and Sutekh, was the Egyptian god of war, chaos, and storms, brother of Osiris, Isis, and Horus the Elder, uncle to Horus the Younger, and brother-husband to Nephthys.^[1] When the Davos Illuminati elite say, “Great Reset” they are saying, “Great Re-Set” which means “Great King Set,” or even better, “Great King Satan,” as the Latin word for “king” is “rex” that later became “Re,” and “Set” in Italian, and is, of course, Satan. The final and highest degree of the original Illuminati system devised by Adam Weishaupt, the founder of the original Illuminati Order has the working title “Rex,” and in this book, I will finally expose the true Masonic/Illuminati/Jesuit roots of the Satanic Davos Agenda headed by German Professor Klaus Schwab. According to the founder of the Temple of Set and Fourth Reich proponent Michael Aquino, Satan revealed to him his true name to be Set, which was the name used by his followers in ancient Egypt.^[2] After all, it seems rather plausible that “Satan,” a word of Hebrew origin, comes from Set, the name of the Egyptian god who came to be associated with evil in Egyptian mythology.

This is the first book ever written on the occult roots of the infamous Great Reset, with a unique analysis of past and current events, where I debunk in the process, the lies of the mainstream media, as well as the incorrect views brought forward by the Anti Defamation League (ADL), who wrote two years ago that, “Since first emerging in the spring of 2020, ‘The Great Reset’ conspiracy has gained traction with the ongoing spread of COVID-19 in both mainstream and fringe circles alike.” Promptly indicating that we, “can find antisemitic sentiments in the Great Reset, with some believers going so far as to accuse Jews of orchestrating the plot or invoking George Soros and the Rothschild family.” Now, to avoid any further misunderstanding with the Jewish Community, who I respect and love, as I am also Jewish, I find this assertion by the Jewish ADL not only completely wrong but even dangerous in the long run, for both Jews and Christians alike. In this book, I will reveal how the present rise of the Fourth Reich, hiding under the disguise of the “Fourth Industrial Revolution,” is just as dangerous as the Third Reich was, and the dangers that we might face in the coming years when the persecution of real Christians and real Jewish believers will only increase in the age of the Antichrist and Cyber Satan. I will not only expose the final stage of this diabolical trap created by the Jesuit-Sabbatean-Frankist New World Order but also show you how to survive it, with the unique proposal of the Great Reject. Because this is not only a revelatory essay, and probably my best work, but also a manual to survive the unfolding Apocalypse, you should invite as many like-minded people as you can to purchase and read it.

CHAPTER ONE

Resettling the Herd for the Great Reset

The Rise of The Fourth Reich

After defining the Satanic nature of the term Great Reset, let's pick up from where I left off in Vol. 6.66, with the official statement made by Vatican News on the 2-day conference that the Vatican's Pontifical Academy of Social Sciences (PASS), and the Pontifical Academy of Sciences (PAS), jointly organized on "robotics and artificial intelligence" in May 2019, as I was on my way to my new life in the United States of America.

Pope Francis has also shown interest in the issue. In a message to the World Economic Forum in Davos in January 2018, he urged that AI, robotics, and other technological innovations be used to help contribute to the "service of humanity and the protection of our common home".^[3]

Now, after all the talk about the impending Great Reset since the start of the COVID pandemic, the words of Pope Francis assume a rather different and even more sinister meaning. The Sanitary (or medical) dictatorship is redrawing the boundaries of our world (and our freedoms), and altering the playing field faster than we can keep up, and thanks to the technological advances of AI and robotics, a very dim looking future seems upon us. Owed in large part to the U.S. government's deep-seated and, in many cases, top-secret alliances with foreign nations, global corporations, and think tanks, as the World Economic Forum mentioned above, it's become increasingly obvious that we have entered into a New World Order—a Global World Order—made up of international government agencies and corporations,^[4] working more and more under the influence of the Jesuits and the Catholic Church. The Great Reset is upon us, and the powers that be and the Vatican, who are at the top of the pyramid of the New World Order, are ready for 2030, with one of the main figures to usher in this new era, the infamous Klaus Schwab, the perpetually scowling figure who heads the World Economic Forum, a man who looks like the character, Dr. Ernst Stavro Blohfeld, the head of SPECTRE (Special Executive for Counter-intelligence, Terrorism, Revenge, and Extortion), the fictional villain from the James Bond series of novels and films, created by Ian Fleming, who by the way had also direct involvement with one of England's most notorious occultists and Illuminati, Aleister Crowley. I'm not the only one who has noticed the resemblance between Schwab and the fictional villain, because pictures of Schwab in a gray uniform, holding a white cat, like SPECTRE's Blohfeld, have been circulating on the internet for some time now. Of course, Schwab, was too young at the time to be inspired by Fleming, and it is generally thought that the character of Blohfeld was based on real-life Greek arms dealer Basil Zaharoff (1849-1936), known also as Count Zacharoff, Prince Zacharias Basileus Zacharoff, and to his intimates as "Zedzed." One of the richest men in the world during his lifetime, Zaharoff was described as both a "merchant of death" and a "mystery man of Europe," a bit like Klaus Schwab is today for many, and in 2012 the influential Smithsonian Magazine defined Zaharoff as "The Wickedest Man in the World."^[5] Interestingly enough, this is a title also given by the English tabloids to Aleister Crowley. The Smithsonian Magazine also describes "Zedzed" as the kind of man Crowley would have probably loved to know, and probably did, as they had numerous friends in common.

Zacharias Basileus Zacharoff, better known as Sir Basil Zaharoff: arsonist, bigamist, pimp, arms dealer, honorary knight of the British Empire, a confidant of kings, and all-round international man of mystery.^[6]

Who knows if in one hundred years the Smithsonian Magazine, will define similarly Professor Schwab, but let's go back to the term "New World Order" once considered only a fringe "conspiracy theory", that is now on full display, plain as day for everyone to see and witness, fueled by evil figures like Klaus Schwab, who like I just pointed out, look more like a fictional villain from the Bond series, than somebody who wants to save the planet. At the moment the economic, political, academic, and media elites around the world are leveraging the chaos, confusion, and restrictions on liberty from the COVID-19 lockdowns, using them to radically alter society around the world.^[7]

All this is done in preparation for the Great Reset that is not a baseless conspiracy theory that doesn't exist, like most of the mainstream media would like you to think, but rather the final unveiling of the reality of the New World Order. Global elites see the COVID pandemic and climate alarm as a two-headed Trojan Horse that can be used to foist in SDRs, aka Special Drawing Rights on the global population, that has suddenly become accustomed to following government orders, and push towards the establishment of a cashless society where cash is replaced by its digital equivalent. Deutsche Bank's Chief Executive, John Cryan, predicted at Davos in 2016 that cash probably wouldn't exist in ten years.^[8]

The COP26 meeting of elite climate alarmists and heads of state, held in Glasgow between the 31st of October to the 12th of November 2021, highlighted the use of central bankers and financial regulation to push the alarmist agenda, by cutting off lending and underwriting services to energy companies that don't promote renewables, that pursue oil and gas exploration. The trend towards a single world currency is real also in the Great Reset.^[9] The use of non-cash transactions and settlement in daily life began during the 1990s when electronic banking became common. By the 2010s digital payment methods were widespread in many countries, with intermediaries such as PayPal, digital wallet systems such as Apple Pay, contactless and NFC payments by electronic card or smartphone, and electronic bills and banking, all in widespread use. But there is a dark sense of what is coming next, as all my PayPal accounts, for example, as well as those of many patriots, were closed in the past couple of years, simply for having expressed opinions contrary to the mainstream on a variety of subjects. This means, that we will no longer be able to survive in a future cashless society if we oppose their tyranny and openly speak our minds.

We can call this growing sense of oppression the result of a Global Deep State, a powerful international cabal working under the directives of the Jesuits, and financed by the Sabbatean Frankists, that does not care about us and is just as real as the corporatized, militarized, industrialized American Deep State that serves it, and it poses just as great a threat to our rights as individuals, if not greater. We've been inching closer to this Global World Order for the past several decades, but with COVID-19, governmental and corporate interests have become intertwined, shifting this transformation into high gear.^[10] In this scenario, the American Deep State ("a national-security apparatus that holds sway even over the elected leaders in charge of it"), answers to the Global Deep State, an entity controlled ultimately by the infamous Jesuits and the Vatican. So what will this change look like? Well, the global elites want to create a society of renters who own nothing, while also pushing a social agenda that would be unpopular with the unwashed masses and difficult to implement in a society with a broad, ownership-based middle class. What this means is that you would rent not just your home, but in the future also your phone, computer, car (though you probably will "carshare," the term for renting a car when you need one for an extended period and summoning one when you need it for a ride), but this modality might even go as far as the pots and pans you cook with.^[11] A radical transformation of the world economy into a Communist economy. No longer will you have a job in the sense that it has traditionally been understood. Instead, you will work various "gigs," all of which place you in a precarious position at any given time. You will receive a fee for services performed, with no benefits, paid time off, healthcare, or anything else that the middle class in the West have become accustomed to.^[12] Now we should all consider the extent to which our lives and liberties will be impacted by this international convergence of governmental and profit-driven corporate interests in the surveillance state, the military-industrial complex, the private prison industry, the intelligence sector, the security sector, the technology sector, the telecommunications sector, the transportation sector, the pharmaceutical industry and, most recently, by the pharmaceutical-health sector. All of these sectors are dominated by mega-corporations operating on a global scale and working through government channels to increase their profit margins. The profit-driven policies of these global corporate giants influence everything from legislative policies to economics to environmental issues to medical care.^[13]

To facilitate the Great Reset, rural populations will be coerced into more concentrated population centers since dispersed populations have a higher "carbon footprint" as has been pointed out by the research report in the journal Environmental Research Communications.^[14] The suburbs will be a thing of the past as suburbs and exurbs become more like cities. Mixed-use housing, where you and 500 other people live in a mid-rise condo hive, with shops and "workshare" spaces (the new version of an office – on your dime, not your employer's) in the same area.^[15] The short version is that it's a total end to the American way of life, specifically the way of life of most of the Western middle class.^[16] This "Great Reset" that is being framed as stakeholder capitalism, like the newer, kinder version of capitalism, will essentially mean conditioning people to "live" within smaller physical footprints, and virtualized spaces, in digital environments. We are being pushed into the virtual world, that is where the new economic model of post-capitalist growth is going to happen for the New World Order, and the technical infrastructure has already been set up to create both Augmented Reality physical world spaces, the spatial web, and a parallel world that is linked to the exterior world, that can be either the virtualized world of gaming and the Metaverse developed by Epic Games, Inc. (Known as "Epic") CEO Tim Sweeney, and other executives. That is described as "an expansive, digitized communal space where users can mingle freely with brands and one another in ways that permit self-expression and spark joy."^[17] Or what Sweeney said will be a more "manicured, ad-laden news feed" version set up by Facebook's Zuckerberg, who said last year that he hopes that users stop thinking of

Facebook as a social media company and more of a Metaverse company. For Tim Sweeney however, the Metaverse reality will be different and freer, a bit like the early internet I guess:

It would be a kind of online playground where users could join friends to play a multiplayer game like Epic's "Fortnite" one moment, watch a movie via Netflix the next, and then bring friends to test drive a new car that's crafted the same in the real world as it would be in this virtual one.^[18]

So, what is the Metaverse? Well on Wikipedia, it is described in the following way:

A metaverse is a network of 3D virtual worlds focused on social connection. In futurism and science fiction, the term is often described as a hypothetical iteration of the Internet as a single, universal virtual world that is facilitated by the use of virtual and augmented reality headsets. The term "metaverse" has its origins in the 1992 science fiction novel Snow Crash as a portmanteau of "meta" and "universe." Various metaverses have been developed for popular use such as virtual world platforms like Second Life. Some metaverse iterations involve integration between virtual and physical spaces and virtual economies, often including a significant interest in advancing virtual reality technology. The term has seen considerable use as a buzzword for public relations purposes to exaggerate development progress for various related technologies and projects. Information privacy and user addiction are concerns within metaverses, stemming from challenges facing the social media and video game industries as a whole.^[19]

The idea that you will live a large part of your lives in these games and virtual set ups, and that you will have an avatar representing you, is already pushing the guys at Epic in the Research Triangle Park, and their Unreal Engine to move further. They've just launched Meta Humans, which is software that allows people to create very accurate representations of humans in a digital space very rapidly, something that used to take a lot of time. So they can virtualize you, and become you, and this is only the start of this dangerous trend. There's been a lot of discussion about "deep fakes," and what they will also mean in the context of these future virtual worlds.

The spatial web hooked up to sensor networks, the so-called Internet of Things (IoT), the Internet of Bodies (IoB), which is already being developed in their first stages with 5G, will soon reach the next stage with 6G. The rise of devices that connect the human body to the web is accelerating rapidly and that's their focus. With the 6G networks that are still being developed as I write, we are expected to have even more heterogeneity, and will likely support applications beyond current mobile use scenarios that start to tackle the first transhumanist features with the Internet of Bodies (IoB), as well as virtual and augmented reality (VR/AR), ubiquitous instant communications, pervasive intelligence, and the already cited Internet of Things (IoT). The RAND Corporation global policy think tank is already ringing the alarm bell regarding the Internet of Bodies (IoB):

This Internet of Bodies could revolutionize health care and improve our quality of life. But without appropriate guardrails, it could also jeopardize our most intimate personal information and introduce several ethical concerns.^[20]

Adding that:

This type of technology, appropriately dubbed the Internet of Bodies (IoB), has the potential to improve our lives in countless ways. But the risks are just as legion.^[21]

Remember there is much more which is being planned that will interface with both wearable technology and potentially bio-sensor technology that is being developed as we speak. It's all military research and development at the moment, but that's going to change soon.

In a document that recently surfaced online, entitled 6G The Next Hyper-Connected Experience for All by Samsung, one of the leaders in today's smartphone market, it says: "We expect that 6G will provide the ultimate experience for all through hyper-connectivity involving humans and everything."

Adding that,

It is envisaged that the number of connected devices will reach 500 billion by 2030, which is about 59 times larger than the expected world population (8.5 billion) by that time. Mobile devices will take various form-factors, such as augmented reality (AR) glasses, virtual reality (VR) headsets, and hologram devices. Increasingly, machines will need to be connected using wireless communications. Examples of connected machines include vehicles, robots, drones, home appliances, displays, smart sensors installed in various infrastructures, construction machinery, and factory equipment.^[22]

The research in question comes originally out of military space. We will exist as characters in their mind. This is how they imagine it. Those in power, like Klaus Schwab, imagine that we will be virtualized, becoming almost like characters in the game of our lives, and pushed into virtual spaces to consume digital items while the elite enjoys real life. Even when we are allowed to go out into the actual real world, we will be trackable and traceable through wearable technologies, and this sort of global bio-security state, that is rolling out with these digital pass systems, unveiled even further by the pandemic, is only the start of the true prison planet unfolding around us. Recently, in January 2022 a Serbian Orthodox bishop called the world's Christians to unite against COVID vaccine passports. In a homily, the Serbian Orthodox Bishop Photius of the Eparchy of Zvornik and Tuzla described a great battle "being fought for human freedom on all continents" and urged the faithful to join the cause against digital slavery.^[23] Digital identity systems will track our real body as a character in real physical space, and virtual space. There is a shift towards something called Globalization 4.0, which is the next phase of globalization, aka the Fourth Reich, where they are not only platforming screen-based labor but also with haptic robotics and controllers so that you could sit in your bedroom and control a factory halfway around the world. The competition for "work" will be mediated through your digital identity on blockchain systems. The sensor networks have to be built, the coding has to be built, training the artificial intelligence is ongoing and the machine learning systems still have to be built, but I'm pretty sure they are already working on it. That's why it is expected that with 6G, we will have intelligent automated management underpinned by mobile edge computing, artificial intelligence, short-packet communication, and, of course, blockchain technologies. Another reason to abandon the crypto frenzy as it is a trap set up by the AI aka Cyber Satan.

Under the Obama Administration, there was a huge shift towards STEM education (Science, Technology, Engineering, and Math). This push has been very limited on literature and creative thinking unless it was about robotics. A huge move towards STEM was made and implemented in the U.S., because those in power knew from the start, that they need to build a spatial web to establish the Internet of Bodies (IoB), so they can finalize their evil plan for this global prison planet, and to manifest this they also need children to become willing participants, starting under the guise of a fun game. You would code these games, and all this would later normalize the world you live in made up of gaming environments. Even today in school classrooms, there is a push for behavioral management systems that are gamified, where you are portrayed as a cartoon, and teachers give children points for good behavior, that they can in turn exchange for digital items. This is all about conditioning kids to live in a virtual economy, which is how the capitalist growth model intends to move in the future. It is going to go inward into this other dimension that is a virtual world.^[24] The COVID-19 pandemic has propelled us into a whole new global frontier. Those hoping to navigate this interconnected and highly technological world of contact tracing, vaccine passports, and digital passes, will find themselves grappling with issues that touch on deep-seated moral, political, religious, and personal questions for which there may be no clear-cut answers. We are about to find our ability to access, engage and move about in the world dependent on which camp we fall into: those who have been vaccinated against COVID-19, and those who have not, who have now become the "infamous" unvaccinated, like me. "It is the latest status symbol. Flash it around, and you can get access to concerts, sports arenas, or long-forbidden restaurant tables. Some day, it may even help you cross a border without having to quarantine," showing us a glimpse of this dim future scenario, wrote Heather Murphy for the New York Times.^[25] "The new platinum card of the Covid age is the vaccine certificate." This is what M.I.T. professor Ramesh Raskar refers to as the new "currency for health," an apt moniker given the potentially lucrative role that Big Business (Big Pharma and Big Tech, especially) will play in establishing this pay-to-play marketplace. And the U.S. government has been all-too-happy to allow (at least for the moment), the corporate sector to take the lead, while in the ever so socialistic and Orwellian European Union, they have already imposed the most stringent vaccine mandates and passport rules in countries like Italy, France, Germany, and from Austria, we saw also the start of a dangerous new trend in November 2021, the lockdowns of the unvaccinated, that was soon embraced in the months to follow by many other countries of the EU including Italy. In the meantime, shocking new footage emerged from China at the end of 2021, showing police parading rule-breakers through the streets carrying placards with their names and photo identification, an act of "public shaming" condemned by the global community, that might still become a reality in many other countries. If certain people have it their way, the unvaccinated will be unable to board an airplane and will be banned from restaurants or bars for years to come. Some people even say the unvaccinated should lose their health insurance for making an unpopular personal health decision. During the pandemic, governments across the world set up reporting systems to rat out neighbors for having family over for the holidays. In the U.S., Vermont's governor even asked students to snitch on their parents who might have invited extended family during Thanksgiving 2020, and the following year was not much better, with a libtard President leading the charge— with the help of the Big Tech companies who are providing new, easy ways to report your “radical” friends and family to the government. But what constitutes radical for these slaves of the system? Basically, anything they don’t want you to do or believe.^[26] This is the problem when only a handful of powerful centralized institutions, guided by the antichristian Company of Jesus, and their Sabbatean friends, are indeed controlling America. We have an increased Global Surveillance spearheaded by the National Security Agency (NSA), which has shown itself to care little for constitutional limits or privacy in the U.S. and abroad, the surveillance state has come to dominate our government and our lives, and even if you live outside the U.S, the situation will be no different. Yet the government does not operate alone, it cannot. It requires an accomplice. Thus, the increasingly complex security needs of our massive federal government, especially in the areas of defense, surveillance, and data management, have been met within the corporate sector, which has shown itself to be a powerful ally that both depends on and feeds the growth of governmental bureaucracy. Take AT&T, for instance. Through its vast telecommunications network that crisscrosses the globe, AT&T provides the U.S. government with the complex infrastructure it needs for its mass surveillance programs.

According to The Intercept:

The NSA considers AT&T to be one of its most trusted partners and has lauded the company’s ‘extreme willingness to help.’ It is a collaboration that dates back decades. Little known, however, is that its scope is not restricted to AT&T’s customers. According to the NSA’s documents, it values AT&T not only because it ‘has access to information that transits the nation,’ but also because it maintains unique relationships with other phone and internet providers. The NSA exploits these relationships for surveillance purposes, commandeering AT&T’s massive infrastructure and using it, as a platform to covertly tap into communications processed by other companies.^[27]

Now magnify what the U.S. government is doing through AT&T and the Silicon Valley mafia on a global scale in support of the New World Order, and you have the “14 Eyes Program,” also referred to as the “SIGINT Seniors.” This global spy agency is made up of 14 members from around the world: The United States, The United Kingdom, Australia, Canada, New Zealand, Denmark, France, Netherlands, Norway, Germany, Belgium, Italy, Sweden, and Spain. In addition to these confirmed alliances, it is also worth mentioning another handful of countries that have been caught or suspected of exchanging information with the “Fourteen Eyes Alliance,” and those countries are Israel, Singapore, South Korea, Japan, India, and all British Overseas Territories. In addition to the core nations of the “14 Eyes Program,” the existence of two other international intelligence-sharing agreements has been confirmed. These two agreements, known as the “Five Eyes” and the “Nine Eyes” Alliances, might be or not be as tight-knit as the “14 Eyes Program,” but they still have wide implications for internet privacy as suggested by enhanced security and privacy, VPN companies.

Here is a brief breakdown of each of the three Alliances:

Five Eyes: US, UK, Canada, Australia, New Zealand

Nine Eyes: Five Eyes + Denmark, France, Holland, Norway

Fourteen Eyes: Nine Eyes + Germany, Belgium, Italy, Sweden, Spain

The Nine Eyes and Fourteen Eyes Alliances are essentially extensions of the original Five Eyes Alliance. While these countries may not all share as much information with each other as the Five Eyes Alliance, they still actively and willingly participate in international intelligence-sharing.^[28] Surveillance is just the tip of the iceberg when it comes to these global alliances working for the Great Reset. Then, as usual, war remains a huge money-making venture, and America, with its vast military empire and its ever so incestuous relationship with a host of international defense contractors, has been until now one of its biggest buyers and sellers of such business, thanks, of course, to all those swamp creatures in Washington DC. In this context, the American military-industrial complex has erected an empire unsurpassed in history, but things are changing on the horizon, and not looking good for Uncle Sam, as the powerful members of the Jesuit/ Illuminati elite, are preparing to switch to the New Chinese World Order with the help of Russia.

During the Christmas festivities of the year 2021 Russian State TV, said the U.S. will be “reduced to radioactive ash” if they don’t meet Russia’s demands regarding, Ukraine^[29], and a couple of days earlier China’s foreign minister said they would not fear a confrontation with the U.S.^[30] This while they are busy threatening

Taiwan with an invasion. In the meantime, the U.S. Airforce appears to be more interested in the sexuality of the individuals in its ranks led by the LGBTQ Initiatives Team (LIT)^[31] than in China and Russia, who are making threats towards this nation I now call home. No wonder Elon Musk, in his now epic 54-minute interview with Babylon Bee, savaged leftist puppet Sen. Liz Warren and described woke culture as a “mind virus,” and “arguably one of the biggest threats to modern civilization.”^[32] But the U.S. military doesn’t seem to care. The U.S. Army, for example, has followed the CIA’s suit made a few weeks earlier in May 2021^[33], with a new “woke” recruitment ad, that features an animated lesbian wedding and an LGBTQ parade^[34] because those are the nonsense problems of our time for the military of today, and all this while erecting an unprecedented security surveillance state in the U.S., to control all Americans. The military–industrial complex (MIC) keeps perpetuating a worldwide military empire with American troops stationed in 176 countries (over 70% of the countries worldwide), which is shown to be completely useless in case of a direct attack on U.S. soil. I am a big supporter of the military and believe that this farse needs to end, as people are finally realizing the fraud that is being inflicted upon them by the ruling elite, and as my friend, publisher of several of my books, and author, Brad Olsen, points out in his final book in the Esoteric Series Beyond Esoteric: Escaping Prison Planet, we all need to change the way we think,

Earth may have been “run” in a manner analogous to a prison planet in the ancient past, where religions and monumental construction projects were engineered under near-slavery conditions. It appears that this was attempted possibly for the purpose of inhibiting the natural and healthy development of civilization, as well as suppressing or distorting collective memory. While these efforts appear to have been interrupted, it is possible that residual disruptive influences remain in the “zoo.” But now the caged animals are waking up. Humanity is truly a collective intelligence. This collective intelligence changes only when the thoughts of many people evolve. By thinking differently, people create a change in their reality. It is impossible for the thoughts of a single individual to do this alone, whether that person is the president of a nation, a saint, or a commoner. It is useless to petition the elites to change society, for these people became elites in the first place by reflecting the consciousness of the society that shaped them. However, when the masses within a society change, then do the elites change. Thus, there is no escape from the fact that if one wants a better world, one has to work with the masses within a society, since the masses themselves literally have to think their way into that better world. There are no exceptions to this.^[35]

However, I’m afraid our society is moving within the next decade towards a point of no return. So, it is impossible to even try to push everyone towards a significant change for a “better world,” because sadly most people today comply more and more with the Great Reset. Of course, there are still those like-minded individuals that can join our Great Reject.

Recently philosopher José Quarracino an influential Catholic writer exposed Pope Francis as a cunning climber of the Church's power structure who nonetheless serves as a “buffoon of a plutocratic group” claiming a need to rehabilitate capitalism for the global good. The oligarchs in Francis’ good graces feel guilty because they “know they have become hyper-billionaires while 90% of the world's population has received some crumbs,” said philosopher José Quarracino, slamming the pontiff for cozying up to the world's elites by creating the Council for Inclusive Capitalism with the Vatican.^[36] This organization that descends from the previous Coalition for Inclusive Capitalism, is directly connected to both the Academy of the Illuminati in Rome and the Rothschild family, and they have “explicitly elected Pope Francis as their moral guide.”^[37] This new international foundation brings together about seventy elite members of the Vatican-led New World Order, and is fueled with powerful managers, influential bankers, and consultants of the highest level from all over the world, divided between “Advisors” and “Members” who call themselves “Stewards” and “Allies.” This new “mysterious foundation” was created with the direct involvement of the Illuminati Academy in Rome in December 2020, on the personal initiative of Lynn Forester De Rothschild herself, wife of Sir Evelyn Robert de Rothschild, president of NM Rothschild & Sons, financial advisor to the Queen of England, and former governor of the prestigious London School of Economics, as well as the owner of The Economist. Back on April 11, 2013, Lady Lynn Forester de Rothschild and Sir Evelyn de Rothschild who is very popular in China, that seems obsessed with the Rothschild family legacy, participated in a dialogue on Inclusive Capitalism, held on CKGSB’s Beijing campus. Sir Evelyn Robert de Rothschild who has always been a close friend of Jesuit Illuminati agents, Bill and Hillary Clinton, and his wife, Lynn Forester De Rothschild, have always been close to the Democratic Party, she is, in fact, a registered member of the U.S. Democratic Party. On top of that, Lynn Forester De Rothschild was until July 2020, the CEO of the family office E.L. Rothschild LLC., and she is currently a founding partner and administrator of Inclusive Capital Partners, and an investment manager for the 1.5 billion USD Spring Fund (a god sum of money for sure), whose investments seeks returns where a portion of the value, is always used to improve the environmental and social performance of the companies in which it is invested.

In my eyes at least, Lynn Forester De Rothschild seems the typical follower of the Green leftist ideal, which refers primarily to a political affiliation that combines elements of Environmentalism, Feminism, Socialism, and Pacifism, for the joy of the Company of Jesus. That's why at the center of this "Coalition for Inclusive Capitalism with the Vatican," there is Piergiorgio Bassi, Vice President of the Academy of the Illuminati, of which the former Grand Master of Italian Freemasonry, Giuliano Di Bernardo, is President. Bassi, who I know personally from my time in the Illuminati, is an entrepreneur with high-level relationships in the Vatican, that I have already talked extensively about, in Volumes 2 and 4 of my Confessions.^{[38] [39]}

The Sabbatean Frankist Involvement and the QAnon PSYOP

Although the federal government obscures so much about its defense spending that accurate figures are difficult to procure, we do know that since 2001, the U.S. government has spent more than $1.8 trillion in the wars in Afghanistan and Iraq (that's $8.3 million per hour). That doesn't include wars and military exercises waged around the globe, which are expected to push the total bill upwards of $12 trillion by 2053. The illicit merger of the global armaments industry and the Pentagon that President Dwight D. Eisenhower warned us against more than 50 years ago has come to represent perhaps the greatest threat to the nation's fragile infrastructure today.

America's expanding military empire is bleeding the country dry at a rate of over $15 billion a month (or $20 million an hour), and that's just what the government spends on foreign wars. That does not include the cost of maintaining and staffing the 1000-plus U.S. military bases spread around the globe. Incredibly, although the U.S. constitutes only 5% of the world's population, America boasts almost 50% of the world's total military expenditure, spending more on the military than the next 19 biggest spending nations combined. The Pentagon spends more on war than all 50 states combined spend on health, education, welfare, and safety. There's a good reason why "bloated," "corrupt" and "inefficient" are among the words most commonly applied today about the government, especially the Department of Defense and its contractors. Price gouging has become an accepted form of corruption within the American military empire. It's not just the American economy that is being gouged, unfortunately.

Driven by a greedy defense sector in bed with the Illuminati and elite Freemasonry, the American homeland has been transformed into a battlefield with militarized police and weapons better suited to a war zone. President Biden, marching in lockstep with his predecessors (aside from our unusual 45th President Donald J. Trump during his first and possibly last mandate), have continued to expand America's military empire abroad and domestically in a clear bid to pander to the powerful money interests (military, corporate, and security) controlled by the Sabbatean-Frankist/Jesuit Deep State, that holds the present government in its clutches, and might have compromised former President Trump who flew on Jeffrey Epstein's private Lolita Express jet more times than was previously known, as light logs revealed after new documents were released during Ghislaine Maxwell trial that ended with a guilty verdict.^[40] As well all know, Ghislaine Maxwell sexually abused underage girls and joined the late Sabbatean-Frankist/ Illuminati Kingpin Jeffrey Epstein in directing, amongst others, Virginia Roberts Giuffre, to be sexually abused by Epstein's powerful friends like Prince Andrew, who was recently stripped of all his royal titles for this reason.^[41] Giuffre is quoted saying Maxwell, "trained me as a sex slave."^[42] After all, "Do what you want, and you will be saved," is the message of the Jewish heresy called Frankism, which sounds very much like Aleister Crowley's "Do what thou wilt shall be the whole of the law," that Ghislaine Maxwell, the now-defunct boyfriend Jeffrey Epstein, and even her late father, Robert Maxwell, seemed to have followed. The Maxwell's and Epstein were all part of this secretive Jewish cult that originated in the 18th century and recruits influential followers amongst the Jewish elite until the present day. The nihilist religion of Frankism preaches "redemption through sin." The doctrine of "the sacred sin," demands to annihilate moral religion and any other ethical belief system. This proves once again that Crowley's Thelema was simply an offshoot of the Sabbatean heresy that also influence the birth of Theosophy.

To quote a prayer by Zevi himself:

Baruch atah Adonai, Elohainu Melech ha-olam; matir issurim: Blessed art thou, Lord our God, King of the Universe, who makes the forbidden things permissible.

So, if we cannot be saints, let us all be sinners that's the basic idea. The "true way" of the Sabbatean Frankist "believers" is going on the path of evil to redeem oneself and humankind. An insane presumption by the Sabbatean Frankist, that praises the redemptive powers of destruction, to ultimately bring deliverance to the world.

Did the founder of this movement, foresee what should come in the centuries after him when he said of himself that "wherever I set foot all will be destroyed, for I came into this world only to destroy and to annihilate?" The Sabbatean Frankists are, after all, the secret rulers of this materialistic world of today, in contrast with the Jesuits who are the "Spiritual" ones, and don't believe for a moment in the rubbish pushed by people like the known conspiracy theorist, and Youtuber, Adam Green, of Know More News. Green asserts that the World Economic Forum is controlled by Jews who are using the Great Reset as part of a plan to "set up a Zionist, Noahide, One World Government according to the prophecies." Adding in his, at times senseless "antisemitic" rants indicated by the ADL, that, "the Great Reset is tied in with all of this."^[43] Really, Adam? Your erroneous and superficial interpretation gives only ammunition to the enemy that has been trying to destroy real Judaism since the advent of the false Messiah Sabbatai Zevi. Because Adam Green seems to only partially get the whole picture refusing, willingly, or unwillingly, to investigate the truth about Sabbatean-Frankism, that I would like to clear up once and for all to all my readers right now.

1. Communism (Marx)
2. Sexual depravity (Freud)
3. Corporate Leftism (Bernays)

4. Multiculturalism (Horace Kallen)
5. Deconstructivism/Critical Theory (Walter Benjamin)
6. Frankfurt School (Adorno)
7. Radical jurisprudence (Brandeis, Frankfurter, and Cardozo)
8. Large-scale, non-selective immigration (Israel Zangwill, Emma Lazarus)

What do these influential ideologies all have in common? The answer is plain and simple, that they are all linked to the Sabbatean Frankist, a distinct quasi-Satanic schism within Jewry, that profoundly influenced both Freemasonry and the Illuminati, which I discussed in detail in Volume 4 of my Confessions,^[44] which was started by the self-proclaimed messiah Sabbatai Zevi (1626-1676), and Jacob Joseph Frank (1726-1791) who declared to be his reincarnation. The extraordinary prevalence of Sabbatean-Frankist influence among top Jewish intellectuals from 1850-1950 makes it statistically impossible to deny its role because of the impossible coincidences around it. Remember, the Sabbatean-Frankists seek to invert traditional Jewish-Christian values, including the 10 Commandments, restrictions on debauched sexuality, man's dominion over the environment, etc. Further, given Sabbatean-Frankism's apocalyptic nature, the modern Left is riven with irrational destructive impulses.^[45] On top of this, Sabbatean-Frankism has also influenced negatively the whole Western Initiatic System and all the secret societies within it, they brought into the fold the Satanic use of sexual magic to achieve their evil goals. This general thesis has been explored only partly by historians Paul Johnson and Gershom Scholem (1897-1982), but never in such detail to learn about all the interactions between the Sabbatean Frankists, the various secret societies of the Illuminati network, and, of course, the world of politics. There are, in fact, several implications of this thesis I need to point out here: The failures of the contemporary Left do not represent "good faith" secular humanist efforts gone wrong. As some researchers point out, is very possible that Freud, Marx, and other Sabbatean Frankist intellectuals purpose-built their ideas to destroy the West, even the U.S. Supreme Court was heavily influenced by Sabbatean Frankists. Their impact helped cause a revolution via the court in the 50s-70s that undemocratically imposed decadent/anti-Judeo-Christian (i.e. Frankist) values on the country. Since the Left is fundamentally a quasi-Satanic movement devoted to destroying traditional Judeo-Christian civilization, it is a natural ally with like-minded Islam, despite superficial differences (feminism, gay rights).^[46] Islam, the Left, the Vatican, and Freemasonry, will seamlessly cooperate to destroy the West as they cooperated once to topple the Shah in the Iranian Revolution. Any civilization will eventually grow contemptuous of its stern founding virtues. Sabbatean-Frankism's resonance is part of a cycle where civilizations grow complacent and ultimately self-destructive and this is, unfortunately, a fact, not a hypothesis. Count Radetzky, who defeated both Napoleon and the Frankist-inspired rebels of 1848, appears to have understood the nature of the Left, which isn't secular humanism or mere nihilism, but destructiveness as an end-in-itself, these are his words:

Soldiers! Open your eyes to the abyss that opens at your feet; everything is in us; the mainstays of the social order have been destroyed; property, morality, religion are threatened with destruction. Everything that is holy and dear to man, everything on which the state is based and which it upholds, people are determined to destroy. That, not liberty, is the aim of every rabble-rouser who wants to drag you down to your ruin and shame. ^[47]

If Frankism is an ideology of destruction, how does it animate the Left? Saul Alinsky tells us by dedicating his work to Lucifer. That's why the Illuminati, or various branches of Freemasonry, or the Golden Dawn, or the O. T. O., even have all connections with the Sabbatean-Frankists. The late scholar and researcher Jonathan Sellers, founder of the now-defunct site Antiquities of the Illuminati, who died recently from what we assume was complications of COVID, wrote some material for Christopher Hyatt's Black Book series, as well as several books of his own, including Jah-Bul-On, The Legacy of the GIFT, and several compilations and translations of historical source material tracing the development of esoteric thought through the Nusairi, Yezidi, and Nabataean cultures, says in the introductory remarks to Allen H. Greenfield's book, The Roots of Modern Magick: Glimpses of the Authentic Tradition from 1700-2000:

These are ideas that are not new, but they are fresh since they have not been dealt with as often as other lineages in the Authentic Tradition, such as the Illuminati, or various branches of Freemasonry, or the Golden Dawn, or the O. T. O., even. Perhaps a hundred years from now, nobody will care that the Lurianic school at Safed inherited the rich traditions of Languedocian Kabbalah, or that it influenced the birth and evolution of the Sabbatian movement; or the Dönme, or the Frankists; or that the Bekhtashi Order is another influence in this line, and has roots in the Nusairi of Syria, themselves going back to ancient Phoenicia.^[48]

Scholem himself, also maintained that Sabbatai Zevi was deeply influenced by the Bektashi community, and the Phoenicians that influenced them did indeed practice child sacrifice. Just as ancient Greek and Roman propagandists insisted for centuries, the Carthaginians did, in fact, kill their own infant children, burying them with sacrificed animals and ritual inscriptions in special cemeteries to give thanks for favors from the gods.^[49] Note in this devilish context the famous quote from Milton's Paradise Lost, "Better to reign in Hell, than serve in Heaven." The Left seeks to preside over bringing hell on earth, that's why they placed the statue of Moloch, once revered by Phoenicians amongst others, at the Colosseum, just in time for the launch of their biological warfare/pandemic, and to accomplish this project they use Global Policing, while, of course, they continue in secret their evil Satanic practices. Look, for example, at pictures of international police forces, and you will have a hard time distinguishing them between American police and those belonging to other nations, and there's a reason they all look alike, garbed in the militarized, weaponized uniform of a standing army. There's a reason why they act alike, too, and speak a common language of force: they belong to a global police force that belongs to the New World Order, the name of the last variant of this never-ending nightmare.

For example, Israel one of America's closest international allies, and one of the primary yearly recipients of billions of dollars in U.S. foreign military aid, has been at the forefront of a little-publicized exchange program aimed at training American police to act as occupying forces in their communities, and at the same time is becoming one of the leaders of this worldwide medical oppression. As The Intercept sums it up, American police are "essentially taking lessons from agencies that enforce military rule rather than civil law."^[50] This idea of global policing is reinforced by the so-called Strong Cities Network program, which trains local police agencies across America on how to identify, fight, and prevent extremism, as well as address intolerance within their communities, using all of the resources at their disposal. The cities included in the global network include New York City, Atlanta, Denver, Minneapolis, Paris, London, Montreal, Beirut, and, of course, Oslo, a city I know all too well. The official objective is to prevent violent extremism by targeting its source: racism, bigotry, hatred, intolerance, etc. In other words, police—acting as extensions of the United Nations—will identify, monitor, and deter individuals who exhibit, express, or engage in anything that could be construed as extremist, but the concern with the government's anti-extremism program is that it will, in many cases, be utilized to rebrand otherwise lawful, nonviolent activities as potentially extremist ones, silencing any opposition to the New World Order, and, of course, the security of the citizens is not their priority.

As John Whitehead writes for The Daily Progress:

Keep in mind that the government agencies involved in ferreting out American "extremists" will carry out their objectives — to identify and deter potential extremists — in concert with fusion centers (of which there are 78 nationwide, with partners in the private sector, and globally), data collection agencies, behavioral scientists, corporations, social media, and community organizers and by relying on cutting-edge technology for surveillance, facial recognition, predictive policing, biometrics and behavioral epigenetics (in which life experiences alter one's genetic makeup).

This is pre-crime on an ideological scale...^[51]

Reality looks increasingly like Steven Spielberg's "Minority Report." Are you starting to get the picture now? On almost every front, whether it's the war on drugs or the sale of weapons, or regulating immigration, or establishing prisons, or advancing technology, or fighting a pandemic if there is a profit to be made and power to be amassed, you can bet that the government and its global partners have already struck a deal that puts the American people on the losing end of the bargain.

We've been losing our freedoms so incrementally for so long—sold to us in the name of national security and global peace, maintained by way of martial law disguised as law and order, and enforced by a standing army of militarized police and a political elite determined to maintain their powers at all costs—that it's hard to pinpoint when it all started going downhill, but we're certainly on that downward trajectory now, and things are moving fast. In this context, the "government of the people, by the people, for the people" has almost perished, and we have done it to ourselves, often trusting the wrong persons, and the wrong information, like Qanon (spelled at times Q-Anon) for example, that is the result of a carefully orchestrated operation of Psychological warfare that unfortunately led many people astray. This was even confirmed by former Trump national security adviser, Michael Flynn, who once embraced his position as hero of the QAnon conspiracy theorists. The revelation came up during a private phone call with Trumpworld lawyer Lin Wood, who was complaining to Flynn that his QAnon supporters had attacked him online. Flynn at that point attempted to disown QAnon, claiming it was a “disinformation campaign” created by the CIA. “I think it’s a disinformation campaign,” Flynn said on the call. Flynn’s exact words were:

I think it’s a disinformation campaign that the CIA created. That’s what I believe. Now, I don’t know that for a fact, but that’s what I think it is. I think it’s a disinformation campaign. [\[52\]](#)

The call was published online as a result of a battle that the increasingly discredited Wood seems to be having against one-time allies like Flynn, and also other prominent conservative figures, including Georgia Rep. Marjorie Taylor Greene, and even Fox News host Tucker Carlson. So what is Psychological warfare, known also like the acronym PSYWAR, one of the basic aspects of modern Psychological Operations (PSYOP)? Well one of the best and most clear definitions is given by the RAND Corporation (“research and development”), an American nonprofit global policy think tank created in 1948 by Douglas Aircraft Company, a creature of the military–industrial complex, to offer research and analysis to the United States Armed Forces:

Psychological warfare involves the planned use of propaganda and other psychological operations to influence the opinions, emotions, attitudes, and behavior of opposition groups. RAND has studied military information support operations (MISO) in many countries and war zones and has provided objective and supportable recommendations to policymakers on methods and tactics to employ or defend against these operations. [\[53\]](#)

QAnon is not like some believers say, a military intelligence officer on your side, or a Trump administration insider, or Trump himself, but rather the contrary.

For Ryan Gable in the latest edition of his book The Technological Elixir:

Q-Anon supposedly represents a person or group of persons with “Q-Clearance”, a clearance level in the U.S. Department of Energy. This shadow force acted anonymously to leak secret information to the public in codes on message boards. It revealed nothing much more than what the public, in certain communities, already knew, desired to be true, already believed, or wanted to believe. This may pertain to extraterrestrial disclosure or the crimes of high-level government officials. The cult developed into a political arm of U.S. President Donald Trump, albeit separate from the administration's control. It professed that Trump was fighting a corrupt group of Satanic pedophiles and that mass arrests of these criminals would be carried out in secret. After years of false predictions, which were based on documented crimes such as human trafficking and Jeffrey Epstein, the entire narrative fell apart when Trump’s term ended and his stay in the White House was not extended by military assistance in response to a rigged election. The mass arrests turned out to be of Q supporters who had propagated false and sometimes dangerous rhetoric. The movement allowed for people to LARP, or live-action role-play, as heroes saving children and fighting corruption through social media and Internet forums. Q-anon was therefore a more “right” leaning version of the “left” leaning BLM or Antifa. The latter two groups were live-action role-playing games for those fighting for social justice. Q supporters wore the Q and BLM supporters wore the fist. All were groups founded on political extremism.

Q-Anon as a whole seemed to have been nothing more than a highly advanced form of digital psychological warfare and a counterintelligence operation. Its motto, “Trust the Plan”, was eerily similar to the counterintelligence operation of the State Political Directorate of the Soviet Union. Operating from 1921 to 1926, Operation Trust (the plan) was a fake anti-Bolshevik resistance organization meant to identify malcontents of the Communist Party. A similar program, the Hundred Flowers Campaign, operated in Communist China from 1956 to 1957 with the same purpose, directed at finding critics of Mao Zedong’s regime. Q-Anon essentially played the same purpose for extreme leftist ideologies, those often aligning with Marxism and Communism, and groups such as Black Lives Matter and Antifa. It helped to identify opponents of the democratic party and extremist left-wing cults.

It is less than surprising that before “Q” became popular and formed a cult of code-breaking followers there was mention of something peculiar by former CIA director David Petraeus. In March of 2012, he gave a talk for an American not-for-profit venture capital firm, In-Q-Tel, based in Arlington, Virginia, very close to the CIA headquarters in Langley. The name of the firm may seem purely circumstantial until one reads what David had to say about computer learning and growth:

“The current ‘Internet of PCs’ will move, of course, toward an ‘Internet of Things’ - of devices of all types -

50 to 100 billion of which will be connected to the Internet by 2020. As you know, whereas machines in the 19th century learned to do, and those in the 20th century learned to think at a rudimentary level, in the 21st century, they are learning to perceive - to sense and respond.”

He goes on to discuss nanotechnology and “items of interest” to be “located, identified, monitored, and remotely controlled through technologies such as radio-frequency identification sensor networks,” that are “tiny embedded servers, and energy harvesters - all connected to the next-generation Internet using abundant, low cost, and high-power computing.” From this computing will come “cloud computing, in many areas greater and greater supercomputing, and, ultimately, heading to quantum computing.”

It should not be lost on keen readers that we are dealing with a grouping of technology companies and intelligence officials gathering at a conference with the name In-Q-Tel, relating to intelligence and Q, concerning David’s statements at the event about “Quantum Computing.” Q-Anon is likely not some person or group of people with “Q” level access, but instead a highly developed AI or SOCI system. It not only thinks but also has learned to perceive what the public wants, and therefore how to sense what is desired to formulate a response.

Several years after this conference, IBM revealed in 2019 that they were releasing their first commercial quantum computer called, unsurprisingly, the IBM Q System One. Also, in 2010, IBM released its question-answering computer system developed by the company’s DeepQA project. Q-Anon could therefore be more precisely be referred to as Quantum-Anonymous, Q-AI-non, or Q-Anon-sense. [\[54\]](#)

“Q” is a project working for the rise of the AI/Cyber Satan take over, that has been controlled since day one by multiple people from both the military-industrial complex and civil intelligence agencies like the CIA, specialized in PSYWAR, working for the shadow government—a corporatized, militarized, entrenched global bureaucracy—that is fully operational and running the United States in the past few decades, using the Democratic Party, as well as the neocons of the Republican Party, as their mouthpiece. So put it in your heads once and for all, there are no “White hats” working to save you, that’s only a term borrowed from the hacker’s lexicon, and the so-called “Swamp Creatures” are still there in Washington DC, and given the current trajectory, dramatic expansion, globalization, and merger of governmental and corporate powers, we’re not going to recognize the United States in 20 years from now, and part of the failure to react appropriately by WE THE PEOPLE is also due to the QAnon PSYOP.

It's taken less than a generation for our freedoms to be eroded and the Global Deep State's structure to be erected, expanded, and entrenched. Mark my words: the U.S. government in the present condition will not save us from the chains of the Global Deep State. Now some will tell you that any mention of a New World Order government—a power elite conspiring to rule the world—is the stuff of conspiracy theories. However, after my own experiences, I wholeheartedly believe that one should always mistrust those in power, take alarm at the first encroachment on one's liberties, and establish powerful constitutional checks against government mischief and abuse. I can also attest to the fact that power corrupts, and absolute power corrupts absolutely.

Like John W. Whitehead author of Battlefield America: The War on the American People wrote in April 2021:

I have studied enough of this country's history—and world history—to know that governments (the U.S. government is no exception) are at times indistinguishable from the evil they claim to be fighting, whether that evil takes the form of terrorism, torture, drug trafficking, sex trafficking, murder, violence, theft, pornography, scientific experimentations or some other diabolical means of inflicting pain, suffering, and servitude on humanity. And I have lived long enough to see many so-called conspiracy theories turn into cold, hard facts.

Remember, people used to scoff at the notion of a Deep State (a.k.a. Shadow Government). They used to doubt that fascism could ever take hold in America, and sneer at any suggestion that the United States was starting to resemble Nazi Germany in the years leading up to Hitler's rise to power.^[55]

How do they get our souls? Well, there is a passage from Whitley Strieber's The Key, that seems to explain it. This is purportedly a true account of an encounter Strieber himself had with a mysterious humanoid being who simply knocked on the door of his Toronto hotel room at 3 am on June 6, 1998, entered his suite, and told him about mankind's place in the cosmos and his inescapable fate.

Soul traps. The lures are the lusts and hungers of this life. The [soul], exploring the newfound freedom of the energetic world, finds himself able to visit his friends and enemies, to see their innermost being and thoughts, even to converse with them in ways that their elemental selves cannot perceive. He is in danger, but he does not know it, for he has not ascended. He is still ensnared by his lust. Soon he will be shown something that perfectly fulfills his most cherished desires, desires he has never fulfilled. Unable to resist the chance to do it, at last, he enters by a golden door into eternal captivity.

Strieber's account may be a synthesis: partly "true" (in that he believes it occurred as he relates it), part visioning, part somnambulistic dream state. Whatever emanates from the mind of Whitley Strieber, originates from some realm outside of our Cartesian materialist notion of consensus reality bringing in knowledge from a place beyond the boundaries of time and space. He reminds us of that other prophetic visionary from the Illuminati called Rudolf Steiner, who I wrote previously about in Volume 1 of my Confessions, and who, like Mark E. Jeftovic pointed out in a brilliant article: "spent much of his life in a hypnogogic state, possibly without even realizing it." Steiner and Strieber for Jeftovic, "are both talking about the same thing. The idea that the souls of humanity could be captured in a technological machine, where they would wander forever, believing they have omniscience, even Godhood." Ray Kurzweil, one of the big players of this dark age, current Director of Engineering at Google, and author of The Singularity is Near, wrote the following:

At that point, the longevity of one's mind file will not depend on the continued viability of any particular hardware medium (for example, the survival of a biological body and brain). Ultimately software-based humans will be vastly extended beyond the severe limitations of humans as we know them today. They will live out on the Web, projecting bodies whenever they need or want them, including virtual bodies, foglet projected bodies, and physical bodies comprising nanobot swarms and other forms of nanotechnology.

Jeftovic adds to Kurzweil's thought above:

Steiner called it The Eighth Sphere and warned that sometime in the late 20th century, Ahriman would incarnate in the west and drive a global process of harvesting human souls into it. The zeitgeist of radical material reductionism would dampen, deaden, and dumb down humanity to its coarsest, most basic layers: meat. Our minds, what we think is our consciousness, our souls, self-awareness even our free will, it's all just an illusion. Our experts say. It's just something that happens when our brains gas off certain neurochemicals.

However...

We can take that illusion, what we call our consciousness, and pretty soon now (just as soon as The Singularity happens), we'll be able to upload that illusion "into the cloud", into The Metaverse and we'll be able to experience anything we want, for as long as we want, forever.

So, after a lot of people have been duped on one side into believing the QAnon lies, and on the other side, the neverending, tales and fake news of the mainstream media narrative, here we are ready for the Metaverse, the next diabolical step of the New World Order. Ray Kurzweil himself confirms this sad reality upon us:

"We will spend increasing portions of our time in virtual environments and will be able to have any type of desired experience with anyone, real or simulated, in virtual reality.... Lingering problems from our waning industrial age will be overcome."

This isn't some phantasmagorical utopian afterlife promised by Bible-banging evangelists or bomb-toting Jihadists – this is serious Scientism. Ray Kurzweil, Elon Musk, even the late Jeffrey Epstein, have been all announcing that the era of Transhumanism is arriving. We are on the cusp of becoming Post-Biological, and when that happens, all our problems will be solved in the eyes of the controllers of the Great Reset.

Mark E. Jeftovic says:

...the "You'll Own Nothing and Be Happy" Great Narrative (as it is now being called) is that the rabble must ratchet down its standard of living. The reason why isn't about climate change or COVID.

It's because we're in the late-stages of Globalism and the world's financial and economic system is on the verge of imploding.

The people in charge, the people who've been doubling down on failed policies for decades, the people who brought us here with Quantitative Easing, ZIRP/NIRP, debt, Big Government, and The Forever Wars, they want to stay in charge.

So they're going to use COVID, Climate, Collectivism, and Wokeness to herd the knuckle-dragging plebians into The Metaverse. That way they'll be easier to control, they'll be placated, and they won't take up so much space in the real world.

In the real world, the insular, inbred elites will be zipping around in their private jets. They'll be reimagining everybody else's lives. Deciding how much "real-world time" and resources to apportion to the rabble. Uploading intellectual Muzak directly into their brains telling them that it's all for their own good.

There's only one problem

This would all be well and good, in fact, large swaths of the masses may even prefer a synthetic life in The

Metaverse than having to deal with the vicissitudes and tribulations of reality.^[56]

True, most people, aka the new “plebians” will probably be taking refuge in the Metaverse, as the real world is becoming full of restrictions, and increasingly difficult. Monica Kim wrote for The Atlantic, back in 2015, that:

All signs point to a future filled with virtual reality, and according to Zuckerberg et al, the potential applications are beyond count: One could have breakfast at the Louvre beside the Winged Victory of Samothrace, followed by a lunchtime spelunk through Thailand’s water caves. Of course, there are deeply immersive video games—the linchpin of the modern VR movement—and various movies in production for these devices, while Barcelona’s BeAnotherLab has created an empathy application for the Oculus Rift that allows users to swap genders. (Inevitably, a sex toy company is also developing a way to have virtual robot sex, according to Motherboard.)^[57]

And like Monica Kim explains in the same article that while in the 90’s “Despite mass media interest from publications like Scientific American and Wired, the technology wasn’t there—or it was too expensive—and the audience was a tad too niche.” Now in the 2020s things have completely changed, and virtual reality, aka the Metaverse, is finally ready to enslave humanity in time for the Great Reset where “You’ll own nothing. And you’ll be happy.” However, Ray Kurzweil says on the very construct of a Metaverse that:

The straightforward brain-porting scenario involves scanning a human brain (most likely from within), capturing all of the salient details, and instantiating the brain’s state in a different — most likely much more powerful — computational substrate. This will be a feasible procedure and will happen most likely around the late 2030s”^[58]

But for some critics including Mark Jeftovic, the Algorithmic Imitation (“AI”) that would be required to facilitate this, and have it work along the lines proselytized by Kurzweil et al, is not attainable in the end. The reason is the internal contradictions of what they call “techno-utopianism”. Those inevitable contradictions are explained in the following way by Mark Jeftovic:

If the mind is a byproduct of physical processes then consciousness is an illusion and free will doesn’t exist, because all phenomena are simply linear outcomes of biochemistry and physics. If so then there is nothing to upload into the cloud. Nor is there any real point in doing so. If we really do live in a billiard ball universe, who cares if we can make a shot last forever? There is nobody to care and nothing to care about. More importantly, “AI” at the level pontificated to solve all our problems, “by late in this century nonbiological intelligence on the Earth will be many trillions of times more powerful than biological intelligence” (Kurzweil, of course) is not attainable because our conception of what causes mind and thus intelligence is completely inverted. Mind, consciousness, and intelligence will never emerge from material reality because it’s the other way around.

The Belief that the mind emerges from matter is this era’s geocentrism. As was the case with the now antiquated idea that the Earth was the center of the universe. The heliocentric cosmos was probably understood by certain civilizations thousands of years before Giordano Bruno was burned at the stake for saying as much in the 17th century. So too, did the ancients understand that “All is mental”. The universe is vibration, probability, information, energy, and consciousness first. Out of that comes what we recognize as sub-atomic particles and atoms. The quantum physicists reconnected with this truth about a century ago, the rest of society, including the priests of the Temple of Scientism and Expert Management, haven’t gotten the memo, yet. If they did, they wouldn’t be trying to shoehorn our minds into a computer. They’d be trying to build computers that tap into the conscious base layer of quantum reality (note, this is not to be confused with what so-called ‘Quantum Computing’ endeavors to do). Because of this, everything premised upon the idea of super-intelligent, top-down, centralized control of the affairs of humanity, of the economy, of The Great Reset, The Great Narrative, and The New Normal, all of it is doomed to failure. It simply won’t work.^[59]

The problem, however, is that the expert class of managers deploying super-intelligent AI’s to solve all of our problems soon are the future army of the Antichrist, ready to manage the rabble and control all the future outcomes in the name of the New World Technocracy made possible by Cyber Satan. In the meantime, if you’re a modern plebeian like me, the word of the day is the Great Opt-Out or Great Reject which is well described in the following words:

Decentralize your affairs. Take sovereignty over your own life and your own economics. Link up with others doing the same. The counter-revolutionary impulse against late-stage Globalism is, in addition to spirituality, meditation, and contemplative practices, embracing decentralization and public-key cryptography.

[\[60\]](#)

I will cover more about the new populist concept of the Great Reject in Chapter 2, in the meantime, we can also consider the skepticism some pioneers of virtual reality have regarding Mark Zuckerberg's new project for the Metaverse, which they say will fail. Since 2003, people have been gathering virtually to do all the supposed "wonders" of the Metaverse, in the online world of Second Life, whose creator Philip Rosedale says a virtual reality internet is still some way off but admits that thanks to the pandemic the creator of FB now have a chance, also thanks to the relevance of his brand:

There are really two things that are external to the technology development itself that have happened recently. One is COVID, where there has been the worry that maybe we would have to shift some social and entertainment activities online. I think there are a lot of the big companies trying to figure out how they can make some money from that. And then the other one is simply Facebook's claim that it's an important thing and renaming themselves to try to align with it.[\[61\]](#)

Ethan Zuckerman former director of the MIT Center for Civic Media, and Associate Professor of the Practice in Media Arts and Sciences at MIT until May 2020 gives his definitive answer on the matter on the pages of The Atlantic:

*Facebook's metaverse sucks. From the first images in which legless torsos sit around a conference room, staring at a Zoom-like video conferencing screen, to Zuckerberg's tour of his virtual closet, filled with identical black outfits (see, he's got a sense of humor!), Zuck's metaverse looks pretty much like we imagined one would look like in 1994. Look, I'm playing cards with my friends and we're in zero gravity! And one of my friends is a robot! You could do this in Second Life 10 years ago, and in somewhat angular vectors in VRML 20 years ago.*
[\[62\]](#)

We can all hope that Mark Zuckenberg fails, but don't be too sure about it, mainly because behind Facebook's Metaverse project there is a whole elite that wants us trapped in virtual reality in the coming years, and if Mr. Zuckenberg will not manage to build the appropriate virtual prison for humanity, I'm sure some other players in the field, like Epic Games of Tim Sweeney for example, the creator of the Unreal Engine, will put it together. After all, Satan's helpers are many, especially in this day, and age. However, having bulldozed most real-life relationships already, Mark Zuckerberg is now moving to strip away what's left of our expectations of privacy, by dragging us kicking and screaming into an online padded digital prison called the Facebook "Metaverse," say no to this monstrosity. In the meantime, parents who bought their children one of the most advanced all-in-one VR Systems currently on the market, called Oculus Quest 2, could be in for a surprise, as there have been several instances of child grooming within VRChat, one of the virtual reality headset's most popular chatroom services. VRChat is an online virtual world platform where users get their first taste of the metaverse and use full-body avatars to conceal their identity, there have been instances of child abuse, harassment, racism, and pornography. Maybe there's a dark side to the Metaverse that needs to be discussed,[\[63\]](#) and for this reason, Facebook's Metaverse has recently created a sort of "personal bubble" around avatars after reports of rampant harassment and virtual groping. Facebook parent Meta created a minimum distance between users' avatars in its virtual reality network Horizon in February 2022, following reports of harassment, regarded as one of the thorny issues for its Metaverse vision. The "personal boundary" function in the immersive platform, where people can socialize virtually, puts an automatic four-foot ring of space around users' digital proxies[\[64\]](#), but will that be enough? That's why Bertilla Niveda in the new tech publication Geek Culture, wrote an article entitled "Is the Metaverse a great idea or a Sci-Fi Horror Movie in the making?" Warning about, "The phenomenal features of the Metaverse and why they could be a huge problem."[\[65\]](#) Even leftist The Guardian, published a dim statement about this new reality in connection to Mark Zuckerberg: "Facebook has ruined our reality, now it's coming for the Metaverse too."[\[66\]](#)

The Not So "Great" King Satan and Mr. Klaus

In November 2016 a video posted on Facebook by the World Economic Forum stated eight predictions about the world in 2030, including: "You'll own nothing. And you'll be happy. What you want you'll rent, and it'll be delivered by a drone."^[67] Well don't be surprised future prisoners of the Metaverse, "The Davos crowd's Great Reset heralds a dreary, diabolical apocalypse" says Justin Lee, who wrote for The American Conservative, in April 2021:

Satan took Christ to an exceedingly high mountain to show him all the kingdoms of the world and their glory. The Gospels do not name the mountain, but given the Adversary's flair for the dramatic, one rather doubts he favored the dusty hillocks of Palestine. Of all the astonishing peaks that may have tempted the Tempter, to choose any but the Jakobshorn would have been an unforgivable failure of the poetic imagination. At 8,500 feet, the Jakobshorn is far from the tallest peak in the Rhaetian Alps, but what it lacks in vertical grandeur it more than compensates for with a north-facing view of the most Satanic town on Earth: Davos, Switzerland.

Every year the world's wealthiest oligarchs and most influential political leaders meet in the resort town at the World Economic Forum to schmooze and strategize about the future. Davos has become a condensed symbol for the sort of world-bestrident power with which Satan must have tempted Christ; but whereas Christ refused to inaugurate his otherworldly kingdom through worldly means, the "Davos crowd"—long afflicted with messianic delusions—is eager to deploy coercion to inaugurate their own. Their agenda has been euphemistically named "The Great Reset," and it envisions what many of its proponents openly refer to as a "new world order."^[68]

Well, Set is the embodiment of evil, a deity that will eventually become in the Judeo-Christian world the infamous Satan. So, if we put together this occult interpretation of "The Great Reset", we then get "The Great King Satan." Justin Taylor, an Ordained Minister with the Universal Life Church Monastery, and an Ordained Universal Philosopher and Clergy Member of the Church of Spiritual Humanism, that works in line with the precepts of the Antichristian New Age philosophy writes this about the nature of Set:

In the ancient Egyptian Myth, Set killed his brother Osiris. He was the Prince of Darkness. Each evening Horus, the Sun or solar deity that ruled the day, would do battle with Set who ruled the night. Set would win this battle and send Horus into the underworld. The two combatants would fight throughout the night and in the morning Horus would eventually overcome the powers of darkness to rise or ascend into heaven. The next SUN/SET that you see may now have a different meaning to you. Set had many names throughout the thousands of years that numerous forms of this myth prevailed. The following are some of the various names of Set or that Set was identified with:

Seth
Apophis/Apop/Apap/Apepi Anubis
Sut
Sutu
Typhon
Toth
Sata

The last name in the list should look quite familiar even among the people of today's world ... SATA.

One of the Ancient Greek Myth versions of Set was Typhon or Typhoeus:

"A monster of the primitive world, who is described sometimes as a destructive hurricane (Typhoon), and sometimes a fire-breathing giant. According to Homer, he was concealed in the earth in the country of the Arimi ... In Hesiod, Typhon (the Greek for Set/Seth) and Typhoeus are two distinct beings. Typhon is represented as the son of Typhoeus, and a fearful hurricane ... Typhoeus ... is called the youngest son of Tartarus and Gaea ... He is described as a monster with 100 heads, fearful eyes, and terrible voices, who wanted to acquire the sovereignty of the gods and men, but, after a fearful struggle, was subdued by Zeus with a thunderbolt. He begot the winds, whence he is called the father of the harpies ... he was buried in Tartarus (hell), under Mount Aetna ... Typhoeus was identified with Set, who typified the power of darkness, the same power of darkness who slew Osiris."

Satan, as a great serpent being chained in the underworld or "bottomless pit/abyss" (Rev 20:1-3) is drawing from the Typhon and Apophis imagery. As for the pit being bottomless or a great abyss, Greek myths mention that the underworld of Tartarus is as far removed from the earth's surface as is heaven. Ancient Greek Myth imagery is once again being borrowed here.

Another very powerful myth from ancient Egypt that fit very well into the Biblical record of creation was the legend of the rebellion of Seth against Horus. Seth, a synonym of hatred and disobedience in Egyptian mythology, caused all sorts of troubles to befall man in revenge for his banishment by Horus and the rest of the Egyptian Ennead. In the minds of the early Egyptian Christians, Satan, as a parallel to Seth, became a rebel and the enemy of man, who began to lurk in ambush to drag him (man) into disobedience." - Dr. Wilson B. Bishai (a professor emeritus of Arabic for the Department of Near Eastern Languages and Civilizations at Harvard University)

And a quote from "The Christ Conspiracy"

"... Of course, the dualistic concepts of absolute good and evil did not originate with Christianity but are found long before the Christian era, particularly within Zoroastrianism. Satan is an adaptation of the Persian representative of evil "Ahriman," the twin brother of "God," the same as the Egyptian Set, Horus's twin and principal enemy also known as "Sata," whence comes "Satan." Horus struggles with Set in the exact manner that Jesus battles with Satan, with 40 days in the wilderness, among other similarities, such as the revealing from the mount "all the kingdoms of Earth." This myth represents the triumph of light over dark, or the sun's return to relieve the terror of the night. Horus/Set was the god of the two horizons; hence, Horus was the rising sun, and Set the time of the Sun-SET."^[69]

Of course, for people like Justin Taylor, deeply entrenched in gnostical heretical ideas typical of the Illuminati and their acolytes, "demon" is a Christian vilification of the Greek word "daemon, which likewise referred to a divine spirit," and despite all the political intrigue and the warnings of the New Testament, Lucifer, simply means, "Light-bearer," as he was in the earliest times a sun god, which is why he is called "Day Star, son of morning/dawn." And, of course, Justin Taylor's Satanic ideas, and vision of things, fit in perfectly with those of Klaus Schwab and the makers of the Great Reset, especially when Taylor writes:

So, those of you that are worried about Satan followed you around and made people do things, as you can see it was just a story that originated in ancient Egypt that sprang out of ignorance of the natural world. The church used it as a ploy to control people of the times that had no education and would easily fear these mythical entities.

On a deeper more esoteric level, allegorically, our ego is Satan, devil, demon, anti-christ ... simply because it goes against the common good (God) for its own egocentric and selfish desires.^[70]

To read, and learn what these people think, will benefit all my readers that want to fight this evil, but usually have no idea of the philosophy and twisted religious views of the organizations and people behind it. Jesus, for Taylor, Schwab, and the likes, is not the Jesus of the Gospels, but rather the “cosmic Christ” promoted in the New Age Movement by the Jesuits, as well as the “Communist Jesus” of The League of the Just. The original biblical bases for a cosmic Christology is often found in Colossians, Ephesians, and the prologue to the gospel of John, but in the modern period, a renewed interest in the cosmic Christ would arise among many Western scholars interested in developing what is known as eco-theology^[71], and Jesuit Pierre Teilhard de Chardin, was among the first to speak again of a “Cosmic Christ”^[72] in the 1920s and 1930s. He understood the Incarnation as bringing the historical Christ into the material world and, through evolution, leading all of creation towards perfection in the Omega Point,^[73] something I will discuss also further on. Interestingly enough, eco-theology, promoted even by the Vatican these days, is a form of constructive theology that focuses on the interrelationships of religion and nature, particularly in the light of environmental concerns, that are, as well all know, so dear to the left these days. Eco-theology generally starts from the premise that a relationship exists between human religious/spiritual worldviews and the degradation or restoration and preservation of nature. It explores the interaction between ecological values, such as sustainability, and the human domination of nature. The movement has produced numerous religious-environmental projects around the world.

Islamic Iranian philosopher, Seyyed Hossein Nasr, a pioneering figure in the field of eco-theology, was among the early thinkers “to draw attention to the spiritual dimensions of the environmental crisis”^[74], but the relationship of theology to the modern ecological crisis, became an intense issue of debate in Western academia in 1967, at the start of the liberal left militancy on college campuses, following the publication of the article, “The Historical Roots of Our Ecologic Crisis”, by Lynn White Jr., Professor of History at the ever-so libtard University of California at Los Angeles. In this work, White puts forward a creepy new Satanic theory that the Christian model of human dominion over nature has led to environmental devastation providing a voice for “The Ecological Complaint.”^[75] Can you believe it? Christianity is even blamed by these leftist Satanists for our environmental problems. No wonder the Illuminati and their brainwashed New age followers reject the classical interpretation of our Lord Jesus Christ for such garbage.

Justin Taylor writes:

... the cosmic Christ is universal and the origin of everything that exists, in any galaxy of matter or anti-matter. The cross is the intersection of Spirit and Matter ... positive and negative ... masculine and feminine. So from the crossing or union of these two forces appears that which we call the universe. Now, the objective for that energy to appear in the universe is to make Consciousness of its entity in its different aspects. Jesus becoming the Christ (Karest, Christos, Krishna, Krestus) is an archetype of you and I also becoming one with Christ Consciousness ... the Divine. Jesus said to his followers “you shall do greater things than I.” How is this possible if Jesus is God, as Christianity believes? In the NT Book of John 17:21, Jesus is quoted as praying to the Father/Source and saying “I pray that they may all be ONE, even as Thou art in me, O Father, and I am in Thee; that they also may be in us...” On a deeper esoteric level, and through modern Quantum Physics, we now know that this statement was nothing other than Truth. We are all one. We are tied together through universal unconsciousness ... the Field. The fiber of the Matrix of the entire universe. There are no “things” ... there is only IT. And we are all an individualized integral element and substance of the entire universal organism.

So, after all this, I want to talk more about the World Economic Forum, Klaus Schwab, and his connections to the Vatican elite, Freemasonry, and the Occult world. I will do this with the help of the work brought forward in early 2021 by Johnny Vedmore, a completely independent investigative journalist and musician from Cardiff, Wales that has made an incredible job in uncovering some of the least-known historical aspects of the creator of Satan’s “Great Reset”.

On 10 July 1870, Klaus Schwab’s grandfather Jakob Wilhelm Gottfried Schwab, referred to later as simply Gottfried, was born in a Germany, at war with its French neighbors. Karlsruhe, the town where Gottfried Schwab was born, was located in the Grand Duchy of Baden, ruled in 1870 by the 43-year-old Grand Duke of Baden, Frederick I. The following year, the aforementioned Duke would be present at the proclamation of the German Empire which took place in the Hall of Mirrors at the Palace of Versailles. He was the only son-in-law of the incumbent Emperor Wilhelm I and, as Frederick I, was one of the reigning sovereigns of Germany. By the time Gottfried Schwab turned 18 years old, Germany would see Wilhelm II take the throne upon the death of his father, Frederick III.

In 1893, a 23-year-old Gottfried Schwab would officially depart from Germany giving up his German citizenship and leaving Karlsruhe to emigrate to Switzerland. At the time, his occupation was noted as being that of a simple baker. Here, Gottfried would meet Marie Lappert, who was from Kirchberg near Bern, Switzerland, who was five years his junior. They would marry in Roggwil, Bern, on 27 May 1898, and the following year, on the 27th of April 1899, their child Eugen Schwab (Klaus Schwab's future father) was born. At the time of his birth, Gottfried Schwab had moved up in the world, having become a Machine Engineer. When Eugen was around one year old, Gottfried and Marie Schwab decided to return to live in Karlsruhe and Gottfried reapplied for German citizenship again. Eugen Schwab would follow in the footsteps of his father and also become a Machine Engineer and in future years, he would advise his children to do the same. Eugen Schwab would eventually begin working at a factory in a town in Upper Swabia in Southern Germany, capital of the district of Ravensburg, Baden-Württemberg.

The factory where he would forge his career was the German branch of a Swiss company named Escher Wyss^[76] that will become from that moment onwards, intertwined with the future fortunes of the German-Swiss family of the Schwab's. Escher Wyss & Cie., also known as Escher Wyss AG, was a Swiss industrial company with a focus on engineering and turbine construction, that remained in existence until it was taken over in 1969 by Sulzer AG^[77] now inside of the group Andritz AG. "Coincidentally" in the same year, Klaus Schwab, whose family's fortune was made at Escher Wyss, after two Ph.D.'s and a year at Harvard's Kennedy School, started to organize the first Davos symposium after writing a book about American management. Escher Wyss headquarters were in the Zürich quarter of Escher Wyss, which takes its name from the company.

The company was originally founded, as Escher Wyss & Cie., in 1805 by Hans Caspar Escher and Salomon von Wyss.^[78] Initially a textile spinning company, the two expanded the business to include a machine shop that manufactured textile machinery, water wheels, water turbines, power transmission equipment and starting in 1835, ships, including boilers, and steam engines, and after opening a branch in Austria in 1840, they also opened in 1856, due to the increasing amount of work, the Ravensburg branch. After all, Switzerland, had many long-standing economic ties to the Ravensburg area, with Swiss traders in the early 19th century bringing in yarn and weaving products. So Klaus Schwab and his younger brother, Urs Reiner Schwab, were both to follow in the footsteps of their grandfather, Gottfried, and their father, Eugen, and would both initially train as mechanical engineers. Klaus's father had told the young Schwab that, if he wanted to make an impact on the world, then he should train as a Machine Engineer but this would only be the beginning of Schwab's long list of University credentials. Klaus would begin studying his plethora of degrees at Spohn-Gymnasium Ravensburg between 1949 and 1957, eventually graduating from the Humanistisches Gymnasium in Ravensburg. Between 1958 and 1962, Klaus began working with various engineering companies and, in 1962, Klaus completed his mechanical engineering studies at the Swiss Federal Institute of Technology (ETH) in Zurich with an engineering diploma. The following year, he also completed an economics course at the University of Fribourg, Switzerland.

From 1963 until 1966, Klaus worked as Assistant to the Director-General of the German Machine-building Association (VDMA), Frankfurt. In 1965, Klaus was also working on his doctorate from the ETH Zurich, writing his dissertation on: "The longer-term export credit as a business problem in mechanical engineering". Then, in 1966, he received his Doctorate in Engineering from the Swiss Federal Institute of Technology (ETH), Zurich. At this time, Klaus's father, Eugen Schwab, who had become a Freemason, was swimming in bigger circles. After being a well-known personality in Ravensburg as the Managing Director of the Escher-Wyss factory from before the war, Eugen would eventually be elected as President of the Ravensburg Chamber of Commerce. In 1966, during the founding of the German committee for Splügen railway tunnel, Eugen Schwab defined the founding of the German committee as a project "that creates a better and faster connection for large circles in our increasingly converging Europe and thus offers new opportunities for cultural, economic, and social development".^[79] In 1967, Klaus Schwab gained a Doctorate in Economics from the University of Fribourg, Switzerland as well as a Master of Public Administration qualification from the John F. Kennedy School of Government at Harvard in the United States. While at Harvard, Schwab was taught by Henry Kissinger, who he would later say were among the top 3-4 figures who had most influenced his thinking for his entire life,^[80] confirming his role as mentor, which I previously mentioned. In 1970 Schwab, began to focus on his idea to create a platform that would allow European business and political leaders to exchange concerns, ideas, and knowledge.

However, in a very revealing interview given in 2010 by Schwab to award-winning journalist, and best-selling author, Carlye Adler, for Fortune, the founder of the World Economic Forum, said that to fund his first event in Davos, he had to take some risks. Should we believe him? Was Davos a genuine entrepreneurial adventure like Schwab often points out during his speeches, or a "calculated risk," by the future leader of the Great Reset? It is difficult, or almost impossible to believe, that influential Illuminati figures of the time like Henry Kissinger, or Otto von Habsburg, would jump on board of this project with a young fellow with little or no experience on the world stage.

...in 1970 I took a 50,000 Swiss franc ($11,434) loan from a German industrialist. The condition was either to pay him back or join his company, so I was nervous. We sent out invitations with response cards. Every morning the mail came, and I didn't want to spend time opening it so I put it under a very strong desk lamp where I could immediately see the response. Some 440 people came from 31 countries to the first meeting in 1971, including John Kenneth Galbraith. The success of the conference let me repay the debt and gave me a surplus, which I used to create the European Management Forum (now the WEF) as a not-for-profit foundation.^[81]

It seems like this was a classic test by the Illuminati elite, to let the young Schwab prove himself in front of the world after he was chosen for his family background by the same people who previously launched the Club of Rome two years earlier.

How the Club of Rome and Nazism Influenced the World Economic Forum

The most influential paramasonic/Illuminati group that inspired the creation of Klaus Schwab's project was the Club of Rome, an influential think tank of the scientific and monied elite that mirrors the World Economic Forum in many ways, including in its promotion of a global governance model led by a technocratic elite. The Club had been founded in 1968 by the Italian Bilderberger and Freemason, Aurelio Peccei (1908–1984), a known industrialist with socialist tendencies despite being critical of Marxism, and Scottish chemist and Freemason Alexander King (1909–2007), during a private meeting the two had at a residence owned by the Rockefeller family in Bellagio, Italy.

Among one of the first accomplishments of the Club was a report they commissioned in 1972 entitled The Limits to Growth (LTG), that later became a book translated into 37 languages compiled by a team of 16 (some sources say 17) researchers using World3, an incredibly advanced computer simulation of interactions between population, industrial growth, food production, and limits in the ecosystems of the earth^[82]. The futuristic model was based on the work of the computer pioneer Jay Forrester of MIT, as described in his book World Dynamics,^[83] that led to the first computer program dubbed World1, created by Forrester and commissioned under the auspices of the Club of Rome, which was created to model how well the world could sustain its growth. What World1 showed in the early 70s was that by 2040 there would be a global collapse if the expansion of the population and industry was to continue at the current levels. For the libtard Australian broadcaster ABC, which shared some of its original TV coverage based on the report commissioned by the Club of Rome in a new YouTube clip in 2018, the model's calculations made at MIT, that take into account the trends in pollution levels, population growth, the number of natural resources, and the overall quality of life on Earth, have so far been unnervingly on target for the propaganda of the New World Order, and 2020 was the first milestone envisioned by World1 in its predictions. That's the turning point for humanity when the quality of life was supposed to drop dramatically, and unfortunately, it did. ABC presented this apocalyptic scenario back in their 70s report, saying it will lead to the demise of large numbers of people all over the planet:

At around 2020, the condition of the planet becomes highly critical. If we do nothing about it, the quality of life goes down to zero. Pollution becomes so serious it will start to kill people, which in turn will cause the population to diminish, lower than it was in 1900. At this stage, around 2040 to 2050, civilized life as we know it on this planet will cease to exist.^[84]

Alexander King, the then-leader of the Club of Rome, evaluated the program's results to also mean that nation-states will lose their sovereignty, forecasting a New World Order with corporations managing everything. "Sovereignty of nations is no longer absolute," King told ABC. "There is a gradual diminishing of sovereignty, little bit by little bit. Even in the big nations, this will happen." World1, the computer program, looked at the world as one system. The report called it "an electronic guided tour of our behavior since 1900 and where that behavior will lead us." The program produced graphs that showed what would happen to the planet decades into the future. It plotted statistics and forecasts for such variables as population, quality of life, the supply of natural resources, pollution, and more. Following the trend lines, one could see where the crisis might take place.^[85] The report in question largely focused on global overpopulation, warning that "if the world's consumption patterns and population growth continued at the same high rates of the time, the earth would strike its limits within a century."^[86]

At the third meeting of the World Economic Forum in 1973, Peccei himself delivered a speech summarizing the content of the report, which the current World Economic Forum website remembers as having been the distinguishing event of this historical meeting. That same year, the Club of Rome would publish a report detailing the future of the New World Order an “adaptive” model for global governance that would divide the world into ten, inter-connected economic/political regions.

The Club of Rome indeed was one of the first institutions to voice concerns about the so-called impact on the environment, and Australian globalist and Freemason Dr. Keith Suter, who is a member of the Club since 1991 and is still considered to be one of Australia's most influential Global futurists, and media commentators in national and foreign affairs, described in detail the initiative in 1999 stating that:

Peccei and King were lonely prophets at a time of overwhelming optimism. The 1950s and 1960s were a period of immense economic growth. There was a very low rate of unemployment and there was a general belief in the Western world that another 1930s-type Depression could be avoided thanks to government intervention in the economy. Additionally, it was assumed that there was a standard (Western) formula for economic growth that could apply throughout the Third World. Very little attention was paid to the environmental consequences of economic growth. [\[87\]](#)

Suter also added the following words, that show his Antichristian bias:

Conservative Christian groups have been particularly critical of The Club and it has a sinister reputation among such groups. Their dislike of The Club is due to its lack of a total endorsement of capitalism which such Christians seem to view as being ordained by God and therefore above criticism. (Since such Christians are often poorly read, not least in theology and church history, they are often unaware of the criticism that capitalism has acquired from many Christians over the centuries.) Additionally, some conservative Protestants have been worried about 'Rome' in the title, with the implication that The Club is a Catholic plot. The Club was based in Rome because that was where Peccei had his office. After his death in March 1984, King took over as President, and the office was transferred to Paris, where King then lived (he now lives in retirement in London). [\[88\]](#)

Dr. Suter, who lives in Australia, one of the most oppressed countries on the Earth since the beginning of the “pandemic,” has just confirmed the incredible hate these people have for Christianity, and for other faiths, as Dr. Suter, adds later in the same article that, “People of all religious views and none simply did not want to be confronted by the challenges identified by The Club.” And those challenges are, of course, the same globalist rubbish we have now pushed by the World Economic Forum.

In 1991, the President Emeritus of The Club of Rome Alexander King, and Secretary-General Bertrand Schneider reviewed a new book/report called The First Global Revolution: A Report by the Council of The Club of Rome, the global problems outlined 20 years before, in The Limits to Growth, offering both a further warning and advancing an even more draconian approach to a possible solution by the elite to the supposed world problems. Stating without any sense of shame, that humanity’s “real enemy” is “itself”, not the elite that rules them like cattle, the ultra-wealthy parasites living on private islands, luxurious homes, and fancy estates, polluting along the way with their private jets and helicopters and generally enjoying life, while we the new “peasants” and “slaves” are all in lockdown for one reason or the other, as climate change lockdowns are the next big thing they are ushering in. The book in question, published 30 years ago, finally admits that their climate agenda is simply driven by their need for a new enemy:

In searching for a new enemy to unite us, we came up with the idea that pollution, the threat of global warming, water shortages, famine, and the like would fit the bill ... All these dangers are caused by human intervention, and it is only through changed attitudes and behavior that they can be overcome. The real enemy, then, is humanity itself. [\[89\]](#)

Topics covered by the book written by Alexander King and Bertrand Schneider, include the need for the world, to convert from a military to a civil economy. Now that means, for obvious reasons, no more sovereignty, or borders in the New World Order. The report by King and Schneider also talks about the recognition of the disastrous short-term effects of exploitation by First World countries of Third World poverty, something that has changed in the last three decades in the exploitation of the rest of the world by some former Third World countries, like China in particular (or even Russia or India), that now feel free to act as they wish, without the limitations imposed on the rest of us by the farse of useless initiatives like COP 26 and in the meantime China offers to the Third World, a successful Marxist model that enables them to challenge in the process Western capitalism on behalf of the Jesuit-led New World Order. But of course, one of the main subjects of The First Global Revolution: A Report by the Council of The Club of Rome, is the containment of global warming and the need to reduce global emissions of carbon dioxide. As you can see, the Club of Rome is the one's inspiring the perverse and twisted ideology of the World Economic Forum, and the rest of the New World Order.

For this reason, back in the early 70s, Klaus Schwab became convinced that to bring into fruition the “revolutionary” ideas of the Club of Rome, he needed to put together all the main European CEOs and U.S. business experts to discuss new innovative management approaches and techniques to make this happen. The forum would also promote interaction between corporate management and stakeholders. He set up a three-person office in Geneva to carry out those plans,^[90] and in January 1971, at his financial account and risk, and after various efforts to raise funding, Klaus Schwab finally organized, in the luxurious Swiss alpine ski resort of Davos, the first European Management Symposium (January 24- February 7, 1971), the predecessor to the what will be later called the World Economic Forum. He did all this under the directives of the British Pilgrims Society^[91], and to an even larger extent, the Society of Jesus, the infamous Jesuits.

For this very reason, Klaus Schwab chose to deliver the keynote speech at the opening session of this historical event, none other than Illuminati Kingpin and Jesuit agent, Otto von Habsburg (1912-2011), head of the House of Habsburg-Lorraine, and sovereign of the Order of the Golden Fleece (historically linked to Adam Weishaupt's Order of the Illuminati), who was the last Crown Prince of Austria-Hungary from 1916 until the dissolution of the empire in April 1919. The late Otto von Habsburg was also co-founder of the Pan-European Union (PEU), headed by Freemason Count Coudenhove-Kalergi, the infamous Austrian politician and philosopher who pioneered this fake European integration, as the secret head of a synarchist group whose aim was to create a united Europe. The creation of a united Europe was central to the vision of Saint-Yves d'Alveydre, the founder of synarchism, a call for which appears on the first page of his first book on synarchy, Keys to the East.^[92]

The Distinguished Order of the Golden Fleece is a Catholic order of chivalry founded in Bruges by Philip the Good, Duke of Burgundy, in 1430, to celebrate his marriage to Isabella of Portugal. Today, two branches of the order exist, namely the Spanish and the Austrian Fleece; the current grandmasters are Felipe VI, King of Spain, and Karl von Habsburg, current head of the House of Habsburg-Lorraine, respectively.^[93] The Grand Chaplain of the Austrian branch of the Order of the Golden Fleece is today a friend of the late Otto von Habsburg, the powerful Cardinal Christoph Schönborn, Archbishop of Vienna, Illuminati, and Freemason^[94], who is part of the princely House of Schönborn, whose members before 1918 bore the title of Count and the style of Illustrious Highness. Schönborn is also an Honorary Member of the Teutonic Knights, an Order traditionally headed by members of the Habsburg dynasty.^[95]

From all these details, we understand that right from the start, Klaus Schwab's globalist project was deeply involved with the Vatican, through the still influential Order of the Golden Fleece, and the Teutonic Knights, in which the term “Teutonic” echoes from the German origins of the order (Theutonicorum), and its formal Latin name Ordo Domus Sanctae Mariae Theutonicorum Hierosolymitanorum. The Teutonic Knights are also featured amongst the cast of characters of the 27th degree of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite^[96].

During World War II, Nazi propaganda and ideology made frequent use of the Teutonic Knights' imagery, as the Nazis sought to depict the Knights' actions as a forerunner of the Nazi conquests for Lebensraum.^[97]

Heinrich Himmler tried to idealize the SS as a 20th-century incarnation of the medieval knights. The modern Order, however, was banned in the Third Reich in 1938 (the year of Klaus Schwab's birth), due to the long-standing belief of both Adolf Hitler and Heinrich Himmler that Catholic military-religious orders were untrustworthy and politically suspect as subordinates of the Vatican, and representatives of its policy.^[98] But the decision to ban the Order in Germany, in an attempt, to sever all possible ties between the German and Austrian elite with the Vatican, on the eve of what will become a year later, the Second World War, was not enough to stop the perversive control of the Vatican Illuminati and would bring upon Hitler and Himmler, the wrath of the Jesuits, and the successive betrayal of some of their most trusted men, that will ultimately result with both their deaths.

However, Schwab's hometown—Ravensburg, Germany—was a very peculiar city during the Nazi era. It was, for example, the first German city to practice eugenics (killing in Nazi terms “useless eaters”), and Ravensburg was also a transport hub for stolen Nazi gold to the Swiss Bank for International Settlements, a criminal enterprise allegedly run by Pilgrims Society spies Allan W. Dulles (later C.I.A. director, 1953-61), Edwin W. Pauley (Allied reparations) and William J. Donovan, director of the OSS (precursor to the C.I.A.— and one time Dulles' boss), and in this context, Klaus Schwab's father Eugen involvement with the Nazi establishment, and the allegations that I'm about to share, are, in fact, rather revealing about Klaus family's lack of morals and their links to Hitler's evil legacy.

In the pre-war years of the 1930s leading up to the German annexation of Poland, Ravensburg's Escher-Wyss factory, managed directly by Klaus Schwab's father, Eugen Schwab, continued to be the biggest employer in Ravensburg, and not only was the factory a major employer in the town, but Hitler's own Nazi party awarded the Escher-Wyss Ravensburg branch the title of "National Socialist Model Company" while Schwab was at the helm. The Nazis were potentially wooing the Swiss company for cooperation in the coming war, and their advances were eventually reciprocated. Ravensburg was an anomaly in wartime Germany, as it was never targeted by any Allied airstrikes. ^[99]

The presence of the Red Cross, and a rumored agreement with various companies including Escher-Wyss, saw the allied forces publicly agree to not target the Southern German town. It was not classified as a significant military target throughout the war, and for that reason, the town still maintains many of its original features. However, much darker things were afoot in Ravensburg once the war began. Eugen Schwab continued to manage the "National Socialist Model Company" for Escher-Wyss, and the Swiss company would aid the Nazi Wehrmacht to produce significant weapons of war as well as more basic armaments. The Escher-Wyss company was a leader in large turbine technology for hydroelectric dams and power plants, but they also manufactured parts for German fighter planes. They were also intimately involved in much more sinister projects happening behind the scenes which, if completed, could have changed the outcome of World War II. ^[100]

Western military intelligence was already aware of Escher-Wyss' complicity and collaboration with the Nazis. As Johnny Vedmore points out, there are records available from western military intelligence at the time, specifically Record Group 226 (RG 226) from the data compiled by the Office of Strategic Services (OSS), which shows the Allied forces were aware of some of the Escher-Wyss' business dealings with the Nazis. Within RG 226, there are three specific mentions of Escher-Wyss including:

File number 47178 reads, Escher-Wyss of Switzerland is working on a large order for Germany. Flame-throwers are despatched from Switzerland under the name Brennstoffbehaelter. Dated Sept. 1944.

File number 41589 showed that the Swiss were allowing German exports to be stored in their country, a supposedly neutral nation during World War II. The entry reads, Business relations between Empresa Nacional Calvo Sotelo (EN CASO), Escher Wyss, and Mineral Celbau Gesellschaft. 1 p. July 1944; see also L 42627 Report on collaboration between the Spanish Empresa Nacional Calvo Sotelo and the German Rheinmetall Borsig, on German exports stored in Switzerland. 1 p. August 1944.

File number 72654 claimed that: Hungary's bauxite was formerly sent to Germany and Switzerland for refining. Then a government syndicate built an aluminum plant at Dunaalmas on the borders of Hungary. Electric power was provided; Hungary contributed coal mines, and equipment was ordered from the Swiss firm Escher-Wyss. Production began in 1941. 2 pp. May 1944. ^[101]

Yet, Escher-Wyss was left untouched during the war, mainly because they were leaders in one field in particular which was considered of great importance at the time by the U.S. military-industrial complex, the creation of new turbine technology, which was considered essential in the making of the future nuclear bomb. This is a key asset that made the Klaus family fortune. The company had engineered a 14,500 HP turbine for the Norsk Hydro industrial facility's strategically important hydroelectric plant at Vemork, near Rjukan in Norway. The Norsk Hydro plant, partly powered by Escher Wyss, was the only industrial plant under Nazi control capable of producing heavy water in the early 40s, an ingredient essential for making plutonium for the Nazi atomic bomb program.

The Germans had put all possible resources behind the production of heavy water in that period, but the Allied forces were aware of the potentially game-changing tech advances by the increasingly desperate Nazis^[102], and fortunately stopped them.

From this point onwards I will trace, thanks to Johnny Vedmore 's short essay, and the comments made on it by Dr. Joseph P. Farrell, how some of Escher-Wyss's hydro-turbine technology even made it into the Nazi atom bomb project, via the Norwegian heavy water production in Norway, that later helped the construction of various nuclear arsenals in countries like Israel as well as South Africa. Despite its small size, Norway, which still delivers the Nobel Peace Prize, has, unfortunately, made a large contribution to the spread of nuclear weapons—essentially by selling and producing heavy water. ^[103]

While Nazis knew of the possibility of plutonium, they also knew that its production could only be accomplished in a reactor and that it would be a long and difficult project. For this reason, the Nazis seem to have concentrated like some researchers like Dr. Joseph P. Farrell also point out, on the faster and less complicated project of uranium isotope separation, and the enrichment of a uranium-fueled bomb. But in either case, heavy water could be used both as a neutron moderator in a reactor and more importantly, as a source of deuterium fuel for a “boosted fission” bomb^[104]. The project, fortunately, failed, thanks to the Allied-led efforts involving both Allied bombing raids and Norwegian commandos, that lead to Operation Gunnerside and the now legendary Norwegian heavy water sabotage.

The main hero of Operation Gunnerside was Joachim Roenneberg, who died of old age 99 years old in October 2018^[105], a distinguished old gentleman I had the honor to meet during a conference many years ago in Oslo, who, while serving behind enemy lines in his native Norway during the German occupation, in 1943, blew up the plant producing heavy water, or D2O, the hydrogen-rich substance which was key to the later development of atomic bombs, but Klaus Schwab’s father’s ties to the Nazi’s, did not stop the failed Nazi atom-bomb project. They are also connected to another infamous Nazi practice.

Back in the Escher-Wyss factory in Ravensburg, Eugen Schwab had been busy during those years putting forced laborers to work at his model Nazi company. During the years of World War II, nearly 3,600 forced laborers worked in Ravensburg, including at Escher Wyss. According to the city archivist in Ravensburg, Andrea Schmuder, the Escher-Wyss machine factory in Ravensburg employed between 198 and 203 civil workers and POWs during the war. Karl Schweizer, a local Lindau historian, states that Escher-Wyss maintained a small special camp for forced laborers on the factory premises.

The use of masses of forced laborers in Ravensburg made it necessary to set up one of the largest recorded Nazi forced labor camps in the workshop of a former carpenter at Ziegelstrasse 16. At one time, the camp in question accommodated 125 French prisoners of war who were later redistributed to other camps in 1942. The French workers were replaced by 150 Russian prisoners of war who, it was rumored, were treated the worst out of all the POWs. Cheap labor was even cheaper back then for these criminals.

One such prisoner was Zina Jakuschewa, whose work card and work diary, are still held by the United States Holocaust Memorial Museum. Those documents identify her as a non-Jewish forced laborer assigned to Ravensburg, Germany, during 1943 and 1944. ^[106]

All this, of course, does not implicate Klaus Schwab in any of these evil practices, nor does it implicate him in any way of having sympathy for them, nor for the infamous ideology behind it, as Klaus was only an “innocent child” at the time, and his father was the one in charge of the company back then, not him, however, Klaus himself, in the interview I cited earlier with Carlye Adler, said: “I was born in 1938 in Germany, but I was very fortunate. My father was the managing director of a Swiss machinery company, and during the war, I spent time in Switzerland.”^[107]

Young Klaus was indeed very “fortunate” to have the possibility of going to Switzerland, especially while his father was forcing laborers to work at his model Nazi company in Ravensburg. However, he must have known, even at that tender age that his father was working closely with the Nazi’s, maybe, I say maybe, Klaus Schwab just didn’t know how his illustrious father was taking advantage of the poor POWs to make Escher-Wyss grow even more productive during the war effort, to help the Nazi’s produce their first atomic bomb, that fortunately never happened.

Why does Klaus hide all this? Well, a few years later, Klaus Schwab, will become a close collaborator, and disciple, of none other than Henry Kissinger, who was once a Jewish refugee. Somebody who fled Nazi Germany with his family in 1938, the very year Klaus was born in his very “fortunate” background, that will one day lead him to become involved with the rise of the Fourth Reich. Dr. Joseph P. Farrell points out that his family background should raise a yellow flag of caution, and perhaps should provide a more sinister context, in which to view his own statement, “You will not own property und you vill be happy!” A sentence you should read not only with a typical German accent but also in a very “Nazi authoritarian style.”

Of course, Schwab’s way of talking reminiscent of a typical Nazi, plus the fact that Schwab seems to have pursued academic studies of mechanical engineering to the macroeconomics of credit and export, might indicate at least some filial interest in his father’s wartime experiences, since, after his studies and a stint in the U.S.A. at Harvard’s John F. Kennedy School of Government, he went to work for his father’s old company.

In the meantime, the atom bomb connection would continue at Escher-Wyss (now Sulzer-Escher-Wyss), also after the war, as it became involved in South Africa’s effort to acquire the bomb, as well as helping Israel in their “Secret Nuclear Project”. Escher-Wyss had been involved with manufacturing and installing nuclear technology at least as early as 1962, as shown by a patent for a “heat exchange arrangement for a nuclear power plant”^[108], and another patent from 1966 for a “nuclear reactor gas-turbine plant with emergency cooling.”^[109]

After Schwab left Sulzer Escher-Wyss, Sulzer would also help to develop special turbocompressors for uranium enrichment to yield reactor fuels. When Klaus Schwab joined Sulzer Escher-Wyss in 1967 and started the reorganization of the company to be a technology corporation, the involvement of Sulzer Escher-Wyss in the darker aspects of the global nuclear arms race became immediately more pronounced. Before Klaus became involved, Escher-Wyss had often concentrated on helping design and build parts for civilian uses of nuclear technology, for example, nuclear power generation. Yet, with the arrival of the eager Mr. Schwab also came the company's participation in the illegal proliferation of nuclear weapons technology.^[110] By 1969, the incorporation of Escher Wyss into Sulzer was fully completed, and they would be rebranded into Sulzer AG, dropping the historic name Escher-Wyss from their name. It was eventually revealed, thanks to a review and report carried out by the Swiss authorities and a man named Peter Hug, that Sulzer Escher-Wyss began secretly procuring and building key parts for nuclear weapons during the 1960s while Klaus Schwab was on the board, playing a critical key role also in the development of South Africa's illegal nuclear weapons program during the darkest years of the apartheid regime. Klaus Schwab is considered a leading figure in the founding of a company culture that helped Pretoria build six nuclear weapons and partially assemble a seventh. (Boldface emphasis added) This now ratchets up the suspicion meter considerably, when placed into the context of what else is known about the South African project. In 1973, The New York Times book division published a book by Barbara Rogers and Zdenek Cervenka titled The Nuclear Axis: The Secret Collaboration between West Germany and South Africa, in a title which says it all... almost. In it, the authors detail how a Luftwaffe general in the Bundeswehr, a holdover from World War II, and several German firms including Degussa (which was also involved in the wartime Nazi atom bomb effort), were involved in aiding South Africa to acquire the atom bomb, which in the opinion of many (including this author) it did. The arrangement was a "tidy" one. In exchange for South African uranium, Germany would supply the technology to enrich it and the engineering to turn it into a bomb. South Africa became the front behind which postwar Germany acquired nuclear weapons technology, for the South African bomb was in effect a German one..... and an Israeli one, because the third partner in this picture was, of course, Israel, lending technical assistance as well in return for a steady supply of uranium from the project. The arrangement was a rather nifty one, given that all three states were in some measure and for very different reasons each a pariah state, and each viewed its national security as being jeopardized without nuclear weapons. However, with the arrival of Schwab himself on the scene, aka the infamous Dr. Ernst Stavro Blohfeld of SPECTRE, in the middle of that West German-South African atom bomb effort, their efforts were facilitated and the implications here are inescapable, and terrorizing to some extent., and Johnny Vedmore, doesn't shrink from mentioning them:

In January, Klaus Schwab announced that 2021 is the year that the World Economic Forum and its allies must "rebuild trust" with the masses. However, if Schwab continues to hide his history and that of his father's connections to the "National Socialist Model Company" that was Escher-Wyss during the 1930s and 1940s, then people will have good reason to distrust the underlying motivations of his overreaching, undemocratic Great Reset agenda.

In the case of Klaus Schwab himself, it appears that he has helped to launder relics of the Nazi-era, i.e. its nuclear ambitions and its population control ambitions, to ensure the continuity of a deeper agenda. While serving in a leadership capacity at Sulzer Escher Wyss, the company sought to aid the nuclear ambitions of the South African regime, then the most Nazi adjacent government in the world, preserving Escher Wyss' own Nazi-era legacy. Then, through the World Economic Forum, Schwab has helped to rehabilitate eugenics-influenced population control policies during the post-World War II era, a time when the revelations of Nazi atrocities quickly brought the pseudo-science into great disrepute. Is there any reason to believe that Klaus Schwab, as he exists today, has changed in any way? Or is he still the public face of a decades-long effort to ensure the survival of a very old agenda?

The last question that should be asked about the real motivations behind the actions of Herr Schwab, maybe the most important for the future of humanity: Is Klaus Schwab trying to create the Fourth Industrial Revolution, or is he trying to create the Fourth Reich?^[111]

The answer is that Mr. Schwab and his allies, are trying to create the Fourth Reich, a subject I will also discuss later, and I agree with many of Johnny Vedmore statements, as well as interesting reflections, given later in a commentary to his article, by Dr. Joseph P. Farrell. The latter also reflects on how Mr. Schwab's project is the result of a sort of post-war "Nazi International," describing how Schwab works for an invisible "extra-territorial state," that for Dr. Farrel is:

... hiding behind a complex tapestry of corporations, funds, foundations, think tanks, hiding under a bewildering labyrinth of interconnections, all still firmly in the grasp of a hideous ideology.^[112]

I still think the final analysis, made by these two gentlemen, who have otherwise done an excellent job in their historical findings, is however far too simplistic, and needs to be redefined, and read, in the light of the revelations, that I continue to plug in all my books, that show a much more complex and secretive reality at work behind the New World Order, and now the so-called “Great Reset.” It is a reality that shows, how behind the para-Masonic nature of think tanks, like the World Economic Forum, and their inspirators, the infamous Club of Rome, there is also an occult agenda and a series of Secret Societies from the Illuminati Network, and the elite of Freemasonry, constantly at work pulling the strings behind the scenes for the Sabbatean Frankist and the Jesuits.

Of course, I’m not talking about your average “social Mason,” or “Window Mason,” that you will find at your local lodge, who are often nice guys who will continue to happily deny the dangers of the New World Order, choosing to ignore the impending dangers of this reality, often in the name of Masonic secrecy. Because after all, the true secrets of Freemasonry, as all Freemasons know very well, are their shared experiences, private thoughts, and deeper understandings between men, that include at times their parallel work in think tanks, or in other secret societies and para-Masonic orders, as well as in the military–industrial complex (MIC), where Freemasonry always had a relevant role with lodges, specifically with the ones dedicated to the Armed forces. However, many high-level Freemasons these days, choose to play stupid in front of the imminent dangers of the Great Reset, mainly for their advantage, or to simply keep up their peaceful existence, knowing all too well that exposing such topics will immediately make them a target within their Fraternity.

That’s why I eventually decided to not be involved in Freemasonry. But remember that Freemasons were once essential in the emergence of democratic governance at the national scale, and it should be their duty to protect our freedom, and not to comply with this growing monstrosity. Confirming the importance of Freemasonry concerning the making of democracy are two known academics, UCLA history Professor Margaret C. Jacob, and Distinguished Professor of Biology and Anthropology at Binghamton University, David Sloan Wilson, who wrote:

... the Freemasons were originally a guild of architects that morphed into a “speculative society” in England during the early 1700s; that the speculative version spread rapidly to the European Continent and America; and that Freemasons were influential in the emergence of the democratic governance at the national scale.

*Anyone would be fascinated by this story, but for me, it was especially captivating because it meshed so well with cultural Multilevel Selection (cMLS) Theory, my own area of expertise. A central concern of cMLS theory is how cooperative forms of governance can overcome disruptive self-serving behaviors at all scales, from small groups to large nations. All European nations before the 18th century were autocratic, which means that they were governed by an elite for their own benefit and not necessarily for the common good. Democratic movements in Europe and America were a swing away from extractive forms of governance in the direction of more inclusive forms of governance, to employ the language of Daron Acemoglu and James Robinson in their book Why Nations Fail: The Origins of Power, Prosperity, and Poverty (2012). Viewed from a cMLS perspective, the history of the Freemasons seemed to indicate that (relatively) democratic governance first originated and spread at a small scale—the Masonic lodges—and then expanded in scale through the democratic revolutions. The word “relatively” is important because the Masonic lodges were by no means totally inclusive and were famously hierarchical in their own way—but then, the first democratic governments weren’t totally inclusive either.*^[113]

For this reason, we need to admit the relevance that Freemasonry had in the making of our democracies, and move away, from what the TIME once described as “Conspiracy thinking” in an otherwise horrible article about the power of secrecy in Freemasonry:

Conspiracy thinking drove Mussolini, Hitler, and Franco to crush the Craft. Today, Freemasonry is banned in China, and everywhere in the Muslim world except Lebanon and Morocco. The Charter of Hamas describes Freemasonry as a “network of spies” created by the Jews to “destroy societies and promote the Zionist cause.”^[114]

Now the truth is that Mussolini, Hitler, and Franco, all used Freemasonry, and the various Illuminati orders, to achieve their initial goals in establishing themselves as dictators, and later started their persecution, towards Freemasonry and other secret societies, only when they didn’t need them any longer. Who says, they will not do the same this time, with their Great Reset, and their plan to transform us into a virtual prison planet.

Regarding the banning of Freemasonry in China, the truth is that the Chinese have their own form of Freemasonry, that I have discussed in detail in Volume 2, and they don’t even bother in working within the frame of so-called “Masonic Regularity,” with their 6 million members operating all over the world. And everywhere in the Muslim world, the most influential figures are members of the Freemasons, and some are in the Illuminati, even if they publically condemn it, including the hypocrites of Hamas which was created by Freemasons. For this reason, we are all, unfortunately, proceeding towards the Great Reset, and the imminent Fourth Industrial Revolution (4-IR) aka the Fourth Reich, regardless of its devastating implications.

According to Klaus Schwab, the founder and executive chair of the World Economic Forum (WEF), the 4-IR follows the first, second, and third Industrial Revolutions—the mechanical, electrical, and digital, respectively.^[115] The 4-IR builds on the digital revolution, but Schwab sees the 4-IR as an exponential takeoff and convergence of existing and emerging fields, including Big Data; artificial intelligence; machine learning; quantum computing; genetics, nanotechnology, and robotics. The consequence is the merging of the physical, digital, and biological worlds. The blurring of these categories ultimately challenges the very ontologies by which we understand ourselves and the world, including “what it means to be human.”^[116] Michael Rectenwald from the Ludwig von Mises Institute for Austrian Economics, or Mises Institute, a libertarian nonprofit think tank located in Auburn, Alabama, seem to address this problem, and the possibility of creating a “virtual prison” I outlined above:

But if existing 4-IR developments are any indication of the future, then Schwab’s enthusiasm is misplaced, and the 4-IR is misrepresented. These developments already include internet algorithms that feed users prescribed news and advertisements and downrank or exclude banned content; algorithms that censor social media content and consign “dangerous” individuals and organizations to digital gulags; apps that track and trace COVID suspects and report violators to the police; robot police with QR code scanners to identify and round up dissenters; and smart cities where everyone is a digital entity to be monitored, surveilled, and recorded, while data on their every move is collected, collated, stored, and attached to a digital identity and social credit score.

That is, 4-IR technologies subject human beings to technology management that makes the earlier surveillance by the National Security Agency look like child’s play. Schwab lauds future developments that will connect brains directly to the cloud, enabling the “data mining” of thought and memory, a technological mastery over an experience that threatens individual autonomy and undermines any semblance of free will. The 4-IR accelerates the merging of humans and machines, resulting in a world in which all information, including genetic information, is shared and every action, thought, and unconscious motivation is known, predicted, and possibly even precluded. Aldous Huxley’s Brave New World comes to mind. Yet Schwab touts brain-cloud interfaces as enhancements, as vast improvements over standard human intelligence, thus lending them an appeal not at all imaginable for soma. Many positive developments may come from the 4-IR, but unless it is taken out of the hands of the corporate-socialist technocrats, it will constitute a virtual prison.^[117]

Yasha Levine’s book Surveillance Valley “unearths the true history of the internet” that “was built by the government to spy on citizens, at home and abroad,” puts a very different spin on things, once you truly understand the real dangers of this demonic system. It’s in this intersection where the corporate state, the militarists state, predatory philanthropy, and their so-called think tanks, operate together in this digital space on behalf of the New World Order, we find good things but also many risks that ordinary people will never be aware of and tend to dismiss as “Conspiracy Theories.” In Surveillance Valley, Levine traces the history of the internet back to its beginnings as a Vietnam-era tool for spying on guerrilla fighters and antiwar protesters—a military computer networking project that ultimately envisioned the creation of a global system of surveillance and prediction. Levine shows how the same military objectives that drove the development of early internet technology are still at the heart of Silicon Valley today. Spies, counterinsurgency campaigns, hippie entrepreneurs, privacy apps funded by the CIA.^[118]

Now let’s move further into the discovery, and study, of the roots of this problem, and the recent social libtard pandemic, that is increasingly frustrating and upsetting people who still have a conscience and a genuine belief in God and would like to preserve what is left of humanity and traditional values. What I define as the upcoming Great Reject originates from the “populist” uprising of the last few years. For many today, the word “populism” calls to mind a right-wing scourge of sorts, born out of Trumpism, but that’s not true.

One spring weekend, dozens of academics from around the world gathered at the London School of Economics with an ambitious goal: to define populism. None were under any illusions about how difficult this challenge would be. “The term continues to be used in many different ways,” one participant observed, noting its association with issues as disparate as McCarthyism in the United States and Maoism in China. In the end, they failed to settle on a single definition, concluding that “there can, at present, be no doubt about the importance of populism. But no one is clear what it is.”

The left mercenaries of the New World Order, after using the word in a derogatory way for years, finally realized they were failing in 2018, when libtard darling and best-selling author, David McKnight, published the book Populism Now! The Case for Progressive Populism, stating “Populism” isn’t a dirty word and it’s time for the left to reclaim it. Well, is too late “darling,” the left, has finally revealed to most people around the world in the last few years their true submissive globalist nature, and there is no way you will ever be taken seriously with such propaganda when most of your leaders bow down to the New World Order and have lost any credibility with the common folk. Remember, as “Jesuit” Wikipedia states,

Populism refers to a range of political stances that emphasize the idea of "the people" and often juxtapose this group against "the elite." The term developed in the late 19th century in connection to the Populist Party and has been applied to various politicians, parties, and movements since that time, often derisively by opponents. Within political science and other social sciences, several different definitions of populism have been employed, with some scholars proposing that the term be rejected altogether.^[119]

When you realize that there is no leftist party in the world today, that is not entirely compromised by the Illuminati Jesuit Sabbatean-Frankist Masonic elite, then you understand the need for “some scholars,” to reject the term altogether. Well, my dear elitarian scumbags, we reject you and your fake promises of a “Build Back Better World.”^[120] The answer to all our problems is the Great Reject of this new increasingly Orwellian reality. We say no, and we are ready to die for our beliefs so deal with it!

CHAPTER TWO

The Great Reject Finding Solutions to The Great Reset

The liberal pandemic that started in California and our Orwellian future

Dr. Thomas Horn, also known as Tom Horn, an internationally recognized Christian lecturer, radio host, and best selling author of several books, seems pretty effective in his way of describing today's Orwellian nightmare, as well as today's erosion of foundational truth as a key tactic used by the devil in the End Times:

In Orwell's dystopian "1984," the fictional setting of Oceania depicted the era we have now entered and the four "Ministries" he envisioned under the figurehead of Big Brother—Love, Peace, Plenty, and Truth.

The Ministry of Peace perpetuated unending wars; the Ministry of Love oversaw suffering and torture against those that would not adhere to the Party line; the Ministry of Plenty weaponized starvation through socialism, and then there was the Ministry of Truth—the propaganda arm of the government media that employed fake-news "Doublethink" and "Newspeak" as the official dialectic of the state.

Today, in America and around the world, the nonfiction version of the Ministry of Truth has materialized and is fully operational through the Orwellian tools of modern Marxists and social media "news" organizations who blacklist Christian and conservative commentary by burying search results and exhibiting bias in their artificial intelligence shadow-banning algorithms and reporting.^[121]

And the home of the "artificial intelligence shadow-banning" indicated by Dr. Thomas Horn, is California. For this reason, some people have asked why I chose the State of California when I moved from Italy to the U.S. in 2019. Well, where California goes today, the rest of the United States, and much of the Western world, will go tomorrow, that's why I decided to move here at the center of the worldwide libtard pandemic to possibly find a vaccine for the ever-so-present Leftism Derangement Syndrome (LDS). Because what we are now seeing today in America's most populous state is the complete internal collapse of the entire liberal progressive civilization, and the society that has most frantically tried to fulfill it. Is a bit like wanting to understand the Wuhan virus: if you want to grasp the truth behind its origins, you need to go to where it was born, and investigate it until you find the answers to your questions.

For well over a hundred years, California, the self-styled "Golden State" has trail-blazed the future of America, especially through the two famously American industries of aerospace and motion pictures. Telecommunications, Computers, and Artificial Intelligence are now led from Silicon Valley, and the state has dominated the national politics of the United States too. California rapidly grew into the wealthiest, largest, and most populated U.S. state. It has produced two two-term presidents (Richard Nixon and Ronald Reagan), one of the most important Chief Justices of the Supreme Court (Earl Warren), and the likely next president, being the current Vice President Kamala Harris if Joe Biden cannot complete his term in office because of his increasingly precarious health conditions.

From 1928 to 2004, 14 out of 19 winning presidential election tickets, included someone from either California, or Texas, and Biden's choice of Harris put California back at the heart of national electoral politics, while, unfortunately, the local GOP, seems corrupt and far away from the real conservative ideals they should represent. Just think of Arnold Schwarzenegger's leftist approach, hanging out with Greta Thunberg and saying everything you expect from a Democrat. For this reason, California, remains politically, a rock-solid liberal territory. It has not elected a single Republican to national or statewide office, since reelecting incumbent Governor Arnold Schwarzenegger in 2006. In 2016, then-Governor Jerry Brown notoriously handed out state accreditation and driving licenses to hundreds of illegal immigrants, secure in the knowledge, that the same people would one day all vote Democrat. Registered Democrats now hold a 46 percent to 24 percent advantage over registered Republicans statewide, and the system seems rigged beyond any possibility of bringing back a conservative political view. The progressive state of California also holds a cast-iron grip on the national Democratic leadership in Congress through House Speaker Nancy Pelosi and her key allies, such as Congressman Adam Schiff, whose farcical bungles in the two impeachments of former President Donald Trump did not dent his immutable position as one of Pelosi's most youthful favored sons (he is merely 61). Yet now, California is in terminal collapse and crisis.

Governor Gavin Newsom, farcically promoted by the national Mainstream Media (MSM) as a heroic white knight in shining armor, in the early days of the COVID-19 pandemic, was exposed even in his own state as a catastrophic bungler, and a complete hypocrite, wining and dining, in the middle of the most stringent and catastrophic lockdown, carelessly showing to the rest of us he was not respecting his own COVID protocols. In the end, California's sick and tired citizens even provided over 1.5 million signatures, necessary to pull Newsom into what was certainly a chaotic recall election, but unfortunately, which was not enough to remove him from office. The Democrats were still able to resist the recall, showing to the world their superiority in California, a state where the Freemasons have become agents of the worst "woke" leftism cult.

As well all know, California, in the last few years, has had the worst wildfires in its history, and the responsibility for such problem, was, of course, given to climate change, encouraged by the usual climate agenda fanatics that we find in abundance in California. While the truth is, that the almost romantic "Green" environmental policies of the past decades encouraged by the left, scrapped the centuries-old, wise practices of creating firebreaks in forests between clumps of trees that would limit fire outbreaks in hot weather. Far from protecting the trees and wildlife, as the kneejerk "Greens" demanded, the ending of windbreak spaces instead, allowed forest fires to blaze on an unprecedented scale, and at record speed, and on top of this, the highspeed railway, also supported by the "Demoncrats," seems to have contributed to the problem.

We also have another problem here in California, millions of us are often left to sweat without any air conditioning, simply because the state electric grid, has become another victim of the ignorant "Green prejudice" falsely masquerading as "science". It repeatedly collapses, unable to generate, in a country that used to be energy independent under Trump, the necessary reliable requisite power levels at vital times. In the meantime, Los Angeles, the state's largest city, and arguably the most populous now in the United States, has become a byword for violent crime and especially the stronghold for the enormous, ultra-violent, and rapidly growing, MS 13 organization, routinely mislabeled as a mere "gang" in libtard media reports. MS 13 has up to 50,000 members worldwide of whom at least 10,000, officially, and probably twice as many according to the private assessments of police officers operating in L.A.

The Trump administration had made remarkable success – unacknowledged in the liberal media – in deporting many thousands of such thugs. However, President Joe Biden has ensured with his initial Executive Orders that the old open border policies of both Democratic Presidents (Bill Clinton and Barack Obama) and Republican ones (both George Bush's) is being restored so they can flood back in again and again to help shift the political landscape to the left.

San Francisco – America's "anything goes" city – where the Church of Satan was founded on April 30, 1966, is in even worse shape. Its most famous historically popular and beautiful locations are now swamped with aggressive, unsanitary street people who openly urinate and defecate in the streets. Public services, long superb, are now appalling, and even the mindless liberal suburban classes who have relentlessly voted for and imposed these catastrophic policies over the past 40 plus years are now fleeing California as property values crash and taxes become too crushing even for them. If California continues to trail-blaze the future for the rest of the United States, then that future is now clear, it is a high taxation society with a huge, impoverished, unemployed, and unemployable destitute class, where the middle class is annihilated, organized gangs, and general chaotic street crime, including muggings, rapes, and murders, metastasize in all major urban areas, and gangs more numerous and heavily armed than the police operate openly with impunity, with cities like Los Angeles looking more and more like John Carpenter's Escape from L.A., the 1996 American post-apocalyptic action film.^[122] It is a society, where unlimited abortion on demand, to and even beyond, the point of birth, is acclaimed as a "moral" imperative, supposedly superior to all the Ten Commandments by Californians like Nancy Pelosi, who is supposed to be a Catholic.

It seems, that California and the "Demoncrats" now fulfill Fyodor Dostoyevsky's nightmare vision described in his prophetic masterpiece The Possessed (also known in English as The Devils), as the Democrats are all possessed by demons, giving us a clear idea of what unlimited liberalism, inevitably creates, if not stopped in its tracks and rolled back.

For a hundred years, since the infant silent movie industry entranced the entire world, before and during, World War I, California has been at the center of developing modern propaganda tools that now help the rise of an Antichristian society. But if California's future now has no future – what future can the rest of America look forward to, after all, California is the ultimate product of the Catholic Church and Jesuitry. So will the rest of America become the same, now that we have Joe Biden, the second Catholic President in history in charge of the White House? After all, we all know he is willing to marry all the progressive experiments made in California, that's why Biden placed as Vice President, the incompetent Californian Kamal Harris, who will do anything for the Great Reset, a term popularized initially by a book written in the aftermath of the 2008 global crash, that the World Economic Forum and their guru Klaus Schwab liked so much, that they chose it as the permanent title for its current discussions on how governments and companies, are looking to transform into The New World Order.

The Great Reset, the book that inspired Klaus Schwab, was published in 2010 by Richard Florida, an urban studies researcher at the University of Toronto who had already established himself as a writer for The Atlantic, and author of The Rise of the Creative Class, another work whose title entered the popular vocabulary of the left. With three other books, on this new class of workers—young, mobile professionals for whom the fast track was the only career track—and their impact on cities and society, Florida had the cred to be taken seriously, when he forecast a Great Reset, rather than a Great Wipeout, in the wake of what was defined as "The Big Short," the financial crisis of 2007–2008 that also inspired a successful movie with the same name from 2015. Study your history, he wrote, and you'll see that at least in the United States, there have been two resets already. Before the Depression of the 1930s, there was the Long Depression of 1873, which "began as a banking crisis brought on by insolvent mortgages and complex financial instruments (sound familiar?) quickly spread to the entire economy, leading to widespread and prolonged unemployment."^[123] So, for these "great experts" and the Biden administration, we simply need to adapt and reinvent ourselves, giving up all the certainties of our past life and embracing "Wokeism," their Marxist-inspired ideology. And in one of the "Great Reset Dialogues" held on June 26, 2020, John Kerry, a member of the Illuminati Brotherhood of Death, aka Skull and Bones, and other members of the World Economic Forum, discuss how to rebuild the "social contract" in a post-COVID world, stating that we can't think the "Reset" will bring us, "back to the ways things were," because "normal was itself not working."^[124]

And ten years after the publication of Florida's book, in June 2020, Klaus Schwab described the three core components of the Great Reset.

The first includes creating conditions for a "stakeholder economy," improving policies and agreements on taxes, regulations, fiscal policies, and trade to result in "fairer outcomes."

The second component addresses how the large-scale pandemic spending programs with private investments and pension funds could improve on the old system by building one that is more "resilient, equitable, and sustainable" over the long term by "building green urban infrastructure and creating incentives for industries to improve their track record on environmental, social, and governance (ESG) metrics."

The third component of a Great Reset agenda is to "harness the innovations of the Fourth Industrial Revolution" for the public good. After a little more than a decade, Dr. Florida, fueled by the success of his ideas, tells interviewers now enthusiastically, that in post-COVID, "Our cities might become affordable enough for artists and creatives and middle-class people to move back," as downtown real estate lose retail stores, and traditional offices jacked up prices. Dr. Florida expects that young people in search of careers will still flock to cities, that's the young libtards, usually brainwashed by the mainstream media in doing such things. But besides New York and Los Angeles, he sees Philadelphia, Charlotte, Phoenix, and Portland (both the one in Oregon and the one in Maine), as being much more affordable cities, becoming viable career locations for distributed, remote workers, all ready to engage in a brand new life, leveraging this way, the current crisis to reinvent cities and our lives.

The Great Reset is sadly becoming a reality day after day. In a round-table discussion for Foreign Policy in May 2020, Robert Muggah of Brazil's Igarapé Institute calls the pandemic "an opportunity for urban planners and entrepreneurs to build back better." Kiran Bedi, India's first female police officer and now lieutenant governor of its Puducherry territory agree that "working from home will be an option, supported by teleconferencing and cloud-based sharing. Office space will come at a much lower rate." The executive director of the UN's Human Settlement Program, one of the main institutions in charge of this "New World Disorder" declares urban renovation a must: "Without safe shelter and access to basic services, the order to shelter in place has no meaning."^[125]

The smart sensors are going in, the satellites are going up, but people have been conditioned to unquestionably think that if it says sustainable, it's good. They would never know that it's companies like Exxon behind all this. They don't dig into where the money is coming from for these so-called innovations, and at the same time, most people are increasingly living in fear, an abased element that has come through this ongoing health crisis happening for the past two years. The fear element has made people more and more willing to act in compliance and do whatever is required from them, in terms of an increasing level of surveillance and restrictions on civil liberties, in the name of a supposed sense of safety, and an illusion of liberty. Some say it's hard to fathom how it has gotten this way so fast.^[126] The real pandemic is the compliance of an increasing number of fools blindly accepting all the technical innovations proposed by the NWO elite. Now with what is coming, with this planned automation of the earth, all humans, without any distinction of race and creed, fall under that disposable category. We need to revisit our Christianity as we are being pushed into this virtualized, Satanic, militarized video game of behavioral compliance and improvement, in accordance with these alleged sustainable development goals is a return to, and affirming of the indigenous insurgence, of children of the earth, of natural reciprocity concerning the earth which is counter to everything that is coming through this technocratic industrially engineered simulated world that is being put out by those in power, with the help of young useful idiots like Greta Thunberg, another aspiring Antichristian figure.

In the physical space, the goal is these interoperable identities, self-sovereign identities are what they are called, they're being sold to us as "privacy-protecting," that we can own our data and that we will be much more valuable. There's been a back door that's been built into blockchain. It's called the Enigma Protocol that MIT developed that allows them to quarry unencrypted data. The futures markets that are coming online, which is the finance side, Goldman Sachs, UBS Bank, Deutsche Bank, Vatican Bank, SoftBank – for these folks to move their capital in human futures – because what is being set up now are futures markets in behavior change & that is necessitated because if we imagine the last global economic crash was related to housing, that they created these synthetic debt obligations to channel global capital & as that fell apart in the decade following, the wealth has only continued to become more concentrated.^[127]

Like batteries in the Matrix, the poor are meant to be the fuel of this sick game, both at a spiritual level and materialistic level that will eventually transform us into prisoners of this upcoming Metaverse. The Artificial Intelligence structure behind the birth of Cyber Satan does not care for the actual wellbeing of humanity, its sole purpose is to maximize profit and control us. In that way, it is similar to the present Western medical model, where Big Pharma always opts for chronic disease management over research leading to real cures that will help people. It's a diabolical world we currently live in, that's for sure. Invest to empower the poor is not a good idea for the elite but instead managing them and harvesting their data, indefinitely,^[128] will be for the Illuminati and their Jesuit supervisors, a gold mine that never ends, and the infrastructure for this system was put in place in the years leading up to the financial crisis of 2008. After toxic mortgages imploded, financiers needed another way to keep global capital circulating until the next financial bubble explodes. The new Macchivellian idea of the elite needed to be even bigger than real estate debt since global wealth continues to become more and more concentrated into a small group of soulless technocrats working for Cyber Satan. The next big target would be financialized public benefits systems. Through financialization, resources are siphoned from the real economy into the financial sector where demands for short-term profit lead to instability, overwhelming debt, income inequality, and wage stagnation.^[129] All ingredients that will bring us, in the long run, to inevitably own nothing, and supposedly beg for the "happiness" proposed by Dr. Evil, aka Professor Klaus Schwab.

A Vaccine Loving Marxist Pope and the Capitol Riot Trap

At the very beginning of 2020, while Pope Francis was greeting pilgrims in St. Peter's Square on New Year's Eve in front of the Vatican Nativity scene, an alleged Chinese dissident from the Chinese "Underground" Catholic Church, shouted to the Pope "Why destroy the faith?" Immediately afterward, a careless Pope started slapping her in public. Most of you have probably seen the video of this unusual altercation, possibly thinking what the hell was going on in St. Peter's Square that evening. Well, this unusual encounter is very symbolic, to say the least, as it happened right at the start of the year that brought us the China virus.

The mysterious Chinese Catholic woman that was never identified, took hold of Pope Francis' hand in a desperate plea for the Chinese Catholics who are not accepting the CCP destruction of their Faith, after the infamous deal made in 2018 between the Vatican, and Communist China. But of course, the Unholy Father, who gets a lot of money from China, since the beginning of his papacy, did not appreciate his hand being yanked by a Chinese dissident and began slapping her hand to free himself from the stranger's grip. The Catholic world immediately fell into a tussle, adjudicating this event, and the Pope was eventually forced to apologize during his New Year's Day address to make public amends with his Faithful. It was, as we all know, only the start of a crazy year, and people are now left wondering, what will the future look like for humanity, two years later.

As most of you already know, over 465 years ago, a French astrologer and philosopher, Michel de Nostradamus made predictions about the future of humanity in his now legendary book Les Propheties. Shockingly enough, a number of these incredible predictions have come true, and for some researchers, Nostradamus even alluded to aspects of the coronavirus pandemic in his predictions. So, what did Nostradamus predict for the future? Well, he stated that 2020, for example, was a year of "great trouble for humanity," but greater trouble will manifest itself in the future, and this seems pretty obvious, especially after the tragic end of Donald J. Trump's presidency, and the aftermath of the Capitol riot, that I would like to rename, "The Great Capitol Trap."

One year later, it is obvious to most of us that we were in front of another inside job, just like 9/11, that Klaus Schwab witnessed as he was having breakfast in the Park East Synagogue in NYC with Sabbatean Frankist, Rabbi Arthur Schneier, former Vice President for the World Jewish Congress. The Illuminati have created for the Left their own “Libtard Christmas,” which will be celebrated for years to come, and the Jesuits and their leftist mercenaries are behind it.

In 1936, a young German journalist named Konrad Heiden wrote a book called, Hitler: A Biography, in which he described the street fighting between the Communists and Nazis which characterized much of the early 1930s Germany. One interesting thing he mentioned about the paramilitary Nazi S.A., known as the Brownshirts or Stormtroopers, was:

There were large numbers of Communists and Social Democrats among them; many of the stormtroopers were called ‘beefsteaks—brown [outside] and red within. Jest was retailed such as the following: one S.A. man says to another: ‘In our storm troop there are three Nazis, but we shall soon have spewed them out.’^[130]

Some historians surmise that a lot of these young men just liked to fight, they didn’t care much who they were fighting, or for what cause, they just wanted the end of the system that brought them to poverty and desperation. While the mainstream media and the federal government drummed up imminent threats of right-wing violence during the Presidential inauguration of 2021 at state capitol buildings after the tragic events of the 6th of January, nothing happened that was significant in reporting. Meanwhile, after the Biden inauguration, leftist groups, such as Antifa, were causing increasing chaos in multiple cities and will probably continue for years to come.^[131]

In 1930s Germany they were angry at the establishment, and for good reason. Germany was left in horrible shape by WWI and the disastrous monetary policies of the Weimar Republic. The people who felt left behind were going to express their rage in anyway they could. When the seat of the German government, the Reichstag Building, was set aflame in 1933, the Nazis accused communist agitators of setting the fire. It’s more than likely, however, that the Nazis themselves burned Reichstag, and then scapegoated the Communists to justify the brutal crackdown that followed. Before I go further, let me just say that the United States in 2022 is not the same as Germany in 1933. And even if the U.S. is on a similar trajectory, we haven’t even seen the Weimar kind of inflation yet, the kind Joe Biden might usher in with his idiotic policies, which would put us sometime around 1921, before World War I, when one U.S. dollar was worth 4.2 German marks. But the Germans owed massive debts to pay back the other nations for the war. With no way to come up with the money, they simply printed more and more marks. Imagine that by 1923, a single U.S. dollar was worth 4.2 trillion marks.

What is also concerning, is that the civil unrest that the left put together in the last year of the Trump’s era, arrived when we hadn’t even witnessed the start of the widespread economic devastation that the China virus/biological warfare has truly created around us, thanks to the plan set up by the “illuminated” elite of the New World Order. Now that this ugly reality made possible in the U.S. and around the world, by senseless rules, never-ending restrictions, shutdowns, and lockdowns, is finally visible to all of us, the growing poverty is increasingly visible even to skeptics, and to be honest, it is only the start of one of the most difficult periods in the history of humanity. People are, of course, angry towards the Biden’s Jesuit administration, and they have good reason to be angry, whether for a completely corrupt political system, the neverending rubbish by the usual “swamp” creatures in Washington DC, the Afghanistan disaster, growing inflation, and the whopping food crisis and supply problems.

People in the United States of America are upset for a variety of reasons these days, including, of course, the U.S. presidential elections of 2020, which seemingly started this crisis, but was only the pretense for what has been unfolding ever since. There is also a growing disappointment as I write this, regarding former President Trump, who seems more and more like a double agent these days, especially when he continues to push “his” vaccine nonsense regardless of the consequences they might have. Now, as many of you may know, I’ve been one of the biggest supporters of Donald J. Trump. I was even the President of Italians4Trump, which I co-founded in 2015, when Gianmario Ferramonti, who I talk about in Vol. 3, and other influential figures of the Italian political scene, helped Trump in his bid for the presidency, with the influential Italian American Community. However, Trump’s words of support for the vaccine booster, in front of Bill O’Reilly, in December 2021, were, unfortunately, too much for me and millions of people around the world. Personally, it felt like the biggest political disappointment in my entire life, because I truly loved and respected the Trump presidency and his past work. Because of all this, people seem to have lost faith in politics and in democracy not only here in America, but also in the rest of the world. People feel no agency, or control over their own situation, or their government, but some want to take that control back in some way.

In Germany, if the power hadn't gone to the Nazis, at the time founded by the American Illuminati, it would have probably gone to the Communists, funded by Soviet Russia, which had a much higher death count than Nazi Germany, of course, before they started their infamous Holocaust. There comes a point where there is no political solution, unfortunately, no good party to throw your support behind, no collective action that can right the ship that is sinking, because the Illuminati, the Jesuits, and their Freemason minions have rigged the whole system to fail, and they control all sides.

Back in July 2020, Scott McKay at American Spectator wrote an amazing piece entitled, Four Stages of Marxist Takeover: The Accuracy of Yuri Bezmenov. McKay's report was based on an old interview given by Soviet defector Yuri Bezmenov, to my old friend and author George Edward Griffin (who just turned 90 by the way), and today the situation is even direr than predicted.

Scott McKay wrote:

The first goal of revolutionary propaganda, particularly the Marxist variety, is to demoralize. It's to depress you and make you believe your civilization is lost. Once you succumb to that, you are, in the words of Ming the Merciless, "satisfied with less." Why do you think ordinary white people are so willing to apologize for the sins of their ancestors and to confess to being racist without even knowing it? Why do you think corporate America is blindly endorsing a Marxist revolutionary organization that openly declares war on the nuclear family? That's demoralization, and according to Bezmenov, it's the first step in engineered societal collapse.^[132]

Because as Scott McKay points out in the same article:

They're not even trying to hide this anymore. Black Lives Matter co-founder Patrice Cullors repeatedly says: "We are trained Marxists." Antifa's imagery, dogma, public statements — all straight from the Marxist playbook. The bleatings of the Democrat Socialist crowd, including AOC, Ilhan Omar, Ayanna Pressley, and the rest — unabashedly Marxist.^[133]

And if you want to know the role of "Sleepy Biden" in all this, McKay compares him to one of the most demented "useful idiots" of the Russian Revolution called Alexander Kerensky:

Joe Biden isn't Vladimir Lenin. Biden is Alexander Kerensky, the Russian politician who served as the vessel for the revolutionaries to overthrow the old guard in 1917 and then, once he had proven himself useful toward that end, was shuffled aside so the real power could assume control. And as in Kerensky's case, what comes after will bring the end of all that we know.^[134]

That's why, most of the mercenaries of the elite who destroyed, and will continue to destroy U.S. National monuments, now and in the future, will never face 10 years in prison under an executive order that Trump himself signed without any visible result when protesters against police brutality were tearing down statues during the turbulent summer of 2020. After all, these thugs and criminals, are considered untouchable, and useful, because they are tools of the Illuminati-leftist agenda. It seems at this point no meaningful change is coming to Washington DC, even if we could hold a free and fair Presidential election in 2024, because in one way, or the other, the system seems completely rigged by the globalist agents of the New World Order, in America and abroad. Antifa mercenaries and manipulated right-wingers will keep battling in the streets, likely intensifying their quest to transform cities into war zones and living hells.

We'll see more Occupy Seattle CHAZ takeovers, police stations like the precinct in Minneapolis set on fire in the summer of 2020, and more violent protests surrounding government buildings, with nobody lifting a hand to sort things out, because their plan is to push you out of the cities so they can transform them into so-called "Smart cities," under the control of Cyber Satan.

In the meantime, sorry to reiterate the concept, but none of the Antifa and BLM activists that participated in the trashing of American cities for months will ever be arrested or put on public display, and shamed like those American patriots, that, unfortunately, fell into "The Great Capitol Trap" of the 6th of January 2021, ending up as political prisoners, or the Chinese police, parading suspected COVID rule-breakers through the streets of the city of Jingxi at the end of December 2021.^[135] Really ask yourself, and be realistic, what would it take for everything to settle down and go back to normal in this increasingly mad scenario? Remember, this does not end well, for all of us if we don't find some immediate realistic solutions in the U.S., and in the rest of the world, affected by the evil plans of this ever so aggressive New World Order.

Also keep in mind, that the party of the Jesuits currently controls the White House. So higher taxes, never-ending draconian COVID response and vaccine mandates, and more regulations are the sad reality of today, but also of the future if we don't stop them. The left can now use their enormous power to continue to punish their political enemies and silence them forever. Whatever truly happened at the storming of Capitol Hill, that infamous day of January 2021, will be used for years, not only to shame conservatives, but as an excuse for increased government surveillance, new policing powers, more weapons regulations, massive controls, and censorship on free speech. And who knows what else the Jesuit Bolsheviks of today might come up with in the coming months and years, before the end of this globalist take-over, that they have planned for 2030. At the end of January 2022, TIME magazine writes about a "new unit" that "is taking shape within the Justice Department: a team of attorneys exclusively dedicated to investigating domestic terrorism, tightening the focus of the U.S. National Security apparatus on extremism coming from within the country's borders, rather than overseas."^[136] At this point the FBI, that is already acting on behalf of the Democrats in recent years, will be able to have an extra hand from this "new unit." Who knows what kind of false flag event they will plan to further their evil goals; are they going to kill Joe Biden and blame it on the MAGA movement? Everything seems possible in the Jesuit/Illuminati "Twilight Zone" of today, and I'm sorry to be an alarmist but get a solid "Plan B," ready to survive the coming years, so that as tensions continue to escalate, you and your family have at least a few options to survive the purge. Because they will purge all Christians in the end, of their Christian identity, and their soul, but also of their lives and freedoms.

The nightmare that started in 2020, is not going away in 2022 or in 2023, or even 2024, if Trump is back in the office. Of course, I will always prefer Trump, or personally De Santis over Biden, but it should be obvious to everybody by now, that 2020 was year zero for the elite's big move towards what they call "The Great Reset," and things will only get worse for humanity, regardless of who is in power in the political realm. Now we are entering the climax of this long-planned crisis, that people like me, Alex Jones, David Icke, and of course, of course, the legendary Jordan Maxwell, the only name you should use for somebody known as the "Godfather of Secret Societies," who has been warning about this for decades before everybody else and has now joined the Great Reject project understanding before others its importance.

The U.S. has been gripped more and more in the last few years by professional anarchists, violent mobs, arsonists, looters, criminals, rioters, Antifa, and other mercenaries of the left often sponsored by evil figures like Soros, that are at times tolerated, or even helped in their criminal actions, by certain government figures, and institutions. Meanwhile, the FBI seems incredibly busy working to stop the alleged threats posed by domestic terrorism and hate crimes by the far right, who are often called "White supremacists," while doing almost nothing to stop the criminal actions of Antifa, or BLM, or even Islamists in some cases.

A few months before "The Capitol Hill Trap," in early September 2020, a draft report made by the Department of Homeland Security named the so-called "White supremacists", as "the gravest terror threat to the United States." There were two later draft versions of the same document — all of which were reviewed by POLITICO:

describe the threat from white supremacists in a slightly different language. But all three drafts describe the threat from white supremacists as the deadliest domestic terror threat facing the U.S., listed above the immediate danger from foreign terrorist groups.^[137]

In the same article, even the left-leaning publication based in Arlington County admitted that:

*None of the drafts POLITICO reviewed referred to a threat from Antifa, the loose cohort of militant left-leaning agitators who senior Trump administration officials have described as domestic terrorists. Two of the drafts refer to extremists trying to exploit the "social grievances" driving lawful protests.*^[138]

On the 17th of September 2020, FBI Director Christopher Wray prepared the future demonizing scenario of the "evil" Trump supporters, singling the alleged "White supremacists" as "the greatest domestic terrorist" threat ever. Wray did this, during a House Homeland Security Committee hearing, and when U.S. Rep. Elissa Slotkin, D-Mich., a former CIA analyst, asked Wray during the said hearing to discuss the number of investigations into the supposed, "White supremacist" groups versus groups on the left.

Wray vaguely replied that the FBI has roughly 1,000 domestic terrorism investigations a year, though it is a "good bit north of a thousand this year." In this context, Wray stated that he investigated:

Within the domestic terrorism bucket, the category as a whole, racially motivated violent extremism is, I think, the biggest bucket within that larger group. And within the racially motivated violent extremist bucket, people subscribing to some kind of white supremacist-type ideology is certainly the biggest chunk of that.

And a couple of weeks later, at an NBC town hall in Miami during the Presidential election debates in September 2020, when a woman asked future President Joe Biden what he would do to stop “White supremacist” groups, “Sleepy Joe” promptly replied by saying: “The president's own FBI chief has said the greatest domestic threat to terrorism are white supremacists,” adding with a false sense of disdain: “And when you have a President saying to one particular group of white supremacists that, in fact, stand down but stand by, that is like a clarion call to get ready.”

Biden was referring, of course, to President Donald J. Trump’s debate comments to the Proud Boys, when he said during another town hall meeting: “stand back and stand by.” A very unusual statement indeed, as the next day Trump himself said he didn’t know who the Proud Boys were, and that “they have to stand down, let law enforcement do their work.” That statement was my first alarm bell during his Presidential campaign, a strange statement that made me wonder about Trump’s honesty, and the possibility he might be a “chaos magician,” of sorts, working in disguise for the dark side. Because is the very practice of Chaos Magick that suggests to its practitioners saying “outrageous” things as part of its shock tactic approach to enhancing “personal power.” Chaos magick, also spelled Chaos magic, is a contemporary magical practice present within certain Illuminati groups, like the Illuminates of Thanateros for example, an international magical organization linked to George Soros in countries like Ukraine, that focuses on practical group work in Chaos magick.^[139]

The concept of Chaos magick was initially developed in England in the 1970s, drawing heavily from the philosophy of Satanic artist and occultist Austin Osman Spare (1886-1956) involved with Aleister Crowley and his A.∴A.∴ an Illuminati magical organization described in Vol. 1. Well, I have been lucky enough to meet, and know personally, many members of the “infamous” Proud Boys since my arrival in the United States, back in May 2019, and I have even interviewed personally Enrique Tarrío, the now-former chairman of the Proud Boys, with a controversial past as an informer for federal and local law enforcement, for my now-defunct Youtube channel, and I never saw any “White Supremacists” amongst the members, in this self-described “Patriotic drinking fraternity,” that to my knowledge, has always respected U.S. laws and the police forces. On top of this, many Proud Boys are also Latino’s like Tarrío, who simply despise the left because they come from countries like Cuba, or Venezuela, where the evil ideologies of Communism and Socialism, have already destroyed the lives of millions of people.

However, the arrest of Enrique Tarrío two days before the Capitol riot, and the fact that court records show Henry “Enrique” Tarrío helped the FBI in the past, was indicative of a possible setup. It is no surprise that the day before, a small number of Trump supporters, including some Proud Boys and various militia members, stormed Congress on the 6th of January 2021, the increasingly leftist FBI ignored the warning issued by their own office in Virginia, that had issued an explicit warning that extremists were preparing to travel to Washington to commit violence and “war,” according to an internal document reviewed by The Washington Post.^[140]

A document that contradicts a senior official’s declaration that the Bureau had no intelligence, indicating anyone at the events in support of President Trump, planned for the 6th of January 2021 wanted to commit these actions. The FBI and Christopher Wray, the American attorney who is currently still serving as Director of the FBI since 2017, willingly ignored the warning, to facilitate what was a trap to destroy the credibility of 75 million voters, who mostly support, to this day, former President Donald J. Trump, who probably did not do enough to prevent this mess, leading to many patriots ruining their lives and ending up in jail. However, Trump recently suggested during a rally in Texas at the end of January 2022, that if he is reelected, he would pardon them, but, as usual, several prominent Republicans from the swamp, including Sen. Lindsey Graham, immediately criticized the move that would partly redeem Trump’s faults regarding January 6, 2021.

An X-Files Scenario is Unfolding...

At this point, can we still trust the FBI? Not really, as we have seen in so many episodes of the tv series The X-Files, there is always a dark side to the Bureau. That's why the FBI, never seemed to have liked that show in the first place. Evidence of what I'm saying comes from the late Cartha "Deke" DeLoach (1920-2013), once deputy associate director of the FBI, that worked as an adviser for the fifteenth episode of the fifth season of the famous American science fiction television series, called the "Travelers."

In 2019, a letter obtained by government transparency journalists and researchers at MuckRock captured DeLoach's reaction to the "Travelers" script, which was supremely negative. The script was entertaining but very "sophomorish" DeLoach wrote. "When compared to FBI policies it was totally lacking in accuracy and objectivity." Really? "It may appeal to some segments of the masses through attempts at sensationalism, but it's [sic] crudeness and primer-like aspects will turn off anyone with knowledge of the FBI and law enforcement in general."

DeLoach retired from the FBI in 1970, after serving for years as a confidante to FBI director J. Edgar Hoover, and Associate Director Clyde Tolson, and was called as an uncredited consultant, to help with their depiction of the Bureau during the days of the Hollywood Blacklist, and the Red Scare depicted in "Travelers," [\[141\]](#) that follows the events triggered in the thirteenth and fourteenth episode of the fifth season, when after a UFO crash in the ever-so mysterious land of Kazakhstan, Dmitri, a young Kazakh, gets infected by an alien virus known as the "black oil," revealed to be the "life force" of the alien colonists, which seemingly use it to reproduce their kind, as well as infect other alien races to conquer the universe. [\[142\]](#)

In the fifteenth episode Agent Mulder (David Duchovny) visits a retired FBI agent, who describes tracking down Skur, an alleged Communist who turned out to have been the victim of government experimentation. Now host to a parasitical alien entity, which bursts from his mouth to kill anyone who threatens him, "Travelers" suggests that 1950s paranoia surrounding Communist infiltrators was part of a cover-up for something even more sinister. So, what is more sinister than Communism? Well, the Jesuits and the Vatican seem to have the answer to this important question, and they are finally unveiling the truth after years of careful, doctrinal discussions, and even Pope Francis weighed in on the "aliens" in the last few years, stating with no shame they would be our brothers and he would baptize them, but that's ridiculous if the entity in question is a demon.

In the meantime, we should also keep in mind in this context, a spin-off movie from the X-Files, sub-headed "Fight the Future," that was shot in the summer of 1997 flowing out of the season five narrative that offered us the previously mentioned "Travelers" episode, and then flowing back into season six. The film was a "pre-pandemic" Hollywood Pre-Programming project about the sense that a great disease, or cataclysm, is inevitably on its way. In the film, Doctor Alvin Kurtzweil played by Martin Landau, a friend to Mulder's father, William (Bill) Mulder, tells the two were recruited for a project that they were told was biological warfare – specifically, a virus. Kurtzweil huddles with Fox Mulder in an alley, warning him that "a plague to end all plagues" is coming, created by a shadowy cabal "negotiating a planned Armageddon."

With beautifully conveyed urgency, Doctor Kurtzweil describes a pandemic in which the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) will take over the reins of government, this as the alien virus renders us helpless before the extraterrestrial takeover.^[143]

In the State Department, Kurtzweil and Mulder's father were considered "fellow travelers" (usually a phrase referring to Communist non-party sympathizers – see the episode "Travelers" – although Kurtzweil may have used the term metaphorically to refer to any shared cause) and both became disillusioned, but William Mulder's disenchantment outlasted Kurtzweil's similar frustration. On one occasion, Kurtzweil was photographed having a picnic with seven other individuals, including William Mulder, his two children, Fox, and Samantha Mulder, and his wife, Teena Mulder.^[144]

More recently, in the 10th season of the show "The X-Files," which aired in the United States in 2016, we have the appearance of the "Spartan virus," that the fictional aliens of the popular TV series put in the smallpox vaccine, to later be able to edit our DNA and wreak havoc on our immune systems. The vaccine genome editing (also called gene editing) that gives scientists the ability to change an organism's DNA technology was called in the "The X-Files" episode CRISPR-Cas9. Now, we can ignore the alien DNA modification hypothesis as nonsense, but the fact that they want to either spread this ongoing biological warfare further or vaccinate all of us, or to hijack our system, is, unfortunately, a sad reality. In May 2021, a team of prominent scientists discussed the controversial theory that genetic bits of the pandemic coronavirus can integrate into our chromosomes and stick around long after the infection is over.^[145]

A few months earlier, there was another controversial study that claimed that mRNA vaccines can alter our DNA forever. In a non-peer-reviewed paper published as a pre-print in December 2020^[146]. The co-authors, which included two biologists from the respected Massachusetts Institute of Technology (MIT) claimed that the novel coronavirus could modify human DNA.

Going back to the Vatican, a deliberate effort by Church officials to "warm-up" the laity to ET disclosure, is gradually taking place, as I will show you in the next few pages. For this reason, it is no coincidence, that official church publications on the subject in recent years, seems to attempt to soften the blow before the ultimate disclosure arrives, and they seem to be doing this to help the faithful retain their Faith considering unprecedented forthcoming knowledge coming their way after they complete the infamous "Great Reset" upon mankind. Let's not forget that when former President Donald J. Trump, signed the second coronavirus stimulus bill into law in December 2020, he set off a 180 day's countdown, requiring U.S. intelligence agencies to report what they know about UFOs, and whether, or not, they pose a threat. Of course, nothing much came out of it, aside from the final admission that UFOs are real. It was, unfortunately, another "nothing burger" courtesy of the now-defunct Trump administration.

However, President Donald Trump said he has heard some interesting things about Roswell, but he did not share them even with his eldest child. During a Father's Day-themed interview with his son Don Trump Jr., hosted by the President's reelection campaign in June 2020, Don Jr. wound down his interview by jokingly asking his father/President if he would ever divulge more information about Roswell, the New Mexico city known for its proximity to arguably most famous UFO event — "and let us know what's really going on." Trump responded, "I won't talk to you about what I know about it, but it's very interesting."^[147]

In the meantime, operations for controlled exposure led worldwide by the Jesuits are already taking place, as machinations of evil led by the usual demonic entities. But extraterrestrial, or primevally elemental, alien beings, who a lot of researchers, also in the Evangelical community, see as deceptive demonic beings, are powerless against us if we consider deeply the message of Jesus in the New Testament, that it is a warning, a weapon, and a tool of wisdom, from God the Father, that we always need to rely on in the End times. Always remember we conquer the lurking fear in our own souls, only when we turn to God, that's the only way to fight this my dear friends and allies of the Great Reject.

As Professor Christopher Partridge, from the Department of Theology and Religious Studies at the University College of Chester, in the United Kingdom, writes: "Initially, the sacralization of the extraterrestrial led to an understanding of the alien as a fundamentally benevolent, messianic figure—a 'technological angel'. This was largely because of the Cold War environment in which much UFO religion arose. Those attracted to the myth looked beyond a politically and militarily unstable planet to extraterrestrial saviors. Furthermore, because UFO religions have their roots in the Theosophical tradition, the religious understanding of the extraterrestrial tended to be fundamentally indebted to the concept of the wise and benevolent ascended master."^[148] This is a subject that I have already analyzed in-depth in my book, Invisible Master.^[149] It is important to realize how we as Christians, have a different perception of the UFO phenomenon, from New Agers today, mainly because the roots of their "alien" perception comes from Theosophy and Eastern religious traditions, just like the Illuminati controllers of the imminent Fourth Reich, who, like the Third Reich, despise the myths and symbols of Christian demonology, that give us real insight on the reality of these beings. But there are also some Christian researchers that have a different take on this subject like Timothy Alberino, who seem to believe the theories I exposed above about the alien/demonic connection, might have good "intentions," and "be admirable" but are “unsupported by logic and unsubstantiated by the facts.”^[150] A controversial take on this phenomenon, especially from Christian researchers like Alberino, who don’t want to associate the abduction phenomena, they seem to think is at the center of the UFO mystery, with the Christian phenomena of demonic possession. However, there is something I totally agree about with my friend, Timothy: “Both fallen and non-fallen angels come from the same civilization and are members of the same race,” and “the presumption that only the bad guys travel in advanced aerospace vehicles is a logical fallacy.”^[151]

In fact, like Timothy Alberino cleverly points out,

They share the same general appearance, the same heritage, the same language, the same customs, the same knowledge, and the same technology. Hardware has no allegiance. Technology cannot be “fallen. A flying saucer is no more good or evil than your Ford Truck.

The truth is out there if we want to use once again a known quote by the ever-optimistic Fox Mulder, and former President Donald J. Trump now knows this truth, because of his time as President of the United States. Could this have changed him? Or even ruined his integrity? We can only speculate on this subject, but it a fascinating one.

Archbishop “Pope” Carlo Maria Viganò is On Board with The Great Reject

Occult researcher and O.T.O. member Gary Lachman wrote in 2018 that the fact “Trump does not take things too seriously, can be gleaned from his many gnostic late-night tweets.^[152]” But that’s not always the case, and with one tweet, President Trump introduced Archbishop Carlo Maria Viganò to a much wider audience in June 2020, helping one of the few Catholic prelates I respect these days. For Lachman, Trump’s reality “is a kind of playground”^[153] often linked to his “New Thought” background, and I want to add that it is in this context, former President Trump might have helped at times the good side “making things happen,”^[154] others instead, he went (and still goes on), in the opposite direction, in what seems more and more like the work of an Illuminati “Chaos Magician” because “like New Thought, Chaos magick is interested in results.”^[155] Unfortunately for all of us, such results seem focused on “shifting the boundary of achievable reality,” which seems like another way of expressing the desire to create reality itself. ^[156] Now, that might not always be a good thing for his political base, even if I prefer Trumpism to libtard ideology.

The New Thought movement (also Higher Thought) is a spiritual movement that appeared in the United States in the early 19th century. Its most famous student was Mary Baker Eddy, founder of Christian Science, another religious movement that emerged in the latter half of the 19th century. Eventually, Eddy distanced herself from Quimby, focusing her movement on reforming what she saw as the errors within Christianity. However, what Eddy shared with the New Thought movement was a belief that curing illness was connected to the mind’s power to restore health. By the 1890s, the New Thought movement had shifted attention away from curing disease. Instead, it focused upon the mind’s power to create material success. Historian Beryl Satter observes, “Since human thought had creative power, negative thoughts materialized into negative situations, while spiritual thoughts could form a positive reality.” The New Thought’s emphasis on achieving personal prosperity meshed with themes associated with the late 19th-century Gilded Age.^[157]

Regarding the term “New Thought,” Horatio Willis Dresse (1866-1954) a New Thought, religious leader, and author in the United States^[158] wrote in A History of the New Thought Movement:

In England, the term Higher Thought was preferred at first, and this name was chosen for the Higher Thought Centre, the first organization of its kind in England. This name did not, however, represent a change in point of view, and the movement in England has been similar to the therapeutic movement elsewhere.^[159]

The fusion between New Thought and Christian libertarianism is epitomized by Norman Vincent Peale (1898-1993) who became Trump’s mentor in “positive thinking,” and was the one who “popularized the phrase.”^[160] New Thought was preceded by “ancient thought”, accumulated wisdom and philosophy from a variety of origins, such as Ancient Greek, Roman, Egyptian, Chinese, Taoist, Vedic, Hindu, and Buddhist cultures and their related belief systems, primarily regarding the interaction between thought, belief, consciousness in the human mind, and the effects of these within and beyond the human mind. Although there have been many leaders and various offshoots of the New Thought philosophy, the origins of New Thought have often been traced back to Phineas Quimby, or even as far back as Freemason and Illuminati Franz Mesmer^[161] (1734-1815), Mesmer attended the University of Ingolstadt in 1759, the future birthplace of the Illuminati. During the early years of animal magnetism, the Mesmeric and Masonic movements in France frequently shared membership, philosophical positions, ambiance, and ritualistic style. There was even a proposal to establish a blend of the two to be called Mesmeric Masonry, although nothing came of that^[162] an attempt was made with the first Société de Harmonie that was formed in Paris, but its members seem to have acted in a manner that was anything but “harmonious.” After some quarreling among themselves, they broke their contract with Mesmer, whereby they had promised before being admitted to his lectures that they would not practice on their account or give away the secret of his methods without his consent. Other Societies of Harmony soon sprang up, the most important being that of Strasbourg, founded in 1785 by the Marquis Chastenet de Puysegur.^[163]

Trump, wrote on his now-defunct Twitter account, on June 10, 2020, that he was “honored” by an open letter that Viganò himself, the former Vatican ambassador to the U.S. (2011-2016), had written to him days earlier encouraging his 82 million followers to read it.^[164] In the highly controversial open letter, Viganò claimed among other things that “civil disturbances” in the wake of George Floyd's death in police custody, that were provoked by “deep state” operatives, because “the virus is inevitably fading” and “the social alarm of the pandemic is waning,” something that, unfortunately, seems still present, as the never-ending strategy of the variants makes it impossible to ever go back to normality.

In his letter, Viganò also claimed that restrictions to stem the pandemic were a “colossal operation of social engineering.” The letter in question was published June 6, 2020, by LifeSiteNews, a traditional Catholic website unjustly branded by the mainstream as “right-wing,” based in Canada, known for their traditional views on abortion and homosexuality, and as a regular sounding board for the Jesuit pope's critics.

In the letter in question, Viganò, 79 at the time, praised Trump and used veiled language about “the children of light and the children of darkness.” Rightly claiming that restrictions to prevent the spread of COVID-19 were part of a Masonic plot to establish a New World Order. Archbishop Viganò, who was the once-powerful Vatican Apostolic nuncio to the United States between 2011 and 2016, published another strong message/open letter addressed this time to all American Catholics, and Americans of Good Will, on November 4th 2020, where he warned that America was amid a colossal electoral fraud, and we must pray now to defeat the enemy. This is a couple of the most significant passages of his historic message, that unfortunately, as well know, was not enough to keep Trump in the White House.

News of electoral fraud is multiplying, despite the shameful attempts of the mainstream media to censor the truth of the facts to give their candidate the advantage. There are states in which the number of votes is greater than the number of voters; others in which the mail-in vote seems to be exclusively in favor of Joe Biden; others in which the counting of ballots has been suspended for no reason or where sensational tampering has been discovered: always and only against President Donald J. Trump, always and only in favor of Biden.^[165]

Adding towards the end of the letter words of great hope and wisdom:

Do not allow yourselves to be discouraged by the deceptions of the Enemy, even more so in this terrible hour in which the impudence of lying and fraud dares to challenge Heaven. Our adversaries' hours are numbered if you will pray, if we will all pray with Faith and with the true ardor of Charity. May the Lord grant that one single devout and faithful voice rise from your homes, your churches, and your streets! This voice will not remain unheard, because it will be the voice of a people that cries out, in the moment when the storm rages most fiercely, “Save us, Lord, we are perishing!” (Mt 8:25).^[166]

However, Archbishop Viganò has never given up and one year later, in November 2021, he released another important message, addressing in a video the people of all faiths to unite in a worldwide anti-globalist alliance to free humanity from the totalitarian regime. Now we should start considering this an international call for the creation of an anti-globalist alliance to defeat the evil elites who wish to enslave free men and women and promote a “Religion of Humanity that cancels Faith in Christ” as the official beginning of our Great Reject. In the video in question, Archbishop Viganò says among other things:

This Anti-Globalist Alliance will have to bring together the Nations that intend to escape the infernal yoke of tyranny and affirm their sovereignty, forming agreements of mutual collaboration with Nations and peoples who share their principles and the common yearning for freedom, justice, and goodness. It will have to denounce the crimes of the elite, identify those responsible, denounce them to international tribunals, and limit their excessive power and harmful influence. It will have to prevent the action of the lobbies, above all by fighting against the corruption of state officials and those who work in the information industry, and by freezing the capital used to destabilize the social order.^[167]

And in another video, published at the beginning of December 2021, Archbishop Viganò, stands up once again against the New World Order, and their insane and immoral actions taking place around the world, responding “to corruption with honesty, to lies with truth” and mentioning and denouncing the activities of Dr. Evil, aka Klaus Schwab, his demented World Economic Forum, their “fourth industrial revolution,” “The Great Reset,” and even the United Nations with their infamous Agenda2030. For this reason, I want to include the whole letter of Archbishop Viganò in my book as an important testimony of these incredible times we are living.

Dear Friends,

Allow me to address you as you denounce the most controversial and disturbing aspects of the experimental gene serum with great and commendable commitment. Your battle for scientific truth, coupled with increasingly coordinated action by countless scientists and doctors around the world, is opening the eyes of many people who have allowed themselves to be misled by the false promises of health authorities, by the discordant opinions of experts, and by media propaganda.

I will not go into the merits of the health issue in itself, as you are much better informed than I am. Allow me to bring to your attention some reflections, observing the entirety of what is happening without focusing on specific details.

It now seems clear to me that the main purpose of this grotesque health charade is the imposition of a control system for individuals, implemented through the so-called green pass. We know that the health passport had been designed years ago, but that make it mandatory it was necessary to create a pandemic emergency and force the population – through blackmail or the threat of sanctions – to allow themselves to be injected with an experimental drug for which the producer, the State, and whoever administers it do not assume any responsibility, pouring it instead onto the patient. Just yesterday, the FDA decided to make public the reasons for approving the Pfizer vaccine only in 2076: this gives ample proof of the criminal mind behind the screen of public health.

We see therefore that we have an elite of criminals, gathered together in the World Economic Forum to conceive the Great Reset and in the United Nations to implement the Agenda2030, who have decided to decimate the population of the planet through some “scenarios” described in detail. They destroy national economies, cause poverty and unemployment, create discrimination and violations of fundamental rights with the sole purpose of controlling survivors, tracing their movements, modifying their lives, deciding their thinking, and establishing their health regime. This work includes the collaboration of rulers, public officials, doctors, magistrates, law enforcement agencies, the media – as if that weren’t enough – even religious leaders. Calling it a “conspiracy theory” is an understatement: it is a coup d’état pursued with a clear mind and determination, a crime against humanity. Its purpose is precisely to control us: to make us slaves and customers of a system that is about to implode, in which those who have made the most profits in the past creating the crisis, are now preparing to carry out the “fourth industrial revolution” – as Klaus Schwab calls it – to continue accumulating power and money.

The imposition of the health passport and the so-called vaccination are part of this project. It matters little that the Constitutions of the States and the most elementary principles of law are violated with impunity in the name of an emergency that was artfully provoked; it matters little that eminent personalities of the world of medicine denounce the serious side effects of the gene serum and the criminal management of the pandemic; it matters little that the macroscopic conflicts of interest existing between pharmaceutical companies, medical staff, health officials and mainstream information are well-known: their narrative does not contemplate refutations, does not accept criticism, does not tolerate the evidence of the facts.

But if an elite has managed to corrupt the rulers and carry out a real coup against the citizens, we cannot respond locally: if the aggression is global, the action of opposition and resistance must likewise be global. I therefore also renew my invitation to you, who as scientists understand very clearly the danger of the experimental drug, asking you to join an Anti-globalist Alliance, to be able to counter this undeclared – but no less ruthless and violent – world war in a unitary and coordinated way.

Our enemy is not the virus, but the insanity of those who betray their duties to the detriment of the community, of those who believe they can impose the Chinese totalitarian model and social credit in our nations, in the name of Communist collectivism that takes away identity and freedom to each of us.

This global betrayal must be stopped: let's respond to corruption with honesty, to lies with truth, to self-interest with the generous dedication to public affairs, to the desire for power and money with selfless service and a sense of duty.

We reject not only the pandemic delirium, but the entire castle of horrors of the globalist ideology: the culture of death of abortion and euthanasia, gender theory, the indoctrination of our children, the "cancel culture," uncontrolled immigration, the demolition of the natural family, the reduction of the protection and wages of workers, the persecution of small businesses. Let's go back to being proud defenders of traditional values: God, Nation, and Family. Let's return to praying to the Lord, recognizing him as King not only of individuals but of all nations and societies. Only understanding the war in progress, identifying the opponents and their criminal aims will allow us to resist and win.

If we limit ourselves to looking only at the efficacy of the gene serum, or the reliability of the test swabs, or the response that a single country has given to the spread of the infection, we will never get out.

Remember: if the attack is global, the counteroffensive must also be global. And may God assist and protect us.

+ Carlo Maria Viganò, Archbishop

Former Nuncio to the United States of America^[168]

Unfortunately, as also pointed out by Jim Hoft at The Gateway Pundit on December 5th 2021 in an article that mysteriously disappeared a couple of days later, "Archbishop Viganò is the object of evil attacks by the mainstream media and the globalist left because he stands with Catholics, Christians, and even non-believers who have thirst for justice and truth in this confusing and dangerous world we are living in."^[169] So, we need to support Viganò's mission, and we need to stand united against the Great Reset, while the incumbent system is busy banning menthol cigarettes, encouraging the even more polluting electric cars that will help end the destruction of the rain forest^[170], gearing up for negative interest rates, and undergoing mass conversion to a peculiar new religion called "Wokeness," that we all know already won't work for the common folk, only for the libtard extremist. For this reason, the non-conventional Italian journalist Cesare Sacchetti, who has interviewed the former Nuncio, in early December 2021, and describes himself as "politically incorrect and heretical", says that Viganò "terrifies the hierarchy of the anti-Catholic church of Bergoglio." Adding in the following introduction to the exclusive interview with the archbishop this excellent description:

This man has been the object of tremendous and evil attacks by the mainstream media. They have been trying to smear him and depict him as a criminal or like someone who is putting society in great danger. This man is Archbishop Viganò. His Excellency has become like a polar star of hope for those Catholics and even non-believers who have thirst for justice and common sense in this upside-down world. Viganò has been speaking calmly but his gentle voice has terrified the powerful people of the world. Viganò has exposed the Great Reset and the plan to destroy mankind. He denounced the infiltration of Freemasonry into society and the Church.

In other words, Viganò is guilty of having said the truth like a humble pastor of God. In this interview that His Excellency granted us, he once again tells us in what kind of historical period we are living. He also consoles us by reminding us that being persecuted for loving God and having Faith is the greatest honor that we may have. This is probably why so many people look at this man in this historical period. He's one of the few pastors that can speak simply to the hearts of the common men.^[171]

In the interview that follows Cesare Sacchetti poses two very interesting questions that relate to the Satanic nature of the Great Reset to Archbishop Viganò:

In the "Great Reset" society that Your Excellency has denounced on numerous occasions, the "transhumanist" ideology plays a fundamental role. Modern technology is advancing at a very fast pace and we are now speaking openly about the possibility of controlling human behavior through brain microchip implants. One who favors this new model of "human/robot" is Klaus Schwab, a character whom we have met in the previous questions, the head of the World Economic Forum. Do you think that the final purpose of transhumanism is really this, to deprive man of his God-given free will?

Transhumanism is a hellish project, in which the Devil mocks the creation of God by perverting and corrupting it. Obedience to the “easy yoke” of the Law of God is replaced by the enslavement and submission to Satan’s tyranny, in which there is no tolerance for good and everyone is forced to commit evil, accept evil, and legitimize evil. And despite the fact that only God can read our consciences, Satan tries to violate the sanctuary of our inner spiritual part to control it and induce us to commit evil even against our will. In his recent book, The Great Reset, Klaus Schwab wrote the following:

“We are also studying new ways to use and implant internal devices that monitor our levels of activity, the hematochemical values and the ways in which these can be associated to wellbeing, to mental health, and to productivity at home and at work. We are also learning better the functioning of the brain and witnessing exceptional developments in the neurotechnology area.”

It is a delirium that only Lucifer can conceive, and it is destined to complete failure because of its Antichristic matrix, its defying of the divine Kingship of Jesus Christ. It is a delirium where the creature, rebelling against the divine laws, pretends to reach the place of the Highest and repeats, with the same disgraceful determination, the “Non serviam” (“I will not serve”) of Lucifer.

Satan is simia Dei (“an ape of God”): in everything that he does to keep us away from God and drag us toward Hell, we can always see his mocking attempt to imitate the Savior, to usurp His sovereignty, to pervert His teachings and to steal souls from Him. The Devil wants to be worshipped in the place of God. He wants the Antichrist to rule over the world and subjugate mankind to his tyranny by replacing the Church of Christ with the anti-Church of Satan, which is the Religion of Mankind, an ecumenical and ecological one.

In your videos and articles, you have spoken about the threat represented by the New World Order (NWO). Several statesmen and prime ministers, such as George H. Bush, Henry Kissinger, Nicolas Sarkozy, and David Rockefeller – just to name a few– used this expression in their public statements. These politicians describe the NWO as a sort of “Eden” we all should aim for. During the COVID crisis, we have been often hearing these words. Can you explain the idea that drives the New World Order and why vaccines play a very important role in the fulfillment of this goal?

The New World Order is neither New nor Order: it represents the foolish ambition of Satan to overthrow the providential plan of God, to cancel the true Religion that leads to eternal salvation, and finally to replace the “ordo christianus” (“the Christian order”) with infernal chaos. In this disorder, the lie replaces the Truth, injustice, and abuse of power replace justice, whim instead of obedience to the law of God, death instead of life, illness instead of health, the legitimization of Evil and the condemnation of Good, the persecution of good people and the praising of evil ones, ignorance in the place of culture and wisdom, ugliness and horror instead of beauty, division and hatred instead of harmony and love. Satan doesn’t want to be worshipped by adopting the qualities of God, but by demanding to be an object of adoration through everything that is evil, obscene, false, absurd, and monstrous. He seeks complete subversion, a subversion ontologically devilish and Antichristic: a “New Order” obtained by means of a global coup d’état imposed under the guise of an engineered planned emergency.

The vaccine campaign, lacking any scientific validity, serves first of all as the apparent legitimization for implementing global tracking and controls, today under the pretext of limiting COVID spread (a pretext which is false, because, among other reasons, the vaccinated can still become infected and be contagious). But tomorrow, this campaign aims to expand its reach, extending the “Green Pass” to include information used in a “social credit system” to confront a “green emergency,” which will be likewise false and specious. The “Green Pass” is being conceived as something like the Mark of the Beast mentioned in the Apocalypse of Saint John to allow or forbid people to buy, sell, travel, spend, eat and live.

Secondly, the inoculation of people with an experimental genic serum that provokes a weakening of our natural immune system represents a very grave crime, because it turns ordinary healthy people into chronically ill people, and consequently into customers of the health care companies and private care. This situation hugely inflates the profits of the globalist élite and brings a general impoverishment of the population. Even this aspect, apparently secondary, reveals the subversive character of the “Great Reset,” because the “Great Reset” does not represent only an attack against the health of an individual, but also an attack against the national security of the States, because their armed forces are harmed by the side effects of the vaccine, while the not-vaccinated soldiers are banned from active duty. I think that this is a point not enough considered by those who are analyzing the present crisis, and it shows the malice of those who Once in power, cooperate for the destruction of nations in order to subjugate them to the New Order.[\[172\]](#)

The shocking words of Carlo Maria Viganò, archbishop of the Catholic Church who served as the Apostolic Nuncio to the United States, confirm once and for all the Satanic nature of the Great Reset, and the hellish nature of

The New World Order. It should come as no surprise then, that in December 2021, Dr. Gwyneth Anne Spaeder, a senior Catholic doctor, whose family profits from the pharmaceutical industry and has links to various vaccine oligarchs, launched a vicious attack against Viganò for conscientiously objecting to the abortion-tainted jab. She did it with a 6,000-word article published by the Italian blog Corrispondenza Romana, which is edited by Professor Roberto de Mattei, a corrupt Catholic Italian historian, who had already outraged fellow traditionalists after he began justifying the morality of abortion-contaminated vaccines.

Dr. Gwyneth Anne Spaeder, a specialist in general pediatrics and adolescent medicine, who failed to disclose in the article her wide-ranging financial conflict of interests with Big Pharma, insisted that her conclusions were “scientifically sound,” defending both the Pfizer and Moderna vaccines, as “among the ‘cleanest’ vaccines ever made” with “no long-term adverse effects emerging.” However, Spaeder admitted at one point that there is a “very small risk of myocarditis” following the Pfizer and Moderna vaccines, but she considers it “mild and resolves itself.” Even asserting that “Catholics have no reason to fear the safety, efficacy, or morality of COVID mRNA vaccines.” Adding that, “In fact, science has not taken any shortcuts: the safety and efficacy studies for both Pfizer and Moderna have been enormous and had all the credentials to support the conclusions put forward.” Trashing the reliability of the Vaccine Adverse Events Reporting System (VAERS), the medic also conveniently claimed “there is no way to separate any garbage from what may be valid concerns before an investigation is conducted” and “many will insert nonsense” into the database.

[\[173\]](#) In comments made after the article in question came out to my friends at Church Militant, Archbishop Viganò said he was shocked to learn that a response to his concerns had been “entrusted by Corrispondenza Romana to somebody like Gwyneth A. Spaeder, a pediatrician graduated from Johns Hopkins University that Viganò described as “the daughter of well-known author and activist George Weigel, wife of Dr. Jeffrey Spaeder, who is Chief Medical and Scientific Officer of IQVIA, a company linked to the pharmaceutical industry, and in particular, to the manufacturers of the so-called vaccines for COVID-19. It is a pity to see Corrispondenza Romana siding with Santa Marta (Pope Francis' residence), perhaps not so much out of conviction as out of opportunism,” the prelate lamented, “but I am a bit disappointed to see how clumsy and counterproductive it was to have entrusted the refutation to a pediatrician in clear conflict of interest.”[\[174\]](#)

But Archbishop Viganò, shouldn't be surprised, after all, the Vatican has been corrupted in recent years by Pfizer, one of the biggest and most powerful players in the Big Pharma industry, indicated by Church Militant as the “World's Most Corrupt Jab Giant.” Pfizer was once fined $2.3 billion in 2009 for what was then the largest health care fraud settlement ever. The company also spent over $21.8 million in 2019–2020, and $6.7 million from January–August 2021 on lobbying the government, making it the biggest spender of any individual drug company during the COVID-19 crisis. The fact this protagonist of the vaccine frenzy has been meeting in secret with Pope Francis was confirmed in January 2022 by known journalist and author, Edward Pentin, in The National Catholic Register, the oldest Catholic periodical in the United States, who made a shocking discovery that confirms our worst fears about the vaccine-pushing Jesuit pope:

The Register has learned that Pope Francis privately held undisclosed meetings with the CEO of Pfizer last year as questions arise over the efficacy of the vaccines in preventing transmission, which is now being mandated for all Vatican staff and visitors.

According to Vatican sources, the Holy Father twice met Pfizer CEO Albert Bourla at the Vatican, although the precise details are not known. Unlike most papal private audiences, these meetings were not announced by the Holy See Press Office, which did not respond to repeated requests to confirm the meetings. A Pfizer spokesman said, “We can't confirm or deny as, per our policy, the movements of our executives are considered confidential.”

Bourla's meetings with the Pope would not be the first such unannounced papal encounter in recent years. In November 2019, shortly before the COVID-19 health emergency began, the Pope privately received Melinda Gates. The meeting, well-known in the Vatican, was not announced and has never been officially acknowledged.

Last May, Bourla took part in an online Vatican health conference titled “Unite to Prevent & Unite to Cure” that included a significant focus on COVID-19 treatments and prevention as well as providing a platform for promoting vaccines produced by large pharmaceutical companies.[\[175\]](#)

The Vatican is in the hands of Satan working to implement the infamous “Mark of the Beast,” and Archbishop Viganò is a rare religious leader in the Catholic Church who dares to speak the truth. Even rarer, he understands what is happening with the infamous Great Reset, that's why on September 29, 2019, Patriarch Elijah Anthony Dohnal of the pro-Russian Ukrainian Orthodox Greek Catholic Church (UOGCC), that originally split from the Ukrainian Greek Catholic Church, in 2009, not only declared an anathema on the 26 cardinals, 134 bishops, and 99 priests, who participated to the infamous Amazon Synod but in the same period, on October 14, 2019, the Synod of the UOGCC, elected Archbishop Carlo Maria Viganò as their Pope. [\[176\]](#)

On the 5th of January 2022, the Byzantine Catholic Patriarchate (BCP) of the UOGCC headed by Patriarch Elijah, wrote a very impressive “Response to the third vaccination terror in the Vatican,” following the latest COVID-19 mandates for all Vatican employees who have been required to present a “green pass,” proof of vaccination or recovery from COVID-19 after January 31, 2022.

Dear Fathers in the Episcopal Ministry, the Vatican has announced that whoever of the staff refuses to receive the third vaccine by 1 February will be fired immediately without notice. Realize that you are under the dominion of the occupier, arch-heretic, and criminal Bergoglio. He will force you to carry out his crimes against Christ and humanity in your diocese and in your nation. You will have to fulfill his genocidal vaccination plan. Surely you know that the mRNA vaccine disrupts the human genome, among other things. It is associated with graphene, spike protein production, and the blood of sadistically murdered unborn babies. Actually, this is not even a vaccination, this is satanic anti-baptism. In addition, there is a vain hope that it will be all over after the third vaccination; there is already talk of a fourth one. This ushers in a system of permanent vaccination, the aim of which is to turn humans into biorobots and genetically modified organisms. The end result is the reduction of humanity, and then? The lake of fire.

You are going to face eternal hell unless you separate from the Vatican’s vaccination anti-gospel. You can no longer remain passive! In this situation, passivity is a crime! You must actively oppose the deadly machinery. Unless you do so, you will be judged by God and men for betraying Christ and for crimes against humanity. The Bergoglian Vatican has set in motion the machinery for compulsory vaccination. In doing so, it created a pernicious precedent as well as a false moral justification for the evil governments. If you, the bishops, remain silent at this stage, you will be primarily to blame for the genocide of your own nation. The government will appeal to the apostate Vatican and will lose the last shred of conscience. But you represent the Vatican in your nation. Your passivity is enough for the nation to be destroyed. Today, you are obliged to step out of the organized crime of the Bergoglian Vatican and say a clear NO to it! This is the true synodal path and saving repentance. Unless you step out, your unity with programmed satanization under the Bergoglian Vatican will have a deeper impact than that of politicians or the deceitful mainstream. Because of your betrayal, dear bishops, God will not be able to intervene to save your nation. But if you break out of the wicked system, the Vatican’s false bubble will burst and God, through your act of faith, will intervene to save both the Church and your nation.

Dear Bishops, an extremely great responsibility rests upon you that you cannot escape. You will either be heroes or criminals. Moreover, this determines the salvation of your own soul – either you will obtain the crown of eternal glory, or you will be eternally damned in hell along with the whole system of COVID Satanism.
