ABOUT THE AUTHOR

Jennifer Eveland spent part of her childhood in Singapore, has studied in Hong Kong, lived for a spell in B angkok, and has trav eled extensively throughout East and S outheast Asia. In addition to Frommer's Singapore & Malaysia, she has authored previous editions of Frommer's Thailand and contributes to Frommer's Southeast A sia. In 1999 she r eturned to Singapore, where she has been based as a full-time fr eelance writer. She writes regularly for The International Herald Tribune and contributes trav el, finance, and lifestyle stories to numer ous local and international magazines, ne wspapers, and books. She lives near Little India with her husband, a Singaporean musician and producer, their toddler son, and their three cats.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

I am indebted to S usy Atkinson for her r esearch assistance and v aluable insight for traveling in Singapore. Susy grew up in hotels, with parents employed in the hospitality industry in her native UK. A fr eelance writer, she has co-author ed a travel guidebook on S ingapore. Her travels have taken her thr oughout the r egion, but she is no w settled in S ingapore with her husband, who is a journalist and historian, and their twin toddler sons.

I would also like to thank D avid Bowden, who provided research and expert travel advice for the Malaysia chapters. An Australian, David is an award-winning freelance photojournalist specialising in travel, food, wine, and the environment who has been based in Asia for o ver a decade. He's penned children's books, travel books and guides, and ar ticles. He is currently based in KL with his wife and daughter.

As always I am grateful to the Singapore Tourism Board and to the Malaysia Tourism Board for their continued support for this project.

What's New in Singapore & Malaysia

SINGAPORE

From 2009 onwar d, S ingapore's do wntown will look like a completely differ ent place. In November 2008, the city completed the Marina B arrage, a giant dam project at the mouth of Marina Bay, which transformed the bay into a fr eshwater reservoir. Located in the heart of the city, the bay will suppor t water spor ts and entertainment, and will be surrounded by parks and promenades that will enhance S ingapore's waterfront lifestyle feel. The Marina Barrage also includes The Sustainable Singapore G allery, a high-tech museum devoted to sho wcasing Singapore's efforts toward environmental sustainability.

A huge parcel of reclaimed land is currently being developed with wide avenues and futuristic infrastructure to support office towers, luxury high-rise condominiums, and a new financial center. An extension of the Shenton Way business district, the new area is being developed as a 'round-the-clock hub for working, living, and playing.

The centerpiece of the ne w downtown development is the Marina B ay S ands, Singapore's first casino, built by Las Vegas Sands, which has invested $$5 billion (US$3.4 billion/£2.3 billion). The huge complex will also feature 110,000 sq. m (1,184,029 sq. ft.) of meeting and convention space, two 2,000-seat theaters, three hotel to wers, an ArtScience museum, luxury retail outlets, dining venues in floating pavilions on the bay, plus innovative public spaces that include a reooftop park with a 360-degree city view, an ice skating rink, and indoor canals. The complex will open in stages from late 2009.

Towering abo ve the M arina B ay, the Singapore Flyer (p. 124), the world's largest observation wheel, has good vie ws of all the construction.

There are also plans to join two landmark buildings within the H istoric D istrict—City H all and the old S upreme Court building—and convert them into a large exhibition space for contemporar y arts in Singapore and Southeast Asia, with visiting exhibits fr om ar ound the world. The ne w ar t galler y, alongside The Arts House at the Old Parliament (p. 183) and The Esplanade—Theatres on the B ay, will turn the former colonial administrativ e heart of S ingapore into a vibrant ar ts hub.

On S entosa I sland, a second casino complex, Resorts World at Sentosa, is being developed by Genting International and S tar C ruises, who will inv est S$5.2 billion (US$3.5 billion/£2.3 billion) to build an enormous facility on S Island. G eared to ward family and leisur e activities, the casino will be suppor ted by spa r esort accommodations, r estaurants, and bars, plus r etail and enter tainment outlets. Perhaps the most ex citing part of the package will be the addition of versal Studios Singapore, promised to be Asia's largest, with 22 attractions in themed "worlds," including "Journey to Madagascar," and a D reamWorks Digital Animation Studio. Also in the works is the Quest Marine Life Park, with the largest single marine tank in the world, and an interactive dolphin habitat. The Equarius Water Park will featur e water rides and a maritime museum. Three amphitheaters will have international enter tainment, including a r esident show from the cr eators of Cirque du S oleil. Resorts World at S entosa is scheduled to open in stages starting in 2010.

MALAYSIA

Like S ingapore, M alaysia also has an observation wheel. F irst opened in K uala Lumpur in 2007, the Eye on M alaysia (p. 237) r eopened in its permanent location in M elaka, at the mouth of the Melaka Riv er, in N ovember 2008. The observation wheel sits on 1.6 hectar es (4 acres) of land, which is currently being developed to include a light and sound giant waterscreen sho wcase, a laser light show that uses a screen made from flowing water, and the Malaysian I nternational

Space A dventure (MISA), with interactive education exhibits celebrating M alaysia's first astronaut in space. Both of these projects ar e expected to open in late 2009.

This guide also includes a fe w ne w hotels. The Majestic Malacca (p. 236) is a welcome addition to the M elaka hotel scene, where accommodations tend to be either bland international chain hotels or tiny guesthouses. The Majestic is a luxurious pr operty built within a charming 1920s mansion located along the ne wly cleaned Melaka River.

Tioman I sland, along M alaysia's east coast, has hosted only one international-class resort for ages, but with the opening of JapaMala (p. 261), visitors now have a choice of accommodations on the idyllic island. JapaMala is a fiv e-star resort that has r ustic charm, built into the jungle, with a gorgeous beach. B etter still, it 's open year-round, as its location is somewhat protected from the monsoon.

The Best of Singapore & Malaysia

A fascinating mix of contrasts, Singapore lies at the crossroads of East and West, and as a result, it hums with a unique culture that is equal parts oriental and occidental. Founded by an adventurer who was sear ching for the epicenter of global trade, early Singapore drew waves of immigrant traders, investors, laborers, and adventurers from all corners of the world. Some 200 years later, Singapore is still fulfilling its original role, with one of the busiest shipping por to on Earth, a multicultural native population, and fresh waves of new immigrants and expatriates from countries far and wide. True to its heritage, Singapore has always been, and will always be, a nation that blends the best of all worlds into one nation.

It is understandable for a visitor to feel as if S ingapore has sold its Asian soul in exchange for a Western lifestyle. On the surface, the terrain is distinctly consumer driven; its rows of shiny shopping malls flank wide, manicured avenues dotted with McDonald's and Starbucks. At rush hour, the flow of office wor kers forms an endless riv er of black business suits and B lackberries through the M ass Rapid Transit system into the do wntown Central Business District. A modern metropolis, Singapore is a city on the move, with places to go and people to see.

But for those who pause to take a closer look, S ingapore's cultural hear t is alive and well beneath the polished v eneer. Singapore's Chinese are still driven by ancient values that respect the family, authority, and success merited by hard work. Its Malays share openly their warm ideals of gener osity, hospitality, and joy among friends and family. And the city's Indians possess a culture steeped in thousands of years of traditional beauty and passion for life. A dd to this the spirit of Arabs and Armenians, B ugis and British, various Europeans and Eurasians, and many mor e—a multitude of cultures that, combined, defines what it means to be Singaporean.

Singapore strives to honor its past while keeping one eye firmly focused on the future. Amid its efforts to grow the nation's economy and its people's standard of living are huge plans for tourism dev elopment. Already it hosts stellar world-class institutions, such as the Asian Civilisations M useum, the S ingapore Arts Museum, and the awar d-winning Singapore Zoo and Night Safari. In recent years, the city has completely r evamped the Singapore History Museum and has added the S ingapore Flyer to its r epertoire. All of these attractions, and many more, are detailed within the pages of this guide.

Major changes are on the horiz on. In the coming y ears, visitors can look for ward to The Marina Bay Sands, which comprises a Las Vegas-style casino supported by a convention center, three hotel towers topped by an interconnected skypark, "floating" pavilions on the bay, an ArtScience Museum, a luxury shopping mall, celebrity chef r estaurants, theaters, and nightclubs. The complex is slated for opening in stages fr om the end of 2009.

The following year another casino complex will be launched on S entosa, Singapore's leisure destination island, just minutes fr om the downtown area. Resorts World at Sentosa will include, in addition to a casino, Universal Studios Singapore, Marine Life Park,

Southeast Asia

Maritime Xperiential Museum, Equarius Water Park, six hotels, confer ence facilities, a kids' club, a world-class spa, plus shopping, dining, and enter tainment. This complex will open in stages starting in 2010.

Singapore's tireless drive for growth is contrasted by Malaysia's laid-back atmosphere, where in some places it can seem as if time stands still. I n fact, many Singaporeans look to their northern neighbor for the perfect vacation, exploring its rich national forests and marine parks, unwinding on picture-perfect beaches at sophisticated resorts, taking in the down-to-earth culture of its small towns, shopping for inexpensive handicrafts, and eating some of the most delicious food in S outheast Asia. But despite its exotic and world-class holiday offerings, Malaysia lacks the hoards of tourists that beat feet for S ingapore and Thailand. Because Malaysia remains comparatively quiet, it's easy to enjoy a holiday without the tacky trappings of the tourist trade.

My favorite part of Malaysia, however, is the warmth of its people. I have yet to travel in this country without collecting remarkable tales of hospitality, openness, and generosity. I've found the Malaysian people to be genuine in their approach to foreign visitors, another fine byproduct of the underdeveloped tourism industry. For those who want to find a nice little corner of paradise, Malaysia could be your answer.

I've crept down alleys, wandered the streets of cities and towns, combed beaches, and trekked jungles to seek out the most exciting things that Singapore and Malaysia have to offer. In this book I've presented the sights and attractions of these countries with insight into historical, cultural, and modern significance to bring y ou a complete appreciation of all you are about to experience. I've peeked in every shop door, chatting up the local characters inside. I've eaten local food until I can 't move. I've stayed out all night. I' ve done it all and written about it here. I can only hope you will love Singapore and Malaysia as much as I do.

1 FROMMER'S FAVORITE SINGAPORE EXPERIENCES

- Sipping a Singapore Sling at the Long Bar: Ahhhh, the Long Bar, home of the Singapore Sling. I like to come her e in the afternoons, before the tourist r ush. Sheltered by long jalousie shutters that close out the tropical sun, the air cooled by lazy punkahs (small fans that wav e gently back and for th above), you can sit back in old rattan chairs and hav your saronged waitress serve you sticky alcoholic creations while you toss back a few dainty crab cakes. Life can be so decadent. O kay, so the punkahs ar electric, and, come to think of it, the place is air-conditioned (not to mention that it costs a small fortune), but it's fun to imagine the days when S
- Maugham, Rudyard Kipling, or Charlie Chaplin would be sitting at the bar sipping Slings and spinning ex otic tales of their world travels. Drink up, my friend; it's a lovely high. See p. 179
- Witnessing Cer emonial G ore: By midnight, the air surrounding Sri Perumal Temple is thick with burning incense. A sea of people is lit by bare bulbs. Family and friends gather around men who are bare-chested and rigid, with eyes focused for ward. They are in deep spiritual meditation following 40 days of a strictly guided diet and prayer regimen to prepare their bodies for physical torture all night long.

It's the start of the Thaipusam festival, an annual H indu r eligious occasion to express gratitude to Lor d S ubramaniam for granting their wishes in the pr evious year. To do this, they will carr y kevadis, steel racks hung with fr uits and flo wers, held onto their bodies with ske wers that dig into their flesh. O thers will have rows of hooks pier cing the thick skin on their backs—the hooks attached to long leather straps that ar e pulled har d. S till others drive ske wers thr ough both cheeks and pierce their tongues.

Once ready, they will parade en masse, in full tor ture regalia, through the streets of Little India and Singapore's downtown to the Sri Thandayuthapani Temple.

Singapore's H indus celebrate Thaipusam ev ery J anuary into F ebruary, and like many other cultural and r eligious celebrations, for eign visitors ar e welcome to come and (r espectfully) observe. If you're not in to wn for this unusual festiv al, you can catch ceremonial gore at annual events like Thimithi, the Birthday of the Monkey God, and the Festival of the Nine Emperor God later in the y ear. See chapter 3 for details.

 Checking O ut the O rchard R oad Scene: You can't find better peoplewatching than on O rchard Road every Saturday afternoon, when it seems like every S ingaporean crawls out of the woodwork to join the parade of shoppers, strollers, hipsters, posers, lovers, geeks, and gabbers. E verybody is here, milling ar ound every mall, clustered ar ound every side walk bench, checking everybody else out. A the corner of Scotts Road and Orchard, just below the Marriott, there's an alfresco cafe where you'll find local celebrities hanging out to see and be seen. International celebrities and models have been spotted here on occasion, too. In the mix, you're bound to see most every tourist on the island, coming around to see what all the excitement is about.

The malls ar e filled with mobs of groovy teenagers kicking around, trying to look cool, and watching the music videos in the fr ont windo w of the HMV music store in the H eeren. Moms and dads also have half-days at the office, so the strip takes on the feel of an obstacle course as all the parents race around wielding strollers, trying to r un errands while they have the chance. Meanwhile, outside in the shady areas, y ou can see crowds of domestic maids and wor kers relaxing and catching up on the latest news on their free afternoon.

For some, the scene is a madhouse to be avoided; for others, it's a chance to watch life on a typical S aturday afternoon in downtown Singapore.

2 FROMMER'S FAVORITE MALAYSIA EXPERIENCES

 Letting the S ea Wash A way All Your Stress: This is paradise. Lying flat, arms outstretched acr oss the sur face of the water, I felt the rays of the sun warming my back and the cool ripples of salty sea beneath me. Through the clear water I could see the seabed at the bottom of the bay and all assor tment of cr eatures swimming in and out of corals. My snorkel guide pointed in the shadows to the silhouette of a meter-long shark, too shy to approach.

Back near the beach, I stood in the shallows feeding br ead cr umbs to the smaller fish. Within minutes I was surrounded by a swarm of brilliant colors—vivid D ay-Glo flashes of saltwater fish, thousands of them, dozens of species, swirling ar ound me and plucking bread from my fingertips.

On the beach, my friends and I laz ed under the shade of a tree, digging our feet into the soft and po wdery sand. O ne friend climbed a coconut palm and twisted a giant nut off its stem. U sing a cleav er from the kitchen, we hacked it open and poured the coconut water o ver ice in a glass, then picked the sweet flesh from the inside the shell. After a day of this, I was ready to tear up my return ticket.

This kind of paradise is everywhere in Malaysia, and you can find it within an hour's flight from Kuala Lumpur (KL), if you visit Langkawi, Tioman, and Redang, or, if you have more time, in Sabah.

• E xperiencing Kampung H ospitality: Pakcik (uncle) was just slightly older than his ancient Mercedes, but his price was right, so I hir ed him for the day to drive me ar ound K ota B haru. S ometime after lunch, during a stop at the kite-maker's house, I spotted a beautiful gasing, a wood-and-steel M alay top. It would be the perfect gift for my bother! I just had to have one.

Well, the kite-maker didn't want to give his up, but P akcik had a fe w ideas. After coming up empty at the local shops, he took on my quest with personal conviction. Off we drove through the outskirts of town, the sights becoming increasingly rural. He turned do wn a dir troad, past grazing water buffaloes lazing near rice paddies. Soon the fields turned to jungle, and a small kampung (village) appeared in the trees. I watched out the window as we passed traditional wooden stilt houses where grannies fanned themselv es on the porch watching the childr en chase chickens in the yard. Beside each house, colorful batik sar ongs waved from clotheslines in the breeze.

The path wound to the house of P akcik's nephew. I was w elcomed inside with curiosity, perhaps the first for eigner to visit. They offered me a straw mat, which I used to join the others resting comfortably on the floor. Within minutes, an audience of neighbors gather ed ar ound, plucking fruits from the trees in the yard for me. I listened as P akcik told them of my search for a gasing. That afternoon I was offered every gasing in the village.

My afternoon in P akcik's kampung is one of my most cherished memories and a most meaningful experience. As Southeast Asia becomes incr easingly affluent and globalized, this way of life becomes steadily endangered. It's a lifestyle that for many urban Malaysians captures the spirit of the good life—simple days when jo y was free. And everyone will be proud to show you; all you need is an open hear t and a big smile. M alaysian hospitality nev er ceases to amaze me.

3 THE BEST SMALL TOWNS & VILLAGES

- Any K ampung (T ioman I sland, Malaysia): E ven though Tioman was developed for the tourism industr y, you'll never think this place is o verdeveloped. The casual and rustic nature of the island 's tiny beach villages holds firm, and those who seek escape rar ely leave disappointed. See p. 258.
- Melaka (M alacca, M alaysia): As the oldest trading por t in M alaysia, this town hosted a wide array of international traders: Arabs, Portuguese, Dutch, English, Indian, and Chinese, all of whom left their stamp. See p. 233.
- Kuching (S arawak, M alaysia): R enegade adv enture-seeker J ames B rooke thumbed his nose at London 's colonial office so that he could claim S arawak for his own and rule as the region's first White Raja. He built a cozy little capital with quaint tr opical-colonial architecture, picturesque back streets, and a pretty riverfront. See p. 276.

4 THE BEST BEACHES

- Sentosa Island (Singapore): The three beaches on S entosa are just about the best you'll find in Singapore, which isn't really kno wn for its beaches. They're lively, with watersports and beach activities plus food and drink. Every so often you'll find an all-night dance patty here. (See p . 152.) H owever, if y ou r eally need pristine seclusion, y ou'll have to head for Malaysia.
- The Four Seasons (Langkawi, Malaysia): Perhaps the most stunning beach in Malaysia, this wide gorgeous stretch of white sand looks out onto creystalclear, deep-blue waters. Even if you can't affor dar oom at the resort, I highly recommend a cocktail at their deliciously exotic beachside bar so you can get a chance to enjoy the view. See p. 254.
- Kampung J uara (T ioman I sland, Malaysia): This beach is what they - mean when they say isolated. B e prepared to live like Robinson Crusoe—in tiny huts, many with no electricity at all. B ut, oh, the beach! M ost visitors don't get to this par t of the island, so many times you can have it all to yourself. See p. 262.

- Cherating (Malaysia): If you're a leatherback turtle, you'll think the best beach in the world is just nor th of Cherating. Every spring and summer , these giant sea cr eatures come ashor e to lay their eggs, so if y ou're in to wn from May to June y ou might catch a look at the hatchlings. Meanwhile, during the turtles' off season, international windsur fing and water-boar d enthusiasts gather annually for competitions at this world-famous spot. See p. 264.

5 THE MOST EXCITING OUTDOOR ADVENTURES

- Trekking in Taman N egara (M alaysia): With suitable options for all levels of comfort and desired adventure, peninsular M alaysia's largest national par k opens the wonders of primary rainforest and the cr eatures who dw ell in it to everyone. From the canopy walk high atop the for est to night watches for nocturnal life, this adventure is as stunning as it is informative. See p. 229.
- Sungei B uloh Wetland R eserve (S ingapore): Every year during the winter months, flocks of migrating bir ds from as far nor th as S iberia vacation in the warm waters of this unique mangrove swamp par k. Easily traversed by a wooden walkway, the park will never disappoint for glimpses of stunning wildlife. See p. 149.

6 THE MOST FASCINATING TEMPLES, CHURCHES & MOSQUES

- Thian Hock Keng (Singapore): O ne of Singapore's oldest Chinese temples, it is a fascinating testimony to Chinese Buddhism as it combines with traditional Confucian beliefs and natural Taoist principles. Equally fascinating is the modern world that carries on just outside the old temple 's doors. S ee
   p. 132.
- Armenian Chur ch (S ingapore): Although not the biggest Christian house of worship in the city, it is one of the most charming in its ar chitectural simplicity, tr opical practicality, and spiritual tranquillity. See p. 115.
- Hajjah Fatimah Mosque (Singapore):
   I love this mosque for its eclectic mix of

- religious symbols and ar chitectural influences. To me, it represents not just the S ingaporean ability to absorb so many different ideas, but also a Muslim appreciation and openness toward many cultures. See p. 136.
- J alan Tokong, M elaka (M alaysia):
  This street, in the historical heart of the city, supports a M alay mosque, a Chinese temple, and a Hindu temple existing peacefully side by side—the perfect example of how the many for eign religions that came to S outheast Asia shaped its communities and learned to coexist in harmony. See p. 238.

7 THE MOST INTERESTING MUSEUMS

- National Museum of Singapore. (Singapore): This historic museum recently underwent a $$132.6 million ($88.8 million/£59.7 million) r enovation and is now expanded to more than twice its original siz e, featuring state-of-the-ar t multimedia exhibits. They've done a fantastic job. See p. 121.
- Asian C ivilisations M useum (S ingapore): This extr emely well-presented museum documents the evolutionary and cultural history of the region's major ethnic groups. A very informative afternoon. See p. 115.
- P enang M useum and Ar t G allery (Penang, Malaysia): A slick display of Penang's colonial history and multicultural heritage, this place is chock-full of fascinating tidbits about the people, places, and events of this curious island. Plus, it doesn't hurt that the air-conditioning works very well! See p. 249.
- State Museums of Melaka (Malaysia):
  This small city has more museums than any other city in the country, with some unusual displays such as kites and Malaysian literature. See p. 237.

8 THE BEST LUXURY RESORTS & HOTELS

- Raffles H otel (S ingapore): For old-world opulence, Raffles is second to none. It's pure fantasy of the days when tigers still lurked around the perimeters. See p. 72.
- Shangri-La H otel (Singapore): What sets this hotel apar t fr om other city properties is its sprawling gr ounds. Shang is a meticulously landscaped tropical oasis, with lush gar den vie ws

- from ev ery angle. Three individual wings give you a choice of accommodations styles: urban contemporary, natural resort style, and O riental opulence. See p. 81.
- Hilton K uala L umpur (K uala L umpur, Malaysia): The coolest of the cool stay at the new Hilton. Rooms feel like suites, all decorated in slickety-slick contempo style with the latest entertainment and IT built in—ev en in the bathrooms. See p. 221.
- T anjong J ara R esort (T erengganu, Malaysia): T raditional Malay-style

- chalets furnished in natural woods and local textiles blend gorgeously with the tropical gar dens of this seaside r esort. The people her e will bend o ver backward to make sur e your stay is per fect. See p. 268.
- Four S easons Langkawi (Langkawi, Malaysia): Raising the bar, this resort is an exotic Moorish paradise on the most gorgeous beach in M alaysia. R ooms and public areas drip with the ambience of the Arabian Nights. Three words: To. Die. For. See p. 254.

9 THE BEST HOTEL BARGAINS

- Perak Hotel (Singapore): This familyrun budget hotel on the edge of Little India is full of charm and friendly people. It's easy to meet fellow backpackers in the cozy lobb y cafe and share stories and travel tips. See p. 77.
- Traders Hotel Singapore (Singapore):
  Value-for-money is the name of the game her e. All sor ts of promotional packages, self-ser vice launder ettes, vending machines, and a checkout lounge are just a few of the offerings that make this the most convenient hotel in the city. See p. 86.
- Swiss-Inn (Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia): Location, location, location! Right in

- the center of K uala Lumpur's bustling Chinatown, the Swiss-Inn is the perennial favorite for trav elers here. A comfortable choice, plus it 's so close to everything. See p. 223.
- Heeren H ouse (M elaka, M alaysia):
  This boutique hotel in the hear t of the old city is the place to stay in M elaka if you want to really get a feel of the local atmosphere. See p. 235.
  - Telang Usan Hotel (Kuching, Malaysia): An informal place, Telang Usan is homey and quaint, and within walking distance of many major attractions in Kuching. See p. 279.

10 THE BEST LOCAL DINING EXPERIENCES

- Hawker Centers (S ingapore and Malaysia): Think of them as shopping malls for food—gr eat food. F or local cuisine, who needs a menu with pictures when y ou can walk ar ound and select anything you want as it's prepared before your eyes? See chapters 6, 13, 14, and 15.
- Imperial H erbal (S ingapore): In the Chinese tradition of yin and yang, dishes are prepared under the super vision of the house doctor, a traditional healer who will be glad to "prescribe" the perfect cure for whatev er ails y ou. See p. 109.

- Chili Crab at UDMC Seafood Centre (Singapore): A true Singaporean favorite, chili crabs will cause every local to rise up in argument over where you can find the best in town. Head out to UDMC to try the juicy crabs cooked in a sweet chili sauce. Prepare to get messy! See p. 110.
- Gurney D rive (P enang, M alaysia):
  Penang is the king of Asian cuisine, from Chinese to M alay to I ndian and everything else in betw een. This large hawker center by the sea is a great introduction to Penang. See p. 248.

11 THE BEST MARKETS

- Arab Street (Singapore): Even though Singapore is a shopper 's paradise, it could still use mor e places like Arab Street. S mall shops selling everything from textiles to handicrafts line the street. B argaining is welcome. See p. 169.
- Central M arket (K uala Terengganu, Malaysia): This huge bustling mar ket turned me into a shopping freak. All of the handicrafts Terengganu is famous - for come concentrated in one ex citing experience: batik, songket cloth, brassware, basket weaving—the list goes on. See p. 269.
- Petaling S treet (K uala L umpur, Malaysia): This night market gets very, very cr owded and crazy with all who come for watches, handbags, computer software, D VDs, and all manner of blatant disregard for international copyright laws. See p. 227.

12 THE BEST SHOPPING BARGAINS

- Batik (S ingapore and M alaysia):
   While most of the batiks y ou find in Singapore come from Indonesia, many in M alaysia are made at factories that you can often tour. The I ndonesian prints usually show traditional motifiand colors, while Malaysian designs can be far more modern. Look for batik silk as well. See chapters 8, 13, and 14.
- Knockoffs and Pirated Goods (Malaysia): Check out how real those watches look! And so cheap! You can find them at any night mar ket. E ver dr eam of owning a Gucci? Have I got a deal for you! Can I tell you about pirate DVDs and computer software without getting

- my book banned? Uh, okay , whatev er you do, don't buy these items! See chapters 8 and 13.
- Silver F iligree J ewelry (M alaysia):
  This fine silver is worked into detailed filigree je welry designs to make brooches, necklaces, bracelets, and other fine jewelry.
- P ewter (Malaysia): M alaysia is the home of S elangor P ewter, one of the largest manufacturers of pe wter in the world, and their many showrooms have all sorts of items to choose from. For locations in K uala L umpur, P enang, Malacca, and J ohor, call the company hotline at © 03/422-1000.

13 THE BEST NIGHTLIFE

 Singapore, the whole city: Nightlife is becoming increasingly sophisticated in Singapore, wher e locals hav e mor e money for recreation and fun. Take the time to choose the place that suits y our personality. J azz club? Techno disco? Cocktail lounge? Wine bar? G ood old pub? The city has it all. See p. 175.

• Bangsar (near Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia): Folks in K uala Lumpur know to go to Bangsar for nighttime excitement. A couple of blocks of concentrated r estaurants, cafes, discos, pubs, and wine bars will tickle any fancy. Good peoplewatching, too. See p. 229.

Singapore in Depth

A little red dot in the center of Southeast Asia, Singapore is a cosmopolitan city built on the backs of immigrants from across Asia and the four corners of the world. The nation's cultural mix continues to expand, thanks to continuing migrations of foreign talent—one in three people in Singapore today has come from elsewhere. This cultural diversity is refreshing, but not nearly as r efreshing as the sense of openness and harmony that exists between races and religions.

Singapore Inc. runs like clockwork. Over 40 decades of political stability have seen the seeds of dev elopment take hold and gr ow at an impr essive rate. The government is a well-oiled machine that operates like the executive board of a massive company, carefully plotting deliberate steps for economic gr owth and building a safe and or derly country. Even its detractors concede: Singapore works.

I'll confess, many travelers complain to me about ho w Westernized Singapore is. For some, a vacation in Asia should be filled with cultur e shock and bizarr e sights. Today's travel philosophy seems to be that the mor e underdeveloped and obscur e a country is, the mor e "authentic" the trav el experience will be. B ut with all its shopping malls, imported fashion and steel skyscrapers, Singapore looks like any other contemporary city in any other part of the world. B ut to peel through the layers is to understand that life here is more complex. While the outer layers are startlingly Western, just underneath lies a curious area where East blends with West in language, cuisine, attitude, and style. A t the core, you'll find a sensibility rooted in the cultural heritage of values, religion, superstition, and memory.

For me, this is where the fascination begins. Like the rows of historic shophouses that line the city's oldest streets, if y ou look closely y ou'll see a jumble of influences fr om colonial architectural mandates to Chinese superstitions and Malay finery. Even the local language is a blend: "S inglish," the unofficial local tongue, combines E nglish language with Chinese grammar, common M alay phrases, and H okkien slang to form a P atois unique to this part of the world. It's a cultural convergence that's been ongoing for almost 200 years. So, in a sense, Singapore is no different today than it was a century ago. And in this I find my "authentic" experience.

1 SINGAPORE TODAY

Who would have believed that S ingapore would rise to such international fame and become the vaunted "Asian Tiger" it has in recent decades? This small country's political stability and effective government have inspired many other nations to study its methods, and former prime minister (and current minister mentor) Lee Kuan Yew is counted among the most respected political figur es in the world. When asked to explain ho w S ingapore's astounding economic, political, and social success was made possible, Lee always takes the credit—and deservedly so—but in the face of international criticism for dictatorial policies, absolutist law enfor cement, and human rights violations, he also stands first in line to take the heat.

THE SINGAPOREAN PEOPLE

Many tourists come to S ingapore for the shopping or the sights, but I lo ve the people. Most often, when you travel in foreign lands, the people you meet are other international travelers. In Singapore, however, the friends you make are many times S ingaporean—perhaps it's because of the common language, perhaps because Singaporeans are very open to Western culture.

The median age of the population is around 35, with most Singaporeans struggling to juggle wor k and family r esponsibilities the same as in any other post-industrialized countr y. While most Singaporeans of both sex es tend to focus on educational and career goals, most also marry later and have children later, a trend that has left the government worried about a declining bir th rate. Yet even with these demands, your average Singaporean never loses sight of "Asian family v alues" that encourage children to liv e with and car e for their aging parents—many households are multigenerational.

There's an ever-present image consciousness fuelled by heavy consumerism. Fashion, cars, and social scenes are "in." Money is in. Success is in. Young Singaporeans strive for what they call the 5Cs—career, condo, care, cash, and credit cards—and it sometimes seems they'll stop at nothing to achieve them.

As with any modern cultur e, while the younger generations are busy finding their niche in the world, it is the older generations who keep traditional cultur es alive. Singapore's resident population, measured at 3.64 million people, is a mix of Chinese (75%); Malays (13.7%); I ndians (8.7%); and others (2.6%), including E urasians. (The total population is 4.84 million, which includes foreigners living and working in S ingapore.) Though the country is overwhelmingly Chinese, the go vernment has embraced all local heritage, r ecognizing r eligious holidays and festiv als and promoting racial harmony in its policies as part of its plan to foster a single national identity molded fr om the disparate cultural backgr ounds of the S ingaporean populace.

Unfortunately, this go vernment social planning may have contributed to one of the common problems that plague S ingapore's younger generations today: a lack of identity. No longer solely immersed in the traditions of their own ethnic groups and with traditional values being rapidly replaced by commer cialism, it's not surprising to hear so many young people ask, "Who am I?"

The Chinese

When Raffles opened Singapore's port for free trade, junkloads of Chinese immigrated to find their for tunes. Most were poor wor kers fr om China 's southern regions who br ought with them differ ent cultures and dialects fr om their respective places of origin. Of the mix, the Hokkiens from Fujian Province are the largest percentage of Chinese in Singapore, at 42%, followed by the Teochews, of Guangdong province, the Cantonese, also from Guangdong; the Hakkas, from central China; and finally the Hainanese, from Hainan island (near Hong Kong), at 6%.

The Chinese ar e over 50% B uddhist, following the dharma of the Buddha, who taught that all life is suffering and the only way to relieve suffering is to dispel desir e. Early immigrants brought Buddhism from China with them, of a sect called Mahayana, or the G reater Vehicle, the branch of B uddhism that also claims Tibetan and Zen Buddhist traditions.

Etiquette: The Right Hand

While in Singapore, try to use only your right hand in social interaction. Why? Because in Indian and Muslim society, the left hand is used only for bathroom chores. Not only should you eat with your right hand and give and receive all gifts with your right hand, but you should make all gestures, especially pointing (and especially in temples and mosques), with your right hand. By the way, you should also try to point with your knuckle rather than your finger, to be more polite.

Despite r eligious affiliation, almost every Chinese is Taoist to some degr ee. Tao is a philosophy as opposed to religion. Tao, meaning "the way," follows the belief in an energy sour ce, "chi," that permeates all living and nonliving cr eatures and objects in the univ erse. This energy for ce links ev erything, shifting fr om place to place, sometimes flo wing freely to cr eate positive energy and sometimes stagnating to create bad vibes.

Tao is the philosophy behind feng shui, or Chinese geomancy, laws of natur e that dictate ho w buildings and spaces should be situated and the furnishings placed inside, as w ell as the r easoning behind Chinese traditional medicine that uses herbs and natural r emedies to keep good chi flowing throughout the body.

Chinese tradition is also filled with rich tales of heroes and heroines, gods and goddesses, who watch over the physical world. In Singapore you find statues in temples for Ma Cho Po, the Mother of Heavenly Sages, who protects sailors and other travelers, and Kouan Yin, the Goddess of Mercy—these are only two of a number of gods and goddesses of Chinese legend who still play important roles in the everyday lives of local Singaporeans.

Characteristically, the Chinese ar e very superstitious, with numbers playing a critical role in ev eryday decisions, pr eferring auspicious numbers for automobile license plates and choosing dates that contain lucky numbers for business openings. Here's another superstition—don 't leav e your chopsticks sticking up in y our rice bowl; it invites hungry ghosts.

The Malays

When Raffles arrived, Malays had already inhabited the island, fishing the waters and trading with other local seafaring people, and many mor e were to migrate from the mainland in the decades to follow.

Although Singapore's Malay population is very low in numbers today, the language on the str eet is M alay, some of the bestloved local dishes are Malay, and even the national anthem is sung in M alay. The shame is that while M alays are recognized as the original inhabitants, they constantly feel marginaliz ed b y the dominant Chinese culture and policy. In addition, this group represents an unbalanced per centage of the lo wer-income classes, with the lowest levels of education and the highest number of criminal offenders. The go vernment prides itself on policies to pr mote racial harmony, but it is widely accepted that M alays occupy jobs on the low end of the pay scale. Even in the military, while ther e are many M alays in the enlisted troops, there are almost none in the officer ranks.

Good Vibrations

Chinese geomancy, also known as feng shui, has made a mark on the Singapor e landscape. Nowhere is this practice more evident than at Suntec City. The combined convention center, shopping mall, and office space occupies five towers. Placed in a semicircle, the towers represent the five digits of an open hand. In the center, an unusual round fountain, the largest fountain in the world, sprays water inward. As water means wealth, the fountain is a symbol of money flowing into a hand.

On a positive note, it is widely understood that the M alays have the greatest sense of community in Sngapore. Families still congregate around the neighborhood mosque, and there's a greater sense of charity and commitment to helping those less fortunate.

Virtually every Malay is Muslim, either practicing or nonpracticing, following the teachings of the I slamic prophet Muhammad. Most Singaporeans are quite moderate in their beliefs and v ery open to ward those of other faiths. You will, ho wever, notice that quite a few eat only halal food, prepared according to strict Islamic dietary laws. And while some women choose to wear a tudung, a scarf to cover their heads, it is purely voluntary here. Actually, Malay women have a gr eat sense of style; their kurau baju, long flo wing tunics, often show off liv ely colors. B ut don't be surprised if y ou see y ounger M alays in the clubs drinking alcohol.

The Peranakans

Until recently, you didn't hear much about the Peranakans, also called Straits Chinese, a subculture of the colonial era that gr ew out of intermarriage between the Chinese and Malays. But recent trends to embrace Singapore's heritage has rekindled interest in this small yet influential group who are unique to Singapore and Malaysia.

In the early days of Singapore, immigration of Chinese women was forbidden, so many Chinese men found wives within the native M alay population. The r esultant ethnic group combined characteristics of each culture but found a middle ground in language and religion, which tended to be English and Christianity, respectively. This mixed heritage allo wed them to become strong economic and political play ers, often serving as middlemen between Chinese, Europeans, and other locals. Singapore's early towkays (big bosses) were mostly Peranakan, and, in fact, Minister Mentor Lee Kuan Yew himself is of this cultural background.

Peranakan literally means "S traitsborn," so technically speaking, all people born in Singapore and Malaysia can argue they are Peranakan, and in a lot of literature you may see the term used broadly. Today, though, with many S ingaporeans able to trace their heritage to this ethnic group, a heritage society has developed to support their interests and keep their culture alive.

The Indians

Many I ndians were aboar d Raffles's ship when it first landed on the banks of the Singapore River, making this group some of S ingapore's earliest recorded immigrants. In the following decades, many more I ndians would follow to find work and wealth. Some found positions in the government as clerks, teachers, policemen, and administrators, following the English colonial administration set by the British Raj in I ndia. O thers were moneylenders and financiers. Still more were laborers who came to make a buck.

Chew on This

Contrary to popular belief, it's perfectly legal to chew gum in Singapore, and you can bring in small quantities for personal consumption with no problems. It is, however, illegal to import and sell it. The story goes that after the multibilliondollar Mass Rapid Transit (MRT) system opened, vandals brought the network to a halt when they disposed of chewed gum by jamming the trains' door sensors. The ban took effect in 1992.

In 1825, hundreds of Indians who had been imprisoned in B encoolen (in S umatra) were transferred to S ingapore, where they wor ked as labor ers. These convicts built many of the go vernment buildings and cathedrals-for instance, St. Andrew's Cathedral, S ri M ariamman Temple, and the I stana—and wor ked on heavy-duty municipal projects. Eventually, they served their sentences and assimilated into society, many remaining in Singapore.

While most I ndian immigrants w ere from the southern r egions of I ndia, there is still great diversity within the community. The largest group by far is the Tamils, but y ou'll also find M alayalis, P unjabis, and G ujaratis. S o despite Little I reputation as an Indian enclave, the Indian population is actually split into gr based on social divisions and settled in pockets all over the city. The Indians were also divided by religious affiliation, with factions split betw een I slam and H induism, which revolves around the holy trinity of S hiva, Vishnu, and B rahma but includes many, many other deities; other groups include S ihks and Christians as well. Interestingly, while the B uddha and Buddhism originally came from India, few Indians follow his teachings in I ndia and around the world.

The Indians tend to be an informal and warm people, adding their o wn brand of casual ease to Singapore life. But any Singaporean will tell you that one of the most precious contributions the Indians made is their cuisine. I ndian r estaurants ar e w ell patronized by all ethnic groups because the southern Indian vegetarian cooking is the only food that can be enjo yed by all Singaporeans no matter what cultural or religious dietary laws they may have.

Recently I ndians hav e become somewhat discontented with life in S ingapore, feeling overwhelmed by a Chinese government they feel pr omotes Chinese cultur e. Indians are some of the most open critics of government practices.

THE GOVERNMENT

Since Lee's election, and without debate, his unfailing vision of a First World Singapore has inspir ed the policies and plans that cr eated the political and economic miracle we see today. During his tenur e, he mobiliz ed go vernment, industry, and citizens toward fulfilling his vision, establishing a go vernment almost dev oid of corruption, a str ong economy built fr om practically no resources except labor, and a nation of racial and r eligious harmony from a multiethnic melting pot.

Both critics and admir ers refer to Lee Kuan Yew as a strict y et generous "father" to the "children" of S ingapore, raising them to a high position on the world stage yet dictating policies that hav e cost citizens many of their personal fr You'll find that the av erage Singaporean expresses some duality about this: H e or she will be outwar dly critical of the go vernment's invasion of privacy and disregard for personal freedoms and of policies that have driven up the cost of housing and healthcare, but will also r ecognize all that Lee has done to raise S ingaporeans' standard of living, expand their oppor tunities for the futur e, and ensure tranquillity at home—achiev ements for which many ar e willing to sacrifice a cer tain amount of freedom to enjoy. By and large, they wish to see the current go vernment continue its work.

Lee stepped down from the prime minister's chair in 1990, assuming the position of senior minister . He was replaced by Goh Chok Tong, who for 14 years continued the long-term policies driven by Lee and the PAP. Goh was a popular leader, who, in addition to initiating increased citizen participation in the political process, supported local visual and per forming arts.

In August 2004, Goh passed the prime minister's baton to Lee Hsien Loong, Lee Kuan Yew's son. The resulting cabinet shift created a new position for Lee K uan Yew as minister mentor, with G oh filling the senior minister seat.

THE CENSORSHIP QUESTION

One infamous feature of S ingapore's government is its control over media, both domestic and international. All national news publications have ties to the government, whose philosophy holds that the role of the media is to pomote the government's goals. Articles are censored for any content that might threaten national security, incite riot, or promote disobedience or racism. Pornographic materials are also prohibited. Offenders face stiff fines.

It doesn't stop at the print media, either Television is also censored, as is cable television content, and satellite dishes are banned. The Internet provided Singapore with a tough dilemma. By design, the Net promotes freedom of communication, which is taken advantage of by, among others, every political dissident and pornographer who can get his hands on a PC. This thought so concerned the Singapore government that it debated long and har d about allowing access to its citizens. However, the possibilities for communications and commerce and their implications for the future of Singapore's economy won.

THE ECONOMY

Singapore's economy is a bizarr e marriage between free trade and go vernment control. Lee K uan Yew's vision and r esulting policies hav e cr eated annual national growth rates of between 7% and 9% going on 3 decades. Singapore survived the East Asian Economic Crisis that began in July 1997 because of its firm bank-lending regulations and transpar ent go vernment and business dealings. Unfortunately, Singapore limped thr ough the economic slump that plagued the globe in the y ears to follow, and in 2003 suffer ed from the SARS outbreak. The biggest moneymakers are the electr onics industry, financial and business services, transportation and communications, petroleum refining and shipping, construction, and tourism. Seventy-six percent of Singapore's exports (not counting oil exports) go to the United States, M alaysia, the E uropean U nion, recession, the S ingapore go vernment revised its GDP gr owth for ecast for the year to betw een –5.0 and –2.0 per cent. Days later, it unv eiled a S$20.5 billion (US$13.7 billion/£9.2 billion) economic stimulus package designed to help keep the country afloat. The move was unprecedented, as it was the first time the government has ever loosened its tight grip on its coffers. The money will be spent to pr eserve jobs; stimulate bank lending; impove infrastructure, education, and health sectors; and pr ovide both tax measur es to help cash flo w and tax r ebates to bolster households.

Singaporeans enjoy a high standar d of living, with average annual incomes reaching $$49,900 (US$33,433/£22,455), according to 2007 estimates.

TOURISM

LOOKING BACK AT SINGAPORE

The S ingapore Tourism Boar d has farreaching influence that has helped to turn Singapore into a v eritable machine for raising foreign cash. In 2008, 10.1 million tourists visited Singapore, spending S$14.8 billion (US$9.9 billion/£6.7 billion) during their stays.

Not content to rest on its laurels, Singapore has big plans to dramatically increase these numbers over the next few years with the building of two casinos built into integrated r esorts, abbr eviated locally as IRs. The M arina B ay S ands, located in the heart of S ingapore's do wntown business district, will include a casino, hotel rooms, convention facilities, and leisur e facilities—it's slated to open in stages fr om the end of 2009. O n S entosa I sland, to the south of the business district, R World at Sentosa will include, in addition to a casino, a U niversal S tudios theme park plus countless family-oriented attractions and resort-style accommodations.

A landmar k mo ve b y the S ingapore government, the establishment of legalized gambling marks the end of a conser vative era in the histor y of this notoriously squeaky-clean city-state.

LOOKING BACK AT SINGAPORE

By the 1800s, E uropean po wers had already explored much of the world, staking their authority over major trade routes. Southeast Asia's initial attraction was its position betw een two seasonal monsoons-one half of the year saw winds that carried sailing v essels fr om China to Southeast Asia, while the other half of the year favored ships coming from India and Arabia. The English, Dutch, Portuguese, French, and S panish, r ecognizing S outheast Asia's advantage, scrambled to set up trading posts to r eceive v aluable tea, opium, silk, spices, and other goods fr om China.

The British East India Company, in its rivalry with the D utch East I ndies Company, sought to contr ol the S traits of Malacca, the narr ow passage betw een Indonesian Sumatra and the Malay peninsula. They already had a port at Penang, an island in the north of the Straits, but it was proving an economic failur e. The company charged one of its officers, S ir Stamford Raffles, with the task of locating a new post. Raffles, who knew the area well, had his hear t set on a small island at the tip of the Malay peninsula.

A SLEEPY BACKWATER

At the time of its "discovery," Singapore was occupied by about 1,000 people, mainly M alay r esidents, orang laut (sea nomads), a handful of Chinese farmers, plus assorted pirates in hiding. The island had little kno wn historical significance. An early settlement on the island, called Temasek, had been visited r egularly b v Chinese mer chants, and later the settlement came under the r ule of the farreaching S rivijaya E mpire (9th-13th c. a.d.), which was based in P alembang in Sumatra. It was the Srivijayas who named the island Singapura, or Lion City, after its leader claimed to have seen a lion on its shores. However, the Srivijayas were eventually overtaken by a neighboring po wer, the J ava-based M ajapahits. S ometime around 1390, a y oung P alembang r uler, Iskander Shah (aka Parameswara), rebelled against the M ajapahits and fled to S ingapura, where he set up independent rule. The Majapahits were quick to chase him out, and I skander fled up the M alay peninsula to M elaka (M alacca), where he founded what would be one of the most successful trading por ts in the r egion at the time.

THE BRITISH EAST INDIA COMPANY ARRIVES (1819–1827)

When Raffles arrived in 1819, S ingapura had been asleep for nearly 400 years under the r ule of the sultan of J ohor, of the southernmost province in M alaya, with local administration handled by a temenggong, or senior minister. It was Temenggong Abdu'r Rahman who, on February 6, 1819, signed a treaty with Raffles to set up a trading post on the island in return for an annual payment to the Sultanate. After this, Raffles didn 't stay around for too long, handing o ver the Residency of the port to his friend and colleague, Col. William Farquhar.

When Raffles r eturned 3 y ears later, Singapore was fast becoming a success story. The ideally situated port was inspired

Impressions

If no untimely fate awaits it, Singapore promises to become the emporium and pride of the East.

-Sir Stamford Raffles, 1823

by Raffles's own dream of fr ee trade and Farguhar's skill at or derly administration. The population had gr own to mor e than 11,000—Malays, Chinese, B ugis (fr om Celebes in I ndonesia), I ndians, Arabs, Armenians, E uropeans, and E urasians. The haphazar d sprawl convinced Raffles to draft the Town Plan of 1822, assigning specific neighborhoods to the many ethnic groups that had settled. These ethnic enclaves remain much the same today— Singapore's Chinatown, the administrative center or H istoric D istrict, Kampong Glam, and other neighborhoods ar e still the ethnic centers they originally were (of course, with many modern alterations).

This would be the last trip Raffles would make to the island that cr edits him with its founding. H is visit in 1822 was merely a stop on his way back to London to r etire. Raffles had big plans for his career with the East I ndia Company but never witnessed any of his ambitions come to fruition. In 1826 he died before he was even recognized for the r ole he play ed in the expansion of the B ritish Empire—he died penniless. H e r emains, ho wever, a hero to modern-day Singaporeans.

In 1824, the D utch finally signed a treaty with B ritain acknowledging Singapore as a permanent B ritish possession, and S ultan H ussein of J ohor ceded the island to the East India Trading Company in perpetuity. Three years later, Singapore was incorporated, along with Malacca and Penang, to form the S traits S ettlements. Penang was acknowledged as the settlements' seat of go vernment, with direction from the Presidency of Bengal in India.

EARLY IMMIGRANT COMMUNITIES

Singapore's first 40 y ears were filled with all the magic of an oriental trading por t. Chinese coolie laborers came to Singapore in droves to escape economic har dship at home. Most were from one of four major dialect groups: Hokkien, Teochew, Cantonese, and H akka, all fr om southern China. Living in cr owded bunks in the buildings that sprang up behind the godowns, or war ehouses, these immigrants formed secret societies, social and political organizations made up of r esidents who shared similar ancestry or Chinese hometowns. These clan gr oups helped ne w arrivals get settled and find work, and carried money and messages back to workers' families in China. B ut it was the secr et societies' other contribution-to gambling, str eet crime, and violence—that helped fuel Singapore's image as a lawless boomtown, filled with all the ex citement and danger of a frontier town in America's Wild West. S urrounded b y boundless opportunity, many Chinese immigrants found great success, building for tunes as businessmen and traders.

Indians w ere quick to become S ingapore's second-largest community . M ost were traders or labor ers, but many others were troops carried with the B rits. M ost came fr om southern I ndia, fr om the mainly Tamil-speaking population, including the Chettiars, M uslim moneylenders who financed the building of several places of worship in the early neighborhoods. After 1825, the British turned over possession of B encoolen on S umatra to the Dutch, transferring the thousands of Entrepôt trade is the term given when imported commodities are processed, graded and repackaged, and then exported at a markup. For a resource-scarce city like Singapore, entrepôt trade has been a lifeline: In the late 19th century, Singapore was the world's largest tin-smelting center. Today Singapore is the third-largest petroleum refiner, importing oil from Malaysia and Indonesia.

Resource Scarcity

Indian prisoners incarcerated there to Singapore, where they were put to work constructing the buildings and clearing the land that the fledgling settlement needed. After they 'd wor ked off their sentences, many stay ed in S ingapore to wor k their trade as free men.

During this period, the I stana Kampong G lam was built in Raffles 's designated Malay enclave, along with the Sultan Mosque. The surr ounding str eets supported a large but modest M alay settlement of businesses and residences.

THE BOOMTOWN YEARS (1827–1942)

Despite early successes, S ingapore was almost entir ely dependent on entrepôt trade, which was literally at the whim of the winds. D utch trading power still threatened its economic health, and the opening of Chinese trading ports to Western ships placed Singapore in a precarious position. The soil on the island barely supported a small sago palm industrey, and with the lack of natural resources, Singapore had to constantly look to trade for survival. True economic stability wouldn't arrive until the 1860s.

Major changes around the globe had an enormous effect on S ingapore in the second half of the 19th century. In 1869, the Suez Canal opened, linking the M editerranean and the Red Sea and putting Singapore in a prime position on the Europe–East Asia r oute. I n addition, steamship travel made the trip to S ingapore less dependent on trade winds. The shorter travel time not only saw entrepôt trade leap to new heights, but also allowed leisure travelers to consider Seingapore a viable stop on their itinerary.

The blossoming I ndustrial R evolution thirsted for raw materials, namely tin and rubber. M alaya was alr eady being mined for tin, much of which changed hands in Singapore. R ubber didn't enter the scene until 1877, when "M ad" H enry Ridley, director of the Botanic Gardens, smuggled the first r ubber seedlings fr om B razil to Singapore. After developing a new way to tap latex, he finally convinced planters in Malaya to begin plantations. To this day rubber r emains a major industr y for Malaysia.

WORLD WAR II

Although the B ritish maintained a military base of operations on the island, S ingapore was vir tually untouched by World War I. J ust before the G reat D epression, however, B ritain bo wed to U.S. pr essure and broke off relations with J apan due to the latter's incr easing military po wer. At this time, S ingapore's defense became a primary concern; ho wever, the B ritish, believing any invasion would come by sea, installed heavy artillery along the southern coastline, leaving the nor th of the island virtually unprotected.

In 1941, on the night of D ecember 7, the J apanese attacked P earl H arbor, invaded the P hilippines and H ong Kong, landed in southern Thailand, and dropped the first bombs on Singapore.

Made in Singapore

Tiger Balm is one of Singapore's most endearing global brands. The herbal ointment, which comes in tiny glass pots covered in colorful postage-stamp paper scrawled with Chinese characters and a leaping tiger, was actually invented in Burma in the late 1800s by Aw Chu Kin. In 1920, his two sons, Aw Boon Haw and Aw Boon Par, moved the business to Singapore, where it has been based since.

Japanese Lieut. G eneral Yamashita, emerging from battles in Mongolia, saw a definite advantage in S ingapore's unprotected northern flank and stealthily moved three divisions—almost 20,000 troops—down the Malay Peninsula on bicycles. On the evening of February 8, 1942, the army quietly invaded the island. For days, the British tried to hold off their attackers, but lost ground. Within days, the Japanese were firmly entrenched.

The occupation brought terrible conditions to multiethnic S ingapore, as the Japanese ruled harshly and punished any word of dissent with prison or worse. Mass executions were commonplace, prisoners of war were tortured and killed, and it was said that the beaches at Changi ran r with blood. Some prisoners that sur vived were sent to Thailand to work on the railway. Conditions were worst for the islands Chinese, many of whom were arrested indiscriminately simply because of their ethnicity, rowed out to sea, and dumped overboard. Little information fr om the outside world, sav e Japanese propaganda, reached S ingapore's citiz ens during this time. P overty, sickness, and star became a daily reality.

Mercifully, the Japanese surrender came before S ingapore became a battlegr ound once again. On September 5, 1945, B ritish warships arrived, and a week later, the Japanese officially surr endered to Lor d Louis Mountbatten, supreme Allied commander in Southeast Asia.

THE POSTWAR YEARS

Under British rule once again, S ingapore spent the follo wing 10 y ears r evitalizing itself, while effor ts to become a fully self-governing nation were tantamount. Living conditions w ere terrible and food was scarce, but the B ritish helped with post-occupation reconstruction to clean up the port and harbor and r eturn them to civilian contr ol, r estore public utilities, and overhaul the police force. However, resentment against the B ritish was v ery str ong for the way they 'd lost the island to the Japanese in 1941.

THE RISE OF LEE KUAN YEW & SINGAPOREAN INDEPENDENCE

In 1949, Lee Kuan Yew, a third-generation Straits Chinese and a law student at Cambridge, formed a discussion gr London aimed at bringing together Malayan o verseas students. U pon his return to S ingapore, his education completed, Lee made a name for himself as an effective cour troom lawy er. Ar ound this time, Chinese in Malaya were forming the Malaya Communist P arty, inspir ed b y mainland China 's br eak fr om Western hegemonic po wers, as a path to national independence. Although Lee secretly detested communist politics, he recognized the strength of their numbers. Backed by local communists, he formed the People's Action Party (PAP).

By 1957, M alaya had gained independence, and Singapore was granted permission to establish its o wn fully elected, 51-seat Legislativ e Assembly. In the first elections for this body, in 1959, the popular P AP sw ept 43 of the seats and Lee Kuan Yew became the city-state 's first prime minister. I t wasn't until after his election that it became evident that Lee 's politics were not in line with communist ideals.

After his election, it was Lee 's wish to see S ingapore and M alaya unite as one nation, but the M alayan government was fearful of S ingapore's dominant Chinese influence and fought to keep the city-state out. In 1963, ho wever, they br oke down and admitted S ingapore as a member . It was a short-lived marriage. When the PAP began to expand its influence thr oughout Malaysia, as the new union was renamed, the latter became distristful and demanded Singapore be expelled. On A ugust 9, 1965, S ingapore found itself an entirely independent country. Lee's tearful television broadcast announcing Singapore's expulsion from Malaysia and simultaneous gain of independence is one of the most famous in Singapore's history. In 1971, the last British military for ces left the island.

3 SINGAPORE IN POPULAR CULTURE

BOOKS

If you're having trouble finding nonfiction books about S ingapore in bookstor es where y ou live, I suggest y ou wait until you arrive, then browse local shelves, where you'll find tons of books about the country and its history, culture, arts, food, along with local fiction. For interesting and informative reads that you can find (or or der) through your neighborhood bookstore, here's a good place to start:

From Third World to First: The Singapore Story: 1965–2000, by Lee Kuan Yew (HarperCollins), details the history and policies behind S ingapore's r emarkable economic success, written by the man who was at the helm.

The S ingapore S tory: M emoirs of Lee Kuan Yew, by Lee K uan Yew (P rentice Hall). An intimate account of M inister Mentor Lee's personal journey, this book will give insight into one of the world 's most talked-about leaders.

Crossroads: A Popular History of Malaysia & S ingapore, by J im B aker (Times Books International). A readable history of Singapore and M alaysia from a longtime resident and expert.

The S ingapore G rip, b y J. G. F arrell (Knopf). A highly enjo yable work of historical fiction written b y a Booker P rize

FILM

Few major motion pictures have been shot in or are about Singapore. Of note is Peter Bogdanovich's Saint Jack (1979), the only American film to have been shot entirely in Singapore. It was banned by the Singapore go vernment, as it had been filmed secretly, capturing the city 's seedy underbelly. The film is based on a (currently out-of-print) novel by Paul Theroux of the same name. Ben Gazarra plays the title character, who is a pimp in 1970s Singapore. In 2008, the film was finally emoved from the black list.

Nick Leeson 's autobiographical wor k Rogue Trader was made into a movie of the same name in 1999 starring E wan McGregor.

While S ingapore has a small fledgling local film industry, one director has received top honors at film festivals around the world for his excellent homegrown Singapore films. Director Eric Khoo's most recent project My Magic (2008) was nominated for the Golden Palm at the 61st Cannes Film Festival, where the film's screening prompted a 15-minute standing ovation.

4 EATING AND DRINKING IN SINGAPORE

Singaporeans pride themselv es in their local cuisine, many times trav eling to far corners of the island just to seek out the perfect wonton or the most succulent chili crab. The tr ue local eating experience is the open-air hawker center , where e tiny cooking stalls are operated by families who hand secret recipes down through generations—the best stalls can attract long lines daily. Choose fr om traditional Chinese, Malay, and I ndian fav orites under one roof. A meal at a hawker center is undoubtedly one of the truest Singaporean encounters.

Excellent cuisine from around the world can also be found in restaurants that range from moderately priced cafes and small venues to veritable palaces of gastronomy.

Connoisseurs may be inter ested to visit S ingapore either in A pril, during the World G ourmet S ummit (www . worldgourmetsummit.com), or in J uly, during the Singapore F ood F estival (www.singaporefoodfestival.com).

CHINESE CUISINE

The large Chinese population in S ingapore makes this ob viously the most common type of food you'll find, and by right, any good description of S ingaporean food should begin with the most prevalent Chinese regional styles. Many Chinese restaurants in the West ar e lumped into one category—Chinese—with only mild acknowledgment of Sichuan and dim sum. But China's a big place, and its siz e is

5 How to Handle Your Asian Meal

You'll notice that not all Asians use chopsticks. The Chinese, Japanese, Koreans, and Vietnamese use them, while the Thais, Malays, and Indians do not (except for some noodle dishes). How can you tell who uses what? If your rice is served in a bowl, use chopsticks. If it's served on a flat plate, use a combination fork and spoon (the spoon is the actual eating utensil, the fork used only to push the food around).

Southern Indians and Malays also eat with their hands. If you choose to try this traditional style of eating, make sure to wash your hands before and after your meal, and use only your right hand for the task.

Don't stick them upright in any dish, don't gesture with them, and don't suck on them. Dropped chopsticks are also considered bad luck.

reflected in its many different tastes, ingredients, and preparation styles.

A lot of hawker center far e is inspir ed by regional Chinese home cooking. Local favorites like carr ot cake (white radishes that are steamed and pounded until soft, then fried in egg, garlic, and chili), Hokkien bak ku teh (boiled por kribs in an herbal soup), Teochew kway teo w (stirfried rice noodles with egg, prawns, and fish), and the number-one favorite for foreigners, Hainanese chicken rice (poached sliced chicken breast ser ved over rice cooked in chicken stock). See section 8, "Hawker Centers," in chapter 6 for mor e on the hawker food scene.

Fusion cuisine has been hitting the market hard as globalization takes control of Singaporean palates. Also called "East meets West" or "N ew Asia," this cuisine combines Eastern and Western ingredients and cooking styles for a whole ne w eating experience. Some of it wor ks, some of it doesn't, but true gourmet connoisseurs consider it all a culinary atrocity.

CANTONESE CUISINE Cantonesestyle food is what y ou usually find in the West: Your stir-fries, wontons, and sw eetand-sour sauces all come fr om this southern r egion. Cantonese cooks emphasiz e freshness of ingredients, and typical preparation involves quick stir-frying in light oil or steaming for tender meats and crisp flavorful vegetables. These are topped with light sauces that ar e sometimes sw eet. Cantonese-style food also includes roasted meats like suckling pig and the red-roasted pork that's ev er present in Western Chinese dishes. Compar ed to nor thern styles of Chinese cuisine, Cantonese food can be bland, especially when sauces and br oths are overthickened and slimy. Singaporean palates demand the standar d dish of chili condiment at the table, which sometimes helps the flav or. O ne hear ty Cantonese dish that has made it to local cuisine fame is clay pot rice, which is rice cooked with chicken, Chinese sausage, and mushrooms, pr epared in—y ou guessed it—a clay pot.

Shark's fin soup can be found on the menu of many Cantonese restaurants, but if you have an inter est in animal w elfare, you may wish to steer clear, as it's considered to be endangering the world 's shark population.

The Cantonese ar e also responsible for dim sum (or tim sum, as you'll sometimes see it written around Singapore). Meaning "little hear ts," dim sum is a v ariety of deep-fried or steamed buns, spring r olls, dumplings, meatballs, spar eribs, and a host of other bite-size treats. It's a favorite in S ingapore, especially for lunch. A ta dim sum buffet, dishes ar e offer ed fr om table to table and y ou simply point to what appeals. Food is served in small portions, sometimes still in the steamer. Take only one item on your plate at a time and stack the empty plates as y ou finish each one. Traditionally, you'd be charged by the plate, but sometimes y ou can find gr eat all-you-can-eat buffets for a good price.

BEIJING CUISINE Beijing cuisine, its rich garlic and bean-paste flavoring betraying just a touch of chili, comes to us from the north of China. H eavier sauces allow for greater selections of beef and mutton, rarely found on southern Chinese menus. The most famous B eijing-style dish is Beijing duck (also known as P eking duck). The crispy skin is pulled away and

One from Column A, One from Column B...

Western cuisine serves each diner a plate with a complete meal for one. Not so with the Asians, where, even in the finest restaurants, Chinese, Indian, and every other kind of Asian fare is served "family style." To fully appreciate the experience, order a meat dish, a seafood dish, and a vegetable dish to share between two or three people. With your rice bowl in front of you, take only small servings of each dish at a time. For a larger party, add on a soup dish, plus other meat, seaf ood, and veggie selections for a variety of tastes to go around.

cut into pieces, which y ou then wrap in thin pancakes with spring onion and a touch of sw eet plum sauce. The meat is served later in a dish that's equally scrumptious.

SHANGHAINESE CUISINE S hanghainese cuisine is similar to its B eijing counterpart but tends to be mor e oily. Because of Shanghai's proximity to the sea, Shanghainese recipes also include more fish. The exotic drunken prawns and the popular drunken chicken ar e both fr om this regional style, as is the mysterious bird's nest soup, made from swift's nests.

SICHUAN CUISINE S ichuan cuisine, second only to Cantonese in the West, also relies on the rich flav ors of garlic, sesame oil, and bean paste, but is heavier on the chilies than S hanghainese cuisine—much heavier on the chilies. S ugar is also sometimes added to cr eate tangy sauces. S ome dishes can r eally pack a punch, but ther e are many Sichuan dishes that are not spicy. Popular ar e chicken with dried chilies and hot-and-sour soup. Another regional variation, Hunan cuisine, is also enowned for its fiery spice and can be distinguished from Sichuan style by its darker sauces.

TEOCHEW CUISINE T eochew cuisine uses fish as its main ingr edient and is also known for its light soups. Many dishes are steamed, and in fact steamboat, which is a popular poolside menu item in hotels, gets its origins fr om this style. F or steamboat, boiling broth is brought to the table, and y ou dunk pieces of fish, meat, and vegetables into it, a la fondue. O ther Teochew contributions to local cuisine are the Teochew fish ball, a springy ball made from pounded fish ser ved in a noodle soup, and the traditional S ingaporean breakfast dish congee (or moi), which is rice porridge served with fried fish, salted vegetables, and sometimes boiled egg. Also, if y ou see braised goose on the menu, you're definitely in a Teochew restaurant.

HOKKIEN CUISINE Although the Hokkiens are the most pr evalent dialect group in S ingapore, their style of cuisine rarely makes it to r estaurant tables, basically because it s simple and homey. Two dishes that have become local cuisine favorites, however, are the oyster omelet, flavored with garlic and soy, and Hokkien mee, thick wheat noodles with seafood, meat, and vegetables in a heavy sauce.

MALAY CUISINE

Malay cuisine combines I ndonesian and Thai flav ors, blending ginger , turmeric, chilies, lemon grass, and dried shrimp paste to make unique curries. H eavy on coconut milk and peanuts, M alay food can at times be on the sw eet side. The most popular Malay curries are rendang, a dry, dark, and heavy coconut-based curr y served over meat; sambal, a red and spicy chili sauce; and sambal belacan, a condiment of fr esh chilies, dried shrimp paste, and lime juice.

The ultimate Malay dish in Singapore is satay, sw eet barbecued meat kabobs dipped in chili peanut sauce. M ost Malay food is served as Nasi padang—a big pile of rice surrounded by meat, egg, vegetable, tofu, and condiments smother ed in tasty, spicy gravy.

PERANAKAN CUISINE

Peranakan cuisine came out of the S traitsborn Chinese community and combines such mainland Chinese ingr edients as noodles and oyster sauces with local Malay flavors of coconut milk and peanuts. Laksa lemak is a gr eat example of the combination, mixing Chinese rice flour noodles into a soup of M alay-style spicy coconut cr eam with chunks of seafood. Another favorite, popiah, is the Peranakan version of a spring r oll, combining sweet turnip, chopped egg, chili sauce, and prawns in a delicate wrap . Otak-otak is very unique. It's toasted mashed fish with coconut milk and chili, wrapped in a banana leaf and grilled over flames.

INDIAN CUISINE

SOUTHERN INDIAN CUISINE S outhern I ndian food is a super-hot blend of spices in a coconut milk base. Rice is the staple, along with thin breads such as prata and dosai, which are good for curling into shovels to scoop up drippy curries. Vegetarian dishes ar e abundant, a r esult of Hindu-mandated v egetarianism, and use lots of chickpeas and lentils in curr y and chili gravies. Vindaloo, meat or poultry in a tangy and spicy sauce, is also w known.

Banana leaf r estaurants, sur ely the most interesting way to experience southern I ndian food in S ingapore, ser ve up meals on banana leaves cut like place mats. It's very informal. S poons and for ks are provided, but if you want to act local, use your hands. R emember to use y our right hand only, as that is the pr oper etiquette, and don't forget to wash up befor e and after at the tap.

One tip for eating very spicy foods is to mix a larger pr oportion of rice to gravy. Don't drink in between bites, but eat through the burn. Your brow may sw eat, but your mouth will build a tolerance as you eat, and the flavors will come through more fully.

NORTHERN INDIAN CUISINE N orthern I ndian food combines y ogurts and creams with a milder, more delicate blend of herbs and chilies than is found in its southern neighbor. It's served most often with breads like fluffy nans and flat chapatis. Marinated meats like chicken or fish, cooked in the tandoor clay o ven, are the highlight of a northern Indian meal.

Northern I ndian r estaurants ar e mor e upmarket and expensive than the southern ones, but although they offer mor e of the comforts associated with dining out, the southern banana leaf experience is more of an adventure.

Some Singaporean variations on Indian cuisine are mee goreng, fried noodles with chili and curry gravy, and fish head curry, a giant fish head simmer ed in a br oth of coconut curry, chilies, and fragrant seasonings.

Muslim influences on Indian food have produced roti prata, a humble late-night snack of fried br ead served with chickpea gravy, and murtabak, a fried prata filled with minced meat, onion, and egg. Between the Muslims' dietary laws (halal) forbidding por k and the H indus' regard for the sacred cow, Indian food is the one cuisine that can be eaten by every kind of Singaporean.

JAPANESE CUISINE

Japanese food is v ery popular in the city, and not only with the J apanese expat population. S ingaporeans lo ve the focus on quality fresh ingredients, as well as the ease with which y ou can grab sushi on a break from the office or shopping. Quality and price ranges from supermarket refrigerator sushi, to conv eyer-belt r estaurant chains, right up to the epicur ean shrines that fly their ingr edients fr eshly fr om Tokyo's Tsujiki fish mar ket ev ery day. Other than sushi, plenty of places specialize in cooked foods including noodles, delicately fried tempura, and hearty dishes like tonkatsu (br eaded, fried por k, rather like Wienerschnitzel).

SEAFOOD

One cannot describe S ingaporean food without mentioning the abundance of fresh seafood. B ut most important is the uniquely Singaporean chili crab, chopped and smothered in a thick tangy chili sauce. Pepper crabs and black pepper crayfish are also a thrill. Instead of chili sauce, these shellfish are served in a thick black-pepper-and-soy sauce.

FRUITS

A walk through a wet market at any time of year will sho w you just what wonders the Tropics can produce. Varieties of banana, fresh coconut, papaya, mango, and pineapple are just a few of the fresh and juicy fruits available year-round; in addition, Southeast Asia has an amazing selection of exotic and almost unimaginable fruits. From the light and juicy star fruit to the r ed and hair y rambutan, they are all wor thy of a tr y, either whole or juiced.

Dare to tr y it if y ou will: The fruit to sample—the v eritable king of fr uits—is the durian, a large green, spiky fruit that, when cut open, smells worse than old tennis shoes. The "best" ones ar e in season every J une, when S ingaporeans go wild over them. In case you're curious, the fruit has a cr eamy textur e and tastes lightly sweet and deeply musky.

One inter esting note on fr uits: The Chinese believe that foods contain either yin or yang qualities with corr esponding "heaty" and "cooling" effects. According to Traditional Chinese M edicine (TCM) practitioners, fried and oily foods ar heaty, pr oducing heat in the body , and, therefore, should be kept to a minimum in the Tropics, and the same is true for some fruits. Whereas watermelon, star fruit, and oranges are cooling, mangoes, litchi, and durians are heaty. Taking too many heaty foods is believed to result in a fever, aches, and sore throat, for which the best remedy is to take Chinese tea.

Planning Your Trip to Singapore

The seasoned traveler typically has as many travel nightmares as he has glorious experiences—the luggage gets sent to Timbuktu, the hotel reservations get lost, and the taxi driv er takes the $500 scenic r oute to nowhere. The good news about traveling to S ingapore? This place wor ks. A seamless communications infrastr ucture means that you can plan your own trip, without a travel agent, and still have everything go as smoothly as if you were on an organized coach tour. Reliable phone lines, fax technology, and Internet presence make advance planning a br eeze. Of course, it helps that so many Singaporeans speak English. Additionally, the Singapore Tourism Board (STB) is a wealthy and well-oiled machine that has anticipated the needs of travelers.

The STB is perhaps one of the most visible government agencies in Singapore, and it's impossible for any tourist to get out of the country without encountering at least one of its many publications or postings or coming face-to-face with one of its innumerable representatives. If you have access to one of its offices before your trip, it's a great source of information. (M ore information on STB is listed under "Visitor I nformation," below.)

In this chapter, I'll run through the nuts and bolts of trav el to Singapore, letting you in on everything from how much your money will buy to the best time of year to travel, what to wear, how to get here, and how to find your way around. For additional help in planning your trip and for more on-the-ground resources in Singapore, please turn to the "Fast Facts," appendix on p. 290.

1 VISITOR INFORMATION

The long arm of the Singapore Tourism Board (STB) reaches many overseas audiences thr ough its branch offices, which will gladly provide brochures and booklets to help you plan your trip, and through its detailed website, at www.visitsingapore.com.

After y ou arriv e in S ingapore, sev eral visitor centers ar e staffed to assist, beginning with information desks at the Arrival Halls in Terminals 1, 2, and 3 at Changi Airport, open daily from 6am to 2am. Other visitor centers are located in the city as follows: at the junction of Orchard and Cairnhill roads (cater-corner ed from the Meritus M andarin H otel), open daily from 9:30am to 10:30pm; in Little I ndia at the I nnCrowd Backpackers' Hostel, at 73 Dunlop Street, open daily fr om 10am to 10pm; and at S untec G alleria, open from 10am to 6pm daily.

STB operates an information hotline from 8am to 9pm daily that is toll-fr ee within S ingapore at ② 800/736-2000. Generally, STB has up-to-date information, but if you need accurate information about travel timetables, I recommend you call airlines, ferry services, bus companies, or train stations directly.

2 ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

PASSPORTS

For information on how to get a passport, go to "Passports" in the "Fast Facts: Singapore" appendix (p . 293)—the w ebsites listed pr ovide do wnloadable passpor t applications as well as the current fees for processing passpor t applications. F or an up-to-date, countr y-by-country listing of passport r equirements ar ound the world, go to the "F oreign E ntry R equirement" Web page of the U.S. State Department at http://travel.state.gov.

VISAS

To enter Singapore, you must have a passport valid for at least 6 months fr om your date of entry. Leisure travelers from the United S tates, Canada, A ustralia, N ew Zealand, and the United Kingdom are not required to obtain a visa prior to arrival. A Social Visit P ass (with combined social and business status) good for up to 30 days (up to 90 days for U.S. visitors) will be awarded upon entry for trav elers arriving by plane, or for 14 days if your trip is by ship or overland from Malaysia or Indonesia. Children traveling with par ents from countries that qualify for a S ocial Visit Pass upon arriv al can obtain entry with their own passport (provided it's valid for at least 6 months). I nfants can enter on their parents' passports.

MEDICAL REQUIREMENTS

Singapore does not r equire any v accinations to enter the country, unless y ou've been traveling in Africa or S outh America within 6 days of arrival, in which case you'll need a certificate that shows you've been vaccinated against yellow fever.

CUSTOMS What You Can Bring into Singapore

There's no r estriction on the amount of currency y ou can bring into S ingapore.

For those o ver 18 y ears of age who have arrived from countries other than Malaysia and have spent more than 48 hours outside S ingapore, allo wable duty-free concessions are 1 liter of spirits; 1 liter of wine; and 1 liter of either port, sherry, or beer, all of which must be intended for personal consumption only. There are no duty-free concessions on cigarettes or other tobacco items. If you exceed the duty-free limitations, you can bring your excess items in upon payment of goods and ser vices tax (GST) and C ustoms duty.

Prohibited Items

It is important to note that S ingapore has some v ery unique pr ohibitions on the import of cer tain items. While pr etty much every country in the world, including S ingapore, pr ohibits trav elers fr om bringing items like plutonium, explosives, and firearms through Customs—the same goes with agricultural products such as live plants and animals, controlled substances, and poisons—S ingapore adds to the list any type of printed or recorded pornography; pirated mo vies, music, or softwar e; and to y or decorativ e guns, kniv es, or swords. A detailed rundown of prohibited items can be found on the Net at the Ministry of H ome Affairs home page: www. mha.gov.sg.

Singapore's Drug Policy

With all of the publicity surr ounding the issue, S ingapore's strict dr ug policy shouldn't need r ecapitulation, but her e it is: Importing, selling, or using illegal narcotics is absolutely forbidden. P unishments are severe, up to and including the death penalty (automatic for morphine quantities ex ceeding 30 grams, her oin exceeding 15 grams, cocaine 30 grams, marijuana 500 grams, hashish 200 grams, opium 1.2 kilograms, or methamphetamines 250 grams). I fy ou're carr ying smaller sums (anything above: morphine 3 grams, her oin 2 grams, cocaine 3 grams, marijuana 15 grams, hashish 10 grams, opium 100 grams, or methamphetamines 25 grams), y ou'll still be consider ed to have intent to traffic and may face the death penalty if you can't prove otherwise. If you're crazy enough to try to bring these things into the country and you are caught, no measure of appeal to y our home consulate will grant y ou any special attention.

3 WHEN TO GO

A steady supply of business trav elers keep occupancy rates high year-round in Singapore. H owever, some hotels r eport that business trav el gets sluggish during the months of J uly and A ugust, when they target the leisure market more aggressively. This is probably your best time to negotiate a favorable rate. Peak season for trav el falls between D ecember and J une, with "super-peak" beginning in mid-D ecember and lasting thr ough the Chinese L unar New Year, which falls in January or February, depending on the moon's cycle. During this season, Asian trav el r outes ar e booked solid and hotels ar e max ed out. Favorable deals ar e rare because much of Asia takes annual leave at this time.

As for w eather, because S ingapore is 137km (85 miles) nor th of the E quator, you can pr etty much guarantee that it 's hot. In terms of seasonal variations, you've got some months that ar e not as warm as others, but for the most par t, they're all still hot.

What does v ary greatly is rainfall. S ingapore lies betw een two monsoon winds. The Northeast Monsoon arrives the beginning of N ovember and stays until mid-March, when temperatur es ar e slightly cooler, r elatively speaking, than other times of the y ear. The heaviest rainfall occurs betw een N ovember and J anuary, with daily showers that sometimes last for long periods of time; at other times, it comes down in short, heavy gusts and goes quickly away. Wind speeds are rarely anything mor e than light. The S outhwest Monsoon falls between June and September. Temperatures are much higher and, interestingly, it's during this time of y ear that Singapore gets the least rain (with the very least reported in July).

By and large, y ear-round temperatures remain uniform, with a daily average of 81°F (27°C), afternoon temperatures reaching as high as 87°F (31°C), and an average sunrise temperature as low as 75°F (24°C). Relative humidity often exceeds 90% at night and in the early morning. Even on a "dry" afternoon, don't expect it to dr op much below 60%. (The daily average is 84% relative humidity.)

HOLIDAYS

There are 11 official public holidays (Note: The following dates, with regar d to religious holidays, ar e estimates, as each date is subject to a differ ent religious calendar. Dates provided here are for rough planning only. Please check with the STB prior to your trip to verify holidays that fall during your stay.): New Year's Day (Jan 1), Chinese New Year or Lunar New Year (Feb 14-15, 2010), Good Friday (Apr 2, 2010), Labour Day (May 1), Vesak Day (May 9, 2009; May 21, 2010), National Day (Aug 9), Hari Raya Puasa (Eid al-Fitr; Sept 20, 2009; Sept 8, 2010), D eepavali (Nov 15, 2009; Nov 5, 2010), Hari Raya Haji (Eid al-Adha; Nov 27, 2009; Nov 14, 2010), and Christmas D ay (Dec 25). On these days, expect go vernment offices, banks, and some shops to be closed.

CALENDAR OF PUBLIC HOLIDAYS & EVENTS

For an exhaustive list of events beyond those listed here, check http://events.frommers.com, where you'll find a sear chable, up-to-the-minute r oster of what's happening in cities all over the world.

JANUARY/FEBRUARY

New Year's Day. The first day of the calendar year is celebrated in Singapore by all races and r eligions. New Year's Eve in Singapore is always cause for parties similar to those in the West. Look for special events at restaurants and nightclubs, but don't expect to find a taxi when you need one. January 1.

Lunar New Year or Chinese New Year. If you want to catch the biggest event in the Chinese calendar and in S ingapore, come during Chinese N ew Year for parades and festivals. In 2010 it begins on February 14, Valentine's Day.

Thaipusam F estival. If y ou're lucky enough to be in S ingapore during this event, y ou're in for a bizarr e cultural treat. This annual festival is celebrated by Hindus to give thanks to Lord Subramaniam, the child god who epresents virtue, youth, beauty, and valor. During Thaipusam, male H indus who hav e made prayers to Subramaniam for special wishes must carr y kavadis in gratitude. These huge steel racks ar decorated with flo wers and fr uits and are held onto the men's bodies by skewers and hooks that pierce the skin. Carrying the kavadis, the dev otees parade from Sri Perumal Temple in Little India to the S ri Thandayuthapani Temple, where family members r emove the heavy str uctures. F or an additional spectacle, they will pier ce their tongues and cheeks with skewers and hang fruits from hooks in their flesh. The devotees have all undergone strict diet and prayer before the festiv al, and it is r eported that, after ward, no scars r emain. Late January/early February.

MARCH/APRIL

Good Friday. Churches and cathedrals hold special ser vices on this Christian holiday to remember the crucifixion of Christ. S t. J oseph's on Victoria S treet holds an annual candlelight procession. Late March/early April.

Qing M ing (All S ouls' D ay). Qing Ming, or All S ouls' Day, was originally a celebration of spring. On this day, Chinese families have picnics at ancestral graves, cleaning the graves and pulling weeds, lighting red candles, burning joss sticks and "hell money" (paper money that, when burned, ascends to the afterworld to be used by ancestors), and bringing rice, wine, and flowers for the deceased in a show of ancestral piety. Early April.

The S ingapore I nternational F ilm Festival. This event showcases critically acclaimed wor ks, including international films and Singaporean short productions. I t's become a r enowned showcase for Asian films, which constitute 40% of those featured. The festival includes competitions, wor kshops, and tributes to filmmakers. Schedule and ticketing information can be obtained from its website at www.filmfest.org.sg. April.

MAY

Vesak Day. Buddhist shrines and temples ar e adorned with banners, lights, and flo wers; and worshipers gather to observe the bir th, enlightenment, and death of the Buddha, which all occurred on this day. Good places to watch the festivities are the Temple of a Thousand Lights in Little I ndia or Thian H ock Keng Temple in Chinato wn. On this day, Buddhists will r efrain from eating meat, donate food to the poor, and set animals (especially bir ds) free to sho w kindness and gener osity. It falls on the full moon of the fifth month of the lunar calendar—which means somewhere around mid-May.

Singapore Ar ts F estival. During this month-long festiv al, pr emier local, regional, and international music and dance per formances ar e staged in a number of venues. The cultural performances, some modern and some traditional, ar e always ex cellent and ar e highly recommended. Check out www. singaporeartsfest.com. Late M ay to mid-June.

JUNE

Singapore World Invitational Dragon Boat Races. The annual dragon boat races are held to r emember the fate of Qu Yuan, a patriot and poet during the Warring S tates period in Chinese history (475-221 b.c.) who threw himself into a riv er to end his suffering at watching his state fall into r uin under the hands of corr upt leadership. The people searched for him in boats shaped like dragons, beating gongs and thr owing rice dumplings into the water to distract the Riv er D ragon. Today the dragon boat races ar e an international event, with rowing teams from up to 20 countries coming together to compete. Drums are still beaten, and rice dumplings ar e still a traditional fav Contact the STB for information. Late June/early July.

The G reat S ingapore S ale. This is a month-long promotion to increase retail sales, and most shops will advertise huge savings for the entiremonth. It's well publicized with red banners all over Orchard Road. June into July.

JULY

The S ingapore F ood F estival. Local chefs compete for honors in this monthlong exhibition of international culinary delights. I t's a good time to be eating in S ingapore, as r estaurants feature the brand-new creations they have entered in the events. Contact the STB for details. July.

Maulidin Nabi. Muslims celebrate the birth of the P rophet M ohammed on this day. Sultan Mosque is the center of the action for M uslims who come to chant in praise. July 17.

AUGUST

National D ay. O n A ugust 9, 1965, Singapore separated fr om the F ederation of Malaysia, becoming an independent r epublic. P atriotism is celebrated with a big parade held on a floating platform in M arina B ay with liv e performances, music, and fir eworks. Tickets are available only through lottery, so few shor t-term visitors ev er get the chance to see it live. August 9.

Festival of the H ungry G hosts. The Chinese believ e that once a y ear the gates of P urgatory are opened and all the souls inside ar e let loose to wander among the living. To appease these restless spirits and prevent evil from falling upon themselv es, the Chinese burn joss, hell money, and paper r eplicas of luxury items, the latter two meant to appear in the after world for gr eedy ghosts to use. The main event is on the 15th day of the 7th month of the lunar calendar and is celebrated with huge feasts. At mar kets, altars offer mountains of goodies for hungr y ghosts as well. Chinese operas ar e per formed throughout the month to enter tain the spirits and make them mor Nowadays, with Chinese Opera becoming a dying art, a lot of the street performances ar e karaoke acts. M id-August/ mid-September.

SEPTEMBER

The Mooncake and Lantern Festivals.

Traditionally called the M id-Autumn Festival, it was celebrated to give thanks for a plentiful har vest. The origins date from the S ung Dynasty (a.d. 970–1279), when Chinese officials would exchange round mirrors as gifts to r epresent the moon and symboliz e good health and success. Today the holiday is celebrated by eating moon cakes, which are sor t of like little r ound hockey pucks filled with lotus seed paste or red bean paste and a salted duck egg y olk. Children light color ful plastic or paper lanterns shaped like fish, bir ds, butterflies, and, more recently, cartoon characters. There's an annual lantern display and competition out at the Chinese Garden, with acr obatic per formances, lion dances, and night bazaars. Late September/early October.

Birthday of the M onkey God. In the Chinese temples, cer emonies ar e performed by mediums who pier ce their faces and tongues and write pray ers with the blood. In the temple cour tyards, you can see Chinese operas and puppet sho ws. The Tan Si Chong Su Temple on Magazine Road, upriver from Boat Quay, is a good bet for seeing the cer emonies. Contact the STB for information. Late September/early October.

OCTOBER/NOVEMBER

Hari R aya P uasa. H ari Raya P uasa marks the end of Ramadan, the Muslim month of fasting during daylight hours. During Ramadan, food stalls line up around the Sultan Mosque in Kampong Glam, ready to sell tasty Malay goodies at sundown. Hari Raya Puasa is a 3-day celebration (though only the first day is a public holiday) of thanksgiving dinners, and non-Muslims are often invited to these feasts, as the holiday symbolizes an openness of hear t and mind and a renewed sense of community . D uring the course of the 3 evenings, Geylang is decorated with lights and banners and the whole area is open for a giant pasar malam, or night mar ket. In 2009 and 2010, the holiday falls in September.

Pilgrimage to K usu I sland. D uring this month-long period, plan your trips to K usu I sland wisely, as the place becomes a mob scene. Throughout the month (the lunar month, that is), Chinese travel to this small island to visit the temple ther e and pray for another year of health and wealth. See chapter 7 for more information on K usu. O ctober/November.

Festival of the N ine-Emperor G od. During this celebration, held o ver the first 9 days of the ninth month of the lunar calendar (to the Chinese, the double nines ar e par ticularly auspicious), temples ar e packed with worshipers, hawkers sell r eligious items outside, and Chinese operas ar e performed for the N ine-Emperor God, a composite of nine former emper who control the pr osperity and health of worshipers. At the height of the festival, priests write pray ers with their own blood. On the ninth day, the festival closes as the N ine-Emperor G od's spirit, contained in an urn, is sent to sea on a small decorated boat. Contact the STB for information. Late October.

Navarathiri Festival. During this 9-day festival, Hindus make offerings to the wives of S hiva, Vishnu, and B rahma. The center point in the ev enings is S ri Thandayuthapani T emple, where dances and musical per formances ar e staged. P erformances begin ar ound 7:30pm. Contact the STB for information. Late October/early November.

Deepavali. Hindus and Sikhs celebrate Deepavali (also called D iwali) as the first day of their calendar. The new year is ushered in with ne w clothing, social feasts, and gatherings. I t's a beautiful holiday, with H indu temples aglo w from the tiny ear then candles placed in crevices in the sides of walls. H indus believe that the souls of the deceased come to earth during this time, and the candles help to light their way back to heaven. During the celebration, S erangoon Road in Little I ndia is a mesmerizing display of color ed lights and decorative ar ches. The dates quoted earlier in this section are estimates only, as Hindu officials had not released dates at the time of writing.

Thimithi Festival. Thimithi begins at the Sri Perumal Temple in Little I ndia and makes its way in parade fashion to the Sri Mariamman Temple in Chinatown. Outside the temple, a bed of hot coals is prepared and a priest will lead the way, walking first over the coals, to be followed one at a time by devotees. Crowds gather to watch the spectacle, which begins ar ound 5pm. Make sure you're early so you can find a good spot. Contact the STB for information. Late October/early November.

Christmas Light-Up. Orchard Road is brilliant in bright and color ful streams of Christmas lights and garlands. All of the hotels and shopping malls par ticipate, dr essed in the usual Christmas regalia of nativity scenes and S anta Clauses.

DECEMBER

Hari Raya Haji. One of the five pillars of Islam involves making a pilgrimage to Mecca at least once in a lifetime, and Hari Raya H aji (E id al-A dha) is celebrated the day after pilgrims make this annual v oyage to fulfill their spiritual promise. Muslims who hav e made the journey adopt the title of H aji (for men) and H ajjah (for women). After morning pray ers, sheep and goats are sacrificed and their meat is distributed to poor families. In 2009 and 2010, this holiday falls in November.

Christmas Day. On this day, Christian Singaporeans celebrate the bir th of Christ. December 25.

4 GETTING THERE AND GETTING AROUND

GETTING TO SINGAPORE By Plane

Singapore's award-winning Changi International Airport is a major transportation hub for many of the world 's largest passenger airlines, so flights fr om all corners of the globe are convenient.

In my experience, the best deals ar e offered thr ough Asian carriers. Compar e fares at J apan Airlines (www .jal.co.jp), Korean Air (www.koreanair.com), Cathay Pacific Air ways (www.cathaypacific.com), Malaysia Airlines (www .malaysiaairlines.com), and Thai Air ways I nternational (www.thaiair.com). O therwise, I've listed information for a fe w major airlines below.

Singapore's national carrier, Singapore Airlines (© 800/742-3333 in the U.S. and Canada, © 0844/800-2380 in the U.K., © 131011 in A ustralia, © 0800/808-909 in New Zealand, or © 65/6223-8888 in S ingapore; www .singaporeair. com), is arguably one of the finest airlines in the world, with r eliable service that is second to none. I t's the most luxurious way to fly to Singapore, but sometimes the most expensive as well. It connects major cities in N orth America, E urope, A ustralia, and N ew Z ealand to S ingapore with daily flights.

From North America, United Airlines (© 800/864-8331 in the U.S. or65/6873-3533 in S ingapore; www.ual.com) and Northwest Airlines (© 800/225-2525 in the U.S. or 65/6336-3371 in S ingapore; www.nwa.com) link all major destinations in the U.S. with Singapore.

From the U.K. and A ustralia, British Airways and Qantas collaborate to pr ovide flights to Asia Pacific from major cities in the U.K. and A ustralia. (B ritish Airways: ② 0844/493-0787 in the U.K., ② 1300/767-177 in A ustralia, or ② 65/6622-1747 in S ingapore; www .british airways.com. Qantas: 0 0845/774-7767 in the U.K., 0 131313 in A ustralia, or 0 65/6415-7373 in S ingapore; www . qantas.com.)

From New Zealand, Air New Zealand has discontinued dir ect flights to S ingapore. Contact Singapore Airlines (© 0800/808-909 in N ew Z ealand, or © 65/6223-8888 in S ingapore; www . singaporeair.com) for daily flights fr om Auckland and Christchurch.

Getting into Town from the Airport

Most visitors to S ingapore will land at Changi I nternational Airpor t, which is located toward the far eastern corner of the island. Compar ed to other international airports, Changi is a dr eam come tr ue, providing clean and very efficient facilities. Expect to find in-transit accommodations, restaurants, duty-free shops, money changers, ATMs, car-r ental desks, accommodations assistance, and tourist information all marked in E nglish with clear signs. Three terminals are connected by a S kytrain system. When y ou arriv e, keep y our ey es peeled for the many S ingapore Tourism Board br ochures that ar e so handily displayed throughout each terminal.

The city is easily accessible by public transportation. A taxi trip to the city center will cost ar ound $$22 to $$25 (US $15—US $17/£9.90–£11), which is the metered fare plus an airport surcharge, usually $$3 to $$5 (US$2–US$3.35/£1.35–£2.25), depending on the time of pickup. It takes around 30 minutes to reach the city. You'll traverse the wide Airport Boulevard to the Pan-Island Expressway (P IE) or the East Coast Parkway (ECP), past public housing estates and other residential neighborhoods in the eastern part of the island, over causeways, and into the city center.

If you've got a lot of people and luggage, CityCab offers a six-seater maxicab to anywhere in the city for a flat rate of $$35 (US$23/£16). You can inquire at the taxi queue or call © 65/6542-8297.

There's an airport shuttle, a coach that traverses between the airport and all major hotels. Booking counters at all three terminals are open daily from 6am to midnight. When you book your trip into to wn, you can also make an adv ance reservation for your departure. Pay S$9 (US$6.05/£4.05) for adults or S$6 (US$4/£2.70) for children at Terminal 1, ② 65/6543-1985; Terminal 2, ② 65/6546-1646; or Terminal 3, ② 65/6241-3818.

The MRT, Singapore's sub way system (see map, inside back co ver), operates to the airport, linking you with the city and areas beyond. STB will tell you the trip takes 30 minutes, but r eally, give yourself at least an hour, because you'll need time to wait for the train to arriv e, then you'll have to transfer trains at Tanah Merah station, and if y ou're arriving in Terminal 1, you'll need to hop on yet another train—a shuttle between terminals. After you get to your station in to wn, you'll still hav e to find your way, with your luggage, to your hotel. Personally, I think it's a pain in the neck, but hey, it costs only about $$2.70 (US$1.80/£1.20) to to wn. Trains operate roughly from 6am to midnight daily.

A couple of buses run from the airport into the city as well. SBS bus no. 36 is the best, with an express route to the Historic District and along Orchard Road. Pick up the bus in the basement of any terminal. The trip will take over an hour, and you'll need to get exact change before you board. A trip to to wn will be r oughly S$2 (US$1.35/90p).

For arrival and depar ture information, you can call Changi I nternational Airport at © 65/6542-4422.

By Train

While most visitors to S ingapore will arrive by air, some will come via train from Malaysia. The Keretapi T anah Melayu (KTM) operates a rail system that connects Singapore all the way up the M alay peninsula, with stops in K uala L umpur, Penang, and even connections to service in Thailand to B angkok. Train passengers will stop for immigration at the checkpoint at Woodlands, just acr oss the strait from M alaysia, but will not alight until they reach the Singapore Railway Station on Keppel Road (© 65/6222-5165), not far from Singapore's Shenton Way downtown financial district. Taxis to most major hotels will cost under S$10 (US$6.70/£4.50).

For train information from Kuala Lumpur, call KL S entral railway station at © 603/2267-1200. I n B angkok, call the Hua Lamphong R ailway S tation at © 622/223-7010.

By Bus

Buses from Malaysia will drop off passengers at any number of points ar ound the city, depending on the bus operator—there is no proper inbound bus station. For bus service from major Malaysian cities, refer to bus listings in each section. Operators will be able to tell you where you will be dropped off.

GETTING AROUND SINGAPORE

The many inexpensive mass transit options make getting ar ound S ingapore pr etty easy. Of course, taxis always simplify the ground transpor tation dilemma. They're also v ery affor dable and, b y and large, drivers ar e helpful and honest, if not downright personable. The Mass R apid Transit (MRT) sub way ser vice has lines that cover the main ar eas of the city and out to the farther parts of the island. Buses present more of a challenge because ther e are so many r outes snaking all o ver the island, but they 're a gr eat way to see the country while getting wher e you want to go.

Of course, if you're just strolling around the urban limits, many of the sights within the v arious neighborhoods ar e within walking distance, but walking between the different neighborhoods can be a hike, especially in the heat. The STB Visitors' Centres carr y a v ariety of fr ee city maps and walking tour maps of individual neighborhoods to help you find your way around.

Stored-value EZ-Link far e car ds can be used on both the sub—way and buses, and can be puchased at TransitLink offices in MR T stations. These sav e y ou the bother of trying to dig up exact change for bus meters. The car d does carr y a $$5 (U$$3.35/£2.25) initial cost and a $$3 (U$$2/£1.35) deposit—for a $$15 (U$$10/£6.75) initial inv estment, y ou'll get $$7 (US$$4.70/£3.15) wor th of trav el credit.

A better deal is the Singapore Tourist Pass, a card that allows unlimited travel on MRT trains and public buses for 1, 2, or 3 days. The cost is S$8 (US$5.35/£3.60) per day, with a r efundable S$10 (US$6.70/£4.50) deposit. P asses can be purchased at the following MRT stations: Changi Airpor t, O rchard, Chinatown, City H all, Raffles P lace, H arbourfront, and Bugis, and at the STB Visitors' Centres at Changi Airpor t and O rchard Road.

I recommend purchasing the latest edition of the TransitLink Guide for about S$2 (US$1.35/90p) at the TransitLink office where you buy your card. This tiny book details both MR T and bus routes with maps of each MRT station surroundings, and it indicates connections between buses and MRT stations. It also tells you fares for each trip.

By Taxi

Taxis are by far the most conv enient way to get ar ound Singapore. Fares are cheap, cars are clean, and driv ers speak E nglish. Taxi stands can be found at every hotel, shopping mall, and public building; otherwise, you can flag one down from the side of the road. Most destinations in the main parts of the island can be r eached fairly inexpensively, while trips to the outlying attractions can cost fr om S$10 to S$15 (US$6.70–US$10/£4.50–£6.75) one-way. That said, I caution against becoming too dependent on them. D uring the morning and evening rush, you can wait a maddeningly long time in the line, and sometimes if you're at a destination outside the main city area, they're few and far between. If it's raining, you might as well stay put; you'll never get a cab.

If you do find y ourself stranded, ther e are a few things you can do. If you're at an attraction or a restaurant, you can ask the cashier or help desk to call a taxi company and book a cab for you. If you're near a phone, you can make your own booking: CityCab (© 65/6552-2222), Comfort (© 65/6552-1111), and TIBS (© 65/6555-8888). There's an extra charge for the booking, anywher e between $$2.50 and $$3.50 (US$1.65–US$2.35/£1.10–£1.55).

Taxis charge the meter ed fare, which is from $$2.80 to $3 (US$1.85–US$2/£1.25–£1.35) for the first kilometer ( %/10 mile) and $20¢ (US10¢/5p) for each additional 300–400m (984–1,312 ft.) or 45 seconds of waiting. Extra fares are levied on top of the meter ed fare, depending on where you're going and when you go. At times, figuring your fare seems more like a riddle. Here's a summary:

Trips during peak hours: B etween the hours of 7 and 9:30am Monday to Friday, and 5 and 8pm M onday to S aturday, meters tack on an additional 35%. I f you're traveling within the Central B usiness D istrict (CBD) fr om 5pm till midnight Monday through Saturday, you also pay an additional $$3 (US$2/£1.35) surcharge. (To accurately outline the boundaries of the CBD, I'd need to fill a couple of ency clopedic volumes, so for this purpose, let's just say it 's basically O rchard Rd., the H istoric D istrict, Chinato wn, and Shenton Way.)

Additional charges rack up each time you trav el thr ough an E lectronic R oad Pricing (ERP) scheme underpass. On the Central E xpressway (CTE), P an-Island Expressway (PIE), and selected thor oughfares in the CBD, charges fr om S50¢ to S$3 (US35¢–US$2/25p–£1.35) are calculated by an electronic box on the driv er's dashboard. The driver will add this amount to your fare.

And for special tor ture, her e's some more charges: From midnight to 6am, add 50% to your fare. From 6pm on the eve of a public holiday to midnight the following day, you pay an additional S$1 (US65¢/45p). F rom Changi Airpor t, add S$5 (US$3.35/£2.25) if you're traveling Friday, Saturday, or S unday betw een 5pm and midnight. O ther times, it 's S$3 (US$2/£1.35). And for credit card payments (yes, they take plastic!), add 10%.

By Trolley

For sightseeing trips ar ound to wn, y our best bet is the SIA Hop-on bus. Plying between Suntec City, the Historic District, the Singapore River, Chinatown, Orchard Road and the Singapore Botanic Gardens, Little I ndia, and S entosa, the H op-on comes ev ery 30 minutes betw een the hours of 9am and 10pm daily. Unlimited rides for 1 day cost S$12 (US$8.05/£5.40) adults and S$6 (US$4/£2.70) childr en. If you fle w S ingapore Airlines to get her e, you have to pay only $$6 (U$$4/£2.70) adults and S$3 (US$2/£1.35) childr en if you flash y our boar ding pass. B uy y our tickets fr om the bus driv er when you board. F or info, call SH Tours, @ 65/ 6734-9923.

By Mass Rapid Transit (MRT)

The MRT is S ingapore's sub way system. It's cool, clean, safe, and eliable, providing service around the central parts of the city, extending into the suburbs ar ound the island. There are stops along Orchard Road into the Historic District, to Chinatown and Little I ndia—chances are, there will be a stop close to your hotel (see the map on the inside back cover for specifics).

Fares range from $70¢ to $$2 (US45¢—US$1.35/30p—90p), depending on which stations you travel between. System charts are prominently displayed in all MRT stations to help y ou find y our appr opriate fare, which you pay with an EZ-Link far e card. Single-fare cards can be purchased at vending machines inside MR T stations. See abo ve for information on stor ed-fare cards for multiple trips. ( One caution: A fare card cannot be used by two people for the same trip; each must have his own.)

MRT operating hours v ary betw een lines and stops, with the earliest train beginning service daily at 5:15am and the last train ending at 12:47am. F or more information, call the TransitLink H ot Line at (?) 1800/225-5663 (daily 24 hr.).

By Bus

Singapore's bus system comprises an extensive w eb of r outes that r each vir tually everywhere on the island. Use an EZ-Link stored-value card to pay for your trips, and a TransitLink G uide to find y our way around (see abo ve for mor e details). All buses have a gray machine with a sensor pad located close to the driv er. Tap your EZ-Link card when you board and alight, and the fare will be automatically deducted. It'll be anywhere between S80¢ and S$1.80 (US55¢-US$1.20/35p-80p). I fy ou're paying cash, be sure to have exact change; place the coins in the red box by the driver and announce your fare to him. He'll issue a ticket, which will pop out of a slot on one of the TransitLink machines behind him. If you're not sure how much your fare should be, the driver can assist.

For more information, contact either of the two operating bus lines during standard business hours: Singapore B us S ervice (SBS; © 800/287-2727) or the Trans-Island B us S ervice (TIBS; © 800/ 482-5433).

By Rental Car

Visitors to S ingapore rar ely r ent cars for sightseeing, because it 's just not conv enient. Local transportation is excellent and affordable, y ou don't hav e to adjust to local driving r ules and habits, plus ther e's no need to worr y about wher e to par k. Still, if you must, contact Avis at ② 800/373-1668; they operate counters in all three Changi Airport terminals daily 7am to 11pm.

5 MONEY & COSTS

Compared to its S outheast Asian neighbors, S ingapore is consider ed expensiv e; however, visitors fr om the West will find their money still goes quite far. The Economist came up with a clever way to compare the standar d of living fr om country to country. The Big Mac Index is a surprisingly credible way to consider the value of the exact same item as it differs from place to place ar ound the globe. F or example, according to the A ugust 2008 B ig M ac Index, the av erage price of a B ig Mac in the United States is $3.57. In Singapore, the same burger is $$3.95. Convert that into U.S. dollars, and it 's US$2.92meaning, in S ingapore y ou'll pay about U.S.65¢ less for a Big Mac. How much do you pay for your Big Mac at home? How about the U.K., at £2.29 per burger (US$4.57)? O r A ustralia, at A$3.45 (US$3.36)?

CURRENCY FOR SINGAPORE

The local curr ency unit is the Singapore dollar. It's commonly r eferred to as the "Sing dollar," and r etail prices are often marked as S$ (a designation I' ve used throughout this book). Notes are issued in denominations of S$2, S$5, S$10, S$50, S$100, S$500, and S$1,000. S$1 bills exist but are rare. Notes vary in size and color fr om denomination to denomination. Coins are issued in denominations of S1¢, S5¢, S10¢, S20¢, S50¢, and the fat, gold-colored S$1. Singapore has an interchangeability agreement with Brunei Darussalam, so don't be alarmed if you receive Brunei currency with y our change, as it 's legal tender.

At the time of this writing, ex change rates on the S ingapore dollar were as follows: US$1 = S$1.49, C$1 = S$1.22, £1 = S$2.17, A$1 = S$1, NZ$1 = S$2. The exchange rate used throughout this book is US$1 = S$1.49, which was the average rate during late 2008/early 2009. Before you begin budgeting your trip, you can obtain the latest currency rates on the Internet at www.xe.com.

It's not an absolute necessity to buy Singapore dollars before your trip, because you can find ATMs that accept cards from the Cirrus and Plus networks at the Arrival Halls of all Changi Terminals as y ou exit the baggage claim ar ea. If y ou do need currency changed, each terminal has money-changing ser vices that operate 'round-the-clock.

In town, it's best to ex change currency or trav eler's checks at a local authoriz ed moneychanger, found in most shopping malls throughout the city. They'll give you the best rate. You'll lose money with the high rates at banks, hotels, and shops.

ATMS

The easiest and best way to get cash away from home is fr om an ATM (automated teller machine). The Cirrus (www.master

I n addition, the bank fr om which y ou withdraw cash may charge its o wn fee. For international withdrawal fees, ask your bank.

CREDIT CARDS

Credit cards are another safe way to carr y money. They also provide a convenient record of all your expenses, and they generally offer relatively good exchange rates. You can withdraw cash advences from your credit cards at banks or A TMs, provided you know your PIN. Keep in mind that you'll pay inter est from the moment of your withdrawal, ev en if you pay your monthly bills on time. Also note that many banks now assess a 1% to 3% 'transaction fee" on all charges you incur abroad (whether you're using the local currency or your nativ e curr ency). I n S ingapore, American Express, Visa, MasterCard, Diners Club, and JCB (Japan Credit Bureau) are accepted at vir tually all major hotels, restaurants, nightclubs, and shopping centers. Even taxis accept payment by credit card. S maller food and r etail mer chants generally don 't accept plastic, and be advised, if y ou ar e tr ying to negotiate a discount with a vendor, you will always get a better price with good old-fashioned cash. Some retailers will insist on adding a credit car d "service charge" to y our bill. While it is true that the credit card companies charge the r etailers a small fee each time a customer uses a card, it is a cost the retailers are supposed to bear themselv es. If any one tries to foist this charge onto you, sadly, your only recourse is to report him to your credit card company.

TRAVELER'S CHECKS

You can buy trav eler's checks at most banks. They are offered in denominations of $20, $50, $100, $500, and sometimes $1,000. G enerally, y ou'll pay a ser vice charge ranging from 1% to 4%.

American E xpress, Thomas Cook, Visa, and MasterCard offer foreign currency trawler's checks, which are accepted at money changers, banks, and hotels in Singapore, but are rarely accepted at shops and smaller establishments. You will be asked to produce your passport each time you cash one.

If y ou carr y trav eler's checks, keep a record of their serial numbers separate from y our checks, in the event that they are stolen or lost. You'll get a refund faster if you know the numbers.

6 HEALTH

STAYING HEALTHY

As some intr epid travelers are so fond of accusing S ingapore of being o verly "squeaky-clean," sane travelers who don't want to spend their holiday infirm can est assured that they are safe from most of the tropical world's nastiest scourges in sanitary S ingapore. Food is clean vir tually everywhere, tap water is potable, restaurants and food vendors are regulated by the government, and many other airborne, bug-borne, and bite-borne what-haveyous have been eradicated.

Singapore doesn't require that you have any vaccinations to enter the countr y but recommends immunization against diphtheria, tetanus, hepatitis A and B, and typhoid for any one traveling to Southeast Asia in general. If you're particularly worried, follo w their advice; if not, don 't worry about it.

COMMON AILMENTS

TROPICAL ILLNESSES It seems inevitable for travelers from the West to suffer some sor t of M ontezuma's r evenge or Delhi-belly when they visit the Tropics. If you suffer a bout of diarrhea, it could be from many causes: w eakness from jet lag, adjustments to the climate, ne w foods, spices, or an incr ease in physical activity. Always carry Immodium, or a comparable antidiarrheal, but most impor tant, don't forget to drink plenty of water to av oid dehydration. If symptoms include painful cramps, fever, or rash, seek medical attention immediately; otherwise, it'll probably just clear up by itself.

Singapore's climate guarantees heat and humidity year-round; you should remember to take pr ecautions. G ive y ourself plenty of time to r elax and r egroup on arrival to adjust your body to the new climate (and to the ne w time, if ther e is a time difference for you). Also drink plenty of water. Avoid overexposure to the sun. The tropical sun will burn y ou like thin toast in no time at all. You may also feel more lethargic than usual. This is typical in the heat, so take things easy and y ou'll be fine. Be careful of the air-conditioning, though. It's nice and cooling, but if y ou're prone to catching a chill, or find y ourself moving in and out of air-conditioned buildings a lot, y ou can wind up with a horrible summer cold.

BUG BITES Although you have no risk of contracting malaria in S ingapore (the country's been declar ed malaria-fr ee for decades by the World Health Organization), there is a similar deadly vir us, dengue fever, that's carried by mosquitoes and for which ther e is no immunization. A problem in the Tropics around the world, dengue fev er is controlled in Soingapore with an aggressive campaign to prevent the responsible mosquitoes fr om br eeding. Still, each y ear cases of infection ar reported, almost all of them occurring in suburban neighborhoods and r ural areas. Symptoms of dengue fever include sudden fever and tiny r ed, spotty rashes on the body. I f y ou suspect y ou've contracted dengue, seek medical attention immediately (see the listing of hospitals under "Fast Facts: Singapore," in Appendix A). If left untreated, this disease can cause internal hemorrhaging and ev en death. Your best protection is to w ear insect r epellent that contains DEET, especially if y ou're heading out to the z oo, bird park, or any of the gar dens or natur e preserves, especially during the daytime.

A ne wer thr eat, chikunguniya, also a mosquito-borne vir us, has also posed a danger here in recent years. Symptoms are similar to those of dengue fever.

VIRAL INFECTIONS On February 25, 2003, Singapore reported its first case of Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome, more commonly kno wn as SARS. What exploded into an epidemic affecting almost 8,500 people worldwide was quickly brought under contr ol in the island state due to immediate and effectiv taken by the M inistries of H ealth and Education and the media, combined with the tireless vigilance of Singaporeans themselves. After 3 months of battle, SARS had claimed the lives of 33 people in Singapore but had mobiliz ed the entir e country to take daily precautions against the spread of the disease in an effor t that was highly lauded by the World Health Organization (WHO). The r espiratory infection is passed on thr ough dr oplets when an infected person sneez es or coughs; ho wever, most SARS infections are transmitted only thr ough v ery close contact. casual travelers face no threats of contracting this disease in Singapore.

Also in the ne ws, cases of Asian bir d flu, or Avian influenza, have been reported all over Asia Pacific, with countries culling over 100 million poultr y to contain outbreaks. A vian influenza is an acute viral infection affecting bir ds and poultr y. Cross-infection to humans is rar e; ho wever, it does happen among people who have come in contact with sick or dead birds. To protect the country, S ingapore keeps a close watch on its poultry farms and has developed safe channels for the import of all poultry products to make sure infected meats and eggs don't cross its borders.

WHAT TO DO IF YOU GET SICK AWAY FROM HOME

If you require hospitalization, the centrally located Mount E lizabeth H ospital is near Orchard Road at 3 M ount Elizabeth ( 65/6737-2666; for accidents and emergencies, call 65/6731-2218). You can also try Singapore General Hospital, Outram R oad ( 65/6222-3322; for accidents and emergencies, call 65/6321-4311).

Any foreign consulate can provide a list of area doctors who speak E nglish. If you get sick, consider approaching your hotel's front desk, as many hotels hav e a general practitioner on call. You can also tr y the emergency room at a local hospital. Many hospitals also hav e walk-in clinics for emergency cases that are not life-threatening; you may not get immediate attention, but y ou won't pay the high price of an emergency room visit. We list hospitals and emergency numbers under "F ast Facts: Singapore," p. 290.

If y ou suffer fr om a chr onic illness, consult your doctor before your departure. Pack prescription medications in y our carry-on luggage, and carr y them in their original containers, with pharmacy labels—otherwise they won 't make it through airport security. Carry the generic name of prescription medicines, in case a local pharmacist is unfamiliar with the brand name.

7 SAFETY

Singapore is an extremely safe place by any standard. There's very little violent crime, even late at night. I f you stay out, ther e's little worry about making it home safely . There is vir tually no political or social unrest. Women travelers are treated with respect.

In recent years, some pickpocketing has been r eported. H otel safe-deposit bo xes are the best way to secur e valuables, and traveler's checks solve theft problems in a jiff.

Before y ou go, always check the U.S. State depar tment w ebsite to see if any warnings have been issued in this r egion: http://travel.state.gov/travel/cis_pa_tw/tw/tw_1764.html.

Most disabilities shouldn 't stop any one from traveling. While planning your trip, check out www.disability.org.sg to learn about accessibility issues facing those with disabilities, plus practical information about how to get around the city on public transportation.

Most hotels have accessible rooms, and some cab companies offer special v an services. Almost all of the newer buildings are constructed with access ramps for wheelchairs, but older buildings ar every problematic, especially the shophouses, with narrow sidewalks and many uneven steps.

SENIOR TRAVEL

In Singapore, you'll find very few hotels that offer senior citiz en discounts; ho wever, vir tually ev ery attraction with an entrance fee offers a special discounted rate, and some tour companies will quote you a better rate as well. Be warned that in Singapore you're considered a senior citizen at the age of 55-y ou either love it or hate it!

Upon request, the STB can also help plan your trip and can offer its own advice for senior travelers. Regarding this service, here's my advice: I f y ou wor k out y our itinerary with the help of STB, make sur e you're firm about time constraints. M any of the tours and daily itineraries are rushed. with little time for a rest here and there. A common complaint is exhaustion by the end of just 1 day. In the heat, this is not only uncomfor table, but danger ous as well.

For more information and resources on travel for seniors, see www.frommers.com/ planning.

FAMILY TRAVEL

Because of their focus on business trav elers, hotels in S ingapore are not especially geared toward children. You can get extra beds in hotel r ooms (this can cost anywhere fr om S$15-S$50/US$10-US$34/ £6.75-£23), and most hotels will arrange a bab ysitter for y ou on r equest, though most ask for at least 24 hours notice. While almost all hotels have pools to keep the kiddies cool and happy  $\,$ , none hav e lifeguards on duty , and only one hotel, Shangri-La's Rasa S  $\,$  entosa R  $\,$  esort, has activity programs specifically for children. See chapter 5 for mor  $\,$  e information on these hotels.

Children have their own special rates of admission for just about every attraction and museum. The cutoff age for children is usually 12 years of age, but if your kids are older, be sure to ask if the attraction has a student rate for teens. If the kids get antsy during the cultural aspects of your trip, the best places to take them ar e the Singapore Zoo and Night Safari, the Singapore Science Centre, Underwater World on Sentosa, and Escape Theme Park and Wild Wild Wet, all of which are covered in chapter 7. I can almost guarantee that your teen(s) (and y ou) will have a great time at any of these attractions.

To locate accommodations, restaurants, and attractions that ar e par ticularly kid friendly, refer to the "Kids" icon throughout this guide.

9 SUSTAINABLE TOURISM

Sustainable tourism, meaning suppor ting tourism efforts that are protective of the environment and respectful to indigenous cultures, has become important to many travelers. Since Singapore is a very small nation that is almost entirely defined by its urban core, it has few natural resources to either exploit or defend and vir tually no native cultures to speak of. However, travelers who ar e envir onmentally conscious may find Singapore interesting in surprising ways. The government is responsive to the call of envir onmentalists and has designed and implemented a number of innovative ways to solve the very real environmental and r esource management issues that plague countless urban centers around the world.

Local legend has it that a pr ominent monk warned (then) P rime Minister Lee Kuan Yew that as S ingapore develops, he must be car eful to pr otect the for ests. According to the monk, Singapore, whose name in Sanskrit means "Lion City," gets its power from the lions that once supposedly roamed here. To take away the tr ees will destr oy the lion 's habitat and for ce him to mo ve else where. It is a lesson in feng shui that Lee took to hear t, as evidenced by the trees, shrubs, and flowering plants that have been incorporated into the urban design at almost every turn.

To learn about S ingapore's unique approach to envir onmental sustainability, start at the Marina Barrage, 260 M arina Way (© 65/6514-5959; www.pub.gov.sg/ marina), the massiv e hy drodam that is transforming S ingapore's do wntown city core into the world 's largest urban r eservoir. The dam can be tour ed, but equally interesting is the S ustainable S ingapore Gallery located within the dam, a brilliant display that outlines the go vernment's efforts to ward envir onmental sustainability. The gallery is open Monday to Friday 9am-6pm, but is closed on Tuesday. On Saturday and S unday it's open 10am to 8pm. Admission is free and there is a free shuttle to the B arrage fr om M arina B ay MRT.

In addition to water resource and waste management, the S ingapore go vernment has initiated monetary incentives for land developers that incorporate green technology into the design and construction of all new buildings, and to those who r enovate older buildings to similar standards. There are talks to make gr een buildings mandatory in the near future.

Outside the city center, Singapore also has a number of nature reserves that are outlined in chapter 7 of this guidebook. Of par ticular interest is Bukit T imah Nature Reserve—Singapore is one of only two cities in the world with primary rainforest located within city limits—and Sungei Buloh Wetland Reserve, a mangrove for est that protects an awesome number of migrating bir ds. The National specialists on selected w eekends. Check out the schedule at www.nparks.gov.sg.

The Singapore Z oo has also been affected by global environmental concerns and has decided that, though it will support its current polar bear and Arectic exhibits, once these animals have lived their lives, they will not be replaced, and the zoo will focus on wildlife native to warmer climates.

Animal rights have a way to go when it comes to the rights of shar ks. Shark's fin soup is still a delicacy and is a staple in every Chinese restaurant here. Be warned.

10 PACKAGES FOR THE INDEPENDENT TRAVELER

Package tours are simply a way to buy the airfare, accommodations, and other elements of y our trip (such as car r entals, airport transfers, and sometimes ev en activities) at the same time and often at discounted prices.

Because Singapore is compact and efficient and most people speak E nglish, few travelers feel the need for a travel operator to hold their hand during their stay. Still, package tour operators can get y ou better deals on travel and hotel stays. O ne company I r ecommend is Absolute Asia (15 Watts S t., 5th F loor, N ew York, NY 10013; © 800/736-8187; fax 212/627-4090; www.absoluteasia.com), with packages that giv e y ou plenty of fr ee time to explore on y our own and inno vative itineraries that combine S ingapore with one or more if its S outheast Asian neighbors. Asia Transpacific Journeys (2995 Center Green Court, Boulder, CO 80301; © 800/642-2742; fax 303/443-7078; www.southeastasia.com) is another great operator, specializing in customized tours with particular attention to cultural and ecological sensitivity.

Travel packages ar e also listed in the travel section of y our local S unday newspaper. Or check ads in the national trav el magazines such as Arthur Frommer's Budget T ravel Magazine, Travel + Leisur e, National G eographic Traveler, and Condé Nast Traveler.

MEDICAL TRAVEL

Singapore's internationally accredited hospitals and specialist centers are staffed with medical professionals educated at some of the world 's top schools, furnished with state-of-the-art diagnostic and procedural equipment, and administer ed with an efficiency that S ingapore is famous for . International patients choose to r eceive medical care in Singapore for a number of reasons: because of insufficient medical facilities in their home countries, to co ver gaps in medical insurance co verage, or for privacy for sensitive procedures and recovery. Singapore's international hospitals can provide health scr eening and cosmetic surgery, usually at a greater cost compared to competitor hospitals in M alaysia and Thailand, but many pr efer the peace of mind that comes from Singapore's reputation as a first-world city . It has also nurtured a r eputation for high-end surgical procedures and care in specialist areas like cardiology, neurology, obstetrics and gynecology, oncology, ophthalmology, or thopedics, and pediatrics.

The Singapore government has teamed up with the top hospitals for singaporemedicine.com, a por tal that answers ev ery question for pr ospective patients. Hospitals have specialized departments that handle ev erything from travel arrangements, accommodations, specialists appointments, and ev en tours during your r ecovery—they really handle ev erything soup to nuts.

MEDICAL SPAS

Medical spas blur the line betw een cosmetic medicine for beauty and r ejuvenation, and spa tr eatments for r elaxations and well-being. Medical treatments for the face and body ar e combined with indulgent amenities and services of a luxury spa. The top medical spas in S ingapore ar e: The M edSpa, 1 O rchard B lvd., #12-03/05, Camden M edical Centre ( 65/ 6887-3087; www .medspa.com.sg); and DRx Medispa, 3 Temasek Blvd., #03-52 Suntec City Mall (@ 65/6836-1555), or 583 Orchard Rd., #11-01, Forum ( 65/ 6223-1555; www.drxmedispa.com).

COOKING CLASSES

The Raffles Culinary Academy at Raffles Hotel, 1 B each Rd. ( © 65/6412-1256; www.raffles.com), has daily cooking classes taught by chefs fr om Raffles H otel staff. Individual classes on Asian herbs and spices, kids 'cuisine, I talian, Chinese, Indian, Japanese, and Thai, plus desser ts and pastries, range fr om 2 to 4 hours and are suitable for professionals and hobbyists alike. Bookings can be made online.

12 STAYING CONNECTED

TELEPHONES

Hotels, with the ex ception of backpacker hostels, all have in-room telephones with International D irect D ialing (IDD) service. This is the most convenient way to make international calls, but is also the most expensive, as the hotel will always add its own surcharge to your telephone bill.

Public telephones can be found in booths on the str eet or back near the toilets in shopping malls, public buildings, or hotel lobbies. B ecause most S ingaporeans now carry mobile phones, public phones aren't always properly maintained. Local calls cost S10¢ (US7¢/5p) for 3 minutes at coin- and car d-operated phones. I nternational calls can be made only from public phones designated specifically for this purpose. International public phones will accept either a stored-value phone card or a cr edit card. Phone cards for local and international calls can be pur chased at Singapore Post branches, 7-E leven convenience stores, or money changers—make sure y ou specify local or international phone card when y ou make y our purchase.

To call S ingapore fr om the U nited States, dial 011 (the international access code), then 65 (Singapore's country code), and then the eight-digit number . The whole number y ou'd dial would be 011-65-XXXX-XXXX.

To make international calls from Singapore, first dial 001 and then the country code (U.S. or Canada 1, U.K. 44, I reland 353, Australia 61, New Zealand 64). Next, dial the area code and number. For example, if y ou wanted to call the B ritish Embassy in Washington, D.C., you would dial © 001-1-202/588-7800.

To call Malaysia from Singapore, it is not necessary to use IDD service, as there is a tr unk cable between Singapore and peninsular Malaysia. To place a call, dial 02 to access the trunk cable, then the area code with the zero prefix, followed by the seven-or eight-digit local number. For example, to call the Malaysia Tourist Centre in Kuala Lumpur, dial © 02-03-2164-3929. For calls to Malaysian Borneo, you must still use IDD.

For directory assistance within Singapore, dial © 100. Dial © 104 for assistance with numbers in other countries.

For operator assistance in making a call, dial © 104 if y ou're trying to make an international call and © 100 if y ou want to call a number in Singapore.

For toll-free numbers, be awar e that numbers beginning with 1800 within Singapore are toll free, but calling a 1-800 number in the S tates from Singapore is not toll free. In fact, it costs the same as an overseas call.

CELLPHONES

Cellphones in S ingapore operate on two mobile phone networ ks, GSM900 and GSM1800—GSM, or G lobal System for Mobile Communications, is a seamless network that makes for easy cross-border cellphone use throughout the world. Call your wireless operator and ask for international roaming to be activated on your account, but expect to pay premium charges for all calls.

There are three mobile service providers in S ingapore: S ingTel (http://home.sing tel.com), M1 (www.m1.com.sg), and Star-Hub (www.starhub.com). To save money on calls, you can purchase a prepaid Subscriber I dentity M odule, or SIM car d, which will assign you a local number while in Singapore. Before you do this, be sur e that your mobile handset is able to accept an alien SIM car d, as many phones ar e locked by providers. If your cellphone is locked, you can always find someone who will unlock it for a few bucks on the sly at either S im Lim S quare or L ucky P laza shopping malls. Cellphones, both new and used, are reasonably priced here. Consider buying a new handset before paying exorbitant rental fees to an international rental firm.

FYI: Singaporeans call their cellphones "handphones," and the local term for text messaging is "SMS."

VOICE-OVER INTERNET PROTOCOL (VOIP)

If y ou have Web access while traveling, consider a broadband-based telephone service (in technical terms, Voice-over Internet protocol, or VoIP) such as Skype (www.skype.com) or Vonage (www.vonage.com), which allowy ou to make free international calls from your laptop or in a cybercafe. Neither service requires the people you're calling to also have that service (though there are fees if they do not). Check the websites for details.

INTERNET & E-MAIL With Your Own Computer

Major hotels all supply high-speed br oadband I nternet access in-r oom, usually at extra cost. S ome ne wer and mor e expensive hotels will have Wi-Fi, wireless Internet connections, in r oom, while others will suppor t Wi-Fi thr oughout cer tain public spaces.

In 2007, the I nfocomm D evelopment Authority initiated the Wireless@SG program, where surfers can enjo y free seamless wireless broadband access with speeds of up to 512kbps at most public ar eas. As of July 2008, there were more than 7,400 Wi-Fi hotspots in S ingapore. To connect to the Wireless@SG wir eless br oadband network, a user just needs a Wi-Fi-enabled device, such as a laptop computer or a PDA, a Web br owser, and a r egistered Wireless@SG account. The scheme is open to tourists and business trav elers; register at the www .ida.gov.sg site. This site also lists hotspots across the island.

In addition, sev eral cafes and r estaurants, such as McDonald's and Starbucks, offer Wi-Fi access to customers.

Without Your Own Computer

To find cyber cafes in y our destination, check www.cybercaptive.com and www.cybercafe.com.

Aside fr om formal cyber cafes, most backpacker guesthouses hav e I nternet access. A void hotel business centers unless y ou're willing to pay ex orbitant rates.

Most major airports now have Internet kiosks scatter ed thr oughout their gates. These give you basic Web access for a perminute fee that 's usually higher than cybercafe prices.

13 TIPS ON ACCOMMODATIONS

Singapore's hotels enjo y high occupancy rates y ear r ound, and as a r esult, they require early booking whenev er possible, especially fr om D ecember thr ough Chinese N ew Year in J anuary or F ebruary, considered the island's peak season. M ost of the time, hotels ar e occupied by business trav elers and, as such, ar e outfitted with amenities to accommodate wor king guests, especially international hotel chains such as H ilton, G rand H yatt, M arriott, Sheraton, Carlton, InterContinental, The Regent, Four Seasons, Conrad, and the Ritz-Carlton. Leisur e trav elers can find better value at hotels that don 't soak up resources for business centers, confer ence facilities, and high-pr ofile po wer-lunch restaurants.

A major complaint among visitors to Singapore is the relative lack of decent budget accommodations. High real estate prices make budget hotels hard to sustain, but a few hotels offer comfor table rooms at value prices, the best of which are reviewed in this book.

Almost all hotels are located within the city limits and near to public transpor tation, making getting around exceptionally convenient.

For detailed tips about accommodations in Singapore, see chapter 5.

Suggested Itineraries Singapore

If you've made it all the wa y to Southeast Asia, y ou'll likely be on a limited schedule—especially if y ou've arrived via a long-haul flight from Europe or North America. The good news is that Singapore is easy . It's such a small place that virtually every sight is relatively close. Still, with so many to choose fr om, it can be tough to whittle down the must-sees. In this chapter I' ve done that job for you, identifying the best and more important sights and working them into even the shortest stay.

1 THE REGIONS IN BRIEF

On a world map, Singapore is nothing more than a speck nestled in the hear t of Southeast Asia, at the tip of the M alaysian peninsula. In the north, it's linked to M alaysia by two cause ways over the S traits of J ohor, which are its only physical connection to any other body of land. The country is made up of 1 main island, Singapore, and around 60 smaller ones, some of which—like Sentosa, Pulau Ubin, Kusu, and St. John's Island—are popular retreats. The main island is shaped like a flat, horizontal diamond, measuring in at just o ver 42km (26 miles) fr om east to w est and almost 23km (14 miles) nor th to south. With a total land area of only 693 sq. km (270 sq. miles), Singapore is shockingly tiny.

Singapore's geographical position, sitting appr oximately 137km (85 miles) nor the function that its climate features uniform temperatures, plentiful rainfall, and high humidity.

Singapore is a city-state, which basically means the city is the country. The urban center starts at the Singapore River at the southern point of the island. Within the urban center are neighborhoods that are handy for visitors to become familiar with: the Hstoric District, Chinatown, Orchard Road, Kampong Glam, and Little India.

Beyond the central urban ar ea, y ou'll find older suburban neighborhoods such as Katong, Geylang, or H olland Village, neighborhoods that featur e prewar homes with charming architectural details. Travel farther and you'll find New Towns, such as Ang Mo Kio or Toa Payoh, which are clusters of government-subsidized housing that have sprung up around the island, supported by their own shopping malls, schools, and clinics, many of them connected by the subway system.

THE CITY: URBAN SINGAPORE

The urban center of Singapore spans quite far from edge to edge, so walking from one end to the other—say, from Kampong Glam to Chinatown—will be too much for a relaxed walk. But within each neighborhood, the best way to explor e is by foot, wandering along picturesque streets, in and out of shops and museums.

The main focal point of the city is the S ingapore River, which on a map is located at the southern point of the island, flo wing west to east into M arina Bay. It's along the banks of this riv er that S ir Stamford Raffles landed and built his settlement for the East India Trading Company. As trade prospered, the banks of the river were expanded to handle commer ce, behind which neighborhoods and administrative offices took root. In 1822, Raffles developed a Town Plan which allocated neighborhoods to each of the races who'd come in droves to find work and begin lives. The lines drawn then remain today, shaping the major ethnic enclaves held within the city limits.

CHINATOWN

On the south bank of the river, godowns, or warehouses, lined the waterside. Behind, offices and residences sprang up for the Chinese community of merchants and "coolie" laborers who worked the river- and sea-trade. Raffles named this section Chinatown, a name that stands today.

TANJONG PAGAR

Neighboring Chinatown to the southwest is Tanjong Pagar, a small district where wealthy Chinese and E urasians built plantations and manors. With the development of the steamship, Keppel Harbour, a deep natural harbor just off the shore of Tanjong Pagar, was built up to receive the larger v essels. Tanjong Pagar quickly dev eloped into a commercial and residential area filled with workers who flocked there to support the industry.

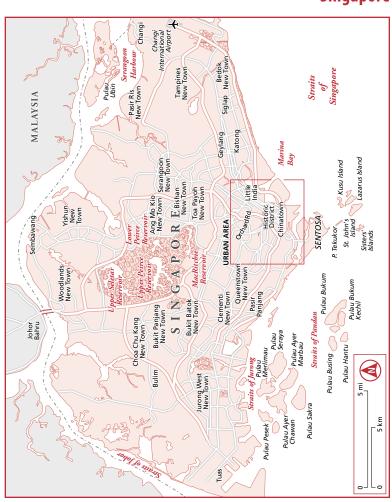

In the early days, both Chinato wn and Tanjong Pagar were amazing sights of city activity . R ow houses lined the streets with shops on the bottom floors and homes on the second and thir d. Chinese coolie laborers commonly lived 16 to a r oom, and the ar ea flourished with gambling casinos, clubs, and opium dens for them to spend their spare time and money . I ndians also thronged to the ar ea to wor k on the docks, a small r eminder that although races had their o wn ar eas, they w ere never exclusive communities.

As r ecently as the 1970s, a walk down the str eets in this ar ea was an adventure: The shops housed Chinese craftsmen and ar tists. On the str eets. hawkers peddled food and other merchandise. Calligrapher scribes set up shop on side walks to write letters for a fee. Housewives would bustle, r unning their daily errands. Ov erhead, laundry hung from bamboo poles.

Today both of these districts ar e sleepy in comparison. New Towns offering affor dable housing have siphoned residents off to the suburbs, and though the government has renovated many of the old shophouses in an attempt to preserve history, they're now tenanted by law offices and ar chitectural, public relations, and advertising firms. The only time you'll see this place hustle anymore is during weekday lunchtime when all the professionals dash out for a bite.

HISTORIC DISTRICT

The north bank was originally r eserved for colonial administrative buildings and is today commonly r eferred to as the Historic District. The center point was the Padang, the field on which the Europeans would play spor ts and hold outdoor ceremonies. Around the field, the Parliament B uilding, S upreme Cour t, City H all, and other municipal buildings sprang up in grand style. G overnment Hill, the present-day Fort Canning Hill, was home of the go vernors. The Esplanade along the water front was a center for European social activities and music gatherings, when colonials would don their finest Western styles and walk the par k under parasols or cr horse-drawn carriages. These days, the Historic D istrict is still the center of most of the government's operations and home to numerous high-rise hotels and shopping malls. The area on the bank of the river is celebrated as Raffles 's landing site.

ORCHARD ROAD

To the nor thwest of the H istoric District, in the ar ea along O rchard and Tanglin roads, a residential area was created for E uropeans and E urasians. Homes and plantations were eventually replaced b y apar tment buildings and shops, and in the early 1970s luxur y hotels ushered tourism into the ar ea in full force. In the 1980s, huge shopping malls were er ected along the sides of Orchard R oad, turning the Orchard-scape into the shopping hub it continues to be. The Tanglin area is home to most of the foreign embassies in Singapore.

Urban Singapore Neighborhoods

The natural landscape of Little I made it a natural location for an Indian settlement. I ndians w ere the original cattle hands and traders in S ingapore, and this ar ea's natural grasses and springs provided their cattle with food and water while bamboo gr oves supplied necessar v lumber for their pens. Later, with the establishment of brick kilns, I ndian constr uction labor ers flocked to the area to find work. Today many elements of I ndian cultur e persist, although I ndians make up a small percentage of the curr ent population. Shops, r estaurants, and temples still serve the community, and on S undays

Little India is a tr ue mob scene, when all the wor kers have their day off and

Kampong G lam, neighboring Little India, was given to Sultan Hussein and his family as par t of his agr eement to turn Singapore over to Raffles. Here he built his Istana (palace) and the S ultan Mosque, and the ar ea subsequently filled with M alay and Arab M uslims who imported a distinct I slamic flavor to the neighborhood. The area is still a focal point of Muslim society in Singapore, thanks to Sultan Mosque, and the Istana has become a ne w exhibit celebrating Malay culture. Arab S treet is a regular draw for both tourists and locals who come to find deals on fabrics and local and regional crafts.

SHENTON WAY: DOWNTOWN

Two ar eas of the city center ar e r elatively new, having been built atop huge parcels of r eclaimed land. Where the eastern edges of Chinato wn and Tanjong P agar once touched the water edge, land reclamation created the present-day downtown business district that is named after its central thor oughfare, Shenton Way. This Wall Street-like district is home to the skyscrapers that grace S ingapore's skyline and to the banks and businesses that hav e made the place an international financial capital. D uring w eekday business hours, Shenton Way is packed with scurr ying businesspeople—after-hours and on weekends, it 's nothing mor e than a quiet for est of concrete, metal, and glass.

MARINA BAY

The Marina Bay area will soon be the new focal point for the city . With the Shenton Way financial district on one side, the H istoric D istrict on another, and S untec convention center on y et another, the bay is humming with activity. In the coming years, with construction of one of S ingapore's ne w casino integrated resorts, new office towers, and luxury condominiums on a tract of reclaimed land, Marina Bay will become a vibrant district of ar ts and enter tainment wher e S ingaporeans and for eign residents can work and also live.

SUBURBAN SINGAPORE

With rapid urbanization in the 20th century, plantations and farms turned into suburban residential areas, many with their own ethnic roots.

KATONG

To the east of the city is Katong, a famous r esidential district inhabited primarily b y P eranakan (S traits Chinese) and E urasian families. I ts streets were, and still ar e, lined with P eranakan-style terrace houses, a r esidential variation of the shophouse found in commercial districts. The P eranakans and E urasians were tolerant groups, a result of interracial marriages and multicultural family life, who created a close-knit community that 's carried over to the present day. Main streets are still lined with Peranakan restaurants as well as many Catholic churches and schools that served the Eurasians.

GEYLANG

As public transportation opened up the eastern sections of the island, neighborhoods extended far ther out. G eylang, the neighborhood just bey ond Katong, was and still is primarily a M alay district. Joo Chiat and Geylang roads were once lined with antiques shops and restaurants where halal foods, in accordance with I slamic laws, w ere ser ved. Today a lot of the shophouses are being renovated, but it 's still a good ar ea to find house wares, fabrics, and modern furniture shops. At night, parts of Geylang ar e notorious for par tially r egulated prostitution.

CHANGI VILLAGE

Also to the east is Changi Village, at the far eastern tip of the island. It was built as the r esidential section of a B ritish military post, but the B rits ar e gone now and Changi is pretty quiet, with not much to see other than a large hawker center with some great seafood and a public beach from which you can see Singapore's northern islands, Malaysia, and I ndonesia. The one notable aspect of the place is that it's where you pick up ferries to Pulau Ubin.

TIONG BAHRU

To the west is an old neighborhood, Tiong B ahru. I ts original inhabitants were Chinese from the Chinato wn and Tanjong P agar district, and the neighborhood remains largely Chinese today. In the 1960s, the government replaced small homes and makeshift housing with high-rise public apartment housing. The younger generations hav e since mo ved on to bigger housing in the New Towns, leaving the place mostly populated by the elderly.

HOLLAND VILLAGE

Located to the west of the city, Holland Village is another famous neighborhood that's become a tourist attraction in its o wn right. I ts nucleus of shops carries mer chandise catering to the wants and needs of Westerners, many of whom r eside in the vicinity . D espite Western customers, ther e ar en't necessarily Western goods her e, but rather the kind of rattan furnishings, baskets, pottery, and other r egional gifts and housewares that add Asian touches to otherwise Western-style homes.

THE NEW TOWNS

In the 1960s, to deal with the growing Singapore populations, the government created a scheme to build r areas along an imaginar y circle around the center of the island. These N ew Towns consist of blocks of high-rise public apartments around which shops, markets, schools, and clinics settled to support the r esidents. Villages, farms, and orchards were leveled; swamps were drained; and local str eams were turned into concrete channels to make way for towns such as B edok, Tampines, Pasir Ris, Toa Payoh, Bishan, Ang Mo Kio, Yishun, Woodlands, and Clementi. One trip on the sub way, and all these names become familiar, as the M ass Rapid Transit (MR T) system was brought into the scheme to pr affordable transpor tation to all the towns.

Since 1960, almost one million go vernment-subsidized apar tments hav e been built, allowing over 80% of Singapore's population to o wn their o wn homes. B ut ho wever appealing this housing scheme sounded at first, r esidents in N ew Towns have their complaints. The apar tments have become

Kampong Life

When the stress of modern society gets them do wn, many Singaporeans look back with long ing to the days when life was simple, before the go vernment housing schemes shifted everyone out of their kampongs.

Kampongs, Malay for "villages" (and spelled kampung in Malaysia), were, once upon a time, home to most of Singapor e's population. Chinese, Malays, and Indians lived side by side in small clust ers of houses that were built from wood and attap thatch and raised on stilts. Built along the shores of the island and close to jungles, the houses and buildings were nestled against backdrops of idyllic g reenery surrounded by banana and c oconut groves and marshes. Homes had land f or chicken c oops and k itchen gar dens, and back yards in which children could play. The kampongs had c entral wells, provision shops, and sometimes t emples and mosques. Despit e their po verty, the k ampong villages represented community.

The 1950s and 1960s were the hey day of k ampong life. Later the houses were improved with corrugated metal, concrete, and linoleum, all of which rusted and rotted over time, making the kampongs look more like slums than the homey villages they once were. I nside, modernization brought government-mandated running water, plumbing, and even electrical appliances like TVs, refrigerators, and telephones. Still, all in all, life was hardly opulent. Today this entire way of life is just a memory. Every last kampong has been razed, the inhabitants relocated by the government to public housing estates. Many former kampong inhabitants have had a difficult time adjusting to life in concrete high-rises with no front porch or backyard and neighbors who are too busy to remember their names. Despite the truth that k ampong life reflected poverty and struggle, its memory remains a link to older days that, however irrelevant to the modern world, still warm the hearts of many Singaporeans.

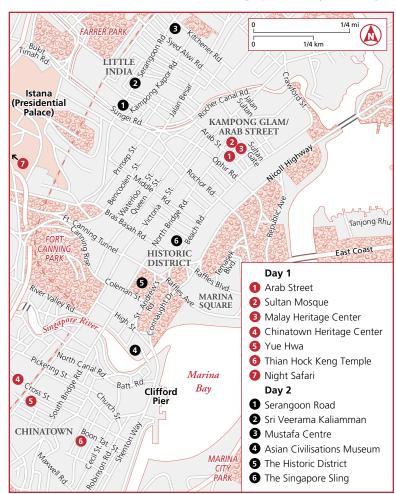

extremely expensive, and long waiting lists are filled with couples who want to buy their first homes and families who need to upgrade to larger digs. B eyond questions of expense, though, ther e's the fact that the N ew Towns are singularly characterless, with high-rises looming o verhead and compar tmentalized living cr eating an urban anonymity among the many inhabitants.

2 THE BEST OF SINGAPORE IN 1 DAY

Perhaps you're in S ingapore only o vernight en r oute. Here's how to make the best of it. Since the city is compact, y ou can take in some sights fairly easily and still make it to the airport for your flight out. If your time is very limited, I recommend you bypass the museums and head straight for the streets, where you'll find a "living museum" of sorts, with local people, food, shops, and places of worship, plus a couple of interesting cultural displays. Do yourself a fav or and stop first at a Singapore Tourism Board (STB) Visitors'

The Best of Singapore: Day 1 & Day 2

Centre to pick up copies of their walking tour pamphlets, one for each of S ingapore's ethnic neighborhoods. The brochures identify points of inter est and bits of local color as you walk along neighborhood str eets. They're very well done. I r ecommend you start in Kampong Glam, Singapore's historical home base for M alay heritage (M alays were, after all, the original inhabitants). Chinato wn makes an excellent afternoon of strolling, and in the evening, the night safari in Singapore Zoological Gardens is always a good time. Start: Taxi to Arab Street.

Arab Street

This short street is lined with shops that sell Malaysian and Indonesian batik cloth and home decor items, baskets, car ved wood, objets d'art, and other gifts. Most places will be open by 10am, but if it 's a Sunday, they'll be closed; in that case, head straight to the Sultan Mosque instead. See p. 169.

② Sultan Mosque ★

Just off Arab S treet, y ou can't miss the towering onion dome of this mosque. The most historic in Singapore, its grounds are open, so feel fr ee to explor e within its walls, including the ablutions ar ea, where worshipers wash up before prayers according to Muslim tradition, and a small grave site with unmar ked stones. I nside the front entrance, they can provide robes if you're wearing shorts or a sleev eless top. Come before the noontime prayers, especially on Fridays; other wise, y ou may be asked to wait until they're finished. Non-Muslims are not permitted inside the main prayer hall. See p. 137.

Malay Heritage Centre

Just a 2-minute str oll from the mosque, the M alay H eritage Centre is inside the restored palace of the original sultanate. The staff her e is r eally nice and can also chat about the local M alay culture from their personal experiences. See p. 136.

Take a taxi from Arab Street to the Chinatown Heritage Centre.

4 Chinatown Heritage Centre ★★

Say goodbye to Malay culture and hello to Chinese and a w elcome respite from the midday heat (it 's air-conditioned!). The streets surrounding the center ar e packed with souvenir shops with tons of curious finds, plus some beautiful art and antiques galleries, so be sur e to wander ar ound a bit. See p. 128.

Yue Hwa ★★

This Chinese emporium is practically a museum of Chinese handicrafts, filled with floor after floor of fabulous shopping. Excellent buys her e include r eady-made silk clothing, embroidered handbags, carved jade, potter y, and cloisonné. Unusual buys include musical instruments, men's coolie outfits, and plenty of strange Chinese interpretations of Western goods. See p. 168.

Take a taxi from Yue Hwa to Thian Hock Keng Temple.

6 Thian Hock Keng Temple ★★★

If you see any one Chinese temple in S ingapore, this is it. O ne of the earliest built, it is a meaningful tribute to the Taoist gods and goddesses that have guided the Chinese community here. Try to get here before 5pm so you have time for relaxed exploration. See p. 132.

Night Safari ★★★

If you come from temperate climes, this is a rar e chance to see nocturnal animals. This is the one place wher e all S ingaporeans bring their foreign visitors, and I have yet to see any one walk away unimpressed. Also, an easy dinner can be had form local-and fast-food stalls at the par k entrance. See p. 147.

3 THE BEST OF SINGAPORE IN 2 DAYS

On your second day, continue to explor e life at gr ound level with a morning meander through Little India, the heart of Singapore's Indian community. After lunch, escape the afternoon heat at the Asian Civilisations Museum, then finish your day with a Singapore Sling at Raffles Hotel. Start: Taxi to Serangoon Road or MRT to Little India station.

Serangoon Road

A long strip where the locals come to buy spices (check out the old grinding mill on Cuff Rd. just off S erangoon), flowers (see the sellers making jasmine garlands by the roadside), Bollywood DVDs (you can hear the music blaring out into the street), saris (you can have one made for yourself), and all kinds of cer emonial items, many of which make excellent gifts. This is one of the fe w old neighborhoods in S ingapore that hasn't been "Disney-fied" by the government. If you love chaos, come on Sundays, when most wor kers have their day off. This place is packed like Calcutta!

2 Sri Veerama Kaliamman ★★

Midway down Serangoon Road you'll find this brightly color ed temple humming with devotees all times of the day. Take off your shoes to explore the dioramas inside. If y ou get her e early enough, y ou can watch as the statues inside are bathed. The water, considered blessed, runs off a small spout behind the left side of the main altar. See p. 135.

3 Mustafa Centre ★★

Farther along S erangoon Road, Mustafa's is a crazy I ndian emporium. While many of the goods ar e pretty standard, look for all the neat I ndia imports. E xplore the basement sari fabric depar tment, one of the largest in Singapore. I love the groceries section with r ow after r ow of bo xed curry mixes—great to take back home! Or check out M ustafa's three floors of the most elaborate gold je welry y ou've ev er seen. See p. 169.

Take a taxi from Mustafa's to the Asian Civilisations Museum.

4 Asian Civilisations Museum ★★★

This is my fav orite museum, for its w ellplanned displays and handsome pr esentations of the many cultures that influenced Singapore's heritage. D on't leave without checking out the gift shop, which features exceptional r egional handicrafts. They take special care to support crafting communities. See p. 115.

5 The Historic District

From A CM, take a walk thr ough the downtown civic center, where you'll pass the O ld P arliament H ouse, the P adang, the S upreme Cour t, City H all, and S t. Andrew's Cathedral. The stroll takes only about a half-hour, a bit more if you linger at any of the sights. See p. 114.

6 The Singapore Sling

Walk past Raffles City S hopping Centre and you'll find Raffles H otel. Take your time to wander through her public spaces (visitors are not allo wed in residents' corridors). There's upscale shopping, pretty courtyards, and lots of dining options. Head for the Long B ar where you can sip a sweet Singapore Sling at the place where the drink was invented. To be honest, this isn't the actual bar; the current Long Bar is a replica built into the Raffles' new wing. But after a couple of these powerful concoctions, you won't care. See p. 179.

4 THE BEST OF SINGAPORE IN 3 DAYS

According to the S ingapore Tourism Boar d, the av erage visitor stays 3.5 days. I f this describes you, there's still plenty of good things to see and do befor e you depart. An early-morning visit to the S ingapore Botanic G ardens is especially r ecommended for joggers and photographers. O nce the sun has burned away the de w, head for the ne wly renovated National Museum of S ingapore to cool off (notice I always r ecommend the air-conditioned attractions during the hottest time of the day). A late-afternoon visit to the Jurong BirdPark rounds out a r elaxing day of sights. Start: Orchard MRT, then bus no. 7, 105, 106, or 174 from Orchard Blvd.

64 The Best of Singapore: Day 3

① Singapore Botanic Gardens ★★

There's no r eason to stop y our wor kout routine just because y ou're traveling. Start your jog—or walk—early (it opens at 5am!) to beat the heat and so y ou won't feel rushed through the beautiful displays of tr opical plants, shady tr ees, vivid blooms, and delicate bonsai, and don 't forget to visit the National Orchid Garden (open at 8:30am) while y ou're there. See p. 144.

② National Museum of Singapore ★★★

Recently r edone, ther e's nothing musty about this histor y lesson. An interactiv e, multimedia, IMAX-ed good time, it 's also highly recommended for childr en, as the goal of the National Heritage Board was to make history accessible to everyone. They did a great job. See p. 121.

3 Jurong BirdPark ★

As long as you're in the Tropics, check out the birds in this beautifully executed park. Feeding activities, educational tours, and shows keep it lively. See p. 141.

Where to Stay in Singapore

Competition is fierce among hotels in the G arden City, driv en by a steady stream of business and convention travelers, many of whom stay at international hotel chains such as H yatt, H ilton, Sheraton, and M arriott (all r epresented here). These companies invest millions in a never-ending cycle of r enovations, constantly upgrading their super-r oyal-regal executive facilities, all in an attempt to lue suits and CEO s and—ev entually, it is hoped—land lucrative corporate accounts.

Sadly, this means that good-quality budget accommodations ar e not a high priority on the island. B etween the business community's demand for luxur y on the one hand and the inflated Singaporean real estate mar ket on the other , r oom prices tend to be high. What this means for leisure travelers is that you may end up paying for a business center y ou'll never use or a 24-hour str ess-reliever masseuse you'll never call—and all this without the benefit of a corporate discount rate.

Don't fret, though: I'm here to tell y ou that ther e's a range of accommodations out there—you just have to know where to look. In this chapter, I'll help you pick the right accommodations for y ou, based on your vacation goals and y our budget, so you can make the most of your stay.

CHOOSING YOUR NEIGHBORHOOD

In considering wher e you'll stay, think about what y ou'll be doing in S ingapore—that way, you can choose a hotel that 's close to the par ticular action that suits y ou. (On the other hand, because S ingapore is a small place and public transpor tation is ex cellent, really nothing's ever too far away.)

Orchard Road has the largest cluster of hotels in the city and is right in the hear t of Singaporean shopping mania—the malls and wide side walks where locals and tourists stroll to see and be seen. The Historic District has hotels that ar e near museums and sights, while those in Marina Bay center mor e around the business pr of essionals who come to Singapore for Suntec City, the giant convention and exhibition center located there. These hotels in Marina Bay overlook the bay, the Singapore Flyer, and the Harbor, offering some of the best vie ws in to wn. Chinatown and Tanjong Pagar have some lovely boutique hotels in quaint back streets, and Shenton Way has a couple of high-rise places for the convenience of people doing business in the do wntown business district. On a strict budget, but want to be close to the center of things? Check out my r ecommendations on and ar ound Bencoolen Street for decent backpacker stops. M any hotels have free morning and evening shuttle buses to Orchard Road, Suntec City, and Shenton Way. I've also listed two hotels on Sentosa, an island to the south that's a popular day or weekend trip for many Singaporeans and might be a good choice for families or honeymooners. (It's connected to Singapore by a causeway, cable cars, and a light-rail system.) Remember, Singapore isn't huge and has myriad transpor t options, so nothing 's ever really far away.

66 Urban Singapore Accommodations

CHOOSING YOUR HOME AWAY FROM HOME

What appeals to y ou? A big, flashy, internationalist palace or a small, homier place? Hyatt, Sheraton, Hilton, and InterContinental are just a few of the international chain hotels you will find in S ingapore. For the most part, these city hotels are nondescript towers—though Swissôtel The Stamford has the distinction of being the tallest hotel in Southeast Asia, with 71 floors. A few exceptions stand out. The Shangri-La, operating a highly reputable luxury hotel chain in Asia, has a property near Orchard Road with gorgeous landscaped grounds and a pool area, making it truly a resort inside the city. Meanwhile, Shangri-La's Rasa Sentosa Resort and the Sentosa Resort & Spa on Sentosa Island are out-of-the-way but have a real "get-away-from-it-all" ambience. In addition, a few hotels offer charming accommodations in historical premises. The most notable is Raffles, a Southeast Asian classic, and the Fullerton Hotel Singapore, converted from the old general post office building. But you need not pay a for tune for quaint digs. Budget places like Alber t Court Hotel and the SHA Villa offer budget rooms with old-world charm in great locations.

A newer trend is the boutique hotel. Conceiv ed as par t of the U rban R estoration Authority's renewal plans, rows of old shophouses and historic buildings in ethnic ar eas like Chinatown and Tanjong Pagar have been restored and transformed into small, lovely hotels. Places like the Scarlet H otel and the Inn at Temple Street are beautiful examples of local flavor turned into quaint accommodations. O thers, like the trendy New Majestic, focus on art and design, with rooms dramatically different from each other and from the usual corporate tones of tan and beige that predominate in the city 's high-rises. Although these places can put you closer to the hear t of Singapore, they do have their drawbacks—for one, both the hotels and their rooms tend to be smaller than their modern counterparts, and due to building codes and a lack of space, most are unable to provide facilities like swimming pools, Jacuzzis, or fitness centers.

Although budget hotels have very limited facilities and simpler interior style, y ou can always expect a clean r oom. What's more, service can sometimes be mor e personal in smaller hotels, where front desk staff has fe wer faces to recognize and is accustomed to helping guests with the sorts of things a business center or concierge would handle in a larger hotel. Par for the course, many of the guests in these places are backpackers, and mostly Western backpackers, at that. However, you will see some regional folks staying in these places. Note: The budget accommodations listed here are places decent enough for any standards. While cheaper digs are available, the rooms can be dreary and depressing, musty and old, or downright sleazy.

Unless you choose one of the extreme budget hotels, there are some standard features you can expect to find everywhere. Although no hotels offer a courtesy car or limousine, many have courtesy shuttles to popular parts of town. Security key cards are catching on, and while in-room safes are standard, many are shifting to safes that incorporate a plug so you can charge electronics gadgets while they're locked away. You'll also see in-house movies and, many times, CNN, ESPN, and HBO on your TV. Voice mail is gaining popularity, and fax services can always be provided upon request. You'll find most places have adequate fitness center facilities, almost all of which offer a range of massage treatments—hotels generally do not offer in-room massage treatments. Pools tend to be on the small side, and Jacuzzis are often placed in men's and women's locker rooms, making

(Tips Making Hotel Reservations Online

The website www.asiarooms.com offers the best rates I've seen for Internet bookings, particularly for hotels in the Very Expensive and Expensive categories; however, they don't have deals for every hotel property. It's worth it to browse and compare.

it impossible for couples to use them together Although tour desks can be found in some lobbies, car-rental desks are nonexistent.

Many of the finest r estaurants in Singapore are located in hotels, either operated by the hotel directly or just inhabiting rented space. Some hotels host five or six restaurants, each serving a different cuisine. Generally, you can expect these r estaurants to be more expensive than places located outside hotels. In each hotel review, the distinguished restaurants have been noted; these restaurants are also fully reviewed in chapter 6.

RATES

For a "Little Red Dot," Singapore gets big visitor numbers. H otel prices—already comparatively expensive for Asia—continued to set r ecords in 2007, when occupancy rates hit an all-time high of 87%. With room rates rising more than 20% year-on-year and an average room now breaking the $$200 ($134/£90) barrier for the first time, this can be a tough destination for travelers on a budget. As more and more hotels move away from the rack rate system of published room prices, it can be difficult to compare value, so although some rack rates are included here, there are plenty of promotional rates on offer. A little research can really pay off, leaving your expensive hotel costing less on a particular date than a so-called moderate hotel. If you've decided where you want to stay, make sure you call in adv ance and ask what special deals ar e available. Also check out hotel discount websites on the I nternet (such as www .asiarooms.com, above), though they don't list every hotel. Places that have just completed renovation programs tend to offer good discounts, and many business-orientated hotels have special rates for weekends and longer stays.

Rates shown here represent the price of a standar d double room in high season, booked via the I nternet. For the purposes of this guide, I' ve divided hotels into these categories: very expensive, S$450 (US$302/£203) and up; expensiv e, S$300 to S$450 (US$201-US$302/£135-£203); moderate, S$200 to S$300 (US$134-US$201/£90-£135); and inexpensive, under S$200 (US$134/£90).

TAXES & SERVICE CHARGES

All rates listed ar e in Singapore dollars, with U.S. dollar and B ritish pound equivalents provided as well (remember to check the ex change rate when y ou're planning, though, because rates fluctuate). Most rates do not include the so-called "++" tax es and charges: the 10% service charge and 7% goods and services tax (GST). Keep these in mind when figuring your budget. Some budget hotels will quote discount rates inclusive of all taxes, and Internet sites normally include taxes.

THE BUSY SEASON

Busy season? I t's all busy season in S ingapore, with month-b y-month occupancy rates holding steady over 80%. Visitors are advised to book rooms well in advance, and check with the Singapore Tourism Board to make sure there are no huge conventions in town during your dates. That said, probably the worst time to find a last-minute r oom or to negotiate a fav orable rate will be betw een Christmas and the Chinese N ew Year, when folks travel on vacation and to see their families.

MAKING RESERVATIONS ON THE GROUND

If you are not able to make a reservation before your trip, a reservation service is available at Changi International Airport. The Singapore Hotel Association operates desks in all three main terminals, with r eservation services based upon r oom availability for many hotels. Reservation lines are open 24 hours: Terminal 1 @ 65/6542-6966; Terminal 2 (f) 65/6545-0318; Terminal 3 (f) 65/6542-0442.

VERY EXPENSIVE

The Fairmont The Fairmont is designed to make life easy for the weary traveler. Close to the sights of the historic district, it's also directly above an MRT hub and next to the enormous Raffles City shopping center r eplete with restaurants, supermarkets, and swish stores. Rooms in the North Tower have an attractive and contemporary Asian flavor, while South Tower rooms have polished wooden floors, Bose sound systems, and Heavenly Beds with 10 layers of goose feathers. Ask for a harbor vie w in the South Tower to enjo y the best vie ws of the financial district skyscrapers o verlooking Marina Bay. The Amrita Spa is Singapore's largest spa, with plunge pools, a huge range of Asian and E uropean treatments, and a state-of-the-ar t fitness center that 's open around the clock. B usiness facilities are outstanding, with a dedicated ex ecutive floor with its own lounge, complimentary use of meeting rooms, in-room espresso machines, and a private gym.

The Fullerton Hotel Singapore ** The historic Fullerton, which rivals Raffles in luxury and ar chitecture, is regularly voted one of Asia's top hotels. Superb views in almost every direction include the Singapore River and historic district, the city skyline, and the harbor. Built in 1928 as the General Post Office, its location, immense size, and classical Doric columns are testament to its vital role in the colonial go vernment. The restoration and hotel conv ersion have been done beautifully, with lofty, elegant public spaces and guest rooms cleverly arranged to fit the original structure. Rooms are oases of comfort, stylish and contemporar y with flatscr een TVs, PlayStations, large desks, and Philippe Starck fittings in the enormous bathr ooms. Facilities are excellent, too, with a state-of-the-art gym and spa and an infinity pool that o verlooks the river. Standards of

The Mandarin Orien tal Singapore ★★★ The Mandarin Oriental is the most elegant of the M arina Bay atrium-style hotels, with its subdued lobb y of dark polished marble, rich fabrics, and stunning or chid arrangements. Even the central elevator lobby is surrounded by softly trickling limpid pools. The king- and queen-size bedrooms have a sophisticated contemporary Asian look and beautiful silk prints and upholstend wicker chairs. Bathrooms have a separate bath and sho wer, separated from the bedroom by a glass wall (with wooden blinds, for modesty). O ceanview rooms overlook the Singapore Flyer and the bay, though only suites have balconies with a seating area. The newly refurbished city-facing rooms have attractive modern oak partitions and marble bathrooms. The Mandarin Oriental's restaurants and bars are excellent, though expensive, and its hushed, exotic spa is to die for. Service is superb.

Raffles Hotel ★★ Walking into Raffles has a palpable sense of event. Liveried Sikh doormen usher you through the ornate wrought-iron portico into a lobby that seems faithfully unaltered from the hotel's 1930s heyday. If price is no object, then Raffles will deliver a blend of luxury, history, and colonial ambiance no other hotel can match. Only residents are allowed into the private inner lobby, or to stroll across the polished teak verandas overlooking tropical courtyards to suites decorated with a small elegant lounge, period furnishings, and a lovely four-poster bed. Although suites are on the small side, every detail is true to the hotel's heritage, making a stay here the ultimate in romance. Butlers provide customized service for each suite. There is a small landscaped rooftop pool and a spa that can arrange individualized treatments with the utmost discretion. Residents also have the benefit of eight exceptional dining choices in house. A stay at Raffles is an event in itself.

The Ritz-Carlton, Millenia Singapore ★★★ No one could accuse the Ritz-Carlton of looking like just another international hotel. A little less than 3 hectar es (7 acres) of landscaped grounds give a sense of peace, despite its busy Marina Bay location. Inside the award-winning Kevin Roche's building, the lobb y and public ar eas showcase extraordinary art: Hockney and Warhol brush shoulders with more than 4,000 works by international artists. You can't miss Dale Chihuly's vivid glass tendrils, which exude from the walls of the lounge and restaurant areas on either side of the lobb y. Guest rooms are quiet and larger than most in S ingapore, and each has stunning vie ws of either the Kallang or M arina bays. D ecor and furnishings ar e sumptuous and comfor table, from big wood-posted beds dressed in crisp white linens, to lounges, walk-in closets, and, for Club rooms, even Bulgari toiletries. Best of all are the huge octagonal picture windows placed next to the bathtub in every room, surely the most luxurious way possible to unwind after a long day's business or sightseeing.

Carlton Hotel Singapore ★★ This Carlton property comprises two buildings, the 26-story Main Wing and the 19-story Annex Wing. Leisure travelers will be most interested in the lower-priced superior and deluxe rooms in the Main Wing. While rooms in both categories are the same size, deluxe rooms have broadband Internet access in-room, a flatscreen TV, plus marble bathr oom decor (superiors are humble ceramic tile). The Annex houses pr emier deluxe rooms, which, for a pr emium, feature larger bathr ooms with separate bath and sho wer stall, an in-r oom safe to fit y our laptop, and access to a coin-operated launderette. All public spaces have been upgraded as well, including the lobby entrance, alfresco coffee shop, and tiny wine and cigar room. The location, in the center of the historic district, is great. Ask for a room with a view of the city, but try to avoid the building noise from the Carlton's new Executive Wing, due to be completed in 2009.

Grand Park City Hall ★ Formerly the Grand Plaza Parkroyal and the Parkroyal on Coleman Street, this property changed hands in 2007. B uilt on top of (and incorporating) 2 blocks of pr ewar shophouses, there are still hints of shophouse detail thr oughout the lobby. Renovation of the public ar eas, including the lobby, restaurants, and spa, are newly completed, and executive rooms are due to be refurbished by the end of 2009. The hotel is located at the corner of Coleman and Hill streets, close to the Armenian Church, the Asian Civilisations M useum, and F ort Canning P ark—plus ther e's a shuttle to Orchard Road. Guest rooms are of smaller siz e than average, have decent closet space, and sport sharp Italian contemporary furniture in natural tones, with homey touches like snuggly comforters on all the beds.

Hotel InterContinental Singapore ★ InterContinental has brilliantly incorporated a block of prewar shophouses into its design. While the hotel remains unmistakably modern and efficient, it 's been admirably successful in infusing signatur es of the local Peranakan style, evident in the car ved panels dotted ar ound the hotel, and the use of ornate fabrics and porcelain in the vivid Peranakan palette. Deluxe rooms on the upper floors are large, pleasant, and w ell equipped, but in my vie w, it's worth paying extra to get one of the Shophouse rooms or suites in the original part of the building. Although they are slightly smaller, they have been beautifully and atmospherically renovated, with wooden floors, oriental r ugs, and good r eproduction antiques. The Club Lounge has recently been relocated to the second floor of the old building. For an additional charge, guests can enjoy complimentary breakfast, afternoon tea, and cocktails here.

Marina Mandarin Singapore ★★ The atrium of the Marina Mandarin is a colossal 21-story space, but it is peaceful and ser ene for its size and busy location due to the natural light that str eams through skylights and bir dsong from caged Chinese nightingales. The recently renovated rooms are spacious and attractive, with crisp white bed linen offset by dark wood furniture, Asian fabrics, and frosted glass walls around the well-equipped bathrooms. Premier Suites are more Western in flavor, using light wood and gold and white fabrics. Venus rooms offer women travelers comforts and conveniences, including bathoils, custom pillows, and hair tongs. Each room has a balcony—ask for a harbor view room. The Marina Mandarin has the Marina Square and Millennium Walk shopping malls on its doorstep. Though it's a fair walk from this area to the MRT (subway), it's possible to do most of the journey via air-conditioned malls, and taxis are plentiful here.

Novotel Clarke Quay Singapore ★ This hotel to wers over the S ingapore River just next to Clar ke Quay (a popular spot for nightlife, dining, and shopping) and is a stroll away from the Historic District. The rooms and pool area were refreshed in 2008. Guest rooms are a good size, some with space for four single beds. All have small balconies with good views of the river, the financial district, Fort Canning Park, or Chinatown, and even standard rooms have large bathrooms like those you typically see in more deluxe accommodations. Decor is Western contemporary in shades of brown, green, and tan, with small desks next to floor-to-ceiling picture windows. The main lobby is an elevator ride up from the ground level. A recently renovated adjacent shopping mall has groceries in the basement and a few handy shops.

Swissôtel The Stamford ★ (Value) With more than a thousand rooms and 73 floors, this immense to wer is the tallest hotel in Southeast Asia. The Stamford is now getting a much-needed face-lift, with a refurbishment program that was launched in 2008, working its way down from the 27th floor. Even if you can't manage to get a renovated room, you'll be rewarded with a great bird's-eye view of Singapore island, from the historic Padang beneath to the business district and the iconic harbor. If that's not enough, just head upstairs to the Equinox bar. At 226m (741 feet), you can see almost the entire island and beyond. This hotel is in a great location, over the City Hall MRT and Raffles City Mall, and it also shares many of its facilities—including swimming pools and restaurants—with its sister hotel, the Fairmont.

Albert Court Hotel ★ Value This eight-story boutique hotel has revitalized a block of charming prewar shophouses and given it Western-style comforts. Decorators placed local Peranakan touches everywhere, from the carved teak furnishings in traditional floral design to the antique china cups used for tea ser vice in the rooms. (Guaranteed: The sight of these cups brings misty-eyed nostalgia to the hearts of Singaporeans.) Like most heritage hotels in Singapore, guest rooms aren't large, but details like the teak molding, bathroom tiles in bright Peranakan colors, and old-time brass electrical switches give this place real charm. Albert Court offers new courtyard rooms in the renovated houses that front the hotel's courtyard; these rooms contain all the local touches that make this hotel stand out from the rest. This hotel is especially attractive e if you wish to spend a lot of time shopping and eating in Little I ndia, which is just across the street.

THE HISTORIC DISTRICT

Allson Hotel Singapore ★ (Value) Allson continues to be a strong tourist-class hotel in the city's historic district. F ive floors have been renovated so far, with an ongoing program scheduled for 2009, which will increase the number of premium rooms. Standard deluxe guest rooms are a good size and simply but pleasantly decorated. Carved rosewood furniture—headboards, side tables, and armchairs in quaint Ming-style carvings—are an elegant touch for such moderately priced accommodations. Premium rooms are more European in flavor, with free Internet and soft drinks. They're certainly attractive but, sadly, lacking the carved furniture that gives standard rooms their charm. Bathrooms are very small but clean, with combined tub/shower. The small pool area and even smaller gym have received some maintenance touch-ups. There are no views here, but with a good location and modest prices, Allson remains a great choice for value-conscious leisure travelers.

It's 15 minutes' walk to the MR T (subway), so you'll need to take buses or taxis just about everywhere else—but the trade-off is that if you stick around, you can take advantage of the attractive recreation and r elaxation facilities, which include a huge swimming pool and a lovely sun deck decorated in a lazy-days B alinese-style tropical motif, and a B alithemed poolside cafe, cooled by ceiling fans. Two gyms to the side have plenty of space and new equipment, but the most ex quisite facility of all is the ex otic Bali-inspired spa. Other hotel facilities include outdoor and indoor J acuzzis, a sauna, and a steam r oom. Guest rooms were renovated in 2007 and are simple but clean and comfor table.

A long-o verdue renovation is finally taking place, and tired rooms are being freshened up. King-size rooms have space for a small desk, while family rooms have one queen and one slightly oversize single bed squeezed in. Many of the rooms had a basic refurbishment in 2008, with new carpets and more modern decor. Small bathrooms are newly tiled as well but are already beginning to show some age. Don't expect views or creature comforts—the Bencoolen is a good, clean place to sleep befor e hitting the city again. The hotel has a rooftop restaurant.

Perak Hotel ★ This pretty budget hotel on the edge of Little I ndia has real character. Its location in a row of white and blue shophouses gives it charm, and there are nice decorative touches, with local fabrics and simple wooden furniture. As with most conversions, guests need to accept a few quirks as well: The atmospheric wooden floorways can be noisy, and the guest rooms, though clean and tidy, are small, with tiny and basic bathrooms. Superior rooms are pleasant, with shutter ed windows, but many standard rooms rely on skylights instead. It's popular with the friendly backpacking crowd who gather in the lobby and cafe to chat and make use of the free Internet.

Strand Hotel ★ The Strand is definitely one of the better backpacker places in S ingapore. The lobby doesn't look or feel like a budget hotel, with marble floors, a smar t bellhop, and a long reception desk. There's also an inviting cafe to one side, plus a small gift shop. Guest rooms are the largest I've seen in a budget hotel in S ingapore—in fact, they are larger than a lot of more expensive rooms as well. Rooms are simply furnished, but decoration is exuberant (the r ooms with purple walls and leopar d-skin headboards may not be to everyone's taste). Unless you're a bona fide exhibitionist, don't go for the "special room," with the bathtub/sho wer separated from the main room by only a thin glass wall. Anybody for a free show?

If you're simply in town for a vacation, Amara doesn't offer the best location or envir onment, but the focus on business travelers means there are some excellent value weekend rates available and a two-room suite that's useful for families. The top eight floors of this hotel are reserved for the corporate set; not only do they have better views, but also modern decor and services attractive to business visitors.

Berjaya Duxton Hotel Singapore The Duxton was one of S ingapore's first boutique hotels, transforming shophouses into a small hotel that earned international acclaim. Following a takeo ver by the M alaysian Berjaya Group, a 2008 r efurbishment program has freshened up carpets and upholstery, and the garden suites are pleasant and private, but the building's age means the Berjaya Duxton would really reap rewards from a major investment program, which is not currently scheduled. The Victorian antique looking decor is pretty and a welcome change from the usual corporate chains, but there's little sense of local Chinatown character in the rooms or the modern new Italian restaurant. However, the Duxton has character and a good location at a good price. The area is great for bars and restaurants, though steer clear of some of the karaoke bars on Daxton Road. Service is friendly and personal.

The Inn at Temple Street ★★ They've done a lovely job with this modest boutique hotel. In the heart of Chinatown's tourism hustle and bustle, step into the small lobby to be greeted by pretty antiques and Chinese por celain. To the side of the lobby, a popular cafe serves Western and local meals three times a day. The friendly front desk handles everything from business center services to arranging laundry, tours, and postal services, but never seems frazzled. Naturally, there's no elevator and rooms can fairly be described as tiny, but they are quite modern for this type of hotel, with keycard locks, in-room safe, tea and coffee, minibar, TV, and room service. Decor is atmospheric, too, with car ved wooden bedsteads and pretty fabrics. I like the black-and-white-tiled bathrooms, though you'll need to opt for a deluxe room if you want a bathtub rather than a sho wer. Attractive, affordable, and friendly.

The S carlet Glamour drips fr om every chandelier onto the polished black marble floors of this groovy little boutique hotel. Swirling patterns of gold and blood red velvet compete for attention in the lobby and its equally stylish lounge. The location, in a row of original shophouses, means that guest rooms are very small and skylights are the only source of daylight in first-floor delux e rooms. Unless you're in a pr emium deluxe or a suite, you'll have a shower rather than a bath, but rooms are well designed and comfortably decorated in sophisticated muted color schemes and equipped with flatscr een TVs, DVD, and br oadband. Suites are opulent, with swaths of silk draper y, funky lounge areas, and ornate gilt frames. There's not much in the way of facilities (a J acuzzi and a tiny gym, "Flaunt," and a pleasant rooftop bar and restaurant), but Chinatown and the fashionable haunts of Club Street are just around the corner.

Hotel 1929 ★ (Finds This trendy, inexpensive little place is a real gem in Chinatown, operated by the same people behind the swish N ew Majestic. Though its target market is very different, there are some clues to the shared parentage in its love of vintage chairs and retro design. The hotel's shophouse location means that rooms are small and quirkily shaped—many of the toilets are extremely close to the shower, but clever design and an eye for detail makes for pleasant, well-organized spaces with real personality. Some of the cheapest rooms have no windows, and facilities are limited to a J acuzzi and sun deck—though its busy and sometimes noisy location doesn 't really lend itself to sunbathing. Sheraton Towers Singapore ★★ Sheraton's lobby is lined with ser vice awards. With the deluxe (standard) room, they'll give you a suit pressing on arrival, daily newspaper delivery, shoeshine ser vice, and complimentary movies. These refurbished rooms are handsome, with textur ed walls, plush carpeting, and a bed luxuriously fitted with down pillows and dreamy 100% E gyptian cotton bedding. U pgrade to a Tower room, and you get a personal butler, complimentary nightly cocktails and morning br eakfast, free laundry, free local calls, your own pants press, and free use of the personal trainer in the fitness center. The cabana rooms, off the pool area, have all the services of the Tower Wing in a very private resort room. The 23 one-of-a-kind suites each feature a different theme: Chinese regency, French, Italian, jungle, you name it. Although Sheraton is a luxe choice, you can find better deals, price wise.

St. Regis Hotel ** Singapore's newest luxury hotel opened in early 2008. Touted as a six-star property, it's distinctly palatial and ornate, with patterned fabrics and carpeting, dainty cr ockery, and huge chandeliers. G uests are chauffeured in B entleys. Guest rooms feature walnut furniture, Jim Thomson silks, and plush couches, and ar e full of gadgets, with Bose sound systems, plasma TVs, and lighting panels. E normous marble-clad bathrooms have flatscreen TVs in the mirror facing the bath. Each floor is ser viced by discreet and expert butlers. Grand Deluxe rooms overlook the greenery of the exclusive Tanglin and Nassim areas. Toiletries are from the in-house R emède spa, with a w et lounge, which is complimentar y for guests. While you're there, consider the R emède's version of a hot stone massage, which uses huge silken pebbles of pure jade. Facilities are of the high standard that you would expect, though the pool area is overlooked by nearby towers.

The Best of Singapore's Spas

In the mid–1990s, spas began making a splash in the Singapore hotel scene. By the millennium, every luxury hotel was either planning a full-blown spa facility or at least off ering spa ser vices to its r esidents. At the same time , day spas sprouted up in shopping c enters, and despite the economic downturn, these businesses have stayed afloat. Now the Singapore Tourism Board is positioning Singapore as an urban spa hub in S outheast A sia, luring visit ors from the region and beyond with luxurious facilities that go abo ve and beyond the call of relaxation and hedonistic pampering. Here are the best among the many:

Singapore's most celebrated spa, Amrita (The Fairmont, Level 6, 2 Stamford Rd.; ② 65/6336-4477; and Swissôtel Merchant Court, Level 2, 20 Merchant Rd.; ② 65/6239-1780; www.amritaspas.com), is operated by Raffles International and has proven so wildly successful that the hotel chain has opened Amritas in Germany, S witzerland, and bey ond. This flagship spa at The Fairmont is the largest spa in Singapor e, with S outheast A sian—inspired interiors and tr eatments—over 1,000 to choose from.

Amrita is convenient if y ou want to stay in the cit y center; however, if y ou want more of a r etreat spa experience, Spa Botanica (2 Buk it Manis Rd., The Sentosa; © 65/6371-1318; w ww.spabotanica.com) is a gor geous pick. It is located at the S entosa, a sc enic resort dripping with laid-back , y et elegant tropical Southeast Asian decor. Spa Botanica has 6,000 sq . m (64,583 sq . ft.) of designated spa space, with pools, mud baths, and treatment pavilions nestled in lush gardens. Treatments center around natural recipes for beauty and relaxation, including spice and floral treatments.

Concorde Formerly Le Meridien, this Orchard Road hotel has been losing its appeal in recent years, but the ne w management pr omises a major r enovation program will restore its former glor y by early 2010. Club r ooms and suites have already been refurbished, and the r emaining deluxe rooms are scheduled for similar tr eatment in 2009. Public areas, including the impressive atrium lobby, aren't due to change much, and it 's a shame there are no plans y et to o verhaul the rather shabb y shopping ar cade outside. Business facilities have a way to go to make the Concor de a great choice for business travelers, but if you're here to shop, then you can't beat this location; the Concorde's large refurbished rooms makes an enviably convenient place to stash your shopping bags before heading to the Historic District nearby.

Goodwood Park Hotel ★ The Goodwood Park is a N ational Landmark, built in 1900 as the Teutonia Club, and may be Raffles 'closest rival for historical significance.

Guestrooms are large and lovely, overlooking the main pool or the Mayfair pool. Spacious Poolside Suites are decorated in a classic European style, and several open directly onto the gardens and main pool terrace. One caveat: The main pool is also overlooked by the glass walls of the main lobby, so if you prefer privacy, choose a room beside the Balinese-inspired Mayfair pool. If you're in Singapore for a week or more, the large one-bedroom Parklane Suites, housed in a separate wing, can be a bargain. While Goodwood doesn't come close to matching the business and fitness centers of other hotels in its price range, its four restaurants are highly rated by locals, particularly the dim sum served at the Min Jiang restaurant. The staff at Goodwood Park is particularly friendly and helpful.

Grand Hyatt Singapore ★★ The unusual lobb y, with glass windo ws set at right angles and a r eception desk hidden ar ound the corner, brings good feng shui to this excellent hotel. In public spaces, floors of polished cr eam or black marble ar e offset by deep wood and str eams trickling slo wly over hand-chiseled r ocks. Guest rooms in the Terrace Wing are decked out in shades of cream and gray with good work desks and big marble bathrooms. Even better are the Grand Wing rooms, which are really suites with separate living ar eas, small walk-in closets, B ang & O lufsen TVs, and a separate wor k area. The fr eeform pool was o verhauled in 2008 and is beautifully landscaped with wooden decks and loungers that sit in shallow water. The new Japanese-designed Damai spa and state-of-the-art fitness center overlook the incredible five-story waterfall that sits in the center of the hotel. This is an oasis just steps away from the busiest intersection in the city.

Meritus Mandarin Singapore ★ This tour group favorite is brilliantly located in the center of O rchard Road. A multiphased r enovation project launched in 2008 has moved the main lobby around the corner to Orchard Link, and a fifth-floor linkway now connects the hotel's two wings. A cautionary note: The Mandarin's first four floors are being converted into a shopping mall—work that has closed the pool and will continue to cause some disruption until fall/winter 2009. Guest rooms are also due for renovations in 2009, so it's worth checking for bargains while the work is ongoing. Try for a Premier room, on higher floors and much quieter, which are more spacious and luxurious. The tower and rooftop revolving restaurant was a landmark when it opened in 1973. S adly, it no longer r evolves, but the Chatterbo x restaurant still offers S ingaporean specialties such as chicken rice with remarkable 360-degree city views.

The Regent Singapore ★ The Regent is tucked betw een Cuscaden and Tanglin roads, at the nor thern end of O rchard Road—you'll have to hike about 10 minutes to get to the center of things. B ut check out the lobb y in this place! I t's a huge three-level atrium affair with windo ws on three sides, a skylight, fountains, plenty of small priv ate meeting nooks, and raised walkways straight out of *The Jetsons*. The guest rooms have high ceilings and are decorated with Chinese motifs in refurbished fabrics, but the bathrooms are smaller than at most other comparable hotels and the place is sho wing its age slightly. You have to request coffee-/tea-making facilities in y our room; other wise, the service is free in the tea lounge, which also serves a high tea the old-fashioned way, with silver tray service.

Singapore Marriott Hotel ★★ The towering green and scarlet—roofed pagoda of the Marriott is a landmar k at the corner of O rchard and Scott r oads. Geared strongly toward business travelers, its ultracentral location, next to O rchard MRT, makes sight-seeing convenient, too. The cosmopolitan lobb y is per fect for informal meetings or a comfortable coffee stop. Crossroads Café, which spills from the hotel onto the sidewalk, is one of Singapore's most popular spots to see and be seen. The pagoda tower means that rooms aren't large, though they are cozy and inviting and equipped with all the comforts and conveniences you'd expect for business travel. Leisure travelers may find the poolterrace rooms and suites more interesting, elegant little cabins that are surprisingly resort-like, considering the Orchard Road location. Each has a poolside veranda, wooden floors with rugs, skylights over the open-plan bath, and walls of car ved stone.

MODERATE

The Elizabeth Singapore The Elizabeth is European in style, although the lobb y has a huge and distinctly Asian waterfall that cascades down to a rock garden below and a gift shop that 's good for Asian souv enirs. Executive-floor rooms were refurbished in 2008, as were the four large suites, which are large, if relatively unadventurous, spaces with dark wood furniture. If you need the space, these can be a good deal. Unfortunately, the hotel has no plans yet to invest in the standard (Superior) rooms, which are becoming rather worn and dark since their last refit in 2005. The facilities are nothing to write home about; there are a few workout machines next to the pool are a and no business center (although I nternet is av ailable and the friendly staff at r eception will help with faxes). There is a restaurant, but most would prefer to head to Orchard Road, a short but slightly hilly stroll away.

Hilton In ternational Singapore This H ilton doesn't measure up with some of their other properties worldwide and definitely can't compete with other hotels in this price category in S ingapore. The most famous feature of the H ilton is its glamor ous shopping arcade, where you can find your Donna Karan, Louis Vuitton, Gucci—all the greats. With all this, the guest rooms should be pretty sumptuous, no? Well, no. The rooms are simpler than you'd expect, with nothing flashy or overdone. Floor-to-ceiling windows are in each, and although views in the front of the hotel are of Orchard Road and the Thai Embassy property, views in the back are not so hot. In this day and age, when business-class hotels are wrestling to outdo each other, Hilton has a lot of catching up to do.

Orchard Hotel Singapor e ★ There's a pleasant buzz about the O rchard Hotel. Perhaps it's the giant wrought-iron clock in the center of the lobby, ticking away the time in London, Tokyo, Singapore, and New York that gives the Orchard an air of a very plush railway station. The Orchard Wing houses standard (superior) rooms. These aren't huge, but make good use of space with comfor table contemporary furniture and an intriguing round window that lets daylight into the bathrooms. A few Superior rooms have a more Asian feel and local touches like painted wooden furnitur e. The larger and plusher Executive Deluxe and Club rooms are mostly housed in the Claymore Wing. The hotel's upper Orchard Road location means that views aren't spectacular, but there's a large pool, a fitness center, and a great attached shopping mall that has useful cafes, restaurants, and salons. The staff is friendly and helpful, though at times o verworked, so allow plenty of time for checkout.

Orchard Parade Hotel * Value Kids This Mediterranean-style gem is right at the top of Orchard Road. I recommend its family studios; they are large and comfortable, with a king-size bed and lounge seating ar ea, dining area, and spacious bathroom, plus two extra single beds behind a partition. There's a balcony, too, though the view over the busy junction of Tanglin and Orchard Road isn't exactly peaceful. Deluxe double rooms are also spacious, pleasant, and bright, though the bathrooms are fairly basic. Views are variable, so specify at booking if that 's important to you. Standard double and twin rooms tend to face the building at the back of the hotel, so y our view's likely to be of concrete. On the sixth-floor roof there's a colorful terracotta-tiled pool area, and the terrace outside is convenient for coffee shops and family r estaurants—plus, of course, you have all of Orchard Road to choose from. It's a 10-minute walk to the Botanic G ardens and Orchard MRT.

Traders Hotel Singapore ★★ Traders doesn't look like a value-for-money hotel, with its smartly designed lobby and restaurants, but that's how it advertises itself—and it's certainly a bargain for leisuæ travelers in Singapore. Most of the rooms are moderately small, although there are five triple rooms with child-size sofa beds. Superior (standard) rooms are located on the lo wer floors, with their D eluxe counterparts benefiting from slightly better vie ws. The only major problem with Traders (and its neighbors) is the distance from the main part of Orchard Road and the subway, but they do offer an hourly free shuttle bus to and from Orchard MRT and Ngee Ann/Takashimaya, and weekday shuttles to various business parks. Better still, this value hotel has a cross-signing arrangement with the nearby Shangri-Lahotel and the Rasa Sentosa resort on Sentosa Island, giving you access to their awesome pools, spas, and fitness centers, plus the latter's beachfront location.

York Hotel Singapore ★ This charming little hotel has got even better in the past year, thanks to a modernization program that 's smar tened up the 407 rooms and extended the business and fitness facilities. Pale, contemporary furnishings in neutral colors lend a calming atmosphere to the guest rooms. Superior rooms aren't particularly large, so if you want more space, upgrade to one of the spacious deluxe or colorful cabana rooms that look out over the pool. The York's location, 10 minutes' walk from Orchard Road, offers a good compromise between accessibility and a moderately relaxing environment. Staff here is extremely professional and courteous. All these improvements mean that rates have risen to match and the York isn't the steal it used to be, but it remains a consistently good value option. The buffet breakfast seems to be disproportionately expensive—try to get an inclusive rate or head to Orchard Road instead.

Hotel Grand Central, Singapore The Grand Central certainly ain't grand, but you can't get much more central than smack in the middle of Orchard Road (though, strictly speaking, the lobby is tucked into a lane just ar ound the corner). Permanently busy, its predominantly regional guests throng the small lobby while the staff does its best to keep up. As well as a seafood restaurant, the lobby has a useful tour desk and travel agent, and there's a r ooftop pool. S tandard guest r ooms are backpacker basic, with decent beds, central air-conditioning, and TVs. Not somewhere you'd be tempted to linger, but why would you, with the center of S ingapore on the doorstep? P remium rooms have been refurbished with LCD TVs and other standard amenities.

Lloyd's Inn This two-story bungalow is in a quiet residential area just a few blocks from Orchard Road. Lloyd's is a budget motel in ev ery sense, with fe w facilities. Open-air corridors form a pleasant little courtyard, and standard rooms are small, with a definite budget feeling, though all hav e en-suite bathr ooms, TV, air-conditioning, and phones. D eluxe rooms are a better size and have a small fridge. P ublished rates include the "++" tax es (see "Taxes & Service Charges," earlier in this chapter), although there's an extra 2% charge for credit cards and rooms are charged in adv ance. The welcome is friendly and lo w key. No pool, no fitness center, no nothing—you got your room, that's what you got.

The Metropolitan YMCA Singapore This place is a little out-of-the-way in terms of walking distance to the center, but public buses stop right outside the door and ther e is a shuttle service that operates weekday mornings. Inside there's a wide range of rooms to suit most budget conscious travelers, from dorms to deluxe. Family rooms, including triples and quads, are particularly good, with lots of storage space. None of these is luxurious, but they 're clean and stocked with all the basics. One caution her e: The least expensive rooms have no windows; for sunlight, you'll have to pay a little extra. Facilities are good, with a fitness center, a decent in-house restaurant, and a big rooftop pool and children's pool with a lifeguard on duty (unusual in Singapore). However, the pool is also used by the local community, so y ou can't guarantee access at all times. There's a self-service launderette, a coffee shop, and a tour desk.

These resemble a two-bed dorm: very basic, with a shar ed lobby and bathroom between two rooms. But at just S$150 (US$101/£68), including taxes, these are on a level with standard dorm prices else where, so they're a hit with backpackers. Alco ve and Executive rooms offer balconies, minibars, newspapers, and cable TV, and the large Hollywood Queen sleeps four comfortably. There's a small fitness area but no pool, and it's a brisk 10- to 15-minute walk to Orchard Road.

YMCA In ternational House (Kids With a superb location at the lower end of Orchard Road, this budget gem is very convenient for sightseeing and getting around by mass transit. The guest rooms have been renovated and have private bathrooms that are better than I've seen at some much pricier hotels. All rooms have air-conditioning, a telephone (with free local calls), color television, and a stock-it-y ourself refrigerator, but be warned, all standard double-occupancy rooms are twin beds only. The dormitories are small, dark, and quiet, with two bunk beds per room. A cross the hall are men's and women's locker rooms for showering. Most of the public areas have no air-conditioning, including the old fitness facility, billiards center, and squash courts—so be warned: They can become unbearably hot. The rooftop pool is nothing to write home about, but a full-time lifeguard is on duty. There's a coffee shop in the lobb y. The staff is amazingly friendly.

4 SENTOSA ISLAND

Sentosa's island getaway gets bigger every year, with new attractions, hotels, and facilities being added all the time. Thanks to a huge land r eclamation and building pr oject, the island itself is expanding geographically, too. Sentosa's hotels are geared toward couples on romantic breaks and young families, attracted by the beach resort feel and the accessibility of the city.

The Sentosa Resort & Spa ★★ Fashioned after the luxur yr esorts of P huket, Thailand, designers have done a great job combining clean, modern lines with tropical touches and courtyard gardens to produce a sophisticated getaway with relaxing charm. Lazy terraces and cozy alco ves tucked all over the grounds invite guests to unwind in privacy—perfect for intimate candlelight dinners that can be requested anywhere you like. The centerpiece is Spa Botanica; its gar den massages, treatments, and frangipani baths are repeatedly voted some of the world's best.

The standard guest r ooms in the five-story hotel building are small but stunning, featuring camphor burl-wood doors and accents, Thai silk screens in natural browns and greens, and deep tubs and separate showers in the bathrooms, surrounded by thick celadon green tiling and sleek black granite details. Ask for views of the golf course, which are prettier than the views of the hotel courtyards and buildings. The four Garden Villas are supremely romantic and luxurious. Butlers wait 'round-the-clock to serve you—a standard feature for all rooms.

Shangri-La's Rasa Sentosa Resort (Kids Set on an immaculate white-sand beach fringed with coconut palms, this is Singapore's only true beachfront hotel. Great outdoor activities make the Rasa Sentosa particularly attractive, with a sea-sports center, offering windsurfing, sailing, and paddle skiing. There's a large free-form swimming pool in the gardens, a jogging track, aqua bike rentals, an outdoor Jacuzzi, and a fully equipped spa with gym, sauna, body and facial treatments, hydromassage, and massage therapies. For children, there is a separate pool with water slides (no lifeguar d, though), a playground, a nursery, and a games room.

Each of the rooms has a balcony with a vie w over the hillside and the fort or the sea. Go for the sea vie w. Though it's slightly more expensive, the view is exceptional, and if you don't go for it, y ou'll be missing out on glorious mornings, thr owing back the curtains, and taking in the scenery from the balcony. # Where to Dine in Singapore

Singapore claims an estimat 2,000-plus eating establishments, so you'll never go hungry. But to simply say, "If you like food, y ou'll lo ve S ingapore!" doesn't do justice to the modern concept of eating in this city. Here you'll find a huge selection of local, r egional, and international cuisine, served in settings that range fr om bustling hawker centers to grand and glamorous palaces of gastr onomy. The food is authentic, and many times the dining experience is entertainment in its own right. Various ethnic r estaurants, with their traditional decor and ser ving styles, hold their own special sense of theater for foreigners; but S ingaporeans don 't stop there, dreaming up ne w concepts in cuisine and ambience to add fr esh dimensions to the fine art of dining.

In this chapter, I'll begin by providing an overview of the main types of traditional cuisine to help you decide, and also list those signature dishes that each style has contributed to the "local cuisine," dishes that have crossed cultures to become time-honored fav orites—the Singaporean equivalent to bangers and mash or burgers and fries. These suggestions are especially helpful when navigating the endless choices at hawker centers (large gr oupings of informal open-air food stalls).

The r estaurants r eviewed her e offer a crosscut of cuisine and price ranges, and were selected for superb quality or authenticity of dishes. Some were selected for the sheer experience, whether it 's a stunning view or just plain old fun. Beyond this list, you're sur e to disco ver fav orites of y our own without having to look too far.

A good place to star t is right in y our hotel. Many of Singapore's best restaurants are in its hotels, whether they're run by the hotel itself or operated by outfits just renting the space. Hotels generally offer a wide variety of cuisine, and coffee shops almost always have Western selections. Shopping malls hav e ev erything fr om food cour ts with local fast food to midpriced and upmarket establishments. Western fastfood outlets ar e always easy to find-McDonald's burgers or S coffee—but if you want something a little more local, you'll find coffee shops (called kopitiam) and small home-cookin 'momand-pop joints do wn ev ery back str eet. Then there are hawker centers and food courts, where, under one roof, the meal choices go on and on.

1 TIPS ON DINING

In many foreign destinations, the exotic cuisine isn't the only thing that keeps you guessing. Here, I give you the ground rules on Singapore dining.

HOURS Most restaurants are open for lunch as early as 11am but close abund 2:30pm or 3pm to give them a chance to set up for dinner, which begins ar ound 6pm. Where closing times are listed, that is the time when the last order is taken. If you need to eat at odd hours, food centers ser ve all day and some hawker centers are open all night—see the section "Hawker Centers," later in this chapter.

Eating Enclaves

If you're looking for someplace to dine but want to browse around a bit, a few neighborhoods around Singapore host clust ers of smaller, and man y times quite excellent, restaurants and lounges creating mini-scenes here and there. For example, CHIJMES, a charming colonial orphanage located within the Historic District, provides a home for some excellent restaurants, ranging from Cantonese to Mediterranean. In this chapter, I've reviewed Lei Garden, but if you stroll about, you might be tempted by one of the other eateries here.

Bo at Quay and Clarke Quay, located along the Singapor e River, provide boatloads of options. I've reviewed Our Village at Boat Quay, but this is just one of many.

If you want to get away from the tourist traffic, try Club Street in Chinatown, a short hilly lane lined with restored shophouses that became a chic after-work place for the nearby ad agencies, graphic designers, and law firms that make their offices in this neighborhood. Stroll past the many quaint bistros that serve everything from Italian to Vietnamese, and you're sure to find something.

Holland Village, located outside the city to the northwest, is the center of Singapore's expatriate community, so you'll find restaurants, bars, and cafes that cater to Western residents living around this neighborhood. Start at the row of restaurants along Chip Bee Gardens, and if you still haven't found something (I'd be surprised), then cross Holland Road to Lorong Liput and Lorong Mambong. In this chapter, I've reviewed Original Sin, which is an excellent place to start in this neighborhood.

TIPPING Don't. Restaurants always add a gratuity to the bill. So metimes I just leave the small change, but it's not expected.

RESERVATIONS Some restaurants, especially the mor e fashionable or upscale ones, may require that reservations be made up to a couple of days in adv ance. Reservations are always recommended for Saturday and Sunday lunch and dinner, as eating is a favorite national pastime and a lot of families take meals out for w eekend quality time.

ATTIRE Because Singapore is so hot, "smart casual" (a local term, meaning a shirt and slacks for men and a dr ess or skirt/slacks and blouse for women) is always a safe bet in moderate to expensive restaurants. For the very expensive restaurants, "smart elegant" is required, which in S ingapore means jacket and tie for men and a dr essier outfit for women. For the cheap places, come as you are, as long as you're decent.

ORDERING WINE WITH DINNER Singaporeans have become mor e wine savvy in recent years and have begun importing estate-bottled wines fr om California, A ustralia, New Zealand, Peru, South Africa, France, and Germany. However, these bottles are heavily taxed. A bottle of wine with dinner starts at around S$50 (US$34/£23), and a single glass runs between S$10 (US$6.70/£4.50) and S$25 (US$17/£11), depending on the wine and the restaurant. Chinese restaurants usually don't charge corkage fees for bringing your own.

ORGANIZATION OF RESTAURANT LISTINGS I've organized the restaurants in this chapter in a few different ways. First, I've grouped them in a simple list by style of cuisine, so if you decide you want a nice Peranakan dinner, for instance, you can scope out your choices all together befor e referring to the individual r estaurant reviews. Second, I've arranged the r eviews into four basic neighborhoods: the H istoric District, Chinatown, Little I ndia, and the O rchard Road area. Within these divisions, I' ve arranged them by price. Keep in mind that the divisions by neighborhood are almost as arbitrary as they were when Stamford Raffles created them in 1822. Everything in the city is relatively close and easily accessible, so don't think you should plan your meals by the neighborhood your hotel sits in, when a shor t taxi ride will take y ou where you really want

Also, it has become the tænd if you've got a terrific æstaurant that people love, to open branches in other locations. Some may believe this dilutes the unique appeal of a special restaurant, but in Singapore, generally I find that good æstaurateurs retain the consistent quality of food and service for all their outlets. You'll notice many restaurants in the sections that follow have branches in other parts of the city, which I have also listed.

I've selected the r estaurants listed here because they have some of the best food and most memorable atmospheres, but there are hundreds of other r estaurants serving any kind of food in a v ariety of price ranges. M any magazines on dining in S ingapore are available at newsstands and can help you find other favorite restaurants.

LUNCH COSTS Lunch at a hawker center can be as cheap as $$4.50 (US$3/£2), truly a bargain. M any places have set-price buffet lunches, but these can be as high as $$48 (US$32/£22). Indian restaurants are great deals for inexpensive buffet lunches, which can be found as reasonably as $$10 (US$6.70/£4.50) per person for all you can eat.

DINNER COSTS In this chapter, prices for Western restaurants list the range for standard entrees, and prices for Asian restaurants list the range for small dishes intended for two people to share. As a guideline, here are the relative costs for dinner in each category of restaurant, without wine, beer, cocktails, or coffee, and or dered either a la car te or from a set-price menu:

- Very Expensive ($$$$): Expect to pay as much as S$160 (US$107/£72) per person. Continental and J apanese cuisines will be the priciest, but a full-course Cantonese dinner, especially if y ou throw in shark's fin, can be well over S$150 (US$101/£68) per person.
- Expensive ($$$): E xpect dinner to r un betw een S$50 (US$34/£23) and S$80 (US$54/£36) per person.
- Moderate ($$): At a moderate r estaurant, dinner for one can be as lo was S$25 (US$17/£11) and as high as S$50 (US$34/£23).
- Inexpensive ($): Some inexpensive dinners can be under S$5 (US$3.35/£2.25) at hawker stalls and up to around S$15 (US$10/£6.75) for one if you eat at local restaurants. Fortunately, Singapore is not only a haven for cultural gastronomic diversity, but it's also possible to eat exotic foods here to your heart's content, all while maintaining a shoestring budget.

VERY EXPENSIVE

Inagiku ★★ JAPANESE Inagiku serves Japanese food that riv als some of Tokyo's best r estaurants. The dining r oom is subdued and ar tistic, with r ecessed spotlights designed to illuminate the dish in front of you to maximum effect. It's all very cultured, despite some unfor tunately chosen elev ator music. I nagiku's kitchen is separated into teams, one specializing in sushi and sashimi that 's outstandingly fresh and expertly prepared. The tokusen sashimi moriawase is a stunning assortment of fresh seafood presented in an ice-filled shell. The tempura—firm, fresh seafood and vegetables fried in batter that is incredibly light—is excellent. Lunchtime set menus offer a more affordable way to dine here, and the quality r emains just as high. If sashimi isn't your thing, try the tenderloin and lobster. Separate dishes of succulent beef, followed by meaty shelled lobster smothered in a rich cheese sauce, make it the ultimate surf 'n' turf. In addition to sake, there is a good selection of wines.

Raffles The Plaza, Level 3, 80 Bras Basah Rd . © 65/6431-6156. Reservations recommended. Set lunch S$40–S$120 (US$27–US$80/£18–£54); set dinner S$180–S$220 (US$121–US$147/£81–£99). AE, MC, V. Daily noon–2:30pm and 6:30–10:30pm.

Morton's of Chicago ★★★ CONTINENTAL This is the first Morton's restaurant outside the U.S. and for the uninitiated, to call Morton's a steakhouse seems a disservice to the incredibly high quality of the food on offer. But what steaks they are; to guide you in your choice, the waiter will heav e an enormous platter o ver to your table, laden with sample cuts of American and Australian prime beef. The seafood is equally superb, with large and fresh lobsters, oysters, and shrimp vying for your attention. Even the vegetables are brought by the personable and knowledgeable waitstaff for inspection. Whatever cut you prefer, it will be flavorsome, succulent, and cooked to absolute perfection. I challenge you to leave room for the signature melting chocolate cake.

Raffles Grill ★★★ FRENCH Dining in the grande dame of S ingapore achieves a level of sophistication unmatched by any other five-star restaurant. The architectural charm and historic significance of the old hotel will transform dinner into a cultural event, but don't come here just for the ambience; the food is outstanding as well. Chef Jean-Charles changes the menu every season, but I assure you, anything you order will still be divine. The dégustation menu, seven courses at S$220 (US$147/£99), is the best way to explore their finest dishes if you have trouble choosing from an ala car te menu that features pigeon, lamb, suckling pig, veal, and a car ving trolley of amazing cuts of beef prepared to per fection. The 1,200-label wine list (going back to 1900 vintages) could be a history lesson, and if you'd like, you can request the cellar master to select a 100 wine to match each course. The fabulously attentive service will make you feel like you own the place. Formal dress is required.

Doc Cheng's ★★ ASIAN/FUSION The witty menu her e tells the stor y of D oc Cheng, a mythological colonial figur e who was a sought-after physician, local celebrity, and notorious drunk. His concept of "restorative foods" is, therefore, rather decadent; on the menu you'll find fabulous pan-Asian dishes that ar e more flavorful than medicinal. The menu changes regularly, but you won't go far wrong with perennial favorites like the mouthwatering Sichuan rack of lamb and miso cod with bonito emulsion. wine is a Riesling (sweet wines are more popular with Singaporeans) from Raffles's own vineyard. Two dining areas allow you to dine alfr esco under the veranda or in cool airconditioning inside.

Equinox ★ CONTINENTAL/ASIAN What a view! From the top of the tallest hotel in Southeast Asia, you can see out past the marina to M alaysia and Indonesia—and the restaurant's three-tier design and floor-to-ceiling windo ws mean every table has a vie w. It's decorated in contemporar y style with nice Chinese accents. L unch is an extensiv e display of seafood served in a host of international recipes, with chefs searing scallops to order. Dinner is a la car te, with a menu that 's divided betw een Eastern and Western cuisine, plus some dishes that combine Eastern and Western ingredients and cooking styles such as charred tuna steak with anchovy and chili sauce, coriander chimichurri and sweet potato, and hot smoked chicken on a spicy papaya and green mango salad. Lei Garden ★★ CHINESE/CANTONESE Lei Garden lives up to a gr eat reputation for the highest-quality Cantonese cuisine in one of the most elegant settings, nestled within the unique ambience of CHIJMES just outside its to wering picture windows. Highly recommended dishes ar e the fried shrimp with tangerine peel and black bean sauce, and crispy roasted kurobuta pork. If you reserve 24 hours in advance, try the beggar's chicken, a whole stuffed chicken wrapped and baked in a lotus leaf covered in yam, which makes the chicken moist with a delicate flav or you won't forget. Also try the barbecued Beijing duck, which is exquisite. Dim sum here is excellent. A small selection of French and Chinese wines is available.

IndoChine W aterfront ★★★ VIETNAMESE/L AO/CAMBODIAN/FRENCH IndoChine Waterfront shares the stately Empress Place Building with the Asian Civilisations Museum, enhancing the sophistication of its chic oriental decor The views over the water make for true romance. The menu combines the best dishes from the Indochinese region, many with hints of the French cuisine that was added into regional palates during colonial days. Their two most popular dishes are the house specialty beef stew ragout and the pepper beef with sw eet-and-sour sauce. M ore traditional Vietnamese favorites, like spring rolls and prawns grilled on sugar cane, ar e fresh starters. After dinner, don't miss the Vietnamese coffee; it 's mind-blo wingly delicious. Even the ceiling twinkles with silv er stars, and hanging lanterns provide a subtle glow for the heavenly atmosphere—it's a perfect setting for a delicate dinner. Every dish here is made fresh from hand-selected imported ingredients, some of them coming from secret sources. In fact, the staff is so protective of its recipes, you'd almost think their secret ingredient was opium—and you'll be floating so high after tasting the food that it might as well be. There are vegetarian selections as well as meats (no beef or pork) prepared in luscious gravies or in the tandoor oven. Blue Ginger ★ P ERANAKAN The standar d belief is that P eranakan cooking is reserved for home-cooked meals, and ther efore restaurants are not as plentiful—and where they do exist, are very informal. Not so at B lue Ginger, where traditional and modern mix beautifully in a style fitting for S ingapore. Snuggled in a shophouse, the decor combines clean and neat lines of contemporary styling with paintings by local artists and touches of Peranakan flair like carved wooden screens. The cuisine is Peranakan from traditional recipes, making for some very authentic food—definitely something you can't get back home. A good appetiz er is the kueh pie tee: bite-size "top hats" filled with turnip, egg, and prawn with sweet chili sauce. A wonder ful entree is the ayam panggang "Blue Ginger," really tender grilled, boneless chicken thigh and dr umstick with a mild coconut-milk sauce. One of the most popular dishes is the ayam buah keluak (my favorite), a traditional chicken dish made with a har d black I ndonesian nut with sw eetmeat inside. The favorite dessert here is durian chendol, red beans and pandan jelly in coconut 104 milk with durian purée. Served with shaved ice on top, it smells strong—though they can make a durian-free version for guests who aren't fans of the pungent fruit.

Komala Vilas ★ SOUTHERN INDIAN Komala Vilas is famous with Singaporeans of every race. Muthu's Curry Restaurant SOUTHERN INDIAN Muthu's is a local institution that is synonymous with one local delicacy, fish head curry, a giant fish head floating in a huge portion of delicious curry soup, its eye staring and teeth grinning. The cheek meat is the best part of the fish, but to be truly polite, let your friend eat the eye. The list of accompanying dishes is long and includes crab masala, chicken biryani, and mutton curry, with fish cutlet and fried chicken sold by the piece. We're not talking the height of dining elegance here, but Muthu's really has come a long way since its simple coffee shop opening, with its recent shift to newer, larger digs, with matching tables and chairs and waitstaff taking orders on PDAs! I miss the old grotty ambience, but still it's a good place to try this dish. Go either at the start or toward the end of mealtime so you don't get lost in the rush and can find staff with more time to help you. Drawing on his work at Michelin-starred restaurants El Bulli in Spain and New York's Daniel, the Canadian has created an a la car te menu, from which guests can choose individually or select six dishes for a set price. Thought-provoking creations include foie gras with sav ory caramel, and the E gg Came F irst (a boiled egg served with onion broth, crumbs, and black truffle). The decor is stylish and European, with modern glass sculptuæs by Danny Lane and fiber optics glowing through the glass bar and floor. Try to get a windo w table, since it commands an aw e-inspiring view of Orchard Road from its 24th-floor perch.

Harbour Grill & O yster Bar ★★★ CONTINENTAL Grilled seafood and U.S. prime rib ar e perfectly prepared and ser ved with attentive style in this awar d-winning restaurant. The Continental cuisine is lighter than most, with recipes that focus on the natural freshness of their ingredients rather than on creams and fat. Caesar salad is made at your table so you can request your preferred blend of ingredients, and the oyster bar serves juicy fresh oysters from around the world. For the main course, the prime rib is the best and most-requested entree, but the rack of lamb is another option worth considering—it melts in your mouth. Resident chef Alexandre Lozachmeur's specialty is a meltingly tender lamb shoulder braised with fennel and semolina cake. Guest chefs from

Li Bai ★★★ CHINESE/CANTONESE Chinese restaurants are typically unimaginative in the decor department—slapping up a landscape brush painting or two here and there is sometimes about as far as they go. Not at Li Bai, which is very sleekly decorated in contemporary black and red lacquer, with comfortable black leather seating. Creative chefs and guest chefs turn out a constantly evolving menu, refining specialties, and jadeand-silver chopsticks and white bone china add opulent touches to their flawless meals. Shark's fin soup and abalone creations are a requirement for any self-respecting Cantonese restaurant, and although Li Bai's preparation of these delicacies is tops, I recommend you bypass them—too much hype and expense. Go for the chef's special creations, which are always imaginative. Or try the pan-fried lamb chop with black pepper sauce, or goose liver with honeyed chicken. The crab fried rice is fabulous, with generous chunks of fresh meat. Li Bai's signature XO chili sauce adds delicious spice to almost any dish. The wine list is international, with many vintages.

Grilled meats include various cuts of beef, rack of lamb, and chicken dishes, with a host of delicious sides to choose fr enormous 400-seat restaurant has a warm atmosphere, with glowing wood and contemporary Zen accents, but ser vice can be harried. Chatterbox SINGAPOREAN If you'd like to try the local favorites but don't want to deal with hawker food, then Chatterbox is the place for you. This restaurant is located in the Meritus Mandarin Hotel, and while the hotel is undergoing renovations, Chatterbox has a prime spot on the 39th floor, so get here during 2009 to enjoy the 360° views of the city, before it's relocated back down to the 5th floor. Their Hainanese chicken rice is highly acclaimed, and the other dishes—like nasi lemak, laksa, and carrot cake—are as close to the street as you can get. For a quick and tasty snack, or der tahu goreng, deepfried tofu in peanut chili sauce. This is also a good place to experiment with some of those really weird local drinks. Chin chow is the dark brown grass jelly drink; chendol is green jelly, red beans, palm sugar, and coconut milk; and bandung is pink rose syrup milk with jelly. Patara Fine Thai THAI Patara may say "fine" dining in its name, but the food her e is home cooking: not too haute, not too traditional. Seafood and vegetables are the stars here. Deep-fried garoupa (grouper) is served in a sweet sauce with chili that can be added sparingly upon request. Curries are popular, too. The roast duck curry in red curry paste with seasonal fruits is juicy and hot. F or something really different, Patara's own invention, the Thai taco, isn't exactly traditional, but it is good, filled with chicken, shrimp, and sprouts. Their green curry, one of my fav orites, is perhaps the best in to wn. Their Thai-style iced tea (which isn't on the menu, so y ou'll have to ask for it) is fragrant and flowery. Ah Hoi's Kitchen SINGAPOREAN I like Ah Hoi's for its casual charm and its selection of authentic local cuisine. The menu is extensive, specializing in local favorites like fried black pepper kuay teow (noodles), sambal kang kong (a spinach-like v egetable fried with chili), and fabulous grilled seafood. The alfresco poolside pavilion location giv es it a r eal "vacation in the Tropics" sort of relaxed feel—think of a hawker center without the dingy florescent bulbs, greasy tables, and sludgy floor. Also good her e is the chili crab—if y ou can't make it out to the seafood places on the east coast of the island, it's the best alternative for tasting this local treat. Make sure you order the fresh lime juice. It's very cooling.

The Rice Table ★ MALAY/INDONESIAN/DUTCH Indonesian Dutch rijsttafel, meaning "rice table," is a service of many small dishes (up to almost 20) with rice. Traditionally, each dish would be brought to diners by beautiful ladies in pompous style. Here, busy waitstaff brings all the dishes out and places them in front of you—feast on favorite Indo-Malay wonders like beef rendang, chicken satay, otak otak, and sotong assam (squid) for a very reasonable price. It's an enormous amount of food and everything is terrific. You will pay extra for your drinks and desserts.

Shimbashi Soba Value Kids JAPANESE It's easy to identify S himbashi's specialty from the chef who works behind a glass wall, preparing fresh soba noodles at every stage from the grindstone that mills the wheat into flour to the table where he kneads and rolls the dough before slicing each noodle by hand. Glance at the walls, and you'll see photos of the fields in H okkaido and Tasmania where the buckwheat grew. Whether you slurp them hot in a clear, tasty broth or munch them cold and dipped in sauce, these are the best in town. Reservations aren't accepted, and if you hit the lunchtime or evening rush you might have to wait, but the line moves quickly. The busy wait staff are really friendly and pleasant with kids.

Long B each S eafood Restaur ant SEAFOOD They really pack 'em in at this place. Tables are crammed together in what r esembles a big indoor pavilion, complete with festive lights and the sounds of mighty feasting. This is one of the best places for fresh seafood of all kinds: fish like <code>garoupa</code> (grouper), sea bass, marble goby, and kingfish, and other creatures of the sea, from prawns to crayfish. The chili crab here is good, but the house specialty is r eally the pepper crab, chopped and deliciously smother ed in a thick concoction of black pepper and so y. Huge chunks of crayfish are also tasty in the black pepper sauce and can be served in variations like barbecue, sambal, steamed with garlic, or in a bean sauce. D on't forget to or der buns so y ou can sop up the sauce. You can also get vegetable, chicken, beef, or venison dishes to complement, or choose from their menu selection of local fav orites. Long Beach now has several branches, including at Dempsey Hill, 25 Dempsey Rd. opposite the Botanic G ardens (② 65/6323-2222).

Original Sin ★ MEDITERRANEAN/VEGETARIAN This cozy place is a perennial favorite with Singapore's expatriate population. Located in H olland Village, Singapore's expat enclave, the r estaurant is close to shopping, pubs, and numer ous other dining choices that cater to this international group. This particular restaurant is a favorite, with generous por tions of fav orites like baba ghanouj, tzatziki, and hummus ser ved with olives, feta, and pita bread. And although the menu features standard Mediterranean fare like moussaka and risotto dishes, people always seem to go for the pizzas, which ar e loaded with interesting Middle Eastern toppings. The owners also run two other properties of equal quality and popularity in Chip B ee Gardens, Italian restaurants Michelangelo's, Block 44, Jalan Merah Saga #01–60 (② 65/6475-9069); and Sistina, Block 44, Jalan Merah Saga #01–58 (② 65/6476-7782). All of these r estaurants have a casual bistro-style atmosphere inside and sidewalk dining outside.

Block 43 Jalan Merah Saga, #01–62, Chip Bee G ardens, Holland Village. 6 65/6475-5605. Reservations recommended. Main courses $$22–$$28 (U$$15–U$$19/£9.90–£13). AE, DC, MC, V. Tues–Sun 11:30am–2:30pm and 6–10:30pm; Mon 6–10:30pm.

UDMC Seafood Centre ★★ SEAFOOD Eight seafood restaurants are lined side by side in 2 blocks, their fr onts open to the vie w of the sea outside. UDMC is a fantastic way to eat seafood Singapore style, in the open air, in restaurants that are more like grand stalls than anything else. Eat the famous local chili crab and pepper crab heæ, along with all sorts of squid, fish, and scallop dishes. Noodle dishes are also available, as are vegetable dishes and other meats. But the seafood is the thing to come for. Of the eight restaurants, there's no saying which is the best, as everyone seems to have his own opinions about this one or that one (I like Jumbo at the far eastern end of the row; call € 65/6442-3435 for reservations, which are recommended for weekends). Have a nice stroll along the walkway and gaze out to the water while you decide which one to go for.

INEXPENSIVE

Samy's Curry Restaurant ★ SOUTHERN INDIAN There are many places in Singapore to get good southern I ndian banana leaf, but none quite so unique as S amy's out on Dempsey Road. Samy's is situated in a huge, high-ceilinged, open-air hall, with shutters thrown back and fans whirring above. Wash your hands at the back and have a seat, and soon someone will slap a banana-leaf place mat in front of you. A blob of white rice will be placed in the center, and then buckets of v egetables, chicken, mutton, fish, prawn, and you-name-it will be brought out, swimming in the richest and spiciest curries to ever pass your lips. Take a peek in each bucket, nod y our head yes when you see one you like, and a scoop will be dumped on y our banana leaf. Eat with your right hand or with a for k and spoon. When you're done, wipe the sw eat from your brow, fold the banana leaf away fr om you, and place your tableware on top. Samy's serves no alcohol, but the fresh lime juice is nice and cooling, and lassi, the flav ored yogurt drink, helps to counteract the spiciness.

Block 25 Dempsey Rd., Civil S ervice Club. @ 65/6472-2080. Reservations not ac cepted. Sold by the scoop or piec e, S80¢-S$4 (US55¢-US$2.70/35p -£1.80). V. Daily 11am-3pm and 6-10pm. No alc ohol served.

HAWKER CENTERS

Hawker centers—large groupings of informal open-air food stalls—we ere Singapore's answer to fast and cheap food in the days befor e McDonald's and are still the best way to sample every kind of Singaporean cuisine. The traditional hawker center is an outdoor venue, usually under co ver with fans whirring abo ve, and individual stalls each specializing in different dishes. In between rows of cooking stalls, tables and stools offer open seating for diners.

Each center has an array of food offerings, with most dishes costing between $\$3.50 and S$7 (US$2.35-US$4.70/£1.55-£3.15). You'll find traditional dishes like char kway teow, flat rice noodles fried with seafood; fishball noodle soup, with balls made fr om pounded fish and rice flour; claypot chicken rice, chicken and mushrooms baked with rice and fragrant soy sauce; bak kut teh, pork ribs stewed with Chinese herbs; Hainanese chicken rice, soft chicken o ver rice prepared in rich chicken stock; laksa, seafood and rice noodles in a spicy coconut chili soup; popiah, turnip, egg, pork, prawn, and sweet chili sauce wrapped in a thin skin; rojak, fried dough, tofu, cucumber, pineapple, and whatever the chef has handy, mixed with a sauce made from peanuts and fermented shrimp paste; plus many, many more Chinese, Malay, and Indian specialties. You'll also find hot and cold drink stalls and usually a stall selling fr esh fruits and fruit juices.

If you want to become a r eal Singapore Foodie, buy a copy of Makansutra, by K. F. Seetoh (Makansutra Publishing) at any bookstor e. Seetoh is the local gur u of hawker foods and has sniffed out the tastiest, most authentic local delicacies y ou can imagine.

Within the city limits, most traditional-style hawker centers hav e been closed down, but you can still find a fe w. Singapore's most famous, or notorious, hawker center is Newton Circus Hawker Center, a 24-hour center near the N ewton MRT stop and a tour-bus darling; beware of gouging, especially when or dering seafood dishes, which are sold by the kilo.

For local-style hawker centers, in Chinatown you can find stalls at the Maxwell RoadFood Centre at the corner of M axwell and South Bridge roads, or you can try Lau Pa Sat at the corner of Raffles Way and Boon Tat Street. A new food attraction, a r ow of stalls along S mith Street called Food Alley was conceived by the STB. R umor has it, these guys are having a hard time making a living selling local food to the v ery touristy crowd that passes down this street in the evenings. In the Historic District, try the small center next to Allson Hotel on Victoria Street, or Makansutra, next to the Esplanade—Theatres on the Bay. In Little India, Tekka Market is under construction, but nearby on Race Course Road the hawkers have set up under a temporary structure.

When you eat at a hawker center, the first thing to do is claim a seat at a table. (Local trick: If you put a tissue packet do wn on the table in fr ont of your seat, people will understand it's reserved.) Remember the number on your table so that when you order from each stall, you can let them know where you're seated. They will deliver your food to the table, and you must pay upon delivery. Change will be provided. When you are finished, there's no need to clear your dishes; it will be taken care of for you.

The modern version of the hawker center is the food court. Similar to hawker centers, food courts are air-conditioned spaces inside shopping malls and public buildings. They also have individual stalls offering a variety of foods and tables with free seating. Generally, food courts offer a more "fast-food," less authentic version of local cuisine, but you also get greater variety—many food courts have a stall that sells Western burgers and fish and chips, and stalls with J apanese udon or Korean barbecue. Food courts also differ in that they're self-service. When you approach the stall, you take a tray, pay when you order, then carry the food yourself to a table, similar to cafeteria style. When you finish, you are not expected to clear your tray.

Food courts are everywhere within the city, most of them operated by popular chains like Food Junction, Kopitiam, and Banquet. You'll find them in shopping malls and public buildings, most likely on the top floor or in the basement. Your hotel's concierge will be able to point you to the nearest food court, no problem.

9 CAFE SOCIETY

In Singapore, traditions such as B ritish high tea and the Chinese tea cer emony live side by side with a growing coffee culture. These popular hangouts are all over the city. Here are a few places to try.

BRITISH HIGH TEA

Two fabulous places to take high tea in style ar e at Raffles Bar & Billiard Room at Raffles Hotel, 1 Beach Rd. (© 65/6412-1816), and Equinox at Swissôtel The Stamford, 2 Stamford Rd. (© 65/6431-6156). Both places are lovely, if pricey. The buffet will cost anywhere from $$33 to $$38 (U$$22–U$$25/£15–£17), more at peak seasons. High tea is served in the afternoons from 3 until 5 or 5:30pm.

CHINESE TEA

There are a few places in Chinatown where tea is still as important today as it has always been in Chinese cultur e. The Tea Chapter, 9-11A N eil Rd. (② 65/6226-1175), and Yixing Xuan, 30–32 Tanjong Pagar Rd. (② 65/6224-6961), offer tranquil respites from the day and cultural insight into Chinese tea appreciation.

CAFES

Western-style coffee joints hav e been popping up left and right all o ver the island, so coffee-addicted travelers can r est assured that in the morning their fav orite blends ar e brewing close by—as long as you don't mind spending up to $$7 (US$4.70/£3.15) for a cup of brew. Starbucks, the Coffee Bean & Tea Leaf, the Coffee Club, Spinelli, and many more international chain cafes hav e outlets in just about ev ery shopping mall in the city.

Singapore Attractions

Of Singapor e's many sights and attractions, I enjoy the historical and cultural sights the most. The city's many old buildings and well-presented museum displays bring histor y to life. Chinese and Hindu temples and Muslim mosques welcome curious obser vers to disco ver their culture as they play out their daily activities, and the country's natural parks make the great outdoors easily accessible from even the most urban neighborhood. That's the best benefit of trav eling in Singapore: Most attractions are situated within the heart of the city, and those that lie outside the urban center still can be easily reached.

Singapore also has a multitude of planned attractions for visitors and locals alike. Theme par ks dev oted to cultural heritage, spor ting fun, and even kitschamusement pop up all over the place. In this chapter, I've outlined the many attractions here and provided historical and cultural information to help you appreciate each sight in its local context. To help you plan your activities, I've put stars next to those attractions I've enjoyed the most—either for significance, exellent planning, or just plain curiosity.

I've divided this chapter into the main sections of the urban center—the Historic District, Chinato wn, Little I ndia, Kampong G lam, and O rchard R oad, wher e you'll find the more historical sights of the city—and those outside the city , to the west, nor th, and east, wher e y ou'll find large areas dedicated to natur e reserves, a zoo, other wildlife attractions, theme parks, and sprawling temple complexes, all easily accessible b y public transpor tation or a cab ride. As a kicker , I'll take y ou to Sentosa (a small island to the south with amusements, historical exhibits, natur e displays, and outdoor activities for families) and to some of the smaller outlying islands, and will fill y ou in on spor ts and recreation options.

When y ou're trav eling to attractions outside the urban ar ea, I r ecommend keeping this book handy—taxis ar e not always easy to find, so y ou may need to refer to the guide to call for a pickup or use the bus and MR T system, route numbers for which I' ve included with listings of most noncentral attractions.

A note: Many of the sights to see in Singapore are not of the "pay your fee and see the sho w" variety, but rather historic buildings, monuments, and places of r eligious worship. M onuments and statues tell the stories of events and heroes important to Singapore in both the past and the present. The places of worship listed in this chapter are open to the public and free of entrance charge. E xpect temples to be open fr om sunup to sundo wn. Visiting hours ar e not specific to the hour , but unless it's a holiday (when hours may be extended), you can expect these places to be open during daylight hours.

1 THE HISTORIC DISTRICT

When Sir Stamford Raffles first sailed up the Singapore River, he saw a small fishing and trading village along the banks and a thick o vergrowth of jungle and mangr ove forest creeping up a gentle hill that o verlooked the harbor. Over the y ears to follow, the left bank of the river would become the nerve center for sea trade, and the right bank, at the 115 foot of the hill, would be cleared for the center of go vernment activity.

Raffles's Town Plan of 1822 had special plans for this district, referred to in this book as the Historic District but also called the City Centre. The center point was the Padang, a large field for spor ts and cer emonies. Around the field, go vernment buildings were erected, each reflecting preferred British tastes of the day. European hotels popped up, as well as cultural centers, and the park along the marina became a lively focal point for the European social scene.

The oldest part of the city is Fort Canning Park, the hill where Raffles built his home. Its history predates Raffles, with excavation sites unearthing artifacts and small treasures from earlier trading settlements, and a sacred shrine that's believed to be the final resting place of Iskander Shah, founder of the Sultanate of Melaka.

Armenian Church ★ Of all colonial buildings, the Armenian Chur ch (more formally called the Chur ch of S t. Gregory the I lluminator) is one of the most beautiful examples of early ar chitectural style here. Designed by George Coleman, one of S ingapore's most pr olific and talented ar chitects, it is his finest wor k. Although ther e were many alterations in the last century, the main style of the structure still dominates. The round congregation hall is powerful in its simplicity, its long louvered windows letting in cooling breezes while keeping out the imposing sunlight. Roman Doric columns support symmetrical por ticos that pr otect the str ucture from rain. All in all, it 's a wonder ful achievement of combined European eclectic tastes and tropical necessity.

The first permanent Christian chur ch in S ingapore, it was funded primarily by the Armenian community, which was at one time quite po werful. Today few Singaporeans can trace their heritage back to this influential group of immigrants. The church was consecrated in 1836, and the last appointed priest ser ving the parish r etired in 1936. Although regular Armenian ser vices are no longer held, other religious organizations make use of the church from time to time. The cemetery in the back of the church is the burial site of many prominent Armenians, including Ashgen Agnes Joachim, discoverer of the Vanda Miss Joachim, Singapore's national flower.

60 Hill St., across from the Grand Plaza Park Hotel. (?) 65/6334-0141. Free admission. 15-min. walk from City Hall MRT.

Asian Civilisations Museum ** If you have time for only one museum, this is the one I r ecommend. This fantastic and w ell-executed exhibit of S outheast Asian culture highlights the history of the region and explores the Chinese, South Indian, and Islamic heritage that helped to shape regional cultures here. Well-planned galleries showcase fine arts, furniture, porcelain, jade, and other relics with excellent descriptions.

The Empress Place Building that houses the museum stood as a symbol of B colonial authority as sea trav elers enter ed the S ingapore Riv er. The stately building housed almost the entire government bureaucracy around the year 1905 and was a go vernment office until the 1980s, housing the Registry of Births and Deaths and the Citizenship Registry.

Don't forget to stop at the M useum Shop (© 65/6336-9050) to br owse exquisite ethnic crafts of the region. Also, check out the museum's website to find out more about their free lecture series.

118 Cathedral of the Good Shepherd This cathedral was Singapore's first permanent Catholic church. Built in the 1840s, it unified many elements of a fractur ed parish. In the early days of the colony, the Portuguese Mission thought itself the fount of the Holy Roman Empire's presence on the island, and so the French bishop was reduced to holding services at the home of a Mr. McSwiney on Bras Basah Road, a dissenting Portuguese priest held services at a certain Dr. d'Ameida's residence, and the S panish priest was so reduced that we don't even know where he held his ser vices. These folks were none too pleased with their makeshift houses of worship and so banded together to establish their own cathedral—the Cathedral of the Good Shepherd. Designed in a Latin cross pattern, much of its architecture is reminiscent of St. Martin-in-the-Fields and St. Paul's in Covent Garden. The archbishop's residence, in contrast, is a simple two-story bungalow with enclosed verandas and a portico. Also on the grounds are the residents' quarters and the priests' residence, the latter more ornate in design, with elaborate plaster work.

4 Queen St. (at the corner of Queen St. and Bras Basah Rd.). (2) 65/6337-2036. Free admission. Open to the public during the day. 5-min. walk from City Hall MRT.

CHIJMES (Convent of the Holy Infant Jesus) As you enter this bustling enclave of retail shops, restaurants, and nightspots, it's difficult to imagine this was once a convent which, at its founding in 1854, consisted of a lone, simply constructed bungalow. After decades of buildings and add-ons, this collection of unique y et perfectly blended structures—a school, a priv ate residence, an orphanage, a stunning G othic chapel, and many others—was enclosed within walls, forming peaceful cour tyards and open spaces encompassing an entire city block. Legend has it the small door on the corner of B ras Basah and Victoria streets welcomed hundreds of orphan babies, girl childr en who just appeared on the stoop each morning, either born during inauspicious y ears or to poor families. In late 1983, the convent relocated to the suburbs, and some of the block was leveled to make way for the MRT Headquarters. Thankfully, most of the block survived and the Singapore government, in planning the renovation of this desirable piece of real estate, wisely kept the integrity of the ar chitecture. For an evening out, the atmosphere at CHIJMES is exquisitely romantic.

A note on the name: CHIJMES is pronounced "Chimes"; the "Chij," as noted, stands for Convent of the H oly Infant Jesus, and the "mes" was just added on so they could pronounce it "Chimes."

30 Victoria St. (1) 65/6336-1818. Free admission. 5-min. walk from City Hall MRT.

City Hall (Municipal Building) During the Japanese Occupation, City Hall was a major headquar ters, and it was her e in 1945 that A dm. Lor d Louis M ountbatten accepted the Japanese surrender. In 1951, the Royal Proclamation from King George VI was read here declaring that S ingapore would hencefor th be known as a city. Fourteen years later, Prime Minister Lee Kuan Yew announced to its citizens that Singapore would henceforth be called an independent republic.

City Hall, along with the Supreme Court, was judiciously sited to take full advantage of its prime location. M agnificent Corinthian columns mar ch across the front of the symmetrically designed building, while inside, two courtyards lend an ambience of informality to otherwise officious surroundings. For all its magnificence and historical fame, however, its ar chitect, F. D. M eadows, relied too heavily on E uropean influence. The many windows afford no protection from the sun, and the entrance leav es pedestrians unsheltered from the elements. I n defining the v ery nobility of the S ingapore government, it appears the Singaporean climate wasn't taken into consideration.

From 2013, City Hall and the Supreme Court are slated to become the new National Art Gallery, giving much-needed space to display the nation 's collection of S outheast Asian art and providing a platform for major international exhibitions. Fort Canning Park These days, F ort Canning P ark is kno wn for gr eat views over Singapore, but in days past it ser ved as the site of Raffles 's home and the island 's first botanic garden. Its history goes back ev en farther, though: Excavations have unearthed ancient brick foundations and artifacts that give credence to the island natives' belief that 120 their royal ancestors lived and were buried on the site. A top the hill, a mysterious keramat, or sacred grave, marks what is believed to be the burial site of I skander Shah (also known as Parameswara), the Palembang ruler who came to S ingapore in the late 1300s before settling in Melaka.

From the start, Raffles chose this hill to build his home (at the site of the pr esent-day lookout point), which later became a residence for Singapore's diplomats and governors. In 1860, the house was torn do wn to make way for F ort Canning, which was built to quell British fears of invasion but instead quickly became the laughingstock of the island. The location was ideal for spotting invaders from the sea, but defending Singapore? Not likely. The cannons' range was such that their shells couldn't possibly have made it all the way out to an attacking ship—instead, most of the to wn belo w would hav e been destroyed. In 1907, the fort was demolished for a reservoir. Today the only reminders of the old fort are some of the walls and the F ort Gate, a deep stone structure. Behind its huge wooden door you'll find a narrow staircase that leads to the roof.

Raffles also chose this as the location for the first botanic gar den on the island, with ambitious plans to develop commercial crops, particularly spices. The garden was shortlived due to lack of funding; ho wever, the park still has a pr etty interesting selection of plants and trees, like the cannonball tree with its large round seed pods, and the cotton tree, whose pods open to reveal fluffy white "cotton" that was commonly used for stuffing pillows and mattresses. In many parts, these plants are well marked along the pathways. Also look for the ASEAN sculpture garden; five members of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations each donated a work for the park in 1982 to represent the region's unity.

Fort Canning was also the site of a European cemetery. To make improvements in the park, the graves were exhumed and the stones placed within the walls surr ounding the outdoor performance field that slopes from the Music and Drama Society building. A large Gothic monument was erected in memory of James Napier Brooke, infant son of William Napier, Singapore's first law agent, and his wife, M aria Frances, the wido w of prolific ar chitect G eorge Coleman. Although no r ecords exist, Coleman pr obably designed the cupolas as well as two small monuments over unknown graves. The Music and Drama Society building itself was built in 1938. Close by, in the wall, are the tombstones of Coleman and of Jose D'Almeida, a wealthy Portuguese merchant.

Inside the park, the Battle Box is an old World War II bunker that displays in wax dioramas and a multimedia show the surrender of Singapore. It's open daily from 10am 0510.

Kuan Yin Thong Hood Cho Temple It's said that whatever you wish for within the walls of Kuan Yin Temple comes true, so get in line and hav e your wish ready. It must work, as there's a steady stream of people on auspicious days of the Chinese calendar The procedure is simple (watch others to catch on): Wear shoes easily slipped off before entering the temple and join the queue. When it is your turn, light sev eral joss sticks, bo w with them, and make a wish before placing them in the urn provided. Pick up the cylindrical container filled with wooden sticks and shake it until one stick falls out—each stick has a number. Give this number to the interpretation office and they will hand you a piece of paper with verses in Mandarin and English. This will tell you your general fortune, plus a clue as to whether your wish will come true. (For a small fee, interpreters outside can help with the translation.) N ow for the payback: I f your wish comes true, you're supposed to return to the temple and offer frequits and flowers to say thanks (oranges, pears, and apples ar e a thoughtful choice, and jasmine petals ar e especially nice). So be careful what you wish for. After you're back home and that job pr omotion comes through, your new manager might nix a trip back to S ingapore so you can bring fruits to this little temple! To be on the safe side, bring the goods with yo u when you make your wish.

National Museum of Singapor e *** The once-little histor y museum, the former Singapore History Museum, has recently undergone a massive renovation. This beautiful 120-year-old building has not only been r estored, but has been expanded to more than twice its original siz e by adding a striking modernist wing to the r ear of the building. Cleverly, the new wing is invisible from the front. An ingenious glass-ceilinged walkway connects the old and new wings and provides a perfect point to view the magnificent Victorian dome with its stained-glass panels and zinc fishtail tiles. History Gallery, based in the new wing, tells the story of Singapore from two points of view: from a historian's perspective and from the "man on the street," accompanied by state-of-the-art multimedia exhibits designed to bring histor y to life and make it accessible for all visitors. You decide which stor y you'd like to hear, then choose the corr esponding audio headset that will guide y ou thr ough the exhibit. The four Living Galleries are on the second floor of the old wing and show objects and elements of everyday Singaporean life: food, fashion, film, and photography . The Old Parliament House is probably Singapore's oldest Old Parliament House surviving structure, even though it has been renovated so many times it no longer looks the way it was originally constructed. It was designed as a home for John Argyle Maxwell, 122 a Scottish merchant, but he never moved in. In 1822, Raffles returned to Singapore and was furious to find a residence being built on ground he'd allocated for government use. So the go vernment took over Maxwell's house for its cour t and other offices. In 1939, when the new Supreme Court was completed, the judiciary moved into Maxwell's House (as it became officially kno wn); then, in 1953, following a major r enovation, the small structure was renamed Parliament House and was turned over to the legislature.

The original house was designed by architect George D. Coleman, who had helped Raffles with his Town Plan of 1822. Coleman's design was in the English neo-Palladian style. Simple and well suited to the Tropics, this style was popular at the time with Calcutta mer chants. M ajor alterations hav e left v ery little behind of Coleman 's design, replacing it with an eclectic French classical style, but some of his work survives.

Today the building has been transformed once again—The Ar ts House at the Old Parliament has been lovingly restored, with spaces for visual and per formance arts, plus special cultural events. A small gallery retells the story of the building. A couple of highbrow eateries offer a variety of Thai, Vietnamese, and Western cuisine. Singapore's parliament now operates out of the new Parliament Building just next door.

The bronze elephant in front of the Old Parliament House was a gift to Singapore in 1872 fr om H is M ajesty S omdeth P hra P araminda M aha Chulalongkorn (Rama V), supreme king of Siam, as a token of gratitude following his stay the previous year.

The Padang This large field has witnessed its share of historical events. Bordered on one end b y the S ingapore R ecreation Club and on the other end b y the S ingapore Cricket Club, and flanked by City Hall, the area was once known as Raffles Plain. Upon Raffles's return to the island in 1822, he was angry that resident Farquhar had allowed merchants to move private residences into the prime area he had originally intended for government buildings. All building permits were rescinded, and the Padang became the official center point for the government quarters, around which the Esplanade and City Hall were built.

Today the Padang is mainly used for public and sporting events—pleasant activities but in the 1940s, it felt mor e forlorn footsteps when the inv ading Japanese forced the entire E uropean community onto the field. There they waited while the occupation officers dickered over a suitable location for the "conquered." They ordered all British, Australian, and Allied troops, as well as European prisoners, on the 22km (14-mile) march to Changi.

An interesting side note: Frank Ward, designer of the Supreme Court, had big plans for the Padang and surrounding buildings. He would have demolished the Cricket Club, Parliament House, and Victoria Hall & Theatre to erect an enormous government block if World War II hadn't arrived, ruining his chances.

Peranakan Museum This small branch of the Asian Civilisations M above) illuminates the fascinating cultur e of the P eranakans, people born of intermarriages between Chinese immigrants and locally born M alays. The result is a rich and fascinating blend of traditions, cuisine, and decorativ e influences. Look out for the incredibly beautiful car ved teak wedding furniture and the distinctive porcelain decorated in typical Peranakan colors of pink, blue, gr een, and yellow. The clothing is vivid yet delicate, featuring intricate embroidery and beading. It's a great insight into a culture 123 that appeared and flourished for a brief period of time in a tiny par t of the world. The collection is nicely laid out in a lo vely building that was the former Tao Nan School, which dates from 1910.

Raffles Hotel  $\star\star$  Built in 1887 to accommodate the incr easing upper-class trade, Raffles Hotel was originally only a couple of bungalows with 10 rooms, but, oh, the view of the sea was per fection. The owners, Armenian brothers named Sarkies, already had a couple of prosperous hotels in Southeast Asia (the Eastern & Oriental in Penang and the Strand in Rangoon) and were well versed in the business. It wasn't long before they added a pair of wings and completed the main building—and reading rooms, verandas, dining rooms, a grand lobby, the Bar and Billiards Room, a ballroom, and a string of shops. By 1899, electricity was turning the cooling fans and pr oviding the pleasing glo w of comfort.

As it made its madcap dash through the 1920s, the hotel was the place to see and be seen. Vacancies were unheard of. Hungry Singaporeans and guests fr om other hotels, eager for a glimpse of the fabulous dining room, were turned away for lack of reservations. The crowded ballroom was jumping ev ery night of the w eek. During this time Raffles's guest book included famous authors like Somerset Maugham, Rudyard Kipling, Joseph Conrad, and N oël Coward. These were indeed the glor y years, but the lo vely glimmer from the chandeliers soon faded with the stark arrival of the Great Depression. Raffles managed to limp through that dark time—and, darker still, through the Japanese Occupation—and later pull back from the brink of bankr uptcy to undergo modernization in the '50s. But fresher, brighter, more opulent hotels were taking root on Orchard Road, pushing the "grand old lady" to the back seat.

In the 1990s, Raffles was brought back to its former glory, restored and sensitively expanded over the course of a 3-year, multimillion-dollar project. History-minded renovators selected 1915 as a benchmar k and, with a fe w changes here and there, faithfully restored the hotel to that era 's magnificence and splendor. Today the hotel's restaurants and nightlife draw thousands of visitors daily to its open lobby, its theater playhouse, the Raffles Hotel Museum, and exclusive boutiques. Its 15 restaurants and bars—especially the Tiffin Room, Raffles Grill, and Doc Cheng's—are a wonder, as is its famous Bar and Billiards Room and Long Bar. If you're arriving by taxi, ask the driver to take you to the front door of the hotel, where you'll be met by Raffles's fabulous sikh doormen.

St. Andrew's Cathedral Designed by George Coleman; erected on a site selected by Sir Stamford Raffles himself; named for the patr on saint of Scotland, S t. Andrew; and primarily funded by Singapore's Scottish community, the first St. Andrew's was the colonials' Anglican Church. Completed toward the end of the 1830s, its tower and spire were 124 added several years later to accord the edifice more stature. By 1852, because of massive damage sustained fr om lightning strikes, the cathedral was deemed unsafe and torn down. The cathedral that no w stands on the site was completed in 1860. O f English Gothic Revival design, the cathedral is one of the fe w standing churches of this style in the region. The spire resembles the steeple of Salisbury Cathedral—another tribute from the colonials to M other England. Not only English residents, but Christian Chinese, Indians, Continental E uropeans, and M alays consider this to be their center of wor-

The plaster work of St. Andrew's inside walls used a material called M adras chunam, which, though peculiar, was a common building material here in the 1880s. A combination of shell lime (without the sand) was mix ed with egg whites and coarse sugar or jaggery until it took on the consistency of a stiff paste. The mixture was thinned to a workable consistency with water in which coconut husks had steeped and was then applied to the surface, allowed to dry, and polished with rock crystal or smooth stones to a most lustrous patina. Who would've thought?

The original church bell was presented to the cathedral by Maria Revere Balestier, the daughter of famed American patriot P aul R evere. The bell is no w on display in the National Museum of Singapore.

Singapore Art Museum ★ The Singapore Art Museum (SAM) opened in 1996 to house an impressive collection of o ver 6,500 pieces of ar t and sculpture, most of it by Singaporean and Malay artists. Limited space requires the curators to display only a small number at a time, but these are incorporated in interesting exhibits to illustrate particular artistic styles, social themes, or historical concepts. A large collection of S Asian pieces rotates regularly, as well as visiting international exhibits. B esides the main halls, the museum offers up a gift shop with fine souv enir ideas, a cafe, a conser vation laboratory, an auditorium, and the E-mage G allery, where multimedia presentations include not only the museum's own acquisitions, but other works from public and private collections in the region as well. A new wing, 8Q, in neighboring Queen Street, opened in 2008 to highlight the work of living Asian ar tists and experimental art forms. It also contains a Children's Gallery with a hands-on appr oach. Once a Catholic bo ys' school established in 1852, SAM has r etained some visible r eminders of its former occupants: Above the front door of the main building, you can still see inscribed "St. Joseph's Institution," and a br onze-toned, cast-ir on statue of S t. Singapore Flyer ★★★ The new must-have accessory for the world 's most ambitious cities is a giant observation wheel, and Singapore's just built itself the worlds largest, standing proudly at M arina Bay. But in a typically S ingaporean cultural twist, just 6 months after the multimillion-dollar wheel started to revolve in 2008, it was stopped and yet more millions spent on r eversing the turning dir ection. Why? B ecause feng shui masters observed that the F lyer was turning away fr om the financial center and taking Singapore's riches with it. The U-turn was a good move; the geomancers are happy and passengers now get to appreciate views that stretch up to 45km (28 miles) to M alaysia and Indonesia before enjoying breathtaking views of the city skyline and the harbor on the way back down—definitely the highlight of the trip. If you need a reminder of Singapore's enduring importance as a trading center, just try to count the number of giant container ships waiting off the east coast to berth at the docks. It takes about 30 minutes to complete the circle, and the glass cabins are large enough to stroll around in while the world moves leisurely past.

Supreme Court The Supreme Court stands on the site of the old Hotel de L'Europe, a rival of Raffles Hotel until it went bankrupt in the 1930s. The court's structure, a classical style favored for official buildings the world o ver, was completed in 1939. With its spare adornment and ar chitectural simplicity, the edifice has a no-nonsense, utilitarian attitude, and the sculptur es across the front, executed by the I talian sculptor Cavaliere Rodolpho Nolli, echo what transpires within. Justice is the most breathtaking, standing 2.7m (8.9 ft.) high and weighing almost 4 tons. Kneeling on either side of her are representations of Supplication and Thankfulness. To the far left are Deceit and Violence. To the far right, a bull represents Prosperity, and two children hold wheat, to depict A bundance.

Two and a half million bricks were used in building this structure, but take a moment to note the stonework: It's fake! Really a gypsum type of plaster, it was applied by Chinese plasterers who molded it to give the appearance of granite. A dome, a copy of the one at St. Paul's Cathedral in London, covers an interior courtyard, which is surrounded by the four major portions of the Supreme Court building.

There is currently no public access to the O ld Supreme Court building, but visitors are permitted to attend cour t hearings, which are held in the modern cour t building, provided appropriate dress and etiquette codes are observed.

Victoria Theatre and Concert Hall Designed by colonial engineer John Bennett in a Victorian Revival style that was fashionable in Britain at the time, the theater portion was built in 1862 as the Town Hall. Victoria Memorial Hall was built in 1905 as a memorial to Q ueen Victoria, retaining the same style of the old building. tower was added a year later. In 1909, with its name changed to Victoria Theatre, the hall opened with an amateur pr oduction of the Pirates of Penzance. Another notable performance occurred when Noël Coward passed through Singapore and stepped in at the last moment to help out a traveling English theatrical company that had lost a leading man. The building looks much the same as it did then, though of course the interiors hav been moderniz ed. It was completely renovated in 1979, conser ving all the original details, and was r enamed Victoria Concert Hall. #### ALONG THE RIVER

The Singapore River had always been the hear t of life in S ingapore even before Raffles landed, but for many y ears during the 20th centur y, life here was dead—quite literally. Rapid urban dev elopment that began in the 1950s turned the riv er into a giant se wer, killing all plant and animal life in it. In the mid-1980s, though, the government began a large and very successful cleanup project; shortly thereafter, the buildings at Boat Q uav and Clarke Quay, and later Robertson Quay, were restored. A display on the second floor of the Asian Civilisation Museum relates the story of the river and its cleanup. Now the areas on both banks of the river offer entertainment, food, and pubs day and night, and the river bank is dotted with life-size bronze sculptures of the "people of the river."

Boat Quay * Known as "the belly of the carp" by the local Chinese because of its shape, this area was once notorious for its opium dens and coolie shops. Nowadays, thriving restaurants boast every cuisine imaginable and the tocking nightlife offers up a variety of sounds—jazz, r ock, blues, I ndian, and Caribe—that ar e lively enough to get any couch potato tapping his feet. See chapters 6 and 9 for dining and nightlife suggestions. Note: Pronounce quay like key.

Clarke Quay The largest of the water front developments, Clarke Quay was named for the second governor of Singapore, Sir Andrew Clarke. In the 1880s, a pineapple cannery, ir on foundry, and numer ous war ehouses made this ar ea bustle. Today, with 60 restored warehouses hosting restaurants, bars, and nightclubs, the Quay still hops. River House, formerly the home of a towkay (company president), occupies the oldest building, a beautiful building that's become a popular bar and restaurant run by the Indochine group. During the day, children love to play in the water jets that shoot up from the floor in Clarke Quay's central hub, but when the fountains ar e switched off, the area is used for special events and occasional markets.

Esplanade Park Esplanade Park and Queen Elizabeth Walk, two of the most famous parks in S ingapore, were established in 1943 on land r eclaimed from the sea. S everal memorials are located here. The first is a fountain built in 1857 to honor Tan Kim Seng, who gave a great sum of money to ward the building of a water works. Another monument, the Cenotaph, commemorates the 124 Singaporeans who died in World War I; it was dedicated by the Prince of Wales. On the reverse side, the names of those who died in World War II have been inscribed. The third prominent memorial is dedicated to Maj. Gen. Lim Bo Seng, a member of the Singaporean underground resistance in World War II who was captured and killed by the Japanese. His memorial was unveiled in 1954 on the 10th anniversary of his death. At the far end of the park, the Esplanade-Theatres on the Bay opened in October 2002. Fashioned after the Sydney Opera House, the unique double-domed structure is kno wn locally as the D urians, because their spiky domes resemble halves of durian shells (the building itself is actually smooth—the "spikes" are sun shields).

Sri Thandayuthapani Temple One of the richest and grandest of its kind in Southeast Asia, the Sri Thandayuthapani Temple is most famous for a thoonganai maadam, a statue of an elephant's backside in a seated position. It's said that there are only four others of the kind, located in four temples in I ndia.

The original temple was completed in 1860, r estored in 1962, and practically rebuilt in 1984. The many sculptur es of H indu deities and the car ved Kamalam-patterned rosewood doors, ar ches, and columns we re executed by ar chitect-sculptors imported from Madras, India, specifically for the job. The Hindu child god, Lord Muruga, rules over the temple and is visible in one form or another wherever you look. Also notice the statues of the god S hiva and his wife, Kali, captur ed in their liv ely dance competition. The story goes that Kali was winning the competition, so S hiva lifted his leg abo ve his head, something a woman wasn't thought capable of doing. He won and quit dancinggood thing, too, because every time Shiva did a little jig, he destroyed part of the world. 128 Outside in the cour tyard are statues of the wedding of Lor d Muruga; his brother, Ganesh; another brother, Vishnu; and their father, Shiva; along with Brahma, the creator of all.

Used daily for worship, the temple is also the culmination point of celebration of thanks (see chapter 3). You may also hear this temple called Chettiar 's Hindu Temple or the Tank Road Temple.

CHINATOWN & TANJONG PAGAR

When the first Chinese junk landed in S ingapore sometime around 1821, the sailors aboard rushed to the shore and prayed to Ma Cho Po, the Goddess of Heavenly Sages, for bringing them safely to their destination. Small shrines were built on the shore, which became the first stops for all Chinese sailors as they landed—many of these shrines still exist today.

The Chinese and other mer chants set up war ehouses along the w estern bank of the Singapore River, and business offices, r esidences, clan associations, and coolie houses filled the ar ea behind Boat Q uay. In 1822, when Raffles dev eloped his Town Plan, he reserved this area for the Chinese to live.

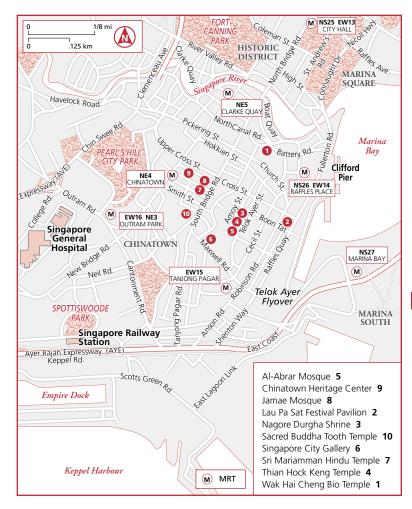

As you tour Chinato wn, you may be surprised to see a H indu Temple and ev en a couple of Indian mosques. Although the area was predominantly Chinese, many Hindus and Muslims settled here, drawn by commerce.

For a long time, Chinatown remained basically as it always had, but the past 15 years have seen major changes by the Urban Redevelopment Authority, with schemes to renovate and pr eserve historic buildings and to clean up the str eets. Unfortunately after shophouses were lovingly restored, the old calligraphers, cobblers, kite-makers, for tunetellers, and other craftspeople who 'd inhabited them could no longer affor d the r ents. Sadly, many of these beautiful streets are now lined with souvenir shops.

Al-Abrar Mosque This mosque, also called M asjid Chulia after the Chulias, the group of Indian moneylender immigrants who funded its construction (masjid is Malay for mosque), was originally erected as a thatched building in 1827, thus its Tamil name Kuchu Palli, which means "hut mosque." The building that stands today was built in the 1850s, and ev en though it faces M ecca, the complex conforms with the grid of the neighborhood's city streets. It was designated a national monument in 1974, and in the late 1980s, the mosque under went major r enovations that enlarged the mihrab and stripped away some of the ornamental qualities of the columns in the building. The onestory prayer hall was extended up ward into a two-stor y gallery. Little touches like the timber window panels and fanlight windows have been carried over into the new renova-reminded me of the museum on Ellis Island in New York City that walks visitors through the immigrant experience of the early 1900s. Like E llis I sland, this display also has detailed descriptions to explain each element of the immigrant experience. The tiny cubicles where large families and groups scratched out a meager existence are an affecting picture of the hardships they faced.

Jamae Mosque Jamae Mosque was built by the Chulias, Tamil Muslims who were some of the earlier immigrants to S ingapore and who had a v ery influential hold o ver 130 Indian Muslim life center ed in the Chinato wn ar ea. The Chulias built not only this mosque, but the Al-Abrar Mosque and the Nagore Durgha Shrine as well. Jamae Mosque dates from 1827 but wasn't completed until the early 1830s. The mosque stands today almost exactly as it did then.

Although the front gate is typical of mosques you'd see in southern India, inside, most of the buildings reflect the neoclassical style of architecture introduced in administrative buildings and homes designed by George Coleman and favored by the Europeans. There are also some Malay touches in the timber work. A small shrine inside, which may be the oldest part of the mosque, was er ected to memorialize a local r eligious leader, Muhammad Salih Valinva.

Lau Pa Sat Festival Pavilion Though it used to be well beloved, the locals think this place has become quite touristy—though lunchtime finds it still packed with financial district workers. Once the happy little hawker center kno wn as Telok Ayer Market, it began life as a wet market, selling fruits, vegetables, and other foodstuffs. Now it's part hawker center, part Western fast-food outlets.

It all began on M arket Street in 1823, in a str ucture that was later torn do wn, redesigned, and rebuilt by G. D. Coleman. Close to the water, seafood could be unloaded fresh off the pier. After the land in Telok Ayer Basin was reclaimed in 1879, the market was moved to its pr esent home. A ne w design by James MacRitchie kept the original octagonal shape and was constructed of 3,000 prefab cast-iron elements brought in from Europe.

In the 1970s, as the financial district began to develop, the pavilion was dominated by hawkers who fed the lunchtime business crowd. In the mid-1980s, the structure was torn down to make way for the MRT construction and then meticulously put back together, puzzle piece by puzzle piece. By 1989, the market was once again an urban landmark, but it sat vacant until Scotts Holdings successfully tendered to convert it into a festival market. At this time, numerous changes were made to the building, which was renamed Lau Pa Sat (Old Market) in acknowledgment of the name by which the market had been known by generations of Singaporeans. Lau Pa Sat is one of the few hawker centers that's open 24 hours, in case you need a coffee or snack before retiring.

Nagore Durgha Shrine Although this is a M uslim place of worship, it is not a mosque, but a shrine, built to commemorate a visit to the island by a Muslim holy man of the Chulia people (M uslim mer chants and moneylenders fr om India's Coromandel Coast) who was traveling around Southeast Asia spreading the word of Indian Islam. The most interesting visual feature is its facade: Two arched windows flank an arched doorway, with columns in between. Above these is a "miniature palace"—a massive replica of the facade of a palace, with tiny cutout windo ws and a small ar ched door way in the middle. The cutouts in white plaster make it look like lace. F rom the corners of the facade, two 14-lev el minar ets rise, with thr ee little domed cutouts on each lev el and onion domes on top. Inside, the prayer halls and two shrines are painted and decorated in shockingly tacky colors.

Controversy surrounds the dates that the shrine was built. The government, upon naming the Nagore Durgha a national monument, claimed it was built sometime in the 1820s; ho wever, N agoreallauddeen, who is the 15th descendant of the holy man for whom the shrine is named, claims it was built many y ears before. According to Nagoreallauddeen, the shrine was first built out of wood and attap (a thatch roof made from a type of palm), and later, in 1815, was r ebuilt from limestone, 4 y ears before the arrival of Sir Stamford Raffles. In 1818, rebuilding materials were imported from India to construct the present shrine. Note: The shrine has been closed for r enovation but is due to reopen in summer 2009.

Sacred Buddha Tooth Temple ** Allow at least an hour and a half to appreciate this huge temple, which was founded in 2002. B uilt in the Tang Dynasty style, this is actually a Chinese cultural center , encompassing, among other things, a temple, a museum and r eference library, a theater, a dining hall providing free meals, and, of course, the magnificent reliquary that gives the temple its name. The best place to star t is in the huge 100 D ragons Hall on the first floor, where services dedicated to the Maitreya B uddha take place, with a fur ther hall behind celebrating the A Bodhisattva. I'd then take the elevator (lined with gold-embroidered fabric) to the third story, where a nicely laid-out museum examines the life of the B uddha and explains the role of the futur e Maitreya Buddha and the Bodhisatty a Avalokitesvara, the representation of Kindness and Compassion. The sacred tooth itself is on the fourth floor, encased in a magnificent golden stupa, which itself sits on a (presumably reinforced) floor of pure gold tiles. The stupa depicts the 35 B uddhas who have achieved enlightenment and nirvana, surrounding the serene figure of the Maitreya Buddha who is guar ded by four lions. The stupa is unveiled from 9am to noon and 3 to 6pm daily. A staircase leads to the lovely roof garden (there is a stairlift, if required) where the world's largest enameled prayer wheel turns slowly in the Ten Thousand Buddhas Pavilion. Still not enough Buddhas for you? There are another 12,000 in the galleries outside the pavilion. These are dedicated to the Buddha of Longevity. For S$68 (US$46/£31) a y ear, you can light up one of these tiny figures and help to negate all the bad karma created since the beginning of time. Or you could spend S$2 (US$1.35/90p) to sponsor a v ery tangible vegetarian meal, distributed from the basement dining hall.

Sri Mariamman Hindu Temple As the oldest H indu temple in S ingapore, S ri Mariamman has been the central point of Hindu tradition and culture. In its early years, the temple housed new immigrants while they established themselves and also served as social center for the community. Today the main celebration here is the Thimithi Festival in O ctober or N ovember (see chapter 3). The shrine is dedicated to the goddess S ri Mariamman, who is known for curing disease (a very important goddess to have around in those days), but as is the case at all other Hindu temples, the entire pantheon of Hindu 132 gods are present to be worshipped as well. On either side of the gopuram are statues of Shiva and Vishnu, while inside are two smaller shrines to Vinayagar and Sri Ararvan. Also note the sacred cows that lounge along the top of the temple walls.

The temple originated as a small wood-and-thatch shrine founded by Naraina Pillai, an Indian merchant who came to Singapore with Raffles's first expedition and found his fortune in trade. I n the main hall of the temple is the small god that P placed here.

Thian Hock K eng Temple ★★★ Thian Hock K eng, the "Temple of H eavenly Bliss," is one of the oldest Chinese temples in Singapore. Before land reclamation, when the shoreline came right up to Telok Ayer Road, the first Chinese sailors landed here and immediately built a shrine, a small wood-and-thatch structure, to pray to the goddess Ma Cho Po for allowing their voyage to be safely completed. F or each subsequent boatload of Chinese sailors, the shrine was always the first stop upon landing. M a Cho Po, the Mother of the Heavenly Sages, was the patron goddess of sailors, and every Chinese junk of the day had an altar dedicated to her.

The temple that stands today was built in 1841 o ver the shrine with funds fr om the Hokkien community, led by the efforts of two M elaka-born philanthropists, Tan Tock Seng and Tan Kim Seng. All of the building materials were imported from China, except for the gates, which came from Glasgow, Scotland, and the tiles on the facade, which are from Holland. The door way is flanked by two lions, a male with a ball to symboliz e strength and a female with a lion cub to symboliz e fertility. On the door are door gods, mythical beasts made from the combined body parts of many animals. Note the wooden bar that sits at the foot of the temple entrance (as do similar bars in so many Chinese temples). This serves a couple of purposes: F irst, it keeps out wandering ghosts, who cannot cross over the barrier. Second, it forces anyone entering the temple to look down as they cross, bowing their head in humility. Just inside the door are granite tablets that record the temple's history.

Ahead at the main altar is Ma Cho Po, and on either side are statues of the Protector of Life and the G od of War. To the side of the main hall is a G ambler Brother statue, prayed to for luck and riches. From here you can see the temple's construction of brackets and beams, fitting snugly together and car ved with war her oes, saints, flo wers, and animals, all in red and black lacquer and gilded in gold. Behind the main hall is an altar to Kuan Yin, the Goddess of Mercy. Beside her are the sun and moon gods.

To the left of the cour tyard are the ancestral tablets. In keeping with Confucian filial piety, each represents a soul. The tablets with red paper are for souls still alive. Also in the temple complex are a pagoda and a number of outer buildings that at one time housed a school and community associations. The right wing of the temple is shar ed with The Faculty, a center for cr eative arts, holding classes for dance, acting, and v ocals. Even if you don't have a burning desire to learn to tango, the elaborate pagoda is an incredible spot for a cool drink, tucked away behind the ornate temple gate.

Wak Hai Cheng Bio Temple ** One of the oldest Taoist temples in Singapore, this is also known as Yueh Hai Ching Temple. Like most of Singapore's Chinese temples, Wak Hai Cheng Bio had its start as a simple wood-and-thatch shrine where sailors, when they got off their ships, would go to expr ess their gratitude for sailing safely to their destination. Before the major land-r eclamation projects shifted the shor eline outward, 133 the temple was close to the water's edge, and so it was named "Temple of the Calm Sea Built by the Guangzhou People." It's a Teochew temple, located in a part of Chinatown originally populated by this dialect group.

Inside the Taoist temple walls are two blocks, the one on the left dev oted to Ma Cho Po, the Mother of Heavenly Sages, who protects travelers and ensures a safe journey. The one on the right is devoted to Siong Tek Kong, the god of business. Both are as important to the Chinese community today as they were way back when. Look for the statue of the Gambler Brother, with coins around his neck. The Chinese pray to him for wealth and luck; in olden days, they would put opium on his lips. This custom is still practiced today, only now they use a black herbal paste called koyo, which is conveniently legal.

Inside the temple, y ou can buy joss sticks and paper for S$2.50 (US$1.65/£1.10). Three joss sticks are for heaven, your parents, and yourself, to be burned before the altar. Three corr esponding packets of elaborately decorated paper and gold leaf ar burned outside in the gourd-shaped kilns (gourd being a symbol of health). The joss or "wishing paper," four thin sheets stamped with black and red characters, has many meanings. The red sheet is for luck (red being particularly auspicious), and the other three are to wash away your sins, for a long life, and for your wishes to be carried to heaven. Even if you are not Taoist, you're more than welcome to burn the joss.

The temple itself is quite a visual tr eat, with ceramic figurines and pagodas adorning the roof, and every nook and cranny of the structure adorned with tiny three-dimensional reliefs that depict scenes from Chinese operas. The spiral joss hanging in the courtyard adds an additional picturesque effect.

LITTLE INDIA

Little India did not dev elop as a community planned by the colonial authorities like Kampong Glam or Chinatown, but came into being because immigrants to I ndia were drawn to business dev elopments here. In the late 1920s, the go vernment established a brick kiln and lime pits her e that attracted I ndian workers, and the abundance of grass and water made the area attractive to Indian cattle traders.

A word of advice: If you visit Little India on a Sunday, be prepared for a mob scene the likes of Calcutta! Sunday is the only day off for Singapore's many immigrant Indian and Bangladeshi laborers, so Serangoon Road gets a little crazy.

Abdul Gafoor Mosque This charming little mosque is resplendent, thanks to a loving restoration completed in 2008. Nestled behind a row of shophouses, you really can't see it until y ou arrive at the gate. I nside the compound, the bright y ellow and green facade and minar ets r eflect an I ndian M uslim ar chitectural pr eference, most likely imported with the mosque's builder Sheik Abdul Gafoor. The original mosque on this site, called Al-Abrar Mosque, was constructed of wood in 1859 and is commemorated on a granite plaque within the compound above what could have been either an entrance gate or part of the mosque itself. The newer mosque on the site was built in 1907 and includes some unusual features, including ornate E uropean-style columns and the sunburst above the main entrance. This "sundial" has 25 rays in Arabic calligraphy relief said to represent the 25 prophets in the Koran.

An Introduction to Hindu Temples

The gopuram is the giveaway—the tiered roof piled high with brightly colored statues of gods and goddesses. Definitely a Hindu temple. So what are they all doing up ther e? It's because in I ndia, what with the cast e system and all, the lower classes were at one time not permitted inside the temple, so having these statues on the outside meant they could still pray without actually entering. Furthermore, although each temple is dedicated to a particular deity, all the gods are represented, in keeping with the Hindu belief that although there are many gods, they are all one god. So everyone is up there, in poses or scenes that depic test ories from Hindu religious lore. So metimes there are brightly colored flowers, birds, and animals as well—especially sacred cows. So why are some of them blue? It's because blue is the color of the sky, and to paint the gods blue meant that they, like the sky, are far reaching and ever present.

There's no special way to pray in these temples, but by custom, most will pray first to Ganesh, the god with the elephant head, who is the remover of obstacles, especially those that can hinder one 's closeness to God. Another interesting prayer ritual happens in the temple's main hall around a small dais that holds nine gods, one for each planet. Devotees who need a particular wish fulfilled will circle the dais, praying to their astrological planet god for their wish to come true.

The location of H indu temples is neither by accident nor by Raffles's Town Plan. By tradition, they must always be built near a source of fresh water so that every morning, before prayer, all of the statues can be bathed . The water runs off a spout somewher e outside the main hall , from which devotees take the water and touch their heads.

Non-Hindus are welcome in the temples to walk around and explore. Temple etiquette asks that you first remove your shoes, and if you need to point to something, out of r espect, please use y our right hand, and don't point with your index finger (use your knuckle instead).

Inside the cour tyard, an information office provides robes for those in shorts and sleeveless tops. As in every mosque, the main prayer hall is off-limits to non-Muslims.

find a small door way to a chamber under the altar . Another B uddha image r eclines 135 inside, this one shown at the end of his life, beneath the Yellow Seraka tree. On the left side of the main part of the hall is a replica of a footprint left by the Buddha in Ceylon. Next to that is a wheel of for tune; for S50¢ (US35¢/20p), you get one spin.

Sri Perumal Temple Sri Perumal Temple, built in 1855, is dev oted to the worship of Vishnu. As part of the H indu trinity, Vishnu is the sustainer, balancing out B rahma the creator and Shiva the destroyer. When the world is out of whack, he rushes to its aid, reincarnating himself to show mankind that there are always new directions for development.

On the first tier to the left of the fr ont entrance on the gopuram, statues depict Vishnu's nine r eincarnations. Rama, the sixth incarnation, is with H anuman, the monkey god, who helped him in the fier ce battle to fr ee his wife fr om kidnapping. Krishna, shown reclining amid dev otees, is the eighth incarnation and a her of many H indu legends, most notably the Bhagavad-Gita. Also up there is the half-human and half-bird Garuda, Vishnu's steed. Inside the temple are altars to Vishnu, his two wives, and Gar-

During Thaipusam, the main festiv al celebrated her e (see chapter 3), male dev otees who have made vows over the year carry kavadi—huge steel racks decorated with flowers and fruits and held onto their bodies by skewers and hooks—to show their thanks and devotion, while women carry milk pots in a parade from Sri Perumal Temple to Chettiar's Temple on Tank Road.

Sri Veerama Kaliamman Temple ** This H indu temple is primarily for the worship of Shiva's wife, Kali, who destroys ignorance, maintains world order, and blesses those who strive for knowledge of God. The box on the walkway to the front entrance is for smashing coconuts, a symbolic smashing of the ego, asking God to show "the humble way." The coconuts hav e two small "eyes" at one end so they can "see" the personal obstacles to humility they are being asked to smash.

Inside the temple in the main hall ar e three altars, the center one for Kali (depicted with 16 arms and wearing a necklace of human skulls) and two altars on either side for her two sons—Ganesh, the elephant god, and M urugan, the four-headed child god. To the right is an altar with nine statues r epresenting the nine planets. Cir cle the altar and pray to your planet for help with a specific trouble.

Around the left side of the main hall, the first tier of the gopuram tells the story of how Ganesh got his elephant head. A small dais in the r ear-left corner of the temple compound is an altar to Sri Periyachi, a very mean-looking woman with a heart of gold. She punishes women who say and do things to make others feel bad. S he also punishes men—under her feet is an exploiter of ladies.

Here's a bit of trivia: R ed ash, as opposed to white, is applied to the for ehead after prayers are offered in a temple devoted to a female god.

4 ARAB STREET & KAMPONG GLAM

Kampong Glam is the traditional heart of Singaporean Muslim life. Since early colonial days, the area has attracted Muslims from diverse ethnic backgrounds, fusing them into one community by their common faith and lifestyle. The name Kampong Glam comes from the M alay word kampong, meaning "village," and gelam, a particular kind of tree that at one time grew abundantly in the area.

In 1819, the British made a treaty with Sultan Hussein Shah, then sultan of Singapore, to cede the island to the British East India Trading Company. As part of the agreement, the sultan was offer ed a stipend and giv en Kampong Glam as settlement for his palace and subjects. Sultan Hussein built his palace, Istana Kampong Glam, and sold off parcels of land for burial grounds, schools, mosques, and farms. Trade grew in the area, as a wave of mer chants and tradesmen moved in to serve the large numbers of pilgrims who debarked from here on their journey to Mecca each year.

Although the ethnic Arab population in S ingapore has nev er reached large proportions, their influence is immediately ob vious through such street names as B ussorah, Muscat, Baghdad, and, of course, Arab Street, the center of modern Kampong Glam—a neat little shopping enclave for textiles and r egional handicrafts. N ote that the shops along Arab Street close on Sunday.

Alsagoff Arab School Built in 1912, the school was named for Syed Ahmad Alsagoff, a wealthy Arab merchant and philanthropist who was very influential in Singapore's early colonial days and who died in 1906. I t is the oldest girls' school in Singapore and was the island's first Muslim school.

Hajjah Fatimah Mosque ★★ Hajjah Fatimah was a wealthy businesswoman from Melaka and something of a local socialite. She married a Bugis prince from Celebes, and their only child, a daughter, married Syed Ahmed Alsagoff, son of Arab trader and philanthropist Syed Abdul Rahman Alsagoff. Hajjah Fatimah had originally built a home on this site, but after it had been r obbed a couple of times and later set fir e to, she decided to find a safer home and built a mosque her e instead.

Inside the high walls of the compound ar e the prayer hall, an ablution ar ea, gardens and mausoleums, and a few other buildings. You can walk around the main prayer halls to the gar den cemeteries, where flat square headstones mark the graves of women and round ones mark the graves of men. Hajjah Fatimah is buried in a private room to the side of the main prayer hall, along with her daughter and son-in-law.

The minaret tower in the front was designed by an unknown European architect and could be a copy of the original spir e of St. Andrew's Cathedral. The tower leans a little, a fact that 's much mor e noticeable fr om the inside. O n the outside of the to wer is a bleeding heart—an unexpected place to find such a do wnright Christian symbol. It's a great example of what makes this mosque so charming—all the combined influences of Moorish, Chinese, and European architectural styles.

Malay Heritage Centre (Istana Kampong Glam) ★★ When the Malay Heritage Centre opened its doors in 2004, it became the first museum dedicated to the history, culture, and arts of this often-marginalized ethnic group. The Centre has lovingly displayed exhibits that offer a glimpse into S ingapore's early Malay settlements, the sultan's royal family, Malay arts, and 20th-century Malay life.

There's a bit of ir ony here. The museum is housed in the I stana Kampong Glam, the former royal palace that housed the descendants of the original sultan that o versaw Singapore. In 1819, Sultan Hussein signed away his rights o ver the island in ex change for the land at Kampong Glam plus an annual stipend for his family After the Sultan's death, the family fortunes began to dwindle and disputes broke out among his descendants. In the late 1890s, they went to court, where it was decided that because no one in the family had the rights as the successor to the sultanate, the land should be everted to the state. The family was allowed to remain in the house, but because they didn't own the property, they lost the authority to improve the buildings. Over the years, the compound fell into a very sad state of dilapidation. Eventually, Sultan Hussein's family was given the boot by the government to make way for this museum heralding the value of the Malay, and the Sultan's, cultural contribution to Singapore. Hmm.

Galleries on the first floor r elate the story of the immigration of M uslim Malays to Singapore and their central role in the island's trading culture. Upstairs there are displays that deal with the modern histor y of the Malay community and a recreation of a traditional kampong (village) house and an early HDB apar tment.

The house to the left before the main gate of the I stana compound is called Gedong Kuning, or Yellow Mansion. It was the home of Tenkgu Mahmoud, the heir to Kampong Glam. When he died, it was pur chased by local Javanese businessman Haji Yusof, the belt merchant. Today it houses a Malay restaurant, Tepak Sireh (?) 65/6393-4373; daily 11:30am-2:30pm and 6:30-10pm).

Sultan Mosque Though more than 80 mosques exist on the island of S ingapore, Sultan Mosque is the r eal center of the M uslim community. The mosque that stands today is the second S ultan Mosque to be built on this site. The first was built in 1826, partially funded by the East India Company as part of their agreement to leave Kampong Glam to Sultan Hussein and his family in r eturn for sovereign rights to Singapore. The present mosque was built in 1928 and was funded by donations from the Muslim community. The Saracenic flavor of the onion domes, topped with crescent moons and stars, is complemented by Mogul cupolas. Funny thing, though: The mosque was designed by an Irish guy named Denis Santry, who was working for the architectural firm Swan and McLaren.

Other interesting facts about the mosque: Its dome base is a ring of black bottles; the carpeting was donated by a prince of Saudi Arabia and bears his emblem; and at the back of the compound, N orth B ridge R oad has a kink in it, sho wing where the mosque invaded the nicely planned urban grid pattern. Also, if y ou make your way through the chink where the back of the building almost touches the compound wall, peer inside the makam to see the royal graves. Sultan Mosque, like all the others, does not permit shorts, miniskirts, low necklines, or other r evealing clothing to be worn inside. H owever, they do realize that non-M uslim travelers like to be comfor table as they tour ar ound and provide cloaks free of charge. They hang just to the right as you walk up the stairs.

An Introduction to Mosques

To appreciate what's going on in the mosques in Singapore, here's a little background on some of the st yles and symbols behind these ex otic buildings. I have also included some tips that will help non-Muslims feel right at home.

The rule of thumb f or mosques is that they all fac e Mecca. Lucky for these buildings (and for Singaporean urban planners), most of the major mosques in Singapore have managed to fit within the grid of city streets quite nicely, with few major angles or corners jutting into the surrounding streets. One fine example of a mosque that obeys the Mecca rule but disregards zoning orders is Sultan Mosque in Kampong Glam. A peek around the back will reveal how the road is crooked to make way for the building.

The mosques in Singapore are a wonderful blend of Muslim influences from around the world. The grand Sultan Mosque has the familiar onion dome and Moorish st yling of the Arabic Muslim influence. The smaller but fascinating Hajjah Fatimah Mosque is a blend of cultures, from Muslim to Chinese to even Christian—testimony to Islam's tolerance of other cultural symbols. On the other hand, the mosques in Chinatown, such as Jamae Mosque and the Nagore Durgha Shrine, are Saracenic in flavor, a style that originated in India in the late 19th century, mixing traditional styles of Indian and Muslim ar chitecture with British conventionality.

Each mosque has typical features such as a minaret, a narrow tower from which the call to prayer was sounded (before recorded broadcasts), and a

5 ORCHARD ROAD AREA

In the beginning, O rchard Road was just that, or chards and plantations. B ut as Singapore began to attract international settlers, this ar ea transformed into an enclave where wealthy Europeans built their homes. Today Orchard Road still represents affluence and luxury even though colonial homesteads have been replaced with glitzy malls and highrise hotels. And true to its roots, the Orchard Road area still has one of the highest concentrations of Western expatriate residences on the island.

The Istana and Sri Temasek In 1859, the construction of Fort Canning necessitated the demolition of the original governors' residence, and the autocratic and unpopular governor-general Sir Harry St. George Ord proposed this structure be built as the new r esidence. Though the construction of such a large and expensive edifice was unpopular, Ord had his way, and design and construction went through, with the building mainly per formed by convicts under the super vision of Maj. J. F. A. McNair, the colonial engineer and superintendent of convicts.

In its picturesque landscaped setting, Government House echoed Anglo-Indian architecture, but its symmetrical and cross-shaped plan also echoed the form of the traditional Malay istana (palace). During the occupation, the house was occupied by Field Marshal Count Terauchi, commander of the Japanese Southern Army, and Major General Kawamura, commander of the S ingapore Defense Forces. With independence, the building mihrab, a niche in the main hall which indicates the direction of Mecca and in front of which the imam prays, his voice bouncing from inside and resonating throughout the mosque during pra yers. You will also notice that there are no statues to speak of, in ac cordance with Muslim la ws, which forbid images of Allah and the Prophet Mohammed. Some mosques will have a makam, a burial site within the building for royalty and esteemed benefactors. This room is usually locked but sometimes can be opened upon equest. To the side of the main prayer hall there's always an ablution area, a place for worshipers to wash the exposed parts of their bodies before prayers, to show their respect. This is a custom for all Muslims, whether they pray in the mosque or at home.

When visiting the mosques in Singapor e—and an ywhere else, for that matter—there are some important rules of etiquette to follow. Appropriate dress is r equired. For both men and women, shorts are prohibited, and you must remove your shoes before you enter. For women, please do not wear short skirts or sleeveless, backless, or low-cut tops (although modern Singaporean Muslims do not require women to cover their heads before entering). Also remember: Never enter the main prayer hall. This area is reserved for Muslims only. Women should also tread lightly around this area, as it 's forbidden for women to enter. No cameras or video cameras are allowed, and remember to turn off cellular phones and pagers. Friday is the Sabbath day, and you should not plan on going to the mosques between 11am and 2pm on this day.

was renamed the Istana and today serves as the official residence of the president of the Republic of Singapore. Used mainly for state and ceremonial occasions, the grounds are open to every citizen on selected public holidays, though they 're not generally open for visits. The house's domain includes several other houses of senior colonial civil ser vants. The colonial secretary's residence, a typical 19th-centur y bungalow, is also gaz etted a monument and is now called Sri Temasek.

Peranakan Place ★ Emerald Hill was once nothing more than a wide treeless street along whose sides quiet families lived in typical terrace houses²residential units similar to shophouses, with a walled cour tyard in the fr ont instead of the usual "five-foot way." Toward Orchard Road, the terrace houses turned into shophouses, with their first floors occupied by small provisioners, seamstresses, and dry-goods stores.

As Orchard Road developed, so did E merald Hill—the buildings were all renovated. The shophouses close to O rchard Road became restaurants and bars, and the street was closed off to vehicular traffic. Now it's an alfresco cafe, landscaped with a veritable jungle of potted foliage and peopled by color ful tourists—much different from its humble beginnings.

But as you pass Emerald Hill, don't just blow it off as a tourist trap. Walk through the cafe area and out the back onto Emerald Hill. All of the terrace houses have been redone, and magnificently. The facades have been freshly painted and the tiles polished, and the dark-wood details add a contrast that is truly elegant. When these places were renovated, 140 they could be purchased for a song, but as Singaporeans began grasping at their heritage in recent years, their value shot up, and now these homes fetch huge sums.

For a peek inside some of these wonderful places (and who doesn't like to see how the rich live?), go to a bookstore and look at Living Legacy: Singapore's Architectural Heritage Renewed, by Robert Powell. Gorgeous photographs take you inside a few of these homes and some other terrace houses and bungalo ws around the island, showing off the traditional interior details of these buildings and bringing their heritage to life.

Intersection of Emerald Hill and Orchard Rd. Free admission, 5-min, walk from Somerset MRT.

ATTRACTIONS OUTSIDE THE URBAN AREA

The famous image of Singapore, promulgated by the tourism board and recognizable to business travelers everywhere, is of the to wering cityscape along the water 's edge—but there's a reason they call this place the G arden City. Not only are there picturesque gardens and parks nestled within the urban jungle, but the urban jungle is nestled within real jungle. While it's true that most of the wooded areas have been replaced by suburban housing, it's also true that thousands of acr es of secondary rainforest have survived the migration of Singaporeans to the suburbs. Better yet, there are still some areas with primary rainforest, some of which are accessible by paths.

Singapore has spectacular gardens, from the well-groomed Botanic Gardens to nature preserves like Bukit Timah and Sungei Buloh, where tropical rainforest and mangrove swamps are close enough to the city that you can visit them on a morning or afternoon visit. Outside the city center you'll also find historic sites and temples like the edifying Changi Prison Museum and the S iong Lim Temple, as well as museums and science centers.

WESTERN SINGAPORE ATTRACTIONS

The attractions grouped in this section are on the west side of Singapore, beginning from the Singapore Botanic Gardens at the edge of the urban ar ea all the way out to the S ingapore Discovery Centre past Jurong. Transportation can be problematic in this part of the island; as the MRT system rarely goes directly to any of the main sights, taxis can be hard to find, and bus r outes get mor e complex. K eep the telephone number for taxi booking handy. Sometimes ticket salespeople at each attraction can help and make the call for you.

Bukit Timah Nature Reserve ★★ Bukit Timah Nature Reserve is pur e primary rainforest. Believed to be as old as 1 million y ears, it's the only place on the island with vegetation that exists exactly as it was befor e the British settled here. The park is more than 160 hectares (405 acres) of soaring canopy teeming with mammals and birds and a lush undergrowth with more bugs, butterflies, and reptiles than you can shake a vine at. Here you can see more than 700 plant species, many of which are exotic ferns, plus mammals like long-tailed macaques, squirr els, and lemurs. There's a visitor center and four well-marked paths, one of which leads to S ingapore's highest point. At 163m (535 ft.) above sea level, don't expect a nosebleed, but some of the scenic vie ws of the island ar e really nice. Also at Bukit Timah is Hindhede Quarry, which filled up with water at some point, so you can take a dip and cool off during your hike. The National Parks Board gives free guided tours on the first Sunday of the month at around 4pm; call © 65/6554-5127 to register.

177 Hindhede Dr. © 65/6468-5736. www.nparks.gov.sg. Free admission. Daily 8:30am–6:30pm. Newton MRT, then bus no. 171 to park entrance.

Chinese and Japanese Gardens Situated on two islands in Jurong Lake, the gardens are reached by an overpass and joined by the Bridge of Double Beauty. The Chinese Garden dedicates most of its area to "northern style" landscape architecture, the style of Imperial gar dens, integrating brightly color ed buildings with the surroundings. The Stoneboat is a replica of the stone boat at the Summer Palace in Beijing. Inside the Pure Air of the Universe building are courtyards and a pond, and there is a seven-story pagoda, the odd number of floors symbolizing continuity.

I like the Garden of Beauty, in Suzhou style, representing the southern style of landscape architecture. Southern gardens were built pr edominantly by scholars, poets, and men of wealth. Sometimes called B lack-and-White gardens, these smaller gar dens had more fine detail, featuring subdued colors, as the plants and elements of the rich natural landscape gave them plenty to wor k with. I nside the S uzhou garden are 2,000 pots of penjiang (bonsai) and displays of small rocks.

While the Chinese gar den is mor e visually stimulating, the Japanese G arden is intended to evoke feeling. And though it can't compete with the attention with which its native counterparts are lavished, it is successful in capturing the themes at the hear t of Japanese garden design. Marble-chip paths let you hear your own footsteps and meditate on the sound. They also serve to slow the journey for better gazing. The Keisein, or "Dry Garden," uses white pebbles to create images of streams. Ten stone lanterns, a small traditional house, and a r est house ar e nestled between two ponds with smaller islands joined by bridges. The pond area is regularly patrolled by huge monitor lizards! There is also a live turtle and tortoise museum, with a famous two-headed specimen; adults $$5 (US$3.35/£2.25), children $$3 (US$2/£1.35).

Toilets are situated at stops along the way, as well as benches to have a rest or to just take in the sights. P addle boats can be r ented for S$5 (US$3.35/£2.25) per hour just outside the main entrance.

Haw Par Villa (Tiger Balm Gardens) ★ In 1935, brothers Haw Boon Haw and Haw Boon Par—creators of Tiger Balm, the camphor and menthol r ub that comes in those cool little pots—took their fortune and opened Tiger Balm Gardens as a venue for teaching traditional Chinese v alues. They made mor e than 1,000 statues and life-size dioramas depicting Chinese legends and historical tales, and illustrating morality and Confucian beliefs. Many of these were gruesome and bloody, and some of them were really enter taining. But Tiger Balm Gardens suffered a horrible fate. In 1985, it was converted into an amusement park and reopened as Haw Par Villa. Most of the statues and scenes were taken away and replaced with rides. Well, business did not exactly boom. In fact, the park lost money fast. But recently, in an attempt to regain some of the original Tiger Balm Garden edge, they replaced many of the old statues, some of which are a great backdr op for really kitschy vacation photos, and ditched the rides. They also decided to open the gates free of charge.

The more than 20 hectar es (49 acr es) can be easily walked or, for five Singapore dollars ($3.35/£2.25) extra, you can ride the panorail for a bird's-eye view (so to speak) of the grounds. I enjoy the Waterfall Aviary, the world's largest walk-in aviar y. It's an up-close-and-personal experience with African and S outh American birds, plus a preetty stroll through landscaped tropical forest. This is where you'll also see the world's tallest man-made waterfall, but the true feat of engineering here is the panorail station, built inside the aviary. Another smaller walk-in aviary is for Southeast Asian endangered bird species; at noon every day, this aviary experiences a man-made thunderstorm, and in the Lory Loft, a couple of dollars on bird feed buys you a swooping entourage of color ful friends. The daily guided tours and r egularly scheduled feeding times are enlightening. Other bird exhibits are the flamingo pools, the World of Darkness (featuring nocturnal bir ds), and the penguin parade, a fav orite for S ingaporeans, who adore all things arctic.

The World of Hawks show at 10am and Kings of the Skies at 4pm feature birds of prey either acting out their natural instincts or per forming falconry tricks. The Birds n' Buddies show takes place at 11am and 3pm, with trained parr ots that race bikes and birds that perform all sorts of silliness, including staged birdie misbehaviors.

Singapore Botanic Gardens ★★ In 1822, S ingapore's first botanic gar den was started at Fort Canning by Sir Stamford Raffles. After it lost funding, the present Botanic Garden came into being in 1859, thanks to the effor ts of a hor ticulture society; it was later turned o ver to the go vernment for upkeep. More than just a gar den, this space occupied an important place in the region's economic development when "Mad" Henry Ridley, one of the garden's directors, imported Brazilian rubber tree seedlings from Great Britain. He devised improved latex-trapping methods and led the campaign to convince reluctant coffee gr owers to switch plantation cr ops. The garden also pioneer ed or chid hybridization, breeding a number of internationally acclaimed varieties.

Carved out within the tropical setting lies a marshgar den awash with water lilies and papyrus plants, the sundial gar den with pruned hedges, a ginger gar den filled with 300 related specimens of a family that includes lilies, turmeric, and even bananas. Who knew? Sculptures by international ar tists dot thr oughout. As you wander, look for the Cannonball tree (named for its cannonball-shaped fruit), Para rubber trees, teak trees, bamboos, and a huge array of palms, including the sealing wax palm—distinguished by its bright scarlet stalks—and the rumbia palm, which bears the pearl sago . The fruit of the silk-cotton tree is a pod filled with silky stuffing that was once used for stuffing pillo ws. Flowers like bougainvilleas and heliconias add beautiful color.

The National Orchid Garden is 3 hectar es (7<sup>1</sup>/<sub>2</sub> acres) of gorgeous or chids growing along landscaped walks. The English Garden features hybrids developed here and named after famous visitors to the gar den—there's the beautifully twisted M argaret Thatcher, the Benazir Bhutto, the Vaclav Havel, and mor e. The gift shops sell live hydroponic orchids in test tubes for unique souvenirs.

At the B ukit Timah edge of the Botanic G ardens is Asia's first dedicated childr en's garden. The Jacob Ballas Children's Garden is a lovely place for under-12s to play and explore, while developing an appreciation for plants and natur e. Children can do outdoor puzzles, learn about food and drinks that comes from plants, explore the maze or become happily soaked pumping water in the potting gar den (swimming gear or a change of clothing is r ecommended here). Admission is fr ee and it 's open Tuesday to 145 Sunday from 8am to 7pm (② 65/6465-0196).

The gar dens have three lakes. Symphony Lake surrounds an island band shell for "Concert in the Park" performances by the local symphony and international enter tainers. Call visitor services at the number below for performance schedules.

Volunteers run free guided tours of differ ent areas of the park every Saturday at 9am and 10am, often with additional tours at 11am and 4pm. Register 15 minutes before the walk at the Visitor Centre near Nassim Gate.

Singapore Discovery Centre (Kids Billing itself as an "edutainment" center, the SDC uses a phenomenal array of multimedia exhibits to encourage young Singaporeans to reflect on the culture of modern Singapore and its global ambitions. One offers visitors a chance to be an on-the-spot TV reporter, another lets you build a virtual community, measuring your success in providing basic infrastructure and meeting cultural needs along the way. Though the SDC is mor e focused on civilian life than it used to be, national defense is still the underlying focus of many exhibits—National Service remains mandatory for Singaporean men. That means there are plenty of militar y-style exhibits and games, including the S hooting Gallery, a computer-simulated combat firing range using real but decommissioned M16 rifles. IMAX features roll at the five-story iWERKS Theatre regularly, in two and three dimensions. When you get hungry, there's a fast-food court. You can also have a 30-minute bus tour of the neighboring S ingapore Air Force Training Institute free with SDC admission. Inquire about tour times at the front counter.

Singapore Science Centre (Kids The center features hands-on exhibits in true science-center spirit. Interestingly, the 7,500 sq. m (80,729 sq. ft.) of exhibits directly relate to the science syllabus of the local school system, fr om primary school level all the way through junior college. The galleries are all clearly marked to explain their interactive use, and study sheets are also available. The free Water Works gallery outside is fantastic fun for kids (warning: they'll be soaked in moments). The Technology Gallery is one of the more interesting exhibits, if you can wrestle the kids away from the machines. The Discovery Zone's insectarium is fascinating for any one who isn't horrified by bugs. In the main atrium, there's a Tesla coil that generates electrical sparks 5m (16 ft.) long. There's a Virtual Voyages simulation theater plus the O mni Theatre planetarium, which has a projection booth encased in glass so you can check out how it works and an IMAX dome theatre. Southern Ridges ★★ This 9km (5<sup>1</sup>/<sub>2</sub>-mile) chain of park area starts at Mount Faber Park (where you can catch the cable car to Harbourfront and Sentosa island) and ends at the West Coast P ark. It incorporates two ne w pedestrian bridges, the Alexandra Ar ch and, my fav orite, The Henderson Waves bridge, which connects M ount Faber Park to 7

146 Telok Blangah Hill; this is the highest pedestrian bridge in Sngapore, offering great views over the city. It's also a beautiful piece of design in its o wn right, weaving like a ribbon over the treetops and featuring a cur ved wooden deck that rises in places to r esemble a breaking wave, creating sheltered areas with seating. The Henderson Waves lead to a forest walk with an elevaated pedestrian walkway and cycling trails through the Telok Blangah Hill Park. You can take bus numbers 131, 145, 176, or 648 to Henderson Road and walk up the hill, but it 's more fun to take the MRT to Harbourfront and then the cable car to Mount Faber, and walk from there.

Mount Faber Park entrance is from Telok Blangah Rd. or Henderson Rd., or via Harbour front MRT/cable car. C 800/471-7300. www.nparks.gov.sg. Free admission. Daily 24 hr. Bus no. 131, 145, 176, or 648 to Henderson Rd., or MRT to Harbourfront and then cable car to Mount Faber.

CENTRAL & NORTHERN SINGAPORE ATTRACTIONS

The northern part of Singapore contains most of the island's nature reserves and parks. Here's where you'll find the Singapore Zoo, in addition to some sights with historical and religious significance. D espite the pr esence of the MRT in the ar ea, there is not any simple way to get from attraction to attraction with ease. Bus transfers to and from MRT stops are the way to go—or you could stick to taxicabs.

Kong Meng S an Phor Kark S ee Temple The largest r eligious complex on the island, this place, called Phor Kark See for short, is comprised of prayer and meditation halls, a hospice, gardens, and a vegetarian restaurant. The largest building is the Chinesestyle Hall of Great Compassion. There is also the octagonal H all of Great Virtue and a towering pagoda. For S50¢ (US35¢/20p), you can buy flower petals to place in a dish at the Buddha's feet. Compared to other temples on the island, Phor Kark See seems shiny, having only been built in 1981. As a r esult, the religious images inside carry a strange, almost artificial, cartoonlike air about them.

Kranji War Memorial Kranji Cemetery commemorates the Allied men and women who fought and died in World War II. Prisoners of war in a camp nearby began a burial ground here, and after the war it was enlarged to provide space for all the casualties. The Kranji War Cemetery is the site of 4,000 graves of servicemen, while the Singapore State Cemetery memorializes the names of over 20,000 who died and have no known graves. Stones are laid geometrically on a slope with a view of the Strait of Johor. The memorial itself is designed to represent the three arms of the services.

Woodlands Rd., located in the very northern part of the island. Daily 7am-6pm. Kranji MRT.

Lian Shan Shuang Lin Temple This temple, in E nglish "the Twin Groves of the Lotus Mountain Temple," has a gr eat story behind its founding. O ne night in 1898, Hokkien businessman Low Kim Pong and his son had the same dream<sup>2</sup> of a golden light shining from the west. The following day, the two went to the western shore and waited until, moments before sundown, a ship appeared carrying a group of Hokkien Buddhist monks and nuns on their way to China after a pilgrimage to India. Low Kim Pong vowed to build a monastery if they would stay in Singapore. They did.

Laid out according to feng shui principles, the buildings include the D harma Hall, a main prayer hall, and dr um and bell to wers. They are arranged in cong lin style, a rar e type of monastery design with a universal layout so that no matter how vast the grounds are, any monk can find his way around. The entrance hall has granite wall panels carved with scenes from Chinese history. The main prayer hall has fantastic details in the ceiling, 147 wood panels, and other woodcar vings. In the back is a shrine to K uan Yin, goddess of mercy.

Originally built amid farmland, the temple became surrounded by suburban high-rise apartments in the 1950s and 1960s, with the Toa Payoh Housing Development Board New Town project and the Pan-Island Expressway creeping close by.

184-E Jalan Toa Payoh. (?) 65/6259-6924. Free admission. Daily 8:30am-5pm. Located in Toa Payoh New Town. Toa Payoh MRT to bus no. 232, 237, or 238.

MacRitchie Nature Trail Of all the nature reserves in Singapore, the Central Catchment Nature Reserve is the largest, at 2,000 hectares (4,940 acres). Located in the center of the island, it's home to four of Singapore's reservoirs: MacRitchie, Seletar, Pierce, and Upper Pierce. The rainforest here is secondary forest, but the animals don't care; they're just as happy with the place. There's one path for walking and jogging (no bicy allowed) that str etches 3km (1 3/4 miles) fr om its star t in the southeast corner of the reserve, turning to the edge of M acRitchie Reservoir, then letting you out at the Singapore I sland Country Club. The TreeTop Walk is a 250m-long (820-ft.) suspension walkway that rises 25m (82 ft.) from the forest floor. The views are great, but it is a hike from the parking lots. The National Parks Board gives free guided tours on the second Sunday of the month at 9:30am ( 6) 65/6554-5127).

Mandai Orchid Gardens John Laycock, the British founder of the Orchid Society of Southeast Asia, began the M andai garden in 1951 to house his o wn collection. Now owned and operated by Singapore Orchids Pte. Ltd, M and breeds and cultivates hybrids for international export, and the gar dens double as an STB tourist attraction. Some of Mr. Laycock's original collection survives, though many were lost in World War II. Arranged in English garden style, or chid varieties are separated in beds that ar e surrounded by grassy lawn. Tree-growing varieties prefer the shade of the co vered canopy. On display is Singapore's national flower, the Vanda Miss Joaquim, a natural hybrid in shades of light purple. Behind the gift shop is the Water Garden, where a stroll will reveal many houseplants common to the West, as you would find them in the wild.

The Vanilla Pod restaurant gets many of its ingredients from its own herb and spice gardens, and the specialty crabmeat salad uses the gaden's orchid as an ingredient. (Tues-Fri 11:30am–3pm and 6:30–11pm; Sat–Sun 9am–11pm; © 65/6368-0672).

Night Safari ★★★ (Kids Singapore takes advantage of its unchanging tr opical climate and static ratio of daylight to night to bring you the world's first open-concept zoo for nocturnal animals. Here, as in the zeological gardens, animals live in landscaped areas, their barriers vir tually unseen by visitors. These areas are dimly lit to create a moonlit effect, and a guided tram leads y ou through "regions" designed to resemble the Himalayan foothills, the jungles of Africa, and, naturally, Southeast Asia. Some of the free-range prairie animals come very close to the tram. The 45-minute ride covers almost 3.5km (2<sup>1</sup>/<sub>4</sub> miles) and has a stop half-way to get off and hav e a rest or stroll along trails

Staff, placed at regular intervals along each of the three trails, help you find your way, though it's almost impossible to get lost along the trails; however, it is nighttime, you are in the forest, and it can be spooky. The guides are there to add peace of mind (and all speak English). Flash photography is strictly pr ohibited, and be sur e to bring plenty of insect repellent. Check out the bathrooms; they're all open-air, Bali style.

Singapore Zoo ★★ (Kids They call themselves the Open Zoo because, rather than coop the animals in jailed enclosur es, they let them r oam freely in landscaped ar eas. Beasts of the world are kept where they are supposed to be using psychological restraints and physical barriers that ar e disguised behind water falls, vegetation, and moats. Some animals are grouped with other species to show them coexisting as they would in nature. For instance, the white rhinocer os is neighborly with the wildebeest and ostrich—not that wildebeests and ostriches make the best company, but certainly contempt is better than boredom. Guinea and pea fo wl, Emperor tamarinds, and other cr eatures are freeroaming and not shy; however, if you spot a water monitor or long-tailed macaque, know that they're not zoo residents—just locals looking for a free meal. Major zoo features are the Primate Kingdom, Wild Africa, the Reptile Garden, and underwater views of polar bears, sea lions, and penguins. D aily sho ws are themed ar ound ecological issues and include "The Rainfor est F ights B ack," featuring 15 species, including orangutans, lemurs, otters, and bir ds at 10:30am and 1:30pm; sea lions, penguins, and pelicans at 11:30am, 2:30pm, and 5pm; and the elephants at 11:30am and 3:30pm. You can take your photograph with an orangutan, chimpanz ee, or snake, and ther e are elephant and camel rides, too. The new Rainforest Kidzworld area is phenomenal: part water park, part adventure playground, and part petting zoo.

Zoo literature includes half-day and full-day agendas to help make the most of your visit. The best time to arriv e, however, is at 9am, to hav e breakfast with an orangutan, which feasts on fruits and puts on a hilarious and very memorable show. If you miss that, you can also have tea with it at 4pm. Another good time to go is just after a rain, when the animals cool off and get frisky. See also the Night Safari listing, above.

More than 75% of Singapore's wildlife species are represented here, but of the flora and fauna, the most spectacular sights her e are the birds, of which there are somewhere between 140 and 170 species in residence or just passing through for the winter. Of the migrator y birds, some have traveled from as far as S iberia to escape the cold months from September to March. Bird observatories are set up at differ ent spots along the paths. Also, even though you're in the middle of nowhere, Sungei Buloh has a visitor center, a cafeteria, and souvenirs. Go early to beat the heat, and douse yourself well in mosquito repellent. The National Parks Board gives free guided tours every Saturday at 9 and 10am, and 3 and 4pm; call for r egistration.

Sun Yat-sen Nanyang Memorial Hall  $\star$  Dr. Sun Yat-sen visited Singapore eight times to raise funds for his revolution in China and made Singapore his headquarters for gaining the support of overseas Chinese in Southeast Asia. A wealthy Chinese merchant built the villa around 1880 for his mistress, and a later owner permitted Dr. Sun Yat-sen to use it. The house reflects the classic bungalow style, which is becoming endangered in modern Singapore. Renovated in 2008, its typical bungalow features include a projecting carport with a sitting room overhead, verandas with striped blinds, second-story cast-iron railings, and first-story masonry balustrades. A covered walkway leads to the kitchen and servants' quarters in the back.

Inside, the life of D r. Yat-sen is traced in photos and water colors, from his bir th in southern China through his creation of a revolutionary organization.

EASTERN SINGAPORE ATTRACTIONS

The east coast leads from the edge of Singapore's urban area to the tip of the eastern part, at Changi P oint. Eastern S ingapore is home to Changi I nternational Airport, nearby Changi Prison, and the long str etch of East Coast P ark along the shor eline. The MRT heads east in this region, but swerves northward at the end of the line. A new MRT track, the circle line, will extend the network wider in the east and west from 2010. A popular bus line for east-coast attractions not reached by MRT is bus no. 2, which takes you to Changi Prison, Changi Point, and East Coast Park.

Changi Museum ★ Upon successful occupation of Singapore, the Japanese marched all British, Australian, and Allied European prisoners to Changi by foot, where they lived in a prison camp for 3 years, suffering overcrowding, disease, and malnutrition. Prisoners were cut off from the outside world except to leave the camp for labor duties. The hospital conditions were terrible; some prisoners suffered public beatings, and many died. In

The Peranakans of Katong

If you'd like to experience local culture that's a bit off the beaten track, come to Katong. This neighborhood came to prominence before World War II, when Peranakans and Eurasians, families of mixed heritage, populated this area outside of the citity center along the east coast of the island. Many Peranakans, because of their mixed Chinese and Malay heritage, rose to financial power and were known to build lavish homes (man yof which still line the streets of Katong), furnishing them with ornate, Chinese -inspired interiors, and they dress with opulent flair.

Peranakan antique furniture sports detailed woodcarvings in classic Chinese design, but with unbelievably gaudy mother- of-pearl inlay everywhere. Their pottery also follows Chinese aesthetics, with pretty floral, phoenix, and dragon patterns, but in vivid c olors more representative of M alay tastes—bright yellows, pinks, and greens.

Peranakan ladies wore the sarong kebaya, a two-piece outfit consisting of a brightly c olored c otton sar ong t opped with a delicately embroidered fitted blouse pinned with silver or gold broaches. Peranakan ladies (called Non yas) were also known for their dainty beaded slippers. The outfit is really quite elaborate, but if you think it's a thing of the past, you'll be surprised to see how many local women still wear full traditional costume to weddings and other special events.

To visit K atong, start by taking a taxit o the c orner of East C oast and Joo Chiat roads (don't worry, there are plenty of taxis here e to bring y ou back t o town). This is the epicenter of a boom in Peranakan heritage appreciation that has seen restaurants, a clothier, and an antiques house find cheers from locals who are keen to see this heritage survive. From this junction, you can find Kim Choo Kueh Chang (109 and 111 East Coast Rd.; © 65/6741-2125), a place for traditional Nonya glutinous ric e dumplings—the t etra-pack-shaped bundles wrapped in pandan lea ves y ou may see hang ing in bunches in food stalls around the island. Here you can buy and try, and also see how they are made.

an effort to keep hope alive, they built a small chapel fr om wood and attap. Years later, at the request of former POWs and their families and friends, the go vernment built this replica.

The museum displays sketches by W. R. M. Haxworth, replicas of the murals painted by Bombardier Stanley Warren in St Luke's Chapel and secr et photos taken by George Aspinall—all POWs who were imprisoned her e. Displayed with descriptions, the pictures, along with writings and other objects from the camp, bring this period to life, depicting the day-to-day horror with a touch of high morale.

Just next door is Rumah B ebe (113 East C oast Rd.; © 65/6247-8781), a boutique that specializes in fantastic qualit y sarongs and kebayas with all the accessories. Proprietress Bebe Seet, a well-known pillar of the Peranakan community, is the local authorit y on traditional beaded slippers, selling her handmade creations, giving demonstrations, and t eaching the art of beading. You can even custom-order a pair.

You'll notice these shops ar e newly r enovated, freshly painted, and quit e welcoming. If you prefer your cultural experience a bit mor e down-and-dirty, backtrack down East Coast Road to the next block. At the junction of East Coast and Ceylon roads is the heart of the laksa wars. On two street corners, opposite each other, about four open-air hawker stalls fight over who has the best laksa in Singapore. This local specialt y, a rich, spic y coconut-based soup with noodles, prawns, fishcake, and cockles, is delicious, and you'll find the best right here. I usually go for the laksa at No. 49 (no phone). Pull up a stool and eat on the sidewalk. (A hidden treasure—if you walk half a block down Ceylon Rd., you'll find an old but recently renovated Sri Lankan Hindu temple dedicated to Ganesh, the elephant-headed god. If you're dressed modestly, they'll welcome you in for a look-see.)

If you follow East Coast Road in the opposite direction, you'll find two older establishments. The Katong Antique House (208 East Coast Rd.; ② 65/6345-8544) is operated by Peter Wee, the president of the local Peranakan heritage association. It's a very small display, but everything's authentic and for sale, as opposed to the objects at the museum, in case you wanted to take a bit of Peranakan heritage home.

Next door is my favorite Nonya restaurant, The Peranakan Inn (210 East Coast Rd.; © 65/6440-6195), a simple c offee shop –style restaurant with authentic home-style food at very reasonable prices. What you lack in decoryou gain in authenticit y.

hangout for Singaporean families on the weekends. Moms and dads barbecue under the trees while the kids swim at the beach, which is nothing mor e than a narr ow lump of grainy sand sloping into yellow-green water that has more seaweed than a sushi bar. Paths for bicycling, in-line skating, walking, or jogging r un the length of the par k and ar e crowded on weekends and public and school holidays. On Sundays, you'll find kite flyers in the open grassy parts. The lagoon is the best place to go for bicy cle rentals, canoeing, and windsurfing. If you go to the M cDonald's Carpark C entrance, y ou'll find beach cafes, some sea kayak r entals, plus in-line skates and bicy cle rentals as well. A couple of outfits, listed in "Sports & Recreation," later in this chapter, offer equipment rentals and instruction. The park is also home to UDMC Seafood Centre (reviewed in chapter 6), located not far from the lagoon.

There are rides for small kiddies and families, plus ex citing ones for big kiddies as well. The go-kart circuit is happening. They also have carnival games with prizes, plus snacks and beverages. #### SENTOSA ISLAND

In the 1880s, S entosa was a hub of B ritish military activity, with hilltop for ts built to protect the harbor from sea invasion from all sides. Today it has become a weekend getaway spot and Singapore's answer to Disneyland. Tomorrow it will be the site of one of Singapore's new "integrated r esorts"—hotels, r esorts, amusement and enter tainment parks, plus gambling casinos, slated for opening in 2010. I n the meantime, S entosa is spending gobs of money to upgrade all existing facilities to meet the bar raised b coming attractions.

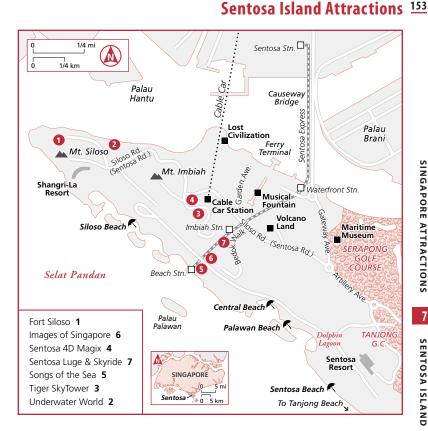

If you're spending the day, there are numerous restaurants and a couple of food courts. For a unique dining option, consider Sky Dining, aboard a glass-bottomed cable car, where you can spend a couple hours eating a thr ee- or four-course Western meal (set menus S$115/US$77/£52 or S$198/US$133/£89 for two; childr en's set menu S$24/ US$16/£11). It's especially popular on Valentine's Day or for bir thdays and w edding proposals. Meals are pretty tasty, provided by the Jewel Box restaurant. For more information, call (2) 65/6377-9688, or visit www.mountfaber.com.sg.

For overnights, the Shangri-La's Rasa Sentosa Resort and S pa and the Sentosa Resort & Spa (see chapter 5) ar e popular hotel options. F or general Sentosa inquiries, call (2) 1800/736-8672 or see www.sentosa.com.sg.

GETTING THERE

Island admission is S$2 (US$1.35/90p) each for adults and childr en, payable at the causeway upon entry or factored into the cost of transport to the island. Tickets to additional attractions can be bought as a package from the Sentosa Express office at Harbour-Front or purchased separately on the island.

The most enter taining way to get ther e is to take the cable car . From the Cable Car Towers (© 65/6270-8855), they make the trip daily from 8:30am to 11pm at a cost of S$19 (US$13/£8.55) round-trip adults and S$9.50 (US$6.35/£4.25) children. The oneway ticket is only one Singapore dollar less (67¢/45p). The view is okay (but too far from the city to see skyline) and the ride is especially fun for kids. The cable cars also extend up Mt. Faber on the Singapore side. If you choose to take a cable car up to the top, you can take it back down again. Otherwise, if you choose to alight at this stop, you can take a taxi back to civilization.

The new S entosa Express opened in J anuary 2007. This light-rail train operates between VivoCity at the H arbourFront MRT station and S entosa, with stops at the beach, major attractions, and the future site of the integrated resort. Pick up the train to Sentosa at VivoCity, third level, where you can purchase tickets for $\$3 (US\$2/\£1.35), which includes all-day rides, plus Sentosa admission.

A bus operates from the HarbourFront Interchange (near HarbourFront MRT) daily from 7am to 11pm, with extended hours until 12:30am on Friday, Saturday, and the eve of public holidays; it costs $\$3 (U$\$2/\pm1.35) per person. O r any city taxi can take y ou there; just pay the entrance fee after you cross the causeway, and the driver can drop you anywhere you'd like to go within the island.

GETTING AROUND

Once on S entosa, a fr ee bus system with thr ee color-coded r outes snakes ar ound the island from 7am to 11pm on weekdays and 12:30pm at weekends.

154 SEEING THE SIGHTS

The most notable attractions that you get free with your Sentosa admission are the Animal and Bird Encounters, a range of displays featuring r eptiles, macaques, parrots, and birds of prey that runs from noon to 5:30pm at the amphitheater at Palawan Beach; the Nature Trail that star ts from the bottom of the M erlion statue and the Dragon Trail Nature Walk, a 1.5km (1-mile) stroll through secondary rainforest to see dragon sculptures and local flora and fauna; and the beaches.

Sentosa has three beaches. At Siloso Beach, deck chairs, beach umbrellas, and a variety of watersports equipment like pedal boats, aqua bikes, fun bugs, canoes, surfboards, and banana boats ar e available for hir e at nominal charges. This is where the beautiful young things hang out and play beach v olleyball. Bicycles are also av ailable for hir e. Shower and changing facilities, food kiosks, and snack bars ar e at rest stations. Palawan Beach has a greater assortment of beachside bars and restaurants, while Tanjong Beach is the quietest and most laid back of the three.

Most attractions on Sentosa charge separate entrance fees; they include the Songs of the Sea laser fountain sho w ($$8/U$$5.35/£3.60 per person for 3 and o ver), Sentosa Luge & S kyride (S$10/US$6.70/£4.50 per ride; daily 10am–9:30pm), Magix motion cinema (adults $$18/U$$12/£8.10, children $$11/U$$7.35/£4.95; daily TigerSky Tower (adults S$12/US$8.05/£5.40, childr en S$8/ 10am–9pm), and the US$5.35/£3.60; daily 9am–9pm). The best attractions, in my opinion, are as follows:

Fort Siloso Fort Siloso guarded Keppel Harbour from invasion in the 1880s. It's one of three forts built on Sentosa, and it later became a military camp in World War II. The buildings have been outfitted to r esemble a barracks, kitchen, laundr y, and militar y offices as they looked back in the day In places, you can explore the underground tunnels and ammunition holds, but they 're not as extensive as you would hope they 'd be. The Surrender Chambers lead you through authentic footage, photos, maps, and recordings of survivors to chronologically tell the story of the Pacific theater activity of World War II and how the Japanese conquered Singapore. The grand finale is a wax museum depicting, first, a scene of the British surrender and, last, another of the Japanese surrender. (C) 65/6275-0388. Adults S$8 (US$5.35/£3.60), children S$5 (US$3.35/£2.25). Daily 10am-6pm.

Images of Singapore ★★ Images of Singapore is a highlight of a visit to S entosa. "Pioneers of Singapore" is an exhibit of beautifully constructed life-size dioramas that place figures like Sultan Hussein, Sir Stamford Raffles, Tan Tock Seng, and Naraina Pillai, to name just a few, in the context of Singapore's timeline and note their contributions to its dev elopment. Also inter esting are the dioramas depicting scenes from the daily routines of the different cultures as they lived during colonial times. It's a great stroll that brings history to life and giv es a good introduction to the cultural influences that continue to shape modern Singapore

The ne west addition, Festivals of S ingapore, is another life-siz e diorama exhibit depicting a few of the major festivals and traditions of the Chinese, M alay, Indian, and Peranakan cultures in Singapore.

© 65/6275-0388. Adults S$10 (US$6.70/£4.50), children S$7 (US$4.70/£3.15). Daily 9am-7pm.

Underwater World ★ (Kids Underwater World is without a doubt one of the mostvisited attractions on Sentosa. Everybody comes for the tunnel: 83m (272 ft.) of transparent acr ylic tube thr ough which y ou glide on a conveyor belt, gaping at shareks, stingrays, eels, and other creatures of the sea drifting by, above and on both sides. If you're lucky, you might see the scuba diver who hops in several times a day and feeds them by hand. In smaller tanks, you can view other unusual sea life, like the puffer fish and the mysteriously weedy and leafy sea dragons. The price also includes admission to the Dolphin Lagoon, with pink dolphin shows daily at 1:30pm, 3:30pm, and 5:30pm, with an additional show at 11am at weekends.

© 65/6275-0388. www.underwaterworld.com.sg. Adults S$23 (US$15/£10), childen S$15 (US$10/£6.75). Daily 9am–9pm.

8 ORGANIZED TOURS

Although touring Singapore is simple enough for DIY trav elers, visitors with little time or those who want to delv e deeper into local sights can take adv antage of convenient organized activities.

COACH TOURS

Tour East (© 65/6738-2622) organizes typical half-day coach tours of the city every day (adults $$30/U$$20/£14, childr en $$15/U$$10/£6.75), and full-day coach excursions on Tuesday, Thursday, Friday, and Sunday to some of the main attractions around the island (adults $$73/U$$49/£33, children $$36/U$$24/£16), some with meals included. The Peranakan Trail (Tues—Sun) takes visitors out to Katong, a suburban neighborhood that is the focal point of Peranakan heritage (adults $$45/U$$30/£20, children $$22/U$$15/£9.90).

For something different, go for the DUCKTour (© 65/6338-6877; www.ducktours. com.sg), a combined coach and boat tour in an amphibious v ehicle, a decommissioned military craft, that circles you around the Historic District for a tour of the harbor. The hour-long tour star ts every hour, departing from the S untec City M all G alleria, with additional transfers fr om the DUCKT ours office on O rchard R oad (at the corner of Cairnhill Rd.). Reservations are highly recommended, and tours cost $$33 (U$$22/£15) adults, $$17 (U$$11/£7.65) children ages 3 to 12, and $$2 (U$$1.35/90p) kids 2 and under. DUCKTours also operates the HiPPO Tour aboard an open-top double-decker bus, cruising Orchard Road, Little India, Kampong Glam, Chinatown, and the Historic District. Pick it up at the DUCKTours office on O rchard Road or at Suntec City, then get on and off at sights that interest you along the way. The day ticket costs $$33 (U$$22/£15) adults, $$13 (U$$8.70/£5.85) children 3 to 12, and $$2 (U$$1.35/90p) for kids 2 and under. Call DUCKTours for information.

WALKING TOURS

Singapore Walks (© 65/6325-1631; www.singaporewalks.com) is a r eputable outfit that organizes guided walking tours of the H istoric District, Chinatown, Little I ndia, Kampong Glam, and other neighborhoods Monday through Saturday, except for public holidays. Call them to find out the meeting time and place for the tour y ou want; for most walks, adults pay $$25 (US$17/£11), children tour for $$15 (US$10/£6.75). Their river walk, at $$28 (US$19/£13), includes a bumboat tour .

RIVER TOURS & CRUISES

Singapore River Cruises (© 65/6339-6833; www.rivercruise.com.sg) operates boats up and down the Singapore River and into the harbor from 9am to 11pm daily. A bumboat ride with recorded info about the riv erside sights costs adults S$18 (US$12/£8.10) and children S$8 (US$5.35/£3.60). You can also use the river cruise boats as a taxi, as it has 156 pick-up points from the Merlion (Fullerton), Boat Quay, Clarke Quay, and Robertson Quay.

The Imperial Cheng H o, operated by Watertours (© 65/6533-9811; www.water tours.com.sg), is a huge boat modeled after the sort of Chinese junk that Admiral Cheng Ho might have sailed when he explor ed this region in the 15th centur y. A 2 1/2-hour cruise takes you from Marina South Pier past the Singapore skyline, the mouth of the Singapore River, then out past S entosa, with a stop on K usu Island. I recommend the Morning Glory Cruise at 10:30am (adults $$27/U$$18/£12, childr en $$14/U$$9.40/ £6.30). There's also a High Tea Cruise at 3pm (adults $$32/U$$21/£14, children $$16/ US$11/£7.20) and a dinner cruise at 6:30pm (adults S$55/US$37/£25, children S$29/ US$19/£13). Watertours can arrange hotel transfer with your booking.

TRISHAW TOUR

These cycle rickshaws w ere once a staple form of public transpor tation. Now they're permitted on busy streets only with special permits, and only for guided tours. Singapore Explorer (© 65/6339-6833; www.singaporeexplorer.com.sg) coordinates regular outings through Chinatown from 10am to 7pm daily. You can either call ahead to book a ride or just show up at the corner of Sago and Terrenganu streets; you'll see the collection of trishaws under cover. The half-hour trip takes you through Chinatown's quaint streets for a charge of $$39 (U$$26/£18), childr en $$20 (U$$13/£9) per person. S ingapore Explorer can arrange pickup from anywhere if you book in advance.

THE SURROUNDING ISLANDS

Sixty smaller islands surr ound Singapore, some of which ar e open for full- or half-day trips. The ferry rides are cool and breezy, and they provide interesting up-close views of some of the larger ships docked in the harbor. The islands themselves are small and, for the most part, don't have a lot going on. The locals basically see them as little escapes from the everyday grind—peaceful respites for the family.

KUSU & ST. JOHN'S ISLANDS

Kusu Island and St. John's Island are both located to the south of Sngapore proper, about a 15- to 20-minute ferry ride to Kusu, 25 to 30 minutes to St. John's.

Its name meaning "Tortoise Island" in Chinese, many popular legends exist about how Kusu I sland came to be. The most popular ones involve ship wrecked people, either fishermen or monks, who were rescued when a tor toise turned himself into an island. Kusu Island was originally two small islands and a r eef, but in 1975, r eclaimed land turned it into a (very) small getaway island. There are two places of worship: a Chinese temple and a Malay shrine. The Chinese temple becomes a zoo during "Kusu Season" in October, when thousands of Chinese dev otees flock here to pray for health, pr osperity, and luck. There are two swimming lagoons (the one to the nor th has a pretty view of Singapore Island), picnic tables, toilets, and public telephones.

Historically speaking, St. John's Island is an unlikely place for a day trip. As far back as 1874, this place was a quarantine for Chinese immigrants sick with cholera; in the 1950s, it became a deportation holding center for Chinese Mafia thugs; and later it was a r ehab center for opium addicts. Today y ou'll find a mosque, holiday camps, three lagoons, bungalows, a cafeteria, a huge playing field, and basketball. I's much larger than Kusu Island, but not large enough to fill a whole day of sightseeing. Toilets and public 157 phones are available.

Ferries leave at regular intervals from the Marina South Pier (© 65/1800-736-8672); take the MRT to Marina Bay, then bus no . 402 to the pier. The boat makes a cir cular route, landing on both islands. A dult tickets cost $$15 (US$10/£6.75), and tickets for children under 12 are S$12 (US$8.05/£5.40). Tip: Pack a lunch and bring drinks, sunblock, and mosquito repellent.

PULAU UBIN ★

My favorite island getaway has to be U bin. Located off the nor theast tip of S ingapore, Pulau Ubin remains the only place in Singapore where you can find life as it used to be before urban development. Lazy kampong villages pop up alongside trails per fect for a little more rugged bicycling. It's truly a great day trip for those who like to explore nature and r ural scener y. R umors have it that during the occupation, the J apanese brought soldiers here to be tortured, and so some believe the place is haunted.

At the eastern tip of the island is the Chek Jawa marine reserve with a visitor center and a kilometer-long (1/2-mile) boardwalk that loops over the seashore and the mangrove. Halfway around there's a 20m-high (66-ft.) viewing tower that overlooks the tree canopy, so look out for bulbul birds, owls, and bats. Come at low tide to get the best view of the crabs, starfish, anemones, and sponges that cling to sur vival on the beach. Chek Jawa is about 40 minutes walk from the jetty, so rent a bicycle or a van to get there.

To get to U bin, take bus no. 2 to Changi Village (or just take a cab—the bus ride is long). Walk past the food cour t down to the water and find the ferr y. There's no ticket booth, so you should just approach the captain and buy your ticket from him—it'll cost you about S$2 (US$1.35/90p). The boats leave regularly, but only when they 've got enough passengers to justify a trip, with the last one returning from the island as late as 11pm (make sure you double-check with the ferryman so you don't get stranded!). If you want to avoid a long wait for a boat, peak hours ar e from 7am to 7pm.

Once you're there, bicycle rental places along the jetty can provide you with bikes and island maps at reasonable prices. The new 45-hectare (111-acre) Ketam Mountain Bike Park has trails with three levels of difficulty—one that meets international competition standards. A fe w coffee shops cook up r udimentary meals, and y ou'll also find public toilets and coin phones in the more populated areas.

SPORTS & RECREATION 10

BEACHES

Besides the beach at East Coast P ark (see "Attractions Outside the Urban Area," earlier in this chapter) and those on S entosa Island (see earlier), you can try the smaller beach at Changi Village, called Changi Point. From the shore, you have a panoramic vie w of Malaysia, Indonesia, and several smaller islands that belong to S ingapore. The beach is calm and frequented mostly by locals who set up camps and barbecues to hang out all day. There are kayak rentals along the beach, and in Changi Village you'll find, in addition to a huge hawker center, quite a few international restaurants and pubs to hang out in and have a fresh seafood lunch when you get hungry. To get there, take SBS bus no. 2 from either the Tanah Merah or Bedok MRT stations.

On Kusu and St. John's Islands, there are quiet swimming lagoons, a couple of which have quite nice views of the city.

BICYCLE RENTAL

Bicycles are not for rent within the city limits, and traffic does not really allow for cycling on city streets, so sightseeing by bicycle is not recommended for city touring. If you plan a trip out to Sentosa, cycling provides a great alternative to that island's tram system and gets you closer to the parks and nature there. For a little light cycling, most people head out to East Coast Park, where rentals are inexpensive, the scenery is nice on cooler days, and there are plenty of great stops for eating along the way. One favorite place where the locals go for mountain-biking sor ts of adventures (and to cycle amid the old kampong villages) is Pulau Ubin, off the northeast coast of Singapore.

AT EAST COAST PARK There are several rental shops for bicy cles and inline skates along the East Coast Park; couples and families often hir e tandems, too. Try SDK Recreation (© 65/6445-2969), near M cDonald's at Carpar k C; open 7 days fr om about 11am to 8 or 9pm. Rentals are S$4 to S$8 (US$2.70–US$5.35/£1.80–£3.60) per hour, depending on the type and quality bike y ou're looking for . I dentification may be requested, or leave a S$50 (US$34/£23) deposit.

ON SENTOSA ISLAND There are several rental places near S iloso Beach off S iloso Road, a short walk from Underwater World (see "Sentosa Island," earlier in this chapter). There's a kiosk at S akae S ushi ( 65/6271-6385) and another at Costa S ands ( 65/6275-2471). Both are open 7 days fr om around 10am to 6:30 or 7pm. R ental for a standard bicycle is S$5 (US$3.35/£2.25) per hour. A mountain bike goes for S$8 (US$5.35/£3.60) per hour. Identification is required.

IN PULAU UBIN When you get off the ferr y, there are a number of places to r ent bikes. The shops are generally open between 8am and 6pm and will charge between S$8 and S$14 (US$5.35–US$9.40/£3.60–£6.30) per day , depending on which bike y ou choose. Most rental agents will have a map of the island for y ou—take it. Even though it doesn't look too impressive, it'll be a great help.

GOLF

Golf is big in S ingapore, and although there are quite a few clubs, many are exclusively for members only. However, many places are open for limited play by nonmembers. All will require you bring an international par certificate. Most hotel concierges will be glad to make arrangements for you, and this may be the best way to go. Also, it's really popular for Singaporeans to go on day trips to M alaysia for the best courses.

Changi Golf Club This 9-hole walking course is par 34, and nonmembers may play at this priv ate club only on w eekdays (walk-ins okay, but adv ance booking r ecommended). They may even be able to set y ou up with other players. The course opens at 7:30am. Last tee is 4:30pm.

20 Netheravon Rd. © 65/6545-5133. Greens fees S$45 (US$30/£20); caddy f ees S$10 (US$6.70/£4.50). Mon-Fri 7:30am-4:30pm. Closed for maintenance Mon mornings.

Marina Bay Golf Course This 18-hole golf course opened in 2006 and comes with a great view of the city skyline. It's designed to resemble a Scottish links-style course, with 91 challenging pot bunkers. M arina Bay even offers night golfing fr om Wednesday to Friday, with the course entir ely floodlit. The attached driving range is open daily fr om 7am to 10:15pm.

80 Rhu Cross, #01-01 © 65/6345-7788. Greens fees Mon–Fri S$80 or S$110 (9 or 18 holes; US$54 or US$74/£36 or £50), Sat–Sun S$100 or S$195 (US$67 or US$131/£45 or £88). Sat–Tues 7am–5pm; Wed–Fri 7am–8:20pm.

Sentosa Golf Club The best idea if you're traveling with your family and want to get in a game, S entosa's many activities will keep the kids happy while y ou practice y our swing guilt-free at one of the club 's two 18-hole 72-par courses, the Tanjong and the Serapong (the home of the S ingapore Open). This private club charges much mor e for nonmembers than other courses (and weekend play for nonmembers is restricted to Sun afternoon), but both are beautiful championship courses and a r elaxing time away from the city. Advance phone bookings are required.

27 Buk it M anis Rd ., S entosa Island . ② 65/6275-0022. Greens f ees M on–Fri S$305–S$355 (US$204–US$238/£137–£160); Sun S$425–S$475 (US$285–US$318/£191–£214). Daily 7am–7pm.

SCUBA DIVING

The locals are crazy about scuba diving but are more likely to travel to Malaysia and other Southeast Asian destinations for good under water adventures. The most common complaint is that the water surr ounding Singapore is really silty—sometimes to the point where you can bar ely see your hand before your face. See chapters 13 through 15 for scuba activities in Malaysia.

SEA CANOEING

Rubber sea canoes and one- or two-person kayaks can be rented at Siloso Beach on Sentosa, the beach at East Coast P ark (near M cDonald's Carpar k C), and the beach at Changi Point. Prices range from S$14 to S$35 (US$9.40–US$23/£6.30–£16) per hour, depending on the type of craft you rent. Life jackets are provided. These places don't have phones, so just go to the beach and scout out the r ental places on the sand.

TENNIS

Quite a few hotels in the city provide tennis courts for guests, many floodlit for night play (which allows you to avoid the daytime heat), and even a few that can arrange lessons, so be sure to check out the hotel listings in chapter 5. If your hotel doesn't have tennis facilities, ask your concierge for help to arrange a game at a facility outside the hotel. Many hotels have signing agreements with sister hotel properties or special rates with independent fitness centers within the city.

WATER-SKIING & WAKEBOARDING

The new hot spot for waterskiing and wakeboar ding is Ski 360° at the East Coast P ark (© 65/6442-7318; www.ski360degree.com). Rather than a boat, skiers are pulled by an overhead cable like a snow ski lift around the perimeter of the lake. Ski passes range from $$32 (US$21/£14) per hour on weekdays to $$42 (US$28/£19) on weekends and public holidays. Boat-based skiing is r un by various clubs on $$ eletar I sland—contact the Singapore Waterski and Wakeboard Federation (© 65/6348-9943; www.swwf.org.sg) for information on courses and contacts.

WINDSURFING & SAILING

You'll find both windsur fing boards and sailboats for r ent at the lagoon in East Coast Park, which is where these activities primarily take place. Many require membership, but the Mana Mana Beach Club rents out to visitors at 1212 East Coast Pkwy. (© 65/6339-8878). For S$55 (US$37/£25) an hour, you can rent a Laser, or for S$45 (US$30/£20) an hour, you can rent windsurf gear.

Singapore Shopping

In Singapore, shopping is a sport, and fr om the practiced glide thr ough haute couture boutiques to skillful backalley bargaining, it is always exciting, with something to satiate every proshopper is appetite.

The focal point of shopping in S ingapore is Orchard Road, a very long stretch of glitzy shopping malls packed with Western clothing stor es, fr om designer apparel to cheap chic, and many other mostly imported finds. Singaporeans have a lo ve-hate r elationship with O rchard Road. As the shopping malls dev eloped, they brought hip styles into the r each of everyday S ingaporeans, adding a cosmopolitan sheen to S ingapore style. B ut Orchard Road also usher ed in a ne w culture of obsessive consumerism.

Even to outsiders, O rchard R oad is a drug; ho wever, most of the clothing and accessories shops sell Western imports, and the average visitor will find that the prices of Western brand-name fashions ar e only slightly less expensive than at home, if at all.

Another myth about shopping in Asia is that consumer electronics, cameras, and computer har dware and softwar e ar e a steal. Although some good bargains can be found if y ou hunt w ell, be car eful if the offer sounds too good to be tr ue—it usually is. By and large, prices her e are comparable to those of the West.

For shopping with an Asian flav there are some ex citing shopping ar eas-Little I ndia, Arab S treet, and Chinatown-where shopping for unusual handicrafts is as much a main attraction as the sights. Anybody who 's been ar ound Singapore long enough will tell y ou that most of the really juicy bargains went the way of the dodo when the huge shopping malls came to to wn, but if y ou know the value of certain items that you'd like, some comparison shopping may save you a little money. In this chapter, I'll give you some tips on where to find the better mer chandise, competitive prices, and memorable shopping experiences.

Take note: I am an expert shopper and have shopped just about everywhere in Singapore. The shops that I have singled out for this book are the best of the best; my family and I have purchased goods and services from virtually every one of them.

1 SINGAPORE SHOPPING: THE GROUND RULES

HOURS Shopping malls are generally open from 10am to 9pm Monday through Saturday, with some stores keeping shorter Sunday hours. The malls sometimes remain open until 10pm on holidays. S maller shops are open from around 10am to 5pm M onday through Saturday but are almost always closed on Sunday. Hours will vary from shop to shop. Arab Street is closed on Sunday.

PRICES Almost all of the larger stores in shopping malls have fixed prices. Sometimes these stores will have seasonal sales, especially from June into July, during the month-long Great Singapore Sale, when prices are discounted 50% or 70%. In the smaller shops and at street vendors, prices are sometimes not mar ked, and vendors will quote y ou higher prices than the going rate in anticipation of the bargaining ritual. These are the places to 161 find good prices, if you negotiate well.

BARGAINING In Singapore, not all shops fix prices on mer chandise, and even many that display price tags ar e open to negotiation. F or outsiders who ar e unaccustomed to this tradition, bargaining can be embarrassing and fr ustrating at first—especially for those who are used to accepting fixed prices without an argument. But with a little practice, soon you'll be bargaining with the best of 'em.

The most important tip for successful bargaining is to first have an idea of the value of what you're buying. This can be difficult for unusual items, but a little comparison shopping may help you out. By comparison shopping, I mean look at prices for the same item here in Singapore. Many foreigners overpay because they consider what the same item might cost back home, which naturally will be far mor e expensive than in S ingapore.

When bargaining it's important to keep a friendly, good-natured banter between you and the seller. In local terms, it's called, "showing face." Keep it friendly and respectful.

A simple "How much?" is the place to star t, to which they'll reply with their highest price. Tell them you're willing to pay half that amount and go from there. When buying more than one item, ask for a discount. If you've seen it cheaper elsewhere, tell them. Or you can pull the old "B ut I only have $20" ploy. (Just make sure you don't turn around and ask them to change a $50!) Try anything, even if it's just a wink and a little "D on't you have any special discounts for ladies shopping on Wednesdays?"

Some people have said that once you start the bargaining ritual, it's rude to walk away and not purchase the item. Well, I see it this way: I t's my money, and if I still don't feel comfortable shelling it out, then I won't do it under any feeling of obligation. (However, if you've spent hours negotiating o ver a high-priced item, and the o wner agrees to your offer, it will be consider ed harsh to walk away after going thr ough all that tr ouble.) Besides, your final bargaining strategy is to just politely say, "No, thank you" and walk away. You'll be surprised at ho w fast prices can come do wn as y ou're walking out the door.

GLOBAL REFUND SCHEME When you shop in stores that display the blue "Tax Free Shopping" logo, the go vernment will refund the 7% goods and ser vices tax (GST) you pay on purchases totaling $$100 (US$67/£45) or more, if you are leaving Singapore via air trav el. At the point of pur chase, the sales cler k will fill out a Tax Free Shopping Cheque, which you retain with your receipt.

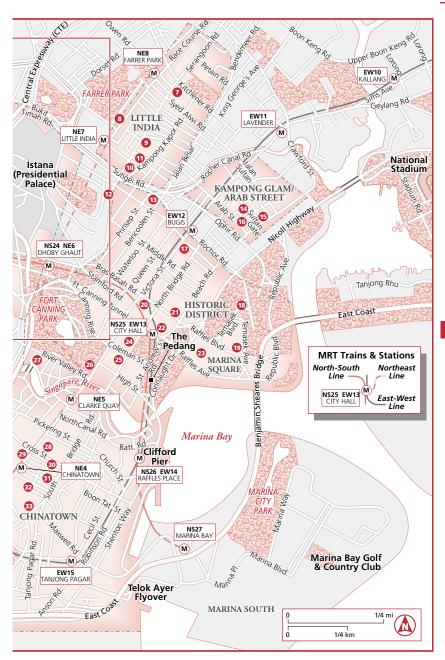

When you leave Singapore, present your checks at Customs along with your passport and let them see the goods you've purchased to show that you're taking them out of the country with you. Customs will stamp the forms, which you then present at any of the Global Refund Counters in the airport for an on-the-spot cash refund (in Singapore dollars), a check, a direct transfer of the amount to y our credit card account, or an airpor t shopping v oucher. F or complete details, call the G lobal R efund Scheme hot line at (2) 65/6225-6238; www.globalrefund.com.

Another company, P remier Tax F ree (www.premiertaxfree.com), also offers GST refunds with kiosks at the airport.

CLOTHING SIZES Those of you used to shopping in big-and-tall stores will unfortunately find little r eady-to-wear clothing in S ingapore that'll fit y ou—but that doesn't mean you can't take advantage of the many excellent tailors around town. Shopping for ready-made clothing in standard sizes can be confusing, because clothing made in Singapore is generally for export and everything else is imported from outside. This means that

2 THE SHOPPING SCENE, PART 1: WESTERN-STYLE MALLS

The newest and grandest shopping mall in Sngapore is VivoCity (1 HarbourFront Walk; © 65/6377-6860). Opened in November 2006, it's Singapore's biggest shopping mall, with 300 retailers, plus dining, entertainment, and even a rooftop sun deck with a bandshell and kiddie wading pool. It's conveniently built on top of the HarbourFront MRT station.

The excitement over VivoCity will soon be replaced by ION Orchard, which is slated to open by 2010. A co veted location at the corner of O rchard and P atterson roads, a central MRT station below, and a tower of super-luxury residences above, this high-end shopping mall is slated to be the be-all and end-all of the S ingapore shopping scene. Another hot mall, 313@Somerset, is also scheduled to open along O rchard Road at the Somerset MRT station around the same time.

166 ORCHARD ROAD AREA

The malls on O rchard Road are a tourist attraction in their o wn right, with smaller boutiques and specialty shops intermingled with huge depar tment stores. Takashimaya and Isetan have been imported from Japan. John Little is the oldest department store in Singapore, followed by Robinson's. Tangs is significant, having grown from a cartful of merchandise nurtured by the business savvy of local entrepreneur C. K. Tang. Boutiques range from the younger styles of Topshop and Miss Selfridge to the sophisticated fashions of Chanel and Salvatore Ferragamo. You'll also find antiques, oriental carpets, art galleries and curio shops, HMV music stor es, Kinokuniya and Bor ders bookstor es, video arcades, and scores of restaurants, local food courts, fast-food joints, and coffeehouses—even a few bars, which open in the evenings (see chapter 9). It's hard to say when Orchard Road is not crowded, but it's definitely a mob scene on w eekends, when folks have the free time to come and hang around, looking for fun.

Centrepoint Centrepoint is home to R obinson's depar tment stor e, which first opened in S ingapore in 1858. H ere you'll find about 150 other shops, plus fast-food outlets and a Times bookstore. 176 Orchard Rd. © 65/6235-6629.

Far East Plaza At this cr owded mall, the bustle of little shops will sell everything from CDs to punk fashions, luggage to camera equipment, ey ewear to souvenirs. Mind yourself here: Most of these shops do not display prices, but rather gauge the price depending on how we ealthy the customer appears. If you must shop here, use your shrewdest bargaining powers. It may pay off to wear an outfit that has seen better days. 14 Scotts Rd. © 65/6235-2411.

The Heeren Thanks to the opening of a S ingapore branch of B ritain's HMV music stores, the Heeren is the big hangout for teens. The front entrance of the mall hums with towers of video monitors flashing and blaring the latest in American and B ritish chart toppers. There is also a nice pub on a balcony o verlooking the busy intersection. 260 Orchard Rd. © 65/6733-4725.

Hilton Shopping Gallery The shopping arcade is the most exclusive in Singapore. Gucci, Donna Karan, M issoni, and Louis Vuitton are just a fe w of the international design houses that have made this their Singapore home. 581 Orchard Rd. © 65/6737-2233.

Lucky Plaza The map of this place will take hours to decipher , as mor e than 400 stores are here. It's basically known for sportswear, camera equipment, watches, and luggage. If you buy electronics, please make sure you get an international warranty with your purchase. Also, like Far East Plaza, Lucky Plaza is a notorious rip-off problem for travelers. Make sure you come here prepared to fend off slick sales techniques. It may also help to take the go vernment's advice and av oid touts and offers that sound too good to be true. 304 Orchard Rd. © 65/6235-3294.

Ngee Ann City/Takashimaya Shopping Centre Takashimaya, a major Japanese department store import, anchors Ngee Ann City's many smaller boutiques. Alfred Dunhill, Chanel, Coach, Tiffany & Co., R oyal Copenhagen, Waterford, and Wedgwood boutiques are found here, along with many other local and international fashion shops. 391 Orchard Rd. © 65/6738-2411.

Palais Renaissance Shops here include upmarket boutiques like Prada, Versus, and DKNY. 390 Orchard Rd. © 65/6737-1520.

Paragon Another upmarket shopping mall, with tenants including D iesel, Emanuel Ungaro, Escada, and Ferragamo. 290 Orchard Rd. © 65/6737-6993.

Shaw House The main floors of Shaw House are taken up by Isetan, a large Japanese 167 department store with designer boutiques for men 's and women's fashions, accessories, and cosmetics. On the fifth level, the Lido Theatre screens new releases from Hollywood and around the world. 350 Orchard Rd. (2) 65/6735-4225.

Tanglin Mall ★ A Mecca for expatriates, this mall has charming boutiques filled with regional handicrafts for the home and inter esting Southeast Asian ethnic-inspired fashions. 163 Tanglin Rd. (C) 65/6736-4922.

Tanglin Shopping Centre ** Tanglin Shopping Centre is unique and fun. You won't find many clothing stores here, but you'll find shop after shop selling antiques, art, and collectibles—from curios to carpets. 19 Tanglin Rd. © 65/6373-0849.

Tangs Once upon a time, C. K. Tang peddled goods from an old cart in the streets of Singapore. An industrious fellow, he parlayed his business into a small department store. A hit from the start, Tangs has grown exponentially over the decades and now competes with the other international megastores that have moved in. But Tang's is truly Singaporean, and its history is a local legend. 320 Orchard Rd. © 65/6737-5500.

Wisma Atria Wisma Atria caters to the younger set. Here you'll find everything from Gap to N ine West mixed in with numer ous eyewear, cosmetics, and high- and lo wfashion boutiques. 435 Orchard Rd. © 65/6235-2103.

MARINA BAY

The Marina Bay area arose from a plot of reclaimed land and now boasts the giant Suntec Singapore convention center and all the hotels, r estaurants, and shopping malls that support it. Shopping here is convenient, with the major malls and hotels interconnected by covered walkways and pedestrian bridges, making it easy to get around with minimal exposure to the elements. I t's also connected to Raffles City S hopping Centre by an underground shopping mall, the City Link Mall (@ 65/6339-9913).

Marina Square Marina Square is a huge complex that, in addition to a wide v ariety of shops, has a cinema, fast-food outlets and cafes, pharmacies, and convenience stores. 6 Raffles Blvd. ( ) 65/6335-2613.

Millenia Walk Smaller than Marina Square, Millenia Walk has more upmarket boutiques, like F endi, Guess?, and Liz Claiborne, to name a fe w. 9 Raffles Blvd. (2) 65/6883-1122.

Suntec City Mall Tons of shops selling fashion, sports equipment, books, CDs, plus restaurants and food cour ts, and a cinema adjacent to the S untec convention center. 3 Temasek Blvd. (f) 65/6825-2667.

AROUND THE CITY CENTER

Although the Historic District doesn't have as many malls as the O rchard Road area, it still has some good shopping. Raffles City S hopping Centre can be overwhelming in its size but is convenient because it sits right atop the City H all MRT stop. One of my favorite places to go, ho wever, is the v ery upmar ket Raffles H otel Shopping Ar cade, where you can enhance your post-shopping high with a Singapore Sling.

Parco Bugis Junction Here you'll find a fe w restaurants—fast food and fine dining—mixed in with clothing retailers, most of which sell fun fashions for younger tastes. 230 Victoria St. (f) 65/6557-6557.

168 Raffles City Shopping Centre Raffles City sits right on top of the City Hall MRT station, which makes it a very well-visited mall. Men's and women's fashions, books, cosmetics, and accessories are sold in shops here, along with gifts. 252 North Bridge Rd. (65/6338-7766.

Raffles Hotel Shopping A reade These shops are mostly haute couture; however, there is the Raffles H otel gift shop for inter esting souvenirs. For golfers, there's a Jack Nicklaus signature store. 328 North Bridge Rd. (?) 65/6337-1886.

THE SHOPPING SCENE, PART 2: MULTICULTURAL SHOPPING

The most exciting shopping can be found within the ethnic enclaves throughout the city. Down narrow streets, bargains are to be had on all sorts of unusual items. If you're stuck for a gift idea, read on. Chances are, I'll mention something for even the most difficult person on your list.

CHINATOWN

For Chinese goods, nothing beats Yue Hwa **, 70 E u Tong Sen St. (© 65/6538-4222), a five-story Chinese emporium that's an attraction in its own right. The superb inventory includes all manner of silk w ear (robes, underwear, blouses), embroidery and house linens, bolt silks, tailoring ser vices (for per fect mandarin dr esses), cloisonné (enamel work) jewelry and gifts, pottery, musical instruments, traditional Chinese clothing for men and women (from scholars' robes to coolie duds), jade and gold, cashmer e, art supplies, herbs—I could go on and on. P rices are terrific. Plan to spend some time here.

For one-stop souvenir shopping, you can tick off half your list at Chinatown Point, aka the Singapore H andicraft Center, 133 N ew B ridge Rd. ( 6534-0112), with dozens of small shops that sell mainly Chinese handicraft items fr om car ved jade to imported Chinese classical instr uments and lacquer ware. The best gifts ther e include hand-carved chops (Chinese seals), with a fe w shops offering good selections of car ved stone, wood, bone, glass, and iv ory chops r eady to be car ved to y our specifications. Simple designs are affordable, although some of the mor e elaborate chops and car vings fetch a handsome sum. You can also commission a personaliz ed Chinese scroll painting or calligraphy piece.

In the heart of Chinatown, Pagoda and Trengganu streets are closed to vehicular traffic and host a vibrant Chinatown Street Market (open daily about 11am-11pm), where you can find a wide variety of Chinese silk robes, Indonesian batik souvenirs, Vietnamese lacquerware, Thai silk home linens, and S ingaporean souvenirs—the list goes on. I' ve found the prices here to be inflated. If you're on a shoestring budget, find similar items at the market at the corner of Trengganu and Sago Streets, called Chinatown Complex, where you may find it easier to bargain.

My all-time favorite gift idea? Spend an afternoon learning the traditional Chinese tea ceremony at the Tea Chapter, 9-11 N eil Rd. (© 65/6226-1175), and pick up a tea set—they have a lovely selection of tea pots, cups, and accessories, as well as quality teas for sale. When you return home, you'll be ready to give a fabulous gift—not just a tea set, but your own cultural per formance as well. Another neat place to visit is Kwong  Chen Beverage Trading, 16 S mith St. (© 65/6223-6927), for some Chinese teas in handsome tins. Although the teas ar e really inexpensive, they're packed in lo vely tins—great to buy lots to bring back as smaller gifts. For serious tea aficionados or those curious about Traditional Chinese M edicine (TCM), stop by Eu Yan Sang, 269 S outh Bridge Rd. (© 65/6223-6333; www.euyansang.com.sg), where they have stocks of v ery fine (and expensive) teas, plus herbal remedies for health. For something a little more unusual, check out Siong Moh Paper Products, 39 Mosque St. (© 65/6224-3125), which carries a full line of ceremonial items. Pick up some joss sticks (temple incense) or joss paper (books of thin sheets of paper, stamped in reds and yellows with bits of gold and silver leaf). Definitely a conversation piece, as is the hell money, stacks of false paper notes that believers burn at the temple for their ancestors to use for cash in the afterlife. Perfect for that friend who has everything. Also, if you duck over to Sago Lane while you're in the neighborhood, there are a few souvenir shops that sell Chinese kites and Cantonese Opera masks—cool for kids.

ARAB STREET

On Arab S treet, shop for handicrafts fr om Malaysia and I ndonesia. I go for sar ongs at Hadjee Textiles, 75 Arab S t. (© 65/6298-1943), for their stacks of folded sar ongs in beautiful colors and traditional patterns. They're perfect for trav eling, as they 're lightweight, but can serve you well as a dressy skirt, bed sheet, beach blanket, window shade, bath towel, or whatever you need—when I'm on the road, I can't live without mine. Buy a few here and the prices r eally drop. For modern styles of batik, check out Basharahil Brothers, 101 Arab St. (© 65/6296-0432), for their very interesting designs, but don't forget to see their collection of fine silk batiks in the back. For batik household linens, you can't beat Maruti Textiles, 93 Arab St. (© 65/6392-0253), where you'll find high-quality placemats and napkins, tablecloths, pillow covers, and quilts from India. The buyer for this shop has a good eye for style.

I've also found a few shops in the area that carry handicrafts from Southeast Asia. For antiques and curios, try Gim Joo Trading, 16 Baghdad St. (② 65/6293-5638), a jumble of the unusual, some of it old. A lo vely antiques shop, Melor's Curios, 39 Bussorah St. (② 65/6292-3934), is almost a mini-museum of furnishings, home fixtures, and objets d'art that will fill any Singaporean with nostalgia.

Other unique treasures include the large assortment of fragrance oils at Jamal Kazura Aromatics, 21 Bussorah St. (© 65/6293-3320). Muslims are forbidden from consuming alcohol in any form (a pr oscription that includes the w earing of alcohol-based perfumes as well), so these oil-based perfumes re-create designer scents plus other floral and heady creations. Check out their delicate cut-glass bottles and atomiz ers as well. Finally, for the crafter in y our life, Kin Lee & Co., 109 Arab St. (© 65/6291-1411), carries a complete line of patterns and accessories to make local P eranakan beaded slippers. I n vivid colors and floral designs, these traditional slippers were always made by hand, to be attached later to a wooden sole. The finished versions are exquisite, plus they're fun to make.

LITTLE INDIA

I have a ball shopping the crowded streets of Little India. The best shopping is on Serangoon Road, where Singapore's Indian community heads for Indian imports and cultural items. The absolute best place to start is Mustafa Centre ★★, 320 Serangoon Rd./145 Syed Alwi Rd., at the corner of Serangoon and Syed Alwi roads (② 65/6295-5855), but 170 be warned, you can spend the whole day there—and night, too, because Mustafa's is open 24 hours every day. This maze of a department store fills 2 city blocks full of imported items from India. Granted, much of it is everyday stuff, but the real finds are rows of saris and silk fabrics; two floors of jaw-dr opping gold je welry in I ndian designs; an entir e supermarket packed with spices and packets of instant curries; r eady-made Indian-style tie-dye and embr oidered casual w ear; incense and per fume oils; cotton tapestries and textiles for the home—the list goes on. And prices can't be beat, seriously.

Little India offers all sor ts of small finds, especially thr oughout Little India Arcade (48 Serangoon Rd.) and just across the street on Campbell Lane at Kuna's, 3 Campbell Lane (1) 65/6294-2700). Here you can buy inexpensive Indian costume je welry like bangles, earrings, and necklaces in ex otic designs and a wide assor tment of decorative dots (called pottu in Tamil) to grace your forehead. Indian handicrafts include brass work, woodcarvings, dyed tapestries, wo ven cotton household linens, small curio items, very inexpensive incense, colorful pictures of Hindu gods, and other ceremonial items. Look here also for Indian cooking pots and household items.

Across the str eet from Little I ndia Arcade, Tekka Centre is being r enovated. This popular market carried stall after stall of inexpensive salwar kameez, or Punjabi suits, the three-piece outfits—long tunic o ver pants, with matching shawl—worn b y nor thern Indian ladies, plus lots of cheap Indian-made prêt-a-port. They've all put up in a temporary location along Race Course Road, not far from Tekka Centre.

Punjab Bazaar, #01–07 Little India Arcade, 48 Serangoon Rd. (?) 65/6296-0067), carries a more upmarket choice of salwar kameez, in many styles and fabrics. I f nothing strikes your fancy at Punjab Bazaar, try Roopalee Fashions, a little farther down at 88 Serangoon Rd. (© 65/6298-0558). Both shops carry sandals, bags, and other accessories to complement your new outfit.

BEST BUYS A TO Z

ANTIQUES A 5-minute walk north of Orchard Road is the mellow Tanglin Shopping Centre (Tanglin Rd.), whose quiet halls ar e just packed with little antiques boutiques. Tanglin is a quiet place, which adds to the museum feel as wu stroll past window displays of paintings, tapestries, and curios made of jade or brass-all kinds of quality collectibles and gifts. A couple of good shops to visit ar e Antiques of the O rient, #02-40 Tanglin Shopping Centre (© 65/6734-9351), selling old prints and maps, and Aspara, #02–30 Tanglin Shopping Centre (© 65/6735-5018), with an interesting collection of Chinese and Burmese antiques. There are many more—this is a place to really explore.

If you continue along Tanglin Road, you'll find Tudor Court, with a few more interesting shops inside, including Antiquity Hands of the Hills (© 65/6735-5332), with textiles, jewelry, and curio items from Tibet.

To get an ey eful of some local furnishings in antique I ndonesian, Chinese, and P eranakan styles, take a taxi out to Dempsey Road and stroll amid the many war ehouses. Inside each are dealers like the Shang Antique, full of Chinese antiques and B urmese teak, at Blk. 16, #01-04/05 Dempsey Rd. (© 65/6388-8838); and the Renaissance Art Gallery, with displays of Chinese figurines, Southeast Asian Buddha images, and chests, at Blk. 15, #01-06 D empsey Rd. ( © 65/6474-0338). There are more than a doz en places here, each specializing in differ ent wares. Some have large furniture pieces, from carved teak I ndonesian-style reproduction furniture to authentic pieces fr om mainland

China. Some have smaller collectible items, like carved scale weights from the old opium 171 trade or collections of Buddha images. Oriental carpet shops are also mixed in. The stores on Dempsey Road are all open daily fr om around 11am to 6:30pm, though they close for a short lunch break at midday. As with all of the antiques shops in S ingapore, they'll help you locate a reliable shipper to send your purchases home.

ASIAN FASHION You can find cheongsam, those cute little sleev eless shifts with the Mandarin collars and fr og closures, in ready-made polyester styles at souv enir shops all over Chinatown. When you're ready to get serious, go to Yue Hwa, 70 Eu Tong Sen St. (1) 65/6538-4222), where they hire expert cheongsam tailors from Hong Kong who fit the dress perfectly to your body, help you select your fabric from a wide range of pur e Chinese silks, and choose your own preferred style. Expect to drop about $$450 (US$302/£203) for a full-length cheongsam, a small price to pay for a dr op-dead sexy, one-of-a-kind formal dress.

If Bollywood blockbusters make you drool, you'll die for Stylemart, 149–151 Selegie Rd. (?) 65/6338-2073). Specializing in tailor ed Indian formalwear, they have rows of Indian-style brocade silks that are simply edible and an enormous collection of beathtakingly ex otic beaded silks to make y our eyes twinkle. They will fashion anything y ou want—traditional or modern dresses, gowns, and pantsuits. A simple formal gown with shawl in silk brocade will start at $$500 (US$335/£225). Pay more for beaded styles. It's worth it.

A couple of boutiques ar e making modern fashions with quir ky traditional twists. Shanghai Tang, at Takashimaya Shopping Centre, Ngee Ann City, 391 Orchard Rd., #02-12G ( 65/6737-3537), sells whimsical interpretations of traditional Chinese clothing, in campy color ed luxurious silk. Mumbai Sé, Palais Renaissance #01-00, 390 Orchard Rd. (6) 65/6733-7188), carries a wide selection of casual- and formalwar from India's hottest young fashion designers, most of whom use I ndian textiles that are to die

The true authentic Singaporean style is that of the Nonyas, Peranakan ladies who wear the traditional sarong kebaya. These ladies pair fine sar ongs with delicate lace blouses (kebaya) closed with silver or gold brooches and accessorized with beaded slippers and a bag. Still today you will see Singaporean ladies don sarong kebaya for weddings and special parties. If you'd like to outfit y ourself in one, the place to go is Rumah Bebe (113) East Coast Rd.; (6) 65/6247-8781), located in Katong, the hear t of Peranakan culture. Proprietress Bebe Seet is a local sarong kebaya expert. Her shop sells fine batiks (much nicer than the ordinary ones on Arab St.), and matching blouses. She also specializes in beaded slippers, teaching classes out of the back of her shop.

ELECTRONICS At Funan D igitalife M all, 109 N orth B ridge Rd. ( © 65/6336-8327), you can find computers and accessories—there are many, many shops, each with special offers and deals, so compare when you shop. At Sim Lim Square, 1 Rochor Canal Rd. (© 65/6332-5839), you can find not only computers, but office and home electonics as well. Bargain hard here—prices are not marked.

If you're in the mar ket for photographic equipment, the best place to go is Photo, #01–05, #01–07/08, #01–11/14 Peninsula Plaza, 111 North Bridge Rd. (© 65/ 6337-4274).

FABRICS Exquisite fabrics like Chinese silk, Thai silk, batiks, and inexpensive gingham are very affordable and the selections ar e extensive. Most fabrics are sold by the meter and there is no standard width, so make sure you inquire when you're purchasing 172 off the bolt. Be sure to check out Arab Street. I adore the selection of silks fr om India, Thailand, Japan, and Europe at Poppy Fabric, 111 Arab St. (© 65/6296-6352). Buy modern batik fabrics at Basharahil Bros., 101 Arab St. (© 65/6296-0432), and be sure to take a peek at their batik silks in the back—just gorgeous!

For other finds, a fe w shops along S erangoon Road in Little I ndia have some fine Indian silks. The largest selection is at Mustafa Centre, 320 S erangoon Rd. ( © 65/6295-5855).

FINE ART Singaporean interest in art has created a market far beyond its shores. The island is now a center for trading fine pieces between East and West, so you'll find quality contemporary works from the most celebrated new artists from Southeast Asia, South Asia, and East Asia.

Six galleries ar e packed into the Artrium@MICA (The M inistry of I nformation, Communications, and The Arts), 140 Hill St., including Gajah Gallery, with regional fine arts (© 65/6737-4202), and Soobin Gallery (© 65/6837-2777).

Artfolio's exhibits at #02–12 Raffles Hotel Arcade, 328 North Bridge Rd. (© 65/6334-4677), always make me wish I were rich enough to collect. If you're in the market for fine arts from the mainland (China, that is), this is the place to look.

Tanglin Shopping Centre also has a ton of art galleries. For contemporary Southeast Asian art, visit Hakaren Art Gallery, #02–43 Tanglin Shopping Centre (② 65/6733-3382). Kwan Hua Art Gallery, #02–65 Tanglin Shopping Centre (② 65/6735-5663), carries a collection of Chinese brush paintings and oils.

JEWELRY Jewelry can be a bargain. Gold, which is sold at the day's rate, is fashioned into modern Western styles and into styles that suit Chinese and I ndian tastes. Note: Chinese and Indian jewelers work with only 18-karat quality and above, usually 22- and 24-karat designs—Chinese gold tends to be bright y ellow, while Indian gold has a r eddish hue to it. Loose stones, either precious or semiprecious, are abundant in many reputable shops and can be set for you.

For contemporary upmarket jewels and settings, the most trusted dealer in Singapore is Larry Jewelry, #01-12 Paragon Shopping Centre, 290 O rchard Rd. ( © 65/6732-3222), but be prepared to drop some serious coin.

Peek in the window displays of the gold shops along S erangoon Road, and you'll see all kinds of Indian-style gold necklaces and bangles. Each Indian ethnic group has its own traditional patterns, all of them featuring intricate filigree. The selection at Mustafa Centre, 320 S erangoon Rd. (© 65/6295-5855), is absolutely mind-blo wing. I can 't imagine the staggering v alue of all their mer chandise. Don't forget there are two levels here; the best stuff is downstairs.

For Chinese jade, try Yue Hwa, 70 Eu Tong Sen St. (© 65/6538-4222). Jade is tough for Westerners to buy, because it's hard to discern a good piece from a bad one. Yue Hwa has fixed prices, but the quality is always dependable.

A unique gift or souvenir, a gold-plated orchid is something you don't find every day. The process was developed in the 1970s and is ex clusive to Singapore. Different orchid species make up brooches, earrings, and pendants at local jewelry designer RISIS, Singapore Botanic Gardens, 1 Cluny Rd. (© 65/6475-5014), with additional outlets at #01-064 Suntec City M all, 3 Temasek Blvd. (© 65/6338-8250), and #01-40 Centr epoint Shopping Centre, Orchard Road (© 65/6235-0988).

MEN'S TAILORING There are some fine men's tailors for suits and slacks made to fit, but beware touts along O rchard Road. If you can get a cheap price, chances ar e, you're getting a cheap suit. Justmen's, 19 Tanglin Rd., #01-36/39 Tanglin Shopping Centre 173 (© 65/6737-4800), is an institution within the expatriate community her e. They are well versed in current fashions, carry the best selection of fine fabrics, and can fit y our measurements perfectly—this will probably be one of the best suits you've ever had. The prices are a steal, starting from $$700 (US$469/£315) for a two-piece suit.

ORIENTAL CARPETS Once you've walked on a hand-knotted Nain in your bare feet, trailed your fingers along the pile of an antique Heriz, or admired the sensuous colors of a Tabriz, you'll never look at broadloom again with the same forbearance. I fluxury Oriental carpets seem too expensive for your pocketbook, Singapore prices will surprise you.

Hassan's C arpets, #03-01/06 Tanglin S hopping Centre ( © 65/6737-5626), has been a fixtur e in S ingapore for generations. P roprietor S uliman H amid is the local authority on carpets, having advised on and supplied the carpets for the restoration of Raffles Hotel. He and his staff kno w the background of every rug and have wonderful stories to tell. They for ego the har d sales pitch for mor e civilized discourse on carpet appreciation. It's an afternoon well spent. Carpets can be shipped home for you, with smaller rugs wrapped small enough to hand-carry onboard a plane.

If you still want to see more carpets, you can take a taxi out to Dempsey Road, where you'll find a few warehouses filled with stock.

Royal S elangor, the famous M alaysian pe wter manufactur er since 1885, rode high on the Malaysian tin business at the turn of the 20th centur y, pewter being a tin alloy. This firm is based in Kuala Lumpur and has eight showrooms in Singapore. If you're really into pewter, you can visit the Royal Selangor Pewter Centre, 3A River Valley Rd., 01–01 Clar ke Q uay (?) 65/6268-9600; www.royalselangor.com.sg), where they have an exhibit of the history of pewter works in the region, with pewtersmith demonstrations daily from 9am to 9pm for S$2 (US$1.35/90p) entry. For S$30 (US$20/£14), you can sign up for a half-hour hands-on pe wtersmith workshop. If you just want to shop, you can also stop in at their sho wrooms at #03–24 Raffles City S hopping Centre (C 65/6339-3958); #02-40 P aragon, 290 O rchard Rd. (C 65/6235-6633); and #02-127 Marina Square (@ 65/6339-3115).

POTTERY Antique por celain items can be found in the many small shops along Pagoda and Trenagganu streets in Chinatown. But the ultimate in pottery shopping is a place the locals refer to as the "pottery jungle." Thow Kwang Industry Pte. Ltd. is a taxi ride away at 85 Lorong Tawas off Jalan Bahar (© 65/6265-5808). This backwoods place has row after row of pots, lamps, umbr ella stands—you name it. There's even a room with antique pieces.

SHOES You can seriously go nuts o ver cheap shoes her e. We're talking prices fr om $$9.90 to $$39 (U$$6.65-U$$26/£4.45-£18) for cute little sandals, dr essy shoes, and work pumps. Granted, they're not Ferragamo, but at these prices, you can literally buy a pair of shoes to match every outfit in your closet. Unfortunately, if you're bigger than a U.S. size 8, finding your size will be tough. O therwise, my two favorite places for shoes on the cheap-cheap ar e the shoe depar tments at Seiyu, Parco Bugis Junction (© 65/ 6563-1106), and OG, Orchard Point (© 65/6317-2222).

SOUTHEAST ASIAN HANDICRAFTS At Lim's, 211 Holland Ave., #02–01 Holland Road Shopping Centre (© 65/6467-1300), and #02–154/155 VivoCity (© 65/6376-9468), you'll find items for the home from all over Southeast Asia; think Pier One

174 Imports, only cheaper. Vietnamese lacquer ware and handbags, I ndonesian teakwood carvings and batik linens, Thai silk pillow covers and tableware, Chinese pottery and arts, the list goes on and on. P rices are very reasonable, and the mer chandise is all of good quality.

I'm a big fan of local clothing designer P eter Hoe's boutique, Olathe, at 30 Victoria St., #01–05 CHIJMES (© 65/6339-6880). This Malaysian fabric and clothing designer fashions very handsome individual fabric patterns pieced together in styles to suit Western wardrobes.

Singapore After Dark

Cosmopolitan Singapor e has a small but well-developed nightlife, with a clubbing scene that has earned international attention and a burgeoning ar ts scene that delights audiences nightly with world-class music and theater per formances, insightful local and cultural productions, and gritty fringe sho ws. After a full day of sightseeing, make sure you save some energy for nightlife, which is a window into a different side of life in the Lion City.

As you plan y our trip, be sur e to log onto the Singapore Tourism Board's site, at www .visitsingapore.com, to find out about wor thwhile events that may coincide with y our visit. A fe w of the most notable are the Mosaic M usic F estival (www.mosaicmusicfestival.com), held for 2 weeks every March and featuring international and local musical per formers from a range of genres; The Singapore International F ilm F estival (www.film fest.org.sg), 2 w eeks of international arthouse films with an emphasis on the best releases from Asian directors, held every April; The Singapore Arts Festival (www.

singaporeartsfest.com), ev ery M ay into June, a month-long extrav aganza of delightful international per formances at various venues city wide; BayBeats (www. baybeats.com.sg), an outdoor rock festival featuring the best local alternative bands, with international indie rock guests; and the Singapore Sun Festival (www.singaporesunfestival.com), held every October, packed with events that pay homage to the finer things in life, from cuisine to lifestyle and culture.

Performances can range from highbrow orchestral productions at the city 's exquisite Esplanade-Theatres on the B ay concert hall to informal talks about local ar ts at home-grown cultural centers. The offerings presented in this guide will give you a terrific star ting point to explor e those events that interest you most.

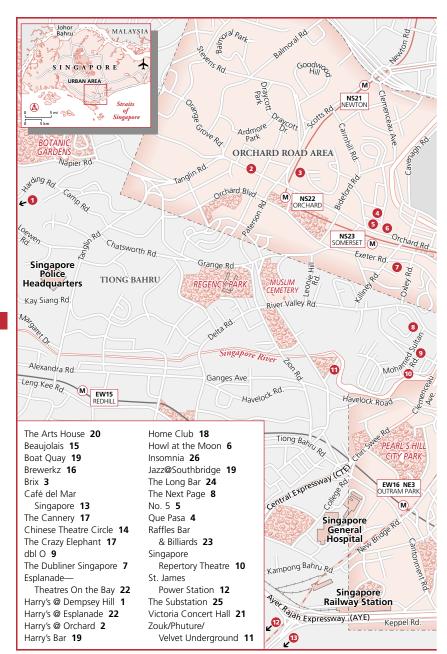

If par tying is y our thing, S ingapore's nightclub scene has a diverse range of possibilities, from intimate music bars to seaside chill-out cafes or glamor ous clubs. The venues in this guide have been selected to pr ovide something for everyone and every mood.

1 TIPS ON SINGAPORE NIGHTLIFE

INFORMATION Major cultural festivals are highly publicized by the Singapore Tourism Board (STB), who will give you complete details at their Visitors Centres (see p. 60 for locations) or on their website (www.visitsingapore.com). Another good resource is the Life! section of The Straits Times newspaper, which lists events for each day, plus theater and cinema listings. Where Singapore, a free magazine with local events listings, is available at STB kiosks as well. Another freebie, I-S Magazine, promotes Singapore's clubbing lifestyle.

TICKETS Sistic (© 65/6348-5555; www.sistic.com.sg) handles bookings for almost all theater per formances, concert dates, and special events. Their website offers a comprehensive events schedule, with online booking and ticket payment. (Tickets can be picked up at the venue prior to the per formance.) Visit them online or at one of their

176 Urban Singapore Nightlife

178 centrally located kiosks at The Centrepoint, Millenia Walk, Plaza Singapura, Raffles City Shopping Centre, VivoCity, or Wisma Atria.

HOURS Theater and dance performances can begin anywhere between 7:30 and 9pm. Don't be late—at Esplanade, they turn latecomers away . Many bars open in the late afternoon, a fe w as early as lunchtime. D isco and enter tainment clubs usually open around 6pm but generally don't get lively until 10 or 11pm. Closing time for bars and clubs is at 1 or 2am on w eekdays, 3 or 4am on w eekends. A fe w have extended hours until 6am.

DRINK PRICES Because of the government's added tariff, alcoholic beverage prices are high everywhere, whether in a hotel bar or a neighborhood pub. "House pour" drinks (made with inexpensive brands of alcohol) are between S$8 and S$14 (US$5.35-US$9.40/£3.60-£6.30)—this is consider ed cheap. A glass of house wine will cost between S$10 and S$15 (US$6.70-US$10/£4.50-£6.75), depending on whether it 's a red or a white. A pint of local draft beer ( Tiger, brewed in Singapore) is around S$10 (US$6.70/£4.50). Hotel establishments are, on average, the most expensive venues, while standalone pubs and cafes are better value. Almost every bar and club has a happy hour in the early ev enings, and discounts can be up to 50% off for house pours and drafts. Most of the dance and enter tainment clubs charge covers, but they will usually include one or more drinks. Hooray for ladies' nights—usually Wednesdays—when those of the feminine persuasion get in for free and sometimes even drink for free, too.

DRESS CODE Many clubs will require smart casual attire. Feel free to be trendy, but avoid dressing too casual or you may be turned away. Local clubbers dress up for a night on the town, usually in fashionista threads.

SAFETY You'll be fairly safe out during the we ee hours in most parts of the city, and even a single woman alone has little to worry about. You can always get home safely in a taxi, which, fortunately, isn't too hard to find even late at night, with a couple of ex ceptions: When clubs close, there's usually a mob of revelers scrambling for cabs. Also, after midnight, a 50% sur charge is added to the far e, so it's become common for driv ers to disappear from 11pm until midnight, when they can r eturn to work and earn more in fares.

THE BAR & CLUB SCENE

Singaporeans love to go out at night, whether it's to lounge around in a cozy wine bar or to groove on a dance floor until 6am. This city has become pretty eclectic in its entertainment choices, so y ou'll find everything from live jazz to acid jazz, from polished cover bands to internationally acclaimed guest DJs. The nightlife is happening. Local celebrities and the young, wealthy, and beautiful are the heroes of the scene, and their quest for the "coolest" spot keeps the club scene on its toes.

BARS

Brix In the basement of the Grand Hyatt Regency, Brix hosts a good house band and international visiting music groups as well. A pickup joint of sorts, it's a bit more sophisticated than others. The Music Bar features live jazz and R&B, while the Wine & Whiskey Bar serves up a fine selection of wine, Scotch, and cognac. H ours are Sunday to Wednesday 9pm to 3am, Thursday to Saturday 9pm to 4am. Happy hour nightly, from 7 to 9pm. Basement, Grand Hyatt Singapore, 10 Scotts Rd. 🕜 65/6732-1234. Cover charge after 179 10pm. S$25 (US$17/£11).

Café del Mar Singapore ★★★ Savor cooling cocktails while you sink your toes in the sand and gaz e at the tropical sunset. Café del Mar, based on the successful Ibiza formula, is pur e tropical island paradise, with a soundtrack of chill-out gr minutes from Singapore's urban center. The Sentosa island location makes for an allnight beach party—you can even have dinner here from a Mediterranean menu. Singapore's sun sets fr om about 7 to 7:30pm, so be sur e to come early for the S undowner Special happy hour from 5 to 7pm, with two-for-one cocktails, so you can get lit before it gets dark. Hours are Monday to Thursday 11am to 1am, Friday 11am to 4am, Saturunday 10am to 1am. day 10am to 4am, and S 40 Siloso Beach Walk, Sentosa Island. (f) 65/6235-1296. www.cafedelmar.com.sg.

The Crazy Elephant Crazy Elephant is the city's address for blues-rock. Hang out amid the breezes blowing off the river while listening to classic rock and blues by resident bands. This place has hosted, in addition to some ex cellent local and regional guitarists, international greats such as Rick Derringer, Eric Burdon, and Walter Trout. It's an unpretentious place to chill out and have a cold one. Beer is reasonably priced as well. Hours are Sunday to Thursday 5pm to 1am, and Friday and Saturday 5pm to 2am, with daily happy hour 5 to 9pm. 3E River Valley Rd., #01–03/04 Traders Market, Clarke Quay. (2) 65/6337-7859. www.crazyelephant.com.

The Dubliner Singapor e Located in a r estored colonial building, D ubliner's got great atmosphere, with vaulted ceilings, tiled floors and pretty plasterwork, and outdoor seating on the veranda. It's also a pretty decent Irish pub, with a friendly staff and a cast of regulars from local and expat drinking crowds. Sports matches are broadcast regularly (mainly soccer), and there's a variety of cold beer on tap. Hours are Sunday to Thursday 11am to 2am, and Friday and Saturday 11am to 3am; daily happy hour r uns 5 to 8pm. Winsland Conservation House, 165 Penang Rd. (f) 65/6735-2220. www.dublinersingapore.com.

Home Club The "home" of Singapore's arty underground clubbing scene, this small down-to-earth club hosts local DJs that specializ e in alternative and retro grooves and indie band par ties. True to its name, expect a homey atmospher e, furnished with mismatched cozy chairs and sofas. The crowd is equally funky, with a fun mix of young arty music heads. O pen Tuesday to Thursday 9pm to 3am, F riday and S aturday 10pm to 6am. The Riverwalk, #B1-01/06, 20 Upper Circular Rd. (f) 65/9877-6055. www.homeclub.com.sq. Cover charges are sometimes levied but include a complimentary drink.

Howl at the Moon ★★ Guaranteed laughs, this piano bar features a pair of dueling pianists who play sing-a-long songs all night long, interspersed with impr omptu banter. The audience itself becomes part of the performance, and by the end of the night, everyone is guaranteed to have made new friends. This bar also hosts stand-up comedy nights, open-mike sessions, and late-night dancing. O pen Tuesday through Sunday from 6pm till late. 2nd floor, Peranakan Place Complex, 180 Or chard Rd. (f) 65/6838-0281. www.howlat themoon.com.sg. Cover charges S$20 (US$13/£9) Fri-Sat after 8pm.

The Long Bar Touristy and expensive, the Long Bar is still a cultural institution. With tiled mosaic floors, large shutter ed windows, and punkah fans waving abo ve, this Raffles Hotel bar has tried to retain much of the charm of yesteryear so you can enjoy a Singapore Sling in its birthplace. And truly, the thrill at the Long Bar is tossing back one of these sweet, juicy drinks while pondering the S ingapore adventures of all the famous actors, writers, and artists who came through here in the first decades of the 20th century.

180 If you're not inspired by the poetry of the moment, stick ar ound and get juiced for the pop/reggae band at 9pm, which is quite good. H ours are Sunday to Thursday 11am to 12:30am, Friday and S aturday 11am to 1:30am. H appy hour nightly 6 to 9pm, with special deals on pitchers of beer and some mix ed drinks. A S ingapore S ling is S$26 (US$17/£12), and a S ling with souv enir glass costs S$37 (US$25/£17). Arcade, Raffles Hotel, 1 Beach Rd. (1) 65/6337-1230. www.raffles.com.

The Next Page Mohamed Sultan Road was Singapore's hottest nightspot in the 1990s, but today few bars stand out. This bar started it all but has since changed names, owners, and locations too many times. A fr eaky Chinese dream in an old S ingaporean shophouse, the bar's main room has old walls of cr umbling stucco washed in sexy Chinese red and lanterns glo wing crimson in the air shaft rising abo ve the island bar. The crowd is mainly young professionals who on the weekends have been known to dance on the bar. The back has a bit more space for seating, darts, and a pool table. A small snack menu is available. Open Sunday to Thursday 5pm to 1am, Friday and Saturday 5pm to 3am. Happy hour daily 5 to 9pm. 17 Mohamed Sultan Rd. (?) 65/6235-6967.

No. 5 Down Peranakan Place are a few bars, one of which is No. 5, a cool, dark place just dripping with S outheast Asian ambience, fr om its 1910 shophouse exterior to its partially crumbling interior walls hung with rich woodcar vings. The hardwood floors and beamed ceilings are complemented by seating areas cozied with oriental carpets and kilim throw pillows. Upstairs is more conventional table-and-chair seating. The glow of the skylighted air shaft and the whirring fans abo ve make this an ideal place to stop for a cool drink on a hot afternoon. In the evenings, be prepared for a lively mix of people. Open Monday to Thursday noon to 2am, F riday and S aturday noon to 3am, S unday 5pm to 2am. H appy hour daily noon to 9pm. 5 Emerald Hill Rd. (2) 65/6732-0818. www. emeraldhillgroup.com.

MICROBREWERIES

Brewerkz Brewerkz, with outside seating along the river and an air y contemporary style inside—like a giant war ehouse built ar ound brewing kettles and copper pipes brews the best house beer in Singapore. The bar menu features five tasty brew selections from recipes created by their English brew master: Nut Brown Ale, Red Ale, Wiesen, Bitter, and Indian Pale Ale (which, by the way, has the highest alcohol content). Their American-cuisine lunch, dinner, and snack menu is also very good—I recommend planning a meal her e as well. Open Monday to Thursday noon to midnight, F riday and Saturday noon to 1am, and S unday 11am to midnight. H appy hour is held daily noon to 3pm, with two-for-one beers. #01-05 Riverside Point, 30 M erchant Rd. © 65/6438-7438. www.brewerkz.com.

JAZZ BARS

Harry's Bar ★ The official after-wor k drink stop for finance pr ofessionals fr om nearby Shenton Way, Harry's biggest claim to fame is that it was bank-buster N Leeson's favorite bar. But don't let the power ties put you off. Harry's is a cool place, from airy riverside seating to cozy tables next to the stage. Harry's is known for its live jazz and R&B music, which is always good. Of all the choices along Boat Quay, Harry's remains the classiest; even though it's also the most popular, you can usually get a seat. U pstairs, the wine bar is v ery laid back, with plush sofas and dimly lit seating ar Harry's outposts have been opening all over the city: Harry's @ Dempsey Hill, Blk. 11 Dempsey Rd., #01-17A ( © 65/6471-9018); Harry's @ Esplanade, Esplanade M all Jazz@Southbridge (Finds While most jazz v enues in S ingapore adopt a r elaxed definition of jazz, incorporating jazzy pop and blues rock into their repertoires, this small and welcoming venue keeps it strictly jazz. P erformances change nightly, with excellent regular musicians and fantastic international greats. The place gets crowded, but people are friendly, especially if you want to talk about music. When visiting performers play, a door cover is charged. O pen Tuesday to S unday from 5:30pm until 1am (sometimes later). 82B Boat Quay. ( 65/6327-4671. www.southbridgejazz.com.sg.

Raffles Bar & Billiar ds Rich with the kind of elegance only histor y can provide, Raffles Bar & Billiards began as a bar in 1896 and over the decades has been transformed to perform various functions as the hotel's needs dictated. In its early days, legend has it that a patron shot the last tiger in Singapore under a pool table here. Whether or not the tiger part is true, one of its two billiar ds tables is an original piece, still in use after 100 years. In fact, many of the fixtures and furniture here are original Raffles antiques, including the lights above the billiards tables and the scor eboards, and are marked with small brass placards. In the evenings, a jazzy little trio shakes the ghosts out of the rafters, while the well-heeled lounge around enjoying single malts, cognacs, coffee, por t, champagne, chocolates, and imported cigars. Expect to drop a small fortune. Open daily 11:30am to 12:30am. Raffles Hotel, 1 Beach Rd. (?) 65/6331-1746. www.raffles.com.

CLUBS

The Cannery Clarke Quay houses a number of dining and nightclub v enues, many of which ar e operated under one management: The Cannery. Venues include Zirca, a mega dance club with a Cirque du Soleil feel; Rebel, a hip-hop club with a street graffiti attitude; and Yello Jello Retrobar, spinning nostalgic dance tunes; plus a fe lounges and cafes that ser ve a variety of styles for discriminating clubbers. Hours vary from club to club. Clarke Quay, 3B River Valley Rd. ( 65/6887-3733. www.the-cannery.com. Cover charges vary from club to club.

dbl 0 This cavernous place with a light-up wall and dance floor is v ery popular with those who want to hang out without the pr etenses of some of the ne wer fashion-victim clubs. Two smaller dance floors within the club play hip-hop and house grooves, and the club has a rooftop terrace garden for alfresco cocktails. Open Tuesday to Friday 8pm to 3am and Saturday 8pm to 4am. 11 Unity St. #01-24 Robertson Walk. (?) 65/6735-2008. www. emeraldhillgroup.com. Cover charges vary for men and women, depending on the night.

Insomnia Modeled after three popular sister clubs in Hong Kong, Insomnia is named for its hours: 24/7. It's one of only a few clubs in Singapore that has a license to operate 24 hours a day every day. A stable of bands revolve from club to club, playing dance rock, Top 40 hits, and pop to a packed dance floor . It has plenty of outside seating and also serves meals. It shares a central location at Chijmes with a number of other bars and restaurants, so you can come her e and check out sev eral nightlife options in one place. Open daily 24 hours. 30 Victoria St., Chijmes. © 65/6338-6883. www.liverockmusic247.com. No cover charge.

St James Power Station An old 1927 coal-fired power station has been given a new lease on life as a M ecca for clubbing. I ts 60,000 squar e feet of space has been divided 182 between nine independent clubs, each in a different flavor. For a cultural experience, try Dragonfly, with nightly Mandarin pop music shows featuring live performers and dancers on stage. Or Movida, a dance club that specializ es in world beats. Hours vary from club to club. 3 Sentosa Gateway, #01-01. (6) 65/6270-7676, www.stiamespowerstation.com. Cover charges vary from club to club.

Zouk ★ Singapore's first inno vative danceteria, Z ouk introduced the city to house music, which throbs nightly in its cavernous disco, comprising three warehouses joined together. They play the best in modern music, so ev en if you're not much of a gr oover, you can still have fun watching the party from the many levels that tower above the dance floor. If you need a bit mor e intimacy in your nightlife, Velvet Underground (VU), within the Zouk complex, drips in red velvet and soft lighting—a good complement to the more soulful sounds spinning her e. The newer addition to Zouk, Phuture, draws a younger, hip-hop-loving crowd than VU. Including the outdoor wine bar, Zouk is your one-stop shop for a par ty; in Singapore, this place is legendar y. All clubs are open daily 6pm to 3am. 17 Jiak Kim St. (?) 65/6738-2988. www.zoukclub.com. Cover charges vary.

GAY NIGHTSPOTS

Singapore's gay clubbing scene is alive and well but still very underground. Bars come and go, so to get the absolute latest happenings, you'll have to go beyond mainstream media. The Web has listings at www.utopia-asia.com, where you'll find the best updated information about the most recent parties and hangouts. For the latest info, I'd recommend one of the chat r ooms suggested at the addr ess above, and talk to the exper ts. Velvet Underground, part of the Zouk complex (see above), welcomes a mixed clientele of gays, lesbians, and straight folks.

WINE BARS

Beaujolais (Finds This little gem, in a shophouse built on a hill, is tiny, but its charm makes it a fav orite for loyal regulars. Two tables outside (on the F ive-Foot-Way, which serves more as a patio than a sidewalk) and two tables inside don't seem like much room, but there's more seating upstairs. They believe that wine should be affor dable, and so their many labels tend to be mor e moderately priced per glass and bottle. H ours are Monday to Thursday 11am to midnight, Friday 11:30am to 2am, and Saturday 6pm to midnight; happy hours runs from opening until 9pm. 1 Ann Siang Hill. ( 65/6224-2227.

Que Pasa One of the mor e mellow stops along Peranakan Place, this little wine bar serves up a collection of some 70 to 100 labels with plenty of atmospher central location. It's another bar in a shophouse, but this one has as its centerpiece a very unusual winding stair way up the air shaft to the lev el above. Wine bottles and ar twork line the walls. In the front, you can order tapas and cigars. The upstairs VIP club looks and feels like a formal living room, complete with wing chairs and boar d games. Hours are Monday to Thursday noon to 2am, Friday and Saturday noon to 3am, and S unday 5pm to 2am. 7 Emerald Hill Rd. (f) 65/6235-6626. www.emeraldhillgroup.com.

THE PERFORMING ARTS

Professional and amateur theater companies, dance troupes, opera companies, and musical groups offer a wide v ariety of not only Asian-focused per formances, but Western as well. Broadway road shows don't stop in S an Francisco, where the road ends, but continue on to include Singapore in their itineraries, and international stars like Placido Domingo, Yo Yo Ma, Wynton Marsalis, and Michael Jackson have come to town. International stars make up only a small portion of the performance scene, though. Singapore theater comprises four distinct language groups—English, Chinese, Malay, and Tamil—and each maintains its own voice and culture.

CLASSICAL PERFORMANCES

The Singapore Symphony Orchestra performs at the Esplanade–Theatres on the B ay, with regular special guest appearances by international celebrities. For information about the orchestra, check out www.sso.org.sg, or for per formance dates, see www.esplanade.com. Tickets purchased through Sistic (www.sistic.com.sg).

The Singapore L yric O pera collaborates with r enowned opera companies fr om around the world to stage such Western operas as Turnadot and Madame Butterfly at the Esplanade. Check their w ebsite at www .singaporeopera.com.sg for what 's on. S istic handles ticket sales.

The Singapore Chinese Orchestra, the only professional Chinese orchestra in Singapore, has won several awards for its classic interpretations. They perform every 2 weeks, mainly at the Singapore Conference Hall, 7 Shenton Way (© 65/6440-3839). See performance schedules at www.sco.com.sg, and buy tickets through Sistic.

THEATER

Most international companies will per form at the Esplanade–Theatres on the B ay, 1 Esplanade D r., a 10-minute walk fr om City H all MRT ( © 65/6828-8222; www. esplanade.com). Smaller shows are sometimes staged at the Victoria Concert Hall, 2nd floor Victoria M emorial H all, 11 E mpress P lace ( © 65/6338-6125). Sistic ( © 65/6348-5555; www.sistic.com.sg) handles bookings for both venues.

A fe w local companies ar e quite note worthy and manage their o wn per formance spaces. The Necessary Stage, 278 M arine Parade Rd., #B1–02 M arine Parade Community Building (© 65/6440-8115; www.necessary.org), blazed trails for the local performing ar ts scene after staging pr oductions that touched tender ner ves for the community, including a startlingly frank monologue by the first Singaporean to publicly declare his str uggle with AIDS. The Singapore Repertory Theatre, DBS Ar ts Centre, 20 Merbau Rd., Robertson Quay (© 65/6733-0005; www.srt.com.sg), is another company to watch; in recent years, they've staged local productions of perennial favorites like The Glass Menagerie and Little Shop of Horrors.

ARTS PROGRAMS

A number of venues have nightly programs of performance art pieces, fringe music productions, art talks, demonstrations, readings, and other specialized arts events.

The Arts House, 1 Old Parliament Lane (© 65/6332-6900; www.theartshouse.com. sg), is housed in the former Parliament House, whose government rooms, in grand colonial style, have been converted into intimate spaces for use as an alternative arts venue. The building also hosts an intimate music club and small cafe.

Also check out the many events at the Substation, 45 Armenian St. (© 65/6337-7800; www.substation.org), which offers its space to smaller theater tregroups, fine arts exhibitors and performance artists.

184 CULTURAL SHOWS

Once upon a time, Cantonese opera could be seen under tents on str eet corners throughout the city . These days, local and visiting companies still per form, but v ery sporadically. For a performance you can count on, the Chinese Theatre Circle, 5 Smith St. (© 65/6323-4862; www.ctcopera.com.sg), has a sho w on F ridays and S aturdays, with excerpts from the most famous and belo ved tales, with explanations of the craft. Come at 7pm for the pr eshow "dinner" (chicken nuggets, r eally; tickets ar e $$35/U$$23/£16), or, better yet, have dinner elsewhere and drop in at 8pm to catch the show with tea and pay only $$20 (U$$13/£9).

Malaysia in Depth

Malaysia's wow factor is its div ersity. Malay Muslims, Chinese Taoists and Buddhists, Indian Hindus, a large number of indigenous people, plus an assortment of Peranakans, Eurasians, and other races and religions all call themselves Malaysian, and each contributes to the fabric of this surprisingly color ful nation. Its long history is the story of how original Malays have accepted newcomers from Arabia, India, China, Thailand, Indonesia, and Europe, and fused their cultur es into a hodgepodge of a national identity. Malaysia has survived colonial rule of the Portuguese, Dutch, and English, plus the Japanese Occupation. Today the country manages to hold it together, albeit sometimes by a hair.

Diversity is also present in the landscape of Malaysia's cities and towns, where colonial heritage mixes with modern dev elopment and an underlying attitude of <code>kampung</code> (village) friendliness. Many visitors delight in the chaos of Kuala Lumpur. Its twisty narrow roads, sweltering traffic jams, haphazar d development, and back-alley shops and food stalls represent an Asia that is still a little bit untamed, ev en as the marvelous futuristic-Moorish Petronas Twin Towers loom o verhead. Meanwhile, in places like G eorgetown, Melaka, and Kuching, the past is everywhere you turn.

Not far fr om M alaysia's cities and to wns, y ou'll find rainfor ests and mountains, beaches and idyllic tropical islands, blue seas and coral reefs, and an abundance of peculiar flora and fauna, all so accessible it 's a wonder these places ar en't overwhelmed by tourists.

Accessibility is perhaps the best thing about Malaysia. Infrastructure is of good quality, communications are up-to-date, trav el operators ar e very organized, and accommodations and airports are some of the best in S outheast Asia. Better still, many M alaysians are comfortable speaking English, which opens up enormous possibilities for visitors to connect with local people in a very meaningful way.

1 MALAYSIA TODAY

The Malaysia of today is a peaceful nation of many races and ethnicities. C urrently, the population is estimated at 27.7 million inhabitants. Of this number, Bumiputeras are the most numer ous ethnic gr oup (broadly speaking) and ar e defined as those with cultural affinities indigenous to the region and to one another. Technically, this group includes people of the aboriginal groups and ethnic M alays. A smaller segment of the population is non-Bumiputera groups such as the Chinese, Indians, Arabs, and E urasians, most of whom descended fr om settlers to the region in the past 150 y ears. It is important to kno w the differ ence between the Bumiputera and non-B umiputera groups to understand M alaysian politics, which favors the first group in every policy. It is equally important to understand that, despite ethnic divisions, each group is considered no less Malaysian.

The state religion is Islam. The Muslim way of life is reflected in almost every element of M alaysian life. The strict adherence to I slam will most likely affect y our

The Populace

About 57% of Malaysians are Malay, while the Chinese and Indians make up 25% and 10% of the population, respectively. The remainder includes Eurasians and myriad indigenous groups such as the Orang Asli of Peninsular Malaysia; the Iban, Bidayuh, and Orang Ulu of Sarawak; and the Kadazan Dusun, Bajau, and Murut of Sabah.

vacation plans in some way. If you're traveling to Malaysia for an extended period of time or ar e planning to wor k ther e, I highly recommend Malaysian Customs & Etiquette: A Practical Handbook, by Datin Noor Aini S yed Amir ( Times Books, 2003), for its great advice on how to negotiate any situation.

As for the non-M uslim, life goes on under the government's very serious policy to pr otect fr eedom of r eligion. Note: Despite its "freedom of r eligion" policy, Malaysia is very anti-Zionist. Almost daily the local papers r eport anti-Semitic news, and Israel is the only country in the world to which M alaysian citiz ens may not travel. If you carry an Israeli passport, you will not be granted entry to the country. Jewish people from other countries who still wish to visit are advised to do wnplay their religion.

THE GOVERNMENT

From 1981 to 2003, the go vernment was led by Dr. M ahathir M ohamad, of the United M alays N ational O rganisation (UMNO), the leading go vernment par ty since M alaysia's independence. He was a popular prime minister who sought to cæate a competitive economic tiger while maintaining national policies that reflected liberal I slamic values. His outspoken nature created an endless stream of controversies surrounding policies that favored Bumiputeras, protected often shady links between go vernment and industry, and opposed conservative Islamic policies.

In 2003, he stepped do wn from power so that his successor , A bdullah B adawi, could continue the policies of the UMNO party.

In March 2008, Malaysian politics took an interesting turn when a general election saw the r uling government lose its parliamentary majority as well as control over a number of state legislatur es. E ven mor e controversial was the election of Anwar Ibrahim as leader of the Malaysia Opposition. Anwar was Mahathir's former deputy prime minister and was sacked over a sodomy and corruption scandal in 1998—it is generally believed that the charges against Anwar were false and the wor k of a go vernment who wanted to r emove Anwar's dissenting voice.

Malaysians' biggest concerns ar e the economy, ethnic discord, and rising crime rates.

THE ECONOMY

Until the Asian E conomic C risis that began in J uly 1997, M alaysia was one of the rising stars of the East Asian M iracle, with an economy built upon the manufacturing sector in electronics and roubber products, as well as on agriculture and mining. Though the crisis hit the country hard, the country bounced back with annual GDP average of 6%.

In J anuary 2009, the go vernment was adamant that the global r ecession would not seriously affect M alaysia, due to the nation's sound economic fundamentals, predicting a GDP growth estimate for the year at a highly optimistic 3.5%.

Shoe School

In January 2009, luxury shoemaker and Penang native Jimmy Choo announced his plan to create a series of couture shoe academies worldwide. The first is expected to open in his home country, Malaysia.

TOURISM

In 2008, M alaysia attracted a r ecord-breaking 22 million tourists, half of which were S ingaporeans. I mportant inbound tourism markets include Thailand, Indonesia, China, and India. The driving forces behind Malaysia's tourism industry are the Meetings, I ncentives, Conv entions & Exhibitions (MICE) sector; medical tourism; and educational tourism. The government's main tourism focus is historical site conservation, upgrades to tourism-r elated infrastructure such as air , land, and sea travel; and the improvement of tourism-related services and products.

In 2008, Melaka and Georgetown were inscribed in the U nited N ations E ducational, Scientific, and C ultural Organization's (UNESCO) World Heritage List for cultural sites. They joined G unung Mulu National Park and Kinabalu P ark, World Heritage List natural sites since 2000.

2 LOOKING BACK AT MALAYSIA

POPULATING THE PENINSULA (PREHISTORY-1ST CENTURY B.c.)

If Malaysia can trace its success to one element, it would be geographic location. Placed strategically at a major cr ossroads between the Eastern and Western worlds, the result of alternating seasonal northeast and southwest monsoons, M alaysia (formerly kno wn as M alaya) was the ideal center for East—West trade activities. The character of the indigenous Malays is credited to their r elationship with the sea, while centuries of outside influences shaped their culture.

The earliest inhabitants of the peninsula were the Orang Asli, who are believed to have migrated from China and Tibet as early as 5,000 y ears ago. The first M alays were established by 1000 b.c., having migrated not only to Malaya, but throughout the entir e I ndonesian ar chipelago as well, including Sumatra and Borneo. They brought with them kno wledge of agriculture and metalwork, as well as beliefs in a spirit world (attitudes that ar e still practiced by many groups today).

Malaysia's earliest trading contacts were established by the 1st centur y b.c. with China and India. India proved most influential, impacting local cultur e with B uddhist and Hindu beliefs that are evidenced today in the M alay language, literatur e, and many customs.

THE INTRODUCTION OF ISLAM (15TH CENTURY)

Recorded history didn't come around until the M alay Annals of the 17th centur y, which tell the stor y of P arameswara, also known as Iskander Shah, ruler of Temasek (Singapore), who was for ced to flee to Melaka (which was kno wn as M alacca during colonial occupation) ar ound a.d. 1400. He set up a trading por t and led it to world-renowned financial glory. Melaka 188 grew in population and prosperity, attracting Chinese, Indian, and Arab traders.

> With Arabs and M uslim Indians came Islam, and I skander Shah's son, who took leadership of M elaka after his father death, is cr edited as the first M alay to convert to the ne w religion. The rule of Melaka was transformed into a sultanate. and the wor d of I slam won conv erts not only in M alaya, but thr oughout Borneo and the Indonesian archipelago.

EUROPEAN INFLUENCES (16TH-19TH CENTURIES)

Melaka's success was not without admirers, and in 1511, the Portuguese decided they wanted a piece of the action. They conquered the city in 30 days, chased the sultanate south to J ohor, built a for tress that forestalled any trouble from the populace, and set up Christian missions. Portuguese stuck around until 1641, when the D utch came to to wn, looking to expand their trading po wer in the r egion. After M elaka's fall to the P ortuguese, its success plummeted and was nev regained.

The British came sniffing around in the late 1700s, when Francis Light of the British East I ndia Company landed on the island of P enang and cut a deal with the Sultan of K edah to cede it to the B ritish. By 1805, Penang had become the seat of British authority in S outheast Asia, but the establishment ser ved less as a trading cash cow and more as political leverage in the race to beat out the D utch for control of the S outheast Asian trade r outes. I n 1824, the British and Dutch finally signed a treaty dividing Southeast Asia. The British would hav e M alaya, and the D utch, Indonesia, Dutch-ruled Melaka was traded for British-ruled Bencoolen in Sumatra. In 1826, the B ritish East I ndia Company formed the S traits S ettlements, uniting Penang, Malacca (Melaka), and Singapore under Penang's contr ol. I n 1867, po wer over the S traits S ettlements shifted fr om the British East India Company to British colonial rule in London.

The Anglo-Dutch treaty never provided for the island of Borneo . The Dutch sort of took over Kalimantan, but the ar eas to the nor thwest were generally held under the rule of the Sultan of Brunei. Sabah was ceded for an annual sum to the B North Borneo Company, ruled by London until the J apanese inv aded during World War II. In 1839, Englishman James Brooke arrived in Sarawak. The Sultan of Brunei had been having a har d time with warring factions in this territor y and was happy to hand control over to Brooke. In 1841, after winning allies and subjugating enemies, Brooke became the Raja of S arawak, building his capital in Kuching.

Meanwhile, back on the peninsula, Kuala Lumpur sprang to life in 1857 as a settlement at the cr ook of the Klang and Gombak riv ers, about 35km (22 miles) inland fr om the w est coast. Tin miners from I ndia, China, and other par Malaya came inland to prospect and set up a trading post, which flourished. In 1896, it became the capital of the Bitish Malayan territory.

WORLD WAR II & MALAY-SIAN INDEPENDENCE

In 1941, the J apanese conquered Malaya en route to S ingapore. Life for M alayans during the 4-y ear occupation was a constant and almost unbearable str uggle to survive hunger, disease, and separation from the world. After the war , when the British sought to r eclaim their colonial sovereignty o ver M alaya, they found the people thor oughly fed up with for rule. The struggle for independence united Malay and non-M alay residents throughout the country. By the time the British agreed to M alayan independence, the states were already united. On August 31, 1957, M alaya was cut loose, and K Lumpur became its official capital. For a brief moment in the early 1960s, the peninsula was united with S ingapore and the Borneo states of S abah and S arawak. Singapore was ejected from the federation in 1965, and today Malaysia continues on its own path.

POST-INDEPENDENCE (1960S)

As Malaysia was emerging as an independent nation, its growth was stunted by racial tensions that ev entually led to race riots. N ational policies fav ored ethnic Malays—most of whom w ere living in rural poverty—in an attempt to lev el the 189 playing field in terms of access to education, jobs, and business opportunities. The policies were oftentimes at the expense of Chinese and I ndian Malaysians, many of whom were business o wners, as well as educated and wealthy Malaysians.

In 1969, following a national election, Chinese M alaysians demonstrated in Kuala Lumpur, sparking a backlash fr om Malays. Riots and violence led to the destruction of almost 6,000 homes and businesses and the deaths of 184 people.

THE LAY OF THE LAND

Tropical evergreen forests, estimated to be some of the oldest in the world, once covered more than 70% of Malaysia; however, logging and plantation establishment have taken their toll. There are diverse terrains, including mountainous for ests, sparsely wooded tangles at higher elev ations; lowland for ests, dense tr opical for ests; mangroves along the waters 'edge; and peat swamp for ests along the water ways. On the peninsula, thr ee national for ests-Taman Negara (or "National Forest") and Kenong Rimba P ark, both inland, and Endau R ompin N ational P ark, located toward the southeastern end of the peninsula—are the most conv enient to visit, especially Taman N egara, a half-day trip from KL. Sabah and Sarawak step up the adventure quotient with countless rainforests, peculiar wildlife, and fascinating indigenous cultures.

Malaysia is surrounded by the South China Sea on the east coast and the Straits of Malacca on the west, and the waters off the peninsula vary in terms of sea life (and beach life). The waters off the east coast house a living coral reef, good waters, and great tropical beaches, while mor e southerly parts host beach r esort areas. By way of contrast, the waters in southern portions of the Straits of Malacca are choppy and cloudy from shipping traffic—har dly ideal for diving. B ut once y ou get as far north as Langkawi, the waters become beautiful again. M eanwhile, the sea coast of Sabah and Sarawak includes some resort areas that are ideal for beach vacationing.

Protecting Malaysia's Rare Species

Vast tracks of primary rainforest in Malaysian Borneo are protected and believed to contain such rare species of animals as the Sumatran rhinoc eros, the Malaysian sun bear, and the clouded leopard. In forest reserves, visitors can sometimes spot large-nosed proboscis monkeys and hornbills, with their colorful beaks. A number of rehabilitation centers on Borneo protect the orangutan from extinction in the face of their disappearing habitat. On Borneo and Peninsular Malaysia, many species of sea turtles that use Malaysia's beaches for nesting grounds are also protected.

4 MALAYSIA IN POPULAR CULTURE

The mix of cultural influences in Malaysia is the r esult of centuries of immigration and trade with the outside world, par ticularly with Arab nations, China, and India. Early gr oups of incoming for eigners brought w ealth fr om ar ound the world, plus their o wn unique cultural heritages and religions. Furthermore, once imported, each culture remained largely intact; that is, none have truly been homogenized. Traditional temples and churches exist side by side with mosques.

Likewise, traditional art forms of various cultures are still practiced in Malaysia, most notably in the areas of dance and performance art. Chinese opera, Indian dance, and Malay martial arts are all very popular cultural activities. Silat, originating from a martial arts form (and still practiced as such by many), is a dance performed by men and women. Religious and cultural festivals are open for everyone to appreciate and enjoy. Unique arts and traditions of indigenous people distinguish Sabah and Sarawak from the rest of the country.

Traditional Malaysian music is v ery similar to I ndonesian music. H eavy on rhythms, its constant dr um beats underneath the light r epetitive melodies of the stringed gamelan (no relation at all to the Indonesian metallophone gamelan, with its gongs and xylophones) will entrance you with its simple beauty.

BOOKS

The Harmony Silk Factory, by Tash Aw (Riverhead Trade). One of Malaysia's most talented novelists, Aw spins a tale about a Chinese businessman in Malaysia at the start of the Japanese Occupation.

A History of Malaysia, by Barbara Watson Andaya (P algrave M acmillan). This easy-to-read book explor es some of the most important themes in M alaysia's history, from prehistory to present day.

Into the Heart of Bor neo, by Redmond O'Hanlon (Vintage). This funny travelogue follows two inexperienced travelers as they attempt a rugged trek into the deepest forests of Sarawak.

Kalimantaan, by C. S. G odshalk (Abacus). This is a well-researched fictional account of a colonial adventurer who attempts to rule Borneo, loosely based on the life of Sir James Brooke.

The Long Day Wanes: A Malaysian Trilogy, by Anthony B urgess (W. W. Norton & Co). Written by the author of A Clockwork Orange, these three novels mirror the author's experiences as a B ritish civil servant during M alaysia's transition to independence.

Malaysia: A Pictorial History, by Wendy Khadija Moore (Editions Didier Millet). A gorgeous coffee table book, this fantastic collection of illustrations, photographs, and artwork makes reading about history a joy.

Claim to Fame

Famous Malaysians include sexy Bond girl Michelle Yeoh, bestselling feng shui author Lillian Too, and shoe guru Jimmy Choo.

Funky Flowers

Borneo is home to the world's largest flower, the rafflesia, which can grow to over 90 cm (3 ft.) in diameter. The parasitic plant is a rare find, and the smell it gives off is similar to rotting flesh. Another interesting species of Borneo flora is the pitcher plant, which survives in poor soil conditions by drawing nutrients from insects and even small mammals it captures in its pitcher. Both plants are protected species.

FILMS

Anna and the King (1999). A H ollywood blockbuster, this r emake starring Cho w Yun Fatt and J odie Foster was filmed on Langkawi, after the Thai go vernment refused to let them film in Thailand. The Thais are not fans of the Western fairytale that claims that one of their most r evered monarchs was "civilized" by a simple English teacher.

Entrapment (1999). This thriller starring S ean Conner y and Catherine Z eta-Jones has its climax in Kuala Lumpur, with a stunt-filled heist at the top of the P etronas Twin Towers.

Sandokan (1976). B ased on the epic novels of E milio S algari, this mini-series captured the danger and myster y of colonial Malaya.

South Pacific (1958). B ali H ai is Tioman Island, at least for the cast and cr ew of South Pacific, who shot parts of the film there in the 1950s, most notably the scenes that accompany the song "H appy Talk."

Zoolander (2001). This low-brow comedy, starring Ben Stiller and Owen Wilson, is banned from Malaysia because of a plot that includes an assassination plan of a so-called prime minister of Malaysia. However, footage of a fictional Malaysia has absolutely no resemblance to the country at all.

5 EATING & DRINKING IN MALAYSIA

Malaysian food seems to get its origins from I ndia's rich curries, influenced by Thailand's herbs and spices. You'll find delicious blends of coconut milk and curry, shrimp paste and chilies, accented by ex otic flav ors of galangal (similar to turmeric), lime, and lemon grass. Sometimes pungent, a few of the dishes have a deep flavor from fermented shrimp paste that is an acquir ed taste for Western palates. By and large, Malaysian food is delicious, but in multicultural Malaysia, so is the Chinese food, the Peranakan food, the Indian food—the list goes on (see chapter 2). You'll also find fr esh seafood almost everywhere.

I str ongly r ecommend eating in a hawker stall, especially in Penang, which is famous for its local cuisine. Although almost all of the food y ou encounter in a hawker center will be safe for eating, it is advisable to go for fr eshly cooked hot or soupy dishes.

How to Eat Like a Malaysian

Many Malaysians eat with their right hands and off banana lea ves when they are having nasi padang or nasi kandar (rice with mixed dishes). This is absolutely acceptable. If you choose to follow suit, wash your hands first and try to use your right hand because the left is considered unclean (traditionally, it's the hand used to wash after a visit to the toilet).

Do not drink tap water anywher e in Malaysia. If you ask for water, either make sure it's boiled or buy mineral water. Otherwise, drink r efrigerated canned bev erages.

TAXES & SERVICE CHARGES A 10% service charge and 5% government tax are levied in large r estaurants, but hawkers charge a flat price without tax.

MALAYSIAN CUISINE

A Malay meal always revolves around rice, accompanied with curries, fried chicken or fish, vegetable dishes, and small por tions of condiments, called sambal. S ome of these condiments can be harsh to for eign noses, particularly sambal belacan, which is made with extr emely pungent fermented shrimp paste. M alays also fav or seafood, especially fish, prawns, and squid. As all Malays are Muslim, you won't find por k on the menu and most r estaurants ar e halal. Where you see mutton, most times it's goat, which is pr eferred over lamb for its milder, less musty taste and smell.

A good example of a local fav orite is nasi lemak, rice cooked in coconut milk and ser ved with fried chicken, prawn crackers, dried anchovies, a bit of egg, and a dark, sweet chili sauce. O ther fav orites are curr y-based dishes like kari ayam, a mellow, almost creamy, golden curry with chunks of chicken meat and potatoes; and rendang, stewing beef with a dr y curr y that's as sweet as it is savory.

Probably the most famous Malay dish is satay, barbecued ske wers of marinated chicken, beef, or mutton that ar e dipped in a chili peanut sauce. Another great dish is ikan bakar, which is fish smother ed in chili sauce and grilled in foil over an open flame.

An inter esting local v ariation to tr y is Malay food influenced by Indian Muslim cooking. Mamak, or Indian Muslim, stalls specialize in a dish called roti canai, fried bread to be dipped in curr y or dhal cha (vegetarian curr y); as w ell as murtabak, which is bread fried with egg, onion, and meat, which is also dipped in curry. These dishes are best enjo yed with a cup of teh tarik, fr othy tea made with sw eetened condensed milk.

Regional v ariations ar e also notable, particularly when it comes to P which is famous for its food. A per example of how region affects a dish can be found in laksa, a seafood noodle soup created by the P eranakans. In Singapore, laksa has a rich, spicy coconut-based both, almost like gravy. Alternately, Penang laksa is not coconut based, but is a fish br with a tangy and fier y flav or fr om sour tamarind and spicy bir d's-eye chili. Yet another variation, Sarawak laksa also forgoes coconut milk and instead focuses on a base of sambal belacan, or fermented shrimp paste. There are as many variations of laksa as there are towns.

Penang: Malaysia's Food Capital

Penang is world famous for its street food. There is a lot of Chinese food, plus Peranakan favorites, due to the greater proportion of Chinese living on the island. Here you'll find char kway teow (fried flat noodles with seafood), murtabak (mutton, egg, and onion fried inside Indian bread and dipped in dhal), and rojak (a spicy fruit and seafood salad), along with classics like fried spring rolls and satay.

Sarawak and Sabah also have their own unique cuisines, but mostly visitors will find typical M alay, Chinese, and I ndian dishes, but with local twists. O ne of my favorite purely indigenous dishes is umai, raw macker el seasoned with onion, chili, and salt, "cooked" in lime juice. I t can be found primarily in S arawak, but sometimes also in Sabah.

Planning Your Trip to Malaysia

Compared with spic y Thailand t o the nor thand c osmopolitan Singapore to the south, M alaysia is a relative secret to many from the West, and many travelers to Southeast Asia skip over it, opting for more heavily traversed routes.

Boy, are they missing out. Those who venture here wander through streets awash with international influences from colonial times and trek through mysterious rainforests and caves, sometimes without another tourist in sight. They relax peacefully under palms on lazy white beaches that fade into blue, blue waters. They spy the bright colors of batik sarongs hanging to dry in the breeze. They hear the melodic drone of the Muslim call to prayer seeping from exotic mosques. They taste culinary masterpieces served in modest local shops—from Malay with its deep mellow spices to succulent seafood punctuated by brilliant chili sauces. In Malaysia, I'm always thrilled to witness life without the distracting glare of the tourism industry, and I leave impressed by how accessible Malaysia is to outsiders while remaining true to its heritage.

Chapter 13 covers the major destinations of peninsular M alaysia. We begin with the country's capital, Kuala Lumpur (KL), then tour the peninsula's west coast—the cities of Johor Bahru, Melaka (Malacca), the hill resorts at Cameron and Genting Highlands, plus islands like the popular Penang, secluded Pangkor, and luxurious Langkawi. Chapter 14 takes you up the east coast of the peninsula, through resort areas in Kuantan, Cherating, and Terengganu, plus the small and charming Tioman and Redang Islands. My coverage also includes Taman Negara National Park, peninsular Malaysia's largest national for est. Finally, in chapter 15, we cross the South China Sea to the island of Borneo, where the Malaysian states of Sarawak and Sabah feature Malaysia's most impressive forests as well as unique and diverse cultures.

Malaysia is accessible to the rest of the world through its international airport in Kuala Lumpur. R egular flights also connect cities in the region to M alaysia's many smaller international airports. Domestic flights provide access to all parts of the country, and you can also travel by car, bus, or train from Singapore or Thailand.

For additional help in planning y our trip and for mor e on-the-ground resources in Malaysia, please turn to Appendix B on p. 296.

1 VISITOR INFORMATION

Tourism M alaysia (www.tourismmalaysia.gov.my) provides excellent information by way of pamphlets and advice. The information includes w ebsites, brochures, pamphlets, and other information that is regularly updated. S pecific destinations like islands, national parks, and cities may also have brochures.

Within M alaysia, each state or tourist destination has its own tourism board that operates a w ebsite and local offices for tourist information. These are also good sources for information, as they hav e onthe-ground kno wledge that 's mor e current. For each destination, I have provided websites, telephone contacts, and locations 195 of information offices.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS 2

PASSPORTS

To enter M alaysia you must hav e a v alid passport. For information on obtaining a passport, please see "Passports" in Appendix B (p. 296).

VISAS

Citizens of the United States do not need visas for tourism and business visits, and upon entry are granted a S ocial/Business Visit Pass good for up to 3 months. Citizens of Canada, A ustralia, New Zealand, and the U nited Kingdom can also enter the country without a visa and will be granted up to 3 months entry as well. For other countries, please consult the near est Malaysian consulate befor e your trip, for visa regulations. Also note: Travelers holding I sraeli passports are not permitted to travel within M alaysia (like wise, M alaysians ar e forbidden fr om trav eling to Israel).

MEDICAL REQUIREMENTS

If you are arriving from an area in which yellow fever has been reported, you will be required to show proof of yellow fever vaccination. Contact y our near est Tourism Malaysia office to see which areas fall into this category.

CUSTOMS What You Can Bring into Malaysia

With regard to curr ency, y ou can bring into the country as many foreign currency notes or traveler's checks as you please, but amounts ex ceeding RM10,000 or its equivalent in for eign currency need to be declared.

Social visitors can enter Malaysia with 1 liter of alcohol and 1 car ton of cigar ettes without paying duty—anything o ver that amount is subject to local taxes. Prohibited items include fir earms and ammunition. daggers and kniv es, and pornographic materials. Be advised that, similar to S ingapore, M alaysia enfor ces a v ery strict drug-abuse policy that includes the death sentence for convicted drug traffickers.

WHEN TO GO

There are two peak seasons in M alaysia. One peak tourist season falls roughly from the beginning of D ecember to the end of January, co vering the major N Hemisphere winter holidays—Christmas, New Year's Day, and Chinese New Year. Hari Raya P uasa, celebrating the end of Ramadan, shifts dates from year to year. If you plan to trav el to M alaysia ar ound September, I highly r ecommend calling Tourism Malaysia to find out exactly when this holiday will fall.

The second peak season falls in the months of June, July, and August, and can last into mid-S eptember. D uring this period, hotels ar e booked with families from the M iddle East, as this is school holiday season for many of the r egion's 196 countries. After September it's quiet again until December. Both seasons experience approximately equal tourist traffic, but in summer months that traffic may ebb and flow.

> Singapore's school holidays occur fr om mid-May through to the end of June, and again during N ovember and D ecember, when families are likely to flock to Malaysia's seaside resorts, particularly the budget and midpriced pr operties. M alaysians in general ar e r elaxed about childr en when on holidays. If you're looking for an intimate couples escape, tr y to av oid family resorts during this time. Malaysia's schoolchildren ar e cut loose for about 1 to 2 weeks in March, May, and August, with a longer break from mid-November through December.

CLIMATE

Climate considerations will play a r ole in your plans. If you want to visit any of the east-coast r esort ar eas, the lo w season is between November and March, when the monsoon tides make the water a little choppy for waterspor ts and beach activities. During this time, many island resorts may close. On the west coast, the rainy season is fr om A pril thr ough M ay, and again from October through November.

The temperature is basically static yearround. Daily averages range from 67°F to 90°F (21°C-32°C). Temperatures in the hill r esorts get a little cooler , av eraging 67°F (21°C) during the day, 50°F (10°C) at night.

HOLIDAYS

During Malaysia's official public holidays, expect government offices to be closed, as well as some shops and r estaurants, depending on the ethnicity of the shop owner or r estaurant owner. During Hari Raya Puasa and Chinese New Year, you can expect many shop and restaurant closings. However, look out for special sales and celebrations. Also count on public parks, shopping malls, and beaches to be more crowded during public holidays, as locals will be taking adv antage of their time off.

Official public holidays fall as follo ws: New Year's Day (Jan 1), Chinese New Year (Feb 14-15, 2010), Prophet Muhammad's Birthday (M ar), Labor D ay (M ay 1), Wesak Day (May 21, 2010), King's Birthday (Jun 6), National Day (Aug 31), Hari Raya Puasa (also called E id al-Fitr; Sept 20-21, 2009; S ep 8, 2010), D eepavali (Nov 15, 2009; Nov 5, 2010), Hari Raya Haji (also called E id al-A dha; N ov 27, 2009; Nov 14, 2010), and Christmas (Dec 25). Note: Please confirm all 2010 dates listed abo ve befor e y ou plan y our trip; some holidays vary, as they are dependent on the phases of the moon. I n addition, each state has a public holiday to celebrate the birthday of the state sultan.

For an exhaustive list of events beyond those listed here, check http://events.frommers.com, where you'll find a sear chable, up-to-the-minute roster of what's happening in cities all over the world.

GETTING THERE AND GETTING AROUND

GETTING TO MALAYSIA By Plane

Malaysia has fiv e international airpor ts at Kuala Lumpur, Penang, Langkawi, Kota Kinabalu, and K uching, although international flights come into some domestic airpor ts-and 15 domestic airports, including K ota B haru, K uantan, and K uala Terengganu. S pecific airpor t information is listed for each city.

A passenger ser vice charge, or airport departure tax, is incorporated in all ticket prices: RM5 ($1.45/90p) for domestic flights and RM40 ($12/£7.20) for international flights.

Malaysia Airlines (www .malaysia airlines.com) flies to six continents. I have found Malaysia Airlines service to be of a very good standar d, not to mention that they hav e possibly the lo west rates to Southeast Asia from North American destinations.

AirAsia (www .airasia.com) also flies long-haul flights to A ustralia and shor ter flights throughout the region.

From the U nited S tates, Malaysia Airlines ( 800/552-9264) flies fr om Los Angeles and Newark/NYC.

From Canada, North American carriers will hav e to connect with a M alaysia Airlines flight, in either East Asia, Europe, or the U.S.

From the United Kingdom, Malaysia Airlines ( 0870/607-9090) flies fr om Heathrow Airport to KL.

From A ustralia, Malaysia Airlines (? 132-627) flies dir ectly to KL fr om Perth, Adelaide, Sydney, and M elbourne, and via Sydney for Brisbane. AirAsia flies to P erth, M elbourne, and the G Coast.

From New Zealand, Malaysia Airlines (2) 0800/777-747) flies to KL fr Auckland.

By Train

FROM SINGAPORE The Keretapi Tanah Melayu Berhad (KTM), Malaysia's rail system, operates trains that connect cities along the west coast of Malaysia with Singapore to the south and Thailand to the north. Trains depart daily from the Singapore Railway Station (② 65/6222-5165) on Keppel Road in Tanjong Pagar, not far from the city center. Trains to Kuala Lumpur depar t daily for far es fr om S$34 to $$68 (U$$23-U$$46/£15-£31). The trip takes ar ound 7 hours on an ekspres train (avoid the 10pm mail train if you want to 197 reach ther e befor e y our next bir thday). Kuala Lumpur's KL Sentral railway station (?) 03/2267-1200) is a 10-minute taxi ride from the center of to wn and is connected to the Putra LRT, KL Monorail city public transpor tation trains, and the Express Rail Link (ERL) to Kuala Lumpur International Airport (KLIA).

FROM THAIL AND KTM's international service departs from the Hua Lamphong Railway Station (@ 662/223-7010 or 662/223-7020) in Bangkok, with operations to Hua Hin, Surat Thani, Nakhon Si Thammarat, and Hat Yai in Thailand's southern peninsula. The final stop in Malaysia is at Padang Besar, so passage to KL will require you to catch a connecting train onward. The daily service departs at 2:45pm and takes approximately 20 hours from Bangkok to Butterworth. There is no first- or thir d-class ser vice on this train, only air-conditioned second class; an upper ber th goes for about US$20 (S$30/£14), and lo wer is US$23 (S$34/£16). The latter is roomier

For a fascinating journey fr om Thailand, you can catch the Eastern & Orient Express (E&O) (www.orient-express. com), which operates a r oute betw een Chiang Mai and Bangkok, Kuala Lumpur, or S ingapore. Traveling in the luxurious style for which the O rient E xpress is renowned, y ou'll finish the journey in about 42 hours. Your entry-level cabin is Pullman, priced at US$3,240(S$4,836/ £2,176) per person double occupancy with S tate and P residential S uites also available. Fares include meals on the train plus accommodation in B angkok at the Peninsula Hotel. Overseas reservations for the E&O E xpress can be made thr ough travel agents or b y booking online. F rom Singapore, M alaysia, and Thailand, contact the E&O office in S ingapore at © 65/6395-0678.

198 By Bus

From Singapore, there are many bus routes to Malaysia. If you want to travel on land, I personally pr efer the bus o ver the train from Singapore to Kuala Lumpur. Executive coaches operated by Aeroline have huge seats that r ecline, serve a box lunch on boar d, and sho w mo vies. They also have express buses to v arious locations in KL and Penang. Call them in Singapore at © 65/6723-7222. B uses depar t fr om HarbourFront Centre at 1 M aritime Sq. for the 5-hour trip ($$49/U$$33/£22 one-way).

Buses to Johor Bahru and Melaka can be picked up at the B an S en terminal at the corner of Q ueen and Arab str eets. Call @ 65/6292-8149 for buses to J ohor Bahru (S$2.40/US$1.60/£1.10) and @65/ 6293-5915 for buses to M elaka (S$11/ US$7.35/£4.95).

From Thailand, you can grab a bus in either Bangkok or Hat Yai (in the southern part of the country) heading for Malaysia. I don 't r ecommend the bus trip fr Bangkok. It's just far too long a journey to be confined to a bus. You're better off taking the train. F rom Hat Yai, many buses leave regularly to northern Malaysian destinations, par ticularly B utterworth (P enang). Also be warned, the U.S. Department of State does not recommend U.S. citizens travel in cer tain parts of southern Thailand due to terr orist violence near Pattani and Narathiwat.

By Taxi (From Singapore)

From the J ohor-Singapore bus terminal at Queen and Arab str eets, the Singapore Johor Taxi Operators Association (© 65 / 6296-7054) can drive you to Johor Bahru for S$40 (US$27/£18).

By Car

Major international car-r ental agencies operating in S ingapore will r ent cars that you can take over the cause way to Malaysia, but be prepared to pay a small fortune.

They're much cheaper if y ou rent within the countr y. A t K uala L umpur I nternational Airport, find Avis at Counter B-16 at the arriv al hall in the main terminal (1) 03/8776-4540). Ther e's another branch at the international airport in Penang (04/643-9633), or make a booking through www.avis.com.

GETTING AROUND

The modernization of M alaysia has made travel her e-whether it's by plane, train, bus, taxi, or self-driv en car—easier and more convenient than ev er. Malaysia Airlines and AirAsia hav e ser vice to ev ery major destination within the peninsula and East Malaysia. Berjaya Air and Firefly service some cities and small islands. Buses have a massiv e w eb of r outes between every city and to wn. Train service up the western coast and out to the east pr ovides even mor e options. And a unique trav el offering—the outstation taxi—is available to and from most cities on the peninsula. All the options make it convenient enough for you to plan to hop fr om city to city and not waste too much precious vacation time.

By and large, all the modes of transportation between cities ar e reasonably comfortable. Air travel can be the most costly of the alternatives, followed by outstation taxis, then buses and trains.

By Plane

Malaysia Airlines (© 1300/883-000; www.malaysiaairlines.com) links fr om its hub in Kuala Lumpur to the cities of Johor Bahru, Kota Bharu, Kota Kinabalu, Kuala Terengganu, K uantan, K uching, Langkawi, Penang, and other smaller cities not covered in this v olume. Malaysia Airline's national hot line ( @ 1300/883-000) can be dialed fr om anywhere in the country. Individual airport information is provided in sections for each city that follows. Oneway domestic fares can average RM100 to RM400 ($29-$116/£18-£72).

AirAsia (© 03/8775-4000; www.air asia.com) competes with Malaysia Airlines with incredibly affordable rates. It links all the country's major cities with far es that, on av erage, r un fr om RM40 and up ($12/£7.20)—seriously.

Berjaya Air (© 03/2149-3731; www. berjaya-air.com) operates a small fleet of aircraft that ser vices KL to P angkor, Tioman, and Redang islands.

Firefly (© 03/7845-4543; www .fire flyz.com) has a small fleet that ser vices some peninsular and East Malaysian destinations.

By Train

The Keretapi Tanah M elayu Berhad (KTM) provides train ser vice throughout peninsular M alaysia. Trains r un fr om north to south betw een the Thai border and Singapore, with stops including B utterworth (P enang), K uala L umpur, and Johor Bahru. There is a second line that branches off at G emas, midway betw een Johor Bahru and KL, and heads nor theast to Tempas near K ota Bharu. Fares range from RM70 ($20/£13) for first-class between Johor Bahru and KL, to RM95 ($28/£17) for first-class passage between Johor Bahru and B utterworth. Train station information is provided for each city under individual city headings in the following chapters.

By Bus

Malaysia's intercity coach system is extensive and inexpensive, but I don 't really recommend it. With the exception of executive coach services between KL, Penang, and S ingapore, which are excellent, standard coaches get dire tier and direction mark, and road safety is a roll of the dice. Still, if you must, for each city covered, I've listed bus terminal locations, but scheduling information must be obtained from the bus company itself.

By Taxi

You can take special hir ed cars, called outstation taxis, between every city and state on the peninsula. Rates depend on the distance you plan to travel. They are fixed and stated at the beginning of the trip but many times can be bargained do wn. I n K uala Lumpur, go to the second lev el of the Puduraya B us Terminal to find cabs that will take y ou outside the city, or call the Kuala L umpur O utstation Taxi S ervice Station (? 03/2078-0213). A taxi from KL to M elaka will cost y ou approximately RM150 ($44/£27), KL to Camer on Highlands RM240 ($70/£43), KL to B worth or Johor Bahru RM320 ($93/£58). Outstation taxi stand locations are included under each individual city heading in the following chapters. These cars ar e usually basic older-model sedans.

Also, within each of the smaller cities, feel free to negotiate with unmeter ed taxis for hourly, half-day, or daily rates. I t's an excellent way to get ar ound for sightseeing and shopping without transpor tation hassles. Hourly rates are anywhere from RM30 to RM60 ($8.70–$17/£5.40–£11).

By Car

The cities along the west coast of the peninsula ar e linked by the N orth–South Highway. There are rest areas with toilets, food outlets, and emergency telephones at intervals along the way. There is also a toll that varies depending on the distance you're traveling.

Driving along the east coast of Malaysia is actually much mor e pleasant than driving along the w est coast. The highway is narrower and older , but it takes y ou through oil palm and r ubber plantations, and the essence of kampung Malaysia permeates throughout. As y ou near villages, you'll often have to slow down and swerve past cows and goats, which are really quite oblivious to oncoming traffic. You have to 200 get very close to honk at them before they move.

> The speed limit on highways is 110kmph (68 mph). On the minor highways, the limit ranges from 70 to 90kmph (43-56 mph). Do not speed, as ther e are traffic police strategically situated ar ound certain bends.

> Distances between major to wns ar e: from KL to J ohor B ahru, 368km (228 miles); fr om KL to M elaka, 144km (89 miles); from KL to Kuantan, 259km (161 miles); fr om KL to B utterworth, 369km (229 miles); from Johor Bahru to Melaka, 224km (139 miles); fr om Johor Bahru to Kuantan, 325km (202 miles); fr om Johor Bahru to M ersing, 134km (83 miles); from Johor Bahru to Butterworth, 737km (657 miles).

To rent a car in M alaysia, y ou must produce a driver's license from your home country that shows you have been driving at least 2 y ears. There are desks for major car-rental services at the international airports in K uala Lumpur and P enang, and additional outlets throughout the country (see individual city sections in later chapters for this information).

CURRENCY

Malaysia's currency is the Malaysian ringgit. Prices are marked as RM (a designation I' ve used thr oughout this book). Notes ar e issued in denominations of RM1, RM2, RM5, RM10, RM20, RM50, and RM100. O ne ringgit is equal to 100

sen. Coins come in denominations of 5, 10, 20, and 50 sen.

In 2005 Malaysia ended a 7-year peg of the ringgit at RM3.80 to US$1. Now, the country uses a managed float system that measures the curr ency against a basket of several major curr encies. At the time of Currency can be changed at banks and hotels, but you'll get a more favorable rate if you go to one of the moneychangers that seem to be ev erywhere; in shopping centers, in lanes, and in small stor es—just look for signs. They are often men in tiny booths with a display on the wall behind them showing the exchange rate. All major currencies are accepted, and there is never a problem with the U.S. dollar, except for dirty and old notes.

ATMS

Automated teller machines (A TMs) ar e found throughout the countr y, especially where tourists frequent. They will be hard to find on smaller islands and r emote beach areas. In addition, some ATMs may not accept credit cards or debit cards from your home bank. I hav e found that debit cards on the M asterCard/Cirrus or Visa/Plus networks are almost always accepted at Maybank, with at least one location in every major to wn. Cash is dispensed in ringgit deducted from your account at the day's rate.

CREDIT CARDS

Credit cards are widely accepted at hotels and restaurants, and at many shops as well. Most popular are American Express, MasterCard, and Visa. Some banks may also be willing to adv ance cash against y our credit card, but y ou have to ask ar ound because this service is not available everywhere.

In Malaysia, to r eport a lost or stolen card, call American Express at its head office in K uala L umpur (© 03/2161-202 4000); for MasterCard, call @ 800/804-594; and for Visa, call @ 800/800-159. Both numbers are toll-free from anywhere in the country. For more on credit cards and what to do if y our wallet gets stolen, see Appendix B: Malaysia Fast Facts.

TRAVELER'S CHECKS

American Express and Thomas Cook traveler's checks can be cashed at banks, hotels, and licensed money Unfortunately, they are often not accepted at smaller shops. F or mor e on trav eler's checks, see chapter 3.

HEALTH

STAYING HEALTHY

Whether you are exploring a city, the rainforest, or the beach, you'll need to protect yourself fr om exposur e to sun and heat. Drink plenty of fluids and av oid the outdoors during the middle of the day possible. Day or night, mosquito repellent is a must.

COMMON AILMENTS TROPICAL ILLNESSES Malaria has not been a continual thr eat in most par ts of Malaysia, even Malaysian Borneo. Dengue fever, on the other hand, which is also carried by mosquitoes, remains a constant threat in most areas, especially rural parts. Dengue, if left untreated, may cause fatal internal hemorrhaging, so if y ou come down with a sudden fev er or skin rash, consult a physician immediately. There are no prophylactic treatments for dengue; the best protection is to wear plenty of insect repellent—the breed of mosquito that carries dengue bites during the day opposed to malaria-carrying ones that bite at dusk. Choose a pr oduct that contains DEET or is specifically formulated to be effective in the tropics.

In 2003, SARS seemed to skip right over M alaysia, but Avian I nfluenza, or Bird Flu, has found its way her e, particularly in the nor thern state of K elantan.

The U nited S tates Centers for D isease Control (CDC) then advised trav elers to Malaysia to avoid contact with live or raw poultry.

DIETARY RED FLAGS The in KL is supposedly potable, but I don recommend drinking it—in fact, I don 't recommend drinking tap water anywher e in Malaysia. Bottled water is inexpensiv e enough and r eadily av ailable at conv enience stor es and food stalls. Food prepared in hawker centers is generally safe-I have yet to experience trouble, and I'll eat almost anywher e. If you buy fr esh fruit, wash it well with bottled water, and carefully peel the skin if y ou ar e r eally concerned.

WHAT TO DO IF YOU GET SICK AWAY FROM HOME

Consult a physician if y ou develop a high fever or diarrhea that lasts longer than 24 hours. My recommendation, if y ou need medical attention, is to consult the manager of your hotel or resort. All hotels and resorts have reputable general practitioners on call who speak E nglish. F or extr eme emergencies, hotel staff kno ws the closest hospital and best way to get there.

We list additional emergency numbers in Appendix B, p. 297.

7 SAFETY

Malaysia has been having an unfor tunate problem with thiev ery. "S natch thiev es" are becoming bolder and bolder, riding on motorcycles thr ough heavily populated areas in KL, Johor Bahru, and other cities, snatching handbags fr om women's shoulders. Some victims have been dragged and seriously injured. When y ou're out, don't wear your handbag on your side that's facing the street, or better y et, don't carry a handbag at all.

The first thing I do when I check into a hotel is put my passpor t, international tickets, extra cash, and traveler's checks, plus any credit or ATM card I do not have immediate plans to use, straight into the safe, either in my room or behind the hotel's front desk.

Be careful when traveling on overnight trains and buses where there are opportunities for theft. K eep your valuables close to you as you sleep.

TRAVELERS WITH DISABILITIES

Traveling in dev eloping countries is a daunting task for disabled people, and Malaysia is no ex ception. While airlines and most luxur y hotels have facilities for guests in wheelchairs, most every attraction, shopping mall, restaurant, and mode of public transportation provide no accessibility at all. In urban centers, side walks are nonexistent, buckled, or clutter ed. At the time of writing, there were no inbound tour operators specializing in tours for travelers with disabilities.

Two organizations that can offer assistance are the Malaysian Association for the B lind (www .mab.org.my) and the Society of the O rthopaedically H andicapped Malaysia (www.pocam.org).

GAY & LESBIAN TRAVELERS

Malaysia is a tolerant society that rar ely criticizes others in public, so gay and lesbian trav elers tend to be welcomed and treated like other trav elers, although public affection for straights or gays and lesbians is usually fr owned upon. As in many countries, the rural areas of Malaysia tend to be more conservative than the cities and, therefore, gay and lesbian travelers will have to respect the values and customs of their hosts. The east coast of the peninsula is another conservative area.

In the big cities, there are clubs and bars where visitors of all persuasion ar e w elcome. By asking around, it usually doesn't take long to find out those locations that are most w elcoming of gay and lesbian patrons.

SENIOR TRAVELERS

Seniors have fe w discounts in M alaysia, except at some attractions, wher e they might pay a bit less—but it 's usually such a small discount that it 's har dly wor th pulling out y our passpor t. H owever, Malaysia offers gr eat incentive es to lur e potential retirees to the countr y under a program called Malaysia M y S econd Home; check out www .mm2h.com for incentives on purchasing a house, car, and education, as well as details on tax breaks.

204 WOMEN TRAVELERS

As a woman who has trav eled solo to all corners of Malaysia and back again, I can honestly say I hav e never once felt thr eatened. H owever, my trav el philosophy is "When in Rome . . . ." Like Malay women, I wear long skirts or pants, and shirts that cover the tops of my arms. I always carry a scarf in my bag in case etiquette requires I cover my head. I find many doors open to me when the locals feel I am r espectful of their ways.

JEWISH TRAVELERS

Travelers with I sraeli passpor ts ar e not permitted to enter M alaysia. If you are of Jewish heritage and carr y a passport from a country other than I srael, I recommend you do wnplay y our heritage. M alaysian politicians have been known to make anti-Semitic comments in public, sentiments that, unfor tunately, carry over into some sections of the general population.

SUSTAINABLE TOURISM

Sustainable tourism is conscientious travel. I t means being car eful with the environments you explore and r especting the communities y ou visit. Two overlapping components of sustainable trav el are ecotourism and ethical tourism.

Malaysia naturally lends itself to ecotourism, as many par ts of the country are covered in primar y v egetation, although logging and agricultural expansion hav e taken their toll. M alaysia's best natural experiences are found in places like Taman Negara, E ndau R ompin, par ts of Langkawi, and S arawak and S abah on the island of Borneo . S eek out natural eco adventures in Kinabalu Park, Turtle Islands Park, Danum V alley, Tabin W ildlife Reserve, and the Lo wer Kinabatangan River in Sabah. In Sarawak, similar experiences can be had in national par Gunung M ulu, B ako, B atang Ai, and Gunung Gading.

The new travel buzz word is responsible tourism, which incorporates the principles of ecotourism, natur e-based tourism, and sustainable tourism. N ot all operators in Malaysia "walk the talk," so potential participants in certain activities need to r ead the finer detail or between the lines. Wild Asia (www .wildasia.net), established in 1998 as a grassr oots web initiative, provides independent assessments of natural sites, attractions, and Asian ecotourism products.

Some of M alaysia's longest-established and most r eputable ecotourism operators include Asian Ov erland S ervices (head office: (2) 03/4252-9100; fax 03/4257-1133; www.asianoverland.com.my), with offices in KL, Langkawi, P enang, K ota Kinabalu, and Kuching. They also operate one of the country's leading green hotels, the Frangipani Langkawi R esort and Spa (?) 04/952-0000; fax 04/952-0001; www.frangipanilangkawi.com). I n S abah, Wilderness E xpeditions (?) 089/219-616; fax 089/214-570; www expeditions.com) offers tours to all the state's leading natural ar eas. One of S arawak's most r espected eco-touring companies is Borneo A dventure (?) 082/ 245-175; fax 082/422-626; www neoadventure.com), with offices in K uching, M iri, and K ota Kinabalu (in neighboring S abah). They offer tours to Bario, B intulu, M ulu, and v arious longhouses.

SPECIAL-INTEREST TOURS

Most of the large inbound tour operators offer special-interest programs and should be contacted directly by those with specific needs and r equirements. Asian Overland Services (head office: ② 03/4252-9100; fax 03/4257-1133; www .asianoverland.com.my), with offices in KL, Langkawi, Penang, K ota Kinabalu, and K uching, offers pr ograms such as adv entures to Belum Valley, M alaysian ancient civilization (visits to B ujang Valley Archaeological S ite in K edah and U lu M uda E co Park), Taman N egara home stays, Lemanak longhouse stay (S arawak), diving off Sipidan I sland, and a M alaysia gourmet tour. Mayflower (© 03/6252-1888; fax 03/6257-0416; www .mayflower.com) is another inbound operator that offers generalist tours as w ell as specialist golf , rail, and diving packages.

10 PACKAGES FOR THE INDEPENDENT TRAVELER

Award—winning and internationally acclaimed Asian Overland Services (head office: © 03/4252-9100; fax 03/4257-1133; www .asianoverland.com.my) has been operating in M alaysia since 1976. They also happen to be one of the country's most sensitiv e tour operators with regard to the envir onment and local cultures. They can plan anything from rugged adventure tours to fantasy honeymoons. They have offices in KL, Langkawi, P enang, Kota Kinabalu, and Kuching.

11 SPECIAL-INTEREST TRIPS

MEDICAL TRIPS

Malaysia has been attracting medical tourists who come for quality ser vices in a number of state-of-the-art, internationally accredited hospitals staffed by Westerntrained physicians. While cost-cutting is typically the main motivation for such trips, other factors include privacy issues and holiday do wn-time during recuperation.

Tourism M alaysia r ecommends two organizations, Malaysia H ealthcare (www.malaysiahealthcare.com) and Medi-Travel (www.meditravel.com.my), both of whom can help trav elers plan their medical needs, link them with specialists appropriate to their cases, and help plan all aspects of travel.

FOOD TRIPS

Travelers who ar e inter ested in learning more about M alaysian food should contact Foodies and Friends (www.foodiesn friends.com.my) for details on wher e best to pursue such activities, including cooking classes for childr en. Cuisine S tudio (www.cuisine-studio.net) in K uala L umpur conducts cooking classes, as w ell as operates two ex cellent r estaurants in the city. One of the best places to learn about the intricacies of M alay cooking is with Shukri Shafie ("Cook with S hook"), who conducts such classes in a delightful setting on the island of Langkawi. H e also operates a beachside r estaurant on Langkawi called The Lighthouse (www .the lighthouse-langkawi.com).

206 VOLUNTEER & WORKING TRIPS

The World Wide F und for N ature (or World Wildlife Fund; © 03/7803-3772; fax 03/7803-5157; www.wwf.org.my) can provide assistance to those who are seeking to do some natur ev olunteering in the country, or at least direct potential visitors to those organizations or locations where this could be possible. Resumes should be forwarded directly to careersjob@wwf.org.my.

TELEPHONES

To place a call from your home country to Malaysia: Dial the international access code (011 in the U.S. and Canada; 0011 in Australia; or 00 in the U.K., I reland, and New Zealand), plus the country code (60), plus the M alaysia area code (Cameron H ighlands 5, D esaru 7, G enting Highlands 9, Johor Bahru 7, Kuala Lumpur 3, Kuala Terengganu 9, Kota Bharu 9, Kota Kinabalu 88, K uantan 9, K uching 82, Langkawi 4, M elaka 6, M ersing 7, Penang 4, Tioman 9), followed by the six-, seven-, or eight-digit phone number (for example, from the U.S. to Kuala Lumpur, you'd dial 011-60-3/0000-0000).

The nation's fix ed telephone pr ovider, Telekom Malaysia, also pr ovides International Direct Dialing (IDD) services from most better hotels.

To place a dir ect inter national call from M alaysia: D ial the international access code (00), plus the country code of the place you are dialing (U.S. and Canada 1, Australia 61, R epublic of I reland 353, New Zealand 64, U.K. 44), plus the area/city code and the residential number.

To r each the international operator: Dial © 108.

Prepaid international calling car ds are available from a number of companies and can be pur chased at most convenience stores. B e warned that not all phones accept all cards—most likely card-operated phones are located next to the shops that sell corresponding cards.

With widespread mobile phone usage, coin-operated phones are becoming a scarcity. If you find one, local calls are charged at 10 sen for 3 minutes.

To place a call within M alaysia: You must use ar ea codes if calling betw een states. Note that for calls within the country, ar ea codes ar e pr eceded by a z ero (Cameron H ighlands 05, D esaru 07, Genting H ighlands 09, J ohor B ahru 07, Kuala Lumpur 03, K uala Terengganu 09, Kota Bharu 09, Kota Kinabalu 088, Kuantan 09, K uching 082, Langkawi 04, Melaka 06, M ersing 07, P enang 04, Tioman 09).

For local dir ectory assistance: D ial ② 103.

CELLPHONES

Cellular telephone services are provided by Celcom, DiGi, Maxis, and Telekom Cellular. Celcom sells a Malaysia prepaid SIM card that can be used with an international cellular phone that assigns a local telephone number, allows free incoming calls, and provides a local rate for local calls. I t can be obtained befor e y ou trav el via Telestial (© 800/707-0031 in the U.S.; 800/795-252 in A ustralia; www.telestial.com), with courier deliv ery. Telestial also rents cellphones.

In KL, visit Celcom at Lev els 1 & 2, Podium Block Menara Naluri, 161B Jalan Ampang (not far from the Malaysia Tourism Centre). Or at KL I nternational Airport in the I nternational Arriv al H all, Level 3, in the M ain Terminal Building. Throughout Malaysia, contact Celcom at © 1300/111-000, www.celcom.com.my. Stored-value car ds can be topped up at convenience stores, gas stations, and Celcom outlets throughout the country.

INTERNET & E-MAIL With Your Own Computer

A growing number of better hotels no winclude Wi-Fi in guestrooms. If your hotel doesn't have Wi-Fi service, you can surf at a number of centrally located cafes that can be found in the central ar eas of the country's larger cities. With the exception of budget accommodations, all hotels have broadband internet connection in guestrooms.

Without Your Own Computer

Internet cafes can be found in ewry corner of the country, particularly in areas frequented by backpackers, near guesthouses, and in major shopping malls. Charges range from as low as RM4 (US$1.15/70p) per hour in cities to RM10 (US$2.90/£1.80) per hour in more remote destinations.

13 TIPS ON ACCOMMODATIONS

Peak months of the year for hotels in western peninsular M alaysia ar e D ecember through February and J uly through September. For the east coast, the busy times are July through September. You will need to make r eservations well in adv ance to secure your room during these months.

TAXES & SERVICE CHARGES All the nonbudget hotels charge a 10% ser vice charge and 5% go vernment tax. As such, there is no need to tip. But bellhops could be tipped at least RM2 (60¢/35p) per bag.

Suggested Itineraries Malaysia

Most visitors to Malaysia will arrive

at K uala L umpur's (KL's) international airport, spend a day in the capital, then run ar ound the country trying to see as much as they can in a shor t span of time. While it 's natural to want to maximiz your vacation time, I am of the philosophy that to tr y to pack too much into y our holiday will actually detract fr om y our overall trav el experience. I' ve advised countless people on their trips and hav been horrified to see some of the itineraries put together b y well-meaning but illinformed travel agents in the West. All are absolutely exhausting, some physically impossible. I recommend that you see no more than thr ee destinations in 1 w eek, preferably only two. That way y ou have time not just to see the sights, but to stop and feel the rhythm of local life-to eat the food, smell the smells, speak with the people.

The itineraries I' ve suggested in this chapter are all based on 1-w eek stays in Malaysia. Each itinerary differs depending on y our point of inter est: D o y ou like historical sights and museums? D o y ou want to appreciate nature and explore the great outdoors? Or do you just want to relax on the best beaches, scuba, or snorkel?

A major consideration when planning your trip is the heat! Especially if y ou're not used to it, the heat and humidity can sap the energy from you. By the time you've finished lunch, you'll bar ely have the stamina to keep up with the rest of your planned activities. Combined with jet lag, you'll be asleep before dinner. Not a swell time. Keep daily itineraries simple, and make time for afternoon coffee or rea!

Also, when flying betw een cities, budget your time like this: One flight will take about a half-day. So if y ou're flying fr om Penang to KL, set aside either a whole morning or a whole afternoon for the flight. That will include airpor t transfers and whatnot. Along the same lines, all domestic flights either originate or end up in KL. What this means is, if y ou're flying from Penang to, say, Kota Kinabalu, you'll fly fr om Penang to KL in the morning, have lunch in the airpor t, then spend the afternoon flying fr om KL to K ota Kinabalu. It will take a whole day.

1 MALAYSIA'S REGIONS IN BRIEF

Malaysia's territor y co vers peninsular Malaysia—bordering Thailand in the north just acr oss from S ingapore in the south—and two states on the island of Borneo, S abah and S arawak, appr oximately 240km (149 miles) east acr oss the South China Sea. All 13 of its states total 329,749 sq. km (128,602 sq. miles) of land. O f this ar ea, P eninsular M alaysia makes up about 132,149 sq. km (51,538 sq. miles) and contains 11 of Malaysia's 13 states: K edah, P erlis, P enang, and P erak are in the northwest; Kelantan and Terengganu are in the northeast; Selangor, Negeri Sembilan, and M elaka are about midway down the peninsula on the w estern side; Pahang, along the east coast, sprawls inward to co ver most of the central ar ea (which is mostly for est pr eserve); and Johor covers the entir e southern tip fr om east to west, with two vehicular causeways linking it to Singapore, just over the Strait of Johor. Kuala Lumpur, the nation's capital, appears on a map to be located in the center of the state of S elangor, but it is actually a federal district similar to Washington, D.C., in the United States.

On Borneo, S arawak and S abah share the landmass with Indonesia's Kalimantan. Also sharing the island, in a tiny nook on the Sarawak coast, is the tiny oil-rich S ultanate of Brunei Darussalam.

Back on the peninsula, the major cities can be found closer to the coastline, many having built on old trade or mining settlements, usually near one of M alaysia's many rivers.

2 MALAYSIA FOR HISTORY BUFFS & CULTURE VULTURES

This route brings you to Peninsular Malaysia's most historically significant destinations: Kuala Lumpur, Penang, and M alacca. You'll learn about the earliest trading por ts and colonial history, and have time to shop and savor local treats.

Days ① & ②: Arrive in Kuala Lumpur

After arriving in M alaysia's capital city, allow yourself a full day to recover and just spend your time wandering through the city's streets. Start at Merdeka Square, the focal point of colonial KL. Just behind the Moorish Sultan Abdul Samad Building, in the streets surrounding the Jame Mosque, you'll find KL's Little India of sorts. Continue your walk to the Central Market * , where nearby coffee shops can pr ovide a place to rest. After exploring stall after stall of M alaysian handicrafts at the Central Market, if you still have time and energy, cross the str eet to Chinatown, wher e you'll find more shopping, a street bazaar, and the Sri Mahamariaman Hindu Temple. See p. 227.

Day ③: Melaka (Malacca) ★★

Take an early-morning bus to M elaka and spend the day exploring the town's historic heart. The most impor tant things to see here are the Stadthuys ★ (p. 238), the history museum, located in the har d-tomiss r ed colonial building; the Cultural Museum ★ (p. 237), in a r eplica of a Malay-style palace; and the Baba Nyonya Heritage M useum ★ (p. 237), located inside an old millionair e's mansion. From the Baba Nyonya Museum, head to Jonker Walk to wander thr ough temples and antiques shops. See p. 239.

Day 4: Penang

Take an early-morning bus back to KL, then board a flight to Penang. Allow 1 day for the journey. Check into y our resort at Batu Feringgi so that when y ou arriv e, you can unwind with a cocktail as y ou watch the setting sun from the beach. See p. 245.

Day ⑤: Georgetown ★★★

Here's what I hav e to say about G eorgetown: D on't plan y our time too closely . Start off at the Penang Museum and Art Gallery \*\* (p. 249), where you'll get a brilliant o verview of the island 's histor y and cultures, then just spend y our time walking thr ough the str eets. A ttractions are all situated within walking distance, but don't rush: Take time to peek in the shop doors and snack on the local treats you'll find along the way . J ust make sure you're at the Cheong Fatt Tze Mansion  $\star\star\star$  (p. 245) in time for the 11am or 3pm tour-consider it a must! Afterward, mosey over to the E&O Hotel \*\* (p. 245) for either lunch or high tea in the old colonial dame. See p. 241.

Day 6: Penang Hill

The funicular train up the side of P enang Hill was built in 1923 to take British colonials up to the cooler climate of the hill, where they built lovely country homes and gardens. Get there before 9am to beat the long queue. At the top of the hill, y ou'll find restaurants, temples, and trails, one of which will lead you down to the botanical gardens. See p. 250.

Days 7 & 8: Back to KL

Hop a flight back to KL to pr epare for your return home. If you have time, you can stock up on gifts at KL Craft Complex (p. 228)—you'll find something for everyone on your list, in all price ranges, at this handicrafts showroom. See p. 215.

3 MALAYSIA FOR TREE-HUGGERS & THRILL SEEKERS

This route gives you some choices, depending on your particular interests. Peninsular Malaysia's Taman Negara preserve is hopping distance from KL, so if you want to mix history and nature, it's very easy to combine an overnight trip to Melaka with a 3-night package to the park—I have included this itinerary below. If you want to delve deeper into rainforest habitats, fly to Kota Kinabalu and sign up for a tour of the area's national parks; specialty trips take you into wildlife preserves or trekking up Mt. Kinabalu. If it's indigenous cultures you'd like to visit, fly out to Sarawak, spend a day exploring Kuching, then join a boat trip into the interior to visit longhouse communities. The diverse range of for ests in S abah and S arawak offers all kinds of adventures, from nature walks to animal sanctuaries, to cave exploring or white-water rafting.

Remember, if you go the outdoor adventure route, be sure to check monsoon seasons with your adventure tour coordinator. You don't want the rains to wash out your trek, or the dry season to take the thrill out of your white-water rapids. Also, for dive tours you'll have to allo w extra time betw een flights and div es, for your body to acclimate to the change in altitudes.

Days 1-3: Kuala Lumpur & Melaka

Follow the itinerary in "M alaysia for History Buffs & Culture Vultures," above, for Days 1, 2, and 3.

Days 4-0: Taman Negara National Park ★★★

Take an early-morning bus back fr om Melaka to KL, then boar d an afternoon bus to Malaysia's premier and most accessible national par k. Hop a boat upstr eam to the r esort and check in for a good night's r est. Taman N egara can be done very nicely in a full-boar d package. You'll have the chance to jungle-tr ek, traverse a canopy walk, vie w wildlife fr om obser vation stations, go on a night tr ek, river-raft and fish, and meet O rang Asli communities. See p. 229.

Days 7 & 8: Back to KL

See Days 7 and 8 in "Malaysia for History Buffs & Culture Vultures," above.

4 MALAYSIA FOR FAMILIES

Malaysia is a terrific destination for families. I t's safe, friendly, and free of some of the seedier trappings of tourism that can be seen in other parts of Asia. For this itinerary, I've included an equal mix of beach and culture—sightseeing in the mornings and fun in the afternoons—at a pace that allows for maximum flexibility.

Days ① & ②: Arrive in Kuala Lumpur

After arriving in M alaysia's capital city, allow yourself a full day to recover and just spend your time wandering through the city's streets. Start in Chinatown (p. 269), where you'll find a street bazaar and the

Sri M ahamariaman H indu Temple (p. 227), then cut thr ough the bustling Central M arket to Merdeka S quare (p. 226), the focal point of colonial KL. From the Jame Mosque, hop on the train to Jalan Imbi. Next to the station, y ou'll find Berjaya Times Square (p. 228), KL's largest 214 shopping mall, filled with tons of food and shopping, not to mention Cosmo's World Theme Park ★★★ (p. 225), the world 's largest indoor amusement park.

Day 3: Penang

Take an early-morning flight to P enang. Check into the Holiday Inn Resort Penang (p. 246) at B atu Feringgi, where they have special kids' suites. Have a ball at the beach! D on't forget to book waterspor ts activities for the following days.

Day 4: Georgetown ★★★

Spend y our morning in G eorgetown. Hit the Penang M useum and Ar t G allery ** (p. 249) at 9am, when it opens. Afterward, head over to the Cheong Fatt Tze M ansion ** (p. 248) for the 11am tour. Afterward, wander free through the streets befor e heading back to y our resort for an afternoon of relaxation at the beach. See p. 241.

Day 6: Penang Hill

The funicular train up the side of P enang Hill was built in 1923 to take British colonials up to the cooler climate of the hill, where they built lovely country homes and gardens. At the top of the hill, y ou'll find restaurants, temples, and trails, one of which will lead you down to the botanical gardens. The tr ek lasts only an hour or two, so if your children aren't too young, it should be a nice little adv enture. Carr y water and snacks! See p. 250.

Days 6 & 7: Back to KL

Peninsular Malaysia: Kuala Lumpur & the West Coast

The mor e popular destinations

in Malaysia dot the west coast of the country's peninsula. If you have little time, you can stick to this central corridor and still experience fascinating M alaysian heritage and gorgeous outdoors without trav eling too far.

Kuala Lumpur, the nation's capital, lies about midway between the nor thern border with Thailand and the tip of the peninsula, before you reach Singapore. For a newcomer, the city 's museums, shopping, and delicious dining choices make it a good introduction to M alaysia's cultur e. Kuala Lumpur is a great jumping-off point for disco vering M alaysia's rainfor ests as well.

The sleepy town of Melaka (Malacca), a 2-hour drive south of the capital city, has remarkably retained much of its old-world charm, with evidence of pr evious Portuguese, Dutch, and British colonists mixed with the cultur es of Arabs, I ndians, and Chinese who settled and traded her e centuries ago.

Pulau Pangkor, or Pangkor Island, is a secluded island hideaway with delicious tropical r esorts dripping with S outheast Asian ambience, a mer e half-hour's flight from Kuala Lumpur.

Farther nor th, Penang is perhaps Malaysia's most popular destination. Once the seat of B ritish colonial po wer in the region, Penang still bears signs of its former inhabitants. G eorgetown, the main town on the island, bustles with charm—narrow streets, old shophouses, places of worship, and terrific str eet food. I fy ou stay in Penang's beachfront area, you can enjoy the stimulating cultur e and a r elaxing beach experience.

1 KUALA LUMPUR ★★

Kuala Lumpur (or KL, as it is commonly kno wn) is, more often than not, a trav eler's point of entry to Malaysia. As the capital, it is the most modern and dev eloped city in the country, with contemporary high-rises and world-class hotels, glitzy shopping malls, and local and international cuisine.

The city began sometime ar ound 1857 as a small mining boomto wn created by the Industrial Revolution's hunger for raw materials. F ueled by tin mining in the nearby Klang River Valley, the town grew under the business interests of three officials: a local Malay ruler, a British resident, and a Chinese headman (Kapitan China). The industry and village attracted Chinese labor ers, Malays from nearby villages, and I ndian immigrants who followed the British. As the town grew, colonial buildings that housed local 216 administrative offices w ere er ected ar ound Merdeka Square, bounded by Jalan Sultan Hishamuddin and Jalan Kuching. The town, and later the city, spread outward from this center.

Life in 19th-century KL had many difficult starts and stops—tin was subject to price fluctuations, the Chinese were involved in clan "wars," but worst of all, malaria was killing thousands. Still, in the late 1800s, KL overcame its hurdles to become the capital of the state, and ev entually of the F ederated Malay States. Its development continued to accelerate, with a brief setback during the lapanese World War II occupation, until 1957, when newly independent Malaysia declared Kuala Lumpur its national capital.

Today the original city center at Merdeka Square is the core of KL's history. Buildings like the Sultan Abdul Samad Building, the Royal Selangor Club, and the Old Kuala Lumpur Railway Station are stunning examples of B ritish style peppered with Moorish flavor. South of this area is KL's Chinatown. Along Jalan Petaling and surrounding areas are markets, shops, food stalls, and the bustling life of the Chinese community. There's also a Little India in KL, ar ound the area occupied by Masjid Jame, where you'll find flower stalls, Indian Muslim and Malay costumes, and traditional items. Across the river you'll find Lake Gardens, a large sanctuary that houses Kuala Lumpur's bird park, butterfly park, and other attractions and gar dens. Modern Kuala Lumpur is rooted in the city's "Golden Triangle," bounded by Jalan Ampang, Jalan Tun Razak, and Jalan Imbi. This section is home to most of KL's hotels, office complexes, shopping malls, and sights like the KL Tower and the Petronas Twin Towers, the tallest buildings in the world from 1998 to 2004, when Taipei 101 stole the title. They are now officially the world's tallest twin towers.

ESSENTIALS

Visitor Information

In Kuala Lumpur, Tourism Malaysia has several offices. The largest is at the MTC, the Malaysia Tourist Centre (see "Attractions," later in this chapter), located on 109 J alan Ampang (© 03/2164-3929) and open daily fr om 8am to 10:30pm. I n addition to a tourist information desk, MT C has a money changer; ATM; tourist police post; trav el agent booking for Taman Negara trips, city tours, and limited hotel bookings; souv enir shops; an amphitheater; and Transnasional bus ticket bookings.

Vision KL Magazine is offered for free in many hotel rooms and has listings for events in KL and Malaysia. At newsstands, it costs RM6.80 ($1.95/£1.25). The monthly Time Out is a more comprehensive alternative.

Getting There

BY TRAIN I love KL's shiny new train station, KL Sentral. Not only does it serve as a clean, safe, and or derly base from which to take the train, but it 's also a hub for local commuter train services around the city; it's got tons of facilities, moneychangers, ATMs, fast food, and shops; and it's got an easy taxi coupon system (about RM10/$2.90/£1.80 or RM13/$3.75/£2.35 to central parts of the city)—cabs are really easy to find here. For KL Sentral information, call © 03/2267-1200.

If you're arriving in KL by bus, be warned, different bus companies drop off at different locations around the city. In chapter 11, "Planning Your Trip to Malaysia," I recommended Aeroline buses fr om Singapore (© 65/6723-7222). These buses will drop you off at the Cor us Hotel in Kuala Lumpur, which is located in the hear t of the city. KL has three official bus terminals that handle intercity bus departures and arrivals 218 to all parts of the country: the Puduraya Terminal on Jalan Pudu, Putra Terminal on Jalan Tun Ismail, and Pekililing Terminal on Jalan Ipoh. If you arrive at Puduraya, the biggest of the three, good luck! It's congested—with both to xic fumes and traffic jams: one of the reasons I av oid standard bus trav el in M alaysia. Taxis—another less-than-pleasant mode of transportation (see below) can be found at any of these terminals, but be ware of drivers who will try to overcharge you.

BY PLANE The Kuala Lumpur International Airport (KLIA) (© 03/8776-4386), located in Sepang, 53km (33 miles) outside the city, opened in 1998. KLIA is a huge complex, with business centers, dining facilities, a fitness center, medical services, shopping, post offices, and a nearby luxurious airport hotel operated by Pan Pacific (© 03/ 8787-3333; www.panpacific.com/KLairport). The Low Cost Carrier Terminal (LCCT), which services budget airlines like AirAsia, is 20km (12 miles) away from the KLIA main terminal, so be warned that it is not easy to transfer between the two terminals. Although there are moneychangers, they are few and far between, so hop on the first line y ou see and don't assume there's another one just around the corner.

Getting into Town from the Airport

BY TAXI City taxis are not permitted to pick up fr om the airport (although you will find illegal touts—av oid them!), but special airport taxis (② 03/8787-3678) operate 'round-the-clock, charging RM92 ($27/£17) for pr emier cars (M ercedes) and RM67 ($19/£12) for standard vehicles (the locally built Proton). Vans with seating capacity up to eight can also be hir ed for RM180 ($52/£32). Charges may v ary depending on your destination. Coupons must be purchased at the arrival concourse.

An express coach (© 03/2730-2000) connects KLIA to KLS entral train station, where you can catch a cab to the city 's major hotels. It costs RM35 ($10/£6.30) for a ticket, so you may as well take the Express Rail Link, listed below. It's faster. There are also express buses from the LCC terminal that connect to KLS entral; they cost RM9 ($2.60/£1.60).

The KLIA Ekspres ( 03/2267-8000) is an express rail link that runs between KLIA and KL Sentral train station from 5am to 1am daily. Trains depart every 15 minutes and take 28 minutes to complete the journey. Tickets cost RM35 ($10/£6.30) for adults and RM15 ($4.35/£2.70) for children. From KL Sentral, taxis are always on hand and use a coupon system (about RM10/$2.90/£1.80 or RM13/$3.75/£2.35 to central parts of the city), or you can catch one of the city's commuter trains to a station near your hotel.

Getting Around

Kuala Lumpur is a prime example of a city that was not planned, per se, from a master graph of streets. Rather, because of its beginnings as an outpost, it gr ew as it needed to, expanding outward and swallowing up rural surroundings. The result is a tangled web of streets too narrow to support the traffic of a capital city. Cars and buses we ave through one-way lanes, with countless motorbikes sneaking in and out, sometimes in the opposite direction of traffic or up on the side walks. Expect traffic jams in the morning r ush between 6 and 10am, and again between 5 and 8pm. At other times, taxis are a convenient way of getting around, but the commuter train system, if they're going where you need to, is perhaps the best value and easiest route. City buses are hot and crowded, with some very confusing routes. Walking can also be frustrating. Many sidewalks are in poor condition, with buckled tiles and gaping gutters. The heat can be pr ohibitive as well. However, areas within the colonial hear t of the city, Chinatown, Little India, and some areas in the Golden Triangle are within walking distance of each other.

BY TAXI If you ask me, KL cabbies should have their tires slashed. If you can get one 219 to stop, the driver will almost always r efuse to use the meter (which is against the law), quoting what seems to be the standar d—RM10 ($2.90/£1.80), usually for a trip that normally costs RM4 ($1.15/70p). I f it's raining, expect that quote to double. I usually don't dicker over the price because it 's only a buck and a half . It's just frustrating when cab after cab passes y ou by. In some places within the city, taxi stands tr y to solve this problem. Be prepared for taxis to pull o ver, roll down the window, and hear the pleas from the line befor e deciding upon which passenger to take, r egardless of the or der of the line.

Taxis can be booked by phone with an RM1 (29¢/18p) booking charge. CallCityline, © 03/9222-2828; Comfort, © 03/2692-2525; or Sunlight, © 03/9057-5757. Sometimes these services are not reliable.

Technically, the meter ed fare is RM2 (60¢/35p) for the first 2km (1 ½ mile) and an additional RM.10 (3¢/2p) for each 200m (656 ft.) after that. B etween midnight and 6am, you'll be charged an extra 50% of the total far e.

I don't recommend travel on city buses. They're cheap but not dependable, with city routes that will get ne wcomers lost for sur e. It's not the most r elaxing way to get around.

BY RAIL KL has a network of mass transit trains that snake thr ough the city and out to the suburbs, and it'll be worth your time to become familiar with them, because taxis are sometimes unr eliable and traffic jams can be unbearable. Trouble is, there are five train routes and each one is operated by a different company. How confusing! The lines don't seem to connect in any logical way.

The four lines that ar e most useful to visitors ar e the Putra LRT, the Star LRT, the KL Monorail, and the KLIA Ekspres to the airport. The latter route is explained under "Getting into Town from the Airport," above.

The Kelana Jaya Line, formerly called P utra LRT, has stops at B angsar (featured in the section "Kuala Lumpur After Dark," later in this chapter), KL Sentral (train station), Pasar Seni (Chinatown), Masjid Jamek, Dang Wangi, and KLCC shopping center. The Ampang & Sri Petaling Line, formerly called the Star LRT, is convenient if you need to get to the Putra World Trade Centre. It also stops at Masjid Jamek and Plaza Rayat. Average trips on both lines will cost around RM2 (60¢/35p).

The KL Monorail provides good access through the main hotel and shopping ar eas of the city, including stops at KL Sentral, Imbi, Bukit Bintang (the main shopping strip), and Raja Chulan (along Jalan Sultan Ismail, where many hotels are). Fares run between RM1.20 (35¢/20p) and RM2.50 (70¢/45p).

As a rough guide, all lines operate betw een 5 or 6am until ar ound midnight, with trains coming every 10 minutes or so. Tickets can be purchased at any station either from the stationmaster or from single-fare electronic ticket booths.

ON FOOT The heat and humidity can make walking betw een attractions pr etty uncomfortable. However, sometimes the traffic is so unbearable that y ou'll get wher e you're going much faster by strapping on your tennis shoes and hiking it.

Fast Facts: Kuala Lumpur

The area code for Kuala Lumpur is 03, and the city's phone numbers have an eight-digit format. Numbers in the rest of the country have seven digits.

The main office for American Express is located in KL at Menara Maybank, Ground Level banking hall, Jalan Perak (© 03/2050-0888). You'll also find headquarters for all 220 Malaysian and many international banks, most of which have outlets along Jalan Sultan Ismail, plus ATMs at countless locations thr oughout the city. Look for money changers in just about every shopping mall; they're a better bargain than banks or hotel cashiers.

KL's General Post Office, on Jalan Sultan Hishamuddin in the enormous Pos Malaysia Komplex Dayabumi (1) 03/2274-1122), can be pretty overwhelming. If you can, try to use your hotel's mail service for a much easier time. I nternet service in KL will r un about RM3 to RM6 (85¢-$1.75/55p-£1.10) per hour for usage. I nternet cafes come and go, popping up in backpacker areas like Chinatown and the streets around BB Plaza off Jalan Bukit Bintang.

WHERE TO STAY

International business-class properties like the Westin, Hilton, Ritz-Carlton, and Mandarin O riental fill their rooms every night with corporate travelers who are charged corporate rates to their corporate expense accounts. The hotels I've selected here represent only those properties I think are best for leisure travelers. Even the more expensive hotels I've chosen have qualities that extend beyond the business center.

If you plan to travel to KL in July and August and want to stay in an upmarket hotel, you'll need to book your room well in advance. KL's super-peak season falls during these months, when travelers from the Middle East take a break from scorching temperatures back home. M alaysia is the per fect tropical holiday spot for M uslim travelers from around the world, and Tourism Malaysia has done an excellent job of attracting the Middle Eastern market in particular, extending restaurant and cafe hours, and even shopping mall hours into the wee hours of the morning.

The Grand Millennium Kuala Lumpur ★ One of the best five-star properties in Kuala Lumpur, this landmark along KL's fashionable Jalan Bukit Bintang shopping strip has an ev er-bustling lobby to match the ex citement along the side walks outside—the lobby lounge is busy night and day. Surprisingly, the staff always seems polite and professional, despite the barrage. The guest rooms are spacious, quiet, and cool, with huge plush beds covered in soft cozy cotton sheets and down comforters. Bathrooms are large marble affairs with plenty of counter space. The outdoor pool is a palm-lined fr ee-form escape, and the fitness center is state-of-the-ar t, with sauna, steam, spa, and J acuzzi. Pavilion Kuala Lumpur, the city's smart new shopping mall, adjoins the hotel, and while some construction is still ongoing, disturbance to hotel guests is minimized. Night Owls should enjoy the lively entertainment in the hotel's Pulse bar and nightclub.

Mandarin Oriental Kuala Lumpur ★★★ The glistening Petronas Twin Towers are the iconic KL landmarks, and its neighbor, the Mandarin Oriental or "MO," has the best views. The hotel has set the benchmar k for hospitality standards in the city and is popular with corporate clients, who receive the finest treatment on club floors and arguably the best club lounge in KL. I lo ve the views from the panoramic windo ws of the 24th-floor lounge—arrive about 6:45pm when the twin to wer lights are turned on. The 10-year-old hotel is due for a r enovation, but its service and guest recognition are outstanding. Dine in the new seafood outlet, Pacifica, or in the old S hanghai surroundings of Lai Po Heen. Hilton Kuala Lumpur ★★★ Forget anything y ou've ever experienced in a H ilton—this is the absolute hottest hotel in KL, and pr obably one of the most inno vative hotels in the world. From the airy, art-filled public spaces to the compact rooftop lagoon pool, everything is done with edgy style and sophistication. Large rooms have sleek contemporary decor, with a desk area wired for work, mood lighting, stocked minibar with a coffee plunger and heavy mugs, and a 42-inch plasma TV. A "magic button" handles all service requests, and three "lifestyle boxes" provide little extras like desk accessories, bath treats, and games. B athrooms are great; they have deep tubs, wide "rain" showerheads, and a mini L CD-screen TV built into the shaving mirr or. The hotel's fitness center is operated by the very competent Clarke Hatch company, and the rooftop pool and Balinese-inspired spa are great escapes.

Renaissance Kuala Lumpur Hotel ★ (Value The Renaissance offers terrific value for the money. It has two wings, the posh West Wing and the modern East Wing, and both wings shar e hotel facilities. Each wing has its o wn entrance, connected in the middle where the ballr oom and banquet r ooms are housed. G uest rooms in the West Wing have a European feel to them—very bold and impressive, and typical of a traditional hotel. In fact, you'll never know you're in Malaysia. The East Wing is contemporary, with simpler decor, but is no less comfor table. The enormous outdoor pool, which sits between the two hotel towers, is one of the biggest in the city.

Traders Kuala Lumpur ★ Traders is a little deceptive, in that it is supposed to be a four-star S hangri-La, but this centrally located hotel packs a punch bigger than its humble rating. It overlooks the Twin Towers and has magical evening views of floodlight icons and the associated parklands. It adjoins the Convention Center, and golf carts ferry guests to and from the towers and the shopping paradise found at their base. SkyBar, on the hotel's 33rd floor, is my favorite nightspot in KL, with unsurpassed aerial views of the city skyline. O nly 2 years old, this hotel has ev erything business travelers need, and its location makes it popular with conference delegates and leisure travelers.

Concorde Hotel K uala Lumpur ★★ Value Concorde is one of my fav orites in this price category for its central location and quality accommodations at an incr edible price. Although r ooms are not as large as those in mor e expensive hotels, they're well outfitted with desks, side chairs, comfortable beds, and tidy bathrooms. A recent renovation has made them mor e stylish. Concorde has a small outdoor pool with a charming cafe and small fitness center. The lobby lounge is noisy at night because it's popular. Hard Rock Café is also on the premises.

Meliá Kuala Lumpur ★ Value This hotel is located next to a KL M onorail station and across the street from the mind-bogglingly enormous Times Square shopping and entertainment complex, making it an appealing option for visitors. Swiss-Garden Hotel For midrange prices, Swiss-Garden offers reliable comfort, okay location, and affor dability that attracts many leisur e travelers to its doors. It also knows how to make you feel right at home, with a friendly staff (the concierge is on the ball) and a hotel lobby bar that actually gets patronized (by travelers having cool cocktails at the end of a busy day of sightseeing). The guest rooms are decorated in warm ear thy tones. Swiss-Garden is within walking distance from KL's lively Chinatown district and close to the Puduraya bus station (which, unfortunately, makes traffic ugly at rush hour). Facilities include an outdoor pool, a small spa, an e-lounge, a ne w eco-cafe, and a fitness center.

Hotel Capitol ★ (Value A top pick for a budget hotel, Capitol is located in a lively part of the city's popular G olden Triangle district, close to the junction of J alan Sultan Ismail and Jalan Bukit Bintang. In the surrounding lanes, you'll find small eateries and shops for necessities, and shopping malls are close by. The place has a minimalist lobby that's function over frills. I niside the guest rooms, the wooden furniture seems like it is been around a while, but the upholster y, bedding, carpeting, and drapes all seem fresh. The big tiled bathroom also has a long bathtub. There are no leisure facilities to speak of, but if you've come to KL to sightsee, you won't miss them.

Swiss-Inn This tiny hotel is popular with budget trav elers. Tucked away in the heart of Chinato wn, S wiss-Inn's best asset is its location, amid the jumble of vibrant night market hawkers. The place is small, but a ne w contemporary west wing has 41 r ooms with 26-inch LCD TVs and smart bathrooms. Higher-priced rooms have a small window, a bit mor e space (but ar e still compact), and ar e some what better maintained. Budget rooms, on lo wer floors, ar e very small, the cheapest having no windo ws at all. Room categories are superior, deluxe, and family, and they often have good promotional rates. Make sure you reserve your room early because this place r uns at high occupancy year-round. The cafe, hidden behind market stalls, is an interesting place to have a beer and people-watch.

WHERE TO DINE

Kuala Lumpur, like Singapore, is very cosmopolitan. Here you'll not only find delicious and exotic cuisine, but you'll find it served in some pretty trendy settings.

224 Al Nafourah ★★★ LEBANESE Dripping with the magical allure of a desert oasis, Al Nafourah is pur e Arabian N ights. With Moorish arches, twinkling lanterns, car ved screens, silken hangings, mosaic tiles, and wo ven carpets throughout, the restaurant also has booths in private nooks for extra romance. The Lebanese cuisine is some of the best around, with lamb, chicken, and fish dishes in tangy herbs and warm flatbr eads straight from a wood-fir e oven. Outside on the terrace, sit back and drink a heady coffee and smoke from a hookah while taking in belly-dance per formances. A tr uly memorable evening.

Le Meridien Kuala Lumpur, 2 Jalan Stesen Sentral. (2) 03/2263-7888. Reservations recommended. Main courses RM48-RM128 ($14-$37/£8.65-£23). AE, DC, MC, V. Daily noon-2:30pm and 6:30-10:30pm.

Chynna ★★ CANT ONESE Chynna is pur e dinner theater: F rom the M adam Wong-style red lanterns to the Old China antique replica furnishings, you'll think you're in a highly stylized Shanghai of yesteryear. For fun, there's a show kitchen where you can watch delectable dim sum morsels being pr epared, or you can just sit at your table and watch the tea master refill your cup with long-stem tea pourers and acrobatic moves. Pure genius! The delicious lunch dim sum menu is extensive, with most dishes between RM8 and RM12 ($2.30-$3.50/£1.45-£2.15). Dinner is standard Cantonese fare, but expensive, with an extensive menu of soups and rice and noodle dishes.

Hilton K uala L umpur, 3 Jalan St esen S entral. O 03/2264-2264. Reser vations r ecommended. Small dishes RM28-RM56 ($8.10-$16/£5.05-£10). AE, DC, MC, V. Daily noon-2:30pm and 6:30-10:30pm.

Coliseum Cafe (Finds WESTERN/LOCAL What can I say about Coliseum? O kay, the place is 90 y ears old, and so is the staff (seriously, some have worked here forever). Located in the grottiest hotel I've ever seen, with stained white walls, worn tile floors, and threadbare linens, this is KL's authentic "greasy spoon." It sounds dreadful, but the place is legendary, and someday it will be gone and ther e will never be anything else like it. It used to be the place for the starched-shirt colonial types to get real Western food back in the day. Now it's a favorite with the locals, who come for enormous sizzling steaks (which fill the place with gr easy smoke), baked crabmeat ser ved in the shell, and the house favorite caramel custard pudding. Actually, the food is quite nice, and the prices are terrific for the steaks, which I highly recommend ordering. You either get this place or you don't.

98–100 Jalan Tuanku Abdul Rahman. (2) 03/2692-6270. Reservations not accepted. Main courses RM20– RM60 ($5.80-$17/£3.60-£11). MC. Daily 8am-10pm.

Feast Village ★★ INTERNATIONAL I'm one of those people who can nev decide what to eat, so this is the place for me. Located in the basement of Sarhill Gallery, an ex clusive shopping mall, F east Village isn't a single r estaurant, but a cluster of 13 arranged like a small Malay village. As you stroll along stone and timber pathways, you'll pass cafes that ser ve seafood, steaks, M alay, Chinese, Thai, Korean, Indian, and mor e. Within each cafe, the menu is unique and so is the decor. Shook! stands out for its Japanese, Chinese and Western offerings. Wander, smell the smells, r ead the menus, check out the sights, and find the perfect food for your mood.

Basement, Starhill Gallery, 181 Jalan Buk it Bintang. © 03/2782-3800. Reservations not required. Main courses vary from outlet to outlet. AE, DC, MC, V. Most outlets daily noon-2:30pm and 6:30-10:30pm.

Le Bouchon ★★ FRENCH This cozy French provincial restaurant along the barand-restaurant street of Changkat Bukit Bintang is a long-time favorite with KL's French community. This place satisfies their discerning palates, so y ou know it's good. Try the terrine de fois gras and ox tongue. The wines are excellent and reasonably priced, considering the quality. The restaurant is French owned and managed, and while the food and wines are first class, there's still a nice unpretentious ambience.

14&16 Changk at Buk it Bintang. (2) 03/2142-7633. Reservations recommended. Main courses RM40-RM120 ($12-$35/£7.20-£22). AE, DC, MC, V. Lunch Tues-Fri noon-2pm; dinner daily 7-10:30pm.

Sao Nam ★ VIETNAMESE One of Asia's great restaurants, Sao Nam has color ful decor with revolutionary posters on ochr e walls. The power tables are at the cour tyard entrance. The food is authentic, fr esh, and full of twists and surprises. gosteen and prawn salad, but order when you book your reservation, as they sell out fast. For starters, try the sample plate and move on to curries, noodle soup, and crispy pancake and duck in orange sauce. Good, reasonably priced wines.

25 Tengkat Tong Shin. (2) 03/2144-1225. Reser vations essential. Main courses RM22-RM32 ($6.40-$9.30/£3.95-£5.75). AE, MC, V. Tues-Sun noon-2:30pm and 6:30-10:30pm. Closed Mon.

Top Hat Restaurant ★★★ (Finds ASIAN FUSION Top Hat has a unique atmosphere. In a 1930s bungalow that was once a school, the place winds through room after room, its walls painted in bright hues and furnished with an assor tment of mix-andmatched teak tables, chairs, and antiques. The menu is fabulous. While a la car te is available, Top Hat puts together set meals featuring N yonya, Melaka (Malacca) Portuguese, traditional Malay, Thai, Western, and even vegetarian recipes. They're all brilliant. Desserts are huge and sinful. There's a sampler dish for those who can't decide.

No. 7 Jalan Kia Peng. (?) 03/2142-8611. Reservations recommended. Main courses RM30-RM65 ($8.70-$19/£5.40-£12). Set meals RM30-RM100 ($8.70-$29/£5.40-£18). AE, DC, MC, V. Lunch Mon-Fri noon-2:30pm; dinner daily 6-10:30pm.

ATTRACTIONS

Most of Kuala Lumpur's historic sights are located in and around the Merdeka Square/ Jalan Hishamuddin ar ea, while many of the gar dens, parks, and museums ar e out at Lake G ardens. Taxi far e betw een the two locations should r un y ou about RM8 ($2.30/£1.45).

KL Hop-on Hop-off City Tours (© 03/2691-1382; www.myhoponhopoff.com) is the best way to see the city attractions. It costs RM38 ($11/£6.85) adults and RM17 ($4.95/£3.05) childr en.

Central Market ★ The original Central M arket, built in 1936, used to be a w market, but the place is no w a cultural center (air-conditioned!) for local ar tists and craftspeople selling antiques, crafts, and curios. I t's fantastic for buying M alaysian and Asian crafts and souvenirs, with two floors of shops from which to choose.

Jalan Benteng. (2) 03/2274-6542. Daily 10am-10pm. Shops open until 8:30 or 9pm.

Cosmo's World Theme Park ** (Kids I don't care if you have kids or not, Cosmo's rocks. The world's largest indoor amusement park is literally built into the walls of this 900-outlet shopping mall. You don't even need to ride the looping r oller coaster to feel that thrill in the pit of your stomach. Just stand and watch it overhead as it flashes by. It really takes your breath away. There are saner rides, too, plus a host of kiddie rides. Highly recommended for families with active kids.

KUALA LUMPUR

228 Sultan Abdul Samad Building In 1897, this exotic building was designed by two colonial architects, A. C. Norman and A. B. Hubbock, in a style called Muhammadan or neo-Saracenic, which combines I ndian Muslim architecture with G othic and other Western elements. Built to house government administrative offices, today it is the home of Malaysia's Supreme Court and High Court. At night, the building is lit up. Jalan Raja. Free admission.

GOLF

People from all over Asia flock to Malaysia for its golf courses, many of which are excellent standard courses designed by pros. The Kuala Lumpur Golf & Country Club, 10 Jalan 1/70D Off Jalan Bukit Kiara (© 03/2093-1111), has 2 courses, 18 holes each, par 71 and 72, designed by R. Nelson and R. Wright, with greens fees of RM180 ($52/£32) weekdays. The club is closed to nonmembers on w eekends and holidays. Suajana Golf & Country Club, Km 3, Jalan Lapangan Terbang Sultan Abdul Aziz Shah, 46783 Subang Selangor (© 03/7846-1466; fax 03/7846-7818), has two 18-hole courses, each par 72, designed by R onald F ream, with greens fees from RM220 ($64/£40) weekdays, RM353 ($102/£64) weekends and holidays.

SHOPPING

Kuala Lumpur is a truly great place to shop. In recent years, mall after mall has risen from city lots, filled with hundr eds of retail outlets selling everything from haute couture to cheap chic clothing, electronic goods, jewelry, and arts and crafts. The major shopping malls are located in the ar ea around Jalan Bukit Bintang and Jalan Sultan Ismail. Suria KLCC, just beneath the Petronas Twin Towers, is KL's most upmarket mall, while Berjaya Times Square wins the prize for excess, with 900 shops, food and entertainment outlets, plus one of the world 's largest indoor amusement par ks. Pavilion KL on J alan Bukit Bintang is the city's latest luxurious mall.

Still the best place for Malaysian handicrafts, the huge Central Market on Jalan Benteng (@ 03/2274-6542) keeps any shopper occupied for hours. There you'll find local artists and craftspeople selling their war es in the hear t of town. It's also a good place to find Malaysian handicrafts from other regions of the country. One specific shop I like to recommend for M alaysian handicrafts is KL Craft Complex, Section 3 J alan Conlay (1 03/2162-7533), with its war ehouse selection of assor ted goods fr om around the country, all of it fine quality. Don't forget to walk through the gardens to see the artists' village. In the bungalows toward the side of the building, y ou'll find some of M alaysia's finest contemporary artists displaying their works for sale. And we ar comfy shoes; you may need to walk back to the main road to get a cab.

Another favorite shopping haunt in KL is Chinatown, along Petaling Street. Day and night, it's a great place to wander and bargain for knockoff designer clothing and accessories, sunglasses, T-shirts, souvenirs, fake watches, and pirated CDs and DVDs.

Pasar malam (night mar kets) are very popular evening activities in KL. Whole blocks are taken up with these brightly lit and bustling markets packed with stalls selling almost everything you can dream of. Two good bets for catching one: On Saturday nights, head for Jalan Tuanku Abdul Rahman, while the Bangsar Night Market starts at dusk and is popular with trendy residents.

KUALA LUMPUR AFTER DARK

There's nightlife to spar e in KL, fr om fashionable lounges to sprawling discos to pubs per fect for lounging. B asically, you can expect to pay about RM10 to RM25

($2.90-$7.25/£1.80-£4.50) for a pint of beer, depending on what and where you order. 229 Although quite a fe w pubs are open for lunch, most clubs won 't open until about 6 or 7pm. These places must all close by 1 or 2am, so don't plan on staying out too late. Nearly all have a happy hour, usually between 5 and 7pm, when drink discounts apply on draft beers and "house-pour" (lower-shelf) mixed drinks. Generally, you're expected to wear dress-casual clothing for these places, but av oid old jeans, sneakers, and v ery revealing outfits.

The center of nightlife, if y ou want to br owse, begins at the corner of J alan Sultan Ismail and Jalan P. Ramlee. Walk along P. Ramlee and you'll find bars of all kinds, plus cafes and coffee shops. Jalan Bukit Bintang is another popular area to visit.

For a little live music with your drinks, the recently renovated Hard Rock Cafe, Jalan Sultan Ismail next to Concorde Hotel (© 03/2715-5555), hosts the best of the regional bands, which play most nights for a cr owd of locals, tourists, and expatriates who take their parties very seriously.

The biggest dance club in to wn is Zouk, fashioned after the ultrasuccessful Z ouk in Singapore. It's at 113 J alan Ampang, do wn the street from MTC (© 03/2171-1997). There's a co ver charge of anywher e between RM25 and RM40 ($7.25-$12/£4.50-£7.20), depending on what's going on inside.

Bangsar, just outside the city limits, is 2 or 3 blocks of bars, cafes, and estaurants that cater to a variety of tastes (in fact, so many expatriates hang out thee, they call it Kweiloh Lumpur, "Foreigner Lumpur" in Mandarin). Every taxi driver knows where it is. Get in and ask to go to J alan Telawi Tiga in Bangsar—fare should be no mor e than RM7 or RM10 ($2.05 or $2.90/£1.25 or £1.80)—and once ther e, it's very easy to catch a cab back to town.

SIDE TRIPS FROM KUALA LUMPUR

Batu Caves ★★

Located 13 km (8 miles) nor th of Kuala Lumpur, Batu Caves have become one of the most significant Hindu religious sites outside of India. Built within a series of caves inside a limestone hill, three main caves make up a temple complex devoted to the Lord Murugan. During the Hindu Thaipusam festival, held each year in either January or February, devotees bathe in the nearb y B atu Riv er befor e donning kevadis, stainless-steel racks decorated with flowers and fruits and held to the body with pins and ske wers. A procession leads from the river to the hill and up the 272 steps to the main cav e. The festival draws over 800,000 each year, but the caves are a nice side trip any time. The most convenient way to visit the caves is by taxi, which from KL will take about 25 to 30 minutes and costs appr oximately RM15 to RM20 ($4.35-$5.80/£2.70-£3.60). D uring Thaipusam, contact the Tourism Malaysia office for shuttle instructions.

Taman Negara National Park ★★★

Malaysia's most famous national park, Taman Negara, covers 434,350 hectares (1.1 million acres) of primary rainforest estimated to be as old as 130 million years, and encompasses within its border Gunung Tahan, peninsular Malaysia's highest peak, at 2,187m (7,173 ft.) above sea level.

Prepare to see lush vegetation and rare orchids, some 675 bird species, and maybe, if you're lucky, some barking deer, tapir, elephants, tigers, leopards, and wild cattle or gaur. As for primates, there are long-tailed macaques, leaf monkeys, gibbons, and more. Taman Negara showcases efforts to keep this land in as pristine a state as possible, despite extensive logging in many parts of the country.

There are outdoor activities for any level of adventurer. Short jungle walks to observe nature are lovely, but then so are the hard-core 9-day treks or climbs up Gunung Tahan. There are also overnight trips to night hides where you can observe animals up close. The jungle canopy walk is one of the longest in the world, and at 25m (82 ft.) above ground, the view is spectacular. There are also rivers for rafting and swimming, fishing spots, and a couple of caves. Fishing permits must be obtained beforehand from the Ranger Head-quarters.

If you plan your trip through one of the main r esort operators, they can arrange, in addition to accommodations, all meals, treks, and a coach transfer to and from Kuala Lumpur. Prices vary, depending on the season and your level of comfort desired. The best time to visit is between the months of April and September; other times, it will be a tad wet, and that's why it's called a rainforest.

Mutiara Taman Negara Resort ★, well established in the business of hosting visitors to the park, is the best accommodations in terms of comfort. It organizes trips for 3 days and 2 nights or for 4 days and 3 nights, as well as an a lacar te deal where you pay for lodging and activities separately. Accommodations come in many styles: a bungalow suite for families; chalet and chalet suite, both good for couples; standar diguesthouse rooms; and dormitory hostels for budget travelers. To get an idea of pricing, a 3-day, 2-night package runs about RM369 ($107/£66) per person, double occupancy in a chalet, with air-conditioning with attached bathroom, plus full board, meals, and activities. What it doesn't include is bus transfer from KL (RM80/$23/£14 per person round-trip) and the boat upriver from the park entrance (RM56/$16/£10 per person round-trip). A lacar te activities include a 3-hour jungle trek, a 1 ¹/₂-hour night jungle walk, the half-day Lata Berkoh river trip with swimming, a 2-hour cave exploration, and a trip down the rapids in a rubber raft (Kuala Tahan, Jerantut, 27000 Pahang; © 09/266-3500, Kuala Lumpur Sales Office 03/2782-2222, www.mutiarahotels.com).

Genting Highlands

The "City of Entertainment," as Genting is known locally, serves as Malaysia's answer to Las Vegas, complete with bright lights (which can be seen fr om Kuala Lumpur) and gambling. And although most people come her e for the casino, ther e's a wide range of other activities, although most of them seem to serve the purpose of entertaining the kids while you bet their college funds at the r oulette wheel. While it lacks the sophistication of other casino destinations, it is v ery popular with local punters and families seeking a one-stop destination in the cool mountain air.

Genting has six hotels of varying prices within the resort. Rates vary depending on the season, so be prepared for higher rates during the winter holidays. Genting Hotel is the best choice—a newer property that's linked directly to the casino. Weekday rates are from RM245 ($71/£44) for double occupancy , and w eekend rates are from RM355 ($103/£64) double occupancy.

Outside of the casino, there's a pond, a bowling alley, and an indoor heated pool. For children, the Genting Theme Park covers 9,300 sq. m (100,104 sq. ft.) of mostly rides, plus many Western fast-food eating outlets, games, and other attractions. The Awana Golf and Country Club (© 03/6101-3025) is the premier golf course in these hills.

For buses from Kuala Lumpur, call Genting Highlands Transport, operating buses every half-hour from 6:30am to 9pm daily from KL Sentral train station. The cost one-way is RM7.50 ($2.15/£1.35) and the trip takes 1 hour. The bus lets you off at the foot of the hill, where you take the cable car to the top (price included with bus ticket). F or bus information, call © 03/6251-8398.

You can also get there by hiring an outstation taxi. The cost is RM40 ($12/£7.20), and a taxi can be arranged by calling the Puduraya outstation taxi stand at ② 03/2078-0213.

The Genting Highlands Resort is o wned and operated by Resorts World Berhad, who'll be glad to provide you with hotel reservations if you call © 03/2718-1118.

Cameron Highlands

Located in the hills, this colonial-era r esort town has a cool climate, which makes it the perfect place for weekend getaways by Malaysians and Singaporeans who are sick of the heat. If you've been in the region awhile, you might also appreciate the respite.

The climate is also very conducive to agriculture. After the area's discovery by British surveyor William Cameron in 1885, the major crop here became tea, which is still grown today. The area's lovely gardens supply cities throughout the region with vegetables, flowers, and fr uit year-round. Among the fav orites here are the strawberries, which can be eaten fresh or transformed into yummy desser ts in the local r estaurants. At the many commercial flower nurseries, you can see chr ysanthemums, fuchsias, and r oses growing on the terraces. Rose gardens are prominent here.

Temperatures in the highlands av erage  $70^{\circ}F$  ( $21^{\circ}C$ ) during the day and  $50^{\circ}F$  ( $10^{\circ}C$ ) at night. There are paths for tr eks though the countr yside and to peaks of surr ounding mountains. Two water falls, the R obinson Falls and P arit Falls, have pools at their feet where you can swim.

There are no visitor information services here. They've been closed for a v ery long time and hav e no immediate plans for r eopening. You'll find banks with A TMs and money-changing services along the main road in Tanah Rata, the main town.

The best accommodation her e is the Smokehouse Hotel. Situated between Tanah Rata and B rinchang towns, this pictur esque Tudor mansion has pretty gardens and a charming old-world ambience. Built in 1937 as a country house in the heyday of colonial British getaways, its conversion into a hotel has kept the place happily in the 1930s. Guest suites have four-poster beds and antique furnishings, with some of the wear that one might expect from an old inn. The hotel encourages guests to play golf at the neighboring course, sit for afternoon tea with strawberr y confections, or trek along nearby paths (for which they'll provide a picnic basket). It's all a bizarre escape from Malaysia, but a charming one. (Tanah Rata, Cameron Highlands, Pahang Darul Makmur; © 05/491-1215; fax 05/491-1214; www thesmokehouse.com.my, RM440–RM750/$128—$218/£79–£135 suite.)

Most of the sights can be seen in a day , but it 's difficult to plan y our time well. In Cameron H ighlands, I r ecommend tr ying one of the sightseeing outfits in either Brinchang or Tanah Rata. C. S. Travel & Tours, 47 Main Rd., Tanah Rata ( $\bigcirc$  05/491-1200), is a highly eputable agency that will plan half-day tours for RM20 ( $\bigcirc$ 5.80/£3.60) or full days starting from RM80 ( $\bigcirc$ 23/£14). On your average tour, you'll see the Boh tea plantation and factory, flower nurseries, rose gardens, strawberry farms, butterfly farms, and the Sam Poh Buddhist Temple. You're required to pay admission to each attraction yourself (about RM5/\$1.45/90p). They also pr ovide trekking and o vernight camping tours in the surrounding hills with local trail guides.

If you want to hit around some balls, Padang Golf, Main Road between Tanah Rata and Brinchang ( $\bigcirc$  05/491-1126), has 18 holes at par 71, with greens fees around RM53 (\$15/£9.55) on w eekdays and RM84 (\$24/£15) on w eekends. They also provide club rentals, caddies, shoes, and carts.

To get to Cameron Highlands, Kurnia Bistari Express Bus (© 05/491-1485) operates between Kuala Lumpur and Tanah Rata daily for around RM20 ($5.80/£3.60) one-way. They don't accept bookings in Kuala Lumpur, asking you to just show up at Puduraya bus terminal to buy your ticket and board the next bus. The bus terminal is in the center of town along the main drag. Just next to it is the taxi stand. It's a two-horse town; you can't miss either of them. Outstation taxis from KL will cost RM240 ($70/£43) for the trip. Call © 03/2078-0213 for booking. Taxis are cheaper on the way back because they don't have to climb the mountains.

2 JOHOR BAHRU

Johor Bahru, the capital of the state of J ohor, is at the southern tip of the M alaysian peninsula, where M alaysia's nor th-south highway comes to its southern terminus. Because it's just over the causeway from Singapore, a very short jump by car, bus, or train, it's a popular point of entry to Malaysia. Johor Bahru, or "JB," is not the most fascinating destination in M alaysia. If you want a good side trip from Singapore, there are more interesting sights in Melaka (see below) or better beaches on Tioman (see chapter 14).

The Malaysia Tourism Board office in Johor Bahru is at the Johor Tourist Information Centre (JOTIC), centrally located on J alan Ay er M olek, on the second floor (© 07/223-4935). You can also find information at www.tourismjohor.com.

The Sultan Ismail Airport/Senai International Airport, 30 to 40 minutes outside the city ( © 07/599-4737), has r egular flights thr ough Malaysia Airlines to and from major cities in Malaysia (© 1300/883-000; www.malaysiaairlines.com). AirAsia (© 03/8775-4000; www.airasia.com) also uses JB as a hub to major destinations throughout Malaysia.

Buses to and fr om other parts of M alaysia are based at the Lar kin Bus Terminal off Jalan Garuda in the nor thern part of the city. Taxis are available at the terminal to take you to the city. If you're coming from Singapore, the Singapore–Johor Express (② 65/6292-8149) operates every 10 minutes between 6:30am and midnight from the Ban Sen Terminal at Queen Street near Arab Street, Singapore. The cost for the half-hour trip is S$2.40 ($1.60¢/£1.10). If you take the bus, you can choose to get off at the M alaysian immigration checkpoint, which is more or less in the center of town, instead of going all the way to Larkin.

The Keretapi Tanah Melayu Berhad (KTM) trains arrive and depart from the Johor Bahru Railway S tation at J alan Tun Abdul Razak, opposite M erlin Tower (© 07/223-4727). Catch express trains from KL Sentral (© 03/2267-1200) twice daily for RM34 to RM68 ($9.85–$20/£6.10–£12), depending on the class y ou travel. From the Singapore Railway Station (© 65/6222-5165), on Keppel Road in Tanjong Pagar, the short trip is S$2.90 (US$1.95/£1.30).

If you find yourself in JB overnight, the Hyatt Regency (Jalan Sungai Chat; © 800/233-1234 or 07/222-1234; fax 07/223-2718; http://johorbahr u.regency.hyatt.com; RM374/$108/£67 double) is the top pick in terms of quality . JB has some good food, which you can try at the Tepian Tebrau Stalls in Jalan Skudai (along the seafront) and the hawker stalls near the Central Market. The dish that puts Johor Bahru on the map, ikan bakar (barbecued fish with chilies), is out of this world at the Tepian Tebrau stalls.

The sights in Johor Bahru are few, but there is an interesting museum inside the old istana. The Royal Abu Bakar Museum, also called the I stana Bakar, is a gorgeous royal palace built by Sultan Abu Bakar in 1866. Today it houses the royal collection of international treasures, costumes, historical documents, fine ar t from the family collection, and relics of the sultanate. I t's at Jalan Tun Dr Ismail (© 07/223-0555; adults US$7, children 11 and under US$3; Sat—Thurs 9am—4pm). This museum charges admission in U.S. dollars; when y ou purchase your ticket, the ticket counter will convert he fee to Malaysian ringgits, according to the day's exchange rate, to be paid in local currency. The saracenic flavor of the Bangunan Sultan Ibrahim (State Secretariat Building) on Jalan Abdul Ibrahim makes it feel older than it truly is. Built in 1940, today it houses the State Secretariat.

3 MELAKA (MALACCA) ★

Melaka's attraction is its cultural heritage, ar ound which a substantial tourism industr y has grown. If you're visiting, a little kno wledge of histor y will help y ou appreciate all there is to see.

Melaka was founded ar ound 1400 b y P arameswara, called Iskandar S hah in the Malay Annals. After he was chased fr om Palembang in southern S umatra by invading Javanese, he set up a kingdom in S ingapore (Temasek), and after being o verthrown by invaders there, ran up the west coast of the Malay peninsula to Melaka, where he settled and established a por t city. As the site was in a fav orable spot to take adv antage of the two monsoons that dominated shipping routes, Melaka soon drew the attention of Arab and Chinese traders, both of whom maintained very close relations for trade and political advantage. It was the early Arab mer chants who introduced Islam to M alaysia. After Parameswara's death in 1414, his son, M ahkota Iskandar Shah, converted to Islam and popularized the faith throughout the area.

During the 15th centur y, M elaka was r uled by a succession of wise sultans who expanded the wealth and stability of the economy; built up the administration 's coffers; extended the sultanate to the far reaches of the Malay peninsula, Singapore, and parts of northern S umatra; and thwar ted repeated attacks by the S iamese. The success of the empire drew international attention.

The Portuguese were eyeing the port and formulating plans to dominate the east—west trade route, to establish the naval supremacy of Portugal and promote Christianity in the region. They struck in 1511 and conquered Melaka in a battle that lasted only a month. After the defeat, the sultanate fled to Johor while the Portuguese looted the city and sent its riches off to Lisbon.

The Portuguese were the first of a chain of ruling foreign powers who would struggle in vain to retain the early economic success of the city . The foreign conquerors had a major strike against them: Their staunch Christianity alienated the locals and repelled Arab traders. The city quickly became nothing more than a sleepy outpost.

In 1641, the Dutch, with the help of Johor, conquered Melaka and controlled the city until 1795. Again the Dutch were unsuccessful in rebuilding the glory of past prosperity in Melaka, and the city continued to sleep.

In 1795, the Dutch traded Melaka to the British in return for Bencoolen in Sumatra, being far more concerned with their Indonesian interests anyway. Melaka became a permanent British settlement in 1811, but by this time had become so poor and alienated that it was impossible to bring it back to life.

Today Melaka is a sleepy backwater . The historic hear t of to wn is distinctive, with narrow one-way lanes hugged by old colonial-style shophouses built by the Dutch and British and later inhabited by wealthy Chinese and Peranakan (Straits-born Chinese) families. The buildings that stand out, ho wever, are the bright red structures, a church and administrative buildings built by the Dutch during their rule. Just steps away are the remains of a Portuguese fort and church, and also close by you'll find English churches as well.

ESSENTIALS

Visitor Information

The Melaka Tourism Information Centre is on Jalan Kota at the Town Square next to the bridge (© 06/281-4803).

Getting There

BY TRAIN Melaka doesn't have a proper train station, but the KTM stops at Tampin (© 06/441-1034), 38km (24 miles) nor the of the city. It's not the most convenient way in and out of the city, but if you decide to stop en route between Kuala Lumpur and Johor Bahru, you can easily catch a waiting taxi to your hotel in to wn for RM40 ($12/£7.20).

BY BUS From Singapore, contact Grassland Express at © 65/6293-1166, www. grassland.com.sg. A bus departs at 8am daily for the 4 <sup>1</sup>/<sub>2</sub>-hour trip ($$27/US$18/£12). From KL's Puduraya Bus Terminal on Jalan Pudu, Transnasional (© 03/6201-3463) has hourly buses between 8am and 10pm for about RM10 ($2.90/£1.80). The trip takes about 2 <sup>1</sup>/<sub>2</sub> hours.

The bus station in Melaka is at Jalan Kilang, within the city Taxis are easy to find from here.

Getting Around

Most of the historic sights around the town square are well within walking distance. For other trips, taxis are the most convenient way around but are at times difficult to find. They're also not as clearly marked as in KL or Johor Bahru. They are not metered, so be prepared to bargain. Basically, no matter what you do, you'll always be charged a higher rate than a local. Tourists are almost always quoted at RM10 ($2.90/£1.80) for local trips. Malaysians pay RM5 ($1.45/90p). I f you're feeling spor ty, you can bargain for a price somewhere in between.

Trishaws (bicycle rickshaws) ar e all o ver the historic ar eas of to wn, and in M elaka they're renowned for being very, very garishly decorated (which adds to the fun!). Negotiate for hourly rates of about RM30 ($8.70/£5.40) for two people.

Fast Facts: Melaka

Melaka's area code is 06. Major banks are located in the historic center of to wn, with a couple along Jalan Putra. Internet places come and go. Your best bet is to ask your hotel's concierge or the Melaka Tourism Information Centre (see above) for the nearest cafes.

WHERE TO STAY

Melaka is not very large, and most of the places to stay ar e well within walking distance of attractions, shopping, and restaurants.

Heeren House ★★ This is the place to stay in Melaka for a taste of the local culture. Started by a local family, the small guesthouse is a r enovated 100-year-old building furnished in traditional Peranakan and colonial style and located right in the hear t of historical European Melaka. All the bedrooms have views of the Melaka River, and outside the front door of the hotel is a winding stretch of old buildings housing antiques shops. Just walk out and wander . Small rooms have very basic amenities. The rooms on the second floor are somewhat larger. Laundry service is available, and there's a cafe and gift shop on the pr emises. Very friendly establishment r un by a family who is v ery knowledgeable on local events. Reserve well in advance.

236 Hotel Puri (Value In olden days, Jalan Tun Tan Cheng Lock was known as "Millionaire Row" for all the wealthy families that lived here. This old "mansion" has been converted into a guesthouse, its tiled parlor has become a lobb y, and the courtyard is where breakfast is served each morning. Although Hotel Puri isn't big on space, it is big on value (discount rates can be pretty low). Rooms are very clean and, while not overly stylish, are comfortable enough for any w eary traveler. A friendly and r esponsive staff adds to the appeal.

Renaissance Melaka Hotel * Renaissance is one of the better hotels in M elaka and, according to business trav elers, is the most r eliable place for quality accommodations—but aside from the pieces of Peranakan porcelain and art in the public areas, you could almost believ e you weren't in M elaka at all. The hotel is, ho wever, situated in a good location, though you'll still need a taxi to most of the sights. Rooms are fairly large and filled with Western comforts. Don't expect much from the views, as the hotel is in the commercial part of the city. No historical landmarks to gaze upon here.

WHERE TO DINE

In Melaka you'll find the typical mix of authentic M alay and Chinese food, and as the city was the major settling place for the Peranakans in Malaysia, their unique style of food is featured in many of the local restaurants.

A good recommendation for a quick bite at lunch or dinner if y ou're strolling in the historic area is the long string of open-air food stalls along J alan Merdeka, just between Mahkota Plaza Shopping and Warrior Square. Mama Fatso's is especially good for Chinese-style seafood and M alay sambal curr y. A good meal will r un you about RM35 to RM40 ($10-$12/£6.30-£7.20) per person.

Try local P eranakan cuisine at Restoran B ibik N eo (N o. 6, gr ound floor, J alan Merdeka, Taman Melaka Raya; © 06/281-7054), a small coffee shop that's about as authentic as you can get. Ikan assam with eggplant is a tasty mild fish curr y that's very rich and tar t, and I always go for the otak-otak (pounded fish and spices baked in a banana leaf).

For a taste of Portuguese Melaka, the Portuguese Settlement has some open-air food 237 stalls by the water, where in the evenings hawkers sell an assortment of dishes inspired by these former colonial rulers, including many fresh seafood offerings. Saturday nights are best, when, at 8pm, there's a cultural show with music and dancing. Other times it may be slow business. ( Jalan d'Albuquerque off J alan Ujon P asir; dinner fr om RM20-RM30($5.80-$8.70/£3.60-£5.40) per person; no credit cards.)

Geographer Restaurant and Bar, located along the popular Jalan Hang Jebat (1) 06/ 281-6813), is very accommodating to travelers. They know which buttons to push to make travelers happy, so expect icy-cold beer, international comfort food, local dishes, souvenirs, Wi-Fi, and ev ening enter tainment, including bands on some nights. serve only white meat—the tandoori chicken is r ecommended. Vegetarians ar e w ell catered to. They're open daily from midmorning till late, as the bar and music swings into action. Prices range from RM10 to RM40 ($2.90-$12/£1.80-£7.20).

ATTRACTIONS

To get the most out of M elaka, it's best to have a bit of knowledge about the history of the place, which I've explained briefly in the intro to this section. Most of the preserved historical sites are on both sides of the M elaka River. Start at Stadthuys (the old to wn hall, pronounced "stat-highs"), and you'll see most of Melaka pretty quickly.

Museums

Baba Ny onya Heritage Museum \star Called "Millionaire's Row," Jalan Tun Tan Cheng Lock is lined with r ow houses that were built by the Dutch and later bought by wealthy Peranakans; the ar chitectural style r eflects their East-meets-West lifestyle. The house dates fr om 1896, when thr ee houses were combined into one. The entrance fee includes a guided tour.

48⊠50 Jalan Tun Tan Cheng Lock. ② 06/283-1273. Adults RM8 ($2.30/£1.45), children RM4 ($1.15/70p). Daily 10am-12:30pm and 2-4:30pm.

Cultural Museum (Muzium Buda ya) ★ A replica of the former palace of S ultan Mansur Syah (1456-77), this museum was rebuilt according to historical descriptions to house a fine collection of cultural ar tifacts such as clothing, we aponry, and royal items. The gardens are quite nice.

Kota Rd., next to Porta de Santiago. (2) 06/282-6526. Adults RM2 (60¢/35p), childr en RM.50 (15¢/10p). Daily 9am-5:30pm.

Eye on Malaysia This 60m (197 ft.) obser vation wheel, previously located at Lake Titiwangsa in KL, was moved to its current location, at the mouth of the M elaka River, in November 2008. The 12-minute ride takes you over the oldest parts of Melaka, for bird's-eye views of the town's most historically significant buildings and streets. The Ferris wheel sits atop a 1.6-hectar e (4-acr e) complex that is being dev eloped in phases through 2009 with a light and sound waterscr een showcase, a M alaysian International Space Adventure (MISA) museum, and food outlets.

Munara Sungai M elaka, Kota Laksamana. (?) 06/284-1888. www.eyeonmalaysia.com.my. Adults RM20 ($5.80/£3.60), children RM10 ($2.90/£1.80). Mon-Thurs 10am-11pm; Fri-Sun 10am-midnight.

Maritime Museum and the Royal Malaysian Navy Museum These two museums are located across the street from one another but shar e admission fees. The Maritime Museum is in a r estored 16th-century Portuguese ship, with exhibits dedicated to 238 Melaka's history with the sea. The Navy Museum is a modern display of M alaysia's less pleasant relationship with the sea.

Quayside Rd. (2) 06/282-6526. Adults RM3 (85¢/55p), children RM1 (30¢/20p). Daily 9am-5:30pm.

The People's Museum, the Museum of B eauty, the Kite Museum, and the Governor of Melaka's Gallery This strange collection of displays is housed under one roof. The People's Museum is the story of development in Melaka. The Museum of Beauty is a look at cultural differences of beauty throughout time and around the world. The Kite Museum features the traditions of making and flying wau (kites) in Malaysia, and the governor's personal collection is on exhibit at the G overnor's Gallery.

Kota Rd. (2) 06/282-6526. Adults RM2 (60¢/35p), children RM.50 (15¢/10p). Daily 9am-5:30pm.

Stadthuys—The Museums of Histor y & Ethnography and the Museum of Literature ★ The Stadthuys Town Hall was built by the Dutch in 1650, and it's now home to the M elaka Ethnographical and H istorical Museum, which displays customs and traditions of all the peoples of Melaka, and takes you through the rich history of this city. Behind Stadthuys, the Museum of Literature includes old historical accounts and local legends. Admission price is for both exhibits.

Located at the cir cle intersection of Jalan Quayside, Jalan Laksamana, and Jalan Chan Koon Cheng (f) 06/282-6526. Adults RM5 ($1.45/90p), children RM2 (60¢/35p). Daily 9am-5:30pm.

Youth Museums and Art Gallery In the old General Post office are these displays dedicated to Malaysia's youth organizations and to the nation's finest artists. An unusual combination.

Laksamana Rd. (1) 06/282-6526. Adults RM2 (60¢/35p), childr en RM.50 (15¢/10p). Tues-Sun 9am-5:30pm.

Historical Sites

Christ Church The Dutch built this place in 1753 as a D utch Reform Church, and its architectural details include such wonders as ceiling beams cut fr om a single tree and a Last Supper glazed tile motif abo ve the altar. It was later consecrated as an Anglican church, and mass is still performed today in English, Chinese, and Tamil.

Located on Jalan Laksamana, Free admission.

Jalan Tokong ★ Not far from Jalan Tun Tan Cheng Lock is Jalan Tokong, called the "Street of Harmony" by the locals because it has three coexisting places of worship: the Kampung Kling Mosque, the Cheng Hoon Teng Temple, and the Sri Poyyatha Vinayagar Moorthi Temple.

Melaka River Cruise ★ The Melaka River was once in a pretty nasty state, but the authorities realized its tourism potential and cleaned it up. A flotilla of small boats transports sightseers up and down from the departure and drop-off point on the riverbank in front of D utch S quare. Not only can you see the historic buildings, old warehouses (godowns), interesting mangrove stands, chur ches, and villages, but y ou can peer into people's backyards to see the comings and goings of riv erside life. The 1998 Sean Connery movie Entrapment was par tially filmed her e. Tours last about 45 minutes in boats ranging from 20- to 40-seaters, and normally a minimum of eight passengers is required before departure.

Departs Taman Rempah near Jalan Mata Kuching. (2) 06/281-4322. Adults RM10 ($2.90/£1.80), children RM5 ($1.45/90p). Daily 9:30am-5pm and 6pm-midnight.

Porta de Santiago (A Famosa) ★ Once the site of a P ortuguese fortress called A Famosa, all that remains today of the fortress is the entrance gate, which was saved from demolition by Sir Stamford Raffles. When the British East India Company demolished the place, Raffles r ealized the arch's historical v alue and saved it. The fort was built in 1512, but the inscription above the arch, "Anno 1607," marks the date when the Dutch overthrew the Portuguese.

Located on Jalan Kota, at the intersection of Jalan Parameswara. Free admission.

Portuguese Settlement and Portuguese Square The Portuguese Settlement is an enclave once designated for Portuguese settlers after they conquered Melaka in 1511. Some elements of their presence remain in the Lisbon-style architecture. Later, in 1920, the area was a Eurasian neighborhood. In the center of the settlement, Portuguese Square is a modern attraction with P ortuguese restaurants, handicrafts, souvenirs, and cultural shows. It was built in 1985 in an ar chitectural style to reflect the surrounding flavor of Portugal.

Located down Jalan d'Albuquerque off of Jalan Ujon Pasir in the southern part of the city. Free admission.

St. Francis Xavier's Church This church was built in 1849 and dedicated to S t. Francis Xavier, a Jesuit who brought Catholicism to Melaka and other parts of Southeast Asia.

Located on Jalan Laksamana, Free admission.

St. John's Fort The fort, built by the Dutch in the late 18th centur y, sits on top of St. John's Hill. Funny how the cannons point inland, huh? At the time, threats to the city came from land. It was named after a P ortuguese church to St. John the Baptist, which originally occupied the site.

Located off Lorong Bukit Senjuang. Free admission.

St. Paul's Church The church was built by the Portuguese in 1521, but when the Dutch came in, they made it par t of AF amosa, converting the altar into a cannon mount. The open tomb inside was once the resting place of St. Francis Xavier, a missionary who spr ead Catholicism thr oughout Southeast Asia and whose r emains were later moved to Goa.

Located behind Porta de Santiago. Free admission.

SHOPPING

Antiques hunting has been a major draw to Melaka for decades. Distinct Peranakan and teak furniture, por celain, and household items fetch quite a price these days, due to a steady increase in demand for these rare treasures. The area down and around Jalan Hang Jebat and Jalan Tun Tan Cheng Lok called Jonker Walk sports many little antiques shops that are filled with as many gorgeous items as any local museum. You'll also find handmade crafts, ready-made batik clothing, and other souv enirs. Whether you're buying or just looking, it's a fun way to spend an afternoon.

For crafts and souvenirs, you'll also find a row of shops along the lane beside $\text{Sadthuys}$. Most prices seem fair, but you may need to do a little bargaining.

4 PANGKOR

Pangkor's claim to fame is the spectacular, award-winning Pangkor Laut Resort, nestled on its own private island—without a doubt one of Malaysia's best known. Pangkor's main island supports a wee village and some smaller resorts. For a while, the Pan Pacific group operated a fine r esort here, but no w the o wners operate it themselv es as the P angkor Island Beach Resort. Other than that, there's not much to see.

If the exclusivity of seclusion is exciting for you, then Pangkor is your place. If you feel you need to break up the resort experience with something else, Langkawi (later in this chapter), to the nor th, has luxur y resorts that are all that, plus gr eat restaurants and a range of adventurous natural activities.

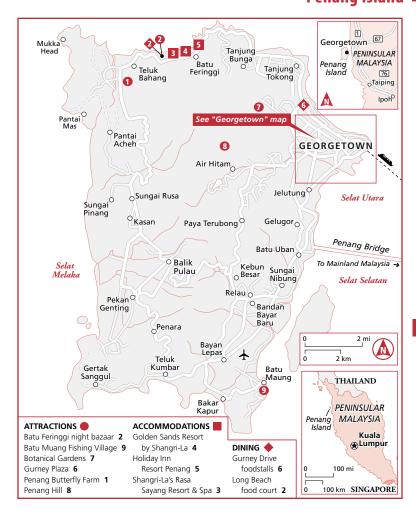

The easiest way to get to P angkor is to hop a flight. Berjaya Air (② 03/2149-3731; www.berjaya-air.com) flies five times a week, and the trip is only 30 minutes. Compared to a 3<sup>1</sup>/<sub>2</sub>-hour drive from KL, then a ferry ride to the island, it saves a lot of hassle.

Pangkor Laut Resort ★★★ This private island resort comprises private wooden Malay-style chalets perched atop stilts, connected by wooden boardwalks over the green sea. Pangkor Laut cr eates an effect that is r ustic and natural, y et uncompromisingly sophisticated and luxurious. Each r oomy villa is adorned with warm wood interiors, uncluttered contemporar y wood furnishings, king-siz e beds, and writing tables with Malaysian arts and textiles throughout. Each has a private sun deck furnished with chaise lounges. Some rooms intentionally have no TV, but some villas come with their own CD or iPod sound system on which y ou can play CDs fr om the resort's library. Spa and sea villas sit on stilts, with big pictur e windows that open out o ver the water. Lower-priced hill and garden villas are housed in double-stor y buildings, hill villas commanding the best sea views. Spa villas connect directly to the resort's full-service Spa Village, a seaside collection of landscaped buildings and pavilions wher e you can select a range of treatments developed from Malay, Chinese, and Indian natural beauty and health secrets. You won't get bored with dining options, either. Pangkor Laut has seven outlets serving either food or bev erages. ## 5 PENANG ★★★

Penang is unique in Malaysia because it has many things for many people. Tioman Island (see chapter 14) may have beaches and forests, but it has no shopping or historical sights to speak of. And although Melaka has historical sights and museums, it hasn't a grain of decent sand. P enang has all of it: fun beaches, beautiful r esorts, rich histor y, diverse culture, and delicious food. If you have only a short time to visit M alaysia but want to take in as wide an experience as you can, Penang is a good choice.

Penang gets its name fr om the M alay word pinang, in r eference to the ar eca plant, which grew on the island in abundance. The nut of the tree, commonly called betel, was chewed habitually throughout the East (and in some par ts still is). In the 15th century, it was a quiet place populated by small M alay communities, attracting the internest of some southern Indian betel merchants. By the time Francis Light, an agent for the British East India Company, arrived in 1786, the island was already on the maps of European, Indian, and Chinese traders. Light landed on the nornetheast part of the island, where he began a settlement after an agreement with the sultannof K edah, on the mainland. He called the town Georgetown **, after George III. One story claims that to gain the help of the locals for clearing the site, he shot a cannonload of coins into the jungle.

PENANG

Georgetown became B ritain's principal post in M alaya, attracting E uropeans, Arabs, northern and southern I ndians, southern Chinese, and M alays from the mainland and Sumatra to trade and settle. But it was never extremely profitable for England, especially when in 1819 S ir Stamford Raffles founded a ne w trading post in S ingapore. Penang couldn't keep up with the new port's success.

In 1826, Penang, along with Melaka and Singapore, formed a unit called the S traits Settlements, over which Penang was voted the seat of go vernment by a narrow margin. Finally, in 1832, S ingapore stole its thunder when authority shifted ther e. In the late 1800s, Penang got a big br eak. Tin mines and r ubber plantations on mainland M alaya were booming, and with the opening of the railway between KL and Butterworth (the town on the mainland just opposite the island), P enang once again thrived. Singapore firms scrambled to open offices in Butterworth.

The Great Depression hit Penang hard. So did the Japanese Occupation from 1941 to 1945, when the island was badly bombed. B ut since Malaysia's independence in 1957, Penang has had relatively good financial success.

Today the state of P enang is made up of the island and a small strip of land on the Malaysian mainland. Georgetown is the seat of go vernment for the state. Penang Island is 285 sq. km (111 sq. miles) and has a population of a little mor e than one million. Surprisingly, the population is mostly Chinese (59%), follo wed by Malays (32%) and Indians (7%).

Georgetown reminds me of the way S ingapore looked befor e massive go vernment redevelopment and restoration projects "sanitized" the old neighborhoods. Georgetown's grid of narr ow streets are still lined with shophouses that bustle with activity . Historic churches, temples, and mosques mingle with the city's newer architecture.

West of Georgetown, along Penang's northern shore, you'll find a number of popular resorts, sprawling complexes along strips of sandy beaches. U nfortunately, because Penang is located in the S traits of Malacca, the waters are not the idyllic crystal-clear azure you hope for in a tropical vacation. Yes, you've got sun, sand, and seaspor ts, but no snorkeling or scuba. In my opinion, if you really want it all, enjoy the waters and sea life while you stay at one of the luxury resorts on Langkawi to the north (covered later in this chapter), and hop on a ferry to Georgetown for a day trip of sightseeing. There are short flights between the two islands as well.

Visitor Information

The main Tourism Malaysia office is located at Lev el 56, KOMTAR Building (Kompleks Tun Abdul Razak) on J alan Penang (© 04/264-3494). There's another information center at Penang International Airport (© 04/643-0501).

Getting There

BY PLANE Penang International Airport (© 04/643-4411) has flights that connect from all o ver the world. Malaysia Airlines (© 1300/883-000; www.malaysiaairlines. com) has about 20 flights each day fr om KL, plus connecting flights fr om all o ver the country and r egion. O ther airlines that ser vice Penang are Singapore Airlines, Thai Airways, Cathay Pacific, AirAsia (© 1300/889-933; www.airasia.com), and Firefly (© 03/7845-4543; www.fireflyz.com.my).

The airport is 20km (12 miles) fr om the city. To get into to wn, you must pur chase fixed-rate coupons for taxis RM38 (\$11/£6.85) to G eorgetown, RM60 (\$17/£11) to Batu Feringgi. There are also car rentals at the airport; choose Avis ( $\bigcirc$  04/643-9633).

PENANG

BY TRAIN By rail, the overnight trip from KL to Butterworth takes 10 hours and costs RM85 ($25/£15) first-class passage, or as lo w as RM17 ($4.95/£3.05) for economy class. The prices vary greatly depending on whether you choose upper or lower berth and what class of passage you take. Call KL Sentral (?) 03/2267-1200) for schedule information.

The train will let you off at the Butterworth Railway Station (© 04/323-7962), on Jalan Bagan Dalam (near the ferry terminal) in Butterworth, on the Malaysian mainland. From there, you can take a taxi to the island or head for the ferr y close by.

Many buses will bring you to Butterworth or Georgetown, but I really only recommend it if you're not in a hurry. Aeroline (© 03/6258-8800; www.aeroline.com. my) offers excellent executive coach services from KL to Penang.

244 BY FERRY The ferry to P enang is nestled betw een the B utterworth Railway S tation and the Butterworth bus terminal. It operates from 6am to 12:30am daily and takes 20 minutes from pier to pier. Ferries leave every 10 minutes. Purchase your passage by dropping RM1.20 (35¢/20p) exact change in the turnstile (there's a change booth if you don't have it). Fare is paid only on the trip to Penang. The return is free. The ferry lets you off at Weld Quay ( 04/310-2360).

BY TAXI The outstation taxi stand is in Butterworth next to the bus terminal (© 04/ 323-2045). Fares to Butterworth from KL will be about RM350 ($102/£63).

Getting Around

BY TAXI Taxis are abundant, but be warned they do not use meters, so y ou must agree on the price before you ride. They frequently rip off tourists. Most trips within the city are between RM5 and RM10 ($1.45-$2.90/90p-£1.80). I fy ou're staying out at the B atu Feringgi beach resort area, expect taxis to town to run RM25 to RM40 ($7.25-$12/£4.50-£7.20). The ride is about 15 or 20 minutes but can take 30 minutes during r ush hour.

BY BUS Buses also run all over the island and are well used by tourists who don't want to drop cash every time they want to go to the beach. The dark-blue no. 93 and the white-with-blue no. 202 both operate between KOMTAR in Georgetown and the beach resorts at Batu Feringgi. Fare is anywhere under RM3 (85¢/55p). Get exact change from your hotel's cashier before you set off, and ask the bus driver about the exact fare to your destination.

CAR RENTAL If you want to driv e, call A vis at the P enang International Airport at © 04/643-9633. They can also provide a car with driver for RM80 ($25/£14) per hour, for a minimum booking of 4 hours. If you plan to visit areas off Penang Island, the rate will increase.

BY BICYCLE & MOTORCYCLE Along Batu Feringgi, there are bicycles and motorcycles (little 100cc scooters, r eally) available for r ent. I don't recommend renting the scooters. You can never be certain of their maintenance record, and Penang's drivers are careless about watching your back. A sad number of visitors are injured or worse because of scooter accidents.

In G eorgetown, it's possible to find some trishaw action for about RM30 ($8.70/£5.40) an hour. It's kitschy and touristy, and I completely recommend it for traveling between in-town sights, at least for an hour or two. Bargain hard; these guys are skilled negotiators, but they do work hard for the money.

ON FOOT I think everyone should walk at least part of the time to see the sights of Georgetown because in between each landmark and exhibit there's so much to see. A taxi, even a trishaw, will whisk you past back alleys where elderly hair cutters set up alfresco shops, bicycle repairmen sit fixing tubes in front of their stores, and Chinese grannies fan themselves in the shade. G eorgetown is stimulating, with the sights of old trades still being plied on these living streets, the noise of everyday life, and the exotic smells of an old Southeast Asian port. Give yourself at least a day her e. Start wandering early in the morning, by the waterfront, down the back alleys, before the heat of the sun takes holdthe lighting is perfect for photography and you will find fantastic subjects here.

Fast Facts: Penang

Penang's area code is 04. The banking center of Georgetown is in the do wntown area (close to Ft. Cornwallis) on Leboh Pantai, Leboh Union, and Leboh Downing, but you'll find ATMs in KOMTAR and other smaller shopping plazas as well. Internet cafes come 245 and go, so it's best to ask your hotel's concierge for the closest place to your hotel, or use the hotel's. If you're in town, Chulia Street, the main drag for backpacker tourists, has Internet access in a few places.

WHERE TO STAY

Although Georgetown has many hotels right in the city for convenient sightseeing, most visitors choose to stay at one of the beach resorts 30 minutes away at Batu Feringgi. Trips back and forth can be a bother (regardless of the resorts' free shuttle services), but if you're not staying in a resort, most of the finer beaches are off-limits.

Cheong Fatt Tze Mansion ★★ (Finds This is definitely one of the most unique and memorable hotel experiences in M alaysia—to sleep inside the walls of one of Asia 's most carefully restored heritage homes, the huge and opulent mansion of 19th-centur y millionaire Cheong Fatt Tze. The lobby is a simple desk in the front hall; inside, the only facilities to speak of are a courtyard breakfast area, a library, and a TV room (guest rooms do not have TVs). Guest rooms are each distinctive in shape and decor, all with terra cotta or teak floors, charming architectural detail, and antiques and replicas of the period. Double rooms have either twin beds or one king-siz e bed. Suites are also available. All are air-conditioned and have private bathrooms, though they are pretty small and bare. The experience is described by the management as an "owner-hosted home-stay," which is quite accurate. Don't expect the professional polish of the finer hotels, but then, with so much beauty around you, who cares?

The City Ba yview Hotel, Penang This city hotel is per fect for those who visit Penang for its cultural tr easures rather than its beaches. A good budget choice, it has a number of fair dining v enues, including a r ooftop revolving restaurant with ex cellent views of the island. Choose from guest rooms in the newer wing, completed in 1999, or those in the old wing. Either choice offers cool rooms in neutral tones, not as elegant as many, but comfortable and definitely offering value for the money.

Eastern & Oriental Hotel (E&O) ★★ E&O first opened in 1885, established by the same Sarkies brothers who were behind Raffles H otel in Singapore. It is without a doubt the most atmospheric hotel in Penang, with manicured lawns and tropical gardens flanking a white colonial-style mansion, a lacelike facade, and Moorish minarets. Accommodations are all suites, with cozy sitting nooks and sleeping quar pocket sliding doors. You can expect molding details around every door and paned window, oriental carpets over polished teak floorboards, and Egyptian cotton linens dressing each poster bed. D ining along the hotel 's many verandas is gorgeous. One caveat: No beach, but the pool in the seafr ont garden is very pretty.

246 Golden S ands Resort by Shangri-La ★ (Kids Shangri-La has been operating resorts on Penang longer than any one else, and because it got her e first, you can bet it laid claim to the best beach. S hangri-La has two neighboring pr operties on this site, Golden Sands and its more exclusive sister, Rasa Sayang. A four-star resort, Golden Sands is priced lower than the Rasa S ayang, so it attracts mor e families. The beach, pool area, and public spaces fill up fast, and folks ar e occupied all day with beach spor ts like parasailing and jet-skiing, and pool games. For the younger set, a large indoor playground is popular with kids under 12 while Mom and Dad relax. Holiday Inn Resort Penang (Kids This is a recommended choice for families, but be warned this resort has little appeal for vacationing couples or singles sans children. For families it has everything—special Kidsuites have a separate room for the wee ones with TV, video, and PlayStation, some with bunk beds—choose from jungle, treasure island, or outer space themes. H oliday Inn also has a Kids Club, fully supervised daycare with activities and games and a lifeguard. Older kids can join in beach volleyball, water polo, bike tours, and an assor tment of watersports arranged by the staff. Guest rooms are in two blocks: a low-rise structure near the beach and a high-rise to wer along the hillside, connected by a second-stor y walkway. Naturally, the beachside rooms command the greater rate. B each side rooms also have better ambience and slightly larger space, with wood floors and details, while to wer rooms have less charm. The lack of dining options gets tiring.

Shangri-La's Rasa Sayang Resort & Spa ★★★ Rasa Sayang reopened in 2006 after a RM10.5-million ($3-million/£1.9-million) r edevelopment that saw par ts of the original buildings gutted to make way for a spa to compete with the deluxe resorts in the region. Rasa Sayang was the first resort to be built along Batu Feringgi, so it commands the best beach of all the r esorts, with 12 hectar es (30 acres) of grounds—enough for a par-3 executive golf course, two pools, and plenty of gar dens, plus two wings of guest rooms, Rasa and Garden. Standard rooms are gorgeous, most with sea views, in contemporary style and natural tones, deep wood built-ins, and big fluffy beds. I Wing, guest rooms have private verandas and gardens, or balconies with tubs outside. Rasa Sayang also launched the S hangri-La's new spa brand, CHI, with decor and tr eatments based on Chinese principles of yin and yang and the fiv e elements: metal, wood, water, fire, and earth.

WHERE TO DINE

The 1885 ★★ CONTINENTAL If you're celebrating a special occasion while in Penang, The 1885 will make the experience beyond memorable. The nostalgic romance of the E&O H otel, its colonial ar chitecture, interiors, and manicur ed lawns ev oking times when tigers probably roamed the grounds after dark, provides the most incredible backdrop for a perfect meal. From an ever-changing menu, poultry, special cuts of meats, and fresh seafood ar e prepared in delicate contemporar y Western style. Candlelight, starched linens, silver service, and extremely attentive staff create a magical experience. The wine list is extensive. By Malaysian standards, this is an expensive meal, but if you compare the quality of the service, cuisine, and surroundings, really, you will never find such elegance for this price in E urope or the S tates. English afternoon teas are also superb. Men are asked to kindly wear a shirt with a collar.

Mama's Nyonya Restaurant ★ Finds NYONYA Those who crave Penang's most famous culinary style of Nyonya food (or Peranakan) have to visit this cozy family-r un restaurant in Abu Siti Lane. Ruby, one of the four sisters who r un the place, learned her cooking from her Mama, hence the name. It's authentic, as Mama keeps a watchful eye on her pr otégés, although she no longer cooks. You'll see her ther e every day though lending a helping hand with all the painstaking detail required for this kind of food. You might encounter some of her famous clients, including M alaysia's own international shoemaker, D atuk J immy Choo, or H ong K ong dir ector Ang Lee. All the fav orite Nyonya dishes are on the menu—try tau eu bak, purut ikan, Nyonya fish head curry, and otak otak. Look like a tourist, and someone will help y ou negotiate the menu.

May G arden Restaur ant CANT ONESE This is a top Cantonese r estaurant in Georgetown, and while it's noisy and not too big on ambience, it has excellent food. But how many Chinese do you know who go to places for ambience? It's the food that counts! Outstanding dishes include the tofu and broccoli topped with sea snail slices or the fresh steamed live prawns. They also have suckling pig and Peking duck. Don't agree to all the daily specials, or you'll be paying a fortune.

Ocean Green ★★ SEAFOOD I can't rave enough about Ocean Green. If the beautiful sea vie w and ocean br eezes don't fulfill ev ery holiday expectation, the succulent seafood certainly will. A long list of fresh seafood is prepared steamed or fried, with your choice of chili, black-bean, sweet-and-sour, or curry sauces. On the advice of a local food expert, I tried the lobster thermidor , which was expensive but divine, and the chicken wings stuffed with minced chicken, prawns, and gravy . Baked crab with cheese is also highly recommended.

Food Stall Dining

No discussion of P enang dining would be complete without co verage of the local food stall scene, which is famous. Penang hawkers can make any dish you've had in Malaysia, Singapore, or even southern Thailand—only better. Penang may be attractive for many things—history, culture, nature—but it is loved for its food.

Gurney D rive Foodstalls, to ward the water just do wn from the intersection with Jalan Kelawai, is the biggest and most popular hawker center . It has all kinds of food, including local dishes with every influence: Chinese, Malay, Indian. Find char kway teow (fried flat noodles with seafood), char bee hoon (a fried thin rice noodle), laksa (noodles and seafood in a tangy and spicy br oth), murtabak (mutton, egg, and onion fried inside Indian bread and dipped in dhal), oh chien (oyster omelet with chili dip), and rojak (a spicy fruit and seafood salad). After y ou've eaten your way through Gurney Drive, you can try the stalls on J alan Burmah near the Lai Lai S upermarket or the stalls at Long Beach food court in Batu Ferringi.

ATTRACTIONS In Georgetown

Cheong Fatt Tze Mansion ★★★ Cheong Fatt Tze (1840–1917), once dubbed "China's Rockefeller" by the New York Times, built a vast commercial empire in Southeast Asia, first in Indonesia, then in Singapore. He came to Penang in 1890 and continued his success, giving some of his spoils to build schools throughout the region. His mansion, where he lived with his eight wives, was built between 1896 and 1904.

The mansion is a sight to behold. Cheong spent lavishly for Chinese detail that effects the spirit of his heritage and the fashion of the day, as well as the rules of traditional feng shui. Every corner is dripping with ambience, outfitted throughout with stained glass, carved moldings, gilded wood-car ved doors, ceramic ornaments, lo vely courtyard and gardens, plus seven staircases.

In 2000, the mansion won UNESCO's Asia-Pacific Heritage Award for Conservation, so lovingly has this historic tr easure been preserved. Guided tours explain the histor y, personalities, and culture behind the home, plus the details of the conser vation efforts. If you're really hooked, accommodation is available.

Fort Cornwallis Fort Cornwallis is built on the site wher e Capt. F rancis Light, founder of Penang, first landed in 1786. The fort was first built in 1793, but this site was an unlikely spot to defend the city fr om invasion. In 1810, it was r ebuilt in an attempt to make up for initial strategic planning err ors. In the shape of a star, the only actual buildings still standing ar e the outer walls, a gunpo wder magazine, and a small Christian chapel. The magazine houses an exhibit of old photos and historical accounts of the old fort.

Goddess of Mercy Temple Dedicated jointly to K uan Yin, the goddess of mer cy, and Ma Po Cho, the patr on saint of sea trav elers, this is the oldest Chinese temple in Penang. On the 19th of each second, sixth, and ninth month of the lunar calendar (the months that fall between Feb/Mar, June/July, and Sept/Oct, respectively), Kuan Yin is 249 celebrated with Chinese operas and puppet shows.

Kapitan Kling Mosque Captain Light donated a large par cel of land on this spot for the settlement's sizable Indian Muslim community to build a mosque and graveyard. The leader of the community, known as Kapitan Kling (or Keling, which, ironically, was once a racial slur against Indians in the region), built a brick mosque here. Later, in 1801, he imported builders and materials fr om India for a new, brilliant mosque. Expansions in the 1900s topped the mosque with stunning domes and turets, adding extensions and new roofs.

Khoo Kongsi ★ The Chinese who migrated to S outheast Asia created clan associations in their ne w homes. B ased on common heritage, these social gr oups formed the core of Chinese life in the new homelands. The Khoo clan, who immigrated from Hokkien province in China, acquired this spot in 1851 and set to work building row houses, administrative buildings, and a clan temple around a large square. The temple here now was actually built in 1906 after a fire destroyed its predecessor. It was believed the original was too ornate, provoking the wrath of the gods. O ne look at the current temple, a Chinese baroque masterpiece, and you'll wonder how that could possibly be. Come here in August for Chinese operas.

Penang Museum and Art Gallery ** The historical society has put together this marvelous collection of ethnological and historical findings fr om Penang, tracing the port's history and diverse cultures through time. It's filled with paintings, photos, costumes, and antiques, among much mor e, all presented with fascinating facts and trivia. Upstairs is an ar t gallery. Originally the Penang Free School, the building was built in nly half of the building two phases, the first half in 1896 and the second in 1906. O remains; the other was bombed to the ground in World War II. Its recent renovation has added life, at least to the exterior. It's a favorite stop on a sightseeing itinerary because it's air-conditioned.

Sri Mariamman Temple This Hindu temple was built in 1833 by a Chettiar, a group of southern Indian Muslims, and received a major face-lift in 1978 with the help of Madras sculptors. The Hindu Navarithri festival is held here, whereby devotees parade Sri Mariamman, a Hindu goddess worshiped for her powers to cure disease, through the streets in a night procession. It is also the starting point of the Thaipusam Festival, which leads to a temple on Jalan Waterfall.

St. George's Church Built by Rev. R. S. Hutchins (who was also responsible for the Free School next door, home of the Penang Museum) and Capt. Robert N. Smith, whose paintings hang in the museum, this church was completed in 1818. Although the outside is almost as it was then, the contents w ere completely looted during World War II. All that remains are the font and the bishop's chair.

250 Outside Georgetown

Batu Muang Fishing Village If you'd like to see a local fishing village, here's a good one. This village is special for its shrine to A dmiral Cheng H o, the early Chinese sea adventurer.

Southeast tip of Penang. Free admission. From Georgetown, take the Jelut ong Expy., then take Teluk Tempoyak into the village.

Botanical G ardens Covering 30 hectar es (74 acr es) of landscaped gr ounds, this botanical garden was established by the British in 1884, with grounds that are perfect for a shady walk and a ton of fun if y ou love monkeys. They're crawling all o ver the place and will think nothing of stepping forward for a peanut (which you can buy beneath the do no t feed the monke ys sign). Also in the gardens is a jogging track and kiddie park. The gardens are important for tropical research.

About a 5- or 10-min. drive west of Georgetown. © 04/227-0428. Free admission. Daily 7am-7pm.

Penang Butterfly Farm The Penang Butterfly Farm, located toward the northwest corner of the island, is the largest in the world. O n its .8-hectar e (2-acre) landscaped grounds there are more than 4,000 flying butter flies from 120 species. A t 10am and 3pm, there are informative butterfly shows. Don't forget the insect exhibit—ther e are about 2,000 or so bugs.

Jalan Teluk Bahang. © 04/885-1253. Adults RM20 ($5.80/£3.60), childr en RM10 ($2.90/£1.80), fr ee for children 4 and under. Daily 9am–5:30pm.

Penang Hill Covered with jungle and 20 natur e trails, the hill is gr eat for trekking. Or you can go to Ay er Hitam, a town in central P enang, and take the K eretapi Bukit Bendera funicular railway to the top. It sends trains up and down the hill every half-hour from 6am to 9pm, weekends from 6am to 11pm, and costs adults RM4 ($1.15/70p) and children RM2 (60¢/35p), r ound-trip. In 2008, the train was closed for r epairs, so do check with the local Tourism Malaysia office to be sure it has reopened before you head out. If you prefer to make the trek on foot, go to the "Moon Gate" at the entrance to the Botanical Garden for a 5.5km (3½-mile), 3-hour hike to the summit.

A 20- t o 30-min. driv e south west from Georgetown. The funicular station is on Jalan Stesen Keretapi Bukit.

SHOPPING

The first place anyone here will recommend you to go for shopping is KOMTAR. Short for "Kompleks Tun Abdul Razak," it is the largest shopping complex in P enang, four stories of clothing shops, r estaurants, and large department stores. For those staying in Batu Ferringi resorts, Gurney Plaza (© 04/228-1111) is close by.

Good shopping finds in P enang are batik, pewter products, locally produced curios, paintings, antiques, pottery, and je welry. If you care to walk ar ound in sear ch of finds, there are a few streets in G eorgetown that are the hub of shopping activity . In the city center, the area around Jalan Penang, Lebuhraya Campbell, Lebuhraya Kapitan K eling, Lebuhraya Chulia, and Lebuhraya Pantai is near the Sri Mariamman Temple, the Penang Museum, the Kapitan Keling Mosque, and other sites of historic interest. Here you'll find everything from local crafts to souvenirs and fashion, and maybe even a bargain or two. Most of these shops are open from 10am to 10pm daily.

Out at Batu Feringgi, the main road turns into a fun night bazaar every evening just at dark. During the day, there are also some good shops for batik and souvenirs.

PENANG AFTER DARK

Visitors to Penang have to experience the E&O H otel, even if they're not staying there. Farquhar's Bar (© 04/222-2000; daily 11am–11pm) may be as close as many will come to exploring the hotel. Liv e the life of a colonialist, enjo y pub gr ub and cool drinks. Possibly the most notorious bar in P enang is the Hong Kong Bar, 371 Lebuh Chulia (© 04/261-9796), which opened in 1920 and was a r egular hangout for militar y personnel based in Butterworth. It has an extraordinary archive of photos of the servicemen who have patronized the place throughout the years, plus a collection of medals, plaques, and buoys from ships.

6 LANGKAWI★★

Where the beautiful Andaman S ea meets the S traits of Malacca, Langkawi I sland positions itself as one of the r egion's best island paradise destinations. S ince 1990, Tourism Malaysia has dedicated itself to promoting the island and developing it as an ideal travel spot. Now, after almost 2 decades of wor k, the island has proven itself as one of this country's best holiday gems.

This small island also claims a Hollywood credit, as it was the backdrop for the 1999 film Anna and the King. Langkawi play ed the role of Thailand to Jodie Foster's Anna Leonowens and Chow Yun-Fat's King Mongkut (Rama IV). The Thais wouldn't allow the filmmakers to shoot on location in their kingdom, so Hollywood turned to neighboring Malaysia.

Technically, Langkawi is an ar chipelago of islands, the largest of which ser ves as the main focal point. Ask ho w many islands actually make up Langkawi, and y ou'll hear either 104 or 99. The official response? "Both are correct. It depends on the tide!" On Langkawi Island itself, the main town, Kuah, provides the island's administrative needs, while on the western and northern shores, the beaches have been developed with resorts. The west-coast beaches of Pantai Cenang and Pantai Tengah are the most developed; however, the concept of "development" here is quite low key. To the north, Datai Bay and Tanjung Rhu host the island's finest, and most secluded, resorts.

One final note: Malaysia has declar ed Langkawi a duty-fr ee zone, so take a peek at some of the shopping in to wn, and enjoy RM1.50 (45¢/25p) beers!

ESSENTIALS Getting There

BY PL ANE Malaysia Airlines (© 1300/883-000; www.malaysiaairlines.com) and AirAsia (© 03/8775-4000; www.airasia.com) make Langkawi v ery convenient from either mainland Malaysia or Singapore. In addition, Silk Air (Singapore) flies to Langkawi International Airport (© 04/955-1311).

The best way fr om the airpor t is to pr earrange a shuttle pickup fr om your resort; otherwise, you can grab a taxi in front of the airport. To Pantai Cenang or Pantai Tengah, the fare should be about RM20 ($5.80/£3.60), while to the r esorts at Tanjung Rhu and Datai Bay, it will be RM45 and RM55 ($13/£8.10 and $16/£9.90), r espectively.

BY TRAIN Taking the train can be a bit of a hassle because the near est stop (in Alor Star) is quite far from the jetty to the island, r equiring a cab transfer. Still, if you prefer rail, hop on the overnight train from KL (the only train), which will put you in to Alor 252 Star at around 7am. Just outside the train station, you can find the taxi stand, with cabs to take you to the Kuala Kedah jetty for the ferry ride to Kuah.

BY BUS To be honest, I don't really recommend using this route. If you're coming from KL, the bus ride is long and uncomfortable, catching the taxi transfer to the jetty can be problematic, and by the time you reach the island, you'll need a vacation from your vacation. Fly or use the train. I f you're coming from Penang, the direct ferry is wonderfully convenient, as are a few flights per day.

From the jetty at Kuala Kedah, there are about five companies that provide ferry service to the island (trip time: about 1 hr. and 45 min.; cost: RM25/$7.25/£4.50). Ferries let you off at the main ferr y terminal in Kuah, where you can hop a taxi to your resort for RM20 to RM50 ($5.80-$15/£3.60-£9).

Ferries also ply between Penang and Langkawi. Langkawi Ferry has two early-morning ferries from Weld Quay in Georgetown for RM60 one-way ($17/£11) and RM115 round-trip ($33/£21). Call them in Penang at (6) 04/264-2088 or visit their office across from the clock tower. If you're heading from Langkawi to Penang, you can call them in Langkawi at (?) 04/966-3779.

Visitor Information

The Tourism Malaysia office is unfor tunately situated in K uah town on Jalan Persiaran Putra, far fr om the beach ar eas. For specific queries, y ou can call them at © 04/966-7789. If you're arriving by plane, there's another office at the airport (1) 04/955-7155).

Getting Around

BY TAXI Taxis generally hang around at the airport, the main jetty, the taxi stand in Kuah, and some major hotels. F rom anywhere in between, your best bet is to ask y our hotel's concierge to call a taxi for you. Keep in mind, if you're going as far as one side of the island to the other, your fare can go as high as RM50 ($15/£9).

CAR & MOTORCYCLE RENTAL At the airpor t and fr om agents in the complex behind the main jetty, car rentals can be arranged starting at RM80 ($23/£14) per day. This is for the standar d, no-frills model—actually, mine was more reminiscent of some of the junkers I dr ove throughout college, but it still got me ar ound. Insurance policies are lax, as are rental regulations. My rental guys seemed more concerned with my passport documents than with my driv er's license. If you're out on the beach at Cenang or Tengah, a fe w places r ent jeeps and motor cycles fr om RM80 ($23/£14) and RM30 ($8.70/£5.40) per day, respectively. Pick a good helmet. Note: If you have an accident, you could be responsible for all repairs, but resorts usually rent cars that are insured.

BY FOOT The main beaches at Cenang and Tengah can be walked quite nicely; ho wever, don't expect to be able to walk around to other parts of the island.

Fast Facts: Langkawi

The only major bank branches are located far fr om the beach ar eas, in K uah, mostly around the blocks acr oss the street from the Night Hawker Center (off J alan Persiaran Putra)—there is an ATM at the airpor t. Moneychangers keep long hours out at P antai Cenang and Pantai Tengah, but for other resorts you'll have to change your money at the resort. Along the Pantai Cenang and Pantai Tengah main road, you'll find at least a halfdozen small Internet places.

254 WHERE TO STAY

The Andaman ★★ (Kids You will be surprised how large this resort is, its buildings blend so per fectly with the jungle surr ounding them. Andaman has a sprawl of lush grounds hugging a beautiful white beach. The temptation to clear the coastal forests has been avoided, and rooms quite pleasantly look into these for ests and their native fauna, but with glimpses of the sea. The Andaman welcomes families and has special facilities, including a kid's club, and it has a safe, shallow beach. The entrance and main lobby are overpowering in size but visually quite stunning in open-air local-style ar chitecture with vaulted roofs built from polished hardwoods. Guest rooms, in two wings that span out to either side of the main building, are big, with wall-to-wall carpeting and Western-style decor, save for a few local textiles for effect. Ground-floor lanai rooms have a private sun deck with umbrella stand. The pool is huge, with lots of shady spots, and the spa features traditional Malay herbal beauty and health treatments.

Four Seasons Langkawi ★★★ Every detail of this resort is perfectly exotic, influenced by contemporary Moorish style. Pavilion rooms are surrounded by floor-to-ceiling windows and wrapar ound verandas. Under soaring ceilings, huge bedr ooms have wood floors, ceiling fans, car ved wood detailing, and plush soft furnishings. Through double doors, huge bathrooms are majestic, with oversize terrazzo tubs built into arched nooks, separate closets for rain shower and toilet, a huge clothes closet, and a center island with double sinks. Throughout the rooms you'll find touches such as lanterns, hammer ed bronze work, lovely toiletries on marble pedestals, and cozy thr ow pillows that add an intimate Middle Eastern flav or. The resort has two infinity pools that look like they 're spilling onto the beach, which is a long, wide stretch of perfect sand. Every dining venue fronts the beach. At Rhu Bar, cocktails are served with Turkish water pipes, amid Indian Moghul hanging swings, glo wing lanterns, and M oorish carved latticework arches that frame the sea view gorgeously. The spa has private villas with tubs for four, space for floor and table massages, private indoor/outdoor showers, and changing rooms all encased in glass with lovely garden views. This is the most luxurious property in this whole book. Period.

Frangipani Langkawi Resort & Spa ★ This small resort packs a big punch. I like its ecological stance in setting out as a green resort, and it has already won several awards for its effor ts. It's got a great location, with a 400m-long (1,312-ft.) beachfren ont with restaurants, shops, and bars at the fr ont entrance. There are rooms in two-story blocks, but the best choices are the sea-facing villas with r ooftop showers. All are tastefully furnished, and the Coco Beach Bar is the best place to view spectacular sunsets.

Pelangi Beach Resort For those who prefer a more active vacation or are looking for a resort that's more family-oriented, I recommend Pelangi. A top-quality resort, this place stands out from neighboring five-star resorts for its sheer fun. A long list of organized sports and leisure pastimes makes it especially attractive for families, but, surprisingly, I've never found children to be a distraction here. Pelangi's wooden chalets are huge inside and are divided into one, two, or four guestrooms. You'll be welcomed by vaulted ceilings, modern bathrooms, and large living spaces. But it's the little things you'll love— I didn't want to get out of bed and leave my squishy down pillows and snuggly bedding. In addition, Pelangi's location, near the central beach strip for island life, means y ou're not cloistered away from the rest of civilization.

Tanjung Rhu Resort ★★ The beach at Tanjung Rhu is a wide cæscent of dazzlingly pure sand wrapped around a perfect crystal azure bay. Tree-lined karst islets jut up from the sea, dotting the horizon. Just gorgeous. This resort claims 440 hectares (1,087 acres) of jungle in this par t of the island, monopolizing the scene for extra priv acy, but it has its pros and cons. The pros? Guest rooms are enormous and decorated with sensitivity to the environment, from natural materials to organic recycled-paper-wrapped toiletries. A second pool and spa facility add value. The cons? The resort is a little isolated, so guests will be locked into using the resort restaurants. This isn't all bad, as the food is good and they offer packages enabling access to all outlets and menus.

WHERE TO DINE

If you're out at one of the mor e secluded resorts, chances are, you'll stay there for most of your meals. If you find yourself at Pantai Cenang, try Nam Restaurant (1) 04/955-6787), the best restaurant on Langkawi and perhaps in all of M alaysia. Located within the small and charming Bon Ton Resort, Nam serves "West meets spice" dishes along with an ex cellent selection of wines and dr eamy desserts in a B alinese-inspired setting. Arrive at sunset for pr edinner drinks, and stay after y our meal for drinks at the r esort's fun Chin Chin bar. If you're in Kuah town looking for something good to eat, the best local dining experience can be found at the ev ening hawker stalls just along the waterfront near the taxi stand. A long r ow of hawkers cooks up ev ery kind of local fav orite, including seafood dishes. You can't get any cheaper or more laid back. After dinner, from here it's easy to flag down a taxi back to your resort.

ATTRACTIONS

Fifteen years ago, Langkawi was just a backwater island suppor ting small fishing communities. When the government came in with big money to develop the place for tourism, they thought they needed a catch, so they dug up some old moldy "legends" about the island and have tried to market them as bona fide cultural attractions. Basically, these attractions appeal more to local tourists.

In terms of beaches and waterspor ts, most r esorts are self-contained units, offering their own equipment rentals and planning their own outings.

Outside of your resort, there's some fairly decent diving to be had. Asian Overland (1) 04/955-2002; www.asianoverland.com.my) can arrange day trips with two div es to Payar Marine Park within Langkawi 's extensive island networ k. They charge RM280 ($81/£50). You can also snorkel for the day for RM160 ($46/£29) per person. There's an interesting snorkel attraction off Langkawi—a platform in the middle of the sea that floats above a coral reef. Day trips to the platform include rides in a glass-bottomed boat, snorkeling, and lunch on the platform. I t's an all-day affair for RM230 ($67/£41) per person, starting at 8am and getting you back to your resort just before dinnertime.

Asian Overland also plans round-island boat trips to "island-hop" at beaches and into mangrove swamps (inter esting), with a stop at the P regnant Maiden Lake (one of the before-mentioned overhyped places). The mangrove tours are very educational, but ask them to show you the eagles, not feed them. They'll tailor your tour so you can see the sights that most interest you.

The best thing going for Langkawi is that the island 's natural assets hav e been preserved despite the modern infrastr ucture to accommodate tourists. U nlike B ali and Phuket, visitors can r elax on the beaches and not be hassled by hawkers trying to sell things.

One piece of infrastructure that stands out is the cable car that extends to the summit of Mount Macinchang. It's a dramatic, near-vertical lift high above the rainforest canopy to the 706m-high (2,316-ft.) r ocky summit. From here visitors can see most of the island 's attractions and peer off into the distant islands of southern Thailand. The departure point for the ride is Oriental Village at Burau Bay. There is a carnival-like atmosphere here, with restaurants and souvenir shops that all seem to sell basically the same items. The 14-minute 257 ride to the summit is one of the world's steepest, at 42 degrees, and it has the longest freespan single-rope cable in the world. At the top, there is a 125m (410 ft.) cur ved platform across a deep chasm. Open Monday, Tuesday, and Thursday from 10am to 6pm; Wednesday noon to 6pm; F riday to S unday 9:30am to 7pm. Call (C) 04/959-4225 for more information. Prices are RM25 ($7.25/£4.50) adults, RM18 ($5.20/£3.25) children.

Sailors will enjoy visiting one of four marinas in Langkawi. The international charter company Sunsail (?) 04/966-5869; www.sunsailmalaysia.com) operates fr om R oyal Langkawi Yacht Club on Jalan Dato Syed Omar, where keen sailors can r ent yachts to sail around the islands or to Phuket in neighboring Thailand.

Perhaps one of the lo veliest additions to Langkawi's attractions is the Ibrahim Hussein Museum and C ultural Foundation, Pasir Tengkorak, Jalan Datai ( ? 04/959-4669). The artistic devotion of the foundation 's namesake fueled the creation of this enchanting modern space designed to sho wcase Malaysia's contribution to the international fine-arts scene. If you can pull y ourself from the beach for any one activity in Langkawi, this is the one I r ecommend. Mr. Hussein has created a museum wor thy of international attention. Truly a gem. It's open Saturday through Thursday from 10am to 6pm; adults pay RM12 ($3.50/£2.15), children visit for free.

SHOPPING

Langkawi's designated D uty Free Port status makes shopping her e quite fun and v ery popular. In Kuah town, two shopping malls, Langkawi Parade (Jalan Kelibang; © 04/ 966-6372) and Langkawi Fair (Persiaran Putra; © 04/969-8100), both in Kuah town, are filled with duty-free shopping. For local handicrafts, the Langkawi Craft and Cultural Complex (Jalan Teluk Yu; © 04/959-1913; daily 10am–6pm) sells an assortment of batik, baskets, ceramic, silv er jewelry, brassware, and more, and also has daily crafts demonstrations and cultural shows.

Peninsular Malaysia: The East Coast

Over the past 200 y ears, while the cities on the western coast of peninsular Malaysia preoccupied themselves with waves of foreign domination, those on the eastern coast dev eloped in r elative seclusion. Today this par t of the countr y remains true to its M alay heritage, fr om small fishing kampungs (villages) in the south to the I slamic str ongholds of the north. More recently it has dev eloped as the nation's petroleum center.

The best attractions of the east coast ar e its islands. Tioman, Redang, and P erhentian attract snorkelers and divers with clear waters, diverse marine life, and comfortable accommodations. In addition, shor t daily flights from Kuala Lumpur (KL) make Tioman and Redang more accessible than the more renowned (and remote) dive sites of Borneo. The shoreline along the east coast of the peninsula is fringed with long stretches of sandy beaches, home to doz ens of resorts. Most accommodations are budget chalets, but a fe w delux e resorts stand out from the rest, notably Cherating's Club Med, Terengganu's Tanjong Aru Resort, and the Aryani.

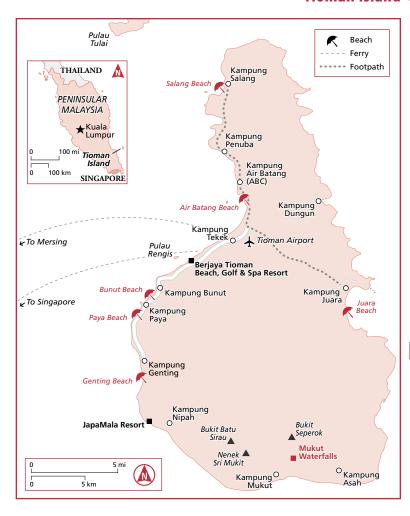

With these fe w ex ceptions, tourism is quite laid back. For many, the lack of tourism infrastr ucture can sound ex citing—"authentic" even—but really, although the potential for natur e, adventure, and cultural tourism is her e, ther e's just not enough creativity and investment for this area to compete with other destinations in the countr y. In short, if y ou come her e, come to r elax. I hav e, ho wever, found some satisfying shopping, as many of Malaysia's surviving cottage industries ar e located in this area.

Some notes before you plan your trip: If you're looking for beach fun, the monsoon season fr om mid-O ctober thr ough late February can make the waters choppy , so avoid the island resorts and take care by the seaside. Also, try not to book during Singapore's holiday seasons, par ticularly during school holidays fr om mid-M ay thr ough June and again in N ovember and D ecember, when r esorts become cr owded with fun-loving families intent on a good time.

In the nor th, where the locals ar e very conservative, it is r ecommended that visitors dr ess modestly at public beaches, although a fe w beach r esorts and islands are relaxed about swimwear.

1 TIOMAN ISLAND

Tioman Island (pronounced Tee-oh-mahn), a tiny island off the south of Malaysia's east coast, is a popular destination on M alaysia's east coast, visited mostly by nearby Singaporeans; backpackers, who have a multitude of cheap chalets to flop in; and scuba enthusiasts, who have a range of coral gar dens to explore. The island is only 39km (24 miles) long and 12km (7 1/2 miles) wide, with sandy beaches that line several small bays, clear water with sea life and coral reefs, and jungle mountain-trekking trails with streams and waterfalls. So idyllic is the setting that Tioman was the location for the 1950s H ollywood film South Pacific.

Tioman has been snubbed by scuba enthusiasts because it was developed before its northern island neighbors, Redang and Perhentian. For many, Tioman's accessibility didn't jive with their expectation of "unspoiled" ecology. To be honest, I have many friends who have taken dive trips all over Southeast Asia and claim that diving in Tioman is as good, if not better, than in Redang and Perhentian.

Tioman has retained much of its tropical island charm, perhaps by virtue of the fact that only one modern resort has been built on it. A ctivity is spread throughout the kampungs, which spring up in the various bays. In Tekek, you'll find the airport, main ferry jetty, and 260 some convenience shops. O ther kampungs include Air Batang ("ABC"), and Salang on the west coast and Juara on the east coast. Each kampung has some accommodations, most of them very basic wooden chalets, with some access to simple r estaurants.

ESSENTIALS Getting There

BY PLANE Flights to Tioman originate from KL and Singapore, operated by a private airline, Berjaya Air, and coordinated by the folks at the B erjaya Tioman Beach Resort. However, you need not stay at the resort to book passage on these flights. Call their KL office for r eservations at © 03/7846-8228. The airport in Tioman is in Kampung Tekek, just across from the main jetty. If you're staying at Berjaya Tioman, a shuttle will fetch you; ho wever, if you plan to stay else where, you're on your own. See "Getting Around," below.

BY BOAT Ferries and speedboats depart from the jetty just next to R&R Ilaza in Mersing each day. Book passage fr om the many agents huddled ar ound the jetty—they 're basically all the same, each reserving trips on the same boats. Be warned about the aggressive touts at the jetty her e. They are persistent and anno ying, trying to lure you to less popular places with substandar d facilities. Boats leav e Mersing Jetty at inter vals that depend on the tide. The trip takes around 11/2 hours and can cost between RM35 and RM90 ($10-$26/£6.30-£16), depending on the po wer of the boat you hire. Avoid the cheaper ferries that take 4 hours to make the trip (snooz e). Boats drop you at either the Berjaya Resort or the main jetty in Kampung Tekek. The last boat leav es for Tioman between 5 and 6pm every evening. If you miss this boat, you're stuck in Mersing for the night.

F ares for air-conditioned buses range in price fr om RM8 ($2.30/£1.45) to RM13 ($3.75/£2.35). arrive at R&R Plaza, the main bus depot in Mersing. The jetty is located just next door

Getting Around

There are hiking trails between kampungs along the west coast, and another trail o verland to the one beach on the east coast. O ther than walking, the most popular mode of transport is water taxi. Each village has a jetty; you can either pay your fare at tour offices located near the foot of the pier or pay the captain directly. The taxis stop operating past nightfall, so make sur e you get home befor e 6pm. A few sample far es: From Tekek to ABC is RM16 ($4.65/£2.90) per person, to Salang RM25 ($7.25/£4.50), to Juara RM65 ($19/£12). Note that these guys don't like to shuttle around only one person, so if there's only one of you, be prepared to pay double.

Fast Facts: Tioman Island

Berjaya Tioman Beach, Golf & Spa Resort has modern conveniences like postal services, in-room telephones with international dir ect dial access, money changing, a gift shop, and other services. If you're not staying here, venture into Tekek, where you'll find these services opposite the main jetty.

Tips Island Travel

If you have not already acquired a good mosquito repellent, do so before heading to any of the islands on Malaysia's east coast. You'll need something with DEET (an active ingredient used in repellents that safely and effectively keeps bugs away from your skin). These mosquitoes are hungry. If you plan to stay in one of the smaller chalet places, you might want to invest in a mosquito net. Also, bring a flashlight to help you get around after sunset.

WHERE TO STAY

Unless you stay at the B erjaya Tioman Beach Golf & S pa Resort or J apaMala Resort, expect to be r oughing it. F or some trav elers, a r esort with wonder ful modern conv eniences is what it takes to make a tropical island experience relaxing. For others, though, real r elaxation comes fr om an escape fr om modern distractions. S mall chalets in the kampungs have minimal facilities and fe w or no conveniences such as hot sho wers and telephones. Why would you want to stay in them? B ecause they're simple, close to the beach, and less touristy.

Of the budget choices, the most charming is Bamboo Hill (© 09/419-1339), at the northern tip of ABC. These rustic chalets are perched in the for est along a rocky hill overlooking the bay. While the beach here is too rocky, it's just a short walk to the other side of the bay, where you can swim, or you can hike over the hill to the sandy cove in Kampung Salang. Bamboo Hill's timber chalets are cozy and quiet, with balconies, refrigerators, tea kettles, and mosquito netting. Priced from RM70 to RM120 ($20-$35/£13-£22), cash only. You can also opt for air-conditioning. An Internet station and library complete the amenities. Really the only place to eat here is Nazri's Place, at the south end of the beach, which serves breakfast, lunch, and fish or chicken barbecue dinner daily.

Berjaya Tioman Beach Golf & Spa Resort ★ This is one of two Western-style resorts on the island and provides all the conveniences you'd expect from a budget chain hotel. Accommodations are provided in small blocks and priv ate chalets, some with sea views, but most facing gar dens. I nside, wood floors, flo wery drapes, upholster y, and bedspreads brighten simple rattan furnishings. Each room has a small balcony, but guests are advised against hanging clothes and towels to dry. Attached bathrooms are small, tiled affairs, with combination tub/sho wers. The beach her e is fine; ho wever, don't expect much surf because the r esort is located on the w est coast of the island, pr otected from the open sea. O ne benefit is an on-site P ADI scuba center, but don't come all this way for Berjaya's ho-hum golf course.

The hotel has fiv e-star luxe facilities, pearly white sands, and clear waters most of the year. Guests arriving by air need to transfer to the r esort via private speedboat at a fee, and those arriving from Mersing on the mainland can catch a fast speedboat that takes approximately 11/2 hours, depending upon the prevailing weather.

TIOMAN OUTDOORS

Tioman's beaches can be hit-or-miss. Around Tekek, much of ABC, and spots north of the Berjaya resort, rocks spoil the beach and shallo w waters. Salang's beach, a crescent of sand hugging a horseshoe-shaped co ve, presents the best beach on the west side of the island. The most ideal beach, however, is on Juara, on the east side of the island. This broad sandy stretch is practically deserted half the time due to its r emote location—to get there, either hop a water taxi, take the daily ferr y, or hike overland. The trek from Tekek to Juara cuts across the center of the island and will take up to 2 hours to complete. Bring water and lots of mosquito repellent, and don't try it unless you are reasonably fit.

Scuba professionals Dive Asia (Salang and Tekek © 09/419-5017; ABC © 09/419-1654; www.diveasia.com.my) have been on Tioman over 30 years. Each day they take divers out for two dives, one at 9:30am and one at 2:30pm (at different places each day) for only RM170 ($49/£31), equipment included. A bargain. S norkel trips can also be arranged at each beach destination for about RM45 ($13/£8.10), which includes boat transfer to the best snorkeling sites plus equipment rental.

KUANTAN & CHERATING

Pahang, covering about 35,960 sq. km (14,024 sq. miles) of mostly inland for ests, is the largest state on peninsular Malaysia. Travelers come to Pahang's east-coast resorts for the long sandy beaches, which str etch all the way up the east coast along the S outh China Sea. Jungle forests promise adventures in trekking, climbing, and riv er rafting. In fact, much of Taman Negara, Malaysia's main peninsular national for est preserve, is in this state, although most people access the forest by traveling from Kuala Lumpur (see "Side Trips from Kuala Lumpur," in chapter 13). K uantan, although it 's the capital, doesn 't have the feel of a big city; ho wever, with the recent construction of a few big shopping malls, there's more choice for entertainment, shopping, and fast food. If you're staying at the beach at Telok Chempedak, 5km (3 miles) north of Kuantan, the atmosphere is even more relaxed.

Cherating Village has a backpacker feel to it, but unlike those in many par ts of the region, there isn't the bar and par ty scene. This is more laid back, with fe w bars, and it looks a little run down these days.

The most conv enient way to get to K uantan is b y a quick flight fr om KL. Malaysia Airlines (© 1300/883-000; www.malaysiaairlines.com) flies daily fr om KL, as does AirAsia (© 03/8775-4000; www.airasia.com). Flights arrive at the Sultan Ahmad Shah Airport (© 09/667-3666). Just outside the airport is a taxi stand wher e you can get a cab to Kuantan for RM35 ($10/£6.30) or to Cherating for RM60 ($17/£11).

Bus routes service Kuantan from all parts of the peninsula, and thanks to the opening in 2004 of a beautiful ne w highway linking K uantan to KL, the trip is only 4 hours. Transnasional operates hourly buses for RM20 ($5.80/£3.60) fr om Puduraya Bus Terminal on Jalan Pudu (© 03/2070-3300). The bus terminal in Kuantan is in Kompleks Makmur. Taxis at the stand just outside the terminal can take y ou to to wn for RM15 ($4.35/£2.70).

Outstation taxis from KL ( © 03/2078-0213) will cost RM200 ($58/£36) for the 3-hour trip. The outstation taxi stand in Kuantan is at the bus terminal.

Getting Around

The areas in the town's center are nice for walking. Otherwise, stick with taxis, which can be waved down on any street. There's also a stand behind the Tourist Information Centre where you'll be sure to find a cab in a pinch. Taxis here are not meter ed, so you must negotiate the fare before you set out. This is a good deal when you want to hire someone for a few hours to take you around the city. Rates start at about RM20 ($5.80/£3.60) per hour. Use taxis to travel to areas of interest outside the city that are covered in "Attractions Outside Kuantan," below.

WHERE TO STAY

Kuantan is not a very large place, and most of those who vacation here prefer to stay just a little farther north, in Cherating, which is more established as a resort destination. If staying close to K uantan is important to you, the Hyatt Regency, about 5km (3 miles) outside of town on the beach at Telok Chempedak, is the best choice for accommodations.

In Kuantan

Hyatt Regency Kuantan ★ The Hyatt Regency is part business hotel and part resort. Its 2 hotel blocks serve business travelers linked to P ahang and Terengganu's oil industry, which is why you'll find executive club services, a business center, and other conveniences for professionals that might seem out of place at a beachside property. On the other hand, Hyatt does front an extensive beachfront, with cool breezes and the relaxing sound of ocean waws, plus a full range of exciting watersports activities. The open-air concept of the hotel, especially the tropical reception area, shows all the efficiency of a Hyatt without the studied professionalism of a city hotel. Inside 2 large hotel blocks, guest rooms are comfortable, with modern conveniences adorned with some local decorator touches, but show some signs of wear. Each has a balcony but not all have sea views, so be sure to inquire when booking.

In Cherating

Most people skip Kuantan and head straight for Cherating, some 47km (29 miles) to the north. The anchor resort, Club Med, opened in 1980. Since then a couple dozen smaller resorts have opened up, none of them coming close to Club Med's standard. Resorts here are all mostly self-contained units; to stay her e means you'll most likely be dining inhouse, participating in beach and waterspor ts activities, and possibly only leaving the resort for tours planned through your resort's activities desk.

Windsurfers, take note: Cherating is world famous for ex cellent conditions and the home of the "M onsoon Madness" international competition, which takes place every January, when monsoon conditions make great waves. In addition to windsurfing, resorts can arrange trips through the mangroves up the Cherating River in a hired bumboat and trips to crafts shops and cultural shows.

Club Med ★★ (Kids Typical to Club M ed style, this "family village" is all about escapism—fun and relaxation. Activities include sailing, kayaking, beach volleyball, tennis, wall climbing, and r ollerblading. Try bungee-bounce or take flying-trapez e lessons. For relaxation, there are yoga classes and the Mandara spa. Club Med also organizes short trips to villages outside the r esort for sightseeing and can arrange golf outside the r esort as well. For families, the full menu of childr en's activities can keep kids occupied ev ery minute of their stay. The property itself fronts a good stretch of beachfront on 80 private hectares (198 acr es). Malay-style wooden houses hav e contemporary furnishings, with clean wooden floors, vibrant fabrics, small balconies, and small bathrooms with standing showers. If you're new to Club Med, their pricing is a bit confusing, depending on the size of your party and the time and duration of your stay. The club works out an overall fee, which is inclusive of all meals, beverages, and most activities, in many cases including international airfare as well. For an idea, a 3-day, 2-night trip, not including transportation to and fro, will set you back RM880 ($255/£158) per night.

Swiss Garden Resort & Spa * Many choices of accommodations in Cherating offer basic seaside facilities for budget trav elers, but y ou should be warned: Most are plagued by tatty rooms desperate for upgrading, substandard facilities, and disinterested service. Swiss Garden is a better choice, as it's one of the newer properties in this category and is managed by the same people behind S wiss Garden's successful leisure-class hotels in KL. This four-story horseshoe-shaped block surr ounds a swimming pool fronting a very pretty beach—if you pay extra for a sea-facing room, make sure you get the top floor for the best view. Swiss Garden's rooms have good space for luggage, sport clean tile floors that make the room feel fresh, small balconies, wooden furniture, soft beds, and small TVs. Recent renovations have made rooms more stylish. The two best featur es of the resort are its B alok Beach location, home to Cherating 's windsurfing activities, and its 265 Balinese spa, located in a garden courtyard with a long menu of reasonably priced relaxation and beauty treatments.

WHERE TO DINE

Most folks staying in the area dine at their resorts, but if you find yourself in town during mealtime, the absolute best place to go is the outdoor food stalls by the beach next to the Hyatt Regency. It's a short taxi ride from the center of to wn, but well worth it. All varieties of very fresh seafood, including whole fish, are cooked to order and are as cheap as RM6 to RM16 ($1.75-$4.65/£1.10-£2.90) per dish. The flavors and atmosphere are about as local as you can get.

ATTRACTIONS

Kuantan can really be seen in a day. Although there are a few fun crafts shops, the place is not exactly a hotbed of culture. The main attraction in town is the huge State Mosque, which is quite beautiful inside and out, with a distinct dome, minarets, and stained glass. Late afternoon is the best time to see it, when the light shines through the glass. You can also have a nice walk down Jalan Besar, sampling local delicacies sold on the str eet and shopping in the smaller craft and souvenir shops.

Attractions Outside Kuantan

Pahang is home to peninsular Malaysia's oldest rainforests, but to be honest, the best way to experience them is thr ough Taman Negara, Malaysia's biggest forest preserve on the peninsula. Overnight trips in decent accommodations with experienced natur e guides can be organized very easily from KL (see chapter 13). A few attractions outside Kuantan can make interesting half-day or day trips if you tire of the beach. For these trips, I suggest you book through your hotel or r esort—I couldn't find a single independent tour operator with suitable guides, so your resort probably has one or two they work with exclusively.

Gua Charah caves are about 25km (16 miles) outside of Kuantan. Also called Pancing caves (they're located in a to wn called P ancing), one of the cav es in the networ k is a temple, home to a huge r eclining Buddha. It is said that the monk car etaker, who has grown very old, is having difficulty finding another monk who will take o ver his duties at the caves.

Lake Chini, 12 freshwater lakes 60km (38 miles) southwest of Kuantan, claim local legends a la Loch Ness. They say that there once was an ancient Khmer city at the site of the lakes, but it is no w buried deep under the water, protected by monsters. Some have tried to find both city and monsters but hav e come up with nothing (ex cept litter—it's a problem). Boats take you across the lake to an Orang Asli (indigenous peoples) kampung to see their way of life.

Just south of Kuantan is Pekan, which for history and culture buffs is far more interesting than Kuantan. Called "the Royal City," it's where the Sultan of Pahang resides in a beautiful Malay-style istana, or palace. The State Museum on Jalan Sultan Ahmad has displays depicting the history of Pahang and its royal family, as well as sunken treasures from old Chinese junks.

3 KUALA TERENGGANU ★

The capital of the state of Terengganu, Kuala Terengganu has a few more exciting activities to offer a visitor than its southern neighbor, Kuantan, but suffers from the same lack of tourism investment and enthusiasm. Malaysia's east coast is best kno wn as the country's cultural heartland. Compared to other parts of the country, the population here is overwhelmingly Malay, with conservative religious values influencing every aspect of local life. Visitors keen on exploring the culture with respect to these values will be welcomed with open arms. Those who are looking for a party will be disappointed.

Most come to Terengganu to visit the islands off its coast. R edang and P erhentian islands have excellent opportunities for div ers and snor kelers to see an abundance of marine creatures. The mainland's pretty seaside also supports a couple of v ery atmospheric and serene resorts.

Every December, Terengganu's Pulau Duyong hosts the M onsoon Cup, the annual Malaysian leg of the Swedish Match Tour (www.monsooncup.com.my).

Kuala Terengganu is small and easy to navigate, clustered around a port at the mouth of the Terengganu River. Many livelihoods revolve around the sea, so most of the activity, even today, focuses on the areas closest to the jetties. The region is also home to many of Malaysia's crafts cottage industries, which makes shopping really fun. One note: In Terengganu and its northern neighbor, Kelantan, the weekend is from Friday into Saturday, with official businesses open from Sunday through Thursday. In some instances, you'll find business closings for half-days on Thursdays.

WHERE TO DINE

Outside of the resorts, you'll be at a loss to find Malay specialties in a pleasant restaurant setting, because most locals either cook at home or eat at hawker stalls. If you ask for the best dishes, people will point y ou in all sor ts of directions, to roadside places with no signboards or hawkers selling treats from the back of their car even. To sample as many varieties of local M alay cuisine, your best bet is to visit the Central M arket food stalls, where you'll find a variety of freshly cooked dishes for cheap. Likewise, Chinese food can be found in food stalls in Chinatown and coffee shops along Jalan Kampong Cina (pronounced Chee-na).

If you're in town for mealtime and want a more comfortable dining experience, Ocean Restoran is the best pick. Near the waterfront in what looks like a warehouse (Lot 2679) Jalan Sultan Janah Apitin; © 09/623-9154), Ocean prepares tender prawns, light butterfish, and juicy crab in local and Chinese r ecipes that are very good. Don't count on much from the alfresco decor, which is simple plastic tables and chairs.

ATTRACTIONS

Central Market ★ Open daily from very early until about 7pm, the central mar ket is a huge maze of shops selling every craft made in the region. There's basket weaving for everything from place mats to beach mats. Batik comes in sarong (with some very unique patterns), ready-made clothing, and household linens. Songket, beautiful fabric wo ven with gold and silver threads, is sold by the piece or sarong. Brassware pots, candlesticks, and curios are piled high and glistening. Every handicraft item you can think of is here, waiting for you to bargain for and bring home. And when you're done, venture to the back of the mar ket and check out the produce, dried goods, and seafood in the wet market.

Jalan Sultan Zainal Abidin. Free admission. Daily early morning to 7pm.

Chinatown Although Terengganu has only a small Chinese population, its Chinatown is still quite inter esting. This street of shophouses close to the water is still alive, only today many of the shops are art galleries and boutiques, showcasing only the finest regional ar ts. Also along J alan B andar you can find trav el agents for trips to nearby islands.

Istana Maziah Probably one of the least ornate istanas in Malaysia, this lovely yellow and white r oyal palace, built in 1897, is today mainly only used for state and r oyal ceremonies. It is not open to the public, but y ou can catch glimpses through the gate. Tucked away down the narrow winding street is its neighbor, the Masjid (mosque) Abidin.

Jalan Masji.

State Museum ★★ The buildings that house the museum's collection were purposebuilt, designed by a member of the Terengganu royal family, a renowned architect who also built the nearby Aryani resort. It reflects the stunning Terengganu architectural style. Atop stilts and with high sloping r oofs, the three main buildings are connected. Inside are fine collections that illustrate the history and cultural traditions of the state.

TERENGGANU'S HANDICRAFTS

Chendering, an industrial town about 40 minutes' drive south of Kuala Terengganu, is where you'll find major handicraft pr oduction—factories and sho wrooms of batik and other lovely items. All these places ar e located along one stretch of highway, but all are too far apart to walk. Plan to hire a taxi by the hour to shuttle you between them; they're about a 5-minute hop between each if you're driving. Also, while you're in the area, stop by the Masjid Tengku Tengah Zahara, which is only 5km (3 miles) outside of the town. This ornate mosque is more commonly referred to as the "Floating Mosque," as it is built in a lake and appears to be floating on the top.

Noor Arfa Noor Arfa is Malaysia's largest producer of hand-painted batik. This former cottage-industry business now employs 200 workers to create ready-to-wear fashions that are esteemed as designer labels throughout the country. There's also a shop in town at Aked Mara, A3 Jalan Sultan Zainal Abidin (© 09/623-5173).

Lot 1048 K Kawasan Perindustrian Chendering. (2) 09/617-5700. Free admission. Sat-Thurs 8am-5pm.

TERENGGANU MARINE PARK

The first marine par k in Malaysia, the Terengganu Marine Park is situated around the nine islands of the Redang archipelago, 45km (28 miles) northeast of Kuala Terengganu and 27km (17 miles) out to sea. S porting the best coral r eefs and div e conditions off peninsular Malaysia, the park attracts divers with its many excellent sites. The largest of the islands is Pulau Redang (Redang Island), where most people stay in resorts on overnight diving excursions. The recent completion of an airport on Redang makes it fabulously accessible. Berjaya Air (in KL @ 03/7846-8228; www.berjaya-air.com) flies four times a week from KL. Otherwise, you'll have to make your way from Kuala Terengganu, driving an hour north to the jetty town of Merang, followed by a speedboat trip to any one of the islands for scuba, snor keling, and sunning on powdery beaches.

The best place to stay on Redang is the Berjaya Redang Beach Resort *. It's the best, mainly because they can arrange your entire trip and activities for you—air transfers, accommodations, meals, and activities including scuba. And while B erjaya commands the best cove on the island, with po wdery white-sand beaches, it also happens to be the most comfortable place here, with 152 M alay-style chalets all with en-suite bathroom, air-conditioning, phones, TVs with satellite pr ograms and in-house mo vies, and minibars. Of their three restaurants, the beach seafood grill is the fave orite. In addition to scuba and snorkeling trips to the coral reefs, they'll plan other watersports activities plus treks around the island. Their pool is a gorgeous lagoon-style affair by the beach. There is a good spa in the resort, too. Contact Berjaya Redang Beach Resort at © 09/630-8808, fax 09/630-8855, or visit online at www.berjayaresorts.com. Rates are RM463 to RM930 ($134-$270/£83-£167) for a double.

PERHENTIAN ISLANDS

The Perhentian Islands (two islands; one big, one small) are part of the same archipelago within the Terengganu Marine Park. Located to the north of Redang, they are not as easy to access as Redang, because there's no easy airport access. It's about an hour's ride to the jetty from Kuala Terengganu, then a speedboat to the island.

There are many bungalow operators on these islands—most of these places are simple huts with poor ex cuses for beds and scar cely anything else for conv enience. For some reason, these small bungalow operators have not learned how to handle waste and r ubbish, and will eventually spoil the environment that draws people here in the first place.

Perhentian I sland Resort is your best option on P erhantian. They have a private beach and are managed properly. Their 106 rooms, housed in cabanas, offer comfortable beds and air-conditioning. Their one r estaurant serves buffet meals thr ee times daily. Activities are organized through their PADI dive center, plus there's snorkeling, tennis, trekking, and nonmotorized sea sports. They will arrange your speedboat transfers to and from the jetty.

Note: The resort is closed during the rainy season fr om December through January. Contact Perhentian Island Resort at © 09/697-4095, fax 09/697-8679, or visit online at www.perhentianislandresort.net. Rates ar e RM425 to RM572 ($123-$165/£77-£103) double chalet.

4 KOTA BHARU

In the northeast corner of peninsular Malaysia, bordering Thailand, is the state of Kelantan. Few tourists head this far nor th up the east coast, but it 's a fascinating journey for those interested in seeing Malaysia as it might have been without so many foreign influences. The state is populated mostly by Malays and other B umiputeras, with only tiny numbers of Chinese and I ndian residents and almost no traces of B ritish colonialism. Not surprisingly, Kelantan is the heart of traditional Islam in modern Malaysia. Although the government in KL constructs social policies based upon a more open and tolerant Islam, religious and government leaders in Kelantan follow a more fundamentalist line. That said, visitors who respect local conservatism are most welcome.

It is important to note that Kelantan borders Thailand's southern provinces, where, since 2004, civil unrest, including bombings in public places, has led to hundreds of deaths of Thai citizens and several international tourists. I advise travelers to use caution in this area and refrain from speaking openly about politics and religion.

Kota Bharu, the state capital, is the hear t of the r egion. The area is rich in M alay cultural heritage, as evidenced in the continuing inter est in arts like silat (Malay martial arts), wayang kulit (puppetr y), gasing (top spinning), and wau (kite flying). F or the record, you won't find too much traditional music or dance, as women ar e forbidden from entertaining in public. Also beware that the state has strict laws controlling the sale of alcoholic beverages, which cannot be purchased in many stores, hotels, or most restaurants. Chinese r estaurants, however, are permitted to sell beer to their patr ons but will probably not allow you to take any away.

If you take a side trip from Terengganu, plan to stay overnight. An outstation taxi from Kuala Terengganu can bring you on the 3-hour drive for around RM110 ($32/£20). Stay at the Renaissance, managed by Marriott; it's practically the only hint of the 21st century in all of Kelantan. Rooms are exactly what you would expect from an international business-class hotel chain, and cost RM477 ($138/£86) for double occupancy . Contact the Renaissance at K ota S ri Mutiara, J alan Sultan Yahya Petra (② 09/746-2233; fax 09/746-1122; www.marriott.com). You'll find the Kelantan Tourist Information Centre at Jalan Sultan Ibrahim (② 09/748-5534).

Centered around the Padang Merdeka are five of the most significant sights in K ota Bharu, run by the Kelantan State Museum Corporation. They are all open S aturday to Thursday 8:30am to 4:45pm, and closed on F riday; entry charges for each are RM2 (60¢/35p) for adults and RM1 (30¢/20p) for children. At the Istana Jahar, Kelantan traditional costumes, antiques, and musical instruments are displayed in context of their usage in royal ceremonies. Istana Batu takes you through a photographic journey of Kelantan's royal family and offers a peek at their lifestyle through the past 200 years. The Balai Getam Guri handicraft museum sho wcases the finest in K elantanese textiles, basketry, embroidery, batik printing, and silversmithing. You'll also be able to buy crafts in the shops within the compound. The Islamic Museum (Muzium Islam) teaches everything you might want to know about Islam in this state, with a focus on klamic arts and Kelantan's role in spreading Islam in the region. Finally, there is the War Museum (Bank Kerapu), which tells the story of Kelantan during World War II in a 1912 bank building that survived the invasion.

The State Museum (Muzium Negeri) is located on Jalan Hospital (© 09/744-4666; adults RM2/60¢/35p, children RM1/30¢/20p; Sat–Thurs 8:30am–4:45pm). It's been a long time since this old building served as the colonial land office, but it now houses the 273 Kelantan Art Gallery, including ceramics, traditional musical instr uments, and cultural pastimes exhibits.

For great local handicrafts shopping, visitors to K elantan need go no far ther than Jalan PCB, the road that leads to P.C.B. beach from Kota Bharu's Chinatown area. Hire a taxi through your hotel's concierge—it's best to hire by the hour; it should cost only about RM15 ($4.35/£2.70) per hour. Your driver will stop at every roadside factory, showroom, shop, and crafts house (the place crawls with them!), and you'll satisfy every shopping itch that needs scratching. These are all small cottage industries run out of folks' homes, so while some places actually have shops, many are very informal "look sees." You can watch women weaving songket cloth (fine cotton cloth with inter woven patterns in bright colors and gold or silv er threads) on enormous wooden looms, see how kites are made by hand, and learn techniques for painting and dyeing batik cloth, along with many other crafts activities that go on in this area. Your driver can also take you to other shopping places in to wn for local crafts. The prices ar e very good—far cheaper than in KL.

East Malaysia: Borneo

Borneo for the past 2 c enturies has been the epitome of adv enture travel. While bustling ports like Penang, Melaka, and S ingapore attracted early trav with dollars in their eyes, Borneo attracted those with adventure in their hearts. Today the island still draws visitors who seek new and unusual experiences, and fe w leav e disappointed. Riv ers meander thr ough dense tropical rainforests, beaches str etch for miles, and caves snake out longer than any in the world. All sor ts of cr eatures you'd never imagine live in the rainfor est: deer the size of house cats, owls only 15cm (6 in.) tall, the odd proboscis monkey, and the endanger ed orangutan, whose only other natural home is S umatra. It's also home to the largest flo wer in the world, the Rafflesia, spanning up to a meter (3.3 ft.) wide. Small wonder this place has special interest for scientists and r esearchers

the world around

The people of Borneo can be cr edited for most of the alluring tales of early travels. The exotically adorned tribes of warring headhunters and pirates of yesteryear, some of whom still liv e lifestyles little changed (though both headhunting and piracy are now illegal), today shar e their mysterious cultures and colorful traditions openly with outsiders.

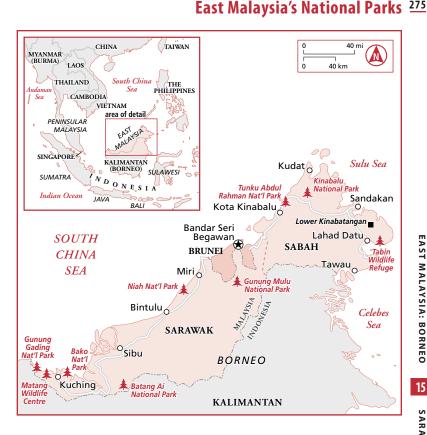

Add to all of this the fabulous tale of the White Raja of S arawak, S ir J ames B rooke, whose family ruled the state for just over 100 years, and you have a land filled with allur e, mystery, and romance unlike any other.

Malaysia, Brunei Darussalam, and Indonesia hav e divided the island of Borneo. Indonesia claims Kalimantan to the south and east, and the M alaysian states of Sarawak and Sabah lie to the north and northwest. The small sultanate of B runei is situated between the two M alaysian states on the western coast.

1 SARAWAK ★★★

Tropical rainforest once accounted for more than 70% of Sarawak's total landmass, providing homes for not only exotic species of plants and animals, but for the myriad ethnic groups who are indigenous to the ar ea. With more than 15 national par ks and wildlife preserves, Malaysia shows its commitment to conserving the delicate balance of life here, despite extensive logging that has clear ed many other natural ar eas. The national par ks located around the state's capital Kuching provide quick access to forest life, while longer, more detailed trips to nor thern Sarawak lead y ou deeper into the jungle, to explor e remote for ests and extensive ancient cave networks. A number of rivers connect the inland areas to the main towns, and a boat trip from Kuching to visit tribal communities and trek into the surrounding forests is the most memorable attraction going.

The indigenous peoples of S arawak make up mor e than half the state 's population. Early European explorers and settlers referred to all native inhabitants of Borneo with the catchall term Dyaks, which didn't account for the variations between the more than 25 different ethnicities. Of these groups, the I ban are the largest, with mor e than 30% of the population overall. A nomadic people by nature, the Ibans were once located all over the region, existing on agricultur e, hunting, and fishing. They were also notoriously fierce warriors who would behead enemies—a practice no w outlaw ed but that has retained its cultural significance. The Ibans fought not only with other tribes, but within their own separate tribal units as well.

The next-largest group, the Bidayuh, live peacefully in the hills. Their longhouse communities are the most accessible to travelers from Kuching. The Melanu are a coastal people who excel in fishing and boatbuilding. Finally, the Orang Ulu is an association of smaller tribes mostly in the nor thern parts of the state. Tribes like the Kayah, K enyah, Kelabit, and Penan, although culturally separate entities, formed an umbrella organization to loosely go vern all groups and provide representation. These groups are perhaps the least accessible to outsiders.

The indigenous people who still stay in the for est live in longhouse communities, some of which are open for visitors. Most travelers access these places with the help of local tour operators, who have trips that last from an overnight excursion to a week-long adventure. While some tours take y ou to well-trampled villages for the standar d "gawk at the funny costumes" trips, many operators can take you to more remote places to meet people in an environment of cultural learning with a sensitivity that is appreciated by all 276 involved. A few adventuresome souls travel solo into these areas, but I recommend that you stick with an operator. I don't care much for visitors who pop in unexpectedly, and I can't imagine why folks in one of these villages wouldn't feel the same way.

Every visitor to Sarawak starts out from Kuching, the capital city. With a population of some 400,000 people, it 's small but oddly cosmopolitan. In addition to local tribes that gave up forest living, the city has large populations of Malays, Chinese, Indians, and Europeans, most of whom migrated in the last 2 centuries. The city sits on the Kuching River, which will be one of the arteries for trips inland. Before you head off for the river, though, check out the many delights of this mysterious colonial kingdom. The riverfront area is Malaysia's best open public space.

Sarawak was introduced to the Western world by James Brooke, an English adventurer who in 1839 came to Southeast Asia to follow in the footsteps of his idol, S ir Stamford Raffles, who settled S ingapore. His wanderings brought him to Borneo, where he was introduced to the Sultan of Brunei. The sultan was deeply troubled by warring tribes to the south of his kingdom, who were in constant revolt, sometimes to the point of pirating ships to B runei's por t. B rooke pr ovided the solution, initiating a campaign to befriend some of the warring tribes, uniting them to conquer the others. Soon the tribes were calmed. The sultan, delighted by Brooke, ceded Kuching to him for a small annual fee. In 1841, James Brooke became raja and set about claiming the land that is no Sarawak.

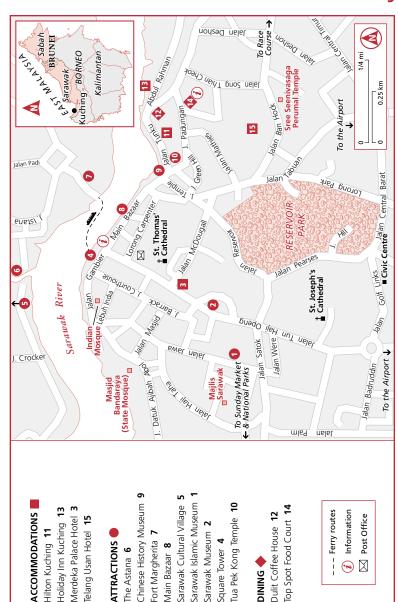

Raja Sir James Brooke became a colonial legend. Kno wn as "the White Raja of Sarawak," he and his family ruled the territory and its people with a firm but compassionate hand. Tribal leaders were appointed to leadership and administrative positions within his government and militia, and as a result, the Brookes were highly respected by the populations they led. H owever, Brooke was a bit of a r enegade, turning his nose up at London's attempts to include Sarawak under the crown. He took no money from the British and closed the doors to British commercial interests in Sarawak. Instead, he dealt in local trade and trade with S ingapore. Still, Kuching was understood to be a B ritish holding, though the city never flourished as did other British ports in Southeast Asia.

After his death in 1868, Raja J ames Brooke was succeeded by his nephew, Charles Brooke. In 1917, Charles's son, Vyner Brooke, became the last ruling Raja, a position he held until World War II, when the territor y was conquered by invading Japanese. After the war, Raja Vyner Brooke returned briefly, but soon after, the territory was declared a crown colony. E ventually, M alaya was granted independence by B ritain, pr ompting Prime Minister Tunku Abdul Rahman to form M alaysia in 1963, uniting peninsular Malaya with Singapore, Sarawak, and Sabah. Singapore departed from the union 2 years later, but Sarawak and Sabah happily remained.

KUCHING

The perfect introduction to Sarawak begins in its capital. K uching's museums, cultural exhibits, and historical attractions will help you form an overview of the history, people, and natural wonders of the state. I n Kuching, your introduction to S arawak will be comfortable and fun; culture by day and good food and fun by night. Kuching, meaning "cat" in Malay, also has a wonder ful sense of humor, featuring monuments and exhibits to its feline mascot on almost every corner.

The Rainforest World Music Festival (www.rainforestmusic-borneo.com) is held every second w eekend of J uly at the S arawak Cultural Village (see belo w), featuring music workshops, ethno-musical lectures, jamming sessions, and ev ening performances from the genre's most renowned figures. Highly recommended.

VISITOR INFORMATION The Sarawak Tourism Board's Visitor Information Centre has literature and staff that can answ er any question about activities in the state and city. This is actually the best place to star t planning any trips to S arawak's wonderful national parks, as the main office for the N ational Parks & Wildlife Centre operates a Visitor Information Center here as well. Both offices are incredibly informed and welcoming, so feel free to take advantage. You'll find them at the Sarawak Tourism Complex in the O ld Cour thouse opposite the K uching Waterfront (S arawak Tourism Boar d (2) 082/410-944, National Parks Centre (2) 082/248-088; www.sarawaktourism.com).

GETTING THERE Almost all trav elers to S arawak enter thr ough Kuching Interna tional Airport (© 082/454-242), just outside the city. Malaysia Airlines (© 1300/ 883-000; www.malaysiaairlines.com) has international flights fr om S ingapore, with domestic service from KL, Johor Bahru, and Kota Kinabalu. AirAsia (1) 03/8775-4000; www.airasia.com) flies between Kuching and KL.

The relatively new airport is a terrific facility with ATMs, moneychangers, restaurants, and tourist information. Taxis from the airport use coupons that y ou purchase outside the arrival hall. Priced according to zones, most trips to the central parts of town will be about RM20 ($5.80/£3.60).

GETTING AROUND Centered around a padang, or large cer emonial field, K uching resembles many other M alaysian cities. Buildings of beautiful colonial style rise on the edges of the field; many of these today house S arawak's museums. The main sights, as well as the Chinatown area and the riverfront, are easily accessible on foot. Taxis are also available and do not use meters; most rides around town are quoted between RM10 and RM15 ($2.90-$4.35/£1.80-£2.70). Taxis can be waved down from the side of the road, or if you're in the Chinatown area, the main taxi stand is on Gambier Road near the end of the India Street Pedestrian Mall.

FAST FACTS Sarawak's area code is 082. Major banks have branches on Tunku Abdul Rahman Road near Holiday Inn Kuching or in the do wntown area around Khoo Hun Yeang Road. There are a fe w Internet cafes around town; it's best to ask y our hotel's concierge for the near est one befor e you start wandering ar ound—or use your hotel's facilities.

Where To Stay

Hilton Kuching Located in the hear t of K uching along the riv erfront, the H ilton offers panoramic vie ws of the S arawak River and the historic F ort Margherita on the other side. The modern white facade is the dominant structure along the city side of the river. While the hotel is a little dated, it is well maintained and offers the best international service in the city. The premier views are those facing the river and then from the 10th floor upward.

Holiday Inn Kuching Holiday Inn offers Western-style accommodations at a moderate price, and you'll appreciate its location in an excellent part of town. It sits along the bank of the Kuching River, so to get to the main riv erside area, you need only stroll 10 minutes past some of the city's unique historical and cultural sights, shopping, and r es- 279 taurants. Catering to a diverse group of leisure travelers and businesspeople, the hotel has spacious, modern, and comfortable rooms; and although there are few bells and whistles, you won't want for convenience. The outdoor swimming pool and excellent fitness center facility will help you unwind, and the small shopping ar cade has one of the best collections of books on Sarawak that can be found in the city.

Merdeka Palace Hotel & Suites ★ Towering o ver the P adang Merdeka in the center of town is the Merdeka Palace, practically a landmark in its own right (as soon as you see the easily distinguishable to wer, you'll always know where you are). This is one of the most fashionable addresses in the city, for guests as well as banquets and functions. Its large marble lobby and staircase justify its reputation for elegance. Rooms range from apartment suites to hotel r ooms. Large r ooms come dr essed in E uropean-inspired furnishings and fabrics. Try to get a view of the padang, as the less expensive rooms face the parking lot. The rooftop outdoor swimming pool is small, but the fully equipped fitness center has sauna and steam rooms, plus massage. The English pub here is one of the most happening ones in town.

Telang Usan Hotel ★★ (Value) While in Kuching, I like to stay at the Telang Usan Hotel. It's not as flashy as the higher-priced places, but it's a fantastic bargain for a good room. Most guests here are leisure travelers, and in fact, many are repeat visitors. The small public areas sport murals in local I ban and Orang Ulu styles, revealing the origin of the hotel's owner and operator. While rooms are small and decor is not completely up-to-date, they're spotless. S ome rooms have only standing sho wers, so be sur e to specify when making your reservation if a bathtub is important to you. The coffee shop is a fine place to try local food, but they have Western selections as well. There is an excellent tour agency under the same ownership at the hotel.

Where To Dine

Everyone ends up at the Top Spot Food Court, a cheap hawker center v enue on Jalan Bukit Mata off Jalan Tunku Abdul Rahman just near the Holiday Inn. Various stalls cook Chinese, Malay, and Western food, all sorts of exotic dishes, and local and seafood dishes. Located on the r oof of a multistor y parking garage, don't expect anything but "local charm" for decor. But the food is good and cheap, and you'll be sure to find a bo wl of the famous Sarawak laksa.

A good pick for local specialties is the Dulit Coffee H ouse at Telang Usan H otel (© 082/415-588). Try their local S arawak version of laksa, vermicelli noodles and 280 seafood in a rich and spicy coconut gravy, or the Sarawak black pepper steak, which is a house specialty. Entrees are reasonably priced between RM10 and RM35 ($2.90-$10/ £1.80-£6.30).

Attractions

The Astana and F ort Margherita At the water front by the S quare Tower, you'll find water taxis to take you across the river to see these two reminders of the White Rajas of Sarawak. The Astana, built in 1870 by Raja Charles Brooke, the second raja of Sarawak, is now the official residence of the governor. It is not open to the public, but visitors may still walk in the gardens. The best view of the Astana, however is from the water.

Raja Charles Brooke's wife, Ranee Margaret, gave her name to Fort Margherita, which was erected in 1879 to protect the city of Kuching. Inside the great castlelike building is a police museum, the most inter esting sights of which ar e the depictions of criminal punishment.

Across the Sarawak River from town. Fort: (?) 082/244-232. Free admission. Daily 9am-5pm.

Chinese History Museum Built in 1911, this old Chinese Chamber of Commerce building is the perfect venue for a museum that traces the history of Chinese communities in Sarawak. Though small, it's centrally located and a conv enient stop while you're in the area.

Corner of Main Bazaar and Jalan Tunku Abdul Rahman. Free admission. Daily 9am-5pm.

Main Bazaar Main Bazaar, the major thoroughfare along the river, is home to Kuching's antiques and handicraft shops. If you're walking along the river, a little time in these shops is like a walk through a traditional handicrafts art gallery. You'll also find souvenir shops, tour operators, and a few restaurants.

Along the river. Free admission.

Sarawak Cultural Village * What appears to be a contrived theme park turns out to be a r eally fun place to learn about S arawak's indigenous people. B uilt around a lagoon, the park re-creates the various styles of longhouse dwellings of each of the major tribes. I nside each house ar e representative members of each tribe displaying cultural artifacts and performing music, teaching dart blowing, and showing off carving talents. Give yourself plenty of time to stick around and talk with the people, who are recruited from villages inland and love to tell stories about their homes and traditions. Performers dance and display costumes at 11:30am and 4:30pm daily. A shuttle bus leaves at regular intervals from the Holiday Inn Kuching on Jalan Tunku Abdul Rahman.

Kampung Budaya Sarawak, Pantai Damai, Santubong. (2) 082/846-411. Adults RM60 ($17/£11), children RM30 ($8.70/£5.40). Daily 9am-5pm.

A splendid array of M uslim artifacts at this quiet and Sarawak Islamic Museum serene museum depicts the history of Islam and its spread to Southeast Asia. Local customs and history are also highlighted. Although women ar e not required to cover their heads, respectable attire that covers the legs and arms is requested.

Jalan P. Ramlee. (?) 082/244-232. Free admission. Sat–Thurs 9am–4:30pm; Fri 9am–12:45pm and 3–5pm.

Sarawak Museum  $\bigstar$  Two branches, one old and one new, display exhibits of the natural history, indigenous peoples, and culture of Sarawak, plus the state's colonial and modern history. The two branches ar e connected by an overhead walkway above Jalan Tun Haji Openg. The wildlife exhibit is a bit musty but the arts and artifacts in the other sections are well tended. A tiny aquarium sits neglected behind the old branch, but the gardens here are lovely.

Jalan Tun Haji Openg. (?) 082/244-232. Free admission. Sat–Thurs 9am–4:30pm; Fri 9am–12:45pm and 3–4:30pm.

Square Tower The tower, built in 1879, ser ved as a prison camp, but today the waterfront real estate is better ser ved by an information center for travel agents. The Square Tower is also a prime starting place for a stroll along the riverside and is where you'll also find out about cultural per formances and exhibitions held at the water front, or call the number below for performance schedules.

Jalan Gambier near the riverfront. (?) 082/426-093. Free admission.

Tua Pek Kong Temple At a main crossroads near the river stands the oldest Chinese temple in Sarawak. Although officially it is dated at 1876, most locals ackno wledge the true date of its beginnings as 1843. I's still lively in form and spirit, with coloful dragons tumbling along the walls and incense filling the air.

Junction of Jalan Tunku Abdul Rahman and Jalan Padungan. Free admission.

Touring Local Culture ★★★

One of the highlights of a trip to Sarawak is a visit to a longhouse community. Trips can last from simple overnight stays to 2-week intensive discovery tours. It goes without saying that shorter trips venture only as far as those longhouse villages closest to K uching. The benefit is that these communities are at ease with foreigners and so are better able to demonstrate their culture. The drawback is that these villages are the ones most trampled by coachloads of tourists looking to gawk at " primitive tribes." Basically, the more time you have, the deeper you will venture into the interior and the more time you will have to spend with differ ent ethnic gr oups, allowing greater insight into these fascinating cultures.

A typical longhouse trip star ts with a v an ride from Kuching followed by a longtail boat ride upriv er, through gorgeous for ests. If you are stopping in only for the night, you'll be welcomed, fed, and enter tained—the food is generally edible and always prepared under sanitary conditions. Fruits are delicious. Your guide, through translations, will help you chat with villagers and ask questions about their lifestyle and customs. At night you will sleep in a longhouse provided especially for guests. It's basic but cool, with mosquito nets (very necessary) provided. The following day includes a very brief jungle trek, plus hunting and fishing demonstrations befor e your departure back from whence you came. If your trip is longer, you will probably avoid the closer villages and head straight for more remote communities, depending on how much time (and money) you have.

Your average overnight longhouse tour will set y ou back up to RM600 ($174/£108) per person. Good tour operators making longhouse tours are Asian Overland Services, 126 G reen H eights Commr cial Centre ( © 082/451-1309; www.asianoverland.com. my), and Telang Usan Travel & Tours, Ban Hock Road (© 082/236-945; fax 082/236-589). These agencies can also arrange trips into S arawak's national parks.

TOURING SARAWAK'S NATIONAL PARKS

The Sarawak National Parks & Wildlife Centre has opened access to all of Sarawak's national parks to DIY (do-it-yourself) travelers. From their booking center in Kuching, you can apply for parks permits and book reservations in state-run lodging within each 282 park. They can also advise how to travel to and from each park: Those closer to Kuching will only involve local road and river transportation, while more remote parks will require commercial flights to either Sibu or Miri, plus transfers to ground and river transportation and even chartered flights. If you have the time to plan your travel this way, you will be rewarded with the thrill of "getting there," experiencing local life a little closer to the ground.

Most people do not have the luxury of time, which is why I recommend booking trips that interest you through a tour operator who will arrange all transpor tation, parks permits, lodging, meals, and guides for you, freeing your time to experience the attractions themselves.

National Parks Not Far from Kuching

Both Borneo Adventure, 55 M ain Bazaar (1) 082/245-175; www.borneoadventure. com), and Asian Overland Services, 126 Green Heights Commercial Centre (© 082/ 451-1309; www.asianoverland.com.my), charge a fe w dollars mor e than many of the other local operators, but you'll get experienced guides and reliable services, and you do not need to join a huge touristy coach gr oup. Most of these trips ar e for small gr oups. Their half-day trips from Kuching take the mystery out of local transportation—they can even be combined for longer itineraries so y ou can maximize your time. They can also prepare customized itineraries and special theme tours based upon y our special interests—for example, crafts, flora, or tribal cultures.

Bako National Park  $\star\star\star$ , established in 1957, is S arawak's oldest national par k. An area of 2,728 hectares (6,738 acres), it combines mangrove forest, lowland jungle, and high plains covered in scrub. Throughout the park, you'll see the pitcher plant and other strange carnivorous plants, plus long-tailed macaques, monitor lizards, bearded pigs, and the unique proboscis monkey. Because the park is only 37km (23 miles) from Kuching, half-day trips here are extremely convenient. A day trip for two costs RM300 (\$87/£54) per person.

Gunung Gading National Park, about a 2-hour drive west of Kuching, sprawls 4,106 hectares (10,142 acres) over rugged mountains to beautiful beach spots along the coast. Day-trippers and overnighters come to get a glimpse of the Rafflesia, the largest flo wer in the world. The flowers are short lived and temperamental, but the national parks office will let you know if any are in bloom. A day tour for two people costs RM300 ($87/£54) per person.

Semenggoh O rang U tan S anctuary is a r ehabilitation center for orangutans and other endangered wildlife species who are either orphaned or recovering from illness and are being trained for eventual release into the forest. A half-day tour for two people costs RM140 ($41/£25) per person.

National Parks a Little Farther Out

Borneo Adventure, 55 M ain Bazaar ( © 082/245-175; www.borneoadventure.com), and Asian Overland Services, 126 G reen Heights Commercial Centre ( 0 082/451-1309; www.asianoverland.com.my), also book trips to national par ks in other par ts of the state. You'll have to fly to Miri or Sibu, as these two towns are the hop-off points for these excursions. Malaysia Airlines and AirAsia both ser vice these two to wns from KL and Kuching.

Gunung Mulu National Park provides an amazing adv enture, with its astounding underground network of caves. The park claims the world's largest cave passage (Deer Cave), the world 's largest natural chamber (S arawak Chamber), and S outheast Asia's 283 longest cave (Clearwater Cave). No fewer than 18 caves offer explorers trips of varying degrees of difficulty, from simple treks with minimal gear to technically difficult caves that r equire specialized equipment and skills. A boveground are 544 sq. km (212 sq. miles) of primary rainforest, peat swamps, and mountainous forests teeming with mammals, birds, and unusual insects. Located in the nor th of Sarawak, Mulu is very close to the Brunei border. Borneo A dventure has a 2-day/1-night package for RM600 ($174/ £108) per person (minimum two people). The trip includes accommodations, gr ound transportation, longboat rides, natur e guides to see D eer Cave, Sarawak Chamber, and Clearwater Cave, plus some rainforest trekking (wear a hat in the caves to protect yourself from bat droppings). They can book your flights from Kuching, but you'll have to pay

SABAH ***

Sabah presents a wonderland of natural scener y, lush primar y rainforest, vibrant coral reefs, and mysterious indigenous cultur es. It is, in my opinion, S outheast Asia's hidden treasure. A playground for adventure seekers, extreme sportsters, and bums in sear ch of the ultimate beach, Sabah rewards those who venture here with a holiday in an unspoiled paradise.

Covering 73,711 sq. km (28,747 sq. miles) of the northern part of Borneo, the world's third-largest island, Sabah stretches from the South China Sea in the west to the Sulu Sea in the east, both seas containing an abundance of uninhabited islands, postcar d-perfect beaches, and pristine coral r eefs bubbling with marine life. I n between, more than half of the state is covered in ancient primary rainforest that's protected in national parks and forest reserves. In these for ests, some rare species of mammals like the S umatran rhino and Asian pygmy elephant (herds of them) take effort to witness, but other animals, such as the orangutan, proboscis monkey, gibbon, lemur, civet, Malaysian sun bear, and a host of others can be seen on jungle treks if you search them out. Of the hundreds of bird species here, the hornbills and herons steal the show.

Sabah's tallest peak is one of the highest mountains betw een the Himalayas and Irian Jaya. At 4,095m (13,432 ft.), it's the tallest in Malaysia, and a challenge to trek or climb. The state's interior has endless opportunities for jungle trekking, river rafting, mountain biking and 4×4 exploration for every level of excitement, from soft adventure to extreme sports.

This state holds not only mysterious wildlife and geography, but people as well. Sabahans count among their many ethnic gr oups some 32 differ ent peoples whose cultures and traditions are vastly different from the Malay majority that makes up the rest of the country. In fact, ethnic Malays are a minority in Sabah.

About one-third of the population ar e Kadazandusun, a gr oup that inhabits mainly the west coast and parts of the interior of Sabah. They are one of the first groups travelers come into contact with, especially during the Pesta Kaamatan, or harvest festival, held during May, where the high priest or priestess pr esides over a cer emony performed to appease the rice spirit. Although it 's a Kadazandusun tradition, it has come to be celebrated by all cultures in the state. Although this group produces the majority of Sabah's agricultural products, most members live in towns and hold everyday jobs. The exception 284 is the Runggus, the last group of Kadazandusun to live in traditional longhouse communities, where they produce exquisite basket weaving, fabric weaving, and beadwork in traditional designs.

The Bajau are a group of seafarers who migrated from the Philippines only a couple hundred years ago. The Bajau on the eastern coast of S abah carry on their traditional connection to the water, living as sea gypsies and coming to shor e only for burials. O n the west coast, however, many Bajau have settled on dry land as farmers and cattle raisers. Known locally as the "cowboys of the east," Bajau men are very skilled equestrians. During festivals, their brilliant costumes and decorated ponies almost always take center stage.

Kota Belud, 76km (47 miles) nor th of Kota Kinabalu, is a town inhabited mostly by Bajau people. In the background is Mount Kinabalu, which dominates the landscape in most of Western Sabah. The town comes alive every Sunday morning with the w eekly tamu, or market.

The third-most-prominent indigenous group, the Murut, shares the southwest corner of Sabah with the Bajau, expanding inland along the border with Sarawak and Kalimantan (Indonesia). Skilled hunters, they use spears, blo wpipes, poisoned darts, and trained dogs. In past days, these skills were used for headhunting, which thankfully is not practiced today (although many skulls can still be seen during visits to longhouse settlements). One nonlethal Murut tradition involves a trampoline competition. The lansaran (the trampoline itself), situated in the community longhouse, is made of split bamboo. During Murut ceremonies, contestants drink rice wine and jump on the trampoline to see who can reach the farthest. A prize is hung above for the winner to grab.

Sabah also has a small community of Chinese families that settled during colonial days, and newer Filipino immigrants, many of whom are illegal plantation workers.

KOTA KINABALU

The best place to begin exploring Sabah's marine wonders, wildlife and forests, adventure opportunities, and indigenous peoples is from its capital, Kota Kinabalu. Located on the west coast, it's where you'll find the headquarters for all of Sabah's adventure-tour operators and package-excursion planners.

Essentials

VISITOR INFORMATION The Sabah Tourism Board (51 Jalan Gaya; © 088/212-121; www.sabahtourism.com) provides the most comprehensive information about the state. It's open daily 9am to 4pm. Although the Tourism Malaysia has a small office on Jalan Gaya a block down from the Sabah Tourism office, almost all of their information promotes travel in other parts of the country. Still, if you're interested, stop by Ground Floor Uni. Asia Building, no. 1 Jalan Sagunting (© 088/248-698).

GETTING THERE Because of Sabah's remote location, just about everybody will arrive by air through the Kota Kinabalu International Airport in the capital city ( © 088/ 238-555), about a 20-minute driv e south of the central par t of the city. A surprising number of direct international flights connect Sabah to the region. Malaysia Airlines flies from Hong Kong, Manila, Osaka, Seoul, Singapore, and Tokyo, among others (© 1300/ 883-000; www.malaysiaairlines.com), and AirAsia flies from B angkok (© 03/8775-4000; www.airasia.com).

Both airlines also have direct domestic flights to Kota Kinabalu from KL, Johor Bahru, Kuching, Sibu, and Miri, with in-state service to Sandakan and other towns.

The most efficient way to get into to wn from the airport is by taxi using a coupon system. You'll pay about RM15 (4.35/£2.70) for a trip to town. Ignore the drivers that try to lure you away from the coupon counter; they will always o vercharge you.

GETTING AROUND In the downtown area, you can get around quite easily on foot between hotels, restaurants, tour operators, markets, and the tourism office. F or longer trips, a taxi will be necessar y; in town, trips cost about RM12 ($3.50/£2.15). Taxis are flagged down on the street or by your hotel's bellhop.

FAST FACTS The area code for Sabah is 088. While on the same time as KL, the sun rises and sets earlier than the peninsula. You'll find banks with A TMs conveniently located in the do wntown area around Jalan Limabelas, Jalan Gaya, and Jalan Pantai. While there are no large Internet cafes, you'll find access in small shopfronts around the main parts of town.

Where to Stay

Hyatt Regency Kinabalu ★ One of the best international business-class hotels in town, in some ways the Hyatt seems a little out of place in cozy Kota Kinabalu. Still, it's located close to the waterfront, near major shopping and travel operators, and has a good selection of restaurants. Even if you're staying elsewhere in town, you may appreciate one of their dining options. As modern as y ou would expect the H yatt chain to be, r ooms here are large and have up-to-date furnishing styles that are not so Western that they take all the charm away from the room. Local tour and car-rental booking in the lobby makes the place convenient for leisure travelers. One of the high points is Shenanigan's, a lively bar, with live entertainment. It gets packed, mostly with locals and expatriates.

The Jesselton Hotel ★★ Listen to me rav e about the J esselton. It's such a nice surprise to find this quaint boutique hotel in the center of Kota Kinabalu, just about the last real reminder in this city of a colonial pr esence. Even more appealing is the level of personalized service you receive and the comfort of the rooms, which, though completely modern, retain their charm with lovely Audubon-style inks and attractive wallpapers and fabrics—sort of a cross between a cozy guesthouse and a top-class hotel. D ue to lack of space in the building, ther e's no pool, fitness center, or business center, but the staff at the front desk can help you with tour information and transportation. The coffeehouse serves local and Western food, which is quite good. B ella Italia Pizzeria Ristorante Café serves Italian and local favorites.

Where to Dine

One of the best local specialties, hinava, is a mouthwatering delicacy of raw fish marinated in lime juice, ginger, shallots, herbs, and chilies—I highly recommend trying it.

Kota Kinabalu is kno wn for its fresh seafood, and there are a lot of places to choose from, but the locals and expatriates all agr ee that Port View Seafood Restaurant, Jalan Haji Saman across from the old Customs Wharf, near the downtown area (1) 088/252-813), is best. Dishes are prepared primarily in Chinese and Malay styles, are moderately priced (sold by weight), and are always succulent.

One of Malaysia's most exciting dining outlets is @tmosphere, on the 18th floor of Menara Tun Mustapha (?) 088/425-100; www.atmosphererestaurant.com), south of the city center. Arrive in style by helicopter to this revolving restaurant and dine on creative Pacific Rim cuisine. It becomes a lively night spot after dinner.

Attractions

Sabah attracts scuba enthusiasts from around the world who come to dive at Sipadan, an island resort off the east coast of the state. Sipadan, ranked as one of the top-10 dive sites in the world, is actually a tall limestone "tower" rising from the bed of the Celebes S ea, supporting vast numbers of marine species, some of which may still be unidentified. Since 2004, the Malaysian government revoked the licenses of the five dive operators that managed resorts on the tiny island, in an effor t to prevent environmental degradation. The dive operators will move their base camps to surrounding islands, offering day trips to the area or running live-aboard trips.

Borneo Divers (9th floor, Menara Jubili, 53 Jalan Gaya; (2) 088/222-226; www.borneo divers.info) was the first full-service dive operator in Borneo and the pioneering operator to Sipadan. They house divers at their r esort on Mabul, along a gorgeous sandy beach with easy access to div e sites ar ound the M abul island and S ipadan. F or RM664 ($193/£120) per night per person, y ou'll get accommodations, meals, airpor t transfers, and two dives a day. You'll have to pay extra for a round-trip flight into Tawau, which costs about RM390 ($113/£70). Booking can be made thr ough Borneo Divers. Equipment rentals come to RM89 ($26/£16) per day Sipadan has good diving year-round, but March through October has the best weather.

A newer spot, Layang Layang, located off the coast of northwest Borneo in the South China Sea, is also making a splash as an under water bounty of marine life. Layang Layang Island Resort (head office in KL at Blk. A, ground floor, A-0-3, Megan Ave. II, 12 Jalan Yap Kwan Seng; © 03/2162-2877; www.layanglayang.com) pioneered this area 288 for divers. Their standard package of 6 days/5 nights runs at RM1,250 ($363/£225) per person, which includes accommodations, meals, and three edives a day. Equipment is extra, as is the char tered helicopter flight to the island, which is expensive e at RM969 ($281/£174) round-trip (booked through the dive operator, flying on Tues, Thurs, Fri, and Sun). Layang Layang closes during the monsoon season (early S ept to Feb).

If you want to stay close to Kota Kinabalu, Borneo Divers (see above) makes day trips to Tunku Abdul Rahman Marine Park. This group of five islands about 8km (13 miles) off the coast of Kota Kinabalu has been protected since the mid-1970s. Throughout the park, waters ar e clear and visibility is good. Although not as lauded as S ipadan and Layang Layang, if y ou're looking for some quick diving ex citement but you have time and money constraints, it's highly recommended. A day trip that includes two boat dives and a shore dive costs RM265 ($77/£48), not including equipment rentals. Borneo Divers has a base camp on the smallest island, from which they also conduct complete PADI

Sabah has many other div e sites, including sites such as P ulau Tiga, of Survivor TV fame. A couple of sites also offer wr eck diving, so if you're interested, inquire when you make your booking.

For other types of watersports, your best bet is to either book these activities thr ough your resort or plan a DIY trip to Tunku Abdul Rahman Park. Catch a ferry at the newly upgraded Kpta Kinabalu City Terminal, near the S abah Ports Authority/Marine Police Jetty, to take you to the park. It costs RM30 ($8.70/£5.40) and is only 8km (13 miles) from Kota Kinabalu, so you can spend a day trip at one or more of the park's five islands sunning on the beach. Snorkel rentals go for around RM10 ($2.90/£1.80), and parasailing charges r un RM100 ($29/£18). The latest thrill is seawalking—donning an enormous helmet connected to the sur face with a tube, which allo underwater without tanks. This costs RM150 ($44/£27) per person ( © 088/249-115; www.borneoseawalking.com). Tip for snorkelers: Bring cotton socks to wear under your rental fins, to pr event blisters. There are cafes and toilets near the jetties, plus good accommodations on two of the islands.

Sabah's rugged terrain makes for terrific hiking, camping, biking, and rafting for any level, from soft adventure or extreme sports. TYK Adventure (Borneo Travel; Lot 48-2F, 2nd floor, B everly H ill P laza; ( ) 088/727-825; www.tykadventuretours.com) was founded by a local Chinese awar d-winning tour guide Tham Yau Kong, who also happens to hold records for the longest cultural walk (1998) and for leading the first gr oup to circum-cycle Mt. Kinabalu (1999). M ountain biking trips ar ound Papar or Penampang can be arranged for RM310 ($90/£56) per person for the day trip; the rate includes hotel transfer, mountain bike, and helmet.

Many come to Sabah to climb Mt. Kinabalu. It's an exhilarating trip if you are prepared and if you hit it just right, in terms of weather and timing. It can be done only on an overnight trip, which includes a 4- or 5-hour hike fr om the park headquarters uphill to a ranger station, where you stay the night. Groups awake at 3am to begin the 3-hour hike to the summit. This is not light trekking, as some parts are steep, altitude sickness can cause headaches and nausea, and remember—you're tooling along in the pitch darkness, the whole point being to arriv e at the summit in time for the spectacular sunrise. Come prepared with cold weather snugglies, or at the very least a wool sweater or fleece, long pants, windbreaker, rain poncho, and hiking boots. B ring a good, strong flashlight and pack plenty of trail mix and spor ts drinks for r ejuvenation. And finally, there's no guarantee that the weather will cooperate with your itinerary. You might hit rain or find 289 the summit covered in clouds. There's pretty much nothing any tour operator can do to guarantee you'll get a clear vie w. But I've heard when you hit it right, it 's really quite a great adventure with a rewarding view. TYK Adventure can also book this tour for you; a 2-day/1-night trip costs RM900 ($261/£162). Make sure you book early, because they need to make sur e there's space available at park accommodations. The price includes transfer, lodging, and your guide to the summit.

TYK also plans regular trips out to Sandakan, on the eastern coast of Sabah, for trips to see the Sepilok Orang Utan Rehabilitation Center, the largest orangutan sanctuary in the world, with facilities to house and train hundr eds of orphaned orangutans for eventual release back into the wilds, with a boat trip to see the Marine Turtle Conservation Park and Hatchery.

Monsopiad Cultural Village, a Kadazandusun heritage center with its creepy House of Skulls, is located in Penampang, not far from Kota Kinabalu. During the 3-hour visit to the village, you'll tour the place and be treated to a cultural performance. It's about the height of "touristy" Sabah but can be a fun half-day trip if y ou want to peep at a bit of local cultur e. Call them at © 088/774-337 to make a booking; RM100 ($29/£18) includes transportation to and from your hotel, the tour and show, plus a welcome drink. The tour leaves daily at 9:30am and again at 2:30pm.

In 2000, the North Borneo Railway (Tanjung Aru Railway; (2) 088/263-933) revived the tradition of steam train travel with the launch of a 1954 fully renovated British Vulcan steam locomotive pulling six r estored carriages. Traversing a 58km (36-mile) r oute from Tanjung Aru, near Kota Kinabalu, to the town of Papar, the train passes water and mangrove views, past fishermen and local sea crafts, through a mountain tunnel, and out the other side into a vast scenery of paddy fields. Carriages are open-air but comfortable, with soft seats and wood and brass accents. A swanky bar car and observation deck round out facilities that also include toilets. The train departs every Wednesday and Saturday at 10am, returning at 2pm; tickets are RM195 ($57/£35). At the time of writing, the railway was under maintenance, but do check to see if they 're up and running during your visit; it's well worth it.

For another unique vie w of the country side, Touchdown H olidays M alaysia (1) 088/249-276; www.touchdowncollection.com) offers thrilling helicopter tours, flying over Kota Kinabalu, tropical wilds, and the je wel-colored sea. They also operate luxury boats around the islands off Kota Kinabalu.

weekdays and fr om 8:30am to 1pm on Saturday. Some keep extended hours until 8pm.

DRINKING L AWS The legal age for purchase and consumption of alcoholic beverages is 18; pr oof of age is rar ely requested.

DRUGSTORES Guardian P harmacy fills prescriptions with name-brand dr ugs (from a licensed physician) and carries a large selection of toiletries. Convenient locations include #B1-05 Centre epoint Shopping Centre (© 65/6737-4835), #02-237 Marina Sq. (© 65/6337-4518), and #B1-01 Raffles City Shopping Centre (© 65/6339-2137).

ELECTRICITY Standard electrical current is 220 v olts A C (50 cy cles). Local electrical outlets ar e made for plugs with three squar e pr ongs. Consult y our concierge to see if y our hotel has converters and plug adapters in-house for you to use. If you are using sensitive equipment, do not trust cheap v oltage transformers. Nowadays, a lot of electrical equipment—including portable radios and laptop computers—comes with built-in converters, so you can follo w the manufacturer's directions for changing them over.

EMBASSIES & CONSULATES Contacts for major embassies in S ingapore are as follo ws: U.S. E mbassy, 27 N apier Rd. (© 65/6476-9100); Canadian High Commission, O ne G eorge S t. #11-01 (© 65/6854-5900); B ritish H igh Commis sion, HOLIDAYS See "H olidays" in chapter 3, p. 34.

HOSPITALS If you require hospitalization, the centrally located Mount Elizabeth Hospital is near O rchard Road at 3 Mount Elizabeth (© 65/6737-2666); for accidents and emergencies, call (© 65/6731-2218). You can also tr y Singapore General Hospital, Outram Road (© 65/6222-3322); for accidents and emergencies, call (© 65/6321-4311).

INSURANCE Medical Insurance F or travel o verseas, most U.S. health plans (including M edicare and M edicaid) do not provide coverage, and the ones that do often require y ou to pay for ser vices up front and r eimburse y ou only after y ou return home.

As a safety net, you may want to buy travel medical insurance, par ticularly if you're traveling to a remote or high-risk area where emergency evacuation might be necessary. If you require additional medical insurance, try MEDEX Assistance (© 410/453-6300; www.medexassist.com) or Travel Assistance International (© 800/821-2828; www.travelassistance.com; for general information on ser vices, call the company's Worldwide Assistance Services, Inc., at © 800/777-8710).

Canadians should check with their provincial health plan offices or calHealth Canada (© 866/225-0709; www.hc-sc. gc.ca) to find out the extent of their coverage and what documentation and r eceipts they must take home in case they ar e treated overseas.

Travelers fr om the U.K. should carr y their E uropean H ealth I nsurance Car d (EHIC), which replaced the E111 form as proof of entitlement to fr ee/reduced cost medical tr eatment abr oad ( © 0845 606 2030; www .ehic.org.uk). N ote, ho wever, that the EHIC covers only "necessary medical treatment," and for repatriation costs, lost money, baggage, or cancellation, travel insurance fr om a r eputable company should always be sought (www .travelinsuranceweb. com).

Travel I nsurance The cost of trav el insurance varies widely, depending on the destination, the cost and length of y our trip, your age and health, and the type of trip y ou're taking, but expect to pay between 5% and 8% of the vacation itself. You can get estimates from various providers thr ough InsureMyTrip.com. E nter your trip cost and dates, y our age, and other information, for prices from more than a dozen companies.

U.K. citiz ens and their families who make more than one trip abr oad per year may find an annual travel insurance policy works out cheaper. Check www.money supermarket.com, which compares prices across a wide range of providers for single-and multitrip policies.

Most big trav el agents offer their o wn insurance and will probably try to sell you their package when you book a holiday. Think before you sign. Britain's Consumers' A ssociation r ecommends that y ou insist on seeing the policy and reading the fine print befor e buying trav el insurance. The A ssociation of B ritish I nsurers (© 020/7600-3333; www.abi.org.uk) gives advice by phone and publishes Holiday Insurance, a free guide to policy provisions and prices. You might also shop around for better deals: Try Columbus D irect (© 0870/033-9988; www.columbusdirect. net).

Trip Cancellation I nsurance T rip-cancellation insurance will help r etrieve your money if you have to back out of a trip or depart early, or if your travel supplier goes bankrupt. Trip cancellation traditionally covers such ev ents as sickness, natural 292 disasters, and State Department advisories. The latest news in trip-cancellation insurance is the av ailability of expanded hurricane co verage and the "any-reason" cancellation co verage-which costs mor e but covers cancellations made for any reason. You won't get back 100% of y our prepaid trip cost, but you'll be refunded a substantial por tion. TravelSafe ( 888/ 885-7233; www .travelsafe.com) offers both types of coverage. Expedia also offers any-reason cancellation co verage for its air-hotel packages. F or details, contact one of the following recommended insurers: Access America (www.accessamerica. com), Travel Guard International (www. travelguard.com), Travel Insured International (www.travelinsured.com), or Travelex I nsurance S ervices (www .travelexinsurance.com).

> INTERNET A CCESS Internet cafes ar e common throughout the city, with usage costs about S$5 (US$3.35/£2.25) per hour (if y ou use the I nternet in y our hotel's business center, you'll pay a much higher price). Almost every shopping mall has one, and ther e are cyber cafes in both terminals at Changi Airport. For reliability and quality, Ir ecommend Chills C afé, with two locations: 39 Stamford Rd., #01-07 S tamford H ouse, open daily 9am till midnight; and 3 Temasek Blvd., #02-165/ 167/197/199, Suntec City Mall Tower 5; open daily 10am till 10pm. For both locations, call (2) 65/6883-1016.

> LANGUAGE Singapore's four official languages ar e Malay, Chinese (Mandarin dialect), Tamil, and English. Malay is the national language, while E nglish is the language for go vernment operations, law, and major financial transactions. M Singaporeans ar e at least bilingual, with many speaking one or mor e dialects of Chinese, plus English and some Malay.

> If y ou find y ourself in LEGAL AID trouble in S ingapore, the first thing y ou should do is consult y our home embassy or high commission. However, for serious offences, do not expect much help. Singapore sho ws little leniency to for eigners who br eak local laws, and officials fr om your home country are oftentimes powerless to assist.

LOST & FOUND Be sur e to tell all of your cr edit car d companies the minute you discover your wallet has been lost or stolen, and file a r eport at the near est police post. Your credit card company or insurer may require a police r eport number or record of the loss. Most credit card companies hav e an emergency toll-fr ee number to call if your card is lost or stolen; they may be able to wir e y ou a cash advance immediately or deliv er an emergency credit card in a day or two.

To r eport lost or stolen cr edit car ds within Singapore, use the followwing tollfree hot lines: American Express ( 800/ 299-1997), MasterCard (@ 800/110-0113), Visa ( 800/110-0344).

If you need emergency cash o ver the weekend, y ou can hav e money wir ed to you via Western Union at most S ingPost branches.

MAIL Most hotels have mail services at the front counter. Singapore Post has centrally located offices that include #04-15 Ngee Ann City/T akashimaya S hopping Centre ( (2) 65/6738-6899); Chinato wn Point, 133 N ew B ridge Rd. #02-41/ 42/43/44 ( © 65/6538-7899); Change Alley, 16 Colly er Q uay #02-02 H itachi Tower ( © 65/6538-6899); and S untec City M all #03-01/03, 3 Temasek B lvd. POLICE For emergencies, call (?) 999. If you need to call the police headquar ters, dial (?) 1800/255-0000.

SMOKING It's against the law to smoke in public buses, elevators, theaters, cinemas, shopping centers, go vernment offices, and taxi queues. I n addition, all r estaurants, 294 hawker centers, bars, and nightclubs ar e smoke-free, with the ex ception of designated smoking areas. Establishments with outdoor seating can allocate 20% of this space for a smoking ar ea. Nightclubs can have smoking rooms inside their premises, but this room cannot ex ceed 10% of the club's total floor space.

> TAXES Many hotels and restaurants will advertise rates followed by "++." The first + is the goods and ser vices tax (GST), which is levied at 7% of the purchase. The second + is a 10% gratuity charge. S chapter 8 for information on the GST Tourist R efund Scheme, which lets you recover the GST for purchases over S$100 (US$67/£45) in value.

> TELEPHONES Public telephones can be found in booths on the str eet or back near the toilets in shopping malls, public buildings, or hotel lobbies. Local calls cost S10¢ (US7¢/5p) for 3 minutes at coinand car d-operated phones. I nternational calls can be made only from public phones designated specifically for this purpose. International public phones will accept either a stored-value phone card or a credit card. Phone cards for local and international calls can be pur chased at Singapore Post branches, 7-E leven conv enience stores, or moneychangers-make sure you specify local or international phone car d when you make your purchase.

For mor e information, see "S Connected" in "P lanning Your Trip to Singapore," p. 50.

Singapore S tandard Time is 8 hours ahead of G reenwich M ean Time (GMT). I nternational time differ ences will change during daylight saving or summer time. Basic time differences are: New York –13, Los Angeles –16, Montreal –13, Vancouver -16, London -8, B risbane +3, Darwin +1, M elbourne +2, S ydney +3, and Auckland +4. For the current time in Singapore, call (2) 1711.

TIPPING While tipping is not exactly discouraged at hotels, at bars, and in taxis, it is not the norm here. A gratuity is automatically added into guest checks, but servers rarely see any of it. While tipping is not expected, I typically leav e the small bills behind in r estaurants and bars, I tell the cabbie to "keep the change always give bellhops at least S$2 (US$1.35/ 90p) per bag in all hotels. I t is always appreciated.

TOILETS Clean public toilets can be found in all shopping malls, hotels, and public buildings. S maller restaurants may not be up on their cleanliness, and be ware of the " squatty potty," the Asian-style squat toilet, which you see in the more "local" places. Carry plenty of tissues with you, as they often run out.

1 FAST FACTS: MALAYSIA

AMERICAN EXPRESS The main office for American Express is located in KL at Menara Maybank, Ground Level banking hall, Jalan Perak (© 03/2050-0888).

AREA CODES Malaysia's country code is 60. Ar ea codes for destinations co vered in this book ar e as follo ws: 03 for K uala Lumpur; 06 for M elaka; 07 for J ohor Bahru; 04 for P enang and Langkawi; 09 for Tioman, K uantan, Cherating, K uala Terengganu, and K ota B haru; 082 for Sarawak: and 088 for Sabah.

ATM NET WORKS/CASHPOINTS S ee "Money & Costs," p. 42.

BUSINESS HOURS Banks ar e open from 9:30am to 3pm M onday thr ough Friday. Government offices are open from 8am to 12:45pm and 2 to 4:15pm M onday thr ough F riday. S maller shops like provision stores may open as early as 6 or 6:30am and close as late as 9pm, especially those near the weet mar kets. Many such stores are closed on Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons and ar e busiest befor e lunch. O ther shops ar e open 9:30am to 7pm. D epartment stor es and shops in malls tend to open later, about 10:30 or 11am until 8:30 or 9pm thr oughout the week. Note that in the states of K elantan, Terengganu, and Kedah, the working week runs fr om S aturday to Wednesday, with weekends on Friday and Saturday.

DENTISTS & DOCTORS All hotels and resorts have qualified physicians on call who speak E nglish. These doctors will come directly to your room for treatment. If your condition is serious, they can help you check into a local hospital.

DRINKING L AWS Liquor is sold in pubs and supermarkets in all big cities, or in pr ovision stor es. I f y ou're going to a smaller island, y our resort may hav e limited alcohol selections, so you may wish to bring your own. In Terengganu and Kelantan, liquor is strictly limited to a handful of Chinese r estaurants. P ubs and other nightspots should officially close by 1 am nationwide, but there are places in KL that stay open later.

The legal age for alcohol pur chase and consumption is 18, but for eigners ar e rarely checked.

DRUG L AWS As in S ingapore, the death sentence is mandatory for drug trafficking (defined as being in possession of more than 15g of her oin or morphine, 200g of marijuana or hashish, or 40g of cocaine). F or lesser quantities, y ou'll be thrown in jail for a v ery long time and flogged with a cane.

ELECTRICITY The v oltage used in Malaysia is 220 to 240 volts AC (50 cycles). Three-point square plugs are used, so buy an adapter if you plan to bring any appliances. Also, many larger hotels can provide adapters upon request.

EMBASSIES While in Malaysia, should you need to contact an official representative from your home country, the following contact information in Kuala Lumpur can help you out: United States Embassy, © 03/2168-5000; Canadian High Commission, © 03/2718-3333; A ustralian High Commission, © 03/2146-5555; New Zealand High Commission, © 03/2078-2533; and the B ritish High Commission, © 03/2170-2200.

EMERGENCIES Call ② 999 for emergencies.

INSURANCE See "Insurance" in "Sngapore Fast Facts," p. 291

INTERNET Service is available to most of the nation, and I hav e found I nternet cafes in the most surprisingly r places. Although the major international hotels will hav e access for their guests in the business center, charges can be very steep. I used to recommend Internet cafes in each city but found that these small places came and went overnight, making it impossible for me to pr ovide accurate information for this book. Wherever you are, your best bet is to ask y our concierge or the local tourism information office for the best places close by. Usage costs only about RM5 to RM10 ($1.45-$2.90/90p-£1.80).

LANGUAGE The national language is Malay, or Bahasa Malaysia, although English is widely spoken. Chinese dialects and Tamil are also spoken.

ble in M alaysia, y ou should notify y our home embassy immediately. They will not be able to change local laws to help y ou, post bail on y our behalf, or offer legal advice, but they can assist y ou to contact family and suggest names of local legal representatives. Note that drug trafficking carries a mandatory death penalty and that conviction for certain other violent crimes can result in corporal punishment. S ome aspects of Shariah (Islamic) law have been incorporated into the lawbooks of some states.

LOST & FOUND Be sure to tell all of your cr edit car d companies the minute you discover your wallet has been lost or stolen, and file a report at the near est police precinct. Your credit card company or insur er may require a police report number or record of the loss. Most credit card companies have an emergency toll-free number to call if your card is lost or stolen; they may be able to wire you a cash advance immediately or deliver an emergency credit card in a day or two.

In the ev ent of a lost or stolen cr edit card, y ou can contact the following hot lines: American E xpress, © 03/2050-0789; MasterCard, © 800/804-594; and Visa, © 800/800-159.

If y ou need emergency cash o ver the weekend when all banks and American Express offices ar e closed, y ou can hav e money wired to y ou via Western Union (© 800/325-6000; www .westernunion. com).

MAIL Post office locations in each city covered are provided in each section. Overseas airmail postage rates ar e as follo ws: RM.50 (15¢/9p) for postcar ds and fr om RM1.40 (40¢/25p) for a 100g letter.

MEASUREMENTS See the chart on the inside front cover of this book for details on conv erting metric measur ements to nonmetric equivalents.

NEWSPAPERS & MAGAZINES E nglish-language papers the New Straits Times, The Star, The Sun, and The Edge can be bought in hotel lobbies and magazine stands. Of the local KL magazines, Time Out has gr eat listings and local "what's happening" information for travelers.

PASSPORTS See "P assports" in "F ast Facts: Singapore," p. 293.

POLICE For emergencies, call © 999.

TAXES Hotels, with the ex ception of those on Langkawi, add a 5% government tax to all rates, plus an additional 10% service charge. Larger r estaurants also figure the same 5% tax into y our bill, plus a 10% service charge, wher eas small coffee shops and hawker stalls don 't charge

298 anything abo ve the cost of the meal. Although most tourist goods (such as crafts, camera equipment, spor ts equipment, cosmetics, and select small electronic items) ar e tax-fr ee, a small, scaled tax is issued on various other goods such as clothing, shoes, and accessories that y ou'd buy in the larger shopping malls and department stores.

> TELEPHONE See "Staying Connected" in "P lanning Your Trip to M alaysia," p. 206.

TIME Malaysia is 8 hours ahead of Greenwich Mean Time, 16 hours ahead of U.S. Pacific Standard Time, 13 ahead of Eastern S tandard Time, and 2 hours behind Sydney. It is in the same z one as Singapore. There is no daylight saving time.

TIPPING People her e don't r eally tip, but you might want to giv e your bellhop something. In a nicer hotel, at least RM2 (60¢/35p) per bag should be fine. I budget hotel, they'll probably be shocked.

TOILETS To find a public toilet, ask for the tandas. In M alay, lelaki is male and perempuan is female. B e prepared for pay toilets. Coin collectors sit outside almost every public facility taking RM.20 (6¢/4p) per person, RM.30 (9¢/5p) if y ou want paper. Once inside, y ou'll find that y our money doesn't go for cleaning crews. Public toilets are pure filth. They smell horrible and the floors are always an inch deep with stagnant water. While most toilets are of the "squatty-potty" variety (a por celain bowl set into the floor), even if you find a seat-style toilet bowl, locals typically place their feet on the seat to squat. toilets ar e in hotels, upmar ket shopping malls, and restaurants.

USEFUL PHONE NUMBERS S ee "Useful P hone N umbers" in "S ingapore F ast Facts," p. 294.

WATER Water in Kuala Lumpur is supposed to be potable, but most locals boil the water before drinking it—and if that's not a tip-off, I don't know what is. I advise against drinking the tap water anywhere in Malaysia. Hotels will supply bottled water in your room. If they charge you for it, expect inflated prices, especially for pr emium imported water. A 1.5-liter bottle goes for RM7 (US$2.05/£1.25) in a hotel minibar, but RM2 (60¢/35p) at 7-Eleven.
