Each episode's opening title sequence is accompanied by an audio message in Morse code. The messages vary from generic references to cryptic clues, and are always related to the current episode in some way. In addition to these messages, in the second episode, Robert Hawkins received several additional Morse code messages through a radio that he was fixing.

Web-based tie-ins

In an online interview,[citation needed] Carol Barbee announced that there would be a "digital connection" to Jericho through an online companion (at Jericho's official site) called Beyond Jericho. The television program gave the web address for the online companion. Beyond Jericho was to feature the "other survivors" of the nuclear attacks. According to Barbee, the story was intended to be unique to the site, but as the season of Jericho progressed, the online story would dovetail into the episodes themselves. However, the site and "webisode" are now unavailable, having been removed from the CBS website before the second episode of the TV show was broadcast.

The Writers Guild of America is petitioning its members to refuse to work on "webisode" projects, due to a dispute between the WGA and many studios and networks regarding payments and royalties for such projects. In one specific case, NBC Universal has filed a counter-grievance against the WGA with the National Labor Relations Board, arguing that webisodes are already covered under current guild contract. Although a settlement was reached between NBC Universal and the WGA - part of which included blocking viewers outside the United States from viewing the webisodes - there are reports that other webisode projects are either on hold, or outright canceled, out of fears of further disputes and potential strikes by the WGA and other industry collective-bargaining representative organizations.

CBS has since decided to scrap the current webisode storyline, and instead release a new series of "prequel" webisodes named Countdown that take place before the first explosion. Each of these new webisodes appear concurrently with the broadcast of new episodes, and show Robert Hawkins gathering information before the attack. The webisodes corresponding to all Jericho episodes are available for view on the main Jericho website within the USA.

The first installment of Beyond Jericho began with an unknown man calling someone on a cell phone, requesting a ransom of $1.2 million for a woman he kidnapped. He then disappears underground through a metal trap door. While climbing down, he hears and feels a bang, but thinks nothing of it. After conversing with an associate about their next plans, he picks the woman up and climbs back up to the roof. When he opens the door, it's surrounded by rubble. The entire city around them has been destroyed. Shortly after, rubble falls through the trap door. With the cell phone (apparently actually the victim's cell phone) dead, and assuming that the man's associate is dead as well in the collapse, they start to climb through the rubble to find out what happened. Nearby, a hand with a surgical glove on emerges from the rubble, as the vignette ends.

Countdown

Starting on October 26, Beyond Jericho was replaced by Countdown, which documents Robert Hawkins' efforts to learn as much as possible about the effects of nuclear bombs before he moved to Jericho. [The webisodes do not feature any of the regular characters, consisting primarily of Hawkins, draped in shadows, watching mini-documentaries.

The mini-documentaries feature expert interviews about the effects of a nuclear attack. They are only minimally connected to each episode's plot. For instance, CBS's episode 8 plot summary reads: "A shadowy military unit bursts into the chamber Hawkins has just vacated. On his computer, they find a video." The video was a short documentary about FEMA's response to Hurricane Katrina and their use of paramilitaries. The "shadowy military unit" then patiently waits until the documentary ends to resume its search for Hawkins.

Countdown's sponsor, AT&T, is very heavily promoted in the series using product placement. Nearly all dialog takes place as SMS messages on an AT&T cellular phone, and a full-screen AT&T logo appears in every episode when Hawkins views the expert interviews. This web-based programming is not accessible from outside of the United States.

JET JACKSON FLYING COMMANDO

AKA: CAPTAIN MIDNIGHT

Captain Midnight has been a pilot named Captain Red Albright. Albright retained his nickname by successfully returning from a dangerous mission during the war on the stroke of midnight. After the war, he formed the top secret organisation known as the Secret Squadron.

The Secret Squadron was responsible for battling evil all over the world, often finding itself facing of against, mad scientists or enemy agents out to steal our scientific secrets. Ikky was Captain Midnight's not to bright assistant, serving as the series' comic relief. Tut was an eccentric scientist who worked for the Secret Squadron

The series ran originally in the US in 1952, as Captain Midnight, becoming Jet Jackson upon syndication two years later. Captain Midnight premiered as a Radio series in 1939 where it ran for more than a decade before the transition to TV. Before the TV series premiered, a 15 part theatrical serial was produced in 1942.

Due to the fact that Ovaltine, the series sponsor, owned the rights to the Captain Midnight name, the series was only called Captain Midnight during its original network run. When the series went into syndicated reruns it was retitled Jet Jackson, Flying Commando. In this version of the series, all references to Captain Midnight by name were dubbed over with the words Jet Jackson.

Richard Webb played Captain Midnight (or Jet Jackson, depending on where the series was shown) in this early children's tv series; Sid Melton played his bumbling assistant, Ikky; Olan Soule played his scientist friend Tut. Midnight was a super-scientific crime-fighter who each week would zoom in his sleek jetplane from his mountaintop HQ to combat a new evil.

The first episode concerned the theft of a powerful radioactive element by foreign agents; they are spotted by a member of Midnight's network of juvenile helpers, the Secret Squadron, and he tracks them down using a Geiger counter. The scripts were poor even by the juvenile standards of the mid-1950s, and CM was visually ludicrous. Storylines often featured atomic weapons and radioactivity, this being very much a product of the Cold-War period. CM is not to be confused with the 15-episode 1942 Columbia film serial (based on a RADIO serial) of the same name; this too had SF elements.

The series ran originally in the US in 1952, as Captain Midnight, becoming Jet Jackson upon syndication two years later. It was seen in the U.K. by ITV viewers in Wales and the West of England, where it was the first SF based show to emerge on the new channel run by TWW, collaring a regular early Monday evening slot until it ran out of steam toward the end of a 39-episode run, skipping weeks and changing days. The producer for the series was George Bilson and the director was D. Ross Lederman. The producer for the series was George Bilson, the director was D. Ross Lederman. The series was first aired in the US on CBS.

In one format or another, Captain Midnight had long been a part of America pre-adolescent culture. A popular radio show beginning in the late 1930s and running through the 1940s, the adventure serial also saw incarnations in comic books, various hard-back print editions and a rousing 15-part Columbia serial before eventually stepping into the television limelight.

One of the great aural motifs of dramatic radio was of a church bell solemnly tolling midnight, the roar of a tiny plane triumphantly emerging from behind heavy clouds and the exuberant voice of announcer Pierre Andre calling listeners to another adventure of Captain Midnight. It seemed hard to imagine that the television version would be able to devise an equally memorable opening; however, the television edition of Captain Midnight succeeded in creating one of the most identifiable opening signatures of the 1950s. A word-forward rendering was almost a required child-hood catechism. Each episode would open with a high view of Captain Midnight's imposing headquarters, which resembled a combination laboratory and observatory.

This was the central command post from which Captain Midnight and his closest confederates directed the far-flung operations of the Secret Squadron. The voice of the uncredited announcer would rise majestically above the stirring military-like music playing in the background, revealing that we are looking at the mountaintop headquarters of CAPTAIN MIDNIGHT! Details as to Captain Mid-night's background and origins were always kept vague and mysterious whether for radio or television. The Captain was described as a "war hero," but the wars seemed to change with the telling and retelling of the legend. The legend of Captain Midnight-real name, Red Albright-was born in the creative minds of two radio writers, Robert Burt and Wilfred Moore, at a time when pioneering aviation was one of the consuming passions of our culture and the names of flyers like Charles Lindbergh, Wiley Post, Amelia Earhart and Lincoln Beachey were on the lips of millions of children and adults alike.

Burt and Moore, like most of the rest of the country, were fascinated with the romance of flight, an era which had been inaugurated by the Wright Brothers a mere 30 years before. The writers previously created the juvenile avi-ation series The Air Adventures of Jimmie Allen in 1933. They would go on to create a similar series, Hop Harrigan, in 1942; in 1946, they would develop and write the successful Sky King series which would also eventually transfer to television. In 1938, however, Burt and Moore would unveil on the radio airwaves their most successful creation, and one of the most listened-to adventure serials of all time, Captain Midnight. When television superseded radio in the early 1950s as the dominant form of home entertainment, Captain Midnight would reappear, in altered form, as a leader in the Cold War resistance to totalitarianism.

The origin of Captain Midnight's name and life's mission was never revealed on the TV series. For something of an explanation, media historians must return to the radio series, where it was originally explained that at a low point in World War I a lone aviator, Red Albright, was handed a near-impossible task upon which would hinge the success or failure of the entire Allied cause. The daring flyer returned from successfully carrying out his mission precisely on the stroke of midnight and his exuberant commanding officer dubbed the young hero "Captain Midnight." After the war, Captain Midnight continued to fly hazardous missions as a private citizen, defending his country from an assortment of dangers. In its first couple of seasons, the radio program was a regional series confined to broadcast stations in the Midwest and sponsored by Skelly Oil. Captain Midnight's crime-fighting organisation was originally known as the Flight Patrol. A sense of the history of Midnight's original organisation may be gleaned from a message of greeting issued from Flight Patrol headquarters in the spring of 1940 to new and returning members of the Flight Patrol which tied membership to unfolding critical events overseas.

Once again, it's the Spring of 1940-all of Europe is in flames and war clouds are gath-ering over the Pacific. Conscious of the growing danger in the world, Captain Midnight has called together a band of loyal friends to form the Captain Midnight 1940 Flight Patrol a organisation dedicated to the protection of democracy and the rules of fair play around the globe ... Rumours abound at club headquarters that govern-ment authorities are presently at work cre-ating a new "super secret" organisation which will combine elements of the Flight Patrol with certain official intelligence efforts. If this exciting development should take place, all Flight Patrol members will become immediately eligible to join in the front ranks of the new group. Both the radio and television versions of Captain Midnight led youngsters to believe that their participation was a vital contribution to the security of the country. By the fall of 1940, all rights to Captain Midnight had been obtained by the Wander Company, makers of the chocolate breakfast drink Ovaltine.

Captain Midnight became a nation-wide daily ser-ial and his patriotic organisation changed from the Flight Patrol to the Secret Squadron. During the 1940s, under Ovaltine's stewardship Captain Midnight became one of the most generous dispensers of radio premiums on the air-waves. The most important of these give-aways were the yearly decoder badges which allowed Secret Squadron members to keep abreast of the latest important messages from headquarters. This interactive ploy was hugely popular with listeners and highly beneficial for the Wander Company, which required a proof of purchase from a can of Ovaltine in exchange for a decoder. The practice of issuing decoders would continue on television.

Captain Midnight exited the airwaves in December 1949. The post-war years had become something of an anticlimax for the serial heroes who had carried young listeners through the war. No villains loomed large enough to override the emotional letdown which seemed to be settling in after the war. In an attempt to translate the former radio popularity of Captain Midnight to video, Ovaltine unveiled a new Captain Midnight to television in the fall of 1953 when Captain Midnight's Adventure Theatre began to air in selected video markets.

This new series was reminiscent of the radio presentation insofar as its opening signature was concerned: a clock tolled the midnight hour and an echoing voice intoned, "C-A-P-T-A-I-N M-I-D-N-I-G-H-T " Next, the camera focused upon a young aviator sitting in the cockpit of a jet plane; discovering the audience, the pilot introduced himself. "This is Captain Midnight. I'll be on the ground in just 30 seconds with this week's exciting adventure, so stay tuned." After an Ovaltine commercial, Captain Midnight returned to the screen, but instead of offering an original Captain Midnight adventure, the Captain merely introduced a movie serial chapter. Ovaltine must have soon realised that if Captain Midnight was to retain any credi-bility with the emerging television generation, storylines more substantive than a collection of movie serials would be required.

Before too much time elapsed, Captain Midnight's Adventure Theatre disappeared and was replaced in September 1954 with the revamped Captain Midnight, a weekly half hour adventure series alternately sponsored by Ovaltine and Kix cereal. Filmed by Screen Gems, each episode of this new series had the distinction of offering distinct versions. The series was filmed first as Captain Midnight. Then, to provide for syndication under the auspices of a sponsor other than Ovaltine (who owned all rights to the Captain Midnight character), a second version was struck. The name Jet Jackson was dubbed over all references to Captain Midnight. In this way, two versions of each episode were prepared and eventually broadcast around the country.

Richard Webb played Captain Midnight and, of course, Jet Jackson. Sid Melton took the role of the Captain's faithful friend and mechanic, Ichabod Mudd. Olan Soule was assigned the newly created role of Aristotle Jones, "Tut," for short, an ingenious scientist working with Captain Midnight at the latter's mountaintop headquarters.

In the early 1950s, as Captain Midnight was making its way to television, the new medium was still appropriating many of the time-tested techniques of radio. Many of the juvenile video programs were still financially able to make premium offers to entice view-ers. Ovaltine offered bright red plastic drink-ing cups and shakeup mugs for proofs of purchase of their product. Emblazoned with decals depicting a stylised Captain Midnight in helmet and gobbles, the plastic vessels featured such messages as "Ovaltine-the heart of a hearty breakfast" and "The Secret Squadron Way; drink Ovaltine every day." As part of their series responsibilities, Webb, Melton and Soule were instructed by the Wander Com-pany to promote Ovaltine and the latest pre-mium offer, whether it was a red Ovaltine mug, a plastic "Plane Puzzle" decoder or a cloth patch which members of the Secret Squadron could wear proudly on their clothing. Youngsters proudly wearing their mem-bership emblems were a fairly common sight in the mid-1950s.

Captain Midnight was updated over the years to reflect changing times. When the series began on radio, the Captain had been a hero of the First World War. Political and his-torical events soon plunged Midnight and his radio series into the thick of World War II each weekday afternoon. By the time of the television series, Captain Midnight had been redefined as a hero of the Korean War, and one was left to assume that his name now referred to some stroke-of-midnight heroics deriving from this latter conflict.

Captain Midnight was introduced to the television audience in an episode called "Mur-der by Radiation." At the beginning of the episode, viewers gleaned fragments of the story which connected Captain Midnight, Ikky and Tut to each other and to the Secret Squadron: TUT: You were my friend when nobody else even knew I was alive. We were an odd combination: the campus hero and the greasy grind.

MIDNIGHT: You taught me all I know about science; I could never teach you anything about football.

IKKY: Gosh! Nobody could ever teach me anything.

MIDNIGHT: Ikky, if you weren't the best flight engineer in 70 states, I'd never made it back from that last recon run in Korea.

"Murder by Radiation," not unlike the majority of the entries in the Captain Midnight series, was constructed on a theme of compet-itive Cold War politics. A new radioactive element-Ormondium-had been stolen and it was up to Captain Midnight to retrieve it before it could be used by America's enemies. One of the strengths of "Murder by Radi-ation" as a representative touchstone of the series is the introduction and heavy reliance on the Secret Squadron, the Captain's world-wide network of vigilant assistants (reminiscent of Sherlock Holmes' Baker Street Irreg-ulars). Secret Squadron members were equipped with pocket locators which allowed them to remain in contact with headquarters, official membership cards, decoder pins, code books, signet rings and other items.

Captain Midnight actively recruited Secret Squadron members from his viewing audience. Joining the Secret Squadron was rel-atively simple, though living up to its high ideals of "justice through strength and courage" could be somewhat more difficult. To join merely required prospective members to submit the inner wax seal from a jar of Oval-tine to Captain Midnight, Box P, Chicago 77, Illinois. In a few weeks, a complete membership kit would be delivered; the only thing missing was the pocket locator, which was never included as part of the officially sanc-tioned membership package. How those Secret Squadron members featured on TV came into possession of their pocket locators was never explained, to the consternation of many young viewers.

The Captain Midnight series was skilfully packaged and presented, designed to capture and hold an audience of pre-adolescent patri-ots. The formula included exciting episode titles (promising more than could possibly be delivered), program content loaded with plenty of action and scientific gadgets, and inexpen-sive membership in the Secret Squadron complete with the previously mentioned member-ship cards, decoders and manuals. One of the most impressive devices was the Captain's TV telephone, "the visaphone." The visaphone allowed Captain Midnight to actually see who was calling. On more than one occasion this device permitted Midnight the luxury of knowing that the caller was being less than truthful.

To guarantee that viewers returned the following week, Captain Midnight, before final sign-off, offered a short teaser which made next week's show seem irresistible:

CAPTAIN MIDNIGHT: Attention all Secret Squadron members and fighters for justice everywhere! A friend of mine discovered the location of a satellite moon close enough to Earth to be used as a military space station, but before he could reveal his discovery to our government he was murdered. Our next mission is to find his murderer and the secret of the lost moon. We'll rendezvous here at headquarters. This is Captain Midnight signing off with the code of the Secret Squadron-justice through strength and courage. Out! Or consider the promise presented at the close of "The Mark of Death" when Captain Midnight-using the age-old device of a teaser, coupled with the not-so-subtle appeal of a pulp magazine-outlined the following week's adventure:

CAPTAIN MIDNIGHT: Attention all Secret Squadron members! The Arctic Circle is the object of our next mission. There in the frozen North we'll meet the deadly challenge of enemy agents who are trying to sabotage our radar defences-fight our way across the frozen tundraface snowblindness and death as tons of snow and ice come crashing down on us in a thundering avalanche. We'll rendezvous here at head-quarters, as usual. This is Captain Midnight signing off with the code of the Secret Squadron justice through strength and courage. Out!

Captain Midnight never flew to the moon or the outer planets like Captain Video, Tom Corbett or Flash Gordon. He was restricted to the airspace of earth, usually piloting his private jet "The Silver Dart." The closest he ever came to leaving Earth orbit was in the adventures "The Lost Moon" and "The Human Bullet." Nor did he travel back and forth in time like Captain Z-RO. Nonetheless, Captain Midnight was heavily steeped in scientific technology. Secret Squadron headquarters routinely witnessed the development and testing of exotic formulae and inventions. Indicative of the 1950s paramilitary scientist, science for the sake of science was sublimated to the greater good and science for the sake of the survival of the state was the overarching theme. Given the dangerous political situations unfolding throughout the 1950s, such an outlook was easily explicable.

Some historians and social critics have suggested in recent years that television, and most notably series like Captain Midnight, somehow contributed to a communal passivity in which viewers were conditioned to accept unquestioningly Cold War decisions of their leaders, which in turn led to the mistakes of Vietnam. After Ovaltine withdrew its sponsorship, the series was rerun under the Jet Jackson, the Flying Commando title and constituted a familiar feature on television well into the 1960s, when the Captain Midnight/Jet Jackson style of Cold War militarism seemed at odds with the political philosophy of a large segment of the same American youth who had once proudly served in the Secret Squadron.

JETBOYAKA: SHONEN JET

Ken Kitamura (Nakajima) is an assistant boy detective who solves cases with his dog Shane. He rides a scooter called Rabi. His ultimate weapon is his loud voice (!). His chief rival Black Devil has many dastardly schemes for ruling the world but never kills people. The result is the perfect show for young boys - a cool career, a cool vehicle, man's best friend, and a gun when things get boring.

From June 1960, the Jetboy was played by Ken Tsuchiya. Music by Hideo Miyagi. Produced by Tsunayoshi Takeuchi.

JIRAIYA

AKA: SEKAI NINJA SEN JIRAIYA

AKA: THE WORLD NINJA WAR JIRAIYA

AKA: EARTH NINJA WAR JIRAIYA

Ninja from all over the world fight against the evil monsters who are trying to get hold of Pako, an element that can allow them to rule the world. However, the monsters turn out not to be all bad - they have their own system of ethics and philosophy, and some even switch sides to aid ninja warrior Tsutsui save the planet.

Another entry in the Metal series, coming between METALDAR and JIVAN. Theme : Akira Kushida - "Jiraiya". Produced by Kyozo Utsunomita, Susumu Yoshikawa, Itaru Orita.

The only non-armored hero of this era of shows, this program features an actual ninja master from a historically known ninja clan preparing his son, daughter, and youngest child, along with a family relative and a police officer with ninja roots to combat the re-emergence of a centuries-old demon samurai, his evil offspring, and a host of international ninja warriors from around the world hoping to tip the scales of justice. Jiraiya, the son of the ninja master, is destined to wield an enormous power that Dokusai, the demon samurai, hopes to seize. Jiraiya had tremendous success in Brazil. Ironically, the series failed to achieve near the same hype in Japan.

This TV show is quite entertaining for both kids and adults.

For kids because there is a lot of action and a generally easy to follow plot. The main characters are a pretty nice role model, they are poor, humble, simple folks, and yet they fight hard for what they believe in. Even if they are minority and so few people acknowledge them, in good or bad times the Togakuri family will stay united.

For adults it gets a bit trickier. Most will soon realize the ambiguity of dialogues and plots that actually don't seem too well planned. Specially if you watch the translated (portuguese) version, you will often notice some lines were probably not carefully translated. For example the word for sign and inscription in the Japanese language, might be the same, and when they are making references to those 2 things at the same time (Dojo Sign, and half of the Inscription), they use the same term, which is pretty confusing. But that's exactly what makes it a very entertaining show for adults. If you have a silly type of humor you will just crack yourself up with this show =)

I never get tired of it. I have seen all episodes when I was young, taped many, and I still watch them back and forth when I need a good laugh.

Its very hard to find them on tape though. They were not a big hit in japan, and in Brazil its dimming away.

The family Yamashi is the guardian of a powerful treasure for several generations, now Toha Yamashi, as Jiraya, has to honor his family name and protect them against the evil Empire of Ninjas. His adoptive father, Tetsusan Yamashi, when young, fought the leader of the Sorcerer's family, Oninin Dokusai to protect the treasure, now he is too old to do so. That's when Jiraya comes up. Jiraya is a powerful armor and it will help Toha Yamashi against the Empire of Evil, who desperately wants Pako, the treasure of the century. This series has it all, because when the ninja tournament begins, Jiraya has to fight against ninjas from across the globe, which means: an American ninja with a gun, an Arabian ninja with a turbant, an African ninja with a tiger mask, even a templar ninja! Jiraya has equipments like the old fashion ninjas, as well as Batman's alike equipment. He also has a car. And whenever he is going to finish his opponents he's katana turns laser and then he slices the enemy like a fine Jedi.

JIVAN

AKA: JIBAN
 AKA: KIDO KEIJI JIVAN
 AKA: ROBOT DETECTIVE JIVAN
 AKA: MOBILE DETECTIVE JIBAN
 AKA: KIDOU KEIJI JIBAN

Tamura Naoto, a new detective in Central City, was killed by Bioron in the line of duty. Dr. Igarashi Kenzou, the man whose experiments had been responsible for Bioron's existence, brought him back to life as a robot detective, Jiban. Eventually, Bioron's Mad Garbo and Rhinonoid killed Jiban, who then returned to life again as Perfect Jiban. In the finale, Bioron destroyed Jiban's base and transformed Mad Garbo into a false Jiban. Jiban defeated his duplicate and ultimately the Kibanoid, the true form of Bioron's leader Doctor Kiba. The victorious Jiban then learned that Igarashi Mayushi, the one civilian that knew his secret, had been his missing younger sister all along.

Coming in between JIRAIYA and WINSPECTOR in the Metal series, Jivan was something of a departure in its concentration on a robot hero, not a transforming team. Its Japanese inspiration can be traced back to ROBOT DETECTIVE and through it, to the anime series 8th Man. Theme: Akira Kushida - "Kido Keiji Jivan" - (Mobile/Robot Cop Jivan).

Produced by Kyozo Utsonomiya, Susumu Yoshikawa, Itaru Orita, Nagafumi Hori.

(Perfect) Jiban/Tamura Naoto. A robot detective with the soul of a human, designed by Dr. Igarashi to counter Bioron's Bionoids. Capable of reverting back to his human identity at will. Holds the rank of police commissioner. Armed with the Maximillian Type 3, a weapon with three modes: stick, gun, and sword, each associated with a certain technique (Disclose Shock, Last Shooting/Search Buster, and Jiban End, respectively) and the Daedalus backpack, capable of flight or use as a cannon with the Dalus Bombard technique. Like Robocop, had three directives:

1. Mobile Detective Jiban can arrest criminals in any circumstance without warrants.
2. Mobile Detective Jiban can punish criminals on his own judgment, if he recognises his opponents to be members of Bioron.
3. Mobile Detective Jiban is permitted to kill depending on circumstances.

As Perfect Jiban, he gained the Autoderringer Rifle, the Needricker drill (right arm attachment), and the Powerbreaker claw (left arm attachment).

Media

Jiban's episodes and movie has been released in Japan in several VHS tapes. Though it had been obscure for a long time with the rest of the other metal hero tv shows, there has been sightings of a DVD release. It is most likely subtitled in other languages such as Portuguese in bootlegged form as there has been no word from Toei officials if Jiban would receive an official release in Japanese or licensed release in foreign subtitled languages such as English.

Trivia

Though the emblem on Jiban's head is the crest of the Japanese National Police Agency, the emblem on his chest resembles an American sheriff star.

Jiban was influenced by the success of the movie Robocop. Jiban's three main directives with the location of his Maximillian Type 3 sidearm and collapsible holster has been copied from the Robocop android. The series was also influenced by Robotto Keiji.

Doctor Kiba is played by Italian actor Leo Meneghetti, however, the actor is dubbed by seiyuu Shozo Izuka.

JOE 90

A normal, adventure-loving schoolboy, Joe was the adopted son of brilliant electronics engineer, Professor Ian McClaine, creator of BIG RAT (Brain Impulse Galvanoscope Record And Transfer), a sophisticated device which recorded the brain patterns of one person and 208 transferred them to another. At the behest of Shane Weston, Deputy Head of the World Intelligence Network (an organisation dedicated to maintaining the balance of power throughout the world), Prof. McClaine used his brainchild on Joe, giving him the specialist attributes of an appropriate highly skilled adult, and making him WIN's Most Special Agent, on the assumption that Joe could boldly go where no man could venture - and get away with it.

At the outset of each mission, Joe sat in a special chair that rose up into a circular cage which revolved as the BIG RAT tape was run, amid electronic noises and a psychedelic light show. Once the transfer was complete, Joe donned a pair of 'electrode glasses' to trigger the knowledge. In the course of the series he became an astronaut, test pilot, racing driver, aquanaut, computer boffin and a brain surgeon, among others.

Joe carried with him an ordinary-looking schoolboy's case which appeared to contain the usual scholarly paraphernalia. But when he flipped the case over and pressed two small studs, secret lids opened revealing compartments containing his electrode glasses, his WIN badge, pistol, pocket transmitter ammo and secret reports. What more could a boy wish for?

Joe 90 was intended to be the fulfilment of every schoolboy's fantasies. So it was perhaps, unfortunate, then that in his glasses, Joe looked more like the class swot than the class hero. Gerry Anderson's ninth TV puppet show - and the sixth of the Supermarionation series - Joe 90 marked a conscious change of style and pace. Gone were the hi-tech hardware and jut jawed heroes of Thunderbirds and Captain Scarlet. In their place . . . a bespectacled nine-year-old boy.

Joe 90 premiered, in ITV's Midlands area (ATV) on 29 September 1968, running for 30 episodes, with reruns coming as recently as 1983. In the Nineties, when Gerry Anderson's Supermarionation series were bought by the BBC, Joe 90 had a 1994 run on Saturday mornings. Among the voices behind the puppets were the voice of TV's Maigret, Rupert Davies, and Keith Alexander the voice of another 1960s puppet celebrity - Topo Gigio. But there was less to attract adult viewers this time.

Joe 90 was intended to be the fulfilment of every schoolboy's fantasies. So it was perhaps unfortunate, then, that in his glasses, Joe looked more like the class swot than the class hero. This was the last and one of the least popular of the SF animated-puppet series made for children in "SuperMarionation" by the Andersons -- though TERRAHAWKS (1983-6), in which the puppets were electronically operated in a process Anderson called "Supermacromation", was still to come.

The hero, Joe, is a 9-year-old boy whose scientist father has devised a method of transferring specialist brain patterns into his mind, armed with which (looking innocent) he becomes a test pilot, a brain surgeon and so on, working as a special agent for the World Intelligence Network. J90 collapsed after 1 season, perhaps because it appeared more childish than most of its immediate predecessors in the SuperMarionation tv shows. There were two novelizations: Joe 90 and the Raiders * (1968) by Tom Sullivan and Joe 90 in Revenge * (1969) by Howard Elso.

This was Gerry Anderson's ninth TV puppet show - and the sixth of the supermarionation series - Joe 90 marked a conscious change of style of pace. The executive producer for the series was Reg Hill, producer was David Lane and script editor was Tony Barwick, the music was composed by Barry Gray. The series received its first premier on ATV in the Midlands in the UK.

JOHNNY AND THE BOMB

Terry Pratchett on location with Johnny (George MacKay) from 'Johnny And The Bomb'

Based on the book by Terry Pratchett, the adventure begins for thirteen-year-old Johnny Maxwell and his four friends when they come to the aid of eccentric homeless woman, Mrs Tachyon, and are left minding her trolley full of black bags while she is hospitalised. When the children later visit her in hospital, Mrs Tachyon lets them into the secret that her black bags-- or 'Bags of Time-- are special and can be used to create a gateway to the past. The five youngsters end up during the Blitz where fun and games turn serious when they quickly realise the prejudices of the era. But when they return to their own time, the gang discover they have somehow changed history as a result Johnny's grandmother died in a bombing as a teenage girl meaning Johnny's mother and, in turn, himself were never born. The children are now in a race to fix the path in order to save the future but can they succeed before the bombs start falling...?

Johnny and the Bomb is a 1996 novel by Terry Pratchett. It is the third novel to feature Johnny Maxwell and his friends, and deals with the rules and consequences of time travel.

The action of the novel revolves around an incident during World War II in which Johnny's inoffensive home town of Blackbury was hit by a bomb during an air raid intended for an industrial complex at another nearby town. It is this bomb, and not "The Bomb", to which the title refers.

In January 2006 the BBC aired a three-part television adaptation of Johnny And The Bomb, starring George MacKay as Johnny, Zoe Wanamaker as Mrs Tachyon, Frank Finlay as Johnny's grandad Tom, and Keith Barron as Sir Walter.

Spoiler warning: Plot and/or ending details follow.

Some alterations were made to the plot of the book. Most notably, whereas in the book Johnny changes history so that no-one dies in the Paradise Street bombing, the TV series has this as the "original" history, which the gang inadvertently change on their first visit to the past. In the history thus created Johnny's grandmother was killed, meaning he no longer exists. More trivially, the adult Wobbler character was renamed Sir Walter, presumably to avoid confusion between Sir John and Johnny.

Simply put, Johnny And The Bomb is a triumph and by far and away the best piece of children's TV that I have seen for a long time. Aside from the skilled direction that keeps the plot ticking over at a brisk pace and some beautifully devised set-pieces such as the visually stunning German bombing raid, the sheer quality of Pratchett's writing shines through in a manner that none of the previous adaptations of his work have even come close to. Each character in the series is beautifully rounded and genuinely engaging from Zoe Wanamaker's stunning Mrs Tachyon (who isn't in this nearly as much as she should be) to George MacKay's reluctant hero Johnny, and Frank Finlay's wonderfully knowing Tom Maxwell. Aside from a cast-iron structure and the lovely characterisation, the series also boasts some wonderfully sly dialogue such as Yo-Less' horror at being called a 'Sambo' and Kirsty's desperate attempts to get him to focus on the problem at hand by telling him that racism didn't exist in "the olden days" because everyone talked like that.

In fact, the only question marks that hand over Johnny And The Bomb is Jazmine Franks who delivers a rather one-note Kirsty who seriously struggles with some of the more comic lines. However, this is the only cloud in an otherwise blue sky and if there were ever any doubt as to the quality of this series you would need to look no further than the interview with Pratchett included on the DVD where Terry practically bursts into tears from his sheer joy at the success of the adaptation.

Thoroughly wonderful from beginning to end, Johnny And The Bomb is a must not only for Pratchett fans but also for fans of sci-fi in general. Absolutely superb!

JOHNNY JUPITER

The series first appeared on DTN as a programme which was broadcast live. The live version featured Vaughn Taylor as Ernest. Ernest was a janitor at a television studio who liked to play around with the equipment. One night he managed to contact Johnny Jupiter and his robot B-12 on Jupiter. The TV set which Ernest used to contact his friends on Jupiter was a big screen TV, even by today's standards. This was so there would be room for the puppeteers behind the set!

Ernest soon became a popular television personality on Jupiter, where television was used as punishment for children who spend too much time doing school work. The DTN episodes were aimed at both children and adults and offered a satirical view of life on Earth as seen through the eyes of the Jovians.

Johnny Jupiter was an early children's comedy series which was produced in two different formats. Both of the formats featured Johnny Jupiter, a native of the planet Jupiter (portrayed by a puppet) who had more friends via television with a human, Ernest P. Duckweather, on Earth.

Like many popular shows on DTN Johnny Jupiter eventually was moved off the network. Instead of moving to another network as was usually the case. In the fall of 1953 Johnny Jupiter returned as a filmed series in first run syndication. The filmed episodes featured Wright King as Ernest. This time Ernest was an employee at the Frisby general store and an amateur electronics hobbyist who had built a TV able to contact Jupiter. His Jovian friends in this version consisted of: Johnny, Major Domo (the leader of the robots) and Reject the Robots (a robot which didn't quite make factory specs). Reject had the adventures.

While on Earth Reject was portrayed by an actor in a robot costume, at all other times he and the other Jovians were puppets. Other characters who appeared in the filmed episodes were: Ernest's boss Mr. Frisby, a tight wad who thought very little of Ernest, and his daughter Katherine. Ernest's girlfriend who continued to date Ernest against her father's objections. Neither Katherine or her father knew about Ernest's Jovian friends. The filmed episode lacked the satirical elements of the DTN episode. The comedy in the filmed episodes came from Ernest having to avoid Reject being discovered and having to explain the weirdness in his life.

One science fiction series in particular, the marvellously eccentric and wistful Johnny Jupiter, enchanted both children and adults in the 1950s. The premise upon which it rested was a simple one: a television studio janitor named Ernest P. Duckweather has his heart set on becoming a TV station engineer and takes advantage of his presence in the studio to experiment with the various dials and knobs in the control room. Inadvertently and amazingly Duckweather makes contact with the planet Jupiter, which also has television, and is thereby introduced to Jupiterians like the mild-mannered and insightful Johnny Jupiter, his arrogant companion B-12 and a robot named Major Domo, who is required to do all of B-12's worrying. Duckweather is also introduced to Jupiterian logic which often runs counter to that employed by Earthlings.

On Jupiter, for instance, Duckweather discovers that Jupiterians prize conversation over television; moreover, he learns that children sometimes have a tendency to devote too much time to reading books and playing with slide rules, and as punishment for such diversions Jupiterian children are required to watch television. Jupiterians are also puzzled by the human obsession with vacations, reasoning that if people didn't like their jobs they should find other jobs; Jupiterians, Duckweather learns, prefer "workations." In matters of the heart, Duckweather learns that when it comes to choosing between a pretty girl and a homely one, the Jupiterians select the homely one, reasoning that it is the homely one who needs the attention.

The Jupiterians (played by puppets) had the ability to scrutinise and then share truths about the human condition, the latter being cleverly represented, in the tradition of Dickens, by incarnations of human foibles. As a result, Johnny Jupiter appealed on two levels.

First, the narratives offered entertaining object lessons about moral and ethical behaviour; Johnny's commentaries about such inappropriate deportment as lying and cheating were intended to instruct children about what constitutes good conduct. Secondly, the narratives were often witty, offering similar commentary about such behaviour but in a stronger and often satiric manner. New York Times television critic Jack Gould described it as "one long, good natured spoofing of our own ways, customs and habits as seen through the eyes of a couple of visitors from another planet who think their civilisation is pretty hot stuff, too." The scripts were obviously intended for adult audiences, but it must be emphasised that they remained in the child's voice, as it were, and never satirised the conduct under investigation by the Jupiterians; lying and cheating, for instance, received absolutely no quarter from either the child's or the adult's perspective. At the adult level, the commentary reflected the frequently corrupt nature of human behaviour and man-kind's shortcomings.

The origin of Johnny Jupiter can be found at the beginning of children's television. The faltering DuMont network originated the first successful network programming aimed at youngsters-antedating NBC's Howdy Doody by nine months with a series called The Small Fry Club, created and produced by Bob and Kay Emery, and hosted by "Big Brother" Bob Emery. Two years later, DuMont sought a pro-gram to appeal to both The Small Fry Club crowd which was enamoured of the colourful puppets and the legions of science fiction followers who at that moment were satiated by such programs as DuMont's own Captain Video. Martin Stone, who had served as the executive producer of Howdy Doody, and writer Jerome Coopersmith then fashioned the tale of Duckweather and his association with the Jupiterians.

Jerry Coopersmith, like almost everyone else connected with the new show (like commercial television itself) was young-28 when he began writing Johnny Jupiter. The attention drawn to his obvious writing talent would soon win him writing assignments on such series as Armstrong Circle Theatre, Allcoa-Goodyear Play-house, Harry S Truman and Hawaii Five-O, and lead to his creation of The Andros Targets for CBS in the late 1970s. He has also written a number of TV specials and the Broadway play "Baker Street."

Under the watchful eye of Theodore Bergmann, DuMont's network director, and the necessarily tight-fisted accounting department, the Johnny Jupiter program began to take substantive if frugal form, and the cast and crew composed what Gould, in his effusive review, called "an inspired company that is performing a half dozen wonders at once and doing it on a minuscule budget." Orchestrating these wonders was director Frank Bunetta, who assembled the various parts into a unified whole within that "minuscule budget." Bunetta, an experienced DuMont director, succeeded admirably by also serving as director of one of DuMont's few genuine successes, Life Is Worth Living, a vehicle for Bishop Fulton J. Sheen.

For the Jupiterians, hand puppets were chosen over marionettes, reportedly because of the difference in cost (in terms of both construction and manipulation). Allan Stone, Martin's brother, designed and created the puppets, and their all-important personalities were placed in the hands literally of puppeteer Carl Harms and in the voice of long time radio performer Gilbert Mack. Harms had previously worked with Bill and Cora Baird on their CBS series Life With Snarky Parker (1950) and The Whistling Wizard (1951--52). His work on, Johnny Jupiter, however, was described-again by Jack Gould-as "unusually deft and life-like and a first-rate job." Gil Mack, who had appeared in a variety of character roles in such diverse radio programs as Chick Carter, Boy Detective; Green Valley U.S.A.; Cloak and Dagger; Dick Tracy; and Everyman's Theatre, had long been noted for his adeptness at trick voices. Mack used a soft-spoken yet lively voice for Johnny in contrast to the bass monotones of the sober Major Domo.

Of these puppet characterisations, the most interesting and certainly the most colourful was that of Major Domo, the robot who had to do all the worrying for B-12. Harms's uncomplicated vertical motions-the simple up and down action of Major Domo's lower jaw and arms-complemented Mack's mono-tone grumbling to such a degree that Major Domo easily eclipsed the popularity of Johnny himself; Mack's voice characterisation resembled in tone and timbre that of the movies' original cynic Ned Sparks, offering adult audiences a familiar persona for the Jupiterians' more sceptical observations about human behaviour.

The pivotal role of Ernest P Duckweather was assumed by veteran character actor Vaughn Taylor, who had been performing character parts on television since 1946-some 250 by his own count-when, at the age of 42, he was tapped for the Duckweather role. Simultaneous with his new role on, Johnny Jupiter, Taylor continued to serve as part of the repertory group performing on the prestigious live production Robert Montgomery Presents. But Johnny Jupiter provided Taylor with one of his best reviews when Jack Gould described Taylor as giving "the most beguiling performance he has ever given on TV. As the mild-mannered janitor, Mr. Taylor preserves the extreme delicacy and fragility of his role and endows the whole show with credibility His is a tricky assignment well done."

Explaining his role on the series, Taylor said, "Duckweather was just a straight man for the puppets in the beginning, but that's been changed. He's simple in an intelligent way and sympathetic to everyone's problems." Music for Johnny Jupiter was the purview of Ed Manson, who provided-in a typical parsimonious feint by DuMont-a simple harmonica background. Each week, however, Manson was called upon to compose one or two songs to comport with Coopersmith's often satirical lyrics.

Johnny Jupiter premiered live on Saturday evening, March 21, 1953, at 7:30. In keeping within that minuscule budget, the production format usually kept Duckweather in the studio at the control centre where he conversed with Johnny and his friends. In a normal half-hour episode, a difficulty arose for Duckweather, and he in turn made contact with Johnny for insight. In a particularly interesting and certainly timely topic-even for today-writer Coopersmith once struck out at pandering television news commentators and noxious pressure groups by writing a script in which Duckweather auditions for the role of a news commentator for Jupiterian television. Duckweather commenced his audition with a story concerning two moon dwellers being apprehended by the Satellite Patrol, but an angry objection from the Moon Dwellers Association prompted the axing of the story. A second story, "A shocking expose among underwater plant life" brought an immediate complaint from the Underwater Vegetable League, and a third story-"a juicy tidbit" promised the audience by Duckweather was quickly objected to by the "Juicy Tidbit Society." And so it went until Duckweather finally signed off his program with a satirical song by Coopersmith and Manson called "The Program That Doesn't Offend."

Whether the sketch was planned as a subtle rebuke to the cowed networks and quailing personalities on display during the witch-hunting heyday of Senator Joseph McCarthy is not known, but certainly Coopersmith's satirical script was highly effective and cited appreciatively by critic Val Adams in the New York Times. Coopersmith, quoted in Adams's review, flatly denied writing for any group, however. "I write for my own enjoyment," he said. "I assume that if the script satisfies me, it will satisfy others, too." For all of the considerable talent which had been assembled and for all of the critical acclaim piled upon Johnny Jupiter, the program was, nonetheless, a product of the floundering DuMont network, and it was introduced to television audiences at a time when the fourth network was struggling to keep its financial head above water; DuMont would fold a mere two years after the premiere of Johnny Jupiter. DuMont cancelled the series after its first trimester; despite the program's obvious merits, it had failed to attract a commercial sponsor and the network wasn't in a strong enough financial position to sustain the series until a sponsor could be signed, as DuMont had done with its enormously successful Captain Video series.

DuMont's decision to cancel the program, however, wasn't taken lightly by Stone. He elected to package Johnny Jupiter as a syndicated series through his own Kagan Corporation, which was responsible for merchandising The Howdy Doody Show among others. Most important was that Stone was able to secure a sponsor, something DuMont had been unable to do. Stone now filmed his series exclusively for the Hawley and Hoops company, makers of M&M's candies, which initially financed 26 episodes; the series was then "spotted" in 54 markets where high ratings and a "formidable increase"-nearly 30% according to some sources-in candy sales induced M&M and its advertising agency, Roy S. Durstine Inc. of New York, to finance an additional 13 episodes and spot an additional 31 markets, making a total of 39 episodes for 85 markets. Kagan eventually negotiated a deal with the fledgling ABC network to air the series, and Johnny Jupiter returned to television in a revised edition in the fall of 1953 simultaneously as a syndicated series distributed by Associated Artists Productions and as an ABC network series. Several subtle and not-so-subtle changes were now evident in the focus and direction of the series. Jerry Coopersmith relinquished his duties as producer to Martin Stone himself, but Coopersmith continued as story editor and principal writer. Philip London took over as puppeteer from Carl Harms.

The major change, however, was the read-justed format. The middle-aged janitor played by Vaughn Taylor was replaced by an eccentric and naive young inventor played by Wright King, who at the age of 25 was already a veteran of numerous Broadway productions including the part of the "young collector" in Elia Kazan's stage and film adaptations of Tennessee Williams's, Streetcar Named Desire. Ernest P Duckweather now earned a living by working in the Frisby General Store in a town called Clayville.

The new format also required two additional human characters: the cantankerous Horatio Frisby, owner of the store, and his daughter, Katherine, Duckweather's romantic interest. Frisby was played by Cliff Hall, a veteran vaudeville straight man who had played the part of the doubting "Sharlie" to Jack Pearl's mendacious Baron Munchausen on NBC's radio comedy, The Jack Pearl Show (1933). Katherine was played by Patricia Peardon, who like King had established a career on the legitimate stage; she and Hall had appeared together in a successful production of Junior Miss, in which she had played the title role.

Although Gil Mack continued to supply the voices to the puppets, he had one less voice with which to contend; B-12 disappeared in order to make room for a new Jupiterian character, a mute "factory rejected" robot named Reject. On the planet Jupiter, Reject was one of Allan Stone's puppet creations manipulated by Phil London, but when he was dispatched to Earth to aid Duckweather in overcoming his many trials, Reject became a full-size costumed figure also played by London. Reject's propensity for getting into trouble and his unlikely appearance (a fixed expression of surprise behind a pair of oversized eyeglasses) complemented by his gentle and delightful gestures, made Reject one of the more popular characters in the series.

In effect, Reject was Kagan's merchandising counterpart to Howdy Doody's Clara-belle the Clown. Mute and fully disguised by the robot suit, Reject could be easily played by anyone at any time in any city. Reject made his first-and as far as can be discerned his only personal appearance on November 7, 1953, in Huntington, West Virginia, where he appeared at Evans Supermarket as well as hospitals and schools and on local programs on WSAZ TV.

The appearance was sponsored by Kagan, which spent approximately $500 on balloons, photographs and a main street parade, not so much to promote the series as much as an effort to convince M&M candies to sponsor such appearances nation-wide, something that Colgate and other sponsors of Howdy Doody were doing for Clarabelle. Apparently the gambit failed. Kagan pledged through announcements in trade publications that merchandising the Johnny Jupiter program would proceed, promising such items as balloons, puppets, colouring books and various other kinds of toys. If such merchandising actually reached fruition, the items are extremely rare today; although no one seems to know for certain, most likely the merchandising of Johnny Jupiter also failed.

With the format sufficiently altered for the new version, production on the series began in March 1953. Rather than being presented live from New York as it had been on DuMont, Johnny Jupiter was now shot on film. With Hollywood studios still defiantly opposed to television production, filmed properties at this point were the province of independent film units which were more often proficient in the "science" of film production than in the "art" of filmmaking.

Johnny Jupiter, then, was now filmed in New York by director Howard Magwood for Sound Masters Inc., a producer of television commercials, and later by Ben Gradus for his own film production company, International Motion Picture Studios (IMPS), whose clientele consisted mainly of advertising agencies. New York cinematographer Gerald Hirschfield photographed the entire series, and scenic designs including background art of the planet Jupiter were created by Paul Heller. Production on the series always followed the same pattern: Four scripts were blocked and rehearsed in two weeks followed by another two weeks of shooting those scripts. To conserve money, all of the puppet scenes were filmed in tandem, and most of the action was limited to master shots. Wright King recalled that an "efficiency expert" was always on the set showing ways to cut costs; at one point, King said, the efficiency expert suggested that a series of stock shots of Duckweather's reactions be filmed for insertion into episodes as needed.

The first episode of the new edition of Johnny Jupiter was broadcast in most markets on September 6, 1953. Moreover, with the addition of a sponsor, the Jupiterians suddenly discovered an issue on which they could agree with Earthlings; through the lost art of the integrated commercial, the Jupiterian puppets each week were now extolling the virtues of M&M's candies:

JOHNNY: Oh, Major, it's wonderful how the Earthlings have found such a neat new way to eat fine chocolate.

MAJOR DOMO: You refer to M&M's candies, of course!

JOHNNY: Sure, the delicious milk chocolate with a thin sugar shell that melts in your mouth, not on your fingers.

MAJOR DOMO: M&M's candies ... ummmm ummmm ... the chocolate treat that's neat to eat.

While this new version of Johnny Jupiter remained both fun and entertaining, the exigencies of a commercially sponsored series in politically sensitive times undoubtedly peeled away some of the program's satirical edge. During the DuMont period, when the critics were hailing the show's satirical finesse and the series was without a sponsor, Coopersmith was asked if he harboured any fears that sponsors might be reluctant to touch the series because of its often derisive treatment of television. Coopersmith thought not, saying, "Anything that's done well and is entertaining has commercial possibilities. It doesn't make any difference whether it's Milton Berle or Bishop Sheen."

With commencement of the new edition of the series, Stone and Coopersmith were required to aim the program at children; such a requirement seems to have forced Coopersmith and Johnny Jupiter to deviate from the original intent of the series, that of appealing to both children and adults through witty and often satiric narratives. The characterisations remained outrageous and stylised, but the Dickensian function of these caricatures was for the most part avoided. The new format stressed typical sitcom narratives. For example, Duckweather's feeble attempts at maintaining his fix-it shop is exacerbated by Reject's noble but ineffectual intervention, and the predicament is eventually alleviated by Johnny's wisdom and Duckweather's good sense.

Occasional flourishes of its earlier identity did materialise; one episode scripted by Coopersmith from a story by Coopersmith and Sam Rockingham (frequently alluded to as "The Professor") featured Ross Martin as Prof. Dexter Spiegelmacher, a noted expert and lecturer on the doctrine of "money isn't everything." In this multifarious episode, Coopersmith and director Howard Magwood cleverly devised an object lesson about the evils of avarice (what Spiegelmacher professes) while exposing the folly of hypocrisy (what Spiegelmacher does). The narrative also holds up a mirror to itself, revealing in an arresting manner Coopersmith's obvious grievance about the role television has played and continues to play in turning creative expression into the business of expression.

In a guileless manner, the evils of greed are recounted by Spiegelmacher's own words. Nearly everyone in Clayville listens to Prof. Spiegelmacher's radio program in which he espouses the Spiegelmacher System for "feel-ing gut mit-out loot." For Spiegelmacher, such things as being overdrawn at the bank, shak-ing pockets and hearing "nothing but keys rattling" and having only "the kind of let-tuce that goes with sandwiches" means that a person is "lucky." However, when Spiegel-macher is approached to lecture at the local women's club, he demands substantial loot to appear.

Not all of the 39 filmed episodes of Johnny Jupiter made such a forceful commentary, but in their simple ways they nonetheless spoke many truths about the human condition. Johnny and his friends, through Duckweather, taught valuable lessons about growing up.

Considering the quality and success of Johnny Jupiter, its demise is an anomaly. Rid-ing the crest of excellent reviews and high rat-ings, the filmed version of Johnny Jupiter sur-vided just one season. According to Wright King, Kagan just didn't know how to best pro-duce the series. "They got in over their heads with respect to budgets and the requirements of film production," King recalled, adding that Kagan was a company experienced with marketing and merchandising, not with film production. Money was always an issue, he said.

By March 1954, Kagan had informed the cast and crew that Johnny Jupiter would be coming to a conclusion after one filmed sea-son. Johnny Jupiter stood out and apart from the other juvenile science fiction efforts of the early 1950s. The whimsical series challenged youngsters' imaginations while gently teach-ing values and imparting a little humility along the way.

The title Johnny Jupiter appears against a background of stars and planets. Narration begins as a sequence of scenes featuring key characters from the series shifts across the screen. The narration changes slightly from program to program, but generally recounts Ernest P Duckweather's contact with Jupiter and his relationship with the Jupiterians. The following is representative of the series:

VOICE: This is the story of Ernest P Duckweather, who invented the strangest television in the world. On this set he could look through endless space, 600,000,000 miles away, to far-off planet Jupiter. In a Jupiterian television station he found three friends: Johnny Jupiter, a human, more or less; Major Domo, chief of the robots; and Reject, the fac-tory-rejected robot who was able to appear and disappear at will. Soon Duckweather found that he could turn to the Jupiterians for help whenever he was in trouble...

JOURNEY OF ALLEN STRANGE, THE

An alien space craft arrives on Earth and is witnessed by a local sheriff, one of the aliens mistakenly leaves the ship, and the spaceship leaves without him. The UFO had arrived on Earth to collect energy from the planet surface. After visiting the local school he manages to transfer himself into a young boy. He soon comes across Robbie and Josh who decide that he can stay with them until he can find a way home. They decide to take him to school with them, but decide to keep Allen, as they have decided to call him, a secret for their dad. Robbie is also missing her mother, who is a doctor working in another state, and is separated from her father.

Thomas W. Lynch, the creator of The Journey of Allen Strange, also created the popular Canadian children's SF show THE SECRET WORLD OF ALEX MACK, using the same production company Lynch Entertainment. After a shake premise, the series is actually quite good, bringing in the expenses learnt from Alex Mack, the show is nicely produced with good special effects, which are sparse, because of a low budget. The show attempts to explain the mysterious of life to children, by using the alien character of Allen Strange is a catalyst, for the stories. The acting is off a good standard, particularly from Erin J. Dean, who plays the role of Robbie well, Arjay Smith, however seems to have some difficulty in playing the role of Allen Strange, a case of an unusual premise for him to handle. The stories are mostly of the Earth bound type, such as in 'Entry' in which Allen starts to go to school, but brings in Allens strange powers, such as when he creates a dad from a mannequin he sees in a shop window. The series was first aired in the UK on Satellite station Nickelodeon on 1st June 1998, at 6.30 p.m. and aired daily, seven days a week.

The first and second series of the show were shown on BBC1 early on a Saturday morning in 1999. The second season shown on the BBC was the first showing on UK television for the series.

JOURNEY TO THE CENTER OF THE EARTH

Treat Williams takes on the role of Theodore Lytton, a Professor of Geology and Palenontology, who stumbles upon a whole new world beyond imagination in the bowels of the Earth. Lytton is approached by Alice Hastings to lead an expedition to Auckland, New Zealand, to search for her husband, Casper, who has been missing for seven years. The professor and Hastings are joined by Lytton's nephew Jones, and a mysterious rogue explorer named McNiff on this incredible journey, where they encounter exploding gas, scalding water, vipers, a flock of reptillian birds and a Sauroid, a human-sized dinosaur. The bonds of friendship begin to crumble as each character faces the formidable physical, emotional and life-altering circumstances in the fantastic realm deep in the Earth.

This US mini-series was based on Jules Vernes classic novel Journey to the Centre of the Earth, and comes from Robert Halmi, Jr, who was also responsible for producing a mini-series based on Mody Dick. This was the first remake of Journey to the Centre of the Earth in over 40 years, this epic mini-serie is one of cable's most ambitious projects to date.

"Our mini-series is a great departure from the original novel", admits the actor, "which was a travelogue of going down [to the centre of the Earth] and then coming back up. In ours, there's a place from which to jump off and continue Verne's story."

"I did Deep Rising about three years ago," says Williams, "but there's a new technology with special effects now that I'd never seen before. There's a way in which they can set-up the monitors so if you're supposed to be descending a sheer rock wall, and you're doing it in front of a blue screen, they can actually show you what it's going to look like when it's finished. It always gave us actors much more energy and a sense of, 'This is quite an awesome shot,'".

When Jules Verne's exciting tale Journey to the Center of the Earth comes to mind, I think of dangerous descents, fascinating discoveries, and strange obstacles. But above all, what comes to mind is a classic story that is as clean as it is adventurous. I guess Hallmark Entertainment saw something different. Though they might see a clean, adventurous story, they also seem to see a classic tale to twist and butcher. First, a plot overview of one of Verne's most enduring tales.

Professor Theodore Lytton and his nephew, Jonah, are in dire need of funding for their various scientific expeditions. Their remedy to this obstacle is entering Theodore in illegal prize fights to pay the bills and fund his lectures. However, luck smiles on Theodore and Jonas when a wealthy young woman, Mrs. Alice Hastings, makes them a deal they can't afford not to accept-the scientific expedition of a lifetime, all expenses paid! Naturally, there is a catch-science is only a secondary motive for this journey -- Alice's husband, Casper, disappeared while searching for the center of the Earth, and Alice has hired the Lyttons to find him. Undaunted by the danger they will undoubtedly face, the trio sets out in search of scientific discoveries and Casper Hastings.

As they travel across the globe to the starting point of Casper's expedition, they acquire the services of a guide -- a strange, secretive man named McNiff who seems to know a bit about where they are heading. Soon they are on their way to the center of the planet. Naturally, their descent is fraught with perils... cannibals, strange creatures, natural disasters and the like plague their search for Alice's husband. As they travel deeper and deeper into earth, the dark caverns and tunnels open out into a world not unlike our own -- plants, light, and an ocean greet the intrepid band. Puzzled by their surroundings, they begin to explore among the rocks and blue foliage. As Jonas pokes around, something catches his eye-something moving through the forest. Curious, he chases after it, and is startled to find that it isn't some strange underworld creature, but a beautiful girl.

But as quickly as she appeared, she slips back into the forest. Jonas calls the others over, and they all look for her. So engrossed in their search are they that they don't notice they are being closed in upon until it is too late. Caught off guard, the adventurers are captured by a band of Sauroids, hideous half-man, half-lizard creatures, and are taken to their lair. Sure they are going to be ferociously killed and possibly eaten, the group is pleasantly surprised when a band of warriors chase off the Sauroids, and release the prisoners. The warriors lead Theodore, Jonas, Alice and McNiff to a large, fortified city. Shocked to discover such a civilization under the surface of the earth, they are even more surprised when they are greeted by the villagers in English!

Jonas quickly recognizes the girl he saw in the woods, Ralna, and she leads them through the city, rambling in broken English about some leader and all he had done for their city. The group is told to stop and wait while Ralna goes into one of the huts. A moment later, she emerges with Casper Hastings! Shocked and surprised, the group listens while Casper relates his adventures and tells about what he has accomplished in the village. But he is mysteriously nonchalant on seeing his wife, and seems to be keeping something from Theodore, Jonas, Alice, and McNiff. What the intrepid band discovers next is sure to shock and amaze or not.

One thing I can say about this movie is, that is was very interesting. But I'm afraid that's all the positive news there is. Swearing is minimal, with one strong profanity and one misuse of God's name, as well as a minor swear word. But other problems abound. One of them is the movies' glorification of evolution and other warped theories proudly defended by Theodore. Others with differing opinions are looked upon as dolts. There is quite a bit of violence and some blood, etc. but that isn't surprising for a movie of this genre. What is surprising is the disgusting amount of sensuality. There wasn't a hint of sexual impropriety in the book, but in the movie it runs rampant. Scantly clad villagers, innuendo, adultery and fornication all play big parts in this adaptation.

Theodore and Alice share a kiss before they find Casper, which isn't so terrible -- he's probably dead, right? But they do kiss after they find Casper, which is adulterous behavior. But the thing that really bothers me is that Jonas and Ralna sleep together -- and if that wasn't enough, Jonas is engaged during all this! (Kissing leads to lying down together, then a fadeout shot to the next morning.) The sensuality in this movie is what upset me the most; there were no consequences, everyone just did what they pleased. Sensuality is bad enough, but it's also plain stupid to have it in a movie of this genre! It just doesn't fit. There really isn't anyone to root for--its a matter of deciding who is worse, and rooting for the other guy. Other cons in this movie are terrible acting (I mean really terrible -- it's almost funny) and lousy special effects (another laugh-worthy aspect).

All-in-all, this adaptation was a real let-down; I was thoroughly disgusted and disappointed. It's a movie I can't imagine anyone really liking. In the tradition of A&E's The Lost World and The Time Machine, this journey is better left untaken.

JOURNEY TO THE UNKNOWN

Anthology series which sometimes covers stories about science fiction. But it did touch on science fiction - in Stranger in the Family, a remake of an Out of the Unknown episode; in The Madison Equation, where a jealous husband programmes a computer to kill his errant wife; and in Jane Brown's Body, in which a suicide victim is brought back to life by a new experimental drug.

This 1968 Anglo-American hybrid can only marginally be counted as science fiction - even though it has been lumped into the SF category in America. Produced by Joan Harrison, a former associate of Alfred Hitchcock, it was more a collection of psychological suspense dramas - encompassing devil worship, reincarnation, the supernatural, murder and revenge.

The anthology of 17 stories was made in Britain by Hammer Films and marked that company's first TV venture. It has since notched up two more series-Hammer House of Horror in 1980 and Hammer House of Mystery and Suspense in 1984. However the series' £12m budget (£70,000 an episode) was all-American, the cash coming from ABC-TV and 20th Century Fox. And Journey to the Unknown premiered in America in September 1968, several weeks prior to its British debut. Here, screenings were patchy. London viewers were the first to see episodes, with other ITV regions following in 1969 and 1970, and it's cropped up, too, in late-night schedules in the 1980s.

Journey to the Unknown was a British produced anthology series produced as a co-production between Hammer Films and 20th Century Fox in America. Hammer Films had made a name for itself in the late 1950's and 1960's by reviving the gothic horror film genre featuring Frankenstein and Dracula. These films made stars of Peter Cushing and Christopher Lee. Journey to the Unknown was not Hammer's first try at a television series. In the 1970's Hammer produced a pilot to a series entitled Tales of Frankenstein which never materialised into a series.

Journey to the Unknown was treated rather poorly in terms of scheduling by ITV in the United Kingdom. In the United States however the series had the unusual distinction of getting a prime time run on an American network, during its first (and only) season on the air and doing so during the initial fall TV season.

The unknown referred to in the title was the human mind. Episodes of Journey to the Unknown dealt with normal people in everyday situations that found themselves having to experience something a bit out of the normal. Each episode had one big American star in the lead role, with a strong British supporting.

The series first aired in the US on the 26th September 1968, a couple of months before its UK premier date on LWT. The executive producer for the show was Joan Harrison and Norman Lloyd, executive consultant was Jack Fleischmann and the producer was Anthony Hinds, the theme was created by Harry Robinson. The episode entitled 'Stranger in the Family' was a remake of an old OUT OF THE UNKNOWN episode.

Hammer had tried to launch a TV series on several occasions previously. 1958 had seen an abortive twenty six minute pilot entitled The Face In The Tombstone Mirror for an attempted series called Tales Of Frankenstein. In 1961 Hammer had mooted Safari - an adventure series set in Africa and then around 1967 a series based on the Hammer film Hell Is A City (1959) was also proposed, but these all came to nothing. However, in 1968, Hammer successfully set up a production deal with Twentieth Century Fox Television and the ABC broadcasting network in America.

Working titles for the series included Fright Hour and Tales Of The Unknown. In all seventeen episodes were completed mainly by two separate units of technicians working on alternative episodes at MGM studios at Borehamwood. A third unit of technicians was also created for later episodes. Each episode took roughly two weeks to complete, with production for the entire series running from 24th May until 27th November.

Much of the funding came from America so a heavy emphasis was placed on attracting headlining American actors - Roddy MacDowell, Joseph Cotton and Stephanie Powers amongst them. The programme was premiered on ABC in America on 26th September 1968 with the episode Eve. London Weekend Television bought all seventeen episodes, but did not begin broadcasts until November with airings being extremely patchy. Other ITV regions followed in 1969 and 1970. Various regions were still running the series until the late 80s, but in general Hammer's later TV productions were more fondly remembered and seen due to their initial primetime TV slots.

JOURNEY TO THE WEST

AKA: THE ADVENTURES OF SUPER MONKEY

AKA: SAIYUUKI

Buddhist monk Sanzo Hoshi heads to Tenjiku to bring back a sutra that has powers to bring peace to the world. On the first day of his journey, he comes across Sagojo, on the second day he meets Chohakkai, and on the third day, he encounters Son Goku. With very different personalities, the four constantly quarrel. But through their journey together, they learn to help one another overcome many difficulties.

After days of not eating anything, they finally reach a town, but the place is burned to ashes. Just when they are trying to find out what happened, a beautiful girl in a wedding gown comes their way, followed by a young man, and then the bride's father.

The bride's father turns out to be Sanzo Hoshi's former mentor, Jintan. They are invited to Jintan's temple for dinner. Sanzo Hoshi looks scornfully at Goku and Chohakkai as they feast like pigs, and asks Jintan what happened to the town. He is told that a monster called Gyumao has burned it down to the ground.

In order to stop him from further damage, the town must offer a young girl as a human sacrifice, and Jintan's daughter has been selected. Sanzo is determined to help his mentor. After putting their heads together, they come up with a solution. Sanzo will dress up like the bride and sneak into Gyumao's castle.

Journey to the West is a direct remake of the original Saiyuki or Monkey made in 1978. The first episode of this series was one of the most watched shows in Japanese television history.

Saiyūki is a 2006 Japanese historical TV drama based on the 16th Century Chinese story Journey to the West. It is a successor to the popular 1970's TV show Saiyūki, known outside Japan as Monkey. There have been 3 dramas and one special based on Journey to the West that have aired previously, making this one the fifth adaptation in Japan.

Fuji TV made an unusual decision to air this on 9pm every Monday, a primetime slot usually reserved from romantic dramas, hoping to capture both the young and the old by making this choice. While the series started off with viewership nearly reaching 30%, its rating gradually sank, barely making it at 20% at one point; the last episode finished off with 24.5%.

Rather than producing a second season, Fuji TV and Toho are producing a feature film version of Saiyūki, released in Japan on July 14, 2007.

Fuji Television's most significant decision was to cast Shingo Katori as the show's hero.

Mr Katori is one of five members of SMAP - one of Japan's most popular boy bands. The Japanese heart-throb will be the first actor to play Monkey after Masaaki Sakai more than 25 years ago.

However, Monkey purists may be disappointed by the new version. The opening scene of each old episode that retold the legend of his birth from a stone egg on a mountain has been dropped.

The scene where Monkey achieves immortality by gorging himself on 9,000-year-old peaches will also not be included.

This series is not to be confused with an earlier Journey to the West made for chinese television.

Trivia

Japan was the first country to adapt this enduring story into a TV series, when NTV aired Monkey in 1978; China would not make a live action series until 1986.

Eri Fukatsu actually shaved her head for her role as Sanzohoshi.

Traditionally, the role of the monk has been played by a female in Japanese dramas.

The theme song, "Around the World," is performed by Japanese pop group Monkey Majik, who took their name from the theme song of the original Monkey series, "Monkey Magic," performed by Japanese group Godiego.

Journey to the West is one of the Four Great Classical Novels of Chinese literature. An anonymously written novel, it was written during the Ming Dynasty, in the 1590s.

Buddhist monk Sanzo Hoshi heads to Tenjiku to deliver a sutra that has powers to bring peace to the world. On the first day of her journey, she comes across Sagojo, on the second day she meets Chohakkai, and on the third day, she encounters Son Goku. With very different personalities, the four constantly quarrel. But through their journey together, they learn to help one another overcome many difficulties.

After days of not eating anything, they finally reach a town, but the place is burned to ashes. Just when they are trying to find out what happened, a beautiful girl in a wedding gown comes their way, followed by a young man, and then the bride's father.

The bride's father turns out to be Sanzo Hoshi's former mentor, Jintan. They are invited to Jintan's temple for dinner. Sanzo Hoshi looks scornfully at Goku and Chohakkai as they feast like pigs, and asks Jintan what happened to the town. She is told that a monster called Gyumao has burned it down to the ground.

In order to stop him from further damage, the town must offer a young girl as a human sacrifice, and Jintan's daughter has been selected. Sanzo is determined to help her mentor. After putting their heads together, they come up with a solution. Sanzo will dress up like the bride and sneak into Gyumao's castle.

JOURNEYMAN

The series centers around Dan Vasser, a normal man who, for an unknown reason, begins jumping back in time. He soon learns that these jumps are linked to the life of a certain person, whose destiny he is meant to change, though it doesn't always turn out for the better. While doing so, Dan reconnects with Livia Beale, his ex-fiancée, whom he lost in a mysterious plane crash. Armed with knowledge of the present, he wonders if he can save her, and in turn how it will affect his life.

Dan's "shifts" through time occur seemingly at random, with only a brief flash visible each time that is so subtle that Dan sometimes does not notice. He appears to have no control over them. The destination date can be any date in the recent past, often requiring him to locate a recent newspaper. The location is often in the same city but can be in drastically different parts. When Dan shifts, his body vanishes from the present, along with his current clothing and personal effects. However, time in the present continues to move on in his absence, and possibly at a different rate than his experience while in the past. This creates initial tensions with his family and coworkers, who wonder what has happened to him as he seems to disappear for days. Dan can also encounter himself in the past.

Dan's journeys appear to have an innate purpose, which is not always apparent to him, but involve changing the destiny of certain people he encounters.

Journeyman is an American science fiction television drama created by Kevin Falls for 20th Century Fox Television. Falls also serves as an executive producer alongside Alex Graves, who also directed the pilot.

The pilot episode of the show was made available online on September 5, 2007, and distributed by NBC on a special Fall preview DVD to Blockbuster and other retail rental stores.

The show premiered on Monday September 24, 2007 at 10/9c following Heroes on NBC. The series stars Kevin McKidd as Dan Vasser, a San Francisco reporter who involuntarily travels through time.

Fictional cosmology

Dan's "shifts" through time occur seemingly at random, the only indication he has to an oncoming jump is a feeling in his head which varies from right before he jumps to several seconds of warning. Dan appears to have no control over the shifts. The first jump is typically several decades into the past; through a series of jumps, he jumps nearer to the present, usually years at a time.

The jumps manifest themselves with a small blue flash and a ripple as Dan appears to vanish from the present, and appear instantly in the past. He is missing from the present for a period of time unrelated to the period he spends in the past. His disappearances and reappearances are rarely witnessed by anyone else; it is unclear if this is a factor in his jumps, or merely coincidence. Dan does not arrive in the same location he departed, but instead arrives near the person who he is supposed to help. His jumps are typically restricted to the area he leaves from, usually keeping him in the San Francisco area. Dan is also trying to figure out the mechanics of his travels. He has questioned a physicist who seems to have known his father in the past, and has discussed the possibility of tachyon particles being able to cause time jumps. It is now clear that the scientist is aware of Dan's travels, as well as those of others like him. It has also been discovered that those born around the time of a rare passing comet have this ability.

Dan's journeys appear to each have an innate purpose, which is not always apparent to him, but involves positively changing the destiny of a certain person. Likewise, fate seems to conspire against him if he tries to alter other events beyond his current charge. Alterations Dan makes to the timeline affect the present and the memories of everyone in it. His own memories, however, are unaltered, and he recalls events as they originally occurred before his interference.

Dan is not alone in his ability. His ex-fiancée Livia, thought to have been killed in a plane crash, actually traveled back to her "home time", currently living in 1948 from where she jumps forward in time. Dan meets Livia on his jumps into the past, as she jumps into her future to offer her experience and assistance with Dan's missions.

Cast and characters

Kevin McKidd as Dan Vasser, a reporter for the fictional newspaper the San Francisco Register. Dan is the main protagonist of the series, who finds himself jumping through time, unable to stop or control the jumps. He has a son, Zack, with his wife of 7 years, Katie his brother's ex-girlfriend. Dan was previously engaged to Livia Beale before her disappearance and supposed death in a plane crash. Dan is a recovered gambling addict.

Gretchen Egolf as Katie Vasser, Dan's wife and mother of their son Zack. Until recently, she was the only one in the present who knew about her husband's time-traveling. Katie was the long-time girlfriend of Dan's brother Jack. Since their break-up nine years ago, the two have remained somewhat distant; partly because Katie ended up getting pregnant by Dan and they married soon after. Before marrying Dan, Katie was a television reporter. In response to cutbacks at the Register, and Dan's traveling, Katie returns to television to ensure a stable income for the family.

Moon Bloodgood as Olivia Beale (often shortened to Livia), Dan's ex-fiancée who was presumed dead after a plane crash nearly ten years before the start of the series. It is revealed that she is actually a traveler from 1948 who jumps into the future. After not being able to jump home, she was stuck in Dan's present and adapted to life there, where she began a legal career and fell in love with Dan, only to finally jump back home while on the plane. In the series' final episode, she and Dan speculated that Dan was the target of her extended jump, and that her mission was to get Dan and Katie together (which happened because of her supposed death). She now jumps to the same times that Dan visits, and offers him advice and assistance in his missions.

Reed Diamond as Jack Vasser, Dan's brother. Jack, a police detective, is dating Dr. Theresa Sanchez (Lisa Sheridan), but also has feelings for Katie (his ex). Jack forms a number of misconceptions about Dan's disappearances and apparent irresponsibility, refusing to believe his brother when Dan tries to explain the time traveling. Believing Dan has perhaps returned to his gambling vice, Jack uses his police resources to investigate Dan's life. Jack is finally convinced of Dan's time traveling when Livia meets with Jack to enlist his help in getting Dan out of a desperate situation.

Brian Howe as Hugh Skillen, editor-in-chief of the San Francisco Register and Dan's boss and friend.

Charles Henry Wyson as Zack Vasser, Dan's son, who has seen Dan disappear, believing it to be magic.

Production

Episodes of the show were made available online,[1] and NBC distributed the pilot on a fall-preview DVD at Blockbuster and other retail video-rental stores.[citation needed]

Australia's Channel Ten and Canada's Global network acquired broadcast rights to the series.

Some Journeyman supporters initiated an attempt to revive production of the series by sending boxes of the "Rice a Roni", a product with San Francisco connotations, to NBC, echoing the "Nuts" campaign which led to a second season of the CBS series Jericho. Journeyman creator Kevin Falls has acknowledged the campaign in his blog, saying "Your fight to save Journeyman has humbled and moved us. I'm certainly not going to tell you to stop now." However, Falls has also said that there are long odds against a revival, stating "Journeyman will likely not be getting a back nine order."

The show premiered on September 24, 2007, airing Mondays at 10 p.m. Eastern Standard Time. The initial order from the network was for 13 episodes, all of which were produced prior to the 2007 Writers Guild of America strike by screenwriters. However, the series suffered from low ratings, and NBC allowed its option for a full season order to lapse by the December 11, 2007 deadline for renewal. According to trade reports, such an action effectively means the series has been cancelled. The final episode of Journeyman aired on Wednesday, December 19, 2007.

JULES VERNE'S 20,000 LEAGUES UNDER THE SEA

Professor Annrak discovers what he believes to be a creature underwater which has been destroying ships, others believe that an underwater craft is to blame. Professor Annrax goes on a journey to discover what is causing the ship wrecks. Three of a crew of a ship, one including Professor Annrax are thrown overboard in an attack by the underwater vessel. They are rescued by the Nautilus controlled by Captain Nemo, who has rejected the outside world, and won't allow the professor and his friends to return to the mainland because of the fear that they will tell the world of his plans.

Bryan Brown is also famous for starring in THE WANDERER and being the host for the anthology show TWISTED TALES. There was also a second mini-series based on Jules Verne's novel, which was also made in 1997. The show has its first premier in the UK on the Sci-Fi Channel in 1998 and later in 1998 it was shown on BBC1.

1997 was either a good year or a bad year for Jules Verne enthusiasts. It saw the release of two versions of 20,000 Leagues Under the Sea - a TV movie and this 3 hour mini-series. This is the one with the more star power, but both were flawed.

The year is 1886, and ships are being attacked throughout the oceans. Assistant Professor Pierre Arronax (Patrick Dempsey) has the theory that the attacker is a giant narwhale. His father (John Bach - who ironically played Nemo in a television series based on Verne's Mysterious Island), which blames Pierre for the death of his mother in childbirth, scoffs at his theories.

Pierre is hired by the Cunard line to assist in an expedition on the warship Abraham Lincoln to pursue the monster. During the attack on the monster Pierre realizes that his theories are wrong and the monster is manmade. However, he is thrown overboard with two of his crewmates, Ned Land (Bryan Brown) and Cabe Attucks (Adewale Akinnuoye-Agbaje), a newly freed slave. The Abraham Lincoln is crippled in the attack and limps back to port and the three men find themselves aboard the attacking ship.

The ship is the submarine Nautilus and commanded by the mysterious Captain Nemo (Michael Caine). However, Admiral McCutcheon (Peter McCauley) of the Abraham Lincoln swears revenge on the mysterious craft that crippled his ship and eventually enlists the elder Arronax. Meanwhile our stowaways are exposed to the wonders of the deep and the technologically advanced Nautilus. Pierre even discovers that Nemo is hiding his daughter (Mia Sara, token love interest for Pierre) aboard, but what is Nemo's ultimate use of the Nautilus?

Michael Caine as Nemo

Okay, this is not the ultimate Jules Verne adaptation, and is stretched to a mini-series length. Unfortunately, to do the stretching they added a lot of clichés. Both of the 20K adaptations felt the need to add female characters (Nemo's daughter and a girl pearl diver stowaway love interest for Cabe in this one, and Arronax has a daughter in the other). This version also adds the Cabe character - in an effort to attract African American viewers perhaps? There is also the addition of the father and son dynamic between the Arronaxes and the surrogate father that Pierre finds in Nemo. The eventual Darth Vader resemblance between Nemo and Pierre is...well if you're gonna steal, steal from the best.

The effects are also a mixed bag. Some look great, I particularly like the model work done for the Nautilus, but I think that it is too big and technologically advanced for what Verne describes. I also liked the set for Nemo's library. A lot of the deep sea diving scenes involving the stars are shot dry for wet with CGI added water bubbles. During those scenes the diving helmets look extremely plastic. The acting should be better considering the stars, but it is a mixed bag.

Caine was doing an odd speech pattern and am not sure what he was trying to accomplish. I hate to say it but it reminded me of the time he did the Steven Segal movie. I didn't exactly hate his Nemo, but wish for more of the James Mason style.

Fans of the novel will be greatly offended by this version and the screenwriter's tinkering (perhaps especially with the Ned Land character). This version does have the Nautilus trapped in the arctic - which most adaptations don't cover. However, to a degree if you turn off your brain and just go along with it, the mini does have some entertainment value.

20,000 Leagues Under the Sea is presented in fullscreen as it was originally shown on television. Special features are nonexistent. I'm sure that maybe some promotional material was produced to promote it for the network showing and it's a shame that none of that could've found its way onto the DVD.

Patrick Dempsey as Pierre Arronax

However, I should note that the version I bought did come with a free ticket to see the new remake of the Poseidon Adventure (it drops the Adventure, we'll have to wait and see if the movie follows that pattern though I doubt it, looks action packed). Some online retailers list the version with the ticket as a limited edition (and charge $5 or so dollars more for it!) but the only difference between the discs is the ticket. The store that I picked up my copy at only had copies with tickets enclosed since it was a promotional in their weekly flyer.

Verne fans should keep repeating to themselves it's only a television miniseries and might find some entertainment value. The true adaptation of 20,000 Leagues Under the Sea is yet to be made (I still prefer the Disney version) but this might make a rental for the curious.

20,000 Leagues Under the Sea is now available at Amazon. As of yet, there is not a release date for the UK. Visit the DVD's database for more information.

WANDERER, THE

TWIST IN THE TALE (aka TALES OF THE UNEXPECTED)

JULIA JEKYLL AND HARRIET HYDE

One day, Julia Jekyll takes a potion which she made and discovers that she turns into a strange creature which everybody calls Harriet Hyde.

Julia Jekyll is the star pupil at the eccentric Rocket Academy, a school run by a 1960s hippie throwback, Memphis Rocket, and his 76-year-old mother. Julia is good at everything, much to the disgust of the school bullies, a pair of extortionists named Sharon and Nicola Blister. One day - in the science class taken by the Blisters' uncle, Lester Blister - the evil sisters doctor a potion that Julia is concocting, with the result that, upon drinking the draught, she is transformed into the monstrous Harriet Hyde: a huge, hairy, menacing-looking but mostly harmless beast. No one knows that Julia and Harriet are the same person and Julia has her hands full in keeping this a secret - a task made especially difficult by the fact that she alters from one state to another without warning.

A noisy, energetic but somewhat vacuous children's offering that was low on charm and high on the piercing-scream count. However, it probably held some appeal for its target audience of very small children.

The series was first shown on BBC1.

Note. Principal writer Jim Eldridge went on to create another children's fantasy series, Monster TV (BBC1, 15 episodes, 10 December 1999-31 March 2000, and 11 further episodes, 8 January-19 March 2001). More of a light-drama than a comedy, storylines centred around a young lad who runs a small TV station with the aid of some friendly monsters. Juliet Jekyll And Harriet Hyde creator Jeremy Swan designed the monsters and John Asquith played one of them.

JUPITER MOON

Set in the middle of the 21st century. Jupiter Moon had three main groups of characters who often crossed paths. The first were the students of Christopher Columbus College, a small, 48 student college which was part of the University of Space. Columbus College was located on the Ilea, a space ship whose normal position was in orbit around Jupiter's moon Callisto. Callisto was the home of Space City, the largest settlement in the Jupiter System with a population of 1000. The other main group of characters consisted of the ship's crew. While the last were members of the Daedalus 10 mission. The Daedalus 10 was to be mankind's first starship. It was being built under the supervision of Professor Charles Brelan in the Jupiter system where raw materials were abundant.

Like all good soap operas Jupiter Moon always had more than one storyline going on at the same time. Although many of these had something to do with the various romances on board the Ilea, there was almost always one going on of a more adventure / science fiction nature. One of Jupiter Moon's first storylines concerned a space storm that swept through the Jupiter system taking the Ilea with it. Although damaged the ship did make it back to Callisto where it was revealed that the Ilea was the only fusion powered ship left functioning in the Jupiter system. This fact caused the Ilea to get called into service quite frequently to perform missions a typical college spaceship would not have to. These included such things as rescuing a damaged spaceship, chasing after space pirates and a mining operation to an asteroid some 50 million km away.

This space-age soap opera has the dubious distinction of being the only sci-fi series to have been killed off by a real space war! Launched in 1990 as one of the fresh new shows commissioned by satellite channel British Satellite Broadcasting, Jupiter Moon beamed down to a handful of 'squarials' for 15 episodes before falling victim to the satellite rivalry between BSB and Rupert Murdoch's Sky.

When the two organisations merged into BSkyB, Jupiter Moon became permanently lost in space. It remained a real curio - a series seen by few and forgotten by most of those, until it found a new home on the Sci-Fi Channel with its UK launch on 1 November 1995. Jupiter Moon was created by veteran soap producer William Smethurst and was quickly dubbed 'Crossroads in space', after one of his previous series.

The series was created and produced by William Smethurst, a former long standing editor of British Radio Soap The Archers, and was recorded at the studios of Central Television in Birmingham.

Actors included Lucy Benjamin, Anna Chancellor, Jason Durr and Fay Masterson.

Often described as teen angst in outer space. Jupiter Moon was the first soap opera set in outer space. Jupiter Moon was one of the few original programmes to be broadcast on Britain's ill-fated BSB TV service. BSB was a direct broadcast satellite service which required the viewer to purchase a very small satellite dish nicknamed the squarial. The series normally was broadcast three times a week on Monday, Wednesday and Friday, with an omnibus edition of the week's three episodes being broadcast on the weekend. BSB however was one of two competing direct to the home satellite systems the other being Sky TV which had started before BSB. Both services were losing money at a rapid rate and it soon became apparent that only one of the services would survive. Instead of waiting until one of the two was forced to fold, in late 1990 BSB and Sky merged to form BSkyB. Due to contractual problems however, BSkyB was unable to show any additional episodes of Jupiter Moon, despite the fact that 42 completed episodes remained unbroadcast. These episodes were finally seen in the United Kingdom when the Sci-Fi Channel ran them in early 1996.

This early cancellation must have come as a surprise to the production company, since the final episode which was made ends on a cliff-hanger. A cliff-hanger which would have been resolved in the programme's second year. NOTE: All episodes are untitled. Episodes were broadcast three days a week on Monday, Wednesday and Friday. On the weekend an omnibus edition comprised of the week's three episodes was broadcast. The producer for the series was William Smethurst, the series was originally shown on Satellite channel Galaxy.

On the series' original run on BSB only episode 1.1 to 1.108 were shown, the remaining episodes were unbroadcast until the Sci-Fi Channel in the UK showed them.

Trivia

The standard unit of currency in the show was the ECU (pronounced "eck-you"). The ECU was an internal accounting unit for the European Community until it was superseded by the Euro, an actual currency, in 2002.

The space station Ilea was named after the then-recently-abolished Inner London Education Authority.

The soap was screened on GBC TV (Gibraltar television) ahead of its premiere on BSB's own Galaxy channel. The soap was seen in the British colony every Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday at 730pm, having substituted Eastenders which had become too expensive for GBC TV.

The character Phillipe Gervais was named after associate producer Jane Fallon's partner Ricky Gervais.

William Smethurst is the creator and producer of TV series Jupiter Moon, a space opera set in the mid-21st century. Launched in 1990 by BSB, the show ran for 150 (30-minute) episodes. After the merger of BSB with Sky, Jupiter Moon was repeated on the Sci-Fi Channel in 1995. Here, Smethurst talks about the programme's origins.

Jupiter Moon was sold to British Satellite Broadcasting on the strength of one sentence: "The loves, passions, and courage of the students and crew of a space polytechnic as it ventures through the universe in search of scientific discoveries."

I called it Voyage Of The Ilea. John Gau of BSB asked why the ship was called the Ilea. I said that in a dark dream I had imagined Ken Livingstone as a senior statesman, naming the first European space polytechnic in honour of the Inner London Education Authority, so brutally killed by Mrs Thatcher.

John Gau said that, well anyway, he loved the programme idea. 150 episodes, budget £6m. Dr Bob Parkinson of British Aerospace designed the spaceship using the very latest European Space Agency/NASA projections, and it was built in the Central Television studio in Birmingham that had until recently been occupied by Crossroads. 'Beam me up, Benny' a Daily Star headline had once said, reporting that Benny was an alien. Now it had come to pass - a spaceship landing on the motel.

From the start, we were tenacious about scientific accuracy. We were looking for the science of the future, the future as it might well actually be for humankind in the far reaches of the Solar system in 2050.

Our spaceship was the only accurately scaled prototype of a spaceship interior in the world. NASA had a design on paper, but ours was the only reality. The camera crew pleaded with Bob Parkinson to change the dimensions, particularly in the corridors, but concessions to the television-maker's art were few and grudging.

In early days, we only allowed the Ilea to voyage between the Jovian moons on those dates that would be feasible according to the movements of the planets and their moons. The script team were given an Orrery for 2050, provided by Bob Parkinson, and told to work to it. We rapidly found, however, that this was restrictive, and that very few viewers would catch us out if the Ilea journeyed between Io and Pasiphae on a date when the orbit of the moons made such a journey unlikely.

Dr Doug Bertram of Birmingham University's Department of Space became our script advisor. His speciality was the study of diffuse x-ray emission from tenuous but hot plasma, particularly as seen between galaxies in the Perseus Cluster. Whenever the spaceship Ilea strayed dangerously close to tenuous plasma, viewers could be confident that every fact was accurate. A script revision of episode 127 carries Doug's terse note:

"Victoria's papers. It was HII plasma not H2. Obviously it sounds the same, but if she gives a seminar on this then the display must get it right."

No viewer was ever given the opportunity to mock: 'Oh no, they've confused HII plasma with H2 plasma! What idiots!' But it wasn't always easy to maintain the integrity of our vision of the future world, not making three episodes a week. If somebody in Coronation Street wants a slice of toast the prop-buyer gets a toaster from Argos. But where does the Jupiter Moon prop-buyer go to get a toaster circa 2050?

A horrible moment came when I saw the tapes shot of a scene in the Stardust Café, Callisto. A character was pretending to film singer/bargirl Melody, whilst secretly filming a gang of South American space-wanderers suspected of illegally strip-mining the moon Leda. There, right in mid-screen, the camera being used for this secret recording was a very large, very obvious, 1988 analogue camcorder. Why, why, why? The prop buyer said nobody had told him what a 2050 camera would look like. The director said that if the camera didn't look like a camera, then viewers wouldn't know what was going on.

After talking to Doug, I decided that it only looked like a 1988 camcorder: in truth it was a tiny 2050 digital imager encased in a protective sheath to guard against the 200,000 rads from electrons and 50,000 rads from protons that bombard all sensitive equipment in Jupiter System.

Sir Michael Drury of Birmingham University's Department of General Practice provided a medical scenario and told us, interestingly, that shingles and depression might well be common woes in space 2050. IBM offered to build the ship's computer, but pulled out because we wouldn't agree that it would not crash if attacked by space monsters. What would people wear in 2050? The future was Katherine Hamnett and John Paul Gaultier, we decided, buying up entire collections.

The special effects were shot in Prague, where the Ilea model was 10 feet long, and the Galilean moons hung on wires against black drapes. The Prague Symphony Orchestra recorded the superb music score by Alan Parker. The Czech special effects team had no conception of a system that made and transmitted 90 minutes of TV drama every week. When special effects were not ready on time, they calmly suggested that we postpone filming. They were also having a revolution. As the Ilea sailed through space at Barrandov studios, students filled the centre of Prague, raising the Czech flag over the statue of King Wenceslas. Communism fell while the Ilea battled in space with the pirate ship Santa Maria.

We wanted stories that were realistic, humorous, and based on character. Part of the BSB remit was that we should encourage and develop new writing and acting talent, and we looked for writers who had fresh, distinctive voices. They did not, for the most part, come from a science fiction background, although Ben Aaronovitch, one of the very best Doctor Who writers, came in with some superb storylines and scripts. He plotted our most popular story; the murder trap embedded in the Achilles files of the Michelangelo Expedition, and invented Ruby Kumara of Red-Spot Radio, the station that's better than bedtime.

Some of the writers had worked on Radio 4's The Archers. They were daunted by the lack of countryside. While the sci-fi team wrote stories about space battles and dangerous missions to volcanic moons, they wrote a gentle story about a hamster, and another one about a donkey sanctuary.

There were other links with The Archers. Both programmes were made in Birmingham, and keen viewers noted that in a parallel universe old space-lag 'Pegleg' Johnson was actually Ambridge farmer Mike Tucker, the space doctor was Pat Archer, college bursar Rebecca was Elizabeth Archer, and Petra, super-computer of the Solar system, was Susan Horrobin from the council houses.

The series sold for £2m to Germany, and we cast a German actor to play a young space-criminal, but when the actor came to Birmingham he didn't think much of it and, like the Czech technicians, he didn't understand the concept of making three programmes a week: working in the studio for six days, and learning next week's lines on day seven. When he did understand he flew straight back to Munich. A promising, keen young actor, Jason Durr, was called up from London. He had to learn his lines, manage without rehearsal, have his hair crew-cut and dyed yellow, and perform the next day. To add to his problems we forgot to book him into a hotel.

Most of the cast were young, inexperienced, and amazed to find themselves sometimes earning over £1,000 a week. Anna Chancellor, now seen in prestigious dramas like Four Weddings And A Funeral and Tipping The Velvet auditioned with a terrible cold and high temperature, and had got home and was about to crawl into bed when the phone rang - would she come back immediately and audition again. Back she came, across London in the rush hour, to give a brilliant performance as cool, lovely Mercedes Page, space navigator extraordinaire.

Faye Masterson, now starring in US sci-fi films having been cast in a major role by Mel Gibson, was only 16 when she came to Birmingham to play new Ilea student Gabrielle. Other Ilea students have made a name in the profession: Lucy Benjamin (who said the first line of episode one, and almost the last line of episode 150) in EastEnders, Nick Moran starring in Lock Stock And Two Smoking Barrels. Nick played a student called Zadoc. Providing names for characters was always tricky - what will be the in-names of 2050? Phillipe Gervaise was named after Ricky Gervaise, boyfriend of the associate producer. We thought we'd blow a little of the stardust of fame over him.

Jean-Francois gets Daniel to promise to look after Melody when he's gone.

Mercedes apologies to Rosie, who accepts that Cats is a womaniser. Mercedes intends to go to take the Valencia to Moonstation, and go to the French Academy instead.

Jean-Francois proposes to Melody, who accepts.

Space Raiders attack Victoria - it transpires they are Daniel and his friends looking for Melody.

James decides he will go on the D10 Mission.

Space City requests assistance from the ILEA guiding the SS Valencia into harbour (their scanner's on the blink). Whilst Tim is hacking into the computer, the Valencia alert Finbow to interference. 1 - 6 EPISODE SIX

Petra has crashed, and comms are severed with the Valencia. Eliot believes it's a scanner malfunction caused by the electrical storms, but Finbow thinks a strange phenomenon from another part of the Galaxy came bounding across the sky and sort of gobbled them up! It could be taking the ILEA with it. A rumour goes around the ILEA that it's a space serpent. Victoria's instincts tell her it's something very ominous.

Tim's worried that the trouble's been caused by him having hacked into Petra to Moscow West!

Cats takes the Centaur for a "look-round", but refused Mercedes' offer to accompany him. Almost immediately, comms with him are lost.

1 - 7 EPISODE SEVEN

Cats can't be traced. Distressed Rosie

Tim's also distressed - Rosie gave him a choc bar in last episode.

Eliot's dismissive when Fiona/Finbow notice something/someone in the airlock. A bloke emerges, having been stuck in the Airlock for 36 hours, after travelling up in the Centaur. He's wearing the spacesuit of Paul Fitzroy Drummond, but the ILEA was expecting the arrival of a computer mechanic, ALex Hartmann. After being unconscious, he awakes, making a grab for Mercedes.

Finbow thinks they're being carried into deep space; Eliot says they're still over Callisto. Are Aliens tapping into the computer?

Wr Helen Leadbeater

Dir Gareth Tucker

1 - 8 EPISODE EIGHT

It transpires that Mercedes knows Paul Fitzroy Drummond, and that the bloke who emerged from the airlock certainly isn't him. He is in fact, Alex Hartmann, who's stolen a spacesuit and bummed his way from Mars.

Herlinde tries to break the news to Finbow that she's not interested in him, but she fails to get the message across, and Finbow is left with quite the wrong impression.

Herlinde complains to Piers about having to share with Anna Begani.

Mercedes commiserates with Rosie over lost Cats, and tells her that Cats really belonged to her.

Finbow and Chantal persuade Eliot to set course for Ganymede. The ignition backfires.

Wr Helen Leadbeater

1 - 9 EPISODE NINE

Eliot thinks there is a fault in the power circuits, but Finbow believes something electronic is eating it's way through the magnetic shield. No? No-one takes him seriously, and Alex refuses to give any assistance. Jean-Francois collects a sample of the murk outside. Alex diagnoses the fault - the cable to the lower deck rockets was damaged when the storm hit, and that's why the back-up system won't work. Someone's got to go outside the ship - it's highly radioactive!

Herlinde gets Sara to give Finbow the brush-off on her behalf, but Melody sends a card to Finbow, with a message of "Je t'aime toujours" and signed "H". Finbow interprets this as encouragement from Herlinde.

Wr Margaret Phelanm

Dir Gareth Tucker

1 - 10 EPISODE TEN

Eliot still believes they're over Callisto and merely being subjected to an electrical storm. Finbow, however, believes something is attacking the magnetic field. The analysed sample reveals that the murk is volcanic, but not from the Jupiter system. It is vital that the rocket computer on the outside of the ship is mended so that the Ilea can break free to safety. Finbow can't be exposed to anymore radiation so Eliot asks Alex to carry out the repairs. Alex refuses to go.

Tim's still on a self imposed fast, and volunteers to go out himself.

At the Winter Ball, Herlinde is forced to tell Finbow exactly where he stands with her ie nowhere. Melody's prank is discovered by Sara and Herlinde. Finbow prepares for his Kamikaze repair mission, but a mystery spaceman beats him to the airlock.

1 - 11 EPISODE ELEVEN

James tries but fails to mend the rocket computer. Eliot bribes Alex to take new unit out. Mercedes helps and the repair is successful.

Eliot and Finbow prepare to blast back to Ganymede.

First attempt to fire rockets is disrupted by lightning. Damage not too bad so they re-start firing sequence.

The Ilea is hit again but this time it's serious. The store module has become detached and Petra has to jettison the girls' accommodation to restore the ship's balance.

The girls scrape through the doors but Melody trips and is only just saved by Alex.

1 - 13 EPISODE THIRTEEN

The Ilea is still locked in the 'storm'. The girls' accommodation is somewhat cramped and tempers are getting fraught - but no-one wants to share with poor Anna Begani.

Chantal sends a charge across the comms antennae as an experiment. Eliot is furious, but she has uncovered some useful information that there is a link between the firing of the rockets and the lightning outside the ship.

Melody overhears a conversation between James and Finbow - there's only a month's supply of oxygen left. She is paralysed with fear, but then reacts by barricading herself into the Dome.

Wr Helen Leadbeater

1 - 14 EPISODE FOURTEEN

Melody has locked herself in the Dome and is still refusing to come out. Chivalrous Jean-Francois inches his way up the emergency lift shaft to rescue her. James makes Melody promise not to tell the other students - even Jean-Francois - how low the supply of oxygen is.

Tim is forced to own up to stealing vitachocs by Rosie and Piers, who suspect that Alex is the real culprit.

Rosie insists that Herlinde goes back to sharing a room with Anna Begani.

Alex appeals to Mercedes to help him steal the command module and escape from the Ilea - will Mercedes decide to take the coward's way out and abandon ship?

1 - 15 EPISODE FIFTEEN

Alex and Mercedes plot to leave on the command module. Daniel follows Alex round the ship, trying to locate the missing food supplies.

Herlinde and Mercedes are concerned at Melody's strange behaviour, unaware that she knows about the faulty CO2 extractor.

Alex can't believe his luck when James asks him and Mercedes to go out to the command module to fetch the oxygen cylinders. But Alex's escape plans are thwarted - they return reporting that the water tanks are empty!

After much toiling at the computer, Chantal finally discovers where they are and how to get home.

Wr Robert Smith

1 - 16 EPISODE SIXTEEN

Chantal has come up with a theory - that the ship is enveloped by a mass of ice, rock, metal and hydrogen, and is actually in an eccentric orbit within the Jupiter system. In 16 hours they will pass Ganymede and be drawn close by its gravitational field. They must fire the rockets at an exact moment to shoot the ship out of the murk, and at the same time fire the electron gun to send a beam to lower the build-up of negatively-charged electrons, thus countering the plasma's lightning.

Chantal presents Eliot with her theory, but he refuses to comply. Finbow takes command of the ship, but Chantal's attempt at the exercise fails. The Finbow points out that Chantal has miscalculated her timings - they still have 21 hours before they pass Ganymede! But the real problem is that Petra has packed up. Can Tim operate it manually?

Wr Julian Spilsbury

Dir Kay Patrick

1 - 17 EPISODE SEVENTEEN

Rosie tries to make Tim override Petra's failure to fire the electron gun, but he suspects a frame-up - that he's being tricked into confessing previous computer crimes - and so deliberately fails. Fiona attempts the same thing and knows Timmy can penetrate the codes faster than she can.

Daniel overhears Eliot's drunken revelation about the faulty CO2 extractor and then Herlinde learns about it. She marvels at Melody being so calm - in view of the fact that she's known about the imminent crisis for some time now.

Timmy is brought to Comcen again and this time he succeeds in penetrating Petra's codes.

Eliot is both maudlin and sarcastic at being thrown off his Bridge.

Petra goes haywire. Tim and Fiona are left alone to fire the gun but it's the final straw when the ventilators cut out!

1 - 18 EPISODE EIGHTEEN

The ventiation system is restored, but Victoria has developed acute appendicitis!

The lifts are out of order, which means that Chantal and James are cut off from the bridge, and Rosie and Eliot are stuck in the lift.

Meanwhile, Timmy and Fiona are stranded alone on the bridge, as the minutes to the moment for firing the gun and igniting the rockets tick by.

Eventually Tim partly manages to unscramble Petra, enough to open the doors so that Chantal can get to the bridge. Mercedes climbs up the maintenance shaft to get to the bridge - but there is someone in a spacesuit ahead of her!

Chantal fires the gun just in time and the space suited figure - Finbow - arrives just in time to fire the rockets.

Wr Diane Souhami

1 - 19 EPISODE NINETEEN

The Ilea moves off through the black cloud, but to where - no-one knows!

Victoria is deteriorating rapidly and without the use of Medicom, there is little Piers can do.

Eliot and Rosie emerge from the lift, having been trapped in it for 9 hours - together!

Eliot is bitter at being ousted from the bridge and refuses to re-take command of the ship. The responsibility is still down to Finbow.

Finbow and Mercedes are asleep on the bridge as Petra flashes lights and tries to tell them something. As Piers makes the first incision into Victoria's appendix. The ship clears the storm. Chantal and James wake up and kiss one another as Jupiter ascends into the sky.

1 - 20 EPISODE TWENTY

The Ilea comes through the cloud. They should be home in four days.

Piers completes his operation on Victoria but its success remains to be seen. Victoria is still unconscious and seems to worsen, perhaps she's even dying. Medicom is still not operational.

Eliot resumes command of the ship and places Finbow under arrest. Herlinde tries to thank Finbow for his bravery and is appalled to learn that he might hang for his "mutiny". Rosie tries to reason with Eliot and is shocked by the hurt he reveals.

Melody and Herlinde organise a Valentine's party - somewhat to Rosie's surprise.

The Ilea tries to contact Space City, but gets no reply.

1 - 21 EPISODE TWENTY-ONE

Rosie comes onto the bridge as Petra continues to transmit the mayday signal. Eliot tells her that it is no good. In Space City control room, Pegleg Johnson comes in and wakes Tom, the sleeping duty officer. He contacts the Ilea to the joy of everyone on the bridge. Eliot transmits their position, and Rosie asks about Commander Kitebrook. Cats surprises Rosie by replying to the question himself. He wishes her a happy valentines day. Eliot tells the ship that they have made contact with Callisto. Everybody celebrates. Alex tells Mercedes that things will be better from now on, but she looks unconvinced. Cats tells Eliot that the comet did cause some damage to Space City, but they are fine, to Pegleg's disbelief. Eliot tells them that they will need a working CO2 extractor within the next fortyeight hours.

Pegleg tells Cats that a Centaur cannot reach the Ilea in time. They wonder if they will be able to mate a shuttle with a tanker booster for extra thrust. Eliot tells James that Cats should reach them in forty hours. James leaves for some breakfast, and Rosie asks Eliot if he is alright after his all night watch. She offers to ask Finbow if he'll take over, but Eliot refuses. She leaves to organise the valentine's day party. In the common room, preparations for the party are underway. Chantal joins James who leaves, embarrassed. Herlinde asks Alex if he is coming to the party. She gives him a paper heart. Alex decorates his heart with a substance that he stole from one of the labs. He presents it to Mercedes, telling her the the substance is silicate from Mars. He invites her to join him there in a business partnership. He says that they will be good together and he wants her to go with him.

Tom oversees Cats launch from Space City. Melody is worried about Timmy, who his feeling very depressed now that he can no longer be a hero. Jean-Francois suggests that Timmy's crisis of confidence could be cured if they give him a medal. Rosie tells Eliot that he will harm himself, as he has now been on constant watch for over twentyfour hours. She tries again to convince him to let her ask Finbow for help. They are interrupted by a call from Cats, who tells them that he is on his way. In a corridor, Mercedes tells Alex that she has her own career to think of, and she thinks he could find someone better than her. Melody interrupts them, telling them they are planning a surprise for Timmy. Mercedes, keen to get away from Alex, offers some chocolate and takes Melody to her cabin.

James joins Chantal in a physics lab, and apologises for his earlier rudeness. He feels that it would not be right to get involved with anyone, considering his future plans. She tells him they were merely celebrating and that he doesn't have to feel guilty about kissing her. She asks for a valentines kiss which develops into a lingering embrace. They are interrupted by Petra paging James and Mercedes to Comcen. Eliot tells James and Mercedes that he admired them for pitching in on the bridge during the crisis, and he offers them a few watches under more normal circumstances. James asks about Finbow, and Mercedes tells Eliot that they will help out only if Eliot gives Finbow his job back. Eliot refuses and, as they leave, threatens to order them. He tells them that Kitebrook will be able to relieve him tomorrow anyway. Mercedes is stunned, she thought Cats was dead.

Rosie informs everyone at the party that with the CO2 build up, they will have to be very careful. There is no more beer on the ship, but she wants them to have a good time. Jean-Francois announces that without Timmy's skill and bravey, none of them would have survived. He presents Timmy with a box of five vitachocs. Herlinde is furious, there had been ten. Melody asks her not to mention it as he will be upset to find out that someone stole his present. James enters the common room and parts from Mercedes with a kiss. He joins Chantal at her table. Alex asks Mercedes why James was kissing her. He tells her that he doesn't like it. Jean-Francois announces a game to pair up the singles amongst them. As the Ilea heads homeward, the newly restored comms link is busy with people eager for contact with their families. Rosie tries to get in touch with Victoria's father aboard the Helium 3 plant. In Medicom, Sara tells a recovering Victoria that even on Earth they had heard the Ilea was missing, and wonders if Victoria's father has been trying to get through. Victoria says Piers will try to contact him again later. Rosie enters, looking for Piers. Petra gives a dozing Eliot an update on the shuttle's expected arrival. He settles back to sleep again. Piers joins Victoria and Sara in Medicom. Victoria asks him if her father has called yet, but Piers expects that the lines are still busy.

Alex runs into Mercedes but she tries to put him off. She wonders why nothing she says can get through to him. He tells her that she needs someone who is not in awe of her. In the Dome, Piers tells Rosie that the storm hit the Helium 3 plant at a critical moment. There were no survivors. She wonders how Victoria will take the news that her father is dead. In the common room, Herlinde tells Sara that Daniel overheard the message about the Helium 3 plant. They wonder what Victoria will do now. Anna suggests she return to her mother, but Sara says that all she cared about was her father. Piers breaks the news to Victoria.

Petra tries to inform a sleeping Eliot that there may be bombardment with space debris. He mumbles in his sleep. Rosie tells the girls that Victoria may have been expecting the worst. The ship is rocked by a collision and Rosie rushes out. Eliot is woken and orders manual steering. Mercedes enters and discovers that there has been some minor damage. She asks Eliot why he didn't see it coming. Melody tells Jean-Francois that she doesn't want him to leave. He is torn between staying or returning to Earth, but doesn't know what he can do on Callisto. She wonders if he can get a job on the Ilea. Eliot shares the Cranfield song with an approaching Cats, unaware that he has left shipside communications on, to the amusement of the rest of the ship. As Cats prepares to dock, Mercedes gets ready. Rosie rushes to meet him at the entyport, where he is greeted by an appreciative group of girls. He gives a flower to Herlinde, but virtually ignores Rosie and Mercedes.

Over a drink in Comcen, Cats tells Eliot that he was glad to get out of Space City. He explains that they lost their Comcen when the dome was hit by a meteor, killing seven men. Five men went down with the Helium 3 plant on the Copernicus, and the Valencia was severely damaged and won't be going anywhere in a long while. He tells Eliot to make the most of the voyage home, and asks about Finbow. Cats joins Rosie in the common room. She asks him if Finbow can be courtmartialled, as he saved all their lives. Cats says he would probably have done what Finbow did. In the club, Mercedes introduces Cats to a drunken, jealous Alex. He drops hints about the command module, and leaves. Mercedes denies that she knows what he's talking about. Sara tells Melody that Herlinde has a crush on Kitebrook. Melody tells them that Jean-Francois is thinking of becoming a miner on Ganymede. Cats is called to Comcen. He kisses Mercedes and tells her that he will be back.

Anna tells Herlinde she wouldn't have made it without her. Herlinde says she wants to hit the Stardust Cafe when they get back. Anna says she will go to the hospital with Victoria. Herlinde invites Anna to join them. Eliot tells Cats that no one has offered to help him, and asks him to take a watch as he is exhausted. Cats grudgingly agrees and, after Eliot leaves, contacts Mercedes to wish her goodnight. Piers joins an upset Victoria who tells him that she was horrible to her father when she last spoke to him. She wishes she could tell him she loves him, but breaks down in tears as she can't even give him a burial. Eliot is in the club, having a nightcap when Jean-Francois and a group of students arrive. They tell him that they feel Finbow has been punished enough. Eliot tells them that he is the Captain of the ship, and will not take advice from students. A Court of Inquiry, not he, will decide Finbow's fate.

Anna sends a message to her family. She tells them about the death of Victoria's father, but that things are now getting back to normal. Daniel reminds Jean-Francois that he is still 'owed' Melody after their card game. He tells him he is attracted to Melody and thinks he is in with a chance. He wants her, and feels that there is no point in pretending anymore. Cats talks to Eliot about Finbow on Rosie's behalf. He warns him that a Captain's scalp is worth more than a First Officers, and asks him to drop the charges. Eliot tells Cats that everything is in the log, and plays back Finbow's entry, made when he forcibly took command. A resigned Cats agrees that Finbow is for the chop. The girls exercise in the Dome, but are interrupted by Eliot. He tells them that there will be a service of thanksgiving. Sara asks him why he won't let Finbow off, but Eliot tells them that it is all on record. He cannot wipe it, as Herlinde suggests, as there is a protected copy in Petra. He doesn't even believe that Fiona, or even Timmy could hack into it...

Timmy tells the girls that he cannot do it, as he is worried that he will get into trouble again. They lay down the challenge. Unable to resist he asks Fiona for back-up. Timmy and Fiona sneak onto the bridge while Eliot 'sleeps' on the duty bunk. They take his command autosec and start to hack into Petra. Eliot observes them out of the corner of his eye, but does nothing. In the Dome, Piers asks Finbow about his plans. James says he will speak to Professor Brelan for him. They are interrupted by an alarm. As Timmy works his way through the systems, Finbow surprises them and initiates a full security alert. He tells Eliot that they were hacking into the security codes. Eliot shakes his head in resignation. In the girl's cabin, Fiona and Timmy tell them that Finbow's security alert will have copied the log a dozen times in different codes. A surprised Timmy says that Eliot merely sent Finbow off the bridge, and told them to forget all about it.

An exasperated Eliot tells Rosie that Finbow has ruined his own chances, and doubts that even God could delete the evidence now. Daniel suggests to Jean-Francois that he let him take Melody out for one night. If his charm doesn't work on her, he will consider the bet forgotten. In the common room, Daniel tells Melody that Jean-Francois will not be going to Space City with them tomorrow. He warns her that Jean-Francois is in a funny mood. Sara and Herlinde wonder about Daniel's motives. Melody discovers Jean-Francois in the Dome, and asks if he is avoiding her. He tells her about the bet with Daniel. Eliot tells Cats that Finbow will be piloting the Ilea into Space Harbour one last time. Cats advises Eliot to let things take their course, as he will be laying himself wide open to charges of incompetence and indecision if he tries to help. Finbow is going down anyway, so why should he take Eliot with him?

Melody forgives a sorrowful Jean-Francois. Petra announces the approach to Space Harbour, and they watch Callisto slide by. Daniel runs into Melody and suggests that they go to dinner. She tells him that that she doesn't fancy him, and that she would have to be a moron to leave Jean-Francois for him. She tells him that if she hears of Daniel upsetting Jean-Francois ever again, he will answer to her. After she leaves, Daniel makes a move on Herlinde. Victoria wakes up, delirious, and asks Piers if her father has called yet. In Comcen, a restless Finbow contacts Space City to announce he is commencing the approach run. In the common room, Eliot is holding the service of thanksgiving, which is relayed around the ship. They sing the hymn 'For Those in Peril on the Sea', whilst Piers watches over the sleeping Victoria. A subdued Finbow listens in from Comcen, as the Ilea makes its final approach to Space Harbour.

Harriet tells her that they should all meet together that afternoon. Brelan inspects the accomodation available. JUSPION

AKA: MEGABEAST SPECIAL INVESTIGATION JUSPION

AKA: KYIJUU TOKUSOU JASUPION

Raised in the wild in the company of giant beasts, the orphan Juspion (Kurosaki) must travel to Earth to save it from the evil Satangorse, who intends to use alien beasts to rule the Galaxy. Arriving on Earth in the transforming mother ship Dileon, Juspion discovers that the planet is already threatened by Satangorse's son Mad Galan. With his faithful assistant Androis Anri, Juspion dons his Metaltech suit and prepares to save the world, in yet another entry in the Metal series, coming after SHIDER in the series chronology.

Less successful than earlier robot detective shows that began with GAVAN, Juspion was criticised for poor special effects. Nevertheless, the producers had high hopes for it and even included an English theme song in an attempt to win foreign attention. Juspion was not old abroad but the next show in the Metal series, SPEILBAN, did make it to America - see VR TROOPERS. Music is by Hirohaki Watanabe. Produced by Susumu Yoshikawa, Itasu Orita, Yuki Usui.

Characters and mecha

Juspion

Juspion = 'justice champion.' A wild child brought up by Ejin after losing his parents during a space journey. Can put on a silver Metaltech Suit in 0.03 seconds by sparking energy between his palms. Armed with the Plasma Blazer Sword with which he performs the Cosmic Harlee technique and Beam Scanner Gun. (Originally was going to pose as Earth stuntman Kenjou Yutaka.)

Ironwolf

Juspion's silver motorcycle, a 'Super Planet Machine' built by Suzuki.

Garbin

Juspion's silver tank, which splits into the Garbin Tank with twin drills and the Garbin Jet.

Daileon

Juspion's silver flying fortress and greatest weapon. Normally in self-explanatory Super Planet Battle Mothership mode, it can transform into a 60-meter-tall 'Battle Giant' robot in 5.8 seconds and defeat Megabeasts with the Cosmic Crash technique's double punches.

Anri

A female android built by Ejin to serve as Juspion's assistant.

Boomerang

After his older brother, an Interpol investigator, was killed by Satangorth's forces, this medical student vowed revenge and became a 'Federal Nations sheriff' [sic], fighting Satangorth with his twin boomerangs. Real name unknown.

Mieya

A creature from the jungles of Beezee who saved Juspion from a carnivorous plant. Lost his mother during a battle with Satangorth's forces. Joins the crew of the Daileon. (No, Ferbus in Masked Rider wasn't the only useless cute creature in tokusatsu; the Japanese too have made this mistake.)

Ejin

The descendant of prophets who defended the Galaxy Bible for tens of millennia. Raised Juspion, the survivor of a space shipwreck and set him off to defeat Satangorth.

The Nambara Family (15-)

Receiving a revelation from God, cameraman Nambara Ken'ichirou, his daughter Kanoko and his son Kenta became closely linked with Juspion when Ken'ichirou took a photo of the Golden Bird. Kanoko, along with four other children, Daisaku, Hiroshi, Mika, and Kumiko, were chosen by God to give birth (!) to the Golden Bird from their palms.

The Golden Bird

Guardian god of the galaxy. A manifestation of the energies of righteousness. (Or a very unconvincing matte painting or bluescreened toy bird.) Became the gigantic golden sword with which Juspion, piloting the Daileon, defeated Satangorth with a giant-scale Cosmic Harlee.

Tarzan of the Galaxy

The baby referred to in a prophecy in the Galaxy Bible. Landed on Earth, sleeping in a life-preserving capsule, as the sole survivor of a spaceship attacked by pirates. Juspion saw himself in the baby and named it the 'Tarzan of the Galaxy.'

The Megabeast Empire

Satangorth

A giant bat-winged creature normally enveloped in black armor. The Great Demon God of Darkness referred to in the Galaxy Bible. A super lifeform born from negative energy spewed out from a black hole. Defeated by the Golden Bird, the avatar of righteousness.

Madgalant

Satangorth's son, a Metal Villain wearing a suit of black armor. (Cf. Hellvira of Spielban, Topgunder/Darkheart of Metalder/VRT, or Black Beet in Beetle Fighter.) Capable of fighting Juspion with his sword or with his black VTOL six-legged insectoid walker/plane, the Juldbooma, reminiscent of the Beetle Fighter mecha ten years later. Can take human form.

The Aliens

Mercenaries (?) of various unnamed species who assist Madgalant. Reminiscent of the aliens in Blue SWAT.

Gilza (29-35)

Alien witch who brought Madgalant back to life when he was killed by Juspion.

Gilmarza (39-)

Gilza's elder sister. A witch known as the 'Spectre Queen of the Dark Galaxy.'

The Four Deva Kings

Hirelings of Madgalant.

Zampa (13-18)

Top bodyguard in the galaxy.

Ikki (13-15)

Android who once threatened Juspion's parents.

Guillaui (Gyooru; 13-44)

Female spy and master of disguise.

Brima (13-44)

Prophet with a crystal ball.

The Five Space Ninjas

Wear suits of black armor differing only in the color of their forehead plates. Each is named after the element he represents.

Ka (Fire; red; 39-43)

Sui (Water; blue; 39, 40)

Moku (Wood; green; 39-42)

Dou (Earth; long vowel irregular; white; 39)

Fuu (Wind; yellow; 39-43)

Other Madgalant hirelings of lesser note include the Amazones (10), the Gazami Brothers (25, 26), and the Cutey Girls (Cutey Ace, Cutey Heart, Cutey Queen; 27) who can merge into the Three-Faced Beast Warrior.

Megabeasts

Giant monsters of either Earth or alien origin, averaging 60 meters in height.

The average rating for Juspion was 11.8%, 0.7% less than Shaider, the lowest rated of the Space Sheriffs. Clearly, the Metal Hero- kaijuu mix wasn't working out (despite the excuses of producer Yoshikawa, who blames video games). The next entry in the Metal Hero series eliminated the kaijuu and introduced an entirely new element to bring in higher

JYUU KOU B-FIGHTER

AKA: B-FIGHTERS

AKA: JUUKOU BII FAITAA

AKA: HEAVYSHELL B-FIGHTER

AKA: BEETLE FIGHTER

The insects of the world all swarm in response to an unknown menace. To investigate this, Kai Takuya of the Earth Academia journeys into the jungle and meets the insect elder Guru in a cave. Guru tells him that invaders from another dimension are coming to take over the Earth, and that the insects are fighting to protect it. Takuya says humans will fight too. The evil army Jamahl arrives in the Jamahl fortress. Their leader Gaohm sends his generals and soldiers to Earth to start enslaving mankind.

Katagiri Daisaku and Hayama Rei save a girl from Jamar soldiers, but are captured. Meanwhile, at the Earth Academia, Professor Mukai and Takuya are working on 3 prototype armor suits to help combat Jamahl. Guru appears there and sends 3 insects into the armor to infuse them with life. The armors shrink and enter the 3 Bee Commanders, and Guru tells them to select 3 warriors to fight Gaohm. One chooses Takuya, transforming him into Blue Beet when he opens the Bee Commander and cries "Juukou!", and the others fly off to Daisaku and Rei. They change into G.Stag and Reddle, and when Blue Beet arrives the 3 of them fight off the Jamahl forces.

With their new-found power, the Beetle Fighters fight to drive back Jamahl's forces. Using their versatile Input Magnums and their powerful Stinger Weapons, they force the Jamahl troops to retreat. Jamahl, however, is too strong to be beaten so easily, and continues to set into motion plans for its world conquest. Its 3 generals Gigaro, commander of the synthetic beast army; Jera, commander of the paid soldier army; and Schwartz, commander of the combat mecha army, send monster after monster after the Beetle Fighters, but all of them are destroyed. Even Gaohm is apparently killed by Blue Beet, but returns soon after in a stronger form. The Beetle Fighters also meet their share of comrades against Gaohm, including: Larla, a scientist from the Aroa dimension who falls in love with Takuya; Sinbad, the sole survivor of his own dimension whose plans to assassinate Gaohm are tragically cut short; Kaori, a ghost called forth by one of Jera' soldiers who breaks free of his control and helps fight against him; and Kabuto, the son of Guru who brings with him the legendary Beet Ingram, paving the way for Blue Beet's evolution into the more powerful Super Blue Beet.

In a daring plan, Gaohm commands the evil insect sorcerer Jagul to create an evil B-Fighter. Jagul sends a long-horned beetle to bite Takuya and take a sample of his cells. From the beetle and Takuya's cells, Jagul creates the enigmatic Shadow, who has the power to transform into the evil B-Fighter, Black Beet, by raising his Black Commander and shouting "Jakou!". Black Beet proves to be one of the Beetle Fighters' deadliest enemies, and they are even more shocked when it is revealed that Shadow is a clone of Takuya. Because of this, Shadow cannot coexist with Takuya, and when one is hurt the other also feels pain. Shadow desperately begins searching for a way to stay alive.

Rei leaves the team to go to the South American branch of the Earth Academia. At the same time, a shipment of new weapons, the Pulsabers, is being sent to the team but it is shot down by Jamahl aircraft. They are found by Takatori Mai, who takes them to the Earth Academia and is chosen by the insect power in Rei's Bee Commander to be the new Reddle. With their new weapons and a new mecha, the giant Mega Heracles, the Beetle Fighters are complete once more.

The mysterious alien known as Muscle arrives on Earth with a shining feather that belongs to the legendary creature known as Saint Papilia. Saint Papilia is a "butterfly of life" who restores life to dead planets and can grant the gift of immortality. Muscle was healed once by Saint Papilia and has followed the clues about her to Earth. Muscle is killed, though, and Black Beet gains possession of the feather. He realizes that Saint Papilia can give him the life he craves, and begins to search for a way to achieve his goal.

But Gaohm has seen these events and he also wants to gain the gift of eternal life. He plans to destroy all life on earth so that Saint Papilia will come to revive it, and then to capture her and take his gift of immortality. Gaohm's ultimate plan is the Jamahl Hole, a rift in space that will suck the life-giving atmosphere from the earth. To complete this device, Gaohm begins gathering as much energy as he can. Preparing for the final battle, Gigaro powers himself up into Final Gigaro and attacks the Beetle Fighters, but is killed by his own master Gaohm, who needs his life-energy to speed up the Jamahl Hole's completion. Schwartz also launches a series of attacks but his body is destroyed and his head is sent into eternal orbit around the Earth. Jera, seeing Gaohm's treachery against Gigaro, defects from Jamahl and joins with Black Beet in the search for Saint Papilia. Gaohm uses the warrior Hydra to capture Guru and force him to call the insects to lend their energy to the Jamahl Hole, completing it.

Jera sneaks into Gaohm's private chamber and sees his true form, and is killed for her knowledge, but not before telling the Beetle Fighters of the secret room. The Beetle Fighters begin their final attack on the Jamahl Fortress and break their way into Gaohm's secret chamber. Here they see Gaohm's true form -- a small embryonic creature in a liquid-filled glass tank, born from a space warp and now wanting immortality. The Beetle Fighters eventually destroy the Jamahl Fortress and Gaohm is killed when it crashes to Earth.

The Jamahl Hole is still active, however, and it is up to G. Stag and Reddle in the Mega Heracles to stop it. Meanwhile, Blue Beet and Black Beet prepare for their own final battle. In the duel, Blue Beet is badly wounded but counterattacks and kills Black Beet, who disintegrates into a pile of black ash. But Blue Beet also dies from his wounds, and is found by Daisaku and Mai, returning from destroying the Jamahl Hole. Saint Papilia appears overhead and bathes Takuya in a rainbow-coloured light, bringing him back to life, saying that the world needs him. Peace has returned to the world at last...or has it?

Kabuto calls the Beetle Fighters, along with the previous "metal heroes" Blue SWAT and Janperson, to put on a show for the children at a carnival. But their plans are cut short when Jagul, who has survived, begins kidnapping young women and resurrects several defeated monsters to battle the heroes. Sara (of Blue SWAT) and Mai are taken captive by Jagul, who plans to drain their and the other women's life energy to revive the ultimate evil. Mai and Sara escape, but not before Jagul has gained some of the evil power she was after, changing into a new form with the heads of various Blue SWAT, Janperson, and Beetle Fighter enemies on her. She traps the metal heroes in a pocket dimension but Blue Beet manages to escape and finds Jagul's weak point. Blue Beet kills her and the heroes give a spectacular show for the children at the carnival.

A perfectly unremarkable in the style of the metal series stories such as SHIDER, based on an original concept from Super Sentai ideas man Suburo Yade, music by Koji Kawamura. Theme: Shinichi Ishihara - "Juke Beetle Fighter" (Armored Beetle Fighter)

Equipment:

The Beetle Fighters change from human to their armoured forms using the Bee Commanders, handheld devices that look like the top view of a beetle. They have different horns at the top of the Commander depending on which Fighter's one it is. Upon shouting the command, "Juukou!" (Heavy shell), the Bee Commanders' "wings" open to reveal their insect armor, miniaturised, inside. The armor then attaches itself to each fighter.

All of the Beetle Fighters have a set of basic weapons. The most often used is a gun known as the Input Magnum. It has a 10- key numeric pad on the side, and by keying in different combinations of 3 numbers the gun can fire a variety of different projectiles. (not all of these were used on the show)

In episode #22, each of the Beetle Fighters gets a short sword with a gold blade called the Pulsaber. With this each fighter can execute the PulSlash, a diagonal slash with the Pulsaber. The Pulsaber can also attach to the top of the Input Magnum to form the Saber Magnum, which can fire a more powerful beam of energy, the Maxim Beam. (also input # 110)

Blue Beet:

The leader of the Beetle Fighters is Blue Beet. His Insect Armor is modeled after a kabutomushi ("helmet beetle"), and has one large horn on its forehead.. His Stinger Weapon is the Stinger Blade, a triangular swordlike weapon. When the turbine inside the Stinger Blade spins, the blade revolves and gains extra power, allowing him to perform the deadly Beele Break, a diagonal slash trailing blue energy behind it. In episode #21, Blue Beet receives an augmented Stinger Weapon, the Stinger Drill, a large drill that attaches to his wrist. The front and back halves of the drill rotate in opposite directions, and his attack with it is the Strike Blast, a charging stab that bores a hole through his enemies.

Blue Beet receives an additional weapon in episode #35, a red and white semi-automatic-like double-barreled gun called the Beet Ingram. The Beet Ingram is a legendary gun that is said can only be used by a great hero. The top of the Beet Ingram can fold forward and over the barrels so that they are covered by a single barrel with two pincerlike armatures protruding from it.

The Beet Ingram in this mode can be combined with Blue Beet's Pulsaber by attaching the Pulsaber to the top, to create the Beet Ingram Final Mode. In episode #36, Blue Beet also evolves to be able to become Super Blue Beet, with four metallic insectoid wings extending from his back and Plasma Dischargers, looking like exhaust pipes, growing from his wrists and ankles. He transforms to Super Blue Beet with the command "Metarufooze!" (Metal-Phoze), and in this mode he can employ the full power of the Beet Ingram. Energy is collected in his wings and is then transferred to the Beet Ingram Final Mode, releasing a powerful blast of energy, the Super Final Blow.

Blue Beet's Beet Machine is the Beetluder, which looks like a kabutomushi on 6 wheels. From the two tips of its horn it can fire bolts of blue energy (the Beet Blazer), and it can attach the Magne Attachment concealed within G. Stag's Stagger Tank onto its horn also. With the magnet in place, the Beetluder can fire a powerful attractive magnetic beam, the Beetractor.

Blue Beet's human identity is Kai Takuya (23 years old), an insect researcher at the Earth Academia. The evil sorcerer Jagul uses a kamikirimushi (long-horned beetle) to take a sample of Takuya's cells, and uses it to create a clone of hm. This clone is known as Shadow, and can become the evil Black Beet (see below)

G. Stag:

The most physically powerful of the Beetle Fighters is G. Stag, whose armor is modeled after a kuwagata-mushi, or stag beetle, and has two horns on its head. G. Stag is strong enough to lift the Jamar soldiers and toss them around like rag dolls. His Stinger Weapon is the Stinger Claw, a large yellow pincerlike claw that he can use to crush enemies or grab them and throw them aside. When the turbine inside it spins, the entire claw spins to give it added crushing power. G. Stag also can lift enemies captured in the claw above his head and when the turbine activates, they spin around in his grip and he throws them to the ground. His deadly attack with the claw is the Raging Slash, a horizontal slice trailing green energy behind it. The claw can also detach and be thrown like a projectile, the Stinger Boomerang.

G. Stag's Beet Machine is the Stagger Tank, which looks like a stag beetle on treads. It has a double-barreled cannon on top (the Stag Buster) which fires bolts of green energy. By using the Stagger Scissors technique, the Stagger Tank grabs Jamar soldiers or planes in its pincers and the top of the tank spins around, tossing them off into a cliff or rock face. The Stagger Tank can use the Drill Attachment concealed in the Beetluder, a two-drill weapon that can be held in the Stagger Tank's jaws and be used to burrow underground.

G. Stag's human form is Katagiri Daisaku (23 years old), an impetuous but nature-loving man who is a tree doctor and claims to be able to hear trees and plants when they are dying. He was afraid of the water but overcomes his fear to save his father Katagiri Daitetsu, a fisherman, from a trap laid by the gouseijuu Ebigaanya, in episode #26.

Reddle:

The only female Beetle Fighter is Reddle, modeled after a female kabutomushi. Her armor has two small horns on its head. Reddle is the fastest and most nimble of the Beetle Fighter. Reddle's Stinger Weapon is the Stinger Plasmar, an array of four red beam emitters that fire powerful beams of red ion energy. She can use this energy to capture her enemies in energy ropes and drag them across the ground or throw them through the air. If the internal turbine is activated the array spins at high speed and Reddle can utilize the Tornado Spark, firing her beams in a wide circular pattern.

Reddle's Beet Machine is the Red Gyro, which looks something like a ladybug with jet engines on its sides. Its primary weapon is the Red Pulsar, a blast from the two cannons located on its front. By directing its engines downward, the Red Gyro can use the Gyro Typhoon to create strong winds to blow enemies around or to put out fires. The back of the Red Gyro can open like a beetle's wings to reveal booster engines for added speed. From its underside the Red Gyro can lower the Wire Hand, a claw on a wire that can be used to pick up objects and carry them. It can also pick up the Magne Attachment and use it to attract and carry metallic objects.

The first Reddle was Hayama Rei (22 years old), an animal instructor at an aquarium. In episode #22, however, she leaves the team to go to the South American branch of the Earth Academia, to do research and help with protecting the animals there. She is soon replaced by Takatori Mai (19 years old), a young and cheerful girl who is "chosen" by the Pulsabers as the next Reddle.

Mega Heracles:

The largest insect mecha is the black and yellow Mega Heracles, a giant mechanical Hercules Beetle with jointed legs, which first appeared in episode #24. The Mega Heracles can run on autopilot, although it requires the Pulsabers to be set into it first, and its horn is a gigantic cannon known as the Mega Cannon. The horn is actually a minijet, the Jet Heracles, and can separate and attack on its own with someone piloting it, while the remaining Land Heracles fights on its own.

The back of the Mega Heracles opens up to reveal a landing pad where the 3 other Beet Machines can land and be locked in place by docking clamps, in the Mega Beet Formation. By combining all of the insect power, the Mega Heracles can use the full power of its cannon, the Mega Beet Cannon, the most powerful weapon at the Beetle Fighters' disposal.

Other characters:

The homebase leader of the Beetle Fighters is Professor Mukai Kenzou, an old man dedicated to the pursuit of justice. He fell in love with Sayuri, a plant researcher, many years ago, but left her. She returns to help him defeat the gouseijuu Razuberuga in episode #38.

Guru is an elder of the insect tribe, and looks like a big brown kabutomushi beetle with a yellow mustache and beard. He carries a staff with a curled top and was the one who gave the Beetle Fighters their powers. Guru possesses great mystical power of his own.

Kabuto is the son of Guru. He is a white robotic-looking humanoid who left his father 100 years ago and has been traveling across the dimensions as a supplier of weaponry and equipment. He returns to earth in episode #35, to visit the grave of his mother, bringing with him a legendary gun that can only be wielded by a great hero. Blue Beet is that hero, and the gun is the Beet Ingram.

Saint Papilia is a legendary "butterfly of life" who can grant immortality. She is a humanoid with butterfly wings and white armor, and appears when the life on a world has been destroyed. She then revives the world by giving it new life. Saint Papilia already appeared once on Earth, after the Ice Age, and revived the Earth so the life of today could be born. Both Gaohm and Black Beet sought Saint Papilia in the hopes of obtaining the gift of eternal life. After Blue Beet's duel with Black Beet in episode #51, Takuya is severely wounded and, although he has beaten Shadow, dies also. Saint Papilia appears above him and resurrects him, saying that the world needs him.

Enemies:

The enemies of the Beetle Fighters were the evil army Jamahl, who came from another dimension to take over the earth.

The highest leader of Jamahl was the mysterious Gaohm, who first appeared as a tall figure with a white and purple robe and chitinous face. He was supposedly killed in episode #18, but returned soon after in a new, stronger form. The new Gaohm was only a gigantic torso floating in space, with an exposed purple heart, only one arm (the right one) and wires running here and there on his body. In the end, however, it was revealed that even this was not actually Gaohm's true form -- he was actually a small embryonic alien creature in a tank of liquid. He was born from a space warp and wandered in space until he gained enough power to become Jamahl's commander, and sought the legendary life-giver Saint Papilia to give him eternal life. He was killed in episode #50, however, when the Beetle Fighters destroyed the Jamahl fortress and it crashed to earth and exploded.

Gaohm could send his warriors to the "Gaohm Zone", another dimension in which they had added power. Several times, when a battle was going badly, Gaohm grabbed both his warrior and the Beetle Fighters in a giant hand and set them down in a Gaohm Zone designed for that warrior. Each Zone was a blank place with a few ornaments in the ceiling or walls that reflected the warrior there. For example, Hammerkong's zone had giant nails stuck in the floor, and Gari-rat's had large pieces of cheese and stylized rat faces. When the monster was destroyed, the Gaohm Zone vanished and the Beetle Fighters were returned to our dimension.

There were 3 'generals' in Jamahl, each commanding an army of different types of monsters:

Gigaro was a creature composed of various animal parts. He had white scallop shell plating, a crustacean-shell covered left hand and right leg, and the top of his head resembled a whale's mouth. He also wore a cape and green armor. Gigaro commanded the Gouseijuu gundan (synthetic beast army), composed of humanoid monsters with the characteristics of animals. Gigaro was originally a skeletal creature on a desert planet in the Garo dimension, hunted for unknown reasons by humanoids. Exhausted and near death, Gaohm gave him a new powerful body and recruited him into Jamahl. Gigaro used a white bonelike sword and his head could open to reveal a gun. He could also fire spiderweb-like threads from his head, the Giga Thread. In episode #46, Gigaro imbued himself with life energy to power-up into Final Gigaro, a red and white version of himself with more power. He was ultimately killed by his master Gaohm who needed his life energy to hasten completion of the Jamahl Hole.

Jera was a female warrior who wore a red robe and had a white mannequinlike facemask and a red beret. She used a whip that she could charge with energy as a weapon. Jera commanded the youhei gundan (paid soldier army), composed of mercenary warriors from various dimensions. In battle, Jera discarded her robe to reveal a leotardlike red and pink costume.

She turned against Gaohm when she learned of his killing of Gigaro, and joined forces with Black Beet against Gaohm. She discovered Gaohm's true form and was fatally wounded for it, but before she died she was found by the Beetle Fighters and her mask was removed. Jera was revealed to actually be a Caucasian woman with blond hair.

Schwartz was actually a computer virus given a living body. He wore a white lab coat and his body was robotic. He had black glasses and tubelike hair, and commanded the sentou meka gundan (combat mecha army), composed of robots designed for battle. Schwartz could fire electrical bolts from his hands and created many powerful weapons for use against his enemies. He had an older brother named Macho Number 5 who was actually created by Schwartz himself. In episode #41, Macho joined forces with Schwartz literally -- Schwartz was enclosed within Macho's hulking body after an injury during the initial battle with the Beetle Fighters damaged him. Blue Beet killed Macho with the Super Final Blow, but before exploding he pulled Schwartz out of him and threw him aside to safety. Schwartz later changed into a tanklike mode in episode #47 but was apparently destroyed by the Mega Beet Cannon.

However, his head survived and, joining with mannequins in the city, captured several people in an attempt to fatally squeeze out their fat to use for lubrication for his machine "friends". Schwartz himself had been damaged in the explosion and had gone mad. He even tried to put Jera into his fat-extracting chamber, but she was saved by Black Beet. When the Beetle Fighters found him, Schwartz joined with a bulldozer and, later, a giant stone statue, but was finally destroyed by the Mega Beet Cannon. Or was he? Schwartz's head survived again, but was blasted into the earth's orbit, where he will remain, alive but bodiless, for eternity.

The Jamar were faceless soldiers that served Gaohm and were employed in menial tasks. They were yellow and brown with yellow ridged featureless faces, and used swords in battle that could convert to machine guns. In episode #50, the elite Jamar who guarded Gaohm were shown. These were red versions of the normal Jamar and were able to continue fighting even after their heads had been severed, shooting energy beams from their decapitated heads.

The Jamahl fortress was a flying behemoth that looked like an outstretched hand. It had an opening where the palm would be, where the Jamahl fighter jets emerged from and where Jamahl's new super-weapons were located.

The evil insect sorcerer Jagul used the power of a kamikirimushi (long-horned beetle) and a cell sample from Kai Takuya to create Black Beet, an evil B-Fighter. Black Beet had items analogous to the Beetle Fighters': to transform, he used his Black Commander and cried "Jakou!" (Evil Shell). He had a gun known as the Ja ming Magnum and his Stinger Weapon was the Stinger Byoot ("byuuto" is the sound effect of something like a whip whizzing through the air), which had two forms. In Wire Mode it was a claw on a long wire, that could be used to grab long-distance things or to strangle people. In Saber mode, the wire retracted and hardened into a long thin blade with the claw on the end, and could be used much like a sword.

Black Beet's human form was Shadow, a man always dressed in black with a black coat and black hat that hid his face. In episode #43, it was revealed that Black Beet was a clone of Takuya, and looked exactly like him. Because he was a clone, he could not survive on his own and sought Saint Papilia's gift of eternal life. He was killed in episode #51 in a duel with Blue Beet, blasted by the Super Final Blow, and disintegrated into a pile of black ash.

Monsters:

(Japanese name is first, then translated name in parentheses, followed by an indication of which army they belong to:

GSJ - Gigaro's synthetic beast (gouseijuu) army

YH - Jera's paid soldier (youhei) army

SM - Schwartz's combat mecha (sentou meka) army

Then the episode number and title are given, followed by a translation of the title and then a description of the monster. Also: some of the monsters' names just don't sound right translated, so in those cases the Japanese names are used in the description. Hope this doesn't cause too much confusion.

This is not a complete title list or episode guide. This is only a description of the monsters in the show, and since some episodes didn't feature a monster, they are not included here. (But for those of you who want a full episode list, I have appended Cory's older episode list at the end. - AT)

Saiberaiza (Saberiza) - YH

1. "Konchuu Senshi da!" (Insect Warriors!)

Saberiza was a swordsman who wore silver chest and shoulder armor plates, black pants, and red gloves. The right half of his head was covered by a metallic plate and his nose and mouth were covered by a black scarf. He carried a large sword that he used as a weapon, and was the first of Jamahl's monsters that the Beetle Fighters battled against.

Hebizuneeeku (Snakez'nake) - GSJ

2. "Odoru Ningen Gari!" (The Dancing Human Hunt!)

Heizuneeeku looked like a humanoid body with a long snake draped over the head area so that the head and tail became his arms. His body was green with diamond-shaped markings and his chest area was red with white veinlike marks on it. His right arm was the head of the large snake and his left arm was its tail, and both sides were long enough to be used like whips or to strangle his enemies. In battle with the Beetle Fighters, the snake was destroyed to reveal a second head and arms underneath. The second head was a red snake's head and the arms were green humanoid arms. He could fire beams from the eyes of his second head.

Hanmakongu (Hammer Kong) - SM

3. "Deta!! Konchuu Meka" (They Appeared!! The Insect Mecha)

Hammer Kong was a silver and gold robot with giant hammers on his hands and a head in the shape of a hammer head with the striking surface being his face. He could pound his hammer hands on the ground to create explosive shockwaves (Hammer Crush), or toss them like giant boomerangs (Hammer Boomerang). He could also fire an energy beam from his one eye (Kong Beam) and spit giant nails to pin his enemies to the wall (Kugi Attaku - Nail Attack). He was killed by Reddle's Tornado Spark.

Desuranchaa (Death Launcher) - SM

4. "Chou Mashin Oo Abare" (Super Machine Great Riot)

Death Launcher was a green robot with missile launchers on his shoulders and gun batteries on his wrists, which were his major weapons. His body was covered in green armor plating and his head looked something like a green gas mask with yellow oval eyes. He was killed by the Beetle Break.

 Baguma Birusu (Bagma Virus) - GSJ

5. "Juukou Jakku!!" (Heavysell-Jack)

Bagma Virus was a light blue creature with a segmented body. His arms were pink and ended in two claws, and he had two shorter arms sprouting from his waist. He had a large head with a row of giant teeth running across it, and two feathery antennae. There were also white spikes on his head, and two orange circles on his chest. She used a sword as a weapon, and could change into a whirlwind, attacking rapidly with her sword while spinning, and could become invisible. The Black Dragon could fire a jet of flame, explosive bullets, a fireball, and an energy beam from its mouth. Eventually, however, the armor turned on Barla and possessed her, turning her face into a grotesque dragonlike image and using her as a puppet to attack Jera. Barla finally broke free of its control and stabbed it -- and herself, with a dagger. Near death but free of the Dragon and still a warrior, Barla challenged Blue Beet to a duel and was killed.

Stag sliced the pouch open to restore everyone's motivation, leaving them free to finish him off.

Ilba turned the sword upside down and faced the eye at his enemy, the hilt writhed back and forth, and an illusion was created. He could also fire energy beams from the sword. However, if the eye was destroyed Ilba was virtually powerless. Ilba was sent to kill Mina, the last survivor of the Botania Dimension that Jamahl had destroyed. Her father sent her to our dimension with the seeds of the Botania tribe, and erased her memory, accompanied by the robot Guardy to act as her mother. After Ilba was destroyed, Mina returned to her dimension with the seeds, to build it anew.

After this, Jera retrieved his body and the three generals decided to turn him into a combination of all 3 of their armies. The rebuilt Death Mult had red and silver armor and had aspects of all 3 generals' types of monsters. He kept the armor and faceplate of the original Death Mult except it was now red; his arms and legs were like a layered shell, he had a segmented scorpion's tail, two folding wings on his back, and spiky red feathers covering his head; on his right shoulder was a red and silver cannon with a barrel like a bird's head, and on his left was a similar one with a barrel like a dragon's head. He could fire rings of energy from the bird's head cannon and explosive bullets from the dragon's head one.

He used a sword and could fire explosive gas from pipes on his arms. He could also fly with his wings and shoot a beam of energy that he could use to capture his enemies with like a rope. Death Mult was just about to finish off the Beetle Fighters when the 3 generals started arguing about what method he should use to deliver the final blow. Jera wanted him to use his sword, Gigaro wanted him to use his tail stinger, and Schwartz wanted him to use a machine gun in his body. Overwhelmed by conflicting orders, Death Mult was distracted long enough for the Beetle Fighters to counterattack and kill him.

However, after Mai gave him a scolding for following Jera just for the money, Gorgodal decided to quit and tried to return the money he had been paid. But Gohm didn't accept this and damaged Gorgodal's brain so that he would become a raging monster. Mai tried to talk to him again, but he could barely remember her name. Gorgodal eventually had to be destroyed, but was given a burial and his grave was marked with his shuriken weapon.

Dangar's mission was to kill the escapee Lala (Raara), who had been forced to help build the Death Gohm, a powerful cannon that could destroy all of Japan with one blast, but had run away. Lala was actually a scientist from the Aroa dimension and although she fell in love with Takuya, she returned home after Dangar and the Death Gohm were destroyed.

He had two white eyestalks that ended in black eyes and a large red shell with white markings on his back, shaped like an oval with pointed ends. Ebigaanya could emit a liquid that turned ordinary water into poison. He could also fire jets of water or binding rope from his claws, reflect the Beetle Fighters' attacks with his back shell, and create illusions when around a body of water. After Daisaku's father tried to stop him from polluting the water, Ebigaanya set him adrift with a bomb in his boat. Daisaku overcame his fear of the water and saved his father, and returned to battle Ebigaanya. He was killed by a hot water blast from the Beetle Fighters' Input Magnums, which cooked him and rendered him incapacitated for G. Stag to finish him off with the Raging Slash.

Ikari Bonba 2 (Anger Bomber 2) - SM

27. "Yomigaeru Toragari Tamashii" (Revive the Haircutting Soul (?))

Anger Bomber 2 could also self-explode but in addition, when the Beetle Fighters blew him up he could bring his pieces back together and regenerate himself. However, during a battle at a junkyard, he accidentally fused himself with a thrown-away hair clipper, which grafted itself onto his left hand. Overcome by the hair clipper's desire to cut hair and to get back at those who had discarded it when it was still usable, Anger Bomber went on a rampage, shaving the heads of everyone in the city he came across. He kept being blown up and coming back together until finally the Beetle Fighters destroyed his pieces before they could rejoin each other.

Shinigamian (Deathgodian) - YH

28. "Manatsu no Junjou Yuurei" (The Pure-Hearted Ghost of Summer)

Shinigamian was a youhei who looked much like the Grim Reaper. He had a hooded black tattered cape and a large scythe. At the top of the scythe 4 rings were attached, so by striking the scythe on the ground he could make the rings jingle and activate his powers. He had a black body with white bonelike ornaments, and white gloves and boots. His face was a skull with one eye in its socket. Shinigamian could raise the spirits of the dead and control them, unless they had things they wanted to accomplish on Earth, which made them able to resist his control. These ghosts could turn invisible and move objects telekinetically.

Shinigamian could fire binding ropes of energy from his scythe and grow a spiraling white horn from his forehead, which he used as a stabbing weapon. One of the ghosts who Shinigamian raised was a young girl named Kaori who wanted to fall in love before she died, and this desire let her resist Shinigamian's control. She fell in love with Takuya and helped him fight Shinigamian by helping the other ghosts realize they were just being used. Blue Beet broke off Shinigamian's horn, impaled him with his own scythe, and finished him off with the Beetle Break, freeing the ghosts although Kaori was able to go on a date with Takuya before she faded away.

His weapon was a curved sword, from which he could fire an energy beam, and he also used small grenades. He was a part of the Combat Meet that Jamahl kidnapped the Beetle Fighters and forced them to participate in, and at first Sinbad was thought to be one of Jera's youhei. Later, however, G. Stag found out that he was actually infiltrating Jamahl in an attempt to assassinate Gaohm. Gaohm had destroyed his home dimension's people, and Sinbad was out for revenge.

Gaohm learned of this, however, and sent a resurrected Death Mult to kill Sinbad and the Beetle Fighters. Realizing that the only way for the Beetle Fighters to return home (the meet was held in another dimension) was by the explosion caused by Death Mult's demise, Sinbad hurled himself at Death Mult and killed him. Death Mult exploded and Sinbad was killed, but the Beetle Fighters managed to return, after promising a dying Sinbad that they would surely defeat Gaohm.

Masukuudaa (Maskuder) - GSJ

31. "Abunai Ojousama" (A Dangerous Young Lady)

He had a small gold central face from which extended in all directions rows of faces nested on each other, extending in a starlike pattern. Two thick blue tentacles and several thin red ones hung down from his waist. His arms and legs were blue with a veinlike pattern on them. Maskuder disguised himself as a plastic surgeon able to make anyone beautiful if they used his special masks. The masks gave his customers the face of the famous model Shiratori Misuzu, who happened to be a childhood friend of Mai's. But the masks actually were explosive control devices that let Maskuder control the wearers and detonate them when he broke the mask he wore, which was his central gold face. Under the gold mask he wore was a single eye. Maskuder could also cause explosions on command.

Babanba

32. "Koi Suru Tsukemono!!" (Loving Pickles!!)

Babamba first appeared as an old woman in a brown kimono with a brown cloth over her head and a wooden cask on her back. She could suck people inside the cask, which she used to turn them into tsukemono (pickled vegetables) which she sold to creatures in other dimensions. She later revealed her true form, which was a creature with clawed hands and feet and a long, demonic face with sharp teeth and long white hair. Babamba was not truly evil, however, and although Jera tried to trick her into fighting the Beetle Fighters, an old man who had befriended her convinced her that she didn't need to fight anymore. She decided to stay in this dimension with him, and shattered her cask, freeing the people inside.

His main weapon was a black lance with a red line running down it, from which he could fire energy blasts or a rope of energy to bind his victims. He rode a black and red motorcycle with a fairing that looked like a bird's head, which could fire missiles. Night Biker was actually an unwilling youhei, for he was really a human, Iwata Kazuma, who was brainwashed and changed into an evil warrior by a machine used by Jera. The control device was in the bike's fairing, and when that was destroyed, Night Biker changed back into Kazuma safe and back to normal.

Mojanga (Mojanga) - GSJ

34. "Kowa~i Petto" (A Scary Pet)

Mojanga was the collected form of a species of otherdimensional creatures known as Moja, which looked like balls of brown fur with black beady eyes. Gigaro gave them to several children, with the instructions that if they started to act up, to hit them with a special stick he gave them. When they did this, the Moja turned fierce and absorbed the children's consciousness, then collected together to form Mojanga, a creature with blue arms and legs, a large blue head with long pointed ears, and brown and white fur around his head. He also had two brown tails and two white tufts of fur on top of his head. The children's consciousness was trapped inside Mojanga, and could see the outside world. So when the Beetle Fighters came to try and help, the children, led by Gigaro in his disguise as the Moja seller, tried to support them, telling them to transform and fight.

But Mojanga could bring about exactly the reverse of what the consciousness trapped inside him said, so when the children told the Beetle Fighters to transform, they couldn't. Mojanga could also breathe fire. Eventually Daisaku entered Mojanga and freed the children, so Mojanga could be killed.

His head looked somewhat like a caterpillar's, and his mouth could open very wide since he could eat the weapons of his enemies and then spit back their attacks. He could also fire energy blasts from his fingers, which were also tipped with short spines. When Gagamoth absorbed the energy of the Beet Ingram, it turned into a red mothlike form, with large wings covered with yellow designs. Its head was mothlike with two feathery antennae and a long proboscis. His right hand was fused with an Input Magnum and his left with the Stinger Blade, which he could use freely as weapons. By flapping his wings he could release a cloud of yellow pollen that set fire to what was caught inside it. To combat Gagamo, Blue Beet metamorphosed into Super Blue Beet for the first time, and killed it with the Super Final Blow.

Nero was a so-called bodyguard from another dimension who wore a black leatherlike outfit with red gloves, silver boots, a silver cowboylike hat, and a brown scarf which covered his nose and mouth. He used a silver pistol, smoke grenades, and could control his cape independently as a flying weapon. He appeared during a fight and offered Jera his services, but in the fight he missed the Beetle Fighters and escaped back to Jamahl for his pay. Later, he approached the Beetle Fighters and claimed that he was just trying to infiltrate Jamahl so he could kill Gaoim, and if they paid him he would do just that. Mai believed him and scrounged up enough to pay him. Nero was planning to take the money from both sides and leave this dimension, when Mai found out that he had Jamahl money. Jera also appeared, having discovered his secret, and Jera impaled Nero. Meanwhile, Mai had scanned Nero's gun and found out that it was designed to miss. Nero hated war, and never meant to kill anyone. He died after telling Mai to hurry and end the fight, because war is a terrible thing.

Rasbelga was a monster created from the fictional Rasbel flower, a carnivorous plant that could move on its own and fed on small animals. Rasbelga had a giant mouth with three orange petals with teeth around it, and many thin strings hanging from them. His arms were brown crooked poles that reached the ground, and inside his mouth were two rows of sharp teeth. His body was covered with small thorns. Rasbelga could spray a poison pollen that could corrode the Beetle Fighters' Insect Armor and render them helpless. He could also suck people inside of him to be digested, using a long tongue to drag them in. Rasbelga's only weakness was the fruit of a tree discovered by an old girlfriend of Mukai's, which made him spit out the people in him and robbed him of his pollen spray so he could be defeated.

Faiga (Fyga)

39. "Shounen BF no Bouken" (Adventure of the Junior BF)

Fyga was a legendary flame beast who was fossilized and unable to move. Gigaro had Schwartz use a youth-restoring machine to bring back Fyga, but Schwartz set it too high and the Fyga that came out was a child who breathed fire at anyone around him, including Gigaro. It was a creature covered in large red scales but with a cublike face with short spikes around it. While trying to stop it, Blue Beet tackled Fyga and was hit by residual youth energy that was in it and turned into a child himself. Gigaro and Schwartz eventually recaptured Fyga and tried to age it to its proper age, but overdid it and the Fyga that came out this time was blackened and burnt. Blue Beet also used this chance to restore his own age, then killed Fyga with the Super Final Blow.

Matcho Nanba 5 (Macho Number 5)

41. "Aniki wa Mukimuki" (My Older Brother is)

Macho #5 was Schwartz's older brother, who Schwartz actually built himself. He was a muscular robot with blue and white armor plating and a face like Schwartz's, with yellow eyes and tubelike hair. He possessed great strength and could fire energy beams from his chest and hair. He was injured in a battle with the Beetle Fighters, however, and to save him, Schwartz joined himself with Macho, going inside Macho's body. The two together were a formidable enemy, and Macho's final plan to get rid of the Beetle Fighters was a self-destruct switch he had installed in himself. He activated it and planned to take the Beetle Fighters with him when he exploded, and so he told Schwartz to get out of his body. Schwartz refused, since they were brothers, and the two rushed at the Beetle Fighters. Blue Beet used his Super Final Blow to stop Macho, however, but before he exploded Macho opened himself up and pulled Schwartz out, throwing him to safety. A frantic Schwartz ran to where Macho's pieces lay, clutching Macho's eyepiece as a memento of his brother.

He could fire the claws on his hands as darts and the spikes on his knees as missiles. Gigaro used Gigatsukinowa to lure the Beetle Fighters into a hunt on a mountainside, just as he was hunted on his home planet. Hidra could spray webbing from her mouth and breathe fire, and used a sword as a weapon. She could also disappear in a cloud of sparking smoke. Hidra was assigned the job of capturing Guru so Gaohm could use him to gather the energy of the insects on the planet to complete the Jamahl Hole. Gaohm promised Hidra command of the youhei army if she succeeded, and when she did he gave her a silver armband to signify her new rank. Hidra then went to kill Jera and the Beetle Fighters, but during the fight Jera realized that Hidra's armband was actually a bomb. Jera was too late, and the bomb exploded. Before dying, Hidra told the Beetle Fighters to defeat Gaohm.

While fighting Blue Beet, a dragonfly-shaped mark on Drago's arm began to glow, and Blue Beet realized that Drago was an insect warrior just like him. Drago's memory returned to him, and he joined forces against Jamahl, helping to kill Hellsgyra, before changing into a dragonfly-like energy shape and flying back to his own dimension.

Episode 52 and Episode 53 are a team-up of the B-Fighters with the previous 2 "metal hero" shows - Janperson and Blue SWAT, and enemies from those 2 shows are resurrected as well as some B-Fighter monsters.

KAGAKU SENTAI DYNAMAN

AKA: SCIENCE TASK FORCE DYNAMAN

The long forgotten Kassinca ("Evilution") race, who have hidden in the depth of the Earth for centuries, return to seize control of the surface of the world. Professor Hiroshi Yumeno, a researcher into dream therapy, realizes that the Jassinca are coming and recruits the five-member Dynaman team to hold off the invasion and make their dreams a reality. The team leader is Hokuto (Okita) or Dyna Red, who dream is to make a power source that does pollute the environment.

When not thinking inventive thoughts, he fights with Dyna Sword. Ryu (Kasuga) is Dyna Black, whose dream is to make contact with extraterrestrials. He is also a descendant of the Iga ninja clan and a specialist in covert operations. Yosuke (Unoki) is Dyna Blue, whose dream is to be able to live and breath permanently underwater with the aid of artificial gills. Kosaku (Tokita) is Dyna Yellow, a part time gardener whose dream is to create ideals yields of crops. Rei (Hagiwara) is the token female Dyna Pink, whose dream is to acquire a machine that will enable her to communicate with animals. Nine tailed Emperor Aton (Watabe) is the dastardly leader of the Jassinca, while seven tailed General Kar is his subordinate and the leader of the army of single tailed Tailmen who form the cannon fodder of his invasion.

Greater danger is provided by the obligatory monsters of the week and thwarted by the Dynaman's team's special vehicles. Dyjupiter is a giant caterpillar track vehicle, from which the team can launch in their big rig, tank, and jet mini-vehicles. These in turn can combine to make a sword wielding giant robot, called Dyna Garry.

"Based on an idea by Saburo Yade" who obviously thought Garry would be a great name for a robot. Dynaman was preceded in the SuperSentai series by GOGGLE-V and followed by BIOMAN. Music by Kenzuke Kyo. Six episodes of Dynaman were later dubbed in parody form for the USA Network, and broadcast in 1988 as part of the show Night Flight - this is the only appearance of the series in the English Language.

Fifth Super Sentai. Shown on USA Network in 1987-88 as a dubbed parody, Dynaman. Notable for its character designs by Izubuchi Yutaka (of Dairugger XV [Voltron] and Dunbine, his prominent works at the time). Dark Knight added a 'Hakaiden' element to the show. The (relatively) complex villain storylines and improved character designs were to get better in Bioman. "Kagaku Sentai Dynaman" was the first super sentai team to begin the tradition of wearing suits made out of spandex.

KAMANDAG

AKA: VENOM

Kamandag is a tale of a half-human, half-snake creature who is forced to live in the mortal world because of the conflict he brings in his birthplace. With his snake-like powers, he becomes a sort of hero in his town and the people begin calling him Kamandag.

Kamandag (lit. Venom) is a fantasy Philippine drama airing on GMA Network. Based from the graphic novel of Carlo J. Caparas, it stars Richard Gutierrez. Based on the 1980s graphic novels of novelist Carlo J. Caparas, Kamandag is a half-snake and half-human creature, and has the same temper of The Hulk. The character is known to be an anti-hero.

Pre-production

Casting

The first Philippine drama of Eula Valdez under the GMA Network wing after ABS-CBN refused to offer her a follow up project after Maria Flordeluna.

Senator Bong Revilla, Jr. was offered the role of Haring Saban , a Snake King, but couldn't take it because of his busy schedule with politics and his sci-fi film Resiklo. The role then went to Gardo Versoza.

Training

For his preparation for the series, lead actor Richard Gutierrez trained under UFC star Brandon Vera to master the art of Muay Thai and Brazilian Jujitsu. The majority of the cast plays half-human and half-animal, they all had to undergo acting workshops at University of the East to achieve an animal portrayal.

1 - 1 THE WORLD OF AMBOGRAW (5 PARTS)

Populated by five equally powerful tribes, Ambograw hides many secrets and traditions that could prove fatal to every tribe in the underworld. But none was as great as the secret that the late Haring Saban's son was alive and well in the world of mortals. And while Alicia continued to pine for her missing son, Haring Gulog made sure that his wife will never find her first son again.

And in the world of the mortals, the Ambograw secret was almost revealed. With the playful Ikoy and the stubborn snake protecting Vergel, the humans were slowly gaining knowledge about the half-humans from the underworld. But in the land of men, there were secrets that needed to be kept as well. Secrets that could cause harm to other people: slithering secrets that kill men in the middle of the night with the prodding of an evil father, harmless secrets that could turn deadly on nights of the full moon, and secrets that needed to be revealed for the good of all.

1 - 2 THE NEWEST SUPERHERO IN TOWN (5 PARTS)

Bad guys everywhere discovered a new nemesis in the character of Kamandag! But this superhero instilled fear not just in the evil-doers' hearts, but in innocent people's as well. Through pain and anger, Vergel discovered the extent of his powers -- and using these powers, he helped the helpless during a bank robbery incident. Unfortunately, instead of being touted as the new hero of their town, he became feared and hated because of his appearance. Meanwhile, time had given Lily a small crush on her childhood friend. But when all she got back from him and his brother were endless teasings, will she ever vocalize her feelings for him?

In the world of Ambograw, the king of Monkeys introduced a new sport: pitting slave against slave for entertainment purposes! The Bull king wanted nothing to do with the sport, but the Wolf King and the queen of the Wildcats had expressed interest. But as the royalty enjoyed the new sport, the slaves are slowly banding together to strike back against their oppressors. How will the hidden movement affect the kingdom of the Ambog? And how will it affect Vergel's destiny as the heir to the Snake King's throne?

1 - 3 A DIFFERENT KIND OF MONSTER (5 PARTS)

Their reunion was imminent, and now there's only one left of the group who has yet to return. Lucero returned to San Isidro for the hand of his friend's cousin: Jenny. Instead he ran into trouble with Benjo and his gang. With the help of his childhood friend Vergel, they were able to fight back against the thugs. Unfortunately for both of them, neither Lucero nor Vergel knew the secret that the other was keeping. In the still of the night, Lucero transformed into his snake guise to massacre Benjo and his gang; Vergel, already on unstable ground with the negative press of Kamandag, was surprised to find out that another meta-human existed in his town.

Unafraid, Lilly showed that she was more concerned about Vergel than the monster -- but she also showed that she wasn't as foolish as Jenny when it came to the subject of superstitions. Jenny and her friends left the cave of the Ambog alone, not knowing just how grateful they should be for Lily's stopping them. Meanwhile, the world of the Ambog entered a state of unrest. With Haring Budog siding with the slaves, Gulag and Kuran began plotting together to make sure the slaves do not get any idea of striking back. But the two monarchs are already too late as a select few of the slaves had begun to plan their uprising. And after a talk with Budog, Alicia decided to be more responsive to her husband. But she had developed a plan of her own -- a plan that would include one of the most exquisitely made swords.

1 - 4 NO TOWN BIG ENOUGH (5 PARTS)

Lucero's appearance at San Isidro turned Vergel's life upside down. The townspeople had begun to feel unrest about the existence of Kamandag. And Lucero killing Benjo and his gang does not help the fear that had spread like wildfire in their town. But as Vergel and his adoptive father wondered who was responsible in the massacre of Benjo's gang, Lucero made sure that all tracks were clear of him. Unknowingly, as he cleared his tracks, he was implicating his childhood best friend. And as the two friends reconnected after all those years spent apart, they also enter an unwitting battle for the affection of a city girl.

Meanwhile, in the world of the Ambog, an uprising was silenced. Betrayed by one of them, the slaves are forced back down by the royalty of Ambograw. But the king of the Bulls, Budog, had some aces up in his sleeve: his possession of a powerful bracelet that could clad a snake-person with powerful body armor, and the knowledge that Saban's one true son is alive, well -- and ready to become the hero Ambograw had been waiting for. With Gulag, the wolf king, as the de facto leader of the Ambogs, chaos was unleashed into the unsuspecting mortal world. And it will be up to one man to save the people of San Isidro: Kamandag.

1 - 5 A TALE OF TWO SNAKES (5 PARTS)

With Vergel and Doro in the city, the threat of Kamandag also left the town of San Isidro. And while Jenny continued to hope to see the unwanted superhero once more, everyone else became fearful of what his existence would bring to the city. Lucero, in particular, was not happy with the half-snake's decision to relocate to his territory. Seeing Kamandag on TV, Lucero took his chance to get rid of the masked half-snake once and for all. But instead, he was given unwanted media mileage that could put his father's under-the-table business with him at risk. In the world of Ambograw, Alicia was able to escape her padded prison. And though she was given a glimpse of the mortal world, and the chance to bond with a kind-hearted soul, she was taken back to the underworld once more to suffer for eternity.

Budog revealed to her the truth about her son, not knowing his own son was listening to their conversation. And forced to lie, he stroked Gulag's ego to ensure that Alicia, Vergel and he himself would remain safe until the time comes that a new king of the Hasbaya tribe is needed. Meanwhile, Lily goes on a quest on her own to find her mother. But how will her mother accept her once they do meet? Will there be a happy reunion in Lily's near future? Or will her reunion be as short and bittersweet as Vergel's unwitting reunion with his real mother?

1 - 6 THE TRIALS OF TALIM (5 PARTS)

In the week that passed, Lucero's secret was revealed to Doro, a secret that almost killed Vergel's old friend. But instead of dying, Doro was rushed to the hospital where the two half-snakes were exposed to the Agol and his minions. Armed with the knowledge that there are two Kamandags, Agol returned to Ambograw where he spread the news. Alicia and Budog were surprised at this new information, but the only thing Gulag wanted was the death of the two snake hybrids. Thus, he sent Agol out into the city once more, to capture the two Kamandags and bring them to Ambograw. Meanwhile, as Budog's emissary, Ikoy, traversed the city in search of Vergel. The latter was reunited with a close childhood friend, Lily.

Lily confessed to Vergel that she was living a lie, but a lie she is willing to live because it meant she would be close to her mother. Lily knew life wouldn't be easy, especially with her half-sister who was beginning to get jealous of everything Lily was unintentionally taking away from her. Ditas continued to unknowingly commit murder with Vergel's venom in her blood, a bite from her could kill a person. With no one to save her and a lot who would wish her harm, how could Ditas avoid killing? And Jenny managed to ruin her relationship with Vergel and Lucero by letting her mouth work faster than she could think. But with her continual praise for the good Kamandag, Lucero became convinced that the only way to Jenny's heart would be for his snake persona to be better than Kamandag. And so Talim was born.

But how could Lucero change Talim's image after being attacked by the Ambog? And will Jenny still be able to make it up to Vergel?

1 - 7 BECAUSE OF A GIRL (5 PARTS)

The cracks in the fragile relationship between Lucero and Vergel seemed as if they were about to mend, even after Lucero found out that Vergel was Kamandag. But when Jenny, sick and tired of Lucero's advances, pretended to be Vergel's girlfriend, whatever relationship remained between Lucero and Vergel was now completely destroyed.

After learning what Jenny had done, Vergel tried to get in touch with Lucero. But when his friend refused to hear him out, Vergel tried to escape from the hospital instead. But even that didn't work out for him, as Domeng was brought back from the realm of the dead to deliver a message to Vergel: his real mother needed him. And so it was high time for Vergel to return to Ambograw, the place where he came from. In the world of the half-breeds, fear spread throughout the tribes as news broke out that someone was killing Ambogs.

When Gulag saw a masked slave kill a guard in front of him, he sent out more guards to capture the killer. Pigo was able to cut the slave on the arm, marking the Ambog-killer, a mark that reflected on Alicia, Gulag's queen. Meanwhile, Lily rejoiced when Vergel decided to stop pursuing Jenny. But her heart fell once more when he showed interest in Eleanor instead. When Eleanor told Lily that she had feelings for Vergel, the martyr Lily chose to give way to her sister—putting her own family before herself. But what will happen to Lily's promise of helping Eleanor, now that Vergel had decided to return to San Isidro? How will Vergel be able to salvage his friendship with Lucero? And will he be able to reach Ambograw in time to save his mother?

1 - 8 FALL FROM GRACE (5 PARTS)

Jenny continued to make Lucero believe that Vergel was already her boyfriend, further angering her suitor and destroying the friendship that Lucero once shared with Vergel. When Lucero had enough, he used his Talim persona to exact due punishment to Jenny, but he was foiled by the arrival of Kamandag and Ikoy. Meanwhile, Vergel's soul-searching in San Isidro proved fruitless and even destructive, as the only thing he managed to do was completely end his friendship with Lucero and put Lily in mortal danger. In the world of Ambograw, the beginning of a war was becoming evident. With Alicia's escape and Budog's death, the Hasbaya decided to move against the remaining tribes of Ambograw. But the remaining royal families are ready for war.

1 - 9 IDENTITY THEFT (5 PARTS)

When Ditas and Cathy accepted the job to dance at a stag party, neither expected they would be endangered and all because of a touch of kindness. But when their customer drugged Cathy to sleep, it was Ditas who ended up saving them both by transforming into half-snake and poisoning their customer with a bite. Vergel wondered why Don Pepe wanted to talk with Kamandag, but the answer became evident when he told Don Pepe that he had seen a woman named Alicia before, back in San Isidro. But because Don Pepe didn't trust Vergel enough to tell him about his secret quest, Vergel shrugged off the older man's weird behavior.

Lucero became even more intent to beat Kamandag. And when Alicia nursed him back to health, he let her believe that he was Kamandag, knowing full well that Alicia was looking for Vergel and not him. Meanwhile, Eleanor succeeded in getting Lily to leave the house. After sabotaging Lily's chances at a harmonious life at their house, Lily was sent out to live her life on the streets. And in the world of Ambograw, though Budog was killed, a new threat rose against the royalties in the form of the fiery Ragona. Considered a savior of the slaves, no one knew what Ragona's reasons for her actions were. But the royalty want her killed while the slaves are rallying for her. But what happens when Ragona meets Kamandag? And what happens when Vergel catches news of another half-breed this time, a woman?

KAMEN RIDER

AKA: MASKED RIDER

Mortally injured in a motorcycle accident, science student and keen racer Takeshi Hongo (Fujioka) is rescued by the sinister Shocker Organisation, who plan to turn him into a cyborg warrior to carry out their evil deeds - compare to creator Shotaro Ishinomori's earlier Cyborg 009. Rescued by his former teacher before Shocker can reprogram his mind for evil, Takeshi becomes a thorn in the side of his would be masters, fighting their evil schemes with his robotic abilities and also with the motorcycling prowess he has retained from his previous life.

Reaching a certain speed on his motorcycle allows him to transform into the Masked Rider, and his bike into the Cyclone Superbike. Takeshi is aided in his fight against evil by his former motorcycling instructor Tobei (Kobayashi), and FBI agent Kazuya (Chiba). After episode 74, he also acquires the assistance of the Masked Rider Boy's squad - a group of children who maintain vigil signs of evil activities by Shocker. Like all the other MRs that would follow him, Takashi must not only deal with monsters of the week, but is occasionally forced to fight off evil versions of himself, which supposedly look exactly the same, but can always be identified by a telltale yellow scarf.

Through only one of it's many TV incarnations has been translated into English, the Masked Rider remains an important ambassador for Japanese TV abroad, particularly outside of the English-speaking world, where many more of it's heroes flourish from Italy to Brazil. Most of it's seasons have also been broadcast on US TV, albeit without English subtitles, on local channels for the Japanese community in Hawaii and California. Unlike the "Super Sentai" series and it's MIGHTY MORPHIN POWER RANGERS spin-offs, MR has an ongoing continuity resembling that of ULTRAMAN.

One of the few actors to perform his own stunts, Hiroshi Fujioka broke his leg when he hit a telephone pole in episode ten, forcing the program makers to shoot around his recuperation. When it became clear that three weeks of sunts doubles and stock footage would not suffice to get Fukioka back on his feed (compare to similar difficulties on ROCKET BOY), the original MR was temporarily written out.

Off to Europe to fight a particularly evil Shocker Scheme, Takeshi leaves Japan under the protection of MR2, former photographer Hayato (Sasaki), Hyato's induction is similar to that of his predecessor - he is another intended Shocker soldier, but is rescued by Takashi, once more conveniently after he has been cybernetically enhanced, but before he has been brainwashed.

Actors Sasaki and Fujioka then double-teamed the series for the remainder of it's 98 episode run, allaying the producers' fears of production delays, but also creating the sense of an international MR cooperative that would run through later episodes. Episodes could dwell on Takeshi's European adventures, some of which crossed over into Hayato's sphere, leading the two actors to share episodes in which they fought evil together. Meanwhile, the producers happily doubled the amount of merchandise, first with the arrival of the unexpected character, then a second time when the heroes gained new powers. Officially Takeshi returned to Europe after allowing himself to be recaptured and retooled by his former Shock masters, gaining augmented powers, a new suit, and the ability to transform at will. Similarly, Hyato disappeared to South America for several episodes to fight The Geldam organization, returning with new vigor thanks to a masochistic program of crocodile wrestling and voluntary exposure to snake poisons!

Originally, Takeshi would henshin into Kamen Rider by riding his motorcycle into the wind, letting it blow into the 'Typhoon' fan on his belt, giving him the energy to change. His bike would also simultaneously change into the Cyclone. Initially, his powers and abilities included the Rider Jump, Rider Kick, Rider Throw, Rider Scissors, Rider Chop, Rider Reversal, and the Lightning Light Rider Kick. The 'old' Kamen Rider 1 (episodes 1-13) was distinguished by his lack of stripes and dark green coloration. His 'old' Cyclone(s) (multiple versions exist, with varying fairings or even no fairing, though for story purposes he only had one bike) had 200 hp and a top speed of 300-400 km/h (accounts vary).

After episode 13, Kamen Rider 1 left to pursue Shocker's other schemes outside of Japan. In episode 40, Kamen Rider 1, having fought Shocker in Switzerland, returned to Japan to chase after Dr. Death. Thereafter in the fourth cours, Kamen Rider 1 would reappear whenever Kamen Rider 2 faced a particularly powerful kaijin. Kamen Rider 1 returned for good in episode 53. He was more powerful than ever, for he had deliberately let Shocker recapture him and give him additional surgery to give him increased abilities which he intended to use against them.

The 'new' Kamen Rider 1 had silver gloves and boots and twin stripes on his arms, legs, and sides. He could now jump 25 meters instead of 15. He no longer needed his bike to change; all he had to do was swing his arms in a 'henshin pose'. His new fighting techniques included the Rider Reverse Spin Kick, Rider Lightning Kick, Rider Point Kick, Rider Screw Kick, Rider Moon Surface Kick, Rider Hammer Kick, Rider Drop Kick, Rider Knee Block, Rider Head Crusher, Rider Crusher, Rider Spinning Shoot, Rider Hammer, Rider Swing, Rider Screw Block, Rider Power, Rider Back Jump, and the Rider Flying Chops. >From episode 68 onward, he drove an all-new Cyclone with retractable wings, short-term gliding ability, a 250 (or 700; accounts vary) hp engine, and a top speed of 500 km/h.

Kamen Rider (1971) is the first of a long line of 'henshin hero' TV series from Toei that continues almost unbroken to the present day. (Henshin 'metamorphosis, transformation' refers to the process the hero undergoes when he changes from human to inhuman superhero. 'Morphing' may be a more modern, MMPR-oriented translation. The word has been used in tokusatsu contexts long before Kamen Rider [it is the title of Ultra Q (1966) episode 22, for example] but it was Kamen Rider that popularized the word. Kamen Rider is the henshin hero par excellence, but the term can refer to any human-sized hero who can change from one form to another.) Without Kamen Rider, there would be no sentai or metal heroes.

Kamen Rider debuted in 1971, the year when the Second [TV] Kaijuu Boom began. (The First [TV] Kaijuu Boom began in 1966, with ULTRA Q, ULTRAMAN, and AMBASSADORE MAGMA, which were not the first TV series to spotlight kaijuu; that honor probably goes to Kaijuu Marinekong [1960].) Coming Home Ultraman had debuted the night before Kamen Rider, and Space Apeman Gori (later and better known as SPECTREMAN) had debuted in January. In an era of giant monsters and miniature sets, Kamen Rider came off as a low-budget product (which it was). Its chances for success appeared slim. But in the second half of 1971, it became a massive hit. The Second Kaijuu Boom mutated into the Henshin Boom. Kaijuu series would never dominate TV tokusatsu again. Although they would proliferate in the early 1970s (Tsuburaya was producing Ultraman Tarou, Fireman, and Jumborg Ace simultaneously in 1973), they were outnumbered by their human-sized rivals. The Kamen Rider series took its place alongside Tsuburaya's Ultraman series, resulting in 449 episodes, at least nine movies, several TV specials, and a Super Deformed anime spinoff to date.

The origins of Kamen Rider date back to 1969, when producer Hirayama Tooru and scripters Ichikawa Shin'ichi, Uehara Shouzou, and Igami Masaru came together to discuss the creation of a new masked hero at the request of the Mainichi Housou network. (Masked heroes were not new to tokusatsu; they date back as far as Moonlight Mask [1958].) The group, joined by Mainichi Housou and Toei staffers, came up with the key elements for the series-to-be: an SF drama for children. □In 1970, the first of many plans to emerge was Maskman K. This was to be a series that would ride on the coattails of the then-hot 'Sports Spirit Boom' with its emphasis on athletic heroes. The main character, Kujou Gou (Chiba Jirou, Kamen Rider's Taki Kazuya was one of the actors considered for the role), having learned the fighting arts of the world and a sense of patriotism from his father, would defend Japan from the secret organization Shocker, which planned an economic invasion (!) as 'Maskman K'.

This Shocker would be defeated after the first cours of 13 episodes, to be replaced by yet another secret organization. Maskman K's abilities were not to be superhuman; he was closer to Toei's Captain Ultra (1967) (or to DC's Batman) than to Kamen Rider, an ordinary human in a funny costume relying on his wits and skills, honed to human limits. Kujou would normally be a middle school physical education instructor who would become quite a different person when wearing the mask of Maskman K. This show would have been quite like the late 1950s and early 1960s tokusatsu hero series rather than the henshin hero series as we know them today. It probably would not have set off the Henshin Boom. Kaijuu series would have continued to dominate the tokusatsu world, perhaps until the present day.

The next plan to emerge was Masked Angel. The protagonist, Hongou Takeshi, falsely accused of murdering his teacher Prof. Midorikawa, would be hunted down by the police. Takeshi had been framed by evil industrialist Ishigami Daizou, who planned to amass profits from Midorikawa's inventions. Together with Midorikawa's son Masao and daughter Michiru, Takeshi would guard Midorikawa's inventions from Ishigami. The story would begin ten years after Midorikawa's death, when Ishigami would be sending kaijin assassins after the Midorikawa children. Takeshi would defend them as Masked Angel. After having been charged with 300,000 volts of electricity, Takeshi had gained superhuman powers.

These elements were reused in a plan titled Crossfire (later Crossmask). Ten years ago, Hongou Takeshi (to have been played by Kondou Masaomi) had created a great invention at the University of California with Dr. Midorikawa. One day, Takeshi was fried by 300,000 volts of electricity. Dr. Midorikawa saved him at the cost of his own life. Claude Kurohara, an agent of the evil organization Shocker, testified that Takeshi murdered Midorikawa. Midorikawa's children, Ruriko (Shimada Youko, Kamen Rider's Nohara Hiromi) and Masao, believed Takeshi to be guilty. Thus Takeshi protected them from Shocker as the Masked Angel. His accident had given him superhuman abilities, activated whenever he became enraged.

The 'cross' in Crossfire/Crossmask refers to the red, cross-shaped scar on Takeshi's face that was also a product of the accident. Crossmask was to have worn a white or beige motorcyclist's outfit with a helmet adorned with a cross, goggles, and a featureless cloth mask. Crossmask resembled Kikaider's Saburou or Jiraiya's Mafuuba.) Tachibana Toubee would have appeared, though he would have been played by Takamatsu Hideo. The first episode planned was "The Strange Spider Man"--the same as Kamen Rider's first episode. The design of the first Shocker cyborg monster, the Spider Man, was nearly identical to that actually used in Kamen Rider.

The title and monster of this first episode were carried over into the next draft, titled Mask Rider X, in which Takeshi would have made a living as the mysterious pro bowler 'Mister X'. (I for one am very glad none of these plans materialized.) By 1971, Toei had come up with Skullman, a property which the manga artist Ishimori Shoutarou strongly wished for...and got. Skullman appears as a 100-page one-shot story by Ishimori in the 11 January issue of Shonen Magazine. The planned series' full title was Kamen Rider Skullman. Ishimori's Skullman design strongly resembled Kamen Rider, except for his lack of antennae. The helmet would have had an articulated jaw that opened to reveal the stuntman's mouth. The black bodysuit, the belt with the trademark Typhoon buckle, the scarf, and the huge oval eyes were all there. The premise of Skullman was so close to that of Kamen Rider that I will not summarize it here. The differences were minor: Shocker was a 'kingdom' and its monsters would appear at a ratio of one per two to three episodes.

Ishimori played with the Skullman design until he came up with a grasshopper-based variant that captured the fancy of his then five-year-old son, Jou. Subsequently, Skullman was revised as Kamen Rider Hopper King. Hopper King looked exactly like Kamen Rider, except that his chest had eight plates instead of six. The cast as we know it signed on, the 'Hopper King' part of the title was excised, and production began on 7 February 1971 with the filming of the climactic dam fight scene of the first episode. This episode aired on 3 April 1971, and tokusatsu has never been the same since. The debut got a 8.1% rating in the Kantou area and a 20.8% rating in the Kansai area; not the great success Toei had wanted (what did Toei want, 30%!?) Later Rider series would get far worse ratings)...yet.

The 98-episode run of Kamen Rider can be divided into several cycles. The first, episodes 1-13, concern Hongou Takeshi (Fujioka Hiroshi), the Kamen Rider (not yet called '1'). Fujioka did many of his own stunts, in and out of costume. This proved to be a mistake, for Fujioka suffered multiple fractures in his thighbone during a bike chase sequence filmed for episode 9 around the time the first episode was being aired. Toei worked around this until episode 13, minimalizing the use of Fujioka's character out of costume, using stock footage of Fujioka whenever possible, and having Naya Rokuro play the voice of Takeshi/Kamen Rider. Shocker-hunting FBI agent Taki Kazuya (Chiba Jirou) debuted in episode 11 to give the series an active male protagonist.

Of course, this state of affairs could not continue indefinitely. Things would have to change from the second cours (episodes 14-26) onward. Toei panicked and came up with three possible plans of action:

- A. Maintain the Hongou Takeshi character but change the actor without any effect on the story.
- B. Introduce a new character, 'Kamen Rider 2', in an entirely different setting.
- C. Introduce a new character, 'Kamen Rider 2', in the same setting as before.
- D. Have Shocker capture Takeshi and put him through surgery to make him a new man (i.e., a different actor).

Toei used plan C. Ichimonji Hayato/Kamen Rider 2 (Sasaki Takeshi) debuted in episode 14, telling Toubee and Kazuya, "Hongou Takeshi, pursuing a different project of Shocker's, has left Japan. In place of Hongou Takeshi, I shall defend Japan. I'll show you. Kamen Rider...Henshin!" Hayato was a far less serious character than Takeshi, lightening the series' tone considerably. Some consider the dark initial cycle of Kamen Rider to be the quintessential Kamen Rider, and everything else thereafter an aberration. Nevertheless, without the accident that had befallen Fujioka, the concept of multiple Riders would not have existed, and the series might have gone off the air far sooner without any sequels. The success of Kamen Rider really began with the Ichimonji cycle.

The third cours (episodes 27-39) introduced Colonel Sol, the first of Shocker's three officers. By this point, the series was gathering ratings of 20% even in the Kantou area. The fourth cours (episodes 40-52) began with the return of Kamen Rider 1, Hongou Takeshi. Fujioka Hiroshi had recovered sufficiently to make five guest appearances (episodes 40, 41, 49, 51, and 52). The Double Riders were born! Colonel Sol died in episode 39 and was replaced with Dr. Deathgod (Amamoto Eisei). Hell's Ambassador (Ushio Kenji) debuted in episode 53, the first of the fifth cours (episodes 53-65), to cope with Kamen Rider 1, who was back as the star for good with many improvements to his costume.

The sixth cours (episodes 66-79) brought back Kamen Rider 2, also with an improved costume, as a guest (episodes 72 and 73) and depicted the ends of Dr. Deathgod, Hell's Ambassador, and Shocker itself. The seventh and final cycle (episodes 80-98) concerned the rise and fall of Shocker's successor, Gelshocker, bringing the series to a close. What was to have been Kamen Rider episodes 99 and 100 ended up as the first two episodes of Kamen Rider V3.

WR. Igami Masaru, Ichikawa Shin'ichi, Shimada Sadayuki, Takizawa Mari, Yamazaki Hisashi, Hirayama Kimio, Ishimori Shoutarou.

AKA: MAKED RIDER 555

AKA: KAMEN RIDER PHI

AKA: MASKED RIDER PHI

Two years ago Yuji Kiba was in a car accident that killed both of his parents and put him into a coma. Fast-forward to the present and suddenly we find out he has died.... only to wake up later on in a morgue. When Yuji tries to visit his past life, he sees that everything has changed. He then finds himself in the care of 'Smart Brain' where they explain to him that he has been reborn as an Orphenochs and must now abandon his human heart and kill all humans.

The other half of our story is about a man named Takumi Inui.

Takumi Inui isn't your happy go lucky guy, he is reluctant to share his feelings and even more reluctant to make friends.

He follows a girl named Mari Sonoda when he thinks that she stole his gym bag. As it turns out that he's not the only one interested in Mari's bag, for it seems that she is actually in possession of a belt with advanced technology that some people don't want out in the public arena. While confronting her for stealing his gym bag, an Orphenoch appears and demands that Mari hand over the belt.

Scared, she tries to transform into Kamen Rider 555, but the belt doesn't work for her. As an act of desperation, she attaches the belt to Takumi and he's forced to fight the Orphenoch. Reluctant to stay with Mari, Takumi finds himself getting deeper and deeper into her world and eventually agreeing to fight the Orphenochs as Kamen Rider 555.

Kamen Rider 555 (Φ's) ((amen Raidā Faizu?), translated as Masked Rider 555*, is a Japanese tokusatsu television series. It is the 13th installment in the famous Kamen Rider series. It is a joint collaboration between Ishimori Productions and Toei, and was originally broadcasted on TV Asahi from January 26, 2003 to January 18, 2004.

In Kmen Rider Phi (aka Kamen Rider 555), the company director of the mysterious Smartbrian Organization enlists the help of his daughter and her two handsome male friends in the ongoing battle against the Orphenc group (presumably inspired by "Orthanc" from Lord of the Rings), an evil syndicate hell bent on destroying the human race. To transform, this Kamen Rider must take out his special mobile phone and type the sequence "555" - see HEIJI ZENIGATA for details of Ai Zenigata, an investigator the previous year who also made good use of her mobile.

Kamen Rider 555 is currently the second newest series of Kamen Rider sequel. Unlike many other old-fashioned Japanese sci-fi productions, this excellent series is the result of combination of intense fighting scenes with martial arts, interesting characters, humour and most important of all, a heart-gripping plot that has a magnetic attraction to viewers. Also there are many twists in this series that allows viewers to form their opinion on each character, reflect upon their actions as the story develops and this is what gives the show such high popularity; its successful effect on viewers. Thus far, I think this series is actually better than the current new 'Kamen Rider Blade' series in terms of character designs, levels of characters in their martial art styles as well as an attractive story line.

I was about as reluctant to buy and watch this series, as Takumi Inui was to continue as a Kamen Rider.

After hearing that Kamen Rider Ryuki (my first Kamen Rider Series) wasn't your traditional Kamen Rider, I was afraid of how a traditional series would affect my outlook on exactly what a Kamen Rider is. I didn't want anything to take away that already drawn up mental understanding of what I thought a Kamen Rider to be, I didn't want to see that ruined.

Well, I finally said that I just have to do this, I mean if I didn't take a chance with Ryuki, I never would have found out about Kamen Rider's greatness in the first place, so if I didn't watch Faiz, I wondered what else I could be missing.

After viewing both the series and the movie, I can safely say that my mind is now at ease and my sense of what a Kamen Rider really stands for, is much more evolved. Now, I only mention that because I know a lot of people feel the same way, with many sharing Ryuki as their first Kamen Rider series well I'm telling you that if you miss 555 because of that reason ...then you'll truly be missing out on a great series.

The show is packed-full of drama. What connections do Smart Brain have between humans, Orphenochs, and the Kamen Rider gear? Will Kiba Yuji be mankind's and Kamen Rider's greatest ally? Or will he be their greatest foe? The story goes in so many directions at once in early episodes, only to gradually come together as the storyline reaches its conclusion. You won't believe who or how many people's lives are intertwined with one another's. The greatest part of that though is HOW they are all connected.

But if it's the action that attracts you to Kamen Rider, then fret not ...for Faiz delivers. Every fight (and I mean EVERY FIGHT) has a purpose, every fight has something to do with making the main plot larger than it is. There wasn't one battle or fight where I didn't have my fingers crossed hoping that someone would make it out alive or that they would just kill someone already.

Whether it's Kamen Rider vs. Kamen Rider, Orphenoch vs. Orphenoch or Kamen Rider vs. Orphenoch.... you're going to be on the edge of your seat.

I loved the way that they not only dealt with the conflicts between Orphenochs and humans, but also how they found the time to show you everyone's inner conflicts as well. You end up caring about some of the Orphenochs much more, because in a way you can see their own humanity of sorts ...and you just might begin to wonder if they're not right in wanting to rid the world of humans.

Nothing is rushed in this series, but even better ...nothing is dragged out to the point where you're saying "When do I get to the finale?" or "Is it over yet?". I LITERALLY could not put this series down.

I woke up an hour before I had to be at work and watched episode 4, after that I called in sick and spent the whole day watching this series. I just couldn't stop watching. I finished the series the next day somewhere around 2:00. Not to mention the movie (see my review for that too).

Conclusion

I usually only write reviews for things that I've enjoyed, generally because reviews here at Japan Hero are usually volunteered (gotta love this place) and so when I see something I like I get excited about it and ask an admin or two to be involved in some un-official/official way.

After watching Faiz, I can't begin to express to you how good this series is. I mean this series just seemed so fresh for me in the sense that it was like watching this genre for the first time all over again.

I don't know if it was due to the way that you end up caring for certain characters, or whether it's because the story was told in such a unique way that you just couldn't help but think, "I wish life really was like that".

I'm definitely recommending Kamen Rider Faiz to you all, whether you're an old school Kamen Rider fan, or just jumped on board with a recent Kamen Rider series.

If you've never seen a Kamen Rider Series before in your life, you will enjoy Kamen Rider Faiz.

It's got all the excitement you're looking for; the entire story is magnificent, and there are more twists, turns and shocking events than something that is full of twists, turns and shocking events!

Faiz is definitely worth the purchase, but viewing this series is worth more to me than any dollar amount can atone for and is up there as one of the greatest series I have ever seen, no matter what form of entertainment you want to classify it as.

Kamen Rider Ryuki may have been the series to catapult me into the Kamen Rider genre ...but Kamen Rider Faiz is the one that got me to stick around and see what happens next. I'm officially a Kamen Rider fan now, and if you're not already.... you will be after Kamen Rider 555.

Orphenochs

Main article: Orphenoch

They are the series kaijin; they are humans who are reborn either naturally or by Smart Brain. Their goal is to annihilate humanity either by turning other humans into more orphenoch or killing them off completely.

However, there are those who believe that they can still live as humans; those who possessed that mind set become targets for elimination by Smart Brain.

Synopsis

Paradise Lost takes place in an alternate universe of Kamen Rider 555. In the near future, the world is ruled by the Smart Brain Corporation and its genetic creations known as Orphenochs, and the once prominent human race is nearing extinction. Takumi Inui (Kamen Rider Faiz), was once regarded as mankind's savior until he was captured by Smart Brain's troops and presumed dead. Since then, human rebel groups have staged attacks on Smart Brain's complex in an attempt to steal the top-secret Emperor Belts, but with no success. Kiba, Kaidō and Osada - three Orphenochs who sympathize with the human race, attempt to ease tensions between both races but their peace meeting is interrupted by Smart Brain's troops and their newest warrior, Kamen Rider Psyga. Takumi, who had been living in secrecy over the past few years, regains his memory and becomes Kamen Rider Faiz again to settle a score with Smart Brain once and for all.

Characters

Takumi Inui/Kamen Rider Faiz (Inui Takumi): Main wearer of the Faiz Gear, though reluctantly at first. He is a loner who prefers not to get into relationships with people because he fears he will betray them. Often very apathetic towards his 'duties' as Faiz when there is no immediate threat. Unlike the others, he has no particular dream. He is often teased by Mari for being a "nekojita" (Literally means "cat tongue"; someone who cannot stand food that is too hot or cold). It is revealed that he too is an Orphenoch, the Wolf Orphenoch. He was hit by a car when he was young and soon developed the power of an Orphenoch, but chose not to use his power unless it was necessary. Like Yuji he uses his power to protect humans. He was at the Ryuusei Juku reunion and attempted to protect everyone from Kitazaki. However, Mari caught him on film and everyone believed he was responsible for the massacre. When talking to Yuji, it reveals that he's a "natural" Orphenoch like Yuji and Yuka. Since the massacre, he refused to transform until he was forced to when Mari was dying from injuries caused by Sawada. As a Kamen Rider, he has a habit of randomly flicking his wrist. Played by Kento Handa (Handa Kento).

Mari Sonoda (Sonoda Mari): A member of the Ryusei Juku who was sent the Faiz Gear and Auto Vajin by their father, but was unable to use them. She insists that Takumi accompany her and use the Faiz Gear to fight Orphenochs. However, she is not as good-willed as she initially appears, and will often agree with Takumi when Keitarou suggests they use Faiz to help more people. She always believes the good in her friends, even Sawada and Takumi after she found out they were Orphenochs as well. She dreams of becoming a beautician. Played by Yuria Haga (Haga Yuria).

Keitarou Kikuchi (Kikuchi Keitarō): A young man that Mari and Takumi meet by chance not long after receiving the Faiz Gear. Keitarou and his family are dry cleaners and it's his dream to make everyone in the world happy. As such, he lets Mari and Takumi stay with him and work at his family's dry cleaning business for room and board in hopes he can encourage them to use the Faiz Gear for good. He exchanges cell phone e-mails with his penpal, Yuka, and becomes infatuated with her in real life, although he doesn't realize that they are the same person until later in the series. In Paradise Lost, he briefly wore the Kaixa Gear. Played by Ken Mizorogi (Mizorogi Ken).

Masato Kusaka/Kamen Rider Kaixa (Kusaka Masato): A member of the Ryuseiji Juku who was apparently absent from the reunion, but signed the autograph card. He is the only member of Ryuseiji Juku who was capable of wearing the Kaixa Gear without disintegrating afterwards and as such is the Gear's primary wearer. Mari often saved him from bullies in his youth and as a result he has fallen in love with her and is willing to go to elaborate lengths to eliminate any obstacles between him and her. He also vehemently deplores Orphenochs, regardless of whether they "have souls" or not and swears to destroy them all. His hatred was driven by the events that took place at the Ryusei Juku reunion and he continually wipes his hands to remove the imagined blood he remembers from that night. As a Kamen Rider, he had a habit of moving his hand around his neck in the fashion of straightening a tie. Played by Kouhei Murakami (Murakami Kōhei).

Yuuji Kiba (Kiba Yūji): A young man who becomes a "natural" Orphenoch after dying as a result of a car-crash, although he lived in a comatose state for two years. Upon reviving, he finds his life in ruins. He kills his ex-girlfriend and her new boyfriend in hot blood. He quickly comes to deplore Smart Brain's tactics and resolves to become an Orphenoch who will protect humans and fight Smart Brain. After he believed Yuka to have been killed by the police, he turns against his ideals and eventually replaces Murakami as the chairman of Smart Brain. Played by Masayuki Izumi (Izumi Masayuki).

Yuka Osada (Osada Yuka): A teenage girl who is bullied terribly by her younger sister and other girls in her school and basketball team. Yuka's parents favored her sister over her. After suffering extreme emotional stress she falls down snow covered stairs and revives as an Orphenoch, and slaughters the entire basketball team, her sister included. She meets Kiba Yuji, and agrees with his ideals of protecting humans, although occasionally kills humans who seem bad (bullies, etc). Without others knowing. She exchanged e-mails with Keitarou before (and to a lesser extent after) becoming an Orphenoch, and seemed to have a semi-romantic relationship. She later developed a strong crush on Naoya, though he did not reciprocate. Eventually she and Keitarou come to realize who the other was, and they had a brief relationship before she was killed by Kageyama. Played by Yoshika Katou (Katō Yoshika).

Naoya Kaidou (Kaidō Naoya): A young man turned into an Orphenoch by Toda Eiichi, the temporary Chief of Smart Brain, to make an example to Kiba and Yuka of how Orphenochs must make allies. He is an overly eccentric person prone to incredibly fast speeches and constant mood swings. He played the guitar in his younger days, but sabotage from his teacher destroyed some of the motorskills in his left hand, forcing him to abandon his music. After struggling with his nature as an Orphenoch, Naoya ends up living with Kiba and Yuka, although he is the least concerned about protecting humans. At times he sides with Smart Brain over Kiba and Yuka, but his powerful conscience often stops him from committing heinous acts at the last second. He eventually develops a partnership with Keitarou, which results in many harebrained schemes to win the respected woman of their desire. He briefly wore the Riot Trooper gear under Kiba Yuji's rule in Smart Brain. He greatly mistreats Yuka accidentally due to her crush on him. However, in Paradise Lost he reciprocates. He lived on after Kiba and Yuka's death in the television series, but died in the movie. Played by Mitsuru Karahashi (Karahashi Mitsuru).

The Ryusei Juku (Ryūsei-juku): A group of orphans adopted by the former Chief of Smart Brain Hanagata and were schooled by him. These students became known as the Ryuseiji. Shortly before the series started they attended a reunion and were sent the three Rider Gears. The members include:

Masuda Sensei (Teacher) (Masuda-sensei): He is their teacher. Played by Michihiro Yamanishi (Yamanishi Michihiro).

Mari Sonoda (Sonoda Mari)

Masato Kusaka (Kusaka Masato)

Shuji Mihara/Kamen Rider Delta (Mihara Shuji): A relatively cowardly member of Ryuseiji Juku who would rather forget about Orphenochs and go back to living a normal life. He would become the default wearer of the Delta Gear despite his cowardice. After Rina was hit by a truck retrieving the Delta case he had thrown into the street, he resolved to stop running and fight along side the others. Played by Atsushi Harada (Harada Atsushi).

Saya Kimura (Kimura Saya): A "nekojita" much like Takumi, Sayaka briefly wore the Delta Gear. Eventually she found her way to the Kikuchi Dry Cleaning shop and worked part-time there. She waited to see what kind of person Takumi was before deciding to hand over the Delta Gear to him. Unfortunately, she was killed before she could. Played by Mai Saitou (Saitō Mai).

Aki Sawada (Sawada Aki): After the attack at the Ryusei Juku reunion, he was transformed into the Spider Orphenoch by a Smart Brain experiment. He killed Sayaka to get the Delta Gear in order to become a member of "Lucky Clover". He has a habit of crafting animal origami and lighting them on fire just before a massacre. The flame would usually die out once the massacre is over. Played by Gou Ayano (Ayano Gō)

Rina Abe (Abe Rina): Played by Rie Kasai (Kasai Rie).

Kyousuke Tokumoto (Tokumoto Kyōsuke): Played by Shun Saeki (Saeki Shun).

Shouji Inukai (Inukai Shōji): Played by Takuma Watanabe (Watanabe Takuma).

Kiyotaka Nishida (Nishida Kiyotaka): Played by Yoshiaki Kawasaki (Kawasaki Yoshiaki).

Takahisa Shindou (Shindō Takahisa): Played by Shintaro Chikada (Chikada Shintarō).

Haruko Kamijou (Kamijō Haruka): Played by Hiroko Hayashi (Hayashi Hiroko).

Asami Ito (Ito Asami): Played by Kaoru Kurasawa (Kurasawa Kaoru).

Ken Arai (Arai Ken): Played by Hirohito Honda (Honda Hirohito).

Yuuki Kawachi (Kawachi Yūki): Played by Kenta Hinokio (Hinokio Kenta).

Shingo Outa (Ōta Shingo): Played by Takuji Kawakubo (Kawakubo Takuji)

Aonuma (Aonuma): Transformed into the Sloth Orphenoch after the attack. Played by Kazuma Kurihara (Kurihara Kazuma)

Smart Brain: A successful company that is a front for a group of Orphenochs dedicated to overthrowing humanity. This is the largest coordinated group of Orphenochs ever seen, and in Paradise Lost they seem to have formed a de-facto government after the Orphenoch revolution.

Kyouji Murakami (Murakami Kyōji): The Rose Orphenoch, Kyouji replaced the temporary Chief of Smart Brain, Toda Eiichi, after Eiichi was defeated by Faiz. He was later overthrown from his position by Hanagata and was replaced by Kiba Yuji. In Paradise Lost he has somehow been reduced to a head in a tank, although he still commands a high place in Smart Brain. Played by Katsuyuki Murai (Murai Katsuyuki).

Hanagata (Hanagata): The Ryuseiji Juku's adopted father and the former chief of Smart Brain. He also created the three Rider belts. He disappeared because he discovered that he was dying from his evolution into an Orphenoch. He returned to Smart Brain to strip the acting chief of his duties and appointed Kiba Yuji as the permanent head of the company. Played by Kouji Naka (Naka Kōji).

Smart Lady (スマート レディ Sumāto Redi): Smart Brain's "mascot", she works closely under the orders of the company's chief and helps fledgling Orphenochs. She never exhibits Orphenoch powers, and her species is left ambiguous. She acts friendly and playful towards the many workers at Smart Brain, although she doesn't realize that no one enjoys her company. Played by Hitomi Kurihara (Kurihara Hitomi)

Lucky Clover: An elite team of four Orphenochs within Smart Brain who represent the 'best of the best' (with the exception of the Chief). The members were Takuma, Saeko, Kitazaki; Mr. J was the fourth member, followed by Sawada. Both of them were killed.

Itsuro Takuma (Takuma Itsurō): The Centipede Orphenoch. He is always in fear of Kitazaki takes any opportunity when Kitazaki is weakened or hurt to bully him back. Played by Jun Yamasaki (Yamasaki Jun)

Saeko Kageyama (Kageyama Saeko): The Lobster Orphenoch, the calmest of the group. She often will show up to provide emotional support to her fellow Orphenoch when they seem scared or confused; many times for Takuma and Inui. Played by Waka (Waka)

Kitazaki (Kitazaki): The Dragon Orphenoch, the strongest of the group. He has two forms as an Orphenoch. His first form is the largest and most powerful. His second form is smaller and much faster than the first one. Everything he touches turns into ashes and he continually uses this fact to tease and bully Takuma. His ability to turn anything to ash has caused him to suffer from mental incapacitation. Played by Rei Fujita (Fujita Rei)

Mr. J (Misutā Jei): Crocodile Orphenoch who usually travels with his pet dog, Chaco. He has three lives and was finally killed by Takumi. Played by Kenneth Duria (Kenesu Dzuria)

Aki Sawada (Sawada Aki) Sawada was the first replacement after Mr. J had been defeated.

A video game based on the series was produced by Bandai, under the name Kamen Rider 555.

Trivia

The meaning behind the title Kamen Rider 555 is that there are 3 "fives," which is a word play to Faiz. The same can be said with its alternate title Masked Rider Φ's, this time as "Masked Rider Phi's".

"555" is also considered to be a "mystical number," or a "trigger number." It is said to represent humanity/Earth, as in Christian mythology, 666 represents the Devil/Hell and 777 represents God/Heaven. In Kamen Rider 555, Inui Takumi is considered to be the Savior of Humanity.

Two Kamen Rider Ryuki alumni have appeared in this series. Kurihara Hitomi, who played ORE Journal technician Shimada Nanako, appears as the "Smart Lady." Matsuda Satoshi (Akiyama Ren/Kamen Rider Knight) played the Crab Orphenoch, although he was only its voice actor.

Jun Yamasaki who played Itsuro Takuma in Kamen Rider 555 and Toru Houjo in Kamen Rider Agito is the first actor to play two different Riders in two different series as two different characters. He was G3 for a few episodes in Agito and was Faiz when his character stole the Rider Gear. The next actor to do this is Tomohisa Yuge who played Zolda in Ryuki and Thebee in Kabuto, then by Hassei Takano who played Raia in Ryuki and Nigo in Kamen Rider the First.

The new boyfriend of Yuuji Kiba's ex-girlfriend in Episode 1 is played by Shinnosuke Abe, known for his role as Shuichi Yoshihama/Impactor Logia in another Tokusatsu series, Chouseishin Gransazer (part of the Chouseishin series).

Atsushi Harada, who plays Shuji Mihara/Kamen Rider Delta, played GoGreen on Kyuukyuu Sentai GoGo-V. He is one of a handful of actors that transitioned from Super Sentai to Kamen Rider.

The character of Leo/Kamen Rider Psyga in the movie Kamen Rider 555: Paradise Lost became the first non-Japanese Kamen Rider, although the Saban adaptation of Kamen Rider BLACK RX (known as Masked Rider) technically featured American actor TJ Roberts as the main character.

Fujita Rei appeared in Ougon Kishi Garo as Suzumura Rei/Zero/Ginga. Fujita was only fifteen when he played the role of Kitazaki

The sound effects of a dialing in any of the Rider Gear phones are referenced in episode 17 of Kamen Rider Kabuto.

Murai Katsuyuki also appeared in Ougon Kishi Garo. He also had a cameo role in Kamen Rider Blade: Missing Ace, along with Izumi Masayuki and Karahashi Mitsuru.

Along with the "555/Fives/Faiz" pun, the other Kamen Riders in "Faiz" have a pun within their name as well, mainly based on their Henshin "Number" (Or perhaps Vice-Versa):

Kaixa is "SB-913". The name "Kaixa" while a play on "X" (Chi in the Greek Alphabet) also could stem from the Japanese pronunciation of his number: 9 is "Kyu" ("K" or "Ka" sound taking) 1 is "Ichi" ("I" or "Ii" sound) 3 is "San" ("Sa" sound) Thus "Ka-i-sa" ("9-1-3").

Delta's number is "SB-333". The shape of the letter "Δ", or Delta, is a triangle, which has 3 sides.

Furthermore the term "Delta" is often used to refer to a 3-sided body of land or object, thus the Number "333".

Psyga's number is "SB-315", both a play on the letter "Ψ", Psi, and the Japanese pronunciation of his number: 3 is "San" ("Sa" sound), 1 is "Ichi" ("I" or "Ii" sound, similar to Kaixa's name) and 5 is "Go" ("Ga" sound, taken from the letter "G" in Go), thus: Sa-i-ga.

Kusaka Masato has worn all three of the Kamen Rider belts (Faiz, Kaixa and Delta). The Kaixa Gear is his primary belt. He wore the Faiz Gear to trick Lucky Clover. He wore the Delta Gear to battle the Beetle Orphenochs (Rhinoceros and Stag).

] Notes

* In the logo, Φ's, 555, and Faizu ((Faizu? The transliteration of "Φ's" or "Phi's" into Japanese) are all used for the same part of the show's name; 555 is the most prominent.

KAMEN RIDER AGITO

AKA: MASKED RIDER AGITO

A man named Shouichi Tsugami seemingly has no memory. He doesn't know who he is, where he came from, or how he came upon his peculiar circumstances. Tsugami, seemingly for no reason, transforms into a powerful superhuman, Agito, whenever in the presence of crime. The primary evil that he combats is a race of powerful beast men, known as the Unknown who have been responsible for a series of murders around Tokyo.

In response, the police department unleash their newest weapon, the G3 powersuit. G3 and Agito don't know whether they should join up and defeat the Unknowns, their common enemy, or to combat each other, keeping the mysteries that entwine them separate. Ultimately, even more mysteries unfold, with the appearance of Kamen Rider Gills, who is on a search to uncover why his father committed suicide. These mysteries and others collide, with the fate of Tokyo and the entire universe in the balance.

Kamen Rider Agito (Kamen Raidā Agito?), translated as Masked Rider Agito, was a tokusatsu superhero television series. It is the twelfth series in the Kamen Rider series of tokusatsu programmes. It was a joint collaboration between Ishimori Productions and Toei, and was shown on TV Asahi from January 28, 2001 to January 27, 2002.

To simply explain the Kamen Rider Agito series is a heavy burden itself. Where can one start on a series with a story already in motion from episode one, that were just thrust into, a story that is like a labyrinth, with ever changing corners, and multiple layers. Main writer Toshiki Inoue outdid himself with this series, and the man should be awarded a prize for the intricate planning he put into it.

The series begins with an artifact washing to shore, a boy and his grandfather find it. What is this artifact? It soon falls into the hands of the police, whose scientific division discover that it's an ancient clock of sorts -- its' orbs spinning, counting down -- but to what? At the same time, mysterious, out-of-this world murders take place.

We follow an amnesiac named Shouichi Tsugami, one of the deepest characters to grace a tokusatsu series. He's a light-hearted young man, a wonderman who can do just about anything. However, he does rub certain people the wrong way with his zen state of mind. He has no idea what his background is, but he doesn't care. He's so happy living in the now, with the family who have taken him in, that he simply feels he doesn't need to know. The head of the family, a college professor named Misugi, took him in after some schoolgirls found him washed up on the shore of a beach. He had no belongings on him except for a letter-less envelope addressed to "Shouichi Tsugami."

The other main character of the series is a college student named Ryou Ashihara, a guy who seems to know nothing but bad luck. He was almost killed in an automobile accident, he lost his girlfriend, he lost his place on his school's swim team, and his father was found dead. As the series starts, he also experiences immense pain throughout his body.

The third hero of the series is a young detective, trying his best to solve this case, Makoto Hikawa. He works with a scientific portion of the police department, the G3 Unit, which has created a mechanical suit for him to wear, to defend the city from potential supernatural forms.

The artifact was counting down the arrival of the demonic beings known as The Lords (the police dub them "Unknown"), creatures created by and from the black-clad Mysterious Youth, whose origins are explained only towards the series' climax.

Tsugami's and Ashihara's bodies react to the dark forces that commit these murders, but with radiant lights of heaven beaming from their torso. They soon become the "Kamen Riders" Agito and Gils, and together with Officer Hikawa's Kamen Rider G3 armor, risk their lives to annihilate the hellborn Unknown... ..and that's only the beginning. Many characters come and go, many who hold the secret to Shouichi's past, many who are enemies to our heroes. Who is Shouichi Tsugami? Will Ashihara survive the pain his "gift" from the lights of heaven has caused?

This series is excellent. Superb acting, great direction (the first two episodes, directed by Ryuta Tasaki, set up a wonderful atmosphere), excellent music, designs, action -- Agito is simply the best Kamen Rider series there has been, and it doesn't look like it will be topped.

The Unknowns

The major antagonists of Agito. A group of powerful disciples serving under the mysterious youth, also known as the Force of Darkness, or the creator of humanity. The name, "Unknown" is only a name used by the police department. Their real name is "The Lord Beasts". All of their tribes are separated into species of animals. They are normally man-shaped with a head of the animal, and sometimes with a weapon. All of them have a wing-shaped protuberance, sticking out of their shoulder, probably symbolizing that they are angels, or holy messengers. When they murder a certain person, they comit a ritual by using their hands, saying that they want permission to sin. At the sametime, a halo appears over their head. Every one of them have their unique way of murdering, for example: leaving the corpse in a tree, desolving the human, drying the human into death, changing the human into sand, pulling the human in the ground, dragging the human into the air and dropping them, vapourising, and so on. Under the mysterious youth exists three most powerful Unknowns, known as the El Lords, symbolizing Gabriel, Raphael, and Michael.

Notes

"Agito" is usually spelt "AGITΩ" in the official merchandises.

"Agito" was also the name of one of the adversary monsters in Kamen Rider J, but the two characters are not related.

During the opening sequence, the three main riders are shown riding around Twin Ring Motegi, the home circuit of show sponsor Honda.

None of the Riders in Agito are actually referred to as being "Kamen Riders" except for Agito in the game "Kamen Rider: Seigi no keifu" where he was dubbed "Kamen Rider Agito" by Shocker soldiers.

Gills is similar to Kamen Rider Amazon from Kamen Rider Amazon; rather than donning a suit and mask, he completely transforms into a savage monster with movable jaws and the ability to regenerate limbs. Unlike Amazon, transforming into Gills causes him pain upon changing back to his human form.

Kamen Rider G-3 was the first Kamen Rider not to have his armor materialize around him or organically transform to an organic Rider. Instead, he has a team help him put the Rider suit together.

Kamen Rider G-3 is also the first Kamen Rider that has more than one wearer.

Masaki Terasoma, who played Houjou's superior, Kaji, in episodes 18 and 19, was the voice actor for Shadow Moon in Kamen Rider Black and Kamen Rider Black RX.

Kamen Rider Agito is an indirect sequel to Kamen Rider Kuuga. Agito is mentioned to visually resemble No.4 in the second episode; Kuuga's Mighty form was referred to as (Unidentified Beings) No.4 during Kamen Rider Kuuga. Despite being in the same universe however, Kuuga and Agito never encounter one another. The owner of the bike shop that Ashihara/Gills frequents is played by Tetsuya Nakayashiki, suit actor for mostly every Rider from V3 through Super One. Nakayashiki is nicknamed "Mr. Kamen Rider."

Agito is also the first Kamen Rider to feature the three main types of Riders: the mystical Rider (one that draws power from ancient technology or mystical methods, like Kuuga and Hibiki), the organic Rider (one whose anatomy changes to become a Rider, like Amazon and Shin), and the high-technology Rider (one who is either a cyborg or uses advanced technology to fight, of which majority of the Riders are).

Another Agito is the first Rider to have any additional clothing (in this instance, skirting) hanging from his body since Kamen Rider Super-1 (the last protagonist Kamen Rider to wear a scarf).

The franchise has released a series of Hanshin toys with Bandai through 2001 to 2002. The franchise also released a line of 12 inch action figures by Medicom and Timehouse:

KAMEN RIDER AMAZON

AKA: MASKED RIDER AMAZON

AKA: KAMEN RAIDAA AMAZON

A plane crashes in the Amazon rainforest, leaving young Daisuke Yamamoto stranded without his parents. Soon adopted by a native tribe, Yamamoto becomes a modern day Tarzan, living off the land. However, Yamamoto's idyllic existence is cut short when Gorgos, the Ten Faced Demon, massacres his village, slaughtering everyone except himself. Gorgos is seeking the powerful "GiGi Bracelet", which gives the bearer fantastic power. A witch doctor in the village, sensing the trouble, retrieves the bracelet and gives it to Yamamoto for safekeeping. He then uses his knowledge of Incan science and magic to perform a mystical "operation" on Yamamoto, transforming him into the powerful "Kamen Rider Amazon"!

Yamamoto then travels to Japan, where he meets a professor who knew his father. Soon, the minions of Gorgos catch up to Yamamoto, murdering the professor. During the process, Yamamoto saves a young boy named Masahiko, who obliges to teach Amazon (as Masahiko dubs Yamamoto) the ways of the world. Amazon soon receives the "Jungler", his motorcycle. Amazon also partners up with Mogura-Juujin, a former henchman of Gorgos, after Amazon rescues him from execution. Together, the two of them face off against Gorgos himself, eventually destroying him in an atomic blast. However, the "GaGa Bracelet", the counterpart of the GiGi, then falls into the hands of the Garander Empire, led by the ruthless Emperor Zero. Amazon continues his fight against evil, eventually toppling the Garander empire and retrieving both bracelets.

His mission now complete, Amazon ventures off to travel the world.

Series number 4 introduced the sixth rider, Kamen Rider Amazon, and a tarzan-influenced story in the style of Jungle Prince. Orphaned in a plane crash in the South American jungle, the super strong Daisuke Yamamoto (Okazaki) is raised in the wild and eventually returns to his homeland, where he saves the young Masahiko (Matsuda) from a spider monster by transforming into a magical warrior. The monster is revealed to be the handiwork of the Geddon Organization, who have already killed off the inhabitants of Daisuke's village in search of his magical armband.

The only Kamen Rider whose suit did not resemble an insect, and the first who was not a cyborg, Kamen Rider Amazon instead transformed into a green shart-toothed creature resembling a chameleon. His story chronicles not only the usual Kamen Rider conventions of defending Japan from Invaders, but also his slow acclimatization to his native culture, as he learns to speak Japanese and reintegrate into civilization.

Produced by Tôru Hirayama.

Original Music by Shunsuke Kikuchi & Masato Shimon

Stunts - Kazuo Niibori.

Uniqueness

Kamen Rider Amazon is unique among the Kamen Rider series for many reasons. Amazon's design motif is based on a komodo dragon rather than the more typical suit basis of a grasshopper, beetle or other insect. However, there is some debate to this. Some fans have speculated that he is in fact modeled upon a piranha.[1] Additionally, Amazon's Rider Machine, "Jungler", is much more vibrant and exotic than others, featuring "wings" on the back and a "mouth" and "eyes" on the front.

Amazon transforms biologically, rather than simply donning a mask and armor. Artbooks indicate that his anatomy greatly changes. Literal, biological transformations would reappear in Kamen Rider Agito and Shin Kamen Rider. Amazon's henshin device was an armband, rather than a belt. He did have a type of utility belt in both his human and rider forms, although it had no relevance to his transformation. The series is also the first not to feature one or more previous Riders.

Amazon is also far more violent and brutal than previous series', Both Amazon and his enemies emit blood-like fluids, and Amazon's combat style is much more harsh, severe, and direct than previous Riders. He also occasionally bites his opponents, virtually unheard of in other Kamen Rider series, except perhaps Kamen Rider Gills from Agito.[2] Of all the Showa Kamen Riders, outside of Rideman who is not fully masked, Amazon is the only Kamen Rider who was able to open his mouth during his Rider form.

Other unique aspects of the series include the fact that no previous Rider characters appear in this series; however, the reason can be attributed to the fact that the series was cut down to only 24 episodes. Tachibani Tobei, the Kamen Rider mentor, did appear in several episodes.

Another important aspect of the programme is the appearance of Mogura Juujin. He first appears in episode 5. Mogura is a kaijin, sent by Geddon to kill Amazon, who fails his mission. Geddon, displeased with Mogura's lack of progress, sentences him to death. Amazon, taking pity on the monster, rescues him from his cruel fate. Mogura Juujin appears intermitently throughout the series, until his final appearance in episode 20. He is killed by Mushroom Juujin and Geddon soldiers, and die in Amazon's arms. Amazon brutally slaughters Mushroom Juujin in revenge, and builds a memorial in Mogura's honor.

KAMEN RIDER BLACK

AKA: MASKED RIDER BLACK

AKA: KAMEN RAIDAA BURAKKU

After being kidnapped by the cult Gorgom in the night of their 19th birthday, step-brothers Kotaro Minami and Nobuhiko Akizuki were submitted to a mutant surgery with the purpose of becoming the candidates for the next Gorgom's Century King. Kotaro escaped before the brainwashing, with help from his foster father, and turned against Gorgom.

He soon finds out the horrific truth from his step-father: Gorgom originally killed his true parents and, since both Kotaro and Nobuhiko were born on the day of a solar eclipse, referred to as "Black Sun" and "Shadow Moon". Kotaro, taking on the name of Kamen Rider BLACK, was determined to rescue his step-brother from Gorgom while protecting Japan. However, later in the series, Nobuhiko emerged as Shadow Moon to fight Kotaro with the survivor becoming the next Century King.

The Kamen Rider series proper did not return until the eighth season in 1987, Kamen Rider Black. After his parents are murdered by the savage Gorgom Cult, Kotaro (Kurata) is raised by the Akizuki family, whose son Nobuhiko (Horiuchi) shares the same birthday as his. In fact, the Gorgom cult is deliberately trying to engineer a race of super-warriors and believe the 19-year-old boys, born on the day of a solar eclipse, to be perfect material. The kidnap attempt is successful but Kotaro escapes the brainwashing process to become the 11th Kamen Rider, unaware that his friend also survived and has been transformed into his enemy Shadowmoon (Jisen).

Original music was by Ryudo Uzaki, and the stunt actor was Jiro Okamoto. Its direct sequel was KAMEN RIDER BLACK RX.

The series was produced by Nagafumi Hori, Ryô Iguchi, Naoyoshi Yamada and Susumu Yoshikawa. The original music was by Eiji Kawamura and Ryudo Uzaki, cinematography was by Fumio Matsumura, art direction by Hiroshi Butsuda and Toshio Miike. The costume design was by Tokyo Issho, and the production manager was Eisei Jizaki. Toru Kojima was the sound recording assistant, Nobuo Yajima was special effects director and the stunts were by Jiro Okamoto.

Lighting was by Hoya Hayashi, assistant editor was Seigo Hirasawa and project planner (uncredited) was Tohru Hirayama. The action director was Osamu Kaneda, wire works were by Shuichi Kuniyone, prosthetics were by Takeshi Maezawa, the action director was Jun Murakama, and the lighting was by Isao Nakagawa. The illustrator was Ryu Noguchi, wire works also by Katsuo Ogami, assistant photographer was Masaji Okabe, character co-ordinator was Satoshi Osano, wire works by Ei Suzuki, assistant editor was Jun Taguma, photographer was Seisen Takahashi and continuity was handled by Yukiko Tomita and Miko Uchido. The special effects were handled by Tokusatsu Kenkyujo.

If you like Kamen Rider series, don't begin with this one! After this series, the other "old" riders seem "very old". The story is a little bit tragic (like all the Kamen Rider series). Sorry, but the ending is not very happy. Good story, good fights, cool effects (in 1987), and I like the ending theme, "Long Long Ago, 20th Century". Kotaro Minami is the only Kamen Rider that comes in two different series, Black and Black RX. Be careful with the Black Masked Rider (USA), has a weird story, a cheap copy from Black RX (I think Power Rangers is a better copy of Japan sentai than this.)

Trivia

The show's opening theme song was sung by Kamen Rider BLACK himself, Tetsuo Kurata.

Kamen Rider BLACK was the first Kamen Rider who did not wear a scarf in his transformed state. Since then, no kamen rider has worn a scarf unless they consider Clone Blade or Hopper I & Hopper II.

Kamen Rider BLACK was the first series with a group of villains that did not have henchmen to pit against the hero.

Although the first Kamen Rider series featured 3 different types of motorcycles, Kamen Rider BLACK was the second series where a hero alternated between 2 different motorcycles (the first being Kamen Rider Super-1) whereas in the earlier series, one replaced the other.

The Kotaro Minami character return in the sequel Kamen Rider Black RX.

In the Philippine dub of the show, Kotaro is named Robert Akizuki and Nobuhiko to Stephen Akizuki. The way they are renamed, they appeared to be blood related to other people, adding more drama to the tragic storyline.

Jun Yoshida (Birugenia) played Sorcross Poe in Uchuu Keiji Shaider three years prior to Kamen Rider BLACK.

In the Brazilian dub of the show (called Black Kamen Rider,) Kotaro Minami is named Issamu Minami.

Kamen Rider Black RX (Black RX Kamen Raidā Burakku Aru Ekkusu), shortened by some to Kamen Rider RX is a Japanese tokusatsu superhero television series produced as part of the Kamen Rider franchise. It was a joint collaboration between Ishinomori Productions and Toei, and was broadcast on MBS from October 23, 1988 to September 24, 1989 with a total of 47 episodes. The series was a direct sequel to Kamen Rider BLACK. Kurata stayed in the lead role for the ninth series, Kamen Rider Black-RX, which begins with him captured by the Crisis Empire and launched into space, where solar energy causes him to change into a more advanced hero and one with multiple forms, such as his RX suit, as well as the Roborider and Biorider variants. He was also the only Kamen Rider to have a car in addition to the usual motorcycle and benefited from the help of all ten previous Kamen Riders, including the short-lived ZX, for the final confrontation with the Crisis Empire. The Kamen Rider series continued, but it was the Black-RX incarnation that made it to the US mass-market, when it was released by Saban Entertainment as MASKED RIDER (1995). In the tradition of other Americanized versions such as BEETLEBORGS and VR TROOPERS, much of the fighting and special effects footage remained, though the cast members out of costume were replaced with local actors. However, the English language Masked Rider did not achieve the longevity of its Saban stablemates and soon disappeared.

Meanwhile, the Japanese Kamen Rider series entered another lull after Black-RX, broken by the occasional movie and video outings that singularly failed to develop into another series. Discounted by many fans as non-canonical, the straight to video production New Kamen Rider (1990) features Shin (Ishikawa), a youth whose DNA is combined with that of a grasshopper to give him the ability to transform into a superhero - in other words, this masked rider doesn't actually wear a mask at all, like Kamen Rider Amazon, nor is he a cyborg.

Similar issues surrounded the short theatrical movies Kamen Rider Zo (1993), directed by JETMAN's Keita Amemiya with costumes by Yasushi Nirasawa and featuring Hiroshi Tsuchikao as a hero created from mixing locust DNA with a human being and cybernetics, and Kamen Rider J (1994), starring Yuta Mochizuki as a reporter who transforms into a grasshopper cyborg in order to defend the world from the alien Fog Mother. As a further sign of producers messing with the old formula, Kamen Rider J also had the ability to transform into a giant version of himself in the style of ULTRAMAN. These characters appeared in two other spin-off movies, but pointedly in association with each other, not with earlier incarnations.

Costume Design by Keita Amamiya. This tv show is simply amazing. I've always been a huge fan of the Kamen Rider series, but KAMEN RIDER BLACK is by far the greatest Kamen Rider series to date. All Kamen Rider fans say it's one of the best, but many say it is the best. Tetsuo Kurata makes his acting debut as Kotaro Minami, aka Kamen Rider Black. Kurata-san makes a wonderful debut, you would have thought he's been acting his whole life. He was only 17 when KR Black first started. The plot, and the action is almost flawless. And the special effects are ahead of it's time. Only one complaint, the previous Kamen Riders don't even make a guest appearance in Black, but they do appear at the end of the next series, Black RX, for a handful of episodes.

Characters

Minami Kotaro/Kamen Rider Black RX: A few years after the events in Kamen Rider BLACK, Kotaro was captured by the Crisis Empire. Refusing to side with the Crisis Empire, they destroyed his Kingstone thus rendering him unable to transform into Kamen Rider Black. He was then thrown into outer space, where the sun's radiation mutated his Kingstone and allowing him to turn into a new cyborg, Kamen Rider Black RX (Child of the Sun). Later, he discovers two new cyborg forms, Roborider (Prince of Sadness) and Biorider (Prince of Anger).

RX's other forms

RoboRider: He gained this form in Episode 15. RX becomes black and yellow all over and his belt becomes a gearbox. During his duration as the "Prince of Sadness", his strength is enhanced as well as his defense. He is also unharmed by explosions or projectile weapons. The only downside is that he moves slower than Black RX, as well as possessing robotic movement. His weapon is the Vortech Shooter, an energy firing pistol.

BioRider: He gain this form in Episode 17. BLack RX becomes blue and silver all over and his belt resembles that of a single Kingstone belt. During his duration as the "Prince of Anger" his speed is enhanced. He can also transform into water for escaping traps or attacking enemies while not getting hurt in the process. His weapon is the unbreakable sword, Bioblade.

Rider Machines

Acrobattler: This is the revived version of Black's old motorcycle, Battle Hopper. It is now capable of speaking coherent Japanese, and often has conversations with Kotaro. Whenever Black RX transforms into any of his two other forms, It does the same.

Roboizer: Acrobattler transforms into Roboizer when Black RX becomes RoboRider. This form of Acrobattler has two blasters mounted at its rear.

Mach Jabber: Acrobattler transforms into Mach Jabber when Black RX becomes BioRider.

Ridron: A high-speed car created by Kotaro shortly after becoming Black RX. It is highly intellegent, similiar to Acrobattler. It has two mandibles that can extend from the front to do break-ins or ramming enemies.

Grand Lord Crisis (42, 47-48): The true leader of the empire. He appears as a giant, ugly alien head in the finale. He is voiced by Naya Goro, the same person who voiced the other Great Leader reincarnations. However, in the later Kamen Rider series which were made 2 years after Shotaro Ishinomori death in 1998, Naya Goro's voice was never heard again thus may have ended the Great Leader once and for all.

General Jaaku (1-47): The military leader of the empire with somewhat a gold face mask and a black cape. He was initially seen as Black RX's archnemesis by fans until the voice of Grand Lord Crisis was heard. He is the most cowardly and is quick to ditch a battle before its even over. But he soon gave his life to ensure the others avoid Crisis' wrath when he transferred his life energy into Gedoll Ridoll before he died at Black RX's hands.

Dasmader (28-47): An inspector sent by Grand Lord Crisis at the middle of the series. The other Crisis members hates his way of doing his job. In the last episode, it was revealed that he is actually Grand Lord Crisis' host body.

Trivia

The "RX" in Black RX's name represents "RX sunlight", a part of energy in photosynthesis, which his belt is now powered by.

Kamen Rider Black RX was the first Kamen Rider to have multiple forms: Roborider and Biorider. The concept of "multiple form changing" riders would be repeated with Kamen Rider Kuuga (2000), who has many different armor types, Kamen Rider Agito (2001), Kamen Rider Blade (2004), and Kamen Rider Kabuto (2006).

Since RoboRider is called the Prince of Sadness and BioRider the Prince of Anger, Kamen Rider Black RX is sometimes called the "Prince of Joy" by fans.

Kamen Rider Black RX is the only Kamen Rider to have a car (Ridron), a theme that has not been repeated since.

The appearance of the previous 10 Kamen Riders in the end of the series was their last.

Rather than Rider kicks, Kamen Rider Black RX and his different forms had different finishing moves. Black RX had a light saber weapon called "Revolcane" which would saw through enemies. RoboRider had an energy-pistol that fired high-velocity lasers. BioRider had an unbreakable guardless blade. Although Black RX and each of his forms were able to execute Rider kicks, they were not finishing moves.

The series was adapted by Saban in the United States for the unsuccessful Masked Rider show. Despite the use of the official English-translated name ("Masked Rider") in the title (at the demands of Toei and creator Shotaro Ishinomori), many fans of Kamen Rider were not pleased with the poor execution of the series (story changes, poor casting, etc.).

In Saban's Masked Rider in the United States, RoboRider's name was changed into Masked Rider Super Gold and BioRider into Masked Rider Super Blue. Shadow Moon's name was changed into RoboRider. Acrobattler became Combat Chopper and Ridron became Magno, which was given a female voice instead of male. Both Chopper and Magno transform from cyber-insects: a mantis and a beetle respectively.

The Acrobattler/Roboizer/Mach Jabber were created by Suzuki, a motorcycle/automobile company in Japan. The Ridron, Kamen Rider Black RX's car was created by Mazda, an automobile company in Japan.

KAMEN RIDER BLADE

AKA: MASKED RIDER BLADE

BOARD - A secret organization formed to protect mankind against mysterious beings known as the "Undead". Among their ranks are Kazuma Kenzaki (Blade) and Sakuya Tachibana (Garren) - two Kamen Riders who were created by BOARD after 52 of the Undead were accidentally released by the agency. After being kicked out of his apartment, Kazuma is offered to stay with aspiring journalist Kotaro Shirai in exchange for information on the Kamen Riders. Also living under the same roof is Hajime Aikawa - whose secret identity as Kamen Rider Chalice remains a mystery, as he fights alone and regards everyone, including the Kamen Riders, as his enemies.

Kamen Rider Blade (Kamen Raidā Bureido?), translated as Masked Rider Blade, is a Japanese tokusatsu superhero television series. It is the 14th installment in the famous Kamen Rider. It was broadcast on TV Asahi from January 25, 2004 to January 23, 2005. It is a joint collaboration between Ishimori Productions and Toei.

The primary motif of the series was the use of playing cards. This is similar to the series' 12th installment, Kamen Rider Ryuki. Each Rider in Blade is assigned one of the suits, as well as using them for attacks and defense.

Opening Theme: "Round ZERO~BLADE BRAVE" by Nanase Aikawa

Rider System

In the TV show, 3 different armored suits utilizing the Rider System had been produced by the B.O.A.R.D. organization. Their wearers were known as Kamen Riders:

Kamen Rider Garren

Kamen Rider Blade

Kamen Rider Chalice a.k.a. Black Joker Undead/Chalice the Legendary Undead

Kamen Rider Leangle

The movie adaptation Missing Ace introduced 3 additional Kamen Riders made by BOARD using the power of the Keroberos:

Kamen Rider Glaive a.k.a. Albino Joker Undead

Kamen Rider Larc

Kamen Rider Lance

The Rider System uses the power of sealed Category Ace Undead. The Undead are captured by the Riders by depleting their AP (attack points) and sealing them into blank cards (known as "Proper Blanks"). It fuses the user with the Undead at a genetic level, changing him/her into a Kamen Rider. The Rider System was developed after realizing the Joker has the ability to turn into any other sealed Undead.

The Mysterious Undead

The Undead are the monsters in the series. There were originally 53 Undead as 52 cards plus a Joker card make up a common card deck. The story of the Undead is the focus of the series. Centuries ago, a battle royale known as the Battle Fight was commenced to decide what species would rule the Earth. The 52 Undead represented 52 different species and the battle was a free-for-all. The losers would be sealed in stone slabs similar to the Proper Blank cards in the present time. The powerful Joker was also in the battle and if it won, the world would be flooded with giant roaches, the other species would be doomed and the Battle Fight would have to be restarted. The winner of that battle was the Human Undead, also known as the Two of Hearts and the world has been populated by humans ever since. In the present, human archaeologists discover the sealed Undead and accidentally set them free. Thus, a new Battle Fight begins.

Among the Undeads, there are several special Undeads, including the Royal Club Undeads and the Joker. The Royal Club Undeads are those of the Jack, Queen, and King Categories. These Undead can disguise themselves as humans and speak human language. They are feared by the other Undeads and either work in teams or work alone. They also manipulate other Undeads, such as the Zebra Undead, Tortoise Undead and Scarab Undead, into working for them. The Ace Category Undeads are the best fighters out of the Undead, with Chalice as the most strongest followed by the Spider Undead. The Jokers are unique Undeads that represent no species and can assume the form of any sealed Undead.

The Trials

Besides the Undead, there are other monsters fought by the Kamen Riders known as Trials. They were created by combining Undead DNA and Human DNA. They cannot be sealed with proper blanks; in fact, proper blanks are absorbed by them. The Trials were developed by the remnants of B.O.A.R.D. (excluding Kazuma and Shiori) in hopes of interfering with the impending Undead free-for-all battle.

Trial D - A Capture-Type Undead who recovered from any attack until Kenzaki gained K-Form. Destroyed by Blade King Form's Royal Straight Flush

Trial E - A Shooting-Type Undead based off of Garren's Rider data. Destroyed by Blade King Form's Royal Straight Flush

Trial F - An Energy-Type Undead used to capture Kenzaki. Destroyed by Wild Chalice's Wild Cyclone

Trial B - Destroyed by Trial G : An Electric-Type Undead disguised as Shiori's father, Yoshito. Originally, it's program was to protect Shiori by her father because he was dying. Before he died, he transferred all his memories only to be reprogrammed by Tennyouji to continue his bidding to interfere with the Undead battle. He dies saving Shiori from Trial G after remembering his original programming.

Trial G - A Fighting-Type Undead which was based off of Leangle's Rider data; he managed to defeat Jou Hikaru/Tiger Undead and managed to fight off all four Riders. It was about to kill Shiori until Trial B intervened remembering the original programming his creator gave him. Destroyed by Blade King Form's Royal Straight Flush & Wild Chalice's Wild Cyclone

In 1999, Hironari Amano played Mamoru Chiba/Tuxedo Kamen the male protagonist in Sailor Moon Musicals Kaguya Shima Densetsu and Kaguya Shima Densetsu Kaiteban and in 2004 is a guest in Shin Kaguya Shima Densetsu. He is not the first or the last Tuxedo Kamen to become a Kamen Rider. The first was Yuuta Mochizuki who was Tuxedo Kamen in a Sailor Moon Musical and played Kamen Rider J in 1994. Yuuta Mochizuki is most famous for playing TyrannoRanger in Kyoryuu Sentai ZyuRanger. Shibue Jyouji played Tuxedo Kamen in Toei's 2003-2004 Live Action version of Sailor Moon called Pretty Guardian Sailor Moon (PGSM for short). Shibue later played Kamen Rider Ibuki in 2005's Kamen Rider Hibiki. One can also consider Tomohisa Yuge as Tuxedo Kamen since he was playing a Tuxedo Kamen imposter in PGSM and has been two different riders (Zolda and TheBee) in two different series(Ryuki and Kabuto) but only for a few episodes.

The names "Blade" and "Chalice" refer to the tarot suits of Swords and Cups, which correspond to those riders' modern-day playing card suits. "Garren" is the Japanese pronunciation of "Galleon" (or Coin), while "Leangle" is the pronunciation of "Liangle" which is a club/polearm type weapon. "Galleon" and "Liangle" are also tarot suits. All would be replaced by the modern suits of spades, hearts, diamond, and clubs.

Kamen Rider Blade is the first Kamen Rider series that introduces three different Kamen Riders in the first two episodes.

Kamen Rider Blade features the first Kamen Rider that is not born human (Hajime/Kamen Rider Chalice who is an Undead).

Kamen Rider Blade features the first Kamen Rider with both a mantis and spider motif.

KAMEN RIDER COUGAR

AKA: MASKED RIDER COUGAR

AKA: KAMEN RAIDAA KUUGA

The tenth season of Kamen Rider did not arrive until 2000, with Kamen Rider Cougar, which similarly eschewed some of the old conventions. Yusuke (Odagiri) tries on a mummy's belt taken from an archeological site and finds that it gives him the power to transform into an insectoid hero that can itself transform a second time into several elemental-themed speciality forms to combat the ancient Grongi tribes who have reawakened in Japan.

Kamen Rider Kuuga (Kamen Raidā Kūga), translated as Masked Rider Kuuga (see below Trivia section for an explanation of the puns in "Kuuga"), is a Japanese tokusatsu television series. It is the 10th installment in the popular Kamen Rider series of tokusatsu shows. It was a joint collaboration between Ishimori Productions and Toei, and was shown on TV Asahi from January 30, 2000 to January 21, 2001.

Cougar ushered in a new wave of interest in Kamen Rider from an unexpected source, as ratings revealed that the shows largest audience (after its target audience of 4-12s), comprised women in their 30s. In other words, the handsome, athletic Odagiri drew an audience not just of young children but of their lonely mothers! Consequently, at the shows close, its star walked into several high profile roles in night-time drama, such as Parfum De L e Jalouise and the Kamen Rider formula began to skew toward a different preception of it audience.

Kuuga marks the return of the Kamen Rider franchise for a newer, hipper Nippon audience. It retains the same basic premise (demons unleashed on Japan, hero fights the demons) of the original series while simultaneously updating the characters and story lines to sit well with modern viewers (aimed more at an adult audience).

The costume designs are fair. Kuuga's costumes are all well made, if a little simplistic, but the Grongi demon's costuming doesn't work so well. I've heard it described as "glue and paper monsters" and that about sums it up. The music is all great, setting different tones for different situations, but the best is the fighting music, which consists of thrashing guitar riffs and drum beats.

The fights scenes are great. While a little slow in places, it is perfectly understandable considering the costumes. The choreography seems more Hong Kong influenced than previous outings and the stuntmen are in top condition. Mixed with the martial arts superheroic melee is some excellent motorcycle action and stunts, something lacking in series' like Ryuki and Faiz. There is even some great weapons-based combat (Including staff, crossbow and sword action) that doesn't overstay its welcome like it did in Ryuki.

Overall, Kuuga is not only a fantastic Kamen Rider installment, but a fanstastic standalone feature as well. If you're in the mood for some good old fashioned rubber-suited kung fu ass kicking, slammin guitar music, immersive storytelling, well-crafted characters, and a good guy like they don't make them anymore, then grab your device of choice and HENSHIN!

Kamen Rider Kuuga's Forms

Kuuga is the Kamen Rider with most forms to date, 11 in total. He could change his body colour proper to each form.

Growing Form (White)

The weakest form of Kuuga. In the first episode, Yuusuke wears the belt to fight the spider Grongi (Zu·Gumun·Ba) but is unable to fully utilize the power of the belt. Kuuga will turn white if he is seriously injured & won't be able to transform for 2 hours. In the first few episodes he is labeled as Unidentified Being 2 and thought to be a different being from his other form.

Mighty Form (Red)

Kuuga's Default Form. First able to transform into this form while fighting the bat Grongi (Zu·Gooma·Gu) and he was labeled as Unidentified Being 4. In this form Kuuga uses the 'Mighty Kick' to kill the monsters.

Dragon Form (Blue)

Dragon Form is not as strong as Mighty Form, but Kuuga is much more agile and quicker. He uses a staff (Dragon Rod) that can be created out of any pole or stick-like object. His finishing move in this form is "Splash Dragon".

Pegasus Form (Green)

While in Pegasus Form, Kuuga's senses are heightened to extreme levels, which enables him to see and hear his opponents with deadly accuracy. The downside to this is that it can not be sustained for too long because of the enormous strain placed on the nervous system. Kuuga uses a crossbow (Pegasus Bow Gun) that can be created out of any gun-like object, commonly Ichijou's hand gun. His finishing move with the bow gun is "Blast Pegasus."

Titan Form (Purple)

In Titan Form, Kuuga's defense are greatly increased, which allows him to withstand his opponents attacks long enough to get in close range. He uses a sword (Titan Sword) that can be created out of pole or stick-like objects, normally the control handle of his bike. His finishing move is "Calamity Titan."

Rising Mighty Form (Red + Gold)

Mighty Form upgrade. The Anklet (Mighty Anklet) is equipped in the right leg. In this form Kuuga uses the 'Rising Mighty Kick' to kill the monsters.

Rising Dragon Form (Blue + Gold)

Dragon Form upgrade. Rising dragon form uses a staff with a blade (Rising Dragon Rod) that can be created out of any pole or stick-like object. His finishing move in this form is "Rising Splash Dragon."

Rising Pegasus Form (Green + Gold)

Pegasus Form upgrade. Pegasus form uses a crossbow (Rising Pegasus Bow Gun) that can be created out of any gun-like object, commonly a pistol or revolver. His finishing move with the bow gun is "Rising Blast Pegasus", which is similar to "Blast Pegasus" but fires multiple shots rather than a single shot.

Rising Titan Form (Purple + Gold)

Titan Form upgrade. This was Kuuga's first upgraded form. In Titan form, Kuuga uses a sword (Rising Titan Sword) that can be created out of pole or stick-like objects as well. His finishing move is "Rising Calamity Titan."

Amazing Mighty Form (Black + Gold)

Similar to the Rising Mighty form but black in color and much stronger. The Anklet (Mighty Anklet) is equipped in the both leg. In this form Kuuga uses the 'Amazing Mighty kick' to kill the monsters.

Ultimate Form (Black with 4 Horns)

His most dangerous form, it combines all the powers of the other forms, but the risk is that the user would become evil. Only used once in Episode 48 to fight against N·Daguba·Zeba, the most powerful Grongi.

Equipment

Arcle - This transformation belt is the source of Kuuga's power. While being attacked by the spider Grongi (Zu·Gumun·Ba), Yuusuke grabbed the belt and after putting it on, it immediately fused into his body. When he transforms it reappears around his waist and is always the same color as his current form. A stone called Amadam is embedded in the belt.

Gouram - A mysterious machine that is formed from fragments found at the original excavation site at the beginning of the story. After it's initial formation, the Gouram assimilated various other objects in its search for Kuuga. It assists Kuuga in various capacities such as aerial transportation and becoming vehicle armor, however, after being used for a certain amount of time, it returns back to its shattered fragments until Yuusuke revives it. It is very maneuverable and capable of a top air speed of 500km/h (310.69mph)

TryChaser 2000 (TRCS 2000) - A new model of police motorcycle designed to be faster and more powerful than the conventional bikes that were currently utilized by the police force. After Ichijou befriends Kuuga and believes that he is the only one capable of successfully fighting the Unidentified Beings, he gives one to Yuusuke. Dimensions: Length - 2.4m (7.87ft) Height - 1.25m (4.1ft) Top Speed: 300km/h (186mph)

Try Gouram - When the Gouram finally finds Kuuga, it attaches itself to the TRCS 2000 as armor. While in this form the bike is capable of ramming opponents in a similar manner to Kuuga's Might Kick. Dimensions: Length - 3.2m (10.49ft) Height - 1.25m (4.1ft) Top Speed: 400km/h (248.55mph)

BeatChaser 2000 (BTCS 2000) - An upgraded model of the TryChaser 2000 that was designed specifically for Kuuga. It is faster and more durable than the TRCS model. Yuusuke utilized this bike in order to track down and defeat the 2nd grass hopper Grongi (Go·Badaa·Ba). The Police Department was hesitant to give this to Kuuga after his first transformation into Rising Might Form resulted in the destruction of a large area of the city. Dimensions: Length - 2.4m (7.87ft) Height - 1.25m (4.1ft) Top Speed: 420km/h (260.97mph)

Beat Gouram - The combination of the BeatChaser 2000 and the Gouram resulted in an even more powerful vehicle for Kuuga. Dimensions: Length - 3.2m (10.49ft) Height - 1.25m (4.1ft) Top Speed: 570km/h (354.18mph)

Rising Beat Gouram - This is the result of Kuuga combining the Golden power with the Beat Gouram. After this form, the Gouram returned back to the Police Science Division a different color and in one piece. It was used only once, in order to destroy the Buffalo Grongi(Go·Baberu·Da). Dimensions: Length - 3.2m (10.49ft) Height - 1.25m (4.1ft) Top Speed: 700km/h (434.95 mph)

The Grongis

The Grongi Tribe / Unidentified Beings (グロンギ族 / 未確認生命体 Gurongi Zoku / Mikakunin Seimeitai) are mysterious ancient Creatures that kill people as a game. They embedded the object like Amadam of Kuuga in the belt. A human forms have the tattoo of a motif living thing in the body. B is attached to human form. Trivia

The name "Kuuga" is seen in episode 48 in the kanji, meaning "clear-self," most likely a reference to Godai's Zen-like behavior. "Kuuga" is also a pun on "kuwagata," the Japanese term for stag beetle, making Kuuga the first main Rider to have a stag beetle motif.

Just like original Kamen Rider show, this series started out with a spider monster first, and a bat monster second.

In one episode, episode 40, Godai mentions he was a student of a "Professor Hongo Takeshi." This is almost certainly a reference to Kamen Rider 1 from the original Kamen Rider series.

KAMEN RIDER DEN-O

AKA: MASKED RIDER ELECTRIC KING

Using the power of the Imagin and the Rider Pass, Ryotaro Nogami is able to travel to different times through the DenLiner. By traveling through time, he transforms into Kamen Rider Den-O, and fights monsters of all sizes, preventing them from altering the past to affect the present and future.

Kamen Rider Den-O (translated as Masked Rider Electro-King¹) is the seventeenth installment in the popular Kamen Rider franchise of tokusatsu programs. It is a joint collaboration between Ishimori Productions and Toei. It premiered 28 January 2007 on tv asahi.

Pass System

The Rider Pass is a card-like pass that is used for granting access to the train known as the DenLiner. This process only works when the hour, minute, and second are the same, such as 12:12:12. Certain people, known as "Singularity Points", are able to exist outside time and some who can use the Rider Pass are able to use it to transform.

Rider Tickets are tickets that store information on Imagin. The tickets keep a record of the past date in which the Imagin has ventured and a figure of the Imagin when swiped over a person whose past has been violated by the Imagin.

Kamen Rider Den-O uses the Den-O System, and can swipe the Rider Pass across the Terminal Buckle of the Den-O belt, specifically the SetTouch, to activate a transformation. He can also do this to achieve Form Switches, and while transformed to perform a Full Charge (finishing attack). Up to four Imagin can be summoned by using the Rider Pass, and each allows for Den-O to change into a specific form. The red button allows for Momotaros and Sword Form. The blue button allows for Urataros and Rod Form. The yellow button allows for Kintaros and Ax Form. It is shown that Imagin that are used for the form changes temporarily take over a hosts' personality. Den-O is able to use the Rider Tickets by inserting them into the Rider Pass, allowing the the DenLiner to reach the time in which the Imagin has traveled to.

A list of the various characters within Kamen Rider Den-O. Some fight alongside Den-O against the Imagin, while others are against him. Civilians take no part in the battle with the Imagin, but are accidentally involved, sometimes against their will.

Imagin are creatures from the future who have come to the past in hopes of ruling the future. Imagin grant the wishes of weak-hearted humans by diving into their past and changing it, in turn altering the future. By using energy gathered from their past, Imagin are able to grow to massive proportions known as Gigandeath.

Parodies

Kamen Rider Den-O has been parodied and referenced in recent episodes of various anime.

Sgt. Frog Episode 169 Part A was titled "Bullet Train's King" and featured the Keroro Platoon piloting various frog-shaped bullet trains similar to the control of the DenLiner. The episode featured phrases such as "I have arrived!", "I am from the start, at the climax", and "My hissatsu attack" are spoken by Urere (Urere replaced Momotaros's boastful "Ore" with the more humble "Boku" Urere is also voiced by Toshihiko Seki, Momotaros's seiyū. The phrase "It's good! It's great! It's awesome!" is spoken by Giroro, as these are the lyrics of "Climax Jump", Den-O's opening theme. Keroro also re-enacts the opening sequence of Den-O on his "KeroLiner.

Hayate the Combat Butler - Episode 16 featured "guest" appearances of the DenGasher Sword, Rod, and Ax Modes as well as cameo appearances of the Owner, Momotaros, and Hana on a train very similar to DenLiner Gouka.

KAMEN RIDER HIBIKI

AKA: MASKED RIDER HIBIKI

AKA: MASKED RIDER ECHO DEMON

Adachi Asumu is a boy who is almost done with middle school. During a trip to his relatives, he meets a rather odd man just loosely named Hibiki. When Asumu's cousin is kidnapped by the Makamou, ancient monsters who threaten people, the oddball Hibiki saves the day in his true form, an Oni, field agents of the Makamou extermination group Takeshi. From that day on, Asumu follows Hibiki's steps as well as his co-workers at Takeshi, the young yet wise Ibuki and the courageous rookie Todoroki. 2005 is definitely quite a year for Adachi Asumu in this action-packed drama.

Kamen Rider Hibiki (Kamen Raidā Hibiki?), Masked Rider Echo Demon in English, is a Japanese tokusatsu superhero television series. It is the fifteenth installment in the popular Kamen Rider franchise of tokusatsu programs. It is a joint collaboration between Ishimori Productions and Toei. Kamen Rider Hibiki first aired on January 30th, 2005 and aired its final episode on January 22nd, 2006. This series is noted for introducing new themes and styles yet unseen in other shows. Unlike other shows in the franchise, Kamen Rider Hibiki focuses heavily on character development rather than an overreaching season-long plots.

The main themes of the series was the use of "pure sound" to defeat demons.

If Kamen Rider Ryuki is the "black sheep" of the franchise, I can honestly say that Kamen Rider Hibiki is the "screwball" of all riders (not including Saban's "hackjob" of Black RX). Pretty much the story is about a group of "Oni" (although they have Rider in its title) hunt monsters throughout Japan called Makamou which consist of a male and female duo and their parent, which is a usually a giant monster, most of the time anyway. Story is a bit simplistic, not to mention flat. However, the character interaction is pretty good, balancing the humor and seriousness in some of them. However, because of the pattern the past few Rider series motif (such as Faiz using Greek Letters and Blade using Card Suits, the next expected thing would be musical notes). The instrument motif came as a big surprise. More so is that when you see the monsters being vanquished by musical instruments, you kind of feel sorry for them. I mean Death by Musical Instrument is a bit wrong.

Trivia

The title of every Oni bears the -ki suffix , which is semantically identical to "Oni" in Japanese. It also has some resemblance with the real name of the Oni.

Kamen Rider Shuki is the first female Rider to appear in a TV series (as Kamen Rider Femme and Kamen Rider Larc were only movie Kamen Riders) and the third legitimate female Rider in the Kamen Rider Franchise and like her predecessors, she too was killed off.

A new version of the Henshin Hero, Ninja Arashi was used in the series as an Oni armor.

Kamen Rider Hibiki is often viewed as the "black sheep" of the kamen rider franchise. Opinions on the series are split. Some enjoy the slow subtle flow the series had, others feel it's a "disgrace" to the franchise. Though, many only feel this because acts such as the word "henshin" and the rider kicks were left out. Overall, the show wasn't a runaway hit, but it was still only the third lowest rated series out of the current six new age series, ahead of Kamen Rider Ryuki and Kamen Rider Faiz/555.

Rumors spread that 2005 would be without a Kamen Rider as the show was going to be called "Otogeki Rider Hibiki" though this was never proven to be true. Hibiki was always intended to be as the evolution of sorts of Kamen Rider.

Kenji Matsuda, who plays Kamen Rider Zanki, plays Kamen Rider Touki in the movie. This makes him the first actor to play two different characters and two different Riders within the same series.

Staff changes

Kamen Rider Hibiki began with Shigenori Takadera as the Toei producer, however, Shinichiro Shirakura, having participated in other Heisei Rider series, had no involvement whatsoever in the Hibiki production, was appointed producer of the movie Kamen Rider Hibiki and the Seven War Demons, eventually replacing Takadera in the TV production from episode 30. The writing staff also changed; Tsuyoshi Kida and Shinji Ooishi were replaced by Toshiki Inoue and Shouji Yonemura, who had worked with Shirakura in "Sh15uya" and other Heisei Kamen Rider series.

In addition, personalities such as Sensha Yoshida, a renowned manga artist, Hiroshi Yamamoto, a video-game designer, Masao Higashi, a seasoned television and movie critic, and many others published severe criticisms in their personal blogs. Even the show's star, Shigeki Hosokawa, the actor portraying Hibiki, stated in his personal website that Inoue's scripts needed adjustments and that this whole staff change was fraudulent. With the first production staff, Hosokawa would join the writers meetings and give suggestions, however, due to time restraints, Hosokawa couldn't give his opinion in the second production staff meetings.

In an interview published on TV Asahi's main website, Hosokawa stated that the script for the final episode was rewritten on the final day of filming. He later said that the script was sent in so late that it arrived on set as the final battle was being filmed. This finale was scrapped and then a new ending that, according to Hosokawa, was nothing like the intended ending, was filmed. Later in the interview, Hosokawa said that the Oni suit used by Kiriyama was a kitbash of two new suits made especially for the characters of Asumu and Kiriyama. Hosokawa said that this was the most upsetting change to him as the final script had been rewritten six times at that point and all but the filmed version contained both Asumu and Kiriyama becoming Oni.

In January of 2006, at the Kamen Rider Super Live, Hosokawa stated that The series was essentially an incomplete process and that It shouldn't have ended that way, we had more than one series in mind and the initial episode order for the first series was 51 episodes. Also, Mitsu Murata, who portrayed the Douji, declared on his blog: I can't forgive them, I want to continue HIS idea, complaining about the removal of Takadera as producer. These declarations caused an unprecedented storm within the professional tokusatsu market and many of Toei's executives were berated for allowing a series to be handled in such a manner.

There has never been any official statement from Toei, but many critics point out several items might have caused it, the main reason being the alarmingly low toy sells. It is not usual for a Toei production to have two different producers for the TV series and the movie. A different producer was appointed for the movie because Toei had an unprecedented number of schedule problems with Takadera.

Many Japanese reviewers felt that while the show may not have been popular with Japanese children, it was able to convey a level of character development that most series in the franchise had failed to do in the past. It has been rumored that TV Asahi was to give the Kamen Rider slot an afternoon time slot due to many critics feeling that the show had "evolved" beyond a mere kids' show. Due to the show's less than fantastic financial success, plans for the spin off franchise are currently on hiatus.

Changes

Asumu's opening narration at the start of every episode was removed.
A new opening was introduced.

The ending sequence was removed altogether.
Kyosuke Kiriyama was introduced to the series, Kida has said that this was somewhat like the character of "Takeshi" that would have been introduced in episode 32. Takeshi was rewritten to be Kiriyama, as Takeshi, he would have been both an Oni and Asumu's brother.
Eiki and Shouki, who were both supposed to be main cast members, had their parts removed.
The filmed final battle was removed.

The fire breathing and the Onizume (Oni claws) sequences were completely removed along with Ibuki opening his mouth for his attack. Makamou that opened their mouths too wide or spurted goo were also removed. There had been complaints about these sequences from parent advocacy groups who claimed that they scared children. Other things Things as complicated-to-animate CG Makamou and shooting in mountains were reduced greatly due to cost. Takadera, unwilling to change his script to adapt to these changes was unwillingly removed from the project.

A second female Rider by the name of Mishiki was dropped, as was Akira's role as an Oni at the end of the series.

The fourth rider, a female, went as far as having a DX Otoukenban marketed and a prop suit made for her before she was dropped.

Players can connect their Tatacon, the controller from the Taiko: Drum Master game, to play along with the beat to defeat their enemies.

Hyper Battle Video

The spin-off Asumu Henshin was released direct-to-video during the later half of 2005. It is special feature that Adachi Asumu plays an active part as Oni, guided by Takeshi's Animal discs. The Oni form of Asumu is identical to Hibiki. The only other Oni in the video (not counting the stock footage scenes) is Sabaki.

Kamen Rider Hibiki & The Seven War Demons

Main article: Kamen Rider Hibiki & The Seven War Demons

The movie spin-off of the 2006 Kamen Rider series, entitled Kamen Rider Hibiki & The Seven War Demons, takes place in the Warring States Period. The film serves as a prequel to the Makamou war and features five movie-only Oni known as Kabuki, Kirameki, Habataki, Nishiki, and Touki.

Ongeki Rider Hibiki

Many fans feel that the ending to Kamen Rider Hibiki was inconclusive while others feel that it gave the story a nice closure. There are however a few loose ends that need to be tied up story-wise, and while it may not have been the highest rated series, there are rumors of Kamen Rider Hibiki getting a second season under the name Ongeki Rider Hibiki (Sonic Strike Rider Hibiki?) marketed as a spin off of the Kamen Rider line, and as a continuation of Kamen Rider Hibiki. This rumor is supported strongly by the fact that the Ongeki Rider franchise was one that Ishinomori had planned to do before his death. Ironically, Ongeki Rider Hibiki was also one of the production names for Kamen Rider Hibiki. Two particular things that have caused these rumors, are the appearance of Gouki, Touki, Shouki and Banki at the end of Kamen Rider Hibiki's run. Along with a two page special with the current 11 kanto Oni in a giant battle, featured in the Japanese Tokusatsu magazine "Terebi". Shouki even had the stunt actor Oshikawa Yoshifumi casted to him (As with Makoto Itoh)

KAMEN RIDER KABUTO

AKA: MASKED RIDER KABUTO

In order to counter the threat of the mysterious kaijin group, WORM, an organization called ZECT was formed. However their main source of resistance, the Zect Troopers, were no match for the special powered Worm. ZECT then developed the MASKED RIDER SYSTEM, a belt that transforms the wearer into a mechanical beetle being, with enough powers to go against Worm. And it seems that the belt has other hidden abilities. The story revolves around the youth, TENDOU SOUJI, who gets chosen to become KAMEN RIDER KABUTO.

Kamen Rider Kabuto is a Japanese tokusatsu superhero television series. It is the fifteenth instalment in the popular Kamen Rider series of tokusatsu shows and the 35th Anniversary series of Kamen Rider. It is a joint collaboration between Ishimori Productions and Toei, and its broadcast on TV Asahi and aired on January 29, 2006. This series goes back to basics with this series motif being a "Form Changer" which were last seen in Kamen Rider BLACK RX, Kamen Rider Kuuga, and Kamen Rider Agito. The primary theme of this series is the concept of speed.

Gear

Zecter: With the mobile system which mammoths the space-time, Jaunt from the ZECT headquarters it appears instantaneously to the rated personnel. As for the rated personnel who is chosen in the Zecter the crest comes up to the body.

Kabuto Zecter: The henshin belt of Kabuto. The buckle itself seems to be alive; as the user must summon it, which appears and flies into the user's hands. Once the buckle is locked onto the belt, an internal computer exclaims, "HENSHIN!" transforming the user into Kabuto's Masked Form as a default. On the sides of the belt are buttons which activates the Clock Up System which exclaims "CLOCK UP!" when in use and "CLOCK OVER!" when powering down. When the Clock Up feature is in use on-screen, the flow of time around its user grinds almost to a halt; the clock up power is a concept similiar to the Speed Force. The buckle itself has three buttons which charges up Kabuto to initiate his "Rider Kick," which is a roundhouse kick rather than a flying kick.

Zabee Zecter: The henshin brace of Zabee. It is also used by Zabee to perform his "Rider Sting" attack, a variant of the popular "Rider Punch". It was originally owned by Yaguruma Sou but later on abandoned its original owner (as he tried to "Sting" Tendou into oblivion) and chose Kagami to become its new owner. Depending on the translation, this name can be rendered as both "Zabee" and "Thabee" due to the differences between the English language and the Japanese language.

Drake Zecter: The henshin gun of Drake.

Sasword Zecter: The henshin sword of Sasword.

Weapon

Kabuto Kunai Gun: Kabuto's weapon; it has three modes, Ax Mode where the handle of the weapon is of a small ax, it's finisher is called Avalanche Break. Gun Mode is equipped with a laser sight to better accuracy and fires rounds of energy blasts or triple laser beams, it's finisher is called Avalanche Shoot. Both Ax Mode and Gun Mode are primarily used while Kabuto is in the default Masked Form and with it can destroy multiple Pupa Worms. Kunai Mode is Kabuto's sword, it's finisher is Avalanche Slash. Kunai Mode is only used when Kabuto is in the Clock Up Rider Form.

ZECT Mizer: Kabuto's weapon; The new weapon which the ZECT developed. When 4 barrels are opened, the Mizer Bomber is loaded and can be used to kill many Worms simultaneously.

Bike

Kabuto Extender: Kabuto's bike; it has two modes, Masked Mode and Ex Mode, Front "Horn" is able to extend and hit enemies. The horn itself enables Kabuto to do another type of Rider Kick, a tornado kick while being catapulted off the extend horn.

Riders

Souji Tendou / Kamen Rider Kabuto: Based on a "Kabutomushi" or Rhinoceros/Helmet Beetle. Souji Tendou is a mysterious, quiet 21-year old man who often seems to follow monk-like philosophies of peace. Despite having many talents, he is usually uninterested in pursuing anything, that is until his belt activates. He stays at a big home with his little sister and seems to have an interest in Kagami's co-worker, Hiyori. He possesses an uncanny ability to see through the Worms disguises as well as detect if there are any nearby without the use of any devices. Furthermore, the Worms seems to be attracted to him. This might imply that Tendou is using himself as bait or that there is something about him that attracts the Worms. By pressing the three leg buttons on his belt (in the order of 1-2-3) and flipping the switch on the Zecter twice, Kabuto is able to execute Rider Kick.

Sou Yaguruma / Kamen Rider TheBee: Also known as Zabii or Zabee, is based on a bee motif. TheBee was originally Sou Yaguruma, a 27-year old agent of ZECT. Sou, while TheBee, had his own personal army of ZECT Troopers called Shadow, which had yellow stripes on their uniform, indicating they may have been an elite unit of ZECT Troopers. In episode 9, Yaguruma's Zecter abandoned him (as Sou tried to kill Tendou) and chose Kagami instead. However, Kagami relinquished his role as TheBee because of his respect for Tendou. It is now unclear who will take over as TheBee; either Sou will resume his role or it will be someone else. TheBee's unique attack is Rider Sting, a Rider punch which uses the Zecter's needle.

Daisuke Kazama / Kamen Rider Drake: Possibly to be called Draco instead. His motif is of a dragonfly; his name is a pun on that, as "Drake" has dragon connotations. His real identity is Daisuke Kazama 22-year. He fights to protect a little girl named Gon. He is not a member of ZECT. Drake's personal weapon is a gun that can be combined with his zector to allow Rider Shooting to be executed.

Kamen Rider Sasword: His name is a pun on "sasori", the Japanese word for "scorpion", and "sword". Further details are unknown at the time of this writing.

ZECT Troopers: Footsoldiers of the organization ZECT. They are armed with the Machine Bladegun, a weapon that draws some concepts from Riderman's Cassette Arm. The weapon consists of an automatic machine gun with a retractable blade, which they use for close-quarters combat. In addition, they also carry a grenade launcher-like shotgun as a last resort and means of retreating. Like the Riotroopers from Kamen Rider Faiz, they're only Rider-like. They are transported to the alien hotspots via black HUMVEEs. Unfortunately, as seen in the first episode, they lack any concern for civilians. There is a special unit of ZECT Troopers called Shadow which assists Kamen Rider TheBee. Unlike regular ZECT Troopers, they have yellow pin stripes on their uniforms. Shadow is a well-organized team and tend to back each other when in danger. Although they can survive fights with the Worms, they have yet to succeed in destroying one. However, they are able to prevent the Worms from molting, enabling TheBee to kill them. In episode 9, with the help of Kagami, they finally managed to kill many Pupa Worms.

Other characters

Arata Kagami - Kagami is a field agent of ZECT and also works with Hiyori at Bistro La Salle. He first attempted to be Kabuto but failed since Kabuto Zecter has chosen Tendou. His little brother, Ryo, was missing of mysterious cause. He changed to TheBee on the Episode 9 and 10 but relinquished his role as TheBee because of his respect for Tendou. Age 21 years.

Hiyori Kusakabe - A shy girl who continues to run into Tendou. She is also a co-worker of Kagami's at Bistro La Salle. As of now, she was involved in the meteor crash seven years ago along with Tendou. Her parents were killed due to the meteor crash incident. She seems to talk with and read the emotions of inanimate objects, like drawings and machines. She's quite clumsy and tends to zone out while working; resulting in complaints by customers. Other than that, she is still a mystery in the series. Age 18 years.

Yuzuki Misaki - A tech and agent for ZECT, who travels with Kagami (who she sees as an annoyance) in the field tracking the movements of the Worm. Later on, she is given the assignment to track Tendou and the stolen Kabuto Zecter. She's really strict and icy; however, she soon begins to question the actions of ZECT and eventually gains respect for Tendou after he rescues her from the Worms; beforehand, she was irritated with Tendou's philosophical sayings while she interrogated him. She is also irritated by Tendou when he implies that her and Kagami make a cute couple. Age 23 years.

Juka Tendou - The younger sister of Souji Tendou/Kamen Rider Kabuto. She's really close to her older brother and tends to act the same way he does; such as talking about her grandmother and pointing to the sky. She's not aware that her brother has found his dream, being a Kamen Rider. (as evidenced in a "Super Hero Time" transitional video, she's a fan of Gougou Sentai Boukenger) Age 13 years.

Sou Yaguruma - He was originally Kamen Rider Zabee before his Zecter abandoned him. When he's calm, he's a caring person who possesses a strict code of teamwork and demands perfection. In addition, a genius as well as a great tactician. In addition, he cares for his team and will come to their aid if any of them are in danger. However, he's also impulsive, brash and quick to anger; this is evident when he's in trouble by the ZECT Superiors for letting a Worm escape and when Tendou managed to infiltrate his security force easily. While he managed to defeat Tendou and destroy his belt; he was shocked to learn that Tendou was able to transform anyway, which angered him even further. It was his hot-headedness and hatred for Tendou, which not only endangered his team; but his attempt to kill Tendou caused his Zecter to reject him. It is unclear if he will resume his role as Zabee, for Kagami relinquished his status as a rider. Age 27 years.

Syuu Kageyama - Soldier of Shadow, hostility is burnt in towards Kabuto after Tendou injured him. He is a good friend of Yaguruma and believes deeply in his philosophy of teamwork. He considers Kagami a kid. Even while injured, he continued to fight the Worms and would protect his commander at all costs. Age 20 years.

Gon - The girl whom Kazama has accompanied. Spoony Kazama's guardian substituting. Age 8 years.

Yumiko Takemiya - Hiyori and Kagami's boss at Bistro La Salle who seems to tolerate Hiyori's clumsiness and Kagami's tardiness. Age 36 years.

Masato Mishima - Aide of ZECT leader; his role in the series is still unknown. However, he does communicate with Yaguruma and Tadokoro to brief the ZECT teams about the Worms. Recently, he's been upset with Yaguruma botching a mission and Tadokoro has been questioning him about ZECT's agenda. Age ? years.

Shuichi Tadokoro - Misaki and Kagami's ZECT Superior in the field; very expressionless individual who gives out commands to the ZECT Trooper platoons, in order to neutralize the worms; though it ends up failing in the end. He gives Kagami permission to dawn the Kabuto Zector. Furthermore, he gives Kagami a specialize pistol in case he runs into any Worms while following Tendou. It's learned that he's an acquaintance, and possibly mentor, of Sou Yaguruma in past. Age 35 years.

Riku Kagami - Kagami and Ryo's father who is one of the high ranked officials in ZECT. Kagami seems to despise him because of Ryo's disappearance. There's some implication that Kagami is unaware that his father is a ZECT Official. Age 52 years.

Villains

They are called Worms, alien lifeforms that came from a meteor. They blend into the human population by copying the face of their victims before killing them (usually by means of draining them of all their bodily fluids or poison stings), reminiscent of the Pod People from Invasion of the Body Snatchers. The Worm are able to copy their victims perfectly, gaining their memories as well enabling them to blend in perfectly. Their first form looks like chrysalis, but when threatened, the creatures can "molt" into a more powerful forms which enables them to move at blinding speed. Apparently, they do not need to naturally molt, as evidenced when Souji (in Masked Form) shattered Bellericetusworm's "cocoon" skin with his Kabuto Kunaigun Ax Mode. They seem to take pleasure in stealing their victims identities. Furthermore, they can use multiple stolen forms to fit into the crowd. In addition, if their victim survives their attack and they cross paths with him/her again, they immediately go into a violent temperament in order to "finish the job."

Kamen Rider Kabuto is the 35th Anniversary of Kamen Rider (along with Ultraman's 40th Anniversary and Super Sentai's 30th).

Like Hibiki and Magiranger previously, Kabuto and Boukenger seem to cross paths during the Super Hero Time segments. One notable short was when the Tendou siblings broke into SGS Headquarters, the base of the Boukenger.

This is the third Rider, as the main protagonist, to use a Kabutomushi motif. Kamen Rider Stronger and Kamen Rider Blade were the other two.

There's still some debate whether or not Clock Up is faster than Faiz Accel Mode. Evidence points to yes only because one, Clock Up lasts longer than Accel Mode (a few minutes compared to Accel's 10 seconds); two, Clock Up can be used multiple times, unlike Accel Mode, which has to recharge after use.

This is the first Kamen Rider series to have a former actor return as a main character. Kageyama's actor, Uchiyama Masato, appeared in Kamen Rider 555 as the Rabbit Orphenoch and Ultraman Nexus as Ren/Ultraman Junis Blue. The actor who played Komon/Ultraman Noa will also appear in later in the series.

In addition to the alumni from Ultraman Nexus, other tokusatsu cameos include Kohei Murakami (Kusaka Masato/Kamen Rider Kaixa) from Kamen Rider 555 and Mika Kikuchi (Umeko/DekaPink from Tokusou Sentai Dekaranger and Arika Yumemiya from My Otome).

Theme Songs - OP - "NEXT LEVEL" by YU-KI (TRF) , ED - "FULL FORCE" by RIDER CHIPS

Quotes

Throughout the series, it's been noted that the main protagonist, Souji Tendou would always quote from his adoptive grandmother. In other episodes, his step-sister, Jyuka Tendou would also quote from her grandmother as well. To contradict this, Tsurugi Kamishiro had also chipped in quotes from his butler, Jiiya.

Grandmother said this...

Walking the path of heaven, the man who will rule everything.

Make the world revolve around you. It's more fun to think that way.

When people love others, they become weaker, but it is nothing to be ashamed of. True weakness lies elsewhere.

When not close by, one is even closer.

Chase two birds, and you catch two birds.

People who steal things, lose something even more important.

It is enjoyable to eat something delicious, but the greatest joy is the time spent waiting for it.

If you wish it to be so, luck will always be on your side.

Flowers can make any girl glow.

All girls are equally beautiful.

A knife can only bring happiness when used in cooking.

Fancy flavors cannot hide poor cooking.

It is fun to add a secret flavor so that no one knows. But... it's more fun to find it.

The whisper of the devil can sometimes sound like an angel's voice.

One that drowns in oneself will eventually fall to darkness.

Even if the world were full of enemies, there is someone you must protect.

If you receive a little kindness, give them a large serving.

Imitating others is not bad, for it is to recognize ourselves.

Once you know the real thing... you won't be fooled by an imitation.

Children are treasures. The greatest sin in this world is to damage those treasures.

During meals an angel descends, for it is a sacred time.

There are two things men must not do. One is to not make girls cry...The other is to not handle food crudely!

The sun is wonderful, it can make even the dirt shine.

Life is a long path to a goal. Drop your heavy luggage and enjoy walking with your hands empty.

Men must be cool. Boiling water is but vapor.

The wishes of the children are the future reality...Adults that laugh at such dreams are no longer human.

A bond is a deep connection that cannot be broken. Even if apart, heart and heart are connected.

My evolution is faster than the light. Nothing in the whole universe can keep up with my evolution.

Jiiya said this...

A noble deed must be nobly returned.

All men are fiery. The spark must be lit early for them to become fireworks.

There is no greater wealth than friendship, so let's make it our treasure.

Homage

In order to celebrate the anniversary of both the Super Sentai franchise and the Kamen Rider franchise, the Tokyo Dome hosted a Double Hero Festival. A Super Sentai stage show, starring the core Boukengers, was hosted on July 22, while a Kamen Rider stage show, starring the actors for Souji, Arata, Hiyori, Sou, and Daisuke, was hosted the next day. The Dome featured Super Sentai's pasts along with Kamen Rider collections ranging from the earliest series to the latest.

Returning to the roots of the franchise, Kabuto has brought back the famous line, Rider Kick, shouting it before initiating the attack. Being the Kamen Rider's signature move, this is the first time the line has been used in the Post-Ishinomori era. Kamen Rider's 1, 2, and Black also shouted this line before performing their kicks. Along with bringing back the Rider Kick, Kabuto also takes something from the very root of the franchise, introducing two Hopper Riders, obvious references to the original Kamen Rider.

Kamen Rider Kabuto also features many references to the other series within the franchise:

The Perfect Zecter's two attacks are references to the original Kamen Rider, with Maximum Hyper Typhoon being a reference to the Typhoon Belt and Maximum Hyper Cyclone being a reference to the Rider machines, the Cyclones.

In episode 17, a girl calls the police on Daisuke using her cell phone, and it emitted the same sounds as the henshin phone from Kamen Rider 555.

Another possible reference to Kamen Rider 555 is Tsurugi's Sasword Zecter, the only one that makes a "Standby" announcement upon arrival and prior to transformation. This is similar to the "Standing By" confirmation that the Rider Gears in 555 make upon entering the transformation codes, but likewise prior to transformation itself.

In episode 25, Kagami finds a "Masked Rider Project" record, which has a date of "4/3/1971" (April 3, 1971), referring to the original premier date for the original Kamen Rider series.

In episode 36, Renge hums Kamen Rider Hibiki's trademark tune that he often sings.

In episodes 41 and 43, Kabuto and Dark Kabuto both shake their wrists and hands to the side in the same manner as Kamen Rider Faiz before doing battle.

35th Masked Rider Anniversary File

During episodes 23 through 27, this segment acted as a look back to the franchise and an early advertisement for the God Speed Love movie. These look backs are held in a movie theater and the segment is hosted by Souji Tendou (Kamen Rider Kabuto), Arata Kagami (Kamen Rider Gatack), Tetsuki Yamato (Kamen Rider Ketaros), Yuzuki Misaki, and Masato Mishima. During these five segments, they discuss the history of the Kamen Rider franchise, sometimes in a comedic tone, but always with serious background music.

Episode 23 (Rider Kicks): The group watches and Yamato narrates the variations of Rider Kicks during the course of the years. Yamato mentions about the Rider Double Kick of Kamen Riders 1 and 2, Kamen Rider V3's V3 Kick, Kamen Rider X's X Kick, and Kamen Rider Super-1's ten various kicks. In the end, Kagami stands up and does his own Rider Kick (he even shouts the attack name) and falling into his seat with Yuzuki looking. Tendou and Kagami ask Yamato, "Who are you?"

Episode 24 (Criminal Organizations): The group watches and learns about the different criminal organizations the Kamen Riders had to fight. Villains include Shocker & Gel-Shocker in the first Kamen Rider, Destron from Kamen Rider V3, and King Dark (of the Government of Darkness) in Kamen Rider X. Footage of Black Satan, first enemy of Kamen Rider Stronger, is also shown. Tendou then supposes that it is the Kamen Rider's destiny to fight an organization. Mishima tells Tendou that ZECT will show no mercy to anyone who fights them. Yamato then says that he will definitely smash Neo-ZECT for rebelling against and splitting off from ZECT.

Episode 25 (Rhinoceros Beetle-Themed Kamen Riders): The group watches Kamen Rider Stronger, and Kagami quickly thinks that Stronger himself is Kabuto, and looks at Tendou confused. Misaki corrects him, informing him that this is a different Rider, using the rhinoceros beetle as a design. Mishima then announces that it is Kamen Rider Stronger. The camera then zooms on Tendou's face as he says that while this Rider may be Stronger, he (referring to himself) is the strongest. Tendou pronounces "Stronger" and "Strongest" in English, (due to the fact that Hiro Mizushima, who portrays Tendou, is fluent in English). Yamato then also speaks of the Kabutech Riders (Caucasus (Caucasus beetle), Heracus (Hercules beetle), and Ketaros (centaurus beetle), the last of whom Yamato happens to be), which are also Rhinoceros Beetle Riders (as the Caucasus, Hercules, and centaurus beetles are rhinoceros beetle sub-species). Also, despite being a Rhinoceros Beetle Rider, Kamen Rider Blade (also a Hercules beetle) was omitted. At the end, Tendou stands up and miniature hexagons with Tendou's face appear, forming a compound eye pattern as Tendou says once again that he is "The man who walks the path to heaven to rule over all."

Episode 26 (Riders Everywhere): The group watches New Kamen Rider and Yamato comments on Skyrider's Sailing Jump, then says that the Riders can go anywhere around the world. In addition, they are not restricted to the ground. Then, Misaki mentions the Riders can even now go into space. During this segment, they watch footage of Kamen Riders 1 through ZX training with each other in Kamen Rider 1's base on Arizona in the final episodes of Kamen Rider BLACK RX, followed by footage from God Speed Love. Please note, that even though Kamen Rider Super-1's suit is capable of space travel, it is not used that way in the TV series. Tendou then coins a variant his trademark quote ("Now, I will truly walk down the path to heaven and rule over all.").

Episode 27 (Kamen Rider Ultimate Forms): Kamen Rider Stronger's upgrade is not mentioned (as it is not an "Ultimate Form", but rather a temporary power upgrade) and the short starts with Yamato commenting on BLACK RX and his modes RX Roborider and RX Biorider. It then moves on to Kamen Rider Kuuga Ultimate Form, Kamen Rider Agito Shining Form, Kamen Rider Ryuki Survive, Kamen Rider Faiz Blaster Form, Kamen Rider Blade King Form, and Kamen Rider Armed Hibiki. Suddenly, Yamato and Tendou are about to duel with the others looking on and showing on screen is Kabuto's Ultimate Form, Hyper Form.

KAMEN RIDER KIVA

AKA: MASKED RIDER KIVA

Twenty-two years after the disappearance of his father, Wataru Kurenai (portrayed by Koji Seto) lives in an infamous "haunted house" where he is destined as Kamen Rider Kiva to fight life-draining monsters known as the Fangaia, the very race his father fought years ago before his disappearance. Wataru is later joined by a second rider in the series (named Kamen Rider Ikusa) who is part of an organization seeking to destroy the Fangaia menace. The story is split between the actions of Wataru in the present (2008) and his father Otoya in the past (1986), slowly revealing the story behind the Fangaia and Kiva.

Kamen Rider Kiva is the title of the 2008 Kamen Rider series produced by Toei Company and Ishimori Productions. It premiered on January 27, 2008, following the finale of Kamen Rider Den-O. It was a part of TV Asahi's 2008 Super Hero Time block with Engine Sentai Go-onger. Advertisements show a horror film theme to the series, with the motif for Kamen Rider Kiva as a vampire. The advertising slogan for the series is "Wake up! Release the chains of destiny."

This makes Kamen Rider Kiva the ninth Kamen Rider show in the Heisei series (the modern era Kamen Rider), and the 18th Japanese Kamen Rider show, or the 19th if you count the US version of Masked Rider.

Characters

Wataru

Main article: Kamen Rider Kiva \(character\)

Wataru Kurenai/Kamen Rider Kiva : A young shy man who never lies, keeping to himself due to his germ phobia. He works at an atelier to continue his father's legacy of violin making with a dream to create the ultimate violin. But, Wataru is destined from birth to become Kamen Rider Kiva as his mother is a Fangaia. He teams up with Kivat to fight the Fangaia race and protect humanity from them, learning of his family legacy and nature as a dhampir.

Otoya

Otoya Kurenai : Wataru's father who battled the Fangaia menace 22 years ago, a ladies man who by accident interferred in Yuri's mission, who eventually brought him in their group. During his battle with the Fangaia, Otoya fell in love with a female Fangaia as a result.

Shizuka

Shizuka Nomura : A preteen girl able to get around the shyness of Wataru being a motherly figure to him as he teaches her how to play the violin.

The Fangaia Hunters

Keisuke Nago: A elite member of the Fangaia Hunters.

Yuri Aso : Founding member of the Fangaia Hunters 22 years ago, meeting Otoya by sheer accident. She hates the Fangaia with a passion. She seems to be afraid of dogs. Her weapon is two bars that connect together that create a short snake sword, that can elongate farther than imagined.

Megumi Aso : The daughter of Yuri, Megumi makes it her duty to hunt down the Fangaia, as well as Kiva. She meets Wataru and develops a liking towards him, unaware that he is actually Kiva himself. Her weapon is a rather small pistol that shoots slugs at high velocities, with a attachment she may also shoot a chain that resembles her mothers elongated snake sword.

Mamoru Shima: A mysterious millionaire who funded the Fangaia Hunters. He also gathers information on any new Fangaia he comes across.

Akira Kido : Owner of the Cafe Mal D'amour and a friend of Otoya's in the past. He owns a golden retriever named Buruman.

Support Monsters

Kivat-bat the 3rd : An century-old mysterious vampire who drinks blood to sustain himself, creating rumors of Wataru's European-style home being haunted. Called "Kivat" for short, he is a solid character with dry wit, tending to have a bitter attitude. He formed a partnership with Wataru to give the power of Kiva, drinking a bit of blood before attaching to the Kivat Belt to allow his human partner to transform, as well as blow the Fuestles to evoke their power. He enjoys the artwork of Amedeo Modigliani, finding the artist's depiction of women fascinating. (Specifically ones painted with long necks.)

Castle Dran : Kiva's base of operations, a giant dragon born in the mold of a castle. While dormant, it assumes the form of a building to conceal itself in plain sight. When exposed to moonlight, or when Kiva performs his finishing move, the monster awakens and assumes its true form. Due to its unique abilities of sealing defeated Fangaia, Castle Dran is home to three sealed Fangaia, forced into human form and to become servants of the master of Castle Dran.

Garuru : A violent and impulsive werewolf) Fangaia sealed in Castle Dran long ago, assuming human form and serves as lead caretaker. He allows for Kiva to become Garuru Form and wield the Garuru Saber.

Basher : A fish-man Fangaia with a cool attitude who became Castle Dran's housekeeper, assuming the form of a 13-year old boy. He allows for Kiva to become Basher Form and wield the Basher Magnum.

Dogga : A frankenstein Fangaia with unbeatable strength, Castle Dran's butler after assuming human form.

Fangaia

The Fangaia are stained glass-based vampires who feed off of the Life Energy of humans to survive. By using glass shards to drain the Life Energy, they can assume a human form to hide within everyday society to feed in secret. When a human's Life Energy is stolen, the victim becomes transparent like glass. Each Fangaia belongs to a specific tribe based on the animal form it takes and each Fangaia has a true name. Whenever Kiva defeats a Fangaia, the monster's physical body shatters like glass. In this weakened state, the Fangaia's soul is sealed within Castle Dran's body before it can escape and eventually reform itself.

KAMEN RIDER RYUKI

AKA: MASKED RIDER RYUKI

AKA: MASKED RIDER DRAGOON

"One who does not fight will not survive."

Thirteen Advent Card decks were created for thirteen Kamen Riders. They make Contracts with monsters from the mysterious Mirror World, drawing on their strength in exchange for feeding them the life force of the creatures they destroy. The creator of the Advent Cards has only one rule: that there can be only one Kamen Rider. The others must be killed, and the sole victor will be granted a single wish. This is the Rider War.

All over the city, innocent people are being abducted, never to be seen again. During his investigations of these incidents, Shinji Kido- an intern at the online news service ORE Journal- discovers one of the Advent Card decks at an apartment where every reflective surface has been covered by newspaper. He is soon sucked into the Mirror World, discovering the terrifying truth behind the disappearances: people are literally being pulled through mirrors by the monsters of the Mirror World so that they may feed. He is about to be killed by a powerful dragon named Dragreder when he is saved by Kamen Rider Knight- Ren Akiyama.

Ren seeks to win the Rider War at all costs. He works with a young woman named Yui Kanzaki, who seeks her missing brother: the master of the Rider War, Shiro Kanzaki. Seeing Ren's strength, Shinji enters the Rider War not for the prize, but so that he may protect innocent people from the threat of the Mirror World, and stop the senseless fighting between the Kamen Riders.

With Dragreder as his Contract Monster, he becomes Kamen Rider Ryuki.

He will discover that there are some people who cannot be saved. That you must sometimes fight in order to stop the fighting. The extent to which you must go if you want your deepest wish to come true, and the sacrifices that you must make.

In the end, there can be only one Kamen Rider...

Kamen Rider Ryuki (amen Raidā Ryūki?), translated as Masked Rider Dragoon, is a Japanese tokusatsu television series. It was the twelfth installment in the Kamen Rider series of tokusatsu shows. It was a joint collaboration between Ishimori Productions and Toei, and it was shown on TV Asahi from February 3, 2002 to January 19, 2003.

The twelfth season, Kamen Rider Ryuki, was the cause of further controversy, with accusations that it deviated a step too far from the original formula devised by Shotaro Ishinomori. It begins with the standard template with Journalist Shinji (Suga) and his senior Reiko, investigating missing persons cases but finding themselves sucked into a mirror world where they must fight to save the Earth. Though he has the ability to transform into Kamen Rider Ryuki, Shinji takes several beatings at the hands of the evil Dragreder, until help arrives in the form of fellow Kamen Rider, Kamen Rider Knight (Matsuda). Meanwhile, the cast becomes involved in a series of romantic intrigues and office flirtations more suited to an evening drama than a children's sci-fi show. The show eventually acquired a veritable army of 13 Kamen Riders, including the franchise's first Lady Rider, Natsuki Kato, regarded by the fan community as the last straw, but sufficient to propel Kamen Rider Ryuki to successful ratings.

Opening Theme: "Alive a Life" by Rica Matsumoto

Kamen Rider Ryuki is perfect for those of you whom are curious about the Kamen Rider mythos and are looking for a good series to easily introduce them to this 20 year old franchise. Kamen Rider purists would argue over the fact that Ryuki is a pretty drastic departure from the traditional one man Kamen Rider. In this series, there are 13 and not all of them are good. In fact, the main character Shinji is the only one so far whose choice to transform is completely selfless. All the others just want to survive to the end and/or win The Prize.

Kamen Rider Ryuki also panders to the surprising amount of female viewers in Japan, who sit down and watch the show with their children (Good job, mothers of Japan!). So ladies, Ryuki has been loaded to the brim with a multitude of hot bishonen goodness for your viewing pleasure. Worry not fellas, while not quite as many or blatant, there are a couple ladies in the mix so that you get your respective ogle on. One of them even happens to be a Kamen Rider who appears later in the series.

For those of you new to the Kamen Rider world, but familiar with such American aired shows like Digimon Tamers or Highlander, this series will immediately make you feel right at home. Those of you die-hard fans beware. If you don't like your Rider series where the hero shares the mantle with others and has a metal grill over those trademark grasshopper eyes, you might not be the happiest fan in the world. But, if you're able to go in to this alternate Kamen Rider universe with an open mind, you should be in for a more than enjoyable ride.

That's about it from me, except for a little technical rating on a 5 point scale on the quality of the DVD. Video gets a crisp number 5, sound quality gets a 4.5 (Simply because I personally lack a decent surround sound system to judge any higher) and the subtitles get an admirable 4, but degrade to a still easily acceptable 3.5.

This series has made a Kamen Rider fan out of me and has left me curious to find out more about Kamen Rider's traditional beginnings. If you couldn't tell, I highly recommend checking out Kamen Rider Ryuki. I hope that you all enjoy it as much as I did.

13 Riders

The notion of 13 Riders is apparently a homage to the original Kamen Rider manga published in 1971, which contains a chapter called The 13 Kamen Riders. Ironically only 10 Kamen Riders were featured in the TV series. Femme, Ryuga and Verde appeared exclusively in the movie Episode: Final and/or the TV special 13 Riders.

Kamen Rider Knight

Kamen Rider Ryuki - main protagonist

Kamen Rider Scissors

Kamen Rider Zolda

Kamen Rider Raia

Kamen Rider Gai

Kamen Rider Ohja

Kamen Rider Tiger

Kamen Rider Imperer

Kamen Rider Femme - officially the first female Kamen Rider

Kamen Rider Ryuga

Kamen Rider Verde

Kamen Rider Odin

The show also featured two Kamen Rider clones, called Alternatives:

Alternative Zero

Alternative

Rider Equipment

Though each rider was different in many aspects, they all had some fundamental similarities and used similar equipment.

V-Buckle (Vent Buckle) - The Rider's henshin belt, when the Vent Deck is put up against a reflective surface. The belt materializes and attaches to the individual.

Vent Deck - This deck contained each rider's advent cards. Each rider's deck had their corresponding crest on it and the color matched the rider's outfit. Putting the deck in the slot on the belt transforms them into their rider form.

Advent Cards - These cards are one of the main tools the riders used throughout the series. Each card had its own function. Some summoned offensive and/or defensive weapons, others provided special abilities. There were some standard cards that every rider had; calling their contract monster, materializing weapons and performing their special attack with their contract monster.

Visor - Each rider had a visor that was modeled after their contract monster. The visor's main function is a card reader. Each rider would insert cards into their visor to "summon" weapons, their contract monster, and special attacks. Some riders' visor also doubled as their weapon.

Ride Shooter - These vehicles were what the riders would use to travel from the real world to the mirror world. Once a rider would pass through a mirror or reflective surface, they would then be riding in a Ride Shooter as they were traveling through a portal to the mirror world. The Ride Shooter would then shoot out of the reflective surface in the mirror world.

Specifications:

Length - 3.25m (Approximately 10'8")

Height - 1.4m (Approximately 4'7")

Width - 1.12m (Approximately 3'8")

Top speed - 930km/h (Approximately 577.88 mph).

Notes

At a conceptual level, the series is more adult and character driven than the earlier Kamen Rider series, considering the nature of time, predestination, whether fighting can be morally justified, what price people must pay for personal catharsis and the redemption of those they love, etc.

Some of the monsters in this series are portrayed as hungry creatures which prey on humans and other Kamen Riders for survival, rather than as the evil kaijins of the preceding shows. But the majority of the monsters are contracted allies and the power source for most of the thirteen Kamen Riders, building their power by absorbing the energy of those who are defeated.

Despite the idea of 13 Kamen Riders facing each other, all 13 Kamen Riders never really faced each other in one huge battle. The most number of Kamen Riders in one battle is 6, in the TV series, where Knight, Ryuki, Zolda, Ohja, Tiger, and Alternative fought each other, only to be interrupted by Imperer's advent monsters, and 11, at the 13 Kamen Riders Special. Kamen Rider Raia was killed earlier by Kamen Rider Verde's Death Vanish Final Vent. Despite activating the Guard Vent, Kamen Rider Scissors was killed by Kamen Rider Ouja's Veno Crash Final Vent. The remaining 10 Kamen Riders fought on the final match of the special, with Kamen Rider Ryuki and Kamen Rider Knight facing off against the remaining 8, led by Kamen Rider Odin. Takashi Hagino who plays Takeshi Asakura/Kamen Rider Ouja also starred in Choukou Senshi Changèrion. Changèrion's suit actor was Jiro Okamoto, who also plays Kamen Rider Ouja in-suit. This is one of the rare cases where both the actor and their suit actor played different characters together.

Hassei Takano is among the few actors to play two different Kamen Riders. He played Kamen Rider Raia in Kamen Rider Ryuki in 2002 and in 2005 he portrayed Ichimonji Hayato/Kamen Rider Nigo in Kamen Rider The First, which was a remake of the original comic book and series. His first Tokusatsu role was in Ultraman Gaia as Ultraman Agul.

Hassei Takano is not the only Rider in Kamen Rider Ryuki that was previously an Ultraman. Jun Takatsuki played Ultraman Neos in 2000 who later on played Kamen Rider Taiga in Ryuki.

Takeshi Kimura, who plays Masashi Sudou/Kamen Rider Scissors, is in a band called The Lantern.

In a recently-released article by Reuters, it is stated that four actors dressed as Japanese superheroes (Kamen Riders Ryuki, Faiz, and Kaixa among them) who were promoting a new superhero show coming to that country were detained by Thai soldiers for breaking a decree against commercial promotion in front of tanks, but were released without charges.

There was also another time when in the tv series 6 riders had fought each other. Those involved were Ryuki, Knight, Zolda, Raia, Gai, and Ouja.

Will be the first of the New Generation Rider Shows to be "adapted" in the US. It's title, Kamen Rider Dragon Knight.

The series also features the first character to play two different Riders. During the 13 Riders Special, Shinji Kido is Kamen Rider Ryuki, but after his deck was destroyed and Ren was untimely killed, he took the mantle of Kamen Rider Knight. In the same movie, he was the one who accessed both Survive forms.

Doctor Shido, an acclaimed scientist, has been kidnapped by the terrorist organization Neoshocker (Neo Sacred Hegemony Of Cycle Kindred Evolutional Realm) in order to exploit his expertise in robotics technology. Desperate to escape, he convinces Neoshocker command to allow him to operate on an injured camper. Explaining that he can turn the camper, Hiroshi Tsukaba (played by Hiroaki Murakama), into a powerful Neoshocker warrior, they allow Shido to operate. However, he quickly turns the tables on them, transforming Tsukaba not into an evil kaijin, but into the powerful warrior Skyrider.

Skyrider embodies his favorite recreational activities from before his accident, hang gliding and motorcycle riding, in his new form. Driving around on his Rider Machine, Sky Turbo, and flying thanks to his new, moth-inspired cyborg power, the Sailing Jump.

Skyrider, still referred to as simply "Kamen Rider", fights against the forces of Neoshocker until meeting with the former Riders. Stronger, from the previous series Kamen Rider Stronger, gives him in episode 20 the nickname "Skyrider", which sticks for the rest of the series. Stronger and the other Riders[2] put Skyrider through rigorous training so he can defeat newly revived and powered up kaijin from Neoshocker. After this training, Skyrider is energised, shown physically by his brighter color scheme.

Finally, in episode 54, the Riders[2] return to assist Skyrider in his final showdown against Neoshocker. Seemingly sacrificing themselves for the greater good, Neoshocker is defeated, and Japan is safe again.

Kamen Rider (Kamen Raidā?) (Masked Rider in English) is a Japanese tokusatsu television series. It is the sixth programme in the Kamen Rider franchise. It has the same name as the first series in the franchise, and fans usually refer to this series as New Kamen Rider or Skyrider (スカイライダー, Sukairaidā?) (after the main character) in order to distinguish it from the original. The series was broadcast on TBS from October 5, 1979 to October 10, 1980, lasting 54 episodes. The series was a co-production between Toei and Ishinomori Productions, and was created by Shotaro Ishinomori. It aired every Saturday at 7:00 PM.

New Kamen Rider was intended as a revival of the original Kamen Rider, going back to the basic, essential themes established in that series, as opposed to the more complex and unique series that followed, such as Kamen Rider Amazon and Kamen Rider Stronger.

Original music was by Shunsuke Kikuchi and Ichirō Mizuki, stunt director was Ono Ken-Yukai and the stunt actor was Tetsuya Nakayashiki. The series was produced by Tohru Hirayama.

Reaction and analysis

Due to the series being a revival of the original Kamen Rider, it is often compared with it. For instance, it has been said to have less action and excitement than the original, and that the fight scenes were pushed towards the end as an audience grabber.

Additionally, many see Skyrider's flying ability as a "gimmick" and an attempt to cash in on the success of Superman: The Movie. The special effects used to present Skyrider's ability to fly are also often criticized.

Footnotes

Though in practice he is able to fly, the explanation given for the power (his henshin belt is able to "reduce gravity") suggest that he is more accurately gliding.

All the previous Kamen Rider characters appear in these episodes, the most of any series. They include Kamen Rider 1, 2 (from the original Kamen Rider), V3 (from Kamen Rider V3), X (from Kamen Rider X), Amazon (from Kamen Rider Amazon) and Stronger, as mentioned. They were all portrayed by their original actors, save Hiroshi Fujioka and Okazaki Tôru.

KAMEN RIDER STRONGER

AKA: MASKED RIDER STRONGER

Angered by the death of his best friend at the hands of Black Satan, Sigeru Jo (Stronger) convinces an ex-Black Satan scientist named Dr. Masaki to transform him into a cyborg. Given the super electromagnetic dynamo implant, Shigeru is reborn as Kamen Rider Stronger. However, this power comes with a price, the Denki energy that now powers his body, has turned his hands silver. So even while as Shigeru, he must wear hands to protect his dual identity.

Aided by the first female cyborg, Yuriko Misaki became Tackle, and fought just as hard as Stronger did. She was killed in episode 30 by General Shadow. Toward the end of the series, a showdown began between Stronger, and the Great Boss. The final battle, Stronger was on the edge of defeat, but the other Kamen Riders came in to help stop the Great Boss (the Great Boss controls all the organisations in the Kamen Riders shows and films).

Amazon was soon replaced for a fifth season with Kamen Rider Stronger - vengeul young Shigeru Jo (Araki), who volunteers for cybernetic augmentation with the Black Satan Group and then turns against his masters in time-honored Kamen Rider tradition. With the letter "S" proudly emblazoned on his chest in presumed homage to Superman, Shigeru also had the assistance of a female cyborg, Yuriko (Okada), who was able to transform into his fighting assistant Tackle.

The fifth series of Kamen Rider was clearly expected to be the last, reintroducing all previous Kamen Riders for the last five episodes, and ending with an elegiac montage and a farewell from series narrator Shinji Nakae. Kamen Rider stronger is regarded as the end of the first era of Kamen Rider, not only for the four year production gap that followed, but also since it was the last time that all former Kamen Riders were able to assemble on-screen in the presence of their unifying mentor Tobei.

Original music was created by Shunsuke Kikuchi, stunt director for the series was Ono Ken-Yukai and one of the stunt actors for the series was Tetsuya Nakayashiki. Produced by Tôru Hirayama, Original Music by Mitsuko Horie , Shunsuke Kikuchi , Ichirô Mizuki & Masato Shimon.

Kamen Rider Stronger (Kamen Raidā Sutorongā?, Masked Rider Stronger in English) is a Japanese tokusatsu television series. The fifth programme to be created as part of the Kamen Rider franchise, the series was broadcast on TBS from April 5, 1975 to December 27, 1975, lasting 39 episodes. It aired every Saturday at 7:00 PM. Stronger was a co-production between Ishinomori Productions and Toei, and was created by Shotaro Ishinomori.

While the series is relatively popular amongst tokusatsu fans, it has not garnered much mainstream attention. However, the series is unique in several respects, and has influenced other series in the franchise in many ways. See Themes, below.

Overview

Shigeru Jou (Jō Shigeru), played by Shigeru Araki, joins the evil organisation Black Satan after the death of a close friend, one whom he considered his mentor. Promised power, and fueled by a desire for revenge, he undergoes surgery to become one of Black Satan's super warriors. However, Jou knows that Black Satan were in fact the murderers of his friend; he was using Black Satan in order to gain new powers. The newly powered up Jou escapes from the Black Satan headquarters before they can brainwash him into following their campaign of evil.

Frustrated, Black Satan scientists devise a plan to capture and kill the warrior they have just created, along with continuing the goal they've had all along world domination. Jou plans on fighting back in his new form, called Kamen Rider Stronger. While escaping from Black Satan, Stronger meets Yuriko Misaki (played by Kyoko Okada) another cyborg warrior created by Black Satan. They team up, with Misaki now becoming Electro Wave Human Tackle. The two eventually meet Tachibana Tôbei as well.

Stronger, Tackle, and Tachibana fight valiantly against the evil cyborg forces of Black Satan, continually meeting the head agents General Shadow, and the One-Eyed Titan. The Titan is defeated in episode 13, but manages to return in episode 17 as the One-Hundred Eyed Titan, posing an even greater threat than before. Despite sharing the similar goals of defeating Stronger and conquering the world, General Shadow and the Titan cannot seem to agree on a few other issues for instance, which one of them gets to kill Stronger. Oftentimes, their bickering inadvertently allows him to escape their wrath.

In episode 26, Stronger is able to topple Black Satan once and for all. With his former organization in ruins, General Shadow forms the "Delza Army" to continue his malicious goals. There were two further defining moments for the series: first, in episode 30, Tackle sacrifices herself to save Stronger from Doctor Kate, a Delza Army general. Her death affects Stronger greatly, and he vows to keep fighting until evil is defeated. Tackles' death is sometimes compared to Rideman's sacrifice in Kamen Rider V3. In the following episode, Stronger's fight against evil is greatly assisted when he undergoes surgery and gains a devastating new power the ability to power up into a new, stronger, form "Charge Up!".

Ultimately, all the former Riders, Kamen Riders 1, 2 from the original Kamen Rider, V3 from Kamen Rider V3, X from Kamen Rider X, and Amazon from Kamen Rider Amazon, all appear in the final few episodes to help Stronger finally defeat the Delza Army and General Shadow. This sequence of episodes has attracted some praise from fans. [1]

Themes

Kamen Rider Stronger Stronger's primary motif was that of electricity. All his attacks were based on electricity, and the cyborg aspect of his body is much more prominent than in the previous series; for instance, his hands were metal coils that had to be covered when he was not transformed. Stronger was not based on a grasshopper or grasshopper-like insect as with the previous Riders; he is based on the Kabutomushi, or rhinoceros beetle.

The other primary characteristic of the series is Shigeru's bravado and eccentric personality. For instance, in the first episode, he instructs some Black Satan henchmen he encounters to call him Jou-san or Shigeru-san, the informal forms of his name, due to the fact that he'd already introduced himself. He wears various t-shirts emblazoned with the letter "S", along with numerous other items of clothing, including a denim jacket with a rose emblem. Stronger's entrance is also a hallmark of the series, with his opening serifu and accompanying whistle a particular highlight.

"The heavens call...
The earth cries out...
The crowds roar...
All calling on me to strike back against evil.
Now listen up, villains!
I am the warrior of justice,
The Kamen Rider Stronger!"

This reoccurring sequence has been compared to a similar one in Kikaida.

Additionally, the "form changer" motif makes its first appearance in Stronger. Stronger's "Charge-Up!" mode predates Roborider and Biorider of Kamen Rider BLACK RX, and the primary themes of Kamen Rider Kuuga and Kamen Rider Agito were the main characters' ability to change forms. Kamen Rider Kabuto, where each Rider character can shift between a bulky armoured form and a lightly covered, fast form, also features this concept prominently.

Indeed, Kabuto was greatly influenced by Stronger. Not only are both Stronger and Kabuto based on the same type of beetle, Stronger's Rider Machine is named "Kabutorô". Beyond these superficial similarities, Kabuto and Stronger, or, more accurately, Shigeru and Tendou, share a similar philosophical outlook and eccentric attitudes toward life and others, often commenting wryly on combat as it occurs.

Earlier Kamen Riders had "charge up" modes but without a change in appearance. Riders 1, 2 and V3 simply had a charge up sound effect. Kamen Rider X had smoke pour out of his body.

Ratings and reception

There is some debate as to whether Stronger was intended to be the final Kamen Rider series. Though few argue that the series does contain a conclusion of sorts to the saga that began in the original Kamen Rider, Japanese film and television historian August Ragone argues that it was simply a matter of coincidence, because the network that had aired all the previous series, MBS, had decided not to air Stronger, instead giving the rights to TBS. At the same time, NET aired the widely successful Himitsu Sentai Goranger, the first Super Sentai in programme in direct competition with Stronger, resulting in extremely low ratings for TBS.[4]

KAMEN RIDER SUPER-1

AKA: MASKED RIDER SUPER ONE

AKA: KAMEN RAIDAA SUUPAA WAN

Kazuya Oki, played by Shunsuke Takasugi, volunteers to undergo cybernetic surgery in the International Space Development Program in the United States in order to become a astronaut who can survive in outer space without the need for a bulky external suit. After a successful operation, he is given the codename "Super 1". Before he can depart for space, however, the base where he received his operation is attacked by the Dogma Kingdom. Only Kazuya is able to escape.

Determined to avenge the deaths of the scientists, he returns to Japan and is trained by a martial arts expert, Master Genkai. With this knowledge, he is able to transform into the powerful Kamen Rider Super-1.

As Super-1, Kazuya possesses super-powered attachments called the "Five Hands". They are as follows:

Super Hands: Super-1's default silver gloves. He can perform the Super Punch with them.

Electric (Eleki) Hands: Super-1's blue gloves. They can shoot an electric beam.

Power Hands: Super-1's red gloves. He gains the ability to lift heavy objects.

Radar Hands: Super-1's gold gloves. He can shoot missiles that emit radar waves, allowing him to see further from the radar screen on his gloves.

Super-1 also has two motorcycles, "Rider Machines" in the series' parlance. One is called the "V-Machine", which can transform into the more-complex "V-Jet". He also rides the lightweight "Blue Version", which can cover rough terrain better than the V-Machine.

In episode 24, Super-1 finally topples the Dogma Kingdom, only to encounter another evil group called the Jin Dogma. At this point, the series became much more lighthearted, with the introduction of the Junior Riders, who serve as comic relief, and the bizarre Jin Dogma kaijin. Jin Dogma's monsters are based on household objects, such as ladders, basketballs, and refrigerators.

Ultimately, Kazuya defeats Jin Dogma, allowing Japan to exist in peace. He then finally fulfills his childhood dream and ventures into outer space with the help of a new team of scientists.

A seventh season ran straight on, featuring a slightly different origin story. Kamen Rider Super One begins life in America as Japanese astronaut Kazuya (Takasugi), who volunteers for cybernetic augmentation in preparation for a deep-space mission. When the US base is attacked by the Dogma Kingdom, Kazuya is the sole survivor and makes his way to Japan to resist the Dogma invasion. Kamen Rider Super One was the first Kamen Rider series not to rely heavily on former continuity - through Jiro appeared as a mentor figure, the other Kamen Riders only arrived for the movie spin-off and were not seen in the TV series.

Kamen Rider Super One was followed by another gap of several years, broken only by the one-shot TV special Birth of the Tenth Kamen Rider: Riders Come Together (1984). Teenage pilot Ryo Murasawa (Sugato) and his sister are kidnapped by the evil terrorists of the Badan Empire. The sister dies but the brother is transformed into the cyborg warrior Silver Cross, who eventually rebels against his masters to become Kamen Rider ZX. However, despite all the appearance of the origin-story for a new series, Kamen Rider ZX disappeared from sight and was only seen in a cameo role for a few episode of KAMEN RIDER BLACK-RX.

The series was produced by Tohru Hirayama, the original music was by Shunsuki Kikuchi and the stunt actor was Tetsuya Nakayashiki.

Trivia

Just like Skyrider, Kamen Rider Super-1 elder mentor was Genjiro Tani, the replacement for Tachibana Tobei.

Kamen Rider Super-1 is the second Kamen Rider series not to have a team-up with previous Kamen Riders, although the previous Kamen Riders appeared in the movie.

Lead actor Shunsuke Takasugi sings the opening theme song ("Masked Rider Super-1") as well as the original ending theme song ("The Fiery Rider Fist"). The second ending theme song ("Junior Rider Team's Song") was recorded by singer Ichiro Mizuki.

KAMEN RIDER V3

AKA: MASKED RIDER V3

AKA: KAMEN RAIDA BUI SURI

The second series of Kamen Rider, confusingly named Kamen Rider V3 since it referred to the Rider not the season, introduced a new hero, Shiro (Miyachi) who unwittingly invites danger when he comes to the aid of distressed damel Junko (Ono). The Destron Terrorist Organization, an off shoot of the previous serial's Gel Shocker axis (in fact, later KM enemies almost always turn out to be puppets of the original KR's nemesis, the "Great Leader", targets Shiro and his family, murdering his parents and sister.

However, Shiro is saved by the timely arrival of his chemistry teacher Takeshi, who transforms into KR. The former season's two riders refuse to allow Shiro to have cyborg augmentation, as, like the same creator's KIKAIDA, they mourn the loss of their humanity and have no desire to inflict it on someone else. However, Shiro is injured saving them from an attacker and they are forced to give him a cyborg body to save his life. . . Not a moment too soon, since they are themselves soon missing in action after saving Tokyo from an atomic monster and the third KM becomes the sole hero, aided by Takeshi's old mentor Tobei, Maintaining the pattern established by the first season, the new KR is not alone for long and eventually befriends Joji (Yamaguchi), a former Destron scientist, who switches sides after Destron mastermind Marshall Armor (Nakamura) almost kills him.

However, "Riderman" as he becomes known, is only initially interested in avenging himself on his former boss and often clashes with Shiro. He is finally redeemed when he is presumed killed in a nuclear blast after saving Japan, leading Shiro to deliver a eulogy proclaiming Joji as the "Fourth Kamen Rider".

Ever since Kazami Shirou saw a man give off white smoke and melt away, someone or something has been after his life. Hongou Takeshi, alias Kamen Rider 1, tells Tachibana Toubee that he has the feeling something suspicious is going on.

That feeling becomes firm when Hongou and Toubee see Shirou's bike get bombed and black-robed men plant a cross, moaning "Destron" and declaring the deaths of the Riders. Evil hadn't died with the fall of Gelshocker. When Shirou tries to solve the mystery himself, he gives Tama Junko shelter in his own home. Junko had been pursued by the same mysterious forces as Shirou ever since she saw some suspicious activities. Hongou and Ichimonji have a bad feeling about this, which is justified when they arrive at Shirou's home, only to find Scissors Jaguar murdering Shirou's father Tatsuji, mother Aya, and younger sister Yukiko. The Double Riders, however, do arrive in time to save Shirou and Junko. Shirou pleaded to the Double Riders, "I discard my humanity up until today. As a demon of vengeance, I shall surely avenge my family. I want to be a Kamen Rider. Make me a cyborg!" But the Double Riders did not want to create yet another cyborg burdened by a loss of humanity. Acting on Junko's testimony, the Double Riders track down the base of their mysterious (not so new, as it turns out) enemy.

Waiting for them there was the still-disembodied voice of Gelshocker's Leader, now the leader of a new organization, Destron, and a trap armed with a 'Cyborg Disintegration Beam'. Shirou comes in, without the powers, he wanted to save the Double Riders, receiving fatal wounds.

To save Shirou, the double Riders perform surgery on him. When Turtle Bazooka tries to blow away the Double Riders, Shirou appears yet again...but as the cyborg Kamen Rider V3, armed with 'double typhoons' and both their powers! While V3 avenges his family by killing their murderer, Scissors Jaguar, the Double Riders save Tokyo by using up their remaining energies to take Destron's second monster, Turtle Bazooka, armed with a hydrogen bomb, out over the sea beyond Tokyo to explode. V3 arrives on the scene too late. Together with Toubee, who establishes the sports shop 'Central' as a cover for the Boys' Rider Team headquarters, Junko, and the Boys' Rider Team, Shirou/V3 fights Destron...and his own inner demons. He must struggle with the knowledge that he is no longer human. He refuses Junko's advances, thinking she could never love someone who was no longer fully a man. Meanwhile, he must discover his 26 secret powers on his own, without the guidance of Hongou and Ichimonji.

The concept of a third Rider dates as far back as the planning stages for the seventh cours of Kamen Rider (original series) episodes. The seventh cours was to not only introduce Shocker's successor, then named 'Black Shocker', but also 'Kamen Rider 3' (not 'V3'), scheduled to debut in episode 85. One idea for KR3 was for him to be an android controlled by 1 and 2. Kamen Rider 1 was to die and come back to life by episode 87, stronger than before. Kamen Rider 2 was to return in episode 91, joining with 1 and 3 to form the 'Triple Riders'. This scenario of course never came to pass, and the concept of a third Rider was saved for a sequel series. This series was to begin around what would have been the 100th episode of Kamen Rider.

Early proposed titles included Ultrarider, Rider A, Shin [New] Kamen Rider, The New Kamen Rider, and Kingrider. At a Toei meeting held in November 1972, the titles Kamen Rider Three and Kamen Rider X [!] were proposed. But soon, the title Kamen Rider V3 was decided upon. The show was a success, with ratings of 26.8% (Kantou) and 36% (Kansai) on its first airing. Later episodes did not match the ratings of the first Kamen Rider series, but the series averages of 20.2%(Kantou) and 27% (Kansai) were still higher than those of subsequent Kamen Rider series.

As the series went on, these subplots were suddenly phased out without explanation. To this day, half of the 26 secret powers have never been used on film (though they have been revealed in print). Junko merely became a background figure, in charge of communications at Boys' Rider Team headquarters. Furthermore, the tragedy of the deaths of the Double Riders was undermined when they were said to be alive in Australia in episode 21, returned to Japan in the V3 movie shortly thereafter, and guest starred in episodes 33 and 34.

Until the final cours, V3 is full of characters and plots that appear and disappear in quick succession. The first of Destron's officers, the ex-Nazi Doktor G, a.k.a. Crab Laser, menaces V3 in episodes 13-30. The officers of Shocker and Gelshocker come back to life with a quartet of Shocker monsters in episodes 27 and 28. After Doktor G's death, Destron sets three 'clans' after him: Baron Fang, a.k.a. Bloodsucker Mammoth, and the Fang Clan (episodes 31-35), Bishop Wing, a.k.a. Deadman Bat, and the Wing Clan (episodes 36-40), and Marshal Armor, a.k.a. Zarigarna, and the Armor Army (episodes 41-52).

The Destron Hunter organization, an offshoot of Interpol paralleling Antishocker, is introduced in episode 29 and annihilated in episode 30; only Destron Hunter No. 5, Sakuma Ken, survives, but fades away after episode 36. The final cours of V3 is the best of the series (and perhaps even of all the Kamen Rider series up to Super-1). In episode 43, Destron's leading scientist, Yuuki Jouji, was labelled a traitor and sentenced to death by Marshal Armor, who feared that the loyal Jouji will one day usurp his status. Hung upside down over a pool of sulfuric acid, Jouji loses his right arm before three of his fellow scientists save him.

Replacing his lost arm with a mechanical one, he realizes the true nature of Destron and becomes Rideman, reluctantly teaming up with V3. An uneasy alliance between the two gradually develops until episode 51, when Rideman steers Destron's Pluton Rocket away from Tokyo, detonating it and himself in mid-air. (Any similarity to the 'deaths' of the Double Riders is probably less than coincidental.) V3 pays tribute to him by giving him the title of Rider Number Four, and goes on to destroy Destron alone. Having done his job, Shirou rides off into the sunset, leaving Tachibana without any Rider to support until Kamen Rider X.

KAMEN RIDER XAKA: KAMEN RAIDAA EKKUSUAKA: MASKED RIDER X

From the dark corners of the world comes another fanatical terrorism group, this time it's the Government of Darkness, aka G.O.D. Daisuke Jin is transformed into the next generation cyborg, the Kai-Zorg with the help of his father. He was given the name Kamen Rider X. King Dark, leader of G.O.D, didn't count on Kamen Rider X coming to ruin his plans of pillaging, rape, and destruction of Earth.

Armed with riddle stick, and ridel whip, Kamen Rider X kicked everyone's butt, who stood in his way. Every G.O.D. cyborg from Neptune to Chronos, fell before the might of X. But his toughest opponent was Apollogest.

Their battle lasted 13 episodes. Seeing how useless and unworthy his Cyborgs were against Kamen Rider X, King Dark began to create new soldiers, combining animals, like Starfish-Hitler, and Spider-Napolean. In the last episode, X finds out that King Dark was created by Dr. Jinai, a friend of his father's, but now his brain resides within King dark.

A Fifth Kamen Rider soon arrived in the third sesosn with Kamen Rider X, which ran for a much shorter period - 35 episodes against the original's 98 espisodes and the sequel's 52. Daisuke Jin (Hayami) is the son of a scientist who ungergoes cybernetic modification to save his life after he is mortally wounded by agents of the sinister Government of Darkness. He recieves help, like his predecessors, from Tobei and also teams up with all former Kamen Riders for the movie Masked Rider X: Five Riders Vs King Dark (1974). Questions about how three of the earlier Riders were able to survivce a nuclear blast were left unanswered.

KAPPATOO

Kappatoo is from the future and discovers an identical person in the present. They decide it would be fun to exchange their roles for a while, but with disastrous results both in the present and the future.

The series sets out to amuse while offering some trenchant observations on what we're going to the planet and on what life might be like in the 23rd Century. Kappatoo's is a world with a language of its very own, of 'ambience optimizers', 'anthrokinetic platforms' and 'master class domestic computers'. Like the eighties series, LUNA, it's packed with examples of future speak, such as 'in the ecofluge' (in big trouble), 'wazz off' (get lost) and 'I'm quazed to little toffs chuffs' (absolutely delighted).

Teenage Simon Nash stars in the dual role of Kappatoo and his 20th Century twin Simon Cashmere, while comedian and game show host Andrew O'Connor plays a computer. In the sequel Kappatoo II. Rula Lenska plays scheming 23rd Century villainess Zeta, who is always out to get the time-twins, and Nicholas Parsons appears as an over the top quiz show host of the future. Some things never change. . .

Prentis Hancock has also starred in other SF shows such as SPACE: 1999 and CHOCKY. The series was written by Ben Steed who wrote the novel on which the series was based. The producer for the show was Roy Marshall and the directors were Tony Kysh (season one) and Alistair Clark (season two).

KENNY STARFIGHTER

Some kids discover that there's something wrong with their school; their teachers are acting weird and the teaching therefore also becomes weird. An intergalactic hero, Kenny Starfighter, crashes his space-bus (very similar to that of Lone Star in Spaceballs) in their little society and soon, they team up in order to solve the mystery of the school. It turns out that the person behind it all is the evil Dr. Deo (who smells awful and therefore wants to get his hands on a super deodorant), the very villain Kenny Starfighter is out to catch. Their quest takes them deep beneath the school and brings them many encounters. And all the time, there's a feeling of mystery over it all.

Maybe i am wrong but I think this is typical for the Swedes. Since i am from Sweden I think it's hilarious, you shall have in mind that it is for children (even adult children). The mini is about this opposite to Blixt Gordon a total loser, a galactic anti-hero. He gets an impossible mission on earth where he gets help from some kids who believes he is super..or?

KIKAIIDER

AKA: KIKAIDA

AKA: JINZO NINGEN, KIKAIDA

AKA: KIKAIDA: ANDROID OF JUSTICE

The story of Kikaido begins with Dr. Koumyouji trying to escape from the evil hand of Professor Gill, an evil scientist heading the Dark Demolition Corp. Koumyoji was working for Gill before he realised his ultimate goal was to conquer the world with the evil robots. Somehow, Dr. Koumyouji lost his memory during his escape. Strangely enough he still possessed his expertise in Robotics. Fortunately, he had constructed Kikaido before this happened.

From then on, the storyline is almost identical in each episode. The PhD was still running and his children, Masaru and his older sister Mitsuko were looking for him. When they were just about to catch him, evil robot turned up and tried to kidnap Dr. Koumyouji; and almost at the same time in every episode, a light sound of guitar was being heard and Jiro was there. And before he could turn into Kikaido to fight the evil robot, Gill played his flute and rendered Kikaido powerless. At the point when Kikaido was in so much danger, there was always some loud sound near by that covered the flute sound and Jiro used this opportunity to transform into Kikaido, well the rest is quite simple, the evil rebots got their butt kicked!

Unsurprisingly, as it was created by KAMEN RIDER'S Shotaro Ishinomori in collaboration with Toru Hirayama, Kikaido has many similarities to other anti-heroes of its day, such as Cyborg 009. Few of its contemporaries have enjoyed such longevity in their original state - reruns of Kikaido continue to charm new fans a whole generation after it originally ended. Only a week after the first series, but supposedly three years after the final defeat of the Dark Destruction Corps, Kikaido returned in a new incarnation, confusingly titled Kikaido 01.

The original series was broadcast subtitled on KIKU TV in Hawaii in 1974 and the channel has since become known as the "home of Kikaido", keeping both the original series reruns and even arranging for the Generation Kikaido (2001) retrospective broadcast. Kikaido was released in a subtitled DVD format in the US in 2002. The series was also resurrected in animated form in 2001, while Kikaido's sworn enemy got his own spin-off movies, Mechanical Violator Kikaido (1985).

Note, the exact spelling of the name of Kikaido has been subject of constant wearying debate among fans of the show - technically speaking the file "a" should have a macron in English and be "ā", though this has been dropped in the U.S. Although some still adhere to the "Kikaider" spelling used on Japanese documents of the time, even the series' translators have given in to inertia of fandom and rendered it as "Kikaido" for the recent American DVD release. "Kikaido" is phonetically more accurate in the US, where final "R's" are emphasized. Other countries find it quite mystifying, since both variants are pronounced exactly the same in Britain and Australia.

Produced by Toru Hirayama, Susumu Yoshikawa.

Kikaido / Kikaido 01 was a popular Tokusatsu show in the '70s in Japan (Kikaido, 1972 and Kikaido 01, 1973). However, 01 was only shown in Japan, though you could get the non-subbed video tapes available at some stores in North America (see my Other Links page). Hawaiians were lucky enough to get Kikaido TV series at around the same time and many kids grew up watching them. It was so big there that the Governor of Hawaii at the time had shown up shaking his hand. The show is another creation of the late famous Ishinomori Shoutarou.

The stories of the Kikaido show are mediocre compared with many other popular Tokusatsu shows (Kamen Riders, etc) at the time. The stories are almost always the same until near the end of the series, thanks for the introduction of another popular android Hakaido. His human form is Saburo. He posed as the ultimate weapon against Kikaido. Although Kikaido is almost invincible, he has one fatal weakness, his creator did not finish the work and left him without the "Conscience Circuit" which made him vulnerable when Gill played his flute. When Kikaida was not in combat, he transformed into his human form, Jiro (meaning the younger one in Japanese). Yea, he walked around with his guitar and he did play a bit. The flute does not work for some reason when Jiro is in Kikaida form!!!!

Yeap, the show had simple plots and attracted millions and I have to admit the sounds and the themes in the show are wicked, so 70's, sometimes I found myself humming or even singing these songs even though I don't know Japanese that much. Ok, in a shower or somewhere alone.

The evil robots in Kikaida are cheap looking unlike the counter-parts in other shows. I never like them too much, they do look like something out of old used costumes. As I mentioned, the show did not reach its peak until the introduction of Hakaida, who I thought was pretty kewl ! He has black leather costume and a powerful gun, which makes Clint Eastwood look like a guy with a BB gun, and a much more agile counterpart Hakaida is constructed by Professor Gill and is more powerful than Kikaida. This is because after Dr. Komyoji's capture, his brain was transplanted into Hakaida's head. So this guy walked around with a human brain in his head and I thought this was so so cool! The series was roduced by Miyazaki Shin'ichi, and the music was by Watanabe Michiaki.

Kikaida's Combat Techniques

Daburu Choppu (Double Chop) - two handed karate chop, which often severed a limb. Most monsters got hit with this twice, Blue Buffalo three times, once by Jiro.

Kaiten Attaku (Spinning Attack) - knocks the monster down and punches it repeatedly.

Dai Sharin Nage (Giant Wheel Throw) - Kikaida grabs hold of the monster, lifts it up over his shoulder into the air, and spins several times, finally tossing the monster, hard, onto the ground. (Hard to describe accurately, you have to see it). In some cases he simply tosses the monster spinning into the air.

Kikaida Kikku (Kikaida Kick) - powerful kick that causes sparks to fly from the monster. First used against Black Crow in episode 35.

Kikaida Nage (Kikaida Throw) - throws monster straight up into the air. Used only once, against Black Crow in episode 35.

Kikaida Supakku (Kikaida Spark) - white beam. Used only once, against Black Crow in episode 35.

Milky Way Hurricane - flies around enemy, hitting him repeatedly. First used against Hakaida in episode 39.

Denji Endo (Electromagnetic End) - crosses his arms over his chest, jumps into the air, shouts "Denji Endo", moves crossed arms out towards the monster, an electrical charge fries the robotic monster's circuitry. The screen cracks.

The monster explodes. In the first episode Kikaida clearly says "The End", changing to "Denji Endo" in second episode.

In 1974 "Famous Monsters of Filmland" issue #114 included an article on Kikaida by Japanese correspondent Masao Konno.

After Kikaida defeated the Dark Demolition Corps a new evil arose, to be confronted by Kikaida's older brother, Kikaida-01. Before there were the television show, there was the Kikaida comic. In 1987 Toei produced another series about a blue and red robot, CHOUJIKI METALDER (Super Machine Metalder). About the same time as Kikaida was running in Hawaii several other Japanese super hero shows were available as well. I have newspaper clippings about some of them, from DIAMOND EYE ZABOGHA.

KIKAIKER-01

Due to the complete wipe-out of the gang, the Hakaida gang were destroyed by 01, Gill Hakaida was revived by another evil organization, the Shadow which is head by the Big Shadow. He had 4 compatriots: Shadow Knight-a one-eyed knight; Zadam: the Shadow's siamese twin demon android; Bejinder-a female version of Kikaider sent to destroy 01.

The Shadow has the same objective as for the hakaida gang of four: looking for the blueprint (carried by Akira and Hoshiro, brothers??) of the ultimate weapon, the Giant Devil, which is just a giant robot which was completed by the Shadow but was destroyed by kikaider and 01 before the robot can do any damage.

Although, 01 is complete in the sense that he had the conscience circuit, the imperfection is carried by a female robot Bijinda this time. This female robot has a "pain circuit" which can be activated by the Shadow. When this circuit is on, she would experience acute pain. She would ask for help and the pain would diminish by unbuttoning the third button on her brouse; however, when this happens, the bomb inside her body would explode. Eventually, 01 made a conscience circuit for her and she became the ally of 01. There is another interesting character in the series, Waruda, a Sumurai warrior android who practices Bushido. He also did not have the conscience circuit and showed human emotion towards Bijinda.

Gill Hakaida was destroyed twice, once by 01 , another time by Bijinda's sonic waves from her chest but was repaired by the Shadow. He was eventually destroyed by the joined force of Bijinda, Kikaider 01 and Kikaider. Gill Hakaida was repaired by the Shadow the third time, but this time before he could be revived , Dr . Koumyouji sabotaged the reviving machine and in the process destroyed the whole Shadow base, and killed Big Shadow also. The compatriots were destroyed along with Gill Hakaida by the joined force of 01 , Kikaider and Bijinda.

Due to the commercial success of Kikaider, the show continues with a new story with Kikaider 's older sibling, Kikaider 0. And yeah, he has a human form too, Ichiro . In my opinion, he is a better looking one and a better design. Someone has once told me the story behind the costume design of kikaider. The 01 show is as good as kikaider and with better looking villains. The story started off with Hakaida coming back and formed the Hakaida Gang.

Somehow, Hakaida 's human brain was transferred back to Dr. Koumyouji; and very mysteriously, Professor Gill's brain was transplanted into Hakaida and became the Gill Hakaida with a star shape symbol to denote his new identity. There were 3 other Hakaidas in the Gang: Red(Centipede),Blue(Alligator) ,Silver (Shrimp), Black (Gill's Hakaida) is the leader. These new Hakaidas also possessed human brains from the loyal evil scientists of the Dark Planet society. The appearance of these Hakaidas had triggered the awakening of Kikaider 01 who was hidden inside a statue by Dr. Koumyouji.

01 was made before Kikaider and was completed with the conscience circuit; however, instead of using Kinetic energy like Kikaider, he used Solar Power to transform and will grow weak when out in the dark too long and that made him vulnerable when the sun is not available, I thought this sucked! As a matter of fact, 01 was nearly defeated by the gang at the beginning of the series; fortunately, his brother gave him a hand to defeat the gang.

There is also a comic version of the Kikaider series written by Ishinomori. Instead of being the older brother of kikaider, 01 is just another robot, which was controlled by the enemy and eventually destroyed by kikaider. Hmmmmmm, with all due respect sir, this plot sucks!

Ok, I mentioned that someone told me something about the story behind the costume design. So why is the semi-exposed electronics on the costume. Well, according to the source, the author intended to emphasize the incompleteness/imperfection of the android heroes. This is further suggested by the lack of "Conscience circuitry" within Kikaider, Bijinda and the Solar Energy source of 01.

Ok, so why the red and blue color?? Well, one color is supposed to represent evil and the other represents good. These are some of the characteristics of human, us: "Nobody is perfect and we all possess the quality of good and evil" and one has to decide which path to walk. Kikaida, 01, Bijinda and Waruda have all chosen their paths, just like we do in real life. We are responsible for ourselves. The decision may be affected or influenced by external sources or environment, but we choose how to respond and react to them. We choose our own paths.

"Where evil lurks, I will come! Where evil appears, I will be! I am the Champion of Justice, Kikaida 01!" -- Ichiro's introductory speech.

Kikaidà Zero-Wan originally aired in Japan, May 12, 1973 - March 30, 1974 (in the same time slot as the original series had been aired). Although it began just one week after Jinzo Ningen Kikaida it was supposed to take place 3 years after the defeat of the Dark Destruction Corps.

Kikaida 01's Combat Techniques

Zero Wan Katto (01 Cut) - single handed karate chop. Often used to decapitate Shadowmen and Androids.
 Zero Wan Doraibaa (01 Driver) - he'd put his arms above his head and fly through the air while spinning around really fast, sort of like a flying electric screwdriver, knocking bad guys aside and punching them.
 Burasto Endo (Blast End) - he'd jump up in the air and move his hands across his face. (The opposite of the way Kikaida moved his for Denji Endo. Instead of moving from the outside in, Kikaida-01's hands moved from the inside outwards.) Then white cracks would appear across the screen, and the monster was history!
 First used in the fourth episode against Silver Hakaida's shrimp form. In later episodes a white beam would come out of his hands.

Zero Wan Kikku (01 Kick) - flying kick a lot like the Kamen Riders'. Introduced in episode 16.

Burasto Endo Flash (Blast End Flash) - Blast End three times rapidly, used in episode 20.

01 Fire - sparks come out of his fingers, used in episode 32.

Burasto Attaku (Blast Attack) - weaker version of Blast End, used in episode 38.

Burasto Power (Blast Power) - waves of energy shoot out of his hands, used in episode 39.

In episode 18 Kikaida & Kikaida 01 link together, to use Double Brother Power - two white bolts shoot out of their hands.

01 can link with Bijinda to use Blast Laser (episode 39), or with Kikaida and Bijinda to use Kikaida Triple Circle Power (episode 46).

(These linked attacks are dangerous. The energy generated is more than enough to destroy our heroes if they don't release it fast enough.)

KIKAIDER

1 - 1 INVINCIBLE!! ANDROID ZERO ONE IS BORN!!

Three years have passed since Kikaida defeated the Dark Destruction Corps. The sky fills with thick black smoke. From a dark cloud a bolt of lightning strikes rocky ground. Up out of the ground comes a dark form, it looks like Hakaida except it has one large star and three small red, blue and silver stars on its chest. This is Gill Hakaida. A ball of red fire hits the earth, out of the explosion appears Red Hakaida, carrying Missile Bow Gun (autoloading crossbow with telescopic site). A ball of blue fire strikes the earth. Blue Hakaida, carrying Electric Whip appears. A ball of silver fire strikes the earth. Silver Hakaida, carrying a bo-stick appears.

Lightning strikes the ground, about a dozen red figures with yellow lightning bolts on their chest appear, the Androbots. The Hakaida Squad has been born. The image of a young boy appears in the clouds. The boy's name is Akira. The Hakaida Squad wants him. Why will be revealed much later. The four Hakaidas drive off each on his own motorcycle.

The boy Akira is walking, alone. When he comes to the gate of an Atomic Energy Laboratory he pushes it open walks in and turns on water fountain to take a drink. While Akira is drinking a man is attacked. A whip wraps around his throat. When his two friends see Blue Hakaida they try to flee. One is knocked down by Silver Hakaida's bo-staff the other is shot with an arrow. Gill Hakaida appears. The research lab begins to explode. Akira runs, chased by three Androbots.

In a buddist temple the eyes of a statue begin to flash.
Akira keeps running as the lab burns.

With a bang the statue falls apart to reveal a red and blue robot, Kikaida-01. Kikaida-01 mounts his motorcycle with sidecar, Doublemachine and rides towards the lab.

Akira climbs down into a sewer. When he thinks he's walked far enough he climbs out. He has trouble pushing off the manhole cover. A grey haired old woman dressed in black helps. Akira runs from her, right into the arms of Gill Hakaida, on his motorcycle. The four Hakaidas drive on, only to stop when they hear a trumpet. A man wearing a blue helmet, red jacket, black gloves, blue pants is playing the trumpet. When he stops he identifies himself as Kikaida-01. Gill Hakaida shots at him with Hakaida shot. Blue Hakaida tries to strangle him with his whip.

When he jumps into the air, Silver Hakaida throws his bo-staff at him, knocking him down. When Red Hakaida tries to shot him with his crossbow, the man jumps, lands and moving his hands so they are together over his forehead says, "Change Kikada " and as he brings his hands apart, "01". A solar collector pops out of his helmet as he transforms into Kikaida-01. Apparently in answer to a question asked by 01, Gill Hakaida explains the he has Professor Gills brain in his head. The Hakaida Squad and Kikaida-01 fight. The Androbots throw lightning bolt shaped weapons at 01. Blue Hakaida whips 01. 01 shouts "01 Cut!" and hits the Androbots with a one-handed karate chop, spliting one Androbot's head in half and decapitating two others. Then shouting "01 Driver" he jumps into the air and with his body spinning flies at Gill Hakaida, punching him. Gill Hakaida is knocked down, dropping Akira. 01 picks Akira up and placing Akira in his sidecar, drives off. The four Hakaidas follow on their motorcycles. 01 uses Doublemachine rockets to fly away.

The next scenes is by a lake. 01 has returned to his human form, Ichiro, which means "first son", and has removed his helmet. Akira has removed his shirt and sits ontop of the sidecar. Ichiro notices three strange marks on Akira's back. Ichiro hears a woman's screams. He drives off to invistigate, leaving Akira alone by the lake. As the sun shines on Akira's back the camera zooms in and we see that is some sort of schematic on the boy's body.

The old woman who helped Akira with the manhole cover has been attacked by Blue Hakaida. His whip is wrapped around her throat. Blue Hakaida flings the woman up a ledge. When he jumps up after her he is knocked back down by 01. 01 and Blue Hakaida fight. A man with a camera witness the fight and takes photographs. Blue Hakaida unable to beat 01 drives away.

Akira walks alone, again. A laughing Red Hakaida aims his Missile Bow Gun at the boy.

01 finds the unconscious woman. He sees that the woman's face is really a mask, removing it and the wing reveals a black haired, pretty, young woman. 01 leaves the woman in the care of the photographer.

Akira is running now. Four Androbots capture him, putting him in a jeep. The jeep drives off, followed by Red Hakaida on his motorcycle. 01 returns to where Ichiro left Akira and discovers the boy is gone.

Akira has been taken to the Hakaida Squad's base and is tied up. Outside the four Hakaidas wait for 01. The road is mined. The photographer over hears Gill Hakaida talking about the mines and tries to shout a warning to 01, who's too far away to hear. Doublemachine drives through the mine field, unharmed. Shouting Professor Gill's favorite word "kill", Gill Hakaida orders his men to attack. Beating off the Androbots, 01 enters the base. After knocking down several more Androbots he confronts the Hakaidas. He knocks them down then bursts through a wall into the room Akira is tied up in. When Red Hakaida tries to shoot 01 with his Missile Bow Gun 01 throws him back through the hole in the wall. When Blue Hakaida tries to use his whip on 01, 01 tosses him into another room. When Silver Hakaida tries to hit 01 with his bo-staff 01 takes it away from him, hits him with it then throws it at a control panel, which explodes. 01 takes Akira out of the Hakaida Squad's base just before it blows up. The photographer who was taking pictures of the whole thing suddenly discovers he forgot to put film in the camera. Akira had been wounded in the leg. Ichiro puts a bandage on the wound. Ichiro notices a small pouch on Akira's belt. Opening it he finds a photograph of Akira and the woman who wore the disguise. With Akira in the sidecar, Ichiro drives away just before scenes of next week's episode are shown followed by the ending them.

1 - 2 WHAT IS THE HAKAIDAA FOUR STEP ATTACK!?

Two men with shotguns and a dog are out hunting when they see a group of Androbots marching through the forest. The men open fire. The Androbots keep coming. The men turn to run and are confronted by Silver Hakaida and Red Hakaida. Silver Hakaida kills one man with his bo-staff. When the other turns to run, Red Hakaida shoots him in the back with an arrow that explodes. That photographer from episode 1 sees this happen. To keep from being seen he lays down. Both Hakaidas walk right over him. Gill Hakaida again assigns his Hakaida Squad the task of capturing Akira.

Ichiro takes the photograph of Akira and the mysterious woman to a hospital and shows it to a nurse, who recognising the woman tells Ichiro what room she is in. Red Hakaida, standing on a tree is watching. The nurse takes Ichiro and Akira into the room. The woman is gone. Suddenly Ichiro knocks the nurse down. An arrow comes through the window, it would have hit the nurse. Arrows flying, Ichiro leads the nurse and Akira out of the building. Hearing the laughter of one of the Hakaidas, Ichiro grabs Akira and runs. Blue Hakaida uses his whip to swing through the trees. Silver Hakaida uses his bo-staff to pole vault.

Ichiro and Akira enter an apparently closed amusement park. The rides suddenly come on. Androbots appear. With Blue, Red and Silver Hakaidas watching, Ichiro fights them. He stops to hide Akira in a rollercoaster car then resumes fighting. When the three Hakaida joins the battle, Ichiro jumps into the top of a boxcar and transforms into Kikaida-01. After fighting Androbots on top of rides 01 returns to the ground where blue Hakaida wraps his whip around his neck and sends an electrical charge through the whip. 01 chops the whip in two. The three Hakaidas run to the rollercoaster which has stopped, but when they lift off the blanket that was covering Akira they find a large stuffed Panda toy.

At the new Hakaida Squad base Gill Hakaida beats up on Blue, Red and Silver Hakaidas. Afterwards he points to a screen, says something about Akira. A blip appears on the screen.

Akira is with a woman. When Ichiro comes to get Akira, Akira doesn't want to go with him, keeps hiding behind the woman. Ichiro grabs Akira and walks away. The woman goes in the other direction. Stops. And peels off her mask, revealing, the mysterious woman from episode 1.

Ichiro is riding Double Machine. The sidecar is empty! Ichiro stops by the woman. He shows her the photo of her and Akira.

The Ichiro carrying Akira stops by a motorcycle and becomes Silver Hakaida.

The woman tells Ichiro the Hakaida Squad has Akira.

Silver Hakaida carrying Akira rides off on his motorcycle. He meets up with the rest of the Hakaida Squad. Ichiro's trumpet is heard. After listening to another of Ichiro's speeches, Gill Hakaida shoots at him. Ichiro transforms into Kikaida-01. After destroying a few Androbots, 01 notices the sun is going down. 01 is solar powered so without the sun he's in trouble. He immediately uses "01 Driver" to knock down more Androbots and Blue, Red and Silver Hakaidas. Then he breaks into their base and after a fight with Gill Hakaida, activates the self-destruct mechanism. He exits the base, which explodes. All four Hakaidas are waiting for him. Blue Hakaida raps his whip around 01's neck and drags him behind his motorcycle. Silver Hakaida hits him with his staff. When they stop, 01 stands. Blue Hakaida sends an electric charge through his whip, but instead of hurting 01 that seems to energise him, because he breaks free and flies into the air, where he meets Gill Hakaida.

The other three Hakaidas fly up to join them. An in the air battle takes place with 01 punched, flipped and kicked by Blue, Red and Silver Hakaida. Then the three Hakaidas form a triangle holding onto different parts off Blue Hakaida's whip. Gill Hakaida knocks 01 into the triangle. The high voltage charge burns into 01's legs. He falls to the ground, both his legs have holes in them and he can't stand. The Hakaida Squad lands and start searching for 01. Akira finds him. 01 tries to get Akira to go away, but he doesn't.

The episode ends with Akira helping 01 to drag himself into hiding.

1 - 3 THE RETURN OF JIRO KIKAIKA

Akira and 01, his legs broken by the Hakaida Squad, are hiding from the Hakaida Squad who have been searching for them all night. The sun is rising. Akira and 01 change their hiding place and are caught. The Hakaida Squad seems to take pleasure in whipping, hitting and shooting at the fallen 01. 01 grabs hold of Blue Hakaida's whip to lift himself up and then hits Blue Hakaida knocking him down, but Gill Hakaida kicks 01 down again. Red Hakaida aims his Missile Bow Gun at 01, but smoke bombs suddenly go off. When the smoke clears 01 is gone. A guitar is heard. Jiro is standing on a hill. Gill Hakaida shoots at him. Kikaida appears on Side Machine. Kikaida and the Hakaida Squad fight. 01 is repairing himself. He finishes just as the sun rises. Akira runs up to him. 01 picks the boy up. They hug.

Red Hakaida aims his Missile Bow Gun at Kikaida but before he can fire he's hit from behind by 01. The Kikaida brothers take on the Hakaida Squad. Red, Blue and Silver Hakaida all end up damaged with sparks coming out of their shoulders. That reporter appears to take pictures. Gill Hakaida uses White Crow (his motorcycle) to fill the air with black smoke. When the smoke clears the Hakaida Squad is gone. 01 and Kikaida spot that mysterious woman watching from a hill, but by the time Ichiro and Jiro reach the top she is gone. Akira comes running to Ichiro.

The photographer is playing with some children at a playground, we find out his name is Ganta. Akira takes the film out of Ganta's camera exposing it, ruining it. No one notices that mysterious woman hiding in the bushes. Ichiro and Jiro ride off on Double Machine and Side Machine (Jiro doesn't use his ordinary motorcycle with side car in this series). They start off together then Double Machine goes to the left and Side Machine to the right. Ganta is chasing Akira and another kid when he stops to photograph a statue of a naked woman.

Ichiro stops at a quarry and is attacked by Androbots. Jiro stops at another part of the same quarry and is also attacked. After fighting off the Androbots the brothers meet.

Ganta is attacked by Androbots. One knocks him out, others each grab a kid. Ichiro's trumpet is heard. Mid way into the song Jiro's guitar joins in. Ichiro stops playing first. The brothers fight the Androbots. When the Androbots have all been destroyed the brothers check that the children are okay. Akira is missing. The sky is filled with more Androbots who land fight the brothers. Akira is found to be in the arms of that woman. She takes off with Akira as Ichiro and Jiro return to fighting Androbots. "Change, switch on, one, two, three". Jiro transforms into Kikaida. "Change, Kikaida Zero One". Ichiro becomes Kikaida-01. They use Side Machine and Double Machine to run down Androbots before taking to the air. The battle continues in flight. Eventually they land. 01 breaks into the Hakaida Squad's Androbot factory, where he encounters Blue, Red and Silver Hakaidas. Kikaida bursts through a wall to take on Gill Hakaida. After knocking Gill Hakaida down, Kikaida jumps through the ceiling into the above room where 01 needs help against the other three Hakaidas. After defeating the Hakaidas 01 and Kikaida each grab a switch. Together they pull the switches. The Androbot factory explodes.

An Androbot says something to Gill Hakaida who responds by shooting it. The Hakaida Squad meets in their original spot. Akira's face followed by that woman's, appear in the clouds.

Jiro and Ichiro shake hands then drive off together. Akira rides in Double Machine's sidecar. The four Hakaidas on their own motorcycles watch them go.

1 - 4 BIZARRE! THE GHOST ROBOT DISAPPEARANCE!?

A giant Silver Shrimp with a red head, walks towards a house. Inside the house are a woman and a girl. Behind them on the mantle is a photograph of the woman, the girl, a man and Akira! The lights start to flicker. This is because the Silver Shrimp is trying to break the outside wires. The lights go out. The woman lights a candle. The girl sees the shadow of the Silver Shrimp outside the glass doors, but when the woman looks it is gone. The woman hears a sound. When she looks out the glass doors she sees Silver Shrimp. She backs away. She feels something on her neck. Touches her neck, a red liquid comes off on her hand. A puddle of the red liquid appears on the floor. The liquid transforms into the Silver Shrimp. The monster ties up the girl, suspends her from the ceiling. He then shows the woman, the girl's mother, a picture of Akira. At the Hakaida Squad's new base, Gill Hakaida, Red Hakaida and Blue Hakaida are watching these things on their monitor screen.

Ichiro is riding Double Machine, with Akira in the sidecar. When they stop, Red Hakaida has Ichiro in his site but the woman who's daughter the Silver Shrimp has taken prisoner appears and blocks his shot. The woman hugs Akira. She shows Ichiro a picture like the one on her mantle. Akira runs away. Ichiro goes after him. An arrow just misses Ichiro, hitting a tree. Ichiro grabs Akira and rolls as arrows hit the ground. When Red Hakaida finally shows himself Ichiro jumps onto the roof of a house and transforms into Kikaida-01, but Red Hakaida is now gone.

The woman and Akira are running away when they are surrounded by Androbots. Jiro's guitar is heard. Ichiro's younger brother fights the Androbots.

01 uses "01 Driver" to knock Red Hakaida out of a tree. Blue Hakaida jumps down out of a tree, picks up Red Hakaida and they ride away on his motorcycle. A silver boulder rolls down a hill towards 01 who dodges it. The boulder becomes Silver Shrimp. Silver Shrimp turns back into the boulder and tries again. This time he knocks 01 down before becoming Silver Shrimp again. Seeing his brother in trouble, Jiro transforms into Kikaida, jumps over Silver Shrimp and helps 01 up. Silver Shrimp vanishes underground. 01 and Kikaida become Ichiro and Jiro again. Ichiro takes Akira to the woman's house in Double Machine's sidecar. Jiro takes the woman in Side Machine's sidecar, and then he drives away. Ichiro and Akira walk to house. The woman hangs back by the gate, until three Androbots appear and pointing their lightning bolt weapons at her, prod her to get inside. She opens the door for Ichiro and Akira. Once inside Ichiro looks up to see Androbots hiding in the corners, on the ceiling. Three Androbots come down to attack him, he fights them off then runs up the stairs.

The woman has put Akira at a table with a glass of something orange and a pink and white cake. She hears a noise and leaves the room. When the cake starts making noises, Akira knocks it onto the floor. The cake becomes Silver Shrimp. Akira runs into another room, closes the door and piles furniture in front of it.

Ichiro finds himself in the room the girl is tied up in, suspended from the ceiling. Androbots attack him. He defeats the Androbots and frees the girl.

Silver Shrimp slides between the door and the frame into Akira's room.

Ichiro returns the girl to her mother. Mother tells Ichiro that Akira is in danger. Ichiro runs back up the stairs and breaks into the room Akira was hiding in. Akira and Silver Shrimp are gone. Looking out the window Ichiro sees that mysterious woman who's picture he's been carrying. She sees him and runs. Ichiro runs out of the house after her. The woman stops a dumptruck and apparently tells the driver a man is after her. He pulls her into the cab and drive away just as Ichiro comes running up. Ichiro gets on Double Machine to drive after them.

The dumptruck driver becomes Blue Hakaida. The back of the truck is suddenly full of Androbots. The woman runs but falls. Blue Hakaida whips her while Red Hakaida stands by with his Missile Bow Gun. An Androbot picks her up and holding by the neck forces her to walk. Ichiro's trumpet is heard. While Ichiro fights the Androbots the woman drives off in the dumptruck. Ichiro transforms into Kikaida-01 and uses "01 Driver" to knock down Red and Blue Hakaidas and to destroy several Androbots. Gill Hakaida arrives on White Crow, driving around in circles, spraying black smoke. When the smoke clears, 01 is alone.

At Hakaida Squad base Gill Hakaida beats up on Red and Blue Hakaidas. Then he announces a new plan, "sudden darkness". He actually says it in English or I wouldn't have understood him.

Akira is walking alone, outside a temple. Androbots and Silver Shrimp appear. That idiot photographer, Ganta is watching. Silver Shrimp is pierced by an Androbot lightning bolt, thrown at him by 01. Silver Shrimp pulls out the lightning bolt, tossing it to the ground. When 01 throws an Androbot it lands by Ganta, who seeing it coming drops his camera. When he picks his camera out from under the Androbot body, the lense has fallen off. 01 uses "01 Driver" to destroy more Androbots but before he can hit Silver Shrimp the monster jumps into the air and twirls himself on a silver staff that appears suspended in air. Seeing this 01 recognises that Silver Shrimp is actually Silver Hakaida. 01 flies into the air to destroy some flying Androbots.

Ichiro leading Akira by the hand runs through a quarry. Gill Hakaida flies into the air. Thick black smokes pours out of his body, creating Sudden Darkness. Ichiro cannot transform into Kikaida-01. The silver ball tries to bowl Ichiro over, misses and becomes Silver Shrimp. Ichiro dodges Silver Shrimps blows so he becomes the silver ball and tries again to knock Ichiro down. Ichiro dodges. Suddenly, Kikaida on Side Machine flies through the black smoke. The sun shines through the hole Side Machine cut into the smoke.

Ichiro transforms into Kikaida-01 and attacks Silver Shrimp. 01 punches and kicks Silver Shrimp. Silver Shrimp grabs 01 by the throat. 01 breaks free and hits Silver Shrimp. Silver Shrimp tries to get 01 by the throat again but 01 kicks him back and then crossing his arms shouts "Blast End". Silver Shrimp falls down a cliff and explodes. Blue and Red Hakaida rush to the bottom to help up a shaken and hurt Silver Hakaida. Ichiro and Jiro shake hands then drive off on their motorcycles, Akira riding in Double Machine's sidecar.

1 - 5 TERROR! AN EGG LAUGHS ON BLUE ALLIGATOR ISLAND!!

A man is working on his beached boat when his son arrives bringing lunch. They start to eat when a strange sound is heard. Looking around the boy sees a large sphere floating in the ocean. When it lands on the beach the boy's father approaches it, when it starts to glow he backs away. Several other fishermen have arrived. The sphere laughs then breaks open to reveal a Blue Alligator. The fishermen run away but are chased back by Androbots. Blue Alligator eats a man, then spits out his bones and skull. When another man tries to run, Blue Alligator's head flies off and bites the man to death. Distracted by the men neither Blue Alligator nor the Androbots see the boy escape. Ganta the photographer pops up from under a blanket, inside a boat. He has the boy hid under the blanket while he takes photographs. Blue Alligator sees Ganta and takes him prisoner. With balls and chains on their ankles, the men are taken to Alligator Island as slave labor for the Hakaida Squad.

Akira looking down at the beach through a pair of binoculars sees the bones. He looks for Ichiro but can't find him. When he hears Double Machine, he looks at the beach again. Ichiro has parked near the bones. Akira joins Ichiro on the beach. Blue Alligator must have killed more men off camera because there were more bones than one man would have and at least five skulls on the beach. Ichiro recognizes that this must be the work of the Hakaida Squad. Ichiro and Akira hear someone crying. They find the boy hidden in the boat. The boy stares out at sea. Ichiro can see Alligator Island in the distance. As the three walk away, Blue Alligator watches them go, laughing. Did he know the boy was there all along, did he leave him there as a trap for 01? Ichiro takes the boys to a hotel.

That mysterious woman who keeps appearing to watch over Akira, walks on the beach. When she finds a bottle with a note in it, apparently from the slaves on Alligator Island she is attacked by Blue Alligator and several Androbots. Blue Alligator hits her in the stomach, knocking her out. Jiro's guitar is heard, briefly. Jiro fights Blue Alligator. When Jiro tries to change into Kikaida he hears a sound he hasn't heard in over three years, Professor Gill's flute! On Alligator Island, Gill Hakaida wearing the professor's cape is playing the flute.

Riding down the beach on Double Machine, Ichiro stops when he hears a noise. He recognizes it as Professor Gill's flute, but it has no effect on him because his conscious circuit is complete. Looking around he sees Jiro down, Androbots around him. Ichiro leaps into action. Ichiro hurls Androbots. The sound of them exploding covers the sound of the flute, Jiro transforms into Kikaida. When Red Hakaida, Silver Hakaida and Gill Hakaida, without cape or flute, appear, Ichiro transforms into Kikaida-01. While Kikaida takes out the Androbots 01 uses "01 Driver" to knock down the 3 Hakaidas and Blue Alligator. The villains vanish. 01 and Kikaida jump into the air, do summersaults and land on the beach as Ichiro and Jiro. The woman is still there, laying on the sand. Jiro picks her up. Ichiro heads back to the hotel to check on Akira.

Akira and the other boy are in the lounge taking in a show. A woman in red is singing, a woman in violet is dancing with her. Suddenly that woman takes Akira and the other boy backstage. When they get backstage, the real dancer is on the ground tied up and gagged!

Ichiro makes it back to the hotel but discovers the boys are missing. He finds and unties the dancer then returns to the beach.

The boys have been taken to Alligator Island. Akira is put on a table, and locked under a glass case. The other boy is taken somewhere else.

At the beach Ichiro hears a woman's cry for help. She appears to be drowning. Ichiro jumps into the water to help. It's a trap! Ichiro is sucked under into a capsule. The capsule sinks taking Ichiro down into the ocean where he is cut off from the light of the sun so he cannot transform into Kikaida-01. Worse than that, the capsule is headed for a large mine. When the capsule hits the mine, Ichiro will be destroyed! On Alligator Island the three Hakaidas and Blue Alligator are watching Ichiro on their monitor screen. They laugh at 01's impending demise. In the capsule Ichiro seems to be panicking. He tries to break out but doesn't have the strength. The gauge inside the capsule shows it is about to hit bottom when suddenly the gauge starts going the other way, the capsule begins to rise. The capsule is being pushed back up by Kikaida. As soon as sunlight shines in through the capsule's window, Ichiro transforms into Kikaida-01. The three Hakaidas and Blue Alligator see this and exit their base.

Kikaida-01 and Kikaida land on Alligator Island and immediately start fighting Androbots. 01 sends Kikaida to find Akira. On the way Kikaida takes out the Androbots guarding the slaves. When their guards are defeated the slaves escape. The fisherman and his son are reunited. Blue Alligator breaks out of his egg to take on 01. 01 gets away from Blue Alligator only to run into the 3 Hakaidas. Red Hakaida shoots at him with his Missile Bow Gun, Silver Hakaida throws his bo-staff at him and Gill Hakaida shoots at him. 01 uses "01 Cut" to split the heads of Androbots and to knock down Blue Alligator. Blue Alligator returns to his egg, which apparently repairs any damage he suffers. He comes out of the egg to fight 01 again.

Inside their base Androbots are attempting to get the plans from Akira's back. Kikaida comes in and stops them, freeing Akira.

Back outside, Kikaida fights the three Hakaidas while 01 fights Blue Alligator. When Kikaida sees Blue Alligator return to his egg, Kikaida tries to get to 01 but the Hakaidas are in his way again. Blue Alligator comes out of his egg and his head flies off at 01. 01 manages to knock it aside twice but the third time it manages to get him by the neck. Kikaida fights his way to his brother and kicks the alligator head off his brother. Kikaida then apparently suggest to 01 that they destroy the egg. The two brothers pick up the bottom half of the egg. The Hakaidas see what they're doing at shout at them to stop. The two brothers throw the egg shell. When it hits the rocks it explodes. Blue Alligator spins around, screaming, several times before falling over and exploding. Akira and the former slaves come out of hiding. The fishermen thank 01 and Kikaida for freeing them (mostly it was Kikaida). That mysterious woman appears again, watching from the background. Ichiro and Jiro ride off down the road, Akira in Double Machine's side car.

Standing on a cliff Gill Hakaida makes threats (I'm guessing) against 01 while Silver Hakaida holds onto the arm of a badly damaged Blue Hakaida. Beneath them, shaking his hands is Scarlet Centipede.

1 - 6 THE MAGICIAN VERSUS ZERO ONE'S SECRET ABILITY!!

Some girls are swining in a playground, all but one leave. The one left behind picks up a piece of paper. It's a flyer about a magic show. The girl goes to the show which takes place inside a tent. There are many other children there. The magician (played by Miyaguchi, Jiro who was Colonel Zol in Kamen Rider) puts a red cloak over the face of his young female assistant, walks around her waiving his wand. When he uncovers her she has become an ugly old woman with long white hair. He covers her again and walks around her waiving the wand. When he removes the cover, the woman has vanished.

Finally the magician covers himself and turns around several times. When he uncovers himself, he has become Scarlet Centipede. There is a flash and centipedes cover the tent. When the children try to flee Androbots block the exit. The girl from the swing climbs under the tent to escape. Ichiro stops Double Machine when he sees something lying by the side of the road. It turns out to be the girl. She tells him about the monster. He takes her to her home.

At the Hakaida Squad's new base Scarlet Centipede is irritated by the noisy children, so he shoots spikes at an Androbot. The spikes stick then explode destroying the Androbot. Other Androbots drag the children away. The children are put into a machine.

More children are playing, in a quarry. They stop by a red cloak lying on the ground. The cloak becomes Red Centipede. The children try to run away but are captured by Androbots. Ichiro's trumpet is heard. Ichiro transforms into Kikaida-01. 01 defeats the Androbots. The children run away but more Androbots appear. When 01 tries to get to the children Scarlet Centipede blocks his way. After exchanging punches and kicks with Scarlet Centipede, 01 uses "01 Cut". Scarlet Centipede falls apart. 01 turns his back on the pieces. That was a mistake, the pieces attack 01 knocking him down. 01 gets back up, the pieces of Scarlet Centipede knock him down again.

The Androbots are taking the children away when Jiro's guitar is heard. Jiro attacks the Androbots. When Jiro tries to go to 01 the Gill Hakaida, Blue Hakaida and Silver Hakaida attempt to run him over. Jiro changes into Kikaida and jumping into the air escapes. He lands by 01 and helps him to fight the pieces of Scarlet Centipede. Blue Hakaida and Silver Hakaida join the fight. 01 tries to go after the children but Scarlet Centipede appears and wounds him in the ankle with his spikes. 01 and Scarlet Centipede throw each other off a cliff disturbing Ganta. Ganta rolls off a ledge and almost lands on top of that mysterious woman. She slaps Ganta who runs away. Gill Hakaida joins the fight against Kikaida. Silver Hakaida swings on his staff and knocks Kikaida down, but Kikaida gets back up and after landing a few good punches throws Blue Hakaida into Gill Hakaida. The three Hakaidas mount their motorcycles and drive away.

The three Hakaidas are back at their base when a wounded and dirty Scarlet Centipede comes in. Gill Hakaida hits him, knocking him down. Silver Hakaida and Blue Hakaida pick Scarlet Centipede up. After Gill Hakaida orders them to kill 01 and Kikaida, Scarlet Centipede pulls away from Silver Hakaida and Blue Hakaida. He stands on his own for a short time then falls over.

Jiro repairs Ichiro's ankle.

Scarlet Centipede appears by a window. The girl from the swing sees him and cries out. Her mother sees him and dropping dishes screams. Ichiro comes running into the kitchen but Scarlet Centipede is gone from the window when he gets there. Akira is in a room by himself. He hears a strange noise but doesn't see anything wrong. Scarlet Centipede is crawling across the floor behind Akira's chair. A hand grabs Akira by the ankle.

Akira is carried off by an Androbot following Scarlet Centipede. Akira calls for help but instead of rescuing him, Ichiro quietly follows. Jiro steps out from behind some bushes, joining Ichiro in the pursuit. The brothers follow the Scarlet Centipede and the Androbots into a cave. An Androbot head on the ceiling, apparently an alarm, flashes and makes a beeping noise. Jiro jumps up punching it. It explodes, making a noise louder than the alarm. Androbots appear, they're easily defeated.

The Scarlet Centipede and the other Androbots take Akira into the room where the children are, in the machine, which seems to suck blood out of them. Akira is taken somewhere else. Ichiro and Jiro enter the room. As Ichiro and Jiro are fighting the Androbots and Scarlet Centipede, Gill Hakaida plays Professor Gill's flute. Scarlet Centipede laughs at Jiro's inability to change into Kikaida now.

Ichiro grabs Jiro by the arm and says something like "Cross Bodies", Jiro and Ichiro hold onto each others left hands while crossing their right arms. Their bodies glow then they jump through the ceiling. Outside they shout "Double Change" and together transform into Kikaida and Kikaida-01. The brothers land back inside the room. Kikaida defeats the Androbots and knocks Scarlet Centipede down, then frees the children. 01 leaves the room.

01 breaks into the room where Gill Hakaida is playing Professor Gill's flute. Gill Hakaida tries to hit 01 with the flute but 01 knocks the flute out of his hands, it hits the floor and explodes. The flute is never heard from again.

01 finds Akira and unties him.

01 and Kikaida exit the Hakaida Squad base. Outside they encounter Gill Hakaida, Blue Hakaida, Silver Hakaida and Scarlet Centipede. While Kikaida deals with the three Hakaidas, 01 fights Scarlet Centipede. Scarlet Centipede shoots his spikes at 01, they explode. 01 holding out his arms spins around, the spikes are sent back at Scarlet Centipede. Then 01 uses "01 Driver" immediately followed by "Blast End". Scarlet Centipede falls down to the bottom of the quarry and explodes. The children thank Ichiro and Jiro, who drive off on Double Machine and Side Machine. The four Hakaidas watch, on their motorcycles. Gill Hakaida says something about "Black Dragon".

1 - 7 THUNDERSTRIKE! THE POWER REDUCING ZERO ONE DIRECT HIT

Two women are washing dishes in a diner. The water stops working. When they try turning the faucets of and on again flames come out instead of water. In the flames is the image of Black Dragon. The women faint.

Ichiro stops Double Machine outside the diner. He doesn't want to go in but wants to keep going because the sun is setting but Akira jumps out of the sidecar and runs into the diner. Akira calls for service and sits down. Two Androbots sneak up behind him, one is about to grab him by the neck when Ichiro comes in and hits both of them. Ichiro starts to lead Akira back out. Akira looks back, sees two bowls of steaming noodles. He tries to go them but Ichiro pulls him away. The bowls fly into the air and spell the noodles on Ganta who just walked in the door. Ganta gets some noodles on his lips, he passes out. Dishes start flying at Ichiro and Akira. When Ichiro tries to open the diner door he finds that it is stuck. The doorknob turns into a small dragon head and bites Ichiro. Ichiro breaks free. There's an explosion and Black Dragon appears. His right hand is a second, smaller dragon head. Akira runs out another door, into the woods. He is followed by Androbots. Ganta crawls out of the diner. He meets an old woman, he knocks him out again.

Akira is blinded by the headlights of a car. The car is driven by that mysterious woman who keeps coming to his rescue. Akira gets in the car.

Ichiro is outside now, fighting Androbots and Black Dragon. Jiro's guitar is heard. Jiro jumps off a building, changing into Kikaida in the process. Kikaida fights the Androbots. An instrumental version of "Go Go Kikaida" plays in the background. When Kikaida approaches Black Dragon lightning flashes and Black Dragon vanishes.

The woman has Akira hide in a shelter in a park.

Kikaida-01 is riding Double Machine in the sky, looking down for Akira.

Three Androbots see Akira but when they enter the shelter he's already taken off. They see him running away.

01 is attacked by a flying Black Dragon, who spits fire at him. 01 turns Double Machine to get away from the fire. Black Dragon follows.

The Androbots keep searching for Akira. Akira is hiding under a bridge. The Androbots walk over the bridge. Akira sneezes. The Androbots step back onto the bridge. Silver Hakaida appears and before they can tell him Akira is under the bridge he hits two of the Androbots with his bo staff, they explode. He knocks the third into the water. The Androbot sees Akira now and tries to tell Silver Hakaida but Blue Hakaida shows up and destroys it with his Electric Whip. Red Hakaida joins the other two on the bridge. When Akira hears the three Hakaidas walk away he walks out from under the bridge.

Black Dragon spits fire at 01 again.

Ganta is taking photographs of flowers and talking to himself. He does not notice the Androbots and they ignore him. Ganta kneels and crossing himself (he must be Roman Catholic) prays. I don't know what he prayed for but when he sees a pair of legs he gets up to talk to the woman they belong too. It turns out to be the woman from outside the diner.

Black Dragon is still chasing 01.

Akira climbs a tree to get away from more Androbots.

The woman is brushing her teeth. When Blue Hakaida appears Ganta faints. The woman runs away. Silver Hakaida appears and suddenly tosses his bo staff into the air, and twirls on it. Blue Hakaida chooses his rope to swing through trees. Silver Hakaida and Blue Hakaida land next to Red Hakaida.

Akira has climbed out of the tree. He takes off his jacket and shirt. The camera focus on his back to show the plans there. The three Hakaidas spot Akira. The old woman appears and helps Akira to put his shirt and jacket back on and leads him away. They're stopped by Silver Hakaida who removes the woman's mask and wig, to reveal Akira's mysterious protector. Akira has ran off but he's captured by two Androbots who take him back to the woman and Silver Hakaida. Blue Hakaida and Red Hakaida join the group. Red Hakaida is about to shoot the woman when Ichiro's trumpet is heard. After Ichiro makes his speech, Red Hakaida aims his Missile Bow Gun at him, but strangely instead of seeing him fire at Ichiro we see Gill Hakaida, who isn't even there, firing Hakaida shot at him. Ichiro transforms into Kikaida-01. The woman and Akira run away. After using "01 Cut" on a couple Androbots 01 uses "01 Driver" on the rest. Then Ichiro catches up with Akira. Whistling is heard. Gill Hakaida appears and flies into the air, spewing out black smoke. "Sudden Darkness" again. Hakaida lands and becomes Black Dragon. Black Dragon spits fire at Ichiro then his right hand shoots explosive shells at Ichiro. Ichiro is struck by lightning. Elsewhere, Jiro hears thunder and sees the black smoke in the sky. He transforms into Kikaida and uses Side Machine to cut a hole in the black smoke, just like the first time. The Sun shines on Black Dragon and Ichiro. Ichiro transforms into Kikaida-01. 01 uses "01 Cut" on Black Dragon, twice, then "01 Driver" and "Blast End". Black Dragon falls down a cliff and explodes. Blue Hakaida, Red Hakaida and Silver Hakaida pick up the badly damaged Gill Hakaida (they call him "boss"), he knocks them down. They pick themselves up. Ichiro and Jiro shake hands again and drive off, in opposite directions, on Double Machine and Side Machine, Akira in Double Machine's sidecar.

Gill Hakaida, Blue Hakaida, Red Hakaida and Silver Hakaida link arms to form a circle. They spin around transforming into Gattaida ("combine"). Gattaida jumps into the air, flies over Double Machine and drops bombs. One of the bombs hits Double Machine.

1 - 8 CRISIS ICHIRO! THE FOURSOME COMBINATION!!

Double Machine has been hit by a bomb dropped by Gattaida. Akira has been thrown onto a tree branch. Gattaida transforms back into the four Hakaidas but before they can capture Akira, Kikaida flying on Side Machine rescues him. The four Hakaidas link arms, form a circle, spin around becoming Gattaida again. Gattaida flies into the air and attempts to bomb Side Machine, now on the ground, but misses. Gattaida lands and becomes the four Hakaidas again.

Jiro takes Akira to a hotel. That mysterious woman who is always looking out for Akira sees them go in, they don't see her. Sitting in the lobby is a man wearing a black top hat, dark sunglasses and a white plastic mask over his nose and mouth. In his room, Akira looks out a window and worries about Ichiro. On the wall is a picture, in that picture the masked man is walking down stairs. When Jiro walks over to Akira the man vanishes from the picture.

Akira goes for a swim. Again the camera focuses on his back and we see the plans there. Gattaida appears in the water. Suddenly the scene changes to a fully dressed Akira running from Androbots and Gattaida.

Jiro's guitar is heard. Jiro jumps off a building, transforms into Kikaida and briefly battles the Androbots and Gattaida.

Akira wearing a different outfit than he's usually seen in, has ran off and is hiding behind a tree. Laughter is heard from a different tree, which turns into Gattaida. Akira runs from Gattaida and Androbots.

Ichiro picks himself up from where the bomb had thrown him. Finding Double Machine he drives off, in search of Akira.

Kikaida is fighting Androbots. Akira is captured by other Androbots. Ichiro's trumpet is heard. Ichiro jumps off a whale statue to fight Androbots. Gattaida uses Red Hakaida's Missile Bow Gun to fire three arrows at Ichiro, they all hit a tree. Gattaida tries to use Blue Hakaida's Electric Whip on Ichiro. The whip hits a tree which explodes. Gattaida tries to hit Ichiro with Silver Hakaida's Bo-Staff but Ichiro shoves an Androbot in the way, the Androbot explodes. Ichiro jumps onto an octopus ride and transforms into Kikaida-01. Standing on a roller coaster track, 01 fights the Androbots. 01 then uses "01 Driver" against the Androbots. Gattaida shoots a piece of his shoulder at 01, there's an explosion but 01 is unhurt. 01 knocks the piece of Gattaida back to Gattaida. Suddenly the man in the white suit, black hat, sunglasses and white mask appears and fights Androbots. Just as suddenly he leaves, ignoring 01's calls for him to stop. Kikaida appears and watches the stranger running away too.

At the hotel, Jiro and Ichiro but Akira to bed. Jiro leaves on Side Machine. That mysterious woman comes into the room. She and Ichiro go outside and have an argument over Akira. Since I don't know Japanese I don't know what they say but I did hear the name "Akira" repeated several times. As far as I could tell the woman has still not given her name.

The stranger, in white with the black hat, has appeared in Akira's room.

Ichiro and the woman continue talking until they hear Akira call for help. They enter Akira's room to confront the stranger. The man drops Akira introduces himself as Shadow Knight. His hat, glasses and mask fly off to reveal a man with a mustache. The man then becomes Shadow Knight, an armored figure with one large eye. Shadow Knight backs into the wall and vanishes. Ichiro and Akira ride off on Double Machine. Ganta comes out a store carrying a bunch of green packages. He tries to run after Double Machine and drops his packages. The mysterious woman boards a bus.

Ichiro leaves Akira outside a cave and drives away. He stops when he sees several Androbots. He attacks them.

The woman arrives at the cave. She finds Akira crying, why I don't know. Red Hakaida is watching them.

Ichiro continues fighting with the Androbots.

Akira enters the cave. Someone follows him. He sees the shadow of one of the Hakaidas and hears laughter.

Ichiro is still fighting with Androbots.

The Hakaida chases Akira.

Ichiro returns to find Akira gone.

Akira runs past and wakes up the sleeping photographer Ganta. Androbots appear in the cave. Akira finds that woman. Ichiro shows up. All four Hakaidas are in the cave too. They link arms, form a circle, spin and form Gattaida once more. In the darkness of the cave Ichiro weakens. Ichiro tries to fight Gattaida anyway and is knocked down when he gets up Gattaida is aiming Hakaida Shot at him. Suddenly sunlight shines into the cave through a hole exposed by Kikaida removing a boulder. Ichiro jumps through the hole, changing into Kikaida-01 in the process.

Now outside the cave, Kikaida-01 and Kikaida are joined by the Androbots and Gattaida. Kikaida takes on the Androbots while 01 fights Gattaida. 01 and Gattaida exchange punches and kicks. When 01 knocks Gattaida down with a kick, Gattaida comes back up with Electric Whip. Kikaida fights Androbots. Gattaida tries using the bo-staff on 01. Kikaida fights Androbots. Gattaida points Missile Bow Gun at 01 but 01 knocks it out of his hand. Gattaida tries Hakaida Shot on 01. 01 and Gattaida jump into the air. 01 uses "Blast End". Gattaida explodes in midair. Ichiro and Jiro shake hands again.

Blue Hakaida, Red Hakaid and Silver Hakaida are crumbled on the ground. Gill Hakaida stands over them making a speech, probably about how he's going to get 01 for this.

Ichiro and Jiro return to the cave. Akira comes running but suddenly, out of the darkness Shadow Knight, in human form, appears, grabs Akira, carries him to his car and drives off. Ichiro and Jiro follow on Double Machine and Side Machine.

1 - 9 THE BIG SHADOW MURDER FORCE APPEARANCE MYSTERY

Akira has been abducted by Shadow Knight, in human form. Double Machine and Side Machine follow his car. Shadow Knight stops his car at a dock. He picks up Akira and carries him onto a boat. Double Machine and Side Machine drive on the water! Shadow Knight carries Akira ashore. Shadow Knight is confronted by Blue Hakaida and Silver Hakaida. Shadow Knight lets go of Akira to transform from his human form to his Shadow Knight form. Akira runs away. Blue Hakaida tries his Electric Whip on Shadow Knight, who cuts it with his sword. Silver Hakaida tries to hit Shadow Knight with his bo-staff but Shadow Knight uses his sword to knock the bo-staff out of his hand.

Red Hakaida aims his Missile Bow Gun at Akira, but before he can fire Jiro appears and knocks it out of his hands and knocks him down. Jiro runs up to Akira. Red Hakaida takes a shot at Jiro. Akira boards a cable car. Jiro transforms into Kikaida and tries to run Androbots over with Side Machine. Kikaida sees that the cable car is headed up a mountain where Gill Hakaida, Blue Hakaida, Silver Hakaida and more Androbots are waiting, but he can't do anything about it as the sky fills with even more Androbots which fly down after him. Ichiro's trumpet is heard. Ichiro is standing on top of the cable car which is no longer moving. Ichiro transforms into Kikaida-01 and battles Androbots and the Hakaidas.

On top of the mountain is a restaurant that rotates very slowly. At a table waiting for his meal is Ganta the photographer. When 01 throws an Androbot it lands on Ganta's food.

Kikaida and 01 stand together. The 4 Hakaidas stand together, along with four Androbots. The two groups slowly approach each other, the villains holding their weapons high. Suddenly, a spear hits the ground between them and there is a small explosion. The Hakaiada Squad retreats. Kikaida and 01 face Red Faced Tortoise, a robotic monster sent by the Shadow Murder Force. Red Faced Tortoise shoots its hands off at Kikaida and 01, who punch them back at him, they hit Red Faced Tortoise and explode. Red Faced Tortoise is knocked onto its back. Before Kikaida and 01 can get near Red Faced Tortoise a bunch of swords hit the ground between them and the monster. Shadow Knight appears at a distance. The swords explode and when the smoke clears Red Faced Tortoise and Shadow Knight have vanished. At the restaurant Akira and the mysterious woman who always comes to his aid are enjoying a meal. A man who apparently knows the woman approaches her. A waiter calls the man away, probably to a phone call. The man is knocked out by an Androbot. Red Hakaida takes on the form of the man, joins the woman and Akira at the table.

Standing on the roof of a building, Ichiro and Jiro have a discussion about the Shadow Murder Force. The only words I understood were "Shadow" and "Black Satan".

Ganta takes photographs of some women who are singing and dancing, getting in the way of other people trying to watch the show.

The man who is really Red Hakaida takes Akira and the woman to watch dolphins jump out of the water for food. He stays behind Akira, keeping his hands on him.

Ichiro and Jiro enter the restaurant to find that Akira is gone. They go to his hotel room but of course he's not there either.

Akira, the woman and the disguised Red Hakaida ride a ride. Akira and the woman ride another ride, Red Hakaida watches, smoking. Red Faced Tortoise and Shadow Knight are also watching. Ichiro is searching the carnival for Akira. Akira and the woman ride an octopus ride. Red Hakaida rides behind them in a red car. Jiro is also searching for Akira. Gill Hakaida, Blue Hakaida and Silver Hakaida are standing by. The woman, Red Hakaida and Akira sit together on another ride. When Red Hakaida sees Red Faced Tortoise watching he grabs Akira then has to apologize. Ichiro and Jiro meet by the dolphins. Shadow Knight and Red Faced Tortoise meet and return to Shadow base. For the first time the voice of Big Shadow is heard but he is not seen. When the man tries to take Akira away from her the woman releases he's a Hakaida so he reveals himself to be Red Hakaida. Androbots and the other three Hakaidas appear. They try to drag the woman and Akira off but Jiro's guitar interrupts them. Jiro is standing on a building. Half way through the song Ichiro's trumpet joins in. Ichiro is now standing beside Jiro. The brothers jump off the building and the battle begins. After fighting Androbots a bit Jiro and Ichiro transform into Kikaida and Kikaida-01. When Kikaida spots Blue Hakaida and Red Hakaida taking the woman and Akira away he tells 01. Kikaida stays to fight the Androbots, 01 goes after Blue Hakaida and Red Hakaida. 01 attacks the Androbots with Blue Hakaida and Red Hakaida. Akira and the woman run away. Kikaida fights Androbots while standing on a moving rollercoaster. 01 fights his way through Androbots to knock Blue Hakaida down. 01 fights more Androbots then knocks Blue Hakaida down again. 01 fights more Androbots before knocking Blue Hakaida down a third time and Red Hakaida for the first time. Kikaida finally gets to hit Silver Hakaida and Gill Hakaida. 01, the Androbots, Blue Hakaida and Red Hakaida are now on a beach. After 01 defeats the Androbots Blue Hakaida and Red Hakaida try to get away by backing into the ocean but 01 won't let them get away. After punching them both several times he uses "Blast End" on them. Their bodies fly into the air and burst into flame before falling back into the water where they explode, the pieces sink to the ocean floor. This is my favorite battle because 01 never once uses "01 Cut" or "01 Driver" both of which are over used because along with "Blast End" they are 01's only major combat techniques.

Ichiro puts Akira in Double Machine's sidecar before mounting the cycle himself. Jiro gets on Side Machine. The brothers shake hands before trying off together. Ichiro turns of to the left, Jiro to the right.

Gill Hakaida makes a speech in which he mentions Blue Hakaida and Red Hakaida, probably vowing revenge for their destruction.

1 - 10 A BIG BOSS BIG SHADOW MYSTERY!?

Gill Hakaida is watching Ichiro riding Double Machine when suddenly the picture vanishes from his monitor and black smoke starts pouring out of it. Suddenly Gill Hakaida finds himself in a place full of white smoke. He holds his head as if in pain as the voice of Big Shadow speaks to him. Big Shadow ends his talk with laughter. Gill Hakaida is back in his headquarters, on the floor. His monitor is working again.

Silver Hakaida is watching Ichiro on Double Machine, he points his bo-staff at Double Machine and the ground bursts into flames. Ichiro stops in Silver Hakaida attacks him. Androbots join the fight. A white car with blacktop pulls up. The window rolls down to reveal the human form of Shadow Knight. Shadow Knight appears out side the car. Lightning flashes as Gill Hakaida once again uses the Sudden Darkness plan to cut Ichiro off from the light of the sun. Gill Hakaida stands between Red Faced Tortoise and Shadow Knight as they watch Ichiro and the Androbots and Silver Hakaida. Ganta appears to take photographs. Silver Hakaida jumps into the air with his staff, accidentally carving a hole in the black smoke. The sun shines through. Gill Hakaida swears. Ichiro transforms into Kikaida-01. Gill Hakaida joins the battle. 01 uses "01 Driver". Red Faced Tortoise and Shadow Knight take the bundled up blanket from Double Machine's sidecar which Akira was in. When Gill Hakaida sees this he leaves the battle to confront them. When he draws Hakaida Shot, Shadow Knight throws the bundle down and a stuffed panda toy falls out. Akira and his mysterious protector are running to a black car. Red Faced Tortoise refers to the woman as Rieko. As far as I can tell this is the first time her name is spoken. When 01 throws Silver Hakaida, Silver Hakaida lands on Gunta's camera knocking the lens off.

Rieko's car is stopped by Silver Hakaida. Rieko and Akira run away but are captured by Androbots. Silver Hakaida hits Rieko with his bo staff knocking her down. Akira karate shops an Androbot. Silver Hakaida raises his staff to strike Rieko again but doesn't when he hears Ichiro's trumpet. Ichiro jumps off a tower to taken on Silver Hakaida and the Androbots. Ichiro is knocked down and hit several times by Silver Hakaida's bo staff. Ichiro jumps up and transforms into Kikaida-01. Silver Hakaida throws his bo staff at 01 but 01 knocks it to the ground. After punching several Androbots, 01 punches Silver Hakaida several times before using "01 Driver". While 01 is distracted by Silver Hakaida and the Androbots, Red Faced Tortoise and Shadow Knight appear to take Rieko and Akira prisoner but 01 turns around just in time to see them. Red Faced Tortoise releases Rieko and Akira and faces 01. While Red Faced Tortoise and Shadow Knight have their backs turned Androbots grab Rieko and Akira, putting them in the black car Rieko had been driving, they drive off with their prisoners. A strange noise is heard. 01's vision goes bad. The air fills with smoke and when it clears Red Faced Tortoise and Shadow Knight have vanished.

At the Shadow Murder Force base Big Shadow gives Red Faced Tortoise and Shadow Knight their instructions.

Ichiro is driving to somewhere.

At the Hakaiada Squad's base a chained Rieko is being beaten by Silver Hakaida. A shirtless Akira, his hands tied behind his back is suspended from the ceiling on another rope. He's slowly being lowered into a barrel of water. This is apparently being done in an attempt to get Rieko to divulge some secret she has. When she won't talk Gill Hakaida hits her.

Double Machine is on a dirt road. When it stops the camera moves in closer to show that it is now Kikaida-01 who is driving. When 01 sees a radar dish he starts on his journey again.

Silver Hakaida raises his hand to strike Rieko when 01 bursts into the room. Silver Hakaida hits 01 in the chest with his bo staff. 01 leaves the room. Outside he kneels and holds his chest as if in pain but when Silver Hakaida approaches him 01 stands up and hits him. After 01 makes a speech another fight begins. Having finished off all the available Androbots, 01 drives off on Double Machine.

Rieko and Akira have escaped from the Hakaida Squad base but are recaptured by Androbots. 01 pulls up and attacks the Androbots. Vanishing with the Androbots outside, 01 reenters the base. He fights his way through the last of the Androbots, to a room with a map of Japan, as he studies the map he makes a step forward to be stopped by Silver Hakaida. When he knocks Silver Hakaida out of the way, Gill Hakaida appears, with Hakaida Shot already drawn. 01 knocks the gun out of Gill Hakaida's hand then knocks him down. Silver Hakaida has gotten up but 01 knocks him back down then presses the self-destruct button. An alarm goes off. 01 leaves. Explosions start. Gill Hakaida curses. Silver Hakaida and Gill Hakaida flee their base.

Outside the last battle of the Hakaida Squad begins, Silver Hakaida and Gill Hakaida verses Kikaida-01. Silver Hakaida tries in vain to damage 01 with his bo staff. Gill Hakaida manages to land a few punches before 01 uses "01 Driver". Silver Hakaida tries again with his bo staff. Gill Hakaida punches 01 few times. 01 uses "Blast End" on Silver Hakaida who explodes. Now its 1 on 1. The two enemies exchange punches. When 01 manages to knock Gill Hakaida down, he draws Hakaida Shot but 01 jumps out of the way then knocks the gun to the ground before using "Blast End". There's an explosion but there is something odd about, the smoke and fire seem to roll backwards before vanishing. The laughter of Big Shadow is heard.

Akira's back and the plans on it are shown again. Rieko helps Akira put his shirt and vest on. Akira runs to Ichiro. When Ichiro asks about Rieko, she has vanished. Rieko has driven to a hotel. Ichiro and Akira take off on Double Machine. Red Faced Tortoise and Shadow Knight watch them. At the Shadow Murder Force headquarters Big Shadow makes a speech to noone ending it with laughter. Kikaida-01 has a new and perhaps more dangerous enemy, the Shadow Murder Force .

1 - 11 GHOST STORY - THE GHOST LADY OF THE UNDERGROUND SECRET BASE

This episode begins with the narrator talking about how 01 used "Blast End" on Gill Hakaida. Then we see Gill Hakaida in a smokey place. Then Gill Hakaida is chained and on the floor of the headquarters of the Shadow Murder Force . Hakaida stands but Shadow Knight makes him kneel before a screen showing the shadow of Big Shadow.

A man who is obviously drunk sticks his head in an open manhole. He pulls his head out when two small balls of fire float out of the hole followed by the Ghost Lady, who bites him on the neck. A young man and a young woman are out for a walk. When a construction marker cone flies by him he tells the woman but she doesn't believe him until she sees two more fly by. She screams and burries her head in his chest. The woman then turns into the Ghost Lady and bites the man in the neck.

Big Shadow is talking while two figures that resemble Androbots except that they are black on one side of their bodies and red on the other, are sitting before a screen that shows pictures of several children. These figures are Shadow Men, the Shadow Murder Force version of androids. The screen pauses on one boy. The boy from the Shadow's monitor is attacked by construction cones. He runs from them, right into the Ghost Lady. The boy cries for help.

Ichiro watching over a sleeping Akira hears the other young boy's cry for help. He mounts Double Machine and rides off. Akira awakes to find he is alone. Looking for Ichiro he meets a woman in a kimono.

The boy escapes from the Ghost Lady and several Shadow Men, running into the woods. Balls of flame fly around him, they turn into Shadow Men. Then just suddenly vanish. The boy runs to a shed. The door is opened by the Ghost Lady. The boy runs. Ghost Lady appears in the forest behind him and flies after him. Ichiro's trumpet is heard. After making his introductory speech Ichiro jumps down landing in front of the boy. Ghost Lady tells Ichiro she's number 7 of the Shadow's robotic monsters. Ghost Lady shoots exploding shells at Ichiro from her right arm. Ichiro is caught in a circle of fire so he transforms into Kikaida-01 and jumps out of the flames. Ghost Lady vanishes. Hakaida appears at the top of a hill, Ghost Lady appears behind him. Hakaida fires Hakaida Shot at 01. 01 mounts Double Machine, the boy runs up and gets into the sidecar. 01 drives off. Hakaida follows on White Crow, his motorcycle. Double Machine stops stuck in the mud. Ghost Lady appears to shoot at 01. Hakaida catches up and also shots at 01. Jiro's guitar is heard. Jiro jumps off a roof to fight the Shadow Men and Hakaida. When Ghost Lady attacks him he transforms into Kikaida. When Kikaida tries to hig Ghost Lady she vanishes. 01 knocks Hakaida down. Red Faced Tortoise and Shadow Knight pick him up and hold him, otherwise he'd have gone after 01. Ichiro and Jiro drive to where Ichiro left Akira. They find Akira and the woman. Jiro says something to her and she removes her mask, it's Rieko. Ichiro and Jiro drive off again.

Jiro and Ichiro each climb down into different manholes, which lead into the same place.

The boy Ichiro rescued from Ghost Lady is tricked by several construction workers into entering a cave. Once the boy is out of sight the construction workers turn into Shadow Men. The cave is lit by candles but they go out. Then those floating fire balls appear. Akira and Rieko are surrounded by five men dressed in black. The men vanish but three Shadow Men appear chasing them into the same cave as the boy. Ghost Lady chases the boy. Shadow Men chase Rieko and Akira. The three end up together. Ghost Lady and the Shadow Men back them into a wall. The wall revolves and the three find themselves in a room with the drunk and the young couple. Ghost Lady enters the room. Ichiro's trumpet is heard and he enters the room. Kikaida appears and after talking to Ichiro drills a hole in the cave ceiling to let sunlight in. Ichiro transforms into Kikaida-01.

Ganta sees Jiro helping Rieko, Akira another boy, two men and another women up out of a hole in the ground. He takes photographs.

Ghost Lady copies Kikaida and uses her body to drill a hole in the ceiling, not to let more sunlight in but to leave the underground base. 01 follows. When Ganta sees Ghost Lady come up out of the ground he faints. 01 come up after her. Ghost Lady splits into five Ghost Ladies, all carrying the black lightning bolts of the Shadowmen. (Don't look too closely at these five "women"). After the five fail to hurt 01 with their lightning bolts they return to being one Ghost Lady. Red Faced Tortoise appears to fight 01. After a brief skirmish with Red Faced Tortoise and Ghost Lady, 01 uses "Blast End" on both of them.

Ichiro and Jiro drive off on Double Machine and Side Machine. Akira is in Double Machine's sidecar.

1 - 12 GHOST STORY - THE CURSED HEAD OF THE GRAVEYARD GHOST CAT

Big Shadow is giving instructions to Ghost Cat Robot about a boy shown on the monitor. The boy, Goje(?) scares some other kids with a rubber snake then he tries to kick a black cat, the cat jumps up and scratches his arm. Another group of kids sees him do and turn into Shadow Men. They knock Goje down, he may have hit his head. Jiro drives up on Side Machine. After Jiro's destroyed several Shadow Men, Ichiro drives up on Double Machine. The Shadow Men vanish. Goje's friend picks him up. The black cat is watching.

At home Goje is ill. Ichiro puts his hand over the scratches, his computer analyses the wounds. The black cat is outside the house. Ichiro goes into the kitchen. Opening his chest he takes out a vial. He uses the liquid to make a medicine. He returns to Goje's room and treats the wound, covering it in white bandages. A cat meows. Ichiro goes outside to investigate. He sees a flying black cat head. He follows it. Akira is in another room of the same house, with his head on a table, asleep. Rieko is watching over him. She leaves the room. She sees the shadow of a human sized cat from the room where she left Goje and his mother. She enters the room to see Goje asleep with his mother watching over him. Rieko leaves the room. Goje's mother turns into blue faced woman with two long fangs and the ears of cat.

Ichiro chasing after the flying cat head encounters a Shadow Man with a cat head. He kicks the Shadow Man which explodes.

The cat-faced woman meows. Goje wakes up and runs out of the room to Rieko. When his mother comes looking for him he won't go to her. Akira wakes up and points at her shadow, the shadow of a cat. She turns back into the cat faced woman. Rieko and the two boys run out of the house. Shadow Men appear. The cat faced woman puts Rieko and the boys to sleep. As she bends over them she's hit in the head by Ichiro's trumpet. The cat faced woman changes into the full cat form of the Ghost Cat Robot. Ichiro transforms into Kikaida-01. The fight doesn't last long, Ghost Cat Robot jumps away. When it lands its taking on the form of Goje's mother again. Ganta meets her and gives her a ride on his little motorbike. He doesn't go far. When he stops and looks back at her she has become the cat faced woman.

Ichiro finds Akira, Goje and Rieko laying in a graveyard, next to black memorial. He wakes them then punches a hole in the base of the memorial. Inside is Goje's real mother.

The cat faced woman walks through the graveyard while Shadow Men dig up bodies. The cat faced woman enters a room full of human heads. She talks to them, they talk back.

A woman and a girl untie a cat which had been tied up at a temple. Goje and a friend see a black cat and try to hit it. It turns into the cat faced woman who then turns into Ghost Cat Robot. Goje's friend abandons him. Goje runs to the woman and the girl. Ghost Cat Robot appear and sprays fire at them. Ichiro's trumpet is heard. Ghost Cat Robot tries to burn Ichiro. Ichiro jumps out of the flame only to be shot at by Gill Hakaida. Ichiro transforms into Kikaida-01 to fight Hakaida. Ghost Cat Robot guards its prisoners. When Ghost Cat Robot tries to claw the woman's face, her mask comes off, she's Rieko! Jiro's guitar is heard. Jiro appears to fight Ghost Cat Robot. Ghost Cat Robot appears at first to be a match for Jiro, but Jiro finally gets in a good blow. Jiro transforms into Kikaida. When Gill Hakaida rides away on White Crow, Kikaida follows on Side Machine.

Kikada and Gill Hakaida fight on a hill. Kikaida throws Hakaida down the hill. Shadow Knight drives up in a red car driven by a Shadow Man. Hakaida gets in the car, the car takes off.

01 and Ghost Cat Robot fight. Ghost Cat Robot shoots its paws at 01, they hit the ground and explode. Ghost Cat Robot's head flies off its body, spitting fire at 01. 01 uses "Blast End" on the head which explodes.

Goje and Akira shake hands.

Ichiro and Akira ride away on Double Machine. Hakaida watches.

1 - 13 GHOST STORY - CHALLENGE OF THE LONG-NECK MONSTER

Ganta, the photographer is trying to photograph a large female model when an earthquake strikes. The woman falls ontop of him.

Ichiro on Double Machine is nearly hit by falling boulders.

Shadow Knight and Gill Hakaida are watching buildings burn as a result of the earthquake. The earthquake turns out to be the result of a volcano eruption, apparently caused by the Shadow Murder Force .

A woman who apparently just had a medical exam is fixing her make up when Shadow Rokuro enters the room. This monster from Japanese mythology has a really long kneck. When the head seperates from the body, but still attached to the unusually long neck, sneaks upon the woman, the woman faints. Shadow Rokuro impersonates the woman who it turns out is a news announcer. Ichiro and Akira watch her on the news.

Shadow Knight and Gill Hakaida watch more buildings burn. On another monitor they see Double Machine.

Ichiro leaves Akira at another hotel then drives to the newsbuilding. Rieko is there. After talking with her Ichiro goes inside and is attacked by Shadow Rokuro's long neck, which tries to strangle him. Ichiro breaks free. The neck and head return to the Shadow Rokuro's body. The monster shoots its hands at Ichiro. The hands try to strangle him. Ichiro transforms into Kikaida-01, which apparently frees him from the hands. 01 leaves the building and drives away on Double Machine.

Akira hearing a noise opens the door thinking its Ichiro, but it's Shadow Knight and Gill Hakaida. Akira runs away but is captured by Hakaida. Rieko arrives at the hotel too late to find Akira.

Hakaida drops the unconscious Akira then reaches into his boot and pulls out not Hakaida Shot but Destruction Blade (the knife the original Hakaida used when in Saburo form) and stands over Akira. Before he can use the knife on Akira, Shadow Knight stops him. Shadow Knight and Hakaida fight over whether to kill Akira or not.

Ichiro arrives at the hote but instead of finding Akira he finds a note left by Rieko telling him that the Shadow must have gotten Akira.

Shadow Knight and Hakaida stop fighting. Apparently Shadow Knight agreed to let Hakaida use his knife on Akira because Hakaida returns to the boy but before he can do anything to Akira, Rieko driving speedboat arrives to throw bombs at Hakaida and Shadow Knight. The boat goes out of sight. Shadow Knight and Hakaida walk to where the boat has been left but Rieko is not in it. Rieko wakes Akira but before they can get away Hakaida returns. They try to run from him but Shadow Knight appears. They try to run from him but a group of Shadow Men appear. The woman and the boy are surrounded. The Shadow Men start to lead Rieko and Akira away when Ichiro's trumpet is heard. Hakaida throws Destruction Blade at Ichiro but Ichiro just knocks it aside. After fighting with Shadow Men, Ichiro grabs Shadow Knight by the arm and yells at Rieko to take Akira and get away. They don't get far as Shadow Rokuro appears to block their escape. Shadow Rokuro shoots its hands at Akira. The hands grab him by the arms and drag him to Shadow Rokuro. Ichiro sees this but Shadow Rokuro, Big Shadow, Hakaida and the Shadow Men vanish, taking Akira with them.

Ichiro takes off on Double Machine. He took the same rode as the villains. Hakaida rides White Crow. Shadow Rokuro and Shadow Knight ride in an open, car, driven by a Shadow Man. Hakaida reports that

"01" is following them. Shadow Rokuro vanishes from the car. Shadow Rokuro appears on a hill. As Ichiro drives by Shadow Rokuro's hands fly off, landing on the handle bars of Double Machine. As Double Machine drives around in a circle, Shadow Rokuro's neck detaches from its body, wraps around Ichiro's neck attempting to strangle him. Ichiro transforms into Kikaida-01. Shadow Rokuro neck/head and hands return to its body.

Akira is placed on a table. Hakaida stands over the boy, Destruction Blade in his hands. 01 enters the Shadow base. Shadow Men attempt to stop him. They fail of course. Shadow Knight blocks his way. Shadow Knight uses his eye beam on 01 but it seems to have no effect. After knocking Shadow Knight down 01 enters the room where Akira is. Hakaida leaves the boy. Akira jumps off the table and starts to flee. Rieko appears and takes Akira's hand. 01 shouts something to Akira. Akira attempt to pull away from Rieko, but can't manage it. Rieko becomes Shadow Rokuro. 01 fights Shadow Men and Hakaida. After 01 knocks Hakaida down Shadow Rokuro's neck leaves its body to wrap around 01 like a snake. Shadow Rokuro's body carries Akira off. Big Shadow goes to the control room and activates the self-destruct mechanism. The mountain explodes.

Shadow Rokuro's neck returns to its body. 01 appears. Shadow Rokuro summons Shadow Men who through their lightning bolt weapons at 01. He knocks them aside, they explode when they hit the ground. After 01 destroys all her Shadow Men, Shadow Rokuro shots her hands at 01. He knocks them aside, they explode when they hit the ground. Shadow Rokuro arms turn into machine guns, firing at 01. 01 is unharmed so Shadow Rokuro sends its neck after him again. 01 uses "Blast End" on the detached neck. Screaming, the head and neck explode. Shadow Rokuro's body falls over and explodes too.

1 - 14 GHOST STORY - THE GHOST OF GILL CASTS HIS SPELL IN HELL

Gill Hakaida is lying on a table. At Shadow Knight's command Shadow Men flip some switches. Electricity flows through Hakaida's body. Hakaida screams. At Big Shadow's command more switches are flipped. The face of Professor Gill appear in place of Gill Hakaida's. Professor Gill speaks. He speaks about Akira and Giant Devil but when Shadow Knight tries to talk to him, he laughs and fades away. Photographs of children appear on the Shadow's monitor screen. One photo is focused on.

A girl, the same one as shown in the photo on the Shadow's monitor, leaves her friends and starts home from school. She is attacked by Rock Owl which sprays a yellowish mist on her. The girl passes out. Shadow Men start to carry the girl off but Ichiro comes out of the bushes to attack them. They drop the girl. When Ichiro tries to hit Rock Owl the monster vanishes. Ichiro takes the girl to her home. Although Ichiro's robotic senses can't find anything wrong with her, she hears the voice of Rock Owl in her head. When Ichiro and the girl's mother leave her room they just miss seeing Rock Owl outside the sliding glass door, however, Ichiro hears a noise from outside and goes to investigate.

Rock Owl rides away in a jeep driven by a Shadow Man. Ichiro follows on Double Machine. The jeep stops. Ichiro dismounts to fight. He jumps into the air, transforming into Kikaida-01 as he does. When 01 hits Rock Owl in the neck the monster's head falls off, revealing the head of a Shadow Man. This isn't the real Rock Owl!

The girl, in her bed, hears the voice of Rock Owl. She gets out of bed and looks in the mirror. She strokes her hair. In the mirror hair comes off in her hand. When she looks at her real hand it is empty. She looks back into the mirror, screams, get in bed and hides her face. In the mirror the image of the girl is disfigured around one eye. The girl's mother hearing the scream pounds on the bedroom door, which is locked. The girl feeling her face finds nothing wrong and is relieved until she looks into a hand mirror and sees the same horrible reflection. The girl screams and hides her face again. The reflection in the large mirror steps out of the mirror. The disfiguration moves to the opposite side of the girl's face. This girl then becomes an ugly woman. The girl looks up sees her, screams and runs to the door, calling her mother for help.

01 fights Shadow Men.

The girl gets the door open, her mother comes in, but the woman from the mirror has vanished.

After destroying the Shadow Men, 01 jumps onto Double Machine, becoming Ichiro again in the process. Ichiro drives off.

The mother talks to the girl. I don't know what they say to each other but the mother suddenly slaps the girl then is sorry and hugs her. As they are hugging the mysterious figure appears in the mirror again.

An old woman is pulling a cart. Explosions start going off around the woman and her cart. The woman falls to the ground. When she looks up Gill Hakaida is standing over her. The woman begs for mercy. Gill Hakaida draws Hakaida Shot and first into the cart. Akira pops up from inside the cart, jumps out and runs away. The old woman runs after him. She catches up to him, but Hakaida catches the two of them. He pulls off the woman's face, wig and dress, revealing Rieko. Give Hakaida one thing, he's never fooled by those disguises. Hakaida holds Hakaida Shot on his prisoners. Ichiro drives arrives to knock the gun out of Hakaida's hand. Suddenly, Jiro appears. Ichiro drives away. As Jiro fights Hakaida, Rieko and Akira run away. After fighting Hakaida awhile Jiro transforms into Kikaida. Hakaida tries Guillotine on Kikaida then shoots at him. Kikaida then throws Hakaida down into a quarry. (The scene of Hakaida falling is actually from Kikaida, if you look closely you'll see Hakaida has no stars on his chest. This same scene is used when 01 and Bijinda throw Hakaida). Shadow Knight appears to Hakaida back to the Shadow base. Whatever Big Shadow wanted Hakaida wasn't interested, but Professor Gill's brain in his head is attacked again and Hakaida is forced to listen.

The girl is in bed, her mother is giving her medicine when the lights go out. The mother turns to find that hideous woman in the room. The mother screams and taking the girl by the hand heads for the door. Suddenly she sees it isn't her daughter she's holding, it's the woman. The girl is actually cringing in another room. The mother finds her daughter. Daughter hugs her mother, but when she looks into her face, she sees its actually that hideous woman. The girl runs towards a window, but the woman is there. The girl runs towards another room but the woman is in the doorway. Mother and daughter finally locate each other. The woman from the mirror comes near them.

Daughter and mother have fled their home. They manage to hide from Shadow Men but that woman appears again. They escape her only to run into another woman and a young boy--Rieko and Akira. The four of them run but fire suddenly springs up before them, they turn around to find they're in a ring of fire. That woman appears. Shadow Men enter the ring to capture the four frightened people but Ichiro's trumpet is heard. Ichiro jumps over the flame, drives away the Shadow Men, then grabbing hold of all four humans jumps out of the fire ring.

That ghost woman becomes Rock Owl and summons more Shadow Men. Ichiro fights the Shadow Men. Jiro drives up on Side Machine. Rock Owl fire missiles at them from its mouth, hooting as it does so. The robotic brothers jump into the air, holding hands in mid air. When they land they transform into Kikaida-01 and Kikaida. Kikaida kicks a Shadow Man which explodes. 01 uses "01 Cut" on a Shadow Man which explodes. Kikaida kicks another Shadow Man, destroying it. 01 destroys another with "01 Cut". Then for the first time in this series Kikaida uses one of his special combat techniques, "Double Chop", destroying another Shadow Man. With all the Shadow Men destroyed the brothers turn on Rock Owl. This monster doesn't stand a chance. First 01 uses "01 Cut" on it knocking it down. It gets up, Kikaida flies at it, hitting it with both feet, knocking it down. It gets up, 01 uses "01 Driver" to knock it down again. It gets up again, Kikaida punches it then uses "Giant Swing Throw" on it. 01 puts it out of its misery with "Blast End".

Rieko tells Jiro and Ichiro that Akira is the son of Professor Gill, who designed Giant Devil and put portions of the plans on Akira's back. This is why the Shadow Murder Force wants Akira. Rieko was Akira's tutor before Kikaida defeated the Dark Demolition Corps.

Jiro and Ichiro drive off on Side Machine and Double Machine. Akira rides in Double Machine's sidecar.

1 - 15 EXPLOSION THE SECRET OF GIANT DEVIL

Shadow Knight and Reaper Robot watch a video of a man testing a laser weapon. This man has some connection to Professor Gill, but I don't know what it is. Reaper Robot asks for information on this man from the computer. The screen shows a girl, apparently his daughter.

Two women climb out of a swimming pool. Sitting by the pool is the girl from the Shadow's computer screen. The girl is clearly not enjoying herself. She looks up and sees Akira standing not too far away. The two children smile at each other. Akira leaves. The girl follows. The two women follow her.

Ichiro has speared a fash for Akira but Akira is gone. Akira followed by the girl who is followed by the two women come running down the beach. Suddenly, Gill Hakaida on White Crow rides up. The two women and two children run. Hakaida runs after them but stops when a boy on a rocky ledge throws stones at him. Hakaida goes after this boy but can't find it when he hides behinds some beached boats. Hakaida goes Akira and the females again. They try to escape by running through a tunnel but Hakaida jumps into the air and lands on the other side to meet them. They try to turn to run up stone stairs, but Shadow Men are blocking the way. Hakaida notices something is wrong with the neck of one of the women. He grabs her, pulls off her bathing cap and the mask she was wearing--it's Rieko again! Just then Jiro, on Side Machine, and Ichiro, on Double Machine, drive up. A fight immediately breaks out. Jiro and Ichiro battle Shadow Men. Hakaida manages to hit Ichiro a few times and Ichiro returns the favor. Hakaida leaves Ichiro and Jiro to the Shadow Men to after Akira, the girl and the two women. Ichiro and Jiro leap to the aid of the four and after being hit by both, Hakaida retreats. Ichiro talks to Akira but Akira doesn't listen, he's too busy looking around, apparently for that other boy.

Later, the girl has changed into a dress. She bounces a basketball while Akira watches. Rieko, Ichiro and Jiro talk. Ichiro and Jiro start to leave but are stopped by Akira. I don't know what the boy says to Ichiro but everyone looks sad and some sad music plays in the background. Ichiro and Jiro leave, cursing the Shadow.

As the brothers ride their motorcycles side by side explosions start going off around them. They stop, dismount and hide behind their motorcycles. Standing on a hill, Hakaida is shooting at them. Suddenly Jiro gets back on Side Machine and drives away, Hakaida shoots at but misses. Ichiro jumps to the hill. Ichiro and Hakaida fight. Hakaida manages to knock Ichiro down and straddling him tries to strangle him, but Ichiro hits him in the chest, sending him flying.

The scientist who made the laser gun is at home reading when the lights go out. He grabs a shotgun off the wall. Reaper Robot appears on his stairs. The man shoots Reaper Robot but Reaper Robot is unharmed. The man runs. Reaper Robot chases him, hitting furniture with its tentacles, causing small explosions.

Hakaida returns to shoot at Ichiro. Shadow Men attack Ichiro. When Hakaida tries to kick Ichiro, Ichiro jumps out of the way then transforms into Kikaida-01. 01 kicks Hakaida, sending him flying again.

The scientist has ran out of his house. He's chased by Shadow Men. He shouts, calling for help. His cry is heard, Kikaida appears to take on the Shadow Men. After defeating the Shadow Men, Kikaida attempts to lead the scientist to safety but explosions start going off around them. It's Reaper Robot shooting at them through the tube in its head. Kikaida uses "Spinning Attack" against Reaper Robot then after exchanging a few more blows, throws it down a hill. Kikaida returns to where he had left the scientist. The man is gone!

At the Shadow headquarters the scientist is chained into a chair. He's tortured with electric shocks. He passes out.

Rieko, the girl and Akira are watching hula dancers.

Ichiro and Jiro have a chat.

Akira and the girl are invited on stage to learn the hulla. Shadow Knight watches on his monitor.

Ichiro and Jiro are shot at again. They jump into the air, holding hands in mid air. They land by Hakaida and the Shadow Men. Ichiro leaves. Hakadia sees him go and attempts to follow but Jiro transforms into Kikaida to stop him.

Rieko spots Shadow Men approaching, and leads Akira and the girl away. They hid in a tunnel. Shadow Men approach but then walk away. They think they're safe until they hear the voice of Reaper Robot. Shadow Men drag out the scientist. The girl sees her father and tries to go to him but Rieko holds her back. Reaper Robot fires explosive charges from the tube in its head. Rieko tries to lead the girl and Akira through the tunnel to the other side but the explosions cause a cave in which leaves them trapped. Suddenly a noise is heard. It's 01 burrowing his way into the tunnel. 01 exits the tunnel to kick Reaper Robot over. The scientist, his daughter, Rieko and Akira run away. 01 uses "01 Cut" on Reaper Robot, twice, then "Blast End."

Kikaida and Hakaida hear Reaper Robot exploding. Hakaida apparently recognizes the sound as the destruction of Reaper Robot because he retreats again.

The scientist thanks Ichiro and Jiro. His daughter, Rieko and Akira play catch. When Akira throws the ball it rolls into the street. The girl goes after it. A car is coming down the street. The girl gets the ball and just in time a woman pulls her out of the path of the car. Rieko nods at the woman who turns to leave. The woman walks away, holding the hand of a boy, the boy who had thrown rocks at Hakaida! Rieko calls to the woman, but she ignores Rieko.

Jiro and Ichiro drive off on Side Machine and Double Machine. Akira rides in Double Machine's sidecar. The narrator says something about "Giant Devil". Big Shadow is heard also talking about "Giant Devil".

Two women are playing tennis. Ganta walks onto the court and starts to take pictures. The woman nearest him hits the ball and explodes! A few seconds later metal parts fall from the sky. Ganta realizes the woman was a robot. The other player becomes Shadow Mummy. Shadow Knight and Gill Hakaida are watching from Shadow headquarters.

Akira throws a baseball to Ichiro but Ichiro detects that something is wrong, when he throws the ball back there is small explosion and Akira has become Shadow Mummy. Shadow Mummy's right hand fires explosive shells at Ichiro. Ichiro transforms into Kikaida-01. "01 Cut" causes Shadow Mummy to follow over and split into several pieces. The head says something to 01 about Akira. 01 jumps into the air.

Akira is tied and gagged, in the backseat of a car driven by a man wearing dark sunglasses. Jiro's guitar is heard. The car stops. The man gets out and transforms into Shadow Golem and attacks Jiro. Jiro jumps out of the way. Shadow Mummy joins Shadow Golem by the car. Shadow Golem fires a white, energy wave out of the device on its chest. Jiro jumps into the air, becoming Kikaida. Shadow Golem knocks Kikaida down. Kikaida gets up and fights Shadow Men. Shadow Golem knocks Kikaida down again. Kikaida gets up and fights Shadow Men again. 01 arrives and joins the battle. Shadow Golem uses his weapon on Kikaida, Kikaida is knocked down and pinned to the ground, white sparks encircle his body. 01 uses "01 Driver" on Shadow Golem. Kikaida gets up. Shadow Mummy fires his nitro shells at Kikaida and 01. When the smoke clears the villains have vanished. Kikaida and 01 jump into the air. Jiro and Ichiro land by the car. They untie Akira who tells Ichiro something about the Shadow. Ichiro rides away on Double Machine. Talking to Jiro, Akira removes his jacket then his shirt, lays down on some rocks and rolls around, trying to remove the plans of the Giant Devil robot from his back. Jiro picks Akira up. Akira's back is scared. Shaking, Akira cries in Jiro's arms.

Rieko is part of an audience watching flamingos strut around. In the background "Blue Danube Waltz" plays. Suddenly, the entire flock vanishes, Shadow Mummy stands in its place. Everyone but Rieko gets away. When Rieko attempts to flee Shadow Mummy fires a couple nitro shells at her. Rieko collapses. Ichiro arrives in time to find nothing but a piece of cloth.

At Shadow headquarters Rieko is hanging from the ceiling by her wrists, Shadow Men and Gill Hakaida beat her as Shadow Knight questions her(?). Rieko is dragged to the Shadow computer screen. Professor Gill appears on the screen and reveals that he has another son, Hiroshi, more of the plans for Giant Devil are on (or in) his back. Professor Gill must be very cooperative for at one point Gill Hakaida aims Hakaida Shot at the screen but Shadow Knight stops him from firing. I'm not certain by I think Shadow Knight told Hakaida this was just a computer image based on the Professors's personality, in any case the professor vanishes from the screen. A black and white picture of a woman and a boy appears on the screen. Through flashbacks we see that Rieko recognizes the woman as the one who saved the girl from the oncoming car (end of episode 15) and the boy as the one who was with her. Professor Gill appears on the screen again, screams and vanishes again. Big Shadow speaks. A play is shown on the computer screen. Big Shadow talks about "Giant Robot", "Akira and Hiroshi", what else I don't know. Shadow Mummy and Shadow Golem are summoned. They bow towards the screen that shows the shadow of Big Shadow. They are given their assignments. Rieko is handed over to a Shadow Man. As the Shadow Man, Rieko, Shadow Mummy and Shadow Golem had down a hall, two Shadow Man pass carrying a box of nitro shells. Rieko breaks away to grab the shells. She runs out of the Shadow headquarters. Three Shadow Men, Shadow Mummy and Shadow Golem follow her. Throwing three nitro shells Rieko destroys the three Shadow Men. Shadow Mummy and Shadow Golem continue after her. She continues throwing nitro shells.

The pilot and the copilot of what is probably an American bomber discuss, in English, looking for women and drinks once they've landed the plane. Gill Hakaida enters the cockpit, Hakaida shot in hand. Hakaida talks to the men in Japanese. The copilot tries to disarm Hakaida and is knocked out.

Rieko hitting the beach finds she's out of nitro shells. Shadow Mummy and Shadow Golem catch up to her. Three more Shadow Men appear as well. Ichiro drives up on Double Machine, dismounts and starts a fight. Both monsters hit Ichiro. Shadow Mummy is knocked over when Jiro suddenly appears. Shadow Mummy stands up and cursing "Kikaida" fires a couple of nitro shells at Jiro and Ichiro. Jiro and Ichiro jump into the air, holding hands in mid air, as usual, and transform into Kikaida and Kikaida-01. After throwing all three Shadow Men down a hill, the brothers knock Shadow Mummy down the same hill. Shadow Mummy breaks into pieces. Shadow Golem disappears. The floating head of Shadow Mummy speaks to Kikaida and 01 before flying away. 01 and Kikaida jump into the air, turning back into Ichiro and Jiro. Back on the ground they talk to Rieko who tells them about Akira and Hiroshi and apparently what she learned about the plane.

Hakaida apparently tells the pilot he intends to drop the plane's (nuclear?) bombs. The pilot crosses himself.

Ichiro is driving Double Machine, Rieko in the sidecar. Explosions star going off around them. Ichiro stops. Shadow Mummy, Shadow Golem and Shadow Men are looking down upon them.

Hakaida says something to the pilot about Tokyo--must be his intended target. Hakaida orders the pilot to open the bomb bay doors. The pilot reluctantly reaches for the switch. He tries pulling it then says "won't work" (for being an American his English seems very limited). When Hakaida checks the bomb bay doors they open, revealing that Kikaida had been holding them shut. Shadow Knight is also in the plane. Kikaida, Hakaida and Shadow Knight fight.

Ichiro and the villains have somehow ended up near a swimming pool. When Ichiro hits the Shadow Men they fall into the pool.

Rieko has found Akira.

Ichiro jumps, landing back on top of the hill. After Shadow Mummy fires more nitro shells at him, Ichiro transforms into Kikaida-01. When 01 hits the mummy it falls apart again. 01 uses a new combat technique on Shadow Golem, "01 Kick", a flying kick similar to the Kamen Riders (it actually looks like he's about to do "Blast End"). After Shadow Golem tries his energy wave on 01, 01 returns the favor with "Blast End". Shadow Golem is no more.

Hakaida, Shadow Knight and Kikaida are still fighting. Shadow Knight and Hakaida attempt to throw Kikaida out the plane's now open passenger door. Kikaida throws them out the door instead.

01 uses "01 Cut" on Shadow Mummy, twice followed immediately by "01 Driver" and "Blast End". Shadow Mummy breaks into pieces, each piece exploding separately. This is the last time the effect for "Blast End" will be a white screen that cracks, a new special effect is introduced in the next episode.

Ichiro joins Akira and Rieko.

Jiro and Ichiro drive off on Side Machine and Double Machine. Akira rides in Double Machine's sidecar.

1 - 17 GRAND CHAPTER!! - THE TERRIBLE GIANT DEVIL START-UP

Six men, five dressed in black, one in white, all wearing baskets over their heads and playing wooden flutes walk down the middle of a street. When they find people they point the flutes at them which fire exploding shells. At the same time a man indoors is reading a newspaper when he hears laughter coming out of his television set, which isn't turned on. Out of the set steps Shadow Knight, who apparently demands this man's help with the Giant Devil project. By the man's tone of voice it's clear he refused to help. So Shadow Knight shows him on his tv what's happening on the streets.

The mysterious woman and the other young boy from episode 16 are in the crowd being attacked. She is rendered unconscious. Suddenly Kikaida-01 appears. He hits two of the villains they fall and explode, but when he hits the third it transforms into the monster Mendicant Death's-Head. Instead of staying to fight 01 the monster vanishes.

Back indoors Shadow Knight stabs the tv with his sword and three Shadowmen appear. Together they force the man out of his house. Outside the Shadowmen threaten him with spears. A familiar guitar lick is heard. Jiro has come to the rescue. After a brief battle he transforms to Kikaida. After a little more fighting Shadow Knight and the Shadowmen vanish.

Back on the street. Ichiro is checking on the wounded people. He sees the woman and the boy sneaking away.

Jiro and the man have a brief discussion before the man drives away. The mysterious woman pretends to faint in the crosswalk in front of the car. When he gets out to help her she picks his pocket, getting his wallet. He drives away. When the woman opens the wallet inside is a piece of leather with some strange symbols on it. The next time the man stops his car three men dressed in black steal his briefcase. When they're gone he grins.

The three men in black transform into Shadowmen. When they hand the briefcase to a man in white, he detects a bomb inside. In anger he points his flute at the Shadowmen, fire shoots out of it and they explode. The man in white transforms into Mendicant Death's-Head and leaves the briefcase for some innocent person to find and be killed by the bomb. Know who finds it? You guessed it, the pickpocket. She drops the briefcase when she sees Ichiro coming. She and the boy board a bus. Rieko and Akira find the briefcase. Ichiro is shot at by Gill Hakaida. The bus driver transforms into a Shadowman and is joined by others who capture the woman and the boy. Gill Hakaida keeps shooting at Ichiro. Ichiro transforms into Kikaida-01 and uses 01 Driver and 01 Cut on Gill Hakaida. Gill Hakaida falls, there's an explosion and he vanishes. Gill Hakaida finds himself at the Shadow Murder Force base. Angry at having his fight with 01 interrupted he attacks Shadow Knight. Shadow Knight pushes Gill Hakadia up against a wall and holding his sword to Gill Hakaida's throat tells him 01 Driver and 01 Cut would have been followed by Blasto Endo, so Hakaida should be glad he was rescued. (At least that's what I think he told him since he mentioned all three 01's combat techniques.) Big Shadow interrupts the argument. The captured boy, like Akira, has part of the plans for the Giant Devil on his back. The plans are photographed. Construction on the Giant Devil has begun.

Rieko takes the briefcase to a police station. A policeman takes Rieko and Akira for a ride. I'm not sure where he was supposed to be taking them, but Rieko sees they are going the wrong way she opens the card door, while the car is still moving and jobs out taking Akira with here. The car stops and the policeman comes out and transforms into Gill Hakaida. Suddenly Jiro appears to battle Gill Hakaida. Rieko and Akira run. Jiro sees the briefcase, which he knows has a bomb in it, in Rieko's hand. He shouts a warning, but she doesn't hear. Rieko drives off in the police car. Gill Hakaida follows on White Crow (his motorcycle). Jiro follows on Side Machine (not his ordinary motorcycle as he would have in Kikaida. Rieko stops the car, she and Akira run. When Hakaida comes near Rieko, probably hoping all he wants is the briefcase, throws it at Gill Hakaida. It explodes, damaging Gill Hakaida.

Back at Shadow headquarters, having no further use for the second boy or the woman with him, Big Shadow orders their execution. As Shadowmen, some carrying spears other swords, approach the condemned the sound of Ichiro's trumpet is heard. Ichiro frees the woman and the boy but the Mendicants, once again numbering sixe, appear with flame throwing wooden flutes. As they approach they're attacked from behind, by Kikaida. Ichiro transforms into Kikaida-01. The woman heads back inside the Shadow base. 01 sends his younger brother to protect her. Kikaida defeats some Shadowmen. The woman takes the piece of leather with the symbols on it back. Kikaida smashes the camera. So the Shadow has lost the plans to the Giant Devil.

After 01 destroys all the other Mendicants, Mendicants Death's-Head tries to burn 01. 01 uses "01 Cut" to chop off the flaming thrower arm. Mendicants Death's-Head then shoots rings off its body which explode when they hit the ground. 01 uses "Blast End" to destroy Mendicants Death's-Head. The effect of "Blast End" is different this time. Instead of the screen turning white and cracking a white bolt shoots out of 01's crossed arms to destroy Mendicants Death's-Head. This is how "Blast End" will work from now on. The piece of leather is returned to the man to whom it belonged. He burns it. Side by side Ichiro on Double Machine and Jiro on Side Machine, head down the road. Akira rides in Double Machine's side car.

1 - 18 HISTORY UNPARALLELED!! - THE ANDROID GREAT EXPLOSION

Despite having lost the plans to Giant Devil the Shadow scientists continue to work on it. Big Shadow and the incomplete, Giant Devil converse. The head of Giant Devil seperates from its body. It flies over the city and bombs it. Afterwards the head returns to the Shadow base and reattaches itself to the head. To finish Giant Devil the plans Akira carries are still needed.

Standing at a carwash Akira watches a car enter the machine. Suddenly he pulls off his shirt and tries to enter the carwash, to remove the Giant Devil plans from his back. Rieko stops him. He forces his way past her, only to be stopped by Jiro.

Back at the Shadow base, two android replicas of Akira are revealed.

Akira attempts to drown himself. Jiro jumps into the ocean after him. The android Akira explodes.

The pickpocket and the other young boy, sleeping outside, wake up. They go back to sleep. While Rieko searching the beach for Jiro and Akira finds Jiro's guitar floating.

Gill Hakaida riding White Crow, appears to have captured Akira. Ichiro appears transforms into Kikaida-01 and goes after Gill Hakaida.

Back at Shadow base Akira is in the hands of a Shadowman.

01 takes Akira back from Gill Hakaida. There is an explosion. The pickpocket finds Ichiro's trumpet, with a bunch of robot pieces.

Back at Shadow base the plans on Akira's back are used to continue work on the Giant Devil. In case 01 survived another plan for his destruction is revealed. Three Shadowmen each having the head of 01 walk through three hallways. Each is trap designed to destroy robots. The three androids explode. As work continues on the Giant Devil an alarm goes off. Ichiro has arrived, but wait, something is wrong, the anti-01 system isn't working. When Ichiro tries to take Akira, Gill Hakaida pulls off Ichiro's face to reveal Rieko. The executions of Rieko and Akira are ordered.

The executions are to be held outdoors. As Shadowmen, one carrying a sword, the rest carrying those red and black lightning bolts approach the condemned a trumpet is heard. The trumpet is played by Jiro! Gill Hakaida raises Hikaida Shot to shoot at Jiro when a guitar is heard, played by Ichiro! The Kikaida brothers toss each other their instruments before transforming and doing battle. 01 frees Rieko, Kikaida frees Akira. 01 enters the Shadow base to find the Giant Devil robot. Kikaida enters the base too.

During the fighting Gill Hakaida manages to pin 01's hands behind his back. Shadow Knight comes at 01 with his sword. Kikaida attacks Shadow Knight. Suddenly Gill Hakaida and Shadow Knight vanish. Giant Devil which has been silent suddenly speaks and fires missiles at 01 and Kikaida. The missiles miss. 01 and Kikaida linking arms shout "Double Brother Power" and from their two free arms two white bolts shoot out hitting Giant Devil. Giant Devil bursts into flames. Jiro and Ichiro flee the Shadow base before it explodes.

1 - 19 THE KING INDIAN CERTAIN-DEATH SPELL!

A truckload of Japanese men, women and children all dressed like American cowboys is attacked, by what appears to be an American Indian. King Indian turns out to be a Shadow Murder Force monster. King Indian is apparently a medicine man. After witnessing a ceremony that increases King Indians' power Gill Hakaida is visited by the ghost of Professor Gill who gives him a new circuit. Ichiro hears a cry for help. When he and Akira enter a small shed they find Gill Hakaida beating up on that foolish photographer, Ganta. When Ichiro intervenes Gill Hakaida starts hitting him. After a bit Hakaida runs out of the building, which then begins to fill up with smoke. When Ichiro breaks down the door the smoke stops, but a metal grate falls down in place of the door. Ichiro tries to break out but can't. Suddenly Hakaida comes back and breaks through the grate as though it were made of paper. Ichiro is worried about Gill Hakaida's new strength.

Gill Hakaida and Ichiro meet outside. After telling Ichiro something about King Indian, Gill Hakaida attacks Ichiro. Ichiro transforms into Kikaida-01. Unknown to the two opponents, King Indian and Shadow Knight are watching the battle from a hilltop. King Indian plots to deprive 01 of sunlight. Suddenly Kikaida appears to join 01 in battling Gill Hakaida. Together the brothers are a match for Hakaida, so he vanishes.

01 and Kikaida transform into Ichiro and Jiro. Ichiro sends Jiro on some mission. Rieko appears. Ichiro, Akira, Rieko and the photographer move to a shack where the photographer tries to have a large supper. His meal is interrupted by an arrow coming through the window. More arrows enter the room. Ichiro starts to take the humans up to the second floor, but hearing a noise he goes to investigate alone. Flaming arrows have started a fire. Ichiro puts it out then is attacked by Indians who came through the skylight. Back on the first floor an Indian breaks in to attack the photographer (only adult male in the room), Rieko hits the Indian on the head with a frying pan. Ichiro beats off the Indians and puts out another fire. Morning comes.

An Indian tosses a tube into the room, when the tube breaks open a bunch of centipedes fall out. Ichiro finds a blow torch and fries them. Ganta makes a white flag and tries to surrender, holding the flag out a window. Indians come through the window. (We never see Ganta again after this). Ichiro defeats the Indians. He hears King Indian outside. Steps outside to answer his challenge.

On horseback, King Indian throws a spear at Ichiro. Ichiro catches the spear and breaks it in half. King Indian tries to hit Ichiro with an axe. Ichiro dodges the blows then mounting Double Machine rides off. King Indian follows on horseback. Ichiro stops and transforms into Kikaida-01. King Indian dismounts and goes after 01 with his axe. 01 cuts care of the Axe. Shadow Knight tells King Indian to attack 01's computer. King Indian uses magic against 01. The spell causes King Indian to transform into his monster form. The spell appears to be working against 01. Suddenly, Kikaida appears to knock King Indian down, ruining the spell. Shadowmen appear but they're of no help to King Indian. 01 quickly uses Blasto Endo. Shadow Knight picks up the defeated King Indian's axe. Gill Hakaida appears to make threats against 01 as Ichiro and Jiro drive off.

1 - 20 THE GRAND OUTRAGE - SHADOW BIG BOSS' IDENTITY REVEALED

Gill Hakaida murders several people, all are marked with a red "H". Back at Shadow Crime Syndicate headquarters Big Shadow tells Hakaida who his next victim is to be. Instead of a shadow on a screen the audience actually sees Big Shadow himself. When Hakaida attempts his next murder Ichiro interrupts. Ichiro transforms into Kikaida-01 and the two fight. Shadow Knight appears to take Hakaida away. Akira is sitting by the bed of the woman Hakaida wounded when Hakaida appears in the doorway. Hakaida who has the brain of Akira's father in his head tries to hypnotise Akira. He commands him to take a black cylinder out of its case and put one of his own in its place. As far as I can tell this is a battery that provides the energy Ichiro needs to transform. Kikaida-01 is solar powered but in human form the solar collector is hidden inside him and can't get light. When Ichiro and Rieko return they find the wounded woman is gone. A note for Ichiro is left on the bed, with a dagger thrown at it. The note is apparently a challenge from Hakaida. Before he leaves Ichiro changes cylinders, at Rieko's suggestion.

When Hakaida turns his back Ichiro takes the wounded woman, places her in Double Machine's sidecar. Hakaida turns back around just in time to see Double Machine fly away, under its own guidance. Ichiro and Hakaida fight. Hakaida apparently tells Ichiro he can't transform, then starts shooting at him with Hakaida Shot. Ichiro does transform however. Akira appears holding the black cylinder Hakaida gave him. He tosses it at Hakaida, it explodes. Not understanding Japanese I don't know what Akira or 01 told Hakaida but I think Akira must have only pretended to be under Hakaida's control. Before 01 and Hakaida could fight the ground under Hakaida opened up to swallow him.

I don't know where Double Machine came from, but Ichiro drives off on it. Akira is met by the boy who is usually with the pickpocket. Akira recognizes that the boy is his brother. Whether Akira knew all along this boy was his brother or learned it recently I don't know. This is one of the drawbacks of not understanding the language (except for a few words). The boy's name is Hiroshi. He is the eldest son of Professor Gill and Akira's older brother. Ichiro meets with his "brother" Jiro. As the two are talking they hear a sound. Following the sound they find the pickpocket, laying on the ground, talking in her sleep. Her name by the way is Misao and she was Hiroshi's tutor just as Rieko was Akira's tutor. Hiroshi opens a secret door hidden under a rock, which he somehow knows leads to the base of the Shadow. The toy boys enter the base!

The boys find themselves just outside Big Shadow's chamber. Hakaida, apparently tired of having his fights with 01 interrupted, forces his way into Big Shadow's room to challenge the leader. Big Shadow is sitting in his chair. He stands, turns to face Hakaida. And...his face is that of Rieko. As Hakaida stands there confused, the boys watch from the shadows. Rieko's face transforms into a skull. A white beam shoots out of the skull hitting Hakaida. Then skull faced figure vanishes in a puff of smoke. Suddenly a second Hakaida burst through a wall. The two Hakaidas fight. One pushes the other aside and breaks a hole in another wall, stepping through the hole to find himself face to face with Big Shadow. Big Shadow says something, I don't know what, and in response Hakaida removes his mask. It's Jiro in disguise! Big Shadow smiles, as if he knew it all the time. The real Hakaida tries to enter the room. Jiro tries to stop him, but Hakaida forces his way past Jiro. When Hakaida approaches Big Shadow they both disappear in another puff of smoke. So, was it Hakaida or Jiro who originally burst in on Big Shadow, and got zapped? I think it was Gill Hakaida, furious at having to serve Big Shadow instead of leading his own organization.

Jiro takes Hiroshi and Akira out of the Shadow's base.

Hakaida, in chains, is forced by Big Shadow to watch a tv screen showing Shadowmen sent after a woman. Ichiro and Jiro attack the Shadowmen. Big Shadow releases Hakaida to take on 01. As Hakaida and Ichiro fight, Big Shadow flips a switch and three bulldozers attempt to crush Ichiro between them. Ichiro transforms into Kikaida-01 and using "Blasto Endo Flash" (three bursts of his energy weapon) blows up the bulldozers. Hakaida resumes the attack, this time trying to fight both Kikaida-01 and Kikaida. When the brothers both punch him at the same time he goes flying into the air and explodes. The ground opens up to swallow his head. Ichiro and Jiro shake hands, probably thinking they've defeated Gill Hakaida at last.

Back at his base, Big Shadow, makes Gill Hakaida a new body. Hakaida stands and salutes Big Shadow, twice, but will this new found loyalty to Big Shadow last?

1 - 21 VAMPIRE BUILDING - THE BEAUTIFUL GIRLS DORM TERROR!

Led by a man dressed in black coat and tails, black hat and wearing silver mask over his eyes, Shadowmen attack young women, stiking a needle in their arm to collect blood from them. Their leader then has them kill the women. Of course this sort of behavior attracts the attention of Ichiro who interrupts one night. After a brief skirmish with Ichiro the man transforms into Shadow Knight to continue the fight. Strangely, Hakaida appears and holds his gun not on Ichiro, but on Shadow Knight. Ichiro checks on Shadow Knight's last victim. She's still alive.

In the morning Rieko and Akira find a girl laying on the sidewalk moaning. Before they can do anything a woman, apparently her schoolmistress appears and takes the girl away--to the doctor. As soon as the doctor closes the door on the schoolmistress her office is filled up with Shadowmen. Rieko and Akira climb into the doctor's open window. They find the doctor tied up. They untie her, she climbs out the window. They open the internal door. Shadowmen have a young woman on a table, they're performing a transfusion. Once they are done a doll dressed in black with black hair sits up and walks around. Back at his base, Big Shadow monitoring this activity, is pleased.

The doll enters the doctor's office and finding Rieko and Akira there, transforms into a man-sized Vampire Bat. The bat has the number 16 on its back. (All Shadow Murder Force monsters are numbered although not all have the number visible on their bodies). Ichiro climbs through the window to attack the Vampire Bat. The bat flies away. Ichiro follows it. When Rieko hears the schoolmistress knocking on the door she disguises herself as the doctor and sends her away.

Outdoors Ichiro and the Vampire Bat fight. Ichiro transforms into Kikaida-01 and destroys the bat with Blasto Endo. Explosions start going off near 01. It's Hakaida shooting at him. 01 uses 01 Cut to knock Hakaida Shot out of Hakaida's hand. The robot and the cyborg punch each other for awhile. Hakaida mounts his motorcycle, White Crow, and drives away. 01 follows on Double Machine, but when he catches up to White Crow its owner is no where in sight.

The schoolmistress returns, with the doctor. Rieko removes her mask. The doctor calls Rieko by name, which is probably why Rieko accused the doctor of actually being Hakaida. The doctor speaks in a male voice and then becomes Hakaida. A second Vampire Bat (number 17 on its back) and several Shadowmen appear in the room. Jiro's trumpet is heard playing outside. Hakaida exists the building. Ichiro is on the roof playing his trumpet, but wait, Ichiro appears in the room to battle the bat. Two Ichiros? When Hakaida attacks Ichiro he discovers it is a dummy with a tape recorder providing the music. Ichiro, the Shadowmen and the Vampire Bat end up outside with Hakaida. The bat throws a wing at Ichiro. The wing raps around Ichiro who falls down. There is an explosion. The Vampire Bat and Hakaida think they have defeated 01, until they hear Ichiro's laughter. They find the wing rapped around a statue. Ichiro transforms into Kikaida-01 and destroys the second Vampire Bat.

Misao and Hiroshi stumble about Shadowmen making a third Vampire Bat. This bat has the number 18 on its back.

01 cuts off Hakaida's left arm with "01 Cut". Hakaida picks up his arm and rides away on White Crow. 01 follows on Double Machine but the third Vampire Bat flies down to attack him. When 01 resists the bat points to a woman two Shadowmen have captured, apparently threatening to have her killed. The bat's head flies off its body to attack 01. He catches it and throws it aside. The Shadowmen knock their captive out. 01 attacks and defeats them. The bat's head hovering in the air spits fire at 01. He uses Blasto Endo on it.

Shadow Knight is not seen again in this episode after Hakaida kept him from attacking Ichiro. I have no idea why Hakaida did that or where Shadow Knight went.

1 - 22 TODAY'S SPECIAL CLASS IS MURDER TRAINING!?

Scorpion Strong teaches a group of boys, who are dressed like scouts, to shoot at cutouts of Ichiro and Jiro, then Kikaida-01 and Kikaida. Gill Hakaida and Shadow Knight have another argument, while Big Shadow looks bored. Shadow Knight raises his sword to hit Hakaida when a buzzer sounds. A video screen comes on showing some more boys. Big Shadow says something to Shadow Knight. Shadow Knight sends Scorpion Strong to impersonate the boys' teacher. After showing the boys slides of the costillation Scorpio the scorpion the teacher returns to his true form of Scorpion Strong.

The monster hypnotises most of the boys, but one, Kengi(?) who apparently had been in the restroom runs away. He runs into Rieko and Akira. Hakaida and several Shadowmen attempt to capture the three of them but of course Ichiro arrives to save them. Rieko takes Kengi home but his mother doesn't believe his story about the teacher being a monster.

Hakaida and Ichiro fight as Shadow Knight watches them on monitor screen. Hakaida wraps Ichiro up in silver bands and aims Hakaida Shot at his head, but before he can shoot a spear knocks the gun out of his hand. Shadow Knight has appeared to take revenge for Hakaida stopping him from destroying Ichiro in the previous episode. It appears to high ranking officials in the Shadow Murder Force are jealous of each other. Ichiro takes the this opportunity to transform into Kikaida-01. Shadow Knight throws his sword at 01, but 01 catches it and throws it at Hakaida. 01 uses a new combat technique, "01 Kick" on Shadow Knight. Shadow Knight vanishes, Hakaida flies away.

Back at Shadow base Hakaida whips Shadow Knight, until Big Shadow stops him. It appears Hakaida is now second in command instead of Shadow Knight.

The teacher comes looking for his missing student, bringing the rest of the class with him. When Kengi accuses the teacher of being a monster, the other students do NOT backup his claim. Kengi runs back inside the house, to Rieko and Akira. Later one of Kengi's classmates tries to shoot him and Rieko and Akira.

Misao and Hiroshi are attacked by three women wearing wild colored wigs. These women throw stars at them. When Misao throws a star back, hitting one of the women the woman appears to be Kengi's mother. This makes Kengi mad, and Akira suspicious of Misao, but Ichiro arrives and apparently tells them that's not his mother. She has in fact been captured by Scorpion Strong. When Ichiro enters the classroom he is attacked by the school's model of a human skeleton, it wraps its arms around his neck. To break free, Ichiro transforms into Kikaida-01. The skeleton spits fire at 01. 01 destroys the skeleton with 01 Cut. Finding a secret panel in the floor 01 opens it and climbs down. As he climbs the stairs they give way. It's a trap. With his legs stuck in the ground 01 watches the scouts come at him with guns in their hands. What can 01 do, he can't hurt children. As the children fire their guns 01 bursts out of the hole to do battle with Hakaida and the Shadowmen. Having knocked them aside he confronts the children. Crossing his hands in front of him he says something I can't understand, it's "01" something Japanese. The children pass out. When he uncrosses his hands saying "Double" something, the children wake up their normal selves.

Going deeper into the Shadow base, 01 finds and releases more children and Kengi's mother. They exit the base but run into Hakaida and Scorpion Strong. 01 appears. The woman and the children flee. Scorpion Strong pins 01's arms behind him while Hakaida punches 01. 01 breaks free just as Hakaida throws another punch, so Scorpion Strong is hit by mistake. When Scorpion Strong falls down we see he has the number 22 on his back. 01 kicks Hakaida down. Scorpion Strong stands up and sprays yellow smoke at 01 from his tail. 01 uses Blast End on him. Kengi and his mother are reunited.

1 - 23 THE EVIL STARFISH - WOMAN-KIND IMPENDING EXTERMINATION

Out for a ride Ichiro stops Double Machine to stretch. He hears some strange noises. Asking Akira to be quiet he adjusts his hearing.

A woman crawls onto a road. A car stops. A man gets out to see what's wrong. When he tries to help the woman up, she breaks his neck. The woman turns into a man and then vanishes when Ichiro and Akira arrive. Ichiro tries to revive the dead man, until he relises he's dead. Laughing the murder comes out of the tall grass on the side of the road, to attack Ichiro. On the the back of the man's black shirt is the number 1.

Wrestling with Ichiro the man transforms into Shadow Devil Starfish. The monster has the number 11 on its back. When Ichiro kicks Shadow Devil Starfish it falls and breaks into several pieces.

Those pieces transform into 5 smaller stars. Those stars then transform into the man Ichiro was fighting before and four women dressed in pink. Ichiro transforms into Kikaida-01. 01 Drive destroys two of the female robots, but two more appear in twin puffs of smoke, to take their place.

Hakaida and Shadow Knight watch the battle on their screen at Shadow base. They seem sure 01 will lose, and turn to leave, but when Big Shadow points at the screen, we see that 01 must have defeated the female robots because he's shown using 01 Cut on the man. The man turns back into Shadow Devil Starfish and breaks into pieces.

Hakaida and Shadow Knight go after Rieko, but Ichiro arrives to save her. Ichiro transforms into 01 again. Hakaida uses that Hammer Claw and Flying Moon Kick on 01. Shadow Knight's sword shoots sparks at 01. 01 is knocked down, when he gets back up he finds that the human form Shadow Devil Starfish and the pink women are back and they have Rieko. When 01 uses 01 Driver against the man he turns back into Shadow Devil Starfish and falls over. When 01 uses 01 Cut against the women robots they fall over but they all turn into little stars which turn back into the pink robots and the man. 01 grans Rieko and rides away on Double Machine.

Ichiro seems to be worried that he won't be able to defeat a monster that won't stay dead. When he hears another noise he leaves Rieko and Akira to investigate.

Two women dressed in red fall at the feet of Misao and Hiroshi (they have to appear somewhere in every episode after the 15th) when they try to help these women the women try to strangle them so they leave them alone. Ichiro arrives. They pretend to be hurt. He doesn't believe them, so they attack him. He hits them. Apparently they were all on the roof of a building, because the woman fall a long ways to the crowd. A ground gathers tby the dead women. The bodies vanish in a puff of smoke. More of these women in red appear. Misao and Horishi witness a murder by one of these women, who then turns into the man who is Shadow Devil Starfish. Ichiro arrives on Double Machine. The man and Ichiro fight a little. The man transforms into Shadow Devil Starfish and wraps its tentacles around Ichiro. Ichiro escapes by transforming into Kikaida-01. Shadow Devil Starfish sprays an explosive liquid at 01. 01 uses 01 Driver to knock Shadow Devil Starfish down. Then 01 Cut. This time Shadow Devil Starfish falls over, breaks into pieces and those pieces burst into flame.

Back at Shadow base Big Shadow says something to Hakaida and Shadow Knight about "Giant Devil" so obviously he still wants to rebuild that robot. Then a man who looks just like the man who was Shadow Devil Starfish appears. He has a number 2 on his back!

Once again Ichiro's sensitive ears pick up the sound of those murderous women. When he enters a shack where the sound came from he finds the bodies of dead men. Hakaida flips a switch causing the shack to explode. Rieko fight the pink female robots, doing surprisingly well, but she is eventually overcome. Still in human form Shadow Devil Starfish 2 tries to crush her neck--he can't do it! Why? That will be revealed in episode 24. Ichiro's trumpet is heard. Ichiro transforms into Kikaida-01 and attacks. He tells Rieko to get Akira and get back in his sidecar. She does so. He gets on Double Machine and uses its rocket like guns, firing on the villains. Shadow Knight throws his sword at 01. 01 knocks it aside and gets off Double Machine to fight. Rieko climbs into the driver's seat. She uses Double Machine to run down the pink robots while 01 battles Hakaida and Shadow Knight. When the man who is Shadow Devil Starfish 2 is knocked down he becomes Shadow Devil Starfish 2. 01 uses Blast End on him. Ichiro gives Rieko some applause and a handshake.

1 - 24 DEVIL'S TRADE!/? - THE EARTH PIGS PLANETARY SCHEME

A family of three are enjoying a picnic when they are attacked by three men each with the head of a pig. Rieko and Akira hearing cries for help come running. They find the three family members lying on the ground, the father by the family car. The body of a pig-faced man is inside their car. Rieko helps the daughter and mother up. The father seems angry at her for some reason. Later this man goes to work and shocks his employees by announcing they will no longer be making kitchen appliances like toasters but will begin producing automatic weapons.

As usual, Misao and Hiroshi are sleeping on the streets. Hiroshi finds the daughter from the picnic crying. It appears she doesn't like the change that has come over her father. Misao is frightened by a pig (an actual pig not a man with a pig's head). When she tries to show Hiroshi about the pig, it isn't there. There is a man in black, reading a newspaper however. When Misao tries to talk to the man he lowers the paper to reveal he has the head of a pig. He pulls a knife and threatens Misao with it. Four more pig-headed men with knives appear an attempt to abduct Rieko, Akira and the girl, but...you guessed it, Ichiro appears to save them. The pig-faced men fight with him for a little bit then vanish. Hakaida appears just to take a shot at Ichiro.

Rieko and Akira take the girl home. As she talks to her mother her father comes in. The mothers facing her so she doesn't see him, but the girl sees that her father has the shadow of a pig!

Other people are attacked by pig-faced men.

The girl tries to tell her mother her father is a pigman. The mother laughs, but then she goes and tells her husband. As the two walk together for a moment they appear as pig monsters. Then go back to looking human, however a closeup reveals pig like noses. The girl, Rieko and Akira have fled together, apparently over hearing the couple's conversation which included "Shadow Knight" repeated several times. Rieko, Akira and the girl run into (literally) Misao and Hiroshi. The five meet the father and mother who briefly try to convince them everything is okay, but when they see they are not believed they become Mad Pig 1 & 2. The Pig Men show up to help them. Rieko fights them. She does quite well until Mad Pig 2 spits fire at her. Ichiro comes to help. During the fighting the Mad Pigs are seen to be numbered 104 and 105. After Ichiro destroys a few pig-faced robots the Mad Pigs disappear. The girl, Hiroshi and Akira have also disappeared. They haven't been captured, they just wandered off.

The two brothers see the girl a ways ahead of them. Akira starts to shout to her when Hiroshi puts a hand over his mouth. The pig faced robots are following her. When the robots get too close to the girl, the boys throw rocks at them to distract them. They chase the boys but the boys get away. The girl finally sees that she's in danger and hides too. The pig-faced robots not finding anybody use a secret entrance to their base. The girl sees them do it. And follow them in. The boys try to follow her but can't get in.

The girl finds her parents, in a cage. Two Shadowmen grab the girl, but just then Rieko, Misao, Hiroshi, Akira and Ichiro arrive. Ichiro takes care of the two Shadowmen. The rest of the group wanders off and is captured by Hakaida. Ichiro is attacked by more Shadowmen.

The two women, two boys and the girl are trapped in a cell, with a bomb. Misao tries to convince Hakaida to release Hiroshi and Akira, apparently reminding him that if they're blown up the plans for Giant Devil will be lost. Hakaida laughs. I'm not sure but I think he wants the plans destroyed so the Shadow can't build the robot Professor Gill designed.

Ichiro defeats the Shadowmen and frees the parents. The three of them confront the imposters. For a moment it seems like Ichiro may have forgotten which is which, but then he kicks one couple, they fall over and turn into Mad Pig 1 and 2. Shadowmen appear. Ichiro fights them.

Rieko smashes the bars of the cage, much to everyone's surprise. She then reveals that like Ichiro and Jiro she is a jinzo ningen, an artificial human, in other words an android. While the others flee she tries to defuse the bomb. Akira is the last to leave.

When Mad Pig 2 uses "Pig Fire" on Ichiro he transforms into Kikaida-01. Mad Pig 1 shoots his nose at 01, it is on chain which raps around 01's arm.

Several Shadowmen enter the cell where Rieko is attempting to defuse the bomb. She has to stop to fight them.

01 breaks the chain then with a single Blast End destroys both Mad Pigs. The girl is reunited with her parents. Misao suddenly remembers Rieko is still underground.

BOOOOOOOOOOOOMMMMMMMMMMM!!!

Akira cries.

1 - 25 THE DEVIL-SPAWN ZADAM LUNAR BASE LIFT-OFF

Big Shadow orders Zadam, his agent on the moon, to come to earth. A girl and her father see Zadam's ship through their telescope. Misao asks to look through the telescope. Hiroshi has a crush on the girl, who is older and taller than he is. Big Shadow introduces Hakaida and Shadow Knight to Zadam, both of them attack him. Zadam zaps them with a blast from one of his twin tridents. They don't bother him after that.

Shadow Knight in his human form commits several murders.

Misao and Hiroshi are invited to dinner by the stargazers. Hiroshi eats like he is starving, which he probably was. The meal is interrupted by Hakaida. Hakaida raises Hakaida Shot but Ichiro's trumpet is heard so instead of shooting the man or his guests, Hakaida fires out the window trying to hit Ichiro. Hakaida exits the house, looking for Ichiro but Ichiro has gone into the house and taken Hakaida's intended victims out. The trumpet is still playing, it's tied to a tree and playing itself. When Ichiro goes to retrieve his trumpet, Akira is standing beneath it, looking sad. Hakaida finally finds Ichiro. Ichiro fights Hakaida and several Shadowmen. When Ichiro notices that Hakaida is missing he looks for him. Seeing Hakaida about to shoot the people he thought he had hidden, Ichiro transforms into Kikaida-01 and jumps in front of Hakaida taking the shots himself. Shadow Knight in human form appears and I think claims the right to defeat 01. He transforms. 01 fights Hakaida and Shadow Knight and several Shadowmen. In the middle of the fight a familiar guitar lick is heard. Jiro has returned, transforming into Kikaida, he joins the fray. The brothers destroy several Shadowmen. Hakaida and Shadow Knight vanish. Kikaida and 01 shake hands, 01 says "arigato".

Ichiro drives off on Double Machine as he passes an apple tree he's almost hit in the head by an apple. He looks up to see Misao. He dismounts and follows Misao and Hiroshi. Akira joins them. When they get to where the girl and her father should be Ichiro finds two dummies. Ichiro, Misao, Hiroshi and Akira find where the two are being kept prisoner. Hiroshi tries to call to the girl, Ichiro tells him to be quiet. Hiroshi again tries to call to the girl. Ichiro again tells him to be quiet and then goes to rescue them. Misao slaps Hiroshi in the back of the head. When Ichiro enters the house the girl and her father are in a steel door closes behind him. The walls of the house split. Ichiro and the two humans are inside a rocket! The rocket blasts off. It lands on the moon.

Ichiro opens his chest, pulls out two cylinders which apparently contain oxygen. Ichiro exits the rocket and is attacked by several Shadowmen. He jumps into a crater. When Hakaida and Shadow Knight open the rocket door they find the two humans, with the cylinders in their mouths, but no 01. The father closes the door after Hakaida and Shadow Knight leave.

01 finds himself inside the Shadow's moonbase.

Ichiro returns to the service to work on the rocket. When Hakaida and Shadow Knight appear again the rocket takes off without Ichiro. More Shadowmen appear and the battle is on. Ichiro transforms into Kikaida-01 and after making a speech continues the fight. Back on earth Zadam is monitoring the battle. Apparently 01 wins the battle because we see Ichiro looking up at the earth. Believing that he's stuck on the moon, he begins his farewells, "Sayônara Akira, Sayônara Hiroshi " when suddenly Double Machine flies down to him. A cylinder on the seat has a note from Jiro. The only words I understood when Ichiro read the note aloud were "computer", "Double Machine" and "Jiro". Ichiro mounts Double Machine and flies back to earth on it.

1 - 26 CHRONICLE OF THE SOUTH DEATHMATCH!! - THE ZADAM SUPER POWER DISPLAY

Zadam wants a young woman who is on cruise ship captured. On the same ship are Misao, Hiroshi and Akira. They meet the woman and play hide and seek with her. Misao has to seek. While looking she is frightened by a man dressed in white and wearing a red mask with a very long nose. She finds the others and they are all attacked by this man several men dressed in black and wearing masks with shorter noses. A familiar trumpet song is heard. When Ichiro transforms into Kikaida-01 the bad guys vanish.

The ship reaches its destination. Ichiro, the two boys, and two women are followed to their hotel by the masked figures. When the woman and the two boys go site seeing the masked figures search her room, but not finding what they want they go after the woman. Jiro appears to rescue her and the boys. The man in white transforms into Long-Nosed Goblin Flying Squirrel, Jiro transforms into Kikaida. Long-Nosed Goblin Flying Squirrel has the number 107 on its back. The woman and the two boys run away. The woman pulls off her face, it's Misao in disguise (must have learned that from Rieko). Hiroshi apparently tells her to put the mask back on because she does, but it's too late, Hakaida and Shadow Knight hiding in the shadows have all ready seen.

Back at the hotel the woman is attacked by two of the masked men in black. She runs out of the hotel into a cave. More men in black appear. Ichiro shows up, knocks the men down and leads the woman out of the cave. The figure in white and the men in black appear. Ichiro transforms into Kikaida-01 but the men vanish. Zadam appears. When Zadam crosses his twin tridants 01 is hit by a energy blast that knocks him onto some rocks. A second blast rips off 01's left arm, which then tries to strangle 01! Zadam vanishes. Kikaida appears, grabs hold of 01's left arm. Kikaida's eyes flash and the arm stops moving. He holds the arm back in it socket. His eyes flash again and the arm is reattached. The woman opens her watch and gives Ichiro something that was hidden inside of it (microfilm?).

The woman joins Hiroshi, Akira and the disguised Misao. After she tells Misao everything's ok she removes her mask and wig. Hakaida, Shadow Knight and several Shadowmen, carrying spears instead of the usual lightning bolts, appear. Ichiro arrives, and transforms into Kikaida-01. The two women and two boys flee. The white clothed, masked figure appears, grabs the other woman, taking her to Zadam. 01 knocks Hakaida and Shadow Knight down with 01 cut then goes into battle with Long-Nosed Goblin Flying Squirrel. After Long-Nosed Goblin Flying Squirrel is destroyed by 01 Zadam summons Hell Amphibian. The episode ends with Hell Amphibian holding onto the arm of Zadam's prisoner.

1 - 27 THE HIDDEN LAND FIERCE BATTLE!! ZADAM HELL TRAP

Gill Hakaida takes the woman captured in the previous episode and drives off with her on White Crow. Ichiro confronts Zadam, after an exchange of words he transforms into Kikaida-01. When 01 approaches Zadam, Zadam vanishes from where he is appearing somewhere else. He does this three times. 01 jumps into the air and shouting "01 Kick" smacks into Zadam. Zadam teeters on the edge of a cliff but doesn't fall. He disappears. Misao, Hiroshi and Akira catch up with Ichiro.

At Shadow headquarters Zadam butts a belt on the captured woman, then has her left where she will be found. Hiroshi and Akira find her. Misao and Hiroshi carry the unconscious woman. Misao, Hiroshi and Akira set down to a large meal. Ichiro thinks about his encounters with Zadam. He suddenly realizes that Zadam fled not because he kicked him but because of the bright sun shining in his eyes. Ichiro gets up and runs out of the room.

The next scene has Ichiro and Zadam facing each other. Ichiro places his hands over his forehead like he does when transforming but this time says "01 Sun". When he seperates his hands his solar collector comes out of his helmet and focus the sunlight into rays that strike Zadam's eyes. Zadam vanishes. I don't think this acutally happened, I think it was just Ichiro imaging what could happen the next time they meet.

Misao, Hiroshi and Akira enoy their meal. Their unconscious guest awakes. A ticking sound can be heard. Apparently realizing she's wearing a bomb, she runs out of the hotel.

Back at Shadow headquarters Hell Amphibian jumps onto Hakaida's back, showing how it will defeat 01. The plan is to lure Ichiro to take a ride on a certain boat. Hell Amphibian will come up out of the water to attach itself to Ichiro's back. Shadow Knight standing on a suspension bridge high above the water, flashes his eye Hell Amphibian will transform into a hard, silvery form and the air tank will become a bomb. A second flash from Shadow Knight will detonate the bomb, destroying Ichiro. The woman wearing the belt boards the boat Zadam want's Ichiro on. Ichiro on Double Machine catches up to the boat, jumping from shore to land on its roof. Zadam's plan seems to be working. The woman tells the boat captain she's wearing a bomb. The captain reaches to remove the belt, Ichiro stops him. Ichiro works on removing the cover on the belt. Hell Amphibian is swimming towards the boat. Shadow Knight is in place, waiting. The boat passes the bridge. Ichiro looking up sees Shadow King and tells the captain to stop the boat. He does. Hell Amphibian flies out of the water landing on the boat's roof. Ichiro removes the cover from the belt. 7 seconds left. 6 5 4 2 1 0. No explosion.

Hell Amphibian laughs and jumps onto Ichiro's back. Unable to knock him off, Ichiro transforms into Kikaida-01 and rocket into the air. That doesn't loss flies Hell Amphibian. 01 lands on the bridge and with Hell Amphibian on his back fights Shadow Knight. Then 01 does 01 Driver going straight up into the air. The spinning causes Hell Amphibian to fall off. Hitting the water Hell Amphibian explodes. 01 lands back on the bridge. 01 and Shadow Knight fight. They both jump off the bridge landing on shore. After a brief battle 01 tosses Shadow Knight into the air than uses Blast End. Shadow Knight falls onto the bridge and explodes. The end of Shadow Knight!

1 - 28 CRAZY TOWN - THE TERRIBLE MERMAID PRINCESS COUNTERATTACK

All the adults in a town have been replaced by Shadowmen. On Double Machine, Ichiro goes after a Shadowman impersonating a policeofffer on a motorcycle, but loses him.

At Shadow base a giant clam shell opens to reveal a scantily dressed, beautiful woman. Hakaida falls in love with her.

The shell closes and reopens, the beautiful woman has transformed into Mermaid Princess. Hakaida is still in love. The shell closes.

The closed shell is placed on public display. When the shell opens all the men and boys stare at the woman, transfixed, unable to move. Hakaida and Shadowmen appear to take the men away, but Ichiro appears. The woman closes herself in her shell and the spell is broken, the people run away. The woman tries to work her spell on Ichiro. Ichiro transforms into Kikaida-01. The woman begins to spin as she does so Hakaida covers his eyes, 01's eyes explode. The woman closes herself in her shell.

Next we see the woman standing in room full of smoke calling Ichiro's name. Ichiro goes crazy and tries to strangle Akira. Ichiro suddenly comes to his senses, stops trying to kill Akira, but, he's blind. Ichiro tries to make repairs to himself. He transforms into Kikaida-01 but smoke pours out of his body and he's forced back into Ichiro form, still blind.

Back at Shadow base more adults are being duplicated. Hakaida laying down inside a glass capsule.

Misao, Hiroshi, Akira and another boy and a girl are attacked by Shadowmen. They are able to run away from the Shadowmen but are caught by the disguised Shadowmen. The Mermaid Princess, in human form comes and tries to cast her spell on Akira and Hiroshi but it doesn't work. Ichiro arrives, still blind and challenges her. The mermaid starts spinning. Ichiro transforms into Kikaida-01. At first his vision is blurred but it clears. Hakaida arrives on White Crow and attacks 01.

After 01 knocks Hakaida down the woman finally transforms into Mermaid Princess. She throws bombs at 01 and zaps him with a laser. 01 uses 01 Driver on her and chops of the tip of her nose. When she turns around the number 55 is on her back. She faces 01 again and removes the seashell that's her right breast, throws it at 01. He catches it and tosses it to the ground, it explodes. She tries again with the left. 01 kicks it away, it explodes. 01 uses Blast End on her. She falls into her shell and makes a speech before the shell closes then explodes.

Misao, Hiroshi, Akira and Ichiro board a ship for home (in episode 26 they had gone on a cruise, 27 and 28 took place during their vacation).

1 - 29 RED DEMON, BLUE DEMON - THE TEN BILLION VOLT TERROR!

Zadam attempts to produce a pair of new monsters but failes, apparently due to an expirement being conducted at the same time, by a boy scientist. Hakaida is sent to stop the experiment. Ichiro shows up. Hakaida drives away on White Crow. Ichiro follows after him on Double Machine. Zadam tries again and this time is able to produce Raijin Plus & Raijin Minus. The explosion that results when they are made attracts 01. Raijin + and Raijin - work together to hit 01 with a powerful electric shock then a thunder blast which sends 01 flying into the air.

01 lands next to his friends. Ichiro, Hiroshi, Akira and Misao go with the boy scientist and his mother to the Narukami Thunder Laboratory, which was founded by the boys late father. Hiroshi, Akira and Misao have lunch.

At Shadow base Big Shadow runs a slide show of a sloth in a tree.

The boy's mother is outside practicing archery when Raijin + and Raijin - appear. She shoots an arrow at a target, it freezes in mid air, then suddenly hits the target. Raijin + and Raijin - show themselves. She tries to flee but they cause her to freeze in place. A large drum appears floating over her head and starts to do something to alter her brain when 01 appears and knocks it aside. After a brief struggle with 01 Raijin + and Raijin - vanish. The woman lays on a couch, unwilling to get up.

Misao and Hiroshi go for a ride on a two person bicycle. Raijin + and Raijin - freeze them. Drums appear over their heads, glue and vanish. Misao and Hiroshi start moving again but they fall off the bicycle and lay on the grass. Raijin + and Raijin - effect several other people the same way. Ichiro and Akira find Misao and Hiroshi sleeping on the ground. They take them to the lab. Ichiro hears a noise. Ichiro, Akira and the boy scientist ride away on Double Machine. Just as they make it out of town Raijin + and Raijin - infect the entire city with slothfulness. Ichiro challenges Raijin + and Raijin - and Hakaida, they accept. They meet in a quarry. Ichiro transforms into Kikaida-01. Raijin + and Raijin - zap 01. 01 is captured, strapped into a chair that will bust the power of Raijin + and Raijin -. They intend to hit him with ten billion volts apparently, however Aira and the boy scientist use a giant magnet to pull the electricity away from 01. 01 breaks out of the chair.

Fighting resumes. Raijin + and Raijin - throw their drums at 01, he catches them and throws them at Shadowmen, the drums explode. Raijin + and Raijin - attempt to blast 01 again and miss. 01 uses 01 Kick, 01 Driver, 01 Cut and Blast End one immediately after the other.

The boy scientist figures out how to restore the victims of Raijin + and Raijin - brain altering power.

1 - 30 DEMON? ANGEL? BIJINDA APPEARS!!

Watching video tapes of 01 defeating his monsters, Big Shadow, gets depressed. To cheer him up Zadam sends Pollution Catfish to destroy a forest with its poison spray. Pollution Catfish also demonstrates how it will defeat 01, by covering the ground in a black liquid which explodes when Shadowmen step on it and when others drive motorcycles on it. Pollution Catfish transforms into an old man.

Ichiro riding Double Machine hears female laughter. Red and blue lights appear in the sky, a bunch of flowers suddenly appear on the ground in an expanding circle, from the middle of the flowers a female android appears. The android flies away.

Misao, Hiroshi and Akira walking by a lake, are attacked by Shadowmen. In the same area is a woman dressed in blue with a pink scarf around her neck. A harp plays in the background. When Misao, Hiroshi, Akira and the Shadowmen catch up with the woman she fights the Shadowmen. She wins.

A group of boys on bicycles meet Pollution Catfish in his human form. After a brief discussion they ride off. A young couple sitting on a park bench are disturbed by this man sitting next to them. They move to another bench, but he appears there. They try to run away from him. He transforms into Pollution Catfish and sprays his killing spray on them, they're turned into a couple of skeletons. Pollution Catfish comes across a group of children. His whiskers turn into ropes and rap around the children. Ichiro comes to their aid. Pollution Catfish vanishes.

Ichiro hears a harp playing, looking around he sees the female android sitting in a tree playing a harp. She laughs and jumps to the ground. Using the harp like a bow she shoots exploding arrows at Ichiro. She says her name is Bijinda (Beautiful Woman). She uses her "Bijinda Laser". Ichiro ducks and several Shadowmen fall out of the trees. Ichiro stands up and looks around. Bijinda is gone.

The woman in blue is walking through the forest, she crosses a road. A harp plays in the background. Ichiro rides up on Double Machine. After a brief talk the woman, who looks sad walks away.

The boys on bicycles are chased by Hakaida on White Crow. Ichiro on Double Machine stops him and transforms into Kikaida-01. He knocks Hakaida down. Arrows hit the ground at 01's feet. Bijinda appears, picks up Hakaida and the two of them fly away.

The bicycler riders stop to take a break and are attacked by Shadowmen. The woman in blue and Ichiro come to their rescue. When there are no more Shadowmen the woman runs away. Ichiro catches up with her. Misao, Hiroshi and Akira spot Ichiro and the woman. Hiroshi behaves as if she were jealous. When Misao, Hiroshi and Akira are attacked by Hakaida, Pollution Catfish and several Shadowmen, Ichiro breaks off his conversation with the woman to transform into Kikaida-01 and goes into battle. The woman joins the fight. She manages to take out more Shadowmen than 01 but is knocked out by Pollution Catfish who picks her up and vanishes. Hakaida attacks 01.

Pollution Catfish drops the woman, stands over her and waits for 01. Riding on Double Machine, 01 heads toward Pollution Catfish. The ground around Double Machine starts to explode. Double Machine makes it through the mindfield, 01 dismounts and attacks Pollution Catfish. Pollution Catfish tries to tie 01 up with his whisker rope, 01 breaks free. Pollution Catfish jumps up and down, causing the ground to shake. A couple boulders roll down a hill toward 01. 01 jumps out of the way and knocks Pollution Catfish over with 01 Driver. When Pollution Catfish stands 01 uses 01 Cut on him twice, before destroying him with Blast End. The woman wakes, stands and tries to run away, there is an explosion, she falls.

At Shadow base, Zadam and a damaged Hakaida are watching. Zadam calls the woman Mari.

Ichiro picks up the again unconscious woman.

Zadam has a Shadowman flip a switch. Electrical circuits shortening out are shown.

Mari clutches her chest and screams in pain. Ichiro starts to undo the buttons of her shirt. Watching this Big Shadow laughs.

1 - 31 THE TOUCHING ANDROID BIJINDA EXPLOSIVE DEATH

Mari is clutching her chest and screaming in pain. Ichiro is undoing the buttons on her shirt. He gets the first two undone when Mari suddenly pulls away from him stands and runs away. Apparently, if Ichiro had undone the third button Mari would have exploded, destroying Ichiro in the process.

At Shadow base Zadam continues to have Mari feel pain in her chest. Then Hakaida beats her until Big Shadow stops him. When Big Shadow looks at Mari and says "Bijinda" Mari transforms into Bijinda. Bijinda kicks Zadam, knocking him over. And with a couple of karate chops knocks down Hakaida, before kneeling before Big Shadow.

Misao, Hiroshi and Akira are still walking in the park. After some goodnatured ruffhousing they stop to eat apples. Misao puts her apple ontop of her head, an arrow shoots if off, but she thinks Hiroshi took her apple so she takes his. An arrow pierces it knocking it out of her hand. A third arrows knocks the apple out of Akira's hand. Misao pushes the two boys in front of her. There's an explosion. Misao is burned in back of her shoulders. Harp music is heard and Bijinda appears along with several Shadowmen. Hakaida (who always seems to be jealous of new Shadow androids) interrupts. Bijinda uses "Bijinda Kick" to knock Hakaida over a cliff (same cliff Kikaida throw the original Hakaida down and Kikaida-01 throw Gill Hakaida down once before). Only Hakaida's pride is hurt however. He picks himself back up and goes after Misao, Hiroshi and Akira again. This time Ichiro comes to drive him away.

Bijinda finds Misao, Hiroshi and Akira on a long brige. Misao sends the boys away. Bijinda zaps Misao with her "Bijinda Laser", knocking Misao off the bridge. The boys seeing what happend, return to the spot Misao fell from and call for her. Bijinda is gone. Ichiro arrives and when the boys tell him what happens, goes down to the river to look for Misao. He does not find her. Ichiro buts the boys to bed. Seeing their tears he goes to look again. Once he's gone the boys talk. Akira takes out a picture of Rieko. I think he's saying something like, first the Shadow killed Rieko now Misao, and worries that 01 may be next. The boys cry themselves to sleep.

In the morning Ichiro is still searching, when suddely a hand grabs his leg. It's Misao, with her head bandaged and her arm in a sling. Through a flash back, Misao tells how she landed on a tree branch and was helped out of the tree by Mari. Inchiro takes Misao to where he left the boys. They're gone. They left a note. Apparently they decided to take revenge against the Shadow.

Hiroshi and Akira, using broken tree branches attack Shadowmen. Of course, they're disarmed and captured. Mari comes to their resceue destroying all the Shadowmen. The boys begin to tell her what Bijinda did. Ichiro arrives and finally having figured things out, addresses Mari as "Bjinda". She denies being Bijinda but Ichiro's eyes can see threw her clothing and skin to her electronic parts. He tells her he knows she is a "jinzo ningen" (artificial human or android). Mari looks sad. She admits to being Bijinda and I think expresses regret that she must serve the Shadow, but when Ichiro offers to help her she addresses him as "01" and transforms into Bijinda to attack him. Ichiro transforms into Kikaida-01 and uses 01 Chop and 01 Driver to subdue Bijinda. Having knocker her out, he opens her up, probably to attempt to remove that remote control pain circuit, but he's suddenly fired upon and the laughter of Hakaida is heard. When the smoke clears Bijinda is gone.

Hiroshi and Akira finally see Misao. The three run towards each other, but just as they reach each other, three Shadowmen appear. The three humans think they are hugging each other, but are in fact hugging the Shadowmen. When the finally open their eyes and discover what they are doing, they move away from the Shadowmen. Two more appear. The five attempt to capture the three humans but Ichiro comes running and destroys them. Misao, Hiroshi and Akira have hidden behind a boalder. As Ichiro approaches it, it explodes. A harp is heard and Bijinda is seen sitting in a tree. She comes down. Ichiro and Bijinda approach each other. Ichiro tries to talk her into switch sides (I think) but she doesn't. The start to fight but Hiroshi and Akira run in between them and stand in front of Bijinda so Ichiro can't hurt her. Bijinda raises a hand as if to strike the boys. Ichiro says her name in a harsh tone. She lowers her hand at her head but then backs away and raises both her hands, meaning she is about to use her "Bijinda Laser". Ichiro calls upon her to stop. I don't know what he says but a close up of Bijinda's face shows tears flowing down. The scene alternates between Bijinda's face and Mari's, both are covered in tears. Suddenly, Ichiro knocks Hiroshi and Akira to the ground, just in time to protect them from "Bijinda Laser". Ichiro transforms into Kikaida-01. Before they can make a move towards each other, Hakaida appears and shoots 01 in the leg. Bijinda turns and zaps Hakaida with her "Bijinda Laser", before attacking him physically. Watching the battle on his screen, Zadam crosses his trident. Bijinda and Hakaida jump into the air, when they meet there is an explosion. They appear to have destroyed each other.

After bidding Misao, Hiroshi and Akira goodbye, Ichiro drives away on Double Machine.

1 - 32 BECKONING IN HELL - BIJINDA

Bijinda and Hakaida are laying on the floor of the Shadow base, unmoving. Zadam has Bijinda carried into another room. Shadowmen bend over Bijinda with a pair of drills, apparently they were going to disassemble her. Bijinda wakes and destroys the Shadowmen. When she threatens Zadam he cross his tridents. Though in pain, Bijinda slowly moves closer to Zadam. She attacks him knocking the tridents apart then she bursts through a wall to escape. Zadam reports Bijinda's escape to Big Shadow. Zadam has a couple Shadowmen fill a pen with a special ink. When a Shadowman tries to write with pen the ink explodes destroying the Shadowman. Zadam summons Ink Squid.

A group of Shadowmen blow up a truck carrying crates containing many bottles of ink. Then drive a duplicate truck to stores leaving bottles filled with exploding ink! People, mostly children, all over the city are vaporized by this exploding ink. Ichiro witnesses this happening once. Then he goes around collecting the crates. When he has a huge pile of crates, he jumps into the air and shouts "01 Fire". Sparks come out of his hands, the crates explode.

A couple of bullies take a pen away from a smaller boy, but Misao arrives takes the pen back and gives back to its owner.

Ink Squid supervises loading more cases of exploding ink onto a truck, but he's seen by a group of children. When he and his Shadowmen try to capture the children Ichiro appears. Ink Squid sprays fire at Ichiro. Ichiro transforms into Kikaida-01. When 01 knocks Ink Squid over with "01 Kick", Hakaida comes to Ink Squid's aid. 01 knocks Hakaida shot out of Hakaida's hand but Hakaida retrieves it and Ink Squid wraps a tentacle around 01's throat. Hakaida aims shot at 01 but arrows land at his feet. Bijinda appears to take on Hakaida. 01 breaks free from Ink Squid but Ink Squid grabs Bijinda. Hakaida orders Bijinda to fight 01. 01 frees Bijinda from Ink Squid but Bijinda tries to strangle him. 01 knocks her down. Hakaida drives off on White Crow. 01 drives off on Double Machine. Ichiro sees Bijinda standing against a wall. He stops, gets off Double Machine and approaches her. They talk a bit, Bijinda runs away. Ichiro drives a truckload of exploding ink to the dump and blows it up. Ink Squid becomes a man and picks up some boxes of ink that survived.

Misao wants to write something down and borrows the boy's pen, but it's out of ink, so she goes into a store to get some ink. She takes the ink, from the man who is really Ink Squid! Misao is about to write when a rose falls on her pad. Mari appears. Misao seems glad to see her until she takes the pen and throws it into a lake. Under the water some ink leaks out and there is an explosion but nobody sees it. Misao slaps Mari who runs away.

Ichiro goes into the store Misao got the ink from and seems to recognize that the man is Ink Squid, so the man transforms but then Ink Squid immediately disappears in a puff of smoke. Ichiro finds the real store owner in a back room, tied up.

Mari goes into the water and brings up the pen which she returns to the boy. Misao apologizes for slapping Mari.

At Shadow base Big Shadow is angry about Bijinda so he activates the pain circuit. Misao starts to undo Mari's buttons but Ink Squid and several Shadowmen interrupt. Ichiro arrives on Double Machine. Ichiro and Mari fight Shadowmen, Mari destroying the most. Mari transforms into Bijinda, Ichiro into Kikaida-01. Bijinda continues to wipe out Shadowmen while 01 takes on Ink Squid. Ink Squid sprays fire at 01 then exploding ink. 01 uses "01 Driver" on Ink Squid then use "01 Cut" to cut off his right arm before using "Blast End".

Mari and Ichiro seem to part friends. Ichiro drives away on Double Machine. Bijinda walks along the lake.

This is the first episode to not have Akira in it. And the first since Hiroshi's introduction in episode 15, not to include him.

1 - 33 *EMERGENCY - THE GORILLA WITH CHILD'S TEARS
TEARS*

Ichiro is running through a wooded area, being chased by Big Gorilla & Mini-Gorilla. When the ground shakes and a boulder rolls towards Ichiro he transforms into Kikaida-01, picks up the boulder and tosses it. The boulder lands at the feet of Big Gorilla & Mini-Gorilla. Outside the forest 01 confronts this monstrous pair. Mini-Gorilla claims that Big Gorilla & Mini-Gorilla will kill 01 then hides behind Big Gorilla.

Hiroshi and a taller figure, wearing a red mask with the letter M on it, are in a wring, wrestling. Akira pretends to be the sports broadcaster.

01 and Big Gorilla fight. Mini-Gorilla moves away to some sort of electric device with several dials. Big Shadow is watching on his monitor screen from his headquarters.

Hiroshi and his opponent knock each other down. Hiroshi gets up and removes the mask from Misao. Misao hits Hiroshi who falls over.

Big Gorilla tosses 01 down. 01 gets up and uses "01 Cut" on Big Gorilla's kneck. Mini-Gorilla's "VU meter" registers around 100. "01 Cut" to Big Gorilla's head measures upto 400. "01 Kick" 500. "01 Driver" causes the dial to spin several times before the machine blows up. Big Gorilla seems to ask for "Blast End". When 01 won't do it Big Gorilla shoots at him with a machine gun in his right hand. 01 uses "Blast End". Big Gorilla is destroyed, but not before 01's actions are recorded. Mini-Gorilla hits 01 on the chest and shoulders, 01 just knocks Mini-Gorilla down, then leaves.

Misao wins the wrestling match.

Bijinda sees Mini-Gorilla picking up the pieces of Big Gorilla. She helps him. Gill Hakaida witnesses this and returns to base to report it.

Big Shadow and Zadam apparently explain to Hakaida that their computer has designed plans for a new Big Gorilla, which will be able to defeat 01. Bijinda doesn't know it but she will help Mini-Gorilla to become the new Big Gorilla.

Hakaida drives up beside Ichiro, and tells him something about the Gorilla. They stop. Hakaida points, Ichiro looks down a cliff to see Bijinda with Mini-Gorilla. Hakaida pushes Ichiro down the cliff. Ichiro picks himself up. I don't know what Bijinda or Mini-Gorilla say to Ichiro.

Back at Shadow Crime Syndicate headquarters Big Shadow seems to be pleased with Hakaida's actions.

Bijinda teaches Mini-Gorilla how to fight. Her teaching is very rough, she picks him up and throws him down several times. Then she throws hand grenades at him. After the training she physically convert Mini-Gorilla into Big Gorilla.

01 is attacked by several Shadowmen, which he easily destroys. Big Gorilla appears and after talking to 01 has more Shadowmen attack. Big Gorilla starts hitting 01. Bijinda appears and tries to remind Big Gorilla of when he was Mini-Gorilla and how they were friends. It might have worked but Hakaida appears to remind Big Gorilla he was designed to destroy 01. Big Gorilla knocks Bijinda down and steps on her. 01 fighting Shadowmen again sees Bijinda's in trouble and using "01 Kick" causes Big Gorilla to lose his balance and fall off Bijinda. 01 helps Bijinda up. Big Gorilla attacks 01, after hitting him a bit he switches to shooting at 01 with his bazooka machine gun. 01's left arm falls off. Now 01 cannot use "Blast End". 01 tries "01 Cut" twice and "01 Kick" but they have little effect. Bijinda kicks Big Gorilla then uses "Bijinda Laser" to destroy him. Hakaida disappears in a puff of smoke. 01 tries to thank Bijinda but she's upset that she had to destroy her friend. Bijinda walks away. Ichiro, both arms attacked watches her.

1 - 34 THE ENCHANTED BIG CLOCK - BIJINDA DANGER

Misao, Hiroshi and Akira are asleep on a park bench, across from a bird shaped clock. Misao wakes up. The clock explodes. Later Hiroshi and Akira wake up and find Misao still sleeping. When they wake her she jumps up alarmed. Apparently she tells them about the exploding clock. The boys don't seem to believe her. When she turns and looks where the clock stood, it's still there, no burn marks or anything. The bird's eye glows. A white lightning like beam strikes Misao's watch. Misao hits Hiroshi and Akira then apparently denies doing it. She hits them again.

A bunch of people are walking, probably on the way to work. The clock's beam flashes again and the people go crazy, they start hitting each other.

A group of boys are showing each other their watches. One boy doesn't have a watch. He walks off alone.

The clock flashes its beam. People riding a bus start assaulting each other.

Ichiro walks into a crazed crowd and tries to stop the fighting. He fails.

A news program shows scenes of the violence. Watching it, Big Shadow laughs.

The watchless boy looks at watches in the window of a store. He looks around, when he sees no one is looking he picks up a watch with a 35,000 yen price tag (around $350.00 today I don't know what that would have been in 1974), obviously planning to take it. A rose falls on his hand. He drops the watch and runs when Mari walks up. The store owner comes and picks up the watch. Mari goes in the shop with him. When he goes into a back room the viewer hears harp music and a bunch of flowers appearing on the ground, Bijinda comes up out of the ground. When the shop owner returns Mari is gone and at first his clocks seem to have stopped working, but they start up again.

Mari finds the boy and hands him a watch. Since I know very little Japanese I don't know what Mari and the store owner said to each other, it's possible he gave the watch to her for some reason, or she stole it.

The boy finds his classmates to show them his new watch. The clock flashes its beam, the boys attack each other.

Watching the boys fight on his monitor screen, Big Shadow enjoys the scene.

Mari appears and takes the watch off the boys wrists. They boys stop fighting. A group of women appear, one strikes Mari. The women grab Mari. Zadam, at Shadow headquarters, crosses his tridents and says "switch on". Mari clutches her chest in pain and breaks away from the women. These foolish women seem to think Mari's pain is amusing. The boy Mari gave the watch to tries to help her. Inchiro drives up. Explosions start going off. No it's not the bomb in Mari, it's Gill Hakaida shooting Hakaida. Ichiro fights Shadowmen. Still in pain Mari does to, protecting the children and the foolish women. Hakaida knocks Mari down. She gets back up. Hakaida holds his gun on Mari. Ichiro transforms into Kikaida-01 and spoils Hakaida's aim. 01 and Hakaida trade punches. For once Hakaida gets in a good blow, knocking 01 out of the way. Hakaida shoots Mari in the arm and legs but she seems to take no damage, her clothes are burnt that's all. 01 hits Hakaida knocking him into the air.

Ichiro and Mari walk, discussing what's been going on. Ichiro is certain the Shadow is behind it somehow. Misao and Akira are walking, eating apples. When Misao sees Ichiro and Mari across the way she seems jealous. When Ichiro drives off Misao stands the road in what she must think is an attractive pose, but Ichiro doesn't even notice.

Ichiro stops Double Machine by the bird shaped clock, dismounts and without transforming into 01, gives the clock a "01 Cut". The clock becomes Lunatic Bat. The monster says "Cuckoo" something and sparks fly at Ichiro. When the smoke clears Lunatic Bat is gone. At Shadow headquarters Lunatic Bat promises to get Bijinda. A light in the middle of the dial on its chest begins to flash. Inside another dial spins to 130.

Mari is taking a walk (something she does a lot). She stops by a lake, and after looking at her reflection in the water transforms into Bijinda. Mari always seems sad knowing she's not really human. Lunatic Bat appears in the woods behind Bijinda. The dial inside his chest is now at 150, but it starts moving down, quickly towards 0. Just before it reaches 0 Ichiro's trumpet is heard. Bijinda turns towards the sound. This apparently ruins Lunatic Bat plans. This is another story where not knowing Japanese makes it difficult to follow what's going on. I have no idea what this scene with the Lunatic Bat is all about. It was probably explained in the dialogue between Big Shadow and Lunatic Bat. 01 appears and so do a bunch of Shadowmen. After 01 destroys the Shadowmen, Lunatic Bat attacks. Lunatic Bat grabs 01's hands in his vice like hands. 01 turns and kicks Lunatic Bat in the chest. Lunatic Bat falls and the bong of clock is heard. Lunatic Bat gets up and sprays sparks out of its mouth. 01 uses "01 Cut" twice, followed immediately by "01 Driver" and "Blast End".

The boy Mari gave the watch finds her by the lake. He thanks her, but returns the watch.

Ichiro rides Double Machine, Akira in the sidecar. Hakaida watches and says something about 01 and Bijinda, probleming threatening to destroy them.

Note: the monster in this story looks more like a cuckoo bird than a bat. I'm not certain my translator got the name (Lunatic Bat) right.

This story starts at night. A kimono and a wig fly around. A woman driving a car sees them and stops. When she sees the kimono hanging in a window blowing in the wind she apparently thinks that's what she saw and relaxes.

Big Shadow is watching a recording of 01 destroying his robot monsters again. It makes him so angry he blows up the screen. Zadam says something about Halaida. Hakaida comes in followed by a kimono, a long strip of cloth and wig on a stand. Zadam isn't impressed until the cloth and wig attack him. Big Shadow laughs.

A woman is trying on her new kimono when the wig flies into the air and on to her head. The cloth they wear around the middle wraps itself on her. The woman grabs a shotgun from off the wall and start shooting.

Misao is carrying some helium balloons. The balloons explode, shot by the woman with the shotgun who has left her house. The police arrive but clearly don't want to have to shoot the woman. Ichiro appears and takes the gun away from her, knocking her down, the wig falls off her head. Some one screams. A crowd comes running, a woman with a knife is chasing them. Ichiro takes the knife away from the woman and pulls a wig off her head. She doesn't seem to know where she is at or what she's doing. When Ichiro tells her, she doesn't believe him. She walks away laughing.

A woman is looking at a kimono in a store. A boy looks in the window before meeting his sister at her job at store that appears to sell baked goods and boxes of foodstuff. The boy loads what looks like some sort of pastry onto the back of a bicycle and rides off to sell them to other children. He comes accross Mari sitting alone on a bench. He offers her his last pastry. She politely declines his offer. He tells Mari of his wish to buy his sister a kimono, before returning to the store to hand over the money. The man at the store keeps the bills but gives the boy a handful of change. The boy thanks the man before leaving to sell newspapers.

A woman is shopping for a kimono. The boy looks in a bit than leaves.

Later the boy is throwing rocks into a pond.

A young woman is in the dress shop. She suddenly sees the kimono she wanted flying away. She and several other people run out of the shop after it. Bijinda appears, grabs the kimono, throws it back into the air and destroys it with her "Bijinda Laser". The ungrateful crowd doesn't appreciate that Bijinda just saved them. Bijinda walks away dejected.

Mari is standing in the rain. The boy who wants the kimono for his sister brings Mari an umbrella.

The boy takes his bank to the dress shop and dumps out all his coins. He also has several bills in his hands, but the man won't sell him the kimono. I don't know why, maybe he didn't have enough money. The boy leaves the shop, head down. He's getting wet but doesn't seem to notice. A woman carrying a black umbrells and a purple bundle stops the boy. She hands him the bundle, he gives her his money. Once the boy is gone the woman becomes Gill Hakaida. Hakaida laughs.

Running up some steps, the boy drops the bundle. The bundle flies into the air. Chasing afte the bundle, the boy falls into a river. Misao arrives and tries to pull him out. Bijinda appears, grabs the bundle and pulls the boy out of the river. Misao fills the boys forehead, and finds that he's got a fever. The boy is taken home and put to bed.

Misao opens the bundle. Inside is a kimono and a wig. The boys sister holds the dress and looks in a mirror. Not understand what she says I don't know why she overs the Kimono to Misao and then when Misao hesitates, to Mari. Mari doesn't seem to know what to do. Misao tells her to undress. Mari starts to undo her buttons. Misao holds the kimono for Mari. Watching, at Shadow headquarters, Big Shadow laughs, because unbuttoning the third button will cause Bijinda to explode. Just in time Ichiro enters the room and tells the women the kimono is a Shadow robot. Misao throws the kimono down. Ichiro picks up the kimono, sash and wig, throwing them out of the room. They float and arrange themselves as if on some one. Laughter is heard. Kimono Poison Fang appears and introduces itself before jumping out of the house. Ichiro follows.

Shadowmen appear. Ichiro destroys them. Two more Poison Fang robots, not wearing kimonos, join the original. Kimono Poison Fang knocks Ichiro down a hill. He's incircled by fire. As the Poison Fang robots twirl their red hair the flames burn higher. Ichiro summersaults away from the flames and transforms into Kikaida-01. When the Poison Fang robots try to aim the flames at 01, 01 jumps into the air and uses "Blast End" on them.

Hakaida appears to challenge 01. The two slowly move closer to each other like gunfighters in an old American western (though only Hakaida carries a gun). Hakaida draws Hakaida Shot but 01 knocks it out of his hand. The two exchange punches and kicks. Bijinda appears. As 01 tries to use "Blast End" on Hakaida, Bijinda, probably thinking she's helping, uses "Bijinda Laser". The two weapons don't mix, instead they throw each other off. The destructive energies hit the ground instead of Hakaida. Standing on a ledge Hakaida laughs, curses 01 then vanishes. Misao appear in the distance. Seeing 01 and Bijinda shaking hands she starts to powder her face so she'll look nicer for 01, but the two androids vanish.

Ichiro says goodbye to the boy who wanted the kimono and drives off. His sidecar is empty! Bijinda walks by the water. Zadam makes threats against 01 and Bijinda.

This is the second episode in which neither Akira nor Hiroshi appear.

1 - 36 MYSTERY OF THE FOURTH DIMENSION - TIME TRAVEL OF FEAR

Misao enters a building then tries to open a locked door inside the building. Just as she gives up the door opens and Misao is sucked in.

Private Detective Hattori Hanpei enters the same building, dressed like Sherlock Holmes, and carrying a magnifying glass. The door opens and he is sucked in.

Inchiro and Bijinda enter the building. This mysterious door now has the symbol of the Shadow Crime Syndicate on it! Bijinda reaches for the door, but Ichiro stops her. Inchiro raises his hands to his forehead as if he's going to transform, but he does not, instead he is able to see through the door into a multi-colored spirally corridor.

Misao finds herself standing outside, in the dark. A pair of wooden doors slam shut behind her. Misao pinches herself to see if she's dreaming. She isn't.

Three young men dressed like ancient samurai are attacked and killed by a group of ninja. Misao stumbles upon two of the bodies.

Hanpei finds himself outside, in the dark. He bumps into a dead body.

Meanwhile, at Shadow Crime Syndicate headquarters Big Shadow and Zadam are discussing their Time Tunnel and the Shadow Ninja Corps. A control pannel shows the year as being 1974 then changes to 1780. On the viewing screen a cemetery. The year changes to 1734. On the viewing screen a young boy then two men, apparently 18th century scientists. The year changes to 1776. A man dressed like a samurai demonstrates his invention of a hand-cracked electric generate to a nobleman. When two men are shocked by it the nobleman dismisses the inventor.

Gill Hakaida drives White Crow into the building with the Time Tunnel. He sends four Shadowmen into the Time Tunnel then drives in after them. Ichiro and Bijinda watch from outside. With Bijinda in Double Machine's sidecar, Ichiro drives into the Time Tunnel after Hakaida.

Back at Shadow headquarters, Big Shadow is upset that "01" has entered the tunnel (he never uses Ichiro's name).

Misao and Hanpei run into each other, literally. They pick themselves up. Hanpei tries to put his arms around Misao but she sees Ichiro and Mari and runs up to them. Ichiro is very glad to have found Misao. Hanpei comes over and mistakes Ichiro for his younger brother Jiro. Realizing his mistake, Hanpei introduces himself to Ichiro, who I think said "you know Jiro?" Ichiro informs Hanpei and Misao about the Shadow's Time Tunnel. Misao faints. When she comes to everyone notices that Mari has disappeared.

Mari wonders the town, seeming to enjoy this simpler time, not noticing the many bodies on the ground.

Ichiro, Hanpei and Misao find the bodies.

Two young samurai are attacked by four ninja. When Ichiro appears, playing his trumpet, the ninja vanish.

The inventor and a young boy talk. The inventor seems upset that the Shogun did not appreciate his invention. I'm not entirely certain but I think this man is supposed to be Hanpei's real ancestor (rather than the great warrior he claims to be descended from).

The two samurai, Misao and Henpai meet the young boy who runs away from them. Five ninja appear to attack the boy. Exploding arrows land at the feet of two of the ninja. Bininda looks down at them from a roof top, her harp in her hand. Bijinda puts the harp on her back and jumps off the roof to battle the ninja.

When she uses Bijinda Laser two of the ninjas turn into Shadowmen before exploding.

Gill Hakaida fires a shot at ground in front of the inventor then grabs the boy. When Ichiro appears Hakaida lets go of the boy. Bijinda appears. As Bijinda fights Shadowmen, Ichiro fights Hakaida. When Hakaida drives away on White Crow, Double Machine falls out of the sky, with Kikaida-01 riding it.

Hakaida drives into the time tunnel. He laughs. The door closes behind him. Misao, Hanpei, the two young samurai, the inventor and the boy stand outside the door. Ichiro arrives but can't open the door either. Hanpei tries one of his ninja tricks but it doesn't work. The inventor takes a pin from Misao's hair and picks the lock. The doors now open for Misao. Misao and Hanpei slip through the doors. Ichiro drives in. Bijinda hangs back seeming to not want to leave this time. Ichiro says something to her and she too steps through the doors. The four humans from this time period say goodbye as the doors close.

After everyone has passed through the Time Tunnel safely Bijinda uses Bijinda Laser to destroy it.

This is the third episode in which neither Akira nor Hiroshi appear.

1 - 37 THE GREAT SWORDSMAN - IN THE MIDST OF FOG HE CAME WARUDA

After being absent for two episodes Akira and Hiroshi are back.

Misao is walking through a foggy park searching for Hiroshi and Akira. She calls their names. She hears them calling for help but cannot see them. Suddenly she sees a figure dressed in black. The figure turns. His face and hands are covered in white bandages. Hiroshi and Akira are tied to a jungle gym. When the man points at them spears pierce their young bodies. Misao screams and wakes up.

Misao is relieved it was just a dream until she sees she is alone in the bed, the boys are not beside her as they should be. Misao goes to the park. She finds bandages on the ground. And a jacket. When the jacket starts to move across the ground Misao faints. She's awoken by the puppy which crawled out from under the jacket. Hiroshi and Akira arrive. Hiroshi has another dog. Akira is holding a bottle of milk, apparently for the puppy. The puppy has a bandage on one leg.

At Shadow Crime Syndicate headquarters Gill Hakaida is angered at being assigned to hunting down and killing dogs. The Destroyer reduced to killing dogs, because the Shadow's newest jinzo ningen (artificial human), Waruda, suffers from cynophobia, the unreasonable fear of dogs. As he kills dogs Hakaida curses Big Shadow. While Hakaida gives orders to a group of Shadowmen he spots Double Machine. When Ichiro arrives he destroys the Shadowmen and knocks Hakaida down with a flying kick. Hakaida gets up, the two warriors circle each other. The sound of a wooden flute is heard. Out of the fog steps the samurai Waruda ("waru(i)" is Japanese for "bad", "evil" or "sinful"). Hakaida points at Ichiro and calls him "01". Waruda looks at Ichiro. Hakaida tells him Ichiro changes into 01. Ichiro just stands there. Waruda walks back into the fog then drives away on his motorcycle.

Hakaida attacks uses his Guillotine attack on Ichiro. Ichiro's shoulder is damaged. Hakaida pulls Hakaida Shot but before he can fire the sound of a harp is heard. Hakaida says "Bijinda". With the harp a guitar is heard. Hakaida leaves. Out of the fog steps Hattori Hanpei, carrying both a harp and a guitar. Hanpei announces this was his "encore" performance. In case you've forgotten Hanpei had three performances in Kikaida, playing a guitar like Jiro's. Ichiro thanks Hanpei, who holds his hand out asking for money. Ichiro takes Hanpai's hand and pulls Hanpei to the ground.

Back at Shadow headquarters, Hakaida, Waruda and Big Shadow have a discussion. I don't know what they say but when Waruda leaves Hakaida follows and challenges him to a duel. From behind the trees Bijinda watches the short battle. Waruda easily disarms and defeats Hakaida.

Now outside himself, Big Shadow sends Waruda after 01. Bijinda follows Waruda.

Hanpei riding a bicycle swerves to miss a dog and runs into Misao instead. He tries to charm Misao by telling her she's "bijinda" (pretty or beautiful).

Hakaida comes across the puppy with the bandaged leg, it was the dog Hanpei almost ran into.

Misao and Hanpei find Hiroshi and Akira. Hanpei shows them a small collar he found, apparently it belonged to the puppy. Misao tells Akira that Hakaida got his puppy. In sorrow and anger Akira beats on Misao, the bringer of bad news while Hanpei cries like a puppy. This is the last time Hattori Hanpei is seen.

Hakaida and Mari meet in a field. Hakaida addresses her as "Bijinda". The villains never refer to the heroes by their "human" names. Hakaida pulls Hakaida Shot but doesn't fire. As Mari and Hakaida pace each other Hiroshi appears to threaten Hakaid with a large branch. Before Hakaida can shoot either Haroshi or Mari a chain wraps itself around his gun arm. Waruda has appeared. Apparently even an evil samurai cannot stand by and let a woman and child be harmed. When Akira arrives with the other dog, Waruda is paralyzed with fear. Hakaida retrieves his gun and shoots at Waruda. Mari transforms into Bijinda. Hakaida picks up the dog and leaves. Bijinda tries to comfort Waruda. Waruda mounts his red motorcycle and drives off. Bijinda walks through the woods, talking to herself.

Waruda and 01 finally meet, on top of a cliff. 01 knocks Waruda over with a kick. Waruda stands and fires his chain weapon at 01, wrapping the chain around 01's right hand. When Waruda tries to use his sword on 01, 01 holds his arm up so the sword severs the chain. Hakaida arrives with one of the dogs. Waruda can't look at it. Waruda fires explosive shells at 01. Just as 01 uses "01 Kick" on Waruda Bijinda appears. 01 tries to use "Blast End" on Waruda but Bijinda uses "Bijinda Laser" to disrupt it. 01 falls off the cliff. Bijinda jumps down and looks for 01. When she can't find him she starts to cry. Ichiro appears and forgives her. Bijinda hugs him. Ichiro and Bijinda walk off together. Waruda rides away on his red motorcycle. Hakaida watches from the cliff top.

Mari walks alone. Ichiro drives away on Double Machine with Akira in the sidecar. Still on the cliff top, Hakaida curses 01 and Bijinda.

1 - 38 THE SURE-DEATH DEVICE - THREE-CORNERED BLOOD MATCH!

Standing on a high place (where else) Ichiro sees, in the distance, Waruda riding his red motorcycle. Ichiro jumps landing on Double Machine. He drives after Waruda.

Mari walking alone in the woods (where else) bends down by a lake. When she stands up again Waruda is there. Mari backs away, taking a fighting stance. Waruda simply holds out a letter. He addresses her as "Bijinda". When Ichiro steps out from behind some trees Waruda address him as "01". The villains never refer to the heroes by their "human" names. When Waruda attacks Ichiro, Mari steps in between the warriors. I'm not sure but I think she threatend not to read the letter if Waruda kept fighting. In any case, Waruda stops the fight, and bowing to Mari, walks away.

Mari reads the letter. As a flash back to the battle at the end of the previous episode is seen Waruda's voice is heard. Since I know very little Japanese I don't know what is said in Waruda's letter.

An arrow lands at Waruda's feet. A note is attached to it. As Waruda reads the note Mari's voice is heard. Harp music plays in the background. Even when Waruda finishes the letter the harp music plays on. This begins an exchanges of letters between Mari and Waruda, could they be love letters? Waruda and Mari/Bijinda both seem fascinated with each others.

Meanwhile, a mailman on a bicycle arrives at work late only to find the building boarded up. When he looks in a window he sees skeletons!

Elsewhere the ground breaks open, a building comes up from underground. Out of the building comes three Shadowmen wearing uniforms. Their faces become that of humans. They ride off on bicycles. More fake mailmen come out of the building. From Shadow Crime Syndicate headquarters Big Shadow, Zadam and Gill Hakaida watch. The fake mailmen throw letters into mailboxes.

Misao, Hiroshi and Akira are by the lake when a man and a woman walk by. Both are carrying letters and are angry. The woman strikes the man then walks away. The man goes after her. All over town people are getting into arguments with each other because of letters they received. When one of the fake mailmen sees Ichiro on Double Machine he rides away, incredibly fast for a bicycle. Ichiro seeing this suspicious behavior rides after him. Ichiro is attacked by several mailmen who throw exploding letters at him. Bijinda appears and destroys the Shadowmailmen.

At the phoney postoffice the fake mailmen collect letters, they find one with Waruda and Bijinda's names on it. This gives Gill Hakaida an idea.

An angry mob chases the lone real mailman and a girl. Misao sees them fleeing and hides them from the mob. Misao, Hiroshi, Akira, the mailman and the girl follow two fake mailmen to their post office. As the woman, man, and three children watch the mailmen turn into Shadowmen and enter the building. When the building sinks into the ground the humans flee but are chased by mailmen with exploding letters. Ichiro's trumpet is heard. Ichiro jumps down and puts out the fire that surrounded the two adults and three children. The Shadowmailmen throw letters at Ichiro. Ichiro is surrounded by flames but he puts out this fire too. More Shadowmailmen arrive on bicycles equiped with small cannons. After firing a few shots at Ichiro they try to run him down. Ichiro transforms into Kikaida-01. They through burning bicycle tires at 01 and transform into regular Shadowmen, carrying their lighting bolt shapped weapons. The Shadow Postoffice reservices. Shadowmen inside fire cannons at the humans. 01 uses "Blast Attack", a smaller version of "Blast End" to destroy the Shadowmen. Hakaida standing by a window curses 01. 01 uses "Blast End" on the building, destroying it. As Ichiro and the humans stand by the smoking remains of the Shadow Postoffice a metal star just missing Ichiro hits a burntup beam. A note is attached to it. The note is apparently from Waruda, challenging 01.

Mari standing by a tree reads a letter.

At Shadow Crime Syndicate headquarters Waruda informs Big Shadow that he has received a letter from 01 asking him to meet for combat. After Waruda leaves Big Shadow congratulates Hakaida. Hakaida laughs and takes a bow.

Ichiro stands by Double Machine. Waruda rides up. The two face each other. Hakaida watches the two warriors. When it looks like Waruda may have defeated Ichiro Hakaida says "die 01". Ichiro breaks free of Waruda's chains however and transforms into Kikaida 01 then uses "01 Kick" on Waruda, knocking him down. Waruda gets up and fires on 01. 01 uses "01 Chop" on Waruda. Suddenly Bijinda appears, landing between Waruda and 01. She tells them Hakaida sent the letters. Hakaida curses Bijinda. Bijinda kicks Hakaida down. She grabs him by one arm. Hakaida breaks free and draws Hakaida Shot but Bijinda kicks it out of his hand. With his back against a tree, a three opponents in front of him Hakaida has no choice but to retreat, he vanishes in a puff of smoke. Waruda talks briefly to 01, turns to walk away. He stops, turns and talks to Bijinda when he's finished he bows, turns and walks away.

Alone by the lake, Mari burns Waruda's letters.

Ichiro rides Double Machine, this time the sidecar is empty. Hakaida watches Ichiro.

1 - 39 THE RIVAL SPACEMEN COME BY FLYING SAUCER

It's night time. A flying saucer hovers over a Japanese city and bombs it. Ichiro drives up on Double Machine and despite the fact that it is night transforms into Kikaida-01. Perhaps there was enough light from the fires caused by the bombs. 01 tries "Blast Power" on the saucer (energy waves shoot out of his hands) but it doesn't seem to have any effect. 01 jumps into the air shouting "Blast End". The saucer fires upon him.

A boy carrying a briefcase and his sister find Ichiro lying in the street, his clothes are burnt, he holds his right knee as if it hurts. They take him home.

Three boys walking home from school see a flying saucer head into the woods. They go into the woods looking for it. Two men in silver exit the saucer, they speak in high pitched voices. The boys hide behind trees, one of them drops a book. The Spacemen hear the noise and fire a freeze ray at a tree. He adjusts the weapon and fires a reddish brown mist which causes the tree to dissolve.

The next day the boy who found Ichiro goes into the woods and sees the saucer. The other three boys see the Spacemen and running away from them meet Waruda. Probably thinking he's another Spaceman fall at his feet. Later the boy who found Ichiro meets Waruda too. When this boy finds the equipment the Spacemen had been setting up on the playground, the Spacemen freeze him. Watching the boy get frozen, from Shadow Murder Force headquarters Big Shadow laughs.

Just as one of the Spacemen is about to spray the boy with the dissolving mist harp music is heard. A circle of flowers appears. Bijinda rises up through the flowers to drive the Spacemen away.

Ichiro, his clothes now undamaged, is riding Double Machine. When Waruda's motorcycle cuts off Double Machine, Ichiro goes flying. Ichiro recovers and lands safely, only to be attacked by Waruda. I don't know what Ichiro says to Waruda but .

Waruda comes upon Mari who's taking care of the frozen boy. Waruda kneels beside her. Waruda talks to Bijinda then leaves.

The three boys who saw their classmate frozen are walking down a street. When their classmate's sister comes up to them they try to avoid talking to her. Suddenly they turn and walk off, but stop when Waruda rides up. Waruda and the three boys head into the woods (probably the same park as from several previous episodes). Waruda sends the boys ahead, they're caught by the Spacemen and frozen. Waruda stops the Spacemen from dissolving the boys.

Mari and Ichiro are tending to the first frozen boy. Ichiro asks Mari to link with him to create "Blast Laser" a weapon he hopes will destroy the flying saucer. Mari nods agreement.

Waruda is about to draw his sword on the Spacemen when Gill Hakaida arrives and gives them orders from Big Shadow. They leave. Hakaida and Waruda talk. I don't know what they say but Waruda kneels by the frozen boys and wipes his eyes (as if he's crying). Hakaida shoots Waruda in the back twice. Waruda falls. When Hakaida tries to leave Waruda rises and shoots his chain weapon which raps itself around Hakaida's leg. Waruda toses Hakaida around a bit. When Hakaida tries to draw Hakaida Shot, Waruda fires his mortar at him. Finally Hakaida is able to draw Hakaida Shot but Waruda uses his sword to knock the gun out of Hakaida's hand.

Meanwhile, Ichiro drives Mari to where the saucer is parked. When the Spacemen aim their freeze guns at Ichiro and Mari, the two heroes jump into the air and transform. 01 and Bijinda kick the guns out of the Spacemens' hands and fight them hand to hand. 01 and Bijinda knock the two Spacemen down hill, into each other. The Spacemen explode. The saucer takes off by itself. 01 swears. The saucer tries to bomb 01 and Bijinda, misses. Comes back for another try, misses. Tries a third time, misses. Lands, fires upon them from the ground. Waruda speeds his motorcycle towards the saucer. There is an explosion. The saucer takes off. 01 and Bijinda move towards where the saucer had been, 01 calling "Waruda Waruda ." The saucer again tries to bomb them. 01 and Bijinda jump into the air, linking arms. With one arm on each other shoulders they point their free arms at the saucer and shoot "Blast Laser". Waves of energy spring from their finger tips. The saucer is destroyed.

All four frozen boys unfreeze.

Waruda's smoking body lies on the ground. 01 and Bijinda lift Waruda up. He pulls away from the them and walks away. Bijinda calls his name. He turns, silently glances at her, turns and walks away, obviously hurt.

Ichiro watches the four boys and one girl walk away together. He smiles then drives off, alone.

This is the fourth episode in which Hiroshi and Akira do not appear. Misao is not in it either.

1 - 40 ESCAPE! THE FROZEN BIJINDA HANGS BY A THREAD

A construction crew has been enslaved by the Shadow Crime Syndicate. A boy and a girl come to the construction site looking for their father. The picture they show is of one of the men working underground, but they are told he isn't there and are sent away by a Shadowman disguised as a worker. At Shadow headquarters Gill Hakaida and Big Shadow are looking over the plans for the new base. They're interrupted by a radio message informing them that the workers have revolted. Hakaida is sent to stop the revolt.

The construction workers have gotten hold of boxes containg dynamite. Some of the men are killed by Hakaida Shot.

Watching from his base, Big Shadow sees Ichiro on his monitor, heading towards the construction site. He sends Zadam to stop Ichiro.

Zadam crosses his twin tridents. The ground opens up underneath Double Machine, it falls. Ichiro transforms into Kikaida-01. After several episode were the transformation is the short version, no solar collector, this episode shows the solar collector. Double Machine bursts threw a mountainside.

Hakaida shoots a construction worker. Another worker, afraid, grabs the box of dynamite and carries it to Hakaida. Waruda talks harshly to the man then tries to kick him but Hakaida stops him. My guess is Waruda was angry at the man's cowardice and betrayal of his own, even if it did help Waruda's side.

The boy and girl who were looking for their father are out on the street. It is snowing lightly. They try to keep warm by lighting matches. Mari finds them and gives them her coat. The children share it, keeping warm while Mari freezes. In the morning Misao finds the children and Mari. The children wake but Mari is unresponsive. When Misao touches Mari she finds her cold to the touch. Waruda pulls up on his motorcycle. Misao pushes the children back, standing protectively in front of them. Waruda picks up Bijinda and drives off with her. Ichiro drives up. Misao sends him after Waruda.

Misao and the two children are sitting on a park bench. A wounded man falls at their feet. He gets up and runs away. He's soon caught by a group of Shadowmen. They knock him out and are about to kill him when Ichiro's trumpet is heard. When he attacks them they run away.

Misao is directing traffic at the construction site. When a construction worker (actually one of the Shadowmen in disguise) tries to question her, she knocks him down. He's almost run over but Misao waves a red flag and shouts for the machine to stop. The man picks himself up.

Waruda is plugging a bunch of wires into the still frozen form of Bijinda. Gill Hakaida, Zadam and Big Shadow are watching on their monitor. Big Shadow and Hakaida have a disagreement about what to do. Big Shadow shoves Hakaida out of the way and flips a switch. Nothing seems to happen. Big Shadow curses Waruda. Waruda has removed a vacuum tube (remember those?) from Bijinda.

Misao has been taken prisoner and placed with the men. She talks with the father of the two children.

Ichiro arrives outside the construction area. The children are there. When Shadowmen disguised as workers attack, Ichiro defeats them. He fights his way into the cave where the real workers are held. One of the men plants a stick of dynamite to blast a different exit. Ichiro fights more disguised Shadowmen.

Waruda continues working on Bijinda. Ichiro finds his way into Waruda's room. He doesn't seem to believe Waruda is helping Bijinda. The two of them go outside to fight. Waruda gets his chain around Ichiro. Ichiro transforms into Kikaida-01. The chain doesn't fall off. 01 hits Waruda. Waruda shoots at 01. 01 frees himself from the chain and uses "01 Drive" against Waruda followed by "01 Cut" three times. His "01 Kick" is deflected by Bijinda. 01 is not happy but does not attack his friend, Bijinda. Bijinda helps Waruda to stand, he pushes her away (his pride is his weakness) and staggers off. 01 does not try to stop him.

The construction workers are finally free. Father, son and daughter are reunited. Ichiro rides away, alone. Bijinda walks away, alone.

1 - 41 MATCHLESS IN ALL THE LAND - THE MIDAIR BATTLESHIP BLAST!!

An explosion at sea, a ship comes up out of the water. This ship has on its bottom a giant fan which generates an artificial tornado. The ship also fires lightning like rays. At Shadow Crime Syndicate headquarters Big Shadow and Zadam watch the ship on their monitor screen. Big Shadow responds to the destruction it causes with the English phrase "very good, wonderful".

The Shadow Men operating the Battleship lose control, one falls out. It nearly lands on Hiroshi and Akira, who move out of the way just in time. The Shadow Man explodes. Ichiro drives up on Double Machine. Ichiro examines the remains of the Shadow Man. Then drives off.

At Shadow headquarters Big Shadow is not pleased at the Battleship going out of control. Zadam introduces the ship's new pilot, Satan.

The ship is generating a small white tornado. Mari sees it, she looks concerned. The wind turns over a flowercart. Three more Shadow Men fall out of the ship. Two hit the ground, exploding. The third is caught by Mari who hurls it to the ground. It explodes. Mari helps the teenage girl who was pushing the flowercart to upright it then moves on. Hiroshi and Akira not watching where they are going, run into the flowercart, knocking it over.

The ship is now flying over a flower garden. A girl tries to save the flowers. Another Shadow Man falls out, and is destroyed by Waruda. Waruda and the girl meet and seem to become friends. Waruda rides off on Waruda Machine.

Ichiro is riding down the road when he's cut off by Waruda. Ichiro jumps off Double Machine. Waruda attacks him. After dodging Waruda's sword, Ichiro transforms into Kikaida-01. The battle is cut short by the Battleship. The two enemies are cut in its winds.

At Shadow Headquarters, Satan introduces his new crew, all human, to Big Shadow. The crew boards the ship.

The three children are pushing the flower cart. Hiroshi and Akira leave it when they see Ichiro laying still on the ground, next to an unmoving Waruda. Akira picks up Waruda's weapon and hits Waruda with it. Akira is pushed aside by the girl from the flower garden. After picking himself up, Akira moves towards the girl as if to hit her, Hiroshi stops him.

The two androids have been moved indoors. While Hiroshi and Akira tend to Ichiro the young girl puts a wet cloth on Waruda's forehead. Although Waruda stirs first it's 01 that comes fully awake first. The young girl asks Ichiro something about a "robot". He nods. She goes to the garden to collect pieces from the smashed Shadow Man.

Monitoring the situation, Big Shadow sends Satan after the girl. Ichiro hears the girl's cries for help and races outside to take her away from Satan but before he can do anything else Waruda appears. The girl runs to Waruda but he pushes her aside. Waruda attacks Ichiro. As Waruda tries to hit Ichiro with his sword there is an explosion. Gill Hakaida appears. Before he can fire on Waruda again Bijinda appears and with "Bijinda Kick" knocks the gun out of Hakaida's hand. But Hakaida has done his job. With Ichiro distracted by Waruda and Bijinda distracted by Hakaida, Satan is able to grab the girl. Hakaida laughs and vanishes. Satan flies away with the girl. Bijinda uses her harp to fire an arrow at Satan. The arrow hits his hand, he drops the part from the Shadow Man. Bijinda catches it. Bijinda, Ichiro and Waruda stand there watching helplessly as Satan gets away with the girl. The teenag girl (apparently the other girl's sister) berates Waruda for allowing this to happen. Waruda falls to the ground, greaving. Ichiro takes the part from Bijinda and opening his chest places it inside. It turns out this piece from the Shadow Man contains the plans for the Battleship.

Kikaida-01 is riding Double Machine with Bijinda beside him on her motorcycle, Bijinda Machine. The Battleship attacks, using its wind power to cause 01 and Bijinda to crash their motorcycles. 01 and Bijinda using rockets in their feet fly after the Battleship. When they burst in Satan throws a switch causes a hidden door to open under his crew and the girl he abducted, they fall out of the ship. 01 and Bijinda knock Satan out of the way. Then saying "01 Net" 01 turns a knob on his belt. A net wraps around the falling humans, parachutes appear on the net. Waruda jumps into the air, drawing his sword. He hits the falling Satan, Satan explodes. The girl thanks Waurda. Outside the ship, apparently in midair, 01 and Bijinda link to use "Blast Laser" to destroy the Battleship.

Mari walks through the woods, holding her shoulder, apparently wounded! She falls. She picks herself up and continues walking, unsteadily and still holding her shoulder. Ichiro drives away on Double Machine, unaware that Mari is hurt, or that he is being watched by Zadam.

1 - 42 COMRADE ATTACK - THE FLAME THROWING SHADOW-FIGURE GUN

A group of children are playing. Misao, Hiroshi and Akira are asleep. They wake up to see the children at play. A bright light flashes. The kids shadows come to life. The kids run away. One of the kids, a boy named Takeshi, runs home and tries to tell his mother but she doesn't listen to him, she's only interested in a note he handed her. Bad grades? Meanwhile the Shadows are attacking people, spraying a black gas from their fingers.

At Shadow Crime Syndicate Headquarters, Zadam shows Big Shadow how the Shadow Figure Gun works by using it on a Shadow Man. Big Shadow replies in English "wonderful". The Shadow Figure destroys several Shadow Men before fading away. When Zadam promises the Shadow Figure Robots can destroy 01 and Bijinda, Big Shadow replies in english "very good."

Risao, Hiroshi and Akira are attacked by Shadow Figure Robots. Mari appears to fight the Shadows. Takeshi appears and tries to fight the Shadow Figure Robots too but Mari pushes him out of harms way. After Mari defeats the Shadows Figure Robots, Misao, Hiroshi and Akira try to tell Takeshi's mother about the Shadow Figure Robots but she doesn't believe them either.

Ichiro gets in a fight with Shadow Figure Robots and Shadow Men. As soon as he transforms into Kikaida-01 the Shdow Figure Gun is used on him. 01 and his shadow fight. 01 is knocked down, 01 and his shadow roll around. Then standing up they continue to fight.

The Shadow Figure Gun appears outside an open window of the home of Takeshi and his mother. The Gun is used on Takeshi's mother. Takeshi grabs a bat to hit the Shadow Figure. Takeshi's mother tries to stop Takeshi but he breaks away. He tries to hit the Shadow Figure Robot but it grabs him and takes him away. Ichiro enters the room, too late to help.

Mari fights more Shadow Figure Robots and Shadow Men. Two Shadow Men explode without Mari having touched them. Gill Hakaida appears, aiming Hakaida Shot at Mari. Behind him is a jeep carrying the Shadow Figure Gun. Mari transforms into Bijinda.

Hakaida reaches to use the Shadow Figure Gun on Bijinda but is stopped by appearance of the flute playing Waruda. Hakaida uses the Gun on Waruda. I don't know why but Hakaida attacks the Shadow Figure Robot Waruda instead of the real Waruda. Having defeated Hakaida the Shadow Figure Robot Waruda uses the Gun on Bijinda. The two Binjindas fight. The Shadow Figure Robot Bjinda sends the real Bijinda flying. This upsets Waruda but before he can do anything he is attacked by his shadow. After knocking down the real Waruda the Shadow Figure Robot Waruda turns on Shadow Men. Hiroshi and Akira find Mari laying next to a pond. Ichiro repairs Mari. Misao is jealous. Misao, Hiroshi and Akira are not seen again until episode 46, the last episode.

Takeshi's mother cries over her missing son.

01 and Bijinda meet Hakaida in a quarry. Hakaida is holding Takeshi. The Shadow Figure Gun is there of course. 01 and Bijinda destroy several Shadowmen. Hakaida points Hakaida Shot at Takeshi but the gun is yanked out of his hand by Waruda's chain weapon. Waruda is apparently mad over Bijinda being attacked by her own Shadow. Hakaida whistles (his whistle sounds a lot like Professor Gill's flute). A german shephard comes running. Waruda is rendered helpless by the appearance of the dog. Hakaida makes a mistake, he uses the Shadow Figure Gun on Waruda. The Shadow Figure Robot Waruda chases the dog away. The real Waruda and the Shadow Figure Waruda fight. At first it looks like the real Waruda will lose again but then he breaks free of the chain and stabs the imposter. Hakaida flees at 01's approach. 01 uses "Blast End" on the Shadow Figure Gun. Takeshi thanks 01 before running to his mother. 01 and Bijinda turn to face Waruda. Waruda turns and walks away.

Mari walks through the woods. Ichiro drives off on Double Machine.

1 - 43 THE YOUNG MAN WHO LOVED BIJINDA

Big Shadow is angry. I'm not certain but I think he's berating Zadam for the failure of the Shadow Figure Robots. Zadam talks about the Aqualung Men, robots that come up from an underwater base. One of these robots enters the Shadow Crime Syndicate Headquarters and destroys some Shadow Men as a demonstration. When Aqualung Men appear in the city, Ichiro arrives and destroys a couple of them.

A boy is sitting, looking out to sea. Mari walks up to him. The two talk. They're interrupted by three Aqualung Men coming out of the water. Mari fights with them. The boy tries to fight too. Suddenly a man appears and fights them. This man hates robots. (He's played by Chiba, Jirô who played FBI agent Taki Kazuya in Kamen Rider and Detective Shinjô, Go in Robot Detective.) When the Aqualung Men knock him down Mari returns to the battle, driving them back into the ocean. The man gets up. Mari has damaged her hand but doesn't let him see it. The android and the man who hates robots are both infatuated with each other. When he notices her holding her hand he tries to take a look but she won't let him. Neither knows they are being watched, by Waruda, who only sees Mari and this human holding hands. The man asks Mari her name and tells him his name is Toki (I think). Toki and the boy ride off on a motorcycle. When they're gone Mari lifts her hand, revealing that the artificial skin has torn off the damaged hand.

Ichiro is still fighting Aqualung Men. He drives them back to the ocean.

At Shadow headquarters Big Shadow is not pleased. I'm not certain but I think Zadam says their energy runs low on land.

Toki and the boy are attacked by Shadow Men. The two humans are driven towards the sea. Kikaida-01 appears to drive off the Shadow Men, but instead of being grateful Toki attacks 01. Rather than hurting this misguided human, 01 mounts Double Machine and drives away. Toki mounts his motorcycle and drives after, but where 01 made a turn Toki went straight ahead.

Waruda approaches Mari on the beach. Waruda attacks Mari. Toki drives up, sees Waruda fighting Mari. He runs to her defense and is quickly knocked out cold. Waruda would have killed him but Mari transforms into Bijinda and knocks Waruda down. Waruda doesn't try to finish the battle. He probably didn't really want to hurt Bijinda, he was just overcome with jealousy for a moment. When Toki awakes he imagines he sees Mari looking down at him, but when his head clears he sees it's Bijinda, just another robot to him. He tries to punch and kick Bijinda, she knocks him back down. The boy appears calling to Toki. Toki turns to the boy to protect him from this robot. When he turns back around Bijinda is gone.

Bijinda is standing by a rocky shore, looking out to sea. Ichiro walks up behind her. They talk. Bijinda says something about "ningen" (humans) and "robottos" (robots). I don't know what exactly but she sounds sad (which is not unusual for Bijinda). Ichiro has no response.

Toki and the boy stop at a hotel where Toki puts on wet suit. They return to the beach. When Bijinda approaches Toki and Bijinda have a brief discussion about robots. Toki threatens Bijinda with a speargun. While they are fighting over the speargun a couple of Aqualung Men grab the boy and carry him into the ocean.

Toki now wearing scuba gear is underwater. He has the speargun.

Inside their underwater base the Aqualung Men and a few Shadow Men are preparing to begin some sort of surgery on the boy. Toki sneaks into the base and fires the spear into exposed wires, causing a short which turns out the lights. In the dark he takes the boy off the operating table. The lights come back on. Toki attacks the Aqualung Men. The Shadow Men grab the boy. After knocking down the Aqualung Men, Toki knocks over the Shadow Men. Laughter is heard. Gill Hakaida appears. Toki tries to hit Hakaida and is knocked down. The boy tries to hit Hakaida and is knocked down. Hakaida laughs and vanishes. The Aqualung Men and Shadow Men attack again. Toki leads the boy through the base fighting as they go. Eventually Toki is overpowered but by then 01 and Bijinda arrive. Bijinda tells Toki to take the boy and get out. He does so.

Toki and the boy are followed out of the base by two Aqualung Men but 01 grabs the robots before they get anywhere near the humans. Bininda is also outside the base fighting three Aqualung men. Suddenly twin bolts of energy (probably "Blast Laser") hit the Aqualung which explodes.

Toki and the boy are sitting around a fire on the beach. 01 and Bijinda appear. Toki seems to apologise. Bijinda looks out to sea.

Mari is walking alone. Ichiro drives off on Double Machine. Waruda appears, watching Ichiro.

1 - 44 BIJINDA'S BEAUTIFUL SAD PARTING

Gill Hakaida and several Shadow Men hijack trucks carrying fruits causing a shortage. Strange as it may seem the Shadow Crime Syndicate is able to convert the fruit into explosives.

A young boy, son of the local grocer, gets in a fight with other children when they blame his father for the high prices. Mari interrupts the fight. Toki arrives on his motorcycle. After a brief chat Mari leaves. Toki takes the boy back to his father's shop. The man tells Toki a robot has been stealing the fruit. Toki recognizes the description of Hakaida.

Toki interrupts another hijacking. Hakaida orders the Shadow Men to kill him but Toki is able to hold his own against the Shadow Men. When Toki tries to take on Hakaida he ends up tossed to the ground. Hakaida shoots all around the man before aiming straight at him, before Hakaida can fire again Kikaida-01 appears to knock Hakaida Shot out of his hand. The cyborg and the android fight. 01 sends Hakaida flying. Hakaida lands near Toki, who attacks him. Hakaida picks Toki up and hurls him. Hakaida vanishes. Bijinda appears to pick up the battered and unconscious Toki.

Bijinda has wired herself to a metal band around Toki's head.

Ichiro is talking to the grocer's son when an obviously weakened Mari walks out.

Waruda approaches Bijinda. They have a discussion about ningen (humans) and robots. Waruda challenges Bijinda. Bijinda accepts the challenge, but is knocked down by a single kick. After making sure he hasn't damaged her Waruda leaves.

Toki awakes to find himself in a room with the grocer's son. A rock comes through a window. A bunch of kids run away. Toki stops them. The kids make up.

The grocer is sitting outside by a fire when Hakaida appears. The grocer's son runs up to his father. Silent since episode 40, Ichiro's trumpet is heard now. Ichiro jumps off the roof transforming into Kikaida-01 in mid air, when he hits the ground he attacks Hakaida. Hakaida is pushed back a door, the door opens to reveal boxes of fruit. Hakaida vanishes. 01 leaves. The grocer is surprised to see the boxes but his son doesn't believe he didn't know about them and runs away. His father runs after him. From the rooftop Hakaida laughs.

The grocer finds Toki and Ichiro but not his son. The rest of this episode doesn't make sense...

The next day everyone is happy to be able to buy fruit again. The grocer's son has, without explanation, returned. Five men dressed in black appear in front of the shop. Suddenly without warning the scene changes to Toki riding his motorcycle followed by Ichiro on Double Machine, both headed towards a group of Shadow Men (apparently they were the men in black). Ichiro and Toki fight the Shadow Men. When two Shadow Men grab Toki he's saved by the sudden appearance of Mari.

The Shadow Men have now been destroyed but Hakaida pulls Hakaida Shot on Toki. Toki kicks the gun out of Hakaida's hand and the two fight. Toki is knocked down (again). Mari picks up Hakaida Shot and throws it to Toki. Hakaida jumps into the air apparently intending to land on top of Toki but instead Hakaida is shot in mid air. There's an explosion. Hakaida appears to have been destroyed by his own weapon. Toki picks himself up and looks for Mari. He can't find her.

Mari is walking alone with Toki rides up. After a brief chat Mari transforms into Bijinda says "Sayônara" to the stunned young man and jumping into the air vanishes. He calls for "Mari". Getting no response he shouts "Bjinda! Bijinda!" No answer. Mari is walking alone, this time there are no trees, just dirt.

Ichiro is riding Double Machine.

1 - 45 SAMURAI WARUDA DIES AT DAWN

Gill Hakaida stands on top of a building, with a bow in his hand. Ichiro is riding on Double Machine. Hakaida fires an arrow into Ichiro's left arm. Ichiro pulls out the arrow. A yellow liquid drips off the arrow. There is a yellow spot on Ichiro's jacket. He removes the jacket. There's a yellow spot on his shirt.

Waruda walks past several Shadow Men into the presence of Big Shadow. Zadam is standing at attention. Big Shadow is next to a rack containing several glass vials containing a yellow liquid. Big Shadow picks up a vial, sniffs it and seeming to sneeze pours the liquid on a Shadow Man. A table moves into the room. On top of the table are five katanas (curved bladed swords) in their sheaths. Big Shadow draws one. Zadam summons the Ronin Warriors. Five men dressed in black enter the room. They nod to Big Shadow. Big Shadow returns the katana to the table. Each warrior takes a katana. When they merely draw their swords the Shadow Man that had the yellow liquid sprinkled on it screams and falls apart. Ichiro is riding Double Machine. He stops. The Ronin Warriors are on a hill. They throw themselves at Ichiro. One is able to slice open Ichiro's sleeve with his Katana. Ichiro transforms into Kikaido-01. The yellow spot is seen clearly on 01's arm. One of the Ronin fans katana. The light reflecting off the blade blinds 01. The Ronin slices off 01's arm! Before the Ronin can do any further damage two have arrows land at their feet. The arrows explode, destroying the two Ronin. Bijinda appears. She tries to use "Bijinda Laser" on the three remaining Ronin but their katanas reflect it onto 01! Bijinda picks 01 up and holding onto him rockets away. One of the Ronin hurls his katana into the air. It turns so the blade points in the direction 01 went.

Mari reattaches Ichiro's arm. The yellow dot is still on his sleeve. Apparently this substance can only be erased by a certain flower. Mari knows where the flower grows and goes there.

Big Shadow and Gill Hakaido watch Mari on their monitor. Hakaido flips a switch.

Mari doubles over in pain. Waruda finds Mari. He unbuttons her top button. Big Shadow and Hakaido laugh. Waruda unbuttons the second button. Hakaido chuckles. Waruda reaches for the third button then stops to look through Mari's shirt and artificial skin. Seeing the bomb inside he curses Big Shadow. Then he punches Bijinda in the stomach, knocking her out. Big Shadow is not happy. Waruda opens himself up.

The Ronin Warriors stop. The leader hurls his Katana into the air. It turns then falls. He catches it. They continue on in the direction the blade had pointed.

Mari thanks Waruda for his help. Waruda gives Mari a Shirasaya style katana (a sword disguised as bamboo walking stick). Mari thanks Waruda and continues looking for the flower. Waruda follows.

The Ronin stop and let the katana point the way to 01 again.

Mari is at the foot of a hill looking up. The flower grows on top of the cliff. She moves towards it but Waruda stops her. Handing Mari his disguised katana he begins the climb. Boulders fall, just missing him. Twice there are small explosions from Waruda. In using his own circuits to repair Mari he has weakened himself. Waruda makes it to the top and picks one flower but there is another explosion and he falls. He picks himself up and hands Mari the flower.

Kikaido-01 is attacked by the Ronin Warriors. An arrow lands by the Ronin and explodes. They hear laughter. They look up to see Bijinda. They hear more laughter. Waruda appears beside Bijinda. When Waruda jumps towards the Ronin they disappear. Waruda watches Bijinda use the flower to erase the yellow mark from 01's arm. Bijinda tells 01 of Waruda's help. Holding his hand out to Waruda 01 says "Arigatō". Waruda draws his sword and attacks 01. I don't know what Bijinda said to him, but Waruda breaks off the attack, turns and slices the air in frustration.

Bijinda and 01 are walking together when Shadow Men attack. They destroy some. More appear. The Ronin Warriors appear. Then Waruda appears, draws his sword and attacks 01 again. While 01 fights the four swordsmen, Bijinda destroys more Shadow Men. When one of the Ronin tries to blind 01 again Bijinda throws the sword Waruda gave her to 01. 01 catches the sword and uses the blade to reflect the sunlight back into the eyes of the Ronin. 01 knocks one of the Ronin over, it explodes. He slices another with the sword and uses "01 Cut" on the third. Both Ronin fall over and explode. Now 01 turns to Waruda.

01 sticks the sword into the ground. Bijinda calls to both 01 and Waruda but this time they ignore her. For a moment 01 and Waruda just look at each other. Then 01 throws himself at Waruda. 01 manages to knock Waruda's sword into the air but in so doing is cut on his leg. As Waruda moves towards the damaged 01 his own sword falls back down, stabbing him in the back! Waruda falls. Bijinda calls out "Waruda!" Waruda explodes. Bijinda runs calling "Waruda! Waruda!" Through a flashback Bijinda remembers Waruda handing her the flower.

Mari walks through the woods alone.

Ichiro rides Double Machine.

Big Shadow says something about 01, probably a threat, then laughs.

1 - 46 THE FRIENDS OF GOOD CHILDREN - ANDROID BANZAI!

A plane flies towards the airport. One of the passengers onboard this plane is Doctor Komyoji. Doctor Komyoji takes a cab. When the cab doesn't go where he wants it to he complains to the driver. The driver transforms into Gill Hakaida.

Misao, Hiroshi and Akira walk up to a house. The sign on the gate reads "Komyoji". Misao is carrying a white envelope. Ichiro drives up. He holds up a similar envelope. A guitar is heard. Jiro is standing on top of tower covered with lights. Hiroshi says "Kikaida". Misao says "Jirosan". Ichiro smiling says "Jiro". Jiro jumps down off the tower.

The three humans and two androids are now inside. It seems like Jiro knows the Shadow Murder Force has captured Doctor Komyoji.

Hakaida and two Shadow Men take Doctor Komyoji to Big Shadow, who is standing in front of two large doors covered in the Shadow symbol. The doors open to reveal the room is taken up by a machine. Hakaida calls one of the Shadow Men forward. He blasts it with Hakaida shot. Then aiming the gun at Doctor Komyoji orders him to activate the machine. Apparently Doctor Komyoji had designed the machine when forced to work for Professor Gill. The doctor flips some switches. The parts of the Shadow Man are vacuumed up. The doctor throws three levers. The Shadow Man walks out a doorway in the machine, whole again. Big Shadow laughs. Hakaida says something about 01 and Bijinda. Big Shadow curses them.

Mari has broken into Shadow headquarters. Guns in the wall fire at her but they miss. Shadow Men attack her. She manages to drive most of them back but one is able to hit her knocking her until a wall which swings, forcing Mari into another room. One wall of this room has spikes. It starts moving towards Mari. She tries to open the spinning door she came through but it can't be opened from inside!

Two Shadow Men are jumping for joy at the thought that Mari is about to be crushed by a spiked wall, when Ichiro appears and knocks them down. He pushes on the wall. It opens. Mari comes out, just in time.

Doctor Komyoji has somehow slipped past his guards to return to the machine. Hakaida catches him doing something to it. After knocking the doctor down he hits the two Shadow Men who were supposed to be guarding the doctor. Then he blasts one. Hakaida flips the switches. When the machine works he assumes he caught Doctor Komyoji in time to stop the sabotage. (He finds out too late that he was mistaken). He hits the doctor again.

Ichiro and Mari sneaking around the base see Hakaida beating Doctor Komyoji. Hakaida takes the doctor away.

Kikaida-01 and Bijinda are standing outside. In the distance a guillotine comes up out of the ground. Doctor Komyoji is placed in the guillotine. A cable leads from the blade to four small cages where it splits into four cables.

01 and Bijinda twist their ears. Their eyes pop out of their heads, giving them the ability to see the cages. Inside each cage is a hamster pig. The hamsters each chew on their own apple. Each apple is connected to a cord which leads to the guillotine. When all four apples are gone all four cables will snap and the blade will fall. 01 and Bijinda's eyes slide back into their heads. At Hakaida's signal a bunch of Shadow Men and Zadam appear on top of the hillside.

Kikaida-01 on Double Machine and Bijinda on Bijinda Machine drive closer. They stop suddenly. They're about to continue on when Jiro appears. "Chenji suitchi on wan tsuu surii", he transforms into Kikaida. Unfortunately they don't show the whole transformation sequence. After "suri" Jiro jumps into the air and becomes Kikaida. Side Machine appears out of nowhere and the three heroes drive off on their own motorcycles.

Two cannons fire on the heroes. To make it more difficult for the Shadow they split up, each driving in a different direction. Shadow Men with machine guns fire at them. Side Machine.

Double Machine and Bijinda Machine are now armed with their own mortars which blast the Shadow Men. However, as they fall their pieces are vacuumed up! And quickly reassembled they return to battle. A counter on the machine indicates a total of 7 androids have been reassembled. The hamsters continue to nibble on the apples.

When the heroes get close enough they dismount and take part in hand to hand combat with the Shadow Men. When Hakaida draws Hakaida Shot Bijinda destroys him with "Bijinda Laser". However, he is vacuumed up, reassembled and sent back out by Big Shadow. The counter now reads 17.

The three heroes approach the guillotine but a cage comes up out of the ground surrounding 01 and Bijinda. Kikaida jumping into the air, crosses his arms and shouts "Denji Endo". The cage explodes. 01 and Bijinda are free but more Shadow Men appear. As they fight the first cable snaps. The battle continues. The second cable snaps. More Shadow Men are vacuumed up. The counter reads 25. Zadam crosses his twin tridents and in a poof of smoke splints in two. The blue Zadam yells "Die 01!" The red Zadam yells "Die Kikaida". Hakaida appears and yells "Die Bajinda" (in Japanese of course). 01 uses "Blast End" to destroy the blue Zadam. Kikaida uses "Denji Endo" (Electromagnetic End) to destroy the red Zadam. Bijinda uses "Bijinda Laser" to destroy Hakaida. As the villains are reassembled the counter goes to 26, 27 and 28. I'm only guessing but I think Big Shadow says to Hakaida "you again?" before sending him back out. When the two Zadam and Hakaida appear again "Blast End", "Denji End" and "Bijinda Laser" have no effect. Apparently each time the machine reassembles an android it makes it more powerful.

Hakaida stands between the two Zadam and grabs hold of both tridents. The three shout "Zadam-Hakaida Tri-Attack".

What was supposed to happen we'll never know because 01, Kikaida and Bijinda immediately link arms, shout "Kikaida Triple Circle Power", jump into the air and start spinning, when they do this the three villains explode. The fourth cable snaps and the blade falls. 01 catches it. Doctor Komyoji did in fact succeed in sabotaging the machine. When the counter hits 30 the machine explodes, destroying the entire Shadow Crime Syndicate headquarters and Big Shadow with it! The explosion though big is not as long as the explosion that destroyed the Dark Demolition Corps headquarters at the end of Jinzo Ningen Kikaida.

Misao, Hiroshi and Akira are stuffing themselves with cake. Doctor Komyoji smoking his pipe watches them eat. They're all happy at the end of the Shadow but sad that Ichiro, Jiro and Mari have not joined them.

Ichiro, Jiro and Mari walk towards each other. When they meet they clasp hands and nod at each other. Then they pull apart and turning walk forward.

KING OF THE CASTLE

Lurking behind this nightmarish vision was the story of a young teenager's nervous breakdown. Shy, sensitive Ronald Wright's mind snaps under the strain of living at the top of the council tower block. He clashes with his parents, his teachers and the local bullies, and retreats into a fantasy world in which all the people he knows are transformed into nightmarish doubles. His headmaster, Spurgeon, becomes a mad scientist, his stepmother June, becomes a witch and bully leader Ripper turns into a fully armed Samurai Warrior.

Ronald enters this fantasy world when he plunges down a lift shaft. While in reality a rescue operation is being mounted, Roland lives out a fantasy. He meets Vein, the keeper of the keys, and discovers that he must earn certain keys to escape. He becomes 'King of the Castle' but discovers that all the dirty rascals are plotting against him and he is put on trial. . .

King of the Castle was written by Bob Baker and Dave Martin who were also responsible for the previous year's HTV science fiction series, SKY (see separate entry). It was originally scheduled for a weekday children's slot early in 1977 but ITVs network planning committee deemed it 'too scary' for children to watch alone, so it was postponed for four months and moved to a Sunday teatime slot. The producer was Leonard White, the executive producer was Patrick Dromgoole, the designer was John Biggs.

KING OF THE MOUNTIES

In 1940, Republic released King of the Royal Mounted, a serial devoted to the patriotic exploits of Sergeant King (Lane). Though the impact of the chapterplay was much reduced by the villains not being clearly identified as Germans (which they were), because America was still at peace, it was a resounding success. Hence this sequel in which, America now being at war, the enemies are clearly identified as agents of Germany, Japan and Italy helping to prepare for an Axis invasion of Canada by bombing it from an undetectable plane. An inventor who comes up with a new kind of plane detector is killed, leaving Lane to protect the detector and rescue the inventor's daughter, Drake, when she's kidnapped by the enemy . . .

It's all thrilling stuff and, above all, patriotic, as Republic made clear in its promotion of the chapterplay: 'Unscrupulous plans for Western world conquest are shattered to bits when the hordes of yellow-bellied rats come to grips with the courage and cunning of Canada's Mounted Police!' Witney, directing on his own for a change, produced a stylish piece of nonsense, hindered only by the budgetary economies that war brought: to take just one example, blanks were rationed. More interestingly, a mark of the concern Republic's front office had over the name of the undetectable plane the villains operated from, the Falcon, can be gauged by the instruction sent down for the screenwriters to provide phonetic spellings of 'Falcon' whenever the word was used. Hence 'we cannot afford to lose the Falcon (fawlkn) plane'. The producer for the serial was W.J.O'Sullivan, the cinematographer was Bud Thackery.

KING OF THE ROCKET MEN

Thus, although King of The Rocket Men features a rocket-suited hero (Coffin) on the trail of the masked Dr Vulcan (Jolley), the storyline has him spending vast amounts of time trying to puzzle out which of the scientists at Science Associates (Republic's writer's block standing in for the scientific foundation) is Dr Vulcan. That said, the flying sequences are amongst the best mounted by Republic while Coffin's twisting of the three control knobs of his suit to 'on', 'up' and 'fast' before taking off are fondly remembered by many for their camp charm.

Clarke, the inveterate newspaperwoman on the trail of the identity of the mysterious Rocketman, is best remembered as the girl who got a grapefruit shoved into her face by James Cagney in Public Enemy (1931).

As the days of the serial drew to a close, Republic (and Columbia) turned increasingly to Science Fiction for inspiration. However, such modern concerns sat uneasily with the very traditional plots Republic's screenwriters kept (re-) writing. The serial was produced by Franklyn Adreon, the cinematographer was Ellis W. Carter, the special effects were created by Howard Lydecker and Theodore Lydecker.

One of the serial's prime attractions was Commando's Flying-jacket, a plot device originally created for the studio's KING OF THE ROCKET MEN (1949). Even though three years had passed since the figure of Rocket-man had soared through the skies, the flying jacket gimmick, as well as the footage of the Cody rocket in flight through the skies, still looked impressive, thanks to work of the studio's special effects wizards Howard and Theodore Lydecker.

KINKYU SHIREI 10-4 10-10AKA: EMERGENCY ORDER 10-4*10-10

Professor Haruhiko Mori (Kurosawa) sets up a special private investigation team that utilizes Citizen's Band (CB) radios, hoping to use their network to solve crimes that leave the police baffled. When trouble strikes, the Professor sends out a 10-34 ("SOS") message to associates under the command of Iron Mask (Mizuki). He then organizes team members with handles like Snow White and the Tokyo Silvervine Rider, who employ gadgets and special weapons developed in the Professor's lab.

Made in the middle of a mini-boom of mystery shows as the Tsuburaya studio capitalized on the success of ULTRA Q, 10-4 10-10 took its name from the CB code numbers for "Roger" and "Out". The team's cases varied from mundane searches for missing persons to battles against evil, such as a giant mutant rat, a mud monster, a mutant vampire from the Amazon, and killer mold. As with UNBALANCE and OPERATION MYSTERY, the show attempted to move away from the monster battles for which the Tsuburaya studio had become known - only one city-stomping giant appears in its entire six month run.

Though CB radio had been licensed in the U.S. since the 1940s, Japanese TV seems to have been ahead of the times in exploiting it as a dramatic gimmick. It would be several years before the West was treated to Sam Peckinpah's CB demolition derby in Convoy (1978) and the dubious short-wave delights of the early Nicole Kidman movie BMX Bandits (1984). The whole thing seems almost impossibl quant in these days of the Internet and instantaneous global communication, but see Heiji Zenigata for details of his mobile phone wilding grand-daughter, Music by Takeo Watanabe.

KINVIG

The hero of this seven part story was Des Kinvig, an ineffectual dreamer who runs a backstreet electrical repair shop. Fussed over by his mumsy wife Netta and saddled with a huge dog called Cuddley, Des finds escape from his humdrum life in the passions of his pal Jim, a fully paid up UFO fanatic.

One night while walking his dog, Des's fantasies are apparently fulfilled when he comes across a spaceship and discovers that one of his customers, bossy Miss Griffin, is really a dishy woman from Mercury (played by Prunella Gee in some of the sexiest costumes imaginable from silver catsuit to pink leather bikini!). Des is whisked off to Mercury where he meets the 500 year old Buddo and learns that a race of ant like creatures called Xux are secretly plotting to invade Earth by replacing people with humanoid robots, and indiscriminately handing out the power to bend cutlery.

Nigel Kneale the creator of this show was also responsible for creating QUATERMASS. It was Kenales intent that all Des's experiences with the delectable Miss Gee (dubbed 'Quatermiss' by one national newspaper) were the product of his fanciful imagination. But this was not made crystal clear in the production and a lot of people didn't know what to make of it. However, it was a welcome change from the usually sitcom fare. The series has not been seen in the US. The producer for the series was Lee Chatfield, the designer for the series was Mike Oxley.

Douglas Adams' The Hitch-Hiker's Guide To The Galaxy proved, were it not already recognised, that the worlds of humour and science-fiction could mix and match. Kinvig, while not in the same league as Adams' creation, was nonetheless the work of a true great in the sci-fi field: Nigel Kneale, a major contributor to the TV genre, not least via his ground-breaking BBC Quatermass series in the 1950s.

Kinvig was so titled because of the central character, a dreamy electrical repair man of that name whose existence, we see, revolves around wiring, sockets, the customers who call into his rundown street-corner repair shop in Bingleton, and home life with his attentive if scatty wife Netta and Cuddly, their loving pooch. One night, out walking the dog, Kinvig meets Miss Griffin, a beautiful woman dressed (but only just) in clothes that leave little to the imagination. Miss Griffin - nicknamed 'Quatermiss' by one Fleet Street wag - is more than just sexy, however, she hails from Mercury and is a swift inter-planetary traveller. Suddenly, Des's life consists not just of corner-shop banality but being zoomed off to other planets. This is the cause of great frustration to his friend Jim Piper who has long been fascinated by the idea of UFOs and so cannot understand why someone so unresponsive to the notion of extraterrestrial life should have all the luck. Des would not exactly call it 'luck' though - together with Miss Griffin and Buddo, who also comes from Mercury and is 500-years-old, their job, no less, is to save the planet Earth from the dreaded ant-like Xux tribe.

What was made never clear to viewers, however, is whether all these things really happened to Kinvig or whether they were just the product of a fertile imagination.

WR. Nigel Kneale.

DIR. Les Chatfield (Eps 1-7), Brian Simmons (Ep 1 only).

KNIGHT RIDER

Knight Rider was a series about a black Trans AM, which had been extensively modified into becoming a force of good in the war against crime. The car, named K.I.T.T. short for Knight Industries Two Thousand, had quite a few features that did not come standard, nor as options, from the factory. Among these features were: a molecular bonded shell giving it a nearly indestructible body (gunfire and crashes had no effect on it).

The ability to cruise at 300 MPH, the ability to drive itself, a plethora of weapons and the ability to both drive on water and fly through the air (for short distances). The most interesting feature K.I.T.T. had however was a distinct personality and the ability to talk to people including his driver, Michael Knight.

As Michael Knight, David Hasselhoff was the star of the series, but in reality he took second billing after KITT. Before taking the job as KITT's driver. Michael Knight had been an undercover police officer named Michael Long. While on assignment, Long was shot in the face and left for dead by the villains. He was rescued by Wilton Knight, a dying billionaire who was the founder of Knight Industries and the Foundation for Law and Order.

Knight saved Michael's life and gave him a new face, patterned after his son's and the new identity of Michael Knight. He also offers Michael the opportunity to bring to justice the criminals who were above the law, with the backing of the Foundation for Law and Government and KITT to aid him in this mission. It was a mission Michael accepted.

After Wilton Knight died, his associate Devon Miles took over as the head of the Foundation as Michael's boss. Michael was also aided by both Bonnie and April, mechanics responsible for maintaining and upgrading KITT. During the series final season, RC3, a black mechanic who grew up on the streets joined the team.

In 1991 a TV movie entitled Knight Rider 2000 was produced which was set in the year 2000. The feature was a continuation of the original series featuring a brand new car, the Knight Rider 4000, which Michael Knight is brought out of retirement to drive. Three years later a second TV movie entitled Knight Rider 2010 was produced as part of the syndicated movie package Universal Action Pack: other than the name this second feature had nothing to do with Knight Rider.

After a long absence and several television movies, Knight Rider returned in a new series also created by Glen A. Larson called TEAM KNIGHT RIDER which was shown on Sky One in the US and ITV in the UK. The series was first seen on NBC. Many people attribute the success of this series, about one man and his talking car, to leading man David Hasselhoff. Previously a soap heartthrob on The Young and the Restless and subsequently Baywatch's leading body-beautiful-in-a-bathing-costume, Hasselhoff won over viewers - particularly women - with his laid back style, tight jeans and a twinkle in the eye.

The series itself is said to have come out of a discussion between the head of programming at NBC, Brandin Tartikoff, and his assistant about the difficulties in casting attractive men in leading roles - when they often can't act! An ideal solution, they thought, would be to do a series where the car did all the talking - at least, that's what Tartikoff told California magazine. Whether the story be true or not, Hasselhoff's co-star was indeed a talking car; a sleek, black Pontiac Trans-AM converted to become the Knight Industries Two Thousand, or KITT for short. It was the sort of car that might have been designed for James Bond, furnished with an array of weapons including flame throwers, smoke bombs and infrared sensors. It was able to withstand almost any attack including bullets and crashes, could race up to 300mph, travel on water and even fly for short distances. Its driver, Michael Knight (Hasselhoff), was somewhat of a customised model himself, having originally been an undercover cop who was shot in the line of duty and presumed killed.

Dying millionaire Wilton Knight came to his aid by paying for plastic surgery that gave him a new identity and a resemblance to Wilton's son. On his death, Wilton entrusted his fortune to Devon Miles (Edward Mulhare) to run the Foundation for Law and Government (FLAG) to fight against crime and injustice, with Michael and KITT as they lead operatives. Also part of the team was beautiful technician Bonnie Barstow, played by Patricia McPherson (briefly replaced by Rebecca Holden as April Curtis in the second season). She was assisted by streetwise black mechanic Reginald Cornelius III (Peter Parros), or 'RC3' as he was generally known, during the final season. William Daniels was the voice of KITT. The show lasted four seasons, ending in 1986, and since then there have been two attempts to bring back the show. The first was in 1991 with a tv movie, Knight Rider 2000, featuring a new cast -Susan Norman, Carmen Argenziano, Eugene Clark, Megan Butler, Mitch Pileggi (X-Files' Assistant Director Skinner), Christine Healy, Lou Beatty Jr, Francis Guinan and John Cannon Nichols.

But this pilot was never picked up for a series and is probably best remembered for the cameo appearance by James Doohan (Star Trek's Scotty) playing himself. More successful is Team Knight Rider which actually made it to series in 1997 and was picked up by ITV in the UK (appearing for a few episodes before disappearing). This time one man and his car are not enough, and it takes a team of five operatives and futuristic vehicles to tackle crime and injustice. The FLAG team is lead by former CIA agent Kyle Stewart (Brixton Karnes) in a sports car called Dante (voiced by Tom Kane). Other members of the team are former marine and martial arts expert Jenny Andrews (Christine Steel) in her red Mustang, Domino (Nia Verdalos); ex-cop and former boxer Duke DePalmer (Duane Davis) in Beast (Kerrigan Mahan), a part tank all-terrain vehicle with winches, cranes and a laser cannon; con woman Erica West (Kathy Trageser) in her hybrid motorcycle Kat (Andrea Beutner); and scientific genius Kevin 'Trek' Saunders (Nick Wechsler) in high pursuit vehicle Plato (John Kassir).

Here was a series capitalizing on several genres immensely popular on Television, the police drama, and science fiction. David Hasselhoff (Sorry Dave, I can't spell names worth a damn), plays a daring detective who, aided by some high tech geniuses and an incredible firebird like car named Kit, is able to thwart bad guy after bad guy. Thanks to Anthony Del Giudice for reminding us of this one.

The unique value of the show to Sci-Fi Gallery, is the concept of the fully intergrated Artificial Intelligence realized as Kit the car. Kit talks quite intelligently and in fact sounds quite human. But the Knight Rider can tell his car, "Take care of the that Kit", and the car will open a door and smack the bad guy. On at least one occasion Kit has acted unilaterally to take out a bad guy and at least once has rescued the Knight Rider from disaster. This independent agent is the dreams of many a Science Fiction author, from Issac Asimov (I Robot Novels and Short Stories) to Alan Dean Foster (go find this interesting one) something about a detective with an android and a hovering little AI that occasionally perches on his shoulder to recharge. As mentioned in the reply to the public comment posted by Anthony, Batman's car also features a rudimentary intelligence.

KNIGHTS OF GOD

In the year 2020, the country is split between North and South. London has been destroyed and replaced by Winchester as the capital and the Royal Family have been deposed. Nobody knows if the King of England is still alive. Out of the carnage has arisen a new ruling order - a brutal military and religious governing elite called the Knights of God, led by Prior Mordrin., a ruthless dictator who sends rebels to be brainwashed at special re-education camps. Meetings at one of these camps are teenagers Gervase Edwards, who has been through the Knights mind altering programme, and Julia who has not. They fall in love and escape, joining the growing resistance to the evil regime as they set out to find the rightful King of England and help restore him to the throne.

Ambitious 1987 adventure serial set in a future Britain devastated by Civil war. This show starred a plethora of SF actors including Gareth Thomas (BLAKE'S 7), Patrick Troughton (DOCTOR WHO) and John Woodvine (EDGE OF DARKNESS) as well as Don Henderson (THE SECRET WORLD OF POLLY FLINT, DRAMARAMA and MY FRIEND WALTER). The quest element help foster, the semi-medieval style of Knights of God, with the grim, rundown future offset by some hi-tech elements such as the Knights' crow-like black helicopters.

But the 13 part series, which carried a £1 million price tag - caused jitters amount ITV network bosses, worried that their serial might prove to gritty for family viewing in its Sunday teatime slot. The directors for the show were Andrew Morgan and Michael Kerrigan, producer was John Dale, executive producer was Anna Home and the designer was Christine Ruscoe.

Knights of God was made in 1987 forTVS, which no longer exist. The rights to the serial had passed to a company called MTM. This was a gritty adventure serial that mixed a medieval-style quest and a decaying landscape with futuristic touches.

Isidro, a teacher who believes in the existence of aliens, encounters the biggest sighting of his life when an unidentified craft lands before his very eyes. Shocked, an alien comes out of it and even talks to him in his own language! Assuring him of his safety in his presence, the creature reveals that he knows about Isidro's theories with regards to his fellow entities that live in outer space. With that, he entrusts a mystical stone on Isidro's hands which is a key to their race. He further explains that someone wishes to steal it from them. And since he is a person with a golden heart, Isidro is temporarily elected to become it's keeper until the right time comes for the alien to retrieve it back.

Thrilled with his experience, Isidro comes running towards his house to share his unbelievable story with his wife Myra. Upon spotting the van in the driveway though, he knows that an impending battle with his mother will take place. Thereafter, he confronts Doña Ingrid and demands her reason for this sudden visit after disowning him. Sounding high and mighty, the Alegre matriarch then reminds him that he can't just throw away his life and forget about his responsibilities as a son of a prominent family. She further threatens to disinherit him if he doesn't leave his good-for-nothing girlfriend. He stuns Doña Ingrid though by saying that Myra and he are married already, and as an Alegre, he couldn't abandon his real treasure which is his wife and their unborn child. Her mom then gets hysterical and tries to hurt Myra but Isidro quickly stops him. His stepbrother also comes and persuades Doña Ingrid to go home.

Later, Doña Ingrid is still upset with her son. Isidro's stepbrother tries to comfort her in vain. Feeling dejected, she still can't believe what Isidro sees in his wife for him to desert their family. Turning to him, she thinks it ironic how someone who's not her own son feels concerned for her than her own blood. But Isidro's stepbrother says that he's also an Allegre even if he is a product of her husband out of wedlock. He further vows that because of this, Doña Ingrid has nothing to fear as he will take care of the family and will give her protection that she needs.

Back to Isidro's humble abode, Myra is worried about his mom's frightening words to them. But her husband denies the truth about curses and reiterates that they are the only ones who can control their lives. And as long as they are not hurting anyone, nothing else means to him more than their love for each other and of course, their baby. He then goes to show her the stone given to him by an alien.

The next day, Doña Ingrid's lawyer arrives to show her the newly-created which will leave Isidro penniless. However, she surprises him by saying that she doesn't want her son to be cut out from the testament and thus to change it to its original content. She then explains to the stunned attorney that she can't fully turn her back to an only son. At the end of the day, she realized that a mother can't desert a son because unconditional love will always prevail despite the pain he caused her. As such, Isidro can maintain his rights to all the properties and wealth of the family and even his child as well, she declares. Hearing this, Isidro's stepbrother becomes frustrated with madness.

Much later, Myra finally goes into labor with just a midwife and Isidro to assist her. Seeing their baby boy brought to the world though make them beam with bliss. After a while, Isidro designs a bracelet just for his son with the mystical stone on it. He fondly tells the baby that the stone was bestowed to him by an alien and he hopes that it will bring him good fortune even just a little. Now, his teachers won't laugh at his face for he possesses a proof of aliens' existence in this world. Amused, Myra exclaims that he is such a kid with the kind of stories he has. He argues that it's true, stressing that he wanted to ask more questions but it was in a rush. But yes, his friend from outer space exists.

In the bar, Charisse is drunk with misery as she confides to a friend that her boyfriend Nanding jilted her for an epitome of perfection: a tall and fair-skinned woman with a beauty of a princess. Despite these, she still can't understand why she was dumped. Instead of commiserating with her though, her friend warned her that if she maintains her state of distress, her job would be taken away from her too. Hysterical, Charisse shouts that she doesn't care and she may lose a friend if she doesn't leave her alone for now.

When Isidro's stepbrother arrives in the bar, Charisse's friend quickly shifts her attention to him. Noticing his scowling face, she instinctively blames it on his family problems. She then tells him to solve his problem by going away with her instead but Isidro's stepbrother adamantly refuses, pronouncing that he can't give up his plans now after enslaving himself to the Allegre family all these years.

He then storms to the couple's hut one rainy night and angrily commands Isidro to tell his mother to bestow all their riches to him alone since he doesn't care about the money anyway. Seeing his evil intentions, Isidro exclaims that he has been such a fool for his goody-two-shoes act. He then refuses his plea and even threatens him to bare the whole truth to his mother. This brings about a serious brawl between them with Myra screaming for them to stop, all to no avail. Caught off guard, Isidro is stabbed on his knife, posing a real danger before them. He then yells to his wife to seek escape before getting stabbed again.

Carrying the baby with her, she runs for her life towards the river where Isidro's stepbrother catches her. Grabbing the cot from her, the glint of the mystical stone reaches his sight and the memory of Isidro and the alien's meeting flashes back to him. But before he can do anything else, Myra fights back, slackening his grip on the basket. The strong current of the water floats it away from Myra's reach.

Meanwhile, a car full of nuns stops by the side road where one of them takes time to pee by the bushes. To the sister's amazement, an abandoned cot lies nearby with a baby on it! She then calls her companions to see her dumbfounding discovery!

1 - 2 EPISODE 2

Sister Aida brings the abandoned baby boy to the orphanage and immediately tends to his needs. She takes off his bracelet thinking that it would only hurt the baby's tender skin. The other nun, sister Caridad wonders at the cruelty of the mother who deserted the poor thing but Sister Aida tells her to simply pray and thank the Lord for keeping the infant alive. The jolly nun decides to call him Bonifacio or Bong and then hides the mystical stone on a box inside an altar's cabinet.

The next morning, Myra awakes on the river finding Gabriel gone! She then becomes hysterical while screaming for her son's name. Seeking the aid of Isidro's mother, the scene that she witnesses upon reaching their house stops her. The tragic death of Isidro has been discovered and Doña Ingrid is panic-stricken with shock and fury for the fate of her only son! The police officers merely look on while she demands God to bring Isidro back. Nicassio then saves himself by blaming the deed on Myra saying that he saw her stab Isidro to death and runs away!

Later, Nicassio shows a photo of Myra to the law enforcers, hinting that she can't escape their town since she is penniless. True enough, they spot her on a bakeshop looking ragged in her grubby clothes. Then they proceed to arrest her for a crime she didn't commit. In prison, Doña Ingrid forces Myra to tell her where the baby is. However, she doesn't believe that the boy was swept by the river and instead, accuses her for being a terrible mother. Upon seeing Nicassio, Myra screams incoherently but defending herself is simply too late.

At home, Doña Ingrid refuses to believe that her grandson is dead despite Nicassio's conviction that it is possible that Myra also killed her baby just like what he did to her husband. She insists that she feels it in her gut that the baby is still alive and she will do anything just to find him. Devious as ever, Nicassio volunteers to head the search together with his false promises that he has nothing but good intentions for the family.

In the bar, Nicassio celebrates his fatherhood as he learns that Divina is carrying his child. With this, Divina excitedly asks him when they can break the news to his mom so they can start planning their wedding. Horrified, Nicassio clarifies that he has no intention to tie the knot and she should be grateful that he's willing to take responsibility for the unborn child. Worse, he plans to use the kid as a replacement for the lost baby of Isidro. Divina vehemently rebuffs this but Nicassio threatens to kill her next.

Alarmed, Divina quickly packs her things to escape her lover's evil plans. Though confused, her friend Charisse follows suit when she told her that Nicassio may hurt her if she opts to stay. As if on cue, Nicassio arrives and angrily knocks on their door. Running for their lives, they flee through the back window with their assailant on their heels. Getting away from him is not the end of their ordeal though. Divina bleeds to death after giving birth to a baby safely. But before she dies, she tells a frightened Charisse to take care of her infant and never give it to Nicassio.

Ten years passed and Myra is still serving her sentence in jail. Though life has thrown her much pain and sufferings, she is filled with hope that one day she'll be reunited with Gabriel.

Meanwhile, an orphan's imagination is running wild as he begins to tell his prospective parents a ghoulish story. Sister Aida hushes him and asks him to go back to his room first. Assuming that he will be taken away now, he starts to distribute all his possessions to the other kids including his prized collection of comics to his bestfriend. His Ate Shane then accompanies him back to the nun's office to join his new family. But all his hopes are crushed when he finds the couple gone.

Bong's dreams shattered as his new adoptive parents backed out on him yet again. Moping at the ruins, he wonders why people keep on rejecting him including his own mother who abandoned him. His bestfriend Elias appears to comfort him, but he continues his sentiments, telling himself that he should be used to the pain by now. Elias voices out that maybe, it's time for him to suppress his fondness for the supernatural that most people find weird. On the brighter side, he happily exclaims that he won't be losing his best bud because now, he doesn't have to go.

The years refused to mellow the dominant Alegre matriarch. Tied down on a wheelchair, Doña Ingrid hassles Nicassio to collect information about her lost heir. Fed up by her insistence, he tells her that the reason why they can't find her grandson is that the baby already died ten years ago! However, Doña Ingrid's conviction remained strong, exclaiming that she won't believe that the baby is indeed dead until she sees it with her own eyes.

Back to prison, Myra celebrates her birthday with her inmates. Before blowing the cake, her friends persuade her to make a wish. As usual, her hopes to see her son again remain in her heart. She further reveals that she can't be at ease knowing that Gabriel's life is in danger if Nicassio finds him! Out of nowhere, her confidant suddenly marvels if there's something that will mark the identity of his baby. On the orphanage, Bong becomes a butt of cruel jokes among the kids for being discarded by a prospective family. His Ate Shane though encourages him not to mind them. But the mischievous boys start a squabble that brings them to Sister Aida's office. As a penalty for everyone involved, they are asked to labor in the garden. His foes keep on blaming him for their punishment even though Bong himself is also suffering the consequence. The taunts only stop when Bong fights back with the fact that the naughty boy is not a popular choice for adoption because he smells bad!

Later, Bong happily runs to Elias in their room only to find him packing his things! As it happens, his new parents arrived to fetch him! When asked if he feels sad about the situation, Bong comes to grips with the fact that his friend will now have a family to love him. But the worse thing is they will be leaving in Davao, so visiting the orphanage would be next to impossible. Saying their goodbyes tearfully, Bong wishes that couples would also see the good that Elias sees in him.

On another village, two Anna and Jimboy are playing with their bicycles on the street. The boy tries to get the girl's attention by pestering her. Brushing him off proves to be difficult so she begins to quarrel with him. Then Jimboy's mother Charisse arrives in time to stop the fight and angrily demands why Anna's trying to hurt her son. Trining comes to her daughter's aid though, reiterating her claims that it was his son's fault after all. Charisse's tirade then shifts to her bitter resentment towards the fact that Nanding dropped her like a hot potato in the past. No one wants to hear this again so everyone went back to their homes and leaves her alone.

Inside, Trining feels worried that Anna has no brother to protect her from harm and to keep her away from their neighbor's irritating son. As such, she asks her husband if it's possible to get a bodyguard to care for their daughter. But since that costs a lot, a better option comes to her mind. She then excitedly considers adoption to solve their problems! Hearing this, Anna angrily opposes this and stomps off!

Meanwhile, Bong looks forlorn as he keeps to himself in one corner of their room. Suddenly, he spots a spaceship outside the window! Thrilled to his bones, he wakes the other kids to see the unidentified flying object. But when they did, the craft is gone! Thinking that it's another figment of his imagination, they go back to bed, annoyed. Alone again, the spaceship appears again as if enticing him to follow it. Curious and amazed, he eagerly runs after it. Much to his astonishment, the thing swiftly crashes in the dense forest nearby!

1 - 4 EPISODE 4

In the middle of the night, Bong quickly rushes back to the house screaming at the top of his lungs that the world is coming to an end. Mother Superior together with the rest of the nuns as well as the other kids rise up from bed to see what's the fuss all about. Upon hearing Bong's claims of an alien and spaceship sighting in the forest, they quickly dismiss them as another figment of his wild imaginations. Sister Aida promptly reminds him that there's a time for jokes or stories and the late hour then does not call for them.

Contrary to their disbelief, an alien indeed landed on the nearby area. In fact, the yet-to-be-seen creature is currently transmitting data such as his location and the language he needs to adopt to adjust to the place.

Bong asks Shane, his ultimate defender in the shelter, whether he is really crazy like what the other children say towards his weird attitude. The social however carefully explains that he is not and in fact, he's one intelligent kid. He merely gets his fertile imagination from being a wide-reader, which is not bad in itself but joking about to the extent of believing in aliens is not a good thing because they don't really exist.

At night, the alien comes to the orphans' room and embraces Bong. The next morning, he opens his eyes and gets scared to death as Robin and his other foes play a ghoulish trick on him. Once again, Shane shields her from being a butt of jokes yet again. She further warns him to stop thinking about the non-existent entities since she won't be forever there to protect him from other people's harsh taunts.

Meanwhile, Doña Ingrid hires a professional detective to trace the whereabouts of her lost grandchild. Then she frankly tells Nicassio that there is no need for him to find leads since ten years had already passed and he still came up with nothing. As such, it's better to leave the job on more capable hands. Worried about his inheritance, he goes out to see the lawyer and asks whether a portion is left for him in the last will and testament. To his disappointment, the loyal attorney refuses to divulge its contents and if he wants to know about it, he should ask Doña Ingrid himself.

Back to the shelter, the alien starts to make havoc when his hunger pushes him to steal food from the kitchen. When Mang Estoy is not looking, he pilfers the freshly-fried hotdogs much to the confusion of the cook. He then blames the deed to an innocent Butchoy who doesn't receive a complete meal for robbing off all the hotdogs earlier. Bong then defends his friend to the cook. Instead of listening to his pleas, Mang Estoy transfers his share to Butchoy's since he insisted on being a true friend. Anna continues to make tantrums after learning that her parents wanted to adopt a brother for her. Thus, Nanding and Trining carefully explains to her that they are only thinking of her future and it doesn't mean they don't love her anymore. Trining further assures her that she will always be their one and only daughter no matter what. Much to their relief, the girl finally agrees to have a baby brother.

Excited, the couple goes to the orphanage the following day to find what they wanted. Inside, they begin to consider several prospects with Bong giving them a run down about the kids' negative traits. Clever as ever, he sadly confides that he doesn't expect to be adopted anymore. To his delight, Trining tells Nanding that maybe they could just pick him instead! Later, Bong fervently prays to get the chance to have a family at last by promising to God that he will lessen his out of this world thoughts and become a better kid.

At home, Nanding and Trining decide who will be the one to tell their daughter that they opted for an older brother for her instead. Left without a choice, Trining breaks the news to a furious Anna who vows that she will never talk, look or even smell whoever kid they would adopt as she still prefers a baby boy!

On a restaurant, Nicassio bribes the detective Doña Ingrid hired to direct all the information he will find about the heir she is looking for. Bitter about his lowly status in the family, he insists that he also has a right to the Allegre wealth since his father Doña Ingrid's son after all.

Much later, Bong quietly walks on the empty corridor when he suddenly sees a kid before him wearing his lost cap. Wanting to retrieve it back, he quickly follows suit only to find a shocking creature face-to-face with him!

1 - 5 EPISODE 5

Thinking that he will be catching the culprit who stole his cap, Bong finds himself face-to-face instead with an extraterrestrial! Frightened out of his wits, Bong shouts for him not to come near him for fear of being hurt. However, the horrific creature keeps on stepping closer while assuring him that he's in good hands. Suddenly, the boy trips and injures his leg. Proving that he's a nice alien, he covers his wound with a healing hand much to Bong's surprise.

Up in the bedroom, Shane is busy tucking the kids to bed when she notices that her favorite ward is missing. Before searching for his whereabouts, she hushes the boy's heckling that he's having his imaginary jaunts again. On the balcony steps, she meets several nuns and confides to them that Bong has gone nowhere again. Used to the child's unusual mischief, the sisters assure her that he'll surely be back in no time.

Still, she continues to look for him in the dense forest. But before she arrives, Bong finally believes the alien that he's not up to harm him. Shane's voice however, interrupts their renewed acquaintance. Bong quickly tells his newfound friend to hide himself before someone discovers him. As Shane catches up with Bong, the lone boy recalls her warning about the non-existence of aliens. Thus he opts not to share to her ultimate defender his remarkable experience!

At the mansion, Nicassio sneaks inside Dona Ingrid's bedroom and attempts to end her life but before doing the deed, the lawyer's words rushes back in his mind. He recalls him saying that the only time he will learn the contents of the last will and testament is when his surrogate mother dies. This hampers his cruel plan since he can't be sure whether he will inherit something or not. The next morning, Trining has set up a lavish breakfast for her only daughter to sway her into agreeing with her plan to adopt an older brother for him. But Anna's preferred baby boy stands. Out of nowhere, their neighbors usher themselves, in much to Trining's surprise. Offended, Charisse rants how she can be selfish and then tries to take her hungry son home. Left without a choice, Trining allows them to stay and share their bountiful meal.

Charisse then introduces her hottie of a brother Abie and begins another usual round of her bitter memories with Nanding which her husband effectively halts by putting an apple on her bigmouth. Back on the shelter, the children are gathered on the open field to do their daily physical exercise. Lurking nearby is the alien who gushes for Bong's name. Hearing this, he sneaks out to his side and tells him that he will be scolded for skipping their morning rituals. But the friendly creature tags him along towards his damaged spaceship. The alien introduces himself as Kokey before showing him a video of Isidro whom he entrusted what he calls "chipeka" or the mythical stone. Not recognizing the man on the monitor, Bong exclaims that he knows nothing about what he's saying.

Dropping the subject for now, Kokey instead pleads for his help to rebuild his 'skepic' (spaceship). After much refusals, Bong eventually agrees to do what he can by dragging Kokey to the garage. Together, they both take some car tools from the mechanic who's currently working under a van. Ravenous as always, Kokey also snatches the newly-cooked hotdogs on the kitchen! Mang Estoy and the mechanic both seek out the "little thief" respectively. But when they bump into each other in the hall, they accuse the other with the small felony!

Hurrying back to the spaceship, Bong glimpses the arrival of his prospective parents' vehicle. Rushing Kokey to put himself out of sight once more, he warmly welcomes Nanding and Trining with a presumptuous question if they have come to bring him home!

Bong assumes that Nanding and Trining has come to bring him home. Excited, he tells Kokey that he can't help him rebuild his spaceship anymore because his adoptive parents will now take him away. Little did he know that the couple changed their mind because Anna wanted a baby boy not a big brother. With this, Sister Aida and Shane feels worried how Bong would take this new rejection yet again. Instead of persuading them, the clever nun shares how Bong is used to the feeling of being thrown back and forth to the shelter by families who rebuff him, just like them who backs out on him even before they had taken him in.

Moved by this, Nanding and Trining are musing about the orphan's sad plight in life, when Bong suddenly joins their conversation to voice out that he also wants them to be his parents! Shocked, the couple learns that he sneaked in the car while they were with Sister Aida. The two finds themselves in a dilemma knowing that they can't just take him back or risk hurting their daughter's feelings instead if they bring him home without Anna's consent.

In the end, the hard-pressed couple follows their inner feeling to adopt the poor kid. Unfortunately, Anna hates him at first sight! She angrily throws a tantrum and cries out how she feels betrayed by her own parents. Nanding calmly implores her to give him a chance. And if he proves to be a naughty child, then they can cast him off to the orphanage.

Meanwhile, their nosy neighbor continues to spy on Trining's latest ordeal. On the dinner table, they gossip about the identity of the kid Charisse and Jimboy had spotted on the other house. Charisse says that the boy is not one of their relatives because Nanding is a sole child while Trining's family are all living in the States. Abie suggests that perhaps the kid is adopted.

By the time Bong is warming up to his new home, Myra is trying to convince her cell mate not to give her newborn baby away. Doing so is like discarding a part of one's soul, she laments. To this day, the hope that one day she will see her son again, stays alive deep in her heart. On the other hand, Nicassio is still on the look-out for the lost heir of Doña Ingrid. He confides to Lucio his intention to kill the heir for he feels it in his gut that he was not included on the will.

While getting ready for bedtime, Trining gives Bong his pajamas and reminds him to keep his room spic and span. In turn, Bong is determined not to spoil his chance to endear himself to his new family. However, Kokey sneaks out of the room to the kitchen and ransacks the fridge! Worried with all the clutter the alien made, Bong hurriedly cleans up all the clutter the alien made when suddenly Anna catches him red-handed!

This further angers Anna but Trining soothes her ruffled feathers while Nanding instills in Bong to ask for help next time if he wants anything. The next morning, Anna's disgust towards Bong remains the same. More than her mom's excited plans to take Bong to a shopping spree, she is further enraged by the fact that he'll be going to the same school as hers!

Hitching a ride from their well-off neighbor, Charisse sweetly bids goodbye to Marcial in front of Nanding. Her attention swiftly shifts to Bong to whom she introduces herself as the queen of their neighborhood. Trining and she start their usual banter again after Charisse commits a faux pas about Bong being an adopted child. Meanwhile, Anna's mood brightens upon seeing her crush Abie! At the mall, the two rivals accidentally bump into each other again. But in truth, Charisse is merely stalking them while Trining shops around together with her kids. At one point, Jimboy begs her mom to buy him some books but Charisse tells him to simply chat with the new kid instead of wasting their money. But when Trining approaches, she loudly commands him to buy as many books as he like.

While they are exchanging taunts at the mall though, Kokey ravages their home and even electrocutes himself after trying to turn the television on!

1 - 7 EPISODE 7

On the orphanage, Sister Aida is relieved to know that Bong is in good hands. Meanwhile, Charisse continues to live up to her long-standing rivalry with Trining. But their bickering is put on hold when Trining found their home turned upside down by a thief!

They immediately call the police to investigate the crime scene. In the process, Charisse suggests that perhaps an ex-boyfriend who's bent on revenge (just like her) is responsible for the whole thing. However, the investigator unearths some bizarre marks with only four large fingerprints on them! With this, bong realizes that Kokey is the culprit of the wreckage. He then locates him at the back of the house, stuck on a garbage can! During the search, Trining nearly discovers him but Bong brightly explains that the protruding body from the waste can is just a paper mache!

Lucio continues to connive with Nicassio by submitting all his researched data to him. Ironically, a handful of children were recorded missing on the same date Myra's son vanished. The memory of the bracelet designed with a red stone works to his advantage however. Nicassio is convinced that the red stone will lead him to the heir.

When Bong comes back for his friend, he encounters another disaster. The garbage collector has taken Kokey's hideout away! While he is looking around, he meets Peping, a junk collector who lives in a kariton. Back to his home, Anna freaks out when he finds a stranger inside her nemesis' room! Threatening to tattle Bong to her parents, Anna agrees to keep his secret but only after he swears to follow her conditions.

With Lucio's urging, Nicassio boldly visits Myra who gets hysterical upon seeing the murderer of her husband and the reason why she's paying for a crime she is innocent from. Thinking that he could outsmart her, Nicassio forces her to spill out where she hid his son. To his shock, Myra powerfully knocks him off on his belly!

After falling off the truck, Kokey proceeds to trace his way back without much success. In the process, his horrific appearance frightens to death a lot of people whom he encounters! On the flyover, a vehicle almost hits Kokey while he is trying to cross the fast lane! Thankfully, he plummets down the bridge safe and alive.

Starving as usual, he ravenously attacks the food on the shed but its owner happens to catch him. The blind woman and Kokey become fast friends though she refuses to believe all his stories that he is an alien from outer space. Alone in the world, she asks the funny creature to stay and live with her. Kokey tells her though that he has to go and find his friend. But before he leaves, he brings her sight back by using his special gift of healing.

The next morning, Bong begins his first day in school without a hitch. He excitedly shares to Trining how well he had participated in the class. When Trining asks Anna how she fared, Bong lets it slip that she had a hard time answering their teacher's question. Hence, Trining advises her daughter to let Bong tutor her in lessons she is weak at. But as Bong spends some quality time with his new family, another adversity strikes when he sees on TV News the buzz about a hideous creature on the loose!

1 - 8 EPISODE 8

By wielding his tracing power, Kokey eventually finds his way back to the Kalugdans' home. Inside, Anna gets scared to death when she catches Kokey brushing his teeth on the bathroom. Panic-stricken she confides to her parents that she saw an alien similar to the one on TV! Not believing her for a minute, Nanding and Trining venture around the house to check for their daughter's peace of mind but they found nothing. Nanding advises Anna to pray to vanish the thoughts of alien on her mind.

Peping who bunked on Bong's bedroom also shockingly discovers Kokey! Bong assures him that Kokey is the pet he was telling him all along. Thankfully, he agrees to be Kokey's friend too. Smelling bad after his adventures in the city, the two boys decide to bathe him on the toilet. Kokey quickly develops a cold which starts his heavy sneezing. So when Trining notices why he's taking so long in the bathroom, Bong pretends that he's the one with a cold.

The next morning, Trining allows Bong to stay home to rest. This delights Bong because now he can help Kokey fix his transmitter so he can communicate with his friend from outer space! After collecting their needed materials, they begin to work. When they were finished, Bong, Peping and Kokey climb on the rooftop to secure the transmitter there. While attaching the chord though, Kokey falls down several times near Trining who's sweeping the grounds! Good thing, he is not discovered through Peping and Bong's help.

In the prison, Myra is restless with worry now that Nicassio is back to haunt her and her son. She can't believe that after ten long years, their paths had crossed again. She confides to an inmate the danger that her son faces because of Nicassio's evil plans. Knowing that she has to save her son, she considers the possibility of acquiring a parole during their foundation day. Indeed, she has reason enough to be concerned for Nicassio continues his search for the young heir of Doña Ingrid.

Much later, Anna destroys her cellphone after throwing it to Bong who was merely calling her to dinner with Trining's instructions. Fuming mad, she blames the whole thing to Bong. However, Trining defends her son and even admonishes Anna that she did not raise her to become a snob and to possess a terrible attitude. She further opposes Nanding's option to buy her a new one and dictates that Anna has to earn it instead.

Bong apologizes to Nanding for the trouble he caused Anna but his dad simply dismisses the issue. Back on his room, he tries to fix the broken cellphone but sleep overcomes him and Peping. Hence, Kokey stays up late to repair the damage with his healing power. As he puts it back on Anna's bedside table however, Anna awakes and catches him once more!

1 - 9 EPISODE 9

Nothing prepared Anna when she spots Kokey in her room. Scared out of her wits, she screams at the top of her lungs, but Bong and Peping arrive in time to cover her trap! Convinced that Anna won't be shouting anymore, Bong releases her and explains that he found the alien from the orphanage. And though he looks horrific, Kokey brings no harm and merely wishes for their help in salvaging his spaceship and in fulfilling his mission on earth. Peping further explains that Kokey fixed Anna's cellphone so that she won't be mad at Bong anymore. With this, Anna begins to warm up to her new brother and the friendly extraterrestrial as well.

Meanwhile, Kokey's ravenous appetite brings forth another disaster! Peping and he sneak out towards the home of Trining's nosy neighbor who generously gives the poor street urchin his fill of food. But as he shares his plate to Kokey under the table, Charisse discovers the starving alien and takes him for a monkey! Armed with a weapon, she runs after the creature who makes a dash for Trining's house! Charisse then alarms her neighbors about the horrific animal she saw. But instead of believing her, Trining calmly tells her that perhaps she mistook herself or her kapamilyas as the monkey! This aggravates Charisse who cuddles up to Nanding. After being scolded by her actions, she reiterates to Trining that whatever she does, Trining, can't deny the fact that Nanding was hers first.

Together with Abie and Jimboy, Marcial drops by at the Kalugdans' home to apologize for the embarrassing scene which his wife caused. However, Trining wants Charisse to apologize herself. In defense, Charisse complains that she is the one who was robbed by their pet monkey so she doesn't want to do so. As such, Marcial drags her away to stop her outburst. But she swears that there was indeed a monkey on the loose. Nearby, Kokey waves at her to get her attention, which creeps out Charisse once more!

While the elders are hunting the animal, Abi looks after the kids inside the house. Anna as usual is overcome with joy to be with her crush. On the other hand, Bong sneaks out to find Kokey while Jimboy follows after him. Outside, Jimboy accuses him that the monkey must be his pet! But Abbie stops their squabble and commands them to go back inside the house. Meanwhile, Marcial and Charisse continues the search on the garden. Thinking that she hit her mark, Charisse repeatedly bashes the culprit who's hiding under the plants! As it is, she smashed Abie and her son in the head instead who were merely peeing there!

Reunited again, Peping explains that Kokey went back at Aling Charisse's home to eat the food that they left. Bong admonishes them that they should have waited for him and Anna to give them their meal since it is dangerous for Kokey to venture outside and be seen by people. All of a sudden, the bell chimes which signals that their message was successfully sent to outer space! They quickly climb the rooftop but no response is forthcoming.

At the Allegre mansion, Doña Ingrid finally gets hold of the researched data made by Lucio. He reports to her that he had employed another person to locate her heir. Satisfied with his work, Doña Ingrid reminds him to deliver all the information he will gather to her first.

In the prison, Myra tries to contact her lawyer to help her with the parole she plans to acquire. To her shock, her attorney already migrated abroad for two years now! Worried about how her case is being dealt with, Linda offers to refer Myra to her own lawyer. Upon hearing this, Myra is filled with excitement as she assures Linda that whether her offer will push through or not, she is glad to have a true friend like her.

Later, Nicassio goes back to the river where he last saw the baby to consider the possibilities where Myra could have left her son back then. He explains to Lucio that it is impossible for her to leave the infant to a friend because they have no neighbors nearby. And he remembers that the baby is with her when they were fighting by the waters. Then, Lucio brings up a significant detail when he asks what can be found at the end of the river. To which Nicassio answers, an orphanage.

1 - 10 EPISODE 10

To avoid further disasters, Bong and Anna decide to bring Kokey along to school. They hide the alien inside a large box and pose it as a school project to waive off the curiosity of Trining. At first, everything seems to be working to their advantage as Kokey whispers the correct answers to their teacher's questions.

On the library, Bong leaves the box by the stairs to do his lessons when the Jimboy seizes the opportunity to snoop what it contains inside. He then inserts his hand on the hole to poke around. Kokey bites him, which brings forth a piercing shriek of pain from the nosy kid. As such, Charisse rushes to the clinic and gets hysterical about the death of her son due to rabies!

When her son woke due to her noise, she confronts the school directress and complains about the incident. As soon as Trining arrives, she rants about how Anna brought an animal which gnawed Jimboy's hand. Anna explains that it is his fault for meddling with things that don't belong to him. Once and for all, Charisse tells them to open the box to reveal the culprit but no one wants to do the deed.

Hence, the principal volunteers to uncover the box herself. But before she could uncover it, Kokey transforms himself to a stuff toy! Shocked, Charisse fumes that there must be something else inside it. Trying to spot the culprit, she stumbles head-first inside!

On another shelter, Doña Alegre continues her cause to extend a hand to other poor orphans in lieu of her own frustration over her lost grandson. It has been her devotion for ten years now. And she vows that even if she finally found Gabriel, she will never stop this charitable endeavor. A ray of sunshine has come Myra's way because Linda's attorney shares some good news, that is, her case is eligible for parole since she has been in prison for ten years already. She fervently prays that Nicassio won't reach her son first, knowing that he only has evil plans for the child.

Unknown to her, Nicassio comes closer to Gabriel as he found St. Joseph orphanage to inquire about the baby whom they may have espoused under their care. He explains to Sister Aida that the infant was cradled on a basket and wore a bracelet, which indicates his identity. In truth, the mother has just shown Shane a bracelet, which belongs to Bong. Despite knowing that the circumstances coincide with Bong's history, she prefers not to disclose this information, realizing perhaps that something deeper lies behind the truth about the red stone.

Sister Aida explains to Shane that the orphans' identities are strictly confidential which is why she did not disclose the similar case that the orphanage has to Nicassio's inquiry. One can't be too sure in this day of rampant illegal syndicates. Also, she is not familiar with a certain Myra he was talking about and besides, many kids were abandoned with a bracelet on them.

The squabble between Charisse and Trining continues. They both rant to their respective husbands how mad they are at each other. Good friends Nanding and Marcial merely wish some peace and quiet but mollifying their wives seems to be far-fetched at this point. Meanwhile, Abie humbly asks for the Kaulugdans' forgiveness explaining that his sister is hot-headed by nature.

While he was doing so, Jimboy climbs up a ladder to pry on Bong's room. To his amazement, he sees him conversing with an unidentified someone. Before he can see things clearly, he falls down which leads the residents to discover him! He reveals what he had seen but since he is uncertain to what it is, Trining angrily tells them to leave the premises!

Determined to prove his suspicions, Jimboy steals the big box where Kokey is, and drags it to his parents' home. Peping catches him but Jimboy's strength proves too much for him. As such, he rushes to tell Bong what happened.

Charisse admonishes Jimboy for taking what doesn't belong to him, but her son justifies his act by saying that he merely wishes to prove their neighbors wrong. Charisse agrees so that the truth will finally be unveiled. However, they can hardly open the box as Kokey pulls its flaps with all his might!

Bong, Anna and Peping confides to Abie what happened thus, they arrive in time to stop Charisse and Jimboy from revealing Kokey! Since Charisse is adamant to check the box again, they finally uncover it. Thankfully, Kokey freezes himself to look like an inanimate toy. Bong explains that they embellished the teddy bear, the reason why it is made of rubber now. Before Charisse can recall her encounter with the 'monkey' the kids quickly make a dash for home.

In the mansion, Lucio reports to Doña Alegre how Myra confessed that her son is alive. However, he claims that Myra still refused to reveal his whereabouts. He left her with a promise to bring her heir to her. Outside, Nicassio pays the remaining half of Lucio's fee, not knowing that Doña Alegre has seen the exchange!

Meanwhile, Myra is depressed after hearing from the lawyer that their petition for parole has been denied. As such, she considers joining a group of prisoners who plan to stow away! But Linda carefully warns her to forget about it for she will only face a greater penalty for such crime. Bong and Anna are assigned as partners in creating a recycled airplane made of cans. As such, they ask Abbie to help them since he is an aspiring pilot. But in the middle of their work, Abie cuts himself so the two kids rushes out of Bong's room to get some meds. To Abie's shock, Kokey reveals himself to heal his wound! As it is, Kokey knows that he has a good heart which is why he has shown his identity to him. However, Abie faints right after he utters that he loves secrets!

With this, Trining gives the ledgers to her and found her perfect for the job!

Up on Bong's room, Peping can't stop Kokey from wailing after he had glimpsed a photo of a spaceship on a magazine. Hearing this, Nanding, Trining, Marcial, Charisse and Shane goes together to check where the sobs they heard are coming from. Peping and Kokey remained undiscovered however since they promptly hid under the bed.

As such, Charisse muses aloud that perhaps the Kalugdans' home is haunted! She further recalls the chaotic incident before where nothing was found missing from their appliances. As such, she becomes sleepless at night and wakes up Bong to commiserate with her broken heart. From here, Bong suggests to please her by getting some chocolates from the fridge only to find their house on fire!

Marcial however puts the blame on Bong whom he allegedly saw staring at the fire doing nothing. Marcial catches the boy in time to warn him about letting his imaginations run wild. He further threatens Bong that he may be sent to the shelter again if he dares to bring up what he heard. Dismayed on their failure, he reminds them to keep their thoughts to themselves from now on. Left without a choice, Nanding gathers his employees that he will lay off some of them to trim down the expenses of his weakening business. Thinking that he would be given the sack, Marcial is merely tasked to pick who should be thwarted.

When Nanding learns about this, he merely brushes off the idea that Bong is responsible for their ill-luck. But since Trining is adamant to confront the boy about it, she and Nanding decide to discuss the issue with the kids, only to back out after Bong and Anna hand them their profit from their garage sale!

However, Jimboy overhears his parents argue about the issue. Charisse tells Marcial that Nanding is not the kind of person who believes in such nonsense particularly when it concerns his beloved adopted son. With that knowledge, Jimboy only grows harsher towards Bong. He further outcasts him in school for fear of acquiring misfortune. This brings about a squabble between them which pushes the school principal to call on their moms. Charisse denies her son's statement that he heard her admit that Bong is a bringer of misfortune. Worried about where all this talk is coming from, Bong asks his mom for an explanation later on. Trining tells him the truth then but she assures the kid not to concern himself about it anymore.

At midnight, Lucio goes back at the orphanage to steal the box where all Bong's precious belongings are stored. However, Robin discovers him and immediately shouts for help from the other orphans. Meanwhile, Kokey's departure is impeded by Abie who spots the alien leaving the house as he tries to get a goodnight kiss from Shane. He quickly leaves her side to speak to his friend and explain to him that neither he nor Bong is responsible for all the ill-fated events happening to the Kalugdans. Bong and Anna are brought to a DSWD shelter after the police took them from the streets. But Kokey and Peping save their butts through the alien's smart acting skill as a robot! As they flee for escape, Kokey encounters the blind woman whom he had healed before! After telling her their dilemma, she gladly lets them stay at her humble abode than leave them skulking into danger outside. At the Allegre mansion, Nicassio resorts to desperate measures since he is really impatient now to get his hands on Doña Ingrid's wealth. Fearless now, he shocks her with his declaration that he never intended to reunite her with her long lost grandson for he is after the inheritance. Taking Doña Ingrid as captive, he threatens her life saying that she has no choice but to change her last will and testament since he already killed her trusted lawyer!

Meanwhile, everyone is sick with worry in the Kalugdans' home including Charisse, Myra and Sister Zoraida. Nicassio even arrives only to terrorize Myra that he will kill her son if he gets to him first. Police officers arrive in time to break them apart but the two remain mum on what's really going on. Sister Zoraida tells Myra that reporting Nicassio to the police is useless since she has no proof that he is really a murderer. Knowing that her son needs ultimate protection, she tries to find an ally in Doña Ingrid, only to find Nicassio barring the gates, telling her that the old woman left for the States.

With that, Myra confides her innermost fears to Sister Zoraida as she feels in her gut that everything Nicassio told her was just a pack of lies. Confirming her musings, the concerned mother superior says that it's impossible for Doña Ingrid to leave the country without telling her since the wealthy benefactor has many projects in mind for the orphanage. In the meantime, even Charisse now is filled with terror as she learns the whole truth about Anna's parentage! Sister Zoraida lets it slip that the beloved daughter of the Kalugdans is also adopted! And in fact, Anna is the child of her bestfriend Divina, the deceased girlfriend of Nicassio! Closely linked by a twist of fate, it turns out that Bong and Anna are real cousins! Not wanting to be a burden anymore to Kokey's friend, Bong, Anna Peping and Kokey are preparing to leave when a sudden street fight with a gang of children separates Anna from them! Later that night, she is still unable to find her way back when several baranggay officials come to her aid and identify her as the missing kid from the posters!

After eluding his reach for so many years, Nicassio has found Charisse and is demanding her to spill where Divina and his child are. Unknown to him, the ironic hand of fate has thrown together both the lost heir and his own daughter in a tangle of events that leads to a bigger mess! Off to the dense forest, Bong, Peping and Kokey are determined to fix the latter's spaceship this time. Just when they thought the machine is now working, its engine still bogs down after a while. So Peping smartly suggests that Abie may help them since flying airplanes is his interest after all. Upon seeing the amazing craft, Abie agrees to help them but he says that he has to research first about fixing spaceships.

At the mansion, Nicassio is just showing Doña Ingrid a video footage of Myra and the Kalugdans when he suddenly spots Charisse in the background! Mad as hell, she confronts the former cabaret girl to tell him the whereabouts of Divina and their child. Knowing that he is up to no good, she tries her best to maneuver him, all to no avail. Furious with her antics, Nicassio threatens to kill her whole family if she still refuses to reveal the orphanage where she gave his child, upon learning that his ex-girlfriend had died already. Meanwhile, Anna is safely back to her home with Trining fussing over her. Sick with all the excitement she had experienced, Anna is even pampered by Charisse, now that she knows the truth about her parentage. Later, Anna spots Abie on their house telling Shane that he is busy for the day. Knowing that he's off to fix Kokey's spaceship she decides to follow him.

On his way to the forest, Abie catches Anna tailing after him! At first, he is adamant to send her home but Anna begs him to tag her along for she merely wants to see her friends again. Convinced, he brings Anna with him not knowing that Jimboy is also shadowing them! As such, the naughty kid finally catches on their secret! The imp threatens them to tell the elders what they are hiding all this time! For he realizes that all his suspicions before are true after all. Abie tries to appease his nephew by insisting how he has been acting like a brat ever since, and that changing his attitude may bring him closer to him and Anna.

Eventually, they have persuaded Jimboy to be cool about it. But things get out of hand when he starts to interfere with the gadgets inside the spaceship! Annoyed, Bong and Anna asks him what he did when Jimboy suddenly presses a button to show them, only to get everyone electrocuted with their sizes shrinking!

Jimboy's mischief leads the kids to more trouble as their sizes shrank when he tampers with the gadgets inside Kokey's spaceship. As they come to grips with their predicament, Abie tries his best to reach for the controls, all to no avail. So he leads them outside to see if they can find help. In the process, they encounter a spider who tries to eat up Jimboy! In the end, Kokey is able to defend him by simply threshing things out with the creature. As they call it a night, Kokey has just lighted a bonfire when heavy drops of rain fall over them! With their reduced builds, they are able to find shelter under the scattered leaves. Soon after the downpour stopped, Abie and the kids finally take their rest, with Kokey ensuring that they are kept warm by the fire to get a goodnight sleep.

Meanwhile, Trining continues to blame herself as Anna gets away again. But Charisse worriedly reveals that even her unico hijo and her nephew are lost! Unaware that the prank call Trining received is from her own daughter, the elders anxiously stay awake all night as they try to think where the kids might have gone. At St. Joseph Orphanage, Nicassio is overcome with rage as he lashes out on Charisse and Sister Zoraida for trying to hide the truth from him. But the brave nun refuses to be daunted by his threats even as he tries to assault her! Good thing the orphans and Myra arrive in time to stop him. After reporting the incident to the authorities, Myra decides to get help from Don Faustino who had been an instrument of her freedom.

But as she pleads for his cooperation, Don Faustino admits that he himself hasn't heard from Doña Ingrid for days now. Reaching to the same suspicion as hers, he also deems it impossible for the elderly Allegre to go abroad for in fact, she has been closely working with him to find her lost grandson! He further reveals that Doña Ingrid is the one who really helped her get out of prison. Later, Nicassio complains about his splitting headache courtesy of the kids who beat him up on the shelter. Though weak from being a captive, Doña Ingrid further aggravates him by telling him that it serves him right to get punished for his evil deeds. But even as they talk, the police break inside the mansion to catch Nicassio who in turn gets away in time, leaving Lucio to bear his crime!

Still on their tiny sizes, Kokey, Abie and the kids wake up filled with excitement on the day ahead. Nature has become their playground as they delighted on taking a dip on the cool river. Everything is going smoothly until Peping drowns in the deep water! Abie dives under but he can't find him on the murky stream. As such, Kokey uses his powers to call a fish for help! Within minutes, it successfully saves an unconscious Peping. Soon after he stirs, Abie implores the children to be more careful next time. And since the unbelievable has truly befallen them, they should try to resolve the difficult situation they are in now. Yet as they muse on what they are going to do next, the earth suddenly shakes with the coming of a frog! It hungrily stares at his bountiful prey, ensnares them with its lengthy trap and swallows them whole! This time, they can only rely on their wits as they tickle the frog's stomach until it finally bursts out again!

Meanwhile, Myra visits the Kalugdans to hear the latest news on Bong only to find out that even Ana, Jimboy and Abie has gone missing this time! A bit defensive on her faults, Trining asks if she told Doña Ingrid what she has done to Bong. But Myra merely assures her that she simply wanted to comfort the recuperating woman with encouraging updates. Myra notifies them how the rich Allegre suffered under the hands of Nicassio who has escaped the authorities. With this danger hanging over them, the Kalugdans together with Marcial and Charisse rush to the nearest radio station to make an announcement about their missing children. Once they were there however, Charisse takes the opportunity to make photo-ops within ABS-CBN compound! Finally, she joins the others on the radio booth to make her overly dramatic plea! But since she's not aiding their case, Trining takes the reign and broadcasts her call for help herself. On the hospital, Doña Ingrid awakens up to find Myra and Faustino by her bedside. Before she could react, Faustino explains to her that if not for her daughter-in-law he won't be alarmed by her disappearance. This started a belated reconciliation with Doña Ingrid apologizing for all she had done to make Myra's life miserable. But the latter simply dismisses the past and humbly tells her mother that it's never too late for a new beginning.

Unknown to them, Nicassio has been shadowing their moves for some time now! But first, he raids Marcial's home to steal some clothing and food! Worse, he decides to stakeout right there amidst the unsuspecting owners!

Will Kokey and the kids ever go back to their normal selves again? What other disasters will they come across while they remain as little as they are now? And more importantly, what's next on Nicassio's evil plans to kill Gabriel?

The kids emerge victorious after targeting the funny bones of the bull frog. Still, their diminutive state continues as they forge ahead to more exciting adventures. First up is the army of ants who come running after them as they reek of the fruits they have eaten along the way! They quickly jump on the cool river knowing that the tiny creatures can't follow them there anymore. After making a brief pit stop to dry themselves by the fire, they surge onto their endless hike. Bone-tired already, Peping points at an ideal shelter for them to rest on. But they are in for a surprise when it turns out to be a shell of a turtle whose head suddenly comes out of it, scaring them witless! On their way out of the radio station, Charisse is still thrilled by the opportunity to greet all her townsfolk as well as her chance encounter with Natutulog Ba Ang Diyos Hottie Jake Cuenca. Bursting with pride, she shows her photo-op with him to an envious Trining, only to find out that his face wasn't captured on the picture!

Back to the Kalugdans' home, Trining can hardly eat for she is still worried how her children are faring on the streets. Amidst their anxiety, Charisse tries to take comfort from her former lover, then immediately backs off as she sees Trining's warning look. On the other hand, Shane, who merely wants to be optimistic about the whole deal, receives a rebuke from Charisse, who in turn rants that no one can think of happy thoughts in these times of serious trouble. Later, Marcial notices that everything is in a mess back in their home, thinking that their maid left the chores undone. Much to his astonishment though, Nicassio grabs him out of nowhere! Nicassio persuades Marcial to let him stay there for a while, but the latter is uneasy with him around. But despite Marcial's hesitation, the choice is stolen from his hands as Nicassio turns the table on him by threatening his friendship with Nanding, and worse, the life of his family.

As such, Marcial reluctantly allows him to sleep on Jimboy's room. With its door ajar, Charisse mistakenly thinks that Abie is back after seeing a man by the bed. But as she tugs the blanket off her nephew to demand where her son is, she is struck with fear upon discovering Nicassio right under her roof!

1 - 26 EPISODE 26

Charisse is horrified to see Nicassio on her abode but she is left without a choice but to let him stay than risk both her life and her husband's. But she refuses to give him a special treatment by serving unsavory dishes before him. Undeterred, Nicassio simply waves the threatening knife on his hand to discourage the couple from defying him. When Nanding arrives on their doorstep, Marcial frantically dashes to answer the knock and to prevent his friend from entering his home. Nanding immediately senses that something is wrong after hearing Marcial's bizarre excuses why he can't go with him to the police. Even Charisse, who usually welcomes him with zest, begs off.

So he gathers several neighbors to make a hasty forced entry despite Trining's arguments. And true enough, his suspicion is confirmed when he spots Charisse and Marcial trying to entertain the wanted man, Nicassio! His intention to knock him out cold is ruined by Trining and Shane's loud arrival. As such, Nicassio manages to escape yet again after shielding himself with Charisse. Meanwhile, Doña Ingrid is now recovering her health as she pleads Myra to tell everything that she knows about Bong. Myra confides that she doesn't know a lot except the fact that he is a good kid who is loved by many people. In the meantime, Myra and Doña Ingrid have finally reconciled their differences. And as the latter prepares to go back to the mansion, she implores her daughter-in-law to join her there and allow her to make up for all the misery she had given her and Isidro.

On the forest, Abie and the kids befriend a turtle who good-naturedly gives them a free ride on its back. However, their complaints about his slow steps push it to stop abruptly, which throws Kokey out. Eventually though, the turtle is mollified by their joyful dance number. Near sunset-time, the turtle finally drops them off on a place where they encounter a new danger! This time, a lizard tries to catch them as its prey! Amidst the confusion, Peping and Jimboy break away from the group so Abie comes to look for them. Upon seeing Abie, the two are happy to skirt the lizard, only to find it back again in front of them. Cornered, Abie, Peping and Kokey beg for their lives and much to their delight, the creature quickly goes away. But all their adventures prove to be too much for Abie, who suddenly faints in fear for the second time around!

1 - 27 EPISODE 27

As the cloak of night falls over the forest, Abie and the kids remain stranded in their reduced sizes. But while they are dozing off to sleep, a mosquito suddenly bites Anna on her arm! They brush this aside but come morning, she contracts a raging fever. Once again, Kokey saves the day as he use up his powers to heal Anna's illness. Up on their feet, Anna later becomes irritable with their dismal fate. She begins to throw blames on Jimboy and Bong which starts a dissent between the siblings. As the two groups are divided to appease each child, ant buddies Anton and Annie who lost each other separately ask for their assistance.

Like a blessing in disguise, the small creatures impart the value of teamwork, patience and understanding towards their fellow ants. This paves the way for Bong and Anna to mend their differences eventually. Back to their never-ending journey though, they come across a flock of crows that seem to threaten their lives! Meanwhile, Marcial's betrayal for conniving with Nicassio appears to bring about an irreparable damage on his relationship with Charisse. Deeply hurt by what happened, she declares a war between them. As such, everything in their house is strictly divided, and Charisse forbids Marcial to cross the lines, literally. On his part, Marcial continues his hate campaign against Bong even though the boy has long departed the home of the Kalugdans. But Nanding refuses to accept his friend's twisted perception. He reiterates that never for one moment did he believe the fortuneteller's prediction that Bong is unlucky. Instead, he muses that perhaps, Marcial is really the ill-fated one because of his curls. Despite Charisse's intention to protect her family image, she is unable to keep the cruel truth from Trining. Ashamed for her husband, she confides that Marcial has been scheming with Nicassio all along. Trining is shocked and furious by this news but she counsels that they should be focusing all their strength on their missing children for now.

An eagle grabs Anna by its feet and flies her away towards its nest! Apparently, the female black bird mistakes her for a worm which it wants to offer for its hatchling! Kokey quickly goes to the rescue by using his powers to converse with another bird who happens to know where to find Anna. Upon reaching their destination however, a scuffle occurs between the two birds who turn out to be former lovers!

Fortunately, the good-hearted one implores the eagle to let go of Anna with a promise to get back with her now that her other lover had left her. Anna is truly grateful to Kokey for saving her life once again. But much to the kids' concern, the friendly alien slowly loses his strength every time he exercises his powers. Afraid to lose his extraterrestrial bestfriend, Bong decides that they won't be asking for help from Kokey next time unless they are facing a grave danger.

On the mansion, the Kalugdans including Marcial and Charisse finally meet Doña Ingrid. Tactless as always, Charisse tells the wealthy Allegre matriarch that they can speed up the search for Bong through her financial assistance. In turn, Doña Ingrid assures her that it won't be a problem and in fact, she really means to aid them in finding all the missing kids. Back to the Kalugdans' home, Charisse confides to Trining that her deceased friend Divina is surely grateful to her and Nanding for taking good care of her daughter Anna. Seeing that Trining can't follow what she is trying to say, she finally reveals that she knows that Bong and Anna are both adopted children!

Cornered, Trining explains that it is not easy for her to admit that she is barren. But Charisse quickly consoles her that she even admires her strength of character. Handling the issue with such delicacy that is different from her usual personality, Charisse further breaks to her the truth that the father of Anna is no less than the bad guy, Nicassio! That same night, Myra gently prepares Doña Ingrid for bedtime when Nicassio suddenly slips inside the house! After knocking down the security guard, he follows the two onto the old lady's room. And as soon as Myra has gone, he swiftly goes in for the kill! Meanwhile, Abie and the kids are soundly asleep as the leaf continues to float them across the river. Kokey on the other hand remains wide awake when suddenly, he spots a spaceship above the starlit sky!

1 - 29 EPISODE 29

With a raised knife on his hand, Nicassio's attempt to murder Doña Ingrid in her sleep fails for the old woman is awake all along. It turns out that Myra has prepared well for Nicassio's return in the mansion. As the authorities arrest him however, he angrily shouts that he is far from finished with them yet. Meanwhile, Charisse and Marcial are still at war. Betrayed, the latter takes the demarcation line that she arranged very seriously. Even their visitors are not allowed to tread the traitor's territory. But instead of going along with them, Nanding exclaims that they can't continue their battle especially if their son Jimboy is home again. This brings them back to their present dilemma. They are arguing on the shop when Doña Ingrid and Myra arrive to tell them that she is willing to give a reward to whoever will find the missing children, P1M for Bong and P200,000 each for the others. With this, they revisit the radio station to broadcast this latest development on their search.

By the river, Bong awakens to Kokey's excited shriek about seeing a spaceship which has come to bring him back to planet Yekok. Much to Kokey's sorrow though, it was just a figment of his imagination. He tearfully confides to Bong that his mom is the only family he's got for his dad was killed by other aliens who were after the red stone. And though Kokey misses his mother desperately, he has no choice but to wait until his damaged spaceship is fixed again. At the same time, he assures Bong that he will help him find his happiness before he leaves planet earth. The next morning, they are roused by the stinking smell of heaps of garbage that are thrown on the river. They are merely chatting noisily when suddenly, the current sweeps them inside a duct straight towards the canal, running beside St. Joseph's orphanage! Happy to reach their destination at last, Abie leads the pack inside the house by climbing through the thread that he found. But before seeking Sister Zoraida's help, ransacking the kitchen for food comes first on their list of things to do.

Reminiscent of Kokey's quick snatches before, they proceed to munch the pieces of freshly-baked bread on the table. However, the cook arrives without a warning! As such, Jimboy has no time to move away from the chopped garlic which will be used for what Mang Estoy is cooking!

Abie and the other kids quickly go to the rescue as Jimboy is about to be sautéed in Mang Estoy's meal for the day. Soon after saving Jimboy's butt from the hellish pan, they realize the need for them to pray for guidance particularly now that they are going to ask Sister Aida's help. Bong leads the way inside her office where the nun happens to be on her desk doing some paperworks. They excitedly shriek for her name but with their undersized heights, their voices can hardly be heard by anyone. So they climb the leg of the table to get nearer to the mother superior. They are almost blown away again as Sister Aida fans herself. Fortunately, they are able to hold on tight while trying to call for help. Bong then decides to climb on her ear so she can take heed of them. Kokey further uses his power to keep Bong hanging on thin air. Eventually, the nun finally pays attention, thinking that she is spooked by Bong's dead spirit!

Hence, Abie considers using the magnifying glass so Sister Aida can easily see them. When she finally did, the nun is shocked by what she spots the tiny kids on her table! Stricken, Sister Aida eventually calms down to listen to Bong's explanations. She then identifies each of them including the inevitable she finally meets the friendly alien, Kokey! Thereafter, Mother Superior goes straight to what matters at this point, which is to bring them back to their respective families. Whether they can accept them as they are now is out of the question. As she gently put them inside the box, Sister Zoraida tells them that she will just get some snacks for their hungry appetites. Unknown to them, a nun enters to clean the room including the box where they are currently residing!

Sister Zoraida is now privy with the bizarre situation of Bong and his friends. All is set for them to return to their respective families but several mishaps still hinder their way! Meantime, a throng of imposters rush to the Kalugdans' home to bring false hopes all for the sake of the bounty! Sister Aida leaves the kids for a while in her desk to get some food, only to come back in time to see one of her nuns meddling with the box where six tiny lives reside! After admonishing her nun about its importance, she carefully arranges to transport them inside the van. When they are near their destination however, the driver suddenly pulls into a stop, causing the box to topple from her lap! So when she alights from the van, she unknowingly leaves Jimboy behind! Abie has noticed his nephew's absence though, so he quickly tells Mother Superior to look for Jimboy. But by then, the latter has already stepped out of the vehicle towards his home to rush to his mother's arms himself.

Meanwhile, Trining drops by at Charisse's home. Both are losing hope after the fake tales that they have heard and seen from the people who came to them a result of their tempting announcement on the radio. There are those who claim that they havetaken their kids under their wing while others allege that their children have died already! Fed up by all these nonsense, the two comfort each other as Charisse yaks about her only son. Unknown to them, Jimboy has indeed arrived, but his shouts remain unheard by them. As such, he opts to climb on his mother's lap towards the table, until he finally reaches the rim of Charisse's glass of water. By this time, Abie has also found Jimboy who's about to be drank by his sister! Unsuspecting about the strange happening, Charisse proceeds to gulp down her water, causing Jimboy to fall down inches away from her mouth! Will Jimboy be swallowed by her mother? How will the elders react when they finally learn their children's undersized dilemma?

Jimboy has escaped from being swallowed by Charisse through Abie's help. The latter admonishes him about following instructions for they can't expect the elders to immediately understand their state and the reasons that led to it. But his stubbornness still prevails. Sister Zoraida is still looking for Jimboy on the street when Nanding catches her off guard. She then invites him to a close-door meeting back to his house where he gently breaks the news to him. Nanding who swears that he has no history of heart attack is nevertheless shocked upon seeing the kids through a magnifying glass! He tries to calm down while Mother Superior spills the truth about Kokey and how Jimboy shrank their sizes after tampering with the alien's spaceship! All these out of this world circumstances prove to be too much for him.

So they decide to hide the truth from Trining for a while. But by then, Charisse has already seen Jimboy who has cleverly bitten her big toe to finally get her attention. But instead of feeling alarmed, she excitedly welcomes the return of her only son as well as her beloved brother Abie. Soon after their bizarre reunion, she dashes to the Kalugdans' home to share her discovery to Marcial. Shane tells her though that he has gone with a customer. As such, she simply rushes to Nanding and Sister Zoraida, who in turn, are glad to know that she has taken what happened lightly. But all the commotion has alerted Trining who takes one look and then becomes upset to see her midget-children including an alien! However, Nanding assures her that Kokey is harmless. And furthermore, that it was him who restored his health after his terrible accident. On top of all the excitement, Trining realizes that it is important to convey this latest happening to Myra and Doña Ingrid, who have been waiting for positive updates for some time now. Meantime, Sister Zoraida talks to Bong in private for him to know the truth of his parentage. Tears quickly fall from the boy's eyes as soon as he heard that Myra is no less than his real mom!

1 - 33 EPISODE 33

Bong, originally christened as Gabriel, learns that Sister Zoraida kept the truth from him at first, for fear that he may not understand the reasons why Myra gave him up. Trining also apologizes for hurting him before. And that despite everything, she deeply loves him like a real son, which Bong sincerely understands. That same night, Charisse refuses to share the good news to Marcial since his thoughts seem to be pre-occupied with something grave other than the loss of Jimboy. In truth, he is worried about Nicassio's blackmailing effort to further deepen his link as an accomplice to his evil plans. The war of the couple continues until the next day when Marcial discovers the kids' predicament at last. After his initial shock, he agrees to go with them towards the spaceship. Kokey then points out the right button to push where another laser beam strikes them back into their original sizes!

This blissful reunion brings forth a celebration where they excitedly devour the feast that Charisse has prepared. And when Doña Ingrid and Myra arrived, Gabriel happily rushes to his mother's loving arms.

Meeting his grandmother heightens his joy because now, his dream to have his own family finally comes true! However, Anna is saddened by their parting for she has become accustomed to having Gabriel by her side. Her parents then explain to her that it is only right for Gabriel to be with his real family, and it doesn't mean that their bond as siblings will change because of that. On his part, Gabriel also assures her the same thing when they have gone to bid each other goodbye. This joyful event is marred though by the fact that Nicassio is still alive. And anytime soon, he may discover that Anna is his daughter! Indeed, Trining has reason enough to fear because Nicassio and Lucio are preparing for their escape from prison! Worse, they have conspired with Marcial to provide their getaway ride!

Charisse's distrust towards Marcial heightens with his suspicious disappearing acts. Even Jimboy's return fails to pave the way for a ceasefire between the estranged couple. And worse, an ironic twist of fate leads to their son's discovery of Marcial's sabotaging efforts in the past towards the Kalugdans! Gabriel can't believe his eyes as he takes in the impressive Alegre mansion. He happily basks in the loving protection of Myra and Doña Ingrid, who are determined to make up for loss time by spoiling him. Kokey's longing for his own mother is also banished as he indulges in the luxuries that are showered upon them. Blessed with a golden heart, the two wish to extend all of it to the orphans and their friends.

Little did they know that an impending trouble is not long in coming. Marcial's wickedness is now haunting him and he only deepens his crime by continuing to connive with Nicassio. Back home, his peace offering further enrages Charisse, and it seems that there's nothing he can do to pacify her. Later that night, Marcial quietly flees the house to help Nicassio escape from prison. Filled with jitters, he ensures that the getaway car is ready to bring Nicassio and Lucio to their hiding place. After he has done his part, he tells Nicassio not to bother his family again. Nicassio agrees but not before warning him what he can do if he dares to say anything to the police. Nicassio's escape is all over the news the next day, which intensifies Marcial's guilty conscience. Then he shares to the other workers on the shop how he is bothered by the injustice that he has done to Nanding and his family. And the thought that things have fallen in their right place now still does not give him comfort.

Unknown to him, Jimboy has heard him talk about his treachery towards the Kalugdans! He quickly reports this to Charisse, who in turn confronts Marcial in front of Nanding and Trining! Mad as hell, Charisse can't bear his betrayal and the disgrace he has caused their family. Hence, she threw all his clothes outside as she furiously tells him never to return home again! What will be Nicassio's next step now that he is free again? Can Abie finally fix Kokey's spaceship?

1 - 35 EPISODE 35

Nanding's forgiving heart stops him from suing his laborers for conniving with Marcial's 'hate campaign' against his family. But his compassion doesn't discount their betrayal and the danger they have put through on his loved ones. So he quickly dismisses them from their jobs. This move takes its toll on them though as they fail to come up with the needed produce for their clients. Good thing Kokey is around to use his powers in helping them create more meteorite designs like he did before. In the Alegre mansion, Christmas is being celebrated by the family after all the good things that came after Gabriel is found. Struck by the strange decors in the house, Kokey learns from Gabriel the meaning of this human tradition. Touched by the tale of the birth of Jesus, he requests to hear more Christmas stories from Doña Ingrid. And on that same night, Kokey decides to end his earthly lola's misery by curing her crippled legs! Meanwhile, Marcial seeks shelter from Nicassio's hideout after he was turned away by his family and friends. He soon realizes the danger of conniving with Nicassio again, but it is too late for him to leave for he becomes Nicassio's prisoner. Back on the Kalugdans' home, Abie, Kokey and Bong return from their visit on the spaceship, disheartened, since they are still unable to fix its damage. Trining tries to smoothen everyone's feelings by inviting her neighbors to have dinner with her family while Myra and Gabriel bid their farewells to them. The two are just about to leave when Nicassio suddenly grabs Gabriel out of nowhere!

1 - 36 EPISODE 36

All hell breaks loose when Nicassio tries to capture Bong in front of the Kalugdans' home. The barangay police arrive in the nick of time to disperse the commotion but Nicassio and Lucio escape arrest once more. They are far from giving up however as the two plot to kidnap Anna since she's an easier target and at the same time, they can get their revenge on Bong's foster parents. When they have gone back to the Kalugdans, Marcial is able to flee from Pedro to warn Charisse of the impending disaster. But after all his lies, Charisse refuses to listen to him anymore.

As such, Marcial decides to tell Nanding himself. Once there, he is not allowed entry for what he's saying may be just another ruse. Eventually, Trining consents his plea but they it is already too late to save Anna. She easily falls trap to Nicassio's evil plans. Much later, they receive a call from Anna who's crying for help. As it is, Nicassio is demanding for a fifty million-peso ransom, which should be delivered by Bong, Myra and Doña Ingrid alone, in exchange of the girl's freedom.

Even Charisse is panic-stricken knowing that it is Divina's child who's at risk. Many times she almost lets the truth slip from her mouth but Trining is always there to stop her. Back to the danger they are facing, everyone realizes that Nicassio is so sure that Doña Ingrid can produce the money easily. Hence, the three Allegres together with Nanding and Kokey meet up with the captors. However, they soon learn that they are after the money and Bong as part of his ultimate revenge for himself and his mom. Then a pandemonium breaks out again where Nicassio poises his gun to shoot Bong. But instead, Kokey swiftly rescues his friend and takes the bullet himself!

Nicassio is about to shoot them all when Charisse and the others arrive in time to scream that Anna is his real daughter. While he's trying to come to grips with this fact, the police's appearance pressures him into firing his gun everywhere, wounding Bong in the process. Nicassio also takes a gunshot from the authorities, but he and Lucio manages to escape yet again. Thereafter, Bong and Kokey are immediately sent in the E.R. to save their lives. Unfortunately, both need intensive operation for them to recover. Myra volunteers for the blood transfusion while Charisse takes charge on finding a trustworthy doctor to care for the alien.

Anna's world turns upside down with the sudden revelation of her parentage. She can't fathom how she could have a bad guy as a father. Charisse apologizes for keeping the truth from her. She explains how her bestfriend Divina has made her vow not to give her to Nicassio no matter what. Charisse further recounts that at time, she was not capable of raising her alone so she sent her to St. Joseph's orphanage, where Trining and Nanding have adopted her. Then Trining continues to tell Anna that never had she seen her other than as her own child. And Trining reiterates that she is a gift from God whom she loves with all her heart. Later, Kokey rises from his bed to see Bong, who's still unconscious from the shock of his injury. Although he is also weak himself, Kokey uses the remnants of his power to heal his friend's wounded body. Pale from this feat, he collapses on the floor, in a coma once more.

After a while Bong awakes to see the bullet wound gone from his body! Much to his distress, he spots Kokey lying on the floor, and he quickly realizes that it is because his alien friend has cured him! He then cries for Kokey to get up in vain. Myra who's spending the night outside hears his wails and rushes to his side. Bong tells both Myra and the doctor that he's okay because of Kokey who appears to be dead by then. Much later, the doctors and the authorities take the alien under their wing to become a specimen for testing. As such, Bong, Myra and Nanding connive to steal him away from them. They swiftly bring Kokey inside the van as they drive towards the forest. On the way, they make a call to the others, alerting them that they intend to transport Kokey to his spaceship. Once they reach the place however, the spaceship is already being controlled by an unknown entity, and it abruptly sucks Kokey inside the flying craft!

Bong can only cry his heart out as Kokey gets sucked inside the spaceship right in front of him. His distress did not last for long though as Kokey returns back from the dead in a jiffy! But they encounter a greater shocker when another alien alights from the spaceship! Together with Bong and Kokey's miraculous recovery, the arrival of Kakay, who turns out to be Kokey's mom, paves the way for a grand celebration, with Charisse's excellent culinary skills at the helm of it all. Everyone easily warms up to Kakay, while she discovers the wonders of planet earth and the bighearted people who took care of her son.

Soon after thanking the Kalugdans and Charisse for their good deeds, Kakay takes Kokey aside to tell him that it is time for them to return to planet Yekok. Despite his apprehensions on leaving Bong and Anna behind, Kokey realizes the wisdom of her pleas, since their lives are in danger from human beings and their alien-enemies alike. Charisse takes the opportunity to be alone with Kokey to apologize for mistaking him for a monkey before. She recounts how she never knew then that he never meant them harm, the reason why she tried to kill him. And to recompense for what happened, she displays an overflowing hospitality towards him and his mother.

This joyful happening is soon marred when the news is out that Kakay and Kokey are about to fly back to their real home. But eventually, even Bong has accepted the reality that Kokey can't forever escape the cruel interests of other people. Finally, they bid each other goodbye with Charisse's last request for more photo-ops! Thereafter, Mracial, Abie and Bong send their alien-friends on their way back to the spaceship. Meanwhile, Nicassio is still hiding in the forest alone. Despite the pain from his bullet wound, he swears that he won't allow himself to be arrested no matter what. Obviously, he refuses to give up his revenge against Bong and his families! Will Nicassio's wicked heart push him to resort to more evil means? And will Bong ever see his beloved bestfriend again?

Kokey has come to love his family here on earth so saying farewell to them especially to Bong becomes an emotional moment. He even gives the red stone (chipeka) to him as a remembrance of their friendship. Instead, he will simply teach them the power of great love to restore peace and harmony there. But as soon after their take-off, another spaceship suddenly attacks their craft! Kakay fearfully instructs Kokey to hold on while telling him about his father's long-standing enemy, Kolokoy, who's after the red stone so he can rule over their planet! Thereafter, their spaceship crashes back to the forest loved by the landing of Kolokoy's.

Fortunately, Abie and Marcial get to them in time to take them into the van as they quickly vacate the vicinity. Aside from the imminent danger however, residents from the nearby area including St. Joseph orphanage has witnessed the unbelievable incident. Some of them even check the place where they spot a U.F.O! This brings to mind several evil interests like taking the aliens to scientific experts for them to gain money! On the van, Charisse and the others have seen Nicassio before they rush back to safety. However, they haven't gone far yet when the van's engine suddenly stops in the middle of the dark forest! Meanwhile, Nicassio encounters Kolokoy and offers him his services for his life to be spared. And when they finally realize where they are, the master of the house immediately calls their attention! According to him, trespassing on his prestigious abode has a corresponding punishment. Bong however pleads him to give them an easier penalty.

As such, Big Brother simply asks them to dance the PBB theme for the Celebrity Edition which will begin its second installment this coming October 15! But the jolly dancing everyone is doing suddenly halts as Charisse demands for a one-on-one with Kuya on the confession room! She then spills her pain due to her ongoing war with Marcial. Unknown to her, their conversation is being played for Marcial and the others outside! Soon after Marcial hears his wife's accusation though, he retorts that his side of the story should be heard too! Big Brother allows him to do so despite Charisse's protests. Marcial then cries about the fact that though it was him whom Charisse married, it still appears that Nanding is the one in her heart.

Charisse denies his claims saying that Nanding is already a part of her past and now, the only one he loves is him. She just can't accept his betrayal when he connived with her nemesis, Nicassio. Marcial disputes on the other hand that Nanding and Trining have already forgiven him, so there's no reason for her not to do it too. In the end however, all their arguments vanish, paving the way for a reconciliation between the couple.

This enables all viewers to witness the unbelievable sight of aliens dancing together with human beings! As expected, everyone is alarmed by this strange occurrence. In a short span of time, government officials, military men and scientists gather together for a meeting on how they will respond to this matter. Upon seeing Kokey and Kakay on TV, Nanding easily deduces that people will react negatively towards the aliens. Knowing that Charisse and the others have no idea yet of what's happening, he asks Shane to call Abie. However, Abie quickly rejects the call since it is Kuya's rule that they should have no contact from the outside world. Soon after this, Big Brother stops playing games with them as he asks them to leave the vicinity immediately.

And when they finally set out to go, they are shocked by the crowd who are protesting outside! As it is, their TV exposure paves the way for a massive pandemonium for the aliens to be arrested. Fortunately, the gang is able to escape with Kakay and Kokey safe with Bong and Abie. However, Korokoy who's hiding inside Nicassio's body, also flees after them! Korokoy almost catches his target prey but fate seems to prevent them from seeing each other for now. As they reach the Kalugdans' home, the couple and the other kids meet them at the back of the house where they decide to simply go to the Allegre mansion where they can hide since the police are already looking for all of them. Charisse however agrees to be their look-out, unaware that everyone has already left her! As such, it is she who the authorities have arrested for an investigation. Her witless rants though about her love life irk the two cops who release her later, or else, suffer her crazy stories. Thereafter, she is back to the loving arms of Marcial.

On the mansion, Charisse is filled with awe as she sees for the first time the luxurious home of Doña

Ingrid, while the latter catches up on the latest happenings. The others then introduce her to Kakay, the mother of Kokey. As it happens, Nicassio's body is found by the experts, and they conclude that the aliens from the PBB House are responsible for his death! As it is, he knows that finding Kakay and Kokey is just a matter of time. Meanwhile, Faustino accompanies Doña Ingrid and Myra towards the morgue to claim Nicassio's dead body, leaving the others at the mansion. By then, the police are already conducting surveillance outside. And they happen to spot Kokey and Bong on the balcony! As soon as Doña Ingrid returns, the authorities approach her to tell her about the aliens and their wanted accomplices who have invaded her home. Unfazed, Doña Ingrid denies her knowledge on the matter. Furthermore, she points out to respect their deceased family member and besides they have no search warrant anyway. Inside the mansion, Charisse feels better now that she can stop running away from Nicassio's wickedness as she holds his cremated remains on a white container. But their greater predicament still looms over them since the authorities' are on a stakeout outside. As such, Doña Ingrid suggests for them to hide on her Bulacan mansion in the meantime. Escape becomes possible as Marcial and Nanding pretend to be FBI agents to buy time for others to leave the house. After allowing the cops to search the premises, they immediately flee the vicinity towards their new destination. The next day, the Kalugdans as well as Marcial and Nanding don a disguise when they return to the city to pack some clothes with them. Trining is shocked to discover that her house was turned upside down! Nanding remains unruffled for he grasps that someone went there to look for the aliens.

On the other hand, Charisse is ranting again while Marcial sets out to prepare their things when she is scared witless by Nicassio whom she sees on the window, smelling her out! Screaming for help, Marcial rushes to her aid and tries to calm her down, saying that it's a mere figment of her imagination. When everything's ready, the two pairs of couple get inside the van to start their journey back to Bulacan. They are all in high spirits for they can finally take their rest after their stressful experience with the bad alien and the police. Kakay deduces that the culprit is her alien nemesis who won't stop at anything just to claim lots of powers! Unwary of Korokoy's whereabouts, they feel at ease that he won't be able to follow them in their present residence. Later that night, the friendly aliens treat the kids to some Christmas magic to raise their down-hearted moods after being locked up for so long. This activity though weakens the two, the reason why they can hardly get up from bed the next morning. As such, Charisse helps Kakay cool her heels on the porch while eating their merienda, not knowing that Korokoy is only meters away from them!

Meanwhile, Janina is filled with jealousy when she sees Korokoy looking beyond the gates of a stranger's house. Thinking that he is playing around with other girls, she infuriates him as she tries to convince him to return to her abode. her create a new satellite that they can use to contact their fellow-aliens from planet Yekok.

Korokoy in turn has woken up in time to snatch his amulet away from Janina's hands. And later, he is able to use this tracing device to verify that Kakay and Kokoy are residing on the mansion which he was checking out earlier. Simultaneously, he gradually transforms into his original alien form! But he avoided doing so after swallowing his preventive drink. Hence, he is able to enjoy his dinner date with Janina. That same night, Kakay goes to bed, still worried about the perils that are looming over them. So instead of having a restful sleep, she dreams about Nicassio who pulled a gunshot at her! Myra immediately gives them a glass of milk to restore their health. Still, this is not enough to treat the common human virus which happens to be deadly for aliens! Kakay exclaims that only the body fluid from a fellow Yekokan can revitalize her and Kokey again. With that, Bong's concern towards his good friends urges him to find Korokoy who's the only other alien here on planet earth. KOLCHAK: THE NIGHT STALKER

Where monsters tread, only Cark Kolchak dares to follow. A walking pastiche of newshound clichés, Kolchak is an unorthodox down-at-hill reporter with a gift for snappy patter and a nose for the supernatural. Barley tolerated by his ulcer-ridden editor, and despised by the cops and politicians. Kolchak works a lonely beat his only companions a camera and a tape recorder into which he narrates his findings. And though he always gets his monster he never gets his scope as the lid is slammed down on his story.

Kolchak: The Night Stalker was thought to be the inspiration for Chris Carter to create the SF show THE X FILES, Darrin McGavin even starred in another Chris Carter production MILLENNIUM. Kolchak, played by Darrin McGavin first appeared in a brace of US TV movies, The Night Stalker and The Night Strangler (both seen on British TV). The first, about a vampire on the loose in Las Vegas, broke all ratings records. The second explored the strange underground world of old Seattle, lair for an alchemist who is murdering women to retain his youthful looks. Convinced that his character was a winner, McGavin himself co-produced the series, retaining the movies narrative style, but adding more character humour, but toning down the violence.

Each story featured a new monster, from Jack the Ripper, a blood thirsty werewolf and a Succubus (female demon) to a rampaging robot, a legendary swamp monster and an invisible space force. But in the best horror tradition, McGavin kept his monsters in the shadows favouring the power of suggestion over grisly and explicit shocks. Kolchak first stalked the late night schedules of only one ITV, Central, during the mid 80s, though of the 20 episodes made, only 13 were screened. The series got a deserved full run on BBC2 in 1992. The series however, was not a ratings hit in the US, this and a lawsuit by Jeff Rice - who claimed he never sold the rights to make a TV series - led to the show being cancelled after one season.

Darren McGavin played Carl Kolchak, an investigative newspaper reporter who had a knack of running into supernatural creatures. The series was based on The Kolchak Tapes an unpublished novel by Jeff Rice that caught the attention of Dan Curtis- the producer of Dark Shadows. Curtis obtained the rights to the book and proceeded to make it into a TV movie.

The movie The Night Stalker had Kolchak working for the Las Vegas Daily. While investigating a series of murders, he became convinced that a vampire was at work- Las Vegas being the perfect place for something that can only come out at night to live. Kolchak, as would always be the case, had trouble convincing anybody that supernatural forces were at work- most of all his overbearing boss Tony Vincenzo. The first movie was at the time the highest rated TV movie ever, prompting ABC to commission Curtis to make a second movie. The second film The Night Strangler, had Kolchak and Tony now working in Seattle and facing another string of bizarre murders. These Kolchak learned were being committed by a very old man who needed to kill in order to retain his youth. The underground Seattle in which the villain hides out in actuality exists the remains of the old Seattle which were destroyed by a fire in the late 19th century. This movie was also a success leading to a regular series. Dan Curtis was no longer involved with the series: Darren McGavin took over as executive producer.

Kolchak was now working for the Independent News Service based in Chicago. His boss was still Tony Vincenzo and the two still did not see eye to eye on things. Two additional regulars were added Emily Cowles, the author of the Miss Emily advice column and whom Kolchak trusted and Ron Updyke a society page reporter, who wanted to become a real reporter and was always trying to one up Kolchak to prove he was capable. Kolchak always seemed to turn up the supernatural no matter what he was covering. He never seemed able to convince the police to consider that the supernatural was involved despite his past track record. The monsters were most often kept in the shadows and rarely seen, much like the classic horror films of the 1940's. This fit in with Kolchak's wardrobe consisting of a vintage 1940's straw hat and rumpled seer sucker suit. The series however was not a ratings winner, this and a lawsuit by Jeff Rice- who claimed he never sold the rights to make a TV series- led to the show being cancelled after one season.

The executive producer for the show was Darren McGavin, the shows producers were Paul Playdon (eps 1-2) and Cy Chermak (Eps. 3-20). The theme was created by Gil Melle and the story consultant was David Chase. The series first premiered in the UK between 15th October and the 10th December 1983, with another run on Central on the 14th November 1948 - 4 March 1985. The episode "Chopper" was based on a story written by Robert Zemeckis and Bob Gale. The directors of photography were Donald Peterman (1.1), Alric Edens ASC (1.2), Edouardo Ricci (1.3) and Ronald W. Browne (1.4-1.20). The series was made at Universal City Studios. After the first two television movies were shown a script for third movie was written but was never filmed due to the series starting soon after the films. This third TV movie script was written by Richard Matheson and William F. Nolan. The idea for the Night Stalker was based on an unpublished story which had been written by Jeff Rice.

Some critics predicted the show would be a dark horse success and out-run a new show on NBC. Angie Dickinson's Police Woman. However, from the beginning, Night Stalker sank to the bottom of the ratings, while Police Woman ignited into a top 20 hit. Night Stalker also didn't reap any benefits from its three low-rated lead ins: Kodiak (a Clint Walker crime drama); THE SIX MILLION DOLLAR MAN and a Gary Busey-Mark Hamill comedy, The Texas Wheelers. Unable to flex any competitive muscle during its 20 episode run, Night Stalker staggered through the season, ending with summer reruns in 1975.

"It was a nightmare!" Those are the first words out of unit production manager Ralph Sario's mouth. In a nutshell, Kolchak: The Night Stalker was one of the most difficult shows, production-wise, to pull off every week. There was never any comfort from the ratings. From the word go, the series was doomed to drag around the lower echelons on the ratings pole.

The origins of Kolchak: The Night Stalker were much more successful. The Kolchak story first appeared in 1972 as a 90-minute ABC Movie of the Week. Produced by Dan Curtis (Dark Shadows) and scripted by novelist Richard Matheson, The Night Stalker became, at the time, the highest rated TV movie in history. As played by Darren McGavin, Carl Kolchak was a ruffled, eccentric, exasperatingly tenacious reporter who tracked down a modern-day vampire in Las Vegas. The original film set the formula for the subsequent series: Kolchak destroys the vampire, but a lack of evidence and a surfeit of pressure from the authorities means his story can never be published.

ABC immediately asked for a second Night Stalker movie. The 1973 sequel, The Night Strangler, took Kolchak to Seattle to hunt down a fiendish immortal (played by Richard Anderson). This outing did almost as well in the ratings. A series was quickly put together.

Allen Baron was one of the first directors assigned to the show. "The first producer was Paul Playdon," he recalls. "We got along very well, but it was a strange situation. When I was directing the episode 'UFO' [about a hostile alien that sweeps through Chicago], I was still shaken up from a car accident. I came on the set and found an argument going on between Paul and Darren McGavin. They were debating whether this thing from outer space was visible or invisible. Paul wanted to have a creature, but Darren felt a creature would be like a cheap Japanese movie.

There was merit to both arguments. Meanwhile, I was wandering around, not realizing that I was still in shock from the accident. At one point, I almost fainted. Meanwhile, these two guys kept at each other, and they weren't any closer to resolving the issue. Finally I called one of the Universal executives and explained my dilemma. He said, 'Well, do the best you can.' So I arranged for a Ritter machine to be brought on the set. This is a large propeller that blows air, and I used it to create an effect of this space creature attacking people. It was a totally improvised monster and seemed like a good direction to go in. In retrospect, it needed more planning, but we got some good effects out of it."

Paul Playdon left the show, and Cy Chermak stepped in to produce. "Cy and I didn't get along at all," says Baron. "I couldn't stand him. There was a scene in 'UFO' where we blew up this wall. We used slow motion to show the alien spitting these cops through the air, and it was spectacular. I was very pleased when I saw the dailies. When the lights came up, Mr. Chermak said that he noticed that one of the cops had dark sunglasses on. I said, 'So?' Chermak thought that was a major error, and he made an issue out of it. I couldn't believe it. Here was a great scene, and he's angry about a cop's sunglasses? I said, 'Is that all you have to say?' I told him where to go, and that was one of the reasons I stopped doing the show. The quarreling was a strain, and the long hours were exhausting. I worked on 'The Werewolf' show for 24 hours straight. I was getting, literally, a half-hour's sleep every night."

Baron's more pleasant memories of the show include working with the demonic dog in "The Devil's Platform." "I auditioned a bunch of dogs for that role. The dog we used was a Rottweiler. His trainer called him Bum. The trainer said to the dog, 'All right, Bum, walk down the alley.' The dog walked down the alley. Then he said, 'Follow that man leaving the studio.' The dog followed the man. 'Now go over to that post and lean against it.' The dog trotted over to the post and got up on its hind legs and leaned against the post. I was amazed. It was done totally through vocal commands. The trainer didn't raise his hands once. Then he said,

'Jump inside that truck!'

The dog jumped into the truck. 'Now drive!' The dog put both paws on the steering wheel, looked over at me and waved. I said, 'He's got the job!' It was incredible. He was a great dog, but he was very docile. In one scene, he had to growl at McGavin. We put wires over his teeth to make him look ferocious. The sound guys added a growl later. At one point, McGavin asked the trainer, 'Listen, would it hurt the dog if you threw him at me?' The trainer said no, and one of the handlers literally tossed the dog through the air and it landed on McGavin. We used little tricks like that throughout the episode."

Another episode, "Jack the Ripper," required extensive stunt work. Possessing superhuman strength, the Ripper takes on the entire Chicago police force. "That show had a lot of good special effects," says Baron. "We also got some great reviews. The guy playing Jack the Ripper [Mickey Gilbert] was a stuntman. All of the scenes where he was running along the top of the building were filmed at night. We used a building that was under construction, and we shot 15 pages that night. I ran into Night Stalker's story editor David Chase recently. He said, 'Geez, Allen. I still can't believe you shot that sequence in one night!' We did, and it turned out great."

Baron, a former actor ("I starred in a cultish film called The Big Blast in 1961") praises the Night Stalker cast as "a very good group of people. Darren McGavin was a very inventive person, but sometimes he went overboard. He was very enthusiastic and at times he went crazy, in a creative way." The serio-comic scenes in the INS newspaper office particularly impressed Baron. "Those were always great little scenes. Simon Oakland [who played Kolchak's long-suffering boss Vinsome creatures might be too intense for audiences, and a budget that diminished the monsters themselves. "The series just ran out of material and money," claims Sario. "We had a terrible time with the lizard creature ["The Sentr-']. It was a disaster. The lizard suit kept popping loose in the back. It looked awful. Another time, we literally had no money to make a monster. We used a wind machine instead. Again, it looked awful."

To counteract the sinking production values, there was the charm of Darren McGavin. "He was a very good actor," says Sario, "but he wanted to control everything. He wanted to be involved with every aspect of production." However, that desire only served to frustrate McGavin, and he became disenchanted with the series. He had originally envisioned Night Stalker as a suspense show with a bare minimum of monsters. He was interested in placing Kolchak in more realistic situations with deeper layers of subtext in the stories. He bristled whenever the series was categorized as "a monster show." Despite the fact that he owned 50 percent of the show (with his Francy Productions), he couldn't change its formula. Although the emphasis on monsters made the show an unhappy experience for the actor, he still considers Carl Kolchak one of his best roles.

Kolchak: The Night Stalker was canceled in early 1975. Reruns of the series popped up on the CBS late night movies in 1979 and racked up high ratings. Despite the continued cult status of the series, there have been no concrete plans to bring it back. "There were about eight really good episodes," says Sario. "They were all at the beginning. It's a common problem in TV production. By mid-season, everything starts to collapse. It's very difficult to keep it up. Everybody gets tired. In terms of production, none of the Night Stalker episodes were fun to do. By the end of the season, everybody was completely exhausted by working day and night. When it was announced that we had been canceled, the whole company applauded."

KOSEIDONAKA: DINOSAUR TASK FORCE KOSIEDONAKA: KYORYU SENTAI KOSEIDON

The members of the Time Patrol Koseidon team are obliged to save the Earth from attack by aliens in the distant past. The Godmes race have chosen to invade Earth during the age of the dinosaurs and are using creatures of the time, such as the triceratops and tyannodon, to carry out their evil missions. The heriocally named Go Toki (Onishi, his character's name means "Go Time!") leads the team, who secret weapon is the Human Cannon Koseider.

The series was immensely successful - Tsuburaya's studio history proudly recalls how the famous "Beat" Takeshi Kitano even discussed it on his radio show. Accordingly, as the initial 26 episodes came to a close with the defeat of the Godmes Emperer, the series was allowed to continue and became the first Tsuburaya program to have an unbroken year long run, the Koseidon team became time detectives, searching for criminals who had evaded justice by leaping back to the time of the dinosaurs. Compare to BORN FREE and EISENBORG, previous Tsuburaya shows that replaced the tradional alien monsters of ULTRAMAN with creatures that owed at least some relationship to real creatures from the Earth's part.

The next Japanese kids' show to use dinosaurs was over a decade away but it would be MIGHT MORPHIN' POWER RANGERS. Produced by Hiroshi Ishikawa, Atsushi Oki, San Tsuburaya.

AKA: HIGH SPEED TASK FORCE TURBORANGER

AKA: HIGH SPEED BATTLE TEAM TURBORANGER

AKA: TURBORANGER

AKA: KOSOKU SENTAI TABORENJA

Two thousand years ago, the devil Demon tribes were defeated by an alliance of humans and fairies. In order to prevent the human race from destroying itself, the power of the fairies was sealed away. The fairy Sealon, however, has recruited five noble teenagers from Class 3A at Musashino High and bestowed special powers and vehicles upon them, so that they can form the Turboranger team to protect the Earth from the resurgent power of the demons. Enriki (Sato) is Red Turbo, captain of the school baseball team and wielder of the GT sword. Daichi (Ganaha) is Black Turbo who fights with the T Hammer. Yohei (Akasura) is Blue Turbo, heartthrob captain of the school swimming team and a deadly shot with the J Gun.

Shunsuke (Katagiri) is Yellow Turbo, star of the school gymnastics team and wilder of the B Bow-Gun. Haruna (Kinohara) is Pink Turbo, president of the school student council, leader of the majorettes, and wielder of the deadly W. Stick. The team's five Turbo Machine automobiles launch from their base and combine to make the Turbo Robo, but the bast itself is also a transforming robot and can re-form to create the trully massive Turbo Builder.

Perhaps there is some connection to the previous year's Hollywood movie Big, in which Tom Hank's character ridiculed the notion of a transforming building. . . Nothing it too ridiculous for Super Sentai shows! They also has a large mobile jet vehicle, the Ranger Fighter, which could transform into the Big Rugged Gun, yet another giant robot. Their enemies comprise the varius different Demon tribes, reunited under a new leader, the evil Emperor Rargon (voiced by Watabe). Each provides a monster of the week to fight the Turboranger team, aided by the many cannon fodder Ohlah minions. Based "on an idea by Saburo Yade" and featuring music by Akihiko Yoshida. Turboranger was preceded in the Super Sentai continuity by LIVEMAN and followed by FIVEMAN.

The series was produced by Kyozo Utsunomiya & Takeyuki Suzuki.

Eleventh Super Sentai series. Bears quite a resemblance to Mighty Morphin Power Rangers.

This Super Sentai series is also one of my personal favourites as well. The first story introduces us to the Rugged Fighter, which transforms into Turbo Rugged. Episode 29 spotlights Daiichi(Black Turbo) who plays a major role in helping Dr. Dazai to complete the mecha. A lot of action in this one, especially when Black Turbo takes on Jamin and defeats her. While the Turborangers celebrate the victory, Dr. Dazai is kidnapped by Yamimaru,which continues in the next episode..

Episode 30 was just as intense, as Emperor Ragon(leader of the 100 Violent Demon Tribes) sends down Professor Leda to do in our Turborangers with his mighty Super Violent Demon(Chomajin Boma). He almost succeeds in burying Turbo Rugged alive, until Turbo Robo comes to the rescue. Amidst the battle, Robo and Rugged are able to merge into Super Turbo Robo!

The combined might of the 2 robos sends the monster down to defeat, courtesy of the Super Mirage beam (should've got a few licks in before blowing the demon away). Riki(Red Turbo) defeats Leda in battle, and rescues Dr. Dazai... When I first saw this, the first thing that came to mind was that this somewhat resembles the Power Rangers(I shudder with mention of that name), Ironically, there's a Power Rangers Turbo coming out this year, but this has little or nothing to do with the original Kousoku Sentai.

The Tribes intend to conquer the Earth and eliminate humanity with its Violent Demon Beasts.

Violent Demon Beasts

Monsters of the week.

Name/Puns

Yamimaru's name is a pun on "Yami" or Darkness. His human name, Hikaru Nagareboshi, can be translated into shining, falling star.

Trivia

The Turboranger suit design was the basis for the Titanium Ranger in Power Rangers Lightspeed Rescue.

First Super Sentai series in which the members are called either "rangers" or a portmanteau between "ranger" and another word since the original Goranger. This trend would be continued for most of the later Super Sentai series with the exception of Fiveman, Jetman, GoGo-V and Gingaman

The concept of sentai heroes in a school setting, first used loosely in Liveman, would not be seen again until Megaranger. Ironically, this formula became the basis for nearly all the Power Rangers seasons written under Douglas Sloan.

The series officially begins with episode 2 and this is the very first sentai that acknowledge past teams within the show. The other being Mirai Sentai Timeranger and Gougou Sentai Boukenger.

The concept of car-based weaponry and giant mecha was later used again in Gekisou Sentai Carranger. The series was not originally intended to mimic Turboranger, but later proved to be very similar in some ways except the Carrangers fought against aliens, not ancient enemies of mankind and had two females instead of one.

It's ironic to see how Zimba dies by Red Turbo alone but can defeat the Turbo Robo, or how Red Turbo can beat Ragorn in a one-on-one battle, without having been killed.

The part where Red Turbo duels Zimba to the death is a recycling of Red Mask's slaying of Baraba except that Baraba wasn't enlarged and Zimba was. The idea was also incorporated into Fiveman where Five Red kills Billion.

The show's opening and ending themes as well as several others songs were sung by Red Turbo himself, Kenta Satou who later sang for Zyuranger.

The characters of Zimba, Jarmin, Rehda and Zulten were later recycled into other concepts. Like Zimba may have been modified to Grifforzar, Zulten into Bukbak. Jarmin's design was mixed with the design of Flashman's Ley Nefel to create Lami for Zyuranger. The next possible inspiration is that Rehda may have inspired Daimaoh of Kakuranger since both were extremely intelligent.

Ragorn's being initially immobile is similar to Goggle Five's Fuehrer Taboo. Also his being killed twice is similar of Dai Satan in Zyuranger, a series which came later.

It is the first Sentai to write off villain cast members very often. Zimba dies in episode 28, Jarmin dies in episode 29 and Rehda dies in episode 30. They were quickly written off. The reason was supposedly a decision on the part of the writer and producers' due the series becoming stale and trying to liven it up by focusing on the storylines with Yamimuru, Kirika, and the Nagare Bouma or more likely, the actors leaving the cast for some reason unknown. It's perhaps the same reason for previous sentai like lack of funds, another project, etc.

Despite Zulten's weak-willedness, he's the last one to die from the four original bad guys based on the script. Why the directors did this is unknown. He remained hidden in fear of Ragorn's wrath.

Sayaka Uchida who later be Blue Swallow (Ako Hayasaka) in 1991 sentai series Chojin Sentai Jetman has a role in episode

The first episode of Turboranger has (currently) the largest amount of sentai rangers to ever appear together. With 53 sentai rangers in all. The second largest amount would come years later in Gaoranger vs. Super Sentai with 33 sentai rangers (25 of them beng a red ranger). And Super Sentai World being in third with 25 rangers.

KURE KURE TAKORAAKA: GIMME GIMME OCTOPUS

The psychedelic adventures of my new tentacled friend Kure Kure Takora.

Kure Kure Takora (unofficial translation: "Gimme Gimme Octopus") is a tokusatsu children's comedy show from Japan. Produced by Toho Company Ltd., the show aired on Fuji TV and its subsidiaries from October 1, 1973 to September 27, 1974 with a total of 260 episodes.

However, Episodes 223, 252 and 255 never materialised. The show was rebroadcast over CS digital satellite television, except for episode 220, which was censored due to problematic show content. Laserdisc and VHS versions were sold, but currently only the DVD version (which includes episode 220) is on Japanese market.

It was a new type of program for children. TAKORA, a central character coveted for everything saying "KURE! (I want it)" all the time. Every episode was absurd, strange, surreal, indescribable, and ran 3 minutes each

KURT VONNEGUT'S MONKEY HOUSE

AKA: MONKEY HOUSE

AKA: WELCOME TO THE MONKEY HOUSE

Some of the SF plots were in 'The Euphio Question' in which a scientist discovers signals from outer space that bring total euphoria at the price of total addiction. In 'Epicac', A man working on creating artificial intelligence attempts to win the affections of his female partner with poetry written by the computer they have designed, unaware that the computer has fallen in love with her also.

In 'Fortitude', a doctor keeps an elderly woman alive by replacing her organs with mechanical parts; a process which leaves her both immobile and wanting to die.

Kurt Vonnegut's Monkey House was an anthology series which was similar to THE RAY BRADBURY THEATRE. Both series presents the works of a famous science fiction writer, who serves as host, and both were also produced by the same Canadian production company. The episodes of Kurt Vonnegut's Monkey House have adaptations of both Vonnegut's science fiction and non-genre stories. The episodes have featured several named actors and have won several of cable's ACE awards. The series was first seen on Showtime.

KYLE XY

KYLE XY is an incredible mystery about a teenager with no past. The series tells the surprising journey of Kyle (Dallas), a 16 year-old teenage savant who is missing instinctive human behavior such as anger, joy and love, and the family who found him. After coming out of the woods and found walking into traffic, Kyle is sent to a youth detention center where he comes into contact with his first experience of eating food and human interaction: not all of it friendly. At the center they realize that Kyle is not like any ordinary teenager, especially once they find that he is missing his belly-button. With questions of Who is this kid? and Where did he come from? psychologist Nicole Trager (MacIntyre) is called in to help get some much needed answers.

After a couple of hours with Kyle, Nicole realizes that he can not survive in the institution and needs special attention, so she decides to bring him home to keep a closer eye on him. The rest of the Trager family is not as welcoming of Kyle, seeing him as just another one of Nicoles special projects. Her husband Stephen (Thomas) doesnt want his wife to get too attached to Kyle, while her teenage daughter Lori (Matson) and son Josh (Bilodeau) see him as a freak that can only hamper their social lives.

Soon the family starts to see that Kyle has some unique abilities and an uncanny way of completing two hour IQ tests in 5 minutes with perfect scores. He encounters everyday activities such as video games, drawing and music with a wide-eyed wonder and a thirst for more knowledge. He also starts to grow fond of the Trager family and even rescues Lori from a high school party that gets dangerously out of hand.

As he settles in with the Trager family the question still remains, who is Kyle? What are his secrets, secrets that even he doesnt understand? Why doesnt he have a belly button? Why cant he remember anything from his past? Is he suffering from some sort of post-traumatic stress? If not, is he suffering from amnesia? And who is the suspicious looking man following him?

Sure the initial premise is cool: good looking teen wakes up in the forest with no clothes and no recollection of who he is and how he got there. Yet because it's an ABC Family show, that's pretty much where the coolness factor ends. KYLE XY revolves around Kyle, a young man who may or may not be an alien (he has no belly button!). Within the first hour, Kyle is taken from a juvenile detention centre and adopted by a workaholic child psychologist, her supporting husband and meddlesome two kids. No doubt conflict, romance and hilarity will ensue as Kyle adjusts to his new life with his new family.

The premiere episode does a great job of laying the groundwork for the first season. It introduces us to our main characters, and hints at what could be an interesting X-Files-like mythology. We discover that Kyle is an off the charts genius. And more importantly, a love triangle between two girls is not-so-subtly set up with Kyle. The show has potential as a fun summer series (as fankly, there isn't much else on). But considering the fact it's target audience is 10-15 year olds, the show will no doubt end up being a dumbed down version of the X-Files (with a bit of Degrassi mixed in). Sadly, this TV addict will continue watching to find out the truth about KYLE XY! (again, he HAS NO BELLY BUTTON!)

High school can be stressful. Imagine how that stress is magnified for a foreign exchange student: you're surrounded by strangers and unfamiliar with local customs and language idiosyncrasies. Even the family you live with doesn't really know you, regardless of how happy they may be that you are there, and you know nothing of their family dynamic.

Kyle XY (perfectly cast Matt Dallas) understands these difficulties. But he's not a foreign exchange student. In fact, no one in Kyle XY is quite sure who or what he is, not even Kyle himself. His memories begin the morning he wakes up nude in a forest. In the first episode, he was found and taken to a local juvenile detention center, where he didn't speak at all and couldn't recall where he was from. Social worker Nicole Trager (Marguerite MacIntyre) decided the first name assigned to him, "John Doe," was too morbid and renamed him. She was also so concerned with how he might fare in a detention center that she took him home to stay with her family.

KYODAIN

AKA: KYODAINE

AKA: SPACE IRONMEN KYODAN

The Robot Army Corps from planet Dada have invaded the Earth and kidnapped Dr. Hayami and two of his three sons Jouji & Ryuji. A year after the kidnapping of Dr. Hayami the Robot Army Corps start a new offensive against Japan and its newly created Earth Defense Force which cannot do anything to stop the machines' progress in the battlefield. However when all seems lost an unidentified spaceship lands in Japan carrying two mysterious robots, who identify themselves as Sky Zero and Ground Zero. Shortly after arriving the two metal brothers manage to not only stop the current attack, but also to destroy the general in charge of this force.

It is not till after this first battle that we come to learn that Sky Zero and Ground Zero are in fact programmed with the individual characteristics of Kenji's older brothers Jouji & Ryuji. These robots were created by Dr. Hayami to watch over his youngest son Kenji and to make sure that the Earth is protected from the Robot Army Corps. Soon Sky Zero and Ground Zero along with their robot helper Gombess become allies of the Earth Forces and quickly become the planet's last hope against the invaders.

I had never heard of the tokusatsu show Kyodain until a couple of years ago, when one of my friends showed me a picture of the main characters. Many months later I heard several comments from tokusatsu fans about it and how it was one of the weirdest/strangest Japanese shows they have ever seen. The one thing that everyone seemed to bring up was the editing, which apparently was all over the place (or so I gathered from the comments I heard/read). Everything that I heard from my fellow fans sparked my interest in the show for some reason, which brings us to this review. I must admit that the editing in the program is some of the craziest I've ever seen, but I think that it actually adds to what is already a very strange hero show.

Wow! I don't think I have ever been as amazed as I was after watching Kyodain! This show will really challenge your senses and make you wonder how someone could even envision such a production. I really don't even know where to start describing this show as there are so many things I would love to write more about.

Ok, let's start with the main characters of Sky Zero and Ground Zero. Their costumes are actually really neat with Sky Zero's having a jet theme and Ground Zero having a tank/car hybrid theme. Besides their regular forms they can also transform into vehicles with Sky Zero becoming a giant jet/missile and Ground Zero becoming a giant car/tank. I would like to point out that while they are in their transformed state their mouths are animated (in a puppet-like fashion), which looks just as weird as you might be thinking.

One thing that really grabbed me about the two metal brothers is that when things get rough they can combine their powers to increase their individual strengths. The reason this amazed me is because when they power up their energy (according to an on-screen graphic and a very excited narrator) it increases by a factor of 100,000,000,000!!!! When I saw this happen in episode two I could not believe what I was seeing. Come to think of it while I was watching the video I could not believe most of what was happening on the screen.

The Kyodain Brother's enemies, the Robot Army Corps are some of the most ridiculous I have ever seen on any hero program from any country. They are made up of various robots, which include the Main Generals/Robot Enemy of the week and their foot soldiers. The main robots featured every week seem to be based on various real world vehicles and objects like bazookas & tanks and typically at the end of each episode they transform into whatever it is that they are based on which to fight Kyodain.

The foot soldiers were probably my favorite part of this show as they are impossibly ridiculous! First of all they can't seem to run or walk like most evil henchmen, they either assemble themselves when they arrive at their target location or (and my favorite!) they walk into a scene while moving their hands straight up into the air and alternating each one while going 'kai', 'kai', 'kai'. I can't even begin to describe how ridiculous this looks, which is why I will be posting a video clip shortly to this review so that everyone can see what it is that I am describing. This only gets better when you see how they edit it.

The editing in this program is what I think really makes it a memorable tokusatsu show. Characters go back and forth in the same scene for no reason, henchmen appear out of nowhere and the fight sequences are mixed up together in a seemingly random fashion, which accomplish a very dizzying effect onscreen.

Conclusion

Kyodain is not a show for everyone, especially people who get dizzy when they watch movies like the Blair Witch project or play games like Doom. Kyodain is an older program that lacks a lot of polish and has several rough spots, but if you love older tokusatsu special effects or just want to see something very different I highly recommend it. The action scenes are actually pretty long (at least in the first round of episodes) and feature some pretty exciting sequences, which many fans are sure to appreciate.

I really liked Kyodain and hope that those of you who pick it up or have a chance to see it like it as much as I did.

KYORYUU SENTAI ZYURANGER

AKA: DINOSAUR TASK FORCE ZYURANGER

AKA: KYORYU SENTAI JURANGER

AKA: DINOSAUR BATTLE TEAM BEAST-RANGER

AKA: ZYURANGER

One hundred seventy million years after she sold her soul to Satan, the evil queen Bandora (Soga) is freed from her prison on planet Nemesis by a passing astronaut. In her flying fortress of Dora Monstar (Wondering Mon-Star), she returns to Earth in order to restore it once more to its previous status of the planet of death. The aging wizard Bazra, who has guarded a secret base all this time, recruits the valiant Zyuranger team to defend the plant, each of whom fights with a dinosaur as a totem creature.

Their leader Geki (Mochizuki), a prince of the Yamoto tribe, who is also the red-clad Tryanno Ranger who fights with the Dragon Attack Sword. Koji (Takayasu) is the black-clad Mammoth Ranger, a knight of the Shama clan who fights with the Mammoth Breaker. Dan (Fujiwara) is the blue-clad Triceranger who fights with the Tricerance (Triceratops Lance). Boy (Hashimoto) is the yellow-clad Tiger Ranger, knight of the Daimu clan who fights with the twin Saber Daggers. Kindhearted Mei (Chiba) is the Pteranger, a princess of the Rishia clan who fights with the Ptera Arrows.

The team was later joined by a sixth rager Burai (Izumi), the green-clad Dragon Ranger who wore special Dragon Armor: The team traveled around on their Roadsaura 1,2 and 3 motorcycle-sidecar combinations, but also had robotic vehicles modeled after each of their totem animals. These dinosaur vehicles could combine to make the Daijushin giant robot, which itself could be added to the Dragon Ranger's vehicle to create the Dragon Caesar super-robot and several other robot combinations.

Bandora and her minions try to seize control of the Earth with a series of monster of the week, aided by her Golem cannon fodder troops, in what could have been yet another Super Sentai show, coming straight after JETMAN and with many similarities to the earlier KOSEIDON.

However, this unremarkable entry in the long-running saga gained a new lease of life when it was picked up by Saban Entertainment and released in a substrantially altered from the US and around the world. Music in the series was by Akihiko Yoshida. Produced by Kyozo Utsunomiya, Jun Kaji, Takeyuki Suzuki and Shinichiro Shirokura.

Fourteenth Super Sentai. The basis for MIGHTY MORPHIN POWER RANGERS Season One and the hero costumes (White Ranger aside) for the entire Power Rangers series.

Here it is; the famed mecha show. The main reason it is called that is because it WAS mainly a mecha show with most of the action going into it. The ground fights are the same as every other 90s Sentai series lasting only 10-15 seconds. Aside from those flaws, Zyuranger is quite entertaining from what I've seen this far. I've heard it gets much better with the arrival of Burai.

Overall, if you want something different from past series (plot-wise) and can over-look the fact that it doesn't quite follow with history, try this. If you're not into that and are annoyed by it mainly being a mecha show, pass it up.

With only so long left to live, he then fought on Geki's side. Geki later acquired his elder brother's chest armor and wore it as Tyranno Ranger. He also gained Burai's Jusouken.

Technically, none of these are mecha; rather, they are all avatars of the gods.

The Zyurangers ride the Road Saurer 1 (Tyranno) and Side Saurers 2 (Mammoth/Tiger) and 3 (Tricera and Ptera) motorcycles, which combined, perform the Saurer Buster attac.

Each Zyuranger is armed with a Ranger Stick/Gun/Sword. The sticks may be used together in the Babel (as in tower) Attack. Later, each Ranger gets a Thunderslinger which combines with the Ranger Gun to form the Rangerslinger. Their individual weapons combine to form the Howling Cannon.

They are aided by the white magician Barza, who protected their sleeping bodies over the last 170 million years and now poses as an apartment manager.

MMPR: The Movie
 Hornitor
 Scorpitron

After the sleazy Haim Saban had attempted for years to butcher various old Sentai shows into something he could make money off of on American kid's TV, he finally made it with his Mighty Morphin Power Rangers...an odd and sanitized American version of the Sentai series Kyouryuu Sentai ZyuRanger.

The series revolves around the team of the five heroic ZyuRangers, in their attempt to defeat the evil witch Bandora, who was released from her imprisonment in a large dumpster-like container, by some rather stupid Japanese astronauts who were on an expedition to the foreboding Planet Nemesis, aboard the first Japanese Space Shuttle.

I love the fantastic music, and cool designs. They may not have the flash and fanciness of some of the newer stuff, but ZyuRanger's classic battle between God (in the form of a bunch of giant dinosaur robots) and Satan (a big disembodied blue head with feathers for hair) is great material for a show which strikes what I think is the perfect balance between taking the adventure and action seriously, but not too seriously that some fun can't be had.

In the final episode, Bandora is finally defeated, and put back in imprisonment, in a small pot (see above picture, with ZyuRangers in background). To cheer up Bandora, who has again lost her precious son Kai, Griforzer and Lamie (Goldar & Scorpina on MMPR) present to her their new born(?) baby.

Trivia

The show's opening & ending theme song is sung by Kenta Satou, who played Riki Honoo / Red Turbo in Kousoku Sentai Turboranger.

Zyuranger included two actors who were in Jetman as guest stars, Yuuta Mochizuki (J1/Geki) & Hideki Fujiwara (Dan/Dan).

After Zyuranger ended, Yuuta Mochizuki appeared in Sailor Moon Musicals (Seramyu) for 7 and a half years. He was the second longest running cast member to have performed in the musical, and is the longest running actor to have played four different characters (Kunzite, Mamoru Chiba/Tuxedo Kamen, King Endymion and Count Dracula). He was also an action coach between 1998 and 2001.

Despite the show's title, only two of the Zyurangers have true Dinosaurs as avatars (Tyrannosaurus, and Triceratops), or three if you count the Dragon as a Dinosaur. The Pteranodon, currently considered as a separate type of reptile, was classified as a dinosaur at the time the series was produced. Some paleontologists believe that the Tyrannosaurus, was actually a type of bird, and not a true dinosaur at all.

After Zyuranger, Yuuta Mochizuki played the lead role in Kamen Rider J. He is a part of a handful of Sentai actors who went on to play a Kamen Rider after appearing in at least one Sentai series. He conciliates the filming of movie with his acting in Sailor Moon Musicals.

Machiko Soga also played Queen Hedrian in both Denshi Sentai Denjiman (1980) and Taiyou Sentai Sun Vulcan (1981) and would later appear in the Mahō Sentai Magiranger Movie and TV Series as Heavenly Arch Saint Magiel (2005), her last tokusatsu role before her death the following year from pancreatic cancer.

Many of the villain costumes (and concepts) were reused from Turboranger, though altered. The costume designer later played a role in a later tokusatsu series, Changerion.

Shiro Izumi (Izumi Shirō), who played Burai, also played Yuuma Oozora/Change Pegasus in Dengeki Sentai Changeman and guest-starred in Super Sentai World, which also featured, among other teams, Zyuranger (only in costume).

In the "base" of the logo, the kanji are given. They are translated as "Beast Group Members", and can be read as jūrenja. The reading is very similar to the final word of the series' name (jūrenjā), which is given in katakana.

A video game adaptation of the series was released by Angel Studios for the Nintendo Famicom game console in Japan.

Even though the character Goushi is the oldest of the main five, the actor Aohisa Takayasu is actually two months younger than Yuuta Mochizuki.

Unlike other Super Sentai programs, the primary antagonists were not killed off at the end of the series villains. Instead, they were just sealed off into a jar. Also, the main crew of villains led by Bandora are primarily comic relief, providing laughs as opposed to the more serious villains of past Sentai series. Bandora is seen to be an even lighter version of evil queens in the past.

This was the first season to feature an active sixth member with the addition of Burai.

This is the first Sentai wherein the slain warrior had no replacement opposite other Sentai series wherein the slain warriors were immediately replaced on the next episode after their deaths.

It was also the first Sentai show that didn't enlarge certain monsters for certain episodes due to certain reasons.

Dr. Mondo of the Tatsumi Clan, who have been noble firefighters since the Edo period, sets up the Tatsumi Laboratory for Disaster Prevention. Nepotism being what it is in the world of sentai shows, he appoints his own children as the members of the Gogo Five team.

Ten (Nishioka) formerly worked as a member of Captain Fire Fighters Bureau (CFFB) but is now Go Red. His old CFFB colleague Rumi (Taniguchi) is a calm and level-headed man and rebranded as Go Blue. Gentle-natured Sho (Harada) was once a pilot with the CFFB Aerial Division and is now Go Green. Sharpshooter Daimon (Shibata) was once a police officer but is now Go Yellow with a strong sense of justice. The token female team member Sai (Sakaguchi), a former emergency nurse at National Rinkai Hospital and now Go Pink.

In a departure from previous shows in the Super Sentai continuity, the emphasis with Gogo Five was not merely on fighting evil but on conducting rescue missions - compare to Gerry Anderson's THUNDERBIRDS (1965). Note that Gogo Five takes place in the "present-day", whereas its predecessors JETMAN and OHRANGER were both set in the "future year" of 1999.

With predictable speed, the series was co-opted by Saban as the eighth in their MIGHTY MORPHIN' POWER RANGERS series and exported to the US as POWER RANGERS LIGHT SPEED RESCUE. Gogo Five comes after GINGAMAN in the Super Sentai series and was followed by TIME RANGER. Music by Toshiyuki Watanabe. Produced by Kenjii Ota, Ken Fukuyoshi, Koichi Yada, Jun Higasa.

This show also represented the 20th Anniversary of the Super-Sentai shows. Kyukyu Sentai Gogo Five is the twenty-third sentai series. It aired from 1999-2000. It was followed by MIRAI SENTAI TIMERANGER.

GoBlue: "Burning Rescue Spirits!"

GoGreen: "Kyukyuu Sentai"

GoYellow: "Go!"

GoPink: "Go!"

All: "Five!"

GoRed: "Mobilized!"

From a long line of "machi-bikeshi" (fire fighters of Edo, the capital of the Tokugawa Shogunate), the Tatsumi Family have worked in the lines of emergency-rescue at Tokyo.

The Siblings

Matoi Tatsumi (Tatsumi Matoi) / GoRed (Gōreddo): Matoi is the eldest son and the leader of the team, he belongs to the Special Rescue Brigade of the Capital Fire Department. He is 24 years old and takes his duties as a leader and as the eldest brother very seriously. He is never backs down from a fight no matter how difficult it might be. At times he yells at his younger siblings for messing up. Matoi does everything by the book with no room for messing up. Since he was the one that practically raised his younger brothers and sister, he feels very much responsible for them. He is their "father" and brother roled up in one. Gets into a lot of agruements with Shou. He might argue with his siblings quite a bit but that's only because he loves them and wants them to be the best they can be. (*In the Edo Era in Japan, each "hikeshi" (firefighter) had an individual "mataoi", which was the firefighter's standard).

Lifebird component: Claw Anchor

Nagare Tatsumi (Tatsumi Nagare) / GoBlue (Gōburū): Nagare is the second son of the Tatsumi family. He belongs to the Capital Fire Department of the Chemical F.F. Brigade. Nagare is always looking out for his younger brother, Daimon, even though most of the time Daimon does not listen to him and gets in trouble for it. Nagare was once put on suspension because Daimon got injured, even though it was not his fault that his younger thick headed brother did not listen to him when he told Daimon to wait for the others before rushing into a fight. Nagare still felt responsible because he is the oldest. It was always that way between the two. Even when they were younger, Daimon would get hurt because he did not listen or do something stupid and poor Nagare would get blamed for not taking care of his younger brother. Although he might get yelled at by his older brother at times he never talks back to him like Shou does. Nagare is very protective of his family, he would sacrifice himself to save the Tatsumi Family and the team. He usually is the serious one of the group, Nagare does not rush into a fight with out researching what he is fighting first, once he figures it out he heads full force into battle. Developed fire extinguishant in his department. He is 23 years old.

Lifebird component: Build Discharger

Shou Tatsumi (Tatsumi Shō) / GoGreen (Gōgurīn): Shou is the third son, he is a helicopter pilot in the Capital Fire Department of the Helicopter Brigade. He has always dreamed of being a pilot, when he first got his job at the Helicopter Brigade the whole family celebrated with him, Matoi even sang Karaoke, he then ran out of the room and thank God for getting what he wished for. Once over an argument with Matoi about him wanting to be a pilot more then a GoGo Five team member Shou almost quit the team. Out of all the siblings Shou was the most angriest and bitterest towards their father. While Nagare does not talk back to their older brother, Shou does, he argues constantly with Matoi. Shou is a skilled helicopter pilot, he never loses control and can be very reliable. That's why it was a surprise to him and the team when one time his reckless flying almost caused innocent civilians to be injured. This resulted into a huge fight between him and Matoi. Shou is a cunning and swift warrior. He at times question's his older brother's leadership. He is 22 years old.

Lifebird component: Wing Spreader

Daimon Tatsumi (Tatsumi Daimon) / GoYellow (Gōierō): Daimon is the fourth and last son of the Tatsumi family. Daimon is a Sergeant at the Capital Police Department. He is the hot head of the group, who rushes into things before thinking and getting into trouble. Anguished at his brother, Nagare, for being put on suspension for something that was not his fault Daimon sticks up for him. Daimon is somewhat the joker of the team, being the youngest male he can be pretty reckless and cocky. Daimon has to learn to be a team player, one of the reasons why he is always yelled at by Matoi is because he thinks he can handle any situation on his own without his siblings help. Matoi tells him that they are all a team to win a fight they have to work together, he cannot let his pride get in the way of saving the world. That when the team works together they are far greater and more powerful then working alone. A lesson that Daimon learns the hard way. He can be somewhat indulgent. Once he is angered the Saima Clan better watch out, as he has a very deadly temper.

Although he might rush into a fight he can still be reliable in an emergency. A wannabe bike cop, he is the only sibling not in the Fire Department. Obsessed with drinking milk, in Gaoranger vs. Super Sentai, Daimon taught Kai Samezu (GaoBlue) how to perform his famous "Banta-Style Cow's Milk Tornado Drop", with Samezu eventually uses on Bakure Highness Rakushaasa, and lectured Kai on the Super Sentai franchises technical warriors. He is 21 years old.

Lifebird component: Beak Driller

Matsuri Tatsumi (Tatsumi Matsuri) / GoPink (Gōpinku): Matsuri is the youngest and only female member of the Tatsumi family [their mother died years before]. She belongs to the National Seaside Hospital. A kind hearted girl, she is a strong fighter who is very agile and quick. She does not take it kindly when others weaker than her are in trouble and her temper can be pretty deadly when the Saima Clan attack innocent people. She at one time had her powers stolen from her and given to a friend who was crippled and in a wheelchair. While her friend could walk now that she had Matsuri's powers, Matsuri was forced to take her place in the wheelchair. Unable to help her brothers fight a Demon Monster she tells her friend that because she now had GoPink's powers she had to help her brothers fight the monster. The girl is scared and says she cannot do it but Matsuri tells her she has no choice, she cannot be scared all her life. The girl goes to fight along side Matsuri's brothers and she gains the confidence she needed. In a powerful blast Matsuri's powers are transferred back to her and she once more becomes GoPink. Meanwhile her friend having gotten her heart and spirit back is no longer content to just sit and hope for her legs to get better. She struggles to walk and does not give up even when she falls down, she just drags herself back up and tries again. At times Matsuri is the one that brings order in the household when the males of the family get out of line. She is 20 years old, although she is the youngest of the team at times she is the wisest of them all. Calm and collective she will listen to both sides of an argument before choosing a side. Being finesse, she has repetitive attacks. Seeing the death that goes on at the hospital she works at Matsuri believes that life is very important and very precious.

Lifebird component: Tail Injector

The Parents

Dr. Mondo Tatsumi (Tatsumi Mondo-hakase): Tatsumi, Mondo Hakase is the great scientist who created the suits, mecha, and weapons for the GoGo Five team. He is also teams father. Years before he predicted the invasion of the SAIMA Clan but none believed him. Forced into exile and ridiculed by the elite scientific community, he secretly develops the Rescue Team GoGo Five's Powers. He at one time was a rival with his children's Superior, the two tried to out do each other in everything from on the job assignments to women and sports. The two even fought over who will be in charge of the Rescue Task Force, causing chaos in the team. Of course it ended up that Dr. Mondo will be giving out the orders in the team. Dr. Mondo has also build an undersea base in the bay which has all kinds of weapons and mecha for the team to use, known as BayArea55. To save the earth and the human race he pays the heavy price of losing his family. Years later he has to convince his kids to help him out with his cause, kids that are bitter and angry towards a father whom they believed died years before. Now they just believe he abandoned them and their mother years before even if it was to create an elite team that would save the world. One time to try and show his love for his kids he even wears the prototype AntiHazardSuit to save his children from the SAIMA Clan. In the finale, Mondo was thought to have been killed alongside his rival when BayArea55 sank beneath the sea from the massive floods caused by Grandiene, but both men had survived and Mondo now lives happily with his family. However, Mondo briefly went out of retirement to prepare the GoGo-V equipment, when he detected Pierre's minus energy. Mondo was instrumental in working with the TimeRangers robotic assistant TAC, in bringing the GoGo Five's mecha from the past to the present with the TimeRanger's time travel technology, to help destroy PierreBori. (* His first name is "sekai" in kanji, which is translated to "mondo" in Italian)

Ritsuko Tatsumi: The mother of the GoGo-V, and the most important person-in-absence in their lives. It was her words that always ran through their heads and kept them going in the greatest trials and tribulations of their lives. "The five of you are one family. When you forget your power, no matter what happens, I believe in you. And, my wonderful children, believe in your father. Family is to believe in each other." Those were pretty much her last words to them the day she got on an airplane that then crashed. She spent the next eight years at an island hospital in a coma. When she finally became conscious, she remembered dreaming about her children, fighting terrible monsters. She then contacted their house and their friend Kyoko Hayase picked up the call and relayed the message to Daimon and Matsuri, which they called her back. At the end of the series Ritsuko is living with her family again. Her five children encountered her soul when they were trapped in one of the Saima hells. She guided them out. Or did she? She was not dead, after all. But perhaps her soul was still free to watch over her children. She appears briefly in Episode 42, and then at last returned to the family, alive and well, in 49 and 50!

Help

Kyoko Hayase (Hayase Kyoko) / Sieg-Jeanne: A shuttle pilot who is Shou's superior. When the GoGo Five rescue her shuttle from a tornado caused by Tornedeus, she is able to recognize Shou's voice on the communications system. This is because the shuttles communications system was on the same frequency that the GoGo-V were using. Afterwards she wanted to join the GoGoV but couldn't because Mondo Tatsumi only designed the team for five people. So instead she occasionally aids the GoGo Five in anyway she can and never got in their way. In the GoGo Five Movie she briefly gained the SiegTector armor from Sieg before he died. Using the power, she became Sieg-Jeanne. By transferring all the Demon Hunter powers to Victory Robo, she helped the GoGo-V destroy Golomois. In the finale, Kyoko played an important role. Not only did she confirm that Grandiene was still alive, after noticing her when she went up into orbit in a shuttle, and then reporting it to the GoGo Five after Kyoko had returned to Earth. Later when Mondo sent her to give the GoGo Five the information on where to find the Max Victory Robo Sigma Project, and just after she barely escaped the destruction of BayArea55, Kyoko received the phone call from Ritsuko Tatsumi who had just come out of her coma and was able write down the call back number. Kyoko was able to pass both pieces of information on to Daimon and Matsuri which would be instrumental to the GoGo Five's final victory.

Beast-Demon Hunter Sieg: Exclusive to the GoGo Five movie. Sieg was last of a people who had fought and defeated the Juuma, who were mostly exterminated by Golmois. Only Sieg survived and wanted revenge. He pursued Golomois to Earth and encountered the GoGo Five, whom he blamed for saving the people in the crossfire instead of fighting Golmois. It took Kyoko, who reminded him of his superior officer, to remember what he was fighting for. He wielded the SiegShot, SiegSword and SiegBlaster. When he was killed by Golomois, he gave Kyoko the gem that held the Demon Hunter powers in it.

Analyse Robo Mint (Anarazu Robo Minto): Cheery, childish analysis Robot who controls the GoLiner at the BayArea55 base.

Seijuu Sentai Gingaman: Teamed up with the GoGo Five to battle Gill and the Dark Beast.

Mirai Sentai Timeranger: A year later, the GoGo Five returned and teamed up with the Timeranger in order to defeat a newly resurrected Pierre and Londarz prisoners enhanced by his Saima Magic.

V-Mode Brace (Bui Mōdo Buresu): Received in Episode 22. A special brace that upgrades the attack and defense of the Anti-Hazard Suits. It enables the attack V-Mode Punch and V-Mode Chop. The V-Mode Brace is also used for the Max Victory Robo "3-5-6" and Victory Mars "4-5-6" combinations.

V-Mode Shield (Bui Mōdo Shīrudo): A built-in shield enabled by pressing "3-3-3, V" on the V-Mode Brace.

Rescue Mecha

Max Victory Robo: When the Victory Robo combines with the Max Shuttle it creates the Max Victory Robo. Armaments provided from Liner Boy are jets stored within the feet that provide additional maneuverability, and the MaxGun which are two small wrist guns. Another ability the Max Victory Robo has is an array of solar panels where its Max Nova Absorption enables it to absorb power from sunlight or certain energy blasts and its finisher Max Nova Barrage is where it unleashes its rail-gun style weapon the Max Nova Cannons and combines the firepower from all of the Max Victory Robo's guns. In the finale the Max Victory Robo was destroyed when Matoi moved it in the way of a blast shot by Zylpheeza and Salamandes Dragon to protect a flammable building with Daimon and Matsuri who were rescuing a bunch of innocent children inside and Matoi barely survived the explosion.

99 Machines / Victory Robo: Mecha armed with the Braver Sword, a magical sword that was supercharged with Plus energy, enabling it to destroy the Minus energy in the Giant Ghost Saima Beasts with its Victory Prominence attack. It was destroyed along with LinerBoy in the finale by Zylpheeza and Salamandes Dragon, but in the Timeranger vs GoGo Five special, the Timeranger brought it back to help fight off the combined Pierre and Boribaru. Victory Robo's power helped to power up GaoKing in Gaoranger vs. Super Sentai.

Red Ladder: GoRed's giant ladder truck. Despite being destroyed in the finale, it reappeared in Gaoranger vs. Super Sentai to help out. Forms Victory Robo's chest and arms.

Blue Thrower: GoBlue's giant chemical fire engine. Forms Victory Walker's cockpit (Victory Robo's waist) and upper legs.

Green Hover: GoGreen's giant hovercraft. Forms Victory Robo's head and upper back.

Pink Aider: GoPink's giant ambulance car. Forms Victory Robo's lower right leg.

Max Liner / Max Shuttle / LinerBoy: Created by Mondo Tatsumi with some assistance from Kyoko. It had an A.I. unit, which allowed it to fight without a pilot. It also hauled the GoLiners that were loaded with the Mars Machines up to space. Could combine with the Victory Robo to form the Max Victory Robo. Although LinerBoy's body was destroyed in the finale by the Grandiene-possessed Zylpheeza and Salamandes Dragon, the A.I. unit was able to survive the destruction. Max Liner's front wheel assemblies become the arms, the rear section becomes the legs, the nose becomes the back (revealing the head), the fender becomes the weapon, and the solar paneled side becomes the anterior. Forms Max Victory Robo's helmet, chest armor, shoulder armor, gauntlets, waist armor, and leg armor.

GoLiner / GrandLiner: Five giant train cars that were designed to carry the 99 Machines into battle. The Goliners were later modified to form their own giant robot the GrandLiner. Its gatling weapons as well as its Grand Fire and Grand Storm finisher (where the gatling weapons are transferred from the shoulders to the fists to provide additional power) are the only weapons strong enough to pierce the hardened armor of the Golem Saima Beasts. After the Mars Machines were constructed the GoLiners are loaded with the Mars Machines and are hauled up into space by the Max Shuttle in order for the GoGo Five to use the Victory Mars. In the finale, it was rendered useless by the Grandiene-possessed Zylpheeza and Salamandes Dragon.

GoLiner 3: Transports Green Hover and Green Mars 3, forms GrandLiner's head, torso, and upper legs.

GoLiner 4: Transports Yellow Armor and Yellow Mars 4, forms GrandLiner's lower left leg.

GoLiner 5: Transports Pink Aider and Pink Mars 5, forms GrandLiner's lower right leg.

Mars Machines / Beetle Mars / Victory Mars: Mecha formed of five spacecraft. The vehicles can combine to form Beetle Mars, a four-legged mecha with a cannon on its top or in the more humanoid Victory Mars. Where using its Jet Lance it can perform its Mars Flare finisher to destroy Giant Saima Beasts. Unlike the other Mecha, the Mars Machines have different technology that allows them to function without the aid of solar energy, therefore it is the only Mecha that is able to battle efficiently when Salamandes creates the Saima Zone. In the GoGo Five vs. Gingaman special, VictoryMars briefly gained the power of the Gingaman's Lights of Ginga's Armor and became Super Armor Shine VictoryMars (Chōsōkō VictoryMars), wielding both the Jet Lance and the Super First-Aid Gingaiken (Chō Kyūkyū Gingaiken) in its enhanced mode. In the finale, the Victory Mars was rendered useless when it fought against the Grandiene-possessed Zylpheeza and Salamandes Dragon.

Red Mars 1: Piloted by GoRed. Forms Beetle Mars's head and body, which becomes Victory Mars's head and upper torso.

Blue Mars 2: Piloted by GoBlue. Forms Beetle Mars's rear legs, which become Victory Mars's arms.

Green Mars 3: Piloted by GoGreen. Forms Beetle Mars's chest, which becomes Victory Mars's waist.

Yellow Mars 4: Piloted by GoYellow. Forms Beetle Mars's left leg, which becomes Victory Mars's own.

Pink Mars 5: Piloted by GoPink. Forms Beetle Mars right leg, which becomes Victory Mars's own.

Max Victory Robo Sigma Project: Mondo Tatsumi's final mecha creation which resembles the Max Victory Robo but is colored in black. This mecha is powered by mental energy and has a sword that resembles the Victory Robo's Braver Sword but it's hilt has a reddish coloring rather than a blueish color. Used in the Final Episode by the GoGo Five to stop the Grandiene-possessed Zylpheeza and Salamandes Dragon, after the original Max Victory Robo was destroyed, and both the VictoryMars and GrandLiner were rendered useless. Armed with the knowledge that although they had supposedly lost their father, but now know that their mother is still alive, the GoGo Five used this energy to power up the sword which allowed them to emerge victorious over Grandiene.

Saima Family

The Saima Family (Saima Ichizoku) is an evil family of demons whose only objective is destruction. Their plan is to use the Grand Cross planet alignment to bring great calamity to Earth. The Family's matriarch, the grand witch Grandiene hoped to travel to our dimension using the great amounts of minus energy that would emerge in Earth when the Grand Cross had formed. Her children, the Saima Siblings wait her arrival sending Saima Beasts to destroy and finish human civilization. They have their headquarters, Saima Paradico, in the North Pole.

Grand Witch Grandiene (Daimajo Gurandīnu) (11-12, 25-50): Ruler of the Saima Family and mother to the five siblings. The ultimate form of all the minus energy in the universe. She set everything up for her arrival in this reality on the day of the Grand Cross. But the GoGo-V interrupted the ritual and Grandiene ended up trapped half-way. Having failed, she ordered her sons and daughter to gather minus energy for her, continuously failing. After Salamandes' death, Grandiene took matters into her own hands and used the evil energies gathered by the Saima Paradico to complete her passing. Then it's revealed that she never really cared for the well-being of her children, and deliberately sent them out to die. She only used them to get herself in the human world. Her body was destroyed by the Max Victory Robo, but her spirit remained and took possession of the revived and powered up Zylpheeza and Salamandes to fulfil her goal of destruction. She was finally destroyed in the end after she was stripped of all power when the Max Victory Robo Sigma Project defeated the Destruction Gods Zylpheeza II and Salamandes Dragon. Cruel and cold, Grandiene doesn't hesitate in sending even her own son Kobolda to demise to accomplish her goals; when questioned by Zylpheeza, she replied: "Saima children eventually betray their parents. There is no reason for letting such beings exist. If you all have lived till now it's because you were useful to me".

Darkness King Gill (Yamiō Giru) (GoGo-V vs. Gingaman): The Saima family's true first-born. Having just been born, he attempted to kill Grandiene, who disposed of the child in the darkest depths of hell. But Gill survived and became stronger from the ordeal, with a scar on his chest. Then he was brought back by Salamandes and sought to summon The Infernal Dark Beast from Hell onto Earth, using the blood of many people to do so. He was fatally wounded fighting GoRed and GingaRed, but used his own blood to complete the ritual.

Dark Kings (Meiō) (2-22, 26-43, 47-49) / Destruction Gods (Hakaishin) (49-50): The final forms of Zylpheeza and Salamandes which Grandiene created by stripping both of their bodies of free will and turning them into puppets under her control.

Dark King Zylpheeza (Meiō Jirufīza) (2-22, 47-48, 49) / Destruction God Zylpheeza 2 (Hakaishin Jirufilza II) (49-50): Saima family's second born. The demon of Aerial Calamity. Leader of the Saima siblings, he is give the highest title of Dark King (Meiou) symbolized by the star on his chest. Despiseful to humans but deeply loving to his siblings and mother, he was admired by Cobolda and Denus. After being man-handled by the GoGo-V, Zylpheeza went on a personal war with them that resulted in his death at the hands of the Max Victory Robo. After a few attempts Zylpheeza was resurrected at the cost of Denus's life. He soon learned the truth of his mother after killing his younger brother Kobolda under the influence of her. After hearing the words of Nagare and Shou, Zylpheeza awakens just to be killed now by his youngest brother Salamandes and revived as a puppet. Though he regained himself, Zylpheeza was possessed by Grandiene's spirit and had to be killed upon his transformation into Destruction God Zylpheeza 2.

Infant Demon Drop (Dōki Doroppu) (2-22) / Dragon Dark King Salamandes (Ryū Meiō Saramandesu) (26-43, 49) / Ghost King Salamandes (Yūmaō Saramandesu) (43) / Destruction God Salamandes Dragon (Hakaishin Saramandesu Doragon) (49-50): The youngest, formerly an infant named Drop at the start of the series. Demon of Fire Calamity. Dragon blood runs through his veins. Being just an infant, he had to be carried by Pierre and would only say "Doroppuuu", not being able to speak. Even though, his high sorcery and fire abilities let him participate among his older siblings. Upon Zylpheeza's death, he received the Dark King Star and using energy that was transferred from Zylpheeza, Drop underwent a maturation inside a cocoon. During that time his soul took on the form of a human boy with pyrokinetic powers who Matsuri befriended. After the period of maturation Drop had become Dragon Prince Salamandes. Using the Dark King Star on his chest, Salamandes can create the "Saima Zone" in which the solar light is completely cut-off, allowing the Saima beasts to boost ten times their power. Later on after the GoGo-V used the Victory Mars to stop the minus-energy asteroid that Grandiene sent, he started to fall out of favor with her. But after the destruction of the Infinity Card, Salamandes completely fell out of favor because he destroyed a valuable weapon, so he attempted to lure the GoGo-V to Hell in order to regain favor with his mother, but Grandiene trapped all of them there. With some help from Pierre, Salamandes killed all the hell-bound monsters and absorbed them to become Ghost King Salamandes. The GoGo-V had a difficult time against him, since now Salamandes was able to transform human souls into energy powering him up through the "Saima Tree" which Pierre had grown at an orphanage. But when the long lost mother of one of the orphaned children that the GoGo-V had befriended arrived, her tears had weakened the Saima Tree's power. Without the soul energy the GoGoV were able to use the Max Victory Robo and Victory Mars to kill him and only his Dark King Star remained. In the finale, Pierre is able to convince Grandiene to use Salamande's Star to resurrect him and he was used alongside Zylpheeza, who was now under Grandiene's control. Luckily, Shou and Nagare were able to convince Zylpheeza that Salamandes was his younger brother Drop, forcing Salamandes to kill him, only to be killed by Shou and Nagare. But in the end Grandiene revived him as a complete puppet under her control in a dragon-like form, but was killed for good by the Max Victory Robo Sigma Project.

Beast Baron Cobolda (Jūdanshaku Koboruda) (2-48): Grandiene's 3rd born. Demon of Ground Calamity. He is the strongest of the Saima siblings and his strategies always relied more in power than thought, leading him to a complex when compared himself with the dexterous warrior Zylpheeza or the cunning strategist Denus. Secretly coveting the rank of Dark King, tried to take it over after Zylpheeza's death but was overpowered by Salamandes. He and his older brother Zylpheeza are close because they survived together when they were younger; ironically, near the finale he was deceived by his mother to fight the GoGo-V and was killed by Zylpheeza who was being controlled by Grandiene.

Evil Spirit Princess Denus (Jareiki Dīnasu) (2-47): Grandiene's only daughter. Demon of Aquatic Calamity. Gifted in the arts of disguise, she often used them to gather information or just cause havoc. Her strategies were particularly cruel and fearsome. Felt great respect for her older brother Zylpheeza. Near the finale after her plan to use a spider to syphon off Matoi's life-force to resurrect Zylpheeza failed when the other GoGo-V were able to separate the spider from Matoi, by striking the other spider that was on Zylpheeza's chest. Denus, not wanting Zylpheeza to die again, placed the spider (The one that was used on Matoi) on her own chest and sacrificed her life so Zylpheeza could live.

Servants & Others

Spell-Master Pierre (Jushi Piēru) (2-50, TimeRanger vs. GoGo-V) / PierreBori (Timeranger vs. GoGo-V): The family servant, most loyal to Salamandes. Pierre is a fly-themed sorcerer who dominates the Saima Cards, being able to create the Saima Beasts and enlarge them. He was thought to have been killed when the backlash energy from the Max Victory Robo Sigma Project's Sword crushed him against the wall of a building when in fact it just transformed him into a small fly-like form. He later reappeared in TimeRanger vs. GoGo-V to help the Londers Family. It turns out that during the TimeRanger's battle against the Giant Robot Nova, the energies from this battle inadvertently allowed for Pierre to be revived and allowed him to return to his normal size and form. Using his Saima Magic he made the Londers Prisoners immune to the TimeRanger's weapons. But with the help of the GoGoV (Because their weapons were designed to fight against the Saima Magic) most of the Prisoners were defeated, but Pierre entered the body of the remaining Londers Prisoner Boribaru and became PierreBori. In the end Pierre was removed/killed by the TimeRanger's TimeRobo Alpha, using the energy given to them by Victory Robo.

Beast Demon King Golomois (Jūmaō Gorumoa) (Movie): The leader of the Juuma, a race of demons as evil as the Saima from another galaxy, his power is similar to that of Grandiene herself making him a fearsome enemy. Armed with Darksword and Shadowsword. But the BeastDemon Hunters forced most of his tribe into extinction, with only Golomois to remain. He soon killed all of his pursuers people but Sieg, losing his DarkSword in the process. Golomis arrived on Earth where the DarkSword landed. After escaping Sieg, he was caught by the Saima and he decided to take advantage of them by making a deal with them. Once he regained his DarkSword, he assumed his true giant form. It took the combined force of the DemonHunter power and Victory Robo to destroy him.

Chaos (Kaosu) (42-43): Gatekeeper of Hell who helped Salamandes with his plan to trap the GoGoV in Hell. He summoned the spirits of past Saima beasts that were slain by the GoGoV who sought to be reborn in their bodies, but Chaos lost control over the dead monsters when the GoGoV broke his staff. Went with Salamandes after he became Ghost King Salamandes. But Chaos died when he protected Ghost King Salamandes from the GrandLiner's Grand Fire attack.

Spirit-Servants Imps (Tsukaima Inpusu): The foot soldiers, armed with short swords. There were also female Imps who served Dinus, which were killed by the GoGo-V. Pierre revived them as one giant Imp that then divided and became three. The Imps could become Mecha-sized when in the Saima Zone.

Grim Reapers: (GoGo-V vs. Gingaman) Gill's henchmen. They are extremely resilient, able to pick themselves up after being knocked down from attacks. Only fire seems to be their true weakness as they dissolve when coming into contact with it.

Saima Beasts

Monsters of calamity created by the minus-energy-powered fusion of a "Saima Soul" and the information in the Saima siblings' cards. Pierre throws an information card into the World of Darkness and pronounces the incantation: "Evil Magic, with your power we shall create a Saima Beast from the World of Darkness! Amiyasu Amiyasu Amikurosu... Saima Creation!!!!". When they are defeated, Pierre throws a Regeneration Card to turn the monster's remains into a 'Giant Ghost' ("Evil Magic, with your power grant this fallen Saima Beast the last strength! Amiyasu Amiyasu Amijiisu... Saima Regeneration!") that only Victory Robo can defeat. Later on in the series from episode 30-39, Salamandes occasionally created the Saima Zone, making it impossible to operate the Victory Robo. Only the Victory Mars could fight properly in the Saima Zone since its power system is not dependent on Solar Energy.

This creature was so powerful that the Gogo-V's Victory Mars and Liner Boy were easily no match for it, even when Super Armor Shine Gingaiou and Bull Taurus arrived to help. Golem SaimaBeasts

When GrandLiner destroyed MagmaGolem, its remains became GolemCards that Pierre uses to revive dead SaimaBeasts as gigantic Golem SaimaBeasts (Goremu Saimajū). Unlike giant SaimaBeasts, the Golem SaimaBeast are much larger and revived with a hardened body that only GrandLiner can pierce through.

Magma Golem (Maguma Goremu) (1, 11-12, 28): The first Saima Beast sent down to Earth to both destroy and burn up the city. Seemingly killed by Victory Robo when chucked into a lava pit it created earlier. But in reality, Magma Golem was in a new sleep, his body becoming red, until Grandiene herself woke him up. Her spirit was swallowed by Salamandes in order for him to escape from Hell.

Infinity Chain SaimaBeasts

In Episode 37, Salamandes started to use a very powerful card known as the Infinity Card. Its special power is that it can use absorbed energy from the GoGoV's energy weapons and with that power, the next SaimaBeast Carrier becomes more powerful than the previous Carrier, to the point where the GoGoV's energy weapons will not work on it. There were only three carriers and in the end its final carrier and the card itself was destroyed when the GoGoV used their Victory Mars to throw them into the sun.

Garubaria (37): A pig demon created by Pierre from one of Zylpheeza's cards. Its mind switched bodies with a young bride whose wedding the Tatsumi were attending. Later he switched bodies with Matoi but was finally sent back into its own body. Killed by Victory Mars but the powers he absorbed from the GoGo-V's weapons remained in the Infinity Card.

Hagakuren (38): Mantis demon created by Salamandes. Killed by Victory Mars, Max Victory Robo & GrandLiner. It foreshadowed the creation of the Final Infinity Chain demon.

Lizardes (39): A Dragon-warrior demon that had a striking resemblance to his creator, Salamandes. Drawing on the powers from the Inifinity card, the GoGo-V's weaponry were no match for it. Killed by Victory Mars, which flung him into the sun and therefore destroyed both the demon and the Infinity Card.

Names/Puns

Gogo-V

While the term "Go" can be used as the English word within the title of the series, Go is also the Japanese term for the number '5', thus acting as a pun in the name "Go-Go Five", this could also be said for Bay Area 55 (in which "55" is said as "Go-Go").

While "Kyuukyuu" is meant as the term "Rescue" in the teams name and in regards to the Gogo-V itself, Kyuu is also Japanese for the number '9'. This is linked to the series both airing and being set in the year 1999, and is also used for the "Kyuukyuu Machines", which are often given the english title of "99 Machines".

The "V" in the Gogo-V's title stands for the roman numeral for '5', but it is also used for the letter "V" for the "V-Lancers" and as part of the term "Victory" for the Victory Robo and Max Victory Robo.

Saima

Each of the four youngest members of the Saima siblings was named after an Elemental: (Sylph, Salamander, and Undine. Colbolda's name was a pun on the metal Kobalt, which is associated with the gnome.

Others

Golomois' name is rooted to "Golomois", the term used by Nostrodamus relating to the "king of terror".

LA FEMME NIKITA

Nikita Samulle is transformed from a prison inmate into the ultimate weapon for a secret government department while retaining a degree of humanity in a dangerous world.

This series filmed in Toronto is based on Luc Besson's Nikita. At the 13th Annual Gemini awards in Canada La Femme Nikita was voted people's choice for Best Costume Design. Nikita Samuelle was living on the streets when she was falsely convicted of killing a policeman. She is given a way out by Section One, a secret government organization, who fakes her death and tells her she must either work for them or die. Despite taking on the role of a ruthless killer, she has compassion and a generous spirit and tries to do the right thing, even though her conscience can sometimes get in the way of her work.

She is played by former Australian model Peta Wilson who spent her early years travelling around with her army family on different postings, but was primarily brought up in Papua, New Guinea. She moved to the USA in 1991 to study acting and got her first roles on the stage. Her other film work includes Sadness of Sex, Loser, Woman Undone, tv movie Vanishing Point and an appearance on the series Stranger. She is also a sailor and, along with her father and brother, picked up the title of Australian Interservice Champion Trailer Sailors.

Michael is Nikita's mentor, trainer and boss. On the surface he is a manipulative man, but underneath there are hints he really cares for her, although his mysterious past prevents him from getting too close. Canadian actor Roy Dupris is better known in his own country where he has a great deal of theatre experience and appeared in series Scoop, Emily, its sequel Blanche and starred in US mini-series Million Dollar Babies. His films include Being at Home with Claude, Chilie's Blues, Screamers, Cape Torment and more recently Free Money starring Marlon Brando and Haemoglobin with Rutger Hauer.

Section One's strategist is Madeline, whose expertise lies in the emotional and psychological aspects of the job. She is analytical rather than emotional, remaining dedicated to her work and indifferent to the cost. She is played by Alberta Watson who has starred in a string of television movies, and guested on tv shows such as The Outer Limits, Law and Order, The Equal-izer and Hill Street Blues. She has won awards for her roles in the films Spanking the Monkey, Exposure, Shoemaker and nominated for In Praise of Other Women. Her other films are Hackers, The Keep, The Sweet Hereafter and Seeds of Doubt.

Walter is the gadgets man with a colourful past, played by Don Francis. Vancouver-born Francis is both a musician and actor, has appeared in musicals on an off Broadway, made several jazz albums and has a new CD in the works. His first major role was in Finian's Rainbow and starring roles in other films followed, including Fast Company, Married to It, Johnny Mnemonic and more recently Love of the Land, The Minion and Summer of the Monkeys. He won awards for Drying Up the Streets and The Phoenix Team, and can be heard as some of the character voices on the Beetlejuice and Inspector Gadget cartoons among others.

Birkoff is the computer genius with a sense of humour who is the most outspoken opponent of Section One's goals and methods from within the group. He is played by Matthew Ferguson who grew up on Toronto Island and trained at the Claude Watson School for the Performing Arts. He was nominated for a Genie Award as best leading actor for Eclipse and Lillies and as best supporting actor for Love and Human Remains. His more recent films include The English Patient and Uncut. He has guest starred on series PSI FACTOR, Top Cops and Street Legal and starred in several tv movies, including Spencer: For Hire.

The man who runs Section One is known simply as Operations whose impassive mask rarely lets through his human side. He is played by Eugene Robert Glazer who tried trading in securities, driving taxis and working in the building trade before becoming an actor and finding work in the theatre. The native New Yorker has had recurring roles on TV series General Hospital and E.N.G.

Ratings success

La Femme Nikita was the number-one drama on basic cable channel USA Network for its first two seasons. It had been "greenlighted" by the network's founder and "cable network pioneer" Kay Koplovitz and nurtured by former USA Network president Rod Perth, a "key player" in its development. But, after Barry Diller assumed control of the network in April of 1998, he replaced Perth with Stephen Chao as network president. Heyn observes: "Although both Diller and Chao praised La Femme Nikita publicly, it soon became obvious that the series was no longer a priority. The non-stop publicity the series enjoyed under Perth began to dry up, and the only attention that La Femme Nikita received was the occasional promo spot, and even the frequency of those began to decline". During Nikita's third season, following Chao's "bizarre request that La Femme Nikita cast wrestlers in key terrorist roles as a way to cross-promote USA's broadcasts of the World Wrestling Federation" despite evidence that the shows did not have compatible demographics, Chao also began retooling USA Network's successful "Sunday Night Heat" bloc of action dramas, which also included Pacific Blue and Silk Stalkings; he canceled Silk Stalkings and replaced it with a slate of new series that included The War Next Door, G vs. E, Manhattan, AZ and Cover Me, all of which ultimately failed in the ratings and were also canceled. Consequently, La Femme Nikita tumbled in the ratings too, although the series still remained the top rated drama on USA Network, even during its fourth season, when promotional advertisements for the series all but disappeared. Negotiations to continue Nikita for a fifth season and beyond failed owing to "disagreements between USA Network and Warner Bros. over La Femme Nikita's renewal terms, which spilled out publicly into the pages of [industry trade publications] Variety and The Hollywood Reporter".

"Save LFN"

Following the series's cancellation in 2000, its dedicated viewers mounted an extensive fan campaign to revive it. "Save LFN" was not the first successful fan campaign to use the internet to rally fans and renew a canceled series, "These kinds of efforts had resurrected canceled series before, beginning with the original Star Trek on NBC in 1968 all the way up to UPN's Roswell in 2000"; however, "Save LFN" is notable for its size and inventiveness, including an "online renewal petition" which led to a full-page advertisement placed in The Hollywood Reporter that requested USA Network and Warner Bros. reconsider their decision, as well as over 25,000 letters sent to both companies containing everything from dollar bills featuring images of co-star Roy Dupuis to sunglasses (Nikita's signature accessory) to old TVs, VCRs, and remote controls. A group of organizers calling themselves "First Team," based on the term for the lead members of a mission used frequently in the series, coordinated most of these efforts through their Save LFN fansite. As a result of these efforts, Stephen Chao announced in September of 2000 that La Femme Nikita would return for a truncated fifth season of eight new episodes, which began airing in January 2001.

Series merchandise

According to Christopher Heyn, "To many long-time viewers, La Femme Nikita had always been a natural for merchandising. Besides the usual array of T-shirts, jackets, coffee mugs, posters and other trinkets, the action content of the series lends itself perfectly to the development of video games, comic books, toys and action figures. Yet, during the entire run of the series, Warner Bros. released only one piece of merchandise, the soundtrack CD on TVT Records. Beyond that, there was nothing. This frustrated [former president of USA Network and key player in the series's development] Rod Perth to no end" (20). Heyn quotes Perth as saying: "Warner Bros. never had an interest in this show ...". Nevertheless, Heyn reports, he himself "successfully brokered an official merchandising agreement between the Specialty Products division, a vendor in Toronto that already produced merchandise for the series's cast and crew, and the Sidekicks Society, the organizers of Close Quarters Standby 2," the second in a series of four La Femme Nikita fan conventions held in Toronto in October 1999. Such items included jackets, T-shirts, coffee mugs, and keychains emblazoned with the series logo and the copyright notice "©1999, Warner Bros" below the logo. "Because of a delivery mixup," Heyn's photo caption reads, "most of the coffee mugs and keychains never made it to the convention in time for sale," and, he adds, "the remaining boxes of jackets, T-shirts and coffee mugs sold out in less than an hour, leaving many empty-handed attendees frustrated and upset". Moreover, Heyn observes, "That unfortunate outcome only validated Warner Bros.' reticence to merchandise La Femme Nikita on a larger scale. The studio lost money on the internet broadcast and made next to nothing from the limited merchandising deal, which echoed their attitude toward the series' financial construction"

In 2001, a computer game based on Nikita, featuring dialogue written by La Femme Nikita supervising producer Peter Lenkov, was announced for the Xbox system, but the project was later canceled.

Trivia

Each episode has the same number of words in the title as the season it belongs to. For example; Season 1, Episode 10 is called 'Choice', where as Season 4, Episode 10 is called 'He Came From Four'. Oddly enough, Nikita is a Russian name for males, having nothing in common with the French names

While undercover at Anagar's, Nikita tries to protect a naive young girl named Sondra from fighting in "The Pit," while also trying to figure out a way to save all the girls at Anagar's (an objective which is not in the mission profile). 3 - 16 I REMEMBER PARIS

After an operation against a terrorist group, Michael brings one of the terrorists back to the Section for questioning. The "capture" is a plant, and he knocks Madeline out during interrogation and runs amuck in Section One's HQ. Before Michael finds and eliminates the man, he successfully uploads many of Section One's crucial files, including the Registry (which is at least encrypted, and will take the terrorists several days to decipher) and the exact location (un-encrypted) of Section's HQ (located in Paris). Operations orders the evacuation and destruction of Section One's HQ. With Section in temporary quarters, Operations takes over the counter-operation personally, and goes out on a mission with a less than thrilled Nikita. Will Operations be able to find the terrorist base before the terrorists decode The Registry?

Wr Michael Loceff

3 - 17 ALL GOOD THINGS

With the "situation in the Balkans" again reaching critical, Operations is called off on a consulting job in the field by "The Center," and he turns over temporary full control of Section One to Michael. Operations leaves Michael with one warning, George from Oversight wants a full-scale campaign waged against terrorist financier Luigi Bergomi, but Michael must resist this as Bergomi is too strong and would overwhelm Section forces. After meeting with George, Michael has a change of heart, and decides to launch an operation against Bergomi, despite Madeline's and later Nikita's strong objections. Has the absolute power of running Section One gone to Michael's head? Meanwhile, now that they are "officially" lovers, Michael promotes Nikita as his lieutenant over another agent named Wallace, and when Wallace turns up dead after an operation against Bergomi, Nikita wonders if Michael is playing favorites, and trying to protect her.

3 - 18 THIRD PARTY RIPOFF

Madeline has decided that Michael's romantic involvement with Nikita is affecting his performance, and so she sets about putting pressure on Michael to halt the relationship. Soon enough, Michael is no longer in charge of Tactical Oversight, so he loses his office, and is no longer running missions. He's replaced by Davenport, a decent guy who's now in charge of field operations. Can Michael give up all the power he's earned in Section One for Nikita? And will Nikita let him give it all up, even if he wants to? Meanwhile, a sultry operative by the name of Valerie is putting heavy moves on both Walter and Birkoff, which soon enough puts a strain on their friendship.

Wr Michael Loceff

Dir T.J. Scott

3 - 19 ANY MEANS NECESSARY

After Birkoff chokes in the middle of remotely directing an operation and is then promptly upstaged by arch-nemesis Greg Hillinger who pulls the frying pan out of the fire and saves the mission), Operations promotes Hillinger to Birkoff's job and re-assigns Birkoff to his first field operation. Birkoff's mission is to infiltrate and perform reconnaissance on a mercenary terrorist organization "Soldat de la Libert," run by a man named Jean-Marc Rousseau who employs brainwashing on young people to fill the ranks of his organization. Birkoff is convinced that Operation's real objective is to set him up with an impossible mission, so that Operations can eliminate Birkoff and permanently replace him with the more obsequious and pliable Hillinger. And sure enough, once inside the group Birkoff discovers ties between Rousseau's organization and the infamous Red Cell, and Operations refuses to extricate Birkoff preferring to leave him in place to gather more information. Can Nikita help Birkoff get out of the origination before Birkoff is totally brainwashed by Rousseau? And is Operations really out to eliminate Birkoff?

Wr Lawrence Hertzog

Dir David Straiton

3 - 20 THREE-EYED TURTLE

During an operation, Hillinger's goofing off costs an operative his life, and Hillinger pleads with Birkoff to cover for him, which Birkoff inexplicably does. Hillinger doesn't return the favor, however, when Birkoff is sent out to direct a mission from the field, and Hillinger deliberately tries to get his rival Birkoff killed off once and for all. The jokes on Hillinger when Birkoff exposes what Hillinger did. Sure enough, Operations puts him in abeyance and Hillinger's days seem to be numbered. At the same time, Operations is acting more and more viciously toward Madeline. Operations' timing is terrible, as George from Oversight is turning up the pressure on Operations, just as he's acting out with Madeline. Will Madeline get even with Operations by betraying him to George?

3 - 21 PLAYING WITH FIRE (PART 1 OF 2)

Literally playing with fire, Michael and Nikita are setting up clandestine rendezvous on Section missions as a way to get around Operations and Madeline's ban on their seeing each other (See Third Party Ripoff). Operations and Madeline still suspect Michael and Nikita of seeing each other on the side, so Madeline starts sending Davenport along on Michael's and Nikita's mission to spy on them. Meanwhile, Madeline orders Birkoff to sweep Michael's and Nikita's computer panels for secret communication, and when Birkoff does indeed discover communications between the two, it implicates Walter as their go-between. Will Birkoff turn in Walter? And, if so, what will happen to Michael, Nikita and Walter?

Wr Peter M. Lenkov

Dir Joseph Scanlan

3 - 22 ON BORROWED TIME (PART 2 OF 2)

Michael and Nikita are sent on an operation to find out who a pharmaceutical plant owned by a company named Genefex and a supplier of Red Cell who is selling a biological weapon named Gadium, too. Unbeknownst to Michael and Nikita, the operation has a secondary objective, to end Michael and Nikita's love affair once and for all. Once the mission objective is achieved, Nikita is sent to another part of plant, where Madeline is waiting to "reprogram" Nikita to eliminate her feelings for Michael. Meanwhile, Operations finally does the unthinkable, he sends Walter to "retirement." Birkoff has other ideas, and he immediately sets about sabotaging Walter's replacement, a young and innocent chap by the name of Giles.

Wr Peter M. Lenkov

Dir Ted Hanlan

4 - 1 GETTING OUT OF REVERSE

Nikita continues to show evidence of the "reprogramming," including ordering the elimination of a captured Section operative and endangering the lives of children during a mission, and taking part in the beatings of a captive. Michael is determined to reverse Nikita's reprogramming, and he soon determines that the former Section operative who came up with the "reprogramming" process, Ross Gelman, may be the key. Meanwhile, Operations couldn't be more proud of the "new" Nikita, but Madeline is still worried. Eventually, Operations concludes that Michael's attempts at restoring Nikita have gone too far, and takes extreme measures.

Wr Michael Loceff

4 - 2 THERE ARE NO MISSIONS

Michael again manages to escape certain death, but this time he returns to infiltrate Section. Determined to find the files that possess the formula for deprogramming Nikita, Michael is stunned to discover who Section's first test subject was; Adrian, Section One's founder, whose effort to topple Operations failed two years earlier. Section's newest target is the son of a wealthy industrialist, by the name of Helmut Volker, who is

The twist is Operations and Madeline have figured out that Michael has "restored" Nikita, so Operations uses this operation to once again drive a wedge between Michael and Nikita. Helmut Volker must marry if he is ever to inherit his father's business, so Operations orders Nikita to marry Helmut when he proposes! Meanwhile, Michael does everything he can to prevent that from happening.

Wr Lawrence Hertzog

4 - 6 LOVE, HONOR AND CHERISH

Nikita continues on the mission she was sent on in, "Man in the Middle," which is to marry Helmut Volker, a man with several ties to Red Cell, but she finds out that she is not the only one with secrets, her new husband has a big secret of his own.

4 - 7 SYMPATHY FOR THE DEVIL

Operations calls Michael and Nikita out on a favor, he orders them to protect a Vietnam vet by the name of Willie Cain, a man who is now little more than a drifter and a bum, from the thugs who are out to get him in a deal gone bad. Operations believes that he would not have survived capture and torture in Vietnam without Willie's help. What Nikita and Michael don't know is that they are embarking on a mission that will mix them up with Operations' Vietnamese torturer, Fan Van Lin, Carlo Bonaventure the head of a Mafia Crime Family. Meanwhile, Birkoff develops a sudden interest in how he became part of Section, the place he has been in all his life. An interest leads him to the discovery of an unknown twin brother, and a duplicitous history involving Walter.

Wr Lawrence Hertzog

Dir Brad Turner

4 - 8 NO ONE LIVES FOREVER

The unbelievable happens! Nikita is called before Operations and Madeline and is given fantastic news, she's free! As part of a "pilot program," Nikita is granted her freedom and a normal life, as long as she never contacts anyone from Section again, and as long as she agrees to be regularly evaluated. Nikita is skeptical at first, but after 6 weeks on "the outside," she starts to believe that maybe this is for-real. Sure enough, George from Oversight shows up with the strings, in exchange for her freedom, Nikita must do one thing, return to Section One to kill Operations! The man whom George claims killed Nikita's real father. Will Nikita do it?

Wr Peter M. Lenkov

4 - 9 DOWN A CROOKED PATH

Another incursion takes place in Section One, this time in the form of a virus that is making Section One's members sick, one by one. Taking matters into his own hands, George orders in his own Bio Team to treat Section's members. Operations suspects George has an ulterior motive. Sure enough, when Section's people, starting with Walter, followed by Nikita, go in for their "examination" with George's Bio Team, they come out vegetables. It seems George's team is mind wiping (downloading the contents of the brains) the Section's members. This process causes them to relive their lives, before leaving them vegetables. Can Michael and Birkoff stop George's team before everyone in Section One gets their brain sucked?

Wr Peter M. Lenkov

4 - 10 HE CAME FROM FOUR

Seeking a lost command clone (a computer-like device that apparently allows the user to command a Section without outside aide) that was apparently captured by Red Cell and then stolen by another terrorist group, George and Oversight orders Section one to work together with an agent from Section Four to search for the missing "command clone." What is Section Four? Apparently, it's the Section where people/agents with extrasensory abilities are developed. So, who is the agent from Section Four? None other than a 12-year old boy by the name of Jerome. Of course, with his extrasensory abilities, Jerome soon overwhelms the ability of Madeline and Operations to control him. Can Nikita bring Jerome under control before he destroys Section One?

Wr Ed Horowitz

4 - 11 TIME TO BE HEROS

Operations gives Michael and Nikita an almost impossible task; they must get five absolutely, brand

They must go up against new terrorist group, Crystal Sky (who recently did a number on Section Eight). Nikita doesn't think it can be done. Is this another of Operation's gambits, in which the five new recruits are cannon fodder for some mission? If so, can Michael and Nikita save them from this fate? And, if these recruits aren't ready by the time of the mission, could their inexperience also put Michael and Nikita themselves in peril?

Birkoff may have stumbled on Section One's biggest coups yet, a chance to nab a top Red Cell operative by the name of "The Cardinal," who has eluded Section One for more than 15 years. Unfortunately, Birkoff's arch-nemesis Greg Hillinger is convinced that Birkoff is wrong, and Hillinger convinces George that Operations and Section One are walking into a trap. Based on Hillinger's intellect, George moves against Operations on the assumption that the operation against The Cardinal is bogus. Is Birkoff right after all? Nikita assists Jones with his evaluation, and things change radically. Operations is forced to remain at Section One for the next seven years. Madeline takes her own life rather than be cancelled. LAND OF THE GIANTS

Land of the Giants detailed the exploits of the seven people and a dog on board the Spindrift. The Spindrift was a suborbital space ship on a trip from New York to London when it encountered a weird gaseous cloud which transported the Spindrift to a world where the people were a dozen times as large as they were.

The seven marooned travellers consisted of three crew members and four passengers. The Spindrift's crew consisted of Captain Steve Burton, his co-pilot Dan Erikson, and stewardess Betty Hamilton. The four passengers were: Valerie Scott, a heiress. Mark Wilson a very rich engineer, Barry Lockridge a twelve-year-old orphan boy and owner of Chipper the dog, and Commander Alexander Fitzhugh, a bank robber who became the resident troublemaker among the seven marooned passengers, fulfilling a role similar to Dr. Smith's in Lost in Space.

The planet that the Spindrift crew found themselves on was much like Earth in many ways, although the society was much more totalitarian. The giants there have been aware of Earth's existence for some time and were quite paranoid about Earth and its inhabitants. This paranoia caused them to believe that the Spindrift was some type of scouting expedition for an invasion of the giant's world by the people of the Earth. The Spindrift was not the first Earth ship to land there. as on occasion the travellers met other humans. The only regular giant character was Inspector Kobick, a man obsessed with capturing the Earthlings. While not trying to evade Kobick, the travellers get to experience a variety of problems caused by giant cats, insects and children. They occasionally meet giants who do not want to turn them in for Kobick's reward and often end up helping them in some way.

Producer Irwin Allen awoke from a nightmare with a shout. He lay there in the darkness, his mind replaying the incredible adventure his mind had just put him through. He dreamed he was a little person, being chased by giants. Allen smiled and picked up the phone to call writer William Welch. There was a TV series in this idea!

Welch subsequently turned in a script about two American space pilots whose rocketship crashes on a mysterious planet of giants. The pair are befriended by a race of Robin Hood-type little people who are native to this strange world. The network liked the idea but rejected the script. Anthony Wilson did a rewrite, introducing a varied group of people trapped on this alien planet: There was a courageous captain, an easygoing black co-pilot and a sensitive young stewardess. The passengers included a gruff tycoon, a spoiled jet-setter, an orphan boy and a con man. There was also the orphan boy's dog, Chipper. A ten-minute demonstration film won executives over.

"Artwork sold the series to ABC," says costume designer PauJ Zastupnevich. "Many people in the industry are not very bright. Unless they have some pretty pictures to look at, they're lost. Irwin's demonstrated lecture included 10 to 18 sketches, which helped [the executives] visualize the series' concept."

On the surface, it appeared that the timing for a series about a planet of giants was off. Movies featuring little people in a giant world, such as The Incredible Shrinking Man (1957) and Dr. Cyclops (1940), were ancient history. The TV world had changed radically since Allen's previous successful series, Uoyage to the Bottom of the Sea and Lost in Space. Fantasy and action-adventure formats were being discarded for more realistic shows such as Mod Squad, Medical Center and The Bold Ones. Giants hunting down little people seemed out of sync with audiences who were demanding more sophisticated programming.

A couple of the show's cast members expressed concern about doing such a far-out show. Their fears were allayed by their agents, who assured them that Land of the Giants wouldn't last more than 13 weeks. After Allen saw the rushes of the first episode, he proclaimed Land of the Giants his best work. The first 13 episodes were filmed during 1967 and 1968, with ABC planning to unveil the show for a January 1968 debut on Friday nights.

At the last minute, however, Land of the Giants was held over until the fall, where it would replace Allen's tiring Uoyage to the Bottom of the Sea on Sundays. Meanwhile, the National Home Testing Institute reported that the series might pay off big dividends: Out of the 25 new TV series for the fall, test audiences ranked Land of the Giants number five in the category of best series. The cast was an attractive group of fresh faces, with one long-time veteran in the cast, Kurt Kaszner. Kaszner's devious Mr. Fitzhugh began as a bumbling clone of the Dr. Smith character from Lost in Space. Kaszner quickly imbued the roguish con-man with his own personality. Unlike Dr. Smith, Fitzhugh was willing to lay his life down for his comrades and displayed a likable if inept nature. More importantly, Lost in Space had been burned out by its emphasis on Dr. Smith. Land of the Giants featured its seven cast members equally.

Casting director Larry Stewart says, "I cast all of the folks for the series. I suggested casting [a black man] for the role of Dan Erickson because I was sensitized to those needs. I suggested Don Marshall for the part. He was a good actor and a friend. Land of the Giants was one of the first TV series that had a major continuing role for a black actor. It was a breakthrough for Twentieth Century-Fox Television and a breakthrough for Irwin Allen. It was also a fair battle with the network. We had to convince them to use Don. They weren't sure they were ready for this: 'But what if we lose the audience in Mississippi?' I had also cast the series Julia, with [black actress] Diahann Carroll. Once that bullet was bitten by Fox, it was a little easier getting Don Marshall on Land of the Giants. It wasn't easy, but it was easier." For his own part, Don Marshall says that "the character of Dan reminded me of me. Like Dan, I had run track in high school, and I also liked jazz. I was very shy, and through acting I found a way to express myself."

Early trade papers reported actress Barbara Hershey was a front-runner for the stewardess role. "I don't recall Barbara Hershey," says Stewart, "but there was conversation about Sam Elliot for the role of the captain. Sam was under contract at Twentieth Century-Fox at the time. At one point, we felt Sam was going to do it." Stewart feels the cast "worked out fine. Physically, they could handle the show. However, none of them really got any good moments to perform and show their acting ability." Don Marshall agrees: "We had a good cast on Land of the Giants. Had the show's writers been given a freer hand to deal with the characters' human emotions, fear and humor, the show would not have been taken off the air."

When Land of the Giants premiered, it was touted as the most expensive series in TV history (a quarter of a million dollars per episode). However, this publicity was not entirely true. The budget for many later episodes was actually much lower. The early ratings for Land of the Giants were strong, and more importantly, the series picked up a broad family audience. This pleased Allen, who told columnist Cynthia Lowry weeks before the series aired, "It must be a big hit to survive. It's so expensive that it will have to attract the whole family. We know the kids will watch it and they will identify with the little people. Our job was to write stories that will attract the adults." Many of the reviews were encouraging. Newsday said, "Visually, this show is a gas." Singer Frank Sinatra called up Land of the Giants co-star Deanna Lund and congratulated her on "a groovy show."

The early episodes presented the land of the giants as a mysterious world where the giants were speechless. To be caught by the towering humanoids meant life in captivity or dissection. "Keeping the giants mute was a scary and effective way to add an alien dimension to the series," says writer Ellis St. Joseph. "It gave the giants' world a wonderful atmosphere of mystery."

When the giants did get voices, they were at first "deep and rumbling," says writer Esther Mitchell. "Later, we were told to ignore this scaling of sound in our scripts. The producers wanted the giants and earthlings to interact with each other. It was the right decision. It opened up the scope of the stories." The show provided young viewers with adventure, likable characters and an occasional moral message. Using the giant world as a mirror of our own, the writers incorporated themes of freedom, justice and the futility of judging other life forms through prejudicial eyes. Indeed, the earthlings were feared and hated by many giants simply because they were different. The authorities, thinking the earthlings were invaders, used hate propaganda to inspire citizens to capture little people.

The giants' planet was an aesthetically pleasing world where the earthlings could walk fantastically long distances and not get winded, and trudge through the jungle still looking fresh in ironed clothes and immaculate hairstyles. Irwin Allen's brand of storytelling was to sell fantasy, not reality. The cast themselves were put through rugged paces. Not only did they have to pretend that a spotlight on the studio ceiling was a giant; they had to do their own stunts. "That cast really labored for their pay," marvels Esther Mitchell. "They got fantastic workouts, scrambling up strings, slithering out of drains, dialing giant telephones, hiding in pencil holders. It was a real athletic feat, often difficult and even dangerous."

The show's most striking asset was the special effects. Howard Schwartz, director of photography for the series' first season, recalls, "We had a standard procedure in filming the series. Whenever we shot down at little people, we were on a big crane, shooting with a wide-angle lens to make the earthlings look really small. By contrast, when we were shooting the giants, we were on the floor, holding a hand-held camera. By using a wide angle lens, we made them look extremely tall."

Irwin Allen directed the pilot film, and Schwartz says, "He did things exactly as he wanted them. He had a favorite expression: 'Rock, Roll and Return!' That was to cue the actors as they fell from side to side in the spaceship." During night scenes on Fox's backlot, Schwartz recalls, "We were setting up a shot when this huge bank of Los Angeles fog rolled in. It interfered with the shooting, and Irwin got very frustrated. He turned to his production manager and said, 'Get that fog outa here!' They brought out a couple of big wind machines, aimed them at the fog and turned them on. The result was hilarious. It didn't make a bit of difference. It was like turning on two tiny fans. The fog kept rolling in, and Irwin was jumping up and down. The crew was dying with laughter."

Schwartz had a good working relationship with Allen, saying, "He was a fine producer and a very creative guy. The crew loved to work with him because he was so loyal to everyone. He was a big job provider in the business, and I never had any problems with him. He allowed me to do some interesting things on the show. Like everyone, he had his phobias. He didn't like being up on the crane. Heights really bothered him. He also liked it cold in his production room. During the winter he had the air conditioners running on maximum. Once, as a gag, I walked into a production meeting wearing a heavy overcoat, a muffler, gloves and a hat. Irwin didn't say a word!"

Schwartz also enjoyed working with the cast. "We held up a broom for them to look at when they talked to a giant. I'm sure it was tough on them. They were all pleasant people. Gary Conway was the hardest member of the cast to get to know. The others were more outgoing and friendly. Gary wasn't unfriendly he was just more of a loner. Kurt Kasznar was an old pro and a fine actor." Bill Neff, a lighting technician on Land of the Giants, had worked on Walt Disney's Babes in Toyland (1961), "and that required a lot of overscale props, so Land of the Giants was a familiar kind of job for me. But it was an interesting series." A clash between Irwin Allen and Neff early on worked to Neff's advantage. "He respected me after that because nobody else ever stood up to him-nobody. As a dreamer of science fiction, he had a good imagination.

But he liked to get people stirred up. He would come on a set and say, 'I'm the boss. You'll listen to me and do what I say!' He thought it was a good idea to get people mad at him. After getting everybody worked up, he would walk off the set and chuckle to his production assistant, 'I sure told them!' We had good people, but generally, it was not a congenial, happy set because of this behavior. Irwin felt people did a better job riled up. He was always yelling, 'Time is money' at the directors."

Neff recalls the cast as "nice people. Gary Conway was very gung-ho. He wanted the series to be at its best. Don Marshall got a little aggravated once in awhile because of Gary's sense of perfection. Gary occasionally tried to get a hold of the directing reins. He wasn't nasty, he was just over-zealous. He had all kinds of suggestions. The directors would say to Irwin, 'This guy's got too many ideas. We can't keep up with him.' Irwin had to tone Gary down a couple of times, and Gary would pout. Overall, though, his dedication was part of the reason for Giants' success.

"Heather Young looked like an entirely different person out of makeup. She wasn't the least bit glamorous off the set, but on the show, she was very attractive. Kurt Kasznar was the most professional of the cast. He did his job very well. I didn't think the boy [Stefan Arngim] was that great in his role. I can only give him an E for effort."

Actor Don Matheson has good memories of his co-stars and enjoys telling tales on Heather Young: "Heather was a Mormon, and I was always trying to get her to say bad things. Once I begged her to say the F word. She would go, 'FFFFF...' and blush. She told me that she couldn't say bad words. She was a doll."

Paul Zastupnevich recalls, "The cast was terrific, even though they bitched and hollered sometimes because it wasn't an easy life. They had to report to the studio at five a.m. five days a week. Additionally, they all had to be in good physical shape because they climbed ladders, got tossed around in the spaceship and had to shimmy up ropes. It was like G. I. training every week. They got rope burns but they were troupers."

Actor Kevin Hagen appeared in nine episodes as Inspector Kobick, the giant police official determined to capture the little people. Hagen, who later played Doc Baker on the Little House on the Prairie series, recalls, "I liked Kobick's professionalism and dedication. He was frustrated by being outsmarted by these little creatures. I tried to portray a certain grudging admiration for them, and tried for a little lightness and humor whenever I could find it, which wasn't often." Sometimes little dolls would be supplied for the "giant" actors to look at, but Hagen doesn't recall that advantage. "Whenever I talked to a little person, I looked at the cameraman's knees, elbows or crotch. I saw whatever my imagination could come up with."

Guest star Lee Meriwether, who played a giant woman in the episode "Rescue," recalls that in her scenes with little people, "I was really talking to a twig and some grass. I asked the prop folks if they had something to help me out. Lo and behold, out came a couple of Barbie-like dolls. What a blessing those were. They helped tremendously."

From the other angle, Don Matheson recalls talking to non-existent giants. "We were relating to people who weren't there," says Matheson. "Sometimes we got Steve Marlo, our dialogue coach, to go up a 16-foot ladder and read the giants' dialogue for us. All we had to do was find out Steve hated heights. We'd say to the director, 'Gee, you know, it would really help us in this scene if Steve would get waaaaay up there and relate to us.' So he got on the ladder, and he began sweating and turning the pages and hanging on for dear life. We didn't do it to him often, only when he gave us a bad time."

Despite efforts to appeal to a wide audience, Land of the Giants became known as another Irwin Allen children's show. Kurt Kasznar, for one, was exasperated by the lack of adult interest in the series, though he found it understandable. "Nobody I knew ever watched the show because it was so awful," he told Movie Life magazine in 1970. "I finally forced a friend to watch an episode. He never forgave me." "The series was pure escapism," counters writer Esther Mitchell, "but we didn't write it for children. Many adult friends of ours watched the show with their children. People loved to lose themselves in that fantastic land, rooting for the lovable little people. Viewers were never hammered by messages, never made ill by offensive violence and never caused to squirm by unwanted sexual scenes."

Actor Don Matheson found out how sensitive Irwin Allen was to the label "kids' show." "I gave an interview where I said, 'Land of the Giants is especially entertaining to kids.' Irwin called me up and said, 'What are you saying? Stop telling people it's a kids' show. It's not a kids' show!' He gave me all of this psychological mumbo-jumbo about how adult women really dug us. I said, 'Jesus Christ! I didn't say it was just a kids' show. It's for the whole family.' He said, 'Well then, say that!'"

Matheson says the cast knew they couldn't compete with the show's special effects. "It would be a losing battle. You just give it your best shot. The whole concept of Land of the Giants was more of a star than any one of us." Matheson admits the series needed to open up more. "There was a sameness to the show. One of us would get captured, and the rest of us would have to rescue that person. Too many of the shows were that way. I would read a script and turn to Deanna and say, 'It's your turn in the barrel this week.'" Land of the Giants became known as the "getting captured and being rescued" kind of show. The novelty of the little people climbing up and down ropes quickly wore off. Occasionally, however, the writers had fun with the premise. In "Collector's Item," Steve rides the bumper of a giant's car; in "The Crash," a huge car roars out of a mist and passes over Steve and Dan; and in "Brainwash," the earthlings escape from a flooding cave by hitching a ride on a giant's foot.

Writer Richard Shapiro, who later created TV's Dynasty, got his first break on Land of the Giants. "My writing career was not exactly soaring when I did the series," he says. "I needed the credit, I needed the money and frankly, I would have worked for anyone who offered to hire me. But it turned out to be a rather special experience."

Shapiro joined the series in the second year, and his stories occasionally had barbs of satiric insight. "I approached the show with a sense of fun," he says. "There was a charming innocence about Land of the Giants. Irwin felt that trying to be genuinely satirical would have destroyed that. However, looked at another way, Land of the Giants does send up more serious science fiction. Maybe that's why the interest in the show has persisted. However, it was certainly more of a children's show than serious drama. Neither was it real science fiction. But the stories were good. They made moral points from which young people could profit. It was fun to watch for grownups, too, if they weren't too stuffy."

Shapiro recalls the show had a cooperative team. "Dick McDonagh, who died some years ago, was a very good story editor. Irwin and his production people always felt the story was most important. The effects served the story. There was a sign up in the production office that read, 'The quality will be remembered long after the cost is forgotten.' Except one day we came in to find the sign had been changed to read, 'The cost will be remembered long after the quality is forgotten.' It was a joke, of course. Irwin was always concerned about the quality of everything he did."

Shapiro was delighted by the guest stars used in his shows. "They cast my episodes with fine character actors like John Carradine and Ben Blue. I remember that shooting on "Giants and All That Jazz" almost shut down one day because Sugar Ray Robinson had to work with a boa constrictor. It turned out the middleweight champion of the world was terrified of snakes!"

Writers Robert and Wanda Duncan found some restrictions writing for Land of the Giants. "The strengths and weaknesses of the series were the special effects," Robert Duncan says. "They were often more important than the story. In 'Seven Little Indians,' we moved the plot around so that the little people could escape through the paws of a giant snow leopard. In other words, we manipulated the story for a startling visual. This sacrificed legitimate drama."

Duncan tried in vain to prevent the destruction of one of his giants. "In "Collector's Item," the conclusion has a house blown to smithereens. We asked that the housekeeper be shown getting away safely from the explosion. She had done nothing to require her obliteration. We wrote in the housekeeper's escape, and Irwin crossed it out. We wrote it in again, but once more, Irwin crossed it out. This went on until the filming where, of course, the housekeeper was demolished along with the house. Wanda and I were against gratuitous violence, and we explained that to Irwin. But he was a megalomaniac with extremely high control needs. This was his show, and we were not to forget it."

When Land of the Giants went into its second season, the series had peaked in the ratings. To liven up the format, stories of time travel, space travel, cloning, invisibility and lost islands were written. Music maestro John Williams composed a thrilling new title sequence. At the same time, however, "the show's budget became very important during the second season," says Esther Mitchel. "[My husband Robert and I] had written a story where the little people are swallowed by a giant fish. Irwin was enthusiastic about it, but the money wasn't there for such a production."

Regardless of any changes, ratings for a second year were poor, and the series was soon canceled. "We were hoping for a third season when we were cut," says Paul Zastupnevich. "We were told we weren't getting the right demographics. You'll never convince me that the demographics and Nielsen ratings are as reliable as they say. It's a lot of hooey-balooy and we got stuck with it." "We read about the series' cancelation in the trades," says Matheson. "I think Irwin found out the same way. He called me later, and we both felt it shouldn't have been canceled. I heard that it was canceled because it was too expensive to make."

The series had only marginal success in syndication for the next 20 years. Land of the Giants was nearly forgotten until it was dusted off for a national broadcast on America's USA channel in 1989. The series enjoyed a retroactive interest as a new generation discovered the show. Land of the Giants writer Mann Rubin thinks the show's message still applies to today's world. "It showed these little people facing and overcoming towering obstacles. The series' message was that humans can endure. It confirmed our durability."

This series was the last major SF series produced by Irwin Allen and together with his other three shows (LOST IN SPACE, VOYAGE TO THE BOTTOM OF THE SEA and THE TIME TUNNEL) has produced 274 episodes in just six years. At the time this was the most expensive television show ever produced costing $250,000 an episode. Gilligan's Island meets "Honey, I Shrunk the Kids", but saved by taking itself seriously and creating a certain empathy for the people who just want to fix the spaceship and get home, including millionaire engineer Mark Wilson, heiress Valerie Scott, and 12-year-old Barry. In the world of giants, Inspector Kobrick of S.I.B. was the security agent in charge of finding and re-finding the earthlings. Of course, this concept had been done with satiric glee two centuries earlier by Jonathan Swift.

Like all Irwin Allen series, Land of the Giants abounds with impressive special effects. The effects often overshadow both the story and the characters. A Land of the Giants reunion movie was in pre-production during 1991 for eventual filming in the Soviet Union. Reuniting all of the surviving cast members, this film was to have the actors who played the TV characters playing themselves at a cast reunion suddenly finding themselves in the Land of the Giants for real. The break up of the Soviet Union contributed to the shelving of this project for the present time.

This fourth and final chapter of Irwin Allen's television science fiction quartet was a mix of LOST IN SPACE and Gulliver's Travels, which has also been made into a TV series (GULLIVER'S TRAVELS). Though Allen's third series THE TIME TUNNEL, had appeared - and disappeared - on the BBC, Land of the Giants followed VOYAGE TO THE BOTTOM OF THE SEA and LOST IN SPACE on ITV. It debuted in the London area in 1968, for the first two seasons, with other ITV areas following - or not - according to the whims of regionisation. Channel Four picked up the series to replace LOST IN SPACE in autumn 1989. It's also been aired on Bravo. The series aired on ABC in the US in 1968.

Carrying on in the tradition of such films as DR CYCLOPS and The INCREDIBLE SHRINKING MAN as well as an earlier tv series, WORLD OF GIANTS, the first episode showed 7 people aboard a future "stratocruiser" passing through a space/time-warp into a world similar to 20th-century Earth, but where all things, including people, are 12 times larger. The series concerned their predictable encounters with giant people and giant props. Three novelizations by Murray LEINSTER are Land of the Giants * (1968), Land of the Giants #2: The Hot Spot * (1969) and #3: Unknown Danger * (1969). Others were Land of the Giants: Flight of Fear * (1969) by Carl Henry RATHJEN and Land of the Giants: The Mean City * (1969) by James Bradwell.

Land of the Giants was the fourth and final of Irwin Allen's science fiction series of the 1960's. Set in the then far distant future of 1983. Like all Irwin Allen series. Land of the Giants abounds with impressive special effects. The effects often overshadow both the story and the characters. A Land of the Giants reunion movie was in pre-production during 1991 for eventual filming in the Soviet Union. Reuniting all of the surviving cast members, this film was to have the actors who played the TV characters playing themselves at a cast reunion suddenly finding themselves in the Land of the Giants for real. The break up of the Soviet Union contributed to the shelving of this project for the present time.

The executive producer for Land of the Giants was Irwin Allen, director of photography was Howard Schwartz, the special effects were created by L.B. Abbott, Art Cruickshank and Emil Kosa Jr. The music was created by Johnny Williams. Season One of Land of the Giants was first shown in Britain on LWT from the 7th December 1968 - 31 May 1969, the second series was seen on Thames Television from the 24th January - 12 October 1972, which also included repeats from the first season. The make-up was created by Ben Nye, costume designer & assistant to the producer was Paul Zastupnevich. Art direction for the show was by Jack Martin Smith, Stan Jolley, Walter M. Scott and Norman Rockett. The series has been seen in the UK on ITV, Sky Cable, Channel Four and Bravo.

Interview with Deanna Lund

"I was doing a film for Twentieth Century Fox called 'Tony Rome', and my agent submitted me for the part of Valerie. They were interested and since Fox had me under contract, they sent for the dailies from 'Tony Rome' and they looked at those and at the Chrysler Theatre that I'd done, and they hired me on that basis. I dyed my hair red to play a lesbian stripper (in 'Tony Rome'), so when he (Irwin) saw it, he said "Oh yeh, good, I like it". So, what I would do was every time we'd have a hiatus or some time, I would whip in a few little blonde streaks trying to get it back to my natural colour. He, of course, would catch on and say it didn't match. It looked better, but he didn't care - not taking into account that my hair was also growing and the style changing - the colour had to be the same."

"Irwin is a larger than life character. He was a wonderful director. He was meticulous with details. He knew exactly what he wanted. After we finished shooting, he went back and shot some more. He did things that nobody else was doing, and spent more time and more money on special effects, and of course that's what finally sank the show."

"The pilot took longer than the others. I can't remember exactly, but it seemed like we were on it two weeks and then maybe another week later, maybe even longer. Irwin reshot a lot of it. Generally an episode would take 8 days which was very long for an hour show, but there were so many special shots, and that didn't even include sometimes a lot of extra bicycling to do shots later on that they'd squeeze in. So it was very complicated. A lot of long hours. I'd get there at 6 in the morning and never get home before 8 or 9 o'clock at night. It was a long week."

"Generally what we would do is shoot a show, and then we would run to another set and pick up shots from another show - either blue screen or some special effects, and do them all at one time. That happened a lot so you'd be dazed, wondering which show you were doing.

"I didn't think much of Valerie's character when she started out. She was a sort of spoiled jet-set, sort of brat, who was really self-centred and very self-involved, and didn't really think about anyone else's welfare or well-being. As the show progressed I had her become more of a loving character, more rounded, more group involved and caring of her fellow passengers. She began to reach out and became less selfish. Sometimes her gutsiness would get her in trouble, or usually did, but I think that underneath that rock hard exterior that she started with, there was a big heart, a soft heart and that she did care about, and learn to love everybody that was there, even Fitzhugh. I don't know if Valerie and I had anything in common - I guess to a certain degree - but I'm not going to admit to being a brat or cold hearted! I think the part about caring about the people she was with, certainly was easy, because I did care about all of them, and there was a lot of close camaraderie amongst all of us. Hopefully that came across."

"The shows could have been a lot better if there had been some more character development than there was, but Irwin would 'cut out' anything that wasn't in his view, good for the show. All the shows relied only on special effects. Irwin had little time for any of that emotional stuff."

"Any suggestions that we had, so long as we didn't bring them up on the set, they were very amenable to working with. You can't hold up production at the last minute and say that Valerie wouldn't say that, and then have a script writer run down and have to rewrite it. At first, there were a lot of things the actors didn't want to do or say, and they made the rule for us to do it ahead of time and then that was fine. I can't remember making any great changes. Mostly my development was in the way I handled certain lines, with the attitudes I thought she should have."

"Our characters stayed pretty much the same. First the giants didn't speak English, in fact, I don't think they spoke at all in some episodes. That in my mind was a little confusing because sometimes they didn't, and sometimes they did, then they spoke slower, and they walked slower. That was not consistent, and that I think was due to whatever director was involved at the time. Each writer had their own style and of course their own favourites to work with - some were better than others."

"Gary (Conway) would act as our 'spokesman'. He was very good like that. He was the only one who would go up against Irwin, but in such a way as to be diplomatic."

"I think there was a time, yes, it was when Irwin was entertaining some people the night before a shoot, and the following morning, I had to do a scene in a giant bird cage, and (grimacing) I felt so ill... I had to sit in this cage and do things like dancing and boy I felt so nauseous... I had to leave the set several times during that scene! The dancing was awful, I mean in such a confined space. It was very difficult to choreograph it (laughing), the choreographer had such a difficult time with me. I think she got quite mad! I was so glad when that part was over (shaking her head)."

"We did most of our stunts. We had stunt people there, but because the show was about special effects, just to kill the boredom a lot of times, we'd enjoy doing them to keep ourselves alive and awake. Sometimes they got a little bit tough. That rope climbing was really difficult, and of course nobody wants to look an idiot when they're doing those athletic things. The guys, of course, were very athletic, but for some reason they always had me doing all these stunt things, and because my character was supposed to be such an athlete, I wanted her to look like she knew what she was doing. I have always been athletic. I used to ride the rodeo circuit, so it wasn't intimidating at all for me, but there were some things that I'd never done, like being thrown in the air by gorillas! Of it was too dangerous they wouldn't let us do it. They insisted on the stunt people. Things that we'd do, you could break a leg, but you couldn't get killed! They just didn't want to have to stop shooting and have to write out one of the characters."

"Paul Zastupnevich was the designer and he was also Irwin's right hand man. He was a wonderful designer and he made the costumes very appropriate for what they were. That they should be a little bit advanced in age, futuristic, and yet contemporary enough that they weren't outlandish and of course he tried to make them as interesting as he could, or as sexy as he could. I would have liked more order of changes, but they didn't because they wanted to intercut as much as possible. We would go and do blue screen all in one day and they didn't want to have to waste time worrying about the wardrobe. But, being women, that was not a primary consideration. We wanted more clothes, especially when Valerie was a jet-setter and I figured she would have loads of clothes onboard. I didn't really with that battle, though I did get a few changes."

"We would be there very early. We would get breakfast served to us; usually we were in the trailer which was where they had the makeup and hair done. Heather and I would generally be in half an hour before the guys because we took more time in makeup. Then we would generally wait around while they set up the first shot - a lot of sitting around and waiting! Two of us, Don, I or Kurt would generally get into a chess game. We did a lot of knitting, handwork etc. and generally just stayed focused until we did the shot, then they'd have to do the master shot, then close-ups. There were a lot of camera changes. The special look they had to have with the giant props. It took a while. Patience was one of the things we had to have a lot of and most of us did. We told jokes, and as we got to know each other better, we'd start playing practical jokes on one another. Generally drove everybody crazy. We got on well with the crew, terrific people, and it was a lot of fun."

"Had the show gone on, Irwin knew that Don Matheson and I were going to get married and he asked us if we would get married on the show, because they could have used the publicity. We finally said we would. Then, he wanted me to get pregnant right away and that wasn't in the cards as we weren't planning that, but of course as it turned out, we did have Michele. Guess, knowing Irwin, he would have used that had the show gone on."

Interview with Don Marshall.

"I dislocated my shoulder. I dived over a fire to save Gary (in 'Ghost Town'). Gary was lying down and couldn't get up and I was trying to block myself. What I did was, I put my left hand out and I dislocated my shoulder. I went back to work the next day after I dislocated my shoulder, and we started to shoot new scenes - we started another show as a matter of fact. That's when you saw me with the sling on."

"The one that Sugar Ray Robinson did. That was a good show. Beautiful. I had to teach him how to play the trumpet. That was the first time I met him. We stayed friends after that. He was a beautiful human being. I think that was one of the best shows, writing wise, that we had. It made more of a statement than anything else. That show, it made me want to act, rather than figure out what dialogue to say."

"I stay in contact with Don Matheson. We talk now and then. The others always travel, going here and there, and of course Kurt is no longer with us. It was a very pleasant set most of the time, especially when Irwin Allen wasn't there. When Irwin Allen came on the set, the whole place became completely different. When he wasn't there, everybody got along. When he came and was chewing people out, it would make everybody else uptight."

He would make the directors uptight, as well as making them feel they didn't know what they were doing. And you had a director like Harry Harris who had won several awards. Harry was very good. I really liked Harry and really appreciated him. He was interested in what he was trying to do. Harry is very good with people and very relaxed and he'd get everybody at ease and everybody worked together when Harry was directing. As a matter of fact, Harry got an Emmy for another show he did later on, on television, 'Fame'. Harry and I were trying to buy a script together to do a film and nothing came of it. I spoke with Harry - I ran into him in Los Angeles about 7 or 8 years ago and he gave me his number on a little piece of paper, a match book. And, lo and behold, this match book popped out, laying on the table. I called him. It was strange. When I called, he was working in Canada.

I called Don and he said there may be something there. My mother was born in Canada and Harry told me they hire mostly Canadian actors. They had a guy living here that was from Canada originally, and they had to get him through all kind of issues before they could get him a show. Maybe you need to be born in Canada. But, I know that would be a director who would hire me."

"'Land of the Giants' does have a following. A lot of people remember that show. I'm really surprised so many people enjoyed the show the way they did. I'm surprised and very happy about it. It was shown until about two months ago on the Sci-Fi Channel, and every time I turn around, people are telling me about 'Land of the Giants' and how they were watching it. It was during the day, at 12 in the afternoon, when not many people are home."

Maybe they don't write in that much...unless you have primetime, such as in the evening when people get home from work. To try to get that kind of time is real difficult I would think. It is prime time (in the evening) and I don't know what carrier you would use as it is not a new show. I cannot get the Sci-Fi channel. It's another area all together. I am South West Cable."

"The excitement - you've got to have that in the 'Land of the Giants' - there's got to be something physical in the show. There was a lot that Irwin Allen didn't want to show. He didn't like doing a lot of close-ups and where it would show the fear etc of the character, the real in depth fear. You have to have surprise, and people escaping. The characters have to be more in depth now. It is 20 to 25 years later."

"I played ball a little. I did track at school and pole vaulting - the best in the city - and that helped me quite a bit, that and high jumping and running. All of that helped keep me physically in shape. So, when 'Land of the Giants' came up, I was already there."

Interview with Stefan Arnglim

Was everyone signed up at the same time?

No, different times. I think I was last, I'm not sure. If I wasn't last, I was very close to last. But yes, it was within a few days when I knew I was doing the show. And yes, the set was all built. Well, actually, that's not entirely true. We started shooting on the interior which was another stage and we didn't get up to the exterior set, which was on 17 and 18, until a couple of days into production because they weren't completely finished with the set. So, it was a couple of days before I got up there and saw it.

A lot of people have asked about the actual construction of the main space ship. We have been told it was a complete ship, but I believe it was actually in parts. Oh, it wasn't complete - that's not entirely true. It was about three quarters complete. There was some interior built in. The cockpit was built in the exterior ship. Basically, what you have to figure is that every thing that was visible from the camera's point of view was made so if you were to look through the front windows of the Spindrifft, you would see the back wall of the cockpit - you'd see the door, the seats, the top of the control panel and the back panels on the wall. If you were to go inside and walk around and be in the cockpit, you would see that the actual front panel was just raw plywood. There was nothing there because that was not visible from the outside.

We see scenes where you can view the outside from inside the cockpit. Was that actually a different set?

Yes. Generally that was a number of different things. They would do that different ways. Sometimes they would take in the panels and drop them into the front of the exterior set in the interior cockpit and they'd shoot through there. Often what they would do is take the actual interior cockpit set, which was a 'wild' set, which meant that it could be moved anywhere. They'd just take it and they'd set it up on the stage in front of the trees, in front of the greens. Sometimes, they would just setup trees and greens in front of it, and then other times it was done either with a process plate or with a composite matt.

So you might just end up with the front side of the cockpit out in the 'forest' somewhere - you'd just see the edges of the walls when viewed from behind?

Sure. They were just set up literally just the three walls necessary to construct the interior, then, shoot through those. Or, if there was action taking place outside the cockpit, sometimes it would be blue screen, so it would just be the cockpit set, set up in front of the blue screen, or if it was a process plate in front of the projection screen, or if it was a composite matt, which was rarely a matt for that kind of work, it would be screened off with usually black or blue.

Interview with Gary Conway.

"I heard about 'Land of the Giants' through my agent. He got in touch with me and said that they were very interested in me doing the series and that Irwin Allen was pretty much legendary, even then. I remember going in to talk to him about it (see GIANTS LOG #14), but first they had me see this little presentation they had made with Don Matheson. I remember being very impressed with it and I was interested in it because as a kid, and I think I've said this before, there was nothing more fascinating to me than Gulliver's Travels. The early Fleischer cartoon of Gulliver's Travels had made such an impression on me. That is why I understand why people get carried away on 'Land of the Giants' because if Gulliver's Travels had been a series when I was a kid, I probably would never have got over it. Particularly at that age, a certain amount of imagination captivated me and I was very intrigued by it."

"I think we did a pilot and then for some reason the pilot didn't air until the following season, so there was a period of 6 months where we didn't continue production. I remember that I did a couple of other things for Fox because they had me under contract. I remember doing 'Daniel Boone' and I think some of the others did similarly."

"The first set I walked on to had the Spindrifft - the interior - and I remember that vividly, and it was so exciting to see and the next thing I remember, very vividly, was walking on to the big soundstage and they had done a jungle set. They had made all the big trees and they had the full Spindrifft lodged into where it crash landed. It was a huge set and it was a very dramatic set because it was so big. You'd come in and it was like walking into part of a forest with boulders and things. You were caught up in the fantasy of it and when people visited the set, they were always so impressed.

If you had come and visited at that time you would have loved it. Inside the Spindrifft there was like a cockpit and the interior, and that set was always alive. They never took that down because there were always times when we would be in there. So, that was a permanent set and so certainly the exterior was permanent because we were always coming back to it. They never tore it down. I think it was pretty much a full piece. You could go around the other side. I don't think it was finished, but I don't think they short-changed the set. They pretty well kept it true from the outside, because the outside would reflect the inside anyway."

"It was a physical show and you could not really employ doubles very well, especially when they came in close. You were running, almost never still. It was great though because that physical challenge kept you in shape, trim, and I would actually lose weight. You had to pace yourself, know how to eat correctly and not abuse yourself because if you had a big lunch you'd be tired after that, but if you ate correctly and you kept physically fit, you could withstand it. I did find the rope climbing easy to some extent. I think how tough it would be if I were to try to do it now. We did a lot of climbing on that show, especially in the pilot I remember. The rope was always attached to something of course, but you really had to get up there and do it. You always worry if it was secure enough - whether the grips had done their job. You didn't want to go climbing up there and come tumbling down again.

They always had to rely on somebody else's expertise. It would occur to you now and then when you were about half way up thinking, 'Wait a minute, have they really secured this thing or not, or am I going to take a header on this one.' You always wanted to look as if you could handle yourself as heroic, so you could never do this without a certain amount of athletic prowess. So you always had to climb a little faster than you would ordinarily, or jump a little higher. I think we had a little contest going on between Marshall, myself and Don Matheson of who could climb quicker, faster, and who could look better at it. We had to keep that mirage going!"

"The unfortunate thing is, I wish I had been a little more involved with it because Cruickshank and Abbott were historically an important part of, if not the inventors of, special effects like that. I think I would have got a lot more out of it. I think we basically didn't really have the time and we were just snowed under getting our lines and learning what we had to do, rather than worrying about the technical part of it. We observed, but we never really went the next step to understand it."

"The blue screen effects - that was the hard part because so much of what you had to do had technical boundaries and technical considerations became the most important part of the scene. You could have a brilliant scene, but if it was technically off, then they'd can it. Then, maybe you'd have something you didn't do so well that was technically fine, and they'd say, 'Print!' Everybody's concentration at that point was on the technical aspects - the blue screen part. The other thing was that you really had to do the show twice because for the blue screen you had to redo the scene again because you had to go to a separate soundstage. This is where Abbott and Cruickshank came in and you had to re-perform this thing for them. You had to be on a certain spot, you had boundaries that were sometimes quite annoying."

"Bruce Fowler was a typical production manager type. He was efficient, always worried about the clock, about going over budget and they all played their roles. They had responsibility - a big budget, they had to get things done on time, and I remember them always being very professional."

"Harry Harris and Sobey Martin were unusual guys. They were very different. Sobey Martin was from Germany and he was an older guy at the time we were doing the show. He has died since. He was a gentle man, almost like a non-director. He almost didn't seem to be there. He was one of these people that almost seemed as if he was incompetent, but he really wasn't. I guess it was just that he had done so many of these that he could almost phone the directing in. He was just a quiet, gentle soul and in his own way a kind of an endearing old man."

"Harry Harris was much more of a tiger. He was a little more nerve-racked. He could always feel when the pressure was building. The directors always took on the pressure of the production. Harry Harris would display that more whereas Sobey never did. Harry was always like he was a little under-the-gun getting things done. And, for what we had to do, he did his job well. Don Matheson and he became friends."

"Kurt was the senior member and had a very good reputation as an actor and as a person. Well deserved, because all the rest of us were all around the same age except of course for Stefan who was a little kid at the time. All the rest of us were within a few years of each other and we all felt we were more or less from the same generation. Kurt was older and maybe wiser and it was interesting because he came from a different background - Europe, and the theatres of Europe. He brought a lot of depth to the show. He had a wonderful personality, and once and awhile he would be a little stirrer here and there when things got out of hand, but it was never mean spirited. He was a delight to be with all the time. He was extremely professional. He was as professional as you're ever going to be. I had seen him in some films and I thought he was an excellent actor."

"During filming, Don Marshall became close to Diahann Carroll and several times he would bring Diahann Carroll over to my house. I was living in Westwood Village during this time, and we'd have dinner. We saw each other socially on occasions like that, and we'd always kid around a lot. We related to each other very well. We got on exceptionally well. He had his quirks like all of us, especially when you're working together 8, 9 or 10 hours - a lot of idiosyncrasies, but generally he was also very professional and he tried to do his best."

"Don Marshall, Don Matheson and I still talk to this day and I've actually liked them today more than ever and they've always been very nice people to be with. I think once and a while we'd maybe have a short word between us, but I hardly remember ever really having any conflict with anybody really as opposed to doing 'Burkes Law' where constantly I had huge problems with Gene Barry. I mean, this was just unbelievable. This cast was terrific. Everybody felt there was a lot of humour. I just felt it was a natural part of life. You tend to fall into humour, especially when we were in a situation that would lend itself to self mockery and carrying on. There were a lot of things to have fun with, and make fun with, and when you're together so much in the same situation, things can begin to take on an aspect of being ridiculous."

"I provided a lot of this weird off-beat humour - that wasn't really the time I was taking myself a lot more seriously. I think we were forever doing little things. We were just slashing through the day, carrying on whenever we could. I had to be a little careful because you could have so much humour going that you got out of the spirit of the piece. You had to be careful that you didn't make everything so ridiculous that you made the show ridiculous for yourself because you had to keep the reality going. So, we had to cut off humour when we got into dealing with a scene. That's a hard thing for people to go back and forth. You want to keep things light and enjoy yourself and at the same time you didn't want to make this thing tongue-in-cheek. I don't think today, if we had done that, it would have been enjoyable, because people would think we were not doing a good job as actors and we were not believing in what we were doing."

"In between takes, if it was just a matter of minutes, we'd hang about on the set sitting in our chairs, getting ourselves ready to go on again. If we had a little more time, we'd go to our dressing rooms and rest sometimes. Sometimes we would be able to take off a little bit. I started building a house up a street called Stradella near Fox and I was in a sense sneaking off the set and trying to be real careful that they didn't realise that I was really taking off a lot, because they didn't like to have you leave the set. I didn't blame them, because if you got a flat tyre or something, or had an accident, you would hold up filming and it could cost a fortune. So, they wanted you to hang around, and of course, I kept leaving!

I thought that Irwin Allen would never notice and actually, at one point, Irwin Allen reprimanded me, 'It's sometimes hard locating you' and I said, 'I'm around' and he says, 'I heard that maybe you leave the lot' and I said 'No, no' and I thought Irwin Allen will never catch me. Irwin Allen had this Rolls Royce. After a while, as I was going up to my lot, which I thought was in amongst the highest hills in Los Angeles, I kept going by this house that was near my lot and I kept noticing this Rolls Royce, and I thought it was exactly like the Rolls Royce Irwin Allen had. It was about half way through completing the house that I realised that it was his house. It was every single day that I had to go by his house." Did Irwin ever catch Gary? "No, because he WAS at the studio!"

"Heather's pregnancy during the second season gave us a great opportunity to tease her and we would, and Don Marshall particularly would, tease her on that. She was always in good spirits, in good humour. I don't think we went over the edge on the humour department, but we would kid her a lot. She was a Mormon and Mormons are known to be very strict as far as their upbringing is concerned, so we would always kid her about that - about the kid being out of wedlock, and who was really the husband, and we'd always pin Don Marshall as being the real husband. The thing about a set like that was you couldn't really run anywhere because you had to be back in a scene so you really had to be able to take all the kidding that the rest of the cast would give you. And, if you couldn't take it they would really pile it up - a little bit like army life."

"I think the film has the potential of being the most unique film of a genre ever and I love the idea that it is a homage. It's almost a film version of a fanzine. The whole story, the script, could exist in your fanzine. The story explores the idea of a world of Gulliver but we don't pretend that time hasn't passed. We acknowledge that time has passed and we use the passage of time as both humour and commentary."

"We'll slip into the characters, but obviously we will have the same relationships. I think what will be interesting about it is that it will be our character plus it will be our life up to that point. We're going to be bringing a lot of baggage into the deal. The rapport will be interesting, because it will be a double rapport - the rapport that we had on the set as opposed to the rapport that we had in the series. Actually, it's a blend of both because for instance, we in the series theoretically, Don Matheson and myself would be at odds once and a while. That wasn't true on the set. It was very different than that and in a strange way life followed art because if you recall, during the filming there was this Valerie relationship with Mark and then they went out and got married - so you see in some ways, you forget there's a blend because you're around 8 hours playing your character and sometimes you do forget who the real character is and who you are playing.

That's why in this film version, we will be playing on that very aspect. The character and the person almost begin to meld and become one because they used to look to me more like I was the Captain. If there was a leader in the deal, it was me, but I think I was the leader mainly because I was the leader character. If we had to complain to Irwin Allen, I would be appointed. If I was the second character then maybe if Matheson was playing the Captain, he would have taken this role.

In the script, it certainly implies that Mark (Don Matheson) and Valerie (Deanna Lund) would have had a relationship if anybody did. We didn't know when the script began and ended in a sense because when you're together 10 hours, you begin to assume those roles. It's really very interesting when you think about it."

Pilot Episode

This pilot episode was directed by series producer Irwin Allen, and took the longest of all the episodes to shoot (18 days). The opening shots of the "spindrifft" spaceship heading through the storm carry a superimposed flight date of June 16 1983. This date is producer Allen's birthday! Preparation for this series began in 1967 with a short filmed storyboard setting out the characters and situations envisaged for the pilot show. Many of the names were changed by the time this story was actually filmed. Pat Michenaud (Giant boy) has been seen in THE TIME TUNNEL (Reign of Terror) also produced by Irwin Allen.

"Ghost Ship"

This was the 14th episode made and was selected as an early episode by the network due to its strength. The exteriors used for this episode were shot at 20th Century Fox's Vermont lot which sadly no longer exists. Writer William Welch was one of Irwin Allen's most prolific scriptwriters and wrote episodes for each of Allen's four 1960's series (VOYAGE TO THE BOTTOM OF THE SEA, LOST IN SPACE, TIME TUNNEL and Giants) Previous to working for Irwin Allen, Welch had been a speech writer for President Truman. Guest artist Percy Helton (Akman) can also be seen in THE WILD WILD WEST and Green Hornet series.

"Framed"

This was the series' most popular show during its first ever network run in the 1960's. The Giant camera prop is still in existence and is stored at Universal Studios where it was on display for some years. Director Harry Harris was a longtime associate of Irwin Allen's. Later he would win an Emmy for his work on the hit musical series "Fame"! Guest Artist Paul Carr (Photographer) can also be seen in THE TIME TUNNEL (End of The World and Revenge of The Gods) and Green Hornet series.

"Underground"

In this episode the audience is introduced to the Giants culture as being somewhat totalitarian in nature, a theme that is developed in further episodes. During a scene where a "Giant" passes a Razor blade to Fitzhugh a "normal" sized hand shadow can be glimpsed. Such oversights end up in shows from that period for a combination of reasons: 1) Domestic video recorders were still 10 years away when the show was aired and 2) Tight shooting schedules dictated that some small errors got left in on rare occasions. Director Sobey Martin was a regular contributor to the series and was renowned for his laid back approach. One of his most oft heard directions was simply "Shoot it, Shoot it!".

"Terror Go Round"

Clever editing is used in this episode during a scene with "several" giant spark plugs. Even with a budget of $250,000 per show -ground breaking in 1968- only one spark plug could be afforded. Watch carefully how this problem was circumvented during the show. Writer Charles Bennett, who was English, worked with Allen many times on several of his projects including the movie version of VOYAGE TO THE BOTTOM OF THE SEA. Guest cast member Gerald Michenaud (Pepi) can also be seen THE TIME TUNNEL (Rendezvous with Yesterday).

"Flight Plan"

The science is very suspect in this story. Throughout the series we are given the impression that giant technology is behind ours and yet here they have the ability to shrink a giant down to little people's size. Clearly a gimmick explained by the fact that the writer (Peter Packer) was a somewhat eccentric regular contributor to Allen's way out LOST IN SPACE series. This episode includes many scenes for Heather Young (Betty) who in later episodes developed a habit of going AWOL without any explanation from the scripts.

The optical effects work in Land of the Giants was generally exceptional, however there are some very poor scenes during this episode during a night scene in the forest. Guest actor Linden Chiles (Joe/Logar) has been seen on THE TWILIGHT ZONE (50s) and THE TIME TUNNEL(Day the Earth Fell Down).

"Man Hunt"

Writer "Jay E. Selby" is actually Robert Lees who was an accomplished comedy writer writing shows for Abbott and Costello and Jerry Lewis among many others. Guest star John Napier was also in THE TIME TUNNEL (The Last Patrol). This episode offers many views of the actual Spindrift model as the Giant carries it around.

"The Trap"

Writer Jack Turley also wrote for LOST IN SPACE and was persuaded to write for them by his good friend Anthony Wilson who was associated with both shows. During filming, the rope attached to Don Matheson (Mark), helping him up the sound detector, came free and he tumbled to the ground apparently in agony. His tears were actually of laughter as he wondered how the scene had looked in camera! Mr Allen was greatly relieved. The episode was shot in seven days between 6/11/67 and 14/11/67.

"The Creed"

During a scene near the spindrift, actor Gary Conway (Steve) accidentally calls Kurt Kasznar (Fitzhugh) by his real name of Kurt. Exteriors of the Hospital were shot at the entrance to Twentieth Century Fox's stage 18. This was common in the series and the location was used several times. The same area appears in Irwin Allen's "Voyage" and LOST IN SPACE shows plus the BATMAN TV series from the same studio. Guest star Paul Fix (Dr Brulle) was also in TIME TUNNEL and GET SMART.

"Double Cross"

On a shelf in the giant crook's hideaway are two masks from Irwin Allen's LOST IN SPACE series (There were Giants in the Earth and Two Weeks in Space) Music for the Party scene was Taken from Lost In Space. This episode was originally entitled "Pigeon's Blood". Guest artist Howard Culver also appeared in THE TIME TUNNEL.

"The Weird World"

Writer Ellis St Joseph wrote two giants episodes, "Underground" and this one. He stated in a 1991 interview that this was his favourite of the two. This episode is also a favourite of many fans of the series. In one scene an Earth wire is removed from a streetlamp causing it to go out. Obviously no Institution of Electrical Engineers on the Land of the Giants! Guest star Glen Corbett had a long television and film career stretching from 1950 to 1988. This included appearances in STAR TREK and "Dallas".

"The Golden Cage"

This episode was shot a whole year before it was finally aired, being shot between 27/11/67 and 5/12/67 airing for the first time on 29/12/68. Actor/stuntman Dawson Palmer was a regular (often uncredited) on all of Irwin Allen's shows generally as a monster in full makeup, in this episode we see what he really looks like as he plays "first giant". Guest star Celeste Yarnall can be seen in THE WILD WILD WEST. Today she is a very successful real estate agent in Beverly Hills.

"The Lost Ones"

During the fight scenes between guest artist Zalman King and Gary Conway, several of Conway's ribs were broken as King failed to pull his punches. This episode cost £201,666 to make with the giant box trap costing £1,160. Remember, this is 1967 prices Guest star Zalman King starred in many TV productions from 1964 onwards and in 1980 started to write and produce his own material including the movie "9 1/2 Weeks" in 1986.

"Brain Wash"

The communications base is constructed out of portions of the Time Tunnel complex from the series of the same name. This was one of the first episodes (in production order) to have the giants engaging in long conversations, previously their speech was deliberately limited. This development allowed the writers more scope to develop the giants as characters. Guest star Warren Stevens is a veteran of many science fiction series and is especially well known for his part as Dr Ostrow in the classic "Forbidden Planet".

"The Bounty Hunter"

This episode was produced early in the series (4th) and underwent numerous rewrites to try to make it presentable. Note the writing on the Giants tin can is not English. The decision to have Giants speaking English took place after this segment was shot. This obviously would enable more scope for future stories. Guest Artist Kimberley Beck started acting at the age of 2 years in the movie 'Torpedo Run' (as Glen Ford's daughter). She was 11 when she took this part.

"On a Clear Night, You Can See Earth"

Writer Sheldon Stark was asked to rework this story several times during its development and despite his changes this story is known to fans as 'the one where the little people behave sadistically and out of character'. The show is reputedly based on "Dr. Cyclops" a 1940's 'B' movie. Guest Star Michael Ansara was a popular actor during the 1960's and appeared in all of Irwin Allen's shows of the period. He was married to Barbara (I Dream Of Jeannie) Eden between 1958 -1972.

"Deadly Lodestone"

This episode was shot between 6.12.68 - 16.12.68 and first aired on 2.2.69. it took 7 working days to shoot. Guest Artist Sheila Matthews (Nurse Helg) was Mrs. Irwin Allen, and featured in Allen's VOYAGE TO THE BOTTOM OF THE SEA and LOST IN SPACE, in addition to this she has prominent roles in the blockbuster movies "The Poseidon Adventure" and "The Towering Inferno". Guest Artist Paul Fix (Dr. Brulle) reprises his role here from "The Creed". Fix had a long movie and TV career including parts in The TWILIGHT ZONE, STAR TREK and THE WILD WILD WEST and films such as Hondo, Shenandoah and El Dorado.

"Night Of Thrombeldinbar"

This episode was produced either side of Xmas 1968, which may account for the 'fairy tale' atmosphere pervading it. Yes, even the Giants got Xmas Day off! A highlight of this episode is an extremely strong musical score provided by veteran composer Leith Stevens who did many scores for the series. His film work included the George Pal classics "War Of The Worlds" and "When Worlds Collide". Guest Artist Alfred Ryder (Parteg) was a regular guest star in many genre shows of the period including STAR TREK, OUTER LIMITS and VOYAGE TO THE BOTTOM OF THE SEA.

"Seven Little Indians"

Filming of the zoo scenes was done at Los Angeles Zoo on Monday, 6th Jan. 1969. An early version of the script has Steve and Dan running down the back of a giant Rhino. Presumably this was deleted as being too costly to produce. In one scene part of Gary Conway's hand disappears as he moves out of his fixed area for matte purposes. Guest Artist Cliff Osmond (Grotius) has acted steadily since 1962. In 1980 he scripted the movie "The President Must Die".

"Target: Earth"

In an internal memo to Irwin Allen about this episode it states "we should have an indication that the machinery is now in more active action - with sparks flying about etc., - for a more interesting and action-filled end to the teaser". Fans of Allen's series will not find this difficult to believe as this was really his trademark, in fact Allen was once quoted thus "If I can't blow up the World in the first ten minutes then the show is a flop!" Guest Artist Dee Hartford (Altha) was Groucho Marx's sister-in-law and also appeared in LOST IN SPACE. Groucho Marx was an associate of Allen's and funded much of his early career.

"Genius at Work"

This slightly unoriginal premise is a direct lift from a previous episode of LOST IN SPACE (The Oasis) but here the treatment is a little more credible. This episode was shot either side of Thanksgiving Day on 28.11.68. and the cast and crew were given the day off with a late start allowed on 29.11.68. A late finish was also allowed as shooting on 29.11.68 finished at 21.36 hours. Guest Artist Ronny Howard (now Ron Howard) obviously benefitted from the hard work and following his long run on "Happy Days" and other shows has become a very well respected movie director with hits like "Cocoon", "Splash" and recently "Apollo 13" to his credit.

"Return Of Inidu"

This episode has no Betty or Barry in it with an explanation that they are "back at the ship". This is probably the most far-fetched episode of the first series with key plot points relying on genuinely magical explanations (like a live action Scooby Doo!). Inidu can REALLY transport objects around by "magic"!?! Guest Artist Steven Marlo (Cop) was in several Giants episodes taking small parts. More importantly he was dialogue coach for the whole series.

"Rescue"

This episode was based on a true life case involving Cathy Fiscus. Guest Artist Buddy Foster (Tedor) is actress Jodie Foster's brother. Guest Artist Lee Meriwether (a former Miss America) was a regular on Bravo's TIME TUNNEL as Ann McGregor. She also played the role of Catwoman in the 1966 film of the series BATMAN.

"Sabotage"

During the vacuum cleaner scene the harness pulling the actors towards the "cleaner" can easily be seen. We do not see an exterior of the Spindrift during this entire episode. It is thought that it was undergoing some mid-season repair work by the production crew at this time. Guest Artist Robert Colbert (Bolgar) was a series regular on THE TIME TUNNEL playing the role of Doug. He was also in Irwin Allen's TV Pilot "City Beneath The Sea".

"Shell Game"

The shell was a spectacular leftover from the movie "Dr. Doolittle". There are many scenes of giants with the model Spindrift in this show and you can see, if you look carefully, that it loses a front sensor during the shooting somewhere. Guest artist Larry Ward (Talf) was also in THE TIME TUNNEL and Allen's LOST IN SAPCE series. The boy Dal wears the same cardigan as Tedar from "Rescue". Presumably there is a Giant Marks and Spencer's out there!

"The Chase"

This was the Final episode of the first season both filmed and originally aired. Co-writer Arthur Weiss was originally a lawyer. He wrote several shows for "Giants" and Allen's "Voyage" series as well as "Mission Impossible" and "Flipper". Outdoor scenes were shot around Fox's outbuildings. Guest Artist Erik Nelson (SID man) was also seen in "Seven Little Indians" and will feature in several second season episodes.

Season Two - "The Mechanical Man"

This episode heralded the new much improved title sequence and theme music for the second year. During the filming, the crew of the show hid various tiny dolls in guest artist Broderick Crawford's dressing room after he complained that everywhere he looked there were little people! Actress Heather Young (Betty) was pregnant during the early to mid parts of the second season and to conceal this during this and many other second year episodes she is either a) Concealed by foliage/Loose clothing b) "Back at the ship" c) Nowhere in particular..

"Six Hours to Live"

This episode reworks the idea of season one's "Framed" and even includes the same wonderful camera prop. Artist Richard Anderson was a regular in many shows and is probably most famous for his portrayal of Oscar Goldman from the 1970's series SIX MILLION DOLLAR MAN. Writer Dan Ullman wrote several other Giants episodes (Bounty Hunter, Doomsday) and an OUTER LIMITS (60s) episode (Cold Hands, Warm Heart) that starred William (STAR TREK) Shatner about a project called Vulcan!

"The Inside Rail"

The vast majority of new images featured in the second season titles were extracted from this episode. * Guest artist Ben Blue was a well known comedy actor who had many roles including a part in the movie "Its a Mad Mad Mad Mad World". Guest star Vic Tayback had a long career, his most prominent genre role being in STAR TREK (A Piece of the Action).

"Deadly Pawn"

Director Nathan Juran worked on all of Irwin Allen's shows of the time. Often producing better than average episodes. His movie career was firmly in the "B" movie category and includes such films as "The Brain from planet Arous"!!! Guest artist John Zaremba was also a "B" movie stalwart and was a regular on THE TIME TUNNEL as Dr Raymond Swain. In production order (this was the 9th episode made for the second season) this was Heather Young's last show for a while due to pregnancy.

"The Unsuspected"

This episode was held up by producer Allen as a good example of economic writing with a good flowing story with relatively few opticals. Guest Artist Leonard Stone was born in 1923 and appeared in many movies and Tv Shows. Most recently as a semi regular Judge in "L.A. LAW". This episode features "the radio room" previously seen in "Shell Game". It was not uncommon for rooms and other props to make spurious appearances in episodes only to then disappear inexplicably.

"Giants and all that Jazz"

This episode is often cut for transmission in certain markets due to a scene where Mark pushes a pencil into the back of a TV set. (Don't try this at home folks!) Guest Artist Sugar Ray Robinson was, of course, a famous boxing middleweight champion and also a personal friend of producer Irwin Allen. Guest Artist Mike Mazurki was also a sportsman turned actor but in his case he was previously a wrestler.

"Collectors Item"

Actress Deanna Lund who has to perform a complicated ballerina routine during this episode has related a story of how (unfortunately) she had too much champagne at a cast party the night before this sequence as shot! Co-Writer Sidney Marshall was an Irwin Allen "insider" who wrote for most of his shows of the period. Following his time with Allen he had a stint writing for "Hawaii Five O". Guest Artist Guy Stockwell has appeared in THE WILD WILD WEST.

"Every Dog Needs a Boy"

This episode features an unusual cast member. A stuffed version of Chipper! (Presumably this was easier than keeping the real dog still). Guest Artist Michael Anderson Jr appeared in the movie "Logan's Run" and Tv series "Ray Bradbury's MARTIAN CHRONICLES both of these being directed by his father Michael Anderson snr. Guest Artist Oliver McGowan has featured in THE WILD WILD WEST".

"Chamber of Fear"

During a scene inside a giant clockwork statue actors Don Matheson and Deanna Lund were nearly seriously injured after a fall. Irwin Allen was often reluctant to utilise stunt doubles unless absolutely necessary. As the "statue" of Ftzhugh falls, it can be seen to blink (I said it was a spooky wax museum!). Guest Artist Christopher Cary was a very surreal Merlin in THE TIME TUNNEL episode "Merlin the Magician.

"The Clones"

Actor Don Marshall dislocated his shoulder in the scene where he jumps into a letter box. The cloning tubes used by the Giant are from the Jupiter two in Allen's LOST IN SPACE series. During this episode Valerie refers to Chipper as "She" erroneously.

"Come Back"

This episode is a very obvious parody of the Movie business and certain aspects seem very pertinent to the series itself. Guest Artist John Carradine was well cast in the role of the old movie star, his own long successful career heading to an end as he did this episode. Born in 1906 he starred in many movies and Tv shows, his own son David being well known as the star of "Kung Fu". Guest Artist Fritz Feld also starred in Allen's LOST IN SPACE.

"A Place Called Earth"

The future Earthmen's Ship is taken from the LOST IN SPACE series, and is the "Space pod" from that show's 3rd season. During a sequence when the little people are "frozen" ,Barry changes legs while on the Spindrift's stairwell! Director Harmon Jones also worked for Irwin Allen on VOYAGE TO THE BOTTOM OF THE SEA directing the "classic" "The Wax Men".

"Land of the Lost"

A somewhat erratic episode loaded with improbabilities this episode has a mid season look all round. Guest Artist Nehemiah Persoff appeared in most of Allens shows and was active in many genre shows of the 1960's and 70's including "Mission Impossible" and THE SIX MILLION DOLLAR MAN. Guest Artist Peter Canon was in the Movie "The Hindenburg" and an episode of TV's STAR TREK.

"Home Sweet Home"

This Sci-Fi themed episode was written by William Welch most prolific of Allen's stable of regular writers. Welch could generally be relied upon to produce flashy gadget filled shows. Guest Artist John Milford was a busy actor of the period featuring in many genre shows including THE OUTER LIMITS, THE INVADERS and VOYAGE TO THE BOTTOM OF THE SEA. During the scenes of the Pod on Earth the mains cable feeding the running lights is clearly visible off to one side of the pod being only semi-concealed by dusty ground.

"Our Man O'Reilly"

This episode was the 16th episode produced for the second season and heralded the return of the new slimmer post pregnancy Heather Young. The Beer Vat consumed during the story was (incredibly) actually real beer. Guest Artist Alan Hale Jr was most famous for his role as Gilligan in the series "Gilligan's Island".

"Nightmare"

This episode was written by William Welch and directed by Nathan Juran and is laden with the fantasy elements typical of this combination. Guest Artist Torin Thatcher appeared in all of Irwin Allen's shows of the period. During the original airing period of the series this was the first show of the new decade (the 1970's) being premiered on Jan 4th 1970.

"Pay the Piper"

This episode is a twist on the Pied Piper fable, but sadly doesn't really come off at it is so much at odds with the thread of the rest of the series. Guest Artist Jonathan Harris was Dr Smith on Allen's LOST IN SPACE series and effectively simply reprises that role in all but name. Writer Richard Shapiro wrote several "fantasy" stories for the show. His episodes were generally lighter than other contributors ("Inside Rail" with a racing theme, "Giants and all that Jazz", with a Jazz theme, "Comeback", a spoof of the Movie business etc.

"Secret City of Limbo"

The most impressive aspect of this episode is the marvellous underground set. This was redressed from the film "Beneath the Planet of the Apes". An early draft of this episode had the Underground Giants as "Mole like people". Allen was appalled by this and so they were changed to be more traditional in appearance. Guest Artist Malachi Throne appeared in all of Allen's shows of the time. His most unusual role for 20th Century Fox was as "False-face" in the BATMAN series for which he was credited as "?", much to his annoyance.

"Panic"

Guest Artist Peter Mark Richman (then known as Mark Richman) also appeared twice in Irwin Allen's "Voyage" series. He had a long career in films and Tv, generally cast as a "Baddie". The teleporter is an impressive prop covered with the usual Irwin Allen trademarks of flashing lights and appeared in more than one episode of the series. Guest Artist Pat Culliton (Officer Willis) was an Irwin Allen associate who had bit parts in most of his shows, often uncredited. He was also in "Genius at Work".

"The Deadly Dart"

The character of Zoral (originally in The Mechanical Man) is here played by a different actor, Donald Barry. Guest Artist John Dehner was in Allen's "Voyage" series and can also be seen in THE WILD WILD WEST. The reason why Mark took the explosives and flares with him is somewhat inexplicable appearing to be contrived to simply help the story along.

"Doomsday"

The end credits list Inspector Kobick as inspector "Turner". (oops!) This is also Kobick's final adventure with our heroes. Barry (Stefan Arnglim) is missing from this episode (as he is from several others) without explanation. From thin air the group produce a metal detector for use in this story. They can't fix the ship but during the 2nd year they produced among other items, a periscope, a laser cutter, a delta power pack and the aforementioned detector.!!

LAND OF THE LOST (1974)

Land of the Lost chronicled the adventures of the Marshall family, consisting of father Rick and his two teenage children Will and Nolly. The Marshalls were on a camping trip when an earthquake occurred creating a fissure that their small raft fell into. When it landed they were in a prehistoric land full of strange creatures.

The Marshall's two objectives were survival and finding a way to return home. Besides the various dinosaurs and dragons they encountered there were two races of semi intelligent biped creatures: the Sleestack and the Pacuni. The Pacuni could best be described as the missing link falling somewhere in between man and ape. They were basically friendly although they did tend to cause mischief. Cha-Ka was a young Pacuni that befriended the family. The sleestack were not so friendly, they were lizard-like creatures who were both primitive and hostile. Living in the ruins of an ancient city, the sleestack would continually cause problems for the Marshalls. Enik was an unusual Sleestack who befriended the Marshalls He had created a time machine to journey into the past and observe his race in its infancy however it broke down and trapped him their. The land of the lost was controlled by pylons that were powered by crystals. If one of the pylons malfunctioned or was tampered with the physical laws of the land would go amok.

Ron Harper has also starred in the television version of PLANET OF THE APES. Strangely the show had a number of top quality SF writers including Daivd Gerrold , Theodore Sturgeon and Larry Niven as well as STAR TREK actor Walter Koenig. STAR TREK writers DC Fontana and David Gerrold contributed scripts and special dinosaur effects were achieved using stop motion animation.

Richard Keil best known as James Bond's metal mouthed adversary, Jaws, had a recurring role as the Marshalls' enemy Malak. The earlier nineties saw the creators of the original series, Sid and Marty Kroft, conjure up a revival which ran for two seasons, with a new lost family, The Porters. Sid and Marty Kroft were also responsible for creating many other childrens SF shows in the seventies including, FAR OUT SPACE NUTS, ELECTRA WOMAN AND DYNA GIRL and BIGFOOT AND WILDBOY.

The show was a step above other Saturday morning fare both in terms of production values and writing. Both the dinosaurs and the sets were well constructed, however the video intergration of the effects with the actors at times left something to be desired. The series has been rerun by CBS in 1985 and 1987, meanwhile the series has never been seen in the UK.

The show was a step above other Saturday morning fare both in terms of production values and writing. stop motion animation was used extensively to create the various dinosaurs. Miniature sets were also often used Both the dinosaurs and the sets were well constructed, however the video integration of the effects with the actors at times left something to be desired. The stories were also written by well known writers. David Gerrold, best known as the creator of Star Trek's tribbles, was the script editor the first season and contributed many of the episodes. Other well known writers included: Ben during Niven, Theodore Sturgeon, D.C Fontana and Margaret Armen.

The third season of the show saw Spenser Mulligan leave and his chagacter Rick beiny written out by returning home. At the same time his brother Jack (would had been lookin for Rick, Holly and Will) appeared in the land assuring continued adult audiance for the two children. The series was rerun by CBS in 1985 and 1987.

The executive producers for the show included Albert J. Tenzer (seasons one & two) and Sid and Marty Krofft for season three, the animation director was Gene Warren Jr.

Land of the Lost was an intelligent show that didn't take children for granted. The shows episodes were written by some of the top names in science fiction of the time. Walter Koenig, of Star Trek fame, wrote what may be the shows best episode, The Stranger, which introduced Enik a more evolved Sleestak from an earlier time who ultimately aided in the Marshall family returning home.

The shows cast would be lead by veteran TV actor Spenser Milligan (Gunsmoke, Quincy, and The Dukes of Hazard) who brought a heart felt touch to the role of the father Rick Marshall. A character who even today could be the poster boy for a perfect parent who was always willing to listen to his children, who was slow to anger and maybe the world's greatest teacher. Milligan filled the role to perfection and a generation of children grew up to think of his character as the father they never had.

Young soap opera star Wesley Eure (Days of our Lives) would be cast as the adventurous teenage boy Will Marshall. Again TV experience would lend to a another memorable character. Will was always exploring his boundaries, often with catastrophic consequences, but was always on hand to look after his younger sister. Eure was great at coming across as someone who couldn't accept his situation and was willing to try anything to get his family home.

Unknown child actress Kathy Coleman was cast as the ever complaining younger sister Holly. For someone with little TV experience Coleman did a remarkable job. Holly was always wanting to hold on to her older brother's shirt tails and mess up any plan he would come up with. It is obvious that Coleman drew upon her own innocence and awkwardness in her portrayal of a child becoming a young woman under the worst of situations.

Despite everything the show had going for it Land of the Lost would only survive three seasons on Saturday morning. Several changes in both story and cast would ultimately become the shows downfall. Milligan would be replaced in the third season by another veteran actor Ron Harper who would play the family's Uncle Jack who had been searching for them. He would enter the dimension just as Rick Marshall exited. The shows decline couldn't be blamed on Harper. A gaff by the network in "dumbing down" the stories and firing most of the shows original writers ultimately spelled the end for the show. New dinosaurs were brought in (including a fire breathing Dimetrakon) to keep children interested, but nothing could replace the mind expanding scripts of the first two seasons.

Land of the Lost was something unique to television. Never had such detail been added to a children's show. The dinosaurs were, for the time, excellent stop motion models. The vocabulary of the primitive Paku was developed by a UCLA professor. The scripts were written by the best in the business. Never before or after has such a production been attempted in children's programming. It is for these reasons that Land of the Lost is still remembered fondly by those old enough to have watched it in it's original airing.

LAND OF THE LOST (1991)

In this version of Land of the Lost, the family that enters the Land of the Lost are the Porters, father Tom and his two children Kevin and Annie. They are transported into the Land of the Lost when their vehicle fell through a crack in the ground. Suitably equipped with equipment to survive in the wilderness, they have been on a camping expedition - the Fosters built a tree house to live in while looking for a way to return home.

One of the first residents of the Land of the Lost that the Porters meet is Tasha, a baby dinosaur who was adopted by Annie. They also befriended Christa, a jungle girl of unknown origin, and her friend Stink, a half man/half ape creature. Dinosaurs and the Sleestacks, a race of intelligent lizards, were present as they were in the original series to provide dangers for the Porters to face.

Land of the Lost is a half-hour Saturday-morning children's series that originally aired on ABC during the early 1990s. It lasted two seasons, and helped bolster the now cult classic original, the latter of which is now available on DVD. A line of merchandise including action figures and a noise-making replica of Shung's crystal was released.

This show is a nineties remake to the original LAND OF THE LOST made in the 1970s. The series was shown on ABC in the US and has been seen in the UK on Nickelodeon, and Channel Five.

Stories would be mostly of the fantasy kind, however stories which have a SF slant include 'Future Boy' in which Annie makes friends with a boy from the future who had run away and borrowed his father's time belt, and 'Flight to Freedom' in which an Earthquake creates a time portal with a possible way home for the Porters.

Characters

Main characters

The Porter Family

Tom Porter: the father. Played by Timothy Bottoms.

Kevin Porter: the son. Played by Robert Gavin.

Annie Porter: the younger daughter. Played by Jennifer Drugan.

Tasha: baby Parasaurolophus who lives with the Porters. Played by Ed Gale, voiced by Danny Mann. After the death of her mother at the claws of Scarface, Tasha now lives with the Porters as a pet. What will happen to her if the Porters ever find a way home, is a frequent subject of discussion.

Christa: Beautiful cave-girl, says "Acuba Ne" as a way of saying either "hello" or "goodbye". Played by Shannon Day. Christa is from the human world and was born in Chicago. Her family was trapped in the Land of the Lost through similar circumstances to the Porters. At one point, Christa's family built a raft to try and sail to the other side of the ocean, hoping to find signs of civilization. In a subsequent storm, Christa was washed overboard and was saved by the family's friend, the fishman Namaki. Separated from her parents, Christa grew up practically alone, and by the time the Porters met her, had forgotten almost everything about her previous life.

Stink: The Paku friend of Christa. Played by Bobby Porter. Stink has been helping Christa survive for most of her life. Despite his animal-like appearance, Stink is very intelligent, with an intense knowledge of plant and animal life.

Others

Keela: sorceress.

Namaki: A strange, merman-like creature who lives in a cave on the coast near the Porter's treehouse. Years ago, he befriended Christa's family, and helped them to build a raft to try and cross the ocean. When young Christa was swept overboard in a storm, Namaki rescued her and brought her back to shore. Namaki, despite his aquatic physiology, has never been to the other side of the ocean, afraid to attempt the crossing because of the frequent storms and the dangerous marine predators.

Princess: A Triceratops who is sometimes used as transportation for Christa and Stink.

LAST TRAIN, THE

AKA: CRUEL EARTH

After a train crashes in a tunnel, the survivors climb to the surface, but they are shocked to find the world completely destroyed, because the Earth has been struck by a giant meteorite. The unlikely bunch of survivors were frozen by a mysterious chemical designed by the Ministry of Defence to freeze the most important people when the meteor hits the Earth. One of the scientists was on board the train with the chemical when the meteor hits and the chemical leaks in the carriage.

The survivors find themselves frozen for over 50 years and awake to discover that the world has changed radically with hungry dangerous dogs and overgrown plants. Many of the survivors die as they attempt to make their way to an underground military bunker where other possible survivors and food might be.

Following on from the success of such films as Deep Impact and Armageddon, this six part series was the most expensive series ever made for television at the time, and it shows in many of the spectacular sets which have been produced for the series. Most of the budget went on the special effects and not the acting abilities of many of the cast who seem as lost as their premise in the series. Despite this the series does have a certain charm very reminiscent of shows such as Terry Nation's SURVIVORS. If they series could ever make as much money in profit as it cost for its budget would be unlikely. Another case perhaps of having too much money in a similar vain to the BBC's, INVASION EARTH serial.

The producer for the series was Sita Williams. Sacha Dhawan who played Leo Nixon in this six part series also started in ITV's children's SF series OUT OF SIGHT. Executive producers were Susan Hogg and Simon Lewis, special effects were by Steve Tomkow, scientific advisor was Brian Marples PhD, associate producer was David Noble and the music was by Christopher Gunning. The series was shown mostly at a 9pm slot on the ITV network.

Matthew Graham, the writer of the series also wrote for shows such as EastEnders, City Central and This Life. Most of the streets seen in the series were built from scratch. Buildings are crumbling from the effects of acid rain and strange plants are growing in unusual places, their spores having been thrown up into the atmosphere by the asteroid. The reported total cost for the serial was over £700,000 per episode, making it Granada's most expensive series ever. Some of the graphics for the first episode, such as a scene where you see helicopters in the background was bought off the internet from a kid in Illinois, USA for just a $150. Pre-publicity for the show was keen to avoid the label of a science fiction show, but with the futuristic setting and a fictional idea extrapolated from a scientifically feasible scenario, it is undeniably part of the Genre.

Pre- publicity for The Last Train was keen to avoid labelling it as Science Fiction, but with a futuristic setting and a fictional idea extrapolated from a scientifically feasible scenario, it is undeniably part of the genre.

LASTIKMAN

Lastikman is a fictional, half-human, half-alien male superhero, whose alien origins can be traced back to the Harraian alien race from the Harraio Galaxy. He was born in the Harraian planet Igbao to a human mother named Ruth Abelgas and a Harraian father named Irroian.

Ruth was initially taken prisoner by the Harraians in order to closely study humans. One of the Harraian scientists studying her, Irroian, quickly took pity and eventually helped free her. While hiding her, the two soon fell in love with each other and made out, and the result of their union was the baby Eskappar.

Elsewhere in the kingdom, Amon Labao ordered a massive manhunt for Ruth. She gave one of her men, Maaram, an invisibility potion that can render anyone invisible. Under the cover of invisibility, Maaram was able to track Ruth's whereabouts and link Irroian to the crime. Agaddon, Irroian's best friend, found out about this and decided to intervene and help Irroian out. Agaddon thus became the primary suspect, instead of Irroian, when he took Ruth out of the planet.

When Agaddon and Ruth escaped, they had to leave Irroian and the baby Eskappar (Lastikman) behind. Irroian was thus left with the task of raising his child alone. Because Eskappar was half-human, his skin was different from the Harraians, so Irroian tried to hide this by painting over Eskappar's body.

Maaram eventually found out the truth about Eskappar's half-human identity. This forced Irroian to quickly send Eskappar off in a space capsule bound for Earth in the hopes of saving him. He gave the child a necklace - a memory token for his son to remember him by. Irroian was eventually caught but not before Eskappar's space capsule made it out safely.

On its way to Earth, the capsule was hit by a passing comet. The collision sent the capsule hurtling towards the Earth, crashing in a forest mountain somewhere in the Philippines. It was here that Caloy Asis, a pito-pito, found him, named him Miguel and adopted him. This is where the adventure begins.

Lastikman is an action, dramedy fantaserye based on Mars Ravelo's popular comic book character bearing the same name. The show initially aired on ABS-CBN on September 24, 2007. The show is top billed by an all-star Filipino cast, with comedian Vhong Navarro playing the title role.

LAZARUS MAN, THE

Action adventure mystery series set in the post-civil war West. A critically wounded stranger regains consciousness after being buried alive, and is tortured by random memories of his half-forgotten life.

The series was shown on ITV in the UK. The actual cancellation of The Lazarus Man at the end of the first season was not due to bad ratings or a bad performance from the actor, but due to leading actor Robert Urich having been diagnosed with a rare form of cancer, synovial sarcoma. Production company Turner Program Services' chairman Russ Barry said, "The uncertainty surrounding Robert Urich's availability, along with the creative modifications that would have been required to continue the series, put the project into a high risk category."

The Lazarus Man was an hour long television program that first aired in January of 1996 on TNT, starring Robert Urich as the title character. It ran for 22 episodes before being cancelled due to Ulrich's being diagnosed with synovial cell sarcoma. The setting for the series is Texas just following the American Civil War. An amnesiac claws his way out of a shallow grave wearing a Confederate uniform and carrying a US Army revolver. He is haunted by the memory of being attacked by a man wearing a derby. Calling himself Lazarus after the man resurrected by Jesus (John 11:41-44), he sets out to discover who he really is and the reason why he was buried alive.

It is discovered near the end of the series that the true name of the protagonist is James Cathcart. He was a Captain in the US Army and a member of Abraham Lincoln's bodyguard. The memory that plagues him is from the night of April 14th, 1865, when Lincoln was shot in Ford's Theatre. Cathcart, realizing that the President was in danger, ran to stop the assassin, but was attacked by his superior, the treasonous Major Talley, who wanted to see Lincoln dead.

The option to recast was never a serious possibility, although a side arc without Urich was considered. Sky One also broadcast the show and described it as "The Fugitive meets The X FILES meets Bonanza."

LE BRIGADE DE MALEFICESAKA: THE BRIGADE OF SPELLS

Inspector Paumier and his faithful assistant Albert investigate supernatural mysteries. Their rival in unbelieving inspector Muselier who always tries (and fails) to find a rational explanation for each mystery.

This is an anthology series very much in the mode of THE X FILES, but only one episode could really be classed as science fiction (1.3), hence the inclusion in this database.

LEGACY OF THE SILVER SHADOW

Four ordinary kids face the extraordinary fact that a superhero really did exist in their city. The Silver Shadow is a forgotten crusader who waged a solitary war against crime and wrongdoing in the city 50 years ago. The kids discover a recording of the Silver Shadow's mind - an artificial intelligence the hero constructed in case he ever lost his fight against evil. The recording has a single purpose: to recruit a replacement. For our four kids, it's an opportunity of a lifetime - to learn and implement the Silver Shadow's heroic powers. They embark upon a bizarre double life - school kids by day, fledgling superheroes by night.

What is Australia's obsession with making lame sci-fi kids shows? There are so many, and very few of them actually last. This one's pretty lame, but it's actually enjoyable considering they're constantly mocking themselves within the show.

LEGEND

In 1876, Pratt is an author of a highly successful series of dime novels about a hero named Nicodemus Legend. The books have been somewhat waning in popularity and Pratt has been forced by his publisher to appear as Legend at public appearances to promote the books. Pratt's likeness had been used as Legend's on the books cover and he is constantly mistaken for his fictional character.

Despite the physical similarities, the two are very different. Pratt does not like horses and lacks the ability to ride one, Legend, being a true western hero, can. Pratt has assorted vices such as booze, gambling and women. Legend is a morale upstanding character who has none of these vices.

As the series opens Pratt's life is disrupted by a warrant put out for Legend's arrest in the small town of Sheridan, Colorado. Legend has been accused of helping a group of immigrant farmers changing a flow of a river! Pratt, never even having been to Colorado, travels to Sheridan in an effort to clear his name and find out what really happened.

This quest brings him to Janos Bartok, an immigrant scientist who has set up a lab in Sheridan, and his assistant Ramos. Bartok has created a number of inventions, one of which did change the rivers course, others which created the illusion that Legend was responsible for the feat. His other inventions include such things as steam powered dune buggies, a manned balloon from which one man can use a hand glider (based on something from a Legend novel) can be launched, an Electro magnet which can grab the bad guys' guns from a long ways away and an electrical stun gun. Bartok is able to convince Pratt to assist him in helping the farmers and in the process they prevent a crooked land deal from going through.

Bartok later contacts Pratt's publisher and suggests that Pratt's moving to Colorado and adopting the Legend persona full time (with Bartok providing the technology) would help book sales. Pratt has no choice but to do so and finds himself forced to give up his many vices to live the life of legend. He soon finds this to include saving the day, something he is not very well suited nor inclined to do.

John De Lancie is more famous for playing the part of Q in a semi-regular role of STAR TREK : THE NEXT GENERATION. Richard Dean Anderson also took the starring role in the SF show STARGATE SG1 and also starred in the SF mini-series PANDORA'S CLOCK (aka DOOMSDAY VIRUS).

Legend could easily be called a western version of series star Richard Dean Anderson's pervious hit series MacGyver, with a liberal does of comedy and some out of place technology thrown in for good measure. However the charecters Anderson portrays in the two series are complete opposites. Where was MagGyver risked his life to save the world with a roll of duct tape. Anderson's character in Legend , Ernest Pratt is a reluctant hero who prefers talking his way out of a situation instead of taking action, but he often finds himself being forced into the role of an action hero.

The character of Janos Bartok is in reality based on the real life on inventor Nikola Tesla. Tesla was perhaps one of the greatest inventors of all time. He devised alternating current, which brought him to odds with Thomas Edison who thought the future lay in direct current. Tesla was also the inventor of the radio, the US supreme court ruled for him over Marconi posthumously. Like Bartok in Legend, Tesla set up a laboratory in Colorado (in 1899) where he proceeded to build a huge tower to generate lightning which caused concern with his neighbours.

When the series did come to Britain its only viewing came on the newly formed Paramount Channel which was a satellite channel only, so only a limited audience was ever possible, but since the show had already been cancelled in the US, it matterd very little if it was a success in the UK.

LEGEND OF DEATH

King Aegues became E.G., a tycoon whose crowning achievement was to have been Icarus III, the first nuclear powered aircraft. But the project has come to sicken him because of its cost in human life: each year 14 volunteers are sent to the sinister atomic plant on the island of Mitremos and none has ever returned.

Enter Theaus, or rather Theodore, E.G.'s illegitimate who goes to Mitremos and discovers the 'minotaur' - actually a power-crazy scientist called Minolti who is running the Icarus project but also using the island for a series of experiments of his own into the effects of radiation on humans. Avoiding a similar fate Theodore destroys the beast and his den, and returns to claim his inheritance.

Five part reworking of the Theseus/Minotaur Greek legend given a modern setting and a science fiction twist. The series was shown on BBC 2 on the 19th July- 16th August 1965 and has never been rebroadcast since. The producer for the series was Alan Bromly, the designer was Peter Seddon.

Brian Hayles, having made the successful transition from school teaching to script writer barely a year earlier, turned his hand to contributing Legend Of Death to the enormously successful run of thriller serials produced by Alan Bromly.

Often incorrectly interpreted as a science fiction serial, this high-calibre thriller serial took as its thematic basis the story of Theseus and the Minotaur. The story of an heir of a kingdom having to slay a monstrous beast in order to seize his heritage became the background against which the story of Edward Gargan (John Phillips), a powerful business tycoon, was approaching the end of his reign and found himself surrounded by corporate vultures waiting to strike at the first sign of weakness and swoop for the kill at any moment.

As head of the internationally successful corporation Edward Gargan International, he has made cut throat business decisions with the full cooperation and support of the board. However, as he reaches the point of retirement, he has found himself reconsidering some of those projects, particularly the most recent venture - the construction of an atomic plant on the remote island of Mitremos. Cognisant of the potential cost to human lives, he has become increasingly concerned that fourteen volunteers who were dispatched to the plant over twelve months ago have not been heard from since.

Whilst his fellow board members believe all is well, Edward elects to send Theodore (David Andrews), his closest ally in the corporation, on a mission to ascertain precisely what is happening on the island and report back solely to him. However, his instructions have been overheard by one particularly ambitious board member who is keen to put paid to Theodore's mission - even if it means resorting to murder.

Theodore, an amoral character who works by the age-old adage of "means and ends", soon discovers that Gargan's suspicions of activities which could endanger life on the island are quite correct, but with forces on the board ranged against him, he soon finds that not only is his own life in danger, but his survival depends upon Gargan himself remaining in the seat of power within the corporation.

A delightfully entertaining and worthy contribution to the thriller serial season produced by Alan Bromly, Legend Of Death was directed by customary aplomb by Gerald Blake and featured supporting performances from Elspeth MacNaughton, Anna Summerfield, Victor Brooks, Robert Cartland, Andrew Sachs and Gerald Sim. A novel and creative take on the thriller genre fusing it with Hayles' strengths in science fiction - after all, he famously created the Ice Warriors for BBC Television's Doctor Who, Legend Of Death was globally exported but never commercially released.

LEGEND OF WILLIAM TELL, THE

Produced by Lesley Jones and Raymond Thompson (executive). Other crew -Geoff Husson executive in charge of production. The acting was weak, and yet was one of the better features, although the costumes were pretty good, and the sets were okay. However, the dialogue was truly dire. But better than the plot or setting. The "story" is a nonsense of various science fiction and fantasy cliches, with freedom fighters and wicked overlords and innocent princesses. The plot is was pitiful. The heroes achieved all their goals, and then decided to carry on fighting for freedom - which they had just won! I have trouble believing that anything this bad got made - and I must see it again to confirm.

LES CLASSIQUES DE L'ETRANGE

AKA: CLASSICS OF THE STRANGE

Athology series - see episode guide to details.

This anthology series was intended to take over from Le Tribunal de l'Impossible (The Tribunal of the Impossible), with a program of four films per year, all adapted from the best literary material. Unfortunately, it was cancelled soon after the first episode and subsequent productions were aired independently at random dates.

This loosely based trilogy of stories were shown just one per year, and produced by Michel Subiela. The Enchanted Hand, was based on a story by Gerard de Nerval, and was adapted as a feature film entitled Le Main du Diable. Francis Lacassin who was also part of the writing team for that episode is a well known comic book scholar.

For the Blue Peril, broadcast on the A2 channel, was written by Claude Veillot who is a journalist and science fiction writer. He also adapted Rene Barjavel's Le Grand Secret for television.

For the Brain Collector, this was based on a story "Robot Peasants" (Thinking Robots) by George Langelaan.

LEVEL 9

LEVEL 9 premiered on UPN on October 27, 2000. A new breed of law enforcer takes on a new breed of crime. What if our nuclear arsenals were vulnerable? What if our air traffic control systems were jeopardized? What if the three thousand people in our witness protection program were threatened? It's already happening, according to Newsweek and 60 Minutes. The computers that are the life blood of our economy also make us vulnerable to faceless criminals so menacing that the country could be paralyzed in minutes with apocalyptic consequences. Where does one look for this elusive jackal, since almost every home and office in America has a computer that can be used as a tool for chaos? Enter LEVEL 9, the first law enforcement agency prepared to fight this deadly technological terror.

This short lived show only lasted 13 episodes, the last four however were never aired in the shows original slot.

I like the format where the geeks are the cops. with all the internet/computer dependence developing in our society, I wonder how long until some of the premise of the show is true. We already have sicko's on line trolling for children, and credit card data bases being hacked into for profit. how long until a geek shuts down an airplane in flight? more thought provoking than most realize

LEXX: THE DARK ZONE STORIES

AKA: LEXX

AKA: LEXX: THE DARK ZONE

The universe consists of two parts, the light universe and the dark universe. The light universe is controlled by the evil shadow, who is building the most powerful space ship in creation, known as the Lexx, the only problem is that the Lexx requires human body parts in order to create it, since it's part organic. Knowing how wrong this is a group of rebels decide to steal the Lexx, but things go wrong when an assassin, who can't be killed kills all the rebels. A pathetic traitor human, Stanley Tweedle and the love slave Zev manage to stumble onto the Lexx, together with the assassin Kai, who realises the error of his ways and decides to help them fight the evil shadow.

Kai is the last of the Brunungee, a race who want to destroy the Shadow and all he stands for. In order to escape his shadow Stanley orders the ship to travel to the Dark Zone, an area of space where evil survives and where his shadow has no power. Kai however is dying because in order to sustain him he needs proto plasma which only his shadow can supply, so they must find a new home and a way to save Kai from dying.

As the series proper begins the last remnants of the Giga Shadow still exist within Kai, without his knowledge, in order for the Giga Shadows to take over the world again he must persuade the other members of the Lexx crew to go in search for more Proto Blood (his life essence), it is a ruse however, so that he can pass his life force into a new insect like creature, which had all but killed the human race many millions of years in the past. But after his divine shadow (Giga Shadow) is transferred to the insect, the crew manage to escape the planet and destroy it using the Lexx. The Giga Shadow however doesn't die that easily. Kai during his Giga phase, manages to get the crew to go to the light universe.

This German-Canadian co-production is one of the most imaginative science fiction shows to ever be made, free from the control of Hollywood the producers were free to produce a very adult and entertaining SF show. The 4 stories which make up the Lexx Zone stories have been shown in several different formats. Mostly shown as four television movies, it has been seen in this format on Channel 5 in the UK and shown as 8 one hour episodes in The Sci-Fi Channel. After several shows years the series finally made it to a full season of a television series.

The producers of this 1997 series created a novel pilot: no less than four movies, detailing the adventures of a spaceship Lexx, and its oddball crew of four as they fulfilled an ancient prophecy and ending the rule of His Shadow, an oppressive dictator. Canada's Space : The Imagination Station produced 20 one hour episodes for the first season. According to their press release, the series "continues the darkly weird, edgy and sexy intergalactic voyage of the Lexx, a dragonfly-shaped bug about the size of Manhattan that has been genetically altered to be used both as a spaceship and as the most destructive weapon in two universes."

The series is being written and directed by Paul Donovan for a fall 1998 premiere on Space. In addition to its original cast, Lexx got two new characters in its hour long format, a shape changer named Wist (Doreen Jacobi) and a machine inhabited by the mind of the evil but brilliant Mantrid. The series carried on the tradition of the original four television movies. The executive producers for the series were Paul Donovan and Wolfram Tichy, producer for the series was Norman Denver and co-producer was Bill Fleming. The series designers were Gerry Kunz and Ingolf Hetscher, the original music was created by Marty Simon and the creative producer was Bill Fleming.

The series first premiered in the UK on Channel Five, with the first of the four movies, the movies were then shown on The Sci-Fi Channel, then the second series of Lexx started in the UK on the 4th January 1999, this was shown on the new Sci-Fi channel which had been slightly renamed to reflect a change of ownership. The airdates shown are for the Canadian channel The Imagination Station who were first to show the series, the show premiered in the UK on the 3rd January 1999, only a few weeks after its Canadian debut, the series was shown on Sci-Fi in the UK.

Every so often, a new Science Fiction show comes along which redefines what you can and cannot get away with doing on tele-vision. It's early days yet, but as the went into production, the the Canadian SF saga LEXX might just turn out to be one such show. The first series of LEXX, or more accurately series of four telefilms, debuted in the UK on Channel 5 earlier this year. Even though the films were broadcast at an unearthly hour of the early morning, they attracted a devoted following. It was a reaction which mirrored the enthusiasm of audiences throughout the world. So what exactly was the attraction? Perhaps, it was because, while other Sci-Fi shows struggle for mass acceptance and a mass audience, LEXX creator Paul Donovan is a man pursuing his own idiosyncratic vision. Ask him, for instance, about some people's perception of the show as dark and shocking, and he replies, "We never saw LEXX as dark and shocking."

Then you realize he might be joking... "Our primary inspirations were Little House on the Prairie and Blue Peter, but the networks 86'd that, he continues. "But, seriously, I have learned - from watching TV -that television damages the mind. Mine suffered the most destruction from Get Smart, Monty Python and Blue Peter. Now it's payback time. You have been warned. LEXX will damage your mind!" As an independent film maker and co-founder of Salter Street Films, Donovan was in a better position than most to realize his vision. How-ever, to fund a series as ambitious as LEXX with its extensive use of special effects, he needed allies. Jay Switzer, Vice President at CHUM Television, was one of the first to support the project. "Paul Donovan came in here several years ago, and we'd known his work," recalls Switzer. He said, "Jay, I've written this, I've created it, it's one sick puppy. I want to direct it, I'm going to produce it, I'm going to raise the money. How would you like it?" I looked at it, I read the treatment on the spot, and I said, 'Paul, we love it. If you're doing it and you're getting your hands wet; if this is your personal, passionate project, we're in.'" As a result of the meeting, CHUM committed money to the project early and were rewarded both when others followed and when the first telefilm attracted record ratings for a Canadian movie broadcast on Toronto's City Television.

However, Switzer emphasises CHUM's role was a consultative one, and, citing the way shows can become watered down if they try to appeal too widely, he says he doesn't want to interfere with Donovan's vision. "LEXX will offend some," he says bluntly. "That's okay because it will, we hope, passionately serve others," If Paul Donovan's remarks are to be believed, anyone who was pas-sionately served by the pilot films will be just as taken with the new series. Far from watering down the show for a mass audience, Donovan remains as a single-minded as ever. One of the main themes of the first series was the need to consume in order to live - a theme which saw same grisly scenes with the sentient starship LEXX, for example, feeding on ritually sacrificed humans. It's a theme which continues to fascinate Donovan.

"I don't know why, but we just find this whole biology thing kind of interesting," he says. "Is a tiger bad if it eats your neighbour, for instance? Well that obviously depends on the neighbour. Or does altruism make sense? Well only if it gets you laid. There is just no end to it." However, for those who don't want every moment to be stomach-churning, LEXX will feature some lighter moments. Although Donovan refuses to give very much away about the new series, he does hint there could be some interesting developments. "There are a lot of rumours around about how [former love slave] Zev will evolve, which I will not confirm or deny, except to say that that she will definitely evolve and we are all very steamed up about deli-cious developments in her desirability. [Robot head] 790 will get a body, for a while anyway."

There will also be new characters. "One of the new regular characters is a variation of Wist who we met in Eating Pattern," says Donovan. "What we liked most about the Wist character is that she had a very clear and uncomplicated biological agenda: 'everything dies', 'this planet is delicious' and 'your worm is your friend'." Back, it seems, to the kind of snacks which might ruin your life, or at the very least your breakfast. So will there be any surprises in store for the main characters? "Plenty..." warns Donovan. Michael McManus, the actor who plays the dead-alive assassin Kai (Last of the Brunnen-G) is in heated discussion with Brit director Chris Bould over the contents of a computer read-out, but their voices can hardly be heard within the noisy confines of the huge metal shed we're all standing in.

Both men are dressed in the emblematic style of this East Canadian port - T-shirt and shorts - where the temperatures have been unseasonably high for the last three weeks, and Mike is wearing a hair-net. Is it a scene from the rehearsals of an upcoming episode of Loa 3, involving a disputed point of characterisation or motivation? Well, hardly. In fact both men and a handful of the other cast and crew are arguing over the results of the latest go-kart race at the Halifax Kartbahn centre in Prescott Street. McManus takes his carting very seriously and is disputing the times on the score-sheet with the director and with the Toronto-based producer Norman Denver Nobody can agree on who has the fastest time so we retreat to the Loa bar - the Economy Shoe Shop in Argyle Street - to discuss the merits of go-karts, philosophy, the Halifax Moose Heads and the History of Canadian Theatre (if you're unfortunate enough to sit next to Michael).

That was way back in the summer, just a couple of weeks into pre-production, when the biggest problem we then had to confront was how to schedule the first two episodes and squeeze ten different sets into the main studio at Electropolis - the converted power station overlooking Halifax harbour where the Canadian leg of Loa is almost entirely shot. Almost proud in its anonymity, the studio sits next to the historic Pier, where Nova Scotia's earliest settlers first came ashore. The constant stream of cruise liner passengers who come looking for the Titanic graveyard during the summer months can have little idea that the gateway to the Dark Zone lies just a few hundred yards from the dock (though the odd Moth parked outside the studio doors sometimes got a funny look). Inside the labyrinthine building, the ground floor houses the props workshop, the lighting store and the main stages. When I arrived, Stage 1, the biggest, was playing host to another Salter Street show called Made in Canada. Subsequently it was used to house the Cryochamber set, the Prince's Chamber the various Great Hall sets and was where most of the big green screen sets were placed, including the hated Gondola (more of which later).

Stage 2 was still rigged as the Bridge from last year, while Stages 3 and 4 were used for any other smaller sets such as Stan's Sleepchamber or the Galley. Many of the complex flying Moth scenes would end up being shot in Stage 3 - Season 3 probably contains more action Moth scenes than all of the previous episodes put together! Upstairs houses the dressing rooms, wardrobe and make-up rooms, and the production offices, while across town are the effects facilities and postproduction suites in the Academy Building and at Salter Street Digital. All of the Loa sets are constructed or stored in a huge disused railroad repair shop about 500 yards away, from where they are shipped by truck in sections to Electropolis as required. About a week before the start of principal photography on the new series of 13 one-hour episodes continuing the adventures of the good ship Lexx, her crew arrived in town.

Signed up again for the trip are the aforesaid Michael McManus as Kai, Bryan Downey back as Stanley Tweedle, and the German-born female lead Xenia Seeberg as the drop-dead gorgeous cluster-lizard Xev. Rounding out the regular crew is Jeffrey Hirschfield as the voice of the robot head 790. (Poor old Jeff never actually gets to act with any of his co-stars: all of 790's dialogue and mouth movements are pre-recorded in a corner under the Bridge set, for later playback during the live-action shooting of the 790's scenes.) Making regular reappearances as their chief adversary this season is British-born actor (and Forever Knight star) Nigel Bennett as Prince: As one of this year's format changes, series creator Paul (Defcon3) Donovan has decided to create a story-arc directly linking all 13 episodes (unlike the Mantrid storyline from last year which only reappeared intermittently) that sees the crew of the Lexx becoming involved with the political infighting of the two planets Fire and Water, when they come out of cryo-sleep over 4000 years after the events of the previous series. The biomechanical Lexx is understandably hungry after so long (I know this because I had to play the voice of the Lexx during shooting - "I'm hungry Stanley" can only be said so many different ways!) and is powerless to move out of orbit unless the hapless crew can find him a meal - a big meal. To make matters worse, 790 calculates that if the Lexx remains in orbit for another 100 hours, its orbit will decay and they will all die anyway!

In effect, like the original Flash Gordon serials from the Thirties, the episodes become one story in thirteen chapters, complete with cliff hanger ending as Xev, Stan and Kai try to get the Lexx enough food to get the hell out of there continue their search for a safe home the Dark Zone. One of the sub-plots of this year's outing is the theme of the Doppelgänger (for this show, a curiously apt Germanic myth) and therefore one or two familiar faces from Season 2 will be reappearing as the convoluted story unfolds. 790 also undergoes something of a new look - but you'll just have to watch the show to find out exactly what happens to him. Another innovation for Lexx this year is the use of location shooting. Even though Season 2 was shot in Berlin at the Potsdam/Babelsberg Studios, before transferring over to Halifax for the rest of the shoot, there was virtually no exterior filming. For this season the Loa team have shot at a number of German-based locations in Berlin with a small crew rounding out the show on location in Namibia for some of the essential Water world beach and for world desert locations.

Apart from dusting off, repainting and repairing the modular sets for the Lexx interiors, production designer David Hackl has also had to design a huge number of new sets depicting the various semi-medieval cities located on the two new worlds: apart from the aforementioned Fire and Water planets, there have been garden cities, game cities, desert cities and even sex cities to construct. New props have been designed and built (like Star Trek everything has to be made - there aren't any shops selling Loa items off the shelf) and the costume and make-up departments have remade and updated the costumes, designing a completely new look for Xev. David has a small team of young and enthusiastic illustrators to help him design the new worlds involved this season, and they all use whatever inspiration they can to come up with the Loa-look. There's a definite Verne feeling to a lot of the stuff in season 3 - a bit more retro than last year. Take the Gondola for example - a concept straight out of Five Weeks in A Balloon or Master of the World. Travel above and beyond the plains and oceans of the two warring planets is accomplished by using huge metal-clad balloons called Gondolas.

Imagine if you can the workshops that built the Nautilus in 20,000 Leagues Under the Sea turning their hands to building balloons and you'll get some idea of what the Gondolas are like (needless to say, we only had one to shoot with, but through the magic of greenscreen compositing, sometimes you will see whole fleets of the things - in the episode Battle for example). Hung from four giant winch motors in a corner of Stage i, the Gondola set was a great tribute to the design and construction departments as even up close it looked believably real - but was it a bitch to shoot! Even now I find it hard to write the word Gondola without breaking into a cold sweat.

The CG effects department has had to create a staggering number of new visuals for this year's scripts - even though they were able to recycle some of the previously used elements from last year for shots of the Lexx in space, all of the ground-based backgrounds had to be started from scratch. Further complicating things, this year for the first time the series has been shot on High Definition Video (with some fx plates still being shot on 35mm stock) which in itself presented a whole new set of challenges for the returning Director of Photography Les Kriszan. (In fact a couple of our early scenes had to be re-shot when the incredible range of the camera became obvious - revealing flaws in the sets that a film camera would never have captured.)

The visual effects team also had to shoot the "videomatics" elements of the script for editing purposes these are crude, toy-like inserts to illustrate the movement and compositing of the final CG elements - using bits of Star Wars rockets and dolls. Even poor old Rosocor turned up in one of them. (Unkind critics have sometimes suggested that these bits have obviously been left in by mistake in previous episodes!) One of the accusations commonly leveled at Loa is that it runs the gamut between breathtakingly good visuals and the embarrassingly bad stuff like the army of 790 Drone arms in the last season. Often it's just down to the time available to complete each story - with transmission of Season 3 already promised for early in 2000. Paul Donovan has written some very ambitious stories for what is not a high-budget franchise like Star Trek, but is nevertheless one of the most original SF shows anywhere. Star Trek it's definitely not - there are even more scantily-clad aliens this year than ever before. That, plus the fact that we were shooting episodes out of order without anyone knowing quite what Paul and Lex Gigeroff were planning for the gaps, made the making of Lexx something of a giant leap into the unknown. Shooting an episode of any TV show at the rate of 1 every 5 days is pretty scary, but add to that all of the technical difficulties that a series like Lexx embraces and the whole thing becomes a huge logistical challenge - with some stories being split between three continents!

On one of the final shooting days in Halifax, Paul appeared on set with some champagne bottles and glasses. He handed a piece of paper to Xenia to hold while he signed on behalf of Salter Street. It was the long hoped for deal with the US Sci-Fi Channel, (although Lexx has already run successfully on Sci-Fi Europe, the two channels are run as separate businesses) almost certainly guaranteeing future adventures for the crew of the Lexx. Whether Stan, Xev, Ka' and 790 will ever find a safe haven in the Dark Zone, (and there's a shocking relation at the conclusion of Season 3) - only time and future video sales will tell. Whatever Lexx's ultimate fate, it was great to be along for the ride.

Talk to any sensible fan (assuming there is such a creature) of television's oversized space bug LEXX and the man most likely to raise comment is the hapless, much put-upon Stanley Tweedle. Played to perfection by Canadian Brian Downey, Stan the handy-man's uncomfortable ride through the Universe as no one knows it is punctuated by near disasters, abuse from the mouth of a talking head and lust for the luscious love-slave, Xev (Xenia Seeberg). Now whilst it may seem as though the cast who make up the LEXX's illustrious crew were always meant to be together, Downey and Michael McManus (alias Kai the walking dead man) weren't actually sure they'd secured their passage on board the giant vessel until the very last moment. "Paul Donovan, who is the executive producer, head writer and occasional director of the show had made a small promotional film to illustrate the concept of LEXX." Downey explains, "He took it to various companies round the world trying to finance the project and when Showtime, one of the large US participants, struck the deal, part of that deal was that they had the right to reserve casting control for the principal players. In other words, Paul could come up with ideas, but if Showtime didn't like them, they had the right to refuse to have that person in a particular role. Michael McManus and I were actually 'in the air' (in a regular aeroplane you understand) when Paul got the call to say that he could have his first choice, namely us."

Flushed with success at having a regular job, the two men decided to celebrate by sampling some of the best brew Halifax, Nova Scotia had to offer. Sadly, events didn't, quite go according to plan but gave both Downey and McManus an indication of the loyal friendship that was to develop between ~ them personally and their characters. "The very first bar we walked into was totally deserted except for the bartenders and some particularly bad looking bouncers. Not another customer in the place," begins our star, "but on the way to the counter, Michael snagged his jacket on a chair, the chair fell over and then two of the bouncers grabbed him and announced, 'Sorry, sir, you appear to be very drunk and we're going to have to ask you to leave.'" In a very un-Tweedle-like gesture of bravado, Downey announced, "Oh yeah! You think so! Then you'll have to throw me out too." Drawing a quick veil over proceedings, suffice it to say the dynamic duo found themselves unceremoniously dumped on the soggy sidewalk. Chuckling quietly Downey concludes, "I guess we were feeling very happy about our current situation, but we looked a bit too happy, I suppose."

Comparisons between himself and the character he portrays draw Downey to reveal, "Personally I am nothing like Stanley Tweedle. I'm far more cowardly. But I do like him." In a moment of seriousness he admits, "As a matter of fact, in some ways you can't do a character that you don't like. You have to have some fondness for him even if he is the meanest person on Earth because deep down the character doesn't think of himself that way." Citing the late murderous gang leader Al Capone as a classic example, Downey says, "Al used to say that he was only trying to help the people of Chicago." Feigning an air of total innocence and giving a credible impersonation of a gangster, Downey shrugs, "Hey, he was only trying to do people a service; if they happened to get in his way-well they were warned-what's a crook to do?" Quite the opposite from the lovely Stanley Tweedle, thank goodness.

Of his character, Downey sighs, "I know he's been described at various times as being a coward, a wimp and lots of disparaging things have been said about the way the character behaves, but still, most people at least tolerate the man and like him. I think of Stanley as a practical person. In so many situations he's the one who says to the other characters, 'Look, we're heading in that direction and that's a screw-up over there. It's dangerous! Why are we going there? If there's danger in that direction let's go in the opposite direction and get away from it.'" Warming to his theme as wise protector Downey goes on, "Stanley thinks the rest of his companions are crazy and constantly tries to caution them and warn them of potential pitfalls but, of course, they don't listen. Especially that Xev character", he mumbles darkly. "She likes adventure, that one." Adventurous could be one way of describing the show that chronicles the challenges faced by Stanley, Kai, Xev and robot head 790 (Jeffrey Hirschfield) as they career through Time and Space in search of a permanent home, but the word 'outrageous' is more apt. From almost non-consensual sex with another cyber-being to cruel jibes at silly game shows, the series has been advancing the boundaries of alternative Sci-Fi comedy to the very limits. Asked if there has ever been a situation where cast members have looked at each other and declared 'there is no way any of us is doing that!' Downey is both honest and there's that word 'practical' in his reply.

"Yes, we do have discussions about whether or not what we're doing is too crude and pushing the envelope so far as to break the seal so that we all come pouring out, but I'm just so grateful to be able to swear that those times are extremely rare. The actors have a reasonably collaborative relationship with the writers and sometimes we'll suggest, 'This is a bit over the top, let's re-visit this. We see what your intention is but perhaps there's a slightly more sophisticated way to do it.'" The words 'sophisticated' and 'Stanley Tweedle' don't exactly flow together. Described as "Your Mr Regular, almost Everyman, type" by the actor, this retiring soul does his very best to maintain his dignity and the up keep of the spacecraft, whilst failing miserably in his attempts to seduce the the gorgeous semi-cluster lizard lady, Xev. The past two seasons have seen many a romantic gesture spurned in favour of a corpse and a disembodied head and seen Stanley dragged headlong into life-threatening situations often as a result of trying to rescue Xev and Kai.

However, Tweedle fans need not despair. Apparently things are looking up for the gentle security guard in Season Three. "He gets over laid!" laughs the actor. "Stanley spends much of his time pitching to get laid but ends up totally fatigued in circumstances that are quite hilarious. The people we were working with were truly wonderful about the whole thing!" Contrary to the previous two years, but in keeping with the show's reputation for springing surprises, LEXX's third season will be one continuing arc rather than a series of unrelated episodes. Without wishing to give away too many spoilers, Downey feels it's safe to reveal that, "When the season opens, we have been deep-frozen for four thousand years and the LEXX is incapacitated, drifting in an everdecreasing figure of eight round two planets. The entire season has our characters dealing with certain situations in cities on both those planets who just happen to have been at war with each other for so long that neither can remember why they started fighting." Gleefully suggesting that "Essentially it's about the struggle between Good and Evil," Downey remarks that, "A deliciously malevolent bad guy in the shape of actor Nigel Bennet is introduced into the proceedings and I think people are going to like what transpires - a lot."

Another major difference, for the cast and crew at least, is that much of the action takes place out of the studio and on locations, some of which are more exotic than others. Shuddering at the mere memory, Downey reminisces about a recent six-week spell in Berlin. "We were filming in a disused cement factory, where everything was still covered in lime and dust. It was freezing, it was wet and everyone - cast, production crew, the tea lady - all went down with some dreadful lurgy. Man, was I glad to get out of there!" Sad to say it was a bit like jumping out of the frying pan into the fire. Carted off to the wilds of Namibia in Africa - one of the aforementioned planets is supposed to be hot - he found himself up to his armpits in yet more cold water. "Now everyone thinks of Africa as being a hot place, and true, some areas got as hot as 40 degrees of blistering heat. But when we went to the coast to film some water shots, I had to run in and out of seawater that was distinctly chilly and whipped by biting winds. Not an experience I'd care to repeat." Hastily reiterating that he really does love doing the job he is doing, Downey insists that playing Stanley Tweedle can be compared to receiving therapy. "By that I mean everyone needs a vacation so when I slip into Stanley's pyjamas or jump suit, I feel as if I'm taking a holiday from myself for a while. That is just fine by me. I don't mind Stanley at all. Stanley's pleasant. He'll do for me!"

An asteroid mothership appears out of the blackness of space. A metal hatch opens and a tadpole-like creature shoots out and heads for the Lexx. Stan awakens from a nightmare in which he was eaten by Lyekka and discovers that the alien mothership is hovering outside of the Lexx. Before he can finish telling Xev and Kai what he has discovered, an alien who has assumed the physical appearance of Lyekka from Stan's dream appears on the Lexx. She explains that she is a plant and that her species needs to consume the living matter on earth in order to survive. The Lexx crew feel that this mass annihilation is not morally correct, but they understand that the aliens do have natural survival instincts. They suggest that "Lyekka" meet with the world's leaders (specifically President Priest) in order to find some logical solution. They take a moth to Vietnam where Priest, accompanied by Bunny, is to deliver a speech at the Khe Sanh Kuntry Klub. While there, he has also arranged to play a round of golf with Pope G. Rota who will be in attendance. When the Lexx crew land in a moth, they stumble upon a decrepit building that serves as a storage room for golf equipment. When they find Priest on the fairway giving a speech, the POWs open fire with their automatic weapons. Vietnamese caddies and a group of Monks guarding the Pope return fire. A battle ensues as Hueys swoop over the golf course firing their deadly weapons at the POWs. The moth is destroyed and Stan and Priest are kidnapped during the battle by Pope G. Rota. Kai, Xev and Stan stop off in Las Vegas as they wait for a space shuttle that Priest is arranging for them. Without a moth, the shuttle is their only means of returning to the Lexx. They check in at the King Tut, an Egyptian-themed hotel that is run by a group of mobsters. In the hotel room, Stan sees an ad for Slave Girls from the 18th Dynasty on the television and decides to order "room service" for himself. Xev discovers a female wrestling cage match is taking place on the premises and decides to enter, not realizing that it is fixed so that the casino can extort money. When Xev has tremendous success using her

Cluster Lizard skills to defeat every opponent, the mobsters start to grow unhappy. They try to persuade Xev to throw the match, but she doesn't understand the concept of losing on purpose. Kai decides to explore the hotel and discovers a rare coffin that he believes belonged to an ancient enemy. He begins to track his foe's whereabouts by following an oily trail that leads away from the coffin. The Slave Girls show up for Stan. They tie him up, take his money and leave him. Meanwhile, there is a killer Mummy on the loose in the hotel that breaks the neck of everyone it encounters. The Mummy enters Stan's room and finds him tied-up on the bed, but Stan is able to escape and rejoin Kai. Kai tells Stan the Mummy is actually a poet-philosopher named Drago that he killed more than 4,000 years ago. Heretics preserved Drago's body and part of his brain in a type of fluid that allows him to function for short periods as a primitive killing machine. Unfortunately, like Kai, Drago is dead and cannot be killed. Kai explains the only way to defeat Drago is to wait until his "fluid" runs out. Kai also mentions that the coffin in which the Mummy was stored bears an inscription, warning people not to open it. With the help of Stan and Xev, Kai is able to trap Drago back in the coffin. They bury the coffin in the desert and head for the space shuttle to return to the Lexx.

4 - 22 TRIP

As the Lexx flies away from Earth toward a new planet, the crew discovers a strange organic bulb on the galley counter. The bulb opens and reveals two round berries and a small potted plant. A holographic image of Lyekka's face appears and informs the crew that this is her thank-you gift for their helping her on Earth. Lyekka tells Kai the potted plant - a Yowraa-Taang - will open and bloom if he sings to it. Stan and Xev have been given the berries, which Lyekka says are the rarest and most exquisite delicacy in the two universes. Slightly skeptical, Stan and Xev at first hesitate to eat the berries. Eventually they decide it's worth the risk since the berries are a welcome change from "Lexx food." Kai sings to his plant, which opens into a glowing flower that disperses shimmering particles into the air. Kai decides to save his energy and steps into his cryopod. Meanwhile, on the bridge, Xev and Stan begin to suffer hallucinations. Prince appears and convinces Xev that Kai is now alive again. Prince convinces Stan that Xev wants him dead so she can get the key back. Stan and Xev's hallucinations intensify and soon the two chase each other around the Lexx with axes and spears. Visions of Vlad and strange voices fill the passageways and begin driving the two of them mad. Stan and Xev fight in the cryochamber, where the Yowraa-Taang plant has penetrated and destroyed the cryopod control unit. Kai, awakened by the skirmish, separates Stan and Xev and prevents them from killing each other. Kai hooks them up to the protein regenerator to restore them to their normal selves. Kai explains that the berries and plant were deliberately misrepresented by Lyekka in order to kill the Lexx crew. He also mentions he can no longer freeze himself in the cryopod because the control unit is destroyed and that he will run out of protoblood in a matter of days.

4 - 23 LYEKKA VS. JAPAN

A huge alien asteroid mothership plummets to Earth and crashes into the Pacific ocean, causing a great disturbance off the coast of Japan. Inside, Lyekka prepares to devour "Japaneseland." Kai and Xev take a moth down to Earth to retrieve Vlad's cryopod control unit, which will replace the broken one on the Lexx. Fearing that Lyekka will consume the entire universe if she is not stopped, Xev and Kai decide they must take action to stop her. On the rocky Japanese shoreline, Kai and Xev encounter a meditating monk. While Kai joins him in meditation, Xev explores the area. She meets another monk named Wyatt; he takes her to meet his Master, a spiritualist who claims he can put people in touch with their past lives. Xev is analyzed by the Master (who is actually Wyatt in disguise). He is actually a fraud. His real agenda is to lure people in with spiritual mumbo-jumbo and then steal their organs to sell on the black market. He straps Xev to a table and attempts to put her under anaesthesia so he can begin removing her vital organs. Meanwhile, Prince is on global TV, predicting the world's weather will cause massive death and destruction. The ocean churns and a huge, Godzilla-sized Lyekka emerges and strides toward shore. Xev struggles to break free and is saved by Lyekka's giant foot, which crashes down on the temple, crushing Wyatt. Kai and Xev jump in a moth as Lyekka stomps through Tokyo, crushing everything in her path. Stan plans to use the Lexx to fire at Lyekka, but a separate manifestation of Lyekka charms him on the Lexx viewscreen. Kai takes action, cleverly using his brace to topple the giant Lyekka. At that moment, on the Lexx, the image of Lyekka that has been mesmerizing Stan disintegrates and is gone. Carrots everywhere howl with rage. Kai and Xev fly back to the Lexx. They are just about to head off to the stars once again when the asteroid mothership rises out of the ocean on giant legs. It heads right for Japan and starts destroying it. Lexx returns and blasts the mothership to smithereens. This time, at the moment of its demise, all carrots all over the world are simultaneously deactivated, becoming as still and harmless as — well, ordinary vegetables. The world is saved and the Lexx crew heads back out into space. As soon as the Lexx is far away from Earth, the real alien mothership enters the solar system. This one is not the size of Tokyo; it dwarfs the moon as it closes in on the Little Blue Planet.

LIFE FORCE

After global warming floods the Earth, survivors Richard and Amy Webber begin teaching a new generation of scientists how to restore the damaged planet. But evil is not far away. In the year 2025 everything has changed, the seas have engulfed the Earth with modern Great Britain know a mix of very small island. In this world lives a new breed a special children who have strange powers of the mind allowing them to turn into animals and other objects. In this new brave world however not every kid likes the idea, Mai Lee is one of those children who can't control their gift which can put other people in severe danger. The full extent of Mai Lee's power however are not clear.

There are some resisting survivors however, who have gathered on the tiny Black Combe Island, part of the Western String, previously the location of the Cumbrian Mountains. Richard and Amy Webber (Valentine Pelka and Kelly Hunter) have set up a school to teach a new generation of physicists. These include their two children Greg and Karen (Paul Fox and Julie Haworth) and special pupils Ashok and Mai Li (Pablo Duarte and Sarah Hollis), who as 'senders' have the power to transmit thoughts via their glowing eyes. The aim is for the telepathic skills to be developed enough to aid secret international environmental group Greenwatch. The mission is jeopardized when the Commission's leader Kurt Glemser (Damien Lewis), also a 'sender', raids the school and arrests the Webbers parents. The children are left to themselves until help comes from a former scientist Goodman (David Malinson).

This 13 part series set 25 years in the near future was the first new SF show to be produced by the ITV network in the new Millennium. This sleekly produced Children's ITV production is one of the highest quality childrens SF drama produced for ITV in a very long time. With some lavish production details and a good cast, the series was very good. With a very good story to match a kind of mix between John Wyndham's The Chrysalids and ANIMORPHS.

The series had been written by Peter Tabern (whose company Childsplay Productionw was behind the BBC's Children of the New Forest in 1998) Greg McQueen, John Hay and Rik Carmichael. Tabern also directs along with Lorne Magory and Justin Chadwick. The aim has been to set the story in Britian but make the audience believe events have changed things so much (including climate, accents and names) that it is not obvious. If successful we can but hope there will be a return to more of this 'old fashioned' style of story telling.

It's twenty five years into the future. Global warming has melted the ice caps, Britain has become a drowned landscape and its population is living on a series of small islands poking above the water. The scientists who tried, but failed, to stop the catastrophe have been blamed for it and are outlawed by a new federal government which runs the country. The scientists have gone into hiding where they are leading an underground movement and, on Black Combe Island, a husband and wife team is teaching a new generation of physicists. Among these children are 'Senders', people with the gift of telepathy and telekinesis that has been enhanced by genetic engineering. Together, they hope to build a new future and stay one step ahead of the government enforcement agency, The Commission.

Such is the scenario for Life Force, ITV's new children's drama from Childsplay Television, whose previous successes have included the Supernatural serial Eye of the Storm and the BBC Sunday teatime drama Children of the New Forest. The idea behind Life Force came from the executive producer at Childsplay, Peter Tabern. "I wanted to do a futuristic drama that was about something," he says. "There are so many shows around that are just chewing gum adventure without any issue and I think kids are interested in issues, much more so than adults. You can get them concerned about things and the future of the planet is something they talk about a hell of a lot in schools and I know kids think about. The popularity and numbers of shows about extreme weather and what's happening to our planet - these shows pick up a huge child audience and fascinate kids. I think there's a possibility for shows that take and explore that in an imaginative way.

"The other big issue at the moment is genetic engineering and the effect it's going to have on people's lives. Certainly in the lifetimes of the children watching this show it is going to become possible to choose for one's children various forms of gene therapy which will hopefully make them better individuals. Healthier, happier, wiser, more intelligent, more beautiful - who knows what is going to be possible. So we wanted to look at what might be the downside of that. So here is this group of children who have a telepathic gift which has been genetically enhanced. Which is all very well when everybody is feeling that science is a marvelous thing, but as soon as science is outlawed, these kids are obvious targets because they are the product of a scientific experiment. So they are on the run too, simply because they've been manipulated by genetic science."

Senders' eyes glow yellow when they use their powers, and these powers are many fold. One of the more able children on Black Combe Island, Mai Li (Sarah Hollis), has the ability to 'flip' objects, like the tennis ball she turns inside out with her mind in the first episode. But the gift isn't restricted to those on the scientists' side. Commission Agent Kurt Glemser (Damian Lewis) is also a Sender and he uses his power to control another person, to see through his eyes and eavesdrop on the scientific community. Eventually, Glemser forces Mai Li, another young Sender called Ashok (Pablo Duarte) and two normal children (Paul Fox and Julia Haworth) to run away. "Each week they end up in a different place, meet up with different people who have been isolated since the drowning so that all kinds of weird things can be going on," says Peter. "Unashamedly, that is all to do with an almost X-File type of adventure. When they do get into these adventures, instead of being about aliens, they usually have a scientific basis."

Some of the scientific explanations and concepts in Life Force are quite complex. Much of the dialogue is intelligent and far removed from the simplistic style of some children's dramas. It could raise questions about members of the audience understanding what is going on, but Peter doesn't believe in talking down to children. "I think kids not understanding things is a self-fulfilling prophecy. If you feed them rubbish long enough - yes, you end up with kids who are used to seeing rubbish and you shorten their concentration span. I don't think their concentration spans are innately down to the fifteen or twenty second bites that we all seem intent on bringing them down to, I think it's the way we feed material to them. So without sounding too pious about it, it is part of our intention to do something which is a little bit more mentally challenging. I also wouldn't argue with anyone who said the very youngest members of the audience - the seven or eight year olds - will struggle with some of the concepts in this. I think it will be easier for a twelve year old to grasp some of the underlying ideas. But hopefully the adventure element will keep the younger ones going across the small gaps in their understanding."

One of the main concepts in the series is the drowned world, shown dramatically in the opening credits by the map of the United Kingdom being almost entirely swallowed up by the sea around it. Water, therefore, plays a large part in Life Force, but water has traditionally been a problem for film makers. Just ask Kevin Costner about Waterworld. "I didn't think it was going to be that much of a problem when we came up with the idea of a drowned world and a shallow inland sea with islands so that it looked like the top of the Cumbrian Fells. I thought there would be quite a few lakes that would give you that feel, but there just aren't any. The lakes are all too long and narrow. The only one we could find was Loch Lomond and our key 'this is the drowned world'-type exteriors were all done at the southern end of Loch Lomond which was fortunately only forty miles from civilisation, from Glasgow, so it was a good place to work. Then our window of opportunity to film it was very small. You have a big bank holiday when Loch Lomond just fills with boats sometime in June and then their [Scotland's] schools break up very early, so a fortnight after that the kids are on holiday and you can't see the water for 5ail boards and wind surfers and God knows what. So that was it, that was the fortnight we had to go and do it and I'm glad to say it worked very well and wasn't too dreadful."

However, towards the end of the shoot when Peter took over the director's chores, the situation wasn't so easy. "In spite of Loch Lomond we needed day to day access to stretches of water," he explains. "It got to August, and Manchester had drunk it all! We were shooting on the western Pennines outside Bolton and these reservoirs were basically Manchester's summer drinking water and they drank it all! We went back for the later episodes and the water had gone! So we were in this ridiculous situation of being in a location that we had chosen specifically because we were surrounded by water and having to put people in buses and travel something like sixty or seventy miles into Derbyshire to find a reservoir that still had water in it. I was amazed. Because it hadn't been a particularly dry summer, had it? There was no drought, was there? Not that I was aware of. Because I was saying [shaking his fist at the sky] 'you bastard!' we'd been rained off every day as far as I could see and we still didn't have enough water to shoot with! That was bizarre."

Otherwise, the shoot was relatively straight forward and casting the right people was key. He had worked with Pablo Duarte before on Children of the New Forest, but Sarah Hollis was cast through an audition. "Finding them is always difficult. There's such a narrow window when children are children from an acting point of view. You've got to find them afresh and then you're taking a chance. You can see a kid who's marvellous in a workshop environment, marvellous in audition, but can't handle the pressure, discipline, going away from home, all that sort of stuff associated with doing a television programme. Some take to it like a duck to water and really blossom and others become timid little creatures. So it's a risk, but one I think paid off with these two. The best kids just cope with it so astonishingly well, they're so flexible and so quick and learn. They've got such mental energy when they're young you'll find they're not only doing their job, but they'll know everybody else's job as well. You'll turn your back and they'll be helping the camera assistant. You can't imagine an adult actor being remotely interested in focusing on anything but what they're doing, whereas kids can run around and be helping the Spark [electrician] one minute and in front of the camera doing their job the next."

Because of the restrictions of child working laws, he decided to hire young adults for the roles of the older children. Julia Haworth, who plays Karen, was actually nineteen at the time of filming and Paul Fox, who plays Greg, is in his early twenties. He's also becoming quite well known as a soap star, having recently switched from Emmerdale to Coronation Street. "Going out with him on Loch Lomond was fun because Loch Lomond is a place for, shall we say, the more elderly tourist on coaches. So you take Paul out and it was like grab-a-granny night because they all knew him from Emmerdale! As soon as they saw him you couldn't get near Paul."

Much of the atmosphere of the futuristic world depicted in Life Force comes from the locations, but there are also some special effects used sparingly throughout the programmes. "Kids are so sophisticated now in terms of their appreciation of special effects, in television your philosophy has to be 'less is more'," says Peter. "If you really try to take on people with million dollar budgets, you will fail and you will look stupid in the attempt. So when you say we've been sparing, I think that's right. The company that have done the special effects, Oasis, have done a brilliant job and - the poor souls - they've worked themselves to death for us. Their efforts have been unstinting, but the amount of screen time is quite sparing because we've hopefully taken a sensible view of what we can do well and stuck to that."

Life Force looks like it's shaping up into a successful series - ITV have already decided to give each episode a repeat showing on Sunday mornings. So there is a chance it could run to a second series. "As you will see from Episode 13, we have almost brought the story full circle, yet resolved nothing, so everything is ready to go again," confirms Peter. "But it will go off at a different tangent. One of our actors, who is absolutely brilliant, is the villain Damian Lewis. I think he's stunning, but I don't think he's necessarily going to be available to us in two years' time. He's just been the lead in Warriors and I think from that and other stuff he's involved in, Damian will probably be a very busy boy. You can't bank on getting anybody back when you're doing this kind of show, so you've got to think if the worst happens, how do I write my way out of that? So all of these little doors you leave ajar. But, yeah, very definitely it could go to another series. It would still be the kids, it would still be quest based, it would still be the same world as a backdrop, but they'd have to go off in a different direction."

LIFE ON MARS

DCI Sam Tyler's (John Simm) world is about to be turned upside down. Moments after his girlfriend and colleague, Maya (Archie Panjabi), is kidnapped by a serial killer, Sam is knocked unconscious by a car.

He wakes up - in 1973.

Sam discovers a strange new world full of cigarette smoking, gum chewing, and unreconstructed men. He's a DI starting his first day in a new precinct and he's got to prove himself to his new DCI, Gene Hunt (Philip Glenister). Gene likes to throw his weight around. He acts first and thinks later. The only person in this alien world who reaches out to Sam is a young WPC, Annie Cartwright (Liz White).

Dazed and confused, Sam finds it difficult to focus on the murder his new colleagues are investigating. Then he discovers a connection between this crime and the serial killer who kidnapped his girlfriend back in 2006. Could solving this case be the key to getting home? Could it be a way to save Maya?

It seems that the biggest obstacle standing between Sam and success is his new DCI's very different attitude to policing. To Sam, a 21st Century liberal, Gene represents everything that is bad about the police force, everything that the force has tried to stamp out over the last 30 years.

Sam's faced with a huge moral dilemma when he realises that destroying evidence in 1973 could save Maya's life in 2006. At the same time, he becomes ever more doubtful about the reality of his situation. Do distant doctor's voices from 2006 bleeding through into 1973 mean that he's in a coma and none of this is real?

As the ultimate test, he stands on the roof of the police station poised to jump off. Annie talks him down, and, at least for the moment, he remains stuck in a time that's completely alien to him.

Titled after the David Bowie song of the same name, this is a great time travel drama. I've just finished watching the first part, and I think its safe to assume I'm going to be addicted for the next few weeks. The plot revolves around a 2006 policeman who is transported back in time to 1973 when he is run over by a car. He finds himself wearing different clothes in a strange Manchester he has never seen before. As well as coping with the new decade he now inhabits and the sense of displacement he feels, he also is forced to deal with the crimes of 33 years ago, using very primitive methods. A WPC tries to help this fish out of water, but can he ever find his way back home again? And what is with these strange voices in his head..? Sufficed to say, we'll find out the answers soon enough, and I for one can't wait!

Production

Produced by Kudos Film & Television - the makers of Spooks and Hustle - for BBC Wales, the eight one-hour episodes of the first series were broadcast on BBC One on Monday nights at 9pm. The series was created by writers Tony Jordan, Matthew Graham and Ashley Pharoah, who also provided the majority of the scripts. The fourth writer on the first series was Chris Chibnall. For the second series, Graham, Pharoah and Chibnall returned to write episodes, joined by Julie Rutterford, Guy Jenkin and Mark Greig.[1] The second series transmission day was moved to Tuesday night rather than Monday.

The programme was originally conceived in 1998, when Graham, Jordan and Pharoah had been sent on a break to the seaside resort of Blackpool by Kudos to come up with new programme ideas.[2] Originally titled Ford Granada,[3] after the popular car of the 1970s, the series was initially rejected by the BBC. "Back then, broadcasters just weren't comfortable with something like that, something that wasn't set in the real world and that had a fantasy element to it," Graham later told SFX Magazine. The initial idea at this time was for a more humorous, pre-watershed series that overtly mocked the styles and attitudes of the 1970s, with comic actor Neil Morrissey envisioned as playing the central character.

Later, Channel 4 drama executive John Yorke showed some interest in commissioning the programme, but eventually decided not to pursue the idea. "[Channel 4] people just said 'It's going to be silly,'" Graham told the Radio Times in a feature published the week of the first episode's transmission. However, the series eventually attracted the attention of BBC Wales Head of Drama Julie Gardner, who in turn persuaded the overall Head of Drama at the BBC, Jane Tranter, to commission the programme for BBC One.

The programme's central character was originally to have been called "Sam Williams", but Kudos felt that this was not striking enough and asked Graham to come up with an alternative surname. (This would later be referenced in the final episode of series two.) Asking his young daughter for her opinion, she suggested "Sam Tyler", which became the character's name. Graham subsequently discovered that his daughter had named him after Rose Tyler from Doctor Who, a programme for which he would later write an episode. The initial geographical setting was to be London; this was then changed to Leeds, and finally to Manchester, as part of a BBC initiative to make more programmes in that city.

Filming for a second series for BBC One started in April 2006. According to Jane Featherstone, the show's executive producer, speaking in February 2006, a film version of the show was also a possibility: "Life on Mars was a very high concept idea and there was no doubt it would work on the big screen... But as yet, we are concentrating on the development and production of the second series for BBC1."

On October 9, 2006, it was confirmed that the second series of Life on Mars would also be the last, with two possible endings to the programme having been filmed. Matthew Graham stated that "We decided that Sam's journey should have a finite life span and a clear-cut ending and we feel that we have now reached that point after two series."

The Guardian newspaper's Media Guardian.co.uk website reported that producer David E Kelley was to develop an American version of the series for the ABC network there, which was being targeted for the 2007-08 TV season. "Mr Kelley will write and executive produce a pilot for the 60-minute ABC version of BBC1's hit 70s cop drama, which was likely to be broadcast in autumn next year if it gets a full series commission." [10] According to a report by The Hollywood Reporter Rachelle Lefevre has been cast as the female lead of "the lone female detective in the department" that "forges a mystic bond with the mysterious detective and teams with him to track a serial killer". This report also indicated that the American series will take place in 1972 rather than 1973.

In December 2006, it was reported that the BBC had commissioned a Life on Mars spin-off series, to be titled Ashes to Ashes after another David Bowie song of the same name. The Times reported that this spin-off would pick up the lives of Gene Hunt and other characters from the series in 1981. Julie Gardner confirmed that the spin-off was to be produced during an interview for BBC Radio Wales in March 2007. [13] The series was confirmed by the BBC on the day of the finale's airing. Ashes to Ashes will see Philip Glenister return as DCI Gene Hunt, but this time in London in 1981. He will be joined by female detective DCI Alex Drake from the 21st Century, a new character. She will be a modern woman who has risen through the ranks of the Metropolitan Police by using psychological profiling to capture suspects, producers said. But when she and her daughter are kidnapped, she is injured in a rescue attempt, and finds herself in 1981.

Jane Featherstone, executive producer for TV production company Kudos, said the search was on for DCI Hunt's new "sexy sidekick". "It's a touch of Moonlighting teamed with a measure of Miami Vice," she said. Filming is due to begin in the summer of 2007, and the show will be broadcast on BBC One in 2008.

The second series had a distinctive style of introduction on BBC One; after a brief collage of momentary images, such as several test cards and the late comedy writer/broadcaster Barry Took, a version of BBC 1's 1970s blue-on-black rotating globe ident (with a blue "BBC 1 COLOUR" caption underneath) was used, although the design had to be modified to fit widescreen sets. This was accompanied by a bass-voiced continuity announcer in the style of that era. Viewers in Wales saw a "BBC Cymru Wales" globe. Trailers for the show also used the 1970s style, including the slanting BBC logo with rounded edges.

Music

Main article: Life on Mars (soundtrack album)

The series was named after the David Bowie song "Life on Mars?", which was playing on the iPod in Tyler's Jeep Grand Cherokee when the accident happens, and on an 8-track tape in a Rover P6 when he awakes in 1973. Another Bowie song, "Space Oddity", is used in BBC trailers for the series.

Much reference is made to the eponymous song, which reflects the themes of the show in the lyric "Take a look at the lawman beating up the wrong guy, oh man, I wonder if he'll ever know, he's in the best-selling show, 'Is There Life on Mars?' ". It can also be heard playing near the end of the final episode in series two. Nelson the barman also refers to "sunken dreams" in the same episode, lyrics from the first verse.

Another song featured on the soundtrack, in the second episode, was "Live and Let Die" by Paul McCartney and Wings. Kudos were initially refused permission to use the song by the record company but, according to Graham in the Radio Times, "We sent the episode direct to Paul McCartney. Almost immediately, his assistant phoned back and said 'Paul loves it. You can go ahead and use it'."

A central theme in the series is the conflict in attitudes between Tyler and his 1970s colleagues. Tyler, a product of the more politically correct twenty-first century, where suspects' rights and the chain and preservation of forensic evidence are more stringently observed frequently clashes with his 1973 counterparts, who work in a police force where sexism, racism, police brutality and institutionalised minor corruption are casually regarded as routine parts of the job. This strongly alludes to the underlying theme of the 1970s police drama The Sweeney, something which becomes more obvious as the show progressed. The series frequently uses dramatic irony, in the form of off-hand jokes about a future the audience already knows, but which the historical characters do not.

There is also a central ambiguity surrounding the status of Tyler: is he in a coma in 2006 and imagining his experiences? Is he really from 1973 and mentally unstable, albeit with remarkably accurate visions of the future, and why is he seeing the past selves of people from his life in 2006? Or, has he somehow travelled back in time from 2006 to 1973?

This uncertainty is conveyed through a surreal approach, such as when Tyler is addressed directly through his television set late at night by the young girl featured in the Test Card F or Open University lecturers. Tyler also occasionally hears voices and electronic noises apparently from people and machines around his hospital bed which lead him to believe that he is in a coma (although other details, such as the remarkable amount of detail and tangibility in the world in which Tyler finds himself, may suggest otherwise). There are also scenes where past and present appear to overlap, such as in episode six where Sam hears the 2006 voice of his mother saying his life-support machine will be switched off at 2pm, and immediately in 1973 he is called to investigate a hostage-taking where the perpetrator will start killing his victims at 2pm. "No-one will die today," is the repeated response from Sam. The timelines merge again in the first episode of series two, when Sam encounters a suspect in 1973 whom he had arrested in 2006; it appears that this man is also trying to kill him while he is in his coma. The second series also develops the voices that regularly contact him, when we see for the first time that they can hear him. In episode one of the second series, a voice on the telephone tells him he is close to home, but DCI Hunt and the others must not know what he is doing there. Unusually, this call could be traced by the operator to the Borough of Hyde, the area where Sam was told he transferred from in Series 1, Episode 1. It later transpires in episode 7 of series 2 that the voice on the telephone belongs to Acting DCI Frank Morgan, also from Hyde, who temporarily takes DCI Hunt's role while Hunt is being investigated for a possible murder. Sam realises this when Morgan is being bid farewell in the elevator and tells Sam that "Hunt wiggled out of it this time." He then reassures Sam that it won't be long before Hunt receives his come uppance and Sam can "come home."

Ending

Having stipulated that the programme would only run for two series, the writers had to create an ending bringing together all threads from the two series. The final episode centres on a plot by coal miners, who, backed by hardened criminals, and led by a psychopathic convicted cop killer, aim to steal a large quantity of money from a train. Frank Morgan, introduced in the previous episode as a Police Officer more akin to Sam's style of policing, plays a central role. Early in the episode, Sam comes to believe that Frank is the surgeon in the future, who has been talking to him through the television, telephones and in his head. Sam is told that a tumour in his head is keeping him in a coma, and thus in 1973. Sam surmises that Gene Hunt is the manifestation of the tumour in his dream state because Morgan tells him that he must destroy Gene in order to complete the 'operation' and come home. Morgan asks Sam to collect evidence to convict Hunt of gross professional misconduct.

Sam therefore tapes a variety of instances of Hunt abusing his power, including the beating of a suspect and the planning of an illegal sting to stop the train robbery. Sam meets with Morgan, presenting his evidence, and Morgan tells him that he is, in fact, not from the future, that the year is 1973, and that they both are part of an operation codenamed M.A.R.S. (Metropolitan Accountability and Reconciliation Strategy), the purpose of which is to secure better policing for Manchester. Morgan tells Sam that he is undercover inside Hunt's A-division in order to bring his illegal activities to an end. Sam does not believe him, but Morgan tells him that, after his accident, his mind closed down, and he now suffers from amnesia. He tells Sam that his name is really Williams and that he has replaced this with his undercover persona. He shows Sam the graves of his 'mother' and 'father' and then 'Sam Tyler', all of whom have been dead since the 19th century. Disillusioned, he then looks at his police file and sees the note on his record about his transfer, signed by Morgan.

Meanwhile, work is progressing on the sting and Sam is disowned by A-division when he tells them that he is working undercover for Morgan. However, he must take part in the sting for it to be a success. Sam and Ray go undercover as security guards on the train, with Chris and Annie posing as BR staff. Gene is undercover as the previously-arrested gang member. Sam takes with him the radio Morgan gave him to call in backup. At the worst possible moment, the radio starts to crackle and falls out of Sam's pocket, where it is seen by the gang members. Annie slams the train door, while Gene removes his mask and thus reveals his true identity. The gang members open fire on the train trapping the team inside. Sam tries to use the radio to call in Morgan, but without success. He then leaves the train to try and find help. In a tunnel he meets Morgan, who tells him that he would be content to let Ray, Annie and Chris die in order to bring Hunt down. Sam argues, but then is called into a bright white light calling him home. As he leaves, Gene, Chris and Ray are hit by fire from the gang members. Annie screams for help.

He wakes in his hospital room where Morgan tells him he could not remove all of the tumour, but that it was benign. Sam leaves the hospital's Hyde Ward, room 2612 - explaining the references to 'Hyde 2612', and returns to his life as a 21st-century DCI. However, he quickly finds that he cannot relate to any of his colleagues, and even accidentally cuts himself without knowing. Remembering Nelson's earlier observation that "You know you're alive when you can feel," he goes up onto the roof of the station. After looking out over Manchester, he takes a running leap from the roof, and appears back in 1973, just in time to gun down the gang leader, saving his colleagues, but subsequently ending his life in the present day. In the pub afterwards, Sam makes up with Ray, Chris and Phyllis, and goes outside in search of Annie. He asks her "What do I do, Annie?" and she says "Stay" (echoing their conversation at the end of Episode 1 of the first season). As they finally kiss, Hunt drives up with details of a new case. As they drive off, Sam hears, over the radio, voices in his native time, saying they are losing him. He changes channel, and, as the car drives off, Hunt and Tyler bicker as usual. At the very end, children run past and the girl from Test Card F follows them onto the screen, stops, and looks directly into the camera, before reaching out with her hand and "switching off" the television. It is debatable whether or not this signifies Sam's death, or simply the end of the television series (the writer Matthew Graham has indicated the latter in an interview,[16] although the former has widely been inferred).

Ultimately the viewer is left with ambiguity as to which to emotionally accept as real: Sam's life in the present day or his life in 1973. Has he really reawoken, and then thrown himself off a high building, presumably to his death? Writer Matthew Graham suggests so. Or, as actor John Simm suggests, might this too merely be another one of his coma dreams?[16] Back in 1973 Sam can still hear the voices that suggest he is in a coma but now he chooses to ignore them, possibly because he either thinks they're symptoms of his delusions or because he doesn't want to wake up. Either Sam concludes he had been suffering from delusions and paranoia brought on by amnesia and that his life in 1973 was real, or that he prefers to live in his imagination, or he doesn't care which is real, only that he prefers 1973.

Trivia

When the series was screened on BBC Four (initially one episode ahead of the BBC One broadcast, but later through a scheduling reshuffle one episode behind) the standard BBC Four continuity was used.

A training booklet called The Rules of Modern Policing, purportedly written by DCI Gene Hunt, was issued as promotional material for the second series. The booklet has the "look and feel" of DC Chris Skelton's copy, complete with tea stains, bloodstains, and women's phone numbers. It has become a minor collectible item.

The character of Frank Morgan, introduced in the penultimate episode of Series Two as the officer behind the operation to reveal Gene Hunt's gross professional misconduct, shares his name with the actor Frank Morgan, who played the title character in the 1939 film The Wizard of Oz. When Sam wakes up from his coma in the final episode of Series Two, Israel Kamakawiwo'ole's acoustic version of Over the Rainbow is played over the following scenes. This is also linked to Gene Hunt's continual referral to Sam as 'Dorothy', the heroine of The Wizard of Oz, throughout the two series (although Hunt clearly means "dorothy" as slang for a dandy or homosexual person, as a gibe against Sam's going "by the book"). In one episode, Hunt picks up the phone and says "Is that the Wizard of Oz? We need you to send Dorothy home."

The character of Frank Morgan shares his name with the actor who plays DI Regan's boss in the TV series The Sweeney. In that programme, DI Regan's boss is Frank Haskins played by Garfield Morgan; hence, Frank Morgan. Frank Morgan's dress style also bears a strong resemblance to that of Frank Haskins.

Spoilers end here.

Reception

Series one

Previewing the first episode for the Radio Times, the magazine's television editor Alison Graham described the series as "a genuinely innovative and imaginative take on an old genre... This sounds silly, but writers Matthew Graham, Tony Jordan and Ashley Pharoah give the drama wit and heart." [17] The series was also featured on the front cover of that week's issue of the magazine, with a publicity photograph of Simm and Glenister. In a preview behind-the-scenes feature for SFX, Steve O'Brien declared that "it looks like BBC One has and we'll lay large bets on this a monster hit on its hands... It's funny... And dramatic and exciting, and we're really not getting paid for saying this."

Reaction following the broadcast of the opening episode was also generally positive. Reviewing the opening instalment in The Guardian the day after transmission, Sam Wollaston wrote: "For anyone of 40 or over, it's fabulous fun... But Life on Mars was more than just a jolly, tongue-in-cheek romp into the past... Once there, in 1973, we find ourselves immersed in a reasonably gripping police drama yes, The Sweeney, perhaps, with better production values... Or put another undeniably laboured way, as poor Sam Tyler walks through his sunken dream, I'm hooked to the silver screen. And yes, I know it's actually a small screen."

Other newspaper critics gave the series similarly positive reviews, with James Walton of the Daily Telegraph saying that "Theoretically, this should add up to a right old mess. In practice, it makes for a thumpingly enjoyable piece of television not least because everybody involved was obviously having such a great time." [20] Peter Paterson of the Daily Mail did, however, reflect the views of many other commentators when he wondered "can its intriguing conceit be sustained over eight one-hour episodes?"

The first episode was also a success in terms of viewing figures, with an average audience of seven million in the overnight ratings. [21] This was enough for the programme to win its timeslot with a 27% share of the total television audience for the hour from 9pm, one million viewers ahead of its nearest rival, Soapstar Superstar on ITV1. [21] In the following weeks, the competition on ITV1 came from the comedy-drama series Northern Lights, which gained a marginally higher overnight rating for its first episode against Life on Mars's second, 6.1 million (24% of the available audience) against 6 million. [22]

In subsequent weeks, however, Life on Mars fared better against Northern Lights. Episode three gained 6.2 million viewers and a 24% share against the second of Northern Lights which fell to 5.4 million (21%). The trend continued in the following weeks, with Northern Lights not managing to beat Life on Mars again, and the series even managing a highest viewing figure since the first episode for episode five, which gained 6.7 million viewers and a 26% share.

Critical reaction to the series also continued to be positive. Reviewing episode four in The Guardian, Nancy Banks-Smith wrote that: "Life on Mars was an inspired take on the usual formula of Gruff Copper of the old school, who solves cases by examining the entrails of a chicken, and Sensitive Sidekick, who has a degree in detection... No profession has changed more dramatically in the last 30 years than the police (I wish I could force more enthusiasm into my voice) but old coppers still make the best jokes."

A selection of the magazine coverage surrounding the launch of the second series of Life on Mars in 2007, including the Radio Times cover with a mocked-up 1973 version of the cover, included on page three of the magazine. The final episode gained 7.1 million viewers in the overnight figures, a 28% audience share which placed it well ahead of the nearest competition, the first episode of the two-part drama Love Lies Bleeding on ITV1, which gained 5.4 million (23%).

In November 2006, the first series of Life on Mars won the International Emmy Award for Best Drama Series. In January 2007 it won the Best New Programme category at the Broadcast Magazine awards. [28] In March 2007 it won two categories, Best Drama Series and the Writers' Award, at the Broadcasting Press Guild Awards. On April 11, 2007, the day after the transmission of the series' last-ever episode, it was announced that series one had been nominated for a British Academy Television Award (BAFTA) in the Best Drama Series category. John Simm was also nominated as Best Actor for his work on the show.

Series two

The first episode of the second series gained an overnight rating of 5.7 million on BBC One, [31] winning its timeslot, with the closest opposition being Trial and Retribution on ITV1, which gained 5.5 million. However, this was over a million lower than the 6.8 million average Life on Mars gained for its first series episodes. The premiere of the second episode immediately afterwards on BBC Four gained 747,000 viewers, the best audience of the day for a digital television-only channel.

The first episode was praised by the Radio Times's television editor Alison Graham in her preview, who wrote: "Sam Tyler and Gene Hunt are shaping up nicely as one of the great TV detective partnerships... It's vastly enjoyable and manages to stay just about believable thanks to some strong writing and, of course, the two marvellous central performances." However, Nancy Banks-Smith in The Guardian felt that the time-paradox aspect of the episode was somewhat confusing.

The final episode of series two gained the largest audience figure for the second run, with an average of seven million people, a 28% audience share, in the overnight ratings. This was despite competition from UEFA Champions League football on ITV1; the audience for Life on Mars rose from 6.6 million for the first half-hour to 7.7 million for the second once the football coverage had ended.

Two days after the final episode's transmission, Life on Mars was attacked in the British press by the National Association of Schoolmasters Union of Women Teachers, who claimed that Gene Hunt's use of homophobic insults in the programme could encourage copycat bullying in schools.[37] The BBC responded to the suggestion by pointing out that Life on Mars was targeted at an adult audience, and that Hunt's characterisation was "extreme and tongue-in-cheek".

Anachronisms

Some minor anachronisms occur in episodes of Life on Mars. Interviews with the creators have shown that at least some of these were unintentional.[38]

The first of these anachronisms was in episode one, occurring after Sam Tyler wakes up in 1973. On a building site for the Mancunian Way, Sam looks at a sign proclaiming the building of a new motorway at the heart of Manchester. In reality, this motorway was completed in 1967. According to Matthew Graham, writing in the Radio Times, this particular anachronism was definitely deliberate. "We knew that this road was built in the 1960s, but we took a bit of artistic licence." [39]

Also in episode one, Sam's Police badge is shown in close up. Although some attempt has been made to remove them to leave a smooth surface, the words "Metropolitan Police" can clearly be seen around the edge of the silver badge and no doubt the symbol in the centre is that of the Metropolitan Police. The Metropolitan Police deal with London rather than Manchester.

In series one there was a reference to "Wednesday the 16th of March 1973", whereas the 16th of March 1973 was actually a Friday.

Another anachronism was Sam's dual-display LCD watch. In 1973 the only widely available digital watches used red light-emitting diodes, which required the press of a button to light them. LCDs did not become common until much later. A watch like Sam's, with both a face and an LCD, would not have been available until the 1980s. In one episode, Sam was treated for cuts with plasters from a modern plastic medical kit rather than a metal style kit of the time.

While Manchester and Salford Police used only Minis as patrol cars in 1973, in the series they have Austin Allegros and those used are from a later series which would not have been available until the late 1970s in any case. Gene Hunt's car was a Mark 3 Ford Cortina badged at the front as a GXL although badged elsewhere as the later 2000E (boot lid and roof pillar). The car's interior was also from the later 2000E as was the Roman Bronze colour scheme (although, it could be the darker "Tawny Metallic" which was available in 1973). Following the conclusion of the series' production, the Cortina was being given away by the Daily Mail in a competition (with the proceeds going to Comic Relief) and has not yet found a new owner. Some of the vehicles, such as the green Transit van UJA 943K, feature new style plastic number plates with condensed lettering, which were introduced in 2001.

In the early 1970s, Manchester Police referred to their senior officers as 'Boss' not 'Guv', which was a term propagated by the Metropolitan Police.

In episode 5 of series 2 there was a scene in which Sam Tyler and Gene Hunt raid a house. Outside in the street was parked a Mini Clubman estate. Whilst these cars were in production in 1973 the colours, either 'Russet brown' or 'Mace', were not introduced until 1976 and 1982 respectively. Also, the Mini features the revised full length double stripe which was also a later addition.

Several episodes include street furniture and other items in the background which while they would not have been present in the 1970s, would also be difficult for a TV show to have removed. Green cable television cabinets, satellite television dishes, 'dome' and regular type CCTV cameras, external air-conditioning units, double-glazed Upvc window frames and mobile phone masts are visible in a number of outdoor scenes. In a number of residential street scenes, it can be seen where burglar alarm boxes have been digitally masked in post-production.[citation needed]

In series two episode 6, much was made of heroin as a 'new drug' on the streets of Manchester. However, heroin use had been widespread in the UK for a long time and was already well-known as a hard drug in the 1960s. In a United Nations Office of Drugs and Crime report called Opioid Users Attending a Special Drug Dependence Clinic 1968-1969 dated January 1st 1971, the following assertion was made: "The rising incidence of heroin misuse among young people led to the Second Interdepartmental Report (1965) which confirmed that the addict be treated under a medical rather than a criminal label." [citation needed] However, heroin use was neither widespread nor common in the North West of England at this time with most use being restricted to London and the West End in particular. Therefore the description of Heroin as a "new drug" in early 1970s Manchester is accurate.

Also in series two episode 6, the character who appears to be the mother of Sam's 21st-century ex-girlfriend Maya is seen having an ultrasound scan of a baby. She explains that she is "only the 17th woman in Manchester to have [a scan]". The scene is inaccurate because the image of the baby on the screen when the nurse/sonographer is clearly moving the probe. It is anachronistic because both the probe and the screen image (with annunciators rendered in a raster character set, for example) are fairly modern.

Two further anachronisms which have occurred in the second series are, firstly, a reference to the Crown Prosecution Service, which did not exist until the 1980s, and Gene Hunt's comment on the "font" of a newspaper headline, the latter an American word which did not become common in the UK until the introduction of WYSIWYG word processors in the 1990s. In 1973, this would have been referred to as a typeface or fount.[citation needed]. However, the word 'font' was in common use in the newspaper industry in the 1960s - it is used in the 1960s film, 'The Day The Earth Caught Fire' by the actor and former editor of the Daily Express, Arthur Christiansen.

In both series the police use Pye Pocketphone PF1 personal radios, these have separate receiver and transmit units but only the transmitter unit is seen with the characters apparently receiving signals on it.

Telephones used in the series, whilst being of standard Post Office issue of the time, had an American-style long ring instead of the usual British-style double ring. However, the writers have stated that this was intended to echo the sound of the studio telephone faintly audible at the end of David Bowie's Life on Mars.

Overseas sales

Between July 24, 2006 and September 11, 2006, the first series aired in the US on BBC America,[40] to favourable critical reviews.[41] The American version is edited for the insertion of commercials and omits some nudity and language that is present in the original BBC One version.

Life on Mars also began airing on BBC Canada on September 13, 2006, followed in November by broadcasts on the Canadian network Showcase. While not edited for nudity or language specifically, the Canadian broadcasts of series one episodes were slightly edited for commercials (Showcase premiered the episodes in a 75-minute slot (one hour plus commercials), then repeated them in a 60-minute timeslot). BBC Canada then started running series two uncut on February 28, 2007.

On January 14, 2007 the series started to air in Sweden, broadcast by SVT 2. SVT was given the cut version intended for BBC America, angering fans of the series.[42] SVT later stated that they had been given the cut-down version due to the fact that the BBC had not cleared all the music rights internationally.[43] On January 7, 2007 the series began in the Netherlands, shown by NPS on Nederland 3.

In Germany, private network station Kabel 1 aired the first season of the show from 3 February 2007 to 25 February 2007 with two episodes being broadcast each Saturday evening in prime time. The series is subtitled "Gefangen in den 70ern" ("Trapped in the 70s"). For the first airing assorted scenes of varying importance for the plot were edited out to make room for commercials and severe translation errors occurred. A voice-over in the final scene of series one announced that series two will be shown in autumn 2007.

In New Zealand the series started with a double bill of episodes 1 and 2, shown on February 20, 2007 by TVNZ on TV ONE. There, the website stuff.co.nz described it as "sensationally well-made".

In France, private network station 13ème rue aired the first season of the show from March 20, 2007 to April 10, 2007 with two episodes being broadcast each Tuesday evening in prime time.

In Israel the cable network Hot aired the first series in 2006, with the intention to air the second starting in June 2007.

LIGHTS OUT

Anthology series which specialised in science fiction stories.

In 1946, NBC brought Lights Out to TV in a series of four specials, broadcast live and produced by Fred Coe, who also contributed three of the scripts. NBC asked Cooper to write the script for the premiere, "First Person Singular," which is told entirely from the point-of-view of an unseen murderer who kills his obnoxious wife and winds up being executed. Variety gave this first episode a rave review ("undoubtedly one of the best dramatic shows yet seen on a television screen"), but Lights Out did not become a regular NBC TV series until 1949.

Coe initially produced this second series, but for much of its run, the live 1949-1952 Lights Out TV series was sponsored by Admiral (makers of television sets and refrigerators), produced by Herbert Bayard Swope, Jr., directed by Laurence Schwab, Jr., and hosted by Frank Gallop. Critics were not always kind, but the program drew huge ratings until competition from the massively popular sitcom I Love Lucy helped to kill it off.

In 1972, NBC aired yet another TV incarnation of Lights Out, a pilot episode which was not well received. In fact, Oboler (who was then syndicating his The Devil and Mr. O radio show) made a point of announcing publicly that he had nothing to do with it.

Four episodes were broadcast on NBC local station WNBT-TV in New York between June and October 1946. The show was picked up by NBC for national broadcasting in 1949.

One of the 1946 WNBT episodes, "Something in the Wind", was restaged during the 1949 season.

Adapted from a radio thriller series of the same name.

The titles of the WNBT episodes were: "First Person Singular" (tx 30/06/46), "Something in the Wind" (tx 11/08/46), "DeMortius" (tx 1/09/46), and "The Brave Man with a Cord" (tx 13/10/46).

The Lights Out television episode "The Martian Eyes" starred Burgess Meredith as a man whose glasses enable him to see Martian invaders who have disguised themselves as normal people. A similar premise in John Carpenter's 1988 film They Live was adapted from the story by Ray Nelson, who reworked the idea from his friend Philip K. Dick's never-produced film treatment for an episode of The Invaders TV series.

LIONMARU

AKA: STORM CLOUD LION MARU

AKA: KAIKETSU LIONMARU

AKA: SWIFT HERO LIONMARU

Ninja warrior Shishimaru (Ushio), his pretty female assistant Kazumi (Kujo), and token child Kosuke (Umechi) wander samurai-era Japan, defending inhabitants from monsters sent by Devil Gosun (Kobayashi), an evil mastermind determined to seize control of the world. Shishimaru has numerous items of Ninja gear to help him, including a magic sword that allows him to transform into Lionmaru (Kamoshida), a franky ridiculous stuffed animal costume involving a red suit, dark cloak, and a huge lion's head.

Meanwhile, Kosuke brings up the rear with a bag of explosives and a flute that transforms into a blow pipe, which he can use to summon Hikarimaru, the team's Pegasus (of if you prefer, a mystified and slightly bored horse, to which someone in the props department has glued some wings). The result is an intensely enjoyable festival of camp martial arts action, which reaches new heights at the serial's mid-point arrival of Tora Jonosuke (Tonohrio), aka Tiger Joe, Lionmaru's eyepatch wearing, transforming tiger nemesis - compare to another one-eye warrior in THE YAGYU CONSPIRACY.

Plot #2

Three people, a young man (Shishimaru), a young woman (Kazumi) and a young boy (Kosuke) travel around saving people from the evil Devil Gohsun. Each is armed with a sword or large knife. Shishimaru (Ushio, Tetsuya) also has a second, magical sword which transforms him into Kaiketsu Lion Maru. Kazumi is very dextrous, sometimes taking an enemy's sword and fighting two handed using her own sword and his. Kosuke carries a supply of black powder which he uses to produce small bombs. He also owns a magical flute the sound of which summons Hikarimaru, a white pegasus (winged horse). The flute can also be used like a blowgun. Lion Maru fights the evil group, Gosun. After slicing the monster Lion Maru draws his hand down the backside of his sword, when he does this the monster explodes. He also has the power to make the wind blow against the monsters (Ninpou Hurricane) and to heat his sword.

In episode 8 the leader of Gosun makes a monster out of water and charges it with the task of killing Lion Maru. This creature takes charge of the other monsters, instructing them in how to kill Lion Maru.

Based on an idea by SPECTREMAN creator Soji Ushio with Takanobu Bessho. Insane, but in a good way, Jonosuke actor Koji Tonohiro dies in an accident at a location hotel, and was replaced from episode 42 by Yoshitaka Fukushima. The original 54 episode run was renewed for a shorter second season, retitled Fu-Un Lionmaru (Wind Cloud Lionmaru), easily distinguished by the colour of Lionmaru's fur - it's white in season one and brown-gold in season two. Theme: Yuki Hide - "Let's Go, Lionmaru."

Produced by Tomio Washizu, Shigeru Shinohara, Takanobu Bessho.

Full dates for the series were Sat 1 April 1972 - 4th April 1973 (Season 1) and 14th April 1973 - 29 September 1973 (Season 2). A US video release of Lionmaru was entitled Magic of the Ninja.

Kaiketsu Lion Maru (Swift Hero Lion Maru) is set in the time of the samurai. Such programs were common in Japan at the same time as westerns were popular in the USA.

Kaiketsu Lion Maru's most dangerous enemy was a rival warrior who was given a magical sword that transformed him into Tiger Jou (episodes 27-??).

"Wind, Light, Ninja Skill, Lion-Transform!"

The opening theme song "Oh Wind And Light" was recorded by Hide, Yuki (best known for opening and ending themes to Jinzo Ningen Kikaida) and Young Fresh. Hide, Yuki died in January of 1999. The ending theme "Come Along Lion Maru" was recorded by Young Fresh.

There was a sequel to Kaiketsu Lion Maru, Fuun Lion Maru (April 14, 1973 - September 29, 1973, 25 episodes). Fuun Lion Maru's rival was Black Jaguar.

P-Productions also produced "Magma Taishi" [Ambassador Magma] (1966-1967), "Kaiju Ouji" [Monster Prince] (1967), "Supekutoruman" [Spectreman] (1971-1972), "Tetsujin Taiga 7" [Ironman Tiger 7] (1973-1974) and "Denjin Zabôgâ" [Electroid Zabôgâ] (1974-1975), all of which were set in modern times.

LION-MARU G

This series follows the story of the reincarnated Lion-Maruk and Tiger Joe from the original Kaiketsu Lion-Maruk. The story is set in the year 2011 in Neo-Kabukichō, a fictitious version of the real red light district of Shinjuku, Tokyo.

Lion-Maruk G is a Japanese tokusatsu series that began airing from 2006-10-01 to 2006-11-24 in Japan, lasting 13 episodes. It is the third part in the Lion-Maruk trilogy, following Kaiketsu Lion-Maruk and Fuun Lion-Maruk. "G" is short for ghetto.

Characters

Shishimaru

Shishimaru is the reincarnation of the original Lion-Maruk and the third human to use the power of Lion-Maruk. This version of Shishimaru is very different from the original, he is not as serious as his former self. More of a "happy-go-lucky" person, he acts wild and crazy, hits on girls and generally leads a very different lifestyle. He is a bit of a coward, as seen in episode one, he only unsheathes the Kinsachi (the sword that allows him to transform into Lion-Maruk) as a final act of desperation. He owns a modified Suzuki Burgman that he calls "Hikarimaru."

Jonosuke

Jonosuke is the reincarnation of the original Tiger Joe. Not much is known about him yet, but he remains somewhat like his former self. He is still very much the "rival" type character of the series and acts cold towards other people. Transforms with the mysterious sword Ginsachi. Dies in a final battle and he is a father of Saori's child.

Saori

Saori is a mizu shobai girl who works in Neo-Kabukichō. She is very similar to the original Kasumi. She helps the new Lion-Maruk. Ended a nun and she is a pregnant a Jonosuke's child

Kosu K

Kosu K is a 14 year old girl, and Saori's younger sister. Her real name is Kaori. She is the counterpart to Kosuke from the original series. Oddly enough, in the original series, Kosuke was the 8 year old brother of Kasumi.

Kashinkoji

Kashinkoji is an old homeless man who gives Shishimaru the Kinsachi, the sword that allows him to transform into Lion-Maruk. He seems to know a lot about how the Lion-Maruk powers work.

Junior

Junior is the Junior CEO of the Gousan Enterprises, to which Shishimaru owes money. His real name is still unknown. He is a hardcore cosplayer and seems that all his costumes are hand-made by himself. Calls Gousan "Papa" but it's unknown if there's any relation.

Gousan

Gousan is the boss of Gousan Enterprises. He creates the Skull Eyes, red contact lenses with strange powers. He seems to know a lot about Kinsachi and Ginsachi. Gousan is a similar name to the original Gosun.

Music

Opening Theme

"Oh Wind, Oh Light" by Akira Kushida

Closing Themes

LITTLE GREEN PLANET SHOW

Puppet series about creatures from the planet Zeues.

This was another cheap puppet show which this time was produced by the BBC and shown on BBC 1 in the 3.55pm slot. It basically followed a bunch of hand puppets from another planet, a very poor series.

LOGAN'S RUN

Set in the 23rd Century some 200 years after a nuclear holocaust, the series depicted a world of packet civilisations - each an isolated law unto itself, with its inhabitants largely unaware of the alternatives. One of these closed societies is the city of Domes, a precisely programmed world where population control is achieved by people voluntarily submitting to a youthful euthanasia.

On their 30th birthday - known as last day - all inhabitants undergo the spectacular extermination ceremony of Carouse. Those who refuse and opt to run from the city are hunted and killed by Sandmen, the Doomed City's elite police.

Logan is a Sandman who is persuaded by Jessica, a member of the underground, to run with her in search of a mythical place in the outside world, known as Sanctuary, where people can grow old gracefully. On the run (on a dinky little hovercraft) they encounter other groups and societies - some friendly, some threatening. But always their goal remains Sanctuary where they hope to find other runners and , ultimately return to the Domed City to disprove the institution of Carousel. Early on, they stumble upon a mountain city where they meet Rem, an android who becomes their trusted companion.

The trio are relentlessly persuade by Sandmen, led by Logon's one time partner and best friend Francis who has been promised a life beyond 30 as a city elder if he can bring back the fugitives.

In 1976, MGM asked you to run with Logan (Michael York) and his companion, Jessica (Jenny Agutter), in theaters. In the fall of 1977, they asked you to follow them on television. There would have been no series without the feature, and no feature without the controversial 1967 science fiction novel by William F. Nolan and George Clayton Johnson. The premise of Logan's Run has changed with each incarnation. In the novel, a fledging, futuristic society inside a large complex of domes is unaware of the existence of an outside world. No one in this society lives beyond 21; at that age, in a society-enforced population control device called Lastday, citizens engage in "life renewal," which is in truth voluntary death. Logan is a Sandman, a member of the police force that tracks down Lastday escapees, who are called runners. Logan is drawn into becoming a runner himself. He and companion Jessica escape from the domes to seek a haven for runners called Sanctuary. Another Sandman, Francis, is in pursuit.

In the film, for casting purposes, life ended at 30 instead of 21. Sanctuary was no longer an abandoned space station circling Mars, as in the novel; in the film, Sanctuary is never found. The film kept the basic society structure and several of the characters, but incorporated these into a different adventure for cinematic spectacle. Richard Jordan starred as the nemesis Sandman, Francis, while Peter Ustinov was a frail old man found among the ruins of Washington, D.C. (the character named Ballard in the novel). In the film, Logan and Jessica persuade the old man to return with them to the city of domes to prove that old age exists-that is, that life need not end at 30. In the end, the city of domes self-destructs, and life begins anew on the outside.

To help market the film, the novel was reprinted and has since gone through many printings. Nolan's two sequel novels, Logan's World and Logan's Search, have also been published. MGM released a soundtrack album of the film by composer Jerry Goldsmith, and the film also won an Oscar for best visual effects.

To adapt Logan's Run for television, producers Ivan Goff and Ben Roberts had to make changes to the premise. First, they recast the roles of Logan and Jessica (keeping the age limit of 30 years), which went to Gregory Harrison and Heather Menzies, with Randy Powell as the pursuing Francis. An original element, the Council of Elders, was added to explain who was running the society. (The council ordered Francis to retrieve Logan and his companion.) Next, the producers added an android named REM (the abbreviation for rapid eye movement, a phase of sleep), played by Donald Moffat, who accompanied them in an appropriated hovercraft in their search for Sanctuary. The resulting formula of the show was that Logan, Jessica and REM traveled across the post-nuclear holocaust Earth in search of a haven, encountering aliens, hunters, other Sandmen, ghosts, time travelers, and robots along the way. Francis, who traveled with a cohort of Sandmen, occasionally hampered their goals.

Gregory Harrison, star of Logan's Run, emphasizes that the notion of death at a young age "was a very popular concept at the time. Being over the age of 30 wasn't anything worth living; let's do those people in and start somebody over. There was a movie a few years before that called Wild in the Streets [1968] with Christopher Jones where these 20- to 25-year-old, young revolutionaries take over the government of the United States. It was the first major entertainment piece that perpetuated the idea that younger than 30 was the only valid age to be. And this is sort of the science fiction version of that concept.

"I remember sitting in the theatre at the Cinerama dome a year before the series, watching Logan's Run with Michael York, being absolutely fascinated. I've always been a huge science fiction fan, and watching the feature, I was thinking, 'This is wonderful, I love this,' but never imagining that I was going to be playing that part and wearing that costume and using the same gun. A lot of the stuff we used came directly from the feature. It was quite a thrill when I got cast and screen tested."

Playing the lead in a prime-time hour television series can be a heady experience for an actor, especially when it's his first time, and the circumstances of Logan's Run made it all the more exciting. The show was constantly on the road filming at various locations in Southern California, and because it was science fiction, it involved creating new costumes, sets, and special effects for every episode. Also, with the involvement of MGM, the show drew on an impressive lineage including such science fiction and fantasy works as Forbidden Planet and the Logan's feature.

"At the time we were shooting," says Harrison, "it was pretty high-tech, top of the line in terms of special effects, opticals on film. ... While we were doing it, we were hearing stories about this other science fiction film called Star Wars which we didn't know. It came out after our first season was finished [filming], and it made everything we had done look like the old black-and-white Buck Rogers serials. It sort of made us obsolete almost immediately. Prior to the release of the movie, we thought we were high-end!" Generally, Logan's Run was hampered by a format that encouraged many plots in which the main characters were either being captured, chased, threatened or forced to rescue others. It was a "road show" in a science fiction arena.

"We were always running away from the ugly fate that the Sandmen offered," says Harrison. "And we were looking toward Sanctuary, a place where we could be safe, where we could have a home, raise children. I remember the term 'renewal' was something we played a lot with on the set, because the series was always hoping for renewal. But we were running away from it. What they called 'renewal' was really death. [Renewal was basically turning a slaughterhouse into a religion. Which has been done before-in real life. A lot of the evolution about religion throughout the world has been for the sake of control, to eliminate the chaos that comes without some kind of organized thought pattern."

Speaking of chaos, Harrison offers some recollections of one of his most physically challenging episodes, "Capture." "We shot that in Big Bear Lake, in Southern California. It was a very hectic show, a lot of running over hills, rocks, huge boulders everywhere up there. That show, we had a special effects man who didn't engender a lot of confidence. I remember I was supposed to get shot, [or] somebody was supposed to get shot, in that show. The special effects guy was doing a lot of drinking. I remember saying, 'No, I don't think we should put that squib on the person until we've tested it against the neoprene that will protect it.' So we put the neoprene on the rock and blew up the squib..., and there were pieces of rock that blew up behind it. That was one of my career lessons right there. I was careful enough to suggest a test and the test proved that the guy would have been disembowled had he had the thing on."

Actually, it was earlier in the series that Harrison had an inkling to be more careful when performing stunts. In the pilot, Harrison had to use his weapon to blast a hole in a wall so he could appropriate a hovercraft for travel. Point the gun at the wall and I'll blow the explosives, the special effects man told Harrison. It's simple, he said. Not quite. "The camera was behind me about 10 to 15 feet and I was about 20 feet away from the wall," explains Harrison. "The special effects guy-I think it was the same guy-said, 'OK, this is going to explode, not implode, so you can stand two feet from this wall and when we blow it, it's going to all blow in the other direction."

"I said, 'OK.' So I walk up to about 15 feet away from this wall, aim my gun-the camera is shooting over my shoulder-and fire. He pushes the button off camera, and the wall blows up entirely towards me and knocks me back, knocks the camera, and holes burn through my black outfit. I'm sure it's the same special effects guy, which is why I didn't trust him when he said, 'Yeah, you can hold this squib.' I don't think he stayed in the business for too long after that ", laughs Harrison. The wall was rebuilt, the scene reshot, and the resulting film was shown under the main titles for every episode.

Other location memories included one fateful day that could have killed Harrison and ended the show on the spot. "I did a scene once where I was captured by a bunch of guys in white and they're riding on white horses," says Harrison, referring to the episode "Turnabout." "I think we shot up at Malibu Canyon. We're crossing far away from the camera. We're just slowly going along. While we're filming-this isn't in the show-my horse stepped on a squirrel hole that had become a beehive. And bees attacked. They came furiously out of this hole, and attacked my horse and me. There were hundreds of bees attached to my black wool Sandman outfit, pumping away, trying to get their stingers through there, and I ended up with 17 bee stings. Three or four in my head and hair and face, and several of them got through areas like elbows, knees, under my arms. I couldn't work for the rest of the day. I went into this sort of semi-coma for the day, as a reaction to the stings. Fortunately I wasn't allergic, or I would have died! It scared the hell out of everyone, and they shut down for the day, and the next day my ankle is the size of my thighs! It was so swollen up from the bee stings. All my blood had settled into my legs. For days I was miserable from all these bee stings, but we kept shooting. That was an interesting day."

As the show progressed, Harrison's life did not become any easier. "I remember one weekend," he says, "we were shooting a scene, crossing the desert. We were shooting up at Lancaster, the upper desert outside of Southern California. I went away for the weekend, they put us up at a hotel for each night. When I came back to my apartment, as I drove up there, the building is no longer there! It had burned to the ground!" Harrison laughs. "I lost everything I had owned in my apartment. I had only what I was carrying with me in the car. It was actually a blessing because my girlfriend and I were together for about six years at the time, we were in a miserable breakup mode for about a year and were trying to figure out how to divide up our stuff. We were still living there only because we didn't know who deserved to keep what. So, essentially, this ended that failed romance and there was no question anymore who kept what-there was nothing to keep."

Playing Logan was fun for Harrison, but he does not recall any particular contributions he might have made to the character. This was his first leading role in a prime-time TV series, so his agenda was to be quiet and learn as much as he could. "I was developing opinions at that time," says Harrison. "I ended up working such tremendous hours on that show, I had walking pneumonia for the last six weeks of the season. Working 10 to 13 hours a day, every day, falling over on the weekend. There was no break for me. It was relentless. I recall it mostly being [more] a survival effort than an artistic effort for me. I did learn a lot about how television works-scheduling, technique, acting for camera, hitting marks, lines. It was basically my [film] school in that series."

In the television incarnation of Logan's Run, Logan and Jessica were not the lovers they were in the book and film. Only twice in the series did they kiss-and one of those kisses came when Jessica was trying to seduce an amnesiastricken Logan (in the episode "Carousel") so he would escape with her from the city of domes a second time.

"Well, that's the problem of television, especially in that era: No one believed you can have a leading man and woman in an ongoing series always stopping to do some hanky-panky and start running again " explains Harrison. "That was something reserved for a feature. They felt it would eliminate a good portion of the bible belt who would be offended by that concept. The problem with television in general, which I'm all too familiar with after five different series, is that they try to do the impossible. Trying to please everybody all the time, and offend no one. And you end up with such milk-processed kinds of plots and characters that nothing really gets said or accomplished, I feel, artistically or dramatically, because you're so afraid of offending someone about something. You have to homogenize everything so much to be inoffensive to all parties that you end up impressing no one or moving them emotionally: You've homogenized all the flavor out of it."

Working with co-star Heather Menzies was a delight for Harrison, and to this day, they remain close friends. "She had just married Robert Urich at that time," recalls Harrison. "They didn't have any children at the time, and now I think they have three children. One of them is 17 years old. I saw him the other day and I just had a heart attack, I couldn't believe it was that long since we had worked together. She is a wonderful woman and, I thought, a talented actress. But she pretty much finished her career with [Logan's Run] and opted for motherhood and wifedom and I think is very happily now living with Bob in Utah."

When asked for anecdotes of their working relationship, Harrison responds, "I remember Heather was always in this skimpy little pink outfit, she never wore a bra and you could always see her boobs underneath there and when it was cold, boy, you could tell! I was always wearing long-sleeved, wool with leather and a turtleneck. Shooting in the desert, Heather was just comfy as can be, and I was miserable. I would drink two gallons of water a day and be sweating like crazy all day long in 90 to 95 degree weather. When winter came around, Heather was always freezing and I was always just great. We were opposing seasons, Heather and I."

REM was something of a magical character. His mastery of technological equipment helped the three escape from a number of binds during their travels. Harrison enjoyed working with the actor who played REM- "Donald is a wonderful, talented actor who's gone on to do some wonderful things since then"-but he confesses he never was pleased with how the character was used.

"The android character was sort of a cheat for the writers to not have to deal with the human limitation that I think makes drama so compelling. Here's an android that solves things when you get into a dilemma that the writers don't know how to get you out of. The android always comes up with a solution because he wasn't limited by human frailties. ... That's probably my biggest gripe with the series right from the beginning. They always had that option available and unfortunately used it too often, instead of really challenging themselves to write the kind of stories ... where human beings with human frailties would have to find the means of survival on their own. And therefore make it something more relatable to present day. It was too much science, not enough human element. [The writers should have tried] to use human intellect and human emotion ... [not only as the] sentimental side of the story but survival side of the story."

D.C. Fontana, a Star Trek staff veteran who signed on as story editor agrees with Harrison's assessment of how REM was used. "Too many times REM (wonderfully acted by Donald Moffat, by the way) dominated a storyline or saved Logan and Jessica when, by all rights, they should have been saving themselves. REM had too many answers too often. Logan and Jessica should have been discovering answers for themselves."

But Fontana emphasizes that this is not commentary on the actors, who, she says, were all excellent in their roles. "It's merely an element in some scripts that I personally felt shouldn't have been there." Concerning what else worked and didn't work on the show, Fontana says, "In my opinion, an important piece of the puzzle as to why Francis kept hunting Logan and Jessica was filled in, in the pilot, when he met the Council of Elders who really ruled the city and was promised that he, too, would live a long life if he captured runners and brought them back for punishment. This gave Francis a strong self-interest in continuing the pursuit at all costs. What became difficult to explain is how many of the other Sandmen Francis (or the Council) had to bring into the secret in order to get them to keep on going on the outside after the runners. (And how did Francis and the other Sandmen get all that equipment to keep on following as Logan and Jessica and REM progressed further away?)

"We had to work on the assumption that by necessity, a certain number of very dedicated Sandmen could be brought into at least partial knowledge of what was going on and that they, too, would be rewarded."

Working on Logan's Run gave Fontana some frustration. She and producer Leonard Katzman were hired on the show for their knowledge of the genre. Executive producers Ivan Goff and Ben Roberts publicly admitted they were novices in this area. So it was difficult for Fontana when her comments, along with Katzman's, were often ignored when it came to areas of science fiction. Goff and Roberts, says Fontana, were the ones who "ran scripts through the typewriter one last time. Frequently script and character emphasis was changed over our protests," she laments. "They were also the ones so in love with their character REM that at times the series threatened to be REM's Run, not Logan's Run. Unfortunately they were the ones with the final approvals."

Picking favorite episodes, Fontana cites her script "Carousel," because "Logan and Jessica were finally brought back to the city, and there was a strong hint of a much more important relationship between them." Fontana also liked "Futurepast," Katharyn Powers' love story between REM and a female android (played by Mariette Hartley).

Donald Moffat confesses that he remembers precious little of the show, adding, "I wasn't sorry when it was over. I got the part of REM the usual way-by auditioning for it-and I had some input as to what he looked like, etc. The open panel [on REM's body] with the wiring visible was my idea, and of course, his personality was mine. But actors, by and large, don't have much say in a thing-until it becomes a big success, and then they often have too much." Moffat got along well with his co-stars and muses the show's budget may have been too much for the network, noting that the special effects were very time-consuming.

Viewers might notice that occasionally, Star Trek sound effects were used whenever computer equipment processed data. This borrowing was only one of many practical distractions for discerning viewers. What about Logan's weapon, which has a number of settings like "blaster" and "stun" for freezing targets into stasis, yet never seems to run out of energy?

"There were a lot of questions like that. How come the vehicle bounced on a rock when it was supposed to be a hovercraft?" quips Gregory Harrison. "Lots of questions!" The show remains popular via Turner network reruns, and Harrison reports that people still speak to him about the show today, particularly children. He himself remembers the series fondly, if modestly. "I was just an actor looking for a steady job, and was thrilled that I was doing science fiction. It was a venue I appreciated and enjoyed. I was glad to have my own series ... and I knew my career was going the right direction. I feel we have an A for effort and C for the show itself, for how it succeeded."

CAST NOTES

Gregory Harrison (Logan 5): Born 1950. Harrison co-starred for seven years (1979-86) in the popular Trapper John M.D. series as Gonzo Gates. His most recent series is The Family Man. His TV movies include For Ladies Only (1981), Breaking the Silence (1992) with Stephanie Zimbalist and Duplicates (USA Cable) with Cicely Tyson and Kevin McCarthy shot in Oregon. With his production company, Catalina Production Group, Ltd., he's hosted True Detectives for CBS (1992).

Heather Menzies (Jessica 6): Born 1949. This Canadian-born actress played one of the Von Trapp children in the film Sound of Music (1965). She is married to actor Robert Urich. Before retiring from acting to raise a family, she appeared in The Six Million Dollar Man, the TV pilot Captain America, and Urich's series Uegas and American Dreamer.

Randy Powell (Francis): Born 1950. Powell appeared in Dallas in the early 1980s and, according to Gregory Harrison, has since moved to New Zealand.

Donald Moffat (REM): Born 1930 in Plymouth, England. Moffat's most recent work includes supporting roles in Popeye (1980) and John Carpenter's remake of The Thing (1982), as well as various TV movies and features.

The series based on a novel by William F. Nolan and a 1976 feature film of the same name, was brought to television by Ivan Goff and Ben Roberts (whose track record included Charlie's Angels), and described as human drama projected into the future. 'Psychologically', said Goff, 'Logan and Jessica face the same concerns that baffled Adam and Eve'.

In the end, despite some enjoyable sequences, Logan's Run was a fairly antiseptic series, aimed firmly at the family audience. The relationship between Logan and Jessica was more like brother and sister than Adam and Eve, despite the wipsy little mini dress Jessica always wore, and the whimsical Rem was the only character with a sense of humour.

Many guest stars famous for other SF role had guest starred in the show including, Angela Cartwright (LOST IN SPACE, in 'The Collectors'), Kim Cattrall (OP CENTRE, WILD PALMS & ROBIN COOK'S INVASION in 'Half-life'), Jared Martin (WAR OF THE WORLDS, in 'Fear Factor' and Nicholas Hammond (THE AMAZING SPIDERMAN, in 'Judas Goat').

The chase was thus on with Logan's Run becoming little more than a futuristic version of The Fugitive. In each episode Logan, Jessica and Rem, would encounter a new society and get embroiled with problems there. By the time the problems were solved they would have to leave in order to avoid capture by the pursuing Francis.

ITV screened the series in Britain, starting in the Midlands (Central) in January 1978, with other areas a few weeks behind. The series was aired on CBS in the US in September 1977, its short run finished in January 1978 with three episodes not broadcast, which were Night Visitors, Turnabout and Stargate.

The series was based on a novel by William F. Nolan & George Clayton Johnson. Executive producers were Ivan Goff & Ben Roberts, producer was Leonard Katzman, the story editor was D.C. Fontana. The series was broadcast on Central on the 7th January - 2nd April 1978. The character of Rem was originally called Omo, until the American producers discovered that the UK had a detergent with the same name! It was brought to TV by Ivan Goff and Ben Roberts, who were also responsible for Charlie's Angels and the story editor was D.C. Fontana, well known for her work on STAR TREK. The series came to Britain in 1978, but was cancelled mid-season and only notched up 13 episodes.

Although the 1976 Logan's Run feature film was a classic example of how not to make a Science Fiction film, the premise of William F Nolan's 1967 book was ide-ally suited to the ever-popular wanderers/ on-the-run genre popularised by The Fugitive in the 1960s, and followed by such series as The Invaders, Planet of the Apes, and Werewolf. If the film sits in SF cinema's chronology awkwardly the series was exactly what TV executives were looking for in the late '70s, with another anti-violence crusade terrorising the industry, and the networks struggling to come up with 'kidult' concepts for early evening prime-time.

In this respect, Logan's Run was typical 1970s SF tv - bland but watchable, safe and unsophisticated candyfloss in the tradition of other late '70s Fantasy shows such as Wonder Woman, Hulk, and of course, Fantastic Journey, which had preceded Logan's Run the season before, and was produced by the same man - Leonard Katzman, nephew of low-budget serials king Sam Katzman (Superman, Batman, etc), and later the producer of super-soap Dallas.

Much stock footage from the film was employed in the series, particularly of the Dome City and the Carousel. The film and the series' pilot were filmed in the futuristic-looking city of Dallas. Visually, the show was slickly produced and photo-graphed, but the too-perfect appearances of the cast (all of whom could have passed for androids) and the costumes and set designs had not moved on far from the days of Flash Gordon. Executive producers on the show were Ivan Goff and Ben Roberts, who had given the world Charlie's Angels...

Starring as Logan was Gregory Harrison, who later went on to the more successful medical series Trapper

LOIS AND CLARK

AKA: THE NEW ADVENTURES OF SUPERMAN

Anyone who thought the Superman legend was just about played out in films and TV had a pleasant surprise when this new version breezed in. These New Adventures had looked for a new angle - and found one with a fresh combination of wit, fun, sophisticated banter and a lightness of touch that mostly eluded its predecessors. Superman can still bend steel with his bare hands and fly around the world in seconds, but he's become a super-hero for the Nineties. And his alter-ego, Clark Kent, is a New Man, too, less of a klutz and more a simple upright guy.

You still have to strain credibility to wonder how a pair of glasses can blind a bright girl like Lois Lane to the obvious similarities between Clark and Superman - but then that's an accepted part of the myth, so why worry now. Lois and Clark are still writing for the Daily Planet in Metropolis and gruff Perry White is still editor. Jimmy Olsen is still seeking a chance to prove himself, but here come the twists. Also on staff is a man-eating, tart-with-a-heart gossip writer, Cat Grant, who actually finds Clark attractive, and in this series' version of Lex Luthor we've got a villain who's as charming as he is wicked - and he's got hair. Plus, with Superman reluctant to 'commit' to Lois, this Lex nearly gets the girl.

This is a very modest Superman - in the pilot he doesn't assume his heroic guise in an arctic fortress, he has his adopted mum, Martha Kent, run up a natty red, blue and yellow number on the family sewing machine, fussing over the colours and emblem, as he tries it on in front of the mirror.

This show was both a major hit in the US and in Britain, but tepered off in the fourth season after it was decided to marry Lois and Clark, the shows creator left the show and falling ratings meant that at the end of the fourth season the show was cancelled. Tracy Scoggins who played Cat in the first season also guest starred in HIGHLANDER and was a regular cast member on the SF show BABYLON 5.

This is the third live-action tv spin-off from the comic SUPERMAN, the first being The Adventures of Superman (1953-7), and the second being SUPERBOY (1988-91). This is not a particularly revisionist version except perhaps for Superman's outfit being made by his mother. In a formulaic manner each week sees Superman battling against a villain (often a superscientist of some sort), and normally an SF element such as invisibility or a cyborg criminal. The main ongoing suspense is provided, traditionally enough, by the never quite consummated love triangle between Clark Kent, Lois Lane (Hatcher is beautiful but waspish) and Clark's alter ego Superman. The series, which appears slanted towards a teenage audience, has enjoyed success in the ratings, and in the US was screened on the ABC network.

Production values are high - though not in the movies' league - and the flying sequences are excellently realised. Actor Dean Cain still has to look the part in a wire harness, but many of the effects are computer-generated. Cain and Teri Hatcher, who plays Lois, also make a presentable pair. Cain had already won teen fans as Shannen Doherty's fleeting love interest in Beverly Hills 90210, while Teri Hatcher had several minor roles, most notably in the film Soapdish. And John Shea, who'd played Bobby Kennedy in Kennedy, gave Lex Luthor something he's never had before - sex appeal.

Lois & Clark brought BBC1 ratings of around eight million - good business for the competitive early Saturday evening slot - so much so that having originally intended to hold back half the first season episodes for later, they instead pressed ahead with the full first year run.

Season Two introduced some cast changes-John Shea was seen only occasionally as Luthor, Jimmy Olsen got a new face. and Tracy Scoggins left - and it turned up the heat on Lois and Clark's romance to the point where in the last episode Clark proposed. Viewers had to wait until the start of Season Three for Lois' answer - and then we had the wedding that never was, with a clone storyline that left fans wondering whether they'd have to go through it all over again, plus a cliff-hanger that had Superman zipping off to New Krypton! Season Four promised finally to get the lovers to the altar, and there were hints of a season-ending pregnancy, which never happened. In fact the very reason that the couple did tie the knot in season four, caused the massive ratings slide, and a promised fifth season did not occur. Warner Brothers were obliged to make a fifth season but after negotiating with the other companies who created the show, they managed to strike a deal and get the show cancelled.

Perhaps it was best that they did, since the show was becoming a mere shadow of its former self, and trying to make a fifth season without the co-operation of a major broadcaster would have made the chances for success very slim indeed.

UK ratings remained steady, peaking at around 10 million on BBC1, making the series one of our most successful sci-fi imports. Sky One began repeats of the first three seasons in September 1996, prior to getting in first with Season Four from December. "I wanted it to be a romantic comedy with family values, rather than action-packed like the movies.", Deborah Joy LeVine (series creator)

The series was based on the DC Comics character which was created by Jerry Siegel and Joe Shuster. The producers for the show were Chris Long, Grant Rosenberg, Jim Michaels, Philip J. Sgriccia and Jimmy Simone. The supervising producers were Chris Ruppenthal and John McNamara. The executive producers were Deborah Jay Levine, Robert Bulter, David Jacobs, Robert Singer, Jim Crocker, Randall Zisk (Season Two), Eugenie Ross-Leming and Brad Buckner. The visual effects supervisor was John Sheele and the music was created by Jay Gruska. The series first premiered on the 8th January 1994 in the UK, 10 months after its premiere in the US. The series was shown on BBC1, it has also been seen on Sky One.

This Superman television show features an updated Superman, but not quite the new superman in the DC comics today (in the comics he has long hair, the TV guy is a proper Clark Kent, super reporter). Lois and Clark fight the young Lex Luthor, Jr. who is quite the villain. This show is chock full of Superman funnies, like for instance Clark watches the shadow of Lois as she dresses in the other room, but doesn't use his XRay vision, but then cools the champagne bottle off with a shot of super cold breath.

In that same episode, Lois is confronted with a Lex Luthor, Jr. who has come back from the dead, and seems to be dazzled by his corny "I did it all for you" approach. As if it was believable for even a moment. She actually stands there and has a conversation with the creep. Just doesn't hold up.

But then again, the Superman stunts are movie land wonderful, and the scenery in many cases is superb. In fact if the dialog and scripts matched the scenery, you'd have an emmy for sure. But this vision of the pure Clark, one who is so adept at resisting temptation doesn't ring true, and in light of where the comic books have gone, is about a parallel universe superman. Oh well.

LONE GUNMEN, THE

The Lone Gunmen premiered on FOX in fall 2000. This hugely popular trio of computer-hacking conspiracy freaks break free of The X-Files to spin off into their own series, the brainchild of X-Files creator Chris Carter. After years of playing second fiddle to Special Agents Mulder and Scully on the hit Fox series The X-Files, the hugely popular trio of computer-hacking conspiracy freaks are finally heading out on their own. Never ones to stray far from the center of corporate and government intrigue, the mischievous threesome of Langley, Byers and Frohike play like a misguided Mission Impossible team, embarking on a series of adventures both comic and dramatic that simultaneously highlight their genius and ineptitude. And while their newfound independence inspires them to investigate even the most shadowy of conspiracies, their social skills remain stagnant, which only makes their lives more difficult when they learn that their chief competitor in the 'information business' is a brilliant and beautiful woman.

The Lone Gunmen, a spin-off of the popular series The X-Files, was a television show that aired on FOX, featuring the three characters called The Lone Gunmen. The show first aired in March 2001, and it was cancelled due to a drop in ratings [1]. The last episode aired in June 2001.

Their spin-off series involved investigating mostly corporate crime, aided (and sometimes hindered) by a mysterious thief named Yves Adele Harlow (Zuleikha Robinson). Despite fan loyalty, the show was ultimately cancelled after 12 episodes.

The Lone Gunmen were a trio of fictional characters who had recurring roles on The X-Files and also starred in a short-lived spin-off, also called The Lone Gunmen. The name was derived from the lone gunman theory.

Pilot episode "predicts" 9/11

In a foreshadowing of the September 11, 2001 attacks, subsequent conspiracy theories, and the 2003 invasion of Iraq, the plot of the March 4, 2001 pilot episode of the series depicts a secret U.S. government agency plotting to crash a Boeing 727 headed for Boston into the World Trade Center via remote control for the purpose of increasing the military defense budget and blaming the attack on foreign "tin-pot dictators" who are "begging to be smart-bombed." This episode aired in Australia less than two weeks before the 9/11 attacks, on August 30.

This alone has made the DVD extremely popular for such a short-lived series.

DVD release

Fox Home Entertainment officially released the series (along with the episode of The X-Files entitled Jump the Shark which finishes the cliffhanger that ended The Lone Gunmen as an additional episode) on a three disc Region 1 DVD set on Tuesday March 29, 2005. In the UK it was eventually released on the 31st January 2006

Audio track at the beginning of this episode: "Cross The Line (Featuring Mau)" by Cuba (4AD Label) (also featured in the opening of Jump the Shark)

Described as counterculture patriots, they were ardent conspiracy theorists, government watchdogs, and computer hackers who frequently assisted central X-Files characters Mulder and Scully, though they sometimes had their own adventures. The Lone Gunmen authored a news publication called The Magic Bullet Newsletter, (later renamed The Lone Gunman) of which Mulder was a loyal subscriber. None of them had day jobs; they relied on financial backers who believed in their cause. They shared a loft apartment (where they also worked) and used a 1970 VW Transporter (minibus) to commute.

Unlike The X-Files, whose storylines dealt mainly with supernatural creatures and government alien conspiracies, episodes of The Lone Gunmen generally featured more "plausible" plots, such as cheating husbands, corporate crime, arms-dealers, and escaped Nazis. The show had a very light atmosphere and focused heavily on physical comedy.

The series was filmed in Vancouver, British Columbia, Canada.

Although Scully avoids these guys like a PIII avoids 70ns RAM, or like Beowulf avoids a hot bath, you'll love the weekly madcap hijinks of this zany crew. Stay tuned each week to see the surprise guest stars like the opening episode's appearance of Betty White and Stephen Hawking as late-night drive-thru fast-food workers (did you spot Hawking's "Black Holes Suck" t-shirt???)--you'll larf and larf.

LOS LUCHADORES

Union City is a peaceful metropolis built by world leaders for the good of mankind. But beneath its civilized veneer, lies a festering hotbed of supernatural evil plotting to wreak havoc on civilization. Los Luchadores, a legendary masked fighting force of fearless superheroes whose identity is forever kept secret, must step forth from behind a shroud of mystery to battle an unspeakable evil that threatens to destroy humanity.

A long tradition exists for this type of show in South America and some parts of Asia, this was an attempt to take the wrestling genre of superhero into an American audience, but left kids disinterested and was cancelled after only 16 episodes.

Okay, okay, so it's a dumb kids show. But it's kind of fun. Lobo Fuerte is the world's most stand-up hero, the Dudley Doright of pro wrestling. And everything's Lobo. He hangs out in his HQ, the Lobo Tower. His computer, the Lobotron. His car, the Lobo Ride. It's like Batman only somehow, dumber.

Turbine is his teenage sidekick and boy is this kid short a few brain cells. I guess he's supposed to act like a kid ... he always screws up so that he can learn a valuable life lesson later on. You ask me, a kid this nice and this talented would not also be so thoughtless and careless to screw up in the first place. It's a case of adults trying to write down to the level of kids and aiming way too low ... as with most shows like the Power Rangers. You don't have to condescend this much to make kids understand what's going on. But still, the shows kind of fun.

Maria Valentine is the other sidekick. Don't ask me why the girl has to be stuck in the #3 role. They make it very clear that she's just as capable as the boys yet she is not really part of the team. Any time trouble brews, it's Lobo Fuerte and Turbine to the rescue. Maria helps out on occasion, but as often as not she stays back at the base and watches the whole thing on the crisis monitor. Also, I like the actress a lot but she obviously is not very schooled in stage fighting. When they have her start throwing bad guys around she puts no force into the blows or throws. Her stunt double for the wrestling scenes is okay but she needs to turn it up a notch for her own stuff. I know we are not trying to scare kids or have them try wrestling moves on each other at home, but if you're going to use them in the show anyway what's wrong with making them seem real? Give them some impact ... show the harmful results and maybe kids will be LESS likely to try them at home.

Fourthly on the team is Laurant, the wise older guy who runs the computers back at Lobo Tower. Like all supporting characters he does not have a life, he lives only to serve Lobo & Turbine. Nothing wrong with serving the good cause but this show would have us believe he hangs around the HQ 24-7 waiting for Lobo's call to duty. And this guy is supposed to be from some Carribean locale, I guess? He's got the accent so of course he always hangs out in Hawaiian print shirts. And the Whelp even called him an "islander." Kinda non-PC don'tcha think?

Still, I think these slights are minor and unintentional. I wish they would not stereotype Maria as the "chick" and Laurant as the "island man-servant" so much but I don't think it's done out of gender or racial ignorance so much as sloppy writing. They started the characters with broad character traits and if they filled in more personal and specific traits they would become real characters and not just cookie-cutter cartoon characters ... but they haven't yet.

So why is this fun? It's dumb and it's cheesy. But there are some inspired ideas. I like the idea of pro wrestlers who fight crime in their off-hours. The Bat-Cave-like Lobo Tower is the epitome of superhero cliches and works as much as a parody of comic book heroes as an homage to them. The Whelp is the arch criminal of Union City. A little talking chihuahua right out of the Taco Bell commercials ... what a threatening villain! But the fact that the heroes take him so seriously lends him credibility and makes for a fun setup. It's so cheesy that they can't even make his mouth move like in the Taco Bell spots so they have a metallic cyborg mask over the pooch's head covering his mouth. I wonder what the Humane Society says about that? At first they at least had an indicator light on his collar that lit up in conjunction with his dialogue so it looked like something was happening and not just a voice-over. After the first episode though they ditched it. Now the dog just sits there on pillow looking around the room, trying to figure out what these silly TV show producers are doing while a voice-over rolls past him. It's so cheesy it's inspired.

If this wasn't a show for kids they would probably write the characters a little more depth and it might be an okay show. But it is a show for kids, and it's really pretty dumb. But there are some ideas here that I just love so I will continue to watch it and wait for it to get better ... which it probably won't.

LOST CITY,THE

Boyd is the villainous Zolok, a mad scientist, who from his underground city in deepest Africa dreams of ruling the world. He announces his intentions by causing a world-wide series of electrical storms. Other technological marvels include a rejuvenation ray, a machine that makes giant zombies out of men and a death ray. Richmond is the engineer who tracks the sources of the electrical disturbances and finds Boyd's underground domain.

Starring William 'Stage' Boyd, not to be confused with the William Boyd who assumed the mantle of Hopalong Cassidy, this is perhaps the most melodramatic serial ever. But, if the film remains interesting for its technical inventiveness, its explicit racism - Boyd has a machine that turns blackmen into whitemen and reverses it as a punishment - is unpleasant. The serial was produced by Sherman S. Krellberg, the cinematographer was Roland Price.

While on a trip through Kansas on morning, she is caught in twister and taken away to the land of Oz, where she meets Caleb, a WWII fighter pilot (call sign "Scarecrow") who somehow ended up there during an aerial fight (and believes it to be 1943). Together they end up in an under-water city where they meet Bellaridere, who gives them the task of rescuing Ozma, who has been kidnapped by the Wicked Witch of the West. Journeying through Oz, they encounter the Wheelers, the remains of the Munchkin village and several other familiar Oz locations. Upon finding Ozma in her labyrinth (where she has been enchanted by the WWotW) they come to realise that should they kill the witch, Alex will become the new Wicked Witch. Using the twister to send the Witch far away, they return the now useless Ozma to Bellaridere and realise they are now stuck in Oz.

LOST IN SPACE

In the distant future of 1997 the Earth is becoming overcrowded. It is decided to settle other worlds, with whole families journeying off into settle the new worlds. One of the first families to do was the Robinson Family consisting of father John, mother Maureen, their young adult daughter Judy, teenage daughter Penny and pre teen son Will. Along with pilot Major Donald West, who became Judy's romantic interest, the family set off in their space ship the Jupiter II to a world around Alpha Centauri. As originally conceived the series was to be about the family's survival on their new world, however somewhere along the line it was decided that something was missing. Dr. Zachary Smith and the robot were put into the picture.

Smith at first was an enemy agent (from an unnamed nation) sent on board the Jupiter II to sabotage the mission by programming the family robot to kill them while they were in deep sleep. Smith however becomes trapped on the ship as it launches. He extra weight throws the ship off course and the ship is forced to land on an unknown world. A world which soon became a stopping off point for a variety of aliens.

The original pilot for the series without Dr. Smith and the robot, was expanded into the first five episodes. These early episodes are of much better quality than those that followed. Dr. Smith and the robot are written out of adventures that had been filmed before they were part of the series. However, Dr Smith quickly became the series most popular character. As Smith's popularity rose his character changed. Instead of the evil enemy agent he was to start with he quickly became a cowardly buffoon interested in either finding ways to make himself wealthy or return to Earth. To achieve these ends he would do whatever necessary including selling out the Robinson family. Episodes often centred around Dr. Smith, the robot (whom Smith referred to as the bubble headed booby) and Will, whom was oblivious to Dr. Smith's many faults, getting into some type of trouble only to need rescuing by the rest of the family by episode's end.

The second season featured the Jupiter II leaving the planet the Robinson's had been on only to wind up stranded on another. It also featured the addition of colour and a new camp attitude to the stories a tendency that got worse in the third and final season. The camp attitude was brought about due to the huge success of Batman over on ABC. The third season saw the Jupiter II become space worthy for good. This allowed the Robinson's to visit a wide variety of alien worlds. The third season also saw the addition of a space pod, which was not present during the first two seasons.

The original pilot film of Lost in Space sent a family of explorers into outer space, where they slammed into a meteor shower, crash-landed on a desert planet, and were subsequently doused by a tidal wave, blitzed by a lightning storm, trapped in an ancient city, and attacked by a giant ryclops. Producer-director Irwin Allen felt the $600,000 pilot was some of his best work. He was furious when, during the screening of the pilot by CBS executives in 1964, the brass began laughing hysterically. Allen got up and demanded the film be stopped. Story editor Anthony Wilson pulled Allen back into his chair, explaining that, laughter or not, the executives were enjoying the film. Wilson was correct, because the pilot immediately sold to CBS. This original pilot, which wasn't aired until 1993 on the Science Fiction cable channel, was a space-age version of Johann Wyss's Swiss Family Robinson. The idea was to call the series The Space Family Robinson. Legalities forced Allen to retitle his series Lost in Space.

Missing from the 1964 pilot were two characters who would be key to the series: the family robot, and a villainous stowaway, Dr. Zachary Smith. Wilson suggested adding Dr. Smith as a foil for the family. A new pilot, directed by Tony Leader, was filmed in 1965 with the addition of Smith, an enemy agent who programs the robot to destroy the ship en route to Alpha Centauri. When Smith gets trapped aboard the Jupiter 2, he has to awaken the Robinson family from their state of suspended animation to save himself. The character of Dr. Smith was originally intended as an evil spy. In Shimon Wincelberg's original script, Smith displays his cruelty by conning a young girl to walk into a forcefield, where she's incinerated. He later poisons a security guard with his deadly ring. CBS, feeling the show would be aimed at a family audience, had this violence cut from the script. Nevertheless, Dr. Smith, for the first few episodes of the series, was an evil villain who tried to kill the Robinsons.

Actors Roger C. Carmel, Jack Elam and Carroll O'Connor were considered for the role, but Broadway actor Jonathan Harris was finally selected. As the first season progressed, the hard edge of Dr. Smith faded, and Harris imbued the character with a bumbling, comical nature. Soon Dr. Smith became more of a scaredy-cat than a killer.

As Jonathan Harris explained it at a Boston convention in 1990, "I knew the Dr. Smith character better than any other writer because I created him. Irwin wanted a deep, dark villain, but there's no longevity in that kind of villain. He's boring." Dr. Smith became the series' most popular character. Harris received thousands of letters per week, most of them from children. This didn't surprise Harris, who admitted at the time, "I based Dr. Smith on every kid I have ever known."

The other big draw of Lost in Space was the special effects. However, once the Robinsons crash-landed on a desolate planet in the third episode, CBS and Twentieth Century-Fox marooned them there so that visual effects could be used sparingly. The series retained the most impressive hardware ever put on the television screen. In addition to the spaceship, which cost $350,000 to build, there was a futuristic all-terrain car called the chariot; a jet pack that allowed Professor Robinson to scout the planet; a surplus of laser guns and forcefields; and the Robinsons' talking robot, whose oft-repeated phrase was, "Danger! Danger!" The most eye-catching weekly gimmick was the freeze-frame, cliffhanger endings. Each episode ended with a close call that would be resolved in the following segment.

The series' director of photography, Gene Polito, recalls that in the early episodes, the show needed out-of-this-world locations to convey a spooky planet. "We had a wonderful art director named Bill Creber, who had worked on George Stevens' film The Greatest Story Ever Told. I said to Bill, 'Gee, we need a location that's really unusual.' Bill remembered a location they had scouted for George Stevens that wasn't used. It was called the Trona Pinnacles in Red Rock Canyon, out in the Mojave desert. Creber and I drove out to this place, and it was a restricted area for naval bombardment practice. It was fantastic. I said to Bill, 'If you wanted to recreate a moonscape, this is it!' We went back to the studio and told the production manager that we had found a great location for filming.

This threw him a curve because they already had another place set up. Word of the change got back to Irwin. Irwin called me and said, 'I'm getting a helicopter and flying out to this place tomorrow. If it isn't everything you and Bill say it is, I'm firing the two of you.' The next morning, the whole cast and crew was out at Red Rock Canyon, and by God, here comes a helicopter on the horizon. The helicopter landed, Irwin got out, ran over to the camera, and looked in it. He didn't say a thing. Finally, he looked at me and Bill. 'I gotta hand it to you guys,' he said. 'This is pretty fantastic.' He got back in the helicopter and off he went. We breathed a sigh of relief."

Polito was directly involved in supervising many of the special effects scenes in the desert locations. "We also had a guy there from Bell Aircraft who flew the jet pack. He could stay up in it for about a minute, and it looked wild." For Polito, a science fiction show was a terrific experience. "It was an interesting show to do, and it had a good following. The young generation, including my children, loved it." However, Polito found his job hanging by a thread when a photographic snafu developed. "We were working inside the spaceship and Irwin came on the set: 'I want everybody's attention!' Irwin looked at me and said, 'Gene, I saw the dailies from yesterday. You have ruined me!' With that, he walked out. I thought, 'What the hell is he talking about?' I ran after him and said, 'What's wrong, Irwin?' He replied, 'Everything on the dailies is so dark I can't see anything.' Well, I knew I'd better call my agent because I was gonna have to be looking for another job by lunch time. Then I asked my second assistant cameraman to show me the camera reports from yesterday. It said, 'Day Interior Effect.' I asked the cameraman why he had written this. He said, 'Well, weren't you trying to create a 'day' effect in the spaceship?' I said, 'Sure, but the word effect on a camera report tells the lab boys that it needs a special effect shot. That means they'll print it down 6/8 points on the printer and it'll turn out as a real dark print.' The cameraman said, 'Oh my God!' I ran up to Sol Halprin, head of the camera department, and explained the situation. 'Solly, unless you can do a real fast reprint of all of yesterday's dailies, I think I'm out of a job!'"

"The next morning, Irwin came on the set and said, 'I want everybody's attention! I want to apologize to Gene about yesterday. I just saw the stuff and it's beautiful. Thank you very much. Now get back to work.' And he took off. After that, Irwin and I got along pretty well." Polito praises his mentor, Oscar-winning cinematographer Winton Hoch, for teaching him about his craft. "Winnie was a brilliant guy who passed away years ago," says Polito. "He was a terrific, logical man who graduated from Cal Tech."

Polito, who filmed most of Lost in Space's first year, strove to make his cinematography feature-film quality. "We had one of the biggest soundstages at Twentieth Century-Fox. I was an absolute stickler for making my photography look believable. When I filmed somebody walking along the sand, I only wanted to see one shadow. In lousy photography, you see four or five shadows and you know it was filmed on a soundstage. Once I was in a bar and-I think it was Joel August-one of the top cameramen at Columbia came over and asked, Are you Gene Polito? I was watching your Lost in Space show the other night and it was a pleasure. It was first-rate photography.' I said, 'Coming from you, that's an Emmy award in itself,' because this guy was an Oscar winner."

Another member of Allen's team was Paul Zastupnevich, who created the human and creature costumes for Lost in Space. "I had to parade the various space monster costumes across the lot to have them approved by Irwin," Zastupnevich says. "People gave me funny looks as I walked by, carrying the cyclops or the lobster man. They'd ask me how I got my inspiration. I'd say, 'I eat a sandwich late at night, go to bed and have a nightmare!'" One of his favorite costumes was the giant cyclops monster in "There Were Giants in the Earth." "I didn't know how I was going to make it with our budget restrictions. I went for a walk, and I saw a group of firemen peeling bark from a palm tree. I picked up a piece of bark. It had an interesting texture, and it looked intriguing. I thought to myself, 'Hmm ... I wonder what I could do with this?' I took a bunch of it back to my office, and that's what I used to make the cyclops costume. I had it fireproofed, and it turned out to be a great monster."

Zastupnevich was also adept at turning animals into creatures. "Irwin was an animal lover, and in Lost in Space, we took a chimp and turned her into Penny's pet, the Bloop. We also had a tortoise which became an alien creature." With each new season, Zastupnevich designed new costumes for the Robinson family. "By the time you had done a full season, even though you had triples of every costume, they were raunchy and threadbare. Also, the actors would ask me for a change-'I can't stand orchid anymore!'-and you couldn't blame them."

Seeing the series today, Zastupnevich is still impressed with the work that went into the show. "At the time, you're going back and forth, under enormous pressure, and you take the shows for granted. I see episodes today and say, 'How did we possibly do that costume or that effect?' I tried to make the Robinsons' costumes timeless, and I'm amazed that they still look current. ... Lost in Space tried to teach a moral while entertaining and having fun. It was a wonderful show." Even before the series premiered, audiences agreed. Test audiences gave Lost in Space a thumbs-up. The ratings began solidly, and went higher as the first year progressed, occasionally rocketing into the top ten.

Former Twilight Zone producer Buck Houghton was the producer of the first dozen segments before departing. "Basically, I didn't get along with the executive producer [Irwin Allen]," he says. "We both decided we'd be happier if we parted. There was no bad blood between us. It was just one of those things." Houghton felt the series' concept was restrictive. "It was a very difficult premise to sustain. It later seemed to confine itself around the characters played by Billy Mumy and Jonathan Harris." When Guy Williams and June Lockhart signed up for Lost in Space, it was understood that they would be the stars, and their show would be a serious adventure series. With the last-minute addition of Dr. Smith, however, writers found Harris's character a lot more fun to write for. The dailies in which Dr. Smith would kibitz with the temperamental robot, or play mind games with the trusting young Will Robinson, worked better for the brass than the family scenes. The more Harris hammed it up, the more Irwin Allen loved it. As a result, by the end of the first year, Harris dominated the storylines. The other actors, with the exception of Billy Mumy, were often superfluous to the story.

It didn't set well with Williams or Lockhart. The result was ill feelings between the cast members. "It isn't so much that Harris steals the show," Williams told TV Guide in 1966. "It's that they [the producers] give it to him." However, as Lockhart conceded, Smith's character was largely responsible for the series' increased popularity. Love him or hate him, Dr. Smith was an original character for television, and Harris wasn't shy about taking full credit for making Lost in Space a success. Nevertheless, Harris realized the awkward position this had put Williams into. When Harris approached Williams with some conciliatory words, Williams walked away.

Irwin Allen had to pacify the unhappy cast members throughout the series' run. When Williams threatened to leave the series at the end of the first season, he was enticed back with a raise and promises of better storylines. It wasn't revealed to Williams that, starting with the second year, Harris would be the highest paid cast member.

Director Sutton Roley found Harris "a very professional actor. He was always prepared, and he did anything you asked of him. You just had to take him down a little. If you let him go full steam as Dr. Smith, he'd go absolutely ape! But I preferred that to somebody that you had to keep pumping up all of the time. Billy Mumy was an exceptionally talented actor. He was terrific. Angela Cartwright was a lovely little girl. Marta Kristen was okay. But Guy Williams and June Lockhart were so pretentious. They always wanted to hold hands in scenes and play it lovey-dovey. I'd say, 'Come on, June. Leave Guy alone!' Whenever one of the children was lost, they wanted to reach for each other first. I'd say, 'Forget that! Let's just be concerned about the kids for a moment."

Gene Polito found Guy Williams the most difficult cast member to work with. Realizing his part was now secondary to Jonathan Harris's, Williams demanded a certain number of closeups per show. "He was, quite frankly, a pain in the butt," says Polito. "Whenever we did a shot of him from over the back of his shoulder, he would deliberately lean out of the frame. He did this two or three times. The director would finally say, 'Okay, let's forget the over the shoulder shot, Guy. We'll give you a close-up,' which is what Guy wanted. It was a little manipulation going on. Billy Mumy and Jonathan Harris established a good working relationship, but Polito says, "I felt Jonathan was really gonna wreck Billy. He had this kid in the palm of his hand and tried to mold him into somebody that he wasn't. Billy just wanted to throw the baseball around between takes."

For some of the writers, Lost in Space offered a creative arena to script imaginative stories. Robert Duncan wrote six scripts for the series with his wife, Wanda. "Our children enjoyed watching the show, and we were invited by our friend, Tony Wilson, to write for it," says Duncan. "Wanda and I had a natural affinity for the characters. We came up with 50 story ideas offhand." The Duncans regard the series fondly. "Lost in Space had one of the pleasantest sets in Hollywood," says Robert Duncan, "and the friendliness of the cast came through on screen. It was a remarkable show. Jonathan Harris would serve cookies to Wanda's mother when she visited the set; June Lockhart was always even-tempered, sweet and professional; Billy Mumy would ride his bike around the set; and there was an episode where our guest star showed up skunk drunk. He stayed that way all the days he worked. Being drunk gave him a swagger and character he wouldn't have had sober. He did his lines perfectly."

Duncan concedes the series had its limitations. "The cast of Lost in Space fought for better scripts. Irwin had a strong dislike for what I call 'relationship scenes.' Sometimes you could write an emotional scene for a guest star, but never for the regulars. All of Irwin's shows were basically the same. The heroes were put in jeopardy, from which they had four acts to extricate themselves." Jack Turley tried his best to duck out of writing for the series. "Tony Wilson called me while he was on vacation in San Diego. He pleaded with me to write an episode of Lost in Space. I refused. I was considered a hot writer and had my pick of projects. I wasn't interested in writing anything for Irwin Allen. His reputation among writers was not inspiring, especially since he paid a lower scale per episode than other producers. I argued with Tony, but he knew how to work me. He patted me on the head and said 'I'd give it 'Turley quality.' I reluctantly submitted."

Turley's story, "Hunter's Moon" pits Professor Robinson against an alien hunter. "The role of the hunter, Megazor, was given to a guy who appeared a little light in the boots," says Turley. "He pranced around and minced his threats with a cute little lisp. I complained about this to Tony. He shrugged and said it gave the show 'another dimension.' How's that for mollifying an irate writer?" Turley was asked to write further episodes for the show, "but I ran as if my pants were on fire. Lost in Space would be perfect for the Saturday morning slots for the six-and-under set. Older kids are too sophisticated for that hokey, exploding-control-panel stuff."

Joey Tata supplied many of the alien voices for the series, and finds that the popularity of Lost in Space has extended to his current high school series, Beverly Hills 90210. "To the kids on this show, I'm a hero for working on Lost in Space," he laughs. "Luke Perry asked me, 'You worked with Dr. Smith? Man, when I was a kid I loved that show!' Luke always quotes lines from it."

The series provided Tata with one of his most embarrassing moments. "I was playing a crewman on Voyage to the Bottom of the Sea, which was filmed next door to Lost in Space. I had on my blue Voyage overalls, and during a break, I was playing a game of poker with Richard Basehart and the other Voyage actors. I had in my hand four kings. I knew it was a wonderful hand, but I didn't have any money on me. I said to them, 'Give me five minutes and I'll get some bread.' So I dashed off to the Lost in Space set, where I knew one of the guest stars, Ronnie Gans. Ron, who has this very deep voice, was playing a purple frog.

He was operating this alien console when I walked in. His costume was so ridiculous I've called him Froggy ever since. I ran up to him and screamed, 'Ronnie, you can't believe this. I got four fucking kings. How much money have you got on you?' He looked at me and said, in this stilted, mechanical voice, 'Look ... into ... my ... right ... pocket.' So I tried to get the money out of his pocket, which is under this foam rubber. I pulled out 150 bucks. Ronnie said, 'You ... will ... pay ... me ... back ... right ... away.' I said, 'Why are you talking like a mechanical frog?' He said, 'Because ... you've ... walked ... right ... into ... the ... middle ... of ... a ... scene!' I turned around and the entire Lost in Space cast and crew are there. Here I am, a voyage crewman bugging a purple frog for a few bucks and they have it all on film. They ran the film in the dailies the next day, thinking it would be funny for Irwin. A memo was immediately issued: 'There will be no more gambling on the sets!'"

Actor Ted Lehmann played a glowing, disembodied head in the episode "Invaders from the Fifth Dimension." "That turned out to be the most inquired-about part I have ever done in my forty years as a Hollywood actor," he says. "It was the most elaborate makeup I have ever worn." Lehman remembers Jonathan Harris's method of handling studio stuffiness. "During shooting, a couple of young studio executives appeared on the set. They caused a stir by announcing that there would be a visit from the crown prince and princess of a Third World country. The self-important attitude of these execs irritated Jonathan. He proceeded to cut them down to size with his formidable, sarcastic wit. He ordered them from the set and they made a hasty withdrawal. We were all in stitches. He was a delightful man."

The most arduous aspect of filming for Lehman was his ghostly white makeup. "My alien character had no mouth. All of my dialogue was done as a voice-over later in the recording studio. When it came to lunch time, the makeup people adamantly insisted that they would not remove their makeup masterpiece to allow me to eat. At the same time, there were Screen Actor Guild rules. An actor has to eat! A compromise was struck. My makeup would be cut, with a razor blade, allowing an opening where nourishment could be carefully guided. I was sent off to the commissary and after locating my mouth, I managed a sandwich. On the way back to the stage, I met an old friend of mine. I said, 'Hello, George.' He stared a second, then recognized my voice. 'Good God! Ted, is that you in there? What have they done to you!'" Lost in Space enjoyed good ratings during its first two seasons. The first year, in black and white, began as a relatively serious adventure show as the Robinsons struggled for survival in a hostile environment. The second year, in color, quickly developed into the Dr. Smith comedy show, with a bare minimum of special effects.

The emphasis on Dr. Smith and his campy adventures was overkill, and the ratings dipped as the second year closed. Many viewers who loved Dr. Smith as a supporting ingredient during the first year reacted negatively to having him served as the main course. The mainstream family audience was eroding, and the series audience was now mainly children. Several of the cast members continued to be resentful of Dr. Smith's grip on the series. To lessen the tensions and regain a bigger audience, the third season underwent a format change. The Robinsons blasted off from their desert world and frequently landed on other planets. The third season boasted excellent special effects, heavy doses of action and much more emphasis on the family cast members.

"We had been told that there had been too much whimsy in the second year," says Robert Duncan, who had mixed feelings about the shift. "We were given new guidelines for the third year. The result was less interplay between Dr. Smith and the robot and more action. Ironically, this was at a time when the networks were trying to " reduce the amount of violence on television.

The cliffhanging endings were also gone. In the third year, each episode began with a freeze frame that led into John Williams' exciting new theme music. It was a gallant attempt, but the more serious storylines didn't improve the ratings. After a dozen episodes, the series quietly slipped back into the comedic approach. Ironically, these last episodes were the highest rated.

As the leading television network, CBS pruned not only series with poor ratings, but those with mediocre ratings as well. Lost in Space finished its third year with a barely adequate rating. CBS felt that a fourth season would be a bust. Storywise, the series had gone from the Swiss Family Robinson-type adventures to whimsical comedy to special effects-laden action-adventure and finally to space camp. Lost in Space was huffing and puffing from creative exhaustion. When the series ended, the Robinson family were still lost in space.

"The real reason Lost in Space was canceled was because Bill Paley, the head of CBS, hated the show," says writer Robert Hamner. "He didn't understand its appeal and didn't want it on his network."

Irwin Allen admitted to TV columnist Cynthia Lowry in 1968 that Lost in Space's audience consisted mainly of kids. "Frankly, Lost in Space was aimed at them," he admitted. "The problem was, kids don't buy many of the sponsors' products." The series was put into syndication, where it did very well in afternoon time slots in the early 1970s. It was later eclipsed by the phenomenal success of another post-network space show Star Trek. By the late 1970s, Lost in Space was airing in just 20 independent stations across America, compared to over 140 for Star Trek.

The fortunes of Lost in Space changed in 1981, when former star Bill Mumy tried to relaunch the show as a reunion movie. He hoped to resolve the premise and use the original cast. However, Mumy found Irwin Allen totally unreceptive to the idea. CBS and Twentieth Century-Fox expressed interest in a reunion, but without Allen's legal goahead, the project was stillborn. Lost in Space fans campaigned on Mumy's behalf, sending in thousands of petitions and letters to Allen. In 1985, Allen conceded to long-time friend Merv Griffin that he was pleased by the fans' enthusiasm but thought it was too late for a reunion or revival of the show-something he said he wished he'd done ten years before.

Meanwhile, Lost in Space blossomed into cult status. Many of the cast reunited for a 1983 Family Feud special and appeared on many national talk shows and conventions; the USA Cable network aired Lost in Space in 1989 and 1990 to high ratings; and in 1991, Innovation Comics began its popular Lost in Space comic book series, with Bill Mumy as consultant and sometimes as writer. Irwin Allen died in 1991, and Irwin Allen Productions was officially disbanded a year later. But his series may live on in new cinematic adventures: In 1993, New Line Cinema obtained the rights for a Lost in Space feature film, which may provide the saga of the Robinsons with a conclusion.

CAST NOTES

Guy Williams (Professor Robinson): Born 1924. Williams soared to success as Walt Disney's Zorro on TV in the late 1950s. He was also featured as cousin Will Cartwright on Bonanza (1963-64). After Lost in Space ended, Williams moved to South America. "In America, I'm as unknown as a doormat," Williams told the National Enquirer in 1973. "In Argentina, I'm a smash. Everyone knows me as Zorro." Financially secure through land investments, Williams made only two American TV appearances in the 1980s: First, he reunited with Lost in Space co-stars June Lockhart, Marta Kristen and Angela Cartwright for the game show Family Feud in 1983. That same year, he was a guest on Good Morning, America where he discussed Zorro. He died in 1989.

June Lockhart (Mrs. Robinson): Born 1925. The daughter of actors Gene and Kathleen Lockhart, June made her film debut in A Christmas Carol (1938). June played the mother on the Lassie series (1958-64) and had a recurring role on daytime's General Hospital in the 1990s.

Mark Goddard (Major West): Born 1936. Goddard's first break was as one of Robert Taylor's TV Detectives (1960-62). He later became a theatrical agent and writer. His TV credits in the 1980s included The Fall Guy, Barnaby Jones and Jake and the Fatman. In the early 1990s, he taught high school in his home state of Massachusetts.

Marta Kristen (Judy Robinson): Born 1945. In addition to raising a family, she co-starred in the adventure films Terminal Island (1973) and Battle Beyond the Stars (1980). She worked in Los Angeles theater during the 1990s.

Bill Mumy (Will Robinson): Born 1954. Mumy devoted time to his musical career in the 1970s, playing with the band America and forming his own band, Barnes and Barnes. His post-Lost in Space movie credits included the films Bless the Beasts and the Children (1971) and Papillon (1973). He co-starred in the 1975 series Sunshine and guest-starred on such shows as Rockford Files and Matlock. In the 1990s, he wrote several of the Lost in Space comic books for Innovation Comics. He became a regular on the TV series Babylon 5 in 1994.

Angela Cartwright (Penny Robinson): Born 1952. Cartwright played Danny Thomas's youngest daughter on Make Room for Daddy (1957-64). She was also one of the Von Trapp children in The Sound of Music (1965). As an adult, she raised a family and wrote a children's book called A Child's First Journal. Her post-Lost in Space TV credits included Love Boat and Airwolf.

Jonathan Harris (Dr. Smith): Born 1914. This Broadway actor has done hundreds of voice-overs for commercials and cartoons. He starred in the long-running Saturday morning show Space Academy, in the 1970s. He retired from film acting in favor of voice-over work.

Billy Mumy would later go on to star in BABYLON 5 and create his own SF show SPACE CASES. Jonathon Harris also starred in SPACE ACADEMY. June Lockhart also did a guest role on BABYLON 5. Angela Cartwright was famous before Lost In Space for starring in the film The Sound of Music and Billy Mumy had already done a great deal of television including several very good episodes of THE TWILIGHT ZONE. Jonathon Harris starred in The Third Man back in the 1950s with Michael Rennie who also guest starred in one episode of Lost In Space.

Almost every episode had the same formula: land on another planet while trying to get home, encounter a monster, have Dr. Smith try to cut a deal with the monster that would send him alone back to Earth, have Robby the Robot say "Danger, Will Robinson", menace June Lockhart, and have Dr. Smith's fatal flaws of cowardice and greed foil his plot, leaving us at a cliff-hanger ending. In 1997 a film based on the series was made, this rather superficial film was a major flop in the US and was nothing like the original Lost In Space series.

Some of the principle writers for Lost In Space were Peter Packer, Barney Slater, Jackson Gillis and William Welch. Directors included, Sobey Martin, Don Richardson and Nathan Juran. There was a number of noticeable guest stars including Don Matheson (LAND OF THE GIANTS), Michael Rennie, who starred in the TV series The Third Man with Jonathon Harris, Robby The Robot from the film Forbidden Planet (1956), Kurt Russel, Ted Cassidy (who guest starred in STAR TREK), Al Lewis from the TV show The Munsters, John Carradine, Daniel J. Travanti from Hill Street Blues and Lyle Waggoner who starred in WONDER WOMAN.

There are many episodes of LIS which stand out, including 'Visit to a Hostile Planet' in which the Robinsons return to Earth, but its fifty years before their time, 'Flight into the Future' in which Will, Dr. Smith and the Robot experience mysterious time fluctuations. 'The Anti-Matter Man' where John Robinson discovers an anti-matter universe in which he has an evil counterpart, and 'Target: Earth' in which Will foils a plot by shapeless aliens who want to conquer the Earth. LIS was the best of IRWIN ALLEN's shows fondly remembered by many people, for its colourful and flamboyant scripts. A fourth season was planned for LIS but negotiations fell apart when Irwin Allen was asking for more money to spend on the show. Several scripts were prepared including a sequel to the excellent 'The Anti-Matter Man'.

A film based on the series was also made in 1998, which became a major hit of the summer. With an entirely new cast, some of the original cast made cameo appearances including, June Lockhart, Angela Cartwright, Marta Kristen and Mark Goodard. Jonathan Harris and Billy (aka Bill) Mumy declined to make cameo appearances in the film.

LIS was aimed primarily at children. The Robinsons' spacecraft is sabotaged by an enemy agent, causing them to crash-land on a remote planet. The group consists of the family of 5 -- the series was originally to be called Space Family Robinson along with a young male co-pilot (Mark Goodard) and the whining saboteur, Dr Smith, played with comic but sinister effect by Jonathan Harris; the Robinsons were played by June Lockhart, Guy Williams, Angela Cartwright, Marta Kristen and Billy Mumy. There was also a ROBOT, whose catchphrase was "That does not compute". Though remote, the planet soon became a stopping-off point for practically every space-travelling alien or monster in the Galaxy, each episode seeing the arrival of some new visitor.

After the first season the Robinsons got back into space themselves. As the series progressed the young boy (Mumy) and the ambiguous Dr Smith became the central characters, together with the robot, while the others receded more and more into the background. The stories, at first straight SF, became more and more fantastic. LIS was probably the most enjoyable of Irwin Allen's many excursions into televised SF. Lost in Space * (1967) by Dave VAN ARNAM and Ron Archer (Ted WHITE) is a novelization.

THE VAPOUR TRAIL left by the Lost in Space film during its American release last April reveals a film that didn't meet financial expectations. Now, as the first dysfunctional family in Space engages its crucial worldwide release, Lost in Space (the movie) will either generate a robust franchise that will launch sequels and a live-action series for New Line Cinema, or it will fizzle out like a spent meteorite. Meanwhile, the film's source of inspiration, the 1965-1968 Irwin Allen tv series, couldn't be doing better. Whether its on cable or on video, the 83 episodes, which were cranked out on five-day shooting schedules with a paltry $150,000 per segment, continue to be popular. Even the most discerning and reserved of celebrities have been charmed by the show's characters and unpretentious nature. John Kennedy Jr recently admitted that Lost in Space was his favourite tv series as a youngster. Director Steven Spielberg took Irwin Allen's widow Sheila out to lunch, where he quietly confessed that Lost in Space was "a wonderful show" that had a profound influence on him as well.

These accolades fall far from the 1960s, when the series was often publicly ridiculed, held in low esteem by the movers and shakers. A network executive even joked, "The success of Lost in Space proves that even the worst tv series can be a hit if it has the right time slot." Little did he know that the series would still be a cult hit 30 years later.

But as Lost in Space basks in the glow of cult fever, and the new movie faces an uncertain future, Irwin Allen wasn't thinking of leaving any legacies in 1965. He was looking for a hit series and he predicted the series would run for 10 years. The early concept of the show was envisaged as an old-fashioned adventure. Allen originally wanted Eddie Albert and Maureen O'Hara to play the Space age Robinson parents, who struggle for survive on an alien planet with their children.

Paul Burke and Martin Milner were also considered for the role of Professor Robinson, but Allen finally decided on Guy Williams, former Zorro swashbuckler. The CBS network didn't want Williams. They wanted an all-American type, in the John Glenn tradition, and they felt Williams was too ethnic looking for the role of tv astronaut. Williams' screen test convinced CBS that he was right for the role. The rest of the actors were easily cast: June Lockhart as Mrs Robinson, Goodard as pilot Don West, and Bill Mumy, Angela Cartwright and Marta Kristen as Will, Penny and Judy Robinson.

The expensive pilot sold the series to CBS but the network insisted that a villain be added to create conflict, and Dr Zachary Smith (Jonathan Harris) was born, a pastiche of cunning, ruthlessness, irritation, stupidity, greed and later, comedy. Irwin Allen made overtures to NASA to solicit its technical input, but America's space organisation didn't want to be associated with the quirky Fantasy series. Allen tried to hide his hurt feelings. When director Don Richardson pointed to a newspaper article that told of NASA's first Space walk, Allen quickly perused it, then threw the paper away and snapped, "Who cares? That's only real life."

Allen did chuckle over a 1966 news story, where police troopers in Alabama had responded to reports that glowing, disembodied heads were flying over houses at night. One trooper realised that the creatures resembled the aliens seen in a Lost in Space episode, Invaders from the Fifth Dimension. Tearful teenage boys confessed to flying white laundry sheets in the air, augmenting them with flashlight beams. The boys had been inspired by the Lost in Space creatures.

The genius of Irwin Allen was reflected in his supplying his fantasy world with an incredible detailed spaceship and some spectacular special effects. His inconsistency was in a careless lack of continuity in story and science, and production short-cuts that often resulted in ridiculous monsters of the week. Allen's surreal personality also baffled and amused those around him. When Sven Wickman, the set decorator, met Allen for the first time, Wickman expected Allen to query him on his past credentials. Instead, Allen gave Wickman a stare and asked, "What is the name of my tv series?" Wickman replied, "Lost in Space." Allen nodded. "That's right. You're hired!"

Allen's eccentricity extended to his actors as well. When he was disappointed in an actor's performance, Allen would walk past the actor, moving his arms in a cutting motion and say, "I am the great scissors in the sky." This meant that Allen's editing room was ready to eliminate a sloppy performance. The first series of Lost in Space is considered its best. Although Dr Smith's popularity was quickly overtaking the storylines, viewers could relish the survival sagas of the first dozen segments, and the close-knit family characterisations.

Young actor Billy Mumy already had a list of more than 50 film and TV credits by the time he was cast as Will, including pivotal roles in three Twilight Zone stories (Long Distance Call, 1960; It's a Good Life, 1961; and In Praise of Pip, 1963). Angela Cartwright, who played Penny, had the dubious credential of being one of the Von Trapp children in The Sound of Music while Jonathan Harris (Dr Smith) had enjoyed a three-year run with Michael Rennie in The Third Man.

Although the series degenerated into increasingly camp comic fantasy - in which a carrot monster was the final straw! - the early black and white shows had a hard edge of serious science fiction, occasionally sustaining a decent level of suspense. This was mildly heightened by the use of cliff-hanger endings to each episode - though these were always the first moves in a new story, that week's adventure having been safely resolved. The early shows in particular also took a high moral tone, stressing the virtues of family unity and handing out lessons in prejudice, social behaviour, loyalty, responsibility and manners. In one episode Will is even told to take his elbows off the table!

After launching the Poseidon adventures of Voyage to the Bottom of the Sea in 1964, producer Irwin Allen looked for further fortunes in the stars and found himself Lost in Space. This folksy saga of a family of galactic castaways first appeared in 1965. Over here it wandered through the ITV schedules, flitting haphazardly from region to region, until it disappeared in the mid-Seventies. Filed under 'c' for cult, it remained lost to sight until Channel Four resurrected the series in 1988.

After the series cancellation it was sort of brought back. On 8 Sep 73 an hour long Lost in Space cartoon appeared as the season premiere of the ABC Saturday Superstar Movie. Jonathan Harris reprised his role from the series, all the other characters were new. Don Messick, Sherry Alleroni, Sid Miller and Vincent Van Patten provided the voices for the new characters. The episode dealt with the Jupiter II crew facing off against a strange warring life form. NOTE: Dawson Palmer who is listed as a guest star in many episodes most often played some type of monster in costume, not the same character each time.

The story editor for the series was Anthony Wilson, the music was created by Johnny Williams, Herman Stein, Leith Stevens, Robert Drasnin, Gerald Fried, Alexander Courage, Cyril Mockridge Mullendore. The director of photography was Gene Polito (Season One) and Frank Carson. The special effects were created by L.B. Abbott and Hal Lydecker (Season One). Abbott had done the special effects on all of Irwin Allen's most famous shows, and was one of TV's leading special effects men in the 1960s in the US. The series first received its premiere in the UK by the Northern Region of ABC Weekend Television on the 2nd October 1965, just three weeks after the US premiere. Allen always had his pool of writers which he liked to use, therefore the list above included almost all of the writers for the series, even though there was 83 episodes made.

This was the first intentional outer space science fiction comedy made for television. Its popularity is still on the rise and there's even a brand-new comic book series based on the space family Robinson. This series has taken its lumps over the years, largely because it began as a straightforward, serious adventure show and quickly turned into Dr. Smith's Outer Space Comedy Cavalcade. Side show production values on the costumes of the aliens in many episodes didn't help matters. But to those who liked the show, it was wonderful. Above all, it was unique.

The first year of Lost in Space introduced the space faring Robinson family. It was filmed in black and white, which had its advantages. Mainly, it allowed more to be accomplished on a limited budget. Plus shooting special effects in colour is much more complicated. But there are other factors involved as well. The cinematography of a black-and-white show is approached in a very different manner, as light and shadow plays a much more important role in the photography.

This was capitalised on to a great degree on Lost in Space that first year, particularly since the settings were other-worldly. Since actual exterior shooting for the series was rarely done, and most scenes were filmed on a soundstage, the fact that the stories took place in outer space or on another planet worked to their advantage. While today old black-and-white shows come across as pretty obvious when an indoor set was standing in for an outdoor locale, on Lost in Space this didn't matter. Another world, even when outdoors, wouldn't be expected to look like our own backyard or the hills north of Los Angeles. And since the Jupiter 11 often landed on fairly arid planets, rocks and sand went a long way in establishing the needed ambience.

Irwin Allen used the old children's classic Swiss Family Robinson as the inspiration for this, his first television series. He originally planned to call the show Space Family Robinson but abandoned this because a screenplay by Ib Melchior was on file with the Writers Guild with that title. Some sources state that Allen changed the title because Walt Disney Productions had the title Space Family Robinson on file because of the success of its 1960 movie Swiss Family Robinson. Western Publishing also had a comic book it had started publishing in 1962 called Space Family Robinson. When Gold Key comics later licensed Lost in Space for a comic book tie-in, it just added the name to the cover of its Space Family Robinson comic book, even though any similarities were superficial at best.

In a bit of inspired handiwork, Irwin Allen had the Jupiter II designed to look like a flying saucer. This went a long way in making the ship look futuristic since the setting of the show was 1997. More than twenty-five years later it keeps the show from looking dated. A conventional spacecraft would have made it appear the way fifties science fiction movies do which used World War II V-2 look-alikes for their rocket ships. Casting for this series was reportedly done with-out a lot of casting calls. June Lockhart was cast after appearing in an episode of Voyage to the Bottom of the Sea. She enjoyed working with Irwin Allen and found him to be "dynamic and creative and so in charge of the work."

This original version of Lost in Space was conceived without Dr. Smith and the robot being present in any form. The background music, credited to Bernard Herrmann, is largely just passages taken from the sound tracks of the movies The Day the Earth Stood Still and Journey to the Centre of the Earth. The familiar series music is not present in the original pilot at all and, in fact, the title theme and end credits are both from The Day the Earth Stood Still. But when the show was revamped and "The Reluctant Stowaway" was produced, all of the music was replaced with the Lost in Space theme music written by "Johnny Williams" (better known today as respected film composer and conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra John Williams).

Once it was decided to revise the pilot and add Dr. Smith and the robot, a great deal of new footage was used and the pilot was reedited and spread out over the first five episodes. Only one brief scene, a shot of Alpha Control, appeared in episode two, "The Derelict", which was otherwise completely new. Some footage appeared only in "No Place to Hide." For instance, even though the spaceship encounters a meteor storm in both the pilot and in "The Reluctant Stowaway," this footage was refilmed for the opening episode of the series. A view of the swirling meteor storm seen through the view port of the spacecraft appears only in "No Place to Hide." The logbook and John Robinson's voice-overs, which are quite effective in the pilot, do not appear at all in "The Reluctant Stowaway" or any other series episodes.

The other scenes not reused from "No Place to Hide" are relatively minor. For instance, a shot of Debby the Bloop standing on the Chariot's radarscope playing with John, as well as a couple of lines of dialogue John Robinson has in the Chariot during their trip in the storm, are edited out of the revised version of the story. The most interesting unused scene from "No Place to Hide" is the final one, where the Robinsons have reached the tropics and are giving thanks. As they silently pray (all of them kneel except for Donald West, who stands but bows his head), two large-headed aliens are secretly observing the family from behind some bushes. One alien looks at the other and nods his head. But while this scene never appeared in the series as it was broadcast, it did appear in a sixty-second promo for Lost in Space that CBS ran during its first season on the air, as well as in advance of its 1965 fall premiere. Irwin Allen used the old children's classic Swiss Family Robinson as the inspiration for this, his first television series. One problem in the original pilot was that it stated both that the spacecraft would be travelling at the speed of light and that it would take ninety eight years to reach Alpha Centauri. What they fail to mention (and which most children learn in high school astronomy) is that Alpha Centauri is only four light-years away. This was corrected in "The Reluctant Stowaway" so that the voyage was postulated as taking just over five years, which made much more sense.

In "The Reluctant Stowaway," both the robot (called an environmental control robot) and Dr. Smith are introduced in the same sequence. There is also new footage filmed showing interaction before takeoff between the Robinsons and Dr. Smith. In fact when the family receives their final pre-lift-off check-ups, the shadowy figure speaking to them is revealed to be Dr. Smith, the saboteur we'd first met just minutes earlier. The villainy of Smith is emphasised when he casually watches the Robinson family board the Jupiter II after he's sabotaged the robot with new programming. The robot is scheduled to destroy the ship's controls eight hours into the mission. So Smith is watching the family leave in the firm belief that they'll all die hours later, what a fun guy. It's never made clear what the point of the sabotage is. While the narrator says that certain foreign powers want to see the mission fail, we're never told why. The only gain that the Jupiter II mission stands to make is for the benefit of all humanity, not for the benefit of any one nation.

While Donald West was called Dr. Donald West in the original pilot and had been given a pile of scientific credits, in the revised episode he's Major Don West and is just meant to be their pilot and is along to operate the ship should it malfunction. When Dr. Smith is trapped aboard the ship, he finally accepts his situation and straps himself into the seat, which had somehow been hidden inside a control panel of the ship. When the Jupiter II takes off, Smith screams either in pain or terror or both.

In "No Place to Hide," the meteor swarm the ship encounters was uncharted and caught everyone by surprise. In "The Reluctant Stowaway" it is supposedly Smith's extra mass on the ship that prevents the electronic brain from responding and automatically steering the Jupiter II out of harm's way.

Watching "No Place to Hide" and "The Reluctant Stowaway" back-to-back is an odd experience because they are largely two completely different treatments of the same idea. The addition of Dr. Smith and the robot creates a completely new dynamic in the show. In the original version of Lost in Space there was no irritating influence. The story is purely about the adventures of the Robinsons and how they deal with the challenges of being on their own on an alien world. It's one adventure after another and we see how the family deals with it. Even Donald West is very much a part of the family. The insertion of Dr. Smith fractures that. He divides them and creates disharmony. After the family is revived from suspended animation, Maureen Robinson is all for returning to Earth. But John Robinson is against that and prefers to leave that decision up to the computer. Maureen questions this since she feels that her family is threatened by what has happened. She even asks Dr. Smith whether in some people it takes longer for the heart to thaw from freezing. This is not the happy family we saw in "No Place to Hide."

Jonathan Harris was cast after his agent was contacted by Irwin Allen's office and asked to send over some footage of the actor at work. Harris refused, wanting to know first what kind of performance they wanted to see, lest he supply a sample of a dramatic performance when they were thinking of casting him in a comic role. Harris finally said he'd prefer to meet the producer in person. Allen was furious. He contacted Jonathan's agent and said, "Who the hell does he think he is, and I'll see him at four o'clock!" Harris was cast at that same meeting, without reading for the part. Narration done by the Alpha Control TV commentator is the voice of Don Forbes, who performed similar duty on Voyage to the Bottom of the Sea. In the original pilot, "No Place to Hide" (which was never broadcast in that form), only Forbes as the announcer is heard. In the actual first-aired episode, "The Reluctant Stowaway", some of the announcing by Forbes is replaced when new narration was added by Dick Tufeld (who was also the voice of the robot).

Dick Tufeld first met Irwin Allen years before Lost in Space. Tufeld was eighteen and attending Northwestern University in Chicago in the early forties when he had his first encounter with Irwin Allen, who was then working in radio. "My home was in Los Angeles and I came back home one summer and got a job at KLAC radio working summer relief as an announcer. Part of our duties was to spin records and be engineers at the station. There was a guy there who had a Hollywood gossip type show and that was Irwin Allen! I used to spin his theme music and announce the opening of the show and that's when I first met him. He must have been in his late twenties then."

Years later, their paths would cross again. "I had a good friend named Emmet Lavery who was working in the business affairs department at 20th Century Fox. He knew Irwin and they were talking one day and Irwin mentioned to him that he was looking for a narrator for his new series, Lost in Space. Emmet suggested me and I think that Irwin vaguely remembered me. I was working at ABC at the time, but that's how I got called in for the show." After trying out for the narrator, and being accepted for that position, Dick tried out for the voice of the robot. Interestingly enough, Dick had also been the narrator on Guy Williams' previous TV series, Zorro.

"After the first episode of Lost in Space was being put together I got a call from my agent. He said that there was a robot character on the show now and Irwin was looking for a voice for it. I guess he wasn't satisfied with Bob May, who was inside the robot, so he said that he'd like me to read for it. I showed up at the scheduled time at Fox, in one of the audio rooms. I remember the first thing I said to Irwin was, 'This is a robot so I presume what you're looking for is a kind of mechanical, robotian kind of sound?' Irwin recoiled and looked at me with horror and said, 'My dear boy, that is precisely and exactly what I do not want. What we have here is a very advanced, civilised culture and what I want is a low-key, laid-back Alexander Scourby kind of approach.'

"Well, that was a great New York narrator and actor who has since passed away and who did many wonderful documentary narration's and who was very cultured and laid-back. So I started reading for him doing my best Alexander Scourby kind of imitation and he would say no, you're not getting it, try again. After about ten minutes Irwin said, 'Well, this is not working. I appreciate your coming in, but you're still the narrator on the show and we'll see you later.' So I said, 'Irwin, let me try one more thing for you,' and I said something like 'Warning! Warning! Danger! It will not compute!' in my best mechanical, robotian kind of sound.

"Irwin said, 'My God! That's that Alexander Scourby approach I wanted! What the hell took you so long?' Honest, I had to turn away from him because I was afraid I was going to laugh in his face, and I couldn't have explained what I was laughing about! Like all of us, Irwin said what he wanted, but what he really wanted was what sounded right to his ear. He described what he wanted, but when I gave it to him it didn't sound right to his ear. When he heard a kind of mechanical robot sound, that sounded right in spite of what he said to me." Inside the robot was Bob May, who wore the suit all three seasons. He'd speak the robot's lines in order to maintain the timing of a scene, and Dick Tufeld would loop the dialogue later doing the robot's voice that we're all familiar with now. The robot was designed by Robert Kinoshita, who had also designed Robby the Robot for the 1956 film Forbidden Planet. While everyone remembers the Robinsons forever marooned on a planet where they have their adventures, the Jupiter 11 doesn't actually land on a planet until episode three, "Island in the Sky," (which is almost the same title as an old Arthur C. Clarke novel, Islands in the Sky). While shooting with the actors was generally done indoors, special effects showing the miniature Jupiter II model crash-landing on the planet was done in California's Red Rock Canyon near the Mojave Desert. Considering the barren nature of the unnamed planet they crash on, the setting was perfect.

Episode four is one of those most people remember because it has the scene with the giant that John Robinson shoots with the laser. As in many pilots, the drama and the special effects were more ambitious than what the tight shooting schedule of a regular series could normally allow. The giant, seen in episode four, had a costume that was actually constructed from dried palm fronds. The suit was designed and constructed by Paul Zastupnevich and was quite effective. While Dawson Palmer is often credited as having played the giant, the credits for "No Place to Hide" (the name of the original pilot for which the footage was originally shot) state that it was played by Lamar Lundy, Dawson Palmer appeared in a character part in the later first-season episode "The Space Croppers."

The all Rocket belt was employed in these early episodes since it was a science fiction-type device that really worked and captured the imagination of everyone who'd ever seen it used. You believed a man could fly! The most amazing thing about the suit is that further research and development on it was discontinued and the version of it that exists today is little different from the one unveiled to the public in the early sixties. The suit was also used in the James Bond movie Thunderball in 1964. In the beginning, Dr. Smith wasn't just convincing, he was nasty, and his personality had an edge that made him seem dangerous.

In episode one, he knocks out a guard and dumps him down a waste disposal chute. But already by episode eight he's started whimpering and is quite different from the self-assured saboteur seen in the pilot. Jonathan Harris takes credit for this change in direction of the character, having chosen to play his character more like a petulant child than a cold hearted villain. He believed that a straight villain would have proved boring after a short time. Whether he's correct on this point continues to receive mixed reviews from some fans. This is particularly true in light of the fact that many episodes became outright comedies that emphasised Dr. Smith, the robot, and Will Robinson to the exclusion of everyone else. Some fans who haven't seen the show in a long time incorrectly recall the entire first season as more dramatic, with the second season introducing the silly stories. In actuality, the style of the series had largely emerged by halfway through the first season and it seldom deviated from that course.

The lighter touch to stories began in earnest in episode six, "Welcome Stranger," in which Warren Oates in his best cowboy tradition portrays Jimmy Hapgood, the runaway astronaut. Hapgood claims to have launched from Earth on June 18th, 1982, bound for a soft landing on Saturn-but he missed. Footage of his spacecraft lift-off, as well as the craft itself, would turn up again and again in the series. It was unusual for Irwin Allen to use something only once, as his constant use of stock footage from his film The Lost World proves. Footage from that film was used in both VOYAGE TO THE BOTTOM OF THE SEA (extensively) and TIME TUNNEL.

While the characterisation of Dr. Smith became fairly thin and repetitious after a few episodes, one of his last interesting serious character scenes occurs in episode five, "The Hungry Sea." When he discovers that a heat wave is coming, he sends the robot out to warn the Robinsons of the danger they'll be in when the planet nears the sun should the family not be near any shelter at the time. If you have a large enough screen which doesn't crop the picture at the edges the way smaller TV screens do, an on-screen blooper can be seen in episode eight, "Invaders from the Fifth Dimension. In the finale, as the robot walks past rocks and bushes toward the alien ship, the legs of Bob May (the man in the robot suit) can be seen.

This is because the robot suit was cumbersome and when it had to move, if it was possible to shoot the robot from the waist up only, then May would wear only the top part of the robot. We saw the actual way the suit could be disassembled into pieces in those episodes where the robot had supposedly been blown apart or taken apart by someone. The upper and lower decks of the Jupiter II were on separate soundstages. But in episode nine, "The Oasis," Maureen Robinson enters the elevator on the lower deck and seemingly in one shot travels to the upper deck. Skilful directing by Sutton Roley made this possible. We get to see one of the special effects miniatures of the Jupiter II in episode eleven, when Dr. Smith tries to create a duplicate of the ship with his wishing machine, but the machine cannot re-create something that large. Speaking of reusing things, the diving bell used in Voyage to the Bottom of the Sea becomes the Jupiter II's reactor chamber in episode twelve.

A dog which plays an important role but is never seen again is introduced in episode thirteen. But then the lost civilisation in episode twenty-seven is left sleeping in caverns below the surface and they aren't mentioned again, even in passing, when the Jupiter II flees the exploding planet in the opening episode of season two. The continuity on the series wasn't bad, but it wasn't without holes here and there. In season two they meet a hermit on one of the worlds they land on. When they later flee that world as it's about to be destroyed by a comet, no one wonders whether the hermit will be all right.

In spite of the large regular cast, Lost in Space was no more a true ensemble show than STAR TREK was. But while STAR TREK featured its three top-lined performers in each episode, Lost in Space featured the performers who had secondary billing in the starring parts. Jonathan Harris was listed as the "Special Guest Star" for all three seasons (his idea), while Billy Mumy was a costar, and the robot had no billing at all. But these three clearly starred in most of the stories. Guy Williams, who had starred in Walt Disney's Zorro in the late fifties, as well as a couple of feature films, reportedly chafed at seeing himself getting star billing while the scripts made him a supporting character circling the focal point of Dr. Smith and Will Robinson. People who wrote for the series reported that Williams threw what they described as "temper tantrums" on the set over the way his character was shunted aside.

The growing importance in the story lines of Billy Mumy was particularly emphasized in episode fifteen, "Return from Outer Space," where the main plot dealt with Will being transported back to Earth where no one will believe that he's who he claims he is. It's actually one of the better shows. Had Billy Mumy not been up to the acting demands, the scripts wouldn't have continued to feature him. The town Will appears in, Hatfield Four Corners, was just a street set on the backlot of 20th Century Fox. What always struck me as odd about that episode was that even though this town was supposed to be in the year 1997, nothing about it seemed any more modern than 1966. It was as though they were saying that in thirty years, nothing would really change at all! It was just a typical country village.

Everything in it was ordinary, including the school buses and the telephone Will uses. Will Robinson doesn't even seem to find this unusual. When Michael Rennie guest starred in "The Keeper", it was a reunion for him and Jonathan Harris, as the two actors had starred in the shortlived fifties television series The Third Man. Various props from other episodes turn up in this show, including the derelict ship model from the second episode. A giant spider used in this episode was used later on another Irwin Allen series when it became a giant underwater spider in Voyage to the Bottom of the Sea.

Episode twenty, "War of the Robots," guest-starred a player from the stable of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Robby the Robot, who had appeared in the movies Forbidden Planet and The Invisible Boy, turns up as the evil robotoid. The Robinsons apparently found a trunk they hadn't unpacked yet as they're wearing new uniforms beginning in this episode. By episode twenty-four, "His Majesty Smith," the format of the show was solidly in place as story after story revolved around Smith. This episode was the first time that a Smith look-alike would be used and it would by no means be the last. Irwin Allen's penchant for using something from one series over on another that he was producing really became obvious in "The Lost Civilisation" (episode twenty-seven) when the interior sets of the Seaview did double duty as the super scientific underground kingdom sets. The diving bells from the Seaview turn up in the following episode, "A Change of Space," as alien spacecraft. The alien in the same episode also turned up on an episode of Voyage as a Man-Fish. So the two shows definitely traded props and suits back and forth.

The final episode of season one actually featured John Robinson as the focal character. He's possessed by an alien mask that causes him to be harsh to his family and even threaten them. The story is meant to demonstrate the depth of feeling that family members have for one another. Kanto orders John Robinson to kill his son but Robinson is able to overcome the alien's influence. In spite of some scenes with Smith, much of it hearkens back to the style of the first four episodes of the series.

Colour came to outer space in the second season of the series. Star Trek also joined the television line up a week before the second-season premiere of Lost in Space, and the two series have been compared to one another ever since. It's inescapable even though the two shows are really quite different in their approach. The only thing they have in common is that both shows take place on other planets and beyond our solar system.

The two shows did have one other connection at the time. In "The Cave of the Wizards" (episode fifty-one) Dr. Smith briefly gets pointed ears, which were props acquired from the Star Trek production staff.

In "Wild Adventure" they actually get into contact with Alpha Control again but for convoluted reasons they supposedly cannot return to Earth at that time because the sun is between them and the Earth. Also, they're low on fuel. The alien bird-man who appears in "Forbidden World" (episode thirty-three) wasn't borrowed from any other Irwin Allen production. Instead it was a costume used by the late Janos Prohaska in the "Amusement Park" episode of Outer Limits and in the original Star Trek pilot "The Cage."

Continuity comes into play again in episode thirty-five, "The Prisoners of Space," in which aliens (stock Irwin Allen monster costumes) put the Robinsons on trial for crimes they inadvertently committed in space. In the case of Dr. Smith, his crimes were deliberate, such as his attack on a creature in episode two. Another of that race of creatures is one of the judges. Trial evidence consists of black-and-white footage from the first season of the show. Irwin Allen was notorious for cutting corners. In "The Golden Man" director Don Richardson needed a spacecraft, which would have cost $10,000 to construct. Allen wouldn't hear of it. Instead he raided the studio prop department and found a giant plastic champagne glass used in an old Marilyn Monroe film. By turning the prop upside down and putting a newly constructed frame around it, he had the needed alien spacecraft.

Considering that they were on alien worlds, the Robinsons kept encountering situations straight out of terrestrial folklore. In "The Questing Beast" a knight pursuing a dragon shows up. In another episode the Robinsons encounter the gods of Norse mythology. They even encounter ancient Arabian counterparts. Alien mythology doesn't manage to turn up. Everything that does is some form of a familiar Earth situation, such as a department store or a toy shop. It's because of things like this, and the fact that Will Robinson is often a central character, that some people regard Lost in Space as a children's show. When a series is successful enough to spawn toys, sometimes that series can turn around and take advantage of that. This is exactly what Lost in Space did in "The Mechanical Men," in which a horde of tiny robots, which look just like the Robinsons' robot, besiege the family. By taking a lot of the Remco toy robots then available in stores, and spray painting them silver, they had a cheap source of tiny duplicate robots. Today those toys are collectors' items and it would be difficult to find that many toy LIS robots.

Actor John Carradine appeared in a couple of Irwin Allen series. Having worked in motion pictures since the thirties, his name was quite well known. All too often on TV shows he was reduced to playing some sort of ersatz Shakespearean role or something else that required him to deliver dialogue in an arch and archaic manner. But in the final episode of year two on Lost in Space he played an alien on the lam who assumes human form in order to associate freely with humans. Carradine also appeared in an episode of Land of the Giants. Robert Duncan also worked on a number of Irwin Allen shows, including The Time Tunnel and Lost in Space. In the October 1991 Starlog, Duncan described what it was like working on Lost in Space and what it was like visiting the set and writing for the series with his wife, Wanda, during the second and third seasons. "I remember Jonathan Harris serving cookies to Wanda's mother when she visited the set, June Lockhart, who was never other than even-tempered, sweet, and professional; Guy Williams and his tantrums; Billy Mumy riding his bike around; and the one episode where our guest star showed up skunk-drunk and stayed that way through all the days he worked. Being drunk gave him a swagger and character he wouldn't have had sober, and he did his lines perfectly."

Regarding the third year of the series, Duncan explained that the writers were definitely told to take a different approach. "We were told that there had been too much whimsy in the second year, and we were instructed to follow new guidelines for Lost in Space's third year. The result was a season with fewer scenes between family members, less inter-play between Dr. Smith and the Robot, and more action. It was far easier to write action than whimsy. Irwin was definitely action-oriented, while [Space story editor] Anthony Wilson was a very whimsical man. One of the shows Tony wanted to do was our takeoff on Tarzan, with the chimp being the intelligent being who provides all the brains for a very dumb Tarzan. That would have been filmed, had Lost in Space continued."

When the Robinsons and company returned for their third and final season, they were sporting new uniforms again. Anytime they change costumes like this, no mention is ever made in the story line where they suddenly appeared from. Just as in the season-two opener, they have to leave the planet quickly owing to imminent disaster. In this case the crisis is an approaching comet, which is going to strike the planet (actually stock footage from a Time Tunnel episode). Robby the Robot appears in this episode again but no one mentions his striking resemblance to the evil robotoid they encountered when reality was black-and-white.

By this time Guy Williams had become pretty fed up with the constant parade of Dr. Smith/robot/Will Robinson stories. Producers promised a change in direction in the third season and at first that seemed to happen. The stories were more well balanced among the performers in the first couple of episodes and Guy Williams had more to do. There was even a promise made to do stories featuring the other characters more prominently, such as in the first season, when Penny was the focal point of a couple of episodes. The second episode of this season ("Visit to a Hostile Planet") indicated positive things ahead. The Jupiter II actually returns to Earth. The fact that it's Earth in the year 1947, fifty years before they were launched, certainly presented its share of problems. Primarily, though, the story is not played for the drama otherwise inherent in the situation. The most interesting thing in the story is the actual exterior shooting (as opposed to being bound inside a soundstage) and the Jupiter II full-size mock-up, equipped with its little-seen landing gear.

The third season also introduced the space pod, a story device never seen before. It's certainly useful and no explanation of where it has been hiding up until then is even attempted. On the other hand, Star Trek did much the same thing when, after a few episodes of the first season, they suddenly introduced the shuttlecraft, something which would have proved vital in solving a dilemma in an episode just a couple of weeks before. But Star Trek wasn't bound to a strict set of circumstances like Lost in Space, where the Robinsons and crew were forced to rely on only what was in the Jupiter II when it was launched. Introducing a whole new function of the spacecraft after two years on the air is hardly making changes during its early formative period. Lost in Space borrows more stock footage from itself in "The Haunted Lighthouse" (episode sixty-six) by reusing footage of a space station from the second-season show "Wild Adventure." "Flight into the Future" comes up with some interesting ideas and uses them effectively. We see a rusted-out version of the Jupiter II and the story is more involved than usual. The space suits seen in this episode had been seen before by Irwin Allen fans on an episode of The Time Tunnel.

Daniel J. Travanti, of Hill Street Blues fame, guest starred in the 1967 Lost in Space episode "Collision of Planets" (episode sixty-eight) as the leader of a group of alien bikers! Episode seventy-two ("Two Weeks in Space") guest-stars an actress named Edy Williams. Although not well-known today, many fans actually see her every year when an annual event, the Academy Awards, is broadcast. In an obvious bid for self-promotion, Edy Williams shows up at the Oscars every year so that she can parade around for the cameras in some outlandish costume certain to make the late news broadcasts. Alien spacecraft stock footage used in this episode is courtesy of War of the Satellites, a Roger Corman drive-in movie from the fifties. The Jupiter II returns to Earth without most of the Robinsons in "Target: Earth" (episode seventy-five). It's an interesting story in which most of the actors are called upon to play inhuman imitations of them-selves, and the result is quite effective. The black-and-white footage of the Jupiter II encountering a meteor storm back in the pilot episode is reused here and is tinted to try to make it pass for colour footage. It works well enough. Sheila Mathews (the future Mrs. Irwin Allen) turns up in another Lost in Space episode when she appears in "Princess of Space," episode seventy-six. Sheila appeared in a number of Irwin Allen shows in guest star roles, as well as in some of his movies, including The Poseidon Adventure and The Towering Inferno.

Another very good third-year episode is "Time Merchant." Bob and Wanda Duncan were regular contributing writers to Irwin Allen shows and their script for this one is quite inventive. When Dr. Smith escapes back through time, he actually becomes himself in the hours before the Jupiter II is set to launch in 1997. In yet another twist, we learn that had Smith not sabotaged the Jupiter II, it would have been destroyed by an uncharted asteroid while the Robinsons were in suspended animation. Black-and-white footage from the pilot is used on a monitor screen, and continuity is actually followed in that the pre-takeoff sequences in 1997 featuring the robot have it speaking in its unemotional monotone from the early episodes before the voice became more personalized. Judy Robinson actually gets the rare spotlight in "Space Beauty" (episode eighty). Even though Judy and Major West seemed to be pairing off early in the series, her character kept getting pushed into the background and was all but forgotten. It was only fair that she be featured at least once in a while.

"The Great Vegetable Rebellion" remains perhaps the most infamous episode of Lost in Space. Even Bill Mummy has dubbed it the worst episode in the series. Actually it's one of those stories that's so bad it's good. Seeing Dr. Smith being turned into a giant stalk of celery is too strange for words. Stanley Adams as a human carrot is just plain silly. One has to wonder what possessed Peter Packer to write this episode. The final episode of the series, "Junkyard in Space" isn't bad, but it would've been more fitting had "Time Merchant" been the series finale.

There has been a rumour floating around Lost in Space fandom for many years that a fourth-season episode titled "The Secret of the Jupiter II" was filmed just before the series was cancelled. This rumour is false. Had such an episode existed, even if it hadn't aired after the third season of the show went off the air, it would have become part of the syndication package. Lost in Space was created to make money for its owners. Letting an episode sit on the shelf when it could be sold into syndication makes no sense. When BEAUTY AND THE BEAST was cancelled, there were some unaired episodes that existed, but they were quickly sold as part of the syndication package and aired on the Lifetime Channel.

The fact that there were unbroadcast episodes actually made the syndication package that much more attractive. While it's rare for a series to shoot episodes for the following year at the end of the current production season, it's not impossible and has, in fact, been done from time to time. Usually this happens when there's a threatened strike of actors or writers on the horizon. But this wasn't true of Lost in Space. And if there had been an unseen episode, one or all of the cast members would have mentioned it sometime in the past twenty years. Several years ago, Billy Mumy wrote a script for a Lost in Space reunion film. He had 20th Century Fox interested, but Irwin Allen refused even to discuss it or look at the script. He told Mumy that if the show were ever revived, that he (Allen) would write it. The project collapsed after that. The plot of Billy Mumy's proposed reunion show, which he titled "Epilogue," was as follows. Some fifteen years have passed and the Robinsons are still marooned on the last planet they landed on. There's no deuterium on the planet and so no way to refuel the spacecraft. The hardship of living on the planet for fifteen years has created some rifts in the family. The Jupiter II has been turned into separate dwellings for everyone. Don has married Judy and they have a son, who hangs around with Dr. Smith.

Meanwhile, Will is attempting to discover a substitute power source for the Jupiter II. When a small spacecraft crashes on the planet, Dr. Smith and the boy find it. This unites everyone in an effort to cannibalize the wrecked spacecraft in the hopes of finding a way to use it to power the Jupiter II. They manage to get the Jupiter II running again, but just as they're going to take off, another alien ship arrives. This is the mother ship of the small craft that had crashed. The crew of the smaller craft had been killed in the crash, but when the aliens discover that the Robinsons have plundered the crashed ship, they believe the family to be pirates. The aliens destroy both the robot and the Jupiter II and take the rest prisoner. The aliens take the Robinsons to a space station where there are representatives of every alien race. The misunderstanding is finally worked out, the robot is re-created, and the Robinsons are allowed to return to Earth, bringing the saga of Lost in Space to a happy resolution.

Irwin Allen's first complaint to any resolution of the series was that he believed that it would undercut interest in the series since it would have an ending. People would know how it turned out. But on the other hand, how satisfying can it be to watch an old series that you know has no resolution? After a while it seems pointless. Also, reportedly Allen didn't want to have to resort to doing a sequel to an old project, but wanted to continue to move himself by doing new things. He'd made a sequel to The Poseidon Adventure called Beyond the Poseidon Adventure, which had bombed badly and tarnished his image as a producer, coming as it did directly upon the heels of another flop he produced called The Swarm. Irwin Allen's last produced project had been the 1986 TV musical adaptation of Alice in Wonderland. He hadn't made anything after that and in 1990 had actually reconsidered the idea of a Lost in Space reunion film, following market research which indicated that there was a lot of interest in seeing one. He'd even scheduled a meeting with 20th Century Fox to discuss it but his failing health forced him to cancel the meeting. Several months later, Allen died.

With the film of Lost in Space at a cinema screen near you this summer, it seems a good time to look back at the classic tv series that inspired it. All the surviving cast members of the original show make cameo appearances in the movie except for Bill Mumy (Will Robinson) and Jonathan Harris (Dr. Smith) who, apparently, declined...

The star of the original series was Guy Williams, who played Professor John Robinson. He was born in Armando Catalano in 1924 to Italian immigrant parents and grew up in New York. Prior to Lost in Space, he was best known as Zorro in the late Fifties tv series of the same name. After LIS, he turned up several times in the tv Western Bonanza as Will Cartright and made a few European movies - such as Captain Sinbad in which he had the lead role, Damon and Pythias and The Prince and the Pauper - but the major film roles he hoped for did not materialise. In the early Seventies he discovered that Zorro re-runs had made him something of a star in South America and he continued to live both there and in California until he died in 1989 of a heart attack.

June Lockhart was the most accomplished screen actress to join the cast of Lost in Space in 1965. Born in New York in 1925 to acting parents Gene and Katherine Lockhart, she found success in the Forties and Fifties in films such as The Yearling, Meet Me in St. Louis, The Wolf of London (in which she had the lead) and was the mother in the Lassie tv series. It was a guest star part in Irwin Allen's Voyage to the Bottom of the Sea (in the episode The Ghost of Moby Dick) that led the producer to offer her the role of Maureen Robinson in his new Space adventure. Following Lost in Space, she continued to work consistently in tv and on film. In 1968 she joined the cast of the sitcom Petticoat Junction in which she appeared until 1970 and has continued to make guest appearances in sitcoms including Full House, Murphy Brown and Roseanne where she played herself! She guested in the BABYLON 5 episode The Quality of Mercy in 1994 where she famously didn't share a scene with her LIS co-star Bill Mumy. Among her most recent work are movies Sleep with Me, Dead Women in Lingerie,

The Big Picture and C.H.U.D. II - Bud the Chud. Mark Goddard, who played Don West, was born in 1936 in Scituate, Massachusetts. He was already known for the late Fifties western series Johnny Ringo and The Detectives when he landed a part in Lost in Space. When the series was cancelled, he became a theatrical agent and writer. He kept up his acting throughout, though, with guest appearances on The Fall Guy, Quincy and The Streets of San Francisco among others, and regular roles on daytime tv dramas One Life to Live and General Hospital. His films include Love In, The Death Squad, Blue Sunshine, Roller Boogie, the Science Fiction spoof Strange Invaders (in which June Lockhart also appeared) and Reason to Live. He's currently a lecturer at Chamberlain School in Middlesboro, Massachusetts, a residential school for children with behavioural problems.

Marta Kristen was born in Oslo, Norway in 1945, but grew up in Detroit, Michigan after being adopted by an American couple in 1949. When her family moved to California, she began appearing in tv shows Wagon Train, The Greatest Show on Earth and The Man from U.N.C.L.E. (in the episode The Neptune Affair). Guest appearances continued after LIS, in shows like Mannix and Project UFO, as well as in commercials. In the Eighties, much of her time was spent bringing up her family, but she also appeared in Trapper John, MD (the spin-off from *M*A*S*H), Fame, Wildside, Scare-crow and Mrs King and Remington Steele.

Her films include the Science Fiction romp Battle Beyond the Stars, Gemini Affair, Once, Beach Blanket Bingo, Savage Sam and Terminal Island. She now works mostly in the theatre on the West Coast of the USA. Angela Cartwright was born in Altrincham, Cheshire in England in 1952 and was one of the Von Trapp children (Brigitta) in the film version of The Sound of Music. By the time she joined Lost in Space as Penny, she'd already had a long run in a television series, Make Room for Daddy (aka, The Danny Thomas Show) from 1957 until 1964. She came back to star alongside Danny Thomas in the Seventies in Make Room for Granddaddy and made a series of films (including Beyond the Poseidon Adventure) and tv appearances. Guest spots include LOGAN'S RUN in the episode Sanctuary, The Love Boat, AIRWOLF, Alfred Hitchcock Presents and THE TWILIGHT ZONE.

She has also raised a family, written a book, A Child's First Journal, and owns a gift shop in North Hollywood called 'Rubber Boots'. Jonathan Harris was born in New York in 1914 to Russian immigrant parents. After a spell working in a drugstore, he became interested in acting and his early work was in the theatre. Harris' first television co-starring role was alongside Michael Rennie in the rare British/American co-production The Third Man, filmed half in the UK and half in the US between 1957 and 1960. He then spent two years on the sitcom The Bill Dana Show before being cast as the pompous and cowardly Dr Zachary Smith in Lost in Space.

Afterwards, he had mainly guest spots in tv shows which increasingly wanted to use him in Dr Smith-type roles. Notable guest appearances include THE TWILIGHT ZONE (Twenty Two and The Silence), LAND OF THE GIANTS, NIGHT GALLERY, Lancer, Bewitched, The Ghost and Mrs Muir, Sanford and Son and GET SMART. He also appeared as a 300-year-old space commander in the American Saturday morning kids show Space Academy. By the early Eighties he was working almost exclusively as a voice over artist and you can hear him on Disney's animated film A Bug's Life, cartoons Casper, Aladdin and Superman, and in BATTLESTAR GALACTICA. Billy Mummy was born in 1954 in San Gabriel, California and although he was already becoming a child star in the early Sixties, it was Lost in Space where he really made his name.

Thereafter he appeared in a series of films, including a significant supporting role in the Steve McQueen movie Papillon, and in THE TWILIGHT ZONE episode It's a Good Life. As an adult - shortening his stage name to Bill Mummy - tv guest appearances continued in shows such as Matlock, THE FLASH, SUPERBOY and The Rockford Files. His films include Three Wishes, Captain America, Double Trouble, Hand to Hold and THE TWILIGHT ZONE - the Movie. Meanwhile, he branched out into music and writing, forming a cult band, The Jenerators (whose most famous song, Fish Heads, has the unforgettable lyric, "fish heads, fish heads, roly poly fish heads... eat them up, yum!"). As a keen comics fan, Mummy has been writing comic strips for years, and created his own children's Science Fiction show (with Peter David), Space Cases which ran for two years. In the Science Fiction world he is now just as famous, if not more so, for playing Lennier in Babylon 5.

In March this year, during an interview on the LIS set, he revealed his plans now that the series is ending: "I have two albums coming out, my second solo album is coming out on Renaissance Records. My band, The Jenerators', second album is coming out in the summer on Renaissance Records. Mark Hamill [Star Wars' Luke Skywalker] and I have a Science Fiction movie of the week that we are developing right now together, Martha Coolidge is set to direct it and hopefully that will get up and running within a reasonable amount of time. I have another couple of television series ideas that I'm in the process of pitching through Hollywood. I'm writing. I have a couple of new comic books out right now, Aquaman #44 on DC and this summer's DC's summer annual, I have a story in that. And it's time to start auditioning again - so who knows what the future holds."

LOST ON EARTH

A TV reporter in Albuquerque, David Rudy, is demoted by his boss-from-hell, after an absurd incident with a chimp. David is romantically involved with his boss' daughter, and avoids being fired by agreeing to host a juvenile puppet show. The show turns out to have puppets which are really extraterrestrial stuck on our planet

USA Network has previously brought us "WEIRD SCIENCE" and "Duckman", both of which have something to recommend themselves. Well, two out of three ain't bad. Alien puppets and TV is a mix tried twice that I can think of off-hand: Johnny Jupiter (1953) and ALF (1986-90), but it doesn't accomplish what either of those did, let alone the conceptually-related MYSTERY SCIENCE THEATRE 3000. I'm trying to say something nice, but I can't come up with anything yet.

Produced by Tim Christenson (associate), Casting by Cecily Adams, Set Decoration - Michele Spadaro, Other crew - David Darwin (gaffer), Jeremy Launais (gaffer), Tom Tcimpidis (operator: Ultimatte - video control).

Aliens landed on Earth once again, only to get stuck in another dumb sitcom in this short lived Saturday night entry, David was a failed newscaster on station KTEE-TV who had been demoted to the hosting a kids' puppet show by tyrannical station manager George Greekin. Taken aback when the grotesque puppets began talking to him - and only him - he soon discovered that they were irritable aliens from an unpronounceable planet, who had mistakenly morphed into puppet form while watching the Muppets.

Now they wanted to get home. Smarmy, self-centered David, thinking they might help jump-start his career, agreed to keep their secret. Sherry was Greekin's uptight daughter and second-in-command, who bossed David around but secretly wanted to undress him, and Nick was David's addlebrained pal. The gross, foul-mouthed puppets were grouchy armless Ahab, sexy Angela, horny Bram, complacent Cubby, homesick Raleigh, and cross eyed Philippe, the ostensible leader.

If "3rd Rock From the Sun" and "The Muppet Show" were to conceive a child, the warped product would undoubtedly be "Lost on Earth," USA network's newest original comedy. Brought to you by creative people who obviously have strange but great senses of humor, "Lost on Earth" is a fresh and funny look at our planet and species.

The series stars Tim Conlon ("Party of Five") as Rudy, a failing newscaster who is demoted to host a kids' puppet show as his last chance at success. But in the shock of his life, he discovers that the puppets are really a group of bitter, dysfunctional aliens who are lost on earth. As Rudy fights to keep his job at the television station, the frustrated aliens desperately try to find a way back to their planet.

At first glance, "Lost On Earth" looks like a cheesy show with little or no entertainment value. Most adults would be appalled at the thought of watching goofy hand puppets not unlike the ones they worshiped in kindergarten. But with a strong group of actors and writing that can be witty and fresh at times, "Lost On Earth" provides moments of sparked humor.

The show has two major themes: One involving Rudy and his determined pursuit of success, and the other involving the aliens and their pursuit to get back home.

Whether the episode involves Rudy and his dealings with his boss (Paul Gleason from "The Breakfast Club") and his girlfriend Sherry (Stacy Galina), or the aliens trying to track down their Prince in order to return to their planet, there is always a level of silliness that people who are bored with the same old sitcoms can appreciate.

Conlon and Galina work well as a comic team, with Conlon playing the role of Mr. Ambition, and Galina portraying a girl who is used to getting everything she wants (her father is the station manager and Rudy's

LOST PLANET,THE

Holdren, who had starred in both Columbia and Republic's last batch of such films, is the reporter and saviour of the galaxy - the aim of world domination which had satisfied most of the villains of the thirties and forties being inflated in almost the same proportion as the budgets of the later serials were deflated. Fox is the mad scientist and Taylor the eccentric scientist he kidnaps. The end was a fitting one: seeking to escape, Fox boards his 'cosmojet' and orders his robot to set course for deep space, only to have the robot miscalculate and set a course for infinity.

This was the last of Hollywood's theatrically released Science Fiction serials. The producer for the serial was Sam Katzman, the cinematographer was William Whitley. A similar situation existed in Columbia's second trans-planetary adventure, THE LOST PLANET (1953), which again starred Judd Holdren, this time as newspaperman Rex Barrow, trying to put a spanner in the plans of would-be universe conqueror Dr Grood (Michael Fox), who, armed with a plethora of super-gadgets, had already established a dictatorship on the planet Ergro.

Miniatures were used this time for the flight of the space ships, but the script was both over- complicated and improbable, with scientific inaccuracies popping up (the most notorious being the ships of Rex Barrow and his allies stopping in space side-by-side, the occupants opening up their cockpits and exchanging devices and dialogue!) Like Captain Video, the serial's main claim to fame was its numerous 'super-scientific' devices, the majority of which debuted in Video, while others were created especially for THE LOST PLANET. With THE LOST PLANET, production of the SF/interplanetary serial came to an end -out as these serials went into constant reruns at theatres during the Fifties and Sixties, there was a young man in the audience named George Lucas who watched... and made his plans.

LOST PLANET,THE

Adapted by Angus MacVicar from his own 1952 radio production, the story charted the voyage of an assorted group of travellers to the lost planet of Hesikos in a spaceship powered by an atomic motor firing charged droplets of water from a bank of six enormous jets. On board were intrepid scientist Lachlan McKinnon, his assistant Lars Bergman, engineer Spike Stranahan, pretty secretary Janet Campbell, cockney cook Madge Smith, and McKinnon's 16-year-old nephew Jeremy Grant.

Besides the perils of space travel, such as a shower of meteorites, the crew also had to deal with the rival ambition of the villainous Hermanoff, before reaching their goal.

While television was in its infancy during the 1950s, radio drama still held a powerful hold over the imagination of its younger audience who tuned in week after week for the exploits of their adventurous heroes. The Lost Planet was one such radio serial which made the transition to the new medium in 1954, as six fortnightly episodes in the BBC's Children's Television slot - immediately before the early evening shutdown which existed as a kind of truce between broadcasters and parents! The producer for the series was Kevin Sheldon, the settings were created by John Cooper, the special effects were created by Reginald Jeffreys.

LOST ROOM, THE

The Lost Room is a science fiction television miniseries airing on the Sci Fi Channel. The series revolves around the titular room and roughly 100 everyday items from that room possessing unusual powers, such as a comb that can stop time for ten seconds or a pen that microwaves anything its tip touches. The series' protagonist, Joe Miller, is searching for these "Objects" in order to find his daughter, Anna, who disappeared inside of the Room. Once a typical rental unit at a 1960s motel along Route 66, the Room now exists outside of normal time and space.

Characters

Detective Joe Miller (Peter Krause) - A Pittsburgh detective who stumbles upon the existence of the Room. When his daughter becomes lost inside the Room, Joe sets out to get her back by tracking down the Objects.
 Anna Miller (Elle Fanning) - Miller's 8-year-old daughter. Anna gets lost inside the Room when the door is closed during Joe's fight with Weasel and the Room is "reset."

Detective Lou Destefano (Chris Bauer) - Joe's partner.

Karl Kreutzfeld (Kevin Pollak) - An Object collector who claims he is searching for the Glass Eye to cure his son Isaac's leukemia.

Jennifer Bloom (Julianna Margulies) - A member of the Legion, a group dedicated to finding all of the Objects and destroying them. Jennifer tries to warn Joe of the inherent danger of the Room and the Objects therein. Her brother, Drew, became obsessed with the Objects, and Jennifer believes that something in Room 9 of the Motel "destroyed" him.

Howard "The Weasel" Montague (Roger Bart) - A former philosophy professor turned small-time criminal. He's an obsessed collector of Objects who charts the Objects' relations to one another and introduced the idea of the Prime Object.

Dr. Martin Ruber (Dennis Christopher) - A forensic scientist who becomes obsessed with the Objects. Through his obsession, he learns of "The Order of the Reunification," a cabal which believes that the Objects are pieces of God and, by reuniting them, they will be able to communicate with God. By the end of the series, he believes he has become the 'prophet' of the objects after having a vision after staring at the Polaroid for a long amount of time.

Wally Jabrowski (Peter Jacobson) - A man who has the Bus Ticket. Joe encounters him first in a hospital where Wally is being treated for hemorrhoids. He has extensive knowledge about the Objects and their history.
 Suzie Kang (Margaret Cho) - A tough, chain-smoking, independent operator who works as an Object locator, selling information about the locations of the Room's Objects. She never touches them, as she recognizes the dangers that the Objects carry. Suzie runs her Object-tracking business out of the back of her mother's dry cleaning business.

Harold Stritzke (Ewen Bremner) - A man who has the Comb and the hobby of being a peeping Tom. He has become very paranoid after being pursued by the Order and others who want his Object for themselves.

Detective Lee Bridgewater (April Grace) - Joe's friend at the police department. Lee is slowly discovering the powers held by the Room and its Objects. She ultimately wants to clear Joe's name.

The Occupant, formerly Eddie McCleister (Tim Guinee) - Became an Object after The Event, leaving little trace of his past or belongings. Resided as "John Doe" in a medical care facility until found by Joe Miller.

The Sood (Jason Antoon) - A seedy, Las Vegas-based dealer of Object "Science" - pictures, videos, and artifacts relating to Objects - but never Objects themselves.

The Room

The Room is the nonexistent Room 10 at the dilapidated Sunshine Motel outside of Gallup, New Mexico. On May 4, 1961, at 1:20:45 p.m., something happened at the site of the Room which erased it and all its contents from history. This is referred to as "the Event" or "the Incident," and is thought to be the reason for the unusual properties of the Room and the Objects. At the time of the Event, the hotel was in decent condition and had a tenth room. One of the Objects, the undeveloped Polaroid picture, allows the user to view this tenth room as it was just before the Event by standing in its currently vacant location at the Sunshine Motel in the real world.

The Room can be accessed only by the holder of the Key. The Key will open any hinged door with a pin tumbler lock anywhere in the world, turning the door into a portal accessing the Room regardless of where that door would open normally. When exiting the Room, the door opens not to the original entry door but to any door that the holder of the Key has in mind, or to a random door if the user doesn't focus. To reach a specific door, the user must have a clear picture of the door and the area around it. The Room can thus serve as a way station for rapid travel between similar doors anywhere on Earth. The door used to access the Room must swing inward and have a pin tumbler lock. Doors with other types of locks or without a lock cannot be used to access the Room; sliding doors are unusable for travel in either direction.

The holder of the Key can bring other people into the Room, but they must leave together, because the Room "resets" when the door is shut without the key inside: everything is restored to the way it was originally, minus any Objects that are outside the Room. If something from outside the Room (including a person) is left in it when the holder of the Key leaves, it disappears. If Objects are left in the Room, they return to their original position when the Room resets. A benefit to this is that one can retrieve an Object from a safe or from within something it may be encased or hidden in (such as cement or clothing) by leaving whatever the Object is in inside the Room and resetting it.

Objects lose their special abilities while in the Room. They can also be destroyed while in the Room. However, according to the Occupant, a new Object will take the destroyed Object's place (he calls it the "conservation of Objects").

The Occupant states that there are "many Rooms;" thus, any non-Object left in the Room hasn't actually gone anywhere but is simply in a different iteration of the Room. The reset, in turn, represents a confluence of these "Rooms," allowing the Occupant (the only thing capable of consciously existing during a reset) to retrieve things lost during a reset provided they have a clear idea of what they wish to retrieve.

The Event

The Event is the nickname given to the moment in time that the Lost Room was created. It occurred on May 4, 1961, 1:20:45 p.m., and erased the room and all its contents from history. The reason behind this and the ultimate purpose of the Objects is left ambiguous, though the characters postulate two main theories to explain it. Even the man occupying the room at the time of the event is unclear about what happened, so which theory, if either, is correct remains a mystery. Both theories essentially lead to the same conclusion, but attribute the event to different causes.

One faction, "The Order of the Reunification," works under the belief that the Objects are pieces of God's mind or body (God having presumably died or been killed somehow) and reuniting them will allow them to communicate with God. More extreme versions of this view hold that reuniting the Objects will turn one into God or at least give that person God-like powers. Marten Ruber purports that the Occupant confirmed this particular theory for him in a vision, making him a prophet of sorts, but his near-death state from dehydration at the time throws this into question. Additionally, the Occupant himself shows no knowledge of the circumstances behind the event.

Another (though not necessarily contradictory) view of the phenomenon suggests that reality was somehow shattered at the location of the room, thus separating the room and everything in it from time and giving its contents abilities that realistically should be impossible. Should the items be collected and returned to the room by an individual, that person would then have complete control over reality. This theory works under the assumption that the one gathering the objects has the knowledge to utilize them properly. Since the Objects are just considered "tools," they would do no good if the user were unaware of how they function.

The Objects

Main article: Objects from The Lost Room

The Objects are powerful artifacts that serve as plot coupons to motivate the characters. The set consists of roughly 100 everyday items one would expect to find in an occupied motel room in the 1960s. They are indestructible and possess various other-worldly powers when taken outside the Lost Room, but do not work within the Room itself.

It should be possible to break the Objects within the Room itself. However, as seen when Joe Miller kills The Occupant - thus making Joe Miller the living Object, the energy of one Object upon destruction will transfer over to someone or something else in the room - presumably the one or something on the person who destroys the Object. This principle upholds the fundamental law that energy cannot truly be created nor destroyed.

Notes

The real-world doors opened by The Key to gain access to the Lost Room always open away from the person opening it. In the first episode of the miniseries, a closet in Joe's house had a door that opened inward, which is very unusual for a house closet, but it allowed it to be used to access the Room.

The mini-series was a possible back-door pilot for a television series.

The Lost Room is a fictional exploration of the relationship between reality and quantum mechanics, a branch of physics that has many aspects as strange as anything shown in the story. See, for example, Schrodinger's Cat.

LOST SAUCER,THE

While exploring the universe in the year 2369, androids Fi and Fum penetrate a time warp and land in present day Earth, 1975. Anxious to make new friends, they invite two earthlings, a boy name Jerry and his babysitter, Alice, aboard their space ship. Suddenly, as curious people begin to crowd around the alien craft, Fum is alarmed and activates the launch mechanism, sending the ship back into space, where they become lost in time. The stories are mainly about their adventures in strange, futuristic worlds, and Fi and Fum's attempts to return their unwilling passengers to Earth.

The Lost Saucer Theme Songs Lyrics

Out of the sky and out of time
 Coming to see all that they can find
 No where to go, Fi and Fum
 They've been to the moon
 Now they've been to the sun

Please, Please take me along

Now Listen

From the future of time
 They came to see
 How the world used to be
 But something went wrong deep inside
 And they can't get off this crazy ride

Please, Please someone help us

Where are we going in the Lost Saucer
 Somebody help us in the Lost Saucer
 Where are we going in the Lost Saucer
 Somebody help us in the Lost Saucer
 Where are we going in the Lost

saucer

The Lost Saucer is probably the most obscure Krofft show mainly because it was one that was never released on video like most other Krofft shows. It wasn't even shown on Nick at Nite's Pufapalooza marathon. I guess since it's been largely ignored, you could say that it's the "redheaded step child" of the Krofft television shows. This show aired between September 6, 1975 and September 4, 1976 on ABC, Saturday 9:00 - 9:30 am. After its cancellation, episodes of The Lost Saucer edited down to 20 minute segments were broadcast as part of The Krofft Supershow during the 1976-77 TV season.

Produced by Marty Krofft producer & Sid Krofft Producer.
 Art Direction by Herman F. Zimmerman.

Jim Nabors was best known from playing Gomer Pyle on both the Andy Griffith Show and the spinoff show, Gomer Pyle, U.S.M.C.. Ruth Buzzi was probably best known from her years on Laugh-In. She returned to Saturday morning television in 1977 to provide the voice for Gladys, a character she had played on a series of reoccurring skits on Laugh-In, on Baggy Pants and the Nitwits and she has continued doing voice work during the 80s and 90s. Like Buzzi, Alice Playten has been active doing voiceover work for various cartoons in the 80s and 90s. Larry Larsen continued working with the Kroffts, he appeared as a regular on the Donny and Marie Show and played Duncy on Magic Mongo.

LOST WORLD, THE

AKA: SIR ARTHUR CONAN DOYLE'S THE LOST WORLD

At the dawn of the 20th century, a band of adventurers are part of an expedition to prove the existence of a lost world isolated from the modern world. Disaster happens and the band find themselves trapped and isolated in this dangerous land with only the help of a young wild woman who was stranded in the land herself as a child. Together, the band fight to survive against the fearsome dinosaurs and other dangers that land has as they search for a way to escape.

A very predictable plot that has its hero, heroine and villains. So So effects with a predictable outcome. Usually when I see one of these adventure series' on TV, they almost always bore me. However, this is one of the few shows of its type I like. While it has almost nothing in common with the book or the film versions (Sir Arthur Conan Doyle's book, not the new one) except for the characters' names and the basic idea, it does manage to be a fairly entertaining show. It deals with the explorers running into ancient civilizations, odd characters, etc. over and over, but always comes up with another way to keep you interested. It also has some nice humor. True, the dinosaurs aren't believable, the stories sometimes predictable, and it seems the characters get killed over and over only to have them revived by some magical sorcerer or something close, but it's generally a good, fun adventure series.

Produced by Danny Rossner & Murray Shostak, Cinematography by Barry Gravelle, Film Editing by Isabelle Levesque, Art Direction - Sylvain Gingras, Costume Design by Nicole Pelletier, Production Management - Luc Campeau (unit production manager). Assistant Director - Thomas Parkinson (second assistant director), Blair Roth (first assistant director), Tanya van Blokland (third assistant director) and Sound Department - Richard Betanzos (sound re-recording mixer).

Special effects would appear to be all this series is, loosely based on Sir Arthur Conan Doyle's novel, has going for it. Showing on the AAN cable network and in syndication, apparently some nudity has been cut for syndication. The series did actually being airing ahead of the pilot, which is being shown on cable channel TNT (US). It's a bit like seeing BABYLON 5's "Midnight on the Firing Line" before "The Gathering" (hang on, that's what UK channel Channel 4 did!)

LUNA

Futuristic ITV children's comedy series of the 1980s with a language all its own that emerged as a cross between Orwellian doublespeak and Stanley Unwin's gobbledygook. Created by ex-Monkees drummer and Metal Mickey-taker Michael Dolenz, Luna was set 50 years in the future, when animals have been replaced by furry little robots and speech has evolved into 'techno talk'. This was a language designed for the computer age when words have to be abbreviated, linked or even lost in favour of numbers to allow more speedy electronic processing. So, there are 'dimi males' and 'dimi females' (children) and families are divided into 'habiviron groups', each person possessing an 'egotheticity' card which they lose at their peril. Time is measured in 'ticks', 'tocks' and 'tacks'; and for birthday, read 'batch day'. The episode titles alone reached sublime heights of techno talk.

Main characters in the series were Gramps, teenagers Brat and Luna (played in the first series by actress/pop star Patsy Kensit), Andy the robot and bureaucrat beings 80H and 40D.

Writer Colin Bennett, who also starred in the series, described Luna as a kind of morality play, conveying the idea that in future human ethics would still have to be observed - that the silicon chip would not be the answer to everything.

This show was created by Michael Dolenz who also created the SF comedy show METAL MICKEY. Luna lasted for two six-part series, in 1983 and 1984. Michael Dolenz was also the shows producer and director with Chris Tookey (Season Two), the executive producer for the series with Lewis Rudd and the writers were Colin Bennett and Colin Prockter, the designer was Tony Ferris. There series was seen on ITV in the UK.

Luna, the TV show, was a children's science fiction show shown on television in the UK which ran for two seasons in 1983 and 1984. Luna was also the name of the show's central character, played by a juvenile Patsy Kensit (1st season) and by Joanna Wyatt (2nd season). Luna was co-written by Colin Bennett who also starred in it. It was created and produced by Mickey Dolenz of The Monkees fame.

The show is about the domestic life of a family group set in the year 2040 - although in the setting, the characters (other than Luna's geeky brother) are not in fact a family.

A distinctive feature of the show was the language of "techno-talk", used by all of the characters, and described as an alternate version of English that had emerged to make it easier for computers to understand human's speech. Techno-talk is characterised by the formation of new words from stems that already exist in regular spoken English. For example, the characters live in a "habiviron", from habitat and environment. Similarly, school is "eduviron"; a child (as most of the characters are) is a "diminibeing", abbreviated to "dimini"; and "regrets!" and "gratitudes!" replace "sorry" and "thank you".

The series was extremely unusual for its time in being a science fiction series with a female lead character. Parts of the setting are also decidedly dystopic; in the first episode, Luna is threatened with execution for having lost her citizen's identity card.

There is no record of the series having been repeated since its first airing, but it has been confirmed that the entire series still exists in archive.

LUNAR JIM

Lunar Jim and his team , Rover the Robot Dog, Ripple the Super Space Mechanic, Eco the Farmer, and T.E.D. the Technical Equipment Device live on Blue Moon L22, the second-to-last moon on the edge of the Milky Way. Focusing on exploration and inquiry, Lunar Jim intends to promote such life skills as problem-solving, persistence, creativity, and cooperation, with an emphasis on "pre-science skills". His rallying cry is: "Let's get lunar!"

Lunar Jim - Spaceman, Explorer, Average Guy, Hero

Jim's mission: to explore and settle this strange and wonderous new place.

Lunar Jim has a true adventure's soul and he brings the enthusiasm of a child to all of his missions; their's no crater to far, no cave too deep for Jim. A born leader, he is able to take charge without being bossy and he always puts others before himself. Jim is the focus of each story and carries the emotional weight of the series. Even though he doesn't always have the answers, he'll never give up until it's mission-accomplished. Through his ever-lasting optimism, Jim teaches us that failure, and recovering from it, are the first step to real empowerment that comes from learning.

But, above all, Jim sees the humour in everything and can laugh at himself. Jim has a variety of cool vehicles at his disposal but his go-to favourite is the zippy Lunar Scrambler.

Ripple - Super Space Mechanic

Ripple's the lunar engineer, which means she's responsible for keeping all the systems and machines functioning properly. She keeps all the vehicles ship shape and the 2 robots (Rover and Ted) spic and span. Eco- Space Farmer and Friend of Nature

Eco is Moona Luna's resident farmer. He manages the fanatasic lunar Ecodome that grows the moon community's fresh fruit and vegetables. Eco loves to do things in an organic, enviromentally friendly way. In fact, he insists on it. He's got a bunch of cool lunar tools to work with, but Eco prefers to use the good old-fashioned green fingers.

Eco can't stand the thought of eating the artificial food pastes from Earth when he's got some lovely peas coming along. Eco is constanly finding all sorts of interesting new plant species on the Moon; you can smell his famous moon melons a mile off, while his strange beanstalkes always seem to get into places they shouldn't be!

Eco is kept company by his 2 animals: Dolores the hen, and Daisy they cow.

Eco explores the moon and collects his samples aboard the fabulous Lunar Hopper.

M.A.N.T.I.S.

Dr. Miles Hawkins was a prominent and wealthy black research scientist who became paralysed by bullet to the spine. In an effort to enable himself to walk again, he creates a exo-skeleton. The exo-skeleton not only allows him to walk but also gives him enhanced strength. The suit is christened M.A.N.T.I.S. which stands for Mechanically Augmented Neuro Transmitter Interception System He uses the suit to fight crime. Since Hawkins understandably hates bullets and violence. he creates knockout darts and with the Chrysalid., a flying car which can also travel underwater, sets out to prevent a gang war from destroying the town.

The pilot movie was politically correct with most all of the supporting cast being black. It was also something of a mystery as to the identity of M.A.N.T.I.S., with Hawkins being the least likely person since he is crippled. A good portion of the pilot involves a pair of TV reporters attempting to deduce the M.A.N.T.I.S.'s true identity. Hawkins' assistants in the pilot were a pair of African exchange students. When M.A.N.T.I.S. returned as a regular series in the fall, it was with a complete overhaul. Although the basic premise remained the same the only character who made the transition from the pilot movie to the series was Miles Hawkins / M.A.N.T.I.S. Continuity established in the pilot was ignored with a new origin of the M.A.N.T.I.S. being presented.

The name of M.A.N.T.I.S. now comes from the fact that in costume Hawkins looks like the insect variety of the mantis. Hawkins' home base was also changed from Ocean City to Port Columbia. The predominantly black supporting cast was all gone. Hawkins' new associates were: John Stonebrake, an old college friend of Hawkins' who held one of the top positions at Hawkins Technology. Stonebrake helped Hawkins develop the technology for M.A.N.T.I.S. and monitored Hawkins' condition in their secret underground headquarters. Hawkins' second assistant was Taylor Savidge, a young bicycle courier whose idea it was to use the M.A.N.T.I.S. technology to fight crime. Savidge and Stonebrake did not get along very well and were constantly on each other's nerves.

The remaining regular character was Lt. Leora Maxwell of the Port Columbia Police Department. Leora and Hawkins became romantically involved, something that put Hawkins ill at ease. Leora often came to him for scientific help in solving police cases, something he was glad to give. M.A.N.T.I.S., however, was wanted by the police, who considered him a vigilante. Leora was put in charge of a task force created to capture the M.A.N.T.I.S. and bring him to justice.

The ratings of the series were not all that good and in an effort to boost them several changes were made half way through the season. Leora was made aware of the M.A.N.T.I.S.'s true identity, something that at first strained her and Hawkins' relationship. She reluctantly became a member of the M.A.N.T.I.S. team. The plots also shifted, where as early episodes often pitted M.A.N.T.I.S. against common criminals later episodes had more fantastic elements. Time travel and invaders from an alternate dimension were featured. The changes however were too little, too late, and M.A.N.T.I.S. was cancelled.

Prologue: This is the scientific journal of Dr. Miles Hawkins, to be published in the event of my death. I know when the truth is known, people will wonder why I felt it necessary to create the M.A.N.T.I.S.. The reality--I never did. The M.A.N.T.I.S. asked his own creation and I could not refuse him. 1994 M.A.N.T.I.S. (movie that preceded the series) M.A.N.T.I.S. = Mechanically Augmented Neuro Transmitter Interception System.

M.I. HIGH

Threats to British national security are at an all-time high. The old school spies have had their day and high ranking MI9 agent, Lenny Bicknall (Danny John Jules, Red Dwarf) must find secure and untraceable identities for his officers. His solution: to establish a ring of undercover agents in a place the enemy will never suspect, an inner city high school.

The 21st century faces a new kind of threat as the old-school spies have had their day. MI9 have created a new breed of skilled undercover agent hidden in a place no villain will ever suspect an inner-city high school. Following the success of their last children's series, the Emmy Award-winning The Magician's House, and the Bafta-winning Spooks, comes M.I. High a new, original children's spy series for CBBC created by Keith Brumpton. Newcomers Bel Powley, Moustafa Chousein-Oglou and Rachel Petladwala star as the highly-trained spies, led by high ranking MI9 agent Lenny Bicknall, who juggle school work with saving the world from the villainous Grand Master and his mob of outlandish rogues.

Danny John-Jules who play's Lenny, is more famous for his role as the "Cat" in RED DWARF.

The series was produced by Kerry Appleyard.

Trivia.

In episode one "The Sinister Priminister", the prime minister is played by a fellow RED DWARF crew member, Robert Llewellyn who played Kryten in Red Dwarf, an androind, and plays an android in M.I. High.

The first episode was broadcast on BBC1 on Monday nights in the UK and the next episode was followed at 5.30 on satellite tv station CBBC.

M.I. High is a CBBC children's adventure series following the exploits of a group of inner-city high school kids, Blane, Daisy and Rose, who work as undercover spies. The series is shown on Mondays at 5pm on BBC One with the next episode shown straight after on the CBBC Channel. The previous two episodes are shown every Sunday at 4pm on the CBBC Channel.

The spies are led by M.I.9 agent Lenny Bicknall (Danny John-Jules), who also poses as the school caretaker. All other spies' covers have been rumbled and the only spies left undercover are school children still being trained.

Lenny summons his spy taskforce by means of a small flashing light at the top of the kids' pencils, which is disguised to look like an eraser. Blane, Daisy and Rose must come up with some excuse to get themselves out of class. They then go to the caretaker's storeroom and then descend by means of a high-speed elevator to a deep underground spy headquarters where they learn about their latest mission from Lenny.

M.I. High is produced for the BBC by the independent production company Kudos, who also produced the hit BBC spy drama Spooks. It follows in the success of Young Bond and the book/film Stormbreaker. M.I. High was recorded in high definition.

The first series of the programme was filmed at Eastbury Comprehensive School's old site (Dawson Road site), with the second filming at Christchurch School.

He owns a white rabbit which he refers to as General Flopsy. The Grand Master's face is never seen on-screen; his features always being concealed in shadows. He has grey hair and is possibly in his late fifties/early sixties, but beyond that very little can be determined. On deciding to retreat to his hidden bunker on the floor of the Indian Ocean towards the end of "The Fugitive", the Grand Master turns down Agent Zero's offer to carry on the running of S.K.U.L., preferring to leave the job in the capable hands (or should that be paws?) of General Flopsy instead! However, bearing in mind that he has befriended Stewart, what could this mean for the future of M.I. High?

Played by: Mark Bagnell. Current Status: OK

Spy Gadgets

During the series, Blane, Daisy and Rose make use of a variety of spy gadgets, all of which, with the exception of the handheld weather machine, were specially created by M.I.9. (One suspects that the MI5 agents in Spooks would probably love to be able to use these fantastic devices in their own missions!) These are as follows:

High-speed Elevator Hidden within the caretaker's storeroom at Saint Hope's School, and used in all episodes by Blane, Daisy and Rose to descend to M.I.9's underground headquarters. It is accessed by means of a thumb-print reader hidden behind a dummy light switch outside the door. Once inside, a previously hidden lever like that in a railway signal box is pulled, a green arrow pointing downwards illuminates on a fake paint tin, and the elevator begins its speedy descent. The elevator also seems to have a quick-change device (although this is never explained in detail on-screen), as during the journey the spies' clothing can be seen to change from their school uniforms to casual black outfits, as well as apparently swapping Rose's spectacles (which she wears in civilian life) for contact lenses. Bearing in mind that the elevator appears to be the only access from the caretaker's storeroom to M.I.9 headquarters and back, presumably the aforementioned quick-change facility can be negated when Blane, Daisy and Rose set off on their missions, otherwise they'd only end up back in school uniform again!

Weather Machine The Weather Machine, as developed by Sonya Frost, controlled the weather by means of transmitters located in different national landmarks around the world. A smaller handheld device had a smaller range. Both machines can produce all manners of weather. The handheld version was used by Blane and Roger Powel and the large scale device by the Grand Master in "The Big Freeze".

Code Breaker A green calculator-like device with wires connected to suckers. When the suckers are attached to any encoded or locked device, the code breaker works out the correct combination or code. Used by Rose in "The Big Freeze".

Laser Lipstick A laser contained in a lipstick tube-style casing. Used by Daisy in "The Sinister Prime Minister".

Pencils Standard pencils at first glance, but when missions are received the small eraser on the end flashes. The pencils also work as walkie-talkies. Used by all agents in most episodes.

False Nail Cameras Five fake nails containing miniature cameras. Used by Daisy in "Eyes on Their Stars".

Sonic Detonators Three button badges with harmless looking motifs on them, like a PEACE slogan and a smiley face, but which are actually sonic detonators. Used by Blane, Daisy and Rose in "Spy Animals".

Forcefield Pods At first glance, these appear to be ordinary traffic warning cones, but can actually generate an invisible forcefield around the required area, in this case, the crashlanded 'flying saucer's' landing zone, which can be activated/deactivated as needed by remote control. Used by Daisy and Rose in "The Fugitive".

Strong String: This is a badge-like device worn on Daisy's chest, and when she pulls it a long strong string comes out. She can then attach it to her headband and throw it over a high wall or fence; it'll then grip to it and she can climb up and over. Used in "The Power Thief".

MACH BARON

AKA: SUPER ROBOT

The series was retooled after Red Baron the following year, a follow-up in which orphan Yo Arashida pilots the new Mach Baron robot in order to defeat the evil robot army of Dr. Rarahstein.

Plot #2

While on a vacation cruise with his parents Yu Arashida witnessed the death of his parents when a gigantic robot attacked his ship ultimately destroying it along with everyone on board, Yu was the only survivor. Flash forward several years into the future and Yu is now a grown up man being trained by his grandfather to pilot Earth's ultimate defender, Mach Baron, a giant red robot designed by his late father and constructed by his Grandfather.

After his grandfather is assassinated by an evil organization whose goal is to conquer the world Yu becomes Mach Baron's pilot and along with the members of KSS (Kokusai Kagaku Kyojo Tai) will fight to defend the Earth from falling into the hands of these evildoers and their giant robot machines.

Ratings, however were not impressive as for Red Baron, and the series was truncated after just 26 episodes. The series was produced by Akira Yasuda, Harutoshi Kawaguchi, Toshio Ueda and Tetsuya Kobayashi.

The series was preceded by RED BARON and followed by GANBORAN

I remember watching Mach Baron when I was growing in Puerto Rico, back then a compilation of episodes from the series was dubbed into Spanish and released under the title Mazinger-Z Robot of the Stars. Why did they release a Mach Baron movie with the name of "Mazinger-Z" when this program has no real connection to Go Nagai's super robot? (although its worth mentioning that the influence of Go Nagai's super robots is definitively there)

Back in the early 1980's Mazinger-Z, Great Mazinger, Jeeg, Gakeen, Gaiking etc were huge in Latin America, in fact most of the local TV programming for children was made up of several different Japanese shows including such rarities as Gordian and Dorvac. As these shows became ever more popular many production companies started to shop around for films that they could play in the local cinemas, which brings us to the subject of this review, Mach Baron. The movie which seems to have been dubbed in Spain played locally in several theaters to the approval of many young super robot fans.

Even when I was very young I knew that this movie had no relation to Mazinger-Z but it would not be till many years later that I would come to discover its Japanese roots.

Mach Baron's setup is typical of productions from this era: bad guys appear with new evil robot of the week which at first always beats the KSS team, but is ultimately defeated by the good guys after they figure out some weakness in the robot's weapons/strategy based on their previous encounter. However when one looks at everything else in that makes up this program it immediately rises above many other tokusatsu shows. The special effects, the miniature work, the robot costumes and the rocking soundtrack really make this a memorable hero show!

I have to commend the folks who put together the enemy robot costumes for this show as they are outstanding (some more than others). As I watched various episodes of Mach Baron I started to look forward to the introduction of the next enemy robot that would take on the KSS. The fights between these machines of evil and out heroes are really spectacular featuring huge explosions and a lot of great miniature work.

One of the few problems that I had with this program was the way in which Mach Baron's weapons were put to use, for example, whenever a weapon that's stored in the head is called into use the head of the robot starts to spin around for several seconds before it can fire its attack. This happens every time our hero calls out one of Mach Baron's weapons. There are some other silly business that I won't get into it (like the henchmen who wear football player costumes), but suffice to say that they don't take too much away from the show.

I highly recommend Mach Baron to fans of old school tokusatsu and to new fans who want to see what all the fuzz about these old shows is. I think that this shows is very underrated amongst fans of the tokusatsu genre so if your are a collector looking for something new to watch make sure to add this gem to your collection.

MACHINE MAN

AKA: NEBULA MASK

AKA: SEIUN KAMEN MASHINMAN

AKA: SEIUN KAMEN MACHINEMAN

A young alien man named Nikku (Japan's answer to Kal-El) arrives on Earth with his sidekick Ball Boy (a talking baseball with eyes and hands that would fly around attached by visible wires) and his main objective is to study the human race. His final report must have focused on how all children from planet Earth were unbelievably stupid. He also has the ability to transform himself into a more colorful variation of Robocop named Machine Man, a robotic super-hero with a transparent cape that looked a bit too much like a shower curtain. Machine Man's powers included morphing into a mini-ship named Space Colony, using all sorts of weapons, and jumping to absurd heights. And no, he didn't have a giant robot.

What would Nikku do in his spare time? He would assume the secret identity of Ken Takase, basically Nikku playing dumb with glasses (I told you he was Japan's answer to Kal-El) thinking he actually looks more ridiculous this way than as Machine Man. He would also hang out with a bunch of kids (the show's target audience of course) who practiced in a baseball field. He did hang out with these kids a bit too much if you ask me, but let's not go there. Since all of these shows need a damsel in distress, we have photographer Gunko, Japan's answer to Lois Lane, who befriends Ken and the children. Gunko is played by the same actress who played android helper in Juspion, and it's an ongoing joke among Brazilian tokusatsu fans that she was mastering the art of playing the useless female sidekick who did nothing.

But who are the villains you may ask? Well, the main villains are an evil organization named TENTACLE, led by Professor K, an old diabolical mastermind who looks exactly like Shang Tsung from the first Mortal Kombat game. His major ambition in life is not to take over the world (which he still eventually wants) but to kill all children. You see, he and his android Monsu hate and despise children in every single way, more than the creators of this show. And since this is a children's show after all, no serious harm were allowed to come to the show's child actors, so Professor K was stuck with coming up with some of the strangest (and stupidest) plans in tokusatsu history. These include erasing all books so that the children won't be able to read, make the kids cry hysterically by showing them simulated footage of their parents getting hit by cars so that TENTACLE could make crystals out of their tears, and my personal favorite, removing children's bellies and turning them into balloons (?) so that the children would lose their balance and not be able to stand up.

Every episode would follow this formula: Professor K would whine about how much he hated children, plan a horrible plan that has no chance of succeeding, and send a disguised android to do it. The stupid child cast of the show would fall for the plan and either one of the kids or Gunko would uncover it. Then, the android would assume its true form and chase Gonku/the kids to an isolated area. It was around then when Nikku from somewhere would remove his portable radio and yell: Machine Man!, triggering his transformation. That's what he said in the Portuguese dub, in Japanese I'm sure he probably said: Oh well.. Here we go, again!. After the transformation is done, he'd morph into the Space Colony and fly around Tokyo in what was basically the same footage in every episode, even when he was right next to the location he needed to go (we need to sell these toys folks!). Well, Machine Man would land right before the android was about to do something horrible (like take away the kid's candy), fight him/her, and finally finish him/her off with the always handy laser sword. There is the never-ending tokusatsu question: Why can't he use the sword right at the beginning? Because then there would be no fight. Well, end of day, villain defeated as we see Professor K whining again, and we end the story in a freeze frame with Nekku, Gunko and the kids smiling. Hooray! Then we would cut to the final segment where Machine Man, inside his secret submarine lair, would read letters sent by fans that didn't exist with the help of Ball Boy. I always wanted to send those letters, until I realized the address never showed up in the screen. The show was made 9 years before in a different nation of course, but what did I know?

In the middle of the show, Machine Man managed to destroy the android Monsu, putting a definitive end to TENTACLE. Professor K decided to take a break from making idiotic plans in order to humiliate children (the actor probably realized the only one being humiliated was himself and that there might still have been hope to save his career) and we finally meet his replacement: His young granddaughter named Lady M. Yes, that was her real name, Lady M. She then founded her own evil organization named OCTOPUS (she has the same originality as the writers of these shows) and yes, she hated children too. In fact, she was allergic to them and her nose would always glow red like Rudolph at the end of every episode. And no, her plans were no better than her grandfather's.

After following the exact same formula for the show's second half we finally reach the show's action-packed finale: Professor K returns (the actor finally realizing his career was scarred for life opted to just go out with a bang) and teams up with his granddaughter for the final showdown with Machine Man. Needless to say, Machine Man wins, and the two finally realize that children are not that bad and that all this time they did all those stupid plans for nothing. It took them nearly 40 episodes to realize what we all did in the very first one: They wouldn't make it to the third season of the 1960s Batman.

Today Machine Man is remembered for being an awful show. It's right up there with Bishoujo Kamen Poitrine (that one deserves a whole review of its own) as one of the silliest super-hero shows to ever come from Japan to the land of samba, and once you learn its history you'll see why. It was created by Shotaro Ishinomori, yes, the creator of Kamen Rider. I believe he was asked by television producers to create a super-hero that appealed to even younger demographics than the ones on TV at the time (is that even possible? And legal?) and after smoking some good stuff and realizing he hated children, he came up with Machine Man. The show was a monster hit in Japan (huh?) so he was soon asked to create other shows of the same kind, which would lead to the creation of Takashi Miike's favorite inspirational television series, also known as Poitrine. But let's not go there for now.

Machine Man was aimed at children, so its best to get the verdict from me when I was 9: Yes, this show was cool. Watching it today, it's amazing how little a child cares for the special effects and storylines. Even knowing deep inside we knew it was the exact same thing every week (with all the recycled footage) we still tuned in every day to watch Machine Man defend the kids. And we all wanted him to read our letters too... The show's main objective was to sell as many Space Colony toys as possible so you can't walk in expecting Battleship Potemkin. Say what you want, but this show was never, ever boring and all the episodes (all clocking around a bit less than 20 minutes, longer than the time they took to be written) moved with the pace of lightning.

The theme song performed by, who else, Mojo was one of the best from the 80s right up there with Dynaman and Juspion, and the chant near the end with the background vocals by children was catchier than Ebola. To make things better (or worse if you were a parent) the theme song would get played in the episodes over and over again to the point where all children watching the show knew it by heart even knowing they had no idea what it meant.

And let's save the best of the last: Ball Boy how can we ever forget Ball Boy? Voiced in the Japanese version by Machiko Soga (more known as Rita Repulsa), Ball Boy is one of the most bizarre sidekicks in tokusatsu history. It would not only serve as the annoying little helper, but Machine Man would use the poor thing as a weapon as well by throwing it into the enemy. In order to make it a convincing effect, the director would repeat the 0.5 second shot of the ball flying towards the screen again, and again, and again, and again in order to make us believe it was going in super-speed. Poor thing, by the end of the show it must have been a mess. And I still have no idea if it was supposed to be a boy or a girl, but then again, who cares? It deserved its own spin-off show.

So yeah, Machine Man was one of those horrible shows we all love. But it's as good as Kamen Rider Black when compared to its spin-off Poitrine I wish I could talk about that one now, but until then one needs to prepare himself psychologically.

The original music for the series was by Yuji Ohno. Special Effects by Nobuo Yajima (special effects supervisor)

MADAN SENKI RYUKENDO

AKA: MAGIC BULLET CHRONICLES RYUKENDO

The town of Akebono looks just like any other suburb in Japan, lively and homely. But in reality it is one that is plagued by monsters. A novice polieman by the name of NARUKAMI KENJI arrives at his new posting and gets inadvertently drawn into it. Just when he is about to lose his life, he comes across a mysterious sword. With a will of its own and the ability to speak, this magical sword is called GEKI-RYUKEN. 'Explanation later! Pull me out and insert the key!' Kenji follows its instructions and transforms into RYUKENDO. With a slash of the blade, he defeats the enemy. Dumbfounded by what just happened, another gun-wielding warrior, RYUGANO or FUDOU JUSHIROU appears before him. And so begins Kenji's dual roles as the town's policeman, and a member of the secret organization, SHOT. Together with Fudou, they protect the town from any threats.

Magic Bullet Chronicles Ryukendo (Magic Bullet Chronicles Ryukendo? Madan Senki Ryūkendō) is a Japanese tokusatsu airing from 2005-2006. It is Takara and We've Inc's first attempt at a Sentai-like show. The program airs at 7:00 AM on TV-Aichi.

Madan Warriors

Kenji Narukami (Narukami Kenji)/Madan Swordsman (God) Ryukendo: Kenji moved to Akebono, and was mistaken for a demon upon arrival. After defending a dog in the street, he found himself confronting a Majuu, being chosen by the GekiRyuKen, and becoming Ryukendo. Since then, he works at SHOT, saving the day more often than not. Brave Leon is Ryukendo's Juuou. Later on, Ryukendo gains an advanced form, God Ryukendo, who uses the God GekiRyuKen and is all around stronger than Ryukendo. God Leon is God Ryukendo's Juuou.

Fire/Burning Ryukendo: Ryukendo's first powered-up form, activated by the Fire Key. In this form, Ryukendo can call for his personal Juuou, Fire Kong. Fire Ryukendo utilizes a variety of flame-based attacks. God Ryukendo's powered-up form, similar to Fire Mode, is Burning Ryukendo, who has Burning Kong as his Juuou.

Aqua/Blizzard Ryukendo: Ryukendo's second powered-up form, activated by the Aqua Key. Aqua Shark is Ryukendo's Juuou in this form, and he now has powers over water and ice. When God Ryukendo uses the Blizzard Key, a similar form to Aqua Mode is granted. Blizzard Ryukendo's JuuOu is Blizzard Shark.

Thunder/Lightning Ryukendo: When Kenji first used this form, he found himself unable to henshin. Eventually, though, he not only got the Thunder Key working, but also found his Juuou, Thunder Eagle. Thunder Ryukendo's powers include lightning and electricity. Lightning Ryukendo is God Ryukendo's power-up mode, similar to Thunder Ryukendo. Lightning Eagle is Lightning Ryukendo's Juuou.

Ultimate Ryukendo: A gold and silver power up that has yet to make an apperance. It will use the Ryu Juuou. Juushirou Fudou (Fudou Juushirou)/Madan Gunman (Magna) Ryugunou: Ryugunou made his entrance before Ryukendo did, sending an army of Tsukaima to a quick defeat. Fudou and GouRyuGun have a strong bond, and it was eventually revealed that Fudou and Kenji are a combi destined by fate after Kenji fell through a time-slip. Fudou suffers daily injuries in battle, and loses GouRyuGun in an attack, but returns with the Madan Magnum as Magna Ryugunou, a stronger form. Magna Wolf is Magna Ryugunou's Juuou.

Koichi Shiranami (Shiranami Koichi)/Madan Fighter Ryujinou: Koichi isn't a member of SHOT, but rather, a mysterious wanderer, armed with the ZanRyuJin. He's not on the side of the Jamanga either, as he demonstrated in his high-octane entrance battle with Lady Gold. Eventually, he comes to work with Kenji and Fudou. Koichi lived in England when he was a kid, and Commander Amachi of SHOT wanted his parents to work on the Madan Suits for Ryukendo and Ryugunou. Koichi lost his parents in the explosion, but kept his mother's pendant. He stole the Madan Ryu Core and made himself Ryujinou. When Beyond Dark revived spirits of the dead, Koichi gave his mother a heath flower he brought from Kaori, and realized that he needs to fight for himself, not for revenge. RyuJinOu's JuuOu is Delta Shadow.

Juuou

A JuuOu is an animal spirit of the Earth that assists a Madan Ryu warrior in combat. They, like all other things the Madan warriors use, are summoned through special keys, and often assist their partner through their special transformations. When Kenji and Fudou power up to God Ryukendo and Magna Ryugunou, their JuuOu become ChouJuuOu, stronger versions of their previous forms.

Brave/God Leon: Kenji's first Juuou. Incredibly prideful. Performs a "Trinity Madan Slash" in combination with him, and transforms into a motorcycle, the Leon Trike. God Leon is an upgraded form of Brave Leon used by God Ryukendo.

Buster/Magna Wolf: Fudou's only Juuou. Like Brave Leon, transforms into a motorcycle, the Wolf Bike. When Fudou received his upgrade to Magna Ryugunou, Buster Wolf got his upgrade as well. A faster, stronger, better-armed version of Buster Wolf. Buster or Magna Wolf can perform a "Trinity (Magna) Dragon Cannon" in combination with (Magna) Ryugunou and the (Magna) GouRyuGun.

Fire/Burning Kong: Kenji's second Juuou, who had trouble trusting him at first. Fire Kong has brute strength and can transform into a cannon that Fire Ryukendo straps to his back, which is used to defeat the strongest of Majuu. Burning Ryukendo's partner, a stronger version of Fire Kong, is Burning Kong, who is armed with additional cannons for extra firepower. Transforms into the Burning Cannon.

Aqua/Blizzard Shark: Kenji's third Juuou. A speedy, swimming shark who transforms into the Aqua Board, a hoverboard that can move at incredible speeds. The Juuou of Blizzard Ryukendo, an upgraded form of Aqua Shark, is Blizzard Shark, who is even more streamlined for greater speeds. Blizzard Shark transforms into the Blizzard Board.

Thunder/Lightning Eagle: Kenji's fourth Juuou. While sealed away at first, he eventually was released to Kenji's aid. When he combines with Kenji, Thunder Wing Ryukendo is created, who can equal Shadow Wing Ryujinou in aerial combat. Lightning Eagle is a powered-up form of Thunder Eagle used by Lightning Ryukendo.

Delta Shadow: Koichi's Juuou. An intelligent, stealthy, crow-like Juuou that combines with Koichi, making him Shadow Wing Ryujinou, gifted with the ability to fly. Alternately, Delta Shadow can transform into a motorcycle, the Shadow Bike.
