Introduction

Welcome to the ultimate Science Fiction Television Encyclopaedia, through these pages you will find details of every (hopefully) science fiction show ever made. At least that is the main goal of this book.

The basis of this information is stored in a database, and is therefore almost limitless in the amount of information we can store. However time is always the limiting factor, so for the most part we don't go into a large amount of detail on each book, indeed shows like Doctor Who can warrant a book of their own, and in fact it does.

Many books on the subject has been published, but all have been geared towards only particular countries or languages, most work has been down in the English Language and Japanese, but only limited amount in other languages. We present in here as much is as feasible for many countries outside of the English Language.

We cover over 1013 science fiction television show, totalling 1.4 million words, for many shows we have episode titles and for some episode guides.

How we deal with non-English shows

For shows outside of the English language, we have for the main part tried to show an interpreted title instead of it's original title, where this hasn't been possible we have gone for the native language. With many non-english language shows you may find that they have alternative names, especially the case with Japanese shows where interoperations of titles can vary. If you are having problems finding a show, please check out the Alternative title section to see if the show is maybe shown under a different title.

What gets included or excluded

This is a difficult question to answer, as many factors come into play for the scope of this book. First what gets included in the database, for this project we include television shows with more than one episode, TV mini-series & cinema-serials (shows originally aired in the cinema, many later shown on TV).

What doesn't get included are one-off TV specials, pilot episodes that didn't make it into a series, TV movies, cartoons/anime/3D.

What is Science Fiction?

So what gets a show into this database, any show that has a science fiction theme gets included, this range from aliens, technology, time travel, superpowers etc. A small but significant number of shows that are a mix of Fantasy and Science Fiction are included, and an even smaller number of Fantasy related shows.

Science Fiction from around the world.

United Kingdom

The UK's history with Science Fiction television started with live broadcasts in 1948, mostly dominated with children's science fiction in dispersed with adult SF. However the UK first started on a more adult theme with shows like THE QUATERMASS EXPERIMENT and its sequels. But mostly famous for Doctor Who starting in 1963 which would start off a golden age of Sci-Fi in the UK, from the 1960, stretching into the 1970s.

UK Sci-Fi production was low in the 1950s, high in the 1960s and 1970s, but was in drastic decline in the 1980s, this continued into the 1990s with the cancellation of Doctor Who in 1986. The 1990s was mainly involved in production children's science fiction. By the 21st Century almost no science fiction television was being produced in the UK, but Doctor Who was restarted by the BBC in 2005.

United States

The United States is the world largest producer of science fiction television, with a mix of both adult and children's science fiction. The U.S. history in SF started before television began, with the serialized shows of Superman, Flash Gordon et al, released for cinema audiences, later to be shown on television.

When television began in the US, TV carried on with Sci-Fi heroes such as Captain Video, and soon after start adult shows with THE TWILIGHT ZONE as the best example. The 1960s would see such classics as STAR TREK, LOST IN SPACE and BATMAN go to air, possible the first golden age of SF on American television.

A lull would occur during the 1970s, with only THE SIX MILLION DOLLER MAN and other similar show really making any headway. The early was slow to pick, except for show like BATTLESTAR GALACTICA and BUCK ROGERS IN THE 25TH CENTURY capitalizing on the success of Star Wars. But in 1987, a second golden age of Sci-Fi began with STAR TREK: THE NEXT GENERATION, over the next ten years, production of SF shows in the US would top 51 shows a year. But by the late 1990s this would all come to an end.

Smaller but still significant number of shows would be made in the late 1990s and into the 21st Century, shows such as STARGATE : ATLANTIS and the new BATTLESTAR GALATICA. And always a small number of children SF shows would continue, such as the sequels to THE MIGHTY MORPHIN POWER RANGERS.

Japan

Japan came later to the SF market starting in 1958 with MOONLIGHT MASK, SF on TV in Japan would always be the poor relative to Anime and Manga, in the Japanese Market. Moonlight Mask set the tone for SF TV in Japan, with most shows based on superhero's and almost of for a children's audience.

The most influential period of SF TV in Japan would be in the 1960s, when the long running series of ULTRAMAN began, and the start of the Sentai shows. In the 1970s Super Sentai would take over and the Metal Series, such as SHAIKER would continue this tradition. SF production would continue at a slow pace throughout the 1980s, but would increase again, after the success of THE MIGHTY MORPHIN POWER RANGERS in the U.S., leading to a revival of sorts in the late 1990s and early into the 21st Century.

2nd Edition Introduction

We welcome you to the second edition of this e-book, the first was published six months previous, and we have added a great deal of more information, some 70 new shows have been added, many of which from Japan and France. Many more updates for shows on the database, too many to count.

We also introduce the use of at least one image for each show, since sci-fi television is very much a visual media, we felt it was important to at least show what each series looked like. There are over 300 images in this e-book.

Also we have added our appendix section, which we hope you will find useful. In particular check out our alternative titles section, if you are searching for a show, perhaps it is listed under another name, this is particularly true of non-English language shows.

Any corrections, additions or comments can be sent to the email address below.

We continue to push for more and more non-English language shows. But this has proven to be a very difficult exercise, with many shows that we know exist, but can not be included in this database because of a lack of information in the English language.

4th Edition Introduction

For the 4th Edition of the Definitive Guide we continue with expanding our entries on non-english language science fiction, and the team have done a great job in expanding this volume. We have had many comments about why certain shows have not been included, this is because we have a policy to only include true science fiction shows that fall within a theme, with a few exceptions.

Which is why you will not find an entry for Lost in this volume, although a very popular show it does not currently fit into a category of science fiction, such as time travel, space exploration etc. These definitions are laid out in the brilliant Encyclopaedia of Science Fiction by John Clute and Peter Nicholls. We have had to be stricter in recent years as to what is included simply because there are so many SF shows out their to add. For example in the 6 months since the last volume we have added another 44 science fiction shows to the encyclopaedia. As well as updating current shows and expanding older shows.

The number of updates to other shows is so huge we decided not to detail these, since it would be in itself its own volume!

And off course here are some stats on this volume, we hope that this is the most comprehensive science fiction encyclopaedia ever written. If it's not please let me know, because I would love to read something that was more extensive than this! As usual my email address is sciencefictionmaster@yahoo.com. And off course if you believe we have missed something please let us know.

In the 4th Edition we have covered 1,180 television shows, with 794 pictures for those shows. A total of 2,071 book titles are included and 22,376 episodes in either episode title or full episode guide version. The main body of this work is 3,175 pages long and contains 1,968,959 words. If you include all over the index and statistics pages that is over 2 millions words and 3,200 pages.

5th Edition Introduction

Welcome to the 5th Edition of the Definitive Guide to Science Fiction Television Encyclopaedia. You may have already noticed that we have implemented a number of changes in the 5th Edition.

The first off course is the splitting the Encyclopaedia into four volumes, the first three volumes contain the main body of text, and the final volume contains the Appendixes.

The reason for this size increase is for several reasons, first off we have greatly expanded the Episode Guide section of the encyclopaedia, adding detailed episode guide's to many shows. The second reason is because we have increased the font size to make it easier to read from the screen.

Below is a list of the new shows we have added since the last version, a total of 57 new shows.

10TH KINGDOM, THE

The 10th Kingdom is an inventive 10-hour fantasy saga and special effects extravaganza from Hallmark Entertainment and award-winning executive producer Robert Halmi, Sr. This clever piece of original storytelling from Emmy winner Simon Moore (GULLIVER'S TRAVELS) about a girl (Virginia, a New York waitress), a dog (really an enchanted prince) -- and an alternate reality (entered through a vortex in Central Park) takes the audience on a wild romp through a fantastic dimension where familiar fairytales are reinvented in new -- often hilarious and sometimes sinister -- grown-up terms.

After Virginia (Kimberly Williams), a twenty-something waitress who lives in New York City with her ne'er-do-well janitor father, Tony (John Larroquette), befriends a stray dog (who turns out to be a bewitched prince) on her way to work at the Grill on the Green restaurant in Central Park, she and her father are transported, via a magic mirror, to the Land of Nine Kingdoms. In this alternate dimension, an evil queen (Dianne Wiest) has escaped from the Snow White Memorial Prison and is trying to usurp the throne from Prince Wendell (Daniel Lapaine). Virginia and her father get caught up in the intrigue and are pursued by the Troll King (Ed O'Neill), his disgusting children and the queen's evil huntsman (Rutger Hauer). They are aided by Wolf (Scott Cohen), a handsome, sardonic and conflicted wolfman who is allied with the queen, but falls in love with Virginia.

As Virginia and Tony try to find their way back to New York (the 10th Kingdom), they are caught up in a series of bizarre adventures vaguely reminiscent of familiar fairytale situations -- but always with a slight twist. During their journey, Virginia comes to realize that she has never dealt with her anger over her mother's abandonment of her when she was a child. She also begins to fall in love with Wolf, who is doing a lot of personal growth in order to tame the beast within and win Virginia's trust. With a little advice from an older and wiser Snow White (Manheim), Virginia comes to terms with her feelings about her mother. Now strong and confident, Virginia battles the evil queen, restoring Prince Wendell to his rightful throne. Wolf successfully vanquishes his inner demons, and he and Virginia return to New York where they live happily ever after -- or at least until the next crisis in the Land of the Nine Kingdoms.

The 10th Kingdom was much better than I had expected, and I had high hopes going into it! It was a visual delight with fantastic effects and locations. I couldn't wait for each installment. Scott Cohen did a fantastic job as the over-the-top Wolf. I was rooting for Wolf and Virginia from their first meeting. Dianne Wiest makes a potentially one dimensional character come to life. Kimberly Williams and John Larroquette shine! The trolls are delightful and disgusting at once, particularly Ed O'Neill. The movie reminded me of all of the fairy tales I heard growing up. I was eagerly awaiting the addition of each new well-known character. Camryn Manheim as Snow White was a surprise, but she did a wonderful job. Happily ever after may not have lasted as long as Prince Wendell wanted, but its definitely back with the 10th Kingdom!

11 SOMERSET

Oliver lives at 11 Somerset with his father, John Marsan, a renowned expert of paranormal phenomena. When Laurie Lamera's life is turned upside-down by the ghost of her dead father, she goes to them for help.

11 Somerset is filmed in Montreal, Quebec, Canada. This series was filmed both in French and English and the French version was broadcast on Télé-Québec and the English version was played on the Space network.

Characters

Oliver Marsan

After living with his mother for ten years in Toronto, Oliver, 17 years old, moves to Montreal to live with his father John Marsan. He is initially skeptical about his father's research, but when he gets drawn into Laurie's wild, logic-defying exploits, Oliver develops a marked taste for the fantastic and inexplicable. He becomes just as determined as his dad to demystify paranormal phenomena.

An amateur motorcyclist and handyman in his free time, Oliver is also adept at martial arts and many other sports. And if his dietary habits make his father wince (for instance, his unforgettable peanut butter and cheese sandwiches), he continues to beat John during their endless tennis matches.

Annoyed by his new 'little sister' who clings to him too much, Oliver is still the first to come to her aid when she's in danger. Oliver is a courageous kid, but his impulsiveness often gets him caught in rough situations...

Laurie Lamera

Laurie is a thirteen and a half year-old computer-wiz. She also loves music. Laurie's life is disrupted by supernatural events after her father's death, and she doesn't quite know who to talk to - certainly not her mother who is already distressed enough as it is. She ends up confiding in Oliver after they share an adventure that clinches their new friendship.

Bursting with curiosity and vitality, and always ready to lend a helping hand, Laurie throws herself headfirst into dangerous situations. But her remarkable ingenuity and determination allow her to get out of tough spots and solve tricky problems.

Oliver's presence reassures her when things get dicey. As they get to know one another, Laurie's feelings for him grow more intense than she ever imagined...

Actors

Jamieson Boulanger (Oliver)

Jamieson Boulanger first appeared on stage at age 7, then made the transition to camera four years later. He has acted in many television series and films, including "Are You Afraid of the Dark" and "Kids of the Round table". At age 15, he was sent to the Californian desert for two months to act in "Frankenstein and Me".

Jamieson is also very active as an athlete, especially in baseball and hockey. After he finished his acting studies in college, Jamieson was drafted in 2001 by the Montreal Expos club. The Expos offered him a scholarship to study in Florida where he played on a college team and honed his pitching skills.

An arm injury brought him back to Montreal with a different game-plan : to get serious again about acting and to apply to Concordia University in Political Sciences.

It was 1984 plus 6. Britain in the year 1990 was not a pleasant place to live. Instead of a big brother, there were plenty of little brothers all employed by the Public Control Department (PCD), a huge government bureaucracy designed to help the economy recover from several setbacks of the late 1970s. Instead it had turned the nation into a place where professional people wanted to illegally emigrate to America, or even third world nations. PCD officials enjoyed special privileges while the rest of the people were forced to deal with rationing, shortages of essential goods and constant surveillance. One of the leaders of the fight for freedom was Jim Kyle, a journalist working for the Star, the last newspaper that has not fallen under government control.

His articles became a thorn in the PCD's side and the PCD's controller Skardon would have granted Kyle an exit visa without hesitation if he would ever apply for one. On the side, Kyle would help people leave the country, throw monkey wrenches into PCD plans and set up PCD officials to appear as traitors either to Skardon or his superior- the home secretary (Dan Mellor in series 1 and Kate Smith in series 2). Kyle was aided in his endeavors by his good friend Dave Brett, an import/export agent who enjoyed special privileges since he helped bring needed hard currency into Britain. Faceless, a nameless PCD official, was Kyle's contact within the department who passed along classified information to Kyle.

Kyle spent little time with his wife and son. He did however have a developing romantic interest with Delly Lomas, Deputy Controller of the PCD. This romance would have gotten a lot farther had the two not been on opposite sides. Delly was demoted due to her involvement with Kyle and replaced by Lynn Blake. Kyle could not quite understand why Lynn, an old flame of his, would have joined the PCD- although she did at times help him, especially when it would further her career.

Devised by Wilfred Greatorex, creator of ITV's The Power Game, the series starred Edward Woodward as dissident journalist Jim Kyle, Home Affairs correspondent for one of the three remaining newspapers. He aids a growing resistance movement which smuggles people out of the country, runs an underground press and generally hinders the PCD at every turn. Ranged against him are Herbert Skardon, the ruthless controller of the PCD and his deputies Delly Lomas (season one) and Lynn Blake (season two).

The series was born out of Greatorex's own 'suffering' at the hands of zealous VAT men and his resentment of the growing power of the burgeoning bureaucracy of the 1970s - a sentiment shared by many for whom the memory of overkill VAT raids on small shopkeepers still rankled. Greatorex played on his paranoid to take the powers of the administrators a stage or two further. Some critics carped, but 1990 was essentially a thriller series, not a solemn political statement, and retained the adventure motifs of car chases, tight spots and close shaves.

Edward Woodward who played Kyle had become popular on British television in the late 60's in the lead role of the spy drama Callan. In the US he would become a well known face to American audiences as well in the role of Robert McCall, the hero of the hit series The Equalizer.

The series' producer was Prudence Fitzgerald and the theme was composed by John Cameron. The series original aired on BBC2 in the UK. No U.S. airdates exists, therefore the series has probably not been seen in the U.S.

The various designers for the series included Robert Berk, Rochelle Selwyn, Judy Steele, Paul Joel and Michael Young. In one episode entitled "Health Farm", John Rhys-Davies played Ivor Griffith, Davies would later go on to star as a regular cast member on US SF shows SLIDERS. In the episode "Voice From the Past", Richard Hurndall (who would play the First Doctor in DOCTOR WHO - "The Five Doctors", replacing the late William Hartnell) starred as Avery.

Hawkins (1 Episode).

2030 - AUFSTAND DER ALTEN

This TV mini series is constructed on a very realistic, even probable and therefore also very frightening premise; the collapse of the European (in this case German) social security system (government retirement pension plan, which is still obligatory for all in almost all of Europe).

As an idea, and as a mini-series meant to point to a problem that will probably become one of the central issues of European life in the years to come, this film merits 10 stars.

Unfortunately, it seems that most of the creative thinking was used up in creating the premise. By far the most interesting and accomplished part of this 3-part series is the beginning where the effects of the system's breakdown are depicted, the circumstances under which most of the elderly are forced to live after a near bankrupt state has introduced "an equal pension for all" policy (how very socialist that sounds...) set at Euro 560 (approx. US$ 730 at today's rate of exchange), an amount "too small to live of, and too high to die from" as one character in the mini-series puts it. The rest of the movie then slips into something between a cheap thriller and a soap opera. It becomes unrealistic, over the top in many instances, at times overdrawn and at others too hurried. In other words, badly filmed.

All in all below average, but it's worth watching solely because it deals with a problem that will one way or another, likely affect most of us (if not all), in the very near future.

2030 CE

Best friends Hart and Robby look forward to graduation until Hart discovers his doctoral status is in jeopardy when he is reassigned to an elite team of ecological technicians (EcoTechs) due to a genetic flaw.

Welcome to the year 2030: Common Era (CE). Bright with possibility, it is a vibrant new world of employment, clean air and a revitalized emphasis on leisure and recreation. The 'good life' is available to all. What more could one want?

Well, maybe to live longer. A mysterious virus called Progressive Aging Syndrome (PAS) is causing certain death by the age of 30. The result is a world where youth rule - as med school grads at 16, elders at 22, the driving age is 12!

This brave new world has been reclaimed under the name Nexes, a corporation formed by governments, business and the scientific community. With no apparent escape from the deadly virus, Nexes' young medical team are committed to finding a cure....or are they?

United in their suspicion of Nexes, 2030CE centers on the idealistic and handsome Hart (Corey Sevier, Lassie), his worldly-wise sister Rome (Tatiana Maslany, Incredible Story Studio) his best friend Robby (Neil Denis, X-Men: Evolution) and his new ally, the beautiful and enigmatic Jakki (Jessica Lucas, Edgemont). Now, mysteriously reclassified as an Eco-Tech by Maxine Rich (Elyse Levesque, Incredible Story Studio, MythQuest), head of Nexes security, his quest for answers leads him into uncharted terrain where hidden conspiracies abound and where the truth, when uncovered, is almost inconceivable. When Hart learns that his genetic makeup will predispose him to the deadly virus, he is determined to discover the cause of the disease and uncover the true intentions behind Nexes' Orwellian regime. Ultimately, the rebel trio find themselves in a race against time - and a race to save their own lives.

In Season 2...

With Hart left in a strange condition at the end of season 1, season 2 of 2030 CE promises more action-packed adventure with the introduction of several new characters, including Zeus, a leather-clad rogue agent with a dark past who joins Rome, Jakki, and Robby in their fight against Dr. Rich as they attempt to unravel the mystery of Hart's strange condition and rescue him from Nexes' devious plans. Throughout the second season, the group of teen anti-heroes will join forces with the Storm in their attempt to topple the Nexes empire, while the genetically perfect decide to wage their own war against the normals in a bid for supremacy.

This series is basically about a semi-post-apocalyptic world in which no one lives beyond the age of thirty. There is a clichéd ongoing conflict between normal people and superhumans which in this series are called 'tubers'. The writing is bad, un-original and reeks of amateurism. The f/x can be summed up in one word, SAD. And the acting is some of the most disgusting, pathetic, disgraceful acting I've ever seen. The actors are all teenagers, which is almost always a huge mistake to do in a movie or series that is serious in nature, and they were probably all probably from the same school near the filming location. I can't see anyone enjoying this series unless they are a little kid or some kind of idiot.

During the theme. the opening voice-over goes:

"The collapse came early in the new century.
Humanity itself appeared to be doomed.
Science, industry and government united and Nexes was born.
A new world. Where no one lives past the age of 30."

Characters

Hart Greyson (played by Corey Sevier) - Age 15, smart, athletic, and funny.

Jakki Kaan (played by Jessica Lucas) - Age 15, free spirit, fearless and bright.

the hospital finds an abnormality in his urine samples. The samples that were taken from the hospital did not match the ones that the toilet in his home analyzed that morning. The man was previously insured with a premium policy, which was canceled when the hospital discovered he had been using clean urine samples to hide the fact that he had been drinking. Insurance policies generally raise premiums when they discover clients use alcohol, and people hide this fact with clean urine samples.

Once the insurance company analyzes the data and discovers that the patient tried to essentially scam them, his policy is immediately dropped. He is placed in the non-insured ward of the hospital, and his expensive surgery is canceled. The only person to come to his aid is a gorgeous, crafty female surgeon who performs the operation anyway. By tricking the system into thinking that a deceased patient with a premium policy is still alive, she is able to perform the surgery using the deceased patient's insurance policy. She then tells the system that the deceased patient died two days later, making it look like they died on the operating table during the surgery that she actually performed on the fall victim.

1 - 2 THE CITY

"The City", examines the advances futuristic technology will bring to the home such as humanoid robots and holographic pets. The storyline has Paul, a thirteen year old boy accidentally releasing his holographic shark friend into the cities computer program, halting major city functions and electronics.

The year is 2057. Everything is computerized from cars to buildings to clothing. One of the main characters is young Paul Gator, son of a female police officer Georgina Gator. John Gator, Paul's grandfather, was born at the dawn of the internet (he'd be about Paul's age today) and has been writing computer code ever since. Paul is somewhat of an apprentice to his hacker grandfather, and is already manipulating code at a very young age.

Holograms are commonplace in 2057, and most children have hologram projectors embedded within their clothing. These devices project images of anything, which act like GPS devices to guide children around the city of the future safely. When his grandfather creates a hologram shark to replace the dolphin that he currently has, Paul decides to go one step further. He uses his laptop to hack into the city's network in an attempt to display his shark on advertisement boards across the city.

Not only does the laptop project the shark onto every holographic video screen in the city, it overloads the entire network and cripples the entire city. The laptop also carried with it an ancient virus that the future city had no protection against. The virus attacks the operating system that the entire city is run on...an operating system that has been in place, untouched for decades.

The only possible suspect to Georgina is her father, whom had moved out of her house earlier in the day after a fight about his computer hacking. An APB is put out on him, and it's a race against time to stop the virus while Paul and his grandfather try to evade the law. When Georgina discovers that Paul was actually the one who released the virus into the city, she protects them from capture and allows them access into the old, unused central hub of the city.

Once inside the hub, grandfather and grandson immediately connect John's laptop into a connection that can communicate with the operating system that the city is built on. Paul's grandfather erases incriminating personal information about Paul that was transferred to the system, then codes a few lines before the police burst in the room. Brave Paul stands in front of his Grandfather, protecting him from the guns the police are pointing at them as he finishes the last lines of code. When his Grandfather presses enter, the city's power ominously flickers off.

A few moments later, the power is restored and the city jumps back to life. The virus and shark are gone, and life in the city goes back to normal. Realizing that her father is a hero, Georgina makes amends and all is well in the city of tomorrow.

1 - 3 THE WORLD

"The World" is probably the most complex episode of the three, discussing topics as varied as satellites that transmit data at extreme speed using lasers, to more political topics such as probable future geopolitical scenarios involving China and the United States as two opposing superpowers and the ramifications of a world-wide energy crisis with solar power positioned as a likely candidate to relieve the world's energy needs. It features an American and a Chinese man in a space elevator laboratory discovering how to make more efficient solar panels but being disrupted by their respective countries' political friction.

4400, THE

These are the stories of 4400 abductees after they are returned to Earth. People dealing with traumatic changes, driven by the mystery of what happened and why. Some of them have been affected in mysterious ways, and some will have certain abilities, both good and bad. The pilot has a ball of light sailing towards Earth. But rather than the expected catastrophic event, thousands of returned abductees are left with no memory of their otherworldly experiences. Each has been gone anywhere from a few months to several decades but hasn't aged a day.

The 4400 is a science fiction television program produced by CBS Paramount Network Television in association with Sky Television, Renegade 83 and American Zoetrope for USA Network. The show was created and written by Scott Peters and René Echevarria, and stars Joel Gretsch and Jacqueline McKenzie.

In the pilot episode, what is originally thought to be a comet deposits a group of exactly 4400 people at Highland Beach, in the Cascade Range foothills near Mount Rainier, Washington. All of the 4400 disappeared at various times starting in 1946, a beam of white light. After their return, none have aged, all are disoriented, and remember nothing between the time of their disappearance and their return.

This is an extremely ambitious but well-written and well-acted sci-fi story. The key is that it is not just about weird goings-on but rather, what people might do under weird circumstances. The answers are touching and thought-provoking. There are drawbacks and potential drawbacks. The show is not over yet; we don't know what it will look like when it is over, but so far, very good. I wish they had a larger budget so they did not have to skimp on special effects. But then, like early X-Files episodes--which this most closely resembles, the show relies more on the viewers imagination than on special effects.

The 4400 is a very interesting story that I have not seen before. What happens after a person has been abducted by Ets and returns a number of years later. They find their loved ones dead. The neighborhoods they knew are gone. Their family had assumed they're dead and moved on. What would the readjustment be like? That is the story of this very fascinating miniseries is about. I will be sure to watch the rest of this series to see what happens. I'm sure some people will learn how to cope and some will not. But is there something more sinister going on? The 4400 is the cure for the summer boredom. I wish the networks would stop putting on one idiotic reality show after another and have shows that are at least have some ambition to them. Why does junk like The Simple Life and Fear Factor stay on the air and shows with ambition are banished to cable. That's where the viewers should go. Watch this show.

Unlike some of the others here, I found this to be a pretty good sci-fi TV movie, and I'm looking forward to future installments. Of course, I don't set high expectations for TV movies, so there's lots of room to please me

Ira Steven Behr and René Echevarria have pretty strong pedigrees with their work on Star Trek (TNG and DS9) and you can see the influence here: Sci-fi with some moral ambiguity without being hamhanded.

Those who don't like the Star Trek franchise may not find this as enjoyable as I do. And anyone who is looking for creepy crawlies or little gray people will be disappointed. It's clear that while the paranormal plays a key role in the lives of the characters (not to mention the key mystery of where they went, why they're back now and in this particular number, and largely staying close to Seattle, with only a few returning to their original homes), it's the characters and their relationships with others that take center stage. Especially when those left behind went on with their lives, leaving the 4400 to try to pick up pieces of lives that, to them, were firmly established "just yesterday" before losing the time. To find a place in this new world is bound to be very frightening.

Those who have compared this to the non-mythological X-Files eppys (always my favorites) have made, IMO, an apt comparison. Which is ironic, considering the role abduction played in the "Mulder myth" story lines. Now let's hope they don't dodge off into Klingon-type mythology in future eppys.

The first season is presented as a miniseries of six episodes, which aired weekly from July 11, 2004 to August 8, 2004. Seasons two, three and four are each 13-episode seasons.

A special episode, "The 4400: Unlocking the Secrets", aired between seasons two and three, on June 3, 2006, originally on NBC.

Production of a third season was shot in Vancouver until July 26, 2006.[11] The third season premiered June 11, 2006, with 4.2 million viewers tuning in. Executive Producer Ira Steven Behr described season three as "bigger and more mythic. It feels like 26 episodes instead of 13 because we're cramming so much stuff in". Production of a season four began in early 2007 for a mid-year premiere, returning with the episode "The Wrath of Graham". Billy Campbell, the actor who plays Collier, took most of season three off to sail around the world, but returns in the fourth season as a regular, rather than a guest star as in the previous three seasons.

Production

The theme song of the show is "A Place in Time", written by Robert Phillips and Tim Paruskewitz, performed by Amanda Abizaid. All seasons are filmed in high-definition with closed-captioning. USA Network broadcast episodes after season one in fullscreen 480i, the DVD releases contain the episodes in their native widescreen format.

Soundtrack

The soundtrack to The 4400 was released on May 8, 2007 by Milan Records and includes music from the first three seasons, as follows:

Bosshouse feat. Amanda Abizaid - A Place In Time (Theme From The 4400)
 Switchfoot - This Is Your Life
 People In Planes - Falling By The Wayside
 Thirteen Senses - Into The Fire
 Ivy - Worry About You
 Engineers - How Do You Say Goodbye?
 Maroon 5 - She Will Be Loved
 Jacqueline McKenzie - Shy Baby
 Bedroom Walls - Do the Buildings and Cops Make You Smile?
 Billie Holiday - Cheek to Cheek
 John Van Tongeren - Salvation
 The Landau Orchestra - A Place In Time (Instrumental Arrangement)
 Note: The last track does not appear in the series.

Filming locations

The 4400 is set in Seattle, but actually filmed in Vancouver, in British Columbia. All the cars have fake Washington license plates, the 4400 Center is actually the Chan Centre for the Performing Arts at the University of British Columbia, and Capilano Lake stands in for Highland Beach.

Cancellation

Writer and co-creator Scott Peters announced on December 18, 2007 that The 4400 had been canceled and would not be returning for fifth season. With the story never complete.

5 DAYS TO MIDNIGHT

When a physics professor (Timothy Hutton) obtains a police file that seems to chronicle his death in five days, he initially assumes it is a hoax perpetrated by one of his students. However, as other events start to unfold that show up in the papers in the folder, he realizes that this might be real and he has to find a way to change the future before it occurs. Everyone around him becomes a suspect, including his girl friend (Kari Matchett) with a shady past. Randy Quaid is the detective, who initially dismisses the "crime victim" as a quack, but then becomes convinced of the reality of the events. The attempt to change the future is also hampered by a student who is convinced that the professor could destroy everything if he interferes with time. Contains violence.

Timothy hutton plays physics professor JT Neumeyer who while visiting his wife's grave discovers a thin silver brief case. He opens it and discovers a group of files showing pictures of his death and newspapers clippings. First declaring this as a practical joke, the events in the files play out slowly and now convinced that he'll die in five days, tries to find a way to prevent himself from dying and must change his destiny. The concept is great despite being a bit derivative, and there's plenty of room for tension, suspense, and great bits on philosophy, but the screenwriters miss their chances.

The cast is comprised mostly of second rate actors with the exception of Hutton who tries his best at the lead role but ultimately fails towards the end of the film as he manages to go way over the top with his emotional scenes. There's also Randy quaid who is quite bland and one-dimensional, and Angus McFayden who is the worst of the characters as the over the top mob boss Roy Bremmer. Watch for his really bad scenes as he attempts to inflict depth into his character but comes off as laughable.

Meanwhile the story has the ability to inject tension and sense of immediacy but all of it is lost in the bogged down story. Rambling and droning at some points it's difficult to understand why this couldn't have been a two hour film instead of a four parter. There's also plenty of room for philosophy and the concept of destiny and fate towards death, but there's nothing here as the story is mostly comprised of uneventful occurrences, slim character development, and so much dialogue. While the film is engrossing at the beginning, it's ultimately lost halfway through as the plot is segued into the benign plot featuring McFayden which takes away from the actual reason why we're watching.

"Stay tuned for the shocking last minutes to 5 Days to Midnight" the Sci-Fi channel boasts which never usually works on me but I was rather interested to see where this was developing. But, unfortunately it was all just hype. I was expecting that Neumeyer's daughter would accidentally shoot him causing his death, and that we never got to see who sent the briefcase, but it's all pretty much explained in the end and nothing of the sort happens. I wanted an ironic, witty, and shocking ending beneath the muddled plot and droning dialogue, but alas we're not given anything but an obligatory and rather disappointing happy ending. Decent performances, a great concept but falls apart halfway through becoming routine and cliché. The writers never give this story and concept a chance to spread its wings and just keep it down to mediocre level.

WARNING! CONTAINS SPOILERS! Five Days to Midnight is really, really good. It really is. But it is seriously flawed. The basic story is widowed college professor finds briefcase from the future containing police file of his murder five days hence. Overall it is well done. Superb direction, photography, acting (with the exception of the way over the top performance of Angus Macfayden as a mobster). The problems I had are several. 1) It doesn't address the grandfather paradox of time travel, especially after the professor changes the future the contents of the briefcase change (cute in Back to the Future, dumb here), 2) The required happy ending quite frankly falls down. 3) The miniseries is ridiculously over-padded and could have been told in half the time. Still overall I liked it and it is nice to see the Sci-Fi Channel actually using imagination and originality, not their strong point.

I was hooked and just awaiting part 4. Timothy Hutton did a great job and Gage Golightly was just outstanding. (And she does resemble Drew Barrymore) She has talent! Very inspiring to see her with such great strength and intelligence. This character could be a role model for the adults! Hopefully will see her in other projects down the road if she so desires! Let's face it; this generated the buzz on the bulletin boards. I am just glad there are stories with plot lines that you can still see on TV. I'm not a fan on reality programming so good or bad, it is great to watch something that is rare on TV today. (Sad isn't it!) So my thanks to Sci Fi for bring new shows to the public. And on a final note; the music used on this series was great.

My overall reaction is that I feel like I completely wasted five hours of my life watching this miniseries. While there were a few red flags in the beginning, the writing seemed to be carrying the movie. First, the red flags: the director had an extremely annoying habit of throwing in slow motion in places where it was completely out of place. Actually, there's almost never a reason for slow motion. Directors and writers don't normally write [This scene is done in slow motion] into the script. If the action in the take appears to be incredibly lame during the editing, they'll try a slow motion effect before throwing the scene away. So the high frequency of slow motion shots is a give away that the director is a hack.

* Spoiler Ahead ****

Other than the director's attempt to sabotage the movie, the writing was very good for the first 4 hours and 50 minutes. It wasn't typical Sci-Fi fare, but a seemingly well crafted murder mystery. The twist was that the victim was investigating his own murder. Not bad. But there was no mystery to the ending. It was the equivalent of having the cavalry ride in at the last minute, only dumber. There was no attempt to clean up the loose ends. No attempt to explain how the professor escaped his destiny. It might have been modestly satisfying if there was an attempt to explain how the future benefactor knew that a single bullet would be needed at the last moment.

Not since Steven King's "The Stand" was there a more disappointing ending to a promising story line.

Spoiler Alert I'm not a big Timothy Hutton fan, but 5 Days to Midnight really impressed me with his performance.

The mini series which aired on Sci Fi Channel in the US, revolves around Physics Professor JT Neumeyer, whose wife died giving birth ten years ago to daughter Jesse Tracy Neumeyer, played exquisitely by Gage Golightly (who looks strikingly like Drew Barrymore). On the ten year anniversary of his wife's death (and daughter's birth) JT and Jesse visit the gravesite and find a sleek metal briefcase with JT's name on it.

Eventually, JT opens the case and finds a homicide case file with photos of him, dead with a bullet in his head. Initially, JT thinks this is a hoax created by a psychologically disturbed student in his class, Carl Axlerod. However, things start to happen exactly as the contents of the briefcase suggest, and JT realizes that his death by the end of the week may be unstoppable.

During the week, JT enlists the help of Police Detective Irwin Sikorski (played by the ever spectacular Randy Quaid) whose name was mentioned in the homicide file. Sikorski helps JT learn that his girlfriend, Claudia Whitney, is not who she says she is. Claudia is married to a Chicago crime lord, Roy Bremmer, who has tracked Claudia to Everett, Washington (the town where JT and Jesse live) where she fled to escape him. Meanwhile, it turns out that JT's brother in law, Brad Hume, a fellow professor at the college who lives a life of luxury, is going broke on bad stock picks and sees the metal briefcase that JT found as his ticket out of bankruptcy. The briefcase, it seems, is made of a futuristic composite of carbon nanotubes and if Brad can back-engineer it he could sell the patent rights for millions of dollars.

JT and Jesse attempt to flee the city to escape destiny, but things go awry, leaving JT to face the possibility that he will end up dead on the stage of the sleazy strip joint Buck Naked, just as the file predicts.

If this comes out on DVD, it would definitely be worth a rental, though I hope to purchase it if it is released.

Kudos to SCI FI Channel for a great mini-series!

I enjoyed the four days of wonderful suspense and time-loops drove me crazy guessing. The Sci-Fi boards were abuzz with over 700 posts!

The whole concept of giving watchers the clues online to begin to make their guesses as to the ending was a brilliant touch of intelligence at work!

I won't give any endings away - but I will say that if you watch this you will not be sure until the very ending exactly how it ends.

Timothy Hutton was the star and he handled it with aplomb. The great supporting cast was headed by Randy Quaid and Kari Matchett. Hamish Linklater was wonderful as the manic Physics student as were Angus MacFadyen as the mobster and David McIlwraith as the brother-in-law.

But the major acting discovery was GAGE GOLIGHTLY as Hutton's daughter. She was marvelous in every scene she was in and stole the limelight from whomever was with her. Natural talent like that is to be appreciated. Not to mention her remarkable resemblance to the young Drew Barrymore. It would be interesting to see Drew Barrymore in a prequel-sequel of this mini-series - if she weren't probably overpriced for SCI FI channel?

All in all - we were kept on our seats for 4 wonderful days of suspense, trying to outguess the wonderful writers. Kudos to all of them!

I recommend this highly for mystery and suspense buffs. Not just Sci-Fi fans. It's a winner!

A spoof which parodies television shows revolving around the strange and paranormal.

Lee Smart, talented Second City performer and friend of Colin Mochrie, stars in this satire-laced spoof of shows revolving around the quasi-supernatural, the unexplainable, and the mysterious. He perfectly portrays Garland Freewin, an arrogant, snobbish yet likable due to his smile and unassuming manner host of "The 5th Quadrant", where he and his team investigate sightings of mythical beasts, strange human beings, and bizarre occurrences. This unusual spoof of shows such as THE X FILES and PSI-FACTOR:CHRONICALS OF THE PARANORMAL, was created, written, produced and starred in by Lee Smart, a man of many talents. Each episode was split into two separate stories.

Produced by Michelle Shipley (supervising producer), Lee Smart (producer), Cinematography by Dan Bailey & Peter Wilshire. Film Editing by Todd Hallam, Costume Design by Melissa Graves, Max Smith, Morag Smith and Naomi Veri. Production Management - Karl Di Pelino (production manager), Second Unit Director or Assistant Director - Karl Di Pelino (assistant director).

During the closing credits, Garland Freewin walks up a flight of wire stairs, across a catwalk, down the next flight of stairs, across the set, and up the first flight, continuing the cycle for the entire closing credits.

A COME ANDROMEDA

Italian remake of A FOR ANDROMEDA.

This production is of interest to non-Italian speakers probably for one reason only: it is an Italian remake of the BBC's classic science fiction series 'A For Andromeda'. Its interest lies in the fact that only about 20 minutes of the original series now remains in the BBC's archives, the rest having been wiped in their purge of old programmes in the late 1960's and early 1970's.

This is apparently available on video, so perhaps the ideal solution is to first read the book 'A For Andromeda' by Fred Hoyle and John Elliott (a great book in its own right), and then sit down and watch this. Then it might be possible to imagine just how amazing the original series must have been.

I don't speak Italian, so I can't comment on the cast interaction, but it certainly looks faithful to the original, and for that we must be truly thankful. How strange, though, that they didn't bother to remake the second part of the series, 'The Andromeda Breakthrough'.

Original music by Mario Migliardi, Cinematography by Giampiero Puliti & Nevio Sivini, Film Editing by Gennaro Oliveti, Production Design by Mariano Mercuri, Costume Design by Andretta Ferrero, Production Management - Giovanni Piva (unit manager). Second Unit Director or Assistant Director - Argia Ferrara (assistant director), Sound Department - Oreste Boschi (sound), Cesare Coppo (sound), Cesare Volta (sound effects editor). Other crew - Marino Bonifacio (camera operator), Giuseppe Clemente (camera operator).

The first part (instalment 1 of 5) of the movie has been telecasted tonight Aug 16, 2004 on RAI 3. I saw it in the Italian language (which I know perfectly). The story is very interesting and the movie is typically '70 sci-fi style. It reminded me a bit the UFO series. About the actors job: in my opinion the actors Giampiero Albertini (Gen. Vandenberg) is excellent here, as ever. And also the beautiful Paola Pitagora (Judy Adamson) which is not one of the bigger stars in Italy did a fine Job. For the rest, recitation is sometime too much theatre-like and scenography could be better but both are excellent for the times and quite good also nowadays. The original book (by scientists Fred Hoyle and his collaborator John Elliot) was published in 1962. In Italy the book was edited in 1965. In 1971 RAI started the production. The first part was telecasted on January, 4, 1972 with a mysterious writing: "This story take place in England... the next year". Music was written by Mario Migliardi.

Because of some technical problems the whole crew of an interspace ship die on a distant planet. The ship waits silently for centuries for new crew to drive her home. Suddenly an early stoneage tribe appears nearby. She captures one of them and plants the knowledge of one of the original crew-member. More and more caveman turn into crew-member, but their smaller brain capacity cause emotional problems. Later on they find a more developed race. They fear of the possibility that they will be replaced, but they capture some of them. A death fight begins between the two sets of crew-members. The rest starts they way back to the Earth. They could land on the Moon, but the life is changed on the Earth very much after some centuries passed...

A film adaptation of one of the best Hungarian sci-fi writer, Zsoldos Péter. The story is a very philosophic one, like the best Stanislaw Lems' novels. More thoughts less action. The quality of the film is very 70s like (see "Space: 1999", filmed in the same year (1975)) in 3 acts.

A FOR ANDROMEDA/ THE ANDROMEDA BREAKTHROUGH/ A FOR ANDROMEDA (2006)

In the first series the signals are found to contain the 'assembly and operating' instructions for a highly advanced computer which then enables the research team literally to create life, first a misshapen blob, then a human embryo which grows rapidly into a beautiful young woman Andromeda. The Andromeda Breakthrough dramatically upped the tempo of the power politics, set the intrigue against a world-wide environmental disaster, and revealed the purpose behind the original message - that of steering mankind down a less destructive path than the one it has taken. John Elliot's influence was greater in the second series - as well as scripting it he also produced and directed.

The hero of both series is Dr John Fleming, an outspoken, idealistic young scientist. It is he who first decodes the signals from outer space - 'It's a do-it-yourself kit, and it isn't human!' and it is he who first recognises the dangers of extending the frontiers of human knowledge too far, too fast.

No one-dimensional cipher this one, Fleming is a scientist with a conscience, in the grand Quatermass tradition, who ends up saving the world from a chain of events he himself set in motion. (The character of Fleming has been seen as being based on the maverick qualities of Hoyle himself.)

Throughout, Fleming finds himself in conflict with most people around him, including his own and foreign governments; a shady, Swiss-based business cartel called Intel (headed by the villainous Kaufman); and an amoral biologist, Prof. Madeleine Dawnay, who sees the Andromeda project as one great research opportunity.

A For Andromeda (2006)

When a group of scientists receive a message from outer space telling them to build a computer, they follow the orders with disastrous results. The computer is far more advanced than they imagined and proceeds to build a biological robot, Andromeda, from one of their dead colleagues.

Both "A for Andromeda" and "The Andromeda Breakthrough" are now hailed as early classics of British science fiction. "Species" was blatantly ripped-off from this reasonably faithful series adaptation of the Sir Fred Hoyle novel of this name. A radio message from the Andromeda galaxy, over a million light years away, is picked up by a radio telescope, and turns out to be the blueprints and assembly instructions for an alien supercomputer.

When the supercomputer is turned on, it builds a beautiful woman, whose mind is partly alien. There was a 1962 sequel, about a second Andromeda computer being assembled in South America, with pretty much the same production team, but with Susan Hampshire replacing Julie Christie. The sequel series' title was "The Andromeda Breakthrough."

A for Andromeda and its sequel, The Andromeda Breakthrough, screened in 1961-2, were television's first attempts to create adult science fiction since the Quatermass sagas of the Fifties. Scripted by BBC producer John Elliot, from an original storyline by renowned astronomer and novelist Fred Hoyle, they dealt with the impact of an alien intelligence upon life on Earth and with the ruthless pursuit by rival factions of the scientific secrets that could prove the breakthrough of the century. The machinations of governments and big business were Elliot's territory (he went on to produce the power games of Mogul and The Trouble-shooters) but the astronomical and scientific concepts were Hoyle's. In his novels such as The Black Cloud, Hoyle, professor of astronomy and philosophy at Cambridge, contended that man's first contact with an alien civilisation would come through radio-astronomy and this idea forms the basis for the series, which begins with signals from space being received by a new radio telescope.

A for Andromeda also marked the TV debut of a glamorous young actress called Julie Christie (plucked from a drama school by producer Michael Hayes), initially as the lab assistant, Christine, whose death provides the 'blueprint' for Dawnay's embryo, and then as Andromeda herself, whose ambivalent relationship with Fleming blossoms in the sequel. In this, the part was taken over by another relative newcomer, Susan Hampshire. Frank Windsor, stalwart of Z-Cars and Sofily, Softly, appeared in the first series as Fleming's self-seeking colleague Dennis Bridger.

Both A for Andromeda and The Andromeda Breakthrough are now hailed as early classics of British science fiction. (Author's note: Although there is some overlapping of cast and production details, for ease of reference the story guides to each series are treated separately, beginning with the main cast, followed by synopsis, supporting cast and production details.)

In 2006, the BBC remade the series in a 1 hour 30 minute presentation, shown on BBC Four, which premiered on the 27th March 2006. This adaptation was written by Richard Fell, and directed by John Strickland. Because this was a one off drama it does not get a separate entry in this encyclopedia. The story was very well presented, but perhaps lacks some pacing, the first twenty minutes when two quickly and then the middle half was too slow. But overall the acting was good and special effects good enough for what needed to be achieved.

Richard Fell adapted The Quatermass Experiment for BBC Four. He has also executive produced dramas including A Waste of Shame and Fantabulosa!

BBC Four: Why did you think A for Andromeda would stand the test of time to be adapted?

Richard Fell: After the success of Quatermass, it seemed like a very natural choice when we were looking for another science-fiction story to do. It was to the 1960s what Quatermass was to the 50s. It really gripped the nation and was massively popular. It was an absolute classic of its time. It's a really interesting story and there are a lot of things about it that will still interest audiences today. It's a contemporary retelling of the story. We haven't recreated a 1960s sci-fi film. We had to strip out some of the stuff about the Cold War and there are whole layers of the original which are specific to the 1960s.

BBC Four: What are the key themes for a contemporary audience?

Richard Fell: I suppose the big questions are, firstly, 'How complex does a computer have to be before we consider it to have some kind of human qualities?' And the other one is, 'What responsibilities do scientists have with these new technologies?' They don't operate in a vacuum and indeed are often funded by the military. Computer technology is so advanced and we are now getting some very sophisticated thinking machines. This, as well as advances in biology with cloning, raise all sorts of issues that are as pertinent today, if not more so, as when it first came out.

BBC Four: Science fiction obviously has greater production demands than some other types of drama. Did that make for a difficult shoot?

Richard Fell: In a way, but the kind of science fiction that appeals to BBC Four's audience is much more the kind that is intelligent, ideas-based science fiction. It's not necessarily about monsters and space ships. There are more 'what ifs?' and 'what does that do to the people and their relationships?'. It's also not particularly set in the future, it's set now but it needed a kind of sheen, which I think we've brought to it.

BBC Four: The original introduced Julie Christie to the world. Is the same thing going to happen for your cast?

Richard Fell: We have Kelly Reilly who has already made her mark in films like Mrs Henderson Presents. She's a fantastic stage actress so I am absolutely convinced she's going to have a stellar career. The other lead part is played by Tom Hardy who we've seen recently in Gideon's Daughter and The Virgin Queen. He was fantastic on stage in the recent production of Festen. They are both really powerful, interesting, sophisticated actors who've really brought the production to life.

BBC Four: Is Jane Asher in there as a nod back to the 1960s?

Richard Fell: That's not really why we cast her but she certainly has the 60s appeal. She's a very good actress and has a kind of coolness and calmness and intelligence about her.

1 - 1 THE MESSAGE

The year is 1970 and it is the event of the opening of a new giant radio-telescope. Professor Reinhart's (Esmond Knight) staff are making routine tests when something unexpected cuts across the usual background static of outer space and across all their lives.

1 - 2 THE MACHINE

The radio message from outer space received on the new giant radio-telescope throws the country into a panic. Scientists, military, security forces, and a great international cartel are all competing for the information it contains. The only one with the answer is the young scientist John Fleming (Peter Halliday): "It's a do-it-yourself kit. And it isn't human!".

1 - 3 THE MIRACLE

John Fleming (Peter Halliday) interprets a message from outer space as a plan for the construction of a super computer. John Fleming (Peter Halliday) and his colleague Bridger (Frank Windsor) have built a super computer to a plan received from outer space which acts as a means of communication between the source of the message in the constellation of Andromeda and the Earth. With the help of the computer, the scientists produce a synthesized living organism. 1 - 5 THE MURDERER

With the help of a computer designed from a message from outer space, Professor Dawnay (Mary Morris) succeeds in making and keeping alive a synthesized creature, and even makes it grow. The computer achieves a haphazard and unsatisfactory communication with the creature. Against his better judgement, Fleming (Peter Halliday), who built the computer, suggests arranging a direct electrical supply between it and the machine. Even this is not entirely satisfactory, and the computer, in an attempt to extend its knowledge of humanity, compels Christine (Julie Christie), one of Professor Dawnay's assistant, to take hold of the exposed terminals, and kills her.

The computer built by Fleming (Peter Halliday), from a design received in a message from space, begins to show its power. In spite of Fleming's warnings, Professor Dawnay continues to use it for her experiment in the synthesis of life. The final result of the experiment is a human body, which is christened Andromeda and which grows up to show a startling resemblance to the dead Christine. She is clearly in mental communication with the computer. When the international situation becomes desperate, the Prime Minister (Maurice Hedley) turns to Andromeda and the computer for help. Meanwhile, Kaufman's 'Intel' organization becomes yet more deeply involved with Fleming's super-computer project.

2 - 1 COLD FRONT

When A For Andromeda was televised last autumn, an audience which grew at the rate of a million a week followed the strange story of physicist John Fleming and the huge, malevolent computer which he built according to instructions from outer space. Science-fiction addicts will remember that after the computer nearly caused the death of the girl-creature Andromeda whom it had virtually created in the laboratory, Fleming and Andromeda smashed it and were chased by security men to an island off the Scottish coast, where Andromeda fell into an underground pool and disappeared. Tonight, the end of A For Andromeda becomes the beginning of The Andromeda Breakthrough, the new BBC television serial in which Doctor Fleming and biochemist Madeleine Dawnay follow the trail of Andromeda to the Middle East, and discover the real force and meaning of the messages from space picked up by the computer. Again written by Professor Fred Hoyle and John Elliot (who is also the producer) the serial reintroduces a number of familiar characters - with Fleming and Madeleine Dawnay played by Peter Halliday and Mary Morris. New faces include Claude Farrell, a French actress who makes her first BBC television appearance as the mysterious Mademoiselle Gamboule. Film commitments make it impossible for Julie Christie to play Andromeda again, so the part is taken by Susan Hampshire.

2 - 2 GALE WARNING

Fleming (Peter Halliday) and Andromeda (Susan Hampshire), in hiding in the Western Isles, are being hunted both by the British Government, who hold them responsible for the destruction of the super-computer built by Fleming from a design received from outer space, and by the Intel trading consortium, who are developing another computer in the newly-independent Middle Eastern country of Azaran.

2 - 3 AZARAN FORECAST

Troubles mount up and unexpected danger looms large as tonight's episode opens. The Intel trading organization have set up a supercomputer in the newly-independent Middle-Eastern state of Azaran, and have kidnapped biochemist Madeleine Dawnay (Mary Morris) and physicist Doctor John Fleming (Peter Halliday), together with the girl Andromeda (Susan Hampshire), to work for them. Already there are signs that something inexplicable is happening to the world's weather. And strange things seem to be happening to Andromeda as well.

2 - 4 STORM CENTRES

In the Middle Eastern republic of Azaran, a military coup has been launched by Colonel Salim (Barry Linehan), the strong man who has the backing of the Intel Consortium. The Intel representative, Mademoiselle Gamboule (Claude Farrell), has been impelled to the computer by Andromeda (Susan Hampshire) who, although dying, is determined to work out the purpose of the message from space.

2 - 5 HURRICANE

The garish days of science fiction, when the genre was dominated by bug-eyed monsters engaged in galactic horse-operas, have been left far behind. Nowadays good 'SF' demands genuine science and credible characters. The Andromeda Breakthrough, sequel to A For Andromeda, has both, and its principal male character, Fleming, the young scientist with a chip on his shoulder, is a completely authentic figure of our time. Peter Halliday, who plays Fleming, finds the character both demanding and satisfying - demanding because Halliday himself has no personal experience of the stresses imposed on the backroom boys. He comes from Montgomeryshire in mid-Wales and was brought up among farming people. Admitted to the Royal Academy of Dramatic Art - rather to his own surprise - he went on to four years with the Royal Shakespeare Company at Stratford and toured with them in Australia and New Zealand. "It was when I tried television that I started being cast as a "Young Angry," she says. "I was an angry young schoolmaster in The Common Room and an equally choleric young poet in The Woodcarver. But Fleming's far more than just a type. More facets to his character have appeared as the two series progressed - for example he's now much mellower than when he started. I have come to believe in him completely".

2 - 6 THE ROMAN PEACE (50 MINS)

The threat from space has now taken shape as an attempt to put an end to life in the world by stripping away the air people breathe. Slowly the earth's atmosphere is getting thinner. The scientists working on the Intel computer in Azaran have been struck by violent storms sweeping the world. Can they do anything to prevent imminent disaster? Andromeda is too weak to help; Kaufman holds such political power as remains; Fleming and Dawnay are only tenuously in touch with Britain through the Canadian, Professor Neilson. What will be the outcome of this exciting story which began with A For Andromeda many months ago? You can find out in tonight's final episode.

A STEP INTO THE PAST

AKA: CHUM CHUN GEI

AKA: THE CHRONICLES OF FINDING QIN

Hong Siu Lung (Louis Koo) is a 21st century G4 (Very Important Person Protection Unit,) agent from Hong Kong. In the first episode, Hong and a colleague of his were assigned to guard an exhibition of Qin Shi Huang's terra cotta soldier figures. His colleague notices that one of the clay soldiers has a striking resemblance to Hong. Meanwhile, Hong was going through a particularly difficult period of life, having recently broken up with his girlfriend of seven years, Chun Ching (Sonija Kwok). She had wanted to get married, but he didn't- much preferring his free, happy-go-lucky bachelor's life with no commitments or responsibilities. Because of this, she ends up marrying another man. Lost and depressed, Hong was given a chance to rectify his mistake when he caught the attention of a wealthy young businessman, Li Shao Chiu (Tang Yat Kwan), whilst on the latter's protective detail and saving him from a crazy assassin.

Li recruited Hong to participate in an ultra-secret experiment of a time machine that he had created. Hong agreed to do so in exchange for a chance to travel back in time to prevent his romantic breakup. The plan was to take Hong more than 2000 years back to the Kingdom of Qin, half an hour prior to the coronation of Ying Zheng (the first emperor who unified China and would be known as Qin Shi Huang). Hong was to document the event with a digital camera prior to a swift departure. However, a critical error occurred during the transportation stage and Hong was thrown into the wrong place and the wrong time ending up in the Kingdom of Zhao in 250 BC, at the height of the Warring States Period. He had arrived three years earlier than originally planned.

Hong's time machine signal device is set to work only at a specific location at a specific time meaning that he was stranded in time. In order to return to the future, he had to make his way across thousands of miles in ancient China, ensuring that, at the same time, history happens as it was supposed to. For even a small change in the grand scheme of events will set off a chain of catastrophes that will render the 21st century, as Hong knows it, into oblivion.

Hong thus became a participant in a series of hair-raising yet hilarious adventures. In the process, he befriends Shanrou (Tang Lai Ming), a wandering female assassin; Wu Tingfang (Jessica Hsuan), a beautiful but spoiled rich girl; Zhao Princess Chian (Suet Yee); Zhao Ya (Suet Lei), the sister of the King Xiaocheng of Zhao (Peter Lai); and Ya's son Zhao Pan (Raymond Lam), as well as the beautiful scholar Chin Qing (also played by Sonija Kwok), who looks exactly like Hong's ex-girlfriend Chun Ching.

Hong's 21st-century knowledge, his experience as an elite detective and his physical and martial arts prowess made him invaluable in the eyes of the kings and nobility of the day, as well as inspiring the jealousy and ire of the wicked Chu agent Zhao Mu (Waise Lee) and his henchman Lian Jin (Kwong Wah). Later on, Hong even gained two sworn brothers (whose family had been killed by Zhao Mu's minions) who were faithful and committed to Hong.

As Hong's future is dependent on the ascension to the Qin throne by Ying Zheng, who was at that time being held hostage at Zhao with his mother Zhu Ji (Eileen Yeow), his crucial mission was to ensure that this happened. He successfully tracked down the two, only to find out, to his horror, that the real Ying Zheng, who was actually re-located by his mother since birth, is already dead. But it seemed that the wheels of history is pre-ordained, with Zhu Ji fatefully mistaking Zhao Pan as her own, having never seen the child since infancy.

The reluctant Zhao Pan is thus forced into and maintained in this illustrious role by a desperate Hong, and the party arrives successfully in the Kingdom of Qin. However for Hong, the danger is not yet over to ensure Pan's smooth ascension as Ying Zheng, they must battle with the scheming Qin Prime Minister Lü Buwei (who had in fact fathered the real Ying Zheng with Zhu Ji) and Lü's right-hand man Lau Ai (who is actually Lian Jin in a new identity, and knows the truth of Ying Zheng being Zhao Pan).

Whether through fate or by Hong's never-ending efforts, Ying Zheng became king after the death of his "father" King Zhuangxiang (Lee Lung Kei). His mission completed, Hong is elated that his return home is now possible only to have his hopes dashed at the last minute by the failure of his signalling device from an expired battery, which was designed to last only two years. Panicked, Hong recalled his school-taught knowledge about electricity and recruited his many friends to create a source of electric power. The experiment was successful, and Hong was on his way back home.

Then at the last moment, he turned around and returned to the sides of Wu Tingfang and Chin Qing, who in Hong's heart had grown from a "replacement double" to a true love. He had found the meaning of commitment and sacrifice in a world where love came with responsibilities and loss is often brutal and eternal.

Hong stayed and continued to aid the new King of Qin, becoming more and more indispensable to him, much to the fear and hatred of other courtiers including Lü Buwei and Lau Ai. But who can be a match to one who already knew the future? Eventually, the King got rid of his enemies, and held absolute power once and for all.

And it corrupted him. The naive and kind Zhao Pan had morphed into the ruthless Ying Zheng as depicted in history. Being told numerous times by Hong that he will one day unify China and become the first true emperor holding all-encompassing imperial rule, the King knew just how invaluable Hong would be to his future quests. Hong, however, sad and sorry at the evil he'd help create and also knowing that he is not destined to leave his mark in history (he never saw his own name in history), refused, choosing instead to leave the court with his two wives forever.

Taking the view that "if you're not with me then you're against me", the furious King sent his troops after Hong, and would have captured him until he remembered that his own life and well being is linked to that of Hong's through the threads of history - that the death of one would mean the loss of the other. He remembers a time once when Hong did something that could have changed history, both of them lost their reflections as a result. Reluctant but acting out of self-preservation, the king sent Hong into exile, and decreed that the name Hong Siu Long should never be seen, heard or be spoken of again. All books that mentioned him would be destroyed, and the writers and scholars who disobeyed this edict would be killed - an imaginative explanation to account for Emperor Qin's notorious and brutal act of "burning books and killing scholars".

Hong, with his wives and sworn brothers, find paradise in the grasslands far from the city, and even has a son with Wu Tingfang. The last revelation is revealed during the final moments of the finale episode - Hong's son is in fact Xiang Yu, who would one day overthrow the Qin Dynasty.

A Step into the Past (literal translation: The Chronicles of Finding Qin) is a Hong Kong television drama produced by TVB, released in 2001 and adapted from the novel Xun Qin Ji by Huang Yi. It tells the story of a 21st century Hong Kong cop, Hong Siu Lung, who travels back in time to the Warring States Period of China, and finds himself involved in important history events leading to the unification of China.

A Step into the Past is one of the most critically acclaimed TVB production ever in the studio's history. It received very high ratings during its initial run in 2001, and continued to be highly successful during its midnight re-runs in summer 2005, leading to yet another trend of late-night TV watching after At the Threshold of an Era.

At that time Louis Koo was already famous and popular, and had major roles in countless TV series before. This was the last TV series that he took part in, however, because he decided to concentrate on acting in feature films rather than television. He has since starred in numerous popular films such as the critically acclaimed Election and its sequel.

Raymond Lam, in his first major role, was highly praised for his breakthrough performance as Emperor Qin, and rose to fame quickly. He has starred in numerous leading roles ever since.

After its successful summer 2005 midnight re-run, TVB decided to release A Step Into The Past on DVD and VCD for the first time on November 18 of the same year. It also became the second TVB drama to receive a DVD release (after War and Beauty), and the first to receive a non-limited release.

The wealthy businessman who invented the time machine (played by Tang Yat Kwan) resembles in many ways to Richard Li, the son of wealthy Hong Kong businessman Li Ka-Shing. The resemblance could be interpreted as intentional, as Richard Li was closing a deal to buy out Hong Kong Telecom (then renamed Cable and Wireless HKT) at the time, which was hailed as the largest takeover in Hong Kong history. While filming in mainland China, Jessica Hsuan was stricken with Cholera, causing her to enter a local hospital. She remained in bed for over a month until she was able to leave and start filming again. This caused Jessica's character to be absent for a while in the series. During her hospital stay, many of her co-stars, including Louis Koo, visited her regularly.

The series attempts to keep to accurate chinese historical events, and is available in Mandarin and Cantonese.

A.J.'S TIME TRAVELLERS

15 Year old A.J. Malloy discovers about historical figures in the past, by the use of a space-time machine. A.J. is not alone on his journey however, also on board the Kyros was Izzy, a half man - half dog; B.I.T. ; a cyborg navigator; Maria, the pilot and first officer; and Ollie who ran the timeship, when A.J. was not on board. A.J.s trip's into the past however were thought with danger when after his journey he has to answer questions about the historical figure that he has just visited.

This 1995 SF series was designed for kids to learn about history through the use of a time machine. "AJTT" was meant for young children to learn history and consequently is of very little significance in the world of SF TV. The show were very simple and the acting of some of the guest stars way over the top. Some of the famous people that AJ visited included Galileo, James Watt, Captain Smith of the Titanic, Edgar Alan Poe and Peter the Great. The show also attempted to have a catchphrase which was 'Knowledge is Power' which just sounded ridiculous everytime it was said by a cast member, in most episodes. In short, a series which is best forgotten.

The series was first seen in the US on FOX Television, but after only four episodes the series was cancelled, a number of other episodes however were seen in the syndicated market on WPWR. I have definite dates for 13 episodes on WPWR and four on FOX. However the number of episodes is far greater, this is due to a total of 35 episodes being seen in the UK, on the satellite and cable channel The Children's Channel, full details for those episodes however do not exist. The four writers for the series wrote the whole series, taking it in turns. Michael Finney directed all but one episode of the series.

ACE LIGHTNING

Combining live-action and CGI animation, this groundbreaking action/comedy follows the adventures of thirteen-year-old Mark Hollander (Played by British actor Tom Wansey). Newly arrived in North America from England, Mark is playing his favorite video game "Ace Lightning and the Carnival of Doom" when he discovers a level that shouldn't exist. While exploring the level, lightning strikes his house and electricity courses through his computer, bringing the game's characters to life. Believing the real world is another level of the video game, Ace Lightning (Played by Michael Riley) enlists Mark to help him defeat Lord Fear and find the missing pieces of the magical Amulet of Zoar. All the while, Mark tries to juggle living a normal life of school, family and friends. Mark's first North American friend is the school doormat and Ace Lightning expert Chuck Mugel(Played by Marc Minardi). Mark's love interest is Samantha Thompson(Played by Shadia Simmons).

Ace Lightning is a children's television show that has appeared in several different countries. It was filmed in Canada but the programme was set in America.

Human Characters

See Main Characters of Ace Lightning for more details.

Mark Hollander: An English boy moved to America who serves as Ace's sidekick, and has to deal with ordinary teenager problems in addition to fighting evil. In the second season he gets his own wrist cannon so he can help Ace fight.

Chuck Mugel: Mark's best friend and president of the town's Ace Lightning fan club. A computer expert as well. Called "Upchuck" by the school bullies because he vomits easily. At the end of season one, he dates Wayne's cousin, Jessica. He meets Ace when he uses a microchip located in Mark's piece of the Amulet in Season 2, helps him with new upgrades and brought back Sparx from the Sixth Dimension.

Samantha Thompson: Mark's first girlfriend in season one. She was always suspicious of Mark in the first series and split up with him eventually. In season two she is in a boarding school and later chooses a new boyfriend named Jeremy.

Kat Adams: A new girl in school who becomes Mark's third girlfriend. She finds out about Ace and the other characters.

Wayne Fisgus: The head bully of the school. He calls Lord Fear "Boneman" and has seen him several times in the Haunted House, though is either too frightened or skeptical to investigate further.

Ashley: Mark's cousin, and until the second season the only other person who knows about Ace and the Evil Gang.

Mr. Cheseborough: A science teacher who's a frequent incidental victim of the battles between Ace and the Evil Gang. He thinks Mark and the video characters are aliens. In the second season, he gets trapped in the game but gets out thanks to Chuck. But when he was released, he went insane trying to tell everyone that "aliens" were attacking. His current whereabouts are unknown.

Duff Kent: The carnival's original owner, but when Lord Fear appeared on the scene, he became a slave to the villains. He is good friends with the Rat and can give good advice to Lord Fear. He usually just complains about living with the villains and drives them to places outside the carnival in an ice cream truck.

Fiona and Simon Hollander: Mark's cheerful parents. Fiona loves garden gnomes, while Simon is into the fancy gadgets of America, like leafblowers. Simon is often a source of comic relief, but a competent fellow when the chips come down, as when he takes charge during a video villain attack.

Rick, The Master Programmer: The creator of Ace Lightning. He was mocked by his fellow programmers after creating a programme which brought the characters to life. Before he left, he put his program into an ordinary game. He created Kilobyte, but Kilobyte betrayed him and trapped Rick in the game.

CGI Characters

The video-game characters all are created using CGI and special effects. Each character breathes, eats and sleeps, as do humans. The Lightning Knights each have an inbuilt information screen in their programming (as seen by Ace during the early episodes) which includes a map, the location, and a health bar (a la a POV from someone playing the game). If a Lightning Knight is harmed, they will be weakened and flicker, until the point where they are destroyed and sent back to the game, seen when Sparx is destroyed by Zip and Snip. This now appears to apply to Lady Illusion as in the final episode where she is destroyed by Lord Fear, she flickers before she disappears.

The villains are destroyed frequently in the series, but instead of returning to the game, they all morph into various items around the Carnival of Doom. All the villains except Lady Illusion and Fred are known to morph into an object. All the villains except Fred have been sent back to the game. No character has been destroyed for good, or what the fans call "deleted". Below is a list of what the villains morph into:

Lord Fear/Staff Head - Skeleton with staff.

Kilobyte - Ferris Wheel

Lady Illusion - Unknown, perhaps inapplicable

Dirty Rat - Gargoyle

Pigface - Bin

Anvil - Test-Your-Strength Machine

Googler - Puppet Theatre

Rotgut - Mini-Golf Course

The Lightning Knights

The Lightning Knights are the heroes of the video game who protect the Amulet of Zoar. If they suffer damage or overtax their powers, they must absorb electricity ("power up") to recover. When they are weakened in such a fashion, their images flicker with static. If they take too much damage without recovering, they are transported back into the game.

Ace Lightning

The hero of the series. Foremost of the Lightning Knights, and the leader of the war against Lord Fear. Brave, strong and sometimes a bit clumsy (evidence of his clumsiness can be seen when he breaks stuff in Mark's house), Ace fights nobly against the forces of evil. Ace can fly and has super strength. He fires lightning bolts from his wrist cannons in various forms, or he can use the Lightning Lance in the same way. The Shield of Justice can deflect powerful attacks back at the user. Ace employs Mark to be his sidekick in the battle against Lord Fear, much to Mark's protests. In Season 2, Kilobyte gives Ace human emotions, which believes will destroy him. Kilobyte's plan backfires when Ace and Lord Fear form a truce and with help from Mark, blast him into the game.

Sparx

Sparx is an energetic and the only known female Lightning Knight. She is Ace's sidekick, although she has trouble listening to him. Sparx cannot fly like Ace, so she uses the Lightning Flash to travel. Her weapon is the Sword of Jacob, which can fire lightning bolts like Ace's wrist cannons. Sparx made her debut in Episode 11, where she criticizes Mark for being small and he quits his role as the Knight. Sparx starts to like Mark after he saves her from Ace when he becomes a zombie. Sparx is then destroyed by Googler in Episode 16. She comes back from the game later on the series and helps Ace, Mark and Random Virus in the final battle against Lord Fear. In Season 2, Sparx is trapped in the game for six episodes, but is freed by Chuck.

Random Virus

Random Virus is a cyborg who is a Lightning Knight with two programmes, one good and one evil and so is a hero and villain at different times. Random's past is mysterious, but it says he has been a cyborg for six years in the official Ace Lightning Yearbook. Random got his metal parts and evil side when he was wounded in a battle before the events of the show. Random hides out in a junkyard away from others so he doesn't harm them. His evil side has taken over many times to try and destroy Ace Lightning. He has a robotic claw that can deflect energy beams or smash almost anything, and has a rarely-used power to mentally control machines. Random is one of the only two CGI characters who has not returned to the game.

The Villains

The villains inhabit the Kent Brothers Carnival, because of its similarity to the Carnival of Doom which is their headquarters in the game. They can be blasted into nothingness by the Lightning Knights, but in true video game villain fashion will keep coming back for more until the heroes are able to win the game. Upon being defeated they return to a carnival fixture to recover and soon return. On the official Ace Lightning site they were called "the Evil Gang," but are not given a group name in the show.

Lord Fear

The main villain of Season 1. An undead skeleton, Lord Fear is Ace's arch nemesis and has dreams of obtaining the Amulet of Zoar which he will use to conquer the universe. Lord Fear is able to extend his limbs to great lengths and throttle enemies with a tight grip. He has limp in his right leg and requires Staff Head to walk properly. A ruthless but aging tyrant, Lord Fear is a dangerous foe to the Lightning Knights. He can play the organ and golf like a pro and has never even had a lesson. He morphs into a skeleton with Staff Head. Despite being defeated at the end of the first season, Lord Fear returned for revenge. He was given the Doom Wagon by Kilobyte to be more formidable to Ace. After learning Lady Illusion, his mistress, had fallen for Ace, Lord Fear tried to kill her and unexpectedly succeeded when he mistook her for Ace. In the cancelled Season 3, he, Staff Head and Dirty Rat would be on the run, finding Mr. Cheseborough and briefly living with him while he figured out how to free his minions without the Amulet.

Kilobyte

Kilobyte is Season 2's main villain. Created by the Master Programmer to destroy Ace Lightning, Kilobyte makes his debut in Episode 29, but only as a silhouette. After examining Ace and the other character, Kilobyte revealed himself and conquered the Carnival of Doom easily. Kilobyte has four octopus tentacles which can drain another character of their energy, automatically making Kilobyte stronger. Kilobyte plotted to destroy Ace using human emotions and a mutant wasp named Fred. Kilobyte eventually freed himself from the Master Programmer's control and imprisoned him in the game. Kilobyte was annihilated by Lady Illusion (as Ace), Lord Fear and Mark. In Season 3, he was to be trapped in the game but released during Ace's rescue mission for Lady Illusion.

Lady Illusion

An ex-villain and a shapeshifter. She also can create bubble-shaped projectiles that either release gas or can trap Lightning Knights, and at least in the video game can control giant spiders. Lady Illusion was once Lord Fear's mistress, but she fell in love with Ace and they secretly became a couple. Half way through the first season, Staff Head discovered their affair and blackmailed Lady Illusion into doing Lord Fear's dirty work. In Season 2, Lord Fear forces Lady Illusion to collect the pieces of the Amulet, Mark has hidden in his house. Mark found out about her and Ace chased her away, but not before she given Ace human emotions. Lord Fear accidentally blasts her at the second season finale, as she had disguised herself as Ace, and she disappears. In Season 3 she was to be alive but imprisoned in the game and was to be rescued by Ace.

Staff Head

Lord Fear's weapon and crutch all in one. Staff Head resembles a frog on a stick. The orb he holds can fire powerful beams of energy which can damage foes badly. He can also slither around like a snake and trip enemies. In Season 2, Staff Head is redesigned to look more like a frog. He has a cousin named Benny.

Dirty Rat

Lord Fear's sneaky and deviously cunning spy. He is a winged rat dressed in a clown suit. He can also throw bubble-shaped projectiles just like Lady Illusion. Dirty Rat loathes Lord Fear and in one episode takes over the carnival. When at rest, he morphs into a gargoyle outside the haunted house. In Season 2, Dirty Rat works for Kilobyte but when he is destroyed, Dirty Rat flees with Lord Fear to safety.

Anvil

Anvil is the dim-witted muscle of the evil gang. Anvil is a humanoid rhinoceros with an anvil attached to his arm. Immensely strong and formidable, but equally stupid, Anvil is a force not to be taken lightly. However, when exposed to the dark, Anvil becomes a coward. Anvil morphs into a strength testing machine in the carnival.

Pigface

Pigface is a grotesque pig-like creature with a ravenous appetite. He is able to eat anything, from science beakers and golf clubs, to a vanload of pizzas. Pigface is incredibly disgusting and is known for his bad habits which includes farting, belching and picking his nose. He morphs into a trash can at the carnival. In Season 2, Pigface is upgraded with an energy-draining blast of snot.

Googler

A maniacal jester able to roll into a spiked ball. His glovepuppets, Zip and Snip have very sharp teeth and can spew venom into enemies, turning them into zombies. Googler was summoned by Lord Fear from White Hot Oblivion, where he was previously imprisoned by Ace. Googler helped in the killing of Sparx, but she got payback when she was resurrected from the game. In Season 2, Googler was upgraded with an ability to make the Lightning Knights "bleed" data until they returned to the Datastream.

Rotgut

Rotgut is an undead cowboy zombie. He has a problem keeping his body together and usually is distracted from his missions when his hand crawls away. Rotgut dislikes being called a zombie and prefers being called the "Walking Dead". He is also very sensitive and has once attempted to hug Mr. Chesebrough at a farm. Rotgut did not make a very good impression on Lord Fear, who treated him like dirt. In Episode 36, Rotgut takes over Chuck's body, turning him into a zombie, but Mark defeats him. We also find out that Rotgut likes ribs. In the last episode, Ace says to Rotgut "Get back to your dirt hole, you walking dead guy!" and Rotgut believes Ace is calling him the Walking Dead. He goes to his grave a happy zombie.

Fred

Fred is Kilobyte's giant mutant wasp and the only character not to talk. Originally a normal wasp, Fred stung Kilobyte and absorbed some of his powers, transforming into a giant wasp. Fred flies Kilobyte around and helps him capture Ace and Sparx in some episodes. Fred is also the only character that Kilobyte shows kindness towards.

Candy Floss

Candy Floss is a character that was to appear in the cancelled third series of the show. She has a gothic-punk appearance and is armed with a bow which fires arrow that have explosive lollies on the end. She could also weave webs of candy floss to ensnare her enemies.

Buzzbeast

A character who was scrapped early in the making of season two, probably because of his appearance and choice of weaponry. It is a vicious-looking raptor with a circular saw built right into its head, and a smaller one in its tail.

Scrambler

Scrambler is a character who may appear in a third series. Fans have suggested that he might be the original concept for Kilobyte, an upgrade for Kilobyte or even a prototype character of the Cyber Stalker the Master Programmer has created, as their appearances are very similar. He was a character who only made it to the design stage, but was scrapped.

Video Game Characters

Footage from the games have been shown in the second series, whereas in the first season footage supposedly from the game was actually created just for the show. The CGI characters believe that the game is the Sixth Dimension, except Ace who discovers that it is really a video game. Chuck, Rick and Mr. Chesebrough have all become 3D characters, after being sucked into the game. Characters seen in the game include Giant George Wayne, an enormous cowboy golem, and a series of zombies and circus creatures.

Season 1 Synopsis

The first season was produced in 2002 and was shown in several countries like the United States of America, the United Kingdom and Australia. The season introduced the main characters throughout the 26 episodes. Episode 8 was a Halloween special and Episode 18 was a semi-April Fools Day special. Episode 20 was a clip show episode featuring the character Duff Kent seeing a psychiatrist about his life with the evils. The graphics were poor in some episodes, but overall decent. Throughout the series, the characters obtained pieces of the Amulet of Zoar which they used to summon reinforcements from the Sixth Dimension. These characters included Googler, Sparx and Random Virus. Originally the characters were going to originate from a comic book, but it was altered in terms of popularity against a video game.

Note: When broadcast in America, the episodes were shown out of order, which sometimes resulted in severe continuity errors. For instance, "Tunnel of Love" was shown before "Once Upon a Hero." Meaning Random Virus would show up as an established character the day before he would be established.

Season 2 Synopsis

The second series first aired in most countries in 2004, but it aired in the United Kingdom during the summer of 2005 for unknown reasons. Due to the poor reception of the first season, this season was not aired in the United States. The graphics were greatly improved, and several of the characters including Staff Head and Pigface were changed to look more like the animals they resembled. Kilobyte, Rotgut, Kat Adams and Rick the Master Programmer made their debuts in the season. Chuck also meets the Lightning Knights and Mark gets his own weapon, allowing him to battle the villains as well.

There were only 13 episodes, and focused on one overall storyline. Some people consider this season to be Season 3 (with most television shows having each season with thirteen episodes).

Season 3

A Season 3 was in the making but was sadly cancelled due to the show's unpopularity and not enough money from merchandise to continue the project. Known facts about the show included Ace would go into the game and rescue Lady Illusion, possibly freeing Kilobyte and Rick too. Lord Fear, Staff Head and Dirty Rat would live together with Mr. Cheseborough for a while, Lord Fear using the teacher's knowledge and technology to find a way to release Anvil, Pigface, Googler and Rotgut from the game without the use of the Amulet. Candy Floss was also to be introduced in the series, presumably in the first episode (like Rotgut was in Season 2). Nothing else is known about the season but likely events would include Kat spending time with the Lightning Knights, Random Virus continuing to hide away and Ace and Lady Illusion having romantic moments together. It is unknown whether or not the season shall be revived for creation, but there is a chance.

Connections Between the Show and Game

After the first season, a series of video games were released for the Playstation 2, Gameboy Advance and PC. They seem to take place before the television show. There are connections between the show and games but very limited. Below are several connections.

Lady Illusion's game character is very different from the show's interpretation. She is very dull but appears to have a "soft spot" for Ace. Fans consider her to be more dependent in the game adaption. Also in the game, Lady Illusion is seen with her explosion upgrade (an orange ball) - whether or not this is a homage to Season 2 is unknown.

Random Virus is slightly different. He seems very schizophrenic and when his evil mode is in control, both of his eyes turn fully red.

Ace Lightning is rather overconfident in the game and doesn't possess his personality in the show.

Ace is unable to fly in the game as he can in the show, and needs to use trampolines and platforms to reach high places, and can die from falling off ledges.

All of the characters were not voiced by their original actors, just others who impersonated them. Sparx was not even properly featured in the game well i hope so

Lightning strikes the dish on his house, the power goes into Mark's Computer and characters from the game come to life. They continue to play out the game in our world, which involves an interesting struggle between Ace Lightning and his archenemy Lord Fear in Mark's backyard as they try to retrieve the pieces of the magical Amulet of Zoar.

Ace Lightning enlists Mark in his battle with Lord Fear, thinking that he too is a Lightning knight with powers(which isn't true). Ace gives Mark his piece of the amulet. Mark discovers that helping a superhero to save the world isn't easy.

Mark also makes friends or as he calls them 'mates' with Chuck Mugel or 'Upchuck' as he is called by the bullies. Mark is disgusted by how Chuck lets them push them around like that. He also meets Samantha, his beautiful next door neighbour at the bus stop. Samantha, is a little curious about all those noises she heard the night before in his backyard. (remember the fight mentioned above between Lord Fear and Ace Lightning). Mark however covers up with a that was the game, just had it loud routine.

Samantha invites Mark for pizza after school, but he blows her off because of Ace (something we'll see alot of in the episode's to come). Ace has found the Carnival of Doom and lives to fight another day. His car-draining power source isn't the best, so he is having troubles with that.

ACE OF WANDS

Ace of Wands concerned Tarot, who was a master magician and telepathic super sleuth, who would use his gifts in order to fought evil criminals, such as Madam Midnight and Mr. Stabs. For the first two seasons his stage assistant Lulli Palmer, who has a telepathic link with Tarot would share his adventures.

"Ace of Wands" has never been aired in America. It is unlikely that the program will ever be, since all the episodes from the first two series no longer exist in the archives. All of the episodes from the third and final season do exist however. This highly successful ITV children's adventure series of the early 1970s conjured up one of television's most dashing fantasy heroes - Tarot, a master magician, illusionist, escapologist, and telepathic supersleuth, Tarot was hailed at the start as a '20th Century Robin Hood', with a pinch of Merlin and a dash of Houdini.

With his companions, Tarot tackled and dispatched a collection of outrageous villains who wouldn't have felt out of place in BATMAN - adversaries such as Madam Midnight, the evil magician Mr. Stabs, art thief Tun-Ju, mad chessmaster Ceribraun and the bizarre Mama Doc. Created by Trevor Preston, the series wove magic, the supernatural and science-fiction into a set of adventures that weren't afraid to send out a shiver or two. Several tales have especially sinister storylines, in 'The Beautiful People', domestic machines turned on their owners; the unnerving 'Mama Doc' turned people into life-sized dolls; and 'Nightmare Gas' included horrific dreams that could literally scare victims to death.

Several tales had especially sinister storylines: In The Beautiful People, domestic machines turned on their owners; the unnerving Mama Doc turned people into life-sized dolls; and Nightmare Gas induced horrific dreams that could literally scare victims to death.

Sharing Tarot's adventures were, in the first two seasons, his stage assistant Lulli Palmer, who had a telepathic link with Tarot, his enterprising, ex-convict, stage manager Sam Maxted, and the eccentric Mr. Sweet, an antiquarian bookseller with a computer-like mind. By Season Three, Mr. Sweet was still around, now working at a university, but Lulli and Sam had given way to Mikki Diamond, a young journalist, and her photographer brother, Chas. Mikki, too, had a telepathic link with Tarot. Completing the regulars was an inscrutable owl, Ozymandias.

Producers for the series were Pamela Lonsdale (Season One & Two) and John Russell (Season Three). The music was by Andrew Brown and the magical advisor was Ali Bongo. Designers for the series were Tony Borer, Bernard Spencer, Colin Andrews, Frank Gillman, Tony Borer, Harry Clark, Bill Palmer, Gordon Toms, Philip Blowers, Andrew Drummond and Eric Shedden.

It was in the Summer of 1970, when the heroes of children's adventure shows were still either adults or puppets, that Thames television launched one of their most successful children's fantasy series - Ace Of Wands. The series portrayed the adventures of a young magician, Tarot, and his assistants Lulli Palmer and Sam Maxted. As well as having a stage career as a conjuror and escapologist, Tarot spent much of his spare time solving mysteries and crimes of a bizarre or magical nature. As with many serials of that time, the format was a series of multi-part stories (as in Doctor Who, Sexton Blake, Orlando etc) with the usual story length being three twenty-five minute episodes.

Trevor Preston and Pamela Lonsdale created the series. Preston is best known these days for his contributions to Euston Films' series such as The Sweeney as well as Out and Fox, both of which he created. Back in the sixties and early seventies, a great deal of his work was in adapting existing stories for children's television including The Lion, The Witch And The Wardrobe in 1967, The Incredible Adventures Of Professor Branestawm, a 1969 Thames production, and The Tyrant King. Preston remained faithful to the fantasy elements of these earlier serials with his stories for Ace Of Wands although his reason for writing it points also to his later work: "The kids were watching the cop/crime series so I decided to write for them a kids cop/crime. The series turned out very close to the original idea."

Preston had very little to do with the later episodes after Pamela Lonsdale handed over the producer's reigns to John Russell in 1972. He saw scripts by other writers before production but set no storylines. "Some of them," he says, "were very good, especially those by P. J. Hammond." Preston's favourite story was "Seven Serpents, Sulphur and Salt", also a favourite of Pamela Lonsdale, and Michael Mackenzie who played Tarot.

Unlike Preston, who later wrote almost exclusively for adult drama series, Pamela Lonsdale continued to produce series for the younger viewers and was Executive Producer responsible for Children's Drama at Thames Television for five years until she turned freelance at the end of September 1984. She was producer of the first two series of Ace Of Wands and as well as creating the series with Trevor Preston she also directed one story - the superb "Seven Serpents, Sulphur and Salt". Before Ace Of Wands she worked on several other children's series including the excellent Smith, The Queen Street Gang (whose timeslot, when vacated, was taken over by Preston's The Tyrant King) and, with Preston, The Lion, The Witch And The Wardrobe for ABC TV. Pamela says, "I view the series with great affection and it was in fact one of the most successful shows we have ever transmitted." The series did well abroad and sold to several countries including Canada, Hong Kong, New Zealand, Yugoslavia and Thailand.

Restrictions set for the series were various. Not more than to 2½ to 3 minutes of outside filming could be used per 26 minute episode. Filming was limited to within 30 miles of Teddington studios, allowing the crew the whole of London and the Thames. Two permanent sets were constructed, these being Tarot's apartment complete with security and looking devices, and Mr. Sweet's bookshop, plus a maximum of two extra sets per episode. A cast of ten per episode was allocated, including regular cast.

The original title for the series was Tarot and other names for the hero were considered such as Chandos, Marcos, Dom, Zadig and Omega. The title Ace Of Wands refers both to the lead character Tarot and also to a card in the tarot pack. The divinatory meanings of the card, which is also known as the 'Ace of Batons', point to intuition, creativity, originality and artistic inspiration - all aspects of Tarot's character.

A relatively unknown actor was chosen to play Tarot - Michael Mackenzie. Then in his late twenties, Mackenzie had only been acting for three years, having previously trained for a career in law. Most of his work at that point had been in the theatre, although he had appeared in series such as Rogue's Gallery and Doctor In The House and was perhaps a surprise for the series lead. In such less-enlightened times, magazines like TVTimes made much of the fact that Mackenzie's then wife, actress Ann Holloway, was already had one of the leads in the sitcom Father, Dear Father and thus had previously been more successful than he. Mackenzie himself claims that he had no idea what he was doing at first, apart from making sure he looked good in the trendy clothes and fast cars. His aim was to convey the impression of great inner strength plus mental and spiritual development, but to be relaxed too. His special research only involved learning what the Tarot cards were and learning tricks from famous magician Ali Bongo, the show's magic adviser. In the event he and the part fitted hand-in-glove and it would be hard to imagine a more experienced actor doing better in the role. Despite this, little of Mackenzie's subsequent work was in television and he has spent most of his time since Ace Of Wands in the theatre, with brief fantasy excursions on television in The Omega Factor and Blake's 7. This latter appearance featured either a great co-incident or a wonderful in-joke. Mackenzie plays a guard on board the ship taking Blake and other convicts to Cygnus Alpha. During an escape attempt he is distracted by Vila, played by Michael Keating - the method of distraction? Vila shows him a card trick! In 1985 he made a brief appearance in Edge Of Darkness and he later went to Russia to make an American mini-series Peter the Great. After a great many years absence, his face became familiar once again as the devious Dr. Turner in Cardiac Arrest.

"I liked any story in which I was allowed to drive the BMW bike, or the cars fast, or when we could bring Ozzie the Owl into things," recalls Mackenzie. "Although I've forgotten most of the stories, I can remember most of the villains! That was one of the great strengths of the series, the baddies were terrific, great fun to play, which is why we got so many good actors to play them ... such as Russell Hunter as Mr. Stabs."

Tarot was an enigma to the outside world, and it was originally planned that he would always perform in a mask. He was very handsome, very intelligent and, so the Thames press-releases would have it "could defend himself with the grace of a matador." Primarily he liked to solve mysteries and combat crime. He lived in his own private 'pad' (as the jargon was at the time) which was originally to be on top of a London sky-scraper, although was relocated to the upper floor of a warehouse. He also owned an E-type Jaguar.

Tarot, had an assistant, as magicians do. Twenty-three year old Judy Loe, then a newcomer to television, played Lillian Palmer, known by her nickname: Lulli. As well as helping Tarot with his act on stage, she had a telepathic link with him which enabled them to communicate with each other even when several miles apart. Lulli had met Tarot when Tarot, driving with Sam in his Jaguar, sensed Lulli's mind nearby and lost control of the car, resulting in a collision with Lulli's beach buggy. Discovering their telepathic link, Tarot asked her to be his aide, and the twenty year old orphan agreed. An ex-Oxford University student, she had studied philosophy but had left, bored, after a year. She was vulnerable because of her femininity, but also had the guile unique to females. Since Ace Of Wands, Judy has worked on various TV shows including Goodnight And Godbless, Missing From Home and Revelations. The third member of the team, and the first to be cast, was Tarot's loyal cockney friend Sam Maxted, played by Tony Selby, who was generally known for 'heavy' roles. As well as helping with his stage equipment as stage manager, Sam was Tarot's 'right-hand' man and could be relied upon in a fight (which was seldom as the production team knew that fights in the confines of a TV studio did not work) or for opening locks and gaining entrance. Sam had been a seaman, gravedigger, fish porter, fair-booth boxer and bodyguard. After two spells in the nick he had hit hard times and was a sack-and-chain man for an old escapologist when he met Tarot. He lived at Tarot's apartment creating the trick props, lights and music for Tarot's act. Sam's mode of transport was a BMW motorbike. Selby was later best remembered for his role as Corporal Marsh in Get Some In! and later for his roles in Hideaway and as Glitz in Doctor Who. The fourth regular was Mr. Sebastian Sweet, an antiquarian bookseller played by veteran actor Donald Layne-Smith. Mr. Sweet often acted as Tarot's front man, using his many contacts at universities and other places, such as the bizarre Charlie Postle, to help Tarot's investigations. Frequently though, it is these friends who are themselves the cause of Tarot's investigations. Now running an antiquarian bookshop in Bloomsbury, the sixty-year-old man enjoyed an international reputation as a lepidopterist and entomologist. He had a remarkable knowledge and a vast array of books on all subjects. A true and amazing eccentric, he dressed in tweeds and rode a Moulton bicycle.

Completing the team was Ozymandias, played by Fred, a Malayan fishing owl. Ozzie's main purpose was to sit on his open perch in Tarot's flat looking inscrutable, and this he did very well, Fred Owl was owned by Tony Travers and was well trained to avoid wasting recording time in the studio. He was loved by all, particularly Lulli, although Sam jokingly referred to him mainly as a "mangy lump", or a "cross-eyed cuckoo". After a while, the cast were able to take more control of the scripts and iron out any inconsistency of character or story continuity. Mackenzie relied a lot on Preston or director John Russell at first, as both wanted it to be as way-out as could be allowed for what was officially a children's series.

One more person connected with the show throughout, although only credited from season two onwards, was Ali Bongo, the series' full-time magical adviser. Ali subsequently worked with Paul Daniels and the late David Nixon. During Ace Of Wands he was relied upon to coach Mackenzie in the art of performing his tricks in front of the camera in a manner that looked professional. According to Mackenzie though, the most difficult thing that Ali persuaded him to do was to make a speech as his guest at a Magic Circle dinner! In addition to his role as magic coach, Ali also built specialised props for the show, such as the snake in "The Power of Atepe", the smoke bombs in "Now You See It, Now You Don't" and even played the mummy in "The Eye Of Ra". The only item of merchandise connected with the show was a record of the theme song written by Andrew Bown and Trevor Preston. Recorded by Bown and titled "Tarot" this record was released on the Parlophone label (R5856) after recording in July 1970. It is identical to the music used on the episodes, although the Preston's lyrics underwent some changes between initial draft and recording. The record was backed with the incidental music track "Lulli Rides Again". Deleted in February 1971, copies are very hard to find. The remaining music used on the series was stock from various sources. Other merchandise for the series was proposed in the form of a comic strip in "Look-In", the new Junior TV Times launched in 1971, and a paperback book. Neither of these came about since Preston was determined to write all the new material himself, and the rates offered for such work were too low.

Only two directors were used on the first series of thirteen episodes - John Russell and veteran Michael Curren-Briggs, both of whom directed two stories. Russell was, in fact, to remain with the show throughout its three series, directing six of the fourteen stories and eventually taking over the producer's chair.

The first series was not, perhaps, quite as magical as the latter two. Although the villains themselves had magical powers throughout each series, the first concentrated on slightly more conventional 'crimes' whereas later stories sometimes featured no obvious 'crime' at all. Sadly, the original production files on the series have been lost or destroyed by Thames, and details of recording are non-existent bar a few details on the first season. The opening tale, "One And One And One Are Four" was allocated much location shooting, at the Ham and Petersham Rifle Club on May 15th 1970 and Highgate Cemetery on May 20th. The story went to studio for videotaping on 26th May and 10th June with "The Mind Robbers" recorded on the 1st and 15th of July. There was then a break for the publicity run-up to telecast with a photocall in London for the regular cast on July 26th. "Now You See It, Now You Don't" was recorded on August 12th, and the final story "The Smile" was made over August and September with some location work, during which Fred Owl caused a lot of problems by refusing to leave a tree!

The series began transmission in July 1970 with "One And One And One Are Four" by Preston and directed by Russell. It involved Tarot and company being asked to recover an invention stolen by Madame Midnight (Hildegard Neil) and her accomplice Teddy Talk (Michael Standing). The device, which when used for good can cure paralysis, is of course a deadly weapon in the wrong hands. This was an oft-used plot: the theft of a new invention to be used for evil.

Story two, "The Mind Robbers", was written by William Emms, a writer brought on to the show from Callan suggested to Pamela Lonsdale by her husband, Reginald Collin, and directed by Curren-Briggs. Tarot is asked to find two missing government ministers who have been captured by Señor Zandar (Vernon Dobtcheff) and his assistant Fat Boy. Zandar captures Lulli and uses her to trap Tarot in his bizarre house where they encounter goats, a donkey, a Zulu warrior and many other strange figures. Needless to say, Tarot manages to turn the tables on Zandar in the nick of time.

The only two-parter, "Now You See It, Now You Don't" was written rapidly by the late Don Houghton, also a Doctor Who writer at the time, and featured Christopher Benjamin as Falk, a villain who occupies a houseboat full of computers and Nazis. The climax of the story takes place in Battersea Power Station and director John Russell was given permission to shoot the final scenes inside the real power station, thus giving the episode a greater air of authenticity, instead of building a smaller studio mock-up as was originally planned.

The season closed with "The Smile", another Preston story, in which Tarot comes up against Tun-Ju (Willoughby Goddard) and Mrs Kite. Tun-Ju is an art thief and after successfully stealing Venus he embarks on a more audacious plan to steal the Mona Lisa. Fortunately he is thwarted by Tarot, who during the story is exposed to mind wiping machines and other fiendish inventions created by the huge oriental villain.

In the first season, when Tarot and Lulli were in ESP contact, the camera would close in on Mackenzie's eyes. During these scenes Mackenzie would wear large black contact lenses, and an image of Judy Loe's head would be superimposed over them. For this Judy Loe stood on a black set in a black velvet catsuit to be filmed by a separate camera. For the second and third seasons, Mackenzie retained the contact lenses all the time as he felt they helped give Tarot a special feel. A lot of trick photography was used on the show, some of it still experimental at this stage. Ace Of Wands was one of the first Thames shows to make extensive use of chroma-key, and also used inlay, plus a locked-off camera so that people or things could appear or disappear. But all the tricks that Tarot did, Mackenzie tended to do himself, some of the conjuring acts were clearly impossible to achieve without stopping the videotape and cheating the viewer.

Season two opened in July 1971 with one of the best tales, "Seven Serpents, Sulphur And Salt". This three part story, the last to be written by Preston, concerned the exploits of Mr. Stabs or rather Estabis (excellently portrayed by Russell Hunter), an evil magician of the Brotherhood whose headquarters were in the eerie taxidermist's shop. Aided by his smelly sidekick Luko and the spirit Polandi, Stabs sets out to get the missing segment to the Secret Seven Serpents which is in Tarot's possession and use the power he gains to discover Flameld's formula for turning base metal into gold. After several near defeats, Tarot eventually gains victory over Stabs using his powers of ventriloquism. Stabs, believing he is hearing a voice of a power higher than himself, disappears in a puff of smoke leaving a pair of white gloves behind him. Viewers in the Thames area were very lucky as the story was shown again in London only - in July 1973, a much deserved repeat.

This story contained one of the few 'gimmicks' in the series. Stabs' powers stem from his hand and all his spells required him to point at the object or person who was to be the victim and chant a rhyme which always began with the words 'Hand of Stabs' (e.g. Hand of Stabs - Turn this fool - Into a fish - Without a Pool). Trevor Preston recalls seeing kids in the street doing 'Hand of Stabs' as one of his fondest memories of the series. This was the only time episodes were broadcast out of production order. This story was in fact the last of the four of season two to be completed. It was obviously and rightly regarded as being the strongest and therefore most suitable for a season opener. The remaining three stories were screened in production sequence - as were all six stories of season three.

"Seven Serpents..." was followed by "Joker". another favourite of Pamela Lonsdale's. Written by Peter J. Hammond, this three part story saw Tarot on the trail of a troupe of entertainers who specialize in giving shows to school children. Led by Uncle Harry (Dermot Tuohy) their show featured a ventriloquist's dummy, the Joker of the title. During the ventriloquist's act, the dummy's eyes would turn white and a strange sound was heard, causing the children watching to go berserk and wreck their classrooms. The use of both the dummy and other playing card characters was very sinister.

P. J. Hammond was invited to write for the second season and came in under the impression that the show had reached the stage where new writers with fresh ideas were necessary. He always looked for quirky storylines and inventive villains which he felt were missing from the earlier episodes. Overall of the series, Hammond remarks: "Ace Of Wands was very good for me. It was great fun to do and allowed free reign to the imagination. In a way one could say that it perhaps helped to inspire me with my own project, Sapphire And Steel."

Don Houghton's "Nightmare Gas" followed, and drew heavily on his two recent Doctor Who tales, "Inferno" and "The Mind Of Evil" for ideas. The story concerned the theft of some cylinders of the deadly hallucinogenic H23 gas by Thalia Smith (Isobel Black) and her taciturn brother Dalbiac (Jonathan Newth). Thalia had once worked for the gas' creator, Dr Richard Winthrop, and on learning that the gas was to be destroyed arranged to hijack the lorry containing the canisters. Winthrop visits Mr. Sweet and asks him for help in recovering the gas which first induces sleep and then nightmares which appear so real to the dreamer that after twenty-three minutes the victims die from shock. Lulli drives Winthrop to see Brigadier Connaught, another of Mr. Sweet's many friends, but they are captured en route to the beach buggy by Thalia and Dalbiac. Both are taken to Thalia's headquarters, but Lulli is able to communicate to Tarot some information about her new prison - a windmill. Tarot follows but is captured and the gas is used on him.

A diamond gives its name to the final second season story, "The Eye of Ra". It is a diamond reputed to have magical powers, one of which is the ability to turn people into chalk statuettes. A wheelchair bound chess-master Ceribraun (Oscar Quitak) wants to obtain the diamond. He tries to force Tarot to steal it for him by kidnapping Mr. Sweet and making it appear he has been turned to chalk. His statuette is then knocked over and smashed by accident causing Tarot to think Mr. Sweet has been killed. Lulli, as well as Mr. Sweet, finds herself a prisoner of Ceribraun and his servant, Fredericks, and in trying to rescue her, Tarot finds himself on Ceribraun's giant robotic chess board being crushed by two huge chesspieces.

After the second season, Judy Loe and Tony Selby left the cast. Both had other commitments and so Pamela Lonsdale had to find replacements for the third series. Judy Loe had obviously been dissatisfied with her part for some time and was later quoted as saying: "My part was 'decorative' even in a children's programme. I was allowed some intelligence, but was always having to be rescued by the man. Maybe this is the basic structure of society or maybe it's just how men see themselves."

Thus it was decided that Lulli would have left Tarot to get married and Sam would have gone into the road haulage business, both rather out-of-character actions. For the third season the characters of Chas and Mikki were created after discussions between Trevor Preston, Peter Hammond and John Russell. Petra Markham, who had previously worked with Michael Mackenzie in Albert And Victoria joined the cast as Mikki with Roy Holder as Chas. Holder had appeared in Ace Of Wands before, playing the Jack in a group of playing cards in "Joker". Mikki Diamond, a journalist, shared a studio with her brother Chas, a photographer, above a London street market which was the setting for the first story in the third and final series.

In order that none of the magical elements of the earlier episodes were lost, Mikki also found she had a telepathic link with Tarot and later helped him with his stage act too. Chas was easy going, cheerful, loyal and determined like San had been. The two new characters were thus slightly contrived to stick to the original format with minimum change. The other notable changes included the fact that Tarot now operated from a house boat named "Joker III" moored on the Thames.

Pamela Lonsdale also left the show between seasons two and three. She had been asked to set up a pre-school series, Rainbow, which she describes as "something of a challenge". In 1975 she won the British Academy Rediffusion award for this series. Four years later she was appointed executive producer responsible for children's drama at Thames and also worked on the series Shadows.

John Russell who had directed half the stories so far took over as producer. This season was longer than the standard thirteen week or one quarter run and comprised a six-story/twenty-episode format as opposed to the four/thirteen combination of the previous two years. Despite the extra burden of the producer's role, Russell still found time to direct two of the last six stories including the best of the final season "Peacock Pie". The stories were recorded in two blocks of three.

Donald Layne-Smith, who, as Mr. Sweet, had appeared in every previous story except "Joker" was in only two of the last series, "The Power of Atep" and "Mama Doc", and was now based at a university as opposed to his bookshop. Another change in the line-up was Ozymandias who was now played by Fred II, the younger brother of Fred who had become bored with his television stardom. The credits for the show though continued to read "Ozymandias - Fred Owl"

Season three opened with "The Meddlers", P. J. Hammond's second story and the one in which we are introduced to the characters of Chas and Mikki. In this story, a group of street musicians seem to be at the centre of a series of disasters designed to scare the stall-holders away from a London market. Aided by the bizarre Mockers - the local 'prophet of doom' who travels around on a tricycle with its own pulpit, and Mr. Dove - who watches from a nearby tower block through his binoculars - the plan nearly works. The secret, buried deep beneath the market, proves worthless, The reason that Dove was mainly an observer was that he was allergic to unclean air and thus lived inside a huge luxurious airlock. He is eventually buried when a nearby building crumbles down on his white chauffeur-driven Rolls Royce. Filming for the story was extensive and took place at Shadwell Market in Watney Street off the Commercial Road in Wapping. The opening episodes are highly atmospheric, but the ending is an anti-climax and never fully explains the spirit Mikki senses in Thompson's warehouse.

Ex-Doctor Who and Timeslip writer Victor Pemberton's first story, the for part "The Power Of Atep" has Tarot on his way to Egypt following simultaneous dreams both he and Mikki have experienced. This, and a meeting with medium John Pentacle lead them to Atep's tomb. There they encounter a high priest and finally Quabal - Tarot's double and former stage partner. For his part as the high priest, Michael Mulcaster had to look completely bald and be made up heavily in gold. As well as the usual mummy cases and wall paintings, the tomb set also contained a ten foot high statue, fashioned from polystyrene by Allister Bowtell. One of Mackenzie's least fond memories came from this story. "I wasn't keen an being chucked into the Thames bound hand and foot in a strait-jacket," he says. Again, the story promises much, but the rational ending, in which the power of Atep - so evident in the serial - is dismissed as tricks on the part of Quabal, is severely disappointing.

The next story "Peacock Pie" was again from the pen of P. J. Hammond and like his previous two stories was directed by Russell. A marvellous story, it contained some of the best moments from any of the three series and an excellent performance from Brian Wilde as Henry T. Peacock, better known since for his appearances as Mr. Barraclough in Porridge and as Foggy Dewhurst in Last Of The Summer Wine. Peacock's power lies in that of suggestion and early scenes involved Mr. Peacock using torn up strips of newspaper as bank notes and causing a couple of security guards to deliver a consignment of cash to Mr. Peacock's lodgings under the belief that it was a bank. Later, having tracked him back to his house, Chas suddenly finds himself in a room without a door and Tarot, having trodden on a brick in the yard outside, imagines himself to be on the edge of a very high building, Mr. Peacock's old landlady, Mrs Macfadyean also comes under his spell and is seen gazing into a mirror at a reflection of her own face as she was when she was a young woman. The story ends, not so much with a triumph for Tarot, but with Peacock getting bored with the illusions he's been created. The final scene shows Peacock taking a lonely walk on his island, away from the rest of the world. The story was Hammond's favourite, and another of Mackenzie's too. "I also liked the lovely, gentle, story with Brian Wilde as Mr. Peacock," recalls Mackenzie. "That was good because Tarot didn't really win and couldn't cope with Mr. Peacock; it was just that Mr. Peacock stops being mischievous!"

"Mama Doc" by Maggie Allen who later worked on The Omega Factor, followed next. A left over script from the second season, it was a very sinister story for children, also the only one to feature Mr. Sweet throughout. Professor Darian disappears and Tarot finds a connection with a doll's hospital run by the eccentric Mama Doc (Pat Nye) where people get turned into dolls. The main set, looking like the interior of a dolls house, had to be made to look very large in proportion to the actors. The wallpaper used had its pattern enlarged five times normal size and adding confusion, one wall was composed entirely of mirrors. On top of all this, designer Philip Blowers had to find 200 different dolls, many of which had to be re-clothed by costume designer Patti Rogers to match the dolls' costumes worn by the actors and actresses. Although the style is sinister, the direction is slow and Tarot's eventual resolution to Mana Doc's deranged plans is less than satisfactory.

Victor Pemberton's second story, "Sister's Deadly", was quite different to his first. A very confusing tale, it starts with Chas visiting, in his professional capacity, Mathilda Edginton's 100th birthday party. When he returns home he has no memory of the party or the fact that he robbed the village post office shortly afterwards. While trying to uncover the cause of these events, Tarot learns that Mathilda Edginton died two years earlier. The bizarre reason behind these events lies in a plan by the old ladies at Bliss Cottage to kidnap the Commander-in-Chief of British Land Forces. A twist in the story reveals that one of the old ladies is played by actor James Bree, his disguise hiding the ex-Major behind the kidnap plot - thus necessitating the pseudonym of Henrietta Rudkin in the closing credits.

The final story, "Beautiful People" begins in a small village fête. The fête is run by two beautiful girls, Dee and Emm, and a very handsome man, Jay, and when Mikki is refused entry Tarot decides to investigate. He finds that valuable consumer goods are being offered as prizes despite the fact that no money is being made. The trio running the event are a group of extra-terrestrials who have the ability to control otherwise inanimate objects, such as vacuum cleaners and hand mixers! After being drugged by the aliens, Tarot and co. return to London in an attempt to contact one of the girls and discover their true purpose. Mackenzie feels that this was also one of the best stories, "The one with the beautiful extra-terrestrial jokers who programmed machines to go crazy."

The final serial concludes with a last act which seems at odds with the narrative presented in the first three-and-a-half episodes. The "Beautiful People" go back home to their parents - two learning computers. Tarot follows, and then Chas rigs an explosion to destroy the machines. The explosive detonates... and the closing credits roll, not confirming if Tarot, Mikki and Chas are safe or not.

And that, as they say, was that. When "The Beautiful People" was written and produced there was no definite decision made on whether or not the series would return. There was talk of a fourth series and Michael Mackenzie wishes there had been one. "It was very popular, but somebody different took over as head of Children's programmes at Thames and obviously wanted to do their own thing. The result was The Tomorrow People which, although it ran longer, wasn't, in my opinion, as original, as good or as imaginative, but then I'm biased!".

Fortunately three stories, all from the final season, had networked repeats, these being "The Meddlers" and "Peacock Pie" in 1973 with "Sisters Deadly" in 1974. That was the last time Tarot and Lulli, Sam, Chas, Mikki, Mr. Sweet or Ozzie were seen on our screens. As is (or hopefully was) the policy of most television companies, the master tapes of the first two seasons have been erased, although Thames Television International do still possess all the third season episodes in a variety of forms. Described by Trevor Preston as "typical vandalism by a television company", we shall forego the dubious pleasure of adding to this remark.

In 1975, Russell Hunter reprised his rôle as Mr. Stabs in a one-off play in the Shadows series called "Dutch Schlitz's Shoes" (transmitted 8th October 1975). Written by Preston and produced by Pamela Lonsdale, it featured Mr. Stabs and Luko (this time played by Kenneth Caswell) breaking into the home of Sir Arthur Inchwood (Gordon Gostelow) to steal from his private collection the magic black glove of Mendoza. While searching through Inchwood's collection, Stabs tries on a pair of shoes once belonging to the gangster Dutch Schlitz and gets taken over by the dead gangster's persona.

After a repeat of the Shadows episode in 1977, there was a further seven years of 'silence' until 1984 when Thames and Pamela Lonsdale produced another Preston one-off, "Mr. Stabs", (transmitted 2nd July 1984), this time under the Dramarama banner. Featuring David Jason as Mr. Stabs, it was a prequel to both previous Stabs tales and showed Stabs gaining his gloves, having beaten the great Melchisedek, and the right to practise his evil doings on the world of mortals. Luko also featured in this story, this time played by David Rappaport, as did Polandi, as Stabs' adversary, played by Lorna Heilbron. In "Seven Serpents..." she revealed to Mr. Stabs that she had already met Tarot. She warns him, "Beware Mr. Stabs, human or, no, do not underestimate this Tarot. He has a mind like quicksilver - and his skill is phenomenal. It is possible that he has the power - and is not fully aware of its potential. But Tarot is also an avenger, a righter of wrongs, a brilliant mind dedicated to fighting evil, greed and corruption." There was a chance that "Mr. Stabs" might have become a series, but following the departure of Pamela Lonsdale from Thames fairly soon afterwards made this appear unlikely - and so this came to be. The episode was repeated in 1985.

Would the series stand up again as well today? Pamela Lonsdale and Peter Hammond believe it would, especially in the light of the Callan re-runs from the same era that did so well on Channel 4. Mackenzie agrees, "Yes, it was a good format, visually very exciting and just as good if not better than a lot that's on now. I suppose the clothes and hairdos would look very dated indeed, but that, I think, would be the only drawback." Only Trevor Preston has reservations on this point, "No. Kids need much more, they have become used to the sheer size and excitement of big screen films ... Star Wars, etc."

While the fantasy genre so prominent in the late sixties and early seventies has seen a revival in recent years, we haven't seen anything quite like Ace Of Wands since. Of course, in 1997 another series featuring a magician solving mysteries, albeit without the fantasy element, debuted on BBC1 - Jonathan Creek.

"Take what you can from yesterday, the rest beg - steal - or borrow."

Special thanks are due to P. J. Hammond, Pamela Lonsdale, Michael Mackenzie and Trevor Preston plus Harry Tabart and Alison Cramond of Thames. Thanks also to Phil Kendrick, Mike Preston and Alan Smith and to Pam Watson who remembers that Tarot liked salt with his boiled eggs - where did she get that from?

ADAM ADAMENT LIVES!

In 1902, Adam is lured by the beautiful Louise to a house where arch enemy The Face - a megalomaniac hiding his identity behind a leather mask - injects him with an eternal life drug and freezes him in a block of ice. In 1966 workmen on a building site discover the ice block and the stage is set for Adam Adament's return - but in the strange new world of the swinging sixties, shown as a bewildering collage of sights and sound. As Adam finds his feet he discovers two companions.

The first, Georgina Jones, is a fan, who's grandfather regaled her with tales Adament's heroic exploits. And in episode two, Adam meets former music hall artist and jack-of-all-trades, William E. Simms, who becomes his loyal factotum.

"Adam Adament Lives!" was the BBC's answer to the highly successful "Avengers" which was being run on ITV at the same time. Most episodes were run of the mill crime dramas, the more unusual episodes are 'The Resurrectionists' in which a scientist destroys his invention which can calm down wild animals and 'Ticket to Terror' in which 400 passengers on an underground train disappear. As was customary with shows produced by the BBC in the 1960s, many of the episodes no longer exist. However, a few have also been released on video in the UK.

The second series also added spice to Adam Adament's role as caped crusader by regularly pitting him up against The Face - alive, alive, well and plotting in the present as he had been in the past. Suave actor Gerald Harper was cast as Adam, who despite his many talents was given to smugness and a naive trust of women. Harper built on the cultured elegant image in successive roles, including ITV's country squire "Hadleigh".

Producer for the series was Veirity Lambert, script consultant was Tony Williamson, the music was by David Lee and the theme song was sung by Kathy Kirby. The series was first shown on BBC1.

"We had the Victorian qualities of Adam manifested in the brash Sixties. He was a righter of wrongs, and upholder of moral principles. He would not prey on the weak, was unable to break any of the Ten Commandments, take advantage of women, intimidate, exhort money or harm the fair name of Country, Empire, King or Queen.. However, in each episode, Adam would receive a bump on the head, or something else, which would cause a flashback of his entombment to occur seeing the Face, the hypodermic of serum and finally Louise saying 'So clever, but, oh so vulnerable'. This was never fully explained at first, giving an air of mystery, just as we never truly found out why Number Six resigned his job, we never quite know why Adam was such a threat to the Face"

The Cast - Essential Information

Adam Adament was played the experienced actor Gerald Harper. Harper had trained at the Royal Academy of Dramatic Arts having played numerous roles ranging from Shakespeare to Broadway musicals. A trained runner, horseman, boxer and fencer; Harper proved ideal for the role of Adam as the series featured lots of action sequences.

Georgina Jones, Adam's bizarre and kooky sidekick was played by Juliet Harmer. A relative newcomer to the acting profession, this was Juliet's first major role having previously worked as a teacher and painter. The third member of the team, Adam's man servant, joined the cast in the second episode of the series (Death Has A Thousand Faces). William E. Simms was played by veteran British actor Jack May, who may be familiar to Doctor Who fans for his role in the 1968 story, The Space Pirates.

Production and Creation - Essential Information

Adam Adament Lives! was created by Sydney Newman and Donald Cotton, with the bulk of Adam's adventures similar in style to those of The Avengers. The series involved Adam in scrapes with Arabian killers, black magic rituals at dinner parties, strange beauty contest, a subway train full of skeletons and many other unusual and assorted situations.

The series was filmed on videotape with fight sequences usually pre-filmed on telecine and edited later into the final transmission copies. The series was chiefly a studio bound project with the occasional small amount of location filming, which unfortunately inhibited the overall feel of the episodes. Unlike many other series of its time, (The Avengers, The Saint), this would become one of the series downfalls that led to its eventual cancellation.

Produced by Verity Lambert, this was her first series as a Producer since leaving Doctor Who in 1965. The series was unique and perhaps slightly ahead of its time. It is the one series that Verity Lambert worked on that she considers a failure.

"I still have nightmares about Adam Adamant Lives which gave Gerald Harper his first taste of stardom. It was designed to compete with The Avengers, in that it had science-fiction overtones in it. The basic idea was of a Victorian adventurer being frozen in time and then coming back to life in swinging London of the Sixties, complete with cape, swordstick and old fashioned morality. Essentially it had the same ingredients as 'The Avengers' but the mix was all wrong and we had terrible problems through the two seasons. Its the only show I look back on now and consider to have been a failure."

The series featured scripts written by well known writers such as: Tony Williamson, Brian Clemens, Richard Harris and Robert Banks Stewart who had all previously, or would go on to write for The Avengers. The stories professed such unique titles as, A Vintage Year For Scoundrels, To Set A Deadly Fashion and Sing A Song Of Murder and featured well known actors of the day such as Michael Robbins, Adrienne Corri and Iain Cuthbertson.

Adam Adamant Lives! premiered on BBC-1 in June 1966 and proved immensely popular with BBC audiences, especially women. The series aired in the time-slot previously used for the American series The Man From U.N.C.L.E. and what with Adam's dashing, debonair, suave personae; he was the ideal substitute for the likes of Napoleon Solo.

The series did manage to achieve healthy ratings up until early in its second year, where it was up against the immensely popular adventures of John Steed & Mrs. Emma Peel. The Avengers clobbered Adam and combined with less imaginative scripts, a lack of a major publicity campaign, financial cutbacks and several other factors, the series was cancelled after 29 black & white episodes.

"Having foiled a daring SS operation involving the Face on his hundredth birthday, Adam along with Georgina and Simms disappeared from our screens at a quarter to ten on March 25, 1967 to resurface briefly in 1969 when Gerald Harper selected the episode A Slight Case Of Reincarnation to be shown in BBC's 'Star Choice' season"

Information on Adam Adament.

Athlete - Adam Adamant practiced many sports - boxing and fencing were his favourites. He moved like lightning and could handle any weapon with deadly skill.

Scholar - One of the most brilliant minds of his time, he was learned in every field of human knowledge. He had an amazing memory and held degrees from several universities.

Adventurer - Dedicated to fighting evil, he undertook delicate and dangerous missions on behalf of his sovereign and his country, in defence of the weak - especially women.

ADAM'S FAMILY TREE

A 12 year old boy discovers that through the help of a computer program showing his family tree he is able to conjure up his ancestors to help him with his life.

A reasonably well produced CHILDRENS SF series "AFT" managed to become quite popular in its afternoon slot. The series was never without its changing cast for every season, only two regulars who were in season one appeared in season three, with the two principle actors Anthony Lewis and Samie Ghadia both leaving at the end of season two. Alex Cooke replaced Anthony Lewis at the beginning of season 3 as the new Adam, apparently nobody noticing the change. The third series started airing on ITV in January 1999, the episodes again were written by Brian Walsh and Neil Armstrong.

The music for the series was composed by Chris Norton, designers were Robert Scott and Ann Bega, executive producer was Patrick Titley, the series was produced and directed by Richard Calanan.

A fantasy-comedy for children, charting the adventures of a 12-year-old boy, Adam, who can call upon the services of his ancestors through a CD-Rom in his home computer. The disc contains records of his entire family tree, extending back (implausibly) thousands of years, and all Adam needs to do is find the appropriate ancestor, hit the 'return' key and said relative will materialise in the present through a hole in the space-time continuum, ready and willing to help the schoolboy Adam out of his latest sticky situation.

With his best friend Jane sharing his secret, Adam calls upon everyone from cavemen and medieval knights to a Victorian detective and a romantic silent movie heroine, such figures being portrayed by guest stars, one per episode, who included Bill Oddie (The Goodies), Brenda Gilhooly (Gayle's World), Tiffany Chapman (Rachel Jordache in Brookside), Jean Alexander (Hilda Ogden in Coronation Street), John Altman (Nick Cotton in EastEnders), Michael Jayston, Toyah Willcox, Christopher Biggins, Julie T Wallace and Brian Blessed.

ADVENTURE GAME, THE

A group of celebrities are taken in a time-space ship on a day trip to the planet Arg. The Argonds are a friendly race of people who would invite the celebrities to play various games of logic as a team. When they solved each puzzle they moved forward in the game and were often awarded a green cheese roll. "Three people are stranded on a planet on the far side of the galaxy. In order to return to earth they must first locate a crystal to power their spacecraft. But - and this is where the whole thing begins to get tricky - to find the crystal they must navigate their way through a series of practical and mental problems, devised by a fiendish alien intelligence."

Each series had a different set of puzzles, but the game at the end was always the vortex in which the contestants took it in turn to cross a grid and faced being destroyed by a beam of energy that only the viewers could see. Some contestants realised that they could test if it was safe to walk onto a certain square by throwing a green cheese roll onto it first. These were generally the people who made it across the chasm and back onto the ship to return to Earth.

The celebrities were usually people from children's television and a listing from 1981 shows the guests/cast as Elizabeth Estensen, Mark Dugdale, Lisa Goddard, Michael Rod, James Burke and Maggie Philbin. The Argonds were normally dragon like creatures, but took on human form to make the contestants feel more comfortable. However, one senior Argond refused to do this, preferring the form of an aspidistra plant which would growl and quiver unless contestants bowed graciously and said "gronda, gronda". In later series, contestants were urged to "gronda, gronda" to a large teapot instead, as the senior Argond had grown tired of being an aspidistra (or, as one story at the time would have it, the aspidistra plant had gone missing from the BBC props department).

Many of the puzzles involved the Argond currency, Drogans (another anagram). These were discs bearing a coloured shape; discovering the values of these would dramatically aid the progress of the contestants. On arrival to Arg a well known mnemonic for the visible part of the spectrum provided the key to this: Richard Of York Gave Battle In Vain. Assigning the value 1 to Red, 2 to Orange, 3 to Yellow etc. and multiplying this by the number of sides to the shape on the Dragona gave its value. Many contestants managed to work their way through the puzzles successfully but clearly left Arg without grasping this fundamental aspect of the challenge. The producer for the series was Patrick Dowling. The series ran from 1980 to 1986.

So you thought you took too many magic mushrooms when you were all of about 8 years old, fear not it was all true..... A group of children and celebrities would land on the small red planet of Arg and to get back to Earth they had to make their way through a series of puzzles. Everything on Arg derived its name from the anagrams of DRAGON. They were aided on their travels by their host Gnoard and later Dorgan. She would show them round the planet and even occasionally give them clues to the puzzles. There were also many other inhabitants of Arg to help or hinder the contestants but the most remembered are The Butler and the backwards talking chap. The contestants pitted their wits against the Red Salamander of Zargil. Hampering the children on their quest was "Uncle".. he was an grumbling aspidistra and later on perhaps even a teapot who would regularly squirt contestants with water and generally be very unhelpful. Like all Argon's he was a shape changer which may have accounted for his rather odd and baffling behaviour. To help them with some of the puzzles the contestants were given and also won DROGNA. These were clear perspex circles with coloured shapes in them that acted as currency throughout the game, apparently each shape had a numerical value based on the number of sides and its position on the rainbow (ROYGBIV).

It was very useful throughout the game if you collected green cheese rolls as these would help the contestants at the end at the vortex!! Unlucky contestants were forced to walk home whilst others got to fly back home on the flying train. I have recently learnt from producer Patrick Dowling that contrary to my misguided belief there was never a series made which was just children. I'm also sure the first series was not presented by Moira Stewart but by a young actress called Charmian Gradwell. Gronda Gronda was the accepted greeting phrase on ARG..go on say it to your friends and see what their reaction is! :) Sadly the last episode ever was never broadcast due to the Challenger disaster, where all programmes on BBC2 were rescheduled due to the horrific news.

Producers Ian Oliver and Patrick Dowling joined forces in 1980 to produce TAG. Patrick originally got the idea for TAG from a text game called "Adventure". His son then set up a Dungeons & Dragons game and TAG was born. Originally Ian wanted to run it late at night but as they were in children's programmes this couldn't really happen. Originally Patrick tried to get "Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy" author Douglas Adams to write the script but Douglas had already been drafted by the BBC to do the TV version of Hitchhiker's Guide. (Another wonderful programme). The First series was recorded in Bristol, it then transferred to Pebble Mill but came back to Bristol for the third Series. In 1983 Patrick emigrated to Australia and passed the reins of the last series over to Ian. Patrick still lives in Australia, happily writing computer programs and is fast approaching his 80th birthday. Ian now lives in Singapore.

THE ADVENTURE GAME

A direct broadcast from Arg - a small, red planet on the far side of the Galaxy inhabited by a race of polite, transmetamorphic dragons. They normally assume the shape of their visitors, all except his Highness the Rangdo that is. He now permanently resembles an aspidistra - he was enjoying the cool, green feel of being one a couple of years ago and became stuck. This seems to have caused him to become bad-tempered and he is now rather fond of evaporating trippers from Earth. Each week a party of three people visits the planet to challenge the Rangdo to a battle of wits. They'll face various problems including the traditional Arg Drogna Game. This is played on a grid of different shapes and colours, and the winner receives the Great Crystal of Arg. Can the earthlings defeat the logic of their opponent, the Red Salamander of Zardil? There is a phone-in too, but only if you placed your call 133 1/2 Earth years ago! The explorers : Sarah Greene, Anne Miller and Richard Stilgoe

A game of logic, broadcast from Arg on the far side of the galaxy. His Highness the Rangdo of Arg delights in testing the perspicacity and inventiveness of Earth visitors. It's Arg Regatta week - will the explorers sink or swim? The explorers: Sue Nicholls, Duncan Goodhew, Emma Disley

The greatest game shown on Arg. Featuring the black hole, your Drogna Sweetheart, Angord, and the Great Crystal of Arg. The explorers: Sandra Dickinson, Chris Serle, Adam Tandy

Earth visitors will survive long enough to be invited to the celebrations? The explorers: Fern Britton, Noel Edmonds and Ray Virr

SERIES 4

THE ADVENTURE GAME

A direct broadcast from Arg - a small red planet on the far side of the galaxy, inhabited by a race of friendly, transmetamorphic dragons who have the ability to assume the shape of their visitors. Each week three explorers from Earth travel to the planet in search of the Great Crystal. However, upon arrival they find that their quest is hampered by a series of logic problems, set by the planet's ruler, His Highness, the Rangdo of Arg. The explorers: Sheelagh Gilbey, Ian McNaught-Davis, Roy Kane

An amusing game of logic and ingenuity broadcast from Arg, on the far side of the galaxy. His Highness, the Rangdo of Arg, delights in testing the perspicacity of any visitors who arrive on the planet in search of the Great Crystal. Will his problems baffle this week's trio, or will they enter the Black Mine? The explorers: Barbara Lott, Johnny Ball, Liz Hobbs

The third of six direct broadcasts from Arg, a small red planet on the far side of the galaxy, inhabited by polite dragons. A team of three explorers from Earth are about to arrive on Arg, searching for the Great Crystal which has been hidden by the planet's ruler, a rather grumpy teapot. The explorers: Fiona Kennedy, Ian McCaskill and David Sandeman.

As this week's team of Earth explorers arrive on Arg, His Highness the Rangdo has just finished setting a series of problems to thwart them in their quest for the Great Crystal. Will they complete their task before being evaporated, or will they have to settle for a green cheese roll as compensation? The explorers: Joanna Monro, George Layton and Val Prince

His Highness the Rangdo of Arg has arranged a particularly tricky set of problems for this week's explorers. How many Argonds are lurking around the pond, and how are the explorers expected to get through the Crystal Mine when the anti-gravity boots are chained up? The explorers: Ruth Madoc, Professor Heinz Wolff and Deborah Leigh Hall

The final broadcast direct from the Planet Arg. Another team of Earth explorers have problems to solve. Will any of them win a cheese roll and survive long enough to cross the Vortex? The explorers: Heather Couper, Keith Chegwin, Adam Gilbey

These times were taken from the RadioTimes.

Gnoard - Charmian Gradwell

His Highness's niece who used to escort the contestants round the games and generally try to help them out, but not always what she seemed. In the later serie's she would phone children up and ask them for suggestions for presents for his highness. She has apparently appeared in "Wilderness Edge"

Dorgan - Sarah Lam (pictured)

Dorgan was introduced in the last series when Gnoard left Arg. She took on Gnoard's role of guiding the contestants round the puzzles. Sarah Lam has appeared in the following films: Chinadream (1997) (USA) Hamlet (1996), Shanghai Surprise (1986) and The Wildcats of St. Trinian's (1980). She has appeared in the following TV programmes: Inspector Morse (1998), Frank Stubbs Promotes (1993), Virtual Murder (1992), To Be the Best (1992), A Very Peculiar Practice (1986), No Problem! (1983), Q.E.D.(1982), Angels (1976)

This old boy with his ear trumpet (to help him see) and his glasses (to help him hear) would generally show up throughout the show trying to help or hinder the contestants. Hindrance normally ensued when he didn't possess both his ear trumpet or glasses, because he was always leaving them somewhere. He was guaranteed to reappear at the end game.. the VORTEX!

His Highness Uncle "the Rangdo" - (Kevin Baker?)

The shy ruler of Arg was often to been seen taking the form of an Aspidistra and didn't like to talk too much, when he did it was completely indecipherable as words. It was best to stay on the good side of the King because if you gave him a present you could well end up with a cheese roll which could prove to be very useful at the Vortex. In the last series Rangdo got bored of being an aspidistra and took on the form of a teapot instead!

Dagnor (or Ron Gad?) Mr 'Doogy Rev - Bill Homeward

One of the King's distant cousin's (apparently perhaps coming from Australia) hence his way of speaking backwards. You'd be surprised how long it took contestants to work out what he was saying and that it was backwards, although singing "waltzing matilda" backwards normally gave the game away.

The Mole - Lesley Judd

The mole would be found in her locked small cell and the only way of releasing her was to get a square yellow droгна, so this normally ended up being one of the main puzzles in the game. Apparently the aim was to help the mole as she was a trapped previous contestant, but this wasn't the case as she was really a citizen of Arg who was put there to lead the contestants astray. Lesley is of course most well known for her stint as a Blue Peter Presenter (1972 - 1979) but she has also appeared in: Threads (1985) and Half a Sixpence (1967).

The Salamander:

This very tall red salamander would generally be the other contestant in the game and would delight in beating the other contestants, he couldn't speak and was guided round the mazes by helpers.

The Puzzles

The Droгна Floor

The first and last game involved crossing the coloured floor shown in the picture on my main page. Each week there was a different code for crossing the floor, like you can only stand on small blue objects that aren't circles or orange hexagons. Or it was going from tiles of same colour or shape with the same number of sides plus one. Or even a complicated puzzle to do with where the tiles relate to each other on the roygbiv scale. A noise was made in the event of a wrong move. The sneaky thing was when they had to come back over it at the end if they made a wrong move they were evaporated, and they didn't even know this unless they worked out what "the tiles are live" meant.

The Crystal Game

Similar to the opening game, the contestant would have to try and beat the Salamander across the floor to a Crystal but they could only step on tiles which showed their given shape. i.e if the shape was a yellow triangle then they could move to a yellow tile or triangle tile but no others, if a mistake was made the game would end, as would it if they retrieved the crystal or landed on the same tile as their opponent.

The Front Door

Again this was normally a rainbow based puzzle. One puzzle had the words "Richard of York gave Battle in vain" on the interior of the walls but it was too far away to see so the contestants had to try and build a kind of telescope and then they had to enter the colours on the keypad. To build the telescope they needed the butler's ear trumpet and glasses lenses. For those that don't know the Richard of York saying or ROYGBIV is the letters of the rainbow - Red, Orange, Yellow, Green, Blue, Indigo, Violet.

The Egg

There was a key fixed to an egg under water, and to get it to float to the top of the plastic tube you had to empty a bag of salt in.

Uncle

The idea was to present the King with a present to win favour. The team were asked to choose from a selection of presents before seeing him and were told 'He likes the colour yellow but doesn't like pink, also likes green but hates red.' The solution was to give him something with similar double letters in it, i.e. 'oo', 'll', 'tt', etc. Therefore, Rangdo would love balloons and footballs. He would either shake his leaves in delight or grumble at the contestants. If you did please him he would give you a green cheese roll.

Rescuing the Mole

This was where the team would find the mole locked in a cell and she would promise to help them if only they would get a yellow square droгна and release her. Normally the said droгна was to be found in a perspex cylinder and the team had to try and float it to the top with the aid of water and ping pong balls.

Ping Pong Ball

A ping pong ball sat in a tube with a fan under it... the fan only blew if you stepped on the scale but with one person it was never far enough. Attempts were tried to get all the contestants to stand on separate scales but of course no one could then reach the ball! The answer was to stack the 3 scales on top of each and get one person to stand on them allowing another contestant to reach the ball.

Find the Mole?

The contestants would be told that the mole was amongst them and had to divide into 3 and stand on circles anyone left with the mole would be zapped away... very rarely did they work out it was Lesley as she would always plead innocence. The zapped members of the team would be reunited at the Vortex.

Semaphore

A message in a picture came up as The Seven Pillars of Wisdom. To decipher this the contestants would need the International Code of Signals Book, which was located in the bookcase next to the very hollowed out book that they needed.

The Computer Maze

The contestants had to use a computer to navigate a robot dog (Dogran) (not Dogrin as thought by some as that would not be an anagram of DRAGON) through a dark maze. Dogran would normally retrieve an object which would reveal the exit password on the Archway. Not as easy as it sounds as objects were in the way which involved finding some cheese, to collect a mouse to scare an elephant so you could get it to move so you could get the object...complicated stuff.

Locked Out

The contestants would come across a door which was seemingly locked but had no keyhole. The solution was that the handle was on the wrong edge of the door and to pass through all they needed to do was to push the other edge of the door.

The Bed of Nails

The bed of nails was in the same room as the computer and sometimes the archway password was written on the ceiling and an unfortunate contestant would have to lie on it to discover it, or alternatively the solution to the dog maze was written on there.

Computer Game

This was a simple game played on the Micro where the contestants would type in commands to find objects... but it took ages for anyone to guess that the Scarlet fish was in fact a RED HERRING.

Archway

The team were forever having to pass under an Archway but to do so they had to speak the correct password as as there were often misleading passwords dotted around the mazes they quite often got it wrong. If this was the case the offending team member would be zapped into another room leaving the remaining team members to try and rescue them.

Dark Room

The poor zapped person could see nothing in their room apart from an exit sign and a locked doorway. The remaining team members would have to guide them to a safe and they key via an infra red camera before they could rejoin the team and hopefully utter the correct password.

Bungee

The contestants were put into a belt like contraption which was attached to a chain which would only release if they fed drogna into a slot, if they moved they'd end up getting caught on a wall. The aim was to find a key to release themselves and to do this they had to have purple drogna.

Pole Stepping

Two monsters would sit on the floor holding poles and would beat out a rhythm, the contestants had to judge the rhythm and jump between the poles, if a foot got stuck they had to start again.

Fishing

A pond full of piranha fish was the basis for this game. The contestants would have to build a fishing rod to remove the key from the centre of the pond, or cross the pond using planks of wood which would need to be arranged to support their weight, or to press a button on a pole the other side of the pond by using stilts to cross the pond filled with harmful chemicals, if their feet touched the chemicals they would be evaporated.

How many Drogna in the Pool?

The contestants had to guess how many drogna were in the pool by an arrangement of drogna pieces shown to them by the Butler, in reality this had nothing to do with it and could only be guessed by watching how many fingers the butler had resting on the table. (Sneaky eh?)

How does the drogna plant grow?

The contestants had to try and water the drogna plant, but to do this they needed the ear trumpet to use as a funnel.

The Vortex

The vortex was the end game where the contestants had to pass over a hexagon shaped grid like formation, with small circular pads at different points and lots of vaporizing space in between. They had to cross from

ADVENTURES OF BRISCO COUNTY, JR., THE

Ostensibly, it's an action-adventure, set in California's old West in the 1890s, that follows the exploits of the eponymous adventurer Brisco County, Jr. But while it's a familiar Wild West scene of stage-coaches, shoot-outs and saloon singers, it's also a time when an eccentric professor can build a rocket in his barn and Chinese Tong Warriors train in exotic initiation ceremonies beneath a curio shop. It's a world where outlaws hide out in a lavish gothic lair, and where an uncanny, telepathic horse called Comet is perfectly in tune with his master

But, most bizarre of all - it's a world graced by the Orb - a mysterious metallic sphere (later revealed to be one of three found in a crater) which can selectively grant awesome powers to those who possess it. And everyone wants to possess it. A Harvard law graduate and son of the greatest sharp-shooting marshal in the land, Brisco is hired by a group of wealthy businessmen known as the robber barons, to hunt down a group of 12 notorious outlaws led by the sinister John Bly. For Brisco, it's a personal matter too, as the 'Bly gang were also behind the cold-blooded murder of his father.

But Brisco is more than just a lawman, he's a dreamer and a romantic, a visionary constantly searching for 'the coming thing'. That brings him into contact with oddball inventor Professor Wickwire, (played by The Addams Family's John Astin). Wickwire has his mind set on travelling to the stars and is fascinated by the thoughts of new technologies.

Brisco's regular companions in his adventures, however, are his faithful horse Comet; bookish attorney Socrates Poole, who is his liaison with his employers, and bounty hunter/tracker Lord Bowler. Other recurring characters include Brisco's erstwhile girlfriend Dixie Cousins, nutty outlaw Peter Hutter, Sheriff Aaron Viva, an energetic lawman who looks and sounds like Elvis Presley, and playboy/gambler, Whip Morgan.

As for the Orb, it is first unearthed by Chinese coolies working on a railroad chain gang. Four work men touch its glowing rods and suddenly acquire the strength to break their chains. The Orb later gets dubbed an 'Unearthed Foreign Object' by a worker packing it up for transport on a train. 'That's kind of a mouthful' says another who proceeds to scribble UFO on the side of the crate.

It's little moments like that make this series such a delight. It's witty and playful, affectionately spoofing Western clichés and lacing the action with deft touches of fantasy. In one wonderful sequence, Brisco hitches Prof. Wickwire's experimental rocket to the top of a rail way wagon and rides it along the track to intercept a gold train robbery.

Bruce Campbell was also a semi regular in the fantasy shows "Hercules: The Legendary Journeys" and "Xena : Warrior Princess". The show is particularly reminiscent of the "Wild Wild West" (1965-1969). The show was an highly unusual one for a 1990s show, which was the reason that it never became a success in the US.

Part WILD, WILD WEST, part Indiana Jones, and part just plain strange, this Fox Network Western series followed a familiar pattern: despite being a solid hit with critics and sf fans, its ratings were spectacularly low, and not even a landslide finish in TV Guide's 1994 "Save Our Shows" viewer poll persuaded network executives to renew it for a second season.

The convoluted premise featured popular horror-film star Campbell as Brisco County, Jr., the Harvard-educated son of a noted bounty hunter. Drawn to 1890s San Francisco following the murder of his father, Brisco Jr. learns that notorious outlaw John Bly has larger schemes in mind. Turning bounty hunter himself to track down Bly, he comes across a glowing orb with mysterious powers, in which Bly is also interested. Much of the show's run was spent pursuing Bly and his associates, while other episodes paid homage to Alfred Hitchcock's Psycho (1960) and television's THE AVENGERS (1961-69).

Quirky, sly humour was the show's hallmark: a train is stopped by the Wile E. Coyote gimmick of painting a lifelike mural onto a boulder blocking the track; Brisco's horse Comet races prototype motorcycles and cracks a safe ("He's not so smart; took him two tries!"); and one episode featured a Blackbeard-like pirate who is relocated to the Nevada desert. Recurring plots and characters were a major part of the show's appeal, with Drago's silkily dangerous Bly ultimately revealed as a time traveller, and eccentric outlaws the order of the day. The clever writing, energetic performances and excellent production values may not have made TAOBC,J a ratings success, but reruns and taped episodes are worth seeking out.

Remember THE WILD WILD WEST? These guys do. This clever Nineties series is tinged with the same quirky streak of fantasy. Some inspired casting also has a bunch of old Western stars in cameo roles including Paul Brinegar (Rawhide), James Drury (The Virginian) and Robert Fuller (Laramie). Stuart Whitman plays the leader of the robber barons, but his role is short-lived. Granted the strength of 12 men by the Orb, he pays the price for abusing his power and suddenly ages rapidly, turning into a skeleton before dissolving totally into dust.

Another episode had the ghost of Brisco's father appearing to offer him advice like Obi Wan Kenobi, telling him to feel the force. Brisco eventually discovers the secret of the orbs - that they were sent from a future time to benefit mankind - and has a final showdown with Bly, who turns out to be a fanatic from the future out to use the orbs' power to enslave his own time. plas, The Adventures of Brisco County, Jr proved a touch too eccentric for US audiences, lasting only one season. It aired in the UK on Sky One.

Executive producers for the series were Jeffrey Boam and Carlton Cuse, co-producers were David Simpkins and Paul Marks. The music was by Randy Edelman, and the special effects were created by M. Kam Cooney.

There was a tongue in cheek quality to Brisco, with each episode divided into chapters that usually ended in cliffhangers. A running theme related to a mystical golden orb that had strange powers to bring people back to life and heal people who would otherwise be dead - and everyone wanted it for their own. In a January 1994 episode it was revealed that Bly was a time traveller from 2506 who had come back to the 1890s to take the orb back to his time to use its power to rule his world. In February, Brisco with the help of Carina, a woman from the year 5502, whose people had placed the orbs in the past to help mankind develop, destroyed Bly thus preventing him from returning to his time, and initiating a 2000 years old reign on terror. At the end of that episode Brisco and Bowler agreed to become special agents, working on cases for President Cleveland when he needed them.

ADVENTURES OF CAPTAIN MARVEL, THE

The convoluted screenplay has the Captain on the track of Worth's master-criminal, the Scorpion, who is attempting to construct a matter-transformation device from ancient crystals found by a scientific expedition, as part of the necessary prelude to his plans for world domination. In the course of that expedition Coghlan's Billy Batson is given the gift of changing into the superhuman Captain Marvel on the utterance of 'Shazam'.

The acronym stands for Solomon (wisdom), Hercules (strength), Atlas (stamina), Zeus (power), Achilles (courage) and Mercury (speed). The witty climax has the Scorpion, who has seen Billy Batson change into Captain Marvel, bind and gag him and demand to know how the transformation was achieved. Billy nods his assent, is ungagged, utters the magic word and saves the day.

When Republic announced it would not be purchasing the rights to Superman, Fawcett Publications, the owners of the copyright to Captain Marvel who appeared in their Whiz comic book, offered the rights to Republic in exchange for the studio booking advertising space. The result was the first serial taken from a comic book (as opposed to a comic strip). Made during the golden years of Republic serials and directed with verve by serial veterans Witney and English, the outing greatly benefits from Tyler's athletic performance in the title role. The serial was re-issued in 1953 under the title The Return of Captain Marvel. A TV series based on the Captain Marvel comic character was also created in the 1970s entitled SHAZAM!

See the amazing feats of Captain Marvel! He flies like a bird! Bullets bounce off his body! He is the most awe-inspiring character ever seen on the screen! A one man blitzkrieg! Devoting the strength of his super-Herculean body to the task of destroying the power of a crazed scientist! The most powerful man in cartoonland becomes the strongest man on the screen! All others pale in the light of this human fortress who finds no barrier too great in his amazing fight for justice! Your eyes won't deceive you! You'll actually see Captain Marvel: ward off a machine gun barrage with his hands Hurl a 20-ton engine at his opponents lift a giant tree with one hand -- break through a wall of steel!

The Adventures of Captain Marvel was a movie serial released by Republic Pictures in 1941. It ran in weekly installments over a 12 week period. It is generally considered one of the most enduring and action filled serials of the genre. The Adventures of Captain Marvel starred Tom Tyler in the title role of Captain Marvel and Frank Coghlan, Jr. as his alter ego, Billy Batson.

ADVENTURES OF SINBAD, THE

After two perilous years at sea, Sinbad returns to his homeland to find Baghdad ruled by the oppressive and incompetent Prince Casib. In this over the top fantasy loosely based on the Arabian Nights, Sinbad was an attractive youth who set out from Baghdad on sailing adventures throughout the known world. Sinbad's crew included Doubar, his beefy much older brother, and Maeve, the sexy apprentice to Master Din Din, a magician friend of Sinbad's. Dermott, Maeve's trained falcon, serves them as an adventure scout.

After sailing with them in search of adventure, were the well meaning but nerdy Firouz, and Rongar, a silent Nubian. Along with lots of monsters, magic, sorcery and witchcraft - all produced with cheap special effects - there was some truly mythical dialogue (sneering villain to damsel in distress : "Come, my pretty", Sinbad, Battling sea monster : "If we miss, were seafood", Sinbad about to be headed - to cohort: "I'll think of something".

At the beginning of the second season's premier episode, Maeve was washed overboard during a fierce storm and died. Replacing her was Bryn, another sexy young sorceress, who rescued Sinbad on the beach where he washed up after his failed attempt to save Maeve. At the end of the episode the crew found out that Maeve was being protected from a powerful wizard and Bryn was to take her place with them. The tone of the show became more serious, and Sinbad who had looked incredibly boyish during the first season, began sporting a stubbly beard.

The success of Hercules and Xena has opened the door for many fantasy series, including the syndicated The Adventures of Sinbad, which owes more to 1940s Hollywood's vision of The Arabian Nights than Sir Richard Burton's: There are a few Arabs in sight (let alone vials for the women), but certainly that goes well with the tradition. All you really need is a swash buckling hero (here, Sinbad, played aptly by Zen Gesner) coming up against various sorcerers, monsters and other evil-doers each week. Add a few sword fights, some scantily clad maidens, and the formula is complete.

Filmed in South Africa, the show has a wonderfully lush look. Computer generated monsters, a fast pace and a light tone go far to carry the stories along. At the end of the first season, the character of Maeve played by Jacqueline Colen was replaced by Bryn played by Mariah Shirley. The show got off to a poor start, but soon picked up after a while, this didn't make much difference to the audience however as they turned off in droves.

Zen Gesner seemed to be born to the play the role of Sinbad. The show was produced at a time when fantasy television was back in fashion, with shows such as "XENA: WARRIOR PRINCESS", "HERCULES : THE LEGENENDERY JOURNEYS " and "TARZAN" all finding an audience. Lisa Howard who had starred in both HIGHLANDER: THE SERIES and EARTH: FINAL CONFLICT, guest starred in the episode The Eye of Kratos. Also from EARTH: FINAL CONFLICT and TEKWAR, Von Flores starred in the episodes The Ronin and The Return of the Ronin. Executive producers for the series were Peter Sussman, David Gerber and Ed Naha, producers for the series were Jonathan Hackett and Gavin Mitchell, the creative consultant was Robert Engles.

ADVENTURES OF SUPERMAN, THE

Superman may have fought tirelessly for 'truth, justice and the American way', but he was, of course, an alien, a survivor of the doomed planet Krypton. He'd been launched into space as an infant by his scientist father Jor El just before the planet exploded and crash-landed on Earth in a field near Smallville, USA, where he was discovered by a childless farm couple, Jonathan and Martha Kent, who adopted him and named him Clark.

Because the boy was from a larger world with a red sun, Earth's yellow sun endowed him with super powers of flight, strength, X-ray vision, hearing and invulnerability, his only weakness being Kryptonite - fragments of his old home planet - which invariably fell into the wrong hands. As a man, Clark moved to Metropolis, working as a reporter on the Daily Planet. As Clark, he was bespectacled, meek and mild-mannered, but at the drop of his snap-brimmed hat he became Superman, scourge of the underworld.

Other regulars in the series were naive cub reporter Jimmy Olsen, gruff Planer editor Perry White, Metropolis police chief Insp. Henderson, and Lois Lane, the Planet's impulsive star reporter, enamoured of Supie but contemptuous of Clark. Lois was played abrasively (in the first 26-week American season) by Phyllis Coates, and toned down for the rest by Noel Neill.

George Reeves died in mysterious surroundings, before the producers were asked to make a seventh season which would have gone ahead, if he had not died. Jack Larsen also has a guest starring role in "Lois And Clark" as an old Jimmy Olsen.

"Faster than a speeding bullet! More powerful than a locomotive! Able to leap tall buildings at a single bound! Superman, strange visitor from another planet, who came to Earth with powers and abilities far beyond those of mortal men! Superman, who can change the course of mighty rivers, bend steel in his bare hands, and who, disguised as Clark Kent, mild-mannered reporter for a great metropolitan newspaper, fights a never-ending battle for truth, justice, and the American way!" George Reeves had created the role of Superman in the low-budget 1951 feature film "Superman and the Mole People" (produced by Robert Maxwell and Bernard Luber).

The series had pretty good ratings, partly because of the stories and acting, and partly because of the visual quality achieved by pre-filming (as opposed to live telecast). From the third season, the filming was in colour. Although Superman's origins were basically science fiction the show was mostly crime drama, with a budget of only $15,000 an episode. The special effects on the show were simple but always very efficient, Superman would fly by the use of wires which would be attached to George Reeves. There was only a few episodes which could be considered to be science fiction, these included "The Secret of Superman"; where a scientist creates a drug which he believes can control Superman. "The Runaway Robot" in which Superman must stop a robot which has been programmed by criminals. Finally there was, "The Phoney Alibi" in which a criminal steals an invention which can transport himself through telephone lines to other locations.

Before the series was made a pilot episode called "Superman on the Mole Men" (1951) was made, it was later edited into a two part story, "The Unknown People". After the series was cancelled George Reeves found himself typecast as Superman, unable to find work. In 1959 he was found shot to death, allegedly a suicide, but rumours abound that it might have been a murder. Other shows based on Superman have also been created, which are "LOIS AND CLARK" (1993-97) and "SUPERBOY" (1988-92).

American as cowboys or gangsters, Superman took his place in ITV's early schedules in the time honoured US favourites as Dragnet, Roy Rogers, I Love Lucy, and Rin, Tin Tin. Billed over here without his US prefix, 'The Adventures Of Superman has the distinction of IIV's first science fiction show, arriving here in 1956, albeit three years after the series' American debut. American youngsters reared on the spectacular big-screen image of Christopher Reeve as the Man of steel might need some persuading, but to generations of British and American fans Superman will always be George Reeves and yes they believed this man could fly. Week after week they had the message drummed home, as indelibly as the ink on a Daily Planer headline: 'Faster than a speeding bullet, more powerful than a locomotive, able to leap tall buildings at a single bound. What's that up in the sky . . . it's a bird . . . it's a plane . . . it's Superman.

Reeves, a 6 ft 2½ in, 13 st 13 lb. bachelor who'd succeeded where 200 previous job applicants had failed, was a former light-heavyweight boxer who'd studied acting alongside Victor Mature and Robert Preston. He'd been in love with Vivien Leigh in Gone with the Wind and appeared in other movie classics such as Blood and Sand and From Here to Eternity and he'd actually first donned the superhero tights and underpants for a 1951 cinema feature Superman and the Mole Men (re-edited for the TV series as a two-part story The Unknown People).

Though Superman's origins were pure science-fiction, the shows were basically crime melodramas, shot on a low budget of 15,000 dollars each, at the rate of roughly two a week, and frequently called for the Man of Steel to rescue Lois, Jimmy or both from mortal danger and clutches of crazed scientists, gangsters, madmen and pirates. Occasionally there was a sci-fi theme to the story, such as Superman in Exile, when contamination from gamma rays leads Superman into a self-imposed exile; Panic in the Sky, when exposure to Kryptonite in a meteor induces amnesia; Through the Time Barrier, in which a scientist's time machine sends him, a crook, Lois, Jimmy, Perry and Clark back to the Stone Age; and Mr Zero, in which a small man from outer space who can paralyse people by pointing his finger at them falls among thieves.

Special effects were unsophisticated but effective. Reeves took off via wires, hydraulics and springboards, landed by jumping off a ladder and flew by being filmed lying on a glass table, with the Metropolis skyline (actually Hollywood) matted in later. Imagination did the rest.

When Superman first flew across British screens in 1956, ATV in the Midlands managed a prolonged 18-month run of some 78 episodes. These were culled from the first five US seasons but shown at random, only vaguely following the original seasonal flow. In fact, Noel Neill's Lois Lane was the first to be seen over here, while Phyllis Coates's acid-tongued version occasionally elbowed her milder counterpart out of the schedules for the odd week later in the north.

The last adventure of Superman was made in 1957. Two years later George Reeves, who had been so synonymous with the role that other acting parts were almost impossible to come by, shot himself. His shows, though, have run and run. In the end nearly all of the 104 episodes were screened somewhere in the UK - and were still popping up as recently as 1988-9, when BBC1 dusted off a few reels for the Christmas holidays. The producers for the series were Robert Maxwell, Bernard Luber (Season One), Whitney Ellsworth (the rest). The UK premiere for the series was on the 23rd February 1956 in the ATV Midlands area.

Of all the programs covered in this book, Adventures of Superman remains the most commercially successful, the most enduring and perhaps the most endearing. No other series can compete; all 104 episodes have been in continuous circulation since the series' premiere in 1953. Moreover, no other series can claim as faithful a following as Adventures of Superman, a following that includes not just Internet fan clubs but two books, Gary Grossman's excellent Superman: From Serial to Cereal (Popular Library, 1976) and Michael Bifulco's episode guide Superman on Television (Bifulco Books, 1988). Definite reasons for the series' success remain elusive, but certainly the foresight by producers to film the final seasons in colour assured for profitable reissues in the 1960s when colour television became affordable. But success is seldom based solely on technical change, and in the case of Adventures of Superman much of its success is due to its own aesthetic élan. The series never attempted to be anything more than what it was, a highly entertaining melodrama rooted deeply in its comic book origins; in fact, its best feature is sheer escapism in the best tradition. Episodes featured clear and distinct crises which always led to satisfying conclusions; this is particularly true of the first two black and white seasons.

The series evolved from tense crime thrillers under producer Robert Maxwell to more comic book-inspired and didactic morality plays in the second season (and beyond) under producer Whitney Ellsworth. Many commentators on the series prefer the Maxwell episodes to any of those produced by Ellsworth. Maxwell clearly preferred suspenseful crime thrillers over anything else: "The Haunted Lighthouse" follows Superman's efforts to thwart a smuggling ring; in "The Monkey Mystery" Superman battles a spy ring; "The Mind Machine" follows a gangster's efforts to disrupt Senate crime hearings; "No Holds Barred" exposes racketeering in the wrestling game; "Czar of the Underworld" follows the accident-prone filming of a motion picture based on Clark Kent's expose of mobster Luigi Dinelli; and "Crime Wave" follows Superman's efforts to capture 12 violent mobsters in Metropolis. Maxwell seldom balked at depicting violence.

For example, in "Night of Terror," the cold-blooded murder of motel manager Mr. King, though not shown, is discussed, and Mrs. King, shown bleeding foam facial wounds following a pistol whipping, is nursed back to health by Lois. In "The Birthday Letter" callous villains remove the braces from a disabled little girl to keep her from going for help, and in "The Evil Three" a sadistic villain pushes a woman in a wheelchair down a ramp to what is apparently her doom. Such sequences are hardly what one would think of as children's entertainment (although in today's children's programming, such scenes would be conventional).

In general, most of the first season episodes are fast-paced and done in a style that clearly resembles B-movie thrillers rather than comic books; as Gary Grossman has noted, the preview at the end of each episode added to the B-movie quality by having the distinct flavour of movie "coming attractions" trailers.

A close examination of the series, in a strictly aesthetic sense, shows that the two black and white seasons are as similar as they are different.

The second season, under Ellsworth, certainly tones down the violence and the heavy-handed thriller quality of the first season; of note here is that Lois Lane is recast from the venomous feminist who seems to genuinely dislike Clark Kent—perhaps due to Phyllis Coates' portrayal rather than to Maxwell's scripting—to a more reserved yet nonetheless independent Lois in the person of Noel Neill, who had played the part in two Columbia serials. But more important, the second season criminals are depicted as moronic rather than sadistic, and this underscores Ellsworth's own didactic approach (especially for children). The audience may have sympathy for the crooks, but the audience will never have empathy for the crooks.

This is certainly true when examining villains like Hank, Louie, and Joyce in "The Dog Who Knew Superman," and henchman Toots in "Jimmy Olsen, Boy Editor." Hank remains degenerate by literally hating dogs, but sophomoric Louie changes allegiances when he realises that Hank is about to kill the dog in question. Joyce, the moll, remains pure, since Superman returns the dog to her care, knowing the dog will be loved. In "Jimmy Olsen, Boy Editor," Toots is simply a big lug without brains but with a heart, and our sympathies go out to him because he is a friendly yet misguided individual. But despite the criticism levelled against these depictions of villains by many devotees and reviewers alike, such characterisations are actually few in the second season.

For the most part, the villains are soft versions of Maxwell's villains. For instance, there is little sympathy for Luke Maynard in "The Big Squeeze," for Capt. McBain in "The Golden Vulture," for Fairchild in "The Face and the Voice" or Dr. Gregory Barnak in "Star of Fate." In each instance, the villain is cold-blooded, is inclined to murder, and possesses no redeeming value. The difference, then, between, say, Dr. Ort in Maxwell's "The Secret of Superman" and Dr. Barnak in Ellsworth's "Star of Fate" is that the violent tendencies in Ellsworth's villains have been assuaged, either by a sympathetic henchmen (e.g., Toots) or, in the case of Barnak, by softer plots. Dr. Ort drives the plot by seeking Superman's identity, but Barnak is secondary to the real conflict of "Star of Fate," which is to discover the antidote for a poison that has infected Lois; Barnak's mad pursuit to own the Star of Fate seems like an afterthought.

Ellsworth, who was National Comics' point man for the entire series, relied more on comic book inspiration than Maxwell, whose proclivity for crime thrillers seemed to spring more from pulp fiction than comic books of the 1950s. As a result, the fantastic underlies many of the episodes in Ellsworth's seasons, from crazy inventions like Mr. Kelso in "The Machine that Could Plot Crimes" and the incredibly powerful and accurate model air-planes in "Beware the Wrecker" (an episode with a comic book ring to it), to outright science fiction themes like a runaway asteroid in "Panic in the Sky," nuclear contamination in "Superman in Exile," Kryptonite bullets in "The Defeat of Superman" and powerful explosives in "The Whistling Bird."

Unfortunately, the colour episodes (seasons three through six) are witless and rather simple tales of little consequence. For the colour seasons, Ellsworth altered everything. For the special effects flying sequences he opted to film new sequences rather than refilm present sequences for colour. Although always redundant, the flying sequences of the black and white episodes had some variety. In particular, the second season offered a dynamic Superman pitching, yawing and rolling in front of various backgrounds including the standard Metropolis skyline as well as flights across the Atlantic ("Star of Fate") and atmospheric flights through the Metropolis skyline at night ("The Boy Who Hated Superman" and "The Clown Who Cried"). Moreover, special sequences were filmed to meet the requirements of individual episodes, such as Superman's flight to the asteroid in "Panic in the Sky" and his flight through the thunderstorm in "Superman in Exile."

But the colour episodes offered little variety in 52 episodes; the same skyline footage was used for both day and night, supplemented by a closer shot on Superman with blurred clouds in the background. Nowhere is this more pronounced and aggravating than in "The Jolly Roger." Here, the script called for Superman to save an island by blocking incoming shells fired from a U.S. Navy battleship. To accomplish this, the repetitious flying sequence was printed left to right followed by the same sequence printed right to left; no bombs are seen exploding. What is quite evident, as so many have observed, is that the "S" on Superman's costume is backwards in the reversed shots.

The depictions of villains was also altered. Now the villains were stooge-like caricatures played more for comedy than intimidation; frequent performers Herb Vigran, Ben Welden, Sid Tomack, Billy Nelson and George Chandler seemed to mock their previous villainous roles by overacting in silly plots in such episodes as "Mr. Zero," "Flight to the North" and "The Big Forget." The plots themselves became whimsical or sentimental rather than melodramatic; searching for the perfect lemon meringue pie drives the plot of "Flight to the North," and the sentiment expressed in "Joey," "The Prince Albert Coat," "The Stolen Elephant" and "Mr. Zero" borders on satire. In "Blackmail" and "Whatever Goes Up" the denouement makes it quite clear that we are not to take the episodes too seriously; the villains survive violent explosions, reappearing with their faces covered with soot and their clothing in shreds.

They become slapstick figures, and presumably we are to laugh at their appearance and demeanour rather than revel in their own defeat. Like so many television programs of the era, the series had its origins in radio; Robert Maxwell and his wife Jessica had produced the final seasons of the radio series. Maxwell's pen-chant for crime thrillers was already apparent in the radio series, but the television series' origin also owes a lot to a series of animated films produced by Max Fleischer in the early 1940s. These 17 colour short subjects featured the voice of radio's Superman (Clayton "Bud" Collyer), but seemed more like the Ellsworth programs than the Maxwell thrillers; using the fantastic, including incredible inventions and machines, the cartoons were not so much violent as action-oriented. Maxwell or Ellsworth, or both, borrowed the opening signature for their television series from Fleischer's cartoons.

The narration in the films follows the basic radio opening with the axiomatic "faster than a speeding bullet, more powerful than a locomotive, able to leap tall buildings in a single bound"; visually, Fleischer places Superman standing with arms akimbo as the narrator explains Superman's brief history about being a strange visitor from another planet with extraordinary powers. At the appropriate point the Superman figure dissolves into Clark Kent before id-solving back to Superman with the announcer intoning the familiar closing line that states that Superman "fights a never-ending battle for truth and justice." For television, the phrase "and the American way" was added, which, since the 1960s, has offended many commentators by, as they charge, limiting Superman to an American ideal too often associated with patriotic as well as cultural imperialism. In effect, Maxwell's pilot for the series was a feature length film, Superman and the Mole Men, released in 1951 by Lippert Pictures.

It was later edited into a two-part episode titled "The Unknown People." Maxwell wrote the script (using the pseudonym Richard Fielding) and Lee Sholem directed. George Reeves and Phyllis Coates were featured in their roles as Clark Kent/Superman and Lois Lane; the roles of Perry White and Jimmy Olsen from the comic books and radio programs would be added for the series along with an original character, Inspector William J. Henderson, an authority with the Metropolis police department. It should also be noted that two serials, produced by Sam Katzman for Columbia Pictures, predated the series. Kirk Alyn and Noel Neill starred and Thomas Carr co-directed with Spencer G. Bennet the first serial, simply titled Superman (1948).

Carr's later contribution to the television series cannot be over-estimated; in fact, the best episodes belong to Carr and writer Jackson Gillis, who together knew exactly the kind of series they were making. Gillis's scripts are obviously inspired by comic books; his narratives flow quickly, leaving little room for realistic progression or character analysis. Critics censuring Adventures of Superman for lack of characterisation or realism are not seeing the inherent value of the series; essentially, such critics are merely speaking a different language since one simply will not find realism or insight into characters or actions in the series. Rather, what one will find is clearly pronounced characters distinguished as "police officer" or "citizen" or "villain" or "innocent" who react to stimuli with-out much motivation. What drives the plot is incident, and Gillis understands this.

His narratives grow from one fantastic element to another, cemented only by an interior logic that frequently has nothing to do with the real world of cause and effect. For example, no one really believes that a small model airplane controlled by apparently nothing, in "Beware the Wrecker," can carry enough explosive to destroy an entire cargo ship. But the model plane makes sense within the confines of that particular drama; the explosive is never explained nor is the power for flying the model aircraft explained since such explanations would get in the way of the story proper. What matters is that someone is sending specially armed model airplanes to wreak destruction upon Metropolis. What Gillis writes, Carr visually enhances.

He relies on long takes and frames his cast in postures similar to comic book panels. Carr frequently uses two-shots without cutting on dialogue because, for Carr, dialogue is present only to advance the narrative action. What matters for Carr is creating action and allowing that action to speak for itself, and nowhere is this more apparent than in the flying sequences of the second season. Grossman notes that it was Carr who devised the running take-shot, i.e., having Reeves run toward the camera, hit a small trampoline and then leap over the camera. Such a contrivance is most effective in Gillis's script for "Panic in the Sky," in which, according to Grossman, Carr angled the observatory fence toward the camera to give the impression of one mighty leap by the Man of Steel.

The second serial, Bennet's Atom Man vs. Superman (1950), again with Alyn and Neill, is the first Superman dramatization outside of radio to feature Lex Luthor, played here by Lyle Talbot. Not one of the 104 episodes of Adventures of Superman featured or even alluded to Lex Luthor, Superman's comic book nemesis.

Also, it should be noted that an episode titled "Stamp Day for Superman" was filmed but never broadcast since it was a promotional film for the U.S. Treasury Department. The episode, featuring Billy Nelson as villain Blinky and Tris Coffin as school principal Mr. Garwood, was distributed in 16mm to schools to advance the Savings Stamps program. Thomas Carr directed the 15-minute episode from a script by David Chantler. National Comics also distributed a comic book based on the episode. The dates listed below have been culled from various sources, and though the series is credited as an ABC network series, some syndication may have taken place in West Coast markets since disparities exist between listed broadcast dates. Although the dates fluctuate, the order of episodes remained the same.

OPENING. The opening signature for this series has become as familiar as any on television. The exploding comet that reveals the title Adventures of Superman followed by the pistol shot, the racing locomotive, the skyscraper, Superman in flight and that majestic pose with the American flag in the background have become an American icon. Over these images, of course, is the excited babble of voices, trying to decide what's in the sky: Bird? Plane? We all know the answer-the "strange visitor from another planet," come to Earth to fight for "truth, justice and the American way." The chief announcer for the opening was Bill Kennedy; Charles Lyon introduced the show on behalf of Kellogg's.

Kennedy: Yes, it's Superman, strange visitor from another planet who came to Earth with powers and abilities far beyond those of mortal men. Superman, who can change the course of mighty rivers, bend steel in his bare hands. And who, disguised as Clark Kent, mild-mannered reporter for a great metropolitan newspaper, fights a never- ending battle for truth, justice and the American way.

COMMERCIAL BREAK. At the halfway point in each episode, the narrative would crossfade to an image of the Superman shield zooming toward the viewer with Charles Lyon telling us, "We'll return to the Adventures of " Superman in just a moment.

CLOSING. In the first season, Maxwell ended each episode with a movie trailer- inspired preview of next week's program. Using the shield as background, the title "PREVIEW" was shown before dissolving to a series of scenes from the program. Bill Kennedy then would warn the audience not to miss Superman's next "thrill packed" battle "against the forces of evil." At this point, the scene dissolved back to the shield and a series of titles accompanied Kennedy's finish: "There's action! Adventure! And mystery!" This image was followed by the image of the typical Superman stance, this time superimposed over bursting fireworks; Charles Lyon closed with a final plug for Kellogg's. After the first season, the preview was replaced by a more staid conclusion. Like its predecessor, the closing opened with a quick zoom through space accompanied by Kennedy's reminder, "Don't miss the next thrill-packed episode in the Adventures of Superman." But no preview followed, just Lyon's familiar proclamation that the series was "presented by Kellogg's, the greatest name in cereals."

AEON: COUNTDOWN IM ALL

AKA: TRILLENIUM

AKA: TRILLENIUM: THE FUTURE HAS BEGUN

As a boy Chris Sanders was forced to watch on helplessly when the father he worshiped, the astronaut Mathew Sanders, was killed in a Soyuz capsule that exploded. What Chris didn't realize was that the accident was only staged to fool the public, and hide the real circumstances behind the mysterious "Omega Mission": AEON, a vast, indefinable mass out in space, was coming threateningly close to the earth and had to be destroyed. General Gossett, the head of the Omega Project, wanted to prevent mass panic by keeping the whole thing top secret. His colleague McBain protested fiercely, however, and was locked away in a psychiatric clinic. Ten years later, Chris himself is an astronaut, and has been chosen to go on his first mission to the International Space Station that is orbiting the earth.

Shortly before the launch he meets McBain, who tells him about the phony accident ten years previously. Chris doesn't believe him, but Laura, an attractive journalist, investigates the matter and actually finds some evidence to support McBain's allegations. Meanwhile, Chris is in a shuttle out in space. His first mission turns into a disaster, however, when McBain takes over a relay station down on earth and uses software to block the shuttle's functions. Chris is in serious danger, and is only saved in the nick of time by his friend Nick after a daring rescue attempt. Back on earth, Chris travels with Laura to Russia to find out more about the mysterious Project Omega. Just as the two of them are about to solve the mystery Chris is called away to help prevent someone from destroying the International Space Station. Chris immediately realizes that McBain is involved again, but this time he's powerless to prevent the catastrophe: a missile destroys the station, killing his friend Nick in the process. Chris now realizes that Omega is doing everything in its power to cover something up. On his first mission to the moon, he stumbles across a top secret lunar base. Chris realizes he's finally on the point of uncovering the secret of the mysterious Project Omega once and for all.

This mini-series was total baloney, with added bratwurst flavor.

Tired acting, predictable (and heavily prejudiced) plot that teeters on the edge of unintentional comicality, expensive-looking but poorly executed special effects. A safe no-brainer that'll keep you glued to the screen for, what, 15 minutes as you skip through the story in fast forward. Yes, it's simple enough to grasp at 15x normal speed and not miss anything important.

But a thumb up for making something this ambitious outside Hollywood. At the same time, a big thumb down for the producers for adapting and resorting only to the most worn-out cliches in the book.

Need just a few more attempts to get it done right. Maybe in the upcoming trillennium we will finally see a decent European Sci Fi flick.

AERIAL CITY 008

AKA: KUCHU TOSHI 008

AKA: KUCHU TOSHI ZERO ZERO HACHI

AKA: MIDAI CITY 008

Aerial City 008 is the pinnacle of 21st Century science, an ideal dwelling place for mankind, in a future where all the major cities in the world are connected by supersonic jets that reduce travelling time to a maximum of three hours. Eleven year old Hoshio (Ota) is the son of the prominent scientist Yusuke (Wakayama), and lives in this high tech utopia with his mother Saeko (Satomi) and sister Tuskiko (Hirai).

Later in the series Hoshio's family become involved in the fight against the black cat criminal organisation. A group of master thieves determined to steal priceless antiques, like the sword of Genghis Khan and the fabled Ring of the Queen's Eye, the black cat gang also dabbles in espionage and on going attempts to ruin efforts to put up a permanent moonbase.

Heavily influenced by Gerry Anderson's THUNDERBIRDS and CAPTAIN SCARLET, this puppet show used modern super-marionettes rather than the more traditional puppets found in shows such as Chirorin Village and The Hakkenden. The puppets were created by Toyko university aeronautical engineering graduate Kinosuke Takeda, who also put his experience to good use designed the futuristic look of Aerial City. The story itself was based on Aozora Monogatari (Blue Sky Story), a tale by Japan Sinks creator Sakyo Komatsu.

Despite high production values and an accomplished voice cast including Toshiko Ota and Michiko Hirai from Little Witch Sally, Aerial City 008 was a failure. Producers at the time claimed that science fiction was too difficult for children to handle, or that Japanese children were frightened by the more realistic marionettes used in the show. A generation later STAR FLEET would also use marionettes, also use Science Fiction, and also flop spectacularly in Japan. Theme : Chinatsu Nakayama - 'Kuchu Toshi 008' (Aerial City 008).

AIRWOLF

Airwolf was named after its most important character which was not a living being, but the world's most advanced helicopter. Developed by a top secret US Government agency known only as 'The FIRM'. Airwolf could outperform every other aircraft ever made. Faster than a jet plane, it could travel anywhere in the world without refuelling and when a conflict arose it could blast the bad guys out of the sky or get them on the ground. It also had remarkable sensing devices that could, among other things, tell how much fuel is in the tank of a jeep on the ground. Complications arose when Airwolf is stolen by its creator and sold to the Libyans. The Government had enough good sense to not want the Libyans to have such an advanced piece of equipment so they recruit Stringfellow Hawke to get it back for them. Stringfellow, or String as he preferred to be called, was an eccentric pilot who was able to recover Airwolf. After recovering it he decided not to give it back to the Government until he learned the fate of his brother- St. John- who had been listed as missing in action during the Vietnam conflict. While the government tried to learn of String's brother's fate, String would use Airwolf to get the bad guys.

To help him in this endeavour he recruited Dom Santini, an old war buddy who ran Santini Aviation, a small aviation company. Together they went after terrorists, mad scientists, third world revolutionaries and anyone else that the FIRM wanted eliminated. The bad guys are required to have some type of air transport- be it plane or helicopter- so that at some point in the episode (usually the end) there can be an aerial chase or better yet a dogfight in which Airwolf can come out victorious. String and Dom had contact with the FIRM through the mysterious Archangel, who always dressed in elegant white suits.

Ernest Borgnine could also be seen in the SF show TREASURE ISLAND IN OUTER SPACE. After the end of the third season the entire show's production was changed, including a complete recast of the regular cast members, this resulted in a poor show, which is rarely seen today. "Airwolf" was cancelled in 1986, only to be revived by the USA Cable Network, with a new cast for the fourth season, often never broadcast as part of the package, which usually only consists of the first three seasons. The fourth season made extensive use of the stock footage from the first three seasons.

Usually, the most exciting part was the dog fights which "Airwolf" got into at the end of every episode. The scripts were, however, lacking in substance, and many of the episodes were just plain dull. As the show continued, continuity also waned, with the character of Stringfellow Hawk becoming literally a changed man overnight.

In 1986 CBS cancelled Airwolf a fate that normally meant no more new episodes. However, the USA cable network bought the rights to the programme and decided not only to rerun the existing episodes but, to make new ones. The USA episodes were totally recast. Dom was killed in a helicopter explosion and his niece Jo inherited Santini Aviation. String was injured during the rescue of his brother St. John. St. John ended up in control of Airwolf, going on the same type of missions as String did; however he was now taking orders from Jason Locke. Major Rivers became St. John's copilot. Not as much money was spent on the USA episodes and the quality suffers when compared to their predecessors on CBS. The aerial footage from the CBS episodes became stock footage and was used repeatedly.

Of all five super-machine shows of the 1980s (KNIGHT RIDER, BLUE THUNDER, Airwolf, STREETHAWK and THE HIGHWAYMAN). Airwolf was far and away the most mature and sophisticated, combining intelligent scripts, adult themes, and trademark 1980s vigilante mayhem with action heroics and the inevitable cathartic destructive power of Airwolf, the carnage heightened by the superb and distinctive theme of Sylvester Levay. If the cast and characters weren't exactly likeable, they were suited to their roles.

Donald Bellisario had entered television through Stephen Cannell's World War II flyboy show Black Sheep Squadron and then went into Glen A. Larson's BATTLESTAR GALATICA before developing the long running and influential detective show Magnum P.I. Bellisario's weird and contradictory signature mix of religious fundamentalism, reactionary militarism, right-on liberalism and right-wing denial was honed to perfection on Airwolf, and has permeated all of his series (Magnum, QUANTUM LEAP, Jag) since.

Vigilante action shows such as those churned out by Stephen Cannell, Glen Larson and Donald Bellisario, with their heart in the right place and a bullet in the chamber have always confused and discomfited English commentators and critics on pop culture and TV, where to be anti-authority in Britain has usually been synonymous with left wing politics, which has traditionally had first refusal on liberal ideas. An enormous amount of knee-jerk rubbish has been written about shows such as THE MAN FROM U.N.C.L.E., I-Spy, The A-Team and KNIGHT RIDER etc, which were actually quite subversive and innovative, but with Airwolf, what you see is what you get.

Vietnam and Watergate gave conservative America nightmares even the feel good Reagan years couldn't eradicate, and while Bellisario's series have done their damndest to rewrite contemporary history and make the military heroic again - Bellisario served in Vietnam in the marines - his corner of Hollywood has been forced to explain the recent past by looking for bad guys at home rather than abroad. Consequently, the concept of paramilitary forces of nuked-up survivalists, embittered Vietnam veterans and renegade patriots who might have been expected to receive some sympathy have proven a popular option with which to confront and justify America's demons.

In reality, Airwolf was a highly modified Bell 222 helicopter, and its speed and abilities are of course the result of clever editing and camera trickery. Fake jet engines made out of fibre glass were added, and aluminium and steel cannons. Like most futuristic designs for TV's super machines, these cosmetic editions are more of a hindrance than a help, and highly impractical. Just at the 1960s Batmobile could travel no faster than 40 miles an hour, just as the Batcycle was a juddering death trap, and just as the UNCLE car barely moved two blocks without sputtering to a halt, so Airwolf's speed was encumbered by it's stylish trimmings! However, it did once perform a real rescue mission, when the rotor blades were used to fan-dry a football pitch for an important evening game!

The executive producer for the series was Donald Bellisario, the producers were Lester WM Berke, Leon Ortiz-Gil, Michael Snyder. The story editors were Chester Krumholz and Phil Combest. Photography was by Stan Lazan, art directors were Gary Lee and Greg Garrison and the music for the show was by Sylvester Levay and Ian Freebairn-Smith.

AKA: AKUMAIZA SURI

The underground empire known as the Akuma clan has decided to start its invasion of the surface world and is now beginning to make preparations for its attack. Thankfully Zabitan, who is half human and half Akuma disagrees with their plans and decides to stand up to the clan and protect the surface world from the invaders. The Akuma clan is not pleased with this development and decides to send out Gobbler and Evil to hunt down Zabitan and put a stop to his actions.

As both Gobbler and Evil fight Zabitan they come to realize that they may be on the wrong side of the fight and decide to join Zabitan in his fight to protect humanity from the rest of the evil empire. These three heroes would go on to be known as the Akumaizer 3.

I saw the opening theme to this program a while back and was really intrigued by it as it looked like an action packed show with some very colorful characters, however it would not be till recently that I would have a chance to sit down and really check out the series.

Akumaizer 3 is very different from many of the other tokusatsu programs that I've seen in the past couple of years in that it features "henshin-like" characters that don't have an alter-ego. This aspect of the series allowed the writers to add some very dramatic touches to what could have just been another forgettable hero show. Even though the Akumaizer 3 fight to protect humans, they are not easily accepted by them, after all they used to be part of the Akuma clan, a fact that they cannot hide through a secret human guise.

The other intereting twist to the story is that our heroes are also fugitives from their own world and must now fight against those who used to be their friends and family. Needless to say that will make for some very tense moments as the series progresses all the way to its dramatic conclusion.

Aside from the great storyline what we have here is a very fun to watch TV program from the one and only Ishinomori Shoutarou. Each episode is full of colorful heroics and great fighting choreography between our heroes and whoever they fight in that week's particular episode. Like the 3 musketeers (which is part of this show's theme) Zabitan, Gobbler and Evil fight "all for one, one for all".

The special effects in Akumaizer 3 might be laughable to some, but I thought they were great for a show that aired between 1975 and 1976. Most of the notable sequences involve some interesting miniature/model work, like the scene where you see their old-style galeon ship transforms into a modern (?) battle ship, which they use to get one from one place to another. Other notable effects can be found in some of the fight scenes, including the use of small hidden trampolines that create the illusion of our heroes jumping around the battlefield very effectively (why don't they do this more nowadays?)

Akumaizer 3 is a great TV show that should be represented in every tokusatsu fan's video collection. Everything that we've come to love as fans of this TV genre is very well represented in this production, which is why is so much fun to watch. If you don't like old-school shows, stay away from this one, everyone else go ahead and get yourself a couple of episodes and check it out.

The series was produced by Tohru Hirayama, and the original music was by Michiaki Watanab, and Special Effects by Nobuo Yajima (special effects supervisor).

AKA: MR. DEVIL

Akuma Kun's story starts with a funeral in procession under a dark, ominous sky. The back doors of the hearse suddenly open and the casket comes crashing out. Before the eyes of the horrified mourners, the casket's occupant rises and floats off into the forest. A group of boys come upon the lifeless body, now devoid of eyes. Only one boy, Shingo Yamada (played by Mitsunobo Kaneko of Giant Robo/Johnny Sokko fame) seems unafraid and intent on finding the answer to this strange mystery. Looking around, he spies on a strange old man watching nearby in the woods.

The stranger turns and walks slowly into the woods, almost beckoning Shingo to follow. The walk leads to an old abandoned well. Upon reaching it, the old man becomes a glowing figure and floats into the well. Shingo, now convinced he's found the one responsible for the corpse follows the old man. Exploring a maze of underground passages in the well, Shingo comes upon a large room. A shaft of light snaps on illuminating a giant stone slab on the floor in the shape of a circle, with a strange writing on it.

The old man steps out of the shadows and introduces himself as Dr. Faust. He assures Shingo he will not hurt him. Faust explains that he has spent hundreds of years watching for the demon threat he fears has already begun. Faust takes Shingo to a small well in the room and begins to play a strange melody on a flute. Images of various demons and spirits ripple through the water of the well, among them is the creature responsible for the corpse, the eye stealer Ganma. Shingo seems unafraid of these evaluations, in fact it's as if he was ready for this his whole life. Faust confirms this to be true for when he brushes Shingo's hair aside, he uncovers a large mole like birthmark in the centre of his forehead. This is the mark of Shingo's destiny to become a demon fighter.

Knowing the end is near, (old age I guess) Faust uses his remaining time to show Shingo how to summon the one being that can save humanity. The surprise is that this saviour is a devil himself. Materialising at the spoken word of Faust, which is repeated by Shingo, Meliesdes Niche Mephisto (played by Kenji Ushio) steps out of the giant stone circle. It is revealed the stone circle is a gateway to hell.

Joining forces seems to be a doomed idea from the start, since Mephisto arrogantly refuses to save human kind. Only by signing a contract can he be used to fight the demon horde. Mephisto almost succeeds in getting his way by ripping the document in half. Faust reveals an ace up his sleeve, by playing the magic flute again causing Mephisto great pain. Faust only stops when Mephisto agrees to sign the contract. Faust releases the flute in Shingo's care and warns him to keep a watchful eye on the devil. Just as this advice is given, Faust's time runs out. The aged guardian collapses and his body vanishes into thin air.

Aware of the dangerous task ahead of them, Shingo and Mephisto fly off to the first of their many battles. A major change in the team occurs in episode 10 "Shiba, the Big Demon God" when Mephisto is summoned back to Hell. Unable to deny this request, he decides to let his visiting younger brother, Shiirisatta Mahmot Mephisto, take over the fight, even changing his outfit to match his own. Mephisto and Shingo are usually accompanied by young friends. The young boys usually end up as hostages and sometimes actually bring about the destruction of the demon themselves.

Akuma Kun is a very unconventional show. To start with, the main hero is a devil. Mephisto doesn't fit your traditional devil, horns and pitchfork. Instead, he is quite the gentleman in his top hat, tuxedo and cape. The only thing that is unusual about him is the large bump on top of his head that radiates with pain when he is being punished with the melody of the flute. Mephisto is armed with a jewel capped cane that can be transformed into a sword, drill and even a flame thrower. The cane can also warp time, magnify the sun's energy and give Shingo the power of flight. Elder Mephisto would rather be out chasing women, than risking his neck for earth. Only after an arm twisting or a play from the flute will he get his ass in gear. Younger Mephisto is more in tune with Shingo and seems to relish going into battle.

Though Mephisto possesses all the power, Shingo has the power of quick thinking. In nearly every episode, Shingo figures out how to dispose of the demon. Although he possesses the flute to keep Mephisto loyal to the cause, he only uses it when there is no other way to convince the devil that people are in jeopardy or to break the mind control some of his enemies can exert on him. In fact, Mephisto becomes fairly sympathetic and almost caring for Shingo in his pompous way. Later in the series, the flute is used less. Instead Shingo uses Mephisto's passion for chocolate against him or even a magazine of bathing beauties for him to drool over.

1966 was a magnificent year for Japanese television. With the popularity of Godzilla the "Kaiju Boom" was born. Studios like Tsuburaya (created and owned by Eiji Tsuburaya; who was creating effects for Toho) and P-Productions hopped on the band wagon and produced some truly memorable sci-fi TV series.

Tsuburaya produced the monster hits UltraQ and Ultraman. P-Productions followed with a live action version of Osamu Tezuka's manga strip Magma Taishi (AMBASSADOR MAGMA) which would become SPACE GIANTS in America.

Toei productions recognised this new successful market and decided to join in. Toei was already well known for starting the super hero genre with characters like Gekko Kamen and NATIONAL KID. Later, they would create the ultimate changing hero icon with KAMEN RIDER.

October 6, 1966 saw the release of Toei's Akuma Kun (Mr. Devil) which ran 26 black and white episodes. The story is based on characters created by Shigeru Mizuki, known for stories of the supernatural and ghosts. His most popular work is Ge Ge Ge No Kitaro published in Shonen Magazine in the 60's. Ge Ge Ge No Kitaro spawned a live-action movie in the 80's as well as an animated series. The most recent version began in January of '96.

Toei's idea was to produce a show that cost less to make, but had an original story with more drama and better photography. This is a task that Toei has managed to perfect through the late 70's until fans were brainwashed by special effects from America via Star Wars genre. Now days, not many programs can mix a good story without having the SFX rule the feature. Akuma Kun is for the person who prefers originality, atmosphere and stronger characterisation rather than having the SFX carry the program instead of just enhancing it.

Akuma Kun was created before the age of live-action programming created as a means of selling toys. Though it didn't make it to the states, Akuma Kun could have become a classic in the U.S. markets like Johnny Sokko and Space Giants thanks to its straightforward, simple, and (most importantly) fun style.

Akuma Kun is rich in memorable visuals and atmosphere. Being black and white adds to this sense. Whether it's the giant mummy claw flying out of the nebulous dimensional gateway, or the woman of the snows embracing a helpless victim in her arctic clutches, the demons elicit an uneasy creepiness reminiscent of silent era horror films.

Akuma Kun's soundtrack is primarily jazz oriented. Other tracks encompass everything from electric guitar to ghostly chanting (apparent in the opening credits). The special effects and monster suits are incredible for its time. Though a horror show there is no gore (though still occasionally gruesome). Shadow work and the power of suggestion is relied on. Akuma Kun is a true monochrome gem that is likely to satisfy most Japanese sci-fi fans as well as today's X-FILES generation.

A cartoon version of the series was created in 1989.

ALF

ALF was the story of the Tanners, a typical suburban Californian family consisting of: father Willie, a social worker mother Kate, teenage daughter Lynn and her younger brother Brian. Their lives were made a bit more interesting after an alien crash-lands his spaceship in their garage. Although Gordon Schumway was the alien's name, the Tanners just call him ALF, short for Alien Life Form. ALF was just under a metre tall, had orange hair, a big nose, a tendency to break things, a large appetite (cats are on the top of his menu) and an often obnoxious personality.

The Tanners do the only logical sitcom thing. Instead of turning ALF in to the authorities they allow him to move in with them, hoping to keep his existence secret. This proceeds to complicate the Tanners' lives. Whenever house guests arrive- most often the obnoxious next door neighbours the Ochmoneks- ALF is forced to hide in the kitchen. This is a really good idea on the Tanners' part since one of their other big complaints about ALF is that he eats too much. When he is not eating or hiding out in the kitchen, ALF spends his time watching TV where he learns about Earth culture. During the first season of the show, episodes often revolved around ALF learning about Earth's cultural norms. No effort was made on ALF's part to fix his ship and return home due to the fact that his home planet, Melmac, had been destroyed by nuclear war while he was in space. This accounts for his very anti-nuclear stance which on several occasions got Willie in trouble.

"ALF" also spawned its own popular cartoon series and ended on a cliff hanger episode where Alf was about to get caught by the Alien Task Force. ALF ("Alien Life Form"), a 229-year-old furball with attitude, escaped the explosive destruction of his home planet Melmac, and crashed into the Tanner's garage, and became part of their family. "Alf" disrupted their banal suburban lifestyle, and made acidic comments about humanity and the American life style, as THIRD ROCK FROM THE SUN would, a decade later.

Next-door neighbours, the Ochmoneks, never figured out what was going on, a sitcom formula perfected in "Bewitched." Max Wright would also later go on to star in MISFITS OF SCIENCE. Very few episodes of note were SF, most preferring to stay within the confines of the sitcom, but some of interest were 'Help Me Rhonda' in which Willie tries to make contact with survivors from Melmac because Alf is feeling lonely for his own kind; 'Alone Again Naturally' in which Alf reads the National Inquisitor and reads about an alien living with a family, the alien sounds a lot like Alf's cousin and finally there was the final cliff-hanger episode 'Consider Me Gone' in which Alf is captured by the Alien Task Force after contacting his own race with the hope of starting a new Melmacian homeworld. The series became a world wide success, shown in over 60 countries.

In 1987 "ALF" spawned a cartoon series entitled "Alf- Tales". There was also a film "Project : ALF" (1996) which carried on from the final cliff-hanger episode of the series. The tradition of SF sitcom goes back to the 1960s with show such as MY FAVOURITE MARTIAN (1963-1966) and MORK AND MINDY (1978-1982), every generation seems to have at least one SF sitcom which becomes a massive success.

ALF, an "alien life form" -- in the line of extraterrestrial descent from MY FAVORITE MARTIAN and Mork in MORK AND MINDY, though also influenced heavily by E.T.: The Extra-Terrestrial (1982), Explorers (1985) and the success of the Muppets -- moves in with the Tanner family, a sitcom collection of typical Americans, after his spaceship crash-lands in their garage. A furry puppet, somewhere between cute and obnoxious, voiced and operated by series creator Paul Fusco, ALF mainly sits in the middle of the living room insulting people, plotting to eat the family cat, making tv-style smart-ass remarks and dispensing reassuring sentiment. The sf premise aside, ALF is basically one of those stereotype sitcom characters -- like Benson (Robert Guillaume) in Soap or Sophia (Estelle Getty) in The Golden Girls -- whose otherness (extraterrestrial, racial, social or mental) provides an excuse for them to comment rudely, satirically and smugly on the foibles of everyone else. The regular cast includes Max Wright, Anne Schedeen, Andrea Elson and Benji Gregory, as the Tanners, and John LaMotta and Liz Sheridan, as the nosy neighbours straight from I Love Lucy and Bewitched.

ALF became a hit show and the character- in reality most often a puppet, however on several occasions ALF was portrayed by a midget in a costume- began to appear as a guest on awards shows and game shows such as Hollywood Squares. Starting with the 1987 season. a Saturday morning cartoon chronicling ALF's adventures on his home planet Melmac was added to the NBC line up. In 1989 a second animated spin off was introduced: Alf-tales featuring ALF in the title role of popular stories from myths and legends. No information is available on either of these series.

The series was cancelled with the fate of ALF up in the air. The final episode Consider Me Gone was a season ending cliff-hanger In it ALF has made contact with other survivors from Melmac who have settled on a new world and asked him to join them. After tearful good byes to the Tanners. ALF finds himself about to be captured by the dreaded Alien Task Force just moments before his friends' ship was to Audiences would have to wait almost six years to learn the fate of ALF In a revival TV movie entitled Project ALF we learn that ALF did fall into the hands of the Alien Task Force and that he has been living on an Air Force base at government expense. The Tanners however are nowhere to be seen and are only mentioned as having been placed in the witness relocation programme and living in Iceland. In the film Alf manages to escape the government control and goes on the run with two of the Alien Task Force team members. Unlike the series the film is lacking the quality which made the series special and funny, Alf without the Tanners just doesn't work, since he relays on playing off the fact that they are so irritated by him. While you watch the film you see that lacking on the screen, with no chemistry between the characters and Alf. The film ended with an upbeat ending and a chance for a new series, which never came into fruition.

ALF was the latest in the line of American comedy series that set an alien in a typical Earth household so that we can look at our world through his eyes and see how dumb we really are. It's 1980s insult comedy laced with traditional US morality, a sophisticated line in wise cracking satire, and a lineage which can be tracked by through MORK AND MINDY as far back as MY FAVOURITE MARTIAN. The producer for the series was Tom Patchett.

ALIEN NATION

Set in 1995 Los Angeles, it teamed Matt Sikes and George Francisco as a detective duo whose backgrounds are literally worlds apart. Sikes is a divorced, streetwise LAPD cop - impulsive and aggressive. The more intellectual and thoughtful George is a Newcomer - one of 250,000 inhabitants from the planet Tencton whose slave ship had crash landed in the Mojave Desert three years before.

Humanoid in appearance, apart from their bald, mottled heads, vestigial ears and enlarged craniums, the Tenctonese have tried to assimilate into human culture, but being smarter than the average Earthman has not endeared them to all their hosts and they are often derisively referred to as 'Slags'. As with any dispossessed group, some resent their lot while others strive to break through that resentment.

George is the first Newcomer police officer to reach the rank of detective. Moving his family into a better neighbourhood, they are also the first Newcomers on the block. His wife Susan, who can tolerate the occasional prejudice, worries about her daughter Emily who must attend a new school where she is the only Newcomer, while son Buck is a rebel, refusing to adapt to his new planet, defying his parents by speaking his native language and joining a Newcomer gang.

While most of the integration problems are seen through his family's eyes, George must also overcome Sikes' initial hostility towards his new partner before they inevitably become buddies. Sikes also becomes involved with Cathy, a Newcomer biochemist who moves into his apartment block.

After the show's premature cancellation, a number of successful films were produced based on the TV series. Some of the better episodes are 'The Night of Screams' in which a serial killer is stalking newcomers; 'The Game' in which Newcomers show up dead, killed by a blast of salt water; 'Real Men' where George has to incubate his wife's new baby and gets the same mood swings as women do, and 'Green Eyes' in which a deadly virus is discovered which can kill all Newcomers. "Alien Nation" was considered to be a top quality show, with a detailed history for the Newcomer aliens. The show tended to center on the integration of the human and aliens, which made for some very interesting moments.

The show like so many other SF shows of the 90s, uses an allegory to seriously discuss the issue of racism. On a lighter note, many of the alien characters were given names based on famous people such as Edgar and Rita Allan-Poe and Wyatt Earp. A language known as Tenctonese was also produced for the series to give the aliens more depth, but alas the series was cancelled after only one season. The show however did not die since a number of made-for-television films have been produced.

The short-lived tv series that followed the film combined routine crime stories with mild SATIRE of NEAR-FUTURE Los Angeles and lessons about civil rights. The bizarre-looking but adaptable Newcomers act and talk exactly like humans, portraying housewives, teenagers, used-car salesmen, criminals, police and other stereotypes. The exception is George (no longer Sam) Francisco, whose earnest, humorless approach and precise speech recall Spock of STAR TREK. A few episodes involve the pregnancy of the male Newcomer hero. Johnson also produced the much harder-edged "V". The cliff-hanger ending of the series was not resolved until Oct 1994, when a well-made two-hour tv movie, "Alien Nation: Dark Horizon" was broadcast on Fox TV, scripted by Diane Frolov and Andrew Schneider.

For this 1989 US series V creator, Kenneth Johnson returned to his theme of alien landings only this time the extra-terrestrial presence was largely benign. A spin-off from the 1988 movie, which had starred James Caan and Mandy Patinkin, Alien Nation - the series - was both a cop show and a thinly-veiled but effective commentary on racial intolerance.

While most of the integration problems are seen through his family's eyes, George must also overcome Sikes' initial hostility towards his new partner before they inevitably become buddies. Sikes also becomes involved with Cathy, a Newcomer biochemist who moves into his apartment block.

The cop element of the series is pretty straightforward - a variation on the 'chalk and cheese combo' formula of more conventional police dramas.

It is in Johnson's detailed depiction of an alien culture - complete with its own 'subtitled' language, rituals and biology - that Alien Nation acquires a real edge. The Tenctonese get drunk on soured milk, while salt water can kill them. The small of the back is a major erogenous zone and their reproductive methods are novel. It takes two males to impregnate a female, and males and females then share the pregnancy. In one episode Susan is 'prepared' by a Binnaum, a member of a revered religious sect. In a later story she gives birth to their 'pod', and George incubates it, going through the same mood swings and emotions experienced by pregnant women, before he finally gives birth to their baby (an emergency delivery by Sikes!).

The racial commentary is obvious but rarely gets preachy. One scene in which Emily is greeted by a hostile anti-alien mob on her first day at school is highly effective with a protective Sikes mocking and shaming their intolerance by actually inviting them to kill the young girl.

The slave origins of the Tenctonese are carefully inked in as details emerge of their submissive existence at the hands of sadistic and abusive Overseers on the slave ship. When the vessel crashed, many of the Overseers escaped by disguising themselves as slaves, and continue to cause trouble for the Newcomers on Earth.

One lighter aspect of the series is the way many Newcomers have adopted the names of famous Earth figures, real and fictional. Watch out for Albert Einstein, Isaac Newton and Thomas Edison, Edgar and Rita Allen-Poe, Dorian Grey, Silas Marner and Charlotte Bronte, Buster Keaton and Wyatt Earp, Paul Revere and John Paul-Sartre - even Peter Rabbit!

To the disappointment of its many fans Alien Nation only lasted one season, ending in a cliff-hanger - a 'will they live or die' crisis for the Franciscos - that was finally resolved in a 1994 'reunion' TV movie, Alien Nation: Dark Horizon, which saw the Newcomers facing annihilation, then enslavement, in an Overseer plot. Another three TV movies followed -, 1995s Body and Soul, Millennium (not to be confused with the Chris Carter series) in January 1996 and The Enemy Within in October 1996. One other movie, 'The Udara Legacy', aired in July 1997.

Alien Nation was not a huge box office success; however, the FOX network decided to turn it into a weekly series when they expanded to a third night of programming in the fall of 1989. Alien Nation the TV series takes the same premise and lead characters from the movie with none of the original cast returning. Sam Francisco has his name changed to George Francisco while Sykes has the spelling of his last name changed to Sikes. The series opens with a two hour episode starting where the movie left off.

Alien Nation was somewhat of a rarity for a TV series based on a movie in that it was better than the film that inspired it. This is due mainly to the fact that the episodes are almost equally divided between the cases that Matt and George are working on and their personal lives. We learn that George has a wife, Susan and two children Buck and Emily. An ongoing sub plot concerned the arrival N of their third child. Matt is a bachelor with a budding romance with his neighbor Cathy also a newcomer. Captain Grazier was the pair's boss at the police station. Albert Einstein was the somewhat simple newcomer janitor at the police station- who was the third newcomer sex. The police action in the episodes often dealt with crimes committed by newcomers that had a distinct alien twist to them. Matt and George got most of these cases since George was the only newcomer detective on the force. besides why invent an alien race if you are only going to deal with ever da human crimes.

The series' main drawback was its often heavy-handedness in dealing with the prejudice issue. Not content to subtly show how unjust prejudice towards the newcomers (and by inference all prejudice) is the producers decided to hit the audience over the head with the message although this tendency lessened as the series progressed.

In the spring of 1990 FOX announced that Alien Nation. along with their other two hour long action / adventure series (21 Jump Street and Booker) would be canceled. This was an odd move considering they planned to add two more nights of programming. Keeping the show going in first run syndication was looked into however it was abandoned due to monetary considerations. Four years after the series was canceled Alien Nation finally returned to FOX television. The script for the TV movie Alien Nation: Dark Horizon had originally been written several years earlier at a time when various means of reviving the series were being considered. Dark Horizon wrapped up the series' cliff-hanger ending, in which a group of human purists had developed a disease capable of killing newcomers and were preparing to unleash it. It also introduced a new threat of a new newcomer who has been sent to the Earth to make preparations to bring the slaves back. The first TV movie was a big enough ratings success for FOX to commission an ongoing series of TV movies. which are being broadcast at irregular intervals.

Executive producer for the series was Kenneth Johnson, producers for the series were Arthur Seidel, Tom Chehak and Diane Frolov. The music was created by Joe Harnell (Pilot), Steve Dorff, David Kurtz and Larry Herbstritt. The series got its UK premiere on Sky One in the Autumn of 1990, and the series finally made it to the terrestrial TV on ITV in January 1995. The supervising producer was Andrew Schneider and the co-producer was Diane Frolov.

Cops and Coneheads. That's what writer-producer-director Kenneth Johnson thought Alien Nation was all about when he saw the 1988 feature film starring James Caan and Mandy Patinkin.

"When Fox first came to me and asked if I could turn Alien Nation into a series, I didn't want to do science fiction and was anxious to do something else," recalls Johnson. "I agreed to look at the film, which I enjoyed half of. I thought it was a lovely premise they had created, the worlds newest minority. I found halfway through the movie it turned into Miami Vice with coneheads. It was a cop show I had seen a thousand times. The most interesting part of the piece was the little moment when the family waved to Mandy Patinkin, I said, "Wait a minute! Those People! They're the ones I want to know, I don't need another cop show!" When I took over the chore for Fox, it was the absolute understanding I was to do a social drama. Not another cop show, nor a science fiction show. What I wanted was a story to examine what it's like to be a minority."

To pull the show off with a sense of style Johnson reassembled a few key colleagues from INCREDIBLE HULK days. He brought onboard the husband-wife team of Andrew Schneider and Diana Frolov; cinematographer promoted to director John McPherson; and veteran director Chuck Bowman.

Although the show lasted for only one season, in those 22 episodes, Alien Nation was a broad exploration in the sociology of how human society would feel about and interact with new-found alien neighbors in their everyday lives. Episodes dealt with human-alien relationships via a collection of characters. Forefront was the often stormy relationship between human cop Matt Sikes and his alien partner George Francisco, as he walked the beat in slagtown Los Angeles. Secondary explorations dealt with Sikes' growing interest in his apartment neighbor, Newcomer Cathy. There was also the running story of the Newcomer kids trying to fit into human society. Daring for television was direct exposition of discrimination and racial issues, plus stories about the unusual sexual practices of the Newcomers.

In preparing Graham and Pierpoint for their roles, all Johnson had to do was plant a seed in their minds. "I said to [them], "Eric is the first black police officer in Jackson, Mississippi, in 1962." And, bingo, you immediately get the picture. That's what it's all about. What Alien Nation was about was discrimination. Prejudice. Intolerance. Within that framework, Andy and Diane and I would sit down and say, "Well, what's this week show going to be about? Let's take greed for example. How does greed manifest itself in the alien culture versus the human culture?" Then we'd get into all of that."

From those discussions, other ideas took shape, and the most unusual of those was Johnson's suggestion that for Newcomers, it was the male of the species that gave birth. "Also, I came up with the notion that it took more than two to have sex!" laughs Johnson. "It gave us an opportunity to, again, examine stereotypes and intolerance towards religious beliefs. In a subsequent episode when I suggested that George gave birth [for the episode "Real Men"], Andy and Diane immediately hit on the opportunity that I suggested to create a show about male stereotypes. When I said, 'George has to have a baby, let's do a show about what makes a man.' Setting that show about a pregnant man in a police milieu, where they were investigating a crime that took place in a bod building arena where all these guys all pumped up, gave us an opportunity to explore masculinity. As George said, most people of his species don't feel like they've really fulfilled themselves as a man until they've given birth!"

The sexual mores and practices of the Newcomers were explored early on in the show in an episode titled "Fifteen with Wanda." It was directed by STAR TREK: THE NEXT GENERATION veteran, Rob Bowman, who remembers that, "Fifteen with Wanda" was a funny show because it was basically about the sexual desires of these aliens. Once you get the husband and wife who are about to mate, and they take this certain pill that heightens their sexual desires, it makes them almost sexually crazy! As soon as the guy takes the drug, he gets kidnapped. He witnesses a murder and needs police protection. And he's got this drug that's making him sexually in demand! His wife is home and is dying to be with him. And all he wants is fifteen minutes with his wife, "Just give me 15 with Wanda and I'll be fine." There was some action and suspense in it, but basically, it was about the heightened sexual activities of the aliens and it was very funny.

Bowman's memory of his one directing stint on the show was that he had to film it fast. "The show wasn't quite [fine tuned] yet. I think I could have helped in several areas to bring those characters to the screen. It was an extremely difficult show to shoot because of the schedule. My memory of that was we shot as fast as we could move the camera to the next location. I didn't have a lot of rehearsal, it didn't have a lot of polish, but we did our best. It's not one of my favourite all-time shows. I just barely had time to get it together."

So effectively did Johnson and his team spin their Newcomer tales in his show that various ethnic groups in Los Angeles bestowed upon their commendations and awards. "The New York Board of Jewish Education, an organization in New York City that services 400 schools in the New York area, asked us to send them every episode of Alien Nation so they could use it in their schools as a teaching tool about discrimination," says Johnson. "The hispanic community here in Los Angeles, a multicultural organization including Hispanics and Asian-Americans and black Americans, gave us several awards, and we were acknowledged by several multicultural groups as being a very moving force in the community for making people step back and taking a good look at how they view minorities. When you can do this through a science fiction framework, through allegory, you can do it without offending anybody! That's the beauty of it."

As an example of this, Johnson cites a scene written for the pilot of the show. "The people of all races and colours are trying to keep the [Newcomer] kid out of their school, because that kind doesn't belong there. The whole idea of purists reflects a lot of the American fundamentalists, the right wing minorities, that don't want to admit that anyone else might be as good as they are. They're trying to keep all the doors closed."

Of his case, Johnson points out to Eric Pierpoint as "a consummate actor and someone I had worked with on a short-lived series previously called Hot Pursuit for NBC. I realized what a good guy Eric was, and when Alien Nation came along, I went to Fox and said, "This is the guy I want for George". I knew that not only did Eric have a wonderful range, but that he would have the patience required for getting in and out of that makeup everyday. It was a two-hour job getting in and 25 minute getting out."

Director Chuck Bowman, who worked on the episode called, "The Red Room," also has some good words for the cast of the show. "They are consummate, conscientious actors in that they are there, well-prepared, hardworking and flexible. Eric's father is Robert Pierpoint, an NBC news correspondent for 37 years, so Eric is quite a well travelled young man and brings a lot of experience to his role, and you can see that in his portrayal," says Bowman. "Terri Treas is an absolutely wonderful actress. She was also a consummate, well-prepared actress with a good attitude and work ethic."

Bowman knows Kenneth Johnson very well, having worked with him previously in THE INCREDIBLE HULK and V. "Kenny Johnson has a wonderful way of getting a community of actors in these projects to really bond together," notes Bowman. "He's a good leader. First, he's a fabulous director and a wonderful writer. His strongest attribute is in his directing. He's very creative. He pushes the envelope in that he's bold and risky in his direction."

His actors get into that. They know that with Kenny they're going to get the best product they can possibly get for the time and money that they have. Kenny's a good team leader, he has a good attitude, he doesn't bark at people, he's intelligent. He respects his actors as human beings. When he reads actors for his directing episodes, he reads with them in casting. Generally, a casting director-someone who works in casting-will read and the producers and directors will watch. But Kenny wants to make sure that they have everything going for them. He reads the other parts of the scene, and he's wonderful. I'm a huge fan of the quality of human being and creator that Kenny is."

Bowman recalls the days of the show as being "really an experience for everyone to pull together with a deep desire to do a good job. Everyone contributed like that." Johnson says that the makeup design which won an Emmy award for the artists Michelle Burke and Rick Stratton, posed problems for the actors. Not only did it become very hot after several hours of shooting; it also made it very difficult for the actors to hear. "To get a sense what it was like, if you put your hands over your ears and you talk, and listen to people talking around you, that's what it sounds like," says Johnson. For one episode, his daughter, Katie, appeared as an orphaned child at a funeral and got a taste first-hand of the makeup experience. Piercing earholes into the makeup helped alleviate the problems somewhat. One other problem with makeup became evident in shooting scenes that called for crowds of Newcomers: "When you need extras, you call casting, but when you need a bunch of alien extras, we had days when we had 20 makeup people working as opposed to the usual two."

To this day, Johnson receives mail regarding the show. "We got a huge amount of mail. And virtually all of it was positive. It was astonishing the amount we got. We still get mail! There are Alien Nation societies all over the world. I just got a newsletter from England yesterday." This newsletter, The Tencton Planet, produced by the Alien Nation Appreciation Society, is a fan effort by a man named Pete Chambers. To demonstrate the enthusiasm fans have for this show, Chambers has somehow managed, via the International Star Registry, to give a star the name of Tencton.

The show was cancelled because of poor ratings in a Monday night time slot opposite the CBS smash sit-com Murphy Brown. Johnson remembers the fateful phone call announcing that the ax had fallen on the show. "When Peter Chernin [then president of Fox Entertainment, now head of 20th Century Fox] called me to say they were not picking up the show for another season, I said, 'Peter, this is a huge mistake you're making!' [It was] foolish of Fox to cancel the show when it had another four or five years, easily, to it. Now, fade out and fade in a year later, Peter stands up in front of the television critics association and says, 'Last year, we made a huge mistake! We canceled Alien Nation!" He apologized for canceling the show," laughs Johnson. "Again, it was an example of the network community not understanding what a show was about or not giving it time to grow and to find its audience. It's very frustrating when that happens."

Post-cancellation, several efforts were made to continue the show. Syndication was one possibility, but the roadblock for a continued effort was the show's expensive budget, composed largely by makeup for aliens. "We could not get the costs of the show down far enough to do it as a viable syndication show. We couldn't get the kind of budget that Star Trek: The Next Generation was doing," informs Johnson. "They were saying, 'Well, if you can do it for $600,000...' Well, the show cost a million and two. There was no way to do any kind of quality. We would have a show called Alien Nation, but it wouldn't have the quality. We tried getting Fox to do a couple of TV movies. Andy and Diane wrote a couple of wonderful scripts which carried the relationship of Cathy and Sikes to a full-blown sexual relationship, which was very funny and topical with all this talk of safe sex in this world today. Fox, in their infinite wisdom just decided not to."

Fox Television's rationale in cancelling the show was that since Alien Nation had a 10 share rating, something else in the time slot would garner a 15 rating. But when something new did air, ratings took a further dive, destroying Fox's hopes. Everyone connected with the show had been confident of its renewal, largely because Fox had commissioned six scripts for a second season. A cliffhanger episode, "Green Eyes," was created and aired to entice viewers to tune in again next season. But the show's resolution never came to be. "We thought we were going on!" exclaims Johnson. "Andy and Diane already wrote the follow-up, and we got a very clear idea where the show was going, and we wanted to leave the audience wondering what was going to happen and wanting more so they would tune in again next season."

Johnson recalls that while Alien Nation was often a nightmare to create, "The good side is I made a lot of friends. I'm very close to virtually everybody we worked with in the show. We didn't shoot on the Fox lot. We shot on old warehouses on East L.A. You needed visas to get into the neighborhood. We were all there working together. It was the best kind of family operation by all of us. The loss of Alien Nation is always going to be painful for all of us. It was one of those rare situations where everything came together, the theme of the show, good people working together on a good product. I've come to realize the journey is sometimes more important than the destination," explains Johnson. "In Alien Nation the journey could not have been more positive. When I was casting Alien Nation and I had the sense that it could go on for a while, I was careful in the selection of the cast, writers, and the crew."

I've always told my crew there's two things I'm always concerned about. The first is, 'Let's do the highest quality show we can possibly do and I will not take second best,' and they all loved that. And the second thing is, 'We gotta have fun.' Life's too short to not have fun. That's how I operate. I have a very happy crew and a very happy set. It starts at the top. I always feel the executive producer sets the tone, and the stars pick it up and pass it along, and the crew picks it up, and everybody feels good. It was wonderful for people to come on our show and do just a one-day part or something and say, 'My god! I've never been on a set like this! Everybody's happy!' It was a real loss."

But Johnson's perseverance has paid off. Alien Nation returned to television in October, 1994 as a Fox TV movie titled Dark Horizon. The entire cast reassembled after a four-year hiatus to resolve the cliffhanger story that began in "Green Eyes," the final series episode. "After Dark Horizon aired, it got the highest ratings Fox had in that time period in two and a half years," says Kenneth Johnson in a follow up interview. "Ratings are always inspiring to them, so they bought two more movies."

The broadcast of this two-hour Halloween special was so successful, both creatively and in the ratings, that Fox TV commissioned three additional scripts for a series of made-for-TV movies. The second story to be filmed was Body and Soul. In this story, George and Matt make a startling discovery about the slave ship that brought the Newcomers to Earth, and of the vicious Overseers who ran the ship. "Body and Soul is from an original script by Andrew Schneider and Diane Frolov, and was rewritten by Rence and Harry Longstreet," informs Johnson. "It turns out that the love relationship between Matt Sikes and Cathy, his alien girlfriend across the hall, has progressed to the point where they have to take sex classes together. It deals with interspecies sex."

The third script Millennium (formerly titled Dangerous Portals), was a sequel to the episode "Generation to Generation," set in the last week of the millennium. During December, 1999, people think it's the end of the world and a cult leader misuses the sacred box introduced in "Generation." The box is a virtual reality device Overseers use for religious purposes. "The network is very excited about the films. Millennium particularly, has quite a staggering look to it," says Johnson. "We have more special effects in Millennium than there are in Forrest Gump. Our editing team is the same team that worked on that film and when they added it up, realized there were more shots of special visual effects than there were in that feature."

Pleased with the successful return of Alien Nation, the Fox network commissioned three additional television movies. In the spring of 1996, two of them, The Udara Legacy (previously titled Time Bombs) and The Enemy Within, were filmed back to back. A sixth script, titled City of Angels, was also planned. Responding to a query whether the series would ever have an opportunity to return to a weekly schedule, Johnson revealed that the studio is interested in that but the Fox network is more reticent. Both the studio and the network is 20th Century-Fox. This is a case where separate divisions of the same corporate entity have differing ideas of how to treat their child. It's the left hand fighting with the right.

"I love the concept and I love the characters that we've created here, and I'd love to see them carry on regardless of whether it's [long form or as a series]," says Johnson. "I think, frankly, there should be one hour episodes playing, they allow for more personal stories. The studios and the network always want the TV movies a little bigger with a more 'save the world' quality to them. That works against us sometimes when we're trying to do more personal stories. "From the standpoint of the series and the characters, I would prefer to go back to one-hour but if two hours is the only life for them, that's what we'll do." Alien Nation is a rare example, Star Trek notwithstanding, of a television show that refused to die. It is a tribute to the continued and unflagging interest by the entire cast and of key production personnel that the show returns to the airwaves after an extended break to pick up where they left off.

CAST NOTES

Gary Graham (Det. Matt Sikes): "Sikes is a cop because, number one, he loves it, and number two, he just can't see himself doing anything else." says Graham. "He's a rule breaker but he gets the job done. Instinctual, compulsive, the type of guy I'd want to go in battle with."

To prepare for the role, Graham spent time with the Los Angeles policemen. "I must have been doing something right, they took me in as one of their own," he says.

Graham's motion picture debut was in Paul Schrader's Hardcore (1979) and followed by Hollywood Knights (1980), All the Right Moves (1983), and Stuart Gordon's SF film Robojox (1990). Since the show, Graham has appeared in the short-lived 1994 series M.A.N.T.I.S. and Star Trek: Voyager (1995).

Eric Pierpoint (George Francisco): "George carries himself with an inner confidence while adapting to his new surroundings. Even though he approaches his new lifestyle with curiosity, George is comfortable with whom he is and can tolerate virtually all obstacles directed toward him. It's his self-confidence that's the key to George's strength," says Eric.

Pierpoint's credits include In the Heat of the Night (1967), the TV series Beauty and the Beast, and Hill Street Blues and a starring role in Hot Pursuit, a 1979 TV movie directed by Kenneth Johnson. He also appeared in Windy City (1984) and the remake of Invaders from Mars (1986). Since the series, Pierpoint has appeared in Time Trax and Star Trek: The Next Generation.

Michele Scarabelli (Susan Francisco): "My hope was to develop and explore basic assumptions we have about gender roles by seeing Earthlings through the eyes of someone completely different," says Scarabelli. Scarabelli hails from Montreal, Canada, and has starred in The Hotel New Hampshire (1984) and Cover Girl (1984). On television, she has appeared in Night Heat, Air Wolf II on USA Network, and Dallas. Since the series, Scarabelli went to South Africa to work on a television series there and guested on Star Trek: The Next Generation.

Lawrence Hilton-Jacobs (Sgt. Dobbs): Born in 1953, Jacobs began his career at the age of 14. His acting assignments have been many and varied. Best known as student "Boom Boom Washington" in the 1970s hit Welcome Back Kotter, Jacobs has also guested in Simon and Simon, Hill Street Blues, Fame, and the mini-series Roots. Jacobs is a skilled commercial cartoonist and keyboardist, and likes sports ranging from basketball to ice skating.

Terri Treas (Cathy Frankel): "She's had very few romantic experiences. When she encounters Matt Sikes across the hall of her apartment building, she has no perception of what it really means to have a relationship. She is someone who is very bright, yet so naive," says Treas of her character, Cathy. Born in 1959, this Kansas-born actress got her big break on TV's Seven Brides for Seven Brothers (1982-1983). Feature credits include The Nest (1988), and The Fabulous Baker Boys (1989), and television appearances include Murphy Brown, Matiocok and The A-Team. When Alien Nation folded, Treas concentrated on film acting and in holding women's defence workshops.

,Lauren Woodland (Emily Francisco): "I think Emily wants the best of both worlds. She wants to be accepted by her classmates, but she also wants to preserve her alien heritage," says Woodland. Her acting appearances include the CBS Special presentation of An Enemy Among Us, as well as Our House, L.A. Law, St. Elsewhere, Superior Court and The Judge. Woodland is also a veteran of 40 national commercials.

Sean Six (Buck Francisco): "Buck Francisco is a teenager who is trying to connect with something, but the truth he connects with isn't the right one," says Sean Six. "The whole teenage thing is about finding out about who you are. Buck is doing just that, trying to relate with something, his parents, friends, anything. He can't connect with his father since he considers his father to be a sell out. He takes a liking to a gang because he needs to identify with a figure of strength."

A native of New York, Sixes first professional job was Fiddler on the Roof in San Francisco. "I want to do everything and try everything.... How many actors get to say they portrayed an alien? Not too many." When Alien Nation closed its doors, Six returned to his hometown in Portland, Oregon, and joined the forestry service. To film Dark Horizon, Six had to take a leave of absence, but with the advent of a continuing film series, Six relocated to Los Angeles.

ALIENATED

Alienated is about a family who gets abducted by Aliens and then crazy things start happening to them.

While eating their weekly meatloaf lunch, the Blundell family is scanned by alien light beams.

In Victoria, BC, a family that finds the struggles of day-to-day life challenging enough just woke up to a bigger problem. Extra-terrestrials are abducting them, altering them, and then returning them home. The Blundells thought life was challenging before...this just might put them over the edge. They are powerless to stop them. They're too embarrassed to tell their friends or co-workers. The authorities don't believe them. Alienated is filmed in Victoria, B.C., Canada

A few people I was talking to have actually appeared as a guest on this show and they seem to have had a lot of fun on it. Also notice this is one of the very few TV shows that are actually filmed on Vancouver Island.. I think. I'd say it's worth the time to watch this show.

Alienated is a dark comedy about the Blundells, a suburban family trying to cope with the bizarre sideeffects of alien abduction. Glowing sperm, ferocious sex drives, and irresistible pheromones are just the beginning. Living with the changes isn't easy, especially because no one believes their story. Neighbours think they're crazy, the police are filing a report, and Child Services is threatening to break up the family. It's enough to make anyone feel, well... Alienated

ALIENS IN THE FAMILY

Aliens in the Family was a very short-lived domestic sitcom about a human who marries an alien with the resulting family attempting to live happily ever after on Earth. Doug Brody was a happy single father until he was abducted by an alien spaceship. on the spaceship he meet and fell in love with Cookie. a divorced alien woman who children of her own. The pair decided to get married and live on Earth, where Doug's two children and Cookie's three tended to not always get along.

Doug's two children were: Adam his 9-year-old-son and Heather his 14-year-old-daughter. Cookie's three kids were Spit her 14-year-old-son. Snizzy her 10-year-old-daughter and Bobut an often-times obnoxious infant. Rounding out the Brody household was Sally, the nanny hired by the Brody's to watch after Bobut. A job she found herself compelled to keep due to mind control on Bobut's part.

The show did poorly in the rating and was taken off the air after only two episodes were broadcast, even though there were eight episodes made, (the last six were broadcast in the summer of 1996 on Saturday mornings). Episodes were usually mundane, but some of the more interesting ones were, ' You Don't Have A Pet To Be Popular' in which Spit gets a new alien pet who develops a crush on Heather and ' Respect Your Elders' in which an elder from Cookie's home planet wants to take Bobut back to the home planet where he can be raised properly.

"Aliens In The Family" started airing at the same time as THIRD ROCK FROM THE SUN (1996 -), which became an instant success. "Aliens In The Family" had a very similar shoreline, but it's interesting to note that it failed very quickly. Cookie's three children in the show were brought to life by the use of animatronics and puppetry which was bound to happen when the series was produced by Jim Henson Productions.

Cookie was portrayed by actress Margaret Trigg. in heavy makeup, who did not look all that weird and could at least pass for human. Her three children however were brought to life by a combination of animatronics and puppetry. The series was produced by Jim Henson Productions. with the aliens being portrayed in a similar fashion to the dinosaurs in their previous series Dinosaurs. Oddly enough none of the other characters on the series seemed to notice that the aliens were different than everyone else.

The series was broadcast on ABC on Friday's at 9pm.

ALIENS IN THE FAMILY (1987)

Adapted from the novel by Margaret Mahy, it was a mixture of science fiction and domestic drama for although Bond, the student from the planet Galgonqua, is the obvious alien, there is another alien of sorts inside the family - 12-year-old Jacqueline (Jake). She is feeling like an outsider in her new family unit, now that her father, David, is remarried to Pip, who already has a 12-year-old daughter Dora and a younger son, Lewis.

Jake and Dora are not getting on at all well when they first meet Bond, but agree to help him. Bond's mission involves reaching a particular stone circle before his pursuing enemies, the awesome Wirdegens, catch him. The dangerous chase takes the group across country until they finally reach the circle where the Wirdegens show up and congratulate Bond on passing what he suddenly remembers was a test all along.

Six-part children's serial about a young alien who comes to Earth on a mission and gets involved with an ordinary British family. This was another example of the BBC producing a series based on a children novel entitled "Aliens in the Family" by Margaret Mahy. This series is not to be confused by another series of the same name which was an American sitcom. Special effects in the series were devised by the award-winning team from the 1986 fantasy, The Box of Delights. Music was by Roger Limb from the BBC Radiophonic workshop. The designer for the series was Paul Montague, executive producer was Paul Stone, director for the series was Christine Secombe, video effects were by Robin Lobb. The airdates given here are for the BBC1 showings.

"I've seen that face/read that name before"

Clare Wilkie appeared in the BBC's brief-lived soap opera, the infamous Eldorado

Rob Edwards appeared as the brief-lived Chub in the 1977 Doctor Who serial, the rather less infamous (in fact, something of a classic) The Robots of Death.

Whilst Clare Clifford lasted a bit longer as Kyle in the even-more-classic Earthshock, a 1982 Doctor Who offering. Although as just about everybody met a grisly demise in that one (including then-companion Adric) I think it's reasonable to assume that she did too).

Jon Glover is (according to the Doctor Who magazine In-Vision) "an accomplished radio actor who has formed a stalwart of radio comedy shows and dramas for almost twenty years, specialising in roles requiring upper-class period accents." He's probably best-known as Mr. Chomondley-Warner in Harry Enfield's Television Programme, but also appeared as the Management Consultant in episode six of The Hitch-Hiker's Guide to the Galaxy, and didn't appear (it being radio) as Shellingbourne Grant in Slipback, the Doctor Who mini-radio-adventure first heard during that programme's cancellation period in 1985.

You're going to get tired of this, but both Tony Harding and Roger Limb have worked on Doctor Who, the former being best-known for having designed K-9 (who is either much loved or reviled, depending on well, who you talk to, really), and the latter composing music to accompany no less than eight of the Doctor's adventures between 1981 and 1985. He also composed the incidental music for The Box of Delights in 1984.

Paul Stone has produced or executive produced more classic children's dramas for the BBC than you can comfortably shake a stick at, but is perhaps best remembered for 1984's The Box of Delights and for the Chronicles of Narnia adaptations, which began in 1988 with The Lion, the Witch and the Wardrobe, continuing in 1989 with Prince Caspian and The Voyage of the Dawn Treader, and concluded in 1990 with The Silver Chair. (Oh, and [yawn] he was at one point rumoured to be up for the job of producing Doctor Who.)

AMAZING EXTRAORDINARY FRIENDS

Amazing Extraordinary Friends is the story of an ordinary boy who discovers the power to be extraordinary. Set in contemporary New Zealand, it's inhabited by larger-than-life villains and superheroes ... and the occasional 50 foot mutant lizard. The central character is 15-year-old Ben Wilson, an average Kiwi kid whose life changes dramatically when he discovers a mysterious insignia that endows him with amazing powers as Captain X. With the help of a retired super hero sidekick known as The Green Termite, and best friend Roy Bottle (alias NightLite), Ben sets out to unite the world's few remaining super heroes under one common banner: The Amazing Extraordinary Friends.

The Amazing Extraordinary Friends is a New Zealand children's program featuring the adventures of a modern day superhero teenage boy and his friends. It was made from 2006.

The protagonist is a teenage boy called Ben Wilson who finds out about a superhero ensignia which gives him powers. He has difficulty with them, especially flight and using eye lasers at first, but soon learns to control them fairly well. His grandfather is also a superhero, and this is how he comes to acquire the ensignia. His mother hates all the superhero business going on for the sake of safety, but his father and father in law both encourage him, his father being the previous superhero in Ben's position, Captain Xtraordinary or simply Captain X, and his father in law being the son of a supervillain, The Comedian. The position, it is found out in the show, has been held by many heroes in the past.

The villains in the series are Nemesis, a group led by an old villain and a recently converted hero, Ice, who used to be Blaze in her former era working alongside the former Captain X. The Nemesis group operate in a skyscraper office block known as Nemesis Headquarters and use computers, suggesting they have updated since the old times. A loose idea of a "new age of superheroes" is suggested throughout the series. They use stormtroopers with skull like masks and breathing apparatus. The Nemesis group have many villains under their wing and it is run by Renfield, the main villain in the series who Ice assists in his constant plan to get the ensignia.

Ben Wilson and his friends attend City Central College, run by Principal Locum. At school Ben and his friends are bullied. Often the plot will involve the school or an event at it.

The plot generally involves the ensignia, the main target for possession by Nemesis. It is discovered in the series that the power giving ensignia, which merges with a persons chest and in the case of Captain Xtraordinary creates a costume as well, is made of Unobtainium, a highly unstable element created by an exiled university scientist. Unobtainium can also, it is discovered, power a ready made suit. The ensignia was created using the Unobtainium, which only existed naturally during a short period after the creation of the universe. Aliens claim to have made it and these resemble humans, even using English as their language of choice.

The show uses several minor devices from the classic superhero/supervillain genre, including tags like Nemesis Headquarters or Ben Wilson's House in the same manner as in changing a location in a comic book. Also background music and sound accompaniment is often done in the style of animated superhero series.

The series is set in a fictional city called City Central, filmed in Auckland.

It was shown on the ABC Rollercoaster on ABC television in Australia on Tuesdays

AMAZING SPIDERMAN,THE

Spider-Man was in reality college student Peter Parker. Peter was bitten by a radioactive spider, and instead of dying he gained super strength, a 'spider sense' (that warned him of danger) and the ability to walk on walls. He also invented a web shooter that allowed him to swing from building to building and tie up the bad guys once he had rounded them up. Parker donned a tight fitting costume and proceeded to fight crime.

His actions were misunderstood, especially by J. Jonah Jameson, the editor of the paper where Parker was a freelance photographer. This resulted in negative publicity for Spider-Man causing him to be feared by the population at large including Parker's elderly Aunt May. Rita was Jameson's secretary who was Parker's champion with her boss. Julie Masters entered the picture during the second season as another freelance photographer in competition with Parker.

Based on Stan Lee's creation at Marvel Comics, this show revolved around Peter Parker, nerdy and alienated science major in college who made a few bucks as part-time news photographer for the Daily Bugle. When bitten by a radioactive spider, he developed super-powers, including a sense of danger and great strength and the ability to climb walls and ceilings. He invented super-gadgets, such as his web-shooter in wrist-bands, and a costume, to fight evil. But his life as a teenager became even more uncomfortable and confusing. The adolescent angst added a note of emotional realism to an otherwise formulaic story, and made this show a cult-classic among disaffected science majors.

Some of the better episodes were 'Night of the Clones' in which a scientist uses a cloning process to develop and duplicate a himself, who is vengeful and dangerous, determined to kill an award committee who have ignored him for years; 'Wolf Pack' is about a friend of Peter Parker who creates a mind control drug, and a ruthless businessman who wants it to extort money from the company he works for. The show was a routine crime format, which never became a success. Throughout the show's second season, "TAS" was used as a filler and never had a regular time slot which soon resulted in its cancellation. Several of the episodes have been put together and released as films in Europe.

In the early sixties, Stan Lee of Marvel Comics revolutionised the comics industry by introducing a new breed of super hero. Instead of the perfect hero who lead a charming life, Lee's heroes had personal problems and often faced moral dilemmas over right and wrong. Among his creations were: The Fantastic Four, The X-Men, The Hulk, Dr. Strange and his most popular Spider-Man. These characters, along with others, helped make Marvel Comics the largest comic book company in the world.

In the comic book, Spider-Man usually went up against all sorts of antagonists, ranging from super powered villains, to aliens, to the powerful leader of the local crime syndicate. The TV Spider-Man lead a somewhat simpler life often going up against normal villains with a few mad scientist types thrown in for good measure.

A trial run in the spring of 1978 had good ratings and CBS ordered more episodes of the show. However when it returned in the Fall, The Amazing Spider-Man was not given a regular time slot and instead was used by CBS sporadically as a filler programme whenever a hole appeared in the schedule. This did not help the ratings since the audience never knew when it would again appear. The pilot movie and the two part episodes have been released as feature films on video tape.

In addition to this live action version Spider-Man also appeared in four animated series. A late sixties syndicated version best remembered for its catchy theme song, Spider-Man and His Amazing Friends- where Spider-Man teamed up with Ice Man and Firestarter ran on NBC in the early '80's while in the late '80's new animated adventures were made, again for syndication. In the mid 1990's Spider-Man, appeared in the FOX series Spider-Man, which set out to faithfully adapt the comic series.

Marvel's comic strip came to life in this American series starring Nicholas Hammond as the superhuman, skyscraper scaling, web hurling hero. He would solve fight against the forces of evil, and that was about it. Week after week, Spiderman foiled the designs of various crooks, kidnappers and terrorists, but the series never really took off, only occasionally venturing beyond the routine crime format.

Executive producers for the series were Charles Fries and Daniel R. Goodman, producers for the series were Robert Janes, Ron Satlof and Lionel E. Siegel. Episodes which were two parts or TVMs, have been syndicated as TV Movies with the new titles. In addition the following compilations have been made, with the titles taken from the episodes which comprise them. Photo Finish and A Matter of State, Night of the Clones and Escort to Danger, The Con Caper and The Curse of Rava, Wolfpack and Kirkwood Haunting.

For UK viewers and programme planners in the 1970s there was good news and bad news. The good news was that a number of light adventures series were hugely popular on Friday evenings around the 7.00/7.30 mark. The bad news was that most of the series (THE INVISIBLE MAN, FANTASTIC JOURNEY, THE RETURN OF CAPTAIN NEMO and THE AMAZING SPIDERMAN) were not nearly so fortunate in their home country and were rapidly cancelled - one exception was THE INCREDIBLE HULK.

Nicholas Hammond's father was high up in the American military, and his mother was British. He actually lived in Britain for the first ten years of his life, before moving to the USA. He started acting as a child and was in the original version of Lord of the Flies and was one of the Von Trapp children in The Sound of Music. His big come back was Spiderman. He moved to Australia after that and has appeared in several mini-series, while keeping his association with American TV where he's more recently been seen in Murder She Wrote and Fields of Fire.

During the filming of the Spiderman twopart episode "The Deadly Dust," stuntman Fred Waugh, as our intrepid superhero, almost went splat against a concrete skyscraper. For a brief instant in mid-air, hanging by a wire under a flying helicopter, Waugh almost hit the side of a building because the helicopter pilot did not know he was still attached. The production crew and director on the rooftop stood by and watched in horror. The plot of this episode involves villains who plant an atomic bomb on the roof of a building and try to escape by helicopter. Spiderman spins a web to catch a ride. Flying over Los Angeles with Spiderman hanging under them, the villains engage in aerial acrobatics to shake him off, depositing him onto the very building they are trying to escape.

To film the scene where Spiderman drops down from his hanging web to the rooftop, stuntman Waugh grabbed the wire hanging from the helicopter landing strut and lifted off with the chopper. The helicopter moved some 30 or 40 feet away from the building, then flew back toward the cameras. However, Waugh found his positioning was erratic and not good for the planned jump, so he just hung on. The pilot continued further out and then came back for a landing. Not knowing that he and Waugh were still connected, he flew low. Waugh could have ended up as a squashed bug unless that pilot moved up in a hurry. "We were able to communicate to this pilot just in time!" recalls director Ronald Satlof vividly. "My god! I must say, he pulled up just in time to save his life. We're talking about a matter of within two or three feet [before hitting the building], I think. So, it was a very exciting little day we had when we shot that. It gave us all heart attacks."

Reminded of this pulse-pounding day, stunt coordinator and on-camera Spiderman Fred Waugh, who operates a camera company today, recalls the events slightly differently. While he readily acknowledges this was "the stunt that I almost got killed on," he says the danger was not almost hitting the skyscraper, but hanging over the city by only one arm. The bad part was I was only hanging on with one hand on the cable because I had injured the other hand about a week before-I caught a stick through my hand so I really couldn't hold on to it with my left hand at all. I was just hanging onto the cable with my right hand. At the bottom of the cable was a little loop. Previously, I had hooked my harness into it as we were flying around the city. So, all I was hanging onto was a very, very small loop with my one hand." As Waugh recalls it, the stunt was successfully completed in the first take. "The helicopter lifted me up about six or seven feet off the ground, and we flew towards the camera. Just before I got to the camera, I let go, and I just rolled into the camera. We did that one time, and everything was fine." However, Satlof asked for another take.

"This time, when the helicopter lifted me up, he lifted me about 20 feet off the deck," explains Waugh. "The pilot's assistant down on the ground was signaling him to come back down. But as he was bringing him down, he wasn't watching me, and I was beginning to twist with my back towards the camera; when we got low enough he told the pilot to come ahead, and when the pilot started flying forward, my back was to the camera, so I couldn't let go because it would flip me right over my head." And this was the dangerous part: "He thought I was off, but I wasn't, and we were out over the city. It was my mistake, and there I was hanging over the city with one hand and the pilot didn't realize it. And you know, he could have turned the helicopter very sharply and ripped me right off." Waugh believes he hung by one hand with no roof under him for about a minute, with only about 15 or 20 seconds reserve time, before he returned to safety. "They radioed and told him I was still underneath, and got me back," Waugh says matter-of-factly. "I'm still here."

Spiderman first spun his web on television in 1977 with a TV movie exploring how Peter Parker got bitten by the radioactive spider at his physics laboratory. Starring Nicholas Hammond as Peter Parker and David White as J. Jonah Jameson, the film garnered enough viewer interest that CBS commissioned five episodes as a programming filler. When those did well, eight additional hours were requested and aired in the fall of 1978, bringing Spiderman to a total of 13 episodes.

Nicholas Hammond remembers that when Spiderman was starting up, the feature film Superman with Christopher Reeve had just come out. Many people were worried about doing a superhero show. They were afraid that it would be a campy, laughable affair in the same vein as the 1960s Batman TV show.

"I liked the idea of taking a fantasy hero and making him believable as a person. I made it clear going into it that I was not interested in doing something that was just a camp joke," says Hammond. "I was given an opportunity here to do some good work and tell some good, interesting stories." Hammond feels that the show lost an ally in failing to consult with Spiderman's creator, Stan Lee, during production.

"I thought Stan Lee was an enormously talented man. I was always tremendously impressed by Stan. I always wished we could have worked more closely with him. We could have tapped into a larger market if we'd used more of Stan's ideas." Instead, says Hammond, "My early feeling was that, maybe [network and producers] thought, 'Stan's background is comic books and we want to get away from that here—a comic book feel. What we want to do here is make it more an adventure-drama series.' I feel that his input would have been very, very useful."

Stan Lee, too, regrets the lack of a working relationship. "After I read the scripts, I called a meeting at CBS," he says. "The director was there, the producer was there, and the network executives were there. I spent 20 minutes telling them what was wrong with the show, they listened politely and then they left and paid no attention to what I had told them!" Producer Daniel Goodman says, "I was at all the meetings with Stan. Somehow the writers could not agree on many of his suggestions. His input was good, but unfortunately, there was evident frustration on his part and a sympathetic reaction on mine. You can't satisfy all parties all the time. Perhaps we could have had a longer run on CBS if we had heeded his suggestions, but one never knows.

"You see, my concept was to make Spiderman more acceptable to a general audience than just to kiddies, and perhaps there was a clash of ideologies. We had to compromise as CBS was sold on my original sales presentation of a primetime, general audience show. Stan will always have my deepest respect and admiration." Lee believes that the network's concept of Spiderman affected Nicholas Hammond's portrayal. "He's a good actor," Lee says sincerely. "He was directed badly. He came across as a very uninteresting character, and I don't think it was his fault. I think it was the way the director and the producer conceived of the show and the character. He came across as very square, very humorless, and, I thought, very dull. But it wasn't his fault."

Hammond felt strongly about doing his best because after several episodes had aired, he started getting interesting, provocative mail from minority communities across America. "The show was terribly popular with ghetto kids. But I'd also get a lot of letters from their mothers and fathers who'd say, 'You are the only positive role model in my child's life! When he's out in the streets, all he sees are drug pushers, pimps, prostitutes. And the only message he gets from the streets is the only way you make it is outside the law. And Peter Parker each week is telling him that there's a better way.' Peter is given this power, and he has to make a moral choice, do the difficult thing, not to use his powers to rob banks but to use his power to try to help people. I always thought, 'Gee, there's a tremendous potential here.'

"I used to speak quite often to inner city schools. The first time was during National Book Week or something when I was asked to give a speech and stress the importance of reading and books. I guess this was 1979. The school was in east L.A., mainly black and Mexican kids. I was warned they were very unruly and poorly disciplined, but the staff was shocked to see them all sit spellbound when Peter Parker got up to talk. Afterwards, teachers wrote me to say it had a more profound effect on them than anything that year. So I realized the potential for using Peter Parker's 'prestige' among these kids as a positive force. "As you probably know, series stars are asked to do endless public appearances for all sorts of charities and social groups, and it is impossible to do them all. But from then on, I never turned down the opportunity to speak to inner city kids. Even if they weren't interested in reading conventional books, it was good to keep them reading Spiderman. By the way, during the Gulf War, it was reported that because of the low reading skills of so many GI's a lot of training manuals were being printed in comic book form. Probably my ex-students!" laughs Hammond.

"Spiderman always had a huge, huge following among the black community, I don't know why. Some people say it's because when you're in that suit, your skin has no color and everybody can identify with you. I used to go to the producers and say, 'Hey, let's use this! Let's do stories about drugs in Harlem. Let's do stories about teenage pregnancy. Let's do stories where Spiderman and Peter get involved.' And not bashing people over the head, in the context of a highly entertaining show. Let's very gently just try to get the message across that you can make a moral choice, you can do the right thing. That's really using television to its best purpose. My greatest disappointment is not going to a third season. Not for the fame, for the money, or having my own TV series, but I felt we were on the verge of getting into those kinds of stories. I was hoping that we could sit down and say, 'Ok. Let's look at six issues and in the next 13 episodes, in a very delicate way, let's touch on them.' So that we're doing shows that we're proud of and we feel we're using television in a constructive way. I'm just sorry we never got the chance to do it because I think it would have been useful."

Goodman has no recollections of Hammond approaching him with these suggestions. "I personally never heard any comments of this nature from him. As for teenage pregnancy-in 1979 no one took up this subject in an 8 p.m. time slot!" While schoolchildren worshipped him, Spiderman in full regalia sometimes came as a shock to the general public. Hammond learned this lesson during the filming of the 90-minute pilot. With Los Angeles doubling for New York, a house in Pasadena was used for the Parker home. Hammond recalls that "early in the morning, there would be all these derelicts and winos, stumbling around our equipment. I'd be walking around wearing a spider suit, and these guys were just waking up out of the trailer, wondering 'What the...?!' It was probably enough for them to swear off the cheap wine!"

Ninety percent of Spiderman was filmed in Los Angeles. The remainder of the footage was shot in New York, and it was there that Fred Waugh would perform his incredible stunts for the action scenes. Remembering those stunts, Nicholas Hammond, Ellen Bry and supervising producer Lionel Siegel all use the same word to describe Waugh: fearless. "He was absolutely fearless about heights," attests Hammond. With a background as a wire artist in the Ringling Brothers-Barnum and Bailey Circus, Waugh possessed astonishing physical abilities. "He was an extraordinary guy. He was obviously very, very good, because he'd walk right to the edge of the tallest building in New York and just lean over and start to climb off the side of it.

Terrifying. He developed this helmet camera. If you remember, in some of the shows, you see Spiderman's point of view. Freddie invented that camera. It was like a football helmet, and he had a small camera mounted inside of it. And he would just pop it on his head and wear it while he was hanging, literally, 69 to 70 stories in the air on the side of the Empire State Building. ... Those wall-climbing shots, they were so well done that most people don't believe they're real. I always have people after the series, to this day, come up to me, and say, 'What did you do? Were you just lying flat on the ground and did they turn the film sideways?' or, 'Was it a superimposed effect or something against a painted building?' It's so extraordinary that he's that high up in the air. Everybody just assumes that it must be a trick! That it can't really be a man that high on the side of a building! But it is! It's all real!"

Fred Waugh responds that it had to be real; the studio couldn't afford special effects. "The TV series was limited on money, and they needed more optical effects on it, but they were prohibited because they were very, very expensive," he says. "If they were made now, with the cost of optical effects coming down, especially with digital visual effects, we could have done a lot of wonderful things. But the way it was, we had to do everything physically-what you saw on the side of a building was me! We used cable to hold me up. One was called a pull cable; the other was a travel cable. I'd set that travel cable real tight against the building, and I'd anchor that into a little pulley I had on my harness, and that would keep me stuck on the building. Otherwise, I'd drift away. The pull cable had seven or eight men on top of the building who would pull it. I had radio communication with them where I could tell them to stop or speed up."

Co-star Ellen Bry who joined the show during its second season as a rival newspaper photographer, echoes Hammond's praise of Waugh. "I thought that Fred Waugh was and continues to be one of the best stuntmen in the business," she says. "I've worked with a lot of stuntmen, and I think Freddie is incredible. Some of the stunts he pulled were just amazing. The one I remember very clearly was [when] a core group of the company went back to New York to shoot some location stuff to be included into a lot of different episodes. He swung out of a window of the Empire State Building and climbed up and down outside of the building. He really did it-that was not trick photography. It was incredible."

The climbing stunts, says Waugh, were the most fun. Describing his daring stunt on the outside of one of the world's tallest skyscrapers, he recalls that a woman in one of the offices stuck her head out the window and saw him in the red and blue suit, crawling up and down-a moment that's preserved on film as a shot in the main titles of the show and used for the episode "Photo Finish."

"That wasn't planned," chuckles Waugh. "When we rigged the building for the stunt, there wasn't anyone in that office. But when we did the stunt three hours later, I went across, and as I passed the window, I saw this woman coming into the room. I climbed to the top and turned around and came back down, and as I passed the window, she was standing there saying, 'What are you doing out there? Who are you?' and I just kept going down. I yelled, 'I'm Spiderman, lady!' I went back up and talked to her after the scene was over, and she laughed. That was the only time that happened."

"Fred was, to my mind, fearless," says Lionel Siegel. "And intelligent. I enjoyed working with him." And yet more praise from producer Daniel Goodman: "Freddy remains my very good friend. I shall always admire his stunt work and his courage. His work was meritorious. He added much to the program's excitement. There were times I feared for his life!" The most complicated stunt, according to Waugh, "was in the pilot where I jumped on the ceiling, and walked down from the ceiling" while battling Japanese assassins- "which was all done on cables and piano wire. It was very time-consuming."

The near-catastrophe with the helicopter is not the only stunt Waugh remembers from the episode "The Deadly Dust." He describes one scene in which a bad guy throws a stunned Spiderman from the rooftop. "I shot a web out of my hand and landed in a spider net. The net was made out of yarn to look like a spider net spread out between the alley. It was ten feet by ten feet, and we had people holding it so it would stretch across the alley."

For the pilot, in a stunt performed only once, Spiderman did his trademark swinging from one building to another. Waugh reports that it was a very intricate job and took two days to rig. It was only in the pilot where crews cheated a little by employing video effects and the put-the-building-on-the-floor trick to create the illusion of a man climbing walls. But this trick tended to look fake on film. "That's why they never did it again," says Hammond. "They said, 'Well, this is ridiculous! It's not nearly as good as having him out there, and he can do it, so let's have him do it.'"

Hammond himself donned the red and blue suit for key scenes. It's easy, he says, to figure out who's in the suit: "If it was a stunt, Freddie wore it. If it was a scene that involved dialogue, I wore it. Obviously if it was a moment where the suit had to come off, and it revealed to the audience or other characters that it was actually Peter Parker who was Spiderman, that would be me as well. Because we were turning out these shows every seven days, we had a second unit filming Fred doing his stunts. And Fred would go out with his little crew of stunt people, and they would do a long climb or jump or whatever he was doing that day. And so he'd have a second camera crew working with him while the first unit with the director would be working with me. If you see the show, it breaks down pretty much 85 percent Peter, and 15 percent Spiderman. That's how we divided the workload throughout the week.

"The character was so popular in New York that it became difficult to film on the streets," continues Hammond. "After the first season had aired, and I had played the character for a while, when we went back the second time, we just got mobbed everywhere we went! And it just made it much more difficult to film. In the first year, we had scenes of me just walking down Fifth Avenue, mingling with the crowd, going into the Empire State Building, wandering around in Central Park. It wasn't possible to do that in the second year because Peter Parker had gotten fairly recognizable to the public by then and, you know, I'd walk down the street and an awful lot of people would turn around and start chasing after me. So we weren't able to get the same kind of feeling of reality in the streets of New York as we had in the first year."

Ratings at first looked promising. "The pilot scored a 39 share, which was the highest rated show CBS had that year," remembers Hammond. "They put [the series] against Eight Is Enough, and we beat them consistently every week we were on, so the show was doing extremely well. I think CBS got a little cocky, and they had no luck at all against Happy Days and Laverne and Shirley which, at that time, were the number one and number two shows in America. Because we had done so well, and we had knocked Eight Is Enough off its perch, they thought, 'Well, this is going to appeal to the same age group that watches Happy Days and Laverne and Shirley, we'll put Spiderman up against that.' I begged them not to! I said, 'There's no way we can take on the Fonz and Happy Days!' At that point it was an absolute American institution! And sure enough, we didn't! We did very badly against them. And it was kind of the beginning of the end of the show, which was a pity, but for the time we were on, we did enjoy a great deal of popularity and success in the first year."

That popularity has caught up with Nicholas Hammond. He was doing a play in Melbourne, Australia, recently when a fan came backstage with a strange present. "A passionate writer fan came backstage to see me, and he's written a treatment to redo another pilot to show Peter, now, ten years later, where he's completely renounced all of his powers. He's now married with a child. And the child is abducted or threatened, and Peter has to go back to being Spiderman again, something he said he would never do because ... he wanted to lead a normal life. It's like the story of the old western gunslinger, who has to come back for one last time! He's written this marvelous story about Peter Parker, and he's now a middle-aged guy with a job, living in the suburbs. And one more time, he has to go out there to fight the good fight, this time to protect his children. Suddenly, Peter realizes the boy is starting to do things that Peter did all those years ago when he got bitten by the spider. He realizes it's been passed on genetically to the boy. And now Peter's got to teach the boy how to use his powers responsibly. Almost against his will he has to reenter the world of superheroes. I actually think it's a charming idea."

Hammond brings up an interesting point: Peter Parker never really had a girlfriend. Ellen Bry's portrayal of Julie Masters was an attempt at that, but, Hammond says, "He could never be clearly living with a woman, or clearly sexually involved with a woman, because it would put her at risk. Because if the bad guys found out there was a woman Peter had an emotional attachment to, of course she would become a target. That's why we had to keep him just on the verge of getting involved with someone, and then he would have to gently push away."

Told that Peter Parker in the current comics is married to a lovely red-haired Mary Jane, a surprised Hammond responds, "Oh, well, there you go! I think that's better." At one point during Spiderman production, Hammond lit on the idea of a crossover story between the Incredible Hulk and his show. But it never happened, largely because Spiderman got canned too quickly to develop the idea.

"To be honest with you," says Hammond, "it was my idea, but I stole it from years before. I was working on a series called Owen Marshall, Counsellor at Law, with Lee Majors and Arthur Hill. Universal was doing two series at the same time, Marcus Welby and Owen Marshall. So they did a two-hour story where Welby was sued for malpractice and Owen Marshall had to come and defend him. So you've got the stars of one series appearing in the other series. So I thought, why don't we do a story where David Banner comes to my university and looks for some research, or whatever, but there's a reason why we're at the same place at the same time. And then there's some kind of terrible outside threat, I'm in jeopardy, or he's in jeopardy, and I need to get my Spider powers to save him, or he needs to use his Hulk qualities to save me, but we end up having to work together to resolve the crisis. We were definitely going to do it because we were on the same network. Well, it never happened, because we never got that far! They said, 'Oh, yeah! Great! Let's do that next year!' But we never got a next year. Maybe one of these days we'll go back and do it again."

For Ellen Bry, Spiderman was an exciting introduction to prime-time television. "It was an incredibly exciting time in my life, coming from New York," she says. "This was my first introduction to L.A. and to doing a starring role in a TV series. ... I was very happy. People are paying a lot of attention to you, you're making good money. It's very glamorous. And of course, for me, coming out to Los Angeles, I was star-struck and working non-stop. It was a very happy time for me. Everything was new and different and exciting.

"I was walking two feet off the ground. I was just in ecstasy! You have to understand that this is a young actress's dream come true! She's struggling away in New York; all of a sudden, bong! She gets plucked up and gets put into a high-paying, fabulous nighttime TV series and moved from the bowels of New York and into glorious Los Angeles. I was just so thrilled. I just felt they were family to me."

The swift relocation from the East Coast to the palm trees of California meant that Bry didn't know anyone in town. "And so, I latched onto the people I worked with. It was intense work. We were working non-stop for a number of months. I just felt it was a very warm, very nurturing group of people. I just have very happy memories of it! It was a time of discovery." Bry has since become so experienced as a television actress that she looks upon Spiderman as her "early work" and says, "You cringe a lot. I've gotten a lot better. I feel I was just very new, and I tried hard. It's not that I'm embarrassed by it. At the time I was very happy with the work accomplished. Now, when I watch myself, I realize how differently I could have played a scene."

Working with Nicholas Hammond was part of that experience. "Nick was very nice," says Bry. "I enjoyed working with him, and yet I felt ... that in a way, there was a little bit of resentment that the network or production company or whoever had decided that he couldn't carry the show alone. That they needed a female co-star and that they needed a romantic foil. ... I was having to share the limelight a little bit. The show was Spiderman, and he was Spiderman. He was the star of the show, so that was exciting for him.

"In terms of his attitude about his playing a superhero, did he have concerns about being typecast? Yes! He was extremely nervous about it. He was very concerned that playing Spiderman would typecast him."

Bry speculates on why the show didn't last longer. "I think the show failed for a couple of reasons. Firstly, there were a lot of superhero shows around at the time. I think CBS was not really behind Spiderman. I think they had a lot of superhero shows on their plate [e.g. Wonder Woman, Incredible Hulk, plus TV movies Dr. Strange and Captain America] and this was just another one. ... I think they weren't pushing it. The ratings weren't good.

"I think the main flaw of the show was ... it was geared too much for young kids. I don't think it had enough general appeal." Bry admits that the second season was intended to be more appealing to an adult audience, but "I don't think it succeeded," she says. "Whatever efforts were made to make it a more adult show basically failed because I felt we had a very young audience, based on the feedback I did get. It came from kids anywhere from 6 to 8 and from 14 to 15. I think the audience it appealed to was too young for it to get good demographics for sales and advertising. From 5- to 15-year-olds, I got tremendous feedback. I got lots of letters. Kids absolutely adored it. They started fan clubs and stuff like that. But unfortunately, I don't think most advertisers are aiming at 5- to 15-year-old audiences. My fan letters from adults were few and far between. Ninety to 95 percent of my fan mail was from kids. Which is fine, but, you know, it doesn't sell soap. So, I think it was geared for too young an audience. It didn't have enough mass appeal. But this is just speculation. I'm not in a position to say definitively why it didn't have enough adult interest."

Producer on the second season for Spiderman was Lionel E. Siegel. Bry says, "I owe him a lot of thank-yous. He really gave me a break. I was doing commercials and soaps and off Broadway theatre, and I was brought out to do Spiderman, so he really changed my career and brought me into doing prime-time television series."

Was Siegel in some way dissatisfied with his Peter Parker/Spiderman? Regarding the casting of Hammond, Siegel says, "Tough call. He was OK. Worked very hard and was extremely conscientious, but his very nature, his personality (same on screen as off) lacked the toughness, the rough-edgeness that most of the male stars of TV series of the day ... had. Most of these guys weren't actors, they were personalities."

And what kind of stories did Siegel hope to bring to the second season? "Action, heart, mysteries, humor," he says, "all woven together in a compelling way." Siegel's major contribution to the show was its final two-hour episode, "The Chinese Web," filmed on location in Hong Kong. "He wrote that based on experiences he had as a Marine during World War II when he had been over in Asia," says Hammond. "He's a fascinating guy! I was very impressed by him. I think, far and away, he was the most thoughtful person we ever had associated with the show. ... He told me a story about some Marines who shot a Chinese man's water buffalo, which in those days was a terrible crime because the animals were a source of income for the man's family. He used the basis of this incident that he remembered as the kernel of information which he developed into this whole story that became 'The Chinese Web.' He was a great guy. I'd actually very much like to work with him again. I really liked him."

Ralph Sarchie, on the production crew as a location scout, recalls using the Connaught Tower in Hong Kong for a wall-climbing sequence at the end of this story. "We were supposed to shoot on one side of the building," he says, "and we were on the roof of the building. But coincidentally, it was [an anniversary of some sort], they had bloody, bloody riots out there. It was on this particular day in October, and we were afraid that a man in a red suit climbing a building might cause a riot. So we had to switch to the other side of the building so that the Chinese would not cause an international incident with the man in the red suit climbing up the side of the building."

"It was a tense time in Hong Kong. I remember scouting along the Chinese border in a helicopter, being afraid that they were going to send a missile up and shoot me down. I was very nervous about that. I was sort of fantasizing being shot down by the Chinese along the border." Sarchie was not the only one who found something to be scared of in that shoot. It was during this episode that Fred Waugh's fearlessness finally faltered. Actor Hagan Beggs, who appeared in "The Chinese Web" as the main bad guy's right-hand man, tells the story.

"He had no trouble climbing down building walls in Hong Kong, but he had some reluctance about jumping into the water at the Aberdeen harbor because the water was so polluted. He didn't want to do it. He just thought, 'Oh, it's so polluted, I just don't want to get a mouthful of it. I don't mind going down walls on cables, but I don't want to throw myself off into that water!'" Nick Hammond adds, "Not only did Fred refuse to do it, he very wisely refused to do it. It was absolutely poisonous, filthy water! We had a lot of these really, really tough kung fu stuntmen, working with us, these Chinese boys. These guys were as tough as nails! There was nothing they wouldn't do! When we got to the Aberdeen harbor and suddenly, someone had to take a fall into the water, no one would do it. Absolutely no one! The camera crew finally got it, but we were totally flat out!" Reminded of the story, Fred Waugh says, "One look at that harbor and you wouldn't do it. It would be like jumping into a cesspool."

Ultimately, a local fellow was recruited to take the fall that the script asked for. Beggs recalls the wall-crawling Connaught Tower sequence: "That particular night when Waugh was going down that large building, I know it was quite a complicated affair because they had their stunt coordinator people and a Hong Kong team working together. They were very concerned everything would go very well. They were nervous about it, but everything did work out OK. But they did have some problem there about making sure that the Hong Kong workers holding the ropes were tying off correctly. They were concerned because sometimes they had to use an interpreter. Fred said, 'Make sure these guys are tied to me so if I go, they go that way I'm sure I'll be safe!'"

The conclusion of "The Chinese Web" has Spiderman tracking a kidnapped professor to a penthouse at the tower. After quickly disposing of some guards on the balcony, he breaks his way into the boardroom. Inside, Beggs and actor Richard Erdman are conversing. Erdman is closer to the camera, while Beggs is down the long boardroom table in the distance. As soon as Spiderman flips the drape curtains, Erdman dashes for a nearby door, while Beggs tries pulling a gun. To stop him from firing, Spiderman leaps head-first across the long boardroom table and uses his momentum to tackle Beggs.

Of this scene, Beggs remembers the belt buckle on the Spiderman costume. Waugh "banged his back on that, and it was quite painful. Isn't it ironic—that a simple dive across a table with a belt on hurt him. It's typical of the business. You find things that look so dangerous, and yet it just takes a dive across a table to give yourself a 'thump.' ... It's amazing sometimes that the most simple things give you a problem." With filmmaker James Cameron signed to write and direct a Spiderman feature for the 1990s, Nicholas Hammond notes, "I've been hearing for ten years about a preparation of a Spiderman feature film. Good luck to them. It would be great with the special effects. That, unfortunately, was our limitation, being a TV series where every seven days you

AMBASSADOR MAGMA

AKA: SPACE GIANTS

AKA: MAGMA TAISHI

AKA: CAPTAIN MAGMA

The evil Goa (Ohira) has conquered most of the planets in the universe and now sets his sights on Earth. But a good wizard whose name, confusingly is also "Earth" (Shimizu), opposes him by bringing in a pair of warriors from the 2rf Galaxy, the powerful roboto fighter Magma (Uosumi) and Mol (Mitsuse), along with their robot son Gam (Ninomiya). Goa sends a series of monsters to attack the Earth but the family can be called from their secret mountain base to defend it. Their chief allies among the human race are journalist Atsushi Murakami (Okada), and his wife Tomoko (Yoshiro), and their son Mamoru (Egi).

In times of trouble, Mamoru can summon Gam to his aid with a single blow on his special whistle. Two blows will bring fourth Mol and, in times of dire need, three blows will summon Magma himself. All members of the family can fight evil with the Gamma Rays they shoot from their antennae, and can also transform into torpedeos, while Magma can shoot missiles from his chest.

Based on a story by ASTRO BOY creator Osamu Tezuka, Ambassador Magma was a cheap early sci-fi show in the style of JOHNNY SOKKO AND HIS GIANT ROBOT (aka GIANT ROBO). Monsters would often be defeated over several episodes, allowing for the same suit to be re-used across two, three or occasionally four episodes. It was adapted into English as Space Avenger in 1972, but did not reach a wide audience until 1978 under it's best known title SPACE GIANTS. The dubbing was arranged by Peter Fernandez, who was repsonsible for many of the early American dubs of anime. In the US adaptation, Goa was renamed Rodak, and Gam's parents were renamed Goldar and Silvar, Earth the wizard, not the planet, was renamed Methusan. Atsushi became Mr. Itamura, and his son became Mikko, although Tomoko and Gam inesplicably kept their original names. The story was remade in 1993 as the anime series Ambassador Magma. The series was produced by Kazuo Kamijima and Takaharu Bessho.

This children's TV series was turned into a very successful anime series. In the animated version of the classic "Space Giants" T.V. show, Ambassador Magma is confronted with his old nemesis Goa. Filled with rage over his defeat years earlier by Magma, Goa will stop at nothing to regain the Earth! The Space Giants title for the show was given to it when the show was shown in the US.

SPACE GIANTS was a Japanese import that was shown on WTBS in the 1970's and early 1980's. It was in the same vein as GODZILLA except way, way, more campy. (ie. there is a scene where two Japs are having a conversation in a room and one guy comments that he thinks the room is bugged, then there is an extreme closeup of a metallic robot insect bug on the wall)..campy indeed.

The planet is being threatened by a outlandish villian and only three giant robots that change into space ships can stop him. Like most Japanese shows each episode features Japs in costumes fighting over a scale model of Tokyo each week. Among the allies of the robots were a Jap scientist, his family, and a hot looking american woman....Each week they were endlessly pursued by the LUGOMEN. (If one shoots a Lugoman they melt). This was one of a slew of Japanese tv shows Ted Turner bought for a song in the 1970's and aired on WTBS in Atlanta.

Magma Taishi started life as a manga, before transferring to live action television in 1966, where it lasted for fifty-two 25 minute long episodes. It was the first tokusatsu to feature a giant hero, narrowly beating Ultraman by a couple of weeks.

Ambassador Magma (Maguma Taishi) is the title superhero of a manga and tokusatsu TV series created by famous mangaka Osamu Tezuka. The TV series, produced by P Productions, aired on Fuji TV from July 4, 1966 to September 25, 1967, with a total of 52 episodes. It is the first color tokusatsu TV series in Japan, beating Ultraman to the airwaves by 6 days.

Magma Taishi, translated "Ambassador Magma," also known as "Goldar" from the 60's live-action show "The Space Giants." Magma Taishi stands out among heroes in my Box of Heroes. Magma is the creation of the late Tezuka Osamu, the father of Manga and Anime.

P-Productions unveiled The Space Giants, a weekly sci-fi action series about a boy, a reporter, a scientist, and a horde of gargantuan robots and monsters. The show, known as Ambassador Magma in its native land, was dubbed into English and released stateside in the mid-1960's.

At the start of the first episode, a shady character arrived on earth via a comet, landing in Tokyo. He called reporter Tom Mura to arrange a meeting, but Mura's son Miko answered the phone instead. The reporter thought the whole thing was a prank, but the next morning, the entire Mura household was transported to a strange jungle, where they first witnessed the mighty power of Rodak, an outer space creature bent on world domination. Miko snapped a picture of Rodak, which brought the boy to the attention of a giant robot named Goldar, the Space Avenger.

Goldar brought both boy and picture to Mount Olympian, the volcano home of Goldar, wife Silvar, and their creator, the outer space scientist Mathusem. The two robots were smitten with the young lad, and to complete their metallic family, they asked Mathusem to create a robo-child for them. The result was Gam, a robotic near-duplicate of Miko (although the real Miko didn't have silver antennae). All three robots had the power to transform into sleek rocket jets, the better to fly into battle. Mathusem also gave Miko a whistle which he could use to summon the robotic protectors one whistle for Gam, two for Silvar, three for Goldar.

Meanwhile, Rodak had unleashed upon the world the deadly force of Molesaurus, a subterranean monster. Goldar and family rocketed into action, battling the first of many gargantuan creatures. Rodak kept launching wave after wave of baddies, including the winged Birdaurus, the shapeshifting Lugo Men (who turned into a greenish goo when they were killed), the metallic Noronda, giant beetle Nardo, mini monster Lodi, and Kono, The Mightiest Creature of All (really Rodak in an alternate form). Goldar, ever the noble robot, always tried to talk the monsters out of fighting, but when that failed (and thankfully, it always did), titans collided in elaborate battle scenes.

AMERIKA

The United States has been invaded by the Soviet Union and the country is now under Communist rule. Dissidents are confined to labour camps while others escape capture begin a resistance movement to reclaim their country.

Broadcast on ABC over the course of seven nights in the middle of February 1987, Amerika was a controversial 14 and 1/2 hour miniseries. Tom Shales of The Washington Post wrote in December 1996 that Amerika "Could be the hottest political potato in the history of television." It was produced by ABC Circle Films, and written and directed by Donald Wrye, who was also executive producer. This series depicted life as imagined in the United States in the late 1990s, ten years after the Soviet Union took control of America employing a Russian controlled UN peace-keeping force.

Some have contended that Amerika was produced to provide a television counter to the controversial ABC movie The Day After, which depicted nuclear holocaust between the U.S. and Russia in 1983. The ABC executive responsible for both programs denied this view. Brandon Stoddard, President of ABC Circle films said on 16 October 1986 at a press tour at the UN Plaza Hotel in New York that the idea for Amerika "never occurred during the controversy of The Day After, had nothing to do with The Day After. It happened...the birth of this idea happened substantially later." Stoddard went on to say that a critic of The Day After, Ben Stein from the Herald Examiner had written something, "at a much later point, a line...that had to do with what would life be like in America in a Russian occupation." Stoddard was stuck, however, thinking about how to do such a television program without getting caught up in the actual struggle of the takeover. Some time later, Stoddard's spouse suggested doing the project at a point in time ten years after the takeover.

At the time, Amerika was the most controversial television event ever broadcast by ABC. The network received more mail and phone calls about Amerika before it was on the air than the total pre- and post-broadcast viewer reaction of any other program in the history of ABC, including the end of the world story, The Day After.

The critics of Amerika came from all sides of the political spectrum. The liberals feared the program would antagonize the Kremlin, jeopardize arms control and détente. The right thought the miniseries inadequately portrayed the brutality of the U.S.S.R. The United Nations thought the movie would erode its image.

Despite the pre-broadcast level of controversy, most of the public did not object to the miniseries. Research conducted by ABC before the broadcast indicated that 96% of the population over 18 did not object to the program. Most Americans felt strongly that they should have the right to decide for themselves whether they would watch the program.

While almost half the country watched The Day After (46.0 rating), Amerika was seen in 19% of all TV households. Despite lots of publicity, controversy and viewers, research conducted by Professor William Adams at George Washington University showed that attitudes about the things most critics thought would be influenced by Amerika, did not change. What American's thought about the Soviet Union, The United Nations, or U.S. Soviet relations did not change in before and after surveys.

Forgive me, but when this was first shown on TV, the reaction from the public was with a collective yawn. American audiences just weren't ready for a TWELVE HOUR movie, and the Nielsen ratings for the series were embarrassingly low (If I remember correctly, they were the lowest for any mini-series). There was a paperback book tie-in with the mini-series, which was released several days before the TV show began (Can you say "give away the plot"?). What little I saw of AMERIKA when it was originally broadcast was as exciting as watching paint dry, and the series was savaged in the press as being the work of paranoid imaginations.

What I took as being very odd is that the patriotic hero was played by Kris Kristofferson, a man who has championed many liberal-to-left political causes that the most patriotic fans of this mini-series would oppose.

It's been said that a work of genius is never fully appreciated when first released to the public. It's also been said that people will read their own interpretations into the most innocuous of things. Patriotic epic or paranoid raving? Make your own decision about this mini-series

AN ENGLISHMAN'S CASTLE

An alternative history story about a TV writer, living in a Britain which lost World War II, who is about to bring his historical soap opera into the war years. His ostensibly sympathetic Nazi masters are paying very close attention to the manner of his presentation - and so is the resistance. His moral dilemma is intensified when he unwittingly gives information that betrays a colleague, and becomes sharper still when his lover (Blair) confesses she is Jewish.

As this three-episode story begins, English TV producer Peter Ingram (Kenneth More) is preparing the next group of stories in his long-running series, "An Englishman's Castle." A nostalgic wartime series, it tells the story of a British family living through the "Phony War" and the "Lightning War" (blitzkrieg) of the first year of World War II, with the fall of Poland, the fall of France ... and the fall of Britain ... to Nazi Germany... 38 years ago.

The series is a popular part of British television. The German Gestapo's watchdogs do not mind it: they approve of patriotic sentiment, so long as it does not turn anti-German. And Ingram has played this game for a very long time, all of his adult life. He is prepared to continue playing it. Until the day comes when the British Resistance approaches him for help...

I liked the basic story itself, but I especially liked the depiction of the "show within a show". The series's musical signature was a stately orchestral "Lilibulero", giving it the same "sound" as the long-running series "Upstairs, Downstairs" -- which also depicted life during a time of turbulent change in Britain. ("Lilibulero" also happens to be the musical signature of the real-world World Service radio program that is broadcast by the BBC, the British production company that aired this television show.) It was interesting to see how an "Upstairs, Downstairs"-like show might have looked if Britain had not continued to win European wars in the 20th century.

One especially striking moment took place during the first rehearsal of an upcoming episode of the series. Ingram was basing the series on his own life during those years ... and in his own life his older brother was in the British military and was killed. The TV character corresponding to his brother was very popular with the British audience, and the actor playing him expected to have a cozy, secure job for quite a few more seasons. When Ingram passed out the next week's script and the cast seated around the large table read through them, everyone was stunned when they learned that in this episode that very popular character was killed. Truly killed ... not the "he's missing and presumed dead" "killed" that soap operas sometimes use to bring a character back on a whim. Killed-dead.

The entire cast protested. The actor protested, of course, but the others protested out of sympathy for him. This was more than simply a role, they argued, it was his livelihood, his income. How could you, in effect, sack him, when he had done nothing wrong ... when he had done nothing to deserve this cruel treatment? But Ingram's brother had done nothing to deserve being killed, either. Yet he died ... and so, Ingram explained, the time had come for this character to die.

We see many stories set "backstage". We don't often see this aspect of "backstage life" for working actors. Although I believe it had no significant effect on the overall story (the Gestapo and the British Resistance), it was a television moment that has stayed with me for more than 20 years (I write this in 2004). I remember this show fondly.

A very fine piece of work, sensitively and suspenseful developed, with first-rate performances by the three leading actors.

ANDRA

In the year 4000AD the brain injured Andra, living in sub city one is given the preserved brain of a kid from the 1980's.

This Australian TV show was made for children by the ABC, originally adapted from the science fiction novel of the same name by British writer Louise Lawrence. Many well known Australian TV actors made their first appearances in the show.

The poignant story of the future Andra juxtaposed with a child from the 1980's was quite innovative. I imagine it would look impossibly primitive by modern television standards, but for the era of 1970's TV it was an excellent and thought provoking piece on a future society gone wrong. It would make an ideal premise for a modern series.

A sequel to ALPHA SCORPIO.

ANDRO MELOS

AKA: ANDRO MEROS

AKA: ANDRO SUPER WARRIORS

Andro Melos an Ultra saves Earth by battling alien invaders and giant monsters.

The story begins with the reappearance of powerful new versions of old Ultra arch-nemeses... sent by the "Gua Empire," which was headed by Juda (Juda made a reappearance in that Ultraman Taro movie).

Ace Killer (from Ultraman Ace) was the first monster to reappear, and he throws Zoffy into a black hole.

Soon thereafter, a mysterious new hero Andro Melos appears. Protected by a new green and silver space armor, the "Cosmo-tecter," Andro Melos defeats Ace Killer. [Andro Melos also has detachable Eye Slugger-style weapons that can be combined to form the Double Lancer.]

Subsequent reappearing monsters include Gora (from U. 80), a trio of Magma-seijins (from U. Leo), the ubiquitous Baltan-seijin, Mecha-Baltan, Nackle-seijin and Black King (from U. Jack), and King Joe (U. 7).

Ultraseven was also defeated and became missing in action. At about the same time, the red and silver Andro Wolf comes to save the day. Andro Wolf has a couple of detachable shoulder blades called "Sword U's." Since Wolf's mouth and eyes resemble Ultraseven's, one begins to wonder... is Wolf Ultraseven? For that matter, is Melos Zoffy?

Well, Melos and Wolf defeat Juda, who turns out to be a robot. Melos reveals that he is indeed Zoffy, but since he and Wolf save Ultraseven from captivity, it is obvious that Wolf is definitely not Ultraseven.

So then the Gua Empire sends a new menace, Mordo, who commands Gina and a revived Juda. They attack with HUGE Monster Battleships that resemble popular former Ultra monsters. These things are way bigger than your standard-sized Ultraman. The Monster Battleships include Gieronion (which looks like Gieron-seiju from U. 7), King Jorg (like King Joe from U.7), and Bemuzun (Like Bemuster of U. Jack).

Enter the orange and silver Andro Mars, who uses a button on his left arm guard to become gigantic. Mars is joined by Wolf and a new green and silver Andro Melos who is not Zoffy. In fact, this new Melos goes by the name Bunowa, if I remember correctly. They are joined by Andro Furol, the white-armor-clad female Andro warrior. Her mission is to guard a secret, ultimate weapon hidden in Antarctica.

Furol was protecting the "Grand Tecter," an upgraded Cosmo Tecter that Andro Melos wore in his final battle with Gua... it increased the his power by ten times.

Part of the "Ultra Super Legend" (Urutora Choh-densetsu) which was originally not a TV series. It was featured exclusively in "Televi-kun," a monthly book for boys, and depicted live-action costumes on elaborate sets. "The Ultra Super Legend" started in the May, 1981 issue, soon after "Ultraman 80" went off the air. Televi-kun also included a standard manga to explain the details.

The "Televi-kun" saga lasted about two years. Toward the end of this run, 41 ten-minute TV vignettes were produced under the title "Andro Super Warriors" (Andro choh-senshi), and were broadcast five times a week in the Greater Tokyo area. Since it's main method of publicity was a monthly children's magazine and it lasted only about a month, the show came and went with little fanfare.

The original music was by Shunsuke Kikuchi.

It's nice to see this antique piece of work mentioned here, as I think it never got re-aired after 1980. Lutz Mackensy plays a secret agent who has to identify and recapture missing androids in 1980s Germany. He gets assistance of a computer with female voice shaped like a little daisy. I remember it being a quite funny and sharp series. Especially interesting seems to be the (accidental) parallels according to a US-series from the 90s - (don't ask me what it was called!)

ANDROMEDA

AKA: GENE RODDENBERRY'S ANDROMEDA

"If the Commonwealth's High Guard had a weakness, it was this: Its officers were too competent, too caring, and too brave."

-- Yin Man-Wei, The Rise and Fall of the Systems Commonwealth, CY 11942

Dylan Hunt is the captain of the Andromeda Ascendant, a ship which serves in the military force of the Systems Commonwealth, a monarchy which spans several galaxies. Hunt and his ship are subsequently frozen for several centuries. Revived by a passing salvage ship, Hunt is horrified to find that the Commonwealth has collapsed and all known galaxies have descended into barbarism. Hunt decides to take his ship and crew on a trip around the cosmos to attempt to restore order to the known galaxies.

The series was produced by Majel Barrett (executive), Allan Eastman and Robert Hewitt Wolfe (executive). Original music by Alex Lifeson, Film Editing by Eric Hill, Nicole Ratcliffe, Gordon Rempel and Ron Yoshida. Special Effects by Jim Finn (visual effects supervisor), Brian Moylan (digital compositing artist), Gary Poole (digital compositing artist). Stunts by Angela Uyeda (stunt fighter), Special Effects by Rainmaker Digital Pictures. Gordon Woolvett who plays Seamus Harper also starred in MISSION GENESIS (aka DEEPWATER BLACK).

The bronze-colored starship bridge set is in pitch black. Jagged beams of yellow light from outside sources, piercing from ceiling corners and wall slits help illuminate numerous consoles and the "Slipstream chair" sitting in the center of the room. The soft glow of the lighted touches panel computer consoles across the Command center, adding to the surreal ambiance. Walking through the most important soundstage of Gene Roddenberry's ANDROMEDA in Vancouver, Canada, is an eerily quiet experience. To find the filming activity elsewhere in the complex, it is necessary to walk through the doorway of the bridge's rear exit, take a left turn and go up the ramp. At an adjacent corridor, standing before the camera in a futuristic jet black suit and surrounded by a observing production crew, is a tall brown-haired man whom millions of television fans in over 115 countries have come to know as the mythological Hercules.

Actor Kevin Sorbo, no longer a "Greek god" is now officially Captain Dylan Hunt aboard the starship Andromeda Ascendant, a gigantically powerful vessel rescued from a frozen existence after 300 years on the event horizon of a black hole. Hunt and his vessel were recovered by the Eureka Maru, a salvage vessel commanded by Beka Valentine and her mercenary crew of humans and aliens. The precious universe that he has known, the Systems Commonwealth that lasted for 10,000 years, has crumbled as a result of war with enemies. Reawakened as a stranger in a strange and decadent universe, in possession of one of the most advanced and powerful vessels ever known, and aided by small crew of six disparate humans and aliens, Hunt is determined to single-handedly restore the Commonwealth to its former glory.

Veteran TV director David Warry-Smith is directing Sorbo today in a dramatic confrontation. In a scene for the series' seventeenth episode, titled "Starcrossed," Hunt jumps down from a ladder, paces forward and, whipping out his weapon, points it straight at the camera. The scene requires Hunt to be fiercely serious and determined, but in the rehearsals, Sorbo and colleagues are in a light mood. They're trying to get the details just right. Facing Sorbo just behind the cameras, and participating in the scene, are actors Lexa Doig, who plays Andromeda, the ship's artificial intelligence construct, and surprise a guest star from STARGATE SG-1, Michael Shanks. Shanks stands up and confronts Dylan Hunt. The climax of the scene has Sorbo body slamming Shanks off camera and onto a wall. Rehearsals are playful, but yet concentrated, as all parties observing watch carefully as the director communicates how he wants this scene to be choreographed.

When it's time for a break and a chat, Sorbo cheerfully strides down the ship's corridor and back into the hallowed darkness of the Command center. Sitting down in a corner, a bright Sorbo explains that it was Majel Barrett Roddenberry, series executive producer and wife of the late Gene Roddenberry, who anointed him as the lead actor of the second SF-TV series to bear Gene's name in the titles. "Majel's a funny character. She's a very interesting woman. She's very outspoken. She's not afraid to say what's on her mind. At a sales meeting after I'd signed on, she said in front of about 250 people, 'I wanted to get the show done, and I wanted a stud to play the part so I went out and bought myself one.'" laughs Kevin Sorbo. "It was pretty funny how she worded it. She said that she watched HERCULES. Loved the show--what it was doing and saw how big it became--and was very complimentary towards me for the show's success. I appreciate her saying that, but it was a team effort. She just said 'I envision you as the Capt. Hunt that I want for this television series...'. Gene also wanted to make it a television series. After he passed away, she kept a lot of his archives. And she went through them over the years and said, 'This is the one show I want to do...'. When I became available, there was a lot of interest in tapping into how my name could mix with Gene Roddenberry's name, which is huge around the world."

Working from story material left behind by Gene, an ambitious new science fiction universe was developed by executive producer and writer Robert Hewitt Wolfe. The potentials for another successful TV series franchise was born. ANDROMEDA's contracts are for 44 episodes, giving audiences two seasons to get acclimated to the built-from-scratch universe of the future. The series is distributed via syndication, and since today's television landscape has been a fertile ground for science fiction shows, the odds are good for a bright future. Plus, Roddenberry's sister show, EARTH FINAL CONFLICT is currently in its fourth season.

In the week of Oct. 9, 2000 the ratings for ANDROMEDA's debut episode, "Under the Night," garnered a 4.3 rating (about four and a half million viewers), landing at the number nine ranking in the overall list. It was the number one genre show ahead of XENA, X-FILES and STARGATE SG-1. Months of pre-publicity and word of mouth about the series on the Internet, generating a built-in audience anxious to see the series, has paid off. "We're all pretty happy with that," says Sorbo. "It's weird. In syndication you get a more specialized audience, but still, 50 percent of network shows don't get ratings as high as this show."

When Wolfe's series bible was presented to him, Sorbo was immediately interested. After spending nine months resting from a grueling six and a half seasons on HERCULES, he was anxious to find another property that could propel him to even more success. "I'm not listed as one of the producers, but I will be in second season," says Sorbo. "I had hands-on with Robert from the very beginning. A major reason I'm working on this project is that it gives me a better working environment in terms of hours. I wasn't going to be working 100 hour weeks as I did in HERCULES. I talk to the writers on a daily basis. Every script I read, I put in my two cents. I write extensive notes on what I believe doesn't work. I told Robert, 'When I send you the notes, I only say what I think doesn't work.' I love the scripts, but when things aren't working, I have to understand why they don't work."

As part of his creative contributions to the series, Sorbo played an instrumental role in casting six fellow actors to appear with him as regulars on the show. Almost all of them have strong stage or Shakespearean backgrounds. To cast Tyr Anasazi, the tall, brawny and genetically engineered Nietzschean warrior, Keith Hamilton Cobb, best known for a role in ALL MY CHILDREN, and a recipient of a Soap Opera Digest award as Best Newcomer, was chosen. Sorbo notes that Cobb is the only actor he did not personally choose. "It was a choice by Tribune who had worked with him before. All they had to do was show me a photo of him and some of his work on guest spots he's done. Physically, of course, he's the guy! He was Tyr. Keith is very much a thinker. He keeps to himself quite a bit. I don't know where Keith comes from. He's got his own style of working. He gets into his character and plays with it off-camera a little bit while we're on the set. He's very focused on his character."

characters of Beka Valentine, captain of the Eureka Maru, and Andromeda, the A.I. construct that personifies the ship's computers, were cast together, says Sorbo. "Lisa Ryder, who plays Beka, and Lexa Doig, who plays Andromeda--I met with them and five other actresses in Los Angeles. Beka was the hardest person to cast in the show. It's the one character that everyone had a different idea of what the character should look like or who she should be. There were a lot of fights in that one. She took forever to cast. At the screen-tests, where I do the scenes with the actresses to see if there's any chemistry and what our working relationships might be like, I felt she was number one. They still wanted to look for others, as they weren't convinced. I told Lisa, 'I've been there. They called me seven times for HERCULES over a three month period!'

Ultimately, Lisa Ryder (most familiar to genre fans for the lead role in the FOREVER KNIGHT vampire series) captured the Valentine role, leaving the role of Andromeda to Lexa Doiga. "We all liked Lexa a lot, but she wasn't right for Beka," Sorbo explains. "She wasn't physically or old enough for the part. They were looking at other people that none of us were really crazy about. After talking to the studio people I think Lexa began looking at the Andromeda character in a completely different way," chuckles Sorbo. Coincidentally, Lexa Doig co-stars with Ryder in the upcoming New Line Cinema horror feature, JASON X; also, she's had appearances in EARTH: FINAL CONFLICT and FX: THE SERIES.

For the alien role of Rev Bem, a Magog scientist and philosopher, only one man had the part. "Brent Stait's reading was so far superior to everyone else!" says Sorbo. "It was like 'This guy's the guy!' Like Trance, he's going to become one of those really favorite characters that audiences are going to love. There are going to be Rev Bem dolls. He's such a good actor. When I see Brent in person, I keep forgetting that this is Rev Bem, the Magog!" Stait is the one who has the most genre credits, having been seen in episodes of OUTER LIMITS, FIRST WAVE, STARGATE SG-1, POLTERGEIST and X-FILES.

As the ship's engineer, Seamus Harper, another Canadian actor, the blond-haired Gordon Michael Woolvett, fit the mold. "We had our eyes set on someone else, but we hadn't met Gordon Woolvett yet," says Sorbo. "We saw one Canadian guy about eight months ago, who was doing a show in Toronto. I actually called him and asked him, 'Do you want to do the series? It will give you a movie career.' He wasn't interested. Then they found Gordon. I saw his tape about two weeks before I moved up here. I said, 'This guy's a freaking phenomenon! He's great!' Gordon has a very strong personality, and he works hard. We had to believe that he was a genius, yet he was in a surfer dude's body! He was a Malibu California guy. [Harper] can turn a toaster into a Jaguar. He can make anything happen for you." Woolvett is best remembered as one of the survivors aboard another starship DEEPWATER BLACK (a.k.a. MISSION GENESIS).

The final cast member of the series was for the mysterious role of Trance Gemini, a "lavender skinned" young pixie of a girl with a pointed tail. Sorbo recalls that Laura Bertram was the first actress that he met upon arriving in Vancouver to begin the series. "By consensus, everyone loved her right off the bat when we looked at the [audition] tapes. She was great. She was just like how she is on the show. She came in and said, 'Oh, I'm so excited to work with you!' She's like a little kid on the set. She's only 22 years old. She's wonderful." Winner of two Gemini awards (the Canadian Emmys), Bertram brings a versatility to the cast from appearances in ARE YOU AFRAID OF THE DARK on Nickelodeon, NIGHT OF THE TWISTERS, a MOW, and the lead role in "Cinderella" on stage.

After spending years on a fantasy TV series that primarily focused on him, Sorbo was anxious to assemble an ensemble cast. "My mantra to Robert, as the show was being put together, was 'Share the wealth!' I want everyone to be important in their own way," says Sorbo. "Make it interesting to watch each characters for different reasons. I want a viewer that tunes in--if they're not turned on by me, maybe they're turned on by Tyr. That's what we watch TV for. We watch for characters. 'I like him or her. There's something that attracts me to this person.' And here, we have seven times the opportunity which I think will be good for the show." But Sorbo laughs and cringes recalling that when it came time to put this into practice. It wasn't quite what he had expected. "You've got seven egos and seven insecurities! You've got seven people wanting the camera. It's weird to share the spotlight at all."

Although only a handful of episodes have aired at press time, ANDROMEDA's final episodes will be shot by December. Sorbo is very candid in assessing the series' progress. "I still think we're going through teething pains," he admits. "Season two will be great. I think all of us actors on the show are still trying to find our feet. We've come a long way. I think shows have gotten better. I think there's a couple here that didn't turn out as expected. It's interesting when you're reading scripts and you say, 'This is going to be awesome!' but when you shoot it and look at it, you go, 'Oh my god!' Of the 17 [filmed] we have three right now that I'm not crazy about. I think we can save one of them. All the shows coming up for the November sweeps are going to be unbelievable. I'm happy with about 70 percent. That's pretty good odds. On HERCULES I'd be happy with about 50 percent or 40 percent.

"Right now we're still trying to figure out where the characters are going," Sorbo continues. "The writing is excellent. I think we need to get back to some of the basics of what Capt. Hunt is trying to do. What he's trying to reestablish with the Commonwealth. I think we need to go out there and explore strange new worlds and not stay on the ship so much. The writers are trying to lighten the view on who's Capt. Hunt. Who's Trance? Who's Harper? Give them back stories. That will come in time. I really believe this series will go five or seven years. We've created a very interesting, logical SF series that not only the STAR TREK people will like but those who have never seen [TREK] before. You've got seven very interesting characters who all bring something different to the table. If someone doesn't like Capt. Hunt maybe they'll like Beka. Or Tyr. There's something for everyone."

When the assistant director steps up for Kevin, there's time for one final question: Wasn't Sorbo the runner-up for LOIS AND CLARK? The actor kicks his head back in laughter. "Dean Cain and I were the last two guys for that part! I would have made a great Superman. I was a pretty good Clark Kent. With the suit on and the glasses, I looked pretty damn good! In the suit and with the hair, he made a better Superman so they made the right choice. It's funny how the business is. It ended up being better for me because six months later I got HERCULES. And it runs for six and a half seasons. And it could have gone on for another three. I decided to walk away from it. Universal wanted a few more years, but I didn't want to." With that, actor Kevin Sorbo leaves. Offstage sounds and lights leak into the Command center; that surreal ambiance returns. It's time for the Captain to go back and save the galaxy.

The producers on building Gene Roddenberry's new universe.

Author: Frank Garcia

Date: 11/20/00

"Space...the final frontier, these are the voyages of the Starship Andromeda Ascendant, its two-year mission: to streak across the universe, rebuild the Commonwealth, to seek out new allies and new civilizations. To boldly go where Star Trek has never gone before!" With apologies to Gene Roddenberry

Even with crib notes, building a fictional, futuristic universe isn't an easy task. Just ask Andromeda co-executive producer Robert Hewitt Wolfe and executive producer Allan Eastman. To begin a TV series from scratch can be a Herculean task. All aspects of a series the universe, characters, rules, special effects, costumes, plots right down to the design of the props, have to be thought out and realized. J. Michael Straczynski showed us that when it took him roughly five years to find backers interested in supporting Babylon 5.

Unlike B5, though, Andromeda didn't take five years to launch. The name Gene Roddenberry the revered creator of Star Trek, Star Trek: The Next Generation and the show that bears it, Earth: Final Conflict, now in its fourth season convinced Tribune Entertainment that lightning can strike four times. All it took was for Majel Barrett-Roddenberry to hand over a large stack of papers, rescued from her late husband's archives, and give them to Wolfe to see if he could craft a coherent TV series out of the materials.

"A lot of it was premises and scripts for shows that he was developing," says Robert Wolfe, who wrote 30 Star Trek: Deep Space Nine episodes and served as a producer during the series' last two seasons. "[It was] different story proposals and things like that. It was diverse elements, including ideas for another starship show. There were a million ways you could have gone with the material. But I was developing specifically for a starship-based show. What did come out of it was the concept of an artificial intelligence-driven starship with full sentience and personality. The character Dylan Hunt was a guy who came from a civilization who basically sleeps through the fall of a civilization and tries to restore civilization. Those were the principal elements." Executive producer Allan Eastman grins, "It began sitting around a table and sketching ideas out for each other, throwing cocktail napkins at each other with little drawings on them."

If certain elements and ideas in Andromeda appear familiar, that's because there are echoes from Roddenberry's unsold 1973 TV movie Genesis II, which starred Alex Cord and Mariette Hartley. In that film, NASA scientist Dylan Hunt was accidentally frozen in an underground chamber and revived in a post-apocalyptic future world where civilization had crumbled and a group of scientists were determined to rebuild it.

Ultimately, in sifting through Roddenberry's materials, Wolfe melded elements from three different sources to conjure up Andromeda. He brought in the Dylan Hunt name, which was a favorite of Roddenberry's, and the loose concept of Hunt being frozen and revived only to discover that civilization had fallen. He also brought in elements from a second series concept titled Starship now being developed with Stan Lee Media and filled out the remaining aspects of the series from his own original ideas.

"The bottom line is that there is less of Gene's original material in this than, say, Earth," says Wolfe. "In the case of Earth he had written two pilot scripts and a bible. So it says 'Created by Gene Roddenberry.' In the case of DS9, it was a totally different premise developed in a universe that he created. That's why it said 'Created by Rick Berman and Michael Piller. Based on Star Trek created by Gene Roddenberry.' This one is in the middle! He developed the universe, and the peripheral characters he did not develop. But the basic situation and the character Dylan Hunt are Gene's. So the crediting is 'Created by Gene Roddenberry. Developed by Robert Hewitt Wolfe.' "

Eastman recalls deciding that the Andromeda Ascendant's propulsion system would generate gravity waves. "We also wanted a ship that had 'Transformer' elements. It's a warship. As it would go into battle, it would take on more aggressive form." An "aggressive" looking starship was actually the early model of the ship, as illustrated by a painting hanging on Eastman's office wall. Appearing very similar to the final design, the early version had a different "texture map" on its surface and had a green tinge to it. The general shape of the craft was familiar, but the ships' contours were more curved or sloped.

"We had a symmetrical kind of form that didn't have a 'front to back,'" says Eastman, who has directed a wide variety of episodic sci-fi TV as a freelance director. "We went through many evolutions and played with many permutations. The last thing to do is make it beautiful." Executive Producer on the superhero Nightman series, Eastman's name is stamped on episodes of Sliders, Star Trek: Voyager and The Outer Limits. Notably, he helmed the series pilot for Earth: Final Conflict, and directed the first Andromeda episode, as well.

"The other thing that I felt strongly about was that [sci-fi author] Arthur Clarke had said, 'Any suitably advanced technology would appear to be magic' from the less advanced technology," continues Eastman. "We took that approach to separate the Andromeda from the Eureka Maru, [the ship that rescues the stuck-in-time Commonwealth starship]. This is a couple of hundred years after the Commonwealth had fallen. A great deal of technology had been lost. It's like what happened in the middle ages. Technology fell backwards for a period of time in human history. Technology and advanced ideas disappeared for a while. That's essentially what happens to the Commonwealth."

An interesting but discarded idea, reveals Eastman, was that the "Slipstream" chair the navigational console that a pilot uses to steer the ship in "Slipstream sub-space" was originally conceived as a 360-degree steel ball, the kind that you might see at NASA or at science museums. A pilot would step into the ball, arms and legs stretched outwards and standing, manipulate the ball every which way he could since to navigate in space there is no "up or down."

"We tried to make that work," says Eastman. "We tried to adapt it as something we would put right at the center of the bridge. Technologically, that didn't work out. It was also a practical consideration of shooting a television show. We tried really hard and had to come up with something on the short term." The idea was also abandoned when the filmmakers realized that "We were imagining how the lead actors really wouldn't want to go into it after lunch!"

To cast the lead role of Captain Dylan Hunt, the decision came down to Barrett-Roddenberry, who had long admired former Hercules star Kevin Sorbo. Once on board, Sorbo in turn had the luxury of choosing between the two premises that were in development: Andromeda and Starship. Once that choice was made, Wolfe's next task was to fill the universe with characters that would surround and interact with Sorbo's Hunt.

"Relationship is pretty easy to infer from the material," says Wolfe. "It's surrounding Dylan with foils, people who represent opposite or drastic personalities and approaches to life. For example, if [Dylan] is motivated by the restoration of civilization, you don't want to surround him with six people who are also motivated by the restoration of civilization or you have a show where everyone agrees with each other! It was basically figuring out Dylan's character and finding characters that would complement him. I came up with a couple of different takes on characters.

"There was a point where Tribune approached me and they wanted to use Keith Hamilton Cobb on the show. He's very great looking, has presence and they asked, 'Can you develop a character for him?' And I had already gone through Gene's stuff and came up with my own ideas for bad guys. Originally, I had the idea The starship Andromeda Ascendant.

© 2000 Tribune Entertainment

that his character would be one of [the bad guys]. But, given the opportunity to incorporate him into the show, I split the Beka character into the human female salvage captain [still called Beka Valentine] and this Nietzschean mercenary [named Tyr Anasazi]. So now we have development of those two characters."

As work continued, Wolfe had the unusual circumstance of having his lead actor assist and have a say in what actors would be joining the show. Casting can be a tricky game. Because it's not always possible to have chosen candidates rehearse scenes with each other, Wolfe says, "Sometimes you have to do it in your head. 'Well, is his style of acting going to complement or contrast sufficiently with this actor's style of acting?' Sometimes it get to the point where you say, 'Well, Keith and Kevin are both really tall! Do we want Rev Bem really tall also? What about Harper?'

"We need people to contrast with that. We need a variety of different types. Do we want every woman to be blond? Do we want every guy to be 6'3"? No. You want a nice mix of faces and personalities. It's important to me to find people who are close to the personalities of the characters that we're casting. In television, it's something that you do every day. The character is very much the invention of the actor and vice versa."

Being co-executive producer and developer of the series, Wolfe is in the remarkable position of, literally, being in Roddenberry's shoes. Has this experience given him insights to what it must have been like for Gene in 1964, in the days when the original Star Trek was first being made? "I think so—yeah, absolutely!" says Wolfe. "I had a much bigger helping hand than he did. It wasn't as much work for me, I don't think, as it was for him. [There's]+ more of a tradition of doing these types of shows now than there was when he was doing it. I think he was breaking new ground in trying to do a serious science fiction show set on a starship. I don't have to fight those battles.

"Sci-fi is more accepted. People know that it will work in the market. They're not quite as nervous about it. It doesn't always work, but they know there's a possibility of it working, which they didn't know when Star Trek went on the air. This is a better situation. Having the starting materials helped a lot. Eventually we had to sit down and develop a world. And that's fun! If that ain't fun, then I'm in the wrong job!"

What's also advantageous is that because Andromeda is in syndication, the company was afforded a luxurious 44-episode commitment in which to explore new worlds and new civilizations. But that, too, has its downsides. "Audience is not as large," admits Wolfe. "Timeslots are all over the place, so it's more difficult to conduct an advertising campaign. The budgets are lower. A successful network show has a lot more money to play with. There's definitely upsides and downsides to not being a network show. The upside is having 44 episodes. That's a wonderful thing."

Curiously, prior to the series' October premiere, there has been months of fan chatter on the Internet. Understandably, fans have often compared Andromeda to its stellar ancestor. Ultimately, says Wolfe, Star Trek does not influence Andromeda. "We're trying to be true to Gene's philosophy and what he thought was important in storytelling, [which is] trying to present interesting moral and ethical dilemmas for all the characters. We're trying to distinguish ourselves as much as possible from any other show set in a spaceship. Star Wars, Babylon 5, Space: Above and Beyond there have been a number of them over the years. We're trying to steer off course."

"It's not surprising to be [compared]. It's very natural. They're both shows about a starship. Kevin Sorbo stars as Capt. Dylan Hunt on Gene Roddenberry's Andromeda. It's not unreasonable to make those comparisons. Our hope is to distinguish ourselves gradually and present the show with its own merits."

Reaction to the series so far has been mixed, according to Wolfe. "People who have come to the show with an open mind have quite enjoyed the show," says Wolfe. "The ratings are very good. We've just gotten the word that we were the second highest rated show on Sky [the U.K. TV satellite service] for the week. We're building in a lot of markets week to week. That's good, because a lot of things go up against the [Baseball] World Series. That's a tough combination. Being a syndicated science fiction show, you might as well stab a big, fat target on your back!"

"Some Star Trek fans have been thrown out of whack, I would say," continues Wolfe, "expecting more of the same but getting something different. The difference between what they were expecting and what we're doing is jarring to some people. But, by and large, the response has been very good. There's a lot of fan Websites out there already. The buzz in the industry has been pretty positive. All things considered, the response has been really good. I think the episodes for the November sweeps are way better than what people have seen already. That would make the February sweeps even more of an event. The more we do it, the better we feel about it."

"It's a real team effort," adds Eastman. "It very much reflects how Robert and I put the show together. We both have liked science fiction since we were kids. We've seen every kind of science fiction movie or show. And we've worked on a great number of them. The things that we wanted to do in science fiction we've brought to the show."

"After the fifth or sixth episode, we get to a point where things really coalesce. [We see that] the actors are comfortable with their characters and the interactions between characters take on more interesting levels. The process really starts to build. We have episodes coming up where a really significant part of the action is driven by the visual effects. You have to be able to tell the stories visually. It's astounding what's happening in that field, particularly in the last five years. It's more executable in terms of getting what you want in visuals."

Although Roddenberry tried hard to launch other series during the 1970s, to little success, he continues to be universally identified as Star Trek's creator. But Earth's success, and Andromeda's potential success, speaks to his ability to create other successful properties, as well as how hard the whole process of launching new series really is.

"I think it just goes to show how hard it is to get a damn show on the air," agrees Wolfe, referring to Roddenberry's struggles. "I don't think anyone outside of Los Angeles realizes the great difficulty of getting a television show up and running. Look at Harsh Realm. It's [X-Files creator] Chris Carter. He's got a great track record, but yet, that didn't make a big splash. There's a lot of shows that you never hear about, that never get launched, with a lot of very talented writers associated."

"There's a lot of failed pilots out there. I don't think it's unusual that Gene was only able to get two projects launched in his lifetime as head writer/executive producer/creator[that's] pretty good! He worked on a lot of other shows. This is a business with a lot of ups and downs. Anyone who's been in it for a while begins to appreciate that getting a hit show on the air is an amazingly difficult thing to do.

"Gene's name has become associated with a certain kind of storytelling quality and there's a market for that. There's people who want intelligent science fiction shows. I think people want intelligent television shows period! The sci-fi genre is an attraction for some people. For others, it is a hard thing to overcome. But certainly there's always going to be a market for smart storytelling."

Recognizing Andromeda's roots from the Genesis II pilot, Eastman marvels at how Roddenberry's ideas have been resurrected for today's audience. "It's funny, the kernels of ideas and where they go. There are important issues that Gene raised about freedom, liberty, and about the evolution and advancement of civilization from individuals. Those are things worth fighting for and certainly worth expressing on a show."

ANGEL

Angel is given a sidekick (Glenn Quinn), a demon who has these visions that tell him Angel must do good in order to repent. Very isolated and anti-social, Angel is not good with people and has no idea how to help people when he can't help himself. This naturally looks like great fodder for the show as Angel has a nice vulnerable side. Despite all the people in the show being drawn to his good looks, Angel isn't hopping in bed with every woman he sees or coming off as the suave, debonair unstoppable bad-ass other shows of this nature might go for. This is a complex vampire with complex issues -- rounded out by a restrained and balanced performance by the always good Boreanaz (he makes even the most pathetic brooding look super cool).

Given the success of BUFFY THE VAMPIRE SLAYER, this spin-off looked to be a bankable prospect, especially as it was shown immediately afterwards. Joss Whedon had promised a combination of supernatural adventure with black humour. Angel's dark nature ought to be perfectly balanced by Cordelia's kookie personality. There were also occasional crossovers to help the audience become acquainted with the show with Spike and Oz in the third episode of season one and Buffy herself in the eighth episode. Joss Whedon comments, "Unlike Sunnydale, LA isn't a Hellmouth, but we're convinced that everything that comes out of a Hellmouth comes directly to LA."

Produced by Gail Berman (executive), Gareth Davies, Howard Gordon (consulting), David Greenwalt (executive), Fran Rubel Kuzui (executive), Kaz Kuzui (executive), Kelly A. Manners, Tim Minear, Marti Noxon (consulting), Robert Price (associate), Tracey Stern, Joss Whedon (executive). Original music by Christophe Beck, Film Editing by Regis Kimble, Casting by Anya Colloff, Jennifer Fishman, Amy McIntyre Britt. Set Decoration by Sandy Struth, Sound Department - Brydon Baker (sound), Special Effects - Michael Gaspar (special effects coordinator), Stunts - Chris C. Caso (stunt double: Angel - fight double: Angel), Brad Martin (stunt double: Angel - fight co-ordinator), James E. Mitchell (stunt double: Angel - martial arts fight double: Angel), Other crew include Dan Kneece (steadicam operator), James E. Mitchell (assistant fight co-ordinator), martial arts trainer: Mr. Boreanaz, Jose Molina (assistant to Howard Gordon), Jeannine Renshaw (staff writer), Jain Sekuler (script supervisor), Meredyth Smith (script co-ordinator), Jesse Stern (assistant to David Greenwalt). The special effects were created by Digital Magic Company, as well as the post-production services.

Dinner-dinner-dinner-dinner Angel! Well, okay, it doesn't quite work, but given the opening few minutes of the series' debut episode City of, you might be forgiven in thinking that Tim Burton's filmic hero had finally received the small-screen treatment he deserved. Except that with the arrival of Irish half-demon Doyle, complete with an agenda for Angel from the powerthat-be (which might be a reference to the hokey ending of Amends), the series is about to change into something a lot more obvious. Complete the set by introducing a seenit-all career policewoman (Detective Kate Lockley, introduced in Lonely Hearts) and you find yourself in a slightly weird cop show rather than anything a little more original.

It is of course a problem for a show to have a lead who's got soul when that soul cannot entertain any thoughts of happiness without, turning into the sort of monster who kills computer teachers for kicks. Tucked away into the shadows of Buffy The Vampire Slayer, Angel didn't need to have a startling personality or personal motives other than moping around: comic relief came from Cordelia and Xander, and the awareness of lore to help battle the monsters came from Giles. On his own, Angel has none of these, and although the programme creators have at least attempted to graft both of them onto him, they're not necessarily transplants that have taken. Although he can explain away his better knowledge these days with the simple "I read a lot", the lack of humour is harder to dismiss. It's required bringing one half of the Cordelia/Xander comedy partnership out to Los Angeles, and Charisma Carpenter continues to get all the best lines, deliver them perfectly, and do little else. Along with Glenn Quinn as Doyle (playing the Buffy Season Two Xander's role) she lifts the series up with a comic interplay that David Boreanaz is only allowed to look upon and do the startled badger stare he manages so well. The whole point about Angel is that he's locked away his personality for so long that he doesn't really have one: a big problem for the supposed central figure of a TV series.

And so under r continues Doyle's guidance, Angel , deliver help out people in need,almost always women-makes you wonder where the troubled guys of LA go to) for the main reason that he's supposed to interact with them; the one thing he's clearly unable to do. It's this human interest that divides Angel and Batman, and you can't help thinking that without the human baggage, the caped crusader is actually more interesting. In attempting to create a personality for its hero, Angel has to reduce, itself to a very limited damsel-in-distress plot every week. Still, there's a lot of value stored up in the Buffy franchise, and how appropriate that Angel is able to suck some lifeblood from Buffy and friends from time to time. Probably the two best episodes of the series so far have been those labelled by the gravely-voiced continuity announcer as "this week's crossover event special extravaganza-a-go-go" (well, that's what he means).

In both cases, In the Dark and I Will Remember You arrange temporary free transfers of significant characters from Buffy. Spike is at his most hilarious and villainous in the former episode (immediately stamping his credentials on In the Dark with a hilarious overdubbed rooftop commentary as he watches Angel below him) when he turns up only an hour after he was in Sunnydale for The Harsh Light of Day, battling Buffy for a mystical gem that would give him some very nifty powers including - possibly - a sun tan. I Will Remember You has Buffy arriving in LA to discuss some unresolved issues with the Cold One, and in the process David Boreanaz (who can act, as this episode shows: he's just rarely allowed to) and Sarah Michelle Gellar provide one of the strongest episodes of either Buffy series.

But has Angel developed any personality of its own, or is it limited to greatness only when Buffy and pals come calling? To answer this, you need to look at the non-crossover episodes. A third of the way through the season, there's only been one that's failed to work on any level whatsoever (except the sobad-it's-good level): 1 Fall to Pieces details the terror a plastic surgeon inflicts on the object of his affections by following her around with his detached bodyparts. Yes, really. There are some wonderful effects, but the basic premise is so full of faults that it has an area of the Richter scale all to itself. Normally an episode is viewed as a comedy episode because it's intentionally hilarious. It would be nice to think this was the idea behind I Fall, but

On the plus side, there are some very solid, competent stories. Room W/A Vu allows Cordelia to shine when she becomes locked in a battle over who possesses her new home, while The Bachelor Party finally explores Doyle's background a little. Sense and Sensitivity shows Kate in greater depth than in previous episodes - and gives Elisabeth Rohm some good scenes - but in all these cases, can you spot who is in the background...?

The pilot episode, City of, is the only one to really give Angel the chance to show that he's capable of carrying a series on his shoulders. It works very well - Boreanaz's dead-panned "It's good to see she's grown as a person" following an encounter with Cordelia is one of ' the best moments the series has so far provided - but that's only one episode out of eight. Thankfully, there is a gradual development of some back-story going on, with references in both City of and Sense to the mysterious legal company Wolfram and Hart, who protect their clients' interests, no matter how undead they might be. Of the regulars, is the only one really qualified to battle such a force, and hopefully his encounters with them will bring him to the fore. Who knows, for once a group of lawyers might actually save the day (and the show). How's that for a scary series concept?

Angel and Cordelia are still reeling from the demise of their friend Doyle when Barney, an empathic demon, arrives at Angel's office seeking his help in Parting Girls. It seems he's being chased by an even more powerful demon. Angel accepts the case, while Cordelia puts aside her grief long enough to audition for a commercial. During the audition (a riotous bit involving a stain remover), however, Cordelia experiences a vision. Doyle has passed on his gift (or curse, depending one's point of view) to Cordelia, who'd mistakenly thought he left nothing behind. Cordelia, of course, hates the gift. "I didn't ask for this responsibility," she gripes, "unlike some people who shall remain lifeless."

Of course, Barney isn't as helpless as he initially appears and that demon on his trail is no demon, but rather Wesley. "Bet you never thought you'd see me again," Wesley says to Angel, to which Angel coldly replies, "Actually, I never gave it much thought" Wesley goes on to explain that he's now a (motorcycle-riding, leather sporting) rogue demon hunter and then reveals certain secrets, which we won't ruin here. He does, however, ultimately join Angel on his quest to thwart Barney from audionting off Cordelia.

In general, I like Angel as a series, but this episode is emblematic of the show's flaws, which I've pointed out in the past. Boreanaz is definitely leading man material and there are flashes of warmth and humanity in his performance, but the character s a downer. Does he always have to look so grim? And as much as one might adore and be amused by Cordelia as our favourite self-involved, talentless would-be actress (and the episode even rfffs on that), it's still hard at times to warm up to her. As for Wesley, who apparently will turn up on a regular basis, he's so urbane and soft-spoken a character that he'll only slow the pace of a show that already often relies on smash-cult edits and roaring music to engineer a quickened pace.

1 - 1 MY NAME IS JAKE (1-2)

Sometimes weird things happen to people. Ask Jake. He might tell you about the night he and his friends saw the strange light in the sky. He may even tell you what happened when they realized the "light" was only a plane... from another planet. Here's where Jake's story gets a little weird. It's where they're told that the human race is under attack, and given the chance to fight back. Now Jake, Rachel, Cassie, Tobias, and Marco have the power to morph into any animal they choose. And they must use that power to outsmart an evil greater than anything that world has ever seen...

1 - 2 THE UNDERGROUND

The Animorphs try out the disk, but nothing happens. Jake and Marco realize that someone very close to Jake is a Controller. The Controller turns out to be Jake's brother, Tom. Jake wants his brother back, and he'll do anything to do it. They tried morphing out into ferocious animals from the clinic that Cassie's mother works in. Jake acquires a tiger and Rachel acquires a lion. They use it to try and free all of the humans in the Yeerk Pool located under the school. Their attempt ended with no free humans, without Tom, Tobias was gone (probably captured by the Yeerks), and the disk was lost.

The Andalite disk which Jake lost and Tobias are still missing. Jake and Marco get an e-mail in Cyberia from the Yeerks offering them a trade. They want to trade an Andalite for the disk. The Animorphs plan to trick the Yeerks by giving a normal animal to the Controller. The animal is not really Andalite, but they believe the Yeerks will assume that the "Andalite" is in morph. Jake morphs into a lizard to use thought-speak. Marco is caught shoplifting Jake (who is still a lizard), and had to morph into a rat to escape.

Rachel and Cassie go to a The Sharing meeting with Melissa. Rachel morphed into a fly to find out The Sharing's future plans that are coming up. Jake and Marco thought that they had the disk after finding it in the city garbage dump, which is where Jake had to morph into a Dog to rescue Marco. It sounded like something had crash-landed and needed help. Rachel was at her father's, so the Animorphs checked it out and found out that there was another Andalite on Earth. The Andalite has contacted Visser Three as well.

Now it's a race to find the source. If the Yeerks find the messenger first, the Andalite will become a Controller. Cassie, Marco, and Jake find the Andalite, but The Andalite does not believe them at first when they say that they are allies of the Andalites. Yeerks crave Instant Maple Oatmeal like a drug and cannot redeem control of their hosts but the Yeerk will always be in his head, and the new Yeerk Pool is under the whole town.

So the Animorphs have a new weapon, but how are they supposed to use it? They can't use it on the Controllers, that'd be like hurting the slaves to spite the slave owners.

At the restaurant, the Animorphs try to enter the Yeerk pool but it did not work because a Gleet BioFilter was there to destroy all life forms without Yeerks in their brains, but luckily, they escaped as roaches.

They have to go directly to the source, dig underground as ferrets. When they reached the Yeerk Pool, they threw Oatmeal into the Yeerk Pool, and a Hork-Bajir has taken down Tobias with a weapon. Rachel morphed a Lion to get rid of all the Human-Controllers in the way.

Jake gets trapped near the Yeerk Pool. Chapman steals the Disk from Tom's bag, and Tobias grabs the disk and he unlocks while Rachel was searching for him. Then he returns to human form because he can morph again!

Rachel meets up with Tobias outside, and is surprised to discover he's human again! Rachel tells Tobias of the Yeerk plot, and they decide they need to get down to the Yeerk pool. Marco, Cassie, and Ax, are not sure of what was going on but they were going to be infested by the new breed of Yeerks, along with all the other students. Jake (who is a lizard) gets caught in a room, and Tom thinks he has an Andalite so he is ready to use him to unlock the disk. Cassie and Ax are ready to become infested, while Tobias and Marco think of a way to get Jake out. Now the android, Erek, needs their help. The Yeerks have stolen the Chee hologram crystal and plan to use it to hide Yeerk pools from human eyes; so all the humans can only see a hologram. Erek can't touch the crystal himself; it would destroy his hologram, which is why he needs help from the Animorphs.

Jake, Rachel, and EreK try to find the crystal and steal it while Cassie and Marco wait in the forest for Ax to go with a machine that will produce holograms. EreK uses his garbage can hologram to fool the Controllers, and lock them up with a large piece of wire, and ties it up using his super-human powers, while Jake and Marco steal the crystal and they try to escape. AQUILA

Tom and Geoff are on their summer holidays when they discover an alien spaceship buried in an ancient Roman cave. They discover that they can fly in the spaceship, which is called "Aquila". "Aquila" is quite a remarkable craft having the ability to fly out at fast speeds, and is able to fire lasers and turn itself invisible. Tom and Geoff even use it to go to school and hide it on top of an old shed.

In the second series Tom and Geoff find out a lot more about the ship known as Aquila including some new weaponry which includes the ability to make people unconcise and the discovery of a ships log which has been kept for the last 6000 years which shows everywhere Aquila has been since it was created, and even in the final episode of the second season the boys going to Mars and finding that Aquila can have a mind of its own.

Aquila is fuelled by air, and comes equipped with a special invisibility function, enabling the boys to fly anywhere without being seen. One of Aquila's control buttons fires lasers, and with it the boy accidentally destroy several cars, a tree and a wheelie bin. Whilst their mothers and teachers are worried that the boys have been traumatized by the experience of discovering a skeleton, the Baxter's elderly neighbour, Mrs. Murry is the only person who suspects something else is going on, however no one believes her when she complains of hearing voices, and claims that aliens are on the loose disguised as schoolboys.

Andrew Norriss was also the creator the of SF children's show "Bernard's Watch". The BBC came back to form after a few lacklustre years of SF. "Aquila" is one of the best CHILDRENS SF shows of the late 1990s that the BBC produced. The special effects were well done despite what looks like a limited budget. The back story to the alien craft of "Aquila" is well thought out, but kept simple so as to not confuse children. The second series was shown twice weekly, seeing the show off the air in just 3 weeks. The second series was shown on BBC1 in late 1998. The Producer/Director was David Bell and the executive producer was Langridge.

Aquila was a British children's television show which aired on the BBC from 1997 to 1998. An episode was aired once a week, and was based on the story of two boys, Tom Baxter and Geoff Reynolds, who find a spacecraft when digging in a field. It was based on a book by British author Andrew Norriss and set in Bristol.

Discrepancies with the novel

In the television adaptation, Tom and Geoff do not find the ship on a school trip, but on holiday in the moors. Also, they are digging for 'treasure' in a field when Geoff falls into a hole as opposed to visiting an archaeological dig.

The power source of the ship is stated as water which was used in one of the episodes of the t.v programme. In the series, it is cleaning out the air vents which enables Aquila to function normally again.

The archaeologist who helps them is Dr. Warner in the book, a young woman. In the TV program, her role is replaced by a male Professor.

Mrs. Baxter's agoraphobia is written out of the series all together. Geoff's mother does not run a newsagents as in the book, and his father is away for months at a time instead of running the newsagents with her.

Deputy Headmistress Miss Taylor is replaced in the TV series by a Headmaster. There are also differences to the school staff.

A new storyline is written into the series involving Aquila giving Tom green skin and supernatural strength for a day

Trivia

Aquila is a liferaft from a larger ship, built by the Yrillians from the planet Deneb.

The ship can fly an almost infinite distance, and can fly in space without the need for crew spacesuits, but the air inside the ship would only last for 6 hours which was featured in one of the episodes of the television series.

Some other abilities of the ship include invisibility, a form of verbal remote control, lasers and a holographic interface.

The craft also contains a lie detector which can be used to target an individual from a long distance. It was used in one of the episodes to determine whether or not an archaeologist who was excavating the site where the boys found the craft, was lying about his discovery of a broken handle of Aquila's two handled flight control joystick. Naturally, he was in denial about the find. Using this feature in Aquila, the boys were able to obtain the rest of the joystick handle from the archaeologist by theft, and restore it to the craft.

Aquila can be programmed to execute basic manoeuvres from the detection of certain signals. This feature was used (unintentionally) when the boys program it to travel to the location of an inaudible dog whistle. The problem arose when a dog owner blew his own whistle when the craft was in invisible mode in a large park. This rendered the craft missing and a lengthy operation by the boys was needed to recover it.

Aquila has the ability to demolish objects by flying directly through them. This ability was used by the boys when they flew it through a brick wall while discovering some of Aquila's capabilities. After inspection by the boys, the craft was found completely unharmed.

In the episode "Energy Levels" the craft starts to drain of power. The boys do some investigating and discover that the craft is powered by water. They leave a hose pipe running over the craft to restore the power, not air as is usually thought.

Aquila stores everything it sees on egg shaped objects which can be played back on the holographic screen. It records approximately 1600 years of data. If the eggs are not replaced, then the ship starts recording over the start of the 'footage' - this occurs in an episode of the television series.

Aquila is the Latin translation of the word eagle. The words inscribed inside the ship, "Licat volare si super tergum aquila volat," translate as "A man can fly where he will, if he rides on the back of an eagle." This proverb was derived from an ancient Greek story, where one day, the gods decided to elect the noblest bird of all by having them race to the top of Mount Olympus. The eagle appeared to be winning, but the tiny sparrow had been resting on the eagle's back for the entire race, and at the last moment leapt up and won the race.

"Aquila" is the English translation of the original title, as the Romans didn't have the letter "u", so the title should be "Aquila", which is inscribed upon the nose of the craft and also appears in the title sequence.

ARASHI

AKA: HENSHIN NINJA ARASHI

Though famous in her native Japan, the superheroine Arashi is almost unheard of in the West. Arashi has no known superpowers, instead she relies on technology. An advanced jetcycle armed with forward mounted rapid fire weaponry is her preferred method of transport. A cyber helmet presumably augments her senses as well as protecting her. An energy or flame cannon on her right arm makes her a fearsome opponent. Unfortunately for Arashi, she was no match for Green Lantern's frequent enemy, Doctor Polaris. The supervillain plotted to obliterate Japan as the first stage of his latest bid for world domination.

Arashi's weaponry had no effect on the master of magnetism. Doctor Polaris slammed Arashi and her jetcycle into the side of a bus, breaking her right arm. Diverted from his plan to destroy Japan, Polaris intended to kill the superheroine. The battle was horribly one-sided as Arashi's unconscious body was hurled through the air, into the side of the Okonai building.

Her impact was softened somewhat by an unusual obstacle, Green Lantern Kyle Rayner. Arashi was saved from a fall to the streets of Tokyo by the ring wielder. He removed her helmet to make sure she was still breathing. Satisfied her condition was stable enough for him to leave her, Green Lantern entered the battle in her place. Rayner was soon joined by another American super-hero, the Ray. Together, the young heroes were able to defeat Polaris and save Japan from a monstrous tidal wave.

Some time later, Arashi returned to her civilian identity and her job at Okonai, a games manufacturer. Ms. Ohashi had her arm in a cast before she met her afternoon appointment, Kyle Rayner, a freelance artist from the United States. She was impressed by his dedication to his artwork, specifically his hand-delivery of designs for her company. She would have been more impressed had she realised Kyle Rayner was also the ring wielding Green Lantern. Though Rayner recognised her as Arashi, he has not revealed this to her.

Plot #2

During the early years of the Edo period (1603-1868), a ninja clan calling itself 'Chiguruma Tou' (The Blood Wheel Clan) had begun its rise to power. Led by the menacing figure known as Majin Sai, this clan planned on uniting Japan under its ultimate rule.

One of its most skillful members is the ninja known simply as Hayate. Hayate believed that 'Chiguruma Tou' was a noble clan and that its intentions were good. However, he soon realized that 'Chiguruma Tou' had a much more sinister agenda.

Hayate's father, Tani No Majyu (another loyal 'Chiguruma Tou' clansman) had discovered and developed the 'Ninja Henshin Jitsu' (Ninja Transforming Magic/Techniques) that enabled man to transform into super powerful 'Keshin Ninjas' (Spiritual Ninjas) who would be able to summon and utilize their own inner mystical powers. Majin Sai wanted to use this technique to further 'Chiguruma Tou's' cause and make their warriors invincible. Tani No Majyu resisted handing Majin Sai the secrets to this technique believing that in the wrong hands, this technique could pose a monumental threat to Japan. Majin Sai sent one of his 'Youkai Ninjas' (Supernatural Ninjas) to steal the secrets of this technique. In the process Tani No Majyu was killed but not before he had shown Hayate the secrets of this process. Enraged, Hayate uses these techniques to tap into his inner mystical powers and becomes the super powered ninja 'Arashi' (Storm).

Vowing to destroy the clan that he once faithfully served, Hayate declares war against the demonic forces of 'Chiguruma Tou'.

This show is like a samurai variation on the kamen rider story, as it was made by the same folks, in collaboration with the creators of the popular AKA KAGE (red Shadow Ninja) series! The story took place in samurai days, as the blood wheel clan, lead by a metallical robot like figure Majin Sai, and his sorcerer, Gaigotsu Maru (Skull Maru), finds a way to transform ninjas into animal-human ninjas, like a mantis ninja, owl ninja, crawfish ninja, etc! They try to take over Japan, but one of the members of the clan, who created this ninja art, uses it on his own son, as he becomes Henshin ninja (Transforming ninja!) Arashi!

After 20 episodes battling the blood wheel clan, Majin Sai had enough of Gaigotsu Maru's failure, so he buries him under his base, and summons the Hell Priest, who has the power to call monsters from all over the world! He summons Frankenstein's monster, gremlin, medusa, gorgon, mummy, Dracula, werewolf, golem, but of course they are all destroyed by Arashi! Even Kenji Ushio appears as a doppelganger! And at this point, Arashi's long lost brother, Tsukinowa (Moon Mask) helped out as well!

In the end, after Majin Sai is defeated, but then Satan comes out and tries to take over Japan. and he was played by none other than genre favorite Eisei Amamoto! And Kenji Ushio appears as another character, a new regular to help Arashi out! At this point, Arashi learns a new finisher, Gun Beam, in which he emits a laser beam from his eyes, destroying the European ghouls! Because of the appearance of the many familiar European ghouls, I think most American fans of this genre will get a kick out of seeing Frankenstein speak Japanese! Or even Dracula and mummy! Another great classic from Toei!

Produced by Tohru Hirayama, Original music by Shunsuke Kikuchi.

Henshin Ninja Arashi

Hayate was once a trusted aid to Majin Sai, the imposing leader of the shadow clan known as 'Chiguruma Tou'. Hayate had naively believed that 'Chiguruma Tou' was a force of good and that its warriors were out to save Japan. After the death of his father at the hands of 'Chiguruma Tou', Hayate soon realized that he had been duped by Majin Sai and thus vowed to destroy the clan that he had once faithfully served.

Hayate is a skilled ninja warrior who is a master with the sword. He is incredibly athletic and able to perform complex acrobatic and gymnastic movements. Carries a sword he christens 'Hayakaze' (Faster Than The Wind)

Before his death Tani No Majyu had related to Hayate the secret techniques needed to tap into his inherent mystical powers to become the powerful form of 'Arashi'. Hayate transforms into Arashi by utilizing his sword 'Hayakaze' and shouting the command Fukeyo Arasahi, Arashi, Arashi! (Rise/Summoning Storm, Storm, Storm!)

Arashi is a 'Keshin Ninja' (Spiritual Ninja) that is a reflection of Hayate's inner power. Arashi has many supernatural powers at his command. He can jump (fly) great distances, has incredible strength, stamina and resilience to injury. In addition, Arashi is able to call upon a number of Ninja techniques and magic to battle his enemies, such as his 'feather shurikens' and 'bunshin jitsu' (illusionary shadow attack).

Arashi's ultimate attack technique is his 'Hisatsu No Higen Kage or Higen Ninpo Kage Utsushi' (Invisible Blade -Ninja Shadow Attack).

Arashi's trusted steed is 'Haya Busao' which can gallop at incredible speeds and had above normal intelligence

In his final battle with Grand Emperor Satan, Arashi blew up his flying fortress, the 'Yokai Jyo'. While the resultant explosion killed Grand Emperor Satan, it also unfortunately claimed Arashi himself. It was later revealed that Hayate survived the ordeal but that his 'Arashi' persona was 'killed' and that he could no longer transform into this form.

Henshin Ninja Arashi's Allies

Hayate is aided in his battles by a small but trusted group of friends and allies which includes:

Tatsumaki (Thunder)

A Ninja agent of the Edo Government, Tatsumaki was sent to investigate and stop the mayhem being caused by 'Chiguruma Tou'. While middle aged, Tatsumaki is still none-the-less a skillful and talented Ninja operative who is able to hold his own against many of 'Chiguruma Tou's' inhuman agents.

Kasumi

Tatsumaki's beautiful daughter. Kasumi is also a very skilled ninja who specializes more in disguises and covert operations. While not the best of fighters, she more than makes up for this in her resourcefulness. When she and her father need help she calls Hayate using the music of her Japanese Flute Suzu Kaze (Wind Bell).

Tsumuji

Tatsumaki's youngest child. Despite his size and age, young Tsumuji is quite a skillful ninja. He is particularly adept at using throwing stars and can throw them with decidedly deadly accuracy.

Tsuki No Wa (Moon Circle/Halo)

Mysterious costumed swordsman who occasionally comes to Arashi's aid. While he is not a 'Keshin Ninja' like Arashi, he still utilizes a number of special 'Ninja Jitsu' (Ninja Magic/Techniques) in order to battle his opponents. His ornate Red Mask can repel sword and shuriken attacks. He can also fire blinding rays of light which can temporarily blind his opponents. It is later revealed that he is Hayate's twin brother, Fuyute who had been separated from him at birth.

Kageri/Tsuyuha

Members of the Iga Kunoichi (Iga Female Ninjas). These sisters were sent by the Iga Ninja clan to help Hayate in his battle with the various forces of the 'Chiguruma Tou'. They are both skillful fighters who usually work in unison to battle opponents. They are very adept at gymnastics and acrobatics.

Chiguruma Tou

The 'Chiguruma Tou' (The Blood Wheel Clan or Clan of the Bloody Wheel) was a small but influential clan who opposed the Edo Government. They were rivals of the Iga and Yagyu Ninja clans. They had conspired to topple the Edo Government by force and ultimately rule Japan under their iron fist. Their leader was the menacing Majin Sai. Stealing the secrets to creating 'Keshin Ninjas' (Spiritual Ninjas), 'Chiguruma Tou' created an army of monstrous and grotesque Ninja agents who had various unique and abnormal abilities.

It was later revealed that Majin Sai and his 'Chiguruma Tou' faction had been but unwitting 'puppets' to the insidious and diabolical plans of Dai Maoh Satan (Grand Emperor Satan). Grand Emperor Satan was the absolute leader of all the world's 'Yokai' (ghosts). Grand Emperor Satan wanted to destroy the Edo government and take control of all of Japan with his supernatural forces.

The main villains are:

Majin Sai (Devil Sai) Menacing leader of the 'Chiguruma Tou' faction. Wears steel armor that can repel hits from swords and shuriken. Wields a gigantic spear that can slice a human in half. His left hand is fitted with a sharp hook/claw. His flowing black cape can envelop and suffocate his opponents. Through Ninja Magic, he can elongate his long white hair and use it to ensnare his victims. (His steel plated mask oddly resembles 'Darth Vader's' helmet mask [which it predates by a good five years]).

Gaikotsu Maru (Skull Maru) - Majin Sai's ghostly Lieutenant. Is animated through the blood of dead corpses. Could be considered a homunculus (artificially created human). Due to his supernatural origins and the fact that he has two hearts, he is incredibly resilient and strong (he can last almost half a year without eating). He feeds on his victim's blood. He has mastered numerous Ninja Magic techniques and is a superb fighter that can easily stand his own against Arashi.

Akuma Doujin (Demon Master/Teacher) - Frustrated by the many defeats of the 'Keshin Ninjas' sent by Majin Sai against Arashi, Grand Emperor Satan secretly arranged to have Akuma Doujin sent to Japan to aid the 'Chiguruma Tou' in their battle against Arashi, Akuma Doujin is a master warlock who can use his abilities to command various supernatural forces.

Daimaoh Satan (Grand Emperor Satan) - Supreme Master of all of the world's supernatural beings and forces. The personification of evil and chaos. Commands his forces from within a 'flying saucer' base he dubs his 'Yokai Jyo' (Ghost Fortress). His 'Yokai Jyo' hovers many miles above Japan. It was he who called forth to Japan the world's most nefarious and diabolical monsters and ghosts (Yokai) to combat Arashi. He is practically indestructible and even able to survive decapitation and dismemberment. Arashi was only able to destroy him by blowing up his 'Yokai Jyo'.

Daimaoh Satan's army included the following notable monsters (note that some of the regions that the monsters were called from weren't in existence during the 16th-18th Century):

Dracula - summoned from Scotland.

Franken (Frankenstein's Monster) - summoned from West Germany.

The Wolfman - summoned from London, England.

The Mummy - summoned from West Egypt.

Trivia

Henshin Ninja Arashi debuted at around the same time as P-Pro (P Productions) more famous Jidaigeki Tokusatsu (Samurai Tokusatsu) show 'Kaiketsu Lion Maru' (Resolved! Lion Maru; P-Pro/Fuji TV, 1972).

The similarities between the two shows are almost strikingly uncanny:

Like Henshin Ninja Arashi, Lion Maru is also about a young Ninja (Shishimaru) who uses Ninja Magic to transform into the mystical/supernatural form of Lion Maru (a White Lion based form) to battle an evil Ninja Clan/Shadow Empire trying to usurp power from the Edo Government. As in Henshin Ninja Arashi, Lion Maru/Shishimaru is also aided by a group of younger Ninjas (the siblings Kazumi & Kosuke) who also summon Lion Maru via a flute. The main villain Daimaoh Gosun (Grand Emperor Gosun) is also an evil supernatural force similar to his Henshin Ninja Arashi counterpart Daimaoh Satan. While Tsuki No Ma helped his rival Arashi, Lion Maru's counterpart, the flamboyant Tiger Joe was Lion Maru's most dangerous opponent (think 'Kikaider's' Hakaider). Lion Maru later spawned an inferior sequel the following year called 'Fuun Lion Maru' (Tempest! Lion Maru; P-Pro/Fuji TV, 1973). The name may be a deliberate swipe at 'Henshin Ninja Arashi'.

While it is hard to say who imitated who, suffice to say that 'Lion Maru' was the longer running of the two and is considered by some as the more superior show of the two similarly themed shows.

Nanjou Tatsuya also portrayed the hero Takigawa Go in Fuji TV's 'Tiger Seven'(P-Productions; 1973).

Maki Fuyukichi played sidekick to another famous TV Ninja, Aka Kage (Red Shadow) in the Kansai TV program 'Ninja Akakage' (Toei Kyoto; 1967). Maki played the ninja with the weird hairdo known as 'Shiro Kage' (White Shadow).

Pretty Hayashi Hiroko released a number of minor singles during the 70's including 'Hohoemi' (Smile; Canyon, 1974), 'Hirasagari No Yume' (Afternoon Dream; Canyon, 1974), 'Kebyo Ga Jyozu Na Otokonoko' (The Boy Who Plays Sick; Canyon, 1974), 'Shiroi Madobe' (White Window Sill; Canyon, 1975), 'Suteki Na Lover Boy' (Wonderful Lover Boy; Canyon, 1975), 'Come On Baby' (Canyon, 1976) and 'Kiken Ga Ippai' (Dangerous; Canyon, 1976).

Kiku Yoko is familiar to Tokusatsu fans as the beautiful Tsuki Hikaru, heroine of the Toei action/comedy series 'Tsuki! Tsuki! Majou Sensei' (Love! Love! Magical Teacher; Toei, 1971).

Utsuo Kenji is probably better known as the villainous Jikoku Taishi (Ambassador Hell) in the 'Kamen Rider' series.

Sone Harumi has appeared in a number of Sci-Fi and Horror movies including 'Wolf Guy ' Moero Okami Otoko (Toei, 1975), and 'Uchu Kara No Message' (Message From Space; Toei, 1975). Recently Sone helped produce the Miike Takashi video shocker 'Kyoku Dou Kyofu Dai Gekijou - Gozu' (Grand Theatre of Extreme Horror - Gozu; Toei Video, 2003).

Naya Goro is most familiar as the voice behind Lupin's persistent nemesis Detective Zenigata in the long running anime 'Lupin The Third' (Tokyo Movie, 1971). Naya also voiced the commanding figure of Okita Jyuzou (Captain Avatar) in the outstanding Japanese series 'Uchu Senkan Yamato' (Space Battle Cruiser Yamato; Office Academy, 1974) and hero Ultraman Ace in 'Ultraman Ace' (Tsuburaya, 1972).

ARCHER'S GOON

It all began when the Goon came to Howard Syke's house, demanding Archer's 2,000. But who was Archer and why did they owe him 2,000?

Diana Wynne Jones is a very famous UK writer who has been writing SF novels since the early 1970s, but is best known for her fantasy novels. Considered to be her best novel is Archer's Goon (1984), which this serial is based on.

Each episode begins with a simple but interesting credit sequence showing the Goon looming menacingly at Howard's shoulder as a series of exaggerated masks stream off behind Howard into infinity. This may possibly allude to the layers of deception and disguised identity, if even if it doesn't it's still an intriguing, slightly cartoonish image that lends itself well to the visual absurdity to follow. This is accompanied by an effective but economical, thumping brassy-noted title theme that suggests approaching menace and then trails off into an almost whimsical background tune.

The plot closely mirrors that of the book with only slight deviations, usually for pacing the episodes or due to the limited budget for special effects, aided by the concise and intelligent script, and by the vast majority of the performances. One exception however is an - in my opinion - unforgivable and drastic addition to the dialogue in the final episode which I will cover later.

The early scenes in the Sykes household are particularly well realised, capturing the slightly bohemian rules of the house and the eccentric characters that both inhabit and squat there. Of the characters introduced in Episode One, Morgan Jones' Goon, Susan Jameson's Catriona Sykes and Angela Forry's Awful are particularly effective, Jones quickly establishing himself as scene-stealer extraordinaire (as is right). With simple but effective help from the costume department, Jones is given with the addition of a suitably battered leather jacket, enormous boots and a comical cowlick a la Tin Tin, the embodiment of the 'tiny head on a huge body' so specific to the novel. He then adds his own loping lumbering walk and an amusing vocal delivery that helps to firmly establish his character in only a few sentences.

Susan Jameson is one of Britain's most underrated character actresses in my opinion and brings her usual superb, professional and understated performance to this production. Her Catriona Sykes is absolutely perfect, from her 'agonised music teacher with headache' blindly stumbling around the kitchen before salvation-by-tea, practically lifted from the printed page, to her tolerant befuddlement when unexpectedly faced with catering for a Goon demanding an unprecedented 2000 words. Where on occasion some of the actors mistake shouting for emphasis, Jameson remains calmly understated and extremely effective.

A special mention should be made of Angela Forry's able performance as Awful. She manages to navigate a role that potentially hovers bare inches from brattishness with surprising skill for her age and consequently much credit. She instils Awful with the right amount of slyness and manipulative guile and has a marvellous vocal stridency that oddly doesn't grate.

The only immediately apparent casting misstep appears to be the role of Howard (Venturus), as portrayed by newcomer Jamie De Courcey (for British TV viewers of a certain age, the son of 'Nookie Bear' operator Roger!). Although the Howard of the novel is meant to be teetering on the brink of puberty, De Courcey's agonisingly wavering voice and subsequent lack of conviction means that he consistently fails to capture centre stage when it is vital he do so. Although able enough as an actor, his tendency to blush constantly is also highly distracting and leads to his character coming across either as ineffectual and weak or disturbingly hyper-hormonal, depending on whom he shares the scene with. In the scene where he and the Goon visit Mountjoy and the first mysteries of the plot unfold, De Courcey fails miserably to inject drama and is unable to dominate the scene. Consequently the revelation of the family farming the town is weakly handled and lacks impact.

Overall, episode one is very pleasing, apart from the aforesaid tendency for characters to shout to one another as a substitute for characterisation and a lack of drama in the revelation at the end of the episode from Mountjoy that the town is under the control of others. There are occasional problems which momentarily jar - the knife that the Goon throws at Howard and Awful is quite obviously an old-style can-opener poorly covered with prism foil and the zooming knife effect is a staggeringly bad effect, but these are easily mitigated by the confident scene setting.

The performances are again the driving force, as the complex plot is skilfully unravelled so as not to overtax the audience. The Goon is beginning to develop delightful nuances and Morgan Jones just keeps cementing his place as star of the piece, with his jaw-splitting grins and puppyish fluster in the face of Catriona's rod of iron. His confident and skilful delivery of eccentric-sounding but critical lines of dialogue helps add weight to them and enables scene setting effects like the sounding drums that signify Torquil's observation and influence to appear dramatic rather than silly. He and Roger Lloyd Pack as Quentin are also obviously enjoying their double act as they verbally start to butt heads. Both have extremely mobile features and they use them to good effect. Fifi has thankfully regressed to become the ineffectual flutterer of the novel, having been far too together and forthright in episode one for my liking.

When visiting Dillian to retrieve the original 2000 words there are pleasing visual cues, such as a passing police car as Dillian's name is mentioned that are again simple but very successful. The scenes at Dillian's mansion meet with varying degrees of success. Michelle Newell is well cast as Dillian, playing the role as an ageing, fading drama queen, with improbably bleached blonde hair and over the top gown, coupled with convincing brittle and aloof bearing and disdain. The mansion setting however is something of a letdown - the décor is simply not sumptuous enough (surely they could have filmed the interiors in a suitable stately home?) and it appears that they partake of their bewitched tea and cakes in the lobby. Dillian's dress is frightful and undermines the previous good work of the costume department; The fabric looks cheap and the addition of what appear to be poorly stuffed cherub Beanie-Babies on each shoulder makes the outfit look like the aftermath of a bloodbath at the TY Beanie factory.

The visit to Archer works more consistently. There is good use of simple matt effects to create Archer's vast hi-tech domain and Thomas Lockyer is both handsome and cold-eyed enough to breathe despotic life into Archer, with constant, lightning fast mood shifts. Both Lockyer and Newell are also able to convey an otherworldly lack of concern for mere mortals in their scenes that is critical in avoiding the story descending into farce. Again, De Courcey radiates embarrassment, blushing furiously throughout his scenes for no readily apparent reason, although the effect is mitigated somewhat by the blinding pomposity of Quentin versus the smiling psychopath of Archer. Lloyd Pack is known primarily as a comedic actor but here he is an opinionated and bossy hothead and he more than sells the scene.

Finally Howard appears to have been given a change of clothes. Normally I wouldn't concern myself with this, but it makes it appear as if all the preceding events happen in a single day and I was always of the opinion that there was a slower build up in the novel.

The orchestra practice lacks the chaotic discordance of the book and there is no visual equivalent of Diana Wynne Jones' wonderfully evocative descriptions, although Susan Jameson again captures centre stage with a faultless performance seemingly lifted word for word from the book. She is the embodiment of every gamely coping teacher ever encountered and her scenes are never allowed to stray into the risible.

Torquil's on-paper grand entrance is sadly curtailed by the limited budget - he has the necessary choirboys and dancers but the crowd is far too thin and there is consequently no real sense of the reality of Torquil's power. Andrew Normington's performance is simply delightful however, with clipped, precise diction and a convincing regal bearing he carries the scene practically single-handedly. Although (again) his costume is a poorly executed realisation of a good idea which could easily have undermined his performance, he pulls off his lines with aplomb and during the scene in the car is able to suggest his power through dialogue, something the budget failed at.

The Syke's household with its constant noise requires no additional expenditure on visual effects so is therefore executed far more successfully. The disquiet of the neighbours as the family (plus Goon) 'dig in for the duration' is amusing and the scenes where the forlorn and lovestruck Goon starts playing hard to get with Fifi amid the interring of ghetto blasters and midwinter barbecues are delightful.

The sight of a single float with an on-board steel band is not reassuring. Someone perhaps needed to have indicated to the production staff that one float does not a parade make, and that therefore the idea fails.

Thankfully the episode's entire budget seems to have gone instead on the hugely impressive road crew and diggers, and an amusingly persistent ice cream van that then materialises.

Amidst the visual chaos there is a peculiar scene which involves Hathaway's (I assume) Elizabethan messenger. He is mystifyingly depicted as having an odd lisp, which the other characters find hysterically amusing and which I found to be extremely distasteful. Even if the intent was to evoke the Elizabethan writing style it is misguided, inaccurate and silly, and more importantly succeeds only in appearing insensitive and offensive to those with speech impediments, something that never would have arisen in Diana Wynne Jones' novels. A disappointing jarring scene.

Again the budget lets them down and it is obvious that the money allocated is simply not sufficient for what is required. It isn't even a case of money being thrown at a production, merely that what they are given is inadequate to produce any relatively ambitious multi-part drama. Archer's car is simply not impressive enough - instead of a huge powerful car he has a frankly nondescript mid-range Mercedes saloon car that looks like it has been hired from a taxi company.

Gripes aside, the characterisation and direction again triumph over budget limitations. Small things delight - the workmen cheerfully and gallantly lifting Fifi over the trenches for her date with destiny is a particular gem. Archer and Fifi are perfectly perfect, schmoopily oblivious and simultaneously callous of the other character's concerns which works well, and the Goon's despair is made tangible by Jones' mobile features and mournful howls. Lloyd Pack is a little too direct in his scenes with Archer, needing more pomposity and obstinacy rather than aggression as their scenes degenerate a little towards violent conflict but all the necessary information is imparted without mystifying the audience or bogging it down with exposition.

The visit to Shine Town opens out the plot again, something that needed doing. Although the neon signs that signify their entry into Shine's seedier side of town look too recent, similar and tacked on, Shine's boudoir with its wall of viewcreens displaying the town's crimes enables a neat visual explanation of the control that the family members exert on the town. Shine herself is well depicted, the somewhat rotund Annette Badland gamely cramming herself into a stunning studded leather dress and toting a machine gun with genuine menace. It is a shame that the escape scene is so poorly realised as it slightly mars the heroics of the Goon coming to their rescue - and Jamie De Courcey is so wet and whiney during the 'fight' that you could shoot snipe off his back.

At the Sykes household the disruptions continue, although this has the effect of triggering even more shouting between characters which becomes rapidly tedious. The subsequent visit to Hathaway a blessed relief as it involves no shouting and allows the viewer time to once more process the preceding information. Jamie De Courcey lacks subtlety in this scene and is struggling against Clive Merrison's gentle and sympathetic Hathaway but a real disaster is the dreadful 'cliff-hanger' break, so poorly placed and executed that it ruins any drama and indeed becomes risible when immediately followed by the next episode.

Following the poorly handed adoption revelation, Angela Forry again excels, bringing genuine wistfulness to her scenes and managing to convey a real sense of a parent's exasperated outburst when faced with a wilful child. Quite simply she acts De Courcey off the screen and she also interacts well with Merrison - another accomplished character actor of note - as De Courcey again fails to grasp his moment. The following scenes with a drunken Awful descend into cringingly bad with rapidity but are redeemed by Goon's mournful demolition of the TV as he loses Fifi to Archer.

The trip to find the elusive Erskine is well handled, again demonstrating how a limited SFX budget needn't hamstring a production. Judicious use of matt effects creates a believable sewer and the action is then capably integrated with footage shot at a standard recycling plant. The dramatic peaks are maintained this time as the Goon is revealed to be Erskine, and all the cast members manage to hold their own. Jones again shines as he shifts from affable accomplice to shifty guide to out and out threat as he makes his play for control, becoming extremely menacing as he refuses to go through the same paces yet again.

The escape and chase scene both work well, De Courcey seeming more comfortable when working alone, and his awesomely cracking vocalisation for once counting in his favour as it suggests real panic in the main chase sequence. The director is able to show how each family member sends aid when their name is invoked, although a minor gripe is that this is afforded very little dramatic impact and narrative clarity when it is central to the plot.

The scenes where Howard finally enters Venturus' building and transforms are extremely good. De Courcey

ARE YOU AFRAID OF THE DARK? (1992)

Are you afraid of the dark? Was an anthology series of horror stories for young adults, but with some science fiction stories floated in for good measure. Some stories which have science fiction overtones include "The Tale of the Captured Souls", in which a young girls parent begin to age rapidly, in "The Tale of the Thirteenth Floor" in which a new tow factory offers children free tours hoping to find children descended from aliens. In "The Tale of the Renegade Virus" a boy becomes trapped in a virtual reality game which has become infected with a computer virus. Most other stories evolved around ghosts or other paranormal occurrences.

Are you afraid of the dark? Has a large group of hosts, all of them youths, who are members of the Midnight society, a group that meets late at night for meetings around the campfire where the members tell scary stories to each other. In order for someone to become a new member of the Midnight Society, they are brought to the meeting blindfolded by a current member and must tell a horror story to all of the club members. A vote is taken on the story and if it gets a unanimous approval the person is accepted, if not her or she is unable to join. The stories that are told all have youths as the protagonists and have no gore in them. The series is produced in Canada as a US/Canadian co-production. In Canada it was run on the YTV network and Nickelodean in the US and UK, as well as the BBC in the UK. This show was a spooky and scary show for kids before it was popular to be scary for kids, and that makes it very hip.

ARMY OF THE APES

AKA: SARA NO GUNDAN

AKA: THE APE CORPS

AKA: TIMES OF THE APES

Cryogenic researcher Kazuko (Takunaga) is fooling around in the laboratory with her friends Jiro (Kaji) and Yurika (Saito) when the facility is struck by a major earthquake. Hiding inside the cold sleep chamber for protection, they are inadvertently frozen. They emerge years later to find the world ruled by highly evolved Apemen, who have all but exterminated the human race. Teaming up with a human survivor Godo (Ushio), they become involved in the growing strife between gorillas and chimpanzees, all the while searching for a way to somehow reverse their trip in time.

This they eventually do with the aid of a conventional flying saucer, though when they finally awake in the wrecked lab, it is suggested that their adventures might have been a dream all along.

Army of the Apes was broadcast a mere month after the U.S debut of the Plants of the Apes TV series (which itself reached Japan on Fuji TV in 1975) and was similarly inspired by the 1968 movie and the spin-offs that followed. Despite the obvious pedigree, the idea for the Japanese series was credited to SF writers Sakyo Komatsu, Koji Tanaka and Aritsune Toyota. Since the ape actors were not able to speak their lines through their masks, their dialogue was added in post-production, by a number of voice actors who were better known for their work in Anime included Ichiro Nagai, Hiroko Kikuchi and Koji Yada. Part of the series was dubbed for the US market by Sandy Frank in a 90 minute movie edit under the title Time of the Apes (1975), in which form it graced the TV show MYSTERY SCIENCE THEATRE 3000. For this version the leads were renamed Kathryn, Johnny and Caroline.

PLANET OF THE APES

ASHES TO ASHES

It's 1981 and DCI Gene Hunt is back and he's swapped his Ford Cortina for an Audi Quattro, but is the 'The Manc Lion' we met in Life on Mars turning soft?

Gene turns his attentions to taking on the "southern nancy" criminal scum and flanked by his faithful sidekicks DS Ray Carling and DC Chris Skelton, he transfers down South to the London Met. But Gene gets a surprise when he is thrown together with a sexy, ambitious and intelligent officer in the shape of single mother DI Alex Drake.

Alex has risen rapidly through the ranks of the Met and in the modern world of 2008 is renowned for using her skills as a psychological profiler to capture suspects. But Alex is ripped from her current world of equality and respect when she and her daughter are kidnapped. She is shot while making a bid for freedom and wakes up in a brothel in 1981, surrounded by men who look like something out of Miami Vice and is confused, to say the least. Here Alex comes face to face with some familiar characters, not just from her own life-time, but also from the reports logged by none other than Sam Tyler, which Alex has spent months pouring over.

In Eighties London, with a soundtrack of Bucks Fizz and The Human League ringing in her ears, Alex finds herself working with the brash and politically incorrect Gene Hunt and his Stone-Age opinions on women. Frustrated by each other's stubbornness, the friction builds and it soon becomes clear there is more than just a professional relationship blossoming.

Ashes to Ashes was a British television drama series, which served as a sequel to the 2006 series Life on Mars. It is a Kudos Film & Television production for BBC Wales. It premiered on 7 February 2008 at 9:00 PM GMT.

As with the parent series, the show's name comes from a David Bowie song of the era in which it is set, in this case 1980's "Ashes to Ashes".

It is established that DI Alex Drake, a trained police psychologist, has been studying the suicide of DI Sam Tyler and is familiar with the detailed description he recorded of his experiences of "life" in "1973" (whilst he was actually in a coma in 2006).

When Drake herself is shot during a hostage situation and finds herself transported back to 1981, it is her familiarity with Tyler's world that leads her to deduce she is "hallucinating". She also draws upon her knowledge of Tyler's experiences in 1973 to inform her decisions on how to act in the world of 1981. For example, she spends time finding and tuning a powerful radio so that she can receive information from the "real world", because this is how Tyler received information about the progression of his coma in his world of 1973. Alex does eventually receive messages from Rainbow characters Zippy and George, a handheld radio and the television set.

Drake is also stalked by a sinister Pierrot (resembling David Bowie's appearance in the Ashes to Ashes music video), who appears to echo the role of the Test Card F girl in Life on Mars.

Drake learns from DS Ray Carling that Tyler returned to Manchester in 1973 and spent seven years serving faithfully alongside Gene Hunt. In 1980 he drove his car into a river during a car chase and is presumed dead, though the body was never found. A newspaper clipping paying posthumous tribute to Tyler's achievements hangs in Hunt's office. Hunt subsequently transferred to the Metropolitan Police, taking Carling and Skelton with him.

As in the case of Sam Tyler in Life on Mars, from Hunt's point of view Drake has asked to be transferred to his division from elsewhere. Unlike Tyler in Life on Mars, Drake is a DI in the present day and a DI in the past.

Based on overnight returns, The Guardian reported that audience figures for the February 7, 2008 broadcast of the first episode, in a 9pm slot on the flagship channel, BBC One, were seven million, about 29% of viewers. The figure was "in line with the final episode of Life on Mars in April last year, though well up on the earlier show's second series debut of 5.7 million two months earlier," but The Guardian noted "the heavy publicity blitz this week for Ashes to Ashes" as a factor in its success against the opposition Critical reception to the first episode of the series was mixed, with positive reviews from the Telegraph, the Herald, The Spectator, and the New Statesman and negative reviews from the Times, Newsnight Review, and the Guardian, which described the episode as "actually pretty bad". The popular national free sheet, Metro, gave the episode four stars as "a vote of faith" on what it described as "a dodgy start".

Soundtrack

The soundtrack features contemporary songs by groups of the period such as punk period survivors The Clash and The Stranglers, New Romantics such as Duran Duran, as well as the later period Roxy Music and The Passions' sole hit single, "I'm in love with a German film star" from 1981.

Depiction of 1981

As with parent series, there are anachronisms. At least one, however, is intentional: the Audi Quattro was not available in right hand drive in the United Kingdom in 1981, only in left hand drive. Philip Glenister admitted that the production was aware of this but said "But who cares? It's a cool car". He also has jokingly claimed that Hunt probably got it as a dodgy German import.

Jane Featherstone, executive producer for Kudos explains: "Gene has never come across a woman like Alex before and she rocks his world. How is it possible to work with someone so incredibly confident and attractive, not to mention posh and from London and a woman? We see a different side to Gene a more complex, gentler side, a man with dreams, hopes and fears."

The savage Lure began their inexorable assault on our reality, extending the influence of the black mist. Each week Satan Demon (Yamamoto) sends a champion fighter to test the best that Earth has to offer, including such super-powered enemies as Dark Gladiator, Iron Buster, Blue Bison and Garrison Snake. Earth's only hope is professional wrestler Shun (Shimamura), who secretly transforms into a super human champion of justice Astekaiser (Nara).

Based on an idea by Go Nagai and Ken Ishikawa, the creators of Getter Robo, but released as a co-production with ULTRAMAN studio Tsuburaya, Astekaiser featured a mixture of live-action material and animation in the style of the same years Born Free. Animation was by Studio Dart under the control of Atsushi Takagi. In the final episode , Astekaiser got to fight with Satan Demon himself.

ASTEROID

When astronomer Dr. Lily McKee discovers that an asteroid is on a collision course with Earth, threatening wide spread devastation, she enlists the help of Jack Wallach. This two-part mini-series about a giant asteroid on a collision course with Earth, is very much a game of two halves. The first part cranks up some decent tension with the discovery of the asteroid, the arrival of small fragments in Kansas and efforts to destroy the damn thing.

However part two which deals with the mayhem as the asteroid - now in hundreds of chunks - wipes out Dallas with the force of an atomic explosion, wastes that tension in a tedious depiction of the aftermath. Wandering round the ruins of a the city, is the young son and father of the astronomer heroien Dr. Lily McKee (Annabelle Sciorra) who's naturally desperate to find them.

Michael Biehn co-stars as hunky government disaster expert Jack Wallace who helps her - and the thousands of injured and homeless extras, sorry, people who besiege his evacuation center. Asteroid is not Armageddon. The special effects team try hard, even though you can see plenty of joins where fleeing people are matted in over explosions and collapsing models of buildings, but it's the script which really lets it down in the end. The dialogue is as corny as it comes, and the climax, where McGee's irritating whiny son Elliot has to be rescued by Wallach after wandering over the edge of a crater, is excruciating. Nevertheless, expect to see this trotted out whenever there's a real asteroid scare.

Don Franklin is perhaps more famous for playing the role of Commander John Ford in "SEQUEST DSV". Whilst part one of the this two part story was good, it was let down by the lacklustre second part, which is set after the asteroid has hit the Earth, and the protagonists are trying to survive. Co-producers for the series were Sam Nicholson and Dan Schmit, music by Shirley Walker, edited by Bud Hayes A.C.E., director of photography was Tom Del Ruth A.SC and David Hennings, producer was Donna Ebbs, Phil Margo and Christopher Morgan, supervising producer was Peter V. ASTRO BOYAKA: MIGHTY ATOMAKA: TETSUWAN ATOMU

Deserted by his callous creator, super powered robot Atom (Segawa) is adopted by the kindly professor Ochanomizu (Tanaka, later replaced by Morino). With Ochanomizu's advice, he fights for justice in this black-and-white live action adventure series that preceded the more famous anime Astro Boy by several years.

The live-action incarnation of Osamu Tezuka's famous superhero comic enjoyed five story arcs in the course of its broadcast history - one for each season. These were, in order, The ZZZ (Three Zee) Gang, Mexico, Franken Vs Atom, Flight to Mars and finally Vapor Human. However despite its apparent success AB has been quietly buried in the history of Japan's most famous manga creator - Tezuka was reputedly aghast at what was done to his creation by the independent producers that made the TV series and resolved to do it his way in the last anime incarnation. Another Tezuka manga was films was SPACE GIANTS.

ASTRO FARM

A group of Farmers live on a asteroid and try to make a living.

This lack lustre puppet show had a paper thin plot, almost as paper thin as the puppet animation characters. The series was seen on ITV and shown at the 4.05pm slot, where it was easily forgotten by everybody. The series was designed for the 4-6 year olds, who I suspect found it very boring.

ASTRONAUTS

British Astronauts are the first into space. They have to live in the two-roomed skylab with only an annoying American controller who is unsympathetic to their situation.

This British sitcom was not a giant leap forward in SF comedy and despite having a good time slot failed to impress its audience. Two-thirds of the Goodies wrote this 1980s sitcom about the first British space mission - a claustrophobic affair consisting of two men, one women and Bimbo the dog. The astronauts - all temperamentally incapable were locked together in a two roomed Skylab for several months.

Constantly under surveillance, their only contact with the ground was an abrasive, unsympathetic American mission controller, Colonel Beadle. Given such a situation, their was no opportunity to, as Bill Oddie put it 'Bring in the funny plumber when things got dull'. Astronauts relied on the interaction between the skylab trio - Commander Malcolm Mattocks, an ex RAF type who was lousy at handling people, posh female doctor Gentian Foster, and truculent technical officer, David Ackroyd.

There were gags about the jargon (Skylab was 'Pooh', mission control 'Piglet), the tedious routine, going to the loo, homesickness, mysterious messages and space madness with Mattocks assuring the rest of the crew that ' God is my co-pilot'. "Astronauts" was not a giant leap for TV comedy, and despite a networked peak time run on Monday nights, its success was only moderate.

Producers for the series were Tony Charles and Douglas Argent, executive producer for the series was Allen McKeown, the designer for the series was John Hickson.

ATLANTIS HIGH

Giles Gordon joins Atlantis High School as a student when his mother (whose work is cloaked in secrecy) is moved to Sunset Cove. The town is a maelstrom of unexplained phenomena, most of which seem to be concentrated around the school, populated as it is by a most peculiar assortment of teachers and pupils, such as Mr Dorsey, the rodent-munching alien science tutor (he doesn't teach alien science - he's an alien who teaches science). It would all be too much for Giles were it not for the beautiful Octavia, daughter of the hapless secret service boss Commander Vermont who is investigating all the weirdness. Giles is obsessed with Octavia, though she only has eyes for Josh, the head boy who moonlights as a pink-lurex clad superhero. The town is under constant surveillance from aliens circling Earth, just waiting for the right moment to invade. When they do, they are instantly shrunk and end up living on the surface of a beach ball.

After discovering TRIBE, THE on one of my upper cable channels, I stumbled upon Atlantis High and quickly became addicted and tender towards this bizarre and utterly charming show. Unlike Tribe or most other teen dramas (read: Saved by the Bell), it doesn't focus on morals or underlying melodrama, instead relying on X-FILES conventions with everything from aliens, ninjas, superheroes, conspiracies, cross dressers, and prophecies, to entertain the viewer and give clichés a new spin.

The characters are so different and offbeat, it's sincerely hard not to fall for them; they're each given their chance to shine. From the geek getting the suave secret agent to the two oddballs who hit it off, the show sees nothing as reality, and prefers to be charming rather than maudlin. The episodes themselves lampoon anything they can, and you'll see weddings one day and an assassin duel the next, with a riff on ER the day after. It's all exceedingly random, and is never bellow grin-worthy.

Like Raymond Thompson's other famous TV show, TRIBE, THE, you find overkill of recycled music and footage. "Mr. Quentin" is in every episode, but to see him actually interact with a character or deliver a line of dialogue is a rarity. The reused footage of an owl and the main in the pink wig, picking up a phone are also gems. In a few words, this show makes a quality drinking game.

The sad thing, tho, is that this series was cancelled and left on a cliffhanger. Who took Atlantis? What will happen to Giles and the gang? Alas, we may never know. Still, the experience of "Atlantis High" can't be spoiled, as it isn't so much about where it's going as figuring out just what's going on in the first place. Watch and get hooked.

Production Management - Geoff Husson executive in charge of production, Second Unit Director or Assistant Director - James Champion assistant director, Art Department - Daniel James assistant art director, Stunts - Peter Hassall stunt coordinator, Other crew - Mark Prebble Assistant camera.

Shown on Network Five in New Zealand.

GILES & his Mom, DOROTHY are moving to the coast. Sunset Cove turns out to be depressingly perfect (despite the A.W.O.L. radiation bomb), but GILES is soon captivated when he sees the girl in purple. He starts his new school, and is saved from a CHARITY COLLECTOR by SOPHIE (& her poltergeist). As he visits the Principal's office, a suspicious character gravitates towards his unaccompanied bag. GILES is put up a couple of grades, and while VITA (VIOLET's secretary) informs him of the fundamental school rule, VIOLET (The Principal) has a plastic-surgery crisis. GILES' entrance wakes MR DORSEY's science class. They're even more annoyed when SOPHIE arrives with her poltergeist and a mouse which escapes into GILES' bag. During the commotion, he spots MR DORSEY swallowing a tail. While GILES gets zapped SOPHIE discovers a fluffy pink G-string in his bag. Though he pleads innocence, GILES has broken the fundamental school rule. He's immediately ostracised. Just when things can't get any worse, they do. DOROTHY's new job is at the school canteen. And GILES meets JET, a food additive addict. Only after he's introduced her to fresh food, and she's gone to rip the scab off reality, does he learn of her allergies. JOSH'll hold GILES personally responsible for the consequences. GILES finds a secret passage leading to the Girls' changing rooms. There he spies a bag identical to his own, and the girl without the purple dress. He also discovers BEANIE drawing showerheads. BEANIE swears GILES to secrecy. In return he gives GILES an address (to source the mystery underwear and clear GILES' good name). As GILES stakes out the address, he hears JET's stolen the detonator for the missing bomb. He convinces the CHARITY COLLECTOR (who lives at the house) to help him when a masked superhero, wearing pink G-string, threatens to haul the collector in for an out of date license. GILES discovers that the masked hero is JOSH!! He threatens to expose JOSH as a wearer of a pink leotard unless the unmasked hero helps find JET. GILES follows the fruit peel, and finds the bomb's been detonated. JET demands pentasodium triphosphate, and only then will she hand over the detonator. OCTAVIA appears; an exchange is made but where is the key to the detonator? GILES & OCTAVIA find the key in a crate of underwear. A mystery is solved. GILES is happy (OCTAVIA kisses him), and VIOLET is pleased to find her imported lingerie. The one school rule is cancelled. MR DORSEY reports back to base - it's time for phase two

As GILES recollects his fleeting moment of passion with OCTAVIA, a spaceship of mice-munching aliens are watching his every move. BEANIE gets a helping hand/eye as he passes through SHANE and VIOLET'S cool detector at school. ANTONY and ANTONIA have broken up. GILES gets a dismal cool rating from the detector, but at least OCTAVIA wasn't there to see he spoke too soon, as she has arrived. His miracle arrives when SOPHIE's poltergeist is offended by ANTONY and causes havoc. ANTONY and ANTONIA, separately of course, involve reluctant GILES in their relationship issues. BEANIE has been sketching showerheads again. GILES and JOSH squabble over who will pick up OCTAVIA'S dropped textbook. OCTAVIA spurns JOSH'S advances and hopes to see GILES at the beach party. But the beach is a horror to GILES. And is he sexy enough for her? In science class GILES is the only one able to verbally answer MR DORSEY'S question as to which one species can consciously alter it's appearance to attract a mate. DOROTHY advises GILES to get in touch with his INNER CHILD to solve his attitude towards his body. This leads GILES to consider letting go of his younger self and move on. SOPHIE'S temper and poltergeist appear when GILES tells her that ANTONY does not like her. COACH SHANE gives GILES a bottle of pills to help him in his quest for a decent body. But his body is a temple. JET offers to swap the pills for some of her own additives. GILES relents and takes her ointment, which promises he will look "great". He rubs it on his chest, but it doesn't seem to work. Meanwhile JET gets pumped up after taking the pills she gained in the exchange. Beach party day arrives but GILES can't go topless with a "green" chest! INNER CHILD suggests he take OCTAVIA elsewhere. GILES is looking for OCTAVIA when DOROTHY exits from her "cleaning job" at the Vermont's house. That's odd. MRS VERMONT says she is already at the beach. GILES faces his fear and goes to the beach party. JOSH and ANTONY tease him about wearing a shirt, so he takes it off wishing for super powers. They all laugh at his green chest, but at least OCTAVIA wasn't there to see the teasing then he spies her out to sea. Is she in trouble? GILES, a non-swimmer, paddles to rescue her in an inflatable. OCTAVIA is nowhere to be seen in the sea. Has she been eaten by twin sharks? A periscope with OCTAVIA'S eye in it appears then punctures GILES' inflatable. GILES can't swim! MR DORSEY watches from the beach he wants to tell his side of the story.

GILES is miraculously washed ashore. Not that the medics care; they're busy reviving a rich old man who's fallen victim to SABRINA. While GILES recovers, DOROTHY tells him he probably imagined the whole OCTAVIA-periscope incident. After all it's a confusing time; shifting to a new school etc. When GRANDPA starts up about mysterious DENNIS, DOROTHY abruptly ends the conversation. A new school day, sponsored by Reb-elz Coolwear (R.C.). JOSH asks OCTAVIA out. She declines; they're too different. He likes comic-book superheroes whereas she prefers reality. JOSH defends the fight against evil but OCTAVIA tells him he wouldn't know evil if it walked up and bit him. GILES is shocked by OCTAVIA's aloof attitude. He nearly drowned trying to save her! She denies all knowledge of the periscope. R.C. Marketing Director, MR LEW SIFFER announces the upcoming launch of the new line. SABRINA models the range. ANTONIA's sold. It must be cool if SABRINA's wearing it. As LEW SIFFER outlines the correct way of wearing R.C., GILES, pestering OCTAVIA about a periscope, disrupts assembly and is promptly sent to VIOLET's office. Meanwhile, JOSH is on a quest to find 'evil'. COACH SHANE has an idea. ANTONIA pleads with SABRINA to let her wear the R.C, but SABRINA says no. She fumes at GILES for stealing her scene. JOSH continues his search for 'evil'. ANTONIA, JET and ANTONY are no help. SOPHIE suggests the ultimate evil channel. MR DORSEY has the aliens observing earth costumes through the Science Room TV. JOSH and SOPHIE steal in and switch to ultimate evil channel (sponsored by R.C); they see evil people that look like beekeepers. The aliens use their matter-generating module to get R.C. GILES skips class to talk to someone, but the only person available is BEANIE. DOROTHY's worried to see her son with the weird kid. She gives GILES a card for therapist, DR. LEGGZ. JOSH, the superhero, combats evil bee-keepers. JET tells GILES her conspiracy theories about R.C., and toasters. GILES is sent to the guidance counsellor. MR QUENTIN tells GILES; "if the cap fits wear it". GILES takes it as a sign to embrace R.C. Happy at last, he heads for the Launch. But SABRINA is horrified. She doesn't want to look like GILES. The launch is ruined. And if that isn't bad enough, GILES learns that OCTAVIA has a secret!

OCTAVIA has orders to eliminate GILES, who is now terrified of going to school. DOROTHY thinks she knows why - it's hot and he'll have to wear skimpies. But there's no getting out of it. Aliens, VORTEX, NEBULA, and XERON, hurtle towards Earth in their spaceship. GILES confides in JET, OCTAVIA wants him dead, but JET dismisses the idea. BEANIE is intrigued by JET's frisbee. She relents and lets him keep it. While GILES avoids the sinister OCTAVIA, he learns that BEANIE lives in the Boiler Room. JET is way impressed. They discover BEANIE has been at Atlantis High for a long time. But for how long? As CMDR. VERMONT and his troops try to locate the enemy, a soldier is fatally wounded on a soda-run. A HUNK pleads with SABRINA not to dump him. She gets GILES to video the scene and has the HUNK do a retake, but dumps him anyway. The HUNK sobs buckets. This merely reinforces another of JET's conspiracy theories; shallow relationships are encouraged by tissue manufacturers to boost profits. DORSEY scans the sky, while OCTAVIA spies on him. She reports back to her mysterious employer, using a mysterious code. GILES and JET check out BEANIE's files. He's been in the same grade for 36 years! And if he doesn't pass his exams this year then he's out. JET and GILES must help him. But how? OCTAVIA catches GILES unawares and she has a knife! With ANTONY's assistance, ANTONIA, GILES, and JET sneak into the Principal's Office to steal the exam answers. To GILES surprise, OCTAVIA doesn't eliminate him, but wants to share a hobby instead. DORSEY readies for the aliens, and plants a landing beacon in his back garden. OCTAVIA watches him. BEANIE takes the exam disk and instantly memorises the answers. Mid-class both he and DORSEY begin to act very strangely. CMDR VERMONT and his men track a strange signal, as the aliens make their descent. But something's wrong and the aliens are miniaturising!! The power runs out.. And the beacon shuts down. The Alien Spaceship is lost.. In KISSINGER-THE-DOG's yawn

GILES is thrilled he has two friends at his new school GRAMPA notices a lot of strange military people digging up the ground. But the big news of the day is Atlantis High's forthcoming production; 'Romeo and Juliet'. GILES would give anything to play Romeo and impress OCTAVIA. The aliens, VORTEX, NEBULA and XERON are lost inside KISSINGER-THE-DOG. VIOLET appoints COACH SHANE to direct the school production. Casting begins. SOPHIE wants ANTONY to audition for Romeo, so she can be Juliet. SABRINA recoils at the idea as if. GILES auditions but the competition is tough JOSH in particular. VIOLET realises that the play's violence will need to be toned down for the sponsor's sake. She asks GILES to butcher the script. Both DORSEY and VERMONT's camp are separately tracking the aliens signal. They are followed by AGENCY operatives who are followed by LEW SIFFER, who is followed by KISSINGER-THE-DOG (and the aliens). OCTAVIA reports to Q. He wants her to find out the meaning of the extraterrestrial messages they've detected. JET explains the concept of love to BEANIE. Someone mistakes them for boyfriend and girlfriend. Me thinks JET doth protest too much. COACH SHANE tells JOSH the game plan. JOSH will be Romeo, but SABRINA can't be Juliet she'd steal the spotlight and that'd be a major downer. GILES is scathing of the decision. ANTONIA arrives late and finds ANTONY gone. She sobs and gets the part of Juliet. The aliens are on the move inside the dog. They surface again in the Vermont's Garden, are trodden on by CMDR. VERMONT, then hosed off and white water raft down the sewer. GILES delivers the condensed play. He is now worried about the audience and OCTAVIA's reaction to the 15 minute Shakespeare. DON's backstage ladder trips up JOSH. Who will now play Romeo? VIOLET, DOROTHY and GRAMPA attempt to convince GILES that he is the man for the job. Meanwhile, it seems that ANTONY has upset ANTONIA so much that she can't go on and play Juliet. GILES is pushed on stage to see OCTAVIA playing the part of JULIET. He is thrilled. The play ends happily with a wedding, and the audience applaud the author. Success at

The aliens, VORTEX, NEBULA and XERON have washed up on the beach. In spite of the success of last episode's Romeo and Juliet GILES is back to square one. He is not fitting in at Atlantis High. DOROTHY is "cleaning" the Vermont's house. ANTONIA gets a break-up note from ANTONY. ANTONY confides to GILES that ANTONIA is doing his head in literally. GILES wants to help them/her/him/it by splitting them up. He convinces ANTONY that he needs to leave Sunset Cove. This upsets SOPHIE and her pal. JOSH is advertising his Silver Hotline. He has no new messages. Q tells OCTAVIA that her father knows more than he thinks. DORSEY has not heard from the aliens for a week. He despairs. The Beach Volley Ball final is held. OCTAVIA despises GILES for getting involved in the mob, but DOROTHY is pleased and whips up some home cooking for MR NITE. JOSH still takes OCTAVIA's bad mood as being literal, while BEANIE tries to come out of the closet to everyone to say he's an alien. ANTONIA's crush on DORSEY blooms. VIOLET has a plan to get the school back from the Mob. But will DORSEY loan her the money? DOROTHY shows CMDR VERMONT proof that he's the 'Big D'. CMDR VERMONT denies it, but there's only one sure way to find out. GILES' INNER CHILD is proud; his very own boy's gonna be a made guy. But GILES wants to quit. He's feeling bad about OCTAVIA. BEANIE researches his alien identity. But he's researching fictional aliens that don't exist. BEANIE is scared. What if he's a fictional alien that doesn't exist?

Big Boss, CONSTANTINE, is going to make GILES a made guy. GILES rejects the offer, and signs his own death warrant. CMDR VERMONT and DOROTHY break into the Hells Biker HQ, and unleash the jeans. CMDR VERMONT tries them on. They fit!! GRAMPA smells trouble when DOROTHY returns. Where has she been?! GRAMPA can't boss her around; she's not his little girl any more. But was she ever a little girl?? GILES wakes to an unpleasant surprise from the Mob. While GILES's feet are stuck in cement, his INNER CHILD splits. DORSEY will lend VIOLET the money to buy back the school if she does him a favour. VITA is overjoyed at VIOLET's return.

GRAMPA is the Grand Papa! He rarks up the HELLS BIKERS for letting someone sneak in and try on 'Big D's jeans. They all know how dangerous it would be if the truth got out, Bad Mood and Silver Lining appear on SOPHIE's show. The moral is clear good is good and bad is bad. GILES and OCTAVIA make-up, then break-up. So OCTAVIA thinks he's a nerd, and has a crush on a dumb superhero, does she? DORSEY and VIOLET pretend to be boyfriend and girlfriend. ANTONIA is distraught. She works feverishly to try and solve the Lost City of Atlantis mystery for him. She finds a clue with a riddle inscribed. An H and an A will show the way. GILES, JET and BEANIE try to find BEANIE's true identity. They find a picture of BEANIE standing near a big H. What could it mean?

GILES discovers a litre of oil in the family fridge, while DOROTHY discovers the Big D's glove. GRAMPA vows there's gonna be changes. BAD MOOD and SILVER LINING rendezvous at the Mallmart, where ANTONIA gives DORSEY a vital pictorial clue. DON discovers the find of his life and VIOLET wants to get him on The SOPHIE Show. The search continues for the meaning of BEANIE's past. JET reassures GILES that he's bound to get back together with OCTAVIA in the final frame. DON's chip that looks like Elvis does not impress SOPHIE. Q tells SOPHIE to keep a closer eye on GILES and OCTAVIA otherwise it'll be chip lovers on every show. MRS VERMONT reveals to CMDR VERMONT that he put an end to Callie.

While all are out GRAMPA builds a motorbike in the kitchen. GILES' INNER CHILD becomes the go-between for GILES and OCTAVIA. SILVER LINING and BAD MOOD appear on The SOPHIE Show. They are not going to reveal their identities to the nation, but BAD MOOD does admit that she could never keep her identity secret from the man she married. ANTONIA scans and enlarges an ancient picture of a totem pole that has the image of BEANIE with the initials A.H. On a headband. She calls DORSEY, but he is too busy entertaining a guest.

DOROTHY makes her moves on CMDR VERMONT while his family are out, and she makes him wear the Big D's glove. His gloved hand makes an attack for his own neck. ANTONIA collects her spy supplies from the Mallmart, where SILVER LINING and BAD MOOD have again rendezvoused. BAD MOOD wants him to turn to the dark side, but he is torn between her and doing right. Under a sprinkler of rain GILES and OCTAVIA are reunited. ANTONIA breaks in to DORSEY's house and discovers him in his alien state munching on mice. She has made a very big mistake.

GILES asks OCTAVIA to the school prom. Ratings for SOPHIE's show are low. SOPHIE and VIOLET need a story.

ANTONIA is gagged and bound as DORSEY makes contact with his superior. The GENERAL tells DORSEY that he must find the object represented by the A.H. Symbol and then he will have the key to the portal. SOPHIE enters his house as DORSEY runs off to search. SOPHIE sees ANTONIA tied up. ANTONIA gives SOPHIE the end-of-the-world prophecy document in exchange for setting her free. The prophecy is interpreted to say that the world will be destroyed if a pair of illicit lovers don't split up. It also mentions frogs falling out of the sky. SOPHIE decides to choose GILES and OCTAVIA as the boy and girl in question. BEANIE investigates cheeseburgers as ancestors. GILES and OCTAVIA learn of the prophecy on a TV report. On their way to the studio they are intercepted by a media frenzy.

SILVER LINING agrees to join the dark side. BAD MOOD makes him place a potato up the exhaust of a police car. An upset JET walks out on BEANIE and his obsessive behaviour. A baying crowd outside GILES' house are hounding him and OCTAVIA: "Split them up!" OCTAVIA demands the media show her the actual prophecy so they can put it to public scrutiny. A baked potato rains from the heavens, another sign? SILVER LINING feels like he has done good, in a bad way, but BAD MOOD cuffs him and says she'll see him at the prom. CMDR VERMONT, distraught that the end of the world is nigh, has flashbacks to images of Big D and Callie in a car. CMDR VERMONT agrees to take DOROTHY to the prom, with her dressed in the prom dress. They both flashback to images of the prom dress, and jeans. DON counsels a distraught JET. BEANIE agrees to stop thinking too much about his past and to start living in the present with JET.

OCTAVIA calls the prophecy a sham. The two figures could be anyone, and they didn't mention the falling frogs part of the prophecy. SOPHIE is distraught. And then things start to fall from the sky. Frogs legs for dinner anyone?

The end of the world prophecy has swept the globe. The entire world want to split up GILES and OCTAVIA. DORSEY breaks into DON's lost property room to search for the A.H. symbol. Under the boiler he finds A.H. branded on a packet of potato chips. Not what he wanted. He doesn't see what's in the fish tank, yet. GILES and OCTAVIA rendezvous. The prophecy says that the next time they kiss there'll be a terrible storm. GILES runs off as the flaming-torch bearing crowd chases him. He blows her a goodbye kiss and thunder rings out. BEANIE prophesises to JET that something bad is coming. The worst storm that Sunset Cove has ever seen is not going to stop the prom though. SOPHIE instructs her (and Q's) ninjas to eliminate GILES on sight.

DR LEGGZ instructs CMDR VERMONT to avoid five things: the prom, the dress, the sword, the milk, and the weird sentence "hot milk and thick blue knickers." He is also to avoid Dorothy in that dress. He must keep the dress locked away. But MRS VERMONT has already given it to DOROTHY. She is strangely very comfortable with CMDR VERMONT taking DOROTHY to the prom. ANTONIA and JET catch DORSEY packing to leave the school. He accidentally leaves behind the locater device.

CMDR VERMONT heads for Army HQ while GILES watches from the darkness as OCTAVIA enters the prom with JET and BEANIE. He slopes off. The prom is in full swing. ANTONIA searches, NINJAS follow ANTONIA, DOROTHY has more flashbacks and escapes down a corridor, OCTAVIA's drink is spiked but she doesn't drink it, and as SILVER LINING agrees to marry BAD MOOD, a priest appears. CMDR VERMONT's vehicle breaks down, right outside the school. He is escorted into the prom, and has some of the hot chilli on offer. The five things come to pass. The sixth was avoid DOROTHY in the dress: he escapes down the same corridor DOROTHY went. GRAMPA on the motorbike rescues GILES from his depression. He tells GILES to follow his heart and forget the prophecy.

CMDR VERMONT discovers DOROTHY and they flashback to a rocking Chevy: inside is a man in leather and "one size fits all" jeans, with a woman in the prom dress. They conclude that VERMONT must be Big D, and DOROTHY must be Callie. Do they have it the right way around? They rush off to find GILES and OCTAVIA, before it's too late. GILES rescues OCTAVIA from the prom. With his way trapped by the ninjas GRAMPA pick-pockets JOSH's car keys, so they can race off in his Chevy convertible. The superhero marriage continues. DOROTHY and VERMONT hijack the milk float to chase after GILES and OCTAVIA. The beam of the headlights cast a shadow across the sports field through the goal posts. The H of the goalposts form the shadow of an A, with the tip pointing to the door of DON's lost property room. ANTONIA sees this and races towards it. DORSEY follows close behind. Followed by SOPHIE and the ninjas.

BEANIE's memory gets a restart. He doesn't know who JET is. GILES and OCTAVIA are finally together alone. They try to pull the top of the car down to get a better look at the night sky, the scene looks suspiciously like the flashback of the rocking car that VERMONT and DOROTHY had earlier. DOROTHY and VERMONT pull up on the milk float and see the rocking car. The priest completes the marriage ceremony and SABRINA reveals herself. JOSH is horrified. DON's lost property room is inundated. DON has lost his prized chip packet, but the city in the tank has also gone. ANTONIA, DORSEY, SOPHIE and the ninjas have all been foiled. But by who? VERMONT and DOROTHY catch GILES and OCTAVIA before they have the chance to kiss again. There is an almighty light from above, have the aliens returned?

ATOMIC DRAGON

AKA: GIANT PHANTOM MONSTER AGON

AKA: AGON THE ATOMIC DRAGON

AKA: MABOROSHI NO DAIKAIJU AGON

[narration in opening credits]

Narrator: Because we obtained the third fire, a bright future in prosperity had been promised... However, for that reason, we must not forget the events that have knocked on something else's door.

Agon is the titular giant monster of a tokusatsu kaiju TV series, Giant Phantom Monster Agon (Maboroshi no Daikaijū Agon?). The international series title is Atomic Dragon (as the monster's name, "Agon" is actually short for "Atomic Dragon"). It is known to American tokusatsu fans as Agon the Atomic Dragon.

The 4-part septiatone TV miniseries, originally produced in 1964 by Nippon Denpa Eiga (Japan Radio Pictures), was broadcast on Fuji TV from January 2 to January 8, 1968. (The 4-year long delay involved a struggle with the show's sponsor) Toho Company, Ltd. later released a condensed feature-length film version on video in the mid-1990s.

The miniseries was clearly inspired by the popular Godzilla film series, so much that the title dinosaur-like monster Agon bore a superficial resemblance to Godzilla himself. This series was produced just as the first "Kaiju Boom" began to escalate in Japan. Ironically, it premiered towards the end of the Boom.

The series has recently become available on DVD in Japan as of June 8, 2005.

Trivia

In 1964, as the series was complete, Toho Company, Ltd. was about to sue Japan Radio Pictures as they thought Agon looked too much like Godzilla. But when they found that Fuminori Ohashi (who helped out with making the first Godzilla suit) was making the series, Toho simply said, "Oh, it's you! Well, it's okay then!" Toho thus dropped the lawsuit. The Agon suit was later used as the dinosaur monster Aron in the first episode of P Productions' Ambassador Magma (known in the US as The Space Giants).

Agon was a short-lived series in Japan, Agon being yet another giant monster who smashes buildings and leaves destruction all over. But this one is a lot of fun, the action starts pretty early and the monster destroys all the miniature buildings and sets with a lot of enthusiasm. I have it in the original Japanese language form, and it doesn't make a difference as you just wanna see giant monster action, which there is a healthy dose of. Directed nicely and fast-paced. There's also a tan-ish "tint" over the b/w film stock. All in all it's not a Godzilla movie but it is a lot of fun to watch if you can find it.

AUTOMAN

Automan was a short-lived crime drama series in which the title character was a computer-generated hologram. Walter Nebicher was a police officer whose expertise with the computer prevented him from being assigned to the action out on the streets. He ended up creating Automan, a video game hero who came alive when enough power was applied, With Automan as his partner. Walter secretly set out to solve the big crimes that the other cops were unable to solve.

Automan had at his disposal Cursor, an electronic friend able to create things out of thin air. The most impressive of these was a car that was able to make 90 degree turns without slowing down. Automan could also: walk through walls, get any computer to do anything he wanted, and he could also merge with Walter making both of them impervious to harm. On the down side, Automan required enormous amounts of power to maintain his existence making it impossible for him to exist during the day when the demand for electricity was high. This weakness however tended to be ignored as the series progressed.

Despite several high profile arrests made by Walter with the aid of Automan, his superior, Captain Boyd refused to assign him to the street. Lt. Curtis, his champion on the force, could do little to persuade Boyd otherwise. Roxanne was a police department receptionist who at times would aid Walter in the field and also was his romantic interest.

Producers for the series were Glen A. Larson, Donald Kushner and Peter Locke. The various writers for the series were Glen A. Larson and Doug Hayes Jr. The directors for the series included Lee Katzin, Winrich Kolbe and Kim Manners.

Glen A. Larson was also responsible for creating several other science fiction shows including, "KNIGHT RIDER", "BATTLESTAR GALATICA", "GALATICA 1980" and "THE HIGHWAYMAN". The series centred around a nerdy police computer specialist who programmes computer games in his spare time. One of his creations, a superhero named "Automan", somehow jumped out of the computer into reality, launching the nerdish protagonist into fighting crime at the highest levels. "Automan" could walk through walls, and could make almost any computer do him favours, and could temporarily combine with Walter Nebicher into a schizoid human/superhero.

Lights dimmed when Automan walked past - because he drained energy from circuits nearby. When the city's electrical consumption went up at dawn, Automan faded away. The two were followed everywhere by Cursor, an animated, well, cursor, who could outline, animate, and create useful solid objects such as cars. Walter's boss, the crochety Captain Boyd, hated computers and software-hip people, so he could not be told about Automan. Neither could Walter's mentor, Lieutenant Curtis, who used Walters inexplicable successes to advance his own agenda.

Every episode involved some form of crime. Some of the more interesting plots were ' The Biggest Game in Town ' in which high-tech extortionists attempt to destroy the city's computer controlled functions and the pilot episode 'Automan' which introduces the character in a 90 minute episode. The show was as silly as the premise sounds, and it consequently never received high ratings in America. The show did however do surprising well in the UK with the episode titled "Club Ten" getting its world premier in Britain, the episode was not aired in the US. The series was first seen in the UK on BBC1 from the 12th May - 28th August 1984.

The show was as silly as the premise sounds and never achieved high ratings in the US. In Britain it did quite well with an episode that ABC did not run getting a world premiere, it was later run in the US on the Sci-Fi Channel in 1993. Automan was created by Glen Larson, whose other TV efforts include: The Fall Guy, B. J. and the Bear. The Misadventures of Sheriff Lobo, and in the science fiction genre: BATTLESTAR GALATICA , and the 1979 version of BUCK ROGERS. The final episode 1.13 was not shown on its original airing on ABC since the show had been cancelled.

Holograms. High technology. Knight Rider: The Next Generation. Predicament humor. With these key elements combined and orchestrated into a one-hour dramatic television series, you arrive at Automan. When creator-producer-writer Glen Larson stirred these ideas into a television series in 1983, he invented what has been described by several of those involved as a television series that was "a little bit ahead of its time."

"I'm just a nut about this subject matter," confesses Larson. "The whole idea was doing a 3-D [computer generated] figure and doing it with lifelike quality. I guess we were definitely ahead of Quantum Leap in using a computer with a cursor to weave and spin the tale. It's always been something of interest to me. I created Knight Rider, and I was looking for something that had the fun and cars and high-tech but the next generation, going one step beyond what we were doing on Knight Rider."

Finding the series difficult to describe, Larson labels Automan as a "drama that had humor. It wasn't meant to be pure comedy. As opposed to situation comedy, I call it predicament humor. You put your hero in a predicament and make the audience smile. It's not that he's foolish or doing pratfalls, [Walter Nebicher] creates a personage that's virtually from another dimension. How do you explain this to anybody? Nobody is going to believe you."

Desi Arnaz, Jr., was star of the show as the mousey, somewhat nerdish police computer jockey, Waiter Nebicher. Arnaz recalls his experiences on Automan with great fondness: "I thought it was a great idea! The thing that was so interesting was that it was a superhero [show], and it was also a comedy, which was different, and the people that produced Tron (1982) [Donald Kushner and Peter Lockel were also the producers of Automan. The idea of a superhero coming out of a computer was very interesting because Tron was the opposite-about a fellow who goes into a computer. Also, the characters were very unique because the superhero Automan was like [Walter's] alter-ego. It was everything that he wanted to be. He programmed the superhero to be everything he dreamed of. It was a great idea for a show because [together, Waiter and Automan were fighting the forces of evil, and at the same time there was a lot of humor."

Arnaz's co-star, Chuck Wagner, was cast as the hologram crime-buster Automan. "Chuck was great," says Arnaz. "He and I got along really well. The thing that was good about Chuck was he was an actor who was trained in musical comedy so he could dance and sing. He was also a good comedian. So he combined all of that in order to create his character. He also had a very proper kind of persona in real life. "Waiter had programmed Automan to be every great detective throughout the ages, [like] James Bond and Sherlock Holmes, which was interesting. Automan had kind of an English persona. He almost had kind of an English accent. And Chuck was able to do that very well. He was very talented, and he incorporated [his skills] into the character."

Glen Larson says that looking for a man to fill Automan's suit was difficult. "We looked for all kinds of people, from bodybuilders to not quite Hulk Hogan, to see what we could find, but ironically, Chuck came in and had a wonderful quality when he read. It was quite a surprise. He hadn't done much. We were having trouble casting that role. He just came in and did it. He was quite good. I thought he did a nice job, and I just liked his quality. I thought he was a good contrast. He was big. They were great together." Of working with creator and producer Larson, Arnaz says happily, "He was a great support.

He told me how much he loved the show and how unhappy [he was] that the show didn't do better. He felt it was one of the best shows he'd ever done. Curiously, I came in the last day of casting. I was thought of originally, but for some reason they didn't see me until right before they had to decide. They brought me in on the last day, and I had to read for the network the next day, and I got the part the following day. We had a nice time together. I really enjoyed working for him."

The show was one of the most expensive to produce at that time because of the extensive special effects needed to bring Automan alive. Arnaz believes the show's short, one-season life span was probably the longest it could have run. "It was something like over one million dollars an episode. In those days that was very unusual." Director Winrich Kolbe agrees that the show was well executed but says, "I think it was overly ambitious. We had a lot of technical problems. At that time video and blue screens were not that well developed. We began to go to video."

Arnaz says that "one of the special effects men, David Gerber, did things with live effects and computer graphics and in-camera effects that were never done before." When the audience saw Automan's glowing, blue white starfield suit, it was done by projecting a light through a camera lens device called a beam splitter. "They had never used that before, so it was very unusual. They were getting this traveling matte on his suit. Computer graphics would then put in this animated starfield. It also added to the various vehicles-the car, the helicopter, the plane and the motorcycle," says Arnaz.

What also added to the special effects budget was not just Automan and the collection of vehicles used in the show, but Cursor. Cursor was a computer hologram that created and literally transformed itself into Automan's many unique vehicles. Using the name "Cursor" was one of Glen Larson's many pokes at computer slang. The cursor is the icon in a computer screen that directs users to create graphics or prompts them in word processing.

Working with Cursor proved to be a challenge for actors, who never saw anything until a computer effect was added later. "Cursor was never really there," says Arnaz with a grin. "Yo@d have to come up with the pantomime as to what ... the director thought, where the Cursor would be. People didn't quite understand the 'computerese' language we were using a lot of the time!" he adds. "Nowadays everyone has a computer. But back then, ten years ago, it was ahead of its time."

What was Automan, exactly? Arnaz says, "The whole concept of Automan was, he was a three-dimensional electromagnetic entity that was a hologram, but he also had his own electronic power source." Automan also had the ability to draw on electrical sources around him to power himself, creating scenes where he would inadvertently create blackouts in his immediate surroundings. Larson calls that "just great fun. When the lights go out because of something you've done. It does great humor. I mean, it's funny, but hopefully it's also sort of real."

A high point for the show, says Larson, was the first segment after the pilot, "Staying Alive While Running a High Flashdance Fever." Chuck Wagner threw on a white suit and launched his way into a disco. "In a Las Vegas hotel, Automan gets carried away [on a dance floor full of people] and takes his suit off and reveals his electronic substance underneath. A girl starts getting into the dance and starts getting carried away. Wally comes in and sees this, and it's 'Oh my god!' because he's given himself away." Automan watched television and imitated what he saw, generating many takeoffs and spoofs galvanized by studies in soap operas and Dirty Harry characters.

Larson describes Arnaz's character as " 'nebbishy.' We called him Nebicher-nerdy-except that he could also be a young hero because he is a good-looking guy, having been a bit of a teenage idol." Arnaz says that Nebicher "was frustrated as a policeman in fighting crime. And being the computer expert allowed him to fight crime on a much more phenomenal level. It was really fun to play. The character was kind of insecure, and he had a good sense of humor, but underneath his insecurity, he was incredibly smart. That's what was interesting about him. He created this superhero that came out of the computer [so] there was something about him that was remarkable. At the same time he didn't understand about getting along with women, and the people of the police department viewed him as being nerdy. [Because he couldn't] ... solve crime the way they did, they would always make fun of him, putting him down. He didn't have the experience in the real world."

In Arnaz's eyes, this was not an ordinary show by any means. "Automan was a very moral show with values in it. I just loved doing it and playing Walter," he says. "The whole idea, in my mind, of the superhero, was symbolic of a spiritual battle. For some, you need something higher, more supernatural to fight evil. In any science fiction show in my mind there's elements of the unknown and the supernatural that are able to come into a person's life and overcome whatever dark forces.... In fact, [in] the opening of the show, the statement was [that] Automan was a force for good."

Most fascinating for Arnaz, in playing Walter, was having to keep Automan's existence a secret. "All superheroes have to have a secret identity!" laughs Arnaz. "And the other part of the show that was interesting was Walter and Automan would combine to be one entity. He would merge with Automan. It was actually a very funny part of the show." What a twist. Instead of leaping into someone else's body, Arnaz got to leap into a hologram. Oh boy.

"I would [dub dialogue over] Automan's voice and so Automan would have Walter's voice because Walter was inside of Automan's energy field. It was kind of funny, so a lot of strange things happened. Walter could actually experience being a superhero. He would merge with Automan to protect himself during crime-fighting adventures." In describing the relationship between Walter and Automan, Arnaz says, "Automan was everything Walter wanted to be, and in a way, Walter was everything that Automan wanted to be because [Automan] wasn't human-kind of like Data in Star Trek: The Next Generation." That would make Automan a "pre-Cursor" to Data. "An early Cursor," quips Arnaz. "One of the first Cursors...."

Challenging for the technical staff of the show and the lead actors was dealing with Automan's glowing blue suit. It didn't photograph well during daylight, so Automan made the bulk of his appearances at nightsuggesting that crime happens only at night! "In the pilot," says director Kolbe, "I understand they had to shut down all the lights around a downtown street because they wouldn't have been able to properly film Automan's sparkling special effects suit. It's a tremendous amount of work. A lot of the show was shot at night. It's not a very life-enhancing way to make a living!" "We tried during the day, but it didn't come out as good," Arnaz remembers. "It was very difficult because of the hours. We were trying to get him to appear in the daytime undercover in regular clothes. What would happen is he could then 'rez up' (electronically create) any outfit he wanted, then he could go out during the daytime.

The only thing that glowed was his collar.... That made it a lot easier for us to shoot the show because we didn't have to shoot nights anymore! So we tried to get him into other clothes whenever he would change persona." As a result of technical difficulties, Automan evolved into a more versatile character. Donning such guises as an FBI agent or a special intelligence officer for the government dubbed "Ottoman," he became an undercover superhero.

Director Kolbe reinforces Arnaz's and Larson's assessment of the show's predicament humor. "It's the reactions of the character that made it funny." Kolbe says it was he who invented a whimsical ride with Automan in his Autocar. "I'm not tooting my own horn here, but I think I believe I was the one who introduced that whenever a crime was made, a 90 degree left or right turn would make Desi, inside the AutoCar, slam into the left or right side. For the car, there's no gravity to consider. But Desi would obviously be the one to slam into the side windows. We all thought it was very funny."

Of the two leads, Kolbe remarks, "I thought the two of them were perfect. I liked Desi. He was so frenetic, and that really worked for his character. But he was his character off the set as well! The guy was like live wire all the time! He was a lot of fun. I liked working with him." Commenting on Chuck Wagner's portrayal of Automan, "the only thing that struck me funny was he was very serious all the time," says Kolbe. "Now, keep in mind that at the time I was not exposed to Star Trek and people actually taking science fiction that serious. So, when Chuck began talking about 'No, I wouldn't do this or that,' I said, 'Wait a minute. The guy's supposed to be a computer image!'

"I think Automan was his first big chance at series television. Sometimes that can be a handicap, to get involved in science fiction shows.... Producers sometimes look at science fiction as something for kids." As Kolbe explains, "the moment you say, 'I've done this science fiction show,' it's possible to get typecast or lose credibility as a serious actor." D.C. Fontana, best known for her work on Star Trek and Star Trek: The Next Generation, co-wrote with her brother Richard two un-produced Automan scripts. "Fly by Night" was an original script, and "If Looks Could Kill" was a rewrite of someone else's idea. "Fly by Night" was a story we originated about a theft of highly classified information from a top-security computer company which was involved in providing equipment for an Air Force stealth plane," says Fontana. "This was before it was verified that the U.S. actually had stealth planes! We had it that the information stolen was in regard to the device that would provide protection for the plane against any type of radar or other detection equipment. It was a sort of a cloaking device. Because the information was useless without the actual equipment, it was decided Automan and his friends would be disguised as Air Force personnel transferred to the base where the stealth plane was being tested in order to protect the plane from being tampered with or stolen by the people behind the information theft. Naturally, in the course of the adventure Automan winds up flying the stealth plane."

Fontana recalls the script as "a pretty good story with humor and a number of plot twists. it helped a lot that my brother is an Air Force veteran and a private pilot and was able to supply a lot of technical information himself." The second script involved race car drivers, professional models and murder, and culminated in Automan driving in a race. Overall, Arnaz feels that Automan was well received. "We had quite a faithful following during the year it was on," he says. "A lot of people enjoyed the show. But I think a lot were watching Magnum PI. We were opposite the number one show on television. Unless ... [a show] had become the number one show, ... [the network] didn't think it was financially affordable. Science fiction shows hadn't really taken off. [The network heads] weren't interested in it at that point I was! I've always been a science fiction buff." Summarizing his feelings towards Automan, Larson says, "I'm a big fan of that show. It's obviously not on my list of my biggest hits. But I tell you, it's one of my favorite accomplishments in terms of having pulled off what I wanted. I remember the young lady at ABC in charge of development, when she saw the pilot, she actually came out ... and I remember her just saying, 'It was just stunning!' It was like a jewel. The way these effects came on, it just knocked her hat off... If it hadn't got buried in that time slot, it would have gone on to be a major hit. They're just too impatient. I stayed very involved with that show, and I was very happy with it."

If the show had continued further, Larson says his only change would have been to restrain the use of gadgets and Automan's appearances. "One thing in execution that one of my associates at Universal accused me of-

AVENGERS,THE

The Avengers began in 1961 with Steed teaming up with Dr. David Keel, played by Ian Hendry. Hendry's character is similar to one he played on a prior TV series Police Surgeon- although The Avengers is not a sequel to that series as has been written elsewhere. The two heroes met by accident. Dr. Keel had been searching for the drug dealers responsible for his fiancée's murder (avenging the crime- thus giving the series its name.) when he meets up with Steed who had been working on the case for some time. Steed then recruits Dr. Keel to help him with his various cases, something the Dr. Keel agreed to do.

Most of the first series of episodes were made on video tape, with film inserts, however several (episodes 003 through 009) were broadcast live. Only one of these is known to exist. The episodes were for the most part typical crime dramas exhibiting almost none of the science fiction / fantasy elements that the series would later become famous for.

The second series saw Steed gain several new partners: Cathy Gale, Venus Smith and Dr. Martin King. Venus was a night-club singer whom Steed teamed up with for six adventures- she performed at least one song in each of her episodes. Dr. King appeared in only three episodes in a role similar to Dr. Keel's- his scripts had been left over from the first series. Cathy Gale, played by Honor Blackman was the first Avengers girl, a woman who could hold her own in a fight and not be the helpless victim always in need of rescuing. She appeared in the rest of the second series episodes and all of the third. Her black leather outfits perfect for fighting. started a new trend in fashion. Cathy Gale was a widow who had a doctorate in anthropology. The audience was led to believe that there may have been something going on between Cathy and Steed, however nothing was ever explicitly stated Although many of the second and third series episodes were of the standard espionage / crime drama mold of the first series, elements of the fantastic slowly crept in.

The fourth series was the first to be seen in America. The science fiction elements that had been popping up before were now firmly established. The series was now shot on film, as opposed to video tape, freeing it from the studio bound look of all the previous episodes. Steed also gained a new partner in Emma Peel, played by Diana Rigg. Like Cathy, Emma was a widow who liked to wear leather. She also shared a similar relationship with Steed as the one Steed had with Cathy. Emma lasted for three series, the last two of which were filmed in colour to satisfy ABC in America These episodes also saw Steed become a bit more of an eccentric- he no longer carried a gun and the umbrella became his weapon of choice! The Emma Peel episodes are the best and most popular of the series' run.

For the final series The Avengers was slightly revamped turning it into a more 'standard' spy fare. Emma's husband had been discovered alive and well, signalling an end to her relationship with Steed. Steed was thus given a new partner Tara King. Unlike all of Steed's previous partners, who had been top amateurs, Tara was a trained agent fresh out of spy school. The bureaucracy to which Steed was answerable to was also firmly present in the form of Mother. Mother was Steed and Tara's wheelchair-bound boss and not a she as his name might suggest. Mother had the habit of appearing in the oddest of places with his office, a swimming pool or top of double decker bus for example. Often times episodes dealt with security breaches within the organisation itself or had Steed and Tara pick up the pieces of a case another agent had been working on.

Patrick MacNee would also go on to star in "The New Avengers" as Steed and also starred in the SF show "Thunder In Paradise". The series actually began in 1960 as "Police Surgeon" starring Ian Hendry. Sydney Newman, its creator (and later the creator of "Doctor Who") followed the escapist super-agent popularity of James Bond by restructuring the show in 1962 and renaming it "The Avengers." The show is listed here because of the wonderful 1965-66 era when the science fiction themes took centre stage.

To describe the Avengers is difficult since its format changed so rapidly throughout its seven seasons. It began simply as a crime drama, where Dr. David Keel hires undercover agent John Steed to find out the murderer of his wife, who was shot by a drug gang. The show's basic premise changed radically in the second season, with John Steed acquiring a female partner once in a while to fight crime with. The stories became increasingly weird, many crossing the border into SF including 'Man-Eater of Surry Green', in which Steed and Emma investigate a man-eating plant from outer space. The Avengers was one of Britain's most popular exports, running across the world, famous for its very British nature. A revival was attempted in the form of "THE NEW AVENGERS" (1976-77).

This series' indirect precursor, Police Surgeon, began in 1960; produced and written by Julian Bond, it starred Ian Hendry as a compassionate police surgeon who spent his time helping people and solving cases. In 1961 Newman, later to be the BBC's head of drama, changed the format (making it less realistic), title (to The Avengers), running time (from 25 to 50 mins) and slightly changed Hendry's character (though he was still a compassionate doctor); most importantly, he introduced Patrick Macnee as the new protagonist, secret agent John Steed, a cool, well-dressed, absurdly posh gentleman. 1962 saw the departure of Hendry and the arrival of Honor Blackman as leather-clad Cathy Gale, judo expert; at first she alternated with Julie Stevens as Venus Smith, night-club singer, who appeared in only 6 episodes. The series, now far removed from its original format, became ever more popular as Steed and Mrs Gale battled increasingly bizarre enemies of the Crown.

TA peaked in 1965, becoming more lavish, coincident with its sale to US tv and Blackman's replacement as sidekick by Diana Rigg (strong-minded, intelligent, cynical and beautiful) as Emma Peel. The scripts became ever more baroque, not to say rococo. There had been occasional sf episodes from early on (nuclear blackmail, terrorism using bubonic plague); now sf plots became the norm, involving everything from invisible men and carnivorous plants to "Cybernauts" (killer robots), androids, mind-control rays and time machines, mostly connected with plots to take over the UK or the world. TA had become perhaps the archetypal 1960s tv series, in its snobbery about the upper class, its stylish decadence, its high-camp and its sometimes surreal visual ambience. Robert Fuest, who later made The Final Programme (1974; vt The Last Days of Man on Earth), directed many of the later episodes; so did other mildly distinguished film-makers such as Roy Baker, John Hough and Don Sharp. The writer most associated with the series, and responsible for much of its new look and lunatic plotting, was Brian Clemens, who became coproducer of the last 3 series. The last season (1968-9) had Linda Thorson (playing Tara King) replacing Diana Rigg as female sidekick, and also introduced Steed's grossly fat boss, Mother, played by Patrick Newell.

At least 9 original novels were based on or around TA, #5, #6 and #7 being by Keith LAUMER: The Afrit Affair * (1968), The Drowned Queen * (1968) and The Gold Bomb * (1968). The Complete Avengers (1988) by Dave Rogers is a book about the series.

Although TA belonged spiritually to the 1960s, Albert Fenell and Brian Clemens revived the series in 1976, with French financial backing, as The New Avengers, again starring Patrick Macnee, with Joanna Lumley as female sidekick Purdey and Gareth Hunt as kung-fu expert Mike Gambit. The series was made by Avengers (Film and TV) Enterprises/IDTV TV Productions, Paris, with Canadian episodes co-credited to Nielsen-Ferns Inc.; 2 seasons, 1976-7, 26 50min episodes, colour. The stories lacked the ease and panache of the 1960s version, and the sf ingredients became fewer and less inventive; the Cybernauts returned in one episode. John Steed's visible ageing must have acted as a kind of memento mori to nostalgic but dissatisfied viewers. In 1977 the entire production company moved to Canada, where the final episodes were set.

The third through seventh series of The Avengers were run on ABC in the United States starting in March 1966, the number in the brackets refers to the order in which ABC aired them. At times the American airing predated the British one! The five episodes denoted by - were not run on ABC because the network considered them too racy! Badly cut versions of the second and third series episodes had their first US telecast starting in early 1991 on the A&E cable network. The first series has never been aired in the US, except for The Frighteners.

Taking a literal definition, The Avengers was not a "science fiction show," but then neither was it a show to be taken literally. One of the most potent cocktails of fantasy and adventure that television has seen, The Avengers began as a straight crime thriller, evolved into a stylish secret agent romp and hit its peak in the mid-1960s as a tongue-in-cheek extravaganza that pitted its hero and heroine against some of the most outlandish villains the underworld-or any world-could muster.

Like few other long-running series, The Avengers moved with the times-more than that, it helped shape them. From the high boots and black leather of Honor Blackman to the catsuits of Diana Rigg the show quickly became an innovative frontrunner in 1960s style culture. It was adored in America for its cultivated "Britishness," and adored in Britain for its creation of a sophisticated fantasy world. Brian Clemens, a coproducer on the series, once said, "We admitted to only one class-and that was the upper. Because we were a fantasy, we have not shown policemen or coloured men. And you have not seen anything as common as blood. We have no social conscience at all."

Running through the series, from the first episode in 1961 to the 161st in 1969, was the debonair figure of old Etonian adventurer John Steed played to the hilt of urbane charm by Patrick Macnee. Originally he was the sidekick, a foil for Ian Hendry as the main star, Dr. David Keel. When Hendry departed Macnee moved to centre stage where he was joined by a succession of lovely, liberated ladies-Cathy Gale (Honor Blackman) Emma Peel (Diana Rigg), Tara King (Linda Thorson) and then, in The New Avengers, Purdey (Joanna Lumley).

(Author's note: As this is a science fiction guide, it would be inappropriate to include a full episode rundown since the sf streak didn't really emerge until the Emma Peel era when almost every week, it seemed a mad scientist or some such evil genius with a chip on his shoulder would unleash a bizarre bid for power or fortune. So I've covered in brief, the early years featuring Ian Hendry and Honor Blackman and lingered over the later ones.

Producers for the series was Leonard White (Season 1,2), John Bryce (3 & 4),Albert Fennell (Season 5 -7), Brain Clemens (Season 5-7), Associate Producer was Brian Clemens, executive producers for the series were Gordon L.T. Scott (Season 7), Julie Wintel (Season 5-6). The music for the Emma Peel era was created by Luarie Johnson.

The various famous actors to have appeared in the show included Talfryn Thomas (THE SURVIVORS), Gerald Harper (ADAM ADAMANT LIVES), Warren Mitchell, Julian Glover, Bernard Cribbins, Peter Jones (THE HITCH HIKERS GUIDE TO THE GALAXY), Peter Wyngarde, Jacqueline Pearce (BLAKE'S 7), Jon Pertwee (DOCTOR WHO), Kenneth Cope (Randal & Hopkirk (Desceased)), Ronnie Barker, Philip Madoc (FIRST BORN), Christopher Lee, Brain Blessed, Donald Sutherland, Trevor Bannister, Anneke Wills (DOCTOR WHO), Francis Matthews (CAPTAIN SCARLET AND THE MYSTERONS), Nicholas Courtney (DOCTOR WHO), Simon Oates, Nigel Davenport, Frank Windsor, Richard Hurndall, Bernard Cribbins, John Cleese, John Woodvine and Kate O'Mara.

The Avengers was a British spy spoof that found a loyal American audience. Patrick MacNee was the suave John Steed and Diana Rigg was the strongly independent Emma Peel. These two agents, Britian's finest, encountered an assortment of weird villains. When Rigg left the series, Linda Thorson stepped in as Tara King for the last season.

AYOYE

Although this is a Canadian show its language was French, and hence quite difficult to find a great deal of information about it, other than the show was a typical sci-fi sitcom, about an alien who lands on Earth and lives with a normal Earth family. In a very similar vein to shows like ALF or MORK AND MINDY. Indeed the main alien character seems to have traits of Mork from MORK AND MINDY, especially with his very odd behaviour.

Because it was a sit-com, it's not unusual for these types of shows to notch up a lot of episodes, and in this case 164 episodes in just one year. Sometimes several episodes would air in one day.

BABEL

AKA: TOWER OF BABEL, THE

Babel is an underground secret medical organization, run by brilliant doctors, including two, Kyoichi Hamura (Kashiwabara) and Kaoru Kizaki (Ryo), who use the latest technology to cure the supposedly incurable.

The series goes on to reveal the mysterious parts, in the style of night head, mixed with medical suspense in the spirit of Black Jack. Shown in a late night slot on Fuji's satellite channel, this near future sci-fi thriller soon attracted a cult following. Episode 2, 3, 4 and 9 were rerun in May 2002 at three in the morning - presumably, only doctors on shiftwork would be awake to see it.

BABYLON 5

"Babylon 5" starts off in the year 2257 A.D. on a 5 kilometre long space station in space, which is called Babylon 5. It is the fifth of the Babylon space stations. Out of the first four, three were destroyed under suspicious circumstances and the fourth mysteriously vanished without a trace. Babylon 4's fate was revealed in a first season episode and its final fate was revealed in a fourth season episode.

"Babylon 5" was constructed by the Earth Alliance, 10 years after the end of the Minbari War. The purpose of the station was to serve as a setting where humans and aliens get together and settle their differences peacefully and thus avoid another war. Babylon 5 was commanded by Jeff Sinclair, a hero in the Battle of the Line, the final battle in the Minbari war and whom the Minbari insisted be in charge of the station. Sinclair left his position at end of the first season to become Ambassador to Minbar.

He returned twice, first for a cameo appearance in a second season episode and a major role in a two part episode during the third season which explains things which had been alluded to in earlier episodes. He was replaced by Captain John Sheridan, man responsible for the one victory Earth had in its war against the Minbari. Earth and the four most powerful alien civilisations all have ambassadors permanently on Babylon 5. The Earth Alliance is represented by the Commander of Babylon 5. The main alien race the Minbari who are represented by Ambassador Delenn and her aid Lennier.

Commander Sinclair fought in the Battle of the Line and has a gap in his memory which has something to do with the reasons why the Minbari's surrendered in the war. Unknown to anyone else. Ambassador Delenn is a member of the Minbari's Grey Council, which was partly responsible for Sinclair being assigned as commander of the station in the second season. Delenn takes it upon herself to undergo a metamorphosis to make her appear more human. She comes out of the process with hair, which the Minbari lack. The Minbari Grey Council reject this although she is still allowed to be the Ambassador at Babylon 5. She and Captain Sheridan form a romantic relationship which will eventually produce a child which is shown in a flash back.

The Centauri Republic are represented by Londo Mollari and his aide Vir. The Centauri was the first alien race to make contact with mankind. The Centauri Republic, however, is much as the British Empire was in the first half of the 20th century. Londo is something of a womaniser who does not consider his current posting a glamorous one. Given the opportunity both his own position and that of the Centauri Republic in the second season, Londo aligned himself with the mysterious Morden and his unseen powerful allies, the Shadows, to defeat their enemies the Narn. Londo realises what he is doing is wrong, yet feels compelled to continue this fight.

The Narn Regime are represented by Ambassador G'Kar and his aide Na'Toth. They previously were under the control of The Centauri Republic, but they rebelled and won their freedom. Centauri however want the Narn homeworld back and manage to obtain it, with the help of Londo with Mr. Morden and his allies the Shadows.

The fourth of the main alien races is the Vorlons who are represented by Ambassador Kosh. Little is known about the Vorlons since they have avoided contact with all other races. Nobody knows exactly what they look like since Ambassador Kosh wears an environmental suit at all times. Vorlons are perhaps the most powerful of the alien races and for unknown reasons they agreed to part of the Babylon 5 project. The arrival of Ambassador Kosh on Babylon 5 and the subsequent life on the station was a central part of the series pilot movie. Kosh was killed during the third season by another Vorlon ambassador, also named Kosh.

Creator J. Michael Straczynski is also remembered for writing some of the better scripts for the SF series CAPTAIN POWER AND THE SOLDIERS OF THE FUTURE. Bruce Boxleitner is also famous for starring in the cult SF film "Tron" and also for an episode of "Tales From The Crypt". Tracy Scoggins is also famous for playing Cat in LOIS AND CLARK. Babylon 5 won the Hugo award Best Dramatic Presentation in both 1996 ("The Coming of Shadows") and 1997 ("Severed Dreams"), beating amongst others, "Independence Day", "Mars Attacks" and STAR TREK: DEEP SPACE NINE.

Most episodes of the series were written by J. Michael Straczynski, other writers mostly from the first season were David Gerrold, D.C. Fontana, Mark Scott Zicree and Lawrence G. Ditillio. The series had an on going storyline which became more complex as the show went on. Many changes happened in the five seasons of the show, from a Battle between the ancient Shadows and the new races such as Earth, the Battles with the Psi Corp, the fight for independence when Earth is ruled by an evil dictator, the fall of the Narn empire by the Centauri and the creation of the Earth Alliance, which is made up of many smaller worlds after Earth managed to kill the dictator. There are many more story arcs along the way, which makes this one of the most complicated plots in SF TV history.

Amongst the best episodes there was "Chrysalis" in which Sinclair and Catherine plan to get married, Garibaldi is critically injured whilst protecting the President and we get the first look at the Vorlon ambassador; "The Coming of Shadows" in which Londo and Refa decide to increase the size of the Centauri empire, which starts a war between them and the Narns. In 'The Fall of Night', the Centauri war escalates and Kosh has to save Sheridan's life after terrorists plant a bomb. The two part episode 'War Without End' is concerned with how Babylon 4 disappeared through time.

The show was designed to run for just five years and surprisingly managed to do it, despite being fought all the way by Warner Brothers, who did eventually stay with this show until TNT took over for season 5. J. Michael Straczynski controlled the show with a firm hand from the beginning because it was necessary with such a tightly woven 5 year story arc. Such a story arc was used with great effect by many SF shows in the late 1990s, following on from Babylon 5. The show was also the first to pioneer the use of CGI (Computer Graphics Interactive), which is graphics produced on computer. This allowed the show to save money because of the show's low budget. The first show to use CGI was "Captain Power And His Soldiers Of The Future", which J. Michael Straczynski also worked on. CGI has become a cheap way of producing high quality special effects in the 1990s.

"Babylon 5" is one of the best SF shows ever made in my opinion, with strong acting and excellent scripts. The show has managed to win two Hugo Awards, the first show to win since "Star Trek: The Next Generation". A Sequel to the series entitled "Babylon: Crusade" which continued the storyline was also produced. The pilot, 'The Gathering' was enhanced with new special effects and better editing, to be shown on TNT in the US. A series of television movies have been made continuing the story of "Babylon 5".

"Babylon 5" is a syndicated series which is part of the Warner Bros. Prime Time Entertainment Network (PTEN). The series debuted as a two hour TV movie in March 1993 which proved such a success to warrant the launch of a hour long weekly series in January 1994. Straczynski's other genre shows included "The New Twilight Zone" and "Captain Power and the Soldiers of the Future". Before Babylon Five's production Straczynski created a 5 year plan for the series which all of the individual episodes become part of a grander plan, yet each would be able to stand on its own. This is one of "Babylon 5"'s biggest achievements as things alluded to in one episode will become important a year or more later.

This five year long arc to the story has the unfortunate side effect of making it difficult for the casual viewer to get involved. Also, if episodes are caught on the numerous rerun syndicated series, which take up most of the year, situations can seem to revert back to the way they were.

This syndicated series is very much the brain child of Straczynski, who has the writing credit for 23 of the 40 one-hour episodes to date, plus the pilot. Though individual episodes stand alone, there is an over-arching story, involving the gradual solution of a number of mysteries, planned to extend over five years. This is a very unusual and ambitious way to structure a tv series. There is much political conspiracy -- often luridly melodramatic -- slowly unravelled as the story continues, and much of the action is devoted to these, which include Commander Sinclair's amnesia about a space battle against the Minbari ten years earlier. Other conspiracies involve soul stealing, and the possibly malign influence of the human Psi Corps on the Earth Alliance. The effective special effects are largely computer generated, by Foundation Imaging, and those for the pilot won an Emmy. The science goes out of its way, most of the time, not to include the futuristic for its own sake; that is, some of it is plausible. Human relations are imperfect, sometimes grating. The series gives the impression of being a little more prepared to go for the jugular than its immediate competition, STAR TREK: DEEP SPACE NINE, also set on a space station, whose pilot aired a scant month before B5's, but which was not in pre-production so long. (That is, B5 cannot be said to have been launched as any kind of deliberate imitation.) Due to illness, Harlan Ellison has not written his announced scripts.

Several major roles were dropped or replaced after the pilot. Other leading roles in the ongoing series are second-in-command Commander Susan Ivanova (played by Claudia Christian); telepath Talia Winters (played by Andrea Thompson); the cynical Security Chief Garibaldi (played by Jerry Doyle); Dr Stephen Franklin (played by Richard Biggs), Lieutenant Warren Keffer (played by Robert Russler); Vir, Londo's bumbling aide (played by Stephen Furst); Lennier, Delenn's assistant (played by Bill Mumy); Bester, possibly malicious Psi Cop (played by Walter Koenig). The first of a series of novels spun off from the series is Babylon 5, Book #1: Voices (1995) by John VORNHOLT.

On the technical side one of the most interesting things about Babylon 5 are its special effects. All of the outer space special effects on the series are computer generated. Created on the Video Toaster and the Amiga computer all of the space ships on the series are computer models. This process has a couple of advantages: 1) computer generated effects are much cheaper to produce than those utilising models, and 2) shots and angles which would be impossible to create with models can easily be generated on the computer. Much like, THE ADVENTURES OF SUPERMAN was made in colour in the 1950's with an eye towards future sales. Babylon 5 has been made in a widescreen format. So in the future if / when widescreen TV does begin broadcasting Babylon 5 will be available in the new format.

"Humans and aliens wrapped in 2,500,000 tons of spin-ning metal, all alone in the night. It can be a dangerous place but it's our last, best hope for peace. This is the story of the last of the Babylon stations. The year is 2258. The name of the place is Babylon 5." It takes a brave show to try to crack the stranglehold the Star Trek dynasty has on TV sci-fi. Many have tried, few have measured up. Babylon 5 is one of the better challengers. Babylon 5 is a five-mile-long space station located deep in neutral space and serves as an intergalactic version of the UN. It's called Babylon 5 because it's the fifth and last of the Babylon stations. The first three were destroyed by sabotage and the fourth just disappeared off the map. "So why build a fifth?" its commander is asked. "Just plain old human stubbornness," is the reply.

The station's primary function is to host critical talks aimed at establishing lasting peace in a galaxy that has seen many years of conflict between the five major solar systems: Earth Alliance, Minbari Federation Narn Regime, Centauri Republic and Vorlon Empire. Ambassadors and diplomats from each government are present including Earth's representative Jeffrey Sinclair, who also acts as Babylon 5's reluctant commander.

And while there may be no stranger breed of creature than politicians the presence of some 250,000 inhabitants means their squabbles are just the tip of an iceberg. The station is a port of call for refugees, smugglers, businessmen and travellers from a hundred worlds. Here, alien cultures clash in a dark domain of suspicion and betrayal—clearly defined in the pilot story, in which the delicate new peace is threatened by a shape-shifting hit man who tries to assassinate the newly arrived Vorlon ambassador and pin the blame on Sinclair.

Sinclair is a former fighter pilot, haunted by his experiences in the Earth-Minbari war ten years previously. He's happy to leave most of the day-to-day running of the station to his ambitious and hot-headed second in command, Susan Ivanova. Michael Garibaldi is the station's sardonic security chief, and the human contingent of stars is completed by the dedicated medical officer, Dr. Stephen Franklin, and a telepath, Talia Winters.

The principal alien ambassadors are Delenn, a bald but elegant Minbari (whose secret mission is to guard against Sinclair remembering the truth about 24 "lost" hours of his war experience against the Minbari); Londo Mollari, a drinking, gambling, womanising Centauran in a silly suit and a clown-like haircut; G'Kar, a calculating, reptilian Narn with the morals of a snake and the mysterious Vorlon, Kosh, who remains hidden inside a bizarre costume that acts as a mobile life--support system called an exoskeleton. Also along for the ride is sixties sci-fi "veteran" Bill Mumy, aka Will Robinson of LOST IN SPACE, as a Minbari attaché, while his Lost in Space mom, June Lockhart, also makes a guest appearance. Andreas Katsulas, who plays G'Kar, had earlier played Romulan commander Tomalak in STAR TREK : THE NEXT GENERATION.

The aliens look impressive—and so do the special effects, even if it does seem at times as if you're watching two different series. For exterior sequences are realised not by models, but in a super-slick computer-generated spacecape, including a dramatic Star Gate, a portal in space where ships emerge from hyperspace. It's the nearest thing to a wormhole this side of DEEP SPACE NINE.

In the beginning, it was easy to get hung up on the similarities between B5 and its Trek rival. But Straczynski has always maintained that his project dates back to 1988, and as the series has progressed, it's clear that his vision of the future is much darker.

In many ways, Babylon 5 is still SFTV's best-kept secret. While The X-Files has exploded the Star Trek dynasty's grip on the hearts and minds of the media, B5 has quietly turned itself into a proper epic, with a structured beginning, middle and end. Its dark corners, troubled minds and sinister plots have brought the scale of a novel to television. Indeed, Straczynski has admitted being inspired by Tolkien's Lord of the Rings in his theme of good vs. evil and light vs. dark. Straczynski's story arc is scheduled to run for five years, and the series' survival beyond the ratings-sensitive first season has allowed him the freedom to explore that arc to the full. Characters come and go—principally Sinclair, who was replaced as commander of Babylon 5 by Captain John Sheridan, played by Bruce Boxleitner, previously best-known for his role in The Scarecrow and Mrs. King. But Sinclair remained in the background, on Minbar, returning in Season Three as an important

And while the Trek characters generally remain constant, B5's regulars grow and change- literally in the case of Delenn, whose transformation into a human/Minbari hybrid advanced that whole plot cycle. And as the Narn-Centauri conflict escalated, the calculating G'Kar became a real figure of pathos a tragic hero while the clownish Londo became a scheming villain. And Vir quietly gained in stature, becoming a Centauri at odds with his people's aggressive streak. And though the dialogue is frequently corny (sample: "General Hague is coming and Hell is coming with him!"), Babylon 5 is rarely boring, which is more than can be said for STAR TREK : VOYAGER in its early seasons.

The shows UK premiere was on Channel 4 on the 16th May 1994. Executive producers for the series were Douglas Netter and J. Michael Straczynski, producers for the series were Robert Latham Brown (Pilot episode only), John Copeland and Richard Compton. The music was by Stewart Copeland (Pilot only) and Christopher Franke. Conceptual consultant was Harlan Ellison and the visual effects designer was Ron Thornton. The director of photography was John C. Flinn III, the story editor was Lawrence G. DiTillio.

Each of the seasons of Babylon 5 also had an overall season title which were Season One - Signs and Portents, Season Two - The Coming of Shadows, Season Three - Point of No Return, Season Four - No Surrender, No Retreat and Season Five - The Wheel of Fire. The final episode for season one "Chrysalis" was first transmitted in the UK, on the 3rd October 1994, three weeks before the US broadcast the episode.

JMS wanted his epic space opera to go out with a bang, but Season Five will sadly be remembered as a missed opportunity. The final ten episodes certainly picked up the pace, but the lengthy Telepath arc at the beginning of the year was drawn out for far too long. Captain Lochley only appeared sporadically and was given some of the dumbest dialogue ever written for the show, whilst Vir and Lennier were almost invisible. Sheridan spent far too much time in the back-ground, and even Delenn seemed relegated to looking surprised all the time. So, with all of this against it, why tune in at all? Thankfully, Andreas Katsulas and Peter Jurasik saved the day, respectively giving life to G'Kar and Londo. The bickering enemies formed an un-likely alliance and the rapport between them was delicious. Walter Koenig's Bester also added some much-needed variety to the mix, but still could not save this final year from ultimately being a disappointment.

BABYLON 5: THE LEGEND OF THE RANGERS (pilot)

Babylon 5: The Legend of the Rangers takes place in 2264 after the wars are over and a new age of space exploration has begun. The Interstellar Alliance has been organized to establish and maintain peace among its member worlds, including Earth. The Rangers are an elite military force made up of hand-picked young, smart, dedicated human and alien members who combine the high-tech elements of space travel with the idealism and honor of the knights of old. They encounter a previously unknown alien race whose lethal power is far greater than any force previously known to Earth or any other world in the Interstellar Alliance.

After J. Michael Straczynski's poor attempt of a sequel to his highly popular BABYLON 5 series CRUSADE, comes another attempt off a spin-off. Well you can't accuse the man of giving up easily when it comes to the Babylon 5 universe.

I didn't watch Babylon 5 regularly when it was on television, but what I did see of it impressed me. It seemed well written, well acted, and imaginative. This movie, though, is unoriginal, poorly acted, and really cheesy. The dialog seems forced and is full of bad one-liners. The story is pretty typical, offering nothing new. It's not a terrible movie by any means, but it doesn't come close to living up to my expectations, which surely weren't as high as those of a die hard B5 fan.

Sci-fi television is a small world, and nowhere is that better reflected than in the short list of directors who regularly frequent the various genre series. Director Michael Vejar's name is on that short list. Over the past 15 years, Vejar has directed episodes of every Star Trek series from Next Generation on, as well The X-Files, Babylon 5 and Crusade. Some of most noteworthy Babylon 5 episodes are credited to Vejar, including "Comes the Inquisitor" and "War Without End," as well as the TV-movie In the Beginning. We spoke with him a few days before the B5: Rangers premiere.

Q: You've worked with Babylon 5 creator Joe Straczynski on numerous episodes since season two. Did you develop a shorthand communication that helped when doing B5: Rangers?

A: Certainly there was a shorthand between Joe and myself. But everything that I do as a director is how I react to what's written on the page. That affects how I approach the project.

Q: What was your greatest challenge in the script?

A: We had a finite budget, but there were some very spectacular visual effects called for in the show. Trying to figure out a way to do justice to the material, and not have [the film] become incredibly over-budget, was a bit of a challenge. But I knew from working with Joe in the Babylon days that if you approach him with a problem, he always has a solution, and usually the solution turns out to be something better than what was originally there.

He did that with the sequence in the gunnery pod. Originally that was written as a chair that was mounted on the bridge. The floor would go away, this chair would take the gunnery officer down into the pod and the chair would rotate 360 degrees. Well, it became incredibly expensive to try pull that off, and so we were trying to figure out a way that we could do it in a budget-sensitive way. And Joe came up with this idea to have her free floating in air, which became tremendously difficult for the actress [Myriam Sirois] to do, because she was on wires, but I think the three sequences in the picture that we wound up with are twice as good as what we would have done had we had the chair as originally written.

Q: Did you have a particular approach in mind for filming?

A: Wherever I could, I tried to keep the camera moving in on everything. Camera movement, and the movement of people, always seems to add an element of drama and drive to a picture, and a sense of pace. To me, when the camera is moving in on someone, it's kind of compelling me and drawing me in.

Q: By its nature, the Liandra has tight spaces and a compact design. Did this hinder shooting on the bridge, which frequently had multiple people packed into a small space?

A: Joe described the ship as having a submarine kind of feel. It was a challenge to light the bridge. I was working with [director of photography] Henry Chan, and I would ask for a shot, and he'd just try his darndest to give me the shot. And I don't think I ever asked for a shot that he couldn't do.

We never wanted the ship to look like a nice, sleek, brand-new ship. It had been through the wars, and as we continued through the story, we saw it degraded down to the point where they were almost in darkness towards the end of the picture. So Henry was working in an environment that he couldn't hide any lights in, because the ceiling was so low and it was a permanent ceiling. Also, it's the kind of set that could become boring with as much time as we spent on it. Every scene could start to look the same, and that would drag the story down. But we were constantly changing the lighting effects by using panels that would be blown out at different points of the show.

Q: Did having Andreas Katsulas, the only returning cast member, help the new cast find its rhythm more quickly?

A: When each one of those characters worked with Andreas, they rose to the occasion. In his presence, you'd better work or you're going to get left behind. They all stepped up to the plate and I thought they did great especially Dylan. There were a couple of scenes there where I thought he was really good with Andreas; I think he elevated his performance because he was working with somebody of Andreas' quality.

Q: Do you get a personal satisfaction out of seeing your vision transformed to reality once the special effects are completed?

A: That's what is the most fun, when you visualize something and get an idea of how you can play it. Then in the shooting process you try and point to this visualization that you have in your mind, and then when you see it all in its final edition! And it's so much better than I imagined.

Interview: Writer/executive producer J. Michael Straczynski

Novelist, author and screenwriter Joe Straczynski has a long relationship with science fiction and related genres. He was the story editor and primary writer for the first-run syndicated episodes of The Twilight Zone revival series, and his cable adaptation of The Strange Case of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde earned him nominations for both ACE and Writers Guild awards. He worked as a story editor on two animated series, Captain Power and the Soldiers of the Future and The Real Ghostbusters, and, among his other accomplishments, created and wrote most of the scripts for the Babylon 5 series and telefilms. We sat with him for an hour last May in his Vancouver production office, two stories above the soundstage.

Q: What made the timing right to pursue another Babylon 5 project?

A: The show started running on the SCI FI Channel pretty early on, and it began doing extremely well in the ratings. Someone said this might not be a bad idea to explore some more.

Q: When you were working on the sequel series Crusade you had to contend with what you considered meddlesome intervention by cable network TNT. What kind of creative latitude are you getting from SCI FI Channel?

A: So far, a very special latitude. I gave them the outline, which had to be done very quickly because by the time they made up their minds to proceed, we were looking at a possible labor action by the Writers Guild. So I had about four days to write the outline, and then a week-and-a-half to write the script. And then [SCI FI Channel] had about six or seven notes on the outline, and about five or six notes on the script. And they were all reasonable notes; that's par for the course.

Q: What are you going after with the look and feel of the Rangers' spacecraft, the Liandra?

A: This, should it go to series, isn't meant to be a ship-bound show. For the times that we are there [on board], we wanted a look that is definitely not [that of a] traditional science-fiction program. This is not a 200-person starship; it's a 20-guy ship, max.

Q: Of all the original cast members, why choose G'Kar (Andreas Katsulas) to return?

A: I was already thinking about which character to bring in, and G'Kar was a strong prospect, but to literally sit down next to Andreas [in a chance restaurant meeting] after not seeing him for two-and-a-half years, it was [a sign], like, "Oh, thank you very much, I get it."

Q: Tell us about how you came up with the unusual approach for the Liandra weapons system, which is symbiotic with specialist Sarah Cantrell (Myriam Sirois).

A: Sarah is the ship, in that respect: If she moves, it fires. She jumps into the gunnery pod, and if she sees an incoming ship, she points at it, and the ship fires. It's a much faster reaction period [than conventional controls]. She's constantly getting sensory impulses from every part of the ship.

Q: How did you come up with the balance of characters?

A: It was a question of looking at what you'd actually need. You'd have a covert-operations person, you'd have someone who could handle first contact and political stuff, a translator, someone to fight, a leader, a healer, and so on the very minimum crew you'd have to make this work.

Q: Tell us about the contrast inherent in the very human, independent-thinking David Martel (Dylan Neal) captaining a ship in the Rangers, an organization steeped in Minbari tradition.

A: The Minbari are very regimented and very precise, and while there's room for that, what makes us human, what makes us interesting, is our natural rebellious streak. And I wanted someone to embody that. Humans need to have reasons for things; just to obey isn't enough you have to explain why. It is a cliché that the captain will go do what he has to do, and break the rules. What character is not that, in any TV serial? [Martel, on the other hand] would actually like to try and abide by the rules. But he butts up against them sometimes because they chafe, and he wants to know why. And a character who wants to know why is my kind of character.

Q: Is it comfortable having a new story within the framework of this universe you'd created?

A: Yes. It's very comfortable and familiar to me. I think it's funny in that, when I created the Babylon 5 universe, I created in broad strokes a history of a million years in either direction from our point of the story, and a thousand years in either direction in fine strokes. And the universe is saying, well, you did this, you know these stories, now you have to tell all of them. Having those stories worked out gives me something to stand on. Give me any place in the Babylon 5 story a thousand years in either direction, and I can tell you a story that takes place at that point. In [the episode] "Deconstruction of a Falling Star," we saw some hints of that I [went forward] a hundred years in one act, 500 years in the next, a thousand thereafter, and a million in the final act. It was an overview of the whole B5 universe.

Q: If this goes to series, would we ever get to see the Rangers crew cross paths with that of Babylon 5?

A: I would like to go to B5 from time to time that would be [the latter-day cast of] Lochley [Tracy Scoggins] and Zack [Jeff Conaway] and those guys to see our established characters where possible, where logical.

Interview: Dylan Neal

Dylan Neal has something to prove. Or rather, his alter ego, Captain David Martel, does. As the commander of the Liandra, Martel isn't your typical starship captain. Though a dedicated Ranger, he has a something of a rebellious streak; his crew calls him by his first name, even as he aptly guides them through the most harrowing of experiences. Neal, an up-and-coming leading man in Hollywood, has appeared in more than 40 films and television projects, including an early series that Babylon 5 creator J. Michael Straczynski worked on extensively, Captain Power and the Soldiers of the Future. A native of Ontario, Canada, he first became famous as a soap star on The Bold and the Beautiful, and went on to become a regular on Dawson's Creek and Hyperion Bay. We spoke with him in May on the Vancouver set of Rangers.

Q: Tell me about the scene you're filming today.

A: Well, today we're covering all of the early stages of getting this cursed ship, the Liandra, up and running. We're under the gun, we have a time limit to get the crew and the ship ready, and we're trying not to give the impression that we don't know what we're doing. So we're frantically running around, finding problems right, left and center, and at the same time we're trying to put on this brave face that everything's great. It's chaos right now, in the early stages.

Q: Tell us about Captain David Martel, who starts out by going against the Ranger establishment by saving the crew of his earlier ship, rather than fighting to the end.

A: He's unpredictable. The Ranger High Council can't automatically assume David is going to do this or that. They just don't know. He's been given a second chance with the Liandra to prove himself once again. He's a well-rounded character, but he's definitely flawed; you're going to see mistakes made. And I think that's a different take on a Ranger.

Q: Does David have a particular style of command? He certainly seems more laid-back and easy-going than other captains we've seen.

A: I think it's by the seat of the pants. He goes with his gut feelings but he's the first one to say he doesn't have all the answers, and he relies on the people he's assembled around him. At the very beginning, he tells them all, "Some of you I've worked with before, others I've observed, and welcome aboard. Let's see if we can do this together." And that's what makes him a really good leader that he does rely on everyone. He's not pretending to know something that he doesn't. There will be occasions where no one really has the answer, and he'll just sort of wing it and see where that takes him.

Q: Did J. Michael Straczynski give you much direction on how to play the character?

A: Very little, actually. I think Joe is the kind of executive producer who likes to see what you bring to the table. He has in his own mind what he's looking for; if he gets fortunate enough to find an actor that represents it, then he leaves it up to the actor to take it from there. Joe will see weaknesses and strengths in the actor, and write to that not trying to eliminate all of the weaknesses, but to discover the character along with you, and then together you'll take it to wherever it goes.

Q: How does David interact with his crew?

A: He's not a one-man show. He's brought together a crew where each person has their own particular talents and expertise, and he's going to utilize them to their full ability. David has a tight-knit crew, which also represents a surrogate family that I'm sure is very meaningful for him. He has a bit of a mysterious background — he lost his parents at an early age, and though we don't know why, I'm sure we'll find out.

Q: Were you wary of the martial-arts sequence that the script called on you to do?

A: I have no martial-arts training. My only experience as an actor with fighting was your typical barroom brawl kind of thing; it's a couple of punches thrown, and it's over with. Martial-arts sequences can get quite lengthy and involved, because it's a real dance with a lot of choreography. Fortunately, this project was not heavily laden with martial arts, in comparison to another one I'd done in the last year, a pilot for CBS called The President's Man. This one has some fight sequences, but after the last experience I'm not worried in the least [about doing them]. I've learned that regardless of my inability to really do anything, they edit very well, and they always get really good stunt doubles [laughs]. Fortunately, my double is a five-time world champion Wu Shu artist, so I think I'm in good hands.

Q: Do the detailed sets help you get into the character?

A: Absolutely, but it's not something that's unique to sci-fi. For me, the clothes are really important to feeling comfortable in what this character is doing. If it doesn't feel right, it doesn't feel right and it has to, for me, anyway. It's great that the sets are really cool and detailed, because it makes us believe that we're doing a quality project. If you're walking onto a cheesy set, it's like, "Oh, great, we're doing a really cheap project here." The sets also help with the reality, too, of course, too it's easy to immerse yourself in the world when it all looks very real. The degree to which they've taken the sets and the costuming here shows how committed everyone involved really is to making this a home-run kind of show.

Q: How did working on this movie differ from other things you've worked on?

A: Sci-fi is totally different from other things I've done. I like a certain amount of action; it's fun to play as an actor you're essentially being like a little kid running around with guns and killing off the bad guys. I've done brief periods of that, but it would be fun to do it in a series. Joe has said that the original Babylon 5 was more of a drama with a little bit of action; I think this would flip a bit more, with more action and less heavy drama.

Interview: Andreas Katsulas

Andreas Katsulas plays G'Kar in the SCI FI original movie Babylon 5: The Legend of the Rangers, a role he made famous in the original Babylon 5 series. We caught up with Katsulas on the set of Rangers and discussed his return to the Babylon 5 universe, his thoughts about G'Kar's future and his take on what fans will think of the new film.

Q: How did you end up being cast in the movie?

A: The way it happened was, I happened to bump into [J. Michael Straczynski]. I was having dinner with my son on Ventura Boulevard and [Straczynski] happened to be having dinner with his wife in the same restaurant and we saw each other. It was on the day that he'd gotten the green light for Rangers. So he took it as a sign there I was in the flesh so he sort of said, do you want to be in it? And I said of course I do. If it had been Peter [Jurasik] that he bumped into it would have been Peter that's in it. But I happened to be the one who was under his nose at the right minute.

Q: Do you think fans were excited to hear that G'Kar would be in Rangers?

A: I don't own a computer so I have no Internet news or activity so I know nothing at all about what the fan reaction to this is. It's just a logical guess that they are very very wise to put someone from the old series in it, and if you had to choose, it would be a very difficult decision. And I think it's a decision that's so awesome and difficult because Joe loves us all so much. You know, which baby are you going to choose to put on your knee? And the others are going to be starved for your affection.

Q: How do you think fans will react when they see the new movie?

A: I think they'll be, first of all, head over heels delighted that something is being offered again. And that this time, in this world Babylon 5 is still there. This isn't some future time when B5 doesn't exist. Sheridan is still there, he's the president of the Alliance, everything that was in place when the series is there is still there, we're just moving the camera over a couple of light years. I think there is enough tangible connection with the old show, and the fact of G'Kar's presence, is enough of the flavor of the old show; I think Joe's really brought the two worlds together and he's left it totally open that the two worlds can intermingle. So I think the fans will be totally interested in the new developments and delighted that the old developments are still there and that they can still see some of the old characters maybe reappear. I don't know where Joe's going to take it, but everything's open.

Q: If Rangers becomes a series, will G'kar be a recurring character, or is he just making a guest appearance in the movie?

A: I'm not clear on it. I've asked the question and I think Joe would like to see G'Kar be a part of things but what form that will take I don't think he knows himself.

Q: Do you miss having your long-time Babylon 5 antagonist, Londo Molari (Peter Jurasik), with you?

A: The way things are in the new situation, I just didn't think about it. I don't know how it would play out in the long run, if I were to go to series with the story, I don't know. I just miss Peter so much on a personal level, that's about what I can say. He's my buddy and I wish he were around.

Q: What do the other original Babylon 5 cast members think of your being cast in Rangers?

A: I don't have an Internet [connection] or anything, but they do. So before I even knew anything was solid, Peter and Jerry [Doyle] were already phoning me to congratulate me. I said, what are you congratulating me for? They already knew more than I did before I knew it! Of course we have the kind of relationship, the three of us, where I'm gleefully rubbing their noses in the fact that I'm in it and they're not!

Q: Do you have any parting thoughts?

A: I'm just personally really happy and excited for Joe and Doug [Netter] that they're finding a way to continue a good thing. And I wish them much success whether I continue with it or not. I just hope that it goes and that they have a great time and do some good work.

Q: How much of the G'Kar seen in Rangers is shaped by the G'Kar of B5 past? Does his history from B5 carry forward?

A: The essence of G'Kar is always the same. I would say that on the exterior level, he's experienced even more. I mean, he already had a great deal of experience with life and a variety of things, but now he's maybe even a lighter and freer G'Kar. [laughs]

Q: G'Kar has come a long way since he was introduced in The Gathering.

A: Well, you know, what's better? To play a character who stays stuck in the same baggage year after year, or to play a character who gets beyond that and goes to a new level?

Q: How did it feel to step again into G'Kar's skin, literally?

A: I didn't experience anything unusual or different; it was so just right. I don't know how to explain it. Just because time had passed made no difference. But it's the last [major role] I really played, and nothing has happened to sort of jar or pull me in a new direction where it would be hard to find my way back. It's just been suspended time; there's been nothing [in between] which would distract me from what I know of playing G'Kar.

Q: How do you manage to be so expressive through all the prosthetic makeup?

A: If the inside is right, the outside will correspond somehow. And since I hadn't lost the insides of G'Kar — I mean, the outside is put on you, then it's a question of getting your feelings and movements and everything inside to correspond. And when it does, then the mask takes on what it's supposed to take on. It's not a study that you do in front of the mirror, where you say if I move my left eyebrow up a quarter of an inch it gives this expression, or if I drop my jaw, it does that. You really can't think about that, and make it work in that way, and make [the character] living.

Q: What was it like working with a new generation of B5 actors?

A: Personally, I think if it had been the old cast reassembled, we would have been 90 percent partying and just enjoying the fact that we were together, and about 10 percent working. Whereas this was a new cast that still had to prove themselves and find their characters, and really work hard on this to make it work. So I really appreciated that I was coming into an atmosphere of a work in progress, and had to join them in all seriousness in the Rangers' world, and not just sort of party with Jerry Doyle and Peter Jurasik. Not that I wouldn't have been equally happy to see the old buddies and see it all start up again that way. But this was more of a work situation, and a very good one.

Q: How did it feel on a personal level, given that you were sort of an experienced guide to the young cast, not unlike G'Kar is to the Rangers in the movie?

A: On an individual basis, I felt very at home with all of them, whether I was out of the makeup or walking about on the parking lot and having lunch. We were all in the same boat, with a real energy and enthusiasm. You're only as good as you are now not as good as you were before. The fact that maybe I had some success playing G'Kar doesn't guarantee me three years later that I can still do it, so I have to keep my senses alive and still be working on it.

Q: What was your first day on the set like?

A: I really liked the new sets a lot. [J. Michael Straczynski] had shown me around the day I arrived, before I shot. He took me on a tour of the sets, and I was really, really pleased with the changes and how things, I thought, had improved in the physical sense.

Q: What did you enjoy most about being included in this continuation of the Babylon 5 legend?

A: I was flattered by the fact that Joe appreciates my work enough to include it in the next thing he's doing; that's like a validation. This is like [him] saying, 'You certainly did do a good job as G'Kar, and we'd like you to do it again, that's how much we liked it.' It's one of those things; you just get a very nice stroke from being included in the next thing.

Q: Do you have any parting thoughts?

A: I'm just personally really happy and excited for Joe and Doug [Netter] that they're finding a way to continue a good thing. And I wish them much success whether I continue with it or not. I just hope that it goes and that they have a great time and do some good work.

Building a Better Spaceship: The Production Design of Babylon 5: The Legend of the Rangers

By Melissa J. Perenson

To walk into production designer Steven Geaghan's offices on the set of Babylon 5: The Legend of the Rangers is to enter another universe almost literally. Sure, there are familiar-looking computers and artists' drafting boards dotting the area. But look closely, and you'll see the images, sketches and plans that comprise every outer-space aspect of the star-spanning telefilm.

Geaghan first met Babylon 5 creator J. Michael Straczynski in January 2000, when Joe, as he's familiarly called, was seeking a production designer for his upcoming Showtime series, Jeremiah. The two hit it off, and when Showtime postponed production on Jeremiah, Straczynski tapped Geaghan to design Rangers. (Jeremiah is currently shooting in Vancouver, where Rangers was filmed.)

Although Geaghan is no stranger to science fiction his credits include The Outer Limits and Sliders he did have to come up to speed on Babylon 5, and fast. In order to prepare, "I got a tremendous number of tapes, and I watched as many as I could get my hands on," Geaghan recalls.

He also perused the litany of books and Web sites. "Once I had a fair sense of where the show had been, I discussed with Joe his feelings about where the departure point was. It was determined we would be in a different aspect of the Babylon 5 universe. It would be the same universe, but with ships and places we had not seen before. For example, the Liandra is a new kind of ship we haven't seen, a kind primarily used by the Rangers."

Submarine in Space

The design and function of the Liandra is unique among the ships we've seen thus far in Babylon 5. "It's a haunted ship, with the souls or the spirits of dead crew still inhabiting the ship and that plays an important part in the story of the pilot. So we wanted the ship to be spooky. We also figured it should be like a Los Angeles-class submarine in terms of its size and small, tight environment, with low ceilings, narrow hallways, small rooms, that sort of thing. We actually wanted it to be a cross between that particular boat and a PT boat of World War II a lightly armored, lightly gunned, fast ship."

Every detail of the Liandra has been thought through, right down to its coppery color scheme and its Minbari influences, which are based on a Japanese aesthetic. "If you took 17th-century Japanese sensibilities," Geaghan says, "and combined them with 17th-century late Baroque European sensibilities, and then turned that into technology a thousand years hence, what would it look like? So that was my metaphor. To set the mood, the colors would be coppers, with greens and blues to age the copper, and certain bronze and gold tones," he explains.

Flying the Colors

"There are only five colors on the entire ship, and they're used to create a warm yet military environment." The bridge is purposely very dark and tarnished, with bits of color here and there, but mostly in the graphics of the screen controls. "And the cargo bay is a highly textured space that's dark but not oppressive, while the engine room, which is where the ghosts are really hanging out, is a very dark space."

As we walk through the sets, Geaghan points out that the bridge itself is compact and fairly restrictive, designed to accommodate perhaps five or six people at a time. Continuing into a neighboring, interconnected corridor, we look high above us on the walls and see some shapes that have a vague familiarity about them. And surprisingly enough, they should seem familiar: In order to achieve interesting looks and textures, Geaghan made use of a variety of ordinary household products mounted on the walls, and painted to look futuristic and like nothing we've seen before.

The Wild, Wild Walls

When approaching set design, Geaghan considers both the needs of the story and the needs of the director. Many of the walls in the set are "wild," which means they can move away "to allow camera placement. Of course, if you move too many walls, the ceiling will fall, so the ceiling has to be hung independently of the set. All of these considerations go into the design and the cost," he notes.

And while any film's costs may be limited by budget, the Legend of the Rangers production design is priceless

RangerWear: The Costumes of Babylon 5: The Legend of the Rangers

By Melissa J. Perenson

They live for The One. They die for The One. And at the moment, The One is in Crystine Booth's hands just steps away from the Babylon 5: The Legend of the Rangers soundstages in Vancouver. There, in Booth's busy enclave, the movie's costume designer is preparing G'Kar's costume for use.

"It is the costume. It is the only costume," she explains and it's indeed the real deal, the original piece of wardrobe Andreas Katsulas wore throughout the original Babylon 5 series. The prospect of making any changes to it "was a very touchy subject," Booth says, "because that costume was in the Warner Bros. Museum in Los Angeles. In order for us to get it up here, we had to promise to not clean or alter it; we could literally do nothing to the costume, and it had to be in a locked room at all times except for when it's on the actor." Because it's considered a piece of television history, the costume itself is highly insured.

And taking care of TV history is just one part of the job for Booth, who's designed costumes for such telefilms and miniseries as P.T. Barnum (1999) and Dean Koontz's Black River (2001), as well as for the Lynn Redgrave-Lolita Davidovich movie Touched (1999). She was nominated for a Genie the Canadian equivalent of the Oscar for her costume-design work on the children's fantasy film Once in a Blue Moon (1995).

Warrior-Monk Ideal

The look of the Rangers' outfits, evoking the ideal of the warrior-monk, developed out of conversations between Booth and B5 creator and telefilm writer-executive producer J. Michael Straczynski. His attention to detail "surprised me," she says. "I'd send out some sketches, and he'd say, 'This is pretty close,' or 'Take it this way,' or 'Let's take it away from that.' So we did lots of e-mails and faxing of sketches because he wasn't up here in Vancouver all the time. We made some mock-ups finally, and he saw those and said, 'Great! Let's just take this step of adding the leather at the end.' This gave it more of a warrior look, and less that of a monk. And," she recalls with a laugh, "it couldn't be too tight as he said, 'The actors have to be able to eat their lunch.'"

As well, Booth says, the costume design "had to look good on both men and women, and so I worked with components. That's why I feel the vests really work, because you can tailor a vest to flatter" an actor's physique.

The Silk Trade

The material used is silk indirectly a request from Straczynski and fellow executive producer Doug Netter, who wanted a certain texture, says Booth. The flow of the fabrics can be credited to the copious use of raw-silk materials. "This fabulous raw silk is just beautiful," enthuses Booth. "I just bought every inch of it available in Vancouver. Getting enough of the fabric was a real issue, because pretty soon there were more extras and doubles" in the cast than originally called for.

The choice of dye colors was also something Straczynski contributed to. "One day, we went through the process of what colors should who be," remembers Booth. "And it was really interesting, because Joe basically called out the colors based on how he saw the actors' characters which is something I really like, but as a costume designer, I want to know what the actor feels comfortable in, what's his or her eye color, what looks good on their skin tone. Amazingly, it all worked; all the colors worked on the cast."

Day of the Diplomat

One of the biggest days on the shoot was what Booth refers to as "diplomat day", when a scene featuring numerous and varied diplomats from different races was being shot. "A lot of the actors were in prosthetics and full-costume. That was busy. We had to come up with a way of dressing a lot of different kinds of aliens on a tight budget and tight time. I'd have loved to get a lot more elaborate, but we just didn't have the money or time." The solution? "Joe suggested we come up with sort of a Babylon 5 robe for these diplomats at the convention. We made them in different fabrics and contrasts to denote the different races. It turned out to be a lot of fun, and we have about 20 of these aliens walking around in these fabulous, swishy [robes]."

There was one other original costume element that used again, in addition to G'Kar's costume: The Ranger pin was specially flown in from Los Angeles. "Joe was vehement that it be the same as before," Booth says perhaps echoing the creator's desire for something beyond just than pin.

Mark Savela's a Savvy Fella:

Behind the Scenes with the Visual-Effects Supervisor

When the series Babylon 5 debuted, the now-common practice of using computer-generated images for visual effects was still in its infancy. And, no surprise, Babylon 5 was one of the pioneers. How does the B5 universe respond today to the challenge of producing exciting battle sequences and other eye-catching visuals in a world where CGI effects have become typical?

Legend of the Rangers visual-effects supervisor Mark Savela, of the Toronto- and Vancouver-based GVFX effects house (Bride of Chucky, Stargate SG-1), says he and his crew met the challenge by putting in more-than-typical personal involvement. "We had a great many Babylon 5 fans within the company," he says, "and we knew Rangers was going to be big. We went after it full-force, since we as a company really wanted to be a part of this."

As visual-effects supervisor, Savela was responsible for the design and continuity of the movie. That meant overseeing the 15 animators who built the models of the new Ranger and alien ships, and the 14 CGI artists who handled the "compositing" tasks (seamlessly blending model and actor shots and digital computer effects into a single image). "With 300 effects shots in a two-hour telefilm, it's easy for things to go in ways they're not supposed to," Savela says. "It's my job to make sure everybody is on the same page all the time."

Helping him in that task, he readily acknowledges, was a high degree of cooperation from writer-producer J. Michael Straczynski, who got the effects team involved earlier than others might have. "One of our concept-storyboard artists in Vancouver met with Joe very early on, and right away started doing sketches, started designing the ships," Savela says. "A lot of the things you'll see in the movie, like the gunnery-pod sequence, had very early sketches that planned out what [the effect] was going to look like and how it was going to be shot. There was definitely a lot of preplanning in it, and Joe was right there through the whole thing, saying how this or that was going to look."

And beyond the look came the logistics not only that of the usual visual-effects requirements, such as "green-screen" work (where actors perform against a plain green backdrop to which digital explosions, starscapes, etc. will be added), but of certain kinds of stunt work in which the likes of cables and harnesses must be digitally erased.

In the gunnery-pod sequence, for instance, Myriam Sirois, who plays weapons specialist Sarah Cantrell, had to roll about gracefully and purposefully in a harness and rig. Savela was concerned, since Sirois hadn't had any experience with green-screen rig work before. Those worries were quickly banished, however. On Myriam's first day in the contraption, Savela says, "I saw a crowd of people around her" watching her work, "It looked like she had been doing it forever, even though she'd only been up there a half-hour. She was just so comfortable swinging away. It was just fantastic to see, because we knew then that [the scene] would work." (You can see for yourself in the Sarah Cantrell Digital Trading Card.) "When it came to the day to film the sequence," Savela goes on, "she got one of the biggest rounds of applause on the set."

Looking back, Savela notes that this project over which many a bonding sleepover moment occurred at GVFX is the largest his company has worked on. And as challenging and fun as it clearly seems to have been, you can't blame him for saying, "It was very gratifying to see it finished."

Propping Up the Rangers: A Trip through the Props Department

Clive Edwards has one of the coolest jobs on the set of B5: The Legend of the Rangers: He's in charge of the props, those everyday items the actors handle or even climb into from space pods to barf bags. Here's a look at some of them, up close and personal.

The Star, which Clive calls his prize creation for this project. This prop plays a significant part in the story and we see it prominently in the naming ceremony. Getting the red center to fit properly and maintain it's clarity was a challenge, Clive said. Here we have a grenade. It looks very futuristic but is made from BMW motorcycle hubs.

A weapons array on the bridge. Open the top and you have firing controls for forward weapons. This device was made by using an Italian bread box. Every B5 fan is familiar with the fighting pike. It is again an integral part of the continuing story. Here's one that will be used in a fight sequence between Capt. Martel (Dylan Neal) and Kitaro (Warren T. Takeuchi). As an added attraction, that's Clive's very own arm!

What was Clive working on during our visit? A barf-bag! Yes, a barf-bag. Suki Parker from the art department helped to transform a standard airsickness bag into something more futuristic looking and one that could accommodate the head of a Minbari! Now that's a challenge!

My Visit To The Rangers Set By Sandra Bruckner

SCIFI.COM sent long-time Babylon 5 fan Sandra Bruckner to the set of Babylon 5: The Legend of the Rangers during filming in May 2001. Here is her report on the trip:

Sunday, May 27: The Northwest Babylon 5 Mailing List arranged an event on Sunday night in which J. Michael Straczynski made a presentation, including new material on Babylon 5: The Legend of the Rangers. The event was held at Simon Fraser University, a site that often donated time and space for the group to get together to discuss the series. Seating was limited to roughly 250, and there was no problem filling every chair.

As an introductory piece, Straczynski showed a terrific compilation of clips from Babylon 5. This was followed by about 35 minutes of the Babylon 5 bloopers. After warming up the audience, Straczynski launched into his latest project, Babylon 5: The Legend of the Rangers. While production on the movie had only begun on May 14, he brought with him a clip that introduced all the major characters. The clip was titled "Naming of Names" and showed each character introducing themselves, giving their position, title, and a statement of purpose. This in itself was a terrific way to bring you into the story. The characters are diverse, from human to Drazi. As if that wasn't sufficient to get the audience totally hyped about the project, Straczynski then brought down nearly the entire cast who had been sitting in the last row of the auditorium. After introductions, they indicated which character they portrayed and what they particularly liked about the project. The crowd, if it hadn't been in Straczynski's pocket before this, was definitely there now.

The evening ended with everyone signing autographs. There was an assortment of comic books, scripts, series bibles, and posters for Straczynski to sign. The cast members signed copies of the evening's schedule or whatever was put in front of them. They are indeed a charming group with lots of personality and energy about the project.

Monday, May 28: On Monday, I went over to the studio and met publicist Patricia Anderson at 8 a.m. After a quick tour of the studio, I met with Steve Gaeghan, the production designer, and he gave me background on how the project had been put together. In cooperation with Straczynski, he had tried to add texture to every level of the set. Instead of sterile floors and ceilings, he included pre-formed panels, giving depth and a certain richness to all surfaces. The colors are basically copper, blue, green and pewter. The use of color is subtle but very rich. Many of the internal structures look like works of art, not supporting background for a TV movie.

I then talked to Suki Parker, the art designer, who worked closely with Steve on construction of panel displays and all the visuals throughout the ship Liandra. She devised a Minbari alphabet based on a few letters in an early Babylon 5 episode, "A Voice in the Wilderness." She created 26 characters and 10 digits that now comprise signage on all the vessels involved in the project.

From Suki I visited with Clive Edwards, who is in charge of props. He showed me the star seen in the "Naming of Names" sequence. It's a gold star with a ruby red center that is significant in Minbari rituals. I also looked through the prop trailer and saw a Minbari grenade made from BMW bicycle hubs and a key ring, as well as the fighting pike that would be used in a fighting sequence with David Martel.

The crew was at lunch, so Steve came to fetch me and take me through the stage area. Since it was now vacated, there was nothing to beware of as when they are in the middle of shooting sequences. The bridge area was in disarray. They were completing a sequence where portions of the Liandra had been damaged in battle, so there were wires hanging from the walls, panels were askew, etc. Steve sat down at the new bridge and demonstrated how the finished product would look on film. In front of the person operating the panel, a hologram would be projected to show images. For example, if they wanted to see space ahead, it would be projected in the center of the bridge area (similar to the hologram sequence in Crusade).

As people began returning to their positions, I went out to the catering truck for lunch. I had a great time talking to a woman named Barbara, who is in charge of food services there. She handles food services for several projects in the Vancouver area. The menu that day was chicken and lamb with assorted vegetables, salads, and treats. From comments by the cast and crew, Barb has been doing a great job of keeping them fed and happy.

After lunch I met with Enid-Raye Adams. She had come in for an interview since she had completed her

BAKUMATSU TIME TRAVELERSAKA: MAKUMATSU MIRAIJIN

While visting the battleship Mikaso on the coast of Yokosuka, schoolboys Fumihiko Wada (Hoshino) and Mitusgu Ito (Sawamura) are transported back in time to the year 1862. Arriving at the foreigners settlement in Yokohama, they are suspected of being criminals and forced to evade officers of the law. Finding themselves living in a crucial period of Japanese history during which the Shogun's rule faded and conspirators plotted to restory the emperor, the children meet several famous historical figures and inadvertently change the course of history. In particular they accidently cause the death of Soshi Okita, who was/would have been a major figure in the Meiji restoration.

Based on the story A Memorable Summer (Omoi Agari no Natsu) By Taku Mayumura, who was also credited with the origial ideas for Bakamatsu Exchange Students, CHALLENGE FROM THE FUTURE, Mysterious New Student , Mysterious Pen Friend and School in Peril. Another of Mayumura's time travel stories was animated as Time Stranger. Mayumura was not the only Japanese SF novelis to tackle time travel - his stories competed with Yasutaka Tsutsui's TIME TRAVELLER and Sakyō Komatsu's MY TIME TRAVEL JOURNEY WITH MARI.

BAKURYUU SENTAI ABARENJAA

AKA: BLAST DRAGON SQUADRON OUTBURST RANGER

AKA: ABARANGER

The earth was separated 65,000,000 years ago due to the collision of the meteorite supposedly killed the dinosaurs. The Dino Earth appeared and was swallowed in a dimensional rift that occurred due to the magnetic interference from the meteorite collision. The Dino Earth is where all the dinosaurs went. Now, there was way that the ones from Dino Earth come to our dimension and dangerous results occur. RyuuJin (Dinosaur people) are the inhabitants of Dino Earth.

AbareBlack was fighting the forces of Evorian on Dino Earth. When the Evorian escape through a transdimensional portal to our dimension, he followed. There three Bakuryuu (Tyrannosaurus, Triceratops and Pteranodon) were under evil control and were attacking Tokyo. A call was sent out to Ryoga, Ranru, Yukito, Sugishita and Imanaka. The destined ones soon got the powers and were able to tame the beasts. The three Abarangers now have their mission to defeat the Evorian's threat on their dimension.

Compare to Power Rangers Dino Thunder Season 1.

Bakuryuu Sentai Abarenjaa (translating as, Blastasaurus Squadron Outburst Ranger) was Toei Company Limited's 27th production of the Super Sentai television series. Its footage was used in the American Power Rangers: Dino Thunder. The name Abaranger is a combination of Abare (an acronym that stands for Attack Bandit Resistance , in Japanese the term "Abare" also means "Berserk" or "Outburst" among other translations) and ranger, so the romanization can be either Abaranger or Abarenger.

Characters

AbaRangers

When they evoke their "Dino GUTS", The AbaRangers tap into the power of their dinosaur partners, obtaining their strength and power as their own.

Ryoga Hakua/AbaRed: The optimistic team leader, a certified environmental protection investigator from the United States. Though he's overly confident, he has an extremely good nature and is friendly, warm hearted, and loving; he doesn't hate anyone. He was given guardianship of Mai after his brother and sister-in-law passed away and does his best to raise her. His Bakuryuu partner is Tyranno. He eventually gained the power to become AbareMax.

Yukito Sanjyou/AbareBlue: A charismatic chiropractor, he'll help with any kind of injury but charge outrageously high prices for it. He seems cold, but has a kind heart underneath. He despises his father for paying off the parents of a girl he was in love with. His Bakuryuu partner is Kera.

Ranru Itsuki/AbareYellow: A technology wizard who owns a German BD-1 motorcycle she nicknamed "Birdie". All she really wants is peace. Formerly was trained to be an idol, but hated it. Her Bakuryuu partner is Ptera.

Asuka/AbareBlack: A warrior from DinoEarth with a sad past. He was the last of people to fight the Evoliens and escaped to Earth. His Bakuryuu partner is Brachio.

Mikoto Nakadai/AbareKiller: A lunatic doctor who was observing the AbaRangers from the time the Bakuryuu first appeared. He gained the DinoMinder and with it the Zerogo suit, which was due to self-destruct sometime soon. He didn't seem to care that he would die, taking the entire city with him. He fought the AbaRangers & his Bakuryuu partner is TopGaler. After fighting the Killer Giganoid with the AbaRanger, after TopGaler betrayed him, he joined the team, even if it cost him his life. When Dino Minder began to self-destruct, he and TopGaler flew away from Earth and died in the explosion. He returned for a short time to help the Aba & DekaRanger in "Dekaranger vs. Abaranger" and vanished again after the enemy was defeated. As he vanished, he told Asuka to give Kasumi/Rije his regards.

Allies

Emiri Imanaka: Imanaka is a high school student. When the Bakuryuu first came to earth, Imanaka heard their call and almost became AbareYellow. Unfortunately, her body was unable to support the transformation. She tries her hardest to become an Abaranger...she eventually does in terms of AbarePink...err...AbarePig.

Ryunnosuke Sugishita: Sugishita runs a curry restaurant: DinoHouse, which is the Abarangers' base of operations. When the Bakuryuu first came to earth, Sugishita heard their call and almost became AbareBlue. Unfortunately, his body was unable to support the transformation.

Mai Hakua: Ryouga's brother and sister-in-law passed away, leaving behind their daughter and Ryouga's niece, Mai. Starting at the end of ep. 39, Kasumi chooses Mai to be the only one to see her. In ep. 41, a virus transforms human people into Barmia and Mai was infected as well. Kasumi warns the Abaranger that the Barmia around are Mai's friends.

Princess Freesia: Appears in the Abaranger Movie. When the gang are having a fun summer party at the beach, she appears in front of Ryouga and HanaBinkiVenus literally drops from the sky to capture her. There is a great myth through the Ryuujin in DinoEarth that a princess guards the two evil Bakuryuu on an arctic island. Asuka was surprised that the legend he grew up with was true. The Bakulaser had been broken in half. The other piece was excavated by humans and put in a museum. Ryouga and Freesia sneak in and steal it. He uses his Dino GUTS to merge it together. Turns out she really was Garuvuidei in disguise and used the fully formed Bakulaser to call upon the Bakuryuu. The real Freesia was inside of the Bakulaser and wasn't able to come out. She also expressed affection for Ryouga. She commended the Abaranger for their battle good and went off with the Bakulaser.

Ninpu Sentai Hurricanger: Meet up in the Abaranger vs. Hurricanger special to fight the Space Ninja JaniIga.
Tokusou Sentai Dekaranger: Meet up in the Dekaranger vs. Abaranger special to fight a Alienizer attempton to revive the Evoliens' leader.

Bakuryuu (Blast Dragons)

Giant Beasts from DinoEarth that evolved from the dinosaurs, they had a mutual friendship with the Ryuujin (Dragon people of Dino Earth) until the Evorians attacked. While most of the Bakuryuu eggs were sent to Earth, Tyranno, Kera and Ptera fell under the Evorian's control. Sent to Earth, the three went on a path of destruction until their partners freed them.

Bracchio: A wise and calm Brachiosaurus who hates fighting. Bracchio was the only one of the first that was immune to the Evorians' control due to being already partnered to Asuka. He resides at the bottom of Tokyo Bay and holds the other Bakuryuu inside his body until they are needed. He recites rousing poetic speeches when heading into battle. There's some indication he may be the eldest and wisest of the Bakuryuu.

KillerAbarenoh: Created when Abarenoh combines with TopGaler and Stego in order to defeat Bakurenoh. This combination appeared again in "Dekaranger vs. Abaranger", although it was without Stego that time.

Abarenoh: When Tyranno, Kera and combine, they form Abarenoh - a humanoid fighting machine.

Abarenoh's finisher is a drill attack.

Tyranno: A Tyrannosaurus rex, the strongest of the three Bakuryuu. His jaws, strength and sharp claws make him a tough opponent, but his tail is his greatest weapon, able to drill through anything. Although wise, he has a short fuse when it comes to Ryouga.

Kera: A Triceratops, the armored one of the three Bakuryuu, Kera can take a great deal of punishment from an opponent; he seems strong enough to topple every building in downtown Japan. Kera seems a bit androgynous, and took on the form of a young bishounenish boy.

Ptera: A Pteranodon, the fastest of the three Bakuryuu, she can reach speeds of Mach 1.2 and higher, with her wings, beak, and shockwaves effective on any enemy. A kind and sweet Bakuryuu.

KillerOh: When TopGaler and Stego combine, they form KillerOh. KillerOh has the Death Stinger finisher.

TopGaler: A Quetzalcoatlus who was sealed for destroying a major DinoEarth city. He was found and released by AbareKiller, whom he partnered with. He often employs his great speed in battle, which has been clocked at an astounding Mach 20. His personality is a hardcore lone wolf like his master.

Stegosraidon: A Stegosaurus who could combine with Abarenoh to form AbarenoSraidon, serving as a surfboard. He was taken by AbareKiller until he was freed of its master's influence. His personality is almost similar to Ptera, but can be a dunce like Dime from time to time.

MaxRyuuOh: When MaxOhja combines with PakikeroKnuckle, DimeNokodon, ParasuroloCutter and Ankyloveilus, they form MaxRyuuOh.

Styracosaurus & DinoCarry/MaxOhja: The DinoGuts of AbareMax awoke the Styracosaurus and the DinoCarry, which holds the RhamphoGolds axes & SpinoGold helmet. Styracosaurus can form a humanoid fighting robot - MaxOhja. Styracosaurus is also the only Bakuryuu on the show which does not speak (not including the two evil Bakuryuu from the "Abaranger Deluxe" movie), but instead lets out dinosaur roars.

BakikeroNuggles: A Pachycephalosaurus who can combine with Abarenoh to form AbarenoKnuckles, with a boxing arm. His personality is quite kiddish.

DimeNokodon: A laidback Dimetrodon found in the Kansai district. It can combine with Abarenoh to form AbarenoNokodon, with a buzzsaw arm. He tends to be dopey now and then. He loves the music of Asuka's Dino Harp.

Parasaurolokikiru: A Parasaurolophus with a Spanish accent who can combine with Abarenoh to form AbarenoRokkiru, with a scissors arm. He was living in the Caribbean, where he end up learning to speak Spanish. In addition, he's an avid piano player. Some fans see him as the most "annoying" of the Bakuryuu.

Ankyloveilus: A petulant Ankylosaurus who can combine with Abarenoh to form AbarenoVeilus, forming a shield and blade arm. She seems to be a motherly type Bakuryuu. It's interesting to note, that when she first contacted the Abarangers, she started them on a wide goose chase saying she was in the city, beach and farm. She was only found by accident and preferred to live a quiet life, until Asuka convinced her otherwise.

OoAbarenoh: Created when Abarenoh combines with Stego, TopGaler, and RhamphoGolds & SpinoGold.

FireNokoDon: A CD-Exclusive Dimetrodon that hatched at Hawaii. It can combine with Abarenoh to form AbarenoNokodonFire, forming a buzzsaw arm.

Evoliens

The Wicked Fate Clan, they came from Dino Earth. They dwelled within a castle-like structure before Dezumozoria turned it into a giant cyclops-like host called DezumoGevirus to battle the Bakuryuu with while transferring itself into Geildon. The fortress was destroyed when the Abaranger's dinosaurs sacrificed themselves to destroy it.

Dezumozorlya: The Evolien god, a parasitic entity that was held in the meteorite that crashed to Earth. When Earth was split, Dezumozorlya's essence was divided between the two earths, and took one being of each world as it's host and it's descendants. Some of his hosts have wreaked havoc throughout the course of human history. In the time of Abaranger, Mikoto held the essence of the inactive Earth-counterpart, and the Dezumozorlya of DinoEarth found a host in Rije. When he was purged from Rijewel, Dezumozorlya sought stronger hosts (including Mikela and Voffa) until he chose Geildon as his ideal vessel.

Rije/Rijewel (1-47): She is Dezumozorlya's child-like metaron, responsible for linking the two worlds. She was originally the daughter of Asuka & Mahoro until the Dino-Earth Dezumozorlya entered Mahoro's body & made the preborn Kasumi its host. She was forcegrown into an adult, Rijewel, to tempt Mikoto to join her and later mutated into DezumoRijewel. Through the combined power of all five Abarangers, Kasumi

'overpowered' Dezumozoria and Rijewel was restored to an infant once Dezumozoria was removed from her.

Jeanne (1-32): She was originally a Dragonoid named Mahoro and was Asuka's love, but she was parasitized by the Evoliens. Because of her previous life, Jeanne had a fixation on killing Asuka. She eventually returned to normal, though Mahoro posed as her to help the Abaranger from the enemy camp until Dezumozorlya learned of her treachery (Note : Her official English name is "Jeanne" but fans and the Japanese version of the series call/pronounce her name as "Jannu").

DezumoVoorla (47-48): The 3rd host of Dezumozoria created when Mikela and Voffa were merged into one being, though both were proud to hold Dezumozorlya's essence in them. DezumoVoorla was used to absorb the Earth-Dezumozoria from AbareKiller's body and was killed by KillerOh.

Mikela (1-47): The one who creates the Torinoids. He is a painter and hates to make a creation when uninspired by his muse. He despises humans, their art and their culture. He and Voffa ended up being merged as one host for Dezumozorlya at the end of the series to form DezumoVoorla.

Voffa (1-47): He enlarges the Torinoids and creates the giant Giganoids from musical compositions from his harp. He doesn't like his music to be heard when his work isn't ready. He and Mikela ended up being merged as one host for Dezumozoria at the end of the series to form DezumoVoorla.

Geildon: The first of the Evoliens to attack Earth, but was killed by Jeanne after failing in his mission. It would later turn out that it was a cursed suit of armor that bonded with Mahoro's older brother, Mizuho. Geildon was also worn by Asuka two times, who lost himself due to the cursed armor's power. By the finale, Geildon was transformed into Dezumogevarus, the final host of Dezumozorlya.

Garuvuidei (Movie): An Evolien general who captured Princess Freesia and sought to revive the Bakuryuu that form Bakurenoh. Killed by AbaRed with the Bakulaser.

Bakurenoh: CarnoRyutus & ChasmoSealdon combine to form Bakurenoh, the evil-counterpart of Abarenoh. It could use its sword to slice off Abarenoh's drill-arm and use it as its own. In the movie, it was defeated by KillerAbarenoh, but it returned to help DezumoVoorla to fight the Abarangers. Soon it was destroyed for good by Abarenoh and MaxOuja.

CarnoRyutus: A Carnotaurus, an evil Bakuryuu with the same attacks as Tyranno. (only seen in movie)

ChasmoSealdon: A Chasmosaurus, an evil Bakuryuu with the same attacks as Kera. (only seen in movie)

Barmias: The Evolien foot soldiers and are evolved humanoid amoebas, there are two types: the black Gelru & the white Zolru. At one time the Evoliens attempted to turn humans into Barmias.

Trinoids

Evil Lifeforms, each is a fusion of animal, plant, and inanimate object. They are designed and painted to life by Mikela and enlarged by Voffa when destroyed.

- #0, SaunaEelGingko (Dekaranger vs. Abaranger): Eel + Ginka + Sauna, this Trinoid was created long before the others that appeared in the Abaranger series. Mikela sealed him away in a red orb because of its great power. Kazakku resurrected him in order to bring back Dezumozoryla. He has the ability to resurrect the dead, but only when he is powered up. Killed by the teamwork of KillerAbarenoh & Super Dekaranger Robo.
- #1, DragonDoran (46): Red Dragon + Orchid + Black Boat Gondola, this Trinoid had been hiding under the Earth since the AbaRangers first appeared. He was the last of the Trinoids to appear before the series finale. Killed by Abarenoh, MaxOuja & KillerOh.

He was captured by AbareKiller and forced to be his servant for most of the series and eventually came to see him as a friend. In the end, he chose to stay behind rather than returning to Dino Earth. It's revealed that he now runs the Dinosaur restaurant, which flourish. In Dekaranger vs. Abaranger, it's revealed that he held an artifact capable of resurrecting Dezumozoria. In addition, he glomped Ban/DekaRed mistaking him for Ranru.

Itsuki Ranru: Jura-Ki (Jurassic (..?))

Asuka: "Asuka" era in Japanese history.

All the episode titles featured the word "Abare". (see below)

Tsuyoshi Hayashi (Tokusou Sentai Dekaranger's Houji) auditioned to play Nakadai/AbareKiller.

In a strange twist of fate, Yasuhiko Imai, the suit actor for AbareKiller, was also the suit actor for DekaBlue, Houji's designation on the team.

Asuka/AbareBlack is the first regular Sentai warrior who doesn't take part in the giant battles since Goggle Five's Goggle Black and Goggle Pink; he only fought in a few battles (merging with Stego or borrowing Styraco as Brachio wasn't able of holding a fight). He has to his credit, however, the instance of having defeated single-handedly a giant monster (Giganoid #2).

The actor who played the human form of Volcano Org from Hyakujuu Sentai GaoRanger plays a recurring customer at Ryuunosuke's restaurant.

Episode 10 was watched by Abaranger's American counterparts in an episode of Power Rangers: Dino Thunder, titled Lost and Found in Translation. The plot of the original episode was changed almost entirely during the dub to make it more comical (i.e. when Lije zaps Jeanne she chastizes her for stealing her hairspray, one character has a thick Irish accent, etc.). The episode was intended to sound as if the Japanese show was based off the American one, rather than the other way around. The characters' name changed in the dub. Not all of the characters' names were mentioned.

Asuka Mikey

Yukito Sanjou -Kenny Yukito

"Bucky" Barns -Whacker Wilson

Yokota -Mr. O'Shaugnessy

Jeanne - Missy

Torinoid #9 Bank Mushroom - Ka-Ching

In Episode 24, Voffa was listening to one of Nao Nagasawa's songs in a mall, more specifically PUMP UP! YOYUPON mix. Nao Nagasawa is the actress of Nanami Nono (Hurricane Blue) from the predecessor series Ninpuu Sentai Hurricanger.

BAROM ONE

AKA: CHOJIN BAROMU WAN

AKA: CHOJIN BAROMU-1

AKA: SUPERMAN BAROM-1

Who is Baromu 1? Well, he is the Justin Agent who defends planet Earth from the evil Doruge. Kopuu and Doruge have fought in a war between Good and Evil over a millenium. Kopuu is , however, dying. He has discovered that two boys on earth, Kentaroh and Takeru have enough "Friendship" energy to become the Justin Agent, Baromu 1. Shiratori Kentaroh (Last name , first name), as is a bright, smart junior high school boy, and is responsible for baromu intelligence while Kido Takeru posses physical power , a hot-blood junior school boy and is responsible for Baromu's strength.

Together, they can transform into Baromu 1 by performing the "Baromu Cross" , the two boys cross their arms and become Baromu 1. Baromu's Bop, (or Boppu in Japanese). When thrown in mid-air, it becomes Baromu's hot rod, Mach Rod, also shown in the slide show. It has a big fan at the back. I thought the hot rod was ugly by today's standard, but give it a break, it was designed in the 70's !The bop is located on the right side of Baromu's belt.

Baromu 1 has at least three attacks: Baromu Fly, Baromu Break and Baromu Explosive Punch to finish off the mutants created by Doruge. In the last few episodes, Doruge made the mutants out of his own body part! Kew! Doruge is famous for the line "Loo-Loh-Loh-H-H, Doruge!". Whatever that means in Japanese and he lives underground. When he is not in his original form and in order for him to operate on Earth, he has the human identity one of the five wealthiest men (Mr. Doruge) on Earth. Basically, he is loaded with cash!

Doruge does not fight the Justine Agent directly but sends his army of mutants to take care of Baromu. The mutants are transformed from human captured by Doruge. Doruge can actually enlarge himself , but how does baromu 1 defeat such giant???

This show is derived from a Japanese comic (manga) created by a great Japanese artist Saito Takao (famous for his comic, Golgo 13). The original version of Baromu 1 is quite different from the TV version. The TV version of Baromu 1 did also make it to comic and that is the one I read and fascinated me. The TV series was aired by Yomiuri TV, on 16th April, 1972 and ended on 26th of November, 1972, on every Sunday, 7:30 to 8:00 pm. The series was made by TOEI. There are 35 episodes in total. Title song is sung by Mizuki Ichiro (Last name , first name) music is written by Kikuchi Syunsuke . Mizuki sings out this song like BURORORORO! or GYUNGYU GYUN!

There are other important characters in the series:

Kido Rintaroh: Takeru's dad and a strict disciplined police inspector.

Kido Matsugoroh : Rintaroh's younger brother, unemployed but interfered with Takeru and Kentaroh's cases.

He constantly gets beaten up (by ????) but knows karate and Kendo(a type of Japanese fencing). Shiratori Keitaroh: Kentaroh's older brother, a talented editor at the Nisshi newspaper.

Shiratori Shizuka: Kentaroh's sweet mum.

This TV show has only 35 episodes which I think is rather short compared with other similar series at a time. Someone has mentioned that the show was cut short because of the grotesque design of the mutants as well as an incident of a foreign student in Japan was being teased by his classmates because he had a name similar to Doruge and the show was pressured by the lawyer. Nevertheless, it is a good series and one of my favourites.

This series emphasises a lot on friendship between Kentaroh and Takeru, and because of which they are able to defeat Doruge evil plans.

Produced by Tohru Hirayama, Original music by Shunsuke Kikuchi & Ichirô Mizuki, Stunts by Ken Nakayashiki.

However in the style of many evil masterminds from GORANGER onward, Doruge rarely enters combat but instead sends mutants to fight his battles for him. Based on the manga of Takao Saito, who also drew a comic version of JAPAN SINKS but is best known as the creator of Golgo 13. For its 30th anniversary in 2002, Barom One returned to Japanese television screens as an animated series. Theme: Ichiro Mizuki - "Bokura no Barom One" (One Barom One).

Chôjin Baromu-1 (Superman Barom-1) featured music composed by Kikuchi, Shunsuke (best known for the music from the 1970s and 1980s Kamen Rider series). Although there isn't a Christmas episode there is a Barom-1 Christmas Song.

Chôjin Baromu-1 was one of the few tokusatsu series produced by Hirayama, Tôru which featured characters that were not created by Ishinomori, Shotaro.

Barom-1 was played by suit actors/stuntmen Nakamura, Bunya and Nakayashiki, Tetsuya.

Wilson is the Caped Crusader and Crofts is the Boy Wonder, but it is Naish's evil Dr Daka who steals the show. With the aid of his zombie army and an over-the-top acting style he tries to steal America's radium for the Axis powers.

An unintentional farce, so melodramatic is Hillyer's direction, Batman was a surprise hit when released and has retained its popularity with audiences ever since, especially after its re-release as An Evening with Batman and Robin (1966) on the heels of the camp teleseries. The serial was based on the comic-book characters, created by Bill Finger and artist Bob Kane, who first appeared in Detective Comics in 1939. A lacklustre sequel followed in 1949, BATMAN AND ROBIN. 1989's Batman saw the character much changed.

BATMAN AND ROBIN

BATMAN (1966)

Batman was a superhero who couldn't fly, jump buildings in the single bound or have any special powers whatsoever. Batman always relied on his gadgets to get him anywhere. The series was very camp, kids loved it and adults remembered the days when they were young. Most of episodes were two parters, with a cliff-hanger episodes at the end of part 1, usually involving Batman and/or Robin in mortal danger. They always seemed to escape however at the beginning of the next episode.

Batman's alter ego was, of course, Bruce Wayne, a multi millionaire, who lived in Wayne Manor. Robin was Dick Grayson, who is Bruce's youthful ward. Commissioner Gordon and Chief O'Hara were the men with the power in Gotham City, but they were never able to solve any crimes without the help of the dynamic duo. Alfred was Bruce's butler, who also knew about his dual identity, he always answered the phone, when Batman had to be called, always finding an excuse to give Aunt Harriot who looked after Bruce and Dick. "Batman" boasted a plethora of strange villains, ranging from The Joker, The Riddler, who always gave a riddle when he committed a crime for the duo to try to solve. The Penguin and Catwoman, the deadly female.

Based on Bob Kane's creation at Detective Comics in 1939, Batman's media presence expanded to Superman's show on radio, and in a couple of movie serials of the 1940s. The TV show uneasily combined the straight-ahead story with a 1960's "camp" attitude, which put the show in top 10 Nielsen ratings in the 1965-66 season.

The executive producer was William Dozier, the producer was Howie Horowitz, story consultant was Lorenzo Semple Jr., make up was done by Ben Nye and the catchy theme tune was done by Neal Hefti and Nelson Riddle. The series boasted a plethora as guest stars most of them returning to play the same villain each time, Vincent Price, Burgess Meredith, Joan Collins, Cesar Romero, Zsa Zsa Gabor and Roddy McDowell were among the few who played villains in the series.

Most of the episodes were very similar, some of them were, 'The Wail of the Siren' in which Bruce and Commissioner Gordon both fall under the spell of The Siren (Joan Collins) who wants to discover the identity of Batman and Robin. 'The Joker's Flying Saucer' had the Joker build a flying saucer, hoping to take over the world by fooling everybody that it has come from outer space. Finally there was 'Fine Feathered Finks, The Penguin's a Jinx' in which Batman and Robin are caught by the Penguin, and sent to die in a furnace.

Despite the potential for controversial violence, the show included at least one fight scene per episode, there was very little complaint, since the fights were all staged, and represented very much like they came straight out of a comic book. The show became an instant success in 1966 being shown in over 106 countries to over 400 million people. There was even a film based on the TV series simply called "Batman" (1966). The film was very similar to the series except that it included more than one of the villains from the show. The character of Batman first appeared in DC Comics in 1939. It was only 1943 before Batman managed to make it to the screen in a serial for cinema called "Batman" (1943), there was even a sequel made in 1949 entitled "Batman and Robin" (1949). "Batman" however had very little resemblance to these early attempts at producing "Batman" for screen.

At the beginning of season 3, an additional character was added in the form of Batgirl (Yvonne Craig) who was in reality Commissioner Gordon's daughter. Despite the addition of Batgirl, the series was still cancelled by ABC at the end of season 3. NBC wanted to produce a fourth series but since all the sets had been destroyed they decided not to bother. Adam West's role of Batman led him to be typecast into the role, both Adam West and Burt Ward found difficulty in finding acting jobs after the cancellation of "Batman". There has even been several unrelated animation shows based on the character of Batman, the most successful of which is "Batman: The Animated Series" (1992). "Batman" remains to date, the only television outing of the character of Batman.

"I make absolutely no excuses for Batman. It's not meant to be a contribution to the culture of the world. It's not meant to contain deep messages . . . William Dozier, executive producer. Any show that includes the immortal refrain "Holy Priceless Collection of Etruscan Snoods" can't be all lowbrow, but there have been few greater champions of comic book culture than the caped crusader. Here was a superhero who didn't fly, climbed buildings the hard way rather than leap them at a single bound, and clunk-clicked every trip in his Batmobile. A hero who faced death with as much dignity as anyone could muster in a fancy dress costume, but who always won in the end.

It was a carefully contrived camp formula that gave the kids a serious hero and presented knowing adults with a send-up of all the old radio serials and Saturday morning picture shows they'd ever known and loved. Nearly all the stories were two-parters, with the first episode ending in a cliff-hanger. As Batman and his trusty sidekick, Robin the Boy Wonder, seemed doomed to a diabolical death at the hands of some nefarious villain, the alarmed voice of a narrator urged viewers to tune in for the conclusion "same bat-time, same bat-channel." In part two, a stroke of ingenuity-or sometimes luck-enabled the dynamic duo to escape, defeat their foe in a glorious fistfight and make Gotham City a safer place . . . until the next week, at least.

Behind the masks and capes, Batman and Robin were, of course, millionaire philanthropist Bruce Wayne and his youthful ward Dick Grayson but while the bad guys did their best to put two and two together, the top guys on the side of the law, Commissioner Gordon and Chief O'Hara never looked like coming up with the right answer. Week after week, they'd get on the batphone to stately Wayne Manor where Bruce and Dick, aided by loyal butler Alfred, would slide down the batpoles behind the drawing room bookcase, emerging at the bottom in their crimebusting clothes, leap into the Batmobile and roar off to fight some of the most eccentric crooks ever invented.

Among Batman's regular nemeses were the Joker (the Clown Prince of Crime), the Riddler (the Prince of Puzzles) the Penguin (that Pompous Perpetrator of Foul Play) and Catwoman (the Felonious Feline). And the high-powered stars of Hollywood queued up to play the low-life of Batman. Vincent Price, Cesar Romero, Burgess Meredith, Otto Preminger, Roddy McDowall, Van Johnson, Ethel Merman, Tallulah Bankhead Liberace, Zsa Zsa Gabor, Eartha Kitt, Shelley Winters and even Joan Collins all wore outlandish costumes and roguish grins as they consigned Batman to another fiendish fate.

And what fates. In their ceaseless campaign against crime, the dynamic duo have been tioen into ice pops, tied above a vat of bubbling wax, roasted on a spit, sealed in a sand-filled hourglass, trapped in a giant coffee cup beneath a percolator filled with acid, served up to carnivorous plants and corrugated into slabs of cardboard. But apart from the ghoulish voyeurism of watching them face more perils than Pauline, there was little actual violence. The fight scenes were carefully choreographed with comic book-style effects-BIFF! . . . ZAP! . . . BAM!-superimposed over the action. Although production stopped in 1969 after 120 episodes and one feature film, as recently as 1988 the shows were still playing in 106 countries with a world-wide audience of 400 million.

Executive producer for the series was William Dozier, producer for the series was Howie Horowitz, story consultant was Lorenzo Sample Jr., make up was created by Ben Nye, the theme music was created by Neal Hefti and the other music was created by Nelson Riddle.

The fad of the 1960s, Batman was a campy take-off of the considerably more gothic Batman character in the DC Comics pages. The majority of comic book lovers hated the series, feeling it demeaned their superhero. However, the series operated on two levels: action for the kids and a sense of sly humor and satire for the adults. (Example: When a laser beam is shot at the Caped Crusaders, it misses Batman's crotch by a few inches. Robin exclaims, "Boy we were lucky, Batman! That could have killed us!" Batman grimly intones, "Or worse, Robin!")

Hollywood's top character actors signed up as guest villains: Burgess Meredith (Penguin), Julie Newmar and Eartha Kitt (Catwoman), Cesar Romero (Joker) and Frank Gorshin and John Astin (The Riddler). Adam West was Batman. Burt Ward played Robin. Post-production coordinator Robert Mintz recalls that ABC was concerned that Batman might be a bust. "The pilot tested horribly with our test audience," he says. "ABC and Twentieth Century-Fox were stunned. They figured out the problem: the audience hadn't realized that Batman was a spoof. We tested it again and had an M.C. warm the audience up ahead of time. He told them that it was okay to laugh at the episode. Needless to say, the reaction was tremendously positive. We knew we had a hit."

1 - 5 THE JOKER IS WILD

The story begins with The Joker in prison pitching in (and enjoying) a ballgame. After a few pitches, the catcher switches the ball with one he has stashed in his padding, and tells The Joker "This is the one." As the batter hits the ball, a smoke cloud appears and before anyone had known what happened, The Joker escaped using a spring-loaded device that propelled him over the prison wall! The only thing The Joker left behind was a statue of his face and bust that was concealed under the spring contraption. Batman and Robin go to the museum to check everything out--they were suspicious the Joker would strike there in revenge because he had not been entered into The Comedy Hall of Fame. When arriving, they found out

The Joker's statue was indeed there and decided he must be somewhere else. After everything's locked up they believe that no one can break in, but that doesn't mean they can't break out. While going back in they find The Joker trying to steal the valuable jewels inside.

While the fight ensues, Batman is knocked out from a falling antique sword that had been hanging on the wall. As they are carrying Robin and him away, he uses a gas pellet from his utility belt. The Joker escapes out a trap door while his henchmen are gathered up. After being defeated once again by Batman's utility belt, a fed-up Joker decides to make his own. While in his hideout, The Joker comes up with an idea to steal the S.S. Gotham (from his henchwoman). He plans to eliminate Batman so he can take the ship. Bruce Wayne and Dick Grayson arrive at the commissioners office for talk on the S.S. Gotham. While there, a clown doll is thrown through the window. Bruce Wayne asks to take it for a souvenir and back at the Batcave Batman and Robin try to figure out what The Joker is up to. They come up with the idea that The Joker will be at The Gotham City Opera Company, where Pagliacci is being performed. While at the opera, Batman and Robin are caught when The Joker throws sneezing powder in their face and his henchmen grab our heroes. A horrified audience then watches The Joker make a move to unmask Batman and Robin.

1 - 6 BATMAN GETS RILED

As The Joker is about to remove The Batman's mask, The Caped Crusader escapes using a small Batmissile in his utility belt to set off the water sprinklers. The Joker uses a smoke bomb to make his escape. As they are chasing him on the catwalks above, The Joker uses trick confetti from his utility belt that wrap around Batman and Robin. He gets away before Batman and Robin can get themselves out of the confetti. The Joker then does a broadcast and gives the dynamic duo another riddle. They track him to his hideout, and while in a struggle The Joker switches Batman's utility belt with his.

Batman is selected to christen the S.S. Gotham. The Joker decides to fill a champagne bottle with paralyzing gas. On the day of the christening, a crowd gathers. Joker's henchwoman hands Commissioner Gordon the bottle who in turn hands it to Batman. As Batman looks over the bottle, he notices the cork has been tampered with. After taking a pill and saying he had a headache, he hands Robin one as well and tells him to take it because it may be catching. As the bottle is broken, it releases the gas and everyone is knocked out. The Joker takes Batman and Robin back to his hideout (thinking they're knocked out) and broadcasts his ultimatum on television--either he gets the S.S. Gotham or Batman and Robin will be executed like the famous display in the wax museums. Batman and Robin spring into action having taken their Universal Drug Antidote Pill. The Joker is caught and brought to justice.

1 - 7 INSTANT FREEZE

Mr. Freeze seeks revenge against Batman for knocking a beaker of Instant Freeze on him during a past fight, an accident that has rendered Freeze incapable of going out in public without a special air-conditioned suit and forces him to live in a super-cooled house designed to keep his body temperature at a frosty 50 degrees below zero. Freeze begins his rampage of revenge by heisting some famous diamonds ("ice" in the criminal vernacular!) from The Gotham City Diamond Exchange. In The Batcave, Batman perfects an anti-freeze pill which, as he tries it out in a Deep-Freeze Cabinet, sadly, fails to do the trick in extreme cold. Then, on a tip from Commissioner Gordon, The Dynamic Duo, knowing Freeze's predilection for "ice," speed to The Exchange by Batmobile, but their attempt to nab Freeze is foiled when gang members Chill, Nippy and Mo release 5 Batman and Freeze decoys.

After the resulting confusion in The Exchange by The Dynamic Duo between The Batmen and Misters Freeze gives the true Freeze and his lackeys carte blanche to scam, The Caped Crusaders next try to prevent Freeze from stealing The Ghiaccio Circolo (Circle of Ice) Diamond, which belongs to the visiting Princess Sandra of Molino (a/k/a Sandra Carlson of Brooklyn). Freeze sets The Princess' curtains on fire with his flame-gun and darts out with the hot rock while Batman and Robin battle the flames. In a flash The Duo are out the window and down The Batrope to intercept Freeze at his Amalgamated Ice-Cream Company truck below, but the cold-hearted criminal zaps them into human icicles with his horrible ice-gun and gets away!!

1 - 8 RATS LIKE CHEESE

A very frigid Batman and Robin are immediately rushed to Gotham City Hospital where they are thawed out with the help of the miraculous Super-Hypotherm-De-Icifier Chamber Mark VII, which reverses the freezing process. Freeze, meanwhile, has captured Paul Diamante (Spanish for "diamond"), the star pitcher of The Gotham City Eagles baseball team, just before the big game. Immediately upon learning of The Caped Crusader's surviving his freeze gun, Freeze offers to exchange Diamante for Batman. The hostage exchange happens via helicopter at the ballpark, where Batman is knocked unconscious and spirited away by helicopter.

Robin, ordered by Batman not to interfere, has planted a homing device on the senior crime-fighter and follows him to the Freeze hideout but is captured by his men. There, after dinner, Freeze demonstrates the pinpoint control of his house-freezing system: he slowly changes the temperature of his hideout so The Duo will be frozen to death. He isolates Robin in a small spot of warmth and begins to deep-freeze Batman. Luckily, Batman has remembered to wear his super-thermo-B-long underwear, preventing him from the extreme cold long enough to sock Mr. Freeze in the jaw and reverse the temperature controls. The tables are turned, Freeze and his men are put on ice, and justice prevails once more! Later, at a private party in Wayne Manor, Bruce and Dick are too eager to turn down a helping of baked Alaska, which was earlier on served to them (as the Dynamic Duo) in Freeze's hideout!

The Batman decides to trap the thief by planting a story in the newspaper claiming the stolen money was counterfeit. When Eivol reads the fake article, he refuses to give Zelda his latest device, The Inescapable Death-Trap, until his demands are met.

1 - 10 A DEATH WORSE THAN FATE

Just as Zelda's deadline is about to expire, Bruce Wayne, Commissioner Gordon, and Robin arranges to deliver the ransom money through live TV and manage to convince her the money she heisted from the bank was real. When Aunt H. is returned, a matchbook advertising Ekdal's Gnome Bookstore falls out of her pocket. This clue Zelda hopes will lure The Dynamic Duo into her trap. Batman and Robin speed to Eivol's Bookstore, where they fall prey to Ekdal's Inescapable Doom Trap, a large transparent cage made out of Jet Age plastics. When deadly gas fills the cage, The Caped Crusader ignites it by placing hit metal utility belt buckle against the electrified grating at the cage's base, causing it to blast open the door and release them.

Zelda, who has bore witness to the aggrandizing affair from Ekdal's hidden room, feels guilty and warns Batman and Robin about the gunmen hidden inside 2 mummy cases just outside The Doom Trap, waiting to blow them away! The Duo quickly duck out of the way just in time to avoid the gunmen's bullets, which insidiously do them in. Eivol Ekdal tries to make a break for it, but is stopped by a well-aimed Batarang tossed at him, and moments later, a wet-cheeked Zelda quietly surrenders. 1 - 11 A RIDDLE A DAY KEEPS THE RIDDLER AWAY

After surviving the explosion unscathed in Episode 1, that crafty Count Of Conundrums, The Riddler, returns to once again overturn ceremony. Here, the ceremony is a welcoming one for the visiting King Boris, who has arrived in Gotham City to present a gift from his country, a miniature replica of The Queen Of Freedom Monument. The Riddler and his new female assistant, Mousey, present The King with an exploding bouquet of flowers, which, of course, releases a hidden riddle which leads The Dynamic Duo to believe that Riddler's planning to steal the jeweled crown from The Miss Galaxy Contest. The Caped Crusader secretly replaces the crown with a paste one containing a miniature transmitter. Later that night, The Riddler makes a surprise appearance at the contest, swipes the crown, and escapes down a trapdoor. Rushing outside to The Batmobile, The Darknight Detectives spot The Riddler emerging from an open manhole; much to their dismay, he informs them he knew from the very start that the crown was a fake, throws it back to them, and disappears.

Upon closer analysis, Batman discovered that the crown contains another riddle, which leads him to believe that The Riddler plans to kidnap the visiting King Boris. Unfortunately, The Dynamic Duo is too late to prevent King Boris' capture. The Prince Of Puzzlers plans to plant a time-bomb inside the king's statue, which in turn will be placed inside The Gotham City Museum Of Fame housed in the base of the towering monument. Batman and Robin locate The Riddler's hideout but are immediately overpowered by The Count Of Conundrums and his repugnant River Rat Gang, catching them in a net and spraying them with an adhesive spray! After collecting most of the jury, Tetch decides it's time to add Batman's cowl -- his "thirteenth" hat, he calls it -- so he sets a trap for The Caped Crusader and Robin The Boy Wonder at the studio of sculptor Octave Marbot, who is currently sculpting a statue of Batman.

Masquerading as Marbot, Tetch tries luring The Dynamic Duo into removing his cowl so he can use it as a model for the statue's head. Knowing full well that Marbot has finished the head already, The Batman sees through The Mad Hatter's disguise, and, pretending to fall for his deception, The Dynamic Duo retire to the back room to remove The Batman's cowl in secret. There they find the real Marbot bound and gagged in the closet, and burst out to confront The Mad Hatter. During the battle that ensues, Tetch tries his Super Instant Mesmerizer on Batman, but the latter counterattacks with his Antimesmerizing Batreflector; unfortunately, The Hatter dodges and Robin, standing behind him, is hit by the deflecting ray. Batman shows up to show slides of mug shots of The Joker, when suddenly, out of the blue, he pops up right in full view of everyone! The Batman attempts to arrest him for loitering on school grounds, but The Joker manages to get off on a mere technicality. Meanwhile, across Gotham City, a bar is held up by a gimmicked jukebox which when activated spouts a double-barrel shotgun; then two stocking-masked hoodlums, actually two of Joker's Bad Pennies, Nick and Two-Bits, rush in to rob the bar's receipts from the register!

The Joker reconvenes with Nick and Two-Bits at their hideout, The One-Armed Bandit Novelty Company; unbeknownst to everyone else, Susie is also a member of The Joker's Bad Pennies! She arranges to swipe some important exam papers to that The Joker can use them in a blackmail scheme, and also leads The Dynamic Duo into a trap set by The Joker. The Homicidal Harlequin and his Bad Pennies snag The Duo with one of the rigged vending machines which, instead of giving out silver dollars, locks them in shackles and emits sleeping gas! Batman and Robin are transferred to the inside of an insidious moving van, where they are strapped to electric chairs; on the wall is a one-armed bandit, which when activated will release instant and inescapable 50,000 lethal volts of electricity should it turn up three lemons!!!!

1 - 16 HE MEETS HIS MATCH, THE GRISLY GHOUL

Just as the deadly one-armed bandit spins 3 lemons, Gotham City suffers a massive blackout! The Joker and his gang beat a harried retreat, just as the cops arrive just in time to cut Batman and Robin out from the electric chairs before the power comes back on! After replaying the audiotape The Caped Crusader secretly made while in the van, The Dynamic Duo were able to make out Susie as one of the members of The Joker's criminal gang, much to Robin's shock. So Robin, in the guise of Dick Grayson, Undercover Agent, tries to trick Susie into leading him into The Bad Pennies and The Joker himself. Unfortunately, Bad Penny member Nick catches immediately on and sends Dick on his way....but not before tipping him off on an impending robbery at a local bar. The Dynamic Duo enter the bar, trigger the gimmicked jukebox which spouts a double-barrel shotgun, deflect its bullets with The Batshield, and use a Batbomb to destroy the crooked machine! They then realize that Susie is in danger and rush to her aid, just as The Joker, realizing that The Dynamic Duo is on to Susie, gives her some perfume, which he instructs her to use only after she has planted answers to some important Nationwide Pre-College Exam papers she stole inside one of the rigged machines, not telling her that the perfume has been poisoned!

In the gym, Batman and Robin confront Susie and warn her of impending danger, but she brushes them off. When she applies the poisonous perfume and slumps unconscious, Batman and Robin save her life by using the Universal Antidote Pills in their utility belts, and she repays them by revealing the whole criminal scheme. Meanwhile, Joker, Nick, and Two-Bits arrive at the school in time to snap an incriminating picture of The Woodrow Roosevelt High School basketball team clutching the exam papers complete with the answers, which the team received from a rigged milk machine. The Joker then reaches a new low in crime: he plans to use the picture to disqualify and suspend the otherwise innocent team members for cheating, and stop them from playing Disco Tech in the night's big game, for he bet his cash on the opposite team and with the home players out of the game, the opposing team, Disco Tech would win from default. The Dynamic Duo suddenly swing down from the rafters on their Batropes to inform the students that the exam papers were phonies which they planted, rendering The Joker's picture useless. The Caped Crusader and The Boy Wonder then proceed to deliver the punch line, putting The Joker and his Bad Pennies out of circulation! Susie, by the way, is sent to The Wayne Foundation Institute For

1 - 17 TRUE OR FALSE-FACE

The wily master of disguise, False-Face, steals The Mergenberg Crown by masquerading as the Queen's escort, and replaces it with a false one right under the watchful eyes of the police. Included with the paste crown is an obscure clue revealing to Batman and Robin that False-Face's next crime will be the hijacking of an armored car. They catch him red-handed at the Gotham City Bank, but he escapes in his Trick-Truck. The Dynamic Duo spirit False Face to an alley, where his flunkies give battle. The police arrive in time to apprehend the gang, but False-Face disguises himself as Police Chief O'Hara and escapes.

Suspecting a counterfeit money scheme is in the works, The Caped Crusader and The Boy Wonder rush to the bank note printer's office and capture False-Face's slinky assistant, Blaze, who is attempting to make off with a load of money paper. At Police Headquarters Blaze is interrogated, with the fake O'Hara taking part. She is torn between infatuation with Batman and her loyalty to False-Face, but finally she agrees to lead the Caped Crusader to the criminal's hideout...but it's a ruse! False-Face, disguised as a gumball machine, gasses Batman while Blaze clonks Robin over the head. As the train barrels towards our heroes, Alfred hears a strange transmission on the radio that alerts him to the Dynamic Duo's peril. He contacts Batman who requests that Alfred throw the short-circuit lever of the Battransmitter, causing Batman's radio to blow up and melt the epoxy on his wrist. He uses his free hand to reach The Batlaser in his utility belt, which he uses to melt away the remaining epoxy and free himself and Robin just as the train passes through the station and by our heroes! Batman and Robin return to Gordon's office at Police HQ and deduce that False-Face will attempt a bank robbery in which real money will be replaced with his own fake bills, so that the only money that will be any good will be False Face's ill-gotten gains. (After all, who would think of telling the real tender from the fake?)

The two heroes secret themselves in the bank vault, surprising the villains. False-Face and Blaze escape in the disguised Trick-Truck but are pursued by The Dynamic Duo to Bioscope Movie Studios. False-Face, discovering Blaze's crush on Batman (she was the one who sent the radio message earlier), holds her hostage and lots of mayhem ensues in and around the matchstick movie sets. False-Face blows up Batman's clever inflatable Batmobile as the chase through the movie sets continues, ending with False-Face disguising himself as a cowboy to slug it out with Batman. One last diversionary smoke screen and out pops Commissioner Gordon — a fake Commissioner Gordon. Batman sees through the disguise and rips off this last false face, and takes the protean criminal off to jail. Blaze reforms and goes off to become a shepherdess with her brother.

1 - 19 THE PURR-FECT CRIME

The Catwoman purr-loins one of a matched pair of Mark Andrews' priceless Golden Cat statuettes (which holds a secret to the lost treasure of Captain Manx) from a Gotham museum, so Batman and Robin rush to safeguard the other one from her clutches. After Alfred and Robin recharge The Batmobile with the atomic pile in The Batcave, The Dynamic Duo coat the cat with golden radioactive mist, and The Dynamic Duo wait in the shadows for Catwoman to appear. But the factions of law and disorder clash, and Robin is drugged by the felonious feline and her two accomplices, Felix and Leo. In the fracas surrounding Batman's efforts to save his pal, Catwoman and company make off with the second statue.

After Robin resuscitates, The Duo, aided by the radioactive mist, trace Catwoman to her lair, The Gato And Chat Fur Company warehouse @ 2809 West 20th Street. There, Batman and Robin plummet through a trap door into Catwoman's clutches! After subjecting her prey to moving walls of spikes (made of rubber!) and a toy bomb, as a normal cat will do, she spirits The Boy Wonder away to unknown torments while The Caped Crusader is forced to choose between two doors (Holy Let's Make A Deal!) — behind one is Catwoman; behind the other is a deadly Batman-eating tiger, answering to a rather unsuitable moniker of Tinkerbelle! Much to his consternation, Batman chooses the door leading to the tiger and not the lady.

1 - 20 BETTER LUCK NEXT TIME

After Catwoman slips away to administer nameless horrors to Robin, Batman fends off Tinkerbell long enough to remove from his utility belt a pair of Batclaws, which he uses to climb up the wall and out of harm's reach. Realizing he won't be able to stay there for long, he plugs his Batears with a pair of Batearplugs and subdues the tiger with super-amplified sounds (20,000 decibels!) from a Batcommunicator on his utility belt. The Caped Crusader leaps from the wall, takes refuge in the room where the tiger was released, and heads out to save his sidekick---only to find himself lost in the catacombs of Catwoman's lair. Meanwhile, Catwoman is on to bigger and badder things, having Robin balanced on the end of a board over a pit of more hungry tigers and supplying sand (matching The Boy Wonder's weight) to the other end of the board. As the sand is released, the board lowers Robin slowly, deeper and deeper into the tiger den! Leaving her henchmen to her own devices, The Catwoman departs in search of Captain Manx's treasure, using a map created by fitting the two Golden Cats together and drawing their outline. Batman saves his chum in the nick of time, and pit their fists against Catwoman's lackeys; during the battle, Leo escapes to join his female boss and warn her of Batman's pursuit of her.

The Dynamic Duo spirit the Golden Cats to the Batcave, where they deduce Catwoman's scheme. Soon they are at McElroy Point, where the treasure is supposedly buried — and suddenly they find themselves forced to navigate Catwoman's minefield (sabotaged by Leo.) The pair make use of The Batmobile Batarmor and Automatic Tire Device to escape the mines unscathed, just as The Feline-ous Femme Fatale and Leo locate the treasure in a nearby cave. Overcome by greed, Catwoman double-crosses Leo by gassing him to sleep, and she winds up being chased through the dark cave by the arriving Dynamic Duo. Catwoman arrives at the edge a bottomless crevice which she tries unsuccessfully to leap; with the heavy booty weighing her down, she barely manages to catch hold of a stalactite on the other side. Batman tries to save her but, because she refuses to let go of the treasure to save at least one of her lives, she plummets into the bottomless chasm! (Wonder if she landed on her feet?) Later at Wayne Manor, Alfred, Bruce and Dick, in the midst of playing chess, are surprised by Aunt Harriet, who presents them with Catwoman's pet feline and claims he stole a lobster she was preparing for dinner. Dick merely quips, "He comes from a broken home."

Upon discovering The Dynamic Duo's escape from his trap, The Penguin gets his new society friends to put pressure on Commissioner Gordon to rally Gotham to a manhunt — or bat-and-robin-hunt — and Gordon has no choice but to agree. Batman & Robin arrive at The Penguin Protection Agency, faking insanity and ready to tear The Penguin, Eagle-Eye and Dove apart! Following the ensuing melee, The Dynamic Duo immediately depart upon the arrival of the authorities, who, after chasing The Demented Duo for a couple of blocks, apparently kill them in a shootout in an nearby alley — but the cops' guns were loaded with blanks, as Batman had planned.

Convinced Batman and Robin are finished, Penguin and his Finks swipe The Batmobile and speed off to plans their master caper, which is scheduled to transpire during his wedding to Sophia (the theft of his own wedding gifts!). Eagle-Eye and Dove rig a water pipe, which explodes; then the umbrellas which Penguin has passed out burst out in spectacular display, diverting attention from the fact that the wedding gifts are being burgled, using the ex-Batmobile (rechristened as The Birdmobile!!) as a getaway car, and they head for their secret impregnable hideaway. Batman and Robin, riding The Batcycle, use their deep knowledge of the vehicle (and a remote control!!) to force The Batmobile to do their bidding and deliver The Pompous, Waddling Master Of Fowl Play and his Finks to justice. 1 - 23 THE RING OF WAX

The Riddler smuggles a revolutionary new ring of Universal Wax Solvent, a substance that can eat through anything, from the French Cognac District into the U.S. of A. inside a wax statue of Batman intended for display at Madame Soleil's Wax Museum. (Since the U.S. Government has forbidden its importation for fear that it might fall into the wrong hands, Riddler had to devise something to fool Customs!) In place of the wax Batman statue is a wax replica of The Conundrum King himself, which at its unveiling sprays the audience with a gun filled with red paint while a tape recorder blares out 2 Riddles. In his hideout at The Kandle Lite Kandle Factory, Riddler melts the wax-figure of Batman, containing the wax solvent, into a vatful of boiling wax, as Moth, his new female assistant, looks on.

Meanwhile, Riddler's puzzles lure Batman and Robin to The Gotham City Public Library, where The Riddler and his 2 henchmen, Tallow and Matches, has broken into the rare book vault with his wax solvent to swipe a rare book about the fabled lost treasure of The Incas! When The Dynamic Duo arrive at the factory, they are unwittingly anticipated by The Riddler and company, who give battle; after which, he uses a can of his own Dr. Riddler's Instant Forever-Stick Invisible Wax Emulsion to glue The Duo's feet to the floor, and he and his cronies beat a hasty retreat. The Caped Crusader and The Boy Wonder track their foes back to The Wax Museum, where they are immediately overpowered and taken to Riddler's hideout, where they are suspended by rope over a huge vat of boiling wax, which Riddler plans to use to convert them into giant human candles!

The awful fumes from the molten wax ultimately force Riddler and crew to take refuge downstairs, giving Batman the distraction he needs to reflect a single ray of sun off the shiny buckle of his utility belt into an open barrel of an explosive formula! The explosion that results frees The Duo from their bonds only to knock them out. Believing the explosion has finished them off, The Riddler informs Commissioner Gordon, et al, of the demise of Batman and Robin, and he and his crew hasten to The Gotham City Museum, to break into the sarcophagus of the ancient Incan emperor Hualpo Cusi — which supposedly contains the long-lost treasure. Meanwhile, a very much alive and well Batman and Robin regain consciousness and trace Riddler to the museum only to find it locked, with the only entrance seeming to be a small window on an upper floor -- too big for Batman to fit through, but small enough for a Boy Wonder.

Robin climbs through the window and while making his way through the building to the front door to let Batman in, Robin is overpowered by Matches and Tallow, and brought to The Riddler, who has him tied down to a medieval rack to be stretched! The Caped Crusader suspects that The Boy Wonder is in trouble and makes ample use of The Batram under The Batmobile to smash open the museum doors. He arrives in time to rescue Robin and The Dynamic Duo thwart Riddler, Matches, Tallow and Moth in their attempt to plunder the ancient treasure, and stop their Universal Wax Solvent from destroying a rare old sarcophagus containing an Incan mummy and the treasure. The Clown Prince Of Crime, The Joker, returns to commit what appear to be senseless crimes: first he raids a fur salon, where he steals a hairpin from one of the rich patrons, then he pilfers one of the holes from a golf course. The Dynamic Duo, au naturel, are called in to investigate, arriving at Gordon's office just as an inflatable jack-in-the-box sent in by The Homicidal Harlequin is delivered. The Batman deduces that The Joker plans to steal the solid gold golf clubs belonging to the visiting Maharajah of Nimpah and immediately rushes down by Batmobile to the golf course to thwart the villain. Just as The Maharajah hits the golf ball into the hole he's playing, a cloud of colored gas spews from it, knocking everyone unconscious. (As it's revealed, The Joker stole this hole; he used the stolen hairpin as a trigger, and it was struck by the golf ball and activated the sleeping gas smoke bomb cleverly hidden inside the hole.) The Joker's henchmen then sees fit to kidnap the Maharajah (with a forklift, as the Nimpahnese monarch weighs over 350 lbs.!) and spirit him away by van. The Caped Crusader and The Boy Wonder immediately gives pursuit in The Batmobile, but, just as they gain on them, the van, which is covered by folding mirrors which allow it to blend totally into the background, quickly vanishes! Visiting the novelty company in their everyday identities as Bruce Wayne and Richard Grayson, they discover that it's actually doubled for a hideout for The Joker and that The Maharajah of Nimpah is being held there. They switch back to Batman and Robin garb and, that night, The Darknight Detectives pay a surprise visit to the company, where they subdue four of The Joker's lackeys, but, unfortunately, The Harlequin Of Homicidal Humor himself eludes them, along with The Maharajah. Later, The Joker calls Commissioner Gordon, has him put Batman on the line, and demands $500,000 to ransom The Maharajah. He also requests that The Batman make the arrangements, be present when The Maharajah cashes the check, and endorse the check in his name at The Gotham City State Bank the next morning...knowing full well that The Caped Crusader's reputation would be irreparably damaged as a result. Morning dawns, and when The Maharajah arrives to collect the money, The Caped Crusader thrashes him and his men, and reveals that he and The Joker were one and the same from the very start. Noticing The Nimpahnese government never protested their Maharajah's kidnapping, The Batman called The Palace Of Nimpah and discovered to his relief that the true Maharajah of Nimpah had actually been away on a hunting trip in the Nimpah mountains all along. In order to lure Batman and Robin to Police Headquarters, The Bookworm, a notorious master of stolen book plots, stages a phony assassination attempt on Commissioner Gordon during the dedication ceremony of the new Amergio Bridge. Once The Dynamic Duo enter Police HQ, Bookworm has his moll Lydia Limpetplanting a book bomb in The Batmobile. After discovering that Gordon is very much not dead (he was ticketed for overtime parking while leaving a luncheon), The Batman is alerted by The Batmobile Bomb Detector of an impending explosion and immediately pushes The Batmobile's Radiocontrolled Ejector Button, the bomb is ejected and it explodes in midair before it does any damage! The Duo quickly return to their unharmed Batmobile to discover a literary clue in the form of the book bomb's cover. They race back to The Batcave, where they deduce from the book cover that Bookworm is planning to blow up the new bridge. The "blow-up," however, is a photographic ruse: Bookworm projects a large image of the bridge onto a warehouse wall!

Our momentarily befuddled crimefighters trace the projection back to a giant projector mounted on top of a nearby bookmobile, where they get into a fracas with Bookworm's henchmen. The crooks escape along with their craven leader, but they leave the lovely Miss Limpet bound and gagged inside the bookmobile. The Dynamic Duo wisely suspect a Bookworm plot, and they knock her out with Batgas and spirit her away back to The Batcave, where they employ the use of The Hypermetric Lie-Detector in hopes of divining The Bookworm's plot. They learn what they can from Lydia, and they return her to the bookmobile, where Batman activates a Battrap for Bookworm. Leaving The Boy Wonder behind to guard her, The Batman pretends to speed off on the trail of Lydia's fatally false clues. In his absence, Lydia uses a trick book to gas Robin to sleep and she contacts Bookworm, who, along with his henchmen Printer's Devil, Typesetter, and Pressman, transfer Robin to The Wayne Memorial Clock Tower, erected in memory of Dr. Thomas Wayne, Bruce's late father (oh, the treacherous irony!), where The Boy Wonder is strapped to the clapper of the giant bell of Big Benjamin. 1 - 30 WHILE GOTHAM CITY BURNS

Recalling one of Lydia's cryptic remarks ("He strikes at midnight," she said) Batman divines the meaning, and, with Chief O'Hara (whom he met on the way), races to Big Benjamin to attempt to stop the clock and save Robin before it's too late. O'Hara fails to shoot out the clockworks, and, with but a minute to spare until 12 midnight, The Caped Crusader uses The Batzooka to shoot a line to the lightning rod on top of the clock tower and the second to the clock's hands; he then connects the ends of both lines to The Batmobile's nuclear power source into the positive terminal, in hopes of positively charging the clapper and the bell and thus repel each other! Just as Benjamin's clapper is about to strike, Batman's plan is successful, and Robin is saved. After the rescue, The Peerless Pair repair to The Batcave, where they research their foe's methods. Simultaneously, Bookworm is upstairs in Wayne Manor pilfering a rare alchemical text from Bruce's library; he then arranges for a giant-sized cookbook (the name of it is called The Delight Of Cooking by Suzan Barrie) to appear in the middle of 5th and Cedar streets in downtown Gotham. The Dynamic Duo race to the scene, open the book with a super-powered magnet from The Batmobile (actually, Bookworm and Lydia opened it, with a remote control), enter the book, find a small kitchen inside, and soon find themselves trapped inside the armor-plated book as scalding hot steam is pumped in!!

Bookworm and Lydia see this as a chance to swipe The Batmobile, and they drive it to the rear of The Morganbilt Library, where he plans to use its Batbeam, to break into The Library and snatch all of the rare and priceless books stored within. As Chief O'Hara, Commissioner Gordon, and a group of Gotham's Finest attempt to open the giant cookbook, The Caped Crusader contacts Alfred at The Batcave and, with his help, locates the manhole under the book which Bookworm introduced his murderous steampipe! It is here that The Dynamic Duo make their escape, just as the police finally blast open the book to find it empty, and deduce The Duo had been consumed by the steam. Meanwhile, a very much un-steamed Batman and Robin pick up The Bookworm's conversation in The Batmobile by way of a concealed microphone; it's then relayed to them via an automatic feedback circuit in their Batcave, and they head for The Morganbilt Library, where they eventually subdue The Pernicious Plagiarist and his bookish crew at the library, saving Gotham City yet again. Bookworm and Lydia are taken to Police HQ for Bruce Wayne and Dick Grayson to see in person before being hauled off to the pokey.

Meanwhile, Batman has reached the emergency tank of Batoxygen in his utility belt to stay conscious long enough to use his Batknife and sever the bonds tying him and Robin so they can escape the deadly vacuum tank. Now convinced that Alfred Pennyworth has been brainwashed, The Caped Crusader gives him the information The Penguin wants. When Penguin calls Wayne Manor and signals Alfred to relay the info, the butler reveals that the dinner is to be held on board the good ship S.S. Gotham Neptune and that the chosen beauty queen is Miss Natural Resources. The Penguin then releases Alf from his power, causing him to forget what has transpired.

That very night, Penguin switches his latest moll, Finella, for Miss Natural Resources and arms her with an umbrella triggered with knockout gas. Fearing for the attending millionaires' safety, Bruce Wayne and Dick Grayson decide to attend the dinner as The Caped Crusader and The Boy Wonder. All goes well until time arrives for dessert with the giant cake containing Finella. As she pops out of the cake, she uses Penguin's gas-filled umbrella to put the millionaires to bed; as they slumber, The Penguin and his Finks snatch the charity money and rush back to their hideout to divvy up the loot. But poor Finella suffers a fit of remorse for her actions. Unknown to her, and Penguin, The Dynamic Duo had taken AntiPenguin Gas Pills beforehand, and took a shortcut to the felonious fowl's hideout; there they lay in wait for Penguin, thrash him and his lackeys about, and re-cage him. The Multimillionaires' Annual Award Dinner transfers to Wayne Manor for safety, and Finella (appearing in a mink stole) is given a police escort there by Commissioner Gordon.

2 - 1 SHOOT A CROOKED ARROW

In The Caped Crusader's second season opener, The Archer, a medieval crook modeled after Robin Hood, escapes from Police Headquarters in a moving van from The Trojan Hearse Company, driven by Maid Marilyn. Together, with his band of merry malefactors - Crier Tuck and Big John - he pays a surprise visit to Wayne Manor, where they gas everyone and then steal the loose cash Bruce kept in the wall safe, thus stealing from the rich, and giving it to the poor, clueless Gothamites. Later that day, The Archer and company attempt to thwart justice by dropping in on Police HQ. Protected with goggles, the medieval muggers blind Commissioner Gordon, Chief O'Hara, and The Dynamic Duo with another of Archer's special trick arrows and beat a hasty retreat out the window. As The Archer, Marion, Tuck and John give out the money they swiped from The Everett Bannister's Koin Machines Company, they are apprehended by Batman and Robin---only to be rapidly bailed out by the poor but misguided citizens with the exact same money distributed to them by Archer, whom they view as a hero!

The Dynamic Duo trace The Archer to his hideout at The Earl Of Huntington Archery Range (Robin Hood is the alias of The Earl Of Huntington) in Gotham's Green Forest section, where Alfred Pennyworth attempts to divert the crooks long enough for The Caped Crusader and The Boy Wonder to inspect his GHQ--where they unwittingly trigger a secret alarm which ensnares them in a giant net. After stringing up The Duo by their thumbs, The Archer demands Batman reveal The Batcave's secret location or else he beheads Alfred (Archer intends to storm The Cave and destroy the crime computers therein). The Caped Crusader notices to his relief that the gullontine Archer plans to use on Alfred is a fake prop used by magicians and refuses Archer's ultimatum. Archer takes The Dynamic Duo out doors, ties them to a stake, and, along with his merry madmen (mounted on horseback), perpare to run them both through with lances!!

2 - 2 WALK THE STRAIGHT AND NARROW

Just as The Dynamic Duo are about to be impaled, they activate The Batsprings cleverly hidden in their boots, which catapult them up, up, and away, out of harm's way. Rather than go back after the unshiskebabled superheroes, The Archer and his merry malefactors opt to beat a hasty retreat to their new hideout in the basement of Police HQ! Next, Archer and his cronies hijack an armored car carrying $10 million, which The Wayne Foundation plans to donate to the poor Gothamites. The truck is later found abandoned not too short a distance away with the cash left untouched, so the ceremony commences as planned. Whilst Alfred Pennyworth, in disguise as Batman, and Robin bears witness from across the street, Bruce Wayne attends the ceremony, where it's learned that The Archer has substituted the money in the truck for phoney tender bearing The Archer's picture! The Caped Crusader deduces that Alan A. Dale, one of The Wayne Foundation's directors who was responsible for the money's well-being, is one of The Archer's merry band of mad malefactors, and they are planning to escape by boat to Switzerland in international waters, where they feel they'll be forever protected from the law...or so they assume! The Dynamic Duo chase the crooks by Batboat and rout The Archer, Crier Tuck, Big John, Maid Marilyn, and Alan A. Dale before they get the chance! Later, Bruce, Dick and Alfred perform archery on their front lawn.

2 - 3 HOT OFF THE GRIDDLE

Commissioner Gordon, Chief O'Hara and The Dynamic Duo suspect — strongly — that The Catwoman has returned to open a school for cat burglars, and she tips them off to her presence after her Catmen John, Charles, and Thomas snatch a catalogue, a catamaran, and three mittens (rhymes with "kittens," who lost their "mittens"...whew!) The Batman and Robin ask gossip columnist Jack O'Shea to pen a fake story about a rare canary at the Natural History Museum, in order to snare the lovely cat. However, Jack is secretly in league with Catwoman, and he tips her off. Consequently, Batman and Robin are ambushed at their Museum stakeout by the cat burglars, paralyzed by Catwoman's tranquilizer darts, and thrown out the window. They are saved from certain doom by a safety net, which they set up just in case the bird was dropped out the window. The Dynamic Duo manage to capture one of Catwoman's thugs, who, along with a new single called "The Catusi" by Benedict Arnold & The Traitors (oh, brother!), leads them to a nightclub called The Pink Sand Box, which is Catwoman's new hideout (kitty litter!). There they are quickly deposited by a revolving booth into a room with a metal floor. This floor turns red-hot, forcing our heroes to dance the hot-foot! Hoping to cool the floor, The Caped Crusader bursts an overhead water pipe--only to unwittingly release Catatonic, a gas which renders him and The Boy Wonder unconscious. They recover outside, strapped to aluminum grills, their bodies greased with margarine and two giant magnifying glasses poised directly over them, with the intent of roasting them alive in the midday sun!

2 - 4 THE CAT AND THE FIDDLE

As luck would have it, a well-timed solar eclipse occurs just as the sun is about to barbecue our heroes. They shift the magnifying glasses with their feet so that the returning sun will now burn off their bonds. Back at The Batcave, The Dynamic Duo deduce The Catwoman's next objective, and rush to The Gotham State Building and discover a momentous sale of Zubin Zucchini's 2 rare stradivarius violins for $250,000 each is to occur on the 102nd floor. See, The Gotham State Building's 102nd floor is the only place in Gotham City with the proper altitude and humidity to inspect the violins, which haven't been out of their cases in 30 years and might crack in the improper atmosphere, and The Catwoman covets them for the 8 pieces of catgut (good grief!) attached to them! Meanwhile, The Foul Feline has overcome rich old recluse Minerva Mathews with gas and, disguised as Matthews, replaces her as the purchaser of the violins. The incognito Catwoman goes to the 102nd floor, disabling the elevators behind her and greedily trying to snatch the 2 violins from Zucchini, only to find that he is actually Robin in disguise! He is immediately overpowered by Catmen John, Charles, and Thomas, and crooked gossip columnist Jack O'Shea, who reveals their mode of escape: a getaway rocket! On the first floor, Batman, on learning Catwoman has disabled the elevators, attaches his new Batjets to one of the stalled elevators; the thrust is enough to send The Caped Crusader and the elevator to the top floor in no time. He arrives in time to rescue the outnumbered Boy Wonder, just as he is about to be tossed out the window by O'Shea and The Catmen. The Duo dispose of the men, and Batman finds Catwoman (after experiencing mechanical problems with the getaway rocket during the fight) outside on the ledge, attempting a getaway with the money and violins, of course, but is impaired by vertigo! Batman secures one end of his Batrope, tosses the other end to a frightened Catwoman, and tells her to drop the (obviously fake!) violins and money and tie the rope around her waist. Suddenly O'Shea recovers and shoves Batman out the window! The Boy Wonder sends O'Shea back into dreamland with a generous right cross and, finding The Caped Crusader has grabbed hold of his Batrope and he and Catwoman are hanging onto each other for dear life, single-handedly pulls them to safety. In Gordon's office, prior to her being taken to the pen, Catwoman rewards Batman with a simple rub on the cheek.

2 - 5 THE MINSTREL'S SHAKEDOWN

The Minstrel, a medieval lute-playing electronics genius, sends the stock market into an uproar when he alters the computerized stock quotations; he later airs a televised ultimatum, demanding $1000 a week from each exchange member, or else stock quotations will be further disrupted, causing the market to crash! The Caped Crusader and The Boy Wonder try to capture the musical maniac later that night when he tries to realter his crooked circuitry, but Minstrel blinds The Dynamic Duo with one of his devilish devices and beats a rhythmic retreat. The Batman tries to track The Minstrel to his hideout by using The Batdrone Plane to trace the TV signal The Minstrel used to televise his ultimatums. But he predicts The Duo will attempt just that and decides to broadcast from his criminal studio at The Willow Street Warehouse rather than from his normal hideout. Batman and Robin later locate the warehouse by Batmobile and sneak in, but not before The Batman sprinkles a few precautions along the corridor: Adhesive Batbombs. 2 - 6 BARBECUED BATMAN

Just as it looks like The Dynamic Duo's geese are cooked (literally!), the Adhesive Batbombs Batman planted in the hallway earlier go off, enticing Minstrel and his minions, Amanda, Bass and Treble, and giving The Duo the distraction they need to shake loose the spit from its supports and free themselves. When The Minstrel realizes The Batman has escaped, he and Bass and Treble retreat to their other hideout, leaving behind their moll, Amanda. The Batman places a bugging device into her purse before he releases her, hoping that she will lead them to The Minstrel's second hideout. Surprised by Amanda's return, The Minstrel immediately spots the bug in her purse and informs the eavesdropping Dynamic Duo that he will now commence "Plan High-C," and that The Batman should gather the members of the stock exchange at the exchange building within half an hour for a demonstration of his monstrous scheme! The Minstrel makes devilishly good on his evil threat, using a broadcast signal that corresponds to the building's resonance to cause the entire building to shake, and blackmailing the stock exchange members into giving into his demands within one hour or he will send the whole building crumbling down! Batman figures Minstrel can't broadcast his signal without power, so he severs all the power in the building. Minstrel nevertheless broadcasts his ultimatums with his own power, but The Caped Crusader realizes the broadcast was prerecorded and he sees through The Minstrel's disguise as one of the members of the stock exchange! Minstrel and his men, Bass and Treble, who were disguised as caterers, are brought to justice by The Dynamic Duo! 2 - 7 THE SPELL OF TUT

Two apparently clueless minions of the nefarious archcriminal King Tut break into the mansion of a Man of Distinction and steal only a string of amber beads. Batman and Robin are called in to investigate and discover from their only clue, a lead pestle, that Tut is at his hideout in The Apex Apothecary Shop, attempting to release a handful of ancient scarab beetles, preserved for millennia in the amber. The heroes interrupt Tut in his work, but, in the ensuing Batfight, are waylaid by sneezing powder, giving the girthful pharaoh and his Tutlings time to escape with the now revived scarabs. The Peerless Pair have only a lone beetle to take back to The Batcave for examination. Their analysis reveals that Tut hopes to create a terrible ancient potion called abu raubu simbu tu, which can be used to subdue the human will, and The Pudgy Pharaoh, armed with the formerly extinct scarabs, will make enough of the drug (95,000 gallons, to be exact, according to The Apothecary) to put all of Gotham under his power! The Batman decides to set an intricate plan to entrap The Misguided Monarch. He has the sphinx Tut formerly employed to make ill-fated predictions delivered to Wayne Manor's front lawn. Hoping that Tut's men will snatch the statue, he has Robin hide inside it. The Criminal King swallows the bait by claiming his evil property. While in contact with Batman, Robin accidentally drops his Batcommunicator, alerting Tut to his presence. The Boy Wonder is dragged from the statue and is about to be made a guineapig for Tut's evil drug when he overpowers Tut's men and escapes through an unlocked door, hoping to reach the outside---only to instead find himself on a narrow platform suspended over a deadly pit of Tut's pet crocodiles! 2 - 8 TUT'S CASE IS SHUT

Au naturel, Batman manages to find Tut's hideout by tracing The Radioactive Batpellets he planted in Robin's utility belt with The Batgeiger Counter in The Batmobile. Using The Batlaser, he melts away the bars guarding the window to the crocodile pit. Then he swings across the room on his Batrope saves his pal just as the platform under his feet is completely yanked out! Returning to The Batmobile, Robin reveals that Commissioner Gordon's shapely temp secretary, Cleo Patrick, is actually a spy for King Tut, and his new Queen Of The Nile. Intent on warning The Commissioner of the danger, Batman calls Police HQ but gets Chief O'Hara; unfortunately, his warning is just a tad too late, for the unwaring Chief has already consumed Tut's paralyzing drug cleverly disguised as a vitamin pill! As The Dynamic Duo race back to Gotham, Tut appears at the office and on a whim commands O'Hara perform acrobatics outside on the ledge! While watching the Chief perform, Tut spots The Batmobile pull up to the building and he and Cleo beat a hasty retreat by elevator as Batman and Robin arrive to coax O'Hara off the ledge. Later, Gordon (also under Tut's spell, thanks to Cleo!) meets The Caped Crusader in Jefferson Square Park and drugs his lemonade with an abu raubu simbu tu pill. Now apparently under Tut's sinister spell, Batman is led away with Robin by Tut's Tutlings to The Apex Apothecary Shop. As The Corpulent King prepares to leave for the waterworks to spike the city's water supply with his drug, The Caped Crusader (who thought ahead and coated his stomach with buttermilk, protecting himself from the drug) snaps out of his phoney trance and, along with Robin, topple Tut's men. The Nefarious Nabob escapes outside to his truck containing his abominable abu raubu simbu tu; fortunately, it refuses to start, giving The Dynamic Duo enough time to finish off his henchman and race outside to spill the truck's contents into the gutter. In attempting to prevent the flow of his precious bug juice, Tut accidentally swallows some of it, hoisting himself on his own insidious petard, and he becomes Batman's slave! Later, in Gordon's office, Tut reverts to his original self.

2 - 9 THE GREATEST MOTHER OF THEM ALL

Batman and Robin are called into action. They quickly locate the fiendish family at their home on Cherry Blossom Road, where, under the cover of a smoke bomb, they evade apprehension, save for Pretty Boy. Later, Machine Gun is also captured, after The Parkers pilfer money from a theater's box office. Then Mad Dog is foiled in his attempt to hold up a drugstore. They finally trace Ma and the last of her delinquent children, Legs, at an old ladies' home, where, after Ma's high-speed rocket-wheelchair race ends at a well-placed wall, they are arrested. The Caped Crusader and The Boy Wonder quickly take Ma and Legs to Gotham State Penitentiary to join the rest of their family. As Batman and Robin leave the prison, they notice a trustee examining The Batmobile's Batengine. Writing off his rather suspicious behaviour as curiosity, they start on their way. Unfortunately, back in Warden Crichton's office, Ma reveals that she has been secreting sympathetic guards into the prison for some time, so it is easy for her gang to take over; she also brags that Batman was her unwitting pawn in capturing her and her crooked kids, for now she's in total control of The Gotham State Pen! Quick as a blink, The Peerless Pair speed back to the prison to check on The Parkers. However, clever playacting convinces them that all is well there. Ma then holds a meeting of the prison inmates and informs them of her plan for using The Gotham State Pen as a hideout while Batman & Robin do their work by send more crooks to fatten her jailhouse gang. (After all, who'd think to looking for escaped crooks inside a prison?) During an armed car robbery, Ma detonates the druck with dynamite, the resulting explosion triggering The Batseismograph, which in turn alerts The Dynamic Duo. They rush to the scene, where under a shower of cash, Ma Parker and her delinquent kids cut out--but her plan goes awry when Batman siezes a scrap of cloth from a fleeing thief and recognizes it as prison garb! Suspecting Ma Parker is involved, Batman and Robin break into the prison, only to be captured and strapped into electric chairs by Ma's gang, scheduled to be barbecued at midnight! When Ma pulls the switch to fry The Duo, she and her cohorts find that Batman (having lured Legs into leaving the room beforehand) has cleverly managed to rewire the whole setup, using it to signal Alfred to cause a prisonwide blackout instead of an execution! The Caped Crusader and The Boy Wonder immediately free themselves and recapture The Parker Family to restore order in Gotham State Penitentiary. 2 - 11 THE CLOCK KING'S CRAZY CRIMES

The master of time crimes, Temple Fugate, The Clock King, arranges for one of his trick timepieces to be sold to the Harry Hummert Jewelry Shop, which caters to Gotham City's elite. Concealed inside the clock is a small TV camera which allows Clock King to observe everyone in the shop. Alerting his moll, Millie Second, and his group of Second Hands, he activates the tricky mechanism in the clock, which gasses all of the patrons asleep. CK and his minute minions see this as a golden opportunity to strip the shop clean of its valuables. Batman and Robin are alerted to the robbery by Commissioner Gordon and rush to Hummert's shop, where they discover that the clock was bought at The Parkhurst Gallery. They quickly leave the shop and speed for the gallery, where they discover that the clock was put up for auction by a Mr. Kronos. The Dynamic Duo deduce that it was Temple Fugate incognito, and they make their next stop Dunbar's Drive-in (whose special of the day is Batburgers!) in search for one of Fugate's former molls, Thelma Thymepiece. Meanwhile, back at The Parkhurst Gallery, Clock King disguises himself as pop art expert Progress Pigment, and attempts to snatch a rare time-related painting under the very noses of the TV audience (the local TV news was doing a live report from the Parkhurst at the time of CK's arrival). After making a short speech to the crowd Temple "Progress Pigment" Fugate unveils his latest sculpture, called Time Out Of Joint, which resembles the inside of a clock and when turned on emits a potpourri of assembled sounds and noises as the mechanical parts move about. Nobody suspects that the mechanical marvel is actually being used as a decoy to cover up the sound of a saber saw attached to its rear, which cuts through the wall into the storage room filled with valuable paintings. After the saw does its diabolical duty, "Progress Pigment" clicks another switch on the sculpture, this one emitting a high-pitched noise so piercing that it knocks everyone out except for him and his Second Hands, 3 and 5, who were protected by earmuffs. Clock King enters the storage room and swipes the clock masterpiece therein. Batman and Robin, who, at Dunbar's Drive-in, have been enjoying their Batburgers and watching The Clock King on The Batscope in The Batmobile, rush for the place and confront CK and his Second Hands as they depart with the painting. They proceed to thrash Second Hands 3 and 5 but are stopped by Clock King, who fakes a sprained wrist sustained from clutching the heavy painting and releases a barrage of giant springs in their direction from yet another hidden compartment in his Time Out Of Joint. The time The Dynamic Duo make in trying to pry themselves free of the giant coils gives The Clock King and The Second Hands room to split. The Caped Crusader and The Boy Wonder analyze the dust inside a wristwatch dropped by Clock King at the gallery, and use it to trace him and his gang to their hideout at the deserted premises of Tick Tock Synthetic Rubies, Inc. Unaware that CK deliberately left behind the watch, The Duo fall into an untimely trap! The Clock King, meanwhile, is enraged on learning one of his men accidentally planted his Automatic Energy Directional Control Switch, meant for a bomb to be used in his final caper: in a clock bought by Dick Greyson's Aunt Harriet as a birthday present for Bruce Wayne! CK and his Second Hands invade Wayne Manor to steal back the mistakenly rigged clock, and proceeds to purloin Bruce Wayne's priceless collection of antique pocket watch collection and Aunt Harriet herself, before being interrupted by Bruce and Dick, who steal back the watches and Aunt Harriet! Working on slim clues, the two crimefighters then act on an earlier remark made by CK, and they race to the Gotham Clock Tower to foil The Clock King's plan to steal a valuable Cesium clock by using the clock's mechanical blacksmith to set off a bomb. Every 5 years, the city must pay The Indians - in this case Chief Screaming Chicken, last of The Mohicans - 9 raccoon pelts; 3 pelts from each of the 9 descendants of Gotham City's founders: Pete Savage, Tim Tyler, and our own philanthropist Bruce N. Wayne. If the pelts aren't delivered by midnight on the night of the lease's expiration, the full force of Gotham City will revert back to The Mohicans. Egghead secretly signs a lease with The Chief to act as his legal representative if and when the time on the lease runs out, which Egghead intends to make sure will happen. As part of his plan to divert any suspicion which just might fall upon him, Chandell arranges for his lethal female assistants - Doe, Rae, and Mimi - to appear at Wayne Manor with their highpitched bagpipes, which they use to put everyone asleep (himself included), and then they ransack the place! Whilst Bruce and Dick are away on vacation, Chandell and Harry plot to strip The Burma Import Company clean with the aid of his felonious female trio during his concert that evening. During that concert Chandell strikes an incorrect note, signaling the girls to strike; that note is, of course, discovered by Bruce Wayne, who'd been listening to the concert on his portable radio, and, believing something is stirring, he signals Dick and the two switch identities and return to Gotham City as The Dynamic Duo! Meanwhile, Chandell furthers his plan by playing up to Aunt Harriet. Later, realizing that The Caped Crusader is on his trail, he assaults himself with a rootbeer bottle and leads them to a trap at twin brother Harry's abandoned Parnassus Music-Roll Co. As a player piano feeds the musical notes to the music roll machine via a microphone, The Caped Crusader mentally visualizes the chords which will make the cutting devices to puncture the outlines of their bodies. The Dynamic Duo save themselves by outshouting the piano with bad Bat-singing. Batman and Robin quickly apprehend Harry and his pack of Piano Movers and take them to Police HQ, where they reveal that a master criminal named Fingers is the ringleader...only to have Harry sprung from the hoosegow by his criminal attorney, Alfred Slye. Convinced that Chandell and Fingers are one and the same, and deducing his plan to do away with Bruce and Dick and marry up with Aunt Harriet, The Dynamic Duo form a trap for The Precarious Pianist. They arrange for their own deaths by faking an explosion in the darkroom set up in the front hall. Immediately upon learning that Chandell, after marrying Aunt Harriet, is going straight and abandon them, Harry and Doe, Rae, and Mimi decide to take matters into their own hands.

The girls put Chandell to sleep with their bewitching bagpipes. Mr. Slye shows up and informs Harry that he won't be able to claim The Wayne Fortune until the will is settled in 11 years...and then presents his client with a staggering $100,000 bill, payable by midnight, or he will be brought back to jail. Believing Slye's fees are too high, Harry orders his beauties to work him over with their bagpipes, too. Chandell and Slye are then tied to the conveyor belt leading into the same music roll machine which failed to do in The Dynamic Duo earlier. Masquerading as Chandell, Harry pays a visit on Harriet, who immediately spots him for a phony and tries to take him by citizen's arrest at gunpoint ("As they say in the movies, 'stick up your mitts!'"), but is overcome, along with Alfred, by the spellbinding sound of the girls' bagpipes. Harry transports the two in a packing case and sprays it with machine-gunfire, only to watch in shock as The Dynamic Duo, protected by The Batshield, leap out and capture the gang, and rescue Chandell and Slye from the monstrous music roll machine. He quickly climbs out of the vat, dips his hands into the acid to dissolve his bonds, and frees Robin. Later, Batman appears in a televised debate with The Penguin, in which Penguin states that Batman associates with criminals, while he labels himself as an "associate with the law," despite his claim of "no mudslinging in this campaign" (feh!). The debate is interrupted by news of The GOONS' breaking into The Gotham City Convention Hall and making off with the priceless collection of gems set up for display at an upcoming jeweler's convention. The Penguin and The Dynamic Duo rush off to thwart the crooks. After a heated fight, Penguin emerges victorious (naturally, since he had the whole robbery set up from the beginning!), giving him a wide lead over his caped opponent in the subsequent polls. But, as the final election results show an increase of support for Batman (it's votes that count, not polls!), The Penguin realizes his political career is becoming kaput, thus forcing him to kidnap members of the board of election in an elaborate attempt to sway the votes in his favor. The Dynamic Duo trace The Penguin to his hideout; there, they rescue the election commissioners and package The Penguin and his lackeys inside a machine used to package Penguin's campaign literature. The Duo then tell Penguin that Batman won the election by an overwhelming margin, for the votes were already counted when he kidnapped the board of election members. Returning to police H.Q., The Caped Crusader turns down his new position in Mayor Lindseed's favor. He also talks with President Johnson; before hanging up, The Caped Crusader asks The President to give his best to Hubert! NEXT WEEK: Mr. Freeze returns!

2 - 19 GREEN ICE

Mr. Freeze returns to continue his plans for revenge against Batman and Robin for condemning him to live in subzero temperatures, and thus terrorize Gotham City. Having broken jail in an ice cram truck, Freeze kidnaps Miss Iceland from the finals of The Miss Galaxy Beauty Pageant, planning to lower her body temperature to his level and then marry her. Later, he makes an appearance at Police HQ and, hiding in an air conditioner vent, uses his horrendous Freeze Gun to freeze Commissioner Gordon, Chief O'Hara, and their entire office. The Dynamic Duo are alerted to The Commissioner's peril, and they rush by Batmobile to rescue their frigid friends. Moments later, a giant block of ice containing money (cold hard cash!!!) is delivered to Batman and Robin, sent by Mr. Freeze, which the local newspapers perceive as a bribe, as the first step in the cool, cruel fiend's plot to taint the saintly image of The Batman, rendering Miss Iceland's kidnapping only secondary. Not long after, Freeze and 2 of his henchmen make an appearance at a party being given at Wayne Manor, and after freezing Bruce Wayne, Dick Greyson, Aunt Harriet and all of the guests in the reflecting pool, Shivers and Chill, two more of Freeze's lackies, arrive dressed as The Caped Crusader and The Boy Wonder and make a shambled mockery of the pair by losing a battle with Freeze's other men. The fake heroes quickly beat a hasty retreat, followed by Mr. Freeze and his frozen flunkies. Noble butler Alfred Pennyworth, who had been inside the house preparing refreshments all the while during the robbery, arrives in time to spot the guests frozen in the pool, and he quickly activates the pool's heater, releasing them. The Dynamic Duo trace The Frosty Felon to his hideout in a cold storage plant next to The Frosty Freezy Company Factory, where they become quick-frozen by Mr. Freeze's trusty freeze gun and then taken to the factory, where they are slated to become giant Frosty Freezies (Batman a pineapple one, Robin, lime!)

2 - 20 DEEP FREEZE

With their virtually-frozen feet, The Dynamic Duo locate the heat exhaust valve and turn it so that recycled exhaust in the heating unit will reverse the refrigerating process and manage to melt their way out through the resulting heat transfer. Returning to Police HQ, Batman and Robin are greeted by a newspaper photograph depicting The Caped Crusader wearing Commissioner Gordon's gold watch, which Freeze stole at the party. The Frigid Fiend is succeeding in his plan as he has finally managed to lead Gotham into believing Batman has weakened to the temptations of bribery! Mr. Freeze, believing that Batman and Robin are out of the way, proceeds with his master plan to blackmail Gotham City. Unless the city fathers pay him $1,000,000,000, Mr. Freeze will bury the city into one huge cake of ice! To prove his intentions are sincere, he demonstrates his power by freezing The Gotham City Reservoir.

Gordon is tempted to contact The Dynamic Duo, but is discouraged by his loss of faith in Batman. Undaunted by their tarnished reputations, Batman and Robin secretly pay a visit to Freeze's hideout, where they are captured and about to be frozen solid, just like like Miss Iceland, whom they see encased in a huge block of ice!!! However, The Duo have applied themselves with a protective layer of Antifreeze Activating Solution, and, armed with their Batthermal Underwear, they thwart Freeze's plans and overpower The Frosty Fiend and his frigid flunkies. The Caped Crusader uses a crowbar to free Miss Iceland from her icy tomb, and they discover Freeze nearby, without his Freeze Collar, and near certain death. Obviously wanting him alive to pay for his evil, Batman and Robin brings him over to Miss Iceland's ice coffin and encase him within, keeping him breathing until the police finds his frozen neckpiece.

2 - 21 THE IMPRACTICAL JOKER

Following clues from The Joker's vandalization of key-like objects around Gotham (tearing up a book, cracking a record, burning a file and lopsiding a sign), The Caped Crusader and The Boy Wonder head to Angus Ferguson's rare key exhibition. There, Joker steals The Jeweled Key Of Kaincardine with the aid of his new invention, a mysterious little spark-spewing box which leaves The Dynamic Duo completely helpless while he escapes with The Key. Ferguson is furious. Later, Batman and Robin follow a televised clue by The Joker and they trace The Homicidal Harlequin to a fur salon, where they encounter the pasty-faced clown and his henchmen. Batman & Robin capture the mysterious device dropped by the departing Joker, which turns out to be nothing but from a sparkly diversion to help Joker practice hypnotic suggestion! Back in The Batcave, The Batman uses The Batcomputer and a phone book to find Joker's hideout. The Dynamic Duo proceed by Batmobile to the place--resulting in instant capture by The Joker, who places Robin inside a spray wax machine while Batman is strapped to a giant key duplicator!

2 - 22 THE JOKER'S PROVOKERS

The Caped Crusader removes his duplicate house key from his utility belt and uses it to jam the key duplicator's mechanism, releasing him. He quickly Bat-pummels Joker's minions, rescues a now wax-immobilized Robin from the wax spray machine, returns him to The Batcave, and restores him to normal with the aid of Bat Wax-solvent. Meanwhile, Joker has perfected a new little box that acts as a time machine, with which he hopes to cause the expected havoc by controlling time. He also, it turns out, plans to place a hallucinogen in the city's water supply so that all of Gotham will be in thrall to him. Alfred helps out the heroes by arranging to pose for his lookalike cousin Egbert, the night watchman at Gotham Reservoir, and he introduces his newly-designed Alfcycle, which he rides to the reservoir. There, after switching places with Egbert, Alf manages to victimize The Joker and his gang (at gunpoint!) with his own insidious time machine, freezing and reverting them in time! Batman and Robin arrive just in time to wrap everything up when Alfred unknowingly switches off the device. Later, Aunt Harriet, arriving home from a movie theater, runs out of gas and seeks assistance from Alfred (posing as Egbert again); just then, The Dynamic Duo (with a bag lunch for Alf) show up and aids Harriet. 2 - 23 MARSHA, QUEEN OF DIAMONDS

Chief O'Hara has been drugged into a love-slave of Marsha, Queen of Diamonds, allowing her to rob U. Magnum's of the famous Pretzel Diamond. Gordon puts through a call to The Dynamic Duo on The Red Phone to alert them of the chief's off-kilter behavior, sending them to Police HQ. Meanwhile, The Diamond Queen has O'hara phone Gordon, who rushes to Marsha's hideout to rescue the chief and apprehend the diamond diva, but, thanks to a dart fired from a statue of Daniel Cupid tipped with a love potion concocted by Marsha's Aunt Hilda (a winsome witch who was a chemistry professor at Vassar for 20 years before being thrown out for turning the entire student body orange for a week!), the commissioner is added to Marsha's unending list of love slaves. Under Marsha's spell, Gordon phones The Caped Crusader and lures him into a trap at her lair! The Dynamic Duo speed to Marsha's love-nest/hideout, where the criminal Queen Of Diamonds shoots a love-potion-tipped arrow at Batman, but The Caped Crusader uses every fiber of his superior Bat-will to fight off the powerful drug. Enraged by this insufferable effrontery, Marsha orders The Grand Mogul her Guardians to destroy Batman and Robin and, in the fray, Robin is both drugged and captured. Marsha offers to trade the Boy Wonder for huge batdiamond that powers The Batcomputer in The Batcave. Batman demurs, saying that no stranger can enter the Batcave; Marsha bounds over this hurdle by offering Batman her hand in marriage. This way, she will no longer be a stranger, she will become Mrs. Batman!! The next time we see Batman, he walks down the aisle with Marsha toward the church altar!

2 - 24 MARSHA'S SCHEME WITH DIAMONDS

Batman is torn between whether or not to say, "I do," when all of a sudden, Alfred, disguised as British solicitor Ethelbert Soames (of Soames, Stillwell and Thistlewaite!), arrives with Aunt Harriet. They disrupt the unholy union by claiming Cooper is the one and only Mrs. batman. Realizing she has been conned, The Diamond Queen and her Grand Mogul immediately make a break for it! Batman and Alfred speed by Batmobile to Marsha's love nest/hideaway with The Bat Antidote Kit to free Robin and the others from the love potion.

The Dynamic Duo trace Marsha to the underground cave of her Aunt Hilda, where they battle Marsha's Guardians while Hilda, armed with powerful antidotes, tries to turn them into a variety of animals. But The Caped Crusader and The Boy Wonder prove a match for her every spell and The Guardians. An undaunted Marsha then renders the heroes unconscious with knockout drugs. Hilda then applies them with her strongest potion yet, which is supposed to turn them into toads! The next day, Marsha and her Grand Mogul appears in Commissioner Gordon's office bearing caged and caped toads who speak with the voices of Batman and Robin! Marsha threatens to feed the talking toads to her pet cat unless Gordon meets her demands. It turns out, however, to have been a trick: the real Batman and Robin (after escaping from Marsha's hideout) swoop in to disarm The Grand Mogul and haul Marsha off to prison.

2 - 25 COME BACK, SHAME

Shame, a conniving cowboy of crime, and his western gang comprised of Okie Annie, Messy James, and Rip Snorting, plan to build a superpowered truck, which will outrace even The Batmobile. Needing some additional parts for the truck, they swipe a racing car right in the middle of The Gotham City 500 Road Race! Shame returns to his hideout at the abandoned Westernland Amusement Park, where he befriends a small boy names Andy, who imitates a cowboy. Meanwhile, Batman and Robin have figured out Shame's scheme and plants a story with DJ Hot Rod Harry about the new parts added to the Wayne Limousine. Shame listens to said broadcast on Andy's radio and prepares to hijack the limo, with Oakie Annie as bait!

Taking a drive in the limo, Bruce Wayne, Dick Grayson and Alfred (who doubles as chauffeur) encounter a cow in the middle of the road. The three get out of the limo to move the cow...when suddenly Shame and his pernicious posse emerge from the bushes armed to the teeth, and they make off with the car. Long after Shame and crew have vanished, The Batcycle, which had been following them for a mile behind them, arrives, carrying The Alfcycle, which Alfred rides to The Batcave (using a circuitous route), and Bruce and Dick follow suit in The Batcycle. Later on, The Dynamic Duo trace the vehicle to Westernland by way of The Infrared Batdust, with which the Wayne limo's tires were cleverly coated but can only be detected by The Batmobile's specially tinted windshield. After a battle, The Caped Crusader and The Boy Wonder are knocked senseless by a falling chandelier. Shane leads them outside and stakes them out in the middle of the road and releases a herd of stampeding cattle in their direction, with intentions of trampling The Duo!

Wr Stanley Ralph Ross

Dir Oscar Rudolph

2 - 26 IT'S THE WAY YOU PLAY THE GAME

The vibrations of the stampeding cattle cause the stake holding Batman's wrists to shake loose from the ground, and, leaping to his feet, he takes off his cape and, matador-style, guides the stampede away from himself and Robin. Returning to The Batcave, The Caped Crusader again contacts Hot Rod Harry who refers them to used car salesman Laughing Leo--who is also a secret informant of Shame's criminal posse! At Laughing Leo's lot, located on the corner of Surf Avenue and 20th Street, The Dynamic Duo are unable to get a straight answer from Leo. They depart, and, feeling something is wrong, Leo reports back to Shame that Batman and Robin have survived. Shame is put into a funk so deep he shoots up nearly his entire garage!

Shame anticipates The Dynamic Duo's return and prepares a double-barrel ambush! As predicted The Caped Crusader and The Boy Wonder do return to Westernland where they are greeted by a hail of bullets--and Robin is shot in the heel by Shame! Batman rushes The Boy Wonder back to The Batcave for treatment; there Alfred reports that he, as Bruce Wayne, is scheduled to appear at the rodeo this afternoon. Alfred's reminder manages to crack the case: Shame plans to steal the four prize Black Angus bulls, each worth $300,000, that will be on display! However, by the time The Dynamic Duo reach the rodeo, Shame and his posse are long gone with the bulls in his supertruck. Figuring the bulls have to be fed, Batman tracks the gang to The K.O. Corral down at the stockyards, where, after a blazing gunfight, Batman and Robin corral the entire gang of desperadoes and take them to the hoosegow. 2 - 27 THE PENGUIN'S NEST

The Penguin opens an exclusive restaurant, The Penguin's Nest, which caters to Gothamite's richest citizens. By a clever ruse he and his henchmen Cordy Blue, Maty Dee, and Chickadee collects handwriting samples from his very exclusive guests. Upon his inevitable return to Prison (the foul fowl has been imprisoned so many times he has been assigned a permanent cell!), he plans to use these samples, in collaboration with the famous forger Ballpoint Baxter, to forge checks against the millionaires' accounts, which Penguin will cash immediately upon his release. However, Baxter is in prison, so The Penguin somehow has to get himself arrested...something which, unfortunately for him, he just can't seem to do! First he attempts to snatch a piece of jewelry from Aunt Harriet, who was dining at the restaurant, but Batman and Robin later intercede and allow the wayward wallower to go free, despite his attacking Chief O'Hara with a pie in the face. Since Penguin is obviously eager to return to jail, The Caped Crusader suspects he has something sunister up his sinewly sleeve and decides to check his prison cell assignment. Thus he and The Boy Wonder divine his scheme and decides to yet again let Penguin off the hook, in hopes he will carelessly tip his hand. Later, The Penguin executes another attempt to be apprehended by staging the fake murder of one of his own henchmen and Batman & Robin, who have been watching him like hawks, haul him away...but to the meager City Jail and not the State Prison (where Baxter is). The Dynamic Duo unravel The Penguin's plan, but not before Cordy Blue, Maty Dee, and Chickadee springs him from jail. In the process they also kidnap Chief O'Hara and hold him hostage. Penguin locks the chief in a steamer trunk suspended on a water slide over a pool of water. The Penguin lures Batman and Robin to his lair, but they arrive just as the trunk splashes into the water. As The Penguin prepares to throw a switch that will electrify the pool, his gang members level their machine guns at our hapless heroes.

2 - 28 THE BIRD'S LAST JEST

Happily, The Dynamic Duo's quick thinking and fast reflexes foil The Penguin at this dastardly game, and the pair act as his prosecutors at the ensuing criminal trial. There, The Penguin's spirited, self-destructive defense backfires and he is released once more. Batman and Robin's next ploy is to send Alfred to The Penguin's Nest disguised as master forger Quill-Pen Quertch. However, The Penguin catches on and has the faithful butler rolled into a giant pie. The diabolical dish is driven to Wayne Manor, where The Penguin threatens to bake the butler unless Bruce Wayne forks over a cool million. 2 - 29 THE CAT'S MEOW

The Catwoman, planning to steal the voices of visiting British rock singers Chad & Jeremy, demonstrates her new Voice-Eraser by using it on a morning talk show host. She later uses her fiendish invention on Commissioner Gordon, but not before he tells her where the British rock duo will be staying in Gotham City, which turns out to be stately Wayne Manor. In order to gain access inside the manor, The Catwoman disguises herself as Miss Klutz, a teacher from Duncan's Dance Studio, and arranges to give Dick Greyson a free dance lesson. She quickly gasses everyone asleep and beats a hasty retreat after her allergies to a nearby dogwood plant causes her to sneeze off her disguise!

Later, Batman and Robin pay a visit to The Dance Studio. There they make quick work of Catwoman's cronies, Eenie, Meanie, Miney and Moe and attempt to apprehend The Feline-ous Femme Fatale, but she subdues them both a knockout drug and transfers them to a giant echo chamber, where a dripping faucet magnified 10,000,000 times, threatens to reduce their brains to mush!

She later appears on The Allen Stevens Show, where she announces her demands: $22,440,000 in order to ransom C&J's voices. The British Consul, naturally, refuses to pay the ransom, and so The Caped Crusader and The Boy Wonder must shadow The Catwoman to her new lair and recover the voices.

Tracing her to Mr. Oceanbrig's Hair Salon, Batman and Robin capture Eenie, Meanie, Miney and Moe, but lose Catwoman. Batman chases Catwoman to a deserted alley where she pounces on him and threatens to liquidate him with a sonic gun...which, fortunately for our hero, she can't bring herself to fire! 2 - 31 PUZZLES ARE COMING

Batman and Robin deduce that a backwards puzzle sent by the urbane Puzzler in a toy plane through Commissioner Gordon's window is a reference to Artemus Knab, a multibillionaire staying at the Gotham Arms hotel. Solving the puzzle, The Caped Crusader concludes The Puzzler is after Knab, and, with The Boy Wonder, rush by Batmobile to his penthouse apartment, where the billionaire rebuffs The Dynamic Duo, claiming to be working on a legit deal with The Puzzler for a puzzle baloon business. Returning to The Batcave with a sample puzzle baloon given by The Puzzler to Robin, The Dynamic Duo learn Puzzler and his gang (Blimpy, Glider, Ramjet, and Rocket O'Rourke, an aspiring movie actress) plan to strip Knab and his guests of all their jewels at the christening of The Retsoor, the multibillionaire's supersonic plane. Sadly, Batman and Robin arrive too late, as Puzzler and his men have already immobilized the guests with Puzzle Gas and stolen their jewels, and then they apply the gas to The Dynamic Duo and makes a break for it. Recovering from the Puzzler's gas, Batman and Robin find another puzzle baloon left in The Puzzler's wake. They follow the balloon clue to The Puzzler's hideout at The Balloon Factory, where, in an ensuing Batbrawl, they are overpowered by Blimpy, Glider and Ramjet and gassed asleep by 2 toy gliders. Robin deactivates the hot-air balloon's altimeter with a piece of chewing gum (dropped in the basket by one of Puzzler's men), a scant second just before it manages to reach 20,000 feet. Utilizing a heretofore unsuspected talent at birdcalling, The Boy Wonder then attracts an elusive and highflying (and rather hostile by nature!) giant red-eyed hermit nuthatch bird migrating south for the winter, infuriating him enough to peck a hole in the balloon, allowing it to descend safely to earth, well upstate of Gotham City but, luckily, next to an emergency public telephone booth. The Dynamic Duo return to The Puzzler's factory, where Puzzler deluges them in baloon long enough for himself and his cronies to scam. Puzzler continues his quest to seize Knab's supersonic plane, the Retsoor, sending his sexy moll Rocket to drug Knab's tea while Puzzler himself photographs the secret plans for the hi-tech jet. The Caped Crusader is alerted to The Puzzler's new target by way of a rooster sent to Gordon's office (Retsoor is rooster spelled backward!). Later, Catwoman (disguises), pretending to fall asleep on a mattress display in a store window is spirited away by one of Sandman's cronies and later turns up on a TV newscast, where she cleverly advertises the talents of a sleep expert names Dr. Somnambula (b.k.a. Sandman's scheme is a success, and he is summoned to Spaghetti's penthouse; there, while examining her eyes, he gasses her asleep. Working fast, he snaps photos of J. While Spaghetti proves to them that she wasn't in danger, Sandman escapes. Meanwhile, Robin has reached the middle of The Catwoman's maze, where he encounters Policewoman Mooney. As Pauline shows Sandman around her now abandoned noodle factory, Batman and Robin appear and engage Sandman, Snooze and Nap with a fierce fisticuffs, ending with Sandman plummeting into a noodle vat! Later, he and his henchmen swipe 700 hatboxes from BonBon's Boutique (after Mad Hatter gives its namesake proprietress a taste of his Super Mesmerizer in his top hat), and he and his moll, Polly, use the hatboxes to put his entire collection of heisted headgear into storage. Jervis then tells Polly that he has lost all fascination with stealing hats and announces he is altering his tactics to instead use hats for crimes! Alerted to the hatbox heist, Batman and Robin use The Batcomputer to predict The Mad Hatter's next criminal scheme, which is the robbery of Hattie Hatfield's ruby from The Headdress Ball at The Top Hat Room. Jervis Tetch, in cognito as The Three-Tailed Pasha Of Panchagorum, of course, removes the ruby just as The Dynamic Duo arrive and he quickly throws his gimmicked fez to the floor, which causes an explosion of fireworks. In the confusion, The Hatter manages to spritz The Batman's cowl with radioactive spray (turning it bright pink!) before he and his men make a break for it. The Caped Crusader, who strategically ingested an Antiradioactive Batpill beforehand, and The Boy Wonder rushes to Professor Overbeck at The Atomic Energy Laboratory, where Tetch, in disguise as Overbeck's assistant Otto Puffendorfer, snatches the pink cowl just as The Batman changes into a spare one. Meanwhile, back at his hideout Joker clues the recently arrived (rather, packaged and shipped!) Penguin into his nefarious astrological plan. He then gives a false clue to The Dynamic Duo to the effect that "Taurus The Bull is next on my show," and "You'll be singing a song of woe!" Batman and Robin deduce that Joker was telling them a lot of bull, believing that The Homicidal Harlequin's true objective involves kidnapping a famous brother-and-sister singing duo named The Twins (Gemini!), who sing a song of woe, and they rush to their aid. Unknown to our Duo, the singing duet have already been replaced by Joker's aides, and that Blackbird Of Prey, The Penguin, is waiting in the wings to ensnare The Crusaders. Batman frees one of his hands, takes a Batarang from his utility belt, and tosses it at the burning thermite. Breaking off a piece, Batman frees himself, pulls out a Batknife and cuts Robin loose, and they escape with seconds to spare before the great stone drops! Joker believes the duo are finished and snatches a statue of Justice (Libra The Scales!), worth a fortune in carrara marble, from outside Police HQ, just as Venus, incognito as a trenchcoat detective, plucks a jeweled scorpion (Scorpio!). The Dynamic Duo arrive at Police HQ in time to chase down The Joker, who beats a retreat in a stolen police car.

Unable to catch him, The Duo set a trap for Joker and his crew at the home of Basil Bowman (Sagittarius The Archer!). When The Criminal Clown arrives and finds Batman And Robin, he grabs Venus and, with a knife at her throat, makes his escape using her as his shield! Finally realizing Joker isn't to be trusted, Venus defects to The Dynamic Duo's side and leads him to a record shop and there they find Leo Crustash. Later, not only does Joker snatch 2 rare fish (Pisces!!) that were on exhibit at The Gotham City Park Fountain, but one of his men manages to snatch Venus as well, not long after The Dynamic Duo speed off in pursuit. Back at his GHQ, The Joker catches The Caped Crusader and The Boy Wonder in a huge net and are quickly taken to a water-filled tank, where, along with Venus, they are about to become the main course of a giant clam. The Joker departs to commit his next crime, while the clam tries to swallow Robin!!!!

2 - 39 THE PENGUIN DECLINES

Using every ounce of his superhuman Batstrength, Batman bursts free of his chains, rushes over to the clam and pries it open long enough to rescue Robin from the maw of the menacing mollusk! Freing Venus, the trio make their escape, while The Joker, needing more assistance with his remaining 2 Zodiac Crimes, has his flunkies Uranus and Mars smuggle The Penguin out of prison in a prison laundry truck (by way of Operation Laundry Bag!). Using a mixture of his own insidious creation, The Joker turns the entire Gotham City water supply (Aquarius The Water-Bearer!) into Jokerjelly (concentrated strawberry gelatin which resembles strawberry jelly, but tastes like strawberry axle grease!), and then demands $10 million to change it back! Meanwhile, The Penguin, claiming he has reformed, tries to woo Venus (who's staying at Bruce Wayne's midtown apartment) into asking Batman to let her visit The Batcave, so she can remove Penguin's criminal record from The Batcomputer for him. The Dynamic Duo fly out to the Jokerjelly-infested Gotham City Reservoir by Batcopter and restore the water supply with the trusty aid of a Special Exploding Batarang and The Portable Batlab. Returning to the city, Batman and Robin pay a visit to Venus, who, falling for Penguin's fib about going straight, she convinces Batman into taking her to The Batcave. Hoping to make Batman the goat (Capricorn!!!), Penguin, Joker, and henchmen Mercury, Mars, Saturn, Neptune and Uranus secretly stow away in The Batmobile's trunk. The Duo returns to The Batcave with Venus (having doused her with Batgas, naturally!), and there the crooks pop right out, ready for doing away with Batman and Robin, and converting The Batcave into the headquarters of Gotham City's criminals! But The Caped Crusader stops them by activating his newly designed Batspectrograph Criminal Analyzer, which recorded Joker and Penguin's bone structure, metabolism rate, molecular blood structure, retina patterns, and other invaluable scientific data (he knew of their hiding in the trunk all along, and so he brought them both to The Batcave in order to utilize The Analyzer which only works at close range and is too large to move). The Penguin tries to liquidate The Duo with his deadly Umbrella Gun, but The Batprobe Negative Ion Attractor, which Batman strategically installed in The Batmobile's trunk, depleted its power source during the time they were inside. After a fierce fight, the whole gang is captured and ready to be delivered to prison. Later at Wayne Manor, Dick Grayson cringes as he learns from Aunt Harriet that the main course for dinner is clam chowder, but his guardian Bruce assures him it's his chance to get even! 2 - 40 THAT DARN CATWOMAN

After giving a stirring speech at the graduation class of Aaron Burr High School, Robin is sidetracked by Pussycat (a former rock-'n'roll singer and new Catwoman cohort) and cat-scratched with the drug cataphrenic, which turns him into Catwoman's pawn. After roughing up Chief O'Hara, The ex-Boy Wonder departs as a new member of The Catwoman's covey! O'Hara quickly alerts Commissioner Gordon who alerts Batman...but meanwhile, with Robin's help, Catwoman steals $200,000 (which Bruce Wayne keeps on hand as house money) from Wayne Manor — her first step toward raising the million dollars she needs to purchase the plans to The Gotham City Mint. Aware that the police are hot on her trail, The Catwoman threatens to kill The Boy Wonder should the law try to intervene. Consequently, Batman must act on his own. Mayor Linseed is desperate. After Catwoman succeeds in perpetrating two more heists (robbing a local bank and the home of inventor Pat Pending), Batman divines that her next job will be at Prince Ibn Kereb of Gedalia's weighing-in ceremony, where the Prince equals his weight in greenbacks. Batman arrived to do battle with Catmen Spade, Marlowe and Templar, but he finds that he must now deal with the drugged Robin, whom Catwoman sics on "the blue dragon". Batman allows the boy to rough him up and crash a chair over him. When the Caped Crusader tails the gang to Catlair West, and finds Robin all tied up, he thinks he has played possum and rushes over to free him, but when he does, he finds that Robin has played possum...just not in the way that Batman believes, though, and he is caught in a Cattrap. Batman finds himself dangling mere feet above certain death, tied to a giant mousetrap that will spring shut just as soon as The Boy Wonder finishes sawing away at the rope.

2 - 41 SCAT DARN CATWOMAN

The Feline-ious Felon agrees to release The Batman from the trap only if he agrees to join her gang, and, having little alternative (he's not willing to allow a murder rap hanging over Robin's head), The Caped Crusader acquiesces, but he slips himself a Universal Batantidote before he is scratched with Cataphrenic, allowing him to keep his reason. Pretending to be under The Catwoman's spell, Batman accompanies the gang to The Old Criminals' Home to visit "Little Al," from whom Catwoman hopes to buy the plans to the GC Mint. Batman phones an anonymous tip to the police informing them where they can capture Robin and Pussycat. Knowing that The Boy Wonder is now safe, Batman sets a trap for Catwoman, who convinces him to take her back to The Batcave (but not before he gasses her to sleep with Batsleep gas!). While in The Batcave, Batman diverts a phone line instigated by the police trying to trace him to the cave, leading the cops right to the place of inventor Pet Pending, whom they arrest. After a tour of The Batcave, Batman gasses Catwoman asleep and leaves a note for Alfred Pennyworth ordering him to deliver The Batantidote to Robin at Police HQ. Returning to Gotham, Batman and Catwoman meet the rest of the gang at The Mint. Using a hidden entrance detailed in The Catwoman's plans, they enter the building with plans to loot the whole safe! They blast their way into the vault with a silent explosive, where they are confronted by Robin, now restored to his faithful crimefighting old self again thanks to The Batantidote. The Dynamic Duo make mincemeat of The Catmen, but, just as the police arrive to collect the crooks, Catwoman steals Batman's keys and escapes in The Batmobile. Commandeering O'Hara's squad car, The Dynamic Duo give chase through The New Guernsey Bridge, but realize the impossibility of gaining The Batmobile's top speed, so they use The Batmobile's remote control to stop the car at a waterfront building. The Catwoman takes chase by Batman and climbs to the roof to avoid capture, but she is overcome by vertigo! Here she proposes marriage to The Caped Crusader, which he rejects only when she suggests killing Robin to make their lives together purrfect. Pretending to surrender, The Catwoman reaches out for Batman's hand and deliberately slips, falls and disappears into the water below...but has she drowned?! 2 - 42 PENGUIN IS A GIRL'S BEST FRIEND

The Dynamic Duo foil a holdup of a nearby bank---unbeknownst to them it was actually a holdup scene being shot by Penguin for his new motion picture (his production company is, natch, Penguin Productions, Inc.), which they accidentally interrupted! Batman and Robin are forced into signing a contract to appear in the film! The Batman arranges for Aunt Harriet's Film Decency League to raid the scene in which The Queen Of Diamonds, Marsha, was supposed to take a milk bath in the nude. So Penguin tries to teach The Cowled Crimefighter a lesson by setting up a love scene between Batman and Marsha so that he can film 100 takes of the duet smooching--on purpose!

Whilst Marsha and her Aunt Hilda go off to Gotham's Central Park in search of old toads for one of Hilda's love potions, Penguin moves his movie company to The Museum Of Antiquities, where his cronies snatch an entire collection of priceless 15th-century chainmail armor. Penguin discover's Batman's on to his scheme, and he calls for a staged fight which is actually for real! He then places The Duo onto a giant catapult, where he straps cameras to their legs, intending to film them as they are prepared to be launched across Gotham City!

2 - 43 PENGUIN SETS A TREND

As the rope holding the catapult slowly burns through, Batman remembers that he still has The Batmobile's Remote Control device strapped to his wrist. He quickly computes the trajectory, then uses the remote control to signal The Batmobile to meet them at Mulberry and 7th Streets (30 yards south), where he and Robin will come crashing down. The Batmobile heads for her programmed destination, just as The Dynamic Duo are launched up, up into the air and away across Gotham City. As predicted, The Batmobile gets there before The Caped Crusader and The Boy Wonder, just in time to release a safety net from the trunk to catch them. The Duo return to Penguin's movie studio, where the pompous, waddling producer dresses them in 2 suits of armor and them immobilizes them with a huge electromagnet, leaving them suspended in midair while he keeps an appointment with Gen. MacGruder at The Hexagon. Back at the studio, The Batman somehow manages to loosen a fitting from his suit of armor and tosses it into an open light socket, overloading the circuit, shorting out the fuse, deactivating the magnet, and releasing him and Robin. With little time to spare, The Duo speed to The Hexagon still clad in the armor. Meanwhile, Penguin and his finks use the armor stolen from the antiquities museum (rendering them immune to the soldiers' bullets!) to break into the secret storeroom and pilfer some topsecret plans! Batman and Robin arrive too late at The Hexagon, but they still manage to pick up his trail and locate The Penguin's van, giving him chase. Due to the armor's massive weight, the van blows a fuse during a sharp turn, forcing Pengy and his crooked crew to abandon it, and The Blackbird Of Prey sends his henchmen back to their hideout while he leads The Caped Crimebusters into a trap. Penguin leads the armored heroes down an alley and trips them up by rolling several metal drums into their way. Penguin then pays the driver of an arriving scrap truck to cart everything -- including The Armored Duo! -- away to be tamped down inside a highpressure hydraulic scrap-metal crusher!!!!

2 - 44 PENGUIN'S DISASTEROUS END

While inside the crusher, Batman plucks The Batpumps from his utility belt and uses them to counter the crusher's external pressure with air pressure and stop it from turning him and Robin into paperweights. The Duo then use a torch to slice their way out of their scrap metal cocoon. Meanwhile, Marsha and Aunt Hilda find their old toads and create a batch of love potion to use on the guards at The Gotham City Sub-Treasury, and while The Queen Of Diamonds mesmerizes the guards with her Dance Of The Seven Veils, Penguin and his men move mysterious equipment inside the gold vault. The Caped Crusader has tracked Aunt Hilda's escaped lizards back to her underground hideout, where they find the missing chainmail armor and one of Penguin's thugs, who unwittingly alerts The Dynamic Duo as to The Penguin's present location. Having secured The Fink, The Duo speed for The Sub-Treasury, just as Penguin, Marsha, Hilda, and the rest of the gang lock themselves up inside the vault. For 3 long days, The Batman, Robin, Chief O'Hara and Commissioner Gordon wait outside, while the gang, inside the vault, aided by a tank of fresh air, remain until finally, they burst from within inside a solid gold tank (constructed from the swiped Hexagon plans and the gold in the vault!)! They piece the entire mystery together: Penguin used his sinister movie studio to steal the chainmail armor (Part 1), used the armor to steal the plans from The Hexagon (Part 2), and used the plans to build the tank (Part 3)! Chief O'Hara dives into his squad car and uses it to block the tank, but the tank runs right over it, crushing the vehicle flat! The Dynamic Duo, Gordon, and several boys in blue move the flattened car to discover O'Hara had dove into a manhole with his very life. Batman and Robin give chase in The Batmobile and use The Batzooka to disable the tank, forcing the villains to surrender. Bruce Wayne and Dick Grayson end with watching a 16mm home movie of Marsha and Batman kissing, at home with Alfred and Aunt Harriet. NEXT WEEK: John Astin as The Riddler battles Batman!

2 - 45 BATMAN'S ANNIVERSARY

On an urgent call from Commissioner Gordon, Bruce Wayne and Dick Grayson switch to Batman and Robin and rush to The Gotham Plaza Hotel; once there, they are surprised by a party being held in celebration of Batman and Robin's anniversary of their partnership with The Gotham City Police Department. During the presentation of a golden calf filled with $200,000 intended for charity, the party is interrupted by erupting clouds of green smoke and the sudden appearance of three emergency firemen who swipe the calf and escape through an open window. Before making his escape, one of the firemen reveals himself to be that crooked Count Of Conundrums himself, The Riddler, in disguise, who drops off one of his criminal clues, and then drops out to a safety net placed just outside! The Dynamic Duo attempt to give chase in The Batmobile, but lose the getaway truck in some Riddler-planned confusion. Following up on Riddler's clue, The Dynamic Duo analyze a crossword puzzle in The Gotham Herald newspaper. Believing they have solved the puzzle, and that it holds the key to The Riddler's next caper, they put through a call to Gordon by Batphone to alert him. However, Gordon informs them that the underground vault of The Gotham City Bank has been flooded (obviously engineered by Riddler and crew!). Realizing they have misread the clues, Batman and Robin track Riddler to the bank where he and his henchmen Across and Down (in frogman wetsuits) are attempting to steal the cash. Armed with Batrespirators, The Duo give battle; during the fight, Riddler yanks off Robin's respirator and tosses it asunder, causing Batman to rush to his aid and give Riddler and his minions the distraction they need to split. The trio of supercrooks reconvene at their hideout at the soon-to-be-opened Norman Jigsaw Puzzle Factory, where they meet up with their moll, Anna Gram (oh, brother!) and to dry out the stolen money, for The Prince Of Puzzlers wants to collect $3 million in order to bargain for a horrifying weapon from Professor Avery Evans Charm: a pen-sized Demolecularizer. Meanwhile, Batman and Robin remember their appointment with The Gotham City's Bakers Guild to pose for lifesize marshmallow figurines, which will top a giant cake. Unknown to them, The Riddler, Across and Down have replaced the guild members! They lift The Caped Crusader and The Boy Wonder by forklift to the top of the 3-story cake; then, with a click of a switch by Riddler, Batman and Robin find themselves stuck as the cake directly under our heroes is made of 15 feet of lethal quicksand cleverly disguised as strawberry icing! As The Dynamic Duo slowly sink to oblivion, The Riddler and his men depart to prepare his next criminal scheme.

2 - 46 A RIDDLING CONTROVERSY

As the lethal quicksand has almost claimed our heroes, Batman and Robin escape by reaching down ever so slowly, activate their experimental Heel-and-Toe Batrockets, and rocket themselves to safety. They investigate another cunning clue left by Riddler after his latest crime, and encounter Riddler, Across and Down at the penthouse of Anthony Aquila, an exiled South American dictator. They are unable to stop the thieving trio from cracking the dictator's safe because they must first rescue dictator himself from one of Riddler's fiendish puzzle-traps. Fearing for the man's life, The Duo allow the villains to escape with their ill-gotten gains. The Boy Wonder succeeds in solving the puzzle of the cage and releasing Aquila, only to find that the box supposedly containing the explosives was a fake ("If the tail fits, wear it!"). The Riddler finally amasses enough capital to purchase Professor Charm's invention, which he plans to demonstrate on a park statue. Disguised as a street cleaner, Riddler aims the Demolecularizer at the statue and makes it vanish right before the very eyes of The Dynamic Duo and the police! The Conundrum King then promises to Demolecularize Police HQ unless Gotham's criminal codes are rescinded. The Caped Crusader and The Boy Wonder fly The Batcopter over Gotham and seed the clouds above with di-chloride, thus neutralizing Riddler's device with a well-timed lightning bolt from a passing storm cloud. The Dynamic Duo then trace Riddler to his hideout by Batcycle at The Norman Jigsaw Puzzle Factory, where they round him and his cronies Anna Gram, Across and Down up, and send them on another long trek back to the pokey. Later, in Gordon's office @ Police HQ, a guilt-wracked Professor Charm returns the stolen cash.

2 - 47 THE JOKER'S LAST LAUGH

When a rash of counterfeit money is discovered emanating from Gotham City Bank, The Caped Crusader and The Boy Wonder are summoned to investigate. At Police HQ, they discover that The Joker has planted a tiny loudspeaker on Commissioner Gordon's cufflinks which was the source of a constant broadcast of hideous laughter that seemed to echo in Gordon's ears and had been driving him and Chief O'Hara up the wall. Believing The Harlequin Of Homicidal Humor is behind the phony tender at the bank, The Dynamic Duo rush to the scene. There at the bank, it is discovered that the bank's chief teller has been replaced by Mr. Glee, a Joker-controlled robot. The Batman and Robin disables the robot and takes him to The Batcave, and Joker and his moll, Josie Miller, is able to divine the Batcave's location with the robot's built-in homing device, and they give pursuit in The Jokemobile! However, Batman has anticipated this and uses a tracking signal Batdeflector to lead The Joker to a fake Batcave! Back in The Batcave, The Caped Crusader traces The Clown Prince Of Crime to his new hideout: at the offices of Penthouse Comic-Book Publishers. In order to prove Joker is printing illegal tender, Robin attempts a break-in, while Bruce Wayne pretends to be a broken man from embezzling some of the bank's money, and his only way out is to ingratiate himself with Joker. If The Joker would agree to print some of his funny money, Bruce would return the favor by making him Vice President of The Gotham National Bank. Joker quickly, and gleefully, agrees, but just as he is about to print the corrupt cash, The Boy Wonder appears and does battle with Boff and Yock, two of Joker's other robots. Bruce joins in briefly, but Robin is nevertheless quickly subdued and winds up strapped to a giant printing press Joker uses to manufacture comic books (even more treacherous irony!)! And, just to make sure that Bruce doesn't try to pull a fast one, he orders Boff and Yock to force him to throw the lever that activates the press and turn Robin into a human-sized comic book.

2 - 48 THE JOKER'S EPITAPH

Just as it looks like The Boy Wonder (already a famous comic-book hero!) is about to become a permanent part of next week's comic issue, the faithful Alfred, disguised as The Batman, Batclimbs to The Joker's hideout, enters the window, arrives just in time to gas the bad guys and release Robin. Joker, however, escapes with his minions and a document signed by Bruce that names The Joker bank vice president! The next time Batman and Robin pay a visit to the bank, they discover that Joker, employing the alias "W.C. Whiteface," has hired his moll and gang as bank employees. Unable to take legal action, The Duo return to Wayne Manor. There, as Bruce Wayne and Dick Grayson, they meet with Joker and Josie, who now proceeds to attempt to perpetrate an intricate blackmail scheme on Bruce with a secret tape recording of his demand for counterfeit cash! In exchange for the tape, Bruce must turn over the corpses of The Dynamic Duo. He refuses, and Joker then orders Bruce to marry Josie with an initial $3 million marriage settlement! Bruce can't figure out how to foil the scheme without revealing his secret identity, so he, with Dick, seeks an alternate way out. Back in The Batcave, Batman and Robin hatch a Batscheme to use The Joker's own robots against him. While The Boy Wonder rigs the robots, Bruce Wayne is summoned upstairs where he is apprehended. Believing Bruce was not in his right mind when he appointed Joker to the position of bank VP, Gordon calls in a specialist named Dr. Floyd, who arranges for Bruce to be declared legally insane and put away for his own good! Wayne is then apprehended by Chief O'Hara and The AntiLunatic Squad.

Alfred quickly heads to The Batcave to relay this info to Robin, and, after giving Boff, Yock and Mr. Glee their final instructions, Robin and Alfred speed off by Batmobile to rescue Bruce. Locating the van, they blast open its doors with The Batray and use the superpowered Batmagnet to attract the metal buckles of Bruce's straitjacket to yank him from the speeding van, and he rolls with the fall to escape harm. Bruce switches back to Batman with a spare Batsuit, and The Dynamic Duo race the remaining mile to the bank, arriving just in time to witness the robots in action. Mr. Glee identifies Josie as his long-lost wife, and The Caped Crusader accuses The Joker of aiding and abetting bigamy! Just then, Boff and Yock, the robot tellers, start holding up the customers as per Batman's instructions. Realizing something has gone awry, The Joker pulls out his robot control device and reprogram Boff and Yock to seize The Dynamic Duo. Batman and Robin, knowing that Joker has hoisted himself on his own petard, use the opportunity to pin an attempted murder charge on The Fiendish Funnyman once they have quickly dispatched the mechanical malefactors. Later, Dr. Floyd pronounces that Bruce's fall from the van has restored his sanity, and Bruce receives a clean bill of health.

Aided by 3 overage freshmen named Brown, Cornell, and Penn, she arranges for the lifesized statue of Batman to be stolen from the university rotunda. Alerted by Gordon to the theft of the statue, The Dynamic Duo arrive on the scene. While The Caped Crusader examines the only clue to the theft, a freshman beanie containing a single red hair, The Catwoman uses the stolen statue as the model for a Batman costume for Cornell, who so costumed is an exact double for The Caped Crusader. The next day, Batman gives a lecture in criminology to Catwoman's class, where he gives a complete description of the statue thief. Believing Batman is on to him, Penn (who lost the beanie) makes his escape as Catwoman secretly rings the class bell. Later, when The Batman and The Catwoman are sharing a soda (?!!) at The Sweet Shoppe, a local school hangout, Robin The Boy Wonder informs The Caped Crusader about the recent robbery of a supermarket by a crook wearing a Batman suit. Before he can investigate, Captain Courageous, a newly arrived police officer from California (who never even heard of Batman!), has him arrested. While Batman waits in jail, Catwoman incites a student riot. Alfred, disguised as Batman's lawyer, arrives at the Gotham jail with a Batmakeup case, and, after a quick switch, Batman leaves the jail disguised as Alfred. The two crimefighters leave even though they have a good chance of trouncing Gumm. Factory owner Pinky

Unfortunately, Pinky overhears Gumm's conversation, and she is bound and gagged in his office. While Black Widow and her henchmen Tarantula, Daddy Longlegs, and Trap Door count the stolen cash in her den, Batman and Robin, trying to figure out B.W.'s next move, deduce that she's proceeding alphabetically, and they set a trap for her at The Gotham General Bank. Eventually they trace the smell of gas fumes from Black Widow's motorcycle to a small farmhouse, where they are greeted by an elderly farm couple in rocking chairs (actually mechanized dummies). Unable to get information from the pair as to B.W.'s location, they speed back to The Batcave. There, they listen to the conversation with the farm couple on The Battape Reader and realize that their voices were amplified and that the couples were fakes! The Caped Crusader and The Boy Wonder speed back to the dummy farmhouse, where they penetrate The Widow's lair beneath and find themselves caught in a giant web. Black Widow then has her henchmen release two very deadly (and very real!) black widow spiders and leaves The Gotham Guardians to die.

2 - 56 CAUGHT IN THE SPIDER'S DEN

The Caped Crusader reaches the 5,000-volt mini-charge in his ever-reliable utility belt and, using the web as a conductor, electrocutes the spiders. The Dynamic Duo then proceed to The Black Widow's vault, where they find her and Tarantula, Daddy Longlegs and Trap Door counting the money from her latest robbery. Spotting them, B.W. reverses the polarity of her brain device and short circuits his Batbrain! Robin, fortunately, has lost one of his electrodes and is not susceptible to the device's effects--but is quickly tied up anyway. The Caped Crusader, now under Black Widow's spell, uses his Remote-Controlled Batcomputer Oscillator to locate a bank The Spidery Fiend can rob. The computer responds with an answer but also warns that Batman's life will be in danger if he accompanies her to the bank! Black Widow, unwilling to lose Batman, employs the help of a mind-control device, a rack of disguises and the male rubber dummy from the front porch, Black Widow attempts a heist of The Heritage Bank, in the guise of The Dynamic Duo! They succeed, and the guard is forced to shoot at them as they make a break for it. Meanwhile, Robin, of course, manages to release himself and uses Black Widow's mind-control device to break the spell of his partner and they extricate themselves from the sticky trap. They discover the spidery gang in another room of the hideout, counting their ill-gotten loot. Black Widow might return at any minute, so Batman re-ties Robin and goes back to playing solitaire. Once B.W. Has returned with her ill-gotten gains, The Duo pounce on Tarantula, Daddy Longlegs and Trap Door! Batman then turns Black Widow's own mind-control device back on its creator, rendering her helpless. Later, in Gotham State Pen, The Dynamic Duo use The Brain-Wave Batanalyzers to de-criminalize Black Widow and her minions.

2 - 57 POP GOES THE JOKER

That Harlequin Of Homicidal Humor, The Joker, appears at Park's Gallery, where he sprays pain all over the exhibit of the latest works of artist Oliver Muzzy. Alfred, who coincidentally happened to be present during the proceedings looking for a painting for Bruce Wayne, secretly alerts his employer by phone as to The Joker's antics. The Dynamic Duo speed to the gallery by Batmobile, only to be taken by surprise at Muzzy's delight by Joker's spray paint's pop art effects, and he offers him a partnership! Unable to apprehend The Joker, The Terrific Twosome depart for The Batcave to await his next move.

Days later, Joker enters and wins an art contest sponsored by Baby Jane Towser, a rich heiress to the paper clip fortune. He then announces that he has formed his own art school for millionaires only. Bruce Wayne decides to sign up in order to keep close watch on the cunning clown, who later kidnaps the entire class and holds them for ransom! Robin suspecting Bruce is in danger, races to the school, where he and Bruce take on Joker's men, fist-wise. But they are quickly defeated, and Bruce is tied to a chair and forced to watch Robin, who is tied to a giant mobile covered with rotating palette knives, which threaten

2 - 58 FLOP GOES THE JOKER

As the future seems bleak for our beloved Boy Wonder, Bruce blocks the mechanical works of the mobile with himself and his chair, long enough for Robin to work himself loose and use one of the flailing knives to deactivate the mechanism. Returning to see if the mobile has completed its diabolical duty, The Joker and his crooked cronies are jumped on by Bruce and The Boy Wonder. While they pin the henchmen to a wall with carefully thrown palette knives, Joker begs for Baby Jane's forgiveness; feeling sorry for him, B.J. arranges for his freedom. She then takes him back home with her, where, during a chicken dinner, Joker covers her antique table with paint and has his henchmen chop it up. He convinces the gullible B.J. that he has turned her table into a work of art, and she lets him replace the priceless Renaissance art collection in her father's wing at the museum with the table's painted remains.

After snatching the collection, The Joker puts through a call to Gordon and demands $10 million in order to ransom the paintings, or he will burn them! Unknown to Joker, The Batman replaced the stolen paintings with rather "childish" fingerpaintings by Alfred. Shocked by the sudden appearance of The Daring Duet, Joker retreats with Baby Jane, while his men take quite a Bat-beating. Planning to revenge himself against Bruce Wayne and hoping to swipe some loot, Joker arrives at Wayne Manor, where he loses a duel with Alfred and runs into Bruce's study; there he trips the switch to The Batpoles, hidden in a bust of William Shakespeare. Mistaking it for a secret passage, he slides down one of the poles---but not before a quick-thinking Alf activates The Emergency Batpole Elevator, sending The Clown Prince Of Crime crashing to the top of the shaft. After a couple of trips up and down the pole, Joker finally gives up. Later, Alfred opens an exhibit of his "childish" paintings, with proceeds donated to The Wayne Foundation Free Nursery.

2 - 59 ICE SPY

Mr. Freeze shows up in Gotham Harbor in a giant glacier-hideout. Using the ice magnets inside his iceberg hideout, he immobilizes the S.S. Gotham Queen and kidnaps the brilliant Icelandic scientist Professor Isaacson, in hopes of obtaining a formula for instant ice, which will help him freeze the entire harbor and, eventually, whatever he wants. The Dynamic Duo guess that The Frosty Felon had an accomplice on board the ship, and Batman feeds a list containing the passengers of the S.S. Gotham Queen to The Batcomputer. Moments later, it is discovered that ice-skating star Glacia Glaze was on board under her right name Emma Strunk, and, convinced that there is a connection between her and Mr. Freeze, The Caped Crusader plans to check her out that evening as Bruce N. Wayne, when he will escort Aunt Harriet Cooper to the ice show. Meanwhile, Mr. Freeze has defected to his hideout directly underneath The Bruce Wayne Ice Arena and uses his pet seal Isolde to deliver his ransom demands for Prof. Isaacson, which involves a TV broadcast by Bruce Wayne @ midnight. That night at the ice show, Bruce and Aunt Harriet pay a visit on Glacia in her dressing room...unwittingly interrupting her while she is attempting to keep in contact with Mr. Freeze through her compact which doubles as a 2-way radio communicator. Intrigued by her compact Harriet opens it and is surprised to hear the voice of Mr. Freeze! Glacia quickly covers up by calling it a music box, but Bruce Wayne/Batman is convinced well beyond the shadow of a doubt that Glacia Glaze---b.k.a. Emma Strunk---is definitely in league with The Frozen Fiend! Later that same night, Bruce Wayne does videorecord his TV message @ 11 P.M., so he, as Batman, can trap Mr. Freeze with Robin a good hour later when he tries to collect the ransom money. Meanwhile, Mr. Freeze has attempted to get Prof. Isaacson to spill the beans on his secret invention by putting him in a quick-freezer...without luck, however, for the Icelandic Isaacson is used to the intense cold weather, and it has little effect on him. A discouraged but undaunted Freeze then falls back on "Plan B," injecting Isaacson with carbon monoxide (dry ice!!!)! After returning him to the quick-freezer, Freeze is surprised of The Dynamic Duo's appearance during Bruce Wayne's prerecorded telecast. He is enraged on learning they have brought fake money, and he had his men Frosty and Chilblains toss them into his sinister Sub-Zero Temperature Vaporizing Cabinet, which when activated will instantly vaporize their bodies and make them a part of the ice-skating rink above!

When it seems that Batman & Robin are no more, bust still fears that he will be discovered, Freeze and crew returns to his iceberg. But The Dynamic Duo escape the terrible cabinet by an emergence exit, and, after waiting until The Frozen Fiend has departed, make their appearance via Isolde's sealhouse. Freeze, meanwhile, in his iceberg hideout (which is hidden among many other icebergs floating in the Gotham Harbor) has managed to syphen the formula from Professor Isaacson and builds the deadly Ice-Ray, intending to freeze all of Gotham City and the entire country! To prove his word, he ices down various parts of Gotham. At Batman's behest, Commissioner Gordon has a Small Echoing Seal Pulsator placed on Mr. Freeze's trained wonder-seal Isolde, and releases her into Gotham Harbor. Then, tracing the seal back to Mr. Freeze's hideout in The Batcopter, The Dynamic Duo rescue Prof. Isaacson. Freeze tries to render the heroes immobile with his Freeze Gun, but it proves to be no match for their Super-Thermalized Batskivvies! Following the ensuing Batfight, the Gotham authorities, also led straight to Freeze's glacier-hideout, arrive in time to round up the cold-hearted criminals before they can escape to sea in their Ice-Sub, and place them on ice, in jail. Later, Bruce, Dick, Aunt Harriet and Alfred relax by playing with racing cars. NEXT WEEK: a repeat of the very first Batman broadcast, a show which gave television a big breath of fresh air! 3 - 1 ENTER BATGIRL, EXIT PENGUIN

Batman and Robin, having returned to The Batcave from declawing The Catwoman once again, promptly ascend to Wayne Manor as Bruce Wayne and Richard Grayson, who come calling to take Chief O'Hara, Commissioner Gordon and his daughter, Barbara, to the opera. Unfortunately, Barbara, in an elevator, is kidnapped by The Penguin, with the aim of forcing her to marry him! The Penguin tells the astonished group by phone that they should read the society section of next day's newspaper. When they do, they discover the announcement of a forthcoming wedding, between Barbara and The Penguin (who hopes to gain immunity from the police as Commissioner Gordon's son-in-law!), and they desperately try to locate The Penguin's hideout. Penguin henchmen, in search of a minister to perform the ceremony, fall upon The Reverend Hazlitt and Alfred.

The quick-thinking butler pretends that he is The Reverend, and leaves with the thugs (but secretly alerts The Dynamic Duo via the Emergency Batcall on his belt). Bruce and Dick become The Dynamic Duo and, locating Penguin's hideout in a vacant apartment next door to Barbara's own (apparently the last place, Penguin believes, anyone would think to look!), race to the scene, while Alfred is locked up with Barbara. Believing Alf to be a man of The Cloth, she swears him to secrecy and then walks ever so precariously along the ledge to her apartment. She enters her bedroom, activates a secret panel and changes into the costume and accoutrements of Batgirl. Meanwhile, Batman and Robin burst into the apartment which they discover holds a befuddled Alfred Pennyworth and a wedding dress stuffed with pillows! Just as The Blackbird Of Prey and his Finks confront The Dynamic Duo, Batgirl arrives to help them overcome Penguin and his men. Batman and Robin are definitely taken aback by the arrival of this new crimefightress. Meanwhile, Alfred, who had been listening at the locked door, has guessed Batgirl's secret identity! As The Caped Crusader and The Boy Wonder try to rescue Alfred from the locked room, Batgirl returns to the apartment where (as Barbara) she had been held. However, The Penguin regains consciousness and gasses The Duo asleep with a dose of his insidious Penguingas! Then, after bagging them, along with Alfred and what he thinks is Barbara Gordon but is actually the wedding dress stuffed with pillows, he toses them off the terrace in his waiting truck, which drives them to Penguin's auxiliary hideout. Barbara Gordon spots Penguin making his escape in the truck, transforms once again into Batgirl, and pursues the truck to the hideout on her Batgirlcycle and arrives in time to get a chance to show her mettle when she saves The Caped Crusader and The Boy Wonder from being dunked in a vat of boiling water and being steamed alive! As The Dynamic Duo precipitates a melée with The Penguin and his henchmen, Batgirl confronts Alfred for deceiving her. Alf merely informs her that he didn't mean to lie, for he chose to take the minister's place to protect him. Apologizing and forgiving him, Batgirl makes him promise not to reveal her true identity; Alf agrees and she quickly changes into the wedding dress so Batman will not become suspicious of her identity. After bagging The Penguin and his Finks (literally!), Batman and Robin turn to thank Batgirl for her help, but she is nowhere to be found; she eventually returns as Barbara to thank Batman and Robin for protecting her. 3 - 2 RING AROUND THE RIDDLER

The Riddler attempts to take control of prize fighting in Gotham, kidnapping the current champ, Kid Gulliver, and brainwashing him into throwing his next fight. While Bruce, chairman of The Gotham City Boxing Commission, watches on TV, The Riddler robs receipts from The Gotham Square Garden boxoffice, and leaves behind a blinking metal box, which puts the cashier in a state of shock! Examining the box Batman finds it contains a Riddle about a long-buried temple in Southwestern Asia. Later, Riddler, dressed in a burnoose, appears on Betsy Boldface's TV show in the guise of Mushy Nebuchadnezzar, SW Asia's supposed boxing champion. Barbara suspects it's Riddler in disguise and, switching to Batgirl, follows Betsy to Riddler's hideout at a little-used gymnasium, where Loreli Circe, The Siren, tries to put her under her spell. She is unsuccessful, since her powerful high note (2 octaves above high "C") works on men only! The Riddler then resorts to having Batgirl tied up and thrown into the steamroom, but she escapes through an airvent.

Meanwhile, The Batman solves 2 more Riddles put through by Riddler over the phone--which is plugged into radio station GTZR--and accepts his challenge to a fight that night at The Garden. There at The Garden, Aunt Harriet, having returned from a trip, greets Commissioner Gordon and daughter Barbara in the audience. As the fight begins, The Caped Crusader has the advantage over The Prince Of Puzzlers, but this quickly changes when he is pelted with metal filings by The Riddler and is immobilized by a giant electromagnet hidden under the ring, activated by Betsey. While The Batman is pounded to a pulp by Riddler, Barbara, who bore witness in the audience, leaves to become Batgirl; she finds Betsey Boldface underneath the ring and shuts off the magnet, setting Batman free. The Riddler and his gang retreat hastily and dash back to their hideout, where they are immediately captured.

In Police HQ, Loreli Circe, The Siren, the world-famous chanteuse who can sing in 7 different octaves, gives Commissioner Gordon a dose of her hypnotic vocal prowess and puts him under her spell; she then orders him to stow away in The Batmobile's trunk, and, when it returns to The Batcave, to immediately report back to her with information as to The Batman's true identity. When the commissioner inadvertently skips out on a meeting at his daughter Barbara's apartment, The Caped Crusader and The Boy Wonder, thinking something is up, speed back to The Batcave, unwittingly taking Gordon, hiding in the trunk, with them! While faithful butler Alfred Pennyworth dusts The Batcave, Gordon steps out of The Batmobile's trunk, and recognizes him as Bruce Wayne's butler! From this vantage point he learns Batman and Robin's secrets and immediately rushes to a nearby phone to tell The Deadly Chanteuse herself. Although Gordon soon discovers the truth, he is sprayed with Batsleep by Alfred before he can reveal anything. Meanwhile, Batgirl is suspecting The Siren is behind the disappearance of her dad and traces her to her hideout, where she hears her hypnotizing Bruce Wayne by phone with one of her high notes (2 octaves above high C) and then has him meet her at his office at The Wayne Foundation building. The Caped Crusader immediately dashes by Batgirlcycle to Gordon's office to use The Batphone to call The Batman, but reaches The Boy Wonder. She informs him of Siren's nefarious plot and The Dynamite Detectives rendezvous at Bruce's office. Sadly, they arrive too late as Bruce Wayne has already signed over everything he owns to The Siren--including The Wayne Family Jewels! Batgirl and Robin confront Siren but she orders them out of her building. The two only pretend to leave — Robin uses the opportunity to leave behind a bug so that the villainess' activities can be monitored. The Caped Crusader and The Boy Wonder follow The Siren and her men, Allegro and Andante, to the roof, where she orders Bruce Wayne to jump off the building, and Batgirl and Robin are quick to respond! They are quickly spotted by Siren and she orders Bruce Wayne to help Allegro and Andante dispose of them, but, in the ensuing mêlée, Siren is accidentally knocked over the ledge, only to be saved by the Boy Wonder, who promises to save her only if she sings an "antidote note" that restores hypnotized Bruce Wayne to normal. Having little alternative, she revives Bruce with the note, despite losing her voice for good! (Chief O'Hara, who's been told to jump in a lake, is also released.) Later, at Wayne Manor, Batman revives a still sleeping Commissioner Gordon, who, to The Dynamic Duo's relief, has no recollection of what has previously transpired. The Penguin steals Lola Lasagne's fancy, priceless parasol during a photo session highlighting her and her prize-winning filly, Parasol, at the racetrack. Then, while trying to pilfer a priceless folio of famous Parasols, Penguin is quickly stopped by Barbara Gordon; he quickly drops the folio and scrams, but strategically turns on a time-bomb in his umbrella and leaves it in a nearby umbrella stand! Barbara quickly contacts her dad, who in turn contacts The Caped Crusader and The Boy Wonder, who rush over to The Gotham Library in the nick of time to dispatch the deadly umbrella bomb before it defonates! Later Lola herself visits Penguin's Book Shop under the pseudonym of fortune hunter Lulu Schulz, who was divorced by her wealthy husband who completely cleaned her out, leaving her with nothing but the racehorse Parasol; she discovered that the supposedly valuable umbrella Pengy swiped is only a fake. Penguin sets his monocle on Lola's real prize possession: her horse Parasol, who is favored to win the Bruce Wayne Handicap. Although the winnings are supposed to be donated to The Wayne Foundation for charity, Penguin has a dastardly plan to fix the race so that they both come out victorious, and Lola joins in gladly. At Glu Gluten's Glue Factory, Penguin and Lola try to purchase a run-down nag that He gasses everyone with his umbrella and escapes. Knowing Penguin is short of funds, The Batman places a 'wanted to buy' ad in the collector's newspaper for a valuable book on parasols. The Penguin spots the ad and contacts the advertiser, Mr. A.L. Fredd (who actually is Alfred the butler in disguise, of course) and offers to sell him the folio for the needed amount of betting cash. The Felonious Fowl is angered to no end upon discovering The Caped Crusader has returned the stolen folio, and, blaming Barbara Gordon, he sends her a deadly gas-filled toy penguin! Penguin goes to the track to place his bet and scratches of all the horses in the race with the exception of Parasol and a newcomer Bumbershoot--literally!--with some well-placed itching powder. Bruce learns of this scheme and guesses the true nature of Penguin's plan to ride Bumbershoot in the race, and immediately enters his own horse, Waynebeau, in the handicap, knowing it's a shoo-in to win. She then locks herself in her bedroom, changes into that Caped Crusader, Batgirl, and chases off Arbutus. Alfred Pennyworth arrives to inform her that The Batmobile has been located near Louie's greenhouse and give her the address, and she mounts her Batgirlcycle and speeds there in a flash! After stealing the Queen's collection of snuffboxes from a Londinium museum, Lord Marmaduke Ffogg and his sister, Lady Penelope Peasoup, escape in a thick fog. Ireland Yard calls in Batman & Robin to solve the mystery, and Barbara Gordon is eager to accompany them. The Caped Crusader is interesting in comparing Lord Ffogg's aftergrass with that of Wayne Manor. While at the Ffogg Estate, Robin learns from Ffogg's daughter, Lady Prudence that her father and her aunt, Lady Peasoup, operate a school for lady crooks under the guise of a girl's finishing school! The unimpressed Ffogg vows to steal the Crown Jewels from the Tower of Londinium. Batman and Robin manage to bring The Batmobile and Batcomputer to Londinium (and preserve their secret identities all at the same time) by packing them into crates and passing them off as Dick Grayson's desk and books, and then reassemble them in a Batcave-like space beneath a rented manor. During The Dynamic Duo's visit at the estate with Ireland Yard Superintendent Watson, Barbara Gordon slips off to contact Alfred and have him meet her at the road leading to the estate, where she changes into her Batgirl outfit brought by the butler. Later, upon leaving the Ffogg estate, The Dynamic Duo are set upon by Ffogg's servants Scudder, Basil, and Digby (disguised as highwaymen) but are aided by Batgirl, who arrives in time to help rout the roughians, and then leaves as suddenly as she arrived! Batman and Robin return to the Londinium Batcave and are ambushed with a noxious fog bomb planted by Ffogg's servants!

3 - 12 THE FOGGIEST NOTION

Batman quickly dispenses with the fog bomb with a General Emergency Batextinguisher, then returns with Robin to venerable Ireland Yard to warn Commissioner Gordon and Superintendent Watson of their suspicions of The Lord and his Lady. While there, they are sent a clue that leads them to a pub on the docks called The Three Bells. Barbara Gordon, in the meantime, plans to join Ffogg's teaching staff. Down at the docks, The Dynamic Duo find a ship containing priceless mod materials and patterns from Barnaby Street. In the pub, Batman is captured inside by Ffogg and his henchmen while the underage Robin, barred from the pub (overrun by hippies and mod people!) and left outside in The Batmobile to guard the ship, is swept away by Lady Peasoup and her henchwomen after severing the ship's mooring line and setting it free. Back on the road outside Ffogg Estate, The Caped Crusader, Batgirl, rendezvous with Alfred and, voicing her suspicions about Ffogg and Peasoup, proceeds to investigate The Cricket Pavilion, and, having a little more luck, discovers stolen loot stored by Ffogg's. However, she is detected by Lady Prudence, who immediately immobilizes her in a cloud of paralyzing gas. Convinced his sister has secured the ship, Lord Ffogg has The Boy Wonder moved to the winch room at The Tower Bridge, where he is tied to the winch that opens and closes the bridge. Batman uses The Batcomputer to locate robin just as the winch starts to raise the bridge and, using his Antimechanical Batray, manages to stop the bridge and rescue Robin from death in the Tower of Londinium. Together, they battle Lord Ffogg, Scudder, Basil and Digby — but Ffogg escapes by creating yet another cloud of man-made mist with his pipe

3 - 13 THE BLOODY TOWER

Escaping Ffogg's fog in the winch room, The Dynamic Duo, accompanied by Alfred, race to the Ffogg estate to save Batgirl, who is still chained up in the dungeon and about to be finished off by Ffogg and Peasoup with some lethal fog pellets. Robin arrives at the estate but is spotted and lured by Lady Prudence to Lord Ffogg's hive of African Death Bees. Meanwhile, Ffogg and Peasoup discover that the lethal fog pellets have gone stale and they rush off to find some more, allowing Batman time to sneak into the dungeon...but is surprised by the returning Lord, who shoves him downstairs, followed by fresh fog pellets. While both Batman and Batgirl are left to perish in the dungeon threatened by lethal gas pellets, Robin is stung by the deadly queen African bee and left to die in the girls' dormitory.

Lord Ffogg, Lady Peasoup and the gang plan to forge ahead with the theft of The Crown Jewels and leave for The Tower Of Londinium. Fortunately, with the help of Alfred and the unexpected arrival of Aunt Harriet in Londinium, the tables finally turn: Robin, with the use of an African Death Bee Antidote Pill, is saved from bee-death and rushes outside to The Batmobile to greet Alf; meanwhile, in the dungeon, Batman disperses the poisonous fog with Anti-Lethal-Fog Batspray, saves Batgirl, and uses her rope to perform an Indian rope trick to escape through an overhead grating. En masse, The Dynamic Trio arrive in time to foil Ffogg's plans to swipe the jewels. Following the ensuing Batfight, Ffogg, fearing apprehension, tries to escape using his fog pipe, but The Caped Crusader thwarts this attempt with his Pipe Of Fog Batreverser and he and Superintendent Watson take the entire group into custody. Later, back at Gotham City Police HQ, The Dynamic Duo leave Gordon's office and sees The Catwoman immediately dive into an elevator

3 - 14 CATWOMAN'S DRESSED TO KILL

An envious Catwoman disrupts a luncheon honoring the 10 best-dressed women in Gotham City and sets off a hair-raising irreparably ruining the of all the ladies there. Later, Catwoman invades a magazine fashion show and attempts to swipe all of the one-of-a-kind dresses. While her henchmen, Angora and Manx, subdue Batman and Robin with some bolts of cloth, Catwoman bolts into the models' dressing room, knowing full well that the naturally gentlemanly Dynamic Duo wouldn't dare enter a ladies' dressing room with their eyes closed! Batgirl arrives to free The Duo from the cloth, and, with her eyes wide open, enters the dressing room alone and is overpowered by Catwoman, and spirits her off to her Catlair in an abandoned loft in The Garment District on 32 Pussyfoot Road before The Dynamic Duo realize what's happened!

The Catwoman later contacts The Batman and informs her of her Catlair's location, where she has tied Batgirl down to a conveyor belt leading to a giant pattern-cutting machine, which in a matter of minutes will cut her into a purr-fect pinafore! Believing Catwoman plans the pilfering of The Golden Fleece, a solid-gold dress belonging to the visiting Queen Bess Of Belgravia, from The Belgravian Embassy, The Caped Crusader finds himself in somewhat of a dilemma. As The Catlair and The Embassy are miles apart, he is torn between rescuing Batgirl and preventing an international incident by stopping Catwoman's theft of The Fleece! A quick-thinking Batman phones Alfred Pennyworth and sends him to rescue The Dynamic Daredoll; Alf disguises himself as the world's oldest-living hippie in order to prevent Batgirl from recognizing him and tip her off as to the connection between Batman and Bruce Wayne. Batgirl then rushes by Batgirlcycle to The Embassy to join her partners in crime-fighting. Meanwhile Batman and Robin are already there to confront Catwoman, who is convinced that they have sacrificed Batgirl in her time of need order to arrest her; she soon learns differently when Batgirl arrives to join The Caped Crusader and The Boy Wonder in apprehending Catwoman, Angora and Manx! Can 2 fiendish archcriminals share a nefarious plot to terrorize Gotham City without driving each other crazy?? Olga, Queen of The Bessarovian Cossacks, again teams with Egghead to raid The Gotham City Museum and steal The Sword Of Bulbul and The Egg Of Ogg. Commissioner Gordon immediately summons Batman and Robin to investigate. While The Caped Crusader and The Boy Wonder chat with Gordon, Egghead and Olga plan the theft of 500 pounds of condensed caviar given to the people of Gotham City by The Czar Of Samarkand (at $200 per ounce), and currently stored at The Gotham City Bank.

The Batman predicts the supercriminals' next move and races by Batmobile to the bank. While Queen Olga and her Cossacks swipe the caviar on horseback, Egghead, newly arrived on his burro, is captured by the bank guard. Batgirl quickly arrives on her Batgirlcycle and manages to convince Egghead to turn stool pigeon and lead her to Olga's hideout. Moments after Batgirl and Egghead ride off, The Dynamic Duo arrive at the bank and follow Batgirl's trail. Arriving at the hideout, in an icehouse, The Caped Crusader finds that Egghead has lured her into a trap! She is quickly captured, bound by both hands behind her back, and forced to do a saber Batdance while Olga's Cossacks prod her with ices scimitars! The Duo arrive at the hideout, spots The Batgirlcycle, and leaps into the deperate fray to battle The Cossacks until Egghead manages to toss Batgirl into a vat of caviar to drown.

While the duo rush to her aid and manage to prevent her from becoming a permanent hors d'ouerve, Egghead, Queen Olga and her Cossacks take full advantage of the distraction to make their escape, only to fall immediately into the hands of the law. 3 - 16 THE FUNNY FELINE FELONIES

Upon his release from Gotham City Prison, The Joker is immediately picked up by The Catwoman in her KittyCar. They soon arrive at a sleazy hotel across the street from Police HQ, where The Catwoman shows The Joker an old parchment that will direct them to a hidden cache of gunpowder they will use to blast a hole in The Federal Depository and clean the place out! Before leaving, they alert The Batman by shooting at him from an open window. The Caped Crusader traces the gunfire to the hotel room and finds The Joker's prison garb and a corner from the parchment. Moments later, Batgirl arrives and makes off with the fragmented parchment; returning to the library as Barbara Gordon, she finds the parchment was purr-loined from the very same library out of which she works. She locates a microfilm copy and discovers that it contained an ancient riddle, which when mixed with certain clues will lead to the hidden gunpowder! Barbara solves the riddle and goes to her father's office at Police HQ to call Batman (via The Batphone!!!) and arrange to rendezvous with The Dynamic Duo at the home of Little Louie Groovy, who owns the parchment's first clue: a nightshirt.

The Batman and Robin arrive just as The Catwoman and The Joker arrive to steal the nightshirt. Joker tricks The Duo into shaking hands and buzzes them with his deadly Joker buzzer, and he and Catwoman leaves with the shirt. Batgirl appears moments later to revive batman and robin, and informs them that the shirt was only half the clue to the gunpowder's location, and The Dynamic Trio speed for the home of mod clothier Karnaby Katz, who owns the clue's second half in the form of a crib. However, The Trio arrive too late - or so it seems! Just outside the bushes Joker, Catwoman and their men wait in ambush for them!

3 - 17 THE JOKE'S ON CATWOMAN

As The Dynamic Duo depart in their Batmobile, Batgirl tries to rev up her Batgirlcycle, but it refuses to start. Joker and Catwoman leap from the bushes, and reveal to her that they swiped the spark plug from her beloved bike, preventing it from working. They then capture Batgirl and tie her up on the front lawn with deadly Cat Whiskers (Holy Bondage!), which when exposed to body heat will contract and strangle her to death! After Joker and Catwoman leave, Batgirl uses her nose to activate the lawn sprinkler, causing The Cat Whiskers to expand and spare her life. She then hurries to Gordon's office and arranges to meet Batman and Robin at The Grimalkin Novelty Company. Arriving at the archcriminals' hideaway, The Dynamic Trio overhear the villains' entire plan.

The fiends depart for Phoney Island to find the secluded gunpowder, unaware of The Trio are dogging their every move! Later, at Phoney island, the villains find the gunpowder is hidden somewhere inside the lighthouse. While searching the house, The Trio ambush and try to apprehend the crooks, when The Joker, trying to make a break for it, trips a switch, accidentally revealing the gunpowder! Without thinking the Joker lights a match so he can examine the gunpowder more closely, and as Batman wrestles the match away from him, it is unwittingly tossed into the gunpowder and sets it off! Batman quickly protects everyone with Antiblast Batpowder, and as The Trio prepares to deliver the criminals to the pokey, The Catwoman demands legal aid: Lucky Pierre, who has never lost a case (Holy Perry Mason!).

Later, in court, Pierre refuses to crossexamine any of Batman's witnesses, despite the latter acting as prosecutor. Unknown to The Caped Crusader, the entire jury has secretly been replaced with Catwoman's former henchmen, who issue a dishonest not-guilty verdict! (Holy Fixed Jury!) Unfortunately, the jury foreman loses his disguise at the end of the trial, and, after Batman recognizes him, pulls a machine gun! Batman quickly disarms the gunsel, The Joker and his men rise to battle, and the crooks are rounded up. Lucky Pierre finally loses his first case, and he angrily discards all of his lucky charms and storms out. Later, Louie The Lilac surprises Barbara Gordon @ The Gotham Library...

While at Bruce Wayne's beachhouse, Sassafras and Saffron, two of Louie The Lilac's gang members, kidnap Bruce and Dick Grayson after some ambergris (the section of a whale used to make perfume) is discovered on the beach by Dick. Barbara Gordon was present at the beachhouse during the proceedings, and she phones Commissioner Gordon who in turn attempts to contact The Dynamic Duo, who, as they were kidnap victims, aren't at home! Meanwhile, Bruce and Dick have been transferred, along with some ambergris, to Louie's hideout at The Defunct Fragrance Factory on Lavender Lane, where they are tied to some machinery and the ambergris is turned over to Lois, Louie's perfume expert (and moll!).

Lotus tells The Lilac that she's going to need scent pouches from several animals; Louie sends Saffron and Sassafras after some, and plans for Bruce (an animal expert in his own right) to remove the scent pouches once those animals are secured. Back in The Batcave, Alfred Pennyworth uses The Batcomputer to locate his masters. He alerts Barbara Gordon who, after dispatching a too-nosy janitor, heads for the factory as that Caped Crusadess, Batgirl. The ever-reliable Wayne butler also sends The Batmobile by remote control to the factory, in hopes it may be of some use to the captured Duo. Batgirl and several of Gotham's Finest arrive at the factory at the same time, and while The Commissioner uses a bull horn to contact Louie, Batgirl sneaks into the factory...only to be immediately captured and dumped into a vat which Louie orders filled with hot oil used to extract the scent from the blossoms! Continually refusing to operate on the animals, Bruce finds himself forced to do so in order to spare Batgirl's life.

Louie agrees and provides Bruce and Dick 2 glasses of warm water they request for this procedure, then locks the pair in the basement with the animals...but, of course, reneges on his promise and decides to 86 The Caped Crusadess anyway! While in the basement, Bruce introduces his latest Batinvention: The Instant Unfolding Batcostumes With Utility Belts; just add warm water, and they exxpand to full size! Minutes after, Brucer and Dick switch garb, and, as The Caped Crusader and The Boy Wonder, escape from the basement and rendezvous with the police, who aid them in breaking down the entrance in time to rescue a now out-of-vat Batgirl from Louie, and The Dynamic Trio rout the whole gang! Nora Clavicle is ostensibly a womens' rights spokesperson, but she is secretly a crime queen. Exercising her influence over Mayor Linseed's wife (and, consequently, Mayor Linseed) she has Commissioner Gordon, Chief O'Hara, and Batman and Robin all fired and replaced with women. She then has her henchgirls set a trap for the Caped Crusaders: when the newly-appointed policewomen prove too concerned with their makeup to stop Nora's gang from robbing the bank, Batman and Robin decide to try their hand at catching the thieves. With Batgirl assisting, they trace the gang to a knitting company's warehouse, where the heroes are captured and tied into a gruesome human Siamese knot. As the three crimefighters struggle to avoid strangulation, Nora unleashes mechanical mice that will explode at sunset, so that she might collect on an insurance policy she has taken out on Gotham. Batman, of course, figures a way out of the Siamese knot. He then procures three flutes, with which, liked Masked Pied Pipers, the trio lead the mechanical mice safely out into the water of Gotham Harbor. This trick works, Batman cagily explains, because of a peculiar sound-actuated mechanism in the mice. 3 - 20 PENGUIN'S CLEAN SWEEP

The Blackbird Of Prey, The Penguin, his assistants, Dustbag and Pushbroom, and his moll Miss Clean visit The U.S. Mint to conduct their own guided tour of the building. Later, The Dynamic Duo are alerted by the bird and his minions at The Mint, and dash to Police HQ, where they immediately spot Penguin right outside and apprehend him. Upon learning the tricky bird stole absolutely nothing from The Mint, they release him...and decide to see what he's up to. Joined by Batgirl, Batman and Robin head for The Mint and discover that Penguin has infected the tender with the dreaded Lygerian Sleeping Sickness (a disease which puts its victim to sleep for years!) and a supply of the contaminated cash has already been shipped to The Gotham National Bank! While Batgirl speeds to the bank by Batgirlcyle as a ruse, Batman and Robin take The Batmobile to Gotham General Hospital to heck on the supply of Vaccine B-6, the only known antidote to the sleeping sickness. Unfortunately, they arrive in time to discover that Penguin has given himself and Dustbag and Pushbroom a dose of the vaccine, then pours it down the drain, releases 3 Lygerian Fruit Flies, and leaves The Caped Crusader and The Boy Wonder to be bitten alive by the infectuous insects! Batman uses his All-Purpose Batswatter to put 2 of the flies out of their misery; then, he spots the 3rd fly on Robin's nose and uses his Battweezers to remove it and take back with them to The Batcave to analyze. Before they do, they head back to Gotham Bank to relay the news with Batgirl. At the bank, they find that $13,000 of the tainted tender have already been distributed to unknowing Gothamites! Not knowing exactly which bills are infected, The Caped Crusader leaves nothing to chance and immediately puts through a warning broadcast by radio to the public urging them to get rid of the corrupted cash. As the people dump the money into the street Penguin and his gang promptly vaccuums up Gotham's cash-laden boulevards with giant vaccum cleaners.

While The Penguin sorts his newfound wealth, millionaire Bruce Wayne contacts all of the worlds financiers, warning them not to take any of the money now circulating in Gotham City. Realizing he cannot do anything with his infectuous ill-gotten gains, The Penguin threatens to release 500 fruitflies in the city unless Bruce instructs the financiers to accept his money.

After consulting with amateur weatherman Alfred Pennyworth, who, with an array of Bat Weather Instruments, informs them that the current weather will be cold and clear, Bruce defies his threat. An incenced Penguin quickly makes good on his ultimatum by releasing the flies, and, believing they did their job, he and his gang set out to rob Gotham's jewelry stores! Finding The Dynamic Trio, Gordon, and O'Hara asleep in the street reassures The Fiendish Fowl that his insidious scheme has come to pass. But as Penguin overplays his hand by trying to remove Chief O'Hara's gold watch, they all jump up and knock the villains cold; Penguin is deposited in the nearest garbage can. The Caped Crusader informs The Billious Bird that the flies were too used to tropical heat and were instantly overwhelmed by the cold weather which crushed them to death. Robin adds that Penguin tricked himself by giving himself that double dose of sleeping sickness vaccine; so large one that he'll probably contract Lygerian Sleeping Sickness himself...and The Penguin falls fast asleep! Menwhile, The Dynamic Duo solves the Batgirl divines the meaning, however, and she notifies Batman via the red Batphone in Gordon's office, and arranges to rendezvous with The Dynamic Duo at a downtown street. Shame and his posse arrive at The Gotham City Opera House (the "stage"!), where they snatch a diamond pendant (the "rock"!) and a $20,000 bankroll (the "roll"!) from singers Leonora Sotto Voce and Fortissimo Fra Diavlo. Scripter Stanley Ralph Ross wanted to call Cassandra's weapon a Ronald ray-gun. "This was the only time they really censored me," recalled Ross. BatBits: Lupino and Duff both appeared in a situation comedy, MR. ADAMS AND EVE, from 1957-1958. Not only did they portray married movie stars, but they actually were married. At this time, Duff was starring as Det. Sgt. Sam Stone on FELONY SQUAD, also for ABC. Although she does not recall him being filmed, Yvonne Craig usually brought her dog, Sebastian, Minerva's Mineral Spa caters to millionaires, Bruce Wayne among them. Minerva's Deepest Secret Extractor obtains the combination to the Wayne Foundation vault. Minerva (Zsa Zsa Gabor) pops the Dynamic Duo into a giant pressure cooker. This final parody includes one-liners (Minerva: "I feel like a new man."), too-bad-to-be-true-props, inside jokes (appearances by producers William Dozier and Howie Horwitz) and dumb humor (Batman and Robin getting a massage while in costume?). Not great material, but still a fun show. When the series was cancelled in January 1968, executive producer William Dozier remarked, "Well, we had a good three-year run. That's not bad for what was essentially a novelty show. You've got to be realistic about such series. They can't last too long. In fact, I was surprised that it went a third season." Although the show still led its time slot in the ratings, Dozier noted, adults had wearied of it, and the audience had become kids who were just as happy watching the old shows; they don't care if it's a repeat. So why go on spending $487,000 for new ones? Dozier and producer Howie Horwitz appear as themselves at the beginning of this episode. We learn that Dozier keeps his securities in a grandfather clock while "millionaire producer" Horwitz keeps his cash in a TV set. BatBits: "You have to take it seriously," said Adam West in 1966 about his work on the series. "I want to do it well enough that Batman buffs will watch reruns in a few years and say, 'Watch the bit he does here; isn't that great?'" West's speculations about the future came true since the show has aired almost continuously since entering syndication. "I've never had more fun doing any role than Batman," West said later, "It was a fortuitous, lucky marriage of a lot of talents, and, as a result, it became a classic. It's going to be playing forever."

BATMAN AND ROBIN

This time they're confronted with the Wizard, a criminal genius on the loose in Gotham City with a remote control ray gun.

For this inferior sequel to BATMAN (1943), Lowery took over the role of the playboy millionaire/Caped Crusader first essayed by Lewis Wilson and Duncan replaced Douglas Croft as Robin, the Boy Wonder. The slim budget, short shooting schedule and the obvious lack of concern by all make for a tiresome serial. '

BATTLE HAWK

AKA: BATTORU HOUKU

The Global Terrorist Syndicate "Kyoki No Tou" (Commandments of The Demon) begins to layout its plans for global terror. As part of their plans they assassinate the Martial Arts Master Tate Tetsushu, who had opposed them in the past. Before Tate Tetsushu dies, he informs his grandchildren Shogo, Daijiro and Yurika of their secret powers.

Using the golden Tomahawks that Tate Tetsushu gave them years before, the three siblings call forth the American Indian Spirit "God Hawk" and become the heroes of legend, Battle Hawk, Big Hawk and Queen Hawk.

Using their newfound powers and weaponry they wage war against the maniacs and killers of Kyoki No Tou.

Characters

Battle Hawk

Years ago Martial Arts Master Tate Tetsushu visited the American Mid West and meet up with the American Indian mystic Shasta. Shasta had given Tate Tetsushu three golden Mini-Tomahawks which he proclaimed contained extraordinary powers. These powers can only be unlocked by noble and righteous individuals in times of great need.

Tate Tetsushu returned to Japan and gave these three Mini-Tomahawks to his three grandchildren Shogo, Daijiro and Yurika.

When Tate Tetsushu was mortally wounded by agents of the evil syndicate Kyoki No Tou, the three Tate Siblings called forth the powers of the golden Tomahawks. Throwing the Tomahawks in the air, they summoned the American Indian Spirit God Hawk who in turn bestows upon the three, the superhuman powers of the heroes of legend Battle Hawk, Big Hawk and Queen Hawk.

Battle Hawk

Tate Shogo is the eldest brother and leader of the team. He is the Battle Hawk the Indian Spirit Warrior of Legend.

He wields two battleaxes, which he can use to slice and slash his opponents. His main special attack is the Senpa Senpu Kiri (Whirlwind Battle Blade Slash).

Big Hawk

Tate Daijiro is the second brother and strong arm of the team. He is big, burly and tough. He becomes the Big Hawk. He wields a massive Battle Ax (measuring almost as tall as a man). Using this Battle Ax he can smash, crush and pummel his opponents. While generally an easygoing, gentle giant; when in the heat of combat he can be quite a mad bull.

Queen Hawk

Tate Yurika is the youngest of the siblings and the only girl. She is a bit of a tomboy (she rides around in a motorcycle) but she is also quite a charmer. She is the Hawk Queen. She wields two small tomahawks connected by a length of chain. Like nunchakus she can swing these tomahawks around to bash and cut her opponents or use the chain to entangle and ensnare them.

Kyoki No Tou

The Kyoki No Tou (Commandments of The Demon) are a syndicate of assassins, altered humans and maniacs assembled to terrorize humanity. The main forces of the Kyoki No Tou are the monstrous Terroru Tou Jin (Terror Fighters) who are altered humans who have been fitted with an assortment of deadly weapons. Other agents are more or less human fighters who specialize in an assortment of deadly martial arts or possess specialized fighting skills. The main foot soldiers of Kyoki No Tou are its Koki Hei (Devil Soldiers) who specialized in acrobatic attacks and jumps.

They were led by the warlord known as Koki Taijin. Koki Taijin was a master swordsman and strategist. His left hand was replaced with a solid iron claw. He was the one who orchestrated the assassination of Tate Tetsushu.

Later Koki Taijin was supplanted as leader by the warrior mystic and warlock Byaku Doushi.

The Ogon Daitei is the ominous disembodied voice and figurehead of the Kyoki No Tou.

Additional Information

Trivia Prolific manga artist Nagai Go has created some of the most memorable manga characters in Japanese comics (Mazinger Z, Devil Man, Great Mazinger, UFO Grand Dizer, Cutey Honey to name only a few).

Nagai Go was an apprentice to famous Tokusatsu Creator Ishinomori Shoutaro.

Battle Hawk was Nagai Go's first entry into the world of Live Action Tokusatsu TV. Nagai would later go on to produce another Tokusatsu show Pro Wrestler Hoshi Aztecaizer (Pro Wrestler Star Aztecaizer Tsuburaya, 1976).

Before Battle Hawk Tokimoto Kazuya played the lead in the romantic TV comedy Love Love Rival (TBS, 1973).

Since then Tokimoto has appeared in numerous guest spots on such shows as Tokusou Saizensen (Special Investigation Unit Toei), Dai Dokai (Big City Nippon TV, 1977), Sukeban Deka III (Toei, 1986), Doyo Wide Gekijou (Saturday Wide Drama 1988), The Hangman 6 (1987),

He has starred in only a couple of movies: Boso No Kisetsu (The Wild Season Toei, 1976) and Ijin Tachin To No Natsu (The Summer with Foreigners Shochiku, 1988).

Horie Shinsuke's only other credit is as the villain Blue in episode #20 of the Tokusatsu Series Denjin Zaborger (P-Pro-1974).

Before Battle Hawk Fukuda Mimi portrayed perky Tamura Mimi, one of the many sexy investigators in the outrageous cult detective drama series Playgirl (Toei, 1969-1974).

She has starred in a couple of movies including Onsen Osana Geisha (Toei, 1973) and Shin Jingi Naki Tatakae Kumicho Saigo No Hi (New Fighting Without Honor The Boss' Last Days Toei, 1976).

Tamura has also made guest appearances on shows such as Taiyo Ni Hoero (Howl At The Sun - Ishihara Pro, 1972-1986).

Veteran actor Uchida Ryohei had previously starred in a number of Toei and Nikkatsu films prior to Battle Hawk. Some of his film credits include: Yakuza Keiji (Toei, 1970), Yakuza Keiji Ore Tachi Wa Haka Ga Nai (Yakuza Detective We Have No Tombstone Toei, 1972), Furyo Bancho Noraken Kidotai (Juvenile Boss Dog's of the Riot Squad Toei, 1973), Bodyguard Kiba (AKA Bodyguard Chiba Toei, 1974), Jeans Blues Ashita Naki Muraiha (Jeans Blues There Is No Tomorrow For The Disenchanted Toei, 1974), Tokyo Wan Enjou (Tokyo Bay Inferno AKA Tokyo Bay Blazing Up/Conflagration Toho, 1975), and Akuma No Heiya (The Demon's Room Nikkatsu, 1982).

While some may recognize tall, lanky Kikuchi Eiichi as bumbling Detective Nakano in episodes of Denjin Zaborger (P-Pro, 1974) or Prof. Iguana in Dai Sentai Goggle Five (TV Asahi/Toei, 1982), his lasting claim to fame stands as the man behind the suit of Ultraman Jack in the Kaette Kita Ultraman series (Tsuburaya, 1971). He was also the suit actor for the series Majin Vander (Giant Vander Nissan Pro, 1969).

Kikuchi has since guest starred in many other shows (outside of costume) such as Kage No Gundan, Starwolf and G-Men '75.

Midorikawa Minoru has contributed voice work to such animation series as the original Gundam, Jungle Taitei (AKA Simba The White Lion and Lupin The Third.)

BATTLEFEVER J

The secret society Egos begin assassinating top people of the National Defence Ministry. General Kurama assembles four young agents who had been dispatched around the world for training. They are joined by FBI investigator Diane Martin, whose father was murdered by Egos. The five don powered suits to become the Battle Fever team. (The word 'fever' was trendy at the time.) The Battle Fever team's trump card is the Battle Fever Robo.

Egos tries to stop the construction of the Robo, but the monsters they send to perform this task are defeated one by one by the Fever team. Egos then unleashes the 'younger brother' of the Buffalo Monster, a giant robot replica of its 'older brother'. The Robo, fortunately, is finished in time. Aboard it, the Fever team defeats the Buffalo Monster and its successors. The Fever team never stops, even when it lost two of its members (the original Miss America Battle Cossack). With new members, the team defeats Hedder, now the Hedder Monster, and breaks into Egos' headquarters, where they are fed into the Egos Monster Making Machine so that they may be used as material for a Battle Fever Monster.

The team destroys the machine and with the Lightning Light Sword Rocketter sword-throwing move, slays the mysterious deity Satan Egos himself. The new format with giant robots took off, and the Super Sentai series hasn't ended since Battle Fever J (Batoru Fībā Jei?) is a Japanese TV series, being the 3rd entry of the Super Sentai series franchise. It was produced by Toei Company and aired on TV Asahi between 1979 and 1980 with a total of 52 episodes. It was Toei's second co-production with Marvel.

The Rangers have designations named for countries around the world: Battle Japan, Battle France, Battle Cossack (Soviet Union), Battle Kenya and Miss America (United States). It was also the first show to introduce the Super Sentai format, where the heroes must control giant robots to defeat a monster who itself has grown to a gigantic size (or anything similar).

Battle Fever J was the first series to use the term Super Sentai (unlike the previous two who were just called Sentai, without the "Super"). For a long time, Battle Fever J was considered the first entry in the Super Sentai series until Toei announced in 1994 that Goranger and JAKQ were also part of the Super Sentai series.

Battlefever J began development as a follow-up to the SPIDER-MAN series - producers originally planned an adaptation of Marvel's Captain America but instead opted for this international team show, reviving in the process the "Sentai" battle team franchise that began with GORANGER to make this "Super Sentai" show. Based on an idea by former Combattler V and Starbirds creator Saburo Yade, BattleFever J was completely mad, even by the standards of Japanese television. In the Super Senti Chronology, Battlefever J comes after JAQK and before DENZIMAN. Writer Ezure would reappear nearly two decades later scripting The Curse. Music by Michiaki Watanabe.

The first Super Sentai. Toei's second co-production with Marvel. MARVEL Comics co-produced the show "Battle Fever J" and initiated the idea of having each member outfitted as a representative of a particular nation which was a concept inspired by the MARVEL Comics superhero "Captain America". Following the success of Spider-Man (1978), the first live action series with the hero defeating the same monster on both human and giant scales on a regular basis, Toei set off to do a second co-production with Marvel Comics Group.

Initially, the show was to be 'Captain Japan,' a Japanization of Marvel's Captain America. Captain Japan (Major Den) would fight alongside Ms. (!) America (Perry (!) McBride), Captain France (Shiji Kyoussuke), Captain Russia (Shirakawa Kensaku), and Captain Kenya (Akebono Shirou). With Dr. Onijiro's submarine, Captain Baser, and the giant robot Nelson, they would fight against the demon Veda and his organisation 'B.'

Compare that with the series that resulted...

The new format with giant robots took off, and the Super Sentai series hasn't ended since...

BATTLESTAR GALACTICA (2004)

Forty years after the end of the Cylon War, the artificially-created Cylons declare war on humanity by attacking and destroying the twelve colonies. The military crumbles after their newly updated ships shut down in the face of a new unknown Cylon weapon. A lone Battlestar known as Galactica, due to be decommissioned and converted into a museum, turns out to be the only thing standing between the Cylons and the total destruction of the human race.

This marks the next attempt in try to revitalise the Battlestar Galatica Franchise. The original Battlestar Galatica was followed by it's sequel Galatica 1980, then by the 2003 mini-series (pilot for this show), and finally by the 2004 version. This marked a departure from many shows, as it's been parily funded by Sky TV, a british broadcaster. And the first season premiered in the UK, some 4 months before the US release date. Despite some unusual actor choices for some of the roles the series was popular enought to get a second season.

Before I proceed, I'll just add a quick comment for those slating the series without seeing it: please, stop it. Instead, wait and see what the new show is about and give it a chance. Unless of course, you want to miss one of the best dramas currently airing.

BSG is a very human story. Yet unlike Star Trek, they're not resolved by the end of the episode. Here the characters are real people who make mistakes, grow and learn from their errors. Or maybe they don't.

The point is that in the new BSG, the impact of the loss of the Colonies is something everybody must deal with, be it on a resource-management level to dealing with the loss of their families. The impact of the Cylon attack - never explored in the original series - is a major emphasis in the show and the viewer genuinely does get the feeling of the "rag tag fleet."

Don't get me wrong, I enjoyed the original series as much as anybody, but it was a product of its time and audience-slot. The new BSG is a much more adult production, both in terms of the writing and performances and the intended audience.

Additionally, the show is very non-sci-fi, but in a good way. Whenever any "science" turns up, it's integrated in such a way as to have minimal impact on the plot and, unlike Star Trek, it isn't used as a Deus Ex Machina to simply resolve the "crisis of the week." In fact, I'd go as far as to say the show is closer to 24 or The West Wing than it is Star Trek or Babylon 5, with the focus being much more on the people and their individual actions, rather than a wide-scale "space opera."

Performances are all strong, with James Callis being the real star. His tortured performance as the guilt-stricken Baltar are a joy to watch as he flips from near-hysterical lunatic to scheming toad to smooth womaniser. Olmos has the presence to give Adama the air of authority required. Sackhoff's performance as Starbuck is "subtly obvious" - she plays the brash, cocky pilot a little too well, something that's explained in later episodes. And Bamber's Apollo is a mix of heroic action and self-doubt which balances well. Mention must also go to McDonnell's President Roslin who, over the course of the series, has grown in stature and presence in a very subtle manner.

Quite simply, Battlestar Galactica is one of the most consistently strong shows I've ever seen. Considering this is only the first of (hopefully) many seasons, it's amazing to see how the show has "hit the ground running," with each episode being an improvement on the last. And considering the high standard of the first one, that's quite the achievement.

Ronald D. Moore and Christopher Eric James successfully adapt Glen A. Larson's original teleplay for today's demanding audiences, while Universal's 21st century technical crews update the look and feel of the show considerably. The action is gritty and much darker, space battles between colonial Viper fighters and the redesigned Cylon flying-wing ships have the hectic edginess of documentary footage. Major changes to the casting have enhanced the show's appeal. Galactica's ace pilot is now a woman - Lieutenant Kara 'Starbuck' Thrace (butch blonde Katee Sackhoff), but still gambles and smokes cigars like Dirk Benedict's playboy hero in the original series. The traitorous Baltar (James Callis) is less a figure of simple evil than he was in the previous incarnation and, in an obvious effort to make the character sympathetic, he's now a misguided scientist rather than a sinister aristocrat.

However, despite this version's predominantly young cast, including Jamie Bamber as Captain Lee 'Apollo' Adama (a leading role played by Richard Hatch in the original), the performance honours go to genre stalwart Edward James Olmos (replacing Lorne Greene) as old warhorse Commander Adama, and Mary McDonnell as the new default president, Laura Roslin, who's sworn into colonial office during the conflict. Both these mature yet popular movie stars have the acting chops to grant their characters tremendous emotive impact when combat tensions run high.

If the spectre of Philip K. Dick's short story Second Variety (filmed as Screamers, 1996) hangs over this three-hour TV drama, well then, we can at least appreciate that there's a legitimate science fiction influence on the production. Although, basically, it's nothing more than revamped space opera nonsense, entirely lacking originality, there is a definite sense that this remake has managed to improve on the 1978 show. If Larson's BattleStar Galactica was inspired by Star Wars, this new version ought to be required viewing for the self-indulgent George Lucas. I think he could probably learn a thing or two from it. Hardly riveting stuff, then, but it is quite good fun overall, which is more than can be said for the recent Star Wars blockbusters.

The Region 2 + 4 DVD reviewed here is widescreen anamorphic format (ratio 1.77:1) with Dolby digital 5.1 sound, and optional English subtitles. Disc extras: a 20-minute making-of featurette, BattleStar Galactica: The Lowdown, with interview clips (including Richard Hatch - who's generous with his praise, despite the failure of his own TV remake attempt, so no-one can say this man is a sore loser!) and snippets of behind-the-scenes footage.

It's perhaps one of the great ironies of the history of TV sci-fi that this series should be a remake of a cheesy, camp piece of space opera fluff made purely to cash in on the success of the original Star Wars film. Setting aside issues such as the changes in design and character you simply could not have two pieces of television sci fi that were more radically different.

BattleStar Galactica is a child of its times. The psychological complexity and depth of the characters is reminiscent of The Sopranos while the political elements show the same level of understanding of realpolitik as the very best of The West Wing. It is also the spiritual child of Joss Whedon's Firefly, a series that actively attempted to make genre TV that wasn't about genre issues but about real people with real relationships and real problems. Whereas Firefly's attempt at re-defining genre was cruelly cut short by its cancellation, BattleStar Galactica succeeds at recasting genre TV, so it's not about space battles and robots and FTL travel but about big ideas explored through the lens of scientific speculation. Battlestar Galactica marks the day when genre television finally grew up and showed that it was just as capable as exploring big and challenging ideas as any novel. It chooses as its theme possibly the most important issue facing mankind today: this is a series that is about 9/11 and the relationship between rationality, religion, and politics.

The Cylons have acquired the ability to look human as well as the ability to duplicate existing humans and even program Cylons as sleeper agents who don't even realise that they are Cylon until they are activated. This allows the show's writers to explore the sense of paranoia that gripped the US after 9/11 and saw many Arab-Americans locked up with little justification. This paranoia not only affects the relationships between the main characters as some are feared to be Cylons and others actually are Cylons but also the politics of the remains of human society. The political situation is also nicely complicated by the presence of a freedom-fighter/terrorist who becomes involved in the politics of the fleet but the writers don't ever answer the question of what his real agenda is or indeed whether he has truly renounced violence as a means of political change. This willingness to be ambiguous and vague and to allow the audience to reach their own judgements and form their own hypotheses is one of the most welcome differences between Battlestar Galactica and the moral absolutism of Star Trek or even Buffy. Despite the futuristic setting the writers make the world of BattleStar Galactica realistic by stressing that in the real world there are no easy answers to big questions and any answer you do reach invariably has consequences. Nowhere is this better expressed than in the President's character arc.

The President was sworn in during the pilot TV movie as the last surviving member of the cabinet. Despite being a schoolteacher and a junior cabinet member she is not politically naïve. Right from the start the President and Commander Adama are constantly testing each other's limits, it's a battle of wills and political visions which is all too real even in our world as the pragmatic nationalism of the military conflicts with the idealism and emotivism of civilian politicians constantly mindful of the court of public opinion. However, the President has a secret; she is dying of cancer. Early on in the series we see the President refuse medical treatment, preferring to use an alternative therapy. Soon afterwards she begins having visions that tie into religious prophecies that talk of discovering the home of the gods and Earth. The President's retreat into religion plays out during the series, eventually culminating in her convincing a pilot to return to Cylonoccupied Caprica in order to reclaim a religious relic that she hopes would show them the way to Earth.

The President's retreat into religion is nicely mirrored by the mental state of Gaius Baltar, the man who betrayed humanity. He slips in and out of visions of a beautiful Cylon woman who guides him and pushes him continually to accept God. When Baltar refuses the Cylon disappears from his mind and starts to appear in the real world. Baltar's treachery is nearly uncovered a number of times, but events and the words whispered in his ear by the beautiful Cylon convince him that he is an implement in God's hands. Again, the writers brilliantly leave all questions about Baltar's mental state unanswered. Is he completely mad? Does the Cylon woman really exist outside of his mind? Does the God the Cylons speak of really exist? It is the belief system of the Cylons that is undeniably the most brilliant aspect of this show.

The Cylons believe in the existence of one true God. They are spurred on to kill humans and even themselves by the belief that ultimately upon their death they will return to God and be reborn. They are fanatics. One episode showcases the Cylon belief system by having Starbuck interrogate and torture a Cylon, even this locking of horns has no clear winner as the Cylon's observations hit home, but so do Starbuck's attempts to force the Cylon to question his faith. Where The Sopranos used psychotherapy to explore the psychological depths of its main characters, BattleStar Galactica deploys philosophy and religious discussion as ultimately the humans and Cylons are as driven by the myths and convenient fictions they adopt as Tony Soprano is by his inner demons and his relationship with his mother. Indeed, the Cylons appear to revel in playing mind games with the humans, often playing elaborate tricks on them as a part of their grand plan. While its full scope is only hinted at in this first series at times it is positively Freudian as the children recreate themselves in the image of their parents as a means to destroy them.

These are huge questions that TV rarely comes close to tackling even in such highbrow fare as Dennis Potter's oeuvre, but BattleStar Galactica never opts for an easy answer and challenges all sides of religious and political issues: where do you draw the line between religious beliefs and delusions? Is the best response to religious fanatics' authoritarianism? What if religious teachings really were true? Can a head of state acting on the basis of religious zeal be trusted to make decisions? Would the abandonment of democracy be a viable option to get away from such a leader? BattleStar Galactica refuses to give easy answers to this question and muddies the waters even further by making the traitorous and possibly delusional Gaius Baltar a sympathetic character and we even begin to care for Cylons posing as humans. The end of the series is full of surprises as literally no character escapes unscathed as one after another they are forced to make difficult decisions or confront what it is they truly believe and who they really are.

BattleStar Galactica builds upon what made Firefly such a great programme but its much greater ambition as well as refusing to fall into what Joss Whedon found to ultimately be the restrictive and binding demands of post-Buffy genre TV makes Galactica not only a brilliant and important piece of genre television but it's continual proof that we're living through a real golden age of drama on American TV. Remorselessly challenging and brilliant BattleStar Galactica deserves to be mentioned in the same breath as The West Wing and The Sopranos as great drama. Oh... and the space battles look amazing and there isn't a 'daggit' in sight.

The best things in life never last. Whether it's that restaurant that serves a chocolate terrine so tasty it's as if a chocolaty Jesus came on your face, or that redhead at work that's been giving you the eye over a hot copier. Soon enough the restaurant's owners will sell out to someone who doesn't even know what a terrine is, and you'll notice, all too late, that the redhead from accounts has mysteriously big hands. When the new Battlestar Galactica first appeared a couple of years ago its complex and symbolic plot of religious fanatics, torture and hidden assassins seemed to perfectly capture what was going on in American politics as the Christian neo-cons and Islamic extremists of Al Qaeda seemed to compete for who could be the biggest packs of twats on the planet. It seemed to be miles away from the moral retardation of Star Trek and even one-upped Buffy by not only being rich in human emotion and densely symbolic but also concerned with international politics (a topic far more exciting than the life of a teenager). However, despite a longish break between seasons and a long break in the middle of the second season, Battlestar Galactica has gone from the sublime to the ridiculous as it becomes a series in search of both a theme and a plot.

As I've argued before, it's no coincidence that American series tend to dip in quality after the first season. From The Sopranos to The Wire to Six Feet Under, the fact remains that the first series tends to be strong and then the next series is either a mess or it spends its time wandering around forlornly trying to tidy up the loose threads of the first series. This is because while the writers and producers have an almost infinite amount of time to polish and plan the first season before pitching it to the networks and making it, they rarely have more than six months to write the follow-up. The proof of this law of show business is very much in the pudding that is the second series of Battlestar Galactica.

The ending of the first series saw the fleet split in two along broadly religious lines; half the fleet believed that the President was a prophet and that these times had been foretold in ancient religious texts. The other half believed President Roslin to be mad, and supported Commander Adama's coup. As the season ended, the narrative was left in an unstable situation meaning that one of them had to be right and the issue had to be solved, taking with it the fantastic ambiguity and agnosticism that had fuelled the first series. However, it isn't long before series two has it that the President was in fact right. Unfortunately, the cut and dry manner in which the tension at the end of the first season is resolved proves to become a habit in the second season, as the plot effectively re-sets on three separate occasions.

Firstly, the first few episodes of season two concern themselves with the brief and shambolic command of notorious drunkard Colonel Tigh. Unable to retain the respect of his men and quick to act out of anger, Tigh oversees the accidental murder of dozens of innocent civilians. But nothing comes of it because Adama wakes up and apologises to the President and Colonel Tigh's disastrous command is instantly forgotten in much the same manner as the religious and political disagreements that split the fleet only a few weeks previously.

Secondly, after drifting aimlessly Battlestar Galactica decides to resurrect old chestnut and fan favourite the 'Battlestar Pegasus' from the original series. However, where the first series' Pegasus was commanded by an outrageously camp Lloyd Bridges as Commander Cain, the new Pegasus is commanded by a ruthlessly expedient female Admiral Cain, whose methods are at odds with the more liberal attitudes that have evolved onboard the Galactica. What begin as disagreements quickly turn to tensions and then to all out confrontation as Cain's views on Cylons (that they are things rather than people with rights) lead to a friendly Cylon being raped and her rapist murdered. Soon, the two Battlestars are launching ships at each other and gearing up for war. Somewhat depressingly, though, the issue is resolved and the brief exploration of whether or not Cylons are sentient is shelved along with the issue of the role of faith in politics that underpinned the first season, and the nature of military dictatorships explored early in the second season.

The series then wanders aimlessly again, occasionally toying with poorly plotted and ham-fisted allegories for stem cell research as in Epiphanies and individual episodes that don't advance the larger plot such as the tired and lacklustre Black Market and the misjudged and predictable Scar. However, in the final handful of episodes the season picks up as it starts to deal with the Presidential elections that oppose Roslin to the traitor Baltar. As the humans consider whether to settle on a newly discovered planet and the Cylons decide to attempt to co-exist with the humans, a suicide bomber sets off a nuclear explosion killing thousands of humans and destroying a number of ships. This leads to the third and most breathtaking rebooting of Battlestar Galactica as the storyline skips forward, to reveal mothballed Battlestars and humans living on a planet controlled by Cylons.

Showing admirable production values, some good performances and a commitment to exploring ideas both human and philosophical, Battlestar Galactica effectively sets itself apart from more run-of-the-mill sci-fi dramas. And yet beyond the cosmetic differences there lurks a show with serious writing problems. The basic problem with Battlestar Galactica is that it is a transparently top down creation. By this I mean that the plot and characters evolve in the manner they do because of the whims of the writers. Now, at first glance this is a spectacularly banal point as, ultimately, the writers create everything, but consider for a minute a series such as Deadwood. Deadwood (and The Wire for that matter) are bottom up series insofar as the characters are so well designed and crafted that once you throw them into a certain kind of environment, the episodes essentially write themselves, their bloody and unfortunate conclusions both tragic and tragically obvious to anyone who watches with an eye for how the characters are constructed.

To put it another way, the conflicts that animate those series are front loaded into the characters and the situations in such a way as to make the series driven by their characters, as opposed to Battlestar Galactica where the characters are clearly driven by the week-by-week creative whims of the writing staff, which was manifestly not the case in the first season. The result is that it is difficult to suspend your disbelief as the wild and wildly expedient changes in the characters are obviously there because the writers need to close off a particular subplot or engineer a particular situation. In essence, the characters are without a direction meaning that the show's producers have to give them a new one each week, resulting in a lack of cohesive or coherent plot arcs and a complete breakdown in the evolution of a number of characters. At this point, fans will jump up and explain that it's perfectly reasonable for Adama to completely change his mind about the President and go from considering her a dangerous psychotic to a lovely woman, but I would argue that writing a character that is prone to radical mood swings and changes of opinion is in fact indistinguishable from poor characterisation because it is poor characterisation.

Nowhere is this more evident than in the handling of the Cylons' secret plan. Throughout the first and second seasons we were told again and again that the Cylons had a plan, and that they were manoeuvring the humans into place. While anyone who has ever watched The X-Files or Carnivale will realise that there was no plot, and that the writers were making it up as they went along, there was at least a suggestion of a longer plot arc that had been worked out. However, in the final three episodes of this season, the plan changes from the original secret plan to the idea that the humans and Cylons can live together in peace to a third plan in which the humans are kept as prisoners by Cylon soldiers. In three episodes the motivation of the Cylon characters changes twice, practically at the drop of a hat. Are we really to believe that the writers of this show have any control over where it's going at this point?

The final reboot at the end of season two is not so much a daring change of direction as it is an admission of failure. The three different attempts at finding a theme, the drastic changes in the central characters, the unsatisfactory manner in which old plot lines are closed off and the Cylons that are overly eager to re-invent their entire species' attitude towards humans stand as undeniable evidence that Ronald D. Moore and his team of writers simply could not make the original format work for longer than one season. The rare flashes of intelligence that Battlestar Galactica shows in its treatment of Cylon psychology and the relationship between the military and civilian authority suggest that there's still a hunger to be bold, intelligent and challenging but with a move to a more prime-time slot announced for the third series the writing team behind Battlestar Galactica need to recapture the magic that made season one such compelling viewing and exorcise the demons that made season two such a complete failure.

Tigh knows from bitter experience what the Cylons are planning. The Centurions aren't going to blow up the ship; they're going to kill the crew by venting the ship's air and then turn its guns on the rest of the fleet. Only Lee whom Tigh despises for his "disloyalty" to Commander Adama and his small squad of marines are in position to stop the Cylon boarding party.

Meanwhile, on Cylon-occupied Caprica, Starbuck and Helo break into her old apartment and fire up her old pickup truck. BATTLESTAR GALATICA

Man consisted of 12 colonial tribes, who came together after 1000 years of fighting against the robotic Cylon Empire. Before peace can be achieved however, the Cylons attack the twelve worlds of Man. With many of the worlds destroyed the last remains of the human race, clamber together, under the leadership of the only battlestar remaining, Galatica. The Galatica is commanded by Commander Adama, who is also the last surviving member of the government. With over 220 different types of spaceships, the Galatica and the fleet, set out on a journey to find the lost 13th tribe of man, on a planet known as Earth.

The Cylons however don't want the Galatica to escape, and chase them throughout the galaxy. Other crew on board the Galatica include, Capt. Apollo, who commands an elite squadron of spaceships known as viper, he is also Commander Adama's son. There is Lt. Starbuck, a gambling man who serves as a viper pilot. Athene, Adama's daughter is in charge of communications. Cassiopea, whom Starbuck is smitten with also stars, as well as Adama's second in command Col. Tigh. Lt. Boomer is another viper pilot, who always gets himself in trouble after following another one of Lt. Starbuck's plans. Apollo also had a son called Boxey, who had a very annoying robotic dog. Finally there was Count Balter, who was a human, who had joined the side of the Cylons.

Dirk Benedict is also known for playing Face in the TV show THE A TEAM. Some of the secondary names in the cast are famous in SF circles including PATRICK MACNEE who played Steed in THE AVENGERS & THE NEW AVENGERS as well as THUNDER IN PARADISE. Dick Durock is more famous for playing the monster in SWAMP THING both the series and the film. Finally Jonathan Harris is most famous for playing the role of Dr. Smith in the 60s SF show LOST IN SPACE. The various producers for the show were DONALD P. BELLISARIO, John Dykstra, Paul Playdon and David O'Connell.

The ground breaking special effects for BG were supervised by John Dykstra, also one of the producers of BG. The music was done by Stu Phillips. The various writers of the show were, GLEN A. LARSON, Don Bellisario (aka DONALD P. BELLISARIO), Leslie Stevens, Michael Sloan, Frank Lupo, and Jim Carlson. A large variety of directors were used for the show, these included, Don Bellisario, Alan Levi, Richard Colla, Ron Holcomb, Christian Nyby and Daniel (Dan) Haller. BG came about because of the success of films such as Star Wars (1977), in fact it was said by 20th Century Fox, the makers of Star Wars that the idea of BG was too close to Star Wars, and so they sued.

In GLEN A. LARSON'S defence, he said that the idea of BG was already conceived before Star Wars came out and that the series was based on the Bible. What initially made the show such a success was the expensive special effects, used in the first few episodes. These however did not substitute for some of the poor scripts or characterisation.

When BG first premiered in the US it was one of the most hyped up shows of the season. Initially many people tuned in, only to tune straight back out, when BG was taken on and off air consecutively. Despite the ratings for the show being good, in order to justify the show's massive budget, the rating had to be equally as impressive. A less successful sequel to BG was also made entitled GALATICA 1980. The initial run of BG was complicated, the show was originally to be a mini series consisting of a 3 hour start with two more two hours stories to follow. The rating for the initial run were however good enough to justify an entire series.

The first seven hours of BG was estimated to have cost between $7 and $14 million US dollars. Perhaps the best of the episodes was the first episode 'Sage of a Starworld' which chronicles the death of the human race, and the journey for the 13th Tribe of Man. There was 'The Living Legend' in which another Battlestar, the Pegasus is found, with a Commander who wants to fight back against the Cylons. There was also 'The Hand of God' in which Starbuck and Apollo decide to go on a suicide mission to destroy a Cylon basestar, which is following the fleet. Some of the episodes have also been compiled together to create films, they were Battlestar Galatica (1978), a compilation of 'Sage of a Starworld' and Mission Galatica : The Cylon Attack (1979).

With the huge success of Star Wars in the theatres in 1977, it took little time for network television to try and emulate Star Wars' success by creating its own big budget outer space saga. The result was Battlestar Galactica, an often underrated series which was the first and to date (and probably forever) the last attempt by network television to create a big budget outer space saga.

Although it premiered in 1978, Battlestar Galactica can trace its origins back to the late 1960's when its producer and creator, Glen Larson, came up with the series called Adam's Ark. Adam's Ark was heavily influenced by the book Chariots of the Gods and dealt with the origins of mankind on Earth having come from out there. Since the only outer space series then on the air, Star Trek, was in the process of being cancelled. Larson was unable to find a network receptive to the idea. However with the success of Star Wars, and Larson's subsequent success working on crime dramas, Larson was able to interest ABC in the project, which had evolved into Battlestar Galactica. The series was originally to have been a mini-series consisting of a 3 hour premiere and a pair of 2 hour episodes. The 3 hour pilot episode was released theatrically in Canada and Europe in July of 1978 two months before it was broadcast on TV in America. The pilot was so well received that ABC decided to make Battlestar Galactica into a weekly TV series.

The first few episodes were, at the time, the most expensive things made for TV. Reports at the time placed the cost at between $7 million and $14 million for the first seven hours of Battlestar Galactica. Although much of this cost was for things that could later be reused for the hour long episodes which followed, such as the models, costumes and sets. A substantial sum was spent to do things like location shooting in Egypt for Lost Planet of the Gods. The impressive special effects also contributed to the high cost. They were produced by the same special effects team which worked on Star Wars giving Battlestar Galactica higher production values than anything that had appeared on American TV before. Billed as TV's series most expensive series ever, Battlestar Galactica was derided by the critics and fought over by the lawyers, but still became a phenomenon.

The ace up Galactica's sleeve was its dazzling special effects, masterminded by John Dykstra, who also did the tricks for Star Wars. But impressive though these were, they were diminished by the small screen and ultimately proved an expensive substitute for convincing characters and imaginative plotting.

Back in 1978 the rumours and articles about the forth-coming ABC-TV series Battlestar Galactica had been running wild in the press for months. It was to be the most expensive series ever made for television. Hopes were flying high. For the first time ever, TV was doing a science fiction series where the budget ballooned to meet the demands of the story rather than the story contracting to meet the demands of the budget. The sky was the limit. So how come the horizon turned out to be so bleak?

The three-hour premiere on September 17, 1978, was promising and often even effective. Using a Pearl Harbor premise in which a peace negotiation was just a mask for a wholesale attack, things were exciting and interesting, up to a point. Some fine moments were had when the Galactica returned to the home planet of Caprica only to find it in ruins.

Thereafter it has the "ragtag fleet" assembling. There's even a prolonged sequence consisting of clearing space mines. The mine-clearing sequence pointed up a problem with the series which was often repeated. The producers of the show didn't understand that in outer space, certain principles can be applied that wouldn't work on an earth-bound show. For instance, you can detour around obstacles because of how vast space is. Fuel is expended only for manoeuvring, getting up to speed and slowing down. Inertia and the lack of friction handle the rest. Unlike in cars, boats, and air planes, fuel isn't being burned the entire time the craft is moving. And yet the Galactica is constantly shown with its massive engines burning and firing as though it would stop if it weren't doing this. They just didn't get it. An entire two-part episode ("The Gun on Ice Planet Zero") is reduced to pointlessness through such details.

The characters introduced in this opening episode are a mixed bag of successful and unsuccessful ideas. Richard Hatch as Captain Apollo is a sensitive, believable character. His relationships with people work because we believe that he cares about what he is doing. On the other hand, Dirk Benedict as Starbuck is as cliched as they come. His character has no dimension whatsoever and is just a macho womaniser who is apparently there to counterbalance Apollo lest the audience think that the show's only heroic figure is a wimp because he shows his feelings.

Starbuck is always pursuing this woman or that and usually more than one at a time. Starbuck came across as nothing more than a moronic pilot (a contradiction in terms since a pilot would need to be quite intelligent to operate the technical hardware displayed on the series). The only time that this character was handled in a sensitive and therefore atypical manner was in the revival of the series when it was transmogrified into GALATICA : 1980.

In the episode "The Return of Starbuck," we learn that Starbuck was marooned on a planet where he repaired and befriended a Cylon warrior robot. This is by no means a new idea as the concept of two enemies becoming friends when marooned together was previously used as the plot of an episode of the old UFO series, as well as the 1979 Nebula Award-winning novella and movie, Enemy Mine. And both of those got the idea from the 1968 film Hell in the Pacific which starred Lee Marvin and Toshiro Mifune in a World War II setting. But nonetheless, "The Return of Starbuck" handled the concept with grace and sensitivity as even the Cylon robot became a character instead of a fighting machine. That was certainly a twist, as up until then every Cylon was portrayed as being identical with every other Cylon.

The Cylons were basically an army of Darth Vaders who were nothing more than droning machines. They were originally conceived as some-thing more. The Cylons were supposed to be an alien race whose brains were housed in robot bodies. But this idea was nixed by the networks because they feared that if the Cylons were living in any manner, then it would be deemed a "violent" show because so many beings were being slaughtered each week. But blowing the crap out of robots, well, in the words of Emily Letella, "That's very different." But this origin of the Cylons is preserved and explored in the novelization of the pilot done by author Robert Thurston (based on Glen Larson's script). Examining this origin concept, though, one is also reminded of the Daleks, a robot race in the British TV series Dr. Who. The father figure of Galactica is Lorne Greene. Unfortunately, Greene had a high recognition factor from his decade plus on Bonanza and so it wasn't long before the show was known far and wide among its detractors as Battlestar Ponderosa. Greene was an effective enough actor, but he tended to have only two expressions—stern and happy, with nothing in between.

Jane Seymour as Serina was the most interesting female character on the show. She only lasted three episodes and right after leaving Galactica she became a major television star. Many people don't remember that she was in motion pictures as far back as the first Roger Moore James Bond film Live and Let Die. Her TV work has garnered her a lot of attention while movie stardom has continued to elude her in spite of such fine roles as in the film Somewhere in Time with Christopher Reeve.

Serina was the mother of Boxey (Noah Hathaway), which introduced an odd subplot. Back on Caprica, Boxey's little dog was killed in the attack and the little boy became virtually catatonic over the loss of his pet daggit. Thus a robot daggit was created for him aboard the Galactica (in reality this was a chimp in a costume, which was certainly a first since the costume was completely self-contained and most animals would suffer from claustrophobia in such conditions). All is well with Boxey after that and Apollo even marries his mother. But in the third episode, "Lost Planet of Gods;" Boxey's mother, Serina, is killed. The episode ends with Apollo and Boxey going off to console each other. Amazingly the boy takes his mother's death much better than he did the death of his dog!

Because Galactica was bought as a series and rushed into production, the scripts started suffering quickly. But even before that happened, the show began using stock footage of its own special effects during the premiere episode. While the shot of the Cylon fighter swooping in low over the Galactica is impressive, it becomes less impressive when seen in virtually every show (and at least twice in the pilot alone). While every special effects shot in Star Wars was done new without reusing previously printed shots, on television that just can't be matched. As it was the effects people at Apogee found producer Glen Larson to be a harsh taskmaster and a difficult man to work for. They laughed at this conclusion even before the pilot episode was completed.

As their way of reply to the difficulties they'd endured under Larson, the technicians arranged the fiber-optics of the lights used on Caprica to spell out a rather well-known epithet which employed the most famous of four-letter words in conjunction with the adverb "off." You can only see the two-word remark if you're watching for it and know exactly where to look. It's easier to spot it first in the Battlestar Galactica photonovel about a quarter of the way into the book on the page whose heading reads: "Adama orders the Galactica to leave fleet formation and speed home in an attempt to protect the colonies—but the Cylon attack is already raging. . . ."

The photo at the top of the page shows Cylon ships swooping down high above the city, whose lights can be glimpsed far below. There is a Cylon ship in the centre of the picture and immediately to its right is the short command spelled out in lights (about half an inch tall in the photonovel) amid many other lights. Once you spot it, it seems to leap out at you when glimpsed on television.. On TV it's difficult to notice only because the scene in question is flashed on the screen for less than five seconds. With a videotape (and a good machine that can freeze-frame without causing the image to break up) you can spot it easily. It's an elaborate inside joke but one which Apogee doubtless enjoyed pulling off. My information on this came by way of people who were working at Apogee effects at the time those special effects were shot. As Battlestar Galactica entered its second month of broadcast, it had already fallen into a pit of clichés, and like vipers they were feasting on the series and draining its energy. By November of 1978, the show had become an excruciating blend of bad science fiction and ridiculous plots peopled by cardboard characters.

Then something happened. They ran a two-part episode that actually wasn't half-bad. "The Living Legend" (November 26 and December 3, 1978) is a story featuring Lloyd Bridges as the commander of the Battlestar Pegasus, a ship that had been presumed lost in the final war with the Cylons when the colonies were destroyed. Bridges, as Commander Cain, is not only legendary but a bit on the reckless side. His pilots are blindly loyal to him, even when he suggests an attack on a Cylon base, a manoeuvre which Adama deems to be suicidal. A lot of jockeying for position results, and some questioning of Adama's judgement, as Cain's reputation blinds people to his battleworn outlook.

Also featured in these episodes is Anne Lockhart as Cain's daughter, a character who remained with the series beyond this two-part story. Anne Lockhart, of course, is the daughter of June Lockhart, who starred in the Lost in Space series in the previous decade. Anne Lockhart proved to be a pleasant and engaging young actress who, unfortunately, hasn't received much additional exposure since the series concluded. While not a terrific story by any means, "The Living Legend" was much closer to what had been hoped for by the level of expertise displayed in the series' pilot. If each episode of Galactica had only been as good as these two, science fiction fans throughout the country wouldn't have started turning the series off in droves by this time. But a lot of bad had already been flushed down the tube, and more was to come, so "The Living Legend" seemed like a fluke—it was a little better planned than most of the other episodes and still holds up well in reruns. The casting of Lloyd Bridges, a presence greatly missed on modern TV, didn't hurt either.

The problem with a lot of these episodes is that only rarely are the characters explored sufficiently for us to care about them. Usually they're just character types going through the motions the script demands of them. The story fills up time without drawing us into the action on an emotionally or psychologically participatory level. It was like Space: 1999 all over again. While the series was cancelled in 1979, it was A revived a year later, but the less said about Galactica 1980 the better. It was basically just Battlestar Galactica with the budget slashed and scripts that were, if anything, worse (with the sole exception of "The Return of Starbuck").

All the elements of Battlestar Galactica that fans of that show liked were eliminated in GALATICA 1980. It was turned into an earthbound science fiction series in which the visible lack of budget was matched only by the paucity of imagination in its scripts. When Universal was given a second chance on this series, instead of trying to make a show that was better than Battlestar Galactica, they delivered it into Glen Larson's hands and he turned it into a series that was worse. The story editors on GALATICA: 1980 were Chris Bunch and Allan Cole. They were under orders not to rewrite any of Glen Larson's scripts when he turned them in, and the results were presented for all to see. GALATICA: 1980 killed science fiction on net-work television for years, and only the success of Star Trek: The Next Generation in syndication has enticed any of the major networks into trying again, with the sadly derivative Space Rangers.

Why do producers return to this kind of science fiction over and over again with predictable regularity? Because they can understand it. It's not "too weird." They are basically just cop shows or Westerns with an outer space setting. The problem is that they're writ-ten with little regard for this new setting, as though the far future or another planet is no different than downtown Detroit. A prime example is the premiere episode of the 1993 series Space Rangers in which a shape-shifting alien is shot with a bullet. Of course, a shape-shifter could form and reform his body to allow a bullet to safely pass through. The fact that a bullet would pass through a shapeshifter was apparently not understood by the filmmakers.

One aspect of The Next Generation to which the actors found difficult to adjust at first was the frequent use of science fiction jargon. Shows like Space: 1999, Battlestar Galactica, and Space Rangers make no attempt to explore futuristic technology and its impact on humanity, which at its core is what science fiction is essentially about. Technology affects how people live their lives and it shapes our culture. Compare the culture of 1893 to 1993 and you'll see that it has been transformed by technology. By ignoring that simple truth, many science fiction television shows never actually seem to be set in the future at all.

The executive producer for the series was Glen A. Larson, producers were Don Bellisario (QUANTUM LEAP), John Dykstra, Paul Playdon and David O'Connell. Special effects co-ordinator was John Dykstra and the music was created Stu Phillips. The series was first seen in the UK between the 4th September 1980 and 30th April 1981, on Thames Television.

Excellent special effects by Star Wars' John Dykstra couldn't stop the 1978 series being cancelled, but who could forget that rousing theme tune penned by Larson himself? Or Patrick Macnee's voiceover ending with the majestic sweep over those 220 ships? Or Fred Astaire in space. Despite the series' uninspired plots, and dodgy use of a suited chimp as a crap robo-dog, many would be happy to see it return.

Newsweek called it "Son of Star Wars," and at the time of its premiere in September of 1978, nearly everyone assumed that Battlestar Galactica was created to capitalize on the success of that famous film. But Glen Larson, creator and producer of the show, said he dreamed the idea for the show in the late 1960s.

"It really started as a concept I had as a novice when I first started to sell something for," remembers Larson. His fascination with Howard Hughes, the billionaire, led him to create a billionaire-type character named Adam who invites "all the people who had ever been on Time magazine, at a meeting ... [in] the giant, brand new superstructure at the outskirts of Las Vegas, where he had bought property and land. They would all be gathered together in a main auditorium. They would feel a strange rumbling, and someone would leave the room and go up the stairs and around to a flight deck and realized they had taken off from the Earth. I called it Adam's Ark. Adam's computers had projected the end of the world. He was taking-as opposed to every animal-representatives of all of our highest forms of achievement on this planet to seek out destiny somewhere in the stars, if only against their will."

At the time he wrote this scenario, science fiction was not saleable. On the shelf it went. But in 1977 when Star Wars hit it big, "everyone was looking for science fiction. So I turned it around, and instead of leaving Earth looking outward, people were leaving outward looking for Earth," says Larson. "That's what happens in this day and age. When you go and sell a show ... the networks will take what you have and say, 'You know, so-and-so is successful, why don't we take advantage of that,' and that, in effect, is why so many cars look alike. Imitation is the sincerest form of flattery. That's why you can say Buck Rogers sold at the same time! Someone's got to come along and make something commercial, and then you can sell your idea."

When Battlestar Galactica premiered in the fall of 1978, with Patrick MacNee's rich melodic voice opening the titles, it came with high audience expectations, driven by a thundering fanfare in the media. It was heralded as the pinnacle of science fiction shows. With so much promise, so much money invested, and such stellar talent on screen-the best Hollywood had to offer-it just couldn't fail. But Battlestar Galactica ended after 21 episodes. What happened?

Richard Hatch, star of Battlestar Galactica as Captain Apollo, says, "I think a lot of mistakes were made on Galactica. A golden opportunity was finished. It generated a great deal of money for everybody. It had the potential to be an exciting show and a good money maker at the same time, but I think there were too many egos. And too many people had different opinions. Not enough people understood the show, and once again, science fiction gets cut short before it gets a chance.

"It was a very exciting and interesting story. As a science fiction reader and believer, I thought it held a lot of similarities to a lot of things I felt inside my own heart. I liked the premise very much. The graphics of the artwork for the initial three-hour script were spectacular! The visuals were very powerful on that script. So when I was reading it, I had a chance to look at these wonderful art pictures ... describing the places and events that were really quite stunning. That was one of the things that persuaded me to take a chance at this project."

Remembering the early days of production, Hatch muses, "The trouble was, it was supposed to be a seven-hour mini-series that was already scripted out and planned. And then, it got turned into a series halfway through the first three-hour movie. They never quite got caught up, they were so far behind the gun, so far behind schedule. Everything was rush, rush, eighteen-hour days, six days a week. This first year, it was hard to tell whether you were coming or going. It was frustrating, in a sense, because you didn't get a chance to put in the planning and caring that would make the show much more effective in the first year. We were always getting pages and lines in the last second, a rough-and-tumble first year for everybody. [But] any first year series goes through that kind of stuff. No matter how much you plan, it always seems there are a million problems that come up. We were trying to find a format. [Actors] were trying to find their characters. The show was trying to find its own unique [identity]. They didn't quite know what to do with the show."

While Larson believes the show was "by and large, what I wanted to do," he also concedes that "when we went to a one-hour form, we were really rushed. We should not have gone on the air as fast as we did. We really should have taken from six months to a year. If you are dealing with a sitcom, you can rewrite a script overnight. But in space, everything you write, every piece of imagination, has to trigger a whole series of developments with sets, costumes. It's so difficult to do things so they're not hokey and they don't look thin and transparent."

Richard Hatch agrees, noting that the typical progression for developing a project is "delay, delay" followed suddenly by "'We want it for this season. We want production for next month!' and so they have to hurry and there's no time for proper planning. It's very difficult to find people who are gifted in planning things well. We do the best we can in this business. It's always a very traumatic, helter-skelter, roller coaster ride whenever you make a project... Everybody hangs on for dear life to survive. Galactica ... had more problems than most because we had a huge cast, sets, special effects, and it took ten days per episode to film. We were all doing something unique for television." Hatch also recalls Battlestar Galactica as a frustrating experience for an actor. "When I read for the show I was hoping I would get a lot more material that would be challenging as an actor."

I was told, before I did the show, there would be a lot of interesting storylines that would be very challenging dramatically. Unfortunately, with all the pyrotechnics and battles and running around, there wasn't much time to do human stories about people. I wanted to have more people-oriented stories. There's nothing wrong with playing a hero, but at the same time I like playing a human being. [I wanted to get] sensitive and get involved in human interest stories. And I just felt my talents were never used and never made the best of me as an actor. It was wonderful to be in the show. It was wonderful to be doing science fiction, but I wanted more kinds of stories that would give me a chance to use my special sensitivities and talents more effectively. It was very difficult under the conditions to do your best work sometimes. Because of the hours that we shot ... we were all tired, the conditions were not easy. They never are in television series, but it was harder for us. Captain Apollo was a very underdeveloped character."

Having said all that, Hatch does cite the father and son relationships as highlights of the show. "I wanted scenes between me, my father and my son. That gave me a chance to deal with the kind of material I like to do. Jane Seymour as the reporter Scrinial was asked to stay on by Glen Larson. But she opted not to." Hatch was also very critical of the stories chosen for the show, since as a science fiction fan he wanted the genre's potential realized. "I wanted to have good science fiction shows. I thought that Galactica had a lot of potential to explore a lot of different, exciting probabilities. Star Trek, the wondrous thing about that-and I watched it for years-they explored a lot of different, unique concepts, and it's such a wonderful genre for us. And I felt Galactica, during that first year, never got its footing, never got a chance really to do the kind of wonderful science fiction shows that science fiction is so famous for.

"There were so many stories to be explored! We had so many problems from so many different people, and so many different egos involved, and so many people wanting it this way or that way. There's a lot of battling going on. Networks, producers, actors, directors, syndication, p.r., distributors; there's a lot of competition going on. ABC was not receiving the revenues from the movie and the merchandising. I think that Universal was. They weren't sharing the money that Galactica was generating." Hatch adds that 'Glen Larson ... tends to take a lot of old stories that were well done, and he updates them and puts them into a different genre.... Now, I don't have absolute proof of this, but this is what I was told: A lot of old storylines and stories from other shows were used and updated [for Galactica.]"

Larson declares that he didn't necessarily enjoy this sort of borrowing "That came from network, who said, 'Let's do movies. Let's do Westerns. Let's do Shane. Let's do Towering Inferno.' It's tough to fight those guys. They're the buyer, and when we went to sell this, they weren't sure what we were going to do with it. And one of the things they bought was this epic kind of stories. Again, had we [had] a second season, we would have had a chance to avoid that particular stigma, if there was one."

Indeed, in hope of that second season, Larson had already planned for better stories by flying to New York and sitting down with a grandmaster of science fiction: author Isaac Asimov. "We did a projection for year two," says Larson. "We sat down and worked out how it would all go, and he would be involved and help us with concepts and things. We were so busy getting things up and running. Mr. Asimov agreed to come aboard as our science fiction writer-as our expert. That would have brought a whole level of credibility. ... We came up with a lot of directions, a lot of stories, and a lot of concepts."

Of Glen Larson's creative visions as the builder of the Galactica, Hatch declares, "Anybody who has the courage to put science fiction on the air, number one, is a pretty courageous person. Number two, Glen Larson is talented in many, many areas, as a writer, singer, musician, you know, so he brings a lot of his talents to play to put this together. This is his baby. He put a lot of hard work into it, and it was a monumental effort. Unfortunately the network just didn't want to go to a second year for this show that was so promising! Networks don't understand the genre of science fiction. They tend to be very conservative and play it safe. I don't blame them; there's a lot of money at stake and a lot of pressure. But I do know one thing about this business: Those who have the wherewithal and courage to take chances, are usually the ones who succeed."

Was Hatch ever reluctant to speak his mind during filming? "I had meetings just about every day with Glen Larson. He always bent over backwards to lend ears whenever I wanted to speak to him, and he always made himself accessible. He would come over, pick you up and go to lunch, and you would talk. I had meetings every day with writers and producers, discussing my ideas, thoughts, feelings, and everybody was very amenable. I must say, with all the pressure and all the craziness of that show, that amongst ourselves, the actors, producers and directors, we all got along very well. There was a great deal of harmony and supportiveness. The problem was with Universal and the networks. Sometimes when there's great potential, everybody's ego gets involved, and everybody sees it differently, and there's a lot of infighting about how it should be done and what should not be done. Too many cooks in the kitchen. By the time they brought it back for Galactica 1980, it was too late. We were offered to do the second show, but most of us were busy at the time." But not all memories were bad ones. Hatch made many friends during the show and recalls them with fondness today.

As Adama, the commander of the Galactica and leader of the rag-tag fleet of humans, Lorne Greene "had this wonderful, booming, Shakespearean voice," laughs Hatch. "And truly he was a very simple, down-to-earth, loving, caring gentleman. He was very amenable and open to people. He came to my Christmas party, and you would find him in a corner talking with anybody who would want to sit down and talk with him. He had no ego, [no] attitude ... [nor was he] con-descending in any way. He was just ... very ordinary folk. People who got to know him got very warm and comfortable in his presence."

Dirk Benedict, who was Apollo's sidekick and fellow warrior, Starbuck, "tended to be very warm on the set. But it's funny, he could be very volatile. I mean, he could at one moment be friendly, and the next moment, he would be withdrawn and want to be alone or off to himself. Dirk was very much an introverted-extroverted kind of person. You don't always know what's going on with Dirk. He tends to be a little bit disguised in that sense. There are a lot of hidden feelings inside Dirk, and you don't always know what they are. But he's a good guy, we never had a problem on the set. But I think that he's a complicated person. ... He's very warm and outgoing, and yet he's aloof at the same time.

Another important warrior was Boomer, played by Herb Jefferson, Jr. "I haven't seen Herb in a long time. I think his marriage broke up, I think he had a child. He was ... very crushed by the marriage breakup. It kind of put him on a tumble. He went through a very difficult time ... trying to find himself after that. Last time I saw him I was walking in Venice and he was walking down the street. He seemed like he was moving around a lot, busy with different things and different places. He left the business for a while. I think he's struggling to find his bearings. To me he was one of the most eloquent, intelligent, sensitive men I've ever met. I'm just amazed his career isn't going for him. I think he's a very good actor and he's a classy gentlemen. I think he'll bounce back."

Maren Jensen as Athena, Adama's daughter and communications specialist aboard the Galactica, "was very beautiful, but she was never uppity. She was always very approachable, very friendly and very down to earth. A very sensitive girl, but I have seen nothing of her since the show.

Laurette Spang as medical technician Cassiopea, Starbuck's girlfriend, "was always a sweetheart. She's one of those girls that if you didn't want her as a lover or a girlfriend you'd definitely want her as a good friend. She is such a neat person that you just enjoyed being around her. I think she was just very cute, spunky, and ... I think she had a very maternal quality about her. Even though she played a little sexpot on the show." Anne Lockhart, as Sheba, a warrior from the Battlestar Pegasus introduced in the two-parter "The Living Legend," was "like everybody's best friend. She's one of those girls that you could trust with all your money. Someone who's just a good, down-to-earth, old-fashioned lady who's counted upon in a pinch. She's one of those people you thought of as a good friend."

Then there was Sarah Rush, who played Corporal Rigel, another communications specialist aboard the Galactica bridge. "I don't know about Sarah Rush," says Hatch candidly. "I know that she's a classically trained actress, who's done a lot of theatre who's wondrous on stage and wondrous in classical theatre. I'm sure she's ... married with children or working in the classical theatre somewhere. I'm surprised that lady hasn't done something more. I've never seen someone with so little screen time make such a huge impression. I had a mini-crush on her, to tell the truth. I don't think I ever told her that."

On hearing this very interesting comment, Sarah Rush laughs and replies, "Oh! I had a big crush on him! But I never told him. I was too shy. Isn't that funny? Richard gave the greatest back and neck rubs. [He] was very sensitive and gentle. Dirk was great. I thought both Richard and Dirk were just gorgeous." Sarah Rush entered the world of the Battlestars as a contract player at Universal Studios. "Battlestar Galactica was the very first thing I'd ever done film-wise," remembers Rush. "I studied theatre in drama school and was in New York, and I got brought into contract with Universal, which was what brought me to Los Angeles. I had a very small role. I just kind of came in and out, now and then. I had my twenty-second birthday on that show. We had a birthday lunch with Lorne Greene, Richard and Dirk, and we're all in our little space suits. You have to remember I was a very small-town girl. For me it was great fun. I was thankful for the job. There were so many nice people involved. I did not have a very challenging role, but I was grateful for it because it literally paid my rent for years."

As Rigel, Rush was the show's voice of doom as she calmly counted down the 'microns' of when Cylons would attack. We saw Rigel primarily on the Galactica bridge set. "It was an incredible set," says Rush. "I was very much a method actress and tried to make it my system, as though this was a part of my daily life and I knew what I was doing. I didn't know anything about computers. I just made up my own system there." Another participant in this gigantic saga for television was Canadian actor John Colicos. He remembers Battlestar Galactica quite fondly. As the treacherous Baltar, Colicos got to play a role many actors say they prefer: the bad guy. "I wish we had gone on to a second year with that. We were just beginning to settle down to a marvelous format," says Colicos. "I love the part of Baltar, who's this galactic Judas. We were exploring all kinds of possibilities. He was sort of a flawed Lucifer and might have turned out eventually to have been a bastard son of Adama, which would have been a very interesting twist between the good and the evil and all that kind of thing. But there just wasn't time to do that." Beheaded in the feature version of the premiere episode to give the film finality, Baltar lived on in subsequent episodes to give Adama headaches.

"Glen himself reshot the final scene where Baltar was to be beheaded and stopped it before the beheading," recalls Colicos. "And [he] had the great lizard make a deal with me.... Being human, I would become a fine aide-de-camp, as it were, for the aliens, and I would live. So Baltar, being Baltar, decided to betray the entire human race and work for the aliens. But then he was going to take over himself the powers-that-were and become the supreme dictator of the galaxy. That was sort of the long-term plan that we had. Thank goodness we re-shot it and had him not be killed and we continued the character."

But what was Baltar's motivation, when it was clear that if he did succeed in destroying the last of the human race, he too would be killed by Cylons? "My opinion of Baltar's motivation was that it was just ... a cowardly self-preservation. That he was just not prepared to die for any sort of cause whatsoever. He was very selfish. We had one episode where he was trying to explain that his entire family had been destroyed and he was left alone and in a sense was wreaking vengeance on the world. And unfortunately his conscience was burned along with the rest of his family. It's where he explains to Adama that he's not the bastard that Adama thinks he is. His plan was eventually-and we wanted to develop this-to become a ruler of the Cylons."

Of Glen Larson, Colicos says, "He was highly overworked. But he was a very extraordinary, intelligent, imaginative, energetic individual. He had tremendous creative energy. He's never happy unless he's doing things, working 24 hours a day. I think he's a man who can't be idle at any point in time. He's a very dynamic and very creative person."

Working with Lorne Greene was a special treat for Colicos because "Lorne and I had known each other for years and years and years. We had worked on radio back in the 1950s when he ran a radio training school in Toronto. I knew Lorne when he played the ghost to my Hamlet on radio. We had done a number of shows together. I think we knew each other for 40 years ... just like meeting an old friend again."

Overall, in speaking with Galactica's cast and crew, one gets the impression of great collegiality and mutual admiration on the set, to say nothing of talent and drive. But according to some critics, the obstacles presented by Galactica's premise were more than even the most energetic and harmonious efforts could overcome. In the book The Best of Science Fiction TV by John Javna (Harmony Books, 1987), screenwriter and novelist David Gerrold says, "I know they tried to do their best ... but as the season went on it got worse and worse."

The problem was that these people did not have a heroic mission. They were running away from Cylons. They weren't running to something. They weren't searching out something ... Galactica was 'Run like hell-we're being chased.' And that's cowardice. You can't make cowardice noble, no matter how hard you try." In response, Larson says, "That's taking a very narrow perspective of what this was about. There's such a thing as tactical retreat. But in this case these people were going out to warn their brothers in space [Earthlings] of this menace [Cylons]. And regrouping to fight another day. ... I don't think they show themselves to be cowards at all, but very often you have to pull back in order to win. A military strategist doesn't fight to the last man. He regroups. And I would say to find the planet Earth is a noble move, warning their brothers of this menace." Larson adds that perhaps Gerrold's criticism "should have generated an episode where they say, 'We have to fight another day.' And fight they did. The "Living Legend" two-parter with Lloyd Bridges, and the last episode, "The Hand of God," were segments that dealt with our intrepid heroes fighting back against the Cylons and the dreaded Basestars.

Of the show's much-heralded budget, Hatch remembers, "There was a tremendous amount of money spent on that show. One or two million per episode, a huge expense." Glen Larson, however, looks at the show's budget slightly differently. "It didn't have a big budget. Relatively speaking you could say a big budget, but to compare it with motion picture vehicles, it had a very low budget. We had to do the best we could. We were constantly compromising. Because of John Dykstr's genius, we were able to execute a lot of the things. It was costing more than a million dollars an episode in a time where that was pretty unheard of. If we were able to amortize that show over more than one season, the price of the show would have come down! You have to take the costs of all those costumes, all of those special effects, and if you amortize them against one season, it's expensive, but if you can lay it over two, three, four or five seasons, it's not so expensive anymore!" What's more, Larson points out, "When they re-cut them into three movies which played overseas, they made a lot of money." Six months prior to the premiere of Battlestar on television, Universal released the three-hour premiere in Canada as a feature, garnering good box-office receipts that helped bring the show's expenses closer to black.

"We didn't set out to make it as a feature," says Larson. "They took away the budget, and a lot of the things we would have needed to make it different. In Buck Rogers (which Larson co-created) we were allowed, by the network, to pull it off and re-shoot it and add things that we thought would help it in the theater." Of course the notion of a feature to be released in Canada and outside of the United States came from Universal marketing. Larson says, "There was some anger from Canada, from people who thought it was a totally different picture. And of course, it wasn't. It was a different version [of] essentially the same body of film."

With the release of that feature, media and audience attention snowballed, as Larson recalls. "The hype came about naturally because of the comparison to Star Wars and the fact that when you have people like Dykstra, the 20th Century Fox lawsuit, and all of those things coming together, it created a feeding frenzy. Time magazine was there, Newsweek, People, all these magazines descended upon us. It wasn't that we were out there looking for the hype. In a way, it creates an unfair comparison, because we didn't have the same tools to work with as motion pictures had. That was difficult. "I don't look upon it with any regrets, because we were able to do a great deal, and we had a pretty huge following for that show.... If Battlestar was able to continue financially, beyond the first year, I think the network's success would have been far beyond Star Trek's. Star Trek never attained enormous popularity in its network run, and it was not until syndication that it found and consolidated its audience. We had the opportunity to do a lot more. Finances really crippled us, and ABC at the time was so strong that they were enjoying 50 shares in everything they had. They really threw us away, and they regretted it ... later, that's why they were willing to bring us back. But really, it was almost impossible to try and remount it because it lost a lot of its key people, and a lot of its potential. But at the time it wasn't a failed experiment. Our numbers for the year were very, very strong. Far greater than any of Star Trek's ever were. If you look at the actual numbers for the year it was on, it was like nineteenth place in the whole year. The trouble was with the network. They had all top ten shows, and they got very greedy."

In effect, ABC's expectations for Battlestar's performance were higher than those of the audience. The lawsuit that Larson mentions was when 20th Century-Fox, who owned Star Wars, slapped Universal with a suit claiming that Battlestar Galactica infringed on the copyright to their blockbuster. There was also a countersuit in which Universal charged that Star Wars infringed on their feature Silent Running. In the end, the case was settled out of court.

"The original complaint encompassed Buck Rogers too," says Larson. "They had a tough time making that case. One's pride soars with that kind of success, and one begins to think he has a proprietary interest in all space vehicles, otherwise they wouldn't have mentioned Buck Rogers. We actually sat down and worked out a lot of things with [the Star Wars producers]. We agreed not to use laser streaks. We agreed to do a number of things they asked us to do. They actually leased us Industrial Light and Magic [Lucas's special effects facility] at the time. So we couldn't have made the show without positive help. But George wanted the lawsuit, and I think it was very much a personal decision on his part. It was an intrusion on his domain. "The truth of the matter is, all these things are derivative.

Many things in Star Wars, John Dykstra will tell you, are derivative. [Lucas] put his concept together brilliantly. I think it's a masterpiece. One has to expect that when you do something that original and that unique, it's going to throw into a lot of other things. And in fact, it did. It influenced a lot of shows, including our own. If the number one car in the world is a Mercedes, you're going to find that car influencing other things. They're not supposed to be direct ripoffs, but ... it happens all the time. I don't think there has been a successful show that hasn't generated a lawsuit. There are very few shows that don't generate some kind of litigation from somebody." Many viewers complained that Battlestar Galactica became too enamored with Cylons as the recurring villains. They wanted to see other types of life in the universe, and stories more closely centered on characterization.

"It's an interesting perspective," says Larson. "You don't know until you step back and get a perspective. I haven't talked to a lot of people to see what they thought. It could be that there was an awful lot of emphasis on ... [the Cylons]. You think of a story like The Fugitive, you didn't see the one-armed man very much and you didn't see Lt. Gerard very much. Perhaps we could have used [the Cylons] less." Donald P. Bellisario, supervising producer of the show, also believes the show suffered from Cylons and space battles. "It became too hung up on the technology and not enough on the stories," says Bellisario, Quantum Leap's creator. "The special effects I thought were terrific for the time. I thought the acting was just fine on the show. I thought the cast basically worked." When talking about the show's shortcomings, however, he notes that "in order to create a show where someone's being pursued by an enemy, a villain, an antagonist, you have to have a realistic enemy. Even in a science fiction show. There was no reality to the antagonist there, to the Cylons."

Bellisario says that if you repeatedly blow the enemies away, the viewers will see them as no longer a threat. "A hero-a protagonist-is only as strong as his enemy can be," he explains. "The network, the standards people, could not allow the humans to be killed. They only had one person die, the Jane Seymour character in the pilot; other than that, you couldn't do it! That was probably the biggest single thing that didn't work. Had it been realistic (for a series), having battles going on and people dying and a real conflict trying to escape from being pursued, I think it would have worked. I would have liked to ... [make viewers feel] something was at stake here. You don't always win. Why tune in every week if you don't feel any danger here? The unexpected is what always gets people."

On an optimistic note, in October 1993, a Battlestar Galactica 15-year reunion convention reassembled the cast of the show at Universal City. As he prepared for that event, Hatch said, "I want to bring together all the people that were associated with Battlestar Galactica to 'reignite' the dream of the show, to bring back an awareness to the industry and everybody who followed the show of how special that show was, and the great potential it had. I want to rekindle that enthusiasm because of the advent of the Sci-Fi Channel. Science fiction is becoming huge, and I always felt that Battlestar Galactica has a definite place in the science fiction community. As you know, it has taken off in syndication more than ever in network. It shows you the huge audience out there."

But Hatch has a bigger agenda. He wants to launch the Galactica back into space in a theatrical trilogy, a TV-movie series or even in regular episodic form. " Battlestar Galactica deserves a second chance. I've sent letters to Universal and the Sci-Fi Channel about doing a trilogy of Battlestar Galactica. Let's see what happens with that." To that end, Hatch has written a story treatment of a trilogy resolving the premise of the show. It is his hope that with the proper personnel, space battles will once again come alive.

"We've never been off the air in 15 years," Hatch explains. "No other science fiction show with 21 episodes has ever had the longevity all over the world like Battlestar Galactica. It was the highest rated network science fiction show of all time." Refusing to describe his story in detail, Hatch does give a few hints. For starters, the story ignores the events of Galactica 1980 and acknowledges the death of Commander Adama, Lorne Greene. "It will address all the unresolved issues and deal with some 20 to 30 years [years] since we last saw the Galactica. The commander ... died, and [there will be] a fight to establish who's going to be the leadership of the Galactica ... and [it] deals with what happens to Captain Apollo and Lt. Starbuck, and basically, puts the ship on course to really find its true home. The odyssey really was about re-establishing contact with the true race, where humans had begun and trying to trace its steps back to its evolutionary heritage."

Reactivating the Cylons, who surely are waiting in vaults inside Universal Studios, is not in Hatch's plans. "Cylons will no longer be. They will be the future evolutionary strain of the Cylons far more dangerous, more scary, than anything that has ever been seen in the galaxy. They will have evolved into a far more lethal race." Hatch hopes the few small steps he takes will snowball into a new series. The first step, however, is to find someone to finance the venture. "I'd like to do it as a feature," says Hatch. "Science fiction is huge now. I think you can have an incredibly dynamic show. And the nice thing about it is it's not a new premise, it's a show that has deep roots in the science fiction community. It's well known and has strong name value. It has a built-in marketing value. With old elements and new elements you can create a real exciting show."

Essentially, Hatch is hoping to give Battlestar Galactica what the networks never did: a chance to realize its potential. "The network should have given us a second year in order to really do the show the way everybody really knew and hoped it could be. I think everybody knew the first year was a shakedown cruise, and had we been given a second year, Battlestar Galactica could have been one of the most exciting TV shows ever on the air. I think we had the capability of being an extraordinarily exciting show, with some ability to go out there and compete with Star Trek. With its popularity, I really thought that we never got a second year that we deserved."

Larson wishes he had been better equipped to fight for that year. "I'll say this, if I knew then what I know now, I would have worked a lot differently in terms of how I positioned myself with the network; I would have worked more politically to platform ourselves with the network. We would know how to survive a little bit better. Our failure was not being able to sustain that great expectation," Larson says, musing that things might have been different "if we had put it in a different perspective—if we had been on either of the two other networks!"

CAST NOTES

Richard Hatch (Apollo): Born 1947. This popular soap opera actor broke into prime time as Karl Malden's new police partner during the last season of Streets of San Francisco (1976-77). "I have been doing a lot of movies all over the world," says Hatch. "I just did a series of short stories called The Hitchhiker. I did a play called Pepper Street. I'm also working on a couple of movie projects. I'm teaching seminars around the country, inspiring and empowering people to stand up and be counted and learn to speak, training them how to get involved in what's happening in this world and not sit back and let others speak for them. I'm teaching them how to find their own voice in the world. And I use acting as a means of communicating more effectively. It's teaching people how to listen to their own inner voice and ... how to trust, have faith and, with courage, make that inner voice come out. I do these lectures at colleges and I ... help develop original material from the everyday citizen who has never, ever created anything. And help them write their feelings, thoughts and ideas down. I break them into scenes ... and I put them up on a stage and present them as a production."

Dirk Benedict (Starbuck): Born 1944. Prior to Galactica, Benedict starred in Chopper One (1974). Features include SSSSS (1973) with Heather Menzies, and Scavenger Hunt (1979). His career remained healthy with four years on The A-Team. He has written two books, the autobiography Confessions of a Kamikaze Cowboy (1991) and And Then We Went Fishing (1993), both available from Avery Publishing Group. Benedict is interested in writing and directing his own films.

Lorne Greene (Commander Adama): Born 1915. This Canadian-born actor found fame as Ben Cartwright for 14 years on TV's Bonanza (1959-1973). He also starred in Griff (1973). Greene died of pneumonia in 1987.

Terry Carter (Col. Tigh): Born 1929. For seven years he played Sgt. Broadhurst on Dennis Weaver's 1970s series, McCloud. Carter is an award-winning producer/director with more than 30 years in broadcasting and film. He's embraced the fields of broadcasting, documentaries, education and episodic television. Presently, Carter has many television programs in distribution around the world. He's president of Meta-4 Productions, Inc., a production company, and also is involved in a non-profit organization called Council for Positive Images, Inc., a company that produces film and video to promote intercultural and inter-ethnic understanding.

Noah Hathaway (Boxey): This young actor returned to theater screens as the teenage hero in the film fantasy The Neverending Story (1984). He's also appeared in the sit-com Family Ties. He's had parts in The Last Convertible (1979), High Midnight (1982), and the premiere of Call to Glory (1985). He also attended the Director's School of UCLA.

John Colicos (Baltar): Born 1928. Colicos, a native of Canada, has made himself a name playing wonderfully wicked villains and working as a character actor in many TV shows. Colicos also is known for guesting in science fiction shows such as Starlost, Star Trek, and War of the Worlds. He also appeared as a regular in General Hospital (1981). More recently, Colicos performed as King Lear for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation (CBC) radio in Canada. He also had an opportunity to reprise his famous Klingon role, Kor, in Star Trek's Deep Space Nine with William Campbell and Michael Ansara, in the episodes "Blood Oath" and "The Sword of Kahless."

Maren Jensen (Athena): Born 1957. This actress first came to attention on television with a guest shot in The Hardy Boys, which led to her regular role in Galactica. Later, she starred in Deadly Blessing (1981) with Sharon Stone and Lisa Hartman, and put in an appearance in Fantasy Island. She retired to Hawaii in the early 1980s and now lives in Beverly Hills.

Laurette Spang (Cassiopea): In addition to Galactica, Spang had a recurring role in B.I. and the Bear. She has also appeared in several TV movies: Short Walk to Daylight (1972), Maneater (1973), Runaway! (1973), The Rangers (1974), Sarah T.. Portrait of a Teenage Alcoholic (1975), The Love Boat (1976), Tourist (1980), and The Day the Bubble Burst (1982). Spang is married to actor John McCook.

Herb jefferson, Jr. (Boomer): Born 1946. Jefferson appeared in Rich Man, Poor Man (1976). After Galactica he was a regular in The Devlin Connection (1982). He has also been involved with the United States Marine Corps Reserves' Toys for Tots program, the USO, and California Special Olympics. He continues to work today with voice-overs in commercials.

BATTLESTAR GALATICA (MINI)

"Never create what you can't control."

It's been 40 years since the 12 colonies of mankind have heard from their progeny, the Cylons -- robotic creatures who rose up and declared war on their masters, then disappeared. In a sudden, devastating strike, the Cylons return and lay waste to the colonies, aided by human-looking Cylon variants and an unwitting fifth columnist. The attack forces Commander William Adama to call into action his museum-piece warship, the Battlestar Galactica, and soon its company of hotshot fighter pilots is blasting away at the invaders. But their best efforts can't prevent the colonies' obliteration. Fleeing the Cylon genocide, the Galactica leads a rag-tag fleet of survivors on a lonely quest to find humanity's fabled 13th colony -- a planet known as Earth.

After many years of trying to revive the Battlestar Galatica franchise, it was achived by Glen A. Larson in this two part mini-series. This was never going to please all of the fans of the origianl series, but as a poential pilot for a TV series it was actually quite good. If lacking in origianllity.

I've read a lot of your comments, and it amazes me how some people seem to think that the function of this mini-series (and hopefully series) is to cater to the whims of the fans of the original series. Sorry, that's not it.

The die-hard types -- the "fans" (and I am one, of BSG, BSG2003, Trek, B5, etc.) -- are never going to be more than a small fraction of the viewership of any television program. It must appeal to a broader audience, or it is DOOMED.

Ronald D. Moore -- in my opinion, one of the better writer-producers in sci-fi today -- took a concept that pleased just about nobody but the fans and reproduced it in a manner that made it interesting and watchable to a modern audience. And if you step outside of your "I want Lorne Greene, Richard Hatch, and Dirk Benedict" temper tantrums, you will find it interesting and watchable as well.

As for some of the main cast members -- like the Adamas pere et fils -- being stiff and inhuman...my friends, welcome to career military officer types. I would bet you're the same people who complained about Commander Jeffrey Sinclair in the first season of Babylon 5 as well. These are TRUE TO LIFE heroes, not the Saturday morning cartoon comic book heroes.

As for remodeling Starbuck (does she drink a lot of coffee? ;-)) and Boomer into women... well, I had my doubts at first, but I thought they did a magnificent job. As for the Cylons looking like humans now... well, only some of them do. And, to be perfectly honest, it makes a lot of sense for them to be able to blend in with their enemies. Anyone who has knowledge of terrorists in the Middle East knows that the reason they can get in to major civilian population centers and cause hideously evil damage and destruction is because THEY BLEND IN. Use some logic, people!

Much like when going to see a movie based on one of Tom Clancy's novels, I didn't go into this expecting to see the original. I went into it expecting to see something new and interesting with some similarities at the plot level. And I was not disappointed.

Since ENTERPRISE seems to be killing the Trek franchise -- and I admit, I enjoy ENTERPRISE a lot of the time, but a lot of people don't, and I can see why -- I am in high hopes a series based on BSG2003 can revitalize hope for on-going TV science fiction. I don't see why it shouldn't as long as people stop thinking they're going to get Lorne Greene. They're getting Edward James Olmos, one of the most brilliant actors in Hollywood, coming BACK to TV after a successful movie career... and how often does THAT happen?!?

BEAST-FIST SQUADRON GEKIRANGER

AKA: JUUKEN SENTAI GEKIRANGER

Four thousand years ago, in China, a form of Kenpo martial arts was developed, the Beast-Fist style was created by a man named Brusa Ee who built the hidden Beast Origin Village. Beast-Fist is a martial art in which one mimics the abilities of animals as well as reach spiritual peace. However, dissent grew among the creator's ten students. Three believed that they should use the suffering and hatred harnessed within humans to increase their power, using their power to assume their monstrous forms, the Three Fist Demons. After Brusa Ee was murdered, the Fist Demon gathered followers to practice an evil form of the Beast-Fist style known as Confrontation Beast-Fist Akugata. The other seven students believed that true strength should come from within, engaging their former friends in a great war, ending the fight with a forbidden technique to seal the Fist Demons' powers at the cost of losing their own human forms in the process, becoming the Seven Fist Sages.

Followers of the Fist Sages created the Fierce Beast-Fist Beast Arts school: the Beast-Fist of justice whose sport discipline enhances the human body with the self-produced positive Qi called "Fierce Ki." It is taught by Grand Master Sha-Fu, one of the seven Fist Sages, using a sports goods company named "SCRTC" as a front. By present time, a fallen student from the Fierce Beast-Fist school named Rio turns to the Confrontation Beast-Fist-style, rebuilding the Confrontation Beast Hall and bring the long-dead Confrontation Beast-Fist users back to life as kyonshi to collect Confrontation Ki, Fierce Ki's polar opposite Qi, in order to resurrect the Three Fist Demons so that through them, he can become stronger. To fight the new Confrontation Beast Hall, Sha-Fu had been training two youths: Ran Uzaki and Retsu Fukami. Along with Jan Kandou, a feral boy raised by tigers in the woods near the hidden village, the Gekiranger team is formed and later joined by two other Fierce Beast users to save the world from the Akugata's ambitions. However, an even greater evil is using the two sides for it's own agenda.

1 - 2 LESSON 2: WAKI-WAKI! BEAST-FIST GATAI!

Sha-Fu uses the Gekiwaza Double-Double Clone Fist to create a giant version of himself that blew Giant Makirika away. Having seen this, Ran and Retsu ask Sha-Fu to teach them the Gekiwaza technique. Sha-Fu responds saying that the way to obtain it is to first teach Jan the Beast Arts. The two reluctantly start the training, but Jan, bored with basic training, ran off with the GekiNunchaku as Makirika makes his move by flooding the city with Confrontation Beast Chameleon-Fist Mistress Mele to overview his progress. However, the three managed to master the Double-Double Clone Fist by joining their unique attributes to create the GekiBeasts and formed GekiTohja, who defeated Makirika with Mele and her captive, Fierce Beast Fly-Fist user Bae, as witnesses (Bae commentates on the fight). With that settled, Jan decides to stay with SCRTC until his birth parents are found.

1 - 3 LESSON 3: SHIO-SHIO! CLEANING POWER

Jan, unbearably happy from the Fierce Beast-Fist training, receives a special "training exercise" from Sha-Fu that would let him fully master his Gekiwaza: Cleaning. Meanwhile, Confrontation Beast Buffalo-Fist user Gyuuya, has just passed the challenges within the Chamber of Trials and begins his assault on the city once he perfected himself. Though Gyuuya had the upper hand in their first encounter, Jan defeated him with "Cleaning Power" he obtained from his training. But despite GekiTohja defeating Gyuuya, Rio called forth the elite Rinrinshī known as the Five Venom Fists to defeat the Gekirangers.

1 - 4 LESSON 4: ZOWA-ZOWA! THE FIVE VENOM FISTS

Jan and company are brought to a skating rink where they must acquire a difficult lesson, meeting professional skater Junko Yaginuma to master the Kaleido Spiral Jump. However, the Five Venom Fists begin their fight against the Gekirangers, overpowering them until Sha-Fu saved them. However, it was a ploy set up by Rio to deal with Sha-Fu himself with his Confrontation Beast Lion-Fist style, revealing the link between them as not only master and apprentice but rivals based on his dream visions. However, Rio soon learns that his destined rival is not Sha-Fu, but Jan. To confirm this, he had Jan poisoned, forcing him and the others to fight all Five Venom Fist members at once in GekiTohja for the antidote. But the Gekirangers managed to master the Kaleido Spiral Jump in time to get the cure, with Rio calling off the attack for now.

1 - 5 LESSON 5: UJA-UJA! WHAT SHOULD I DO?

Jan is uneasy by both the Venom Fists and especially Rio. To remedy the anxiety, Sha-Fu has Jan undergo another training session by learning from Ran. However, Confrontation Beast Centipede-Fist user Kademu of the Five Venom Fists begins to attack people with his high-speed fists and poisoned Retsu. With Jan forced to watch, Ran challenges Kademu in a duel of high-speed martial arts, the Thousand-Fists Many Strikes competition. Though he won, postponing his fight with Ran on account of wind, Ran was the true winner as she was more accurate than Kademu. Enraged, Kademu fights the Gekirangers in full fury and was destroyed by GekiTohja. Even more, with Kademu dead, the remaining four are suspected of possessing the Ringi Rio needs to hear the Fist Demons once more.

1 - 6 LESSON 6: JUWĀN! - WHAT'S THAT?

A strange picture dealer named Pierre Fujishiro comes to SCRTC to obtain a painting from Retsu, which is still incomplete. As Retsu's past is unveiled, Confrontation Beast Gecko-Fist user Moriya of the Five Venom Fists arrives to cause havoc. The Gekirangers intervene, but are overwhelmed by Moriya's unpredictable tactics and fighting style, forcing them to retreat. During another training session involving window-washing, Ran reveals to Jan that just fighting to win is not always Retsu's goal; to him, true victory is obtained when he beats his opponent at their own game. In their second encounter, Retsu manages to knock Moriya off his wall with artistic feeling at his side, forcing a fight between him and GekiTohja. Moriya reveals his Secret Ringi, Rapid-Growth Arm, much to the chagrin of Mele, as she assumed that Moriya was the True Poison user. Regardless, he is destroyed much to Mele's dismay, with only three left to spy on. Retsu soon completed his painting afterward with Pierre asking to have it.

1 - 7 LESSON 7: SHUBA-SHUBA DANCING!

Miki's daughter Natsume visits the SCRTC offices before her dance lessons, saying she has quit the team. At the same time, Confrontation Beast Scorpion-Fist user Sorisa of the Five Venom Fists wreaks havoc on the city, using her troop of dancing Rinshīs to incite fear among the humans. The Gekirangers attempt to fight Sorisa with little luck before Confrontation Beast Toad-Fist user Maga (who has feelings for Sorisa) intervened because he thought Retsu and Sorisa were making out. Though GekiTohja was unable to kill him, Maga retreated upon learning Sorisa walked off in a huff during the fight, with Mele deciding to help him. To oppose the dance-styles of Sorisa, the Gekirangers must learn some dancing moves themselves from Natsume's teacher. Once the Gekirangers get the hang of dancing with Jan's Shuba-Shuba style, they take a rest and watch Natsume's class practice. They all notice that Natsume is not dancing like the others, and Jan realizes that it is because she does not have "Shuba-Shuba" or feeling in her dancing. Natsume storms out and Miki tries to reassure her, until they are attacked by Sorisa and her Rinshīs. Miki holds them off until the Gekirangers arrive and counter with their dancing. At first, the Gekirangers were able to counter Sorisa, but when Maga arrives with love-confidence from Mele, he and Sorisa quickly gain the upper hand by bringing his defense and her offense together into a devastating tag-team.

1 - 8 LESSON 8: KOTO-KOTO - EARNESTLY KOTO-KOTO

With the combined defense of Maga and offense of Sorisa, the Gekirangers were overwhelmed. To counter the powerful tag-team, the GekiBazooka needs to be used despite still being incomplete. However, to perform the Gekiwaza Fierce-Fierce Cannon, it must be charged within two minutes, leaving the Gekirangers open to attack. Thus Jan must train so he can hold off both two Venom Fists at once while Ran and Retsu charge the weapon up with their Fierce Ki. But Jan's need not to be "Boko-Boko" (beaten up) resulted with the first try a bust. But as Sha-Fu endures the pain of training Ran and Retsu himself, he has Natsume train Jan in the wait department. When the Gekiranger encountered Maga and Sorisa once again, Jan was able to hold them off long enough for the GekiBazooka to fully charge up. The Gekirangers used the new weapon to destroy Maga and later fought and destroyed the irate Sorisa with GekiTohja's Great Spin-Spin Leg. Now only Confrontation Beast Snake-Fist user Braco of the Five Venom Fists remains, and Rio's dreams are getting stronger by the minute to the snake's advantage.

1 - 9 LESSON 9: THE KENA-KENA WOMAN

After remembering her first meeting with Rio, Mele is encountered by Braco, who reveals his plans to assassinate Rio and offers her to join him. Mele refuses and angrily kills Braco, only to learn that he is the True Poison user when he used his power to revive himself after receiving the deathblow. After revealing that the True Poison can resurrect the dead, Braco easily defeats Mele while gloating that he will kill Rio during his most vulnerable state, while he is in deep meditation, with aid from the newly resurrected Moriya and Kademu. Mele, having survived the attack, purposely attacks the Gekirangers while they were training in order to goad them into using the GekiBazooka on her to perfect herself for Rio's sake. Once she managed to learn how to deflect their attack, Jan realizes that she is "Kena-Kena" (ambiguous in terms of affiliation). Meanwhile, Mele hurries to Rio's aid and holds herself until Rio awakens and effortlessly destroys Kademu. While Mele goes after Braco, a fearful Moriya flees to attempt to gather Confrontation Ki until the Gekirangers found him and defeated him for good. As for Mele, she managed to defeat Braco with her training until he explained why Rio wants the True Poison and how only three remain. Though swayed by the notion of being truly alive, Mele snaps Braco's fingers off and kills him on the spot while telling him she gets that feeling of "true life" by staying at Rio's side. Now with the three True Poison fangs, Rio is a step closer to his goal: To revive the Fist Demons and become stronger.

1 - 10 LESSON 10: JARA-JARA ATTACK! THE FIRST ERRAND

We open to the three Gekirangers walking through the forest to deliver a package to an old friend of Sha-Fu's. Prior to it, the Gekirangers were fighting Confrontation Beast Pangolin-Fist user Muzankose who defeated GekiTohja before resuming his task of causing an earthquake. To stop Muzankose, Sha-Fu sends them on an errand to a hut somewhere on Shibe Mountain, said to be haunted. But on their way, they encounter the Mononoke, who tied them up and took the package. Now mad, the Gekirangers change and pursue the Mononoke, forced to fight him to regain the package. But the mononoke's playful (and perverted) moves overwhelmed the Gekirangers. But despite losing to him, the three refused to give up and managed to turn the tables and regained the package. They soon learn the Mononoke is actually the Fist Sage known as Master Elehung Gambou, a grand master of the Fierce Beast Elephant-Fist. Elehung also revealed the item they had delivered to him was the GekiHammer which Ran is to master to fight Muzankose. During all of this, Rio begins to travel to the an ominous mountain where one of the Three Fist Demons rests while Mele has Muzankose to start the earthquake that would destroy the city.

1 - 11 LESSON 11: UKYA-UKYA! BEAST-FIST ARMAMENT

Ran begins to master the Elephant-Fist and the GekiHammer under Master Elehung. However, Elehung's ideals and training methods differ from Sha-Fu's own, thus confusing Ran while Jan and Retsu attempt to fight Muzankose without her. But the antics of Elehung managed to make Ran laugh while she was fly fishing, a part of her training, finally making a hit. Learning that happiness is a needed element in any situation, a "different" Ran uses the GekiHammer to help her friends and defeat Muzankose in time. When Muzankose grew, Elehung tells the Gekirangers to use Ran's training to summon the legendary GekiBeast GekiElephant, which combines with GekiTohja, forming GekiElephanTohja and defeating Muzankose. However, as Sha-Fu sensed, Rio managed to destroy the barrier that kept him from reviving the Sky Fist Demon: Confrontation Beast Hawk-Fist grand master Kata.

1 - 12 LESSON 12: ZOWAN-ZOWAN! CONFRONTATION BEAST-FIST, TRAINING STARTS

While wandering through the city, Jan finds Natsume at a bathhouse looking at the carp windsocks. When the bathhouse's owner Gen-san confronts Jan when he is trying to take down one of the windsocks, Natsume is accidentally sent flying towards the street as a result of Confrontation Beast Eel-Fist user Nagiu's Ringi. The Gekirangers try to fight, but he is too slippery to be hit by their attacks. Sha-Fu sends the trio to train at the bathhouse, where they re-encounter Elehung and Gen-san who is revealed to be a master of "towel-style." Jan learns how to use the "towel-style" and in the next fight with Nagiu, Jan uses one of the carp windsocks to dry the Beast-Man of the slippery mucus, followed by the GekiBazooka. Nagiu soon grows to his giant size, and the Gekirangers fight first as GekiTohja and then GekiElephanTohja. Nagiu is ultimately defeated by the Great Firm-Firm Ball of GekiElephanTohja. Elsewhere, Rio was trying to learn how to attain ultimate power from Kata in a battle to the death, and in the process is blasted by the Hawk-Fist master's Darkness Cannon and is placed within the event of his past that started his path in becoming a Confrontation Beast-Fist user. Rio was able to absorb his own despair and overpowered Kata, sparing Kata for enabling him to become stronger. By being beaten, Kata accepted Rio as a pupil to learn the full power of Confrontation Beast-Fist Akugata.

1 - 13 LESSON 13: SHIN-SHIN! THE SPIRIT'S DANCE

To obtain the despair he needs to teach Rio to channel his hatred as power, Kata sends up his two bodyguards, the two Flying Fists, to be his eyes while providing him more Confrontation Ki. Meanwhile, Sha-Fu takes the Gekirangers to the ballet much the dismay of Jan (who falls asleep in boredom) and Ran and the delight Retsu. In the middle of the performance, Jan woke up and sensed the Flying Fists attacking people, turning their fear into lightning for their plan to destroy the city and get more Confrontation Ki from it. The Flying Fists, Confrontation Beast Crane-Fist user Rūtsu and Confrontation Beast Crow-Fist user Rasuka, defeat the Gekirangers as well as overpowering GekiElephanTohja. When the team asks Sha-Fu on a technique to fly to counter the two flying martial artists, he sends them to a mysterious appreciation festival where they meet Fist Sage Bat Li, a grand master of the Fierce Beast Bat-Fist style. Though he refused at first, Bat Li changes his mind when Retsu shows him his abilities. While Jan and Ran attempt to stop the Flying Fists, Retsu begins learning Fierce Beast Bat-Fist and the art of the war fan from Bat Li, whose lesson is simple: "Abandon all techniques to master this fighting style."

1 - 14 LESSON 14: NETSU-NETSU! FORGET THE TECHNIQUE

Ran and Jan arrive to fight the Flying Fists, who overpower them until Rasuka is offended by them and has Rūtsu fly off while he beats the two Gekirangers by himself, wounding Ran's leg. While Ran is being tended to, Miki brings out the new weapon for Retsu and tells Jan and Ran to give it to him once he has completed his training. This training, in his eyes, is attempting to dance just like Bat Li. He initially has trouble, but he eventually realizes that Bat Li's dancing has no technique. Once Jan and Ran find Retsu and Bat Li, Retsu has mastered the Bat-Fist style while in a trance, and he is given the GekiFan. With the GekiFan, GekiBlue defeats the Flying Fists singlehandedly. The Flying Fists enlarge themselves and are able to unleash their attack, but on Bat Li's words, the Gekirangers enter a trance to bring out legendary GekiBeast GekiBat, with whom GekiTohja combines to form GekiBatTohja to battle the Flying Fists in an aerial dogfight. The fight ends with Rūtsu slamming into the side of a mountain and Rasuka destroyed. Meanwhile, after surviving Kata's training to channel his hatred, a bloodthirsty, berserk Rio attacks the Rinshīs with rage to amplify his malice even more until Rio's hatred became new Confrontation Ki, to Mele's horror. That same hatred awakened Rūtsu as he emerges out of the rubble of the battlefield with intend on getting revenge on the Gekirangers for the death of his partner.

1 - 15 LESSON 15: HOWA-HOWA! MAMA SKILLS

After watching a sparring fight between Rio and Kata. Mele offered to look and revive the other Fist Demons in Rio's place, as their training can help. Rio allows it as an irate Kata decides to further Rio's lesson with the aid of the "now-insane" Rūtsu. At SCRTC, Ran got angry at Jan and Retsu's lack of order until Rūtsu shows up in the city, again. While he fights the guys, taking two energy orbs out of them, throwing them to the ground. GekiYellow attacks Rūtsu, knocking the orbs away. When Ran finds Retsu after the fight, she's shocked to see him as an infant and Jan is a young child. Sha-Fu reveals the orbs to be the Pulse, a qi tied to a person's age and without it, the two have no memory of their older selves. But the two can find their Pulse, so Ran has to care for them as their mother until then. During this, Ran loses Jan while changing Retsu. She finds Jan scaling a building, learning he was aiding a baby bird back to its nest with Jan calling Ran "Howa-Howa". Rūtsu then appears, with intend to kill them in the most hateful way possible. The Gekiranger "family" runs away, eventually finding the Pulse orbs. Ran tries to fight Rūtsu, but she is unable to defeat him, until Jan henshins into GekiRed and sends Rūtsu flying to protect his "mama". Ran used the power of motherly love to overpower Rūtsu's hate, then turning Jan and Retsu back into adults. A furious Rūtsu enlarged, only to be destroyed by GekiBatTohja. Soon after, Ran learns that Retsu and Jan have no memory while without their kodou, with Ran a bit saddened by it. While this was all happening, Mele is having trouble finding the Fist Demons' gravesites until it is revealed that her actual goal was not to just revive the remaining Fist Demons, but to replace Kata with a teacher for Rio who was more to her liking. Upon this revelation, a Fist Demon speaks to her, complimenting her about this, as well as informing Mele of her final resting place. Making her way to the beach on instructions, Mele managed to tear down the barrier and used the True Poison Fang, being blasted back on land by the shockwave of the resurrection of the revived Sea Fist Demon: Confrontation Beast Jelly-Fist grand mistress Rageku.

1 - 16 LESSON 16: JIRI-JIRI! CONFRONTATION BEAST HALL, EXTRACURRICULAR CLASS

The revived Rageku arrives at the Confrontation Beast Hall to meet Rio. However, much to Kata's distaste, Rageku favors Mele more than Rio. When Mele refuses to prove herself by fighting Rio, Rageku poisons Rio as her way to start Rio on the path of suffering and to start Mele's training with a foe of her choosing. Rageku then attacks the city and easily defeats GekiTohja, with Sha-Fu's appearance leading to a revelation on the origins of the Seven Fist Sages and the Three Fist Demons as the first Beast-Fist Masters, until they assumed their current forms and founded the two opposing schools before the Geki-Rin Rebellion that led to the Demons' defeat. Rageku then forces Mele to fight Sha-Fu, immobilizing the Gekirangers to ensure no interference. In order to win, Mele uses Infinite Waves on herself to fight at full strength despite her own internal pain. Rio watches while the poison courses through him, until he overpowers Rageku's Ringi and save Mele from sacrificing herself to kill Sha-Fu. After a brief fight, Rio defeats Rageku although she claimed that she was only testing him for his jealousy of Mele being able to overwhelm Sha-Fu. Rageku then took Rio and Mele as her disciples while as the Gekirangers start training harder.

1 - 17 LESSON 17: GORO-GORO! TEACHER AND STUDENT LOVE

In order to combat Rageku, Sha-Fu sends the team to the isolated Aozame Island to meet the Fist Sage Sharkie Chan, Grand Master of the Fierce Beast Shark-Fist style. In a series of tests which comprised paddling a canoe through several traps, Sharkie becomes impressed by Jan's strength and chooses him as his pupil for learning how to master his style and the GekiSabers. In this training, Jan becomes attached to his teacher, and they form a bond. Meanwhile, Confrontation Beast Hermit Crab-Fist user Dokariya closed in on the group's location, and uses his Ringi Base-Form Robbing Strike to take over Sharkie Chan to have him suffer as Rageku intended: By having him attack the Gekirangers. But Jan's bond with Sharkie allows the Fist Sage to overpower Dokariya's Ringi, with an enraged Jan using the GekiSabers on the Beast-Man before the gang fires GekiBazooka on him. When he becomes a giant, the Gekirangers call upon GekiTohja and use Jan's training to summon the Legendary GekiBeast, GekiShark. They send GekiShark at Dokariya, who is seemingly destroyed, only to be attacked by GekiShark upon its return to everyone's shock.

1 - 18 LESSON 18: SHAKKIN-KĪN! THE BODY IS STRONG

It is revealed that GekiShark is possessed by Dokariya, and it takes an attack from Bat Li and Elehung to tell the Gekirangers to use GekiElephanTohja to defeat GekiShark for the time being. The two Fist Sages berate Sharkie, because they feel that he was not up to the task of teaching a student due to his ideals of a strong body being foolish, before Sha-Fu arrived and suggested that they all go back to the group's campsite to try and continue the training. Sharkie tries to impress Elehung and Bat Li, but they further scold Sharkie's ideals, and he leaves, disheartened as he renounces Jan as his student out of failing him. That night, someone uses one of Sharkie's swords to attack Sha-Fu, and Miki assumes that it must be Sharkie, with Bat Li, Elehung, and the Gekirangers pursuing him. The next morning, the two Fist Sages, Retsu, and Ran find/capture Sharkie, while Miki and Sha-Fu clean up the campsite. While Sha-Fu is distracted, Miki picks up one of tent's pins and charges at him, only to be stopped by Jan who knew something was wrong all along. Dokariya reveals himself after being defeated in Miki's body by Sha-Fu and then jumps into Jan to use him to kill Sha-Fu as Rageku wished. However, Jan overpowers the Hermit Crab-Fist user and forces him out of his body, revealing that Sharkie's training allowed him to overcome the Ringi. Jan then uses the techniques Sharkie taught him to defeat Dokariya with the Gekiwaza Wave-Wave Slash. Dokariya then enlarges and jumps into the sea. But GekiTohja follows by summoning GekiShark and combine to form GekiSharkTohja. The battle underwater ends with GekiSharkTohja's Great Firm-Firm Slash destroying Dokariya. After the battle, Sha-Fu approves of Sharkie as a true master, bringing the Fist Sage to tears. Back at the Confrontation Beast Hall, Rio reveals his one true rival to Rageku: a man with a "White Tiger" Fierce Ki named Byakko.

1 - 19 LESSON 19: GOKIN-GOKIN! SHOWDOWN WITH RIO

While Confrontation Toad-Fist user Eruka fights the Gekirangers, Rio undergoes a rite of passage to become even more powerful. Eruka is defeated by the Beast-Fist Armament Triangle Attack of GekiTohja armaments as Kata and Rageku give life to two statues in the Confrontation Beast Hall, the Confrontation Machine Soldiers Butoka and Wagataku, to assist Rio. When he arrives in the outskirts of the city, he challenges the Gekirangers to battle, assuming Black Lion form and using the Confrontation Machine Soldiers to keep Jan and Retsu at bay while he faces off with Ran. She does her best to try to defeat Rio, but not even her GekiHammer Bullet-Bullet Ball nor her Mom-Mom Strike can defeat Rio. Retsu then fights Rio with his Double GekiFans, but his Air-Air Slash does nothing against Rio. With Retsu defeated, Jan enters the fray, unable to defeat Rio with either his GekiSaber Thin-Thin Slash or Wave-Wave Slash attacks. He then calls upon Ran and Retsu to try and defeat Rio with the GekiBazooka's Fierce-Fierce Cannon, but even it cannot harm Rio, as he sends an even stronger blast of Confrontation Ki at them, leaving Ran and Retsu back in their civilian clothing. Jan is left standing as he staggers towards Rio who uses the Brave-Roar Wave Ringi on Jan that burns the remnants of his Gekiranger suit off. Rio attempts to finish Jan off, but Jan begins to burn with an intense white Fierce Ki as he attempts to give Rio a finishing punch. Before he can go through with it, he burns himself out and passes out, saying that Rio is "Gokin-Gokin." Rio recognizes this Fierce Ki as the same Fierce Ki as that of the White Tiger as Sha-Fu shows up and explains that it is the Extreme Ki. Sha-Fu adds that it would be more of a victory for Rio to defeat the Gekirangers when they all obtain the Extreme Ki. He agrees to go with Rio as his prisoner, and Rio gives the Gekiranger three days to obtain Extreme Ki or Sha-Fu will be executed. The Gekirangers have lost all hope, but Miki shows up later in the night to bring the team back into their senses. She tells them that they will have to be trained by the final three Fist Sages, who just have arrived to Japan, to achieve the Extreme Ki.

1 - 20 LESSON 20: GICHO-GICHO! TRIANGLE MATCH

To obtain the Extreme Ki, the Gekirangers seek out the Fist Sages that will help them, but they are attacked by the very Fist Sages that they are looking for. The Gekirangers are defeated, and the Fist Sages introduce themselves: Gorie Yen of the Fierce Beast Gorilla-Fist, Michelle Peng of the Fierce Beast Penguin-Fist, and Bion Biao of the Fierce Beast Gazelle-Fist styles. Miki then explains that they must compete with the Fist Sages of the Master Triangle in the Three Peaks Battle, three competitions based on each Gekiranger's own flaws. First, Jan and Gorie Yen compete in a challenge of the "Heart" where the first to stack 500 yen coins on their edges wins. Jan has difficulty, while Gorie asks him why he fights to which Jan does not have a suitable answer. Gorie completes his stack, while a upset Jan was too frustrated to get one to stand. Soon after, he and Retsu fight due to the loss until Ran gets them to stop. Next, she competes with Michelle Peng in a challenge of "Technique" where they skateboard in two turns on a half pipe erected on the roof of SCRTC headquarters with an electronic scoreboard. Michelle performs multiple spins on her first turn, not seeing a need for a second. When Ran attempts the same challenge, she falls on her first try, but Retsu's advice to mentally draw a picture in her mind allows her to ties with Michelle on the second try. The last competition is one of "Body" between Bion Biao and Retsu, where they must grapple to take a bandana off of the other's arm. Retsu attempts to use his Technique, but Biao counters easily. Jan cheers Retsu on, telling him to forget about the techniques and beauty and just fight. The competition lasted until dawn with Retsu managing to take Biao's bandana at sunrise. The Gekirangers win the competition, realizing that by supporting each other, they can do anything. While the competition had occurred, Sha-Fu reveals to Rio that the factor of friendship will allow his pupils to obtain Extreme Ki unlike Rio himself, who loses his temper upon hearing this fact and burns the cage with his Confrontation Ki, telling Sha-Fu that he will face them now. Jan senses Rio on the move as the Master Triangle provide the Gekirangers with the Super Geki Claws, which will allow them to access the Extreme Ki, before they head off to face Rio.

1 - 21 LESSON 21: BIKI-BIKI-BIKI-BIKI! KAGEKI EXTREMELY

Though the Gekirangers completed their training, they have yet to obtain Extreme Ki and Jan is still disheartened by Gorie Yen's statement and starts rethinking what he is fighting for. But in spite of these facts, the trio made their way to Rio, whom Sha-Fu asked why he wants to be stronger. While the fight occurs, Kata and Rageku are collecting Confrontation Ki from the people of the city with intend on destroying it once their student wins. Ran attempts to use her fast fists but Rio used the Jelly-Fist style to evade her attempt before swiftly defeating her. Retsu tries his hand, but Rio uses the Flying-Fist style which Retsu is unable to counter. Jan attempts to fight Rio, again, but even with the GekiSabers, he is not a match for Rio. With Jan's Gekiranger suit burned off, Rio states to Sha-Fu that it is his choice to be stronger that is his reason to fight. However Sha-Fu reveals that deep down, Rio is still afraid of his past. Refusing to accept that truth, Rio attacks Ran and Retsu, leaving them bloodied to Jan's horror. It was then Jan realizes that his true reason to fight is to protect everyone. This allows Jan to finally use his Super GekiClaw and transform into Super GekiRed, negating the Fist Demons' attack on the city and knocking Rio into a cliff face. Mele sends the Confrontation Machine Soldiers to aid Rio, with Ran and Retsu following Jan's example and become Super GekiYellow and Super GekiBlue. With their new power, Restu and Ran are able to destroy Butoka and Wagataku while Jan deals a finishing blow to Rio, defeating him. As the gang pursue to free Sha-Fu, Mele attempts to hold a furious Rio back. At Mele's behest, Kata and Rageku use the Confrontation Ki they gathered to reconstruct Butoka and Wagataku into giants. The Super Gekirangers call upon their new Super GekiBeasts along with the other GekiBeasts and they destroy Wagataku. Butoka is all that remains, and it absorbs its partner's Confrontation Ki before dissipating all of the older GekiBeasts. The Super Gekibeasts then form GekiFire to destroy Butoka. As the Gekirangers celebrate their victory, an enraged Rio realizes Jan is the White Tiger's successor and is more intent on destroying them.

1 - 22 LESSON 22: KYUI-KYUI! DATE WITH A CELEBRITY

Still maddened by his defeat, Rio's rage attracts the attention of the third and final Fist Demon. Upon reaching the final resting place, Rio attempts to resurrect him against Kata and Rageku's wishes out of fear of what would occur, only to learn that the final True Poison fang has no effect. He then learns that the final Fist Demon's heart, the Ikigimo, was removed from his body after his defeat. Refusing to accept defeat, Rio sends out Mele to find the Ikigimo, with her enlisting Confrontation Beast Pig-Fist user Tabū. Meanwhile at SCRTC, Sha-Fu calls in Sharkie, whom the Ikigimo was entrusted to. However, Sharkie reveals that he had lost it when a tsunami hit Aozame Island. But, the item was found by the Nanboku family and in the possession of a celebrity girl named Alice Nanboku. Jan found her and the gang tries to get the Ikigimo from her, but both Retsu and Ran's offerings failed to get Alice's favor as she takes Jan out on the town until he shows Alice the "Kyui-Kyui", or natural beauty of things. When he asks about her "Kyui-Kyui", Alice explains she has none. Jan finds a large amethyst stone and gives it her, only for her to throw it away when he asked for the Ikigimo. She is then captured by Tabū and Mele takes the Ikigimo from her. Jan, unable to become Super GekiRed, tries to fight Mele in vain. Jan is forced to save Alice from becoming Tabū's lunch rather go after Mele. By the time he arrives, he still cannot become Super GekiRed and is overpowered by Tabū. But when he sees that she is about to fall, he is finally able to transform into Super GekiRed and saves her from certain doom. Ran and Retsu arrive with Gorie Yen and Sharkie, and the Super Gekirangers use the GekiBazooka to destroy Tabū, but he survives and grows. The Super Gekirangers call upon GekiFire, but it fists is not enough so the team calls upon GekiShark and forms GekiSharkFire, whose blades finally destroy Tabū. Her experience with Jan that allowed Alice to find her own "KyuiKyui". Back at the Confrontation Beast Hall, Rio succeeds in bringing back to life the Land Fist Demon Maku, the Confrontation Bear-Fist grand master. However, as the others feared, Maku is enraged of the changes that occurred in his absence. The shockwaves of Maku's rage alerts the others at SCRTC with Sha-Fu seeing the only course of action is the enlisting of a new Gekiranger to counter Maku's rebirth. Meanwhile, the very same shockwave also awakens a mysterious young man with a silver cross around his neck from a cave.

1 - 23 LESSON 23: GURE-GURE! SUKEBAN CAPTAIN

Sha-Fu believes that with another Gekiranger coming, a team captain is necessary and he selects Ran to be that suitable leader. She tries to teach some sense into Jan and Retsu by reviewing their past battles until Confrontation Beast Porcupine-Fist user Mārashiya begins his attack on the city. Ran tries to order Jan and Retsu in the battle, but they are attacked and Ran is hit by Mārashiya's Ringi Needle-Sword Mountain, turned into a sukeban with no cure in sight. She wreaks havoc in the SCRTC office, with everyone attempting to restraint her in vain as she jumps out of the building, taking off on a motorcycle while Natsume watches. But while the rest of the group tries to figure out what to do, Jan and Retsu run off to intercept Mārashiya, briefly encountering a werewolf who went after Restu before eluding. No sooner did the werewolf leave than Mārashiya arrive and the two Gekirangers fight him. Meanwhile, being a sukeban in her youth, Miki tracks Ran in an underground club, easily taking her down and dragging her back to SCRTC to force her to remember her heart and regain her oldself, allowing Ran to help Jan and Retsu, as well as have her use her Extreme Ki to burn the Ringi off her. The Gekiranger managed to destroy Mārashiya by using Ran's experience as a Sukeban in the new GekiElephantFire formation. While this all occurred, Maku overthrows Rio while showing off his Fury Confrontation Ki, which Rio is determined to learn at the cost of his dignity. A sadden Mele would leave the chamber and be confronted the mysterious Long, who offers her good news. Back in Tokyo, after making their peace, the Gekirangers see the werewolf, who reverts to human form. Then the figure turned around, Retsu realizes that it is his supposedly dead older brother: Gou Fukami.

1 - 24 LESSON 24: GARU-GARU! WHAT!?! MY YOUNGER BROTHER!?

Learning the werewolf to be his older brother Gou, Retsu confronts him, using his silver cross to identify himself. At the Confrontation Beast Hall, refusing to rely on Rio and Mele in his campaign, Maku calls upon his bodyguard, Hihi of the Confrontation Beast Baboon-Fist, to herald the new Fierce-Confrontation Rebellion. Mele, remembering Long's words, decides to follow Hihi to understand the cryptic news he told her. Back at SCRTC, Sha-Fu reveals that Gou used a forbidden Gekiwaza in an attempt to try and seal Rio. When he learns that Rio evaded the attempt and now leads the Akugata, Gou is angered at hearing the news. But Gou is more vexed that Retsu is a Beast-Fist artist, leaving SCRTC in a huff and confronting Hihi with his Violet Fierce Ki until the presence of a golden aura causes him to transform into a werewolf as the Gekirangers arrive. Retsu stays with Gou to try and calm him down while Jan and Ran go to fight Hihi. Once Gou becomes human again, he refuses to let Retsu go after Hihi and brings him to the church where they grew up to remember the events of their last meeting: with Gou having Retsu vow to never practice the Beast-Fist and focus on his art. Gou then attempts to reason and then punch Retsu, but both failed as Retsu tells him that he has chosen his path long ago, before being informed by Miki that Ran and Jan are in trouble. Gou chases after Restu, witnessing his fight against Hihi as Super GekiBlue, who realizes the error of his ways in preventing Retsu from his true calling in seeing his fighting style. Though defeated, Hihi enlarged himself and was soon knocked off into the nearby mountain by GekiBatFire. Gou later apologizes to Retsu, and they leave the battlefield. However, thanks to a upset Mele, Hihi regains consciousness and assumes a Fury Confrontation Ki-empowered form, attacking the Gekirangers in full-fury.

1 - 25 LESSON 25: HINE-HINE! JUST MY VIOLET FIERCE KI

After being injured by the "Fury Confrontation Ki"-powered Hihi, the Gekirangers learn from Sha-Fu of the Fury Confrontation Ki and were advised not to access the Extreme Ki in their injured state. Retsu believes that his brother Gou will assist them as the new Gekiranger, but he refuses, revealing he does not fight for justice and showing his Violet Fierce Ki as proof before leaving the SCRTC office. At the Confrontation Beast Hall, Rio is marveled by Hihi's new form as Mele reveals that Maku infused the Rinrinshī with his power, attempting to ask the Fist Demon to give some to Rio too. This resulted with Maku physically rebuffing her, as well as Rio's disappointment at Mele for suggesting that he takes the easy road. Mele leaves in tears, confronted by Long who tells her that Rio's greatest rival, Gou, would be an issue should he become a Gekiranger unless she kills him first. Gou visits a beach before being hit by the mysterious gold cloud and turns into the werewolf. But Natsume was there and managed to calm Gou down back to human form. Gou evaded Natsume only to run into Mele, telling her he has no intent to be a Gekiranger while defending himself until he has to save Natsume from an attack. Miki soon arrives and after Gou realizes that he has a sense of justice, he gains the GongChanger, an item commissioned by Sha-Fu long ago. Using it, Gou becomes GekiViolet to defeat Mele. While this occurred, the Gekiranger battle Hihi in their regular forms. However, once enlarged, Hihi overpowers GekiTohja and focuses his attacks on the right leg until GekiViolet arrives in GekiWolf. When GekiCheetah disappears due to Ran's own injuries, GekiWolf becomes a replacement limb, forming GekiTohja Wolf and defeating Hihi with the Gekiwaza Great Wolf-Wolf Leg. With the fight over, Sha-Fu is glad that Gou found his path and is truly home. With Rio feeling Gou still alive and with greater strength like the others, this incites him to access the Fury Confrontation Ki within himself, just as Long had planned.

1 - 26 LESSON 26: MOHE-MOHE! CONSULTING YOUR WORRIES

During a spar training, Gou negates the Gekiwaza Fierce-Fierce Cannon with his equally strong Gekiwaza Rigid-Rigid Fist. However, Gou ignores Jan's praises, making him feel "Mohe-Mohe" and runs off for reasons the others cannot figure out. Meanwhile, Maku unearths an army of Confrontation Machine Soldiers hidden within the mountainside, empowering a Butoka/Wagataku pair with his Fury Confrontation Ki to have them destroy the city as his vanguards. Rio, seeing that his Fury Confrontation Ki is a spark compared to Maku's, soon leaves while telling Mele not to follow him. Back at SCRTC, Michelle Peng shows up to ask about the new team, revealing that she took Jan to see Gorie Yen. At Gou's behest, she takes the gang to Gorie's Beast-Fist Consultation Office shack in the dark woods. Gorie reveals he finished consulting Jan, sending him off, and then speaks to Gou about how he feels about fitting in with the team. While looking for Jan, Ran and Retsu encounter Butoka and Wagataku, with Gou arriving at the battle just as the two have been nearly defeated, with Gou intend to fight on his own to protect their Triangle. But Jan shows up and reveals that he wants them all to work as a group of four instead of solely the Triangle. As the four Gekirangers, they are able to destroy Butoka and Wagataku with their team Gekiwaza Geki Union. However, Maku's rage recreates Fury Confrontation Ki Soldiers into giants and the gang calls upon GekiFire and GekiWolf, but are unable to do much until Gou manages to summon GekiTohja Wolf, and they win. Elsewhere, Rio pays Gorie a visit, inquiring if he is powerful enough to defeat Maku and what Gorie knows of the Dark Forest Path. Rio manages to defeat Gorie, who reveals that Maku is too powerful for Rio to fight. As a result, Rio learns of the Beast-Fist Sacred Grounds of Beast-Origin Village, where he would find the means to destroy Maku and the Fierce Beast Fist.

1 - 27 LESSON 27: BERAN-BERAN! BURN, COMMENTATOR

During a fight with Pouōte of the Confrontation Beast Archerfish-Fist style, Long intervenes and uses his Ringi to transform Gou into his werewolf form while in GekiTohja Wolf, turning him on the others inside GekiFire. The two giants defeat each other, with the resulting blast sending both Gou and Bae flying to the same location. Though he needed to return to Mele, Bae felt he had to follow Gou. When he returns to SCRTC headquarters, the other Gekirangers are being treated for their wounds, and Bion Biao brings in Bae, who is labeled a traitor. Bae formally introduces himself to the gang and reveals that he, like Gou used the imperfect version of forbidden Gekiwaza Beast-Beast Full-Body Change in a battle with Mele during the Fierce-Confrontation Rebellion, but he was defeated and eaten by Mele. It is then that Gou is overcome by his beast side and attacks the others, just as Pouōte restarts his rampage. Jan stays to try and keep Gou at bay while Ran and Retsu go to fight Pouōte. Jan is able to keep his ground with Sha-Fu revealing that an evil Ki is within Gou's body that evokes the change. Not wanting to stand on the sideline, Bae begins to speak to Gou's human heart, freezing the werewolf Gou in his tracks. But he starts to feel his life starting to fade, as he was brought back by the residual Confrontation Ki that Rio used to revive Mele ten years prior. Bent on saving him despite dying, Bae uses his Gekiwaza Speak-Speak Soul to have Gou undergo a metaphysical battle with his beast side, ending up victorious. He and Jan join Ran and Retsu in defeating Pouōte, with GekiTohja Wolf dealing the final blow. However, Bae dies and everyone is saddened until Mele arrives, her Confrontation Ki revitalizing him as they leave. Meanwhile, a mysterious young man in a white and orange tracksuit returns from traveling abroad.

1 - 28 LESSON 28: WITH BISHI-BISHI PIKĪN OSU!

At SCRTC, Master Sha-Fu tells the team that they are going to be getting a fifth team member. At the same time, Jan is out in town buying some menchi katsu, but a young man in a white jumpsuit buys the last one before Jan can. They fight over the food until Jan senses Niwa of the Confrontation Beast Crocodile-Fist as he is fighting Ran, Retsu, and Gou. Jan tries to join them in the fight, but because he had the menchi katsu, the other man interrupts the battle by driving a truck towards Jan and allow Niwa to leave. When Sha-Fu shows up, he greets the man, Ken Hisatsu, the fifth Gekiranger. They all visit the SCRTC Meisters workshop, home to Ken's family, but his father is angry at him for leaving the country during training. Ken realizes that he has alienated himself from the other Gekirangers, with Sha-Fu giving him a chance to redeem himself by successfully befriending one of his teammates. Ken decides to befriend Jan by giving him menchi katsu, but it does not work. When he senses Niwa on the attack again, Jan attempts to go but is hindered when Ken's sister Sachiko tries to defend her brother. But when Ken admits defeat, she gives up and was going to run off when a sign nearly crushes her. Ken uses his Fierce Ki Hard Diamond technique to save her from the sign, and Sha-Fu arrives with the repaired GekiChangers designed for Ken. At the battle with Niwa, Jan distracts him long enough for Ken to summon the SaiBlade and transform into GekiChopper and destroys Niwa with his Gekiwaza Sharp-Sharp Blade. Back at SCRTC, the gang celebrate until Sha-Fu asks Ken about the SoZyuTo which he gave him, to which Ken avoids the subject. Elsewhere, Rio is making his way to the Beast Origin Village, until Long arrives in various guises to inform him of the Sevenfold Barrier of Seven Sages that only the SoZyuTo can break.

1 - 29 LESSON 29: GUDA-GUDA HERE-HERE! SHOPPING

Though Ken now on the team, it turned out that he lost SoZyuTo and left to find it. Ken took Retsu with him, revealing that he actually sold it as they arrive to Chinatown. Once they arrive to the store he sold the SoZyuTo to, they are confronted by its shopkeeper, Hanyun: an elderly woman with a hatred for Fierce Beast-Fist users. When Ken asked for it back, Hanyun refused to sell it back with her many traps keeping the two at bay. Elsewhere, Kata sends his student, Chouda of the Confrontation Beast Ostrich-Fist to collect more suffering for Maku as Rio returns, giving Mele instructions to find the SoZyuTo. As Chouda begins his attack on the city, Jan, Ran, and Gou intervene, only to fall for Chouda's deception. When they dispatch with her latest trap, Ken and Retsu find an old photograph of a young woman with Bat Li when the Fist Sage himself appears and attacks the two. However, Ken realizes it is not Bat Li and uses his Fierce Ki Hard Diamond grind to reveal that it was actually Hanyun. She tells her story of how she fell in love with Bat Li when he saved her, but he did not fulfill his vow to remain by her side as he promised. The battle with Chouda continues, as he is defeated by the three others in an attempt to destroy him and then grows to his giant size. Gou fights in GekiTohja Wolf, as Ran and Jan cannot do anything until Retsu arrives to the battlefield in GekiGazelle. Chouda is defeated by both, but not before he created an egg that burrowed underground as he died. Meanwhile, Ken then brings Hanyun to see Bat Li, who thanks her for the charm she made for him long ago and Hanyun is brought to tears as she gives Ken the SoZyuTo to thank him. Ken returns to the group with the SoZyuTo in hand, but Sha-Fu scolds him for having sold it in the first place but forgives him for helping Hanyun. Meanwhile, Rio gets into a confrontation with Maku over his whereabouts and a question of loyalty leads to a fight between them.

1 - 30 LESSON 30: THE SEI-SEI AND DOU-DOU WOMAN

When Mele returns to the Confrontation Beast Hall after finding the SoZyuTo's whereabouts, she finds Rio fighting Maku and forced to reveal how strong he became. However, even with Fury Confrontation Ki, Rio is still unable to best Maku in combat. At the last second, Mele intervenes by shielding Rio, promising him that she will retrieve the SoZyuTo if he stands down for now. Rio reluctantly accept defeat and soon was in a cell while Maku ponders a suitable punishment. At SCRTC, though offered the SoZyuTo, Sha-Fu allows Ken to keep it. However, the rest of the team scolded Ken for having sold it in the first place and his laidback nature. He escapes to meet Sachiko and give her a birthday present, noticing Mele watching him. Once Sachiko leaves, Mele demands the SoZyuTo from Ken, preferring to win it in a fight. But the other Gekirangers intervene and Mele leaves just as Jan senses a "Zowa-Zowa". This leads the team to the new Chouda born from his parent's final Ringi and thus immune to the all attacks but GekiChopper's. Just as he was about to finish the Beast-Man, Ken sees Sachiko, only to realize it is someone else who tells him that Mele kidnapped the real Sachiko and that she will be returned in exchange for the SoZyuTo. Knocking out Gou, Ken arrives to where Mele is holding his sister hostage, offering that they finish their fight to settle this. Mele accepts and over-powers Ken, who wins barely and Mele accepts defeat. However, Long's prodding forces Mele to send Sachiko to a watery grave and steal the SoZyuTo from Ken. Upon realizing what she has just done, she begins to burn Fury Confrontation Ki, much to Long's approval. After finding Sachiko saved by Gou, Ken and Gou arrive back at the battle with Chouda. The five Gekirangers overwhelm Chouda with their multiple attacks, ending with GekiChopper's Many-Many Slash. When Chouda uses Wicked Body Overpowering Heavenly Change, the Super Gekirangers defeat him in GekiFire. Though Ken was ashamed of losing the SoZyuTo, Sha-Fu ensures him that he and the other Fist Sages will handle it as Mele returns to the Confrontation Beast Hall, freeing Rio as they both go to the Beast Origin Village.

1 - 31 LESSON 31: WE MUNI-MUNI!

At Natsume's school, the star player of the basketball team, Shinichi, was winning the game until his selfishness resulted with the team losing. On his way home, he sees Tsuneki of the Confrontation Beast Fox-Fist style and holds his own for a short time until the Gekirangers arrive to help him. However, he still does not wish to have any help and is captured by Tsuneki as a shield. GekiChopper is about to save him, but GekiRed stops him to ensure Shinichi's safety. The boy does manage to escape, but so does Tsuneki, who fires an arrow into the air to begin his plan. Jan tries to befriend Shinichi with Ken, trying to show him the meaning of "Muni-Muni" (teamwork), but it ends badly as they are trapped in Tsuneki's Secret Ringi Fox Dimension Great Bomb, which would explode from amassing the energy of those who suffer within it. Ken attempts to hold the stronger Tsuneki him off as Jan and Shinichi run away. Shinichi learns the meaning of Muni-Muni, as Ken saves him and Jan from certain doom. The two transform into Super GekiRed and GekiChopper and use Shinichi's planning to deliver the final blow with the Gekiwaza Sharp-Sharp Extreme Ki Slash, negating the Ringi as a result in time. Tsuneki then grows to giant size and fights GekiElephantFire and GekiTohja Wolf, with Shinichi and GekiChopper cheering on. With a basketball like shoot with the EleHammer, Tsuneki is destroyed. At a later basketball game, Shinichi's team wins because he passes the ball to Seiji. Meanwhile, with Rio and Mele gone, Maku takes out his frustration on Kata and Rageku before deciding to go after the two. However, Long confronts Maku over the Confrontation Beast Fist's leadership, which results in a fight. But Long takes his leave after dodging all of Maku's attacks easily, revealing that the fight was a distraction as Rio and Mele have already arrived at the site of the Beast Origin Village. But before they can tear down the Sevenfold Barrier of Seven Sages with the SoZyuTo, they are confronted by Sha-Fu.

1 - 32 LESSON 32: ZOWANGI-ZOWANGO! THE GATHERING, BEAST ORIGIN VILLAGE

Rio and Mele managed to arrive at the Beast Origin Village thanks to the SoZyuTo. However, they hindered by all seven Fist Sages, who have no choice but to make a stand to give Rio away from the Beast Fist God that dwells within. Though the two had Fury Confrontation Ki, the Fist Sages overpowered the Rio and Mele. However, the Fist Demons arrive on Maku's cloud, with Maku bent on punishing Rio for his disrespect towards him. But Sha-Fu chided Maku, by revealing that Maku was the same with their mentor, Brusa Ee, revealing how Maku and the other First Demon murdered their master, Brusa Ee, with the Seven Fist Sages stopping them from world dominion. Though Maku was bent on finish their fight, Kata out of curiosity of the importance behind their old training grounds in relation to this god dwelling there, using his Ringi to probe Sharkie's mind and learned that after the fight, the Seven Fist Sage created SaiDain to hold their master's soul. When Sha-Fu questions Maku's reason, he infuriates the Fist Demon to enlarge and attempted to kill the Fist Sages, only to hindered by GekiFire. But even through GekiBat and GekiShark, GekiFire was easily defeated by the stronger Maku, who intends to teach the Gekirangers a lesson in respect. The Fist Sages restrain Maku and the Fist Demons, allowing the Gekirangers to pursue Rio and Mele, facing them within SaiDain's chamber. But Rageku arrives during their fight and uses her Ringi on the seven to send them all back in time as Maku ordered.

1 - 33 LESSON 33: FURE-FURE GATCHIRI! KUNG FU CHŪSHINGURA

Rageku's Secret Ringi sends the Gekirangers to January 30, 1703 at the time of the Edo Era, with Rio and Mele no where to be found. But a scream attracted their attention and found Confrontation Beast Anglerfish-Fist user Mukoua as he emerged from the body of Kira Yoshinaka and wounded Mōri Koheita to take the item he had, revealing that he is here on orders to keep the gang trapped in time. The Gekirangers take the boy's scroll to Lady Yōzeiin, the wife of the late Asano Naganori, who reveals that Ōishi Yoshio and his 47 Ronin followers are to finally avenge their master this night. Hearing the rumors of Kira's possession true, Yōzeiin pleas the Gekirangers to remove the "evil spirit" before the Akō Rōshi Raid begins. While getting ready, the guys find Mele who is tending to Rio and his memory loss, revealing SoZyuTo gone. Realizing the item Mukoa stole is the SoZyuTo, the Gekirangers arrive to find Kira, fighting their way through Kira's houseguard with their kung-fu skills. The search seemed hopeless until Mele arrives alongside the restored Rio, who easily finds Mukoua. While Ken and Gou tend to Kira, the others fight Mukoua. But Mukoua eats the SoZyuTo before enlarging himself. On Rio's suggestion, the gang form GekiRinTohja once again, who battles Mukoua and wins, with SoZyuTo expelled in the explosion. With SoZyuTo back, Rio, Mele, and the Gekirangers return to their time as the Akō Rōshi Raid begins. However, once back, they find the Beast Origin Village in flames.

1 - 34 LESSON 34: GOWAN-GOWAN'S DAIN-DAIN! BEAST FIST GIANT GOD, KENZAN

When the Gekirangers returned from the past back to the Beast Origin Village, they find it consumed in flames. Ken, refusing to accept SaiDain being destroyed in the fire, runs off to the remains of the site with Rio and Mele following. Jan and the others were about to follow when Kata arrived, revealing that Maku defeated the Fist Sages before he and the other Fist Demons had sealed the Fist Sages into a boulder so Maku can siphon their lives. While the other Gekirangers battle Kata, Ken battles Rageku after learning she started the fire. But both battles were going horrible for the Gekirangers as Jan's group were taken in by Kata's genjutsu Secret Ringi Illusionary Death Prison while Ken was unable to penetrate Rageku's defense. But Ken and Jan refused to accept defeat, managing to defeat their respective opponents. Infuriated for being humiliated, Kata enlarges and overpowers both GekiFire and GekiTohja Wolf. But having fulfilled his vow, Ken regains SoZyuTo and SaiDain emerges from the ruins to battle the Fist Demon. GekiChopper then invokes SaiDain's true power, empowering the Gekirangers with the Beast Power Bloom before defeating Kata in SaiDaiOh. However, the Fist Sages are still trapped in stone and SaiDain's effect were double-edged as Rio and Mele become even stronger. As for Maku, aware of Kata's death, he drinks the life energy he managed to take from the Fist Sages to become more powerful.

1 - 35 LESSON 35: GYUON-GYUON! BEAST POWER BLOOM

Due to SaiDain's awakening, the Gekirangers' full power awakens, along with Rio and Mele. However, the Fist Sages still encased in stone makes Jan feel guilty and he runs off in haste to find Maku to break the Ringi. To make things worse, after drinking the siphoned lifeforce of the Fist Sages, Maku decides to handle the Gekirangers himself while allowing Rio to live long enough to see his rivals' demise. He uses the entire Rinshī army to attack the city to lure them out, with the Gekirangers fighting the hordes of Rinshī. Jan sensed what he thought to be Maku, but was actually Rio and the two fight. As Rio thought, they both had become stronger than before due to being affected by the Beast Power Bloom. With that, Rio tells GekiRed to kill Maku and end their masters' war before they settle their own. Back at the city, Maku easily overpowers the four Gekirangers and was about to kill them when Super GekiRed arrives in time and turns the tables with using the Super SaiBlade to beat the Fist Demon in a one-on-one battle with his own Extreme Ki Hard Diamond. After encouraging the others to feel their full power, the five Gekirangers combine their qi and signature attacks to defeat Maku. However, Maku enlarges and GekiFire and GekiTohja Wolf are overpowered by him. SaiDaiOh has no luck in the fight as sun sets on the battlefield. But the Gekirangers' refusal to give up results with a new formation: SaiDaiGekiFire. With all Three Fierce Beast-Fist qi combined together, Maku is finally destroyed. Maku's death releases the Fist Sages from the Three Fist Demons' Secret Ringi. While the fight occurred, Rageku is horrified that Maku was outmatched by weaker opponents. Long then appears, telling her that she served her purpose and liquifies her before taking her staff to present to Rio. With the Three Fist Demons dead and Rio mastering their lessons, Long offers him the chance to master a power greater than both Beast Fist schools: the Phantom Beast Fist.

1 - 36 LESSON 36: MUKYU-MUKYU! THE THREE KAITŌ SISTERS

At SCRTC, Ken gets frustrated that the other Gekirangers minus Retsu want to use SoZyuTo themselves. While this occurred, Retsu helps Sharkie in moving Elehung's things until they find a diamond he got from a Hong Kong starlet he dated in the past. This turns out to be the Raspberry Diamond, which costs 20 billion yen and attracts the attention of the Blossom-Storm Sisters, a trio of jewel thieves who seek to take the diamond for its beauty. During the fight, one of the sisters, Cherry, saved Retsu from getting hurt. But the sisters are later attacked by an Rinshī who is also after the diamond to bribe Mele into promoting him to the Rinrinshi rank. Retsu comes to their rescue, driving the Rinshi away as the two Fist Sages arrive. Taking them to a Chinese restaurant, Rose and Lily attempt to steal the diamond though using sake, with Cherry refusing to go along and intends to quit. But Rose and Lily refuse to lose the diamond and are over-powered by Retsu using his Jaguar-Drunk Fist style. During the fight, the Rinshī returns wearing Butoka armor, succeeding in stealing the gem. Once giving it to Mele, she awards him with her Infinite Violent Waves, but messed up and cause him to enlarge instead. By then, Ken runs in to fight the giant Butoka in SaiDaiOh to prove that SaiDaiOh is his, easily defeating the Butoka-Rinshī. Once the other Gekirangers arrive, the three sisters decide to take their leave while Mele realized the Raspberry Diamond was a fake. Once she returns to Confrontation Beast Hall, Long introduces to Rio two of the Four Phantom Generals, one in a coffin while being dragged in by the other: Phantom Beast Baslisk-Fist master Sanyo.

1 - 37 LESSON 37: GYAN-GYAN! USELESS ARRANGED MARRIAGE INTERVIEW

Ran's high society past is revealed when her mother, Reiko Uzaki, arrives to SCRTC. After years of searching, Ran's mother found an ideal husband for her daughter. Ran is forced to undergo a marriage interview to meet her ideal husband, with Jan and the others attempting to stop the interview. But at the Confrontation Beast Hall, Long explains to Rio and Mele of the Phantom Beast-Fist and how they are destined to become its key members before Mele allows Long to convert her Confrontation Ki into Phantom Ki. Under Rio's orders, Sanyo sends one of his disciples, Gouyu of the Phantom Beast Ceto-Fist style, to gather screams and despair. While their plans to stop the marriage interview fail, Jan senses a "zowazowa" but the scent is different. Ran is halted by her mother, who intends to have her child be happy, but Ran apologizes for not accepting her mother's notion but her path is to protect and takes Reiko to the battlefield. While this occurred, the four Gekirangers were battling Gouyu, only to be greatly outmatched by the new enemy. until Ran arrives at the last second and the team defeats Gouyu with Reiko was watching and understood her daughter feelings. But Gouyu enlarges and overpowers SaiDaiOh, GekiTohja Wolf, and GekiFire single handed. But with her mother's words of encouragement, Ran calls GekiElephant and uses GekiElephantFire to knock Gouyu down. SaiDaiOh was about to land the deathblow when Sanyo arrives and easily defeat the Gekirangers before he and Gouyu depart as they gathered the screams they needed. Though they lost, Ran did win her mother's approval of the path she chosen and to remain at SCRTC. Back at the Confrontation Beast Hall, Mele returns to Rio, reborn as the third Phantom General upon fully embracing the Phantom Ki in her evoked by witnessing Sanyo's power.

1 - 38 LESSON 38: BIBA-BIBA! ANOTHER RETSU

Though Mele appraised the Phantom Beast Fist's power, Rio remains unconvinced of it with to undergo the blood-oath. Sanyo decides to send his other disciple, Phantom Beast Minotaur-Fist user Shiyuu, to provide further proof for Long. Meanwhile at SCRTC, Retsu and Gou get into an argument over Chasu until Shiyuu begins his attack, with Retsu cracking his armor. While the Gekirangers were outmatched by Mele testing her new found powers on them, Shiyuu took advantage to get revenge on Retsu. Though hit by Shiyuu's Gengi, Retsu is not physically harmed. Gou warns his brother that an attack is always significant no matter how hard the initial blow is. This turns out true when Retsu's reflection comes to life and drags Retsu into the mirror world so he can take the original's place, with Retsu becoming the reflection. While this occurred, Shiyuu enlarged himself and the gang arrive to fight in SaiDaiOh and GekiFire. However, Mirror Retsu reveals himself to be a clone of Shiyuu, using GekiFire to attack SaiDaiOh. Though the others fell for Shiyuu's deception, Gou was not as easily fooled and saves Retsu, destroying Shiyuu's reflection-clones. The real Shiyuu overpowers until GekiBatTohja Wolf arrives, wounding Shiyuu to be destroyed by SaiDaiOh. While Retsu and Gou enjoy a victory meal after the fight, Rio criticizes the Phantom Beast Fist more until Long awakens the Phantom General resting within the coffin Sanyo brought with him: the mysterious Phantom Beast Chimera-Fist master Suugu.

1 - 39 LESSON 39: URO-URO! THE CHILDREN DON'T RETURN

After getting into a fight with her mother, Natsume runs away and bunks with Jan with Miki fine with it. The next day, a tired Jan brings Miki to his room when Natsume starts acting strange, only to find her gone. While searching for her daughter, Miki learns that many other children in the city had mysteriously disappeared without a trace, with horns on their forehead. Jan and Miki follow some children to find Mele's student, Haku of the Phantom Beast Unicorn-Fist style, using his Gengi to control the children. While the other Gekirangers hold Mele off, GekiRed and Miki find the abducted children and Haku himself, who reveals his schemes. Jan assumes Super Form, only to be overwhelmed by Natsume and the other children under Haku's control. But, by eating her daughter's favorite food, Miki manages to get Natsume to break Haku's hold over her, canceling the Gengi on the others. Without his children army, Haku is defeated by Super GekiRed. But Haku enlarges himself, intending to destroy "the filth". GekiFire attempts to fight in vain until Miki personally pilots SaiDaiOh to extract her maternal wrath on Haku. With Natsume cheering her on, Miki destroys Haku. The Gekirangers see Miki and Natsume off, with Jan feeling warm. While this all occurred, Rio confronts Suugu, asking if they met before. But Suugu's silence provokes him to assume Black Lion form to fight him to confirm his thoughts. Though he lost to Suugu, Rio sees without doubt that Suugu is the one he had vowed to surpass, the man with white tiger's Fierce Ki: Dan.

1 - 40 LESSON 40: HEAD, BAKĀN! THE SHOCKING TRUTH

While Gou goes looking for him in the woods as they were looking for mushrooms, Jan finds Suugu playing an ocarina and feels a "Wafu-Wafu" from him. Jan attempts to befriend him, but Gou arrives and battles Suugu to Jan's dismay. Gou is shocked to find that Suugu's fighting stance is the same as Dan, a Beast Arts master who both he and Rio learned from in the past. At SCRTC, Sha-Fu cannot believe that Dan still lives as he was killed by Rio long ago. However, Long reveals to Rio that he revived Dan as a puppet that would serve only the Phantom Beast King, with the masterless Suugu going on a berserk rampage. He overpowers the Beast-Fist giants single-handedly before being defeated by SaiDaiGekiFire as Rio arrives before the team, revealing that his battle with Dan had not truly ended. On the night Rio was to end his rivalry with him, Dan was already gravely wounded prior to the fight, thus Rio was robbed of a true victory. A dying Dan tells Rio that his true rival is one who will defeat him: Dan's own son, Jan. Jan is horrified and confused of this new information as Suugu attempted to kill him. Though the others attempt to keep Suugu from killing his son, Jan expresses his feelings about family while taking Suugu's beating until Rio emerges in a new form, embracing his destiny as the Phantom Beast King. The four Gekirangers battle the Phantom Generals, only to be overpowered by them before Rio blasts them, allowing Jan time to train for their final confrontation. Rio and his group take their leave, with the war between the Fierce Beast-Fist and a fully-powered Phantom Beast-Fist beginning as Jan is now in a state of utter pandemonium.

1 - 41 LESSON 41: ZUSHI-ZUSHI! NO MORE

After Rio assumes his rightful place as the Phantom Beast King, Jan suffers nightmares tied to the recent revelations he learned, placing him in a state of pandemonium. The gang at SRCTC worry for Jan's sake and mental wellbeing, but Jan's hesitation and nervous breakdown irritates Gou. At Confrontation Beast Hall, in spite of Long's intent for world domination, Rio sends Long by himself to prove himself. To that end, Long gives the task to his Twin Phantoms: Phantom-Beast Capricorn-Fist Dorou & Phantom Beast Addanc-Fist Sojo. As the Gekirangers fight Sojo, Jan loses his concentration and runs off as the gang brought out GekiBazooka. Though Sojo escapes, the fight was actually part of Dorou's master plan to use the Rangers' qi in his alchemy to create his Dorou Grain. Ran manages to catch up with Jan, who quits being a Gekiranger and runs away back to his forest home near the Beast Origin Village. Knowing where he was running to, Sha-Fu decides to reason with Jan for the team's sake by taking him to an important place to help him understand Dan. While this occur, the Gekirangers find Sojo using the Dorou Grains as Dorou arrive enlarged. While Dorou battles GekiTohja Wolf and SaiDaiOh, GekiBlue uses the SaiBlade to deal with Sojo. But at the last second, the Twin Phantoms tag each other using Sojo's illusion to evade their opponents' respective deathblows. While this occurred, Mele confronts Jan and Sha-Fu as they head to Dan's hometown, refusing to accept Jan as Rio's rival.

1 - 42 LESSON 42: WASSHI-WASSHI MOVING ON!

The four Gekirangers are defeated by Long's Twin Phantoms, who use stronger Dorou Grains to seal the four into a gourd like the others for Dorou's Scream Program. Meanwhile, reporting his minions' success, Long advises Rio that his rivalry with Jan is pointless, only to be knocked down for overestimating Jan. After surviving their encounter with Mele, Jan and Sha-Fu arrive to Dan's hometown where the Fierce Beast-Fist began. Once there, the two find the place in ruins from a landslide, just after Dan is killed by Rio, as Jan finds a locket with a picture of himself as a baby and the parents he never knew. With Sha-Fu speculating Dan's feelings for his son, enabling Jan to decide not to runaway from his troubles and face them head on as a Gekiranger. Regaining his GekiChanger, Jan assumes Super Form and frees everyone from the gourds. Super GekiRed then battles Long's Twin Phantoms until the others join in. But Long, annoyed that Jan could defeat his minions, attacks Jan personally before re energizing his Twin Phantoms to enlarge, use their tag-team to overwhelm the Gekirangers until the tables turn. While Dorou is destroyed by the GekiBeasts, Sojo was destroyed by SaiDaiGekiTohja. Although Jan is staying with the team with a "wasshiwasshi" feeling, Sha-Fu is worried about the golden scale he found in the ruins.

1 - 43 LESSON 43: HAPI-HAPI! MERRY CHRISTMAS, OSU

While Christmas shopping, Ken and Bion Biao meet a young American child named Carl who hates Christmas. But Ken, misunderstanding Carl, brings him to SCRTC's Christmas party. Eventually fed up with everyone, Carl exits SCRTC in a hurry after knocking down the Christmas tree with Miki the only one who knows the truth. Meanwhile, Mele is thinking of a Christmas present for Rio until Long arrives with one of Suugu's Twin Phantoms, Phantom-Beast Hanuman-Fist user Shuen, sent to cause mayhem across the city with his clones to gather screams from the populace. While Ken and Bion Biao attempt to understand Carl's issues in spite of the language barriers, the other Gekirangers battle the massive army of Shuens while the real one escapes to commit arson. While it all occurred, Ken learns from Carl's father, a North Korean diplomat, that the boy's hatred for Christmas stems losing his mother in a car accident, with Ken reasoning with Carl with his similar path before Shuen arrives. While Bion Biao protects Carl, Ken transforms into GekiChopper and defeats Shuen with the Super SaiBlade, but Shuen enlarges and the Gekirangers bring out SaiDaiOh, GekiFire, and GekiTohja Wolf to battle with Bae commenting while Mele is wearing a special Santa outfit for Rio. Once Shuen is frozen, SaiDaiGekiFire destroys Shuen. Later, the SCRTC gang resume their party at Carl's house, with SaiDaiOh creating an image of Carl's mother as Ken's present to the boy.

1 - 44 LESSON 44: WAFU-WAFU! FATHER'S MELODY

The SCRTC gang heads to a Shinto Shrine on New Years, with Jan praying for Suugu to become Dan once more, but Sha-Fu says such a wish is impossible due to Suguu's nature. Jan then vows that if his father can never return, then, at the very least, he will defeat/free him on his own. Meanwhile, Long, fearing Jan's effect on Rio would halt his true power, receives his permission to "test" Jan with Suugu and use it as an excuse to kill him. But Mele begins to ponder Long's motives after hearing Sanyo muttering of a new Rio to come soon, until she is ambushed by Phantom Beast Cerberus-Fist user Kou, who reveals he's the younger brother of Braco before heading out to attack people to gain a place among the Phantom Generals. But as GekiChopper, Super GekiBlue, and Super GekiYellow battle Kou and defeat him with SaiDaiOh, Jan finds Suugu and battles him with Long watching the fight while Mele watched him from behind to know his true intent. Jan's refusal to give up allows him to defeat Suugu, yet couldn't land the deathblow due the feelings for his father. But, due to Jan's desire to hear him play his ocarina one last time, Suugu reawakens as Dan much to Long's shock. Seeing Jan to be more trouble than he thought, Long decides to kill him himself. But Suugu took the fatal hit and drove Long away before he collapses in near death. While this all occurred, Gou goes to Michelle Peng to ask for a favor, to master Brusa Ee's most powerful Gekiwaza to end the Gekirangers' battle against Rio: the Heaven and Earth Diaster Strike.

1 - 45 LESSON 45: PIKĪN! SHOWDOWN OF DESTINY

After being mortally wounded by the attack Long intended for Jan, Suugu/Dan pleas Jan to kill him. Though reluctant, Jan deals the deathblow, freeing Dan from his physical form as he tells Jan to continue his own path, departing into the afterlife. As the others and Sha-Fu arrive to comfort a devastated Jan as he decides to honor his father's wish by fighting Rio, who leaves Confrontation Beast Hall after feeling a strong surge of Ki, believing it to be Jan's. Only to learn that it's Gou, who had mastered the Heaven and Earth Diaster Strike with intent to settle things. However, Gouyu arrives to protect Rio, only for GekiViolet to easily kill him with the Heaven and Earth in three seconds, receiving Rio's attention. Once in Phantom Beast King Form, Rio and Gou resume the fight that started a decade ago, with Rio defeating Gou and giving him a reality check that they're never be rivals. Jan arrives after the fight to end his battle with Rio once and for all, fighting in their most powerful forms. But while Super GekiRed and Rio have their final battle, Mele arrives too late to stop the fight as Jan defeats Rio, causing Rio to awaken as the true Phantom Beast King Long has envisioned: the mindless Destroyer bent on destroying everything. Though he easily defeated SaiDaiOh after enlarging himself, Mele manages to snap Rio out of it to Long's dismay, returning to normal. After revealing what she learned from interrogating Sanyo, that Long's been using them, Mele takes Rio away with Long pursuing them.

1 - 46 LESSON 46: GYAWA-GYAWA MEMORIES

Though Rio has awakened as the Phantom Beast King as Long intended, Mele manages to snap him out of it and takes him away. Later that night, after Gou returns from a physical check up, the gang were curious about Rio's condition until Jan sniffs out the scale Sha-Fu found at ruins of Dan's hometown, feeling he saw it before. Wanting to know what happened, Sha-Fu has Gorie use his Gekiwaza Sleep-Sleep Fist on Jan to have him relive his memories of when he first felt "gyawa-gyawa". In his trance, Jan's hidden memory is unsealed as he reveals that a dragon wiped out village and its inhabitants before assuming a human form: Long, who then personally murdered Jan's mother. Meanwhile, Sanyo hunts down Rio under Long's, but the interference of Mele's apprentice, Phantom Beast Pixie-Fist mistress Hisho, allows them to escape and make their way to where Rio lost his family, which the Gekirangers came after Sha-Fu had a horrific feeling that Rio's past is tied to Jan's. After learning of Long's part in Jan's past, "Hisho" reveals herself to be Long in disguise and explains his intent for Rio to become the Destroyer, revealing Maku was to assume the role until the Fist Sages sealed him. Answering Rio's demands, Long reveals that he did murdered Rio's family, and wounded Dan, setting up the path for Rio to be conditioned without any emotion but the desire to fight. Rio is horrified by the startling revelation as the Gekirangers were enraged by Long's sick idealogy, but the real Hisho arrives and takes the Gekirangers away while Long forces Rio to reveal his last attachment, with Mele arrives to battles Long for Rio's sake. While this occurred, the Gekirangers use the GekiBeasts to destroy Hisho. By the time the gang arrive, Long is about to deal the deathblow on Mele, when Rio takes the hit meant for her. Seeing Mele to be Rio's true final attachment, taking her so Rio can become the Destroyer for good.

1 - 47 LESSON 47: PIKA-PIKA! MY PATH

The truth is finally revealed; the Phantom Beast Fist was a front by Long to use Rio, whose path he set up to bring about the end of the world. After Mele was taken, Rio loses his fighting spirit and runs off in a desperate state of mind on his purpose. At SCRTC, as they ask Sha-Fu for the whereabouts of Confrontation Beast Hall to save Mele, Bae arrives to show them the way for Mele's sake as Long tortures her. While Jan leaves to find Rio, the others head off to rescue Mele, with Gou and Ken facing Sanyo while Ran and Retsu reach Mele before having to fight Long in vain. While this occurs, after words fail, Jan manages to beat some sense into Rio to show him he's no pawn, giving him a path of his own and a true reason to fight, to stop Long's cruelty. The two arrive in time as Long was about to torture Mele some more, freeing her and Retsu and Ran. After Rio and Mele finally express their feelings to each other, they force their Phantom Ki out of their bodies to Long's horror as he runs out to tel Sanyo to kill them all so they can start anew. While the others defeat Sanyo, Jan and Rio battle Long together for all the wrongs he committed against them, combining their powers to deliver the deathblow. But Long reforms into a giant as the Gekirangers and their rivals form SaiDaiGekiRinTohja to seemingly destroy him. Soon after, with Rio and Mele having no where to go now, Jan invites them to live at SCRTC, to Ran's and Retsu's dismay. But by nightfall, Sanyo emerges with intent to get them for this before he suddenly starts to feel sick.

1 - 48 LESSON 48: SABA-SABA! CRUCIAL FIST JUDGEMENT

After defeating Long with the Gekirangers, Rio returns to SCRTC much to the happiness of his teammates Miki and Gou. But the only ones who are not happy with Rio and Mele living with them are Ran and Retsu, who can't forgive the two for the acts the two had committed. To prove themselves, Rio and Mele set out to perform the Fist Judgement, a battle that would cleanse them of their sins while training in the Confrontation Beast-Fist, or kill them. While Retsu and Ran train to prepare for the Fist Apology, Jan attempts to talk Rio and Mele out of it. But Rio tells Jan he found a new purpose, bringing the two branch schools together by first burning Confrontation Beast Hall to the ground to start the path. Soon after, the Fist Judgement begins, with Retsu fighting Rio while Ran battles Mele. But in the middle of the fight, as Rio and Mele deliberately lower their guards, Sanyo immediately stops the proceedings as a revived Long reveals himself. Long immediately assumes his true form and goes after Jan first for being the one to ruin his schemes. Jan and the others attempt to fight the giant to no avail, but Mele takes the full brunt of Long's wrath, saving them from danger while being fatally wounded. Jan asks why Mele would do such a thing, she reveals that she and Rio intended to sacrifice themselves anyway, even if Long hadn't interfered. GekiTohjaWolf and SaiDaiOh battle Long, but are unable to defeat him. After comforting Mele in her final moments, Rio infuses the Gekirangers with the Confrontation Ki of the Fist Demons before he enters Long's body and destroys him and the inside, killing himself in the process. But the Gekirangers' mourning for Rio is cut short as Long regenerates. Swearing on Rio's sacrifice while putting on the Fist Demons' Bracelet, Jan intends to stop Long once and for all.

1 - 49 LESSON 49: ZUN-ZUN! THE BEAST-FIST, FOR ALL TIME

Long assumes his true form and withstands Rio's attempt on his life, returning to his human-form as the Gekirangers battle him. While Gou, Ken, and the Fist Sages hold off Long, the three Gekirangers are taken to a astral Confrontation Beast Hall, meeting up with Rio and Mele. There, the spirits of the Fist Demons reveal the means to defeat Long is with Confrontation Ki Rio infused the Gekirangers with prior to his death. Joining the others, the three Gekirangers fuse their Fierce Ki together with the Confrontation Ki in them to destroy Long's evil forever.

BEASTMASTER: THE LEGEND CONTINUES

Lone warrior Dar (Daniel Goddard) senses the presence of his long-lost love, Kyra (Natalie Mendoza), who has been kidnapped and enslaved by the brutal Terron warriors. Gathering up his two ferret friends, Kodo and Podo, he takes off to rescue her.

Dar arrives at a Terron camp and finds prisoners, including Kyra. The prisoners are being pushed into a ring to be mauled to death by tigers. Tao (Jackson Raine) is next, but when the tiger, Ruh, is released, he attacks the Terron guards instead of Tao. But Ruh is stopped by a Terron net. Dar attacks, but is outnumbered by the Terrons. Dar and Ruh make eye contact and a connection is made. Dar manages to release the ferocious beast and Ruh tears into the Terrons. The evil King Zad (Steven Grives), leader of the Terrons, rounds up his troops and escapes with Kyra and the remaining prisoners, leaving Dar, Tao and Ruh behind. After seeing the connection Dar made with Ruh, Tao realizes that Dar is the BeastMaster, the last surviving male of the Sula tribe, who has the ability to communicate telepathically with animals.

Meanwhile, the powerful and seductive Sorceress (Monika Schnarre) observes the two in her crystal water bowl. She tells her mentor, The Ancient One (Grahame Bond), that she wants to possess Dar's power to communicate with animals. The only way for her to obtain Dar's knowledge is to bring him to her world.

Later that day, Dar and Tao come across a group of beautiful women swimming in a lake. Dar recognizes one of the ladies as a Terron prisoner. She tells him Kyra is inside the structure that adjoins the lake. Dar rushes off. As soon as he enters the building, the informative woman morphs into the Sorceress and the other women disappear. Inside, Dar is attacked by the Chimera, a ferocious monster made of fire and lava. The Chimera knocks Dar unconscious, sets the structure on fire, and disappears. Sensing that Dar is in danger, Ruh enters the building, wakes him, and the two escape before the structure implodes.

Tao realizes this was all an illusion arranged by the Sorceress. Not knowing what the Sorceress wants, Dar and Tao press on to find Kyra with the help of Sharak, a majestic eagle who leads the way. Dar is able to see from Sharak's point of view as he soars through the sky, so they easily find the new Terron camp. Dar locates Kyra's tent, but she is trapped in a cage made of crystal cylinders filled with a smoky liquid. Before she can warn him, Dar touches the cage and releases a black fog that blinds him. Dar manages to escape the Terron camp, but he is forced to leave Kyra behind. Later, Tao informs Dar that the effects of the black fog are only temporary and, knowing he will return for Kyra, gives him a potion of white fog to counteract the blinding fog. Tao also gives Dar a liquid that when rubbed on the body will temporarily repel fire -- just in case the Chimera reappears.

Dar returns to Kyra's tent, but his beloved is gone. The Sorceress greets Dar and tells him that she wants his powers and will stop at nothing to obtain them. She releases the black fog, but Dar counteracts it with the white fog. The Sorceress then produces a small fireball that morphs into the Chimera and she disappears. While Dar battles the Chimera, King Zad escapes with Kyra. The liquid protecting Dar from the fire begins to lose its effect and Dar slices through the molten beast, killing it. Meanwhile, Podo steals a magical talisman which holds the beautiful face of Kyra like a cameo and brings it to Dar. He and Tao return to his cave in the Mydlands and Dar vows to continue his search for Kyra.

1 - 1 THE LEGEND CONTINUES

Dar (Daniel Goddard) befriends inquisitive and bumbling Tao (Jackson Raine) as he begins his quest to rescue his long-lost love Kyra (Natalie Mendoza), who has been kidnapped and enslaved by the brutal Terron warriors.

Wr Steve FekeDir Michael Offer1 - 2 OBSESSION

Dar (Daniel Goddard) and Tao (Jackson Raine) rescue a man named Akili (Keith Hamilton Cobb), who is being chased by a group of savage Terron warriors. Only when they are safe does Dar learn that Akili himself is a Terron. Akili explains that he has been banished by his tribe because he fell in love with a member of King Zad's harem. His punishment is to be hunted down and killed. Akili also tells Dar that he is going to return to the Terron camp to rescue his true love. Suspicious of Akili, Tao is dismayed when Dar and Akili decide to work together.

Meanwhile, two tiger cubs named Sita and Raja are playing in a jungle clearing when Sita is captured by a group of hunters led by Ishmael (Puven Pather). Raja runs off to find Ruh. Before Ishmael gets away with Sita, Ruh comes, makes eye contact with the hunter and recognizes him as one of the men who work for Baha (Simon Westaway), the legendary slaver. Years before, Ruh killed Baha's son when he tried to capture him.

Later, Dar is attacked by the evil Spiderwitch (Carla Marie) who wraps him in a deadly cocoon-like web. Akili kills the Spiderwitch and rescues Dar. They press on to the Terron camp and Dar is shocked to learn that the woman Akili loves is none other than Kyra (Natalie Mendoza). Outraged by the realization that they are in love with the same woman, Akili insists that only one of them can have her and they must fight to the death. The rest of the Terrons are amused by this proposition and they order Dar and Akili to commence the battle. Dar, the more formidable opponent, easily takes down Akili but can't bring himself to kill him. When Akili realizes that Dar has once again saved his life, the two attack the surrounding Terron warriors. During the mayhem, Akili suffers a serious blow. He tells Dar to find Kyra and escape. Reluctantly, Dar leaves.

Meanwhile, Ruh tracks down Baha's camp and finds Sita. Determined to capture the majestic tiger and avenge his son's death, Baha sets a trap. But Ruh is too powerful. He tears off one of Baha's legs and claws his face. Ruh knows that horribly maiming this once legendary slaver and leaving him to live with his actions is a far worse fate than death. Ruh collects Sita and the two return home.

Dar rushes off to find Kyra, but the Terron camp suddenly disappears. Dar is then greeted by the Sorceress (Monika Schnarre), who has been observing the whole time. She tells Dar that in exchange for his power to communicate with animals, she will give him Kyra. Not wanting anything to do with the Sorceress' magic, Dar refuses. The Sorceress vanishes and Dar and Tao return to the Mydlands.

Wr Steve FekeDir Michael Offer1 - 3 THE ISLAND

Eager to explore new lands, Tao (Jackson Raine) decides that it's time for him to leave the security of Dar's (Daniel Goddard) compound. As he unravels a map, a jade ring falls out. This ring is a badge of Tao's people, the Eiron, and is worn only by the scholars of the tribe. The Eiron are renowned free thinkers and tongue-waggers who send scholars out to enlighten the masses and gain knowledge of other cultures. Although Dar will miss his new friend, he understands Tao's reasons for leaving. As Tao departs, Sharak flies overhead and Dar knows that he will be able to keep an eye on him through his journeys.

Later, Tao takes a wrong turn and ends up in the village of Tolphet, where the people despise free thinkers. After an altercation with a grizzled vendor (Tony Coetzee), Tao is apprehended. He and two criminals named Paj (Christopher Sadrinna) and Elza (Michelle Cummerford) are condemned to an island where the murderous Birdmen reside. Before Tao is wrangled onto the boat that will take him to the island, he is approached by Haisa (Holly Brisley), who hands him a silver comb to give to her lost love Nylas (Jeremiah Tickell), if he's still alive. Back in the Mydlands, Dar sees through Sharak's eyes that Tao is in danger. He immediately takes off with Kodo, Podo and Ruh to help his friend.

Meanwhile on the island, Paj and Elza accidentally set off traps that imprison them in bamboo cages suspended high above the ground. Tao manages to avoid the traps with the help of Nylas, who takes him to an underground burrow. Nylas tells Tao that the Birdmen can't actually fly, but only glide a short distance. They don't kill other birds because they study them, hoping to learn how to fly. Nylas, who is innocent of any crime, tells Tao that his hope of seeing Haisa again has been keeping him alive. After a while, the floors drop out from Paj and Elza's cages and the ferocious Birdmen glide in to devour their prey. Elza is killed, but Paj manages a narrow escape. Back in Tolphet, Dar meets Haisa and the two of them, along with Ruh and the ferrets, take a raft down the river to rescue Tao and Nylas. When they arrive at the island, Dar leaves Haisa with the raft, but she is attacked by Paj who accidentally sends the boat floating down the river. Suddenly, a Birdman swoops down and mauls Paj to death. Haisa runs for her life and is reunited with Nylas, who has emerged from his underground burrow. But Nylas, Haisa and Tao become trapped in the bamboo cages and await their grizzly fate. Just as the cage bottoms drop out, Ruh and Dar appear and everyone rushes to the island shore, where another boat is arriving to drop off prisoners. Dar lures the guards off the boat as everyone else climbs aboard. A group of Birdmen appear and are about to attack Dar when Sharak swoops down and lands on Dar's forearm. The Birdmen suddenly stop and pay homage to Sharak, the noble eagle and mightiest bird of all. Dar and Sharak board the vessel and the Birdmen turn their attentions to the guards left behind. Haisa and Nylas return to their mountain village and Dar and Tao go back to the Mydlands.

1 - 4 A SIMPLE TRUTH

An intervention in a wolf hunt brings Dar (Daniel Goddard) face to face with a young, headstrong man named Feno (Aaron Dudley). Feno tells Dar that Terrons have captured his friends and that he now lives alone in the forest. Dar tells Feno that he will help him find his comrades, and hopefully, his long-lost love Kyra (Natalie Mendoza) as well.

Meanwhile, at the Terron camp, Feno's friends are taunted by the ruthless King Zad (Steven Grives), who prepares to put them to death. Noticing Kyra's disgusted reaction, Zad gives her an ultimatum – she must love him completely or the boys will be killed. Not wanting to see innocents die, Kyra agrees to give herself to King Zad. He comes to her later that night, but she has rubbed her neck and chest with a sleeping potion that makes Zad pass out. As Kyra makes her escape, she discovers the bodies of Feno's friends, who have been killed despite her bargain with Zad.

The following morning, Dar is awakened by a vision from Sharak – Kyra has escaped! He goes to find Feno, but the youth has disappeared. Dar and Tao (Jackson Raine) leave to search for Kyra and meet up with Feno again, after he foolishly challenged two Terron warriors on his own.

Kyra continues to flee and is now being led by a pack of wolves that see her Sula heritage. But King Zad's minions, along with a monstrous Beast created by the Sorceress (Monika Schnarre), are fast on her heels. Kyra reaches a village, but is attacked by an ogre (Harley D'Jekic). The Beast soon clashes with the ogre, giving Kyra the opportunity to run straight into the arms of Dar. Together, they set a trap for the pursuing Terrons and defeat them.

But the idyllic vision of the two young lovers is once again torn asunder when the Sorceress fulfills her promise to King Zad and uses her powers to trap Kyra in her crystal bowl. As Dar looks through Sharak's eyes, he sees the Ancient One (Grahame Bond) place Kyra inside a crystal in his head.

1 - 5 AMAZONS

While travelling through the Mydlands, Dar (Daniel Goddard) and Tao (Jackson Raine) find the young and beautiful Maleena (Gig Edgley) staked to two poles. As they untie her, she tells them that Castrone (Brandon Burke), the leader of her village, forces women to marry men against their will, and those who defy his law are sentenced to death. Dar sees that Maleena has been bitten by a deadly three-fanged viper and realizes she will die within a day if she does not drink from the bud of the rare fire lily, which grows in the nearby valley inhabited by Amazons -- a place where no man has ever ventured and returned alive. Refusing to heed caution and let an innocent die, Dar sets out to find the lily and leaves Ruh to watch over Tao and Maleena.

Meanwhile, Castrone discovers that Maleena has been saved and he and his men begin searching for her. The High Priestess of the Amazons (Angie Milliken), who managed to escape the wrath of Castrone, learns from the Shapeshifter (Moirra Claux) that Maleena was rescued by Dar. Believing that all men are evil, the High Priestess vows to kill Dar and Castrone. But Hippolyte (Simone Kessell) feels that each man must be judged before being condemned, and after he saves her from being attacked by a white tiger, she thinks Dar might possibly help her tribe. Meanwhile, Tao continues to care for Maleena. Her fever worsens and she eventually becomes delirious. When Maleena thinks that Tao is her late love, he is overcome with emotion, for he has only experienced unrequited love. Dar reaches the pond where the lily grows and gives the flower to the mighty eagle Sharak, who delivers it to Tao. As Maleena recovers, she tells Tao that she will never forget him. Meanwhile, Dar is attacked by Castrone, but Hippolyte joins the battle and she and Dar drive Castrone and his men back into the forest. A bond between Dar and the Amazons is formed.

1 - 6 THE DEMON CURUPIRA

A band of hunters in the rain forest brutally slay a group of pigs, not for food or clothing, but for the simple joy of killing. During the night, Guariba (Dion Mihaljovsky), the youngest member of the hunting party, witnesses a woman (Emile de Ravin) bestowing deadly kisses on all the hunters. These kisses suck the life from the men's bodies, leaving only empty husks behind. After all of the hunters are dead, she kisses the animal carcasses, bringing them back to life. The following morning, Guariba is taunted by the voice of his dead father. Guariba runs to greet him, but he only finds Dar (Daniel Goddard) and Tao (Jackson Raine). After hearing Guariba's story, Dar knows that it was the Demon Curupira, the protector of animals, who took the lives of the hunting party.

While the trio follows Curupira's tracks, Dar remembers how he became the BeastMaster. When he was younger, Curupira saved him from the Terrons who murdered his tribe. Because Dar's father saved several animals, Curupira promised him she would give Dar the powers of the BeastMaster. But, Dar would first have to complete a test. For three days, Dar lay motionless on the ground as if dead. Insects, snakes and vermin covered his body. On the third day, Curupira, disguised as Dar's long-lost love Kyra (Natalie Mendoza), came to him offering water and comfort, but Dar did not flinch. As the third day ended, Dar rose from the ground and was attacked by animals which tore him to pieces. Curupira gathered Dar's body parts and put him back together, making Dar the BeastMaster.

Later, Dar, Tao and Guariba find Curupira. Dar convinces her to let the boy and his tribe live if they promise never to enter the forest again. Guariba returns to his village to tell the others about Curupira, carrying the empty husk that was his father, but because they don't believe the story, the villagers can't see what he's carrying. They tie him up and enter the forest to search for the hunting expedition. Fearful of the outcome, Guariba manages to escape and returns to the forest where he finds Dar. They locate Curupira, and Guariba pleads for the lives of his people. At Guariba's suggestion, Curupira agrees to work together with the tribe rather than be at odds.

Curupira (Emilie De Ravin) angrily disowns Dar and attempts to kill Nokinja, only to find that her demon enemy, Ketzwayo (Arthur Penn), is actually behind the animal killings. The Chancellor delivers the horn to King Zad (Steven Grives) and demonstrates its magical power to heal. Dar (Daniel Goddard) and Tao (Jackson Raine) run into Muraki (Brittany Byrnes), a young girl running for her life from three Venatu warriors. They engage the warriors in battle, losing track of Muraki in the process. Two of the Venatus get away and Dar and Tao take off to look for the young girl. They come across a group of children playing alone around a fountain. Dar becomes suspicious when Karstyn (Brett Sellwood), the leader of the group, speaks more like an adult than a child. Dar and Tao leave upon the children's request, but Dar sees through Sharak's eyes Muraki being dragged away by that same group of children bearing weapons.

Karstyn leads his followers to a secret cavern behind a waterfall, where a nymph (Ada Nicodemou) offers the children water from a spring. After seeing that their secret waters are secure, they take Muraki away. But the children are unaware that they led the two remaining Venatu warriors, Saramongo (Rodger Corser) and Cappo (Duncan Aney), to the cavern, which they have been looking for all along. Saramongo kills Cappo and kidnaps the nymph.

Dar and Tao find the cavern and Tao takes a sip of water from the spring. He is instantly transformed into a 12-year old boy (Lloyd Will). Dar realizes that Saramongo must have been after the nymph that produces the water of eternal life. He tells Tao to return to the community of children while he tracks the Venatu warrior. Dar rescues the nymph and she tells him that she is under a spell that can only be broken if the riddle displayed in her cavern is solved. Karstyn realizes that Tao had visited them earlier with Dar, so he imprisons him with Muraki. She tells Tao the riddle from the nymph's cavern must be solved for the spell to be broken. Dar returns with the nymph to rescue Tao and Muraki, but Tao suddenly solves the riddle. He and all of the other children are transformed back to their adult bodies. Tao and Muraki share a warm hug before she and the rest of the other "children" suddenly disappear with the nymph.

Meanwhile, the Sorceress (Monika Schnarre) attempts to recreate the Beastmaster's powers through her sorcery and struggles to control her newfound emotions. 1 - 11 VALHALLA

For the pure joy of cruelty, a Terron party slaughters a colony of monkeys. Dar (Daniel Goddard) arrives on the scene and witnesses a female monkey being murdered in front of her sole surviving offspring. Overcome with emotion, Dar cradles the dead monkey and confesses to Tao (Jackson Raine) that he is to blame for the slaughter. Suddenly, Dar collapses into a catatonic state and Tao takes his friend to see a shaman (David Gulpilil). The shaman confirms that Dar's soul is on a journey to Valhalla, a place where memories live. The shaman chants in a strange language and Tao learns that Dar's soul has gone to be with his family, who were murdered years ago by the Terrons. Tao then sees images of Dar's return home at the time of the Sula massacre, which are displayed on the wall of the shaman's tent. Dar appears to his father (Tayler Kane) as a mysterious Sula warrior and helps his father find his son, the Young Dar (Burgess Abernethy) and his mother (Danielle Carter) after the massacre. Dar's father then sends Dar to the Mydlands with the two surviving tigers from the massacre on a mission to find a place of safety for them.

The demon Curupira (Emilie De Ravin) meets Dar's father, a Beastmaster in his own right, and insists he put aside his own family's safety to take the tigers to the 'sanctuary.' Angered by Dar's father's hesitation, Curupira takes his staff and tells him that he will find it again in his wife's ashes. Dar witnesses his mother's murder when he returns from the Mydlands to see his father. Dar mourns for his mother over her funeral pyre and finally comes to terms with her death. Despite his wife's death, Dar's father realizes he must fulfill his promise to Curupira and take the tigers to the sanctuary. But when Dar reveals his foreknowledge of this sanctuary, Dar's father realizes that this mysterious Sula warrior is none other than his son traveling through Valhalla. He sends Dar with the tigers to guide Young Dar and the surviving Sulas, including the Young Kyra (Hannah Wang), to the sanctuary. Dar's father then finds his staff in his wife's pyre, just as Curupira promised. The staff now contains newly inscribed symbolic totems that Dar's father does not understand.

The Terron party returns before the totems can be translated. In a violent battle, Dar's father takes the life of the Terron who killed his wife, but is eventually slain. The Terrons attempt to take Dar's staff, but the demon Curupira drives them away and calls to Young Dar to aid his father. Dar tries to dissuade young Dar from leaving, but Young Dar insists, and the two return to their mother's funeral pyre only to find that it has become a grave for their father as well. Young Dar retrieves his father's staff and concludes that the totems must indicate the location of the tiger sanctuary. With Dar's coaching, Young Dar realizes that the tiger sanctuary is the geyser in the forest that he knows well. While the two make their way back to the others, the Terrons attack and kill the remaining Sulas, except for Young Kyra, who they take as a prize for King Zad. Dar and Young Dar go to save the tigers, but are tracked to the tigers' cave hideout with the help of an observant Young Akili (Emanuel Freer), who will eventually grow up to be a savage warrior. Dar and Young Dar are trapped near the cave by the Terrons. But Dar convinces Akili's father (Keith Hamilton-Cobb) to attack the tigers hidden in the cave instead. The Terrons take the bait, enter the cave and are attacked by Curupira. Before Young Akili's eyes, she takes the life of his father with a gruesome kiss. Curupira then turns to Young Dar and threatens him with the same fate if he does not save the tigers as his father promised. Young Dar agrees and Curupira walks right through Dar, who is unseen by demons in Valhalla, as she exits the cave. Dar and Young Dar take the tigers to the sanctuary. With his mission in Valhalla complete, Dar fades away and returns to the present, his spirit healed. Young Dar remains to play in the geyser waters and forgets that Dar was ever there.

Later, Tao discovers that the pilgrims seek the Gate to Life and Death, which is a liquid rock that allows its possessor control over life and death. Tao learns that Ramah (Ivar Kants), the leader of the pilgrims, is hellbent on obtaining the rock. During his journey, Dar comes across a woman (Annie Jones) who insists that the pilgrims are not holy men. He concludes that the killer beast attacks to protect the liquid rock. Dar watches helplessly through Sharak's eyes as Ramah claims the liquid rock for his own and begins to wield his power over life and death with a vengeance.

Once there, the bird transforms into the Black Apparition (Leah Purcell) who announces that the Sorceress is now a powerless prisoner. Meanwhile, Curupira (Emilie De Ravin) comes across Baha's (Simon Westaway) camp, where she overhears that Baha plans to kill every tiger if it means Ruh will die in the end. She immediately seeks out Dar (Daniel Goddard) and demands that he put a stop to Baha and his plans, one way or another.

The Ancient One's (Grahame Bond) fury over the disappearance of the Sorceress causes him to enlist Sharak to bring her back. Sharak (Daniel Fitzgerald), permitted to take the form of a man, pretends that his love was kidnapped from him and asks Dar for help. Dar and Tao (Jackson Raine) decide to help him, and the three enter the Burning Forest. Soon after entering the forest, Tao is quietly kidnapped while Dar and Sharak fend off the first of three sentinels. Tao is thrown into a cell containing an Eiron woman, Caro (Tasma Walton), who came to the forest to look for her father.

Meanwhile, the Black Apparition reveals to the Sorceress that she too was once the student of the Ancient One -- until he betrayed her. The Apparition offers the Sorceress Sharak in the form of a man and the powers of the Beastmaster in exchange for her sorcery to be used for evil. The Ancient One, who has been watching this exchange through his crystal basin, is enraged that the Sorceress is tempted to accept. However, when she learns that both the BeastMaster and Sharak will die whether or not she makes the deal, the Sorceress refuses and is put under a sleeping spell. After confronting the Apparition on her home turf, The Ancient One manages to lure her to Dar's sanctuary where he warns that her thirst for vengeance will consume her.

Continuing through the burning forest on their rescue mission, Dar and Sharak narrowly defeat the second sentinel. Ruh and Curupira go together to find Baha, whose obsession has escalated to nightmares and visions of Ruh's death. When Ruh appears and leaps at Baha, he stumbles backwards and ends up the victim of his own trap. As he lies impaled in the pit he built for Ruh, Curupira gleefully sucks the remaining life out of him.

Meanwhile, Tao discovers that the contraption that locks his cell correlates to numbers that are painted on the wall. Turning the dial to each number, Tao escapes with Caro close behind. As they leave the Apparition's cave, they come across Sharak who departs to find "his woman." Dar, certain that another sentinel of the forest awaits him, waits cautiously outside the entrance, uncertain of Sharak and Tao's location. Once the last sentinel is defeated, however, Dar enters the cave and finds it empty. As he starts to exit, Dar comes face to face with the enraged Apparition, who has learned that Sharak has stolen the Sorceress from her prison.

Mysteriously, the Apparition allows Dar to leave with his life, and Dar soon comes across Sharak, who thanks him for his help and quickly leaves. The Ancient One arrives and changes Sharak back into a bird before the Sorceress awakens. Dar arrives back at his sanctuary to find that Tao has already returned with Caro, whom he has grown to like a great deal. Caro, however, leaves the two behind as she continues her quest to learn more about her father. Disappointed with Dar, Curupira pays a visit and warns Dar not to take their friendship for granted.

1 - 19 THE GOLDEN PHOENIX

While Tao (Jackson Raine) is introducing Dar (Daniel Goddard) to the finer points of mapmaking, Prince Garuda (Aaron Catalan), who is really the Golden Phoenix in the guise of a man, begins to stalk the unsuspecting duo. Just as Garuda is about to blow a poisoned dart at Dar, Ruh blocks his path and warns Dar.

At the Terron camp, King Zad (Steven Grives) calls the Sorceress (Monika Schnarre) to his chamber, hoping to seduce her. Once denied, he sets his sights on Sella (Raelee Hill), the noble slave of his war chief Qord (Martin Csokas). When Zad demands the girl from him, Qord hides her away along with his other stolen booty and insists that she escaped.

Meanwhile, Garuda creates a trap that lures Dar and Tao to the aid of a wombat. After they successfully save the animal, Garuda renders Tao unconscious with a dart and captures Dar. Garuda stakes Dar to the ground so that he will be burned to death by the sun. Though somewhat reluctant to kill Dar, Garuda, whom Dar now knows is the Phoenix, explains why Dar must die. In return for the blessings of the sun, the Phoenix expected the Sulas to guard a golden urn, a vital component in the Phoenix's rise to join his father, the sun. When the Terrons destroyed the Sulas, the urn was lost to them, so Garuda has no choice but to take the life of the last remaining Sula.

As Dar's life begins to slip away, he uses his power to communicate with Sharak, who leads Tao to his rescue. The ferrets provide distraction as Tao cuts Dar's ropes and sets him free. As the two are making their escape, Tao stumbles and falls, alerting Garuda to their location. Fighting like a bird of prey, Garuda attacks Dar. The two fight until Garuda suddenly leaps away. Dar realizes that he must find and return the golden urn to Garuda in order to redeem himself and fulfill his forefathers' promise.

While Dar and Tao head towards the Terron camp to retrieve the urn, Qord who has been ordered by Zad to find Sella or die, returns to the cave where he keeps his treasures which includes Garuda's urn. With the help of the ferrets, Dar tracks Qord to his hiding place, frees Sella, and recovers the urn. Watching through the Sorceress' crystal basin, Zad learns the location of the secret cave and goes to confront Qord. Qord saves his life by claiming it was the BeastMaster who took Sella and implying that she was the one who stole Zad's treasures in the first place.

1 - 20 GEMINI

Four Terrons chase an escaped slave girl, Adranna (Ashley Gavin) through the Mydlands. Soon after the Terrons divide into pairs, two of them become ensnared in vines which squeeze the life out of one and immobilize the other. The paralyzed victim is finished off by the arrows of a mysterious young couple, who proceed to cut the vines which emit a devouring mist. In another part of the forest, the unnatural silence of the animals prompts Dar (Daniel Goddard) to search for what is scaring them. Dar and Tao (Jackson Raine) discover the skeletal remains of two fallen Terrons, which proves there is a dangerous hunter among them.

After the Ancient One (Grahame Bond) arrives to offer more riddles of wisdom to the Sorceress (Monika Schnarre), King Zad (Steven Grives) pays a visit and offers her an alliance that would allow them both to be free of the Ancient One's meddling. The Sorceress denies any desire to go along with Zad's plan.

Meanwhile, Dar and Tao happen upon twins, Jem (Christopher Sadrinna) and Nye (Zoe Coyle) and their cats. Unbeknownst to Dar and Tao, who are attracted by the charm of the brother-sister pair, the twins are in fact the archers who control the vines and killed the Terrons. Chased from their home village because they were different, the siblings began a career of killing simply for the pleasure of it.

When two Terrons attack, Jem quickly kills one with his bow and arrow, while Dar allows his opponent to retreat. Ruh arrives and expresses his dislike of the twins to Dar, but Dar disregards him and the four make camp together. Awakened by Sharak, Dar and Tao find the twins missing. Through the eagle's eyes, Dar sees Adranna fleeing from her Terron captors and immediately sets out to help her. As Dar fights the Terrons, Tao runs after the frightened Adranna, both of whom are captured by the vines. Fortunately, Dar, who also becomes ensnared, is able to save them by killing the root. When Adranna warns that they are still not safe from the two keepers of the vine, Dar begins to suspect the twins.

As their evil becomes more evident, Jem and Nye decide they want to kill both Dar and Tao. They lure the two by capturing Adranna, whom they use as bait. Rather than face the skilled twins head on, Tao decides to split the two by feigning interest in Nye and causing a schism between the pair. Ultimately, the ruse works and Dar and Tao defeat them with their own insecurities, and the two die in each other's arms.

The Sorceress, still bitter that the Ancient One stole her unicorns from the night sky, decides to place the lovely twins into the stars and creates a new constellation -- Gemini.

1 - 21 RESCUE

On a mission to collect more slaves for King Zad (Steven Grives), two Terrons round up a group of nomads. As Dar (Daniel Goddard) looks on, the Terron war chief Qord (Marton Csokas) and Yort (Andrew Bate) free the captives and kill the other Terrons. Although Qord and Dar see one another, Qord rides off without engaging him in battle.

In her chamber, the Sorceress (Monika Schnarre) decides to try to undo the spell that transformed Sharak into an eagle. Sharak (Daniel Fitzgerald), a man once again, and the Sorceress steal a few precious moments together before the Ancient One (Grahame Bond) appears and changes Sharak back into a bird. The Ancient One realizes that although he controls the Sorceress and Sharak, he cannot control the fate of Kyra (Natalie Mendoza). He releases her from his head and returns her to King Zad.

Qord returns to the Terron camp with the dead warriors and claims that the BeastMaster is responsible. Sensing that a rebellion is brewing, Zad sends his troops out in search of Dar, but insists Qord remain so that he can keep an eye on him. Returning to his yurt, Zad is pleasantly surprised to find Kyra on his bed, but her weakened condition sours his appetite for love. Sharak quickly communicates the news of Kyra's reappearance to Dar, and Dar and Tao waste little time in reaching the Terron camp and sneaking into Kyra's yurt. Zad soon discovers their presence, however, and Tao is captured and tied upside down while Dar tries to free Kyra.

King Zad decides he must know who is behind the plot against him, so he asks the Sorceress for help. She temporarily turns him into a jackass, allowing him to eavesdrop on Qord and his followers. Tao, freed by Podo and Kodo, uses the Zad jackass to flee from the Terron camp to the lake where he prepares a get-away boat. Meanwhile, with the main Terron force away from camp, Qord and his few followers try to take on Zad. During the ensuing melee, Dar seizes the opportunity to escape with Kyra in his arms. Unfortunately for Zad, Qord takes the opportunity to flee as well. Now a hunted man, Qord proposes to Dar and Tao that they unite against King Zad, but Dar refuses. The Sorceress watches over this turn of events with something approaching envy for Dar and Kyra's happiness. The Ancient One, however, reminds her that their happiness is temporary... and will be gone in a flash.

1 - 22 REVELATIONS

The Ancient One (Grahame Bond) casts a spell on both the Sorceress (Monika Schnarre) and Dar (Daniel Goddard) which puts them temporarily into the crystal in his head. There, the Sorceress explains to Dar that because he saved her in the Burning Forest, he will now be granted a vision of an event that will change his life dramatically. Dar sees a Terron hatchet flying through the air, hitting something. The vision causes him great pain.

When King Zad (Steven Grives) learns the location of Qord (Marton Csokas) and his traitorous men, he gathers those loyal to him and sets out on a mission of murder. At the same time, Qord once again enlists men to overthrow Zad. Qord decides that the ultimate revenge against Zad would be to capture Kyra (Natalie Mendoza) and kill the BeastMaster. Kyra and Dar are blissfully unaware of the Terrons' plans, as is Tao, (Jackson Raine) who announces his intentions to leave the sanctuary and return to his homeland. Dar and Kyra's reverie is broken however, when Qord and his men attack. Dar tries to divert the men while Kyra runs to safety, but Qord sees her fleeing and sends a man after her. She tumbles down a ravine and nearly falls to her death before Dar can save her. Just when they think they're safe, Dar's dream becomes reality as Qord throws a hatchet towards Dar's back. At the last moment, Kyra intercepts the weapon and is mortally wounded.

Over Kyra's funeral pyre, an anguished Dar becomes determined to find Qord and kill him. Tao tries to dissuade his friend, but is unsuccessful. Dar comes across the Black Apparition (Leah Purcell) who offers to resurrect Kyra in exchange for his soul. When Dar hesitates, she intimates that his soul will be hers as soon as he kills Qord for revenge anyway, and disappears. Meanwhile, at the Terron camp, Zad learns from the Sorceress of Kyra's demise, and redoubles his efforts to find Qord. Both Dar and Zad catch up with Qord at the same time, but Zad wins out and Dar can only watch as Zad unleashes a poisonous snake upon the vanquished rebel.

Perturbed, the Ancient One appears at the Sorceress's aerie. When the Sorceress questions him, he freezes her for a moment as he tells her that she must bow to Fate and intervene -- a matter he finds distasteful. The Sorceress obligingly finds Qord's corpse and returns him to life.

Tao is pleased that Dar was not the one who killed Qord, but Dar points out that given the chance, he would have. With nothing keeping him at the sanctuary, Dar decides to accompany Tao on his quest for his homeland.

BEASTS

Anthology series usually involving strange creatures from myth or creatures mutated by science.

All episodes were written by Nigel Kneale, the various directors were Don Taylor, John Nelson Burton, Donald McWhinnie, Don Leaver and Richard Bramwell. Some popular actors of SF also appear including John Rhys Davis (SLIDERS) who appears in 'During Barty's Party' in which a couple is threatened by super rats who have the intelligence of humans. Simon MacCorkindale (MANIMAL) starred in 'Baby' in which a couple discover the remains of a mummified creature behind their freezer. Nigel Kneale the writer is best known as the creator of the QUATERMASS series. Kneale's objective in creating B was to write stories about harmless creatures that end up taking on an unexpected menace.

Nigel Kneale is often regarded as the patron saint of smart British sci-fi, despite apparently being less than enamoured with the restrictions of the genre. It's hard to deny his importance in keeping SF intelligent though, if only for Quatermass and the seminal BBC adaptation of Orwell's 1984.

Two of his more obscure TV offerings are now available as DVD boxsets, and while the two ventures don't come close to his more seminal work, they make for compelling viewing for Kneale completists...

Beasts is a six part anthology first broadcast by ATV in 1976. Tied together by the rather elastic notion of the title, the stories run the gamut from psychological thriller to supernatural spookery to outright horror. In "Special Offer", a greasy checkout girl played by future Bird of a Feather Pauline Quirke becomes convinced that the supermarket's rabbit mascot is on the loose in the store. A sort of consumerist poltergeist, if you will. "During Barty's Party" is a superbly concise tale of terror in which a couple are trapped in their home by a plague of (off-screen) rats. Conjuring paranoia and claustrophobia from just two actors and one set, it's a real treat and an example of Kneale's ability to twist the most ordinary settings in terrifying ways.

"Buddy Boy" is perhaps one of the strangest hours of television ever broadcast in the UK. Martin Shaw, sporting a broad Northern accent, is a porno kingpin who wants to buy an old aquarium and turn it into a grot theatre. His plans are hampered by the fact that the derelict building is haunted...by a ghostly dolphin. "Baby", on the other hand, is absolutely horrifying stuff - a story about a mysterious mummified creature found encased in the wall of a country vet's cottage. The paranormal nightmare it unleashes on his pregnant wife is truly nerve-wracking, laced as it is with convincing rural folklore, and the final shot is a real chiller. The only downside is a woeful performance by Manimal himself, Simon MacCorkindale, as the vet.

"What Big Eyes" is a clever little yarn about an idealistic RSPCA officer and the barmy scientist-cum-pet shop owner who has been experimenting on wolves to try and turn himself into a lycanthrope. It keeps you guessing all the way through as to whether the old man's serum will actually bear fanged fruit, but the ending - when it comes - is deliciously poignant. And, finally, "Dummy" is the peculiar story of a failed actor stuck playing a monster - the dummy of the title - in a series of stupid horror films. Having lost his wife and addled with booze, he and the monster become indistinguishable in his mind with predictably deadly results. This story isn't one of the best, but it's hard not to see it as Kneale's riposte to Hammer Studios, whose Quatermass movies he vocally criticised.

Also included in the set is "Murrain", an earlier teleplay by Kneale that set the template (such as it was) for Beasts. An interesting story of superstition and intolerance, it's a welcome addition to the collection.

If Beasts has a failing it's that the connection between the six stories is slender at best, near invisible at worst. The beastly concept is at the forefront of some tales, but barely present in others. As such, it makes for a rather uneven journey if consumed together - though the results are always intriguing and worth the effort.

It's worth noting that each episode is still preceded by the old ATV ident, and while the video transfer wouldn't pass muster for a blockbuster movie, it's perfectly in keeping with a nostalgic telly gem such as this.

BEAUTY AND THE BEAST

BATB was a romantic fantasy which during its first two seasons centred around the relationship between Catherine Chandler, an attractive female attorney, and Vincent, a half-man, half-beast. During the series' third and final season, the program lost one of its stars, Linda Hamilton who portrayed Catherine, and the series shifted in focus to more action orientated stories.

Vincent was a man whose grotesque appearance hid his gentle nature. Abandoned as an infant due to his appearance. Vincent was found and raised and educated by Father. Father was a recluse and something of a leader to a society of people living in the tunnels beneath the street of New York City. Vincent first encountered Catherine when he found her in Central Park when she had been beaten and left to die by a gang of street thugs who had mistaken her for someone else. Catherine was nursed back to health by Vincent, and although at first frightened of him soon she began to admire and eventually fell in love with him. The pair eventually learn that they share a mental link in which Vincent 'knew' when Catherine was in danger. Her relationship with him caused her to question her direction in life and caused her to quit her job at a prestigious private law firm and take one with the district attorneys office, where she worked with Joe Maxwell.

The first two seasons of the programme presented an often uneven mixture of stories. Stories ranged from straight forward crime drama's in which Vincent would save the day and Catherine went after criminals in New York City, to romantic episodes which seemed like an overdose of saccharine in which Vincent and Catherine's relationship slowly progressed.

This relationship progressed so slowly that the cliff-hanger at the end of the first season consisted of whether or not the pair actually kissed. By the start of the third season this question became problematic. A pregnant Catherine was kidnapped by Gabriel, a crime lord she had been investigating. She was murdered by him but not before giving birth to her and Vincent's child. Understandably shaken by her death, Vincent set out to avenge her death and obtain custody of his son. Vincent eventually met up with Diana Bennett, maverick police officer assigned to investigate Catherine's murder, and the pair became friends while bringing Gabriel to justice in a story arc which spanned most of the third season.

Armin Shimerman would later go on and play the character of Quark in STAR TREK : DEEP SPACE NINE. Linda Hamilton has also made herself a film career starring in films such as The Terminator and Dante's Peak. Fritz Leiber created this genre of "urban fantasy", and talented writer/editor/producer George R. R. Martin brought it to life for adoring TV audiences.

Producers were Paul Junger Witt, Tony Thomas, and Ron Koslow (ROAR). A total of 56 episodes were made over three seasons in colour. Some of the plots for the show were, 'Shades of Grey' in which Vincent and Father are trapped in an underground tunnel. 'Ozymandias' in which Catherine accepts a marriage proposal from a man who plans to build a large skyscraper which would destroy the tunnels below and 'When the Blue Bird Sings', Catherine becomes fascinated by an eccentric artist she asks to paint her, but after she checks up on him, she discovers that he has been dead for two years.

Despite the involvement of distinguished SF writer George R.R. Martin as story editor, the show was a combination of soap opera and crime thriller rather than a real SF/Fantasy offering, though the idea of a fantastic city beneath the real one is interesting. The unorthodox team normally righted wrongs that could as easily serve as springboards for any other action adventure show.

An urban fairytale, inspired in its make-up design if not in its commitment to magic by Jean Cocteau's film La Belle et la Bête (1946), BATB centres on the relationship between Catherine (Linda Hamilton), a chic Manhattan district attorney, and Vincent (Ron Perlman), a poeticising, romantic, MUTANT lion-man who lives with his adopted father (Roy Dotrice) in a world of derelicts in tunnels deep beneath the city. He has a telepathic link with his ladylove. Despite the involvement of distinguished SF writer George R.R. Martin as story editor, the show was a combination of soap opera and crime thriller rather than a real SF/fantasy offering, though the idea of a fantastic city beneath the real one is interesting.

The unorthodox team normally righted wrongs that could as easily have served as springboards for episodes of any other action adventure, while for two seasons Catherine and Vincent merely pussy-footed around their relationship. The show's fragile charm being almost exhausted, the format underwent severe changes in its final season, first with the consummation of the central relationship, then with the casual killing-off of the heroine and several other supporting cast members, motivating Vincent's character change from mutant Care Bear to raging vigilante. Catherine was replaced briefly by Diana Bennett (Jo Anderson), a police officer, but the show never regained the-largely female -- fan following its earlier, more wistful episodes had picked up. A novelization, largely of the first episode, is Beauty and the Beast * (1989) by Barbara HAMBLY.

The first two seasons of the programme presented an often uneven mixture of stories. Stories ranged from straight forward crime dramas in which Vincent would save the day as Catherine went after criminals in New York City, to dramas set in the tunnel society beneath the streets of New York, to romantic episodes which seemed like an overdose of saccharine in which Vincent and Catherine's relationship slowly progressed. This relationship progressed so slowly that the cliff-hanger at the end of the first season consisted of whether or not the pair actually kissed.

Some viewers found it sappy; others loved Vincent and made him a cult figure. Unfortunately, just as the show was gathering momentum, star Linda Hamilton jumped ship. In the third season, her character was brutally murdered, and the shock to fans and viewers lost the series its formerly devoted audience.

In this very eighties series, a classic leg-end gets a modern updating and appeals to those who believe that beauty is more than just what we perceive on the surface. Women loved it. Guys tended to get weary of the endless foreplay of the story lines. Beauty and the Beast was created by Colorado native Ron Koslow, a UCLA film school graduate, whose first screenplay sale was for the Sam Neill movie Lifeguard. Other films include Into the Night and Firstborn, but Beauty and the Beast represented his first foray into series television. The first episode, "Beauty and the Beast," was scripted by Ron Koslow and directed by Richard Franklin (who had directed the feature film Psycho). The saga begins with an introduction to Catherine Chandler, a lawyer who is dissatisfied with her life. She leaves a party unaccompanied and is mistaken for another woman by a group of men who abduct her and take her away in a van. Apparently, Carol-whomever she may be-has been speaking too freely to suit whoever it is that these goons work for. One of them pulls a knife; then we see Catherine being dumped in Central Park. A mysterious cowed figure finds her and carries her inert form away, deep into twisting tunnels beneath the park.

When Catherine comes to, she finds her face swathed in bandages. The voice of her rescuer, Vincent (who remains unseen by the audience, as by Catherine at this point), tells her that she is injured but has been cared for. We also meet Father, whose relationship with Vincent remains obscure. He chides Vincent for bringing the woman under-ground; apparently Vincent is at some risk out of this subterranean hideaway. But he defends his actions to Father, and in the ensuing days he nurses Catherine back to health, revealing his quiet strength and gentleness. Eventually, she begins to ask questions, and he tells her that he lives in an underground world forgotten by the world above; he himself is a foundling, found in front of a hospital and raised by the man called Father. To occupy her mind, he begins to read Dickens's Great Expectations to her.

Time passes; the search for Catherine by the police and her father gets nowhere, and Catherine, still blinded by her bandages, begins to grow rest-less. Left alone, she unwraps her bandages; and receives two shocks in rapid succession: the discovery of the horrible scars left on her face by the thug's blade, and the sight of Vincent's lion like face in the mirror when he comes up behind her with a cup of tea. She begins to weep, and Vincent runs away, hurt by her reaction to him. Soon, however, they speak again; Vincent does not know why he is what he is, since he does not know who his parents are. But it is apparent that a bond had developed between Catherine and him, and that once the initial shock of her two discoveries wears off she does not feel threatened by him at all. He leads her to the surface, and she sees some of his underground world on her way out. Back in the outside world, Catherine undergoes plastic surgery, and months later, her face restored, she lands a job in the District Attorney's office, where Assistant D.A. Joe Maxwell is her boss. She also undertakes to learn self-defence from a man named Joseph Stubbs. Meanwhile, below the city, it seems that Vincent has been brooding ever since Catherine's departure.

With the help of her co-worker Edie (the obligatory computer whiz who always digs up any information needed for plot advancement), Catherine tracks down Carol, the intended victim of the "warning" administered to Catherine eight months earlier. Carol won't talk to her but takes her card. Later, there is an intruder at Catherine's apartment and she gets a gun (she's obviously not taking any chances these days!) but it turns out to be Vincent. He is afraid that he cannot see Catherine again, but this seems somewhat unlikely; much angst ensues before he slips away into the night. The next day, Carol comes to talk to Catherine at the D.A.'s office. Carol, it seems, worked for an "escort service" operated by a man named Marty Belmont.

Belmont's "services" were part of a blackmail racket, and Carol had backed out upon discovering this, which led to Belmont's botched attack on her. Now Carol has come out of hiding and is ready to testify-but Belmont's men follow her when she leaves the office building and heads for an apartment belonging to a friend of Catherine's. When Catherine goes there, she finds Carol dead. Catherine is also attacked but manages to hold off her attackers.

Meanwhile, Vincent has sensed her danger; it seems that there is some profound aspect to their link to each other. Riding on top of a speeding sub-way car, he breaks in just in the nick of time as the thugs find Catherine and level a pistol at her. Vincent dispatches them all in a wild fury only to, calm down when he realises that Catherine is safe. Reunited, they part once more, leaving baffled police to try to figure out exactly what transpired in an otherwise empty room filled with the mangled corpses of four hardened criminals. The next episode, "Terrible Savior," was scripted by noted science fiction writer George R. R. Martin, author of such novels as Dying of the Light and Nightflyers (later made into a movie with the same title). Here, muggers on the subway are being horribly dispatched by a mysterious figure with clawed hands and a significant amount of fur. Remembering how Vincent dealt with the men trying to kill her in the first episode, Catherine is perturbed, wondering if Vincent could be this killer.

Catherine's self-defence teacher introduces her to Jason Walker, head of a Guardian Angels-type group; they disagree about vigilantism. Catherine is still disturbed, and finally admits her fears to Vincent. He tells her that he is not the subway killer. Investigating further, she talks to Walker, who tells tales of a creature sometimes spotted in the subway. This is obviously Vincent, and some sort of "urban legend" seems to have grown around these few sightings. Later, the vigilante kills another subway mugger, but also knocks down an innocent old man and severely wounds a policeman. The vigilante slips into the subway tunnels but is spotted by one of the denizens of the Underground. Word is passed to Father and then to Vincent. Vincent visits Catherine again, not knowing that her apartment is being watched by one of Walker's associates. The next day she is abducted and taken to Walker; as might have been guessed by now, he has used the legend to create a figure which he himself portrays.

Now he wants to know about the real monster of the subways. He releases his captive into the tunnels and reappears in his "Vincent" costume, trying to pry information out of her with his clawed glove. Vincent once again senses her danger and arrives just in the nick of time. Vincent chases Walker into the caverns and a long battle ensues. Walker gets the upper hand but opts not to kill Vincent; attempting to escape, he plunges to his death in a deep chasm. The series continued with "Siege," in which Catherine and Vincent fight, each in their own way, to keep a group of senior citizens from being forced out of their homes by greedy and unscrupulous developers. In "No Way Down," Vincent is captured (for the first time) by a gang; the drama that unfolds around this involves the retarded brother of the gang leader, who shows Vincent some kindness, but is killed. A horribly battered and beaten Vincent escapes and eventually dispenses some fairly sharp justice.

George R. R. Martin returned as scriptwriter with "Masques," a tale set on Halloween. Vincent uses the holiday as an opportunity for walking freely through the surface world. He goes to a party also attended by Catherine and her father; the party is in honour of Brigit O'Donnell, an Irish peace activist. Vincent falls into conversation with Brigit; the two of them seem to be on the same wavelength on the subjects of peace and violence. Meanwhile, a man dressed as a clown crashes the party and begins to follow them into the park. When Vincent senses the clown, who has a gun in his hand, he knocks him out.

Catherine, meanwhile, has been trying to catch up with Vincent but is being accompanied by a man named Pratt. When she sees him, he walks away silently. Pratt identifies the clown as an IRA agent named Michael O'Fay, who was part of a plot to kill Brigit. Pratt himself is an Interpol agent out to foil the plot. They all get into Pratt's car, only to discover that O'Fay was actually sent to protect Brigit and to take her to her dying father; he had his gun out only because he didn't know if the man in the lion mask was a threat or not. Pratt is really the assassin, named Jamie Harland, and his victim is to be Brigit's father. He kills O'Fay first, since O'Fay had killed Harland's brother, and then Harland Brigit, and Catherine goes to the hotel room of Brigit's father.

Meanwhile, Vincent has-surprise!-sensed that Catherine is in danger! As he makes his way to her, Harland prepares to make Mr. O'Donnell watch his daughter die before his own death. Vincent does not arrive at this point, however-it is Catherine who uses her martial arts training to disarm Harland! The gun lands on O'Donnell's bed, and he prepares to kill Harland, but Brigit stands in front of her father and demands that the killing stop. This works on him but not on Harland, who takes Brigit hostage at knifepoint. Now Vincent shows up, dispatches Harland, and slips away. Brigit resolves to reconcile with her father, and Catherine leaves them alone. Vincent rejoins her and they walk together through the city until dawn, when a jogger, commenting on Vincent's costume, reminds them that the night when two worlds can mingle is over.

"The Beast Within" reunites Vincent with Mitch, a childhood friend and former denizen of the Underground. They had become estranged when Mitch became involved in surface crimes and was not allowed to hide out in Father's domain. This intertwines with a tale of dockside labour violence, in which Mitch is deeply involved. Vincent is captured again in "Nor Iron Bars a Cage," this time after a college professor, Hughes, spots him in a badly focused photograph. He hopes to prove this discovery to his sceptical colleagues, and captures Vincent with the aid of a grad student, Gould. The two men disagree; Hughes thinks their captive is human while Gould believes otherwise, an opinion bolstered by Vincent's wilful refusal to speak. Hughes hears Vincent speak while dreaming of Catherine, but Gould does not, and tranquillises Vincent. Meanwhile, Catherine spots an article in a sleazy tabloid paper about an old woman who witnessed the capture of a strange man-beast through her balcony telescope! While she looks into this angle, Hughes moves Vincent to another location to get him away from Gould. Realising that Hughes is not a threat like Gould, Vincent speaks to him, and tells him that he will die if he is not set free.

Catherine finds the tranquilliser darts used to catch Vincent and traces them to Hughes. She confronts the scientist, who is about to release Vincent, when Gould steps in and struggles with Hughes, stabbing him. Catherine gets the key. Gould tries to get it from her but foolishly comes close enough to the cage for Vincent to snap his neck. Hughes dies but not before making his peace with his former prisoner; he had hoped to restore his tarnished academic career with this astounding discovery, but realises that he was wrong to imprison another thinking creature. Father's past is revealed in "Song of Orpheus" when a message reveals that his long-lost love has returned to New York. The woman, Margaret, draws him to the surface, but he winds up being charged with the murder of her lawyer. Margaret is dying of cancer, and is being hounded to hand over her fortune to Henry, a man whose charitable causes are really a scam. In police custody, Father won't talk except to deny that he killed the man, and recalls the 1950s, when he was a physicist who questioned the government's conclusions regarding radiation hazards. For this he was branded a Communist and blacklisted.

Catherine is informed of Father's disappearance by Vincent and does some research, eventually unearthing Father's history as well as his name: Dr. Jacob Welles. Vincent discovers an old letter among Father's things: it is from Margaret. She and Welles had actually married, only to have their marriage annulled by her father after Welles's disgrace. She tracks down Margaret but can't get past Henry, who has Margaret drugged. She then goes back to work and spots Father in a cell when she goes to jail to take another prisoner's deposition. Afterward she speaks to him and tells him about Margaret. He tells her that the dead lawyer was a friend who had helped him back in the fifties.

That night Catherine takes a look around in the dead lawyer's office but is abducted by Henry. The lawyer had been onto Henry's scams, but this knowledge is of little use to Catherine as Henry intends to kill her. Vincent, of course, is on his way to rescue her, which he does quite dramatically by ripping off the top of an elevator and carrying her off up the cables! Henry's plan is foiled, and Father is able to spend Margaret's last week of life with her.

"Dark Spirit" involves Catherine in strange voodoo-like goings-on that threaten her life. In "A Children's Story," Catherine and Vincent converge, from different levels, on a seemingly legitimate children's home that is actually supplying a Fagin-like character with unwitting soldiers in his street army of crime. In "An Impossible Silence," a mute teenage girl witnesses the murder of a cop by other cops who are on the take and involved in drug trafficking. The girl, Laura, is an Underground dweller. Meanwhile, a black suspect (the real killer was white) is arrested, and Catherine has a seemingly airtight case against the man. But she must believe Vincent when he tells her that the man is innocent. Laura must ultimately decide to go aboveground to testify; she must leave the security of her world in order to save the suspect, and in the end decides to pursue a life on the surface.

"Shades of Grey" finds Father and Vincent trapped in a cave-in; the Undergrounders unite to save them but their fate depends on an ingenious youth who has been ostracized by the community. In "China Moon," two young lovers from the Chinese community flee social strictures into the Underground, which is then invaded by the Tong forces of the father of the man who intends to marry the young woman. Apparently, there is a bit more knowledge about the Underground in Chinatown. But with his world facing invasion from above, Vincent offers a fierce defence, and the lovers are free to marry and live below ground. The television series retold the classic story in modern terms. The message was still the same: appearances are not important.

"The Alchemist" introduces the villain Paracelsus who has been distributing a deadly drug on the surface, and taking only gold as payment. Clues lead Father to realise that Paracelsus is behind the plot; Paracelsus was largely involved in carving out the haven of the Underground but was banished by Father years before. He still lives elsewhere under the city; in fact, Father confronts him and warns him that his actions might draw attention to the subterranean world. It is obvious that Paracelsus is envious of Father's position of authority. Meanwhile, aboveground, Catherine is involved in official attempts to trace the source of the drug, which lead to the death of a cop on the case. Below ground, debate rages: all feel that Paracelsus must be stopped, but Father stops short of sanctioning the only means that can accomplish that end: killing the alchemist. Taking matters into his own hands, Vincent tracks and confronts Paracelsus but falls victim to the drug, which acts on contact. He goes berserk and attacks Father. Eventually Catherine finds him and calms him.

Vincent finds Paracelsus again and tells him to leave the city. They begin to fight when a fire blazes up. Paracelsus is about to rejoin the fight but turns to save his gold and is engulfed by flames. "Temptation" finds Catherine's boss, Joe, framed on drug charges (to get him off a case) while Vincent seeks a gift for Catherine for the first anniversary of their meeting. Another former friend of Vincent's returns in "Promises of Someday"; this time he is a man named Devin, who left their world years before. Under the name of Jeff Zadler, he begins working in the D.A.'s office with Catherine on an important case. He also seems to know about the underground city, and Catherine observes him go to the entrance. His identity is revealed; Vincent is happy to see him, but it is obvious that there is a deep rift between Devin and Father. Part of this stems from the fact that Devin is not really a lawyer; a highly intelligent man, he has worked many jobs the world over, always an impostor! He even delivered a baby by caesarean section while posing as a doctor! Catherine wants him to clear out of the D.A.'s office which he promises to do.

Eventually, the truth comes out: Father actually is Devin's father. At last they are reconciled, but Devin leaves again for another part of the world. This time he travels under his real name-Devin Welles. And Catherine discovers that his work on their case was actually good enough to make the charges stick.

In "Down to a Sunless Sea," Catherine meets an old flame, whom she dropped because of his possessiveness; he manages to win her trust, somewhat, but he's actually deranged and obsessed. Years before they had mused about a country home; Catherine has forgotten that, including her offhand comment about how nice a red stove would be, but he has remembered every detail. He gets her to come along with him to look at a house he's thinking of buying-but he's already bought it, and that red stove. As far as he's concerned, they're home now, and there's nothing she can do about it. Fortunately, Vincent has spent the entire episode coping with a recurring dream about running through a forest, and once again rescues Catherine. He narrowly avoids killing the crazed suitor, who winds up in a mental institution.

"Fever" finds the inhabitants of the Underground turning against each other when a treasure trove is discovered there. "Everything Is Everything" involves Catherine in Gypsy justice. "To Reign in Hell" brings back Paracelsus, whose scarred face is partially covered by a mask of molten gold. The alchemist strikes back by abducting Catherine, and Vincent must gather a band of friends to go deeper than any have ever ventured underground in order to save her. Paracelsus' monstrous helpers are slain as is one of Vincent's friends, but the villain escapes. "Ozymandias" finds the Underground threatened by the foundations of a giant skyscraper.

"A Happy Life" is a contemplative episode where Catherine assesses her life; action-free, it brings the first classic season to a thoughtful conclusion. The second season of Beauty and the Beast veered into more soap opera-like territory and began to falter in the ratings. Toward the end, Paracelsus returned to truly tax Vincent, revealing skills as a shapeshifter and offering revelations about Vincent's past that might be lies-but might not be. He even impersonates Father-a great scene for Roy Dotrice- and tests the dark side of Vincent's character. To further complicate matters, the call of feature films lured Linda Hamilton away from the show, and the character of Catherine was killed off, leaving Vincent to work solo in the faltering episodes of the short final season. Thus, the promise of the series, so bright in the first year, sort of faded out quietly in the end, not with a bang, but a whimper.

Linda Hamilton, who played Catherine on Beauty and the Beast, was born in Maryland. She began acting at an early age, eventually attending the prestigious Lee Strasberg Theatre Institute. After finishing these studies, she worked for a time on the soap opera Search for Tomorrow. She moved to California in 1979 and began to work in films. There, she appeared in Stephen King's Children of the Corn, King Kong Lives, Black Moon Rising, and, most significantly, The Terminator. And, of course, in the aftermath of Beauty and the Beast, she achieved her biggest success, and major stardom, with Arnold Schwarzenegger in the massive hit movie Terminator 2.

Ron Periman, who essayed the crucial role of Vincent in Beauty and the Beast, was primarily a stage actor. Born in New York, he studied stage extensively, and appeared in such Broadway stage productions as American Heroes, Pal Joey, Tartuffe, Measure for Measure, The Iceman Cometh, Two Gentlemen of Verona, and House of Blue Leaves. He appeared in such movies as Quest for Fire, Ice Pirates, and, most notably, The Name of the Rose, where he came to the attention of the producer of Beauty and the Beast. His role as the deformed hunchback, Salvatore, certainly displayed his skill at working under heavy makeup, and helped convince the Beauty and the Beast team that he was the man for the job.

The character of Father was portrayed by British actor Roy Dotrice, who first began acting while a teenage prisoner of war of the Germans in World War II. During his nearly four years of incarceration, his captors had the POWs take part in theatrical productions, so one could say that Dotrice was literally forced into the theatre. After the war and his liberation he returned to England and pursued his stage career, eventually becoming a member of the Royal Shakespeare Company. In time, Dotrice found stage work on the other side of the Atlantic, and, in addition to that acclaimed work, managed to make a living off of American television as well, appearing in such network fare as Remington Steele, Magnum, P.I., Hart to Hart, and The A-Team. Finally, he landed the role of the patriarchal Father on Beauty and the Beast.

Catherine Chandler's boss on Beauty and the Beast, Deputy District Attorney Joe Maxwell, was played by actor Jay Acovone. A native of New York state, Acovone started out on such soap operas as Search for Tomorrow and As the World Turns, before a 1985 move to the West Coast led to other television work. This included shots on the short-lived series version of Down and Out in Beverly Hills, on Fox's Werewolf and on Andy Griffith's Matlock. He also appeared in the Dan Curtis-produced miniseries War and Remembrance, as Maselli. His feature film work includes appearances in the Al Pacino feature Cruising and the horror movie 976-Evil, directed by Freddy Krueger himself, Robert Englund.

Catherine's friend and confidante in the D.A.'s office, Edie, was portrayed by Ren Woods, an Oregon native who first got into show business as a singer at the age of nine, actually joining Bob Hope in Vietnam as part of a singing group at the age of fourteen, and eventually landing the role of Dorothy in the West Coast company of The Wiz. On television she has appeared on Hill Street Blues, The Jeffersons, and in the groundbreaking miniseries Roots. On film, Woods has appeared in such movies as John Sayles's The Brother from Another Planet, Car Wash, Jumpin' Jack Flash, and the Alex Cox film Walker, all the while maintaining her career as a singer.

The main villain of Beauty and the Beast, Paracelsus, was portrayed by the actor Tony Jay. The British-born actor ruefully recalls that George Lucas actually approached him to play the part of Obi-Wan Kenobi while Star Wars was still in the embryonic stages, but he never heard anything more about the project from Lucas and eventually discovered that Alec Guinness had wound up with the role. But long before that slice of fame eluded him, Tony Jay had always kept acting in his life, although generally in an amateur capacity, until a move to South Africa led to his involvement in radio dramas and a little bit of film work. Seven years later he returned to England, forty years old and obliged to resume his career at ground zero.

While intergalactic fame eluded him, he did luck into a part in the international stage hit Nicholas Nickleby, which also aired on PBS stations. This Dickens adaptation led him right into opportunities for American television, as it did for the actor who played Nickleby, Roger Rees, who played tycoon Robin Colcord for several seasons of Cheers. Tony Jay's first American television gig was a pilot called Circus, which never got off the ground but did lead to Jay's marriage to his makeup artist! After that, roles on Hunter, The Golden Girls, and the short-lived Hill Street Blues spin-off Beverly Hills Buntz quickly ensued, as well as parts in the theatrical films Twins and My Stepmother Is an Alien, where he finally got to play an Obi-Wan Kenobi-like character. And of course, then came the part of Paracelsus on Beauty and the Beast.

When the series was cancelled, a handful of episodes had not been aired, but these were quickly seen when the Lifetime Channel picked up the show for syndication. Although there were rumours that Linda Hamilton was forced to leave the series, she actually left because of the lure of feature film work.

The way her character was brutally killed off, after giving birth to Vincent's child, angered many long-time fans. Only a few episodes of the revised version, which introduced a new love interest for Vincent, aired before CBS pulled the plug. Although rumours abound of a Beauty and the Beast motion picture, which would reunite Ron Perlman and Linda Hamilton, this project has never advanced beyond the rumour stage.

A young lawyer discovers an underground world. She becomes increasingly attracted to a "beast" named Vincent who helps her heal from an accident in the pilot. Starring Linda Hamilton and Ron Perlman, Beauty and the Beast quickly became an audience favorite for three seasons. Linda Hamilton left the show at the end of the second season to raise her real-life child. Her character, Catherine, was killed in a move that angered many viewers. Eventually, Jo Anderson, who had been playing a police officer named Diana in the series, took up the storyline. The show boasted the talents of science fiction novelist George R.R. Martin as supervising producer. Directors included Thomas J. Wright, Paul Lynch, Gabrielle Beaumont, Peter Medak and Gus Trikonis, all Twilight Zone revival veterans.

BENJI, ZAX AND THE ALIEN PRINCE

Prince Yubi is a 10 year old boy from the planet Antares, who moves to Earth after the government on his homeworld is overthrown, including his parents. When Prince Yubi and his guardian ROBOT Zax arrive on Earth, they befriend a dog Benji, who is a stray. Meanwhile the new leaders of Antares send Darrah and Kyber to Earth, to assassinate Prince Yubi. Prince Yubi remains the only heir to the throne on Antares, and so he must evade the assassins, without revealing to anyone on Earth that he is an alien.

Some of the plots for show were ' UFO' in which visitors from outer space discover Prince Yubi's secret. In 'Goldmine' Prince Yubi hears from another refugee from Antares who needs his help. ' The Flying Lesson' was about Darrah and Kyber almost capturing Prince Yubi, who is saved by his friends Zax and Benji. BZATAP was another show which was broadcast on a Saturday morning in the US, the character of Benji however was one that went back to television movies, in the mid 1970s. It was thought a good idea to give Benji his own show. The four movies which featured the character of Benji were, Benji (1974), For The Love of Benji (1977), Oh, Heavenly Dog (1980) and Benji, The Hunted (1987). BZATAP was originally to have been made in Britain, but it would have meant putting Benji in quarantine for several months, before he could be allowed into Britain. It did however finally get filmed in Canada.

The executive producers for the series were Joseph Barbera and Margaret Loesch. Director for the series was Joe Camp. The series was shown on BBC1 in the UK, the British airdates for the show were 5th October - 28 December 1984.

BERNARD'S WATCH

Ten-year-old Bernard Beasley receives a special delivery - a magic watch which can stop time. (season 2) After learning how to use the watch, he manages to accidentally lose it, it is then found by his friend Karen, who soon discovers how the watch works. They finally agree to share the watch.

This rather strange cheap SF show from ITV has a very simple premise and a low budget, but for kids it works surpassingly well, with some reusable good acting from the main players, but with a poor supporting cast. With minimal special effects, such as time stopping being represented by stopping the video tape or by people standing still, the show has to really upon its storylines which it does quite well.

After the success of the five part first season, mostly abroad, a second longer 12 part season was commissioned, the series continued along the same lines. Wouldn't it be great if you could stop time for everyone in the world but yourself? If you were late for an appointment, you could simply make time stop still until you got there. This is the fantasy realised by a young boy In Bernard's Watch. When he stops to help a woman on the way to school one morning, she thanks him by giving him an old fashioned fob watch which he soon discovers he's the power to make time stand still.

Ten-year-old David Peachey stars as Bernard in his first major television series. The young actor regularly goes to a children's drama workshop in Nottingham and appeared on television a couple of times when he was Youn9er, but this is his first big Job. It was one that virtually landed in his lap. "I didn't have an audition;" he says. "My elder brother has done lots of television and he's worked with David Cobham, the director, so he just looked at my picture and said I'd be ell right "

Needless to say, the story is about more than just Bernard being able to get to school on time. He uses his watch to get up to ell sorts of mischief. "He does things like, it he's tired he can Just go to sleep with-out anybody knowing," says David. "In maths tests he stops time to cheat and he's extra time to do ex-tra working. He's not very good at maths, but as soon as he gets his work he gets 20 out of 20 for a maths test. The headmaster's a bit suspicious and he gives Bernard a [second] maths test, but he gets them all right again because he's used his watch for that"

The series has been written by Andrew Norriss and Richard Fegan, the team behind The Brittas Empire and Woolf! (the story of e boy who kept turning Into a dog). It began as a one hour drama for the European Broadcasting Union where it demon strated its popularity by winning an award. Bernard's Watch is a series that would have been incredibly expensive a few years ago, but is now possible because of the relative cheapness of computer graphics.

Most of the frozen Time effects have been added afterwards, but even so the filming was sometimes quite technically complicated. "I know sometimes when things were frozen, they were doing stuff like freeze frames and things like that;" says David. "We had to try and keep the noise down when it was in frozen time, but it was only done after the filming. Apparently we had a very good person who does all the graphics and things." There is a second chance that a second series could follow and David is keeping his fingers crossed for that. Meanwhile, he has no doubt of what he would like to do if he had a magic watch like Bernard's. "Do things like play football matches with it and stop Time and score goals"

A pilot for the series was shown on the 8th September 1995, as part of Britain's contribution to the European Broadcasting Union exchange of Children's drama from around Europe. It starred Laurie Bilson as a young boy Bernard, who meets a mysterious old woman who gives him a magical watch that enables him to freeze time (and even his headteacher!). The third series was interrupted by the 1999 Rugby World Cup meaning that 4 episodes were shown before a two week break before the rest of the episodes being shown.

BEYOND REALITY

Two people investigate UFOs and the paranormal. Laura Wingate is a believer, who teaches and researches paranormal events, and her partner is a sceptical university professor. During the third season they were joined by Celia, their assistant who doubles as their receptionist in their office.

BR was a Canadian produced low budget series that was run in the US on the USA cable network. The series was something of a cross between The Sixth Sense and ALCOA PRESENTS : ONE STEP BEYOND/ THE NEXT STEP BEYOND.

Like The Sixth Sense BR was about a pair of investigators of psychic and paranormal phenomena. The pair of investigator were Dr. Wingate and Professor Stillman, both staff members of a major university. During the third season they are joined by Celia, their assistant who doubles as receptionist in their office. Like the ANTHOLOGY series ALCOA PRESENTS : ONE STEP BEYOND and THE NEXT STEP BEYOND. BR at first claimed to be presenting tales of actual fact with some of the stories being almost believable. However by the third season this pretence was dropped and as a result the stories did become more imaginative.

Although most episodes dealt with the realms of fantasy, there was a number of SF plots in the show, these included, 'Return Visit', a young woman has a vision of her mother being abducted by a UFO 10 years previously. 'The Cold', a woman suddenly finds herself in a frozen wasteland where a man trapped in cryogenic sleeps begs her for mercy in releasing him from his condition, and time travel in 'Lets Play House' in which a man comes to the Professor claiming to be able to journey back in time to 1959, to prove it he takes Celia with him, where she is forced to play the role of a perfect 1950s housewife.

The series cost $500,000 (Canadian) dollars per episode and was made in Toronto specifically for American Cable channel USA Networks. Britain has given it an irregular airing, with most ITV regions showing it on and off at unearthly hours of the morning.

BEYOND WESTWORLD

Westworld was a sophisticated amusement park, where superhuman ANDROIDS roamed around, helping visitors to the amusement park enjoy themselves, and to live out their wild west fantasies. In BW, the creator of the ANDROIDS decides to set them free, Simon Quaid the scientist who lets them free plans to start his own new programmed race. The corporation who created Westworld is Dylos, who send two top operatives John Moore and Pam Williams, to expose and prevent any mishaps which the ANDROIDS might occur in society. Professor Oppenheimer also helps them from his base of operations of Dylos HQ. Oppenheimer also helped to build the ANDROIDS with the help of Simon Quaid.

Killer theme parks were better done, later, by Crichton in "Jurassic Park", and even better in the "Dream Park" trilogy of novels by Steve Barnes and Larry Niven. The concept for the show however goes to Michael Crichton, whose film Westworld (1973) the series was based on. There was a total of five episodes made each one being 60 minutes long and all made in colour.

The directors were Ted Post, Paul Stanley and Don Weis. The series was shown on CBS in the US, Granada in the UK. Various STAR TREK actors made guest appearances in the show, these included George Takei (STAR TREK) in the episode 'Take Over' and Rene Auberjonois (STAR TREK : DEEP SPACE NINE) in 'Sound of Terror'. BW's creator Lou Shaw also created the popular crime drama Quincy. Stories included 'Sound of Terror' in which Quaid plans to smuggle an atomic bomb out of the country, and 'Take - Over' in which Quaid possesses the ability to control people as well as androids. He uses this to take over the mind of a police Captain, who is in charge of a political debate, so that he can have one of his androids as a politician. Although five episodes were made only three were shown since the show was a massive flop. As well as Westworld (1973), there was a sequel made entitled Futureworld (1976).

Beyond Westworld was the brainchild of writer-producer Lou Shaw (the man who created Quincy!). The UK premiere dates for the show were 31st August - 21st September 1980, and the 1st January 1981, this was on the Grampian and Granada regions of ITV. In the show original run in the US the last two episodes were not aired, the show being cancelled after episode 1.3.

Based on the film Westworld by Michael Crichton; Developed for television by.. Lou Shaw; Executive Producer: Lou Shaw; Producer: Fred Freiberger; Supervising Producer: Leonard B. Kaufman; CBS/ MGM TV; 60 minutes.

Beyond Westworld is easy to describe: James Bond hunting robots. The series is based on Michael Crichton's 1973 feature film Westworld, where robots provided visitors their every pleasure in a futuristic amusement park, until the electronic servants suddenly ran amok. Although a 1976 sequel, Futureworld, was filmed, the television series was a set-up for an ongoing struggle between man and machines (controlled by an evil leader with world conquest ambitions) and shares no relationship with the sequel. To counter the evil one's intentions, John Moore, security chief, joins forces with assistant Pamela Williams and the true genius behind the robots, Professor Joseph Oppenheimer. They are pitted against the villainous Simon Quaid, their version of the James Bond villain, "Blofeld."

"I loved the idea," says star McMullan. "Michael Crichton and I worked on his first movie for television that he directed, Pursuit, and a film he wrote right after that called Extreme Closeup. Now, Michael had nothing to do with Beyond Westworld. He just gave them the rights to do it and then stepped away.

"The pilot was a well-written script, and in this genre you need good scripts that are well thought out and will intrigue the audience and are tricky and will go in different directions. The pilot had that. They waited and finally got an OK from the network to go ahead with it. Then, on short notice, they had to come up with all these scripts, and they were not very good. They got worse as they went along because they were in a real hurry to deliver them. It's such a shame, and that's why the series fell."

Co-star Jordan recalls the fall of the show similarly. "The idea was confined to the limitations of television," he says. "There's a matter of production qualities. I think that to some extent we achieved quality work in the first two or three shows. But I think the production costs were too much for the network. There were lots of special effects in terms of robotics and in terms of people's chests having to be opened and circuitry being shown. I didn't think it was a major problem, it was just costly." For Jordan, this show was something of a small blip in his career, and he did not find it satisfying. "Doing television isn't very fulfilling unless you're doing a movie of the week, that has to do with history or some kind of innovative piece of material," he notes. "Pilots start out as ambitious, but ... [episodes] peter out. Exposition takes over for any hollowing in the dialogue. There's lots of efforts to cut costs, and sometimes there's an attempt to tell a story through exposition rather than visually." Five episodes is an embarrassingly small number to have filmed, but airing only three on prime-time television is the action of a network who pulled the plug very fast.

"They would have loved this to go on much longer, but it was like asking someone to deliver a weekly show like Mission: Impossible and not give much time to write these intricate scripts," acknowledges McMullan. "They could have been wonderful. We, were very disappointed because each time we would get a new script, we were rushing to get it finished. So, we ended up with all this junk, and you could feel each show was a little worse than the last one. We tried hard."

McMullan believes that had the show been given the time it needed to be properly put together, viewers would have seen deeper characterization, more interesting relationships and of course, more action. McMullan says, "As it was, Beyond Westworld degenerated into a chase show, and not even the villains were interesting. James Wainwright's character became something of a caricature. We had a couple of scenes, mostly him watching me in a television monitor. I actually saw him as more of a Burgess Meredith character when I first read the script. They felt it was important to make him my age. I didn't feel comfortable with that. At that time that's how they saw it; they figured the audience just wanted action. Today, if you did the same show, you would start to see much more relationships. Even in Baywatch, I did a recurring part as the father of one of the boys-they're bringing in intimate relationships with families."

Executive producer, Fred Freiberger, when contacted for comments on the show, responded with just two words: "Impossible concept!" McMullan concedes, "From a writer's viewpoint, that may be true." And McMullan also admits that in the right hands, Beyond WestWorld could very easily have been a comedy, a Get Smart-style show.

Despite the disappointments, working on the set was pleasant enough for the actors. "Connie was wonderful and so was Bill," remembers McMullan. "We got along very nicely, and we had fun working together. This show was a big boost for Connie. It was a good opportunity for her to get started. ... As a matter of fact, Connie and I did a movie of the week called She's Dressed to Kill (1979) just after the show."

Sellecca was not present for the pilot. For reasons McMullan doesn't understand, her role was played as a different character by actress Judith Chapman. The casting was also adjusted for Foley, a sidekick legman who would implement Quaid's plans, played in the pilot by Stewart Moss and later by Severn Darden. "Connie was just getting started," says William Jordan. "I think it was her first series. She was a very sweet, bright, able actress. She was a real delight. She still is a very pleasant person. jim, I still see regularly. We're still good friends. I run into him every month or so. We've worked together on other projects, so it's not like it was the only one. It was kind of like a family here sometimes. And not just because of the series. It's like when you go out for different interviews and projects and you are similar in age, qualities, naturally you run into that person reading the same part." However disappointing and unsuccessful the show was, McMullan remains fascinated by its concept and viability, so much that he declares it can be done again.

"I would love to see them do this again properly," says McMullan. "If I had the opportunity, I'd like to try to bring this back again. It was very exciting to me. You never knew who the robot was. The concept was simple. A villain who's disgruntled with what they were doing with his androids, pitting them back at society, doing dastardly deeds, that's wonderful. And you have a James Bond character that I played; running around with all his expertise, being a trouble-shooter, checking them out.... You never knew who the android was. That was the mystery each week. I thought the pilot was great, and it got fabulous reviews, and that's why they put it on opposite the toughest show on television, Eight Is Enough. They refused to move it. The ratings started to drop because they were fighting a show that was well ensconced."

B-FIGHTER

AKA: BEEFIGHTER

AKA: BETTLE FIGHTER

AKA: HEAVY ARMOUR BETTLE FIGHTER

AKA: JUKKOU B-FIGHTER

The series of Heavy Armored Beetle Fighter is set against the conceptual environment of an Earth that faces the threat of invasion from another dimension. The Jamahl Empire, under the leadership of Emperor Gaohm and his commanding generals, Jera, Shuvaults and Gigaro, sets its goal of conquest upon the dimensional domination of Earth. Sudden unprecedented swarms of erratic insect behavior precede the impending doom of Jamahl, while at the Japanese branch of the Earth Academia, the development of special bio-machinery technology continues. The study of insects such as beetles, and the natural use of their exoskeletons as a coat of armor, has been the primary focus of this particular project. Entomologist Takuya Kai (Daisuke Tsuchiya) encounters the mystical, insectoid extraterrestrial Guru during a jungle expedition. This sentient, beetle-like sage warns of the approaching menace of Jamahl and extends his magic to Earth Academia in order to aid in the terrestrial defense.

When the activation of the prototype robo-armored units fails, Guru brings the bio-machinery to an advanced level at which they respond like living insect armor. Transformed by the life energy of beetles as channeled by Guru, these new and Beetle Fighters step forward and convert the essence of their forms into three hand-held devices called B-Commanders. Takuya accepts the device that allows him to transform into Blue Beet, the leader of the B-Fighters. The other B-Commanders seek out two particularly defiant humans who have been taken prisoner by the Jamahl soldiers. Before they can be executed, Rei Hayama (Reina Kazuki) and Daisaku Katagiri (Shigeru Kanai) gain the ability to become Reddler and G-Stag and join forces with Earth Academia. Together with their arsenal of special weapons and battle vehicles, the B-Fighter team becomes Earth's primary defense against Jamahl and its many monsters. Throughout the 53 episode series, the battles of the B-Fighter team carry them into the alternative dimensions of Jamahl, in which the evil invaders hope to trap and someday destroy the armored heroes.

Later in the series, Mai Takatori (Chigusa Tomoe), a young officer from the South American branch of Earth Academia, replaces Rei as Reddler. Just when it appears that the B-Fighter team has gained the advantage against Jamahl, the villains perfect the anti-Beetle Fighter, Black Beet. Black Beet's true identity turns out to be Shadow, the dark clone of Takuya manufactured by Jamahl from the young hero's cells and he proves himself to be a formidable opponent. A new white-armored B-Fighter named Kabuto emerges to meet the challenge of Black Beet. The son of Guru, Kabuto joins the B-Fighter team and the series concludes with the final destruction of Gaohm. A special two part finale features the team-up of the B-Fighter team and former Toei heroes Jan Person and Gun Gibson from the 1993 series Janperson, as well as the heroes from Blue Swat. The teams join forces to battle the sudden arrival of the demonic creature Jaghoul and hammers the final nail in the coffin of further inter dimensional threats.

Emerging from Toei's television production stables of Japanese heroes, Heavy-Armored Beetle Fighter (Juko B-Fighter) premiered on the TV Asahi network on February 5, 1995 in the 8:00-8:30am time slot. B-Fighter sprang from the imagination of creator Saburo Hattē, one of Toei's most prolific super hero visionaries of recent years. Hattē's credits reach deep into the history of Toei's popular Super Sentai series since 1979's Battle Fever J and their 1978 version of Spiderman. B-Fighter; however, has more obvious roots within the genre of Toei's Metal Hero series, going back to Hattē's own revolutionary Space Sheriff Gavan (1982), about a robotic law-enforcer which predated America's own RoboCop. Early Metal Hero series such as the super-dimension warrior Spielvan (1986) and super machine Metalder (1987), both of which had their battle action sequences and characters converted by Saban for American television into V.R. Troopers, confronted all varieties of mutant alien invaders as they fought to protect the Earth.

These incredible battles would sometimes extend into other dimensions and eerie alternative universes. In the 90s, however, the Metal Hero formula took a radical departure from these established conventions with super police and special rescue series such as Windspector (1989), Solbrain (1991) and Exceedraft (1993). In these series, specially-trained law enforcement agents would don super-armored battle suits on missions of civilian or national defense against high-tech criminals and terrorists. This shift into a more futuristic setting without bizarre monsters, aliens, mutants or alternative dimensions was a controversial move that lost some of the viewing audience, while enticing a new generation of fans. But eventually, popular demand would open the door to let creatures back in by the time of Blue Swat (1994), the series that preceded B-Fighter.

The popularity of B-Fighter on Asahi TV paved the way for an immediate sequel in 1996 entitled B-Fighter Kabuto. (Kabuto is the Japanese word for helmet or head-piece. The kanji combination of kabutomushi means helmet beetle, a reference to the family of rhinoceros beetle which is the main symbolic motif of the B-Fighter concept). This series introduced the expansion of Earth Academia into Cosmo Academia where an even stronger B-Fighter armor, the Neo-Insect Armor has been developed, along with a new arsenal of weapons and vehicles. Takuya and Guru have pushed their combination of bio-machinery science technology and magic to the next level. Their timing is perfect because a new threat is reaching out to seize the world. An ancient race of prehistoric creatures has evolved into the Melzard Tribe. Arising to claim the surface world like devils, the imperial family beneath the empress Mother Melzard has become divided over the millennia into two primary military clans. Leading the land creatures is the powerful dinosaur general, Raija, eldest son of the Empire. Beneath him, the insectoid female fencer, Miohira, serves as commander of his body-guard troops and mutant soldiers. Leading the aquatic creatures is the deep-sea fish-man, Dezul, second son of the Empire.

The seashell chamberlain, Dord, commands Dezul's troops and mutant soldiers. To counter Melzard, a new, young generation of B-Fighters steps up to the challenge. Kohei Toba (Hideomi Nakazato) is a particularly diligent teenage scholar excelling equally in school academics and athletics. He becomes the great golden warrior of power, B-Fighter Kabuto, initiating the transformation with the insertion of a special input card into the hand-held Command Voicer. Kengo Tachibana (Naoto Adachi), a Cosmo Academia student of environmental research, accepts the transformation to B-Fighter Kuwagar. Ran Ayukawa (Yukina Kurisu), the young Cosmo Academia electric engineering expert working in the area of electronic computer brain development and research, takes on the identity of B-Fighter Tentō.

As the war with Melzard escalates, the younger heroes receive a helping hand from their elder predecessors, Blue Beet, G-Stag, and Reddle, although the B-Fighter genus doesn't end there. A lethal group of armored villains known as the B-Crushers arise to specifically eliminate the B-Fighter team. The B-Crusher enemies, Deathcorpion, Killmantis, Mukadelinger and Oeezack are matched by the new forces of yet more B-Fighter warriors, BF Genji, BF Yanma, BF Min, and BF Ageha, who are more than ready to face the challenge of the B-Crushers. And if that doesn't spell out a growing Super Sentai influence to everyone, then check this out: the introduction of gigantic beetle robots, Kabuterios, the great armored god of the astral saber, and Kuwaga Titan, the great armored god of injustice. For those of you who have yet to catch up on your Ultraman or Masked Rider lineage's, beware: the B-Fighters are multiplying fast! It seems as though the Saban-Toei relationship has come full circle, as the youthful BF heroes of BF Kabuto appear to display a particular touch of influence from the American teenage Power Rangers or VR Troopers. I'm also reminded of several U.S. criticisms of the Saban versions in which they were compared to Sid and Marty Krofft shows; the seashell chamberlain, Dord, in particular, looks like something that washed ashore from the set of Sigmund and the Sea Monsters.

Having hit the high-ratings bulls-eye with young American viewers through the Mighty Morphin Power Rangers, V.R. Troopers, and Masked Rider, it was inevitable that Haim Saban and Shuki Levy would soon extend their grasp to the B-Fighter universe. Their method of buying up Toei's live-action television hero properties and creating altered versions that have extracted the original Japanese casts and replaced them with young American actors who mainstream American audiences can better relate to has become the trademark of Saban Entertainment. Although greeted with contemptuous disdain by most American fans of Toei's traditional Japanese tokusatsu television heroes (some even consider the replacement of Japanese actors to be racist), a new generation of western youth became infatuated with these programs since the premiere of Mighty Morphin Power Rangers. And even as the once untouchable ratings of that benchmark series began to subside, enough dedicated fans remained to keep the format alive and kicking on American television. Or alive with "less" kicking, anyway, as the most vocal opponents to Saban's shows have been U.S. parental media watchdog groups and some educational children's television advocates who repeatedly insist that these programs encourage violence among young viewers in a society that they depict as a wasteland of juvenile delinquency. Using Saban as a convenient scapegoat for infinitely more complex social problems and has created a backlash against these programs and has directed a flood of pressure against Saban to tone down the action.

This influence has steered the course of Saban productions from the likes of V.R. Troopers, perhaps the closest effort Saban has ever offered in approaching any semblance of the original Toei-styled action hero dramas with respect for the martial arts, to an overly comedic and simplistic version of Toei's intricate Kamen

Rider series. From here, we enter the current climate in the U.S. where we find ratings codes preceding the programming in question, and the Saban shows in particular, with the issue of television fantasy violence having taken some precedence in debate even on Capital Hill over such subjects as poverty or education. For B-Fighter, it could not have been a more unfortunate time in which to enter the landscape of American television. Over time, Saban has utilized less and less of the original Toei action footage in their U.S. productions to a point in which the final versions of the latest Power Ranger adventures or Saban's Masked Rider have seen a continued decreasing resemblance to their Original Japanese counterparts. When B-Fighter was converted into Big Bad Beetleborgs for U.S. television, the Japanese version was scarcely recognizable at all. Outside of the costumes and vehicles, which happen to be the major marketing elements for Bandai's toy line, nothing survived, conceptually or in spirit.

The B-Fighters

Takuya Kai/Blue Beet: A 23-year old insect researcher at the Earth Academia, he is the team leader. As Blue Beet, his armor was modeled after a rhinoceros beetle. His blood was used in the creation of his "evil twin" Shadow. At the second half of the series, Blue Beet gained the ability to evolve into Super Blue Beet.

Daisaku Katagiri/G-Stag (Green Stag): At age 23, he is an impetuous but nature-loving man. A tree doctor, Daisaku claims to be able to hear trees and plants when they are dying. He was also aquaphobic until he overcame his fear to save his father Daitesu Katagiri, a fisherman, from a trap laid by the Ebikaania. As the most physically powerful of the B-Fighters, G-Stag's armor is modeled after a Stag beetle. G-Stag is strong enough to lift the Jamar soldiers and toss them around like rag dolls.

Rei Hayama/Reddle I (Episodes 1-22): A 22-year old animal instructor at Earth Academia's Aquarium. Being the only female B-Fighter, her armor was modeled after a female rhinoceros beetle. Reddle is the fastest and most nimble of the B-Fighters. She eventually left for the South American branch of Earth Academia to do research and help with protecting the wildlife there.

Mai Takatori/Reddle II (Episodes 22-53): Rei's successor, a young and cheerful nineteen-year old girl who was "chosen" by the Pulsabers as the next Reddle.

Allies

Professor Kenzou Mukai: An old man dedicated to the pursuit of justice. He fell in love with Sayuri, a plant researcher, many years ago, but left her.

Insect Elder Guru: The elder of the insect tribe, and looks like a big brown rhinobee. He carries a staff with a curled top and was the one who gave the B-Fighters their powers. Guru possesses great mystical power of his own.

Kabuto: Guru's son who left his father a hundred years ago and has been traveling across the dimensions as a supplier of weapons and equipment. He returns to Earth to visit his mother's grave, bringing the Beet Ingram with him.

Tokusou Robo Janperson and Gungibson: robotic detective heroes of the 1993 Metal Heroes series Tokusou Robo Janperson, they assisted the B-Fighter in a battle against Jagul at the end of the series.

Show, Shougi and Sarah: Trio of special, heavily armed alien-destroying heroes. The three main heroes of the 1994 Metal Heroes series Blue SWAT, Sarah was kidnapped by Jagul, and Show and Shougi helped the B-Fighters, Janperson and Gungibson to rescue her.

Others

Saint Papilia: A legendary 'butterfly of life' who can grant immortality. She appears when the life on a world has been destroyed. She then revives the world by giving it new life. Saint Papilia already appeared once on Earth, after the Ice Age, and revived the Earth so the life of today could be born. Both Gohm and Black Beet sought Saint Papilia in the hopes of obtaining the gift of eternal life. After he defeated Shadow, Takuya was severely wounded and died. Saint Papilia appeared above him and resurrected him, saying that Earth still needed him.

Arsenal

Stinger Weapons

Stinger Blade: a triangular swordlike weapon used by Blue Beet. When the turbine inside the Stinger Blade spins, the blade revolves and gains extra power, allowing him to perform the deadly Beetle Break, a diagonal slash trailing blue energy behind it.

Stinger Drill: An augmented Stinger Drill used by Blue Beet. A large drill that attaches to his wrist. The front and back halves of the drill rotate in opposite directions, and his attack with it is the Strike Blast, a charging stab that bores a hole through his enemies.

Stinger Claw: A large yellow pincer-like claw used by G-Stag that he can use to crush enemies or grab them and throw them aside. When the turbine inside it spins, the entire claw spins to give it added crushing power. G-Stag also can lift enemies captured in the claw above his head and when the turbine activates, they spin around in his grip and he throws them to the ground. His deadly attack with the claw is the Raging Slash, a horizontal slice trailing green energy behind it. The claw can also detach and be thrown like a projectile, the Stinger Boomerang.

Stinger Plasmar: An array of four red beam emitters that fire powerful beams of red ion energy, used by Reddle. She can use this energy to capture her enemies in energy ropes and drag them across the ground or throw them through the air. If the internal turbine is activated the array spins at high speed and Reddle can utilize the Tornado Spark, firing her beams in a wide circular pattern.

Beet Ingram: A red and white semi-automatic-like double-barreled gun. The Beet Ingram is a legendary gun that is said can only be used by a great hero. The top of the Beet Ingram can fold forward and over the barrels so that they are covered by a single barrel with two pincerlike armatures protruding from it. The Beet Ingram in this mode can be combined with Blue Beet's Pulsaber by attaching the Pulsaber to the top, to create the Beet Ingram Final Mode, whose power reached it full potential when wielded by Super Blue Beet for Super Final Blow attack.

Beetluder: Blue Beet's Beet Machine.

Stagger Tank: G. Stag's Beet Machine.

Jamahl

Beings from another dimension, the Jamahl's base of operation was a claw-like dreadnaught. It had an opening where the palm would be, where the Jamahl fighter jets emerged from and where Jamahl's new super-weapons were located.

Gaohm (1-50): The mysterious leader of the Jamahl, who first appeared as a tall figure with a white and purple robe and chitinous face. Gaohm possessed the power to teleport people to the "Gaohm Zone". He was supposedly killed by the B-Fighters, only to reappears as Final Gaohm, a gigantic torso floating in space, with an exposed purple heart, only one arm (the right one) and wires running on his body. However, both forms were dummies used by the real Gaogh, a small embryonic entity in a tank of liquid. Gaohm revealed that he was born from a space warp and wandered through space until he gained enough power to assemble the Jamahl for his life-long goal of capturing Saint Papilia so he can obtain immortality. To that end, he plans to destroy all life on earth with the Jamahl Hole sucking world's atmosphere so everyoner would die and Saint Papilia will come to revive Earth, only to be captured and be forced to give Gaohm immortality. He was killed when his fortress crashed on earth.

Gigaro (1-47): A creature composed of various animal parts, Gigaro commanded the Synthoid-Beast Army. Gigaro was originally a skeletal creature on a desert planet in the Garo dimension, hunted for unknown reasons by humanoids. Exhausted and near death, Gaohm gave him a new powerful body and recruited him into Jamahl. Gigaro used a white bonelike sword and his whale-flatop could open to reveal a gun. Gigaro imbued himself with life energy meant for the Jamahl to power-up into Final Gigaro, a red and white version of himself with more power. He was ultimately killed by his master Gaohm so that his life energy to hasten completion of the Jamahl Hole.

Jera (1-50): A female warrior who wore a red robe and had a white mannequinlike facemask and a red beret. She used a whip that she could charge with energy as a weapon. Jera commanded the Mercenary Army. In battle, Jera discarded her robe to reveal a leotardlike red and pink costume. She turned against Gaohm upon learning of Gigaro's death by his hand, allying herself with Shadow. She was eventually killed when she saw Gaohm as he really was. Upon her death, her mask was removed to reveal that she was a blonde, European woman.

Schwartz (1-48): The leader of the Combat-mecha army, he was actually a computer virus given a mechincal body. When Jera left Jamahl and Gigaro died, Schwartz took on the B-Fighters on its own. His body was destroyed though his head survived. However, the damage left Schwartz critically insane as he took control of various things before his "immortal head" was blasted into outer space.

Shadow/Black Beet (19-51): An evil clone of Takuya/Blue Beet made by the nefarious Jagul, Shadow is highly powerful, and was quite a formidable opponent to the other B-Fighters as Black Beet, whose armor was modeled after a Longhorn beetle. Because he was a clone, Shadow could not survive on his own and sought Saint Papilia's power to obtain a life of his own. He died at Super Blue Beet's hands, reduced to a pile of black ash.

Insect Sorceress Jagul (19, 52-53): A mysterious woman Gaohm commissioned to create an evil B-Fighter. Jagul sent a long-horned beetle to bite Takuya and take a DNA sample from him. From the beetle and Takuya's cells, Jagul created Shadow. She resurfaced long after Jahaml was destroyed and began kidnapping young women and resurrected several defeated monsters to battle the heroes. Jagul soon underwent a transformation into a chimeric entity with the faces of the various resurrected creatures on her. She trapped the B-Fighters, Janperson, Gungibson, and the Blue S.W.A.T. team in a pocket dimension but Blue Beet managed to escape and kill Jagul.

Jamar: Faceless soldiers that served Gaohm and were employed in menial tasks. Gaohm has his own elite Jamar, who are more powerful than the normal versions.

Mercenary Army

Composed of mercenary warriors from various dimensions who joined Jamahl for various reasons. Led by Jera.

Saberiza (1): A swordsman who carried a large sword that he used as a weapon, and was the first of Jamahl's monsters that the B-Fighters battled against.

Zaiking (6): Sent to burn down the forests.

Bardas (8): An otherdimensional warrior who got his power from a jewel called the Pholon Jewel, which fits inside his head. With his jewel he could fire energy blasts and was nearly unstoppable, but the B-Fighters destroyed it and killed him.

Baala (10): A comrade of Jera's who wore an armored chestplate made from the Black Dragon, a monster that Jera and Baala defeated. Eventually, however, the revenge-filled spirit within the armor turned on Baala and possessed her so it could get revenge on Jera. Baala finally broke free of its control and stabbed it and herself with a dagger. Near death but free of the Dragon and still a warrior, Baala challenged Blue Beet to a duel and died a warrior's death.

Iluba (16): Iluba was sent to kill Mina, the last survivor of the Botania Dimension that Jamahl had destroyed. Her father sent her to our dimension with the seeds of the Botania tribe, and erased her memory. The source of his power was his sword, which the B-Fighters destroyed to finish the weakened Iluba off.

Gorgodal (23): Gorgodal was one of Jera's mercenaries who fought the B-Fighter for the money. When Mai gave him a scolding for following Jera just for the money, Gorgodal decided to quit and tried to return the money he had been paid. But Gaohm didn't accept this and brainwashed Gorgodal so that he would be nothing but a raging monster. Mai tried to talk to him again, but he could barely remember her name. Gorgodal eventually had to be destroyed, but was given a burial and his grave was marked with his shuriken.

Deathgodian (28): A Grim Reaper-like being with the power to summon the spirits of the dead and control them, unless they had things they wanted to accomplish on Earth, which made them able to resist his control. One of the ghosts raised, a young girl named Kaori wanted to fall in love before she died and thus resisted. She fell in love with Takuya and helped him fight Deathgodian by helping the other ghosts realize they were just being used. Once Deathgodian was dead, the ghosts were free to return to the afterlife.

Sinbad (30): He was a part of the Combat melee that Jamahl had kidnapped the B-Fighters into another dimension and forced them to participate in. But G-Stag soon learned that Sinbad is infiltrating Jamahl in an attempt to assassinate Gaohm for destroying his homeworld. Gaohm learned of this, however, and sent a resurrected Death Mult to kill Sinbad and the B-Fighters. Realizing that the only way for the B-Fighter to return home was by the explosion caused by Death Mult's demise, Sinbad kamikazed Death Mult.

Night Biker (33): Originally Kazuma Iwata, he was brainwashed and changed into an evil warrior by a machine used by Jera. The control device was in the bike's fairing, and when that was destroyed, Night Biker changed back into Kazuma safe and back to normal.

Hidra (49): Nicknamed Spider of Flame, she was assigned the job of capturing Guru so Gaohm could use him to gather the energy of the insects on the planet to complete the Jamahl Hole. Gaohm promised Hidra that she would take Jera's place, with an armband as proof. However, the armband was actually a bomb. Despite Jera's warning, Hidra died but not before telling the B-Fighter to kill Gaohm for her.

Drago (Movie): Another insect warrior, Drago lost any memory of his past until his fight with Blue Beet restored it. His powers are dragonfly based.

Synthoid-Beast Army

Composed of humanoid chimeras and other animal-based creatures. Led by Gigaro.

Snakeznake (2): Sent to gather up some humans for Jamahl, it was a humanoid body with a long snake draped over the head area that serves as its arms. In battle with the B-Fighters, the snake was destroyed to reveal a second head and pair of arms underneath.

Bagma Virus (5): Can shrink to microscopic size and infiltrate the B-Fighters' Insect Armor and control them to move as he wished, and could reproduce asexually to control more than one B-Fighter at once.

Gari-Rat (9): A hunchbacked gray-furred rat monster with sharp gnawing teeth. His mission was to gnaw through underground power cables to create a mass panic. However, he had a phobia of cats, so severe that he ran out of the battle at the sight of one. To cure this, Gigaro forced Gari-Rat to run through a maze with Jamar soldiers holding cats behind every corner 100 times. After the 100th time, his fear was gone, though he was still killed by Blue Beet.

Sloth-eruge (11): Using his long tongue, with a sucker on the end, he could use to steal motivation from people, making them lazy and inactive. The stolen motivation was collected in the pouch on his back. He was able to steal the motivation of both Takuya and Daisaku, but the insect power of their B-Commanders brought them back to their senses. He was killed when G-Stag sliced the pouch open to restore everyone's motivation, leaving them free to finish him off.

Bububu (15): A pig monster who could breathe a white gas that stole human voices, rendering people unable to make any noises other than pig grunting and squealing.

Kamazakiller (21): A praying mantis monster whose mission was to spread its eggs throughout the city, injecting them into people using his long, spiked tongue. The eggs would then grow and hatch his offspring inside their hosts. Kamazakiller was killed by Blue Beet's new weapon, the Stinger Drill, using the Strike Blast.

Shrimperabya (26): A red-shelled combination crab and shrimp monster who could emit a liquid that turned ordinary water into poison. After Daisaku's father tried to stop him from polluting the water, Ebigaanya set him adrift with a bomb in his boat. Daisaku overcame his fear of the water and saved his father, and returned to battle Shrimperabya. He was killed by a hot water blast from the Input Magnums, which cooked him and rendered him incapacitated for G-Stag to finish him off with the Raging Slash.

Maskuder (31): Supposedly based on an amoeba, he wears a gold mask with rows of faces surround it while nested on each other, extending in a starlike pattern. Maskuder disguised himself as a plastic surgeon able to make anyone beautiful if they used his special masks. The masks gave his customers the face of the famous model Mizuzu Shiratori, who happened to be a childhood friend of Mai's. But the masks actually were explosive control devices that let Maskuder control the wearers and detonate them when he broke the mask he wore, which was his central gold face. Under the gold mask he wore was a single eye. Maskuder could also cause explosions on command.

The Moja: A species of other dimensional creatures that Gigaro gave to several children in the guise of a salesman, with the instructions that if they started to act up, to hit them with a special stick he gave them. But the stick causes the Moja to become fire creatures that absorbed the consciousness of the one who hits them. The creatures then eventually gathered together into Mojanga. The children's consciousness was trapped inside Mojanga, seeing the outside world. Though the children tried to urge the B-Fighters to fight, Mojanga could bring about exactly the reverse of what the consciousnesses trapped inside him said. Eventually Daisaku managed to get inside Mojanga's body and freed the children.

Gagamoth (36): At first an energy-sucking caterpillar monster, it metamorphosed into a moth when it absorbed the Beet Ingram's power. In this form, its right and left arms end with a Input Magnum and Stinger Blade respectively. It was soon destroyed by the newly born Super Beet.

Rasbelga (28): A monster created from the fictional Rasbel flower, a carnivorous plant that could move on its own and feed on small animals. Although almost invincible, Rasbelga's only weakness was the fruit of a tree discovered by an old girlfriend of Mukai's, which made him spit out the people he swallowed & robbed him of his pollen spray so he could be defeated.

Hell Sugyra (Movie): A monster whose body was covered in bony plates. He could also control the bones that lay strewn around his island, extending them and using them to capture the B-Fighters. Hellsugyra was beaten by Drago and Blue Beet.

Combat-Mecha Army

Led by Schwartz.

Hammer Kong (3): A silver and gold robot with giant hammers on his hands and a head in the shape of a hammer head with the striking surface being his face. He could pound his hammer hands on the ground to create explosive shockwaves (Hammer Crush), or toss them like giant boomerangs. He could also fire an energy beam from his one eye & spit giant nails to pin his enemies to the wall. He was killed by Reddle's Tornado Spark.

Death Launcher (4): A green robot with missile launchers on his shoulders and gun batteries on his wrists, which were his major weapons. He was killed by the Beetle Break.

Camerio (7): A black camera-based robot with a lens on his chest and eyes that looked like flashbulbs.

Camerio disguised himself as a photographer, and when he took pictures of people they were transported to a Jamahl slave quarry to work for Jamahl. His transport could be interfered with by high-frequency soundwaves, such as those emitted by a dog whistle.

Rage-Bomber (11, 27): A walking purple hand grenade with arms and legs and blue and green camouflage markings. When he got mad, his arms and legs folded in so that he looked like a giant grenade, the meter on the left side of his head went into the red zone, the pin on his head flew off and he exploded with tremendous power. He was destroyed when Reddle used the Wire Hand with the Magne Attachment to pick up Rage-Bomber off the ground, and blown up by the Beetluder and Stagger Tank's guns. He was eventually rebuilt as Rage-Bomber 2, now able to self-explode and self-repair. However, during a battle at a junkyard, he accidentally incorporated a hair clipper into his body, which grafted itself onto his left hand. Overcome by the hair clipper's desire to cut hair and to get back at those who had discarded it when it was still usable, Rage-Bomber went on a rampage, shaving people's heads. He kept being blown up and coming back together until finally the B-Fighters destroyed his remains one by one to hinder his self-repair ability.

Kagamirror (13): A white robot with a dome-like head and a rounded chest that could open up into a large mirror, and anyone whose reflection he captured in the mirror could be trapped inside, and Kagamirror could assume their shape. He sucked Takuya into his mirror and disguised himself as Takuya to infiltrate the Heavysell Base, but was eventually discovered and killed by the Beetle Break.

Dangar (25): A blue robot with red circles on his chest, elbows, and shoulders, and black spikes on his arms, legs, and head. Dangar's mission was to kill the escapee Lala, who had been forced to help build the Death Gaohm, a super-cannon that could destroy an entire country in one blast, but had run away. Lala was actually a scientist from the Aroa dimension and although she fell in love with Takuya, she returned home after Dangar and the Death Gohm were destroyed.

Others

Death Mult (17, 31): Originally one of Jera's soldiers, he was killed by the B-Fighters easily. After this, Jera retrieved his body and decided to make him a combination of all three monster army types. Though he still resembled himself, his armor was now red. Gigaro provided a scorpion's tail and wings while Schwartz added built-in shoulder cannons. Death Mult proved able to defeat the B-Fighter until the three generals started arguing about the attack he should use to kill them. Death Mult was stalled by the conflicting orders, enough time for the B-Fighters to defeat him. He was later resurrected by Gaohm to kill the B-Fighters and Sinbad.

Babanba (32): At first, an old woman in a brown kimono with a brown cloth over her head and a wooden cask on her back. She could suck people inside the cask, which she used to turn them into pickles which she sold to creatures in other dimensions. She later revealed her true form, a demonic creature. Babamba was not truly evil, however, and although Jera tried to trick her into fighting the Beetle Fighters, an old man who had befriended her convinced her that she didn't need to fight anymore. She decided to stay in this dimension with him, and shattered her cask, freeing the people inside.

Nero (37): A so-called bodyguard from another dimension who wore cowboyish attire. He appeared during a fight and offered Jera his services, but in the fight he missed the B-Fighters and escaped back to Jamahl for his pay. Later, he approached the B-Fighters and claimed that he was just trying to infiltrate Jamahl so he could kill Gaohm, and if they paid him he would do just that. Mai believed him and scrounged up enough to pay him. Nero was planning to take the money from both sides and leave this dimension, when Mai found out that he had Jamahl money. Jera also appeared, having discovered his secret, and Jera impaled Nero. Meanwhile, Mai had scanned Nero's gun and found out that it was designed to miss. Nero hated war, and never meant to kill anyone. He died after telling Mai to end the fight quickly, because war is a terrible thing.

Faigar (39): A legendary fire-breathing monster that was fossilized and unable to move. Gigaro had Schwartz use a youth-restoring machine to bring back Faigar, but Schwartz set it too high and the Faigar that came out was a child who breathed fire at anyone around him, including Gigaro. While trying to stop it, Blue Beet tackled Faigar and was hit by residual youth energy that was in it and turned into a child himself. Gigaro and Schwartz eventually recaptured Faigar with candy & tried to age it to a more dangerous age, but overdid it and the Faigar that came out this time was blackened and burnt. Blue Beet also used this chance to restore his own age, then killed Faigar with the Super Final Blow.

Macho Number-5 (41): Schwartz's older brother, though Schwartz actually built it himself. He was a muscular robot with blue and white armor plating and a face like Schwartz's. He was injured in a battle with the B-Fighter, however, and to save him, Schwartz entered Macho's head to pilot him personally. The two together were a formidable enemy, and Macho's final plan to get rid of the B-Fighter was a self-destruct switch he had installed in himself. He activated it and planned to take the B-Fighter with him when he exploded, and so he told Schwartz to get out of his body. Schwartz refused, since they were brothers. But seconds before his death, Macho ejected Schwartz for his safety. The only bit of remains Schwartz found was Macho's eyepiece which he took as a memento of his brother.

Giga-Moonhalo (42): The spirit of a bear who was hunted and killed in the mountains. Gigaro, who felt a common bond, rekindled Giga-Moonhalo's hatred of man and made him a blood-thirsty monster whom Gigaro used for his "B-Fighter Hunt".

B-FIGHTER KABUTO

AKA: BETTLE FIGHTER KABUTO

AKA: BII FAITAA KABUTO

Several years after the destruction of Jamahl, Earth has returned to peace again. The Earth Academia has become the Cosmo Academia, a scientific research organisation, where Kai Takuya, the original Blue Beet, works with the insect elder Guru on a new generation of Insect Armor in the event of another threat to the Earth. A Cosmo Academia exploration submarine comes across a fissure in the ocean floor, out of which rises a huge flying fortress. The ancient tribe Melzard has awakened from its millions of years of sleep, and seeks to destroy mankind.

The giant Mother Melzard, ruler of the Melzard Tribe, speaks to her sons, the Dinosaur Warrior Raija and the Deep-Sea Fish Man Dezzle, telling them that Melzard will triumph. Mother gives birth to the mammoth beast Elebammoth, and commands him to freeze the Earth and kill all of humankind. Elebammoth begins freezing everything in his path. At the Cosmo Academia homebase, Guru infuses the new Insect Armor with Insect Power, creating the three Command Voicers to link three humans with the armor.

Tachibana Kengo and Ayukawa Ran, who have been selected to wear the new armor, ready themselves and become B-Fighter Kuwagaa and B-Fighter Tentou. But the person to become B-Fighter Kabuto has not been chosen yet. The remaining Command Voicer flies out the window, with Ran and Kengo following it. Meanwhile, Toba Kouhei is at school. He is a str athlete and is looked up to by many of his classmates. He and his younger sister Yui walk together when they are attacked by Elebammoth. Yui is frozen solid and Kouhei attacks Elebammoth. He is losing badly when the last Command Voicer flies into his hand.

Kengo and Ran are shocked that this highschool student is to be B-Fighter Kabuto, but they go to him and tell him how to transform. He changes into Kabuto and the three of them attack Elebammoth and several henchmen. Using their Input Cardguns and Finish Weapons, the three beat all but Elebammoth. Kabuto uses the Cavalier Lancer attack, riding his Road Kabuto and spearing Elebammoth with his Kabuto Lancer like a jousting knight, slamming him into a wall and then tossing him aside. Elebammoth is killed, but Mother Melzard vows to be victorious.

Mother Melzard continues her attacks, sending forth either Raija or Dezzle (who are always quarrelling with each other). Raija and his comrade Miorla command land-dwelling animal monsters while Dezzle and his companion Dord command sea-dwelling animal monsters. The B-Fighters are based at the Cosmo Academia homebase, under the guidance of Professor Osanai. They also have a valuable ally in the intelligent computer Bitto, and gain powerful vehicles, the Neo Beet Machines, to fight against Melzard's hordes of caterpillar-like Gidorba and aerial Fly Gidorba fighters.

When Mother Melzard's most powerful child Hebyuuzza proves to be too much for the B-Fighters, the first generation B-Fighters return to help them. But Hebyuuzza infects all six of them with her special cells before she is destroyed, and as the cells invade their Insect Armor the B-Fighters are controlled into battling one another. Taking advantage of this, Raija sends a monster created from a piece of himself, Driceraija, to attack the helpless B-Fighters. To prevent them from killing themselves, the B-Fighters un-transform and Osanai and Bitto work on finding a way to kill the cells, which are active in the Command Voicers, as the B-Fighters try to stay alive. They finally discover that cold will drive the cells out of the armor, and once they are driven out and contained, the B-Fighters transform again and kill Driceraija. Raija, enraged at this defeat, challenges Kabuto to a duel and is beaten by Kabuto's Liner Blast. His body turns to stone and Miorla takes it back to the Melzard fortress.

With that done, Takuya reveals his true reason for returning. Eight golden medals have fallen to different areas of the Earth, and are brimming with power. (More to come)

The direct sequel of "B-Fighter"; including the former B-Fighters and numbers of new B-Fighters with various insect-motifs are introduced in "B-Fighter Kabuto", (so are Melzard's B-Crushers). The show has started to relate to the past (and probably future) series, aiming to establish the grand stage of B-Fighters and their battle.

Major Characters:

B-Fighters and friends:

B-Fighter Kabuto aka Toba Kouhei

Toba Kouhei is a highschool student who is a star athlete and is chosen by the Command Voicers to be B-Fighter Kabuto. He is a very courageous fighter, although he sometimes leaps into a fight without thinking. His parents are away, so he and his younger sister Yui live alone. Kouhei cares for Yui very well

B-Fighter Kabuto has gold armor and a single horn on his helmet, modelled after a kabutomushi beetle. His Finish Weapon is a long with a triangular point at both ends, the Kabuto Lancer. With the Kabuto Lancer, he can perform the deadly Liner Blast, a horizontal slash trailing gold energy behind it. His Road Beetle motorcycle is the Road Kabuto, and while riding it he can use his Kabuto Lancer to perform the Cavalier Lancer attack, spearing his enemy through the chest and ramming him into a wall, then tossing him to the ground. B-Fighter Kabuto is the only one who can use the Astral Saber to become one with and control the Great God Kabuterios, a giant gold and black robot.

B-Fighter Kuwagaa aka Tachibana Kengo

Tachibana Kengo originally disliked Kouhei because he had wanted to be B-Fighter Kabuto, and couldn't believe that a highschool student was chosen. But they soon came to be friends, although Kengo is a much more serious person than Kouhei is. He is very conscious of the B-Fighters' duty and even when on vacation, thought only about getting back to work.

B-Fighter Kuwager wears black and silver armor with two horns on his helmet, modeled after a stag beetle ("kuwagata-mushi"). His Finish Weapon is a long rod with a pincerlike claw on the end, the Kuwager Chopper, that he can use to grab his enemy and toss him around. His deadly attack is the Gravity Crush, a downward blow with the Kuwager Chopper. Kuwager's Road Beetle is the Road Kuwaga. At the end of the series, Kuwager is able to use the Geist Axe to take control of the giant green robot Kuwaga Titan, which was formerly being used by Melzard but was not actually evil.

B-Fighter Tentou aka Ayukawa Ran

Ayukawa Ran is a computer expert, who sometimes thinks too much about the mechanical side of things and ignores the natural side. She learned this when she met Julio Rivera aka B-Fighter Genji, who taught her to appreciate nature. Ran fell in love with Julio but has yet to confess her feelings to him. Ran loves to eat and is skilled at playing the shamisen, a stringed Japanese instrument.

B-Fighter Tentou has purple and silver armor with four small horns on her helmet, modeled after a ladybug ("tentou-mushi"). Her speciality is using the Beet Scan scanning capacity in her armor to determine her enemies' weak points. Her Finish Weapon is the Tentou Spear, a spear with two four-pointed tips at each end. With this she can perform the Crossway Slicer, an X-shaped double diagonal slash. She rides the Road Tentou.

B-Fighter Yanma aka Mac Windy

Mac Windy is from the New York branch of the Cosmo Academia, and often speaks in broken English phrases. He is a very outgoing man, flirting with Japanese girls at every chance and pigging out on sushi. He is the owner of the dragonfly medal.

B-Fighter Yanma, the "Warrior of the Wind", has blue and green armor, modeled after a dragonfly. His attacks include the Spinning Bomber, a jumping spinning punch; and the Dragon Flying, in which he spins at high speeds like a tornado and zips past his enemies attacking as he flies by. His weapon is the Tonbou Gun ("tonbou" means "dragonfly"), a gun that fires powerful energy blasts. The Tonbou Gun becomes part of the powerful Input Rifle.

B-Fighter Genji aka Julio Rivera

Julio Rivera is from the South American Cosmo Academia branch, and is a nature-loving man who taught Ran the beauty of the natural world. He played a reed flute which he gave to Ran to remember him by. He has the firefly medal.

B-Fighter Genji, the "Warrior of Light", has red and silver armor and is modeled after a firefly. He can create blinding flashes of light, the Max Flasher, and uses a large cannon that fits over his forearm, the Lightning Cannon. He can place one of several types of capsules in the Lightning Cannon to vary its power. Genji also created the Bright Pointer, a small handheld device that can fire the Impact Flash, a flash of light that can stun enemies. The Bright Pointer is part of the Input Rifle.

B-Fighter Min aka Li Wen

Li Wen is a Chinese man from the Peking branch of Cosmo Academia. He loves children and often puts on magic shows in parks for children to see, and is also a very good cook. He is a very peaceful man who hates the fight between the B-Fighters and Melzard, and at first refused to cooperate with the B-Fighters. However, Kengo made him realise that the B-Fighters fight in order to stop the fighting, and so he agreed to help. He owns the cicada medal.

B-Fighter Min, the "Warrior of Sound", has orange and silver armor and is modeled after a cicada. His chest plates can open to reveal miniature speakers that fire powerful sound waves, called the Sonic Pressure. He uses two swords called the Ringer Swords, that vibrate at high speeds to cut through objects. Min brought with him the Smission Magazine ("semi" means "cicada"), a device that can attach to the back of the Input Cardguns and give them elemental powers including flame and lightning. The Smission Magazine is a part of the Input Rifle.

B-Fighter Ageha aka Sophie Villeneuve

Sophie Villeneuve is a genius violinist from the Paris, France branch of Cosmo Academia, who at first did not know what the Command Voicer she had was for. She is in love with Kouhei, and her song is what was able to awaken the Astral Saber from its sleep. She owns the butterfly medal.

B-Fighter Ageha, the "Warrior of Flowers", has white and black armor modeled after a butterfly. The Butterfly Fins on her helmet are actually radar devices that can track enemies. She uses a large gun, the Bloom Cannon, which opens like a blooming flower to fire the Maxim Beam.

Toba Yui

Yui is Kouhei's younger sister who goes to the same highschool. She is his self-proclaimed manager, covering for him when he has to leave school to fight off Melzard and helping out at the Cosmo Academia. She is in love with Kengo, and it seems that he feels the same way for her.

Professor Osanai

Insect Elder Guru

The Insect Elder Guru is the one who first gave the original B-Fighters their powers. He is older now, with a whitened beard and mustache, but he is still able to help the B-Fighters in their times of need. He knows more about the enemies they face than any of them, and can often help them in figuring out what Melzard is planning. Guru died at the end of the series trying to protect the insects of the world from the "Dark Wave Motion" power of Dargriffon. He was buried in the cave where Takuya first found him. Guru has a son named Kabuto who came to visit his grave.

Melzard:

Mother Melzard

Dinosaur Warrior Raija

Raija is a powerful warrior with red dinosaur-like armor. He commands the Melzard monsters based on creatures that live on land. Raija constantly fights with his younger brother Dezzle, each trying to outdo the other. He was seemingly killed by Kabuto's Liner Blast but his body turned to stone and later he returned, revived by the power of the magma deep within the earth, in a new, more powerful form, with reddish-brown armor.

Insect Swordsman Miorla

Miorla is never far from Raija's side, and addresses him as "Raija-sama". She is a female warrior with light green insectoid armor and two red swords. When Raija was seemingly killed, she stayed by his petrified body until he awakened.

Deep-Sea Fish Man Dezzle

Dezzle is Raija's younger brother and wears an elaborate blue costume with fins and a fishlike helmet. He commands the monsters based on water-dwelling creatures and he is the one to often actively sabotage Raija's plans. After his brother is killed, Dezzle gains power from Mother Melzard and becomes Dezzle the Great, but is defeated by the Input Rifle, with only his head remaining. Dord placed Dezzle's head in a tank and Dezzle later returned along with his brother in a new, mysterious form. His new form, given power by the darkness of the deep sea, is almost nonhuman, with no discernible torso and a white mask.

Rock Chamberlain Dord

Dord is a squat creature whose head resembles an ammonite fossil. He is always near Dezzle and helps to carry out his plans, though he has very little fighting power. Dord looked after Dezzle's head after he was blown to pieces, and remained loyal until Dezzle returned in his new form.

B-Crushers:

Deathcorpion

Deathcorpion, the "Deadly Poison Armoured General" ("Moudoku Gaishou") is the leader of the B-Crushers. He has red armor modeled after a scorpion, and is an honourable warrior by nature. Unlike his fellow B-Crushers, he prefers to fight fair and has a true warrior's spirit. From his right wrist he can fire the Poison Anchor, a hook on a thick cable that he can use to grab and strangle enemies. He can also outfit his left hand with the Slaughter Scissors, a large red claw he uses for slashing attacks.

Mukadelinger

Mukadelinger, the "cold-blooded Armoured General" ("Reiketsu Gaishou") wears dark blue and gold armor modeled after a centipede ("mukade" means "centipede"). He is a very dishonourable attacker, using innocents as bait and fighting unfairly whenever he can. He uses a double-sided trident, the Hundred Feeler, as his primary weapon, but also has an electric gun hidden in his chest, the Mukadenic Bomb. He also can control ordinary humans by placing the centipede legs from his armor on their necks and mentally transmitting commands to them.

Killmantis

Killmantis, the "Evil Sword Armored General" ("Maken Gaishou") has green armor modeled after a praying mantis. He is an expert at using bladed weapons, especially his two sickles, the Felinger Snipes (?), which he can use to cut through anything. He attacks with blinding speed.

Beezac

Beezac, the "Changing Illusion Armored General" ("Hengen Gaishou") has yellow and black armor modeled after a bee. He can disguise himself as ordinary humans to lure his enemies in for the kill, and like a ninja, is an expert at hiding himself and attacking from hiding. When he attacks in the open, he uses a large stinger-like weapon, the Hardoc (?) Shocker.

B-Fighter Equipment:

Command Voicer

The Command Voicers are the items used to change into the B-Fighters. They are activated by inserting a card into a slot on the bottom of the device and saying "Chou Juukou!" ("Super Heavy Shell!"). The Insect Armor emerges from the device and forms itself around the human, changing him or her into a B-Fighter. The Command Voicers can also be used to communicate with each other like miniature radios. However, they are entirely dependent on the Insect Power within them and should the Insect Power fail, they cannot operate.

Input Cardgun

The Input Cardguns are black and silver pistols that can fire a variety of things depending on which card is inserted into their handles. Each card has a different number and function, as follows:

001: Attack Beam - a standard energy blast

002: Fire Beam - a blast of fire

003: Jamming Beam - a blast of disrupting soundwaves that stun enemies

004: Needle Laser - a blast of small needle-like darts

005: Cement Beam - a blast of cement that hardens when it hits its target

006: Cold Laser - a freezing blast of cold

007: Tornado Shower - a blast of powerful air at high speeds

Input Rifle

The Input Rifle is created when an Input Cardgun is combined with Yanma's Tonbou Gun, Genji's Bright Pointer, and Min's Semission Magazine. This weapon is much more powerful than any other in the B-Fighters' arsenal and is usually wielded by Kabuto, who fires the Kabutonic Buster, a ball of destructive energy. Once, however, Kuwager used the Input Rifle and fired a similar energy ball called the Kuwagatic Buster.

Astral Saber

The Astral Saber is a red and gold short sword with a crystal ball in its hilt. Within this ball is a small mechanical kabutomushi beetle that is actually the giant Kabuterios. The Astral Saber was sleeping in a cave until Sophie Villeneuve's song woke it. Kabuto was able to call Kabuterios forth from the Saber and join with the giant robot, the B-Fighters gaining a powerful ally.

Geist Axe

The Geist Axe is a green axe with a crystal ball similar to the Astral Saber's in its hilt. Within this one, however, is a mechanical stag beetle that becomes the giant Kuwaga Titan. At first, Deathcorpion was the wielder of the Geist Axe and the commander of Kuwaga Titan, but later B-Fighter Kuwager got possession of it and used the power of Kuwaga Titan for good.

Mecha:

Neo Beet Machines

The Neo Beet Machines are the B-Fighters' super machines that they use to fight the Melzard airborne and ground vehicles. They emerge from the Beetle Base and can join together in the Joint Formation, with the Kabutron and Kuwager Tank attaching to the underside of the Stealth Gyro's wings.

Kabutron

Kabutron is B-Fighter Kabuto's Beet Machine, a gold and black 6-wheeled vehicle with a kabutomushi horn on the front. From this horn it can fire a powerful energy blast, the Kabuto Shooter. It can also tilt downward so that its horn can dig a trench in the ground to dig up underground enemies, or open its wings to reveal jets that let it fly.

Kuwagaa Tank

The Kuwager Tank is B-Fighter Kuwager's vehicle, a black tank with two pincerlike horns on the front. The Kuwager Tank can grab enemies in these horns and toss them about. On top, it has a double-barreled gun, the Kuwager Cannon. It can convert to "Battle Formation", the front rising up and folding back, and can fire off its horns to hit enemies at long-range in the Shoot Scissors attack.

Stealth Gyro

The Stealth Gyro is B-Fighter Tentou's vehicle, a small plane with two large turbines on its tail and two large wings with hover turbines on them. The Stealth Gyro can fire a blast of energy from its Stealth Blaster.

Kabuterios

The "Great Shell God" ("Daikoujin") Kabuterios is a giant gold and black robot that can change into a kabutomushi beetle form. It normally stays inside the Astral Saber but can emerge and enlarge itself when needed. B-Fighter Kabuto can join with Kabuterios and control it. Kabuterios fights with a large sword and can fire a powerful blast of fire, the Big Flare; or an energy beam from its chest, the Glorious Flare.

Kuwaga Titan

Kuwaga Titan, the "Evil Shell God" ("Jakoujin"), is a green and black robot that can become a mechanical stag beetle. It stays inside the Geist Axe until someone calls it forth, and was originally controlled by Deathcorpion and used for evil. However, Kuwaga Titan was actually not evil and once fought alongside Kabuterios, and in the end of the series allowed B-Fighter Kuwager to use it to fight for good. Kuwaga Titan can fire a blast of energy, the Titanic Flare; or a blast of lightning from its antennae, the Titanic Thunder.

BIBYUNAKA: CHOJIN BIBYUN

After the deaths of Zabitan, Gabura and Evil; their spirits entered the bodies of three men, giving them super powers to fight the new evil threatening Japan. Although this was a sequel to Akumaizer 3 it was a very different show. First the three heroes were humans who transformed into the super heroes when needed. Second the monsters instead of being demons (akuma) were ghosts (yokai).

The spirit of Zabitan entered the body of gymnast Tsukimura, Kei (Araki, Shigeru) giving him the power to transform into the fire/air warrior Chōjin Bibyun. Bibyun was armed with the "Sky Sword". Bibyun would stick Sky Word into the ground to activate "Sky Radar" in order to locate monsters or to use "Sky Sword Fire" (similar to Kamen Rider Stronger's "Electro Fire"). Bibyun could use Sky Sword to draw shapes in the dirt then transform those shapes into three dimensional objects. For his final attack Bibyun would turn into a ball of fire to explode the monsters. Araki, Shigeru previously played Jou, Shigeru/Kamen Rider Stronger.

The spirit of Evil entered the body of swimmer Suga, Ichiro (Sakada, Toshihiko) giving him the power to transform into the water warrior Chōjin Bashaan. Bashaan was armed with the water gun "Pepe". Bashaan could turn into a ball of water or a fountain of water. He usually appears on the scene coming up out of the nearest body of water.

The spirit of Gabura entered the body of weightlifter Watabe, Go (Yuchida, Yasuhiko) giving him the power to transform into the earth warrior Chōjin Zushiin. Zushiin was armed with an earthquake causing staff "Mokane" and a top that can drill into the earth. Zushiin could transform into "Zushiin Ball", a boulder, so he could roll over the monsters. He could also turn himself into a pile of dirt. Yuchida, Yasuhiko played Apollo Geist in Kamen Rider X.

Bashaan, Bibyun and Zushiin each had their own motorcycle.

Bibyun, Bashaan and Zushiin were assisted by Crimson Shark (Beni Sharkku), a living aircraft which could shrink to the size of a model plane or grow large enough to carry them. In the early episodes Crimson Shark would fly around looking for ghosts and demons. When it spotted them it would summon Bibyun, Bashaan and Zushiin to the scene.

It was metaphysicist Dr. Daima who summoned the spirits of Zabitan, Evil and Gabura. He became mentor to Bibyun, Bashaan and Zushiin. Instead of Darunia the three magical warriors were assisted by female police agent, and ninth level ninja Akechi, Lisa.

Bibyun, Bashaan and Zushiin fought yokai (ghosts) led by Demon Emperor Gulliver, chief of the demons from Akumaizer 3. Amamoto Eisei who played Shinigami Hakase (Doctor Death) in Kamen Rider gues stars in episode 10.

BIG BAD BEETLEBORGS

The story began when three children, two boys named Drew and Roland, and a girl named Jo, are dared by older bullies to go into a haunted house. Although they would rather sit in the sun and read their comic books, they are afraid of what will happen if they don't accept the dare. Drew, Roland, and Jo decide to go ahead into the haunted house and are immediately locked inside by the older boys.

While looking for a way out and trying to keep from being caught by the monsters who live in the house, Drew, Roland, and Jo accidentally unleash a "fantastic phasm" named Flabber, who grants them each one wish. With comic books still in hand, they all choose to become their favourite comic book characters, the Big Bad BeetleBorgs. But the phasm's magic also releases Vexor and the Magnavors, the evil characters in the comic book. Now the three heroes must use their new super powers to defeat the fiendish Magnavors and restore peace to their hometown.

This show Japanese equivalent was B-FIGHTER, which is where some of the stock footage came from. There was also a direct sequel to Big Bad Beetleborgs in the SF show BEETLEBORGS METALLIX.

Big Bad Beetleborgs (and later Beetleborgs Metallix) was a short-lived television series from Saban that featured three kids; Roland, Drew, and Jo. When they freed the humorous phantom ('Phasm') Flabber from the pipe organ he was trapped in, he thankfully agreed to grant them one wish, and they all wished to become their favorite comic book superheroes, the Beetleborgs, after accidentally being turned into rats.

However, the kids found their wish had its consequences as the evil Magnavores from the comics were also unleashed. The combat footage for the show was used from Jukkou B-Fighter (first season) and B-Fighter Kabuto (second season). With its younger protagonists and greater leanings toward comedy, the show seemed intended to mainly appeal to younger children than Saban's normal audience for the Power Rangers series. However, the absurdity of the show seemed to appeal to all audiences and because of it, the series rivaled Power Rangers in ratings.

Characters

Good Beetleborgs

Andrew "Drew" McCormick - Blue Stinger Beetleborg/Chromium Gold Beetleborg (Wesley Barker), armed with telekinesis, which he activated by pointing at an object and nodding his head. His armor was modeled after a goliath beetle.

Roland Williams - Green Hunter Beetleborg/Titanium Silver Beetleborg (Herbie Baez), armed with super speed, which he activated by snapping his fingers. His armor was modeled after a stag beetle. His family owns the comic book store where the three characters spent a good deal of time in the episodes.

Josephine "Jo" McCormick - Red Striker Beetleborg/Platinum Purple Beetleborg (Shannon Chandler, Brittany Konarzewski), armed with super strength, which she activated by cracking her knuckles. Her Red Striker armor was modeled after a flower beetle, and her Platinum Purple armor after a ladybug.

Josh Baldwin - White Blaster Beetleborg (Warren Berkow), armed with invisibility, which he activated by dusting his hands. A new Beetleborg was created when Shadowborg stole the Beetleborgs' powers. The White Blaster Beetleborg succeeded in getting the Beetleborg powers back. However, it was soon discovered the White Blaster and Shadowborg were linked in like yin and yang - if one was destroyed, the other would lose his power forever. Shadowborg is destroyed by the Mega Blue Beetleborg. With Shadowborg's destruction, the White Blaster Beetleborg lost his powers. His armor was modeled after a hercules beetle.

The Astralborgs - Four Beetleborgs who helped the heroes while the Mantrons were around. Created by Art Fortunes as a child when he and Les worked together on their only collaboration, the Lost Comic.

Dragonborg (voiced by Doug Stone) - Modeled after a dragonfly, leader of the Astralborgs. Had a voice like Sean Connery.

Fireborg (voiced by Gene Holliday) - Modeled after a firefly.

Lightingborg (voiced by Richard Epcar) - Modeled after a cicada.

Ladyborg (voiced by Barbara Goodson) - Modeled after a butterfly.

Mega Spectra Beetleborgs - Nukus and Vilor get an upgrade, going Mega powered. So, to even things up, the Beetleborgs are given a power-boost by Roboborg, fusing their old powers with their Metallix ones, creating the Mega Spectra Beetleborgs.

Allies

Arthur "Art" Fortunes (Rigg Kennedy) - Creator of the Beetleborgs comics, who shows up time and time again with new ways to help the kids.

Flabber (Billy Forester) - When Jo accidentally hit the organ, it played three notes that released Flabber.

Happy to be free, Flabber granted the kids one wish and with gave them the power to become the Beetleborgs. However, Flabber's magic left a door in the comic book world open and the Magnavores escaped. Acting as an advisor and best friend, he offers needed magic to the kids when fighting the Magnavores and Crustaceans. He is the head of the Hillhurst Mansion and works to keep the house monsters in check. The producers of the show said that he was based on Elvis Presley, although most viewers thought he resembled Jay Leno more.

The House Monsters - The residents of Hillhurst Manor, they cause as much trouble as the villains, terrorizing the kids when not doing anything else. They make frequent appearances in the ending credits, doing their antics.

Frankenbeans (David Fletcher) - Called "Frankie" for short, he is a strange, lumbering Frankenstein-type monster. He was once kidnapped by the Magnavores, and held by ransom in exchange for the Beetleborgs' Beetle Bonders. Dr. Baron von Frankenbeans, his creator, showed up in a few episodes.

Mums (Blake Torney, voiced by Michael Sorich) - Mums is an Egyptian mummy, but he can unwrap his bandages to reveal a "Grim Reaper"-like form under his bandages. He has 703 brothers and sisters. In one episode, two archaeologists came to return Mums to the crypt in which they found him in order to get rid of a curse placed on them.

Count Fangula (Joe Hackett) - Loosely modeled after Count Dracula, Count Fangula is a vampire, a not so good one, but a vampire nonetheless.

Wolfgang "Wolfie" Smith (Frank Tahoe, voiced by Scott Page-Pagter) - Wolfie is a werewolf and is treated more like a family dog than a monster at Hillhurst. Only Fangula can translate what Wolfie is saying most of the time. Probably the bravest and most cunning of the Hillhurst Monsters because he's the only one of the group who tangled with the bad guys at least once.

Little Ghoul (Lina Godouse) - An addition to the Hillhurst group in season two, she lives in the basement and rarely comes out. A niece of the Grim Reaper, she is a grim reaper-in-training who loves collecting. She also has a short temper, which scares the other monsters even more than her true appearance under her hood. She has little to no respect for anyone; she does, however, have a great deal of respect for the Astralborgs.

The Pipettes (Traci Bellusci) - A multicolor spirit-like trio of ladies who live in the pipe organ. They act as Flabber's back-up singers.

Ghoulum (voiced by Dan Letlow for one episode only) - A living stone statue type monster that resides in Hillhurst Mansion who often had little to say or do other than what statues do best, stand in place. While not the most active monster of Hillhurst Mansion on rare occasions he would join in on the other monsters' mischief. In one episode, he was accidentally exposed to a 'Bad Potion' turning him evil and causing him to grow into a giant under Noxic's control.

Karato and Silver Ray - Two other comic book superheroes that the kids are fans of. They are released from the comic book universe by Flabber to help the Beetleborgs battle escaped monsters released by the Magnavores at a comic book convention.

Magnavores

The villains of the first season, they were originally from the Beetleborgs comic until they were brought into the real world by accident. Their hideout was within a crypt under the local cemetery. They have ability to bring monsters to life from their comic book world.

Vexor (voiced by Joey Pal) - The leader of the Magnavors.

Typhus (voiced by Dave "Foots" Footman) - Plant/Animal-like humanoid monster, prefers brawn over brain and his whale-like flatop is an extra mouth he eats with.

Noxic (voiced by Derek Stephen Prince) - Android with coils for hair and white jacket. Can control machinery and other things by removing his head and attaching it to them. Prefers to eat donuts all day long instead of doing Vexor's bidding. He has a brother named Super Noxic.

Jara (voiced by Rajia Baroudi) - Female humanoid clad in red attire and white mask. She speaks with a Russian accent. Despite her face being remade 3-dimensional, she cannot consume junk food in the real world because the mouth on her mask could never open.

Magnavore Jet Fighters - Air-borne machines resembling wasps. Summoned to attack the Beetleborgs on several occasions.

Scabs - Yellow-black goon squads summoned to fight the Beetleborgs on rare occasions.

Crustaceans

The villains of the second season, based on the art work of Art Fortune's evil brother, Les Fortunes. They took over the Mangavores' hideout as their own.

Nukus (Christopher Cho) - A creation of Les Fortunes, the Triceratops-based Overlord of the 2nd Dimension. Hid away in Art Fortune's vault until the Magnavores took the picture and Vexor brought him to life. Nukus quickly set a plan to dispose the Magnavores and take over as the new villain. He broke Les out of jail to use the artist's skills to create deadly monsters that could be brought to life with the use of his sword. He had an advantage over the Beetleborgs as he destroyed both the paper he came out of and the copy Art had. Nukus also destroyed the Beetleborgs' original armor, weapons, and powers. He later gained a mega form, Mega Nukus, from touching Les Fortunes' transmographier device.

Horribelle (Claudine Barros) - Second in command of the Crustaceans, an insect-based sword-toting fighter and Nukus' right-hand woman.

Vilor (voiced by Dave "Foots" Footman) - Third in command of the Crustaceans, a fish-based, trident-toting fighter. He briefly gains a second form, Super Vilor, when the Mantrons arrived, and later a brief mega form, Mega Vilor, after touching Les Fortunes' transmographier device, though he somehow reverted back to his normal state.

Lester "Les" Fortunes (Marshal Hilton) - The black sheep in the Fortunes family, Art's younger brother. He was in jail when Nukus recruited him to his cause. Despite creating all the Crustacean monsters and their arsenal, Les never gets any respect or credit for it. At the end of the series, he goes back to jail for some peace and quiet.

Dregs - Assorted monsters used as foot soldiers. Dregs came in two groups. One group was based off land animals and wore brown slacks and black boots (Spider Dreg, Stego Dreg, Ptera Dreg). The other based off sea creatures and wore blue spandex pants and white boots (Fish Dreg, Jellyfish Dreg, Squid Dreg). Each group consisted of six different types of Dregs.

Worm Tanks - Giant worm like vehicles summoned to attack the Beetleborgs on several occasions.

Crustacean Jet Fighters - Air-borne machines based on the design of the Worm Tank summoned to attack the Beetleborgs on several occasions.

Evil Beetleborgs

Shadowborg (voiced by Bob Papenbrook) - Black evil Beetleborg created by Vexor from ionic DNA and insectite material stolen from the Blue Stinger Beetleborg. Not only is Shadowborg created from the basic materials as Blue Stinger, but he is enhanced with some of the powers of the other Beetleborgs. Shadowborg can run faster than the Green Hunter, jump higher than Red Striker, and remain underwater for 51 minutes. Shadowborg's architectural armor is modeled after of a longicorn beetle, perhaps the fiercest warrior of the insect world. With his Shadow Claw, Shadowborg can cut through any substance known to this planet. Was finally destroyed by Drew in his new form, Mega Blue Beetleborg. Unlike his predecessors the Green Ranger (from Mighty Morphin Power Rangers), Red Python (from VR Troopers) and Roborider (from Masked Rider), Shadowborg did not need a brainwashed human to harness his powers.

The MantronsMantrons - Evil counterparts of the Astralborgs. Created by Les Fortunes as a child to rival Art Fortunes' Astralborgs in their only collaboration, the Lost Comic. They were there to aid Nukus in his plans to get Roboborg, who ultimately made it to the good hands of the Beetleborgs. In 'Roboborg' (part 8 of the Lost Comic saga), the Mantrons were finally sent back to the Lost Comic for good by the combined attacks of the Beetleborgs, Astralborgs and Roboborg. The Mantrons are:

Hornix (voiced by Bob Johnson) - Modeled after a hornet.

Mantix (voiced by Ethan Murray) - Modeled after a praying mantis.

Centipix (voiced by Lee Hondo Woodford) - Modeled after a centipede.

Supporting Cast

The denizens of Charterville who often interacted with the kids. Most of which were Roland's family. Even after the strange occurrences that have been happening throughout town, they never acknowledged the battles between the Beetleborgs and their enemies. Everyone still remained ignorant to the fact that Beetleborgs and monsters were real.

"Nano" Williams (Vivian Smallwood) - Roland's grandmother, Aaron's mother, and Abbie's mother-in-law. Nano is one hip granny and a trained martial artist. When she's not running Zoom Comic's or practicing her moves, she's often seen riding her motorcycle. Nano often helps out the kids when they're in a jam. If nothing else, she enjoys teasing her son Aaron.

Aaron Williams (Kim Delgado) - Roland's father. He ran the comic shop full time and is often embarrassed by his mother's antics. Aaron was last seen during the Curse of the Shadowborg miniseries. He was called away on business, leaving the shop in the care of his wife.

Abbie Williams (Channe Nolen) - Roland's mother. She primarily works as a real estate agent. With her husband Aaron away, someone had to run Zoom Comics. Roland very much wanted his mother to run the store, but she and Nano don't really see eye to eye and she also did not know much about running a comic shop. With a little help from Flabber's magic, Abbie's heart opened up and rekindled fond childhood memories of a comic she once loved reading. Afterwards, she took over Zoom Comics for the remainder of the series. Heather (Elizabeth Z. Lund) - Drew's crush. No matter what, Drew could never tell Heather what he really felt. Heather also helped at Zoom Comics and enjoyed comic books too, especially Beetleborgs. During the Shadowborg saga, she developed a relationship with new boy, Josh, much to the dismay of Drew. The Drew/Heather subplot was never resolved at the end of Beetleborgs Metallix.

Trip & Van (Todd Hurst & Patrick Seaborn) - the comic relief of the series. The brothers constantly pestered the kids daily lives by flaunting their wealth and self-acclaimed superiority. Trip was the smarter of the two, whereas Van was a bit slow. They sometimes cooked up schemes to get richer, humiliate the Beetleborgs, or simply to cause mischief; often getting their unwitting chauffeur, Dudley, involved. They dared Drew, Roland and Jo to enter Hillhurst Mansion, which led the three to becoming Beetleborgs. Like Bulk & Skull from Power Rangers, they always got their just desserts through hilarious and zany gags. In the final episode of Big Bad Beetleborgs, as they fled Charterville, Nukus forced them to go back and tell the Beetleborgs how to defeat Borgslayer. They then left town and never returned.

Weaponry & Arsenal

Big Bad Beetleborgs

Beetle Bonders - The Beetleborgs' transformation devices. Once summoned, the kids transformed into the Beetleborgs with a cry of "Beetle Blast!".

Sonic Lasers - The Beetleborgs' fire-arms.

Pulsabers - The weapons that the Beetleborgs use to summon Gargantis. It can combine with the Sonic Laser for more firepower.

Stinger Drill - The Blue Stinger Beetleborg's more powerful enhanced Beetle Battler.

Hunter Claw - The Green Hunter Beetleborg's weapon.

Striker Blaster - The Red Striker Beetleborg's weapon.

Thunder Stinger - More powerful than any Sonic Laser, only the Blue Stinger Beetleborg can use it. This weapon also helps transform Blue Stinger Beetleborg into the Mega Blue Beetleborg.

Beetleborgs Metallix

Data Bonders - The Beetleborgs' transformation devices. Unlike the Beetle Bonders, the kids had to insert the Input Cards into the Data Bonders after they were summoned. The kids transformed into the Metallix Beetleborgs with a cry of "Beetle Blast!".

Data Lasers - The Beetleborgs' fire-arms.

Metallix Battlers - The Beetleborgs' main weapons of their own design;

Metallix Lancer - The Chromium Gold Beetleborg's weapon.

Metallix Grappler - The Titanium Silver Beetleborg's weapon. Much like the Hunter Claw, it could also grab an enemy.

Metallix Baton - The Platinum Purple Beetleborg's weapon.

Astral Bonders - The Astralborgs use this device to give the Beetleborgs new weapons to use in battle.

Astral Arsenal - Weapons used by either the Beetleborgs or Astralborgs.

Astral Laser - Laser weapon used by either Dragonborg or Chromium Gold Beetleborg.

Astral Launcher - Arm-cannon used by Fireborg.

Astral Pulsar - Hand-held weapon used by Platinum Purple to ruin or restore.

Astral Sabers - Long swords used by Lightningborg.

Astral Datadex - Weapon used by the Titanium Silver Beetleborg.

Astral Bazooka - Weapon used by Ladyborg.

Astral Blaster - Combination of a Data Laser, Astral Laser, Astral Datadex & Astral Pulsar, usually held by Chromium Gold Beetleborg.

Astral Sword - See Battleborgs - Roboborg.

Astral Ax - See Battleborgs - Boron.

Sector Cycles - The Beetleborgs' new bikes used when they need to get to another part of the city. When Roboborg arrived, he changed the cycles into the new Mega Spectra Sector Cycles by combining their old powers with their Metallix powers.

"Bugging out" - in the first two episodes of Metallix, Drew and his teammates use Flabber's book of spells (or Phasm Handbook) to try and change him back to normal after Nukus traps him into a giant block of ice. One spell gives all three the power to change into somewhat larger versions of their respective insects (about the size of their fists), then revert back to human. By stamping one foot and saying "Bug out!", they change into bugs. To become human again, they say "Bug back!" The trio are able to use this ability in either human or Beetleborg form, and will never lose it.

Assault Vehicles

Beetleborg Attack Vehicles

The A.V.'s are the Beetleborgs' heavy artillery to use when the city is attacked by Magnavor Jet Fighters.

Housed in the Beetle Battle Base, minus Gargantis.

Blue Stinger A.V. - Blue Stinger Beetleborg's A.V.

Green Hunter A.V. - Green Hunter Beetleborg's A.V.

Red Striker A.V. - Red Stinker Beetleborg's air-borne A.V.

Gargantis the Attack Mobile Carrier - Most powerful attack vehicle the Beetleborgs had, it can open its back so the smaller A.V.s can ride atop of it for the Gargantis Mega Cannon.

Beetleborg Battle Vehicles

The B.V.'s are the Beetleborgs' heavy artillery to use when the city is attacked by Crustacean Jet Fighters & Worm Tanks. Housed in the Beetle Battle Station.

Chromium Gold B.V. - Chromium Gold Beetleborg's B.V.

Titanium Silver B.V. - Titanium Silver Beetleborg's B.V.

Platinum Purple B.V. - Platinum Purple Beetleborg's air-borne B.V.

Battleborgs

Roboborg VS BoronRoboborg (voiced by Michael Sorich) - Arrived on Earth when all eight of the Astral Coins were reunited with the Astral Sword. Roboborg is summoned when the Chromium Gold Beetleborg holds the Astral Sword in the air and shouts "Roboborg!".

Boron (voiced by Y.I. Otta) - Les Fortunes created the Astral Ax, the evil counterpart to the Astral Sword, and with it Roboborg's evil counterpart, Boron. Used by Mega Nukus to summon Boron, simply by shouting out, "Boron, Arise!". In the battle against Reggillian, the Beetleborgs tricked the Crustaceans into giving up the Astral Ax so it could fall into the hands of Titanium Silver Beetleborg. Boron then switched to the side of good.

Trivia

The end credits of Big Bad Beetleborgs featured a sped-up sequence with Flabber and the House Monsters running around Hillhurst Mansion.

The character of Jo McCormick, portrayed by Shannon Chandler, was replaced halfway through the first season by Brittany Konarzewski. It paralleled, to an extent, the situation in B-Fighter, when the original Reddle, Rei, left the team and was replaced.

Karato and Silver Ray footage came from the 'Jukkou B-Fighter Metal Hero' teamup special. Karato is actually the metal hero Tokusou Robo Janperson; and Silver Ray is Gungibson, another Janperson character. The villain 'Goldex' was actually the psychotic and villainous Billgoldy, one of Janperson and Gungibson's enemies.

The Assault Vehicles were recreated in CGI for new action footage, with the footage being re-used for several episodes.

Billy Forrester, who portrayed Flabber, won an episode of the game show The Weakest Link.

A character in an episode of The Simpsons was named Art Fortunes.

During one of the 'Monday Headline' segments on the Tonight Show with Jay Leno, a picture of Flabber was sent to Leno, which got laughs from the audience, while Leno was a bit peeved.

Beetleborgs Metallix was canceled because the producers ran out of B-Fighter Kabuto footage to adapt.

Beetleborgs Metallix, VR Troopers and The Mystic Knights of Tir Na Nog were the only Saban productions in which the heroes never lost their powers in the final episode.

The costumes for Shadowborg, Ladyborg, Lightningborg, Dragonborg and the Green Hunter Beetleborg were re-cycled for the Power Rangers: Wild Force anniversary special episode, Forever Red, in which they represented the remaining generals of the Machine Empire.

Various monsters from both Beetleborgs seasons were re-used as enemy monsters in The Mystic Knights of Tir Na Nog. Some of them included Scorpix, Shellator, Seed of Evil, Fangula Bat Monster, and some other unnamed and unused monsters.

Some of the Beetleborgs monsters appeared in Power Rangers. Terror Bear, a Stego Dred, and Triplesaurus become their favorite comic book superheroes. The BeetleBorgs!

BIG PULL, THE

American astronaut Mike Sklorski, is sent into space to complete one orbit of the Earth, he passes through the deadly Van Alan Belts, which are full of radioactive particles. He returns to Earth apparently safe from any radiation from the Van Alan Belt. It's isn't long however before Sklorski dies from an unknown cause. The Dr. Weatherfield, the man who designed the rocket, disappears after having nightmare about absorbing Sklorski's memory.

When the Sklorski is seen to be alive, the head of research Sir. Robert Nailer believes that Sklorski and Weatherfield have become one. He also believes that they were attacked by something beyond the Van Alan Belts. Soon after other men are being attacked in pairs, one being killed and one going missing. After every pair goes missing, double the amount goes missing the next time, the only hope that Nailer has is to capture one of the 'fusion's'.

Transmission of the Big Pull overlapped with the transmission of new episodes of THE ANDROMEDA STRAIN on the BBC. The producer for the show was Terence Dudley, the designer was Lionel Radford, the camera man for the filmed sequences was A.A. Englander and the editor was Seymour Logie. As with many BBC productions of the time the music and special effects were done by the BBC Radiophonic Workshop. TBP's producers was Terence Dudley, who would later go on to produce two other high quality SF shows in the form of SURVIVORS and DOOMWATCH. Listed above are just a few of the 90 cast members credited in this serial, one of the largest casts ever assembled for a serial. TBP was overlapped with the second instalment of A FOR ANDROMEDA.

A superb example of the limitless bounds of imagination and creativity prior to man landing on the moon, The Big Pull explored the fears of those on Earth as space exploration became more of a reality than science-fiction television had ever before conceived. The series, which took as its central premise British space scientists experimenting with astronauts breaking through the highly radioactive Van Allen belts in the planet's atmosphere, appeared, for the most part, to hint at a possible alien invasion of the Earth.

Scriptwriter Robert Gould opened the story with Head of Space Research, Sir Robert Nailer (William Dexter), assisting with shuttle manoeuvres as a space station endeavours to assist astronaut Mike Sklorski (Frank Fenter) in returning to Earth, having traversed the Van Allen belts. The mission appears to be successful, with the shuttle returning safely and the astronaut in fine health. However, further investigation finds that the recording equipment inside the vessel had stopped for nineteen seconds prior to re-entry, and Nailer is keen to ascertain the cause and any side-effects Sklorski may be experiencing. However, less than an hour after the capsule is opened, the astronaut dies - and there appears to be no precise medical reason for his death. Nailer becomes even more concerned when Doctor Weatherfield (Felix Deebank), in England for the opening a powerful new radio-telescope and the first man to enter the space capsule after its opening, disappears from his hotel after a terrible nightmare in which he had "absorbed" the mind of the dead astronaut.

This six-part serial, produced and directed by Terence Dudley, was both potent and compellingly addictive as the layers of revelations were steadily stripped away as the series surged towards its climax. The ability to keep the viewer guessing as to whether or not it was a radiation plague or an alien invasion heightened the suspense and dramatic potential, and a served as a timely warning of the dangers of reckless experimentation in space.

The programme boasted notable performances from Frederick Treves, June Tobin, Gertan Klauber and Keith Pyott, and is one of the more high-calibre science-fiction drama productions BBC Television developed throughout the 1960s. The programme was never commercially exported or released

Robert Gould, the author, introduces the six-part science-fiction serial beginning tonight: Before man can reach the moon he will have to find a safe way of penetrating the Van Allen belts - two belts of radio-active particles five-hundred and nine-thousand miles up, and one-thousand and three-thousand miles deep respectively. This scientific fact, though not generally known, is at present keeping American space experts busy trying to find a solution to the problem. What lies beyond? Other galaxies, other planets, other civilisations - millions of light years away? Perhaps even other beings in space, only too ready to attempt an attack on this world? These are the thoughts behind the science-fiction serial which begins tonight. The first man has orbited the earth above the Van Allen radiation belts. Soon after his capsule is retrieved from space the astronaut dies. Twenty-eight days later space-research head Sir Robert Nailer (played by William Dexter) is confronted with evidence which indicates a weird and terrifying possibility: that the dead man returned "contaminated" and that this "contamination" has begun to spread. He died from no known cause - after making only one orbit of the earth a mere fourteen-thousand-five-hundred miles up. Could some force, some influence, have been waiting just above the radiation belts to gain entry to the earth? The implications of what has happened begin to be understood, and what lies ahead begins to reveal itself in all its horror ... There are no monsters in The Big Pull. It is our own inability to see beyond our noses that carries the story through to its horrifying end. If in fact an attack from outer space did take place - particularly if we were faced with having to try and accept what is to our way of thinking impossible - human nature could well be the weakest point in our defence. I believe we are very vulnerable indeed, as you will see during the next six weeks if you watch the serial.

1 - 2 "EPISODE 2"

When American astronaut Mike Sklorski travelled in a specially protected rocket through the deadly belt of radio-active particles encircling the earth and returned safely after a single orbit fourteen-thousand-five hundred miles up, it seemed as though the way was clear for the space-race to the moon, for both Sklorski and his capsule landed completely free from any trace of cosmic radiation. And yet soon after the capsule was opened, Sklorski died from causes unknown. The first man to enter the capsule after the flight is Doctor Weatherfield, the scientist who designed the rocket. Visiting England for the opening of a powerful new radio-telescope, Weatherfield disappears from his hotel following nightmares in which he has "absorbed" Sklorski's memory. Could something have happened to the astronaut during the nineteen unexplained seconds out in space when the capsule's cameras and tape-recorders went blank? Could whatever it was have come back with him through the radiation belts? And could Doctor Weatherfield have been contaminated by some form of cosmic infection? In this evening's second episode of the exciting new BBC Television science-fiction serial, the search for Doctor Weatherfield becomes a matter of top-secret priority. For the giant new radio-telescope is receiving an unintelligible signal from an unknown source, and things have been seen in the streets of London which lead the Head of Scientific Research to the conclusion: "The decisions the Home Secretary is going to have to make may well mean the difference between life and death for us all".

1 - 3 "EPISODE 3"

The dead astronaut, Major Sklorski, is seen alive, and Doctor Weatherfield has disappeared. Sir Robert Nailer believes that Sklorski and Doctor Weatherfield have become one body, one personality.

1 - 4 "EPISODE 4"

The result of Sklorski's successful orbital flight is an attack on earth by an intelligence from space. Men are attacked in pairs - one killed, one missing. The only chance of preventing the next attack is to find a missing man - and there are twenty-one hours to go.

1 - 5 "EPISODE 5"

The last attack from space claimed thirty-two victims. The next attack will claim double that number. Bruton-Anderson (the "fusion" of two men that looks like Anderson) is captured by Sir Robert, who is forced to attempt a desperate experiment.

1 - 6 "EPISODE 6"

The missing men now number thirty-one, and the attacks from space have stopped - but for how long? Nailer knows the missing men must now reduce their number to sixteen. How will they do it and when? Their success means the end of the world.

BIG WOLF ON CAMPUS

A young boy Tommy Dawkins discovers that everytime he gets angry he turns into a Wearwolf. Merton Dingle the local school nerd discovers his secret and tries to help Tommy survive his transformation, and stop people from realising that Tommy is a Wearwolf.

Produced by Peter Pearson, Film Editing by Benjamin Duffield & Annie Ilkow, Casting Maureen Webb, Costume Design by Claire Nadon, Sound Department - Louis Marion (sound). By no means is "Big Wolf on Campus" outstanding or superior, and I doubt that it will ever grow beyond might-be status. After all, the plot is so unoriginal I'm surprised that we haven't seen it more often. But the show plays it well, with an energetic flow and a charismatic title character. So don't just pass it off, and it might grow on you. It isn't often that we see a youth-oriented show that knows what it's talking about.

The series has been seen in the UK first on the Trouble satellite/digital station. Most stories revolved around teenage angst, but other stories do include Time Travel, very much in the vein of another teen SF series WEIRD SCIENCE. The executive producers for the series were Robin Spry, Paul Painter, Peter Pearson, Michael Yudin and Lance H. Robbins. The creative consultant was Peter Knight. Adam Weissman also directed SUPERHUMAN SAMURIA SYBER SQUAD, TOTTOED TEENAGE ALIEN FIGHTERS FROM BEVERLY HILLS and HYPERNAUTS.

The series was first shown in the UK on Satellite/Digital channel Trouble, on a daily basis at 4.30pm on a weekdays, in September 1999.

3 - 21 A CLIP SHOW: THE SUM OF ALL FEARS

As Big Wolf wraps, our three main characters shed their fictional personas, and count down the favorite moments, fights, actors & actresses, etc., selected by the fans.

BIGFOOT AND WILDBOY

Marshall, Will, and Holly, on a routine expedition, met the greatest earthquake ever known. High on the rapids, it shook their tiny raft, and plunged them down a thousand feet below. But this is not their story. This is the story of "The legendary Bigfoot (come from out of the Great Northwest) who, eight years ago, saved the life of a young child lost in the vast wilderness and raised that child until he grew up to be Wildboy."

But you can discuss the Bigfoot and Wildboy mystique for hours on end and ever truly get to the heart of what makes these characters the Asterix and Obelix of non-French people. What is it about these woodland vigilantes that makes us wish we had an American flag laying around so we could salute the dani-n thing? Perhaps it's the unbridled power of the Sasquatch, which has fascinated schoolchildren for as long as schoolchildren have been fascinated by powerful things with no bridles. Then again, perhaps it is the hopeful message that a boy can be raised in the wild by a hairy, unintelligent brute, yet still develop the kind of vocabulary reserved for Loyola graduates.

Perhaps "Bigfoot and Wildboy" owes its coveted place in television history to the fact that it strove to be art as well as entertainment. For instance, consider the following poem from "Eye of the Mummy." in response to Yvonne Regal whatever's question, "What's going on?" the antagonist muses: Nothing, my dear, Now that you are here; Now inside before something does happen / To her!

Yet meter and rhyme are insufficient to explain the undying magic of essentially what "The A Team" would be if Mr. T dressed like a Ihasa apso and the plots weren't as thin. Mayhap the heartstrings of America are yanked by the lonely and haunting refrain "Bayaba!", Sasquatchese for "We shot the action stock footage separately, so even though we were right next to each other twenty seconds ago, that chase sequence left us hundreds of kilometres apart! Come to my aid, my noble friend and cohort!" How many of us, in this technologically advanced but emotionally hollow age, have echoed that plaintive, desperate cry? I've done it twice just since lunch. In the end, "Bigfoot and Wildboy" cannot be understood intellectually. The true beauty of this swatch of the children's programming tapestry is something to be felt as a moist warm throbbing in the soul. Thank you, Sid and Marty Krofft. Thank you for the nights of unmolested sleep we, the American people, have shared, secure in the knowledge that "the mighty Bigfoot, heroic Wildboy, and their pretty friend Cindy" will continue to battle wrongdoing for as long as they keep stumbling across it while lugging felled trees through the woods for no apparent reason. One of the writers for the show was Donald R. Boyle, and directors included, Irving J. Moore and Charles Rondeau.

Some of the episodes of SF interest are 'White Wolf' a scientist gives a wolf great strength and trains in to attack people. 'Space Prisoner' in which an alien criminal who is banished from his own planet arrives on Earth, hoping to find an energy source from which he can create an empire with. 'The Birth of Titan' in which a college student attempts to build an A-bomb, only to come into contact with stolen plutonium which turns him into a raging monster. BAW first appeared in as part of The Krofts Supershow, on the Kroft Supershow episodes were broadcast as two part stories. The series returned on its own during the summer of 1979, when a dozen new episodes were run.

BILL AND TED'S EXCELLENT ADVENTURES

BATEA was a short lived TV series which was based on a pair of theoretical films, Bill and Ted's Excellent Journey and Bill and Ted's Bogus Journey. The films were about a pair of underachieving San Demas, California teens, William 'Bill' S. Preston Esquire and Theodore 'Ted' Logan. Together they have formed a rock 'n roll band, the Wyld Stallyons. In the year 2692 , Bill and Ted were known as the two great ones, there catchphrase of 'excellent' and 'dude' used by everyone.

Their band's music was revered and the future's entire excellent society was based upon their philosophy. In 2692, the holy ones who rule the world, learnt that Bill and Ted might not pass their history class which would cause them to be separated and prevent them from forming their band. If this were to happen the entire fabric of society would unravel. The holy ones who assigned Rufus to ensure that Bill and Ted fulfil their destiny and that their society is preserved Rufus used the circuit of time phone booth, which could travel back and fourth in time, to contact Bill and Ted. He told them of his mission and gave them the phone booth. They preceded to travel back in time where they meet a variety of historical figures which they brought into the present to help them pass their history class. They pass and the Wyld Stalyns were formed. Bill and Ted's Excellent Journey proved successful enough to warrant a sequel. Bill and Ted's Bogus Journey feature the boys getting killed by a villain from the future who hoped to prevent them from achieving success. They were replaced by robot duplicates programmed to fail.

The real Bill and Ted defeated and befriended death to return to the land of the living and achieve the fame they were destined to. The TV series BATEA was totally recast from the movies. The series was set when Bill and Ted were still in high school , both have lost the wives which they had acquired in the feature films. Although the Wyld Stalyons had been formed it had not yet become the huge success that it was destined to be. In order to get money to pay for their bands equipment, and other teenage necessities, the pair took part time jobs at World of Nails. World of Nails was a hardware store managed by the uptight Mr. Keilson. The store was part of a big national chain and Mr. Keilson hoped to part of the upper management. Rufus had been assigned to look after Bill and Ted and make sure that they do not get into to much trouble. Bill and Ted has use of the circuit of time phone booth, often to get out of a bad situation which they would not have been in if they had not had the phone booth in the first place.

In addition to the ability to travel through time, the phone booth in the series had acquired new abilities. These new abilities, included the ability to transfer people from the real world into TV shows, and the ability to transport people into books. This latter ability however only occurred in the unaided pilot. Missy Preston was Bill's step mother. She was only a couple of years older than Bill and Ted. Graduating from high school whilst they were underclassmen. In the movies Missy had been married to Ted's father, a policeman. However somewhere along the way the couple got divorced and she fall for Bill's dad.

Based on the surprisingly enjoyable pair of feature films about the good-natured but dim-witted teenagers from San Dimas who find themselves seriously out of their depths in time travel adventures.

A series of animated episodes were also produced. These episodes premiered before the live action series did. To begin with they had Alex Winters and Keanu Reeves provide the voices for the characters they first portrayed. When the live action TV series was first announced and cast, Richards and Kennedy took over the voice roles so that viewers of the animated series could more readily except the change in actors when the live series debuted. Some of the episodes are ' It's a Totally Wonderful Life' in which Rufus returns to 1966 to find that Bill in as amoral business man and Ted is an undercover cop who wants to bust Bill. 'Stand Up Guy' had Bill and Ted convince Albert Einstein that he would be better off as a Stand up comedian.

BIO PLANET WOO

AKA: SEIBUTSU SUISEI WOO

The story revolves around a living creature which came from a comet named Woo; in the series, Woo is befriended by a young girl named Ai; both are chased by a mysterious organization called SWORD who sees Woo as a threat to humanity. At the same time, giant monsters have invaded in search of Woo.

Bio Planet WoO (Seibutsu Suisei Woo) is a kyodai themed tokusatsu that premiered April 9, 2006 and airs at 7:30pm on NHK. The series is scheduled to have 13 episodes. Woo was one of many unused ideas created by the late-Eiji Tsuburaya as story connecting to the show, Ultra Q.

The story itself follows the original script Tsuburaya intended for the show.

Main Characters

WoO-The only survivor of his species wandered in space until he crashed on Earth. There, he befriended Ai and develops a strong bond with her that he'd protect her at any cost. He uses his antennae to connect to electronic devices (mainly a cell phone) to communicate with Ai.

Ai Kumashiro-Junior high school 2nd grade. She stays with her mother and loves soccer. She travels with Woo after their encounter. Her school is then attacked by a giant monster, which resulted in her being the lone survivor of the attack.

Kiyomi Kumashiro-Ai's mother and secondary chief editor at the magazine "CHEMISTRY."

Akita-A reporter of magazine "CHEMISTRY" of the same publisher as Kiyomi.

Kotarou-Ai's classmate. After he leaves working in the Convenient Store; his dream is to become a movie director. He seems to be attracted to Ai.

SWORD Organization

Yaman-The leader of SWORD. It reveals that his daughter was killed in the incident that Ai survived and because of that holds a personal vendetta against the alien life forms, including WoO.

Kirishi-Field Agent for SWORD.

Katsura-Field Researcher for SWORD, she eventually becomes an ally to Ai and Woo helping them escape from her colleagues.

Sakuraba-Field Agent of SWORD who keeps tabs on Ai and Woo.

Nagakura-Biological Researcher for SWORD. He uses Woo's artifact and turns into a monster.

Gonda-Katsura's sweetheart and ace combat specialist for SWORD's mobile unit. He is portrayed by Shigeki Kagamaru (who played GUTS Member Tetsuo Shinjou in Ultraman Tiga).

Waver-Head of SWORD's mobile unit and his part of SWORD's US branch in Arizona.

[edit] WoO's Forms

Egg Form-The shape WoO used to travel in space.

Inflated Form-An expanded version of normal form; Woo grows bigger than Ai, but still fights monsters in its normal form.

Fossil Form-WoO reverts to this form due to exhaustion fighting as a giant. It takes water to revive him into his normal form.

Rucksack Form-Due to Woo's shapeshifting abilities, he takes this form when traveling with Ai to disguise himself from public.

Aikira Form-A fusion of Woo and Ai's energies resulting in Woo turning into a Giant to fight other daikaiju; after fighting he turns into his Fossil Form.

Music

Opening Theme: "Guardian Angel" by Splash Candy

Closing Theme: "Kasa Juubun Ichi" by G.O.R. (Girls on the Run)

Miscellanea

Considering Eiji Tsuburaya created WoO as being intended to be part of the Ultra Q continuity, it's debate whether or not this show is part of the Ultra Series.

When concepts first appeared, WoO was given the nickname "Ultraman Frog" by much of the tokusatsu fandom.

Ultraman Nexus actor Mitsutoshi Syundo (Shinya Mizorogi/Dark Mesphito) makes a guest appearance.

BIONIC WOMAN (2007)

Bartender Jaime Sommers struggles to make ends meet in San Francisco, California, while serving as a surrogate mom to her teenage sister. Jaime figures that her life couldn't get any more difficult, but she is terribly, terribly wrong. Nearly killed in a horrifying car accident, Jaime is saved by a cutting-edge operation -- performed by her boyfriend, Will Anthros -- that leaves her with advanced bionic prosthetics and implants with extraordinary new strength, among other artificially enhanced gifts. Now, however, Jaime must figure out how best to use her new abilities while embracing her new bionic identity.

Bionic Woman is an American science fiction television drama created by David Eick, under NBC Universal Television Group, GEP Productions and David Eick Productions. The series is a re-imagining of the original television series, The Bionic Woman, and retains its forbear's premise while taking on a more contemporary setting. David Eick also serves as executive producer alongside Laeta Kalogridis and Jason Smilovic. Michael Dinner directed the series pilot.

Bionic Woman premiered in the United States on the NBC network on September 26, 2007. The series is currently scheduled to air on Wednesday nights at 9:00/8:00c. It will also be broadcast on Seven Network in Australia, E! in Canada, and ITV2 in the United Kingdom. The show premiered with NBC's highest midweek premiere ratings since the 1999 premiere of The West Wing. The show was the second most watched program in the timeslot, losing out to ABC's Grey's Anatomy spin off Private Practice which took 14.4 million viewers. The pilot episode was leaked on the internet prior to the series premiere and made available for download on popular torrent sites on July 27, 2007.

The series revolves around bartender Jaime Sommers, who is saved from death after receiving experimental medical implants. While adjusting to her new bionic powers and raising a rebellious younger sister, Jamie agrees to work for the organization that performed her surgery.

Development

The first mention of a revision of the Bionic Woman series occurred in August 2002 when a story in The Hollywood Reporter indicated that the series would be produced by "Team Todd", sisters Jennifer Todd and Suzanne Todd. The story quoted Suzanne Todd as saying:

We are going to take advantage of the fact that what seemed beyond the realm of reality back when they did the original show some of the things in terms advancement in prosthetics and in replacement limbs are real in true life now. I think the idea that they exist in the world today and people make use of them not in a superhero way the way that Jaime does is going to allow us to do something really interesting and very different than the old show."

It was later reported that the USA Network was considering airing the series, with Jennifer Aniston being in consideration for the lead role. However, no series was produced at that time.

On October 9, 2006, NBC Universal announced that it was bringing the project back with new producers and reportedly, a radical reworking of the original concept. The series would be written by Laeta Kalogridis (creator of the WB series Birds of Prey) and produced by David Eick. Eick commented on the new series saying, "It's a complete reconceptualization of the title. We're using the title as a starting point, and that's all. It's going to be a meaningful departure [from the original]."

On January 3, 2007, The Hollywood Reporter reported that the series one-hour pilot was given an official greenlight by NBC. On May 10, 2007, NBC announced that they had given an early pick-up to Bionic Woman for their fall 2007 schedule.

Casting

The pilot starred Michelle Ryan, Miguel Ferrer, Molly Price, Will Yun Lee, and Mae Whitman, with David

Eick, Laeta Kalogridis, Jason Smilovic and Michael Dinner serving as executive producers and writers. Dinner also directed the pilot but exited his post as executive producer in June 2007. Glen Morgan, writer and producer on The X-Files, Space: Above and Beyond, and Millennium, joined the production team of Bionic Woman as an executive producer in May. On June 27, 2007, TV Guide reported that Mae Whitman was being replaced in the role of Jaime's sister. An NBC spokesperson confirmed this, stating, "The decision was purely creatively driven. It is very common to change storylines, characters, actors after the initial pilot is shot." Also, the sister character will not be deaf, as reportedly an NBC executive requested that the character's hearing be restored. Lucy Hale was later cast as Whitman's replacement in July 2007. In announcing the recasting, it was confirmed that the deaf trait of the character had been dropped.

Katee Sackhoff also stars in the pilot. It has been reported that she might star on the show in a recurring capacity, alongside her role on Battlestar Galactica, which, like Bionic Woman, is filmed in the Vancouver, British Columbia area. Sackhoff plays a villain named Sarah Corvus, the "original bionic woman". Sackhoff has compared the role to Number Six. Isaiah Washington has also been confirmed to appear in at least five episodes of the series.

Sackhoff is joined by fellow Galactica co-stars Aaron Douglas as a prison guard and Mark Sheppard as Will Anthros' father Anthony Anthros.

The website for the UK newspaper Daily Mail published photographs from the pilot film that reveal that in addition to a bionic ear, Sommers will receive a bionic eye like that of Steve Austin, along with her bionic legs and bionic right arm. Clips from the pilot episode posted on the show's official preview webpage also reveal that she will have a bionic ear and be injected with nanomachines called "anthrocytes" that heal her body at an alarming rate.

Johnson has confirmed on his website that he is not involved with the new Bionic Woman series. It still remains to be seen if either Johnson or the now-deceased Caidin will be credited on the new version of Bionic Woman, or if any references to The Six Million Dollar Man will be made. Since the rights to The Six Million Dollar Man and Cyborg are held by other parties, the characters of Oscar Goldman and Dr. Rudy Wells from the original franchise have been replaced by new creations and it has yet to be seen whether they or the character of Steve Austin will appear in the new series. The new version of Sommers is outfitted with a bionic eye; this is a piece of hardware established by Caidin in his original novel as being given to Austin and used in the subsequent TV series (the original Jaime Sommers did not possess one); thus far, this is the only overt reference to Caidin's original concepts in evidence.

Main characters

Jaime Sommers (Michelle Ryan) is a bartender who is involved in a near fatal car accident and becomes the Bionic woman.

Jonas Bledsoe (Miguel Ferrer) is the apparent director of the Bionics program.

Dr. Will Anthros (Chris Bowers) is Jaime's boyfriend and a Bionic scientist.

Ruth Treadwell (Molly Price) is one of the Bionic team members.

Jae Kim (Will Yun Lee) is one of the Bionic team members and was formerly romantically involved with Sarah Corvus.

Becca Sommers (Lucy Hale) is Jaime's sister. Mae Whitman was originally cast in the role for the pilot but was subsequently replaced after series production was announced. The character was originally depicted as hearing-impaired, and resentful of her sister. On announcing the recasting, series producers described the revised version of the character as no longer hearing-impaired but instead is a "budding hacker" who may "open a channel" to restoring the relationship between Jaime and her parents.

Anthony Anthros (Mark Sheppard) is the father of Will Anthros and one of the original developers of the bionic implants. He escapes prison at the end of the first episode.

Recurring characters

Sarah Corvus (Katee Sackhoff) is the "first Bionic woman" and a nemesis of Jaime. The existence of a bionic person prior to the current one in the series is similar to the "Seven Million Dollar Man" from The Six Million Dollar Man.

Antonio Pope (Isaiah Washington) is an advisor in the Bionics program described as an "outsider with a mysterious agenda" with the power to either help Jaime or bring her down.

Bruce McGill will play a heretofore unnamed character who is a high ranking operative in the Bionics program.

Pre-air release

On July 28, 2007, an older cut of the series pilot, still featuring Mae Whitman's character, was shown at the San Diego Comic Con, where producer David Eick confirmed the recasting of Becca's character. Other panelists included actors Michelle Ryan, Katee Sackhoff, and Mark Sheppard.

Shortly after the convention, the footage was openly distributed on bit torrent sites. This was one of several pre-air series episodes released, others including The CW's Reaper, Fox's The Sarah Connor Chronicles, and ABC's Pushing Daisies. Each of these series had a presence at the Comic Con, where they screened their respective pilots, leading to speculation that they were leaked from the convention.

On September 11, 2007, the series premiere was made available as a no-cost download on Amazon.com's Unbox service as well on the video on demand platforms of several national cable operators also at no-cost.

Episodes and broadcast history

The hour-long series began airing on Wednesday evenings at 9pm (Eastern Time) on NBC, beginning September 26, 2007. It will also begin airing on Global Television Network in Canada in the fall. Channel Seven in Australia had confirmed they will "fast track" the series so it premieres shortly after the US premiere, and it had shown the pilot episode on 4 October 2007.

BIONIC WOMAN, THE

Jaime had been Steve Austin's high school girlfriend. On a trip back home, Steve was reunited with Jaime and they rekindled their romance and became engaged to get married. Tragedy struck when Jaime was critically injured in a sky diving accident. Fortunately for her, the same bionic technology which saved Steve after his accident was around to save her Like Steve. Jaime was given a bionic right arm and two bionic legs, these gave her great strength and allowed her to run at speeds of up to 60 MPH. She was also given a bionic ear which allowed her to eavesdrop over great distances and proved useful in such operations as safe cracking.

As it turned out Jaime was in a deep coma and had only appeared to die. She was placed into suspended animation until such a time that the problem with her bionics could be solved. Steve was allowed to think that she was dead since there was no guarantee that Jaime would ever recover and no one wanted to give him false hope. When Steve learned that Jaime was still alive he also learned that her recovery was not 100% successful. She was left with no memory of her recent past, specifically the rekindling of her romance with Steve. This allowed neither of them to be tied down to a relationship!

Jaime returned in her own series The Bionic Woman in January of 1976. In it she had moved back to her, and Steve's home town of Ojai, California. She moved into an apartment over the barn on the farm owned by Steve's stepfather and mother Jim and Helen Elgin. Jaime was close to the Elgins, since they had raised her after both of her parents had been killed. She took a job as a junior high school teacher on the Air Force base. Jaime was unable to return to her previous job as a top tennis professional, since her bionic abilities would give her an unfair advantage. Like Steve. Jaime also went on missions for the OSI under the supervision of Oscar Goldman. Most of Jaime's missions involved undercover work. During the course of the series she disguised herself as a nun, a stewardess, a lady wrestler and a beauty pageant contestant. Other characters who appeared on both The Six Million Dollar Man and The Bionic woman were: Dr. Rudy Welles, the scientist who had invented the bionics and repaired them when they malfunctioned.

Lindsay Wagner also turned up in THE SIX MILLION DOLLAR MAN playing Jamie Sommers and equally Lee Major who played Steve Austin in THE SIX MILLION DOLLAR MAN also starred in The Bionic Woman. Oscar Goldman was Jaime Sommers' manager at OSI. When the series moved to NBC, Jaime acquired a bionic dog, the German Shepard "Max." Again and again, in the final season, the enemy was not the usual spy, kidnapper, or drug-lord, but extraterrestrial beings from one part of the cosmos or another.

The writers became confused about what sub-genre of science fiction they were supposed to be writing. The executive producer was Harve Bennett (TIME TRAX), the producer was Kenneth Johnson (V). Music supervision was by Hall Mooney. The various writers involved in the show were Kenneth Johnson, Arthur Roe, James D. Parriott, Steven E. De Souza and Debra Blum. Directors for BW were Alan J. Levi, Tom Blank, Alan Crosland, Ken Gilbert and Larry Stewart. Notable guest stars included Lee Major, who played Steve Austin in the SIX MILLION DOLLAR MAN guest starred in BW on a regular basis, Ted Cassidy (STAR TREK), in 'The Return of Bigfoot Part 2', Vincent Price 'Black Magic', Rene Auberjonois (STAR TREK : DEEP SPACE NINE) in 'The Dejon Caper' and Evil Kenivel as Himself in 'Motorcycle Boogie'.

There was a large variety of stories such as 'Angel of Mercy' Jamie goes to South America to rescue an ambassador, 'The Deadly Missiles' in which with the help of Steve Austin, Jamie has to avert a major missile attack on Los Angeles. More SF plots were 'The Vega Influence' in which a living meteorite arrives on Earth. 'The Pyramid' in which Jamie is trapped underground, with an alien who is sure that the Earth is going to be destroyed. 'Sanctuary Earth' in which Jamie discovers a 14 year old girl inside a satellite which has mysteriously come back to Earth. 'Fembots in Las Vegas' involved a group of killer female robots, who want a energy ray weapon.

'On The Run' was the final episode of the series, which paid homage to THE PRISONER, in that Jamie is sent to a special camp for ex-agents after she decided to leave the OSI. There was four member to the bionic family, Steve Austin (Bionic Man), Jamie Sommers (Bionic Woman), Bionic Boy and Max the bionic dog. BW was a massive success in the UK, even topping the ratings when it first began, all three seasons of the show were shown on ITV. A two part episode of THE SIX MILLION DOLLAR MAN, introduced the character of Jamie, the only problem that in a previous episode she had died at the end, because of rejection of her bionic parts. This was explained, but having Jamie body frozen until they could find a cure for the Bionic problem. The idea for this actually came from Martin Caidin (who wrote Cyborg (1972) from which THE SIX MILLION DOLLAR MAN was based). This was the only time he was ever involved in the production of the show.

The acting in BW was superior to SIX MILLION DOLLAR MAN, mostly because of Lindsay Wagner, who gave the character of Jaime Sommers a great deal of depth. At the end of the second season ABC cancelled the show, but carried on with THE SIX MILLION DOLLAR MAN, For the third season NBC made the show, and after that season the series was cancelled. Also at that point no more cross over episodes were made, because THE SIX MILLION DOLLAR MAN and BW were made by different networks in the US. Three Bionic television movies were made both featuring THE SIX MILLION DOLLAR MAN and BW. They were The Return of the Six Million Dollar Man and the Bionic Woman (1987), Bionic Showdown : The Six Million Dollar Man and the Bionic Woman (1989), and Bionic Ever After? (1994).

Jaime Sommers. the Bionic Woman, first appeared on a two part episode of The Six Million Dollar Man entitled The Bionic Woman in March of 1975. The two-part episode of The Six Million Dollar Man which introduced Jaime was one of the series' highest rated. This meant that Jaime had to reappear on the show. There was only one problem, in the episode which introduced Jaime she died, due to a rejection of the bionic parts by her body. Jaime returned in the 1975 season opener of The Six Million Dollar Man. When a means to bring back was needed. Martin Caidin (who wrote the novel Cyborg, on which both series were based) was called in to come up with a solution. It was the only time his advice was requested.

Executive producer for the series was Harve Bennett (TIME TRAX), producer was Ken Johnson (V), the music supervisor was Hal Mooney. The series received its UK premiere on the 1st July 1976, in the ITV regions.

When it looked like The Six Million Dollar Man was headed for the scrap heap in early 1975, bionic man Steve Austin (Lee Majors) was given a mate to attract more viewers. As Steve's doomed high school sweetheart, Jaime accepted Steve's proposal of marriage. The storyline was born when Universal executive Frank Price wanted to grab older viewers for The Six Million Dollar Man. Kenneth Johnson came up with the character, naming Jaime Sommers "after a water-skier I had once met." However, Jaime Sommers lasted for only one story. Her body rejected her bionic limbs, and she died. That was supposed to be the end of the bionic woman.

"When she died, Universal was inundated with a tidal wave of telegrams and phone calls," recalls novelist Martin Caidin. "People were bitching, 'You can't kill her off.' Picketers outside the studio were raising all kinds of hell." ABC-TV received 200,000 letters, and a psychologist warned the producers that children had been deeply shaken by Jaime's death. It was clear to Universal and ABC that the bionic woman had to be brought back from the dead.

"My phone rang at 2 a.m.," recalls Caidin. "[The producers] said, 'We're starting production in a few hours on 'The Return of the Bionic Woman.' " We have 12 people listening to you on loudspeakers and this call is being taped. How do we bring her back to life? We need an absolutely justifiable, acceptable, scientific-medical method.' I suggested cryogenics-putting her on ice. That's what they did. I had been the technical consultant on Six Million Dollar Man for two years and they never called me. But this one phone call was worth it to them. The Bionic Woman turned out to be a fine series. Lindsay Wagner was fabulous." The Six Million Dollar Man opened its third season with "The Return of the Bionic Woman." Still mourning Jaime's death, Steve Austin begins to doubt his sanity when he sees visions of her. It turns out that what he's seeing is real. Jaime Sommers has been revived from suspended animation, and new drugs have eliminated her bionic rejection. Her recovery results in partial amnesia, and she no longer knows or loves Steve Austin. The return of Jaime was a ratings smash, and ABC decided to give Jaime Sommers her own show. However, actress Lindsay Wagner, who had only guest-starred on The Six Million Dollar Man because it was her fourteen-year-old sister's favorite show, wasn't thrilled to be tied to a series.

"Lindsay had a movie career going when she did her first guest appearance on The Six Million Dollar Man," recalls writer James Parriott. "She played the love interest in the film The Paper Chase (1973) and got fabulous reviews. She felt she was on her way to a movie career." As a Universal contract player, her contract was dropped in 1975. Ironically, her option expired during filming of her first Six Million Dollar Man appearance. Executive producer Harve Bennett had to get her contract extended on a day-to-day basis to finish the shoot.

"Then the ratings for her appearance went through the roof," says Parriott. "ABC wanted to bring her back. But Lindsay's contract at Universal had lapsed by that time." Sally Field and Stephanie Powers were seriously considered as replacements, but ABC was adamant that it had to be Lindsay Wagner. This allowed Wagner, a relative newcomer to acting, to dictate terms to one of the most powerful studios in Hollywood.

"ABC and Universal kept throwing more and more money at Lindsay, trying to get her to come back," says Parriott. "At one point, Wagner's agent said, 'You've got to take it.'" Wagner, who had begun as a $162-a-week contract player, ended up being paid a substantial sum for her second appearance on The Six Million Dollar Man and even more for her resulting series. "But I think she regretted it," says Parriott. "She had to give up a movie career. Subsequently, her attitude was not stellar that first year and a half. She liked us, and was a hard worker and did a good job, but she had an underlying resentment about having to do The Bionic Woman."

"Lindsay reminded me of a young Judy Garland," says producer Harve Bennett. "She had that image of everybody's girl next door. She was also extremely bright, competitive and physical. She has a naturalness about her acting. She could also carry the action quotient believably. Another woman might have looked silly doing those stunts."

Writer Lionel Siegel agrees: "The series benefitted from Lindsay's warmth, charm, intelligence and sincerity." When The Bionic Woman began in January 1976, Wagner was the highest paid dramatic actress on television. However, Lee Majors was upset with having a Bionic Woman series spun off from his show. The actor felt Wagner's series could diminish the interest in his own series. "Lee's concern was eventually tempered by the fact that Majors was given-or more likely, he forced Universal to give him-a [financial] piece of Wagner's series," says producer Lionel Siegel.

The Bionic Woman was softer than her high-tech counterpart. Jaime taught at an Air Force base near her hometown of Ojai, California. Since her parents had been killed years ago in a car crash, she stayed with Steve Austin's parents (played by Martha Scott and Ford Rainey). Jaime's school scenes provided a comedy lilt as she occasionally disciplined her unruly class. "I believe in the gentle approach," she says as she tears a phone book in half with her bionic hands in the first episode. However, Jaime's main thrust was as a reluctant agent for the O. S. I. (Office of Strategic Intelligence), headed by her sympathetic boss, Oscar Goldman.

"We picked up tremendous things with Lindsay that we didn't have with Lee Majors," says Harve Bennett. "Lee's character was quiet and reserved. But here we had a bionic person-a woman-who could cry and tell us how she feels. So we were able to develop much more feelings in the show. In fact, Lindsay even sang the song 'Feelings' in one episode. She played an undercover nightclub singer, and Lindsay sang beautifully. Those were the things we could do with Lindsay that we were not able to do on The Six Million Dollar Man."

"The Bionic Woman had greater depth because of Lindsay," agrees unit production manager and producer Ralph Sarchie. "She was a fine actress and a sensitive, lovely person. She wanted more of a dramatic show than action-adventure. On Six Million Dollar Man, Lee Majors didn't care. He just grunted, moved his eyebrow and took the money. Lindsay fought for better stories and character relationships. The producers were reluctant to do that. They were more interested in a formula show, which did seem to work better in the ratings."

"Lindsay worked hard and had a great sense of humor," recalls director Larry Stewart, "but she didn't enjoy being a 9,000-pound gorilla. She wanted to play it more feminine. In one show I directed, she had to chase the bad guys into a mine shaft and throw gold carts at them. Lindsay hated that kind of stuff. There was another episode where she had to chase bad guys at a rodeo. Lindsay got pissed off with the story and walked out. The producer, Arthur Rowe, said to me, 'Boy, she really hates this script.' I said, 'Let me kick it around,' because I'm also a writer. I rewrote it as a love story set in a rodeo."

Writer Philip DeGuere recalls that the series was caught between being a superhero show and a drama. "Talk about network interference," he says. "Freddie Silverman [head of ABC programming] used to call Universal five days a week with directives on how we were supposed to do the show. Problem was, he would flip-flop between two major directives. He wanted to make Jaime into a superhero like Wonder Woman or Superwoman. His other directive was exactly the opposite: to hide her super powers and play it more natural. So I would meet with writers and tell them, 'OK, we want this to be an action adventure show and Jaime's a superhero!' The writers would come up with a bunch of storylines. At the end of the day, Silverman had decided to go the other way.

So I put away all of the superhero storylines and told the writers, 'OK, she's not a superhero anymore. We've got to do everyday stories.' So we came up with everyday-type stories. The next day, Silverman decided that he wanted her to be a superhero again. I developed a severe case of schizophrenia." DeGuere, who left the series during its first year, says, "We finally decided that the non-superhero approach was the way to go. That's how the series eventually worked. She was ladylike and operated her bionics discreetly. The conventional wisdom at the time was that an audience wouldn't buy a real strong, aggressive female character. Lindsay did very well in the role.

She was fun, and I liked her as a person." "We tended to do stories that got more into issues and character studies," says creator Kenneth Johnson. "That made the show more unique. We also had more comedy than The Six Million Dollar Man. Lindsay has a wonderful sense of humor, and I used that. That's part of the reason The Bionic Woman took off. It wasn't just an action show. I spent a lot of time with Lindsay, developing scripts that would play into her strong suits. She was very glib and natural. After a script would be written, I'd sit in her trailer during lunch and we'd read the script out loud. She read Jaime and I read the other parts. She could embrace the dialog and make it play very comfortably."

"Lindsay was a terrific person and actress," says James Parriott. "She was best when she had a good character conflict. I liked putting her in more emotional situations, but the network still wanted an action show. In most episodes, it was the guest stars who were in conflict. Jaime was there to console and rescue them. In the best shows, it was Jaime who had the emotional and moral dilemmas." Parriott's script, "Mirror Image," won Lindsay Wagner an Emmy as best actress. In the segment, Jaime is kidnapped and replaced with an evil southern belle who, through plastic surgery, is made to look like Jaime.

"That was, for me, my most rewarding work for the series," he says. However, Parriott admits that the actress never thanked him for the teleplay. "Everyone was deeply offended," he says, not just for me but because she didn't thank anyone from the show. Everybody was going, 'Huh?' But again, Lindsay wasn't thrilled to be doing The Bionic Woman. That was the state of her mind at the time. Even later, when she did the two bionic film reunions (in 1987 and 1989), she did them mainly as a favor to Richard Anderson, who was the producer.'

Larry Stewart has a warmer memory of Wagner's Emmy win. "At the time, I was president of the Academy of Arts and Sciences. Lindsay won the Emmy as best actress in 1976. My job as Academy president was to be backstage as the winners came off the stage. I'd take their Emmy to have it engraved for them. Lindsay and I hadn't met before, and she didn't know that the next day I was scheduled to direct a Bionic Woman. So when she came off the stage with her Emmy, I congratulated her and took the Emmy, promising it would be back to her in a few days. She said okay and started walking away. I yelled, 'oh, and I'll see you tomorrow at five a.m.!' She turned around with a bewildered look of, 'What does that mean?' So the next morning, as she came out of her dressing room, the producer introduced us. 'Lindsay, meet your director.' She looked at me and said, 'Oh my God.

It's you. 'We got a good laugh out of that. Two days later, we were filming on the lawn of a local college in front of all of these college students. Lindsay's doing a scene where she's picking up some books. I had her engraved Emmy, and with the cameras rolling, I snuck up to her and said, 'Lindsay?' She turned around. I said, 'I thought I'd give this to you in person.' I handed her the Emmy in front of 1500 students. It was captured on film. She was extremely pleased. It was a very satisfying moment."

Important to Kenneth Johnson was keeping The Bionic Woman believable. "We had bionic rules that we lived by. Writers would come in and say, 'I've got an idea where Lindsay picks up a truck.' I said, 'No. Lindsay can't pick up a truck.' The writer would look at me puzzled and say, 'What do you mean? She's bionic!' I'd say, 'But she can't pick up a truck. She can turn over a car, but trucks are too heavy for her. She can jump up to the second floor of a building but not to the third floor.' You had to keep the credibility. Otherwise, the audience will throw up their hands and say, 'This is stupid.' That's happened to too many science fiction series. Once you decide on your rules, you've got to play by them. After I left Bionic Woman [in late 1977], the rules got lax. The show kind of went off the deep end. It got too far out to understand or care about."

Time and budget were constant challenges for Johnson during his Bionic Woman tenure. "When I worked on the Mike Douglas talk show back East, we did it on a dollar-and-a-quarter budget," he says. "So when I started producing Six Million Dollar Man, with a $500,000-per-episode budget, I said, 'Wow!'" But Johnson found the money didn't last long in the high-cost world of TV. "In many ways, doing the bionic shows was like doing the old movie serials. We had very little time. Six Million Dollar Man was shot in six days. After working with all of the special effects and stunts, the crew would be beat. When we did The Bionic Woman, it was the first Universal series to get seven days per episode.

There was a lot of to-do from the Six Million Dollar Man guys about that: 'Hey, how come The Bionic Woman gets seven days?' I said, 'Because Lindsay's makeup takes longer than Lee's, for starters.'" Johnson's fiscal ingenuity kept The Bionic Woman under budget. "We did an episode with Max, the bionic dog (who wasn't my favorite premise, but the network loved him). The story had Jaime and Max trapped in a forest fire. So I went to the stock footage library and raided an old Irwin Allen movie called Fire. It was about a town caught in the middle of a horrific fire.

There was a great sequence of a train moving through the fire. I said, 'This is great. We'll write our story so that Jaime travels on a train.' But the only train Universal had was the one on the Universal Tour. It only had about 30 feet of track. So we put Lindsay on the train, and shot 12 different angles of this train going its 30 feet. At one point, we had the train stand still and we gave it the illusion of movement by having a half-dozen extras run beside it, holding up burning trees. With the smoke blowing past the train, it made it look like it was really moving past a burning forest."

Then there was the time Johnson faked an audience for the Miss America pageant in the episode "The Bionic Beauty." "I thought, 'How am I going to show a beauty pageant on a TV budget?' You can't do a Miss America story without Jaime walking out on stage in front of a thousand people. So we hired 100 extras, put them at the front and made the rest of the theater dark. My propman, Rick DuNarry, had his special effects guys rig up 30 flashbulbs all over the theater. When Lindsay came out on stage, the flashbulbs went off, the spotlights were flashing, and we had our crowd of 100 people. It was an illusion that worked."

As a substitute for an expensive set, Johnson once used a location inspired by a newspaper. "In "Doomsday Is Tomorrow" we needed to show Jaime running through a giant complex. My eye caught a photo in the L.A. Times of a great-looking tunnel that was 12 feet in diameter. It turned out to be a power station under construction outside of L.A. That gave me the idea to scout the area for other locations that nobody had used. I found some remarkable and offbeat places owned by the Department of Water and Power. In the finished episode, it looks like Jaime has traveled through this huge underground complex when actually, it was the unconstructed power station. There's also a scene where this computer tries to suffocate Jaime by filling up a tunnel with foam. We got a big foam machine that the fire department used, and it was great. We sort of pieced together the episode with nickels and dimes, but the overall look of the episode-especially when we added Joe Harnell's music-was terrific."

Ever loyal to his crews, Johnson adds, "Joe Harnell had worked with me on The Mike Douglas Show as musical director. I brought him out here, and I kept saying to Harve Bennett, 'We gotta use Joe-he's really good!' Harve kept putting me off. Finally, I used Joe on the Miss America episode ["The Bionic Beauty"]. Harve said, 'Geez, why haven't we used Joe before. He's great!' I punched Harve in the arm and said, 'You bozo!' Harve and I had a good relationship. I look at him as a mentor who really helped me get cooking in this town." When Johnson left The Bionic Woman to produce the Incredible Hulk pilot, he used many of the Bionic Woman crew. "I still work with many of the same people today," he explains. "Fortunately, they like working with me, mostly because I believe in listening to other people. So many people in this town are megalomaniacal. I don't work that way. If a grip or a makeup man has a good idea, I'll listen.

You never know when they'll have a good idea. If you give them credit for that idea, you've made a friend for life." The most famous special effect involved Jaime Sommers making her bionic leaps. "The stunt woman would jump backwards off ledges and land on an airbag," Johnson says. "Then we'd reverse the film so it looked like Jaime was leaping up on the ledge." As Ralph Sariego notes, this process required some practical costuming decisions: "We tried to keep Lindsay and her stuntgirl in pants. When they wore skirts, we had a problem keeping their skirts from jumping up during bionic leaps"-which would not only expose too much skin for a family show, but also look mighty silly when the film was shown in reverse. However, there were more serious considerations, as Kenneth Johnson states flatly: "It was dangerous. It's not easy to jump backward, blind and straight. Rita Eggleston was Lindsay's double, and Vince Deadrick, Sr., doubled for Lee Majors. They got incredibly adept at making these things look real.

"We had one script that called for Lindsay Wagner to jump up to a second-floor of a balcony. Normally, Rita would stand on the balcony railing and jump backward. This time she said to me, 'I've got an idea. Watch this.' She stood up on the balcony railing and jumped forward, onto the balcony, which didn't make any sense to me. Then I realized that she had put a mini-trampoline on the balcony. When she landed on the balcony's mini-trampoline, that propelled her backward, over the railing and into the airbag on the ground. When you reverse that film, you got a woman flying up toward the building and gliding right over the railing and into the balcony. We cut the film just before Rita hit the mini trampoline. So it was a very subtle but smooth effect. Rita was constantly developing ways to enhance the jumps and make them better. She worked her ass off for The Bionic Woman. She was also a dead ringer of Lindsay from ten feet away. People couldn't tell them apart. Rita also did most of the running for Lindsay. Lindsay, bless her heart, can walk, act and chew gum, but when it comes to being physical, no! We really had to labor to make her look like a tennis pro on the show. She wasn't a sportswoman, but she was always game and was the first one to say, 'Let me try that!' So she'd try it. We'd say, 'Ok, Rita, come on in!'" Even so, says writer Lionel Siegel, "the physical feats Lindsay had to do were taxing. Physically, it was a tough show to do."

When The Bionic Woman finished its second year in 1977, ABC made a stunning announcement: They were cancelling the show, despite its number 14 finish in the ratings. Universal pitched the series to NBC, who purchased the show for 1977-78. "We were pulling a 30 share when ABC canceled us," says James Parriott. "ABC felt that Bionic Woman was slipping, and their researcher told them, 'Drop the show while it's still hot and get something else in there because Bionic Woman is gonna fail next season.' They may have been right, because we went over to NBC and only lasted a season."

"It got a reprieve by moving to NBC," continues Harve Bennett. "But in moving to NBC, we lost the crossover appearances of Steve Austin on Bionic Woman and Jaime on Six Million Dollar Man. We could only do this while both shows were on ABC. So we couldn't perk up the shows that way. We also lost the potential that Steve and Jaime might restart their love affair."

The show's move to NBC gave Ralph Sarchie the chance to produce an episode. "Universal promised Fred Silverman [now head of NBC programming] a show where Jaime would fight sharks. After a few episodes, Silverman called them and said, 'Where's my shark story?' So I was allowed to produce the shark show. I spent two months reading books on sharks and looking at shark footage from all over the world. I'd always been a sun-and-surf guy, but to this day, based on what I saw in those films, I'm afraid to go into the water. We shot the episode off the coast of California. We used real sharks—a 12-foot and 9-foot nurse shark—and had a double for Lindsay. Every morning we put ropes on the tail of the sharks and filmed their run-bys. On the last day of filming, the sharks were so tired that we took the ropes off them. It was a great adventure for one episode."

When it looked clear that The Bionic Woman wouldn't be picked up for a fourth year, Lindsay Wagner asked writer Steven de Souza to write a finale. "She told me over lunch, 'I feel Jaime Sommers has never been comfortable as a tool of the government. She's basically a peace-loving person, and she's only doing it because she's grateful the O.S.I. saved her life. What would happen if they called her one evening and told her she had to be airborne to Russia that night ... and she doesn't want to do it anymore?' So I wrote a story that really brought that to the fore."

De Souza found the script proved a perfect mirror for Wagner's real-life situation: "Lindsay, who was tired of doing a network show, played Jaime Sommers, who was tired of being a spy. Jaime quits her job, and suddenly she's confronted by a government man who she's never seen before. He tells her she can't quit. She tries to run, and these people, who are like the evil C.I.A., are chasing her. It was a great opportunity to turn the series upside down. In the end, because Bionic Woman was going into syndication, we had to put a little coda where she says, 'OK, one more mission.' Even though these government guys framed her for a murder, tried to shoot hypodermics into her, tried to kidnap her, drugged her dog, and fired Oscar Goldman from the O.S.I., she says, 'Okay, I'll keep working for the government.' On that level it was phoney. In general, though, the episode was a great switch."

Had the series continued, there were plans to capitalize on the popularity of the film Close Encounters of the Third Kind, and reunite all of the alien characters who had appeared on The Bionic Woman for an intergalactic get-together. When the series ended, Harve Bennett was philosophical. "The series had gotten more expensive every year because it took longer to shoot," he says. "For that reason, Universal was less anxious to continue it than The Six Million Dollar Man. But I'd say we squeezed out as many years as we could from what the industry calls 'high concept' shows." Director Larry Stewart sums up the feelings of many of the Bionic Woman team by saying, "It was a fine series. It was action-adventure-myth, and it humanized its premise to a great degree. It worked out well. Nobody has anything to be ashamed of with that show."

BIRDS OF PREY

"Batman's Little Girl Is All Grown Up."

Plot #1

Legend tells of a caped crusader, Batman, guardian of New Gotham, and his one true love, Catwoman, the queen of the criminal underworld. Their passion left behind something extraordinary, a daughter, Huntress. Half metahuman, she has taken up her father's mantle and under cover of the night, fights to protect the innocent and helpless. Joining her in this struggle, Oracle, who was once Batman's protege, Batgirl. She was caught in the crossfire of the war between Batman and Joker, now she fights crime a different way, a master of the cyber-realms and mentor and trainer to heroes. Together, they have taken in a young runaway, Dinah, a metahuman herself with powers to open hidden doors to the mind, powers that she is only beginning to explore. Together, these three are the protectors of New Gotham - the Birds of Prey.

Plot # 2

Murder Mystery in New Gotham's Undercover Superhero Batman who disappeared and left him a daughter to his spouse Catwoman. Her name is Helena as herself the mysterious superhero as "The Huntress" who teamed up with the paralyzed hero as herself "Batgirl" and meeting their next teammate Dinah Lance who had a terrifying dream about their brutal accidents, and in reality she looks at them in a mysterious way and learns how to practice being a team as superheroes.

First there was the cool cartoon series Batman Beyond. Now there is Birds of Prey, it's seven years in the future. Barbara Gordon/Batgirl(the lovely Dina Meyer) is now in a wheel chair, after being shot by the joker. But still fights crime has The Oracle, and also has help from Helena Kyle(Ashley Scott) who's the daughter of Batman And Catwoman. And also the help from Dinah Laurel Lance(Rachel Skarsten) who has ESP abilities. I liked the first episode. I hope this will be on the air for at least five seasons. It has great action, and great special effects. Ashley Scott is great, she is like part Catwoman,part Trinity from The Matrix. Dina Meyer is also great. If you are a Batman fan , then you'll this show.

So how is it? Very, very cool. I predict this to be a show along with Buffy the Vampire Slayer,Angel, Enterprise, and Alias to be analyzed by geeks on a weekly basis. First I need to let you know that I saw the unaired first version of the pilot with Sherilyn Fenn in the role of Harleen Quinzel, a.k.a. Harley Quinn, the Joker's right hand woman. Originally Harleen was going to be an occasional character, but when they expanded the character's role, Fenn was no longer available. Harleen was recast and will now be played by Mia Sara. I heard about a couple of plotline changes too, but I will get into that in my additional paragraph section after the show airs.

Birds of Prey is a dark superhero story about a trio of crime-fighting women in the city of New Gotham. Barbara Gordon (Dina Meyer), a.k.a. Batgirl, daughter of Commissioner James Gordon, hears about the murder of Selina Kyle, a.k.a. Catwoman, by one of the Joker's henchmen. Selina is survived only by her daughter, Helena (Ashley Scott), who is the love child of Selina and Bruce Wayne (Bruce Thomas, Batman out of the suit), a.k.a. Batman (Alex Daniels, Batman in the suit.) Suddenly, Barbara hears a knock at the door. She answers the door and finds the Joker (Roger Stoneburner; voiced by Mark Hamill) himself on the other side. The Joker points a gun at Barbara, shoots her, laughs evilly, and leaves. Somewhere in another town, a little blond girl named Dinah Lance wakes up from a nightmare in which she has seen the events described above. Seven years later, a teenage Dinah (Rachel Skarsten) gets on a bus to New Gotham to track down the two women from her dream. By this time those two women have formed a crime-fighting team. After Selina's death, Barbara, who is now going by the name Oracle, takes in her daughter Helena, who now goes by Huntress. Barbara is now wheelchair-bound (due to the shot taken by the Joker), so now she depends heavily on Helena to do the physical crime-fighting while she does the scientific stuff. One night, Helena rescues a teenage girl from being attacked. That girl turns out to be Dinah, who follows Helena back to the secret lair. Through her psychic powers, she realizes that Barbara and Helena are the two women from her dream. She wants to join them in fighting crime, but Helena doesn't want to risk taking her in. It is not until Dinah saves Helena from a madman trying to force her to kill herself that she accepts the girl. With the help of New Gotham Police Detective Jake Reese (Shemar Moore), the women fight against the forces of evil.

All three women are dealing with their pasts. Barbara is dealing with having been paralyzed from the waist down. Helena is still mourning the death of her mother and the abandonment of her father, with whom she discusses in court-appointed therapy sessions with Dr. Harleen Quinzel, a.k.a. Harley Quinn (Sherilyn Fenn here, Mia Sara in the aired pilot.) Dinah is trying to understand how she acquired her psychic powers and how she can use those powers to fight for good. She might also be related to the legendary superhero Black Canary.

Yet another great show that mixes the right amount of action and comedy. The special effects are pretty decent and the sets are appropriately gothic-looking (one of the changes I heard they made was that they made the sets lighter. I hope this isn't true.) The more research I do on the comic book heroes these characters are based on, the more I discover that the show is taking many creative licenses. Since Brian Robbins and Michael Tollin, the same guys who created another hit WB superhero show, Smallville, created this show, I'm not too worried. Smallville took many creative licenses, and it is one of the best TV shows on the air today. I'm thinking that non-comic book geeks will like the series better than comic book geeks, kind of like the way they reacted to the movie Spider-Man. Check out Birds of Prey for yourself when it premieres on the WB on October 9th.

The biggest difference between the aired pilot and the one reviewed above is, of course, the replacement of Sherilyn Fenn with Mia Sara as Dr. Harleen Quinzel. I was afraid I would see Sloane Peterson from Ferris Bueller's Day Off trying to be a bad guy. Fenn is a natural at being the villain, having played one several times, but Sara has always been Ferris's girlfriend to me. In the new Birds of Prey pilot, she has cut her hair and made it blonde, and it works for her (at least in terms of looking evil.) She has a twisted look in her eye that I actually think matches the mischievous Harley Quinn better than Fenn's look. I liked her.

What I didn't like was the opening. I know the opening was changed to better explain the back story, but instead of the dark ominous tone of the original opening, it is kind of a wrap-up of events narrated by Batman's butler Alfred Pennyworth (Ian Abercrombie.) The news reports are gone and now it is just Alfred explaining everything. I think it actually ends up being more confusing that way. You're not sure whether or not the man who kills Selina Kyle is the Joker or one of his henchmen, and you don't know that Barbara's paralysis by the Joker happens on the same night.

The character of Wade (Shawn Christian) might be an interesting conflict for Barbara in future episodes. In the original pilot, Barbara and Wade were essentially breaking up, mainly because Barbara didn't want Wade to find out about her double life. In the new pilot, they are starting their relationship, though she is keeping him at bay.

Overall, I liked the show, and other than the opening, I liked the changes. Birds of Prey will definitely go on my rotation of shows I have to catch every week.

Trivia

Sherilyn Fenn was originally chosen to play the part of Harley Quinn.

The map of New Gotham is identical to one used in the Batman comic book cycle "No Man's Land", which is also the name of the metahuman bar in the show.

In the Lady Shive episode, there's a pair of street signs on a corner that read "Adams" and "O'Neill", referencing the highly revered writer/artist team that made many Batman stories in the '70s.

The character of Dinah was originally intended to be a revision of the comic book character Black Canary. Outcry from comic book fans contributed to the character being retooled to become the Canary's daughter instead (with the Black Canary herself making an appearance in one episode). Helena is a bartender at the Dark Horse Bar. Dark Horse is the name of a popular comic book company that on occasion collaborated with DC Comics on special Batman publications.

The series was cancelled in January 2003, with 11 episodes aired. The producers were, however, allowed to film the final two episodes of their 13-episode commitment, and these episodes aired in February 2003, with the final episode retooled in order to close off the various storylines in the series, an unusual privilege for a cancelled series.

Brandy Ledford was considered for the part of Barbara Gordon/ Batgirl/ Oracle.

The pilot features a reference to fellow WB series "Smallville" (2001): Helena Kyle mentions to Barbara Gordon and Dinah that meteors sometimes cause mutations. Inside reference: "Birds of Prey" and "Smallville" are both produced by Tollin/Robbins Productions.

Helena Kyle is a combination of the comics' Silver Age (Helena Wayne) and Modern (Helena Bertinelli) Huntresses. She possesses Helena Wayne's genealogy and Helena Bertinelli's personality.

Based on the DC comic book series. The comic first started out as a one-shot special that teamed up Black Canary and Oracle. Response was so successful, a few more specials were released and finally an ongoing comic.

Miscellaneous: The clock face on the tower (where the secret lair is) is way too high up for any person to see, so it would be pointless to have a clock there.

BLACK BOX, THE

The plot involves an ape-like creature (Worthington) and a suit which renders its wearer invisible when it is charged with electricity, leaving only the hands visible.

A Feuillade-type serial in 15 episodes of about 25 minutes each, starring Sanford Quest, the super science detective (Rawlinson) who uses all kinds of gadgets, including an elaborate electric mind-reading device, to do his detecting. The serial was extremely successful and proved a turning point in the careers of both Rawlinson and Lloyd, who had appeared together previously in Won in the Clouds (1914) and now saw their careers getting a significant boost. Later that same year, Universal launched another super science detective, but used the gimmick less for suspense than for comedy, LADY BAFFLES AND DETECTIVE DUCK (1915).

BLACK HOLE HIGH

AKA: STRANGE DAYS AT BLACK HOLSEY HIGH

wormhole opens in a certain office floor and the science professor disappears into the wormhole, never to be seen again. Josie experiences an extremely interesting first day at BHH. She and Corrine both travel through the wormhole. Could this give an indication of exactly what event occurred concerning the mysterious explosion 15 years earlier at Pearadyne?

Let's see....there was Eerie Indiana (in my opinion, the best of this genre), Eerie Indiana: The Other Dimension, Round the Twist (I believe that's the name - anyone else remember that?), The Zack Files, and now Strange Days at Blake Holesy High. This is a cute show, and I think I like it next after Eerie Indiana...some elements also make me think that this show really may be more of the child of Buffy the Vampire Slayer and The X-Files. The occurrences are more X-Files in nature, but the way the friends interact, and the school being the center of weirdness is more Buffy. Definitely a fun to watch.

Strange Days at Blake Holsey High, also known as Black Hole High, is a Canadian science fiction television program which first aired in North America in October 2002 on NBC. It is set at the fictional boarding school of the title, where a Science Club (five students and their teacher) investigates mysterious phenomena, most of which is centered around a wormhole located on the school grounds. Spanning four seasons, the series developed into a success, and has been sold to networks around the globe.

Created by Jim Rapsas, the series intertwines elements of mystery, drama, romance, and comedy. The writing of the show is structured around various scientific principles, with emotional and academic struggles combined with unfolding mysteries of a preternatural nature. In addition to its consistent popularity among children, it has been recognised by adults as strong family entertainment. Forty-two episodes of the series, each roughly twenty-five minutes in length, have been produced, the last three of which premiered in January 2006. Those three final episodes that aired were combined into a film, Strange Days: Conclusions.

Emma Taylor-Isherwood as Josie Trent. Josie is the show's main protagonist, and her voice is heard over the opening credits. She transfers to Blake Holsey High at the beginning of the series, and is the one who discovered the wormhole first. She's curious and headstrong, and is the one who most wants to know what is going on. In Corrine's words, she has "the hots for Vaughn," but the relationship is a rocky one due to trust issues.

Shadia Simmons as Corrine Baxter. Josie's best friend and roommate, Corrine is the so-called "brains" (with a self-claimed IQ of 172) in the Science Club. Comparable to Hermione Granger in Harry Potter, she's the one with the school-smarts but often has problems with street-smarts. Corrine is as compulsively neat and well-behaved as Josie is messy and rebellious. Has "a thing" for Marshall.

Michael Seater as Lucas Randall. Lucas is a conspiracy theorist, convinced that aliens do exist. He comes up with unorthodox theories that often end up saving the day. He has a romantic interest in Josie, largely unrequited; and an interest in Josie's clone as of "Conclusions".

The cast of Strange Days at Blake Holsey High: Jeff Douglas, Shadia Simmons, Robert Clark, Emma Taylor-Isherwood, Valerie Boyle, Michael Seater (below left) and Noah Reid (below right). Noah Reid as Marshall Wheeler. Lucas and Marshall are best friends and roommates. Marshall is more social and funloving than Lucas, and helps to keep him down to earth in this way. Marshall performs in a band (Magnet 360) with other Blake Holsey students.

Robert Clark as Vaughn Pearson. Vaughn is the fifth student in the science club. His father is Victor Pearson, the owner and founder of Pearadyne Industries. Vaughn lives at home with his father for a time, as their house is practically next door to the school. When he does live at Blake Holsey High, he lives alone. Has a thing for Josie--they are an on again/off again couple.

Jeff Douglas as Professor Noel Zachary. Zachary, or "Z", is the presiding teacher of the Science Club. Like Josie, he is very curious to find out what is going on at Blake Holsey High. He was able to go to school to become a teacher thanks to a scholarship from Pearadyne Industries, and is the only adult that the Science Club fully trusts.

Valerie Boyle as Principal Amanda Durst. The disagreeable Principal Durst is a looming presence over the Science Club, and differs with Professor Zachary's easygoing ways. A former science teacher, she is a reluctant conspirator in Victor Pearson's plans.

Lawrence Bayne as Victor Pearson. Victor Pearson is a benefactor of the school and a constant antagonist to the Science Club's investigations. Secretive and somewhat ruthless, Victor is deeply distrusted by Josie and Lucas, which puts Victor's son Vaughn in a perpetually awkward position. Although Victor Pearson frequently serves as the villain of the show, he is eventually revealed to be "the good guy" in his long struggle to restore Pearadyne and rescue his time-lost wife. The destiny of Victor, as explained in "Conclusions," is that he was to create time travel technology in a way that will eventually benefit humanity.

Tony Munch as The Janitor. The Janitor is an enigmatic character who seems to understand the mysteries at Blake Holsey High, but reveals little. In "Conclusions" he is finally identified as an observer of other time travelers. The clone Josie states that the Janitor is from so far into the future that it is almost unimaginable.

Significant objects and locations

Qigong Ball/Chi Ball/Floating Ball: Once a normal ball used to handle stress and concentration, but became a source of unlimited potential. Josie had used these balls for concentration during Science Club, but one was taken from her by Professor Zachary. The other one was affected by the energy of the wormhole in a trip to the 1970's, which made gravity-less. It defied the laws of physics, which was why Victor (Vic) Pearson stole it from her years ago when he was in Blake Holsey High. Presenting it to Sarah Lynch, they started their plan to create Pearadyne which later caused an explosion at Pearadyne Industries, form a wormhole in Blake Holsey and strange occurrences. Victor used this ball to power their the lab, but it later caused its destruction, along with Sarah's disappearance. Josie found the ball and assumed that Vaughn and Victor had plotted to use it. She stole it from them, but was later stolen back by Josie's Clone from the future. Returned to Victor, he plans to keep it in safe keeping this time.

Wormhole: A powerful vortex that can lead to either the future or the past that can be found in the office of the Science Teacher (Zachary or Middleton). Many agents have used this to cover the knowledge of the wormhole a secret from everyone, however energy from the wormhole has released and affected the students and the school due to their emotions and conditions.

Pearadyne Industries/Labs: A laboratory created by Victor Pearson and Sarah Lynch. It was used to create inventions and master quantum physics. Pearadyne was destroyed in an explosion that covered the disappearance of many workers, especially Sarah Lynch (Vaughn's mother).

Strange Days at Blake Holsey High began airing in Canada on Global and on NBC, as well as VRAK.TV in Quebec. In the United States, meanwhile, it aired on Discovery Kids and NBC. In late March 2003, almost six months after its North American debut, the series was sold to several international markets at the annual MipTV, which was held at Cannes, France. The United Kingdom broadcasting network ITV acquired the terrestrial television right to the series, while the pay television rights were sold to Fox Kids (which became Jetix in 2005) in Europe and Latin America, who showed the series in countries including the UK, Mexico, Brazil, Venezuela, Chile, Panama and Argentina. Fox Kids Europe has a partnership deal with the Disney Channel, which enabled the show to be broadcast in Australia, New Zealand, and France. In Russia (Tomsk), the series airs on CTC. In Denmark, it airs on TV2 Denmark. It also airs in other European countries such as Norway (and other Scandinavian nations), the Netherlands, Portugal, Israel, Poland (it airs on Jetix), Turkey and Italy, as well as Colombia in South America. [1] [2] [3]

Cover art for the unreleased Season 1 DVD. Fireworks Entertainment, the company behind Strange Days at Blake Holsey High, closed down after the production of Season 3. There were three additional episodes of the series, which aired as a finale film event on January 28, 2006 on the Discovery Kids channel, as "Strange Days Conclusions". As of June 2006, no episode or season of Strange Days at Blake Holsey High has been legally released to DVD in any country. In 2004 it was announced that a DVD box set of season one was to be released in the United Kingdom on July 26, 2004, and websites such as Amazon.com put up the DVD for pre-order. The release was later pulled without explanation.[1]

Strange Days at Blake Holsey High has been nominated for several awards, but won none. Writers Jeff King, Jeff Schechter and Thérèse Beaupré were nominated for episodes broadcast in the year 2003 at the 31st Daytime Emmy Awards in 2004, in the category Outstanding Writing in a Children's Series. Emma Taylor-

Isherwood, Shadia Simmons and Robert Clark were each given Young Artist Award nominations in early 2003, although Isherwood was placed in the supporting category, Simmons was elevated to lead, and Clark was considered a "guest actor". Simmons received a second nomination the following year, alongside Talia Schlanger (Madison). The Academy of Canadian Cinema and Television nominated creative team Tony Thatcher, Adam Haight, Jeff King and Kevin May for Best Children's or Youth Fiction Program or Series at the annual Gemini Awards in late 2004, and the Directors Guild of Canada also recognised the show in areas such as sound editing, team achievement, and the product as a whole in 2003 and 2004.[4]

In 2006 Strange Days was nominated for two Emmy Awards: "Outstanding Children's Series" and "Outstanding Writing".

BLACK SCORPION

The City of Angels is falling apart, and crime pervades the city to the core. The mayor is corrupt, the police are inept, the city needs a figure to take control of the situation. Then in the light of day Darcy Walker is a cop, but in the dark of night she becomes the Black Scorpion. She does with a mash what she can't do with a badge. This is vigilante justice, old school style.

Black Scorpion is a female superhero in the vein of Spider-Man, Superman and Batman. She is beautiful, sexy and highly intelligent, and she has great martial-arts skills and a rapier wit. By day, Black Scorpion is Darcy, a policewoman, driving a white Corvette. By night, she becomes Black Scorpion and her Corvette morphs into the Scorpionmobile, a super-charged futuristic car equipped with an arsenal of science-fiction devices.

Like her male comic-book counterparts, Black Scorpion's drive to assume another identity to confront evil and bring criminals to justice is fuelled by a strong personal motivation: the murder of her policeman father by a notorious supervillain, the Breathtaker. Unable to obtain justice through "the system," she assumes an alter ego to take the law into her own hands. Black Scorpion uses her crime-solving skills, her martial-arts prowess, and her Scorpionmobile to pursue and fight the supervillains and supervixens who threaten the City of Angels, a comic-book parallel to Los Angeles.

Black Scorpion combines science-fiction fantasy, Hong Kong-style martial arts and high-speed action with comic-book humor and lots of sexiness.

The executive producers for the series were Roger Corman and Cheryl Parnell, the producer was Marta Mobley-Anderson.

It all began in 1995 with Joan Severance (Bird On A Wire, Lake Consequence, Angel Of Desire, Hard Evidence, The Last Seduction 2), director Jonathan Winfrey, and legendary producer Roger Corman... Severance made her screen debut as a sexy assassin in Arthur Hiller's comedy, See No Evil, Hear No Evil (1988), which starred Richard Pryor and Gene Wilder. She was the best thing in that lame farce, and her acting career was assured in the 1990s with roles in high profile erotic thrillers and several TV dramas. Showtime picked up Corman's telefilm production of Black Scorpion, a determinedly camp comicbook adventure which starred the amply proportioned Severance as a fetish-costumed vigilante in the City of Angels. She plays beautiful police detective Darcy Walker by day and the athletic superhero of the title by night, and in her hi-tech 'Scorpion mobile' she soon becomes the scourge of mad scientist villains and regrettably evil vixens alike. The film's mystery guest star turns out to be cult hero Adam West (famed as TV's Batman in the 1960s).

With ex-con mechanic Argyle (Garrett Morris, Saturday Night Live) as her main helpmate, and an initial mission to catch the man who killed her father (who was also an honest cop in Angel City), Ms Walker takes on the usual super-heroic job of cleaning up the streets, with the authority of a police badge or, if that fails, with hi-tech gadgetry - like her electro shock stinger ring - and street fighting ability. Sequel movie Black Scorpion II: Aftershock (aka: Black Scorpion: Ground Zero, 1996) co-stars Whip Hubley (replacing Bruce Abbott, of Re-Animator fame) as Detective Michael Russo, Darcy Walker's cop partner. Their inevitable love/hate relationship - over Russo's continued 'inability' to recognise Darcy as the woman behind the Black Scorpion mask - develops here afresh, and yet, despite the predictability of this ongoing subplot, there's still much to enjoy in this follow-up adventure as Black Scorpion tackles two supervillains for the price of one.

After Severance quit the role, Corman and screenwriter Craig J. Nevius developed the project into a TV series, casting ex-model Michelle Lintel in the lead. A green-eyed redhead with some martial arts skills, Lintel is perfect for the role. With a re-designed costume, a faster pace in action scenes, lashings of chuckle-worthy dialogues rife with appropriate puns, and plenty of knockabout 'sitcom' humour for the coterie of supporting characters, Black Scorpion became a TV series of 22 episodes in 1999. Following the standard formula of wacky bad guys (who are more often girls, in fact), with blatantly repetitive and speeded-up car chases, and numerous explosions (including unfortunately iffy special effects), we get a spate of cheesy 'anarchic' plots and a largely agreeable tendency on the part of the script writers for overripe one-liners. This either adds to or detracts from the comic-book TV show's decidedly 'unreal' appeal, depending upon your estimation of the entertainment values of grandly pantomimed, superhero adventure. Yes, it's a decidedly guilty pleasure.

"Computer. Activate auto-transform." - Darcy Walker, Black Scorpion

As well as being fantasy superheroine Black Scorpion, Darcy Walker is also a fantasy cop. While in costumed mode she looks absolutely fantastic, she's just as distractingly fabulous as an Angel City police detective, dressed to kill in tight miniskirts and gratuitously low-cut tops. For crime-fighter costume changes, our heroine slips "into something a little less comfortable" by means of Argyle's inexplicable super-science, which transforms the atoms of her attire just as easily as such magical technology can automatically turn Darcy's white Corvette into the urban-assault vehicle of the Scorpion mobile. This extremely useful (time-saving) aspect makes Black Scorpion a fairly unique hybrid of the zap-instant Wonder Woman techno-magic affect, and the comparatively mundane facility of a superhero's hidden lair in the mode of Batman.

Darcy's new partner down at the police precinct house is ambitious Detective Steve Rafferty (Scott Valentine), and he's not the only new character in the TV-series version of Black Scorpion. However, it's perhaps more notable that Argyle is recast (black actor 'B.T.' replaces Garrett Morris), and his ex-hooker girlfriend/ wannabe fashion designer, Veronica, alias Tender Lovin' is now played by Enya Flack, replacing Terri J. Vaughan (of the Black Scorpion movies). Whereas the pair of TV movies featured occasional nudity, the TV series offers a bevy of ex-Playboy pinups, and enough innuendo to keep fans of The Benny Hill Show happy.

With little preamble, and only a meagre recap of Black Scorpion's origin story, the TV show blasts into explosive action from the opening episode, Armed And Dangerous, in which Martin Kove (Cagney & Lacey) plays nuclear terrorist Firearm, a disabled ex-cop retrofitted with prosthetic weapons and body armour. Wave Goodbye has Athena Massey's buxom biologist turn into storm-powered troublemaker Hurricane after she 'drowns' in toxic waste. Home Sweet Homeless sees the unquiet return of Professor Ursula Undershaft as seismic villainess Aftershock (Sherrie Rose, from Black Scorpion II) who attempts to lead a rebellion of the city's unhappy sewer-dwellers against the housing scheme of irredeemably crooked Mayor Worth (Robert Pine). Vengeful asthmatic Dr Noah Goddard, better known as Breathtaker (Adam West), is reanimated in episode Out Of Thin Air by local crackpot genius Dr Phoenix (Raye Birk), and the wheezing baddie uses a powerful hallucinogenic gas to realise citizens' worst fears. Crime Time features guest star Frank Gorshin as wrongly-convicted innocent Ben Tickerman, who becomes cackling villain extraordinaire Clockwise to make all those responsible for his 25-year prison sentence repay him in kind for his lost life. It's fair dues, I suppose. He creates 'time bombs' to prematurely age his victims. Fat rich guys are the favoured targets of Suzie Payne, alias deadly cyborg Aerobicide (Renee Allman) in No Sweat. With her sexy sidekicks Bend and Stretch, she decides to give Angel City's millionaires a lethal workout.
