The aliens, a husband and wife, find Donovan but things become complicated by the female's pregnancy. While she is giving birth in an old warehouse, the Visitors attack. During the battle, Donovan and Philip square off and have a knock-down-drag-out fight, which Donovan wins. But he can't bring himself to kill this alien, who looks just like Martin. Then Diana's agent steps in, planning to destroy them both, and mentions, in passing, that Diana was the real killer of the turncoat Martin. Before the agent can act, she is gunned down. Philip apologizes to Donovan. Then Philip pledges support and offers to help in any way that he can. He even destroys the power crystals, stating that, "There's already been enough killing." When Philip returns to the ship, Diana is clearly startled to see him alive.

"War of Illusion" involves the Resistance's attempts to stave off a new Visitor weapon, the powerful Battlesphere, conveniently revealed to them by the now-sympathetic Philip. To this end they enlist the services of a computer genius, who can counter the Battlesphere with his skills. By coincidence, Lieutenant James reaches their destination, the home of a Dr. Atkins (MORK & MINDY'S Conrad Janis), before Donovan and his cohorts, having traced some other computer interference to that source. James kidnaps Atkins, not realizing that Atkins's son Henry is the real hacker. Donovan gets to Henry, who redirects the Battlesphere's computerized assault against Science Frontiers, defeats this latest Visitor assault, and saves his dad in the process.

In "The Secret Underground," Diana turns her attention to Lydia and has Lydia's brother Nigel transferred to the mothership and promoted in rank so that he will be the youngest officer on board. This sets him up as the only possible choice to be sacrificed in a scheduled, traditional feast. At the same time, the rebels steal aboard a ship to find a computer list of the underground leaders hidden by a Visitor sympathizer before he was killed. The Resistance must find the tape before the Visitors can locate and play it. The Resistance succeeds and Philip halts the execution of Lydia's brother, thus making Diana an even more dedicated enemy as he forces her to stand by him in countermanding the execution.

During a pitched battle between the Visitors and the Resistance in "The Return," it looks as though the rebels are about to take a real beating, when all of the Visitor troops are suddenly recalled to their ships. Their Leader is coming and he plans to sue for peace with the humans. Diana is furious and plots the Leader's demise. The Leader mentally contacts Elizabeth and chooses her to be his mate. This makes the rebels suspicious of the peace initiative but they reluctantly agree because Elizabeth is willing to go along with the marriage. Meanwhile, Willie is meeting his ex-girl-friend Thelma, another Visitor.

Diana disguises two of her men as rebels and when they seemingly blow up the Leader's shuttle, she has them executed prior to questioning. But the Leader wasn't aboard the destroyed craft. Philip had seen to it that the Leader followed in a second ship. Diana and her co-conspirator, Lieutenant James, are arrested and slated for death. Elizabeth agrees to leave with the Leader in his shuttle. But just as it takes off, it is noticed that Kyle Bates-a man still in love with Elizabeth is missing. Did he sneak onto the shuttle to be near her? Since this was the final episode of the series, we may very well never know. And to complicate matters even farther, the episode ends with the revelation that Diana has yet another time bomb planted on the right shuttle. What a way to end a series!

"Breakout" was an episode originally intended to have been aired between and "The Visitors Strike Back" and "The Deception," but it was pulled because of violent content and was not aired until the rerun season. The show had been moved to a later time slot so younger viewers would not see it. Here, Tyler, Donovan, and Robin wind up in a concentration camp ringed by the alien sand sharks known as crivits. Kyle Bates, who had yet to meet Elizabeth, was kidnapped by Diana and used to get his father to turn over the stargate, but the elder Bates could not find her despite his efforts to enlist Julie's assistance. Tyler and Donovan meet Kyle in the camp and they break out of the prison in a big way.

Although the V series ended with a bit of a cliffhanger, there does exist a first draft of a follow-up episode, which would have presumably opened the next season if V had not been cancelled. After further looks at Diana's captivity, the story shifts to the Leader's shuttle, where Kyle emerges from hiding, gun in hand, only to find no one on the craft but the pilot. Elizabeth's disembodied voice speaks to him telepathically, and he is carried away to some sort of other, dark dimension, where he sees the Leader, a huge four-armed lizard-being. When he attempts to attack his gun vanishes, and Elizabeth appears and explains matters.

Apparently, in ancient times the leaders of the Visitor home world, Saurus, decided to forestall the danger of a too-great concentration of power and broke a mystic artifact called the Anyx, concealing a portion of it on Earth. This, rather than mere hunger, is the real reason for the Visitors' interest in Earth. Now it seems that Elizabeth, by her nature, is a link between the two worlds that can restore the Leader to his full power. Diana and James manage to escape and take control of the mothership again, and Lydia decides to go along with this power shift; Philip is denounced as a traitor, and another full-scale assault on Earth is launched. Donovan, Willie, and Julie are imprisoned; Kyle appears in the cell with them; Thelma helps them escape; Julie is vaporized in the escape (!) but the others manage to escape through some air ducts (!!). The survivors disguise themselves as pilots and are aided by Philip when he recognises them. Diana sees through Philip's pose as their hostage and attempts to destroy them, but Elizabeth keeps appearing on the mothership and saves them.

The Leader keeps interfering with Elizabeth, and she discovers that he is just using her to regain the lost half of the Anyx. She wrenches away from his power and rejoins her friends. All of them but Philip escape in a shuttle; Philip brazens it out by pulling rank on Diana and Lydia. Diana manages to pursue and shoot down the shuttle with the good guys, which obligingly crashes out of sight and leads her to believe that they are dead. Of course they aren't, and, to top matters off, Ham Tyler shows up and carries them off to rejoin the now heightened war with the Visitors. Diana is selected by the Leader to find Elizabeth, for now the stargate knows his secrets, and has carried off the Syllabus of the Ancients, which holds knowledge that is, unfortunately for her, worded in a very cryptic fashion. This story would not have ended the series but would have wrapped up the final episode a bit better while leaving the series pretty much the same as it had always been: a chronicle of the war between Earth and the Visitors.

In 1990, a script was written for Warner Brothers for a possible revival of V as a syndicated series, which would produce enough additional episodes to fill out the syndication package. This revival would have introduced new characters, given different, more logical, reasons for the arrival of the Visitors on Earth, and essentially completely recast the series. While no new episodes were ever shot, Warner Brothers did attempt to find TV stations interested in carrying the revived V, along with the original episodes. Not enough signed on. At the time interest in one-hour dramas had declined considerably, ending any chances for a V revival. As it stands, there will always be die-hard fans of V who hope someday to see the battle resumed; it will not be forgotten.

SHADOW CHASERS

1 - 1 LIBERATION DAY (aka THE PURSUIT OF DIANA)

It has been nearly one year since the Visitors were forced from the Earth because of the red dust. The visitor leader Diana who was captured to await trial for crimes against humanity escapes. Ham Tyler and Donovan chase after her. Diana reaches a communication/tracking center and radios the Visitor fleet in space to come pick her up. A visitor craft descends and Diana rejoins her fleet who is still within the bounds of the Earth's solar system. Visitor fifth columnist Martin from V: The Final Battle is killed by Diana and the starchild Elizabeth goes into a cocoon state of metamorphosis. Elias opens up a bar known as Club Creole. It later is to serve as a hideout for human resistance forces when the Visitors attack the Earth again.

1 - 2 DREADNOUGHT (aka THE VISITORS STRIKE BACK)

The star child Elizabeth awakes from her cocoon and re-enters the world as a fully grown woman. She still has the mentality of a child though. Former human resistance leader Julie Parish and Robert Maxwell hold-up in a small ranch and attempt to help the star child Elizabeth cope with her new physical form. Visitor shock troopers arrive at the ranch and attempt to take the star child and nearly succeed until the red dust slowly kills them off. Nathan Lane, the head of Scientific Frontiers the company responsible for mass producing the red dust toxin that killed off the Visitors in the past strikes a deal with Visitor leader Diana. Los Angeles is to be an open city where there will be no hostilities between Visitors and humans, and no weapons. By so setting this up Nathan becomes a governor of sorts for the city. The Visitors discover that the red dust toxin needs a period to regenerate as it is a bacteria, with such being the case areas of warmer climate pose less of a red dust threat than areas of cold weather. Diana is introduced to the new commander of the Visitor fleet Lydia, and takes an assessment of her fighting forces. Diana attempts to destroy Los Angeles to get out of her deal with Nathan Lane, but the resistance pilots a former captured Visitor mothership into a giant particle beam weapon in space to save the city at the cost of Robert Maxwell's life.

Visitor commander Lydia is about to be executed for treason for killing her superior Charles via poison. Before this can happen, a new commander Inspector General Phillip arrives. Phillip is played by Frank Ashmore who played visitor fifth columnist Martin before he was killed. Phillip is Martin's twin brother. Phillip decides that the fate of Lydia will be tried in combat with Diana. The two female warriors decorate themselves in battle paint and go at it with sharpened staffs. When new evidence is introduced which shows that Lydia's prints were not on the glass that poisoned Charles the fight to the death is ended. Phillip invokes the inter-guardian rule which is meant to assure that neither Lydia nor Diana will harm the other until Charlie's true killer can be uncovered. The inter-guardian rule makes Lydia a protector of Diana, and Diana a protector of Lydia. If anything happens to one of them then the other is held accountable.

1 - 20 THE ATTACK

The Leader and Elizabeth depart in a shuttlecraft to begin their journey homeward, unknowing that Kyle has secretly stowed away onboard. On the Mothership, the Resistance members prepare to return home on their own shuttle, as Inspector Philip sentences Diana and James to death by the Cyclo-Purgers for their treason. But, as the Leader's shuttle enters the Kerlian Quadrant, the Mothership is alerted that an explosive device had been activated on the shuttle, and the Mothership races to its rescue. In the confusion, Diana escapes from her guard and returns to take control of the situation in the command center. Lydia agrees to Diana's authority and skill, and goes along with her as Diana orders the Resistance to be imprisoned for their obvious terrorist act. While in their cell, Kyle suddenly materializes among the group. The Leader, who seems to be a noncorporeal entity, still has Elizabeth, but has sent Kyle back. The entire group escapes with the help of Thelma, but in the resulting flee, Julie is shot and vaporized! The rest of the group makes their way to the shuttlebay, where Diana's troops are preparing for a huge Earth attack to avenge the Leader's assassination. Using Philip as a shield, the Resistance takes a shuttle and flees the Mothership, with Diana's shuttle close behind. Diana shoots her target, and the Resistance shuttle goes down. Donovan, Elizabeth, Willie, and Kyle escape from the crash, and find Ham Tyler waiting for them in his car. Back on the Mothership, Diana reads the battle reports and discovers that victory is being won on all fronts -- the Armistice lulled Earth into a false sense of security! The Leader had planned it from the beginning. Although Diana and Lydia suspect Philip of collaboration, he remains on the Mothership. Back on Earth, the remaining Resistance is left with a puzzle to solve. They must locate the Anyx -- the secret of the Ancients -- which the Syllabus tells an allegory of its location. Elizabeth must find it before the Leader does, because it is the only thing that can defeat him. And so, the Leader orders Diana to recapture the Starchild at all costs and return her to him...

VANISHING MAN, THE

Nick Cameron is an unjustly convicted prisoner selected as a test subject for the shady, top secret "Gyges" experiment, with Preston Front's Lucy Akhurst as his solicitor, Alice Grant. Whom is convinces that he is invisible and finally manages to escape from the Gyges experiment. Nick soon learns that The Head (the man in charge of the Gyges project) is now permanently invisible after experimenting on himself, and that he may share a similar fate. Pursuing a cure, Nick joins Moreau's government project to fight crime.

First published just over a century ago, novelist H G Wells' The Invisible Man has spawned countless adaptations and reworkings in film and television, including Universal Pictures' 1933 Claude Rains feature, and a short lived seventies TV series, which starred the MAN FROM U.N.C.L.E.s David McCallum as the scientist rendered permanently invisible by an ill conceived experiment.

The Latest edition to this expansive library is ITV's The Vanishing Man originated from the pen of Anthony Horowitz, creator of the much maligned CRIME TRAVELLER. Produced by Aagron Barton Television, the two hour pilot introduced Men Behaving Badly's Neil Morrissey as Nick Cameron. There was almost a years wait between when the pilot for the series was shown on ITV and the series proper started.

Billed as a comedy drama, The Vanishing Man owed more to McCallum's hokey adventure series than Claude Rains' exploration of an unbalance mind. Turning invisible for only brief periods following exposure to water, Nick's new found power was played mainly for laughs, as the hapless hero found himself once again visible - and naked - in an array of embarrassing situations. Nevertheless the production introduced some intriguing concepts, such as handy invisible weaponry, clothing, an invisible motor bike, and the heavily swathed Head of the Gyges project, who in a final shocking twist, is revealed to be trapped in a grotesque semi-transparent state.

Thanks to the chemistry between its two appealing stars, a lively script, and perhaps most importantly of all, special effects to match the best Hollywood has to offer, The Vanishing Man was a ratings success, prompting the decision to produce a six part one hour series.

However, the intervening period had seen a key shift in the project's definition, with writer Tony Jordon and David Fox taking over creative control from the departed Horowitz. Jordon and Fox quickly established their own interpretation of the premise, casually discarding the most interesting elements featured in the pilot. As with the motorbike, a jump-suit which complemented Nick's invisible powers had been hurriedly written away forcing a return to tired gags centred on his nudity. The Head of Gyges who looked set to play an important role as Nick's deformed nemesis, is similarly squandered.

Setting up the series' central thrust, the head has become completely invisible, and totally insane, suggested that a similar fate awaits Nick, in a retrogressive step, Jordon and Horowitz followed the obvious route set out by the pilot, bringing back Detective Chief Inspector Moreau as a government operative who enlists Nick's help as the ultimate covert agent while promising to search for a cure. As a result, the show has established a simple, recurring fantasy spy formula, almost identical to Harve Bennett's seventies series GEMINI MAN, which starred Ben Murphey as a disappearing government agent faced with the threat of permanent invisibility

In The Vanishing Man's new format, Nick's powers play an almost insignificant part, other than in providing audiences with the appealing visual gimmick and some comic relief. Even so, as with many promising elements, the pilot's impressive special effects have almost completely disappeared, leaving behind little other than Morrissey and Akhurst's chemistry, and the occasional appealing storyline.

Owing as much as it does to shows such as THE INVISIBLE MAN and THE GEMINI MAN, The Vanishing Man is very reminiscent of US telefantasy. While the modern production would have undoubtedly stormed the TV charts in that era, it is now twenty years out of date, pitching itself to a more sophisticated, demanding audience, acclimatised to increasingly complex, progressive programming.

Sara Middington is a newly-married woman who is convinced that her house is haunted. Nick and Alice go along to investigate, and much to Nick's annoyance so does Joe. Getting hopelessly lost on the way to the house they eventually arrive, only to find that Sara became Mrs. Middington only two months after the previous Mrs. Middington died.

VEGA 4

Vega 4 opens with a new threat to Earth detected by Earth Space Control emanating from Galaxy Five. To deal with the situation, the President orders the commissioning of the yet untested new spaceship, 'Vega 4'. When it is suggested that 'The Interpretaris' should be sent on the mission, it is revealed that it is not equipped for travel to Galaxy Five and therefore the 'Vega 4' is the only hope for Earth to survive.

As in The Interpretaris, a three-person crew (two males, one female) is selected for the mission: Captain Phillip Wallace, played by John Faasen; Lieutenant James Adam, played by Evan Dunstan; and Ensign Eve Poitier, played by Juliana Allan. They are also assisted by a computeroid named Henry, which looks exactly the same as the Henry from the earlier serial. When the Captain says that he thought Henry was on 'The Interpretaris', he is told that his older cousin was and still is. This Henry is a new and improved model.

It is soon revealed that the threat to Earth from Galaxy Five is the handiwork of another evil scientist named Zodian, played by Eddie Hepple (who previously had the title role in Barley Charlie and would later appear in The Rovers). Zodian, assisted by his computer, is seeking revenge on Earth for exiling him to an asteroid, and believes he will succeed where Parta Beno failed. Hepple capably portrayed Zodian's eccentricity and added a comedic touch which softened the character's evil persona.

Vega 4 was a serial of seven half-hour episodes, this time filmed in colour. Also produced by Artransa Park at their Sydney studios, in association with the ABC, the same screening arrangements applied. Made in 1967, it was first screened by the ABC in Melbourne on May 19, 1968, and in Sydney on June 2. Repeat screenings were on the Seven Network. Producer of the show was Alan Burke, the scripts were written by John Warwick and music was composed and conducted by Tommy Tycho.

A support role in the serial was played by Ken Fraser as the President of Earth Space Control. The seven episodes are concerned with the 'Vega 4' crew dealing with the threat from Galaxy Five, and in the final episode Zodian is captured and their mission is completed.

Although Vega 4 was an improvement on The Interpretaris, not least because of colour filming, it still suffered from a low budget resulting in some dodgy sets, models and special effects. Vega 4 featured more location filming, but a large percentage of each episode was still confined to a small number of studio sets. Producer Alan Burke said, Many special effects were used to give added atmosphere to the programme. That was true, but the effectiveness of the effects was severely limited by the low budget.

Set in the not too distant future. Viper was an attempt to do Knight Rider for the 1990's with a hero in a modified sports car fighting the bad guys. The new car was a Dodge Viper, which was modified by Julian Wilkes, a physically disabled techno wizard. The Viper was seen as the last chance at defeating a criminal organisation known as the Outfit. Besides equipping the Viper with a means to keep the rain out (an odd feature to be missing on a $840,000 car, Wilkes gave the car a bullet-proof skin, a grappling hook, various computers and a remote controlled flying spy camera. Absent from the Viper were weapons since Wilkes was very anti-violence.

Wilkes, however, due to his condition was incapable of driving the Viper. In fact almost no one could. The project ran through many test drivers, none of whom were good enough. The one man good enough to drive the Viper was Michael Payton. Payton however was not in a position to be offered the job, although he would most likely not have accepted it even if he had been offered the position since he was a gang leader. Payton however was involved in a nearly fatal accident and left for dead by his companions. After being rushed to hospital where his life was saved he was given a new face. A new identity and a new set of memories. He was now Joe Astor, the Viper's driver, who was a decent law-abiding citizen.

After Joe and Julian's first adventure, the funding for the Viper project was cut off. They stole the Viper and set up base in an abandoned hydro electric power plant. With the aid of Frankie Waters, the head of the police department motor pool, they set out to bring down the Outfit which has corrupted officials in government. Not all the officials were corrupt, they frequently received aid from Delia Throne, a high-ranking police officer who knew that they were practising vigilante justice.

After this failed attempt to produce an SF show there was another attempt made just two years later, of which see separate entry. In the fall of 1996, a new version of VIPER (1996) appeared in first-run syndication. This new series has an all-new cast. Headed by Jeff Kaake, best known to genre fans as the lead role in the short-lived series SPACE RANGERS.

Bilson was born and raised in Los Angeles while DeMeo is a native of Buffalo, New York. The two men were majoring in theatre at California State University. "Paul and I found that we both had a love of the same old movies and the same great adventure stories," says Bilson. "The first thing we wrote together was a Sherlock Holmes play that we produced in college and both acted in. Don't worry, we'll never perform again. It was before video tape, so there's no evidence," he laughs. "We've been writing together for over 20 years. There are times in our careers when we spend more time together than we do with our spouses. Luckily, Paul and I get along really well. If we had known each other as children I'm sure we would have been friends even back then."

Their first paid assignment was a comedy script they wrote back in 1980 about alligators in the New York sewers appropriately titled See You Later, Alligator. "It was never produced," says DeMeo, "but it actually got us into the Writers Guild." The duo went on to write and produce cult Science Fiction feature films Trancers, Zone Troopers, Eliminators and Arena and the 1988 comedy The Wrong Guys which was directed by Bilson. In 1991, five years of their work came to fruition with the release of The Rocketeer, a 1930s Science Fiction adventure tale starring Bill Campbell and Jennifer Connelly.

From 1990 to 1991, under an exclusive deal with Warner Bros Television, Bilson and DeMeo developed, wrote and executive produced The Human Target and The Flash. "God, I love that series," says DeMeo. "We were so ready to keep going. We had all these ideas for a second season and were just figuring out the series when they cancelled us." Bilson concurs, "In intervening years there have been a-half dozen times when we've been at CBS pitching ideas and someone there has told us, 'You know, we never should have cancelled The Flash.' It was a major hit in Europe and we were so disappointed because it was our first series and we were cancelled. We learned so much doing that show, especially when it came to creating special effects. We're immensely proud of what we achieved with the programme and we still feel it's the best comic book adapted show ever done for television."

1 - 1 VIPER

The ultimate weapon against crime, the Viper Defender is the city's only hope to stop a crime syndicate, the 'Outfit', from destroying the city. However, the Viper is just too fast and too powerful for all the police officers recruited to drive it. City Commissioner Strand (Jon Polito) is desperate to get the Viper on the road. He plans on using the Viper's crime-fighting abilities to bolster support for his campaign to become mayor. After stealing a satellite, Michael Payton (James McCaffrey) flips his black Dodge Stealth in a spectacular crash. Strand hears about the accident and has Payton pronounced dead at the scene. Payton is the best getaway driver the Outfit had. Commissioner Strand orders that Payton's memory be erased and his appearance altered. When Payton awakes, he is told that he is a police officer named Joesph Payne Astor. Once Joe gets behind the wheel of the Viper, it is obvious he has the skill to handle driving the car. Under the supervision of the Viper designer, Julian Wilkes, the duo makes a large impact on the Outfit's business. The outfit crime syndicate, controlled by a man known as Mr. Townsend (William Russ), wants the car. The Viper project has been observed by the Motorpool officer, Franklin Xavier Waters, for months. Frankie is a big car enthusiast and pleads with Wilkes to transfer him so he can work on the Viper. Frankie is not successful in convincing Wilkes.

VIRTUAL MURDER

In the safe domain of a city museum & art gallery, two American tourists watch in amazement as The Laughing Cavalier melts. When further paintings are threatened with becoming vertical oil slicks by 'The Ligidator', Carol Bolitho of Tower King insurance calls in the services of Dr. John Cornelius from the university's Department of Psychology, and Cornelius finds himself acting as the courier for the ransom of half a million pounds to the mysterious 'Mr. Dada'

The music was composed and performed by Harry Robertson, the technical advisers was Doctor Clive Hollin and Professor Kevin Howells. The executive producer was Barry Hanson, the series producers were Harry Robertson and Brian Degas. This AVENGERS clone was shown on BBC1 in 1992.

Created by Harry Robertson and Brian Degas, executively produced by Barry Hanson, and premiering on BBC on 24th July 1992, Virtual Murder related the adventures of university lecturer and criminologist, Dr. John Cornelius, (the late Nicolas Clay, Excalibur, and the ITV drama Gentlemen and Players) who alongside his beautiful and rich girlfriend Samantha Valentine, (Kim Thompson), investigate unusual crimes in a bizarre, Avengersque England populated by an assorted array of colourfully eccentric characters.

During the course of the series' short run of six episodes, the duo were confronted by an outlandishly diverse set of cases ranging from vampires, melting works of art to murder by means of virtual reality. Promoting the series at the time, Clay stated that the episodes were inspired by actual cases, a highly dubious claim, but a rather nice piece of promotion well in keeping with the concept's intended tongue in cheek fantasy.

Despite scripts from such creative talents as Phillip Martin, Tim Aspinall and creators Robertson and Degas respectively, and the inclusion of an impressive range of quality guest stars such as Bernard Bresslaw, Julia Foster, Richard Todd, Hywell Bennett, Tony Robinson, Jon Pertwee and Alfred Marks, and regulars Stephen (XYY Man, Howard's Way) Yardley, as Inspector Cadogan, Alan David, Professor Griffiths, Jude Akuwudike, Sergeant Gummer and Carole Boyd as Miss Phoebe Littlejohn, the series resolutely failed to jell into the finely balanced stylistic whole that had made its prime inspiration, The Avengers, an outstanding success almost two decades earlier.

The two prime reasons behind the show's failure to ignite audience interest were the decision to shoot on video rather than the more costly option of film, with the result that much of the glossy visual atmosphere that had contributed greatly to the enhancement of the basic unreality, which had given The Avengers much of its cartoonish power, was lost. Replaced instead by a nagging sense of grainy reality which actively worked against the more fantastical atmospherics demanded by the exaggerated unreality of the core story elements. However, much more damaging was the all-important presentation of the central duo.

Despite the best efforts of the experienced and talented Clay and Thompson, the characters of Cornelius and Valentine lacked from the outset the essential wit, charm, warmth, self-deprecating humour and innate 'will-they-won't they' sex appeal which made the duo of Steed and Mrs. Peel effortless and enduring televisual icons. Instead, the characters as written came across as smugly superior dilettantes whose banter seemed forced and far too arch and studied to be either remotely engaging or truly amusing. Ultimately, more than anything else, this total failure of the central characters to enamour themselves to the viewing audience was the greatest and most fatal flaw in the show's hopes for survival.

The series ended its six episode run on the 28th of August 1992, and promptly vanished into the limbo of unrepeatable show's, where it has remained unseen to the present. Misconceived and fatally flawed, but nevertheless a genuine attempt to resurrect a long neglected form of telefantasy, Virtual Murder remains a long unseen, near forgotten, experiment that sadly failed.

VIRTUAL OBSESSION

AKA: HOST

A glitch occurs in the computer program that controls most of the power and electrical services for Salt Lake City, causing accidents across the city. Dr Joe Messenger (Peter Gallagher), who is in control of the program, assures the Mayor that such a thing could not happen again. However, Joe's colleague, Tom Inman (Andy Comeau), confirms Joe's fear that their system has been hacked. The two run a complete check with the help of their massive computer, which is nicknamed Albert, and has the ability to manifest itself as a holograph of Albert Einstein (Tom Nibley). Joe is interviewed about the Artificial Intelligence Center and Albert, and explains that the aim of his research is to create a new form of consciousness, one independent of its creator. To this end, an endless stream of information is fed to Albert from all over the world through cameras, sound recorders and olfactory sensors.

Joe also reveals that, along with some others, his own house is fitted with surveillance cameras, so that Albert can learn about day-to-day human existence. After watching the interview together, Joe and his wife Karen (Mimi Rogers) begin to make love, but when Joe refuses a request that the camera in their bedroom be switched off for once, Karen turns away from him. The next day, Joe meets his new Research Associate, a brilliant young computer expert named Juliet Spring (Bridgette Wilson). Juliet is also interested in creating an independent consciousness. However, her work is geared towards finding a way of downloading one that already exists. Juliet demonstrates her computer program, with which she intends to download a rat's brain. Joe and Juliet have dinner together. Afterwards, Joe congratulates Juliet on her prospect of a brilliant career. Bitterly, Juliet reveals that she is suffering from an inoperable brain aneurysm, and has only months to live.

The next day, Juliet successfully downloads a rat's consciousness, but finds that her computer isn't powerful enough to process the data. Juliet invites Joe for a picnic. He accepts, forgetting that he had arranged to meet Karen for lunch. After talking together for some time, Joe and Juliet kiss tentatively. That night, Karen tells Joe that she is worried about their marriage. Joe apologises for his long working hours and takes her to dinner, but the evening is disrupted when Juliet shows up, making insinuations about herself and Joe. The following morning, Joe, Juliet and Tom attach electrical sensors to an experimental rat and attempt to download its consciousness using Albert.

Suddenly, there is a high-pitched noise, the computer screen goes blank, and the rat is found dead. After questioning Albert, the three realise that, incredibly, they have succeeded in their attempt: that the rat's mind is somewhere within Albert's program. Juliet asks Joe to her house, saying that she needs to talk to him. When he arrives, he finds her unconscious and bleeding from her nose. Later, having recovered, Juliet apologises for her behaviour towards Karen. Joe flies to Stanford to deliver a lecture. That night, Juliet appears at his hotel. The two make love. Afterwards, Juliet reveals her secret plan: to download her own consciousness into the computer, and thus cheat her fate.

This film's first and only advantage is Jake Lloyd. I think he has a lot of promise for many acting roles in the near future - it's especially evident in Unhook The Stars. Also look for Bridgette Wilson who is featured in "Unhook The Stars" as well. This movie is based on the best selling novel "Host" and it's a very excellent adaptation. There are some very tense moments that I will not ruin for you such as some people would love to do. but there is a certain scene with Jake and Bridgette that is pretty intense - you'll know it when you see it. Of course I will do nothing but praise Jake Lloyd's acting because I think he is extremely talented - for those of you who have seen "Unhook The Stars", you will understand where I'm coming from. I am just so impressed and incredibly amazed at the talent he has possessed at such a young age. He gives an excellent performance as the character "Jack". Bridgette Wilson also gave a good performance as "Julie" - I have no complaints about her at all. I don't see how anyone possibly could either. It's pretty unlikely that anyone who hasn't seen this movie will actually get to view it. Since the movie had a low budget, it will more than likely result in it not being aired again. Great film. Despite the fact that any links, associations and contributions to this movie regarding her are non-existent Host completed filming on the 20th December 1997 in the USA, under the title Virtual Obsession. Produced by ABC television as a 3 hour mini-series, the mini-series debuted in the UK in August 1999.

After giggling maniacally for about fifteen minutes, I hurried to get a blank tape into the old VCR, hoping for the best, but suspecting that the film itself probably wouldn't be anywhere near as entertaining as its summary seemed to suggest. And I was right.

Wildly speculative science fiction requires a firm grounding in reality to make it work, and this Virtual Obsession is completely lacking. All of the story's potentially interesting aspects are in place when the film opens, with the viewer being asked to take them for granted, rather than share in them. The computerisation of a major city, the creation of Albert, and the education of the artificial intelligence are all handled in such an off-hand manner that it is hard not to respond with equal indifference.

Similarly, the film's central premise just isn't made absorbing enough. It's just "let's do it" followed by "hey, we've done it", leaving the audience to shrug and say "so what?" The problem, I think, is that the film-makers weren't as interested in creating an intellectually engaging story as they were in finding a new twist to the venerable stalk-and-slash scenario. Ultimately, Virtual Obsession is just a reread of Fatal Attraction, tarted up for the computer generation. Instead of the spurned mistress invading the house and threatening her lover's family in a physical sense, Juliet does it via computer, phone and electricity. (Her persecution of Mimi Rogers is one thing; however, when she started going after Jake Lloyd I was unable entirely to repress a cry of, You go, girl! [Nothing personal, kid. I just really wish that I could buy a bag of chips that didn't have your face on it.]

Although the viewer never truly believes that Karen and her son, Jack, are in any danger, this section of the film is fairly successful in illustrating the Crichton-esque moral of the pitfalls of too much faith in technology. Perhaps the best (because most subtle) moment is when Jack and Karen try to flee their house - only to realise that the garage has an electronic lock.

Thematically, the rest of Virtual Obsession is deeply confused; the writers were obviously quite determined to have their cake and eat it, too. For much of its running time, the film seems to be yet another warning against scientists who try to play God. When Joe confronts the computerised Juliet, he tells her that she is nothing like the "real" Juliet, who had "great beauty" and "kindness". (Hmm - Joe must have been watching a different movie.) The film's argument is that mind, body and soul are inexorably linked, and cannot be separated without a tragic outcome. This argument might be perfectly valid, were it not totally contradicted by the film's closing sequence. Returning to the lab after the defeat of Juliet, Joe finds that his colleague, Tom, a paraplegic since "the accident" (unspecified), has downloaded his own consciousness. For a moment this looks like the usual kicker: "evil" Juliet has been replaced by "evil" Tom. But no: instead, we are assured that nice Tom will remain nice Tom, despite that nasty old separation of the mind, body and soul we were just warned against.

If you think this sounds stupid and contrived, you're quite right. But there's worse to come. Juliet is ultimately defeated, not by anything Joe does, but by her attempt to cheat fate. In downloading her consciousness, Juliet unwittingly downloaded her aneurysm: her "virtual" self is killed by a "virtual" haemorrhage. Fine - except that in a scene of intolerable saccharine overload, we later see "virtual" Tom's holograph projection rise from his wheelchair, having somehow regained the use of his legs. (For a brief, glorious moment I thought he was going to say, Mein Führer! I can walk! But no, no such luck.) And then "virtual" Tom vanishes, presumably to take up his new role as guardian of the computer system, leaving the viewer with nothing to say but, "Huh?"

Another of Virtual Obsession's shortcomings is that its two central characters are so unappealing. The presentation of Juliet Spring is deeply ambiguous, but more, I suspect, through carelessness than intention. From the moment she reveals that she's terminally ill, the direction that the story will take becomes screamingly obvious. After seducing Joe, Juliet immediately reveals her plan to have her consciousness downloaded. Having thus made it fairly clear that she's using him, the script then turns around and asks us to accept that in the space of a week Juliet has become so obsessed with Joe that she's prepared to endanger the lives of his wife and child to get him. Juliet's situation is such that, bad as her conduct is, it's hard not to have a certain sympathy for her. (I'll say this, too: I found it refreshing to see a character in a movie who responded to her imminent death by being royally pissed off, rather than by being brave and noble about it.)

Joe, however, is another matter. It isn't just Fatal Attraction's theme of the psychotic woman scorned that Virtual Obsession shares with its source: it is also that film's dubious moral code. As does its predecessor, the film asks us to excuse Joe's conduct on the grounds that, well, he really does love his family, you know. (You could invent a really good drinking game around Virtual Obsession. Try knocking one back every time Joe says to Karen "I'm sorry." If you're still standing by the end credits, you've got a harder head than I have.) The fact that he neglects his wife, lies to her repeatedly, cheats on her, and is indirectly responsible for the attempts on her life are all just supposed to be swept away by that pre-credit clinch.

This is bad enough, but what's infinitely worse is the film's constant inference that the state of the Messengers' marriage is actually Karen's fault. Joe spends a great deal of his time protesting that Karen is too good for him - protesting much too much, in fact. In a frankly nasty exchange, Juliet responds to Joe's unconvincing statement that Karen has as much interest in his work "as any wife has in her husband's work" with an arid, "That's too bad." (The fact that Joe displays absolutely no interest in anything Karen does until after she's caught him cheating is conveniently ignored.) We learn that the Messengers have been having sexual problems for some time. When Karen's refusal to have sex under the gaze of Albert's watchful computer cuts directly to Joe's first meeting with Juliet, it is pretty clear where the film-makers are placing the blame. All of this is presumably meant to excuse the fact that Joe is kissing Juliet before he's known her a day, and in the sack with her before he's known her a week.

As a result of all of this, Karen Messenger is easily the film's most sympathetic character, but suffers from the contrivances of the plot; her forgiveness or non-forgiveness of Joe's behaviour tends to fluctuate according to whether the writers need her in the house or out of the house.

In summary, Virtual Obsession is confused, unconvincing and overlong - although I gather it was originally longer, being made-for-TV and shown in two parts. The cutting down of the original (it's still over two and a quarter hours long!) might explain some of its unresolved loose ends, such as the subplot about Joe's father, who was cryogenically frozen, then inadvertently defrosted. Still, the film is not entirely negligible. It is worth sitting through for one sequence so macabre, so surreally grotesque, that it seems to have wandered in from another movie. (This following section is one big spoiler, but you might as well read it anyway. For one thing, I don't think Virtual Obsession is all that easy to see. For another, even if you read this, you will still have to see the scene for yourself to believe it.)

Along with her downloading of her mind, Juliet has prepared for the future by arranging - like Joe's dad - to have herself cryogenically preserved. Confessing this to Joe, she makes him swear that he will ensure that everything goes as planned. However, after Juliet's death, it seems that her death certificate has been tampered with (we never learn why or by whom - another of the film's loose ends) and a judge orders that Juliet be thawed for autopsy. Joe protests, but to no avail. Desperate, Joe turns to his friend at the cryogenic facility, who points out that since they don't think an aneurysm killed Juliet, they don't need her head for the autopsy. Instantly, the buzzsaw is out, and Joe is assisting in an offscreen decapitation. The next thing we know, Joe is driving home with Juliet's head in a special liquid nitrogen storage facility, which he intends to keep (where else?) in his basement. Suddenly, we're out of the realm of The Lawnmower Man meets Fatal Attraction, and in the middle of a science fiction re-make of Bring Me The Head Of Alfredo Garcia.

Unfortunately, it turns out that Juliet's new home is defective - something her virtual self brings to Joe's attention by ringing his phone again and again in the middle of the night. Realising the problem, Joe makes a temporary alternative arrangement, then sets out to get a replacement tank. In his absence, Karen and Jack return early from their weekend away. Karen goes to get something out of the deep-freeze, and when Joe arrives with his friend from Cryogenics, they find Karen sitting at the kitchen table with a bundle in front of her. When Joe tries to take it from her, she snatches it up and runs out into the front yard. After shrieking some entirely justified abuse at Joe, Karen hurls the plastic-wrapped object into the air. Freed from its wrappings, Juliet's head traverses a graceful arc through the air, then hits the road - and shatters into about a thousand pieces. If I thought that the film-makers intended it that way, I would call this sequence a masterpiece of black comedy. However, I am quite sure they meant, not to amuse, but to horrify. Well, I'm sorry, but I'm afraid that the only effect of this scene upon me was to provoke my second Virtual Obsession-related fifteen-minute fit of maniacal giggling.

VISITEURS, LESAKA: VISITORS, THE

Two aliens from a perfect but loveless galactic empire, Arkim and Tolrach, are reincarnated into the bodies of two comatose Earthlings: Jean-Louis and Renate. Their mission is to find out why six previous "visitors" sent to Earth have vanished without a trace. After a globe spanning quest, they discover that the visitors like their new lives on Earth better and have decided to remain. Now in love, Arkin and Tolrach (who is pregnant) decide to stay as well.

VISITOR, THE

In the dark skies above Utah, the Air Force is tracking the crash of an unidentified aircraft. Crash-landing on a mountain side, Adam MacArthur (played by John Corbett of "Northern Exposure") mysteriously emerges from the wreckage of the downed craft, seemingly unscathed. His sudden appearance sparks a manhunt by opposing national security departments, each with its own agenda to find out who Adam is, how he survived, and why he returned. It appears that Adam, missing in action since World War II, is still the strapping young man he was 40 years ago prior to disappearing into the Bermuda Triangle.

Outwardly unchanged by his mysterious absence, Adam was abducted by an alien race that tapped into the largely unused portion of his brain. This explains his amazing ability to access the metaphysical that most people only dream about, giving him a seemingly spiritual power to utilise his mind (and body) in extraordinary ways. On the run from both human and otherworldly forces, with a mysterious mission to complete, Adam eludes his pursuers to embark on a harrowing quest of enormous proportions that will take him in and out of the lives of strangers, all of whom will find themselves changed by their contact with THE VISITOR.

Shown on ITV in the UK. V was created by Dean Devlin and Ronald Emmerich who also served as executive producers. The creators of V were also responsible for creating the SF blockbuster Independence Day (1997). On paper V sounds like a good idea, but on the screen it sadly doesn't work as well. Despite the interesting storyline, most of the episodes were mediocre and simplistic in their nature.

Very little information is given about the reason why Adam is here today, and whilst more information comes to the fore as the show move on, it might have been a better idea to have more to the backstory, since it can be very difficult to feel any emotion for the character in V. Vs life behind the sciences was also troubled with creators Dean Devlin and Robert Emmerich allegedly getting bad treatment for V from the executives at 20TH CENTURY FOX. They even vowed to never work in television again, which would be a shame, since this show did have some potential.

From the creators of Independence Day. John Corbett (Northern Exposure) is Adam MacArthur, a World War II pilot who disappears over the Bermuda Triangle only to reappear seemingly unchanged decades later, but with mysterious powers and a mission to unmask an alien invasion conspiracy.

In this gripping, one-hour action drama, Roland Emmerich and Dean Devlin, creators of Independence Day, "Stargate" and "Godzilla," turn their talents to television. Emmerich, Devlin and John Masius are executive producers for 20th Century Fox Television in association with Centropolis Television."

Having spat their vitriol at STARGATE SG1, Devlin and Emmerich smugly introduced their own show, which (in an ironic twist of fate) was actually far worse than MGM's series. The Visitor was cancelled mid-season in the States, and even ITV showed some uncharacteristic good judgement by pulling it at an early stage. Mixing the worst aspects of STARMAN, Stairway to Heaven and Independence Day, the show followed the adventures of a pilot who returned to Earth, imbued with special powers. You see, he was abducted by aliens, but now wants to use his new-found strengths to make our planet a safer place for all. Sadly, the New Age philosophising amid ideology got lost amongst the risible dialogue, and its leading man John Corbett past did not have anything vaguely resembling charisma.

Unfortunately, Adam MacArthur had to abandon his mission when The Visitor was cancelled after only 13 episodes. The explanation behind the programme's ultimately demise is as mysterious as the aliens who abducted Adam in the first place.

The Visitor was not only not renewed in the States, it was cancelled mid-season, meaning just 13 episodes were made. ITV bought the rights to show all of these, but have shown only seven to date. The rest are lying in the ITV vaults and there are no current plans to show the rest. The full episode listing is as follows: Pilot, Fear

VOICE FROM THE SKY

Wales, then a star of independent series westerns (and after a name change to Taliaferro a character actor) is the hero on the trail of a crazed scientist threatening to destroy the world. The title comes from the transmitter the villain builds to project his voice into the air so that whole cities can learn of his threats at the same time. Delores is the heroine.

The first independent sound serial made in Hollywood, Voice from the Sky was directed and produced by one-time silent serial star Wilson. By all accounts, no prints of this crudely mounted serial, which only achieved a limited release, have survived. Ben Wilson also starred in four other SF related cinema serials, THE POWER GOD, THE BRANDED FOUR, THE MYSTERY SHIP and OFFICER 444. The producer for the serial was Ben Wilson.

AKA: VOICE LUGGER

The show opens with Voicelugger Gold facing off against a bad guy. The bad guy (Genbar) wants to revive Hades, to control the universe. He is using four little kids (two girls and two boys) from "Voice Land" to power the revival of Hades. Then one of the little girls hears (inside her) the cries for help from Voicelugger Gold. She wakes up and stops herself from being used. Then one by one the other kids wake up too. So Hades wasn't revived. Then Voicelugger Gold sent the kids to earth to live normal lives until they will be needed as senshi.

[jump to the present]

Akiko was waiting at the airport for Haruka. Haruka came back from LA. Akiko also had her bags with her, as she left her home to live in Tokyo. Now both Akiko and Haruka had no place to stay. They went to a real estate agent, but they couldn't get an apartment as they didn't have any job or family.

When Akiko and Haruka were in the park, they got into a fight, because Akiko was so much of a sentai, hero otaku. She kept saying that she (actually they) were heroes, because of the reoccurring dream that she had.

Haruka went off, but a pervert (who had been trailing her from the airport) came, and tried to molest her. The pervert covered Haruka's mouth, and took her to a building. But the pervert loosened his grip on Haruka's mouth, and Haruka screamed.

Meanwhile, Akiko "felt" that Haruka was in trouble. She ran to find Haruka.

Haruka's scream vibrated a lot, and the pervert lost his balance. Then Akiko came, and tried to protect Haruka. She went to the pervert and punched him, knocking him down. Then the pervert ran away.

Then an older woman came up to the girls, and said that she had a job for them. This woman was a president of a seiyuu production, and she needed some voices for a CM that day. She heard the screams by Haruka and knew that she would be able to do the job.

Akiko and Haruka went to the seiyuu studio, and they did the voices of screaming girls in a roller coaster.

That evening, Akiko and Haruka were very tired, so the president let them sleep over at her place.

But in the middle of the night, Akiko "heard" some cries for help by some unknown girl. Akiko got up and rushed out. She didn't know why she was able to hear, or why she knew which direction to run. But Akiko reached the empty building where the pervert was trying to molest a young girl.

Akiko helped the girl get away, but now the pervert was going after Akiko. The pervert was much stronger now than he was during the day. Akiko's punch didn't stop him at all.

Just when Akiko was going to get molested, she screamed out. The powerful scream sent the pervert flying across the building. But the pervert got up, and Akiko noticed that half of his face was torn off. The pervert was actually a robot/android!

The robot went after Akiko. Then a lot of mysterious power built up inside Akiko, and she turned into Voicelugger Ruby!

Trivia for Episode 7, "Ayauchi Super Hero! Hoeru Daisousasen"

This episode features the Voiceluggers fighting alongside some of the more famous sentai heroes.

The main guest star is Fujioka Hiroshi, aka Kamen Rider, or Segata Sanshirou. In the "Making of" clips, Michie, Takeshi, and many staff all go worship him, getting signature and take photos with him. Haruna was not there, and she wrote in the liner notes: "Ah ! Fujioka-sama....."

Notice the exceptionally bad editing where you can see Takeshi not wearing his rubber suit head, only to have the Voiceluggers somehow blow it back off his shoulders again.

A few seiyuu also made cameo appearance in this episode : Adachi Mari, Kanai Mika, and Yamaguchi Kappei (together with his family). A few animators were also there.

This DVD comes with a big black plastic case (around B5 size). The cover is Nakagawa Akiko wearing the VoiceLugger Ruby uniform except the helmet. The DVD is a picture disk with Nakagawa Akiko wearing a brown blouse, with her signature printed on the picture. The design of the case is that you can spin the disk while it is still fastened.

Also inside the box is a pamphlet, containing message from the chief director Hirayama Tooru, comments from Akiko/Haruna/Seki/ Kusao on episodes 1 and 2, track list, and the lyrics of the OP.

There is also a coupon for this DVD. After you collect all 6 coupons in the 6 DVDs for VoiceLugger, you can enter a draw for the outfit wore by Akiko/Haruna during the shooting. Sadly, they are not the uniform they wear, but street clothes. Akiko's is a brown blouse (same as the picture disk's) and dark stripe skirt; Haruna's is a red pullover and black skirt.

Also included is a goods list with photos, and a questionnaire postcard.

The Making of VoiceLugger Part 1 includes clips of the shooting, the stuntman in work (watching a male-Ruby teaching Akiko-Ruby to pose is scary ^_^;;), Akiko's check on the uniform, and comments from the main casts.

During episode 2, in some action scenes, the mic appeared many times in the top middle of the screen ^_^; Also during this episode, I found a method to distinguish whether the stuntman or Akiko/Haruna are in the uniforms. Akiko-Ruby is slightly shorter than Haruna-Rose, while stuntman-Ruby is taller than stuntwoman-Rose.

1 - 2 BARA YO ME WO SAMASE

Akiko had turned into Voicelugger Ruby, and was facing off against the alien. She beat him up and kicked him away. Then the alien said that they were waiting for Voicelugger to appear. He laughed and vanished.

But Ruby also laughed. Akiko was happy that she really was a hero.

Akiko went back, and woke up Haruka. She told her all about it, but Haruka just wanted to sleep.

Meanwhile, at Genbar's hideout. Gamma [Kamiya Akira] told Genbar that Voicelugger appeared. But instead of Gold, it was Ruby. Then Genbar said that the other kids with the voice stone might appear. Gamma told Buzama to go to Earth and get the voice stones.

The next day, Akiko and Haruka were shown their new "home". It was a karaoke room. Haruka was shocked, but Akiko was very happy, as she discovered a lot of sentai songs in the karaoke machine.

Akiko kept singing the songs, while Haruka tried to sleep.

Later, Akiko and Haruka were running in a park, as they had to get in shape for their seiyuu work. Akiko was feeling very happy (because she was a hero), so she was running well. Haruka couldn't keep up with her.

A funny creature was in the bushes and was watching the girls. Akiko stopped running, and felt someone looking at her. Then she saw the bushes move (but it wasn't the one with the creature). Akiko took off her shoe, and threw it into the bushes. Then a guy came wobbling out of the bushes.

Akiko had knocked the guy out with her shoe. After recovering, the guy [Seki Tomokazu] got very embarrassed, and ran away.

Later, Akiko and Haruka were in a seiyuu studio. This was their first after recording session. Haruka and Akiko didn't know what an "afureko" was. They were told to do the "gaya", but they didn't know what it was.

Then some seiyuu came into the studio. Takeshi [Kusao Takeshi] came in. Then some others came. Finally Tomokazu came in. The girls immediately recognized him.

The seiyuu did their voice work (some action anime). Then it was time for the "gaya" (extra voices). Akiko and Haruka went to mikes.

Everyone was told to do voices of people running away. Everyone, including Akiko and Haruka, screamed out and did the voices. While they were all doing the voices, Takeshi (who was standing next to Akiko) tried to pick up Akiko. He asked her out to bowling. But Akiko refused him.

Later that night, both Akiko and Haruka were tired from the seiyuu work. But Haruka said that she decided that she was going to become Tomokazu's girl friend.

They were in the karaoke room, and they heard a funny voice. It was the creature who was watching them from the bushes. The creature was named Myuu, and both the girls were shocked to see a "stuffed animal" talk.

But Myuu told them that he was the one who watched over them when they were kids, and came to this planet from Voiceland. Akiko believed him, and became friends with Myuu right away. But Haruka didn't want to believe it.

Later Haruka was walking outside by herself. She couldn't believe the story Akiko had told her. Then the stalker came. This time he was with Buzama. Haruka thought they were fooling around, but then the stalker transformed into the alien right in front of Haruka. They said that they were going to use Haruka as bait to get Voicelugger Ruby.

The aliens took Haruka to a warehouse. Haruka was surrounded by the underlings, while the stalker grabbed her.

Meanwhile, Akiko was in the karaoke room, and she "heard" Haruka's screams. She ran to the warehouse, and faced the aliens.

"Voicelugger!" Akiko cried out, and she transformed into Voicelugger Ruby.

Haruka hid and watched as Ruby fought. Ruby easily defeated the underlings, and also beat the stalker.

Ruby said, "I've been watching TV and experimenting for this."

Then Buzama came and fought Ruby. He was too strong for her. He said he wanted her voice stone. Buzama tossed Ruby around.

Myuu came, and told Haruka to transform and fight. But she said that she couldn't. Ruby kept getting beaten, as Buzama was too strong.

Then Haruka asked Myuu what she should do. Myuu said, "Your body should remember."

Then Haruka thought back, deep in her memories. She recalled Voicelugger Gold talking to her.

Then Haruka cried out, "Voicelugger!" and she transformed into Voicelugger Rose.

Rose came to Ruby's aid. Then Buzama told stalker to attack. The stalker attacked Rose, but Rose was way too strong for him. Rose told Ruby to stay out of it, as she wanted to beat him up herself, because he had touched her.

But Ruby said, "Let me beat him up too.."

Then Ruby and Rose used a combination "sonic wave" attack, and the stalker got disintegrated.

1 - 3 UNMEI GA HITOTU NI NARU TOKI

At Genbar's hideout, Gamma was upset at Buzama for not getting the voice stones. Genbar appeared and said that he would give Buzama one last chance.

Akiko went to the recording studio, while Haruka stayed at home.

Takeshi was also at the studio. He asked her to sit next to him, but Akiko didn't. After work, Takeshi asked Akiko out, but she refused him. He was very pushy, and kept asking and asking, but Akiko kept refusing him.

Meanwhile Haruka was at home feeling upset that it was Akiko who got to go to work.

When Harka went out by herself, Buzama appeared. He said that he would be able to defeat her if she was alone. Haruka was very scared, and couldn't transform into Voicelugger. Then Tomokazu came out of nowhere, and beat up Buzama, with some acrobatic moves. Then Tomokazu and Haruka ran away.

When Haruka got home, she told Akiko about it. Akiko was disappointed that Haruka didn't fight, and she was upset that she had to get help from a normal human. But Haruka was happy as she was in love with Tomokazu, and wanted him to come to her rescue all the time.

But Akiko was complaining about Takeshi being so pushy.

Buzama couldn't believe that he was beaten by a normal human. He wondered if he had gotten weaker by coming to earth.

[CM break]

That evening Akiko and Haruka went to do the laundry. Then on the way home, Buzama and his men were waiting for them. But Haruka wanted to escape. Akiko yelled at her and told her to fight.

Akiko and Haruka transformed, and started fighting. But there were too many of them. They used the sonic wave, but Buzama blocked it.

They kept fighting, but Buzama was too strong. Ruby got beaten up. Then Rose also got beaten up. Buzama said that he wouldn't kill them, as he only wanted their voice stones.

Then two more Voiceluggers appeared to rescue Ruby and Rose. It was Voicelugger Emerald and Voicelugger Sapphire. But Buzama was still too strong for them.

Then they all attacked Buzama, and used the sonic wave together. Buzama got disintegrated.

After the battle, Rose asked who Emerald and Sapphire were. Then Emerald and Sapphire transformed back (their mask disappeared). Tomokazu and Takeshi said that they knew that they were the Voicelugger all the time. So they trained their bodies, and voices by becoming seiyuu.

Haruka was very happy that Tomokazu was a Voicelugger. But Akiko didn't seem too happy about Takeshi.

Voicelugger Gold came, and watched them from a distance. But he was still injured, and had to leave the fighting to the other four.

1 - 4 ANDROID PAI NO KOMORIUTA

Genbar was on his ship in the "phantom zone" (or wherever they are hiding). He asked Gemma why it was taking so long to harvest the voice crystals. Gemma appeared very apologetic and afraid of Genbar. But they had a plan to get them from the Voicelugger team. Akiko and Haruka got a chance to be in another show.

Later, Akiko was with Takeshi in an aquarium apparently on a semi-date. Akiko was talking about what it was like to be Voicelugger and to be a hero. I think that she said it was very exciting.

Suddenly, Akiko got a psychic message from Voicelugger Gold. She closed her eyes. In her mind, she could see Gold, who was still badly injured, give her a warning. He mentioned that the bad guys were coming to harvest something from them.

Takeshi during this time thought that Akiko wanted him to kiss her as she had her eyes closed. Takeshi leaned in close with puckered lips. Akiko snapped out of her reverie just in time and slapped Takeshi. Takeshi looked pretty confused by all of this. (This was pretty funny).

Akiko must have been very upset as they ended the date shortly after that. Takeshi kept waving to Akiko, but Akiko never turned around or waved back. He looked a bit dejected.

Akiko walked back home and realized that there was something happening as the staff was standing around staring at something. It turned out that a robot named Android Pai was cooking dinner in the bar's kitchen area.

Akiko and Haruka were sitting around the dinner table confused. Somehow this robot appeared, knew all of their names (even their secret identities), and asked to become their faithful servant. The two girls were wondering if they could trust her.

Eventually Akiko got too hungry and began shoveling the food that Pai had cooked into her mouth. Haruka was shocked as they hadn't figured out if Pai was legit or not. But Haruka couldn't stand watching Akiko eating all the food so she began stuffing herself as well. By this they assumed that Android Pai was a good person after all.

Later, after the girls went to sleep, Pai went outside and called up Gemma on her communicator (a rice ladle). It appeared that the plan was working well.

The next day, Akiko and Haruka went to a recording party and brought Pai with them. Not too many people seemed overly surprised by this robot. Akiko found a person that looked just like Voicelugger Gold. Akiko called him "Gold", but the guy didn't know who or what she meant. Akiko quickly apologized and left.

Later that day, the two girls were in the recording studio for their show. Everybody was standing outside watching them, including Android Pai. Suddenly, some of Genbar's goons appeared and quickly pushed everybody outside the recording studio away. They grabbed Pai and showed the seiyuu inside the booth (a bit too obvious, I think) that they were kidnapping her.

Akiko and Haruka quickly ran after them. Akiko was chasing them in the drainage ditch where the goons were running (while holding Pai over their heads). The two girls fought without transforming and eventually the kidnapers ran away.

That night, Akiko got sick because she had been running around in the cold water. Android Pai wanted to know why did they do it. Haruka suggested that everybody should go to sleep. Akiko said that she didn't mind doing it because they were all friends. Haruka pretended to sleep during this time.

Pai reported again to Gemma on her communicator. She sounded like she didn't want to finish the mission. But she quickly changed her mind and said that she would do it tonight.

Everybody went to sleep. Or at least, they pretended to sleep. Akiko had a dream where she remembered when she was a young girl and Pai was her friend. Akiko woke up just as she saw Android Pai coming at her.

Some time later Myuu came home. He noticed that nobody was there. Android Pai had left a message on their video player saying that she had captured Ruby. Myuu ran off to the recording studio where Takeshi and Tomokazu were working. Myuu told them to come quickly.

Android Pai was seen in some tunnel with Akiko trapped in a force field. Pai had already taken Akiko's voice crystal. Haruka was there and had transformed into Voicelugger Rose and was telling her to let her go. Then Voicelugger Emerald and Sapphire appeared and the three all challenged Pai. But Pai threw lightning at them and threatened that she'd kill Akiko immediately if they got any closer.

Pai opened a gateway to the phantom zone and it began sucking Akiko into it.

The Voiceluggers yelled at Akiko to snap out of it. Akiko had another flashback when she was a little girl with Pai. Back then, Android Pai sang a lullaby to Akiko to help her sleep. Akiko began to croak out the song. She told Pai that only she could help her.

Pai told Gemma that she wasn't sure of this plan, and asked to let them go. But Gemma refused and warned her that there would be severe consequences if she disobeyed. Android Pai thought about it and then dropped Akiko's force field. Then she threw back her voice crystal and Akiko quickly transformed to Voicelugger Ruby. Gemma told Pai that he would have his revenge.

With the four Voiceluggers, they combined their powers and destroyed the gateway.

Afterwards, the five of them were walking home. They were happy to see that Android Pai was a good person after all and they were happy to make her part of the team. Just then a laser beam from far away came and tore off Android Pai's head. This was followed by a distant, evil laughter.

1 - 5 ADEYAKANA AKUMA, SONO NAMA E HA IRA SHRINE

1 - 6 AIYUENI, ZAGARAUSU

Ira Shrine was sitting on her throne, being pampered by her robo-goons. In the background, a painting of a mouth moved its tongue as she sat there. For some reason, Zagarausu appeared and asked for help. But Ira just kicked him away.

Akiko was in a musical instrument store. Takeshi appeared but she ignored him. There was a microphone in the middle of the store, and Takeshi acted out his seiyuu routine. Akiko joined in and Takeshi was able to start a brief conversation with her. Akiko was very interested in looking at the banjos.

Meanwhile, Haruka and Tomokazu were in a recording studio and they were speaking the catch-phrases for a radio station. Afterwards, they walked to the bus stop. Haruka was talking to Tomokazu while they waited. Then Haruka leaned her head on his shoulder. Tomokazu nervously put his arm around her. When the bus left, Haruka waved goodbye to Tomokazu. However, Zagarausu was standing right behind her, waving goodbye as well. Then Haruka turned around and saw him...

You see Akiko and Takeshi standing by a bridge. Akiko was strumming her banjo that she had just bought (very stiffly, I might add). Just then Haruka appeared and looked really happy. Akiko and Takeshi were very shocked to see that Zagarausu was with her.

They all went to the restaurant. Akiko and Takeshi stared at Zagaraus in total confusion. Amazingly enough, none of the other patrons did this. In fact, the waitress seemed to not mind serving this mutant vegetable/mollusk person. Akiko asked if he was hungry, but Zagaraus said that he was okay. I don't think that any of them knew what he would have eaten anyway. There was some long discussion, but the gist is that Zagaraus wanted to become a good guy. He kept talking about his "idol oujousama" and how he wanted to be like her.

Myuu was hopping by the area (it looked more like a plastic figurine suspended by fishing line), and Takeshi asked it to come join them. Myuu, when it saw Zagaraus, freaked out very badly. From what I could tell, Myuu knew that he was an agent of Ira Shrine. Zagaraus said that she was the "idol oujousama". Everybody was very shocked. But the monster said that he wanted to become human and become good again (or be just like his "idol"... something like that).

Haruka concentrated and formed a telepathic link to Android Pai. Pai was actually shopping at a fish market at the time. Haruka said that they needed to talk to her. But the conversation was interrupted when the fishmonger asked if she wanted a certain fish (waving it in front of her face). Pai immediately said that she wanted one.

Later, Pai met all of them in the park. But Pai couldn't use her power to convert the monster into human form. She later went to some electronics shop and drew plans (or more accurately, crudely waved her hands over a photocopied piece of paper) for a device that would help her finish the job. The store owner said that it could be done. Everybody got excited. But the owner said that it would take a long time to get the parts.

While they were visiting a flower stand, Akiko gave the banjo that she had to Zagaraus as he expressed interest in it. They ended up in some underground train passageway. Zagaraus played the banjo and sang a happy song. I don't get why he was doing this, as he didn't have a bucket to collect coins or anything. But in any case, he sang pretty good for a mutant. Takeshi seemed pretty moved by it. Later, Zagaraus and him were in the recording studio. Takeshi had a guitar and provided backup vocals to Zagaraus's song. The other Voicelugger teammates watched from outside.

In the park, Pai tried again to use her power (assumedly with the enhanced device), but it was to no avail. Zagaraus looked like he was going to stay that way for a time. Just then, Ira Shrine appeared in the park with them. She was very disappointed that Zagaraus had consorted with the enemy. Akiko was going to punch her out, but Zagaraus guarded Ira and he got floored with Akiko's punch.

Suddenly, a cylindrical force field appeared around Zagaraus. Akiko, Haruka, Takeshi, and Tomokazu all pounded on the field but it didn't budge. Finally, the two guys had to pull the girls away. Then a huge energy bolt shot down the middle of the field and blew Zagaraus to bits. As they were in the park, leaves flew from the blast site and landed on the four shocked good guys. Ira Shrine wasn't the least sentimental and ordered her robo-goons to attack the Voiceluggers. All four of the Voiceluggers transformed and began fighting the inept robo-goons. Finally it was a showdown between Voicelugger Ruby and Ira Shrine. They fought and finally it came down to the "ultimate blow" and they both rushed at each other. Ira was hurt badly, but she teleported out of there.

After the battle, Sapphire screamed in agony as he had lost a good friend. Ruby said that she wouldn't forgive Ira Shrine. In time, everything went back to "normal" so to speak. They continued on their seiyuu careers, did chores, had fun. Zagaraus's single was seen playing as a hit song on the radio near the flower stand where Akiko gave the banjo. In the park, the Voiceluggers had erected a gravesite. It looked more like a mound of leaves. Zagaraus's banjo was shoved in the center, standing upright, serving as the grave marker.

1 - 7 AYAUSHI SUPER HERO! HOERU DAISOUSASEN

At some police station, the police chief was asking for help because of recent "strange" attacks in the city. I think that he wanted to hire some "supercops". The supercops agreed to help out the regular police force. (In the background, you can see posters for Nadesico's Prince of Darkness movie). Meanwhile, Akiko was at an amusement park hosting a live-action TV show event. Haruka and Tomokazu were working as security staff in the back. I think the sentai show was called "Voiceman".

Akiko was asking the audience to say "Konnichiwa!". But the crowd just mumbled it back with little enthusiasm. She asked again and again to do it more "genki", but she got the same result every time. Incidentally, I can say from personal experience that this is exactly how typical Japanese crowds act. (Otaku crowds are much different).

Takeshi was in the back dressing up as the evil lobster monster, Torutosu Kaijin. He didn't seem to feel very confident about his role. But when he put on the head of his rubber uniform, the suit became alive. It turned out that Irashrine had set him up, and the suit was in fact a monster.

The show started, and Akiko pretended to be attacked by hooded "bad guys". Torutosu Kaijin appeared and began to beat up Akiko. Akiko whispered why he wasn't following his lines and said that he was getting a little too "excited" about his role. Takeshi said that he wasn't in control. Akiko didn't understand but soon she was being choked. Akiko slugged Torutosu Kaijin pretty hard and it went down face first and flopped on the ground.

Akiko asked the audience to assist her to call for "help" (following the script). But the heroes never showed up. Apparently they had been knocked out by Torutosu Kaijin prior to the shows' start. Torutosu Kaijin finally got back up and began tackling Akiko. Akiko said that it was a nice save, but the monster began choking her pretty badly. Meanwhile, the show's manager was watching and saying that Takeshi was a really good actor. Haruka and Tomokazu figured out that something was really wrong and ran up to the stage. They tried to tackle the monster, but it was too strong as it had lightning shooting out of its prongs on its head. The audience seemed very confused by all of this.

At the police station, reports of a monster attack were given to the police chief. He said that he wanted the supercops down there immediately.

Back at the park, the stage manager was very upset and said that he would take care of it himself. He ran up there and punched Torutosu Kaijin several times. The monster seemed to not be affected at all by the hits and simply whacked the manager one time and he quickly went unconscious. ("Are you okay?" "Yes, I'm finnnne..." thud)

Akiko asked if they could transform but the others said not to because there was too many people here.

Then the supercops appeared. They introduced themselves, but then they were a little confused by the fact that they were fighting some bad guys in a event. But soon the hooded thugs from earlier went after them and they immediately went into action.

The supercops were pretty tough and wailed on the goons pretty easily. Finally, Torutosu Kaijin said that he would take care of them himself. With its shocking punches, it went through the supercops quickly. The cops were paralyzed from the electric shocks. The others seemed very disappointed that they couldn't handle it.

The bad guys began terrorizing the audience. One of the kids in the audience cried out for help from the Voicemen. Akiko said that it was her cue. The others seemed confused, but Akiko said that whenever somebody called for help, it was a hero's responsibility to respond.

She got on stage, and, with a little stage special effects (to cover up the "real" transformation), she transformed to Voicelugger Ruby. Then she began fighting the hooded thugs. It turned out that they were the robo-goons sent out by Genbar, and she took them out easily. Haruka and Tomokazu quickly transformed and helped her out.

Akiko kicked Torutosu Kaijin in the gut and Takeshi cried out in pain. Takeshi blacked out and the monster seemed to pass out, hunched over. But soon the monster revived himself, fully in control over the suit.

Voicelugger Rose and Emerald held Torutosu Kaijin's arms to keep him still. They were getting shocked pretty bad, but Rose told Ruby to finish it. Ruby did her "Voicelugger Screw Kick" special move and whacked one of the monster's antennas off of its head. The others then let him go.

The monster repeatedly tried to shoot lightning from his head, but couldn't since he was missing an antenna. Then the other Voiceluggers got together and used their special attack and blew the head (of the rubber suit) off of Takeshi.

Then Irashrine teleported into the scene and said that she would take care of things herself. She began taking on all three Voiceluggers, and she was doing a half decent job of beating them up with her lash. But Genbar ordered her to retreat and she teleported out of there.

The crowd was going nuts after all of this. They thought that it was the best show ever. The supercops finally regained consciousness and asked what happened. One of the audience members said that he missed the really great ending with the Voiceluggers saving everybody. The supercops didn't know what the heck was happening.

Then the Voiceluggers introduced themselves to the crowd. They asked Takeshi to join in. He quickly tossed off his suit and transformed. Ruby asked the stage manager for some smoke special effects to announce his "debut" as Voicelugger Sapphire.

Later, Tomokazu and Haruka were in the park. It was probably Valentine's Day since Haruka gave Tomokazu some chocolate. He said that it was delicious.

Meanwhile, Takeshi and Akiko were elsewhere in the city and were having another argument somehow. Akiko ran off without saying goodbye. Then she pulled out her chocolate (which she was probably going to give to Takeshi) and began to gorge on it herself.

1 - 8 HENSHIN

Akiko, Takeshi, Tomokazu, and Haruka were playing instruments in some "seiyuu band". (Or at least, pretending to play instruments). This was supposed to be a new way of promoting the group. Takeshi was the lead, I believe, so he had interviews afterwards with some magazines and such.

Tomokazu was attending a poem class, and was looking over a poem collection. Then a pretty lady with glasses sat next to him. Eventually they introduced themselves, and the lady said that she was some big producer or something. Tomokazu was really amazed. However, there was something unusual about the lady...

Meanwhile, Akiko was delivering a package to Ohmura Shuuji of the Voicelugger show. As you may know, Ohmura is played by Shocker Onno (who can never wear a baseball cap turned toward the front).

After the recording, Takeshi was outside the studio surrounded by a bunch of squealing female fans. They all wanted his autograph and such. He looked happy to get so much attention.

Akiko came out of the studio and saw him. She looked like she was a little jealous but she didn't say anything. Takeshi told the girls to wait a moment. The girls instantaneously stopped yelling and waving and just stood around mumbling quietly.* Takeshi went to talk to Akiko, but she quickly brushed him off. After Akiko left, Takeshi told the girls that he was "ready" and they resumed screaming and jumping as if nothing had happened.

Tomokazu and Haruka were eating in a restaurant. Haruka was wishing Tomokazu luck on his new job. But Tomokazu sat there and didn't talk very much. He appeared to be extremely focused on the script, and didn't care for much of Haruka's conversation. He looked pretty stoned to be honest.

Afterwards, Tomokazu said that he had to go meet a client. He left Haruka without saying goodbye. Haruka was wondering what had gotten into him and started following him.

Tomokazu was sitting in some abandoned truck somewhere by himself. Then the pretty lady showed up and started talking quietly to him. The lady had him under mind control and was giving him orders, but Haruka couldn't tell from the distance and it looked like he was fooling around with her.

The lady saw Haruka watching them and called out a greeting. Haruka came out and started talking to Tomokazu. But Tomokazu said that he didn't need Haruka anymore as he had a new girl. Haruka ran off crying.

Then Tomokazu just walked quietly away home. The lady transformed back into her true self--Irashrine.

Akiko was getting chewed out by her manager. In the background was a Magical Girl Pretty Sammy anime poster. Her manager was saying that Haruka wasn't coming into work, and since Akiko was her roommate/friend, she better tell her to come or she'd be fired.

Akiko found Haruka in a club. Haruka appeared to be drinking and fooling around with guys. It looked like she was real depressed. Akiko said that she had to come back to work. But Haruka said that she didn't care anymore. When Akiko pressed the issue, Haruka yelled at her and left the club.

Later, Myuu and Akiko were talking about each other. Myuu mentioned that things weren't working out between "Rose" and "Emerald". Akiko also had a discussion with Takeshi about it.

Haruka was back in some club getting hammered again.

Tomokazu was sitting in a playground with nobody else. Irashrine appeared and began "reprogramming" him psychically. Haruka had a telepathic image of Irashrine attacking Tomokazu. Haruka quickly ran to his location.

When Haruka got there, she saw the pretty lady. Then Voicelugger Emerald appeared and did a jump kick at Haruka. Haruka barely dodged the kick, but the kick landed in the ground resulting in an explosion from the impact. The rocks flying up injured Haruka's leg and she was bleeding. She appeared to be hurt and was stumbling.

The lady knew that Haruka was really Voicelugger Rose. Then she turned into Irashrine and ordered Emerald to destroy Haruka.

Emerald punched Haruka dead in the face, and she got a huge mark. But Haruka didn't fight back and instead told him to snap out of it. But he was still coming after her. Haruka screamed for everyone to save her. Akiko immediately sensed that Haruka was in trouble. Takeshi seemed to know that something was wrong, but he couldn't quite figure out what it was.

Meanwhile, Haruka was still getting trashed. Haruka managed to dodge a few attacks and grabbed Emerald. Then Emerald grabbed her, but didn't move for a bit. Haruka was telling him to wake up. Then she said that she loved him.

Emerald's mask disappeared and for a moment Tomokazu was there. Then he screamed in pain as he was losing control of his mind. He fainted, dropping his head while he was still standing. Haruka asked if he was okay. But he didn't say anything.

Suddenly the mask reappeared on his face, and he grabbed Haruka with both hands around her neck. He was squeezing hard, and he was lifting her off the ground. Meanwhile, a guy with white hair and sunglasses (at night) was watching them.

Akiko appeared and screamed out for Haruka. But Haruka had been choked the entire time. Blood came out of Haruka's mouth and then her arms went slack.

1 - 9 SHISAN

Akiko made it to Haruka, but she was lying on the floor and wasn't moving. Akiko shook her (violating plenty of first aid rules) and Haruka opened her eyes. So she hadn't died after all.

Later, Android Pai and Myuu were watching over Haruka in the hospital. Android Pai was wearing a nurse's outfit. The producer of the studio came over to visit. Haruka appeared to be comatose.

Takeshi was walking to his truck in the parking garage, but somebody was following him. He got in his truck and he was driving out of the garage, but somebody was standing in the middle of the road. Takeshi braked hard to avoid hitting him, but the guy was gone the next time he looked. The guy, who had white hair and dark glasses, was with him in the car.

The man, who called himself Chaos, knew that he was Voicelugger Sapphire and knew about Voicelugger Gold. They talked for a time. I believe that Chaos wanted him to do something.

Back at the hospital, Akiko said that Haruka had been really hurt mentally. Android Pai said that she would help Akiko. She held Akiko's and Haruka's hand and created a psychic link.

Inside of Haruka's mind, Akiko was surrounded by Haruka's memories. She saw that Voicelugger Emerald was choking her before she went unconscious. Akiko was calling out for Haruka, but Haruka told her to leave her alone. Akiko was talking to her, asking her what happened.

The psychic link broke, and Haruka sat up screaming. Android Pai asked Akiko what did she say to her. Pai tried to comfort Haruka, but eventually Haruka stopped screaming and fell back on the bed unconscious.

Later, Akiko and Takeshi were in the park talking. They were next to the grave of Zagaraus. Amazingly, it still had the banjo stuck into the ground. Takeshi said that he had to go do something.

Akiko was talking to Android Pai and Myuu. Myuu mentioned that you could make a Dimension Hole to reach Genbar's realm. Android Pai, if you recall, had made one in the past in an attempt to send Akiko to his realm. Akiko said that she wanted to go through it to save everyone.

That night, Akiko sat by Haruka's bed. She stayed there all night, and fell asleep. The next morning, Android Pai had prepared a meal for Akiko. She said that she had to be strong in order to bring back Voicelugger Emerald.

Meanwhile, Irashrine was being scolded by Genbar in the other dimension. Genbar wanted to get the other voice crystals right away. Irashrine said that she would get them.

Back on Earth, Android Pai was opening a dimension hole. Akiko transformed into Voicelugger Ruby and went into it.

Irashrine was with Voicelugger Emerald and was trying to pull the voice crystal out of him. But Akiko appeared before she could do it, and attacked her. Irashrine ordered Emerald to attack her. Emerald was beating Ruby silly as she wasn't fighting back. Emerald cast a sonic blast, and then he started choking Ruby.

At that point, Ruby kicked Emerald away. She finally got the courage to fight. Then Emerald rushed at her. Ruby did a flying kick to counter. They both hit each other. Ruby fell and appeared to be hurt. But then Emerald's gem cracked and he fell unconscious. Irashrine couldn't believe it.

Emerald appeared to regain control of his mind. He apologized for what he did to Haruka. Android Pai was having trouble keeping the dimension hole open. Emerald told Ruby to go through the hole.

Then Irashrine tried to attack Ruby. But Emerald blocked the blow. He got a large spear right through his chest. Irashrine electrified the spear, and Emerald was starting to die. Back at the hospital, Haruka could detect that Tomokazu was in trouble, and a tear came out of her eye. Then, Emerald took a hold of Ruby's hand and he threw her through the hole right before it closed.

Irashrine threw multiple energy bolts at Emerald. Blood came out of his mouth. Then he said good-bye to everyone and died.

Back on Earth, Android Pai was fried from overloading. Both Myuu and Akiko were passed out from the shock wave. Akiko woke up and noticed that she was still holding Emerald's hand. But as she looked, she realized that it was only Emerald's arm--it had been detached from his body. Akiko was horrified.

Meanwhile, Sapphire and Chaos were traveling in the Phantom Zone.

1 - 10 SAKEBI TO SASAYAKI

Irashrine was talking to Genbar. He was asking her what she was doing. But she went to Voicelugger Emerald's body and took his voice crystal. Then it seemed that Irashrine was rebelling against Genbar, as she wanted all the power of the Voiceluggers for herself.

After this, I really don't know what really happened. There was plenty of sitting around and talking. Most of it seemed to not make much sense without a good grasp of Japanese. Of course, since Voicelugger "borrows" shamelessly from Evangelion's ending, it probably wouldn't make much sense anyway. Here's a brief rundown:

Takeshi and Chaos wandered around in the Phantom Zone. Takeshi got to see the future as it would if Genbar got all the voice crystals. In other words, it was pretty bad.

They ended up finding three fairies which appeared to have small crystals, so maybe they were guardians of the voice crystals. They told them what they had to do.

Then Chaos found Voicelugger Gold. Chaos didn't seem to like Gold, perhaps because he was unable to protect the other Voiceluggers. It seems that Chaos came from another world which was destroyed by Genbar's goons as well. So it seems that Chaos wants to take over Gold's job. Chaos spent most of the episode beating the hell out of Gold.

Android Pai's head blew off again, probably from the psychic overload from the previous episode. As a result, Pai didn't have any lines this time.

Myuu only had a few appearances. As usual, its appearance was almost entirely unnecessary. The stuffed animal character appears to be in the show for no other reason but to sell toys.

Akiko and Myuu talked to Haruka, but she didn't listen to them. Apparently Haruka was still in shock over her attack with Voicelugger Emerald. She wasn't planning to return to the team any time soon. As a result, Haruka spent most of the episode shopping. (I swear that I'm not making this up).

Haruka did go to a church at the end, perhaps in prayer she could find an answer to her problems.

Akiko was trying to figure out what to do.

Meanwhile, it seems that Irashrine attacked the studio where everybody worked. Irashrine destroyed the place and severely injured the producer. Akiko went hysterical over this, and she had to be restrained by the police that were investigating the scene.

While in the park, Akiko was attacked by more of the underlings sent by Irashrine. She kept fighting them but more and more of them appeared. Finally, they all vanished suddenly. I'm assuming that Irashrine was only sending illusions to her.

At the end of the episode, Takeshi used his voice crystal and was talking to the fairies. Then a portal appeared in the Phantom Zone and he was sucked into it. He discovered that he was in the middle of a Tokyo street. But it seemed that nobody noticed that he was there and just walked right by him. Maybe it's one of those alternate dimension things.

1 - 11 REDEMPTION SONG HA UTAENAI

Takeshi was wandering around the old apartment. He went to the studio and found out about what happened to the producer. But it seems that nobody seems to recognize Takeshi. How very strange. Akiko was walking by a gang of thugs that was beating up a guy. But Akiko didn't even stop to help him. She just kept on going looking dejected.

Meanwhile, Takeshi was really perplexed. He was yelling for somebody to help him. He then saw Akiko and he was running after her.

Akiko was walking in some abandoned alley when suddenly a cage appeared around her. She tried to grab the bars, but they gave her a powerful shock. Then Akiko saw herself walking from outside the cage to her. The clone talked derisively about Akiko (the one in the cage). The two Akikos were having a long argument over things like whether she was really fit to be called a "hero" and stuff like that.

It appeared to vanish. Shortly afterwards, the cage fell apart. I guess the idea was to break Akiko's spirit. Or perhaps the whole thing was some illusion set up by the bad guys.

Meanwhile, Haruka was still shopping in store. But Haruka started to flip out because she kept having flashbacks when Voicelugger Emerald was choking her to death.

Takeshi heard her voice and he and Myuu ran to her. He was talking to her about the voice crystals and stuff. Perhaps it was information that he had learned from Chaos and the fairies from the Phantom Zone.

Akiko somehow was back fighting against the evil Akiko. The good Akiko was getting the crap beaten out of her.

In the Phantom Zone or whatever, Voicelugger Gold and Chaos were in some field where there were several windmills in the background. Y'know, the kind that are used to generate electricity, not the kind you see in Holland. They were talking for a short period of time.

Then they were fighting again.

Akiko was almost knocked unconscious by the evil Akiko. The good Akiko lost her Voicelugger uniform after she was thrown into a column. The goppedanger began to pull out her voice crystal.

Akiko screamed and then there was this flash of light. Akiko found herself riding some bus. The bus was being driven by Voicelugger Gold. They had a conversation with each other. Do you remember how Shinji often has those mental trips where he's riding a train near sunset, and he's talking to some entity, like Rei or himself? It's the exact same thing.

Akiko woke up from her dream and she managed to get the voice crystal back into her. She discovered that she was surrounded by Irashrine and a bunch of her cronies. Akiko transformed back into Voicelugger Ruby and began to kick all of their butts.

Meanwhile, Gold and Chaos were fighting still. They managed to push each other off a cliff and they were falling.

Haruka apparently went to a church and was praying. I think that she was trying to find some peace within herself, or perhaps she wanted to see if she could figure out what to do. She started to imagine that Tomokasu was still alive and they were going out on a date together.

Back at Irashrine and Akiko's fight, Irashrine used Emerald's voice crystal and powered up. Akiko couldn't fight her. Irashrine was going to make the final blow when suddenly she stopped.

Irashrine couldn't move because Genbar was using his power to stop her. Flames appeared around her as she heard Genbar's voice. Irashrine was thrashing around trying to attack him, but it was no use. Genbar then took Emerald's voice stone from her. Then for her betrayal, he sent a lightning bolt and killed her.

Genbar appeared to have transported himself into Tokyo.

1 - 12 AME NOCHI EGAO, EGAO NOCHI HARE

Genbar, who looked like a really bad garage kit, was in the process of taking the voice crystal. But Voicelugger Ruby stopped before he could send it to his world. Takeshi heard Ruby's voice and ran after her.

Haruka went to the top of a building and saw Genbar looming over Tokyo.

The voice crystal--floating in the middle of the sky--suddenly let out a bright burst of light. Haruka smiled and walked into the glow.

It appeared that she was somehow absorbed into the dimension where the voice crystal was. She began to hallucinate again, and dreamed that Tomokazu was there. Then she apologized to him and hugged him.

Ruby was trying to stop all of this from happening. But then a bunch of henchmen appeared and started to beat her up. They were armed with flexible swords. At first glance, I would dare say that they were made out of rubber.

Things weren't looking too good for Ruby. But at the last minute, Sapphire appeared and saved her. Then the two of them began to fight off the goons together.

Chaos appeared wherever Haruka was. He started to talk to her. He took off his sunglasses, and then his eyes lit up. Haruka realized that Tomokazu wasn't really there, but his body was somewhere else. Maybe there was a chance of saving him.

Then Haruka's voice crystal came out of her and flew around with the emerald one.

Genbar was there and tried to grab the crystals with his hand. Perhaps he was trying to absorb them into his body. But then the crystals began to glow extremely brightly. There was a huge explosion, and Genbar's ship was blown to pieces.

Meanwhile, Sapphire and Ruby were still fighting the hordes of henchmen. They appeared to be losing. As a last ditch effort, they combined their powers and shot their "sonic boom" attack, destroying all the bad guys at once. Takeshi fell to the ground as he had used up almost all of his energy for the final attack.

Then Akiko was feeling bad. Perhaps that she was lamenting that she couldn't do anything for her other friends. But Takeshi comforted her.

A bright light appeared near the two of them. It was Chaos. Then there was a lot of yapping which I didn't understand. Eventually Takeshi said goodbye to Chaos and Akiko and him walked off.

Back home, there was a technician that was working on repairing Android Pai. Myuu was there wondering where everybody was.

Ruby and Sapphire were in some desert area. Perhaps they had managed to get to Genbar's dimension. A gateway appeared and Genbar appeared before them.

Genbar's eyes lit up and Gemma appeared. Gemma was armed with a big sword and he was very powerful. The two Voiceluggers were getting the crap beaten out of them.

Gemma went to Sapphire and grabbed his face (the crystal). He pulled on it, and eventually he yanked out the crystal. This caused Takeshi to immediately lose his transformation and he passed out. Gemma sent the crystal to join the other two where Haruka was. Haruka knew that something bad had happened to Takeshi.

Ruby was then fighting Gemma on her own. She wasn't having much luck. Gemma grabbed her face and tried to remove her crystal. But then she used her super attack at close range to stop him--even though that meant she would take damage too.

Genbar was angry and just sent a lightning bolt and fried Akiko. She passed out and they got her crystal. Now all four crystals were assembled together.

Genbar started to create some monster--assumedly the ultimate being--using the power of all the voice crystals. But then Voicelugger Gold finally appeared and said that he would stop him. Genbar sent another lightning bolt, but Gold dodged it.

Gold started to fight the ultimate being, but he wasn't having much luck as it wouldn't even flinch at his attacks. The being grabbed Gold and started to shock him.

Gold had to use the ultimate attack. It was a huge column of energy that surrounded him. It ended up destroying both himself and the monster.

Then all the voice crystals went back to their respective owner. Tomokazu opened his eyes after his crystal went back into him. So he didn't really die after all. Although I'm wondering how his body got rebuilt after it was blown into little pieces.

Genbar merely laughed off the attack, perhaps saying that Gold had wasted his life. Akiko said that she wouldn't forgive him.

Meanwhile, Haruka and Tomokazu were standing together for real this time. Tomokazu apologized to Haruka for attacking her.

Akiko and Takeshi tried to fight Genbar with their weakened powers, but they were getting blasted. Genbar sent a fireball to burn them alive, but the attack got blocked. It appeared that Ruby and Emerald protected them.

The four Voiceluggers got together and retransformed, filling up some dead air time. Then all four of them shot their sonic attack at Genbar, and he exploded in a big fireball. As he was burning up, Genbar was giving out the usual prolonged death speech that all bad guys give when they bite it. You know, something like, "I can't believe it... It's impossible!" or "I'll get you meddling kids!" Then he disappeared and the world was saved.

Meanwhile Myuu was with Android Pai. She was still silent although she had been repaired. Suddenly, Pai's circuitry started working. Then Pai said, "Welcome home, everyone." Myuu looked outside and there was all four Voiceluggers coming toward them.

Then all of them got very happy and started to jump around. You know, sort of like when a contestant becomes a Double Showcase winner on "The Price is Right".

VOYAGE TO THE BOTTOM OF THE SEA

These were the voyages of the supersub Seaview, a TV spin-off from Irwin Allen's 1961 film epic of the same name and the first of his lucrative quartet of television sci-fi sagas. Seaview was a 600-foot-long atomic submarine capable of diving farther and faster than any craft in history and equipped with minisub, diving bell, a 'flying' sub and atomic torpedoes. As if to underline the view that there were no half measures about the Seaview even its creator and skipper was an admiral - Admiral Harriman Nelson, sailor-scientist head of the Nelson Institute of Marine Research. The crew's mission, though ostensibly scientific research, was to combat threats to world peace from anyone who felt a bit restless - be they foreign power, alien invader or one of many multi-tentacled monsters lurking in the gloomy depths. Nelson was played by Richard Basehart, and his principal sidekick among the crew was Capt. Lee Crane (played by David Hedison, star of the 1959 movie original of The Fly).

Submarine adventures were in vogue in 1964 - we gave America Stingray and they gave us Voyage to the Bottom of the Sea . . . The sub itself was a hand-me-down from the film Voyage, as were the sets, costumes, props and reel upon reel of underwater footage (Allen admitted that this saving in production costs was crucial to the TV series' birth). Special effects were masterminded by 20th Century Fox's William Abbott who picked up a brace of Emmys for his work on the show. And with the services of Oscar-winning cinematographer Winton Hoch, the series achieved a distinctive visual style.

But eventually that look became one of deja-vu, with the increasingly ludicrous plots and pictures being recycled more times than the crew's drinking water. In America, critics grew to loathe it, but Seaview kept on coming, for 110 episodes in four years, a persistence and stamina mercifully unmatched by British series (with only Doctor Who clocking up more episodes). Over here, Northern viewers were the first to embark on the voyage, in October 1964 (barely one month after its US premiere), and the series surfaced and resurfaced throughout the ITV regions over the next two decades or so, with every episode turning up in one area or another.

Based on Irwin Allen's 1961 feature film of the same name, which itself was heavily derived from Jules Verne's "20,000 Leagues Beneath the Sea", this depended on the "Seaview" submarine and its crew the same way that "Star Trek" depended upon the "Enterprise" and its crew. The Seaview had a glass nosecone, similar to the breast-domes of Barbarella's spacesuit, allowing great views of undersea wonders by all, said wonders being both earthly and extraterrestrial.

Retired Admiral Harrison Nelson had dreamed up the Seaview -- making him a sort of Hyman Rickover -- who now runs the top secret Nelson Institute of Marine Research at Santa Barbara, a cross between the Scripps Institute of Oceanography, JPL, and Naval Intelligence. It was set in the then-future 1970s. Seaview had a sister ship, "Polidor", which sank in episode #3. Harrison Nelson's chief assistant, and Seaview Commander, was promoted to Commander Lee Crane, and (in season #2) to Captain. In the real-life 1970s, the brainy assistant to Rickover was one Jimmy Carter, who wrote a Naval Postgraduate school thesis on the detection of targets by towed underwater arrays of microphones.

This real-life Jimmy Carter once saw a UFO after a few more drinks than usual at the Officers' Club, and swore that he'd tell all on becoming president, but I digress. In season #2, more hardware was added, such as the two-man "Sea Crab" minisub, and the "Flying Fish" a submarine which could fly (didn't Tom Swift, Jr. have something like that?). A surfer-dude Stu was added to the cast, and the show held onto a large audience share regardless of how preposterous the villains were in each episode, including an amusingly over-the-top Professor Multiple (Vincent Price) and his living puppets. Other bad guys included blobs, ghosts, lobstermen, mummies, pirates, robots, and intelligent seaweed. What, no "revenge of the samurai sushi?"

Voyage to the Bottom of the Sea was the first of Irwin Allen's four science fiction series produced in the 1960's. The series was based upon the feature film of the same name, however none of the film's stars carried over to the TV series. Set ten years into the future. Voyage to the Bottom of the Sea was about the exploits of the Seaview- the most advanced submarine ever built- and her crew. The Seaview was the brainchild of retired Admiral Harriman Nelson, who had formed the top secret Nelson Institute of Marine Research. In command of the Seaview was Commander Lee Crane, who was promoted to Captain in the show's second season.

Like all of the Irwin Allen series, the emphasis in Voyage to the Bottom of the Sea was on gadgets and special effects with both the story and characterisation suffering as a result. The series inherited from the feature film lots of expensive stock footage and the main sets of the Seaview. These sets cost much more to build than most TV series had to budget for their entire pilot episode!

Although the Seaview was a research vessel, missions often involved enemy agents attempting to sabotage or take over the ship. The enemy agents would always be from some unnamed country as to not offend future allies or severely date the programme. Other missions of the Seaview involved encounters with alien invaders and mad scientists (who for some reason or another needed the ship to conquer the Earth), mutated sea creatures and dinosaurs (stock footage from Irwin Allen's The Lost World could be used), Werewolves, mummies and ghosts also threatened the Seaview at least once. The second season of the programme saw the addition of a flying sub, allowing the pace of the show to speed up.

Producer for the series was Irwin Allen, the special effects were created by William Abbott (aka L. B. Abbott), the make was created by Ben Nye. The initial UK run for Voyage to the Bottom of the Sea began on the 10th October 1964, on ABC weekend television. The first two seasons of the show were shown, but only 13 episodes were shown in the second season, subsequent reruns of the series were made-up of episodes from more than one American series. The story consultant was Sidney Marshall, the director of photography was Carl Guthrie and the theme music was created by Paul Sawtell.

Famous actors to have appeared on board the seaview included Yvonne Craig (BATMAN), Michael Ansara (STAR TREK), June Lockhart (LOST IN SPACE), James Doohan (STAR TREK), Robert Duvall, Warren Stevens, Leslie Nielsen, George Takei (STAR TREK), James Darren (THE TIME TUNNEL), John Crawford, Vincent Price and Don Matheson (LAND OF THE GIANTS).

When Shakespearean actor Richard Basehart heard about a new TV series called Uoyage to the Bottom of the Sea, he asked his agent to set up a meeting with producer Irwin AJlen. Having wound up a successful film career, Basehart was intrigued by the idea of doing a submarine series that would take him to exotic ports of calJ each week. A week later, Basehart sat in Allen's office. The producers excitedly told the actor of an upcoming storyline where the Seaview would be grabbed by a prehistoric monster. Basehart broke into laughter. He stopped laughing when he realized they were serious.

"Richard confided to me that he couJdn't turn down the pilot because the money was too good," recaJls actor Mark Slade, who played crewman MaJone during the first season. "He was sure that it wouldn't sell. Well, on the first day of fiJming, he came up to me and said, 'My God, it sold!'" The series was based on the 1961 motion picture starring Walter Pidgeon and Joan Fontaine. It was an updated version of Jules Verne's 20,000 Leagues Under the Sea. The slightly eccentric Admiral Nelson, like Verne's Captain Nemo, had built his own submarine. When producer Irwin Allen pitched a weekly version of Uoyage to ABC, the network was interested. Allen, who wouJd go on to produce disaster films such as The Poseidon Adventure and The Towering Inferno, was dubbed the dean of TV science fiction when Uoyage and his Jater Lost in Space took off in the ratings.

"AJJen was one of the most creative people in the science fiction arena," says Thomas Moore, former president of ABC. "He grasped the Jules Verne material with an immediate recognition as to its convertibility to television. He surrounded himself with talented young writers, directors and special effects people." With Richard Basehart signed up as the admiral, producer Allen had to reel in actor David Hedison for the part of the sub's skipper, Lee Crane. Hedison wanted nothing to do with the series. "I had worked with Irwin Allen before on the Lost World fiJm," says Hedison. "As much as I Jiked him, I vowed never to work with him again or do that kind of a film again. In 1961, Irwin sent me the script for the Uoyage feature. He wanted me to play Captain Crane. I read six pages and turned him down flat. I lied to Irwin and told him I was doing another movie. I thought that was the end of it."

Robert SterJing was cast as the captain in the feature film, but when the series bobbed to the surface, AJJen was determined that Hedison would play Crane. The actor found the character a one-dimensional bore and turned it down again. "Irwin called me in New York," says Hedison. "I thanked him for thinking of me and told him I wasn't interested. I flew to the Cairo Film Festival, and he called me there. I made up more excuses. When I arrived in London a few days later to do a guest shot on The Saint with Roger Moore, Irwin was on the phone. It was 7 a.m. I said no! I said no again. I was looking for a different kind of show. I pleaded: 'Irwin, I'm half asleep. I can't think!' Then he said the magic words. No, not money. He said, 'Richard Basehart will be playing the admiral.' That did it. If Richard Basehart can do this shit, so can I. "Working with Richard was a joy. He wasn't an easy person, but we hit it off from the start. What a gentleman ... what an incredible human being ... and my God, what an actor! He made bad dialogue breathe. I learned a lot from him."

With his actors cast, Allen began filming the series in 1964. The series' first year, filmed in black and white, emphasized enemy agents and espionage, but there were also nightmarish scenarios where the submarine was pitted against killer robots, giant whales, humanoid amphibians, and monsters that slurped down corridors and ate people. Despite the first season's preference for adventure over drama, the stories were treated in a suspenseful, serious manner. The series was an immediate hit and dominated its time period for its first few months on the air.

Mark Slade recalls how Richard Basehart narrowly averted tragedy on the series' set during the filming of an early segment, "City Beneath the Sea." "We were ready to shoot a scene where the submarine is hit by a torpedo. We rehearsed the scene on the deck of the plywood sub on the backlot tank, and the explosives were set. For some reason, Richard asked to see the explosives go off before the scene was shot. His request caused some tension because it would delay filming, but Richard held out. The special effects crew set off the explosives, and it blew out a huge chunk of the sub's deck, right where the actors would have been standing. Richard just stood there and began singing, 'There's no business like show business,' and he went to lunch."

Another guest star, Joey Tata, recalls trying to fast-talk Irwin Allen into signing him up as a regular. "Irwin told me, 'Joey, I have enough cast members as it is. Don't worry-you'll work.' He was put to work in an early episode, "The Mist of Silence," as a crewman who is dragged from a South American prison and shot. "That scene was so powerful it was almost cut out," explains Tata. "Director Lenny Horn said to me, 'Joey, I don't know if we'll get away with this, but let's play this really straight.' So when the soldiers grabbed me, I yelled and screamed and struggled like crazy. After the rehearsal, somebody said to Lenny, 'Irwin's not going to like this scene.' Irwin didn't like drama unless it was well lit with explosions. Lenny looked over at me and winked. We shot the scene, and it was left in. After it was over, Del Monroe [Kowalski] said, 'Holy shit, Joey ... I got a terrible feeling watching that.'"

Another first season guest star, John Anderson, had second thoughts about accepting the role of a scientist in "Cradle of the Deep" (an episode David Hedison ranks as his least favorite). "When I read the script, I said, 'God almighty! All this guy does is blab about unlocking the secrets of life.' It was a one-dimensional character, and I wondered why I had even accepted the part." As Anderson struggled with the character, he noticed some unsettling behavior on the set. "By noon of the fourth day, I noticed that Richard Basehart, who had suffered through 25 segments by this time, was poking fun at the lines and snickering over inside jokes. I was shocked that Basehart, who was a good friend, was engaging in such destructive and insensitive behavior. After several hours of watching Dick indulge in this kids' shit, I decided to settle it. We went for lunch. I lit up my cigar and he had a drink. I said, 'Dick, I'm going to describe a situation that's been bothering me. You may not like it, but since you're the star of the show...' and he said, 'Yeah, damn it! I know I am.'

"I stopped him and said, 'Don't tell me your troubles, Dick. You're paid a lot of money to do this show, right?' He nodded. I said, 'Don't you have any other reasons for doing this show?' He replied, 'John, it's these damn scripts. They're the same thing every week.' I shook my head and said, 'Dick, I have tremendous respect for you. You're one of the greatest living talents in this business. But do you have any idea how hard it is for me, as a guest star, to make this thinly drawn character work while you're making jokes about the script?' He looked at me very grimly. I wasn't out to hurt him, but I could see that I had really gotten through to him. 'You're right, John,' he said. 'It's easy for me to kid the script, but it's got to stop.' He thanked me profusely and we went back to work. There was no more bullshit."

Anderson's co-star in the episode was a rapidly expanding blob aboard the Seaview. "I concentrated on making the story work," he recalls. "I couldn't look at the blob and say, 'Jesus Christ! What a sorry piece of shit that is! It's a pulsating bag with red ink in it. Do we really have to work with this dumb piece of shit?' Instead, I figured, 'Well, by God, it's a low-budget show and damn, that's the best blob they could come up with. So let's do it.'"

Novelist Jerry Sohl (Costigan's Needle) recalls that veteran writer Sy Salkowitz took an inventive approach to get out of writing a script. "Sy's agent had set up a meeting with Irwin Allen and Sy wasn't interested. He decided the best way to lose the assignment was to give Irwin the worst story ever. So when the two met, Sy said, 'Irwin, let's do a story where the president and the head of Red China board the submarine for a summit meeting.' Irwin just looked at him and said, 'Uhhuh,' with absolutely no enthusiasm. "Sy continued, 'The president suffers a stroke and is incapacitated.' Irwin showed a little more interest. 'Fortunately, there's a brain surgeon aboard and they fix him up.' 'Oh, that's interesting,' Irwin deadpanned. Sy continued, 'And the surgeon, who is one of the Red Chinese, is a woman!' Irwin just looked at Sy blankly. And Sy goes, 'And she's got tits that stick way out to here!' Irwin yelled, 'I'll buy it! I'll buy it!' (And he did-at least the idea, for the episode "Hail to the Chief.")

Voyage had surfaced in the top 30 during its first year, but it lacked the complete audience that ABC was seeking. To attract teenagers, a hip young sailor named Riley (Allan Hunt) was added during the second season. When Henry Kulky (Chief Jones) died of a heart attack while reading his script during the first year, Terry Becker was brought in as the new CPO, Chief Sharkey. The second season would be in color. The Seaview was also given a sleek refurbishment. The addition of a small flying sub allowed the writers to get the characters to different parts of the world.

Although Richard Basehart and David Hedison had campaigned to get a female regular on the show, a half-hearted attempt to make actress Susan Flannery a recurring character wasn't successful. Research showed that viewers wanted more monsters and action, not women. Indeed, female guest stars began to disappear as the second season progressed. It was a cost-cutting measure instigated by Irwin Allen. Under orders from the network to reduce budget expenditures, Allen grew to resent the extra time required to provide women with hairstyles and makeup. He put his money toward building bigger and better monsters. Terry Becker, now cast as Chief Sharkey, recalls, "My agent at the time didn't think I was right for the role. But the show's casting director, Joe D'Agosta, showed some film to Irwin from a show I had done called The Men, and Irwin wanted to meet me.

"So we met and he said, 'Okay, you're going in at minimum salary. If you show me that you can do this role, I'll raise your salary.' So we agreed on a raise. I went through the year and at an appropriate time, I said to Irwin, 'Am I coming back for another year?' He said, 'Yeah.' So I mentioned the raise. He said, 'What raise? Forget it!' So I said, 'Okay, then kill me off.'" At the conclusion of the episode "The Sky's on Fire," Sharkey was blasted from the series. "Chief Sharkey commits hara-kiri by jumping on a grenade to save the ship," explains Becker, "and that was that. Irwin read every actor in town to replace the chief. I recall Harvey Lembeck was up for the part. However, during the screen tests, Irwin kept turning to director Harry Harris and saying, 'That's not my chief.' Harry replied, 'Look, you want Terry Becker. Call him and make a deal!' So he called me in. He's trying to charm me and I'm trying to charm him and we're both disgusting. I said, 'Look, all I want is my money.' So we came down to a 50 dollar difference. I started to get up to leave, and Irwin said, 'All right! All right! I'll give you 49 dollars.' And I stayed."

Sometimes Allen had to get inventive in attracting actors to play the monsters of the week. Actor Vic Lundin, who had played Friday in the 1964 film Robinson Crusoe on Mars, admits that his role as the Lobster Man "probably wouldn't have been played by any other actor unless they were really hungry!" Lundin was cast as the crafty crustacean after receiving a call from Allen. "He asked me if I could do an English accent. I said, 'Why, certainly, old man!' So I read for the director, got the part and went for makeup. I got a cup of coffee, sat in the chair, and suddenly everything went dark. They had put an object over my head, and seconds later they cut away slits for my eyes so I could see. Behold, I was Lobster Man! They dressed me up in a wetsuit that weighed 40 pounds, and they marched me over to see Irwin. He was in a conference when I walked in. I could barely talk through this mask. I said, very muffled, 'Irwin, answer me one question. Why the hell do I have to do an English accent for this thing?' He agreed to cut away part of the mask so that my mother could at least recognize me. Aside from the costume, it was a really good part. With the suit on, though, it became a spoof."

Lundin found out that Richard Basehart had an aversion to monsters. "Basehart was adamant about never being filmed with a monster. I was near him one day when a publicity photographer stopped to take a picture of the two of us. Basehart went absolutely ballistic on me and the photographer. I really thought he was going to kill us! He didn't want any photos taken of him with 'a monster.' He was a dedicated actor but very difficult to work with. From then on, I stayed away from him and just did my scenes." Voyage played out its last three years on Sunday nights, cornering a modest but loyal audience consisting mainly of children and women. One of the series' trademarks became the "Seaview stomp." Allan Hunt, who played crewman Riley, explains: "Every week, the submarine would be rammed or blown up and we'd go crashing from side to side. Actually, the sub set stayed level. They just tilted the camera to create the illusion that the sub was rocking. The explosions were just little puffs of smoke. When the sound guys added the big sound effects in the editing room, the result was devastating. It looked and sounded great." "Everyone who worked on the submarine got burned," claims actor Joey Tata. "When Irwin did explosions, he really did them. And a lot of times you'll see us closing these big, heavy doors on the sub, but they were really made of balsa wood. The sound guys added a heavy clank, but sometimes you can see the doors bounce."

"The propman would sit with a tin can and hammer," recalls director Sutton Roley, "and when he hit the tin can, the actors would fake their falls. It bothered the actors to do it this way. Richard Basehart was particularly embarrassed by the tin can, but it worked." Roley, whose distinctive style includes extreme close-ups and inventive dolly sweeps with the camera, incorporated his style into the creepy segment "The Phantom." Alfred Ryder guest-starred as the ghost of a World War I U-boat captain who demands Captain Crane's body. "Irwin had a very cut-and-dry approach," explains Roley. "He was a great believer in storyboarding. He had his artists draw every shot of the script beforehand. I can't work that way. Whenever you surprised Irwin by doing something different, he could be quite a shouter."

Roley decided to shoot a seven-page scene by having the camera dolly back and forth as the crew tries to track the approaching ghost ship in the control room. "The sub's control room was built like a real submarine, totally enclosed. I asked the grip, 'Does this sub come apart?' He said the whole side did. So I said, 'Rip the whole thing off!' and it was unbolted. This way I could shoot over the computers and give the scene some visual leeway. "We set it up and the cameraman shook his head. 'You're gonna get blurred images,' he said. I replied, 'Is that right? Well, this is the way we're gonna do it.' So the cameraman called up Irwin, and I was called to the phone. 'What are you doing down there?' Irwin yelled. 'You've got everybody upset.' I said, 'It's gonna work, Irwin. And I think you're gonna like it.'

"As we shot it, I had everybody against me, except for Richard Basehart and David Hedison. After the shot was completed, Basehart said, 'I knew we were okay, Sutton, as soon as I saw half of that Goddamned submarine set taken away. I'm tired of being stuck in here. It gives me claustrophobia.' We wrapped the scene at 2:30 that afternoon, which was unheard of. In the dailies the next day everyone was watching as my shot came up. When the scene was over Irwin suddenly tapped me on the shoulder. 'It really did work, didn't it?' They loved the episode so much that they made a sequel to it."

Terry Becker recalls a scene in "The Fossil Men." "Richard and I were supposed to be exploring this island, and I said to him, 'You know, Richard, this scene could be kinda funny.' He said, 'Yeah?' I said, 'Yeah. Watch me.' So we're looking around and I see these rocks walking toward us. I say, 'Admiral?' And he goes, 'Yeah?' and I say, 'Sir, the rocks are moving,' and he goes, 'Wow!' He turns and sees them. 'Yeah, the rocks are moving,' he says. We got right into it.

"Well, when the episode was run for the ABC executives, they cracked up. They fell on the floor in hysterics. Irwin stormed up to me and Richard and yelled, 'What are you guys doing? You're making a comedy out of this show. It's not a comedy!'" While Becker and Basehart developed a good working relationship on the show, Becker had to coax his co-star into becoming more sociable on the set. "Basehart would go to his dressing room or read a book because he didn't want to deal with people. I felt that when we had visitors on the set, we had a responsibility to go out and greet them. I'd ask Richard to join me and he'd say, 'Well, I want to read.' I'd say, 'Read outside. Say hello to the people. What are you, a recluse? This is part of your job.' So he did. Eventually, he grew to enjoy it."

By Voyage's third year, TV critics regularly fumed that it was a silly show and lambasted it for its outlandish plots. Voyage continued to serve up magic elves, mermaids and lobster men without pretension. The series never winked at its audience, and its relentless storylines of fossil men, clowns and mummies were played straight. Voyage had metamorphosed into true camp and bore very little resemblance to the semi-realistic stories of the first year. Another transformation occurred with the crew. During the first year, the Seaview's background sailors often had brief lines of dialogue. By the second year, budget cuts pared the extras to a bare minimum. "The Seaview supposedly had a crew of 125 men," recalls writer Robert Vincent Wright. "But you never saw more than a half-dozen or so actors."

The budget also rendered the background crewmen mute. Protocol requires that when a superior officer gives an order to a sailor, the sailor must verbally acknowledge that order. To save money on dialogue, the crewmen were reduced to acknowledging their orders either by nodding or by having an old voice-track of "Aye, sir!" dubbed over the scene. Being a Seaview crewman was also hazardous. By the time the submarine had finished its travels, a total of 77 crewmen had been blasted or vaporized. Although Captain Kirk on Star Trek always did a song and dance over losing a crew member, the redundancy of mourning his losses became a drag for Admiral Nelson. While watching the body of "Simpson" being taken away in "The Mummy," Nelson expresses his regret in such a weary tone that one surmises he couldn't care less.

As the series continued its monster-of-the-week format, the writers became desperate for new ideas. "There got to be a sameness with the series," says Robert Vincent Wright. "You can only be attacked by so many denizens of the deep. A writer would come in and say, 'Hey, I've got a great story about a giant frog!' Irwin would say, 'We've had too many giant frogs! Think of something else.' Once, Irwin asked me if I had something new. I said, 'Sure. How about an episode where the Seaview is attacked by a giant anchovy? There's a terrible battle, but the Seaview kills it.' Irwin asked, 'What happens then?' I said, 'The crew makes the biggest Caesar salad known to man.' Irwin snapped, 'Very funny!'"

By the fourth year, Terry Becker and his fellow cast members all shared the weariness of having to deal with weird creatures every week. "Certainly, as actors, we didn't want to do monsters. Just seeing another guy in a monster suit drove us up the wall. "We wanted to do other stories, but it was cheaper to put a guy in a rubber suit than to go out on location. We hardly ever got off that sub. When I joined the show, my hair was just thinning, and Irwin wanted me to wear a toupee. He said the chief might get involved with women. I said, 'Hey, that's an interesting idea. A woman falls in love with a bald guy and he scores!' But all of those ideas got cut out. We ended up making love to giant lizards."

"Richard Basehart was a consummate actor " , says Sutton Roley, "and he just stuck his tongue in his cheek and played the thing. I'd catch him on occasion and say, 'Richard, you're doing a little number here.' He'd smile and say, 'Ah, you caught me again.'" "Richard got himself screwed up with the amount of money he had to pay for his divorce," recalls casting director Larry Stewart. "Voyage was a way to make money. One day, network people from Japan visited the set. Through an interpreter, they asked him, 'How do you enjoy the scripts?' Richard replied, 'All I can tell you is that every Friday, someone in Irwin Allen's office flushes the toilet and the script ends up here.' The interpreter tried to explain this to the visitors and they looked totally bewildered." A year before his death in 1984, Basehart shared his perspective on the series. "I enjoyed doing Voyage part of the time," he said, "but a great deal of it was a chore. The trouble with any TV series is that it's going to be the same thing every week."

Allan Hunt recalls that, while Basehart and David Hedison were good friends, there was an amusing cultural gap between them. "Richard read books on Churchill; David sang Beatles' songs. Between scenes, David would sing little melodies. Richard was always very silent, deep in thought. At the time, there was a hit song called "Henry the VIII" by Freddy and the Dreamers. David was singing 'I'm Henry the VIII, I am' to himself and Richard turned to him and said, 'What are you singing?' David said, "'Henry the VIII.'" "Don't you ever listen to KROA?" David launched into this 'I'm Henry the VIII, I am.' Richard just looked at him and said, 'That's terrible.'"

Voyage's success with young viewers inspired a flood of merchandise, including a comic book series, games, bubblegum cards and Seaview models. There was also a spoof on the prestigious Hollywood Palace TV show in 1967. David Hedison was invited to take part in the skit. "I played Captain Crane, of course, and Milton Berle played a crazed, desperate crewman," chuckles Hedison. "When the Seaview started its rock and roll, the audience was thrilled. The laughter was nonstop. The skit was very successful." After sailing through some plausible-and many implausible-adventures, the Seaview was dry-docked. With 110 episodes completed, there was a consensus that four years of nautical mayhem had exhausted the Seaview's mission roster.

"The overall strengths of Voyage were the acting and the photo effects," reflects Hedison. "The weaknesses were too many monsters, and not very creative ones at that. I would have been happy to continue with the series if I had a guarantee that I'd never see another monster. But by year four, I knew it was doomed. The storylines were ludicrous, the writing team of William Woodfield and Allan Balter had left, and we had lots of plant men, fossil men, fish men, you name it. Four years was nice. Four years working with Richard Basehart was particularly nice. I still miss him." The series found some success in syndication after leaving ABC in 1968, and it has spawned its share of fan interest. "Recently, I did an L.A. talk show," says Joey Tata, "and the hostess said, 'I remember you from Uoyage to the Bottom of the Sea!' So I got up and I did the Seaview stomp ... four steps to the left, four steps to the right. The audience was on the floor! It's great to find out that you're part of a cult show."

CAST NOTES

Richard Basehart (Admiral Nelson): Born 1914. His film career included Titanic (1953), La Strada (1954) and Moby Dick (1956). The Emmy awardwinning actor was the main title announcer for the series Knight Rider (1982-86). Basehart died shortly after providing the closing narration for the 1984 Summer Olympic Games in Los Angeles.

David Hedison (Captain Crane): Born 1929. Hedison is known to fans as The Fly (1958). Shortly after Uoyage wrapped up, he moved to England and got married. He returned to America in the early 1970s and became one of TV's most visible guest stars. He also appeared as Felix Leiter in the James Bond films Live and Let Die (1973) and License to Kill (1989). Hedison played a recurring villain in the daytime series Another World (1990-95).

Terry Becker (Chief Sharkey): Born 1932. A New York stage actor who turned to producing and directing in 1968, Becker recently returned to acting, explaining, "It's a group called Theater West in L.A., and I'm having fun." He finds people still recognize him as Sharkey. "I went to Pittsburgh for a trade show and everyone recognized me as the chief. There's an audience out there that still respects the show."

Robert Dowdell (Chip Morton): Born 1933. Initially, producer Irwin Allen didn't want Dowdell for the Chip Morton role. Recalls Allan Hunt: "Irwin and David Hedison were screening a scene from the TV series Stoney Burke (1963). Bob Dowdell was playing a rodeo rider whose back was broken, and he was dying in Jack Lord's arms. When the lights came up, David was very moved by Bob's performance. Irwin just had a blank look on his face and said, 'I don't like him ... he doesn't have a sense of humor.'" Nevertheless, Dowdell landed the Uoyage role. A real estate expert, he continues acting in TV guest roles and commercials.

Del Monroe (Kowalski): Born 1931. Monroe was the only Uoyage cast member who also appeared in the 1961 Uoyage film (his movie debut). "Del was a rather shy, extremely gentle, hard-working actor," recalls actor Mark Slade. "During Uoyage's first season, he was also moonlighting at an aerospace plant to support his family." Monroe continued acting into the 1980s.

Allan Hunt (Riley): Born 1945. As a science fiction buff, Hunt found his role on Uoyage a dream come true. However, in 1966 he was drafted by the army and had to leave the series. He resumed his acting career in the 1970s. He's also a director.

Paul Trinkka (Patterson). Trinkka's last TV appearance was on Rod Serling's Night Gallery in 1972. He was in his early thirties when he died in 1973.

Henry Kulky (Chief Jones): Born 1911. A former wrestler, Kulky began his acting career in the 1940s, usually as a thug. His TV series included roles on The Life of Riley (1953-58) and Hennesey (1959-62). Kulky died of a heart attack in 1965, during production of the Uoyage episode "Cradle of the Deep."

Richard Bull (Doc): Born 1924. Best known as the patient Mr. Oleson on Little House on the Prairie (1974-83).

Arch Whiting (Sparks): Whiting left acting in the late 1970s shortly after starring in the Saturday morning series Run Joe Run (1974-75). "Arch told me he was going to Paris to become a cinematographer," says actor Joey Tata. "That's the last time I saw him."

Nigel McKeand (Kelly): McKeand is astonished when he learns that his Uoyage character had a name. "I usually had one line per week, like, 'We're sinking!' or 'There's a monster dead ahead!' The actor manned the Seaview's sonar controls for the series' first season. He admits the role didn't stretch his acting abilities. "I never left the submarine. I'd just sit there twiddling the dials. I had always considered Uoyage as basically a kids' show, but the cast was terrific." McKeand and his wife Carol later produced the 1970s series Family.

1 - 2 THE CITY BENEATH THE SEA

While investigating the disappearance of research ships in the Aegean, the Seaview is damaged by a bomb. Captain Crane goes ashore, and pretends to be a diver for hire. The Captain meets an ex-diver, now a mute due to a tragic accident, who claims to have seen a "city beneath the sea". Crane gets hired by the "bad guy", but his cover is soon blown. He is taken prisoner and nearly loses his life.

Wr Richard Landau

Dir John Brahm

1 - 3 THE FEAR MAKERS

After Seaview's sister ship, Polidor, is lost on an experimental shakedown deep dive, Seaview is dispatched by Nelson to discover the cause of the sinking. Two psychologists are assigned to the monitor the crew and their behavior. They are also the same scientists that developed an experimental nerve gas, called the Fear Gas, which heightens the senses and causes fear in those that are exposed. One scientist is working in coordination with foreign powers to cause Seaview to sink as well. However, a strong willed Nelson manages to suppress his fears, and guide the Seaview to safety.

Wr Anthony Wilson

1 - 4 MIST OF SILENCE

Seaview is sent on a political recon mission to an unstable South American country, where a dictatorial General has drugged the president and taken over. Freedom fighters have sprung up to control the take over. When the South American nation's president is over due for mid ocean meeting, Crane and several crewmen board the President's yacht, floating empty in mid-sea. They enter a mist where they are drugged into unconsciousness. Waking up in a South American prison, the men are taken out to the courtyard, one per hour, and executed. All will die unless Crane breaks his oath and confesses what to the details of the Seaview and his mission. Nelson manages to effect a rescue with the assistance of the freedom fighters.

3 - 23 DOOMSDAY ISLAND

While Nelson and Sharkey search by air for an uncharted island, Seaview brings aboard a gigantic egg from the bottom of the sea during a routine specimen collection. It later hatches a fully grown, orange creature which kills a background guy and tosses Kowalski around the missile room. Nelson returns and (in a very un-urgent manner) has the crew hunt down this grunting thing as it terrorizes the crew. Later, Crane and Kowalski take the flying sub out to investigate the area, crash landing near the uncharted island. Another orange creature (one that speaks and is the leader) captures them and brings them to creature HQ. The monsters are aliens from Scorpius which are trying to hatch millions of eggs. Seaview experiences a sudden power overload and blows up, killing all hands aboard. When Admiral Nelson (who was at the Nelson Institute at the time of the accident) hears of the destruction of the Seaview, he gets an impossible to refuse offer from Mr. Pem (who survived from A Time To Die): in exchange for the use of the sub's nuclear reactor, Pem will transport Nelson back in time to before the explosion which destroyed Seaview. Once back in time, Pem re-energizes his time travel device and brings the sub back even further in time to the American Civil War. Before the crew has time to absorb this, the ship is boarded by Major General Benedict Arnold! Now Nelson has to stop Pem's far-reaching plan to take over the world and avoid the explosive disintegration of Seaview.

VOYAGERS

Phineas Bogg is a member of a group of specialist time-travellers called Voyagers, who nip back and forth in time, via a device called the Omni, putting history to rights. That could mean anything from making sure the Wright Brothers get off the ground, to keeping George Washington on the right side, from helping Spartacus get out of jail to organise the slaves' revolt to making sure the baby Moses is found by the right people.

By mistake, however, Bogg lands in the Manhattan bedroom of young Jeffrey Jones, where, unfortunately, Bogg's all-important travel guide is eaten by Jeffrey's pet dog. Without it, Bogg doesn't have a clue how history's great events are supposed to turn out, but luckily Jeffrey knows his dates and agrees to accompany Bogg on his travels. The format usually saw them visit two or three historical hot-spots each episode, at the end of which Meeno Peluce, who played Jeffrey, would urge his young viewers to seek out more information.

History's a tenuous thing - it doesn't just happen, it needs a little nudge here and there to make sure everything falls into place. That's the premise behind this US children's time-travel adventure series of the early Eighties. Juvenile/educational science fiction about two time travellers making sure that historical events happen as they're supposed to (ripped off from Poul Anderson's "Time Patrol"). When his Way-back, I mean "Omni", breaks down, Time Cop Phineas Bogg's history book is eaten by Manhattanite Jeffrey Jones' dog. Fortunately, young Jones knows lots of history, and kids in the audience were encouraged to go to the library to find out more. Not a bad idea, if it ever worked. The series ran for one season in America, while in the UK it showed up on Sky in the early Nineties.

Voyagers! was a series about time travel that was designed to be both entertaining and educational. The Voyagers, although seen in full only in one episode, were a group of people operating from a point in the not too distant future who have invented time travel. They have sent agents into the past to correct history when it goes wrong. It seems that at times some people destined for greatness, somehow get side tracked and find themselves in the wrong destiny. Examples of this are: Babe Ruth giving up on baseball because he cannot pitch and Franklin Roosevelt becoming a filmmaker.

Phineas Bogg is one such agent, he and other Voyager agents have each been given an Omni. The Omni is a pocket sized device that allows its user to travel through time. it also has a red light the lights up whenever history needs correcting.

One day Phineas' Omni malfunctions and he finds himself in the bedroom of Jeffrey Jones, a contemporary orphan boy living an unhappy life with his aunt and uncle. Normally this would not be a big problem, however it becomes one when Jeffrey's dog eats Phineas's guidebook. The guidebook is the Voyager's guide to history as it should be, allowing them to determine what events need to be corrected, when the red light comes on. Phineas discovers that there is a viable alternative to going back to his bosses and asking for a new guidebook, something he does not want to do. Jeffrey it turns out is an avid history buff and knows just as much as the guidebook did. Phineas thus takes Jeffrey along as a companion: and by utilising Jeffrey's vast knowledge of history Phineas is able to do his job.

The malfunction in Phineas' Omni which caused him to land in Jeffrey's bedroom, also prevents it from travelling any later than 1982. This helps keep the show true to its educational nature, in the past where only real people and events can be encountered. Each episode of Voyagers! would have Phineas and Jeffrey meet several famous historical figures. At the end of the episode Meeno Peluce would step out of his Jeffrey Jones character to inform the audience that they can find out more about the famous people they have just seen by going to the library. Voyagers was produced by Jill Sherman, co-producer was Robert Steinhauer.

The premise of this show was to take history and toss it up into the air. When it comes back down in a jumble, the Voyagers have to put it back together like a jigsaw puzzle. What if Franklin Roosevelt had become a movie director instead of a politician? What if the Russians had landed on the moon before the Americans? What if the Mona Lisa had gone down with the Titanic? The fun of Voyagers! was in its speculation about what could have happened in history. Every week, the two voyagers fixed history and imparted some historical knowledge to their (mainly) youthful audience.

Voyagers! secured only a small audience, but it did succeed in conveying the romance of going back in time and meeting famous people. Creator James Parriott had wanted to do the show for years. "Jeff Sagansky [at NBC] and I got our heads together, and we came up with Voyagers! Jeff called the concept 'Time Cop.' It was always conceived as a 7 p.m. show that would deal with history and appeal to kids. We didn't set out to portray history with absolute accuracy. The idea was to get kids excited about a character or theme. We had a lot of teachers who wanted to know what episodes would be coming up. This way they could base their studies around them. Scholastic put out a Weekly Reader in schools, and Voyagers! soon became part of the magazine."

Cast as Bogg was the late Jon-Erik Hexum, an ex-model. "Originally, Bogg was conceived as an older man. Jon-Erik's only acting experience had been in a soap opera. He was a very raw actor. We literally bought him his Screen Actors Guild card. But he was just right. He read for the part, and after he walked out of the room, I turned to the other people there and said, 'That's the guy!' He had a magical, magnetic presence."

Associate producer Dean Zanetos had been much more cynical. "When Jon-Erik walked in, I thought, 'Oh, God. Just another pretty guy off of GQ magazine. It was almost embarrassing. The guy was too good-looking. I didn't even want to watch his reading. I thought he would be horrible. But we had already seen a lot of other guys, and they had all been bad. Jon-Erik began his scene, and he brought the character to life. It was astounding. He was an amazing performer. He would have been an incredible actor.'" (Hexum died accidentally in 1984 during production of his series Cover Up.) "Jon-Erik was absolutely the right choice," says producer Jill Sherman-Donner. "His last series [Cover Up] didn't do him justice."

For the part of Jeff, Meeno Peluce was cast. "He was the best kid we read," says Parriott, "although he was a little too old for the part. I wanted someone a year or two younger, but Meeno turned out to be great. He and Jon-Erik were a pleasure to work with." "Jon-Erik had done some stage in New Jersey, but he was very new to TV," says director Paul Lynch. "He was in his twenties, while Meeno was 12 or 13. One day I walked by them and Meeno was telling Jon how to act in the upcoming scene. Jon was listening very intently. It was a wonderful moment. Meeno was fabulous."

Sherman-Donner recalls that Hexum returned the favor. "My husband, Robert Donner, played Buffalo Bill in one episode. He was privy to a conversation between Jon-Erik and Meeno. Meeno had to film an episode and miss The Who concert. The Who were making their final tour. The comforting that Jon-Erik did was remarkable. So much of the time, Meeno was the adult of that duo because he was so precocious and experienced. In this instance, it was Jon-Erik who was being the 'big brother.' They had a sweet relationship. There was never any temperament."

Parriott admits that the series was not conceived as dead-serious fare. "We were doing a whimsical show. The toughest thing was keeping within our budget. Bogg and Jeffrey went into at least two time zones per show. But we had the whole Universal backlot to work with, and they didn't charge us for it." Sherman-Donner was invited by Parriott to produce the series. She jumped at the chance. "I was raised on The Outer Limits, Twilight Zone and Night Gallery," she says. "I knew Jim from when I worked on The Incredible Hulk, and I was very taken with the Voyagers! pilot film. It was a wonderful concept."

To plot the voyagers' adventures, Sherman-Donner pondered how she could tweak history. "I looked at certain historical eras. For instance, in 'Cleo and the Babe,' Lucky Luciano and Babe Ruth were alive at the same time. I thought, 'Who would be an attractive woman for Luciano to meet?' He had a reputation as a womanizer, and I thought of Cleopatra. I studied her life and thought, 'What would happen if she had picked another man other than Marc Antony?' There are always ifs in people's bios. Turn a different corner or make another decision than the one you've already made and your life goes off in a totally different direction. Magnify these decisions in the context of history's most important people and it's easy to imagine, 'What if.' 'Cleo and the Babe' turned out to be my favorite episode in a totally comedic way. It was fun to take a fish out of water."

The titles of Voyagers! were often charming and whimsical. Sherman-Donner says, "We often used the original titles we came up with while pitching the stories. The more serious the topic, the more difficult it was to come up with a title. You didn't want to crack wise about something serious." Several of the episodes did deal with history on a relatively serious level. They included topics such as Jack the Ripper, the Titanic and the Salem witch hunts. "Voyagers! wasn't a kids' show, although it certainly included them," Sherman-Donner notes. "It worked on two levels. Most of the time we dealt with history in a rather lighthearted manner. We did touch on some intense moments in history. The Titanic was pretty heavy. I think we could have touched on the diary of Anne Frank but we would never have gone into Auschwitz, which is the most intense time that I can think of."

Despite occasional visits to violent eras, Voyagers! tried to soften the rougher edges of history. For this reason, Dean Zanetos was astonished when the series was hit over the head for its content. "We were in a children's time slot, 7 p.m. Sundays. This made us subject to a lot of pressure from Standards and Practices. There was a group in Chicago that reviewed television's most violent shows. To our surprise, voyagers! was rated as the most violent. It threw us into a complete tailspin. We couldn't understand what they were talking about. We were very careful not to have the kid placed in danger. We later learned the study's criteria for violence was the number of explosions heard on the soundtrack. If Bogg and the kid landed in the middle of a battlefield, every explosion you heard in the distance was counted as an act of violence. At the same time, we were a borderline show in terms of ratings. The violence thing was another notch against us."

It was a different criticism that soured things slightly for producer Sherman-Donner. "We were told by a gentleman at Universal, who shall remain nameless, that the characters of Napoleon, Josephine and Harriet Tubman [all of whom appeared in episodes] didn't have a high enough TVQ rating [a system used to the determine popularity of characters]. That was very disappointing.

Voyagers! was a show that was supposed to educate. For example, Harriet Tubman was a woman instrumental in the making of the Underground Railroad [for black slaves in the mid-1800s]. Half of the fun of the series was finding out different aspects of famous people and learning about people that the audience may not know. When you're told that your historical characters need to have a high TVQ rating, it gets discouraging. It kind of knocked the steam out of me. If we had gone another year [22 episodes], we would have had to come up with 44 characters that everybody easily recognized. But you can only do Ben Franklin and Cleopatra so many times. It would have been more fun to come up with more little-known characters who contributed to history." Filmed on a standard budget, the series had to accommodate two, sometimes three, time eras per show. "We had the Universal backlot, which included the old castle for the Robin Hood movies," says Sherman-Donner. "We also had the forests to run through, and a Roman Colosseum. Jim Parriott was able to use the sets for maximum effect. You couldn't do I~oyagers! today because most of the Universal backlot has been torn down."

"I researched every historical film that had ever been made by Universal," says Dean Zanetos. "I traced the history of the footage to see if it was available for the show. We would construct episodes around the stock footage that was available. This saved us millions of dollars in terms of matte paintings and extras." While Bogg and Jeff survived history's most dangerous eras, they couldn't survive a mere 60minute challenge from the other network. "If NBC could get the ratings Voyagers! got against 60 Minutes today, they would pass out," says Sherman-Donner. "Voyagers! did so much better in the ratings than it was given credit for. Kids and their parents had fun watching it together. Everyone was surprised when it was canceled."

"We did a good job on Voyagers!" says Zanetos. "Brandon Tartikoff [NBC's president at the time] said later that it was his biggest disappointment to cancel the series." "It was a fun show," says James Parriott, "and a great educational thing as well. It got a 20 share in the ratings. We were replaced by a news show called Monitor. It got a nine share. NBC said, 'Oh, that was a mistake.' We did better in that time slot than anything they've had since."

"It was an interesting show," says director Paul Lynch, "but they never had the money to do it correctly. Although the pilot was very impressive, there was pressure after the first two shows to cut back on budget. If we couldn't shoot a show in seven days, they were thinking of canceling the show. The scripts were very good and in general, the show was very good. They just needed more money." Shortly after cancellation, the series was put into syndication and did very well. In 1984 there was brief talk of reviving the show for syndication. "voyagers! hit its potential 90 percent of the time," concludes Sherman-Donner, "and that's a really good average. I've noticed on The Young Indiana Jones Chronicles that they've included their characters with real-life people in interesting ways. Its nice to see that echo of Voyagers!" The producer remains gratified by the show's continued visibility. "It's even shown up in video stores," she says, "and I still get residuals from the episodes. There's a little cult thing around Voyagers! We didn't make many episodes, but it continues to have a life of its own."

VR TROOPERS

V.R. Troopers features a trio of college aged youths who are given special powers to defend the Earth from the forces of darkness. The battle sequences in which they fight are taken from a pair of Japanese series: Metaladar and Speilban. The fact that the heroes come from footage from two different series accounts for the fact that the three never appear together in battle at the same time!

The trio consists of: Ryan Steele, J.B. and Kaitlin, who live in Crossworld City. Ryan and J.B. both work at the Dojo. The Dojo is a martial arts gym which is owned by Tao. Kaitlin works at the Underground Voice Daily, a newspaper which is published by the rather flaky Woody.

As the series starts we learn that Ryan's father has been missing for ten years. His father's old partner Professor Hart electronically contacts Ryan, J.B. and Kaitlin and asks them to come to his lab. They find an arch in the wilderness and through it enter the lab. Professor Hart appears on a monitor and asks the youths to put on the V.R. visors. After doing so they receive a pre-recorded message from Ryan's father. He informs them that Grimlord. The evil ruler of the virtual dimension, has been working on a plan to break through the reality barrier unleash his army of mutant robots to take over our world. Grimlord has at his disposal an army of Skugs. Creatures who can exist on both sides of the reality barrier.

Skugs vanish in our world if they touch each other. Ryan's father and Professor Hart give the trio V.R. transformation virtualises which give them V.R. powers and also allow them to enter the virtual reality dimension to battle Grimlord's forces. An accident at the lab also gives Ryan's dog Jeb the ability to talk. Unknown to anyone else Grimlord has found a means to exist in the real world. In the real world he is transformed into a human named Ziktor. Ziktor is a rich industrialist who is known for buying up property for a variety of business ventures. Ryan, J.B. and Kaitlin neither like nor trust Ziktor, despite the fact that they do not know he is really Grimlord.

Sarah Brown who plays Kaitlan Star in VR Troopers is the best friend of actress Amy Jo Johnson who starred in The MIGHTY MORPHIN' POWER RANGERS. They in fact live next to each other and can be seen roller blading down the street sometimes. Mighty Morphin Power Rangers became a phenomenal success on FOX in the 1993-1994 TV season. One thing that a successful TV series often produces is other series which took to it for inspiration in the hopes of emulating the success, V.R. Troopers is one of several series which appeared in the fall of 1994 which were obviously inspired by Mighty Morphin Power Rangers. V.R. Troopers is a syndicated series produced by Saban, the same company that produced Mighty Morphin Power Rangers. VR Troopers footage comes from the Japanese's SF shows SPEILBAN, METALDAR and SHAI DAR.

1 - 1 THE BATTLE BEGINS (1-2)

Ryan Steele is a Karate teacher at Tao Dojo. JB Reese is a computer expert, and his best friend. Kaitlin Star is a photographer for the Underground Voice Daily. The three live in Cross World City, an average town in California, undergoing continual urban growth, thanks to the mechanizations of billionaire industrialist Karl Ziktor. Little do any of them realize, that he's actually a monarch from Virtual Reality named Grimlord, bent on invading our dimension and controlling the world! Luckily, Prof. Horatio Hart, partner of Ryan's long-missing father, recruits the three friends to become VR Troopers, armored guardians with the power to keep Grimlord's forces from breaching the reality barrier. But will the team's first battle, of VR Ryan against Decimator, and VR Kaitlin & JB versus Kongbot, be their last?

1 - 2 SEARCHING FOR TYLER STEEL

A relaxing excursion into the woods revives old wounds for Ryan, when he and his friends spot a man who resembles his long-lost father being held prisoner in an abandoned building. Attempts to gain answers are blocked by Grimlord's goons, who are protecting both the location, which happens to be his reactor parts facility, and the transference of the mysterious prisoner to the Virtual World. The question isn't just "Is this man really Tyler Steele?", but also, can our heroes save him while keeping the reality barrier from being blasted apart?

Virtual reality, as any game-playing kid knows, is a computer-generated, interactive, three-dimensional environment in which a person is immersed, usually through wearing a special helmet or goggles. VRS stands for the fifth level of virtual reality, a previously-unattainable state in which the user is taken into the virtual world and 'accessed' directly via the subconscious mind. To all intents and purposes what is then experienced is real.

VR5 is a thriller series about beautiful but shy Sydney Bloom who repairs phone lines by day and after hours tinkers with virtual reality technology. One day she inadvertently taps into an open phone line and hooks it up to her computer modem, bringing the person on the other end of the line - a cranky neighbour played by maverick magician Penn Jillette - into her computer world of virtual reality. Sydney is subsequently shanghaied by a shadowy government agency called The Committee to carry out assignments that require something more than conventional investigative methods. Pre-selecting an environment, her forays into the VR dimension begin with a simple phone call to her subject who then joins her in her computer-generated world.

Sounds a straightforward enough premise for an adventure series, but our Sydney's a girl with hang-ups. Her father, Dr Joseph Bloom (played by guest star David McCullum), was a neurobiologist pioneering work in virtual reality research and technology. When Sydney was a little girl, both dad and her twin sister Samantha were apparently killed in a car crash which she survived and which left her mother severely traumatised. VR provides a way for Sydney to explore her family relationships and memories and she discovers that her past may not be what she thought it was . . . She is eventually reunited with her sister and learns that her father is still alive and being hunted by a faction of the Committee

The show was cancelled in some controversy when the last couple of episodes where not shown in the USA, and when they were shown in the UK for the first time the last two episodes where broadcast in the wrong order, making the show very confusing. Anthony Head would later go on to star in BUFFY: THE VAMPIRE SLAYER. One nice touch - Sydney had a couple of goldfish - called Steed and Mrs. Peel. The series ran for one season in the US, but failed to set the ratings alight. Sky One gave it a run in 1995, repeated on Sky Two in 1996. The series has also been shown by BBC 2, and again by Sky One in 1998.

TV's flirted with virtual reality before - remember WILD PALMS? - but this is the first time anyone's made an entire series out of it, creating what you might call Cyberspace: Above and Beyond. VRS is such a technically smart series that it's a shame that in crucial areas of plot, dialogue and character, it's so dry. Lori Singer, the cello-playing kid from Fame, stars as Sydney and looks terrific in some way-out costumes and tumbling blonde hair. But it's hard to love her. So much of the series is played for visual thrills that the viewer is kept at an emotional distance.

In fact, at times watching VR5 is almost literally like watching paint dry. One of the most advanced film colonisation techniques is used to create the virtual reality sequences, whereby the scenes are filmed in black and white then put through a computerised colouring process which spans a palette of more than 16 million colours, creating some bizarre and otherworldly landscapes. VR5's style is completed by some minimalist, airy sets for Sydney's home and all involving surround sound. One nice touch: Sydney has a couple of goldfish - called Steed and Mrs Peel. The series ran for one season in the US, but failed to set the ratings alight. Sky One gave it a run in 1995, repeated on Sky Two in 1996. The final three episodes remained unaired in the US having been cancelled after the first 10 episodes, however all 13 episodes of the series have been seen in the UK.

Virtual reality is a term used to describe a world which exists only inside a computer, which people can interact with just like the real world VR 5 is a series about Sydney Bloom, a young woman who discovers a way to enter VR.5, a virtual reality which is indistinguishable from the real world. Sydney is a shy, withdrawn woman who works for the telephone company as a telephone line repair person. In her spare time she is a computer hobbyist, who accidentally discovers a means to enter virtual reality. By using her modem when she calls someone she is able to bring both the other person and herself into virtual reality where she is able to interact with them.

When the connection is terminated Sydney recalls everything that happened in virtual reality however the other person does not, although they are left with a vague memory of her. The virtual reality in the computer can be either colour, black and white or a weird mixture of both. It can also take on many forms ranging from an area familiar to one or both of the people in it or a surrealistic reality with little or no basis in the real world. Sydney's motivation for developing the technique was to find a means to communicate with her mother who has been in a vegetable state after a drug overdose, brought on as a reaction to the accident that killed her sister and father.

Her experiments with virtual reality do not go unnoticed. She soon finds herself recruited by the Committee. The committee is a mysterious organisation, which has some connection to the government. The committee is also very ruthless killing its own members who fail them in some way. Since no one else has been able to duplicate Sydney's efforts, they are very interested in her and her work. She is given no choice but to work for them. She learns that her father once worked for them and tried to quit. She also learns that the committee may have been responsible for the death of her father and twin sister, Samantha. 15 years earlier, or at very least know more about the car accident which killed them in which she almost died.

The series ended on a cliff-hanger. Sydney had discovered that her sister and father are both alive and she is reunited with them. Both are hiding from the Committee. Her memories of the accident and their deaths having been placed in her mind by virtual reality. She and her sister enter virtual reality where they are able to bring their mother out of her catatonic state but at a high cost. The process leaves Sydney in a catatonic state. The three episodes which FOX did not broadcast do not resolve this situation. All of them occur before the events in the last episode. FOX must have had little faith in the series since one of the episodes not broadcast would have been the second or third episode since it features Dr. Morgan before he was killed by a Committee assassin.

Executive producers for the series was John Sacret Young, co-executive producer is Thania St. John, supervising producer was Michael Katleman. The series received its UK premiere on the 21st October 1995 on Sky One.

WANDERER, THE

The Wanderer is a story about twin brothers Adam and Zachary and their centuries long struggle. Both roles are played by Australian movie actor Bryan Brown in his first TV series. Adam is a reclusive multi-millionaire who has no knowledge of his past life until his brother sends a 900-year-old spear through his chest. Such an attack would kill anyone else, however Adam lives and quickly is fully healed. Much to the amazement of his doctors.

Godbold, the Hermit of Leeds and wrestler is a reincarnation of a priest who knew both brothers in the past. Like Adam, Godbold does not remember everything about the past, but he does recall more than Adam. He and Adam slowly begin to recall more about the past. Adam learns that he and his brother Zachary had been knights in mediaeval times, and have now been reincarnated. Zachary is evil and Adam is good. Sometime in the past Adam killed Zachary in battle and buried his bones. Both have now been reincarnated in the present and Zachary needs to know where he was buried, although Adam does not know. The secrets behind a great evil plan Zachary had been working on before he was killed were buried with him. Should Zachary find his burial site first, then he can proceed with the plans. If Adam finds it first he can stop him. Zachary sets out to destroy his brother and everyone whom is close to him. Forcing Adam to take on the life of the Wanderer, never getting to close to anyone for fear that his brother will kill them. Aided by visions of himself as a mediaeval knight. Adam finds time to stop his quest each episode to help someone in need and in the process finds a clue that will help him fulfil his quest.

The only people that Zachary has not killed who are close to Adam are his business manager Wolfgang Mathias and Godbold, who had realised whom Adam was after receiving a vision of Zachary trying to kill him. Zachary does not kill them or Adam since he needs Adam alive in order to find his burial site and he feels that both Mathias and Godbold can help Adam achieve this goal. Adam's former love Lady Clare also appears in the series having been reincarnated in the 20th century as a photographer. Once she realises who she is and who Adam is, she calls off her planned wedding, and becomes determined not to lose Adam a second time. Zachary is aided in his endeavours by his sexy associate / lover Beatrice, who is not always loyal to him. Beatrice is an immortal witch who possess many powers including the ability to change her shape at will. In the past Beatrice had been the daughter of a king. She was once in love with Adam who spurned her in favour of Clare, causing her to hate Clare with a passion

This is a strange fantasy story in which the two ghostly knights and the Black Knight's lady appear and the latter two morph into other people or creatures. The main character is the modern day Adam Zachary assisted by Godbold, who seems to have mystical powers, and Mathias, who seems to be bookish and reluctant to help. The main thread seems to be that the modern White Knight (short hair) must find the tomb of the ancient Black Knight (long hair) and persuade him to enter it. Some threads seem unfinished. It was filmed in Europe, but the dialog is in English.

The Wanderer often makes little sense, the series takes quite a few episodes before the viewer is able to get an understanding of its unusual premise. The best part of the series are the bits featuring Zachary and Beatrice, both characters being excellently portrayed over the top, almost to the point of being caricatures of television villains. Britain's ITV network was originally interested in The Wanderer, however it was decided that the series was too ambitious an undertaking and it wound up being broadcast on the satellite service Sky One.

WAR OF THE WORLDS

The 1953 George Pal movie War of the Worlds had become a science fiction classic by the time the TV series of the same name premiered in 1988. Taking up thirty five years after the movie ended, we learn that the aliens were stopped but were not killed by the bacteria. They were placed in storage drums in nuclear waste disposal sites where the radiation killed the bacteria but did not harm them. Once revived they decide to continue in their conquest of the Earth.

Dr. Harrison Blackwood a research scientist, manages to piece together clues and deduces that the aliens have been revived. He drags his sceptical new recruit Dr. Suzanne McCullough to investigate. The pair meet Colonel Ironhorse, an even more sceptical Army Colonel, and with the aid of computer expert Norton Drake they learn that the aliens are after their warships that were placed in military storage. The pilot ends with the warships blown up and the alien threat over, apparently for good.

This was not to be the case. Each week the aliens, ruled by the advocacy of three, would launch another sinister plot, hoping to take control of the Earth only to have the Blackwood group thwart their efforts. The aliens had the ability to take over human bodies, however these bodies quickly deteriorated due to the radiation in the alien bodies. The human populace as a whole was somewhat sceptical about the aliens' existence. This was nicely explained by talk of mass hypnosis which caused almost everyone to remember the 1953 invasion as a movie, and a prior attack as the famous 1938 radio broadcast by Orson Welles.

Starting in the second season massive changes took place, Colonel Ironhorse and Norton Drake were killed off. A new regular was added, John Kincaid, an ex-soldier who had previously served under Ironhorse. The biggest change occurred with the aliens themselves, now revealed to be the Mothren. A new batch of humanoid aliens who spoke English arrived and killed off the old batch- upset over their failure to conquer the Earth.

The new aliens behaved like little Nazis under the rule of their leader Malzor. Malzor in turn took instructions from their god, the Eternal- a jellyfish-like creature. The new aliens faced even less resistance in their efforts to take over the world. This was due to the fact that society's infrastructure had somehow disappeared and the world as a whole resembled that of the Mad Max movies. Harrison, Suzanne and Kincaid had no official government support, but they still managed to thwart the aliens efforts from their hideout in the sewers. The second season did end with a final episode in which the alien menace was defeated for good. The show's first season was not great but it did have its moments. The second season was a big disappointment, and although the episodes did improve slightly towards the end, one still wished for the level of mediocrity of the first season.

The second series consisted of many changes, not least of which most of the main cast from the first season. The second season was sub titled The Second Invasion, and starred Adrian Paul as John Kincaid, Adrian Paul is more famous for playing the character of Duncan McLeod in the long lasting fantasy show HIGHLANDER. Jared Martin was also known for playing a 23rd Century traveller in the 70s SF show THE FANTASTIC JOURNEY. A combination of The Invaders and invasion of the Body Snatchers, this US series blended often gruesome shocks - when killed, the bodies dissolved into a slimy mess - with some elegantly subtle touches.

In one early episode, a small boy whose parents and grandmother have been 'taken over' realises he is travelling with aliens and holds up a sign to passing vehicles which reads 'help me'. Later on, a busload of tourists taken over by aliens crosses the Canadian/US border. Aboard is the same young boy, waving a new sign which reads 'save me'. Another episode, Eye for an Eye, takes as its premise that the notorious 1938 Orson Welles radio broadcast of H.G. Wells's original story was in fact a government cover-up for a real invasion.

These aliens are totally ruthless, as they strive to strengthen their foothold on Earth, seeking out their old spaceships. Led by a trinity of leaders known as the Advocacy, these aliens also have a disturbing knack of beating the good guys to the punch. It's an invasion by stealth, but Leading the Earth fightback is renowned astrophysicist Dr Harrison Blackwood, whose parents died in the 1953 invasion. He's helped by his paraplegic friend and computer whiz Norton Drake and microbiologist Suzanne McCullough who constantly strives to find a strain of bacteria that could defeat the aliens. Military muscle and combat strategy are provided by tough soldier and Cherokee Indian Lt Colonel Paul Ironhorse. Other semi-regular characters include Suzanne's teenage daughter Debi, and a kindly housekeeper, Mrs Pennyworth.

The first season's final episode also introduced an apparent new ally - an android from another world also threatened by the aliens, who arrives on Earth and begins systematically eliminating groups of invaders. She vows to return with reinforcements from her planet, thus setting up the continuation of the struggle into its second season. In the event, ratings were not good enough to justify a second season. What emerged instead was a whole new show built around several of the original characters, battling a new wave of alien enemies, the Morthren.

War of the Worlds, Mark 2, subtitled The Second Invasion, began with the virtual destruction of The Blackwood Project and the deaths of two team members, Ironhorse and Norton Drake. With the aid of a maverick ex-soldier, Kincaid (played by HIGHLANDER'S Adrian Paul), the remaining trio of Harrison, Suzanne and Debi take to the road, eventually setting up a new base in an old military command bunker.

Meanwhile, newly-arrived humanoid aliens are destroying the old Advocacy for their failure to prepare our planet for colonisation, and leadership is assumed by the powerful military commander Maltzor and chief scientist Mana. These chilling new invaders can also create clones of humans to take the place of real people and do their bidding. The usual sparring continues until the final episode when Maltzor's personal ambitions are exposed by his own people. He dies in a climactic shootout and the invasion is finally called off. Jared Martin, who plays Harrison, had starred as a 23rd century traveller in the Seventies series THE FANTASTIC JOURNEY.

Executive producers for the series were Greg Strangis, Sam Strangis, Frank Mancuso Jr. (The Second Invasion). The producer was Jonathan Hackett, executive story consultant was Tom Lazarus (Season One), Jeremy Hole and Jim Trombetta (Season Two), creative consultant was Herb Wright and the music was by Billy Thorpe and Larry Brown. Supervising producer for season two was Jon Anderson. The first showing in the UK occurred in 1991/92, and has been seen the ITV network.

"You thought you stopped us. You thought we were gone forever. But you were wrong. We never left." So went the advertising slogan that helped promote the premiere of Paramount's 1988 series, War of the Worlds. Having discovered with STAR TREK: THE NEXT GENERATION and Friday the 13th: The Series that syndicated fantasy-based shows could be successful, Paramount were keen to create a new series on the same basis.

Creator and Executive Producer Greg Strangis decided to use Paramount's own 1953 movie War of the Worlds as the basis for the new series. The premise was that the aliens had not died as thought but had merely gone into hibernation and are revived in 1988 by radiation. Opposing the alien hordes were a small but specialised team who were based at a secret operation centre known only as 'The Cottage'. The group was lead by Doctor Harrison Blackwood who, we are told, was orphaned during the aliens' first invasion and was adopted by Clayton Forester, the leading character in the movie. Blackwood was played by Jared Martin. Of the part, Martin said at the time, "He's an intelligent leading man - not a hunk, not a guy with muscles up to his ears. Blackwood is somebody who works with his mind, and makes it attractive and sexy."

Richard Chaves played Lieutenant Colonel Ironhorse, the military muscle of the Blackwood team. Richard very nearly didn't get the part at all as he related at the time: "After the sixth interview, my agent called me and said, 'Richard, I'm really sorry, but they've gone with somebody else'. To this day I still have no idea who the other guy was, but apparently he asked for the sun, the moon and the stars, and the negotiations broke down and about three or four days later they called me up. And I went back in for a seventh meeting and at that time they told me I had the part.'

Wheelchair-bound computer genius Norton Drake was portrayed by Philip Akin. Unlike Drake, Akin is not himself a paraplegic but, prior to his casting, great efforts were made to find a handicapped actor to play the role, as Richard Chaves related: "They did try very, very hard to get a black man who was actually handicapped and they really made a very strong effort and just could not come up with someone who could do it the way they felt it should be done. So that's when they made the decision to go with Philip.' The final member of the main cast was Lynda Mason Green who played microbiologist Suzanne McCullough. "She's frightened, but she wants the challenge," said Green of her role. "I'm not as disciplined as she is, but she does have a great deal of integrity and heart, and I flatter myself I've got that too:'

A strong connection between the series and the original 1953 film was established when Ann Robinson agreed to guest star in Thy Kingdom Come. Robin son reprised her leading role of Sylvia who had faced the aliens in the movie alongside Gene Barry's Clayton Forrester. It was Robinson herself who had approached Paramount with the idea of resurrecting her character along with the aliens when she became aware that the new series was in production. For her return engagement as Sylvia van Buren, Robinson was allowed to keep her hair its natural flaming red. In the 1953 movie, George Pal had felt that it was too distracting and had insisted that Robinson wear what she later described as "That awful brown wig".

Despite appearing three times in the first season of War of the Worlds, Robinson was unfortunately never afforded the opportunity of recreating perhaps the most famous scene in the movie where an alien taps her on the shoulder. "They had to wheel the Martian in this little dolly," she recalled. "The man who worked the Martian was on his knees and his hands went into the Martian up to his elbows where he had three little rings to work the suckers. Somebody had to literally take his hand and place it on my shoulder, then scoot out of camera range."

The development of cinema Science Fiction during the '60s and early '70s with such sophisticated and intelligent films as Fahrenheit 451, 2001: A Space Odyssey and THX 1138 had little effect on tv Science Fiction at the time which was still rooted in the delightful pulp imagery of the '40s and '50s, and Fantastic Journey was no exception. All the episodes produced were illogically plotted retreads of the enjoyably simplistic conventions, with Atlantium not only discovering the lost city of Atlantis in the umpteenth time, but throwing in an evil disembodied brain for good measure! Evil brains - brains from outer space, brains in bottles, brains in globes, brains in bubbling tanks - are virtually a genre in themselves ever since Colin Clive's Doctor Frankenstein popped one into Boris Karloff's famous monster in the 1931 Frankenstein.

There are, however, aspects of the '70s to hand in Fantastic Journey besides Carl Franklin's Afro-cut and flares - the duplicate Scott speaks in an Exorcist-style voice of the Source when he is discovered, and watch for the then-fashionable contemporary reference to Von Daniken's Chariots of the Gods, as much a fixture of '70s saucer fiction as the celebrated Roswell conspiracy has been a part of '90s UFO mythology. And Fantastic Journey offers evidence, just as the same decade's British-made TIMESLIP does, that Science Fiction was already contemplating the de-lights of Virtual Reality...!

Of the cast, Jason Evers will be recognized from the third season Star Trek episode Wink Of An Eye, looking equally as uncomfortable as he does here. This wasn't Evers's first encounter with a disembodied brain either - he had already featured in the gory Z-movie The Brain That Wouldn't Die (1959)! Mary Ann Mobley was a former beauty queen who was cast as both the original Girl From UNCLE in the Man From UNCLE episode The Moonglow Affair before being replaced by Stefanie Powers in the series. She was also the first tv Wonder Woman, again replaced in a second pilot and subsequent series by Lynda Carter. Both she and Gary Collins went on to become a husband and wife daytime tv team in the US in the '80s.

The voice for the Source was provided by former actor turned vocal artiste Mike Road, whose innumerable assignments for animated series include the voice of Race Bannon in cult cartoon series Jonny Quest. Sil'L the cat was played by no less than three different moggies, all members of The Felix Team. That works out about one cat per scene!

Fantastic Journey was originally broadcast by BBC 1, in a Friday night 7:00 slot that worked quite well for a number of other series around that time, including The Invisible Man and Irwin Allen's short-lived Captain Nemo. Sadly, ratings in the US for these series were not as rewarding, and none survived for very long. Fantastic Journey was repeated in a mid-morning slot during the school holiday period and then disappeared from view. If all this has whetted your appetite for the show, there is good news ahead. All ten episodes of Fantastic Journey have been purchased by the cult tv satellite channel Bravo, who will be showing this series in the near future.

Dark Words indeed, and with series such as THE X FILES, MILLENNIUM and DARK SKIES offering a variety of grim scenarios; the dark and gruesome War of the Worlds series may just have been ahead of its time. One of the first in the recent boom of syndicated Fantasy and Sci-Fi shows, War of the Worlds was, with its partner in production Friday the 13th, finally put into production as a tv series following Paramount's success with its premiere syndicated offering STAR TREK: THE NEXT GENERATION. Greedily looking for other properties to turn into viable series, Paramount plundered its archives and found the superb 1953 film based on H G Wells novel War of the Worlds as a series has about as much to do with the 1953 movie as that film had to do with the novel - but as the film was one of the best alien invasion movies ever made, that doesn't have to be a bad thing.

War of the Worlds had already been a novel, a notorious radio play; a film, a rock album and a comic strip series, and now it was going to be an ongoing tv series and video release. The first problem was - how to do it? The answer was in the syndication market that had granted STAR TREK a second lease of life writers strike. War of the Worlds made its debut under the guidance of father and son team Sam and Greg Strangis, with father Sam producing and son Greg writing. At the same time, a series exploiting the Friday the 13th title (but completely un-related to those films) was also put into production at the same offices, overseen by Frank Mancuso. When Friday the 13th performed better than War of the Worlds, Mancuso was put in charge of completely revamping the latter series for its second season, but the effects of the cure were worse than the symptoms and, as usual, the few good things were thrown out with the bad.

Both series had their good points and bad: Undoubtedly, the dumbest aspect of the first year had been the pointless and ludicrous assertion that although the 1953 film invasion had indeed happened - the opening episode uses it as a starting point - the entire world has apparently under-gone a form of collective and selective amnesia about it. There's not being sarcastic - this was the actual explanation offered up by the producers and in the series. However, with the tv budget dictating the traditional and low-cost path of a covert aliens-in-human-form strategy by the aliens, the producers felt the need to dismiss the events of the film by having the whole world in denial (gee, what happened to those build-ings and all those people we used to know?) It would perhaps have been more sinister for the Martians (now called 'Marthren') to be sneaking back quietly, and would have given the series an interesting backstory can seize the baby for experimentation. Kidnapped by our heroes, the baby grows into a young boy within a matter of hours, kills his nurse and returns to the hospital to find his alien mother. Our heroes kill the aliens and the boy is passed on to his grandparents for as happy a resolution as possible... but as the car pulls away from the hospital we discover that the Morthren have killed and taken over the bodies of the grandparents! He Feedeth Among the Lillies is the alien abduction fantasy to end them all, while the pre-BSE The Good Samaritan has four young friends being fed poisoned fast food by diner staff taken over by Morthren conducting a test run for a mass poisoning of the Earth's food.

War of the Worlds is more Horror than Sci-Fi as it proceeds. Most television SF deals out salvation to the good and justice to the bad, whereas Horror material ' like The X FILES and MILLENNIUM deals in.

Gore and Decay Interestingly, War of the Worlds went the gore route, hiring special effects man Bill Sturgeon, fresh off the remake of The Blob, to come up with a variety of repulsive im-ages based on the notion that the human bodies appropriated by the aliens start de-caying as soon as the aliens occupy them. Like The Invaders, the bodies dissolve when the aliens are killed, but into goo rather than dust. The following season replaced these faceless aliens with some typical mean-faced regular adversaries - Denis Forest (as Malzor), Catherine Disher (as Mana), and Julian Richings (as Ardix). These humanoid aliens, the eponymous Second Wave of the second season's opening episode, have conquered the deterioration problem and clone rather than bodysnatch.

The second season (1989-90) did away with the more innovative aspects of the first (including the Biblical titles) for a more familiar, if not seriously over-used, scenario set in a near-future where society is falling apart (see also v, Max Headroom, RoboCop and countless post-Blade Runner movies).

One of the most prominent second sea-son changes was the restructuring of the cast. In the first series, it consisted of Jared Martin as maverick eccentric scientist Hanson Blackwood, Lynda Mason Green (formerly a cast member of Canada's Night Heat) as microbiologist and psychologist Suzanne McCullough, Richard Chaves as absurdly named military man Lt Colonel Paul Ironhorse and Philip Akin as disabled computer genius Norton Drake. Black-wood and McCullough have an almost Mulder/Scully relationship, with Blackwood being an irritating off-the-wall know--it-all and McCullough the by-the-textbook scientist.

However, it was Richard Chaves who had chalked up appearances in Hill Street Blues, St Elsewhere, Dallas, MacGyver and the film Predator, who had turned out to have the show's most popular character - a 'minor' detail that might have been considered during the re-vamp that dropped his character. First sea-son guest stars included John Vernon, Michelle Scarabelli, John Ireland, Jeff Corey, Greg Morris, Alex Cord, Deborah Wakeham, Patrick McNeel, Peter Boretski, James Hong and John Colicos.

For the second season, Martin and Mason Green got physical makeovers (Blackwood was sporting a beard, Mason Green a new do), and they were joined by future High-lander lead Adrian Paul as tough guy John Kincaid. Also retained was Rachel Blanchard as McCullough's teenage daughter.

The one thing that can be said in the re-vamp's favour is that Mancuso did at least

Although a few American tv series are 'in--house' productions of the networks, most are commissioned from studios or independent producers and co-financed by the networks. Usually, the network gets two runs of this new series - a first run and a repeat run - after which the rights to the series revert to the producer and/ or distributor. At this point, the series goes into syndication - that is to say, it is sold to stations across America for re-broad-casts outside prime-time, which is when the rights-holders hope to actually make some money from the show (syndication afterlife is where Star Trek first started get-ting noticed). If you have over 100 episodes before cancellation, you're rich; around 40 to 70, you might break even; 13 episodes is loose change; six episodes and you've taken a bath.

A straight-to-syndication series by passes the networks and the threat of losing your money if the show is cancelled in the ratings war - but the downside is that without the financial input of the networks, you're working with a much lower budget. That's why a lot of syndicated series are disappointments and some of them - The Munsters Today, OUT OF THIS WORLD, the new Untouchables, Airwolf II -are downright awful

To a certain extent, the success of STAR TREK: THE NEXT GENERATION changed this. Initially conceived as a way to exploit the STAR TREK phenomenon, the series became a monster hit and successful title in its own right, opening the door for further re-makes of such perennials as Lassie, The Lone Ranger and Tarzan. Other 'off-network' shows, as they are now called, include Renegade, Young Indiana Jones, HIGH-LANDER, THE OUTER LIMITS, Baywatch and HERCULES. As straight-to-syndication series became increasingly successful, with many local stations actually bumping network series to put them in prime-time slots, the money being spent on these series up front to make them hits has been gradually increasing.

When Orson Welles broadcast his pseudodocumentary based on H.G. Wells' story "War of the Worlds" (Martians landing to plunder Earth), many of the radio listeners of 1938 mistook the drama for the real thing. One man came home to find his wife about to drink poison, preferring to die that way rather than be incinerated by the Martian death rays. H.G. Wells' 1898 novel also inspired a 1953 motion picture starring Gene Barry and Ann Robinson. And in the 1980s, Martian invasion was still a compelling theme, ready for updating in a TV series.

The War of the Worlds series was essentially a continuation of the George Pal film. The premise picks up the story some 35 years later, with the Martian war machines crated up and stored in military warehouses and the aliens buried in steel drums and forgotten. Enter: Dr. Harrison Blackwood, an astrophysicist; Suzanne McCullough, a microbiologist; Norton Drake, a wheelchair-bound radio astronomer; and Colonel Paul Ironhorse, a military man.

Neill Fearnley, a director of four episodes of the first season, admits that the very first science fiction book he had ever read was War of the Worlds. "To be a part of [the story], in any fashion, was a lot of fun!" laughs Fearnley. "In the H.G. Wells story, the aliens all died of a cold virus-a common cold, and then Orson Welles came along and he concocted his premise [updating the location and time of the story to modern-day New Jersey], which was clever, and then the movie came along, and so they decided to fashion [this television series] somewhat after the movie. The stumbling block was that [the aliens] had died in the film."

To do a series based on dead aliens was a difficult chore for the show's creators. Greg Strangis, who assembled War of the Worlds for Paramount Television, says that "the George Pal film really was a homage to the novel, and it was a pretty reasonable adaptation of the radio broadcast. ... I thought, 'OK, ... how do we deal with it in the '80s? It's many years later and the aliens are still here.' And that was the jumping-off point. I made every effort to be respectful to the source material and still have the requirements of a continuing series." To make sure that the reviving aliens who were defeated by Earth's bacteria would not be defeated again by the very same germs, Strangis says, "My reasoning was that radiation protected them from the virus. Radiation killed the virus."

"They were in hibernation, and they would all come back to life, which was very clever," interjects Fearnley. "I think where the show ran into problems, personally, is the idea they would enter a human body and somehow their molecules combine with a human's molecules. And you could have an alien sitting right there. Again, a clever idea, and given today's technology, if you were to promote the series today, you might get away with it because of morphing.

"If we had today's computer morphing effects, the way that Terminator 2 has been done, we might have been able to do some really extraordinary things. But in those days the idea was that [the alien invaders] would be a hole inside of you and come out of you. That doesn't really work emotionally, but worse, technically. For a show filmed in six days, it's virtually impossible to satisfy the demands for excellence that the audience has, and to have them see that as anything but a rough attempt to approximate the effect." Fearnley believes that War of the Worlds was "a very grand idea for a limited budget," and adds, "A lot of people had difficulty on that show. For me, it was great fun. I enjoyed myself thoroughly. ... I don't remember bad things about it. It was very very difficult, and the hours were very long and it hurt making it. But it was fun. We had a good time. We tried very hard; we were very sincere about what we were doing. But sometimes it doesn't work out, and it didn't for us on that show for whatever reasons."

Among the challenges they faced was dealing with a very abrupt and jarring Writers Guild Strike in Los Angeles, which affected production severely. Strangis says the writers' strike almost brought the show to a screeching halt. "We started principal photography of the two-hour premiere episode on or about the same time as the writers' strike," he recalls. "There were no scripts being developed. The pilot was completed. The strike was still going. The pilot was delivered. Basically I was out of work until the resolution of the strike. When I came back when the strike was resolved, scripts were apparently being written by strike scabbers. Some of those shows were not in the best of shape, so we put them up on the shelf and scrambled and tried to come up with product in a very short amount of time so we could keep producing." "It affected things badly," says Fearnley, who was in Toronto where the show was filmed. "In a way, you almost had to write your own scripts. They didn't have access to a broad spectrum of people-[just] the few who were working on the show, and those scripts were done under pseudonyms. Who knows who wrote them? The scripts needed a lot of work."

Fearnley's comments shed light on several suspicious teleplay credits for the show's first season. On "Epiphany," Sylvia Van Buren was credited. Sylvia Van Buren was Ann Robinson's character from the George Pal film (and in fact Robinson guest-starred in early episodes). "That's right. That was the gag," responds Fearnley to this reminder. "Who wrote that show? I don't know. There were a few others [with pseudonymous screenwriters]."

"Whoever wrote those shows-and they weren't really written-I had the right to rewrite. I would start rewriting, and I'd give it back to the producers. I wouldn't get credit for it, but you do it all the time. You say, 'Look, this isn't working,' and [the producers] say, 'Oh, why?' 'Well, for these reasons,' and they say, 'You're right!' So the first few scripts were very unwieldy, very difficult, basically not very good."

Strangis says the strike polarized the studios and the writers. "Put yourself in the various different positions in terms of the studios. It's very important for us to have and maintain at least a semblance of a business as usual. The creators are very protective from an editorial perspective ... being a writer, I didn't want to do anything that would breach the Writers Guild." As a result, the station owners were concerned about having product. "Everybody wanted the best of all possible worlds, and it's a matter of compromise. I think the show suffered."

Ilse Von Glatz, who was one of the three semi-regular villains on the show, recalls, "The first thing I thought with the advent of the strike was that my job was on the line! We kept shooting, but everything was thrown into a panic, especially since this happened so close to the beginning. Everybody became somewhat demoralized because we really didn't know what was going on. Were these scripts, during that time, the real thing or some slapdash thing just thrown together? A sense of cohesiveness was certainly lacking." Of his scripts, Fearnley recalls "Epiphany" as being definitely affected, and possibly "Multitude of Idols," but the last two were in fine shape. "You know," he says, "it improved a lot once the writers [returned]. We tried very hard on a very difficult thing in a short period of time," Fearnley adds. "I think more planning would have delivered a better show. On a show like that, the planning is essential, and I think we rushed into it. And it might be simply that the writers' strike got in our way. You can't do anything without the writers. Who knows? It might have been because of the strike that it came together."

"In the end, it was fun. I think it was one of the first times I had the chance to just be creative and not be told what to do. The show was wide open. We were making up the universe as we went along." Coming back from the strike was harder than starting from scratch, says Strangis. "After the strike, by and large, it was a long process because we were really trying to catch up in terms of material. There was never enough time to develop stories. First, a series requires so much time, and there was none of that available to us. But slowly and surely we found out what things were working and what things weren't. The one thing everybody forgets is it takes a long time to develop special effects. After writing down something on a page, it takes awhile to make it work, and then you have to turn it over to other craftsmen. And it was tough trying to deal with schedules. The show was coming along very nicely."

Also lost in the Writers Guild strike was the explanation that as our intrepid team battled the aliens, no one in the world remembered the invasion of 1953-the war that (in the George Pal film) destroyed, among other things, the Eiffel Tower, the Taj Mahal and the Los Angeles city hall. The episode "Eye for an Eye" also explored the first invasion in 1938. Actor Philip Akin says, "It was never explained to anyone's satisfaction, ever. Just one of the blips that we had to keep glossing over and use smoke and mirrors to try and shy away from it...". Further inconsistencies developed because years one and two had different production personnel, whose interpretations were in contrast to each other. "They changed the rules again," declares Fearnley. "And that's okay. Where the problem lies is within the season. If you break the rules, then you get into trouble."

Asked if he felt the radical retooling of the show for second season was too much, Fearnley responds, "And did that contribute to the downfall of the show? As a viewer, I think so. As somebody working there, I can't say so because I didn't work on the second season. I don't know all of the reasons for the changes. Some executive somewhere wasn't happy. But as a viewer I preferred, in a funny way, the premise of the second season, where the aliens had accomplished a lot of their ends. The Earth was in dire straits. I liked that. That was kind of interesting. I preferred that apocalyptic, 'Max Headroom' kind of approach to the universe." Of the cast of characters assembled for the series, Fearnley enjoyed the four-person team consisting of a scientist, a military man, a communications expert and a biologist. But, he says, "Richard Chaves and Philip Akin were not as well served as they could have been. Those characters had handicaps placed upon them. "They put [actor Philip Akin] in a chair in a basement in front of a computer screen, and they didn't give him much of an opportunity. ... I mean, here was a character who's dynamic and filling the screen and yet we only cut to him every two seconds when we go to the TV screen."

We had to get him involved in the story! He's tremendous! Very few shows had had people physically handicapped before, so nobody knew what to do, and we said, 'Why not put him in a truck? Give him a facility. Get him outside and make him human. Get him away from the screen and office and into the world.' I think that was a big bonus, but I don't think the character was served as well as it could have been. He's a terrific actor. I don't take credit for [the van idea], but after a lot of discussions, we were able to do that." Philip Akin maintains, "Neill was responsible for Norton getting out and about. However, subsequent directors and the producers began, I felt, to feel it was too much of a hassle. In retrospect, it was as if they loved the idea of the wheelchair but not the reality [of working with it]."

Fearnley points out that to include a disabled character in the show was a challenging and daring move on the part of the creators. "It's a melting pot," he reflects. "Somebody's saying [in casting the lead characters of this show], 'Well, let's include in our group all of the different social aspects of America that we can think of and put that mix together,' and somebody gets the idea, 'We'll put one guy in a wheelchair...' That requires a conscious decision. ... And War of the Worlds was one of the first shows where somebody at least made the effort to portray somebody functioning in society who had a physical handicap ... and made him one of the best characters of the whole show."

Working with a wheelchair gave Akin opportunities to innovate and incorporate some personal skills into the show. "I am quite a physical person and actor. I train in Aikido, Kung Fu and Tai Chi as well as being an avid bicyclist, so the wheelchair forced me to work in many different ways than what I was used to. I couldn't use the physical stuff that I'm so fond of using. It was a bit of a stretch to try not to use my legs, thus I started to use a strap to tie my legs together so that it would be a constant reminder not to move. It did cause some problems on the set as they kept designing 'Norton things' that were better suited to a leg-user and not a wheelchair user. A case in point was the alarm buzzer in the 'Second Wave' script. They had it set on the floor, and the director could not see the problem or the incongruity of a floor switch for a wheelie. In one other case, I found it impossible to loop any of my lines standing up. It all had to be done seated as that position changed my breath and vocal patterns."

Regarding other characters of the show, Fearnley says that Col. Ironhorse could have done a lot more, too. Yet he believes that the show's focus was more on Blackwood and Ironhorse than on some of the other characters and says there should have been a better balance. "It was all very politically correct, too. We had everything from the very right wing to the very left wing."

Playing one of the three alien advocates like a German terrorist was Ilse Von Glatz's ticket to the show. She confesses War of the Worlds "was not a show that I would watch on TV myself. Dormant aliens brought back to life ... to wreak havoc on the world-come on! You must understand, actors are not necessarily concerned with concept. Nobody ever really explained (to me) what the concept really was. You go in there, do the job as best as you can-usually totally uninformed. I had absolutely no idea what was going on at the audition. Some terrorist thing, I was told. 'Look stern. Dress in black.' I was handed a couple of pages of script that made no rhyme or reason. I guess I have the look they wanted, and [the fact] that I could play a German terrorist, with a German accent, got me the job."

"We had pretty good ratings for the first few shows. We were all pretty hyped. The PR machine was working at full tilt. Richard Comar, Michael Rudder and I got our photos in full fright makeup, on the front page of the entertainment section of USA Today. But by the time I was just doing ADR (looping dialogue) in the studio, I was so far removed from the whole thing. I would only find out sporadically how things were going." At first, says Von Glatz, "we bad guys had the upper hand and were actually visible to the audience. To be quite honest, I don't think they should have ever allowed us-the triumvirate, the Advocates-to become unrecognizable. ... The audience, believe me, love to cheer on the villains too! They're usually more interesting. I knew we were 'disintegrating,' but surely they could have come up with some miracle cure for us."

As resident aliens on the first season, Von Glatz, Rudder and Comar never really interacted with the main cast. As a result, says Von Glatz, "Richard, Michael and I, as we always appeared together, became quite the team. Working so closely, I really got to love those guys. Making jokes, clowning around, trying to make sense of the script, sweating under all that makeup ... the filmmaking experience really boiled down to the camaraderie we shared."

"For the time that I was there, I can only laud the production values. The work, the sets, a location at the Quarry in the first three episodes, were anything but low-budget. The set for the aliens in the studio was unbelievable. I was stunned when I first saw this immense cave that was to become our 'home.' Shooting for TV is always rushed, but I was never aware of any 'lowbudgetness' for the time I was actually on the set." As for her character, "I must say that my role never really developed," laments Von Glatz. "The most work I did was at the beginning as far as character was concerned. That's when I played Ulrich the terrorist. After that, as aliens, we were directed to be as monotone and unemotional as possible. The challenge was restricted to the limitations imposed by the prosthetics, the costume."

Remembering audience reactions to her character, Ilse laughs: "Ha! I got orie fan letter from a visually impaired fellow who thought I 'looked' really hot as a terrorist. He requested a full length photo." She also remembers, "One day Richard and Michael and I headed off in the car during lunch break. No big deal, except that we were in full horror makeup and costume. Caused quite a few traffic jams!" In summary, says Von Glatz, "I can't say that I really had that much to do. For the most part we were instructed to act half dead and monotone. The real challenge came in the ADR studios. You're handed scripts in which you don't know what's going on and tape dialogue. It really works!"

When it comes to guest-starring in War of the Worlds, John Colicos, a respected actor famous as Baltar in Battlestar Galactica, remembers his appearance on "The Prodigal Son" very fondly. "It was a marvelous part," he says, "and in fact, one of the best science fiction parts ever created! [It was] one of the best science fiction scripts I think I've ever read. Greg Strangis, the producer, thought so highly of it that he put me up for an award, which unfortunately I did not get, as best performer in a guest role for a series. Colicos describes his character on "Prodigal Son" as a "half-alien, half human sort of character. It was a character who was in constant conflict with himself, whether he would let the human side or the alien side of himself take over."

Did the character regard himself as human or alien? "That's the conflict," replies Colicos. "That's what we were trying to develop." He adds, "You would never know from week to week; was he an enemy or was he a human or was he trying to bridge the gap?" The character was to continue in the series, but the show went into a different direction. Colicos regards the loss of the character and the show as unfortunate. "Had it gone in the direction that Greg Strangis wanted to, I think it would have filled a marvelous void because there is a great audience out there for good intellectual science fiction. Unfortunately, producers thought otherwise, and they wanted blood and gore and that usual stuff you find on television, so it was canceled."

Philip Akin believes his character on the show "was a strong individual with ideas and a great sense of humor and less of a compu-droid. I feel that within the parameters that I had to work in, I was pleased to go as far with him as I was able to. However, the full growth of the character was never realized. In that first year, he still remained somewhat stunted. By the end of the season there was progress, but still he was left somewhat stillborn. "In the last episode [of the first season] there was a great opportunity to have Norton healed. However, the producers backed away from the option that had been provided to them by the writers."

Instead, at the start of the second season, Norton Drake and Col. Ironhorse were killed ("The Second Wave") as part of a radical facelift for the whole series, now under the guidance of a new producer, Frank Mancuso. The aliens were executed in this episode by new aliens, the Morthren, who took over attempting their own invasion of Earth. Of his departure, Akin says, "I thought the script was inconsistent and pathetic even for the genre. There were better, classier ways for people to leave than what they did. I have no real knowledge of why two of the most popular characters were killed off. I never got any other explanation except that the new producers wanted to go in another direction."

Richard Chaves, who played Col. Ironhorse, says that like Akin, he was anguished at the decision to kill his character. "I [had] gone through the whole gambit, the whole spectrum of emotions. I was hurt. I couldn't understand and it blew me away. At first I was very upset, and very angry, and I didn't understand. And one of the things that fueled that negative reaction was that everybody kept telling me, 'Richard, you're the greatest.' Everyone kept telling me my fan mail was like five-to-one."

Series star Jared Martin provides an insight to the thought processes leading to the death of Ironhorse. "His character was sort of painted into a corner, and they couldn't deal with a sort of crisp, neatly pressed military person in the world which the show was going into," he remarks. "[That was] very much a Blade Runner, 1984 world as opposed to a brightly lit, by-the-book, military-operation kind of world. They wanted to introduce a character-more of a roguish, offbeat, Mad Max character-and the Ironhorse character was just not going to work. It was a real tough decision. I know that Frank Mancuso spent many late nights thinking about it. He was killing off, arguably, the most popular cast member, which you don't do lightly." Filming the scenes was very emotional for Chaves. "My last night of filming was very strange, and the first time I recounted what happened was to Peter Bloch Hanson, the guy who did the Starlog interview. And Peter isn't just a professional press person that I have worked with; he's a friend. He asked me what the last night was like, and I started telling him about it. The next thing I knew, I got real emotional and I fell apart. It was very, very difficult. It was a long, long night, and the most poignant moment of the entire time was when I took off my uniform for the last time and said goodbye to a very, very dear friend." But as time went on, Chaves says, he steered himself to the positives. "I knew something better would come along."

Whatever shortcomings the show had for Philip Akin, being associated with War of the 4t~orlds was worthwhile for him overall because of the impact his role made on the people who watched the show. "I have received lots of fabulous and caring mail from many people. At one conference a lady came up to me and told me of her friend's class of disabled kids who loved the show because Norton was so independent and capable. It was that kind of response that made it all quite special."

One cast member who continued into the second season was Lynda Mason Green, as microbiologist Suzanne McCullough. "When we first started working on War of the Worlds, I was very happy with the script," she says. "I liked the writing, the characters, the idea. I saw lots of potential for Suzanne. She was a woman who interested me. I liked her and looked forward to being a part of her evolution and the challenge of playing a successful scientist who was also a single mother."

"For me, the best part of the [two-hour premiere episode] script was its humor. I felt that the tone and the wit that had been established by Greg Strangis in that script was a lot of fun. At times, 'wit' slammed into 'camp' but I, as a viewer, have always appreciated a series that had its tongue firmly implanted in its cheek and resisted taking itself too seriously. I looked forward to a lot of the same in future episodes." Green was concerned that the updated approach to the Pal adaptation of the Wells novel would not have the strong foundations for a long run. "Audiences these days have very sophisticated tastes, and expectations of SF drama are high. After Close Encounters and Star Trek and its subsequent generations, it's become hard to sell the 'evil rubber suit Martian' without a healthy dose of humor. Since that seemed to be integral to the show at the beginning, I felt optimistic about our future."

She was troubled, however, when the humor she appreciated became the first casualty of the writers' strike. "It seems in retrospect that we never quite got back on track after that, even after the strike was finally resolved. Writing seems to be a fragile process in need of a lot of TLC. I admit that it was a disappointment for me that we never seemed to get to that wonderful point where everything begins to pulse with the same rhythm."

Further, Green recalls, "I was stunned to hear that we would be losing two important cast members. I had become friends with Phil Akin and was especially disappointed that he would not be back." However, she says, "By the end of the first season, we knew that we would have a new producer if there was to be a second season. Frank Mancuso, Jr., who became the new producer, had some very exciting changes to make. I liked what I heard so much that I could hardly wait to get back to work."

"As the second season progressed, the style and the look that had been designed by Frank was maintained by our wonderful creative staff and their crews. The scripts also took on a more intense, darker, more dangerous tone and texture as well. We were now to become a Blade Runner-esque action/drama. The show bore so little resemblance to the first season that it was hard to relate the two. I personally preferred it. Mostly it gave me an opportunity to get out of the lab and to develop the relationship with Debi [played by young actress Rachel Blanchard] much more. Almost everything about the new season was much more interesting for Suzanne and therefore for me as well."

One of the most important improvements for Green was changing the nature of the adversaries. "The aliens became more humanoid. Denis Forest and Catherine Disher were wonderfully arch Nazi-esque aliens. They updated the threat, made the aliens much more intelligent and consequently much scarier. I thought they were great. Julian Riching and Pat Phillips were also strong new members of the alien cast. "I was also glad to have Adrian Paul come aboard (as Kincaid). His character was much more of the romantic action-adventure hero, a rogue warrior. We needed him in the second season, especially since we were now out of our element and the environment had completely changed. We were forced onto Kincaid's turf. It was an easy adjustment."

Discussing audience response to the drastic changes between seasons, Green says, "We were effectively two completely different shows connected by a thread of consistency that was barely more than a rumor. We lost a lot of fans that had been attached to the conservatism of the first season. The second year was much darker, oppressive, anarchic, and the 'good guys' did not always win. Many of the more enthusiastic fans of the first season did not make the transition." On the other hand, "many did like it better, and we apparently gained a lot of new fans as they discovered the show."

Green was unable to offer any concrete reasons for the show's demise. "Cast is rarely privy to such information until someone says, 'The show is over. Your check is in the mail!' I assume we didn't have enough support in the syndication market, that our support at Paramount waned, that audiences were confused by the radical shift between seasons that was never really explained adequately. It's pure speculation on my part. I would have been happy to do one more season, but I think we took it as far as we could under the circumstances, and it was time to move on." Jared Martin says he's proud of the second season of War of the Worlds, which he called "immeasurably better." In a 1988 interview during the second season, while he was looping dialogue, Martin said that the show was "more consistent, it has a point of view and we seem to have taken that last ounce of effort that makes something extra good."

"I think the show last year was perceived as an attempt to reach different kinds of audiences. We kind of went hat-in-hand to the audience and went, 'Look at us! Won't you please watch our show and like it?' This year, we're building the show first, and we're making a statement. If we collect an audience, that's fine. Last year, I think we were concerned too much with demographics. This year, because of our executive producer, Frank Mancuso, Jr., our attitude is, 'Let's swing for the fences on this one.' And if we fail, fine. If we get canceled, life goes on, but if we don't and we're going to have a hit that makes us more concerned with the show ... and indeed it's already kind of paid with a good review in Variety."

The radical format change between seasons one and two served to "open it up," Martin said. "Our show is based on the almost-tomorrow; therefore the things that we do are more recognizable and have to be based on reality. The more you base a show on reality, the more it starts swinging to a cops-and-robbers type of action-adventure show. We're trying to leverage out the concept of the show.... We're dealing in more pure science fiction terms. It's not just the good guys versus the bad guys from outer space [any longer]. That would get stale.

"We're more urban-based this season," he continued. "What seems to be happening in the world is happening in the cities. There's Beirut, New York, you name it. We've moved into the city. What's happening in the cities are the real problems of the advancing world, how do we deal with them? We can make a statement and score some points if we stay in an urban environment." With the Morthren setting up shop on Earth and taking over where the Advocates failed, the second season's "new" aliens provided a deadlier threat to the world. Jared Martin said, "The strings are being pulled by the aliens. It's been personalized and we get to see more of their point of view. Why they're here and what they're about. They are not just stock villains in vacuum cleaner suits like they were last year, so the show is moving to the tune of the alien agenda, and this represents a shift other than us chasing them. [This time around] they are chasing us. We're living underground and are in more desperate circumstances, which makes for a more interesting show.

"How do 250 or so aliens take over the earth? They don't have the weaponry at this point, they are cut off from their planet, [but] they [do have] superior intelligence and technology. How do they do it? They attack several nerve centers of the socioeconomic, political aspects of the earth. Basically, they are here to disrupt, destroy and take over. "The stewardship of Earth has been marred by all sorts of ecological disasters; nuclear explosions and constant warfare. We just don't get on with each other and we're not really taking care of this planet very well. I mean, there's an underlying ecological message to this series, which has to be well decorated with action-adventure or else people just wouldn't tune in." It's there if you look for it, he said. Martin also believed that with proper care, the show would be further exposed to audiences via overseas sales, cassettes, and syndication reruns. And in fact, the Sci-Fi Channel promptly picked up War of the Worlds when the station first went on the air in the fall of 1992.

"It's a timeless thing," insisted Martin. "Most science fiction is. It's not going to fade as quickly as a lot of action-adventure, sit-com or dramatic shows might." Martin waxed romantic at the notion of the show going for five years. "Well, I'd like to. I like the character. I like the people [I work with], I like the set-up, and in terms of my acting this is my signature series. Right now I'm very involved with it and I'd hate to think that we will close down at the end of this [second] year." Unfortunately for Martin, the War of the Worlds did just that Jared Martin (Dr. Harrison Blackwood): See Fantastic Journey. Lynda Mason Green (Suzanne McCullough): Before War of the Worlds, Green starred in Night Heat, with appearances in Adderly and the ABC mini-series Amerika. Over the last few years Lynda has been writing, directing and producing corporate videos. She continues to pursue an interest in mainstream TV and film as an intern director on Canadian TV series.

Philip Akin (Norton Drake): Has appeared in many film and television roles. They include the features FX2 (1991), Millennium (1989), Switching Channels (1988), The Park Is Mine (1985), and Iceman (1984). TV appearances include Top Cops, E.N.G., Night Heat and the Cagney and Lacey pilot and Akin snagged a regular role in Highlander's second season (1993-94) with fellow warrior Adrian Paul. Richard Chaves (Col. Ironhorse): Born October 9, 1951, Chaves had extensive stage and television appearances. He was in Dallas, Hill Street Blues, St. Elsewhere, Eight Is Enough and the TV movie Fire on the Mountain (1981). He also had a small part in Irwin Allen's The Swarm (1978) and Predator (1987).

Rachel Blanchard (Debi McCullough): For a girl who's never had a formal acting lesson, Blanchard is a veteran of many commercials. Blanchard has also appeared in The Littlest Hobo, Kids of DeGrassi Street, and the TV movie Glory Enough for All. For the latter, she had to do a scene explaining to another girl that they both were going to die of diabetes. "I had to cry," explains Blanchard. "When I finished the scene, I looked up and the cameraman was crying, everyone was crying. It was a moment of achievement for me. "I'm very athletic. I love to play ice hockey and tennis, and I enjoy swimming, skiing and dancing." A B-plus student, Blanchard's favorite classes are drama and gym.

Adrian Paul (Kincaid): London-born, Paul went from playing a Russian ballet dancer in The Colbys to fighting aliens in War of the Worlds. Paul's first break was on the London stage as a dancer in a play aptly named The Break. After that, he got roles in an NBC TV movie, Shooter, and a guest role in Beauty and the Beast. "I like the way the show has been set up. And I like the character of Kincaid," said Paul during the second season. "He's very interesting and very complex. Kincaid is mercurial-he's charming. But he's a loner. He's tough, obstinate and capable of ferocious anger. It's a role that will allow me to grow as an actor." After War of the Worlds, Paul starred in the hit SF syndicated series Highlander, filming in Vancouver, British Columbia, and Paris, France.

FANTASTIC JOURNEY, THE

1 - 1 THE RESURRECTION

35 years after the breaking of humanity's solitude in the universe and the demise of the interstellar invaders has not dwindled the assurance over this spinning piece of solar debris as men have resumed going back to and fro about their little affairs as events were before the eve of the war. Even down to the silly rite of power struggle. One such event takes place on a particular evening as a terrorist group raids U.S. disposal site Fort Jericho. But a Pandora's box is opened as the inert aliens being stored in barrels are reawakened within contact of radiation, which negates the presence of the very bacteria that dropped them and disabled their activity so long ago. Upon freedom, the aliens take over the bodies of the terrorists and then begin to resume the plans that they once drew against us, but doing so now under the stress of their new fallible situation. Meanwhile, astrophysicist Harrison Blackwood (adopted son of Dr. Forrester) and his assistant Norton Drake discover some new alien transmissions that originate right on Earth. With the help of Blackwood's newly hired microbiologist, Suzanne McCullough, they discover that the extraterrestrial killers from 1953 have been freed from their steel drum containers with the very real possibility that they are alive and roaming the planet once again.

In an effort to prove this to General Wilson, Harrison drags Suzanne to the origin of a transmission made out in the middle of the woods. Unbeknownst to them, Colonel Ironhorse and his Delta Squad are there on the trail of terrorists. After the incursion ends in the loss of Ironhorse's men, "Uncle Hank" Wilson decides that there is an alien threat and allows a team to be assembled that consists of Harrison, Norton, Suzanne, and co-signer of the project/combat expert Lt. Colonel Paul Ironhorse so that the danger can be eliminated. The collection is at a just time as the aliens regain their wits in due process of regaining their technological weaponry that they left behind while in hibernation – three remaining war machines stored in a government hanger. The recovery must be interrupted before they active the ships and their unstoppable power once again, picking up where they left off 3-and-half decades ago.

1 - 2 THE WALLS OF JERICHO

"They sure don't die very pretty, do they?"

The team struggles to convince Ironhorse and General Wilson that the aliens are still a threat, even after the destruction seen last episode. The aliens are, in fact, still alive, but may not be so for long; the radiation that killed the deadly bacteria is slowly destroying their human host bodies.

1 - 3 THY KINGDOM COME

"You haven't got a prayer." Harrison Blackwood contacts Sylvia Van Buren, a close associate of his adoptive father Clayton Forrester. But Sylvia's invaluable psychic insights come at a high cost: she's currently a patient at the Whitewood Mental Health Care Center. With her help the team is able to track aliens into Montana and then into Canada, where the aliens are attempting to recover more of their sleeping brethren.

"Don't be scared. This won't hurt you." The aliens' newest plot is to begin integrating their kind into human society. They initiate this plan by carrying nuclear material and busloads of churchgoers to the abandoned town of Beeton. When a local reporter manages to get caught up in it via a story on hazardous material, footage she captures of an alien possession catches the attention of the Blackwood Team where they find the aliens using the town as a set up shop for appropriating human hosts.

1 - 5 EYE FOR AN EYE

"Martians on motorcycles." In 1938, Orson Welles made the town of Grover's Mill famous as the setting of The War of the Worlds radio broadcast. Now on the 50th anniversary, the locals bask in the gimmick of being the first stop in a faux Martian invasion - unaware that the "Martians" were real, and now their comrades have returned to retrieve a buried war machine left behind. The Blackwood Team bands to fight them with the only residents aware of the reality of 1938: the remaining veterans of the militia that fought them the first time around.

1 - 6 THE SECOND SEAL

"Contact with that crystal is affecting your behavior."

"I'm in total control, Suzanne." Norton discovers files and information of Dr. Forrester's on the invasion of 53 under the name "Operation Deep Ice" being stored in a Fort which travels underground through most of the Bay area. When they get to the army base and come upon the vault, Harrison is mad to find almost nothing. It turns out that the archives are stored in more than one vault under various misspellings of the name Deep Ice, which were to enforce another level of security. But they aren't the only ones to find out about the documents as the aliens have begun to infiltrate the base. When they gain access to the vaults they begin combing through various things, some of which appears to be the aliens' own technology and weaponry. But the most important item in their new mission is a list that contains the location of 10,000 stored-away aliens.

1 - 7 GOLIATH IS MY NAME

"Did you see that Parkins boy's body in the tunnel?"

"Just the photos; worst thing I've ever seen. Kid had no face. What kind of monster would do that?"

When a friend of Suzanne's is murdered, the team investigates and inevitably find the aliens involved. However, their goal is even more sinister as the aliens have infiltrated a college campus to steal a dreaded virus known as Y-Fever, a toxin that can literally melt the human brain in seconds. But while traveling underground, the aliens come across fantasy game players, one of which is a jock with butterfingers. After possessing the one called Jefferson, the alien obtains the three vials... only to drop one, breaking it and becomes exposed to the virus. But instead of killing him, the virus reacts differently to the alien chemically, mutating it, and creating a highly unstable alien who continues to play the game - all while carrying the two remaining vials of the Y-Fever in his hands.

1 - 11 AMONG THE SAMARITANS (AKA AMONG THE PHILISTINES)

"Don't you see? It's not just our problem. If we lose this war, we lose the entire planet." After a sneak operation against the aliens fails, the Blackwood team consults a language expert to help decipher the aliens' transmissions. When they take him back to the Cottage to use their supercomputer, things begin to fail to add up. After Ironhorse, Harrison and Suzanne arrive to what appears to be a trap in waiting, they realize that Adrian is an alien set to infiltrate their information and rush back to where he is with Norton and Debi. In an effort to protect the project and everyone in the Cottage, the team loses someone close who becomes their first casualty in this war.

1 - 16 THE MEEK SHALL INHERIT

"It's not the cold. It's something else." The aliens' next move is to disrupt communication by destroying global phone links. Meanwhile, Sylvia befriends a homeless woman who believes her talk of aliens because she herself witnessed one of her friends being attacked and absorbed. The two flee the Whitewood Sanitarium to roam the streets of Portland and eventually hiding out in a truck yard for shelter. Having assumed the bodies of three homeless people, the aliens also wait in the same truck yard to hijack a truck carrying an important power source, which will allow them to complete their plan to destroy communiqués and leave society helpless during an attack.

1 - 19 VENGEANCE IS MINE

"I had no idea it was going to end in such tragedy." During a covert operation against the aliens' newest plot to mount their soldiers with lasers, Ironhorse opens fire on three figures assumed to be aliens - only to find to his shock that one was an innocent human hostage. He cannot seem to get over his mistake, and becomes distant from the rest of the group who are trying to track down the aliens and whatever their new plot may be. Things are not better for Paul as the woman's husband seeks out the colonel for revenge when he finds out that he was responsible for her death and the authorities will do nothing. While the aliens plot to steal money to buy their much-needed rubies for their new weapons, Martin Cole searches for his own brand of justice.

1 - 23 THE ANGEL OF DEATH

"Paul is dead." A humanoid figure arrives on Earth and begins to murder aliens, requesting each time to know the location and whereabouts of the Advocacy. The Blackwood team is baffled as to the origin of the sudden alien mass murder. In an effort to find some information about what's been going on, they set up a trap. The aliens know it's bait of some kind, but go in anyway since they, too, are unaware as to the identity of their assassin(s). The plan works of sorts when this single identity - a Synth from Qar'To - shows up again and captures Ironhorse. It reveals its purpose to the Colonel and it appears to be a new ally in the war, as even the Advocacy risk putting itself in the battle to eliminate this threat. 2 - 1 THE SECOND WAVE

Almost Tomorrow The world is now a mess. As the environment with its predictable weather patterns and the economy in dire straits, anarchy is now loose and the world as we knew it is less optimistic. It's been months with no alien activity and the military backing for the Blackwood Project is weakened as the government seems to be in turmoil as well. As if things weren't bad enough, a new group of aliens, the Morthren, have arrived. They have used a process of transmutation to take on human form to protect themselves from Earth's bacteria so the need for hosting bodies and radiation is no more. Under the rule of Malzor, they are instructed by the Eternal Spirit of Morthrai to kill off the "soldiers" who came before and failed to appropriate the planet. Continuing in their mission, they try to snare a member of the Blackwood Team for cloning purposes which will obtain all memories of the original, but totally loyal to the Morthren cause. With this clone, it can more easily infiltrate the Cottage and destroy the team and everything involving their work on the aliens.

WATT ON EARTH

Watt is a 300 year old extra-terrestrial who looks like a man in his 20s, but thinks and acts like a child of seven, and is capable of turning himself into inanimate objects, such as a teapot or a loaf of bread, a knack he calls 'trananimateobjectification'. It's a raw talent - when he changes back - his ears go back to front. He's also on the run from another alien, Jemadah who was sent from their home planet by Watt's uncle to track him down. Jemadah always appears in human form - the question is, which one, as he, too, is able to alter his looks.

Watt's escapades bring colour and chaos into the lives of 12 year old schoolboy Sean Ruddock, his irritating big sister Zoe, and hard pressed parents who run a family newspaper business, The Hakton Weekly. The second series repeated the formula, with Sean again doing his utmost to keep Watt's secret, while his evasive friend managed to turn into an helicopter and ended up taking part in a production of the Mikado.

Comedy sits awkwardly with SF - there are more unintentional laughs in bad series than real jokes in good ones - but this nineties children's comedy thriller did enough to warrant two twelve part series. Written by Pip and Jane Baker, graduates of DOCTOR WHO, it was a familiar enough tale of Earthling meets alien, with alien causing chaos. The producer for the series was Angela Beeching, the director was Roger Singleton-Turner and the series was shown twice weekly on BBC 1.

Zoe twiggs who it is in the lead role of the play and turns Watt in to Jemadah. Watt and Jemadah have a final showdown and Watt wins and informs his uncle his henchman has failed for the last time. Watt leaves earth forever to return to become the ruler of his planet.

WAY OUT

Way was an anthology series. Typical storylines included 'William and Mary' about a dying professor who come up with a plan to keep his brain alive so that he can go on bullying his wife even after he's dead. In 'Hush, Hush' A professor has invented a process using sound waves which induces a state of perfect tranquillity, and decides to use the process on his wife.

Way Out was an early 60's Anthology series that has gained a cult status despite the fact the episodes of the show have not been seen since it was first run in 1961. It was a mid season replacement on CBS rushed into production as a replacement for You're In the Picture. This was a series that was to be Jackie Gleason's triumphant return to TV, but turned into one of the biggest television bombs of all time. Way Out ran immediately before THE TWILIGHT ZONE. Although the series itself bores a certain similarity to those of the TWILIGHT ZONE, the characters were not nice people who the audience could feel sorry for as they met their fate, but rather unlikeable people who were getting their just rewards. Way was created by its host Roald Dahl - a writer responsible for many of the better episodes of Alfred Hitchcock Presents... Dahl would later bring us the more successful Roald Dahl's Tales of the Unexpected - as series that remade the pilot episode of Way Out.

British author Roald Dahl was the host of this macabre "twist ending" anthology. Dahl concluded every episode with, "Good night and sleep well." The stories dealt with disembodied brains, melting faces and a child who turned people into frogs. Such unconventional fare was rejected by the conservative audiences of the early 1960s.

In the 1980s one of the executive producers, David Susskind, gave the 14 episodes to the Museum of Broadcasting in New York, where they've found a more appreciative audience. In addition to good writers (including Larry Cohen and Irving Gaynor Neiman), Way Out's roster included guest stars such as Richard Thomas, Alfred Ryder, Tim O'Connor, Barry Newman, Charlotte Rae, Walter Slezak, Barry Morse, Martin Balsam and Kevin McCarthy.

Harriet, the older sister, is immaculately neat; Louise, the younger sister, is a slob. (think: "The Odd Couple".) They live together in a cliff-house in Maine. Not only does the domineering Harriet impose her tidy housecleaning habits on Louise, she tries to run her life too-- Harriet "forbids" Louise to date Paul Marchand. Possessive Harriet tells Louise she doesn't need men-- after all, they are sisters and will have each other forever. One day, Louise lets Harriet fall off the cliff. Now Louise can do as she likes, and date Paul; (or so she thinks). At night, a woman like Harriet goes around compulsively doing housecleaning. One day, Paul comes to the front door, asking to see Louise. Even though Louise answers the intercom, it is in Harriet's voice that she tells Paul to go away. Louise has become her dead sister. Freda Mansfield (an American, age 38) is checking out of a London hotel; she is planning on eloping with her British lover George Frobisher (age 43, who already has a wife, Monica, and kids) and they are going to New York City together. But Freda keeps getting mysterious phone calls from some strange woman, who says that Freda will never run away with George-- Freda is going with her. The strange woman keeps phoning Freda; the caller says her name is Mrs. Rose Thorn, and adds that she is coming up to her hotel room to see her. Freda sees what might be a ghost (dressed in 1912 clothing), and goes hysterical, and faints. Later, a doctor examines Freda's body-- he tells George that she died of pneumonia-like symptoms: both lungs are filled with water, sort of like drowning. George says that his mother was Mrs. Rose Thorn, who died of drowning nearly half a century ago-- she was a passenger aboard the doomed Titanic. 1 - 9 DEATHWISH

This episode starts out with the Narrator saying, "Most men want to kill their wives." (did I mention "Way Out" is a misogynistic series?) And we meet yet another married couple that can't stand each other: George and Hazel Atterbury. They attend a funeral for one of George's coworkers. That night, TV-addict Hazel is talking to her hubby, telling him all about her favorite TV shows, for example, "The one where they're all gangsters, except the hero... it's very authentic, it's based on official files." (sounds like "The Untouchables".) George goes for a walk instead. George walks to the Petard mortuary that handled the funeral. George decides to kill his wife. Just as we hear his thoughts-- "What do you do with the body?"-- Mr. Petard puts a sign in the window: "Let us dispose of the body." Inside, George talks to Mr. Petard, who is an eloquent elderly gentleman who has a giant, bald-headed assistant named Charon* (think: Tor Johnson). When George finds out they killed Mrs. Harrison (who didn't get along with her husband) and they will dispose of her body, George thinks he's got it made. But then he finds out, it was Mrs. Harrison who wanted her husband dead! So Mr. Petard doesn't carry out the wishes of those who want a spouse killed-- instead Mr. Petard murders those who have the evil intentions of killing their spouse. Mr. Petard gives George some poisoned wine; later, he gives George a top-notch funeral. *[Charon, pronounced "KEY-ron," in Greek mythology, is the ferryman of the dead-- he who conveyed the dead to Hades over the river Styx.] ["Way Out" certainly presents marriages in a bad light; it is the opposite of family-oriented TV shows of the 1950s and 1960s, like "I Love Lucy" and "Father Knows Best" and "Leave It to Beaver".] [this episode was directed by Boris Sagal, of "T.H.E. Meek Harold Potter is a bookkeeper with a nagging wife Edna, and no life. One night, he goes to a sideshow at a carnival. They show a guillotine, and appear to cut off a woman's head. The main attraction is Cassandra, a headless lady strapped into an electric chair; only the chair is not a method of execution, but the opposite-- 10,000 volts "keep her alive." Somehow, telepathically, the headless Cassandra pleads with Harold to stay. Later, the carnival closes for the night. But Harold comes back to see Cassandra night after night. Harold falls in love with Cassandra; he even promises to help her escape the carny life. He is convinced that she is a normal girl, and the "headless" routine is just a carny trick; he thinks the only reality is that she is strapped into the electric chair, being held a virtual prisoner. Late one night, Harold sneaks into the sideshow, and using some pliers he starts to cut the metal straps that hold Cassandra. Later, Edna comes looking for her missing, errant hubby. A carny woman has fresh stitches on her neck, her head looks like that of the guillotined lady. And now there is a new sideshow attraction: a headless man strapped into an electric chair. The body looks like Harold's. [something misogynistic about this episode: it seems Harold prefers the love of a headless lady (who has a nice personality) to that of his wife.]

Harvey finds out that his new eyeglasses have magical powers: by putting them on, he is reunited with the Jellifers at their place. The Jellifers tell him their stuffed animals can come back to life and kill people; Harvey offers them money to have Mahatma the viper kill his nagging wife Stephanie at 3:00 a.m. But at 3 o'clock in the morning, it is Stephanie who is wearing the magical eyeglasses. It seems she was friends with the Jellifers long before Harvey met them. Stephanie offers the Jellifers more money than Harvey had, and she has the Jellifers send Mahatma to kill Harvey-- just as the Jellifers had eliminated her previous husband Stanley. Stephanie takes off her wedding ring and puts it in a box-- next to the other wedding rings she's collected in the past.

WEIRD SCIENCE

Weird Science is a series that is based upon the 1985 John Hughes feature film of the same name. Only the concept was used as no one involved with the feature film made the transition to the TV series. This is not all that surprising since nine years elapsed between the release of the film and the debut of the TV series.

Both the film and TV series are about Gary and Wyatt a pair of horny teenage computer nerds, who use their computer to create Lisa. Although it is never quite explained how Lisa was created she is the perfect woman; one who is beautiful will do whatever Gary and Wyatt ask of her which can be almost anything Lisa it turns out is a technological genie capable of performing all kinds of magic.

Most of the time Gary and Wyatt's requests to Lisa involve getting real girls. Neither has any real luck with women and Lisa refuses to oblige them herself saying since she is perfect she does not want to ruin their expectations with other women. They also frequently get help with things at Farber High School, often involving an easy way out of a problem Although Lisa does help them, her magic often make; things worse and in the process they are taught a lesson. Lisa only appears to Gary and Wyatt and her magic at times makes them come up with fancy explanations for weird occurrences. The person who frequently has these weird occurrences happen to him is Chett Wyatt's older brother a muscle hound idiot who likes to pick on his kid brother and his friend. Neither Lisa, Gary or Wyatt have any problems with making a fool out of Chett which is very easy to do. Although encounters with Chett, could be avoided if Gary and Wyatt would spend less time at Wyatt's house. Later episodes of the series often parodied other television programmes, both genre and non genre, Programmes parodied included: Baywatch, The X-Files and Quantum Leap.

Although 84 episodes were made, the show was cancelled before all the episodes were shown, the remaining episodes which were not broadcast were season 5 episodes 9 to 14. Episode 5.14 was intended to be the finale for season 5.

Character Profiles:

Gary is the loveable misfit who wants to know the key to a girl's mind, (and ultimately something else!) He's best friends with Wyatt, but his antics end up getting Wyatt into more trouble than good, as he doesn't think before he wishes. Gary almost ends up getting what he wants, but by the end of the wish he is often taught a valuable lesson, which he doesn't appreciate very much. Gary's family are not very communicative which is why more often than not, you'll find Gary round at Wyatt's house as he prefers his friend's parents to his own!

Wyatt is the quiet one who normally ends up being swept along with Gary's actions. He's more the sensitive type and generally a guy females would like, except he doesn't know how to talk to them.

This is his ultimate goal which he almost achieved until he took some of Gary's advice! Wyatt has an older brother called Chett, who is all things military and a complete berk. However, Wyatt normally finds some way of getting his own back.

The boys decide they need someone to teach them about women, so they create one! The result is Lisa, the computer Gini. However, she isn't all that Gary and Wyatt expected. She can grant them whatever they like but it's for a limited time only. Gary and Wyatt never seem to get exactly what they wish for - but sometimes they do which is the root of most their problems! Lisa always manages to teach them a lesson.

Chett Donnelly thinks that he is god's gift to women, but he couldn't be further from the truth! As thick as two planks of wood, Chett gets his kicks out of watching his brother squirm and often refers to Gary and Wyatt as "The Girls". But Chett always gets his just desserts in some form or another. The nastier, the better!

The series was not shown in the UK until 1998, after the series had already been cancelled in the US after its five seasons. The UK broadcast of Weird Science was on BBC 1 on a late night time slot on Monday nights, at least it was shown. Allegedly a comedy, based on the 1985 movie of the same title, it went on too long and zapped the teens into too many TV shows, video games and historical periods. The series was shown on the USA Networks in the US.

Ideas range from the cliched to that inspired (the giant computer ping-pong was marvellous), but the show is never less than entertaining, mainly due to some great acting from the leads, with the real find being Vanessa Angel as Lisa, who conveys a sense of fun, intelligence and sexuality that it would be impossible to resist.

2 - 5 A TALE OF TWO LISASES

Gary and Wyatt both want to spend time with Lisa. The problem is, they both want to spend time with Lisa. Gary wants to go to a party with Lisa while Wyatt wants Lisa's help in studying for a science test. Lisa fixes this problem by dividing herself into two different Lisas. One Lisa who likes to do nothing but party and one Lisa who is only interested in studying. The guys both realize quickly that this was a bad idea. Wyatt's bored because his Lisa doesn't have one ounce of fun in her. Gary's tired because his Lisa wants to do nothing but party- twenty-four hours a day. To make her point more clear, Lisa turns the guys into trolls, as well as Chett.

Dir Ricardo Mendez Matta

2 - 6 NIGHTMARE ON CHEET STREET

Lisa creates a new magical invention- Dream Chairs. These chairs let Gary and Wyatt enter the minds of anyone. Something goes wrong and Gary is trapped inside of Chett's head. The good part? Gary gets to control part of Chett's body. Chett is on the first day of his new job as a busboy at Java Man. If the job doesn't go smoothly, he's getting kicked out of the house. What does Gary do? Try and get Chett fired.

Wr Paul Lieberstein

Dir David Grossman

2 - 7 MAGIC FOR BEGINNERS

Gary and Wyatt want to win the school talent show. How do they go about winning? Simple. They get Lisa to create a magic book that lets them do real magic tricks. The guys can now slice people in half and create demonic creatures that come from hell. (The slicing in half tricks lead to Chett getting an eye-full in the bathroom, when he walks in on Wyatt's lower half using the facilities.) Principal Scampi enjoys the boys' show so much that he asks them to perform at a dinner party he's hosting. Principal Scampi has a great idea for the grand finale- the guys can chop off his head! The only problem is that the magic book has been ruined and there is no way to reverse any of the magic that the guys use.

3 - 9 WHAT GENIE?

Phoebe, an old friend of Wyatt's, comes back to town. Both the boys think she's pretty hot and end up spilling the secret about Lisa to her. She then takes control of Lisa herself and has Lisa erase Wyatt and Gary's minds of the fact that they ever had a genie. Phoebe also becomes the host of her own daytime talk show, very similar to "Sally." The only thing that can help the boys remember is the fact that Wyatt keeps a daily diary-- I mean journal. The boys also get to be guest stars on an episode of "Phoebe" entitled Men Who Became Women Who Became Men Again.

Dir Troy Miller

3 - 10 SCI-FI ZONED

A butt crack comment and a welt lead to the end of Wyatt and Gary's friendship. To try and bring them closer together, Lisa zaps them into their favorite television show ever, "The Sci-Fi Zone," which brought them together in the first place. While being narrated by Chett doing a great Rod Serling impression, Wyatt and Gary meet talking candy bars and dolls, a pig-faced woman, an evil fortune telling machine, and a satanic Principal Scampi. The boys have to either help each other or get stuck living in the Sci-Fi Zone where time has no meaning.

WELCOME TO PARADOX

Set in the near future city of Betaville, the host introduces the cautionary tales of things to come each week, and sums the moral-of-the week at the end. Typical stories include Lady in the Machine, in which a detective discovers a holographic messiah which turns out to be a computer programme.

The nice aspect of the series is that the tales are based on older stories written by real-life SF authors: Alan Dean Foster, AE Van Vogt and James H. Schmitz and Donald Westlake so far. It's lovely to see this, as this kind of TV hasn't been seen since BBC TV's wonderful OUT OF THE UNKNOWN back in the 1960s. Taking genuine SF and filming it is a rarity (except for Ray Bradbury, which was, naturally, based only on his stories).

It would be nicer, though, if they picked better stories. First up was Lady in the Machine, about a hologram of the Virgin. In other words, mostly corny, old-hat stories. Nothing really interesting or new and nothing even classic, which would be more excusable. Will we get Asimov, Heinlein or Clark in the series? Or some of the more modern writers like Connie Willis or Bruce Sterling?

Desperate to shed its image as the storehouse of Irwin Allen schlock and INCREDIBLE HULK re-runs, the Sci-Fi Channel's latest addition to an expanding list of original programming is Welcome To Paradox. Set in the futuristic city of Betaville, Welcome To Paradox is an anthology show focused on the effects cutting edge technology will have on human society. Unlike its cohorts, SLIDERS and MYSTERY SCIENCE THEATRE 3000, Welcome To Paradox is an original concept, not something rescued from cancellation by another network - if you consider a TWILIGHT ZONE rehash original. But it certainly indulges in its share of borrowing, as the first two episodes are based on stories from famous SF authors. Its debut proves to be a rather uneven effort.

Based on an Alan Dean Foster series, Our Lady Of the Machine stars the character of Angel Cardenas, a futuristic hardboiled detective who relies on little but his senses, which are somewhat expanded as he is an "intuit", Paradox's term for a telepath. He goes undercover to investigate a unique extortion ring made up of bogus priests whose "heavy" is none other than the Blessed Virgin Mary, who shows up to stop the hearts of those who refuse to contribute to the cause. Cardenas is shaken when Mary, who he'd assumed was simply an advanced hologram, actually heals a chronic injury during their first confrontation.

The episode proper is nothing too special or too dire, although the last 15 minutes feel rushed and Stephen Bauer (Cardenas) has a tendency to equate serious delivery with mumbling. An elaborate computer set-up is merely dark walls full of red lights, and large parts of the plot consist of Cardenas escaping, getting captured, escaping, and getting tied up, drugged and stuffed into a room, before finding an obligingly talkative bad guy. Even the ending takes a page straight out of James Kirk's book, as Cardenas talks Mary in to expanding beyond her capabilities and acting as if divine, and gets the bonus of seeing her waste the bad guy in the process - leaving everyone to muse on how she'd developed the ability to perform miracles into a deep and meaningful thing. Derivative this might be, but the true weak links are the host intro and outro, with Michael Philip turning in the blandest impersonation of Rod Serling ever. And he's the only person who'll be returning each week..

The producer for the series was R.W. Vincent, executive producers were Lewis B. Chesler, David M. Perlmutter, Jeremy Lipp and Mark Sparacio, the line producer was Mary Guilfoyle. Perhaps one of the better anthology SF shows made in the 1990s, not that their were many to start off with. Many of the stories are intelligently written, with intresting premises.

The series was first shown in the UK on Sci-Fi, a satellite station, which broadcast all 13 episodes of the series on late Sunday nights.

Ben discovers an alien creature flying around his room, he decides to make friends with it and discovers that the alien can grant wishes.

It's important not to get this show confused with another children's SF show called WYSIWYG, which is said the same, but not spelt the same, the producers of this show probably wanted to use WYSIWYG but couldn't because it would infringe on copyright laws. Tyler Butterworth is better known for playing Angelo in the SF show MIKE AND ANGELO in the first three seasons, who was then replaced by Tim Whitnall.

The series returned for a second season on the 8th January 1999 on the ITV network.

The puppet of Whizzwig was created by Gorton & Painter FX Limited, puppeteer was Don Austen, music by Goody, Coates and Hains. The designer for the second was Lynda Harris, executive producers Michael Forte and David Mercer. Producer and director for the series was Neville Green.

The Third series returned for a third season on the 5th January 2000 on the ITV network. The only major cast change for the third season was Joan Oliver who replaced Nimmy March as Gina Sinclair.

WHOOPS! APOCALYPSE

In Whoops Apocalypse, as in then 'real' life, the balance of world power is held by the leaders of Russia (the ageing Dubienkin) and the United States. The American president, much despised in his home country and cravenly seeking restoration of his popularity, happens (no coincidence, obviously) to be a former screen actor, the recently lobotomised Johnny Cyclops. Stranded in the middle of the pair is the lame, moronic British PM, Kevin Pork, aided by his Foreign Secretary (Dave) and Chancellor of the Exchequer (Brian).

Also queering the picture is the mad master-of-disguise Lacrobat - the world's most hunted international terrorist and nuclear-bomb-stealer - and, perhaps most frighteningly of all, the Deacon, the fanatical, God-fearing American security adviser, a man who believes he has a direct hotline to the deity. (At the time, although Whoops Apocalypse authors Marshall and Renwick claimed prior ignorance of the fact, the US security adviser, General Haig, was known within White House circles as the Vicar.) All the while, the Shah of Iran has been deposed and secret Western attempts to restore his brother to power fail to amount to much (at one point, he is stuck on a cross-channel ferry). Disastrously, in the final episode, a Quark nuclear bomb accidentally destroys Israel, sending the planet cascading towards the Third World War and nuclear holocaust.

Whoops Apocalypse painted a frightening but fantastic picture of international politics and brinkmanship, as lunatic world leaders made awesome decisions with nary a prior thought but with devastating effect. As such, it was then, and remains, an extraordinary sitcom - topical, anarchic, inspired, alternative - of a kind and style familiar, perhaps, to viewers of BBC2 or the emerging C4, but a real departure for network ITV.

The casting of Whoops Apocalypse was exceptional: the players included John Cleese (as Lacrobat) appearing in his only sitcom outside of his own Fawlty Towers John Barron and Geoffrey Palmer from The Fall And Rise Of Reginald Perrin Richard Griffiths, Peter Jones, David Kelly, Ed Bishop, Bruce Montague, Richard Davies, Barry Morse and, from the vanguard of the new so-called 'alternative comedy' movement, Rik Mayall (who appeared in one episode) and Alexei Sayle. It might just be stretching belief to suggest that every one of these and the remainder of the huge cast understood all that was going on in their scripts, for certainly much of the show left viewers baffled, but, then again, since the world has always been governed by decisions of uncomprehending madness then the sitcom was merely an exaggerated but otherwise accurate reflection of the fact.

A less impressive feature film version of Whoops Apocalypse was released in 1987 (director Tom Bussmann), again scripted by Marshall and Renwick and featuring a stellar cast, including Loretta Swit, Peter Cook, Michael Richards, Alexei Sayle, Rik Mayall, Ian Richardson, Herbert Lom, Richard Wilson, Graeme Garden, John Sessions and Richard Murdoch.

Barry Morse also starred in SPACE: 1999 and Peter Jones played the book in THE HITCH HIKERS GUIDE TO THE GALAXY.

HITCHHIKER'S GUIDE TO THE GALAXY, THE

WICKED SCIENCE

Toby Johnson is an easy-going guy who wants a quiet life. Elizabeth Hawke wants everything her way. She doesn't like anybody, and nobody at school likes her. One day they get hit by a ray, a unique magnetic pulse that changes everything. Suddenly they're both scientific geniuses!

Seems like a wild situation for any 15 year-old. Toby can create pheromones to make any guy irresistible to girls. He can articulate gloves that make you play like Jimi Hendrix. But he doesn't know how to control the gift, and he's not easy with it. But Elizabeth revels in her new found power. She wants to dominate the school, using her gift as the ultimate weapon for success and power. He may not like it, but Toby's the only one who can hold her back.

Battle lines are drawn between the two wizards of science. The normal world of Sandy Bay School is turned upside down by invisible cars, flying lawnmowers, a cloned school principal and a rampaging T-Rex.

With Elizabeth's megalomania spiralling out of control, she decides she must eliminate Toby. Will she succeed? And whose genius will survive?

This show is the best! Every episode has it's own special effects and it's so good. Too bad, there wasn't more episodes. Oh, about that frog on the keyboard... well it's not bad, it could happen, if they became geniuses, why frog shouldn't reprogram the "MFD"? By the way I think it's very cool because Gart, Verity, Russell and Dinah know. I mean, if they weren't in the show, the show would be so stupid. Come on, like in the episode "Virtual game"... what would Toby do without Russ and Dinah, and how could Elizabeth work without Verity? Remember the episode where Verity ran into Elizabeth's laboratory and told her that Tesslar is going to do something with the electricity. This show contains so much fun, special effects and really good story.

Main characters

Toby - Just an average boy before all this happened, Toby is good kid who just wants to stop Elizabeth and her allies Verity and Garth from taking it too far.

Russ - Toby's best friend. He helps him a lot when the time comes to do something. He doesn't like Elizabeth, Verity and he is afraid of Garth.

Dina - She is the last member of good trio. Dina is smart, good looking but she hates Elizabeth. Also, boys get on her nerves sometimes.

Elizabeth - She is so evil. She hates everybody except Toby. But it just happens that they are worst enemies.

Verity - Verity is very sneaky, but she is also very boring. She gets on Elizabeth's nerves sometimes.

Garth - Garth is the school bully. He is always up for a fight with somebody, especially Russ.

Other characters

Bianca - Toby likes her very much. Bianca is very pretty and she likes Toby too.

Sean - He doesn't appear very much in episodes, but we can see that he likes girls and they like him.

Mr. Tesslar - He is teacher and he can't understand why Toby is so interested in "MFE".

Toby comes to rescue and finds himself trapped in the force field with Bianca - and Elizabeth threatening to use the shrink ray on one of them.

Dir Richard Jasek

1 - 26 ENDGAME

Toby and Bianca are still trapped within the force field and Toby starts to really worry about what Elizabeth is up to. She has created a new T-Rex - but this time it is trainable! - or so Elizabeth thinks. T-Rex is soon on the loose and Toby finally gets himself free - only to have a bigger problem again.

Dir Richard Jasek

2 - 1 THE FILES

A new guy arrives at Sandy Bay School - cunning, unscrupulous Jack - who wants nothing more than to discover their secret. Elizabeth and Toby are both in trouble, especially when Elizabeth falls for Jack's charm, which is somewhat of a relief for Toby. But Elizabeth has already turned Toby's cousin Sacha and Russ into blowflies. But when Elizabeth finds herself being held prisoner by a King Kong sized Koala on the city bridge - will Toby come to her rescue?

2 - 2 SWEET DREAMS

What could be worse than being a teenager? Being a guinea pig for Elizabeth - especially when you don't know about it. Elizabeth inadvertently manages to create havoc when Sacha's teeth start falling out while she is giving a class presentation. But that is nothing to Garth, who during a game of beach volleyball, begins to grow breasts! Can it be reversed - or has Elizabeth gone too far this time?

2 - 3 SUPERFISH

As Elizabeth continues to try to get Toby's attention, she decides to teach him a lesson. Toby has just invented a seal oil to assist with his swimming. Elizabeth sneaks in and adds a little something to it. When Toby uses the oil he gets more than he bargains for when the oil not only makes him swim like a seal - but act and perform like one as well!

2 - 4 FEVER

For once Elizabeth is doing something for others - but only because she has no other choice. She keeps granting other people's wishes, causing the genius in her to start going haywire. Toby knows he must help her, because if he doesn't she may be gone forever.

2 - 5 A FRIEND IN NEED

Russ decides that it is time for him to use one of Toby's inventions. He uses a suit and dresses up as Toby. All goes well until the suit starts to malfunction. Will Toby and Elizabeth's secret be exposed?

2 - 6 THE GREAT DORK

Problems arise from Toby's latest experiment which sees Russ swap places with his ancestor - from over 350,000 years ago. While Russ begins to enjoy life and invents the pizza, Rog is astounded by this new world he finds himself in and begins to turn Sany Bay upside down.

2 - 7 CLOSE CALL

Toby and Elizabeth's secret is under threat of being revealed.

Elizabeth has invented a new device which allows the person or objects it is being aimed at to move through solid objects because it changes the molecules, however, it isn't working properly yet and ends up making things disappear after an amount of time. The device though is accidentally aimed and fired at the unsuspecting Jack - and he begins to disappear.

Toby must put his dislike for Elizabeth aside and work together to restore Jack to normal before he disappears for good.

2 - 8 RING OF CONFIDENCE

Toby's latest invention is a good one and has the power to only do good things - or does it? Toby finds out that sometimes a little confidence can be good. The ring which gives this power was intended for Verity to help her get out there and show her stuff during swimming. Unfortunately it doesn't go to plan as Elizabeth sets out to tamper with the ring for her own purposes.

2 - 9 MISTY

Toby finds himself trapped in a virtual reality world after Elizabeth tricks him into it. Refuses to go along with the plan, she sends herself into it as well hoping that Toby will rescue her and end the game - but instead both become trapped in it. Sacha meanwhile is missing her horse Misty, but the latest teleporter device allows her to bring Misty to her - until the device begins to malfunction and Misty starts appearing at random - anywhere.

2 - 10 CATCH ME IF YOU CAN

Jack is carefully moving closer to finding out Elizabeth and Toby's secret. Meanwhile, Toby has a date - which Jack's sister Nikki Bailey. When Elizabeth finds out about Nikki and Toby she sees red and wants to ruin the date. But will anyone stop Jack before he finds out the truth?

2 - 16 VERITY FROM THE BLUE LAGOON

An experiment which Elizabeth is conducting goes horribly wrong when Verity breaks it. The plant from Boggy Creek experiment causes Verity to begin morphing into a scaly creature.

2 - 17 THE TRUTH IS OUT THERE

A Science Expo is coming and Jack wants to use the opportunity to get Elizabeth and Toby to make him a genius. Sacha has invented something, but is determined to keep it secret - so why does everyone want to know what it is?

2 - 18 AIR DOG

2 - 19 CRAZY FOR YOU

Elizabeth creates an artificial intelligence program in order to have a personal assistant who will do the job right. But Max, as she calls it, soon gets out of control and goes after Toby, Verity and Garth via the computer. Will Toby break his date with Nikki to help Elizabeth?

2 - 20 TIME LOOP

Elizabeth is still jealous over Nikki and Toby so she comes up with the perfect plan - she is going to trap Toby in a time loop. So Toby is stuck having the same day, over and over again.

2 - 21 UNDERWATER

Elizabeth catches an octopus and extracts poison that can immobilize an elephant with one drop. When Russ and Garth have to clean up the science classroom, Garth makes a spitball with some poison on it, but it accidentally hits Mr Woods. Ms Hammer searches for Mr Woods because he has to drive the class to a concert. Elizabeth then gets paralyzed herself and can't create an antidote. Can Toby come up with an antidote in time?

2 - 22 GHOST GIRL

A very famous celebrity comes to Toby's school and a very jealous Elizabeth is asked to show her around. Elizabeth traps Russ, Toby, Sacha and the celeb in a haunted house using her genius to scare the girl away. Oh, Russ gets entangled into romance.

2 - 23 SPIDER BOY

Garth's nephew Rodney is in town and he loves to play pranks on everybody. When he has to hide from Mr Woods for disturbing the class Garth takes him to Elizabeth's lab. Rodney gets bitten by a spider and turns into one! He can spit sticky slime and can make cocoons. Now he wants revenge on Sacha for putting itching powder in his clothes. Will Elizabeth get there on time to rescue her?

2 - 24 MEET THE PARENTS

Toby and Nikki's relationship is under threat when Jack and Elizabeth make a deal. Together, they will turn the Baileys against Toby so they won't allow Nikki to date him. In return, Elizabeth agrees to tell Jack the secret behind Wicked Science.

2 - 25 JACK MAKES HIS MOVE

Elizabeth decides to use Jack to make Toby jealous. All the while Jack is using Elizabeth to find out more information and to steal the disc.

2 - 26 KING CUDDLY

Still love-struck, Jack talks Elizabeth into making Toby normal again. She agrees and goes off to perform it. While she is out of the way, Jack turns himself into a genius.

WILD PALMS

Wild Palms is set in Los Angeles in 2007, a time and a place replete with menace, where dissidents can be beaten up and dragged out of restaurants, where the poor and political refugees seek refuge in a brutal no-go area called the wilderzone, and where a highly addictive 21st century drug called Mimezine can create a deceptively convincing substitute reality, producing an illusion of touch that fulfils the consumer's wildest fantasies.

Its hero is patent attorney Harry Wyckoff, who enjoys a seemingly comfortable yuppie lifestyle with his beautiful wife Grace and their two children. But beneath the surface all is not well. Harry is impotent, his young daughter is a disturbed mute and he is troubled by recurring nightmares - the rhino in the pool. He is wooed by an old flame, Paige Katz, into accepting a job at Channel 3, a TV network owned by Senator Anton Kreutzer's Wild Palms Group, that is about to launch a new 3D TV show called Church Windows into the living rooms of an unsuspecting world.

Harry soon finds himself caught in a struggle for society's soul. On the one hand: Kreutzer, a messianic politician, TV tycoon and self-styled spiritual leader of the Fathers, an authoritarian, right-wing cult not averse to kidnapping children and raising them in his philosophy of Synthotics, or New Realism. On the other: The Friends. Founded by Eli Levitt, ex-husband of Kreutzer's sadistic sister Josie, and father of Harry's wife Grace, this underground organisation considers itself the shock troops of reality, dedicated to bringing down Kreutzer and The Fathers.

Kreutzer wants to propel himself into power and he plans to do it by controlling people's perceptions of reality, through a combination of mind-bending 'holosynth technology' that projects 3D images into their living rooms, and the consciousness-altering drug Mimezine. Kreutzer will also stop at nothing to get his hands on the 'go-chip', a tiny, computerised biochip that when implanted in the body, promises immortality as a holographic God.

Harry finds his life and family falling apart as he is sucked into the senator's sinister schemes. His wife is murdered; he loses one 'son' who turns out to be his half brother, but finds his real son Peter. In the end he succeeds in thwarting the senator's crazy plans and at last finds peace with his old flame, his daughter and son.

Wild Palms stands as both a vision and a warning of what TV and its associated technologies could become. To the casual consumer, the idea of having your living room turned into anything that you would desire might sound like an interactive paradise. But, as Oliver Stones series sets out to show, this would not be enough for those who might want to manipulate the technology for their own ends. Separating fiction from fact won't be easy when it's sitting along side you on the sofa. American mainstream audiences couldn't take Wild Palms, just as they struggled with Twin Peaks. But this is no Twin Peaks twin - that series had passed its supernatural sell by date well before the final episode.

Wild Palms hits you like a hallucinogenic - warping your senses and playing games with your intellect. A big splash, ripples and then its gone. This is the rhinoceros. TV is its swimming pool. Viewers bewildered by the byzantine plot can take visual comfort in the look and the technology. The costumes - Edwardian wing collars and New Look cocktail dresses - are strangely stylish. A sequence where Harry dons a pair of virtual reality glasses and finds himself in a courtly 17th century ballroom setting is stunning, and the holographic realisation of the 3D show Church Windows is tantalisingly haunting.

Stone and Wagner also make cameo appearances as a chat show host and his guest, with Wagner saying to Stone: 'Fifteen years after the film JFK the files are released. You were right. Are you bitter?' And in a neat nod of acknowledgement, William Gibson, cyberpunk guru, introduced on the same show as 'the man who coined the word cyberspace'. Wild Palms stands as both a vision and a warning of what TV and its associated technologies could become. To the casual consumer, the idea of having your living room turned into the Rovers Return with a holographic Raquel pulling holographic pints might sound like an interactive paradise.

The truth about Coty is revealed. Grace must make a choice. Josie reveals her fight skills and someone has a grisly fate on cyberspace.

1 - 4 HUNGRY GHOSTS

Paige reveals her secrets. A wedding. Tony wants the Go-Chip. Harry freaks as someone very near and dear to him is brutally murdered on live TV

1 - 5 HELLO, I MUST BE GOING

The grand finale as Fathers and Friends come to a collision, and all the horrors of the WPN are revealed. Will Harry Wyckoff pick up the pieces of his shattered dream?

WILD WILD WEST, THE

The good guys are a debonair government undercover agent, James T. West, and his aide, master of disguise and inventor Artemus Gordon, who have been chosen by President Ulysses S. Grant to spearhead the government's efforts to enforce law and order on the frontier. They operate from a mobile base on a plush private train with weapons and gadgets strategically hidden throughout.

But the bad guys aren't your average rustler or gun-toting outlaw. They're often criminal geniuses threatening the newly united American nation with all manner of scientific devices from robots to atomic bombs, wave-makers to time machines, cyborgs to a volcano-creating device.

Thus, the elements of Western and tongue-in-cheek spy drama combined to produce one of the purest and most outrageously bizarre fantasies ever made for television. The series' most charismatic 'super' villain, Miguelito Loveless, is a dwarf with a fanatical hatred of everyone taller than himself! A brilliant scientist, he invents robots, LSD and time travel devices. He also devised the means to shrink people and to escape by passing into another dimension and hiding in old paintings! .

James Bond meets Gunsmoke. James T. West (not to be confused with James T. Kirk) was a secret agent for President Ulysses S. Grant, in real life the military genius who boozed his way through the White House, surrounded by corrupt aides, went bankrupt, and wrote the best Presidential autobiography ever -- for the money. James T. West's focus was the alarming number of revolutionary, radical, criminal, and anarchist groups constantly plotting to take over America. Assisted by Secret Service Agent Artemus Gordon, master of disguise, they travelled by special railroad car equipped with the tools and materials needed to make a vast array of gadgets and gizmos. James T. West's nemesis was the brilliant but irrevocably evil Dr. Miguelito Loveless. Sometimes rose from anachronistically daffy to delightful. In the face of it, The Wild, Wild West sounds like just another Western adventure series, set as it is in post-Civil War America.

One episode even brought on the aliens - a trio of Venusians who land on Earth in their 'flying pie plate' in search of fuel. Another, The Night of the Burning Diamond, featured a thief who melted down diamonds to create an elixir with which he could travel faster than light. In America, The Wild, Wild West was a big hit, running for four years and 104 episodes from 1965. Britain hasn't been so lucky: the series premiered in ITV's Northern region in May 1968 (a 13-week Sunday night run), billed as 'the first James Bond Western', and subsequently clocked up seasons in several ITV regions during the 1970s, notably London, Southern and Westward. But these were invariably mid-afternoon when no one was watching or late-night when they'd gone to bed. The series was revived by satellite channel, Bravo, in January 1995.

As the western was beginning to fade in popularity in the mid-sixties, spy dramas were becoming increasingly popular. One series came out that merged the two genres together. That series was The Wild Wild West. The Wild Wild West was set in the American west during the time President Grant was in office. The series centred around the adventures of two government agents. James T. West and his partner Artemus 'Artie' Gordon. Jim had been an officer during the Civil War and was the tough guy who always seemed to get the girl. Artie was a master of disguise and dialects. Artie would work undercover in disguise, at times his disguises were so good that they even fooled Jim. The pair had a mobile base of operations in a specially built Pullman railroad car.

Jim and Artie would thwart assorted enemy agents, mad scientists and whoever else threatened America's well being. What made the adversaries that Jim and Artie came up against different than those in other westerns was the fact that the villains were often in possession of advanced technology. Although most of the 'new' technology was things that have been developed in the 20th century, some of the enemies faced had things at their disposal which are not even possible today. Not yet developed technology which was present in The Wild Wild West included the ability to animate corpses, tidal wave machines and the ability for people to be placed inside of paintings. The most notorious and persistent foe whom Jim and Artie faced was Dr. Miguelito Loveless. Loveless was a short brilliant man with a desire to take over the world. After being defeated by Jim West, Loveless became obsessed with killing him. Jim and Artie faced off against Loveless on 11 separate occasions. A plan by his son, Miguelito Loveless Jr., to clone the leaders of the world caused Jim and Artie to be called out of retirement for the first of two The Wild Wild West reunion movies in 1979.

During the middle of the 4th and final season of The Wild Wild West, actor Ross Martin, who portrayed Artie, was hospitalised due to a heart attack. During the seven episodes produced while he was hospitalised, Jim was given several new partners, with Artie's absence being explained as in Washington DC on business. Although most of Jim's new partners only appeared once, one of them Jeremy Pike portrayed by Charles Aidman, teamed up with Jim on four occasions. Pike was to be Jim's only replacement partner until someone decided that a mix of partners was what was needed. The producers for the series were Michael Garrison, Fred Freiberger, Gene L. Coon, Collier Young, John Mantley and Bruce Lansbury.

Although they lived in the 1870s, secret service agents James West (Robert Conrad) and Artemus Gordon (Ross Martin) faced robots, time machines, ghosts, man-made sea monsters and invisible men. One recurring adversary was a dwarf scientist, Dr. Miguelito Loveless (excellently played by Michael Dunn). In one episode, Loveless shrinks West to a height of six inches, and the agent battles a giant cat and spider. The Old West certainly wasn't like this! Ross Martin was nominated for an Emmy Award for his role during the 1968-69 season. Martin's character was an inspiration to a young fan named Dana Carvey, who grew up to be a master of impressions himself on Saturday Night Live.

Some of the actors who visited the West included Ida Lupino, Sammy Davis Jr., Robert Duvall, Michael York, Nick Adams, Boris Karloff, Katherine Ross, Jackie DeShannon, Robert Loggia, Richard Pryor, Peter Lawford and Ricardo Montalban. Well produced, The Wild, Wild West was extremely popular, but it took a lot of flak for its violence. The National Association for Better Broadcasts charged, "It contains some of the most frightening and sadistic scenes ever made for television." That was a strong factor in its cancellation in 1969. Two TV movies, The Wild, Wild West Revisited (1979) and More Wild, Wild West (1980) updated the adventures of West and Gordon. Both Conrad and Martin reprised their roles.

AKA: SPECIAL RESCUE POLICE

AKA: SPECIAL RESCUE POLICE WINSPECTOR

Superintendent Shunsuke Masaki (Miyauchi) forms an elite unit of the police force, designed to cope with crimes that other divisions simply cannot handle. He selects the scientific genius and linguist Ryoma to help him, and gives him an experimental suit of police armour, resistant to bullets and "low-level" lasers, but to taxing on its wearer that prolonged use can put his life in danger - compare to KAMEN RIDER. Ryoma's "Fire" suit also protects him from extremes of heat, and will kill anyone else who tries to put it on.

Ryoma is aided by Madock, the Winspector team's vast mainframe A.I., and his obligatory female side kick, sharp shooter Junko (Nakanishi). The Winspector team also comprises two robots, transforming ground assault vehicle Biker and aerial-capable Walter. Later, Biker gains Demitas, a small talking tin can to keep him company.

Tokkei Winspector, translated as Special Police Winspector, is a Japanese tokusatsu TV series, part of the Metal Heroes franchise and the first piece of the Rescue Hero trilogy. The series follows the adventures and missions of a special "Rescue Police" team known as Special Police Winspector, as they stop crimes and respond to dangerous events. The team is made up of one human (a hero clad in armor) and two robotic assistants. "Winspector" was dubbed and aired in Germany as of 2001, and was pretty popular during its run.

Based, as usual "on an idea by Saburo Yade", Winspector forms the seventh of the metal series that began with GAVAN, and was preceded by JIVAN. Eventually, the Winspector team would leave to join Interpol and fight foreign crime, leaving their former boss Shunsuke to come up with another team of enforcers, the following years SOLBRAIN. Though the show was not adapted for the American market, it was dubbed into German in a European attempt to cash in on the success of MIGHTY MORPIN' POWER RANGERS. Theme: Takayuki Miyauchi "Kyo no Ore Kara Ashita no Kimi e" (From Today's Me to Tomorrow's You).

The series was produced by Kyozo Utsunomiya & Nagafumi Hori.

Ryouma Kagawa / Fire: 23 years old. Ryouma is the leader of the team and the only human member. Like Masaki, he is also a Police Superintendent. He can speak five languages. He is a martial artist. He is armed with an energy sword and a suit of red armor. His car is named Winsquad. His transformation call is "Jack Up!" He's got a sister and he lose his parents when he was 13. Later he joined Solbrain team as Knight Fire.
Biker: Walter's "twin brother", Biker is one of two robots who assists Ryouma. He is armed with twin katanas and coin bombs. He has the motorcycle and a wheel on his chest, on which he can land-surf. His armor is yellow. In the German dub, his name is Brian. Biker is master of jokes (Walter is angry for him, when he make something).

Walter: Biker's "twin brother", Walter is one of two robots who assists Ryouma. He is equipped with wings, which he can use to in order to fly. His armor is metallic blue-green. Walter loves children and he is type of happy from live. In the German dub against some rumors he's called Walter as well.
Head of Department Shunsuke Masaki: Winspector's commander and founder.

Junko Fujino: Junko is an information G-man. She is an expert with handguns.

Hisako Koyama: Hisako is a secret G-man. She usually works in a coffee shop. Her father, Masanobu Koyama, is a fellow worker of Masaki who died at his post six years ago.

Shin'ichi Nonoyama: Shin'ichi is Winspector's mechanic. He develops of rescue tools and maintains Biker and Walter.

Madocks: Winspector's supercomputer. Madocks holds data on every criminal and analyzes it instantly.

WIPE OUT THE TOWNAKA: SONO MACHI O KESE

Teenager Tetsu (Koyama) and his school friends believe that they are tracking down ghosts in their neighbourhood, but they are actually pursuing the echoes and shadows of a parallel universe. Tetsu finds himself crossing over to a parallel Japan in the grip of fascism, where citizens fear the secret police and freedoms have been crushed. The children are sent to a concentration camp for inferior citizens, while the ruling class of the alternate world prepare to leave forever, planning to make their home in our own universe. Tetsu and his friends escape from the camp, along with local love-interest Chizuko (Saito). Tetsu plans on taking her back to his own universe with him, but she is revealed to be a spy. The boys find Dr. Shirato (Tamagawa), the inventor of the dimensional transport machine, and use it to return to their place of origin.

Based on two stories by Ryu Mitsuse (see DAWN OF SILVER) - Out of Town and Don't Look at the Flower (Sono Hana o Miru Na!). The series was produced by Nobuo Koga.

WONDERBUG, THE

One day while searching in a junk yard for an affordable set of wheels, three teenagers, Susan, Barry, and C.C. find Supercar, a conglomeration of several junked cars that kinda looked like a dun buggy. Somehow they figure they can't go wrong with this ride so they buy it. They place what turns out to be a magical horn on Schlepocar and presto, it turns into the talking Wonderbug (and you thought "Knight Rider" was original). The three teens spend most of their days fighting evil with their amazing car, Wonderbug, that can perform incredible feats.

Wonderbug was a TV series on ABC network, and was part of the first and second season of the ABC network's Krofft Supershow beginning in 1976.

Wonderbug's alter ego "Schlepocar" was an old, beat up, conglomeration of several junked cars that looked like a rusty dune buggy. Like Herbie of Disney movie fame, Schlepocar was alive and could drive itself, and could also talk in a mumbling voice. It was found in a junk yard by teenagers Barry Buntrock (David Levy), C.C. McNamara (Jack Baker) and Susan Talbot (Carol Anne Sefflinger). Schlepocar transformed into the shiny metal-flake orange Wonderbug when a magic horn was sounded. In his Wonderbug identity, Shlepocar had the power of flight and was able to help the three teens capture crooks and prevent evil wrongdoing.

In Wonderbug mode, the car was a custom Meyers Manx-clone body Volkswagen. The car had articulated eyeball headlights, and a custom bumper that resembled a mouth; different bumpers were sometimes used to give the car different facial expressions. When the car spoke in its mumbling voice, a rubber puppet stand-in with a moving mouth was sometimes used. The space that would normally contain the left rear passenger seat instead contained a box, described in dialog as "the costume trunk"; this box actually served to conceal a hidden driver in scenes in which the car drives itself. The car also had a long fender-mounted radio antenna that terminated with a robot-like claw or gripper.

Barry often thought he was the brains of the outfit. However, it was usually Susan who came up with the ideas that saved them.

Wonderbug shared its half-hour time slot with other Krofft Supershow titles, including Magic Mongo, Dr. Shrinker, The Lost Saucer, and Electra Woman and Dyna Girl.

This show formed a part of the The Krofft Supershow made from 1976-1977. In Syndicated reruns episodes have been paired up to form 30 minute segments. The series was first shown on ABC in the US.

WOOPS!

Ironically, it was a time of relative peace in the world. In New York that day, thoughts were on the pennant race. In Los Angeles, the biggest concern was beating the heat. And in a small town in America's heartland, a parade was being held. The people ate hot dogs, listened to marshall tunes played by the local high school band, and craned their necks to admire the latest in high-tech weaponry from nearby Fort Pratt.

But at the very moment the homecoming queen was receiving a deservedly warm reception from the crowd, some darn kids were playing [with remote control car] near one of the missiles. [missile launches]. Retaliation was swift. Failsafe and doomsday mechanisms kicked in exactly as programmed, and in less than 50 minutes, but for a handful of survivors, the world had been destroyed. Looking back on it... it had to be considered a bad parade.

Three episodes (number 1.11 - 1.13) were never aired in the US. Woops! Was a sitcom somewhat reminiscent of Gilligan's Island. Both featured a small group of people from differing backgrounds forced to survive isolated from civilisation. However, unlike the castaways in Gilligan's island who always had the hope of being rescued, the six people in Woops! Had no hope of returning to the world they knew since it had been destroyed in a nuclear war.

In the first episode of Woops! A toy radio controlled car accidentally launches a nuclear missile which in turn ignites a nuclear war that destroys all of mankind, almost. Six people, four men and two women, somehow manage to survive the catastrophe and make their way to a farmhouse in a valley which for unexplained reasons managed to come out of the holocaust unscathed. The six people were: Jack Connors, a homeless man who had accepted his position in life and was always making a joke of everything; Curtis Thorpe, a successful businessman who thought than money was everything and that everyone else was inferior to him; Dr. Frederick Ross, a black pathologist who felt he was always being singled out buy the other because he was black; Alice McConnell, a feminist book store owner who always seemed to be voicing her liberal view points; Suzanne Skillman, a sexy airheaded manicurist who at times seemed not to realise just what the holocaust had done; and Mark Braddock, a Jewish school teacher who was the most normal person out of the whole group.

Mark, kept a journal of what was happening to the survivors in case there were future generations who needed to know what it was like rebuilding society. Mark would often read from his journal to provide narration for the series. The characters in Woops! Came across as caricatures then real people. Likewise, the situations they found themselves in, as they attempted to survive and get along with each other, more often than not came across as totally ridiculous and unbelievable. The series was cancelled before all the episodes were run. Britain's contribution to the post apocalyptic comedy TV genre. NOT WITH A BANG is much more believable and the better of the two programmes which comprise this sub-genre. The series was cancelled after episode 1.10 was broadcast, 1.11 - 1.13 did not run on the shows original airing.

WORLD OF GIANTS

AKA: W.O.G.

World of Giants told of the exploits of Mel Hunter, a unique American secret agent. He was only six inches tall. Mel wasn't always six inches tall. He got that way while working undercover in eastern Europe trying to get information on a newly developed rocket. The rocket exploded and Mel was exposed to chemicals. When he returned to America he began to shrink and nothing that the doctors could do could reverse the process. Fortunately for Mel the shrinking process stabilised him at a height of six inches tall.

The government, seizing an opportunity kept Mel employed as an agent since there are things a six inch tall agent can do that it would be impossible for a normal sized man to do. Conversely, many everyday events turned into life threatening disasters for Mel. To help him out he was assigned Bill Winters as a partner. Bill had a specially designed briefcase that was used to transport Mel around with. Mel was also given a specially modified doll house to live in that was hidden behind a painting in the house that Bill and Mel shared. Commissioner Hogg was Bill and Mel's supervisor who would give them their assignments. Brownie was a nurse hired to look after Mel and one of the few people aware of his special status. The episodes consisted of typical espionage dramas, reflecting the cold war attitude of the time.

A cheesy attempt to squeeze extra profit from the huge props left over after the filming of "The Incredible Shrinking Man." Assumes that radiation can shrink people. Obviously it shrunk somebody's brain. The special effects used to convince the audience that Mel was in fact only six inches tall were for the most part quite effective. Considering the fact that the show was produced in the late 1950's it is amazing how well they stand up today. Oversized props, split screens and rear projection effects were all used to produce the desired results.

The pilot episode Special Agent does not tell how Mel became six inches tall, but rather picks up with him already shrunken ready to undertake his first mission since the accident. This may have been done due to the higher costs involved for the effects to show him actually shrinking. Jack Arnold, who two years previously had directed the classic movie The Incredible Shrinking Man, also directed several episodes of World Of Giants. A similar premise to World of Giants would be used 10 years later for the Gerry Anderson supermarionation series: THE SECRET SERVICE.

Ziv Television's World of Giants is less about science fiction than espionage; the series is a self proclaimed espionage thriller, albeit with an interesting gimmick similar to the one used in H. G. Wells' Invisible Man: An accident causes the miniaturisation of the program's protagonist, American secret agent Mel Hunter (Marshall Thompson). But unlike Invisible Man, there is no scientific experimentation that goes awry; Hunter's diminutive state is due to exposure to an experimental fuel released by an exploding rocket while Hunter was on a secret assignment in an Eastern Euro-pean country. There is no scientific effort to return him to his normal state despite his opening remark that "the scientists were still hoping, still working on my case." Hunter accepts his six-inch stature, stating that "in the six months since my accident I have learned to get up in the morning as if nothing had actu-ally changed." Later, he observes that he is a "special special agent," thwarting efforts by spies to infiltrate the United States.

Information on World of Giants is scant. We were able to find just two episodes out of a total of 13 for review (one episode is the pilot). The Ziv series was made in Hollywood, produced at first by Otto Lang who, after a few episodes, was replaced by veteran sci-fi film producer William Alland. Many science fiction sources also maintain that the series was inspired by Jack Arnold's The Incredible Shrinking Man (1957), and that leftover props from that film were used. Another interesting anomaly is the open-ing title "WOG." The series opens with the initials WOG prominently displayed and spoken majestically by an announcer. This is fol-lowed by an animated sequence forming "World of Giants" out of the letters WOG, which is again spoken by the announcer. In addition, following the commercial break, the title "WOG" appears at the beginning of the second act (a frequent device used by Ziv). The significance of WOG remains unclear.

Alan Morton's The Complete Directory to Science Fiction, Fantasy and Horror Television Series features the most extensive summary of the series despite identifying Hunter's superior as Commissioner Hogg; the pilot episode, which Morton claims is also known by the title "Secret Agent," clearly identifies the commissioner as H.E. Hall. Judging from the pilot episode, the series relies less on dialogue than on action; Hunter faces one peril after another in his hostile environment (he says he must be "careful 3600 seconds of every hour"). According to Morton, such highly skilled craftsmen as Byron Haskin, Eugene Lourie, Nathan Juran and Jack Arnold guided Hunter through his adventures. The story of the pilot, like The Incredible Shrinking Man, is presented from Mel's point of view. This is realised by lengthy narrations by Mel which at times are told via stream-of-consciousness. These "thoughts" are then complemented by the use of cameras with wide angle lenses, shot from very low perspectives, that result in giving the viewer the exaggerated image of giants. Combined, these narrations and camera angles shape Mel's predicament to such a degree that we, too, find ourselves adrift in his world of giants.

What is also significant here is that such formal qualities are not limited to the action sequences; in "Look Up to a Giant," a simple introduction between Mel and his old friend and fellow agent Larry Gregson becomes a threatening exchange. The diminutive Mel stands near his mode of transportation, a specially constructed attaché case, chatting with Gregson, who is obviously perplexed by Mel's six-inch stature. Gregson reaches down to shake Mel's hand, and as he does director Lang's wide angle exaggerates not only Gregson's outstretched hand but his face as well. Since Gregson expresses frustration at what he sees, he looms over us as some giant oppressive menace. But the effect is not one of demon-strating Gregson's power over us as much as it demonstrates our own vulnerability to his presence. The sequence is disconcerting to say the least, but our discomfort is eventually tempered by Mel, who graciously shakes Gregson's finger and takes the whole thing in stride.

Unfortunately, such a narrative structure does not appear in the second episode we reviewed, "Off-Beat." In this episode, it is television business as usual, as it were; no stream of consciousness narration and no obtrusive visual style, just a typical mundane delineation of story. On the other hand, the episode features some clever optical shots created by veteran David S. Horsley, who receives credit as director of photography for the episode. (Horsley, along with Clifford Stine, served as Universal's special effects expert in the 1950s, creating the stunning special effects in Joseph Newman's This Island Earth (1955).) Horsley seamlessly integrated Mel's tiny "doll house" home with Winters' normal-sized room; in addition, Mel's investigation of a piano is highlighted by an assault of piano keys that methodically threaten Mel, who hovers in a corner of the piano. Such effects are a distinct contrast to the effects of the pilot episode, which featured oversized props and a few rear-projection shots to depict Mel's world of giants.

Much of the following information has been culled from various reference sources, but the credits listed are taken primarily from Morton's book since he seems to be the most complete. Story material and casts have been cross-referenced between newspaper logs and TP Guide for accuracy, but no clear broadcast dates are available since the series was apparently syndicated on a station-by-station basis rather than by region (the usual practice for Ziv). Also, for purposes of continuity, the sequence of episodes is that of Morton's since our research showed vast disparities of broadcast order in the numerous logs examined. In addition, we have used titles as they appeared in TV listings since Morton identifies three titles that are different from the listings: "Secret Agent" for "Look Up to a Monster," "Time Bomb" for "The Bomb" and "The Chemical Story" for "Ice Chamber." As far as can be determined, only 13 episodes were produced.

Signature

The title "WOG," seen before a sky background, is spoken by an announcer. This is followed by the announcer intoning, "World ... of ... Giants." The scene then shifts to a very low angle subjective shot, where we first see a car pass over, a pair of scissors fall, a footstep hit, and a teapot crash. Under this we hear Mel Hunter announcing that "one of the most closely guarded secrets" and some of the most incredible events in spy history are about to be revealed to us, in our "world of giants." The credits for Thompson, Franz and Henderson are then played.

"You are about to see one of the most closely guarded secrets and one of the most fantastic series of events ever recorded in the annals of counterespionage. This is my story. The story of Mel Hunter, who lives in your world—a World of Giants. "-Weekly title narration Six-inch-high Mel Hunter could be called the live-action equivalent of Saturday Night Live's Mr. Bill. Continually put upon by the dangers of everyday life, Mel reflects in one episode, "My own life is in jeopardy every day." In the pilot film alone, poor Mel has barely tumbled out of his mini-sized bed when his giant colleague, Bill Winters, absentmindedly knocks a pencil on the floor, nearly crushing Mel. Minutes later, while being briefed by his giant boss, Mel is bowled over by the hurricane-force wind of an office fan. "Turn off the fan!" Mel screams. The sheepish giants comply and the meeting goes on.

Nevertheless, Mel always got the job done, scurrying under door frames, climbing up rose bushes and lugging the receivers of giant phones off their cradles to make phone calls. The mighty mite also had all of his comforts provided to him by the Bureau. He lived in a luxurious dollhouse, exercised on a tiny gymnastics bar and was carried around in an attache case by Bill Winters. Although rarely seen today, WOG (its official nickname) was produced with high hopes by the low-budget studio ZIV. The success of the 1957 film The Incredible Shrinking Man encouraged CBS to buy the series for the 1959-60 season. However, the network got cold feet and contracted United Artists to run the 13 episodes in syndication.

William Alland was brought in to replace producer Otto Lang several weeks after production. Alland, the producer of such 1950s films as Creature from the Black Lagoon, It Came from Outer Space and Tarantula, recalls, "William Self, a big-wheel executive at CBS, asked me what I could do with the show. I watched a couple of the episodes, and I thought it was a truly ridiculous idea. The way they were making the show required a million-dollar budget. It should never have been attempted for TV." Alland found that the giant-sized props were costing ZIV a fortune. There have been misconceptions that World of Giants reused props made for Universal's The Incredible Shrinking Man. In truth, the series built all of its giant props from scratch. "It was crazy," notes Alland. "They were building giant telephones and desks to make Marshall Thompson look like this little guy. The sets looked great, but they were breaking the budget."

Sizing up the dilemma, Alland called up his friend Stan Horsley. "Stan was a genius for using the camera. Because of his expertise, I made the film This Island Earth (1955) for under a million dollars. We worked together to solve WOG's budget problems by doing trick photography rather than construct more giant sets. Stan understood the split-screen technique in a way nobody else did." Using this technology, the pair were able to superimpose their six-inch hero on normal-sized sets, reducing much of the need for giant props. "Without Stan, World of Giants couldn't have been done," marvels Alland. "The mathematics of the effects were incredible. Stan would stand in the studio and draw lines and diagrams. The effects were superb."

Alland contends the original production techniques of WOG were similar to The Incredible Shrinking Man, "which also spent a fortune building giant props. Otto Lang used that approach with WOG. I'm guessing that he left because the budget went totally out of sight. The weekly budget for WOG was pathetic. With Stan's expertise, we did effects that were not only brilliant but cost peanuts. It's just too bad that all of that talent was wasted on such a ridiculous concept." As a super mini-spy for the Bureau, Mel had the U.S. government drooling over his ability. Bill Winters discreetly let Mel off at destinations in a briefcase, which came complete with seat and seatbelt for the miniature agent. "The giant briefcase was my idea," notes Alland. "Mel exited from a secret little door on the bottom. But I really had little to do with the scripts. My biggest contribution was solving the technical problems."

Occasionally, Alland still required oversized props. "In one episode, Mel had to hide in a slot machine in Las Vegas. We built a huge slot bar and a few giant silver dollars. We made them out of balsa wood so that they wouldn't crush our actor!" Marshall Thompson, later the star of the Daktari series, was well liked by his producers. "He was a nice guy who took his role very seriously," says Alland. Otto Lang agrees. "Marshall was perfectly cast for the part. He was one of the best actors I've ever worked with." Writer Charles Larson wrote one WOG script, "Time Bomb," in which Mel tries to save Winters from a concealed explosive. "I had written a fantasy for the Climax TV series, so my agent thought that I and WOG would mix well. And we did. I watched the pilot film, which I liked, and days later ZIV approved my script. The script went smoothly, perhaps because ZIV couldn't afford to waste time and money. ZIV in TV was analogous to Monogram [a low budget movie studio in the 1940s]. If it's in English, shoot it!

"I thought the miniaturized secret agent business was basically juvenile and a little silly," he says. "But beyond that, I loved the dramatic dangers this tiny agent faced. To have to struggle through the jungle of an unkempt lawn is bad enough, but to hear the clash of a giant lawnmower coming after you, that was beautiful! "WOG was both exciting and limiting. The problem was to take Mel Hunter seriously. It's difficult to believe that the U.S. will collapse unless your hero can escape a playful kitten. The concept is much more comfortable in comedy, ~ la Honey, I Shrank the Kids (1989]. WOG was great fun to watch once or twice, but then it grew tiresome. That's often the case with gimmicks. However, Marshall Thompson and Arthur Franz were giant pluses for the show. Arthur in particular was a polished professional who could do virtually anything. I was grateful to have so skilled an actor reading my sometimes necessary silly WOG lines."

Another writer, Paul King, co-wrote the episode "Teeth of the Watchdog," which found Mel fighting a giant Doberman. King remembers the budget crunches of WOG's early days. "It was by far the most expensive TV series of its day," he reflects. "Otto Lang was very solid in production, which was a prerequisite at ZIV. The show was going over budget, and there was a constant war with the production office over cash. It was an almost hopeless problem: ambitious scripts, not enough money."

King classifies his episode as, "okay, but the series in general was much too simplistic and childish. The emphasis was on the shrink factor. There was little character development. Rather than attract the adults, WOG made the fatal error of playing only to a kid audience. It ended up losing both." According to King, it seemed poor Mel was always beset by snarling canines. "The dog of the week was an inside joke amongst writers," he chuckles. Thirteen episodes of WOG were made and sold for exclusive syndication via CBS/United Artists. By the late 1960s, it had vanished from sight. Otto Lang glances back with fondness at the series. "It was well done for what it was and a challenge to produce. But the cost factors were detrimental, and it caused an early cancellation."

William Alland still thinks highly of WOG's special effects but felt the basic concept was a cropper. "It would have been great as a comic strip," he says. "As a live-action TV show, it didn't fly. If somebody had come to me with the idea of a one-inch G.I. Joe for a movie, I'd have told them to get lost. You can't do anything serious with that kind of hero. If Mel had been an alien who had the ability to reduce his size at will, all right. But to ask the audience to accept that J. Edgar Hoover is having a meeting with a one-inch secret agent is silly. But the special effects remain the greatest." When the series ended, American scientists were still working around the clock to find a cure for Mel. Paul King recalls that Mel really had only one wish. "The best line in the series was written by Shimon Wincelberg. A giant asks Mel, 'What do you want most in life?' Mel replies: A fiveinch girl!"

WORLD WAR III

Soviet paratroopers drop into Alaska to sabotage the oil pipeline in retaliation against a United States grain embargo. A skirmish occurs at a pumping station, lightly defended by Col. Jake Caffey (David Soul) and a National Guard recon unit. A stalemate ensues while the possibility of World War III hangs in the balance. The danger escalates as the Russian leaders (Brian Keith and Roert Prosky) and the American President (Rock Hudson) play a cat-and-mouse game.

Finished in the studio when original director Boris Sagal died on location; re-edited as a TV movie.

Produced by Bill Finnegan (executive producer), Patricia Finnegan (executive producer), Bruce Lansbury (producer), Scott Winant (associate producer), Original music by Gil Melle, Cinematography by Stevan Lerner, Film Editing by Robert L. WORLDS BEYOND Anthology series concerning stories of the supernatural. The tales were based on the real life cases from the 'Archives of the Society for Psychical Research'. These cases were 'real' supernatural occurrences which had been documented from the 18th Century until the present, the events of the older occurrences however were updated to the 20th Century.

Hoping for an eventual sale in America, many episodes featured a recognisable American actor almost always on holiday in Britain. The program however has yet to air in America. This is not all that surprising considering the fact that the unenviable middle of the night time slot when it was first aired in Britain. Brian Clemens was one of the writers for the show, he had previously worked on the original AVENGERS. The series was first seen on ITV.

Produced by Alan Radnor (producer), Original music by Ian Stanley, Sound Department - Chris Gurney (boom operator), Special Effects by Mirage, Inc.

Excellent little supernatural anthology series, supposedly based on true accounts, with an excellent mixture of quality guest stars from both sides of the Atlantic, including Denholm Elliott, David Warner, Karen Black and Eli Wallach. Relegated to late-night British TV when it first came out, the series hasn't reappeared since, and richly deserves a re-showing and critical re-evaluation.

Worlds Beyond was an anthology show created by Alan Radnor who also co-produced the show. In 1982 Radnor had made a short film for The Society of Psychical Research to mark its centenary and as part of his research had come across a treasure trove of case histories collected in the Society archives.

Radnor approached the Society to acquire the rights to suitable cases which could be adapted for television broadcast and found he had not been the first to enquire about such a possibility. " People like Orson Welles and James Mason had tried before me, but being a learned Society they were a bit suspicious of these people. Luckily, they liked the centenary film and, after a long and hard negotiation, they allowed me to acquire the rights." explained Radnor in a 1986 interview with Starburst magazine. Radnor had high hopes for the series with plans for sixty five completed shows.

The production was co-funded by British and American money which resulted in a majority of the episodes featuring American stars as playing roles as visiting or domiciled in England. Experienced writers such as Brian Clemens and Tony Williamson were recruited but later went on record as being disappointed with their experiences on the show and the finished programmes.

Filming began in January 1986 and with a turnaround of one episode being completed per week until production wrapped in April. Most of the special effects for the show were completed in camera as opposed to via optical work that would have been added later in post production as a cost cutting exercise.

The completed series did not receive many favourable comments and was shown in an haphazard fashion - often relegated to the graveyard slot or shown as a filler. It is today remembered as a pretty dire series in general. Episodes are listed in production order. If anyone can supply alternative transmission dates then please let us know.

WR. Brian Clemens, Claude Harz, Tony Williamson, Richard Lewis, Marc Alexander, Paul Annett.

An alien arrives on Earth to study our culture and communicates with his home through the use of a camera.

This strange five part series was designed for younger viewers to learn about the life around them, through the eyes of an alien, a very similar concept to Channel Fours' HELPING HENRY, this time however the aliens look like us, except for a camera which follows them about everywhere. The first episode is notable for starring Bob Holness, at the time popular quiz show host to Blockbusters. The various missions that Wysiwyg and his companion got up to, included looking at a quiz show and watching the world Ludo championship in Barcelona. This poor excuse for a TV series was shown on ITV, but soon disappeared of the air waves.

X FILES, THE

A series about two FBI agents who investigate the paranormal and unexplainable phenomena, The X Files is intelligent, thought-provoking and wonderfully creepy. It takes newspaper or magazine stories, even documented accounts of such incidents, and extrapolates them into taut mysteries, blending elements of crime drama and thriller to produce a tug of war between intuition and logic, seen and unseen forces,

The FBI team assigned to crack these bizarre cases are special agents Fox Mulder and Dana Scully, played by David Duchovny and Gillian Anderson, a chalk-and-cheese combo, professionally devoted to each other, with just a hint of something more. Mulder is the 'believer', a wry-witted maverick, haunted by an incident in his own childhood when his sister was apparently a victim of alien abduction. Frankly, Mulder's an embarrassment to the bureau. Condescendingly nicknamed 'Spooky' by his colleagues, he calls himself 'the FBI's Most Unwanted' and sees working on the X Files as a quest for truth. When plausible explanations for a crime don't fit, Mulder explores his theories, such as UFO visitations, mind over matter and genetic mutation. Government cover-ups is another favourite theme. He's single-minded to the point of obsession.

And that's where Scully comes in. Dressing and acting like Clarice Starling in The Silence of the Lambs, Scully is a by-the-book medical expert who is so determined to find rational explanations that she won't accept the irrational - even when it leaps on her and tries to rip out her liver! Her loyalty to Mulder, however, is as unyielding as her scepticism. She's fiercely protective in the face of bureau bosses who'd love to close down the X Files and ship Mulder out to the funny farm. And she's not alone. Mulder has a 'friend' in high places, a shadowy government contact called 'Deep Throat', who is not averse to sending him on the odd wild goose chase. But he covers Mulder's back, and frequently confirms the otherwise unconfirmable. It's an ambivalent ploy which works on the theory that it's better to have Mulder working to expose the truth from the inside than making waves on the outside. When 'Deep Throat' is murdered in the first season's final episode his last words to Scully are 'trust no-one'.

The X Files is one of the most successful SF shows of the 1990s, it came from being a small show to a massive hit within the first two seasons. It is one of the highest rated SF shows in American history, bringing new life into the fledgling Fox Network. America's TV Guide called it 'the most genuinely unsettling television since the heyday of THE TWILIGHT ZONE'. They were right. The X Files was created by Chris Carter, a writer for an American surfing magazine before Hollywood beckoned. He saw the show as a kind of Kolchak for the Nineties, a scary, yet sophisticated drama telling tales that lie within the realm of extreme scientific possibility. The role of Mulder was not Duchovny's first federal agent. He'd played the transvestite FBI man in Twin Peaks.

In America, fans - or X-philes - made the show a real cult hit, with a growing following on the Internet, the interactive world-wide computer network. In the UK, it made a compelling reason for getting hooked up to Sky, before the BBC aired it on BBC2. No series since Star Trek has made a bigger impact on popular culture. While remaining true to Carter's promise to keep it 'the same subversive little show it's always been', The X Files has way outstripped its cult origins.

Conventions, books, merchandise and a huge following on the Internet, it's spawned the lot -but it's also got the ratings. In the US, it's given the Fox network one of its biggest hits, while in the UK the first-run episodes brought Sky One its best-ever figures, and even the repeats topped BBC2's charts. It also accomplished that rare achievement of a successful crossover to the mainstream BBC1, where it has notched up audiences of well over 10 million. All this and two top ten hits, for Mark Snow's original theme and a remix by DJ Dado. Even the show's title has entered everyday language as a handy media tag for any unexplained real-life phenomenon.

One of the many delights of The X Files is the variety of cases and characters encountered. Everyone loves the alien conspiracy stories - but these are paced out through each season so as not to dominate while a ghoulish gallery of psychos, freaks and monsters is also built up - from the yellow-eyed Tooms to the Internet killer, from the mutant fluke worm to the alien cockroaches.

And while the tantalisingly tender-yet-platonic relationship between Mulder and Scully remains at the heart of The X-Files' human appeal, the series has also developed a wonderful supporting cast of enigmatic heroes and villains including the duo's put-upon boss Skinner (Mulder: 'Where do you stand?', Skinner: 'Right on the line you keep crossing!') - the oddball trio of conspiracy theorists, The Lone Gunmen, Mulder's shadowy contact X, the doomed Krycek, and of course, The Smoking Man, one of TV's most arrogant bad guys. And, finally, you don't need tons of hardware to play X-Files games. Just a torch and a darkened room will do nicely . .

This, which may come to be seen as one of the key SF tv series of the mid 1990s, has been neither a failure nor a great success in the ratings, but has rapidly garnered a very committed cult following. Very much the brainchild of creator/executive producer/director/writer Chris Carter, it is a comparatively low-budget series administered by him from Los Angeles and ostensibly set in the USA but actually shot in Canada, in and around Vancouver. A small, secret department of the FBI is dedicated to investigating cases that appear to have an element of the paranormal about them, and the files dealing with these cases are called the X-files. There are only two investigators in the department, male agent Fox Mulder (Duchovny), who is emotional, open-minded, ready to believe in all sorts of strange phenomena, and his female colleague agent Dana Scully (Anderson), who is cool, medically trained, logical, sceptical. The premise is not especially original; the series is a little like PROJECT UFO (1978-79), and more closely resembles the earlier KOLCHAK: THE NIGHT STALKER (1974-75), which Carter was devoted to as a child.

The X-Files, however, is both more sophisticated and darker than either of these. The phenomena investigated cover the full gamut of tabloid weirdness in the area of "the unexplained", ranging from abductions of humans by aliens in UFOs--a recurrent theme--through tales of telepathy, projection of nightmares, vampires, werewolves, alien life-forms found frozen in the arctic, unusual longevity, shape-shifting, monsters, DNA-spliced hybrids, and so on almost indefinitely. In most cases a sufficient veneer of rationalisation exists (events pass too quickly for most viewers to subject these rationalisations to real scrutiny) for the series to qualify as definitely SF rather than fantasy.

But this is SF slewed towards the Gothic, the menacing, towards Horror. The programme owes a debt to Twin Peaks, a cult tv success of the early 1990s and not itself SF. More direct, famous sources, such as the film The Thing (1951), are plundered regularly and remorselessly, but with sufficiently clever a blend of homage and variation-on-a-theme to avoid the accusation of plagiarism. Many of the strange events in the series result, it seems, from secret, cynical government experiment, and it is here that its characteristic tone--Paranoia--evolves.

A running theme is the existence of high-level conspiracies, possibly centred in the Pentagon, which constantly threaten the professional integrity not to say the lives of Mulder and Scully. The FBI--itself infiltrated--seems helpless in the face of greater powers. The second season, in fact, is a continuous story involving Scully's apparent abduction into a UFO, connections between this and government conspiracies and the temporary forced closure of the X-files department.

What makes the series work so well is its willingness to penetrate a very long way indeed into the over-the-top and the bizarre (almost to the verge of black farce) combined with an (apparently) completely serious tone. The relationship between Mulder and Scully, no ordinary love relationship, is subtle, developing and absorbingly displayed: the performances are very good. The whole series, indeed, is presented with passion and intensity, which makes for unusual tv viewing.

The X-Files consist of a group of FBI records pertaining to cases which have remained unresolved by conventional means. The only possible solutions to most of these cases would be extraterrestrial sources, ghosts or other unexplained phenomena. They also tended to get ignored by the FBI until agent Fox Mulder decided to make them and similar new cases his cause.

Mulder is an eccentric agent who made a big reputation for himself while working in the FBI's violent crime section. An Oxford graduate he put his degree in psychology to good use in analysing the behaviour of many serial killers. When the time came for a promotion, Mulder requested to be put in charge of the X-Files and was given a simple basement office to go along with his new job. Mulder's great interest in UFOs comes from a traumatic experience he had as a child. His eight-year-old sister disappeared from her bed and was never seen again. The loss destroyed his family and prompted him to take up the study of psychology. As an adult, Mulder underwent hypnosis which forced him to recall alien beings kidnapping his sister while he stood by unable to do anything but watch.

Mulder's partner in solving the X-Files is Dana Scully. Scully is a doctor of medicine and has studied other sciences as well. She is not a believer in UFOs like Mulder is in fact she is a skeptic. Assigned as Mulder's partner by her superiors, Scully's assignment is two fold: 1) help Mulder solve the cases and 2) prove that Mulder's crazy theories about UFOs et. Al, are wrong and that the crimes can be attributed to more common criminals. Her reports back to her superiors are to indicate if and or when Mulder finally goes too far into the deep end. Mulder however drags Scully around with him and although his theories usually are proven to be correct no physical evidence is left behind that will conclusively prove them. Scully eventually gains Mulder's trust, one of the only people to do so. In the second season of The X-Files she is kidnapped by aliens and Mulder risks all to find her and learn the truth about what happened to her after she is discovered unconscious in a hospital. Scully's abduction by aliens had been written into the series to allow Gillian Anderson to have her baby.

UFOs are not the only type of case in The X-Files, ghosts and unusual serial killers are also present. Mulder and Scully are not the only ones in Washington interested in X-File type cases Mulder occasionally received a limited amount of help from Deep Throat, a mysterious individual who will appear to give Mulder information pertinent to the current case, but never reveals who he is, who he works for or where the information came from. Deep Throat also acts as if he knows lots more than he is willing to reveal to Mulder. Deep Throat is killed at the end of the first season, during the second season he is replaced by an associate known only as Mr. X who continues to supply Mulder with information, before betraying Mulder's trust. An ongoing plotline in the series involves a shadow government secretly operating to hide any and all evidence of UFO's and other X-Files. A character known only as Cancer Man. since he is always smoking is in charge of the Shadow Government.

The executive producer for the series was Chris Carter, co-executive producers for the show were James Wong, Glen Morgan and R.W. Goodwin. Executive story consultant was Chris Ruppenthal, supervising producers were Howard Gordon and Alex Gansa. The UK premiere for the series was the 19th January 1994 on Sky One. The line producer was Joseph Patrick Finn, the music was created by Mark Snow, who also created the music for Millennium. The visual FX producer was Mat Beck, art director was Graeme Murray, story editor was Darin Morgan (3), Billy Brown (5), John Angel (5) and John Shibban (4) and the director of photography was John S. Bartley. Consulting producer was Ken Horton, James Wong (4) and Glen Morgan (4). The editors were Jim Gross and Heather MacDougall.

Famous actors to have appeared in the show included Mimi Lieber, Darin Morgan, Don Davis (STARGATE SG1), Peter Donat (TIME TRAX), Terry O' Quinn (MILLENNIUM), John Neville, Roy Thinnis (THE INVADERS), Tucker Smallwood (SPACE : ABOVE AND BEYOND), Kristen Cloke (SPACE : ABOVE AND BEYOND) and Darren McGavin (KOLCHAK : THE NIGHT STALKER).

'Patchy' doesn't even begin to describe the schizophrenic nature of this season which veered between the brilliance of Bad Blood to the convoluted mess that was Redux. Of course, by making the big screen movie last year, Carter had to en-sure that the season finished at a set point, thus disabling the spontaneity and freedom that has been exercised in previous seasons. Gillian Anderson's character now stands head and shoulders over Duchovny's (metaphorically speaking, of course) with Emily and All Souls showcasing her talents. New additions Fowley (Mimi Rogers) and Spender (Chris Owens) boosted the ever-growing cast of semi-regulars, and it was wonderful to finally see Darren (Kolchak) McGavin on the show. Season finale The End marked the show's final outing in Vancouver, with sunny LA set to provide the backdrop for the new season. Things will never be the same again in the show, but then that's no bad thing when the formula is beginning to get a little tired.

Season Seven: Chris Carter says: "We want to concentrate on the mythology as it heads to a conclusion." He is promising twists involving Krycek, Skinner and Agent Fowley and let us hope the rumours are true about the return of the excellent John Neville as Well Manicured Man. Expect further naval contemplation regarding Samantha Mulder and more grim episodes exploring cannibalism, a man 'cursed' with good luck, a vortex which enables people to move faster than the eye can see and a prison priest with powers to help criminals escape. An added bonus seems likely to be an episode featuring Lance Henriksen as Frank Black in an attempt to give some closure to the cancelled MILLENNIUM series.

Gillian Anderson is resolute about her future: "I will not be doing an eighth season," she confides in a recent face-to-face interview. When The X-Files began with little fanfare on the fledgling Fox network seven years ago, the actress and her co-star David Duchovny were virtual unknowns. Since then, The X-Files has become a worldwide phenomenon, but one which she hopes is nearing its end.

However, as she admits during the same conversation, the actress who brought life to FBI agent Dana Scully is already under contract for another season if Fox choose, whereas her co-star David Duchovny and series creator / producer/ writer Chris Carter have not signed for an eighth year. "It was something that needed to be installed in order to get something else accomplished," she explains in typical Gillian Anderson fashion, straight and candid. "However, at this point, seeing how the seasons have been progressing and where we are in the life of the show as a whole, it makes sense to me, and I can only hope that it would make sense to the others who are involved, to realize that we've done our best years.

"We've done the best we can do. We should be proud of what we've done. Everybody's interest, except for the financial interest with Fox, is starting to spread. It's starting to wax and wane away from the central focus on the show. So, I think the most beneficial thing for the series is to keep it in good form and to go out on a positive note would be to end it when we still have the strength and the commitment to do it.

"I personally don't know if physically emotionally spiritually, I could do another season. To really show up and put in 100 %. When people have to show up and feel that they're not doing it for the right reasons, that's not a fun place to work, you know? I just hope that the people who are involved in making that decision see clearly in that direction as well."

Having addressed the issue, the actress can only grin when asked how The X-Files has affected her life, and how she's changed since starting the show seven years ago. "I was very scared, very confused," she admits with a chuckle. "I didn't know what it was all about, what it was, what it would entail. I knew nothing! and I found myself in the middle of this machine and I had to learn very quickly how to operate it, and in that scrambling I made some mistakes and I learned a great deal. You know, a lot of extra-curricular stuff has taken place in my life during the run of this show. It's light stuff. It's growth stuff. It's change and with that hopefully if you're awake enough comes learning, and growth and maturity. So I guess what has taken place is just growing up, really."

She pauses for a moment when asked what has been the best thing, and the worst, about doing the show. "See, it's only when I get questions like that that it really hits me that we're coming so close, you know. I can't even begin to talk about how the experience on the show has affected all aspects of my life. It has been the most challenging, most fortunate, a perfect experience in all its imperfections that I could ever have dreamed of being involved in.

"There's something very special about being involved in something new and different and on the edge," she says. "It's just that I have learned so much about the work, about the medium, about myself, about relationships, about human nature. "It's been the most remarkable experience just to have the opportunity to play one of these two amazing characters and to be involved in something that has a very strong place in the history of television. I just don't see any downside." Of course, the biggest change in Gillian Anderson private life during the last seven years was her marriage and divorce, which left her as the mother of a five-year-old daughter Piper. One apparent advantage to the end of the series would seem to be the chance to spend more Home with her daughter.

"First of all, everything seems to be working out just fine," she says in response to an inquiry about the problems of dividing her time between her daughter and her work. "My intention certainly will be to try and be more present [in Piper's life] than I've ever been able to be because of the constraints of the show. I'm sure that that's certainly a need she has but one of the miraculous things about moving from Vancouver to Los Angeles, I'm not exactly sure how it happened, but it seems like I have more time with her. "We are able to actually sometimes make plans," she exclaims. "Even picking her up from school or taking her to school or whatever. Just things like that, and that's been very important for our relationship." However the actress within her will still have a need to work. "It's hard to plan too far in advance," she adds. "I just know that I have some personal goals and intentions in terms of how I'd like to see the structure of my life, and sometimes we can influence that and sometimes we can't"

"When the show is done, there's a certain need, I think, to do something pretty soon after the show just to get my feet wet in another area and establish myself in a different way in film. So that would be a goal right off. And then, you know it's going to be a matter of finding a new balance once this piece of the puzzle is taken away, to just sense and to feel where everything falls in its right place "Given a choice, however, the actress does have a concept of what she'd like to see happen in the aftermath of The X-Files.

"My plan ultimately is to be involved in projects that affect me very strongly that I think have potential to affect the audience in one way or another to teach them something," she says. "So with that being my intention and my goal, it's a matter of finding those projects. I'm constantly looking but they're few and far between. But that's a commitment that I have to my work and so if it means that I'm out of work for a period of Home while I'm looking then that's what that means. But I do plan to continue in films and at some point also, " she explains.

She speaks with confidence, of course, and continues to do so when asked if she's worried that audiences might have trouble accepting her in another role after the high profile of Dana Scully. "No," she says sharply to the question. "It's interesting how people's focus is in that direction because that's such a negative way to view things. I mean, it's going to be what it's going to be. There are so many ways to be creative in this world and if it's in film, then it's in film. And whether it's on the acting side or the writing side or the production side or the directing side, whatever it is, that's the medium that I feel I'm most fulfilled being a part of. Also, there's other areas of life and the world that need to be explored, so it wouldn't be a death."

However, it wouldn't be in character for her to fall short of her intentions. It may be the foremost challenge of her career and life, but there's every indication Gillian Anderson is very much ready for life after The X-Files. The seventh and apparently final season of The X-Files opens in traditional style with The Sixth Extinction, a cliffhanger-resolving two-parter from the pen of Chris Carter (assisted by David Duchovny) which mixes together ominous voice-overs, surprise reappearances by familiar faces from the series' tangled mythology, and the apparent death of a recurring character.

Monster of the Week outing Hungry follows, before Chris Carter retakes the helm to wrap up the loose ends left over by the cancellation of Millennium, as Mulder and Scully investigate three agents who've apparently risen from the grave. As the trio were all members of the Millennium Group, the agents' first port of call is the psychiatric hospital where Frank Black is undergoing treatment. Millennium fans will be cheered by Lance Hendkseris unexpected encore, but The X-Files' regular viewers will be more intrigued by a long awaited contact between the two agents as Auld Lang Syne belts out Bizarrely, though Millennium is set on New Years Eve 1999, it was transmitted a month earlier, leaving two more episodes to come before the end of December, Rush and The Goldberg Variation. The year 2000 opens with Orison, a reported sequel to season two's Irresistible, followed up by Mulder and Scully's duel with a bank-robbing magician in The Great Maleeni, and a venture into evangelical religion for Signs and Wonders, where an encounter with self-styled saints who charm snakes and speak in tongues hints at a messianic destiny for Scully. The annual experimental episode is Vince Gilligan's X-Cops, which borrows the hand-held video cameras and title sequence of the Fox network's fly-on-the-wall show Cops.

But before this comes the equally inevitable mythology two-parter for February's sweeps fortnight, in the form of Sein Und Zeit. The suicide of Mulder's mother coincides with a child abduction case which appears to shed light on the fate of the real Samantha, creating an emotionally charged atmosphere with major consequences for Mulder and Scully's personal relationship.

If reports are to be believed, in just a few months time production on The X-Files will cease forever. The show, which began as a minor hit on the fledgling Fox Network and grew, by word of mouth, into the highest-rated Science Fiction series in years, has reached the inevitable crossroads. Should it continue, and run the risk of delivering substandard goods? Or should Fox gracefully call it a day while the quality is still high, and exploit the franchise as a movie series instead?

"We're going to get old and it happens," admits leading man David Duchovny, speaking to the assembled press at the Ritz Carlton Huntington Hotel in Pasadena. "You're going to run out [of ideas] and fans are going to get hip to our tricks." Not that the show has displayed much sign of senility in recent seasons. Though criticized by many as a bad move, the change of production base from Vancouver British Columbia to Los Angeles in 1998 came as a shot in the arm. Rumoured to be at Duchovny's behest (the star had recently married Tea Leoni), the arrival of The X-Files in Hollywood allowed for new interesting locations, more high profile talent while retaining the indefinable atmosphere of the series. "It was just a lot easier in terms of lifestyle for me," says Duchovny of the change. "I got to live at home. I got to live with my wife. My wife got pregnant, which probably wouldn't have happened if I was in Vancouver! [laughs] My life was a lot easier. "My working life was probably harder. It was tougher to do the show logistically, in Los Angeles just because of locations being further spread apart and the traffic and all the things that we associate with Los Angeles. I miss Vancouver, in terms of shooting and in terms of having relationships with a crew for five years. But it was time for me to have a change and I'm happy the way it worked out."

Looking back over that sixth season, which segued straight from the X-Files Movie into The Beginning, and ended with more revelations about mankind's relationship to extraterrestrials in Biogenesis, Duchovny believes the team did a pretty good job. "I thought there were some great shows," he enthuses. "I thought that Triangle was a fantastic show. I thought Drive was great. It's going to sound conceited-I thought my show was great [The Unnatural, which was written and directed by the actor]. "I thought maybe four or five shows that we did were some of the best four or five shows we've ever done. We did some clunkers, we always do.

We have the kind of show that reaches further, in terms of story, and in terms of execution than any other show on television. So when we succeed, we're doing better than any show on television. When we fail, we can be worse than a lot of pretty bad shows on television. "The fact that we could do a sixth year is impressive. The fact that we were still able to come up with fresh ideas - I'd say at least half of them were fresh and good - is very impressive."

While there's no denying that creativity was certainly in abundance, some critics were unhappy with the disorientating glut of highly comic installments. Episodes like the Dreamland two-parter and Hour the Ghosts Stole Christmas showed great imagination, but the series seemed to be disconnecting from its well-established, very successful and quite solemn Horror/ Fantasy template. "My position is that humour could work in it," offers Duchovny. "When we had [Glen] Morgan and [James] Wong, and when we had Darren Morgan, and we still have Vince Gilligan, they seem to be able to hold both a humorous whimsical element and a scary supernatural element.

"When they fall flat, they fall flat because they're too whimsical. Last year, just by coincidence, the writers just had four or five funny shows in a row. It probably has something to do with being in the sixth year of a show. You become self-referential. You start to wink at the audience. I think people got scared because they all happened to occur in one spate and people went, 'Oh my God, it's Ally McBeal!'"

Duchovny certainly scored a hit with the aforementioned The Unnatural. Re-introducing Arthur Dales (or rather his brother, played by M Emmett Walsh and Fred Lane), the story takes us back to Roswell in 1947, where Negro baseball star Josh Exley is being protected from the Ku Klux Klan. But Exterretrials isn't so much black as grey: an alien who has fallen in love with the game. "I've tried to write before and I've never actually written anything that got done, so I know how hard it is and how agonizing it can be," muses Duchovny. "Out this was so easy either I've gotten really smart recently or this was an idea that was kind of perfect and fully formed from the get-go. So it was a joy. There was very little re-writing except for budget constraints."

While crafting the words might have been a doddle, the actor admits to being less than comfortable when taking the director's chair. "It was completely nerve-wracking," he concedes. "I woke up one morning and I just said, 'I can't do this'. It was about a month before and I said, 'I don't know what I'm doing. I quick' "The thing about directing is that before you direct and when you are in prep, and you haven't directed before, you're trying to contain the whole story in your head. You're trying to have every shot you're going to do in your head at one time. So your head feels the size of a beach ball as you're walking around. "When you actually get on set you just have to shoot one shot at a Home. I had a great crew. I had a great director of photography and first assistant director and they just saved me."

Although Duchovny has contributed to scripts in the seventh season (The Sixth Extinction II is co-credited to him and Chris Garter), don't expect to see the actor behind the camera again too soon. "The trouble with me directing a show is that it really entails me being out of two episodes, because I need to prep and then I need some time to edit. So I have to be light on episodes either side of the one I'm directing.

"So it really has to do with the generosity of Fox and of the producers of the show to make a schedule where I can be written out of some shows. They don't have to do it."

Now just a few episodes into the seventh year, it's pretty much business as usual at The X-Files. We've had the resolution to last year's cliffhanger, in which we learn that "Agent Mulder is living proof of what he tried so long to substantiate: the existence of alien life". We've had another monster story plus a cross-over episode with the now-defunct Millennium, as Frank Black finally enters the world of Mulder and Scully, With over a dozen episodes left to run, fans are hoping 'that Carter and his team are working to some sort of final conclusion of the story arc - but Duchovny isn't so sure that they will. "I imagine that the show's going to continue on in movie form, so I don't think that we'll have to have an end," he insists. "We're not going to blow the place up or we won't have it all be a dream. I imagine the end of the seventh year will be pretty much as open ended as the end of every year that we do.

"The nature of serial television is teasing. There's rarely resolution until an actor has to leave or a show has to end. I think it's an unnatural situation to be in because we have to keep coming back week after week. I mean, the thing about everybody's interest in the relationship between Mulder and Scully is that they want some kind of resolution with that. But each week something happens to Mulder and/or Scully that is completely life changing and yet we come back the next week as if nothing happened. And nobody ever comments on that because these are kind of lies that are necessary to serialize television. You cannot have things change the way they would in real life and you cannot have the kind of resolution that you want in life."

So, while we have learned elements of the alien conspiracy in The X-Files movie and last year's two parter Two Fathers/One Son, and no doubt will discover more in the February sweeps presentation Sein und Zeit, don't expect everything to become clear.

The unexplained, "I've always thought that the conspiracy is best if it remains unexplained," says the actor. "Chris and the writers are in a Catch-22 because people want answers and when you give them answers they go, 'Well that's not as exciting as not knowing. Why did you tell me?'" As we go to press, the future of The X-Files seems as undefined as the conspiracies within the series itself. Duchovny and Chris Carter are contracted "I feel really proprietary of the character and of the show. [I believe] the show could continue without me. I wouldn't want it to. I mean there would be a part of me sitting at home wishing fervently that it would fail. I feel like it's mine. I want to take care of Mulder."

So what lies ahead for Duchovny after The X-Files? "I don't really have plans until that day comes," he claims. "I'm just looking to do the projects that interest me. I'm looking to write more. I'm looking to direct. I'm looking to act in projects that inspire in any way. I don't have a game plan, which may be a mistake, but I've never really functioned with one, so I wouldn't know how to make one." It may have dominated the actor's life for seven years, but The X-Files has certainly elevated Duchovny's career. Formerly remembered for hosting The Red Shoe Diaries, playing a transvestite on Twin Peaks and appearing in a host of forgettable movie roles (Beethoven, Ruby, Kalifornia...), the actor can now look forward to a future in which he can pick and choose between worthwhile projects. When asked why he believes The X-Files managed to capture the imagination of people across the world, Duchovny smiles. He's not about to deliver the 'it's all to do with the new millennium theory; that, he says, is the stuff of highly creative journalists.

"It's because it's a good show," he states. "It was fun and it was exciting and it was well written and it was well acted and it was well directed. Sure it had some kooky elements that might have been end of the century oriented, but in the end it was just cool and it was different." Moving into its seventh season, The X-Files still has a lot of questions to answer. Part of the problem is that due to a large amount of lying that has occurred in past seasons it has become almost impossible to tell The Truth, from the truth as revealed by, say, Cancer Man. The largest source of puzzlement is still Mulder's sister Samantha. In the re-edited movie, Well-Manicured Man says that Mulder's father gave her up to have her protected from the black oil plague by making her an alien/human hybrid. What really needs explaining, however, is her position in the Mulder family. Cigarette Smoking Man says he is her father, but that may just be for her benefit, especially considering that in The Sixth Extinction at the start of Season Seven, he keeps referring to Mulder as his son. Poor old Bill Mulder; he must have been either impotent or just incredibly unobservant if Cancer Man fathered all his children.

Then there's the whole alien war. We now know that the black oil becomes firstly an oily creature (call it an Alien), then mutates into a Grey. We also know from the David Duchovny-written The Unnatural that the shape shifting aliens have merely taken human form to pass unnoticed, as they are Greys as well. What still remains unexplained is where the faceless alien rebels fit in. Are they part of the same race? Is humanity just caught in the middle of an interstellar civil war? It would also be good to see what has happened to several of the recurring characters. Spender's off-screen death seemed suspicious and we still don't know what happened to Marita Covarrubias. After being tricked repeatedly, it's entirely possible no one has ever died in the show. Lastly, there's the whole new can of worms opened by Biogenesis, posing bigger questions such as where do we come from, and suggesting that Mulder is some kind of alien hybrid. Will we ever find out The Truth?

MILLENNIUM

1 - 1 PILOT

Special Agent Dana Scully is partnered with Special Agent Fox Mulder to validate his work on a special project called The X-Files. While he is a believer in the paranormal, fuelled by a lost memory where his sister was abducted by aliens; she is a scientist and prefers to look for rational, logical explanations. Their first case takes them to Oregon, to investigate the unsolved deaths of several high school classmates, which Mulder believes are linked to an alien abduction.

Wr Chris Carter

Dir Robert Mandel

1 - 2 DEEP THROAT

Mulder and Scully head to Ellens Air Force Base to investigate the mysterious case of a military test pilot who disappeared after experiencing strange psychotic behavior. While on the case, Mulder meets a mysterious man dubbed 'Deep Throat', who claims to have classified information about his investigations into the paranormal.

Wr Chris Carter

Dir Daniel Sackheim

1 - 3 SQUEEZE

One of Scully's friends from the FBI academy, now working in the Violent Crimes Unit, asks her to assist him on a homicide investigation involving no clear point of entry. Mulder realizes that this is similar to a series of X-Files case that have occurred every thirty years, and joins in the investigation to stop the latest cycle.

Wr Glen Morgan, James Wong

Dir Harry Longstreet

1 - 4 CONDUIT

As Section Chief Blevins expresses his concern with the direction of the X-Files department, Mulder becomes obsessed with solving a case that closely parallels an 'encounter' he experienced as a child... the abduction of his kid sister, Samantha.

Wr Alex Gansa, Howard Gordon

1 - 5 THE JERSEY DEVIL

Mulder's trip to Atlantic City doesn't take him to the glittering casinos or luxury hotels. Instead, he plays a dangerous game of hunter-and-hunted with the man-eater that haunts the back alleys and woods surrounding the city. However, it's not long before even Scully, the eternal skeptic, is lured back by the mounting evidence Mulder manages to drag out of tourist-wary local law enforcement agencies.

Wr Chris Carter

Dir Joe Napolitano

1 - 6 SHADOWS

When an unseen force commits several murders where a young woman is present, Mulder suspects that it is the spirit of the woman's former boss protecting her, while Scully believes the boss merely faked his own death.

Wr Glen Morgan, James Wong

Dir Michael Katleman

1 - 7 GHOST IN THE MACHINE

A new intelligence gropes its way to life in the depths of wires and circuit boards - only to find itself perched on the edge of immediate extinction. When it fights back, killing Mulder's former partner in the process, he and Scully must find a way past its considerable defences.

Wr Alex Gansa, Howard Gordon

Dir Jerrold Freedman

1 - 8 ICE

When an Arctic research team mysteriously kills each other and themselves only days after drilling deeper into the ice than ever before, Mulder and Scully accompany a team of doctors and scientists to investigate. They discover an organism which infects living creatures and amplifies the host's feeling of anger and paranoia, and the new team starts to deteriorate as they wonder who among them are killers.

Wr Glen Morgan, James Wong

Dir David Nutter

1 - 9 SPACE

Mulder and Scully are contacted by a communications specialist from NASA who shows them evidence of sabotage in the space programme. Mulder's youthful hero-worship is shaken by the apparent involvement of a high-ranking astronaut.

Wr Chris Carter

Dir William Graham

1 - 10 FALLEN ANGEL

When a tract of lonely woodland is cordoned off between laser fences, and rapidly changing explanations are rampant, Mulder's curiosity carries him beyond the bounds of official jurisdiction-and into the middle of a UFO cleanup. Scully's attempts to protect Mulder from himself are only marginally successful, and neither agents seem capable of protecting the one innocent on the scene- Max Fenig.

Wr Alex Gansa, Howard Gordon

Dir Larry Shaw

1 - 11 EVE

When two fathers on opposite sides of the country are unexplainably murdered at the exact same time in the exact same way, Mulder and Scully are called in to investigate. When they discover that both of the fathers eight-year-old daughters are identical twins, they realize that something even stranger is going on.

Wr Kenneth Biller, Chris Brancato

Dir Fred Gerber

1 - 12 FIRE

An old Oxford girlfriend of Mulder's asks for his help in an international case concerning the unexplainable execution of several British dignitaries and they encounter an assassin who can produce fire from his bare hands.

Wr Chris Carter

1 - 13 BEYOND THE SEA

Scully has a brush with the paranormal when her recently deceased father appears to her in a vision. Meanwhile, Mulder becomes a skeptic when a death row inmate he helped send to prison claims to be a psychic and offers to lead the agents to a serial killer.

Wr Glen Morgan, James Wong

Dir David Nutter

1 - 14 GENDERBENDER

Mulder and Scully investigate a series of murders where the suspect seems to be both male and female. Their investigation leads them to the small town of Stevenston, Massachusetts, where a group called the Kindred have set up a village back in the woods.

Wr Larry Barber, Paul Barber

Dir Rob Bowman

1 - 15 LAZARUS

When FBI Agent Jack Willis is shot during a bank robbery, Agent Scully takes drastic steps to resuscitate him while the bank robber, Warren Dupre dies on the operating table. Afterward, Agent Willis begins to exhibit behavior strangely reminiscent of Dupre.

Wr Alex Gansa, Howard Gordon

Dir David Nutter

1 - 16 YOUNG AT HEART

Mulder's become the target of someone from his past, John Barnett, a jewelry store robber with an itchy trigger finger that Mulder sent to prison when he first joined the Bureau. The only problem is that Barnett died four years ago.

Wr Scott Kaufer, Chris Carter

1 - 17 E.B.E.

A dramatic increase in UFO sightings and a bizarre attack on a transport truck convince Mulder that he's on the trail of a live alien being covertly transported cross-country. For her part, Scully, equally wary of the involvement of the Lone Gunmen as she is of Deep Throat, suspects a rather more earthly explanation.

Wr Glen Morgan, James Wong

Dir William Graham

1 - 18 MIRACLE MAN

A rash of deaths under the Miracle Ministry's traveling tent brings Scully and Mulder into the realm of miracles and shysters. When Samuel, reputed raiser of the dead and healer of the sick, indicates he has some knowledge of Mulder's long lost sister, Scully's convinced the young man is setting them up. Mulder isn't so sure.

Wr Howard Gordon, Chris Carter

Dir Michael Lange

1 - 19 SHAPES

Mulder and Scully travel to an American Indian reservation to investigate the death of an Indian man who was mistaken for a wild animal and may have been the legendary Manitou, a man who can shapeshift into a beast.

Wr Marilyn Osborne

Dir David Nutter

1 - 20 DARKNESS FALLS

When a group of loggers in the Washington State National Forest disappear in the same way that another group disappeared 50 years ago, Mulder and Scully go along to investigate and find themselves trapped in a cabin surrounded by flesh eating insects that only attack at night.

Wr Chris Carter

Dir Joe Napolitano

1 - 21 TOOMS

Eugene Tooms, the genetic mutant, is released from the sanitarium and Mulder becomes personally involved to ensure that he is caught in the act of getting the last human liver he needs to go into hibernation for another 30 years.

Dir David Nutter

1 - 22 BORN AGAIN

After a detective and his former partner die in unexplained circumstances, the accidents are linked to a little girl who witnessed both deaths and Mulder believes that she may be the reincarnation of a policeman murdered by his colleagues.

Wr Alex Gansa, Howard Gordon

Dir Jerrold Freedman

1 - 23 ROLAND

When a series of murders occurs among a group of scientists working on advanced propulsion technology, Mulder and Scully are called in to investigate. All evidence seems to point to the janitor Roland, who is mentally handicapped.

Wr Chris Ruppenthal

After Mulder chases down and kills a young man whom he believes to be a vampire but Scully realises that his fangs are fake, the agents return to DC aware of the mistake they just made. Faced with a lawsuit from the family of the man, they recount each of their sides to the story leading up to the event. In the extremely humorous stories that follow we see how Scully and Mulder both perceive each other. (On this case at least) Scully sees Mulder as overly-exuberant with childlike giddiness as he explains the case which may concern vampiric activity. On the other side, Mulder sees Scully as totally unenthusiastic, questioning all of his theories about the case and more content with lusting after the cute Sheriff Hartwell. (Whom Mulder observes has big buck teeth!) In the end, the Agents return to the town where they learn that all the residents are actual vampires who, except for one, have learned to live in civilised society.

XENA: WARRIOR PRINCESS

Xena : Warrior Princess centres around the exploits of Xena, a ruthless female warrior. When Xena was first introduced she was a bad girl, the leader of a band of raiders. She was not always a bad girl, she had started out a poor peasant who had watched her destroyed and her brother killed by raiders. To prevent her village from being attacked again. Xena decided to learn to fight and formed an army to protect the village. The army grew and soon defence became offence, as Xena's forces conquered neighbouring lands, at first to prevent them from attacking her but later simply for the sake of conquest.

She and her forces appeared to be unstoppable until she meet Hercules. During her encounter with Hercules. Xena was made to see the error of her ways and decided to make amends for her past. To amend for her past Xena travels across Greece trying to help people in trouble. The biggest problem she has is her reputation. People neither like her or trust her and think that she is putting on some kind of act. The only person who trusts Xena is her travelling companion, Gabrielle. Gabrielle is a young woman who unlike Xena cannot handle a sword and is off little use in a fight.

Gabrielle is something of a con artist who can usually talk her way out of a situation. Xena met Gabrielle in the first village that Xena decided to help. Gabrielle decided to tag along with Xena for the adventure, and although her presence was at first just tolerated the pair quickly became friends.

Character history

Xena first appears on the Hercules: The Legendary Journeys television series (in the episode The Warrior Princess airing in March 1995), as a seductive but treacherous warlord. Two more episodes during May sweeps chronicle her evolution from a villain to a friend and ally of Hercules. Interest in her was so strong that shortly afterwards she became the main character of the spin-off series Xena: Warrior Princess. Ironically, although her character is originally obsessed with defeating Hercules and obtaining his title as the greatest living warrior, she never defeats "Zeus' Favorite Son". In fact, Hercules is the one credited with pointing her down the path of redemption when he beats her in combat and shows her that selfishness and greed are not the way to live. In her own series, Xena sets out to redeem her murderous past by fighting against tyranny and evil and protecting the innocent and weak. Many of her adventures prior to the televised stories are subsequently revealed in flashback episodes (although much remains obscure).

Early history

The only daughter of the tavern keeper Cyrene, Xena grew up in Amphipolis with her two brothers, Toris and Lyceus. Her father Atrius was believed to have left her family when she was a child, but it is subsequently revealed that he was killed by Cyrene when he tried to kill seven-year-old Xena as a sacrifice to Ares.

During Xena's mid to late teens, the warlord Cortese attacked the village, which prompted some villagers, including Xena's older brother, Toris, to run for the hills. However, Xena and her younger brother Lyceus convinced the remainder of their fellow villagers to stay and fight. Although Amphipolis was saved, Lyceus and many other villagers were killed in the battle, which formed a rift between Cyrene and her daughter and caused Xena to be ostracized by the town.

Xena with Caesar. The death of her beloved younger brother Lyceus led Xena to leave Amphipolis and begin to build her own army, with her ultimate goal being to take revenge on Cortese. She crossed the seas early on as a pirate, meeting Caesar and a young Gaulish slave-stowaway, M'Lila, who both profoundly affected the destiny of the Warrior Princess. While onboard Xena's ship, M'Lila taught her several fighting techniques as well as instructing her in the use of pressure points, including what became her signature "pinch" maneuver.

Xena took Caesar as a hostage, and was naively swayed by the young officer to join forces, after beginning an affair with him. She ransomed him back to Rome as they had planned, only to have him come back with his own men and capture her ship. He had Xena and her men crucified on a nearby beach, watching as his orders to break her legs were carried out.

Xena with Borias. M'Lila rescued her from the cross and took Xena to a healer named Niklio. They were found by Roman soldiers, who killed the Gaelic woman as she jumped in front of an arrow meant for Xena. After M'Lila died in her arms, Xena fully embraced her dark side and fought the soldiers, killing them (despite her broken legs).

After surviving Caesar's betrayal, a crippled and rage-filled Xena traveled east where she teamed up with the warlord Borias, who left his wife and son to become her lover. The two terrorized Qin with their joint forces until Xena angered Borias by alienating the powerful Chinese families Ming and Lao.[12] Without his knowledge, Xena kidnapped Ming Tzu's son, Ming T'ien, for ransom. With Borias' help, Ming Tzu captured Xena, intending to hunt her as she fled wounded, exhausted and barefoot in her crippled state, for sport and vengeance.

Xena with Lao Ma. Xena was saved from certain death by Ming T'ien's mother, Lao Ma, a woman of great spiritual power. Lao Ma hid Xena deep beneath her bathing pool, even sharing her breath with the desperately submerged Xena, while Ming Tzu was momentarily present and asking questions. During their time together, Lao Ma healed Xena's legs and gave her the title of warrior princess. Under Lao Ma's tutelage, Xena briefly left some of her darkness behind until Borias re-entered her life. A rift formed between Xena and Lao Ma when she murdered Ming Tzu, and suggested that they also kill Ming T'ien. With Lao Ma now their enemy, Xena and Borias were forced to leave Qin.

They went further east to Jappa, where they kidnapped a girl named Akemi for ransom. Xena ended up falling in love with Akemi, and teaching her the pinch (Something she didn't even teach Gabrielle until the series finale), which cuts off the flow of blood to a person's brain, resulting in death. Akemi then used the pinch to kill her abusive and tyrannical father, Yodoshi, and committed seppuku. A grieving Xena tried to put Akemi's ashes in her family crypt, but was set upon by a mob of villagers who felt she was desecrating the crypt by putting the ashes of a patricide in it. Defending herself, Xena used a fire-breathing trick she had mastered. The result was a fire that spread through the town and killed 40,000 people.

Back in northern lands, Xena and Borias met a shamaness, Alti, who lured Xena toward greater evil with promises that she would become the Destroyer of Nations. She was also befriended by the Amazon queen Cyane, who tried to steer her toward good; but Xena chose Alti's promise of power, and killed Cyane and the Amazon elders at her instigation. By then pregnant with Borias' child, she set out to conquer Corinth. Borias was increasingly troubled by the excesses of her violence, but could do little to stop her: by then, they had split their armies, and Xena's was the bigger of the two. At Corinth, they became mortal enemies after he stopped her from slaughtering the Centaurs with whom he had tried to negotiate an agreement. With Xena about to give birth, Borias tried to get her out of her camp in the hope of rescuing their relationship. He was killed by one of her lieutenants, Dagnine; but the realization that Borias came back for her because he loved her and their unborn child had a strong effect on Xena. It was enough to make her decide to give up her newborn baby to the Centaurs, so that he would be raised in safety and away from her dangerous influence.

Xena traveled to the Norselands, after Qin ~ "She came to us from a distant land in the east. She called it Qin. We call it the land that sent us a demon" (Brunnhilda, The Rheingold). She found Odin, King of the Norse gods full of despair. She brought him out of his contempt and he, in return, made her a Valkyrie. It wasn't long before she came into conflict with Odin's lover, and the head of the Valkyrie, Grinhilda. Xena seduced Odin with her lust for life, convincing him that one could live without love, so that he would tell her the location of the Rheingold. She planned to forge it into a ring, which gives anyone supreme godlike powers at first, but if they have not forsaken love, it destroys what they value most. As soon as Xena forged the ring, Grinhilda tried stopping her and putting the ring on. Before long it destroyed her humanity (her beauty) - what she valued most. Since she had not forsaken love she became a monster and her fight with Xena reached a standstill when Xena used her own necklace as a lock (which can only be broken by Odin) and trapped her in an abandoned mine with the ring. She was with child when Xena trapped her, and her child, Grindl, terrorized the Norselands for years. Xena was not aware Grinhilda was with child when she trapped her and didn't realize it until she, Gabrielle, Brunnhilda, and Beowulf killed Grindl 35 years later.

35 years later, Odin joins forces with the mourning Grinhilda, and with his Valkyrie, he sets off to take the ring back from Xena. Brunnhilda, who was supposed to betray Gabrielle, takes Gabrielle away from the battle. She tells Gabrielle that she changed her like she changed Xena and that she is in love with her. Xena, and Beowulf are left to fight Odin, Grinhilda, and the Valkyrie, and before long the battle becomes hopeless. Xena, knowing she is out of options, puts the ring on and has enough power to get away from them, but at the price of losing what she values most - Gabrielle, and the woman she helped her become. Brunnhilda finds Xena lost and confused with no idea of who she is, or Gabrielle. She takes the ring from Xena and brings it to Gabrielle. She harnesses all of her fiber and being into a flame that will burn only until her true soulmate passes through. Gabrielle enters a year long sleep, with the ring in her hand, within Brunnhilda's flame. The only person who can ever enter the flames and retrieve the ring is her soulmate, Xena. With the help of Beowulf, Xena jumps through the flames and kisses her beloved Gabrielle, regaining her former self. She then undoes the evil set in the ring, turning it back into the Rheingold, and returning Grinhilda back into her former self. Xena takes the Rheingold back to the Rhein Maidens, and implies no magic changed her, just Gabrielle. Later adventures (televised period)

Xena with Gabrielle. About ten years into her career of pillaging and marauding, Xena meets Hercules. Initially, she sets out to kill him. Then, her army turns against her because of Darphus' lust for power and believing Xena has become weak after she stops her lieutenant Darphus from killing a child in a sacked village. She runs a gauntlet, and survives, being the only person ever to survive the gauntlet. She then fights Hercules, in the hope that she will get her army back if she can bring back his head. Xena seems to be getting the upper hand until Hercules' cousin intervenes, giving him the moment to regain composure and defeat her. However, Hercules refuses to kill Xena, telling her, "killing isn't the only way of proving you're a warrior." Touched and inspired by Hercules' integrity and by the fact that he suffered the loss of blood kin as she did and yet chooses to fight in honor of them, she decides to join him and defeat her old army. Hercules tells Xena that there is goodness in her heart, and the two of them share a brief romantic relationship, before Xena decides to leave and start making amends for her past.

However, Xena finds this to be more painful than she thought, haunted by her past transgressions, she is about to give up on her life as a warrior completely. As she strips off her armor and weaponry and buries them in the dirt, she sees a group of village girls being attacked by a band of warriors. In the group is Gabrielle. Xena saves the young women and Gabrielle is left in awe of the Warrior Princess' abilities. Gabrielle persuades Xena to let her be her traveling companion, and over time, Gabrielle becomes Xena's dearest friend. Xena also reconciles with her mother, Cyrene.

Soon after the start of her journeys with Gabrielle, Xena runs into Ares, who has evidently known her since her warlord days and he tries to seduce her into joining him as his Warrior Queen -- efforts that she repeatedly thwarts. She also encounters a formidable warrior woman named Callisto, whose family died in one of Warlord Xena's raids and who is obsessed with revenge against Xena.

Xena's subsequent life is marred by many tragedies. Her son Solan, who never came to know her as his mother, is killed, with the help of Callisto, by Hope. She nearly loses Gabrielle more than once. Marcus, a warrior, close friend and lover from her warlord days, whom she persuades to follow her in choosing good, is killed while doing his first good deed. Later, he is allowed to briefly return to the world of the living to help thwart a vicious killer who has escaped from the underworld. He and Xena spend a night together before Marcus has to return to the other side. She is too late to save her mentor and friend Lao Ma from being tortured to death by her own son, the emperor Ming T'ien. Finally, she and Gabrielle are crucified by the Romans on the Ides of March, as Caesar is betrayed and killed by Brutus. They are later revived by a mystic named Eli with the spiritual aid of Callisto, who by that time had become an angel.

Eve, the miracle child Xena conceives after her resurrection (again through the efforts of the redeemed Callisto), is prophesied to bring about the Twilight of the Olympian gods. To escape the gods' persecution, Xena and Gabrielle fake their deaths. Their plan goes awry when Ares buries them in an ice cave where they sleep for 25 years. During that time, Eve is adopted by the Roman nobleman Octavius and grows up to become Livia, the Champion of Rome, and a ruthless persecutor of Eli's followers.[23] After her return, Xena is able to turn Livia to repentance, and Livia takes back the name Eve and becomes the Messenger of Eli. After Eve's cleansing by baptism, Xena is granted the power to kill gods as long as her daughter lives. In a final confrontation, the Twilight comes to pass when Xena kills most of the gods to save her daughter, and is herself saved by Ares when he gives up his immortality to heal the badly injured and dying Eve and Gabrielle. Xena later helps him regain his godhood.[26] Xena's quest for redemption ends when she sacrifices herself to kill Yodoshi, and decides to stay dead so the souls of the 40,000 she killed years ago could be released into a state of peace. However, her spirit is seen with Gabrielle in a ship shortly afterwards. It is safely assumed Gabrielle then travels to "the land of the pharaohs" which is in need of "a girl with chakram". This now applies to Gabrielle instead of (the dead) Xena, for by the end of the last episode, Gabrielle can use the chakram. In a symbolic gesture, she throws the chakram and catches it on its ricochet.

According to the darsham, Naima, this is only one of many lives Xena will live throughout the ages. Her next incarnation will be as the revered peacekeeper Arminestra. In many of those lives, she will walk a path together with her soulmate Gabrielle furthering the cause of good against evil.

Warrior Princess

Xena performs many feats that appear superhuman, and may call into question whether she is in fact purely mortal. While the show occasionally toyed with the idea that Xena's true father might be Ares, this theme was dropped after the third season premiere, partly to avoid overtones of incest in the sexual/romantic dynamic that developed between Xena and Ares and partly because the producers thought that Xena's achievements would be diminished if they were credited partly to divine blood.

While Xena does not possess the brute strength of her friend and ally Hercules, she can arm-wrestle warlords, punch through solid ice, kick down doors, and knock out opponents with a single punch. Her greatest feat of strength to this day occurs when she allows herself to be arrested for a crime she didn't commit. Several men of that town come into her cell, where her hands and feet are chained, and begin to beat her. The beating, combined with goading by Ares, sends Xena into a rage of pure adrenaline. She tears her chains out from where they are rooted and then kicks the thick prison door completely off its hinges. This is the only time where Xena shows such magnitude of strength, so it can be safely assumed that this is caused by a fight or flight-like response.

Xena possesses an amazing ability to heal, explicitly noted in a number of episodes, as well as to withstand pain. On one occasion she ignores a dislocated shoulder until it is pointed out by Ephiny, and then fixes the injury by deliberately slamming her shoulder into a wall. In her second appearance on Hercules, she became the only warrior to survive the ordeal of the gauntlet, where she is forced to run without armor or weapons between two lines of soldiers, who beat her with clubs. In the final episode of the series, Xena is hit with a multitude of arrows in different areas of her body and still continues to fight a samurai army single-handedly.

While technically Xena does not possess godly powers, she has a leaping ability demonstrated by other warriors of a high skill level, notably M'Lila, Callisto and Draco. Xena performs gravity-defying leaps usually in an acrobatic style up to 30 feet. Xena leaps straight up from moat water to the top of a high castle wall and somersaults from her position on the ground to the top of a tall tree where an archer is ambushing her group with arrows. Xena once ran up an opponent's torso, performed a backflip, and kicked him while still in mid-air. On rare occasions, she is actually able to run on the faces of a surrounding squad of soldiers. This ability could have possibly originated as an Amazon ability before catching on with other warriors, since Xena is asked about her leaping ability and she answers that the Amazons taught her, which would make sense as the Amazons "invented the technique of fighting from trees". In martial arts terms, these abilities can be referred to as Karumijutsu, Tobi Waza and Qing Gong. Karumijutsu, translates literally to 'the body lightening art' and Tobi Waza, a.k.a. "leaping or flying techniques". Both involve extensive physical and Qi training. Due to the delayed landing effect of Xena's jumps and flips, it would be accurate to state that these Amazonian techniques that Xena learned are synonymous with the aforementioned Asian fighting techniques.

Xena possesses incredible speed and reflexes. She is able to catch knives and arrows in mid-flight and dodge energy blasts from mystical foes. She is able to routinely catch her chakram, a skill only Callisto, Eve and eventually Gabrielle are able to duplicate. Xena's greatest feats of speed are shown in "The Execution" and "King Con". In "The Execution", three arrows are fired at one of her allies, she catches one in each hand and the third one in her teeth. In the second, she grabs the con man, Rafe's hand, and holds it in place on the table he is seated at, while jabbing a knife down between the spaces of each finger in a display of incredible reflexes. She is able to execute this feat so fast that she jabs each space a total of six times in less than a second.

Xena is a master of martial arts. As a young girl, Xena practiced "fighting and swordplay" with her brother Lyceus and surpassed him in skill. Later, she learned some fighting techniques and the "pinch" from M'Lila. During her "evil" period, Xena encountered the Amazon Queen, Cyane, who defeated her in their first meeting but then took her under her wing and taught her powerful Amazon techniques and fighting styles. This training put Xena on a whole new level of fighting, and later, she attacked and defeated not only Cyane, but all the leaders of her Amazon tribe at the same time. It is also suggested that Xena was being trained by Ares between the time of Borias' death and her transformation to good.

In her fighting, Xena utilizes different styles ranging from Tae Kwon Do, Aikido, Ju-Jitsu, judo, and kung-fu to boxing, Eskrima and multiple sword-fighting techniques, effortlessly and fluidly combining them into a virtually unbeatable fighting style. For example, in typical hand to hand combat, Xena can flow from straight boxing punches to the Chinese style of punches mid-battle before launching into a flurry of tae kwon do and jeet kune do-inspired kicks. In one instance, when Xena wakes in her ice coffin after 25 years of sleep, she executes a vertical punch (without chambering) through the thick block of ice placed over the coffin, demonstrating jeet kune do's famous one inch punch. When she engages with her sword, she can use the more elegant parries of fencing however, more often switches with techniques attributed to eskrima arts, or the Asian styles of sword fighting. Most notable is Xena's ability to incorporate her leaping and acrobatic skills into her hand-to-hand combat, utilizing flip-kicks and bicycle kicks and somersaulting great distances out of harm's way.

In the hands of the Warrior Princess, any object can become a weapon. Xena can fight with frying pans or use rags as whips, even turning one into a staff after getting it wet and taut. At one point, Xena uses fish hooked on a string in a ball-on-chain fashion. As far as traditional weapons go, Xena is an expert combatant with the following and their derivatives: swords, chobos, staffs, whips, axes, knives, and bows and arrows. In terms of weaponry, Xena usually carries her sword, chakram, a breast dagger kept in her bosom armor, and a whip.

Xena is capable of launching numerous objects into the air as effective projectiles. She can hurl arrows, crossbow bolts, and hairpins through the air with her own hands with enough force to penetrate wood. She is able to spit a diaper pin from her mouth with such force that it penetrated a man's skull. She is able to kick embedded spear blades out of the ground and through the air towards an enemy in one move.

Xena's incredible fighting prowess makes her a match for foes who are otherwise physically superior to her, such as gods, demigods, archangels, and demons. In the trilogy of her debut episodes on Hercules, she faces off against Hercules, and definitely has the upper hand at the start of their fight. After she pummels him with fists and feet, and overwhelms him with her high flying acrobatic maneuvers, Xena takes Hercules to the ground and prepares to strike the killing blow. However, the momentary interference of Hercules' cousin, whom Xena quickly dispatches, gives Hercules enough time to recover and turn the tables on Xena. Later, she engages Ares in a fight in season 3;[9] the fight results in Xena being the victor. In other episodes, Xena is also able to fight Ares and hold her own. One of the Furies even makes a comment to Ares in the guise of Xena after he turns mortal in the season 6 premiere, saying, "You were barely a match for me when you were a God!" Xena also takes on the Goddess of Wisdom and Warfare, Athena (who had defeated Ares in Amphipolis under Siege), and bests her in combat before killing her. Later on, Xena defeats Michael the Archangel and nearly kills him before the God of Eli strips her of her power to kill angels. In spite of this, Xena manages to face off against Odin, The King of the Norse Gods, beating him in order to obtain the Golden Apples.[26] Xena even stands toe to toe against Mephistopheles and Lucifer when they both reigned as the King of Hell.

Xena's usual combat attire throughout the series consists of a leather slip outlined with light armor to protect her chest, shoulders, and abdomen while leaving her arms and legs free for hand-to-hand combat.

Mystical and temporary powers

While in Qin and on the brink of being tortured to death by Ming T'ien, Xena is finally able to achieve sufficient inner serenity to master the qi powers of her mentor Lao Ma (a form of psychokinesis that allows her to deal a powerful "blow" of spiritual energy against either a person or objects, shattering walls and repelling attackers). After this first manifestation, she is unable to recapture this power. About two years later (plus her 25 year sleep), she is able to regain the power and retain its use for a longer period after intense spiritual training with Kao H'Sin, one of Lao Ma's twin daughters. On that occasion, she is able to use qi powers to turn an entire attacking army to stone.

From Alti, Xena learned the powers of a shaman. She uses them to cross over to the Amazon Land of the Dead to seek out Gabrielle, believing her to be dead, and then to battle Alti in spiritual form on two occasions.

During their travels in India, Xena and Gabrielle encounter a darsham, a wise woman, named Naima who enables them to use the powers of "The Mehndi", activated by Mehndi tattoos on their bodies, to trap and destroy Alti. Xena achieves this by creating chakram constructs made purely out of the Mendhi's supernatural energies as weapons, while Gabrielle binds Alti with what appears to be magical lightning. This is the only time they are ever seen using these abilities, presumably because Naima is the one channeling the power.

Also in India, Xena converses with the Hindu god Krishna who helps her battle Indrajit, the King of Demons. After Indrajit severs her arms, she calls Krishna's name, and is filled with his strength and takes on the appearance of the Hindu goddess Kali in order to defeat Indrajit.

In the Norselands, Xena puts on the Rheingold ring and receives god-like abilities which enable her to defeat the combined forces of Odin, Grendl, and Odin's Valkryie army. The consequence of this action, as for anyone who had not forsaken love, is the loss of what Xena values most. Her identity and all her memories are erased; she begins to regain brief flashes of memory a year later. She finally recovers her true self after finding Gabrielle asleep behind a mystical wall of fire conjured by the Valkryie Brunhilda that only Xena could walk through.

Probably the most unique and most famous of Xena's temporary powers is the power to kill gods (and apparently other immortals such as angels). While normally a sword or other weapon would go right through a god without drawing blood or inflicting a wound, Xena possesses the ability to pierce this "veil of immortality" and make them bleed or die. After Eve is cleansed of her sins, in order to protect her daughter from the Olympian gods, Xena is granted this power by the God of Eli via the Archangel Michael. She is told that she will have the power as long as Eve is alive. During this time, Xena becomes widely known as "Slayer of Gods". She loses this power approximately two years later when she tries to use it to kill the Archangel Michael for trying to manipulate Eve into a suicide mission that would bait Xena into killing the insane emperor-turned-god, Caligula.

Role in historical/mythological events

The show credits Xena (or her friends and associates) with a central role in many events in history and mythology. Among other things, she: helped David kill Goliath and defeat the Philistines.

Defended Troy in the Trojan War, and saved Helen.

Assisted Ulysses in regaining his kingdom in Ithaca after returning from the Trojan War.

Single-handedly stopped the invading Persian army at Thermopylae.

Led a band of pirates in the capture and ransom of Julius Caesar, who then captured them and had them crucified (this story of Caesar and the pirates is based on fact, though Xena was not, of course, the pirate leader).

Helped Boadicea defeat the Roman invasion led by Julius Caesar (in actual history, Boadicea fought the Romans some 100 years after Caesar's death and was defeated).

Was present at the formation of Stone Henge, with Stone Henge being the remains of Dahak's temple after it is destroyed in a battle between Xena and The Deliverer.

Helped manipulate the power games of the Roman First Triumvirate, taking advantage of the rivalries between Julius Caesar, Marcus Licinius Crassus, and Pompey first to free the Gaul rebel Vercinix and then to stop the Roman armies from rampaging through Greece.

Helped engineer the assassination of Caesar by pitting his friend Marcus Junius Brutus against him.

Posed as Cleopatra and double-crossed Mark Antony in order to help Octavius Caesar defeat Brutus and Antony and gain control of the empire (after becoming convinced that Octavius was more honorable than both his rivals).

Engineered the death of the crazed Roman emperor Caligula.

Encountered the Virgin Mary and Joseph with baby Jesus; Gabrielle gave them the donkey on which they rode

Tricked Lucifer into bringing out his "inner demon" and becoming the new king of Hell, the devil.

Created the Terracotta Army, by turning a living army to stone.

Xena (and occasionally Gabrielle) are also often credited with a variety of discoveries and inventions. For instance: the discovery and naming of The Big Dipper.

The harnessing of electricity by tying a metal item to a kite (or "flying parchment") the discovery of cardiopulmonary resuscitation (CPR). When a wounded Gabrielle goes into cardiac arrest, the grieving Xena bangs her fists on the chest of the seemingly dead Gabrielle, and Gabrielle revives.

Pioneering the custom of Santa Claus bringing gifts and coming down the chimney on Christmas Eve. In a kingdom where Winter Solstice celebrations are banned, Gabrielle encourages a toymaker named Senticles to sneak into an orphanage through the chimney to hand out toys to children on Solstice Eve; he is wearing a red coat at the time.

Xena also plays a key role in the destruction of the Greek Gods, and the transition to monotheism (the Elijan faith seems to have been the show's version of Christianity). Among the Elijans, Xena is known as "Defender of the Faith." The show seems to have subdivided the roles of central figures in the story of Jesus Christ and early Christianity among several characters. Xena is assigned some of the characteristics of Mary and Jesus: giving birth to a child conceived without sexual intercourse and being crucified and rising from the dead. Eli is portrayed as the main Jesus figure, and Eve has parallels with Jesus and Saul: a miracle birth intended to herald a new order and being a persecutor of Christians who sees the light, changes their name, and becomes a champion of the new faith.

Love interests

Xena has had numerous love interests. At one point, after she left Amphipolis, Xena was engaged to the warrior Petracles. She has a brief affair with Caesar before being crucified by him, and then a stormy relationship with Borias that lasted over a year and resulted in the birth of a child. She also appears to have been Odin's lover. It is also suggested that during this period, she became a protégée of Ares', and that the two had a sexually charged relationship that may or may not have included sex. She may also have had a relationship with warlord Draco.

In the Xena trilogy on Hercules: The Legendary Journeys, in which the character first appears, it is implied that Xena had sexual relations with a number of men in her army. She seduces Iolaus in order to pit him against Hercules. After Xena changes her ways and joins forces with Hercules, she and Hercules have a brief romantic relationship as well; though remain only friends thereafter.

Early in her travels with Gabrielle, Xena meets Marcus, a warrior who had been a friend and a lover when she was a warlord. Under her influence, he gave his life to save a kidnapped woman from being killed.

Subsequently, he is briefly allowed to return from the dead, teaming up with Xena to help recapture Hades' helmet of invisibility and return an escaped villain to the underworld. While on this mission, Marcus and Xena spend a night together, and at least for a while, she considers him her one true love.

About a year later, Xena meets Ulysses in her travels and has a romance with him. After they return to Ithaca and learn that Ulysses' wife Penelope is alive, she encourages him to return to his wife.

While posing as Cleopatra and seducing Antony, Xena seems to develop genuine feelings for him, but eventually she has to kill him when she realizes that he is a threat.

Shortly after the birth of Eve, Ares, who has previously tried to woo Xena to his side as a warrior, declares his love for her and offers to protect her and her child from the other gods. Xena spurns his offer, believing it to be a trick, but on one occasion, she uses Ares' help to defeat Athena. After he sacrifices his godhood to help her, Xena, in turn, helps him as a mortal. In the Season 6 premiere, the two shares a tender kiss, but Xena tells Ares that they cannot be together: "You always got to me. But you were bad for me, Ares; you still are". Eventually Xena restores Ares to godhood and they return to an adversarial relationship when he tries to start a war between the Amazons and the Romans, a plan Xena thwarts, but also seems to have a new level of understanding. In the DVD interview for the 6th season episode Coming Home, Renee O'Connor, who played Gabrielle, said that "If there was ever going to be one man in Xena's life, it would be Ares."

The subtext

Xena's ambiguous sexuality has been a source of much controversy in the fandom. The "lesbian subtext" that became one of the show's trademarks suggested that Xena and Gabrielle might be in a romantic/sexual relationship, sometimes through humorous innuendo (e.g., when a villager asks Gabrielle if Xena has ever thought of settling down and getting married, Gabrielle replies, "No, she likes what I do" and then corrects herself, "She likes what she's doing") and sometimes through more serious themes. Thus, in the last season, Xena proves to be Gabrielle's "true soulmate," the only one who can pass through an enchanted ring of fire within which Gabrielle lies magically asleep, and then awakens her with a kiss. In the same story arc, Gabrielle declares that she and Xena were "meant to be together." Over the course of the series Xena and Gabrielle also shared several other kisses, one when Xena was dead and her spirit was in a male character's body, another ostensibly a mouth-to-mouth "water transfer" to revive Xena.

Lucy Lawless was doubtful of the subtext while the show was filmed. But in an interview with Lesbian News magazine two years after the series ended, she said that she came to believe the two were lovers after the scene in the last episode when Gabrielle revived Xena with a mouth-to-mouth water transfer. She said of that scene, "There was always a 'well, she might be or she might not be' but when there was that drip of water passing between their lips in the very final scene. That cemented it for me. Now it wasn't just that Xena was bisexual and kinda liked her gal pal and they kind of fooled around sometimes, it was 'Nope, they're married, man.'"

However, in the interviews and commentaries on the DVDs released in 2003-2005, the actors and producers continued to stress that the question about Xena and Gabrielle's relationship is never answered and is up to each viewer's interpretation.

Some viewers also believe subtext implies other lesbian relationships in Xena's past, for instance with Lao Ma, Akemi, and Alti's apprentice Anokin.

In popular culture

The show is mentioned in the last ever (first of a two part) episode of Seinfeld, "The Finale, Part 1" when the main character Jerry phones his parents to tell them that his show which is also entitled Jerry is finally being made. Jerry's father tells him "it's all crap on TV; the only thing I watch is Xena, the Warrior Princess. She must be about 6' 6". Jerry, did ya ever watch that?" to which Jerry replies, "yea, it's pretty good."

Xena is also mentioned on the show Buffy the Vampire Slayer in the episode entitled "Halloween," where all the residents of Sunnydale turn into whatever they chose as their Halloween costumes. Buffy turns into a weak and feeble noblewoman, and her friend Willow quips during the ensuing crisis, "She couldn't have dressed up like Xena?". Writers of Xena made the homage back in 4th season episode "The Play's the Thing", in which the play "Buffus the Bacchae Slayer" is cited.

The show Dark Angel stars a lesbian character called Original Cindy who is a Xena fan. She is shown numerous times in front of her Xena posters and once excuses herself with "Oops, Xena's on"

On a The Simpsons Halloween episode, Lucy Lawless appears at a Xena convention only to be kidnapped by The Collector and saved by Stretch Dude and Clobber Girl. She exhibits the ability to fly and stresses that it's not a Xena power but a power of her own.

In a play on the "WWJD" ("What Would Jesus Do?") bracelets and necklaces worn by young people, "WWXD" ("What Would Xena Do?") items were sold (bracelets, necklaces, bumper stickers, etc.), which were especially popular with fans.

In the South Park episode Fourth Grade the science nerd have a Xena poster on their wall which is an obvious parody of Xena.

In an episode of Crossing Jordan, Jordan and her friend as seen sitting on Jordan's couch during girls night out drinking wine and watching Xena.

In Jellyvision's You Don't Know Jack series of trivia computer games, "Xenora: Queen of Battle" is a recurring character in the fake commercials that play after the game has ended.

In episode 20 of season 4 of "Ellen" while Ellen and her mom are in a self-defense class, before the final exercise the teacher asks them to "beat the drum, say the power word, and choose the word that best expresses your inner strength". That word ends up being "Xena" to which they all happily chant along.

In the Animorphs book series by K. A. Applegate, one of the main characters, Rachel Berenson, is often referred to as "Xena" by her fellow Animorphs because of her ferocious fighting energy.

Sister series of HERCULES : THE LEGENDRY JOURNEYS of which see separate entry). Ted Raimi is famous for two reason one for being one of the cast members of SEAQUEST DSV and for being related in same way to the producer of HERCULES: THE LENGENDRY JOURNEYS. In the middle of season 2 of the show Lucy Lawless who plays Xena broke her pelvis while shooting a scene not for the show but for an advert whilst on her horse. She broke it by falling off her horse. This has given the chance for Renee O'Conner to shine as Gabrielle.

Xena : Warrior Princess is a spin off of HERCULES: THE LEGENDARY JOURNEYS which was a surprise success the previous year. Like HERCULES: THE LEGENDARY JOURNEYS, Xena: Warrior Princess is in ancient Greece. The character of Xena first appeared in three episodes of HERCULES, prior to her approaches as Xena, Lucy Lawless appeared in two other episodes of HERCULES as different characters.

Set in a mystic world, Xena wanders from place to place (and seemingly from time period to time period as she ends up in medieval sets, Greek sets and generic fantasy world sets). . . And only the constants her sword, her friend Gabrielle (who really need to learn to ride a horse) and her wisecracks. The series is filmed on location in and around Auckland, New Zealand, and airs in syndication in the U.S.

The executive producers for the series were Rob Tapert and Sam Raimi, co-executive producers were R.J. Stewart, supervising producer was Steven L. Sears, the producer was Eric Gruendemann and the co-ordinating producer was Bernadette Joyce. Line producer for the series was Chloe Smith and the music was created by Joseph LoDuca. The director of photography was Donald Duncan, the visual effects were created by Jim Prior, the visual effects supervisor was Kevin O'Neill, the production designer was Robert Gillies, the costume designer was Ngila Dickson, the stunt co-ordinator was Peter Bell, the New Zealand casting was by Diana Rowan, US Casting was by Beth Hymson-Ayer.

Xena and Gabrielle both appeared with Hercules and Iolus in the animated feature The Battle for Mt. Olympus, the voices were done by the relevant actors for the two series. Actress Vanessa Angel (WEIRD SCIENCE) and Roma Downey (TOUCHED BY AN ANGEL) were some of the stars who were cited as possibility playing Xena before Lucy Lawless was cast.

One episode of Season Five (The Way) was pulled from world wide distribution due to members of the Hindu community protesting about showing the deity Vishnu in helping Xena and her 'lesbian lover' Gabrielle, this was however never talked about directly in the show. Xena's distributors pulled the episode from world wide distributions causing the India arc story for season five to have no ending. Making Xena and Gabrielle leaving India without any explanation as to why or how. The story was not shown in the UK either, and no explanator was given as to why the episode was pulled to the general public.

Season Five: So how do you survive crucifixion? Perhaps you don't, which is why the opening episode is set in the afterlife with Xena and Gabrielle teaming up with the archangel Michael to do battle with Callisto and her forces of evil. Because Lucy Lawless is pregnant her character will become so too although who would be brave enough to impregnate her is a matter for conjecture. Once that premise is established she travels to China to try and gain new powers which will protect her unborn child. Having upset the Hindu community with Season Four's The Way, one suspects the producers may tread more carefully with the Chinese.

YASHAAKA: DEMON

Shizuka (Ito) is a genetically engineered genius working as a head researcher at the U.S. headquarters of Neo Genesis, the world's largest pharmaceutical company. After eight years in the states, he is sent to Tokyo to investigate a strange viral outbreak on the island of Kirishima. Setting up a lab at Rakuoh University, he meets his childhood friend Shigeichi (Kashiwabara), who is blind but has developed a keen sense of hearing. With however to stay, Shizuka moves in with Shigeichi and his sister Toko, but soon gets a major shock when he encounters Rin Amemiya (Ito, again), the long-lost twin he never knew he had.

Shizuka creates viral analysis software to determine the cause of the deaths at Kirishima, but realizes that Toko has developed similar symptoms since she was bitten by her pet parakeet. In the nick of time, he identifies the virus as "A80", and successfully concocts a serum that saves Toko's life. However, he secretly knows that the A80 is a virus created by his own company, and that the only person in the world who could have brought it into Japan is Kyoichiro Amemiya (Iwaki), Rin's father. Shizuka tries to persuade his twin to leave Amemiya's home, but when he fails, moves in himself in search of evidence.

However, Rin confesses that the Kirishima incident was his doing, and invites Shizuka to join his secret project to decimate the world's population by releasing a plague genetically engineered to kill only the elderly - compare to KEYS IN THE CITY. Shizuka refuses to cooperate, but Rin eventually "persuades" him by shooting an infected person in front of Shigeichi, contaminating him in the process.

Shizuka uses his own blood to create an antiserum, but cannot save his friend's life. He vows revenge on Rin, even as the virus begins to spread through the population and panic ensues.

Uniting the late 20th Century thriller traditions of NIGHT HEAD and Ring, this late night show was based on the ongoing manga by Banana Fish creator Akimi Yoshida, originally published in a supplement to Shojo comic. The more recent DVD release is adorned with a "GCATGCT" DNA sequence, inviting unfair dismissal as a rip-off of the Hollywood movie Gattaca (1997), whereas the original manga was published in Japan over a year before the film's release. Note the director and adaptor Shimako Sato, between known as the director of the movie version of Wizard of Darkness, and also Tale of a Vampire (1992). Theme: Sting - "Desert Rose".

The series was produced by Kotaro Takahashi and Takayuki Urai.

YOUNG HERCULES

We are shown how Hercules became the hero he is today... er, yesterday... well, two thousand or so odd years ago. Hercules (Ryan Gosling), young Iolaus (Dean O'Gorman) and young Jason (Chris Conrad) are all pupils at the academy run by Cheiron (Nathaniel Lees) the centaur. There they're supposed to be learning combat and ethics, but seem to get side tracked by adventures a lot of the time. Among the other students is one girl, Lilith (Jodie Rimmer), who wants to be a heroine. Given its pedigree, it's hardly surprising that Young Hercules is fresh and fun. Iolaus is the obligatory sidekick/object of humour, but he's done well. Chatting up an Amazon, he asks her what her sign is. She looks down at him and answers: "No trespassing." Jason is more serious, but still basically a rebellious teen at times, even if he's heir to the throne.

The prequel to HERCULES: THE LEGENDARY JOURNEYS was created by the Hercules/Xena production team and is also filmed in New Zealand. Seventeen-year-old star Ryan Gosling says, "It's about a kid turning into a hero." Fox Kids aired the show on a Saturday morning with stripped showings on Tuesday to Friday afternoons.

Villains abound, led by the Edward Scissorhands of Crete, Strife (Joel Tobeck), and Discord (Meghan Desmond), who's frequently almost a drooling psychopath. Ares (Kevin Smith) also pops in from time to time. We've had CGI monsters, too, and the usual improbable fights with plenty of strange objects used as weapons. One episode wrecks the tavern of Kora (Angela Dotchin), using the furniture to fight with. Since this is still basically kid's stuff, the word 'kill' can't be used, so it's fun to see how the writers get around that. And nobody gets irreparably hurt, of course. Even when there's a centaur/Amazon war, there's no blood and no fatalities! Despite these minor setbacks, the show is a winner. It's as much pure fun as the adult versions, with lots of wit and charm.

YOUNG ORPHEUS

AKA: SHONEN ORFEE

The Land of the Dead is not a mythical place, but a small planet far in off in the cosmos. Its solitary ruler falls in love with the sight of a girls smile and the sound of her laugh, and decides to bring her to his world to be his companion. Back on Earth, Susumu (Osasa) is traumatized by the sudden death of his sister Fuko (Wada), but manages to hitch a ride on a spaceship that transports departed souls to the Land of the Dead.

Though he is almost killed with a poison drink, Susumu manages to stow away on another ship, piloted by the Boss's former servant Pierrot (Oki). The pair search for Fuko and for a means of returning to Earth. They are told by an old man (Hayashi) that the secret lies in a particular drop of water, but they are swamped by a heavy rainstorm, in which every drop comprises of a single human soul.

Eventually retrieving Fuko, they discover that she has amnesia, and that consequently they must seek a cure in the Cactus Kingdom on the Flower Planet. Captured by the Queen (Sataomi), Susumu is ordered to beat her champion knight in single combat or forfeit his sisters life. He wins the duel and finds that her champion was the abductor of his sister. Susumu wakes up in the hospital back on Earth, where Fuko has made a miraculous recovery, in a strange mixture of The Little Prince and Night Train to the Stars.

Based on a book by Yukio Misawa. It's most obvious debt, of course, is the classical legend of Orpheus and Eurydice, in which a musician must descend into the underworld to rescue his beloved. The series was produced by Kanae Mayuzumi.

ZABOGA

AKA: DENJIN ZABOGA

AKA: ZABOGHA

Denjin Zaboga was produced by the same team that created The Space Giants (Magma Taishi) and Spectreman. Roughly translated, "denjin" means electric-man; Zaboga being a human-sized robot. The series centers around Interpol agent Yutaka Daimon who returns to Japan only to discover that his father has been murdered by the Sigma Gang crime organization because of the formula for "Daimonium"-- a substance created by Professor Daimon. In the first episode, Yutaka is brutally killed as he confronts the evil Doctor Akunomiya and his diabolical robot cohorts.

However, Professor Daimon has implanted a fail-safe mechanism inside the heart of his son which miraculously revives Yutaka. Yutaka soon discovers an "electro-spark switch" in the shape of a pronged key that plugs into the back of his electronic brother, the robot Denjin Zaboga, and activates his mechanical heart-- a device very similar to the one implanted in Yutaka! Yutaka can command the actions of Zaboga, including the transformation of the robot into a motorcycle.

Many consider the 1970s to be the golden age of Japanese Science Fiction film, television, and comics. During this time period, Tokusatsu (special photography) movies and TV shows, anime, and manga thrived, producing some of the most memorable live-action and cartoon heroes in Japanese history. One hero from the hey-day of this decade is Denjin Zaboga, a live-action TV series that first aired in Japan on April 6, 1974.

Denjin Zaboga lasted for fifty-two episodes. The first thirty-nine are filled with plenty of kungfu action as Yutaka and his robot brother seek revenge for their father's death at the hands of Dr. Akunomiya- a half-man half-cyborg mad scientist confined to a wheelchair. Dr. Akunomiya uses his abilities to create an army of monster cyborgs and robots to help destroy Yutaka and Zaboga. The last thirteen episodes of the series shift plot dramatically (the results of which were somewhat unpopular with fans because of the unbelievable story line and down- scaled costumes) to a battle against the Dinosaur Army- an empire of crocodile-like men ruled by an enormous, three-headed cyborg dinosaur. In the final episode, the three-headed dinosaur and Zaboga destroy each other in a battle to the death.

Soon after Denjin Zaboga began airing on television, Japanese toy companies began producing various character toys from the series! Takara made a carded Denjin Zaboga costume for the Henshin Cyborg. Popy die-cast collectors are sure to appreciate a five inch die-cast Zaboga created for Grip's Jumbo series line. The figure is very shogun warrior-like, especially the design of the robot's lower body. The toy's right hand is detachable (called the "chain punch" in the series), connected to the arm by a length of chain. The die-cast can also be converted into a clunky version of Zaboga's motorcycle form and a compartment on the robot's back houses a homing plane (though in the television series the homing device is a miniature helicopter which is housed inside Zaboga's head). However, the die-cast figure does not shoot anything which may have effected the toy's overall appeal at that time.

Bullmark produced approximately sixteen five inch vinyl figures including eleven of Zaboga's enemies, which came bagged with a header card. One of these villains is a creation of Dr. Akunomiya-- a young woman with martian-like antennae who can transform into a fierce golden robot. Another vinyl bad guy is a strange insect looking robot called Arizaira . As for the good guys in this series, Bullmark made a Zaboga in motorcycle form, Yutaka on an attack motorcycle, Yutaka riding motorcycle, and one of Yutaka's allies on a motorcycle.

Besides the five inchers, Bullmark released a standard sized Zaboga vinyl (see photo below, at right) and a bulky, but small, missile firing Zaboga that came in a box. Perhaps, Bullmark's most ingenious Zaboga is a twelve inch vinyl and plastic version with almost all of the same abilities as his television counterpart! The top of the robot's head rotates back to expose a helicopter. The chest opens to transform Zaboga into motorcycle mode. Similar to the Grip Jumbo, the robot's left hand is attached to a chain, while his right hand is removable. Each knee of the robot shoots a missile and a door on the top of each foot opens to reveal one half of a miniature car.

Despite the variety of different character toys based on Denjin Zaboga, both the toys (as well as the television series) appear to be only marginally popular outside of Japan. One reason is simply because Denjin Zaboga has never been dubbed in another language nor aired on television in another country. So far, the current Japanese toy companies participating in nostalgic retro-style toy boom have not yet made a Zaboga figure but who knows what the future holds. The specially built robot, Zabohga, converts to a cyclone motorcycle; his legs release a special car; and head expels a helicopter. Secret agent Daimon Yutaka instructs Zabohga through his specially-made helmet.

It's really sad that Akira Yamaguchi, probably one of my favorite Japanese hero actors, died so young (he was around 39 when he died in 1986), and left behind a few TV performances to choose from. More tragically, one realizes that he lost a few roles to Hiroshi Miyauchi (he was considered for Miyauchi's role in KEY HUNTER and the part of Shirou Kazami/Masked Rider V3, which Miyauchi eventually got), and despite his minimal martial arts experience, he was a real natural in the roles he played. From his debut in NINJA CORPS MOONLIGHT to a villainous role in GIANT IRONMAN 1-7. Perhaps his best roles are Jouji Yuuki/Riderman in MASKED RIDER V3 and his starring role as bionic streetfighter detective Yutaka Daimon in this series, which really showcases Yamaguchi at his wildest!

The show's plot is a human-sized MAZINGER Z of sorts: Yutaka Daimon (Yamaguchi) avenges the death of his father at the hands of the evil wheelchair-bound cyborg Dr. Akunomiya (Ken Okabe, who later played the main villain in Toho's GUYFERD), who leads the evil Sigma Organization. Decked out in all-terrain street gear and a motorcycle helmet, Daimon uses his late father's invention, the cool super robot Zaborger, which is not only fitted with death dealing weapons, but can transform into a motorcycle! Zaborger is both powered by the bionic implant in Daimon's heart whenever he gets really angry (he was killed in an auto accident when he was 6) and controlled by the commands he gives in the microphone attachment on his helmet! Each week, Daimon and Zaborger fight not only Sigma's murderous robot monsters (later ones included these crazy-looking car/truck monsters; One looked like that silly dog car from DUMB & DUMBER, and some of the others were trucks with robot monster bodies sticking out from on top), but also Sigma's diverse bionic streetfighters with really wacky powers (for example, two motorcycle riding brothers whose arms combine to form a gun, and a leather-clad kickboxer with extendable legs)! There was even a transsexual robot called Miss Borg (which transforms from a woman in silver tights and antennas to a silver man robot with antennas), and later, an evil counter-Daimon named Ken Akizuki (who also has a cool eagle-like motorcycle, though it doesn't transform)!

The show went downhill by Episode 39 (the end of Sigma), with the introduction of the lame, infantile villain faction, the Dinosaur Army. The last 13 episodes (40-52) were said to be so bad that they were never shown in Hawaii, where the series was shown subtitled (I think)!

Aside from Yamaguchi, another treat is child actor Masahiro Kamiya (KIKAIDER, GIANT IRONMAN 1-7) as a regular character! The creator of ELECTROID ZABORGER was none other than Kazuo Koike, who also created CRYING FREEMAN, LONE WOLF AND CUB, and wrote the theme songs for GREAT MAZINGER and DYNAMAN! The composer of the show is Shunsuke Kikuchi (one of my favorite composers), whose score is great! Masato Shimon (my favorite Japanese singer) sang the OP and ED theme songs!

In short, this show is highly recommended! An awesome tokusatsu hero action series, bar none!!!

P-Productions also produced "Magma Taishi" [Ambassador Magma] (1966-1967), "Kaiju Ouji" [Monster Prince] (1967), "Supekutoruman" [Spectreman] (1971-1972), Kaiketsu Lion Maru [Swift Hero Lion Maru] (1972-1973), "Fuun Lion Maru" [Storm Cloud Lion Maru] (1973) and "Tetsujin Taiga 7" [Ironman Tiger 7] (1973-1974). As far as I know Denjin Zabôgâ was their last tokusatsu series.

ZACK FILES, THE

Zack and his Dad pay a visit to Henry Gold's Magic Shop where Zack picks up a guide to Vaudeville ventriloquism. With a little practice, Zack learns to throw his voice. He started to have some fun during class, and humiliate Vernon during his presentation, etc... Soon, Zack's voice was becoming more weak and Zack was starting to lose his voice. Suddenly, his voice was released from Zack and it starts telling everyone his secrets. Secrets about his friends, and Zack must retrieve his voice before all his thoughts about his friends are out.

"Zack Greenburg: Why do I always have to be the one with a conscience?"

Cam Dunleavy: You can leave this to a man of vision."

I have seen a bunch of Sci-Fi Kids Shows, I have seen some very weird shows but this is one of the best shows I have ever seen. I watch when I can. The Acting is real awesome. Robert Clarke does a great job as Zack and his co-stars are real cool. My favorite episode I would have to say was Zack Girl. It was weird how a can of deodorant did that. Well some stuff unbelievable. Wormhole though a dryer. Now that crazy but real cool. If you like this show. Then just look around there are other show that are on the same level.

It's One of My Favorite Series. Even though I have not seen every episode yet but watch a good amount of them to like this show. I first saw it on Fox and turn the TV think it was like X-Files, but then I started watch on Fox again that on Fox Family and Now on ABC Family.

I really like watch the Episode Zack Girl. It was real cool. I wonder if other shows have done something like that.

ABC Family's one-hour show THE ZACK FILES works as a sci-fi thriller whose aim is for kids too old for material such as GOOSEBUMPS, but too young for violent and adult-oriented programs like THE X-FILES. I'm an 18-year old guy, and in my case, I'm in the gray zone, aren't I? Anyway, I found THE ZACK FILES to be quite an interesting show. Though at first I thought "Terrific, here's another kid show disguised as science fiction." But as soon as I began watching more episodes, I soon found myself a bit hooked. The most interesting aspect I consider about THE ZACK FILES are the cleverly plotted, if not totally logical, storylines. 3 kids by the names of Cam, Spense, and Zack encounter strange happenings that spit at the face of reality, and somehow, the trio manages to fix up whatever the occurrences have messed! The acting by the stars are good, especially by Robert Clarke, aka Zack. Upon first watching this show, I couldn't help but think that Clarke seemed like a Frankie Muniz-wannabe, but he pretty much held on his own as Zack Greenberg.

2 - 16 KEPTOMANIZACK

When Zack decided to visit the Music store to purchase a copy of a CD that would impress Sarah, but Cam was there and suggesting too many CDs. Zack was only able to buy one or two, but Cam kept on stuffing CDs into his hands, and when there was no more places to add more, Cam decided to stuff them into Zack's pockets. When Zack purchased one of the CDs and was ready to leave, the alarm went off, Zack glowed, and Cam told him about the CD that he put in his pockets. Zack was caught and the security guard told his dad that he would not be charge because it was a first offence, but Zack could never return to the store or he will be punished. Zack discovered that he was a magnet for lost things because he found other people's possessions that have been lost. When Zack collects a book by Archimedes, Spence must find a way to return to Prague in the Czech Republic. Spence e-mailed and sent forms to find out how to send it back, and a man, who said was a book collector, claimed to own the book and wanted to purchase the book (which he called as a "reward") after hacking into Spence's e-mail to find his address. The trio escaped the man and had to find a way to send the book back. Cam thought of an idea - he called the man and the police to meet them at the music store that Zack had become a magnet and when Zack went through the alarm along with the book collector and the police, the book wound up in the Book Collector's pockets, the police arrested him, and Zack returned to normal.

Zack's mother returns to Zack and his father so she could spend some time with Zack. Zack gets in the middle of arguments of who would keep Zack, because his father wanted Zack to spend time with him to watch games while eating dinner, while his mother wanted to talk to him during dinner and see what has been happening in his life. When Zack drinks an Orange Fizzy Pop, he had the ability to transport from different locations, which interested Spence. He began some tests, and when Zack told him that he would be able to visit both his parents in the same night, but Spence discovered that he would not be able to control it in the future.

2 - 19 ZACK AND WHITE

During an election with Gwen, Cam and other candidates, Zack and Spence did not know who to vote for. Spence decided to try an experiment with Zack by putting him in a tub of water and see what Zack does during his sleep, and what kinds of interesting material is in his dreams. In his dreams, Zack visits a world where it was only black and white, and everyone was the lame, and the same. No one wanted to exaggerate anything, and Zack had done many things that were against the law, and Zack became a rebel. He refused to eat Mush for breakfast or lunch, he did not want to follow anybody's instructions and dress the way they did, and Gwen, Cam, and Spence tries to figure out how to make Zack one of them. Spence and a young boy, who was thought to be a rebel (and admired Zack) helps Zack in his campaign in the election after they were convinced of Zack's Other World. Zack finds a red rose, and the smell of the rose made everyone happy, and now they were free, and they wanted to do anything they wanted.

2 - 20 LITTLE BIG ZACK

Zack's fear of growing up causes him to regress back to childhood when he discovers that he is going to have a Bar Mitzva Celebration at his church. Zack actually transformed back to when 7 years old, and he started acting like a child while Spence try to figure out how to get the teenage Zack back. Zack's Bar Mitzva was getting nearer while Zack stayed in school and fooled around, causing trouble for Spence and Cam. Spence needed to make Zack feel more grown up and ready to accept the responsibilities of a boy who is becoming a man.

2 - 21 THE ZACK SHOW

Zack discovers that his life is a reality TV show, seen on another planet. One of the crewmembers of viewing this show visits Earth to tell Zack that he has bad ratings and Zack has to make sure that he continues to receive viewers or his planet would be wiped out. Zack must try to pick a fight with Vernon, Cam has to go on a date with Gwen, and Spence needs to make more interesting experiments so they would be more exciting. Each one of them gradually disappeared because there was no use for them anymore. Everyone failed and their civilization would be annihilated but the alien discovered a new and interesting talent from the School Board Inspector.

2 - 22 THE EYES OF GWEN KILLERBY

During the robot creation contest, Zack found out he was looking at something else when he put on a special kind of glasses that Spence was going to use for his robot. Spence's challenge was to win the contest with the robot's ability to "burp" the alphabet, and a big contender was Gwen, who made her robot play the violin. Zack discovered that someone was sabotaging Spence's robot. Zack had to wear the ridiculous glasses all day to see if the saboteur strikes again. Spence decides to stay beside the closet, which hold his robot to catch whoever is damaging his robot. The trio believed that Zack was seeing through Gwen's eyes with the glasses, and he was seeing Gwen destroying the robot. So is Gwen the dismantler?

2 - 23 ZACK GREENBURG'S DAY OFF

Zack falls into Mr. Munk after walking through the door, and Zack just disappeared and he finds himself inside Mr. Munk's body. He was controlling every movement of the headmaster's body. He gathers up his team, Spencer and Cam and tells them the great news. He started his fun by getting Vernon in trouble, and then, he told the students that that they could fool around during breaks between classes. He then returned to Mr. Munk's office, and continues to document fake and funny information about Vernon (such as picking other people's noses). Mr. Mantueffel arrives at the school and inspects the school and announced that the school would be shutting down due to the Headmaster's poor job at keeping the students under control. Zack, Spence, and Cam who did not want to be separated to put in different schools, tried to devise a plan (getting Zack to transform back from Mr. Munk), but nothing could stop the children's havoc. As a last resort, Zack read a discipline book, and used it to discipline the students, and finally, the school was back in order, and Mantueffel decided to cancel the shutting down process of Horace Hyde White. When Zack walks out of Mr. Munk's office, he was released from Munk's body and sent back to his body (Spencer realized that Zack had to go through the other way, through the door to reverse the Zack File) and Mr. Munk gave Spence and Cam detentions for pushing Zack into him.

2 - 24 ALMOST FAMOUS ALMOST

When Zack was practising playing the guitar, he was given a chance to try on Spencer's interactive gloves which gives him a feeling of playing a guitar. Then the gloves began to go crazy, and Spencer was able to release it from Zack's clutches, and they discovered that Zack became an amazing guitar player but he can only play well in his room. When Cam sent Zack's guitar-playing video, it attracts a famous music star who is looking for a member that would replace him in his band. Zack's father gave Zack a new and better guitar while Spencer discovered that Zack was playing so well because of magnetic fields in his room. When this star arrives at Zack's house, he began treating Spencer extremely badly. Zack did not want to become a rock star but Cam kept on pushing him because of money. During the recording sessions, Zack's father came through the door, and disturbed them. Ricky Dallas (the famous star) went ballistic and told "the old man" to leave them alone. Daniel Greenburg told everyone to leave so he could deal with Dallas and to explain all the rules to him. Spencer discovered that the magnetic fields were fading while Zack was heading to Ricky Dallas to tell them he quit because the star was treating all his friends so badly, and to show what Dallas was losing. But when Zack played, the fields had disappeared and his bad playing returned.

2 - 25 WHO DID YOU SAY I WAS?

As the Season Finale, Zack's records were sent out the window when he participated in a fight with Vernon, and Zack lost his entire memory. Zack's friends must retrieve the Zack Files and tell him all of the most important Zack Files to give Zack a chance to retain all his memory. Clips of previous episodes in Season One and Season Two were viewed in attempt to get Zack to become himself again, and once he saw his record files that Vernon had retrieved to announce to Zack that he was one of Vernon's minions, his memory was restored.

2 - 26 ZACKEO AND JULIET

Zack must take part in a Shakespeare play - Romeo and Juliet in order to pass English class, and he was assigned to act as the role of Romeo.

ZAIDO: PULIS PANGKALAWAKAN

AKA: ZAIDO (SHORT TITLE)

20 years have passed since Alexis Del Mundo, also known as the second Shaider, destroyed the clan of the Fuuma-Lear. The descendants of the clan, now known as the Kuuma, have emerged to wreak havoc on an unsuspecting universe. Gallian, a descendant of Alexis, has a mission and form an elite group of space sheriffs known as the Zaido.

Zaido: Pulis Pangkalawakan (lit. Zaido: Space Sheriffs) is a fantasy Philippine drama by GMA Network. This is a spin off to the Japanese Metal Hero Shaider.[1] and is somewhat a revival of the Metal Hero genre.

The production for the series began last October 2006. Originally conceived to be a Filipino remake of the original Shaider (with Marky Cielo in the lead role), it became a spin-off series which stars Dennis Trillo. Toei rejected the original script but gave its blessing to a spin-off series set twenty years after the original series. Cielo's character name, Alexis, is a reflection of the project's original concept, as Alexis is the Philippine name for Dai Sawamura. If considered as part of the original continuity, Zaido is the fourth installment of Uchuu Keiji (Space Sheriffs) Trilogy (composed of Uchuu Keiji Gavan, Uchuu Keiji Sharivan, and Uchuu Keiji Shaider), and the eighteenth Metal Heroes series, which has had a ten-year hiatus.

The series premiered on September 24, replacing Impostora. A series primer was aired on September 22 called Zaido: Ang Bagong Alamat - The Making of Zaido, and featured members of the main cast and crew.

A connection to the original series is made through the display of various clips from Uchuu Keiji Shaider during the Galactic Force Space City sequences, the "special video game" Alexis inherits from his mother and beginning in Episode 4, it is revealed that the original Alexis del Mundo lives on as a hologram. The three Zaidos are also meant to be a homage to the original Space Sheriffs: Shaider, Gavan, and Sharivan.

Other names and terminology in the series are also intended as a homage to the original series, and there are also references to other shows and cultural conventions. Kuuma Le-ar also has a transvestite grandson named Ida (a role[3] that a famous Filipino gay comedian wanted to play) who is rejuvenated by drinking a concoction made from the blood of young women. The character Amy is a homage to Shaider's partner Annie, and it is revealed in the series that Avilo (a spacecraft/robot) and the Blue Falcon (a combat motorcycle) are updated versions of Shaider's Vavilos (Babilos in the Philippine dub) and Blue Hawk, respectively.

Homage to shows outside of Metal Heroes series include: the "Z" configuration of the Zaido Super Slash, in reference to Zorro, and the use of a video game to select the next Zaido, a concept borrowed from the 1984 sci-fi movie The Last Starfighter.

Cast and Characters

Main Casts

Dennis Trillo as Gallian/Blue Zaido

Gallian lost his parents because of Le-ar's evil conquests and was then adopted by the Galactic Force. He has extraordinary skills in combat because he has the blood of a hero. As Blue Zaido, head of the Zaido, he was tasked to look for other Zaido all over the world to help him fight for the safety of the universe.

Marky Cielo as Alexis Lorenzo/Green Zaido

Alexis comes from a poor family. He witnessed the tragic death of his father, and has since vowed to help destroy evil. He became a policeman, just and dedicated to bringing peace and order, yet is often ridiculed by his more corrupt colleagues. When Gallian finds him, Alexis becomes Green Zaido.

Aljur Abrenica as Cervano Torres/Red Zaido

Like Alexis, Cervano also comes from Earth -- but while his cousin leads a harsher life, Cervano's life has it all and more. There is an unexplainable rage within him that he masks with bravado. But even with his less than pleasing personality, he manages to attract the girls. And he likes it that way.

Humans

Lorna Tolentino as Helen Lorenzo

Helen is a loving mother to Alexis, Alvaro, and Oggy. She protects a dark secret involving one of her sons that will change the destiny of the Zaido.

Raymart Santiago as Alvaro Lorenzo

Alvaro was Alexis' older brother who was led to live as an outlaw upon their father's death so he could provide for the family. Later he is mysteriously kidnapped by unidentified men.

Tirso Cruz III as Ramiro

Ramiro served as the new head of the family after the death of Alexis' father, yet under whose kind actions lurks an untrustworthy character. He was the friend of Alexis' father.

Diana Zubiri as Carmela Langit/Princess Arianna of Avea

Carmela was Alvaro's girlfriend until he disappeared. She later meets and falls in love with Gallian, who she helps as he searches for the other Zaidos.

Lovi Poe as Mona Langit

Mona is a news writer who is Alexis' childhood friend and who has a secret love for him.

Dion Ignacio as Thor Mentor

Thor is Alexis' cousin and colleague in the police force who has done nothing but make his life miserable. He will pursue Carmela when Alvaro disappears.

Galactic Force

Ian de Leon as Commander Zion

The three Zaido will engage in intensive training under the leadership of Commander Zion, head of the Galactic Force. As their commander, Zion also becomes a surrogate father for the three Zaidos.

Karel Marquez as Lyka

Lyka is Commander Zion's daughter who teaches in the Galactic Force Academy. She also serves as an assistant to Gallian, with whom she shares a forbidden relationship.

Kris Bernal as Amy

From the planet Zendar, Amy is a Galactic Force Academy student whose affection will be fought over by Alexis and Cervano.

Kuuma Empire

Paolo Ballesteros as Ida

Ida is the grandson and adviser of Le-ar. He is also the high priest of the Kuuma who was hailed as the most beautiful being in the universe but whose soul is rotting underneath his flawless appearance.

Jay Manalo as Drigo

As Le-ar's field commander, Drigo leads the Kuuma in attacking the world.

Amasonas

LJ Reyes as Amasonang Lila

The fastest of the Amasonas, Amasonang Lila's expertise lie on using her personal weapon: the kali. Her origins is also a mystery to the other Amasonas.

Iwa Moto as Amasonang Itim/Sonia

Amasonang Itim used to be a colleague of Carmela, before she turned into an Amasona. Now, she is an expert of blades and fights for the forces of Kuuma.

Melissa Avelino as Amasonang Rosas

Amasonang Rosas is a martial arts expert whose origins remain a mystery. Of all the Amasonas, she is the strongest.

Arci Muñoz as Amasonang Puti/Stacy

She was once a scorned girlfriend before joining the Amasonas. From her group, Amasonang Puti is cursed with a conscience, and must struggle every time if she will do good or evil.

Vaness del Moral as Amasonang Kahel/Rhea

Another woman scorned, Amasonang Kahel becomes more aggressive after she becomes part of the Amasonas. With her expertise in guns and her sharp eye for shooting, she will prove to be a formidable enemy.

Executive-in-charge of Production: Wilma Galvante

Production Manager: Redgynn Alba

Executive Producer: Helen Sese

Creative Consultants: Jun Lana and Anette Gozon-Abrogar

Soundtrack

The theme song for the series is sung by Sandwich titled "Pulis Pangkalawakan." The lyrics were written by the series' head writer Don Michael Perez, with the music by Raimund Marasigan.

Criticism

Entertainment critic Nestor Torre viewed that Zaido's visual effects felt "borrowed" from iconic references such as Star Wars. He also cited the inconsistency between the series' glossy sci-fi effects and the dated martial arts fight scenes and sword fights, saying that an advanced civilization would have had an equally high-tech warfare, as well as some distracting details in production design.

It was also noted that the director Dominic Zapata was not a Shaider fan either.

1 - 1 GALLIAN, THE FIRST ZAIDO

The unearthly forces of Le-ar have re-surfaced; they have returned stronger and better. With the demise of Shaider, the universe is once again in danger.

The first planet to receive the treacherous powers of Le-ar is Nelax. Its future king Gallian is about to get married to Princess Arianna when their planet is attacked. Soon, Gallian is alone and lost. But thanks to Commander Zion of the Galactic Space Force, Gallian will find a new life as a pulis pangakalawakan. How will Gallian face the reality of his loss? Will his passion for revenge push him to the edge?

Meanwhile, in the planet called Earth, a young man named Alexis is peacefully living his life with his family. A tragic event, however, will change the life of this young man. Who is Alexis and how is he connected to Gallian?

1 - 2 THE RETURN OF DARKNESS

After the fall of the Planet Nalax, Gallian never thought he would live again. But with the objectives of Galactic Force, the organization that adopted him, he found a reason to continue living -- and the means to fight the forces of Kuuma that defiled his home planet.

At the Galactic Force Space City, Gallian met the daughter of Captain Zion, Lyka, and fell in love in a place where love is forbidden for any space cop. Amy, an orphan from the planet Zendar, catches the two together and proceeded to blackmail Gallian into training her to become a space cop as well. But her blackmail fell flat when Captain Zion himself caught Gallian with his daughter.

Meanwhile, on Earth, Alexis strove hard to become a police officer to follow the footsteps of his late father. And as a police officer, his first mission brought him face to face with his brother Alvaro who had turned to crime to provide for his family. How will Alexis live with himself knowing his police education had come from dirty money, and that he had arrested his brother on Alvaro's birthday?

1 - 3 STRINGS OF DESTINY

Racing against the Kuuma, Gallian crash-landed on Earth and found the second Zaido, Alexis, with the help of Carmela. Using a primitive microwave transmitter, Gallian followed Alexis to Peligroso Volcano, where a fight between the monster Nigi-nigi and Alexis helped Gallian confirm that he had found one of his two cousins. And using the latter's fear for the safety of those he loves; Gallian was able to persuade Alexis to join the Galactic Force.

Meanwhile, a despondent Cervano discovered that he was adopted, and that his mother was a space cop. With the destruction of Robix, Cervano was left on his own to find the only family her mother left behind. But his inaction during Toby's accident haunted him once more in the appearance of Toby's big brother -- who wants Cervano to pay for what had happened to Toby. Yet, facing Toby's brother was the least of Cervano's worries because his mother's message had alerted both the Galactic Force and the Kuuma of his location.

After being caught by the Kuuma, Cervano is saved by Gallian and the other space police. But the adventure is just about to begin for him and for Alexis as they embark on the war between those who want to keep the peace, and the evil who wants the universe to bow to them.

1 - 4 JEALOUSY

As the training progresses, Alexis demonstrates impressive performance with the tasks given to them, while Cervano remains cocky.

With one space cadet deciding not to continue with his training, Amy gets a chance to join the galactic force. What could Amy be planning now?

Meanwhile, on earth, Carmella, Mona and Debbie get closer to the truth about Alvaro's death. Will they finally know who's behind this tragedy or will someone stop them from finding out the real story?

With the growing gap between Alexis and Cervano, will their feud result to mutual hate now that Amy is both their heart's desire?

And what will happen to Gallian and Lyka, with the former officially ending their relationship?

1 - 5 SECRETS

At the Galactic Force Headquarters, things got a lot tougher.

With the return of Gallian, Lyka thought that the man of her dreams had finally come to his senses. But Gallian chose the rules instead of her, and Lyka chose death instead of living life without love. Lyvia, Lyka's sister, found out what her sister did. This made her dislike her father, the commander, and Gallian for both following the rules instead of their heart.

Amy began to lead a double life: as a resident of the Galactic Force and as the training soldier, Odillon. With Gallian's help, Amy was able to hide her identity from everyone until a simulation gone wrong revealed her secret to Alexis and Cervano, both unwitting rivals in a competition only the latter wants to play.

Back on Earth, Mona and Carmela uncovered a clue to Alvaro's mysterious disappearance, worrying Ramiro that he will be discovered as the villain. But before Mona or Carmela could move forward with their investigation, their only informant was killed right in front of them.

The secrets are being uncovered one by one, exposing more mysteries to be solved!

1 - 6 LE-AR'S NEW PLAN

After being defeated by the Zaidos, Le-Ar hatched a new plan to fend off the Galactic Force and rule over Earth. With the help of Ida, Drigo and a random Kuuma who pretends to be a concerned person, the evil forces of Le-Ar are inviting women from all over to become a new army that will become indestructible and unstoppable.

With their training over, Alexis and Cervano returned to their respective lives. But many things had changed during their absence: Cervano went back to his old life to find out that his father had replaced him with a little boy his new brother. Meanwhile, Alexis returned to duty only to find out that he had been suspended. But in order to get into Helen's good side, Ramiro manipulated some higher-ups to get Alexis back on force. And to make sure Alexis never finds out about his involvement in the death of Alvaro and his father, Ramiro covered up his tracks by getting someone else to admit to the crime.

To start a new life, Amy left the Galactic Force to begin anew on Earth. Unfortunately for the alien teen, she hijacked a faulty space ship and crashed it into a lake a lake containing water that make Zendarians like her drunk.

Worried for Amy, Gallian returned to Earth -- but instead of Amy, he crossed paths with Carmela again. And this time, he's completely sure that Carmela and Ariana were one and the same.

1 - 7 CERVANO'S NEW LIFE

Lyvia will feel deeply upset at Amy being made a space cop and will question her father's decision. She then accuses Amy of stealing this privilege away from her sister, Lyka. What will this do to Amy? Will she be happy or feel regret getting her dream?

The Zaidos will return to Earth, Alexi will help Ramiro find his daughter Debbie, and Cervano will return to his family and school.

As Cervano goes back to school, he will soon realize that his ex-friends have not forgiven him just yet, and that they've all agreed to make his life a living hell. His once popular It Guy lifestyle will change to being the weakling of the school. How will Cervano face this?

The forces of Le-ar will send a new foe called Bawaw-aw. He will transform into a cute puppy, with Cervano reluctantly adopting him. What kind of madness will Bawaw-aw bring to the Zaidos?

1 - 8 EXCEPTIONAL HUMANS

Drigo had begun training the Amasonas while the people they were connected with began to wonder where their friends had gone.

With Alexis and Cervano back on Earth, Captain Zion wanted the two to promise not to use their powers against fellow humans a promise Cervano quickly broke when he decided to save a fellow student from the bullies he used to call his friends. The new Cervano became friends with Toby, who also began to show changes super strength, agility abilities he didn't have before.

Alexis helped Ramiro look for his missing daughter, Debbie. And with his best friend Mona, Alexis arrived at a conclusion that she was taken by the Kuuma like four other missing women.

Captain Zion sent Gallian and Amy back to Earth as a precaution, and to keep an eye on the two Earth-bound Zaidos. But as the two touched Earthly ground, Gallian quickly became obsessed with finding Carmela's past and proving that she is Arianna. And then, Amy got involved in the mystery of the Amasonas and the missing women of Earth.

Meanwhile, the Kuumas hatched new plans simultaneously, limiting the Zaidos' chance for success. Already, they have infiltrated the families of two Zaidos and kidnapped a person very important to Gallian.

1 - 9 SHADOW OF THE PAST

Alvaro has returned! And while he continued to grapple with the missing pieces of his memory, Alexis and the rest of his family can't help but just be happy that he's back.

With Alvaro's homecoming, Ramiro's fear of being discovered returned as well. But that's not the only thing making a comeback at his house. With the loss of Debbie and the news of Ramiro's wedding, Selma came back to put order to her brother's life--and terror in the lives of Helen and her sons.

Meanwhile, Gallian's relationship with Carmela hit a rough patch when the latter saw Alvaro once more. Thinking that she's being haunted by the betrayal of her ex-boyfriend's memories, how will Carmela deal with the news that Alvaro is indeed alive and well, and that it was Gallian who saved him from a flaming accident?

Also feeling guilt was Cervano, who began to blame himself for what had happened to Toby.

But before he could completely wallow in self-pity, a new menace was hatched in the city of Tala--in the form of a plant. But this time, there's no Amy to save them because the female space cop had fallen under the plant's spell.

1 - 10 FLOWER POWER

Tinik-ik had risen to power, and with the people's devotion, the occasional human dinner and the power of the Kuuma, it was able to grow into a full monster. With its spores that contained advanced Kuuma technology, Tinik-ik could turn half the Tala population into plants--including Amy.

The rivalry for Amy's affection had also begun between Alexis and Cervano. And with Amy's transformation into a flower, the rivalry drastically heated up. Meanwhile, Mona continues to wait by the sidelines for Alexis to notice her.

And Gallian and Carmela faced a bump in their relationship with the return of Alvaro's memories. Now that Alvaro knew Carmela to be his girlfriend and Gallian his friend, how will the two tell him that a lot had changed since his disappearance?

Meanwhile, Lyvia had betrayed the Galactic Force, giving Kuuma unrestricted access to Galactic Force intelligence.

How will Lyvia's betrayal affect the Galactic Force? What will happen once Alvaro realizes that Gallian and Carmela are more than just friends?

1 - 11 CH-CH-CHANGES

Who would've thought that it would be love that would destroy the Zaidos?

Gallian and Carmela's relationship was put on hold after Alvaro regained his memories, but until when will Carmela hide her relationship with Gallian from her first boyfriend? And how long can Gallian last watching the love of his life be with someone else?

Meanwhile, as Alexis battled with the gigantic Tinik-ik, Cervano had his own battle with Drigo -- who refused to deliver the final blow that would kill the red Zaido.

Through a series of flashbacks, it was revealed that Drigo had a relationship with Cervano's real mother. But unbeknownst to him and to Captain Zion, it was actually Shanara (Helen) who was impregnated by Drigo when she pretended to be her twin sister to break up with him.

Back in the present, Alexis and Cervano were unwittingly battling for Amy's affections, but the naïve Zendarian didn't think that the two had any romantic expectations from her.

As the Kuuma prepared to take another shot at the Zaidos, this time using someone close to them, how will the three be able to defend themselves when they are all consumed by problems of the heart?

1 - 12 THE BETRAYED

Gamma was unleashed on the populace of Tala, and there was only one Zaido available to put a stop to his wake of destruction.

Alexis and Cervano continued their fight for Amy's attention as they traveled to Subic for Cervano's swim meet. There, Mona was unable to control her feelings for Alexis and Amy found out the truth about the way Alexis felt about her. And before they could work out their problems, the three were called into action to help Gallian fend off the mysterious Gamma.

To make sure that no one could help Gallian, traps were set off in and around the city to keep the other Zaidos busy. And as the Galactic Force watched the fight, their beaming mechanism was sabotaged by one of their own. Forbidding them to bail Gallian out when the space cop could no longer take the beating that Gamma was giving him.

And even if they could, Gallian found out that Gamma was no longer just fighting for the Kuuma -- he was fighting because Gamma and Alvaro were one and the same and he believed Gallian stole Carmela from him.

Beaten, Gallian disappeared in a shower of sparks and smoke, never to be seen again. The Galactic Force swept the area for any traces of the fallen hero, but they couldn't find the brave soldier. But Carmela refused to give up, and Alexis was more than willing to help find his mentor.

The question remains though, will the two of them be able to find Gallian before it is too late? Or will they be able to save him, only to pay for his safety with their life? Every second counts as Gallian continues to weaken.

1 - 13 THE DEATH OF A ZAIDO

Carmela refused to let go of Gallian, with the knowledge that her supposed home planet's waters can bring her beau back to life; Carmela risked her life and that of Aqualia's to obtain the mysterious liquid.

Amy remained oblivious to battle being waged between Alexis and Cervano for her affection. And when Cervano almost died during one of Gamma's attacks, both he and Alexis get into a heated argument about who's better.

Helen revealed her secret to Alexis, but it seemed she will be forced to sweep more secrets under rug when people begin wondering about Alexis and his gadgets. Meanwhile, Cervano unknowingly gained two bodyguards in the persons of Drigo and his loyal soldier Fasullo -- who Cervano knew as Inday.

But as the Galactic Force mourn for Gallian's death, and the Zaidos deal with their personal lives, the Kuuma had not stopped to rest.

Le-Ar gave Ida a birthday gift in the form of Ida Dida, and they had begun their next wave of attack with Siba Tiba; a monster who used the children's gluttony to cause havoc in the town of Tala.

With one man down, how will the Zaidos face the threat of the growing numbers of the Kuuma?

1 - 14 BREAKING APART

With Cervano's issues on being left out and feeling unneeded, he took on fighting the Kuuma monster as an opportunity to show that he could still be trusted. But in the time-space warp, he learned from Drigo that he had Kuuma blood in him. How could he face the Galactic Force, knowing what he knew?

And though the Kuuma succeeded in removing Cervano from the Zaido Squad, they failed to bring the Red Zaido to their side when Drigo's loyal servant decided to use her opportunity to runaway with her love, Dodong.

Meanwhile, chaos reigned at the Galactic Force Space City. With the arrival of Gallian's mother, Captain Zion's leadership was put into question. Amy continued to worry for Cervano's whereabouts, crimping her relationship with Alexis. Gallian discovered that Carmela never was the fiancée he had been looking for with the appearance of the real Aryana. And Lyvia faced the consequences of wreaking her vengeance on the Galactic Force before.

As the Galactic Force is overtaken by their own personal issues, the Zaido Kids are left behind to defend the city of Tala from Wiga Giga, a new monster from the Kuumas.

Will the kids be enough to save the town of Tala? Or will the Zaido Squad realize in time that there are bigger issues they must face for the safety of the world?

1 - 15 THE UNRAVELING OF THE GALACTIC

Last week, the Zaidos were shocked by the discovery that Cervano is part Kuuma. But out of all the team members, Alexis was the only one who couldn't accept their comrade back into the team. And the more Amy continued to defend the Red Zaido, the more infuriated Alexis became.

Frustrated, Alexis confided to his mother his problems the main thing being, Cervano's identity as the son of Drigo. But there are a lot of things that Helen wasn't telling her son not the least was the information that Le-Ar's body was being hidden on Earth, and the body's guardian is no other than Commander Zion's wife, Luna.

But Ramiro found out; he then used the information as a bargaining chip to escape the clutches of the Kuuma, and to save his daughter Debbie.

Meanwhile, with the Blue Zaido given stronger armor and hoping that the Red Zaido will ally himself with the Kuuma, Gamma was then tasked to kill the remaining Zaido, Alexis. Yet with Alexis's discovery that Gamma is none other than Alvaro, how can one brother fight against his own blood?

And what will Helen do to save her sons?

If that wasn't enough, the Kuuma had managed to hypnotize the people of Tala -- including the Zaido kids! There are only five remaining Zaido squad members now, and one of them's about to be killed.

1 - 16 TREASON

Last week on Zaido: Pulis Pangkalawakan, Gallian awoke to find an unknown assailant about to kill him. When the stranger fled the scene, Gallian wasn't able to catch any glimpse of the person. But outside his room, Ulla had seen Carmela running away. Using this as evidence, two soldiers of the Galactic Force were sent down to Earth to collect Carmela. But Carmela didn't go without a fight unfortunately for her, the Galactic Force used Mona as leverage to get her to cooperate.

In court, Carmela pleaded not guilty for the crime she was accused of. But aside from Alexis, Amy, Cervano and Commander Zion, no one would believe her.

Meanwhile, after Alexis aggravated his relationship with Cervano for thinking that the latter was of Kuuma blood, Alexis received the surprise of his life when Drigo revealed who his real son was. Coupled with Alvaro being completely brainwashed by the Kuumas to fully become Gamma, Alexis was presented with a dilemma: does he, or does he not join the Kuumas?

But his sense of right and wrong prevailed, and Alexis refused to be part of everything he had been fighting against.

Cervano revealed his feelings for Amy and the latter discovered that she felt the same way for him. To cap off her lousy birthday celebration, the two became an official couple amidst the falling rain.

Yet the Zaido Squad has a new problem when Luna, Commander Zion's presumed dead wife, sent out a call for help. Her location had been found by the Kuuma, and she needed help to protect the secret of where Le-Ar's body was hidden. Will the Zaido Squad arrive in time to save her? Or will Le-Ar finally find his body once more?

1 - 17 NO END IN SIGHT

Alexis tried to return to the Galactic Force even after discovering he was Drigo's son. But when his hesitation led to Lyvia's death, Alexis decided to move away from the organization. Seeking solace in Mona's arms, Alexis realized too late how much she meant to him; she already stopped waiting for him to notice her. Meanwhile, his discovery that Amy and Cervano were now an item pushed him over the edge, making him turn his back on everything he believed was right.

Cervano and Amy too, became disillusioned as they realized Gallian was only his mother's puppet. With Carmela's and Lyvia's death, the two decided to leave the Galactic Force and to take Captain Zion with them an act that widened their rift with Gallian, who still believed that the Galactic Force was the best judge of what is right and wrong.

Meanwhile, unbeknown to everyone except Gallian, Carmela is alive and well and far away from Earth and the Galactic Force.

A new evil will reign on Earth and the Universe as Alexis embraces his dark side as Sigma: the leader of Le-Ar's army of reborn monsters.

Can Gallian save the town of Tala all by himself? Will Cervano and Amy fall into trouble when they become vigilantes? And how will Alexis face his former comrades as a full-fledged Kuuma?

ZEELAND SWEATHEARTAKA: ZEEUWS MEISJE

Zeeuws Meisje lived in the Netherlands after the Great Traffic Jam (when all cars in the Netherlands blocked all the roads and could neither move forward or backward, a situation which never ended). As a result no green pastures or even small spots of green were left in The Netherlands: nothing would grow except gherkins. Her great adversary is August Horks, a industrial who grows and sells gherkins and who is the most powerful man in the Netherlands. Zeeuws Meisje uses her earrings (rather large ones, original for old Zealand dress) to receive signals from people in distress and then sets out to help them. She can fly, but does not have superstrength: she is very intelligent and solves problems by means of her intelligence.

Powers/Abilities: Zeeuws Meisje uses her oorijzer (ear-irons, a sort of thin helmet or metal head band with ornaments, original for old Zealand dress) to receive signals from people in distress and then sets out to help them. She can fly, but does not have superstrength: she is very intelligent and solves problems by means of her intelligence.

"The character is based on a brand of margarine, also called Zeeuws Meisje and generally known for the fact that you won't pay too much for good quality margarine. One might say she is a Dutch archetype for the good and trustworthy."

The series was first aired by the VPRO in 1997 (I think it was April), a Dutch broadcasting company known for its slightly 'arty' or more intelligent programs, not unlike Channel Four (UK). The series was written by Robert Alberdingk Thijm between 1993 and 1997."

ZOMBIES OF THE STRATOSPHERE

He plays a sort of star ranger who uncovers and foils a complicated plot whereby the Martians plan to blow the Earth up with an H-bomb and then shift Mars into Earth's orbit to get the benefit of Earth's superior climate (?!). Bradford is the villain, Nimoy (later to achieve lasting fame as Mr Spock) his zombie henchman and Waxman the treacherous scientist who helps them,

This time out it's Holdren who wears the mask and flying suit that did such sterling service in KING OF THE ROCKET MEN (1949) and RADAR MEN FROM THE MOON (1952). The script, by Davidson who, single-handedly, wrote the last 13 Republic serials, is crude as is Brannon's direction. But then in 1952, the serial was a thing of the past.

A year later Holdren took over the role of COMMANDER CODY, SKY MARSHALL OF THE UNIVERSE, first essayed by George Wallace in Radar Men from the Moon (1952) but the serial was a false one culled from episodes of Republic's Commander Cody teleseries. In 1958, an edited down version of this serial was re-issued as Satan's Sarellices. The series was produced by Franklyn Adreon, the cinematographer was John MacBurnie and the special effects were created by Howard Lydecker and Theodore Lydecker.

ZONE FIGHTER

AKA: RYUSEI NINGEN ZONE

The Gorga Empire, a race of gargoyle aliens with antennae they can pluss of their heads and use as whips, destroy the home planet of the Zone. The last survivors of the Zone clan take refuge on planet Earth, where they adopt human names and disguises. However, their new homeworld proves to be the next target in the Gorgan plan to conquer the universe.

Zone refugees Hikaru (Aoyama), Hotaru (Kitahara), and Akira (Sato) use their alien powers to transform into Zone Fighter, Zone Angel and Zone Junior to protect their adopted home from the regular monsters of the week called Terro-Beasts, dropped to Earth in Gorgan capsules. Inevitably, the monster proves to be too much for the Zone people to handle, and Hikaru is forced to transform into a giant version of himself to take the monster on under equal terms.

As the popularity of the Godzilla movies began to wane, the Toho Studios utilized some of the talent and props from the movies to concoct their own answer to Tsuburaya's ULTRAMAN franchise. Despite relative obscurity in TV terms, Zone Fighter has retained a cult following among the fans of monster movies, who watch for the appearance of the movie monster King Ghidorah in episode five and six, and the arrival of Godzilla himself in episode 11.

In one of five appearances in the series the famous lizard took on Gigan, the same creature he would fight in the same years movie Godzilla Vs Megalon, which was also directed by ZFs Jun Fukuda. The adverse economic climate of the early 1970s, exploited to some extent by the later JAPAN SINKS, was to cause the serial's premature end and the Godzilla movies themselves experienced a long hiatus after 1975. The series was produced by Kimihiko Eto, Nobuyuki Takahashi and Yoshio Nishikawa.

Created by Toho Studios, creators of Godzilla and other popular Japanese monsters. Zone Fighter was one of three alien heroes sent to Earth to fight Baron Garonga, who destroyed their home planet. Zone Fighter and his siblings, Zone Angel and Zone Junior, normally appeared as costumed "super-heroes." Zone Fighter, however, could also grow into a giant Ultraman-like super-being, armed with a proton beam and "Monster Missiles." Zone Fighter often was assisted by Godzilla himself; one episode, in fact, had them sparring, and another episode had them actually shaking hands. (Guess the mutated dinosaur's intelligence increased around the Zone's.) Although Zone Fighter looked like he could've been, perhaps even should've been, an Ultra, he wasn't Meteor Man Zone (流星人間ゾーン - Ryūsei Ningen Zōn), officially known outside Japan as Zone Fighter, is a tokusatsu SF/superhero TV series. Produced by Toho Company Ltd., the show aired on Nippon Television from April 2 to September 24, 1973, with a total of 26 episodes. This was Toho's answer to not only the popular Ultra Series, but the Henshin Hero phenomenon started by shows like Kamen Rider and Android Kikaider. The previous year, Toho had just made their successful first superhero show, Warrior of Love, Rainbowman.

At the time this series was made, Toho's own famous movie monster Godzilla was becoming really popular with children, so it made sense for Godzilla to guest-star in five episodes of this series! Godzilla was the very same savior as seen in then-recent films like Godzilla Vs. Megalon (which premiered in Japanese theaters a month earlier), and fought side by side with the show's hero (Zone Fighter) against the Garoga Army's various giant FearBeasts.

Characters

The Sakimori Family/Zone Family

The Sakimori/Zone Family resembles a normal Japanese family, but they are an alien family that came to Earth after their home planet Peaceland was destroyed by the evil buglike Garoga aliens. To stop the Garoga

Army's invasion on Earth, the Sakimori Family's three children, Hikaru (the oldest son), Hotaru (the teenage sister) and Akira (the young boy) respectively transform into the superheroes Zone Fighter, Zone Angel and Zone Junior. Their transformation code (associated with a "henshin" pose) is "Zone Fight Power".

Hikaru Sakimori/Zone Fighter (防人光／ゾーンファイター) The oldest of the siblings. Enjoys racing cars. As Zone Fighter, upon uttering the command "Zone Double Fight", he can also grow to giant size (with a streamlined metallic head) to fight Garoga's FearBeasts. His killing attack is the Meteor MissileMite (流星ミサイルマイト - Ryūsei Misairumaito). Just like Ultraman, he can only become giant sized for a limited time, and the meter light on his belt buckle changes from green (normal) to yellow (caution) to red (danger). Zone Angel and Junior can recharge Fighter's energy with the emergency battery from Smokey.

Played by Kazuya Aoyama

Hotaru Sakimori/Zone Angel (防人螢／ゾーンエンジェル) The second oldest of the siblings. Also attends high school.

Played by Kazumi Kitahara

Played by Kenji Sato

Yōichirō Sakimori (防人陽一郎) The father of the three children. He is the proprietor of the Toy Research Institute, which explains the family's penchant for toys. Also invents the gadgets and vehicles used by the Zone Siblings to fight the Garoga Army.

Played by Shoji Nakayama

Played by Sachiko Kozuki

Raita Sakimori (防人雷太) Yōichirō's father and the grandfather of the three children. When his grandchildren are in a terrible predicament, he uses the Zone Great satellite to get them out of a jam.

Played by Shiro Amakusa.

Godzilla (ゴジラ - Gojira) The righteous King of the Monsters himself! Although he is not a member of the Zone Family, he is Zone Fighter's occasional ally in fighting the Garoga FearBeasts. Zone Fighter even built a "Godzilla Cave" for him to live in and come out of when needed for an emergency. Godzilla has appeared in Episodes 4, 11, 15, 21 and 25.

Played in costume by Toru Kawai and Isao Zushi.

Zone Arsenal

Mighty Liner (マイティライナー - Maiti Rainâ) - Zone Fighter's car. Transforms from his racecar Skyline GT. It can also fly.

Smokey (スモーカー - Sumōki) - The mini-aircraft Zone Angel and Junior ride. So named because it resides in a cloud until called upon. Contains an emergency battery for giant-sized Zone Fighter when he runs out of energy.

Zone Great (ゾーングレイト - Zôn Gureito) - The satellite controlled by Raita Sakamori from the control panel in the family's house. Shoots destructive lightning bolts that can damage a Garoga FearBeast.

The Garoga Army

A race of insect-like demons from the planet Garoga. They have red, black, blue & yellow bodies, silver bug-eyed faces (somewhat resembling the Green Goblin from the Spider-Man comic-books) and floppy antennas. They operate in a huge satellite in space.

Gold Garoga (ゴールドガロガ - Gôrudo Garoga) - The leader of the Garoga Army. Has a gold head (as opposed to silver) and a cape.

Garoga-Barans (ガロガバラン星人 - Garoga Baran Seijin) - The Garoga henchmen.

FearBeasts (恐獣 - Kyōjū) - The various giant monsters sent by the Garoga Army to attack the Earth. They are sent in various ways:

They are launched to Earth from the Garoga satellite via a FearBeast Missile (恐獣ミサイル - Kyōjū Misairu)

A Garoga-Baran (either singular or group) transforms into a FearBeast while spying on Earth.

King Ghidorah (キングギドラ - Kingu Gidora) - Godzilla's greatest foe becomes Zone Fighter's greatest foe when the Garoga Army dispatches him to attack the Earth in a series two-parter. Appeared in Episodes 5 and 6 (without Godzilla). (This was Ghidorah's last classic appearance.)

Gigan (ガイガン - Gaigan) - Another of Godzilla's adversaries is dispatched by Garoga to attack both Godzilla and Zone Fighter. Launched to Earth via a FearBeast Missile. Appears in Episode 11. (This was also Gigan's last classic appearance.)

AKA: KAIKETSU

AKA: KAIKETSU ZUBAT

Kaiketsu Lion Maru's most dangerous enemy was a rival warrior who was given a magical sword that transformed him into Tiger Jou (episodes 27-??).

"Wind, Light, Ninja Skill, Lion-Transform!"

The opening theme song "Oh Wind And Light" was recorded by Hide, Yuki (best known for opening and ending themes to Jinzo Ningen Kikaida) and Young Fresh. Hide, Yuki died in January of 1999. The ending theme "Come Along Lion Maru" was recorded by Young Fresh.

There was a sequel to Kaiketsu Lion Maru, Fuun Lion Maru (April 14, 1973 - September 29, 1973, 25 episodes). Fuun Lion Maru's rival was Black Jaguar.

Powers:

Zubat was equipped with his Z Sword -a plus shaped weapon that could transform into the Cross Sword Rod and Whip. His lethal Zubat Attack Kick always knocked out his victims.

Origin:

Asuka Goro was a scholar who built a specially designed car and suit for an expedition to the moon, using incredibly strong materials. Asuka's study was stopped short when he was murdered in front of his best friend Hayakawa Ken, during a hospital bombing. Hayakawa completed Asuka's projects after his death, and adapted his suit and car for fighting purposes. Hayakawa also redesigned the car's wings and twin engine system for earth applications. Hayakawa rebuilt the Zuba Car for road use and its top land speed was 217 miles per hour. By itself, the car could strike fear into the filthy hearts of Dakka agents. The car was also capable of flight and automatic pilot operation.

Hayakawa ken set out on a journey to find the murderer of his tomodachi. As a private detective, Zubat decided to fight every criminal in Japan, until he avenged Asuka's death. He began his search by pursuing the boss of the wicked organization Dakka. He would continually introduce himself to various Dakka agents, as the strongest man in Japan. None of the villains believed him at first. Later, they always learned how serious his skills were. Unknown to Dakka, Hayakawa could sustain his form as Zubat for only 5 minutes. A dial on his ear would warn him of his time limit, and holding the form longer than 5 minutes would cause his body to shatter into pieces.

After private detective Hayakawa, Ken's best friend Asuka, Goro (Okazaki, Jiro) is murdered by the criminal group "Dagger" (Dakka); Hayakawa, Ken (Miyauchi, Hiroshi) seeks revenge. Using Asuka's design for a suit to be worn by astronauts Hayakawa creates a costume which gives him super-human speed, agility and strength. Wearing the power suit he becomes Kaiketsu Zubat, the Swift Hero Zubat. The name Zubat comes from the word "zubatto" which is the sound of a whip snapping.

The original music was by Kensuke Kyo and Ichiro Mizuki, the project planner was Tohru Hirayama.

Dengeki Tai and Captain Miura in Choriki Sentai Ohrenjaa. He would also appear in two episodes (31 and 40) of Toei's Spider-Man as a Hayakawa, Ken like private detective (even wore the same black hat). Science Fiction Television Show Directors - First Name - Last Name

This is a list of directors that are shown in the Encyclopedia, directors are by first name then last name. Where there are two or more directors than I have made a decision as to which name goes first. This is followed by the episode title they wrote and the name of the programme. Also S = The season in which this episode aired, and E = The Episode number in that season
